

THE OLD TESTAMENT

Pseudepigrapha

APOCALYPTIC
LITERATURE & TESTAMENTS

EDITED BY
JAMES H. CHARLESWORTH

New Translations from Authoritative Texts with Introductions and Critical Notes by an International Team of Scholars

THE OLD TESTAMENT PSEUDEPIGRAPHA

THE OLD TESTAMENT
PSEUDEPIGRAPHA

VOLUME 1

Apocalyptic Literature and Testaments

EDITED BY

JAMES H. CHARLESWORTH,

DUKE UNIVERSITY

DOUBLEDAY & COMPANY, INC.
GARDEN CITY, NEW YORK

The publisher gratefully acknowledges permission to use the following: An extract from Josephus' Antiquities from The Loeb Classical Library, Harvard University Press, publisher, in "The Testament of Solomon," translated by Dennis C. Duling. Quotation from Hermetica, vol. 4, translated by W. Scott and A. S. Ferguson, 1936, in "The Testament of Solomon," translated by Dennis C. Duling. Used by permission of Oxford University Press.

Quotations from Archív orientální by C. H. Gordon, vol. 6, 1934, in "The Testament of Solomon," translated by Dennis C. Duling.

Library of Congress Catalog Card Number:

ISBN: 0-385-09630-5

Copyright © 1983 by James H. Charlesworth

All Rights Reserved

Printed in the United States of America

Designed by Joseph P. Ascherl

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

Main entry under title:

Old Testament pseudepigrapha.

Bibliography: p.

Includes indexes.

1. Apocryphal books (Old Testament)—Criticism, interpretation, etc. I. Charlesworth, James H.

BS1830.A3 1983 229 80-2443

ISBN 0-385-09630-5 (v. 1)

ISBN 0-385-18813-7 (v. 2)

Dedicated to my family
—Jerrie, Michelle, Eve, and James—to other families supporting our common labors,
and to families who read these documents.

CONTENTS

Foreword	George W. MacRae, S.J.	ix
Foreword for Christians	James T. Cleland	x
Foreword for Jews	Samuel Sandmel	xi
Editor's Preface	James H. Charlesworth	xv
Board of Advisors		xviii
Contributors		xviii
Introduction for the General Reader	James H. Charlesworth	xxi
Explanation of Typographical and Reference Systems		xxxv
List of Abbreviations		xxxvii

DOCUMENTS

APOCALYPTIC LITERATURE AND RELATED WORKS

Introduction	J. H. Charlesworth	3
1 (Ethiopic Apocalypse of) Enoch (Second Century B.C.— First Century A.D.)	E. Isaac	5
2 (Slavonic Apocalypse of) Enoch (Late First Century A.D.) with Appendix: 2 Enoch in Merilo Pravednoe	F. I. Andersen	91
3 (Hebrew Apocalypse of) Enoch (Fifth to Sixth Century A.D.)	P. Alexander	223
Sibylline Oracles (Second Century B.C.—Seventh Century A.D.)	J. J. Collins	317
Treatise of Shem (First Century B.C.)	J. H. Charlesworth	473
Apocryphon of Ezekiel (First Century B.C.—First Century A.D.)	J. R. Mueller and S. E. Robinson	487
Apocalypse of Zephaniah (First Century B.C.—First Century A.D.)	O. S. Wintermute	497
The Fourth Book of Ezra (Late First Century A.D.)	B. M. Metzger	517
Greek Apocalypse of Ezra (Second to Ninth Century A.D.)	M. E. Stone	561
Vision of Ezra (Fourth to Seventh Century A.D.)	J. R. Mueller and G. A. Robbins	581

Questions of Ezra (Date Unknown)	M. E. Stone	591
Revelation of Ezra (prior to Ninth Century A.D.)	D. A. Fiensy	601
Apocalypse of Sedrach (Second to Fifth Century A.D.)	S. Agourides	605
2 (Syriac Apocalypse of) Baruch (early Second Century A.D.)	A. F. J. Klijn	615
3 (Greek Apocalypse of) Baruch (First to Third Century A.D.)	H. E. Gaylord, Jr.	653
Apocalypse of Abraham (First to Second Century A.D.)	R. Rubinkiewicz	681
Apocalypse of Adam (First to Fourth Century A.D.)	G. MacRae	707
Apocalypse of Elijah (First to Fourth Century A.D.)	O. S. Wintermute	721
Apocalypse of Daniel (Ninth Century A.D.)	G. T. Zervos	755

TESTAMENTS (OFTEN WITH APOCALYPTIC SECTIONS)

Introduction	J. H. Charlesworth	773
Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs (Second Century B.C.)	H. C. Kee	775
Testament of Job (First Century B.C.–First Century A.D.)	R. P. Spittler	829
Testaments of the Three Patriarchs
Introduction	E. P. Sanders	869
Testament of Abraham (First to Second Century A.D.)	E. P. Sanders	871
Testament of Isaac (Second Century A.D.)	W. F. Stinespring	903
Testament of Jacob (Second to Third Century A.D.?)	W. F. Stinespring	913
Testament of Moses (First Century A.D.)	J. Priest	919
Testament of Solomon (First to Third Century A.D.)	D. C. Duling	935
Testament of Adam (Second to Fifth Century A.D.)	S. E. Robinson	989

FOREWORD

GEORGE W. MACRAE, S.J.

The ancient Jewish and Jewish-Christian documents that are here called Pseudepigrapha have in their long history been both problematic and promising in both Jewish and Christian communities. It is heartening to observe that the very publication of this new collection testifies more to their promise than to their problems. An ancient witness to both problem and promise can be found within two late books of the New Testament itself. The Epistle of Jude, in its strong antiheretical polemic, refers at least twice to the language of the book we call 1 Enoch and in a third instance quotes it in an authoritative manner as prophetic. It also refers to a legend about the body of Moses known to us in the book called the Assumption of Moses. The Second Epistle of Peter, generally regarded as the latest of the New Testament books, incorporates much of Jude into its second chapter, but it is very careful to excise all of the allusions to the Pseudepigrapha.

The problem to which this situation points is that of the canonical status of the Pseudepigrapha in early Christianity—and the consequent propriety or impropriety of citing them in public documents. Clearly the authors of Jude and 2 Peter reflect different views. This problem persisted for centuries in the Church and can further be seen in the reluctance of some churches to accept Jude into the New Testament because of its controversial sources. In the synagogue the problem did not persist so long, and the decision was clearly against the Pseudepigrapha.

The promise to which the episode of Jude and 2 Peter points is the value of studying the Pseudepigrapha for a better understanding of prerabbinic Judaism and of the religious matrix of Christianity. Whatever canonical decisions were taken by the official leadership, it is clear that in popular religious circles, especially Christian ones, this literature continued to be prominent and to influence thought and piety.

The most recent decades have seen an astonishing rebirth of scholarly interest in the Pseudepigrapha, and these volumes are an excellent guide to much of it. The renewed interest has been and continues to be stimulated in part by new manuscript discoveries. One thinks of the Dead Sea Scrolls among others. These have provided access to much more extensive knowledge of Judaism in the period immediately following the Old Testament. But perhaps even more important than such a largely accidental factor as manuscript discoveries has been the ever increasing acceptance of historical-critical method on the part of students of the Bible at all levels. To study the Bible by this method involves knowing as much as one can about the biblical world in all of its facets. And this of course includes knowing the Jewish and Christian religious literature that ultimately did not become part of the Bible. What we find, as these volumes show, is a bewildering variety of ideas, styles, and literary genres that is as diversified as the Bible itself yet often quite different from it. One of the merits of this edition, especially when compared to the few earlier ones in modern languages, is that it is inclusive rather than exclusive. It includes much more of the surviving literature than others have. Thus it affords a rich insight into the creative religious imagination from a singularly important formative period in Western religious culture.

Readers of these volumes and those who consult them for reference should include scholars and teachers, students, and any others who have an interest in the biblical world. All will be grateful to the many scholars who have contributed to the work. But more especially, they will have an enormous debt of gratitude to Professor Charlesworth and his immediate associates who boldly undertook and so competently executed the formidable task of editing this major work.

FOREWORD FOR CHRISTIANS

JAMES T. CLELAND

As one brought up in the home of a Church of Scotland minister, my father, and as one prepared for the Christian ministry in the Divinity Hall of Glasgow University, I have been trying to recall any unique impact made upon me by these related experiences, apart from family worship; the daily reading of the Word of God: Genesis to Revelation, one chapter per night, before falling asleep. The unexpected outcome is that I still find it somewhat difficult to decide if a Scots Presbyterian is an Old Testament Christian, with a stress on the Law and the Psalms, or a New Testament Jew, who attends his synagogue—as Jesus' custom was—on the sabbath day (Luke 4:16). There he hears a sermon which may be based on the Old Testament, or on the New Testament, or on both, as equally valid, equally authoritative. Why not? Is it not the same God in both testaments?

Many years later, in a Duke Divinity School morning chapel service, instead of a meditation, I just read the Prayer of Manasseh, now recognized, in its own right, as one of the Pseudepigrapha. After the service, a colleague asked me, "Where did you find that?" I told him. His surprised, almost awed, comment was: "That is the gospel outside of the Gospels." Why such a reaction? Manasseh was acknowledged to be the wickedest king of Judah, one who both majored and minored in iniquity, and yet maintained his throne in Jerusalem for fifty-five years, which was something of a record. Dr. James Moffatt sums up Manasseh, that royal rake, in a few simple words: "He did ample evil in the sight of the eternal to vex him" (2Chr 33:6). That is the emphasis of underemphasis. However, Manasseh repented; he prayed; God forgave (2Chr 33:13). The God who forgave is the same, yesterday, today, and forever, the God of Jew and Christian alike.

What I, a pulpiteer, hope from this volume, supervised by Professor Charlesworth, aided and abetted by scholars throughout the world, is that, as never before, Judaism and Christianity will be recognized as heirs of the same God, with what Jew and Christian have in common uniting us, rather than continuing a separation which may be emotionally understandable but is spiritually devitalizing. The very text of parts of the Pseudepigrapha may have been edited by later Jews or Christians. It would be good if one of the scholars discovered in his research that a section was prepared by Jew and Christian working together, not always in agreement in minor matters, but one in scholarship and editing because each had faith, academic and spiritual, in the same Father, who is at the heart of both testaments, and to be found in the Pseudepigrapha.

So, may it come to pass that what unites us as brethren will far surpass what seems to separate us, too often, even too willingly. We need each other. We are both children of the Kingdom, and the Pseudepigrapha may become a bridge between the Old and New testaments, helping us cross to and fro, back and forth, until we are equally at home in both, to our mental satisfaction, and our spiritual growth in grace.

So read the Prayer of Manasseh in the Pseudepigrapha. It is a model for a prayer, public or private: the invocation of God: "O Lord, God of our fathers, . . . unending and immeasurable are your promised mercies" (vss. 1–6); the confession of sin, verses 9–10: "O Lord, I am justly afflicted . . . because I did evil things before you"; the entreaty for forgiveness, verses 11–15, including the wonderful metaphor of complete surrender to God: "And now behold I am bending the knees of my heart" (v. 11); "Forgive me, O Lord, forgive me" (v. 13); "I shall praise you continually all the days of my life" (v. 15). It is a bonny prayer; my gratitude to the Jew who wrote it. I shall use it.

This prayer is to more than a few people the most famous instance of "the infinite compassion of God." If a Manasseh can be absolved, there is hope for anyone—including me. No wonder that I bend "the knees of my heart." It is the gospel outside the Gospels.

FOREWORD FOR JEWS

SAMUEL SANDMEL

By the strangest quirk of fate respecting literature that I know of, large numbers of writings by Jews were completely lost from the transmitted Jewish heritage. These documents stem roughly from 200 B.C. to A.D. 200. Not only the so-called Pseudepigrapha, but even such important and extensive writings as those by Philo and Josephus have not been part of the Jewish inheritance from its past; these were preserved and transmitted by Christians. It was rather only in the backwash of the Renaissance that Jews began to encounter Philo and Josephus. A sixteenth-century Italian rabbi, Azariah de Rossi, in a book called Me-or Enayim ("Light for the Eyes’), inaugurated this Jewish rediscovery of the “lost” literature. He wrote with great praise of Philo, but with only reserved admiration for Josephus, whose Jewish loyalty he doubted. After de Rossi, Jews began slowly to deepen their study of Josephus and Philo, and thereafter the other literature, as legitimate parts of the Jewish heritage.

The ancient literary legacy which Jews did preserve and transmit was primarily the rabbinic literature. This huge body of writings might be divided into three categories: one, the Midrashim; two, Mishna and Gemara; and three, the Targumim. The Midrashim are commentaries on Scripture arranged according to the sequence of the biblical verses. The Mishna is a laconic statement of the secondary laws (Halacha) derived from Scripture. The Targumim allude to the Aramaic translation of Scripture; these translations have come down to us in differing styles and in somewhat differing ages. While within the rabbinic literature, especially in passages called haggadic (“narrative”), there are allusions to some of the documents found in the Apocrypha and occasionally to those in the Pseudepigrapha, it is only Ecclesiasticus (Jesus, the son of Sirach) who figures in any prominence at all in the talmudic literature. The Pseudepigrapha as such might be said with very little exaggeration to be without reflection in rabbinic literature.

As is known, the Pseudepigrapha were first gathered by Johannes Fabricius in the early part of the eighteenth century. Subsequent collectors of this material were able to add certain books that were unknown to Fabricius and certain editors, such as R. H. Charles, included in editions of the Pseudepigrapha materials the presence of which might be questioned. Charles, for example, included the talmudic tractate the Ethics of the Fathers. The point is that there is no such thing as a “canon” of the Pseudepigrapha. Rather, there is an abundance of this scattered literature, some of it preserved in entirety and some preserved in part, usually in translation rather than in the original Hebrew or Aramaic. It is in reality only in the eighteenth century that the earnest and ever increasing study of the Pseudepigrapha began. Because most of the Pseudepigrapha were not preserved in Hebrew or Aramaic, it has been only the rare Jewish scholar who has made this study a major concern. By and large it has been Christians who have done the painstaking work of gathering this material, comparing the various manuscripts, producing critical editions, and providing translations into modern languages.

I do not think it is wrong to say that much of the Christian interest in the Pseudepigrapha in the early nineteenth century was based on the light this literature was deemed to throw on early Christianity. Since the documents in the Pseudepigrapha were not being studied for their own sake, often that roundedness which one should expect from the best of scientific scholarship was absent. Even more to be deplored was the circumstance that there were Christian scholars who seemed to feel the need to choose, as it were, between the Pseudepigrapha on the one hand and the rabbinic literature on the other hand, and who, on the basis of only part of the total Jewish literary productivity, came to some occasionally quixotic or reckless or even partisan conclusions about the nature of Judaism at the time of the birth of Christianity. Such an allegation would not be unjust respecting R. H. Charles.

A complete turnaround in the approach to the Pseudepigrapha in the last decades has been most gratifying. These writings have become the object of study for their own sake, part of the wish to illuminate the totality of the Jewish creativity of that bygone age. The recent scholarship has not tried to make the literature fit into a procrustean bed for some parochial purpose. It should be said that the relevancy of the Pseudepigrapha to early Christianity is not in any way diminished by the recent admirable mode of the study of Pseudepigrapha.

The result of the work of fine scholars, such as are represented herein, has been a significant broadening and deepening of the appreciation of the Jewish literary creativity. The cooperative study enlisting the gifted minds of Christians of various denominations and Jews of varying backgrounds is surely as moving and exciting a development as any cooperative academic venture could be. Perhaps it was the abundance of this ancient literature which the author of Ecclesiastes had in mind when he spoke rather cynically in these words: "of making many books there is no end and most of them are a weariness of the flesh." Obviously the author of Ecclesiastes did not admire every bit of writing that was in his ken. I do not think that the modern student needs to admire every example of the Pseudepigrapha, any more than we today need to regard every novel as a masterpiece. But he can still be astonished, amazed, enlightened, and overwhelmed by the abundance and variety and recurrent high quality of the Jewish literary activity of that period.

Old as this literature is for most modern people, it is also in a sense something brand-new, for most American laypeople have never heard the word Pseudepigrapha, or, if they have heard it, are not sure what it means. Now through the work of Professor Charlesworth and his associates a door is being opened anew to treasures that are very old. How gratifying it is that scholars devote themselves to the recovery of that which was lost or strayed or hidden. How gratifying that cooperative study is reviving this literature. How much such study contributes to understanding the richness of the Jewish legacy, now the heritage of both Jews and Christians.

EDITOR'S PREFACE

The present work is designed for the scholar and for the interested non-specialist. The general introduction, the introductions to each subdivision and to each document, and the translations with accompanying notes are shaped to help the reader understand these ancient writings. At the outset it is wise to stress three caveats for the general reader: 1) The following collection of writings, many of which claim to preserve a message from God for his people, are not gathered here in order to replace or add to those scriptures considered canonical by Jews or the larger collections claimed to be canonical by various groups of Christians. 2) In order to understand the Bible better the Pseudepigrapha should not be read in isolation, but along with the writings collected in the Old and New testaments (terms used for convenience and without confessional bias), and in ten other collections of ancient Jewish or early Christian writings (see Introduction). 3) The expanded definition of the Pseudepigrapha, now universally recognized as necessary by scholars, represents a more extended historical period than Charles's selection of writings; hence it must not be used prima facie as a group of writings representative of Early Judaism. The late documents, and Christian expansions of early Jewish writings, as the contributors themselves clarify, must not be read as if they were composed by contemporaries of the early ones. Conversely, late writings must not be ignored in a search for ideas possibly characteristic of Early Judaism; these documents frequently preserve edited portions of early Jewish writings.

In the fall of 1972, an editor at Doubleday, John J. Delaney, on the advice of his consultants, invited me to prepare a new edition of the Pseudepigrapha. The present work, completed ten years later, is the product of an international team of collaborators. Because it is a widely used term today, we have decided to retain the technical term "Pseudepigrapha"; it is explained in the following Introduction.

Each contributor was asked to discuss all issues requisite for a meaningful reading of the document translated, and given some freedom in utilizing the following format:

The contributor begins the presentation either with a synopsis of the narrative or with a discussion of the key characteristics and central ideas in a non-narrative writing.

Texts. The scholar discusses only the most important extant texts, and clarifies the textual base or the critical edition behind the translation.

Original Language. The translator briefly discusses the original language of the document, reviews published scholarly conclusions, and usually advocates one possibility.

Date. The contributor assesses the debates (if any) over the date of the original composition, explains, if appropriate, the dates of any subsequent expansions or interpolations, and then presents his or her own scholarly opinion.

Provenance. The expert briefly evaluates the hypotheses regarding the place or places in which the work may have been composed, and subsequently voices his or her own judgment.

Historical Importance. The contributor discusses the importance of the document for an appreciation of the historical period in which it was composed.

Theological Importance. The specialist explains the motifs, symbols, and major theological ideas contained in the pseudepigraphon.

Relation to Canonical Books. The expert assesses the possible relationships between the pseudepigraphon and writings now customarily judged canonical.

Relation to Apocryphal Books. The scholar succinctly discusses the apocryphal books to which the document is especially close.

Cultural Importance. If appropriate, the contributor discusses the importance of the pseudepigraphon for a better understanding of the origin of our culture. Briefly mentioned are possible parallels between it and the great classics, such as Plato's Dialogues, Dante's Divina Commedia, and Milton's Paradise Lost.

At the end of each introduction to a document the contributor lists the most important publications on the document.

The organization of these documents follows considerable discussion with the Board of Advisors and the contributors themselves. Any system for ordering these documents has weaknesses. A listing of the documents in chronological order is impractical at the present time. We are still uncertain about the date or dates of composition for many of these writings; moreover, some are composite and represent more than one century. Merely placing them in alphabetical order is attractive in the sense that one knows where a particular document is in such a recognized sequence; hence, an alphabetical listing on the endpapers of this volume. An alphabetical listing is confusing, however, because some of the documents collected below are known by more than one title, some may be listed alphabetically according to more than one word in the title, and—most importantly—an alphabetical order is artificial and does not signal the relationships between documents that are related. We have decided to organize the documents according to broadly conceived literary types. Within these groups they are listed chronologically in terms of the earliest probable date with the exception that cycles of traditions, like the Enoch and Ezra books, are grouped together.

In the past scholars often felt free to emend a text and to aim at a loose idiomatic translation (although Charles himself was a literalist). Modern scholarship has demanded more rigorous devotion to extant readings, more thorough attempts to understand the grammar and syntax of ancient languages, and, in general, more loyalty to the manuscripts. While we have aimed whenever possible at an idiomatic rendering, we have avoided the temptation to paraphrase the meaning of a complicated passage or to conceal sometimes confusing readings behind elegant English prose. Besides trustworthiness to the transmitted text, there are other advantages in these literal renderings: The reader is introduced to the flavor of ancient expressions, phrases, and images. We have also presented literal translations of texts written in a language two or three times removed from that of the lost original. For example, Pseudo-Philo is extant in Latin but the original was composed in another language, probably Hebrew. The same situation lies behind 1 Enoch and Jubilees; both seem to derive ultimately from a Semitic language, which may be immediately behind the Ethiopic or be separated from it by an intermediary Greek version.

The preparation of this volume has been financed by generous grants and gifts from the Phillips Investment Corporation, the Phillips family, the Mary Duke Biddle Foundation, Brigham Young University's Religious Studies Center, Raymond and Hazel Mueller, Frances DeMott, the Welch family, and the Duke University Research Council. I am deeply grateful to each of them.

Finally after years of sacrificial work by so many it is difficult to articulate my deep appreciation and indebtedness to all those who have helped in the completion of the present edition of the Pseudepigrapha. I am indebted to the editors and staff at Doubleday, to my Board of Advisors, to the external readers, notably H. D. Betz, I. Gruenwald, J. Neusner, J. F. Oates, B. Schaller, J. L. Sharpe III, J. F. Strange, N. Turner, J. C. VanderKam, and F. W. Young, who have labored over many of these contributions, and to the contributors, who had to live for a long time with a frequently stern and demanding editor. I am grateful to my colleagues here at Duke, who had to live with unexpected responsibilities due to the tasks that fell my way, to the administrators, especially President Sanford, Chairman Bill Poteat, Chairman Bob Osborn, and Dean Langford, who provided space for editing and preparing the work. W. D. Davies, Moody Smith, Ray Brown, and John Strugnell helped me improve the Introduction. Many of my assistants worked long and hard hours, often during the trying summer months in Durham, and I wish to express my appreciations to all of them, notably Gary Martin, Jim Dumke, Dave Fiensy, Steve Robinson, George Zervos, and most especially to James Mueller, who served the longest, saw the task through to completion, and has proved to be a gifted and dedicated assistant. Marie Smith, my secretary, has without complaint typed and retyped much of the manuscript, and all of the voluminous correspondence. To all of these mentioned and many others I wish to express my sincere appreciation and hope that the final product is worthy of their sacrifices and support.

J. H. Charlesworth

Duke University
December 1982

- Brown, R. E., Auburn Professor of Biblical Studies, Union Theological Seminary, New York, New York
- Davies, W. D., Bradford Distinguished University Professor of Religion Studies, Texas Christian University, Fort Worth, Texas
- Harrelson, W., Distinguished Professor of Old Testament, Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tennessee
- Metzger, B. M., G. L. Collord Professor of New Testament Language and Literature, Princeton Theological Seminary, Princeton, New Jersey
- Murphy, R. E., G. W. Ivey Professor of Old Testament, Duke University, Durham, North Carolina
- Strugnell, J., Professor of Christian Origins, Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts

CONTRIBUTORS TO VOLUME ONE

- Agourides, S., Professor of Biblical Studies, Athens University, Athens, Greece
Apocalypse of Sedrach
- Alexander, P., Department of Near Eastern Studies, University of Manchester, Manchester, England
3 (Hebrew Apocalypse of) Enoch
- Andersen, F. I., Professor of Studies in Religion, University of Queensland, Brisbane, Australia
2 (Slavonic Apocalypse of) Enoch
- Charlesworth, J. H., Associate Professor of Religion, Director of the International Center for the Study of Christian Origins, Duke University, Durham, North Carolina
Editor's Preface, Introduction for the General Reader, Introduction to Apocalyptic Literature and Related Works, Treatise of Shem, Introduction to Testaments
- Collins, J. J., Associate Professor of Religious Studies, De Paul University, Chicago, Illinois
Sibylline Oracles
- Duling, D. C., Associate Professor, Department of Religious Studies, Canisius College, Buffalo, New York Testament of Solomon
- Fiensy, D. A., Assistant Professor of Religion, Kentucky Christian College, Grayson, Kentucky
Revelation of Ezra
- Gaylord, H. E., Jr., Rijksuniversiteit Groningen, Groningen, The Netherlands
3 (Greek Apocalypse of) Baruch
- Isaac, E., Visiting Professor, Bard College, Annandale-on-Hudson, New York
1 (Ethiopic Apocalypse of) Enoch
- Kee, H. C., Professor of New Testament and Director of Biblical-Historical Graduate Studies, Boston University School of Theology, Boston, Massachusetts Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs
- Klijn, A. F. J., Haren (Gr.), The Netherlands
2 (Syriac Apocalypse of) Baruch
- MacRae, G., Stillman Professor of Roman Catholic Studies, Harvard Divinity School, Cambridge, Massachusetts
Apocalypse of Adam
- Metzger, B. M., George L. Collord Professor of New Testament Language and Literature, Princeton Theological Seminary, Princeton, New Jersey
The Fourth Book of Ezra
- Mueller, J. R., Visiting Instructor of Religion, North Carolina State University, Raleigh, North Carolina
Apocryphon of Ezekiel, Vision of Ezra

- Priest, J., Professor of Religion, Department of Religion, Florida State University, Tallahassee, Florida Testament of Moses
- Robbins, G. A., Assistant Professor of Religion, Wichita State University, Wichita, Kansas
Vision of Ezra
- Robinson, S. E., Assistant Professor of Religion, Lycoming College, Williamsport, Pennsylvania Apocryphon of Ezekiel, Testament of Adam
- Rubinkiewicz, R., Assistant Professor, Catholic University, Lublin, Poland
Apocalypse of Abraham
- Sanders, E. P., Professor of Religious Studies, Department of Religion, McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario, Canada
Introduction to Testaments of the Three Patriarchs, Testament of Abraham
- Spittler, R. P., Associate Professor of New Testament, Assistant Dean for Academic Programs, Fuller Theological Seminary, Pasadena, California Testament of Job
- Stinespring, W. F., Professor Emeritus of Old Testament and Semitics, Duke University Divinity School, Durham, North Carolina Testament of Isaac, Testament of Jacob
- Stone, M. E., Associate Professor of Armenian Studies, The Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Israel Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, Questions of Ezra
- Wintermute, O. S., Professor of Religion, Duke University, Durham, North Carolina Apocalypse of Zephaniah, Apocalypse of Elijah
- Zervos, G. T., Research Assistant, Duke University, Durham, North Carolina
Apocalypse of Daniel

INTRODUCTION FOR THE GENERAL READER

BY J. H. CHARLESWORTH

Western culture has been largely shaped by a unique collection of ancient books: the Bible. Not only our culture's language, but also its theology, philosophy, art, and law have been affected profoundly by the ideas, symbols, morality, commitments, perceptions, and dreams preserved in the biblical books. In the attempt to understand these books, scholars, especially since the time of the European Enlightenment, in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, have coupled an intensive study of them with a search for other ancient writings related to them.

The Search for lost writings

Mere perusal of the biblical books discloses that their authors depended upon sources that are no longer extant. We know so little about these sources that we cannot be certain of the extent to which they were actual documents. A list of these lost sources would be extensive; it would include at least the following: the Book of the Wars of Yahweh (Num 21:14), the Book of the Just (Josh 10:13, 2Sam 1:18), the Book of the Acts of Solomon (1Kgs 11:41), the Book of the Annals of the Kings of Israel (1Kgs 14:19, 2Chr 33:18; cf. 2Chr 20:34), the Book of the Annals of the Kings of Judah (1Kgs 14:29, 15:7), the Annals of Samuel the seer (1Chr 29:29), the History of Nathan the prophet (2Chr 9:29), the Annals of Shemaiah the prophet and of Iddo the seer (2Chr 12:15), the Annals of Jehu son of Hanani (2Chr 20:34), an unknown and untitled writing of Isaiah (2Chr 26:22), the Annals of Hozai (2Chr 33:18), and an unknown lament for Josiah by Jeremiah (2Chr 35:25). In the Apocrypha (defined below) lost books also are mentioned; in particular, 1 Maccabees 16:24 refers to the Annals of John Hyrcanus. Within the Pseudepigrapha themselves there are references to "documents" now lost (cf. e.g. TJob 40:14, 41:6, 49:3, 50:3).

Christianity and rabbinic Judaism evolved within a milieu that was distinguished by considerable and significant literary activity. Some of the documents composed during the early centuries have been transmitted by copyists; many remain lost; and others have been recovered during the last two centuries. The search for lost writings is aided by ancient lists of "extracanonical" books. One of these lists is a catalogue, perhaps from the sixth century, falsely attributed to Athanasius of Alexandria (c. 296–373). The author includes among the disputed parts of the Old Testament (ta antilegomena tēs palaiās diathēkēs), the four Books of the Maccabees (1–4 Mac), the Psalms and Ode (sic) of Solomon. He defines the Apocrypha of the Old Testament (*ta de apokrupha palin tēs palaiās diathēkēs tauta) as follows:

Enoch	Elijah the Prophet
Patriarchs	Zephaniah the Prophet
Prayer of Joseph	Zechariah the Father of John
Testament of Moses	Baruch
Assumption of Moses	Habakkuk
(And the) pseudepigrapha	Ezekiel
(pseudepigrapha) of Abraham	Daniel
Eldad and Modad

All of the documents judged to be disputed parts of the Old Testament or the Apocrypha (if we understand their titles correctly) are included, if only fragmentarily, in the present collection, except for 1 and 2 Maccabees (which belong in the Apocrypha), and except for the lost pseudepigrapha attributed to Habakkuk and Zechariah (which is to be placed among the New Testament Pseudepigrapha because it is related to Zechariah the father of John the Baptist).

Numerous writings not mentioned by Pseudo-Athanasius are included in this volume. Many of these are named in other canonical lists, notably the List of Sixty Books (c. sixth to seventh century?) and the list of Mechitar of Ayrivank' (c. 1290). Others do not appear in any early list. Some pseudepigrapha mentioned in medieval lists are not included; they are judged to be characteristically different from and too late for the present collection (see below). The search continues for documents not yet found but cited in the classical lists: an Apocryphon of Lamech (Sixty Books), the Interdiction of Solomon (Gelasian Decree), and the Book of the Daughters of Adam (Gelasian Decree; perhaps this document is another name for Jubilees). Likewise scholars are seeking to understand the origin of ancient quotations from or allusions to unnamed Jewish apocryphal documents. Many of these citations or traditions are preserved by the Church Fathers, especially Clement of Rome, Clement of Alexandria, Hippolytus, Tertullian, Origen, and the compiler of the Apostolic Constitutions, as well as by the Byzantine chroniclers (especially George Syncellus [c. 800] and George Cedrenus [c. 1057]).

The present edition of the Pseudepigrapha reflects the search for lost writings. We have included many apocryphal documents, fragmentary or complete, which may be related to those named in the canonical lists or cited by the Church Fathers; note, for example, the following: Apocalypse of Adam, Apocalypse of Abraham, Testament of Abraham, Prayer of Joseph, Eldad and Modad (still preserved in only one brief quotation), Apocalypse of Elijah, Apocryphon of Ezekiel, Apocalypse of Zephaniah, and Apocalypse of Ezra.

Many documents, recently discovered in the Near East or recognized in distinguished libraries, are translated here into English for the first time. Not including the documents placed in the Supplement, the writings now available for the first time in English are the Testament of Adam, the Testaments of Isaac and Jacob (from the Arabic), the Apocalypse of Daniel, the Revelation of Ezra, the Vision of Ezra, the History of Joseph, Syriac Menander, and the History of the Rechabites (from the Syriac). Additional writings translated for the first time in a full English translation are the Questions of Ezra, the Ladder of Jacob, Jannes and Jambres, and the Apocalypse of Sedrach.

In addition to these documents, four writings presented only in a truncated version in Charles's edition are presented here in their full extant form. From the Martyrdom of Isaiah Charles himself included only chapters 1, 2, 3, and 5; the present edition presents all of that document along with the other traditions now preserved in the Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah. From 2 Enoch Forbes and Charles omitted the conclusion to the document; the present edition includes chapters 68 through 73, which contain the fascinating account of Melchisedek's miraculous birth. From the Sibylline Oracles Lanchester collected only the fragments and Books 3, 4, and 5; the present edition includes all of the Sibylline Oracles now extant. Finally, from 4 Ezra Box selected chapters 3–14; the present edition also includes the Christian additions (chapters 1 and 2, and 15 and 16).

Canon

The preceding discussion brings forward the question of the origin of the closed canons of the Old and New testaments. Impressive research is presently focused upon these issues, and it is possible to summarize only briefly my own opinions regarding this complex issue. For a long time scholars postulated that two canons of the Old Testament developed, one in Palestine and another in Egypt, and that Alexandrian Jews added the Apocrypha (see below) to the Hebrew canon. It now seems clear that there never was a rival Alexandrian canon. Philo and other Jews in Alexandria did not cite the Apocrypha, and the Alexandrian Church Fathers witness to the fact that Alexandrian Jews did not have an expanded canon.

When R. H. Charles published his edition of the Pseudepigrapha there was widespread agreement that the Hebrew canon, the Old Testament, was fixed finally at Jamnia around A.D. 90. Today there is considerable debate regarding the importance of the rabbinic school at Jamnia in the history of the codification of the Hebrew canon. On the one hand, it is becoming obvious that the process of canonization began long before the first century A.D., and that perhaps the earliest part of the Bible, the Law, had been closed and defined as authoritative well before the second century B.C., and the Prophets surely by that time. On the other hand, it is clear that after A.D. 90 there were still debates regarding the canonicity of such writings as the Song of Songs, Ecclesiastes, and Esther, but it is not clear what were the full ramifications of these debates. It seems to follow, therefore, both that the early pseudepigrapha were composed during a period in which the limits of the canon apparently remained fluid at least to some Jews, and that some Jews and Christians inherited and passed on these documents as inspired. They did not necessarily regard them as apocryphal, or outside a canon.

The writings collected into the New Testament were written during the end of this same period since they are dated from about A.D. 50 to 150. The New Testament canon was not closed in the Latin Church until much later; certainly not before the late fourth century and long after Constantine the Great established Christianity as the official religion of the Roman Empire. All the twenty-seven books of the New Testament, for example, are listed for the first time as the only canonical New Testament scriptures by Athanasius, bishop of Alexandria, in his Easter letter of A.D. 367. If the Latin Church finally accepted twenty-seven books as the canonical New Testament by the fifth century, the Greek Church apparently was not thoroughly convinced about the canonicity of one book, Revelation, until about the tenth century. The Syrian Church witnessed to an even more complicated debate over the canon of the New Testament; for many east Syrians today the Peshitta is the canon and it contains only twenty-two documents, excluding 2 Peter, 2 and 3 John, Jude, and Revelation. Moreover, the assumption that all Christians have the same canon is further shattered by the recognition that the Copts and Ethiopians have added other documents to the canon.

Even in America today there are different canons among the various Christian communions: for example, Protestants exclude from the canon the Apocrypha, the additional books in the Greek Old Testament; the Roman Catholics, following the edicts of the Council of Trent in 1546, include them as deuterocanonical. The Mormons, moreover, argue that more books belong in the canon, and that it should remain open.

Most Jews throughout the world acknowledge only the Old Testament as canonical (cf. e.g. 4Ezra 14:37–48). The Falashas, Ethiopian Jews probably dependent on Ethiopian Christianity, however, have an expanded canon, including various apocrypha and pseudepigrapha, especially the Prayer of Manasseh, Jubilees, 1 Enoch, 3 and 4 Ezra.

For our present purposes it is wise to add to the above insights the recognition that many authors of pseudepigrapha believed they were recording God's infallible words. Early communities, both Jewish and Christian, apparently took some pseudepigrapha very seriously. The author of Jude, in verses 14 and 15, quoted as prophecy a portion of 1 Enoch, and this passage, 1 Enoch 1:9, has now been recovered in Aramaic from one of the caves that contained the Dead Sea Scrolls. Jude probably also was dependent, in verses 9 and 10, upon a lost Jewish apocryphon about Moses.

This brief overview of the historical development of the canons reveals that to call the Pseudepigrapha "non-canonical," or the biblical books "canonical," can be historically inaccurate prior to A.D. 100 and the period in which most of these documents were written. These terms should be used as an expression of some later "orthodoxy" with regard to a collection that is well defined regarding what belongs within and what is to be excluded from it. It is potentially misleading to use the terms "non-canonical," "canonical," "heresy," and "orthodoxy" when describing either Early Judaism or Early Christianity.

Definition of pseudepigrapha

The technical term "pseudepigrapha" has a long and distinguished history. It was used in the late second century by Serapion when he referred to the New Testament Pseudepigrapha (ta pseudepigrapha, "with false superscription"; cf. Eusebius, HE 6.12). It was given prominence in the early years of the eighteenth century by J. A. Fabricius, who called the first volume of his massive work Codex pseudepigraphus veteris testamenti. The nineteenth-century collection of "pseudepigrapha" was by the Roman Catholic M. L'Abbé J.-P. Migne and titled Dictionnaire des apocryphes, ou collection de tous les livres apocryphes relatifs à l'ancien et au nouveau testament; this work did not use the term "pseudepigrapha" because Roman Catholics consider the Apocrypha to be deuterocanonical writings and refer to the Pseudepigrapha as "the Apocrypha." In the year 1900, E. Kautzsch edited the first German collection of the Pseudepigrapha, titled Die Apokryphen und Pseudepigraphen des Alten Testaments. The first, and until the present the only, English collection of the Pseudepigrapha was published in 1913 by the Clarendon Press of Oxford, England, and edited by R. H. Charles; he included in his large two-volume work both The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament. The importance of the Pseudepigrapha in the international community at the present time is evidenced by the preparation of translations into Danish, Italian, French, German, modern Greek, Japanese, Dutch, and Spanish.

It is appropriate at this point to clarify the meaning of the term "pseudepigrapha." Several definitions are current. Webster's Third New International Dictionary (p. 1830) defines the term as denoting "spurious works purporting to emanate from biblical characters." That definition is misleading; ancient writings are dismissed subjectively as illegitimate. The Random House Dictionary of the English Language (the Unabridged Edition, p. 1159) offers the following: "Certain writings (other than the canonical books and the Apocrypha) professing to be Biblical in character, but not considered canonical or inspired." Three reactions appear to this definition: First, it would have been informative to clarify for whom the writings are "not considered canonical or inspired." Second, it is good to see a recognition of the claim to be "Biblical in character," which I believe is implied by some pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament. Third, it is unfortunate that neither of the two definitions presented by these authoritative volumes recognizes that this term is also employed for documents not related to the Bible. Scholars have used the term, for example, to denote some rabbinic writings, referring to the Othijoth de Rabbi Akiba and the Pirkê de Rabbi Eliezer as rabbinic pseudepigrapha; moreover, "pseudepigrapha" is a technical term for some writings by the post-Platonic Pythagoreans.

Strictly speaking, the term "pseudepigrapha" has evolved from pseudepigrapha, a transliteration of a Greek plural noun that denotes writings "with false superscription." The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, the title of this collection, etymologically denotes writings falsely attributed to ideal figures featured in the Old Testament. Contemporary scholars employ the term "pseudepigrapha" not because it denotes something spurious about the documents collected under that title, but because the term has been inherited and is now used internationally.

In entitling the volume The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, I have had to take a stance on the definition of "pseudepigrapha" as illustrated by the selection of works other than those included by Charles. Only two works from Charles's volume of seventeen documents are not included: Pirke Aboth and "The Fragments of a Zadokite Work," the former because it is rabbinic and the latter because it is now recognized to belong among the Dead Sea Scrolls. The following collection of fifty-two writings together with a long Supplement has evolved from the consensus that the Pseudepigrapha must be defined broadly so as to include all documents that conceivably belong to the Old Testament Pseudepigrapha. The present description of the Pseudepigrapha is as follows: Those writings 1) that, with the exception of Ahiqar, are Jewish or Christian; 2) that are often attributed to ideal figures in Israel's past; 3) that customarily claim to contain God's word or message; 4) that frequently build upon ideas and narratives present in the Old Testament; 5) and that almost always were composed either during the period 200 B.C. to A.D. 200 or, though late, apparently preserve, albeit in an edited form, Jewish traditions that date from that period. Obviously, the numerous qualifications (e.g. "with the exception of," "often," "customarily," "frequently," "almost always") warn that the above comments do not define the term "pseudepigrapha"; they merely describe the features of this collection.

Writings cognate to the Pseudepigrapha

Including fifty-two documents plus a Supplement in the present collection of the Pseudepigrapha meant excluding other writings, although they may have some characteristics of the Pseudepigrapha. These writings were usually omitted because they were far removed from the Old Testament in date and character. Most notable among them are the following: The Vision of Daniel, The Death of Abraham (both ed. by A. Vassiliev in Anecdota Graeco-Byzantina, vol. 1. Moscow, 1893), the Hebrew Apocalypse of Elijah (ed. and trans. M. Bittenwieser, Die hebräische Elias-Apokalypse. Leipzig, 1897), the Book of Jasher (ed. J. Ilive, The Book of Jasher. Bristol, 1829), the Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan (ed. A. Dillmann, Das christliche Adambuch des Orients. Göttingen, 1853; ET: S. C. Malan, The Book of Adam and Eve. London, 1882), the Cave of Treasures (ed. C. Bezold, Die Schatzhöhle: Syrisch und Deutsch, 2 vols. Leipzig, 1883, 1888; ET: E. A. W. Budge, The Book of the Cave of Treasures. London, 1927), the Book of the Rolls (cf. M. D. Gibson, Apocrypha Arabica. Studia Sinaitica 8. London, 1901), the Sin of Solomon (unpublished, probably a homily, cf. Cod. Par. Gr. 1021, fols. 184v–185v in the Bibliothèque Nationale), Pirkê de Rabbi Eliezer (trans. G. Friedlander, Pirkê de Rabbi Eliezer. New York, 1981⁴), the Syriac Apocalypse of Ezra (ed. and trans. J.-B. Chabot, “L’Apocalypse d’Esdras,” Revue sémitique 2 [1894] 242–50, 333–46), the Book of the Bee (ed. and trans. E. A. W. Budge, The Book of the Bee. Anecdota Oxoniensia, Sem. Ser. 1.2. Oxford, 1886), and the Questions Addressed by the Queen (of Sheba), and Answers Given by Solomon (trans. J. Issaverdens, The Uncanonical Writings of the Old Testament. Venice, 1901).

Later documents related to the Pseudepigrapha have been edited in important collections; most important are those from Armenian by Jacques Issaverdens, from Ethiopic by Wolf Leslau, and from rabbinic Hebrew by Adolph Jellinek (cf. the German translation by A. Wünsche). Recently Father Martin McNamara in The Apocrypha in the Irish Church (Dublin, 1975) drew attention to “probably the richest crop of apocrypha in any of the European vernaculars, possibly in any vernacular language” (p. 2).

While some of the documents mentioned above may prove to be ancient or preserve portions of early Jewish pseudepigrapha, the following ten collections of ancient Jewish or early Christian writings are recognized as important for understanding the period in which the Pseudepigrapha were composed. First and second are the works of the Jewish philosopher and exegete Philo of Alexandria (c. 20 B.C.–A.D. 50) and the Jewish historian Josephus (c. A.D. 37–c. 100); these are essential reading for an understanding of first-century Jewish life and thought. Third are the Dead Sea Scrolls, which are Jewish sectarian documents first found in 1947 in caves to the west of the Dead Sea; these inform us of the apocalyptic and eschatological ideas and of the surprising interpretations of the Old Testament by one sect of Jews, which flourished from the second century B.C. (c. 150 B.C.) to the first century A.D. (viz. A.D. 68). These scrolls are extremely important for an understanding of many pseudepigrapha, especially Jubilees, the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1 Enoch, and the Odes of Solomon. Fourth are the rabbinic writings, and there can be no doubt that some of the traditions recorded in these documents predate the destruction of the Temple in A.D. 70; these early traditions are helpful in understanding the daily life of the religious Jew before the destruction of the nation and the Temple. Fifth are the targums, which are Aramaic translations and expansive interpretations of the Hebrew scriptures; these sometimes seem to preserve important evidence of an ancient understanding of the Old Testament. Since a Targum of Job, dating from the first half of the first century A.D., was found at Qumran, it is now clear that the earliest traditions in the other, but much later, targums must be included in an assessment of early Judaism. Sixth are the "Jewish" magical papyri, especially those edited by K. L. Preisendanz; these should not be ignored, as should become evident from a careful reading of some pseudepigrapha, especially the Prayer of Jacob, the Prayer of Joseph, and the History of Joseph. Seventh are the Hermetica, which are writings of the first few centuries A.D. attributed to Hermes that describe the means to personal salvation; these may contain (although I personally am not convinced) some early Jewish traditions that are important for an understanding of Early Judaism and earliest Christianity. Eighth are the Nag Hammadi codices; these Coptic codices were composed from perhaps the first to the fourth centuries A.D., but were not found until 1945 in Upper Egypt. These writings, most of which are gnostic, are intermittently influenced by early Jewish traditions. Of special importance among these codices is the Apocalypse of Adam included below. Ninth are the New Testament Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha, which contain many early Christian writings that are usually legendary expansions of the New Testament itself; these only infrequently were shaped by early Jewish traditions.

Tenth are the Apocrypha, which are writings that like many pseudepigrapha are usually related to the Hebrew scriptures; as indicated earlier, the Apocrypha are documents preserved in the Greek, but not in the Hebrew, Old Testament. These documents are often designated by Roman Catholics as "deuterocanonical," but most scholars have now accepted the Protestant terminology and call them "Apocrypha."

Different collections of the Apocrypha are available today. In order to harmonize with the contemporary, enlarged concept of Pseudepigrapha the Apocrypha should include only the additional writings preserved in almost all Septuagint manuscripts, and not the additional documents in the Vulgate (see PMR, p. 19). The Apocrypha, therefore, includes thirteen documents: 2 Ezra (= 1 Esdras),* Tobit, Judith, Additions to Esther, Wisdom of Solomon, Sirach, 1 Baruch, Letter of Jeremiah, Prayer of Azariah with the Song of the Three Young Men, Susanna, Bel and the Dragon, 1 Maccabees, and 2 Maccabees. Often two pseudepigrapha, 4 Ezra (= 2 Esdras)* and the Prayer of Manasseh,* are considered part of the Apocrypha. The thirteen documents in the Apocrypha, with the exception of Tobit, which may be much earlier, date from the last two centuries before the common era. These documents may be found in Protestant ecumenical Bibles that contain the Apocrypha in a center section between the testaments, or at the end of the two testaments. All except the three marked with asterisks will be found in Roman Catholic Bibles interspersed among the Old Testament writings or even as part of them (esp. Esth and Dan).

It is important to draw attention to these other significant collections of early Jewish and Christian documents. Along with them, the Pseudepigrapha preserve ideas essential for an understanding of Early Judaism and Early Christianity.

Importance of the Pseudepigrapha

We may now assess briefly the importance of the Pseudepigrapha for a better understanding of the history and thought of Jews during the centuries that preceded and followed the beginning of the common era. Four aspects of that period are impressive. First, there is the very abundance of the literature, although we possess only part of the writings produced by Jews during the period 200 B.C. to A.D. 200. We know many works are lost since early Christians quoted from and referred to documents now lost, since some writings are available only in truncated manuscripts or in fragments, since there are references to lost volumes produced, for example, by Jason of Cyrene, Justus of Tiberias, and Nicolaus of Damascus, and since each new discovery of a manuscript reminds us that there are still more works to be recovered.

It is obvious that post-exilic Judaism was distinguished by voluminous and varied literature: from the production of epics or tragedies in hexameters or iambic trimeters (viz. PhEPoet, EzekTrag) to philosophical tractates (viz. Aristob, Philo, 4Mac), from perhaps reliable histories (viz. 1Mac, some of Josephus' publications) to imaginative recreations of the past (viz. the Chronicler, 3Mac, JosAsen), from apocalyptic dreams and visions of another world (viz. 1En, 2Bar; cf. HistRech) to humanistic wisdom (viz. Sir, Ps-Phoc), and even from charges against God in seemingly Promethean arrogance (viz. Eccl; cf. ApSedr) to hymnic and introspective submissions to God as the sole means of righteousness and salvation (viz. 1QH, PrMan; cf. OdesSol). During the post-exilic period, the Jewish genius exploded into creative new writings.

Second, the Pseudepigrapha illustrate the pervasive influence of the Old Testament books upon Early Judaism. That is seen not only in the following group of works designated "Expansions of the Old Testament," but also in many similar ones, especially in the selection of "apocalypses" and "testaments." Judaism became for all time a religion of the Book, God's eternal message.

Third, we learn from the Pseudepigrapha that the consecutive conquests of Palestinian Jews by Persians, Greeks, and Romans, and the intermittent invasions by Syrian, Egyptian, and Parthian armies did not dampen the enthusiasm of religious Jews for their ancestral traditions. The ancient Davidic Psalter was constantly expanded until some collections included 155 psalms. Other psalmbooks appeared, especially the Psalms of Solomon, the Hodayoth, the Odes of Solomon, and perhaps the Hellenistic Synagogal Hymns. Apocalypses that stressed the grandeur and transcendence of God were customarily interspersed with hymns that celebrated God's nearness, and by prayers that were perceived as heard and answered. Post-exilic Judaism was a living and devout religion. New hymns, psalms, and odes witness to the fact that persecution could not choke the blessings by the faithful.

Fourth, the Pseudepigrapha attest that post-exilic Jews often were torn within by divisions and sects, and intermittently conquered from without by foreign nations who insulted, abused, and frequently employed fatal torture. Persecutions inflamed the desire to revolt and some pseudepigrapha mirror the tensions among the Jews. Especially noteworthy are the Psalms of Solomon and the Testament of Moses, which record the idea that God alone is the source of power; it is he who will initiate action against the gentiles and purge Jerusalem of the foreigners. The apocalypses usually are pessimistic about the present: God had withdrawn from the arena of history and from the earth; he would return only to consummate the end and to inaugurate the new. Thereby the apocalypists affirm the loyalty of God to covenant, invite the reader to live in terms of, indeed within, another world, and envisage an optimistic conclusion for Israel in God's completed story.

The Pseudepigrapha, therefore, are an important source for understanding the social dimensions of Early Judaism. The simplistic picture of Early Judaism should be recast; it certainly was neither a religion which had fallen into arduous legalism due to the crippling demands of the Law, nor was it characterized by four dominant sects. A new picture has been emerging because of ideas preserved in the documents collected below. Three examples suffice to demonstrate this insight: First, none of the present translators strives to identify a document with a particular Jewish sect. We cannot identify with certainty any author of a pseudepigraphon as being a Pharisee or an Essene or a member of another sect. Second, Palestinian Jews were influenced by Egyptian, Persian, and Greek ideas. Hence, the old distinction between "Palestinian Judaism" and "Hellenistic Judaism" must be either redefined or discarded. Third, because of the variegated, even contradictory, nature of the ideas popular in many sectors of post-exilic Judaism, it is obvious that Judaism was not monolithically structured or shaped by a central and all-powerful "orthodoxy."

When Charles published his edition of the Pseudepigrapha, it was widely held that Early Judaism was shaped and characterized by "normative Judaism" or a ruling orthodoxy centered in Jerusalem. This idea is no longer defended by most biblical scholars. Since 1947, when the first of the Dead Sea Scrolls were discovered, there has even been a tendency to emphasize unduly the diversity in Early Judaism. While it is now recognized that foreign ideas penetrated deep into many aspects of Jewish thought, and that sometimes it is difficult to decide whether an early document is essentially Jewish or Christian, it is, nevertheless, unwise to exaggerate the diversity in Early Judaism. In the first century Judaism was neither uniformly normative nor chaotically diverse.

The above discussion leads to the following observations that should be emphasized. The documents contained herein certainly demonstrate the rich vitality and diversity of Judaism during the early centuries. This is not the place to attempt to articulate further what, if anything, seems to unify them. Certainly confirmed is Charles's own statement that was controversial in his time: Without the Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha (and we would add other documents recovered since his time, notably the Dead Sea Scrolls) "it is absolutely impossible to explain the course of religious development between 200 B.C. and A.D. 100" (APOT, vol. 1, p. x).

Significant theological conceptions

The general reader will find it helpful, when reading the documents collected below, to learn that at least four significant theological concerns are frequently found in the Pseudepigrapha: preoccupations with the meaning of sin, the origins of evil, and the problem of theodicy; stresses upon God's transcendence; concerns with the coming of the Messiah; and beliefs in a resurrection that are often accompanied with descriptions of Paradise. Each of these interests was developed—at least partly—from ideas and beliefs found in the Old Testament. At the beginning it is prudent to emphasize that scholars' understanding of early Jewish theology has evolved from decades of research not only upon the Pseudepigrapha, but also upon the Old Testament, the Apocrypha, early rabbinics, Philo, Josephus, and the Dead Sea Scrolls.

Sin, Evil, and the Problem of Theodicy. The Jews who returned to Palestine following the sixth-century B.C. exile in Babylon attempted to be faithful to the covenant; they rebuilt the Temple and emphasized the study of the Torah. Dedication to purity involved not only heightened rules for worship and daily life but also racial purity and separation from the heathen. Despite renewed dedication and faithfulness, the righteous did not prosper and live in a holy land free from domination. It was the sinners and the unfaithful who seemed to be rewarded, and the land—indeed the land promised to Abraham as an inheritance—was ruled by foreign oppressors. Sin and injustice were rewarded; evil appeared to be the ruling power in a world created by God. Raised repeatedly was the question: “How could the God of Israel be holy, just, and all-powerful, and at the same time permit evil forces to oppress the righteous?” Many pseudepigrapha are shaped by this question and the problem of theodicy (see especially 4Ezra, 2Bar, ApAbr, 3Bar).

This problem evoked mutually exclusive reactions in Judaism. Qoheleth concluded, “Vanity of vanities. All is vanity!” (Eccl 1:2). Authors of some pseudepigrapha, basing their insight upon the story of Adam and Eve's first sin, described in Genesis 3, took the position that evil was dominant in the world because of Eve's sin. The author of the Life of Adam and Eve 18:1, as the author of Sirach 25:24 (in the Apocrypha), put the blame squarely upon Eve. The source of the guilt shifts completely from Eve to Adam in 4 Ezra. Evil reigns in the world certainly not because of God's actions, but because of Adam, who “transgressed” and was overcome, and not only he himself but all who descend from him (4Ezra 3:20f.; cf. 7:118). About the same time as 4 Ezra, the author of 2 Baruch argued that sin is in the world and continues to be a power because each individual chooses to sin (2Bar 54:15, 19; cf. 1En 98:4f.).

An appreciably different explanation for the origin of sin is found emphasized in numerous pseudepigrapha. Taking as their starting point the story in Genesis 6 about “the sons of God” who married “the daughters of men,” the authors of some pseudepigrapha—especially the authors of 1 and 2 Enoch—claim that evil is in the world and is a powerful force because of evil angels. Four possible explanations for the fall of these angels may be discerned: 1) The angels had lusted for earth's beautiful women (1En 6:1–16:4, 40:7, 54:6; 2En 18). 2) The angels perhaps had desired to reproduce themselves (1En 6:2b, 7:1–3). 3) The Devil and his followers refused to worship Adam (Vita 14:3). 4) An angel and his legions desired to exalt themselves (2En 29:4f.). All these explanations, despite their significant differences, reflect the seriousness with which evil was perceived by post-exilic Jews, and all attempt to absolve God of the responsibility for evil. This balanced perspective is upset in a much later document, the Apocalypse of Sedrach (ch. 5).

Evil is a dominant force in the world, despite God's will and actions. The righteous suffer primarily because of the power evil has obtained on the earth. The land of Israel has been engulfed by nations either sent by God to punish his sinful people or by foreigners ruled by evil forces or angels; hence God can both send evil and allow it to continue. God's people suffer, and he tends to remove himself from a special portion of his creation.

Transcendence of God. The emphasis in many pseudepigrapha that God is far from Israel contrasts markedly with earlier traditions, especially two accounts: According to Genesis 18 God encountered Abraham on the earth and by the oaks of Mamre, just north of Hebron; according to Exodus 3 the Lord God calls Moses from a burning bush on Mount Horeb, and the presence of God defines the place as "holy ground." After the exile God is usually perceived as one who is above. The apocalyptists place him in the highest heaven, far removed from the earth (1En 1:4, 71:5–11; 2En 20:5), but the prayers interspersed through the apocalypses reveal that he is not inaccessible. He has withdrawn from the world and no longer acts in its history; he will, however, act again, probably through intermediaries (PssSol 17, TLevi 18, TJud 24, 4Ezra 7, 2Bar 72f.). Most pseudepigrapha, in contrast to earlier Jewish writings, are characterized by an increasing claim that God is thoroughly majestic and transcendent (2Mac 3:39; 3Mac 2:15; SibOr 3.1, 11, 81, 807; 5.298, 352; MartIs 1:6b; 1En 71:5–11; 2En 20:5). Knowledge of him is obtained almost always only through the sacred books, the descent of angels (Tab 2:15), the gift of vision (1En 1:2), or the journey of a seer through the various heavens (2En, AscenIs). The contrast of these ideas with earlier ones is demonstrated by the way the author of the Testament of Abraham rewrites Genesis 18: God does not descend to visit Abraham; he sends his angel Michael to speak with the patriarch (Tab 1; cf. 16).

The contrast between ideas or tendencies in early documents, such as Genesis, and those in the Pseudepigrapha should not be exaggerated; and the rewriting of God's encounter with Abraham should not be interpreted to mean that religious Jews came to believe that God was absolutely extramundane, remote, and exiled. As the hymns, odes, and prayers in the apocalypses themselves demonstrate, the Jew continued to affirm efficacious and personal communion with God. With these caveats it is possible to point out that early Jews tended to emphasize God's holiness, majesty, gloriousness, and sovereignty; he was transcendent.

Messianism. The belief in a Messiah—a term which here means an ideal person, probably a king or priest, who will bring in perfect peace—is not found in the Old Testament, in the Apocrypha, or in Philo and Josephus (except for allusions). The belief in a future messianic Davidic king, however, is recorded in the prophets (viz. Isa 9:2–7, 11:1–9; Jer 33:14–22; Ezek 37:24–28); and the belief in a future Messiah (or Anointed One) of Aaron and Israel (CD Text B 19.10f.; cf. IQS 9.11) is recorded in the Dead Sea Scrolls. The term "Messiah" also appears in the later Targums (especially Pseudo-Jonathan [Jerusalem Targum] at Gen 49:1 and Num 24:17–24). Numerous titles were given to the expected messianic figure; but since it is difficult to be certain in which passages these are indeed titles for the Messiah, it is wise to limit this overview only to the places in the Pseudepigrapha which mention the terms "the Messiah" (the Heb. noun) or "the Christ" (the Gk. translation) or "the Anointed One" (which is the meaning of both the Heb. and the Gk.).

Significantly, most pseudepigrapha do not contain a reference to the coming of a Messiah; and it is impossible to derive a systematic description of the functions of the Messiah from the extant references to him. Only five pseudepigrapha contain clearly Jewish traditions about the Messiah. Late in the first century B.C. the author of the Psalms of Solomon yearned for the coming of the Messiah, who will “purge Jerusalem from gentiles.” Notably he shall perform this task “with the word of his mouth,” and do this not from his own initiative, but because he is God’s agent and belongs to God (PssSol 17f.).

Apparently late in the first century A.D.—when many of the New Testament writings were being written, especially Matthew, Luke, and John—three authors of pseudepigrapha elaborated on traditions concerning the Messiah. The author of 2 Baruch focused upon the role of the Messiah in three separate sections (chs. 29f., 39–42, 72–74). When “all is accomplished” the Messiah will be revealed and the righteous resurrected (2Bar 29f.). In contrast to this apparently passive role, the Messiah, according to the second section (2Bar 39–42), will act decisively, convicting and putting to death the last evil leader, and protecting God’s people. The Messiah is also active in the third section (2Bar 72–74): He shall summon all the nations, sparing those who have not mistreated Israel, and slaying those who have ruled over her. In both the second and third messianic sections the Messiah appears to be described as a militant warrior who slays the gentiles by the sword (72:6).

At about the same time as the author of 2 Baruch the author of 4 Ezra, in three passages (chs. 7, 11:37–12:34, 13:3–14:9), discusses the functions of the Messiah. According to the first of these (4Ezra 7), in the future age, the world to come (7:50, 8:1), the Messiah shall be revealed, bringing rejoicing for four hundred years, and eventually die (7:28f.). According to the second passage (4Ezra 11:37–12:34), the Messiah, who is depicted as “the lion,” will denounce, judge, and destroy the ungodly; but he shall deliver the faithful and make them joyful. According to the third section (4Ezra 13:3–14:9), the Messiah, who is “my son” (13:32, 37, 52; 14:9; cf. 7:28f.) and “a man” (13:26, 32), withstands a warring multitude and consumes them with “a stream of fire” that proceeds from his mouth.

Perhaps roughly contemporaneously with 2 Baruch and 4 Ezra (see the introduction to 1En), the author of 1 Enoch 37–71 recorded his ideas about the Messiah. In contrast to his vivid depictions of “the Son of Man,” “the Righteous One,” and “the Elect One,” the author’s two meager references to the Messiah (or “the Anointed One”) are surprisingly brief (48:10, 52:4). No functions are attributed to the Messiah.

The fifth document in the Pseudepigrapha that contains a clearly Jewish perspective on the Messiah is the late document titled 3 Enoch. Noteworthy is the portrayal of a Messiah who is son of Joseph, and a Messiah who is son of David (45:5). It is possible that one Messiah is meant; but if two Messiahs are denoted, then the Messiahs of Israel will wage war against Gog and Magog at the end of time. This war appears to end in a draw; God himself eventually enters the war and wins the last battle. Subsequently the author of 3 Enoch describes the celebration of Israel’s salvation (48:10A). The possibly early date of these traditions has been raised by the discovery of similar ones in the Dead Sea Scrolls (especially 1QS, CD, 1QM).

Obviously different from the above are the references to “the Messiah” (and derived terms) in the pseudepigrapha that appear to be Christian compositions. Observe especially the use of the term in the Odes of Solomon (9:3, 17:17, 24:1, 29:6, 39:11, 41:3, 41:15), the Apocalypse of Zephaniah (10:24–12:32), the Apocalypse of Elijah (13:15–15:14, 25:8–19), and the Apocalypse of Sedrach (ch. 12). Lengthy Christian additions in the Vision of Isaiah (9:12–13, 30:7–15) and the Testament of Adam (Rec. 2) also contain significant references to “the Anointed One” or “the Christ.”

Resurrection and Paradise. Scholars generally agree that the Old Testament writings, with the possible exception of Isaiah 26 and Daniel 12, do not contain explicit references to the resurrection of the dead. At death the individual simply is gathered to his final (or father’s) place, the tomb. Sheol and the netherworld (‘eres) is described as the abode of the dead, not of people who continue to live after death (cf. Isa 38:18, Sir 17:28, 14:12–19). Only through his reputation or a son does his life continue on the earth. In contrast to this perception are the ideas developed in post-exilic Judaism. Some books in the Apocrypha contain numerous explicit references to the resurrection of the dead (see especially 2Mac 7, 14), or possibly even to the immortality of the soul (WisSol), and the Dead Sea Scrolls preserve ambiguous sections possibly referring to an afterlife (see especially 1QH 5.34, 6.29f., 11.10–14). Some pseudepigrapha, even more than these other documents, contain many passages that with pellucid clarity express the belief in a resurrection after death (viz. TJob, PssSol, 4Mac, Ps-Phoc, 2En, HistRech). The author of 2 Baruch, moreover, devotes a section, 49–52, to the description of the resurrected body.

Logically subsequent to the development of this idea is the attempt to describe the future place of rest for the righteous. Hence, picturesque images of Paradise appear in many pseudepigrapha. The various pictorial descriptions are characterized by mutually exclusive ideas. Paradise is placed sometimes in the third heaven (2En 8A, ApMos 37:5, 40:1), and sometimes on the earth (1En 32; 2En 8:1–6A, 30:1A; ApMos 38:5). It is depicted as either without inhabitants (1En 32, 2En 8f., 4Ezra 8:52) or with inhabitants (PssSol 14, 2En 42:3B, ApAb 21, OdesSol 11:16–24; cf. HistRech). It is portrayed as both an eternal inheritance (PssSol 14:3f.; 2En 65:10A; OdesSol 11:16d, 16f.; 4Ezra 8:52) and a state preceding the end (ApMos 37:5, 40:1–41:3; Vita 48:6f.; AscensIs 9; cf. HistRech 13–15). There are some common beliefs, notably that Paradise is full of fruitful trees (see 2En 8A, OdesSol 11:11–16, 23) and distinguished by a sweet-smelling odor (viz. see 1En 32:3, 2En 8A, OdesSol 11:15, 2En 23:18).

The contradicting ideas should not be explained away or forced into an artificial system. Such ideas in the Pseudepigrapha witness to the fact that Early Judaism was not a speculative philosophical movement or theological system, even though the Jews demonstrated impressive speculative fecundity. The Pseudepigrapha mirror a living religion in which the attempt was made to come to terms with the dynamic phenomena of history and experience.

These are only four of the theological characteristics of the Pseudepigrapha, namely the problems of sin and theodicy, emphasis upon God’s transcendence, speculations about the Messiah, and the ideas concerning the afterlife. Many other theological features could also be highlighted. The choice between a lunar and a solar calendar (see Jub and 1En) produced major upheavals in Judaism in the second century B.C. Calendrical issues contained cosmic and profound theological dimensions. How exasperating to discover you were not observing the Sabbath on the correct day and with the angels and the rest of the universe. How astounding to learn that Passover was celebrated at the wrong time. Similarly, the search for authority and reliable insight into God's will is reflected in the search for the quintessence of Torah and its text. The search for God himself and the tendency toward belief in a transcendent and apparently aloof Creator spawned complex angelologies. The impossibility of obtaining satisfactory meaning in present history helped produce the theological perspectives behind apocalypticism.

Conclusion

These introductory comments are far too brief to constitute an introduction to the Pseudepigrapha, and they should not be taken to indicate that scholars have arrived at anything like a consensus on the major issues. These few comments should, however, enable the general reader to understand better the documents collected below; at least they reflect how the editor perceives them. Each of the Pseudepigrapha is preceded by an introduction (see Editor's Preface) and organized under categories which also have brief introductions. These collectively serve to help the reader appreciate the documents themselves.

EXPLANATION OF TYPOGRAPHICAL AND REFERENCE SYSTEMS

Chapter and verse numbers

We have endeavored to present the documents below in a format similar to that of the Jerusalem Bible. Hence, chapters and verses are supplied. A new chapter is indicated by a large bold numeral. Verse numbers are placed in the margin in ordinary roman type; in the text itself, the beginning of each verse is marked by a • which precedes the first word of the verse except when the verse begins a new line or a new chapter. Because of their linguistic nature, some documents—such as the Sibylline Oracles, Letter of Aristeas, and Syriac Menander—are not divided into chapters and verses. These are presented so that the beginning of each line or section of text is noted in the margin with numbers in ordinary roman type as with verse numbers.

Italics in the text

Italic type in the text denotes full or partial quotations of the Bible. The biblical passage from which the quotation is derived is noted in the margin.

Brackets and other sigla in the translation

- [] Square brackets denote restorations.
- < > Pointed brackets signify corrections to a text.
- () Parentheses circumscribe words added by the translator. Ancient languages are cryptic; verbs, nouns, and pronouns are often omitted. These are, of course, necessary for idiomatic English and are presented within parentheses.
- | | This siglum indicates a letter incorrectly omitted by an ancient scribe.
- { } Braces denote unnecessary words or letters in an ancient text.

Footnotes

In each chapter, footnotes are lettered alphabetically. The footnotes are not intended to be a mini-commentary, but to supply significant information, such as important related thoughts contained in ancient writings not considered either canonical or extracanonical. Only significant variants in the manuscripts are cited. These notes assume that the reader has read the general introduction and the introduction to each document being footnoted.

Punctuation of biblical references

Chapter and verse are separated by a colon, e.g. Ex 20:7. A subsequent verse in the same chapter is separated from the preceding by a comma. Subsequent citations in other biblical or apocryphal writings are separated by semicolons: e.g. Ex 20:17, 20; Lev 9:15. Citations which are not preceded by an abbreviation refer to the respective passage in a document being footnoted.

Marginal references

Marginal references are kept to a minimum and except in rare occasions are limited to significant parallels in biblical and apocryphal writings. These marginal references should help the reader better understand the relevant passage by drawing attention to the source of a biblical quotation, and to other uses of special terms, phrases, or images. The references in the margin often occur in groups all relating to one text line; in such cases, the position of the first reference indicates the line to which the whole group applies. Marginal references not preceded by the abbreviation of a book indicate a passage elsewhere in the document before the reader.

Care has been taken to assure that each marginal reference begins on the line to which it refers. However, in some cases this is not possible because of the length of necessary marginal references. In these cases, the marginal reference is preceded by a verse reference (i.e. the letter v plus the number of the verse) so the reader can attach the marginal references to the correct verses.

Secondary divisions within the document

The manuscripts from which the translators have worked usually do not separate the text so that each new thought or development in the narrative is indicated. The translators have supplied the subdivisions to help the reader follow the flow of the document.

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

I. MODERN PUBLICATIONS

AAR	American Academy of Religion
AcOr	Acta orientalia
AGAJU	Arbeiten zur Geschichte des antiken Judentums und des Urchristentums
Agrapha	Resch, A., ed. Agrapha: Aussercanonische Schriftfragmente . TU 30.3–4; Leipzig, 1906.
ALBO	Analecta Iovaniensia biblica et orientalia
ALGHJ	Arbeiten zur Literatur und Geschichte des hellenistischen Judentums
ALUOS	Annual of the Leeds University Oriental Society
ANET	Pritchard, J. B., ed. Ancient Near Eastern Texts . Princeton, 1969 ³ .
ANF	Roberts, A., and J. Donaldson, eds. The Ante-Nicene Fathers: Translations of the Writings of the Fathers down to A.D. 325 . 10 vols. Edinburgh, 1868–72; rev. and repr. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1950–52.
ANRW	Haase, W., and H. Temporini, eds. Aufstieg und Niedergang der römischen Welt . Berlin, New York, 1979– .
ANT	James, M. R. The Apocryphal New Testament . Oxford, 1924; corrected ed., 1955.
APAT	Kautzsch, E., ed. Die Apokryphen und Pseudepigraphen des Alten Testaments . 2 vols. Tübingen, 1900.
Apoc. Lit.	Torrey, C. C. The Apocryphal Literature: A Brief Introduction . New Haven, Conn., 1945; repr. Hamden, Conn., 1963.
Apocrifi del NT	Erbeta, M. Gli Apocrifi del Nuovo Testamento . 3 vols. Turin, 1966–69.
APOT	Charles, R. H., ed. The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament in English . 2 vols. Oxford, 1913.
ArOr	Archiv orientální
ASOR	American Schools of Oriental Research
ASTI	Annual of the Swedish Theological Institute
ATANT	Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments
ATR	Anglican Theological Review
AusBR	Australian Biblical Review
BA	The Biblical Archeologist
BASOR	Bulletin of the American Schools of Oriental Research
BDT	Harrison, E. F., et al., eds. Baker's Dictionary of Theology . Grand Rapids, Mich., 1960.
BEvT	Beiträge zur evangelischen Theologie
BHH	Reicke, B., and L. Rost, eds. Biblisch-historisches Handwörterbuch . 3 vols. Göttingen, 1962–66.

BHM	Jellinek, A. Bet ha-Midrash . 2 vols. Jerusalem, 1967 ³ .
Bib	Biblica
Biblia Sacra	Weber, R., et al., eds. Biblia Sacra: Iuxta Vulgatam Versionem . 2 vols. Stuttgart, 1969.
Bibliographie	Delling, G. Bibliographie zur jüdisch-hellenistischen und intertestamentarischen Literatur 1900–1970 . TU 106 ² ; Berlin, 1975 ² .
BibSt	Biblische Studien
BIFAO	Bulletin de l'institut français d'archéologie orientale
BiKi	Bibel und Kirche
BIOSCS	Bulletin of the International Organization for Septuagint and Cognate Studies
BJRL, BJRULM	Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, Bulletin of the John Rylands University Library of Manchester
B-L²	Haag, H., ed. Bibel-Lexikon . Zurich, 1968 ² .
BLE	Bulletin de littérature ecclésiastique
BO	Bibliotheca orientalis
BSOAS	Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies
BZ	Biblischè Zeitschrift
BZAW	Beihefte zur Zeitschrift für die alttestamentliche Wissenschaft
BZNW	Beihefte zur Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft und die Kunde der älteren Kirche
CB	Cultura biblica
CBQ	Catholic Biblical Quarterly
CCSL	Corpus Christianorum. Series Latina.
CETEDOC	Centre de traitement électronique des documents
CG	Cairensis Gnosticus
Crucible	Toynbee, A., ed. The Crucible of Christianity: Judaism, Hellenism and the Historical Background to the Christian Faith . New York, 1969.
CSCO	Corpus scriptorum christianorum orientalium
CTM	Concordia Theological Monthly
DB	Vigouroux, F., ed. Dictionnaire de la Bible . 5 vols. Paris, 1895–1912.
DBSup	Pirot, L., et al., eds. Dictionnaire de la Bible, Suppléments . Paris, 1928– .
DJD	Discoveries in the Judaean Desert
Dogmengeschichte⁴	Harnack, A. Lehrbuch der Dogmengeschichte . 3 vols. Tübingen, 1909–10 ⁴ .
DTT	Dansk teologisk Tidsskrift
Enciclopedia de la Biblia	Gutiérrez-Larraya, J. A., ed. Enciclopedia de la Biblia . 6 vols. Barcelona, 1963.
Encyclopedia of Christianity	Palmer, E. H., et al., eds. The Encyclopedia of Christianity . Wilmington, Del., 1964– .
EncyJud	Roth, C., et al., eds. Encyclopedia Judaica . 16 vols. New York, 1971–72.
EOS	Eos. Commentarii Societatis Philologae Polonorum
ETL	Ephemerides theologicae Iovanienses
EvT	Evangelische Theologie
Exégèse biblique et judaïsme	Ménard, J.-E., ed. Exégèse biblique et judaïsme . Strasbourg, 1973.
ExpT	Expository Times

- Falasha Anthology* Leslau, W. Falasha Anthology. Yale Judaica Series 6; New Haven, 1951.
- FBBS Facet Books, Biblical Series
- FGH Jacoby, F., ed. Fragmente der griechischen Historiker. 3 vols. Leiden, 1923–
- FRLANT Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments
- GamPseud* Hammershaimb, E., et al., eds. De Gammeltestamentlige Pseudepigrapher. 2 vols. Copenhagen, 1953–76.
- GCS Die griechischen christlichen Schriftsteller der ersten drei Jahrhunderte
- GDBL Nielsen, E., and B. Noack, eds. Gads Danske Bibel Leksikon. 2 vols. Copenhagen, 1965–66.
- Geschichte* [Baumstark] Baumstark, A. Geschichte der syrischen Literatur mit Ausschluss der christlichpalästinensischen Texte. Bonn, 1922.
- Geschichte* [Graf] Graf, G. "Apokryphen und Pseudepigraphen," Geschichte der christlichen arabischen Literatur. Studi e Testi 118; Vatican, 1944; vol. 1, pp. 196–297.
- GLAJJ Stern, M., ed. Greek and Latin Authors on Jews and Judaism. Vol. 1: From Herodotus to Plutarch. Jerusalem, 1974.
- GNT Grundrisse zum Neuen Testament
- Goodenough Festschrift Neusner, J., ed. Religions in Antiquity: Essays in Memory of Erwin Ramsdell Goodenough. Sup Numen 14; Leiden, 1968.
- Gottesvolk* Janssen, E. Das Gottesvolk und seine Geschichte: Geschichtsbild und Selbstverständnis im palästinensischen Schrifttum von Jesus Sirach bis Jehuda ha-Nasi. Neukirchen-Vluyn, 1971.
- Gunkel Festschrift Schmidt, H., ed. Eucharistëron: Studien zur Religion des Alten und Neuen Testaments. H. Gunkel Festschrift. Part 2: Zur Religion und Literatur des Neuen Testaments. Göttingen, 1923.
- Hastings' DB Hastings, J., ed. Dictionary of the Bible, rev. ed. by F. C. Grant and H. H. Rowley. New York, 1963.
- HAW Handbuch der Altertumswissenschaft
- HeyJ* Heythrop Journal
- History* [Pfeiffer] Pfeiffer, R. H. History of the New Testament Times with an Introduction to the Apocrypha. New York, 1949.
- History* [Schürer] Schürer, E. A History of the Jewish People in the Time of Jesus Christ. 5 vols., plus index, trans. J. MacPherson et al. Edinburgh, 1897–98.
- History . . . The Time of the Apostles* Hausrath, A. A History of New Testament Times: The Time of the Apostles. 4 vols., trans. L. Huxley. London, 1895.
- HNT Handbuch zum Neuen Testament
- HSW Hennecke, E., W. Schneemelcher, and R. McL. Wilson, eds. New Testament Apocrypha. 2 vols. London, 1963–65.
- HTKNT Herders theologischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament
- HTR Harvard Theological Review
- HTS Harvard Theological Studies

- HUCA Hebrew Union College Annual
IB Buttrick, G. A., et al., eds. The Interpreter's Bible. 12 vols. New York, 1952–57.
ICC International Critical Commentary
IDB Buttrick, G. A., et al., eds. The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible. 4 vols. New York, 1962.
IDBS Crim, K., et al., eds. The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Supplementary Volume. Nashville, Tenn., 1976.
IEJ Israel Exploration Journal
Int Interpretation
Intr. to the Apoc. Metzger, B. M. An Introduction to the Apocrypha. New York, 1957.
Introduction Denis, A.-M. Introduction aux pseudépigraphes grecs d'Ancien Testament. SVTP I; Leiden, 1970.
IOCB Laymon, C. M., ed. The Interpreter's One-Volume Commentary on the Bible. New York, 1971.
ITQ Irish Theological Quarterly
JA Journal asiatique
JAAR Journal of the American Academy of Religion
JAC Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum
JAL Jewish Apocryphal Literature
JAOS Journal of the American Oriental Society
JBC Brown, R. E., J. A. Fitzmyer, and R. E. Murphy, eds. The Jerome Biblical Commentary. Englewood Cliffs, N.J., 1968.
JBL Journal of Biblical Literature
JBLMS Journal of Biblical Literature Monograph Series
JE Singer, I., et al., eds. The Jewish Encyclopedia. 12 vols. New York, London, 1901–6.
Jewish Symbols Goodenough, E. R. Jewish Symbols in the Greco-Roman Period. 13 vols. New York, 1953–68.
JJS Journal of Jewish Studies
JNES Journal of Near Eastern Studies
JPOS Journal of the Palestine Oriental Society
JQR Jewish Quarterly Review
JRAS Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society
JSHRZ Kümmel, W. G., et al. Jüdische Schriften aus hellenistisch-römischer Zeit. Gütersloh, 1973– .
JSJ Journal for the Study of Judaism
JSS Journal of Semitic Studies
JThC Journal for Theology and the Church
JTS Journal of Theological Studies
Judaic Tradition Glatzer, N. N. The Judaic Tradition: Texts Edited and Introduced. Boston, 1969.
Kommentar Strack, H. L., and P. Billerbeck. Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrasch. 5 vols. Munich, 1922–56.
KS Kirjath Sepher
Kuhn Festschrift Jeremias, G., H.-W. Kuhn, and H. Stegemann, eds. Tradition und Glaube: Das frühe Christentum in seiner Umwelt. Festgabe für Karl Georg Kuhn zum 65. Geburtstag. Göttingen, 1971.

- Lampe, G. W. H., ed. A Patristic Greek Lexicon. Oxford, 1961–68.
- LAOT James, M. R. The Lost Apocrypha of the Old Testament. TED; London, New York, 1920.
- LCL Loeb Classical Library
- Legends Ginzberg, L. The Legends of the Jews. 7 vols., trans. H. Szold. Philadelphia, 1909–38; repr. 1937–66.
- Literatur und Religion des Frühjudentums* Maier, J., and J. Schreiner, eds. Literatur und Religion des Frühjudentums. Gütersloh, 1973.
- LSJM Liddell, H. G., and R. Scott. A Greek-English Lexicon, rev. by H. S. Jones and R. McKenzie. Oxford, 1940.
- LTK² Buchberger, M., J. Höfer, and K. Rahner, eds. Lexikon für Theologie und Kirche. 11 vols. Freiburg, 1957–67².
- LUOS MS Leeds University Oriental Society Monograph Series
- MBPAR Münchener Beiträge zur Papyrusforschung und Antiken Rechtsgeschichte
- McCQ McCormick Quarterly
- MGWJ Monatsschrift für Geschichte und Wissenschaft des Judentums
- Missionsliteratur Dalbert, P. Die Theologie der hellenistisch-jüdischen Missionsliteratur unter Ausschluss von Philo und Josephus. Hamburg-Volksdorf, 1954.
- M. Smith Festschrift Neusner, J., ed. Christianity, Judaism and Other Greco-Roman Cults: Studies for Morton Smith at Sixty. SJLA 12; Leiden, 1975.
- NCCHS Fuller, R. C., et al., eds. A New Catholic Commentary on Holy Scripture. London, 1969.
- NCE McDonald, W. J., et al., eds. New Catholic Encyclopedia. 15 vols. New York, 1967– .
- NEB New English Bible
- NHC Nag Hammadi Codex
- NHL Nag Hammadi Library
- NHS Nag Hammadi Studies
- NovT Novum Testamentum
- NovTSup Novum Testamentum, Supplements
- NTS New Testament Studies
- NTTS New Testament Tools and Studies
- OCA Orientalia Christiana Analecta
- Or Orientalia
- OrChr Orientalia Christiana
- OrSyr L'Orient syrien
- OTS Oudtestamentische Studiën
- Pauly-Wissowa Wissowa, G., et al., eds. Paulys Real-Encyclopädie der classischen Altertumswissenschaft, neue Bearbeitung. Stuttgart, Munich, 1893–1972.
- PCB Peake, A. S., M. Black, and H. H. Rowley, eds. Peake's Commentary on the Bible. London, New York, 1962.
- PEQ Palestine Exploration Quarterly
- PETSE Papers of the Estonian Theological Society in Exile
- Peshitta The Old Testament in Syriac According to the Peshitta Version. Leiden, 1966– .
- PG Patrologiae graecae, ed. J. Migne
- PIOL Publications de l'institut orientaliste de Louvain

- PL Patrologiae latinae, ed. J. Migne
 PMR Charlesworth, J. H. The Pseudepigrapha and Modern Research. SCS 7; Missoula, Mont., 1976.
- Pseud 1* Fritz, K. von, ed. Pseudepigrapha 1: Pseudopythagorica, lettres de Platon, littérature pseudépigraphe juive. Entretiens sur l'antiquité classique 18; Geneva, 1972.
- Pseudépigraphe* Philonenko, M., et al. Pseudépigraphe de l'Ancien Testament et manuscrits de la mer morte. Cahiers de la RHPR 41; Paris, 1967.
- PVTG Pseudepigrapha Veteris Testamenti Graece
 RAC Klauser, T., et al., eds. Reallexikon für Antike und Christentum: Sachwörterbuch zur Auseinandersetzung des Christentums mit der antiken Welt. Stuttgart, 1950– .
- RB Revue biblique
 RBen Revue bénédictine
 RechBib Recherches bibliques
 REJ Revue des études juives
 RESI Revue des études slaves
 RevistB Revista bíblica
 RevSem Revue sémitique
 RGG³ Galling, K., et al., eds. Die Religion in Geschichte und Gegenwart. 6 vols. plus index. Tübingen, 1957–65³.
- RHPR Revue d'histoire et de philosophie religieuse
 RHR Revue de l'histoire des religions Riessler Riessler, P. Altjüdisches Schrifttum ausserhalb der Bibel. Heidelberg, 1927; repr. 1966.
- RivB Revista bíblica
 ROC Revue de l'orient chrétien
 RQ Revue de Qumran
 RSR Recherches de science religieuse
 RSV Revised Standard Version
 RTP Revue de théologie et de philosophie Sacramentum Mundi Rahner, K., et al., eds. Sacramentum Mundi: An Encyclopedia of Theology. 6 vols. New York, 1968–70.
- SBFLA Studii biblici franciscani liber annuus
 SBLDS Society of Biblical Literature Dissertation Series
 SBLMS Society of Biblical Literature Monograph Series
SBL 1971 Seminar Papers The Society of Biblical Literature One Hundred Seventh Annual Meeting Seminar Papers—28–31 October 1971, Regency Hyatt House—Atlanta, Ga. 2 vols. Missoula, Mont., 1971.
- SBL 1972 Seminar Papers* McGaughy, L. C., ed. The Society of Biblical Literature One Hundred Eighth Annual Meeting Book of Seminar Papers: Friday–Tuesday, 1–5 September 1972, Century Plaza Hotel—Los Angeles, Ca. 2 vols. Missoula, Mont., 1972.
- SBL 1974 Seminar Papers* MacRae, G., ed. Society of Biblical Literature 1974 Seminar Papers: One Hundred Tenth Annual Meeting, 24–27 October 1974, Washington Hilton, Washington, D.C. 2 vols. Cambridge, Mass., 1974.
- SBT Studies in Biblical Theology

SC	Sources chrétiennes
ScEs	Science et esprit
SCS	Septuagint and Cognate Studies
SCS 2	Kraft, R. A., ed. 1972 Proceedings: International Organization for Septuagint and Cognate Studies and the Society of Biblical Literature Pseudepigrapha Seminar . SCS 2; Missoula, Mont., 1972.
SCS 4	Nickelsburg, G. W. E. Jr., ed. Studies on the Testament of Moses: Seminar Papers . SCS 4; Cambridge, Mass., 1973.
SCS 5	Nickelsburg, G. W. E. Jr., ed. Studies on the Testament of Joseph . SCS 5; Missoula, Mont., 1975.
SCS 6	Nickelsburg, G. W. E. Jr., ed. Studies on the Testament of Abraham . SCS 6; Missoula, Mont., 1976.
SEA	Svensk exegetisk Årsbok
Sem	Semitica
Septuaginta	Rahlfs, A., ed. Septuaginta: Id est Vetus Testamentum graece iuxta LXX interpretes . 2 vols. Stuttgart, 1935; repr. 1965.
SJLA	Studies in Judaism in Late Antiquity
SJT	Scottish Journal of Theology
SNTS MS	Studiorum Novi Testamenti Societas Monograph Series
SPB	Studia postbiblica
ST	Studia Theologica
StANT	Studien zum Alten und Neuen Testament
Studien	Eltester, W., ed. Studien zu den Testamenten der zwölf Patriarchen . BZNW 36; Berlin, 1969.
Studies on T12P	Jonge, M. de. Studies on the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs: Text and Interpretation . SVTP 3; Leiden, 1975.
Sup Numen	Supplements to Numen
SVTP	Studia in Veteris Testamenti Pseudepigrapha
T&S	Texts and Studies
T&T	Texts and Translations
TBT	The Bible Today
TDNT	Kittel, G., ed. Theological Dictionary of the New Testament . 10 vols., trans. G. W. Bromiley. Grand Rapids, Mich., London, 1964–76.
TED	Translations of Early Documents
ThĒE	Martinos, A., ed. Thrēskēutikē kai Ēthikē Enkuklopaideia . 12 vols. Athens, 1962–68.
ThRu	Theologische Rundschau
TLZ	Theologische Literaturzeitung
TQ	Theologische Quartalschrift
TU	Texte und Untersuchungen
TWAT	Botterweck, G. J., and H. Ringgren, eds. Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Alten Testament . Stuttgart, 1970–
TZ	Theologische Zeitschrift
USQR	Union Seminar Quarterly Review
VC	Vigiliae christianae
VT	Vetus Testamentum

VTSup 22	Boer, P. A. H. de, ed. Congress Volume: Uppsala 1971 . Supplements to VT 22; Leiden, 1972.
Widengren Festschrift	Bergman, J., et al., eds. Ex Orbe Religionum: Studia Geo Widengren . 2 vols. Studies in the History of Religions 21, 22; Leiden, 1972.
WUNT WZHalle	Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift der Martin-Luther-Universität, Halle-Wittenberg. Gesellschafts- und Sprachwissenschaftliche Reihe
WZJena	Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift der Friedrich-Schiller-Universität, Jena. Gesellschafts- und Sprachwissenschaftliche Reihe
WZKM	Wiener Zeitschrift für die Kunde des Morgenlandes
ZAW	Zeitschrift für die alttestamentliche Wissenschaft
ZDMG	Zeitschrift der deutschen morgenländischen Gesellschaft
ZKG	Zeitschrift für Kirchengeschichte
ZNW	Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft und die Kunde der älteren Kirche
ZPEB	Tenney, M. C., ed. The Zondervan Pictorial Encyclopedia of the Bible . 5 vols. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1975.
ZRGG	Zeitschrift für Religions- und Geistesgeschichte
ZTK	Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche
ZWT	Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie

Additional Abbreviations

Ar.	Arabic	lit.	literally
Aram.	Aramaic	LXX	Septuagint
Arm.	Armenian	MS(S)	Manuscript(s)
BM	British Museum	MT	Masoretic Text
c.	circa	n. nn.	note(s)
cf.	compare	NAB	New American Bible
ch(s).	chapter(s)	NEB	New English Bible
col(s).	column(s)	NT	New Testament
Cop.	Coptic	OT	Old Testament
ET	English translation	pt(s).	part(s)
Eth.	Ethiopic	rec(s).	recension(s)
fol(s).	folio(s)	RSV	Revised Standard Version
Gk.	Greek	Russ.	Russian
GNMM	Good News for Modern Man	SBL	Society of Biblical Literature
Heb.	Hebrew	Slav.	Slavic
JB	Jerusalem Bible	SV	Standard Version
Kar.	Karshuni	Syr.	Syriac
KJV	King James Version	Vat.	Vatican
l. ll.	line(s)	vs(s).	verse(s)
Lat.	Latin

II. ANCIENT DOCUMENTS

Bible and Apocrypha

Gen	Genesis	Tob	Tobit
Ex	Exodus	Jdt	Judith
Lev	Leviticus	AddEsth	Additions to Esther
Num	Numbers	WisSol	Wisdom of Solomon
Deut	Deuteronomy	Sir	Sirach
Josh	Joshua	1Bar	1 Baruch
Judg	Judges	LetJer	Letter of Jeremiah
Ruth	Ruth	PrAzar	Prayer of Azariah
1Sam	1 Samuel	Sus	Susanna
2Sam	2 Samuel	Bel	Bel and the Dragon
1Kgs	1 Kings	1Mac	1 Maccabees
2Kgs	2 Kings	2Mac	2 Maccabees
1Chr	1 Chronicles	Mt	Matthew
2Chr	2 Chronicles	Mk	Mark
Ezra	Ezra	Lk	Luke
Neh	Nehemiah	Jn	John
Esth	Esther	Acts	Acts
Job	Job	Rom	Romans
Ps(s)	Psalms	1Cor	1 Corinthians
Prov	Proverbs	2Cor	2 Corinthians
Eccl (Qoh)	Ecclesiastes	Gal	Galatians
Song	Song of Songs	Eph	Ephesians
Isa	Isaiah	Phil	Philippians
Jer	Jeremiah	Col	Colossians
Lam	Lamentations	1Thes	1 Thessalonians
Ezek	Ezekiel	2Thes	2 Thessalonians
Dan	Daniel	1Tim	1 Timothy
Hos	Hosea	2Tim	2 Timothy
Joel	Joel	Tit	Titus
Amos	Amos	Phlm	Philemon
Obad	Obadiah	Heb	Hebrews
Jonah	Jonah	Jas	James
Micah	Micah	1Pet	1 Peter
Nah	Nahum	2Pet	2 Peter
Hab	Habakkuk	1Jn	1 John
Zeph	Zephaniah	2Jn	2 John
Hag	Haggai	3Jn	3 John
Zech	Zechariah	Jude	Jude
Mal	Malachi	Rev	Revelation
2Ezra	2 Ezra

Pseudepigrapha

ApAb	Apocalypse of Abraham
TAb	Testament of Abraham
ApAdam	Apocalypse of Adam
TAdam	Testament of Adam
LAE	Life of Adam and Eve
Ah	Ahiqar
AnonSam	An Anonymous Samaritan Text

LetAris	Letter of Aristeas
ArisEx	Aristeas the Exegete
Aristob	Aristobulus
Art	Artapanus
2Bar	2 (Syriac Apocalypse of) Baruch
3Bar	3 (Greek Apocalypse of) Baruch
4Bar	4 Baruch
CavTr	Cave of Treasures
CI Mal	Cleodemus Malchus
ApDan	Apocalypse of Daniel
Dem	Demetrius
EI Mod	Eldad and Modad
ApEl	Apocalypse of Elijah
HebApEl	Hebrew Apocalypse of Elijah
1En	1 (Ethiopic Apocalypse of) Enoch
2En	2 (Slavonic Apocalypse of) Enoch
3En	3 (Hebrew Apocalypse of) Enoch
Eup	Eupolemus
Ps-Eup	Pseudo-Eupolemus
ApocEzek	Apocryphon of Ezekiel
ApEzek	Apocalypse of Ezekiel
EzekTrag	Ezekiel the Tragedian
4Ezra	4 Ezra
GkApEzra	Greek Apocalypse of Ezra
QuesEzra	Questions of Ezra
RevEzra	Revelation of Ezra
VisEzra	Vision of Ezra
HecAb	Hecataeus of Abdera
Ps-Hec	Pseudo-Hecataeus
HelSynPr	Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers
THEz	Testament of Hezekiah
FrgsHistWrks	Fragments of Historical Works
TIsaac	Testament of Isaac
AscenIs	Ascension of Isaiah
MartIs	Martyrdom of Isaiah
VisIs	Vision of Isaiah
LadJac	Ladder of Jacob
PrJac	Prayer of Jacob
TJac	Testament of Jacob
JanJam	Jannes and Jambres
TJob	Testament of Job
JosAsen	Joseph and Asenath
HistJos	History of Joseph
PrJos	Prayer of Joseph
Jub	Jubilees
LAB	Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum
LosTr	The Lost Tribes
3Mac	3 Maccabees
4Mac	4 Maccabees
5Mac	5 Maccabees
PrMan	Prayer of Manasseh
SyrMen	Syriac Menander

ApMos	Apocalypse of Moses
AsMos	Assumption of Moses
PrMos	Prayer of Moses
TMos	Testament of Moses
BkNoah	Book of Noah
Ps-Orph	Pseudo-Orpheus
PJ	Paraleipomena Jeremiou
PhEPoet	Philo the Epic Poet
Ps-Philo	Pseudo-Philo
Ps-Phoc	Pseudo-Phocylides
FrgsPoetWrks	Fragments of Poetical Works
LivPro	Lives of the Prophets
HistRech	History of the Rechabites
ApSedr	Apocalypse of Sedrach
TrShem	Treatise of Shem
SibOr	Sibylline Oracles
OdesSol	Odes of Solomon
PssSol	Psalms of Solomon
TSol	Testament of Solomon
5ApocSyrPss	Five Apocryphal Syriac Psalms
Thal	Thallus
Theod	Theodotus
T12P	Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs
TReu	Testament of Reuben
TSim	Testament of Simeon
TLevi	Testament of Levi
TJud	Testament of Judah
TIss	Testament of Issachar
TZeb	Testament of Zebulun
TDan	Testament of Dan
TNaph	Testament of Naphtali
TGad	Testament of Gad
TAsh	Testament of Asher
TJos	Testament of Joseph
TBenj	Testament of Benjamin
Vita	Vita Adae et Evae
ApZeph	Apocalypse of Zephaniah
ApZos	Apocalypse of Zosimus

Other Writings

Dead Sea Scrolls

All abbreviations are according to J. A. Fitzmyer, S.J. The Dead Sea Scrolls: Major Publications and Tools for Study. SBL Sources for Biblical Study 8; Missoula, Mont., 1975; expanded ed., 1977.

Philo

All abbreviations are according to Studia Philonica with the exception that titles of Philonic treatises are italicized.

Josephus

Ant	Jewish Antiquities
Apion	Against Apion
Life	Life of Josephus
War	Jewish Wars

New Testament Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha

EBar	Epistle of Barnabas
GBart	Gospel of Bartholomew
QuesBart	Questions of Bartholomew
1Clem	1 Clement
2Clem	2 Clement
PseudClemRec	Pseudo-Clementine Recognitions
Did	Didache
GEbion	Gospel of the Ebionites
GEgyp	Gospel of the Egyptians
GHeb	Gospel of the Hebrews
ShepHerm	Shepherd of Hermes
Aploan	Apokalypsis tou hagiou Iōannou
ProtJames	Protoevangelium of James
ActsJn	Acts of John
GMatthias	Gospel of Matthias
GNic	Gospel of Nicodemus
ActsPaul	Acts of Paul
ApPaul	Apocalypse of Paul
ApPet	Apocalypse of Peter
GPet	Gospel of Peter
PrPet	Preaching of Peter
ActsPhil	Acts of Philip
GPhil	Gospel of Philip
RevSteph	Revelation of Stephen
ActsThom	Acts of Thomas
ApThom	Apocalypse of Thomas
GThom	Gospel of Thomas
GTr	Gospel of Truth
ApVirg	Apocalypse of the Virgin

Early Fathers

AdvHaer	Epiphanius, Adversus haereses
AposCon	Apostolic Constitutions

CommGen	Procopius of Gaza, Commentary on Genesis , part I
CommIsa	Basil Caesar, Commentary on Isaiah
CommJn	Origen, Commentary on the Gospel of St. John
DialTrypho	Justin, Dialogue with Trypho
DivInst	Lactantius, Divine Institutes
ExcerPss	Origen, Excerpta in Psalmos
HE	Eusebius, Historia ecclesiastica
HebQuaestinLibGen	Jerome, Hebrew Questions on the Book of Genesis
Hom	Macarius, Spiritual Homilies
Paid	Clement of Alexandria, The Tutor (Paidagōgos)
Philoc	Origen, Philocalia
PrEv	Eusebius, Praeparatio evangelica
Princ	Origen, De principiis
Ref	Hippolytus, Refutation of All Heresies
Strom	Clement of Alexandria, Stromata Rabbinics
Ab	Abot
ARN	Abot de-Rabbi Nathan
AZ	'Abodah Zarah
b. (before a rabbinic text)	Babylonian Talmud
BB	Baba Batra
Bek	Bekorot
Ber	Berakot
BHM	Bet ha-Midrash
Bikk	Bikkurim
BM	Batei Midrashot
BMeş	Baba Meşi'a (Talmudic tractate)
DeutR	Debarim Rabbah
EccIR	Qohelet Rabbah
'Eduy	'Eduyyot
'Erub	'Erubin
ExR	Şemot Rabbah
GedMos	Gedulah Moshe
GenR	Bere'sit Rabbah
Gitt	Gittin
Ḥag	Ḥagigah
Ḥall	Ḥallah
Ḥull	Ḥullin
Ker	Keritot
Ket	Ketubot
Kid	Kiddushin
LamR	Ekah Rabbah
LevR	Wayyiqra Rabbah
m. (before a rabbinic text)	Mishnah
Makk	Makkot
Meg	Megillah
Men	Menahot
Mik	Mikwa'ot
MK	Mo'ed Katan
Naz	Nazir
Ned	Nedarim

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

Nidd	Niddah
NumR	Bemidbar Rabbah
OM	Ozar Midrashim
Pes	Pesaḥim
PetMos	Petiroth Moshe
PR	Pesikta Rabbati
PRE	Pirke de-Rabbi Eliezer
RH	Rosh Hashanah
RuthR	Rut Rabbah
Sanh	Sanhedrin
SER	Seder Eliyahu Rabbah
Shab	Shabbat
SifDeut	Sifre Deuteronomy
SongR	Šir Hašširim Rabbah
Soṭ	Soṭah
Sukk	Sukkah
t. (before a rabbinic text)	Tosephta
Ta'an	Ta'anit
TargOnk	Targum Onkelos
TargYer	Targum Yerushalmi
TarJon	Targum Jonathan
Ter	Terumot
y. (before a rabbinic text)	Jerusalem Talmud
Yad	Yadayim
Yeb	Yebamot
Zeb	Zebahim

THE OLD TESTAMENT PSEUDEPIGRAPHA

DOCUMENTS

APOCALYPTIC LITERATURE AND RELATED WORKS

INTRODUCTION

J. H. CHARLESWORTH

Apocalyptic—from the Greek word apokalupsis meaning “revelation” or “disclosure”—is an adjective that has been used to describe both a certain type of literature and a special feature of religions in late antiquity. Unfortunately there is presently no consensus regarding the precise definition of this adjective; confusion sometimes arises because it is employed frequently in contradictory ways. Some scholars have argued that “apocalyptic” denotes a specific type of revelatory literature that has a narrative structure and unique characteristics, such as pseudonymity, bizarre images, and visions of the end of time or of the numerous heavens; according to them apocalyptic literature tends to represent a well-defined literary genre. Other scholars—more impressed by the different features of the documents that are “apocalypses”—have claimed that “apocalyptic” does not denote a specific genre but a religious bearing that is preoccupied by the approach of the end of all normal time and history.

Some specialists have written about apocalyptic religion as if it were a movement. The dissimilarities and contradictions among the apocalyptic writings—especially the different attitudes toward revolution and the contrasting descriptions of the various heavens and Paradise—should caution us against perceiving late biblical religion as if it were a coherent uniform movement.

The Old Testament contains only one apocalypse: the Book of Daniel. The New Testament adds only one more: the Book of Revelation. These writings were selected from numerous apocalypses that were popular during the time when the canons of the Old Testament and New Testament were still open. Both of the canons, moreover, contain important apocalyptic sections (viz. Ezek 40–48; Isa 24–27, 34f., 56–66; Zech 9–14; Mk 13 and par., 1Thes 4; 1Cor 15). The present edition of the Pseudepigrapha includes nineteen documents that are apocalypses or related documents. In the past, the definition of “apocalyptic” was derived from a study of only some of the extant apocalypses, especially “the Apocalypse,” the Book of Revelation. It will be easier now to perceive more adequately the richness of apocalyptic literature and the extent of early Jewish and Christian apocalyptic ideas and apocalyptic religion. The possible importance of apocalyptic Judaism to earliest Christianity is demonstrated by the claim by some New Testament specialists and Christian theologians that apocalyptic Judaism was the mother of all Christian theology.

In assessing the nature and importance of the apocalypses translated below, the reader should examine also other pseudepigrapha that contain apocalyptic sections, especially the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, the Testament of Abraham, the Testament of Moses, Jubilees, the Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah, and 4 Baruch. It is important also to consult the Dead Sea Scrolls, many of which are apocalyptic writings, and the apocalypses and apocalyptically inspired writings in the New Testament Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha.

A final caveat seems necessary. The presence of the term "apocalypse" in the title of a document does not qualify it immediately as an apocalypse; likewise the absence of such a term does not exclude it from being an apocalypse. Sometimes these titles were added by individuals far removed chronologically and geographically from the authors, and some pseudepigrapha bear discrepant titles; for example, the History of the Rechabites in some writings is titled the Testament of Zosimus, in others the Apocalypse of Zosimus; the Life of Adam and Eve is essentially the same as the Apocalypse of Moses (an inapt title for the story of Adam and Eve). The various pseudepigrapha must not be forced into categories developed by modern analysis; the following collection is arranged primarily for convenience and to denote general literary similarities and differences.

CONTENTS

- 1 (Ethiopic Apocalypse of) Enoch
- 2 (Slavonic Apocalypse of) Enoch
- Appendix: 2 Enoch in Merilo Pravednoe
- 3 (Hebrew Apocalypse of) Enoch
- Sibylline Oracles
- Treatise of Shem
- Apocryphon of Ezekiel
- Apocalypse of Zephaniah
- The Fourth Book of Ezra
- Greek Apocalypse of Ezra
- Vision of Ezra
- Questions of Ezra
- Revelation of Ezra
- Apocalypse of Sedrach
- 2 (Syriac Apocalypse of) Baruch
- 3 (Greek Apocalypse of) Baruch
- Apocalypse of Abraham
- Apocalypse of Adam
- Apocalypse of Elijah
- Apocalypse of Daniel

1 (Ethiopic Apocalypse of) ENOCH

(Second Century B.C. – First Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY E. ISAAC

The Ethiopic Book of Enoch (Hēnok), also known as 1 Enoch, is the oldest of the three pseudepigrapha attributed to Enoch, the seventh descendant of Adam and Eve, the first man and woman. According to Genesis 5:24, “Enoch walked with God. Then he vanished because God took him.” This tradition of Enoch’s spiritual relocation gave rise to many haggadic stories, including one that Enoch, son of Jared, when he was taken away by God, saw the secrets of the mysteries of the universe, the future of the world, and the predetermined course of human history.¹

The first part of the book contains an introduction (chs. 1–5), which portrays the eschatological era and the final judgment of the righteous and the wicked, and a narrative (chs. 6–36) which concerns the fallen angels, their intercourse with women (Gen 6:1–4), their corruption of all men, Enoch’s unsuccessful intercession on their behalf, a prediction of their doom, and various visions of Enoch during a tour of the earth, Sheol, and heaven. The second part—the Similitudes, or the so-called “parables” (chs. 37–71)—deals respectively with the coming judgment of the righteous and the wicked; the Messiah, the Son of Man, the Righteous One, and the Elect One; the exposition of additional heavenly secrets; the measuring of Paradise; the resurrection of the righteous; and the punishment of the fallen angels. The third part, an astrological treatise (chs. 72–82), concerns the reckoning of time by the sun, the nature of the solar year of 364 days, and the cosmic disorders of the last days. The fourth part, the Dream Visions (chs. 83–90), consists of two visions concerning the future history (from Enoch’s antediluvian perspective) of the world and Israel: the coming punishment of sinful society by the Deluge, and the history of Israel from Adam to the Maccabeans presented with bold symbolic imagery. Oxen symbolize the patriarchs; sheep, the faithful Israelites; beasts and birds of prey, the heathen oppressors of Israel; a great horned sheep, a rising Jewish leader; a white bull with great horns, the Messiah. There is also additional material on the fallen angels, the throne of judgment, and the new Jerusalem, together with Enoch’s experience of his earlier visions. The fifth part (chs. 91–104), Enoch’s testament, recapitulates the theme of the spiritual blessedness of the righteous and the sorrowful end of the sinners. Woes are pronounced upon the sinners, who are repeatedly identified with the exploitative wealthy and oppressive powers. This section, known particularly for its inclusion of the Apocalypse of Weeks (91:12–17 and 93:1–10), summarizes the events that would unfold upon the earth during ten (actually seven and three respectively) consecutive world weeks. An appendix (chs. 105–8) contains fragments of independent works, especially from the Book of Noah (chs. 106f.), and an editor’s conclusion.

¹ For other synopses of the narrative, see M. Rist, “Enoch, Book of,” IDB, vol. 2, pp. 104f.; R. H. Charles, The Book of Enoch, pp. 22f.; R. H. Charles, Religious Development Between the Old and the New Testaments (New York, 1914) pp. 223–26. [I am most thankful to Professor O. Neugebauer of the Institute for Advanced Studies, Princeton, who kindly read my translation of 1En 72–82 (the astronomical section) and made some very valuable suggestions which have helped me to improve my presentation of this difficult part of the book, which contains so many textual corruptions. I also thank Mr. E. G. Martin, who has labored so long and carefully over my translation, and Professor J. H. Charlesworth for his improvements to the Introduction.]

Texts

1 Enoch is found complete only in the Ethiopic (Ge'ez) Version, for which more than forty manuscripts are known to exist as of this writing. However, fragments of the work are also found in Aramaic, Greek, and Latin.

1. Aramaic: Aramaic fragments of 1 Enoch were found at Qumran and have been recently published, together with a major study of the text and history of 1 Enoch.²

2. Ethiopic: As has been indicated above, the complete version of 1 Enoch is preserved only in Ethiopic. Below are a list of five major and important manuscripts, one of which (A) has been utilized as the base text of the present English translation, and another of which (C) has been used very extensively in the same work:

A. Kebrän 9/II (Hammerschmidt—Tānāsee 9/II); fifteenth century.³

B. Princeton Ethiopic 3 (Garrett collection—Isaac 3); eighteenth or nineteenth century.⁴

C. EMLL 2080; fifteenth (possibly 14th) century.⁵

D. Abbadianus 55; possibly fifteenth century.⁶

E. British Museum Orient 485 (Wright 6); first half of the sixteenth century.⁷

3. Greek: The Greek fragments are found principally in the following:

a. Codex Panopolitanus (two 8th-cent. or later MSS, found in 1886–87 in a Christian grave in Akhmim, Egypt), containing 1 Enoch 1:1–32:6 (designated G^a in this work).

b. Chronographia of Georgius Syncellus (c. 800), containing 1 Enoch 6:1–10:14; 15:8–16:1 (designated G^s in this work).

c. Chester Beatty papyrus of 1 Enoch containing 97:6–104; 106f. (published by C. Bonner, The Last Chapters of Enoch in Greek) (designated G^p in this work).

d. Vatican Greek MS 1809, containing 1 Enoch 89:42–49.

4. Latin: a Latin fragment, containing 1 Enoch 106:1–18, found in an eighth-century manuscript.⁸

Original language

Some scholars believe that the original language of 1 Enoch is Hebrew; others, however, think it is Aramaic; still others contend that the book, like Daniel, was composed partly in Hebrew and partly in Aramaic.⁹ Recently there have been attempts either to counter¹⁰ or to substantiate entirely¹¹ the Aramaic origin of the Ethiopic text. Neither theory provides wholly convincing arguments which may be accepted without reservations.

Our text of A shows an additional closeness between the Ethiopic and Greek versions, but not sufficient to rule out the possibility that a major portion of the Ethiopic text of 1 Enoch was of Aramaic origin. Moreover, Halévy's argument that portions of the Ethiopic text derive ultimately from a Hebrew original has not been disproved. Consequently, the thesis that part of 1 Enoch, like the canonical Daniel, was composed partially in Aramaic and partially in Hebrew has to be considered probable.

Date

1 Enoch is clearly composite, representing numerous periods and writers. Before the ² J. T. Milik and M. Black, The Books of Enoch.

³ For a brief description of this MS see E. Hammerschmidt, Äthiopische Handschriften vom Tānāsee (Wiesbaden, 1973) pp. 107f.

⁴ For a brief description of the MS see E. Isaac, A Catalogue of Ethiopic (Ge'ez) Manuscripts in the Princeton University Library (Garrett Collection) (Princeton Univ. Library, 1974) p. 3.

⁵ A microfilm copy of this MS is preserved at St. John's University, Collegeville, Minnesota. There are two additional important MSS of the 17th cent. (EMLL 4437 and EMLL 4750) in the same collection, which the present author has investigated.

⁶ See A. Antoine D'Abbadie, Catalogue raisonné de manuscrits éthiopiens (Paris, 1859) pp. 75f.

⁷ See W. Wright, Catalogue of the Ethiopic Manuscripts in the British Museum (London, 1877) pp. 7f.

⁸ Discovered by M. R. James in 1893 in the British Museum and published in Apocrypha Anecdota (T&S 2.3; Cambridge, 1893; repr. 1967) pp. 146–50.

⁹ See J. Halévy, "Recherches sur la langue de la rédaction primitive du livre d'Hénoch," JA 6.9 (1867) 352–95; R. H. Charles, The Ethiopic Version of the Book of Enoch, p. xxvii; N. Schmidt, "The Original Language of the Parables of Enoch," in Old Testament and Semitic Studies in Memory of W. R. Harper (Chicago, 1908) vol. 2, pp. 329–49.

¹⁰ M. Black, "The Fragments of the Aramaic Enoch from Qumran" in W. C. van Unnik, ed., La littérature juive entre Tenach et Mischna (Leiden, 1974) pp. 15–28.

¹¹ E. Ullendorff, "An Aramaic 'Vorlage' of the Ethiopic Text of Enoch," Atti del convegno internazionale di studi etiopici (Rome, 1960) pp. 259–67.

discovery of fragments of 1 Enoch among the Dead Sea Scrolls, the following outline of sections and their dates was essentially the consensus of critical scholars:¹²

1. Apocalypse of Weeks	91:12–17; 93:1–10	early pre-Maccabean
2. Fragments of Enochic Visions	12–16	early pre-Maccabean
3. Fragments of the Book of Noah	6–11; 106f. cf. 54:7–55:2; 60; 65–69:25	late pre-Maccabean
4. Independent Fragment	105	? pre-Maccabean
5. Dream Visions	83–90	c. 165–161 B.C.
6. Book of Heavenly Luminaries	72–82	c. 110 B.C.
7. Similitudes	37–71	c. 105–64 B.C.
8. Later Additions to Dream Visions	91:1–11, 18, 19; 92; 94–104	c. 105–104 B.C.
9. Introductory Chapters	1–5	late pre-Christian

The discovery of these fragments of 1 Enoch has awakened new interest in the structure and dating of 1 Enoch. Following to some extent the former views that this work is a collection of independent writings, Milik has argued for the categorization of the Ethiopic version into five primary books with the last chapter being taken as a much later addition.¹³ These are:

1. The Book of the Watchers (1–36)
2. The Book of the Similitudes (37–71)
3. The Book of Astronomical Writings (72–82)
4. The Book of Dream Visions (83–90)
5. The Book of the Epistle of Enoch (91–107)

Milik argues for a pre-Christian Qumran Enochic Pentateuch which contained a much longer version of the astrological writings, and, most importantly, instead of the Similitudes, another work entitled the Book of Giants.¹⁴ He bases his argument on the fact that fragments of only four of the five constituent parts of the Ethiopic Enoch have been discovered at Qumran. No fragment from the Similitudes has been recovered.

Milik argues that by the year A.D. 400 the Book of Giants as in the Qumran Aramaic Enoch had been replaced by the late Christian work, the Similitudes, in a new Greek Enochic Pentateuch. This hypothesis is not supported by any solid evidence and has been subjected to serious criticism, in particular by the members of the SNTS Pseudepigrapha Seminar which met in 1977 in Tübingen and in 1978 in Paris.¹⁵ The consensus of the members was that the Similitudes were Jewish and dated from the first century A.D. At these meetings, it was also agreed that Milik should have worked more directly with the Ethiopic evidence. Unfortunately, he took Charles's dated text and translation at face value and incorrectly assumed that all Ethiopic manuscripts of 1 Enoch are very recent, except possibly a fifteenth-century text (Charles's u—Abbadianus 55). We now have at least three definitely fifteenth-century Ethiopic manuscripts, and it seems probable that even earlier ones may be discovered. Indeed, one of the readings in the fifteenth-century manuscript used herein as a base text casts serious doubts on one of Milik's arguments for the late date of the Similitudes. Milik has argued that the reference to angels flying "with wings" (1En 61:1) points to a post-Christian period for the composition of the Similitudes. Our manuscript does not support him; it has no reference to angels flying "with wings" (see translation and n. below). Milik is correct that his text of 61:1 is late; he failed to see, however, that the late part is a late variant. In conclusion, I am convinced that 1 Enoch already contained the Similitudes by the end of the first century A.D.

Provenance

We are not certain about the city or place in which 1 Enoch was, or its constituent parts

¹² Cf. R. H. Charles, "The Book of Enoch," in APOT, vol. 2, pp. 170f.

¹³ Cf. J. T. Milik, HTR 64 (1971) 333–78. Also see Milik, The Books of Enoch, pp. 4–135.

¹⁴ This work, believed to have been in circulation among the Manicheans, has been recovered from various fragments by W. B. Henning. See "The Book of Giants," BSOAS 11 (1943) 52–74.

¹⁵ See J. H. Charlesworth, NTS 25 (1979) 315–23; M. A. Knibb, "The Date of the Parables of Enoch: A Critical Review," NTS 25 (1979) 345–59; C. L. Mearns, "Dating the Similitudes of Enoch," NTS 25 (1979) 360–69.

were, composed. However, it is clear that the work originated in Judea and was in use at Qumran before the beginning of the Christian period.

The evidence concerning the origin of the Ethiopic version of 1 Enoch is also lacking. We can be relatively certain that the version was produced in Ethiopia during the earliest period of Ethiopic literature (c. A.D. 350–650). However, this was a time of extensive translating and copying by Christian scribes in Ethiopia, and exact dates and cities are unknown.

Historical importance

Information regarding the usage and importance of the work in the Jewish and Christian communities, other than the Ethiopian Church, is sparse. It is difficult, therefore, to understand its exact origin. It seems clear, nonetheless, that 1 Enoch was well known to many Jews, particularly the Essenes, and early Christians, notably the author of Jude. The earliest portions of the work originated probably in a proto-Essene milieu; the latter sections perhaps in a setting quite different from Qumran Essenism.

1 Enoch reflects the historical events immediately preceding and following the Maccabean Revolt. More important, however, is the light it throws upon early Essene theology and upon earliest Christianity. It was used by the authors of Jubilees, the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, the Assumption of Moses, 2 Baruch, and 4 Ezra. Some New Testament authors seem to have been acquainted with the work, and were influenced by it, including Jude, who quotes it explicitly (1:14f.). At any rate, it is clear that Enochic concepts are found in various New Testament books, including the Gospels and Revelation.

1 Enoch played a significant role in the early Church; it was used by the authors of the Epistle of Barnabas, the Apocalypse of Peter, and a number of apologetic works. Many Church Fathers, including Justin Martyr, Irenaeus, Origen, and Clement of Alexandria, either knew 1 Enoch or were inspired by it. Among those who were familiar with 1 Enoch, Tertullian had an exceptionally high regard for it. But, beginning in the fourth century, the book came to be regarded with disfavor and received negative reviews from Augustine, Hilary, and Jerome. Thereafter, with the exception of a few extracts made by Georgius Syncellus, a learned monk of the eighth century, and the Greek fragments found in a Christian grave in Egypt (c. A.D. 800), 1 Enoch ceased to be appreciated except in Ethiopia. The relegation of 1 Enoch to virtual oblivion by medieval minds should not diminish its significance for Christian origins; few other apocryphal books so indelibly marked the religious history and thought of the time of Jesus.

The interest in 1 Enoch in Ethiopia began with its initial translation and has continued thereafter. During the earliest period of Ethiopic literature many biblical, apocryphal, pseudepigraphical, and distinctly Christian works were translated into Ethiopic (Ge'ez) and copied extensively by scribes. Most of these early copies probably perished during the various periods of political upheavals that took place in Ethiopia (c. A.D. 950, c. A.D. 1270, or c. A.D. 1527–43). Thus, most scholars take for granted that no manuscripts of this early period actually exist; nevertheless, it is premature to dismiss the possibility at this time. Although research in Ethiopian studies in general is quite advanced, research into manuscripts and manuscript collections found in Ethiopian monasteries and churches is still at an elementary stage. As of now, our three oldest manuscripts of 1 Enoch date from the fifteenth century.

In the early seventeenth century, some European scholars thought that a version of 1 Enoch which was identical with the one quoted by Jude and early Church Fathers existed in Ethiopia. A learned Capuchin monk was believed to have brought to Europe a copy of the work, which passed into the possession of Nicolas Claude Fabri, the Seigneur of Peiresc (1580–1637). This manuscript, which aroused great excitement in Europe, drew the attention of the first great European Ethiopic scholar, Ludolfus Hiob, who traced it to the Bibliotheca Regia in Paris in 1683. He was disappointed to learn that the manuscript was not of 1 Enoch but that of an unknown Ethiopic work called the Book of the Mysteries of Heaven and Earth. It took another century before copies of 1 Enoch finally arrived in Europe. They were brought in 1773 by J. Bruce, the adventurous Scottish traveler to Africa. Nothing occurred until 1800, when Silvestre de Sacy, in his "Notice sur le livre d'Hénoch" (in Magazine encyclopédique 6/1, p. 382), first published excerpts from the book together with Latin translations of chapters 1, 2, 5–16, and 22–32. In 1821 Lawrence issued the first English version of the work. In 1853 Dillmann published a translation which aroused much interest in the work.

Theological importance

1 Enoch helps clarify the rich complexities of both intertestamental Jewish thought and early Christian theology. In this brief introduction it is only possible to sketch a few of 1 Enoch's many ideas, motifs, symbolisms, and important theological concepts.

The God of 1 Enoch is the righteous and just God of the Old Testament; he is the Creator of the world, the holy lawgiver, the dispenser of history, and the ultimate judge of all.

Genesis 6:1–4 alludes to the sons of God who had intercourse with the daughters of the people. 1 Enoch transforms this idea into a theology of fallen angels, who consorted with women and produced giants who sinned against the people. They corrupted the people through the instructions in forbidden sciences like making arms, cosmetics, precious metals. Enoch's intercession on behalf of the fallen angels fails; he is instructed, on the contrary, to predict their final doom (12–16). Allusions to the legend of the fallen angels occur elsewhere in Jewish writings (viz. Jub; Sir 16:7; CD 2.14–3.13; 4Q 180f.; and rabbinic Midrashim).¹⁶

One of the extensively discussed concepts in 1 Enoch, particularly by students of New Testament theology, is that of the heavenly Messiah (45–57). The Messiah in 1 Enoch, called the Righteous One, and the Son of Man, is depicted as a pre-existent heavenly being who is resplendent and majestic, possesses all dominion, and sits on his throne of glory passing judgment upon all mortal and spiritual beings.

This description of the Messiah is placed in the Similitudes in the context of reflections upon the last judgment, the coming destruction of the wicked, and the triumph of the righteous ones. This eschatological concept is the most prominent and recurring theme throughout the whole book. The very introduction (1–5) opens with an announcement of the final, coming punishment, the destruction of the wicked ones and the resurrection of the righteous ones to an endless and sinless eternal life. Likewise, in the Dream Visions (83–90) the same theme is recalled. In this case, the righteous dead, including converted gentiles, will be resurrected, the Messiah will appear, his kingdom will be founded, and the new Jerusalem established; on the other hand, the sinners, the fallen angels, including the apostate Jews, will be judged. The last major section of 1 Enoch (91–105) is an admonition to righteousness, for he predicts that the wicked shall be condemned to eternal punishment in Sheol, whereas the righteous shall have a blessed resurrection to enjoy the bliss of heaven.

One of the central emphases of 1 Enoch is that sinners are economic exploiters, the political oppressors, and the socially unjust people of this world. Thus, while 1 Enoch will deepen our insights into and broaden our perspectives of intertestamental Jewish and early Christian theology, it also will help us to appreciate the revolutionary mood of Jews and their staunch opposition not only to Greek and Roman imperialism, but also to Jewish aristocracy itself.

There is also a social concern behind 1 Enoch's computation of time and understanding of the calendar. Time should be reckoned only by the sun, not by the moon as in the Pharisaic lunar calendar. The author's solar year consists of 364 days, and not 365¼, a fact of which he is also aware. The calendrical discussion is tied to a spiritual concern; in the last days the sun, moon, stars, and earth will be disrupted in cosmic chaos.

Relation to biblical and apocryphal books

It should be evident from what has been said above that 1 Enoch is as dependent upon the Old Testament as it is influential upon the New Testament and later extracanonical literature. During the exilic and post-exilic periods, apocalyptic became a major trend in Jewish thought. It was inherited by Christianity and remains an element in it to the present. Apocalyptic is both prophetic and revelatory; in apocalyptic literature we find, on the one hand, moral indignation about the present world, and, on the other, the foreboding predictions of eschatological events and the ultimate destiny of the world.

Old Testament ideas and stories such as the account of the fallen angels, the Flood, the history of Israel, the distinction between the righteous and the wicked, and the Messiah are interpreted, elaborated, and presented through the paradigm of apocalyptic dualism, wherein sharp distinctions are drawn between the opposing cosmic powers of good and evil and between the present and coming ages. These concepts in 1 Enoch also permeate Jubilees, the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, the Assumption of Moses, the Testament and Apocalypse of Abraham, 2 Baruch, and 4 Ezra. Likewise, even though Charles may have exaggerated when he claimed that “nearly all” the writers of the New Testament were familiar with 1 Enoch, there is no doubt that the New Testament world was influenced by its language and thought. It influenced Matthew, Luke, John, Acts, Romans, 1 and 2 Corinthians, Ephesians, Colossians, 1 and 2 Thessalonians, 1 Timothy, Hebrews, 1 John, Jude (which quotes it directly), and Revelation (with numerous points of contact). There is little doubt that 1 Enoch was influential in molding New Testament doctrines concerning the nature of the Messiah, the Son of Man, the messianic kingdom, demonology, the future, resurrection, final judgment, the whole eschatological theater, and symbolism. No wonder, therefore, that the book was highly regarded by many of the earliest apostolic and Church Fathers.

¹⁶ Cf. D. Dimant, "'The Fallen Angels' in the Dead Sea Scrolls and in the Apocryphal and Pseudepigraphic Books Related to Them" (Ph.D. thesis, Hebrew Univ., 1974).

Cultural importance

1 Enoch, as we have seen, made an impact on early Christian thought and left its indelible mark upon the New Testament. It also contributes indirectly to our understanding of Western culture; however, inasmuch as it was altogether a lost book to the Western world until the last century, 1 Enoch played no role in, and made no contributions to, the development of the intellectual history of modern Western culture. On the other hand, it is hardly possible to understand any aspect of the religious tradition and thought of Ethiopia, the country in which it survived, without an understanding of it. No wonder that the indigenous Ethiopic Book of the Mysteries of Heaven and Earth created such a sensation in seventeenth-century Europe as being the very “Book of Enoch” itself. The style, the language, the symbolisms, and the concepts of the Book of Mysteries, though different in many ways from those of 1 Enoch, clearly manifest a conscious effort to emulate 1 Enoch. For instance, the fourth part of the Book of Mysteries, called “A Discourse Concerning the Birth of Enoch,” recapitulates the Apocalypse of Weeks, brings the last three weeks through to the Christian era, and ends with the Antichrist in the tenth.¹⁷

The Book of Mysteries is only one example of the influence of 1 Enoch on Ethiopic literature. The Kebra Nagast, the famous Ethiopian royal saga, is another example of a work that utilizes 1 Enoch generously. Other Ethiopic religious works contain references from, and show influences of, 1 Enoch. Ethiopic poetic literature, the gadles (the Ethiopic hagiographies), and some of the magical works manifest the influence of 1 Enoch in their language, imageries, angelology, and demonology.

Still more significant is the influence of Enochic ideas on Ethiopian Christian theology. What distinguishes Ethiopian Christian theology from that of either Western or Eastern Christendom may well be the Ethiopian emphases on Enochic thought. Sin does not originate from Adam’s transgression alone; Satan, the demons, and evil spirits (the fallen angels) are equally responsible for its origin; they continue to lead man astray, causing moral ruin on the earth. On the other hand, there are the protective angels, with their various orders and ranks, who play an important part in both the religious and social life of the Ethiopian people; these angels—particularly Michael, Gabriel, Rufael, Uriel, as well as the cherubim (Krubel) and the seraphim (Surāfēl)—serve as personal guardians of those specially dedicated to them and who celebrate with meticulous observance the dates of their special festivals.

Introducing the following translation

My primary base text (A) for this translation of Ethiopic Enoch is a fifteenth-century Ethiopic manuscript found in a monastery in Kebran, in Lake Tana. I obtained a copy of this manuscript from a microfilm (A) now found in West Germany.¹⁸ Though I have chosen to use as my base text a single manuscript, instead of an existing eclectic text or one created temporarily as the real basis of my translation, I have continually compared A with another ¹⁷ Cf. J. Perruchon and I. Guidi, “Le Livre des Mystères du Ciel et de la Terre” in Patrologia Orientalis 1/1 (1907) 1–95; and S. Grébaud, “Les Trois Derniers Traités du Livre des Mystères du Ciel et de la Terre,” Patrologia Orientalis 6/3 (1911) 361–464.

¹⁸ E. Hammerschmidt, Äthiopische Handschriften vom Tānāsee, p. 107.

Ethiopic manuscript of the late eighteenth century (B) found in the Garrett collection of Princeton University as well as with the text of R. H. Charles (C),¹⁹ and, in a few cases, followed them instead of A where the latter is clearly wrong or unintelligible. I have been as faithful as possible to A, following it even when B and C and all other known witnesses, attested by the variations of other manuscripts given in the apparatus of Charles (EC), disagree with it, except in clear cases where A obviously transmits grammatical, syntactical, or scribal errors. Only the most significant or relevant variations of other witnesses are shown in my notations. If B or C are clearly erroneous (scribal, typographic, grammatical), I do not always give them as variations. Wherever possible or necessary I have also been able to compare A with the texts of the existing Greek fragments as given in the Charles edition of 1 Enoch: G^a (the fragments from Akhmim—G^{a1} and G^{a2} the duplicate passages of the same if they exist), G^s (the fragments preserved by Syncellus), and G^p (the Greek papyrus as edited by Bonner). The Qumran Aramaic fragments of 1 Enoch have been consulted but have not influenced the following translation.²⁰

It appears to me that in general A is superior to B and C, often giving shorter and more difficult readings (see, for instance, 71:8f.). I have been able to examine briefly microfilms of three important Enoch manuscripts—EMML 2080 (15th cent.), 4437 (17th cent.), and 4750 (17th cent.)—copies of which are presently found in the Hill Monastic Microfilm Library, St. John's University, Collegeville, Minnesota, to ascertain the importance of A. Of the manuscripts that Charles studied, A appears to be closest to his g (early 16th cent.)²¹ and his u (possibly 15th cent.).²² But in many interesting or important cases, A may agree with other manuscripts used by Charles. For instance, A agrees with not only u but also Charles's m and t in omitting "Son" from the "Son of Man" (69:26). In at least one crucial place, A agrees with q against other witnesses. Scholars have thought that the reference to Enoch's travel in a "chariot of wind" as found in a Mani Codex (which relied on an Apocalypse of Enoch) is missing from the Ethiopic Enoch; if we follow A and q (cf. 52:1) this may not be wholly the case. In general A agrees with the Ethiopic textual tradition against the Greek; nevertheless, there are a few cases where it agrees with the Greek against other Ethiopic traditions (e.g. 18:9; 24:5). The importance of A is unfortunately reduced by the carelessness of the scribe (e.g. 45:1; 48:10). It is also possible that the scribe of A used two manuscripts as he worked or copied one manuscript freely; that may be the reason why fols. 103r–106v (1En 78:8b–82:20) are a duplicate of fols. 96r–99r (or vice versa), showing each time several variations—perhaps two scribes with very similar hands copied parts of A, using separate texts.

It should be noted here that my translation, though very faithful to the text, is in general not always literal. Therefore, I may render a single Ethiopic word into different English expressions depending on the context or idiom. For instance, mangest may be rendered "kingdom" or "empire," hāyl, "power," "force," "forces," "army," or "array," samay, "heaven" or "sky," and so on. In this respect, I have also translated the expression re'esa mawā'el as the "Antecedent of Time" or the "Before-Time," instead of the literal "Head of Days"; on the other hand, it has not been easy to find a more adequate expression for the more or less literal "Son of Man." I generally bear in mind not only the context of the language but also the context of the milieu of the languages of 1 Enoch; thus, I translate kramt "rainy season" rather than "winter," hagay "dry season" rather than "summer." It should also be noted that despite the freedom in Ethiopic regarding the use of the singular and the plural, both in the case of nouns and verbs, I have tried to render all Ethiopic expressions into acceptable English; moreover, except in certain cases (e.g. the sun is generally feminine, the moon, masculine), it has not always been possible to indicate the gender of Ethiopic words in the translation. A major dilemma always arises in rendering the simple but ubiquitous Ethiopic conjunction wa- into English; the reader should know that I have been very generous in using whatever connective English conjunction I felt to be appropriate in many cases (e.g. "and," "or," "but," "moreover," "furthermore," "then,"

¹⁹ Charles, The Ethiopic Version of the Book of Enoch.

²⁰ These are now edited by Milik, The Books of Enoch, pp. 139–407.

²¹ W. Wright, A Catalogue of Ethiopian Manuscripts in the British Museum (London, 1896) no. 6.

²² See D'Abbadie, Catalogue, no. 55.

“as well as,” “also,” and so on) and have dropped it altogether in several other cases where in English “and” would be superfluous.

In conclusion, even though I have not tried to annotate all my restorations of grammatical, scribal, and textual errors and variant readings, I have provided ample notes in order that the reader may appreciate the problems of translating this difficult work and understand better this translation. I am the last person to claim that this translation is flawless; by its nature, every translation involves a subjective dimension which may lead to errors.²³

²³ I am thankful to Professor James Charlesworth of Duke University, who invited me to do this work, and to Professor Michael Stone, who urged me to accept the invitation. Professor Ernst Hammerschmidt of the University of Hamburg kindly and promptly sent a copy of the 15th-cent. Enoch manuscript (A) to the Widener Library; I am grateful to him as well as to the Interlibrary Loan staff at Widener for their kind assistance.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 98–103.
 Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 157–59.
 Denis, Introduction, pp. 15–28.

Black, M. (ed.). Apocalypsis Henochi Graeci in Pseudepigrapha Veteris Testamenti. PVTG 3; Leiden, 1970.

Bonner, C. The Last Chapters of Enoch in Greek in Studies and Documents. London, 1937.

Charles, R. H. The Ethiopic Version of the Book of Enoch in Anecdota Oxoniensia. Oxford, 1906.

———. The Book of Enoch. Oxford, 1893.

———. “The Book of Enoch,” Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament. Oxford, 1913; vol. 2, pp. 163–281.

Charlesworth, J. H. “The SNTS Pseudepigrapha Seminars at Tübingen and Paris on the Books of Enoch,” NTS 25 (1979) 315–23.

Flemming, J., and L. Radermacher. Das Buch Henoch. Leipzig, 1901.

Greenfield, J. C., and M. Stone. “The Enochic Pentateuch and the Date of the Similitudes,” HTR 70 (1977) 51–65.

Hindley, J. C. “Toward a Date for the Similitudes of Enoch, an Historical Approach,” NTS 14 (1968) 551–65.

Knibb, M. A. The Ethiopic Book of Enoch. Oxford, 1978; 2 vols. [Knibb’s book appeared long after Isaac had completed his contribution on 1 Enoch. J.H.C.]

Lewis, J. P. A Study of the Interpretation of Noah and the Flood in Jewish Christian Literature. Leiden, 1968.

Martin, F. Le Livre d’Hénoch. Paris, 1906.

Milik, J. T. “Problèmes de la littérature Hénochique à la lumière des fragments araméens de Qumrân,” HTR 64 (1971) 333–78.

———. “Turfan et Qumran, Livre des Géants juif et manichéen”; in Tradition und Glaube: Das frühe Christentum in seiner Umwelt, eds. G. Jeremias et al. (K. G. Kuhn Festschrift). Göttingen, 1971; pp. 117–27.

———. “Fragments grecs du livre d’Hénoch,” Chronique d’Égypte 40 (1971) 321–43.

———, and M. Black. The Books of Enoch. Oxford, 1976.

Nickelsburg, G. W. E., Jr. “Enoch 97–104, a Study of the Greek and Ethiopic Texts,” Armenian and Biblical Studies, ed. M. E. Stone. Supplementary vol. 1 to Sion. Jerusalem, 1976; pp. 90–156.

Sjöberg, E. Der Menschensohn in äthiopischen Henochbuch. Lund, 1946.

Ullendorff, E. “An Aramaic ‘Vorlage’ of the Ethiopic Text of Enoch,” Atti del convegno internazionale di studi etiopici. Rome, 1960; pp. 259–67.

THE BOOK OF ENOCH

Book I (1–36)

The Parable of Enoch

INTRODUCTORY VISIONS AND PARABLES OF ENOCH

The righteous and the wicked

- 1 I The blessing^a of Enoch: with which he blessed the elect and the righteous who would be present on the day of tribulation at (the time of) the removal of all the ungodly ones.^b • And Enoch, the blessed and righteous^c man of the Lord,^d took up (his parable)^e while his eyes^f were open and he saw, and said, “(This is) a holy vision from the heavens which the angels showed me: and I heard from them everything and I understood. I look not for this generation but for the distant one that is coming.^g I speak about the elect ones and concerning them.” • And I took up with a parable^h (saying), “The God of the universe, the Holy Great One, will come forth from his dwelling.ⁱ • And from there he will march upon Mount Sinai and appear in his camp emerging from heaven^j with a mighty power.^k And everyone shall be afraid, and Watchers^l shall quiver. • And great fear and trembling shall seize them unto the ends of the earth. • Mountains and high places^m will fall downⁿ and be frightened. And high hills shall be made low; and they shall melt like a honeycomb^o before^p the flame. • And earth shall be rent asunder;^q and all that is upon the earth shall perish. And there shall be a judgment upon all, (including) the righteous.^r • And to all the righteous^s he will grant peace. He will preserve the elect, and kindness shall be upon them. They shall all belong to God^t and they shall prosper and be blessed; and the light of God shall shine unto them. • Behold, he will arrive with ten
- Pss Sol 4:9
Num 24:3f.
Num 24:3f.
Micah 1:3;
Isa 26:21;
AsMos 10:3
Dan 4:13,17,23
WisSol 4:15
Sir 43:26
Jude 14.15

1 a. The Eth. qāla barakat should be translated simply as “the blessing” and not lit. as “the word(s) of blessing” as Charles does.

b. B and C, following several possibly later and inflated MSS, read 'ekuyān(a) wa-rasī'ān(a), “the evil and ungodly ones.” Note to the reader: The letters A, B, C respectively represent our basic text (Kebrān MS 9/II); the text of Princeton Ethiopic 3; and the printed text of Charles. EC represents the notes in Charles’s edition of the Eth. Enoch. (For others see “Texts.”)

c. B and C, following supposedly all Charles’s MSS, read be'si šādiq, “the righteous man.”

d. [The various Eth. words for God or Lord have been translated consistently through IEn as follows: 1. 'Egzi'abḥēr represents LORD (the Eth. translation of Yahweh in the OT). 2. 'Egzi'a represents Lord (the Eth. translation of Adonai in the OT). 3. 'Amlak represents God (the Eth. translation of Elohim in the OT). Note that “Lord ['Egzi'a] of the Spirits” occurs only in chs. 37–71. —J. H. Charlesworth and E. G. Martin]

e. The extant Gk. text reads anabalōn tēn parabolēn, “he took up his parable.” So also 4QEn^a 1:1 (Milik, The Books of Enoch, p. 182).

f. So A B C against the Gk. orasis, “his mouth.”

g. B reads, as do some other MSS of Charles, lazaymaš'u tewled reḥuqān, “distant generations that will be coming.”

h. B and C, following supposedly all of Charles’s MSS, read mesla, which is unintelligible. Mesla mesālē, “with a proverb [or “parable”],” which is attested in A, is accurate, and the other MSS must have lost mesālē, probably because of homoeoteleuton.

i. So A, B reads yewasē' qedduš . . . wa-'amlāka 'alam wa-'emḥeyya, creating an impossible phraseology. Charles kept the wa- before 'amlāka as some of his MSS did and, contrary to all his MSS, which he claimed were wrong, dropped the wa- before 'emḥeyya, creating an artificial text in C.

j. Lit. “and appear from heaven.”

k. B reads “his mighty power.”

l. Lit. “Diligent guards.” [Watchers are the fallen angels.]

m. So A, B and C read “high mountains.”

n. Eth. waywadqu, “will fall down,” is not attested in B and C.

o. A B C read ma'ara gerā, “honeycomb,” not gerā ma'ar, “wax.” However, the two expressions are sometimes confused in usage.

p. Lit. “from.”

q. B had “shall sink.”

r. B: “and all the righteous.” It seems to me that Charles wrongly assumed lā'la šādiqān k'elomu, “upon all the righteous,” to be a dittography of words before and after.

s. B and C read respectively “as to the righteous” and “to the righteous.”

t. Or “they will become God’s property.” So Ethiopian commentators.

u. All of Charles’s MSS, except e, read maš'a, “he came.” Ethiopian commentators who follow this reading argue that the perfect tense is used to emphasize that “he will certainly come.” Cf. Jude 14 also. The Eth. te'if'i designates ten thousand times a thousand. Cf. Wa-'atah Mērb'bot Qōdesh in Deut 33:2. LXX reads syn myriasyñ Kadēs.

million^a of the holy ones in order to execute judgment upon all.^y He will destroy the wicked ones^w and censure^x all flesh on account of everything that they have done, that which the sinners and the wicked ones committed against him.^y

1 2 Examine all the activit(ies which take place) in the sky^a and how^b they do not alter their ways, (and examine) the luminaries of heaven, how each one of them rises and sets; each one is systematic according to its respective season; and they do not divert from their appointed order.^c • And look at the earth and turn in your mind^d concerning the action which is taking place^e in her^f from the beginning to the end: how all the work^g of God as being manifested^h does not change. • And beholdⁱ the summer and the winter,^j how the whole earth is filled with water and clouds and dew;^k and he causes rain^l to rest upon her.

1 3 Examine^a and observe^b everything—and the trees,^c how all their leaves appear as if they wither and had fallen,^d except fourteen^e trees^f whose (leaves) do not fall but^g the old (foliage) remains for about two to three years^h until the new (leaves) come.ⁱ

1 4 And again, examine the days of the summer,^a how (the heat of) the sun^b is upon (the earth)^c and dominates her.^d And as for you, you will crave^e shade and shelter on account of the heat of the sun; and the earth shall burn with scorching heat, and you are not able to walk on the earth or on the rock on account of the heat.^f

1 5 Observe how the verdant trees are covered with leaves and they bear fruit.^a Pay attention^b concerning all things and know in what manner he fashioned^c them.^d All of them belong to him who lives forever. • His work proceeds and progresses^e from

v. B and C read "upon them." It appears that A is in this respect the least corrupt text, since it seems to agree with the Gk., Pseudo-Cyprian, and Jude 15. v. The Gk., Pseudo-Cyprian, Pseudo-Vigilius, and Jude 15 read "all the evil ones."

x. Or "rebuke."

y. Following Jude 15, Pseudo-Cyprian, and the Gk., Charles has suggested emending the text to read "And of all the hard things which ungodly sinners have spoken against him."

2 a. The syntax of A, tayyequ k'ulo gebra za-westa samāy, is superior to that of B and C. B and all the other MSS which Charles studied also give the wrong grammatical form: tayyaqu for tayyequ, which is found in A. Some Ethiopian commentators also read tayyaqu, "I inquired [or "examined"]."

b. B and C read "how," not "and how."

c. B reads 'emte'zāzomu, "their appointed commandments."

d. Lit. "understand," "take notice," "think," "be mindful of."

e. Lit. "which is being acted."

f. So A, westētā. B and C have "upon her," lā'lēhā.

g. A B: gebru. C: megbāru.

h. Eth. 'enza yāstar'i is a somewhat dangling phrase. Cf. EC, p. 6, nn. 13, 15, regarding the clause in Gk., which is lost in Eth.

i. A: war'ikewo. B and C: r'eyyiwā.

j. Lit. "the dry and rainy season."

k. A (māya, wa-dammanā wa-tala wa-zenāma) has the right text over against B and C (māya wa-dammanā wa-tal wazenām). Cf. EC, p. 6, n. 22.

l. Cf. 4QEn^a. It is distantly possible to render A "and the cloud causes dew and rain to rest upon her [the earth]."

3 a. A C: tayyequ. B: tayyaqu, as in all of the other Charles MSS.

b. B has re'iku.

c. B: "Examine and observe the trees." C: "Examine and observe all the trees." Cf. 4QEn^a: "Observe that all the trees wither" (Milik, The Books of Enoch, pp. 146f.).

d. B C: "how they seem as though they had withered and all their leaves shed."

e. B: "twelve."

f. Cf. Geoponica 11:1.

g. A and B and all known Eth. MSS read 'lla, "which."

h. Or "rainy season."

i. Lit. "they will remain from the old to the new."

4 a. Lit. "dry season."

b. Lit. "the sun."

c. Lit. "upon her."

d. Lit. "her first," "her greater one," "ahead of her." B: ba-qedmēhā, "in her face," "in front of her." C: ba-qadamehā, "against her."

e. Lit. "seek."

f. B C: "her heat."

5 a. Eth. 'eṣ ba-hamalmala yetkaddanu ba-q'asel wa-yefarryu. The reading of B and C, 'eṣaw ba-hamalmala 'aq'usel yetkaddanu wa-yefarreyu, "trees cover themselves with green leaves and bear fruit," is an easier and grammatically smoother one.

b. B C: "and pay attention."

c. Erroneously gebromu for gabromu.

d. Overall, the reading of A is closer to the Gk. epoiēsen auta hutōs. The reading of B, ba-kama gabra la-kemu la 'elontu k'olomu zaḥeyyāw la-'alam, and that of C, ba-kama gabarkemu la-'elontu k'ul-omu, are both corrupt and not very intelligible.

e. Eth. qadama. B C: qedmēhu, "before him."

year to year. And all his work prospers and obeys^f him,^g and it does not change; but 3 everything functions^h in the way in which God has orderedⁱ it. •And look at the seas:^j 4 They do not part;^k they fulfill all their duties. •But as for you, you have not been long-suffering and you have not done the commandments of the Lord, but you have transgressed and spoken slanderously^l grave and harsh words with your impure mouths 5 against his greatness. Oh, you hard-hearted, may you not find peace! •Therefore, you shall curse your days, and the years of your life shall perish and multiply in eternal 6 execration; and there will not be any mercy unto you. •In those days; you shall make your names^m an eternal execration unto all the righteous; and the sinners shall curse 7 you continually—you together with the sinners.ⁿ •But to the elect there shall be light, joy, and peace, and they shall inherit the earth. To you, wicked ones, on the contrary, 8 there will be a curse. •And then^o wisdom shall be given^p to the elect. And they shall all live and not return again to sin,^q either by being wicked or through pride; but 9 those who have wisdom shall be humble and not return again to sin. •And they shall not be judged all the days of their lives;^r nor die through plague^s or wrath,^t but^u they 10 shall complete the (designated) number of the days of their life. •And peace shall increase their lives^v and the years of their happiness shall be multiplied forever in gladness and peace all the days of their life.

The fall of angels

1 6 In those days, when the children of man had multiplied, it happened that there Gen. 6:1-4 2 were born unto them handsome and beautiful daughters. •And the angels, the children of heaven, saw them and desired them; and they said to one another, “Come, let us choose wives for ourselves from among the daughters^a of man and beget us children.” 3 And Semyaz,^b being their leader,^c said unto them, “I fear that perhaps you will not consent that this deed should be done, and I alone will become (responsible)^d for this 4 great sin.” •But they all responded to him,^e “Let us all swear an oath and bind everyone among us by a curse not to abandon this suggestion but to do the deed.”^f 5 Then they all swore together and bound one another by (the curse).^g •And they were 6 altogether^h two hundred; and they descended into ^hArdos,ⁱ which is the summit of Hermon.^j And they called the mount Armon, for they swore and bound one another 7 by a curse.^k •And their names are as follows:^l Semyaz,^m the leader of Arakeb, Rame’el, Tam’el, Ram’el, Dan’el, Ezeqel, Baraqyal, As’el, Armaros, Batar’el,

f. Lit. “they obey.”

g. B and C have the awkward reading wa-mege-bāru qedmēhu . . . zayekawun wa-k’ulu megbāru yetqannay [B: yetqanayu] lotu.

h. Lit. “it is done.”

i. I.e. organized.

j. Eth. bāhrata, in the accusative form. B and C give the common plural form ’abherit, in the nominative form.

k. So A: wa-ifalag, lit. “it does not part.” This reading of A appears to be corrupt. B and C, in agreement with the Gk., hē thalassa kai hoi potamoi, read ’abheri wa-’afag hebura, “the seas and the rivers together.”

l. I.e. in a backbiting manner.

m. B: “your peace.”

n. The Eth. is corrupt. As for the variations in the different Gk. texts, particularly in the Akhmim additions, see EC, p. 9.

o. B: wa-’emmahi.

p. Eth. yewahab. B C: yewahabomu.

q. Lit. “they shall not repeat sin.” C: “they will not again sin.”

r. For the variation in the Gk. fragments, cf. EC,
p. 10f.

s. I.e. divine punishment.

t. I.e. divine wrath.

u. Eth. ’ella, wrong for ’allā.

v. B C Gk. fragments: “and their lives shall be increased in peace.”

6 a. Lit. “the children.”

b. B C: Semyaza.

c. B: “who is their leader.”

d. Cf. B: “I alone will become the payer.” Text of A, fadfāda, “exceedingly,” is corrupt for fadāyi.
C, ’ekawwen . . . fadāya, is somewhat awkward.

e. B C: “they responded to him and said.”

f. Eth. zāti gebr, “this deed.” B and C, zāti mekr gebra and zāti (mekr) gebr respectively, are redundant.

g. Lit. “by it.”

h. Lit. “And all of them were . . .”

i. B C: ’Ardis.

j. B C: “Mount Hermon.” Following the Gk. fragment, the correct reading may be “and they descended in the days of Jared on the summit of Mount Hermon.” Cf. EC, p. 13f.

k. Regarding the paronomasia between Hermon (of Mount Hermon) and herem, “curse,” cf. EC,
p. 14.

l. Lit. “And here are [this is (the list) of] their names, it is like this . . .” C and B read “And these are the names of their leaders.”

m. B: Semyaza. C: Sami’azaz.

8 Anan'el, Zaqe'el, Sasomasp^we'el, Kestar'el, Tur'el, Yamayol, and Arazyal.ⁿ • These are their chiefs^o of tens^p and of all the others with them.

1 7 And they^a took wives unto themselves, and everyone (respectively) chose one woman for himself, and they began to go unto them.^b And they taught them magical
2 medicine, incantations, the cutting of roots, and taught them^c (about) plants. • And the women became pregnant and gave birth to great giants whose heights^d were three 3 hundred cubits. • These^e (giants) consumed the produce^f of all the people^g until the 4 people detested feeding them.^h • Soⁱ the giants turned against (the people) in order to 5 eat them. • And they began to sin against birds, wild beasts, reptiles, and fish. And 6 their flesh was devoured the one by the other, and they drank blood.^j • And then the earth brought an accusation against the oppressors.

WisSol
14:6; Tob
6:14; Sir
16:7; 1Bar
3:26; 3Mac
2:4; Jub
7:22f.

Gen 9:4;
1Sam
14:32-34;
Acts 15:20;
Jub 7:28;
21:6

1 8 And Azaz'el taught the people (the art of) making swords and knives, and shields, and breastplates; and he showed to their chosen ones^a bracelets, decorations, (shad-
2 owing of the eye) with antimony,^b ornamentation, the beautifying of the eyelids, all 2 kinds of precious stones,^c and all coloring tinctures and alchemy.^d • And there were 3 many wicked ones^e and they committed adultery and erred, and all their conduct
3 became corrupt. • Amasras^f taught incantation and the cutting of roots; and Armaros the resolving of incantations; and Baraqiyal^g astrology,^h and Kokar'er'elⁱ (the knowledge of) the signs,^j and Tam'el^k taught the seeing of the stars, and Asder'el^l taught the 4 course of the moon as well as the deception^m of man.ⁿ • And (the people) cried and their voice reached unto heaven.

Dan 5:12

1 9 Then Michael, Surafel,^a and Gabriel observed carefully from the sky and they saw
2 much blood being shed upon the earth,^b and all the oppression being wrought upon
2 the earth. • And they said to one another, "The earth, (from) her empty (foundation), 3 has brought the cry of their voice unto the gates of heaven. • And now, [O] holy ones of heaven, the souls of people are putting their case before you pleading, 'Bring our

n. B C: "Sami'azaz [B: Semyaza], who is their leader, Arakibaramel [B: Urakibaramel], Kokabi'el [B: Akibe'el], Tami'el [B: Tame'el], Rami'el [B: Raw'el], Dan'el, Ezeqe'el, Baraqiyal [B: Laraqiyal], Asa'el, Armaros [B: Armeses], Baṭar'el [B: Baṭra'al], Anan'el, Zaqi'el [B: Zaqebe], Samsape'el, Satar'el [B: Sart'el], Tur'el, Yomya'el, Arazyal." Cf. EC, p. 14.

o. Eth. 'abayta. B C wrongly: habayta and habaytomu respectively.

p. B adds "of the two hundred angels."

7 a. C: "they and all the others with them."

b. B and C add "and became added unto them."

For variations in the Gk. fragments in this and ch. 8, see EC, pp. 17f.

c. Eth. maḥarewon. B C: 'amarewon.

d. Lit. "and their heights."

e. C: "who." Cf. 4QEn^a, which is closer to A.

f. Lit. "toil," "labor." So 4QEn^a.

g. A should be rendered either "All of these consumed the toil of the people" or "These consumed the toil of all the people" by transposing the correctly nominative Eth. k'ellu in the phrase 'ellu ba'u k'ellu šamā sabe. Cf. 4QEn^a. All of Charles's MSS give the accusative kwellu. Cf. EC, p. 16, nn. 9, 10.

h. Eth. sēsyyota sab'e. C: sab'e sēsyyota.

i. Lit. "And."

j. Possibly "And they devoured one another's flesh, and drank the blood." B adds emnehā, which is a doublet of the following word.

8 a. Eth. za-'emhrēhomu. C and B have za-'em-dhrēhomu, "those after them," which Charles thinks is a corruption of the G^a ta metalla (cf. ta mei'auta). G^a has megala. Cf. EC, p. 16, n. 30. C and B also add "the making of them." Eth. za-'emdhrehomu is rendered as "their successors" or "their children" by Ethiopian commentators.

b. Lit. "antimony."

c. Lit. "and of stones all kinds of precious and chosen stones."

d. A adds tawaleto 'alam, "transmutation of the world." I render it as "alchemy." Cf. EC, p. 18, n. 5. Ethiopian commentators explain this phrase as "changing a man into a horse or mule or vice versa, or transferring an embryo from one womb to another."

e. B C: "and there was [great and] much wickedness."

f. B: Amezaras. C: Amizaras.

g. B: Baraq'al.

h. Lit. "the seeing of stars."

i. B C: Kokab'el.

j. I.e. miraculous signs.

k. B: Tem'el. C: Tami'el.

l. B: Asrad'el.

m. B and C read "destruction."

n. Concerning variations in the Gk. fragments see EC, p. 18f.

9 a. B: Uryan and Suryan. C: Ur'el and Rufa'el.

b. A also adds ba-tāhetu, "under it."

4 judgment before the Most High.' '• And they said to the Lord of the potentates,^d
 "For he is the Lord of lords, and the God of gods,^f and the King^g of kings, and the seat of his glory^h (stands) throughout all the generations of the world. Your name is 5 holy, and blessed, and glorious throughout the whole world.ⁱ • You have made everything^j and with you is the authority for everything. Everything^k is naked and open before your sight, and you see everything; and there is nothing which can hide 6 itself from you. • You see what Azaz'el has done; how he^l has taught all (forms of) oppression upon the earth. And they revealed^m eternal secrets which are performed 7 in heaven (and which) man learned.ⁿ • (Moreover) Semyaz,^o to whom you have given power to rule over his companions, co-operating,^p they went in unto the daughters 8 of the people on earth;^q • and they lay together with them—with those women—and 9 defiled themselves, and revealed to them every (kind of) sin. • As for the women, they gave birth to giants to the degree that the whole earth was filled with blood and 10 oppression. • And now behold, the Holy One will cry,^r and those who have died will bring their suit up to the gate of heaven. Their^s groaning has ascended (into heaven), but^t they could not get out from before the face of the oppression that is being 11 wrought on earth. • And you know everything (even) before it came to existence,^u and you see (this thing)^v (but) you do not tell us what is proper for us that we may do regarding it."

1 10 And then spoke the Most High, the Great and Holy One!^a And he sent Asuryal^b
 2 to the son of Lamech, (saying), • "Tell him^c in my name, 'Hide yourself!' and reveal to him the end of what is coming; for the earth and everything^d will be destroyed.
 And the Deluge is about to come upon all the earth; and all that is in it will be 3 destroyed.^e • And now instruct him in order that he may flee, and his seed will be 4 preserved for all generations."^f • And secondly the Lord said to Raphael,^g "Bind Azaz'el hand^h and footⁱ (and) throw him into the darkness!" And he made a hole in 5 the desert which was in Duda'el and cast him there; • he threw on top of him rugged 6 and sharp rocks. And he covered his face^j in order that he may not see light;^k • and 7 in order that he may be sent into the fire on the great day of judgment. • And give life to the earth which the angels have corrupted. And he will proclaim^l life for the earth: that he is giving life to her.^m And all the children of the people will not perish

Jude 6

c. B C: "the souls of people are making their suit, saying, 'Bring our case [lit. "judgment"] before the Most High."

d. Lit. "kings." One of the duplicate versions of the Syncellus Gk. fragment reads "The Lord of the ages," or "of the world," tôn aiônôn.

e. Eth. 'esma, "for," "because." In the Syncellus fragment we have Su, "you," instead.

f. Lit. "your God." B C: "their God."

g. Lit. "your king." B C: "their king."

h. C: "your glory."

i. B and C repeat "glorious."

j. A omits "everything," found in the other MSS.

k. A omits "Everything," found in the other MSS.

l. B and C read "who."

m. B C: "and he revealed."

n. B: wa'amara sablârât. C: wa'amara sabe'a. Cf. EC, p. 22, n. 15, and p. 23.

o. B: Semyaza. C: "and of Semyaza."

p. Lit. "together with."

q. B omits "on earth" and wrongly repeats "together with."

r. This phrase is attested neither in other Eth. MSS nor in the Gk. fragments. Instead, we have "the souls of the dead." Cf. EC, pp. 22f.

s. Lit. "and their."

t. Lit. "and."

u. B omits "everything before it came to exist-

v. The Eth. text is corrupt. Cf. EC, p. 24, n. 12, and p. 25.

10 a. C: "Then spoke the Most High, the Great and Holy One said." Cf. EC, p. 24, n. 20.

b. B: Arsayalaldor. C: 'Asarya Leyur. Cf. also EC, p. 24, n. 23.

c. C, supported by G^s, adds "Go to Noah and tell him . . ." See EC, p. 24, n. 25.

d. So A. B C: "the whole earth."

e. B omits "all." C, following the Gk. fragments, reads "it will destroy all that is in it."

f. So B and C. The text of A, which reads "and his seed will kneel down [worship] for all generations," is obviously corrupt.

g. The name designates "God is a healer."

h. Lit. "by hand." Cf. TarJon Gen 6:3, in which the names Semyaza and Azaz'el appear.

i. Lit. "by foot."

j. B and C add "cover him with darkness and let him abide there forever."

k. The preceding two sentences are given in the imperative form in B and C: "And make a hole in the desert . . ."

l. Lit. "he will make you know."

m. Lit. "to the earth." The Gk. fragments read "that he may heal the plague." Cf. also EC, p. 26,

n. 4

8 through all the secrets (of the angels),ⁿ which they taught to their sons. •And the whole earth has been corrupted by Azaz'el's teaching of his (own) actions; and write
 9 upon him all sin. •And to Gabriel the Lord said, "Proceed against the bastards and the reprobates and against the children of adultery; and destroy the children of adultery and expel the children of the Watchers from among the people.^o And send them against one another (so that) they may be destroyed in the fight, for length of days
 10 have they not. •They^p will beg you everything—for their fathers on behalf of themselves—because they hope to live an eternal life. (They hope) that^q each one of 11 them will live a period of five hundred years." •And to Michael God said, "Make known to Semyaza^r and the others who are with him,^s who fornicated^t with the 12 women,^u that they will die^v together with them in all their defilement. •And when they and^w all their children have battled with each other, and when they have seen the destruction of their beloved ones, bind them for seventy^x generations underneath the rocks of the ground until the day of their judgment and of their consummation,
 13 until the eternal judgment is concluded. •In those days they will lead them into the bottom of the fire—and in torment—in the prison (where) they will be locked up
 14 forever. •And at the time when^y they will burn and die, those who collaborated with them will be bound together with them from henceforth unto the end of (all)
 15 generations.^z •And destroy all the souls of pleasure and the children of the Watchers, for they have done injustice to man. •Destroy^{a2} injustice from the face of the earth. And every iniquitous deed will end, and the plant of righteousness and truth will 17 appear forever and he will plant joy.^{b2} •And then all the righteous ones will escape; and become the living ones until they multiply and become^{c2} tens of hundreds; and all the days of their youth and the years of their retirement^{d2} they will complete in 18 peace. •And in those days the whole earth will be worked in righteousness, all of 19 her^{e2} planted with trees, and will find blessing.^{f2} •And they shall plant pleasant trees^{g2} upon her—vines.^{h2} And he who plants a vine upon her will produce wine for plenitude.ⁱ² And every seed that is sown on her, one measure will yield a thousand (measures) and one measure of olives will yield ten measures^{j2} of presses of oil.
 20 And you cleanse the earth from all injustice, and from all defilement, and from all oppression, and from all sin, and from all iniquity^{k2} which is being done on earth;
 21 remove them^{l2} from the earth. •And all the children of the people will become righteous, and all nations shall worship and bless me; and they will all prostrate

Jub 4:22

67:4–7; Jub 5:10

Jude 6

Rev 20:10, 14, 15; Mt 25:41

Isa 5:10; 2Bar 29:5

n. Lit. "through all the secrets which the Watchers killed," which is obviously a corruption. Cf. EC, p. 26, n. 23. The Syncellus fragment reads "disclosed" instead of "killed."

o. B C: "and destroy . . . from among the people; and expel them."

p. Lit. "and they."

q. Lit. "and that."

r. Charles, after Radermacher, prefers "Bind Semyaza." See EC, p. 28, n. 15, and p. 29. C (and G) reads "Go, make known to Semyaza."

s. Or "his companions."

t. Lit. gabru, "did." 4QEn^b: "(who) associated."

u. B C: "who united with the women."

v. Or "decay," "corrupt."

w. B and C omit "they and."

x. A and B wrongly have la-sabe'a.

y. Charles thinks the reading hotan, "when," is a corruption of hos an, "everyone who . . ." (EC, p. 28, n. 31). Cf. Milik, The Books of Enoch, p. 190.

z. This is a free translation. The text is corrupt. EC, following the Syncellus fragment, reads "whoever shall be condemned and destroyed will from henceforth be bound with them . . ." Cf. also EC, p. 29, n. 5.

a2. Lit. "and disappear."

b2. B C: "Destroy all injustice from the face of the earth and let every evil work come to an end; and let the plant of righteousness and truth appear and it shall become a blessing; the works of righteousness and truth shall be planted in truth and joy forevermore." A can be rendered ". . . and the plant of righteousness will appear, and plant eternal truth and joy."

c2. Lit. "they become and beget." B and C omit "they become."

d2. Or "rest," "their sabbaths," sanbatāta zī'ahomu. B C: sanbata zī'ahomo, "their sabbath," which is intelligible. Therefore Charles, following Wellhausen, Skizzen und Vorarbeiten 6 (Berlin, 1899) pp. 241, 260, suggested substituting reš'anithomu for sanbat, which he considered a corruption from the Heb. sēbuthon, "their old age." Cf. EC, p. 30, n. 9, and p. 31, n. 1. The Eth. sanbatār in plural (so also G) (cf. sanābet), found in A, does convey a sense of "weeks of rest" or "periods of rest or retirement." A notion equivalent to the suggested Heb. expression is given by Ethiopian commentators who render the phrase simply as "the period of old age."

e2. G reads en autē, "in her."

f2. B C: "will be filled with blessing."

g2. Lit. "trees of joy." C reads "trees of joy shall be planted." Cf. also G.

h2. B C: "And they shall plant vines."

i2. Lit. "for the satisfaction of the appetite."

j2. B and C omit "measures."

k2. A repeats "and from all defilement."

l2. So A. B C: "finish them."

22 themselves to me. •And the earth shall be cleansed from all pollution, and from all sin, and from all plague, and from all suffering; and it shall not happen again that I shall send (these) upon the earth^{m2} from generation to generation and forever.

1 11 “And in those days I shall open the storerooms of blessing which are in the heavens,^a so that I shall send them down upon the earth, over the work and the toil of the children of man. •And peace and truth shall become partners together^b in all the days of the world, and in all the generations of the world.”

Deut 28:12

Ps 85:10;
Isa 32:17

Dream vision of Enoch: his intercession for the fallen angels

1 12 Before these things (happened) Enoch was hidden, and no one of the children of the people knew by what he was hidden and where he was. •And his dwelling place^a as well as his activities were with the Watchers and the holy ones; and (so were) his days. •And I, Enoch, began to bless the Lord of the mighty ones^b and the King of the universe.^c •At that moment^d the Watchers were calling me.^e And they^f said to me, “Enoch, scribe of righteousness, go and make known to the Watchers of heaven who have abandoned the high heaven, the holy eternal place, and have defiled themselves with women, as their^g deeds move the children of the world,^h and have taken unto themselves wives: Theyⁱ have defiled themselves with great defilement upon the earth; •neither will there be peace unto them nor the forgiveness of sin. For their children delight in seeing the murder of their beloved ones.^j But they shall groan and beg forever over the destruction of their children, and there shall not be peace unto them even forever.”^k

His intercession for Azaz’el

1 13 As for Enoch,^a he proceeded and said to Azaz’el, “There will not be peace unto you; a grave judgment has come upon you. •They will put you in bonds,^b and you will not have (an opportunity for)^c rest and supplication,^d because you have taught injustice and because^e you have shown to the people deeds of shame, injustice, and sin.” •Then I went and spoke to all of them together; and they were all frightened, and fear and trembling seized them. •And they begged me to write for them a memorial prayer^f in order that there may be for them a prayer^g of forgiveness, and so that I may raise their memorial prayer unto the Lord of heaven. •For, as for themselves, from henceforth they will not be able to speak, nor will they raise their eyes unto heaven as a result of their sins which have been condemned. •And then I wrote down their memorial prayers and the petitions on behalf of their spirits and the deeds of each one of them, on account of the fact that they have prayed in order that^h there may be for them forgiveness (of sin) and a length (of days). •And I went and sat down upon the waters of Dan—in Dan which is on the southwest of Hermon—and I read their memorial prayers until I fell asleep. •And behold a dream came to me and visions fell m2. Lit. “upon her.”

11 a. B C: “in heaven.”
b. B and C omit “together.”

12 a. So A. Instead of wa-makāno, “his dwelling place,” B and C read: wa-menta kona, “and what he had become,” or “what had become of him.” Apparently this is an error due to homoeoteleuton.

b. B reads “great Lord.” C, on the basis of the Gk. fragments, reads “Lord of Majesty.” Cf. EC, p. 32, nn. 8f.

c. Also “King of the ages” and “the eternal King” are possible.

d. Lit. “And behold,” “And lo.”

e. Lit. “they were calling me Enoch.” B C: “they were calling me Enoch, the scribe.”

f. Lit. “he.”

g. Lit. “his.”

h. Lit. “of the people.” In the preceding clause, kama yegassewo(?), the text is unclear. B C: “they have done as the children of the people do.”

i. The Gk. has “you.” Cf. EC, p. 33.

j. C: “they delight in their children . . .”

k. B C: “there shall not be mercy and peace unto them.”

13 a. B C: “and Enoch.”

b. So A.

c. Lit. “it will not be.”

d. Text, “for error and supplication,” corrupt.

e. Text unclear.

f. Lit. “a remembrance of prayer.”

g. Omitted by B and C.

h. Text corrupt: “they have beseeched you.”

upon me, and I saw a visionⁱ of plagues^j (so that) I may speak to the children of 9 heaven and reprimand them. •And upon my awakening, I came unto them (while) they were all conferring^k together, in Lesya'el,^l which is (located) between Lebanon 10 and Sanser,^m while weeping and with their faces covered. •And I recounted before them all the visions that I had seen in sleep and began to speak those words of righteousness and to reprimandⁿ the Watchers of heaven.

Deut 3:9;
 Song 4:8

1Cor 6:3

1 14 This is the book of the words of righteousness and the chastisement of the eternal Watchers, in accordance with how the Holy and Great One had commanded in this 2 vision. •I saw in my sleep what I now speak with my tongue of flesh and the breath of the mouth which the Great One has given to man (so that) he (man) may speak with it^a—and (so that) he may have understanding with his heart as he (the Great 3 One) has created and given it to man. •Accordingly he has created me and given me the word of understanding^b so that I may reprimand the Watchers, the children of 4 heaven. •I wrote down your prayers—so it appeared in vision^c—for your prayers will not be heard^d throughout all the days of eternity; and judgment is passed^e upon you.
 5 From now on you will not be able to ascend into heaven unto all eternity, but you
 6 shall remain^f inside the earth, imprisoned^g all the days of eternity. •Before that you will have seen^h the destruction of your beloved sons and you will not have their 7 treasures,ⁱ which^j will fall before your eyes by the sword. •And your petitions on their behalf will not be heard—neither will those on your own behalf (which you offer) weeping (and) praying—and you will not speak even a word contained in the book which I wrote.^k

1Cor 6:3

Enoch's vision

8 And behold I saw^l the clouds: And they were calling me in a vision; and the fogs were calling me; and the course of the stars and the lightnings were rushing me and causing me to desire;^m and in the vision, the winds were causing me to fly and 9 rushing me high up into heaven.ⁿ •And I kept coming (into heaven) until I approached a wall which was built of white marble and surrounded by tongues^o of fire; and it 10 began to frighten me. •And I came into the tongues of the fire and drew near to a great house which was built of white marble, and the inner wall(s)^p were like mosaics^q 11 of white marble, the floor^r of crystal, •the ceiling like the path of the stars and 12 lightnings between which (stood) fiery cherubim and their heaven of water;^s •and 13 flaming fire surrounded the wall(s), and its gates were burning with fire. •And I entered into the house, which^t was hot like fire and cold like ice, and there was

Mt 17:5;
 Pss
 18:10,11;
 104:3

Isa 30:30

i. C: "visions."

j. The Gk. omits "plague" and reads "and a voice came saying."

k. Or "gathered." B C: "sitting."

l. B: Abelsya'el. C: Abelsya'il.

m. B: Senser. C: Seniser.

n. Lit. "reprimand them."

14 a. B C: "and with my breath (which) the Great One has given the mouth . . ." Cf. EC, p. 34, n. 52.

b. This is a reconstruction; the text seems corrupt. Cf. B C: "As he has created man and given him the word of understanding, and likewise he has created me and given to me the (authority of) reprimanding." G omits "he has created me and given me the word of understanding."

c. B C: "my vision." 4QEn: "a vision to me."

d. Lit. "it will not happen for you."

e. Lit. "fulfilled."

f. Eth. tenabberu, "you shall sit," "dwell," "remain." Cf. tenagara, "it is spoken," in B and C. See EC, p. 37, n. 6.

g. Lit. "they will imprison you."

h. Lit. "you saw."

i. Cf. EC, p. 36, n. 24: "and you shall have no pleasure in them."

j. B C: "but."

k. Charles suggests restoring the text to read "though you weep and pray and speak all the words . . ." Cf. EC, p. 37, n. 11.

l. A, "And to me, he saw to the clouds," seems corrupt. B C: "And he showed me a vision thus . . ."

m. Some think this to be inaccurate. Cf. EC, p. 37, n. 13.

n. B and C add "lifted me up into heaven."

o. B C: "tongue."

p. Lit. "and the walls inside the house." B and C have we'ru, "it," "this," "he," instead of westa, "in," "inside."

q. Lit. "tessellated sheets."

r. Lit. "the ground."

s. So B, C, and the Gk. fragments. A has samay-omu instead of samayomu, giving the reading "he named them water" instead of "their heaven was of water."

t. Lit. "and."

u. B C: "there was no pleasure of life in it."

14 nothing inside it;^u (so) fear covered me and trembling seized me. •And as I shook 15 and trembled, I fell upon my face and saw a vision. •And behold there was an opening before me (and) a second house which is greater than the former^v and 16 everything^w was built with tongues of fire. •And in every respect it excelled (the other)—in glory and great honor^x—to the extent that it is impossible for me to recount 17 to you^y concerning its glory and greatness. •As for its floor,^z it was of fire and above it was lightning and the path of the stars; and as for the ceiling, it was flaming fire.
 18 And I observed and saw inside it a lofty throne—its appearance was like crystal and 19 its wheels like the shining sun; and (I heard?) the voice of the cherubim; •and from beneath the throne^{a2} were issuing streams of flaming fire. It was difficult^{b2} to look at 20 it.^{c2} •And the Great Glory was sitting upon it—as for his gown, which was shining 21 more brightly than the sun, it was whiter than any snow. •None of the angels was able to come in and see the face of the Excellent and the Glorious One;^{d2} and no one 22 of the flesh can see him— •the flaming fire was round about him, and a great fire stood before him. No one could come near unto him from among those that surrounded 23 the tens of millions (that stood) before him. •He needed no council,^{e2} but the most holy ones who are near to him neither go far away at night nor move away from 24 him. •Until then I was prostrate on my face covered^{f2} and trembling. And the Lord called me with his own mouth and said to me, “Come near to me, Enoch, and to 25 my holy^{g2} Word.” •And he lifted me up and brought me near to the gate, but I
 (continued) to look down with my face.

Isa 6; Ezek
 1:9; 26;
 Dan 7:9,10;
 Ps 104:2;
 1Kgs 22:19;
 AsMos 4:2
 T Levi 5:1;
 Rev 4:2-3

Sir 42:21;
 2En 33:4

1 15 But he raised me up^a and said to me with his voice, “Enoch.”^b I (then) heard, “Do not fear, Enoch, righteous man, scribe of righteousness; come near to me and 2 hear my voice. •And tell^c the Watchers of heaven on whose behalf you have been sent^d to intercede: “It is meet (for you) that you intercede on behalf of man, and not 3 man on your behalf. •For what reason have you abandoned the high, holy, and eternal heaven; and slept with women and defiled yourselves with the daughters of the people, 4 taking wives, acting like the children of the earth, and begetting giant sons? •Surely you, you [used to be] holy, spiritual, the living ones, [possessing] eternal life; but (now) you have defiled yourselves with women, and with the blood of the flesh begotten children, you have lusted with the blood of the people, like them^e producing 5 blood and flesh, (which) die and perish. •On that account, I have given you^e wives in order that (seeds) might be sown upon them and children born by them, so that the 6 deeds that are done upon the earth will not be withheld from you.” •Indeed you, formerly you were spiritual, (having) eternal life,^f and immortal in all the generations 7 of the world. •That is why (formerly) I did not make wives for you, for the dwelling of the spiritual beings of heaven is heaven.’

8 “But now the giants who are born from the (union of) the spirits and the flesh shall be called evil spirits upon the earth, because^g their dwelling shall be upon the earth^h 9 and inside the earth. •Evil spiritsⁱ have come out of their bodies. Because from the day that they were created from the holy ones they became the Watchers; their first origin^m is the spiritual foundation.” They will become evil upon the earth and shall

v. B C: “behold a second house . . . and the entire portal was open before me.”

w. B and C omit “everything.”

x. B C: “in glory, honor, and greatness.”

y. Lit. “I cannot recount to you.”

z. Lit. “ground.”

a2. B adds “great.”

b2. Lit. “they could not.”

c2. B C: “looking,” “seeing.”

d2. The Gk. reads “on account of the honor and glory.”

e2. Cf. EC, p. 40, n. 21.

f2. Charles suggests omitting “covered.” Cf. EC, p. 40, n. 25.

g2. Charles prefers the Gk. akouson, “hear,” instead of the Eth. “holy.” For this and succeeding phrase see EC, p. 40, n. 28.

15 a. B C: “and he replied.”

b. B C: “and I heard his voice.”

c. B C: “And go and tell.”

d. B C: “who sent you.”

e. Lit. “pray.”

f. B C: “you have done like them.”

g. Lit. “them.”

h. B C: “that nothing might be wanting to them on earth.”

i. B C: “living the eternal life.”

j. B and C omit “because.”

k. B and C omit “upon the earth.”

l. B and C read nafsāt, “soul,” instead of man-āfest, as in A.

m. Lit. “their first beginning.”

n. C, following the Gk.: “they are born from men and the holy Watchers in their beginning . . .”

10 be called evil spirits. •The dwelling of the spiritual beings of heaven is heaven; but the dwelling of the spirits of the earth, which are born upon the earth, is in the earth.^o
 11 The spirits of the giants oppress each other;^p they^q will corrupt, fall, be excited, and fall upon the earth, and cause sorrow.^r They eat no food,^s nor become thirsty, nor 12 find obstacles.^t •And these spirits shall rise up^u against the children of the people and against the women, because they have proceeded forth (from them).

1 16 “From the days of the slaughter and destruction, and the death of the giants and the spiritual beings of the spirit, and the flesh, from which they have proceeded forth, which will corrupt without incurring judgment, they will corrupt until the day of the great conclusion, until the great age is consummated, until everything is concluded
 2 (upon) the Watchers and the wicked ones.^a •And sob^b to the Watchers on whose behalf
 3 you have been sent to intercede—who were formerly in heaven—(say to them), •‘You were (once) in heaven, but not all the mysteries (of heaven) are open to you, and you (only) know the rejected mysteries.^c Those ones^d you have broadcast to the women in the hardness of your hearts and by those mysteries^e the women and men multiply evil deeds upon the earth.’ Tell them, ‘Therefore, you will have no peace!’ ”

Jub
10:5–11;
Mt 8:29

Enoch's Tour of the Earth and Sheol The first journey

1 17 And they lifted me up into^a one place where there were (the ones) like the flaming Ps 104:4
 2 fire. And when they (so) desire they appear like men. •And they took me into a place
 3 of whirlwind^b in the mountain; the top of its summit was reaching into heaven. •And I saw chambers^c of light and thunder^d in the ultimate end of the depth^e toward (the place where) the bow,^f the arrow, and their quiver and a fiery sword and all the 4 lightnings were. •And they lifted me up unto the waters of life,^g unto the occidental
 5 fire which receives^h every setting of the sun. •And I came to the river of fire which 6 flows like waterⁱ and empties itself into the great sea in the direction of the west. •And I saw all^j the great rivers^k and reached to the great darkness and went into the place
 7 where all flesh must walk cautiously.^l •And I saw the mountains of the dark storms
 8 of the rainy season and from where the waters of all the seas^m flow. •And I saw the mouths of all the rivers of the earth and the mouth of the sea.

1 18 And I saw the storerooms of all the winds and saw how with them he has 2 embroidered all creation as well as the foundations of the earth. •I saw the cornerstone of the earth; I saw the four winds which bear the earth as well as the firmament of
 3 heaven. •I saw how the winds ride the heights of heaven^a and stand between heaven

2Sam
22:16; Ps
18:15
Job 38:6

o. Cf. vss. 7 and 8 above. The Syncellus fragment omits vs. 10.

p. So A. I have omitted dammanāta, “clouds,” which seems to be dangling in the phrase. Eth. dammanā could also mean “mass,” “enormity,” “immensity,” and one could possibly read the text as “The spirits of the giants oppress each other massively.” On the other hand the dammanāta in this verse has been regarded by some as a corruption. The Syncellus fragment has “laying waste.” Cf. EC, p. 44, n. 3.

q. Lit. “who.”

r. Cf. EC, pp. 44f.

s. The Gk. fragments add “but nevertheless hunger.”

t. So A. C, on the basis of Dillmann's emendation, reads “cause offense” or “become obstacle.” B and other MSS have “they will not be known.”

u. A: “shall not rise up.”

16 a. The preceding passage is not completely intelligible and is a difficult reading. Cf. also C and EC, pp. 44f.

b. Lit. “And now.”

c. Lit. “the rejected mystery.”

d. Lit. “This one.”

e. Lit. “this mystery.”

17 a. The Gk. adds “and brought me.”

b. G³: “darkness.”

c. Lit. “places.”

d. G³ adds “and the treasures of the stars.”

e. B and C add haba, “unto,” before “depth,” a somewhat unintelligible reading.

f. B C: “fiery bow.”

g. C: “living waters.” B: “water of life.” A and other MSS add a gloss: za-yetnāgar or za-iyetnāgar.

h. Lit. “seizes.”

i. C: “whose fire flows like water.”

j. C omits “all.”

k. G³ adds “and the great river.”

l. C, in agreement with the Gk. fragments, reads “where no flesh can walk.”

m. B C: “the lake.”

18 a. So A. B C: yerabewā, “stretch out,” instead of yerakewā, “ride.”

4 and earth: These are the very pillars of heaven. •I saw the winds which turn the Job 26:11 5 heaven and cause the star to set—the sun as well as all the stars.^b •I saw the souls Job 36:29;
 carried by the clouds.^c I saw the path of the angels in the ultimate end of the earth, 37:16 6 and the firmament of the heaven above.^d •And I kept moving^e in the direction of the west; and it was flaming^f day and night toward the seven mountains of precious 7 stones—three toward the east and three toward the south. •As for those toward the east, they were of colored stones—one of pearl stone and one of healing stone;^g and 8 as for those toward the south, they were of red stone. •The ones^h in the middle were pressing into heaven like the throne of God, which is of alabaster and whose summitⁱ Ezek 1:26 9 is of sapphire;^j •and I saw a flaming fire. •And I saw what was inside those^k
 10 mountains—a place,^l beyond the great earth, where^m the heavensⁿ come together.^o
 11 And I saw a deep pit^p with heavenly fire on its pillars; I saw inside them descending 12 pillars of fire^q that were immeasurable (in respect to both) altitude^r and depth.^s •And on top of that pit I saw a place without the heavenly firmament above it or earthly foundation under it or water. There was nothing on it—not even birds^t—but it was a 13 desolate and terrible place. •And I saw there the seven stars (which) were like great, 14 burning mountains.^u •(Then) the angel said (to me), “This place is the (ultimate) end of heaven and earth: it is the prison house^v for the stars^w and the powers of heaven.
 15 •And the stars which roll over upon the fire, they are the ones which have transgressed the commandments of God from the beginning of their rising because they did not 16 arrive punctually.^x •And he was wroth with them and bound them until the time of the completion of their sin in the year of mystery.”^y

1 19 And Uriel said to me, “Here shall stand in many different appearances the spirits of the angels which have united themselves with women. They^a have defiled the people and will lead them into error so that they^b will offer sacrifices to the demons as unto gods, until the great day of judgment in which they shall be judged till they 2 are finished. •And their women whom the angels have led astray will be peaceful 3 ones.”^c •(So) I, Enoch, I saw the vision of the end of everything alone; and none among human beings will see as I have seen.

Names of archangels

1 20 And these are names of the holy angels who watch: •Suru’el,^a one of the holy
 2 angels—for (he is) of eternity^b and of trembling.^c •Raphael, one of the holy angels,
 3 for (he is) of the spirits of man. •Raguel, one of the holy angels who take vengeance 4 for the world and for the luminaries.^d •Michael, one of the holy angels, for (he is)

b. B C: “turn the heaven and cause the ball of the sun and all the stars to set.”

c. B C: “I saw the winds on the earth which carry the clouds.”

d. B C: “I saw the path of the angels. I saw in the ultimate end of the earth the firmament of heaven above.”

e. B C: “And I passed.”

f. C, in accordance with the Gk.: “and I saw a place which burns . . .”

g. Charles suggests “jacinth.” Cf. EC, p. 49, n. 13.

h. B C: “The one.”

i. Lit. “the summit of the throne.”

j. Or “stone.”

k. So A and G. B and C read “all.”

l. Lit. “there was a place.” B and C add “and I saw.”

m. Lit. “there.”

n. B: “waters.”

o. G: “are completed.”

p. B reads “a deep pit in the earth.”

q. B: “heavenly pillars of fire.”

r. Lit. “either in the direction of the heights.”

s. Lit. “or in the direction of the depth.”

t. B C: “There was no water on it and no birds.”

u. Text adds “and like the spirit that was questioning me.” Regarding this corruption see EC, p. 51, n. 5.

v. B and C add “this.”

w. B: “stars of heaven.”

x. Lit. “because they did not come [A wrongly: “bring”] in their (allotted) time.”

y. G: “for a myriad years.”

19 a. Lit. “You.”

b. “The people.”

c. Charles considers the Eth. salāmāwēyān (Gk. hōs eirēnaiōi) a corruption of eis sirēn, “into sirens.” Cf. EC, p. 51, n. 49.

20 a. B C: “Uriel.”

b. B: “of roaring.” C: “of the world.”

c. G: “Tartarus.” The Gk. reads: “Uriel . . . who is over the world and Tartarus.”

d. G: “. . . takes vengeance on the world of the luminaries.”

6 obedient in his benevolence over the people and the nations.^e • Saraqa⁷el, one of the 7 holy angels who are (set) over the spirits of mankind^f who sin in the spirit. • Gabriel, one of the holy angels who oversee the garden of Eden, and the serpents, and the cherubim.^g

Enoch's second journey: preliminary and final place of punishment of fallen stars

1 21 And I came to an empty place.^a • And I saw (there) neither a heaven above nor 2 an earth below,^b but a chaotic^c and terrible place. • And there I saw seven stars of 3 heaven bound together in it,^d like great mountains, and burning with fire. • At that 4 moment I said, "For which sin are they bound, and for what reason were they cast
5 in here." • Then one of the holy angels, Uriel, who was with me, guiding me,^e spoke
6 to me and said to me, "Enoch, for what reason are you asking and for what reason 7 do you question and exhibit eagerness?^f • These are among the stars of heaven^g which 8 have transgressed the commandments of the Lord and are bound in this place^h until 9 the completion of ten million years, (according) to the number of their sins."ⁱ • I then 10 proceeded from that area to another place which is even more terrible and saw a terrible thing: a great fire that was burning and flaming; the place^j had a cleavage (that extended) to the last sea, pouring out^k great pillars of fire; neither its extent nor its magnitude could I see nor was I able to estimate.^l • At that moment, what a terrible opening^m is this place and a pain to look at!ⁿ • Then Ura⁷el, (one) of the holy angels who was with me, responded and said to me,^o "Enoch, why are you afraid like this?"^p (I answered and said),^q • "I am frightened because of this terrible place and the spectacle of this painful thing."^r And he said unto me, "This place is the prison house of the angels; they are detained here forever."

1 22 Then^a I went to another place, and he showed me on the west side a great and
2 high mountain of^b hard rock • and inside it four beautiful^c corners; it had [in it] a deep,
3 wide, and smooth^d (thing) which was rolling over;^e and it (the place) was deep and 4 dark to look at.^f • At that moment, Rufael, one of the holy angels, who was with me,
5 responded to me; and he said to me, "These beautiful^g corners (are here) in order that Mt 24:31
the spirits of the souls of the dead should assemble into them—they are created so that the souls of the children of the people^h should gather here. • They prepared these placesⁱ in order to put them (i.e. the souls of the people) there until the day of their 6 judgment and the appointed time of the great judgment upon them."^j • I saw the spirits

e. G: "set over the best part of mankind and chaos."

f. G omits "mankind."

g. G² adds "Remiel, one of the holy angels, whom God set over those who rise"; G¹ adds "the names of the angels seven"; and G², "the names of the angels."

21 a. Lit. "where nothing is done." G: "a chaotic place." B and C add "I saw there a terrible thing."

b. Lit. "an earth with a foundation."

c. Lit. "which is not organized," "prepared," "orderly." C: "a place which has no order." B is unintelligible: "an orderly wilderness" (?).

d. Lit. "on it."

e. G: "leading them."

f. G: "eager for the truth." Cf. EC, p. 55, n. 2.

g. B and C omit "heaven."

h. Lit. "here."

i. B C: "the number of the days of their sins."

j. B: "the border."

k. Lit. "causing to descend."

l. B and C repeat našero, "seeing," before 'ayno, "estimating."

m. Lit. "mouth."

n. B C (cf. G): "At that moment I said, 'How terrible is this place and (how) painful to look at!'"

o. Lit. "and responded to me."

p. B and C add here "and your affright."

q. Cf. EC, p. 55, n. 46.

r. Lit. "this pain."

22 a. B C: "Thence."

b. Lit. "and."

c. G has koiioi, "hollow," instead of kaloi, "beautiful."

d. G² omits "wide," and adds "three of them being dark and one bright, and there was a fountain of water in the middle of it."

e. Or "slippery," or "a place which causes one to slide, roll, or go off balance"—according to Ethiopian commentators. Charles suggests the Eth. to come from Gk. kuklōmata, which is a corruption of the Gk. koiōmata, "hollow places."

f. B, C, and G² add "how smooth."

g. G²: "hollow."

h. Eth. agrees with 4QEn^e against G, which omits "of the children of."

i. Cf. Charles: "these places were made." EC, p. 56, n. 31.

j. Or "the age [so A only] of the great judgment upon them." Cf. 4QEn^e, Milik, The Books of Enoch, p. 229f. B and C add "till their appointed period."

of the children of the people^k who were dead, and their voices^l were reaching unto 6 heaven until this very moment.^m • I asked Rufael, the angel who was with me, and said to him, “This spirit, the voice of which is reaching (into heaven) like this and 7 is making suit, whose (spirit) is it?” • And he answered me, saying,ⁿ “This is the Gen 4:10 spirit which had left Abel, whom Cain, his brother, had killed; it (continues to) sue him until all of (Cain’s) seed is exterminated from the face of the earth, and his seed 8 has disintegrated from among the seed of the people.” • At that moment, I raised a question regarding him^o and regarding the judgment of all,^p “For what reason is one 9 separated from the other?” • And he replied^q and said to me, “These three have been made in order that the spirits of the dead might be separated. And in the manner in which the souls^r of the righteous are separated^s (by) this spring of water with light 10 upon it,^t in like manner, the sinners are set apart^u when they die and are buried in 11 the earth and judgment has not been executed upon them in their lifetime,^v upon this great pain, until the great day of judgment—and to those who curse^w (there will be) plague and pain forever, and the retribution of their spirits. They^x will bind them there 12 forever—even if from the beginning of the world.^y • And in this manner is a separation made for the souls of those who make the suit (and) those who disclose concerning 13 destruction, as they were killed in the days of the sinners.^z • Such has been made for the souls of the people who are not righteous, but sinners and perfect criminals;^{aa} they shall be together with (other) criminals who are like them, (whose)^{bb} souls will not 14 be killed on the day of judgment but will not rise from there.” • At that moment I blessed the Lord of Glory^{cc} and I said, “Blessed^{dd} be my Lord,^{ee} the Lord of righteousness who rules forever.”^{ff}

The fire of the luminaries of heaven

1 23 And from there I (departed and) went^a to another place in the direction of the west
 2 until the (extreme) ends of the earth. • And I saw^b a burning fire which was running
 3 without rest;^c and it did not diminish its speed^d night and day.^e • And I asked, saying, 4 “What is this (thing) which has no rest?” • At that moment, Raguel, one of the holy angels, who was with me, answered me and said to me, “This (thing) which you saw is the course (of the fire) and this,^f the fire which is burnings^g in the direction of the west, is the luminaries of heaven.”

The seven mountains of the northwest and the tree of life

1 24 From there I went to another place of the earth, and he showed me a mountain

k. Charles corrects the Gk. to “a dead man.” Cf. also 4QEn^c. 4QEn^c also adds ʾān, “there.”

l. Charles corrects the Gk. to “his voice.”

m. So A. Eth. waʿeska weʿ tu gizē may be a corruption for waysaki, “was making suit,” followed by weʿ tu gizē, “and at that moment,” which we have in B and C. On the other hand, it may reflect upon words found in 4QEn^c, “crying out unceasingly and making accusations.”

n. B C: “And he answered me and said to me saying.”

o. Or “regarding it.” Hence regarding Cain or what he saw earlier.

p. Charles suggests koiōmatōn, “of hollow places,” instead of krimatōn, “of judgment.” See EC, p. 58, n. 19.

q. Lit. “replied to me.”

r. B C: “spirits.”

s. B C: “and such a division has been made.”

G^a: “this division is made.”

t. G^a: “this bright spring of water.”

u. B C: “such has been created for sinners.” In A we have tafaltu instead of tafatru.

v. B and C add “their souls will be set apart.”

w. G: “the accused.”

x. B C: “He.”

y. Charles considers “even . . . world” an Eth. intrusion.

z. G^a: “his division has been made for the spirits of those making suits . . . when they were slain in the days of the sinners.”

a2. Lit. “of perfect crime.”

b2. Lit. “and.”

c2. B adds “of righteousness who rules forever,” and omits the following.

d2. A erroneously reads “be not blessed.”

e2. G^a: “are you.”

f2. G^a: “rules over the world.”

23 a. 4QEn^d: “I was transported.”

b. 4QEn^d: “I was shown.”

c. Lit. “while it was not resting.”

d. Lit. “decrease from its running.” 4QEn^d: “nor halting its running,” and adds “at the same time remaining constant.”

e. A adds “those like them.” B and C add “but (ran) regularly.”

f. Flemming suggests zeni to be a corruption of wāʿey, “burning.”

f. Charles considers this a corruption for: “which is persecuting.” Cf. EC, p. 60, n. 25.

2 of fire which was flaming day and night. •And I went in its direction and saw seven dignified mountains—all different one from the other, of^a precious and beautiful stones, and all dignified and glorious in respect to their visualization and beautiful in respect to their facade—three^b in the direction of the east, one^c founded on the other, and three in the direction of the north, one^d upon the other, with^e deep and crooked ravines, each one (of which) is removed^f from the other. •The seven mountains were (situated) in the midst of these (ravines) and (in respect to) their heights^g all resembled the seat of a throne (which is) surrounded by fragrant trees. •And among them, there was one tree such as I have never at all smelled; there was not a single one among those or other (trees) which is like it; among all the fragrances nothing could be so fragrant; its leaves, its flowers, and its wood would never wither forever; its fruit is beautiful^h andⁱ resembles the clustered fruits of a palm tree. •At that moment I said, “This is a beautiful^j tree, beautiful to view,^k with leaves (so) handsome and blossoms^l (so) magnificent^m in appearance.” •Then Michael, one of the holy and reveredⁿ angels—he is their chief—who was with me, responded to me.

1 25 And he said unto me, Enoch, “What is it that you are asking me concerning the fragrance of this tree and^a you are so inquisitive about?”^b •At that moment, I answered, saying, “I am desirous^c of knowing everything, but specially about this thing.”^d •He answered, saying, “This tall mountain which you saw^e whose summit resembles the throne of God is (indeed) his throne, on which the Holy and Great Lord of Glory, the Eternal King, will sit when he descends to visit the earth with goodness. •And as for this fragrant tree, not a single human being has the authority to touch it until the great judgment, when he shall take vengeance on all and conclude (everything) forever. •This is^f for the righteous and the pious. And the elect will be presented with its fruit for life.^g He will plant it in the direction of the northeast,^h upon the holy place—in the direction of the house of the Lord, the Eternal King.

10:17; 24:4;
Gen 2:9;
3:22
2Bar
73:2,3,6,7;
74
4Ezra 8:52;
Rev 2:7;
22:2,14

6 Then they shall be glad and rejoice in gladness,¹ and they shall enter into the holy (place); its fragrance shall (penetrate) their bones, long^j life will they live^k on earth, such as your fathers lived in their days.”¹

7 At that moment, I blessed the God of Glory, the Eternal King, for he has prepared such things for the righteous people, as he had created (them) and given it to them.^m

Jerusalem and its surroundings

1 26 And from there I went into the center of the earth and saw a blessed place, shaded^a with branches which live and bloom from a tree that was cut. •And there I saw a holy mountain; underneath the mountain, in the direction of the east, there was

Ezek 38:12;
5:5; Jub
8:12,19

24 a. Lit. “and.”

b. G^a omits “three.”

c. G^a omits “one.”

d. G^a omits “one.”

e. Lit. “and.”

f. Lit. “do not come near.”

g. G^a: “it excelled in height.”

h. G^a omits “is beautiful.”

i. E repeats “its fruit,” omitted by G^a.

j. G^a: “How beautiful . . .”

k. G^a: “fragrant.”

l. So A. A agrees with G^a against B and C, which read “fruit.”

m. B and C add “very.” A agrees with G.

n. G omits “revered.”

e. Omitted by G.

f. B C: “It shall be given.”

g. Charles considers this to be a corruption, comparing it to G, which reads “its fruit shall be food for the elect,” and Ezek 47:12, which he claims “the writer had before him.” See EC, p. 63, n. 15, and p. 62, n. 49.

h. Charles considers mas'e, “northeast” (G: eis borran), a mistake for la'kel, “for food” (G: eis boran). See EC, p. 63, n. 52.

i. B C: “be glad in gladness and rejoice.”

j. Lit. “Much.”

k. So B and C. A: “which they live.”

l. B and C add “Sorrow, pain, torment, and plague shall not touch them.”

m. Lit. “and he said, ‘I gave it to them.’”

25 a. G adds “why.”

b. Lit. “you examine in order to know.”

c. So A. B and C read “I want.”

d. So A. B and C read “this tree.”

26 a. G: “in which there were trees.” Cf. EC, p. 64, nn. 21f. 4QEn^d: “in which were trees.”

3 a stream which was flowing in the direction of the north. • And I saw in a second direction, (another) mountain^b which was higher than (the former).^c Between them^d was a deep and narrow^e valley. In the direction of the (latter) mountain ran a stream.^f
 4 In the direction of the west from this one there was (yet) another mountain, smaller than it and not so high,^g with a valley under it,^h and between them besides,ⁱ (another) valley which is^j deep and dry.^k • (The valleys)^l were narrow,^m (formed) of hard rocks and no tree growing on them.ⁿ • And I marveled at the mountain(s)^o and I marveled at the valley(s): I marveled very deeply.

The accursed valley

1 27 At that moment, I said, “For what purpose does this blessed land, entirely filled
 2 with trees, (have) in its midst this accursed valley?” • Then, Uriel, one of the holy angels, who was with me,^a answered me and said to me, “This accursed valley is for those accursed forever; here will gather together all (those) accursed ones,^b those who speak with their mouth unbecoming words against the Lord and utter hard words concerning his glory. Here shall they be gathered together, and here shall be their 3 judgment,^c in the last days. • There will be upon them the spectacle of the righteous judgment, in the presence of the righteous forever.^d The merciful will bless the Lord 4 of Glory, the Eternal King, all the day.^e • In the days of the judgment of (the accursed),^f
 the (merciful)^g shall bless him for the mercy which he had bestowed upon them.”^h 5 At that moment, I blessed the Lord of Glory and gave him the praise that befits his glory.ⁱ

Mt 5:29,30

Journey to the east

1 28 And from there I went in the direction of the east^a into the center of the mountain^b
 2 of the desert; and I saw a wilderness and it was solitary, full of trees and seeds.^c • And 3 there was a stream on top of it, and it gushed forth from above it. • It appeared like a waterfall which cascaded greatly^d as if toward the direction of west of the northeast;^e water and dew ascended from it all over.

1 29 Then I went into another place in the desert; and I approached the easterly
 2 direction of this mountain. • And there I saw the tree of judgment (which has) the smell of rubbish; its tree looked like that of frankincense and myrrh.^a

b. B and C read “toward the east a second mountain.”

c. Lit. “than this.”

d. So 4QEn^d. The Gk. reads autou instead of autōn.

e. Lit. “without breadth.”

f. Lit. “water.” A adds erroneously litani, “to me . . .” This may be a corruption from botuni; see B and EC, p. 64, n. 38.

g. Lit. “having no height.”

h. G²: “deep and dry.”

i. Lit. “and.”

j. Lit. “which are.”

k. B and C add “at the extremities of the three.”

l. B C: “All the valleys.”

m. B C: “deep and narrow.”

n. A erroneously: “and tree(s) will be planted on them.”

o. So also 4QEn^d. The Eth. means “mountain,” “hill,” “hard rock.” G^a omits “mountain.”

27 a. G^a omits the preceding words.

b. B and C omit “accursed ones.”

c. G²: “the place of their habitation.”

d. G²: “In the last times, in the days of the true judgment, before the righteous forever.”

e. Text unclear.

f. Lit. “their judgment.”

g. Lit. “they.”

h. Lit. “according to how he has divided it to them.”

i. Lit. “I made a proclamation and a remembrance that befits his glory.” G: “set forth his glory and lauded him . . .”

28 a. G omits “in the direction of the east.”

b. G omits “of the mountain.”

c. Lit. “and seeds from it” or “its seeds.” Charles holds “seeds from it” to be a corruption and suggests instead “plants” as the original. Cf. EC, p. 68, n. 6.

d. Lit. “much.”

e. G: “Rushing like a copious watercourse toward the northwest . . .”

29 a. This rendition of the Eth., following A closely, may be wrong. The text is awkward. Charles, following Beer and Praetorius, and partially in accordance with G, has suggested the emendation of the text to read “. . . I saw aromatic trees exhaling the fragrance of frankincense and myrrh, and the trees also were similar [B: “not similar”] to the almond tree.” Cf. EC, p. 68, nn. 27–29, and p. 69, nn. 14–18.

1 30 And beyond it—beyond those above the easterly mountains—it is not far.^a And
2 I saw a place which is a valley of water that is endless.^b •And I saw a beautiful tree^c
3 which resembles^d a tree whose fragrance is like that of mastic. •And in the direction of the sides^e of those valleys, I saw a fragrant cinnamon tree. And over these, I proceeded in the easterly direction.

1 31 And I saw other mountains with trees^a in them. There flowed from them (the 2 trees) something like nectar, called sarara^b and galbanum. •And over these mountains,
I saw (yet) another mountain^c and in it there were aloe trees,^d and the whole forest^e 3 was full of (trees) like sturdy almond trees.^f •And when one picks^g the fruit it gives the most pleasant odor.^h

1 32 And after (experiencing) this fragrant odor,^a while looking toward the northeast over the mountains, I saw seven mountains full of excellent nard, fragrant trees, 2 cinnamon trees, and pepper. •From there I went over the summits of the mountains,^b far toward the east of the earth.^c I (then) passed over the Erythraean Sea and went far 3 from it, and passed over the head of angel^d Zutu'el.^e •And I came to the garden of righteousness^f and saw beyond those trees many (other)^g large (ones) growing there^h—their fragrance sweet, large ones,ⁱ with much elegance, and glorious. And the tree of 4 wisdom, of which one eats^j and knows great wisdom, (was among them). •It looked like^k the colors^l of the carob tree, its fruit like very beautiful grape clusters, and the 5 fragrance of this tree travels and reaches^m afar.ⁿ •And I said,^o “This tree is beautiful^p 6 and its appearance beautiful^q and pleasant!” •Then the holy angel Raphael, who was with me, responded to me and said,^r “This very thing is the tree of wisdom from which your old father and aged mother, they who are your precursors,^s ate and came to know wisdom; and (consequently) their eyes were opened and they realized^t that they were naked and (so) they were expelled from the garden.”

1 33 And from there I went to the extreme ends of the earth and saw there huge beasts, each different from the other—and different birds (also) differing from one another 2 in appearance, beauty, and voice. And to the east of those beasts, I saw the ultimate ends of the earth which rests on the heaven. •And the gates of heaven were open, and 3 I saw how the stars of heaven come out; •and I counted the gates out of which they exit and wrote down all their exits for each one: according to their numbers,^a their

30 a. The Eth. seems corrupt. Cf. G: “Beyond these, I went afar to the east.”

b. G omits “that is endless.”

c. Lit. “trees.” G: “there was a tree.”

d. G^a: “color.”

e. Lit. “wings.”

31 a. G: “tree groves.”

b. Meaning uncertain, perhaps “sarara” derives from Heb. šārī, a type of balsam.

c. G^a adds “to the east of the ends of the earth.”

d. Charles suggests that these aloe trees were eaglewood. G^a omits “in it there were aloe trees.”

e. Lit. “all those trees.”

f. Or “hard almond trees.” Charles amends this sentence to read “all the trees were full of stacte, being like almond-trees.” Cf. EC, p. 70, nn. 37–39.

g. Lit. “they pick.”

h. Lit. “it pleases above all odors.” Charles amends this sentence to read “. . . when one burnt it, it smelt sweeter than any fragrant odor.” Cf. EC, p. 71, nn. 15, 40.

32 a. Lit. “after this.” B C: “after these odors.”

G^a omits this phrase.

b. G^a adds “all.”

c. B and C omit “of the earth.” A agrees with G.

d. G^a omits “angel.”

e. B C: Zutu'el.

f. In A 1En 32:3–34:2 (i.e. A, fols. 80v[b]–81r[a]) were written by a different scribe.

g. B C: “many trees.”

h. G omits “growing there,” and adds “two trees . . .”

i. All MSS add “large ones.”

j. Lit. “they eat.”

k. G^a: “That tree is in height like the fir and its leaves are . . .”

l. So A. G: to dendra, “leaves.” Other Eth. MSS do not make sense.

m. B and C omit “reaches.”

n. Lit. “long way.”

o. A wrongly has wā'ey, “burning,” instead of 'ebē, “I said.”

p. G: “How beautiful is the tree . . .”

q. G omits “beautiful.”

r. G omits “and said.”

s. Lit. “those who preceded you.”

t. Lit. “they knew.”

33 a. So B and C. A could possibly be translated: “according to their keepers.”

names, their ranks, their seats, their periods, their months, as Uriel, the holy angel who was with me, showed me. •He showed me all things and wrote them down for me^b—also in addition he wrote down their names, their laws,^c and their companies.

Journey to the north

1 34 From there I went in the direction of the north, to the extreme ends of the earth, and there at the extreme end of the whole world I saw a great and glorious seat.^a
 2 There (also) I saw three open gates of heaven; when it blows cold, hail, frost, snow,^b dew, and rain, through each one of the (gates) the winds proceed in the northwesterly
 3 direction. •Through one gate they blow good things; but when they blow with force through the two (other) gates, they blow violence and sorrow upon the earth.

Journey to the west

1 35 And from there I went in the direction of the west to the extreme ends of the earth, and saw there three open gates of heaven, (just) like the one that I saw in the east in respect to the number of its exits.^a

Journey to the south

1 36 And from there I went in the direction of the south to the extreme ends of the earth, and saw there three open gates of the heaven from where^a the south wind, dew,
 2 rain, and wind come forth. •From there I went in the direction of the extreme ends of the heaven^b and saw there open gates of heaven, with small gates above them, in 3 the direction of the east. •Through one^c of these small gates pass the stars of heaven
 4 and travel westward on the path which is shown to them. •And when I saw (this) I blessed—and I shall always^d bless—the Lord of Glory, who performed great and blessed miracles in order that he may manifest his great deeds to his angels, the winds,^e and to the people so that they might praise the effect^f of all his creation^g—so that they might see the effect^h of his power and praise him in respect to the great work of his hands and bless him forever.

Book II (37–71) The Book of the Similitudes

Introduction

1 37 Book two:^a The vision which Enoch^b saw the second time—the vision of wisdom which Enoch, son of Jared,^c son of Mahalalel,^d son of Kenan,^e son of Enosh,^f son of Seth, son of Adam, saw: •This is the beginning of the words of wisdom which I commenced^g to propound, saying to those who dwell in the earth, “Listen, you first

b. So B and C. A wrongly reads “for him.”
 c. Lit. “commandments.”

e. B: “to the souls of men.” C: “to the souls and to people.”

34 a. B reads “miracle.” C: “counsel,” “device.”
 b. So B and C. A reads “ash,” “white dust.”

f. Lit. “the action.”
 g. B C: “his deeds and his creation.”
 h. Lit. “the action.”

35 a. B and C add “and gates.”

37 a. This division, which is indicated in A by an Eth. number, is missing in B and C, and other Eth. MSS.

36 a. Or “from there, the south.” The word ’azēb can mean “south,” “southwest.” Charles suggests “moisture” instead of the word “south.” Cf. EC, p. 75, n. 25.

b. Lit. “he.”
 c. Or Eth. Yared.
 d. A: Malkel. B C: Malal’el.

b. B C: “in the direction of the east to the extreme ends of the heaven.”

e. Or Eth. Qaynan.
 f. Eth. Henos, erroneously written Henok (Enoch) in A.

c. So B. C emended by Charles reads “through each one . . .” A is defective.

g. Lit. “I took up.”

d. Lit. “all times.”

ones, and look, you last ones, the words of the Holy One, which I teach^h before the 3 Lord of the Spirits. •It is good to declare these words to those of former times, but 4 one should not withholdⁱ the beginning of wisdom from those of latter days.^j •Until now such wisdom, which I have received as I recited (it) in accordance with the will of the Lord of the Spirits, had not been bestowed upon me before the face of the 5 Lord of the Spirits. From him, the lot of eternal life has been given to me. •Three things^k were imparted to me^l; and I began^l to recount them to those who dwell upon the earth.

Coming judgment of the wicked

1 38 The first thing:

When the congregation of the righteous shall appear, sinners shall be judged for their sins,^a they shall be driven from the face of the earth, 2 and when the Righteous One shall appear before the face of the righteous, those elect ones, their deeds are hung upon the Lord of the Spirits, he shall reveal light to the righteous and the elect who dwell upon the earth,
 where will the dwelling of the sinners be,
 and where the resting place of those who denied the name^b of the Lord of the Spirits?
 It would have been better for them not to have been born.
 3 When the secrets of the Righteous One^c are revealed, he shall judge the sinners;^d and the wicked ones will be driven from the presence of the righteous and the elect,
 4 and from that time, those who possess the earth will neither be rulers nor princes,
 they shall not be able to behold the faces of the holy ones, for the light of the Lord of the Spirits has shined^e upon the face of the holy, the righteous, and the elect.
 5 At that moment, kings and rulers shall perish, they shall be delivered into the hands of the righteous and holy ones, 6 and from thenceforth no one shall be able to induce the Lord of the Spirits to show them mercy,
 for their life is annihilated.

The home of the righteous

1 39 And it shall come to pass in those days that the children of the elect and the holy ones [will descend] from the high heaven and their seed will become one with 2 the children of the people. •And in those days Enoch received the books of zeal and wrath as well as the books of haste and whirlwind.^a The Lord of the Spirits says that mercy shall not be upon them.

3 In those days, whirlwinds carried me off from the earth, and set me down into the ultimate ends of the heavens.
 4 There I saw other^b dwelling places of the holy ones^c and their resting places too.^d

h. Eth. 'a'mer, which is found in A, is generally understood to mean "I know," "I understand," but among Ethiopian grammarians it is also used, in its correct grammatical form, to mean "I teach," "I cause to understand." B and C read "I speak."

i. Lit. "prevent."

j. This sentence is an approximation of the Eth., which is unclear.

k. So Ethiopian commentators.

l. Lit. "I took up."

38 a. A: "and their sins."

b. B and C omit "name."

c. B C: "secrets of the righteous."

d. B C: "sinners shall be judged."

e. Lit. "is seen."

39 a. B C: "disturbance."

b. C: "another vision."

c. B reads "with the angels" instead of "the holy ones."

d. B adds "of the holy ones." C adds "of the righteous ones."

- 5 So there my eyes saw their dwelling places with the holy angels,^e and their resting places with the holy ones,^f and they interceded and petitioned and prayed on behalf of the children of the people,
and righteousness flowed before them like water,
and mercy like dew upon the earth,
and thus it is in their midst forever and ever.
- 6 And in those days^g my eyes saw the Elect One of righteousness and of faith,
and righteousness shall prevail in his days, and the righteous and elect ones shall be without number before him forever and ever.
- 7 And I saw a dwelling place^h underneath the wings of the Lord of the Spirits;
and all the righteous and the elect before him shall be as intenseⁱ as the light of fire.
Their mouth shall be full of blessing;
and their lips will praise the name of the Lord of the Spirits,
and righteousness before him will have no end;
and uprightness before him will not cease.^j
- 8 There (underneath his wings) I wanted to dwell;
and my soul desired that dwelling place.
Already^k my portion is there;
for thus has it been reserved for me^l before the Lord of the Spirits.
- 9 In those days, I praised and prayed to^m the name of the Lord of the Spirits with blessings and praises, for he had strengthened me by blessings and praises in 10 accordance with the will of the Lord of the Spirits. •And I gazed at that placeⁿ (under his wings), and I blessed and praised, saying, "Blessed is he, and may he be blessed, 11 from the beginning and forever more. •There is no such thing as non-existence^o before him. (Even) before the world was created, he knows what is forever and what will 12 be from generation to generation. •Those who do not slumber but stand before your glory, did bless^p you. They shall bless, praise, and extol (you), saying, 'Holy, Holy, 13 Holy, Lord of the Spirits; the spirits fill the earth.' "^q •And at that place (under his wings) my eyes saw others who stood^r before him sleepless^s (and) blessed (him), 14 saying, •"Blessed are you and blessed is the name of the Lord of the Spirits' forever and ever." And my face was changed on account of the fact that I could not withstand the sight.^u

The four angels

- 1 40 And after that, I saw a hundred thousand times a hundred thousand, ten million times ten million, an innumerable and uncountable^a (multitude) who stand before the 2 glory^b of the Lord of the Spirits. •I saw them standing^c—on the four wings of the Lord of the Spirits—and saw four other faces among those who do not slumber,^d and I came to know their names, which^e the angel who came with me revealed^f to me;
- e. C: "righteous angels."
f. B omits the last two lines.
g. C: "in that place."
h. B: "their dwelling place." C: "his dwelling place."
i. B C: "shall be beautiful."
j. Lit. "will have no end."
k. Lit. "Before." "Previously," "Of old."
l. Lit. "confirmed [made firm] . . . on my behalf."
m. B C: "I extolled."
n. Lit. "my eyes kept looking," "my eyes lingered contemplating, seeing." The passage could also be translated: "I watched and watched."
o. Lit. "ending," "ceasing."
p. B C: "will bless."
q. Because case endings are not indicated, the passage could also be translated "the earth is full of the spirits." B and C read "he will fill the earth with spirits."
r. Lit. "who stand."
s. Lit. "they do not slumber."
t. B C: "Lord."
u. Lit. "on account of the fact that I hated to look."
40 a. Lit. "they have no number and count."
b. C omits "glory."
c. B C: "I saw them."
d. B: "among those who stand." C: "four faces different from those who do not slumber."
e. Lit. "which names."
f. Lit. "made known."

3 and he (also) showed me all the hidden things. •(Then) I heard the voices of those 4 four faces while they were saying praises before the Lord of Glory. •The first voice
 5 was blessing the name of the Lord of the Spirits. •The second voice I heard blessing 6 the Elect One and the elect ones who are clinging onto the Lord of the Spirits. •And 7 the third voice I heard interceding and praying on behalf of those who dwell upon
 8 the earth and supplicating in the name of the Lord of the Spirits. •And the fourth 9 voice I heard expelling the demons^g and forbidding them from coming to the Lord
 10 of the Spirits in order to accuse those who dwell upon the earth. •And after that, I asked the angel of peace, who was going with me and showed me everything that was hidden, “Who are these four faces which I have seen and whose voices I have heard and written down?” •And he said to me, “The first one is the merciful and forbearing^h Michael; the second one, who is set over all disease and every wound of the children of the people, is Raphael; the third, who is set over all exercise of strength, is Gabriel; and the fourth, who is set over all actions of repentance unto the hope of those who would inherit eternal life, is Phanuel by name.” •(So) these are his four angels: theyⁱ are of the Lord of the Spirits, and the four voices which I heard in those days.

The Lord of the Spirits, and the four voices which I heard in those days.

1 41 And after that, I saw all the secrets in heaven, and how a kingdom breaks up, 2 and how the actions of the people are weighed in the balance. •And there I saw the dwelling place of the sinners^a and the company of the holy ones;^b and my eyes saw the sinners^c—those who deny the name of the Lord of the Spirits—being expelled from there and being dragged off; and they could not stand still because of the plague which proceeds forth from the Lord of the Spirits.

Cosmic secrets

3 And there my eyes saw the secrets of lightning and thunder, and the mysteries of the winds, how they are distributed in order to blow upon the earth, and the secrets of the clouds and the dew I saw there from where they proceed in that place and (how) 4 from there they satiate the dust of the earth. •At that place, I (also) saw sealed storerooms from which the winds of the storerooms of hail and the winds of the storerooms of mist^d are distributed; and these clouds hover over the earth from the 5 beginning of the world. •And I saw the storerooms of the sun and the moon, from what place they come out and to which place they return, and their glorious return—how in their travel one festival^e is celebrated more than the other. They do not depart from their orbit, neither increase nor decrease it;^f but they keep faith one with another:
 6 in accordance with an oath they set^g and they rise.^h •From the first is the sun;ⁱ and it executes its course in accordance with the commandment of the Lord of the Spirits—7 his name shall persist forever and ever. •After that^j is found (both) the hidden and the visible path of the moon; and the path of its orbit it completes by day and by night at that place. And the two^k will gaze directly into^l the glory of the Lord of the Spirits.^m They give thanks, they praise, and they do not economize (on energy), for their very essenceⁿ generates new power.^o

8 Surely the many changes of the sun have (both) a blessing and a curse, and the course of the moon's path is light to the righteous (on the one hand) and darkness to the sinners (on the other),

g. Lit. “the Sayans.”

h. Lit. “of distant wrath.”

i. B and C omit “they.”

h. Lit. “come out.” B and C omit “they set and they rise.”

i. B C: “the sun goes out first.”

j. C adds: “I saw.”

k. Lit. “the one with the other.”

l. Lit. “before.”

m. C omits “the glory of the Lord.” B omits “the glory.”

n. Lit. k'unatomu, “their being,” “nature,” “condition,” “creation.” Cf. also 43:2 for this reading. B C: ak'otetomu, “their thanksgiving.”

o. Lit. “is rest to them.”

41 a. B: “of the righteous.” C: “of the elect.”

b. B C: “the dwelling place of the holy ones.”

c. B C: “all the sinners.”

d. B C: “the storerooms of hail and winds and the storerooms of mist and clouds.”

e. B and C read instead be'ul, “rich,” “wealthy.”

f. Lit. “their orbit.”

g. Lit. “stay over(night).”

in the name of the Lord of the Spirits, who created the distinction^p between light and darkness and separated the spirits of the people, and strengthened the spirits of the righteous in the name of his righteousness.

- 9 Surely, neither an angel nor Satan^q has the power to hinder; for there is a judge to all of them,^r
he will glance,^s and all of them are before him, he is the judge.^t

The abode of Wisdom and Iniquity

- 1 42 Wisdom could not find a place in which she could dwell;
but a place was found (for her) in the heavens.
2 Then Wisdom went out to dwell with the children of the people,
but she found no dwelling place.
(So) Wisdom returned to her place
and she settled permanently^a among the angels.
3 Then Iniquity went out of her rooms,
and found whom she did not expect.
And she dwelt with them,
like rain in a desert,
like dew on a thirsty land.

More secrets of the cosmos

- 1 43 And I saw other lightnings and the stars of heaven. And I saw how he called 2 them^a each by their (respective) names, and they obeyed him. •And I saw the impartial scales^b for the purpose of balancing their lights at their widest areas. And their natures^c are as follows: Their revolutions produce lightning; and in number they^d are (as many 3 as) the angels; they keep their faith each one according to their names.^e •And I asked the angel who was going with me and who had shown me the secret things, “What 4 are these things?” •And he said to me, “The Lord of the Spirits has shown you the prototype^f of each one of them: These are the names of the holy ones who dwell upon the earth and believe^g in the name^h of the Lord of the Spirits forever and ever.”

- 1 44 And I saw another thing regarding lightning: how some stars arise and become lightning and cannot dwell with the rest.^a Lot of unbelievers: new heaven and new earth

- 1 45 This is the second parable concerning those who deny the name of the Lord of the Spirits^a and the congregation of the holy ones.^b 2 Neither will they ascend into heaven,^c nor will they reach the ground;
such will be the lot of the sinners,
who will deny^d the name of the Lord of the Spirits,

p. Lit. “the median.”

q. B C: “no authority or power.”

r. B: “For he will see a judge for them.” C: “For he will appoint a judge for them.”

s. Cf. n. r.

t. Lit. “He judges.”

42 a. Lit. “became firm [settled],” “established (herself),” “stayed put.” B C: “she sat.”

43 a. B and C add “all of them.”

b. Or “the balance of righteousness.”

c. B C: “the day of their being [or “appearance”].”

d. Lit. “their revolutions.”

e. B C: “they keep their faith with each other.”

f. Or “the significance.” Lit. “the parable,” “example,” “similitude.”

g. A wrongly: “do not believe.”

h. So B and C. A omits “the name.”

44 a. Lit. “dwell [hadira] with them.” B: “leave [hadiga] with them.” C: “leave their prototypes.”

45 a. B C: “the name of the dwelling of the Lord.”
b. B and C omit “the congregation of the holy ones.”

c. So B and C. A is corrupt.

d. C: “have denied.”

those who in this manner will be preserved for the day of burden and tribulation.

- 3 On that day, my Elect One shall sit on the seat of glory and make a selection^e of their deeds, their resting places will be without number, their souls^f shall be firm within them when they see my Elect One,^g those^h who have appealed to my gloriousⁱ name.
- 4 On that day, I shall cause my Elect One^j to dwell among them, I shall transform heaven and make it^k a blessing of light forever.
- 5 I shall (also) transform the earth and make it^l a blessing, and cause my Elect One^m to dwell in her. Then those who have committed sin and crime shall not set foot in her.
- 6 For in peace I have looked (with favor) upon my righteous ones and given them mercy, and have caused them to dwell before me. But sinners have come before me so that by judgment I shall destroy them from before the face of the earth.

Jn 14:23

- 1 46 At that place, I saw the One to whom belongs the time before time.^a And his head was white like wool, and there was with him another individual, whose face was like that of a human being.^b His countenance was full of grace like that of one among the 2 holy angels. •And I asked the one—from among the angels—who was going with me, and who had revealed to me all the secrets regarding the One who was born of human beings,^c “Who is this, and from whence is he who is going as the prototype of the 3 Before-Time?”^d •And he answered me and said to me, “This is the Son of Man,^e to whom belongs righteousness, and with whom righteousness dwells. And he will open^f all the hidden storerooms; for the Lord of the Spirits has chosen^g him, and he is 4 destined to be victorious before the Lord of the Spirits in eternal^h uprightness. •This Son of Man whom youⁱ have seen is the One who would remove^j the kings and the mighty ones from their comfortable seats^k and the strong ones from their thrones. He 5 shall loosen the reins of the strong and crush^l the teeth of the sinners. •He shall depose^m the kings from their thrones and kingdoms. Forⁿ they do not extol and glorify him, 6 and neither do they obey him, the source of their kingship.^o •The faces of the strong will be slapped and be filled with shame and gloom. Their dwelling places and their beds will be worms.^p They shall have no hope to rise from their beds, for they do not 7 extol the name of the Lord of the Spirits. •And they have become the judges^q of the

e. Charles thinks that “he will make a selection” is a corruption and suggests “he will try” instead. See EC, p. 85, n. 21.

f. B: “their spirits.”

g. Text: “ones.”

h. So B and C. A reads la'ela, “over,” “upon,” instead of la'ela.

i. B adds “holy.”

j. Text: “ones.”

k. Lit. “her.”

l. Lit. “her.”

m. Text: “ones.”

46 a. Lit. “Head of days,” “Chief of days,” “he who precedes time,” “the Beginning of days,” “the First of days,” “he who is of primordial days,” “the Antecedent of time.”

b. Lit. “whose face was like the appearance of a person.”

c. Eth. zatawalda 'emsabe'. B and C read zeku walda sabe', “that Son of Man [or “human beings”].”

d. Following B and C, we should translate this passage: “. . . from where could he be, and for what reason does he go with him who precedes time?” A could also be adjusted to give the same reading with the addition of ment, “what”—which it omits. However, I have here translated the passage as it stands, with a minimum adjustment.

e. “Man” in this context means “people” or “human beings.” Though this passage could be rendered “Son of human beings,” to avoid unnecessary confusion, I have used “Son of Man,” which has become an accepted and standard expression among scholars for a long time.

f. So B and C. A: “it will be open.”

g. So B and C. A: “has dwelled.”

h. So B and C. A: “above.”

i. A: “I.”

j. Lit. “lift them up” or “unseat.”

k. Lit. “beds.” Cf. “couches,” “reclining chairs,” “sofas.”

l. Lit. “fell.”

m. Lit. “push off.”

n. So B and C.

o. Lit. “from where the kingdom was bestowed upon them.”

p. B C: “Their dwelling places will be darkness, and their beds will be worms.”

q. Lit. “those who judge.” Also cf. EC, p. 87, n. 24.

stars of heaven; they raise their hands (to reach) the Most High^r while walking upon the earth and dwelling in her. They manifest all their deeds in oppression; all their deeds are oppression.^s Their power (depends) upon their wealth. And their devotion is to the gods which they have fashioned with their own hands. But they deny the name of the Lord of the Spirits. • Yet they like to congregate in his houses and (with) the faithful ones who cling to the Lord of the Spirits.^t

Prayer of the righteous

1 47 “In those days, the prayers of the righteous ascended into heaven, and the blood
2 of the righteous from the earth before the Lord of the Spirits. • There shall be days^a when all^b the holy ones who dwell in the heavens above shall dwell (together).^c And with one voice, they shall supplicate and pray—glorifying, praising, and blessing the name of the Lord of the Spirits—on behalf of the blood of the righteous ones which has been shed. Their prayers^d shall not stop from exhaustion before the Lord of the Spirits—neither will they relax^e forever—(until)^f judgment is executed for them.”
3 In those days, I saw him—the Antecedent of Time, while he was sitting upon the throne of his glory, and the books of the living ones were open before him. And all 4 his power in heaven above and his escorts^g stood before him. • The hearts of the holy ones are filled with joy, because the number of the righteous has been offered, the prayers of the righteous ones have been heard, and the blood of the righteous has been admitted before the Lord of the Spirits.

The Son of Man: the Antecedent of Time: his judgment

1 48 Furthermore, in that place I saw the fountain of righteousness, which does not become depleted and is surrounded completely by numerous fountains of wisdom. All the thirsty ones drink (of the water) and become filled with wisdom. (Then) their 2 dwelling places become with the holy, righteous, and elect ones. • At that hour, that Son^a of Man was given a name,^b in the presence of the Lord of the Spirits, the Before-3 Time;^c • even before the creation of the sun and the moon,^d before the creation of the 4 stars, he was given a name in the presence of the Lord of the Spirits. • He will become a staff for the righteous ones in order that they may lean on him and not fall. He is the light of the gentiles and he will become the hope of those who are sick in their 5 hearts. • All those who dwell upon the earth shall fall and worship before him; they 6 shall glorify, bless, and sing the name^e of the Lord of the Spirits. • For this purpose he became the Chosen One; he was concealed in the presence of (the Lord of the 7 Spirits)^f prior to the creation of the world, and for eternity. • And he has revealed the wisdom of the Lord of the Spirits to the righteous and the holy ones, for he has preserved the portion of the righteous because they have hated and despised this world of oppression (together with)^g all its ways of life^h and its habitsⁱ in the name of the Lord of the Spirits; and because they will be saved in his name and it is his good 8 pleasure that they have life. • In those days,^j the kings of the earth and the mighty

Odes Sol
6:11

Odes Sol
36:3

Lk 2:32

r. Lit. “into the Most High.”

s. So A and B. C omits “all their deeds are oppression.”

t. B and C read, possibly more correctly, “they persecute the houses of his congregations and the faithful who cling to the Lord of the Spirits.”

47 a. B C: “In those days.”

b. B and C omit “all.”

c. B and C, which read “unite,” “be companions,” “co-operate,” may be more accurate.

d. B and C add “of the righteous ones.”

e. Lit. “there will not be patience to them.”

f. Lit. “in order that,” “so that,” “to the end that.”

g. Lit. “which surround him.”

48 a. A erroneously: “sons.”

b. Lit. “named . . . by the name.”

c. Lit. “before the beginning [or “head”] of days.”

d. Eth. ta’amer, “the wondrous thing”—but to be understood in Ge’ez (Eth.) as “the moon” (cf. 2Chr 33:3; Jer 10:2; Jub 4:17).

e. B: “they shall glorify . . . to him, to the name.”

C omits “the name.”

f. Lit. “he concealed (him) in his (own) presence.”

g. Lit. “and hated.”

h. Lit. “its deeds.”

i. Lit. “its ways.”

j. C reads erroneously “In vain days.”

landowners^k shall be humiliated^l on account of the deeds of their hands. Therefore, on the day of their misery^m and weariness, they will not be able to save themselves. 9. I shall deliver them into the hands of my elect ones like grass in the fire and like lead in the water, so they shall burn before the face of the holy onesⁿ and sink before their^o 10 sight,^p and no place will be found for them. • On the day of their weariness, there shall be an obstacle^q on the earth and they shall fall on their faces; and they shall not rise up (again), nor anyone (be found) who will take them with his hands and raise them up. For they have denied the Lord of the Spirits and his Messiah. Blessed be the name of the Lord of the Spirits!

Wisdom and power of the Elect One

1 49 So^a wisdom flows^b like water and glory is measureless before him forever and 2 ever. • For his might is in all the mysteries of righteousness,^c and oppression will vanish^d like a shadow having no foundation. The Elect One^e stands before the Lord 3 of the Spirits; his glory is forever and ever and his power is unto all generations. • In him dwells the spirit of wisdom, the spirit which gives thoughtfulness, the spirit of knowledge and strength, and the spirit of those who have fallen asleep in righteousness. 4 He shall judge the secret things.^f And no one will be able to utter vain words^g in his presence. For he is the Elect One before the Lord of the Spirits according to his good pleasure.

His mercy and his judgment

1 50 In those days, there will be a change for the holy and the righteous ones and the light of days shall rest upon them; and glory and honor shall be given back to the holy 2 ones, on the day of weariness. • He heaped^a evil upon the sinners; but the righteous ones shall be victorious in the name of the Lord of the Spirits. He will cause the 3 others to see this so that they may repent and forsake the deeds of their hands. • There shall not be honor unto them in the name of the Lord of the Spirits. But through his name they shall be saved, and the Lord of the Spirits shall have mercy upon them, 4 for his mercy is considerable. • He is righteous^b in his judgment and in the glory that is before him.^c Oppression cannot survive his judgment; and the unrepentant in his 5 presence shall perish. • The Lord of the Spirits has said that from henceforth he will not have mercy on them.

Resurrection of the dead

1 51 In those days, Sheol will return all the deposits which she had received^a and hell 2 will give back all that which it owes. • And he shall choose the righteous and the holy ones from among (the risen dead),^b for the day when they shall be selected^c and saved^d 3 has arrived.^e • In those days, (the Elect One)^f shall sit on my throne, and from the

k. Lit. "the strong ones by whom the land is possessed."

l. Lit. "be humble in countenance."

m. A wrongly reads şedqomu, "their righteousness," instead of sā'qomu, "their misery."

n. B: "righteous ones."

o. Lit. "the holy ones."

p. Lit. "their face." C reads "Like grass in the fire, so they shall burn before the face of the holy ones; and like lead in the water, they shall sink before the face of the righteous ones."

q. B C: "a rest."

49 a. Lit. "because."

b. B: "it is poured out." C: "poured out."

c. B C: "For he is mighty in all the secrets of righteousness."

d. Lit. "pass."

e. Lit. "Because the Elect One."

f. So B and C. A reads "that which has the secret things."

g. So B and C. A reads: bakama, "so that," "in order that," "in accordance with," "as," instead of bak, "vain," "useless," "stale."

50 a. B C: "which has been heaped." Cf. EC, p. 93, n. 6.

b. A wrongly: "righteousness."

c. B C: "and before his glory."

51 a. B C: "... the earth will bring together all her deposits and Sheol will bring together all her deposits which she has received."

b. Lit. "from among them."

c. B and C omit "they shall be selected."

d. Lit. "they shall be saved and selected."

e. Lit. "has approached." It is possible to translate the passage: "for the day when they shall be saved has arrived, they shall be elected."

f. So B and C. A omits "the Elect One."

conscience of his mouth shall come out all the secrets of wisdom, for the Lord of the 4 Spirits has given them to him and glorified him. • In those days, mountains shall dance like rams; and the hills shall leap like kids^e satiated with milk. And the faces of all the angels in heaven shall glow with joy, because on that day the Elect One has arisen. Ps 114:4 5 And the earth shall rejoice; and the righteous ones shall dwell upon her and the elect ones shall walk upon her.

The metal mountains

1 52 After those days, in the same place where I had seen all the secret visions, having been carried off in a wind vehicle^a and taken to the west, my eyes saw there all the 2 secret things of heaven and the future things.^b • There were (there) a mountain of iron, a mountain of copper, a mountain of silver, a mountain of gold, a mountain of colored 3 metal,^c and a mountain of lead. • And I asked the angel who was going with me,
 4 saying, “What are these things which I have seen in secret?”^d • And he said to me,
 “All these things which you have seen happen by^e the authority of his Messiah so that 5 he may give orders and be praised^f upon the earth.” • Then this angel of peace answered, saying to me, “Wait a little, and all secret things which encircle the Lord 6 of the Spirits will be revealed unto you. • As for these mountains which you have seen with your own eyes^g—the mountain of iron, the mountain of copper, the mountain of silver, the mountain of gold, the mountain of colored metal, and the mountain of lead—all of them, in the presence of the Elect One, will become like a honeycomb (that melts) before fire, like water that gushes down^h from the top of such mountains,ⁱ 7 and become helpless^j by^k his feet. • It shall happen in those days that no one^l shall be 8 saved either by gold or by silver; and no one shall be able to escape. • There shall be no iron for war, nor shall anyone wear a breastplate. Neither bronze^m nor tinⁿ shall be to any avail or be of any value;^o and there will be no need of lead whatsoever.
 9 All these substances will be removed^p and destroyed from the surface of the earth when the Elect One shall appear before the face of the Lord of the Spirits.”

The scene of judgment

1 53 My eyes saw there a deep valley with a wide mouth.^a And all those who dwell upon the earth, the sea, and the islands shall bring to it^b gifts, presents, and tributes;
 2 yet this deep valley shall not become full. • They shall fulfill the criminal deeds of their hands and eat all the produce of crime which the sinners toil for. Sinners shall be destroyed from before the face of the Lord of the Spirits—they shall perish eternally, 3 standing before the face of his earth. • So I saw all the angels of plague co-operating 4 and preparing all the chains^c of Satan. • And I asked the angel of peace, who was 5 going with me, “For whom are they preparing these chains?”^d • And he answered me, saying, “They are preparing^e these for the kings and the potentates of this earth in 6 order that they may be destroyed thereby. • After this, the Righteous^f and Elect One

g. Or “lambs.”

52 a. Eth. mank^work^wor. So also Charles's q. Charles's choice of the most common MSS reading, nak^work^wara nafās, “wind balls” (translated as “whirlwind” by him), instead of that of q, has misled some scholars to think erroneously that the expression “chariot of wind” mentioned in Mani Codex is missing from 1En, and that the Apocalypse of Enoch to which the Codex refers is not the same work as our 1En. (In EMML 2080 there is an Amharic marginal note translating mank^work^wor as saragalā, a nonambiguous word meaning “chariot.”)

b. Lit. “that which is to become.”

c. Or “mixed metal,” “purple metal.”

d. Or “What are these secret things which I have seen?”

e. B C: “to.”

f. Or “be given a gift.” B C: “be powerful.”

g. B: “which you saw.” C: “which your eyes have seen.”

h. Lit. “descends.”

i. B and C read “from above it upon these mountains.”

j. Lit. “tired,” “weak,” “powerless.”

k. Lit. “before.”

l. Lit. “they.”

m. Or “brass.”

n. Or “soldier.”

o. Lit. “will not be counted.”

p. Lit. “denied,” “turned away,” “abandoned.”

53 a. C: “a valley with a wide and deep mouth.”

b. I.e. “to the valley.”

c. A erroneously: “victuals.” So C.

d. C: “victuals.”

e. B C: “and he said to me.”

f. C omits “they are preparing.”

g. A erroneously: “righteousness.”

will reveal the house of his congregation. From that time, they shall not be hindered 7 in the name of the Lord of the Spirits. •And these mountains^b shall become (flat) like earth in the presence of his righteousness, and the hills shall become like a fountain of water. And the righteous ones shall have rest from the oppression of sinners.”

1 54 Then I looked and turned to another face of the earth and saw there a valley, deep
2 and burning with fire. •And they were bringing kings and potentates and were throwing 3 them into this deep valley. •And my eyes saw there their chains while they were 4 making them into iron fetters^a of immense^b weight. •And I asked the angel of peace, 5 who was going with me, saying, “For whom are these imprisonment chains^c being 6 prepared?” •And he said unto me, “These are being prepared for the armies of Azaz’el, in order that they may take them and cast them into the abyss of complete 7 condemnation, and as the Lord of the Spirits has commanded it, they shall cover their 8 jaws with rocky stones. •Then Michael, Raphael, Gabriel, and Phanuel themselves
9 shall seize them on that great day of judgment and cast them^d into the furnace (of fire)
10 that is burning that day, so that the Lord of the Spirits may take vengeance on them on account of their oppressive deeds which (they performed) as messengers of Satan, leading astray those who dwell upon the earth.”

The great judgment of the Flood^e

7 And in those days, the punishment of the Lord of the Spirits shall be carried out,^f and they shall open all the storerooms of water^g in the heavens above, in addition to^h 8 the fountains of water which are on earth.ⁱ •And all the waters shall be united with
(all) other waters.^j That which is from the heavens above is masculine water,^k (whereas) 9 that which is underneath the earth is feminine.^l •And they shall obliterate all those that dwell upon the earth as well as those that dwell underneath the ultimate ends of 10 heaven. •On account of the fact that they did not recognize^m their oppressive deeds which they carried out on the earth, they shall be destroyed by (the Flood).ⁿ

1 55 And after that the Antecedent of Time repented and said, “In vain have I destroyed
2 all those who dwell^o in the earth.” •And he swore by his own great name that from thenceforth he would not do (as he had done) to all who live upon the earth. (And he said), “I shall put up a sign in the heavens, and it shall become a (symbol) of faith between me and them forever, so long as heaven is above the earth, which is in accordance with my command.

Final judgment of Azaz’el and the fallen angels

3 “When I would give consent so that they should be seized by the hands of the angels on the day of tribulation^b and pain, already I would have caused my punishment and my wrath to abide upon them^c—my punishment and my wrath,”^d says the Lord 4 of the Spirits. •“Kings, potentates, dwellers upon the earth: You would have to see my Elect One, how he sits in the throne of glory and judges Azaz’el and all his company, and his army, in the name of the Lord of the Spirits!”

h. B C: “not these mountains.”

54 a. Lit. “imprisonment.”

b. Lit. “immeasurable.”

c. A actually reads “heads of chains.” But I have assumed that ’ar’esta, “heads of,” was erroneously substituted for ma’aserta, which we also find in the preceding verse. B reads only “chains.” C has ’esrat. Regarding the latter, see EC, p. 97, n. 44, and p. 98, n. 1.

d. So B and C. A omits “cast them.”

e. This is believed to be part of the lost BkNoah.

f. Lit. “come out.”

g. So B and C. A reads samāyāt, “heavens,” instead of māyāt.

h. Lit. “above,” “on top of,” “beyond.”

i. Lit. “which are below.” B C: “which are below the heavens.”

j. B adds: “of the heavens above.”

k. B and C omit “water.”

l. B and C add “water.”

m. B: “And because of this they recognized”; C: “On account of the fact that they recognized.” Cf. EC, p. 99, n. 12.

n. Lit. “by it.”

55 a. B C: “who live.”

b. A wrongly: “my tribulation.”

c. Lit. “before this, I will cause to abide upon them . . .” This passage is probably corrupt.

d. This repetition is omitted by C.

1 56 Then I saw there an army of the angels of punishment marching, holding^a nets^b
 2 of iron and bronze. • And I asked the angel of peace, who was walking with me, 3 saying to him, “To whom are they going, these who are holding (the nets)?”^c • And 4 he said to me, “(They are going) to their elect and beloved ones in order that they may be cast into the crevices of the abyss of the valley. • Then the valley shall be filled with their elect and beloved ones; and the epoch of their lives, the era of their glory,^d and the age of their leading (others) astray shall come to an end and shall not henceforth be reckoned.

The struggle of Israel with its enemies

5 “In those days, the angels will assemble and thrust^e themselves to the east at the Parthians and Medes. They will shake up the kings (so that) a spirit of unrest shall come upon them, and stir them up from their thrones; and they will break forth from 6 their beds like lions and like hungry hyenas among their own flocks. • And they will go up and trample upon the land of my elect ones,^f and the land of my^g elect ones will 7 be before them like a threshing floor or a highway. • But the city of my righteous ones will become an obstacle^h to their horses. And they shall begin to fight among themselves; and (by) their own right hands they shall prevail against themselves.ⁱ A man shall not recognize his brother, nor a son his mother,^j until there shall be a (significant) number of corpses from among them.^k Their punishment is (indeed) not 8 in vain. • In those days, Sheol shall open her mouth, and they shall be swallowed up into it and perish.^l (Thus) Sheol shall swallow up the sinners in the presence of the elect ones.”

1 57 And it happened afterward that I had another vision of a whole array of chariots loaded with people,^a and they were advancing^b upon the air from the east and from 2 the west until midday. • And the sound of their chariots (was clamorous);^c and when this commotion took place, the holy ones in heaven took notice of it and the pillars of the earth were shaken from their foundations;^d and the sound (of the noise) could be heard from the extreme end of the sky unto the extreme end of the earth^e in one 3 hour.^f • Then all shall fall down and worship the Lord of the Spirits. Here ends the second parable.^g

The eternal light of the righteous and elect ones

1 58 And I began to speak another^a parable concerning the righteous and the elect:
 2 Blessed are you, righteous and elect ones, for glorious is your portion. • The righteous
 3 ones shall be in the light of the sun and the elect ones in the light of eternal life which 4 has no end, and the days of the life of the holy ones cannot be numbered.^b • They shall seek light and find righteousness with the Lord of the Spirits. Peace (be) to the 5 righteous ones in the peace of the Eternal Lord!^c • After this, it shall be told to the holy ones in heaven that they should scrutinize the mysteries of righteousness, the gift^d of 56 a. So B and C. A omits “holding.”

 b. Or “traps.” C reads “plagues and nets of . . .”
 c. C: “To whom are these who are holding plagues going?”
 d. B and C omit “the era of their glory.”
 e. Lit. “cast down,” “throw.”
 f. B: “their elect ones.” C: “his elect ones.”
 g. B C: “his.”
 h. Or “stumbling block.”
 i. Lit. “their own right hand shall prevail against them.” Often in Eth. the singular form (as “hand” here) stands for the plural sense in the context.
 j. B and C add “and his father.”
 k. B C: “from their dying.”
 l. C: “and their destruction shall be left” (?).

57 a. B adds “upon them.” C adds “inside them.”
 b. Lit. “causing to come.” B C: “they are coming.”
 c. B C: “was heard.” Possibly A inadvertently omits “it was heard.”
 d. Lit. “shaken from their seats.”
 e. B: “from the extreme end of the earth unto the extreme end of heaven.” C: “from the extreme end of heaven to the extreme end.”
 f. B C: “in one day.”
 g. Lit. “and this is the end of the second parable.”

58 a. B C: “the third.”
 b. Lit. “number(ing) of days they do not have,” i.e. “they have countless days.”
 c. B: “by that which is with the Eternal Lord.”
 C: “in the name of the Eternal Lord.”
 d. Lit. “the portion,” “the lot,” “the part.”

6 faith. For the sun has shined upon the earth and darkness is over. • There shall be a light that has no end, and they shall not have to count days^f (anymore). For already^g darkness has been destroyed, light shall be permanent before the Lord of the Spirits, and the light of uprightness shall stand firm forever and ever before the Lord of the Spirits.

The lightnings and the thunder

1 59 In those days, my eyes saw the mysteries of lightnings, and of lights, and their judgments; they flash lights for a blessing or a curse, according to the will of the Lord
2 of the Spirits. • And there I (also) saw the secrets of the thunder and the secrets of (how when) it resounds^a in the heights of heaven its^b voice is heard (in)^c the earthly dwellings.^d He showed me whether the sound of the thunder is for peace and blessing
3 or for a curse, according to the word of the Lord of the Spirits. • After that, all the mysteries of the lights and lightnings were shown to me (that) they glow with light for blessing and for contentment.^e

Heavenly quake, the great monsters, and mysteries of nature^e

1 60 In the year five hundred, in the seventh month, on the fourteenth day of the month
2 in the life of Enoch;^b in the same parable (I saw)^c that the heaven of heavens was quaking and trembling with a mighty tremulous agitation, and the forces of the Most High and the angels, ten thousand times a million and ten million times ten million,
3 were agitated with great agitation. • And the Antecedent of Time was sitting on the throne of his glory surrounded by the angels and the righteous ones. • (Then) a great
4 trembling and fear seized me^d and my loins and kidneys lost control.^e So I fell upon my face. • Then Michael sent another angel from among the holy ones and he raised
5 me up. And when he had raised me up, my spirit returned; for (I had fainted) because I could not withstand the sight of these forces^f and (because) heaven has stirred up
6 and agitated itself. • Then Michael said unto me, "What have you seen that has so disturbed you? This day of mercy^g has lasted until today; and he has been merciful
7 and long-suffering^h toward those that dwell upon the earth. • And when this day arrives—and the power, the punishment, and the judgment, and the Lord of the Spirits has prepared for those who do notⁱ worship the righteous judgment, for those 8 who deny the righteous judgment, and for those who take his name in vain—it^j will become a day^k of covenant for the elect and inquisition^l for the sinners."
9 On that day, two monsters^m will beⁿ parted—one^o monster, a female named Leviathan, in order to dwell in the abyss of the ocean over the fountains of water; • and 10 (the other), a male called Behemoth, which holds his chest in an invisible desert whose name is Dundayin,^p east of the garden of Eden, wherein the elect and the righteous ones dwell,^q wherein my grandfather was taken, the seventh from Adam, the first man

e. Lit. "has passed."

f. Lit. "to the number(ing) of days they do not come."

g. Lit. "first."

59 a. A: "the secrets of it is resounding," is grammatically difficult. B and C, "and when it resounds," may be more accurate.

b. Lit. "their."

c. Text reads "and."

d. The reading is difficult. Charles suggests "judgments" instead of "dwellings," which he considers to be a corrupt reading of the Gk. Cf. EC, p. 103, n. 23.

e. Lit. "satiation."

60 a. This is believed to be part of the lost BkNoah.

b. Some think that Enoch is a later substitute for Noah. Cf. EC, p. 103, n. 39.

c. So B and C. A omits "I saw."

d. B C: "a great trembling took hold of me and fear seized me."

e. Lit. "were loosened." B C: "my loins were frightened ["were punished," "were bent"] and my kidneys were loosened."

f. Lit. "for I could not have endurance [patience] seeing this power."

g. B C: "his mercy."

h. Lit. "of distant wrath."

i. So C, possibly rightly. A omits the negation. Cf. EC, p. 104, n. 28.

j. Lit. "this day."

k. B and C omit "it will become a day . . ." A adds, and B and C read "this day is prepared."

l. So B and C. A wrongly reads tāhta, "under," "underneath," instead of hataā.

m. Or "whales." So B and C. A: "leopards."

n. C: "were."

o. B and C omit "one."

p. B: Dundayen. C: Dunudayen. Cf. "land of Nod," Gen 4:16. See also JE, vol. 8, p. 39.

q. A omits "dwell."

9 whom the Lord of the Spirits created.^r •Then I asked the second angel in order that he may show me (how) strong these monsters are,^s how they were separated on this day^t and were cast, the one into the abysses of the ocean, and the other into the dry
10 desert. •And he said to me, “You, son of man, according (to the degree) to which it will be permitted, you will know the hidden things.”^u
11 Then the other angel who was going with me was showing me the hidden things: what is first and last in heaven, above it, beneath the earth, in the depth, in the extreme
12 ends of heaven, the extent of heaven;^v •the storerooms of the winds,^w how the winds are divided, how they are weighed, how the winds divide^x and dissipate,^y the openings^z of the winds, each according to the strength of its wind; the power of the light of the moon and how it is the right amount,^{a2} the divisions of the stars, each according to 13 its nomenclature, and all the subdivisions; •the thunders according to the places where they fall, and the subdivisions of the lightnings^{b2} according to their flashing of light
14 and the velocity of the obedience of the whole array of them. •So the thunders have their (respective) moments of rest with patience; and (each thunder) is marked^{c2} by its (respective) sound. Neither the thunder nor the lightning becomes disjoined one
15 from the other; both go together in a single breeze and do not part. •For when the lightning flashes light,^{d2} the thunder utters^{e2} its sound; also, at that moment, the wind causes (the thunder) to come to rest and divides equally (the time) between each one of them. For the reservoir of their moments (of thunderings) is like the sand, (so) each one of them is restrained^{f2} with a bridle and turned back by the power of the wind and 16 driven in this manner all over the numerous corners of the earth.^{g2} •Now, the sea breeze is masculine and strong and according to the power of its strength it holds back (the air) and, in this manner, is driven and dispersed among all the mountains of the 17 world. •The frost-wind is its own guardian^{h2} and the hail-wind is a kind messenger.ⁱ²
18 The snow-wind has evacuated (its reservoir); it does not exist^{j2} because of its strength; there is in it only a breeze that ascends from (the reservoir) like smoke, and its name
19 is frost. •And the wind and the mist do not dwell together with them in their reservoirs. But (the mist) has its own reservoir, for its course is glorious. It has^{k2} light and darkness both in the rainy season and the dry season; and its reservoir is itself an 20 angel. •The dwelling place of the dew-breeze is in the extreme ends of heaven and is linked together with the reservoirs of the rain in (both) its courses of the rainy season and the dry season; also the clouds of (the dew) and the clouds of the mist are 21 associated feeding each other mutually.^{l2} •When the rain-wind^{m2} becomes activated in its reservoir, the angels come and open the reservoir and let it out; and when it is sprayed over the whole earth, it becomes united with the water which is upon the 22 earth; •and whensoever it unites with (other waters, it unites) with the water upon the earth which is for the use of those who dwell on the earth, for it is nourishment for the earth (sent) from the Most High in heaven. So in this manner there is a measuring 23 system for the rain given to the angels. •All these things I saw as far as the garden 24 of the righteous ones. •And the angel of peace who was with me said to me, “These

r. So B and C. A reads: “wherein man was returned [changed], I shall bring [’ab’e, possibly a corruption for sāb’e, “seventh”], from Adam before [qedmē-, possibly a corruption for qadāmi-, “the first”] the people which the Lord of the Spirits created.” This difficult reading seems to contain errors.

s. Lit. “the power of these monsters.”

t. B C: “in one day.”

u. Lit. “that which is hidden.” B C: “by here you want, you will know that which is hidden.”

v. B C: “the foundations of heaven.”

w. So B and C. A: “of the Lord.”

x. B and C omit “how the winds divide.”

y. Lit. “they are finished.” B: “how the fountains are counted.” C: “how the portals are counted.”

z. C: “the portals.”

a2. Lit. “the right [just] power.”

b2. So B and C. A reads wrongly bamesraq, “in the east,” instead of bamabraq.

c2. Lit. “given.”

d2. So B and C. A reads wrongly yesarq, “it will rise,” instead of yebaraq.

e2. Lit. “gives.”

f2. Lit. “caught,” “held.”

g2. Lit. “in accordance with the multiplicity of the districts of the earth.”

h2. Lit. “its own angel.”

i2. Or “angel.”

j2. B and C omit “it does not exist.”

k2. B and C omit “It has.”

l2. Lit. “one gives to the other.”

m2. So B and C. A: “the rain-soul.”

two monsters are prepared for the great dayⁿ² of the Lord (when) they shall turn into 25 food.ⁿ² • So that the punishment of the Lord of the Spirits should come down upon them in order that the punishment of the Lord of the Spirits should not be issued in vain but slay the children with their mothers, and the children with their fathers, when the punishment of the Lord of the Spirits comes down upon everyone.ⁿ² After that there shall be the judgment according to his mercy and his patience.”

2Bar 29:4;
 4Ezra
 6:49-52

The measurement of the garden of Eden and the judgment and praise of the Elect One

1 61 I saw in those days that long ropes were given to those angels; and hoisting up their own (respective) portions^a (of the ropes), they soared^b going in the direction of 2 the northeast. • And I asked the angel, saying unto him, “Why have those (angels) hoisted these ropes and gone off?” And he said unto me, “They have gone in order 3 to make measurements.” • The angel who was going with me also said unto me, “These (angels) are the ones who shall bring the measuring ropes of the righteous ones as well as their binding cords^c in order that they might lean upon the name of the Lord of the Spirits forever and ever. Then the elect ones shall begin to walk^d with the 4 elect ones. • These are the measurements which shall be given to faith and which shall 5 strengthen righteousness. • And these measurements shall reveal all the secrets of the depths of the earth, those who have been destroyed in the desert, those who have been devoured by the wild beasts,^e and those who have been eaten by the fish of the sea.
 So that they all^f return and find hope in^g the day of the Elect One. For there is no one 6 who perishes before the Lord of the Spirits, and no one who should perish.^h • And those who are in heaven above and all the powers received a command—one voice 7 and one light like fire. • And him, the First Word,ⁱ they shall bless, extol, and glorify with wisdom. They shall be wise in utterance in the spirit of life and in the Lord of 8 the Spirits. • He placed the Elect One on the throne of glory; and he shall judge all the works of the holy ones in heaven above, weighing in the balance their deeds.
 9 And when he shall lift up his countenance in order to judge the secret ways of theirs, by the word^j of the name of the Lord of the Spirits, and their conduct, by the method of the righteous judgment of the Lord of the Spirits, then they shall all speak with one voice, blessing, glorifying, extolling, sanctifying the name of the Lord of the Spirits.
 10 And he will summon all the forces of the heavens, and all the holy ones above, and the forces of the Lord—the cherubim, seraphim, ophanim, all the angels of governance, 11 the Elect One, and the other forces on earth (and) over the water. • On that day, they shall lift up in one voice, blessing, glorifying, and extolling in the spirit of faith, in the spirit of wisdom and patience, in the spirit of mercy, in the spirit of justice and peace, and in the spirit of generosity. They shall all say in one voice, ‘Blessed (is he) 12 and may the name of the Lord of the Spirits be blessed forever and evermore.’ • All the vigilant ones^k in heaven above shall bless him; all the holy ones who are in heaven shall bless him; all the elect ones who dwell in the garden of life (shall bless him); every spirit of light that is capable of blessing,^l glorifying, extolling, and sanctifying your blessed name (shall bless him); and all flesh shall glorify and bless your name

Heb 5:12

n2. B and C read la'ela 'ebay, “upon the greatness,” instead of la'elat 'abāy.

o2. Or “they shall be eaten,” “be food,” or “become food.”

p2. So A. Because of the problem of dittography, this passage is repeated and made senseless in both B and C, and all other MSS used by Charles.

61 a. B and C read “wings.”

b. Or “hovered,” “flew.” Cf. kanifa, “to fly.”

c. Lit. “the binding cords of the righteous ones . . . for the righteous ones.”

d. B C: “to dwell.”

e. So B and C. A reads mazāgebt, “storerooms,” “reservoirs,” instead of 'arāwit.

f. B and C omit “all.”

g. Lit. “lean upon, rely upon, depend on, support oneself by.”

h. Lit. “who is being destroyed.”

i. Or “the First Oracle.” According to A, these are preferable renditions. However, the passage could possibly also be translated “with the first word,” “with the first oracle,” or simply “the fundamental (first) principles of the oracle” or “the elementary principles of the oracle.” Cf. Heb 5:12.

j. So B and C. A: “and the word.”

k. Lit. “All those who do not sleep.”

l. So B and C. A has zatukala barakat, grammatically an impossible structure that can be adjusted to mean either “of the plant of blessing” or “that planted a blessing.”

13 with an exceedingly limitless power^m forever and ever. •For the mercy of the Lord of the Spirits is great in quantity, and he is long-suffering. All his works and all the dimensions of his creation, he has revealed to the righteous and the elect ones in the name of the Lord of the Spirits.’’

Condemnation of the ruling class and blessedness of the righteous ones

1 62 Thus the Lord commanded the kings, the governors, the high officials,^a and the landlords^b and said, ‘‘Open your eyes and lift up your eyebrows—if you are able to
2 recognize the Elect One!’’ •The Lord of the Spirits has sat down^c on the throne of his glory, and the spirit of righteousness has been poured out upon him. The word of his mouth will do the sinners^d in; and all the oppressors shall be eliminated^e from before
3 his face. •On the day of judgment,^f all the kings, the governors, the high officials, and the landlords shall see and recognize him—how he sits on the throne of his glory, and righteousness is judged before him, and that no nonsensical talk shall be uttered
4 in his presence. •Then pain shall come upon them as on a woman in travail with birth pangs^g—when she is giving birth (the child) enters the mouth of the womb and she
5 suffers from childbearing. •One half portion of them^h shall glance at the other half; they shall be terrified and dejected; and pain shall seize them when they see that Son
6 of Man sitting on the throne of his glory. •(These) kings, governors, and all the landlords shall (try to) bless, glorify, extol him who rules over everything, him who 7 has been concealed. •For the Son of Manⁱ was concealed from the beginning, and the Most High One preserved him in the presence of his power; then he revealed him to 8 the holy and the elect ones.^k •The congregation of the holy ones^l shall be planted,^m
9 and all the elect ones shall stand before him. •On that day, all the kings, the governors, the high officials, and those who rule the earth shall fall down before him on their
10 faces, and worship and raise their hopes in that Son of Man; they shall beg and plead for mercy at his feet.ⁿ •But the Lord of the Spirits himself will cause them to be 11 frantic, so that they shall rush and depart from his presence. Their faces shall be filled with shame, and their countenances shall be crowned with darkness. •So he will 12 deliver them^o to the angels for punishments in order that vengeance shall be executed on them—oppressors of his children and his elect ones. •It shall become quite a scene for my^p righteous and elect ones. They shall rejoice over (the kings, the governors, the high officials, and the landlords) because the wrath of the Lord of the Spirits shall

m. Lit. ‘‘with that which exceeds power.’’

62 a. Lit. ‘‘the exalted ones.’’

b. Or ‘‘landowners,’’ ‘‘administrators [governors] of the land.’’ Lit. ‘‘those who hold [‘‘possess,’’ ‘‘seize’’] the land [the earth].’’ B and C, yahadrwā lameder, could be adjusted to mean ‘‘who dwell on the land.’’

c. Dillmann prefers wa’anbro, ‘‘and he has seated him,’’ instead of wanabara, ‘‘and he has sat down,’’ which is found in all the known MSS.

d. B C: ‘‘all the sinners.’’

e. Or ‘‘destroyed.’’

f. Lit. ‘‘On that day.’’

g. Lit. ‘‘she suffers in childbearing.’’

h. Lit. ‘‘One half of them.’’

i. Lit. ‘‘they shall cast down their faces.’’

j. Here the Eth. expression walda ’eg’ula-’emma-heyyāw (sic) is used instead of walda sab’e, which we have seen above. Though both expressions, ’eg’ula-’emma heyyāw and sab’e, designate ‘‘man,’’ ‘‘a human being,’’ ‘‘a living person,’’ ‘‘a mortal being,’’ the latter term has a collective (‘‘people’’), more abstract (‘‘humanity’’), and more universalistic (‘‘man’’) connotation, whereas the former expression emphasizes the individualistic, naturalistic, and pa-titularistic aspect of man. It (the former expression) literally means ‘‘offspring of the mother of the living.’’ The first person to be described as ‘‘the mother of the living’’ in the Bible is Eve (cf. Gen 3:20), so Eth. grammarians sometimes interpret the expression as ‘‘offspring of Eve.’’ (This expression should not be confused with ’eg’ula-maheyyāw, which, though having the same meaning [‘‘man’’) and more likely the same etymological origin, has come to be regarded by Eth. grammarians as of different etymology: ‘‘the offspring of the one whom the Living One has brought forth from the earth’’ or ‘‘offspring of the Living One and the earth,’’ or simply ‘‘the Son of God,’’ i.e. man as God’s offspring.) If one were to be literal, one would translate the two Eth. expressions found in 1En respectively as ‘‘Son of the Offspring of the Mother of the Living’’ (or ‘‘Son of Eve’s Offspring,’’ ‘‘Son of Man’’) and ‘‘Son of People.’’

k. B and C omit ‘‘to the holy ones.’’

l. B and C add ‘‘and of the elect ones.’’

m. Lit. ‘‘sown.’’

n. Lit. ‘‘at him.’’

o. Lit. ‘‘he turned them,’’ ‘‘he returned them,’’ ‘‘he changed them.’’

p. B C: ‘‘his.’’

13 rest upon them and his sword^a (shall obtain) from them a sacrifice.^r •The righteous and elect ones shall be saved on that day; and from thenceforth they shall never see
 14 the faces of the sinners and the oppressors. •The Lord of the Spirits will abide over 15 them; they shall eat and rest and rise with that Son of Man forever and ever. •The righteous and elect ones shall rise from the earth and shall cease being of downcast 16 face. They shall wear^s the garments of glory. •These garments of yours shall become the garments of life from the Lord of the Spirits. Neither shall your garments wear out, nor your glory come to an end before the Lord of the Spirits.

The hopeless end of the kings, rulers, and landlords

1 63 In those days, the governors and the kings who possess the land^a shall plead that he may give them a little breathing spell from the angels of his punishment to whom they have been delivered;^b so that they shall fall and worship before the Lord of the
 2 Spirits, and confess their sins before him. •They shall bless and glorify the Lord of the Spirits and say, "Blessed is the Lord of the Spirits—the Lord of kings, the Lord of rulers, and the Master of the rich—the Lord of glory and the Lord of wisdom.
 3 Your power exposes^c every secret thing from generation to generation and your glory is forever and ever. Deep are all your mysteries—and numberless; and your righteousness is beyond accounting. •Now we have come to know that we should glorify
 4 and bless the Lord of kings—him who rules over all kings." •Moreover, they shall say, "Would that someone had given us a chance so that we should glorify, praise,
 5 and have faith before his glory! •This time, however, we are begging for a little rest but find it not; we pursue (it), but procure it not. Light has vanished from before us
 6 and darkness has become our habitation^d forever and ever; •because we have formerly^e neither had faith nor glorified the name of the Lord of the Spirits and kings,^f nor glorified the Lord in all his creation.^g We had put our hopes upon the scepters of our 7 empires.^h •(Now) on the day of our hardship and our tribulation he is not saving us; and we have no chance to become believers.ⁱ For our Lord is faithful in all his works, his judgments, and his righteousness; and his judgments have no respect of persons.
 8 (So) we will vanish away from before his face on account of our deeds; and all our 9 sins are consumed^j by righteousness." •Furthermore, at that time, you shall say,^k "Our souls are satiated with exploitation^l money which^m could not save usⁿ from being 10 cast into the oppressive^o Sheol."^p •After that, their faces shall be filled with shame^q before that Son of Man; and from before his face they shall be driven out. And the 11 sword shall abide in their midst, before his face. •Thus says the Lord of the Spirits, "This is the ordinance and the judgment, before the Lord of the Spirits, (prepared) for the governors, kings, high officials, and landlords."

The fallen angels

1.2 64 Then I saw in that place other mysterious faces. •And I heard the voice of an angel saying, "These are the angels who descended^a upon the earth and revealed what was hidden^b to the children of the people, and led the children of the people astray to commit sin."

q. B: "the sword of the Lord of the Spirits." C: "the sword." A is unintelligible but the reading is close to B and C.

r. Lit. "a memorial feast." B: "shall be drunk from them." C (as emended by Charles): "shall be drunk with their blood." If this passage is related to Isa 34:6, then the reading of "sacrifice" is close to it.

s. Lit. "they wore."

63 a. Or "the kings (and) the landowners."

b. So B and C. A: "by which they were idolatrous," or "through which they became idolatrous." Perhaps A's reading is original.

c. Lit. "it lights."

d. B: "our deeds."

e. So A. B C: "before him."

f. B: "in the name of the Lord of kings."

g. So B. A and C omit "in all his creation."

h. Lit. "our kingdoms." B and C add "and our glory."

i. Lit. "to believe."

j. Lit. "finished."

k. B C: "they shall say."

l. Or "oppression."

m. Lit. "and."

n. Lit. "prevent."

o. Lit. "weighty," "burdensome," "grave."

p. B: "flames of the burden of Sheol." C: "the heart of the burden of Sheol."

q. B and C add "and with darkness."

64 a. So B and C. A: "will descend."

b. So B and C. A: "what was hidden is revealed."

Enoch's predictions concerning the Deluge and himself

- 1 65 In those days, Noah saw the earth, that she had become deformed, and that her 2 destruction was at hand. •And (Noah) took off from there^a and went unto the extreme ends of the earth. And he cried out to his grandfather, Enoch, and said to him,^b three 3 times, with a bitter voice, "Hear me! Hear me! Hear me!" •And I said unto him, "Tell me what this thing is which is being done upon the earth, for the earth is struggling^c in this manner and is being shaken; perhaps I will perish with her in the 4 impact."^d •At that moment, there took place a tremendous turbulence upon the earth;
 5 and a voice from heaven was heard, and I fell upon my face. •Then Enoch, my grandfather, came and stood by me, saying to me, "Why did you cry out so sorrowfully and with bitter tears?"
- 6 "An order has been issued from the court^e of the Lord against those who dwell upon the earth, that their doom^f has arrived because they have acquired the knowledge of all the secrets of the angels, all the oppressive deeds of the Satans, as well as all their most occult powers, all the powers of those who practice sorcery, all the powers of (those who mix) many colors,^g all the powers^h of those who make molten images;ⁱ 7 how silver is produced from the dust of the earth, and how bronze^k is made upon the 8 earth— •for lead and tin are produced^l from the earth like silver^m—their source is a 9 fountain inside (which) stands an angel, and he is a running angel."ⁿ •After that, my grandfather, Enoch, took hold of me by my hand and raised me up and said to me, "Go, for I have asked^o the Lord of the Spirits regarding this turbulence (which is 10 taking place) on the earth." •He (continued to) say to me, "Because their oppression has been carried out (on the earth), their judgment will be limitless^p before me. On account of the abstract things^q which they have investigated and experienced, the earth 11 shall perish (together with) those who dwell upon her. •And those (who taught them these things) will have no haven^r forever, because they have revealed to them the things which are secret—to^s the condemned ones; but, as for you, my son, the Lord of the Spirits knows that you are pure and kindhearted; you detest the secret things.' 12 He has preserved your name for^u the holy ones; he will protect you from those who dwell upon the earth; he has preserved your righteous seed for kingship and great glory; and from your seed will emerge a fountain of the righteous and holy ones without number forever."

Angels in charge of the Flood

- 1 66 After this he showed me the angels of punishment^a who are prepared to come and release all the powers of the waters which are underground to become judgment and 65 a. Lit. "And he lifted his feet from there."

 b. Lit. "and Noah said."
 c. So B and C. A: "glowing."
 d. Or "pushing," "shoving," B and C, instead of badāhef, read badehera, "after . . ." which could be placed before the succeeding phrase, "this moment."
 e. B and C add "unto me."
 f. Lit. "from the presence."
 g. Lit. "end."
 h. Eth. hebrāt, "(those who mix) many colors" or "(those who make) dyes," makes sense in the context, whereas hebrāt, "provinces," "regions," "areas," "parts," found in A B C does not seem to do so.
 i. A: "and all of them." B C: "and the powers."
 j. Lit. "idols."
 k. Lit. "mixed metals."
 l. B C: "are not produced."
 m. Lit. "like the first."
 n. Lit. "and this angel runs."
 o. Or "you have asked him."
 p. Lit. "they will not be counted." Charles suggests that 'iyetholaq'u, which he equates with the

Heb. lo-yehāšēb, is a corruption of lo-yehāšēk, "will not be restrained [withheld]." See EC, p. 118, n. 24.

q. Or "gold." Perhaps this is an allusion to 8:1. A has 'awrāq, which I have translated as "abstract things." This expression, whose singular form I assume to be warq, "gold" (see wariq, "to spit," "to be fine like a leaf," "to be slender," or "to be abstract"; cf. raqiq), is not attested in known Eth. literature. B and C have 'awrāh, "months," "moons." Charles, following Halévy, suggests this expression, which corresponds to the Heb. h'dāšim, to be a corruption for harashim, "sorceries."

r. Lit. "a place to go [or "turn"] to," "a refuge," "resort." Charles, following Halévy, and assuming that meqbā'e means "return," suggested that this expression is a translation of the Heb. teshubah, meaning "repentance," "return." Cf. EC, p. 118, n. 29.

s. B C: "and."

t. B C: "you are free from the blame."

u. B C: "among."

66 a. So B and C. A: "the angels showed me the punishment."

2 destruction unto all who live and dwell upon the earth. •But the Lord of the Spirits gave an order to the angels who were on duty^b that they should not raise the (water) enclosures^c but guard (them)—for they were the angels who were in charge of the waters.^d Then I left^e from the presence of Enoch.

God's promise to Noah: punishment of the angels and kings

1 67 In those days, the word of God came unto me, and said unto me, "Noah, your 2 lot has come up before me—a lot without blame, a lot of true love.^a •At this time the 3 angels are working with wood (making an ark) and when it is completed,^b I shall 4 place my hands upon it^c and protect it,^d and the seed of life shall arise from it; and 5 a substitute^e (generation) will come so that the earth will not remain empty (without 6 inhabitants). •I shall strengthen your seed before me forever and ever as well as the 7 seeds of those who dwell with you; I shall not put it to trial^f on the face of the earth;
8 but it shall be blessed and multiply on the earth in the name of the Lord."^g
9 And they shall imprison^h those angels who revealed oppression in that burning 10 valley which my grandfather Enoch had formerly shown me in the West among the 11 mountains of gold, silver, iron, bronze, and tin. •I also saw that valley in which there 12 took place a great turbulence and the stirring of the waters. •Now, when all this took 13 place, there was produced from that bronze and fire a smell of sulfur (which) blended
14 with those waters. •This valley of the perversive angels shall (continue to) burn
15 punitively^h underneath that ground; in respect to its troughs,ⁱ they shall be filled with^j
16 rivers of water by which those angels who perverted those who dwell upon the earth
17 shall be punished.^k
18 Those waters shall become in those days a poisonous drug^l of the body and a 19 punishment^m of the spirit unto the kings, rulers, and exalted ones, and those who 20 dwell on the earth; lust shall fill their soulsⁿ so that their bodies shall be punished, for 21 they have denied the Lord of the Spirits; they shall see their own punishment every 22 day but cannot believe in his name. •In proportion to the great degree of the burning
23 of their bodies will be the transmutation of their spirits forever and ever and ever,^o
24 for there is none that can speak a nonsensical word before the Lord of the Spirits.
25 So the judgment shall come upon them, because they believe in the debauchery of 26 their bodies and deny the spirit of the Lord. •And these waters will undergo change 27 in those days; for (on the one hand) when those angels are being punished by these 28 waters, the temperatures of those fountains of water will be altered (and become hot), 29 but (on the other hand) when the angels get out,^p those waters of the fountains shall 30 be transformed and become cold.^q •Then I heard Michael responding and saying, 31 "This verdict by which the angels are being punished is itself a testimony to the kings 32 and the rulers who control the world." •For these waters of judgment are poison to 33 the bodies of the angels^r as well as sensational to their flesh; (hence) they will neither 34 see nor believe that these waters become transformed and become a fire that burns 35 forever.

b. Lit. "who were going out."

c. A reads 'aweda, which I have taken as 'aweda, since the former expression is nonexistent. B and C read "do not raise the hands."

d. B C: "for these angels were in charge of the powers of the waters."

e. So B and C. A: "I came."

67 a. B C: "a lot of love and uprightness."

b. All MSS add "to these angels."

c. Lit. "her."

d. Lit. "her."

e. Lit. "it was changed [substituted]."

f. So A: 'iyyāmakker. B C: 'iyymaker, "he will not counsel it." Charles emended the text to read "he will not be barren," 'iyymaken.

g. So C, and possibly A and B. A and B could give the meaning "they shall harden [petrify]" or "they shall cast lots." It seems to me that the original translator(s), or the copyists of A and C, were attempting a play on words: The good angels were working "wood," 'eḡawa (67:2), while they will "make wood," ya'ḡwomu, "harden," "petrify," out of the evil angels.

h. B and C omit "punitively."

i. Lit. "valleys."

j. B: "shall be out." C: "shall come."

k. Lit. "condemned."

l. Eth. fawes has the meaning of (1) "a healing medicine," "a good medicine," and (2) "a killing drug," "a bad medicine."

m. Lit. "judgment."

n. B C: "their spirits."

o. So A. B C: "forever and ever."

p. Lit. "ascend."

q. So B and C. A: "shall be knotted."

r. So all MSS. Perhaps we should read "bodies of kings."

The angel Michael discusses the judgment with Raphael

- 1 68 After that, he gave me instructions^a in all the secret things (found) in the book of my grandfather, Enoch,^b and in the parables which were given to him; and he put 2 them together for me in the words of the book which is with me.^c • On that day, Michael addressed himself to^d Raphael, saying to him, “The power of the spirit grabs me and causes me to go up^e on account of the severity of the judgment concerning (the knowledge of) the secrets. Who is able to endure the severity of the judgment
 3 which has been executed and before which one melts^f away?” • Michael continued to speak further, saying to Raphael, “Who is he whose heart does not become sordid^g in respect to this matter and whose reins do not become stirred up from the word of 4 the judgment which has been pronounced against them.”^h • Then it happened that when they stoodⁱ before the Lord of the Spirits, Michael said to Raphael thus, “They shall not prosper before the eye of the Lord; for they have quarreled with the Lord of the 5 Spirits because they make the image of the Lord.^j • Therefore, all that which has been concealed shall come upon them forever and ever; for neither an angel^k nor a man should be assigned his role;^l (so) those (evil ones) alone have received their judgment forever and ever.”

Names and misdeeds of the fallen angels

- 1 69 After this judgment, they shall frighten them and make them scream because they 2 have shown this (knowledge of secret things) to those who dwell on the earth. • Now behold, I am naming^a the names of those angels! These are their names: The first of them is Semyaz, the second Aristaqis, the third Armen, the fourth Kokba’el, the fifth Tur’el, the sixth Rumyal, the seventh Danyul, the eighth Neqa’el, the ninth Baraqel, the tenth Azaz’el, the eleventh Armaros, the twelfth Betryal, the thirteenth Basas’el, the fourteenth Hanan’el, the fifteenth Tur’el, the sixteenth Sip^Wese’el, (the seventeenth Yeter’el),^b the eighteenth Tuma’el, the nineteenth Tur’el, the twentieth Rum’el, and 3 the twenty-first Azaz’el.^c • These are the chiefs of their angels, their names, their centurions,^d their chiefs over fifties, and their chiefs over tens.
 4 The name of the first is Yeqon; he is the one who misled all the children of the angels,^e brought them down upon the earth, and perverted them by the daughters of 5 the people. • The second was named Asb’el; he is the one who gave the children of the holy angels an evil counsel^f and misled them so that they would defile their bodies 6 by the daughters of the people. • The third was named Gader’el; this one is he who showed the children of the people all the blows of death, who misled Eve, who showed the children of the people (how to make) the instruments of death (such as) the shield, the breastplate, and the sword for warfare, and all (the other) instruments of death to 7 the children of the people. • Through their agency (death) proceeds against the people

68 a. B C: “signs,” “miracles.”

b. B C: “my grandfather, Enoch, gave me the signs of all secret things (found) in the book.”

c. B C: “in the words of the book of the parables.”

d. A wrongly: “responded to me.”

e. Lit. “rouses me.” B C: “provokes me,” “angers me.”

f. Lit. “they melt.”

g. So A and C. B: “does not become soft,” “does not become compassionate.”

h. A adds: “There were among them those who responded to them thus.” B and C add: “There were among them those whom they led out thus.”

i. B C: “he stood.”

j. Or “because they act in the style of the Lord.”

k. So B and C. A: “an image.” Perhaps A is original. See following note.

l. Lit. “his portion.” A possible rendition according to A may be: “for no image—and no human (image)—should be made for him.” The whole paragraph is problematic. If A is right, this passage may be a reference to Ex 20:4.

69 a. B and C omit “I am naming.”

b. So B and C.

c. B C: “the first Semyaza, the second Arestiqifa [C: Artaqifa] . . . the fourth Kokaba’el [C: Kokab’el], the fifth [C: Turu’el] . . . the seventh Danyal, the eighth [B: Nuqa’el], the ninth Baraq’el . . . the eleventh [B: Armares], the twelfth Bataryal, the thirteenth Basasa’el [C: Basasa’eyal], the fourteenth [B: Anan’el] [C: Hanan’el], the fifteenth [B: Turyal], the sixteenth Simapisi’el [C: Simipisi’el] . . . the nineteenth [B: Tar’el], the twentieth Ruma’el, the twenty-first Azaz’el [B: Azazel].”

d. Lit. “the chiefs of their one hundred.”

e. Or “the angelic children.”

f. Lit. “he counseled them with an evil counsel.”

B C: “he told [“taught,” “showed”] them an evil counsel.”

8 who dwell upon the earth,^g from that day forevermore. • The fourth is named Pinem^h; this one demonstrated to the children of the people the bitter and the sweet and 9 revealed to them all the secrets of their wisdom. • Furthermore he caused the people to penetrate (the secret of) writingⁱ and (the use of) ink and paper;^j on account of this matter, there are many who have erred from eternity to eternity, until this very day.
 10 For human beings are not created^k for such purposes to take up^l their beliefs with pen and ink. • For indeed human beings were not created but to be like angels, permanently
 11 to maintain^m pure and righteous lives. Death, which destroys everything, would have not touched them, had it not been through their knowledge by which they shall perish;
 12 deathⁿ is (now) eating us^o by means of this power. • The fifth is named Kasadya;^p it is he who revealed to the children of the people (the various) flagellations of all evil—
 (the flagellation) of the souls and the demons, the smashing of the embryo in the womb so that it may be crushed, the flagellation of the soul, snake bites, sunstrokes,^q
 13 the son of the serpent, whose name is Taba^rta.^r • And this is the number of Kasb^sel,^s the chief (executor) of the oath which he revealed to the holy ones while he was (still)
 14 dwelling in the highest in glory. • His name was (then) Beqa;^t and he spoke to Michael^u to disclose to him his secret name so that he would memorize this secret name of his,^v so that he would call it up in an oath in order that they shall tremble before it^w and 15 the oath. • He (then) revealed these^x to the children of the people, (and) all the hidden things and this power of this oath, for it is power and strength itself.^y The Evil One^z placed this oath in Michael's hand.

16 These are the secrets of this oath—and they are sustained by the oath:

The heaven was suspended before the creation of the world; and forever!
 17 By it the earth is founded upon the water; from the hidden places of the mountains come beautiful waters, from the beginning of creation;^{a2} and forever!
 18 By that oath, the sea was created; and he put down for it a foundation of sand which cannot be transgressed at a time of its anger, from the beginning of creation; and forever!
 19 And by that oath the depths are made firm; they stand still and do not move from their places from the beginning (of creation); and forever!
 20 By the same oath the sun and the moon complete their courses of travel, and do not deviate from the laws (made) for them, from the beginning (of creation); and forever!
 21 And by the same oath the stars complete their courses of travel; if they call^{b2} their names, he causes them to respond^{c2} from the beginning (of creation); and forever!

g. Lit. "From their hands it proceeds against those who dwell upon the earth."

h. B C: Penemu.

i. Lit. "to comprehend book(s)."

j. B C: "to comprehend writing [books] with ink and paper."

k. Lit. "born."

l. B C: "to confirm."

m. Lit. "to live."

n. Lit. "it."

o. B C: "eating me."

p. B: Kasdyas. C: Kasdya.

q. Lit. "the flagellation that happens at noon."

r. An obscure name which, if taken as a common noun in Eth., means "male." For an attempt to restore this and the following verse, see N. Schmidt,

"The Original Language of the Parables of Enoch," Old Testament and Semitic Studies, vol. 2, p. 341.

s. B: Kesb^sel. C: Kasb^sel.

t. C: Biqa.

u. B: "holy Michael."

v. B: "that he would show him that secret name."

C omits both.

w. Lit. "from it."

x. B C: "which they revealed."

y. B C: "for it is powerful and strong."

z. So A. B: 'Aka'. C: 'Aka', which may be proper names or corruptions of the 'ekuy of A, or vice versa. Cf. EC, p. 125, n. 14.

a2. Lit. "from the creation of the world."

b2. B C: "he calls."

c2. B C: "they shall respond."

- 22 Likewise the waters and their souls, all the winds^{d2} and their paths of travel from all the directions of winds; 23 the voice of the thunder and the light of the lightning are kept there; 24 the reservoirs of hail, the reservoirs of frost, the reservoirs of mist, the reservoirs of rain and dew are kept there; 25 All these believe and give thanks in the presence of the Lord of the Spirits;
they glorify with all their might, and please him^{e2} in all this thanksgiving;
they shall thank, glorify, exalt the Lord of the Spirits forever and ever!
- 26 This oath has become dominant over them; they are preserved by it and their paths are preserved by it (so that) their courses of travel do not perish.
- 27 (Then) there came to them a great joy. And they blessed, glorified, and extolled
(the Lord) on account of the fact that the name of that (Son of) Man^{f2} was revealed 28 to them.^{g2} He shall never pass away or perish from before the face of the earth.^{h2} •But those who have led the world astray shall be bound with chains; and their ruinous congregation shall be imprisoned; all their deeds shall vanish from before the face of 29 the earth. •Thenceforth nothing that is corruptible shall be found;ⁱ² for that Son of Man has appeared and has seated himself upon the throne of his glory; and all evil shall disappear from before his face; he shall go and tell^{j2} to that Son of Man, and he shall be strong before the Lord of the Spirits. Here ends the third parable of Enoch.^{k2}

Translation of Enoch and vision of earliest human ancestors

- 1 70 And it happened after this that his living name was raised up before^a that Son of 2 Man and to the Lord from among those who dwell upon the earth; •it was lifted up 3 in a wind^b chariot and it^c disappeared from among them.^d •From that day on, I was not counted among them. But he placed me between two winds,^e between the northeast 4 and righteous ones. •And there I saw the first (human) ancestors^f and the righteous ones of old, dwelling in that place.

Vision of the fiery house and the Antecedent of Days

- 1 71 (Thus) it happened after this that my spirit passed out of sight^a and ascended into the heavens. And I saw the sons of the holy angels walking upon the flame of fire; their garments were white—and their overcoats—and the light of their faces was like 2 snow. •Also I saw two rivers of fire, the light of which fire was shining like hyacinth.
3 Then I fell upon my face before the Lord of the Spirits. •And the angel Michael, one of the archangels,^b seizing me by my right hand and lifting me up, led me out into 4 all the secrets of mercy;^c and he showed me^d all the secrets of righteousness.^e •He also showed me all the secrets of the extreme ends of heaven and all the reservoirs of the stars and the luminaries—from where they come out (to shine) before the faces 5 of the holy ones. •He carried off^f my spirit, and I,^g Enoch, was in the heaven of heavens. There I saw—in the midst of that light—a structure built of crystals; and

d2. B and C read "Likewise, the souls of the waters, of the winds, and all the winds . . ."

e2. B C: "and their food."

f2. A reads "the name of that man."

g2. B and C interpolate at this place a passage (omitted by A): "And he sat on the throne of his glory; and the presidency [lit. "head"] of the (final) judgment was given unto the Son of Man."

h2. B C: "He shall cause the sinners to pass away and perish from before the face of the earth."

i2. Lit. "From thenceforth what perishes will not happen."

j2. B C: "they shall tell."

k2. Lit. "This is the third parable of Enoch."

70 a. A: "before to." B C: "to."

b. Or "spirit."

c. A: "his name." B C: "the name."

d. Lit. "it went out ["disappeared," "vanished"] among them."

e. Eth. nafāsāt. B: manāfest. C: manfāsāt, "winds" or "spirits."

f. Lit. "the first fathers." Cf. "the earliest fathers," "the first forefathers," "the original ancestors."

71 a. Lit. "became hidden," "became concealed," "disappeared," "vanished," "were extinguished."

b. Lit. "head [chief] angels."

c. C omits "of mercy."

d. B omits "and he showed me."

e. C: "of mercy."

f. Lit. "He hid," "He concealed."

g. B and C omit "and I."

6 between those crystals tongues of living fire. • And my spirit saw a ring^h which encircledⁱ this structure^j of fire. On its four sides^k were rivers full of living fire which 7 encircled it.^l • Moreover, seraphim, cherubim, and ophanim—the sleepless ones^m who 8 guard the throne of his glory—also encircled it. • And I saw countless angels—a hundred thousand times a hundred thousand, ten million times ten million—encircling 9 that house. Michael, Raphael, Gabriel, Phanuel, and numerous (other) holy angels 10 that are in heaven above, go in and out of that house— • Michael, Raphael, Gabriel, Phanuel, and numerous (other) holy angels that are countless.ⁿ • With them is the Antecedent of Time: His head is white and pure like wool and his garment is 11 indescribable. • I fell on my face, my whole body mollified and my spirit transformed.
Then I cried with a great voice by the spirit of the power, blessing, glorifying, and 12 extolling. • And those are the blessings which went forth^o out of my mouth, being well-pleasing in the presence of that Antecedent of Time. • Then the Antecedent of 13 Time came with Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, Phanuel, and a hundred thousand and 14 ten million times a hundred thousand^p angels that are countless. • Then an angel^q came to me and greeted me^r and said to me, “You, son of man,^s who art born in^t righteousness and upon whom righteousness has dwelt, the righteousness of the Antecedent of Time 15 will not forsake you.” • He added and said to me, “He shall proclaim peace to you in the name of the world that is to become.” For from here proceeds peace since the 16 creation of the world, and so it shall be unto you forever and ever and ever. • Everyone that will come to exist and walk shall (follow)^v your path, since righteousness never forsakes you. Together with you shall be their dwelling places; and together with you shall be their portion. They shall not be separated from you forever and ever and 17 ever.” • So there shall be length of days with that Son of Man, and peace to the righteous ones; his path is upright for the righteous, in the name of the Lord of the Spirits forever and ever.

Book III (72–82)

The Book of Heavenly Luminaries

The sun

1 72 (Book) Three:^a • The Book of the Itinerary of the Luminaries of Heaven: the position of each and every one, in respect to their ranks, in respect to their authorities, and in respect to their seasons; each one according to their names^b and their places of origin and according to their months, which Uriel, the holy angel who was with me, and who (also) is their guide, showed me—just as he showed me all their treatises^c and the nature^d of the years of the world unto eternity, till the new creation which abides forever is created.

h. Or “a belt,” “a circular thing.”
i. Or “encompassed,” “surrounded.”
j. Lit. “house.”
k. So B and C. A is unintelligible.
l. Lit. “that house.”
m. Lit. “those who do not sleep.”
n. B and C add “they go out from that house.”
o. Here ends ch. 71 in A. The scribe has transposed to this place 78:8b–82:20. How this happened is difficult to imagine, because the ending of this section and the beginning of the following (i.e. the Book of the Heavenly Luminaries) are clearly delineated in most MSS; in another 15th-cent. MS—EMML 2080— which I have consulted, the ending of the preceding section is found at the top of the left-hand column, half of which is left empty; and the Book of the Heavenly Luminaries starts at the top of a new column on the right. However, there is a tendency to repeat some of the vss. (9b–12a) of the end of this ch. in some MSS; cf. EC, p. 180, n. 24. My translation of 71:12b–17 is based on B and C.

p. C: “a hundred thousand and ten million.”
q. Lit. “this angel.” C: “he.”
r. Lit. “greeted me with his voice.”
s. This expression, “son of man,” should be distinguished from the “Son of Man.” As explained above, “Man” in the “Son of Man” is a translation of either sab'e, “people,” or 'eg'ula-emma heyyaw, “son of the mother of the living,” i.e. “human being”; in the present case, however, we have be'esi, “man,” “a masculine person.”
t. C: “unto,” “to.”
u. Or “in his name which exists forever.”
v. Lit. “upon.”

72 a. So A. Other MSS omit “Three.”
b. Lit. “its name.”
c. Lit. “books.”
d. Lit. “how.”

2 This is the first commandment of the luminaries: The sun is a luminary whose egress is an opening^e of heaven, which is (located) in the direction of the east, and whose 3 ingress^f is (another) opening of heaven, (located) in the west. •I saw six openings through which the sun rises and six openings through which it sets. The moon also rises and sets through the same openings, and they are guided by the stars;^g together with those whom they lead, they are six^h in the east and sixⁱ in the west heaven.^j All of them (are arranged) one after another in a constant order.^k There are many windows 4 (both) to the left and the right of these openings. •First there goes out the great light^l whose name is the sun; its roundness is like the roundness of the sky; and it is totally 5 filled with light and heat. •The chariot on which it ascends is (driven by) the blowing wind. The sun sets in the sky (in the west) and returns by the northeast in order to go to the east; it is guided so that it shall reach the^m eastern gateⁿ and shine in the face 6 of the sky. •In this manner it rises in the first month^o through the major gate; it proceeds (through this gate) which is the fourth (among) those six^p openings which 7 are (located) in the direction of the east. •By this fourth gate through which the sun rises during the first month there are twelve open windows from which a flame flows, 8 when they are opened at the appropriate time.^q •When (the sun) rises (in the east) in the sky, it goes out through this fourth gate for thirty mornings and descends faithfully 9 through the fourth gate in the western sky. •During those (thirty) days the day daily
 10 becomes longer and the night nightly shorter, for thirty days.^r •On that day, the day is longer than the night by one ninth;^s so the day turns out to be exactly ten parts and 11 the night to be eight parts. •The sun rises from that fourth (eastern) gate and sets in the fourth (western) one, and then it turns and comes into^t the fifth gate of the east 12 for thirty days,^u through which it rises, and sets in the fifth gate. •At that time the day further becomes longer^v and becomes^w eleven parts and the night shortens^x and becomes 13 seven parts on account of the sun.^y •It then returns to the east and comes into the sixth (gate), rising and setting through that sixth gate for thirty-one^z days,^{a2} according to 14 the principle^{b2} of (the gate).^{c2} •On that day the day becomes longer than the night still further;^{d2} so the day becomes twelve parts and the night shortens and becomes six 15 parts. •Then the sun is raised in such a way that (its duration) shortens^{e2} and night occurs;^{f2} the sun returns to the east and enters the sixth gate, rising and setting through 16 it^{g2} for thirty days.^{h2} •When thirty daysⁱ² are completed, the day decreases exactly by 17 one part, and becomes^{j2} eleven parts, and the night seven. •Then the sun, leaving the west by that sixth gate and going to the east, rises through the fifth gate for thirty 18 mornings and sets again in the fifth gate in the west. •On that day the day decreases
 19 by two parts; so (the day) becomes ten parts and the night eight parts. •Then the sun,

Isa 65:17;
 66:22
 2Pet 3:3,13
 Rev 21:1

e. The word hewhew is sometimes translated as "portal" or "gate." But it simply signifies "a hole." "a crack," "an aperture," "a slot," or "a vent."

f. Lit. "setting."

g. B C: "guides of the stars."

h. A could be read "seven," which is meaningless.

i. A could be read "seven," which is meaningless.

j. B and C read "west (of the) sun."

k. Lit. "uprightly."

l. So C. A B: "the light that excels."

m. Lit. "that."

n. Eth. hwohet. I have decided to translate this term as "gate." It appears in the Eth. Bible in several places as an equivalent for Heb. delet and ša'ār or Gk. thura and pylē. Cf. Job 31:32 (delet, thura); Isa 26:20 (delet, thura); Ps 24(23): 7, 9 (ša'ār, pylē); Ps 107(106): 16 (delet, pylē).

o. Ethiopian commentators begin here with the Ethiopian month Miyazya.

p. A could be read "seven," which is meaningless.

q. Lit. "in their seasons."

r. Lit. "for thirty mornings."

s. Lit. "the day is longer twice double as much as nine parts of the night."

t. B and C omit "comes into."

u. Lit. "mornings."

v. Lit. "the day becomes longer doublefold."

w. Lit. "the day becomes."

x. Lit. "decreases."

y. Lit. "on account of her sun." The word for sun used here is ta'amer, "wonder," "sign," "sun," "moon." The whole phrase is wrongly placed at the end of vs. 12. Cf. 48:3; Jub 4:17; 2Chr 33:3; Jer 10:2.

z. So B and C. A: "thirty."

a2. Lit. "mornings."

b2. Lit. "according to her sign." The Eth. ta'amer, "wonder," "sign," can also designate "sun" or "moon."

c2. Lit. "her."

d2. Lit. "the day double the night."

e2. Lit. "it shortens."

f2. B C: "it shortens the day and lengthens the night."

g2. Lit. "rising through it and setting."

h2. Lit. "mornings."

i2. Lit. "mornings."

j2. Lit. "the day becomes."

departing from that fifth gate and setting in the fifth gate, in the west, rises in the fourth gate for thirty-one days^{k2} according to the principle of (the gate),¹² and sets in the west. •On that day the day is aligned with the night, so that they become equal; so the night becomes nine parts and the day nine parts. •Then the sun,^{m2} departing from that gate and setting in the west, returns to the east and comes out through the third gate for thirty days,ⁿ² and sets in the third gate in the west. •On that day the night becomes longer than the day; it becomes longer than the (previous) night^{o2} and the day becomes shorter than the (previous) day^{p2} for thirty day;^{q2} so the night turns out to be exactly ten parts and the day to be eight parts. •Then the sun, departing from that third gate in the west and returning to the east, comes out through the second gate in the east for thirty days,^{r2} and in the same manner it sets through the second gate in the western sky. •On that day the night becomes eleven parts and the day seven parts. •Then the sun, departing on that day from that second gate and setting in the west in the second gate, returns to the east and rises in the first gate for thirty-one days, and sets on that day in the western sky. •On that day the night lengthens^{s2} and becomes twelve parts, whereas the day (shortens and becomes) six parts. •Thus the sun completes^{t2} its appearances,^{u2} and goes through those same cycles of appearances a second time,^{v2} coming out through all the openings^{w2} for thirty days^{x2} and setting also in the west opposite to it. •On that night the length of the night decreases by one ninth;^{y2} so the night becomes eleven parts and the day seven^{z2} parts. •Then the sun, returning and entering the second gate which is in the east, resumes its appearances^{a3} for thirty mornings, rising and setting (as usual). •On that day the night^{b3} becomes shorter,^{c3} so the night becomes ten parts and the day eight parts. •On that day the sun, departing from this second gate and setting in the west, returns to the east and rises through the third gate for thirty-one days, and sets in the western sky. •On that day the night shortens and becomes nine parts and the day nine parts. Then the night becomes equal with the day, and the days (of the year)^{d3} add up to exactly three hundred sixty-four days. •The lengths of the day and the night as well as the shortnesses of the day and the night are (determined) by (the course of) the circuit^{e3} of the sun, and distinguished by it. •The circuit becomes longer or shorter day by day and night by night (respectively). •Thus this is the order for^{f3} the course of the movement and the settlement of the sun—that great luminary which is called the sun, for the duration of the year(s) of the universe^{g3}—in respect to its going in^{h3} and coming out. •It is that very (luminary) which manifests itself in its appearanceⁱ³ as God has commanded that it shall come out and go in, in this manner.^{j3} •And neither does it diminish (in respect to its brightness) nor take rest but continue to run day^{k3} and night. As for the intensity of its light, it is sevenfold brighter than that of the moon; nevertheless, (the sun and the moon) are equal in regard to their (respective) sizes.

k2. Lit. "mornings."

l2. See n. b2.

m2. Cf. n. y to vs. 12.

n2. Lit. "mornings."

o2. Lit. "the night becomes longer than the night."

p2. Lit. "the day becomes shorter than the day."

q2. Lit. "mornings."

r2. Lit. "mornings." So B and C. A omits "mornings."

s2. B and C add "becomes double the day."

t2. Lit. "completed," "having completed."

u2. B and C read 'ar'estihu, "its beginnings," "its chiefs," "its headlines," instead of 'ar'ayâihu as in A.

v2. B C: 'ar'estihu. See n. u2.

w2. B C: "through the same openings."

x2. Lit. "mornings."

y2. Lit. "the night diminishes from her ninefold length by one part."

z2. So B and C. A: "nine."

a3. B C: 'ar'estihu. See n. u2.

b3. So B, C, and emendation in A. A reads: "the day."

c3. Lit. "diminishes from her length."

d3. B C: "and the year."

e3. Or "route," "course."

f3. Lit. "and."

g3. So A. B C: "forever and ever." Both grammatically and theologically, the reading of A seems better.

h3. B and C read "going in sixty times," which makes no sense.

i3. B and C add "that which is called the great luminary."

j3. Lit. "come out in this manner and go in."

k3. A omits "day."

The moon and the varying amounts of its illuminations

1 73 After I saw this (set of) regulation(s for the sun) I saw another (set of) regulation(s)^a 2 concerning the minor luminary whose name is moon. • Its^b roundness is like the roundness of the sky,^c and the wind drives^d the chariot on which it rides;^e and it is 3 given light in (varying) measure. • Its coming out and its going in change every month.
 Its days are like the days of the sun; and when its light becomes evenly (distributed) 4 then it amounts to one seventh of the light of the sun. • It (the moon) rises in this manner: Its head^f faces the easterly direction, coming out on the thirtieth day,^g on that day, (that is,) on the thirtieth day, it comes into existence,^h and it appears with the sun in the gate through which the sun exits;ⁱ and you have the beginning of the month.^j 5 (Considering) half of it to be (divisible into) seven parts,^k the whole disk of it is without light,^l with the exception of one-seventh part of the fourteenth part of the 6 light (of the sun), one seventh of its (half) light.^m • On the day when it receives one-seventh part of its one half,ⁿ as the sun sets, it becomes (equivalent to) one-seventh 7 light of one half of it. • Then when the sun rises, the moon^o rises together with it, taking a portion of one half of its light; that night (the moon), just beginning its monthly journey^p on its first lunar day, sets with the sun and becomes dark, in respect to its thirteen^q parts^r that night. On that day it rises and shines with exactly one-seventh 8 part (of its semicircle). • Then it comes out and recedes toward the east (away from) where the sun rises, (continuing) to be bright(er) in one sixth of one seventh^s (of one half of the light of the sun) during the remaining days.^t

1 74^a Furthermore, I saw another system of rotation^b with its own regulation^c whereby^d 2 the system fulfills its monthly course of movement. • All these things—including their fixed positions—Uriel, the holy angel who is the guide of all of them, showed to me.
 And I wrote down their fixed positions as he showed them to me; and I wrote down their months as they were, as well as the (variable) aspects^e of their illumination until 3 the completion of fifteen days. • The moon wanes in fifteen steps during a period of 4 fifteen days, and waxes in fourteen steps in the east and the west respectively.^f • In (certain) designated months it alters its (westerly) settings and in (certain) designated 5 months it fulfills its unusual^g courses of movement. • For two months it (the moon) sets with the sun, and uses^h those two middle openings (which are) the third and the 73 a. Lit. "After this commandment I saw another commandment."

b. Whereas the sun is generally personified as feminine, and feminine grammatical forms (though sometimes masculine forms) are applied to it, the moon is generally personified as masculine (though sometimes as feminine), and masculine grammatical forms are most commonly used for it.

c. Some late MSS read "the sun."

d. So B and C. A: "lengthens."

e. Lit. "its chariot on which it rides."

f. According to Ethiopian commentators, the crescent-shaped head of the new moon.

g. Or "morning."

h. Lit. "it appears," "it manifests itself," etc.

i. The term yewase' is ambiguous, since it could mean either "it came out" or "it went out." The verb waḡi'a, "to go out," "to come out," "to depart," "to go far," etc., is an approximate equivalent of the English "to exit." The term denotes the "rising" of the sun (or the moon) in the sense that the sun "comes out of" or "exits from" its chamber.

j. Lit. "it becomes for you the head [the beginning] of the month."

k. B and C add rehuq, to give the reading "half of it is distant [or "moves away"] by one seventh." Flemming suggests emending the text by substituting re'uy, "visible," for rehuq. Cf. EC, p. 138, n. 7.

l. Lit. "as though without light." B C: "empty without light."

m. The passage is in general difficult. But it seems to me to imply that "one-seventh part of the half of the moon represents one-fourteenth part of the light of the whole moon." B and C omit the last phrase: "one seventh of its (half) light."

n. B and C add "its light."

o. So B and C. A: "it."

p. Lit. "it is at the beginning [head] of its morning."

q. A B: "six and seven." C: "seven seven."

r. Lit. "six and seven parts of its hemisphere(s)."

s. Lit. "six (and) seven."

t. This section, 73:4-8, is a badly garbled description of the variations in the moon's illuminated area: on the first day one quarter, on the next one seventh, then one seventh plus one fourteenth, etc.

74 a. This ch. is primarily a variant of the preceding ch. 73.

b. Lit. "route," "course of movement."

c. Lit. "commandment."

d. Lit. "by which commandment."

e. Lit. "appearance."

f. Lit. "It completes its darkness in four (and) seven parts for fifteen days and completes all its lights in seven (and) seven parts in the east and the west." B and C read: "In one-seven-seven parts it completes its light in the east and in each seven-seven parts completes its darkness in the west."

g. Lit. "one-one."

h. Lit. "it has." B and C omit "it has."

6 fourth gate. •It comes out for seven days and completes a circuit as it returns again to the gate through which the sun rises. In this manner it waxes^l and recedes from the 7 sun, entering the sixth gate through which the sun rises in eight days. •When the sun rises through the fourth gate (the moon) comes out for seven days, until it starts coming out through the fifth. It then turns back toward the fourth gate in seven days,
 8 waxing as it recedes, and enters the first gate in eight days. •Then again it returns to 9 the fourth gate through which the sun rises in seven days.^j •This is how^k I saw their fixed positions—how the moon rises and shines when the sun sets—in those days.
 10 If five years are combined the sun gains thirty extra days; consequently one of those five years gains, and when it is completed, it turns out to be three hundred sixty-four
 11 days. •The gain of the sun and of the stars turns out to be six^l days; in five years, six days every year add up to thirty days;^m and the moonⁿ falls behind the sun and the 12 stars for thirty days. •They^p bring about all the years punctiliously, so that they forever neither gain upon nor fall behind their fixed positions for a single day, but they convert 13 the year with punctilious justice into three hundred sixty-four days. •In three (years)^q there are one thousand ninety-two days and in five years one thousand eight hundred and twenty days, so that in eight years there are two thousand nine hundred and twelve
 14 days. •For the moon singly in three (years) its days add up to one thousand thirty
 15 days,^r so that it falls behind by sixty-two days in three years.^s • In five years (they add up to) one thousand eight hundred seventy days,^t so that it falls behind by fifty days
 16 in five years. Thus it is for the moon. •In eight years the days (add up to) two thousand eight hundred thirty-two days, so that it falls behind by eight days in eight years.^u
 17 (In this way) the years are completed with precision,^v in accordance with their fixed positions in the universe and the fixed stations of the sun which shine, the gate through which it (the sun) rises and sets for thirty days.

1 75 The leaders of the chiefs of the thousands, which are appointed over the whole creation and upon all the stars, are counted together with the four (leaders of the seasons); they do not leave from the^a fixed stations^b according to the reckoning of the year; and they render service on the four days which are not counted in the reckoning
 2 of the year. •On this account, people err in them, for those luminaries scrupulously render service to the fixed positions in the cosmos—one in the first gate of heaven, one in the third,^c one in the fourth, one in the fifth,^d and one in the sixth. In this manner the year is completed scrupulously in three hundred sixty-four fixed stations
 3 of the cosmos. •Thus the signs, the durations of time, the years, and the days were shown^e to me (by) the angel Uriel, whom the Lord, God of eternal glory, has appointed^f over all the luminaries of heaven—(both) in heaven and the world—in order that they—the sun, the moon, the stars, and all the created objects which circulate in all

i. Lit. "completes all her light."

j. Vss. 7–9 is a corrupt rendering of the simple rule: The moon rises (and sets) during seven or eight days in the outermost gates (i.e. gates six and one) but only one or two days in all other gates (i.e. gates two to five).

k. Lit. "in this way."

l. So B and C. A reads "eight" as emended.

m. So B and C. A: "five years gain thirty days."

n. So B and C. A: "it."

o. So B and C. A: "it falls behind the sun and the stars for thirty days—behind the sun, the moon, and the stars." Cf. EC, p. 141, nn. 1, 2.

p. So A. B: "The moon." C: "The sun and the stars." Cf. also EC, p. 141, nn. 3, 4.

q. Text unclear.

r. B: "one thousand and sixty days." C: "one thousand and sixty-two."

s. B and C omit "it falls behind by sixty-two days in three years."

t. Lit. "there are one thousand seven hundred seventy days in five years." In B and C vss. 14f. are corrupt.

u. A, B, and C all repeat the preceding clause.

The section 74:10–12 is meaningless as it stands; while the whole section 74:10–16 seems to be a later fragmentary intrusion. The computation in this section is a rather trivial one:

(1) solar (civil) years: $364 \times 5 = 1820$

$$\frac{364 \times 3 = 1092}{364 \times 8 = 2912}$$

(2) lunar years: $354 \times 5 = 1770$

$$\frac{354 \times 3 = 1062}{354 \times 8 = 2832}$$

Thus in 8 civil years the excess over 8 lunar years is $2912 - 2832 = 80$ (or simply $364 - 354 = 10$; thus $8 \times 10 = 80$).

v. Lit. "in justice," "justly."

75 a. Lit. "its."

b. B: "they do not leave from their fixed stations."

C: "they do not become separated from their deeds [actions]."

c. All MSS add "gate of heaven."

d. B and C omit "fifth."

e. Lit. "he showed."

f. C adds "forever."

the chariots of heaven—should rule in the face of the sky and be seen on the earth 4 to be guides for the day and the night.^g • Likewise Uriel showed me twelve wide openings in the sky, along the course of the chariots of the sun, from which^h the rays of the sun break out and from which heatⁱ is diffused upon the earth, when they are 5 opened during the designated seasons. • Their openings (affect) the winds and the spirit 6 of the dew,^j • (that is) when the twelve wide openings^k are opened in the sky, in the extreme ends^l of the earth, through which (also) the sun, the moon, the stars, and all 7 the (other) heavenly objects come out in the west.^m • There are many open windows to the left and the right, but one window produces the heatⁿ at its designated time in the manner of those openings through which the stars rise in accordance with their 8 orders and set according to their numbers. • I also saw chariots in heaven running in 9 the universe above those openings^o in which the stars that do not set^p revolve. • One (circuit) is larger than the rest of them all, and it circles the entire cosmos at the extreme ends of the earth.^q

The twelve winds and their gates

- 1 76 And I saw^a the twelve wide openings in all the directions^b through which the 2 winds come out and blow over the earth. • Three of them are open in the forefront^c of the sky, three in the west, three in the right of the sky,^d and three on the left;^e 3 (in other words) the first three are those on the morning side (followed by) three in the direction of the north;^f the last three are those on the left, in the direction of the 4 south (followed by) three in the west. • Through four of the (openings)^g blow out winds of blessing^h (and) through eight of them blow out winds of pestilence—when they are sent in order to destroy the whole earth, the water upon her, all those who dwell upon her, and all those which exist in the watersⁱ and the dry land.
 5 The first (group of) winds goes out from those openings called the easterly.^j Out of the first gate, which is in the direction of the east and inclines toward the south, 6 proceed extirpation, drought, pestilence,^k and destruction. • Out of the second gate, (located) directly in the center, proceed^l rain and fruitfulness together with dew.^m Out of the third gate, which is in the direction of the northeast, proceed (both) cold and drought.
 7 After these winds, there go out the southerly ones through three gates. Among these, out of the first gate, which inclines in the direction of the east, proceed the 8 winds of heat.ⁿ • Out of the central gate, which is next to it, proceed beautiful fragrance, 9 dew, rain, peace, and life. • And out of the third gate, in the direction of the west, proceed dew, rain, young locusts,^o and desolation.
 10 After these, there goes (the group) of the northerly^p winds whose name is the Sea.^q
 There proceed from the seventh gate, which is in the direction of the east, toward the

g. The section 75:1–3 is a slightly different version of the same topic in 82:4–6.

h. So B and C. A: "with which."

i. B omits the whole preceding clause and substitutes mot, "death," for mwoq, "heat."

j. Texts unclear. So A, conjecturally. B: "The winds and the spirit of the dew during the seasons when the openings in the sky are opened upon the extreme ends." C: "As for the winds and the spirit of the dew, when they are opened, open in the sky upon the extreme ends."

k. B: "I saw the twelve openings."

l. Or "end."

m. B C: "from the east and the west."

n. Lit. "heats heat."

o. B adds "and beneath them."

p. So B and C. A: "that do not watch [keep]."

q. So A.

world I saw."

b. Lit. "to all the winds."

c. I.e. "the east."

d. I.e. "the south."

e. I.e. "the north."

f. Lit. "northeast."

g. Lit. "For four of them."

h. B and C add "and of peace."

i. So B and C. A: "on the earth."

j. Lit. "the Orient."

k. B: "death." C: "heat."

l. B and C: "what is right goes out."

m. So A. B and C have salām, "peace," instead of mesla, "with," resulting in the reading "peace and dew."

n. B: "the wind of death." C: "the wind of heat."

o. Lit. "newly sloughed locusts," "baboons," "invaders," "spoilors."

p. Lit. "northeasterly."

q. Eth. baḥr.

76 a. B and C start "At the extreme ends of the

- 11 south,^r dew, rain, young locusts,^s and desolation. • Out of the central gate proceed life, rain, and dew directly;^t and out of the third gate, which is in the direction of the west, which inclines toward the northeast, proceed cloud, frost, snow, rain, dew, and young locusts.^u
- 12 After these come the fourth (group) of winds—the westerly. Out of the first gate, which is in the northeasterly direction, proceed dew, frost, cold, snow, and hoarfrost.
- 13 Out of the central gate proceed dew, rain, peace, and blessing. And out of the last gate, which is in the direction of the south, proceed drought, desolation, burning,
- 14 and destruction. • Thus the twelve openings of the four heavenly directions^v are completed; all their orders, all their evil effects,^w and all their beneficial effects^x have I revealed to you, (O) my son, Methusehah!

The four directions, the seven mountains, the seven rivers

Ezek 42:20

- 1 77 The first direction^a is called the Orient, because it is the very first.^b • The second
- 2 is called the South,^c because the Most High will descend^d there, indeed because^e the
- 3 Eternally Blessed will descend there.^f • (The third) direction^g is the Occident, its name
- 4 (means) the diminished, (because) there all the luminaries of the sky wane and descend.
- 5 The fourth direction,^h whose name is the North,ⁱ is divided into three parts: One of
- 6 them is the dwelling of human beings; the second the seas of water, lakes, forests,
- 7 rivers, darkness, and clouds; and the third part^j the garden of righteousness.
- 8 I saw seven high mountains which were higher than all the mountains of the earth;
- 9 out of them proceeds frost; and days and year(s) traverse (them) in due season.^k • I
- 10 saw seven^l rivers upon the earth, larger than all the rivers; one of them emerges from
- 11 the West^m and empties its water into the Great Sea.ⁿ • Two (others)^o come from the
- 12 Northeast to the sea and empty their water into the Erythraean Sea, in the East. • The
- 13 four remaining ones come out of the side of the Northeast to their own (respective)
- 14 seas—(two of them) to the Erythraean Sea and two of them to the Great Sea, pouring
- 15 themselves therein; some say to the seventh^p desert.^q • I (also) saw big islands in the
- 16 sea and the land^r—seventy-two in the Erythraean Sea.^s

Names of the sun and the moon; waxing and waning of the moon

- 1 78 These are the names of the sun:^a the first, 'Oryares^b and the second, Tomas.^c • The
- 2

r. The text may be corrupt. B reads "After these are the winds in the direction of the northeast, its name is bahr [the Sea], from the three seventh exits in the direction of the east which inclines toward the south . . ." Charles saw two interpolations here. Cf. EC, p. 145, nn. 36–40.

s. See n. o above.

t. B and C add "peace."

u. See n. o.

v. Lit. "openings."

w. Lit. "plagues."

x. Lit. "their peace."

77 a. Lit. "wind."

b. Cf. Heb. qedem.

c. Lit. also "Southwest."

d. Charles suggests that the Eth. 'azēb is equivalent to the Heb. dārōm, from a play on yērēd rām, "the Most High will descend."

e. B omits "indeed because." C omits "because."

f. B omits "will descend there."

g. Lit. "wind."

h. Lit. "wind."

i. Lit. "Northeast."

j. So B and C. A: "the second, rivers."

k. B C: "and days and season and year traverse (them)." B adds "and go."

l. So B and C. A omits "seven."

m. I.e. possibly the Nile, which lies southwest of the land of Israel.

n. I.e. the Mediterranean Sea.

o. Lit. "These two," possibly referring to the Euphrates and Tigris. The references to these rivers may have been omitted due to scribal errors in this defective passage.

p. So A. Only one MS of Charles, u, reads clearly "seven." Others are corrupt.

q. So B and C. A reads mabder instead of madbar, "desert." The verb bdr means "to run," "race," "prefer," etc., but mabder does not seem to have an intelligible meaning in the present context.

r. Perhaps "in the land" is an intrusion.

s. The reading of A is difficult but better. B and C read "I saw seven big islands in the sea and the land—two in the land and five in the Great Sea." Cf. also EC, p. 148, nn. 8–10. Perhaps the non-corrupted original read "I saw seven big islands—two in the Great Sea, and five in the Red Sea."

78 a. Lit. "like this."

b. Heb. 'ōr heres, "light of the sun."

c. Heb. šemeš, "sun," according to Charles. Heb. hamāh, "heat," according to Halévy.

moon has four names: Its first name is Asenya;^d its second, 'Abla;^e the third, Banase;^f and the fourth, 'Era.^g • These are the two great luminaries. Their roundness is like the roundness of the sky; and the magnitude of their roundness is equivalent for both.^h There are seven (more) portions of light that moveⁱ in the sun's sphere than in the moon's and it increases in measure until seventy^j portions of the sun are completed.^k The (moon) comes in and goes out^l by the western openings, and circles^m via the northeast and rises through the eastern openings upon the face of the earth. • When the moon (begins its cycle),ⁿ it appears in the sky one half of a seventh part; it will become fully illumined from the fourteenth (day); • it completes its illumination the fifteenth,^o becoming^p fulfilled according to the sign of the year and becoming fifteen^q parts. Thus the moon waxes^r in fifteen parts.^s • In its waning, (the moon) decreases on the first day to fourteen parts of its light; on the second day, it decreases to thirteen parts of light; on the third, to twelve parts; on the fourth, to eleven parts; on the fifth, to ten parts; on the sixth, to nine parts; on the seventh, to eight parts; on the eighth, to seven parts; on the ninth, to six parts;^t on the tenth, to five parts; on the eleventh, to four parts; on the twelfth, to three parts; on the thirteenth, to one half (of the preceding);^u on the fourteenth, all its light decreases to one half of one seventh; and on the fifteenth, all the remaining (light) disappears. • In certain fixed months, the moon completes its cycle^v every twenty-nine days, (in certain others), every twenty-eight. • Then Uriel showed me another order (concerning) when light is beamed^w into the moon, from which (direction) of the bright^x sun it is beamed. • During all the seasons when the moon is made to run its cycle,^y the light is being beamed into it (the moon) facing the sun until the illumination (of the moon) is completed in the course of fourteen days; and when it is lit completely, it radiates^z light in the sky. On the first day, it is called^{a2} the new moon because on that day the illumination begins to set upon it.^{b2} • These^{c2} (illuminations) are completed with exactitude on the day when the sun descends^{d2} into the west, and the moon (simultaneously) rises in the east in the evening,^{e2} shining during the night^{f2} until the sun rises opposite it, and it^{g2} is over against the sun. • From the same side where light entered the moon, from there

d. B C: 'Asonya. According to Halévy this word comes from Heb. 'ishôn yâh, "diminutive person," "pupil of the eye," designating the human-like figure of the moon.

e. According to Halévy, corrupted from Heb. l'bânâh, "moon."

f. B C: Benase. According to Halévy, corrupted from Heb. bën kēsêh, "full moon."

g. Cf. Heb. yârêh, "moon." For the various names of the sun and the moon given here cf. J. Halévy, "Recherches sur la langue de la rédaction primitive du livre d'Hénoch," JA 6.9 (1867), 352-95.

h. So B and C. A reads "the magnitude of their roundness is like the roundness of the sky, co-equivalent for both." "Like the roundness of the sky" seems to be a dittography. One could possibly translate the passage to read "the magnitude of their circuits is like the roundness of the sky, co-equivalent for both."

i. B C: "that is added."

j. So A, which does not seem to make sense. B C: "seventh." The meaning of the text is that when seven parts of the sun's light have been transferred to the moon, the moon is fully illuminated.

k. Lit. "passes." The text is difficult.

l. B C: "they set and come in." The masculine singular verbal form in A seems to indicate the moon.

m. B C: "they circle."

n. Lit. "when the moon comes out."

o. Lit. "three-fiveness." B and C also add: "fifteen portions of light are added into it until the fifteenth day."

p. Lit. "its light becomes."

q. Lit. "three-fiveness."

r. Lit. "becomes."

s. Lit. "half of seventh."

t. The passage from 78:8b (fol. 103v) to 82:20 (fol. 106v) has been copied twice, first as an interpolation between the end of ch. 71 (fol. 96r) and 72:1 (fol. 99r), and here, where it normally belongs. Both sections are of the same period and seem to be by the same hand; nevertheless, they are not identical. A study of their variations can contribute to an understanding of the Ethiopian scribal philosophy. Of course, no attempt is made here to deal with that problem.

u. B and C read "to two parts."

v. Lit. "the moon [or "month"] becomes."

w. Lit. "thrown," "cast," "projected."

x. Lit. "morning ["day" or "east"]." B and C omit "morning."

y. Lit. "made to go."

z. Lit. "it fulfills," "accomplishes," "executes."

a2. So B and C. A reads wasamây, "and heaven," instead of tesamay. Note here also that the feminine instead of the masculine singular is used for the moon, as elsewhere (see below) in this passage the masculine instead of the feminine singular is used for the sun.

b2. Lit. "light rises upon her." Here also the feminine form is applied to the moon.

c2. B and C drop "these."

d2. The masculine form is used for the sun.

e2. Lit. "night."

f2. B and C read "the whole night."

g2. Lit. "the moon."

also it (gradually) wanes until all the illumination disappears and the days of the moon expire, its disk empty without light.

- 15 (The moon) coordinates,^{h2} in respect to its days and seasons, (four) three-monthⁱ² (divisions). In the course of its recessionⁱ² it makes (three months each in thirty days) and three months each in twenty-nine days; during this season^{k2} it makes its recession, in the first period, (starting) in the first gate, (in) one hundred and seventy-seven days.
- 16 In the course (of) its progression,ⁱ² it appears three months each in thirty days and
- 17 three months each in twenty-nine days. •By night it appears like a man,^{m2} and by day it appears like the sky; for there is no other thing in it except its light.ⁿ²

Conclusion of the vision of astronomical laws

- 1 79 (Thus) now, my son,^a I have revealed to you everything; (so) the rules concerning
- 2 all the stars of heaven are concluded (here). •(Indeed) he showed me all their respective
- 3 rules for every day, for every season,^b and for every year; the procession of each one
- 4 according to the commandment, every month and every week. •(He showed me) the
- 5 total^c decrement (i.e. during a half lunar year) of the moon which it makes (from the
- 6 first) through the sixth gate,^d for (after) the light of^e this sixth gate is disposed of (at
- 7 the end of the series of the six gates),^f the beginning of the decrement •(i.e. during
- 8 the other half lunar year) which it makes (in returning) in the first gate takes place
- 9 in its^g own season until one hundred and seventy-seven days are fulfilled, following
- 10 the rule of (counting) weeks, twenty-five (weeks) and two days. •(The moon) falls
- 11 behind the sun according to the order of^h the stars exactly five days during one period
- 12 (i.e. one half year), and when the place which you behold has been traversed.ⁱ •Such
- 13 is the appearance and the picture of all the luminaries which Uriel the archangel,
- 14 who is their leader, showed unto me.

- 1 80 In those days, the angel Uriel responded^a and said to me, “Behold, I have shown
- 2 you everything, Enoch, and I have revealed everything to you (so that) you might see
- 3 this sun, this moon, and those that guide the stars of heaven as well as all those who
- 4 interchange^b their activities and their seasons and rotate^c their processions.
- 5 In respect to their days, the sinners and the winter^d are cut short.^e Their seed(s)^f
- 6 shall lag behind^g in their lands and in their fertile fields,^h and in all their activities
- 7 upon the earth.ⁱ He will turn^j and appear in their time,^k and withhold rain;^l and the sky
- 8 shall stand still at that time. •Then the vegetable^m shall slackenⁿ and not grow in its
- 9 season, and the fruit^o shall not be born^p in its (proper) season. •The moon shall alter

h2. So A. Lit. “It unites,” “It combines,” “It associates.” Other MSS: “It makes.”

i2. So A. B C: “and three months it makes thirty days in its season(s).”

j2. I.e. as it moves from gate six to one. Lit. “when it is waning,” “when it is receding.”

k2. Lit. “which in them.”

l2. I.e. as it moves from gate one to six. Lit. “in the (due) season, its coming out.”

m2. B and C add “for twenty days.”

n2. In the last two sentences, the moon is again described in feminine gender.

79 a. B adds “Methuselah.”

b. B and C add “of every authority.”

c. Lit. “in all,” or “in everything.” B and C omit “in all,” or “in everything.”

d. Lit. “in the sixth gate” or “by the sixth gate.” The passage could be translated “the total decrement of the moon which it makes by the sixth gate.”

e. Lit. “her light,” i.e. the light of the sixth gate.

f. Lit. “after these” or “from these.”

g. Lit. “her,” i.e. the first gate’s season.

h. So A and B. C reads lašer’āta, “(for) the order of,” instead of bašer’āta. Cf. EC, p. 152, n. 1.

i. Lit. “completed.”

80 a. Lit. “answered me.”

b. Lit. “turn.”

c. B and C omit “and rotate [turn].”

d. Lit. “rainy season.”

e. Lit. “In respect to the days of the sinners and the winter, they are cut short.” B and C read “In the days of sinners the winters [“seasons,” “years”] are cut short.”

f. The term “seeds” has a double entendre here: it can mean “their offspring” or “the seeds they sow.”

g. Lit. “it shall become the last.”

h. B: “plowed fields.”

i. B C: “all the activities upon the earth shall alter.”

j. So A. For B and C see preceding note.

k. B: “He will not appear in his [its] time.” C: “He will not appear for their times.”

l. B C: “rain will be withheld.”

m. Lit. “fruit of the ground.”

n. Lit. “shall become the last one.”

o. Lit. “fruit of the tree.”

p. Lit. “shall be withheld.”

5 its order, and will not be seen according to its (normal) cycles. •In those days it will appear in the sky^a and it shall arrive in the evening^g in the extreme ends of the great lunar path,^h in the west. And it shall shine (more brightly), exceeding the normal
6 degree of light.ⁱ •Many of the chiefs of the stars shall make errors in respect to the orders given to them; they shall change their courses and functions and not appear
7 during the seasons which have been prescribed for them. •All the orders of the stars shall harden (in disposition) against the sinners and the conscience of those that dwell upon the earth. They (the stars) shall err against them (the sinners); and modify all their courses. Then they (the sinners) shall err and take them (the stars) to be gods.
8 And evil things shall be multiplied upon them; and plagues shall come upon them, so as to destroy all.

The heavenly book and Enoch's mission

1 81 Then he said unto me, "Enoch, look at the^a tablet(s)^b of heaven; read what is
2 written upon them and understand (each element on them) one by one. •So I looked at the tablet(s) of heaven, read all the writing (on them), and came to understand everything. I read that^c book and^d all the deeds of humanity and all the children of 3 the flesh upon the earth for^e all the generations of the world. •At that very moment, I blessed the Great Lord, the King of Glory for ever, for he has created all the phenomena in the world. I praised the Lord because of his patience; and I wept on 4 account of the children of the people upon the earth.^f •After that, I said:

Blessed is the man who dies righteous and upright, against whom no record^g of oppression has been written,
and who received no judgment on that day.^h

5 Then the seven holy onesⁱ brought me^j and placed me on the ground in front of the gate of my house, and said to me, "Make everything known to your son, Methuselah, and show to all your children that no one of the flesh can be just before the Lord; for 6 they are merely his own creation.^k •We shall let you stay with your son^l for one year, so that you may teach your children another law^m and write it down for them and give all of themⁿ a warning;^o and in the second year, you shall be taken away from (among)
7 all of them.^p •Let your heart be strong! For the upright shall announce righteousness to the upright; and the righteous ones shall rejoice with the righteous ones and 8 congratulate each other.^q •But the sinners shall die together with the sinners; and the 9 apostate shall sink together with the apostate. •But those who do right shall not die^r on account of the (evil) deeds of the people; it^s will gather on account of the deeds
10 of the evil ones."^t •In those days, (those seven holy ones) concluded speaking with me; and then I returned to my people, blessing the Lord of the universe.

Job 9:2;
Ps 14:1

2Kgs 22:20;
Isa 57:1;
WisSol
4:7-14

q. Charles, following Halévy, suggests "the sun" instead of "the sky." See EC, p. 153, n. 1.

r. Text reads "drought," "famine." But Charles, following Halévy, has suggested perhaps correctly that the Eth. 'abār, corresponding to Heb. rā'āb, "hunger," is a corruption of the Heb. ereb, "evening," attributable to the Gk. translator. Cf. EC, p. 153, nn. 1, 2.

s. Lit. "chariot."

t. Lit. "the order of light."

81 a. B C: "this."

b. Lit. "slate," "polished and flat stone," "brick," "tile," "stone-table."

c. B and C omit "that."

d. B C: "of."

e. Lit. "unto."

f. Lit. "I wept upon the earth on account of the children of the people." B and C read "I blessed" instead of "I wept on account of," "upon the children of the people" instead of "upon the earth," thus giving the reading "I blessed upon the children of the people."

g. Lit. "book."

h. B: "Upon whom no guile has been found." C: "Who did not find the day of judgment."

i. All MSS add "they."

j. A omits "me."

k. Lit. "for he has created them."

l. Lit. "We shall leave you with your son."

m. B C: "until you give other commandments, that you may teach your children."

n. Lit. "all of your children."

o. Lit. "make all of your children hear [understand]."

p. Lit. "they shall take you away from all of them." B and C read "from their midst" instead of "from all of them."

q. Or "present each other with gifts."

r. B C: "shall die on account of the deeds of the people."

s. I.e. the flood water.

t. B C: "they will assemble on account of the deeds of the evil ones."

Additional astronomical-calendrical visions

- 1 82 Now, Methuselah, my son, I shall recount all these things to you and write them down for you. I have revealed to you^a and given you the book^b concerning all these things. Preserve, my son, the book from your father's hands in order that you may
- 2 pass^c it to the generations of the world. •I have given wisdom to you, to your children, and to those who shall become your children in order that they may pass it (in turn) to their own children and to the generations that are discerning.^d All the wise ones
- 3 shall give praise,^e and wisdom shall dwell upon your consciousness;^f •they shall not slumber but be thinking;^g they shall cause their ears to listen in order that they may learn this wisdom; and it shall please those who feast on it^h more than good food.
- 4 Blessed are all the righteous ones; blessed are those who walk in the street of righteousnessⁱ and have no sin like the sinners in the computation of the days in which the sun goes its course in the sky. It (the sun) comes in through a door^j and rises for thirty^k days together with the chiefs of the thousands of the orders of the stars, together with the four which are added to determine^l the intervals within (the year, that is, the intervals) between the four seasons^m of the year;ⁿ those that lead them along^o come
- 5 in on four^p days. •On this account there are people that err; they count them (the four?) in the computation of the year;^q for the people make error and do not recognize
- 6 them accurately; for they belong to the reckoning of the year. •Truly, they are recorded forever: one in the first gate, one in the third,^r one in the fourth, and one in the sixth. The year is completed in three hundred and sixty-four days.^s
- 7 True is the matter of the exact computation of that which has been recorded; for Uriel—whom the Lord of all the creation of the world has ordered for me (in order to explain)^t the host of heaven—has revealed to me and breathed over me concerning
- 8 the luminaries, the months, the festivals, the years, and the days. •He has the power in the heaven both day and night so that he may cause the light to shine over the people—sun, moon, and stars, and all the principalities of the heaven which revolve
- 9 in their (respective) circuits. •These are the orders of the stars which set in their (respective) places, seasons, festivals, and months. •And these are the names of those which lead the ones that come out and go down^u in their (appointed) seasons, which lead them in their (respective) places, orders, times, months, authorities, and locations.
- 11 The four leaders^v which distinguish the four seasons of the year enter first; after them (enter) the twelve leaders of the orders which distinguish the months; and the three hundred and sixty captains^w which divide the days and the four epagomenal days,
- 12 (and) leaders which divide the four seasons of the year. •These captains over thousands are added between leader and leader, each behind a place to stand; but their leaders
- 13 make the division. •And these are the names of the leaders which divide the four seasons^x of the years which are fixed: Malki'ēl, Hēla'emmēlek, Milāy'ul, and Nārēl.^y
- 14 The names of those who lead them are 'Adnār'ul, 'Iyāsus'ēl, 'Ēlum'ēl—these three

Ps 78:5f.

Pss 19:10;
119:103

82 a. B and C add "all these things."

b. Lit. "their book."

c. Lit. "give."

d. B and C read "this wisdom upon their consciousness."

e. Possibly yesēbehu is a corruption for yelabewu, "they shall have understanding."

f. So A. These phrases are omitted altogether by B and C.

g. B C: "those who are thinking [understanding] do not slumber."

h. Lit. "to those who eat."

i. B: "Blessed are all the righteous ones; blessed are all who walk in the street of righteousness." C: "Blessed are all the righteous ones who walk in the street of righteousness."

j. Eth. 'anqas.

k. So B and C. A reads "three."

l. Lit. "which shade." B C: "which divide."

m. Lit. "parts."

n. So B and C. A does not show construct relationship of "part" and "year." However, B and C read simply "which divide between the four parts of the year."

o. Lit. "together with them."

p. So B and C. A reads "forty."

q. B C: "they do not count them in the reckoning of the whole world."

r. C adds "exit."

s. The section 82:4–6 is a slightly different version of the same topic in 75:1–3.

t. Cf. EC, p. 156, nn. 39, 40.

u. B C: "... of those which lead the ones that keep and come in . . ."

v. B C: "Their four leaders."

w. Lit. "chiefs of one thousand."

x. Lit. "parts."

y. B C: Melk'ēl [C: Milki'ēl]; Hel'emmēlek [C: Hel'emmēlek]; Mēl'ēyal; and Nāfēl [C: Nārel].

z. B C: 'Adnār'ēl [C: 'Adnār'ēl]; 'Iyasuā'ēl [C: 'Iyasusa'ēl]; and 'Iyelumē'ēl [C: 'Ēlomē'ēl].

follow the leaders of the orders, as well as the four^{m2} which follow after the three leaders of the orders, which follow after those leaders of the stations that divide the 15 four seasons of the year. •At the very beginning,^{b2} Malkiyāl,^{c2} whose name is called Tam'ayen^{d2}—and the sun—rises and rules; and all the days of his authority—during 16 which he reigns—are ninety-one days. •And these are the signs of the days which become manifest during the period of his authority: sweat, heat, and dryness;^{e2} all the trees bear fruit (and) leaves grow on all trees; (there will be) good harvest,^{f2} rose flowers, and all the flowers which grow in the field; but the winter tree^{g2} shall wither.
 17 And these are the names of the leaders which are their subordinates: Berkā'ēl, Zalebsā'ēl,^{h2} and another additional one, a captain of a thousand, named Hēluyāsāfⁱ²—
 18 the days of the authority of this one have been completed. •The next leader after him is Helā'emmemēlēk,^{j2} whose name they call the bright sun; and all the days of his light
 19 are ninety-one days. •And these are the days of signs upon signs^{k2} upon the earth: scorching heat and drought; and trees will produce their glowing fruits^{l2} and impart of their ripened ones;^{m2} the sheep shall seek (one another) and become pregnant; and all the fruits of the earth are gathered in, and all that is in the fields as well as the 20 winepress. (These things) shall take place in the days of his authority. •These are the names, the orders, and the subordinatesⁿ² of those captains over thousands: Gēda'iyāl, Hēlyā'ēl, and Kī'ēl;^{o2} and the name of the one that is added together with them is a captain over a thousand called 'Asfā'ēl^{p2}—the days of the authority of this one have been completed.

Book IV (83–90) The Dream Visions

Vision of the Deluge

1 83 (Book) Four. •Now, my son Methuselah, I will show you all the visions^a which 2 I saw,^c recounting them before you. •I saw two (visions) before I got married;^d and neither one of them resembles the other: The first one (I saw) when I (was beginning to) learn book(s), and the second, before I got married to^e your mother. First,^f I saw 3 a scary vision regarding which^g I prayed to the Lord. •I was (then) sleeping^h in my grandfather Mahalalel's house, andⁱ I saw in a vision the sky being hurled down and 4 snatched and falling upon the earth. •When it fell upon the earth, I saw the earth being swallowed up^j into the great abyss, the mountains being suspended upon mountains, the hills sinking down upon the hills, and tall trees being uprooted^k and thrown and 5 sinking into the deep abyss. •Thereupon a word^l fell into my mouth; and I began 6 crying aloud, saying, "The earth is being destroyed." •Then my grandfather, Mahalalel, woke me up while I was sleeping together with him^m and said to me,

a2. B C: "one."

b2. Lit. "Before the first." B C: "Before the first year."

c2. B C: Melkyāl.

d2. B: Tam'ana. C: Tam'ayeni.

e2. Or "sorrow." C reads wazāhen, "rest," "calm." The word hazan in A and B could also be a corruption of wahāzyān, "springs," "fountains."

f2. B C: "harvest of wheat."

g2. Lit. "the tree of the rainy season."

h2. B C: Berke'ēl [C: Berka'el], Zēlebsā'ēl [C: Zēlebse'ēl].

i2. B: Hēluyāsēf. C: Hēluyasef.

j2. B: Hēlemmemēlēk. C: Helemmemēlek.

k2. B C: "the signs of the day."

l2. B: "glowing and ripe."

m2. Lit. "their ripened fruits." B: "their dried fruits." C: "their glowing and ripened fruits."

n2. C omits "the subordinates."

o2. B C: Gedā'eyāl [C: Gidā'iyal], Kē'ēl, and Hē'ēl.

p2. B: 'Esfā'ēl.

83 a. So A. B reads kefl, "part." C omits both.

b. C: "my visions."

c. So B and C. A reads "all the visions, but the visions, which I saw."

d. Lit. "I took a wife."

e. Lit. "I took."

f. B and C omit "First."

g. B C: "regarding them."

h. Or "lying still," "lying down," "resting."

i. B and C omit "and."

j. A: "being heaped[?]."

k. Lit. "being cut from their stems."

l. Or "a speech," "a statement."

m. B C: "by [near] him."

“What happened to you that you are crying aloud like this, my son, and why are you lamenting in this manner?” •And I recounted to him the whole vision which I had seen. And he said unto me, “How terrifying a thing have you seen, my son! You have seen in your dream^a a powerful vision—all the sins of the whole world^b as it was sinking into the abyss and being destroyed with great destruction. •Now, my son, rise and pray to the Lord of glory, for you are a man of faith, so that a remnant shall remain upon the earth and that the whole earth shall not be blotted out.”^p •My son, all the things upon the earth shall take place from heaven; and there will occur a great destruction upon the earth. •After that, I rose and prayed, made a petition, and begged; and I wrote down all the prayers of the generations of the world.^q I will show you everything, my son, Methuselah. •Had^r I descended underneath and seen the sky, the sun rising in the east, the moon descending in the west, the diminishing of the stars, and the whole earth, I would have recognized^s everything upon her.^t So I blessed the Lord of judgment and extolled him. For he has made the sun to come out from the windows of the east; so it ascended and rose upon the face of the sky, starting to go the way that it was shown.

1 84 Then I raised up my hands in righteousness and blessed the Holy and Great One; and I spoke with the breath of my mouth and the tongue of flesh which God has made for the children of the flesh, the people, so that they should speak with it; he gave them the breath and the mouth so that they should speak with it.

2 Blessed are you, O Great King, you are mighty in your greatness,
O Lord of all the creation of heaven,
King of kings and God of the whole world.
Your authority^a and kingdom^b abide forever and ever;
and your dominion throughout all the generations of generations;
all the heavens are your throne forever,
and the whole earth is your footstool forever and ever and ever.
3 For you have created (all),
and all things you rule;
not a single thing is hard for you—(absolutely) not a single thing^c or wisdom;^d
Your throne has not retreated from her station^e nor from before your presence.^f
Everything you know, you see, and you hear;
nothing exists that can be hidden from you, for everything you expose.^g 4 The angels of your heavens are now committing sin (upon the earth), and your wrath shall rest^h upon the flesh of the people until (the arrival of) the great day of judgment

Isa 66:1

5 “Now, O God, and Lord and Great King, I pray and beg so that you may sustain my prayer andⁱ save for me (a generation) that will succeed me in the earth; and do not destroy all the flesh of the people and empty the earth (so that) there shall be eternal destruction. •Do now destroy, O my Lord, the flesh that has angered you from upon the earth, but sustain the flesh of righteousness and uprightness as a plant of eternal seed; and hide not your face from the prayer of your servant, O Lord.”

n. Lit. “You have dreamed.” B and C: “your dream.”

o. B C: “the secret of the sins of the whole world.”

p. C: “that he may not blot out.”

q. B C: “and I wrote down my prayers for the generations of the world.”

r. A unclear. B C: “When.”

s. Cf. EC, p. 161, nn. 9–12.

t. B C: “he had known it in the beginning.”

b. B and C add “your greatness.”

c. B and C omit “thing.”

d. B has a meaningless word, qa'ab.

e. Lit. “condition,” “state of life,” “age,” “nourishment . . .”

f. The whole clause is a difficult one. C reads: “Wisdom does not depart from the place of your throne, nor turn away from your presence.” Concerning this emendation see EC, p. 162, nn. 12f.

g. B C: “you see.”

h. Lit. “become,” “happen,” “take place.”

i. All MSS add “so that.”

84 a. Or “dominion,” “divinity,” “kingship.”

Vision of various cows

1 85 After this, I saw another dream; and I will show you everything,^a my son. • Then
2 Enoch responded^b and said to his son, Methuselah: I shall speak to you, my son, hear
3 my words and incline your ears to the dream vision of your father. • Before I married
4 your mother, Edna, I was seeing a vision on my bed, and behold a cow^c emerged^d
5 from the earth, and that bovid was snow-white;^e and after it, there came forth one 6 female calf together with two other calves, one of which was dark and the other^f red.
7 •The dark calf gored that red calf and pursued it over the earth; thereafter I was not
8 able to see^g that red calf. •But the dark calf grew big, and it brought along^h that female 9 calf; and I saw that many bovinds, which resembled it, proceeded forth from it, and 10 followed after them.ⁱ •That first heifer^j departed from before the face of that first bovid,^k and looked for that red calf, but could not find it; so she lamented over it with great lamentation, in searching for it. •I kept looking until that first cow came^l and quieted her; from that moment, she stopped crying. •After that she bore two snow-white cows;^m and after it she bore many more cows as well as dark heifers. •I also saw in my sleep that snow-white bull, and he grew big likewise and became a great snow-white bull; and there proceeded forth from him many snow-white cows which resembled him. •Then they began to give birth to many snow-white cows which resembled them, each one following many others."

Vision of the fallen stars among the cows

1 86 Again I saw (a vision) with my own eyes as I was sleeping, and saw the lofty
2 heaven; and as I looked, behold, a star fell down from heaven but (managed) to rise
3 and eat and to be pastured among those cows. •Then I saw these big and dark cows, 4 and behold they all changed their cattle-sheds, their pastures, and their calves; and 5 they began to lament^a with each other.^b •Once again I saw a vision, and I observed 6 the sky and behold, I saw^c many stars descending and casting themselves down from 7 the sky upon that first star; and they became bovinds among those calves and were 8 pastured together with them, in their midst. •I kept observing, and behold, I saw all 9 of them extending^d their sexual organs like horses and commencing to mount upon 10 the heifers, the bovinds;^e and they (the latter) all became pregnant and bore elephants, camels, and donkeys. •So (the cattle) became fearful and frightened of them and began to bite with their teeth and swallow and to gore with their horns. •Then they began to eat those bovinds. And behold, all the children of the earth began to tremble and to shake before them and to flee from them.

Vision of four heavenly beings

1 87 Again I saw them commencing to gore and devour one another; so the earth
2 began to cry aloud. •And I lifted my eyes unto heaven and saw a vision: And behold,
3 there came forth^a from heaven (a being) in the form of a snow-white person—one 4 came out of that place and three (others) with him.^b •Those ones^c which had come out last seized me by my hand and took me^d from the generations of the earth, lifted 85 a. C adds "the whole dream."

b. B C: "took up."

c. The Eth. āhm (pl. āhmt, "cattle") refers to a bovine animal regardless of age or sex.

d. Masculine singular verb.

e. The Eth. ḡā'ādā refers to "snow-white, bright, pure." The word does not normally describe a person's color.

f. Lit. "one."

g. A reads "to see them."

h. B C: "she came."

i. B C: "followed after it."

j. B C: "That female heifer that first one."

k. The qualifying adjectives are in masculine form.

l. A adds "to it." B and C add "to her."

m. B C: "another snow-white cow."

n. Lit. "the other many."

86 a. C: "to live."

b. But cf. EC, p. 165, n. 12.

c. A repeats "I saw."

d. Lit. "bringing out."

e. C: "the heifers of the bovinds."

87 a. A: "he came forth." B C: "they came forth."

b. So B. A reads "four came out of that place and three with him." C reads "four came out of that place and three with them."

c. B C: "Those three."

d. B C: "raised me."

me up into a high place, and showed me a high tower above the earth,^c and all the hills were firm.^f • (One of them) said to me, "Stay here until you see everything that will happen to these elephants, camels, and donkeys, as well as to the stars and to the bovids—all of them."

Vision of the punishment of the fallen stars

1 88 I then saw one of those four who had come out earlier seizing that first star, binding his hands and feet, and throwing him into an abyss—this abyss was narrow and deep, empty^a and dark. • Also one of them drew a sword and gave it to those elephants, camels,^b and donkeys; then they began to attack one another, and on account of them the whole earth was quaking. • And as I continued to see in the vision, behold, from that time, one of the four, among those who had come out, was stoning from the sky, and gathering and taking away all the mighty^c stars, whose sexual organs were like the sexual organs of horses; then he bound all of them hand and foot, and cast them into the pits of the earth.

The Great Flood

1 89 Then one of those four went to those snow-white bovids^a and taught (one of them) a secret: he was born a bovid but became a person; and he built for himself a big boat^b and dwelt upon it. Three cows dwelt together with him in that boat, and that boat^c was covered (over) them. • Again I raised my eyes toward heaven, and saw a lofty ceiling with seven cascading streams upon it; and those cascading streams^d flowed with much water into one enclosed area. • Again I saw, and behold, fountains were opened upon the ground of that great enclosed area, and the water began to swell and rise upon the ground; and I saw that enclosed area until the whole ground was (completely) covered with water. • Water, darkness, and mist accumulated heavily upon it; and I looked at the ascent of that water going up and up until^e it rose above that enclosed area, and was streaming above the enclosed area;^f thus it was standing above the ground. • And everything^g that was in the enclosed area;^h and (all those on the ground) were gathered together until I saw them sinking, being swallowed up, and perishing in that water. • Yet that boat was floating above the water, though all the cattle, elephants, camels, and donkeys were sinking to the bottom; so I could (no longer) see any one of the animals (for) they had no ability to come out but (only) to perish and sink into the deep water.ⁱ • Again I kept seeing in the vision until those cascading streams were dissipated from that high ceiling, the fountains of the earth were normalized, and other pits^j were opened. • Then the water began to descend into them until the ground became visible,^k that boat settled upon the earth, the darkness vanished, and it became light. • Then the snow-white cow which became a man^l came out from that boat together with three cows. One of those three cows was snow-white, similar to that (first) cow, and one of them red like blood.^m Now that (first) snow-white cow departed from them.

e. So B and C. A reads 'emdehera, "after," instead of 'emmedera.

f. So A. B C: "every hill was small."

88 a. B C: "serious," "difficult."

b. So B and C. A omits "camels."

c. Lit. "stem," "powerful." B C: "great." 4QEn^c: "many." Cf. Milik, The Books of Enoch, pp. 238f. It is possible that 'azizāna (A) is a corruption of bezuḥāna, "many."

89 a. C: "that . . . bovid."

b. A reads wrongly mešrāqa, "East," instead of maqāra. Cf. 4QEn^c, 'arb ḥādah, "a boat," "a ship."

c. B and C omit "that boat."

d. 4QEn^c: "[and I] was looking and, behold, seven sluices pouring out [on the earth much water]." So Milik, The Books of Enoch, p. 238.

e. B and C omit "going up and up until."

f. A has the Eth. number "nine" (or "nine times"?) at the end of this sentence.

g. B C: "all the cows." Cf. also 4QEn^c. See following n.

h. Milik contends that the Eth. (vss. 4–5a) is "much more developed" than the Aram., which he reconstructs "[. . . And] I was looking until the earth was covered by the waters [and by darkness and mist, and they were] standing upon it," starting with vs. 3. See Milik, The Books of Enoch, p. 238.

i. Lit. "depth," "lake."

j. Milik, The Books of Enoch, p. 241: "chambers."

k. Milik, The Books of Enoch, pp. 241f.: "until [the waters] vanished."

l. According to Milik, this clause, "which became a man," is not original. Cf. The Books of Enoch, pp. 241f.

m. B and C add: "and one black."

From the Flood to the exodus

10 Then they began to bear the beasts of the fields and the birds. There arose out of them all classes of population: lions, leopards, wolves,ⁿ snakes,^o hyenas, wild boars, foxes, squirrels,^p swine, hawks, eagles,^q kites,^r striped crow(s),^s and ravens. Among 11 them there was also born a snow-white cow. •Then they began to bite^t one another among themselves. That snow-white cow which was born in their midst begat a wild
 12 ass,^u and a snow-white cow with it; and the wild asses multiplied. •And that cow^w which was born from him bore a black wild boar and a snow-white sheep;^w the former
 13 then bore healthy beasts^x and the latter^y bore twelve sheep. •When those twelve sheep had grown up, they gave away one of their own members^z to the donkeys, which^{a2} in turn gave him^{b2} away to the wolves;^{c2} so this sheep grew up in the midst of the 14 wolves.^{d2} •Then the Lord^{e2} brought the eleven sheep to dwell with him, and to pasture^{f2} in the midst of the wolves; and they multiplied and became many flocks of sheep.
 15 Then the wolves began to fear^{g2} them; so they tortured them until their little ones were being killed (for) they cast away their little ones into a river of great quantity of water. So those sheep began to cry aloud on behalf of their little ones and to complain unto 16 their Lord. •Then one sheep which had been saved from the wolves fled and escaped^{h2} to the wild asses. But I saw the sheep continuing to lament and cry aloud; and they kept praying to their Lord with all their strength until the Lord of the sheep descended 17 at their entreatment,ⁱ² from a lofty palace, arriving to visit^{j2} them. •He called that sheep which had escaped from the wolves and told him concerning the wolves that
 18 he should warn the wolves not to touch the sheep. •The sheep then went to the wolves in accordance with the word of the Lord, together with another sheep which he had met,^{k2} so the two of them went on and arrived together into the assembly of those 19 wolves, and spoke to them and warned them not to touch the sheep. •But thenceforth I saw how the wolves even intensified their pressure upon the sheep.^{l2} They, the sheep,
 20 cried aloud—they cried aloud with all their strength. •Then their Lord came to (the rescue of) the sheep, whereupon they began to whip those wolves. So the wolves began to make lamentations, but the sheep thereafter became quiet and stopped crying
 21 aloud. •I continued to see the sheep until they departed from (the presence) of the wolves, and the wolves (until) their eyes were dazzled; yet the wolves went out to 22 pursue those sheep, with all their might. •But the Lord of the sheep went with them as their leader, while all his sheep were following him; his face was glorious, adorable,
 23 and marvelous to behold. •As for the wolves, they continued^{m2} to pursue those sheep until they found them at a certain pool of water. •Then the pool of water was rent asunder, and the water stood apart on this and on that side before their very eyes,ⁿ²
 25 and their Lord, their leader, stood between them and the wolves. •Those wolves were still not able to see the sheep, and (the sheep) walked through that pool of water; then 26 the wolves followed the sheep and ran after them into that pool of water. •Then when they saw the Lord of the sheep, they turned in order to flee from before his face. But

n. Or "hyenas."

o. B C: "dogs."

p. A wrongly reads gizēyāt, "times," instead of gahayāt.

q. B reads "vultures."

r. Or "baboons." The Eth. is ambiguous in that the term hobāy can mean either "kite" or "baboon."

s. Or "colobus monkey." The Eth. is ambiguous in that the term feqens of A (cf. foqānes, fonqās) can mean "colobus monkey" or "striped bird ['crow']."

t. 4QEn^d: "to bite and chase."

u. Or "zebra."

v. 4QEn^c: "a calf." So Milik, The Books of Enoch, p. 241.

w. Milik suggests the reading of 4QEn^d as "a ram] of the flock." Cf. also 4QEn^c (The Books of Enoch, p. 241).

x. B C: "bore many wild boars."

y. Lit. "that sheep."

z. Lit. "one of them."

a2. Lit. "those." B C: "those donkeys."

b2. Lit. "that sheep."

c2. Or "hyenas."

d2. Or "hyenas."

e2. 4QEn^c: "the ram." So Milik, The Books of Enoch, pp. 241f.

f2. C adds: "with him."

g2. 4QEn^c: "to oppress." So Milik, The Books of Enoch, p. 241.

h2. Lit. "passed."

i2. Lit. "at the voice of the sheep."

j2. Verb not clear.

k2. Lit. "and he met another sheep and went with him."

l2. B and C add "with all their strength."

m2. Lit. "they began."

n2. Lit. "before their face."

that pool of water gathered itself together and immediately returned to its normal state,^{o2} the water became full and rose high until it covered (completely) those wolves.
 27 Thus I saw till the wolves^{s2} which pursued those sheep perished and were drowned.^{u2}

From the exodus to the entrance to the land of Canaan

28 So the sheep proceeded past that water and arrived in the desert, where there was no water or grass;^{r2} but they began to open their eyes^{s2} and see. Then I saw the Lord of the sheep bringing them to a pasture and giving them grass and water. Also that
 29 sheep was leading them as they were proceeding forward.^{l2} • That sheep then ascended to the summit of that lofty rock; and the Lord of the sheep sent (him)^{u2} to them^{r2}
 30 After that, I saw the Lord of the sheep, who stood before them; his appearance was majestic, marvelous, and powerful; all those sheep beheld him and were afraid before
 31 his face. • All of them feared and trembled because of him, and cried aloud to that sheep (who was) leading them and to the other sheep who was also in their midst,^{u2}
 32 saying,^{r2} "We are not able to stand before the presence of our Lord and to look at him."^{r2} • Then that sheep which was leading them turned back and (again) ascended
 33 to the summit of that rock; meanwhile the sheep began to be dim-sighted in their eyes, and went astray from the path which he had shown them; but that sheep was not aware
 34 of it. • So the Lord of the sheep became angry at them with great wrath; and that sheep became aware of it, and having descended from the summit of that rock, came to the 35 sheep and found that the majority of them had been blinded in their eyes and gone astray. • And those who saw^{r2} him became afraid, trembling in his presence, and
 36 wanted to return to their folds. • So that sheep took some other different sheep together with them^{r2} and came to those sheep which had gone astray, slaying them;^{a3} and the 37 sheep became frightened in his presence. He, that sheep, thus caused those sheep which went astray to return, and brought them back^{b3} into their folds. • I continued
 38 to see in that vision till that sheep was transformed^{c3} into a man and built a house for the Lord of the sheep, and placed the sheep in it.^{d3} • I, moreover, continued to see until 39 that sheep, which had met the sheep that was their leader, fell asleep and all the senior sheep perished, junior ones rising to take their places. Then coming into a pasture,
 40 they approached a stream of water. • (There) that sheep who was leading them—the one who had become a man—departed from them, and all of them went to sleep.^{e3}
 (Then the rest of) the sheep sought him; and there took place^{f3} a great cry over him.
 And I kept looking till they quieted down from crying for that sheep, crossed that stream of water, and all of the sheep stopped. Those who were leading them made agreements with those whom they found,^{g3} and they led them.^{h3} • I still kept seeing the sheep till they arrived at a very pleasant place and in a land beautiful and glorious; I saw those sheep being satiated; and that house was in their midst in the beautiful land, by which their eyes become opened.

o2. Lit. "it became its own creation."

p2. B C: "all the wolves."

q2. 4QEn^r: "the waters covered them over." So Milik, The Books of Enoch, pp. 243f.

r2. Milik restores 4QEn^r: "water to drink [and grass to eat]." Cf. The Books of Enoch, pp. 243f.

s2. So B and C. A reads "they do not open their eyes." 4QEn^r: "and their eyes were opened."

t2. B C: "as he was going." Cf. 4QEn^r. Milik (The Books of Enoch, p. 244) contends that "the phrase 'and the sheep walked and guided them' [so Milik] was not in the Aramaic text, perhaps omitted by homoeoteleuton . . ."

u2. A possible rendition is "and the Lord of the sheep sent (his Torah) to them."

v2. On the basis of his restoration of 4QEn^r, Milik adds "and they all stood at [a distance]." See Milik, The Books of Enoch, p. 244.

w2. B: ". . . to that sheep which was with him, to the other sheep which was in their midst." C:

". . . to that sheep with them, which was in their midst." Cf. 4QEn^r (Milik, The Books of Enoch, p. 204f.).

x2. B and C omit "saying."

y2. B C: "And when they saw."

z2. B C: "with him."

a3. B C: "began to slay them."

b3. B C: "they came back."

c3. Lit. "became."

d3. B C: "in that house."

e3. So A. B C: "and he went to sleep ['lay down']."

f3. Lit. "came."

g3. B: "those who had slept."

h3. So B. A: marhewomu, "their key," instead of marhewomu. The whole sentence seems to be corrupt. Charles has emended it to read "There arose two sheep who were leading them, taking the place of those who slept and were leading them." EC, p. 173.

From Judges to the building of the Temple

41 And when their eyes become dim-sightedⁱ³ until another sheep arose and led them, 42 they would all return and their eyes became opened. •Now the dogs, foxes, and the wild boars began to devour those sheep till the Lord of the sheep raised up another 43 sheep,^{j3} one from among them—a ram which would lead them. •That ram began to fight on all sides^{k3} those dogs, foxes, and wild boars until he destroyed all of them.
 44 Then that sheep had his eyes opened;^{j3} and he saw that ram which was among the sheep, how^{m3} he abandoned his own glory and began to attack those sheep, to trampleⁿ³ 45 upon them, and went away without dignity. •So the Lord of the sheep sent the sheepⁿ³ to another sheep^{o3} and promoted him to become a ram and lead the sheep in place of 46 that sheep^{p3} which had abandoned his own glory. •After having gone to him, he spoke to him privately^{q3} and raised^{r3} that ram, making him a judge^{s3} and a leader of the 47 people—throughout (this time) the dogs were continuing to covet the sheep. •The first ram then persecuted that second^{t3} ram, so that latter ram arose and escaped from before his (the former's) presence; and then I continued to look until those dogs toppled that 48 first sheep. •But that second ram arose and led the little sheep.^{u3} That ram begat many sheep and fell asleep before^{v3} a little sheep became a ram in his place, a judge and 49 a leader of those sheep. •Those sheep grew and multiplied, but all those dogs, foxes, and wild boars feared and fled before him. That ram attacked and killed all the wild beasts; and all the wild beasts were no longer able to return among the sheep or to 50 rob absolutely anything from them. •Then that house became great and spacious; a lofty building^{w3} was built upon it^{x3} for that sheep, as well as a tall and great tower upon it^{y3} for the Lord of the sheep; that house was low but the tower was really elevated and lofty. Then the Lord of the sheep stood upon that tower, and they offered a full table^{z3} before him.

The two kingdoms of Israel and Judah: the destruction of Jerusalem

51 Again I saw those sheep, how they went astray, going in diverse ways and abandoning that house of his.^{a4} Then the Lord of the sheep called some from among 52 the sheep and sent them to the sheep, but the sheep began to slay them. •However, one of them was not killed but escaped alive^{b4} and fled away;^{c4} he cried aloud to^{d4} the sheep, and they wanted to kill him, but the Lord of the sheep rescued him from the 53 sheep and caused him to ascend to me and settle down. •He sent many other sheep 54 to those sheep to testify to them and to lament over them. •Thereafter I saw that, when they abandoned the house of the Lord and his tower, they went astray completely, and their eyes became blindfolded. Then I saw the Lord of the sheep, how he executed much slaughter upon them, in their flocks, until those sheep (began to) invoke^{e4} that 55 slaughter, and he^{f4} vindicated^{g4} his place.^{h4} •He left them in the hands of the lions, leopards, and wolves, hyenas, as well as in the hands of the foxes and toⁱ⁴ all the wild beasts; and these wild beasts of the wilderness began to tear those sheep into pieces.
 56 I saw how he left that house of theirs and that tower of theirs and cast all of them

i3. Text is difficult. C: "at times their eyes were opened and at times dim-sighted."

j3. So C. Cf. the Vatican Gk. fragment. A and B read "till arose the Lord of the sheep . . ."

k3. A: "from here." B C: "from here and from here."

l3. C: "whose eyes were opened."

m3. Lit. "who."

n3. G: "lamb."

o3. G: "lamb."

p3. C: "that ram."

q3. Lit. "by themselves alone."

r3. So B and C (cf. G). A: "he replied . . ."

s3. So B and C. G: "lord." A: "place," or "location . . ."

t3. Lit. "latter."

u3. G reads "led the sheep."

v3. Lit. "and."

w3. B: "tower." C omits both.

x3. Lit. "upon that house."

y3. Lit. "built upon that house."

z3. So B and C. A: "a full tower."

a4. B C: "their house."

b4. Lit. "he was safe and was not killed."

c4. So B and C. A reads hanaša, "he built," instead of qanaša.

d4. B C: "over."

e4. All MSS: "call it by name," "summon."

f4. B C: "they."

g4. Or "he caused to return," "he caused to give back," "he handed over," "he righted."

h4. A wrongly reads mākano.

i4. Lit. "upon," "over."

into the hands of the lions—even into the hands of all the wild beasts—so that they 57 may tear them into pieces and eat them. •Then I began to cry aloud with all my strength and to call upon the Lord of the lions^{j4} and to reveal to him concerning the 58 sheep, for he had fed them to all the wild beasts.^{k4} • But he remained quiet^{l4} and happy^{m4} because they were being devoured, swallowed, and snatched; so he abandoned them 59 into the hands of all the wild beasts for food. •He then summoned seventy shepherds and surrenderedⁿ⁴ those sheep to them so that they might pasture them. He spoke to the shepherds and their colleagues, “From now on, let each and every one of you 60 graze the sheep; and do everything which I command you. •I shall hand them over to you duly counted^{o4} and tell you which among them are^{p4} to be destroyed; and you 61 shall destroy them!”^{q4} •So he handed over those sheep to them. Then calling another (group of shepherds), he told them, “Take notice and see everything which the shepherds will do to those sheep; for they will destroy from among them a greater 62 number than those which I have commanded them. •You write down every excess and destruction that will be wrought through the shepherds^{r4}—how many they destroy according to my command, and how many they will destroy of their own accord!
 Write down every destruction that each and every shepherd causes, against their 63 records! •And read aloud before me each particular case^{s4}—how many they destroy and how many they give over to destruction—so that this may become a testimony for me against them, so that I may know all the deeds of the shepherds, (and) so that I may evaluate them^{t4} and see what they do, whether^{u4} they act^{v4} according to my 64 command which I have commanded them or not. •If they do not know^{w4} it, do not reveal it to them, neither admonish them, but write down every destruction caused by^{x4} the shepherds—for each and every one in his appointed time^{y4}—and elevate all 65 of it to me.” •And I saw till those shepherds in their appointed time pastured (the sheep) and began killing and destroying many in excess of what they had been 66 commanded; and they abandoned those sheep into the hands of the lions. •So the lions and the leopards ate and devoured the majority of those sheep; the wild boars also ate 67 along with them. Then they burned that tower and plowed that house. •And I became exceedingly sorrowful on account of that tower, for that house of the sheep was being plowed; thereafter I was unable to see whether those sheep could enter that house.

From the destruction of Jerusalem to the return from exile

68 So the shepherds and their colleagues handed over those sheep to all the wild beasts so that they might devour them. At the appointed time, each one among them (the shepherds) receives (the sheep) in a fixed number; and each one among them (the shepherds) hands them (the sheep) over to the other (the colleague) in a fixed number.^{t4} (Then) they shall write down for the other (the colleague) in a book^{u5} how many among 69 them (the sheep) would perish. •Each and every one of them kills and destroys in excess of their order. So I began to weep and cry aloud on account of those sheep.
 70 In this manner I saw that writer^{v5} in my vision—how he writes down that which was destroyed by those shepherds, every day, and (how) he elevates, puts down, and shows the whole book to the Lord of the sheep; everything that each one has done; everything that each and every one of them has eliminated; and everything that they

j4. B C: “Lord of the sheep.”

k4. A: “you shall devour all the wild beasts,” which could read with the adjustment of the verb
 “you have fed them to all the wild beasts.” B C:
 “They are eaten by the wild beasts.”

l4. B and C add “while seeing.”

m4. Lit. “he rejoiced.”

n4. Lit. “cast [threw] away,” “left.”

o4. Or “particularized,” “numbered.” Lit. “in number.”

p4. Lit. “is.”

q4. So B and C. A not intelligible.

r4. So B and C. A: “to the shepherds.”

s4. Lit. “in number.”

t4. I accept Charles’s emendation of the Eth.
 ‘watenomu to ‘ematenu. Cf. EC, p. 179, n. 13.

u4. So B and C. A reads instead “to those.”

v4. B C: “they [abide] dwell.”

w4. B C: “And they do not know.”

x4. Lit. “of the.”

y4. Lit. “in his [its] time.”

z4. So A. B and C omit “they hand them over in a fixed number.”

a5. A has an additional “and the book,” B and C have an additional “in the book” dangling at the opening of this sentence.

b5. B C: “the one who writes down.”

- 71 have given over to destruction. •The book was read before the Lord of the sheep; and he took it from his hand, read it, sealed it, and laid it down.
- 72 Thereafter I saw the shepherds pasturing for twelve hours: behold, three of those sheep returning, arriving, entering, and beginning to build all (the parts) of that house which had fallen down! The wild boars came^{c5} and tried to hinder them but were unsuccessful.

From the return of the exiles to the beginning of the hellenistic period

- 73 They again began to build as before; and they raised up that tower which is called the high tower. But they started to place a table before the tower, with all the food
- 74 which is upon it being polluted and impure. •Regarding all these matters, the eyes of the sheep became so dim-sighted that they could not see^{d5}—and likewise in respect to their shepherds—and they were delivered^{e5} to their shepherds for an excessive
- 75 destruction, so that the sheep were trampled upon and eaten.^{f5} •The Lord of the sheep remained silent until all the sheep were dispersed into the woods and got mixed among
- 76 the wild beasts,^{g5} and could not be rescued^{h5} from the hands of the beasts. •The one who was writing a book elevated and showed it and read the grave words of the Lord of the sheep.ⁱ⁵ He then pleaded to him and begged him on account of the sheep,^{j5} while manifesting to him all the deeds of the shepherds and giving testimony before
- 77 him against all the shepherds. •Then taking it, he placed that very book beside him in this manner^{k5} and departed.

- 1 90 Then I saw after that how^a thirty-seven^b shepherds were pasturing (the sheep); all of them completed (their duties) in their own respective periods, like the former ones; and aliens took (the sheep) into their hands in order to pasture them in their own
- 2 respective periods—each shepherd in his own period. •After that I saw with my own eyes^c all the birds of heaven—eagles, vultures, kites, and ravens—coming; the eagles were the ones who were leading all the birds; and they began to eat those sheep, to
- 3 dig out their eyes, and to eat their flesh. •Then the sheep cried aloud, for their flesh was being eaten by the birds. I, too, cried aloud and lamented in my sleep on account
- 4 of that shepherd who was grazing the sheep. •I kept seeing till those sheep were eaten by the dogs, the eagles, and the kites; and they left neither flesh, nor skin, nor sinew on them absolutely, until their bones stood there bare; then their bones fell to the
- 5 ground, and the sheep became few. •I kept seeing till twenty-three shepherds^d pastured (the sheep), and all of them completed fifty-eight seasons in their own respective periods.

From the Maccabean revolt to the establishment of the messianic kingdom

- 6 Then, behold lambs were born from those snow-white sheep; and they began to
- 7 open their eyes and see, and cried aloud to the sheep. •But as for the sheep, they (the lambs) cried aloud to them,^e yet they (the sheep) did not listen to what they (the lambs) were telling them but became exceedingly deafened, and their eyes became
- 8 exceedingly dim-sighted.^f •Then I saw in a vision ravens flying above those lambs,
- 9 and they seized one of those lambs; and then smashing the sheep, they ate them. •I kept seeing till those lambs grew horns; but the ravens crushed^g their horns. Then I c5. B and C omit "came."

d5. Lit. "... became dim-sighted and could not see."

e5. Lit. "they delivered them."

f5. Lit. "they trampled upon the sheep and ate them."

g5. Lit. "they were joined together with them."

h5. Lit. "they could not rescue them."

i5. So A. B: "... he read it in the houses of the Lord of the sheep." C: "... he read it before the Lord of the sheep."

j5. Lit. "on their account."

k5. B and C omit "in this manner."

90 a. B and C add "in this manner."

b. Charles suggests emending this to "thirty-five." EC, p. 181, n. 37.

c. So A. B: "in a vision." C: "in my vision."

d. So B. A and C omit "shepherds." A is partially corrupt and reads šegā, "flesh," instead of 'ešrā, "twenty."

e. B: "But the sheep cried aloud to them." C: "But they oppressed them." Cf. EC, p. 183, n. 2.

f. A adds "and he pondered."

g. B C: "fell."

kept seeing till one great horn sprouted on one of those sheep, and he opened their 10 eyes;^b and they had vision in themⁱ and their eyes were opened.^j • He cried aloud to 11 the sheep, and all the rams saw him and ran unto him. • In spite of this, all those eagles, vultures, ravens, and kites until now continue to rip the sheep, swooping down upon them and eating them. As for the sheep, they remain silent; but the rams 12 are lamenting and crying aloud. • Those ravens gather^k and battle with him (the horned ram) and seek to remove his horn, but without any success.^l

13 I saw thereafter^m the shepherds coming; and those vulturesⁿ and kites cried aloud to the ravens so that they should smash the horn of that ram. But he battled with them,^o and they fought each other;^p and he cried aloud, while battling with them, so 14 that (God's) help should come. • I kept seeing till that man, who writes down the names of the shepherds and elevates them before the Lord of the sheep, came; it is he who helped him^q and revealed (to him) everything; thus^r help came down for that 15 ram.^s • And I kept seeing till the Lord of the sheep came upon^t them in wrath, and all 16 who saw him fled and fell all into darkness,^u from before his face. • All the eagles, vultures, ravens, and kites gathered, with all the sheep of the field lining up with them;^v and having thus come together in unity, all of them cooperated in order to 17 smash the horn^w of the ram. • I saw that man who was writing a book by the command^x of the Lord, for he opened^y that book (of) the destruction which those twelve last shepherds caused; and he revealed before the Lord of the sheep that they had much 18 greater destruction than their predecessors. • I kept seeing till the Lord of the sheep came unto them and took in his hand the rod of his wrath and smote the earth;^z and all the beasts and all the birds of the heaven fell down from the midst of those sheep 19 and were swallowed up in the earth, and it was covered upon them.^{a2} • Then I saw that^{b2} a great sword was given to the sheep; and the sheep proceeded against all the beasts of the field in order to kill them; and all the beasts and birds of heaven fled from before their face.

20 Then I kept seeing till a throne was erected in a pleasant land;^{c2} and he sat upon it^{d2} for the Lord of the sheep;^{e2} and he took all^{f2} the sealed books and opened those 21 very books in the presence of the Lord of the sheep. • Then the Lord called those people, the seven first snow-white ones, and ordered them to bring before him (some) from among the first star(s) that arose,^{g2} and from among those stars^{h2} whose sexual organs were like those of the horses,ⁱ² as well as (that) first star which had fallen 22 down^{j2} earlier. And they brought them all before him. • He spoke to the man who was writing in his presence—that (man) being one of those seven snow-white ones—saying, “Take those seven^{k2} shepherds to whom I had handed over the sheep, but who 23 decided to kill many more than they were ordered.”^{l2} • Behold, I saw all of them 24 bound; and they all stood before him. • Then his judgment took place. First among the stars, they received their judgment and were found guilty, and they went to the

h. B C: “their eyes were opened.”
 i. Text may be corrupt. B and C read “and he looked at [in] them.”
 j. Possibly a repetition due to a scribal error.
 k. B C: “combat,” “contest.”
 l. Lit. “they could not.”
 m. B C: “until.”
 n. B and C read “the eagles” before “those vultures.”
 o. B: “And he battled with him.”
 p. C: “and they battled and fought with him.”
 q. C adds “and saved him.”
 r. Lit. “and.” B omits “and.”
 s. C has been emended to read “and he revealed to that lamb an army.” Cf. EC, p. 184, n. 26.
 t. B C: “to.”
 u. B: “into his shadow.” C: “into shadow.”
 v. Lit. “coming together with them.”
 w. B and C read “that horn.”
 x. Lit. “word.”
 y. B C: “until he opened.”

z. B and C add “and the earth was rent asunder.”
 a2. F. Martin suggests that vss. 13–15 and 16– 18 are doublets. See Le livre d'Hénoch (Paris, 1906),
 p. 228.
 b2. B C: “till.”
 c2. So B and C. A omits “in,” and reads “pleasant” in the plural.
 d2. So B and C. A reads “upon them.”
 e2. So A. B and C read “the Lord of the sheep sat upon it.”
 f2. Charles suggests emending the text to read “the other one took,” changing “all” to “other.”
 EC, p. 185, n. 25.
 g2. So A. B and C read “from the first star that preceded.”
 h2. Lit. “and from those stars.” B and C omit “and.”
 i2. Lit. “like the sexual organs of the horses.”
 j2. C: “that came out.”
 k2. B C: “seventy.”
 l2. B C: “many more than I commanded them.”

place of condemnation; and they were thrown^{m2} into an abyss, full of fire and flameⁿ² and full of the pillar^{o2} of fire. •Then those seventy shepherds^{p2} were judged and found guilty; and they were cast into that fiery abyss. •In the meantime^{q2} I saw how another abyss^{r2} like it, full of fire, was opened wide in the middle of the ground; and they brought those blinded sheep, all of which were judged, found guilty, and cast into this fiery abyss, and they were burned—the abyss^{r2} is to the right of that house; •thus I saw those sheep while they were burning—their bones also were burning.

28 Then I stood still, looking at that ancient house being transformed: All the pillars and all the columns^{s2} were pulled out;^{u2} and the ornaments of that house were packed and taken out together with them and abandoned^{v2} in a certain^{w2} place in the South of the land. •I went on seeing until the Lord of the sheep brought about a new house, greater and loftier than the first one, and set it up in the first location which had been covered up—all its pillars were new, the columns new;^{x2} and the ornaments new as well as greater than those of the first, (that is) the old (house) which was gone.^{y2} All the sheep were within it.

30 Then I saw all the sheep that had survived as well as all the animals upon the earth and the birds of heaven, falling down and worshipping^{z2} those sheep, making petition to them and obeying them in every respect.^{a3} •Thereafter, those three who were wearing snow-white (clothes), the former ones who had caused me to go up, grabbed me by my hand—also the hand of that ram holding me—and I ascended;^{b3} they set me down in the midst of those sheep prior to the occurrence of this^{c3} judgment.

32 Those sheep were all snow-white, and their wool considerable and clean. •All those which have been destroyed and dispersed, and all the beasts of the field and the birds of the sky were gathered together in that house; and the Lord of the sheep rejoiced with great joy because they had all become gentle and returned to his house. •I went on seeing until they had laid down that sword which was given to the sheep; they returned it to the house and sealed it in the presence of the Lord. All the sheep were invited to that house^{d3} but it could not contain them (all). •The eyes of all of them were opened, and they saw the beautiful things; not a single one existed among them that could not see.^{e3} •Also I noticed that the house was large, wide, and exceedingly full.

37 Then I saw that a snow-white cow was born, with huge horns; all the beasts of the field and all the birds of the sky feared him and made petition to him all the time. I went on seeing until all their kindred were transformed, and became snow-white cows; and the first among them became something,^{f3} and that something became a great beast with huge black horns on its head. The Lord of the sheep rejoiced over it^{g3} and over all the cows. •I myself became satiated^{h3} in their midst. Then I woke up and saw everything.

40 This is the vision which I saw while I was sleeping. Then I woke up and blessed the Lord of righteousness and gave him glory. •And I wept with a great weeping, and my tears could not stop, till I had no more endurance left, but flowed downⁱ³ on account of what I had seen until^{j3} everything should come and be fulfilled. The deeds

m2. Lit. "they threw them."

n2. B C: "it was flaming."

o2. C: "pillars."

p2. Cf. above, vs. 22, "seven shepherds."

q2. Lit. "at that time."

r2. Lit. "one abyss."

s2. Lit. "that abyss [pit]."

t2. Lit. "trees," "planted things."

u2. Lit. "they pulled out."

v2. Lit. "they took them out and abandoned them."

w2. Lit. "one."

x2. Lit. "the planted things new," omitted by B and C.

y2. B C: "which he had taken out."

z2. Or "kneeling down to."

a3. Lit. "in every word."

b3. B C: "they elevated me."

c3. B and C omit "this."

d3. So B and C. A omits "house."

e3. So B and C. A, apparently erroneously, reads "that could see."

f3. Lit. "a thing," "a word," "a deed." Charles suggests nagar to be a misreading of Gk. rhēm, which was a transliteration of Heb. r'ēm. Cf. EC, p. 188, n. 38.

g3. Lit. "over them."

h3. B C: "I slept."

i3. B and C read "when I saw," instead of "but flowed down."

j3. So A. B C: "because."

42 of the people were also shown to me, each according to its type. •On that night I remembered the first dream and wept on its account, and I was restless because I had (just) seen that vision.

Book V (91–107)^a

The Two Ways of the Righteous and the Sinner Including the Apocalypse of Weeks

Enoch's admonition to his children

1 91^b Now, my son Methuselah, (please) summon all your brothers on my behalf, and gather together to me all the sons of your mother; for a voice^c calls me, and the spirit is poured over me so that I may show you everything that shall happen to you forever.
2 Then Methuselah went and summoned his brothers, and having summoned them to 3 him, gathered his family together.^d •Then he (Enoch) spoke to all of them, children of righteousness, and said, “Hear, all you children of Enoch, the talk of your father^e 4 and listen to my voice^f in uprightness; •for I exhort you, (my) beloved, and say to you: Love uprightness, and it alone.^g Do not draw near uprightness with an ambivalent attitude,^h and neither associate with hypocrites.ⁱ But walk in righteousness, my children, 5 and it shall lead you in the good paths; and righteousness shall be your friend. •For I know that the state of violence will intensify upon the earth; a great plague shall be executed upon the earth; all (forms of) oppression^j will be carried out; and everything 6 shall be uprooted;^k and every arrow shall fly fast.^l •Oppression shall recur once more and be carried out upon the earth; every (form of) oppression, injustice, and iniquity 7 shall infect^m (the world) twofold. •When sin, oppression, blasphemy, and injustice increase,ⁿ crime,^o iniquity, and uncleanness shall be committed^p and increase (like- wise). Then a great plague shall take place from heaven upon all these; the holy Lord shall emerge with wrath and plague in order that he may execute judgment upon the 8 earth. •In those days, injustice shall be cut off from its (sources of succulent) fountain^q and from its roots—(likewise) oppression together with deceit; they shall be destroyed^r 9 from underneath heaven. •All that which is (common) with the heathen shall be surrendered; the towers^s shall be inflamed with fire, and be removed^t from the whole earth. They^u shall be thrown into the judgment of fire, and perish in wrath and in the 10 force of the eternal judgment. •Then the righteous one shall arise from his sleep, and 11 the wise one shall arise;^v and he shall be given unto them (the people), •and through

W. S. L. S.

91 a. According to A the fifth Book of Enoch begins at 92:1.

b. Charles, in APOT, vol. 2, p. 260, suggests rearranging chs. 91–104; he takes 93:1–10 and 91:12–17 as an earlier fragment of the Apocalypse of Weeks and gives the order 92 + 91:1–10, 18f., 93:1–10, 91:12–17, 94–104. Milik (The Books of Enoch, p. 267) also thinks that 91:12–17 followed 93:3–10.

c. Or “word.”

d. So A, B and C read “Then Methuselah went and summoned all his brothers to him and gathered his relatives together.”

e. So A, B and C read “Hear, children of Enoch, all the talk of your father.”

f. Eth. “gf,” lit. “mouth.” It can also mean “word,” “voice,” “speech.” B and C read “the word of my mouth.”

g. So A, B and C read “Love uprightness and walk in it.”

h. Lit. “with a double heart.”

i. Or “two-faced persons,” “indecisive persons,”

“oscillating persons,” “double-dealing persons”; lit. “those who walk [B and C omit “walk”] with two heart(s).”

j. So B and C. A omits “all oppression.”

k. Lit. “everything shall be cut off from its roots.” So A, B and C read “all oppression shall be carried out [or “completed”] and it shall be cut off from its roots.”

l. So A, B, C: “every building shall pass.”

m. Lit. “seize.” B, C: “shall be seized.”

n. B and C add “in all deeds.”

o. Or “apostasy.”

p. So A, B and C read instead “in all deeds.”

q. Or “drink.” B and C omit “drink,” “fountain.”

r. C omits “shall be destroyed.”

s. Or “palaces,” “castles.”

t. Lit. “they shall be taken out,” “uprooted.”

u. Text ambiguous: the heathen or the towers?

v. B, C: “wisdom shall arise.”

him the roots of oppression shall be cut off. Sinners shall be destroyed; by the sword they shall be cut off^w (together with) the blasphemers in every place;^x and those who design oppression and commit blasphemy shall perish by the knife.^y

12 “Then after that there shall occur the second eighth week^z—the week^{a2} of righteousness.^{b2} A sword shall be given to it^{c2} in order that judgment shall be executed in righteousness^{d2} on the oppressors, and sinners shall be delivered into the hands of the righteous. •At its completion, they shall acquire great things^{e2} through their righteousness. A house shall be built for the Great King in glory for evermore.^{f2}

14 “Then after that in the ninth week^{g2} the righteous judgment shall be revealed to the whole world.^{h2} All the deeds of the sinnersⁱ² shall depart from upon the whole earth, and be written off for eternal destruction;^{j2} and all people shall direct their sight to the path of uprightness.

15 “Then, after this matter,^{k2} on the tenth week^{l2} in^{m2} the seventh part, there shall be the eternal judgment;ⁿ² and it shall be executed by^{o2} the angels^{p2} of the eternal heaven—
16 the great (judgment) which emanates from all of the angels.^{q2} •The first heaven shall depart and pass away; a new heaven shall appear; and all the powers of heaven^{r2} shall shine forever^{s2} sevenfold.

17 “Then after that there shall be many weeks^{t2} without number forever; it shall be (a time) of goodness and righteousness, and sin shall no more be heard of^{u2} forever.

18 “Now I shall speak unto you, my children, and show you the ways of righteousness and the ways of wickedness. Moreover, I shall make a revelation to you so that you 19 may know that which is going to take place. •Now listen to me, my children, and walk in the way of righteousness, and do not walk in the way of wickedness, for all those who walk in the ways of injustice shall perish.”

1 92 (Book) five,^a which is written by Enoch, the writer^b of all the signs of^c wisdom among all the people.^d He is blessed and noble^e in^f all the earth. (It is written) for all the offspring^g that dwell upon the earth, and for the latter generations which uphold^h uprightness and peace.

w. So B and C. A reads “they shall cut off.”

x. Text corrupt. “The blasphemers” added as an afterthought.

y. 4QEn⁸: “And they will have rooted out the foundations of violence and the structure of falsehood therein to execute [judgment].”

z. Or “the second eighth sabbath.” “another eighth sabbath.” “another eighth week.” “second [another] eighth rest.” Following possible influence from other Eth. languages, the phrase can also be translated: “the second week shall be a sabbath [rest],” “there shall be a sabbath the second week.”

a2. Or “the sabbath,” “the rest.”

b2. B and C omit “the week.” 4QEn⁸: “the eighth week.”

c2. Or “him.” 4QEn⁸: “[a sword] shall be given to all the righteous.” Milik (The Books of Enoch, p. 266).

d2. B: “judgment and righteousness shall be executed.” C: “a righteous judgment.” 4QEn⁸: “to exact a righteous judgement from all the wicked.” Milik (The Books of Enoch, p. 266f.).

e2. B and C read “houses” instead of “great things.” EMM 2080: “goods.” 4QEn⁸: “riches.”

f2. 4QEn⁸: “a royal Temple of the Great One in his glorious splendor, for all generations, forever.”

g2. Or “sabbath.”

h2. 4QEn⁸: “for all the children of the whole earth.”

i2. 4QEn⁸: “all the wonders (of impiety).”

j2. Or “hell.” B C: “the world shall be written for destruction.” 4QEn⁸: “and they will be cast into the [eternal] Pit.” Milik (The Books of Enoch, p. 267).

k2. C: “after this.”

l2. Or “sabbath.”

m2. Lit. “and.”

n2. 4QEn⁸: “an eternal judgment and the [fixed] time of the great judgment.”

o2. Lit. “from.”

p2. Lit. “Watchers.”

q2. Text may be corrupt. B reads “and it shall be executed from the Watchers; and the great, eternal peace which emanates from the midst of the angels.” C reads: “and it shall be executed from the Watchers of the eternal heaven; the great (judgment) in which he will execute vengeance among the angels.” 4QEn⁸: “an eternal Judgement and the (fixed) time of the Great Judgement [shall be executed in vengeance . . .].” Milik (The Books of Enoch, p. 267).

r2. B: “the powers of the heavens.” C: “the power of the heavens.”

s2. C omits “forever.” 4QEn⁸: “of heaven shall rise for all eternity [with sevenfold] brightness.” Milik (The Books of Enoch, p. 267).

t2. Or “sabbaths.”

u2. Lit. “spoken,” “told.”

92 a. See ch. 91, n. a. Other MSS omit “five.” Charles’s g has “book” in the opening phrase.

b. C reads “he wrote.”

c. B: “the learning of.”

d. 4QEn⁸, following Milik, The Books of Enoch, p. 260: “the wisest of men.”

e. Or “judge.”

f. Lit. “and.”

g. Lit. “children.” B C: “my children.”

h. Lit. “do,” “perform,” “accomplish,” “observe.”

2 Let not your spirit be troubled by the times, for the Holy and Great One has 3 designatedⁱ (specific) days for all things. •The Righteous One shall awaken from his sleep; he shall arise and walk^j in the ways of righteousness; and all the way of his 4 conduct^k shall be in goodness and generosity forever. •He will be generous to the Righteous One, and give him eternal uprightness; he will give authority, and judge
5 in kindness^l and righteousness; and they^m shall walk in eternal light. •Sin and darkness shall perishⁿ forever, and shall no more be seen from that day forevermore.

The Apocalypse of Weeks

1 93 Then after that Enoch happened to be recounting from the books.^a •And Enoch 2 said, “Concerning the children of righteousness, concerning the elect ones of the world, and concerning the plant of truth,^b I will speak these things, my children, verily I, Enoch, myself, and let you know (about it) according to that which was 3 revealed to me from the heavenly vision, that which I have learned from the words of the holy angels, and understood from the heavenly tablets.” •He^c then began to recount from the books and said, “I was born the seventh during the first week,^d 4 during which time judgment and righteousness continued to endure. •After me there shall arise in the second week^e great and evil things;^f deceit should grow,^g and therein the first consummation will take place. But therein (also) a (certain) man shall be saved. After it is ended, injustice shall become greater, and he shall make a law^h for the sinners.
5 “Then after that at the completion of the third weekⁱ a (certain) man shall be elected as the plant of the righteous judgment,^j and after him^k one (other)^l shall emerge^m as the eternal plant of righteousness.
6 “After that at the completion of the fourth weekⁿ visions of the old and righteous ones shall be seen; and a law shall be made with a fence,^o for all the generations.
7 “After that in the fifth week,^p at the completion of glory, a house^q and a kingdom shall be built.
8 “After that in the sixth week^r those who happen to be in it shall all of them be blindfolded, and the hearts of them all shall forget wisdom. Therein, a (certain) man shall ascend. And, at its completion, the house of the kingdom^s shall be burnt with fire; and therein the whole clan of the chosen root shall be dispersed.
9 “After that in the seventh week^t an apostate generation shall arise; its deeds shall be many, and all of them^u criminal. •At its completion, there shall be elected the elect ones of righteousness^v from the eternal plant of righteousness, to whom^w shall be given sevenfold instruction^x concerning all his flock.^y 11 “For what kind of a human being^z is there that is able to hear the voice of the Holy

i. Lit. “gave.”

j. Lit. “pass,” “traverse.”

k. B C: “his way and his conduct.”

l. B C: “and become in kindness.”

m. B: “he.”

n. B C: “sin shall perish in darkness.”

m. B: “he shall come.”

n. Or “sabbath.”

o. Or “with an enclosure.” Charles (APOT, vol. 2, p. 263) thinks the enclosure to be Palestine; Ethiopian commentators, “the fence of the Tabernacle.” But the key to the text may be m.Ab 1:1.

p. Or “sabbath.”

q. So A. B and C read “at the completion of the fifth sabbath, a house of glory.”

r. Or “sabbath.”

s. Or “the palace.”

t. Or “sabbath.”

u. Lit. “all its deeds.”

v. 4QEn^s, following Milik (The Books of Enoch, p. 266): “there shall be chosen the elect, for witness to righteousness.”

w. So B and C. A reads erroneously ’allā, “but,” instead of ’ella.

x. Or “learning,” “knowledge.” 4QEn^s: “wisdom and knowledge.”

y. Or “fold,” “acquisition,” “possession.” B and C read “all his creation.” 4QEn^s omits “concerning all his flock.”

z. Lit. “who is it, every son of man.” B C: “every son of the people.”

93 a. B: “it happened (that) Enoch began to recount from the books.” C: “Enoch gave me and seized me [or “began”] to recount from the books.”

b. According to Ethiopian commentators, Isaac.

c. B C: Enoch.

d. Or “sabbath.”

e. Or “sabbath.”

f. B C: “great evil (things).”

g. Or “sprout,” “germinate.”

h. C: “a law shall be made.”

i. Or “sabbath.”

j. Abraham, according to Ethiopian commentators.

k. Or “thereafter.” Cf. EC, p. 195, n. 6, for another interpretation.

l. This reading follows Ethiopian commentators who consider Isaac as this other one.

- One without being shaken? Who is there that is able to ponder his (deep) thoughts?
 12 Who is there that can look directly at all the good^{a2} deeds^{b2}? • What kind of a person is he that can (fully) understand the activities of heaven,^{c2} so that he can see a soul, or even perhaps a spirit—or, even if he ascended (into the heavens) and saw all (these heavenly beings and) their wings^{d2} and contemplated^{e2} them; or, even if he can do 13 (what the heavenly beings) do?^{f2}—and is able to live?^{g2} • What kind of a person is anyone that is able to understand the nature^{h2} of the breadth and length of the earth?
 14 To whom has the extentⁱ² of all these^{j2} been shown? • Is there perchance any human being^{k2} that is able to understand the length of heaven, the extentⁱ² of its altitude, upon what it is founded, the number of the stars, and (the place) where^{m2} all the luminaries rest?

Enoch's advice to his children and to the righteous

- 1 94 “Now, my children,^a I say to you: Love righteousness and walk therein! For the ways of righteousness are worthy of being embraced; (but) the ways of wickedness
 2 shall soon perish and diminish. • To (certain) known persons, the ways of injustice and death shall be revealed as soon as they are born;^b and they shall keep themselves
 3 at a distance from (those ways) and would not follow them. • Now to you, those righteous ones, I say: Do not walk in the evil way, or in the way of death! Do not
 4 draw near to them lest you be destroyed! • But seek for yourselves and choose righteousness and the elect life! Walk in the way of peace so that you shall have life
 5 and be worthy! • Hold fast my words in the thoughts of your hearts; and let them not be erased from your hearts! For I do know that sinners will counsel the people to perform evil craft;^c and every place will welcome it,^d and every advice (of the sinners)^e may not diminish.

Woes unto the sinners

- 6 “Woe unto those who build oppression and injustice!
 Who lay foundations for deceit.
 They shall soon be demolished;
 and they shall have no peace.
 7 Woe unto those who build their houses with sin!
 For they shall all be demolished from their foundations;
 and they shall fall by the sword.
 Those who amass^f gold and silver;^g
 they shall quickly be destroyed.
 8 Woe unto you, O rich people!
 For you have put your trust in your wealth.
 You shall ooze out^h of your riches,
 for you do not remember the Most High.
 9 In the days of your affluence, you committed oppression,ⁱ you have become ready for death, and for the day of darkness and the day of great judgment.^j

a2. Or “beautiful.”

b2. B C: “at the heavenly deeds.”

c2. C reads “What kind of a person is he that can look directly into heaven and who is he that can understand . . . ?”

d2. Or “wings,” “borders,” “corners,” “limits,” “extensions,” “sides.”

e2. Or “think,” “contemplate.”

f2. Lit. “do like them.”

g2. B C: “is able to tell.”

h2. Lit. “how.”

i2. Or “size,” “measure.” 4QEn^g: “shape.”

j2. Lit. “all of them.”

k2. Lit. “any man.”

l2. Lit. “how.”

m2. So B and C. A reads ye'eti, “she,” “it,” “this,” instead of 'ayrē.

94 a. 4QEn^g: “my sons.”

b. B C: “from a generation.”

c. Lit. “evil wisdom.” The expression could also be translated “evil magic,” “evil deceit,” “evil cunning.”

d. Lit. “receive her.” B C: “no place will receive her.”

e. B C: “every trouble,” “every temptation.”

f. Lit. “acquire.”

g. Or possibly “Those who build a fence of gold and silver around it.”

h. Lit. “come out,” “exit.”

i. B C: “you committed blasphemy and oppression.”

j. B and C read “You have become ready for slaughter [lit. “spilling blood”], for the day of darkness and the day of great judgment.”

- 10 Thus I speak and let you know:
For he who has created you, he will also throw you down upon your own righteousness!^k
There shall be no mercy (for you).^l
- 11 And he, your Creator, shall rejoice at your destruction.
(O God), your righteous ones shall be a reproach^m to the sinners and the wicked.

Enoch's sorrow and more woes unto the sinners

- 1 95 "Who would induce^a my eyes like^b a cloud of waters;
that I may weep over you,
pouring my tears over you like a cloud of waters,
so I would rest from the sorrow of my heart!
- 2 Who permits you to engage in evil fight?^c
Judgment will catch up with you, sinners.^d
3 You righteous ones, fear not the sinners!
For the Lord will again deliver them into your hands, so that you may carry out against them anything^e that you desire.
- 4 Woe unto you who pronounce anathemas^f so that they may be neutralized!^g (Salutary) remedy^h is far from you, on account of your sins.ⁱ
- 5 Woe unto you who reward^j evil to your neighbors!
For you shall be rewarded in accordance with your deeds.
- 6 Woe unto you, witnesses of falsehood!
And unto those who prepare oppression!
For you shall perish soon.
- 7 Woe unto you, sinners, for you persecute the righteous!
For you shall be handed over and be persecuted through oppression.
Its yoke^k shall be heavy upon you.

Hope for the righteous ones, more woes for the sinners

- 1 96 "Be hopeful, you righteous ones, for the sinners shall soon perish from before your presence.
You shall be given authority^a upon them, such (authority) as you may wish (to have).
- 2 In the day of the tribulation of the sinners, your children shall be raised high up and be made openly visible^b like eagles,
higher^c than the vultures will your dwelling place be, you shall ascend and enter the crevices of the earth and the clefts of the rock forever,
like squirrels, before the face of the oppressors,
the sirens shall be blown over you,
wailing like the buzzing of wild bees.
- 3 But you, who have experienced pain, fear not,
for there shall be a healing medicine for you,

k. B and C omit "upon your own righteousness."
See next n.

l. B and C read "Upon your fall there shall be no mercy."

m. B and C add "in those days."

95 a. Lit. "give."

b. B C: "to be like."

c. Or "evil hate." B C: "hate and evil."

d. Text unclear.

e. Lit. "all." B and C read "judgment."

f. Lit. "anathematize anathemas."

g. Lit. "unbound," "untied," "unfastened," "loosened." B and C read "so that they may not be neutralized."

h. Lit. "medicine," "cure," "drug that either heals or hurts."

i. At this point A adds "the matter [the word] is where it has been left." This phrase is not found in B, C, other MSS used by Charles, or those that I have seen.

j. Lit. "pay," "repay."

k. Lit. "Her yoke."

96 a. Lit. "There shall be authority to you."

b. B C: "be raised high up and rise."

c. Lit. "exceeding."

a bright light shall enlighten you,
 and a voice of rest you shall hear from heaven.
 Woe unto you, you sinners!
 For your money makes you appear like the righteous,
 but your hearts do reprimand you like real sinners, this very matter shall be a witness against you, as a record of your evil deeds.
 Woe unto you who eat the best bread!^d
 And drink wine in large bowls,^e trampling upon the weak people^f with your might.
 Woe unto you who have water available to you all the time,^g for soon you shall be consumed and wither away, for you have forsaken the fountain of life.
 Woe unto you who carry out oppression, deceit, and blasphemy!
 There shall be a record of evil against you.
 Woe unto you, O powerful people!^h
 You who coerceⁱ the righteous with your power,
 the day^j of your destruction is coming!
 In those days, at the time^k of your condemnation,
 many and good days shall come for the righteous ones.

The sorrowful end of sinners, oppressors, and the rich;
 and more woes to them

97 "Be confident, you righteous ones!
 For the sinners are due for a shame.
 They shall perish on the day of (the judgment of) oppression.
 Take for granted^a this (indisputable) matter, for the Most High shall record your destruction for you (O sinners), and the angels of heaven shall rejoice over your destruction.
 What do you intend to do, you sinners,
 whither^b will you flee on that day of judgment,
 when you hear the sound of the prayer of the righteous ones?
 (In respect to your lot), you shall become like them,
 (the ones) against whom you shall become witness(es),^c such is the fact:^d You have become bedfellows with sinners.
 In those days, the prayers of the righteous ones shall reach unto the Lord;
 but for all of you, your days shall arrive.^e
 He shall read aloud^f regarding every aspect of your mischief, in the presence of the Great Holy One.
 Then your faces shall be covered with shame, and he will cast out every deed which is built upon oppression.^g Woe unto you, sinners, who are in the midst of the sea and on the dry land;
 (you) whose records are (both) evil (and) against you.^h

d. Lit. "the enriched [fattened] wheat."

e. I have followed in this case the emendation suggested by Charles. See EC, p. 201, n. 8. The text is corrupt and reads "the strength of the root of the fountain."

f. Lit. "the lowly ones."

g. Charles suggests emending the text: "who drink water from every fountain." See EC, p. 201, n. 10.

h. Or "powerful ones."

i. Or "force," "compel," "subject by force."

j. A reads "until the day." B and C read "for the day."

k. Lit. "on the day."

b. So B and C. A reads ye'eti, "she," "she is," "it," "this," instead of aytē.

c. B: "(those) which becomes [sic] a witness against you." C: "(those) which becomes [sic] a witness against them."

d. Lit. "This is the matter."

e. Lit. "But for you, the days of all of you shall arrive." B C: "but for you, the days of your judgment shall arrive."

f. B C: "It shall be read aloud."

g. Cf. G. Nickelsburg, "Enoch 97-104: A Study of the Greek and Ethiopic Texts," Armenian and Biblical Studies, ed. M. E. Stone, supplementary vol. 1 to Sion (Jerusalem, 1976), p. 93.

h. Lit. "Whose records are evil—against you." G^p: "There is an evil record against you."

97 a. Lit. "Let this become a well-known fact for you."

- 8 Woe unto you who gain silver and gold by unjust means;ⁱ
 you will then say, 'We have grown rich^j and accumulated goods, we have acquired everything that we have desired.
 9 So now let us do whatever we like;
 for we have gathered silver,
 we have filled our treasuries^k (with money) like water.
 And many are the laborers^l in our houses.'
 10 Your lies flow like water.^m
 For your wealth shall not endure
 but it shall take off from you quickly for you have acquired it all unjustly, and you shall be given over to a great curse.

Self-indulgence of the rich, origin of sins, more woes to sinners

- 1 98 "Now I swear unto you, to the wise and to the foolish,^a for you shall see many (things)^b upon the earth.
 2 For you men shall put on more jewelry^c than^d women, and more multicolored^e ornaments than a virgin.
 In sovereignty, in grandeur, and in authority, (in) silver, in gold, in clothing, in honor, and in edibles—they shall be poured out like water.^f 3 For this reason, they are devoid of knowledge and wisdom, so they shall perish thereby together with their goods^g and together with all their glory and honor.
 Then in dishonor, in slaughter, and in great misery, their spirits^h shall be cast away.ⁱ
 4 I have sworn unto you, sinners: In the same manner that a mountain has never^j turned into^k a servant, nor shall a hill (ever) become a maidservant of a woman; likewise, neither has sin been exported^l into the world. It is the people who have themselves invented it.
 And those who commit it shall come under a great curse.
 5 Why^m is a woman not given (a child)?
 On account ofⁿ the deeds of her own hands would she die without children.^o
 6 I swear to you, sinners, by the Holy Great One, that all your evil deeds are revealed^p in the heavens.
 7 "None of your (deeds of injustice are covered and hidden. • Think not in your spirit, nor say in your hearts)^q that you neither know nor see^r all our sins^s being

i. Lit. "that which is not through justice [or "right"]," therefore, "unethically," "by violating others' rights," "through wrongdoing."

j. B, C, and G^P: "We have become rich with riches."

k. Lit. "storerooms."

l. G^P reads "good things." Nickelsburg (Armenian and Biblical Studies, p. 93) suggests correctly that G^P may be more accurate than the Eth. His suggestion that the Eth. tradition is corrupted from herata is not convincing. The latter means "good persons," not "good things."

m. G^P: "You err."

98 a. G^P: "not to the foolish."

b. G^P: "many iniquities."

c. Or "ornaments," "adornments."

d. G^P: "like."

e. G^P: "fair color."

f. G^P reads "They shall have silver and gold for food, and in their houses they shall be poured out like water."

g. G^P: "you shall perish . . . with all your goods."

h. G^P: "your spirits."

i. B and C add "into the furnace." G^P is defective.

j. Lit. "not."

k. Lit. "become."

l. Lit. "sin has not been sent."

m. B and C read "Barrenness" instead of "Why."

n. B and C read "But on account of."

o. G^P adds a whole verse before this one and reads as follows: "Slavery was not given to a woman, but because of the works of her hands; for it is not ordained that a slave should become a slave. It was not given from above, but it came about because of oppression. Likewise neither was sin given from above but from transgression. Likewise a woman was not created barren, but because of her wrongdoing she was punished with barrenness, childless shall she die."

p. G^P: "they will be revealed."

q. So B, C, and G^P. The whole passage in parentheses is missing from A, most probably due to homoeoteleuton.

r. G^P reads "that they do not know and do not see."

s. B C: "every sin." G^P: "your sins."

- 8 written down every day in the presence of the Most High. •From now on do know that all your injustices which you have committed unjustly are written down^a every day until the day of your judgment.
- 9 “Woe unto you, fools, for you shall perish through your folly!
You do not listen to^u the wise, and you shall not receive good things.^v
- 10 And now do know that you are ready for the day of destruction.
Hope not that you shall live, you sinners, you who^w shall depart and die, for you know for what (reason) you have been ready^x for the day of the great judgment, for the day of anguish and great shame for your spirits.
- 11 Woe unto you obstinate of heart, who do evil and devour blood!
From where (will you find) good things that you may eat, drink, and be satisfied?
Even from all the good things which the Lord, the Most High, stocked in plenitude upon the whole earth?
No peace exists for you!
- 12 Woe unto you who love unrighteousness!^y
Why do you have hopes for good things for yourselves?
Do know that you shall be given over into the hands of the righteous ones, and they shall cut off your necks^z and slay you, and they shall not have compassion upon you.^{a2}
- 13 Woe unto you who rejoice in the suffering of the righteous ones!
For no grave shall be dug^{b2} for you.
- 14 Woe unto you who would set at nought the words of the righteous ones!
For you shall have no hope of life.^{c2}
- 15 Woe unto you who write down false words and words of wickedness!^{d2}
For they write down their lies so that they (the people) may commit wicked acts,^{e2} and they cause others to commit wicked acts.^{f2}
- 16 They shall have no peace, but shall die quickly.^{g2}

More woes unto the sinners

- 1 99 “Woe unto you who cause wickedness!^a
Who glorify and honor^b false words, you are lost, and you have no life^c of good things;
- 2 woe unto you who alter the words of truth^d
and pervert^e the eternal law!^f
They reckon themselves not guilty^g of sin, they shall be trampled on upon the earth.

t. So B, C, and G^p. A reads “are arriving,” “are coming.”

u. So B and G^p. A: “You do not neglect.” C: “You do neglect.”

v. G^p adds “evils (in) you.”

w. B and C read alta, “but,” instead of ella.

x. B C: “For you know no ransom; for you are ready.”

y. B C: “the deeds of unrighteousness [oppression].”

z. G^p omits “they shall cut off your necks.”

a2. Nickelsburg’s suggestion (Armenian and Biblical Studies, pp. 90–156) that mehra is a corruption for mehka is interesting and possible. But the distinctions in the present context are minimal.

b2. So B, C, and G^p. A reads “be revealed.”

c2. G^p: “hope of salvation.”

d2. G^p: “words of error.”

e2. B C: “their lies so that they hear them and commit wicked acts.” G^p: “they write down and they will lead many astray by their lies.”

f2. Sentence omitted by G^p.

g2. G^p: “You yourselves err, and you shall have no joy; but you shall perish quickly.”

99 a. G^p: “who cause errors.”

b. C: “You glory and honor.”

c. G^p: “salvation.”

d. Or “uprightness.”

e. Or “abolish,” “delete,” “do violence to.”

f. G^p: “covenant.”

g. So B, C, and G^p. A reads “They reckon themselves guilty.”

- 3 "In those days, be ready, you righteous ones, to raise up your prayers as a memorial, and place them as a testimony before the angels; and they (the angels) shall bring the 4 sins of the sinners for a memorial before the Most High. •In those days, the nations shall be confounded, and the families of the nations shall rise in the day of the 5 destruction of the sinners.^h •In those days, they (the women) shall become pregnant,ⁱ but they (the sinners) shall come out^j and abort^k their infants and cast them out from their midst; they shall (also) abandon^l their (other) children,^m casting their infants out while they are still suckling. They shall neither return to them (their babes) nor have compassion upon their beloved ones.
- 6 "Again I swear to you, you sinners, for sin has been prepared for the day of 7 unceasing blood. •(And those) who worship stones, and those who carveⁿ images of gold and of silver and of wood and of clay,^o and those who worship evil spirits^p and demons, and all kinds of idols not according to knowledge,^q they shall get no manner 8 of help in them.^r •They shall become wicked^s on account of the folly of their hearts; their eyes will be blindfolded on account of the fear of their hearts, the visions of 9 their dreams.^t •They shall become wicked and fearful through them, for they wrought 10 all their deeds in falsehood and worshiped stone; so they shall perish instantly.^u •In those days, blessed are they all who accept the words of wisdom and understand them, to follow^v the path^w of the Most High; they shall walk in the path of his righteousness and not become wicked with the wicked; and they shall be saved.
- 11 "Woe unto you who spread evil to your neighbors!
For you shall be slain in Sheol.
12 Woe unto you who make sinful and deceitful measures!
Who acquire worldly knowledge,^x
for you shall be consumed by it.^y 13 Woe unto you who build your houses through the hard toil of others,^z and your building materials are bricks and stones of sin,
I tell you, you^{a2} have no peace.^{b2} 14 Woe unto you^{c2} who reject the foundations^{d2} and the eternal inheritance of your (fore-) fathers!
Who^{e2} shall pursue after the wind—the idol;^{f2}
for there shall be no rest for you.^{g2} 15 Woe unto you who engage in oppression and give aid to injustice!

h. G^p: "of sin" or "of unrighteousness." B and C have neither "of the sinners" nor "of sin."

i. B: "those who become pregnant." C: "those who become destitute."

j. Nickelsburg (Armenian and Biblical Studies, pp. 90–156) suggests yāwage'u, in agreement with the Gk. ekbalousin, "they shall cast out," instead of yewage'u.

k. Nickelsburg (Armenian and Biblical Studies, pp. 90–156) suggests "they shall sell," in agreement with G. Zuntz, "Enoch on the Last Judgement," JTS 45 (1944) 66. Eth. masit means "to pluck out," "to tear out," "to remove violently," "to carry off," and "to rob."

l. B C: "they shall stumble," "they shall stammer."

m. G^p has been restored to read "they that are with child shall destroy their fruit." Nickelsburg (Armenian and Biblical Studies, pp. 90–156) suggests "they shall abort [yadahešu] their fruit."

n. So B, C, and G^p. A wrongly: "who cast out."

o. G^p adds: "and of stone." So does Tertullian (De idolis 4).

p. Lit. "evil souls."

q. Or possibly "even if not according to knowledge." B reads "of statues."

r. Cf. G^p and Tertullian (De idolis 4). B and C

read "no help will be found [A wrongly: "every help will be found"] in them."

s. A wrongly: "They shall not become wicked."

t. G^p reads "and the visions of their dreams will lead you astray."

u. G^p reads "You and the lying works that you have made and fashioned of stone, you shall perish together."

v. Lit. "to do."

w. G^p: "the commandments."

x. Lit. "Those who know [learn] upon the earth." Text is not clear. B reads "Those who become bitter upon the earth."

y. G^p omits vss. 11f.

z. G^p: "not (by) their own labor."

a2. G^p: "you foolish men."

b2. Cf. Nickelsburg, Armenian and Biblical Studies, pp. 95f.

c2. B C: "unto them."

d2. So A and G^p. B C: "the measures." Other Eth. MSS: "princes."

e2. Lit. "They."

f2. Possibly this is a corruption for "the soul [or "spirit"] of the idol [or "error"]." B and C read "Their souls shall follow after idols." G^p reads "A spirit of error shall pursue you."

g2. So A and G^p. B C: "no rest for them."

Slaying your neighbors until the day of the great judgment, because he shall debase your glory.

- 16 He will instill evil into your hearts.^{h2}
He will arouse the anger of his spirit,ⁱ²
and destroy you all by the sword.
And all the holy and righteous ones shall remember your sins.

Final judgment of the sinners, the righteous, and the fallen angels. More woes.

- 1 100 "In those days, the father will be beaten together with his sons, in one place;
and brothers shall fall together with their friends, in death, until a stream shall flow 2 with their blood. •For a man shall not be able to withhold his hands from his sons^a nor from (his) sons' sons^b in order to kill them.^c Nor is it possible for the sinner to withhold his hands from his honored brother.^d From dawn until the sun sets, they shall 3 slay each other.^e •The horse shall walk through the blood of sinners up to his chest;
4 and the chariot shall sink down up to its top. •In those days, the angels shall descend into the secret places. They shall gather together into one place all those who gave aid to sin.^f And the Most High will arise on that day of judgment in order to execute 5 a great judgment upon all the sinners.^g •He will set a guard of holy angels over all the righteous and holy ones, and they shall keep them^h as the apple of the eye until all evil and all sinⁱ are brought to an end.^j From that time on^k the righteous ones shall 6 sleep a restful sleep,^l and there shall be no one to make them afraid. •Then^m the wise peopleⁿ shall see, and the sons of the earth shall give heed to all the words of this book.^o They shall know that their wealth shall not be able to save them at the place where their sins shall collapse.
- 7 "Woe unto you, sinners, when you oppress^p
the righteous ones, in the day of hard anguish, and burn them^q with fire!
You shall be recompensed according to your deeds.^r
- 8 Woe unto you, you hard of heart,
who are watchful to devise evil!^s Fear shall seize you,
and none shall come to your aid.^t
- 9 Woe unto you, sinners, because of the words of your hands!^u
On account of the deeds of your wicked ones,^v in blazing flames worse than fire, it shall burn.^w
- 10 "And now, do know that your deeds shall be investigated^x—from the sun, from

h2. Sentence omitted by G^p.

i2. B: "the spirit of his anger." C: "his anger and his spirit." G^p: "his anger."

100 a. G^p: "his son."

b. G^p: "his beloved."

c. Text: "to kill him." So G^p.

d. G^p: "from a man of worth and his brother."

e. G^p: "they shall be slain together."

f. So A, B, and G^p. C reads "who brought down sin."

g. So A and B. C: "among the sinners." G^p: "upon all."

h. G^p: "they shall be kept."

i. G^p: "tribulations and sin."

j. C: "he will bring to an end."

k. So G^p. B C: "emani, "and though [if]." A, "emanu, is unclear, but could possibly be translated as "perhaps" or "whether." Nickelsburg may be right in suggesting that the Eth. original may have read "emnehu. Nickelsburg, Armenian and Biblical Studies, p. 98.

l. Or "a long sleep." Cf. G^p: "a sweet sleep."

m. So G^p. B reads "they." C reads "verily," "in certainty." Charles (APOT, vol. 2, p. 272) translates it "in security." A reads "emanu.

n. G^p: "the wise among men."

o. G^p: "these words of this letter."

p. Or "afflict," "make suffer."

q. G^p: "guard them."

r. So B, C, and G^p. A: "Their deeds shall be recompensed."

s. So B, C, and G^p. A: "to eat evil."

t. G^p: "none to take your part."

u. B and C read "Woe unto you, sinners, because of the words of your mouth and because of the deeds of your hands!" G^p reads "Woe unto you, sinners, because of the works of your mouth! Woe unto you, all you sinners, because of the words of your mouth and of your hands."

v. Text unclear. B reads "which deeds you violated." C reads "which your wickedness wrought." G^p reads "because you have gone astray from your holiness." Cf. Nickelsburg, Armenian and Biblical Studies, pp. 98f.

w. B: "you shall burn."

x. Cf. "examined" "inspected."

the moon, and from the stars—for heaven^y by the angels, on account of your sins (which) were committed^z upon the earth. The decree^{aa} is with the righteous ones.
 11 Every cloud, mist, dew, and rain shall witness against you;^{b2} for they shall all be withheld from you, from descending for you; and they shall not give heed,^{c2} because
 12 of your sins. •So then offer gifts to the rain, that it be not hindered from descending for you; perhaps the dew may receive from you gold and silver in order to descend 13 for sure.^{d2} •(In) descending,^{e2} they shall fall upon you—the frost and the snow with their cold, and all the winds of the snow^{f2} with their scourges—and in those days^{g2} you cannot stand before them.

The fear of God that nature teaches

1 101 “Examine the heaven, you sons of heaven,^a and all the works of the Most High; and be afraid to do evil in his presence. •If he closes the windows of heaven and hinders the rain and the dew from descending upon the earth because of you, what
 2 will you do? •Or, if he sends his anger against you (and) your deeds,^b is it not you who would entreat him?^c Because^d you utter bold^e and hard (words)^f against his
 3 righteousness,^g you shall have no peace. •Do you not see the sailors^h of the ships, how their ships are tossed up and down by the billowsⁱ and are shaken by the winds, and
 4 they become anxious? •On this account (it is evident that) they are seized by fear, for they will discharge all their valuable property^j—the goods that are with them^k—into
 5 the sea;^l they think^m in their hearts that the sea will swallow them up and they will perish in it. •Is not the entire sea and all her waters and all her movementsⁿ the very
 6 work of the Most High? Has he not ordered^o her courses of action and her waters—(indeed) her totality—with sand?^p At his rebuke they become frightened, and she dries
 7 up;^q then her fish die^r and all that is in her. But you, sinners, who are upon the earth, fear him not! •Did he not make the heaven and the earth and all that is in them?
 8 Who gave the knowledge of wisdom^s to all those who move upon the earth^s and in the sea? •Do not the sailors^t of the ships fear the sea? Yet the sinners do not fear the 9 Most High.^u”

Terror of the day of judgment: comfort to the suffering righteous ones

1 102 “In those days,^a when he hurls out against you^b terror of fire,^c where shall you flee, and where shall you find safety? When he flings his word^d against you, will you
 2 not faint^e and fear?^f •All the luminaries shall faint with great fear;^g the whole earth^h shall faintⁱ and tremble and panic.^j •All the angels shall fulfill their orders.^k The
 3 children of the earth will seek to hide themselves from the presence of the Great Glory,^l trembling and confounded.^m You, sinners, you are accused forever; there is 4 no peaceⁿ for you! •But you, souls of the righteous, fear not; and be hopeful, you 5 souls that died in righteousness!^o •Be not sad because your souls have gone down into

y. B C: “in heaven.”

z. B C: “which you committed.”

a2. Or “judgment,” “decision,” “verdict.”

b2. B and C read “He shall cause . . . to testify against you” instead of “. . . shall witness against you.”

c2. C: “they shall give heed.”

d2. Lit. “In order to descend descending.” B and C read “In order to descend.”

e2. B and C omit “(in) descending,” and add “when.”

f2. Lit. “the winds and the snow.”

g2. G^p omits “in those days.”

101 a. B omits “you sons of heaven.” G^p reads “Consider then, you sons of men . . .”

b. B reads “and upon all your deeds.” C reads “and because of your deeds.”

c. G^p: “will you not be entreating him?”

d. G^p: “Why?”

e. Lit. “big,” “great.”

f. G^p adds “with your mouth.”

g. G^p: “his greatness.”

h. So G^p. Eth. MSS: “kings.” Halévy (“Recherches sur la langue de la rédaction primitive du livre d’Hénoch,” JA 6.9[1867] 392) already suggested before the discovery of G^p that the Eth. nagast, “kings,” corresponds to the Heb. malkey, which is corrupt for malāhēy, “sailors.”

i. Or “sea-waves,” “tidal waves.” A reads wrongly “by death.” G^p reads “billow and storm.”

j. Lit. “good [beautiful, goodly] property.”

k. G^p reads “their goods and property.”

l. Lit. “for all their valuable property . . . will come out into the sea.” G^p: “they will cast out into the sea . . .”

m. So G^p. A, B, and C read “they do not think.”

n. G^p omits “her movements.”

o. A is partially illegible. I have adjusted the three legible characters, wa-rāha, to read wašerāha. Eth. šarho means “to even,” “to organize,” “to arrange,” “to set in order,” “to adorn.” The reading

Sheol in sorrow; or (because) your flesh^p fared not well the^a earthly existence^r in accordance with your goodness;^s indeed the time^t you happened to be in existence was 6 (a time of) sinners,^u a time of curse and a time of plague.^v •When you die, the sinners
 7 will speak over you: 'As we die, so do the righteous die.'^w What then have they gained 8 by^x their deeds? •Behold, like us they died in grief and in darkness,^y and what have 9 they more than we? From now on we have become equal.^z •What will they receive 10 or what will they see forever? Behold they have surely died; and from now on they 11 shall never see light forever.^{a2} •Now I tell you, sinners, you have satiated yourselves with food and drink, robbing and sin, impoverishing people and gaining property,^{b2} and seeing good days.^{c2} •Have you seen the righteous, how their end comes about, for no injustice is found upon them until their death?^{d2} •But they perished and became like those who were not, and descended into Sheol—and their spirits too^{e2}—with anguish.^{f2}

The two destinies of the righteous and the sinners: more woes unto the sinners

1 103 "I now swear to you, righteous ones, by the glory of the Great One and by the 2 glory of his kingdom;^a and I swear to you (even) by the Great One.^b •For I know this^c
 3 mystery; I have read the tablets of heaven and have seen the holy writings,^d and I have 4 understood the writing in them; and they are inscribed^e concerning you.^f •For all good things, and joy and honor are prepared for and written down for the souls^g of those who died in righteousness. Many and good things^h shall be given to you—the offshoot of your labors. Your lot exceeds even that of the living ones.ⁱ •The spirits of those remains problematic. B has "All her course of action he sealed and bound." C has "He established all her course of action and bound . . ." G^p has "He set their limits [so Bonner, The Last Chapters of Enoch in Greek (Studies and Documents 8; London, 1937) p. 57] and binds and sets it about . . ."

p. B C: "she becomes frightened and dries up."

G^p: "they become frightened and dry up . . ."

q. So A and G^p. B C: "all her fish."

r. B C: "knowledge and wisdom." G^p: "understanding."

s. G^p omits "who move upon the earth."

t. Lit. "the kings." See n. h.

u. G^p omits this sentence.

102 a. Omitted by G^p.

b. A wrongly reads "against them."

c. G^p: "the surge of the fire of your burning."

d. Or "his voice."

e. G^p: "be shaken."

f. G^p adds "by the mighty sound."

g. This clause is omitted by G^p.

h. So B, C, and G^p. A: "the earth and everything."

i. G^p: "be shaken."

j. Lit. "be hasty," "be nervous," "be anxious." G^p: "be confused."

k. So B and C. A: "their orders shall be fulfilled."

l. So B and C. A: "the Great One and glory."

m. G^p: "the heaven and its lights shaken and trembling, all the sons of the earth."

n. G^p: "no joy."

o. G^p: "Be of good courage, souls of the just that are dead, the just and the pious."

p. Or "your body." G^p: "the body of your flesh."

q. B, C, and G^p: "your."

r. Lit. "in life" or "while alive."

s. G^p: "your holiness."

t. Lit. "the day."

u. C has been adjusted to read "but wait for the day of the judgment of sinners." G^p: "the days that you lived were days of sinners."

v. G^p: "days . . . of accursed men upon the earth."

w. G^p: "the pious have died according to their fate."

x. So B, C, and G^p. A: "and."

y. G^p: "they have died like us. See now how they die in grief."

z. G^p: "From now on let them rise and be saved."

a2. G^p is abbreviated. It reads "and they shall forever see us eating and drinking." Cf. Bonner, The Last Chapters of Enoch, p. 61.

b2. Or "acquiring wealth."

c2. So B, C, and G^p. A: "goods," "property," "wealth."

d2. G^p: "Behold, now they who try to justify themselves, how great their downfall has been, because no righteousness was found in them until they died."

e2. B: "their souls descended." C: "their spirits descended."

f2. G^p: "they were destroyed, and became as though they were not, and their souls went down in pain to . . ."

103 a. B: "I now swear . . . by this great glory and his honor and the honor of his kingdom." C: "I now swear . . . by the glory of the Great and Honored One (of) the mighty kingdom."

b. B C: "and I swear to you by his greatness."

c. So A, B, and G^p. C omits "this."

d. B reads "the writing of the holy ones." C: "the holy writing." G^p: "the writing of authority."

e. Lit. "engraved."

f. B reads "concerning them."

g. A: "for your souls."

h. B C: "many good things."

i. G^p omits last two sentences.

who died in righteousness^l shall live^k and rejoice;^l their spirits shall not perish,^m nor their memorial from before the face of the Great One unto all the generations of the world. Therefore,ⁿ do not worry about their humiliation.

- 5 "Woe^o unto you sinners who are dead!^p When you are dead in the wealth of your sins,^q those who are like you^r will say of you, 'Happy are you sinners!^s (The sinners) have seen all their days.'^t • They have died now in prosperity and wealth.^u They have not experienced struggle and battle in their lifetime.^v They have died in glory, and there was no judgment^w in their lifetime.^x • You yourselves know that they will bring your souls^y down to Sheol; and they shall experience evil and great tribulation—in darkness, nets,^z and burning flame. • Your souls shall enter² into the great judgment; it shall be a great judgment in all the generations of the world. Woe unto you, for there is no peace² for you! • Now to the righteous and kind ones during their lifetime: Do not say, 'In the days of our² toil,² we have surely suffered hardships and have experienced every trouble.² We have faced many evil things² and have become consumed. We have died² and become few, (characterized) by the littleness of our spirit.² • We have been destroyed;² and we have found none whatsoever to help us with a word or otherwise.² We have been tortured and destroyed,² and could not even hope to see life² from one day to the other.² • We hoped² to be the head and have become the tail.² We have moiled as we toiled,² but had no authority over our own toil.² We have become the victuals of the sinners and the oppressors;² they² have made their yoke² heavy upon us. • Those who hate us, while goading us and encompassing us,² have become masters over us.² We have bowed our necks to those² who hate us, but they had no pity on us.² • We wanted to get away from them in order that we may escape and be at rest; but we found no place to which we might flee and be safe from them.² • Then, in our tribulation, we brought a charge against them before the authorities,² and cried out against those who were devouring us,² but they (the authorities) neither would pay attention to our cries nor wish to listen to our voice. • But (on the contrary) they were assisting² those who were robbing and devouring us, those who were causing us to diminish.² They (the authorities) conceal

j. B C: "you who died in righteousness, your spirits." G^p: "their spirits."

k. G^p omits "shall live."

l. B and C read "shall rejoice and be glad."

m. B omits "shall not perish."

n. Or "So, now."

o. G^p omits "Woe."

p. B omits "who are dead."

q. G^p omits "in the wealth of your sins." B omits "wealth."

r. G^p omits "those who are like you."

s. B, C, and G^p: "Happy are the sinners!"

t. G^p: "all their days which they saw in their life."

u. G^p omits this sentence.

v. This sentence is omitted by G^p.

w. So C and G^p. A reads "there was judgment."

x. B omits this sentence.

y. So A and G^p. B and C read "their souls."

z. G^p: "in toils."

a2. A erroneously: "shall conquer."

b2. G^p: "joy."

c2. A: "their."

d2. G^p: "days of oppression."

e2. G^p omits "we have experienced every trouble."

f2. G^p omits "We have faced many evil things."

g2. So A, B, C, and G^p omit "We have died."

h2. Lit. "with our small [little] spirit." G^p omits "by the littleness of our spirit," and adds "we found none to take our part."

i2. G^p adds "we have been crushed."

j2. G^p omits this clause.

k2. Cf. Nickelsburg, Armenian and Biblical Studies, p. 102.

l2. G^p: "to know safety again."

m2. Lit. "from day to day."

n2. Or "expected."

o2. In A, the na in zanab(a), "tail," has been dropped, and zaba-, the compound particle, has been joined to the immediately succeeding word, sāmwawena, "we (have) toiled [labored]," to form zabāsāmwawena.

p2. Or "We have toiled as we worked [labored]."

q2. G^p: "we have not been the masters of our wages."

r2. G^p omits "the oppressors."

s2. G^p reads "the lawless ones."

t2. G^p: "the yoke."

u2. So A and G^p. B and C read "they that hate us and goad us."

v2. G^p reads "They who are our masters . . ."

w2. So B and C. A reads wabo, "there is [are]."

x2. G^p omits this sentence.

y2. G^p omits this clause.

z2. G^p omits this clause.

a3. G^p: "against those who insulted and outraged us."

b3. So B and C. A: 'ardā'ekewomu, "you were assisting them," does not seem to make sense, though it agrees with reading of other early MSS.

c3. G^p reads "They did not take our part, finding no complaint against those who affront and devour us; but they harden against us those who slaughtered us and made us few."

their (the offenders') injustice and do not remove the yokes of those who devour us,^{d3} scatter us, and murder us; they (the authorities) cover up our murder:^{e3} and they (the authorities) do not remember (the fact) that they (the offenders) have lifted up their hands against us."^{f3}

- 1 104 "I swear unto you that in heaven the angels will remember you for good^a before the glory of the Great One; and your names^b shall be written before the glory of the 2 Great One.^c • Be hopeful, because formerly you have pined away through evil and toil. But now you shall shine^d like the lights of heaven, and you shall be seen;^e and
3 the windows of heaven shall be opened for you. Your cry shall be heard.^f • Cry for judgment, and it shall appear for you;^g for all your tribulations shall be (demanded) for investigation from the (responsible) authorities^h—from everyone who assisted those 4 who plundered you.ⁱ • Be hopeful, and do not abandon your hope, because there shall be a fire^j for you; you are about to be making a great rejoicing like the angels of
5 heaven.^k • You shall not have to hide on the day of the great judgment, and you shall not be found as the sinners; but the eternal judgment shall be (far) away from you for 6 all the generations of the world.^l • Now fear not, righteous ones, when you see the sinners waxing strong and flourishing;^m do not be partners with them, but keep far away from those who lean onto their own injustice; ⁿ for you are to be partners with 7 the good-hearted people of heaven. • Now, you sinners, even if you say,^o "All our sins shall not be investigated or written down,"^p nevertheless, all your sins are being written
8 down every day. • So now I show unto you that light and darkness as well as day and 9 night witness^q all your sins. • Do not become wicked in your hearts, or lie, or alter the words of a just verdict,^r or utter falsehood against the words of^s the Great,^t the Holy One, or give praise to^u your idols; for all your lies and all your wickedness are^v
10 not for righteousness but for great sin.^w • And now I know this mystery: For they (the sinners) shall alter the just verdict^x and many sinners will take it to heart;^y they will speak evil words and lie, and they will invent fictitious stories and write out my 11 Scriptures on the basis of their own words.^z • And would that they had written down all the words^{a2} truthfully on the basis of their own speech,^{b2} and neither alter nor take 12 away from my words, all of which I testify to them from the beginning! • Again know another mystery!^{c2} that to the righteous and the wise^{d2} shall be given the Scriptures

d3. So C. A reads "they do not remove their yokes; and they devour us." B reads "they do not remove their yokes but they devour us."

e3. "Our murder" is in the genitive objective case; in other words, the phrase should be read "the fact of our being murdered [slaughtered]."

f3. G^p: "concerning the sinners, they do not remember their sins."

104 a. Or the clause can be understood to mean "the angels will intercede for you in heaven."

b. So B and C. A reads "the names."

c. G^p omits this clause.

d. A wrongly reads tefarehu, "you (will) fear," instead of tebarehu.

e. C: "you shall shine and be seen."

f. So G^p. Eth. (as in A, B, and C) "And your cry" is incomplete.

g. G^p: "The judgment for which you cry shall also be made manifest against everything which helps against you for your oppression."

h. Lit. "your tribulations shall be investigated from the authorities."

i. G^p reads "from all who ate with those who affront and devour you."

j. B and C omit "fire"; v. 4 is altogether omitted in G^p.

k. So A and B. C: "for there shall be a great joy for you like the angels of heaven. What are you about to do?"

l. G^p: "(you sinners), shall be troubled; and there shall be eternal judgment upon you for all the generations of the world [ages]."

m. Or "prospering." Lit. "their way become befitting."

n. B, C, and G^p read "but keep far away from [G^p: "all"] their injustice."

o. G^p: "say not."

p. So B and C. A is not intelligible.

q. Lit. "see," "behold."

r. Or "the word of truth."

s. A omits "of."

t. G^p omits "Great."

u. A, B, and G^p. C reads "do not take account of."

v. G^p: "lead to."

w. A erroneously reads hāte'an, "sinners," instead of hate'at.

x. Or "the word of truth."

y. So A. B C: "Sinners will greatly [amply] alter and pervert the just verdict." Cf. also Nickelsburg, Armenian and Biblical Studies, p. 103. G^p: "sinners alter and write against . . . of truth and lead the many away."

z. So A. B C: "they will invent great inventions, and write books on the basis of their own words." G^p: "they lie and invent great falsehoods and write out the Scriptures in their names."

a2. So A and C. B G^p: "all my words."

b2. G^p: "in their names."

c2. So A. B C G^p: "I know another mystery."

d2. G^p adds "the holy."

13 of joy, for truth and great wisdom.^{e2} •So to them shall be given the Scriptures;^{f2} and they shall believe them and be glad in them; and all the righteous ones who learn from them the ways of truth shall rejoice.’^{g2}

1 105 In those days, he says, “The Lord will be patient and cause the children of the earth to hear. Reveal it to them with your wisdom,^a for you are their guides; and (you are) a reward^b upon the whole earth. •Until^c I and my son are united with them forever in the upright paths in their lifetime and there shall be peace unto you, rejoice, you children of truth.^d Amen.”^e

1 106 And after some days my son, Methuselah, took a wife for his son Lamech,^a and she became pregnant by him^b and bore him a son. •And his body was white as^c snow and red as^d a rose; the hair of his head^e as white as wool^f and his demdema^g beautiful; and as for his eyes, when he opened them^h the whole house glowed like the sun—
3 (rather) the whole house glowed even more exceedingly.ⁱ •And when^j he arose from the hands of the midwife, he opened his mouth and spoke to the Lord with righteousness.^k •And his father,^l Lamech, was afraid of him and fled^m and went to Methuselah his father; •and he said to him, “I have begotten a strange son:ⁿ He is not like an (ordinary) human being, but he looks like the children of the angels of heaven to me;^o his form is different, and he is not like us.^p His eyes are like the rays of the sun, and^q his face glorious.^r •It does not seem to me that he is of me,^s but of angels;^t and I fear^u that a wondrous phenomenon^v may take place upon the earth in his days.^w 7 So I am beseeching you now, begging you in order that you may go to his (grand)father^x Enoch, our father, and learn^y from him the truth, for his dwelling place is among the angels.”^z •When Methuselah heard the words of his son,^{a2} he came to us^{b2} at the ends of the earth; for he had heard that I was there.^{c2} He cried aloud, and I heard his voice and came to him;^{d2}; and I said to him, “Behold, my son, here I am, why^{e2} have you come here?”^{f2} •Then he answered me and said, “On account of a great distress have I come to you,^{g2} on account of a grievous vision have I come near here.^{h2} •Now, my

e2. So A. B C: “for joy, truth, and great wisdom.”
G^p: “for the joy in the truth.”

f2. This clause is omitted by G^p.

g2. So A and G^p. B C: “shall be recompensed.”

105 a. So A? The text is partially illegible. B and C read “The Lord says, they will cry out and testify in their wisdom to the children of the earth.”

b. Eth. ‘esseyāt, “reward,” “wage.” Possibly this may be a corruption of assat, “healing power,” “gift of healing,” “spiritual authority.”

c. So A. B C: “For.”

d. Or “uprightness.”

e. This ch. is missing from G^p. Contrary to Charles’s view, this short ch. seems to exist in the Aram. original. Cf. Milik, The Books of Enoch, p. 208.

106 a. G^p reads “I took a wife for my son, Methuselah,” and then adds “and she bore him a son and called his name Lamech. Righteousness was brought low until that day. When he came of age, he took a wife for him.” The Lat. fragment adds “when he was three hundred fifty years old.”

b. G^p omits “she became pregnant by him.”

c. G^p: “whiter than.”

d. G^p: “redder than.”

e. G^p omits “of his head.”

f. G^p adds “and curly and glorious.”

g. This Eth. word has no equivalent in English. It refers to long and curly hair combed up straight, what one calls gofarē in several modern Ethiopian languages, or “afro” in colloquial English.

h. Lit. “his eyes.”

i. G^p omits this phrase.

j. G^p omits “when.”

k. So A. B and C read “to the Lord of righteousness.” G^p reads “he blessed the Lord.”

l. G^p omits “his father.”

m. Lat. omits “and fled.”

n. G^p: “a strange child has been born to me.”

o. B, C, and G^p omit “to me.” Lat. omits this clause.

p. Lat. omits this clause.

q. B and C omit “and.”

r. Lat. omits this clause.

s. Lat. reads “he is not born of me.”

t. G^p: “of an angel.”

u. A reads erroneously “he did not fear.”

v. Lit. “a wonder, miracle, wonderment.”

w. Lat. omits this clause.

x. B and C omit “his (grand)father.”

y. Lit. “hear.”

z. G^p has a gap and misses this clause. Lat. reads “he said to Methuselah: I am not able to know unless we go to our father Enoch.”

a2. Due to a gap, this clause is missing in G^p.

b2. B C G: “to me.”

c2. G^p: “where he saw that I was then.”

d2. G^p: “He said to me, ‘Father, give ear to my voice and come to me.’”

e2. So G^p and Lat. A B C: “for.”

f2. So A. B C G^p Lat.: “why . . . come to me?”

g2. G^p reads “I have come here,” and adds “(my) father.”

h2. G^p omits this clause. Lat. reads “he said,” omits vs. 9, and proceeds to vs. 10.

father, hear me:¹² For unto my son Lamech a son¹² has been born,^{k2} one whose image and form are not like unto the characteristics of human beings; and his color is whiter than snow and redder than a rose,¹² the hair of his head is whiter than white wool, and his eyes are like the rays of the sun; and (when) he opened his eyes the whole house 11 lighted up.^{m2} • And (when) he rose up in the hands of the midwife, he opened his 12 mouth and blessed the Lord of heaven^{m2} • Then his father, Lamech,^{m2} became afraid^{p2} and fled,^{q2} and he did not believe that he (the child) was of him^{r2} but of^{s2} the image of the angels of heaven.¹² And behold, I have come to you in order that you may make 13 me know the real truth.” • Then I, Enoch,^{u2} answered, saying to him, “The Lord will surely make new things^{v2} upon the earth; and I have already seen this matter in a vision and made it known to you. For in the generation^{w2} of Jared, my father, they 14 transgressed the word of the Lord, (that is) the law of heaven.^{x2} • And behold, they commit sin and transgress the commandment;^{y2} they have united themselves with women and commit sin together with them; and they have married (wives) from among 15 them, and begotten children by them^{z2} • There shall be a great destruction^{a3} upon the 16 earth; and there shall be a deluge and a great destruction for one year. • And this son who has been born unto you shall be left upon the earth;^{b3} and his three sons shall be 17 saved when they who are upon the earth are dead.^{c3} • And upon the earth they shall give birth to giants,^{d3} not of the spirit but of the flesh.^{e3} There shall be a great plague 18 upon the earth, and the earth shall be washed clean^{f3} from all the corruption.^{e3} • Now, make known to your son^{h3} Lamech that the son who has been born is indeed righteous;ⁱ³ and call his name Noah, for he shall be the remnant for you; and he and his sons shall be saved from the corruption^{j3} which shall come upon the earth on account of all the sin and oppression that existed, and it will be fulfilled upon the earth, in his days.^{k3} 19 After that there shall occur still greater oppression than that which was fulfilled upon the earth the first time; for I do know the mysteries of the holy ones;^{l3} for he, the Lord, has revealed (them) to me and made me know—and I have read (them) in the heavenly tablets.”

1 107 Then I beheld the writing upon them that one generation shall be more wicked than the other,^a until^b a generation of righteous ones^c shall arise, wickedness shall perish, sin shall disappear from upon the earth, and every good thing^d shall come

i2. G^p and Lat. omit this introductory clause.

j2. G^p: “a child.”

k2. Due to double haplography A reads tawalda Lāmēk waldya, “my son Lamech is born.”

l2. Lat. omits “whose image . . . than a rose.”

m2. G^p and Lat. omit the last clause.

n2. G^p: “the Lord of eternity.”

o2. G^p: “my son Lamech.”

p2. Lat. “Lamech became afraid.” The rest of vs. 12 is missing.

q2. B C and G^p: “he fled to me.”

r2. G^p: “that he is his son.”

s2. B C: “from.”

t2. G^p: “but that (he is) from angels.”

u2. G^p omits “Enoch.”

v2. Lit. “He will renew new things.” G^p: “new order.”

w2. A erroneously: waldu, “his son,” instead of teweledu.

x2. Or “the regulation or order [or “rule,” “commandment,” “principle,” “custom”] of heaven”; so A. B and C read ’emal’elta samāy, “from the heights of heaven” or “from heaven above,” instead of ’emser’ata samāy. G^p reads “from the covenant of heaven.”

y2. G^p: “the custom.”

z2. See n. e3. Vss. 13f. missing in Lat.

a3. G^p: “wrath.”

b3. G^p: “this child that is born shall be left.”

c3. B and C add “he and his children will be saved.” Cf. 4QEn^c.

d3. Lit. “those who are tall”; so A. B C: “those who multiply.” G^p omits the phrase.

e3. In G^p, this sentence is placed at the end of vs. 14. Charles in APOT, vol. 2, p. 279, decided to place it at the end of vs. 14. Milik also puts it at the end of vs. 14, in 4QEn^c.

f3. So 4QEn^c: “be cleansed (from) great corruption.” G^p: “he shall tame the earth.”

g3. So 4QEn^c. G^p adds “that is upon it.”

h3. G^p omits “your son.”

i3. Lit. “he is righteous.” B and C read “the one who has been born is in truth his son.” G^p reads “tell Lamech that he is his son in truth and holiness.”

j3. Or “destruction.”

k3. G^p reads “whereupon you shall rest, and his sons, from the corruption of the earth and from all the sinners and from all the wickedness.” Milik’s reconstructing of this verse, according to 4QEn^c, as containing the triple explanation of Noah’s names, is not convincing (see The Books of Enoch, p. cited).

l3. The preceding two clauses are missing in G^p due to a gap.

107 a. Lit. “generation.”

b. B: “for,” “since,” “that.”

c. B C G^p: “righteousness.” Cf. 4QEn^c.

d. Lit. “good,” “beautiful,” “pleasant.”

2 upon her.^e • “And now, my son, go^f and make it known to your son Lamech that this 3 son^g who has been born is his son in truth—and not in falsehood.” • And when Methuselah had heard the words of his father Enoch—for he revealed to him everything in secret—he returned (home).^h And he called the name of that son Noah, for he will comfort the earth after all the destruction.ⁱ

1 108 Another Book of Enoch—which he wrote for his son Methuselah and for those
2 who will come after him, observing the law in the last days. • You who have observed
(the law)^a shall wait patiently in all the days^b until (the time of) those who work evil
3 is completed,^c and the power of the wicked ones is ended. • As for you, wait patiently until sin passes away, for the names of (the sinners)^d shall be blotted out from the Book of Life^e and the books of the Holy One;^f their seeds shall be destroyed forever and their spirits shall perish and die;^g they shall cry and lament in a place that is an invisible^h wilderness and burn in the fire—for there existsⁱ ground^j there (as upon the earth).

4 I also saw there something like an invisible cloud; (and) though I could see that it was completely dark^k yet I could not see^l the flame of its fire because it was burning brightly; and there were some things like bright mountains which formed a ring (around 5 it) and which were tossing it to and fro. • Then I asked one of the holy angels who was with me, saying to him, “What is this bright thing? For it is not a heaven^m but merely the flame of a fire which is burning—and a voice of weeping, crying, and 6 lamenting as well as strong pain.” • And he said unto me, “This place which you see, into it shall be takenⁿ the spirits of sinners, blasphemers, those who do evil, and those who alter all the things which the Lord has done^o through the mouth of the prophets, 7 all of which have to be fulfilled. • For some of (these things) were written and sealed above in^p heaven so that the angels may read^q them (the things that are written) and know that which is about to befall the sinners, the spirits of the ones who err,^r as well as those who defiled^s their bodies, revenged themselves on^t God,^u and worked^v together 8 with evil people. • Those who love God have loved neither gold nor silver, nor all the good things which are in the world, but have given over their bodies to suffering—9 who from the time of their very being have not longed after earthly food, and who^w regarded themselves^x as a (mere) passing breath. And they have observed this matter, the Lord having put them through much testing; then he received their pure spirits^y 10 so that they should bless his name. • And I have recounted in the books all their blessings. He has caused them to be recompensed,^z for they were all^{a2} found loving

e. Gp: “blessings shall come to them upon the earth.”

f. Gp: “And now run, child.”

g. Gp: “this child.” 4QEnf: “this boy.”

h. B: “he returned (home) having seen.” C: “he returned (home) and revealed (them) to him.” Gp omits this clause.

i. Gp: “And his name was called Noah, comforting the earth after the destruction.”

108 a. Lit. “You who have worked [acted, done].” C: “You who have done the good.”

b. So A. B and C read la'ellu mawā'el. “for those days,” instead of bak'ellu mawā'el.

c. B C: “until those who work evil are finished [consummated].”

d. Lit. “their names.”

e. So C. A reads “from the book of.” B omits the whole phrase.

f. B C: “of the holy ones.”

g. So A. B C: “shall be killed.”

h. Or “chaotic.” Cf. Gen 1:2.

i. B C: “there is not.”

j. Or “earth.”

k. Lit. “I could see from its darkness.” B and C are unintelligible: “for I could not see from its depth looking over.”

l. B C: “I could see.”

m. A could possibly be read kamāya, “like water.”

n. B C: “shall be cast.”

o. B C: “spoken.”

p. So B and C. A omits “in.”

q. So B and C. A reads “deposit,” “preserve,” “write down,” or “put.”

r. Or “the blunderers,” “the falterers,” “the lapsed,” “the apostates.” B and C and other MSS cited by Charles read tehutān, “the humble ones,” instead of sehutān.

s. So A. B and C and other MSS cited by Charles, with the exception of his q, which is unintelligible, read ahmamu, “they made sick,” “they afflicted,” instead of ahsamu.

t. C: “by.”

u. C reads “they were recompensed [revenged] by God.”

v. B C: “diminished,” “put to shame.”

w. B C: “but.”

x. So A and B. C: “their souls.”

y. B C: “then their spirits were found pure.”

z. B C: “he has recompensed them.”

a2. B and C read 'ellu, “they,” “those,” “those that,” instead of k'ellu.

God^{b2} more than the fire of their eternal souls;^{c2} and while they were being trodden upon by evil people, experiencing abuse and insult by them, they continued^{d2} blessing us.^{e2} • So now I^{f2} shall summon their spirits^{g2} if they are born of light,^{h2} and change those who are born in darkness—those whose bodies were not recompensed with honor as they deserved for their faithfulness.ⁱ² • I shall bring them out into the bright light, those who have loved my holy name, and seat them each one by one upon the throne of his honor;^{j2} • and they shall be resplendent for ages^{k2} that cannot be numbered;^{l2} for the judgment of God is righteousness, because he will give faith^{m2}—as well as the paths of truthⁿ²—to the faithful ones in the resting place.^{o2} • Then they shall see^{p2} those who were born in darkness being taken into darkness, while the righteous ones shall be resplendent. • (The sinners) shall cry aloud, and they shall see the righteous ones^{q2} being resplendent; they shall go to the place which was^{r2} prescribed for them concerning^{s2} the days and the seasons.’’ Here ends the Revelation of the Secrets of Enoch.

b2. Lit. “heaven.”

c2. B: “more than their eternal breath.” C: “more than their breath in the world.”

d2. Or “they remained,” “they persisted.” Lit. “they lived,” “they settled down.” B and C read hasaru, “they were shamed [slighted],” instead of nabaru.

e2. So A. B C: “me.”

f2. It appears to me that the shift in personal pronouns may indicate some scribal effort at an interpretative commentary, or even an interpolation.

g2. B and C read “the spirits of the good [kind] ones.”

h2. Lit. “if it is born of light”; A is difficult. It can possibly read “I shall call their spirits, if it is born of light,” which agrees with some traditional Ethiopian commentaries, or “I shall call their spirits, mother of the one born of light . . .” B C: “from the generation of light.”

i2. Or “faith.”

j2. B: “in the throne of honor—his honor.”

k2. Or “times,” “seasons,” “periods.”

l2. Lit. “without number.”

m2. Or “faithfulness.”

n2. Or “uprightness.”

o2. B C: “He will give faith to the faithful ones in the resting place of the paths of truth [or “uprightness”].”

p2. A erroneously adds “the righteous ones.”

q2. B C: “the sinners.”

r2. C: “were.”

s2. B and C omit “concerning.”

2 (Slavonic Apocalypse of) ENOCH

(Late First Century A.D.)

Appendix: 2 Enoch in Merilo Pravednoe

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION*

BY F. I. ANDERSEN

This work is an amplification of Genesis 5:21–32; that is, it covers events from the life of Enoch to the onset of the Flood. The first and larger part, chapters 1–68, describes how Enoch was taken up to the Lord through the seven heavens and then returned to report to his family what he had learned. The second part, chapters 69–73, deals more briefly with the life of Enoch's successors, Methuselah and Nir, and ends with the story of the birth and ascension of Melchizedek, just prior to the Flood.

The book is basically a Midrash; but the sparse plot is almost lost in the large amount of apocalyptic material that it carries. The story of Enoch and his descendants provides the setting for a loosely assembled array of quite diverse ingredients, including cosmological speculations, ethical instruction, and prophecies of the future. Besides forecasting the Flood, these predictions extend to the fate of mankind, good and bad, after death. A basis for this eschatology was provided by the visits to Paradise and to the place of torment in the heavens. Angelology, astronomy, astrology, and calendrical systems all arise from the study of creation. The whole is suffused with teaching about God which is uncompromisingly monotheistic, notwithstanding the abundant mythology. The main doctrinal point, which is reiterated throughout, is that the Lord is the sole Creator. No other activity of God is celebrated, unless it is the last judgment. There is no interest in history. The author's posture is simple. His statements are unsupported by philosophical reasoning. Idolatry is denounced in conventional terms.

The ethical component is spread over the whole work, either as comments by the angels on why the occupants of heaven and hell are where they are, or as exhortations given by Enoch to his family. The cardinal virtues are care for the poor and needy, and sexual purity. Many other ideas, some quite strange, appear along the way; but the main concern is with the origin of things. While derived mainly from the biblical creation stories, the account of the cosmos has been elaborated in a quasi-scientific manner. The results are not altogether consistent; sometimes the picture is quite obscure. The most systematic description arises from the journey through the seven heavens. Then there is a distinct account of the origin of everything, presented as an extended story of the creation of the universe based on Genesis 1f., told by the Lord himself in the first person as autobiographical reminiscences. Some of this material is repeated when Enoch makes his report to his family on earth, in the form of lists, rather than narrative.¹

* [The Introduction does not contain sections on "Relation to Canonical Books" or on "Relation to Apocryphal Books," because of the complex textural history of this document. J.H.C.]

¹ M. E. Stone, "Lists of Revealed Things in the Apocalyptic Literature," Magnalia Dei: The Mighty Acts of God; Essays on the Bible and Archaeology in Memory of G. Ernest Wright, eds. F. M. Cross, W. E. Lemke, and P. D. Miller, Jr. (Garden City, N.Y., 1976) pp. 414–52.

Texts

2 Enoch is known only from manuscripts in Old Slavonic.² Here is a list of known manuscripts, along with the symbols used to refer to them.

Manuscript	Our symbol	Sokolov	Bonwetsch	Vaillant	Charles
NLB 321	R	A(?)	S	R
BAN 13.3.25	J	Я	J	J
GIM Khlyudov	P	П	P	P	A
RM 3058	P ²			P ²
BAN 45.13.4	A	Academy Chronograph (unpublished)
GIM 3(18)	U	У	U	U
TSS 793	Tr			Tr
MS 387(3)	Syn			Syn
GIM Barsov	B	Б	B	B
RM 578	Rum			Rum
NLB 151/443	N	H	V ^a	N	B
VL 125	V	B	V ^v	V
GIM Barsov ²	B ²	Б ¹	B ¹	B ²
TSS 15	MPr		M	MPr
TSS 253	TSS 253		(M)
TSS 489	TSS 489		(M)
TSS 682	TSS 682		(M)
Gennadius	G		Genn.
IHP 39	Chr			Chr
RM 590	Chr ²		C	Chr ²

The manuscripts differ widely in date and provenance. They are also quite diverse in scope and in individual readings. Not one of them is simply a text of 2 Enoch itself; in every case the Enoch material is either part of a larger work or part of a collection of various pieces. Only a few of them have the text in any degree of completeness; most of them supply only brief extracts incorporated into different miscellanies, usually with drastic abbreviation or extensive reorganization. Four manuscripts (N, V, B², P) end with Enoch's second ascension. Five manuscripts (A, U, B, R, J) are more complete, since they go on to the subsequent events, including the legends of Methuselah and Melchizedek. J does not continue to the end, so that only A, U, B, R reach the rapture of Melchizedek and the Flood. The Melchizedek story is found also in Rum, which has extracted it from 2 Enoch, as the title shows. There is no evidence that the second part ever existed separately.³

Attempts have been made to classify the known manuscripts into textual families. Without critical editions of them all, this procedure is premature. A stemma of relationships is often very hard to work out in medieval manuscripts of this kind. To illustrate, M. I. Sokolov's impression that V is virtually identical with N, based on a cursory collation, has been repeated in much subsequent discussion; but it is false, and the several superior readings of V need to be included.⁴ The fourteenth-century copy of Merilo Pravednoe, which is the oldest of all the manuscripts, is so far the only one that has been published in facsimile. But the extracts from 2 Enoch which have been incorporated into this ethical treatise have been

² The following abbreviations are used to refer to institutions holding MSS:

- BAN Library of the Academy of Sciences of the U.S.S.R., Leningrad
- GIM State Historical Museum, Moscow
- IHP Institute of History and Philology, Nezhin
- NLB National Library, Belgrade
- RM Rumyantsev Museum
- TSS Trinity-St. Sergius Monastery Library
- [The last two collections are now in the Lenin Library, Moscow]
- VL The Austrian National Library, Vienna

The editor and translator wish to express their gratitude to the Library of the Academy of Sciences in Leningrad for photographs of the unpublished MSS A and J; and to the Vienna Library for a photograph of the unpublished MS V.

³ F. L. Horton (The Melchizedek Tradition [SNTS MS 30; Cambridge, 1976]) summarily dismisses 2En on the grounds that its Melchizedek materials are found in only one recension. This argument is not itself logical; but the facts are otherwise. The tradition is found in both recensions, in six MSS representing four text families.

⁴ F. Repp, "Textkritische Untersuchungen zum Henoch-Apokryph des cod. slav. 125 der Österreichischen Nationalbibliothek," Wiener slavistische Jahrbuch 10 (1963) 58-68.

extensively rearranged, and this has to be balanced against its antiquity when its claims are measured (see following appendix).⁵ Any attempt to write the textual history of 2 Enoch must wait until accurate copies of all manuscripts become available.

It is generally recognized that there is a longer and a shorter recension. This is a distinction in the character of the text, quite apart from the length of the extracts found in individual manuscripts. More precisely one can distinguish a very long recension (J, P, with P² as a brief extract of a text close to P), a long recension (R—physically longer even than J because it completes the Melchizedek section which J cuts short), a short recension (A, U, with Tr, Syn as extracts of the same kind of text), and a very short recension (B, N, V, B², with Rum as an extract in the same tradition). The other manuscripts, which are only extracts, belong to other text traditions.

Even manuscripts which are identified as being of the same kind are far from uniform among themselves. The closest pairs are P and P², A and U, V and N; but even these vary extensively in spelling. Quite apart from the mistakes made by scribes, or the liberties with which they expanded or condensed to suit their purposes, difficult readings due to other causes, including simple incomprehension of material from an alien culture, such as the calendar in 2 Enoch, have compounded the problems. It is likely that every manuscript has suffered from such influences to a greater or a less degree; not one can claim to be intrinsically superior to the others. Another result of this hazardous transmission is that while some sections have survived in many manuscripts, others are known from only a few copies. In the extreme case, a reading found only once might prove to be authentic, although such readings are often no more than a divergence in one manuscript. When it is so hard to tell whether a solitary reading is a sole survivor from the original or an interpolation, it is better to present all the evidence and suspend judgment. The common mistakes of counting witnesses as a measure of a reading's claim and dismissing a reading because of meager attestation are, accordingly, particularly detrimental in 2 Enoch research.

There are many indications that 2 Enoch is derived from sources foreign to Slavonic culture. Most, if not all, Slavonic literature of this kind was translated from Greek, and traces of such an origin may be discerned in 2 Enoch. But no Greek texts of 2 Enoch, or even parts of it, are known. This circumstance makes it all the more difficult to settle textual problems within the Slavonic manuscripts.

The extensive and substantial differences between manuscripts of the longer recension (R, J, P, P²—two or three families) and manuscripts of the shorter recension (the main ones are A, U, V, N, B², B—four or five families) constitute the major textual problem. The difference in length is due to two quite different features. There are blocks of text found only in the longer manuscripts; but even when the passages are parallel, the longer manuscripts tend to be more ample. At the same time there is so much verbal similarity when the passages correspond that a common source must be supposed; that is, we have recensions, not different versions. Furthermore, the very short manuscripts differ from the short ones in the same manner.

Quite contradictory explanations have been offered for these facts. Earlier investigators, notably Sokolov and R. H. Charles, accepted the longer texts as nearest to the original, and explained the shorter ones as the result of condensation.⁶ N. Schmidt, A. Vaillant, and N. A. Meshchersky, in contrast, concluded that the longer texts were the result of expansion and heavy interpolation.⁷ The extra material, therefore, tended to be discarded as probably inauthentic. These scholars, however, differ quite extensively in their arguments, and in their conclusions about the production of the book through its various stages. Reserve is called for. All of the material calls for reassessment. At the very least we should remain open to the possibility that some of the passages found only in manuscripts of the longer recension could preserve ancient traditions, some of which might well be original. Abbreviation as well as expansion has almost certainly taken place. In the present state of our knowledge, the genuineness of any disputed passage is difficult to judge.

⁵ M. N. Tikhomirov, Merilo pravednoe po rukopisi XIV veka (Moscow, 1961).

⁶ M. I. Sokolov, "Materialy i zametki po starinnoi slavyanskoj literatüre." Vyp. 3, VII: Slavyanskaya kniga Enokha: Tekst' s' latinskim' perevodom'. Chiteniya v' obshchestve istorii i drevnostei Rossiiskikh [COIDR] 4 (1899) 1–80. This is the text of R with variants from U and other MSS. Idem, "Slavyanskaya kniga Enokha pravednogo: Teksty, latinskii perevod' i izsledovaniye." COIDR 4 (1910) [A] 111–82 (posthumous publication of the texts that Sokolov had collated); [B] 1–167 (his nn. on the texts). R. H. Charles, The Book of the Secrets of Enoch (Oxford, 1896).

⁷ N. Schmidt, "The Two Recensions of Slavonic Enoch," JAOS 41 (1921) 307–12; A. Vaillant, Le livre des secrets d'Hénoch: Texte slave et traduction française (Paris, 1952); N. A. Meshchersky, "K istorii teksta slavyanskoj knigi Enokha (Sledy pamyatnikov Kumrana v vizantijskoj i staroslavyanskoj literatüre)," Vizantijskii vremennik 24 (1964) 91–108; idem, "K voprosu ob istochnikakh slavyanskoj knigi Enokha," Kratkiye soobshcheniya Instituta narodov Azii 86 (Moscow, 1965) 72–78.

The claims of the longer recension need special attention in the sections dealing with creation, chapters 24–33. These chapters contain many weird notions in the longer recension, some of which could be embellishments. But the shorter account is so incomplete and so disjointed that it seems more like the debris left after drastic revision than an original succinct account. Some, at least, of the creation passages found only in manuscripts of the longer recension are worthy of more serious attention than they have received.

Original language

Three possibilities have been defended by scholars. The work now exists only in Slavonic, and no certain trace of it has been found elsewhere. A. S. D. Maunder claimed that 2 Enoch was composed in Slavonic, and is a late medieval concoction.⁸ But this is quite improbable. It is possible that some early Slav assembled these materials and translated them, but he is hardly likely to have composed them. And the extensive connection with 1 Enoch, however indirect, can hardly be denied. Most of the early religious literature in Slavonic was translated from Greek; 2 Enoch can hardly be an exception. Other cases are known of rare works surviving on the fringes of civilization, in languages such as Ethiopic and Armenian.

Greek is indicated as the language behind the Slavonic version, if not the language of the original composition, not only by the inherent historical possibilities of the case, but also by passages whose linguistic features preserve traces of Greek words and expressions. The best known of these are the anagram and the names of the planets in chapter 30. The anagram, which connects the name of Adam with the points of the compass, makes sense only in Greek. Yet such evidence is not entirely conclusive. First, this is an old tradition, and the Jews who mixed Greek science with their biblical studies took over this kind of terminology into Hebrew or Aramaic. Secondly, these key passages are missing from manuscripts of the shorter recension; so, if it could be shown that they are secondary interpolations, they do not prove that the original work as a whole was composed in Greek.

The text abounds in Semitisms; but several explanations of this are possible. It is theoretically possible that the book, or at least parts of it, came directly from Hebrew into Slavonic. This is what Meshchersky has argued for the shorter recension, which he takes to be the original work.⁹ But it is more likely that the Semitisms are due to Hebrew (or Aramaic) sources behind the Greek version, or at least due to the cultivation of a biblical style in the Greek original. Now that it is known that parts of 1 Enoch existed in Aramaic in pre-Christian times,¹⁰ it is more credible that 2 Enoch stands in another stream of Enoch traditions stemming from similar sources, and perhaps even of comparable antiquity. An original Semitic composition can still be suspected; but after two stages of translation through Greek to Slavonic, it is not now possible to tell how much written material in a Semitic language might lie behind those portions of the text which still have Semitisms, let alone to determine which Semitic language it might have been.

Date

Since no manuscripts older than the fourteenth century are known, any time before that is available as the date by which the book reached its present form. But evidence for the complete texts of the two main recensions is somewhat later than that, and the earliest evidence (that of MPr) different from both of them. This divergence is probably the result

⁸ A. S. D. Maunder, "The Date and Place of Writing of the Slavonic Book of Enoch," The Observatory 41 (1918) 309–16.

⁹ Sokolov, in his paper on the Phoenix, "Feniks' v' apokrifakh' ob' Enokhē i Varukhē," in Novyi sbornik statei po slavyanovedeniyu, ed. V. I. Lamansky (St. Petersburg, 1905) pp. 395–405, pointed to pre-Christian writings in Heb. behind the Gk. text used by the Slav. translator. The suggestion that 2En (that is, the shorter recension, which he considers to be original) was actually translated directly from Heb. into Old Russian was first made, so far as I know, by N. A. Meshchersky in "Sledy pamyatnikov Kumrana v staroslavjanskoj i drevnerusskoj literaturē (K izucheniyu slavyanskikh versii knigi Enokha)," Trudy otдела drevnerusskoj literatury [TODRL] 19 (1963) 130–47; idem, "Problemy izucheniya slavyano-russkoj perevodnoj literatury XI–XV vv.," TODRL 20 (1964) 180–231; and in the papers cited in n. 7 above.

¹⁰ J. T. Milik, The Books of Enoch: Aramaic Fragments of Qumrān Cave 4 (Oxford, 1976).

of transmission in Slavonic, with extensive expansions and contractions (see nn. to the translation). The original translation could have been made in an early period of Slavic literacy, but even so the supposed Greek composition need not have been produced earlier than A.D. 1000. Of course the Greek author could have made use of ancient material, and almost certainly did. But the very freedom of the treatment makes it impossible to prove that any passage which resembles something in another work is a quotation, whether a quotation from 2 Enoch in some other work of known date (proving that 2En existed prior to the writing of the work which quotes it), or whether a quotation from some other work used by the author of 2 Enoch (proving that 2En must be later than the work which it quotes). And, quite apart from the elusive character of such evidence, even if it could be proved that 2 Enoch contains such a quotation, this might be no more than a late gloss, and not an integral part of the original work. Of this character are the references to the Julian calendar which are obvious glosses and settle nothing concerning the date of the main text. The suspected echoes of the New Testament seem to be of this kind, and betray more likely the hand of a Christian scribe than the mind of a Christian author. In view of this complicated situation, it is not surprising that dates ranging all the way from pre-Christian times to the late Middle Ages have been proposed for the production of 2 Enoch.

The rather improbable suggestion that 2 Enoch is no more than a medieval assemblage leaves uninvestigated the more important question of when and where these gathered materials were produced. Recognizing that the book is in all likelihood the result of a long and complex process of collecting and editing—a process which we cannot now reconstruct—the question of date becomes more complicated. The task is to date and locate the major stages (admittedly hypothetical) in the literary growth of the work. The questions of date and provenance thus go together.

Provenance

All attempts to locate the intellectual background of 2 Enoch have failed. There must be something very peculiar about a work when one scholar, Charles, concludes that it was written by a hellenized Jew in Alexandria in the first century B.C., while another, J. T. Milik, argues that it was written by a Christian monk in Byzantium in the ninth century A.D.

Affinities with the Qumran writings have been noticed; some of these can probably be explained by the use of 1 Enoch as the source of such features as the calendar. In spite of Milik's claims, and Vaillant's theory that 2 Enoch is a Christian revision of Jewish Enoch (1En), very little can be demonstrated by way of direct connection between the two works, and the divergences are numerous and substantial. In particular, 1 Enoch has an interest in history not present in 2 Enoch, while 2 Enoch has an interest in creation not present in 1 Enoch. Independent of this connection is the interest in Melchizedek, which was lively at Qumran.¹¹ If ancient, this part of 2 Enoch should be added to the Qumran Melchizedek traditions as background for the Christian treatment of this theme in Hebrews.¹²

The most remarkable token of continued puzzlement over this work is the failure of scholars to decide whether it came from Jewish or Christian circles. It hardly stands in the mainstream of either religion.

In spite of its evident biblical style, there is no point at which it can be shown to depend on the text of the New Testament, barring obvious Christian glosses, whose extraneous character is betrayed by their presence in only one manuscript or at most in manuscripts of one family. There is not a distinctively Christian idea in the book. Alleged use of it in the New Testament (evidence that it is a pre-Christian Jewish work) is in passing phrases of a very general kind; either 2 Enoch and the New Testament are drawing on a common background, or else a later author is vaguely influenced by such expressions.¹³

¹¹ In addition to Horton's monograph (cf. n. 3), see J. A. Fitzmyer, "Further Light on Melchizedek from Qumran Cave 11," Essays on the Semitic Background of the New Testament (London, 1971) pp. 245–67.

¹² For repeated arguments that the Melchizedek story in 2En is a pre-Christian Midrash see I. D. Amusin, "Uchitel' pravvednosti kumranskoj obshchiny," Yezhegodnik muzeya istorii religii i ateizma 7 (1963) 253–77; idem, "Izbrannik boga v kumranskikh tekstakh," Vestnik Drevnei Istorii 1 (1966) 73–79; and esp. idem, "Novyi eskhatologicheskii tekst iz Kumrana (11QMelchisedek)," Vestnik Drevnei Istorii 3 (1967) 45–62; idem, Teksty Kumrana. Vypusk 1. Perevod s drevneyevreiskogo i arameiskogo, vvedeniye i kommentarii (Pamyatniki pis'mennosti vostoka 33.1; Moscow, 1971).

¹³ Apart from similarities to Jude and 2Pet, which are a distinct problem, 2En comes closer in language and ideas to Mt than to any other part of the NT; but it does not resemble Rev, as might have been expected. It is more likely that Mt and 2En have a similar milieu than that a later Christian author of 2En was influenced by only one book of the NT.

Vaillant's arguments that 2 Enoch is a Christian revision of 1 Enoch are unconvincing. Quite apart from the difference in scope, his main point is that 2 Enoch is not quite so hard on sinners! It could be argued, however, that the rabbis were more lenient than the apostles in this matter, and there is nothing in 2 Enoch as savage as Revelation. As already noted, the suspected quotations from the New Testament, adduced by Vaillant and others, do not amount to much; but more important is the total lack of a Christian Savior or scheme of salvation. On the contrary, Enoch occupies an exalted position as God's chosen and prime agent which is totally incompatible with Christian belief in Jesus as Messiah. Judaism and Christianity agree in highlighting God's justice in punishing the bad and rewarding the good; but a higher virtue is compassion expressed in mercy toward repentant sinners. According to the Christian Gospel, this mercy is mediated to mankind through the incarnate divine Redeemer, and secured by his atoning passion. In contrast, 2 Enoch is altogether severe. In spite of one extraordinary passage which says that Enoch takes away the sin of the world, there is another which denies any efficacy for mediatorial prayer, even Enoch's. A blessed afterlife is strictly a reward for right ethical behavior.

This does not mean that the work is Jewish; it lacks some of the most distinctive and definitive tenets of main-line Judaism. In fact, it knows nothing of developments between the Flood and the end of the world, so there is no place for Abraham, Moses, and the rest; there is no reference to the Torah. Instead, the writings attributed to Enoch are advanced as the essential guide to life and salvation; but the vital knowledge they convey does not go any further than belief in one God as the Creator, and the practice of a simple ethical code.

It would go a long way toward solving the mystery of 2 Enoch if we could discover a religious community that venerated it on its own terms. If the work is Jewish, it must have belonged to a fringe sect. If it was ever a sacred scripture of a real group, they could have been a community of God-fearers (the highest virtue in 2En 43:3), who were able to combine a strictly Jewish belief in one Creator-God (based on Gen, but combined with hellenistic metaphysics) and simple but strict ethical rules, with speculations about the cosmos, including a tincture of astrology. Add to this some typical sectarian concern about such things as tying the four legs of an animal when making a sacrifice, which is documented as a deviant practice on the margins of Judaism,¹⁴ and a fanatical belief in the correctness of their own solar calendar (everything is regulated by astronomy, hence the week is not a unit in God's time and there is no interest in the sabbath).¹⁵

In some respects these features remind us of Philo's Therapeutae, whose simplicity Philo admired. But the Therapeutae, in contrast to the author of 2 Enoch, seem to have revered Moses.

If 2 Enoch does go back to the turn of the era, it is a source of the highest importance for the history of syncretism of selected parts of the Jewish faith with cosmological speculation. It has no intellectual strength, for there is no system, and the attempt to be philosophical is spoiled by unreflective folk notions. 2 Enoch could derive from any region in which Jewish, Greek, Egyptian, and other Near Eastern ideas mingled. Proto-gnostic speculations, such as the ordering of the ranks of heavenly beings, or the suggestion that Adam was originally a heavenly creature expelled from a heavenly Paradise after his fall, are hard to pin down. Egypt, or Syria-Palestine, or Asia Minor could have been the seedbed; but it is impossible to discern how early or how late such ideas were around. There are ingredients suspected of being Iranian in origin;¹⁶ but in spite of claims sometimes made, the work is totally devoid of dualistic thinking, except for a passing belief that man is free to choose good or evil. There are, of course, fallen angels. As in 1 Enoch, they serve to explain Genesis 6:1-4; but there is nothing like the symmetry of the spirits of light and darkness as at Qumran.¹⁷

The Melchizedek legend constitutes a special problem. The fantastic details about this priest conflict both with Christian belief in Jesus as God's sole legitimate priest in heaven and with the Jewish idea that the descendants of Aaron (or Zadok) are God's sole legitimate ¹⁴ S. Pines, Types of Redemption, pp. 72-87.

¹⁵ A. Rubinstein, "Observations on the Slavonic Book of Enoch," JJS 15 (1962) 1-21.

¹⁶ Cf. Pines, n. 14.

¹⁷ J. H. Charlesworth, "A Critical Comparison of the Dualism in IQS III, 13-IV, 26 and the 'Dualism' Contained in the Fourth Gospel," NTS 15 (1968-69) 389-418 (reprinted in John and Qumran, ed. J. H. Charlesworth [London, 1972] pp. 76-106).

priests on earth. The miraculous conception of Melchizedek without human father (not strictly virginal, and with no mention of a divine agent, such as the Holy Spirit) is a typical wonder story, made somewhat ridiculous to our taste by the circumstance of the spontaneous delivery of the infant from his mother's corpse. But it is certainly not an imitation of the account of Jesus' birth found in Matthew and Luke.¹⁸ No Christian could have developed such a blasphemy (and we can imagine a scribe refusing to copy this part); and why should a Jew answer the Christians in this way when a more obvious and more scurrilous explanation of Mary's pregnancy was at hand? The Melchizedek materials from Qumran, regrettably fragmentary, do not line up with the Melchizedek story in 2 Enoch, except in the very general sense of being Midrashim. But this evidence at least shows that at the turn of the era Midrashic embellishments of terse biblical accounts could take on quite fantastic elements. The more sober treatment in Hebrews, while including features not derived from the Old Testament (but not demonstrably derived from any other known materials), could well be a fresh Christian attempt to say something on this current subject that would fit in with the Gospel.

If 2 Enoch does preserve ideas from an early setting in Palestine or nearby, its main importance would be its manner of interpreting the Torah. In particular, its various comments on the creation passages in Genesis could represent one of the earliest attempts to reconcile Scripture with science.

Historical importance

In every respect 2 Enoch remains an enigma. So long as the date and location remain unknown, no use can be made of it for historical purposes. The present writer is inclined to place the book—or at least its original nucleus—early rather than late; and in a Jewish rather than a Christian community. But by the very marginal if not deviant character of their beliefs, its users could have been gentile converts to moral monotheism based on belief in the antediluvian God of the Bible as Creator, but not as the God of Abraham or Moses.

Theological importance

Some passages sound as if there was a sect which accepted the Enoch writings as sacred scripture in the highest sense, but who they might have been we cannot now discern. The book is organized around the story of a journey and return, but it has no undergirding conceptual system. The monotheism is stark, but the God is altogether forbidding—not like the merciful father of all mankind that Jews and Christians believe in—and the attempts to describe him border on the ridiculous, although intended to be reverent and awesome. (The comparison with hot iron emitting sparks if we had only 22:1 could be judged an interpolation; for it occurs only in “longer” MSS. But it occurs again in 39:3, where it is found in both recensions.) Creation itself is explained by the extraordinary and quite unphilosophical notion that, when God alone existed, he was not at rest. A disproportionate amount of space is given to the duties of the innumerable angels in the various heavens, with the result that God himself is hardly involved in running the universe. In the longer recension the creation of man receives a lot of attention, and some analytical observations are made on his physiological and psychological constitution.

The ethics are general and humane. The traditional form of beatitude as the medium of moral exhortation is extensively used. Embedded in the conventional moralizing, alongside such quaint ideas as man's accountability for his treatment of animals, is an ethical idea as sublime as any found in Jewish or Christian teaching, an idea equal to the noblest doctrines of any ancient moralist. Man is the facsimile of God, God's visible face. Any disrespect for any human being is disrespect for God himself. This interpretation of the imago dei in ethical rather than metaphysical terms is quite enough to justify the inclusion of 2 Enoch within the Pseudepigrapha.

Translations

Sokolov attached a Latin translation to his 1899 edition of manuscript R. W. R. Morfill supplied the English translation from an eclectic text used in Charles's 1896 book. N. Forbes revised this for the Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, separating the longer recension (Charles's A—from P) and the shorter (Charles's B—from N), and displaying them synoptically. Unfortunately the manuscripts used were the worst representatives of the two recensions.

¹⁸ R. E. Brown, The Birth of the Messiah (Garden City, N.Y., 1977).

G. N. Bonwetsch's German edition presented separate translations of the longer and shorter recensions based on all of Sokolov's published evidence.¹⁹ He presented the Melchizedek legend separately. P. Riessler's edition contains another German version.²⁰ Vaillant's French edition, which highlights U, is the best working translation. He compiled ample textual and philological notes, but relegated to an annexe the material of the longer recension. Kahana made a Hebrew translation of R for his edition of the Pseudepigrapha.²¹

The reference system

There is no schema of chapters and verses common to the manuscripts, and no agreed convention among modern scholars. Sokolov introduced his own verse numbers, which have been followed by some. Charles's schema is different again. Vaillant's method of referring to a passage by the page and line number in his edition has little to commend it, since it depends on the accidents of typesetting.

The existing literature probably uses Charles's schema more than any other, so this has been retained here as much as possible. We have made the following minimal but necessary adjustments: (1) The chapter enumeration has been taken from the longer, rather than the shorter, recension, from which some whole chapters are missing and in which, at one point, the chapters come in a different sequence. (2) The chapter enumeration has been continued into the Melchizedek appendix, rather than numbering this as a distinct work. (3) Where Charles's verse numbers follow an abnormal verse sequence, we have changed the sequence to the text of A as a standard. (4) We have tried to mark the verse boundaries more precisely than Charles, and to make them the same for both recensions where they match. (5) We have supplied verse numbers for the long preface for convenience of reference.

The translation and its presentation

The translation tries to achieve three goals. It provides an idiomatic English translation of two prime manuscripts of 2 Enoch. It seeks to reproduce the peculiarities of the original sources as precisely as English will permit, even though the result might not be elegant. And it displays the two recensions side by side so that their similarities and differences may be viewed synoptically.

These aims sometimes conflict. The two manuscripts chosen are A (for the shorter recension) and J (for the longer). Since they are not always complete or superior, they need to be supplemented at some points by the readings in other manuscripts. When a portion of the text is lacking in A or J, it will be supplied from another source of the same recension. When another manuscript has an important variant to a reading present in A or J, this alternative will be supplied in a footnote. All such supplementary material will be clearly identified. The main text always corresponds to either A or J, even when their readings are inferior or erroneous or unintelligible. When necessary an ambiguous passage is clarified in a note. Space forbids the provision of a full textual apparatus, which would be very large because of the endless variations in spelling. Variant readings have been restricted to those in which a material difference is involved. We have resisted the temptation to make the English more readable by smoothing out textual difficulties.

A has been chosen to represent the shorter recension without prejudice as to its overall superiority. It was chosen for three reasons. First, because up to now it has never been published or used, and its very existence has escaped the attention of Western scholars; secondly, because the availability of photographs of A enables this lack to be remedied; thirdly, A is virtually identical with U, whose importance as an exemplar of the shorter recension is generally recognized. When another manuscript of the shorter recension has a reading where A has nothing, this additional text is added to the translation of A, again without prejudice as to its claims to authenticity. Such passages could be either additions that have been made to A's kind of text, or original material that has been lost in A's line of transmission. Sometimes it will be obvious which of these explanations is more likely; but often it is not. It is wise at this time to leave such questions open.

¹⁹ G. N. Bonwetsch, Die Bücher der Geheimnisse Henochs: Das sogenannte slavische Henochbuch (TU 44; Leipzig, 1922).

²⁰ Riessler, pp. 452–73, 1297f.

²¹ A. Kahana, Ha-Sefarim ha-Hiṣṣonim le-Torah (Jerusalem, 1936–37; reprinted 1978).

Quite a few manuscripts which stem from the shorter tradition are only excerpts; but there are some which preserve a more ample text, although not as complete as that of A and U. There are two main kinds. To keep the picture simple, only two additional manuscripts, one of each kind, have been used to supply supplementary material in the translation itself. Such extras obtained from B are put in { . . . }. Manuscript V is the best representative of the third kind of shorter manuscript; its special readings are shown in | . . . |. A further reason for using V is the fact that it has never been published; hitherto we have depended on its inferior congener N, the source of Charles's B. In short, the translation of the shorter recension presented here is the text of A supplemented by B and V.

A similar policy has been followed with the longer recension. J has been given pride of place for three reasons. First, because the full text has not been published before; secondly, because J is generally superior to P, its nearest congener, which has been prominent up to now as the source of Charles's A; thirdly, because J and P are further away from the shorter recension than R, the only other reasonably complete manuscript of the longer kind. We thus present the evidence of the most divergent texts. In addition, J goes on to the Melchizedek Midrash, which P lacks. Even so, it ends abruptly, and after 71:5 R is the only witness to the Melchizedek story in the longer tradition. Since P² is virtually identical with P its readings hardly matter. Hence it is possible to present all the textual evidence for the longer recension by supplying supplementary readings from R in { . . . } and supplementary readings from P in | . . . |. The most common occasions for the latter are the chapter titles, including often the enumeration "Word '1.'" These are peculiar to P and obviously secondary, even within the longer tradition. Sometimes they interrupt the text in a most unsuitable way; see, for instance, the transition between chapters 47 and 48, 53 and 54, 56 and 57, and the chapter heading between verses 1 and 2 of chapter 60.

Textual variants in the notes are alternatives, not supplements to what is in the main translations. Trivialities, such as the article, which does not exist in Slavonic, have not been included in this schema. { . . . } enclose a passage which is considered erroneous in the original manuscript, usually due to dittography.

The translation is as literal as English will tolerate. An attempt has been made to preserve distinctions in the vocabulary of the original by always rendering the same Slavonic word by the same English word. This information is often important for textual history. The name for the deity is mainly gospodī, which is always rendered "LORD." The occasional vladykū is "Lord," and bogū is "God." Since English has only one word for "Paradise," we have used it for poroda (a loan) and translated the native rai as "paradise." Without the aid of a concordance, we cannot guarantee complete success, since there are many pairs of synonyms of minor importance. The intensification of adjectives by means of the prefix prě-, which seems to be due to efflorescence in transmission of the text, is generally shown by means of "very" or, when it seems to be elative, "supremely." There was no convenient way to avoid thereby obscuring the use of the adverb zělo, "very."

Our presentation of numbers as either words or numerals reproduces the peculiarities of the manuscripts. We have even preserved some peculiarities of spelling, where they are of interest. Thus the various spellings of proper nouns, like Matusalam and Edem, are exactly as found in the originals.

The synoptic display introduces numerous unsightly gaps into the printed text, especially in the shorter recension. We hope that the gain in facility for comparative study will outweigh the aesthetic loss.

In addition to the abbreviations listed at the beginning of this collection, noteworthy for this contribution are the following:

- MSD* Sreznevskii, I. I. Materialy dlya slovarya drevnerusskogo yazyka. 3 vols. St. Petersburg, 1893–1903.
OE Vostokov, A. Ostromirogo Evangelie 1056–57 goda. St. Petersburg, 1843. [Repr.

- O. Harrassowitz, vol. 1 of Monumenta Linguae Slavicae Dialecti Veteris Fontes et Dissertationes, eds. R. Aitzetmüller, J. Matl, L. Sadnik.]
- SJS Kurz, J., ed. Slovník Jazyka Staroslověnského (Lexicon Linguae Palaeo-Slovenicae). Prague, 1966—
- SRY Barkhudarov, S. G., ed. Slovar' russkogo yazyka XI–XVII vv. Moscow, 1975—
- US Kotkov, S. I., ed. Uspenskiĭ Sbornik XII–XIII vv. Moscow, 1971.

Translator's note

The purely provisional state of the present treatment of 2 Enoch must be underscored, at every level: text, translation, and notes. In spite of years of endeavor, including a visit to the U.S.S.R. in search of manuscripts, many needed materials are still not available. In particular, a thorough study of the Disputatio is essential, and it is an embarrassment that the present contribution must go forth before this task is accomplished.

The progress we have made would have been impossible without the continual encouragement of Professor James H. Charlesworth. Thanks to his tenacity, we were able to secure microfilms of the manuscripts A and J which are the basis of this edition. As editor, he and his staff have had an unusually difficult job in preparing these unfamiliar materials for the press. Although some will still maintain that 2 Enoch is a work of dubious authenticity (as a pseudepigraphon of the Old Testament, belonging with the other works in this volume, that is) and of doubtful value, all that has still to be debated thoroughly. Professor Charlesworth has insisted that a new attack on these problems requires a fresh presentation of the evidence. This translator wishes to acknowledge gratefully his share in the final production.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 103–6.
- Delling, Bibliographie, p. 160.
- Denis, Introduction, pp. 28f.
- Bonwetsch, G. N. Die Bücher der Geheimnisse Henochs: Das sogenannte slavische Henochbuch. TU 44; Leipzig, 1922.
- Charles, R. H., and W. R. Morfill. The Book of the Secrets of Enoch. Oxford, 1896.
- Meshchersky, N. A. "Concerning the History of the Text of the Slavonic Book of Enoch," Vizantiiskii vremennik 24 (1964) 91–108. (In Russian.)
- . "Concerning the Problem of the Sources of the Slavonic Book of Enoch," Kratkiye Soobshcheniya Instituta narodov Azii 86 (1965) 72–78. (In Russian.)
- Pines, S. "Eschatology and the Concept of Time in the Slavonic Book of Enoch," Types of Redemption, eds. R. J. Z. Werblowsky and C. J. Bleeker. Supp. Numen 18; Leiden, 1970; pp. 72–87.
- Vaillant, A. Le livre des secrets d'Hénoch: Texte slave et traduction française. Paris, 1952; repr. Paris, 1976. (Cf. my review in RSR 6 [1980] 74.)

2 (Slavonic Apocalypse of) ENOCH
[A] the shorter [J] the longer recension

2 ENOCH [J]

1a The story of Enoch:^a how the LORD took him to heaven

[There was] a wise man and a great artisan whom the LORD took away.^d 1
 And he loved him so that he might see the highest realms;^f 2 and of the most wise^e and great and inconceivable and unchanging 3 kingdom^b of God almighty, •and of the most marvelous and glorious and shining 4 and many-eyedⁱ station of the LORD's servants, and of the LORD's immovable throne.^j

1a a. The titles in the MSS show a great variety. U is the same as A; J P R have a preface of similar form and scope, but with many differences. Rum has essentially the same text as theirs through vs. 2 of the preface. P and P² begin: "The Book (about) the secrets of Enoch, the son of Ared," after which P² adds "from The Pearl of Great Price" and goes on immediately to the creation story in ch. 28, whereas P continues "a man wise and loved by God." In R the work is called "The book of the holy secrets of Enoch, a man . . ." continuing as in P. J's term "story" (slovo, lit. "word") is the same as that used by P for the individual chs. It can mean a literary work, or simply "tale" as in Slovo o polku Igoreve, "The Tale of Igor's Expedition."

Some titles do not have the word "secret." MPr: "From the book of righteous Enoch"; B: "The life of righteous Enoch, a man . . ." The latter—bytija—is reminiscent of Gen. P's title is very long; it designates Enoch as "a wise man and beloved by God" followed by a detailed note about the place and circumstances of making this copy. [The notes to 2En are more extensive than our general rule. This divergence is intentional because of the importance of the recently discovered MSS, and the refined methodology. J.H.C.]

b. The titles vary between "book" and "books." Thus Tr: "which are called The Secret Books of Enoch"; and V N: "And these are the books (called) The Secrets of God, a revelation to Enoch"; B² is similar, but singular. This fluctuation could reflect a tradition that there were several, or many Enoch books and that this one is (1) a many-volumed work; or (2) one of these books (of A U is partitive); or (3) extracted from them. The last is appropriate when we have a deliberate excerpt, as in MPr. The other two meanings can be covered by the fact that this is at once an account of the origin of the many known books of Enoch and also one of them, although not one of the set which Enoch himself made in heaven.

Great importance is attached to the books that Enoch wrote in heaven. God emphasizes their key role for the last generation (chs. 33, 35, 36) and Enoch repeats this several times in his final charge (chs. 47, 48, 50, 53, 54). These could be the secret books hidden away until the end-time (68:2). 2En is then the book that tells the story of these books. This awareness of a corpus of Enoch writings wider than 2En itself, but dealing with subjects which are listed in 2En, suggests that 2En was written with immediate and detailed knowledge of such books. It was an introduction to them. The repeated emphasis on the importance of these books for the spiritual well-being of the community of "the last generation"—"the men of truth" (35:2), who will study and obey these writings (36:1)—makes sense only if such works were actually available in the circles that produced 2En. The works which fit this best are the books now collected under 1En: the community that revered them must have been something like the Qumran community. But the community that generated them is not Qumran itself, for the surviving fragments of Enoch books in Aram. are older than the foundation at Qumran and the outlook of 2En is quite different from that at Qumran, except in the matter of the calendar.

c. A galaxy of epithets has gathered around Enoch in the titles. Without tracing each one to its MS, they include (1) wise man, (2) great scribe, (3) great artificer, (4) righteous, (5) beloved by God. The additional appellative in A U resembles

Gi blgvi oče, which is conventional in titles to extracts from the lives of saints in Christian miscellanies. A scribe evidently considered 2En to be a similar hagiographical composition. He is, however, called vладыко, "master," rather than "father." It is more likely that this refers to Enoch than to God. A double name for the deity is rare in 2En; then it is gospodinū bogū, "LORD God."

d. The MSS have so many different readings that it is hard to decide which is best. The more ample text of P is clear and logical, but Vaillant (Le livre des secrets d'Hénoch: Texte slave et traduction française, p. xvii), supposing it to result from the corrections of a reviser, reconstructs the textual history as follows:

P ego vozljuby, i prijati ego gdi da vidit
 "the Lord conceived love for him and received him, that he should behold . . ." (APOT, vol. 2, p. 431)

A difficulty in Vaillant's restoration is that it supposes a different noun from the one at the end of the paragraph. This could be overcome by

2 ENOCH [A]

1a From the secret book(s)^b about the taking away of Enoch the just,^c

- 1 a wise man, a great scholar, whom the LORD took away.
2 to see,^c to love the highest realm;
3 and of the most wise and great, unchanging
4 and almighty sovereignty of God, •and of the very great many-eyed and immovable throne of the LORD, and of the brightly shining^k reading vidēci at both places; but the form in -l is essential for his theory that the verb "love" has arisen by misdivision.

There can be no doubt that the statement goes back ultimately to Gen 5:24: "Enoch walked with God. Then he vanished because God took him." This is altogether laconic. It could mean no more than an explanation of Enoch's premature death as an act of God. In Job 1:21 the same idiom means removal by death. In Gen 42:36 'ēnennū, "he is not," means "he is dead." In 2Kgs 2:3 the Lord "took" Elijah to heaven without dying, and it was easy to see this as supplying the missing details of Enoch's translation. This becomes explicit in Heb 11:5, and in 1Clem 9—he "was translated, and death was never known to happen to him." LXX is literal—hoti metethēken auton ho theos. Sir 44:16 and Heb 11:5 use the passive metetethē, a pious convention already evident in 1En 12:1 (elēmphthē). In this respect 2En is more primitive, or at least closer to the Heb. than these later accounts. In any case Charles's "received" is uncertain, if it is not his reception but his removal.

e. The words "to see . . ." and ". . . to be a witness" (vs. 6) constitute an inclusion around the long list of noun phrases which describe what Enoch saw. Strictly speaking the comprehensive term "the upper(-most) realm" is the object of "see" and all the rest is the object of "witness." Morfill's original division of the list was mistaken (The Book of the Secrets of Enoch [Oxford, 1896] p. 1). The list itself is carelessly compiled. It covers only a small part of the contents of the book, since it corresponds mainly to the seventh heaven.

f. Sokolov solved the textual problem discussed above by emending to ljubielija. Enoch is to become a lover of the upper regions. This is altogether improbable. The phrase vyšnjag(o) žítia of A is plural in J P. Hence "the heavenly abodes" (Morfill, Secrets of Enoch, p. 1) or "uppermost dwellings" (Forbes, APOT, vol. 2, p. 431), miškénōt mērōmim (Kahana, Ha-Sefarim ha-Ītisanim le-Torah [Jerusalem, 1936–37; reprinted 1978]). There is no need to compare this with Jn 14:2. The plural could have arisen from within the book itself, which does talk about eternal residences prepared for both good and bad. In ch. 61, however, three quite different words are used—khranilišta, "shelters," khraminy, "residences," domy, "houses." Here the singular is correct. Like politieuma (Phil 3:20) žítie can refer to manner of life, with an emphasis on order. This is its sense in 68:4—"this present life."

B has a gloss—nīznjaja i vyšnjaja, "lower and upper." 2En did not include a subterranean hell in its cosmos. In fact, one of the remarkable things about 2En is that its nearest equivalent to a traditional hell is a region in the north of the third heaven (ch. 10). But there are some passages which are under pressure to include the netherworld (18:7). The gloss in the preface of B is another result of the same tendency. It does not fit, because Enoch makes no visit to any lower region. But cf. 40:12.

g. Slav. premodryi "wise" (A), is not a suitable attribute of "kingdom" (česaristvo [A]) unless the latter means "reign" (česaristvije [J]). It applies to God, where J uses mudryi, which suits Enoch (see n. c).

h. "Sovereignty" or "kingdom." Česarstvo can be abstract or concrete, like the Gk. basileia, which it habitually translates.

i. This epithet has a different referent in each list. The variation between the recensions in the use of the adjective "many-eyed" may reflect conflicting traditions about its appropriate use. The normal spelling is mūnogo-očiryi. P (mūnogočita) is better than U (mūnogočita).

This, like other words in the preface, echoes Christian liturgical terms. In Ezek 4 the four creatures who are God's seat and vehicle are "full of eyes" (4:18). Their connection with the throne is clear from Rev 4:6, but 2En distinguishes the throne from the "station" of the Lord's servants, and J P ascribe "many-eyed" to the latter, A U to the former. Ezek 10:12 has a more extravagant description of creatures whose bodies are covered with eyes. The preface keeps the seraphim and cherubim distinct from these, and from each other. The latter are connected with singing, the former are probably intended by the fourth item, for they are either "bodiless" (J) or "fireborn" (A). In other texts they are associated as "many-eyed" and "six-winged," e.g. mūnogočiti kherovimi i šestokrilataa serafima (SJS, vol. 2, p. 241).

j. R at this point lacks five words and portions of two others. A space is left. One fragment supports J's nepodvižimago ("immovable") against P's nepostižimago ("incomprehensible"). Vaillant interprets it as "immobile," but Ezek 1 suggests the opposite. The idea is closer to Heb 12:28. Unlike Ascens, which has a throne in each heaven, 2En knows only the throne of God in the seventh heaven.

k. A U do not use 2En's characteristic "glorious," found in J P R, but their presvēlta, "very bright," is a synonym.

[J]

•and of the ranks and organization of the bodiless 5 armies, and of the indescribable composition of^m the multitude^a of elements, •and of the variegated appearance^o and indescribable 6 singing of the army^p of the cherubim,^q and of the light without measure,^r to be an eyewitness.^s

1 | Concerning Enoch's dream|

At that time^a he said, When 165 years were complete for me, I fathered my son 1
Methusala; and after that I lived 200 years.
I completed all the years of my life, 365 years. •In the first month,^c on the 2 assigned day^d of the first month, I was in my house alone.

l. Lit. "fireborn." Unless reflected in this word, the seraphim are not included in the list of the preface. They are present in 20:1, 21:1 in long MSS. Fire and light are fundamental elements in the physics of 2En. Fire enjoys varying prominence in the several creation sections of the book. Light is primary, fire derivative. Darkness comes first (ch. 24), then light (ch. 25). Water is made from light (ch. 27), rock is made from water (ch. 28), and fire comes from rock (ch. 29). The angels are created from this fire (29:3).

m. The term "ministration" (APOT, vol. 2, p. 431) derives from P's služenia. This is a mistake due to the frequency of slouženije elsewhere in 2En, where it refers to the liturgy rather than, say, the service of administrative duties. No other MS has it. All the rest read složeniĵa. It is true that the heavenly beings are called "elements" at various points, and the preface is mainly interested in angels, not physics; but these are not the primal matter—four "elements" or even one. They are multitudinous. Slav. složeniĵe could be the indescribable "composition" of any one of these elements (in that case they would not be elementary); or else the innumerable formulae by which the elements combine to make the diverse materials of the universe.

Here, as elsewhere in 2En, it is hard to decide whether the texts have drifted from scientific terminology ("combination of elements") to something more mythological (the organization of the various ranks of beings), or the reverse.

n. Slav. mūnožstvo normally renders the Gk. plēthos. Does the longer reading of A U represent the biblicism "myriad myriad"? The word "element" (stikhii or stoukhii) could be the physical elements or "ranks" of angelic beings. We cannot tell how close this is to the stoikheia of the NT. In 2En 13:9 the stoukhii are angels of some kind.

o. The recensions differ at this point. R is defective. J P: ob'javlenie, "manifestations" (?).

p. Or "host," Heb. šābā' and šēbā'ōt. This terminology pervades 2En. The military character of the Lord's heavenly retinue goes back to the war theology of early Israel. 2En stills knows of "armed" troops, but no combat is reported. Some angels serve as guards of prisoners, even as torurers. Otherwise the parade order is that of a choir. Little can now be discerned of a chain of command, although there seems to be an echelon of officers. It is no longer possible to discern the human army upon which this celestial counterpart might have been modeled.

q. As in the West, the Heb. plural has been taken as the stem, and repluralized with Slav. suffixes.

r. The idea of boundless light occurs in Pistis Sophia.

s. The translation "eyewitness" attempts to distinguish the variant samovideci from vidēci or viditeli.

1 a. The reading from Jn 3 in OE begins with such a phrase, which is not in the Gk. But the position of the adjective there (vū ono vrēmja) is not as Hebraic as 2En 1:1. This abrupt beginning sounds like the continuation of some preceding narrative, and suggests that 2En is part of a larger work, a Midrash on Gen. But note that the second Lat. recension of the GBart begins in exactly the same way.

The ending of 2En is similarly abrupt since a continuation into the story of the Flood is called for. The story presupposes that the reader knows the background, but no explanation is given of Enoch's grief. The book does not even repeat the one thing that Gen says (twice!) about Enoch, namely, that he walked with God.

This unprepared onset makes it necessary to supply some kind of title. The one now present is clearly artificial, and its limited attestation and wide variation shows that it is an addition; but it cannot be a late addition, since it is found in MSS of both recensions which have already diverged substantially in details.

We can suppose, then, the extraction from a larger Midrash of the history from Enoch to the Flood, and its designation, rather inexactly, "the Book of Enoch" or the like. This is a misnomer, except for those MSS which end with the second ascension of Enoch. This has led to an altogether prejudiced assessment of the Melchizedek portion. While the Enoch story occurs without the Methuselah, Nir, Melchizedek continuation, the latter

[A]

5 station of the LORD's servants, •and of the ranks of the powerful, fireborn,¹ heavenly armies, the indescribable combination of a 6 great multitude of elements, •and of the variegated appearance and indescribable singing of the army of the cherubim, and of the light without measure, to be a witness.

1

1 And at that time Enoch said, When 365^b years were complete for me,

Gen 5:21–23

2 •in the first month, on the assigned day of the first month, I was in my house alone, never occurs except as part of the Book of Enoch. There is continuity; and the references back to Enoch in the Melchizedek section, as well as the similarity of style, suggest an original and integral work. Charles's omission of this Melchizedek material is thus unfortunate and mistaken.

b. Cf. Gen 5:23. A connection with the solar year has been suspected in this figure. But the solar year in 2En was originally 364 days.

c. V N read "second." Morgenstern (1924) has shown that at least three different calendars were used in ancient Israel. In the first (based on the solar year), the Canaanite names of the months were used. In the second system, the months were designated by number, the first corresponding to a New Year in the fall. The third system was the Babylonian lunar-solar calendar (still in use), and the Babylonian names were used. These appear also in 2En 73, complicated by the presence of Egyptian month names as well.

This feature of 2En is thus typically Jewish. But this does not mean that 2En is to be explained in terms of the Jewish liturgical year as we know it from biblical or rabbinic sources. In fact, its defiant use of a solar calendar points away from this. Its first month, which probably means the New Year month, could begin with the spring equinox. Since this calendar divides the year into four equal seasons, this would mean that Enoch finally went to heaven at the summer solstice, a suitable time for such an event. If Morgenstern is right in his argument that the latest priestly legislation embodied in biblical rules for observing both Passover and Sukkoth has swung into line with the Babylonian lunar calendar in which the first full moon after the autumn equinox takes place on the fifteenth day of the first month, with an intercalated month from time to time as needed, then 2En's calendar is different in many respects. 2En has only a trace of the Metonic cycle of nineteen years, found also in the Babylonian calendar, and accordingly passed on to Christians as well. But 16:8 is an evident gloss.

2En is heterodox in the matter of the calendar, but not unique. Quite apart from its possible dependence on 1En for such details, its agreement with Jub suggests similar antiquity. Yet in other respects it diverges from Jub and Qumran. It has no interest in a seven-day week nor in sabbath observance. The few references are glosses never integrated with prime texts. So we cannot tell whether 2En is a later reflex of this interest in a 364-day solar calendar, and that of a rather academic kind, found only among scribes; or whether it is archaic and conservative, and of vital importance to a community that tried to use such a calendar.

J. Morgenstern ("The Three Calendars of Ancient Israel," HUCA 1 [1924] 13–78, esp. p. 65) definitely thinks that the calendar of 1En and of Jub, in spite of the unworkable 364-day year, is related to the old Canaanite solar calendar. In fact, Jub 6:36–38 contains a polemic against the lunar calendar as an innovation. 2En does not contain such polemic, but its lunar calendar is geared to the solar year.

At least it can be said that the Enoch writings have a solar year with New Year at the vernal equinox, and this sets the date for Enoch's first translation.

d. The best MSS of both recensions agree that the day is naročitil. R has a unique gloss which effects repetition of the whole expression—"in the first month, on the intended day of the first month, on the first day." It uses the numeral ā, but the adjective prūvyi each time with "month." A U, however, have mc ā a, and this numeral could have produced R's numeral, since the sequence is the same. J has a reading much closer to A U, except that, like P and R, it reverses the noun-adjective sequence. This agreement of A U J then gives the best reading—"in the first month, on the designated day of the first month." In P this has been simplified to "on the 1st day of the first month," thus eliminating the obscure technical word. We cannot assume that it was a Jewish New Year's Day. Indeed, Jewish custom rules this out. According to Megillat Ta'anit (17b, 18a) 1–8 Nisan was a period in which it was forbidden to mourn or to use penitential self-mortification, and the first in particular, a new-moon day, could not be other than joyous. The scribal error "first" could only arise from ignorance of Jewish practice, unless 2En is heterodox.

[J]

And I lay on my bed, sleeping. •And, while I slept, a great distress entered my heart, and I was weeping^e with my eyes in a dream.^f And I could not figure out what this distress might be, [nor] what might be happening to me. •Then two^h huge^g menⁱ appeared to me, the like of which I had never seen on earth.

Their faces were like the shining sun;
their eyes were^k like burning lamps;
from their mouths fire^l was coming forth;
their clothing was various singing;^m their wingsⁿ were more glistering than gold;^o their hands were whiter than snow.

And they stood at the head of my bed^p and called me by my name.^q Then I awoke^r from my sleep, and saw those men, standing in front of me, in actuality.^s •Then I bowed down^t to them; and I was terrified; and the appearance of my face was changed^v because of fear. •Then those men said to me, “Be

e. There is a tradition that apocalyptists are upset by evil in the world, or by inability to understand the plan of God (Dan 7:15; Rev 5:4; 4Ezra 3). 1En 83:3 explains that Enoch was already distressed by the evil brought upon the world by the fallen Watchers. But a presupposition that this lies behind Enoch's unexplained grief in 2En is not needed. The motif could have been derived from a traditional convention.

f. The sequence A U is inferior. V N read “I was distressed, weeping with my eyes,” a better idiom.

g. R lacks nine words found in J P (“in a dream [or sleep] and I could not understand what is distress”), so that the remaining words (“This which might be to me”) are quite unintelligible. P replaces li with ili. A U lack this statement entirely, and, furthermore, have a much simpler picture: Enoch is lamenting (no reason is given) and falls asleep. Then the two men appear. J P, however, and R in part, have a more complex development. The weeping is part of the dream. If this is true, then there is less need to look for some liturgical setting for an act of penitence. After all, Enoch is alone, in his house, on his bed.

But the recensions are different in this respect. A gives the impression that first Enoch was weeping alone in his house. No reason is given. Worn out by grief, he lies down and falls asleep. He dreams that he sees two men. In J the onset of distress occurs after he falls asleep, again with no hint as to its cause.

The place of this dream in the story is hard to assess. The two “men” first appear in the dream, then, when he wakes up, they are present in reality. They could just as easily have come for him while he was awake, so Enoch's dream contributes nothing to the plot.

h. Some MSS have the numeral. In what follows the better MSS often use dual forms; but we have refrained from translating this pedantically as “the pair of men.”

i. The appearance of figures of gigantic size is a common motif in apocalypses of the early period. Compare 4Ezra and the Gospel of Eve. In GPet the two young men (!) who appeared at the tomb of Jesus were tall (“their heads reached into heaven”) and the risen Lord was even taller (ANT, p. 92). V agrees with J P R in reading prěvelika zělo, “very big indeed,” but A lacks the prefix.

j. Note the fluctuation between “man” and “angel” in Zech 1. We are to suppose angels in human form taken for the occasion. Their names are given, rather casually, in 33:6. Even so, their dimensions, and the following description, show that this was not a disguise. In fact human form need not be implied and “man” might mean, simply, “person.” The coming of angels in pairs is an ancient tradition, going back to the two “messengers” who conventionally accompany a god on a journey in Canaanite mythology. Hence the two “men” who accompany the Lord on his visit to Abraham (Gen 18f.; cf. Gen 32:25). Compare the “two men” at the empty tomb (Lk 24:4). Compare Acts 1:10 and 2Mac 3:26 (“There also appeared to Heliodorus two young men of surpassing strength and glorious beauty, splendidly dressed”). The “two young men” are angels. Cf. 2En 33:11.

k. A U lack the words supplied, which are found not only in J P R, but also in other MSS of the short recension (V N B B²). The loss is due to homoeoteleuton of repeated jako. A U's reading “his mouth” is clearly inferior; ego can be explained as a corruption of the dual (j)jeju (which V N R use correctly), which B and others have replaced by plural ikh. J P have the dative. A U have also moderated the concrete imagery by adding “like” to fire, not found in B B².

l. The addition of jako to A U is inferior, since other “short” MSS lack it.

m. The text at this point seems to be incorrigibly corrupt. The MSS agree with surprising unanimity, since the variants are mainly orthographic:

A	pěniu	razdaaniju
U	pěniu	razdajaniju
B	pěnija	razdnaja
B ²	pěrie	različno
V	i penie	različno
N	pěnie	različ'no
R	pěnie	razdėanie
J	pěnie	razdanie

[A]

4Ezra 3:1

3 weeping and grieving^f with my eyes.
When I had lain down on my bed, I fell asleep.

4 •And two huge men appeared to me, the like of which I had never seen on earth. Dan 8:15

5 Their faces (|were like the shining sun;
their eyes were|) like burning lamps;
from his mouth (something) like fire was coming forth;
their clothing was various singing;
and their arms

4Ezra 7:79;
Rev 1:16
Dan 10:6;
Rev 1:14; 19:12
Rev 9:17; 11:15

were like wings of gold—

at the head of my bed. And they called (me) by my name.

6,7 I got up from my sleep, and the men were standing with me in actuality. •Then I hurried^t and stood up and bowed down to them; and the appearance of my face was glittering because of fear. Dan 5:6,9,10;
Mt 14:27;
Acts 23:11
2Kgs 1:15

P i pĕniemŭ razdajanja
(P V have "and" between "clothing" and "singing").

Singing is a common theme in this book; at least it is a characteristic activity of the angels in the heavens. But it seems out of place at this point, where the whole interest is in the appearance of the men, and, specifically, their clothing. The matter is complicated by variation in the adjective that goes with "singing," although here the agreement of A and J is weighty.

n. At this point MSS of the shorter recension read like a garbled abbreviation; they have confused "the arms" and "the wings."

o. Compare the bird in the story of the ascension of Alexander, who forbids him to enter heaven.

p. This is the conventional stance of a dream visitor in relation to a sleeper. This is how the Lord stood "beside" Jacob in his dream at Bethel (Gen 28:12f.) as in NAB, not RSV, where the Lord is placed above the ladder. Compare 1Sam 3:10.

q. When the Lord appears in a vision he often addresses the person by name.

r. The MSS differ in the verb used to describe Enoch's arousal; and they do not divide into long and short. Both alternatives are found in MSS of both recensions, as V vizbnou shows, while P has vostakh, closer to A U. Something similar happens with "my" in "my sleep"; V (short) agrees with R (long) in reading svoego; J P (long) agree with A U (short) in moego. A has the participle "having stood up."

s. The term "actuality" implies objectivity, not a dream. It means that what he saw on waking was exactly the same as what he had seen in his dream, as just described.

t. Slav. az že uskorikh i vstakh. The awkwardness of the construction, which seems to be a Hebraism (w'mhr w'qm), is shown by the chaos of MS readings. The normal idiom in Slav. is uskoriti plus the infinitive, which means "to speed up," not just "to act quickly." One variant (V N R) is oujadri, also followed by an infinitive. But R has dropped the second verb, and reads "I hastened to them," while J P have dropped the first verb. V changed vstakh to the participle vŭstavī, which reverses the sequence of actions.

u. Unlike John's angelic guide, who rebuked him for such behavior (Rev 19:10), and the angel in AscenIs, Enoch's visitors accept the homage. Cf. Gen 18:2.

v. The MSS differ considerably in their description of Enoch's reaction to the appearance of the men, making it difficult to establish what the original author might have said. There is agreement that his basic response was one of fear, and longer MSS have the verb ouzasokhsja as well as the noun strakhŭ. This is part of the conventional response to such an epiphany. The traditional accounts of such events have doubtless molded the account here. The following words of assurance are also part of the scenario. Such stories have probably contaminated the text in transmission.

The longer text of J is the most general: "and the appearance of my face was changed ot strakha (apo phobou)."¹ There are variants corresponding to the words "appearance" and "changed."

The simple vidĕnie of J (vĕdĕnie of P) matches prividĕnije of A U. Vaillant (Secrets, p. 4, n. 16) incorrectly states that both these similar readings derive from R's original zrĕnĕm, from which he goes on to restore the unattested original srĕniemĭ*, suggesting a cold, rather than a bloody, sweat. But "hoar-frost" is hardly acceptable; the emendation is too conjectural. Such a change could be due to the fact that "the appearance of my face" is redundant. Other MSS, notably B, read simply "my face." R's variant zrĕnje suggests that Enoch's vision was blurred; but this contradicts the statement that the men were plainly visible. More likely it means "my face changed at the vision," hence the instrumental; zrĕnije, "sight," can be subjective or objective (SJS, vol. 1, p. 691). A's variant points in the same direction since prividĕnije (SJS, vol. 3, p. 261) has the connotation of "apparition" (phantasma); hence the instrumental case.

There are several variants of the verb. R could mean "I covered up my face from fear." Compare APOT, vol. 2, p. 431 (derived from N). B says "my face was covered with tears (rydaniem)," but B² has rdeniemŭ. The image is incongruous, since brave, Enoch! In truth,^w do not fear! The eternal God has sent us to you. And behold, you will ascend with us to heaven today.^x • And tell your sons, (and all the members of your household,) everything that they must do in your house while they are without you on the earth. And let no one search for you until the LORD returns you to them.” • And I hurried and^y obeyed them; and I went out of my house and I shut the doors as I had been ordered. And I called my sons, Methusalam and Regim and Gaidad.^z And I declared to them all the marvels that those men had told me.

[J]

2 |The instruction. How Enoch instructed his sons. “1.”^a “Listen, my children!^c I do not know where I am going, nor what will confront me. • Now, my children, [I say to you]:

Do not turn away from God.

Walk before his face,

and keep his commandments.^d

Do not abhor the prayers of your salvation,^e

so that the LORD will not curtail the work of your hands.

And do not be ungenerous with the LORD’s gifts, and the LORD will not be ungenerous with his donations and love-gifts in your storehouses.^f

And bless the LORD with the firstborn^g of your herds and the firstborn of your children, and a blessing will be on you forever.

And do not turn away from the LORD, and do not worship vain^h gods, gods who did not create the heaven and the earth or any other created thing;ⁱ for they will perish, and so will those who worship them.

And may God make your hearts true in reverence for him.^j

And now, my children, no one must search for me until the LORD returns me to you.”

oblijati (SJS, vol. 2, p. 477) means to cover by pouring something over something. Thus the story of Boris and Gleb includes the words: i visi slzami oblijavū sja reče, “and with all tears covering himself, he said:” (US 12b: 25–27). Compare i vodažu oblijati lice jeja, “and with water to cover her face” (US 138b:18–19). So we have the idiom “my face was bathed with sweat.”

The reading of A U, bleštac(a), suggests that his face was shining (or blanched?). The verb really means “to be radiant,” and it is not part of the vocabulary usual for the terror response to an epiphany of this kind (SRY, vol. 1, p. 238). It would be more appropriate for the visitors. Thus the translation of Luke’s version of the resurrection story in the Ostromir Gospel describes the two men in dazzling apparel (24:4), vū rizakhū blištjaštakhū sja. The women are terrified and fall to the ground. In view of the mobility of the vowels, and their frequent omission in spelling, we suggest either that A U means “and they were dazzling [white]” or that it should read * bělěštasja or the like, meaning “the appearance of my face turned white.”

w. R agrees with J, “in truth.” This additional phrase resembles a reading of Zech 8:13 found in Glagolici Iosephi Vajs: dr’zajte v istinu i krěpěte ruki vaše. R has “LORD” instead of God, found in other MSS. B and V agree in the variant “youth” for “Enoch.” Cf. ch. 10, n. j.

x. The word order corresponds to differences in MSS of the two recensions.

y. A Hebraism, both in the idiom (mhr) and in the semantics of “hear” = obey as Heb. šm’.

z. A has Methusalom and Rigim as Enoch’s sons. J adds Gaidad, who is ‘irād, son of Enoch in the genealogy of Gen 4:18. In 2En 57:2 the sons of Enoch are:

A Mefusailom, Regim, Rim, Asukhan, Khermion

J Methosalam, Regim, Riman, Ukhan, Khermion, Gaidad

At each place the longer recension has added Gaidad from LXX.

2 a. The numerals in the ch. titles are reproduced here exactly as they are used in MS P. Sometimes the ch. is called slovo, “word.”

b. The reading “I know” (A U) seems to be a

[A]

8 And the men said to me, "Be brave, Enoch! Do not fear! The eternal LORD has sent us to you. And behold, today you will ascend with us to heaven.
9 And you will tell your sons (and the members of your household) everything that they must do in your house on the earth. And of your house let no one 10 search for you until the LORD returns you to them." •And I obeyed them, and I went off.

Gen 4:18;
2En 57:2

I called my sons, Methusalom and Rigim.
And I declared to them all that the men had told me.

2

1 "And behold, I know^b (my) children, I do not know where I am going,
2 nor what will confront me. •And now, my children:

2En 7:5

1Sam 12:20

Do not turn away from God,
and walk before the face of the LORD,
and keep his judgments.

And do not diminish the sacrifice of your salvation,
and the LORD will not diminish the work of your hands.
Do not be ungenerous with the LORD's gifts; the LORD will not be ungenerous with his donations in your storehouses.

Bless the LORD with the firstborn of your herds and of your children, and you will be blessed by the LORD forever.
Do not turn away from the LORD, nor worship unreal gods, who did not create either the heaven or the earth.

(They will perish.)

Jer 10:11

3 And may the LORD make your hearts true in reverence for him.
4 And now, my children, no one must search for me until the LORD returns me to you."

simple error, since it is immediately contradicted.

c. The readings in A and V are dual (compare 1:10) because two sons of Enoch are known in the short recension. But the next occurrence is plural. MSS of the longer recension have three sons in 1:10 and plural "children." Dual forms are also used fairly consistently to refer to Enoch's two angelic escorts. Of the seven injunctions, V has only the first three and the last. It is remarkable, but perhaps coincidental, that this omission corresponds roughly to the lacuna in P.

d. Slav. sudby. "judgments," is the better reading, since R agrees with A U. P has a large lacuna at this point; hence Charles's A text. J reads zapovědi. "commandments." This is a significant variant, for it draws attention to the difficulty felt with the original sudby. The latter is a palpable Semitism, obviously mišpātim, often used in the OT to include ethical instructions or moral customs. But for scribes who knew sudby = Gk. krimata the meaning of "verdicts, punishments" does not suit; hence the change to the word that translates entolai.

e. Perhaps J R mean "make your prayers for salvation odious (to God)." In any case the reading is inferior. The original was intended for a community which practiced sacrifice.

f. B adds "Bless the LORD!"

g. R J repeat "firstborn." The identity of the second item is not clear. Vaillant's "oxen" is the result of emendation. The dominant yunot (R) or yunoši (B) (agreement between long and short MSS is important) is not intrinsically difficult (Ex 13:2; 22:29f.; 34:19f.). J reads vnučjat. "grandchildren," which, however curious, at least confirms that they are human. A U agree in nuty. "oxen"; but it is more likely that this easier reading is secondary, since there are accompanying alterations.

h. The translations "vain" (pustošnyi) and "unreal" (suetyi) represent quite different, although synonymous, words in the original.

i. J agrees with R in the additional "nor any other created thing," but P lacks it. V N B B² add "they will perish," found also in long MSS, which have further, "and those who worship them."

j. P reads vo stranakh svoikh, "in your places."

[J]

3 |About the taking away of Enoch; how the angels took him on to the 1st heaven. "2."|^a

And it came about,^c when I had spoken to my sons, those men^d called me. And they took me up onto their wings, and carried me up to the first heaven,^e and placed me on the clouds. •And, behold, they were moving. And there I perceived the air higher up, and higher still I saw the ether. •And they placed me on the first heaven. And they showed me a vast ocean, much bigger than the earthly ocean.^f

4 |About the angels who govern the stars. "3."|

They led before my face the elders,^a the rulers of the stellar orders.

And they showed me the 200 angels who govern the stars and the heavenly combinations. •

3 a. Only P has regular ch. headings. They are sporadic in other MSS. Their secondary character is shown by two features. They often use language identical with the text that follows, which brings about repetition; or they introduce new (later) terms not found in prime texts. MSS which have a title at this point vary between vzjatie (P) and vůskhoženie (V). A U have vůskhyštenije at the beginning. The translation "assumption" (APOT, vol. 2, p. 432) is scarcely warranted. SJS (vol. 1, p. 298) lists vůzjatie as occurring only in Euchologium Sinaiticum. The corresponding verb vůzjati, which is simply lāqah or lambanein, is common in 2En and is generally used when the two men "take" Enoch from place to place. Vůskhož(d)enije is anabasis, while vůskhyštenije is "rapture."

b. With no other indication of a new ch., A has .ā. in the middle of the line. V completes the line with :~ :~ :~ and then has a rubric—vůskhoženie enokhovo na .a.-e nbo, which has a certain affinity with P's ch. heading.

c. The Hebraic character of the narrative composition is manifest in the abundant parataxis, and especially in the opening "and it was" (= wayēhī). The unacceptable character of this idiom is shown by its alteration, either by dropping "and" (R P) or by changing bystīl to bykhū, "I was" (A U). The latter is influenced by the autobiographical form, which is sustained in this ch. But P has changed "me" to "him" through the whole of vs. 1 (APOT A), against all other witnesses. It reverts to first person in vs. 2.

d. At this point A has a nbo in the margin, and a very large I to begin the next section. B has a similar ch. heading.

e. It should be noted that P is the only MS that calls the "men" "angels" at this point. All agree that they have wings. In the longer MSS the journey has two stages: First Enoch is placed on the clouds, then on the first heaven (same idiom). The clouds are a vantage point, not a vehicle. Although J supports R's "they were moving," P's "I looked" is superior. In describing the two stages the words "and they placed me on" occur twice. The intervening material is lacking in short MSS, an obvious instance of loss by homeoteleuton, which is very common in these MSS. But Vaillant considers extra material an inept addition by the reviser. But the text of P (APOT) is garbled; J and R agree that Enoch distinguished the air vůzdukh from the aiērī, borrowing this Gk. word to designate the ether. According to Eph 2:2 this is Satan's domain. Compare 2En 29:5. If the text of 2En came from a Gk. original, the correct sequence would be aēr aithēr. Having translated the first by vozdukh, the second would have been borrowed. Hence the ignorant use of the loan suggests composition in Slav. This distinction between atmosphere and stratosphere is already present in Homer. Made more systematic by later philosophers, ether becomes the fifth element. 2En is thus nearer to Homer than to Aristotle.

These layers are met in a six-tier scheme in a prayer in ActsJn (112).

f. This verse is 4:2 in A U. Several motifs of 2En 3 are found in TAB 7:19–8:3.

4 a. The šestodnevisna (No. 238) of Prince P. P. Vyazemsky calls the ten archangels, whose names it gives, who are commanders of the ten orders of angelic powers, "the elders of the heavenly forces." 2En's elders are distinct from the two hundred angels who govern the stars. There seems to be a chain of command; so the elders could be senior angels, but in early Jewish and Christian literature the elders in heaven seem to be human. (A. Feuillet, "Les vingt-quatre vieillards de l'Apocalypse." RB 65 [1958] 5–32). 2En does not say how many elders there were. They are not the same as the "leaders" of 1En 82, for they are in charge of the seasons (four) and months (twelve), whereas the elders in 2En are "lords of the starry divisions." The location of angels on this first (the lowest) heaven is contrary to the usual astronomy which locates the (fixed) stars above the spheres of the seven planets. In 2En also (21:6—long MSS only) the stars and "the heavenly houses of the 12 zodiacs" are in the ninth heaven. This contradicts ch. 4, and also the account of creation in ch. 30, where the stars are placed in the lowest heaven, with the moon, or even below that in the air (30:4). The missing link between Rev and 2En could be

[A]

3 |The ascension of Enoch to the first heaven.|^b

1 And it came about, when I had spoken to my sons, the men called me. And they took me up onto their wings, and carried me up to the first heaven. And they

Acts 1:9

2 put me down there. •

3

Rev 4:6; 15:2;
TL Levi 2:7

4

1 They led before my face the elders, the rulers of the stellar orders. And they showed me their movements^b and their aberrations from year to year. And they showed me in the light^c the angels who govern the stars, the heavenly combinations.^d

2 And they showed me there a vast ocean,^e much bigger than the earthly ocean. And the angels were flying with their wings.

Rev. 4:4

supplied by the Beth Alpha mosaic. In its center circle the sun is surrounded by twenty-three stars and the crescent moon. Putting stars and the moon together corresponds to 2En 30:4. The number twenty-four corresponds to the number of elders in Rev.

It is important to emphasize that although ch. 30 is almost totally lacking from short MSS, they do have the stars in the first heaven in 4:1.

b. The correlative terms šestvije and prekhoz-enije occur again in 11:1 (with many variants in the latter term among the MSS). They invite a search for something precise by way of astronomical terminology. In describing the various cycles of nature, the verbs "go in" (vūkhod-) and "go out" (izkhod-) are used, along with many variants, such as vishkod-, proiskhod-, prikhod-, obkhod-. At most points the MSS display great uncertainty as to which verb to use. Thus 5:2 describes the movements of clouds. According to J they go out and they go in; according to A they go in and they go out.

Two pictures are possible. Either the clouds go into the treasures and then go out into the sky, or they come out into the sky and then return to the treasures. The latter is probably intended, because the rising and setting of the sun and moon are described by the verbs vkhodit ("he enters") and iskhodit ("he leaves"), although even this language is not used consistently. Thus in ch. 13 the rising of the sun for half the annual cycle is iskhodit, but vkhodit for the remainder (which Vaillant, Secrets, p. 12, wants to correct to vūskhoditū). It could depend on the point of view of the observer. As we see it, the sun comes into the world in the morning and goes out at night. From the sun's point of view, he goes out into the world when he rises and goes back in at night.

Both šestvije and prekhoz[d]enije can denote movement in general; but obkhoz-enije probably connotes "return." Note that in 13:4 obūšestvije is the seasonal turning of the year.

So the terms might refer to the waxing and waning of the moon (although the month lengths do not fit that) or to the recession of the sun up to midwinter and his return up to midsummer, a phenomenon described in 48:3.

We conclude that šestvije describes regular movement, such as the rising and setting of the sun; and prekhoz-enije describes a perturbation imposed on that, such as the annual movement of sunrise point across the horizon that lies behind ch. 13. The "aberrations" of the stars, referred to here, would then be another way of looking at hai tropui hēliou. Thus Cancer is in conjunction with the sun at the summer solstice; and so on.

The following phrase, "from year to year," can thus be taken literally. Vaillant's translation, d'un temps à un autre (Secrets, p. 7), recognizes a stage in the language when godū still meant simply "time" and not yet precisely "year." But the phrase used here seems to mean "annually" (SJS, vol. 1, p. 414). This fits in with the calendrical interests of 2En, which describes the movements of the sun and moon through the course of a year, but does not go into conjunctions and eclipses which vary from year to year.

We cannot be certain; because ch. 4 might be speaking only about the planets, not the fixed stars. But note 30:4.

c. Slav. vu svētē (A), vo svēte (U). This reading is demonstrably in error, since all long MSS (J P R) read .c., the numeral 200, and so do V N. B B² have the word dvēsti. Vaillant plausibly supposes an intermediate * v. stē (for dūvē sūvē, both duals), which some scribe has misread as an abbreviation of vū svētē, "in the light." It is important to emphasize that the same error has given rise to the spurious "Lord of light" in 2En 18:3 (APOT, vol. 2, pp. 439f.); see the n. there.

d. "Combinations." P's reading. Slav. služen-ija, "services" (APOT, vol. 2, p. 432), must be discarded, although it is found in B also. All other MSS agree in složenia. See the same confusion in 1a:5. Vaillant's translation combinaisons des cieux may be questioned, especially since he annotates: sans doute les constellations. Except for a reference to the zodiac in 21:6 (probably spurious), 2En does not discuss the constellations, and here the "combinations" are probably the conjunctions of the planets.

e. In J P R this comes in 3:3.

[J]

And they fly with their wings, and do the rounds of all the planets.^f

5 |About how the angels guard^a the storehouses^b of the snow. Word "4."|

And there I perceived the treasures of the snow and the ice,^c and the angels who guard their terrible storehouses, • and the treasury^d of the clouds, from which they^e come out and go in.

1

2

6 |About the dew and about olive oil and various flowers. Word "5."|

And they showed me the treasures of the dew, like olive oil.
And the appearance of its image was like every kind of earthly flower, only more numerous; and the angels who guard their treasures, how they are shut and opened.

1

7 |About how Enoch was taken to the 2nd heaven. Word "6."|^a

And those men picked me up^b and brought me up to the second heaven. And they showed me, and I saw a darkness greater than earthly darkness. And there I perceived prisoners^c under guard,^d hanging up,^e waiting for^f the measureless judgment. •And those angels have the appearance of darkness itself, more than earthly darkness. And unceasingly they made weeping, all the day long. And I f. Vaillant's interpretation (Secrets, p. 9) of this obscure phrase, found only in the longer recension, is an improvement on the previous "and come around all those who sail" ("swimmers," APOT, vol. 2, p. 432).

1

2

It is true that plavati primarily describes swimming or marine navigation, but I have not found any other occurrences of the planets as "swimmers" in heaven. It seems unlikely that these angels have jurisdiction over travel on the great celestial ocean that has just been described. The immediate context, in longer MSS at least, is the government of stars. The idea that angels supervise the heavenly bodies in their movements is prominent in 2En. The verb obūkhoditi, "go around, surround," fits the picture. We are to imagine that the obūkhodinikū (= periodeutēs, an itinerant inspector) "does the rounds" of the "stars" making sure that they are functioning properly. Regularity is not automatic; there are no fixed laws of nature identical with the will of God or the truths of mathematics. But since the planets have been given their normal name "stars" in vs. 1, we cannot be sure that plavajustikhū means "planets" precisely, but only those who might wander from the right path. Here we might have the idea that all is orderly in the upper kosmos, but in the lower ouranos things are sometimes irregular.

Note that all MSS have "they fly with their wings," but in the short tradition this reads like a fragment.

5 a. Slav. držati normally means "keep" in the sense of "hold." But MSD, vol. 1, p. 775 lists vīadēti, praviti as meanings. Cf. SJS, vol. 1, p. 521.

b. The word "storehouses" used in the title (khrañilište) is not the same as the word in the text (sūkrovište). Both come together in 5:1 in A U.

c. A has khladnaa, U essentially the same. But B has golotnaja and so do V N (which, however, have vs. 1 after vs. 2). Hence "cold" in APOT, vol. 2, p. 433. Originally kholdū*, the form in A is Slav. (Russ. kholodnyj [as in B?]), but it is not used for one of the elements in the lists in biblical texts. Since A has golotnaja at 40:10 in agreement with other MSS, its variant at 5:1 must be secondary. Slav. golotnaja corresponds to "frost." Cf. Ps 148:8.

d. A and U have an identical dittography at this point.

e. Presumably the subject is the snow and the frost, not the angels. On the verbs of motion, see n. b to ch. 4. Similar confusion occurs here. The variants represent two different ways of looking at the movement of the clouds. According to A, the elements first go in (vkhodjat) to the treasures, and then go out (iskhodjat). But the relative adverb onjuduže (or otkuduže—P's inferior reading) applies to "come out," but not to "go out." So the translation "into which they go" (APOT, vol. 2, p. 433) is incorrect. The awkwardness of A's idiom could account for the inversion of the verbs in R P. J has gone one step further, reading "go up and go in." Its first verb vūskodit corresponds also to V N (all singular). Hence "goes up" (APOT, vol. 2, p. 433). The picture in R P is more like the way we view the rain cycle. The clouds first come out and then the water goes back in. In J the water goes up and goes back in. In V N, apparently, the clouds go up and come out. According to the Bible, the rain and snow come down from heaven and do not go back there (Isa 55:10). In the scheme of A U, the angels prepare the clouds and put them into the storehouse, ready to go out into the world.

[A]

5

- 1 And they showed me there the treasures of the snow and the cold, 2 terrible angels are guarding the treasures. • And they showed me there those guarding the treasures; {and they showed me there the treasures} of the clouds, from which they go in and come out.

Job 38:22

6

- 1 And they showed me the treasures of the dew, like olive oil. Angels were guarding their treasures; and their appearance was like every earthly flower.

7 (2 heaven.)

- 1 And those men took me up to the second heaven. And they set me down on the second heaven. And they showed me 2 prisoners under guard, in measureless judgment. • And there I saw the condemned angels,

2Pet 2:4; Jude 6;
2En 18:4

7 a. A has nbo B [=2] in the margin in large letters at this point.

b. Lit. "took me." Various verbs are used to describe the activities of the "men" in transporting Enoch from place to place. As many as three stages may be reported—(1) "picked me up"; (2) "carried me to"; (3) "put me down." As the story proceeds, there is a tendency to shorten the formula, generally by omitting the third item.

c. Slav. užniky (A, compare U) or užiki (B), that is užnikū = desmios; J P veryžniki, better verižni (R). The latter, attested in SRY (vol. 2, p. 89) but not in SJS, is probably East Slavic. Cf. uzilišt, užilnicy užnici at 10:3. The term points to angels (desmophylaks). It does not seem to be Christian vocabulary for damned spirits in the eschatological sense. But is it Jewish? In any case, the imagery is that of fetters, not "dungeons" (APOT, vol. 2, p. 433).

d. Slav. bljudomy, passive participle of bljusti (SJS, vol. 1, p. 117; SRY, vol. 1, p. 248; MSD, vol. 1, p. 121) = phylatein, phylassein. The passage resembles 2Pet 2:4 and Jude 6, but the correspondence of vocabulary is not complete enough to sustain a hypothesis of borrowing. Possible influence of Christian Scriptures on the transmission of 2En should be kept in mind as well. The longer and shorter MSS differ. The usual source of tima (J) is skotos (MSD sub tima). In J the adjective "great" modifies "judgment," not "day" as in Jude; "day" is lacking in 2En; but elsewhere "the day of the great judgment" is found. Both recensions have more in common with Jude than with 2Pet. To put it another way, they have nothing that is in 2Pet that is not in Jude, and the siros of 2Pet has no counterpart in the other texts. And there is nothing in the short MSS that is not also in long ones, except the different word for "prisoner," which does, however, bring in the idea of fetters

(cf. Jude). The evidence is not clear-cut enough to permit the explanation that the long recension is an expansion of the short one under the influence of Jude. For even the short recension already has affinities with Jude. In fact, the only point at which the long recension and Jude agree against short MSS is in the word "great," and even then the ideas are not quite the same, for Jude has "great day," 2En J "great judgment." Furthermore, and more seriously, "great" is found only in P—"measureless" is the better reading (all MSS); and 2En has the angels "weeping," J, in addition, "hanging" and "waiting."

e. Without any modification, we cannot be certain what visjaša means here. Visěti means either "to depend upon" or "to be suspended." (On the possible "wisdom" link between these two meanings, see W. F. Arndt and F. W. Gingrich, A Greek English Lexicon of the New Testament [Chicago, 1952] p. 451.) This verb is used of hanging (= crucifixion) in Lk 23:39; Acts 5:30; 10:39, and so describes suspension of an executed criminal (either in punishment or exposure), not of one awaiting sentence, as here. Has the idea come in from ApPet (7:22), which also has such things as "darkness" and the river of fire? At least the tradition is similar—but those are human sinners. Blasphemers are hung up by the tongue (ek tēs glōssēs kremamēnoi), loose women by the hair, fornicators by the penis (surely!—not "thighs" as in HSW, vol. 2, p. 673—for this is a Hebraism from raglayim, "genitals").

f. This feature is curious because ždati usually describes hopeful expectation with fervent longing; but "hope" would not fit. That such revaluation of elpis is distinctively Christian, see Zimmerli, Man and His Hope, and Bultmann on elpis in TDNT.

[J]

said to the men who were with me, “Why are these ones being tormented unceasingly?” • Those men answered me, “These are those who turned away^g 3 from the LORD, who did not obey the LORD’s commandments, but of their own will plotted together and turned away with their prince and with those who are under restraint^h in the fifth heaven.”ⁱ • And I felt very sorry for them; and those 4 angels bowed down to me and said to me, “Man of God,^j pray for us to the LORD!”

And I answered them and said, “Who am I, a mortal man, that I should pray for 5 angels? Who knows where I am going^k and what will confront me? Or who indeed will pray for me?”

8 | About the taking of Enoch to the 3rd heaven. Word “7.”^a

And those men took me from there, and they brought me up to the third heaven, 1 and set me down [there]. Then I looked downward,^b and I saw Paradise.^c And that place is inconceivably pleasant.

And I saw the trees in full flower. And their fruits were ripe^e and pleasant- 2 smelling, with every food in yield and giving off profusely a pleasant fragrance.

And in the midst (of them was) the tree of life, at that place where the 3 LORD takes a rest when he goes^f into paradise.^h And that tree is indescribable for pleasantness and fine fragrance, and more beautiful than any (other) created thing that exists. • And from every direction it has an appearance which is 4 gold-looking and crimson,ⁱ and with the form of fire. And it covers the whole of Paradise.^j And it has something of every orchard tree and of every fruit. And its

g. The rebellion of Satanail and his followers is described in ch. 29 (long MSS only). These are “apostates,” so literally otūstupīnikū (= apostatēs). The reading of A U, zlostupnicy, I have not found anywhere else. The intensified prēstupīnikū is familiar, but the spelling points to the prefix zilo-, “evil,” rather than dželo, “very.” The former follows the analogy of words intensified by blago-, “good.” Hence “evil” is adjectival; the compound does not mean “those who turned aside to evil.”

h. The nuance of uvrūzdeni is hard to establish (“confined,” Morfill, The Book of the Secrets of Enoch, p. 6: “fastened,” APOT, vol. 2, p. 433), for uvrūzati means “support,” “strengthen.”

i. This detail is lacking in short MSS, although the relevant information is present in them at ch. 18. In 2En 18:7 all traditions state that these fallen angels are “under the earth,” a detail found also in 1En 10. (The second heaven in 2En is like the third heaven in ApPaul.) The scheme can be harmonized if the present location of fallen angels in the second heaven is temporary. After the judgment on “the Lord’s great day” they will be consigned to a subterranean hell, anticipated in 2En 18:7. Cf. the conventional hell of 2En 40:13–42:2, occupied by damned humans.

In 2En there seem to be four grades of evil angels: (1) their prince, Satanail, apparently in the fifth heaven with (2) the Watchers, who consorted with women at Ermon; (3) the apostate angels of the second heaven; and (perhaps) (4) the ones condemned to be “under the earth.” The NT also knows of hosts of wicked in heavenly places. Even Origen did not succeed in categorizing the various species of fallen angels. Two principles operate oppositely. On the one hand, since the worst is the corruption of the best, the depth of all is proportional to original rank. Satan was one of the highest archangels; the Watchers, who commit the vile sins of Gen 6, become devils; the minor angels, who merely follow, become demons. But in 2En the heavens are in an ascending scale, and the wicked angels in the fifth heaven are worse than those in the second.

The characterization of the latter is vague. They evidently hope for salvation; they arouse Enoch’s compassion. They request him to pray for them. This is not dismissed as impossible because their doom is inevitable. Rather he excuses himself with evasive replies: He is a man; he doesn’t know where he is going; he doesn’t have anyone to pray for him. Enoch’s visit to the second heaven ends on this vague note.

j. J P have the variant člče for mužu of other MSS. V U say “to God,” doubtless under the influence of the preceding title.

k. P agrees with A U etc., against the other short MSS, which have “and . . . or” rather than “or . . . or.” P has ili . . . albo, the latter Old Ukrainian (Slovník staroukrains’koi movi xiv-xv st. (Kiev, 1977) vol. 1, p. 69).

8 a. A has G NĀO, “3 Heaven” in large letters in the text; U in the margin.

b. This detail is only in J P. R agrees with short MSS. This literal translation suggests that he is still flying sūgljadavū krugūmi = periblepsamenos. In 2En 42 the paradise of Edem is located in the east as in the Bible, at least in the longer recension. In fact it is east of where the sun rises (42:4). It seems to be on the same level as the earth, since

[A]

- weeping. And I said to the men who were with me, 3 "Why are they tormented?" •The men answered me, "They are evil rebels against the LORD, who did not listen to the voice of the LORD, but they consulted their own will."
 4 •And I felt sorry for them. The angels bowed down to me. Deut 33:1
 They said, "Man of God, please pray for us to the LORD!"
 5 And I answered them and said, "Who am I, a mortal man, that I should pray for angels? And who knows where I am going or what will confront me? Or who will pray for me?"

8

- 1 And the men took me from there. They brought me up to the third heaven. 2Cor 12:2,4
 And they placed me in the midst of Paradise. And that place has an appearance of pleasantness that has never been seen.^d 2 Every tree was in full flower. Every fruit was ripe, every food was in yield Gen 2:9; Rev profusely; every fragrance was pleasant. And the four rivers were flowing past 22:2
 with gentle movement, with every kind of garden producing every kind of good Gen 2:9; 3:22; 3 food. •And the tree of life is in that place, under which the LORD takes a rest Prov 3:18;
 when the LORD takes a walk^f in Paradise. And that tree is indescribable for 11:30; 13:12; pleasantness of fragrance. 15:4; 22:2,14;
 Rev 2:7; 4Ezra
 7:1-3; 8:52
 ApMos 22:4

4

it is open as far as the third heaven (42:3).

The traditions about Paradise in 1En are similarly mixed. It has the "garden of life" (60:23; 61:12), "the garden where the elect and just live" (60:8), "the garden of justice" (77:3). It is across the ocean (77:3) "at the extremities of the earth" (106:7-8). This sounds more like the place where Gilgamesh goes to consult Utnapishtim. This is where Enoch himself eventually goes (1En 60:8), and presumably the paradise to which Michael took Melkizedek in 2En 72:9. This is where Methuselah and Noah go to consult Enoch (1En 65:2).

Paradise is differently located in other parts of 1En. In chs. 37-71 he goes to the west (52:1), "to the extremity of the skies" (39:3). But in 70:1-4 he goes northwest. In the mythological journey of Enoch in 1En 17f., 23-25, Paradise is a marvelous garden to the northwest, near the divine mountain. It has the tree of life, and rivers come from it.

c. The Persian loan word has passed into many languages as a proper noun, Paradise. Originally Eden was the location of the garden, and Sumerian Edin means "steppe." Domestication into Heb. produced the etymology "pleasant." Hence jannāt an-na'im or jannāt 'adn in the Koran, and the adjective blag- in 2En.

The designation of the heavenly paradise (jannā 'āliyā) as "the garden of Eden" is a Jewish rather than a Christian tradition (Palache 1920). On the other hand, the transformation to Edem is LXX, while Edom is the Eth. term.

2En uses the term "garden" (= gan) only occasionally; but the connection is still there, especially in the emphasis on trees and fragrances.

d. A U read nevidimo. Other MSS (of several families) agree in nesūvēdimo. The reading of A U could be an error, influenced by the following vidēnija (all MSS of the shorter recension), whereas

J etc. have vidēkhū, "I saw." This emphasis on seeing throws doubt on A U's statement that Paradise has never been seen, unless it means that it was not like anything seen on the earth (3:3; 7:2). SJS gives a range of meanings for nesūvēdomū, including "indescribable."

e. P alone reads zrēkhū, "I beheld," against zrēlū (A and the rest), "ripe."

f. The tradition of Gen 3:8. But here it sounds like a continual practice, since this Paradise is part of the heavenly complex. Ezek 28:13 calls Eden "the garden of God," and Gen 13:10 knows about "Yahweh's garden," which is the ultimate in fertility and prosperity.

g. The reading vūskhoditū of J P R V N contrasts with vkhoditū of B B² and is more difficult. U reads erroneously khvoditū. A reads khoditū, a secondary simplification (?). There is a similar difficulty in describing the movement of the clouds in 5:2. The idea of the LORD "ascending" into Paradise is incongruous with his usual location in the seventh heaven. Vūskhoditū is the standard translation of anabainein; voskhoždenije, "the rising (of the sun)" is a characteristic derivative. The idea of return to origins or periodic return could be present.

h. The spelling "paradise" corresponds to rai, the native word.

i. The exact shade of črivenno is hard to establish. It could be dark red, crimson, or purple.

j. Slav. ves porod in which J P R agree. As Vaillant has pointed out (Secrets, pp. xvii and 88), this is a grammatical error. It should be vsu poradu, as if a scribe has replaced rai by porodu without adjusting the gender. The corresponding passage in the 1384 version of the Disputatio is pokryvjetī vesī rai. So there is no doubt that porod is secondary in 2En at this point.

[J]

root is in Paradise at the exit^k that leads to the earth.

And paradise is in between the corruptible and the incorruptible.^l And two streams 5 come forth, one a source of honey and milk, and a source which produces oil and wine. And it is divided into 4 parts, and they go around with a quiet movement.
And they come out^m into the paradise of Edem, between the corruptible and the 6 incorruptible. And from there they pass along and divide into 40 parts.ⁿ And it proceeds in descent along the earth, and they have a revolution in their cycle, just like the other atmospheric elements.

And there is no unfruitful tree there, and every tree is well fruited, and every 7 place is blessed.

And there are 300 angels, very bright, who look after Paradise; and with never- 8 ceasing voice and pleasant singing they worship the LORD every day and hour.
And I said, "How very pleasant is this place!" And those men said to me:

9 |The revelation to Enoch of the place of those who are righteous and kind.
Word "8."|^a

"This place,^b Enoch,^c has been prepared^d for the righteous, who suffer every kind of calamity^e in their life

and who afflict their souls,
and who avert their eyes from injustice,
and who carry out righteous judgment,
and who give bread to the hungry,
and who cover the naked with clothing,
and who lift up the fallen,

k. It is hard to get the picture. Perhaps "extremity" is meant as in 1En 106:7f. Normally iskhodū (= exodus) means "going out" in the verbal rather than the substantive sense. I have not been able to find any equivalent of the phrase "the exodus of the earth." There is one clue, however. By a series of associations iskhodū can refer to the place where the sun rises (mōšā'). In Ps 75:7 (= 74.7), for instance, the MSS vary among iskhodū vīskodū vīstaka (= east). This agrees with 2En 42:4 (J).

These details are lacking in A etc., both in ch. 8 and in ch. 42. Either a scribe has added them to an original resembling A, not worrying about the inconsistency in the location; or else a scribe has removed them from a MS like J in order to alleviate the inconsistency. The position of the reference to the four rivers in 8:2 (A) seems awkward, since it interrupts the description of the fruitfulness of the trees. The description of Paradise in ch. 42 in A etc. seems rather vague contrasted with the details in the longer MSS. The notice about the olive tree (8:5, A etc.) seems unnecessary after the remark that the garden contains every kind of fruit tree. It seems to be debris from J's fuller account of the four rivers.

l. While this might suggest that Paradise is in a zone between heaven (incorruptible) and earth (corruptible), another explanation is possible. Ancient astronomy distinguished between kosmos, where order prevailed, and ouranos, where things were more irregular, or, at least, where change was possible. If, in the cosmology of 2En, heavens 1 and 2 are the region of change, and heavens 4-7 are changeless, Paradise, in the third heaven, is in between. But since there are fallen angels in both the second and the fifth heaven, and both good and bad human beings in the third heaven, this Paradise is not between two clearly defined levels of good and evil. The concept of "corruptible" does not seem to be moral.

The words ilēnīje and nelēnīje translate to phtharton and aphtharsia in 1Cor 15:53. The apostle switches from concrete to abstract, a fine but important point. The corruptible does not become incorruptible, it puts on incorruptibility.

m. P's reading niskhodjarū, "descend," is secondary and inferior. P has also lost by homoeoteleuton the words "and they divide themselves into 40 parts and proceed." In the next verse it has lost the words "and every tree is well fruited and every place" by the same process. It has also lost the adjective "atmospheric."

n. As a gloss, this seems to be unmotivated. Is it a reminiscence of the "Spring of 40," Neba'el'Arba'in, between Byblos and Baalbek, a notorious cult center in antiquity? The spring at Pella of the Decapolis is called 'Um 'Arba'in, "mother of forty (outlets?)."

o. "God." A U. All other MSS have "LORD."

p. Plural; i.e. every day, but also for the whole of every day.

9 a. J agrees with P in having a new ch. begin at this unsuitable point. There is no break in A.

b. This ch. has notable affinities with Mt 25:31-46: (1) the designation "righteous"; (2) the idea of a "prepared" place; (3) the ethical measures; (4) the arrangement of the virtuous actions in pairs. There are also substantial differences, apart from

[A]

5

Gen 2:10–14

And another tree is near it, an olive, flowing with oil continually.

6

7

•And every tree is well fruited. Ezek 31:8

There is no tree there without fruit, and every place is blessed.

8 And the angels guarding Paradise are very splendid.

With never-ceasing voice and pleasant singing they worship God^o throughout the whole day.^p And I said, “How very pleasant is this place!” The men answered me:

9

1 “This place has been prepared, Enoch, for the righteous,

Mt 25:34

who suffer every kind of tribulation in this life
and who afflict their souls,
and who avert their eyes from injustice,
and who carry out righteous judgment,
to give bread to the hungry,
and to cover the naked with clothing,
and to lift up the fallen,

Isa 33:15; Ps 119:37

Ezek 18:7; Isa 58:7; Mt 25:35, 37; 4 Ezra 2:20; Tob 4:16; Isa 1:17; Jer 22:3

the capital one that the Son of Man is the Judge: (1) the setting is quite different; (2) the good deeds in Mt are exclusively humanitarian, whereas 2En has religious duties and the endurance of persecution; (3) in fact there are only two in common—relieving hunger and nakedness. The community which used 2En 9 as its code was more self-consciously pious than the community of Mt 25. Its simple ethical monotheism would fit “God-fearers” anywhere; and it underscores 2En’s constant theme—exclusive worship of the LORD as the only God.

c. The longer version is more orderly than the shorter: but most of the differences seem to be due to simplification of the original rhetoric or the addition of homiletical glosses. Thus the block of humane acts in the middle are stated with infinitives in A. These have been extended to the following injunctions in V, but in J all but the first have been normalized to relative clauses. This process is complete in P; but R retains the pattern of A U. The importance of this doubtless more authentic arrangement is that these four practices define what is meant by “righteous judgment.” The absence of “and” in A U V N confirms this.

Other stylistic changes include:

1. Movement of “Enoch,” since the vocative is delayed (V N agree with R J P in putting it earlier). In B it even occurs twice: město ce, junošē, predvīnymū i enokhu ugotovanno estī. The variant “youth” occurs in B again in the matching statement in 10:4. Note also B’s careless error in reading pravēdnīkomū (“righteous”) as predvīnymū (“marvellous”); and the dative enokhu leads to an incongruous result: “This place has been prepared for the righteous (and for) Enoch.” But A U also have the apparent dative.

2. Rearranging clauses so that the verb comes first; thus R J P all have “before the face of the Lord” after “walk”; but P alone has moved “naked” to follow “clothe.” Note that the construction “has been prepared,” behind which a Gk. perfect participle probably lies, bothered the scribes.

Glosses include the addition of “every kind” to “calamity” (R J P), the addition of the words “and [not P, hence the translation (A) in APOT, vol. 2, p. 434] orphans” to “injured” (J R); the addition of “without a defect” to “walk” (R J P). V N have expanded “and naked cover with a garment” (in which A U agree with R J) to “and the naked dress and cover with a garment” (hence the translation [B] in APOT, vol. 2, p. 434). It can be seen from this that both MSS used in APOT represent extreme deviations from the main line. Minor variations include the change of “this life” (žīīī semū [A]) to “their life” (svoemī—V as well as J R; the phrase is missing from P). Also V reads životē. A U lack the word “place” at the end, but since it is present in V N, this is a blemish in A U. P gives a unique theological twist to the second point by reading “from those who afflict” instead of “and who afflict” (compare APOT, vol. 2, p. 434). This moves away from the idea, in all other MSS, that self-inflicted sufferings are meritorious.

d. The same word is used for the place of torment (10:4) and also the place of judgment (49:2).

e. Slav. napastī = Gk. epēireia, “abuse.”

[J]

and who help the injured and the orphans, and who walk without a defect before the face of the LORD,
and who worship him only—

even for them this place has been prepared as an eternal inheritance.”^f

10 |Here they showed Enoch the frightful place and various tortures. Word “‘9.”^g|

And those men carried me 1 to the northern^a region; and they showed me there a very frightful place; and all kinds of torture and torment are in that place, cruel darkness and lightless 2 gloom.^b And there is no light there, and a black fire blazes^c up perpetually,^d with a river of fire^e that comes out over the whole place, fire here,^f freezing ice^g there, and it dries up and it freezes;^h and very cruel places of detention and dark and merciless angels, carrying 3 instruments of atrocitiesⁱ torturing without pity.
And I said, “Woe, woe! How very frightful this place is!” And those men said 4 to me, “This place, Enoch, has been prepared for those^k who do not glorify God, who practice on the earth the sin |which is against nature, who is child corruption in the anus in the manner of Sodom|,^l of witchcraft, enchantments,^m divinations, trafficking with demons, who boast about their evil deeds—|stealing, lying,
insulting, coveting, resentment, fornication, murder|ⁿ— •and who steal the souls 5 of men secretly, seizing the poor by the throat, taking away their possessions, enriching themselves from the possessions of others, defrauding them; who, when they are able to provide sustenance, bring about the death of the hungry^p by starvation; and, when they are able to provide clothing, take away the last garment

f. Cf. Mt 25:34. 2En seems to be an independent treatment of this theme which in the Gospel has been radically Christianized. It is not likely that 2En 9 is a de-Christianized version of Mt 25. If the author of 2En knew Mt 25, we would have expected more specific resemblances.

10 a. The Essenes believed that Paradise was in the north. The reading in J P R (stranu = storonu) has the same ambivalence as Heb. gēbūl. “boundary” or “region.” In modern Russian this has become differentiated into strana, “country,” and storona, “side,” and hence “side” (APOT, vol. 2, p. 435). But earlier they were mere variants, both covering all these meanings. Original khōra (?).

b. J P R agree against the other MSS in the adjectives added to “darkness” and “gloom.”

c. Instead of “a black fire . . . with a river of fire,” in which both long and short MSS agree, V N read “fire and flame and blackness.”

d. P’s variant priso is merely a synonym.

e. The “river of fire” is first met in Dan 7:10. The imagery of a volcano is present as “the lake of fire” in Rev 19:20; 20:10, 14f.; 21:8. 1En 14:19 is still like Dan, while in 2En the fiery stream is not yet the place and means of punishment as in Rev. Compare SibOr 2.196–200; 252f.; 286; 3.84; 8.411; ApPet 8; ApPaul. Phillip prays before his martyrdom to be delivered from “the waters of fire” (ANT, p. 450), but this could come from Rev.

f. In 1En 14:3 the house of God is “hot as fire and cold as ice.” In 2En God is compared to blazing fire. The idea that “the soul is a cold element” is found in Aristotle (De anima 1.2.405b). Origen (On First Principles 2.8.3), struggling to establish the meaning of the word “soul” by etymology, speculates that a fall from virtue is a cooling of ardor for God, so cold is the natural state of evil things. The Second Council of Constantinople condemned the opinion (attributed to Origen) that demons have “cold and murky bodies” as a result of sin.

g. Other MSS do not confirm the “and” in P which gave “frost and ice” in APOT, vol. 2, p. 435.

h. For P’s nouns (“thirst and shivering” [APOT, vol. 2, p. 435]), J and R agree in using verbs. Because of its agreement with P, we have adopted R’s order rather than J’s. The rhyme zebet (zjabtti), žežet (žaždati) explains the spelling, in which J and R agree. This cold heat in one action parches and chills.

i. We prefer other short MSS, e.g. i mučešte (V), to A U imušte, “having,” which is clearly an error.

j. The remarkable reading yunoše, clearly legible in A, supports the evidence of V, which has this variant four times (not here), and of other MSS, that there was a tradition in which Enoch was addressed in this way. The similarity to the vocative enoše might explain the variant as purely scribal slip. But it is surprising that it is only in address, never in description, that the term is used. The variant jenokhū is rare. There is no phonetic reason and to help the injured, who walk before the face of the LORD,

[A]

 and who worship him only—

Lk 1:6

for them this {place} has been prepared as an eternal inheritance.”

10

- 1 And the men carried me away from there, and they made me go up to the northern heaven; and they showed me there a very frightful place;
 2 every kind of torture and torment is in that place, and darkness and gloom. Dan 7:10; Rev 19:20; 20:10-15; 21:8
 And there is no light there, but a black fire blazes up perpetually, and a river of fire is coming out over the whole place, with cold ice;
 3 •and places of detention and cruel angels and carriers of torture implements, tormenting without pity.
 4 And I said, “How very terrible this place is!” And the men answered me, “This place, youth,^j has been prepared for those who practice godless uncleaness on the earth, Mt 25:41
 who perform witchcraft and |enchancements|,“ Rom 1:32
 and who boast about their deeds.
 5 They steal souls secretly; Rev 21:8
 who untie the yoke^o that has been secured;
 who enrich themselves by fraud from the possessions of others,
 and bring about the death of the hungry by starvation;
 not being able to provide sustenance; and not being able

why the first vowel should change to ju: junokhū* is never found. But it cannot be a coincidence that this title is identical with that of Enoch (= Metatron) in 3En. [See the discussion on “Metatron” by P. Alexander in 3 Enoch. —J.H.C.]

k. The vices for which the wicked are in the place of torture are not simply the opposite of the virtues in ch. 9, nor corresponding sins of omission, except for starving the hungry, stripping the destitute naked, and idolatry. Even so the schemes are compatible, at least when the glosses are removed; but here the black arts are forbidden. The more specific Jewish duties—circumcision, sabbath-keeping, food taboos, sex taboos (as distinct from fornication and deviant practices)—are not listed. There is nothing here that any god-fearer, Jew or Christian, would not affirm.

l. The reference to sodomy is found only in P, which has similar additions in ch. 34. On prokhodū = overstie (“aperture”) see MSD, vol. 2, p. 1604. Slav. zadneprokhodnoe overstie = “anus.”

m. V N agree with J P R as reading obajanije, which means “magic” or more precisely “sorcery.” The reading of A U (obaženija, “calumnies”) is inferior.

n. The list of vices at the end of vs. 4 is found only in P.

o. The reference is quite obscure, and J P R do not have it. Elsewhere the yoke is a symbol of accepting God’s authority. See the n. on 34:1. In a context which is talking about fraud, the sin could be tampering with the scales. See 44:5; zugas could be mérito.

There could be a confusion in the verbs. Is it rěšati or rěšiti? The latter, indicated by rěšeti (V) (MSD, vol. 3, p. 227), means “unbind, untie.” But rěšati (A U) can refer to some of the worst sacrilege, such as taking away from the newly baptized the baptismal robe and washing that part of the body which had been anointed with the holy oil. The word is used like this in the Sermon on the Cross in the Dubensky Sbornik. It describes in terms of the utmost abhorrence something “unthinkably evil” that is done to the cross. If the “yoke” does not point to dishonesty in the use of scales, but rather to the violation of a sacred moral obligation, then we have no idea what it might be referring to.

p. There is a discrepancy between the two recensions, and considerable difference in word order. J P R say they are “able to supply sustenance”; but A U B read “not able” (twice in A U, once only in B). Here V and N agree with longer MSS, although V reads nakrimiti (a synonym of nasytiti, in which other MSS agree). P’s solitary reading gladnija makes “the empty” the object of “satisfy,” but gladom, “hunger,” of J R, as well as the different word order of other MSS, shows that this is instrumental with “kill.” Two distinct words are used here, each of which can render limos—gladū or alūčī (f. alūča). Either alčustija or gladnija can mean “starvation.” The coexistence of the synonyms in all MSS shows that such pairs do not necessarily contract dialects or traditions.

[J]

of the naked; •who do not acknowledge their Creator, but bow down to idols^a 6 which have no souls, which can neither see nor hear, vain gods; constructing images, and bowing down to vile things made by hands—for all these this place has been prepared as an eternal reward.”^r

11 |Here they took Enoch to the 4th heaven, where the solar and lunar tracks
 are. Word “10.”^a

And those men took me and they carried^b me up to the fourth heaven. And 1 they showed me there all the movements and sequences,^c and all the rays of solar and lunar light. •And I measured their movements and I compared their light. 2 And I saw that the sun has a light seven times greater than the moon. And I saw his circle and his wheels^e on which he always goes,^f going past always like the wind with quite marvelous speed. And his coming and his return give him no rest,^g day and night.

And 4^h great stars, each star having 1000 stars under it, on the right-hand side of 3
 the sun’s chariot, and 4 on the left-hand side, each one having 1000 stars under it, all together 8000, going with the sun perpetually.

And 150,000 [angels] accompany him in the daytime, and at night 1000. And 4
 |100| angels go in front of the sun’s chariot, six-winged, in flaming fire;

and the sun blazes up and sets the 100 angels on fire. 5

q. The word “idols” only in J. R P agree with other MSS in reading “gods.” The gloss “which can neither see nor hear” only in J P. The epithet istukanny (glyptoi) only in P.

r. Slav. dostoanie. Contrast nasléde. “inheritance” (9:1). Both words are used in the Gospels to translate kléronomia.

A U, explains the other readings. In J P it has been replaced by its synonym luny; while slīca (A U) is a misreading of the identical ending, a mistake not so easily made with luny. The idea seems to be an exegetical inference from Isa 30:26; see also 2En 66:7f.

e. The textual problems at this point may be illustrated by a few representative readings:

A	krū^g ea i kolesnica
R	krugī eju i kolesnicja eju
J P	krū^g emu i kolēsi emu
V	i krū^g eju kolesnyca

The picture seems to be that of a circuit (krugū = kyklos) around which the sun and the moon drive their chariots. That both heavenly bodies are in mind is shown by koždo eju. “each of the two of them,” which follows, and which the agreement of R V A proves to be superior. J P read “always.” By the same token, R V, which read “their (dual) circle,” are better than A U B² (“her”) or J P B Chr (“his”). The grouping of both long and short MSS on both sides suggests that similar errors have developed independently. The feminine pronoun of A U is unaccountable, unless by simple error for the dual, since sūnce is neuter in Slav. But “moon” is feminine; see ch. 16. In any case the singular shows that J P are already talking only about the sun at this point. J’s replacement of “chariot” by “wheels” (kolo, koleso also means “circle” and so is a near synonym of krugū) could be deliberate demythologization, since it occurs again in ch. 14; but most of the picture is still intact. In 11:2, 4, J P read kolo against kolesnica of other MSS, and this is probably intended as a synonym, since kola can also translate hamaksa. In 2En 16 krugū seems to mean “cycle” (of day and night), but there A U (not long MSS) retain the discussion of the moon’s chariot. At 12:2 short MSS and R (but not J P) describe the angels “who pull the chariot of the sun,” which is more concrete than J P. See the next n.

11 a. At this point A has D (= 4) NĀO (= heaven) in the margin in huge letters. In the text the MSS vary between the numeral (e.g. A) and the word (e.g. U).

b. The opening statement illustrates the kind of variation that takes place continually in these MSS. Most MSS have two verbs (in V they are vūzdvygnusta and vūznesosta, cf. N B etc.; in J vūzjasta and vovvedošu, cf. P R), but A U have only vovzvigosta, a simple case of loss by homoiioarkton.

c. It is not clear what astronomical realities are meant by prēkhozdenia, “transitions.” A U have probably simplified the text for this reason. By omitting “and” P arrives at “successive goings,” but it reads predkhodnaja. Perhaps the original was a hendiadys.

d. The hesitation of scribes over the use of synonyms is illustrated at this point. Gk. is particularly rich in words for “light.” Slav. has luča (best aktis) or svētū (best phōs, opposite of “darkness”). But the latter also has the wider meaning of “world,” “life,” “age” (ōlām, aiōn). Here both are used in MSS of several families, but it is a question whether “rays of light” is glossed or whether “rays” (A U B) represents a simplification. In what follows svētū is used by all. Another confusion arises in the word for “moon.” Short MSS have nouns, “sun and moon”; long ones have switched to adjectives, “solar and lunar.” The apparently original mā (mēsjačr) developed into “month,” while the synonym luna remains “moon.” R still has mēsjačnago but J P have lunnago. The secondary character of the readings with lun- is proved by the error in A U in vs. 2—“greater than the sun (!)—it should be “moon”; and mā, as read by R and by all short MSS except

[A]

6 to supply clothing, take away the last garment of the naked; •who do not acknowledge their Creator, but bow down to vain gods, constructing images, and bowing down to something made by hand— And for all these this place has been prepared as an eternal reward.”

11

1 And (the men) lifted me up from there (and they carried me up) to the 4th heaven. And they showed me there all the movements (and displacements), and
2 all the rays (of light)^d of the sun and the moon. • I measured their movements. I compared their light. And I saw that the sun has a light seven times greater than the sun(!). Their circle and their chariots on which each of them rides, passing like the wind. And there is no rest for them by day and by night, as they go off and come back.

3 And four great stars, holding onto the right-hand side of the sun's chariot, 4 on the left-hand side,

4 (going) with the sun perpetually, • and angels going in front of the sun's chariot,

5

f. By changing the original ezdinū, “drives,” to šestvueti, “moves,” J P have diminished the mythological content. At the end of vs. 2, J P have nouns where other MSS have verbs. A similar adjustment has been made in 12:2, where the verb mučēt (vehunt)—original as R's agreement with short MSS shows—has become “accompany and run” in J P, which lack the reference to the chariot as well. This is the more remarkable, because otherwise long MSS have (retain?) mythological details lacking (censored?) in short MSS.

g. Once more the singular emu, “to him” (of J P), contrasts with the better dual (ima) of all other MSS. This seems to contradict the statement in 24:5 that “the sun has rest.” It could mean no more than that he never stops moving; but in view of gnostic interest in “rest” something more significant could be involved. It suggests that “the Sun” is a self-conscious being.

It is difficult to establish from the descriptions of the sun, moon, and stars in these sections whether they are imagined to be living celestial beings or not. The vivid dramatic descriptions of their movements could be no more than personification for literary purposes. The strictly mechanical timetable does not suggest free rational beings (Origen equates freedom and rationality). The accompanying angels serve as the rational causes of the regular motions, the theological equivalents of “natural laws.”

Origen, assuming that all creatures are capable of development, and therefore of good and evil, does not exempt the heavenly bodies from this rule. Almost the whole of On First Principles 1.7 is devoted to the idea that the heavenly stars are souls in fiery bodies. He quotes Job 25:5 as a proof that stars can be tainted with sin (On First Principles 1.7.2).

Belief that the stars are living beings goes back to the old polytheism, and retains sophisticated expression by Plato, who called the stars “divine” (Timaeus 30b). Philo (De mundi opif.) taught that the stars, being heavenly beings, were incapable of defection. (See our discussion of “incorruptible” in the n. on 8:5 above.) Origen's other opinion (cf. Jude 13) arises from a priori notions, and an irresistible desire to systematize. There is no doubt that he thought that the sun, moon, and stars were rational beings (compare Contra Celsum 5.11). His main argument is the mere fact of their movement as such. This is supported by Scriptures in which commands are addressed to stars as if to responsible beings. But he had it both ways: The very precision of their movements is seen as proof of the highest reason (On First Principles 1.7.3).

2En is on a much lower level of sophistication. It is content to describe the movement of sun and moon in terms of calendrical facts, with a little cosmology, or rather astronomy, about gates. The angels are the causes. The mechanism of locomotion, whether on wheels or in a chariot or on a circular orbit, is not clear. But in any case it is fairly crude in conceptuality.

Origen's views on this subject were attacked with vigor by Jerome and Justinian, and belief that the sun, moon, and stars were living beings became unorthodox. Since 2En describes Sun and Moon at least in such a mythological way, its use in Christian circles could signify either (1) agreement with Origen against Jerome on this point; or (2) acceptance of 2En at a time after the controversy was forgotten; or (3) innocuous use of fairy-tale ways of talking about the sun and the moon.

h. The picture does not suit a quadriga, traditional for sun deities, for here there are four stars on each side of the chariot, making eight in all. All long MSS have the additional feature of one thousand angels for each of these eight.

In short MSS these verses have been drastically condensed by removing the extravagant figures, or else J P have been embellished. R is different again. It agrees at vs. 3 that each of the eight stars has one thousand stars under it. It continues: “And 15 myriad angels conduct him in the daytime, but at night a thousand angels, each angel with six wings, who go in front of the chariot, and one hundred angels give him fire.” In J P the verbs seem to be singular, with the sun as subject. The sun enkindles and sets on fire (the words are synonyms) the one hundred angels. But in R the angels stoke up the sun.

[J]

12 |About the very wonderful solar elements. Word “11.”^a

And |I looked and saw| flying spirits, the solar elements,^b called phoenixes^c and khalkedras,^d strange^e and wonderful. For their form^f was that of a lion, their tail that of a . . . , and their head that of a crocodile. Their appearance was multi-colored, like a rainbow. •Their size was 900^g measures. Their wings were those of angels, but they have 12 wings each. They accompany and run with the sun, carrying heat and dew, (and) whatever is commanded |them| from God.

Thus he goes through a cycle, and he goes down and he rises up across the sky and beneath the earth^h with the light of his rays. And he was there, on the track,ⁱ unceasingly.

13 |The angels picked Enoch up and set him down in the East, at the solar gates. Word “12.”^a

And those men carried me away^b to the east (of that heaven).
(|And they showed me|) the solar gates^c through which the sun comes out^d according to the appointment^e of the seasons and according to the phases of the moon,^f for the entire year, and according to the numbers on the horologe, day and night. •And I saw 6 open^g gates, each gate having 61 stadia and a quarter of a stadium. And I measured carefully and I

12 a. The divergences in the MS evidence for this ch. cannot be described simply by reference to long and short recensions; for there are substantial differences within these two main kinds of text. The short MSS are brief and scrappy to the point of incoherence. They leave unclear such questions concerning the celestial birds as:

(1) Their relation to the “stars” that go with the sun in ch. 11 (the continuity of short MSS at this point suggests that they are the same, in fact they are called “angels,” and the talk to the contrary in long MSS, which is all about phoenixes and the khalkedras, is lacking).

(2) Their number (the repetition of the numeral in V N B² suggests that there are twelve of them, while R [short] has the unique detail that there are two).

(3) Their anatomy (short MSS have only the detail of twelve wings each [all agree in this] whereas long MSS go into considerable detail; R says merely that one was like a phoenix, the other like a khalkedra, whereas J P identify them as these creatures).

(4) Their function (they “pull” the chariot; the weakening of this to “accompany” in J P only is clearly secondary).

(5) Their task in conveying heat and dew to the earth (obscure in all texts).

(6) Their course (they descend to the earth in short MSS, they go around under the earth in long MSS, and this is probably the original picture).

b. This terminology is a peculiarity of J P within the long recension. See 1a, n. n.

c. The plural (also in 19:6—both recensions) is unexampled in all literature, and suggests ignorance of the ancient and widespread traditions about this bird which everywhere else is sui generis. Furthermore, here the role of the phoenix(es) as the bird of the sun is quite general. Charles (APOT, vol. 2, p. 436) claimed that Lactantius’ knowledge of the phoenix is dependent on 2En. Van den Broek (The Myth of the Phoenix, trans. I. Seeger [Leiden, 1972] p. 285, n. 1) denies this, with good reason. Among many details, 2En evidently does not know about the rejuvenating immersion of the phoenix at sunrise. At the same time, van den Broek (Myth, p. 260) agrees with Charles to the extent of recognizing that 2En’s ideas about the phoenix must have originated at Alexandria.

d. These are brass serpents; they are associated with cherubim in 1En 20:7, compare 2En 19. In the description which follows, phoenixes and khalkedras seem to be the same.

e. P reads čudni, J studnyi, not “cold” (studenyi), nor “shameful” (studinyi). The word in P’s preface, prečudnykh, is even more secondary.

f. Knowledge of the anatomy of phoenix or khalkedra gained from elsewhere cannot be used safely here, for there is no indication that the author of 2En knew any more than the names of these creatures. Nor does Ezek 1:5–11 solve the problem. R J P agree in the details, but each of the three uses the conjunction “and” differently. P (APOT, vol. 2, p. 436) suggests that feet and tails were leonine; but R (Vaillant, Secrets, p. 91) suggests that feet, tail, and head are crocodilian, so that the body is that of a lion. This is not strictly the meaning of obrazū, “shape.”

g. R uses the words “nine” and “hundred”; J has the numeral 900; P has 900 and “hundred.” The value of the “measure,” mēra, is not defined. In translation literature it is either metron or batos (“volume”); or ‘ēpāh or bath in OT texts (both “volume”). The most obvious unit is the cubit, the unit in the Disputatio (hōs apo pēkhōn ennea).

[A]

12

1 . . . flying spirits,

2

with 12 wings like those of angels, who pull the chariot of the sun, carrying the dew and the heat, when the LORD gives the command to descend to the earth,

Ps 110:3

3

with the sun's rays.

13

- 1 And the men carried me away to the east of heaven.
And they showed me the gates through which the sun goes out according to the appointed seasons and according to the cycle of the months, for the entire year, and according to 2 the shortening of the duration of the days (and of the nights). *6 gates, one (of which was) open, about thirty 1 stadia. Carefully I measured their size. And I

h. P and R have each leveled the prepositions: P reads pod nbsi i pod zemlju, "under the heaven and under the earth." R reads po nbsi i po zemli, "along the heaven and along the earth." J is best, with po nbsi i pod zemleju. The confusion could be due to a clash of models of the universe, either a series of horizontal levels or a set of spheres concentrically around the earth. Perhaps the two can be combined, with the seven "circles" in between an upper zone of light and a nether zone of darkness. In ch. 14 the sun travels from west to east under the earth in darkness every night.

i. Cf. the heading of ch. 12 in P. In Akkadian westward movement is called harrān šamši (ANET, p. 89, n. 152).

13 a. This chapter is a highly condensed version of 1En 72.

b. J P add the preposition ot-, "from," to the verb.

c. The Slav. word vrata has no singular. In the oldest Mesopotamian traditions Šamaš comes out through a gate in the east. In Parmenides' poem On Nature the gates of the sun, which are described quite literally, are opened by Justice, holder of the keys of retribution.

The adjective "solar" modifying "gates" is found only in J P. 3Bar has 365 gates in heaven by which the sun rises.

d. The MSS use a variety of verbs to describe the sun's egress at its rising.

e. MSS with the adjective are better. As a modifier of vrěnja, ustavinyi has the idea of divine ordering. It translates horismenos, which in 1Clem 20:3 describes the appointed courses along which the heavenly bodies "roll."

f. Since 2En is not specifically interested in the phases of the moon as an astronomical phenomenon, what is meant here is probably the annual round of months (cf. ch. 16, n. e). The MSS agree in general, but fluctuate between singular (which suggests the moon [Vaillant, Secrets, p. 13]) or plural (which suggests the months). That an annual cycle is in mind is shown by the following remarks about the shortening of the days (short MSS), and by the phrase "the entire year." But the latter is not present in V, which reads i po obkhozdeniemi

š mca vcego, "according to the round of every month." V is also superior to A in what follows—"and after shortening to (!) lengthening of days and nights." The correct udliženiju of V has become prikhozdeniju, which really means "arrival." It has been influenced by the preceding obkhozdeniemi mėsjača. B Chr read uloženiju, "diminution." Long MSS support "day and night." Before rejecting the reference to the sundial (all long MSS), note its occurrence in short MSS at 15:3.

g. R says that the gates were "big," once more in significant agreement with V and N. All MSS agree in its occurrence in 14:1. It could mean "wide" or "tall." The same applies to the noun velikota, "bigness," which follows. At this point all MSS seem to be corrupt; at least it is not possible to work out what the dimensions of the gates were in the source documents. It is more probable that the measure is the width, not the distance away (Vaillant). We are to imagine six openings along the eastern horizon (perhaps an actual structure), which, when viewed from the proper point, make the place of sunrise move one stadium (or two) each day.

The MSS disagree as to whether Enoch did or did not grasp the size of these gateways.

[J]

figured out their size to be so much—through which the sun comes out^h and goes off to the west.

And it becomes evenⁱ and goes in through all the months. 3

(And the 1st gate he comes out for 42 days,^j
 the second 35 days,
 the third 35 days,
 the fourth 35 days,
 the fifth 35 days,
 the sixth 42 days.)

And then once more he does an about-turn and goes back the other way from the sixth gate, according to the round of the seasons: 4

(And he goes in through the fifth gate 35 days,
 the 4th 35 days,
 the 3rd 35 days,
 the second 35 days).

And so (the days of) the whole year are completed, according to the cycle of the four seasons. 5

14 |They carried Enoch to the west. Word “13.”|

And then those men carried me away to the west of the heaven,^a and they showed me six^b large open gates, corresponding to the circuit of the eastern gates, opposite them, where the sun sets according to the number of the days,^c 365 and 1/4.^d 1

Thus he goes back once again to the eastern gates, under the earth.^e (And when he goes out from the western gates), he takes off his light, the splendor which is his radiance, (and four hundred angels take his 2

h. The MSS use different verbs to describe the sun's movements:

	comes out	goes off	goes in
	(vss. 3, 4)	(vs. 3)	(vss. 3, 5)
J P	iskhodit	idet	vūskodit
R	iskhodit	idet	vūkhodit
A U	vkhodit (3)	idet	vkhodit
	iskhodit (4)

S. Novaković (“Apokrif o Enohu,” Stárine XVI [Zagrebe (Agram)] pp. 65–81) reports vīskhodit as the first verb in the Belgrade MS; but V reads vīkhōdyī. It is easy to see how vūskhodit, “ascend,” has crept in. The same split occurs in vs. 5 between R and J P. That is, A U are wrong in vs. 3; J P are wrong in vs. 3 (they are defective in vs. 5). The scribes were looking at sunrise from the human point of view; but the originals describe it from the sun's point of view. He “goes out” in the morning and “goes in” at night. In ch. 14 a different verb again, zakhodit, describes sunset.

i. Does this refer to the equinox? The reference to the four seasons (vs. 5) suggests that the year might begin on such a date, but the picture of the sun rising through successive gates and then working his way back through them suggests the movement of the point of sunrise across the horizon from solstice to solstice.

j. Most MSS are defective in the full details of the ten periods spent in the six gates each year. But the complete agreement of R (long) with A U (short), not only in the full list, but also in the number of days, proves their authenticity. Their correlation either with a working calendar or with astronomical facts is another matter. A scheme of this kind is not known elsewhere; but the system of gates is familiar from 1En, including the astronomical sections of the Aram. fragments from Qumran. The 364-day year is a certain link with these old treatises. 2En 13 is either another solar scheme that has survived, or else a garbled relic.

14 a. At 2En 10:1 all short MSS read “northern region” instead of “northern heaven.” Here P alone has the variant “western regions” (but only “west” in its chapter title).

b. A U read šestera, and P has the numeral Ž = 6. But R reads petora, which J confirms with ē, apparently “5.” The explanation is that the letter e is the numeral 6 in Glagolitic. It is notable 3 could not comprehend their size— •those by which the sun goes in and goes off to the west.

[A]

The 1st gate he comes out for	42 days,
the second	35 days,
the third	35 days,
the fourth	35 days,
the fifth	35 days,
the sixth	42 days.

4 And again, turning around at the sixth gate, according to the round of the seasons:

And he goes in through the fifth gate	35 days,
the fourth gate	35 days,
the third gate	35 days,
the second	35 days.

5 And the days of the year are completed, according to the cycle of the seasons.

14

1 And the men led me away to the west of the heaven, and there they showed me six large open gates, corresponding to the circuit of the eastern heaven, opposite, by which the sun sets, corresponding to his rising by the eastern
2 gates and corresponding to the number of the day. •Thus he sets through the western gates. And when he goes out from the western gates, then four angels take away his crown, that this primitive feature survives in two short MSS. B has a similar reading at 16:8. At 70:1 similar confusion among numerals can be explained in terms of Glagolitic originals.

c. The singular, "the day," in A U, which is confirmed by B and V, is important evidence against the reading of J P R, in which the length of the year according to the Julian calendar is evidently a gloss. The figure is purely theoretical. What is being said is that the place where the sun sets in the west matches the place where it rises in the east, depending on the count of the day concerned.

V is different. Instead of "corresponding to the circuit [obkhodu] of the eastern gates" in which MSS of both recensions agree, it reads "corresponding to the eastern entrance" (vikhodu—a word which comes a little later in other MSS). And it agrees with J R (against other MSS) in reading "which it sets there," a palpable Hebraism (tu = šām). Where others have "rising" (vkhodu = entrance), it has "ascent" (viskhodu). In vs. 3, instead of "travels" (idelit), it has "goes out" (izydeti).

d. The following information, found only in MSS of the longer recension, is probably interpolated and cannot be used to date the main texts.

(1) The Julian year of 365½ days (14:1; cf. 16:4 and 16:6).

(2) The calendrical cycle of twenty-eight years (15:4) when all the days of the month fall again on the same day of the week.

(3) The Metonic cycle of nineteen years during which seven lunar months must be intercalated (16:8).

(4) The lunar epacts (16:5) because twelve lunar months fall short of one solar year by about twelve days. The lunar epacts are first named in a Lat. treatise on the computation of Easter, dated A.D. 243.

(5) The great cycle of 532 years (28 × 19) after which all movable ecclesiastical festivals come on the same day of the month and the same day of the week (16:5).

e. J has developed a different picture, seeing sunset (in the west, as described by all other MSS) as a return to the eastern gates. This movement "under the earth" has already been described in 12:3, although only J has got it correctly. P agrees with J in using the preposition ko, but it has "western gates."

[J]

crown^f and carry it to the LORD). •For, since his shining crown is with God,^g 3 with 400 angels guarding it, the sun (turns his chariot around) and goes back under the earth^h on wheels, without the great light which is his great radiance and ornament. [And he remains] for seven great hours in night. And the chariot spends half its time under the earth. And when he comes to the eastern approaches, in the 8th hour of the night, (the angels, the 4 hundred angels, bring back the crown, and crown him). And his brightness and the shining of his crown are seen beforeⁱ sunrise. And the sun blazes out more than fire does.

15 |The solar elements, the phoenixes and the khalkedras, burst into song.|^a

And then the solar elements, called phoenixes^b and khalkedras, burst into song. 1 That is why every bird flaps its wings, rejoicing at the giver of light. And they burst into song at the LORD's command:

The light-giver is coming,
to give radiance to the whole world;
and the morning watch appears,
which is the sun's rays.
And the sun comes out over the face of the earth,
and retrieves his radiance,
to give light to all the face of the earth.

And they showed me this calculation^c of the sun's movement, and the gates by 3 which he goes in and goes out; for these are the great gates which God created to be an annual horologe.^d

This is why the sun has the greater heat; and the cycle for him goes on for 28 4 years, and begins once more from the start.^e

16 |They picked Enoch up and placed him once more in the east at the orbit of the moon. Word "15."|

And another calculation^a those men showed me, that of the moon, and all the 1 movements and phases;

f. Traditionally, representations of Helios show a crown or nimbus with seven rays. This is true also of figures associated with the sun, such as the phoenix. There is no indication that this use of 7 is any more than another occurrence of this sacred mystical or magical number. Nor is it invariant as a sun symbol, at least so far as coronal rays are concerned. Numbers 4, 5, 6, 9, and 12 are also found.

g. P reads "in heaven with the LORD." The brevity and obscurity of A U suggest that the text has been abbreviated by removing some of the more fantastic features. R differs considerably from J P in this ch.; but either or both might well preserve readings with a claim to authenticity. Since even A U describe the removal of the sun's crown at sunset, its replacement before sunrise is to be expected. We have presented all the evidence by conflating R's peculiar readings with the text of J. This does not mean that the textual problems are to be solved by such a maximizing procedure. In particular our interpretation of J's unique provide is dubious. See n. i.

h. The sun has daily turning points (tropai) if the movement is considered to be back and forth. There are also seasonal tropai corresponding to the solstices.

i. R says that "the 4 hundred angels bring (prinaset) the crown and crown him." P has the similar privoditū, suggesting that J (provide) is an error.

15 a. The expected ch. enumeration of P ("word '14' ") is missing. This shows that these headings were copied from another MS, and not made up just for P.

b. The superior reading of R avoids the plural.

c. The MSS vary extensively in the word used here and in 16:1, 8. Note the following:

	15:3	16:1	16:8
		ñ
A	raštenie	raštee	ražšenie
		ñ
U		raštie	ražšenie
B	razčinenie	razčinenie	razčinenie
V	razčijnenie	rasčynjenje	rasčijnenie
Chr	različenie	različenie	razlučeniya
J P R	rasčitanie	rasčitanie	rasčetenie

Vaillant (Secrets, p. 14) conjectures an original raštie at 15:3, but prefers R's razčitanie at 16:1. There are three or four terms, variously spelled. Longer MSS read rasčitanie throughout, except that P alone deviates to rastečenie in ch. 16—hence "course" (APOT, vol. 2, p. 438).

[A]

3 and carry it up to the LORD. • and travels But the sun turns his chariot around without light;

Josh 10:12

and they place the crown on him there.

15

1

2

3 And they showed me this augmentation of the sun and the gates by which he goes in and goes out; for these gates the LORD created to be an annual horologe.

4

16

1 But the moon has a different augmentation. They showed me all her movements and all her phases. The men showed me the gates, and they showed me 12 gates Rasčitanie ("calculation" [APOT, vol. 2, p. 438]), whether process or result, is not suitable, for the data in this ch. are not calculated. V similarly has only one word throughout, razčínjenie, and other MSS (N B) agree. This is the source of "disposition" in APOT (vol. 2, p. 438), but "order" or "routine" would be better, and suits. The fact that diataksis or diatagē could lie behind this word makes comparison with Acts 7:53 interesting. The variant raštinenije is attested, and all the words in A U could be the same. But raštenie (auksēsis), "increase," is also suitable in an astronomical treatise. Vaillant's emendation to "deduction" does not seem necessary. The variant of Chr—"difference," or "separation," assuming that razlučeniija at 16:8 is not merely a scribal slip—has little claim to authenticity, but it does suggest that the text was not understood.

d. The annual movement of the sun serves as a kind of cosmic clock. From the time of Hesiod a farmer's almanac took its date from the annual movement of the sun through the ecliptic. This is due to the fact that the sidereal day is slightly shorter (by about four minutes) than the solar day. This means that the stars gradually overtake and surpass the sun. Roughly this permits the year to be divided into intervals, depending on what stars the sun is near. The crudest system divides the zone into twelve zodiacs. The Egyptians recognized thirty-six constellations or decans of ten days each. By accurate observation of the risings (heliacal or acronycal) and settings (cosmical or heliacal) of individual stars, more exact indications are possible. In 2En all the recensions agree in the idea that the gates through which the sun rises and sets keep track of the days of the year in the same way as a sundial keeps track of the hours of the day. J, R, and P go on to affirm that this is why the sun is the greatest created thing. This statement is lacking in A U, except for the words slnce skazaeti, "the sun says," which are unintelligible. Yet something like them is found in other MSS. Even so, the divergence among the three MSS of the longer recension at this point leaves the whole matter obscure. J's "heat," varī, is clearly a corruption of tvar, "creature" (P). This strong statement about the sun is intended to reinforce the adherence of this group to the solar calendar.

e. A U share at this point the stray words slnce skazaeti. Other MSS have the same words in inverted order, as with skazuetū solnce (B). The corruption is irreparable.

16 a. See ch. 15, n. c.

[J]

(and) 12 big gates, crowned^b from the west to the east, through which the moon goes in and goes out, in accordance with the regular seasons.
She goes in by the first western gate, in the place of the sun—

2 by the 1st^c gate for 31^d days exactly,^c

 the 2nd for 35 days exactly,
 the 3rd for 30 days exactly,
 the 4th for 30 days exactly,
 (the 5th for 31 days) (extraordinarily) / |exactly|,
 (the 6th for 31 days exactly,|)
 the 7th for 30 days exactly,
 the 8th for 31 days extraordinarily,
 the 9th for 31 |35| days (accurately),
 the 10th for 30 days exactly,
 the 11th for 31 days exactly,
 the 12th for 22 |28| days exactly.

Thus likewise by the western gates in accordance with the cycle, and in accordance with the number of the eastern gates. 3

b. The picture is far from clear. There are twelve gates, each corresponding to one month of the solar year (but these months are not those of any known calendar). The disposition of the gates is not clear, whether "to the east" (A) or "from the west to the east" (J P). The movement of the moon is "going in and going out" through these gates. These gates are not the same as the gates of the sun—six in the east, six in the west—and the months connected with those gates are quite different in their division of the year. A further problem is the apparent description of these gates as a "crown." Parmenides conceived of the universe as a system of concentric rings of fire (cf. 2En 27:3), called stefanai. Is this word an intrusion of the word "crown" from the description of the sun? The word has a good claim to authenticity since A U read vēna. J P have the participle vēn'čan(n)a, from which R's vēčnaa, "eternal," is best explained as a corruption. Yet some short MSS also have this variant, e.g. V, identically vēčnaa. Vaillant (Secrets, pp. 15f.) suspects that Ps 24 (Slav. 23):7, 9 with vrata véc'naja has contaminated the text. Vaillant emends the text extensively to arrive at twelve gates "crowned" in the east and twelve similar gates in the west. But the preposition ko, "to," which persists in all MSS, is awkward, except in J P—"from the west to the east."

If we are to imagine a complete circlet ("crown") of gates "from the west to the east," perhaps something like "the houses of the zodiacs" is in mind. But the language of vs. 3 suggests that there are two sets of gates, one set in the east, one set in the west, and that the moon behaves similarly in each set. This is the picture in 1En 72. J P clearly identify the first gate as "western," "in the place of the sun," the latter phrase being found in R as well. This is one of several details in which 1En can still be recognized behind 2En (e.g. 1En 73:4). But 1En (72:3) uses the same gates (six in the east, six in the west) to describe the movements of both sun and moon. 1En 75, however, describes a system of twelve gates in another connection, and this could be the source of 2En's muddled account. The presence of fragments of ideas from 1En in longer MSS, and their absence from shorter MSS, disproves the theory that longer MSS have been interpolated. Many differences can only be explained if the shorter MSS have been abbreviated.

c. The designation of a month by a number rather than a name corresponds to Qumran practice. 1En and Jub similarly never use month names. Month names appear at 2En 48:2 and in chs. 68 and 73.

d. Another problem is the number of days to be assigned to each of the twelve months. R is the only MS with twelve numbers intact and they add up to 363. These agree fairly well with other MSS where they have the numbers, notably with A U. In fact, if we prefer A to R at the one point where they disagree (31 days for the third month), and supply A with R's figure for the twelfth month (22 days—a figure confirmed by J), the total is 364, which is probably original. But the lengths of the months do not line up with any known calendar.

The calendar in 16:2 according to the various MSS is as follows:

	P	J	R	A, U	B	1En Jub
1	(3)1	31	31	31	30	30
2	35	35	35	35	35	30
3	30	30	30	31	30	31
4	30	30	30	30	30	30
5	31	—	31	31	30	30
6	31	—	31	31	31	31
7	30	30	30	30	30	30
8	31	31	31	31	31	30
9	35	31	31	31	31	31
10	30	30	30	30	—	30
11	31	31	31	31	—	30
12	28	22	22	[22]	—	31
Total	373		363	[364]		364

The numerals in Vaillant (Secrets, pp. 15f.) correspond to U, except that month 12 is missing, and he has restored it (22 days) from R. APOT (vol. 2, p. 438), following Morfill (Secrets of Enoch, p. 18), "corrected" the

[A]

to the east, a crown, by which the moon goes in and goes out, in accordance with the regular seasons.

2

By the first gate to the east 31 days exactly,
 and by the second 35 days exactly,
 and by the third 31 days exceptionally,
 and by the fourth 30 days exactly,
 and by the fifth 31 days extraordinarily,
 and by the sixth 31 days exactly,
 by the 7th 30 days exactly,
 by the eighth 31 days extraordinarily,
 and by the 9th 31 days accurately,
 and by the tenth 30 days exactly,
 by the 11th 31 days exceptionally,
 by the 12th gate she goes 22 days exactly.

3 Thus likewise by the western gates in accordance with the cycle, and in accordance with the number of the eastern gates.

figures in P. Besides the obvious correction of the first month from 1 to 31, they changed P's two 35-day months to 31 days each, thus securing a total of 365 days. But even so, the series *31 *31 30 30 31 31 30 31 *31 30 31 28 does not match the Julian calendar, and 2En does not use a 365-day year in any case. J agrees with R as far as it goes, and both preserve the vital information about the twelfth month. When this is supplied to A U the correct total is obtained. R is the only MS with figures for twelve months but its total is wrong. R agrees with U at every point except in the third month, where its value (30 days) explains why it is one day short. A U are accordingly the best witnesses. B has only nine months and only six of them agree with A U. But its agreement that the second month has 35 days is important evidence. In fact all MSS agree with this information.

e. The meaning of the adverbs used to characterize the behavior of the moon in each month is obscure. The discovery of the pattern is made harder by the wide disagreement among the MSS. Four different adverbs are used. Note the following translations: invěstno, "exactly"; ispyino, "accurately" ("perfectly?"); izjaštenū, "exceptionally"; izrjadenu, "extraordinarily." The adverbs are altogether lacking in B. Only A U use all four. R has three; J P only two, with a marked trend to label most months "exactly." This accounts for the two months (3 and 11) for which R J P agree together against A U. Note the following:

	10	exactly	exactly
	11	exceptionally	exactly
	12	exactly	exactly
Month	J		P
	1	exactly	exactly
	2	exactly	exactly
	3	exactly	exactly
	4	exactly	exactly
	5	—	exactly
	6	—	exactly
	7	exactly	exactly
	8	extraordinarily	extraordinarily
	9	exactly	exactly
	10	exactly	extraordinarily
	11	exactly	exactly
	12	exactly	exactly

Otherwise R agrees with A U (against J P) where this leveling has not occurred (5, 9). All agree in labeling the eighth month "extraordinarily." The textual evidence indicates that A U have the best readings. A clue is probably found in 16:6, which says that there are four "extraordinary" months each year. This has something to do with the waxing and waning of the moon in relation to the calendar months, although it is possible that the "diminution" and "augmentation" mentioned there refer to those periods of the year in which the days are getting shorter and longer. A U have lost some of the text at this point by homoiarkton, but restoration can be made from B. In J P R the scribes seem to have got the matter confused with the cycle of bisextile years.

The calendar of 1En begins the year at the spring equinox, when day and night are equal and the days are getting longer. This means that for roughly six months (10, 11, 12, 1, 2, 3) the days are lengthening, and this period includes the two "exceptional" months. In the other months the days are getting shorter, and this period includes the two "extraordinary" months. On a very short night it is possible that the moon will not be seen at all. On a very long night it can be seen, set, and rise again before the sun does.

Month	A U	R
1	exactly	exactly
2	exactly	exactly
3	exceptionally	exactly
4	exactly	exactly
5	extraordinarily	extraordinarily
6	exactly	exactly
7	exactly	exactly
8	extraordinarily	extraordinarily
9	accurately	accurately

[J]

And thus she goes, and completes the solar year 365 and ½ of one day.^f 4
 But the lunar year has 354, making 12 months, (calculated) in accordance with 5 29 days. And it lacks 12 days of the solar cycle, which are the lunar epacts for each year. Also the great cycle contains 532 years.

It passes by the quarters for three years, and the fourth completes it exactly. For 6 this reason they are taken away, outside heaven, for three years; and they are not added to the number of the days, because these ones change the seasons of the year—two new moons in augmentation, two others in diminution. *And when the western gates are completed, she 7 turns around and goes to the eastern ones with (her) light. Thus she goes, day and night, in accordance with the heavenly cycles, lower than all the cycles, swifter than the heavenly winds, and spirits and elements and flying angels, with 6 wings to each angel. *And the moon has a sevenfold intercalation, and a period of 8 revolution of 19 years. And she begins once again from the start.

17 |About the angelic songs which it is not possible to describe. Word “16.”|

In the middle of the heaven I saw armed troops, worshiping the LORD with tympani 1 and pipes and unceasing voices, and pleasant [voices and pleasant and unceasing] and various songs, which it is impossible to describe. And every mind would be quite astonished, so marvelous and wonderful is the singing of these angels. And I was delighted, listening to them.

18 |About the taking of Enoch to the fifth heaven. Word “17.”|

And those men took me up on their wings and placed me on the fifth heaven. 1
 And I saw there many innumerable armies called Grigori.^a And their appearance was like the appearance of a human being, and their size was larger than that of large giants. *And their faces were dejected,^b and the silence of their mouths was 2 perpetual. And there was no liturgy in the fifth heaven. (|And I said to the men who were with me, “What is the explanation that these ones are so very dejected, and their faces miserable, and their mouths silent? And (why) is there no liturgy in this heaven?”|) *And those men answered me, “These are the Grigori, who turned 3 aside from the LORD,^c 200 myriads,^d together with their prince Satanail. And similar to them are those who went down as prisoners in their train, who are in the second heaven, imprisoned in great darkness.
 And three of them descended to the earth from the LORD’s Throne onto the place 4

f. A U read “365.” The actual total of the preceding numbers is 364, which is the correct length of the Qumran-En-Jub solar calendar. But other MSS read “364” (B V N B2).

18 a. The Gk. word for “Watchers” is not translated. There is a vast amount of lore concerning these beings. According to Philo Byblos, Sanchuniathon described the creation of “some living beings who had no perception, out of whom intelligent living beings came into existence, and they were called Zophasemin (= Heb. šōpê-šā-mayim, that is, “Watchers of Heaven”). And they were formed like the shape of an egg” (PrEv 1.10.1–2). 1En devotes a lot of attention to the fall of the “Watchers.” For parallels between 1En and 1QapGen, see E. L. Sukenik, The Dead Sea Scrolls of the Hebrew University (ed. N. Avigad and Y. Yadin; Jerusalem, 1955), pp. 16f. In 3En the ’irîn and qaddišîn are found in the Council of the Almighty. These must be unfallen “Watchers.” They are law-enforcement officers who stand in the presence of the Judge—whn ’yryn qdššyn ’wmdyn l’nyv kšw’ryn l’ny hšwpt (3En 28:8). In the Book of John the Evangelist, the angels seduced by Satan are in the fifth heaven, a significant link with 2En.

b. After the word ounyla, “dejected,” A has a line and a half which had to be crossed out before continuing with the correct lica ikh, “their faces.”

[A]

4 Thus she goes in also by the western gates. And she completes the year, 5 365 days. •

6 With four exceptional ones she goes in the year.

That is why they are excepted, outside heaven and the year;
and in the number of the days they are not counted, for they exceed the duration of a year—2 new moons in her augmentation,

7 [two other new moons in her diminution]. • When the western gates are completed, then she turns around and goes to the eastern ones with her light. Thus she goes, day and night, in a cycle, her orbit similar to heaven, and the chariot on which she ascends is a wind, passing along, pulling her chariot, 8 with her flying spirits, six wings to each angel. •
This is the account of the moon.

17

1 In the middle of the heaven I saw armed troops, worshipping God with tympani and pipes and unceasing voices,

(And I was delighted, listening).

18 5th heaven.

1 And the men picked me up from there and carried me away to the fifth heaven.
And I saw there many armies and Grigori. And [their] appearance was like the appearance of a human being, and their size was larger than that of large giants.

2 And their faces were dejected, and the silence of their mouths . . .
And there was no liturgy (taking place in the fifth heaven). And I said to the men who were with me, "For what reason are they so dejected, and their faces miserable, and their mouths silent? And (why) is there no liturgy

3 in this heaven?" • And the men answered me, "These are the Grigori, 200 princes of whom turned aside, 200

walking in their train,

4 and they descended to the earth,

Gen 6:1-4

The break comes exactly at the end of fol. 628r. in U. This suggests that the copy was being made from U, but at this point the scribe lost his place. He does not seem to have resumed at the top of a later column.

c. Forbes's (APOT, vol. 2, pp. 439f.) "the Lord of light" is to be rejected. Such titles are not used. "Lord" is never modified in 2En. The reading derives solely from P, gā sta, misread as an abbreviation of svēta. But all other MSS which preserve the passage (it is much abbreviated in V N) read simply the numeral .Š. (= 200).

d. The MSS differ in their estimates of the scale of this rebellion. J P R name Satanail as the ringleader. (1En names Senayaza [6:3: 9:7] but also Azazel [9:6].) J P (but not R!) accuse only "three of them" of the ultimate sin. It is hard to know what to do with B's dvě knjaza i dvěsti khodivšikhū vo slēdi ikhū, "two princes and two hundred walking in their train." The last detail (two hundred) is known from 1En 6:6 along with several other substantial details of the episode. The whole story is merely another version of the legend, but hardly intelligible without a knowledge of the more ample variants. 2En 18:5 (lacking in the shorter MSS) is so close to 1En 9:9 that it may be taken as original, showing that the shorter recension has censored out such details, not that the longer recension has interpolated the text, in this place at least. A U, however, read .Š. (200) twice.

[J]

Ermon.^e And they broke the promise on the shoulder^f of Mount Ermon. And they saw the daughters of men, how beautiful they were; and they took wives for themselves, and the earth was defiled by their deeds.

Who (and the wives of men created great evil) in the entire time of this age acted lawlessly and practiced miscegenation and gave birth to giants and great monsters and great enmity.

And that is why God has judged them with a great judgment; and they mourn their brothers, and they will be outraged on the great day of the LORD.” •And I said to the Grigori, “I have seen your brothers and their deeds and their torments (and) their great (prayers); and I have prayed for them. But the LORD has sentenced them under the earth^g until heaven and earth are ended forever.” •And I said, “Why are you waiting for your brothers? And why don’t you perform the liturgy before the face of the LORD? Start up your liturgy, and perform the liturgy before the face of the LORD,^h so that you do not enrage your LORD (God) to the limit.”

And they responded to my recommendation, and they stood in four regiments in this heaven. And behold, while I was standing with those men, 4 trumpets trumpeted in unison with a great sound, and the Grigori burst into singing in unison. And their voice rose in front of the face of the LORD, piteously and touchingly.

19 |About the taking of Enoch to the 6th heaven. Word “18.”|

And those men took me from there, and they carried me up to the 6th heaven. And I saw there 7 groups of angels, brilliant and very glorious. And their faces were more radiant than the radiance of the sun, and there was no difference between their faces or in their dimensions or in the style of their clothing.^a

And these groups carry out and carefully study the movements of the stars, and the revolution of the sun and the phases of the moon, and the well-being of the cosmos.

And when they see any evil activity, they put the commandments and instructions in order, and the sweet choral singing^c and every kind of glorious praise. These are the archangels who are over the angels; and they harmonize all existence, heavenly and earthly; and angels who are over seasons and years, and angels who are over rivers and the ocean, and angels who are over the fruits of the earth and over every kind of grass, and who give every kind of food to every kind of living thing; and angels who record all human souls, and all their deeds,^d and their lives before the face of the LORD.

e. Mount Hermon as the scene of this wickedness probably goes back to a polemic against the cult of Ba'al-Harmon. See my note in BASOR 198 (1970), 41. It probably has a reflex in the god Hārām-bêt-’ēl of Elephantine. Vincent (La Religion des Judéo-araméens à Éléphantine [Paris, 1937] pp. 593–621) draws attention to the motif of sexual relations between divine beings and women as a link between this cult and the use of the word “Hermon” in the Enoch corpus: “Il est vraisemblable que si l’auteur du livre d’Hénoch a placé cette scène du serment des anges sur le sommet de l’Hermon, c’est précisément parce qu’une pratique de serment rituel avait rendu celui-ci célèbre” (p. 602).

f. A: na ramē. 1En 6:6 says that the oath was sworn on the summit eis tēn koryphēn of Mount Hermon. B has the interesting reading na arame. There are many possible explanations of these variants. A major shift from the source in 1En is the inversion of the oath; originally the fallen angels swore to sin. Here “they broke the promise.”

g. Since A and U confirm the reading “under the earth” found only hitherto in longer MSS (it is not in V N, hence lacking in Charles’s B text in APOT), its genuineness cannot be doubted, although it simply does not fit the cosmography of the rest of the book, and even contradicts this very ch., which locates the other fallen angels in the second heaven. According to Plato (Phaedrus 248e–249b, 257a, 615a, b) the location of souls between incarnations is hypo gēs.

h. The reading of A U, “in the name of fire,” vo imja ogne, is a corruption of “in front of the Lord.” MSS of the longer recension agree in prēd lice Gospodne. Since gn is a common abbreviation for “LORD,” corruption to “fire” is readily explained. The preposition in this “biblical” phrase, and they broke the promise on the shoulder of Mount Hermon,

[A]

5 to defile themselves with human wives. •

- 6 And, when they had defiled themselves, the LORD condemned them. And these ones mourn for their brothers and for the outrage 7 which has happened.” •But I, I said to the Grigori, “I, I have seen your brothers and I have understood their accomplishments and I knew their prayers; and I have prayed for them. And now the LORD has sentenced them under the earth until 8 heaven and earth are ended. •But why are you waiting for your brothers?
And why don’t you perform the liturgy before the face of the LORD? Start up the former liturgy. Perform the liturgy in the name of fire, lest you annoy the LORD your God (so that) he throws you down from this place.” 9 (And they heeded the earnestness of my recommendation, and they stood in four regiments in heaven. And behold,) while I was standing, they sounded with 4 trumpets in unison, and the Grigori began to perform the liturgy as with one voice. And their voices rose up into the LORD’s presence.

19 6th heaven.

- 1 And the men took me away from there, and they brought me up to the 6th heaven.
And I saw there 7 angels, grouped together, brilliant and very glorious. And their radiance was like the radiance of the sun when it shines. There was no difference between their faces or in their dimensions or in the mode of their being.
2 These ones regulate, they study the peaceful order of the stars, the birth^b of the sun and the moon.
3 And they are the leaders of the angels and of celestial speech. And they make all celestial life peaceful; and they preserve the commandments and instructions, and sweet voices and singing, every kind of praise and glory.
4 And there are angels over seasons and years, and there are also angels over rivers Rev 16:5
and oceans, angels over fruit and grass, and of everything that breeds;
5 and angels of all people, and all their life they organize and write it down before the face of the LORD.

lipnē Yhwh = enōpion tou Kyriou, varies in translation. It can be prēdū, na, or vo/vūlv and B agrees in reading vo. But how “name” came from “face” is hard to explain. Perhaps it is original, and “in the name of the LORD” became “in the name of fire” in A U and “in (front of) the face of the LORD” in other MSS.

19 a. Where longer MSS have (so)prileloženia odeždi, or the like, shorter MSS present a variety of readings for the first word, some agreeing with those in J P R, some more abstract. V N and other shorter MSS agree that the second word is odežde, but A U have the difficult ōdrūža, which could mean something like “power” but is probably just a mistake.

b. A U agree in roženie. B ičēnie; others khoždenie, “movement,” which is perhaps correct. Yet it is possible that we are here rather close to an astrology, grounded in polytheism. The principle kipjaštim (19:4) suggests growth if not birth. These angels, managers of seasonal fertility, are not far removed from the old nature gods, but acceptable to Jewish-Christian thought because they are now heavenly creatures, subservient to the will of the one true God.

c. This motif, which derives from Isa 6, is common in the apocalypses. They differ widely in the location and scope of this music. In Ascensis it takes place in every heaven. According to Epistula Apostolorum 13 the angels perform the liturgy daily at “the altar of the Father” in the highest heaven.

d. The task of these recording angels is carried out by Enoch himself, according to 2En 43; and 2En 65:4 suggests that God himself keeps a journal of every person’s activities from birth to death. These records will be produced on judgment day (52:15; cf. 40:13).

[J]

And in the midst of them are 7 phoenixes^e and 7 cherubim and 7^f six-winged 6 beings, having but one voice and singing in unison. And their song is not to be reported;^g and the LORD is^h delighted by his footstool.

20 |From there they took Enoch into the 7th heaven. Word “19.”^a

And those men lifted me up from there, and they carried me up to the 7th heaven. 1
And I saw there an exceptionally great light, and all the fiery armies of the great archangels, and the incorporeal forces and the dominions and the origins and the authorities, the cherubim and the seraphim and the many-eyed thrones; (and) 5 {9|P|, 10|R)} regiments and the shining otanim stations.^b And I was terrified, and I trembled with a great fear.

And those men picked me up and led me into their (midst).^c And they said to me, 2
“Be brave, Enoch! Don’t be frightened!”

And they showed (me) the LORD, from a distance, sitting on his exceedingly high 3 throne. For what |is on the 10th heaven, since the LORD is present there? And on the 10th heaven| is God, and it is called in the Hebrew language Aravoth.^d And all the heavenly armies came and stood on the ten steps, corresponding to their ranks, and they did obeisance to the LORD.

And then they went to their places in joy and merriment and in 4 immeasurable light, singing songs with soft and gentle voices, while presenting the liturgy to him gloriously.

21 |About how here the angels left Enoch at the edge of the 7th heaven, and departed from him invisibly. Word “20.”^a

And they do not leave by night, nor depart by day, standing in front of the face 1 of the LORD, and carrying out his will—cherubim and seraphim standing all around his throne, six-winged and many-eyed;^b |and| they cover his entire throne, singing with gentle voice in front of the face of the LORD.

Holy. Holy, Holy, LORD |Lord| Sabaoth,
Heaven and earth are full of his glory.

And when I had seen all these things, those men said to me, “Enoch, up to this 2 point we have been commanded to travel with you.”^c And the men went away from me, and from then on I did not see them anymore. But I, I remained alone at the edge of the seventh heaven. And I became terrified; and I fell on my face, and I said in myself, “Woe to me! What has happened to me?”^d e. This is the only place in all literature where the phoenix is not sui generis. The spelling varies, finikt (R), finizi (P), but funikū (A).

f. In A U the lack of the words “and 7” makes “six-winged” an attribute of “cherubim.” Other MSS (long and short) make the six-winged a third group. Since the “six-winged” are seraphim in Isa 6, these, although not named as such, are probably intended here. I don’t know why Charles says that there were six of each of these (APOT [A] vol. 2, p. 441).

g. By adding mošti (V) or mošno (P), “their song is not possible to describe.” Other texts suggest that it is forbidden.

h. While singular and plural are not always distinguished in the spelling, the MSS tend to agree that “the LORD rejoices,” and the reflexive pronoun shows that this is correct. P, however, adds the preposition po, and both J and P have emu, making the angels rejoice. Instead of raduet, V has velit—“the LORD makes merry”!

20 a. The main differences between the two recensions in this ch. are undoubtedly the result of a revision that incorporated into the antecedent of longer MSS details about three more heavens which are incompatible with the scheme of seven heavens. Even so, the genuine Heb. words which occur in these interpolations show that they are not medieval Slav. notions. The full textual assessment is complicated by the differences between J, P, and R in these details. In addition to 20:3, these farther heavens are mentioned by longer MSS at 21:6–22:1.

At the other extreme, shorter MSS seem incoherent, as if they have been mutilated. In particular, the tradition of ten ranks of angels in the seventh heaven with corresponding lists has a better claim to be authentic than the scheme of ten heavens, even though these details also are now found only in longer MSS. And even then, there are discrepancies. All longer MSS agree in vs. 3 that there are ten “steps” (stepeni) (shorter MSS have no numeral at this point), but in vs. 1 each MS has a

[A]

- 6 And in the midst of them are 7 phoenixes and 7 cherubim, six-winged beings, having but one voice and singing in themselves. Their song is not to be reported; the LORD is delighted by his footstool(s).

20

- 1 And the men lifted me up from there, and they carried me up to the seventh heaven. And I saw a great light, and all the fiery armies of the incorporeal ones, archangels, angels, and the shining otanim stations. And I was terrified, and I trembled. 1 Kgs 22:19; Isa 6; Ezek 1; Rev 4; Col 1:16
- 2 •And the men picked me up with their . . . 2En 1:8
- 3 And they said to me, "Be brave, Enoch! Don't be frightened!"
- 3 And they showed me from a distance the LORD, sitting on his throne. Isa 6:1; Rev 4:2; 5:1; 19:4; 21:3

- And all the heavenly armies assembled, according to rank, advancing and doing obeisance to the LORD.
- 4 And then they withdrew and went to their places in joy and merriment, in immeasurable light, but gloriously serving him . . .

21

- 1 . . . by night, nor departing by day, standing in front of the face of the LORD, carrying out his will—with all the army of cherubim around his throne, never departing, and the six-winged ones covering his throne, singing in front of the face of the LORD. Isa 6:2,3
- 2 And when I had seen all these things, the men went away from me, and from then on I did not see them anymore. They placed me at the edge of heaven, alone. And I became terrified; I fell on my face.

different number of "regiments" (polükovü)—5 in J, 9 in P, 10 in R. Elsewhere the term "rank" (činiü) or "order" is used. Ten is probably correct, not only because of the ten steps in vs. 3, but because there is a Jewish and Christian tradition that there are ten or nine ranks of beings in the highest heaven. For the former see Maimonides, Mishneh Torah (S. 1); for the latter see below. Both Jewish and Christian lists vary extensively in both the identity and the hierarchical sequence of these ten (or nine). We cannot assume that chance lists are meant to give relative ranking.

b. The difficulties experienced by Slav. scribes with these quite genuine Heb. words are shown in the MSS. The worst readings are those of V N (ostanimskoe) and P (ioanitskoe) and B (serafimskoe). U, whether by accident or knowledge, is closest to the Heb. (špānim) with ofanimiskoe (it has added the Slav. adjectival ending to the Heb. plural), while A has the variant othanimskoe; and

T
J R are still close with oanim'skoe, whose writing accounts for P as an error requiring no comment.

c. The readings of A U, vü stredü, is unintelligible. Either * sled- (J P read slédü), "in their train," that is, Enoch followed the two "men," or sred- (R reads srédju), "in their midst," that is, Enoch was taken right in among the regiments listed in vs. 1.

d. Shorter MSS lack the reference to the Heb. Aravot (here J is better than P's aravatü) here and in 22:1. Since these passages are missing from R as well, they are clearly interpolations.

21 a. Shorter MSS have no indication of any ch. break at this point. Although J does not have a ch. heading (these are found only in P) it does have a break, in spite of the continuous syntax.

b. The attribute "many-eyed" is only in J P, and, like the following trisagion, is probably an intrusion from Christian liturgy.

c. It is hard to tell if the farewell speech of "the men" is an addition to longer MSS or an omission from shorter ones.

d. Only longer MSS have an expression of misery at this point. All have it in vs. 4.

[J]

And the LORD sent one of his glorious ones, the archangel Gabriel.^e And he said 3 to me, "Be brave, Enoch!^f Don't be frightened! Stand up, and come with me and stand in front of the face of the LORD forever."

And I answered him and said, "Woe to me,^g my LORD!^h My soul has departed 4 from me from fear and horror. And call (to me) the two men who brought me to this place, because I have put my confidenceⁱ in them, and with them I will go before the face of the LORD." • (And Gabriel carried me up, like a leaf carried 5 up by the wind. | He moved me along) and put me down in front of the face of the LORD. • And I saw the eighth heaven, which is called in the Hebrew language 6 Muzaloth, the changer of the seasons, of dry and of wet, and the 12 zodiacs, which are above the seventh heaven. And I saw the ninth heaven, which in the Hebrew language is called Kukhavim, where the heavenly houses of the 12 zodiacs are.^j

22 |In the 10th heaven the archangel Michael brought Enoch in front of the face of the LORD. Word "21."|

And on the 10th heaven, Aravoth,^b I saw the view of the face of the LORD, like 1 iron made burning hot in a fire |and| brought out, and it emits sparks and is incandescent.^c Thus even I saw the face of the LORD.^d But the face of the LORD is not to be talked about, it is so very marvelous and supremely awesome and supremely frightening. • |And| who am I to give an account of the incomprehensible^e 2 being of the LORD, and of his face, so extremely strange and indescribable? And how many are his commands,^f and his multiple voice, and the LORD's throne, supremely great and not made by hands, and the choir stalls all around him, the cherubim and the seraphim armies, and their never-silent singing.
Who can give an account of his beautiful appearance, never changing 3 and indescribable, and his great glory? • And I fell down flat and did obedience to the LORD.^g • And the LORD, with his own mouth, said to me,^h "Be 5

e. Gabriel's role here resembles that of Michael in 22:6. In the earliest Jewish and Christian Midrashim on biblical themes there is a decided preference for Michael as the Lord's chief executive officer—arkhistratig in 2En. Almost any unnamed angel in the Bible is likely to be identified with him. According to 1QapGen (22:1, 2), the pālīt of Gen 14:13 who brought the report to Abraham was a shepherd whom Abraham had given to Lot. In other Midrashim it is King Og. According to PRE it was Michael. In ApAb it is Michael who conducts the patriarch to the gate of heaven; cf. the role of Michael in transporting Melkizedek in 2En 72 (longer MSS). In 3Bar Michael is the Mediator (cf. 2En 33:10) who conveys the prayers of the righteous to God and who takes back rewards to the faithful. And so on. In 1En it is Michael who does the honors, and even in 2En, Gabriel seems to have a lesser role, and is called merely "one of his glorious ones," but longer MSS add "archangel." In view of the popularity of the cult of Michael in the Christian East, his prominence in 2En does not help to settle the religious setting of this document. But "Gabriel" could come from a Christian hand, at least when he ousts Michael, as in A and U's variant readings in ch. 72. Gabriel as the Christian favorite is already competing for Michael's honors in Origen's claim that Gabriel supervises wars (On First Principles 1.8.1).

f. In V Gabriel addresses Enoch as "youth!"

g. MSS of both long and short traditions present the alternatives ouvy mně. "Woe to me!" (V N B²

J—oukhi of R is equivalent to ouvy and vo mně, "in me" (A U B P). The latter is meaningless, but should not be rejected as a corruption (Vaillant, Secrets, p. 22). It is undoubtedly authentic. Its association with "my lord" points to the Hebrew bi 'ādōnī ('ādōnāy). The exclamation bi, entreaty rather than dismay, is used twelve times in OT, always followed by "my lord" and nearly always speech initial. In the LXX Pentateuch it is translated deomai (plural Gen 43:20) but elsewhere by an absurd misunderstanding of bi, en emoi. This misunderstanding is found here in 2En. Either 2En has repeated the mistake of LXX (Heb. original) or it has reproduced a LXX text (Gk. original). False correction of "in me" to "Woe to me" followed inevitably within the Slav. transmission.

h. It is remarkable that Enoch addresses the archangel as "my LORD," the title used exclusively for God. A U lack "my."

i. Most MSS read upošavakh. "I have hoped"; but A povédakh.

j. Vs. 6 is lacking in R, the other longer recension. Its status as an interpolation is thus different from material which R shares with J and P.

22 a. A U have the same ch. heading twice.

b. Shorter MSS lack these secondary references to the tenth heaven.

c. The state of the MSS betray the embarrassment of scribes over this attempt to describe the appearance of the Lord. Two tendencies may be

[A]

- 3 And the LORD sent one of his glorious ones to me, Gabril. And he said to me, "Be brave, Enoch! Don't be frightened! Stand up, and come with me and stand in front of the face of the LORD forever."
 4 And I answered him and said, "(Woe) to me, LORD! My soul has departed from me from fear . . . And call to me the two men who brought me to this place, because I have spoken to them, and with them I will go before the face of the LORD." •And Gabril carried me up, like a leaf carried up by the 6 wind. He moved me along and put me down in front of the face of the LORD. •

22 About the appearance of the LORD.^a

- 1 I saw the LORD.

His face was strong and very glorious and terrible.

- 2 •Who (is) to give an account of the dimensions of the being of the face of the LORD, strong and very terrible? Or his many-eyed ones and many-voiced ones, and the supremely great throne of the LORD, not made by hands, or those who are in attendance all around him, the cherubim and 3 the seraphim armies, or how unvarying and indescribable •and never-silent and glorious is his service.
 4 •And I fell down flat and did 5 obeisance to the LORD. •And the LORD, with his own mouth, called to me, "Be observed. One tries to expurgate the physical imagery, especially the comparison with scintillating iron. This has been heavily censored in short MSS, but V N have omitted vss. 1-3 altogether; hence their absence from the B text in APOT. V N also go on to say that Enoch fell on his face and did not even look at the Lord. The survival of the same details in both recensions at 39:3 shows that the comparison with hot iron is original; but here (22:1) it is lacking in all shorter MSS. This shows that sometimes J P might be the only MSS preserving authentic readings. In contrast shorter MSS have moved toward more abstract ideas (e.g. "the extent of the Lord's being"), yet even here the MSS falter. A, for instance, seems to read iobijaū with an illegible letter, like fi, above the omega. The spelling of U suggests that an infinitive was intended, with the result "who am I [or who is able] to describe the extent [amplexus] of the Lord's face as it is [suštee]." The latter is the participle (used as an adjective meaning "actual"), whereas all longer MSS have suštestvo, "being" in the abstract sense of "existence." Vaillant (Secrets, p. 26) restores sušteie (ousia, substantia) as an intermediate reading.

But it is more likely that behind this language lies mystical speculation about the physical size of God (see ch. 39).

R is sufficiently distinct to be reproduced separately: "And I saw the LORD in the face. And his face is strong and very glorious [here R agrees with A U], marvelous and supremely frightening [-užas-, where A U have straš-], terrible and horrifying [here R has pitranno, where J P have prestrasno]."

d. Cf. the face of fire seen by Jacob at the top of the ladder in LadJac. In the Book of John the Evangelist Satan's face becomes like heated iron.

e. Longer MSS incline to "the way of negation," using neispovedimoe (three times in J P but also in A U at the end of vs. 3). Yet the emphasis is not that God is unknowable, or even inconceivable, but rather indescribable, and then, not because it is impossible, but because it is forbidden. The Slav. connotations of ispovedati are with eksomologein but neispovedimoe is closer to anekdiēgētos. J R also have neobētoe ("not to be betrayed?") and P reads neizrečēnoe (afatos, anekfrastos).

f. J P R agree in the reading mnogo-učēnii ego, "his abundant knowledge" (multum eruditum), which is probably inferior to A U mnogo-očnoe. The former is not suitable, since the connections of učenie are with imparted teaching rather than inherent wisdom. Hence "instructions" (APOT, vol. 2, p. 443). But here the narrator has retreated, as biblical writers so often do, from describing God to depicting his splendid supernal setting (vs. 2).

g. In V N the sequence of events is different: Vss. 8-10 come before vs. 5, and vs. 11 follows vs. 7 (see APOT B).

h. The Lord's speech of welcome is identical in all MSS, except for the verb. A U have "called me"; J P R "said to me"; while V N read "called me and said."

[J]

brave, Enoch! Don't be frightened! Stand up, and stand in front of my face forever." • And Michael, the LORD's archistratig,ⁱ lifted me up and brought me in front of the face of the LORD. And the LORD said to his servants,^j sounding them out, "Let Enoch join in and stand in front of my face forever!"^k • And the LORD's glorious ones did obeisance and said, "Let Enoch yield^l in accordance with your word, O LORD!"

And the LORD said to Michael, "Go, and extract^m Enoch from [his] earthly clothing. And anoint him with my delightful oil, and put him into the clothes of my glory."ⁿ • And so Michael did, just as the LORD had said to him. He anointed me^o and he clothed me. And the appearance of that oil is greater than the greatest light, and its ointment is like sweet dew, and its fragrance myrrh; and it is like the rays of the glittering sun. • And I looked at myself, and I had become like one of his glorious ones,^p and there was no observable difference.^q

i. Slav. "archistratig." Michael's military functions are anciently attested. In IQM he is the one who overthrows the Kittim. In spite of the title used in 2En, there are no combat motifs in this book. A U have replaced the title with "great archangel." But arkhistratigū (J P R B V N B²) is certainly correct. A's variant comes from Dan 11:1 (ho aggelos ho megas), where the adjective is elative, making Michael at least an archangel, if not the senior one.

j. This act of the Lord in consulting the heavenly assembly is very significant. But it is difficult to know where to place it in the history of ideas. The ancient Mesopotamians believed it was impossible for a human to gain permanent admittance to the community of divine beings. Gilgamesh is asked,

Now who will call the gods for you to assembly, that you may find the life you are seeking (Gilgamesh 11:197f.).

The motif recurs in many stories of futile attempts of desecrate or presumptuous mortals to scale the height of heaven, or of the achievement of a transient visit as the limit of possibility. The discussion in the divine assembly provides the starting point of many OT oracles, and prophets participate in some way, if only in a vision.

The scene in 2En 22 retains quite a lot of this mythology. There is no real debate. The Lord makes a proposal and the angels concur. The verb iskusiti/iskusati, found in both recensions, is strange, since it means "test" or "tempt." The question is whether a human as such should be admitted or whether Enoch should become an angel. The sequel shows that it is the latter. Note the backdrop of Gilgamesh:

When the gods created mankind death for mankind they set aside life in their own hands retaining (10.3:3-5).

Ps 115:16 also affirms that

Heaven belongs to Yahweh
while he gave the earth to mankind.

The inevitability of death is one thing; possible admittance to heaven after death is another. In the case of Enoch the impression is given that entrance to heaven is possible only if death is circumvented. On the other hand, the events in ch. 22 might secure a release from the body essentially the same as death. In Egyptian Christian tradition, as found in the History of Joseph the Carpenter (ch. 31), in order to stress the universality of death, Jesus teaches that even Enoch and Elijah will have to die in due course. Note the introductory comment to the extract from 2En in MP, "he is still alive."

k. In a prayer to Boris and Gleb, the martyred princes, Yaroslav the Wise says, Blagodatiju živa esta i gospodevi predištoita, "By grace you (two) are alive, and stand in front of the Lord" (Skazanie o Borise i Glebe). Note the contrast of the native idiom here with the Semitism in 2En—stoati prědu licě Ėi. The persistence of this simple but primitive and Hebraic anthropomorphism "in front of the face of God" is all the more striking since the movement to more abstract language is already in full swing in LXX. Thus Pss 17:15; 63:3 become in Gk. "to appear before God" (LXX 16:15; 62:3) instead of "to see the face of God."

l. The state of the MSS at vs. 7 shows that the scribes, if not the angels, were embarrassed by the proposal. In short MSS the response is simple, "Let him ascend," using the same word as the question. Longer MSS have become more ceremonial. But in J R the reply is ustupit. Since MSD (vol. 3, p. 1291) gives otstupit' as a meaning of ustupiti. P's reading (otstupit') could be no more than a gloss, although mistaken, since it seems to mean "retreat" or "depart," "withdraw," while da ustupit, "let him keep away," or any other of its several meanings, does not fit since "in accordance with your word" implies acquiescence.

m. The imagery of extracting a person from his garment is close to the terminology of Dan 7:15, "my spirit was upset inside its sheath." The same idea is found in 1QapGen 2:10, wnšmy lgw ndnh', "and my breath within its sheath." Aram. nědān is a loan from Persian nidāni, "container."

n. In 2En there is no explicit talk about soul and body. But the identification (or at least a simile) is made in the 1076 Sbornik (p. 237, ll. 5-6): tělo bo naše jesti aky riza, "for our body is like a garment." Enoch is not simply liberated from his "clothing"; he has to be clothed upon (2Cor 5:3). In Rev the saints wear white robes (Rev 6:11; 7:9, 13, 14); these are not identified as a transformed body, but they are white by virtue of Christ's atonement, a need not recognized in 2En. In the Chaldean oracles the soul, as it travels through the planetary spheres, puts on successive garments corresponding to the qualities of the stars.

o. "The clothes of my glory" is a transparent Hebraism.

q. There is not enough detail about this chrisom to betray the influence of baptismal practice. The symbolism is compatible with Christian ritual, but

[A]

- brave, Enoch! Don't be frightened! Stand up, and stand in front of my face 6 forever." •And Michael, the LORD's greatest archangel, lifted me up and brought me in front of the face of the LORD. And the LORD sounded out his servants. The 7 LORD said, "Let Enoch come up and stand in front of my face forever!" •And the glorious ones did obeisance and said, "Let him come up!"
 8 •The LORD said to Michael, "Take Enoch, and extract (him) from the earthly clothing. And anoint him with the delightful oil, and put (him) into 9 the clothes of glory." •And Michael extracted me from my clothes. He anointed me with the delightful oil; and the appearance of that oil is greater than the greatest light, its ointment is like sweet dew, and its fragrance like myrrh; 10 and its shining is like the sun. •And I gazed at all of myself, and I had become like one of the glorious ones, and there was no observable difference. And the

Zech 3:4,5;
 2Ezra 2:39,45;
 2Cor 5:3,4

Rev 3:4,5,18;
 4:4; 6:11;
 7:9,13,14

Mt 13:43

there is no washing. It is the effulgent oil that gives Enoch the radiant countenance, dangerous to human beholders. This motif seems to have been influenced by the legend of Moses, whose shining face was a reflection of God's magnificent glory.

Philip, in his prayer before martyrdom, and evidently anticipating the heavenly condition (cf. Acts 6:15), says, "Clothe me in thy glorious robe and thy seal of light that ever shineth" (James, ANT, p. 450). Cf. Mt 13:43. Origen (On First Principles 2.3.7) speaks of the best and purest spirits, who must have some kind of body, being changed according to their degree of merit into an ethereal condition, and interprets "change" in 1Cor 15:52 as "shining with light."

p. At Qumran the souls of the righteous after death live with God "like angels" while the souls of the wicked go to join the spirits of Belial (1QS 4:6-8, 11-13; 1QM 12:1-7). This could indicate little more than their final location. The Christians resurrected are "like the angels in heaven" (Mt 22:30); but again this touches only the question of sexuality.

Epiphanius' account of Ebionite Christology casts Christ in a role not unlike that of Enoch in 2En, although the latter does not use adoptionist terminology.

Note the following: "They say that he was not begotten of God the Father, but created as one of the archangels . . . that he rules over the angels and all the creatures of the Almighty" (AdvHaer 30.16.4f.). It is not clear whether this act of "creation" explains the origination of Christ; but it does not say precisely that Christ was one of the originally created archangels, but made (to be) like one of them. Elsewhere in Ebionite teaching, according to the same Epiphanius, Jesus was constituted as Christ by the union of the Holy Spirit with the man. In any case the installation of Enoch does not seem to be contaminated at any point by Christian ascension doctrine. It is hard to tell how far 2En goes in the transmutation of a human to an angelic being. In the Christian synthesis with Gk. belief in the immortality of the soul as the main thing, the resurrection of the body dwindled in significance; at least the body was spiritualized so as to be hardly human any longer. This point could have been reached by Origen, although what he actually believed is hard to retrieve behind Rufinus' translation. To judge from the Gk. fragment preserved by Justinian (Ep. ad Mennam), Rufinus has accurately represented Origen's views in On First Principles 1.6.2. A righteous soul may merit "the rank of angel." Jerome is, accordingly, probably perverse when he accuses Origen of "mixing everything up" (Ep. ad Avitum 3) by teaching "that one who is now a man may in another world become a demon," while a demon may become a man or an angel. He does not specifically accuse Origen of teaching that a man may become an angel, but complains about the idea of changing an archangel into a devil. Here Jerome goes too far, for Origen is on safe scriptural ground. He has avoided the trap in his statement that "the end is always like the beginning" (1.6.2) because he has recoiled from the logical inference that God originally made demons as such and that they "inherit this realm of darkness . . . from the necessity of their creation" (1.5.3). On the contrary, the differentiation in the hierarchy of moral beings is entirely due to the freedom of their rational natures. Origen falls back on the Bible when he expounds the fall of Lucifer (see also 1. Preface. 6). But he is in real difficulty by regarding all three species of rational creatures as having a common mode of being in moral freedom, especially since he regards this as constitutionally all-important. For, placing man in between angel and demon, he sees him capable of improvement or deterioration. Having admitted the fall of Satan, he finds it hard to teach the indefectibility of the loyal angels. Having admitted that man may be restored to his former state, it is hard for him to exclude demons from the same possibility. Hence his alleged heresy that Satan would be saved.

Enoch not only attains the rank (i.e. location and function) of an angel; he becomes like the members of the highest echelon in the seventh heaven. If Origen had known this tradition, it might have suited him to quote it. The problem seems to be behind the obscure language of 2En 31. It is not clear how much the events in 2En 18 imply the salvation of the angels in the fifth heaven. Those in the second heaven don't appear to have such a prospect; and all humans, blessed and cursed, are in between, in the third heaven.

q. The emphasis is physical. His face is incandescent (37:2); he has lost all desire for food (56:2), an effect ascribed directly to the oil of glory (but 42:5 speaks of feasting in eternal life); he does not seem to need sleep (23:3; cf. Rev 4:8); and there are statements elsewhere that suggest that he has become omniscient. In Gilgamesh (1.4.34. cf. 1. 29) and in the Bible (Gen 3:22) it is the acquisition

[J]

And the LORD summoned one of his archangels, Vrevoil^r by name, who was swifter^s in wisdom than the other archangels, and who records all the LORD's deeds. •And the LORD said to Vrevoil, "Bring 11 out the books from my storehouses, and fetch a pen for speed-writing, and give it to Enoch and read him the books."^t (And Vrevoil hurried and brought me the books,) a knife(?), and ink(?). And he gave me the pen for speed-writing from his hand.

23 |About Enoch's writing; how he wrote about his marvelous travels and what the heavens look like. And he himself wrote 360 and 6 books. Word "22."|^a

And he was telling me all the things of heaven^b and earth and sea and all the elements and the movements and their courses, and the living thunder, the sun and the moon and the stars, their courses^c and their changes, and seasons and years and days and hours, and the coming of the clouds and the blowing of the winds, and the number of the angels and the songs of the armed troops; and every kind of human thing, and every kind of language (and) singing, and human life and rules and instructions and sweet-voiced singing, and everything that it is appropriate to learn. And Vrevoil instructed me for 30 days and 30 nights, and his mouth never stopped speaking. And, as for me, I did not rest,^d writing all the symbols and all the creatures.^e •And when I had finished 30 days and 30 nights, Vrevoil said to me, "These things, whatever I have taught you, whatever you have learned, and whatever we have written down, you sit down |and| write—all the souls of men, whatever of them are not yet born, and their places, prepared for eternity.^f

For all the souls are prepared for eternity, before the composition of the earth."^g •And I sat down for a second period of 30 days and 30 nights, and I wrote everything accurately. And I wrote^h 366 books.^h

24 |About the great secrets of God, which God revealed and related to Enoch; and he spoke with him face to face. Word "23."|

of wisdom or knowledge that makes a human "like God."

r. P's reading Pravail is deviant. The other numerous variations in spelling are not material. The name is otherwise unknown, and remains unexplained. As an archangel, he resembles Uriel, and the names are not unlike. As the scholar archangel, is Vrevoil modeled upon Thoth = Hermes = Mercury in the Egyptian-Phoenician tradition as reported by Sanchuniathon (Philo Byblos—Eusebius)? According to Diodorus, Thoth was scribe to Osiris, and tomb paintings often illustrate this. The tradition is that Sanchuniathon obtained his theology from the books of Thoth, just as Enoch got his from Vrevoil. Vrevoil's epithet here (swift in wisdom) agrees with Hermes' reputation for nimble wit. But the idea that a human learns the secrets of existence (or even acquires power) by gaining access to the heavenly tablets (of destiny) is an ancient one in Mesopotamia (the Adapa myth has much in common with the Enoch legends). And Eusebius connects Manetho's history with Thō(y)th, who inscribed it first on some pillars in the land of Seriad, and after the cataclysm they were translated into Gk.

s. The epithet reminds us of māhīr, an epithet of the greatest scribes, beginning with Ezra.

t. The apocryphal documents contain numerous references to books in heaven; these ideas evolved out of the OT.

23 a. The commencement of a new ch. here in longer MSS is not suitable. Other MSS do not provide a break when Vrevoil is introduced at 22:10. But A begins a new section in the middle of 23:1.

b. The reading "LORD" (A U) is secondary, since other short MSS agree with long ones in the series "heaven and earth and sea."

c. The longer list of topics in J P R has high claim for authenticity. A U represent an intermediate stage of abbreviation between this and such MSS as V N (compare B in APOT, vol. 2, pp. 443f.). In contrast to the orderly list in J, the text of A U—"earthly commands and instructions and sweet-voiced singing"—seems garbled and, in fact, unintelligible compared with vs. 2 in J. Note that P has lost by simple scribal error the reference to clouds.

The reference to "the Hebrew language" is a

[A]

LORD summoned Vereveil, one of his archangels, who was wise,

- 11 who records all the LORD's deeds. •And the LORD said to Vereveil, "Bring out the books from the storehouses, and give a pen to Enoch and read him the books." And Vereveil hurried and brought me the books mottled with myrrh. And he gave me the pen from his hand.

23

- 1 And he was telling me all the deeds of the LORD, the earth and the sea, and all the elements and the courses and the life, and the changes of the years and the movements of the days, and the earthly commands and instructions, and the sweet-voiced singing and the coming of the clouds and the blowing of the winds,

- 2 and the Hebrew language, every kind of language of the new song of the armed troops, and everything that it is appropriate to learn.
3 And Vereveil instructed me for 30 days and 30 nights, and his mouth never stopped speaking. And, as for me, I did not rest for 30 days and 4 30 nights, writing all the symbols. •And when I had finished, Vereveil said to me,

"You sit down; write everything that I have explained to you."

- 5
6 •And I sat down for a second period of 30 days and 30 nights, and I wrote accurately. And I expounded 300 and 60 books.

Mt 25:34

24

gloss peculiar to A and U. Vs. 2 refers to "all the languages."

d. The agreement of A U with J R (against P), and its fuller reading contrasted with the other short MSS, restores a better text. It makes it clearer that the work was done in two stages of thirty days each.

e. R and J agree in the addition "and all the creatures," implying the compiling of lists of created things. The term znamenia suggests that the copyist copied omen texts.

f. Short MSS lack the details about human souls and their destinies. The phrase "formation of the earth" (zemlūnago) is reminiscent of Mt 24:34, and could be a Christian gloss. But the passage implies the pre-existence as well as the predestination of all souls. Even Adam existed before he was sent to the earth (ch. 32). A knowledgeable Christian scribe would recognize here the views of Origen on the subject condemned by the Second Council of Constantinople. That is, short MSS look more like orthodox censorship than long ones look like Christian interpolation.

g. A U: ispovědakh, "expounded"; other MSS simply izpisakh, napisakh, or simply pisakh, "wrote (down)."

h. The recensions divide consistently over the number of books produced, whether 360 (short MSS) or 366 (long). When Popov published the 1679 Poltava copy (P) in 1880, he searched for evidence of the earlier circulation of this hitherto unknown work. He found a book called "Enoch" mentioned in a list of "disapproved" (i.e. non-canonical) books in a 14th-cent. MS; and a later list mentions: Enokhū—o Enosē, čto bylū na pjatōmū nevesi i ipisalū 300 knigū, "Enoch—about Enoch, who was at the fifth [!] heaven and wrote 300 books." I have not been able to confirm this information.

There is a deviant Enoch tradition in the Book of St. John, allegedly Bogomil. In this work it is Satan who creates the world, and the angels who came to Enoch were his emissaries. They took him up into the firmament to behold his [Satan's] godhead. "And he commanded pen and ink to be given him, and he sat down and wrote 67 books" (James, ANT, p. 190).

[J]

And the Lord called me; and he said to me, "Enoch, sit to the left of me^a with Gabriel." And I did obeisance to the LORD.

And the LORD spoke to me: "Enoch [Beloved], whatever you see and whatever things are standing still or moving about were brought to perfection by me. And I myself will explain it to you.

Before anything existed at all, from the very beginning, whatever exists I created^d from the non-existent, and from the invisible the visible.

[Listen, Enoch, and pay attention to these words of mine!] For not even to my angels^d have I explained my secrets, nor related to them their origin, nor my endlessness (and inconceivableness), as I devise the creatures, as I am making them known to you today. •For, before any visible things had come into existence,

I, the ONE,^f moved around in the invisible things, like the sun, from east to west and from west to east.

But the sun has rest in himself; yet I did not find rest,^h because everything was not yet created. And I thought up the ideaⁱ of establishing a foundation, to create a visible creation.

25 [God explains to Enoch how the visible and the invisible come down from the very lowest darkness. Word "24."]^a

24 a. In 2En 24:1 Enoch sits at God's left hand, next to Gabriel. No explanation is given of what he is doing there, or why he is on the left. Nothing is said about who is on the right-hand side. The position assigned to Enoch elsewhere is different: "standing in front of the face of the Lord."

b. This chapter heading, a rarity in A U, is in the text of A, followed by a large letter. A Gk. pi is in the margin of U.

c. The genre of recasting a biblical story into autobiographical form is already present in the reminiscences of Wisdom in Prov 8. But Wisdom describes creation as carried out by God. God's own account is given by the author of Job 38.

d. Cf. 40:3. In the NT the mystery that the angels are curious about is the Gospel. Here it is the story of creation. This is the only subject on which the Lord himself discourses to Enoch. According to Epistula apostolorum (19) believers have privileges denied to angels.

e. Vaillant's "birth" (Secrets, p. 29), which is not a suitable word for the origin of angels in any work remotely connected with the Bible, comes from a purely conjectural emendation, vüstavlenija, behind which he sees anastasis.

f. The texts of the two recensions are not the same at this vital point; but the picture is not altogether clear in either of them. Both agree (vs. 5) that creation arose from a restlessness or lack of equilibrium in God himself at the very first, in contrast to the stability of the sun's movement. J P R seem closer to the doctrine of creation ex nihilo than the others, since they say more absolutely "I was (the only) One," whereas A U say "like one (of them?)." V is quite clear in its reading, "like one of the invisible things." Even so, the impression remains that God was not the only existent being or thing from the very first, although each recension gives this impression in its own way. Both agree that God made the existent out of the non-existent, the visible out of the non-visible. So the invisible things coexisted with God before he began to make anything. (Contrast Christian belief that God made all things visible and invisible.) Vs. 4 is quite explicit on this point: Before any of the visible things had come into existence, God was moving around among the invisible things.

g. 2En's cosmology does not derive all existence from one original substance, such as water (Thales) or fire (Heraclitus), or a common indeterminate substance (Anaximander) or mist (Anaximenes); nor from four: fire, air, water, earth. Even so, an attempt is made to account for these elements, and the idea of mixture is present. But the biblical process of differentiation and separation is still recognized. Unlike the original, this version of Gen 1 gives prominence to fire, but it is quite derivative.

Some other unidentified mythology is given more room than Gk. physics. Out of the original invisible things, God calls two beings: Adoil, from whom is born the great light, and Arukhas, from whom comes the darkness. Water is made by thickening a mixture of light and darkness. But light, if anything, is the great elemental substance.

h. The primal restlessness of God contrasts with the main trends of philosophy, especially those of an absolute idealism, where by definition, God, the perfect being, knows no change, and, of course, has no needs. In gnostic thought, God is perfect rest, and to this restless souls may themselves attain.

That God himself is seeking repose comes out already in Eccl. The restlessness of God is expressed in the age-long quest of Wisdom or of the Holy Spirit for a place of permanent rest. Eccl 24:7 represents Wisdom as seeking anapausis "from generation to generation, passing into holy souls"

[A]

- 1 And the Lord called me; and he placed me to the left of himself closer than Gabriel. And I did obeisance to the LORD. Ex 33:11
- 2 And the LORD spoke to me: "Whatever you see, Enoch, things standing still and moving about and which were brought to perfection by me, I myself will explain it to you. Heb 11:3

About the construction of creation.^b

Before anything existed at all, from the very beginning, whatever is I created from non-being into being, and from the invisible things into the visible.

- 3 •And not even to my angels have I explained my secrets, nor related to them their composition,^c nor my endless and inconceivable creation which I conceived, 1Pet 1:12; Sir 42:17
- 4 as I am making them known to you today. • Before any visible things had come into existence, and the light had not yet opened up, I, in the midst of the light,^g moved around in the invisible things, like one of them, as the sun moves around from east to west and from west to east.
- 5 But the sun has rest; yet I did not find rest, because everything was not yet created. And I thought up the idea of establishing a foundation, to create a visible creation.

25

(WisSol 7:27). Similarly, according to the Pseudo-Clement Homily III 20:2, the Kerygmata Petrou (a Jewish-Christian gnostic work) represents the pre-existent redeemer as spending the ages "changing his form at the same time as his name" until he becomes incarnate in Jesus, and so attains to eternal rest.

According to GHeb, a similar eschatological rest is attained by the Holy Spirit when the Son comes forth, and the Spirit "rests" upon him. The Spirit declares, "You are my rest."

The idea of rest is central in the Pseudo-Clementines, and their ultimate statement about God is "You are rest." Here then is a metaphysical counterpart (God is anapausis) to match the Christian "God is agape (love)."

2En sees the restlessness of God as the fact behind creation. It does not say how (or even whether) the creation satisfied God's need for rest. It seems to be building up for an interpretation of Gen 2:2f, which says that God rested on the seventh day.

The connection with creation is found also in the Apocryphon of John, where it is likened to the restlessness of Sophia at the beginning. This explains "moving over" in Gen 1:2. Wisdom was moving around at the first in the darkness of ignorance.

i. Philo's idea is that God "conceived beforehand the models of its parts, and that out of these he constituted and brought to completion a world discernable only by the mind (Kosmos noētos) and then, with that for a pattern, the world which our senses can perceive" (On the Creation 19). Cf. 24:2, which says that God made the visible out of the invisible.

25 a. If the sources behind this portion of 2En are ancient, it could represent one of the earliest attempts to reconcile the Bible with science. It tries to integrate Gk. physics with Gen 1. Yet it does not have an avowed apologetic intention.

The cosmic-creative processes in 2En can be summarized as follows:

1. Disintegration, of light from Adoil (25:2), of darkness from Arukhas (26:2).

2. Solidification or thickening, the light solidifies into the upper foundation (25:4); the darkness solidifies into the lower foundation (26:3). In fact, this process of solidification (consolidation) seems to take place in two stages. To judge from 26:1 Arukhas is solidified from the original invisible things; but ch. 25 does not begin with a matching statement that Adoil (the light-bearer) was a consolidation of originally visible things, for original existence consisted of invisible things only. Water, in turn, results from the consolidation of a mixture of light and darkness (27:2); the heavenly circles (28:1) and earthly rocks (28:2) are solidified from water. Fire is one stage further in the solidification of rock (29:2).

3. Mixing, of light and darkness in order to produce water (27:2); the seven crystalline circles are a mixture of wet and dry; lightning is a mixture of water and fire (29:1). Finally the constitution of man involves more complex mixtures, which are discussed in several different ways.

At some points Gen is simply paraphrased with little embellishment, as on the rather uneventful fifth day (30:7), except that animals, as well as fish and birds, are made then, leaving man alone to be created on the sixth day. At other places there is not only embellishing but also drastic restructuring, as in the elaborate account of the creation of man (almost completely lacking in short MSS); or the bringing in of other biblical materials to enlarge the picture (the creation of angels and the fall of Satanail on the second day). Most of

[J]

“And I commanded the lowest things:^b ‘Let one of the invisible things descend 1 visibly!’ And Adoil descended, extremely large. And I looked at him, and, behold, in his belly he had a great light.^c •And I said to him, ‘Disintegrate yourself,^d 2 Adoil, and let what is born from you become visible.’ And he disintegrated himself, and there came out a very great light. •And I was in the midst of the [great] light. And light out of light is 3 carried thus. And the great age came out, and it revealed all the creation which I had thought up to create. And I saw how good it was.
And I placed for myself a throne, and I sat down on it. And then to the light I 4 spoke: ‘You go up higher (than the throne),^e and be solidified [much higher than the throne], and become the foundation for the highest things.’
And there is nothing higher than the light, except nothing itself. And again I 5 bowed(?)^f myself, and I looked upward from my throne.^g

26 |God summons from the very lowest things a second time, so that Arkhas,
both heavy and red, should come out. Word “25.”^h|

“And I called out a second time into the very lowest things, and I said, ‘Let one 1 of the (in)visible^a things come out visibly, solid.’
[And] Arkhas^b came out, solid and heavy and very red.^c •And I said, ‘Open 2 yourself up, Arkhas, and let what is born from you become visible!’ And he disintegrated himself. There came out an age, dark, very large, carrying the creation of all lower things. And I saw how good it was.
And I said to him, ‘Come down low and become solid! And become the foundation 3 of the lowest things!’ [And it came about.] And he came down and became solid.
And he became the foundation of the lowest things. And there is nothing lower than the darkness, except nothing itself.^d

27 |About how God founded the water, and surrounded it with light, and established on it seven islands. Word “26.”^h|

the events of the first three days in Gen 1 take place on the first day in 2En. leaving the second day for making angels: the third day is devoted entirely to the creation of Paradise. The two accounts are in phase at the fourth day.

Even when biblical vocabulary is used it is sometimes given a different “scientific” meaning. On the third day, according to Gen 1, God separated the sea from the land by “gathering” the water together, so that the dry land “appeared.” In 2En (day one!) this “collection” is interpreted as the solidification of water into rock.

b. R reads “highest,” which is more symmetrical.

c. There are three readings: vēka velikago, “great age” (A U B Chr); kamyka prēvelikaago, “very large stone” (V N B²); svēta (J P R).

d. Or “let (something) visible be loosed from you.” P lacks the repeated word, and J R raždaemo seems to have used the root “to give birth.” See n. i to my translation of MPr.

e. See Eccl 24:4f.

f. The significance of this action remains obscure. It evidently puzzled the scribes, since the MSS vary widely. First, the unsuitable chapter division has isolated this statement, making it the last action of the preceding episode rather than the first action of the next one. Secondly, the sequence of actions varies in the MSS. All culminate in the second creative command (26:2) and the two preceding actions could be preparation for this. Prior to the first command, God was moving around; prior to the second he was seated on his throne. Thirdly, the verb is usually associated with obeisance in worship, vūskloniti being the opposite of nakloniti. Fourthly, on top of the mystery of the Lord bending or straightening himself, the associated activity—before this in short MSS, after it in long ones—is described by several different verbs: vūzrēkhū, “gazed” (J P R); zrēkhū, “looked” (B Chr); rēkh, “said” (A U); vidēkhū, “saw” (V N).

g. Much of the creation story now in long MSS could be original, allowing also that short MSS have sustained heavy losses and long ones probably contain some interpolations.

26 a. The connection between “visible” and “invisible” is not clear. The confusion in the MSS reflects a tension between telling the stories of Adoil and Arkhas along the same lines, as against the idea that Arkhas produces darkness and so, perhaps, is never visible. In this cosmogony, then, both light and darkness come out of the original “invisible,” each becoming visible in its own way. In Gen 1:3 God commands the light to shine into pre-existent darkness; in 2Cor 4:6 the light shines out of darkness.

b. The name Arkhas invites identification with Gk. arkhē, not unexpected in cosmology. Arkhē is one of the most fundamental concepts of pre-Socratic physics, and it remained in currency right down through the Neoplatonists. The ending -as,

[A]

- 1 "And I commanded the lowest things: 'Let one of the invisible things come out visibly!' And Adail descended, extremely large. And I looked at him, and, behold, in his belly he had a great age. • And I said to him, 'Disintegrate yourself, Adail, and let what is disintegrated from you become visible.' And he disintegrated himself,
- 2 and there came out from him the great age. And thus it carried all the creation which I had wished to create. And I saw how good it was.
- 3 And I placed for myself a throne, and I sat down on it. To the light I spoke: 'You go up higher and be solidified and become the foundation for the highest things.'
- 4 And there is nothing higher than the light, except nothing itself. And I spoke, I straightened myself upward from my throne.

Heb 11:3;
WisSol 11:17

Gen 1:12

Prov 8:27(LXX)

26

- 1 "And I called out a second time into the lowest things, and I said, 'Let one of the invisible things come out solid and visible.'
- 2 There came out Arukhas, solid and heavy and very black. •

And I saw how suitable he was.

- 3 And I said to him, 'Come down low and become solid! And become the foundation of the lowest things!' And he came down and became solid. And he became the foundation of the lowest things. And there is nothing lower than the darkness, except nothing itself.

27

however, which is not Slav., poses a doubt. The plural is met when two or more primal beings or substances are in mind; but the translator of 2En knew to render this literally as "beginnings." It is worth noting that Damascius, last of the pagan Neoplatonic philosophers, quotes from the Babylonian creation epic and identifies the two ultimate principles of Babylonian cosmology, the primal water elements, Apsu and Tiamat (abyss), as arkhai. But the Bible could have supplied the vocabulary of this section. Thus Prov 8:22–26 mentions arkhē (twice) as well as tas abyssas. On the other hand the spelling Arukhas suggests a Heb. word ārūk, "extended"; but it is not a creation word. c. Slav. čermenū ("red," long) or črünü ("black," short).

d. Together with 25:5 this makes a symmetrical picture of the cosmos.

Nothing

Adoil → the great light → Upper Foundation

Ar(u)khas → darkness → Lower Foundation

Nothing

The dualism of light and darkness arises from two primal beings, Adoil and Ar(u)khas. 2En does not say that God created them, but they are clearly under his control. This light and darkness are cosmophysical, not spiritual or ethical. They cannot be connected with the dualism of the Bogomils, which is quite outright—dva načala (= arkhai)

suti: edino ubo blago, drugoe zlo, "There are two originals: one good, the other evil" (cf. G. Wild, "Die bogumilische Häresie in einigen südslavischen Volksliedern," Die Welt der Slaven 9 [1964] 258–76).

27 a. From this point onward short MSS are fragmentary compared to the full and coherent account of creation that continues in long MSS. Except for trivial details, J, P, and R agree completely in the present chapter, whereas A, U, etc. have only a few words which scarcely make sense. At the very least we would expect the narrative to follow the thread provided by Gen 1; and this is present in vs. 4, even if the other material concerning the origin of water and the system of seven stellar circuits is extraneous. The former (vss. 1–3a) is quite in line with the fundamental cosmology of 2En. The latter (vs. 3b) does not fit the celestial structures described in chs. 3–21, but it does agree with 30:2a–3. At the present stage of research it is impossible to decide which, if either, of the two recensions is closer to the original. Even if vs. 3b in J, P, and R is an interpolation, vs. 4 must surely be original, and A, U, etc. lost this unobjectionable biblical material when the body of the chapter was excised. The mutilated state of the short MSS has produced further disorder. Comparison of A with V is enough to show that. Closer study indicates even more significantly that the key word put, "orbit" (for a planet), survives in V N as the

[J]

“And I gave the command: ‘Let there be taken some of the light and some of the darkness.’ •And I said, ‘Become thickened, and be wrapped around with light!’ And I spread it out, and it became water. And I spread it out above the darkness, below the light.^b •And thus I made the solid waters, that is to say, the Bottomless. And I made a foundation of light around the water. And I created seven great circles inside it, and I gave them an appearance of crystal, wet and dry, that is to say glass and ice, and to be the circuit for water and the other elements. And I pointed out to each one [of them] his route, to the seven stars, each one of them in his own heaven, so that they might travel accordingly.

And I saw how good it was. •And I made a division^c between the light and between the darkness,^d that is to say, in the middle of the waters, this way and that way. And I said to the light that it should be day, and to the darkness (I commanded) that it should be night. And evening came, and (again) morning came, (that is) the first day.^e

28 |The week in which God showed Enoch all his wisdom and strength, throughout all of the seven days; how he created all the forces of heaven and earth, and every kind of thing that moves itself, even up to man.|^a

“And thus I made solid the heavenly circles.^b And (I said), ‘Let the lower water, which is below heaven, collect itself (into) one collection,^c and let its waves become dry.’ And it happened like that.

And from the waves I created rocks, solid and big. And from the rocks I assembled^d the dry land; and I called the dry land Earth.^e

And what was in the middle of the earth I called chasm, that is to say, Bottomless.^f •The sea I gathered into one place, and I bound it with a yoke.^g And I said to the sea: ‘Behold, I give you an eternal boundary. And you will not break through from your own waters.’ And so I fixed the solid structure and established^h it above the waters.

This first-created day I named for myself. Then evening came and (again) morning, and it was the second day.

meaningless “road of water” lost completely from A U.

From another angle, the importance which Vailant attaches to the use of the verb grjasti (Secrets, p. xiv) as evidence of 10th-cent. translation into a Western dialect can be noted. He cites only its occurrence in 2:1, where only P (not even J R) has the isogloss idu. The use of the same verb (grjadut) in 27:3 to describe the movement of the planets is, by the same token, in favor of the authenticity of the passage.

b. In 2En 27 there is a symmetrical universe in layers rather than concentric spheres. Some light and darkness, mingled in the intermediate zone, are thickened and spread out to make water, “above the darkness, below the light.” This central zone—“the bottomless” abyss—is encompassed with light; and this part of the cosmos is more like the Pythagorean system. Within this watery zone are seven crystalline circles (compare the crystal sea in Rev 4:6 and perhaps 1En 14:9–11, which also mentions “the path of the stars,” another point in favor of the authenticity of 2En 27:3). This system has nothing to do with the seven heavens in 2En 3–22, for those do not have a planet each, as in Ptolemaic celestial mechanics, and they are tiers not spheres. In ch. 27, however, each “star” has its own krugū, “circle,” or puti, “route.”

c. Only in the center zone do light and darkness meet, making day and night. Here the account picks up Gen 1.

d. J P, but not R, preserve the Heb. repetition of the preposition.

e. The schedule of creation days, marked by the refrain from Gen 1, is augmented here by supplying the Slav. names for the days of the week in the secondary ch. headings. Instead of marking the close of daily work, it now marks the commencement of a new day. The formula “evening and morning” certainly gives that impression; but the original scheme is considerably changed as a result. Note the following development of thought:

Preliminary acts—Conceptualization (ch. 24)
 Adoil (ch. 25) (light)
 Ar(uk)has (ch. 26) (darkness)
 Water and the seven circles (ch. 27)
 Day 1 Sea and land (ch. 28)
 Day 2 Fire, angels, fall of Satan (ch. 29)
 Day 3 Vegetation (ch. 30:1–2a)
 Day 4 Heavenly bodies (ch. 30:2b–6)
 Day 5 Fish, birds, reptiles, animals (ch. 30:7)
 Day 6 Creation of Adam and Eve; their fall and expulsion (ch. 30:8–32:1)

[A]

1 "Then encompassing (myself?) with the light of the ether,
2 •I thickened it.

Gen 1:4

3 I stretched it above the darkness. •

4

28

1

Gen 1:90

2 "Then from the waters I hardened big stones, and the clouds of the depths I commanded to dry themselves.

3 And I did not name what fell to the lowest places.

4 •Gathering the ocean into one place, I bound it with a yoke. I gave to the sea an eternal

Jer 7:11; 8:2

24:2; 104:9;

Prov 8:29;

Job 26:10; 38:11

boundary, which will not be broken through by the waters.

The solid structure I fixed and established it above the waters.

5

Day 7 Rest (ch. 32:2)

Day 8 Determination of the millennia (ch. 33)

28 a. MS P² begins at this point. It replicates P through ch. 32 with minor textual deviations and trivial orthographic variants.

b. P P² read singular (cf. APOT, vol. 2, p. 446).

c. "Collection" reflects LXX rather than MT; but the Heb. "one place" is used in vs. 4.

d. There is a variation between J (P P²) sūgruzikhī (contraxi) and R sūgrēzikh (commiscui).

e. The impression given by Gen 1 is that originally the land surface was covered by water, a condition to which it reverted as a result of the Deluge. On the third day the water was drained away so that the dry land was exposed. 2En 28:2 has an opposite approach. Here land was made by condensing and solidifying the primeval water. Is this intended to explain the undulations on the earth's surface? Philo's position (On the Creation 38) is between these two: originally "earth and water being mingled together and kneaded, like a mass of dough, into a single element, without shape or distinction of its parts." The salt water was taken out to one place, but sweet water remains in the earth's pores to keep the soil fertile.

f. Once more the shorter MSS are fragmentary, inferior, and in considerable disagreement among themselves. The negation in A U is an error, reading ne- from narekorrh of other MSS. The terminology for the "bottomless" (bezdmula, "abyss") varies: upadok, "fallen" (R—cf. upad in A U, but V has upadokhī), but propasti, "gulf" (J P P²). On the etymology of abyssos, cf. Philo (On the Creation 29), "for to kenon is a region of immensity and vast depths."

g. The yoke restraining the ocean could be a fragment of mythology going back to the harness (muzzle?) by which yām (Heb. "sea") was restrained in the Canaanite myth. In Job 38:10 the ever-threatening ocean is kept back by a barricade. But in 2En 28:4 the earth has become a solid shield above the lower deeps to keep them from surging up (e.g. Ps 24:2; Gen 7:11; 49:25).

The MSS describe this threat differently. Where J R have "from your own waters," P P² have sostavū, "composition" ("component parts," cf. APOT, vol. 2, p. 446). But all other MSS are unanimous in having "water." A U, supported by V N, read simply ot vod(y), lit. "from water."

h. "Established" has the same root as "foundation" (cf. 24:5). The imagery is problematical, since we do not usually think of a firm upper structure as a "foundation."

[J]

29 |Monday is the day. The fiery substance.|^a

“And for all my own^b heavens I shaped a shape from the fiery substance. My eye 1 looked at the solid^c and very hard rock. And from the flash^d of my eye I took the [marvelous] substance of lightning, both fire in water and water in fire; •neither does this one extinguish that one, nor does 2 that one dry out this one. That is why lightning is sharper and brighter than the shining of the sun, and softer than water, more solid than the hardest rock.
And from the rock I cut off^e a great fire,^f and from the fire I created the ranks of 3
the bodiless armies—ten myriad angels—and their weapons are fiery and their clothes are burning flames. And I gave orders that each should stand in his own rank.

|Here Satanail^h was hurled from the height, together with his angels.|ⁱ

But one from the order of the archangels deviated, together with the division that 4 was under his authority. He thought up the impossible idea, that he might place his throne higher than the clouds^j which are above the earth, and that he might become equal to my power.
And I hurled him out from the height, together with his angels. And he was flying 5 around in the air, ceaselessly, above the Bottomless.
And thus I created the entire heavens. And the third day came. 6

30 |Tuesday.|

“And on the third day I commanded the earth to make trees grow, large and fruit- 1 bearing; and the mountains—all kinds of (sweet grass and all kinds of) sown seed.
And I laid out paradise as a garden, and I enclosed it; and I placed armed guards,^a angels aflame with fire. And thus I created the renewal of the earth.
And then evening came and morning came—the fourth day. 2

|Wednesday.|

And on the fourth day I commanded: ‘Let there be great lamps on the heavenly circles.’

On the first, the highest circle, I placed the star Kronos;^b

29 a. The two recensions are very different at this point, yet they agree in the central fact that fire was derived from rock and angels were made out of fire.

b. J agrees with R in this reading (not shown in Sokolov’s Lat. translation); but A U agree with P P² in “armies.” There is no preposition, so “fiery essence” could be the complement; i.e. he made them a fiery substance.

c. The same word, “solid,” was used in 28:4 to denote the celestial firmament. Perhaps the same is meant here. But o(i), “from,” is often missing from words beginning with o- (haplography); this phenomenon occurs in the following words in the text, “(from) the flash,” in P P², but not in J R. So it is “rock,” not the firmament, that the great fire is cut from in vs. 2.

d. The translation follows P P². Yet J R have a good claim of being the superior reading, since they agree against P (whereas P usually agrees with J against R). Yet their reading, “from the flash of my eye the lightning also received the watery (not “marvelous” [P] essence,” is difficult; and P P² could be the result of reducing the difficulty. The theory is that lightning is a mixture of fire and water, but how the flash of God’s eye supplies the aqueous component is not evident.

e. Perhaps “nipped,” since the verb comes from brickmaking.

f. “Fire” is not an element in Gen 1; hence it is important to seek for the background of this thought in 2En (it is present in both recensions). The Chaldean oracles state that everything comes from fire: eisin panta henos pyros ekgegaōta (É. des Places, Oracles Chaldaïques avec un choix de commentaires anciens [Paris, 1971] p. 69). But Ezek 28:16 has a connection between stones and fire, and the myth behind this could have Canaanite connections, as well as supplying the form of the Lucifer myth found here in 2En. Even so, the derivation of fire from rock seems unparalleled; the reference to lightning suggests that the model is the striking of fire from flint. Cf. Akkadian (abnu) išāti, “fire (-stone).” Note that 2En’s 1 “And for all the armies I fashioned the heavens, the sun from the great light. And I placed it in the sky so that it might shine onto the earth.

[A]

29

Ps 104:4; Heb
1:7

2

3 •From the rock I cut off a great fire, and (from) the fire I created all the armies of the bodiless ones, and all the armies of the stars and cherubim and seraphim and ophanim,^g and all these from the fire I cut out.

4

Isa 14:14

5

Eph 2:2

6

30

1 “And the earth I commanded to make all kinds of trees grow, and all kinds of mountains, and all kinds of living grass, and all kinds of living seeds, producing seeds; so that before I created living souls, I prepared food for them.

Gen 1:11. Ps
147:8

2

Gen 1:14–19

3

derivation of fire does not accord with the Gk. belief in fire as one of the four (or even the only) primal element. In the Jewish tradition Gen 1 safeguarded the primacy of water. Even though Gen 1 does not mention fire, the commentators brought it in (cf. Rashi on Gen 1:8).

g. Short MSS have Heb. names for the angels. A differs from U in reading serathims and othanims.

h. The name Satanail is present here only in P's (secondary) ch. headings. But see 30:4.

i. Christian explanations of the origin of evil linked Lk 10:18 with Isa 14 and Ezek 28, and eventually Gen 3. So vs. 4 could be a Christian interpolation. In the Byzantine tradition Satan's revolt took place on the fourth day, not the second, as here. Jewish theology concentrated on Gen 6, and this is prominent in the Enoch cycle as in other apocalypses.

j. The Book of John the Evangelist describes Satan's presumption in similar language: “He set his seat above the clouds of heaven” (James, ANT, p. 188). GBart (4:24) explains that although Satan was the first angel created, he refused to worship

Adam as the image of God. Later on it records his revolt: “I will set my throne over against his throne” (4:55).

30 a. This conflation with Gen 3:25 flouts the biblical chronology and obscures the significance of this arrangement as a consequence of sin.

b. The scheme could be no better than a garbled Almagest by some uninformed individual. Only a few of the planets are on Ptolemy's levels. In 2En the disposition of seven planets on seven heavenly circles has nothing to do with the cosmology of chs. 3–21. It is not even clear that the seven crystalline circles of 2En 27:3 are the same as the Pythagorean or Ptolemaic spheres. In any case the seven heavens of the apocalypses represent layers; 2En 4:1 gives the impression that there are stars in the first heaven (cf. 30:4); but chs. 11–17 place sun and moon together in the fourth heaven. Note also that these planetary orbits are counted from the top down, whereas the heavens are numbered from the bottom up.

[J]

on the 2nd, (lower down, I placed)	Afridit;
on the 3rd	Arris;
on the 4th	the sun; ^c
on the fifth	Zeous;
on the 6th	Ermis;
and on the 7th, the lowest,	the moon.

And with the lowest stars I beautified the air below.^d 4
 And I appointed the sun over the illumination of the day, but the 5 moon and stars over the illumination of the night. •And the sun goes in accordance 6 with each animal, and the twelve animals are the succession of the months. And I assigned their names and the animals of their seasons,^e and their connection with the newborn, and their horoscopes, and how they revolve. •Then evening came and morning came—the fifth day. 7

[Thursday.]

And on the 5th day I commanded the sea to engender fishes^f and feathered birds of many different kinds, and every kind of reptile that creeps on the earth and that walks on the earth on four legs and that flies through the air—male sex and female—and every kind of soul that breathes the breath of all living things. •And evening came and morning came—the sixth 8 day.

[Friday.]

And on the sixth day I commanded my wisdom to create man out of the seven components:

1 ^g	his flesh from earth;
second	his blood from dew and from the sun;
third	his eyes from the bottomless sea; ^h
fourth	his bones from stone;
fifth	his reason from the mobility ⁱ of angels and from clouds;
sixth	his veins and hair from grass of the earth;
seventh	his spirit from my spirit and from wind.

And I gave him 7 properties:^j 9

hearing	to the flesh;
sight	to the eyes;
smell	to the spirit;
touch	to the veins;
taste	to the blood;
to the bones—	endurance;
to the reason—	sweetness.

Behold, I have thought up an ingenious poem to recite: 10

c. P has lost the reference to the sun (cf. APOT, vol. 2, p. 448). It also lacks the word "air" in vs. 4, except for the letter a, which, interpreted as the conjunction, makes it appear that sun, moon, and stars are all together in the lowest heaven. But J confirms "air" in R, and "and" in R shows that

vs. 5 is a new section closer to Gen 1. But stars are not usually in the "air" zone in ancient cosmologies.

d. On the stars as a beautiful adornment for the sky see Philo, On the Creation 17 (§53).

e. The unique reading of P²; the others have

[A]

4
5
6

7

Gen 1:20–26

And the sea I commanded to engender its fish and every reptile that creeps on the earth and every bird that flies.

8

Prov 8:30;
WisSol 9:4

When I had finished all this, I commanded my wisdom to create man.

9

Sir 17:5

10

“thundering.”

f. A reads raby.

g. P uses numerals, P² words, to count the components. J R do not have either.

h. P P² derive man’s eyes from the sun.

i. Slav. brūzosti, “speed, impetuosity” (SRY, vol. 1, p. 392).

j. The noun used for the seven senses, estestvā, means “nature” or “substance” in Russ. It was used earlier for the fiery “essence.” In the next vs. it is translated as “substance,” and in vs. 16 as “nature.”

[J]

From invisible and visible substances I created man.
 From both his natures come both death and life.^k
 And (as my) image he knows the word like (no) other creature.
 But even at his greatest he is small,
 and again at his smallest he is great.

And on the earth I assigned him to be a second angel, honored and 11
 great and glorious. • And I assigned him to be a king,^l to reign |on| the earth, |and| 12 to have my wisdom. And there was nothing comparable to him on the earth, even among my creatures that exist. • And I assigned to him a 13 name from the four components:^m

from East — (A)
 from West — (D)
 from North — (A) |South| — (M)
 from South — (M) |North| — (A).

And I assigned to him four specialⁿ stars, and called his name Adam. 14
 And I gave him his free will; and I pointed out to him the two ways—^o light and 15 darkness. And I said to him, “This is good for you, but that is bad”; so that I might come to know^p whether he has love toward me or abhorrence, and so that it might become plain who among his race loves me.
 Whereas I have come to know his nature, he does not know his own nature. That 16 is why ignorance is more lamentable than the sin such as it is in him to sin. And I said, ‘After sin there is nothing for it but death.’
 And I assigned a shade for him;^q and I imposed sleep upon him, and he fell 17 asleep. And while he was sleeping, I took from him a rib. And I created for him a wife, so that death^r might come (|to him|) by his wife.
 And I took his last word, and I called her name Mother, that is to say, Euva.^s 18

31 |God hands over paradise to Adam, and gives him a command to look upon the heavens, open, and that he might look upon the angels, singing the triumphal song. Word “27.”^a

“Adam—Mother; earthly and life. And I created a garden in Edem, in the east, 1 so that he might keep the agreement and preserve the commandment.
 And I created for him an open heaven, so that he might look upon the angels, 2

k. Cf. Gregory’s oration on his brother Caesarius (PG, vol. 35, p. 785).

l. The MSS are all different in small details. This verse could mean: “And I appointed him king of the earth, to have a kingdom, by my wisdom.”

m. The letters of the anagram are supplied as if from Gk. P P² have South and North the wrong way around. The same error occurs in SibOr 3:26. Yet J R—a good combination—have it correctly. If the reading of J R is original (which is likely, since it is correct), the coincidence of the error of P P² with SibOr is intriguing. If P P² is original (an error innocently derived from SibOr) then J R results from correction (in Slav.!) by someone who knew the solution to the riddle in Gk.

n. The attribute of the day on which the story began (1:2).

o. The two ways correspond to the ethical dualism of the NT, especially that of Jn. The exact terminology is found in EpBar 17. In 2En “light” and “darkness” have more ethical significance at the end of the world (ch. 65) than at the beginning (chs. 25f.). The hells in 2En are dark (7:1; 10:2), but not the fifth heaven.

p. The translation “come to know” requires an emendation, since all MSS read “I saw.” P continues the verb consistently, “he does not see his own nature; that is why non-seeing is . . .” But J and R agree in reading “He does not know . . . ignorance . . .” Hence it seems that the first verb should also be “know.” Confusion between vid- and véd- occurs easily, and turns up in other connections. One wonders if 40:1 was originally “I have seen everything”; at least one cannot say confidently that the book teaches that Enoch acquired omniscience. See the notes on 2En 36:3. In 40:3 the reading of A (svédjati; cf. U) is confirmed by J (védjati), R (véditi); but P has vydjti, “see,” the opposite error introduced here from other places in which it is correct. The same problem occurs in 8:1, where some MSS (A U) read nevidimo, “unseen,” others (V N) nesvédomo, “unknown.”

[A]

11
12	Gen 1:26,28
13 14
15	Gen 2:17; Deut 13:3
16	Gen 2:17; Rom 6:23
17	Sir 25:34; 1Tim 2:14
18
31
1
2

The former could be the error, influenced by the following viděníja. But, on the other hand, the second Slav. recension of the Disputatio (A. Popov, Istoriko-literaturnyj obzor drevne-russkikh polemicheskikh sočinenic protiv Latinjan (xi-xv v.) [Moscow, 1875]) reads es v rai sladosti toja že oko ne vidě i oukho ne slyša ni na Srđce člku ne vzyde. This favors the reading of A U at 8:1, even though 2En has not reproduced the quotation from 1Cor 2:9. In view of this, and remembering the identification of Enoch as an "eyewitness" in the Preface, 2En continues the tradition of 1En 41:1, "I saw all the secrets of the heavens . . ." This finely balanced textual question warrants thorough study, since the question of whether Enoch is a model "gnostic" has become an important one.

q. The reading "from him" is according to P². J R read "for him," perhaps under the influence of the preceding text.

r. Charles (APOT, vol. 2, p. 450) connects this with Eccl 25:23 (i.e. 24). But the earliest extant

Slav. translation of this passage (Izbornik 1076g.181) reads (o)ü ž(eny n) ačjatükü grěkhū: i toju visi oumira(jem)ü. There does not seem to be any verbal connection with 2En through either channel. 1Tim 2:14 is also not in this tradition, except as another speculation on Eve's role.

s. The play on words goes back to Heb., where the word "mother" ('ēm) is made out of the first and last letters of 'ādām. So "his last word" means "the last letter (or syllable) of his name." The play has been developed in Slav., connecting mati, "mother," with -am of Adam or even with -mu (in P's anagram). This paronomasia has come a long way, since the firm link with "mother" is possibly only in Sumerian.

31 a. With the truncation of the story of the creation of man at 30:6, short MSS are void to 33:3. It must be admitted that much of what remains in (or was added to) long MSS is unintelligible, or at best weird.

[J]

singing the triumphal song.^b And the light which is never darkened was perpetually in paradise.^c • And the devil understood how I wished to create another world, so that everything could be subjected to Adam on the earth, to rule and reign over it. • The devil is of the lowest places. And he will become a demon,^d because he fled from heaven; Sotona, because his name was Satanail. • In this way he became different from the angels.^e His nature did not change, (but) his thought did, since his consciousness of righteous and sinful things changed. • And he became aware of his condemnation and of the sin which he sinned previously. And that is why he thought up the scheme against Adam. In such a form he entered paradise, and corrupted Eve. But Adam he did not contact. But on account of (her) nescience I cursed them. But those whom I had blessed previously, them I did not curse; (and those whom I had not blessed previously, even them I did not curse)—neither mankind I cursed, nor the earth, nor any other creature, but only mankind's evil fruit-bearing. This is why the fruit of doing good is sweat and exertion.

32 |After^a Adam's transgression, God expels him into the earth from which he had been taken. But he does not wish to destroy him in the age to come. Word "28."|

"And I said [to him], 'You are earth,^b and into the earth once again you will go, out of which I took you. And I will not destroy you, but I will send you away to what I took you from. Then I can take you once again at my second coming.'^c And I blessed all my creatures, visible and invisible. And Adam was in paradise for 5 hours and a half. And I blessed the 7th day [which is the sabbath] in which I rested from all my doings.^d

b. P² reads "the song for below the heaven" here and in vs. 2. But J R agree with P in reading "triumphal."

c. According to 2En 42:3 the earthly paradise was open to the third heaven, making connection with the heavenly paradise. It was an issue for debate among the Fathers whether Adam could see angels. Here Adam both sees and hears them. Philo taught that hearing is lower than seeing (Cher 8; Sobr 8). Origen was criticized for teaching that men could not see angels (Epiphanius, Adv Haer 64.4; Justinian, Ep. ad Mennam; Jerome, Ep. ad Avitum 2). Origen reasoned thus:

Angels are spirits which share with God the property of invisibility; that is, it is impossible for the human sense of sight to react with any body except one possessing color, shape, and size (First Principles 1.1.7).

Origen would have found 2En in error at this point, unless, of course, at this stage, Adam is still a celestial being. Hence this detail does not settle the unsolved question of Origen's acquaintance with a book of Enoch that deals with the subject of creation. The idea that Adam was demoted from a heavenly paradise to earth (2En 32:1) is found in Origen.

[For similar traditions re Adam, see especially the CavTr TAdam, and Vita. J.H.C.]

d. The MSS all disagree in small details, but even the omission of a conjunction can make a big difference to the connections of phrases and sentences. Vaillant's translation (Secrets, p. 103) is based on extensive emendation. In particular, his putting Satan in charge of the lower regions is highly conjectural. It is unknown how Charles (APOT, vol. 2, p. 450) obtained Satomail, for all MSS read Satanail in contrast to Sotona (J P; R—P² has Satana). The double use of jako suggests that two puns are involved.

First, "The devil" will become a demon (bēsī) because he fled (bēže). The parallelism of this wordplay to the following pun on "Satan" throws doubt on Vaillant's (Secrets, p. 103) emendation of bēsī (attested by all four MSS, and quite a suitable word). Secondly, he will be Sotona because his name was Satanail. (The GBart, 4:24, records the change of name from Satanael to Satanao.) The difficulty lies with the intervening words, where each MS is different:

R	sūtvorili	sū	nbse
J	sūtvori	sū	nbsī
P	sūtvori sūtvori	s	nbsū
P ²	i sotvori	sie	bēsī

The word "create" is undeniable. One suspects a play on its first syllable (sūt- or sot-) and the name Sotona. This paronomasia points to Slav. soil. The statement that Satan created "heaven" (or at least his own, the lowest, heaven) could have originated with the Bogomils. It is therefore a matter of considerable importance to recover the precise form

[A]

3

WisSol 2:24

4

5

6

Gen 3:6; 2Cor
11:3

7

8

32

1

WisSol 3:7

2

and possible origin of the Satan legend in 2En. P² appears to have moved from this possibility by changing "heaven" to "demon." But the creation of a demon as such cannot be an act of God unless this is P²'s way of saying that God punished Satan by turning him into a demon. The theoretical observations presented in the remainder of this ch. only make the matter more obscure.

In general, 2En's strong overarching monotheism keeps its dualistic tendencies within limit. The Satan passages do not amount to a coherent or systematic doctrine of evil. In particular, a wicked ruler of the darkness of this world is never mentioned as enticing to sin in the ethical sections (unless 34:2, 76:6, 25—the depravity before the Flood); nor does he have a hand in the climactic wickedness of the end time; nor is he the prince of hell in the places of torment in 2En; nor is he located in a domain of darkness, as opposed to God's realm of light. 2En 29:4–5 describes the revolt of an archangel (identified as Satan only in P's secondary ch. heading), who is hurled from heaven by God. In 18:3, on the contrary, the rebel leader's descent to earth is willful and contrary to God. 2En 31:4 is different again, casting Satan in the role of rival to Adam as ruler of the earth. We have, then, fragments of Satan stories loosely mixed, with no evident concern to link them into a consistent whole. This intellectual confusion prevails generally in 2En.

e. The MSS are virtually identical, but the meaning is quite obscure.

32 a. The use of po, "after," in the title could be an error for o, "about." The noun is apparently locative. The idiom settles nothing, since it translates no fewer than seven different Gk. prepositions.

b. This curious exegesis of Gen 3:19b seems to be unique. It implies that Adam, made in a heavenly Paradise from materials brought from the earth, is now sent back to his native element to live there. Were it not for P's ch. heading, no connection with sin would be indicated. 2En 31:9 tends to blunt the edge of the biblical curse; Adam is blameless. Here Eve is not mentioned as banished to Earth with Adam. Similarly Gen 3:22–24 mentions Adam only, not Eve. It cannot be proved that this stage in man's destiny owes anything to the theory of man's descent to bodily existence ascribed to Origen. We have only to remember that in the Koran (Sura 2:35–36), Adam and his wife begin in a garden not of this world.

c. This familiar phrase need not be a Christian touch. It is not found in the NT, although Justin already uses it. It is scarcely conceivable that the writer of 2En, with his stark monotheism, at this point identifies the Lord as Jesus. On the contrary, the idea is present in Jub 1:26, where God descends at the end of the world, and lives with his purified children for eternity.

d. P² ends here.

[J]

33 |God shows Enoch the epoch of this world, the existence of 7000 years, and the eighth thousand is the end, neither years nor months nor weeks nor days. Word “29.”|

“On the 8th day I likewise appointed, so that the 8th day might be the 1st, the 1 first-created of my week,^a and that it should revolve in the revolution of 7000; <|so that the 8000|> might be in the beginning of a time not reckoned and unending, 2 neither years, nor months, nor weeks, nor days, nor hours <|like the first day of the week, so also that the eighth day^b of the week might return continually).

And now, Enoch,^c whatever I have told you, and whatever you have understood, 3 and whatever you have seen in the heavens, and whatever you have seen on the earth, and whatever I have written in the books—by my supreme wisdom all these things I planned to accomplish. And I created them from the highest foundation to the lowest, and to the end.

And there is no adviser^d and no successor to my creation. I am self-eternal and 4 not made by hands.^e My thought is without change. My wisdom is my adviser and my deed is my word. And my eyes look at all things. <|If I look at all things|>, then they stand still and shake with terror;^f but, if I should turn my face away, then all things would perish.

Apply your mind, Enoch, and acknowledge the One who is speaking |to you|. 5 And you take the books which you yourself have written.

And I give you Samoila^g and Raguila, who brought you up to me. And you go 6 down onto the earth and tell your sons all that I have told you and everything that you have seen, from the lowest heavens up to my throne.

|For| I created all the armies <and> all the forces. And there is no one who opposes 7 me or who is insubordinate to me; for all submit themselves to my sole rule and work my sole dominion.

And give them^h the books in your handwriting, and they will read them and they 8 will acknowledge me as the Creator of everything. And they will understand that there is no other God except myself.

And let them distributeⁱ the books in your handwriting, 9 children to children and family to family and kinsfolk to kinsfolk.

•And I will give you, 10 Enoch, my mediator, my archistratig, Michael, on account of your handwritings and the handwritings of your fathers—Adam and Sith^j and Enos and Kainan and Maleleil and Ared your father. •And they will not be destroyed until the final 11

age.^k So I have commanded my angels, Ariukh and Pariukh,^l •whom I have 12 appointed on the earth as their guardians, and I have commanded the seasons, so that they might preserve them so that they might not perish in the future flood which I shall create in your generation.

33 a. For the correct nedēla (J R) P has na(d) dēla. “over (my) work.” Vaillant (Secrets, pp. xx, 102) thinks that there is a pun on ne-dēlo. “non-work.”

b. The interest in the eighth day as “the Lord’s day” could be Christian. 2En 28:5 has already indicated the naming of the first day for the Lord. Besides Rev 1:10, which is not conclusive, the idea turns up in quite early Christian writers.

c. Chr. reads “O man!” Slav. enoš(e) is the vocative form of Enoch; ’enoš is a Semitic noun for “man.”

d. On the solitary creator, compare Philo, On the Creation 23.

e. Vaillant (Secrets, p. 33) thinks that nerukotvorenū means “not working with (my) hands,” i.e. God creates by thought and speech. But see the reference to God’s hands in ch. 65. The point here is that God is self-existent, he is not dependent or a derived being. There could be an implied contrast with idols which are handmade. The punctuation of the MSS (which cannot be used with much confidence), and even more the gender of the adjective “without change,” point to several possible meanings: (1) “I am eternal, not handmade, unchanging; my thought is my counselor . . .”; (2) “I am eternal, not handmade; my thought is unchanging”; (3) “. . . my unchanging thought is my counselor.”

f. Ps 104:29 says that when God hides his face, the creatures are troubled. 2En is closer to Hab 3:10 in the Gr. translation of the Barberini MSS: “When you looked, the mountains were agitated.”

[A]

33

- 1
- 2
- 3 "And now, Enoch, whatever I have explained to you, and whatever you have seen in the heavens, and whatever you have seen on earth, and whatever I have written in the books—by my supreme wisdom I have contrived it all—I created from the lowest foundation and up to the highest and out to their end.
- 4 There is no counselor and no successor, only myself, eternal, not made by hands. My unchanging thought is (my) counselor, and my word is (my) deed. And my eyes behold all things. If I turn my face away, then all falls into destruction; but if I look at it, then all is stable. Isa 40:13; 46:10; Sir 42:21; Rom 11:34; Num 23:19; 1Sam 15:29; Ezek 24:14; Jas 1:17; Ps 33:9; Sir 42:15; Jn 1:1; 2Pet 3:5
- 5 •Apply your mind, Enoch, and acknowledge the One who is speaking to you. And you take the books which I(!) have written.
- 6 And I give you Semeila and Rasuila, who brought you up to me. And you go down onto the earth and tell your sons all that I have told you, everything that I(!) have seen, from the lowest heavens up to my throne.
- 7 All the army I created. There is no one who opposes me or who is insubordinate ; and all submit themselves to my sole rule and work my sole dominion.
- 8 And deliver to them the books in your handwriting, and they will read them and know their Creator. And they will understand this also how that there is no other Creator except myself. Deut 32:39; Isa 44:6; 45:5,6; 46:9
- 9 And distribute the books in your handwriting to your children and (your) children to (their) children; and the parents
- 10 will read (them) from generation to generation. •For I will give you an intercessor, Enoch, my archistratig, Michail, on account of your handwritings and the handwritings of your fathers—Adam and Seth. 1Chr 1:1
- 11 •They will not be destroyed until the final age. For I have commanded my angels, Ariokh and
- 12 Mariokh, •whom I have appointed on the earth to guard them and to command the things of time to preserve the handwritings of your fathers so that they might not perish in the impending flood which I will create in your generation. Gen 14:1,9; Dan 2:14

g. In some Jewish traditions Samoil is another name for Satan.

h. A does not agree with U, but the text is difficult to understand.

i. Cf. 2En 48:7 and 2En 54. The command to disseminate the revealed teaching contrasts with the typical gnostic injunctions to conceal the mysteries and impart them only to the worthy. 2En is similar to the Mesopotamian tradition. According to Berossus, Xisuthros (Sisithros = Ziusudra, the Babylonian Noah) was instructed to bury in Sippar all available writings, to preserve them during the Deluge. When it was over, Xisuthros tells the survivors "to rescue the writings from Sippar and disseminate them to mankind" (W. Lambert and A. Millard, Atra-Hāsis [Oxford, 1969] p. 136).

j. A ositha; U osifa.

k. On the preservation of these documents "until the final age" see 35:1.

l. P lacks vss. 11f., but J R have them, and are virtually identical. Both read "Ariukh" and "Par-iukh." A U agree in Ariökh and Mariökh but V has Öriokh and Mariökh. It cannot be shown that this pair of angels are to be equated with Hārūt and Mārūt of the Koran (Sura 2:96–104). Milik's arguments (The Books of Enoch [Oxford, 1976] p. 110), relying on alleged Slav. rendition of Gk. consonants, only go to show how very weak the links in this chain are. According to the Koran, the blasphemers were not Solomon, but the evil ones, teaching men magic and such things as came down at Babylon to the angels Hārūt and Mārūt. This is not altogether clear. It gives the impression that these two angels taught magic and in particular the use of love potions.

[J]

34 |God convicts the persons who are idol worshipers and sodomite fornicators, and for this reason he brings down the flood upon them. Word “30.”|

“For I know the wickedness of mankind, how |they have rejected my command- 1
ments and| they will not carry the yoke^a which I have placed on them.

But they will^b cast off my yoke, and they will accept a different yoke. And they will sow worthless seed,^c |not fearing God and not worshiping me, but they began to| worship vain gods, and they renounced my uniqueness.

And all the world will be reduced to confusion by iniquities and wickednesses 2
and |abominable| fornications |that is, friend with friend in the anus, and every other kind of wicked uncleanness which it is disgusting to report|, and the worship of (the) evil (one).

And that is why I shall bring down the flood onto the earth, |and I shall destroy 3
everything|, and the earth itself will collapse in great darkness.

35 |God leaves one righteous man of Enoch’s tribe, together with all his house, who pleased God in accordance with his will. Word “31.”|^a

“And I will leave^b a righteous man^c from your tribe, together with all his house, 1 who will act in accordance with my will. And from his seed another generation will arise, the last of many,^d but even out of those the majority will be very insatiable.

And I shall raise up^e for that generation someone who will reveal to them 2 the books in your handwriting and those of your fathers. And he will have to point out to them the guard tower of the earth, truthful men, and those who carry out my will, who do not invoke my name invalidly.

And you^f will tell that generation;^h and they, when they have read (them), will 3 be more glorified in the end than in the beginning.

34 a. The imagery of the yoke is already developed in the OT, where obedience to God is wearing his yoke like a docile draft animal, and rebellion is the opposite. The Torah as yoke is a familiar idea in Judaism and Jesus defined discipleship as taking his yoke (Mt 11:29), which could be a Christian counterstatement. Similarly Clement spoke of “the yoke of his grace” (1Clem 16: end) as if in contrast to the yoke of law. 2En 48:8, in its turn, identifies the yoke with obedience to Enoch’s writings. But here (ch. 34) the language is vague to the point of obscurity. It is of importance to discover whether this yoke joins two partners, and refers to marriage. The injunction about seed is then in strict poetic parallelism. The baffling passage in 2Cor 6:14–7:1 has affinities with Qumran as with 2En 34. In the OT idolatry and sexual immorality are hardly separable. In 2En 34 idolatry and miscegenation were the two main provocations of the Deluge. Sodomy (a gloss in P in vs. 2) is a later addition confusing the traditions from Gen 18f.

b. The inconsistency of the MSS (even within individual copies) in the use of verb tense forms shows up in the various translations. It remains uncertain whether the speech is prophetic prediction or describes what has already occurred. When are the events of 2En 18 to be dated in 2En’s chronology? Since 2En 70:1 describes a golden age in the lifetime of Methuselah, that is, between Enoch and the Flood, 2En 34 corresponds to Gen 6:1–4, and is still future. But against this is the Paleja tradition that Enoch’s righteousness was his refusal of the counsel of the giants, already abroad in his lifetime.

c. This transparent and age-old metaphor of sexual rectitude, present also in 42:11, is required by the context. It has not been recognized by modern scholars, and it eluded some scribe in the line of long MSS who omitted the clause. The poetic structure, preserved in A U etc., suggests that “yoke” and “seed” are metaphors of the same thing.

35 a. Very little is claimed for the translation of ch. 35 in either recension. The texts are parallel, but the numerous minor variations and uncertainty over the clause boundaries make all MSS rather unintelligible. In the present stage of research all individual readings should be kept in mind as options. Comparison with CD 1.11f. is especially inviting now that we know that Enoch books were in use at Qumran.

Kahana’s translation is worth considering, even though it smooths over many difficulties:

“And there will stand up from his seed another generation, the very last, and from them many will be very lustful. And in that last generation I will show to them the books written by your hand and by the hands of your fathers. And the keepers of the earth will show them to faithful men, those who do my will [cf. Lk 2:14], who do not call upon my name in vain; and they will report to that generation, and they, after they call upon them will be more glorious in the end than at the beginning.”

b. P has taken the opening words and placed them in its secondary ch. heading.

[A]

34

- 1 "I know the wickedness of mankind,
 how they will not carry the yoke which I have placed on them.
 Nor do they sow the seed which I have given them; but they have renounced my yoke, and they will take on another yoke; and they will sow worthless seed, and do obedience to vain gods. And they will reject my sole rule.
 And all the world will sin by injustices and crimes and 2 adulteries
 and idolatries.

Mt 11:29; 2Cor
6:14

Eph 5:12

- 3 •Then I shall bring down the flood onto the earth, and the earth itself will be overwhelmed by a great quantity of mud.

Gen 6:17

35

- 1 "And I will leave a righteous man (a member) of your tribe, together with all his house, who will act in accordance with my will. Gen 6:9
 And from their seed will arise a generation, the last of many,
 and very rapacious.
 2 Then at the conclusion of that generation the books in your handwriting will be revealed, and those of your fathers, by means of which the guardians^f of the earth will show themselves to the faithful men.
 3 And they will be recounted to that generation, and they will be glorified in the end more than at the first.

c. Lit. from Heb. 'iš šaddiq (Gen 6:9).

d. If the phrase "last generation" can be recovered from the chaotic readings—the agreement of A U with J P in this detail (apart from punctuation) is impressive—then we have a very firm link with Qumran, where dôr 'ahārôn is a specialized term for the end-time. With a few exceptions its biblical occurrences refer to "the next generation" or vaguely to the future. Eschatological connotation arises from symmetry with dôr ri'šôn (Job 8:8), "the olden days." Of further importance is the construction of "many" with the preceding adjective, not as in a new clause, as the usual translations have it. The postpositive conjunction leaves this in doubt. But if it is rabbim with the meaning "all," then the whole phrase means "the last generation of all."

e. The opening words of vs. 2 are unintelligible, in spite of a fair measure of MS agreement. Vaillant (Secrets, p. 37) connects izvode with eksagōgē (cours). Other attempts—"the extinction of that family" (Charles, The Book of the Secrets of Enoch, 1896); "he who has brought up that race" (APOT, vol. 2, p. 453), etc.—are no more satisfying. R agrees with short MSS (izvodē) whereas J P have merged the preceding preposition vo to make vozvodja. The development could go in either direction. The context requires the introduction of an authoritative teacher along with the restitution of the books of Enoch, to provide for the needs of the faithful in the end-time. We suggest that this is an act of God. In this setting izvodit(svo) = ekbasis is not as suitable as vozvodī, which has the connotation of "raise up" (SRY, vol. 2, p. 273). Cf. ēgeiren (Lk 1:69), wyqm (CD 1.11). Cf. ostavljū (vs. 1).

f. The "guardians" are not identified. One suspects angels, since various duties have been assigned to them, notably the preservation of the books for use in the end-time. But the expression is obscure. The context does not clarify the relationship between the "righteous man" and the "truthful men." The key is the meaning of strazie, in which the MSS agree. Is it "guard tower" or "watchman"? Is it the teacher-interpreter, or are the writings themselves regarded as defense works against the evils of the last age? More problematical is the meaning of zemstei, for here the MSS are not agreed. Most MSS, in fact, have the more familiar adjective zemnii, zemlënii, or the noun zemli (V N); the latter is the easiest reading, "of earth."

g. The ambiguity of ty, which translates either Gk. sy or ekeinos, is reflected in the verbs which go with it. J has skazi; P R skazjut. B lacks the pronoun. In the former case, it is Enoch himself (either redvivus [although the term is hardly suitable] or through his preserved and rediscovered writings) who will teach the last generation; in the second, "truthful men" (the same as the "guardians of the earth"?) who will do this. A U, reading a passive verb, imply that the books will be read to (or by) that generation.

h. P has "another generation."

[J]

36 |God commanded Enoch to live on the earth for 30 days, to impart knowledge to his sons and to his children's children. After 30 days he was taken up to heaven once more. Word "32."^a

"And now, Enoch, I am giving you a waiting period of 30 days to set your house in order [and] to instruct your sons (& all the members of your household) about everything from me personally, so that they may obey what is said to them by you. And they will read and understand that there is no other God apart from myself, so that they may carry out all your instructions and study the books in your handwriting [accurately and attentively]. And after 30 days^b I shall send for you my angel, and he will take you up from the earth and from your sons to me."

See 39:1.

37 |Here God summons an angel. Word "33."^a

And the LORD called one of the senior angels,^b terrifying and frightful, and he made him stand with me. And the appearance of that angel was as white as snow, and his hands like ice, having the appearance^c of great frigidity. And he chilled my face, because I could not endure the terror of the LORD, just as it is not possible to endure the fire of a stove and the heat of the sun and the frost of death.^d

And the LORD said to me, "Enoch, if your face had not been chilled here, no human being would be able to look at your face."

38 |Mathusal, having hope, also waited for his father, Enoch, at his bed, day and night. Word "34."^a

And the LORD said to those men^b who had brought me up at the first, "Let Enoch descend onto the earth with you. And wait for him until the specified day." • And 36 a. The sequence of material in the next four chs. is hard to establish. There are major differences between the MSS. We have followed the sequence of the chs. as found in MSS of the longer recension (R J P). Other MSS which have the text at this point lack ch. 38 and have apparently reversed the sequence of chs. 37 and 39. The result in short MSS—36, 39, 37, 40—is not as suitable as the ordering in the longer recension. Furthermore, ch. 38 is surely authentic; at least it does not fit the common theory that such additional materials are interpolations put in by the so-called "reviser" who produced the longer recension. Its place in the narrative is vital, and the shorter MSS are crippled without it. The disarray of the text at this point is shown further by the peculiar material which A U have at the end of ch. 36 (see vs. 3f., lacking in J P R). Even Vaillant recognizes that this is a patch job which makes U inferior. But it is not so certain that it is only an interpolation, as Vaillant (Secrets, p. 37) says concerning 36:3f., which he omits from his translation. At least vs. 3 has a claim to authenticity (see 67:2), even though vs. 4 is premature at this point. The placement of ch. 37 between chs. 39 and 40 in A can be understood. It explains how Enoch, who had, in fact, endured this ordeal, but who had himself become radiant as a result of his close exposure to the divine incandescence, was cooled down to protect ordinary mortals from the effects of his acquired effulgence.

Hence we follow the ch. sequence of J (which is the same as the sequence which Charles, in APOT, obtained from P), and rearrange the sequence of the text of A to fit it.

c. A had originally "thy," which has been corrected to "my."

d. Both A U read vAd. Vaillant (Secrets, p. 37)

[A]

36

- 1 "And now, Enoch, I am giving you a respite period of 30 days to spend in your house and to speak to your sons about me, and to the members of your house and to all those who are guarding their hearts. And let them read and know that there is none except myself. Deut 32:39; Isa 44:6; 45:5; 46:9
- 2 And in 30 days I shall send the angels for you, and they will take you to me from the earth and from your sons and they will bring you to me.
- 3 Because a place has been prepared for you, and you will be in front of my face^c from now and forever. And you will be seeing^d my secrets, and you will be scribe for my servants, since you will be writing down everything that has happened on earth and that exists on earth and in the heavens, and you will be for me a witness of the judgment of the great age." All this the LORD said to me, as a man talks to his neighbor.
- 4 And now, my sons, listen to the voice of your father, and to all that I enjoin on you today, so that you might walk before the face of the LORD and so that whatever you do might be in accordance with the will of the LORD.

37

- 1 But the LORD called (one) of his senior angels, a terrifying one, and he made him stand with me. And the appearance of that angel (was) snow, and his hands ice, And he refreshed my face, because I could not endure the terror of the burning of the fire.

2

And it is thus that the LORD spoke to me all his words. Ex 32:29

38

1

emends to věd(y)ja, hence connaissant. This is not indicated. The balance favors "see." See the n. on 30:16.

37 a. The coherence and cogency of the long recension in contrast to the fragmentary character of even the best short MSS give them a better claim, since the rule lectio difficilior potior could only be applied mechanically if texts never suffered damage. The two explanations of the need of refrigeration by the ice angel are not contradictory. In the first place Enoch was in personal danger of being sizzled by the Lord's incandescence. But it seems very late in the story to solve this survival problem. In fact the transformation achieved in ch. 22 has already adapted him to this environment. What is needed now is to cool Enoch down so that he would not be fatally radiant when he returns to human company.

b. Lit. "elders." I have not been able to find any basis for Charles's "Tartarus" (APOT, vol. 2, p. 453).

c. Does viděnije in its first occurrence mean "face"?

d. P R read "air." J's reading bezdušnago, which is quite clear, could be a mistake.

38 a. There is no reason why this ch., which is quite lucid, and in the correct place, should not be accepted as authentic. Without such a ch., short MSS have no explanation of how Enoch returned to earth. In 36:3f. in A U, God is talking to Enoch one moment, and Enoch is talking to his children the next moment. In long MSS the transition is quite smooth.

b. In 1En 81:5, three angels lead Enoch back to earth.

[J]

they placed me at nighttime on my bed.^c •And Methusalam was anticipating my 2 arrival, mounting strict guard at my bed.^c And he was terrified when he heard my 3 arrival. And I said to him, "Let all the members of my household come down."
 Then I said to them:

39 [The mournful^a admonition of Enoch to his sons; with weeping and great sorrow he spoke to them. Word "35."']

"[O my children, my beloved ones!] Give heed, my children, [to the admonition 5 of your father], to whatever is in accordance with the will of the LORD. •I have been sent today to you from the lips of the LORD, to speak to you whatever has been and whatever is now and whatever will be until the day of judgment.^b • Listen, my children, [for] it is not from my own lips that I am reporting to you today, but from the lips of the LORD I have been sent to you. For you hear my words, out of my lips, a human being^c created exactly equal to yourselves; but I have heard from the fiery lips of the LORD. For the lips of the LORD are a furnace of fire, and his angels are the flames^d which come out. But you, my children, see my face, a human being created just like yourselves; but I am one who has seen the face of the LORD, like iron^e made burning hot by a fire, and it is brought out and it emits sparks and it is incandescent. •But you gaze into my eyes, a human being equal in significance to yourselves; but I have gazed into the eyes of the LORD, shining like the rays of the sun and terrifying the eyes of a human being.
 But you, my children, see the right hand of one who helps you, a human being created identical to yourselves;^f but I have seen the right hand of the LORD, helping me and filling heaven.
 But you see the scope of my activity,^g the same as your own; but I have seen the 6 scope of the LORD, without limit and without analogy, and to which there is no end.

c. In 1En, as Milik suggests (The Books of Enoch, p. 14, n. 5), the angels bring Enoch back and deposit him "on the earth in front of the door of my house." This corresponds to the point of departure in 2En 1:10, for he had risen from his bed and gone outside and shut the door. The circumstance that Methuselah is waiting at the bedside suggests another version, in which the patriarch is taken away in his sleep. Or even in which the whole experience takes place in a prolonged dream. (See nn. on 2En 1:3.) His return to his bed is then the fairy-tale equivalent of waking from such a dream.

39 a. The sentimental title (cf. the title to ch. 55)

reflects a passing fashion in old Russian literature.

b. The day of judgment as the end point of history is a key idea in 2En. A number of different terms are used, designating it as "the Lord's" judgment or as "great."

c. Enoch's protestations that he is merely human accord ill with the transformation described in ch. 22, in spite of the precautionary measures applied in ch. 38.

d. Are these flames "words" (A etc.) or "angels" (J etc.)? The latter could be a mistake, influenced by Ps 104:4 (= Heb 1:7). But the "angels" written a(g)gely could easily be misread as "words," written gly. The fire from which angels are made in 2En 29 has a different origin.

[A]

2
3

39

1

See 36:4.

2 will of the LORD. •For, as for me, I have been sent from the lips of the LORD to 3 you, to speak to you whatever is now and whatever will be until the day of judgment. •And now, my children, it is not from my own lips that I am reporting to you today, but from the lips of the LORD who has sent me to you. As for you, you hear my words, out of my lips, a human being created equal to yourselves; but I, I have heard the words from the fiery lips of the LORD.
 For the lips of the LORD are a furnace of fire, and his words are the fiery flames which come out. You, my children, you see my face, a human being created just like yourselves; I, I am one who has seen the face of the LORD, like iron made burning hot by a fire, emitting sparks.

Rev. 1:19

4 •For you gaze into (my) eyes, a human being created just like yourselves; but I have gazed into the eyes of the LORD, like the rays of the shining sun and terrifying the eyes of a human being.

5 •You, (my) children, you see my right hand beckoning you, a human being created identical to (y)ourselves;^f but I, I have seen the right hand of the LORD, beckoning me, who fills heaven.

6 You, you see the extent of my body, the same as your own; but I, I have 48:5
 seen the extent of the LORD, without measure and without analogy, who has no end.

e. On the simile, see the n. on 22:1.

f. A U share the curious error namī against vamī of all other MSS.

g. There should be no doubt that the reading in A U—tēla, “body”—found also in B, is correct. It fits into the inventory of lips, face, eyes, right hand, and body. The word ōbijatie (A’s consistent spelling is better than that in the short MSS) is a rare word, meaning “range” or “compass.” When the first-known long (P) and short (N) MSS (versions A and B in APOT) are placed side by side, it is possible to suggest that the rather tedious recitation in P represents a tasteless expansion of the “reviser,” and that the short is original. But now A U have a virtually identical text to P, including the ideas most offensive to theological taste, esp. the remark about the size of the Lord’s body (cruder than the short version) and the puerile simile in vs. 3 (which short MSS censored out in 22:1). One can see why Sokolov maintained that U (to which we must now add A, not known to Sokolov) represented an “intermediate” recension. Furthermore, one can see the mind of scribes at work on the changes. The ancestor of short MSS defused the idea by changing one letter, tēla (“body”) to dēla (“affairs, deeds”), making it abstract. But the ancestor of V N etc. has simply excised the whole passage. On the visibility of God, cf. 48:5.

[J]

For you hear the sayings of my lips, but I have heard the LORD speaking like loud 7 thunder, when there is a continual disturbance in the clouds. •And now, my 8 children, listen to the discourses^h of your earthly father. Frightening and dangerous it is to stand before the face of an earthly king, terrifying and very dangerous it is, because the will of the king is death and the will of the king is life. How much more terrifying [and dangerous] it is to stand before the face of the King of earthly kings and of the heavenly armies, [the regulator of the living and of the dead].
Who can endure that endless misery?

40 |Enoch admonishes his children in all things truthfully from the lips of the LORD, just as he saw them and heard them and wrote them down. Word
“36.”^a

“And now therefore, my children, I know everything,^b for either from the lips of 1 the LORD or else my eyes have seen from the beginning even to the end, and from the end to the recommencement.

I know everything,^c and everything I have written down in books, the heavens 2 and their boundaries and their contents. And all the armies and their movements
I have measured. And I have recorded the stars and the multitude of multitudes innumerable. •What human being can see^d their cycles and their phases? 3

For not even the angels know their number. But I have written down all their names.^e •The solar circle I have measured, and its rays^f | 4
I have measured, the hours| I have counted; and its entrances in all the months, and its departures, and all its movements—their names I have written down. •The 5 lunar circle I have measured, and its movements which are in accordance with each day, and the diminution which it undergoes during each day and night in accordance with all the hours.

I^g appointed 4 seasons, and from the seasons I created 4 cycles, and in the cycles 6
I appointed the year, and I appointed months, and from the months I counted days, and from the days I measured off the hours and I counted them and wrote them down. •And everything that is nourished on the earth I have investigated 7 and written down, and every seed, sown and not sown, which grows from the earth, and all the garden plants, and all the grasses, and all the flowers, and their delightful fragrances and their names.

h. A U seem to be at fault here in using the participle “discoursing.” The switch to imperative is certain: “Listen to the one who is giving you advice about an earthly king!” Other short MSS (V N B B²) read the noun “advice about an earthly king”; or, perhaps, “the parable of the earthly king,” which makes a comparison a fortiori with the heavenly king, a strategy familiar enough from the Gospels. But the contrast is between instruction from an earthly king, which is terrifying enough, and teaching from the King of Kings. This only works if the earthly king is Enoch himself, who has been the other pole of the contrast all the way through the chapter. R J P have eased this problem by reading “earthly father.” The contrasting title of God has many forms in the MSS. A U read simply “the king” and V N B² are similarly brief. B has “King of Kings.” J is more elaborate still. The conjunctions in R point to “the King of Kings and of both earthly and heavenly armies.” P’s reference to “living and dead” could be a Christian gloss, since a similar passage occurs in Gregory’s oration on his brother Caesarius, namely the invocation o zōēs kai thanatou Kyrie! (PG, vol. 35, p. 788).

i. The question at the end of this ch. in long MSS is unanswered, rhetorical. In short MSS it receives an apparent answer, because ch. 37 follows at this point. The conjunction no, “but,” marks the link. Enoch was able to endure because an angel of ice cooled him down when he was in the presence of the Lord, and “that is how the Lord spoke all his words to me” (37:2). Short MSS thus have a flashback to an incident not reported in the preceding narrative. The problem is not recognized during the sixty days Enoch spent in the seventh heaven, including a tête-à-tête seated next to the Lord. As pointed out in the notes on chs. 37 and 38, the long recension is more logical, whether original or not.

40 a. The two recensions are substantially the same, except for a small lacuna at the end of vs. 3 in long MSS (a list of six nouns shortened to two) and larger lacunae (or non-interpolations) at vss. 6f. and 12 in short MSS (A U). Once more

[A]

- 7 As for you, you hear the words of my lips, but I, I have heard the words of the 8 LORD, like loud thunder, when there is a continual agitation in the clouds. • And now, my children, listen to the discourses of an earthly king(!). It is dangerous and perilous to stand before the face of an earthly king, terrifying (and very perilous) it is, because the will of the king is death and the will of the king is life. To stand before the face of the King (of kings), who will be able to endure the infinite terror (of that), or of the great burnings?ⁱ

40

- 1 “Now therefore, my children, I know everything; some from the lips of the LORD, others my eyes have seen from the beginning even to the end, and from WisSol 7:17–20
 the end to the recommencement.
 2 I, I know everything, and I have written down in books the extremities of the heavens and their contents. I, I have measured their movements and I know their armies. I have fully counted the stars, a great multitude 3 innumerable. •What human being can conceive the circuits of their changes or their movements or their returns or their guides or the guided ones?
 The angels themselves do not know even their numbers. But I, I have 4 written down their names. •And I, I have measured the solar circle, and its (rays) I have counted; and its entrances and its departures, and all its movements; (and) I have written down their names.
 5 And I, I have measured the lunar circle and its daily movements, and the diminution of its light every day and hour. And I have written down its names.

6

7

these are intermediate between J P R and the much shorter V N. Vaillant's (Secrets, pp. 105f.) mechanical assignment of these long readings (he uses R) to an annexe as “additions of the reviser” is unwise, because of the textual phenomena of the ch. For these are obvious “losses” due to homoeoteleuton, a mistake which abounds in these MSS. At vss. 6f. it is due to the repetition of “names” at the end of vs. 5 and vs. 7, while half of vs. 12 has been lost by repetition of the word “earth.” Exactly the same thing has happened in P, where vss. 4b–6 have fallen out between the repeated word “I counted.” There is no reason why everything in the longest MSS, J and R, should not be accepted as authentic.

b. The list includes many things noted in chs. 3–21, but there is no trace of the system of seven heavens, although the seventh heaven is mentioned in vs. 12. Apart from this and the concluding note on hell, all the phenomena are scientific and terrestrial. Compare the essay on the order of creation in 1Clem 20.

c. Here there can be no doubt that Enoch asserts:

“I know everything.” for he distinguishes what he has “seen” from what the Lord told him.

d. The superior reading of A, smyslitū, “understand,” has become, by error, smotrit, “look,” in R J; and P has reverted to the common vidē, “see.” More significant is A’s commencement of Prevrainyja (the word in J P R is different, but both probably mean paratropē or “declination,” although it is doubtful if an astronomical technicality of such precision is in mind) with a huge capital letter.

e. The word “names” was written twice in A, but one was crossed out.

f. A shares with U the erroneous reading lica, “face,” for luča, “rays.”

g. Vs. 6 would be more appropriate in the mouth of the Creator. It gives the impression that the “seasons” and “cycles” are units larger than a year; and the number 4 could point to the bisextile year of the Julian calendar. Philo did not interpret the “appointed times” of Gen 1:14 liturgically (their original meaning), but as the four seasons in the year (On the Creation §59).

[J]

And the dwelling places of the clouds, their organization and their wings,^h and 8 how they carry the rain and the raindrops—all this I investigated.

And I wrote down the rumble of the thunder and the lightning; and they showed 9 me the keys and their keepers, and the places where they go, where they go in and where they go out, by measure. They are raised by means of a chain, and they are lowered by means of a chain, so that he does not drop the clouds of anger with terrible injuries and violence, and destroy everything on the earth.

I wrote down the treasuries of the snow, and the storehouses of the 10 cold, and the frosty winds. And I observed how, depending on the season, their custodians fill up the clouds with them, and their treasuries are not emptied.

I wrote down the sleeping chambers of the winds, and I observed and I saw how 11 their custodians carry scales and measures. And first theyⁱ place them in the scales, and secondly in the measure, and it is by measure that they release them skillfully into all the earth, lest the earth should be rocked by violent gusts.

I measured all the earth, and its mountains and hills and fields and woods and 12 stones and rivers, and everything that exists. I wrote down the height from the earth to the seventh heaven, and the depth to the lowermost hell,^j and the place of condemnation,^k and the supremely large hell, open and weeping.

And I saw^l how the prisoners were in pain, looking forward to endless punishment; 13 and I recorded all those who have been condemned by the judge, and all their sentences and all their corresponding deeds.

41 |About how Enoch grieved over the sin of Adam.|^a

“|And| I saw all those from the age of my ancestors, with Adam and Eve.^b And 1
I sighed and burst into tears. |And I said| concerning their disreputable depravity,
‘Oh how miserable for me is my incapacity |and that of|^c my ancestors!’

And I thought in my heart and I said, ‘How blessed is the person who has not 2 been born, or who, having been born, has not sinned before the face of the LORD, so that he will not come into this place nor carry the yoke of this place.’^d

42 |About how Enoch saw the key-holders and the guards of the gates of hell standing.|^a

“And I saw the key-holders and the guards of the gates of hell standing, as large 1 as serpents, with their faces like lamps that have been extinguished, and their eyes aflame, and their teeth naked down to their breasts.^b

And I said to their faces, ‘It would have been better if I had not seen you, nor 2

h. The reading of JR (oustavy) could be correct, yielding both sostavi (P) and usta (A), “mouths.”

i. A U have the inferior reading “he” for “they.”

j. The texts of long MSS remain open to the possibility that this “hell” is in one of the heavens. There is no earlier episode in which Enoch was “brought down” to a more conventional subterranean hell.

k. B reads, not sudnoe but studnoe, “icy”; cf. ch. 10. In any case, 2En does not know about hell as a place of fire and brimstone, but it does feature fire in heaven.

l. A begins with “and I saw” written twice, with the second one crossed out. The verse ends with ouvidēkh, “I observed,” but other MSS read ouvédakh, “I knew”; this fluctuation occurs in other places (cf. ch. 8, n. d; ch. 30, n. p; ch. 40, n. c).

m. A U read bole. But pole (B etc.) is better. The error has gone further in JR: bolit.

41 a. To judge from Popov’s 1880 edition of P, the enumeration of Words 37 and 38 was lost. It resumes correctly with “Word 39” (our ch. 43).

b. The mention of Adam and Eve could be a Christian touch. Early legends about the harrowing of hell usually note that Adam and Eve were waiting for the arrival of the Ransomer. See also 42:5. But if “the last one” is Christ, his identity is well concealed.

[A]

- 8 And the dwelling places of the clouds, and their mouths and their wings, and their rains and their raindrops—I, I investigated them.
- 9 And I wrote down the rumble of the thunder and the marvel of the lightning; and I have been shown their keepers, and the routes by which they go up by measure. It is with a chain that they rise, and it is with a chain that they fall, so that with harsh violence they do not pull the clouds away and do not cause what is on the earth to perish.
- 10 I, I wrote down the repositories of the snows, and the storehouses of the ice, and of every spirit of the cold. And I, I observed how, at certain seasons, their custodians fill up the clouds with them, and the treasures are not emptied. Job 38:22
- 11 I, I wrote down the chambers of the winds, and I, I observed and I saw how their custodians carry scales and measures. (First they place them in the scales), and secondly in the measure, and it is by measure that they release them into all the earth, so that by a severe blow (they) do not
- 12 shake the earth. •

- From there I was brought down and I came to the place of condemnation, and I saw hell open,
- 13 and I saw there a certain (plain),^m like a prison, an unbounded judgment. And I descended and I wrote down all the judgments of the judged, and I knew all their accusations. Jude 13

41

- 1 "And I sighed and I wept over the perdition of the impious.

- 2 And I said in my heart,
'How blessed is he who has not been born, or who, having been born, has not sinned before the face of the LORD, so that he will not come into this place nor carry the yoke of this place.'

42

- 1 "And I saw the guardians of the keys of hell, standing by the very large doors, their faces like those of very large snakes, their eyes like extinguished lamps, and their teeth naked down to their breasts. Rev 9:1; 20:1
- 2 And I said to them to their faces, 'Would to heaven that I had not seen

c. By introducing "and" twice, P makes Enoch deplore both his own weakness and that of his forebears. In J's better reading, confirmed by R, he bewails the misery that has come to him because of his ancestor's failure. Similar moral puzzlement over the disparity between sin and its punishment is expressed in 42:2b, a passage not well attested.

d. 2En does not admit the possibility of any remedy for sin through repentance and reparation from the human side, let alone compassion and forgiveness from the divine side. It does not accept the rich OT and rabbinic teaching that mercy is God's essential attribute, more ultimate even than justice. Its harsh legalism is equally untouched by the Christian message that God in his love has provided a Savior for all mankind.

42 a. The state of the MSS in this ch. gives another good illustration of what happens to these texts in transmission. This time it is P (a long MS) that has lost a huge chunk (vss. 2b–13) at this point. Fortunately, the complete text has been preserved in J, confirmed by R word for word. A U are almost as long. The lacunae in vss. 2b, 7b, 10b, which could be Christian glosses in J R, and the longer one of vss. 4f., which are almost certainly that (cf. 31:2, 41:1), correspond to other short MSS as well, except that V N have suffered further dislocation.

b. With these guardians compare the Scorpion Men in Gilgamesh 9.2:1–9.

[J]

heard about your activities, nor that any member of my tribe had been brought to you. To what a small extent they have sinned in this life, but in the eternal life they will suffer forever.'

•And I ascended to the east, into the 3 paradise of Edem, where rest is prepared for the righteous. And it is open as far as the 3rd heaven; but it is closed off from this world.^c

And the guards are appointed at the very large gates to the east of the sun, angels 4 of flame, singing victory songs, never silent, rejoicing at the arrival of the righteous.

When the last one^d arrives, he will bring out Adam, together with the ancestors; 5 and he will bring them in there, so that they may be filled with joy; just as a person invites his best friends to have dinner with him and they arrive with joy, and they talk together in front of that man's palace, waiting with joyful anticipation to have dinner with delightful enjoyments and riches that cannot be measured, and joy and happiness in eternal light and life; •and I say to you, my children:^e Happy is 6 the person who reverences the name of the LORD, and who serves in front of his face always, and who organizes his gifts with fear, offerings of life,^f and who in this life lives and dies correctly!

Happy is he who carries out righteous judgment, not for the sake of payment, but 7 for justice, not expecting anything whatever as a result; and the result will be that judgment without favoritism will follow for him.

Happy is he who clothes the naked with his garment, and to the 8 hungry gives his bread! •Happy is he who judges righteous judgment for orphan 9 and widow, and who helps anyone who has been treated unjustly!

Happy is he who turns aside from the secular path of this vain world, and walks 10 in the right paths, and who lives that life which is without end!

Happy is he who sows right seed,^h for he shall harvest sevenfold! 11

Happy is he in whom is the truth, so that he may speak the truth to his neighbor! 12

Happy is he who has compassion on his lips and gentleness in his heart! 13

Happy is he who understands all the works of the LORD, performedⁱ by the LORD,^j 14 and glorifies him! For the works of the LORD are right, but the works of mankind—some are good, but others are evil; and by their works those who speak lying blasphemies are recognized.

43 |Enoch shows his sons how he has sounded out and written down the decrees of God. Word "39."'^a

"I, my children, every just deed and every just decree and every just decision I 1

c. The language suggests that this paradise is on the level of earth, even though Enoch "ascends" to it. Its location in the east, beyond where the sun rises, is more like the abode of the blessed in Mesopotamian tradition than anything said about Paradise in the rest of Enoch. It has connections with the paradise in the third heaven already described in chs. 8 and 9 (a harmonizing gloss?). Cf. 2En 31:2 and 2Cor 12:1-3. Cf. ch. 8, n. b.

d. Vaillant (Secrets, p. 107) thinks that "the last one" is a maladroit reference to Christ. Although this interpretation is possible, one would wish to ask why a Christian would be so coy. Vs. 4 gives the impression that it is the privilege of the last righteous person (the last Adam of 1Cor 15:45) who completes the tally of the elect, and so brings the history of mankind to an end, to bring out the first man and the first sinner.

e. The form of moral instruction by beatitude, familiar from the NT, has a strong eschatological thrust. It represents a remarkable fusion of the wisdom and apocalyptic traditions. It relates the form of the eternal reward to a person's temporal behavior. The same pattern applies to punishment. The golden rule is turned around; what you did to others (good or bad) will be done to you.

f. A U, lacking "and," probably mean, more correctly, that serving in front of the Lord's face forever is the reward for fearing his name.

g. The obscure expression is rendered more problematical by the textual variants (note the following):

[A]

you, nor heard about your activities, nor that any member of my tribe had been brought to you!’

Paradise

3 •And from there I went up into the paradise, even of the righteous, and there I saw a blessed place, and every creature is blessed, [and] all live there in joy and in

Gen 2:8
Mt 25:34;
2Cor 12:2

4

Gen 3:24

5

Lk 13:28–29;
14:16

gladness and in an immeasurable light and in eternal life.

6 Then I said, my children, [and now] I say it to you:

Happy is he who reverences the name of the LORD, (and) who serves ceaselessly in front of his face, and who organizes the gifts, offerings of life, and who will live his life and dies !

7 Happy is he who carries out righteous judgment!

Ezek 18:8;
Zech 7:9

8 (Happy is he who) clothes the naked with a garment, and to the hungry gives his bread! •Happy is he who judges righteous judgment for orphan and widow, and who helps anyone who has been treated unjustly!

Ps 10:18;
Isa 1:17;
Jer 22:3;
Zech 7:10
Prov 4:11

10 Happy is he who turns aside from the path of change, and walks in the right paths!

11 Happy is he who sows right seed, for he shall harvest it sevenfold!

Job 4:8;
Prov 22:8;
Hos 10:13;
Gal 6:7

12 Happy is he in whom is the truth, so that he may speak the truth to his neighbor!

Lev 19:11;
Zech 8:16;
Eph 4:25
Prov 31:26

13 Happy is he who has compassion, truth, and gentleness in his lips!

14 Happy is he who understands all the works of the LORD,

(and glorifies him);

and, because of his works, knows the Creator!

43

1 “•And behold, my children, having experienced^b the things that have been ordered

A U prinosa žizni
J prn'so seja žizny
R srn'so sie žizni
A U krai po zemli
MPr pravlemaja
B* kormstvuemaja
NV korystvuemaa
B skorstujaja

but it is hardly suitable. A U suggest that Enoch mapped the bounds of earth.

h. Cf. Eccl 7:1–3.

i. Lit. “created.” Once again 2En’s knowledge of God is confined to creation; there is no interest in history.

j. V N read “Lord God” at the end of vs. 14b and again in 43:1.

(Vaillant’s [Secrets, p. 45] ascription of krūmstvuema to R is not confirmed by Sokolov’s 1899 edition. Long MSS are all quite different.) Vaillant (Secrets, p. 45) conjectures krūmstvuemaja, although the verb krūmīstvovatii is not attested. He suggests a variant of krūmīčīstvovati (basanizō);

43 a. Here the recensions diverge. Short MSS are more ample in vs. 1; long MSS are more ample in vs. 2. (A seems to have a mutilated version of this.) A U retain the reference to the balance in vs. 1; long MSS have lost it, but they pick it up again in 44:5.

b. The MSS differ widely:

[J]

have checked out and written down,^c

just as the LORD commanded me.

And in all these things I discovered differences. •For, just as one year is more 2 honorable than another year,

{so one person is more honorable than another person}—

some because of much property;
some again because of wisdom of the heart;^e
some again because of singular intelligence;
some again because of craftiness;
some again because of silence of the lips;
some again because of purity;
some again because of strength;
some again because of handsome appearance;
some again because of youth;
some again because of a penetrating mind;
some again because of bodily appearance;
some again because of abundant feelings.

Even though these sayings are heard on every side, nevertheless there is no one 3 better than he who fears God. He will be the most glorious in that age.^h

44 |Enoch teaches his sons so that they might not insult the face of any person, small or great. Word "40."^a

"The LORD with his own two hands created mankind; in a facsimile of his own 1 face,^b both small and great,^c the LORD created [them].

And whoever insults a person's face, insults the face of a king, and treats the face 2 of the LORD with repugnance.

He who treats with contempt the face of any person treats the face of the LORD with contempt.

He who expresses anger to any person without provocation will reap anger in the 3 great judgment. He who spits on any person's face, insultingly, will reap the same at the LORD's great judgment.

Happy is the person who does not direct his heart^d with malice toward any person, 4 but who helps [the offended and] the condemned, and lifts up those who have been crushed, and shows compassion on the needy.

Because on the day of^e the great judgment. 5

c. A's reading ispisakhū is confirmed by MPr and R, against U's ispytakh. V N read napisakh.

d. V now confirms the already known variant of N: zymu i leto, "winter and summer," making the latter more specific than its normal "year."

e. Enoch's organization of time makes him sound like the Creator.

f. It is probable that the full list of twelve causes of diversity among human beings is original. It is not systematic; but A's version of the first five seems but a fragment. U N are even more mutilated.

g. For "wisdom" (mu(t)rosti) of other MSS V (N) reads ml(s)ti. "mercy."

h. The problem of diversity and inequality among men received the attention of the rabbis: "Are not all men created in the form of Adam, the first man? And still the form of each man is different from that of anybody else. Therefore can each and every one say: It is for me that the world was created" (Sanh 4:5; Yad Sanh 12:3).

44 a. This is the noblest ch. in the apocalypse. Portions of it have been incorporated into MPr. See the nn. there. Once more the text of A U, which does not differ much from J P R (which are virtually identical, although P has a few flaws), is on the earth, I have written them down. I, I have arranged the whole year.^d And from the year I have calculated the months, and from the months I have ticked off the days, and from the day I have ticked off the hours. I, I have measured and noted the hours.^e And I have distinguished every seed on the earth, and every measure and every righteous scale. I, I have measured and recorded them, (just as the LORD commanded me.

[A]

2 And in the things I discovered differences). • One year is better than another year, and one day than another day, and one hour than another hour. Similarly one person is better than another person—^f one because of much property;

 another because of wisdom of the heart;
 another because of intelligence;
 (and) craftiness;
 and silence of the lips;

3

Sir 10:22

(But there is) no one better than he who fears the LORD; for those who fear the LORD will be glorious forever.

44

1 "The LORD with his own two hands created mankind; and in a facsimile of his own face. Small and great the LORD created. Jas 3:9

2 Whoever insults a person's face insults the face of the LORD; whoever treats a person's face with repugnance treats the face of the LORD with repugnance. Prov 14:31; Mt 5:22
 Whoever treats with contempt the face of any person treats the face of the LORD

3 with contempt. • (There is) anger and great judgment

(for) whoever spits on a person's face.

4 •Happy is he who directs (his heart) toward every person, such as bringing help to him who has been condemned, and by giving support to him who has been broken, and by giving to the needy. Mt 7:2; Lk 6:38
 5 Because on (the day of) the great judgment every deed of mankind will be

"intermediate" between those long MSS and the considerably abbreviated V N.

b. The idea is remarkable from any point of view. The universal kinship of the human race is both biological and theological. Whatever the diversity (ch. 43), every individual is "the face of the LORD." Here the imago dei is the basis for universalistic humane ethics. This is not the original meaning of selem. Did it arise in Slav.? The text uses podobii lica, not obrazü or videnje, the usual terms for "image."

c. This imitates Gen 1:27, as the word order shows.

God created man in the image of himself, in the image of God he created him, male and female he created them.

The clause could be a quotation from WisSol 6:8, hoti mikron kai megan autos epoiēsen. In its original context this referred to difference in rank and responsibility. The thought thus resembles 2En 43:2, but not 2En 30:10.

d. A U lack "heart," which is present in all other MSS which have the passage.

e. The loss of "the day of" from A U is a simple scribal error.

[J]

every weight

and every measure and every set of scales will be just as they are in the market. That is to say, each will be weighed in the balance, and each will stand in the market, and each will find out his own measure and (in accordance with that measurement) each shall receive his own reward.

45 |God points out that he does not want from people sacrifices and burnt offerings, but hearts that are pure and crushed. Word “41.”|

“If anyone is prompt in performing a good oblation in front of the face of the LORD, then the LORD [also] will be prompt to accept it on his account, and he will not perform righteous judgment for him.”^a

If anyone makes lamps numerous in front of the face of the LORD, then the LORD will make his treasure stores numerous in the highest kingdom.

Does the LORD demand bread or lamps or sheep or oxen or any kind of sacrifices at all? That is nothing, but he [God] demands pure hearts, and by means of all those things he tests people’s hearts.

46 |About how an earthly king does not accept gifts from people who are disgusting or impure. So how much more is God disgusted with impure gifts; but rather he rejects (the giver) with wrath, and he does not accept the gifts. Word “42.”|^a

“[Listen, my people, and give heed to the utterance of my lips!] If to an earthly king someone should bring some kinds of gifts, if he is thinking treachery in his heart, and the king perceives it, will he not be angry with [him]? And will he not spurn his gifts?

And will he not hand him over for judgment? •If any person seduces another person into untruth by fair speech, but his heart is evil, will he not be conscious [of the treachery] of his heart, and (will he not) judge himself in himself, whether or not his judgment be true [how his untruthfulness is obvious to everyone]?^b

And when the LORD sends out the great light,^c in that (light)^d there will be true judgment, without favoritism, for true and untrue alike; and no one will be able to hide himself then.

47 |Enoch instructs his sons from God’s lips; and he hands over to them these handwritten books. Word “43.”|^a

45 a. J has the fullest text, the basis of our translation. P lacks “for him” and R lacks the negative. The whole clause (vs. 1b) is missing from A U.

46 a. V is identical with N (B in APOT) in having a huge lacuna after the end of ch. 45. It resumes at 49:2. A U, on the other hand, while much shorter than J P R, have parallels in all chs. A U lack 46:1f.; 47:2b; 48:1–4; 49:1. Once more Sokolov’s term “intermediate” is appropriate. At least it is no longer possible to regard 46:1–49:1 as a “long” interpolation. Just how much of the material now found only in long MSS of chs. 46–49 is original and how much was added by scribes is still an open question.

b. Besides the main differences between P and J R which we have supplied in the translation of vs. 2, P has other differences from J R in vs. 3. These can be seen in the A text of APOT. A U also differ in many details.

c. If “the great light” is considered to be a veiled Christian allusion to Christ as the last judge, it is very indirect. And it should be emphasized that it is present in MSS of both recensions side by side with many differences.

d. Note the confusion between “light” and “darkness.” MSS such as J, which read vū iōvm, with wide support (including MPp) require a par-restored by means of the written record. Happy is he whose measure will prove to be just and whose weight just and scales just! Because on the day of the great judgment every measure and every weight and every scale will be exposed as in the market; and each one will recognize his measure, and, according to measure, each shall receive his reward.

[A]

45

- 1 "He who is prompt with his oblations in front of the face of the LORD, the LORD will be prompt with his compensations.
 2 •He who makes lamps numerous in front of the face of the LORD, the LORD will make his treasure stores numerous.
 3 •Does the LORD need bread or lamps or sheep or oxen?
 But with this the LORD tests the hearts of mankind.

Ps 40:6; 51:16;
 Isa 1:11; Mic
 6:6-8; Sir 35:1-3
 Ps 51:10; Mt 5:8
 Deut 8:2; 2Chr
 32:31; Ps 22:6;
 139:23

46

- 1
 2
 3 For then the LORD will send out his great light, and in darkness the judgment will take place.
 And who, there, will be hidden?

Isa 9:2; Jn 1:8;
 3:19-21; 5:35;
 8:12

47

aphrase, either "in that (light)" or "at that (time)." But A reads vū imou, which could mean "in darkness" (the yer is omitted also at 65:9 and 67:1). In OE vū timu = eis to skotos, and its translation of Mt 25:46 eis kolasin reads timu instead of muku.

the dust of the earth
 the sand of the sea
 the drops of the rain
 the dew of the clouds
 the blowing of the wind

47 a. This ch. illustrates the textual relationships between MSS of the various traditions. As noted above, it is quite lacking in V N. A U have essentially the same content as long J P R. The latter have a little more detail, and the differences can be explained by the usual mistakes of copyists. A typical case is the list in vs. 5, which is as follows:

R, J, and P have each lost a word or two here, but A U's loss has produced "the drops . . . of the clouds"! The loss of the passage about the books in vs. 2b (A U) is clearly due to homoeoteleuton, because "LORD" is repeated. There is no reason why this should not be accepted as authentic; Vaillant's (Secrets, p. 109) assignment of vs. 2b to the annexe is not warranted.

[J]

“And now, my children, place the thought on your hearts, and give heed to the sayings of your father which I am making known to you from the lips of the LORD. •And receive these books in your father’s handwriting, and read them. |For the books are many;| and in them you will learn all the deeds of the LORD. There have been many books since the beginning of creation, and there will be until the end of the age; but not one of them will make things as plain to you as (the books in) my handwriting. If you hold on firmly to them, you will not sin against the LORD.

For there is no other besides the LORD, neither in heaven, nor on the earth, nor in the deepest places, nor in the one foundation.^b

The LORD is the one who laid the foundations upon the unknown^c things,^c and he is the one who spread out the heavens above the visible and the invisible things. And the earth he solidified above the waters, and the waters he based upon the unfixed things; and he (alone) created the uncountable creatures. |And| who is it who has counted the dust of the earth or the sand of the sea or the drops of rain or the dew (of the clouds)^d or the blowing of the wind?

Who is it who has plaited the land and the sea together with indissoluble bonds,^e and cut the stars out of fire, and decorated the sky and put in the midst of them . . .

48 |About the solar movement along the seven circles. Word “‘44.’”^a

“ . . . the sun,^b so that he might travel along the seven celestial^c circles, which are appointed with 182 thrones so that he might descend to the shortest day, and once more 182 so that he might descend to the longest day.

He also has two great thrones^d where he pauses when he turns around in this direction and in the other direction, higher than the lunar thrones. From the month Tsivan, from the 17th day, he descends until the month Theved; and from the 17th day of Theved he ascends.^e

And in this way the sun moves along all the celestial circles. When he comes close to the earth, then the earth is merry and makes its fruit grow. But when he goes away, then the earth laments, and the trees and all fruits have no productivity. All this is by measurement, and by the most precise measurement of the hours. He fixed it by measure, by his own wisdom, (that is everything) visible and invisible. •From the invisible things and the visible things he created all the visible things; |and| he himself is invisible.

Thus I am making it known to you, my children; |and| you must hand over the books to your children, and throughout all your generations, (and to (your) relatives), •and |among| all nations who are discerning so that they may fear God, and so that they may accept them. And they will be more enjoyable than any delightful food on earth.

And they will read them and adhere to them. •But those who are undiscerning

b. The portions of this vs. found only in long MSS correspond to the structure of the cosmos described in chs. 24–33. The “foundation” is that in 24:5, where A U also attest it!

c. The MSS agree in na bezivés[|]nykh. We would expect “invisible.” Perhaps the confusion between “know” and “see” has occurred here also.

d. This is R’s reading, confirmed to some extent by A U. P has “morning”; J has “of the wind,” a duplicate from the next phrase.

e. On the beautification of heaven see 30:4.

list of created things, which in A U breaks off at this point. Even J has a major stop at this point with a large capital letter to mark a new ch.

b. Vs. 1 contains another version of the 364-day year. This should be quite enough to vindicate its authenticity.

c. Are the seven heavenly circles (see also vs. 3a) connected with the sun different from the ones for the planets in 30:2? Do they mark the lines between the six tracks across the sky from the six eastern gates to the western gates?

d. If the two additional thrones are specific days in addition to 364 in vs. 1, they are obviously the solstices. The 364-day calendar could have been 48 a. The ch. heading of P seems to interrupt the

[A]

1 “And now, my children, place the thought on your hearts, and give heed to the sayings of your father (and) all which I am making known to you from the lips of the LORD. •And receive these books, the books in your father’s handwriting, and read them.

And in them you will learn the deeds of the LORD,

3 that there is no one besides the LORD alone, •

Deut 32:39; Isa 44:6; 45:5; 46:9

4 who laid the foundations upon the unknown things, and who spread out the heavens above the invisible things.

Ps 104:2; Isa 40:22; 42:5; 44:24; 55:13; Zech 12:1 2Pet 3:5

5 And the earth he solidified above the waters, basing it upon the unfixed things; and who alone created the uncountable creatures. Who is it who has counted the dust of the earth or the sand of the sea or the drops of the clouds?

Job 36:27; Isa 40:12; Sir 1:2

6 Who has plaited the land and the sea together with indissoluble bonds. Who caused the unknowable beauty (of the stars) to spring forth from the fire, and with them has adorned the sky.^e

48

1

2

3

4

5 “Who has made from the invisible things all the visible things, being himself invisible.

Heb 11:3

6 And deliver these books to your children, and the children to the children, and to 7 (all) your relatives, •and all your generations, who have the wisdom and who will fear the LORD, and they will accept them. And they will be more enjoyable to them than any delightful food.

Rev 22:18, 19

8 And they will read them and adhere to them. •But the reconciled with the solar year, or with the 365½ days Julian calendar. The surplus days (the extra thrones for the sun) could be regarded as non-days, to be ignored in calendrical computations. This problem was mentioned in 16:6; if these days were “added to the number of the days” they would “change the seasons.” If the 364-day calendar were used for any length of time, it would quickly produce chaos. Its excellent intention was to have all festivals fall on the same day of the week each year.

e. Here the solar calendar is presented synoptically with the names of the Babylonian (lunar) months. The third month is Babylonian simanu,

Heb. sîwân, Gk. daisios (R also knows the Egyptian Pamovus[a]). Cf. Siouan in 1Bar 1:8. Note that Semitic samekh would not have given Slav. C through Gk. Here we are close to Heb. sources. The month is roughly May or June, but being lunar it moves in relation to the fixed annual solar points of equinoxes and solstices. For 17 Tsivan to be Midsummer Day, it would have to be well into June, and it could not possibly happen annually. In fact the summer solstice is normally in Tammuz. The tenth month is Têbêt (Audunaios), which is close to J (Theveda) and R (Thivitha). P has Thevana to rhyme with Civana, but in the immediate repetition of the word P has the more correct Theveda.

[J]

and who do not understand (|the LORD|)^f neither fear God nor accept them, but renounce them, and regard themselves as burdened by them—[a terrible judgment is awaiting them]. •Happy is |the person| who puts their yoke on and carries it 9 around; for he will plow^g on the day of the great judgment.

49 |Enoch teaches his sons not to use an oath, neither by heaven nor by earth. And he points out the covenant of God, while they are even in their mother's womb. Word "45."|^a

"For I am swearing to you, my children— But look! I am not swearing by any 1 oath at all, neither by heaven nor by earth nor by any other creature which the LORD created. For (|the LORD|) said, 'There is no oath in me, nor any unrighteousness, but only truth.' So, if there is no truth in human beings, then let them make an oath by means of the words 'Yes, Yes!' or, if it should be the other way around, 'No, No!'"

And I make an oath to you—'Yes, Yes!'—that even before any person was in his 2 mother's womb, individually a place I prepared^b for each soul, as well as a set of scales and a measurement of how long he intends him to live in this world, so that each person may be investigated with it. •Yes, children, do not deceive 3 yourselves; |for| ahead of the time a place has been prepared there for each human soul.

50 |About how no one can hide himself who is born on the earth; nor can his achievement be kept secret. But he commands to be meek, to endure assaults and insults, and not to harm widows and orphans. Word "46."|

"I have set down the achievements of each person in the writings,^a and no one 1 can (|hide himself|) who is born on the earth, nor |can| his achievement be kept secret. I see everything, as if in a mirror.

Now therefore, my children, in patience and meekness abide^b for the number of 2 your days, so that you may inherit the final endless age^c that is coming.

Every assault and every persecution and every evil word |endure for the sake 3 of the LORD|. •If the injury and persecution happen to you on account of the LORD, 4 then endure them all for the sake of the LORD.^c And if you are able to take vengeance with a hundredfold revenge, do not take vengeance, neither on one who is close to you nor on one who is distant from you. For the LORD is the one who takes vengeance, and he will be the avenger for you on the day of the great judgment, so that there may be no acts of retribution here from human beings, but only from the LORD.

f. J reads "God" twice. We have restored "the LORD" from P R.

g. Neither of the competing readings ("plow" or "find") seems to make sense.

49 a. The textual problems presented by the differences between the MSS are not easily solved. On the one side, the blunt declaration of an oath in short MSS seems pointless. Why should Enoch feel obliged to swear to this statement on predestination, a point already made in ch. 23? On the other hand, the longer version reads like a tortuous bit of casuistry, needed to account for the fact that a godly person like Enoch takes an oath, which is a forbidden thing. Dependence on Mt 5:34f. or Jas 5:12 appears obvious, but not certain. The statement that God does not use oaths is not true, so far as the OT is concerned. In fact the teaching of Jesus seems to be that "Yes" or "No" should be enough. The repetition explained in 2En reflects the Jewish legal opinion that "Yes" or "No" became oaths when they were repeated (b.Sanh 36a).

b. The idea of a place "prepared" turns up several times in 2En. The statement of individual predestination seems to be particularly strong in long MSS. The balances mentioned in 49:2, however, seem to be different from those in 44:5. The former is closer to Dan 5:27; the latter close to Mt 7:2.

50 a. This casts Enoch in the role of a recording

[A]

undiscerning, who do not understand the LORD, will not accept them, but will renounce them, for their yoke will weigh them down. •Happy is he who bears their yoke, (and) grasps it; for he will find it on the day of the great judgment.

49

1 "For I, I am swearing to you, my children,

Sir 23:7-11; Mt
 5:34, 35; Jas
 5:12

2 that before any person existed, a place of judgment was prepared for him, and the scale and the weight by means of which a person
 3 will be tested were prepared there ahead of the time.

50

1 "And, as for me, I have put into writing the achievements of every person, (and) no one can escape.

2 Now therefore, my children, live in patience and meekness for the number of your days, so that you may inherit the endless age that is coming. Lk 21:19

3 (And) every assault and every wound and burn^d

4 and every evil word, •if they happen to you on account of the LORD, endure them;

and, being able to pay them back,
 do not repay them to (your) neighbor,

because it is the LORD who repays, and he will be the avenger for you on the day of the great judgment.

Sir 2:4; 2Tim
 4:5; Heb 10:32;
 Jas 1:12; 1Pet
 2:19

Deut 32:35;
 Prov 20:22;
 24:29; Sir 28:1;
 Rom 12:19; Heb
 10:30

angel, a task requiring virtual omniscience. All long MSS read clearly viždu, "see" (not "know," which competes with this word in other places). Even so, the extravagance of the claim could account for excision from short MSS. But they did not expurgate this idea everywhere.

b. Slav. prebudite ("abide, live"), found in both recensions, has the connotations of meneite, as used, for instance, in Jn 15. P's provoždaite has slipped into the common idiom "pass (the time)."

c. The MSS differ in the number of attributes of "age." hā'ōlām habbā' (?). P has one: A U V N two: R J three. With the extra word of the last pair, poslédnici (J), cf. "that generation" in 35:2.

d. Vaillant (Secrets, p. 51) by inference from Rev 7:16, restores the words "of the sun." There is no textual support for this, even though V N agree with A U in znoi. They confirm also the absence of vsjako, "every," before this apparent noun, a sign of common damage. This makes jazva (V has eza, the spelling in the Hexaemeron of John the Exarch) and znoi a pair. But the problem is solved by the reading which J and R share against the rest, even against P (izgonit, from which znoi could be an error; yet J R are not satisfactory; for izgoniti usually translates ekballein). This could be why P has replaced it by terpête, "endure," which J and R (but not P) have in vs. 4, along with short MSS. Note that similar equivocation exists in 51:3 over the same verb, poterpíte.

e. The additional material in long MSS could be no more than homiletical embellishment.

[J]

Let each one of you put up with the loss of (his) gold and silver on account of a 5 brother, so that he may receive a full treasury in that age.

•Widows and orphans and foreigners 6
|do not distress, so that God's anger does not come upon you;| . . .

51 |Enoch teaches his sons that they should not hide away treasure in the earth, but he commands to give alms to the poor. Word "47."|^a

" . . . stretch out your hands |to the needy| in accordance with your 1
strength. •|Do not hide your silver in the earth.| Help a believer in affliction, and 2 then affliction will not find you, in your treasuries and in the time of your work. •Every kind of afflictive and burdensome yoke, if it comes 3 upon you for the sake of the LORD, carry everything and put^b it off. And thus you will find your reward on the day of judgment.
In the morning of the day and in the middle of the day and in the evening of the 4
day it is good to go to the LORD's temple^c |on account of| (|the glory of|) |your| (|creator|). •For every kind of spirit glorifies him and 5
every kind of creature, visible and invisible, |praises (him)|.

52 |God teaches those who believe in him how they have to praise his name.
Word "48."|

"Happy is the person who opens his lips^a for praise |of the God of 1
Sabaoth|,^b and praises the LORD with his whole heart. •And cursed is |every 2
person| who opens his heart for insulting, and insults the poor and slanders his neighbor, |because that person slanders God|.
Happy is he who opens his lips, both blessing and praising God.^c 3
Cursed is |he who| opens his lips for cursing and blasphemy, before the face of 4
the LORD all his days.^d
Happy—who blesses^e all the works of the LORD. 5
Cursed—who despises any of the LORD's creatures. 6
Happy—who looks carefully^f to the raising up of the works of his own hand.^g 7
Cursed—who looks |and is jealous| to destroy another. 8

f. The reading of A U, sokrovište (= thēsauros) plōno (which corresponds to sarks), does not make sense, and cannot be rescued by adding {not} (Vaillant, Secrets, p. 51), for which there is no textual support. The MSS are in chaos at this point. See n. rr on MPr. A U are in error. V N neoskudno, "inexhaustible" (cf. B neoskudēmo), is probably a secondary correction. J P R agree in something like plāno, "full" (J is slightly damaged at this point), and this is surely correct. The general principle is that future rewards as well as punishments will correspond to behavior in this life. A U could then be trying to say that the future treasures will match the present use of wealth according to the flesh. The idea that he who gives alms deposits treasure in heaven is an ethical commonplace in Judaism and Christianity.

once more the intermediate character of A U, for they share with long MSS the full text of vs. 3, most of which is missing from V N (omitted because the point has already been made in 50:4?). Similarly vs. 2 could have been dropped from all short MSS because the idea is present in 50:5. Even so, vs. 2 could be a Christian homiletical embellishment. Note, however, that the term "believer" is věryni (pistos), not věrujuštii (pisteuōn). Doubtless it means a coreligionist. The practice enjoined in vs. 4 seems more Jewish than Christian; but vs. 5 is probably a Christian gloss. "Don't hide your silver in the ground" is a mere conceit of some scribe behind P; yet, in spite of its solitary attestation in the worst of all MSS, it could preserve details derived originally from Eccl 29:10.

b. The variants cross recension lines; note the following:

51 a. Detailed comparison of the MSS indicates

P terpēte

cf. 50:3f.

[A]

- 5 Lose gold and silver for your brother, so that you may receive a treasure (not) according to the flesh^f on the day of judgment. Prov 19:17; Sir 29:10; Lk 6:38; 14:14
- 6 (And) stretch out your hands to the orphan and to the widows, and according to (your) strength help the wretched, and they will be like a shelter at the time of the test. Zech 7:10

51

- 1 Prov 31:20; Sir 7:32; 14:13; 29:20
- 2 Sir 29:10
- 3 "Every kind of afflictive and burdensome yoke, if it comes upon you for the sake of the LORD, unfasten it. And thus you will find your reward on the day of judgment. 1Pet 2:19; 3:14
- 4 In the morning and at noon and in the evening of the day it is good to go to the LORD's temple Ps 55:17; Dan 6:10
- 5 to glorify the Author of all things. • Acts 2:15; 3:1; 10:9; Ps 150:6

52

- 1 "Happy is he who opens his heart for praise, and praises the LORD. •Cursed is he who opens his heart to insults, and to slander against his neighbor.
- 3 Happy is he who opens his lips, both blessing and praising the LORD.
- 4 Cursed is he who opens his lips for cursing and blasphemy, before the face of the LORD .
- 5 Happy—is he who glorifies all the works of the LORD. Sir 39:14
- 6 Cursed is he who insults the creatures of the LORD.
- 7 Happy is he who organizes the works of his hand, so as to raise them up.
- 8 Cursed—who looks to obliterate the works of others.

J R ponesête i otrěžite
 B poterpíte cf. P
 A U otrěšite
 MPr otrěšite

See n. tt on MPr otrěžati = afairein or apokoptein; otrěši = athetein, so either could be a variant of the other. If J R represent conflation, they highlight the contradiction that arises from 2En's ambiguous use of the imagery of the yoke.

c. A U agree with J P R in reading Khram, "temple." This must be original. V has domi bžji, "house of God," and B has cerkovi gospodnji, "the Lord's church," an obvious drift to Christian terminology.

52 a. A U read "heart." For once B agrees against them with J P R, which have "lips." V N B² have "his heart and lips." In J P R the word "heart" comes later on.

b. "God of Sabaoth" is a gloss of P. See 21:1. So is its comment on vs. 2, in the spirit of ch. 44. The use of "God" rather than "LORD" betrays the Christian scribe.

c. At the end of vs. 3 J P R read khvalja, "praising," whereas A U have slavja, "glorifying." See also vs. 5.

d. The wording "before [préd] the face of the LORD all his days" is common to all long MSS.

e. The reading of V, slaven (N also), is intermediate between A U MPr slavja, "glorifies," and J P R blagoslovja, "blesses."

f. The MSS differ widely in the verb used in this benediction. A has skladaja; J has sūgljudajui. All agree that the corresponding verb in vs. 8 is gljadaa (A), apart from the usual range of orthographic variants.

g. Instead of "the works of his own hand," P (alone) has "the fallen."

[J]

Happy—who preserves the foundations of his most ancient fathers, |made firm 9
from the beginning|.

Cursed—he who breaks down the institutions of his ancestors and fathers. 10

Happy—who cultivates the love of peace. 11

Cursed—who disturbs those who are peaceful by means of love. 12

Happy (is he who) even though he does not speak peace with his tongue, 13 nevertheless in his heart there is peace toward all.

Cursed—who with his tongue speaks peace, but in his heart there is no peace |but 14
a sword|. ^h

|For| all these things (will be weighed) in the balances and exposed in the books 15
on the greatⁱ judgment day.^j

53 |Let us not say, ‘Our father is in front of God; he will appear {in front of God} for us on the day of judgment.’ For there a father cannot help a son, nor yet a son a father. Word “49.”|

1

“So now, my children, do not say, ‘Our father is with God, and he will stand in front of <God> for us, and he will pray for us concerning our sins.’ •|For| there is no helper there—not even for any one person 2 who has sinned.^b See how I have written down all the deeds of every person before the creation, and I am writing down what is done among all persons forever.
And no one can contradict my handwriting; because the LORD sees all the evil 3 thoughts of mankind, how vain they are, where they lie in the treasuries of the heart.

So now, my children,^c pay close attention to all your father’s sayings, whatever 4
I say to you, so that you will not be sorry, saying, ‘Our father{s} warned us . . .’

54 |Enoch instructs his sons so that they may hand on the books to others also.
Word “50.”|^a

“. . . at that time, about this ignorance of ours, so that they may be for your 1 inheritance of peace. The books which I have given to you, do not hide them. To all who wish, recite them, so that they may know^b about the extremely marvelous works of the LORD.

h. The gloss “but a sword” is unique to P.

i. A U characterize the judgment day as gordago, “majestic” or “terrible.” All other MSS have velikago, “great,” as commonly in this work.

j. The words which Charles took to be the conclusion of this exhortation (52:16 of text B in APOT) we regard as the beginning of a new section (53:1 in our A). The text of V is continuous at this point, but A marks the onset of a new section quite clearly. In any case the words are a formula for beginning discourse. The grammar points to nyni de rather than wē’attāh or wk’(n)(t) of Aram. epistolary address. The vs. is entirely missing from long MSS, which begin a new ch. here. (P has its usual synopsis of the coming ch.) The words could have been lost by homoeoteleuton of “my children,” at the beginning of vs. 1b.

53 a. See ch. 52, n. j. The MSS are divergent, and the original text hard to guess. Note the variants:

V da stavilo svēta nastēduete

B da stavi svēta nastēduētū

A na stavilo svēta nastēduite

If some satisfactory explanation for “balance” could be found, V offers the best hope, since da, “so that,” is better than na, “on.” But the promise (“so that you may inherit the balance of light for eternity”) is not clear. Hence A U have attached the word “balance” to “injustice.” I doubt if svētū has acquired its secondary meaning of “world” in these texts, or, rather, it retains its exclusive connotation of this earthly world. The best interpretation is “light for eternity” (cf. 65:10). Ch.

[A]

- 9 Happy is he who preserves the foundations of the fathers, where they have been made sure.
- 10 Cursed is he who destroys the rules and restrictions of his fathers. Mt 5:9
- 11 Happy is he who establishes peace.
- 12 Cursed is he who strikes down those who are in peace. Sir 28:9, 13
- 13 Happy is he who speaks peace, and he possesses peace. Ps 120:7
- 14 Cursed is he who speaks peace, but there is no peace in his heart. Ps 28:3; 55:21;
62:4
- 15 All this will make itself known in the scales
in the book on the great judgment day.

53

- 1 "Now, therefore, my children, keep your hearts from every 2Mac 15:14 injustice in the balance; inherit the light for eternity,^a you will not say, my children, '⟨Our⟩ father is with the LORD, and by his prayers
- 2 he will keep us free from sin.' •
You see that the works of every person, I, even I, am writing them down.
- 3 •And no one will destroy my hand- Ps 94:11; Sir
17:15, 20; Heb
4:3
writing, because the LORD sees everything.
- 4 ⟨And⟩ now, therefore, my children, pay close attention to all your father's sayings, whatever I say to you, . . .

54

- 1 •" . . . so that they Job 37:14, 16; Ps
71:17; 139:14;
Acts 2:11
may be peace for you in (your) inheritance. And the books which I have given to you [from the LORD] do not mark them. For you will explain them to all who wish it, so that you(!) will learn the works of the LORD.

49 has already made the point that in the last judgment all will be weighed up in their own balance. This will be known, because all their actions will be recorded in Enoch's handwriting.

b. It is hard to believe that a medieval Christian "reviser" making a copy of the ancestor of J P R from a Vorlage similar to A U V etc. would have interpolated the first sentence in vs. 2, so categorically inimical of the Christian doctrine of Christ's effectual mediation, unless he went too far in denying Enoch's intercessory power. It is easier to understand a scrupulous scribe, writing the ancestor of short MSS, eliminating such an objectionable doctrine—that there is not help of any kind for sinners.

c. Notwithstanding P's ch. division and heading,

J begins a major new section with this conventional opener. See ch. 52, n. j. (J is damaged at the bottom of the page, but the key readings are certain.)

54 a. In view of the insoluble problems in ch. 35, it is a pity that its companion (ch. 54) is in such an unreliable state. What are they to do with the books? Since J R have the same reading as V N, they are not to hide the books (potaitē). P, omitting the negative, has the unique reading podavaite, "give them away." B seems to say "drink them in" (napite) ("sing them"?), but the first syllable is a mistaken reading of negative ne of other MSS.

b. The reading of A U, uvēdaite, "you will know," is inferior. All other MSS have uvēdajuti, "so that they may know."

[J]

55 |Here Enoch shows his sons and with tears speaks to them: My children, the hour for me to go up to heaven has arrived. Behold, the angels are standing in front of me. Word "51."|

"For behold, my children, the prescribed^a day has arrived, and the appointed time confronts me. It urges me on to my departure [from you]; and the angels who wish to go with me are standing on the earth, waiting for what they have been told. •[For] tomorrow morning I shall go up to the highest heaven, [into the highest Jerusalem],^b into my eternal inheritance. That is why I am commanding you, my children, so that you may do all that is well-pleasing^c before the face of the LORD."

56 |Methosalam asks from his father a blessing, so that he may prepare some food for him to eat. Word "52."|^a Methusalam answered his father and said, "What is pleasing in your eyes. Enoch?^b Let us prepare food in front of your face, so that you may bless our houses and your children (and all your household); and [your] people will be glorified by you. And thus, after that, you will go away, as the LORD wills." Enoch answered his son [Methasalam] and said, "Listen, child! Since the time when the LORD^c anointed me with the ointment of his glory, food^d has not come into me, and earthly pleasure my soul does not remember; nor do I desire anything earthly.

57 |Enoch commands his son Methosalam to summon all his brothers. Word "53."|^a

"But [my child, Methasalam], call [all] your brothers, and all the members of your^b households, and the elders of the people, so that I may speak to them and depart, as it has been predetermined for me." And Methusalam hurried and summoned his brothers.^c Regim and Riman and Ukhan and Khermion and Gaidad, and the elders of all the people. And he summoned them before the face of his father Enoch, and they prostrated themselves in front of his face, and Enoch looked upon them. And he blessed them; and he spoke to them, saying:

58 |Enoch's instructions to his sons. Word "54."|^a

"Listen, [to me] [my] children [today]! In the days of our father Adam, the LORD came down onto the earth [on account of Adam]. And he inspected all his creatures which he himself had created in the beginning of the thousand ages and when after all those he had created Adam.

55 a. See ch. 1, n. d.

b. The identification of the highest heaven as Jerusalem is a peculiarity of P.

c. We cannot agree with Vaillant (Secrets, p. 54) on setting aside the reading of U (blagoslovénie, "blessing"), now confirmed by A, on the strength of alleged agreement of B R in blagovolénie, "good will," across the recensions! But Sokolov (COIDR [1910], p. 140) reports B as blagoslovénie. While V's abbreviated reading is neutral, it seems to have an S. Justifying Novakovic's normalization of N (which we can no longer check) to blagoslovénie. In other words, it is a clearly divided reading between all long and all short MSS. Whether the short reading is intrinsically inferior is another matter.

56 a. The scene is reminiscent of Gen 27.

b. It is startling to hear Methuselah address his father by his given name (J R). P agrees with short MSS in the conventional "father."

c. The action here ascribed directly to the Lord was performed on his behalf by Michael (ch. 22).

d. There is confusion between brašno, "food," and strašno (A U), "unpleasant." It could be a secondary pun within the Slav. tradition, since other MSS read "food" solely. But all long MSS

[A]

55

- 1 "For now, my children, the prescribed day approaches,
and the appointed time constrains (me).
And the angels who will go with me are standing in 2 front of my face. •And I, tomorrow
I shall go up to the highest heaven, 3 my eternal inheritance. •That is why I am commanding you, my children, to do everything with a good will before the face of the LORD."

56

- 1 Mefusalom answered his father Enoch and said, "What is pleasing in your eyes, Gen 27:4
Father, so that we may prepare food in front of your face, so that you may bless our houses and your children and all the people of your house? And you will glorify your people. And thus, after that, you will go away."
2 And Enoch answered his son and said, "Listen, my child! Since the time when the LORD anointed me with the ointment of my glory, it has been horrible for me, and food is not agreeable to me, and I have no desire for earthly food."

57

- 1 "But call your brothers and all the people of {my} house and the elders of the people, so that I may speak to them and so that I may depart."
2 And Methusal hurried and summoned his brothers, Regim and Ariim and Akhazukhan and Kharimion and the elders of all the people. And he led them before the face of his father Enoch, and they prostrated themselves in front of him, and Enoch welcomed them. And he blessed them; and he answered them, saying:

58

- 1 "Listen, children! In the days of (y)our father Adam, the LORD came down onto the earth and he inspected all his creatures which he himself had created."

read "anything earthly" instead of "earthly food."
The matter is complicated by inconsistent use of the negative and variations in the idiomatic use of the cases. Enoch's categorical disavowal seems to imply that there is no eating in heaven, but there are fruit trees in Paradise, and ch. 42:5 has the traditional heavenly banquet of Jewish and Christian eschatology.

57 a. Enoch's impending departure provides the occasion for another round of teachings, this time addressed to a wider circle.

b. The MSS are divided between "our" and "your" and A has "my." crossed out and followed by "our," which is U's reading.

c. Enoch's children are as follows:

1:10A	1:10J	57:2A	57:2J
Methusalom	Methusalam	Methusal	Methusalam
Regim	Regim	Regim	Regim
	—	Ariim	Riman
	—	Akhazukhan	Ukhan
	—	Kharimion	Khermion
	Gaidad		Gaidad

58 a. Since this ch. has been incorporated into MP_r, albeit with considerable rearrangement, see the nn. given there.

[J]

And the LORD summoned all the animals of the earth and all the reptiles of the earth and all the birds that fly in the air, and he brought them all before the face of our father Adam, so that he might pronounce names for all the quadrupeds; and |Adam| named everything that lives on the earth.

And the LORD appointed him over everything (|as king|),^b and he subjected everything to him in subservience under his hand, both the dumb and the deaf, to be commanded and for submission and for every servitude. So also to every human being. The LORD created mankind to be the lord^d of all his possessions. And the LORD will not judge a single animal soul for the sake of man; but human souls he will judge for the sake of the souls of their animals.^c •In the great age^f there is a special place for human beings. •And just as every human soul is according to number, so also it is with animal souls. And not a single soul which the LORD has created will perish until the great judgment.^g And every kind of animal soul will accuse the human beings who have fed them badly.

59 |Enoch teaches all his sons why they should not touch an ox, because of the outflow. Word “55.”^a

“He who acts lawlessly with the soul of an animal acts lawlessly with his own soul. •For a person brings one of the clean animals to make a sacrifice on account of sin, so that he may have healing for his soul. If he brings it to the sacrifice from clean animals and birds (and cereals), then there is healing for that person, and he will heal his soul.^b

Everything that has been given to you for food, bind by four legs, so as to perform the healing properly. And there is healing and he will heal his soul. •|And| he who puts to death any kind of animal without bonds,^c (|puts his own soul to death|) and acts lawlessly with his own flesh. •|And| he who does any kind of harm whatsoever to any kind of animal in secret, it is an evil custom, and he acts lawlessly with his own soul.

b. The word “king” is found in both R and P, but at different points. See 30:12.

c. Slav. povinovente, “obedience,” of other MSS is preferable to pominovanie (A U).

d. The position of the word “lord” suggests that it is the subject of the verb, not the complement. It would be remarkable to give to man a title which, in this book, is used exclusively as the personal name of God. Nevertheless, the analogy of Ps 104:21 (LXX) makes it possible that J P R, which have gospodina, could be correct. In secular use the word is common enough as “master.” But B agrees with A U in lacking it, while V N have vlastela, “overlord,” perhaps to diminish the exalted title without adopting A U’s drastic measures and excising it.

e. In 2En 58:4 the souls of animals will be preserved to testify against humans; but they are not themselves considered to be morally accountable. This contradicts Jewish, Muslim, and even medieval Christian belief. The responsibility of animals is established by the prescription of penalties for their crimes (Gen 9:5; Ex 21:28). From these texts considerable jurisprudence developed. The Mishnah begins with rules for the constitution of courts for the trial of accused animals (Sanh ch. 1).

f. R reads vu věcě velicēm, “in the great age”; cf. 25:1 (A!). P has vū věcě cemū, “in that age.” J, by a simple error, reads vū velicēm velicē. Exactly the same thing happens in J at 61:2, but not at 65:8, where all MSS agree.

g. A U share a careless reading, the repetition of do suda (but A spells it differently—with izica—on the second occasion). Most MSS read čelověka, “man” (person), in one form or another; but B reads curiously do sada, “to the garden,” instead of do suda, “until judgment.”

59 a. Morfill (Secrets of Enoch, p. 75) inferred from the language of the ch. heading that its author believed that the crime being warned against was bestiality. Charles subsequently denied any such reference (APOT, vol. 2, p. 465). Each of the key words in the heading presents a distinct problem. Instead of the general term for “beast” (skot), used in the text, it has govjado; and for this noun SRY (vol. 4, p. 54) gives the meaning “ox,” as distinct from sheep. But R. M. Tseitlin (Leksika staroslavjanskogo yazyka [Moscow, 1977] pp. 21f.) does not consider it so specific. Its absence from G. P. Klepikova’s discussion (Slavyanskaya pastušes-

[A]

- 2 (And) the LORD summoned all the animals of the earth and all the reptiles of the earth and all the winged birds, and he brought them before the face of (y)our father Adam, so that he might give names to everything on the earth. Gen 2:19
- 3 And the LORD left them with him, and he subjected everything beneath him, in the second place, having likewise made it deaf, for all submission and for obedience to man. For the LORD made man Gen 1:28; 2:19; Sir 17:4; Ps 104:21 (LXX)
- 4 the (lord) of all his possessions. •Over them there will be no judgment for every living soul, but for (that of) man alone. •For all the souls of the beasts there is in the great Gen 9:5
- 6 age a single place and a single paddock and a single pasture. •For the souls of the animals which the LORD has created will not be excluded until the judgment. And all those souls will accuse (man) {until judgment}. He who grazes the souls (of the beasts) badly commits iniquity against his own soul.

59

- 1
- 2 •“But he who brings a sacrifice of clean beasts, it is healing, he heals his soul. (And he who brings a sacrifice of clean birds, it is healing, he heals his
- 3 soul. •And everything which you have for food, bind it by four legs; there is
- 4 healing, he heals his soul.) •He who puts to death any animal without binding it,
- 5 it is an evil custom; he acts lawlessly with his own soul. •Whoever does harm to any animal in secret, it is an evil custom; he acts lawlessly with his own soul.

kaya terminologiya [Moscow, 1974]) confirms SRY. Etimologičeskii slovar' slavyanskikh yazykov (ed. O. N. Trubačev [Moscow, 1980] vol. 7, pp. 74ff.) points in the same direction. There is no warrant, accordingly, for Morfill's "Flesh of Cattle" (p. 75), let alone Charles's "beef" (APOT, vol. 2, p. 465). But why should the scribe have selected such a specific term unless he had in mind, not offenses against animals in general, but something done specifically to a "bull"? Even more problematical is the reason given for this injunction—"because of the outflow." Isticanije is a rare word. It is not listed in SJS. MSD (vol. 1, col. 1146) records two occurrences, un glossed. SRY supplies two meanings: (1) "outflow," especially of blood; (2) [istecanie] "going beyond bounds." If the former (a synonym of istečenie) is intended, then the nature of this outpouring is not clear. It requires reading between the lines to discover a reference to the "bull's" penis, which is not to be touched. The choice of this verb also has to be explained. Three aspects of the improper treatment of animals are dealt with: feeding badly (58:6), sacrificing wrongly (59:2-4), and whatever unlawful acts are referred to in 59:1 and 5. The emphasis on secrecy in the latter, and the severity of the penalty (loss of one's own soul), show that something more wicked than neglect or even cruelty is involved. In biblical usage, both Heb. and Gk., "touch" can connote "injure," "taste" (food), or "sexual activity" (e.g. Prov 6:29; 1Cor 7:1). P's ch. heading resembles the latter in idiom, so bestiality is not excluded. This is the most likely evil to be done to an animal in secret (vs. 5). But the secret will come out at the last judgment, because the animal will lay charges. This suggests that isticanije should be connected with istecū, "plaintiff," and refers to the "accusation" made by the victim, as in 58:6.

b. Embarrassment over the topic, or simple incomprehension, could explain the differences among short MSS, for each family seems to have abbreviated it differently. V N have only vs. 1, 2a; B has only 2a, 2b, 3 (and then jumps to 60:4); A U have 2a, 4, 5. So among them, these three short families have preserved everything that is in long MSS.

c. It is not clear whether this slaughter is dietary, cultic, or magical. The rule for tying the beast, and the idea of "healing" (rather than say "forgiveness"—an idea not found in 2En) suggests magic.

[J]

60^a

“He who does harm to a human soul creates harm for his own soul, and there is 1 for him no healing of his flesh, nor any forgiveness for eternity.

[How it is not proper to kill a human being, neither by weapon, nor by tongue. Word “56.”]

He who carries out the murder of a human soul causes the death of his own soul, 2 and murders his own body; and there is no healing for him for eternity. •He who lies in wait for a person with any kind of trap, he himself will 3 be entangled in it; and there is no healing for him for eternity. •He who lies in 4 wait for a person in judgment, his retribution will not be slackened in the great judgment for eternity.

He who acts perversely, or says anything against any soul, righteousness will not 5 be created for him for eternity.

61 [Enoch admonishes his sons to keep themselves from unrighteousness and to extend their hands to the poor often, to give them some of their works. Word
“57.”]^a

“So now, my children, keep your hearts from every 1 unrighteous deed which the LORD hates.^b

And just as 2
a person makes request for his own soul from God,^d in the same manner let him behave toward every living soul, because in the great age I will find out everything.^e
Many shelters have been prepared for people, good ones for the good, but bad ones for the bad, many, without number.

Happy is he who enters into the blessed houses;^f for in the bad ones there is no 3 rest, nor returning.^g

Listen, my children, old and young!^h A person, when he places a vow upon his 4 heart to bring gifts before the face of the LORD from his own works,ⁱ and his hands did not make that thing, then the LORD will turn away his face from the works of his hands, (&and) he will not find the works of his hands. •But even if 5 his hands did make it, but his heart is complaining, the illness of his heart will not cease; making complaint without ceasing, he shall not have even a single benefit.

60 a. Most of this ch. has been incorporated into
MPr. See the nn. there.

61 a. In the synopsis supplied in P by way of ch.
heading, the good deed enjoined in vs. 2 is identified as almsgiving. The following text is not so specific.
In fact the “gift” discussed in vs. 3 sounds more like a votive offering. The weak exegesis in P’s annotations throws doubt on our interpretation of the ch. 59 heading as well.

In this chapter A U are once more intermediate in scope between V N (vss. 1–3a) and J P R. In fact A U have a sentence (vs. 1b) lost from long MSS.

b. Some short MSS share with long ones the lack of the prefix voz- on this verb (A U V N).

c. All long MSS have lost the second half of vs. 1b by homoeoteleuton, due to repetition of “LORD,” the last word in each clause.

d. All long MSS read “God” versus “LORD”
in the rest.

e. Slav. (cū-)věmi, “find out, know.” This claim to virtual omniscience could have been deliberately left out of short MSS.

f. Three different words are used for “dwelling”
in this verse—khranilišta, “shelters”; khraminy
(A U) or khramy (B V N B²), “temples”; domy, “houses.” See n. e on the Preface. These residences are not located explicitly in either of the paradises
mentioned elsewhere in 2En.

2En 61:2, by emphasizing how numerous they are, suggests that these are individual apartments for each departed soul, and the housing arrangements for good and bad are symmetrical.

Origen (On First Principles 2.11.6) describes the ascent of the soul through the various heavens.
The journey has a superficial resemblance to En-

[A]

60

1 "Whoever does harm to a human soul creates harm for his own soul, and there is no healing for him for eternity.

1Thes 4:6

2 (Whoever carries out a murder causes the death of his own soul ; and there is no healing for him for 3 eternity). •Whoever pushes a person into a trap, he 4 catches himself in it; and there is no healing for him for eternity. •And whoever pushes a person into judgment, his retribution will not fail for eternity.

Ps 7:16; 9:15;
35:8; 57:6; Prov
26:27; 28:10; Sir
27:29

5

Ps 101:5

61

1 "Now therefore, my children, keep your hearts from every unrighteous deed which the LORD hates, and above all from every living soul, as many as the LORD 2 has created. •That which a person makes request from the LORD for his own soul, in the same manner let him behave toward every living soul, because in the great age many shelters have been prepared for people, very good houses
, bad houses without number.
3 Happy is he who enters into the blessed dwellings; and indeed in the bad ones there is no conversion.

Sir 15:11-13

4 A person, when he places a vow upon his heart to bring a gift before the face of the LORD, and his hands did not do it, then the LORD will turn away the works of his hands, and he will not obtain 5 (anything). •Even if his hands did do it, but his heart is complaining, and the illness of his heart does not cease,
the complaint is without benefit.

Jn 14:2; Sir
39:25

2Cor 9:7

och's (cf. the Ascens, 3Bar, and the TLevi); but its meaning is altogether different, being purely allegorical. Origen does not enumerate the heavens. He does, however, call each heaven a sphere or globe; but this shape does not derive from physical astronomy; rather it is a purely rational deduction, for the sphere is the most perfect shape. Origen finds a biblical basis for all this by reasoning that each successive heaven is one of the "resting places" of Jn 14:2. The process is essentially intellectual. The soul's ascent is a process of education as it passes to higher and higher grades of enlightenment. 2En bears no trace of such synthesis with Gnosticism, unless it be in Enoch's reiterated claim that he has acquired knowledge of "everything." But there seem to be only two sets of living quarters, the final homes of good and bad.

g. All long MSS have "no rest" as well as "nor returning." The fact that pokaanije (metanoia) is not used points up once more the total absence from 2En of the fundamental Jewish-Christian belief in human repentance and divine forgiveness as the prime factors in man's salvation. But see 62:3 and the n. there.

h. Lit. "big and little"; which is a pure Hebraism. P R reverse the sequence, and could be more original.

i. R repeats the last clause; but not in identical words, so it is not a case of simple dittography. It has ego first time, svoeju the second, as in J P's one statement. There could be a distinction between "the works of his (the person's) hands" and "the work of his own (God's) hands," just as there is a comparison between the face of a person and the face of God.

[J]

62 |About how it is appropriate to bring one's gift with faith. And that there is no repentance after death. Word "58."^a

"Happy is the person who, in his suffering, brings |his| gifts |with faith|^b before the face of the LORD, (and) sacrifices them and then receives remission of sins.^c But if, before the time^d comes, he should retract his vows, there is no repentance for him.

If the (|time|) specified elapses, |and (then) he does it|, he will not be accepted,^e and there is no repentance after death.^f •Because everything before the time and after the time which a person does, both are a scandal before men and a sin before God.^g

63 |About how not to despise the poor, but to share equally with them, so that you will not have a complaint before God. Word "59."^a

"A person, when he clothes the naked or gives his bread to the hungry, then he will obtain a reward |from God|. •If his heart should murmur, it is a twofold evil that he creates for himself. It is a loss that he creates in respect to that which he gives, and he will not have any obtaining of remuneration because of it.

And the poor man, when his heart is satisfied or his body is clothed,^b and he performs an act of contempt, then he will ruin all his endurance of poverty, and he will not obtain the reward for his good deeds.

For the LORD detests every kind of contemptuous person, and every person who makes himself out to be great, and every untruthful word, stimulated by injustice;^c and it^d will be cut out with the blade of the sword of death, |and thrown into the fire.^e And it will burn|; and this cutting out has no healing unto eternity."

62 a. While 2En teaches a noble humane ethic in general terms (ch. 44), its doctrine of judgment is rigorous legalism (ch. 61). This strictness continues in the short text of ch. 62. If the extant text is essentially original it deals precisely with the necessity for the punctual fulfillment of vows. If the longer text of vs. 3 in J P R is authentic, the point is that vows must be performed immediately (cf. Num 30:2). Even worse is the retraction of vows; the person is not allowed to change his mind. If this is what pokajanije means, then it holds to the literal meaning of metanoia, and does not imply contrition. The point is important, and it goes with the problem of the meaning of otdanije also used here. The problem is that this word translates both antidosis and afesis. The original meaning seems to be strictly one of repayment, whether reward or retribution, as in 63:1. At the end of vs. 1, where long MSS have glossed odaaanie with grëkhom, V N have pokaanie adaniju, "repentance for remission." Here "repentance" is an intrusion, betraying the same drift to Christian vocabulary, even in short MSS.

Except for vs. 3a, which has a good claim on being authentic, at least in its opening words, most of the additional material in the long MSS appear to be expansions by a Christian. This is certainly the case with the interpolations found only in P, notorious for such glosses.

In early Rus the conventional Christian teaching on penance took firm hold. The Testimony of Vladimir Monomakh (1115) emphasizes repentance, tears, and almsgiving (cf. 2En 63:1) (PVL Part 1:153–163; see Adrianova-Perets [1950]). The main movement of long MSS in this direction is achieved by adding the phrase "for sin" to otdanije, thus achieving the phrase used in the Gospels: "remission of sins." It should be noted however that V (and N) also read adaanie grëkhovi.

b. The phrase "with faith," in the ch. heading and in vs. 1, is a Christian gloss peculiar to P.

c. Since the nature of the "gifts" is not specified, it is not clear whether they are sacrifices or any kind of votive offering. Compare 59:2, 61:4. Unfortunately we cannot reconstruct the cultic practices of the community which used 2En as sacred scripture, whether in actuality or only in the author's imagination. Hence we do not know whether ti sotvorit (here A U confirm the reading of J R, not in P), "he performs it," means "sacrifices" or simply "does."

d. The reading "before the time," preserved only by long MSS, completes the picture summed up in vs. 3. He cannot revise his vow before the deadline; nor can he count on an extension. Punctuality becomes the supreme virtue, in keeping with 2En's fascination with the exact measurement of time.

e. The difference between blagoslovitca (A U) and blagovolitca (J P R) occurs here just as in

[A]

62

- 1 "Happy is the person who, in his suffering, brings a gift
2 before the face of the LORD, for he will find remuneration. •

And a person

when with his mouth he appoints a time to bring a gift before the face of the LORD, and he does it, then he will find remuneration. But if the time specified elapses, and he carries out his promise, his repentance will not be accepted,

- 3 •because every delay
creates a scandal.

63

- 1 "(And) a person, when he clothes the naked (and) gives his bread to the 2 hungry, will find remuneration. •But if his heart should murmur,
then he makes a loss,
and nothing will be obtained.
3 And when the poor man is satisfied, and his heart is contemptuous, then he forfeits all his good work,
and he will not obtain (anything).
4 For the LORD detests every kind of contemptuous person."

Isa 58:7; Ezek
18:7

Prov 6:16–17

55:3. See the n. there. V has a different reading again: vüspimeti (cf. N). This contradicts the others flatly. "He (presumably God) will accept the (belated) change of mind."

f. The addition "after death" is common to all long MSS; it is also in P's ch. heading. The point (confirmed by vs. 3, even in long MSS) is that it is too late to fulfill a vow after the specified time.

g. While the first part of vs. 3 in long MSS has a claim to authenticity, the concluding phrase "before men and a sin before God" is dubious. The word "God" attracts suspicion.

63 a. This ch. shows more interest in spiritual inwardness than any other part of 2En. It could, however, be intended to counteract grumbling against rules of sharing in a community.

b. It is hard to tell what has happened at the beginning of vs. 3. There are two main traditions. B has a drastically abbreviated text, consisting only of vss. 1 and 2. It introduces the qualification by ašte že, not ašte li, which is generally used in other MSS. It is possible that the reading of A U significantly agreeing with J P R (apart from minor spelling variations), i ništi, is a mistake for this. If so, the ch. deals with only one matter—the spiritual conditions for effective almsgiving. This good deed can be ruined if the donor grudges the gift, or despises the receiver. This is the presentation of V N, which have ašte li egda at the beginning of vs. 3. But if the evidence of A U J P R is considered more original, then there are two sides of almsgiving in view. The receiver, when his misery is relieved, must not become haughty; otherwise he forfeits his reward for his previous endurance of poverty. The latter point is made only in J P R, either a gloss there or a loss from the other MSS.

c. The much longer text of J P R is probably due to a scribe. Note the use of muž, not čelověkū, for the second "man" (J R, not P); but A U V N use muži for "person" the first time, so the abbreviation could be scribal.

d. Apparently the offending member, the tongue, is cut out. Strictly speaking, ostrota is the point or edge, and ostrotoju could be intended as an adjective, "sharp." But one suspects behind this a word play, characteristic of the lurid punishments in early Christian horror accounts of hell (see n. e on ch. 7). The tongue must be punished by the "tongue" (the usual Heb. term) of the sword.

e. Since the reference to "fire" is a deviant reading in P only, it does not indicate that 2En has a conventional hell of torment in fire. See, however, 2En 10:2. The punishment of a vicious tongue with fire could derive from Ps 120:3; but Dives' reference to his tongue (Lk 16:24) could be germane, since he was guilty of contempt for the poor, just like the malefactor in 2En 63.

[J]

64 |About how the LORD calls Enoch up. And the people agreed together to go to kiss him at the place called Akhuzan. Word “60.”|

(And) when Enoch had spoken |these words| to his sons and to the princes of the 1 people, and all his people, near and far, having heard that the LORD was calling Enoch, they consulted one another, saying, “Let us go, let us kiss Enoch.” •And they came together, up to 2000^a men, and 2
 they arrived at the place Akhuzan^b where Enoch was, and his sons. •And the elders of the people and all 3
 the community came and prostrated themselves and kissed Enoch.
 And they said to him, “O our father, Enoch! May you be blessed by the LORD, 4 the eternal king! And now, bless your (|sons|), and all the people, so that we may be glorified in front of your face today.
 For you will be glorified in front of the face (|of the LORD for eternity|), because 5 you are the one whom the LORD chose in preference to all the people upon the earth;^c and he appointed you to be the one who makes a written record of all his creation, visible and invisible, and the one who carried away the sin of mankind^d and the helper of your own household.” •|And Enoch answered his people, saying 6
 to all of them|:

65 |About Enoch’s instruction to his sons. Word “61.”|^a

“Listen, my children! Before ever anything existed, and before 1 ever any created thing was created, the LORD created the whole of his creation, visible and invisible.
 And however much time there was went by. Understand how, on account of this, 2 he constituted man in his own form, in accordance with a similarity. And he gave him

eyes	to see,
and ears	to hear,
and heart	to think,
and reason	to argue. ^b

And the LORD set everything forth for the sake of man, and he created the whole 3 of creation for his sake. And he divided it into times:

And from time	he established years; ^c
and from the years	he settled months;
and from the months	he settled days;
and from the days	he settled 7;
and in those	he settled the hours;
and the hours	he measured exactly,

so that a person might think about time, and so that he might count the years and the months and the days and the hours and the perturbations and the beginnings and the endings, and that he might keep count^d of his own life from the beginning

64 a. V and some other MSS read četyrytysučsti muži, “four thousand men.”

b. A actually reads Azukhan, but the other MSS are unanimous that it is Akhuzan.

c. This astounding encomium, for which the early extravagances of the book scarcely prepare the readers, could hardly please a Christian or a Jew. The turbulence of the MSS betrays the embarrassment of the scribes, and short MSS have obviously been pruned. Even so, the key term (ōtetelja grēvi, V’s form) survives. The noun does not seem to be otherwise attested; neither the Prague Lexicon nor Sreznevskii’s dictionary list it. But the verb is common enough, rendering eksairein, afairein, etc. J P R use a different root, otimielj: otimatt also renders afairein. Here he carries off “the sins of mankind,” so neither reproduces the

[A]

64

- 1 And it came about, when Enoch had spoken to his children and to the princes of the people, that all his people and all his neighbors heard that the LORD was calling Enoch. And they all consulted one another, saying,
 2 "Let us go and let us kiss Enoch." •And they gathered together, up to two thousand men, and they arrived at the place
 3 Azukhan where Enoch was, and his sons, •and the elders of the people.
 4 saying, "Blessed is the LORD, the eternal king. Bless now your people, and glorify (us) to the face of the LORD.
 5 For the LORD has chosen you, |to appoint you to be| the one who reveals,
 who carries away our sins."
 6 [And] Enoch answered his people, saying:

Jn 1:29

65

- 1 "Listen, my children! Before all things existed, (and) before all creation came about, the LORD established the age of creation, and after that he created all his creation, visible and invisible.
 2 And after all that he created man according to his image, and put in him
 eyes to see,
 ears to hear,
 heart to think,
 and reason to argue.
 3 Then the LORD delivered the age for the sake of man,
 and he divided it into times:

Gen 1:27; Sir
17:3-7

- 4 and into hours,

WisSol 7:18

so that a person might think about the |changes| of the periods and their ends, the beginnings and the endings of the years and the months and the days and the hours, and so that he might wording of Jn 1:29, to which they are otherwise startlingly close. While A has the verb (ōijati grēkh našikhū), it preserves the previous title povedateli, "revealer," or at least martyr or keryks, whereas J P R have the more innocuous napistali.

d. The last statement seems to deny ch. 53.

MPr. See the nn. there.

b. Philo (On the Creation 62) recognizes the traditional five senses: sight, hearing, taste, smell, touch.

c. Short MSS have a version of this information in 43:1, a passage missing from long MSS.

d. On vs. 4 see notes on MPr, which supplies the superior reading "calculate."

65 a. Much of this ch. has been incorporated into unto death, and think of his sins, and so that he might write his own achievement, both evil and good.

[J]

For no achievement is hidden in front of the LORD, so that every person might know his own achievement and so that he might not transgress any one of his commandments at all and so that he might hold onto what my hand has written in generation and generation.^e

And when the whole of creation,^f visible and invisible, which the LORD has created, shall come to an end, then each person will go to the LORD's great judgment. •[And] then [all] time will perish, and afterward there will be neither years nor months nor days nor hours. They will be dissipated,^g and after that they will not be reckoned.

But they will constitute a single age. And all the righteous, who escape from the LORD's great judgment, will be collected together into the great age. And the great age will come about for the righteous, and it will be eternal.^h

And after that there will be among them neither weariness (nor sickness) nor affliction nor worry [nor] want nor debilitation nor night nor darkness.

But they will have a great light, a great indestructible light, and paradise, great and incorruptible. For everything corruptible will pass away, and the incorruptible will come into being, and will be the shelter of the eternal residences.

11

66 |Enoch teaches his sons and all the elders of the people how they should walk with fear and trembling in front of the LORD, and worship him alone and not bow down to idols, but to the God who created heaven and earth and every kind of creature—and to his image. Word “62.”^a

“Now therefore, my children, guard your souls from every kind of injustice, such as the LORD hates.^b •And walk in front of his face with fear [and trembling], and worship him alone. [To the true God bow down, not to idols which have no voice, but bow down to his statue]. And every kind of oblation present justly in front of the face of the LORD; but what is unjust the LORD detests.

For the LORD sees everything that a person thinks in his heart. Then reason advises him. (For) every thought is presented before the LORD [who made the earth firm and settled all the creatures upon it].

If you^c look upon the sky, behold, the LORD is there; for the LORD created the sky. If you look upon the earth, then the LORD is there; for the LORD founded the earth, and placed upon it all his creatures. If you meditate upon the depths of the ocean and on all that is beneath the earth, then the LORD is there. Because the LORD created all things.

Do not bow down to anything created by man, nor to anything created by God, so committing apostasy against the LORD of all creation. For no kind of deed is hidden from the face of the LORD.

e. The obscure vs. 5 is missing from short MSS.

f. Here “creation” is time; its termination corresponds to the day of judgment.

g. The MSS vary: rasipljatca (R); rasypletca (J); prilēpitca (P = Gk. synapagethai).

h. “Life” is a mere gloss in P.

i. Vs. 11, missing from short MSS, is attested by MPr. Vs. 11 is identical with 66:7 in J P R.

66 a. The preface of P includes a qualification, corresponding to a gloss found only in P in vs. 2. Two different words are used. The ch. heading is vyobraženiju; vs. 2 has načertaniju. These are rare, affected, words, different from the simpler terms obrazū (= skhēma, kharaktēr, morfē, etc.) and podobije (= homoïōma). Both these words are used in Scripture to describe man as the image of God. By contrast načertanije refers more specifically to a work of art, i.e. a picture or statue. In P's curious gloss to 67:3, načertanie is an inscription on a svitokū (= biblion). I have not found a listing of vyobraženije in any lexicon or glossary. The comments are evidently due to a Christian (?) ikon-worshiper, and contradict one of 2En's most fundamental tenets. Yet vs. 2 contrasts this lawful worship with idolatry (pagan).

[A]

[calculate] the death of his own life.

5

- 6 When the whole of creation, which the LORD has created, shall come to an end, and when each person will go to 7 the LORD's great judgment, •then the time periods will perish, and there will be neither years nor months nor days, and hours will no longer be counted;
8 But they will constitute a single age. And all the righteous, who escape from the LORD's great judgment, will be collected together with the great age. And (the age) at the same time will unite with the righteous, and they will be eternal. Mt 13:43
9 And there will be among them neither weariness nor suffering nor affliction nor expectation of violence nor the pain of the night nor darkness. Rev 21:4
10 But they will have a great light for eternity, (and) an indestructible wall, and they will have a great paradise, the shelter of an eternal residence.
11 How happy are the righteous who will escape the LORD's great judgment, for their faces will shine forth like the sun.ⁱ Mt 13:43

66

- 1 "Now therefore, my children, guard your souls from every kind of WisSol 14:9
2 injustice, from everything which the LORD hates. • Walk in front of the face of the LORD, and worship him alone. Phil 2:12; Eph 6:5

And bring every oblation in front of the face of the LORD.

3

1Chr 38:9; 2Chr 6:30; Ps 94:11; Prov 15:11

- 4 For if (you) look (upon the sky), the LORD is there; for the LORD created the sky. Ps 139:8-12
If (you) look upon the earth and upon the ocean, and if (you) meditate upon the things beneath the earth, the LORD is there as well. For the LORD created all things.

5

Jer 16:17; Sir 17:15

And no deeds are hidden from the face of the LORD.

b. V N have only vs. 1 (B in APOT). But A U have material which parallels most of the long text preserved by J P R. A considerable amount of these extras are doubtless due to later expansion, which has gone even further in P. Vss. 3 and 8 are probably commentary. Vs. 7 is identical with 65:11 in A. In vss. 4-6, A U present all the signs of being abbreviated from the more coherent, if somewhat verbose text in J P R. Thus the items in vs. 4 make a good set; and it is not likely that this was achieved merely by adding to the list in A U. It is worth emphasizing that, in contrast to J R, which agree throughout (J usually agrees with P against R), P has a shorter version of vs. 4, but its abbreviation has taken place differently. The fragmentary condition of P could have been suspected even before J R supplied the correct text. While certainty is scarcely to be hoped for in such loose transmission, many of the long readings have a good claim to be authentic, especially when, as here, we can see the process of abbreviation at work in short MSS. In the case of the mere inventory in vs. 6 it is more difficult to decide whether A U are truncated or J P R have been expanded.

c. In A U the verbs are third person.

[J]

Walk, my children,

6

in long-suffering,
 in meekness [honesty],
 in affliction,
 in distress,
 in faithfulness,
 in truth,
 in hope,
 in weakness,
 in derision,
 in assaults,
 in temptation,
 in deprivation,
 in nakedness,

having love for one another, until you go out from this age of suffering, so that you may become inheritors of the never-ending age.

How happy are the righteous who shall escape the LORD's great judgment; for they will be made to shine seven times brighter than the sun. 7

For in that age everything is estimated sevenfold^d—light and darkness and food and enjoyment and misery and paradise and tortures [fire, frost, et cetera]. All this I have put down in writing, so that you might read it and think about it." 8

67 |The LORD sent out darkness onto the earth, and it covered the people and Enoch. And he was taken up to the highest heaven. And it became light. Word "63."|

And when Enoch had spoken to his people,

1

⟨[the LORD]⟩ sent the gloom onto the earth, and it became dark^a and covered the men who were standing [and talking] with Enoch. •And the angels hurried^b and grasped Enoch and carried him up to the highest heaven, where the LORD received him and made him stand in front of his face for eternity. Then the darkness departed from the earth, and it became light. 2

And the people looked, but they could not^c figure out how Enoch had been taken away. And they glorified God. [And they found a scroll on which was inscribed: THE INVISIBLE GOD.]^d And then they [all] went to their homes.^e 3

d. The factor of seven is commonly used in the biblical tradition. The present passage seems to be inspired by Isa 30:26, which predicts that the eschatological sun will be seven times brighter than the present one. In 65:11 (A) the righteous will shine "like the sun." Several Christian apocalypses predict that at the parousia or in his present glory the face of Jesus is seven times brighter than the sun (Epistula Apostolorum 16; ApPet 7; ActsPhil § 20).

67 a. The veiling of the mysterious event in darkness resembles the evangelists' reports on the circumstances of Jesus' death. They do not have a correspondingly dramatic account of the return of the light. The GPet (6:22) does record the return of sunlight after the death of Jesus. The opposite is met in the Ebionite version of Jesus' baptism, according to Epiphanius (AdvHaer 30.13.7f., after the divine pronouncement of Ps 2:7 as in Lk 3:23) "and immediately a great light shone round about the place." There is no preceding darkness, but

[A]

6

In long-suffering,
in meekness,
and in the affliction
of your distresses,

Rom 8:35; 2Cor
11:27

suffering.”

go out from this age of 7

8

67

1 While Enoch was talking to his people,

About the taking away of Enoch

the LORD sent darkness onto the earth, and it became dark and covered the men who were 2 standing with Enoch. •And the angels hurried and (the angels) grasped Enoch and carried him up to the highest heaven, and the LORD received him and made him stand in front of his face for eternity. And the darkness departed from the earth, and it became light.

3 And the people looked, and they understood how Enoch had been taken away. And they glorified God.

And they went away into their homes.

the light is not simply an evidence of the closer approach of the divine glory, for the descent of the dove and the voice from heaven have already taken place. On the light of Jesus' baptism, see W. Bauer, Das Leben Jesu (Tübingen, 1909) pp. 134–39.

b. The words "and the angels hurried and grasped Enoch" have been lost from P by homoeoteleuton.

c. A U differ from all other MSS in omitting "not," thus reversing the meaning. Luke (Acts 1:9) emphasizes that Jesus' ascension took place in full view of the disciples.

d. The significance of P's curious gloss about the scroll is lost. In view of the many instances in which the roots vid and véd are confused in these texts, we might suspect nevédimū bgū* (Acts 17:23). Was there a tradition that the Greeks had profited by the missionary work hinted at in chs. 35, 54 and 70:1?

e. V N end at this point, with a suitable ascription: "To our God be glory forever. Amen."

[J]

68^a

Enoch was born on the 6th day of the month Tsivan,^b and he lived for 365 years. 1
 [And] he was taken up to heaven (|in the month|) Nitsan, on the 1st day. And he 2 remained in heaven for 60 days, *writing down all |those| notes about all the 3 creatures which the LORD had created. And he wrote 366 books and he handed 4 them over to his sons. And he remained on the earth for 30 days, talking with 5 them. *And then he was taken up to heaven again in the month of Tsivan [on the 6 6th day],^c on the very same 6th day on which he was even born, and at the very 7 same hour.

And just as every person has as his nature the darkness of this present life, so 4 also he has his conception and birth and departure from this life. In |the hour in| 5 which he was conceived, in that hour also he is born, |and| in that also he departs.

And Methusalam and his brothers and all 5
 the sons of Enoch hurried, and they constructed an altar at the place |called| 6
 Akhuzan, |whence and| where Enoch had been taken up [to heaven].

And they obtained sheep and oxen, and they summoned all the people, and they 6 sacrificed sacrifices in front of the face of the LORD.

And [all] the people |and the elders of the people and the whole assembly| came 7 to them to the festival, and brought offerings^d for the sons of Enoch. And they 8 made a |great| festival, rejoicing and making merriment for three days, |praising 9
 God who had given them such a sign through Enoch, his own favored servant, 10 even so that they might hand it on to their own sons, from generation to generation, 11 from age to age. AMEN|. ^c

69^a

And on the third day, in the time of the evening, the elders of the people spoke 1 to Methusalam, saying, "Stand in front of the face of the LORD and in front of 2 the face of all the people and in front of the face of the altar of the LORD, and 3 you will be glorified in your people."

And Methusalam answered his people:^c "Wait, O men, until (the LORD), the God 2

68 a. The chronological information, much of which is found elsewhere in the book, is lacking in A U B. Was it dropped because of the tincture of astrology in vss. 3 and 4?

b. Here, as in 48:2, the names rather than the numbers, as in 1:2. As at 48:2, R has Pamovousa (vss. 1 and 3) instead of Civana. P erroneously says that Enoch was taken up on the first day of Tsivan, but both J and R agree that it was Nisan (J has Nicana). According to this reckoning, Enoch's first ascent was at the vernal equinox, or near it (1:2).

c. The day of Enoch's second ascension was the portentous date of the Festival of Firstfruits. J. Morgenstern points out that "A far larger number of Israel in the traditional early history of Israel are linked to this day than to any other festival" ("The Calendar of the Book of Jubilees." VT 5 [1955] 56). How could a medieval Slav. scribe, or even a Byzantine monk, have known such a fact, and chosen such a date?

d. A U read "created," which could mean that "the people who had come with them to the festival also made (sacrifices)."

e. P ends here, with its own summary, shown in 69 a. The Midrashim of Enoch's descendants, mainly Methuselah and Melchizedek, occupy the remaining five chs. This appeared first in English as an appendix to the Morfill-Charles edition of 1896; but it was dropped from APOT. Bonwetsch also presented it as a distinct work. Vaillant followed Sokolov in recognizing its integral place as a continuation of 2En. It has no MS existence as a distinct work. For this reason we have continued the ch. enumeration. From ch. 69 five MSS (A U B J R) supply the text. Rum begins at 70:13, but J ends at 71:4. Charles did not identify the MS source of his translation, but it is evidently R. Vaillant's main text is U, with the variants of R in his annexe. Since we present A and J in our two versions, the complete information about these four witnesses is now available.

In ch. 69 the textual differences between long (J R) and short (A U) MSS are minor. Even so, they are worthy of close attention. The Hebraic (or at least pseudobiblical) character of the original is abundantly manifest and the exotic character of the Semitic idioms, due to literal translation, created strains in Slav. syntax. Scribal alterations often brought the language closer to the native style. One

[A]

68

1
2
3
4

(About the taking up of Enoch once more to heaven, where he had been.)

- 5 (And) Methusalem and his brothers, the sons of Enoch, hurried, and they constructed an altar at the place Azukhan, whence Enoch had been taken up.
6 And (with them) they obtained sheep and oxen, and they sacrificed in front of the face of the LORD.
7 And they (summoned) all the people to come with them to the festival; and the people brought offerings for the sons of Enoch. And they made a festival, and made merriment for 3 days.

69

- 1 And on the 3rd day, [in] the time of the evening, the elders of the people spoke to Mathusalem, saying, "Come and stand in front of the face of the LORD and [in front] of the face of your people,"^b (and in front of the altar of the LORD, and be glorified in your people."
2 And Mefusalam answered the people:)

of the most obvious Semitisms is the repetition of a preposition in a series of coordinations, rather than using the preposition only once to govern a series of coordinated nouns. Thus vs. 1 was originally: "Stand in front of the face of the LORD and in front of the face of all the people and in front of the face of the altar of the LORD." This is literal translation of lipné, repeated three times.

The noun "face" is redundant, since lipné means "in front of." If enōpion were the original of this préd would have been enough. The long MSS (J R), which are identical word for word, preserve the Heb. idiom perfectly; but short A U have not only lost the third phrase at the beginning of a considerable lacuna, they have simplified the idiom. They dropped the preposition and kept the redundant noun: "Stand in front of the face of the Lord and the face of his people." B has naturalized the idiom differently, but the telltale noun "face" remains. "Come with us to (na) the face of the Lord and to (na) the face of your people and in (vū) the face of the altar of the Lord." In vs. 5 (cf. 17 and 70:14, 18) J R retain préd, but B A U switch to v: "in front of them and in front of my altar." The fluctuation of svoego/tvoego is also revealing, since this option does not exist in Heb.

Other palpable Hebraisms are "the time of evening," "the elders of the people," and "the altar of the Lord." In fact one has only to glance at Kahana's translation to realize that literal back-translation into Heb. yields perfect classical narrative prose.

An important principle of text criticism follows from these observations, which could be multiplied indefinitely. The "correctness," i.e. originality of a reading, should not be tested by conformity to the norms of Slav. syntax. It is the opposite. The more Semitic idiom has the better claim, the more Slav. idiom is the result of domestication subsequent to translation.

b. The lacuna in A U at this point is made up by B.

c. B retains the Hebraic ethic dative, and kū with indirect object; J R have adjusted to the simple dative. In vs. 5 it is the other way: B J R keep kū, but A U have dropped it.

[J]

of my^d father Enoch, shall himself raise up for himself a priest^e over his own people.” •And the people waited until that night 3 in vain at the place Akhuzan.^f •And Methusalam remained near the altar and 4 prayed to the LORD and said, “O LORD, the only One of the whole world,^g who has taken away my father Enoch, you raise up^h a priest for ⟨your⟩ people, and give their heart understanding to fear your glory and to perform everything in accordance with your will.”
 Methusalam fell asleep,^j and the LORD appeared to him in a night vision and said 5 to him,^k “Listen, Methusalam! I am the LORD, the God of your father Enoch.
 Give heed to the voice of these people and stand in front of my altar, and I shall glorify you in front of the face of all the people, and you will be glorified
 all the days of your life, and I shall bless you.” •And Methusalam got up from 6 his sleep and blessed the LORD who had appeared to him.
 And the elders of the people hurried^l to Methusalam,^m 7 and the LORD God directed Methusalam’s heart to give heed to the voice of the people. And he said to them, “The LORD Godⁿ is the one who has given grace to these people in front of my eyes today.” •And Sarkhasan^o and 8 Kharmis and Zazas, the elders of the people, hurried and attired Methusalam in the designated garments and placed a blazing crown on his head.
 And the people hurried, and they brought sheep and oxen and some birds,^p all of 9 them having passed inspection, for Methusalam to sacrifice in the name of the LORD and in the name of the people.
 And Methusalam came up to the LORD’s altar, and his face was radiant, like the 10 sun at midday rising up, with all the people in procession behind him.^q •And Methusalam stood in front of the altar^r 11 of the LORD, with all the people standing around the place of sacrifice.
 And when the elders of the people had taken sheep and oxen, they tied their four 12 legs together,^s and placed them at the head of the altar.^t And they said to Methusalam, “Pick up the knife! And slaughter 13 them in the required manner in the face of the LORD.” •And Methusalam stretched 14 out his hands to heaven^u and he called out to the LORD thus, saying, “Accept ⟨me⟩, O LORD! Who am I, to stand at the head of your place of sacrifice and over the head of these people? •And now, O LORD, look 15 upon your servant ⟨and⟩ upon all these people. Now all the inquiries, let them come to pass! And give a blessing^w to your servant in front of the face of all the people, so that they may realize that you are the one who has appointed ⟨me⟩ to be priest over your people.”
 And it happened, when Methusalam had prayed, that the altar was shaken, and 16 the knife rose up from the altar, and leaped into Methusalam’s hand in front of the face of all the people.^x And the people trembled and glorified God.
 And Methusalam was honored in front of the face of the LORD and in front of the 17 face of all the people from that day.

d. B agrees with J R that Methuselah is talking about “my” father; not addressed by the people—“your” father (A U).

e. Short MSS have ereja, long ones žrūca. The same things occur in vs. 15.

f. The recensions divide consistently over Azukhan/Akhuzan.

g. Only B has a sound text: Gospodi vsego věka, cyi edinū. J is essentially the same, but R is defective. A U have only vsego sīa. They have also misread oca J, “father,” as ō oca.

h. With the idiom of “raise up” cf. 35:2. A U read javi, “reveal.” It anticipates the verb in vs. 5.

i. The addition of the negative makes A U’s reading inferior.

j. At the beginning of vs. 5, J alone has adjusted the Semitic syntax by putting the subject before the verb.

k. These details imitate the patriarchal narratives of Gen.

l. “Hurried” is a Hebraism, still present in A U, at vs. 8 (but B has jadriša there).

m. The use of kū (= ‘el) with a verb of motion is another Hebraism. This phenomenon abounds (with frequent adjustments to Slav. as textual variants). No more examples will be cited.

[A]

- “Oh the LORD the God of your father Enoch, it is he himself who will raise up
 3 a priest over his own people.” •And the people waited all that night
 4 at the place Azukhan. •And Mathusalom remained {the LORD} near the 1Sa 2:35 altar and prayed to the LORD and said, “the whole dream(?), who has selected {from} our father Enoch, you LORD, make known a priest for your people, and in a heart that does not understand your glory and to perform everything in accordance with your will.”
 5 And Mekhusalom fell asleep, and the LORD appeared to him in a night vision and 1Kgs 3:13 said to him, “Listen, Mefusalom! I am the LORD, the God of your father Enoch.
 Give heed to the voice of your people and stand in front of them and in front of my altar, and I shall glorify you in front of the face of this people of mine
 6 all the days of your life.” •And Mefusalom got up from his sleep and blessed him who had appeared to him.
 7 And the elders of the people came up to Mefusalom in the morning, and the LORD God directed Mefusalom’s heart to give heed to the voice of the people. And he said to them, “The LORD our God, what is good 8 in his eyes, may he do it over this people of his.” •And Sarsan and Kharmis and Zazas, the elders of the people, hurried and attired Mefusalom in the choice garment and placed a blazing crown on his head.
 9 And the people hurried, and the people brought sheep and oxen and some birds, all of them having passed inspection, for Mefusalim to sacrifice in front of the face of the LORD and in front of the face of the people.
 10 And Mefusalim came up to the LORD’s altar, like the morning star when it 1Kgs 8:22,54 rises, with all the 11 people in procession behind him. •And Methusalom stood in front of the altar with all the people around the altar.
 12 And the elders of the people, taking sheep and oxen, tied (their) 4 legs together, and placed (them) at the head of the 13 altar. •And the people said to Methusalim, “Pick up the knife! And slaughter 14 them in the required manner in the face of the LORD.” •And Mefusalom stretching out his hands to heaven, called out to the LORD, saying, “Alas for me, O LORD! Who am I, to stand at the head of your 15 altar (and) at the head of all your people? •And now, O LORD, LORD, look favorably upon your servant and upon the head of all your people, and upon all (their) tiny cares. And give grace to your servant in front of the face of this people, so that they may realize that you are the one who has appointed a priest for your people.”
 16 And it happened that, while Methusalom was praying, the altar was shaken, and the knife rose up from the altar, and leaped into Methusalom’s hands in front of the face of all the people. And the people trembled and glorified the LORD.
 17 And Methusalom was honored in front of the face of the LORD and in front of the face of all the people from that day.

n. B has “your” where A U have “our.” J R lack the pronoun.

o. R agrees with other MSS that the name of the first elder is Sarsan. B has only two: Sarsi and Kharlis. Short MSS have “and,” so the elders are additional to the persons named.

p. The participle use of ot (= min, “from”), “some,” is a Hebraism.

q. Several features of the following ceremonial are reminiscent of the account in 1Kgs 8.

r. All MSS use oltarja the first time and most again in vs. 12, but only A U the second. The others have zertvennikä, i.e. B agrees with J R in this variant. Cf. the corresponding pair of words used for “priest.”

s. The rule of 59:3. See 70:20.

t. “The head of the altar” is a literal Hebraism.

u. A similar gesture, described in the same words, is performed by John at the raising of Stacteus, an incident in the Acts of John (James, ANT, p. 260).

v. B shares with J R the retention of the self-designation “your slave,” another Hebraism.

w. There is an interesting textual split here: “Blessing” is read by J (long) and B (short); “grace” is read by R (long) and A U (short).

x. The syntax of this verse is biblical Heb.

[J]

And Methusalam took the knife^y and slaughtered all that had been brought by the 18 people. And (the people) rejoiced greatly, and they made merry in front of the face of the LORD and in front of the face of Methusalam on that day. •And then 19 the people went off to their own shelters, each one of them.^z

70

And Methusalam began to stand^a at the altar in front of the face of the LORD, and 1 all the people, from that day for 10 years, hoping in an eternal inheritance, and having thoroughly taught all the earth and all his own people.^c

And there was not found one single person turning himself away in vanity from the LORD during all the days that Methusalam lived. •And the LORD blessed Methusalam and was gratified by his 2 sacrifices and by his gifts and by every kind of service which he performed in front of the face of the LORD. •And when the time of the departure days of 3 Methusalam arrived, the LORD appeared to him in a night vision and said to him, “Listen, Methusalam! I am the LORD, the God of your father Enoch. I want you to know^d that the days of your life have come to an end, and the day of your rest has come close.^e
Call Nir, the second son of your son Lamekh, born after Noe, and invest him in 4 the garments of your consecration.^f And make him stand at my altar. And tell him everything that will happen in his days, for the timé of the destruction of all the earth, and of every human being and of everything that lives^g on the earth, is drawing near. •For in his days there will be a very great breakdown 5 on the earth, for each one has begun to envy his neighbor, and people against people have destroyed boundaries, and the nation wages war. And all the earth is filled with vileness and blood and every kind of evil. •(And) even more than that, they have abandoned 6 their LORD,^h and they will do obeisance to unreal gods, and to the vault above the sky, and to what moves above the earth, and to the waves of the sea. And the adversaryⁱ will make himself great and will be delighted with his deeds, to my great provocation.^j

And all the earth will change its seasons (and every tree and every fruit will 7 change their seeds)^k anticipating the time of destruction. And all the races will change on the earth by my conflagration.
Then I shall give the command. The Bottomless will be poured out over the earth,^l 8

y. Short MSS faithfully reproduce the brachylogy of the anaphoric pronoun object which is standard grammar of the Heb. verb lāqah. J R have been obliged to supply the object “knife.”

z. The language of 1Kgs 8:66. The Heb. distributive construction is preserved, along with the term “tent.” This time it is A U that have adapted to domy, “houses.” B has removed the distributive pronoun, but retains krovyy, “shelters,” showing that this is original.

70 a. The verb form “began to stand” is a Hebraism lost from short MSS. On the other hand short MSS have retained the Heb. idiom “head,” which J R have either eliminated or changed to “face.”

b. Vaillant (Secrets, pp. xv, 68) has tried to reconstruct the original numeral from ūpv (B), a Cyrillic numeral, since it uses īzica, or ūčv (U), ččv (A); assuming Glagolitic, 482, 492, 1092, respectively, assuming A to be a careless writing of čuv. A confirms Vaillant’s suspicion that the first numeral was 1000. He emended to čupv* = 1482. This is close to the dating (anno mundi) of Enoch in LXX figures. But the use of īzica forbids the reading of č as Glagolitic.

c. B supports A U’s variant “those who believe in the Lord” (not in J R), and in addition repeats “and there was not found a person deserting the Lord” between this and the following remark about converting apostates. The shorter texts can thus be explained by the usual causes already mentioned.

d. We have followed B, věděti ti velju, because it agrees in general with J R. The reading in which A U agree—vidite (“see”) volju (“will,” a noun)—seems to be a meaningless corruption of the other.

[A]

- 18 And Methusalom took the knife and slaughtered all that had been brought by the people. And the people rejoiced and they made merry in front of the face 19 of the LORD and in front of the face of Methusalom on that day. •And then they went off to their houses. 1Kgs 8:66

70

- 1 And Mefusalom stood at the head of the altar and at the head of all the people from that day onward. In 492^b he explored the earth, and he sought out all those who had believed in the LORD. And those who had apostatized he corrected them and converted them. And there was not found one person turning himself away from the LORD during all the days that
2 Methusalom lived. •And the LORD blessed Methusalom (and was gratified) by his sacrifices and by his gifts and by every kind of service which he performed in
3 front of the face of the LORD. •And after the ending of the days of Methusalom, the LORD appeared to him in a night vision and said to him, "Listen, Methusalom! I am (the LORD), the God of your father Enoch. (I want you to know) that the days of your life have come to an end, and the day of your rest has come close.
4 Call Nir, the second son of your son Lamekh, and invest him in the garments of your consecration. And make him stand at my altar. And you will tell him everything that will happen (to him) in his days, for the time is drawing near for the destruction of all the earth, and of every human being and of everything that moves on
5 the earth. •For in his days there will be a great confusion on the earth, for each person has become envious of his neighbor, and people will sin against people. And nation will wage war against nation. And all the earth will be filled
6 with blood and with very evil confusion. •Even more than that, they will abandon their Creator, and they will do obeisance to that which is fixed in the sky, and to what moves above the earth, and the waves of the sea. And the adversary will make himself great and will be delighted with their deeds, to my provocation.
7 All the earth will change its order, and every fruit and every herb will change their times, for they will anticipate the time of destruction. And all the nations will change on the earth, and all my desire.
8 And then I, I shall command the Bottomless. It will come out and rush out Gen 7:11

e. Note the poetic parallelism at the end of vs. 3.

f. "The garments of your consecration" is a Hebraism.

g. J has lost a phrase by homoeoteleuton, due to repetition of "earth." R agrees with A U B, except that it reads "lives" instead of "moves."

h. "Creator" (tvorca) although not used elsewhere, is better than "LORD" (J), the usual term: (1) because R has it; (2) because "LORD" is not usually modified in any way, being used as a pure proper noun.

i. Slav. protivnik, "adversary," or "opponent," is a rare title for the devil.

j. The variations in spelling of the related words at the ends of vs. 6f. illustrate the point that slight changes in spelling can cause substantial changes in meaning; and sometimes a MS otherwise inferior (here J) might have the best reading.

vs. 6

vs. 7

J ražezhenia	žeženie	} vexation desire sorrow
R ražadalenia	želanie
A raždelenie	želanie
U raždelenie	želanie
B raždenie	žalénie

k. R says that each fruit will change its "seed" (sémena), not "time" (vrémēna). J's loss of all words between the two occurrences of the phrase vrémēna cvoja (homoeoteleuton once again) proves that this is the correct reading. Furthermore, it is this disruption of "time" that would impress holders of 2En's doctrine that the end was near. Was this disruption of time due to the use of the impossibly theoretical 364-day year calendar? But see our qualifying notes on ch. 48.

l. The imagery of vs. 8 is drawn from Gen 7:11.

[J]

and the great storages of the waters of heaven will come down onto the earth (in a great substance and in accordance with the first substance).^m
 And the whole constitution of the earth will perish, and all the earth will quake, 9 and it will be deprived of its strength from that day. •Then I will preserve the son 10 of your son Lamekh, his first son, Noe. And from his seed I will raise up another world, and his seed will exist forever, until the second destruction when once againⁿ mankind will have committed sin in front of my face.”
 And Methusalam leaped up from his sleep, and his dream was very disturbing. 11
 And he summoned all the elders of the people, and recounted to them all that the LORD had said to him and all the vision that had been revealed to him by the LORD. •And all the people were disturbed by his vision. And they answered him, 12
 “The LORD is lord, and he will act in accordance with his own will. And now, Methusalam, you do everything just as the LORD has told you.”^o
 And Methusalam summoned Nir, the son of Lamekh,^p Noe’s younger brother, 13 and he invested him with the vestments of priesthood in front of the face of all the people, and made him stand at the head of the altar of the LORD. And he taught him everything that he would have to do among the people.

(And Methusalam spoke to the people:) “Here is Nir. He will be in front of your 14 face from the present day as a prince and a leader.”
 And the people said to Methusalam, “Let it be so (for us) in accordance with 15 your word. And you be the voice of the LORD, just as he said to you.”
 And when Methusalam had spoken to the people in front of the altar, his spirit 16 was convulsed, and, having knelt on his knees, he stretched out his hands to heaven, and prayed to the LORD. And, as he was praying to him, his spirit went out in accordance with (the will of) the LORD. •And Nir and all the people hurried 17 and constructed a sepulcher^r for Methusalam in the place Akhuzan, very thoughtfully adorned with all holy things, with lamps.

 And Nir came with many praises, and the people lifted up Methusalam’s body, 18 glorifying (God); they performed the service for him at the sepulcher which they had made for him and they covered him over.
 And they said, “(How) blessed was Methusalam in front of the face of the LORD 19 and in front of the face of all the people!” And when they wanted to go away to their own places, Nir said to the people, “Hurry up today and bring sheep and bulls and turtledoves and pigeons, so that you may make a sacrifice in front of the face of the LORD today.
 And then go away to your houses.” •And the people gave heed to Nir the priest,^s 20 and they hurried and they brought (them) and tied (them) up at the head of the altar. •And Nir took the knife of sacrifice, and slaughtered all that had been 21 brought to be sacrificed in front of the face of the LORD. •And all the people made merry in front of the face of the LORD, and on that day they glorified the 22 LORD, the God of heaven and earth, (the God) of Nir. And from that day there

m. J has lost twelve words from vss. 8b–9a by homoeoteleuton (“earth” is repeated).

n. For comparison of the days of Noah with the end of the world see Mt 24:37; Lk 17:26.

o. Rum begins at this point, where the story of Melchizedek commences. Its title is: “From the secret books of Enoch: the story about the priest Melchizedek, how he was born from the dead Sothonim.” After a few words from the Preface, it says: “And when Enoch was on the earth, he fathered sons, Methusalam and Regim. And Methusalam became the priest on earth.” Vs. 13 follows.

p. The spelling of Lamech at this point is enough to show that no safe inference can be made from such details about the original form of proper nouns, as Milik has done with Ariokh and Mariokh.

[A]

- over the earth, and the storages of the waters of heaven will rush (from above) onto the earth in a great substance in accordance with the first substance.
- 9 And the whole constitution of the earth will perish, and all the earth will quake, 10 and it will be deprived of its strength even from that day. •Then I, I will preserve Noe, the firstborn son of your son Lamekh. And I will make another world rise up from his seed, and his seed will exist throughout the ages.”
- 11 And Methusalom, getting up from his sleep, grieved greatly over the dream. And he summoned all the elders of the people, and recounted to them all that the LORD had said to him and the vision that had been revealed to him by the LORD.
- 12 And the people grieved over the vision. (And) (the people) answered him, “The LORD rules so as to act in accordance with his own will. And now, do everything just as the LORD 13 has told you.” •(And) Methusalom summoned Nir, the second son of Lamekh, and he invested him with the vestments of priesthood in front of the face of all the people, and made (him) stand at the head of the altar. And he taught him everything that he would have to do among the people.

About the passing away of Methusal^a

- 14 And Methusalom said to the people, “Here is Nir. He will be in front of your face from the present day as the guide of the princes.”
- 15 And the people answered Methusalom, “Let it be so for us, and let the word of the LORD be just as he said to you.”
- 16 And while Methusalom was speaking to the people his spirit was convulsed, and, kneeling on his knees, he stretched out his hands to heaven, praying to the LORD. And, as he was praying to him, his spirit 17 went out. •And Nir and all the people hurried and constructed a sepulcher for Methusalim and they placed for him incense and reeds and many holy things.
- 18 And Nir came with many praises, and the people lifted up Methusalom’s body, glorifying (God); they performed the service for him at the sepulcher which they had made for him and they covered him over.
- 19 And the people said, “How blessed is Methusalom in front of the face of the LORD and in front of the face of all the people!” And from there they assembled, and Nir said to the people, “Hurry up today. Bring sheep and bulls and turtledoves and pigeons, so that we may make a sacrifice in front of the face of the LORD and rejoice today.
 20 And then go away to your houses.” •And the people gave heed to Nir the priest, (and) they hurried and they brought (them) and tied them up at the head of the 21 altar. •And Nir took the knife of sacrifice and slaughtered (them) in front of the face of the LORD.
- 22 And the people hurried and did it and made merry in front of the face of the LORD all that day. They glorified the LORD God, the savior¹ of Nir. And in

1Kgs 8:22,54

B has Lamekha. Others have the Slav. adjective suffix -ova. J R Lamekhova; U Lamefova; A Lamethova. The point is that the fluidity of kh, th, f takes place within Slav. Methuselah shows similar fluctuations. We have carefully reproduced A’s usage. U is more consistent, with Methusalom most of the time, but occasionally Methusalim, and once Metekhousalom. The same thing happens with Sofonim (U) in ch. 71—Sothonim (A). B has both.

J R agree in Soplanim.

q. A U provide a ch. heading before vs. 14.

r. B has khramū. “temple” (= shrine?), where the others have grob, “grave.” But at the end of vs. 18 B has “grave.” Cf. 71:22.

s. Here J R have not replaced iereva with žrūc.

t. The word “savior” (A U) is secondary. B reads “heaven” as J R.

[J]

was peace and order over all the earth in the days of Nir—202 years.
 And then the people turned away from the LORD, and they began to be envious 23
 one against another, and people went to war against people, and race rose up against race and struggled and insulted one another.
 Even if the lips were the same, nevertheless the hearts chose different 24 things. •For the devil^u became ruler for the third time. The first was before 25 paradise; the second time was in paradise; the third time was after paradise, (and) continuing right up to the Flood.
 And there arose disputation and great turbulence. And Nir the priest heard and 26 was greatly aggrieved. And he said in his heart, “In truth I have come to understand how the time has arrived and the saying which the LORD said to Methusalam, the father of my father Lamekh.”^v

71

Behold, the wife of Nir, (whose) name was Sopanim, being sterile and never 1 having at any time given birth to a child^b by Nir—
 And Sopanim was in the time of her old age, and in the day of her death. She 2 conceived in her womb, but Nir the priest had not slept with her,^c nor had he touched her, from the day that the LORD had appointed him to conduct the liturgy in front of the face of the people.^d Common Rabbinic Theme See Moses
 And when Sopanim saw her pregnancy, she was ashamed and embarrassed, and 3 she hid herself during all the days until she gave birth. And not one of the people knew about it. •And when 282 days had been completed, and 4 the day of birth had begun to approach, and Nir remembered his wife, and he called her to himself in his house,^e so that he might converse with her.^f
 (And) Sopanim came to Nir, her husband; and, behold, she was pregnant, and 5 the day appointed for giving birth was drawing near.
 And Nir saw her, and he became very ashamed. And he said to her, “What is 6 this that you have done, O wife?^g And (why) have you disgraced me in front of the face of these people? And now, depart from me, and go where you began the disgrace of your womb, so that I might not defile my hand on account of you, and sin in front of the face of the LORD.”
 And Sopanim spoke to Nir, her husband, saying, “O my lord!^h Behold, it is the 7 time of my old age, and the day of my death has arrived.
 I do not understand how my

u. Vss. 24f., with the reference to the devil (Diabol), not a character in 2En, are secondary.

v. B glosses “Methusalah”; J R “Lamekh.”

71 a. A U have the same heading.

b. On childlessness, see our note on 2En 42:11. Sopanim (J) was not a virgin.

c. This is a literal translation of the Slav. Scholars who have seen this story as an imitation of the Gospel accounts of the virginal conception of Jesus have been hasty and superficial. Every detail needs careful assessment. Conventional stories of the miraculous origin of a wonder-child generally have such an element. There are always similarities in obvious points which could hardly be absent. Vaillant (Secrets, p. 75, n. 18) is inclined to see in the language of this verse, vo črevě imušti = en gastri ekhousa (Mt 1:18), a comparison between Sopanim and the Blessed Virgin Mary. But the phrase is a cliché for describing pregnancy.

There are many differences between 2En and the NT; and the essentials of the NT account are lacking. There is little resemblance between a young betrothed virgin and an old sterile married woman. While several barren wives in the OT eventually give birth with divine aid, the natural role of the husband is always recognized. The case of Sarah is made extreme only by her old age. Philo, in discussing Isaac's birth (in Congr 1–24 and Somm 2.10), contrasts Abraham's having a child by Hagar, which he identifies with the propaedeutic and profane sciences, with the acquisition of true wisdom, which is implanted directly in the soul by God. (The idea that virtue is a divine seed implanted directly in the soul is found in the Clementine Homily 3:27.) Hence God was the sole cause of Isaac's conception. This, of course, is pure allegory.

Another story along the same lines is the birth of Noah in 1En 106. The circumstances of Melchizedek's conception are closer to those of the front of the face of the people, and from that day there was peace and order over all the earth in the days of Nir—202 years.

[A]

- 23 And after that the people changed, turned away from the LORD, and they began to be envious one against another, and people went to war against people, and race rose up against race. Mt 24:7

24
25

Gen 11:1

- 26 And there arose great turbulence. And Nir the priest heard and was greatly aggrieved. And he said in his heart, "The time has arrived, please God, and the saying which the LORD said to Methusalom, the father of my father."

71 About Nir's wife^a

- 1 And behold, the wife of Nir, Sothonim, being sterile and never having given birth to a child by—
2 And Sothonim was in the time of old age, and in the day of death. And she conceived in her womb, but Nir the priest had not slept with her, from the day that the LORD had appointed him in front of the face of the people.
3 <And> Sothonim was ashamed, and she hid herself during all the days. And not one of the people knew about it. •
4 And she was at the day of birth, and Nir remembered his wife, and he called her to himself in the temple, so that he might converse with her.
5 And Sothonim came to Nir, her husband; <and>, behold, she was pregnant, and at the time for giving birth.
6 And Nir saw her, and he became very ashamed about her. And he said to her, "What is this that you have done, O wife? And why have you disgraced me in front of the face of all the people? And now, depart from me, go where you conceived the disgrace of your womb, so that I might not defile my hand on account of you, and sin in front of the face of the LORD."
7 And Sothonim answered Nir, her husband, saying, "O my lord! Behold, it is the time of my old age, and there was not in me any (ardor of) youth and I do not know how the indecency of my womb has been conceived."

conception of Mary herself in the Book of James (James, ANT, p. 20). Anna is an old but childless married woman. Her husband Joachim is a priest. They give themselves to spiritual exercises in isolation from each other. Joachim goes into the desert for forty days to fast and pray. While he is absent, Anna becomes pregnant. Her husband has it all explained to him by an angel, so there is no crisis (Book of James 4:2).

d. Sacral abstinence from sex while engaged with the holy mysteries is not a rule exclusive to Christian clergy of the Eastern churches. (1) The angels of heaven, in contrast to the Watchers, have never been defiled with women; hence sexual activity is banned in their presence (1En 15:3f.). (2) There was to be no sex for three days during assembly at Qumran (1QSa 1.26). (3) This is related to the warrior's sacral abstinence (1Sam 21:5). The Qumran community emphasized that there was to be no sex during war, "because the holy angels accompany the armies" (1QM 7.3–7). (4) The Temple Scroll prohibited sex within the holy city Jerusalem (1QTem 45–47). (5) Moses refrained from sex after the Lord appeared to him (R. Bloch, "Quels aspects de la figure de Moïse dans la tradition rabbinique." Moïse, homme de l'alliance [Cahiers Sioniens] [Paris, 1955] pp. 93–167).

e. B Rum say he called her to the kham to himself. The word can mean "temple" or "house." By omitting the pronoun, A U incline to the former; by changing it to "his," J R incline to the latter.

f. J ends abruptly at the end of vs. 4. From here to the end we use R as the long MS.

g. Cf. Joseph's reproach of Mary in the Book of James (ch. 13).

h. She addresses her husband with the title used as the name of God elsewhere. [In Vita Eve repeatedly calls Adam "my Lord"; cf. Vita 1.2. J.H.C.]

[J]

menopause and the barrenness of my womb have been reversed.”

And Nir did not believe his wife, and for the second time he said to her, “Depart 8 from me, or else I might assault you, and commit a sin in front of the face of the LORD.”

And it came to pass, when Nir had spoken to his wife, Sopanim, that Sopanim 9 fell down at Nir’s feet and died.¹

Nir was extremely distressed; and he said in his heart, “Could this have happened 10 because of my word, since by word and thought a person can sin in front of the face of the LORD?”

Now may God have mercy upon me! I know in truth in my heart that my hand 11 was not upon her. And so I say,^j ‘Glory to you, O LORD, because no one among mankind knows about this deed which the LORD has done.’”

And Nir hurried, and he shut the door of his house, and he went to Noe his 12 brother, and he reported to him everything that had happened in connection with his wife. •And Noe hurried. He came with Nir his brother; he came into Nir’s 13 house, because of the death of Sopanim, and they discussed between themselves how her womb

was at the time of giving birth. •And Noe said to Nir, “Don’t let yourself be 14 sorrowful, Nir, my brother! For the LORD today has covered up our scandal, in that nobody from the people knows this.

Now, let us go quickly and let us bury her secretly, and the LORD will 15 cover up the scandal of our shame.” •And they placed Sopanim on the bed, and 16 they wrapped her around with black garments, and shut her in the house, prepared for burial. They dug a grave in secret. • 17

And a child came out from the dead Sopanim.^k And he sat on the bed at her side.

And Noe and Nir came in to bury Sopanim, and they saw the child sitting beside the dead Sopanim, and wiping his clothing. •And Noe and Nir were 18 very terrified with a great fear, because the child was fully developed physically, like a three-year-old. And he spoke with his lips, and he blessed the LORD.¹ •And Noe and Nir looked at him, 19 and behold,

the badge of priesthood was on his chest, and it was glorious in appearance.

And Noe and Nir said, “Behold, God is renewing the priesthood from blood 20 related to us, just as he pleases.” •And Noe and Nir hurried, and they washed 21 the child, and they dressed him in the garments of priesthood, and they gave him the holy bread and he ate it. And they called his name Melkisedek.

And Noe and Nir lifted up the body of Sopanim, and divested her of the black 22 garments, and they washed her, and they clothed her in exceptionally bright garments, and they built a shrine for her.

Noe and Nir and Melkisedek came, and they buried her publicly. And Noe said 23 to his brother Nir, “Look after this child in secret until the time, because people will become treacherous in all the earth, and they will begin to turn away from God, and having become totally ignorant, they will put him to death.”

And then Noe went away to his own place.

i. Cf. Acts 5:5, 10, according to which instantaneous death follows at a word of rebuke.

j. The ascription is peculiar to R. The passage about Gabriel is clearly secondary in A U; it is not in B Rum R.

k. I am not acquainted with any parallel to this extraordinary and sensational circumstance.

l. Similar prodigies are found in many legends. In the Acts of Peter (ch. 15) a seven-month-old child gives a remarkably mature lecture. In an infancy narrative the baby Jesus is able to cope with some dragons that threaten the family in a cave (James, ANT, p. 75). In the Apostolic History of Abdias (ch. 18) there is an incident in which a deacon in Babylon, Euphrisinos by name, was

[A]

- 8 (And) Nir did not believe her, and for the second time Nir said to her, "Depart from me, or else I might assault you, and commit a sin in front of the face of the 9 LORD." •And it came to pass, when Nir had spoken to his wife, that Sothonim fell down at Nir's feet and died.
 10 Nir was extremely distressed; and he said in his heart, "Could this have happened because of my word?
 11 And now, merciful is the eternal LORD, because my hand was not upon her."

And the archangel Gabriel appeared to Nir, and said to him, "Do not think that your wife Sofonim has died because of (your) error; but this child which is to be born of her is a righteous fruit, and one whom I shall receive into paradise, so that you will not be the father of a gift of God."

- 12 And Nir hurried, and he shut the door of his house, and he went to Noe his brother, and he reported to him everything that had happened in connection with 13 his wife. •And Noe hurried to the room of his brother. And the appearance of his brother's wife was in death and her womb 14 was at the time of giving birth. •And Noe said to Nir, "Don't let yourself be sorrowful, Nir, my brother! For the LORD today has covered up our scandal, in that nobody from the people knows this.
 15 And now, let us go quickly and let us bury her, and the LORD will 16 cover up the scandal of our shame." •And they placed Sothonim on the bed, and they wrapped her around with black garments, and shut the door.
 17 And they dug a grave in secret. •And when they had gone out toward the sepulcher, a child came out from the dead Sothonim. And he sat on the bed. And Noe and Nir came in to bury Sothonim, and they saw the child 18 sitting beside the corpse, and having his clothing on him. •And Noe and Nir were very terrified, because the child was fully developed physically. And he spoke with 19 his lips, and he blessed the LORD. •And Noe and Nir looked at him closely, saying, "This is from the LORD, my brother." And behold, the badge of priesthood was on his chest, and it was glorious in appearance.
 20 And Noe said to Nir, "Behold, God is renewing the continuation of the blood
 21 of the priesthood after us." •And Noe and Nir hurried, and they washed the child, and they dressed him in the garments of priesthood, and they gave him the holy bread and he ate it. And they called his name Melkisedek.
 22 And Noe and Nir lifted up the body of Sothonim, and divested her of the black garments, and they washed her body, and they clothed her in bright choice garments, and they built a grave for her.
 23 And Noe and Nir and Melkisedek came, and they buried her publicly. And Noe said to his brother Nir, "Look after this child until the time in secret, because people have become treacherous in all the earth, and in some way when they see him, they will put him to death."
 And Noe went away to his own place.

falsely accused of fornication by a woman who was covering up for her real lover. When the child was born the apostles, on the day of its birth, questioned it, and the infant said that Euphrosinus was not its father.

The trivial legends about the infant Jesus showing off his erudition to schoolteachers, such as we have in the GThom, are merely projections back to early childhood of the tradition of Lk 2:41-52: but they have lost all restraint and dignity. The legend of Melchizedek goes to the extreme, for the newborn is mature physically as well as intellectually. [Cf. the Koran, Sura Mary, according to which Jesus, as a newborn infant from a virgin, delivers an oration. J.H.C.]

[J]

And great lawlessness began to become abundant over all the earth in the 24 days of Nir. •And Nir began to worry excessively, especially about the child, 25 saying,^m

“How miserable it is for me, eternal LORD, that in my days all lawlessness has begun to become abundant over the earth. And I realize how much nearer our end is,
{and} over all the earth, on account of the lawlessness of the people.
And now, LORD, what is the vision about this child, and what is his destiny, and 26 what will I do for him? Is it possible that he too will be joined with us in the destruction?” •And the LORD heeded Nir, and appeared to him in a night vision. 27
He said to him, “Nir, the great lawlessness which has come about on the earth among the multitude {which} I shall not tolerate.
And behold, I desire now to send out a great destruction onto the earth, and everything that stands on the earth shall perish.
But, concerning the child, don't be anxious, Nir; because in a short while I shall 28 send my archistratig, Michael. And he will take the child, and put him in the paradise of Edem, in the Paradise where Adam was formerly for 7 years, having heaven open all the time up until when he sinned.”
And this child will not perish along with those who are perishing in this generation, 29 as I have revealed it, so that Melkisedek will be the priest to all holy priests, and I will establish him so that he will be the head of the priests of the future.” •And Nir arose from his sleep 30 and blessed the LORD who had appeared to him, saying,

“Blessed be the LORD, the God of my fathers, who has told me how he has made a great priest in my day, in the womb of Sapanim, my wife.

Because I had no child in this tribe who might become the great 31 priest, but this is my son and your servant, and you are the great God.

Therefore honor him together with your servants and great priests, with Sit, and 32
Enos, and Rusi, and Amilam, and Prasadam, and Maleleil, and Serokh, and Arusan, and Aleem, and Enoch, and Methusalam, and me, your servant Nir.^o

And behold, Melkisedek will be the head of the 13 priests 33 who existed before. •And afterward, in the last generation, there will be another 34 Melkisedek, the first of 12 priests. And the last will be the head of all, a great archpriest, the Word and Power of God, who will perform miracles, greater and more glorious than all the previous ones. •He, Melkisedek, 35 will be priest and king in the place Akhuzan, that is to say, in the center of the earth, where Adam was created, and there will be his final grave. •And in connection with that archpriest it is written how he 36 also will be buried there, where the center of the earth is, just as Adam also buried his own son there—Abel, whom his brother Cain murdered; for he lay for 3 years unburied, until he saw a bird called Jackdaw, how it buried its own young.^p
I know that great confusion has come and in confusion this generation will come 37 to an end; and everyone will perish, except that Noe, my brother, will be preserved. And afterward there will be a planting from his tribe, and there will

m. The loss from R is homoeoteleuton between the two occurrences of “saying.”

n. Is this a gloss? It contradicts 32:1.

o. In the NT (Jude 14), Enoch is the seventh from Adam. This is the case with Gen 5 (= 1Chr

1) and 2En 33:10. But this list has too many names—to make Melchizedek the thirteenth? A U's list varies in spelling, with two omissions, and B is different again.

p. Vss. 34–37, only in R, are interpolated, and

[A]

24 And behold, all lawlessness (became abundant) over all the earth in the 25 days of Nir. •And Nir began to worry excessively about the child, saying, "What will I do with him?" And stretching out his hands toward heaven, Nir called out to the LORD, saying, "How miserable it is for me, eternal LORD, that all lawlessness has begun to become abundant over the earth in my days! And I, I realize how much nearer our end is.

26 And now, LORD, what is the vision about this child, and what is his destiny, or what will I do for him, so that he too will not be joined 27 with us in this destruction?" •And the LORD heeded Nir, (and) appeared to him in a night vision. And he said to him, "Behold already, Nir, the great lawlessness which has come about on the earth so that I will not suffer it anymore (and) I will not tolerate it anymore. Behold, I plan now to send down a great destruction onto the earth.

28 But, concerning the child, don't be anxious, Nir; because I, in a short while I shall send my archangel Gabriel. And he will take the child, and put him in the paradise of Edem.

29 And he will not perish along with those who must perish. And as I have revealed it, and Melkisedek will be my priest to all priests, and I will sanctify him and I 30 will change him into a great people who will sanctify me." •And Nir arose from his sleep and blessed the LORD who had appeared to him, saying,

"Blessed be the LORD, the God of my fathers, who has not condemned my priesthood and the priesthood of my fathers, because by his word he has created a great priest,
 in the womb of Safonim, my wife.

31 For I have no descendants.
 So let this child take the place of my descendants and become as my own son, and you will count him in the number of your servants,

32 with Sonfi, and Onokh, and Rusi, and Milam, and Serukh, and Arusan, and Nail, and Enoch, and Methusail, and your servant Nir.

33 And Melkisedek will be the head of the 34 priests in another generation.

35

36

37 For I know indeed that this race will end in confusion, and everyone will perish, except that Noe, my brother,
 will be preserved in that generation for procreation.

include an incident (vs. 36) borrowed from the cycle of Adam legends.

q. In a Christian legend, when Jesus goes to school and confounds his teacher Levi with his erudition, Levi exclaims, "I think he must have been born before the Flood, before the Deluge."

 (Cf. James, ANT, p. 77.)

[J]

be other people, and there will be another Melkisedek,^a the head of priests reigning over the people, and performing the liturgy for the LORD.”

72

And when the child had been 40 days in Nir's tent, the LORD said to Michael,^a 1 “Go down onto the earth to Nir the priest, and take my child Melkisedek, who is with him, and place him in the paradise of Edem for preservation. For the time is approaching, and I will pour out all the water onto the earth, and everything that is on the earth will perish.”

2
 3 Michael hurried,
 and he came down when it was night, and Nir was sleeping on his bed. And Michael appeared to him, and said to him, “Thus says the LORD: ‘Nir! Send the child to me whom I entrusted to you.’”^c

4 And Nir did not realize who was speaking to him, and his heart was confused. And he said, “When the people find out about the child, then they will seize him and kill him, because the heart of these people is deceitful in front of the face of the LORD.” Nir said to the one who was speaking, “The child is not with me, and I don't know who you are.”

5 And he who was speaking to me answered, “Don't be frightened, Nir! I am the LORD's archistratig. The LORD has sent me; and behold, I shall take your child today. I will go with him and I will place him in the paradise of Edem, and there he will be forever.

6 And when the twelfth generation shall come into being, and there will be one thousand and 70 years, and there will be born in that generation a righteous man. And the LORD will tell him that he should go out to that mountain where stands the ark of Noe, your brother. And he will find there another Melkisedek, who has been living there for 7 years, hiding himself from the people who sacrifice to idols, so that they might not kill him. He will bring him out, and he will be the first priest and king in the city Salim in the style of this Melkisedek, the originator of the priests. The years will be completed up to that time—3 thousand and 4 hundred and 32—

7 from the beginning and the creation of Adam. •And from that Melkisedek the priests will be 12 in number until the great Igumen, that is to say, Leader, will bring out everything visible and invisible.”^d

8 And Nir understood the first dream and believed it. And having answered Michael he said, “Blessed be the LORD who has glorified you today for me! And now, bless your servant Nir! For we are coming close to departure from this world. And take the child, and do to him just as the LORD said

9 to you.” •And Michael took the child on the same night on which he had come down; and he took him on his wings,^e and he placed him in the paradise

10 of Edom. •And Nir got up in the morning. He went into his tent and he did not find the child. And there was instead of joy very 11 great grief, because he had no other son except this one.^f •Thus Nir ended his life. And after him there was no priest among the people. And from that time great confusion arose on the earth.

72 a. B is virtually identical with A U, except that the latter have systematically substituted Gabriel for Michael.

b. This verse, not in R, repeats 71:33.

c. Michael takes care of Melchizedek. In a similar fashion, Michael, “a mighty power in heaven,” is charged by the good Father with the care of Christ, according to a Cop. translation of a discourse ascribed to Cyril of Jerusalem. Note also the presence of Michael in the vicinity of Rev 12:1–6, especially vs. 5. See E. A. W. Budge, Miscellaneous Coptic Texts (London, 1915) p. 637.

[A]

And from his tribe there will arise numerous people, and Melkisedek will become the head of priests reigning over a royal people who serve you, O LORD.”

72

- 1 And it happened, when the child had completed 40 days in Nir's tent, the LORD said to the archangel Gabriel, “Go down onto the earth to Nir the priest, and take the child Melkisedek, who is with him, and place him in the paradise of Edem for preservation. For the time is already approaching, and I, I will pour out all the water onto the earth, and everything that is on the earth will perish.
- 2 And I will raise it up again in another generation, and Melkisedek
- 3 will be the head of the priests in that generation.”^b •And Gabriel hurried and he came flying down when it was night, and Nir was sleeping on his bed that night. And Gabriel appeared to him, (and) said to him, “Thus says the LORD: ‘Nir! Restore the child to me whom I entrusted to you.’”
- 4 And Nir did not realize who was speaking to him, and his heart was confused. And he said, “When the people find out about the child, then they will seize him and kill him, because the heart of these people is deceitful in front of the face of the LORD.” And he answered Gabriel and said, “The child is not with me, and I don't know who is speaking to me.”
- 5 And Gabriel answered him, “Don't be frightened, Nir! I am the archangel Gabriel. The LORD sent me and behold, I shall take your child today. I will go with him and I will place him in the paradise of Edem.”

6

7

- 8 And Nir remembered the first dream and believed it. And he answered Gabriel, “Blessed be the LORD who has sent you to me today! And now, bless your servant Nir!
- 9 And take the child, and do to him all that has been said to you.” •And Gabriel took the child Melkisedek on the same night
- 10 on his wings, and he placed him in the paradise of Edem. •And Nir got up in the morning, and he went into his tent and he did not find the child. And there was great joy and
- 11 grief for Nir because he had the child in the place of a son. •

(But this power is also equated with Mary.)

d. In vss. 6f. a Christian scribe has brought in various items of learning from the Gk. chronographers.

e. In the GHeb, according to Origen (in CommIn 2.12; cf. HSW, vol. 1, p. 120). Jesus was carried by the Holy Spirit up to Mount Tabor by one hair of his head (documentation in HSW, vol. 1, p. 164).

f. Rum ends with vs. 10 and has its own conclusion. B ends here too. A U have a final ascription which we have placed at the end of ch. 73.

[J]

73^a

And the LORD called Noe onto the mount Ararat, between Assyria and Armenia, 1 in the land of Arabia, beside the ocean. And he said to him, "Make there an ark with 300 lakets^b in length and in width 50 lakets and in height 30. And two stories in the middle, and its doors of one laket.

And of their lakets 300, but of ours also 15 thousand; and so of theirs 50, but of 2 ours 2000 and 500, and so of theirs 30; but of ours 900, and of theirs one laket, but of ours 50."^c • In agreement with this numeral the Jews keep their measurements 3 of Noe's ark, just as the LORD said to him, and they carry out all their measurements in the same way and all their regulations, even up to the present.

The LORD God opened the doors of heaven. Rain came onto the earth for 150 4 days, and all flesh died.^d

And Noe was in the year 500. He fathered 3 sons: Sim, Kham, Afet. • After 100 5,6 years, after the birth of his three sons, he went into the ark in the month, according to the Hebrews, Iuars, according to the Egyptians, Famenoth, on the 18th day.^e

And the ark floated for 40 days. And in all they were in the ark for 120 days. 7

And he went into the ark, a son of 600 years, and in the six hundred first year of 8 his life he went out from the ark in the month Farmout according to the Egyptians, but according to the Hebrews Nisan, on the 28th day. • After the Flood he lived 9 350 years, and he died. He lived in all 950 years, according to the LORD our God.

And to him be glory, from the beginning and now
and until the end of the whole era. AMEN +

73 a. Vaillant (Secrets, pp. xxif., 117f.) is on firm ground when he ascribes this concluding ch. to a Christian "reviser." The origin of this ch. is a question in its own right. It does not prove that other materials, found only in long MSS, all came from the same hand. The evidence of ch. 73 does create a presumption that similar additions were made elsewhere; but each case must be judged separately on its own merits.

b. Lakūtī is the Slav. term for "ell." It has nothing to do with the Heb. dry volume measure leket. The dimensions (in cubits) are the same in Gen 6:15.

c. Vaillant (Secrets, pp. xxif.) has demonstrated the derivation of some of these details from George Hamartolos.

d. Cf. Gen 7:11.

e. The integration of biblical data with material gleaned from other sources is made more difficult by problems within the Gen account itself. The name of the second month is correct. The reason for changing the biblical figures 17 and 27 to 18 and 28 is not explained. These details are not in the passages of George Hamartolos and the Kiev Chronicle, quoted by Vaillant (Secrets, pp. xxii-xxiv).

[A]

73

1		Gen 6:15
2
3
4		Gen 7:11
5
6
7		Gen 7:12.17
8		Gen 8:3
		Gen 8:4
9		Gen 9:28

And to our God be glory always and now and always and in the ages of the ages. AMEN.

Gen	2En	Kiev Chron- icle	George Hamartolos
Went in 17/2	18 luars
It rained (40) (7:4, 12, 17)	150	40	40 days
The ark floated	40
Earth covered (7:24; 8:3)	150	120	120
In the ark	120 days	12 months 11 days
Went out	27/2 Nisan	28

Doubtless the entire period of the Flood was intended to be one solar year, which the Kiev

Chronicle has computed from Gen 7:11 and 8:14.
Vaillant gives the impression that 2En's erroneous figure of 120 days came from the Chronicle (Secrets, p. 119, n. 7). But neither of his identified sources make such a statement. It has been worked out that Gen contains two schedules for the Flood.
According to P the waters prevail for 150 days. In J the period of 40 days is mentioned three times
(7:4, 17; 8:6). Assuming that this is the same period each time, followed by three intervals of one week each, the total duration of the flood in J has been computed as 61 days. But the three 40's are probably the source of the figure 120 in all three Slav. texts. This is in flat contradiction to the biblical 150 (7:24; 8:3), which 2En reports as the period of rain.

APPENDIX: 2 ENOCH IN MERILO PRAVEDNOE

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY F. I. ANDERSEN

Merilo Pravednoe ("The Just Balance")¹ is the name of a celebrated collection of juridical and ethical writings of East Slavic provenance. A reference to Simeon, Bishop of Tver, who died A.D. 1288, as well as other evidence, shows that it was compiled in the thirteenth century. One of the sources was 2 Enoch. Material was excerpted from several different places in that work and rearranged to make a veritable pasticcio.²

The manuscripts of Merilo Pravednoe have been described by Lyubimov³ and Tikhomirov.⁴ Vaillant, following Sokolov, lists four copies of Merilo Pravednoe: manuscripts numbered 15, 489, 682, 253 in the Trinity-St. Sergius Monastery,⁵ now housed in the Lenin Library, Moscow. Tikhomirov stated that there were three copies of Merilo Pravednoe;⁶ Meshchersky now reports five.⁷

In any case Merilo Pravednoe occupies a special place in 2 Enoch studies. It was in this miscellany that the existence of a Slavonic Book of Enoch was first made public.⁸ It was also the first text of 2 Enoch ever printed; a transcription of TSS 15 appeared in Tikhonravov's Pamyatniki.⁹ Collation with the photos shows a few errors in this first publication. This manuscript was also the first (and is still the only) witness to 2 Enoch to be published photographically in facsimile.¹⁰ This copy was made in the middle of the fourteenth century, and so is the oldest known evidence for the text. The prestige deserved by this manuscript because of its antiquity is offset by the fact that the text has been rewritten with such extreme liberty. Yet even though the original narrative was separated and reassembled in a completely different pattern, there is no indication that any of the actual words were changed. In individual cases, then, its readings could have a superior claim to originality.

For these many reasons, a translation of TSS 15 is appended to the contribution on 2 Enoch.

¹ The title goes back to zygos dikaios, mō'zēnē-sedeq (Job 31:6).

² The section from chs. 41 to 65 supplies the material, which has actually been sorted out. Statements on the same subject, scattered in 2En, are gathered into one place to make a collage which in some ways is more coherent than the original.

³ V. P. Lyubimov, Pravda Russkaja, vol. 1, ed. B. D. Grekov (Moscow-Leningrad, 1940) pp. 89–103.

⁴ M. N. Tikhomirov, Issledovaniye o «Russkoi pravda». Proiskhozhdeniye tekstov (Moscow-Leningrad, 1941) pp. 88–99; "Vossozdaniye russkoi pis'mennoi traditsii v perviye desyatiletiya tatarskogo iga," Vestnik Istorii Mirovol'kul'tury 3 (1957) 3–13.

⁵ The textual problems of the MPr tradition are discussed in detail by Sokolov in COIDR 4 (1910) 106–18.

⁶ M. N. Tikhomirov, Merilo pravednoe po rukopisi XIV veka (Moscow, 1961) p. v.

⁷ N. A. Meshchersky, "K istorii teksta slavyanskoj knigi Enokha," Vizantiiskii Vremennik 24 (1964) 24.

⁸ A. V. Gorskiĭ and K. I. Nevostruyev, Opisanie slavyanskikh rukopisei Moskovskoi Sinodal'noi Biblioteki 2.2 (1859) 626–27. (Reference in Sokolov, COIDR 4 [1910] 89, n. 2; cf. Vaillant, Secrets, p. iii.) They listed TSS 253 and TSS 489.

Gorsky already observed the difference between this work and 1En; but Popov, in his 1880 edition of the Poltava MS, thought they were the same, and the matter completely escaped the attention of Western scholars for decades.

⁹ N. S. Tikhonravov, Pamyatniki otrečennoi russkoi literatury Tom I (St. Petersburg, 1863) [= Slavistic Printings and Reprintings, ed. C. H. van Schooneveld, No. 184/1 (The Hague-Paris, 1970)] pp. 20–23. To be exact, a text published by A. N. Pypin in 1862 (documented by Sokolov in COIDR 4 [1910] 2, n. 2, but not confirmed by the present writer, and not entirely clear because of changes in the catalogue numbers), a page of a MS called No. 238 by Sokolov, was the very first.

¹⁰ N. 6 above. The Enoch extracts occupy ff. 36–380b, six pages.

ENOCH TRADITIONS PRESERVED IN MERILLO PRAVEDNOE

From the books of Enoch the righteous^a before the Flood, and now he is (still) alive.

Listen, my children! Even before all things did not exist, the LORD^e established [65:1]^b the age of creation. And after that he created the whole creation, visible and invisible;^d and after all that he created man according to his own image, with his own two [65:2] hands,^c small and great,^{f,g} and he appointed for him eyes to see and ears to hear^h and reason to argue.

Then the LORD releasedⁱ the age for the sake of man; and he divided it into seasons [65:3] and years,^j into months and days and hours; *so that a person might think about the [65:4] changes of the seasons, the beginnings and the endings,^k so that he might estimate his own life and death.

a. This title is different from those of all other MSS.

b. The ch. and vs. references correspond to those of J used as a standard.

c. A U have the opposite sequence, verb = subject.

d. This stock phrase is probably used unreflectingly, and does not imply a sequence. In the Fathers, the invisible creation of spirit beings is completed first. Thus Basil, in his Hexaemeron (I § 5), argues that there was a whole invisible order, including angels, created before the visible order. Other schemes include the creation of angels on one of the six days. In 2En, since angels are created out of fire, they come rather late in the story.

e. The phrase "with his own two hands" is found in A U at 44:1.

f. The phrase "small and great" is found in A U at 44:1, but not contiguous with the preceding one. Furthermore, that text says "in the likeness of his face."

g. This phrase replaces the original "male and female."

h. MPr lacks the reference to the heart found in other MSS.

i. Slav. razdrěši in MPr. The scribes evidently had difficulty with this term, which is very important for understanding 2En's doctrine of creation. It occurs again in 25:2, which also has to do with the creation of "the great age" and where the MSS are similarly confused. There such a term comes three times. Adoil is commanded to dissolve himself so that the visible might be dissolved from him (or so that what was yielded by this action might become visible) and he dissolved himself, and "the great age," which had previously been in his belly, came out. This great age became the carrier of all the creation that the Lord wished to create.

Vaillant (Secrets, p. 31) equates the Slav. verb with luesthai but with the metaphorical sense of accouchement. This certainly finds support in the imagery of the great age in Adoil's belly and in the verb "came out." The latter, however, does not prove that Adoil gave birth to the great age. It seems rather from the language of 25:1 that there were stages, more physical in concept than successive emanations. First Adoil "came out [or "down"]" from the depths; then the great age "came out" from Adoil. Then (65:3) the great age was divided up into segments of time. Here we seem to have a more abstract Neoplatonic theory of the creation of particulars by dispersion, rather than a version of the egg theory of primeval creation. Nevertheless, the imagery of birth has been found in the language. V N read razdaemoe for razrěšaemoe in 25:2, and this reading, although poorly attested and best explained as secondary, is preferred by Vaillant because of his acceptance of the birth theory. The use of the dominant verb razdrěšiti in MPr's text of 65:3 is therefore important. For there God is the subject of the verb, and it is hardly likely that any myth in the monotheistic tradition of 2En would teach that God gave birth to the world. Furthermore, as the text continues, it makes it clear that this act of God, performed on the age for the sake of man, consisted precisely of breaking it up into discrete portions. The verb razděliti is quite unambiguous in this respect.

The equation of razdrěšiti with lusai can be accepted, but not the inference that it means birth. The verb in A U, razrěšiti, also means lusai in the sense of "undo" (a shoelace), "release" (from sins, i.e. forgive). In fact razdrěšiti is simply a Russian variant, as shown, e.g. by systematic differences in the Ostromir Gospels (see the quotations from Mk 1:7 and Mt 18:18 in MSD, vol. 3, pp. 37, 52). But, so far as I can ascertain, it is never used to describe the release of a child in birth. A meaning somewhere between "relinquish" and "annihilate" is required. The control is supplied by the exposition which follows. Time is divided; and this is done for the sake of man. That is, time was differentiated, and made the medium of change so that man could be given his creatively and fallen existence in such time, and so work his way to salvation as timeless existence, the climax of MPr, as its closing lines show.

j. The MSS differ extensively as to the units of time and their ordering: year, season, month, day, hour. The lack of interest in the "week" as a unit of time is conspicuous, but quite characteristic of 2En, which is a point against locating it in main-line Judaism. The term "seasons" is not cleanly used because it is evidently mixed up between vremya meaning "time" (in extension) or "season" (of the year), as well as all the range of ideas covered by chronos and kaïros, both of which it translates. In addition to the possibilities of "(stretch of) time" and "(point in) time," 2En is interested in the beginning and ending of an epoch in time, especially the human life-span, with an astrological concern for the instant of birth and the instant of death.

k. A U are more ample at this point, with a reference to "years and months and days and hours," which MPr has in vs. 3, where A U lack the phrase. This could be a simple example of textual dislocation. But A U also read plurals. Vaillant (Secrets, p. 62) thinks that U is better. But the focus seems to be on death as the end of life and the sobering reflection on the inevitable termination of all time periods.

And behold, my children, I am the manager^l of the arrangements on earth. I wrote (them) down. And the whole year I combined,^m and the hours of the day. And the hours I measured; and I wrote down every seed on earth.ⁿ And I compared every measure and the^o just balance I measured. And I wrote^p (them) down, just as the LORD commanded. •And in everything I discovered differences: (One) year is more worthy^q than (another) year, and day (than) day and hour (than) hour. Similarly also (one) person is more worthy than (another) person: one because of much property; another^r because of superlative wisdom^s of the heart; and another because of intelligence

l. The MSS are very divergent in their reading of this verb, upon which so much depends at this crucial point: for it defines Enoch's cosmic role. The variations probably betray theological embarrassment among the scribes. The unusual word order compounds the difficulty. The reading of the second verb in A is pamétaa, "remembering"; U reads pometaya, which could represent riptein. Enoch casts away the things of earth. But other MSS (B N) agree with MPr. V reads prométaemaa (= N); MPr has promitaya. Sreznevskii (MSD, vol. 2, p. 1544) was unable to suggest a meaning for promitaii. Vaillant (Secrets, p. 45) accepts p(r)ometaya, which he identifies as a rare verb corresponding to basanizō. The meaning is not quite suitable, and it does not correspond to Enoch's research earlier in the book. It casts Enoch in the role of investigator as well as recorder. The simplest solution is that Enoch observed the way things had been arranged on earth, and recorded his observations. But this is unobjectionable, and, if original, would hardly have upset the scribes. Other passages suggest that Enoch himself was in charge of these arrangements, which could have been objected to as an intrusion on divine prerogatives. It is also unclear whose deeds "on earth" he scrutinized, those of God, or those of men. If the former, then Enoch is the chronicler of creation as in ch. 40; Vaillant (Secrets, p. 45), citing WisSol 13:2, thinks it alludes to the way God has directed events on earth, in contrast to the theory that they are controlled by natural forces, wrongly considered divine. If the latter, Enoch is compiling the records to be used in the last assize, as in 50:1.

The evidence for the first verb is even more mixed. A and U read i krai, which makes no sense. Vaillant's notes imply the following schema:

N's reading yielded "the things that can be used on earth." The verb is not recognized by the Prague lexicon; the attestation given by Sreznevskii suggests it is a Rusism. MPr seems to be an interpretation: the things that have been ordered on earth, i.e. by God. Vaillant (Secrets, p. 45) admits that the verb krūmīstvovaii is otherwise unattested, but he interprets it as a "plausible" variant of krūmīčīstvovaii.

m. MPr has condensed the text at this point, omitting the breakdown of time into smaller units:

year, month, day, hour.

n. The MSS show considerable variation in the use and placement of the conjunction i, "and." This variation makes a big difference to clause boundaries, and connects verbs with different objects. The trouble seems to be caused by stress in the syntax, whether it is better to have the object before or after the verb. In the present instance the effect is to make "seed" the object either of the preceding verb ("I wrote down") or of the following verb ("compared").

In view of the exposition which follows, two ideas are being developed. There is the division of time into small units, and the differentiation of these units, so that no two days are the same. In a similar way the dispersal of seed produces individual human beings, all different. The thought begins with the act of the Creator, who made a variety of "seed on the earth," not the many species of animals and plants each created and reproducing "after its kind," according to Gen 1, but the variety of the common seed of mankind. We have already seen in MPr 36:8 (= 65:2) the alteration of Gen 1's "male and female" into "small and great," and this thought receives more attention here. There is tension in the MSS between describing such facts as something either God or Enoch arranged. Sometimes it comes out as the latter, as if he is some kind of manager of the cosmos. The reading of A U, raznestvovakh, probably means "dispersed," i.e. differentiated. The variant in MPr, izrovnovakhū, is unique (it provides the only entry in MSD), and probably means "compared." Changes in the conjunctions make its object, not "every seed on earth," namely all mankind, but "every measure and the just balance."

o. Other MSS read "every" at this point.

p. MPr shares the reading ispisakhū, "wrote," with B, against ispuyak, "probed," of other MSS.

q. It is hard to know what English equivalent to use for čīstīnyi. It is well illustrated by its use to translate entimos (Lk 7:2) or entimoteros (Lk 14:8). Even so, the moral connotation is not secured, whether this difference in "honor" is in the estimate of others, due to different grades of achievement, or due to differences in nature (whether by accident or divine decree). The following analysis does not settle the point since it is a mixture of these.

r. Whereas A U etc. list the series with obū . . . ob že . . . ob že . . . i . . . i . . .

MPr has

obū . . . inū . . . a inū . . . i . . .

s. prmdrii = prēmudrosti, while V N have milostii, "kindness." The common reading is simply mudrosti.

and, it could be, silence of the lips.¹ •But no one is better than the person who fears [43:3]
 the LORD. He who fears the LORD will be glorified forever. •Listen, children! In [58:1] the days of our father Adam, the LORD came down onto the earth, and he inspected^a all¹ the creatures which he himself had created. •And the LORD^w summoned all the [58:2] animals of the earth and the beasts^s and all the flying birds.^y And he brought them before the face of our father Adam, so that he might pronounce names^s for all. And Adam named everything on earth.^{a2} •And he subjected to him everything in inferiority.^{b2} [58:3]
 And he made them deaf for all submission and obedience. •For every animal soul in [58:5] that age^{e2} there is one place,^{d2} one fold, and (one) paddock. •For the soul of an animal [58:6] which the LORD created will not be shut up until the judgment. •The LORD appointed^{e2} [58:3b] mankind^{f2} to all his own property.^{g2} •Concerning this there will not be judgment for [58:4] every living soul,^{h2} but for man alone. •And all the soulsⁱ² will accuse humans.^{j2} •He [58:66][59:5] who does wickedness to an animal in secret, it is a lawless evil.^{k2} He acts lawlessly against his own soul. •He who does wickedness to a human soul commits wickedness [60:1] against his own soul. •He who commits murder puts his own soul to death, and there [60:2] is no healing for him for eternity. •And he who lies in wait for a person with a net [60:3]

t. V reads i khytrosti i mličiana ezyka i ustnu. A U have khitrosti i molčaniya ustennago. V thus agrees with A in adding "cunning" to "intelligence" (but A lacks the conjunction). But MPr agrees with A in having "silence of the lips," where V (N also) adds "tongue and" lips. MPr, however, has prosto instead of khitrosti. It is not obvious what nuance this introduces. At the end of the list, it could mean "perhaps," or "simply" (haplōs). Note, however, that MPr has prēmudrosti and the prosto- could be a similar prefix. Hence Sreznevskii thinks it means "complete silence" (MSD, vol. 2, p. 1577).

u. At the very least episkopein lies behind this word. But behind it again is surely lipqōd (the variants point to an original supine). But the associations of either judgment or redemption are not present in the descent of the LORD.

v. Other MSS read svoeya, "his" creatures.

w. V reads "the LORD God" as in Gen.

x. It is hard to recover the original tradition behind this list of names. The difficulty with MPr is that both skotū and zvěri mean "animal," with a distinction corresponding to Heb. bēhēmāh (domestic) and hayyāh (wild). But the use of both to represent thērion is illustrated by a paraphrase of Gen 3:14: proklata ty otū vūsēkhū. skotū i zvėrei zemškykū. MSS like A which read gad zemnyi, "reptiles of the earth," are doubtless better. It is like the list in Acts 10:12; but this too has variants, such as vi neuže bėkhu vca čėvrėnoga zemle i zvėri i gadi i ptice nebesneye (SJS, vol. 1, p. 388).

y. This idiom does not seem to derive from the OT directly. Cf. glagole ki vsimi pitcami pareštimi (Rev 19:17). Note that R also has parjaštei po vozdukh(u). Cf. J P. But A U have pernatyya ("feathered").

z. The Heb. idioms are more palpable here, but this could come through Gk. The text does not correspond to Gen 2:19 in these details, and LXX follows the Heb. literally. We have, then, an independent Midrash on Gen 2:19.

a2. MPr is closer to MSS of the longer recension than to those of the shorter recension at this point. This suggests that sometimes their longer readings might preserve something original that has been lost from the shorter recension.

b2. This is followed by the numeral .v.ȳe in

MPr. This is written fully in A and V (vtoroe), and the punctuation of both suggests that it goes with the preceding noun, not after a comma, as in Vaillant's edition. Still its significance is not clear. It could be a corruption of pod rucē ego (J), "under his hand."

c2. Slav. vū věcē semī. Other MSS have "the great age."

d2. The main variants are as follows:

	B	edino město estī i košarē edinago i ograda edina i pastvina
	A U	edino město estī i ograda edina i pastvina edina
	V	edino město ē i košari edini
MPr	yedino město	košara yedina i pastvina

	B	place	pen
	A U	place	yard	pasture
	V	place	pen
MPr		place	pen	pasture

e2. A U read "created" and V has the same verb. V continues vlastela vsemu stežaniyu (see n. g2) svoemu. A U lack the first word "lord."

f2. Slav. člvka, not Adam.

g2. If Vaillant (Secrets, p. 57) is correct that this passage imitates Ps 105:21, then we must conclude that it comes directly from Heb., not Gk. The passage, however, is not very close to Ps 105:21 (104:21 in LXX): (1) It is not an individual (Adam) but mankind that is appointed to the Lord's property, so there is no analogy of king and vizier. (2) No title is used, as in 30:12; but V does use vlastela, which could reflect 'ādōn rather than kurios, while J has gna, "lord." The agreement of a long and a short MSS in supplying a title must be offset by the fact that each has a different title. (3) A number of Heb. words lie behind ktēsis, and this fluctuates with ktisis in the Gk. MSS.

h2. A Hebraism, nepes hayyāh, "animal." Gen 9 could be behind the interpretation attempted in 2En.

i2. That is, of animals.

j2. There is a considerable omission here.

k2. Slav. zlobezakoniye. But A U read zlozakonie, "evil-law," or, perhaps, "making the law evil," and B is similar. R has zlo zakoni.

will himself be entangled in it.¹² •He who seethes a person in a caldron, his judgment [60:4] will not come to an end for eternity.^{m2} •He who insults and misprizes the face of a [44:2] human person insults and misprizes the face of the LORD. •Anger and great judgment [44:3] for whoever spits in a person's faceⁿ² •Happy is he who directs his heart to every kind [44:4] of person, and helps him who has been condemned, and gives support to him who has been broken;ⁿ² •for in the great judgment day every measure and weight in the [44:5] market will be exposed, and each one will recognize his own measure, and in it he will receive his reward. •And the LORD will send out his great light, and in it will [46:3] be the judgment, so that who, there, will hide?

Before mankind existed, a place of judgment, ahead of time, was prepared for them, [49:2] and scalesⁿ² and weights by means of which a person will be tested. •I the doings of [50:1] each person will put down, and no one will hide;ⁿ² •because the LORD is the one who [50:4] pays, and he will be the avenger on the great judgment day. •Gold and silver lose for [50:5] the sake of your brother, and you will receive a treasure without endⁿ² on the day of judgment. •To orphan and widow stretch out your hands, and in accordance with your [50:6] strength help the wretched, and you will be a shelter in the time of testing.

Every yoke, afflictive^{s2} and burdensome, which comes upon you, loose itⁿ² for the [51:3] LORD's sake, and you will receive a reward on the day of judgment. •Happy (is he [52:5])

12. Not all MSS preserve the parallel statements found in MPr. There seems to be a play on the sound of similar words, if not outright puns. If the latter could be proved, it would show that this passage at least was composed in Slav.

vrěya člōka v sěti samū oubzayazeti

vrěya člōka v sudū ne oskuděyeti sū yegō vū vēki
The first word in both statements has more than one possible meaning.

1. First, we note the reading of P. vlagayai, the source of Charles's "put" (APOT, vol. 2, p. 465). Since this is not supported even by R and J, it may be set aside as a corruption. Note, however, vlagati vū srydū (SRY, vol. 2, p. 207).

2. The spelling in MPr (vrěya) (cf. A U) leaves undetermined the stem vowel. It could be the verb vrěyati (or vrěvati) (SRY, vol. 3, p. 111): "shove," "push" or "throw." It could be vrěti, one of whose meanings is "boil," "seethe." The significance of this possible meaning, at first sight improbable, is its correlation with (sosud (SRY, vol. 3, p. 109). Its variant is verěti (SRY, vol. 2, p. 87).

3. On the other hand, J has the reading varěyui. SRY (vol. 2, p. 23) gives this the meaning "lie in wait" (podsteregat'), but it also means "forestall," "anticipate."

4. The reading in V (virai) is closer to MPr than to J; but the similarity is insignificant, since the yers tend to be used indiscriminately. The unique text of P, which has a different verb in each statement (as if explicating the pun), also uses the unambiguous sosud, "vessel," which is neither a corruption nor an interpretation, but a resolution of the original homonym sud (this is both the ordinary word "judgment" and also the archaic equivalent of sosud). P thus resolves the ambiguity which is apparently present in MPr: "He who lies in wait for a person with a net . . ." "He who forestalls a person in judgment . . ." (or "He who boils a person in a caldron").

5. There is no question about the wordplay in the second statement (so)sud . . . -skud- . . . sud. Sud is a straight pun, reading vrěya for virai or vereya or vareya. There is secondary play on seti ("net")/sud ("vessel" or "judgment"), but this is lost when there is only one statement. Even so, since the second statement in its more obvious meaning is a solution to the riddle in the first statement, it is less likely that it conceals another enigma in its own double meaning. Since MSS of 2En are the result of a fluid tradition, we cannot settle the "correct" reading of such sayings by reverting to the earliest text known to us. For all we know, MPr might already have leveled the verbs which are still distinct in P. The idea is commonplace (Ps 9:16; Eccl 27:26), but these biblical passages are not the immediate source of the wording in 2En. The Slav. verbs do not match the originals. Eccl 27:26 has ho histōn pagida en autē halōsetai. This is more succinct, more down to earth, less eschatological than 2En. By adding the word "person" 2En lowers the enigmatic content. And the impression remains that the wordplay was concocted in Slav.

m2. Note that 44:1 has already been used in effect at 58:3b above. See nn. e and f. Vaillant (Secrets, p. vi) says that this section is "abridged" in MPr; but one wonders if A U already show signs of glossing.

n2. The more ample texts have four rude gestures, each separately stated. The last, spitting, is detached from the others. In this detail the text of MPr is similar to A U, except that the latter have plural ("they spit") against the preferable singular of all other MSS which have the passage. Yet, in spite of this agreement, the longer reading of 44:3 in R J P seems to be better.

o2. A third category is mentioned in A U.

p2. The word in the title of the miscellany.

q2. MPr has the same word here as in 46:3. There it is the same as A, but here A reads niktože ne možeti ukrasti sye, "no one will be able to sneak away."

r2. Here MPr neoskudno has the same root as the verb in 37ob:3 [60:4], and this gives it preference over other MS readings, particularly A (plotno), which seems to be a corruption of nlūno (R). Furthermore, MPr is supported by B (neoskuděemo).

s2. A reads vsyakogo skorbī, "every kind of affliction," thus losing the allusion to the yoke. There is a marked difference between the outlook in this advice and that in Mt 11:28-30.

who) praises the works of the LORD •and preserves the foundations of the most [52:9] ancient ancestors, •and who cultivates peace and who has peace. [52:11]

Cursed (is he who) despises the creation of the LORD •and (who) looks to destroy [52:6][52:8]
the works of (his) neighbor •and (who) breaks down the rules and restrictions of his [52:10] ancestors •and (who) speaks peace but there is not peace in his heart. •All this in the [52:14][52:15] balance and in the books will be convicted on the day of the great² judgment. •Happy [42:9] (is he) who judges righteous judgment for orphan and widow, and (who) helps everyone who has been oppressed.

Happy (is he) in whom is truth, and who speaks truth to his neighbor,² and there [42:12] is kindness in his lips and gentleness.

Happy (is he who) sows righteous seed, and he will reap sevenfold, •and (who) [42:11] creates righteous judgment, •the naked he clothes with a garment, and to the hungry [42:7][42:8] he gives bread.

Happy (is he who) understands the works of the LORD, and glorifies him and (who) [42:14] because of his works, acknowledges (their) creator.

I arrived at the place of judgment, and I saw hell open. •And I saw there something [40:12][40:13] more,² like a prison, judgment unmeasured. And I descended, and I wrote down all the judgments of the judged, and all their accusations I knew.² •And I sighed and I [41:1] wept over the perdition of the impious. •And I said in my heart, “Happy is he who [41:2] has never been born, or (who), having been born, has not sinned against² the face of the LORD, so that he did not come into this place,³ nor endure the stench³ of this place.” •And I saw the guardians of hell standing at the large gates, their faces like [42:1] those of great serpents and their eyes like extinguished lamps, and their fangs exposed down to their breasts. •And I said in their presence,³ “It would have been better if [42:2]
I had not seen you, nor heard³ of your activities, nor that any member of my race had been brought to you.”

12. The MSS are quite confused over what to do with this yoke, whether to accept it or to get rid of it. In the latter case there is a suggestion that it is a work of charity to remove the heavy yoke from another. The different positions of the phrase “for the LORD’s sake” also secure different nuances; either the yoke comes on to you on account of the LORD or otherwise repudiate it for the LORD’s sake.

The main readings are: MPr, A ōtrēšiti (U has otrēšite). Otrēšiti, if genuine, reflects luain, but this does not seem to suit the spirit of the passage. The reading in B (poterpīte) fits better, for it could mean “endure.” P has terpēte, but J has vūšē ponesete i otrēšite e, which is essentially the same as R. So there are four verbs:

ōtrēšiti	(MPr A U)	renounce or loose
otrēšiti	(J R)	cut off
(po)terpiti	(B P)	endure
ponesiti	(J R)	carry

Perhaps there are only two, those in J R being variants of the ones found only singly in other MSS. Even so, the two ideas seem to be opposed: ridding oneself of the yoke or bearing it patiently. The yoke is not the yoke of obedience to Torah nor the yoke of Christian discipleship, neither of which was considered a burden. It is persecution. There seems to be no logical way of combining the recommended responses, unless ōtrēžati means “release” the yoke from someone else, or ōtrēšiti means “forgive” your persecutors.

12. MPr lacks two pairs of blessing and cursing found in longer MSS at this point.

v2. A U have the variant gordago, “terrible.”

w2. Slav. skrenlnōmu, with initial i added in correction by another hand.

x2. The diverse readings at this point show that the scribes have lost control of the text. MPr (yetero bole) should be retained for three text-critical reasons: because it is old, because it is difficult, because the others can be derived from it. Yetero corresponds to tis and becomes variously nekoe, nekotorye (A). The main alternative to bole is pole (B) and seems to mean “field” (pedion, campus). Vaillant (Secrets, p. 42) accepts this reading and meaning (une certaine plaine), but the language does not suit the imagery of a prison. MSS otherwise divergent agree in bole. The reading in A is very clear, since it writes the b in an unusual way. So it has a strong claim. But what does it mean? The stem bol- is found in words meaning either “sick” (hence R J P kako bolit) or “great,” neither of which makes sense. If pole is preferred, but the meaning “field” causes difficulty, perhaps it derives from polēti = phlegēin. The language is remarkably like Codex Suprasliensis 142:26, šedū na mēsto ideže bēaše ognī raždženī. Vidēvū plamenī polyaštī. Cf. Dan 7:9, přestolū ognenū yemu koleša yego ognī polya (pur phlegon). Hell is a place of flaming fire.

y2. Slav. ouvdākū. A U have ouvidēkh, “I saw.”

z2. MPr (also B) reads na, not the usual pred.

a3. This passage highlights the total lack of any scheme of salvation for sinners in 2En.

b3. MPr’s smrada is preferable, and is probably the source of yarma (A), “yoke,” not igo, the usual term in 2En.

c3. Lit. “face.”

d3. MPr: vnyalū. A reads voni radi, which seems to mean “on account of the stench,” but is probably corrupt. From the similar reading of U Vaillant (Secrets, p. 44, n. 1) restores vūnradiū, which is supported by vnyadrilū (B). See the details in SJS, vol. 1, pp. 305–6; vūnadrīti ~ vūnadrīti means “behold.” MPr is preferable; cf. n. y2 above.

Do not say, my children, "Our father is with God,^{e3} and he will pray us out of sin." • You know,^{f3} all the deeds of every person I continually record;^{g3} • and no one can destroy^{h3} what I have written, because the LORD sees everything, • so that you might do what is goodⁱ³ in the face^{j3} of the LORD, • most of all, to every living soul. Just as one asks for his own soul from the LORD, so let him do to every living soul. Now preserve your heart^{k3} from every unrighteous deed, so that you might inherit the anchor of light^{l3} forever. • And it will be yours in an inheritance of peace • when all creation shall come to an end, which the LORD created, each person will go to the LORD's great judgment. • Then the seasons^{m3} will perish and they will no longer constitute the year. Days and hours will not be reckoned. But itⁿ³ will be a single age. And all the righteous will escape the great judgment. And they will gain the great age,^{o3} and the age will gain^{p3} the righteous, and they will be eternal. • And none of them will have weariness nor sickness nor affliction nor fear of violence nor exhaustion nor night nor darkness; • but the great light (will be) in them,^{q3} and the great age, an indestructible wall and a shelter, a great and eternal Paradise. • Happy are the righteous, who will escape the LORD's great judgment. And they will shine forth like even the sun.

e3. Other MSS read "the LORD."

f3. MPr reads VID]ITE, which could be either vidite (A), "You see," or védite, "you know." The latter is more suitable; but see n. y2, where the opposite happens.

g3. Vaillant (Secrets, p. 54, n.5) does not note the distinctive reading of MPr napisyvyayu, which emphasizes that this is Enoch's ongoing task. Note the elaboration in the longer MSS.

h3. Vaillant's (Secrets, p. 55) interpretation of raskaziti as détruire must be rejected. Strictly speaking, it is raskazati (this is the reading in V) that means uničtožat' (MSD, vol. 3, p. 72). Cf. raskažati, "damage." Sreznevskii gives narušat' narušit', "violate," as possible meanings of both raskažati (MSD, vol. 3, p. 71) and raskaziti (vol. 3, p. 72). But the latter is used, significantly with "books" as object, meaning "profane," "repudiate." The point is not that Enoch's writings, bequeathed to his descendants, cannot be destroyed (although that idea is expressed elsewhere [ch. 35]); his records of all the deeds of all mankind, which are kept in heaven (for the day of judgment, see 52:15), cannot be gainsaid.

i3. MPr has the unique reading dóbroye.

j3. The usual Heb. idiom is "good in the eyes."

k3. Other MSS read "soul" but 53:1 has "heart" and 53:1 and 61:1 seem to be conflated here.

l3. The phrase is unintelligible. Stavilo also means "measure," "weight." B reads da stavi, but the exact agreement of V with MPr at this point gives status to their reading. Sokolov's synoptic study (COIDR 4 [1910] p. 117) shows that MPr has verbal affinities with 53:4 and 54:1 as well as with both 53:1 and 61:1. But A, while punctuated similarly, reads na stavile svéta. Da is better than na; and the latter leads to the paraphrase "injustice on the balance." But nepravdy is not modified in 61:1; yet what does "the anchor of light" mean? See 65:10 and 46:3.

m3. Slav. vremena as in 65:3 at the beginning of MPr.

n3. That is, time.

o3. The absence of the reflexive pronoun in MPr makes a big difference. In J (vol. 3, p. 279) prikupiti' means "gain." It translates kerdēsomen in Jas 4:13. But prikupiti' passive means "to be united," as in A, which sustains the analogy of fall (dispersion) versus salvation (reassemble) for both time and for human souls. It is not easy to tell whether this view of time is Neoplatonism or Zoroastrianism.

p3. Again A has passive/reflexive.

q3. Slav. voinu, "army" (?), or "in another" (?).

3 (Hebrew Apocalypse of) Enoch

(FIFTH–SIXTH CENTURY A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY P. ALEXANDER

3 Enoch purports to be an account by R. Ishmael of how he journeyed into heaven, saw God's throne and chariot, received revelations from the archangel Meṭatron, and viewed the wonders of the upper world. It falls into four main sections.

(1) Chapters 1–2, "The Ascension of Ishmael": Having passed through six heavenly palaces, one within the other, Ishmael is challenged by the guardian angels at the gate of the seventh, innermost palace. In response to his prayer for help God sends him the archangel Meṭatron, who ushers him into the seventh palace and presents him before God's throne. God graciously receives him and he joins the angels that attend the throne in reciting the Sanctus (the Qeduššah). (2) Chapters 3–16, "The Exaltation of Enoch": Meṭatron informs Ishmael that he is none other than Enoch the son of Jared (mentioned in Gen 5:18–24), whom God translated from earth to heaven and elevated over all the angels as his vice-regent. Meṭatron explains how and why he was taken up, and reveals in detail the steps by which he was transformed in mind and body from a human being into an angel; he describes his insignia and the heavenly functions he now performs. (3) Chapters 17–40, "The Heavenly Household": Meṭatron discourses to Ishmael on the organization and activities of the heavenly world. He gives an elaborate account of the angelic hierarchies, and describes a session of the heavenly assize and the performance of the climactic act of the angelic liturgy—the recitation of the celestial Sanctus. (4) Chapters 41–48, "The Sights of Heaven": Meṭatron takes Ishmael and shows him various heavenly marvels. These have to do with three main topics: (a) Cosmology: Ishmael sees the cosmic letters by which the world was created. He is also shown cosmic "opposites" (such as fire and water) held in balance by the power of divine names. (b) Eschatology: Ishmael sees the curtain (pargôd) that hangs before God's face, and represented on that curtain the whole course of human history from Adam until the coming of the Messiah. He also sees the right hand of God, behind his throne, waiting the appointed time of Israel's redemption. (c) Psychology: Ishmael is shown various souls; the souls of the righteous enjoying God's presence; the souls of the wicked and the intermediate in Sheol; the souls of the Patriarchs interceding for Israel; the souls of the stars; and the souls of the angels who have failed in the performance of the Sanctus, banished from God's presence and incarcerated behind fiery walls.

This summary of 3 Enoch is based on the contents of manuscripts A and B. The form of the work in these two manuscripts shows clear signs of editing; if we exclude the patently additional chapters 23–24 and 48BCD, then the overall structure of the work is reasonably coherent, and thematically related materials have been grouped together. It is evident, however, on closer investigation, that 3 Enoch has arisen through the combination of many separate traditions: it tends to break down into smaller "self-contained" units which probably existed prior to their incorporation into the present work. In the process of being brought together these pre-existing units of tradition were accommodated to each other only minimally, and so the work contains not a few cases of overlapping, inconsistency, and even contradiction. Manuscripts A and B give the longest recension of 3 Enoch. It is not clear whether the shorter recensions found in the other text-witnesses are abbreviations of this long recension, or whether, at least in some cases, they represent earlier stages in the growth of the work; the traditions may not all have been assembled at once, but could have come together in stages. There is some evidence to suggest that chapters 3–15 on the exaltation of Enoch are the oldest section of the work and formed the core around which the present A B text crystallized.¹

Texts

The original title of 3 Enoch appears to have been Seper Hekalot (The Book of the Palaces), but it has also been known as The Chapters of Rabbi Ishmael, and The Book of Rabbi Ishmael the High Priest; one manuscript refers to chapters 3–15 as “The Elevation of Meṭaṭron.” The name 3 Enoch was coined by H. Odeberg for his edition of 1928.

The text of 3 Enoch is in considerable confusion. Odeberg’s attempted critical edition has many serious flaws. The translation offered in the present study draws on the following manuscripts and editions (a number of which were unknown to Odeberg):

Siglum	Location	Chapters
A	Vatican City: Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana 228/4 (Assemanus).	1–48ABCD
B	Oxford: Bodleian Library 1656/2 (Neubauer).	1–48ABCD
C	Oxford: Bodleian Library 2257/4 (Neubauer).	3–16; 22–24; + 15B; 22BC
D	Oxford: Bodleian Library 1748/2 (Neubauer).	3–12; 15
E	Munich: Bayerische Staatsbibliothek 40/10 (Steinschneider).	1–15; 23–48AB
F	Rome: Biblioteca Casanatense 180/5 (Sacerdote).	1–15; 23–48AB
G	Vatican City: Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana 228/3 (Assemanus). A manuscript of the Alphabet of Aqiba in the same hand as A.	48BCD
Crac	Alphabet of Aqiba, published in Cracow, 1579, as printed in BHM , vol. 2, pp. 114–17.	48BCD
Eleazar	London: The British Museum Library, MS Add. 27199 (Margoliouth 737). A manuscript of the writings of Eleazar of Worms. (See 15B, n. a; 22C, n. a.)	15B; 22C
Lemb	Seper Hekalot , published in Lemberg (Lvov), 1864. Cited only occasionally.	1:1–28:5; 48BC (beginning)
Mus	S. Musajoff, Merkabah Šelemah (Jerusalem, 1921) fols. 9a–14b.	1:9–20:2; 22:1, 11
Wert	Alphabet of Aqiba in Wertheimer, BM , vol. 2, pp. 350–55.	48BCD

The sigla used here are not the same as in Odeberg’s edition. Other manuscripts of 3 Enoch not cited are: Florence, Biblioteca Medicea-Laurenziana, Plut. 44.13/18 (Biscionius), containing chapters 1:1–35:6, and 44:1–48A:9; and Jerusalem, The Jewish National and University Library 4/4 (Scholem) = MS 8° 381, which contains chapters 1:9–23:1. The Lemberg edition was reprinted at Warsaw in 1875, and the Warsaw edition at Piotrkow in 1883. The oldest printed text of 3 Enoch appears to be Deruš Pirqe Hekalot. It covers 3:1–12:5 and 15:1–2, and is dated by A. E. Cowley (Catalogue of Hebrew Printed Books in the Bodleian Library [Oxford, 1929] p. 241) to around 1650.

The translation of chapters 1–48A (except for 15B and 22BC) is based on B, despite the many errors of this manuscript, since the only critical edition of 3 Enoch available at present is Odeberg's and that is the text which he prints. However, B has been freely emended from the readings of the other manuscripts and editions. Particular weight has been given to manuscript A, since it belongs to the same textual tradition as B but gives superior readings.

¹ MS D and Deruš Pirqe Hekalot both contain effectively only the account of the exaltation of Enoch (see below on “Texts”). The earliest surely attested section of 3En is chs. 3–15; these chs. may have circulated once under the name of R. Aqiba, and it was for this reason that a summary of them was included in the Alphabet of Aqiba (see below on “Date”). On the literary structure of 3En see further ch. 1, n. a; 3, n. a; 16, n. a; 17, n. a; 41, n. a; 15B, n. a; 22B, n. a; 22C, n. a; 23, n. a; 48B, n. a. [Unless otherwise specified the OT quotations in Alexander’s Introduction and notes are according to his own translations. This procedure was necessary because JB and other English versions often do not follow the Jewish tradition, and the significance of a quotation might have been lost. —J.H.C.]

The base text for 15B and 22BC is manuscript C, as in Odeberg. For 15B the text-witnesses are C and Eleazar (see 15B, n. a); for 22B they are C, Ma'aseh Merkabah, Hekalot Rabbati, and a Haggadic Fragment printed by Jellinek (see 22B, n. a); for 22C they are C, Eleazar, Ma'aseh Merkabah, and the Haggadic Fragment (see 22C, n. a).

The translation of 48BCD is based on Wert since B, which Odeberg prints, is hopelessly corrupt. For 48BCD the text witnesses are: A, B, E (for 48B only), F (for 48B only), G, Crac, Wert.

A selection of variant readings is given in the notes. These readings are intended (1) to indicate the authority or authorities for departures from the base manuscripts, and (2) to record the more substantial variants.

For ease of reference the numbering of chapters and verses follows Odeberg. The chapter numbers derive ultimately from manuscript B.

A cautious attempt has been made to recover the original form of the A B recension of the text and so the obviously additional chapters 23–24 and 48BCD have been relegated to an appendix. The chapters numbered 15B and 22BC by Odeberg, which contain additional material not found in A or B, have also been put in this appendix.

Original language

3 Enoch is written in Hebrew. The exact character of its language has never been investigated, though Odeberg's "Index to the Hebrew Text" (3 Enoch, Pt. 4, pp. 3–18, esp. 14–18) provides a ready basis for analysis. There is no reason to suppose that the work has been translated into Hebrew from another language, such as Aramaic, in which some Merkabah traditions were written down. (Note, however, that the title "great and honored prince" in 18:5, 6 is in Aram.) There are loanwords from Latin (familia, 12:5) and Greek (e.g. glössokomon, 27:2).

The style of 3 Enoch and of the related Merkabah literature is highly distinctive. It is marked by extreme redundancy: Note the piling up of synonyms in such a typical sentence as "He enlightened my eyes and my heart to utter psalm, praise, jubilation, thanksgiving, song, glory, majesty, laud, and strength" (1:12). It also indulges in the repeated use of such highly emotive words as "glory, majesty, power, greatness" (see e.g. 19:1), and it manifests a tendency to fall into rhythmic prose (see e.g. 22B:8). These characteristics of style find their ultimate expression in the Merkabah hymns. G. G. Scholem has aptly spoken of the "polylogy" of these compositions.² They lie at the very heart of Merkabah mysticism and were almost certainly a feature of the Merkabah movement from an early stage; they formed part of the technique by which the adepts made their ascent to the Merkabah, and the practical function of their repetitiveness was to induce ecstasy (see below). It is probable that the redundant style belonged originally to the Merkabah hymns but came in the end to pervade the whole of the Merkabah literature.³

Date

3 Enoch—like a number of other Merkabah texts—is attributed to Rabbi Ishmael, the famous Palestinian scholar who died shortly before the outbreak of the Bar Kokhba War in

² G. G. Scholem, Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism, p. 60. Merkabah hymns are not, in fact, found in 3En. See further, A. Altman, "Hymns of Sanctification in Early Hekalot Literature," Melilah 2 (1946) 1–24 (in Heb.); Scholem, Major Trends, pp. 57–63; G. G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism, Merkabah Mysticism and Talmudic Tradition, pp. 20–30; J. Maier, "'Attah hū' 'ādōn (Hekalot rabbati XXVI, 5)," Judaica 21 (1965) 123–33; J. Maier, "Hekalot rabbati XXVII 2–5," Judaica 22 (1966) 209–17; J. Maier, "Poetisch-liturgische Stücke aus dem 'Buch der Geheimnisse,'" Judaica 24 (1968) 172–81; J. Maier, "Serienbildung und 'Numinoser' Eindruckseffekt in den poetischen Stücken der Hekalot-Literatur," Semities 3 (1973) 36–66.

³ It should be noted, however, that redundancy is a feature of liturgical language in general: see e.g. the Qaddiṣ: "Blessed, praised and glorified, exalted, extolled and honoured, magnified and lauded be the name of the Holy One, blessed be he" (S. Singer, The Authorised Daily Prayer Book [London, 1962] p. 78). Also the benediction Yiṣtabbah: "Unto thee, O Lord our God, and God of our fathers, song and praise are becoming, hymn and psalm, strength and dominion, victory, greatness and might, renown and glory, holiness and sovereignty, blessings and thanksgivings from now even for ever" (Singer, Authorised Prayer Book, p. 37; cf. E. D. Goldschmidt, The Passover Haggadah [Jerusalem, 1960] p. 135; see also b.Pes 118).

A.D. 132 (see 1:1, n. b). Though some of the traditions of 3 Enoch can be traced back to Ishmael's time (and even earlier), there can be no question of accepting this attribution at its face value; the work is a pseudepigraphon and Ishmael is simply the master whose authority the author or redactor of 3 Enoch wished to claim. The question of the real date of 3 Enoch has elicited from scholars very different answers.

In the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, though 3 Enoch itself was not well known, the tendency was to assign the type of literature to which it belongs to the gaonic era (7th–11th cent. A.D.). This view gained currency through the influence of L. Zunz's Die gottesdienstlichen Vorträge der Juden (Berlin, 1832; Frankfurt am Main, 1892²) pp. 165–79. It was H. Graetz, however, who first tried to establish this position by detailed argument (see "Die mystische Literatur in der gaonäischen Epoche," MGWJ 8 [1859] 67–78, 103–18, 140–53). Graetz reasoned that this Jewish mystical literature must be post-talmudic on the grounds that "the leading ideas contained therein were unknown in the talmudic age, and would have been abhorrent to talmudic authorities" (p. 104). In his view these Jewish mystical texts came into being in the ninth century under the influence of ideas current at that period in Islam. Thus he argued that the glorification of Enoch by the mystics (e.g. chs. 3–15), in contrast to his denigration in classic Midrashim (GenR 25:1; TargOnk to Gen 5:24⁴), reflects the favorable attitude to Enoch in Islamic tradition, which identifies him with righteous Idris of the Koran (Sura 19.57/56–58/57; 21.85f.; Mas'udi, Murudj 3, ed. Meynard-Courteille, vol. 1, p. 73). The nub of Graetz's case, however, was the contention that the crudely anthropomorphic doctrine of Šī'ur Qomah, found in the Jewish mystical literature (see below), is dependent on the teaching of Islamic mushabbiha sects, such as the Mughiriyya, followers of the heretic al-Mughira b. Sa'id al-'Idjli (Shahrastani, Kitab al-Milal wal-Nihal, ed. Cureton, pt. 1 [1842] pp. 134f.; ed. Al-Wakil [Cairo, 1968] pp. 176–78; trans. Haarbrücker, vol. 1 [1851] pp. 203f.). Graetz's position is indefensible. There was no need to invoke Islam to explain the mystics' favorable views of Enoch; they were simply carrying on an indigenous Jewish tradition with its roots in Palestinian apocalyptic in the Maccabean period, if not earlier (see below). As for Šī'ur Qomah, Scholem and Lieberman have pointed to probable allusions to the doctrine already in the talmudic period (see below).

H. Odeberg (3 Enoch) took a very different line from that of Graetz. He maintained that the earliest stratum of material in 3 Enoch (9:2–13:2, which appears to describe Meṭaṭron as a primordial being) dates from a time not later than the first century A.D. (pt. 1, p. 188). The main body of the text, however, chs. 3–48A, was redacted in the latter half of the third century A.D. The rest of the material (chs. 1–2, 15B, 22BC, and 48BC) is all pre-Islamic (pt. 1, pp. 41f.).

Odeberg's main arguments are as follows: (1) A comparison of 3 Enoch with Hagigah 11b–16a suggests that 3 Enoch is not later than that text (pt. 1, p. 32). (2) The language of 3 Enoch is "most akin to that of the earlier haggadic dicta of the Babylonian Talmud, or, in general, that of the dicta attributed to the tannaitic teachers and earlier Amoras" (pt. 1, p., 37). (3) The reference to Samma'el, the Prince of Rome, and Dubbi'el, the Prince of Persia (26:12), points to the origin of the work in pre-Islamic times, when Rome and Persia divided the world between themselves (pt. 1, p. 37). (4) The irenic attitude of 3 Enoch toward the nations suggests a period of good relations with the ruling power such as the Jewish colonies in Babylonia enjoyed under Sassanian Persia in the third and fourth centuries A.D. (pt. 1, pp. 37f.). (5) The form of the Qeḏuššah in 3 Enoch takes us back to a time when it had not yet received any of the amplifications attested in the Gemara of the Babylonian Talmud, or been associated with the 'Amidah (pt. 1, p. 38). (6) The reference to the Messiah, the son of Joseph, in 45:5 dates the document after the time of Hadrian (pt. 1, p. 38). (7) Similarly the reference to the pre-existence of the soul (ch. 43) "may perhaps be taken as evidence for the origin of that section not much earlier than the beginning of the third century A.D.," if Billerbeck's opinion is correct that this idea first penetrated rabbinic Judaism then (pt. 1, pp. 38, 180). (8) The relationship which Odeberg perceived between 3 Enoch and the other Merkabah texts also played a part in his dating. He regarded 3 Enoch as one of the earliest of these texts, older, for example, than Hekalot Rabbati (pt. 2, pp. 54, 159), and since he was still influenced by the nineteenth-century dating of this literature as post-talmudic, he tended to push 3 Enoch back into the talmudic period.

⁴ However, the text of Onkelos at this point is not altogether certain; see I. Gruenwald, "Knowledge and Vision," Israel Oriental Studies 3 (1973) 66, n. 20; P. S. Alexander, "The Historical Setting of the Hebrew Book of Enoch," JJS 28 (1977) 176, n. 40.

These arguments are not all of equal weight. The fourth is subjective and of little value. The third is weak, though not entirely lacking in force. The fifth is interesting: It is certainly noteworthy that the forms of the Qeđuššah in 3 Enoch are simpler than those used in the synagogue liturgy; but it is very doubtful whether we can deduce from this that the sections of 3 Enoch which quote the heavenly Sanctus originated before the synagogue Qeđuššot were composed. The second argument looks as if it might provide a strong case, but Odeberg offers no evidence beyond bald assertion, and, in fact, our knowledge of rabbinic Hebrew is hardly so exact as to allow us to draw such a precise conclusion. Arguments six and seven are possibly correct, and may indicate a date (or dates) after which 3 Enoch must have been finally redacted.⁵ The crucial arguments are, however, the first and the eighth, and in both cases it seems that Odeberg made a fundamental misjudgment. As Scholem subsequently demonstrated, 3 Enoch is probably one of the later, not one of the earlier Merkabah texts. And while Odeberg was justified in maintaining that 3 Enoch contains traditions as old as, if not older than, talmudic Ma'aseh Merkabah, he failed to see that occasionally it makes use of talmudic material, and so its final editing is presumably post-talmudic.⁶

Scholem dates 3 Enoch to the fifth or sixth century A.D., though he concedes that "much of the material is old and important" (Gnosticism, p. 17, n. 19). He does not systematically argue his case;⁷ he surveys the Merkabah literature and offers a reconstruction of the development of Merkabah mysticism from the first to the tenth century A.D., and it is from this that his dating of 3 Enoch emerges. 3 Enoch is a highly complex and involved Merkabah text and so it should be assigned a place fairly late in the history of Merkabah mysticism (after Hekalot Zuřati and Hekalot Rabbati). Scholem maintains that "3 Enoch already reinterprets, and wrongly, some older Merkabah traditions that a third-century writer could not have misunderstood"⁸ (Gnosticism, p. 7, n. 19). The following appear to be examples of what he means by reinterpretation. (1) One of Meřatron's most distinctive titles is Na'ar. Originally this was used in the sense of "servant" and it referred to Meřatron's role as the high priest of the heavenly sanctuary; its equivalent in one Aramaic text is šammāšā reřimā = "the beloved servant." (Cf. Meřatron's common title 'ebed = "servant" [10:3].) In 3 Enoch 4, however, Na'ar is taken in the sense of "Youth" and linked with the notion that Meřatron is translated Enoch: as the youngest of the angel-princes he is known among them as "Youth" (4:10) (Gnosticism, p. 66). (2) Another possible instance of reinterpretation is the name ³Azbogah. In origin this was a secret name of God, possibly related to the gnostic concept of the Ogdoad, the eighth heavenly sphere. (³Azbogah is made up of three groups of consonants, each of which adds up by gematria to eight.) But in 3 Enoch 18:22 ³Azbogah has become simply the name of one of the angels, and it is taken as a kind of abbreviation (notarikon) for 'ozēr bigdē hayyim = "the one who girds (the righteous) with the garments of life" (Gnosticism, pp. 65f.).

A very late date for 3 Enoch has recently been advanced by J. T. Milik.⁹ He holds that the work cannot have been composed earlier than the ninth or tenth century A.D., and that, in fact, the greater part of it was written between the twelfth and fifteenth centuries A.D. (pp. 126f.). His arguments run as follows: (1) 3 Enoch draws on 2 Enoch, which, in its Greek original, must be dated to the ninth or tenth century A.D. (2) On the incantation bowls

⁵ J. Heinemann, "The Messiah of Ephraim and the Premature Exodus of the Tribe of Ephraim," HTR 68 (1975) 1-15, argues that the idea of the Messiah of Ephraim is pre-Hadrianic but that it underwent a transformation after the death of Bar Kokhba. On the pre-existence of the soul see E. E. Urbach, The Sages: Their Concepts and Beliefs (Jerusalem, 1975) vol. 1, p. 236: "Support for this concept is to be found only in dicta of the Palestinian Amoraim of the second half of the third century."

⁶ See 4:6, n. 1; 16:1-5, n. a; 31:2, n. e; 45:2, n. h. On the problem of the relationship of 3En to the Talmud see further below on "Historical importance."

⁷ This is unfortunate. His arguments have to be culled from Major Trends, pp. 40-79, and from Gnosticism. It should be noted that Gnosticism gives earlier dates for the Hekalot texts than does Major Trends (see Gnosticism, p. 8). Thus in Major Trends, p. 45, Scholem appears to date 3En later than the 6th cent. A.D. The 5th/6th-cent. date assigned to it in Gnosticism presumably applies only to the bulk of the work (chs. 1-48A), and Scholem still stands by his view, put forward in Major Trends, p. 68, that the list of the seventy names of Meřatron in 3En 48D is from the Gaonic era.

⁸ I.e. if Odeberg's 3rd-cent. date for 3En were correct.

⁹ J. T. Milik, "Enoch in Cabbalistic Literature," The Books of Enoch: Aramaic Fragments of Qumran Cave 4 (Oxford, 1976) pp. 123-35.

which date from the seventh or eighth century, or even from the ninth century A.D., Meṭatron is not yet identified with Enoch (p. 128); Enoch is still a purely human figure and there is no hint of the central teaching of 3 Enoch that he was elevated to the rank of archangel (p. 133). (3) The name Meṭatron is to be derived from the Latin metator, via Greek mētātōr, mitatōr (p. 131). But this loanword could hardly have entered Hebrew and Judeo-Aramaic before the fifth or sixth century A.D., for it was then that Latin borrowings, especially of administrative and military terms, entered these languages en bloc (pp. 133f.). (4) 3 Enoch was influenced by the Arabic Hermetic tradition of the eighth to tenth centuries A.D. The Arabic Hermeticists identified Hermes with Enoch; the incantation bowls identify Hermes with Meṭatron. The author or redactor of 3 Enoch, receiving both these traditions, deduced that Enoch was the same as Meṭatron (p. 134). (5) "Cabbalistic theories, including the figure of Metatron-Enoch in his role as lieutenant of God, do not appear in Western Europe until the twelfth century (A.D.)" (p. 134).

Milik's arguments will not stand up to close scrutiny. The first of them depends on a dating for 2 Enoch which does not command much scholarly assent, and it requires us to posit a close and exclusive relationship between 2 Enoch and 3 Enoch such as does not, in fact, exist. In the second argument Milik's dating of the incantation bowls is open to question. Many of the bowls cannot be dated with certainty, but those from Nippur (among which are some of our most informative texts on Meṭatron) were found in stratified deposits and have been dated archaeologically to the seventh century A.D. at the very latest.¹⁰ Moreover, the fact that Enoch is not identified with Meṭatron on the bowls proves little. It is unlikely that the circles from which 3 Enoch emanated were the same as those which produced the bowls. The failure of the magicians to equate Enoch and Meṭatron does not prove that the equation had not already been made by the Merkabah mystics either in Babylonia or in Palestine.

As for the third argument, Milik is rather overconfident about the derivation of the angelic name Meṭatron from the Latin metator (see below). His assertion that metator can hardly have entered Judeo-Aramaic or Hebrew before the fifth or sixth century A.D. does not accord with the evidence: it is found in what would appear to be much earlier Jewish material.¹¹ The appeal in Milik's fourth argument to Arabic Hermetic traditions to explain the equation between Meṭatron and Enoch is unnecessary. The identification can be explained as a natural development within the mystical tradition. It is very curious, if Milik is correct, that the impact of Arabic Hermeticism is not more evident in 3 Enoch or in the other Merkabah tracts. Out of the scores of names for Meṭatron found in the Merkabah traditions Hermes does not appear to be attested. Milik's final argument is simply mistaken. It assumes that 3 Enoch was written in western Europe. In fact it was almost certainly written in the East—either in Babylonia or in Palestine (see below on "Provenance"). It can be shown conclusively that the vast majority of the ideas contained in 3 Enoch, including the Enoch-Meṭatron doctrine, were known in both these centers long before the twelfth century A.D.

It is impossible to reach a very firm conclusion as to the date of 3 Enoch. The main problem is the literary character of the work: it is not the total product of a single author at a particular point in time, but the deposit of a "school tradition" which incorporates elements from widely different periods. Certain rough chronological limits can, however, be established. (1) 3 Enoch can hardly have been written later than the tenth century A.D., since it is clear from the writings of Sa'adya, Sherira and Hai, and the Karaites Jacob al-Qirḳisani and Salmon b. Yeruḥim that the Merkabah literature was circulating widely among Rabbanites at that period and was regarded as being of considerable antiquity and authority.¹² Particularly interesting is the fact that Jacob al-Qirḳisani knew the short account of the elevation of ¹⁰ See J. A. Montgomery, Aramaic Incantation Texts from Nippur (Philadelphia, 1913) pp. 103f.; see further n. 18 below.

¹¹ The Latin metator is found in a dictum attributed to Eliezer b. Hyrcanus (late 1st/early 2nd cent. A.D.) in SifDeut 338 (ed. Finkelstein, p. 388), on which see n. 17 below. It occurs also in a dictum which, according to GenR 5:4, was cited by R. Levi (late 3rd cent. A.D.) in the name of Ben Azzai and Ben Zoma (1st half of the 2nd cent. A.D.). The angelic name Meṭatron occurs in a dictum which Rab Naḥman b. Isaac (died mid 4th cent. A.D.) attributed to Rab Idi (early 4th cent. A.D.) (b.Sanh 38b). Note also its occurrence in the 4th-cent. work Re'uyot Yehezqel, BM, vol. 2, p. 132 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 130).

¹² Sa'adya, see 'Oṣar haḡge'onim, ed. Lewin, Berakot, Responsa sec., p. 17; Sherira and Hai, see 'Oṣar haḡge'onim (ed. Lewin, Ḥaḡigah, Responsa sec., pp. 10–12, 13–15); Jacob al-Qirḳisani, see Kitab al-Anwar 1.3 and 4 (ed. Nemoj, vol. 1, pp. 14, 31); Salmon b. Yeruḥim, see Seper Milḥamot 'Adonai 15–17 (ed. Davidson, pp. 114–32).

Enoch found in certain recensions of the Alphabet of Aqiba and in 3 Enoch 48C (Kitab al-Anwar 1.4.2, ed. Nemoj, vol. 1, p. 31, 15). This short account appears to be a summary of a longer version of the elevation of Enoch closely akin to 3 Enoch 3–15. (2) If we are right in surmising that 3 Enoch has drawn some of its materials from the Babylonian Talmud,¹³ then its final redaction can hardly be earlier than the fifth century A.D. (3) The magical bowls from Nippur show that many of 3 Enoch's ideas about Meṭatron and about the heavenly world were known in magical circles in the sixth and seventh centuries A.D. All things considered, then, though 3 Enoch contains some very old traditions and stands in direct line with developments which had already begun in the Maccabean era, a date for its final redaction in the fifth or the sixth century A.D. cannot be far from the truth.¹⁴

Provenance

In the period to which we have dated 3 Enoch there appear to have been two main centers of Merkabah mysticism—Palestine and Babylonia.¹⁵ It is far from easy to determine in which of these two regions 3 Enoch was finally edited. The work draws extensively on Palestinian apocalyptic traditions about Enoch (see below), and some of its distinctive ideas can be paralleled in Palestinian sources; e.g. the identity of Enoch and Meṭatron is attested in one of the Palestinian Targumim (TarJon to Gen 5:24),¹⁶ and “Mitatron” occurs as a secret name of the prince of the third heaven in the fourth-century Palestinian work Re'uyot Yeḥezqe'l (BM, vol. 2, p. 132; ed. Gruenwald, p. 130).¹⁷ On the other hand, there are also close parallels to 3 Enoch in texts of Babylonian provenance. Meṭatron is mentioned a number of times in the incantation bowls from Babylonia, and invoked as “the Great Prince,” “the Great Prince of God's Throne,” “the Great Prince of the Whole World”; one Mandaean bowl speaks of “Meṭatron . . . who serves before the curtain [brgwd].”¹⁸ There are three highly suggestive references to Meṭatron in the Babylonian Talmud (b.Sanh 38b; b.Ḥag 15a; b.AZ 3b). Particularly significant is the close relationship between the account of the humbling of Meṭatron in 3 Enoch 16 and that in Ḥagigah 15a. If, as seems to be the case, this story is of Babylonian origin, then it is reasonable to locate the final redaction of 3 Enoch in Babylonia.¹⁹

Historical importance

Classic rabbinic literature makes it clear that there was an esoteric doctrine in talmudic Judaism. It was concerned with two subjects—the Account of Creation (Ma'aṣeh Bere'shit)

¹³ See n. 6 above.

¹⁴ I. Gruenwald is of the opinion that 3En may be later than the 6th cent. A.D., though he agrees that it contains much older material, some of which may go back to the 2nd or 3rd cent. A.D., or even earlier; see “Jewish Sources for the Gnostic Texts from Nag Hammadi?” Proceedings of the Sixth World Congress of Jewish Studies (Jerusalem, 1977) vol. 3, p. 50.

¹⁵ In the Middle Ages Merkabah texts were known in Europe and North Africa. Several Merkabah texts were discovered in the Cairo Genizah (Re'uyot Yeḥezqe'l, a Hekalot text, a fragment of Ši'ur Qomah, and the related magical tract Seper HaRazim). In the 10th cent. Si'ur Qomah texts were known to the Jews of Fez in Morocco (Responsum of Sherira and Hai, 'Oṣar hagge'onim, [ed. Lewin, Ḥagigah, Responsa sec., pp. 10–12]). Merkabah mysticism may have been known in southern Italy as early as the 9th cent. A.D.; by the 10th it was known in the Rhineland; and by the 13th in Spain. What we cannot be certain of is when the Merkabah teachings first began to spread from the East to the West, and how exactly they were transmitted.

¹⁶ Cf. TarJon to Deut 34:6. These two references to Meṭatron probably belong to a late stratum of the Targum; the other two recensions of the Palestinian Targum make no reference to Meṭatron. It is well known that the final redaction of TarJon to the Pentateuch cannot have been earlier than the 7th cent. A.D., because of the allusion to a wife and daughter of Mohammed in Gen 21:21.

¹⁷ SifDeut 338 (ed. Finkelstein, p. 388) does not allude to Meṭatron the archangel, contrary to what Odeberg, 3 Enoch, pt. 1, pp. 91f., supposes; see Alexander, JJS 28 (1977) 163, n. 15.

¹⁸ For the texts see Montgomery, Aramaic Incantation Texts from Nippur; C. D. Isbell, Corpus of Aramaic Incantation Bowls, SBL Dissertation Series 17 (Missoula, Mont., 1975); M. J. Geller, “Two Incantation Bowls Inscribed in Syriac and Aramaic,” BSOAS 39 (1976) 422–27. It must be stressed that the decipherment of these texts is often acutely problematic; cf. with Montgomery's readings the readings proposed by J. N. Epstein, “Gloses babylo-araméens,” REJ 73 (1921) 27–58; 74 (1922) 40–72. For discussion, see B. A. Levine, “The Language of the Magical Bowls,” in J. Neusner, A History of the Jews in Babylonia (Leiden, 1970) vol. 5, pp. 343–75; L. H. Schiffman, “A Forty-two Letter Divine Name in the Aramaic Magic Bowls,” Bulletin of the Institute of Jewish Studies 1 (1973) 97–102; Milik, The Books of Enoch, pp. 128–30; Alexander, JJS 28 (1977) 165–67.

¹⁹ Odeberg reached the same conclusion, though for rather different reasons; see 3 Enoch, pt. 1, pp. 37f.

and the Account of the Chariot (Ma'aseh Merkabah). All study and discussion of these topics in public was banned.²⁰ The Mishnah rules that "the Account of Creation may not be expounded before two or more persons, nor the Chariot before even one, unless he is a scholar who understands of his own knowledge" (m.Ḥag 2:1). Those who ignored these injunctions did so at their peril. The story was told of a certain Galilean who announced that he would publicly lecture on the Merkabah, but who was stung by a wasp and died (b.Šab 80b). A young scholar who dabbled prematurely in chariot lore was said to have been smitten with leprosy (y.Ḥag 77a.46); another perceived the ḥašmal and was consumed by fire (b.Ḥag 13a).

Despite efforts to keep Merkabah teaching secret, we are not entirely in the dark as to its contents in the talmudic period; some elements of it are disclosed. The most extensive single text in classical rabbinic literature Ḥagigah 11b–16a. This gives an account of the seven heavens and their contents (strictly a motif of Ma'aseh Berešit), discusses the safeguards to be applied in studying and teaching Ma'aseh Merkabah, and relates stories of the great masters and adepts.

The ideas which are explicitly put forward in Ḥagigah 11b–16a can hardly be the sum total of talmudic Merkabah mysticism; in view of the Mishnaic ruling it is reasonable to suppose that there were more esoteric doctrines which have not been made public. These deeper teachings are hinted at in a number of places. One of these is the story of the four who entered Pardes:

Four entered Pardes, and these are they: Ben Azzai, Ben Zoma, 'Aḥer, and Rabbi Aqiba. Rabbi Aqiba said to them: When you reach the stones of pure marble do not say, "Water! Water!" for it is written, "He that speaks falsehood shall not be established before my eyes" (Ps 101:7). Ben Azzai looked and died: Scripture says of him, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints" (Ps 116:15). Ben Zoma looked and went mad: Scripture says of him, "Have you found honey? Eat so much as is sufficient for you lest you be sated with it and vomit it up" (Prov 25:16). 'Aḥer cut down the young plants. Rabbi Aqiba went out in peace.²¹

Pardes is a designation of the place to which the souls of the righteous go after death.²² Here, however, the reference cannot be to the final departure of the souls of the four to that blissful abode; it must allude to a mystical entry into Pardes which took place while they were still alive; note how Aqiba not only enters but comes out again.²³ Pardes was sometimes located on earth, sometimes in heaven. Which of these traditions lies behind this passage cannot now be determined with certainty; however, a reference to a celestial Pardes is likely. The parallel in 2 Corinthians 12:1–7 points in this direction, and it is evident that—whatever its original meaning—the text was already being read in amoraic times in terms of a mystical ascent to heaven. Its setting in the Gemara should be noted; it occurs in a context dealing with the heavenly world, and in Ḥagigah 15a the enigmatic remark about 'Aḥer cutting down the young plants is apparently explained by a story about an encounter between 'Aḥer and the angel Metatron which is supposed to have taken place "on high," i.e. in heaven

²⁰ m.Ḥag 2:1 also forbids public discussion of the laws regarding incest: see P. S. Alexander, "The Rabbinic Lists of Forbidden Targumim," JJS 27 (1976) 185.

²¹ b.Ḥag 14b. The parallels contain a number of variants: see t.Ḥag 2:3–4; y.Ḥag 77b.8–23; SongR 1:4.1. For discussion see A. Neher, "Le voyage mystique des quatre," RHR 140 (1951) 59–82; Scholem, Major Trends, pp. 52f.; Scholem, Gnosticism, pp. 14–19; I. Gruenwald, "Yannai and Hekhaloth Literature," Tarbiš 36 (1966/67) 261–65; E. E. Urbach, "The Traditions About Merkabah Mysticism in the Tannaic Period," Festschrift Scholem (1967) Heb. sec., pp. 12–16.

²² Usually this place is referred to as Gan 'Eden in rabbinic literature; see 3En 5:5, n. f. Another suggestion is that Pardes is a cryptic designation for mystical or metaphysical speculation, this term having been chosen because it was in Paradise that the tree of knowledge was to be found (Gen 2:17) (Strack-Billerbeck, vol. 4, p. 1119; Scholem, Major Trends, p. 361, n. 45). "To enter Pardes," then, would mean to engage in a certain kind of esoteric study. In biblical and rabbinic Heb. pardēs means "a park," "a garden" (Neh 2:8; Eccl 2:5; Song 4:13; t.BMeš 1:10; b.Sot 10a). Like the Gk. paradeisos (the root of the English "paradise"), it is derived from the Persian pairīdāeza, "an enclosure." See further I. de Vuippens, Le paradis au troisième ciel (Paris, 1925); Strack-Billerbeck, vol. 4, pp. 118–1165; H. Bietenhard, Die himmlische Welt im Urchristentum und Spätjudentum (Tübingen, 1951) pp. 161–85.

²³ The ending of the story in the Yerušalmi Talmud, the Tosepta (Erfurt MS), and SongR is clear on this point: "R. Aqiba entered in peace and went out in peace." The version in the Babylonian Talmud abbreviates. The Vienna MS of the Tosepta has an interesting variant: "R. Aqiba ascended in peace and descended in peace."

(cf. 3En 16).²⁴ If this interpretation of the story of the four who entered Pardes is correct, then it would seem that in talmudic times Ma'aseh Merkabah contained a doctrine of mystical ascent to heaven.

Another element of the Merkabah tradition in the talmudic period may be disclosed by an early rabbinic gloss on 1 Samuel 6:12. Rabbinic exegetes derived the unusual verbal form wayyisšarnāh in 1 Samuel 6:12 not from the root yšr in the sense of "go straight," but from šyr, "to sing." They took the text to mean that the cows sang a hymn as they pulled the cart bearing the Ark of the Covenant back along the road from Philistia to Israel. Various suggestions were made as to the song they sang; some identified it with the Song at the Sea (Ex 15), others with biblical Psalms (Pss 93, 98, 99), but the Palestinian haggadist R. Isaac Nappaḥa (mid 3rd cent. A.D.) stated that it was a non-biblical composition which ran as follows:

Rejoice, rejoice, acacia shrine,
Flaunt yourself in your abundant glory,
Bound in embroideries of gold,
Praised in the sanctum of the Temple,
Resplendent in the finest of ornaments.²⁵

As Scholem has pointed out, the whole force of this exegesis turns upon an allusion to the Merkabah hymns: Just as the ḥayyot (the holy creatures) bearing up the Merkabah sing hymns to the Merkabah, so the kine bearing up the Ark sang hymns to the Ark. The song of the kine has a number of affinities to some of the surviving Merkabah hymns (see Hekalot Rabbati 2:4, BHM, vol. 3, p. 84; Cairo Genizah Hekalot B/1, 33, ed. Gruenwald, p. 369). It would appear, then, that R. Isaac and his audience were acquainted with hymns of the Merkabah type and with their mystical setting.²⁶

A patristic text appears to indicate that students of Ma'aseh Merkabah were already speculating in the talmudic period on the mystical body of God. In the prologue of his commentary on the Song of Songs (cf. Jerome, Commentary on Ezekiel, 1 Praefatio, and Epistle 53, ad Paulinum), Origen informs us that in his day Jews did not study the beginning of Genesis, the beginning and end of Ezekiel, and the Song of Songs, until they had mastered the rest of Scripture and the oral law. Scholem has argued that the inclusion of the Song of Songs along with these other mystical texts shows that already in the early third century A.D. Ši'ur Qomah speculation had been attached to the description of the Beloved in the Song of Songs 5:10–16 (cf. Hekalot Rabbati 12, BM, vol. 1, p. 87; Merkabah Šelemah 38a). An analysis of certain tannaitic and amoraic statements about the Song of Songs undertaken by Lieberman tends to confirm Scholem's view.²⁷

From this discussion it seems reasonable to conclude that, in addition to the explicit teachings given in Ḥagigah and in other classic rabbinic texts, Merkabah mysticism in the talmudic period contained the following three elements: (1) an idea of mystical ascent to heaven; (2) Merkabah hymns; and (3) speculation of the Ši'ur Qomah type. It is clear, then, that all the leading ideas in the Merkabah tracts such as Hekalot Rabbati and 3 Enoch were already present in Merkabah mysticism in the talmudic period. An important question now arises: What is the relationship between the talmudic Merkabah texts and the Merkabah tracts? Two views are possible. On the one hand we could argue that the mystical tracts are post-talmudic and have grown out of attempts to understand and to explain talmudic Ma'aseh

²⁴ Later Jewish scholars certainly interpreted the story as referring to an ascent to heaven: see Hai, 'Ošar hagge'onim, ed. Lewin, Ḥagigah, Responsa sec., pp. 13–15, and esp. p. 14; Rabbenu Ḥanan'el to b.Ḥag 14b (cf. 'Aruk haššalem under pardēs); Rashi to b.Ḥag 14b; Tosapota to b.Ḥag 14b, niknesu.

²⁵ So b.AZ 24b; the parallels have a number of important variations: see GenR 54:4; Seder 'Eliyahu Rabbah 12 (11) (ed. Friedmann, p. 58); Midraš Semu'el 12:3 (ed. Buber, p. 40).

²⁶ Scholem, Gnosticism, pp. 20–30; I. Gruenwald, "A Technique of the Midrash: Linkage by Sound-Patterns," Ha-Sifrut 1 (1968/69) 726 (in Heb.). J. Goldin, The Song at the Sea (New Haven, 1971) pp. 80f., suggests that there are some ancient hymnic fragments embedded in Mekilta' deRabbi 'Išma'el, Širah 1 (ed. Horovitz-Rabin, p. 119). The hymns he reconstructs are in some respects similar to the Merkabah hymns.

²⁷ See Scholem, Gnosticism, pp. 38–40; Lieberman, app. D in Scholem's Gnosticism, esp. p. 123. For an application of Song 5:10–16 very explicitly to God see Mekilta' deRabbi 'Išma'el, Širah 3 (ed. Horovitz-Rabin, p. 127); Goldin, The Song at the Sea, pp. 115–20. Scholem's suggestion (Gnosticism, p. 40) that the reference to the "length of the nose being as the length of the little finger" in b.Bek 44a is a quotation from the Ši'ur Qomah (cf. Merkabah Šelemah 38a; Lieberman, Shkhiin [Jerusalem, 1970²] p. 12) is unconvincing.

Merkabah materials. Or we could argue that the Merkabah tracts and the talmudic Merkabah texts belong to one unbroken mystical movement and that in some cases the traditions in the mystical tracts may go back to the talmudic period or may even be anterior to the talmudic Merkabah traditions.

Of these two views the second seems to fit the facts better. There are many elements in the Merkabah tracts (such as 3 Enoch's account of the elevation of Enoch)²⁸ which cannot easily be explained as Midrashim on talmudic Ma'aseh Merkabah; clearly the writers of the tracts had access to Merkabah traditions other than those contained in classic rabbinic sources. Moreover, in certain cases the mystical tracts appear to contain in fuller form traditions alluded to only obscurely in the Talmud. For example, the statement attributed to R. Aqiba in the story of the four who entered Pardes, "When you reach the stones of pure marble do not say, 'Water! Water!' for it is written, 'He that speaks falsehood shall not be established before my eyes,'" has baffled exegetes both ancient and modern. Parallels to it, however, are found in the mystical tracts Hekalot Zutarti and Hekalot Rabbati, and there it is stated that Aqiba's remark refers to a stage in the ascent of the mystic to the Merkabah: When he reaches the sixth palace he sees a glittering pavement of pure marble flags, and it seems to him that they are waves of water threatening to swallow him up. He must be careful, however, not to cry out, "Water! Water!" for by uttering this falsehood he lays himself open to angelic attack. Though at certain points later elements may have crept into the tradition in Hekalot Zutarti and Hekalot Rabbati about the stones of pure marble, Scholem is surely right in seeing here the key to the enigmatic talmudic statement. If this is so, then it follows that in this case the mystical tracts contain Merkabah material as old as that in the Talmud.²⁹

It would seem, then, that Merkabah mysticism was a movement which continued in unbroken existence from tannaitic to gaonic times. The movement originated in Palestine. This may be deduced from a number of facts. Merkabah doctrines are found in early Palestinian texts (e.g. t.Hag 2:1–6 and y.Hag 2, 77a). We should also note that the four who entered Pardes—Ben Zoma, Ben Azzai, Aqiba, and Elisha b. Abuya (ʿAḥer)—were all Palestinian scholars of the second century A.D. Merkabah literature itself claims Palestinian roots, for it cites as its authorities Tannaim belonging mainly to the circle of Yoḥanan b. Zakkai's disciples. Some of the surviving Merkabah texts contain what would appear to be identifiably Palestinian elements. Thus 3 Enoch's Meṭatron embodies Palestinian apocalyptic traditions about Enoch. In a vivid description of the guardian angels of the seventh palace Hekalot Rabbati refers to "the mangers of Caesarea" (presumably those attached to the hippodrome at Caesarea Maritima, Josephus, Ant 16.137), to the "gate of Caesarea," and to the "water-pipe in the Valley of Kidron" near Jerusalem (Hekalot Rabbati 16:1–2, BHM, vol. 3, pp. 94f.). The story about R. Ḥananyah b. Teradyon and Lupinus Caesar in Hekalot Rabbati 5–6 (BHM, vol. 3, pp. 87f., BM, vol. 1, pp. 80f.) is also, in all probability, of Palestinian origin. Merkabah mysticism spread from Palestine to the Jewish communities in Babylonia; cultural contacts between the two centers were close, so it is not difficult to see how the Merkabah ideas could have been carried to Babylonia.³⁰ We have already remarked on the presence of Merkabah materials in texts of Babylonian provenance such as the Babylonian Talmud and the incantation bowls. It is a fact that the Merkabah traditions in the Babylonian Talmud are richer and fuller than those in the classic Palestinian rabbinic texts (cf. y.Hag 2, 77a with b.Hag 11b–16a). There are two possible explanations of this fact: it is possible that the Babylonian mystics were less inhibited than their Palestinian counterparts about disclosing the contents of Ma'aseh Merkabah; or else the Babylonian Talmud may contain further developments of the Merkabah tradition which originated among the Babylonian mystics.

²⁸ It is well known that classic rabbinic sources have very little to say about Enoch: he is not mentioned even once in the two Talmuds or the tannaitic Midrashim (see Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 5, p. 156, n. 58); the references to him in GenR are generally denigratory.

²⁹ See Major Trends, pp. 52f.; Gnosticism, pp. 14–16; see further Gruenwald, Tarbis 36 (1966/67) 262–66; Urbach, Scholem Festschrift, pp. 15–17. Hai Gaon had already explained the talmudic text from Hekalot Zutarti in the 10th cent.: see 'Oṣar haḡe'otim, ed. Lewin, Haḡigah, Responsa sec., p. 14, and cf. Rabbenu Ḥanan'el to b.Hag 14b.

³⁰ E.g. the Babylonian scholar Rab (early 3rd cent. A.D.), who appears to have had an interest in esoteric lore, studied in Palestine, and the Palestinian Isaac Nappaḥa, who quoted the song of the kine (see n. 25 above), was in Babylonia for some time.

The Merkabah mystics came to be known as Yōredē Merkābāh, "those who descend to the Chariot,"³¹ and in certain cases they appear to have been organized into regular conventicles. From a close reading of the Merkabah literature it is possible to sketch the profile of these conventicles. Particularly valuable is Hekalot Rabbati 13–18 (BHM, vol. 3, pp. 93–97), which appears to be a thinly disguised description of a Merkabah séance. Each group was gathered round a master who not only initiated his disciples into the mystical lore, but demonstrated the ascent to the Merkabah. The achieving of a "vision of the Merkabah" (šepiyyat hammerkābāh) (see 3En 1:1), either by the master himself or by another adept in the group, was probably the central act of a session of a conventicle.³²

The technique of the ascent had two aspects. First, preparation: For some days prior to the ascent the adept made himself ready by fasting, eating special food, or bathing (Responsum of Hai Gaon, ʿOšar haggeʿonim, ed. Lewin, Ḥagigah, Responsa sec., p. 14; Maʿašeh Merkabah 19, ed. Scholem, p. 111; cf. Seper HaRazim 2:6–11, ed. Margalioth, p. 81). Secondly, there was the ascent itself. This was effected by the recitation of (1) Merkabah hymns or prayers (Maʿašeh Merkabah 27, ed. Scholem, p. 113); (2) magic formulae; or (3) invocations of God or of the archangels by magical names (Hekalot Rabbati 14:4, BHM, vol. 3, p. 94).³³ These hymns, prayers, formulae, and invocations have one thing in common: they all involve the rhythmic repetition of certain words, or sounds, or ideas. Given the rigorous preparations for the ascent, the sense of anticipation and the aura of mystery and awe with which the act was surrounded, this repetition would have been potent enough to have sent the adepts into trance. Its efficacy would have been magnified if, as Hai Gaon asserts, the mystics recited the hymns with their heads between their knees, in the manner of Elijah on Mount Carmel (cf. 1Kgs 18:42), thus constricting their breathing.³⁴

The Merkabah texts stress the dangers of the ascent: To reach the throne of God the mystic had to pass through seven gates guarded by awesome archangels. He must have the right "seals" to show them and he must know the names of the angels (Hekalot Rabbati 15 and 17, BHM, vol. 3, pp. 94f.; Maʿašeh Merkabah 23, ed. Scholem, p. 112; cf. 3En 48D:5). The sixth gate was regarded as especially perilous (Hekalot Rabbati 17:6, BHM, vol. 3, p. 96). The adept had to be marked by certain qualities and he had to make the ascent in a condition of ritual and spiritual purity (Responsum of Hai Gaon, Ošar haggeʿonim, ed. Lewin, Ḥagigah, Responsa sec., p. 14; Hekalot Rabbati 13:2–3, BHM, vol. 3, p. 93; 20:1, BHM, vol. 3, p. 98; Cairo Genizah Hekalot A/2, 12–13, ed. Gruenwald, p. 362; Maʿašeh Merkabah 1, ed. Scholem, p. 103). Hekalot Rabbati 18:2 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 96) describes an elaborate technique for terminating a trance which was probably used when things appeared to be going awry.³⁵

³¹ For the expression Yōredē Merkābāh see Hekalot Rabbati 9:2 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 90, l. 18); 10 (p. 91, l. 14); 16:3 (p. 95, l. 8); 17:6 (p. 96, l. 22); 18:4 (p. 97, l. 11); 26:1 (BM, vol. 1, p. 107, l. 11 = BHM, vol. 3, p. 102, l. 11); Cairo Genizah Hekalot A/2, ll. 3, 8 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 361); cf. Seder Rab Amram Gaon, ed. N. N. Coronel (Warsaw, 1865) pt. 1, p. 4a, with 9:2 above. (The passage is not in the edition of Hedegård. Note also p. 4b, which inserts Merkabah material.) Hekalot Rabbati uses the terms "fellowship" (ḥabūrāh) (see 18:1, BHM, vol. 3, p. 96, l. 28) and "members of the fellowship" (ḥabērīm) (see 18:4, BHM, vol. 3, p. 97, l. 17; 5:2, BHM, vol. 3, p. 87, l. 21) with regard to the mystical groups. From such expressions as hayyōrēd lammerkābāh (Hekalot Rabbati 20:1, BHM, vol. 3, p. 98, l. 14) and lērēd lammerkābāh (BHM, vol. 3, p. 102, l. 9; BM, vol. 1, p. 107, l. 9, reads lērēd bammerkābāh) it is clear that Yōredē Merkābāh means "those who descend to the chariot." The expression "descend to the Merkabah" is odd; the mystical tracts speak also of "ascending": see e.g. Hekalot Rabbati 16:3 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 95, l. 8): "All the masters of the Yōredē Merkābāh were ascending and were not being harmed, and they were seeing all this palace [i.e. the 7th palace], and were descending in peace." Scholem suggests that the liturgical phrase "go down before the Ark" (yārad lipne hattēbāh) may have influenced the terminology of "descending" to the Merkabah: see Major Trends, pp. 46f., and Gnosticism, p. 20, n. 1.

³² See further Alexander, JJS 28 (1977) 169–73.

³³ See further Gruenwald, Israel Oriental Studies 3 (1973) 89f.

³⁴ "He [the mystic] sits fasting for a specified period of time and places his head between his knees and whispers earthwards many hymns and praises . . ." (Ošar haggeʿonim, ed. Lewin, Ḥagigah, Responsa sec., p. 14). Cf. the posture of Haninah b. Dosa in b.Ber 34b.

³⁵ Scholem, Gnosticism, pp. 10–12; L. H. Schiffman, "The Recall of Rabbi Nehuniah b. Ha-Qanah from Ecstasy in the Hekalot Rabbati," Association for Jewish Studies Review 1 (1976) 268–82. Cf. J. Maier, "Das Gefährdungsmotiv bei der Himmelsreise in der jüdischen Apokalyptik und in der jüdischen Gnosis," Kairo 5 (1963) 18–40. The mystical ascent is compared to climbing a ladder in Hekalot Rabbati 13:2 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 93, l. 11) and 20:3 (p. 98, l. 31). According to Pereq mippirqē hekalot (BHM, vol. 3, p. 162, l. 12), the angels ascend a ladder to reach the throne of glory. There may be an allusion to Jacob's ladder (Gen 28:12); however, the ladder is a common mystical symbol: see A. Altman, "The Ladder of Ascension," Festschrift Scholem (1967) pp. 1–32; E. R. Dodds, Pagan and Christian in an Age of Anxiety (Cambridge, 1965) pp. 50–53.

According to Hekalot Rabbati 18:4 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 97) the adept was expected to speak during the trance and scribes were placed to write down what he said, for his utterances were taken to be revelations of what was happening in the heavenly world. It is not clear whether any of these utterances have been incorporated directly into the Merkabah texts; it is possible that some of the angelic names and magical formulae are glossolalia.³⁶ Most of the material, however, probably arose from later reflection, by the adept himself, or by other members of his fellowship, on his trance experiences. These vivid experiences clearly cried out for some interpretation, and this was usually supplied by attempting to correlate them with Ezekiel's vision of the Merkabah.

Scholem and Gruenwald have published certain physiognomic texts which apparently emanated from the Merkabah circles. It would seem from these that, like the Pythagoreans (at least according to Iamblichus, De vita Pythagorica 17.71, 74) and possibly also the Qumran Essenes, the Merkabah mystics controlled entrance to their conventicles by using physiognomy.

A number of influential talmudic sages are known to have studied the Merkabah lore, so it would appear that the mystical movement was at home at the very heart of rabbinic Judaism. The Merkabah texts as they stand may be described broadly as "orthodox" in that they remain within the bounds of monotheism and pay due respect to Torah. However, there are clear signs that at least some rabbinic authorities were uneasy about Merkabah mysticism. It is possible that their concern was occasioned by a more extreme form of the teaching than we find in the extant texts. On the other hand it must be admitted that there is enough in the surviving literature to provoke misgivings.

In the first place, the practice of mystical ascent to God's throne is potentially dangerous to rabbinic Judaism. It is not at all clear why the adepts wanted to make the ascent to the Merkabah. In some cases the motive may have been purely religious: They wished to view the glory of God and to join in the heavenly Qeduššah (cf. 3En 1:11). Sometimes, however, they were convinced that the exercise would bring them very mundane benefits: They would discover what was about to happen in the world; they would see all that men do, even in their innermost chambers; they would gain the protection of the heavenly law court (Hekalot Rabbati 1:1-2:2, BHM, vol. 3, pp. 83f.). The adepts appear to have functioned on occasion like the pagan oracles and the pagan and Christian prophets of late antiquity. An interesting example of a typically oracular use of an adept is found in Hekalot Rabbati 5:5 (BM, vol. 1, p. 74).³⁷ There we are told that when Rome issued a decree to seize the leading Jewish scholars in Palestine, R. Neḥunyah b. Ha-Qanah sent R. Ishmael down to the Merkabah to inquire of Suri'el, Prince of the Divine Presence, why this had been allowed to happen.

So long as the adepts confined themselves to pronouncements on non-controversial matters there was little danger. If, however, they had begun to pronounce on ultimate issues, they could have come to be regarded as channels of revelation on a par with the written and the oral law. Pagan theurgists certainly exploited mediums as a way of discovering ultimate truths, and the Christian Montanists apparently collected the oracles of their prophets into a sort of Third Testament, equal in authority to the Old and New Testaments. Just as the Montanist principle of continuous revelation posed a serious threat to the Christian establishment, so too the Merkabah mystics, by resorting to ecstatic experience, could have threatened the stability of rabbinic Judaism with its commitment to the sufficiency of Torah.

It is not clear whether there was ever any attempt to impose an absolute ban on Merkabah mysticism in rabbinic circles, but strong efforts were certainly directed toward containing it: It was hedged about with safeguards and clamped firmly in a vise of orthodoxy. It was to be studied only by mature scholars (m.Ḥag 2:1; b.Ḥag 14a). According to Hekalot Rabbati 20:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 98) only those who have mastered Bible, Mishnah, Halakot, and Haggadot, and who observe all the laws revealed to Moses on Sinai, are allowed to descend to the Merkabah. This stress on the classical disciplines as a necessary propaedeutic was doubtless aimed at neutralizing the danger inherent in the mystics' practice of ascending to the throne of God; the mystics' minds would have been so imbued with an orthodox world view that they would have tended to assign orthodox values to their mystical experiences.

³⁶ A similar suggestion has been made about some of the formulae and unintelligible names in the magical papyri; see Dodds, Pagan and Christian, p. 55, n. 1.

³⁷ See BM, vol. 1, p. 74, n. 25; the text in BHM, vol. 3, p. 87, is rather different.

It was not only the mystics' methods but also some of their doctrines which caused concern. It is noteworthy that two out of the three references to Meṭatron in the Talmud are critical; some of the rabbis apparently thought that the position assigned to him, at least by some mystics, amounted to dualism (see b.Sanh 38b; b.Ḥag 15a; the neutral reference is b.AZ 3b). This is hardly surprising in view of the title "The lesser YHWH" which Meṭatron carries in the mystical literature (see 3En 12:5). Moreover, the extreme glorification of Enoch in certain mystical circles (cf. 3En 3–15) stands in pointed contrast to the striking silence about him in the two Talmuds and the hostile notices of him in classic Midrashim.³⁸

It is possible to detect signs of uneasiness about the Merkabah traditions in our current texts of 3 Enoch. There appears to have been an orthodox tendency at work in the redaction of this tract. There are several attempts to diminish the powers of Meṭatron: 3 Enoch 16 contains a version of the humbling of Meṭatron (cf. b.Ḥag 15a), and there is an "orthodox" gloss aimed at demoting Meṭatron in 3 Enoch 10:3. It is possible that the marked absence of theurgy in 3 Enoch is to be explained in the same way. We are nowhere told in 3 Enoch how to make the ascent to the throne (the ascent itself is covered in one verse, 3En 1:1), and there is a striking lack of Merkabah hymns. It is even possible that a list of the seventy names of Meṭatron (which could have been used to invoke him) has been edited out of 3 Enoch 4:1 (see ch. 16, n. a).

A large number of elements in the Merkabah texts can be paralleled in apocalyptic literature, and yet, despite these shared traditions, the ethos of Merkabah mysticism is rather different from that of apocalyptic. The Merkabah texts concentrate overwhelmingly on the mysteries of heaven and on the description of God's throne: They show little interest in eschatological themes such as the last judgment, the resurrection of the dead, the messianic kingdom, and the world to come, all of which figure in classic apocalyptic. The differentiation is a matter of emphasis. The Merkabah texts do have some eschatology (see e.g. 3En 45:5), and apocalyptic literature does contain Ma'aseh Merkabah (see e.g. 1En 14:8–25); but there is definitely much less eschatological interest in the Merkabah texts than in apocalyptic literature. So, too, we find cosmology treated in both kinds of text (see e.g. 1En 72–80 and 3En 18:4–7; 41–42); on the whole, however, cosmology bulks larger in apocalyptic than in Merkabah mysticism. In the talmudic period the tendency was to regard cosmology as belonging to a distinct though related esoteric tradition—to Ma'aseh Bere'shit rather than to Ma'aseh Merkabah. Finally, we should note that although there is some evidence (particularly in later apocalyptic texts) that trances were experienced by the apocalyptists and that trance-inducing techniques were occasionally used by them, the theurgic element is much more explicit and overt in the Merkabah tradition: A number of the Merkabah treatises are taken up largely with the techniques for ascending to the throne of glory.³⁹

Ma'aseh Merkabah forms one of the strands of apocalyptic literature prior to A.D. 70; what is not clear, however, is whether at that period it was studied without reference to eschatology and had a literature and tradition of its own. It is tempting to argue that Merkabah mysticism did not have a separate existence outside of apocalyptic till after A.D. 70 and that it was the events of the years A.D. 70–135 in Palestine which brought about a reorientation of apocalyptic and gave rise to a more or less independent Merkabah movement. It is interesting to note that Hekalat Rabbati 13:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 93) appears to place the birth of the Merkabah movement just prior to the destruction of the Temple in A.D. 70. The destruction of the Temple removed a powerful, visible symbol of the divine presence and could have fostered the transcendent view of God that we find in the Merkabah texts. The war against Rome also dampened eschatological fervor: Messianic hopes were signally dashed and soberer spirits must surely have turned their backs on the apocalyptic fanaticism that had so aggravated the disasters of the Jewish people.⁴⁰ Apocalyptic hopes were shattered further sixty years later with the debacle of Bar Kokhba and the conversion of Jerusalem into

³⁸ GenR 25:1; TargOnk to Gen 5:24; see n. 4 above.

³⁹ For theurgy in apocalyptic see Gruenwald, Israel Oriental Studies 3 (1973) 89f.; and for an attempt to characterize Merkabah mysticism and apocalyptic see I. Gruenwald, "The Jewish Esoteric Literature in the Time of the Mishnah and the Talmud," Immanuel 4 (1974) 37–46.

⁴⁰ This new coolness toward eschatological hopes is perhaps classically illustrated by the dictum attributed to Yobanan b. Zakkai: "If you have a sapling in your hand, and it is said to you, 'Behold, there is the Messiah'—go on with your planting, and afterwards go out and receive him. And if the youths say to you, 'Let us go up and build the Temple,' do not listen to them . . ." (ARN B 31, ed. Schechter, 34a).

a pagan city. As a result it is possible that in certain circles the eschatological element in apocalyptic was played down and a form of the tradition arose which was much less concerned with the future and more interested in the mysteries of the heavenly world. It can hardly be disputed that the destruction of the Temple in A.D. 70 created a profound crisis in apocalyptic, and it may have given an impetus to Merkabah mysticism, but we should note—in opposition to the view we have just put forward—that in the Angelic Liturgy from Qumran (4QŠirŠabb) we may have a pre-70 text devoted exclusively to classic Ma'āšeh Merkabah themes. If this is so—and we cannot be certain since the text is so fragmentary—then it would seem that already in the period before the destruction of the Temple, Ma'āšeh Merkabah had a literature of its own and was being treated as a subject in its own right.⁴¹

Our sketch of the development of Merkabah mysticism would be incomplete if we were to see it only in the light of Jewish religious history. To do so would be to lose sight of the important fact that it displays a number of affinities with certain non-Jewish religious world views of late antiquity. Undoubtedly the closest parallels are with Gnosticism. Indeed, Scholem has argued that Merkabah mysticism is to be regarded as “Jewish Gnosticism” (Gnosticism, pp. 2–3, 10). “Gnosticism” is notoriously difficult to define, for there are many variations in detail between the various gnostic systems, but a typical system would speak of God as a transcendent, supreme power; of a second power (sometimes called the demiurge) that created the world; of a series of spheres (or aeons) separating man from the supreme power, each under the control of a hostile spirit (or archon); of the divinity of the human soul and its ascent to the supreme power; and of the secret knowledge (gnōsis) by which this ascent is to be achieved.

In its broad outlines this structure invites comparison with the Merkabah texts. These speak of a transcendent God, and of God who reveals himself on the throne of glory; God as he reveals himself is sometimes referred to as Yōšēr Berēšīt, “the Creator” (cf. 3En 11:1). Separating God and man are a series of regions controlled by angels whose business it is to stop man from approaching God. The Merkabah texts also speak of the heavenly origin of the human soul (3En 43:3), and of an ascent to heaven, and they claim that they contain the secret of how this ascent can be made.

It has long been observed that there is a strong Jewish component in Gnosticism.⁴² In some cases the Jewish elements in Gnosticism can be found also in the Merkabah texts. The correspondences between Merkabah mysticism and Gnosticism may be illustrated from two works. The first is The Hypostasis of the Archons (NHC 2/4).⁴³ The second section of this treatise follows a pattern found commonly in apocalyptic works (and also in 3En): that of a revelation of secrets by an angel. Eleleth, Sagacity, the Great Angel who stands in the presence of the Holy Spirit, comes down from heaven to instruct Norea about the origin of the archons. Chapter 94, 8–13 (Labib 142, 8–13) refers to a “veil” (katapetasma) that divides “the World Above and the realms that are below.” Chapter 95, 19–22 (Labib 143, 19–22) makes it clear that this veil separates the seventh and eighth heavens. A parallel passage in the Untitled Work (NHC 2/5) refers to a “veil” (parapetasma) that separates man from the celestials (98, 22; Labib 146, 22). The Merkabah texts also mention heavenly veils: according to one tradition the first heaven, Wilon, is a veil, and we read of a curtain (pargôd/pārôket) that hangs before the throne of God (see 3En 17:3; 45:1). At 94, 25–26 (Labib 142, 25–26) we read that the first archon who came into existence was “Samael (which is, ‘god of the blind’).” Samael is the Prince of the Accusers in 3 Enoch 14:2 and 26:12. The Semitic etymology in the gnostic text is noteworthy: Samael is derived from the Hebrew/Aramaic root sm, “to be blind,” and ʾēl, “God.”⁴⁴

⁴¹ It appears that a number of glosses have been incorporated into the text of Ezek 1. These may be evidence of very early interest in Ma'āšeh Merkabah in its own right: see W. Zimmerli, Ezechiel (Biblicher Kommentar Altes Testament 13/1; 1969) esp. pp. 23–30.

⁴² On the Jewish element in Gnosticism see G. W. MacRae, “The Jewish Background of the Gnostic Sophia Myth,” NovT 12 (1970) 86–101; J. Quispel, Gnostic Studies (Istanbul, 1974) vol. 1, pp. 173–239; R. McL. Wilson, “Jewish Gnosis and Gnostic Origins: A Survey,” HUCA 44 (1973) 89–118; B. A. Pearson, “Biblical Exegesis in Gnostic Literature,” Armenian and Biblical Studies, ed. M. Stone, supp. vol. 1 to Sion, the Journal of the Armenian Patriarchate of Jerusalem (Jerusalem, 1976) 70–80.

⁴³ For editions see R. A. Bullard, The Hypostasis of the Archons, Patristische Texte und Studien 10 (Berlin, 1970); B. Layton, “The Hypostasis of the Archons,” HTR 67 (1974) 351–426. Layton’s translation has been quoted.

⁴⁴ Bullard offers the alternative translation “‘Samael,’ that is, the blind god.”

When Samael blasphemously proclaims to his seven offspring, "It is I who am the god of the Entirety," he is rebuked by Life (Zōē), the daughter of Faith-Wisdom (Pistis-Sophia). Then "she breathed into his face, and her breath became a fiery angel for her; and that angel bound Yaldabaoth (i.e. Samael) and cast him down into Tartaros below the Abyss" (95, 8-13; Labib 143, 8-13). It is perhaps not inappropriate to compare with this the Merkabah idea that the angels are created by the utterance (dibbūr) of God (see 3En 40:4; cf. 27:3). When Sabaoth, one of Yaldabaoth's offspring, sees the punishment meted out to his father, he repents, condemns his father and his mother, Matter, and praises Wisdom (Sophia) and Life (Zōē). Wisdom and Life thereupon take him up and give him charge over the seventh heaven. Sabaoth makes for himself "a great four-faced chariot [harma] of cherubim [cheroubin] and infinitely many angels to act as ministers, and also harps and lyres. And Wisdom took her daughter Life, and had her sit upon his right to teach him the things that exist in the Eighth (Heaven)" (95, 13-34; Labib 143, 13-34). This description of the elevation of Sabaoth is rather reminiscent of the account of the elevation of Enoch in 3 Enoch 4-15. Compare, for example, the instruction of Sabaoth with 3 Enoch 10:5, where we read that God committed the Prince of Wisdom and the Prince of Understanding to Enoch "to teach him the wisdom of those above and of those below, the wisdom of this world and of the world to come." Sabaoth's chariot naturally recalls Ezekiel's Merkabah: for the expression, "a chariot of cherubim," compare 3 Enoch 24:1 and 22:11. The allusion in the gnostic text to choirs of angels is also easily paralleled in the Merkabah texts; see 3 Enoch 35-40.⁴⁵

The second text which we shall compare with Merkabah mysticism is Origen's summary of the teachings of the gnostic "sect of the Ophians" in the Contra Celsum 6:24-38.⁴⁶ Origen's account is garbled but a number of points are reasonably clear. An important part of the Ophian teaching was concerned with the ascent of the soul to heaven after death (6:27). To reach its goal in the realm of the Father and the Son the soul had to pass through a "Barrier of Evil," which is defined as "the gates of the archons which are shut for ever" (6:31). There are seven archons controlling the gates; in ascending order they are: Horaeus, Aiolaus, Astaphaeus, (Adonaeus), Sabaoth, Iao, and Ialdabaoth.⁴⁷ To persuade the archons to let him pass, the soul must address them by name, recite the correct formula, and show to each of them a "symbol" (symbolon). These symbols are perhaps to be connected with the "seal" (sphragis) which, according to 6:27, was bestowed by the Father on the "Youth and Son." Seals are certainly mentioned in the context of passage through the aeons in the Naassen hymn quoted by Hippolytus, Refutation of All Heresies 5.10.2. Having passed through the realms of the seven archons the soul reaches the eighth sphere—the Ogdoad (6:31), which is ruled over by a nameless being hailed as "first power." The soul would appear to have effectively reached its goal since the Ogdoad seems to lie within the realm of the Father and the Son: "From here on," announces the ascending soul, "I am sent forth pure, being already part of the light of the Son and the Father" (6:31). The Ogdoad, or eighth heaven, is mentioned elsewhere in the gnostic texts; see, for example, The Hypostasis of the Archons 95, 34 (Labib 143, 34).

This whole passage should be compared with the ascent to the Merkabah described in Hekalot Rabbati 17:1-20:3 (BHM, vol. 3, pp. 95-98). According to this text the adept on his ascent to the Merkabah must pass through seven doors (the doors of the heavenly palaces), each of them controlled by powerful angels (cf. 3En 18:3). To pass through the doors the adept must know the names of the doorkeepers, and he must show them the appropriate seals (cf. 3En 48D:5). The concept of the eighth heaven can also be matched in the Merkabah texts. Ogdoad is sometimes found in the gnostic texts as a name of the supreme power; Scholem has argued that its analogue in the Merkabah texts may be the divine name ²Azbogah, which is made up of three sets of consonants each of which adds up by gematria to eight

⁴⁵ The account of the elevation of Sabaoth in the Untitled Work (NHC 2/5) provides some further points of comparison with the Merkabah texts (see 103, 32-106, 18; Labib 151, 32-154, 18). See Gruenwald, Proceedings of the Sixth World Congress of Jewish Studies, vol. 3, pp. 45f.

⁴⁶ Edited by P. Koetschau in GCS; translated by H. Chadwick, Origen: Contra Celsum (Cambridge, 1953); also in W. Foerster, Gnosis: A Selection of Gnostic Texts (Oxford, 1972) vol. 1, pp. 94-99.

⁴⁷ Origen curiously lists them in descending order. "Adonaeus" has accidentally dropped out of the text; see 6:32. It is to be supplied between Astaphaeus and Sabaoth following the suggestion of Bouhéreau (see Koetschau's apparatus criticus); cf. Chadwick, Origen: Contra Celsum, p. 348, n. 1.

(Gnosticism, pp. 65–71; cf. 3En 18:22). The name of the archon of the fourth aeon in the gnostic text is noteworthy; as Origen recognized, Iao is probably derived from a form of the tetragram YHWH. In the gnostic works Pistis Sophia and the Book of Jeu we encounter the "Great Iao" and the "Little Iao" (Pistis Sophia, chs. 7 [twice], 86, 140; Book of Jeu, ch. 50). These may correspond to the titles "greater YHWH" and "lesser YHWH" found in the Merkabah texts (3En 48B:1[44]; 48D:1[90]) (cf. Odeberg, 3 Enoch, pt. 1, app. 2, pp. 188–92).⁴⁸

It is far from clear how we are to explain these parallels between Merkabah mysticism and Gnosticism. Has Merkabah mysticism in its early stages influenced Gnosticism? Or have both systems drawn on a common ancestral tradition, such as Palestinian apocalyptic? Or has some third party, such as syncretistic magic, mediated between them and transferred ideas from one tradition to the other? In the present state of our knowledge it is impossible to say. We must be careful not to read too much into these parallels. There are important theological differences between Merkabah mysticism and Gnosticism which should not be ignored. In Gnosticism there is normally a sharp conflict between the good supreme power and the evil demiurge; there is no such opposition between God in his transcendence and God as he reveals himself on the throne of glory in the Merkabah texts. We should also note that in Gnosticism the ascent to heaven is made after death whereas in Merkabah mysticism it is made during life and can be repeated many times over. It must also be recognized that parallels to Merkabah mysticism can be found not only in Gnosticism but also in the Hermetic writings, the Chaldean Oracles, the magical papyri (such as the so-called "Great Magical Papyrus of Paris"),⁴⁹ and more remotely in Roman Mithraism and Neoplatonism. Even the paganism of late antiquity was closer to Merkabah ideas than we might at first suppose, for, as E. R. Dodds points out, there were many pious pagans who, by the second century A.D., had come to regard the gods of classical Greek mythology as "no more than mediating daemons, satraps of an invisible, supramundane King."⁵⁰

When we consider Merkabah mysticism in the light of these non-Jewish religious world views of late antiquity we can see how completely it fits into the religious climate of its time. It is not a purely Jewish religious phenomenon, but has been shaped by forces generally at work in the political and social history of late antiquity. Identifying those forces is an extremely delicate task. E. R. Dodds suggested that the disturbed social, political, and economic conditions in the period from Marcus Aurelius to Constantine had a profound effect on the development of several of the religious world views to which we may compare Merkabah mysticism. He quotes with approval a dictum of Festugière: "Misery and mysticism are related facts."⁵¹ To some degree Dodds may be right. It is interesting to note that the Merkabah texts themselves make the point that Merkabah mysticism was a source of comfort and reassurance in times of crisis and stress (Hekalot Rabbati 4:4–5, BHM, vol. 3, pp. 86f.; cf. BM, vol. 1, pp. 74f.; and Hekalot Rabbati 13, BHM, vol. 3, p. 93). But a simple correlation of misery and mysticism cannot represent the whole story; we must also account for the fact that Merkabah mysticism continued to flourish and develop not only in Palestine but also in Babylonia right down to the eighth or ninth century A.D.

If we focus our attention on the phenomenon of trance, which appears to have played a significant role in Merkabah mysticism, we may perhaps gain a deeper understanding of the sociological function of Ma'aseh Merkabah. It is true that there is a significantly high incidence of trance phenomena in very poor societies, but here we must note a crucial difference. When trance correlates with poverty as a catharsis, it is usually a public business: for it to be effective large numbers must go into trance or participate closely in the trances of those who do. The Merkabah mystics, on the other hand, were apparently few in number, ⁴⁸ Scholem (Gnosticism, pp. 37f.) has suggested that there are close parallels between the Merkabah doctrine of Ši'ur Qomah and the gnostic thinker Marcus' description of the "Body of Truth"; see Irenaeus, Adversus Haereses 1.14.3 = Epiphanius, Panarion 34.5 (Foerster, Gnostis, vol. 1, p. 205).

⁴⁹ See M. Smith, "Observations on Hekhalot Rabbati" in Biblical and Other Studies, ed. A. Altman (Cambridge, Mass., 1963) pp. 142–60.

⁵⁰ Dodds, Pagan and Christian, p. 38; see also p. 57. Further, M. P. Nilsson, "The New Conception of the Universe in Late Greek Paganism," Eranos 44 (1946) 20–27; M. P. Nilsson, "Das Weltbild in der spätantiken Religion," Geschichte der Griechischen Religion (Munich, 1961²) vol. 2, pp. 702–11.

⁵¹ A. J. Festugière, "Cadre de la mystique hellénistique," Aux sources de la tradition chrétienne: Mélanges offerts à Maurice Goguel (Neuchâtel/Paris, 1950), pp. 74–85; Dodds, Pagan and Christian, pp. 100f.

and their trances occurred in small, closely guarded conventicles. Trance outside this setting was presumably regarded as demon possession. The fact that the Merkabah trances were confined to a small elite within society suggests that their modern analogue would be shamanistic trance. In shamanistic societies trance is confined to a few and it serves two purposes: First, it marks off the trance-subjects as special and distinctive within the group; and, second, it is an integral part of the role which these people play toward society. Merkabah trances may have had a similar function within rabbinic society. They bolstered the authority of the adepts, who were rabbis, and they marked them off as holy men, like the holy men of the surrounding religions. Knowledge of the Merkabah mysteries had great prestige value: It is described as "a great matter," greater than a mastery of the intricacies of halakah (see b.Sukk 28a; Midraš Mišle 10, ed. Buber, 34a). But trance phenomena were also closely related to the rabbis' role in society. The rabbi was no mere academic: He was a holy man who through his knowledge and his power could protect society from demonic attack; he had a mediatorial role between God and man; he prayed for rain in times of drought, and, because of his holiness, had an especially close relationship to God. The ability to ascend to heaven and to reach God's throne would have been regarded as facilitating his work. It may, then, have been the continuing importance of the rabbi in the Jewish community that kept Merkabah mysticism alive for so long.⁵²

Theological importance

COSMOLOGY

Though cosmology is strictly a motif of Ma'ašeh Bere'shit, a certain number of cosmological motifs are to be found in the Ma'ašeh Merkabah texts. One function of this cosmological element in Ma'ašeh Merkabah appears to be to provide a definite location in the universe for God's throne and to bring it into spatial relationship to man on earth.

According to 3 Enoch 17:1–3 and 18:1–2 there are seven heavens above the earth. This tradition of seven heavens is almost universal in classic rabbinic literature (e.g. b.Ḥag 12b; cf. PRE 19), in the Merkabah texts (e.g. Masseket Hekalot 4, BHM, vol. 2, p. 42; Re'uyot Yehezqel, BM, vol. 2, p. 130; ed. Gruenwald, p. 115), and in texts of the Ma'ašeh Bere'shit tradition (e.g. Midraš Kohen, BHM, vol. 2, p. 53; cf. Seder Rabbah diBere'shit, BM, vol. 1, p. 29; Baraita' diMa'ašeh Bere'shit, ed. Séd, A 72–123, 296–369; B 60–112, 263–304). However, other views are occasionally found. Thus Ḥagigah 12b records an opinion that there are only two heavens, while Midraš Tehillim 114:2 (ed. Buber, 236a) states that some held that there are three. Within the Merkabah tradition itself speculation arose as to the possibility of heavens beyond the seventh. An eighth was postulated on the basis of the reference in Ezekiel 1:22 to a firmament above the heads of the creatures (b.Ḥag 13a).⁵³ Most extreme was the view that there are 955 heavens above the seventh (3En 48A:1; Masseket Hekalot 7, BHM, vol. 2, p. 45).

In 3 Enoch 18 the heavens are merely enumerated ("first heaven," "second heaven," etc.); in chapter 17, however, they each carry a special name ('Arabot, Ma'on, etc.) (cf. 3En 38:1). These names are found in other texts, though there is some difference of opinion as to which name goes with which heaven (see b.Ḥag 12b; LevR 29:11; ARN A 37, ed. Schechter 55b; Re'uyot Yehezqel, BM, vol. 2, pp. 131–33; ed. Gruenwald, pp. 121–37; Yannai, Qerobot leSeper Bere'shit 5/8, 112–14, ed. Zulay, p. 15). 3 Enoch 17 agrees precisely with the list in Ḥagigah 12b, which is attributed there to the third-century Palestinian authority Resh Laqish.⁵⁴ The first heaven is called Wilon, the "Veil." It separates the lower and the upper worlds, and its opening and shutting may have been regarded as causing the alternation of light and darkness.⁵⁵

⁵² On the role of the rabbi see J. Neusner, "The Phenomenon of the Rabbi in Late Antiquity," Numen 16 (1969) 1–20.

⁵³ For a possible connection between the 8th heaven in the Merkabah texts and the gnostic Ogdoad see above on "Historical importance."

⁵⁴ See Gruenwald, Tarbiš 36 (1966/67) 269f.

⁵⁵ See 3En 17:3, n. f.

Further cosmological material is to be found in 3 Enoch as follows: (1) 17:4–7, a short astronomical passage in which the heavenly bodies are described as inert masses moved through the heavens by angels; (2) 14:3–4, a list of angels who control the elemental forces of the world (fire, rain, thunder, etc.); (3) 41:1–3, speculation on the letters by which the world was created; (4) 42:1–7, speculation on the power of divine names to hold in balance opposed elemental forces such as cold and heat.

THE HEAVENLY WORLD

In the seventh heaven stands God's abode—a series of seven palaces (hêkâlôt) arranged concentrically (3En 18:3; cf. 1:1–2; 7; 37:1; Hekalot Rabbati 15–16, BHM, vol. 3, p. 94; Masseket Hekalot 4, BHM, vol. 2, p. 42). The word for palace, hêkal (pl. hêkâlôt), denotes both “palace” and “temple” and so has overtones both of royalty and of holiness. The motif of the seven hêkâlôt is peculiar to the Merkabah tradition, though it is not found in all the Merkabah texts; thus it is notably absent from the early work Re'uyot Yehezqel. It does not appear overtly in Ḥagigah 11b–16a, though, as we noted above, there may be an allusion to it in Aqiba's reference to “the stones of pure marble” (14a). Analogous ideas to the seven hêkâlôt occur in a number of places: Sefer HaRazim speaks of seven heavenly dwellings (me'ônôt) (Petiḥah 6, ed. Margalioth, p. 65; 7:19, 25, ed. Margalioth, p. 108; cf. 3En 17:3), and Ḥagigah 13a of God's “inner houses” and “outer houses”; the description of God's heavenly abode in 1En 14:10–17 (cf. 1En 71:5–9) as a house within a house is strongly reminiscent of the language used in Merkabah literature to describe the seven palaces. The seven palaces is essentially an idea of Ma'aseh Merkabah, that of the seven heavens probably arose from cosmological speculation; 3En 18, which combines the two ideas by locating the seven palaces in the seventh heaven, probably marks the confluence of two originally independent streams of tradition.

The centerpiece of the heavenly world is the Merkabah, which stands in the innermost of the seven palaces and bears the throne of glory (kissē hakkābôd). The physical aspects of the Merkabah are not clearly visualized (though see 3En 25:5 and cf. 22:12 and 48C:4). The topography of heaven is in general sketched very impressionistically (see 3En 37) and the aim appears to be simply to create an atmosphere of awesome majesty. The whole enormous structure of the Merkabah is defined in terms of angelic hierarchies. There is a tendency to spiritualize its physical elements: Thus the 'opannim, “wheels,” and the ḥašmal (JB, “bronze”) of Ezekiel 1 become orders of angels in 3 Enoch (see e.g. ch. 7).

A curtain (pargôd) hangs before God's throne separating his immediate presence from the rest of the heavenly world. This curtain shields the angels from the full glare of the divine glory. It also symbolizes the ultimate inscrutability of God and of the mysteries known only to him. In 3 Enoch 45 Meṭatron shows Ishmael the whole course of human history, from Adam to the messianic age, embroidered on the curtain.⁵⁶

Following Daniel 7:10 the Merkabah texts speak of a River of Fire that flows out from beneath the throne of glory (3En 36:1). Occasionally more than one River of Fire is mentioned (3En 19:4; 33:4; 37:1). The River of Fire functions in a number of contexts: It is used in accounts of the divine judgment as a symbol of the wrath of God (18:19, 21; 33:4–5); it also forms part of the descriptions of the celestial Sanctus: The angels bathe in the River of Fire before they perform the Qeduššah (36:2).⁵⁷ A development of this motif is the speculation on the bridges that span the River of Fire (22B:1, with n. b; 22C:1).

In the celestial palaces are many treasuries and storehouses. Some of these contain natural phenomena such as snow (22B:3, 4) and lightning (37:2). In others are “spiritual gifts” such as wisdom, peace, and “the fear of heaven” (48D:2, varia lectio; cf. 1:11; 8:1). There are also the archives (27:1), where the records of the heavenly law court are kept, and in 43:3 there is a reference to a storehouse of beings.

⁵⁶ See 3En 45:1, n. a. Cf. the heavenly veils in the gnostic texts, on which see above on “Historical importance”; cf. also Wilon, the first heaven. See further O. Hofius, Der Vorhang vor dem Thron Gottes, Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament 14 (Tübingen, 1972); Gruenwald, Proceedings of the Sixth World Congress of Jewish Studies, vol. 3, pp. 49–51; Bietenhard, Die himmlische Welt in Urchristentum und Spätjudentum, pp. 73f.

⁵⁷ See 3En 18:19, n. aa.

GOD

The basic assertion about God in 3 Enoch and in the other Merkabah texts is that he is transcendent. The divine attributes most persistently stressed, God's holiness and his glory, are conceived of as attributes of transcendence, expressing his "otherness." God's transcendence is stated in three main ways.

First, God is said to be spatially remote from man. This idea is implicit in the cosmology: God dwells in the seventh palace in the seventh heaven. It is a standard theme of the Merkabah texts that the distances between the different heavens are almost inconceivably vast; see Ḥagigah 13a; Masseket Hekalot 4 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 43); Re'uyot Yehezqel (BM, vol. 2, p. 131; ed. Gruenwald, p. 121). There are elements of this motif of the dimensions of the heavens in 3 Enoch 22C.

Second, God is represented as being well-nigh inaccessible to man. His throne stands in the innermost of the seven concentric palaces and the way to it is barred by fierce guardian angels at the gate of each palace. Not only the gatekeepers but the angels in general are opposed to man (3En 1:6–7; 2:2; 5:10; 6:2; 15B:2). The hostile angels form a protective circle round God's throne; in a sense they are hypostatizations of his holiness.⁵⁸

Third, God's transcendence is expressed through the story in 3 Enoch 5:10–14 of the withdrawal of his Šekinah from the earth. The Šekinah is the divine presence which takes up its abode in a place or with a person or group of people. Where God is experienced as present, there his Šekinah is said to dwell. 3 Enoch pictures the Šekinah in very concrete terms: It is a bright light, a luminous cloud, like the cloud that manifested God's presence in the Temple and the Tabernacle (1Kgs 8:10; Lev 16:2; cf. NumR 12:4; SongR 3:8). According to 3 Enoch 5:1–14, after Adam was expelled from Eden, the Šekinah remained on earth, but since the generation of Enosh (the third in line from Adam) it has been residing in the highest heaven.⁵⁹

The Merkabah mystics were greatly exercised by the problem of who (or what) occupies the throne of glory, and how he (or it) should be represented. According to 3 Enoch it is the Šekinah that dwells on the throne (see e.g. 18:19, 24; 22:13, 16; 24:15; 28:2; 37:1; 39:1). However, we gather this fact only in passing, for 3 Enoch shrinks from dwelling on the appearance on the throne. This reticence contrasts sharply with the detailed descriptions which it offers of the higher orders of angels, and it rather sets 3 Enoch off from the Ši'ur Qomah strand of the mystical tradition. In Ši'ur Qomah a form is given to the divine glory: It is envisaged as a colossal human figure and the dimensions of its limbs are computed. Of this speculation there is hardly a trace in 3 Enoch.⁶⁰

The Merkabah texts represent God and his angels under the image of an emperor and his court. God has his heavenly palace, his throne, and, in Metaṭron, his grand vizier; he has also his treasuries and storehouses. The image of God as the heavenly king is by no means an innovation of the Merkabah texts, but it is possible that the heavenly court of 3 Enoch reflects something of the earthly courts of its time. Noteworthy is the designation of the angelic hosts as "the heavenly household" (pamalyā šelemā'alāh: 3En 18:21; cf. 12:5; 16:1). This would appear to be an allusion to the familia Caesaris, the body of imperial slaves and ⁵⁸ On angelic opposition to man see A. Marmorstein, "Controversies Between the Angels and the Creator," Melilah 3–4 (1950) 93–102 (in Heb.); J. P. Schultz, "Angelic Opposition to the Ascension of Moses and the Revelation of the Law," JQR 61 (1970/71) 282–307; P. Schäfer, Rivalität zwischen Engeln und Menschen: Untersuchungen zur rabbinischen Engelvorstellung (Berlin, 1975); P. Schäfer, "The Rivalry Between Angels and Men in the Prayer of Joseph and Rabbinic Literature" (in Heb.), Proceedings of the Sixth World Congress of Jewish Studies (Jerusalem, 1973) vol. 3, pp. 511–15.

⁵⁹ The problem of divine immanence and transcendence in early Jewish religious thought is highly complex: for discussion see Urbach, The Sages, vol. 1, pp. 37–79; A. M. Goldberg, Untersuchungen über die Vorstellung von der Scheinah in der frühen rabbinischen Literatur, Studia Judaica 5 (Berlin, 1969).

⁶⁰ For Ši'ur Qomah texts see below on "Relation to Earlier Pseudepigrapha, Dead Sea Scrolls, and Merkabah Literature." Note also the very short passages in Hekalot Rabbati 12 (BM, vol. 1, p. 87) and Midraš Mišle 10 (ed. Buber, 34a). For studies see M. Gaster, "Das Schiur Komah," Studies and Texts (London, 1925–28) vol. 2, pp. 1330–53; A. Altmann, "Moses Narboni's 'Epistle on Ši'ur Qomah,'" Jewish Mediaeval and Renaissance Studies, ed. A. Altmann (Cambridge, Mass., 1967) pp. 225–88; R. Loewe, "The Divine Garment and Ši'ur Qomah," HTR 58 (1965) 153–60; Scholem, Gnosticism, pp. 36–42; Scholem, "Ši'ur Komah," EncyJud 14, cols. 1417–19; Scholem, Von der mystischen Gestalt der Gottheit (Zurich, 1962) pp. 7–47; Lieberman, Shi'in, pp. 11–14, 98f.

freedmen who formed the Roman civil service; the angels are God's imperial executive. The organization of the heavenly world in the Merkabah texts may reflect the image of an absolute monarchy with a complex bureaucracy; the emperor was only to be approached through intermediaries or with elaborate protocols. Perhaps this picture corresponds best to the image cast by the monarchy in the Byzantine era.⁶¹

THE HEAVENLY HOUSEHOLD

Although the angels play a central role in Merkabah mysticism, there is no uniform angelology in the Merkabah texts. Even within 3 Enoch itself we find three different angelologies incorporated more or less intact (ch. 17; ch. 18; chs. 19–22 and 25:1–28:6), and fragments of several other systems as well.

3 Enoch agrees with the standard rabbinic view that angels are of a fiery substance (chs. 7 and 15). The higher angels at least have human form: They are pictured as huge warriors armed with swords and bows; see 3 Enoch 22 and the vivid descriptions in Masseket Hekalot 4 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 42) and Hekalot Rabbati 15:8–16:2 (BHM, vol. 3, pp. 74f.) and 20:3 (p. 98); compare Sefer HaRazim 2:14–16 (ed. Margalioth, p. 82) and 2:131–33 (ed. Margalioth, p. 88). In 3 Enoch 47:2f. the analogy with humankind is taken to the extent of seeing angels as composed both of "body" and "soul."

The countless myriads of angels are grouped into classes and the classes ordered into hierarchies. The angelology of 3 Enoch 19–22, 25:1–28:6 has the following grades (in ascending order of rank): common angels (mešāretīm, mal'ākīm, etc.), galgallim, creatures (ḥayyot), cherubim, ophanim, seraphim, Watchers and holy ones ('irin and qaddišin). Other angelic classes are mentioned elsewhere: ḥašmallim and šin'anim (ch. 7); 'elim, 'er'ellim, and ṭapsarim (14:1); and 'elohim (15B:1, n. c).⁶²

Merkabah mysticism is greatly interested in the names of the angels. This interest was partly theurgical: To know the angels' names was to have the power to invoke them (see e.g. Hekalot Rabbati 14:4, BHM, vol. 3, p. 94). Merkabah texts are replete with angelic names. These are of various kinds: (1) Some, such as Michael and Gabriel, are biblical and traditional. Others are formed on the analogy of these and consist of a stem element and 'ēl, "God." In many cases the stem contains an allusion to the function of the angel who bears the name; Baraqiel is the angel of lightning, bārāq (3En 14:4). In other cases, however, the stem does not appear to have any meaning. Some names are compounded with yah, "Lord," e.g. Suryah. (2) Another group comprises names constructed by using techniques of letter and number magic such as gematria, temurah, and notarikon. A case in point is 'Azboḡah (3En 18:22). This name is made up of three pairs of consonants, each of which adds up by gematria to eight. (3) Some of the names may be corruptions of foreign words, particularly Greek. (4) Some may have originated as glossolalia.

There are a number of important angelic offices mentioned in the Merkabah texts. Different angels fill these offices in different traditions, but the offices themselves remain constant.

1. Prince of the Divine Presence (Šar happānīm): an angel who has the privilege of serving in God's immediate presence; see 3 Enoch 8:1; 48C:7; Hekalot Rabbati 11:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 91). It is possible that the idea of the Prince of the Divine Presence may be connected with that of the curtain: note Masseket Hekalot 7 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 46). 3 Enoch frequently calls Meṭaṭron Prince of the Divine Presence, but others, such as Suryah in Hekalot Rabbati 14:4 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 94), also bear the title. It is probable that the title is derived from Isaiah 63:9: "In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence [mal'ak pānāyw] saved them"; cf. Tobit 12:15; Jubilees 1:27; Hekalot Rabbati 3:3 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 85); Cairo Genizah Hekalot B/1, 36 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 369). Note also ⁶¹ However, it should be borne in mind that it is very hard, first, to establish how the Byzantine ideology of kingship worked itself out in practice, and, second, to discover what image the monarchy would have cast in the minds of its subjects. As a Christian example of the correlation of the emperor and his court with God and his angels we may take the Byzantine mosaic from the Church of the Assumption, Nicæa, Turkey, which shows the archangels in the garb of court officials carrying military standards inscribed with the Sanctus; see further Louis Réau, Iconographie de l'art chrétien, vol. 2.1 (Paris, 1965) p. 35.

⁶² Maimonides, Yad. Yesode Torah 2:7, lists ten orders of angels. In ascending order of rank they are: ḥayyot, ophanim, 'er'ellim, ḥašmallim, seraphim, mal'ākīm, 'elohim, bene 'elohim, cherubim, 'išim. The Zohar, Masseket 'Ašilut, and Berit Menuḥah all have different systems, but the number ten remains constant. Christian writers, following Dionysius the Areopagite's Celestial Hierarchies, usually have nine orders; see Dante, Paradiso, Canto 28.

Esther 1:14, which refers to the seven princes (šārīm) of Persia and Media “who saw the king’s face.”

2. Prince of Torah (Šar Tôrāh): an angel who can help one to understand Torah (particularly its deeper, mystical aspects), and can prevent one from forgetting what one has learned (Hekalot Rabbati 30:2, BHM, vol. 3, p. 107; Ma’āseh Merkabah 13, ed. Scholem, p. 109). In 3 Enoch 48D:4 the Prince of Torah is called Yepipyah. He is shown there in a typical role, assisting Moses to remember the Law he received on Sinai. Variations on the title Prince of Torah are “Prince of Learning” (Šar Talmūd) (Cairo Genizah Hekalot B/1, 20, ed. Gruenwald, p. 369) and “Prince of Wisdom” (Šar ḥokmāh) (3En 10:5; 48D:1[93]). Cairo Genizah Hekalot B/1, 37 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 369) speaks of “Princes of Torah” (Šārē Tôrāh).

3. Princes of kingdoms (Šārē malkuyyôt). Developing the thought of Daniel 10:20–21, 3 Enoch assigns to each nation on earth its angelic representative in heaven (cf. 1En 89:59), who speaks on its behalf in the heavenly law court (3En 30; cf. 17:8). The only princes of kingdoms to emerge in 3 Enoch as individuals are Samma’el, the Prince of Rome, Dubbi’el, the Prince of Persia (26:12), and Michael, the Prince of Israel (44:10).

4. Prince of the World (Šar ḥā’ôlām): an angel, distinct from the princes of kingdoms, who is in charge of the world as a whole. He is mentioned in rabbinic texts, but is a rather nebulous figure (b. Yeb 16b; b. Hull 60a; b. Sanh 94a; ExR 17:4). 3 Enoch 30:2 states that he has authority over the princes of kingdoms and he pleads for the world at the heavenly assize. In 3 Enoch 38:3 he appears to be the ruler of the heavenly bodies. He is not clearly identified in 3 Enoch. Meṭatron fulfills some of his functions (3:2; 10:3), and in later texts is equated with him explicitly (Tosapot to Yeb 16b and to Hull 60a). Some circles regarded Michael as the Prince of the World (PRE 27; cf. Yalqut Šim’oni Gen 132). The Prince of the World in the Merkabah texts is not an evil figure as in John 12:31 and 16:11.

5. The guardians of the doors (Šōmerē happetāhīm): angels who guard the gates of the seven palaces. Hekalot Rabbati 22:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 99) states that there are eight at each gate, and each group has its leader. In 3 Enoch 18:3, in contrast to Hekalot Rabbati, the gatekeepers are not given names; 3 Enoch 1:3, however, alludes to the chief of the gatekeepers of the seventh palace, Prince Qašpi’el. Cairo Genizah Hekalot A/1, 35 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 359) refers to “guardians of the palaces” (Šōmerē ḥékālôt), which is presumably a variant of “guardians of the doors.”

By far the most significant angel in 3 Enoch is Meṭatron. Meṭatron’s position in the heavenly world is briefly and accurately summed up in the title “The lesser YHWH” (3En 12:5; 48C:7; 48D:1[90]); he is the highest of the archangels and God’s vice-regent (3En 10:3–6). Like the Holy One himself, he has a throne and presides over a celestial law court (3En 16:1).

There has been a great deal of speculation about the meaning of the name Meṭatron. The name actually occurs in two forms, Mṭṭrwn and Myṭṭrwn. Various etymologies for it have been suggested. The more plausible are as follows: (1) Latin metator: This word originally designated the officer who went ahead of the army to prepare its camp, but it was then used generally of anyone who prepares the way. In favor of this explanation is the fact that metator is clearly attested as a loanword in Hebrew and Jewish Aramaic.⁶³ (2) Greek metaturannos = “the one next to the ruler,” i.e. next to God, or, assuming this is equivalent to sunthronos, “the one enthroned with (God).” (3) Greek (ho) meta thronon = “(the throne) next to the (divine) throne,” “the second throne.” None of the etymologies suggested is really satisfactory. It should be remembered that an angelic name such as Meṭatron does not necessarily have an etymology; it could be gibberish, like the magical names ‘Adiriron and Dapdapiron.

Meṭatron in 3 Enoch is a complex figure with a long history behind him. It is possible to trace some of the stages of his development. Meṭatron is, in a number of respects, similar to the archangel Michael: Both angels were known as “the Great Prince”; both were said to serve in the heavenly sanctuary; both were guardian angels of Israel; what is said in one text about Michael is said in another about Meṭatron.⁶⁴ A possible explanation of these similarities would be that originally Meṭaṭron and Michael were one and the same angel: Michael was the angel's common name, Meṭaṭron one of his esoteric, magical names.⁶⁵ At some point, however, the connection between Meṭaṭron and Michael was obscured, and a new, independent archangel with many of Michael's powers came into being. The connection may not have been entirely lost, for we find that in some late texts the identity of the two angels is asserted: see e.g. Seper Zerubbabel, BM, vol. 2, p. 498 (the text in BHM, vol. 2, p. 55, is slightly different).

⁶³ See n. 11 above. On the uses of metator in Lat. and Gk. see Milik, The Books of Enoch, pp. 131–33.

⁶⁴ See Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 5, p. 20, n. 91; p. 170, n. 10; p. 305, n. 248; vol. 6 (1928), p. 74, n. 381; Lieberman, Shkiin, pp. 11–15, 99f.; Alexander, JJS 28 (1977) 162f.

Meṭaṭron was merged with two other heavenly figures, (1) the archangel Yaho'el, and (2) translated Enoch. Meṭaṭron bears the name Yaho'el in 3 Enoch 48D:1(1). From other texts, however, we know of an angel Yaho'el quite independent of Meṭaṭron (Seper HaRazim 2:38, ed. Margalioth, p. 83; 2:140, ed. Margalioth, p. 89; Ma'ašeh Merkabah 20, ed. Scholem, p. 111, l. 29; Slavonic LAE 32:1f.; ApMos 43:4; and especially Slavonic ApAb 10). The archangel Yaho'el probably originated in speculation about the angel in whom God's name resides, according to Exodus 23:20f. (note in this connection ApAb 10). In 3 Enoch 12:5 and Sanhedrin 38b the angel of Exodus 23:20 is identified as Meṭaṭron. The title "lesser YHWH" (3En 12:5) may have belonged originally to Yaho'el; it certainly seems to be attested independently of Meṭaṭron in gnostic texts.

Meṭaṭron's absorption of translated Enoch could only have taken place in circles acquainted with the Palestinian apocalyptic Enoch traditions. The apocalyptic texts do not seem to go so far as to say that Enoch was transformed into an archangel when he was translated into heaven, but some of them speak of his exaltation in language which could be taken to imply this (see esp. 2En 22:8).

There were evidently mystics who laid great store by Meṭaṭron. It is not hard to see why he attracted them. He was a human being who had been elevated over all the angels, and was living proof that man could overcome angelic opposition and approach God. He was a powerful "friend at court." The transformation of Enoch in 3 Enoch 15 may reflect something of the experiences of the mystics themselves as they ascended to behold the Merkabah. Others, of more orthodox leanings, were not enamored of Meṭaṭron and considered that the powers ascribed to him bordered on dualism (b.Sanh 38b; b.Ḥag 15a). There are traces of criticism of the doctrine of Meṭaṭron in 3 Enoch 16 and 10:3.⁶⁶

THE ACTIVITIES OF THE HEAVENLY WORLD

The heavenly law court

Building on such biblical texts as 1 Kings 22:19–22, Psalm 82; Job 1:6–12, and especially Daniel 7:9f., the rabbis taught that there is a heavenly law court (bêt dîn šelema'alāh or pamalyā' šelema'alāh, in its narrower sense) over which God presides (b.Sanh 38b; ExR 30:18; LevR 24:2). It was regarded as the heavenly counterpart of the earthly Sanhedrin (b.Sanh 99b; b.Ber 16b/17a), and there was earnest discussion as to the relative jurisdictions of the two courts (b.Makk 23b; Pesiqta' deRab Kahana 5:13, ed. Buber, 48a; cf. DeutR 5:5; GenR 26:6). The heavenly law court is one of the main themes of 3 Enoch, and its sessions are covered in detail. There are three main blocks of material: (1) 28:7–10; 30:1–33:2; (2) 26:12; and (3) 18:19–21. It is characteristic of 3 Enoch that the heavenly assize is not the eschatological last judgment, after the resurrection of the dead (cf. b.Sanh 91b; LevR 4:5), but a judgment that takes place daily (3En 28:7, 9; 26:12; cf. GenR 50:3). According to 3 Enoch 30:1f. the court is made up of seventy-two princes of kingdoms and the Prince of the ⁶⁵ Scholem, Gnosticism, p. 46, suggests that evidence of this is to be found in Re'uyot Yehezqel, BM, vol. 2, p. 132 (ed. Gruenwald, pp. 128f.): "The Prince dwells nowhere but in Zebul [the 3rd heaven] . . . And what is his name? . . . Mitatron, like the name of the Power." He suggests the "Prince" here is Michael on the grounds that Michael is called "the great prince" in Dan 12:1; cf. b.Ḥag 12b; b.Men 110a; b.Zeb 62a. For strong arguments to the contrary see Gruenwald's note in Temirin 1 (1972) 128.

⁶⁶ On Meṭaṭron see Odeberg, 3 Enoch, pt. 1, pp. 79–146; Scholem, Gnosticism, pp. 42–55; Scholem, "Meṭaṭron," EncyJud 11, cols. 1443–46; R. Margalioth, Mal'ake 'Elyon (Jerusalem, 1945) pp. 73–108; Bietenhard, Die himmlische Welt im Urchristentum und Spätjudentum, pp. 143–60; M. Black, "The Origin of the Name Meṭaṭron," VT 1 (1951) 217–19; A. Murtonen, "The Figure of Meṭaṭron," VT 3 (1953) 409–11; Urbach, The Sages, vol. 1, pp. 138f.; Alexander, JSS 28 (1977) 159–65. Lieberman, "Meṭaṭron, the Meaning of His Name and His Functions," in I. Gruenwald, Apocalyptic and Merkavah Mysticism, pp. 235–41.

World. Satan and his two representatives, Samma'el, the Prince of Rome, and Dubbi'el, the Prince of Persia, appear as the accusers in 26:12.

The heavenly academy

3 Enoch 18:15f. contains a passing reference to the rabbinic idea that Torah is studied in heaven in the heavenly academy (yešibāh šelema'alāh), just as it is studied in the academies on earth (b.BM 86a; b.Gitt 68a; b.Ta'an 21b; cf. b.Ber 64a).

The celestial Qeduššah

3 Enoch represents the celebration of God's holiness through the recitation of the Qeduššah (the Sanctus) as the central act of heavenly worship. 3 Enoch 35–40 is devoted entirely to this subject. The celestial Qeduššah takes a number of different forms in 3 Enoch: see (1) 22B:8; (2) 1:12; 20:2; (3) 39:1–2; 48B:2.

There is a marked absence in 3 Enoch of Merkabah hymns, which are such a striking feature of some Merkabah texts (e.g. Hekalot Rabbati and Ma'aseh Merkabah). The only heavenly hymns in 3 Enoch are, like the Qeduššah, traditional and biblical. As we have already noted, the Merkabah hymns had a theurgical use and their total absence from 3 Enoch may point to an anti-theurgical tendency in the final redaction of this work.

MAN

3 Enoch is interested in the human soul, its origin, and its fate after death (see esp. 43:1–44:7). Men are divided into three classes—the righteous, the intermediate, and the wicked (cf. b.RH 16b/17a; b.Shab 152b; t.Sanh 13:3). The souls of the righteous ascend to the throne of glory after death and there enjoy God's presence: according to 3 Enoch 43:2 they fly above the throne; in Sanhedrin 152b they are stored in treasuries beneath the throne. The intermediate are purified in the purgatorial fires of Sheol and then, presumably, allowed to join the righteous above. The wicked are consigned to the flames of Gehinnom (3En 44:3). 3 Enoch is silent as to their ultimate fate, and the point was much disputed among the rabbis. Many regarded their punishment as of limited duration; after a brief period they would be annihilated (b.RH 17a; cf. m. Eduy 2:10; b.Shab 33b; LamR 1:40). Some taught, however, that certain types of sinners would be punished eternally (b.RH 17a).

3 Enoch is not explicit as to when the division into classes takes place. Two views are given in Rosh Hashanah 16b/17a: According to the one it takes place at a heavenly assize held on each New Year's Day (cf. m.RH 1:2; t.RH 2:11–13); according to the other it is done at the final day of judgment, when the dead are raised (b.RH 17a, with Tosapot leyôm). 3 Enoch has no interest in the last judgment, so it is probable that its view is that the division into classes takes place at the judgment which each man undergoes immediately after death. (For a fanciful description of this "judgment of the grave" see Masseket hibbut haqqeber, BHM, vol. 1, pp. 151f.; cf. also BHM, vol. 5, pp. 49–51.) This is the judgment spoken of in 3 Enoch 31:2.

According to 3 Enoch the human soul not only survives the body, and, at least in the case of the righteous, goes up to the heavenly regions, but it pre-exists the body as well, and descends from the heavenly storehouse of souls to enter the body at birth (3En 43:3; cf. b.Yeb 62a and parallels: 63b, b.AZ 5a; b.Nidd 13b; GenR 24:4; LevR 15:1; further b.Ḥag 12b). Unborn souls have done no wrong and so may be classified loosely as "righteous" (3En 43:1). Some rabbis went so far as to hold that the soul was intrinsically pure (see b.Ber 10a; LevR 4:8; Tanḥuma', ed. Buber, vol. 3 [Wayyiqra'], 4a/b). The stress in 3 Enoch is on the idea of immortality; typically there is no reference to the eschatological notion of the resurrection of the dead.

Relation to the canonical books

OLD TESTAMENT

The mystics were steeped in the Bible and their picture of the heavenly world was formed by harmonizing the Old Testament references to (1) theophanies, (2) angels, and (3) ascensions to heaven.

1. Theophanies: The visions of the Merkabah in Ezekiel 1; 3:12–15, 22–24; 8:1–4; 10:1–22; and 43:1–7 were their basic texts. These provided them with such fundamental elements as the Merkabah (3En 1:1, 5–7); the wheels (ophanim; 3En 25); the four creatures (hayyot; 3En 20f.); the throne of glory (3En 1:10, 12); the ḥašmal (3En 36:2, 7); the cherubim (3En 22). Daniel 7:9–10 and Isaiah 6 were incorporated into Ezekiel's picture. Daniel 7 records a vision of God seated on a fiery throne which has wheels of flame. It furnishes the additional motifs of the heavenly law court (3En 28:7), the River of Fire (3En 18:19–21; 19:4; 33:4; 36:1–2; 37:1), and the hosts of attendant angels (cf. 3En 19:6). Isaiah 6 contains a vision of God seated on a high and exalted throne (cf. 3En 26:12). Isaiah 6 contributes to the total picture the seraphim (3En 26) and the Qeduššah (3En 1:12; 20:2). Note also the vision of heaven in 1 Kings 22:19–22, in which the Lord is seen seated on his throne with all the array of heaven standing before him. Ezekiel employs the language of the nature theophanies ("fire, lightning, storm") to express the appearance of God's glory. The Merkabah texts expand this imagery by drawing on other Old Testament accounts of nature theophanies, particularly God's appearance to Israel at Sinai (Ex 19:16–18; cf. 1Kgs 19:11–13; Pss 18:7–15 and 97:2–5). For combinations of these elements see 3 Enoch 34 and 37.

2. Angels: Such Old Testament phrases as "the host of heaven" (1Kgs 22:19) and "the host of the height" (Isa 24:31) suggest that the number of the angels is virtually infinite (cf. 3En 19:6). The Old Testament applies various names to the angels: seraphim (Isa 6:2, 6); cherubim (Ezek 10); creatures (hayyot) (Ezek 1); Watchers and holy ones (irin and qaddišin) (Dan 4:14). 3 Enoch takes these names as designations of different orders of angels (3En 19–22; 25–28:6). The angels are represented in Genesis 19:1f. and Daniel 8:15f. as having human form, and in Joshua 5:13; Numbers 22:23; and 1 Chronicles 21:16, 30 as being armed with weapons; cf. 3 Enoch 22:3–9. The powerful "angel of the Lord" in the Old Testament (who is sometimes hard to distinguish from God himself) may be the prototype of 3 Enoch's Meṭatron (cf. Ex 23:20–23 with Judg 2:1–5, and see 3En 12:5 and b.Sanh 38b).

3. Ascensions to Heaven: The most obvious case in the Bible of someone ascending to heaven is Elijah (2Kgs 2:11). Following a very old tradition 3 Enoch states that Enoch also was translated. Genesis 5:24 is ambiguous on this point, but the occurrence there and in 2 Kings 2:9 of the Hebrew verb lāqah ("to take")⁶⁷ was used in rabbinic exegesis to show that Enoch departed in the same manner as Elijah. Note how 3 Enoch 6:1 describes Enoch's translation to heaven in the same terms as the Bible uses of Elijah's ascent.

THE NEW TESTAMENT

In view of the date of its final redaction there can be no possibility of 3 Enoch as a work having directly influenced the New Testament. However, it and the other Merkabah texts throw light on certain aspects of the New Testament.

1. The Colossian "Heresy": The ideas of the Merkabah mystics provide some interesting parallels to the Colossian "heresy." The Colossian "heretics" stressed the role of angels as mediators between God and man (Col 2:8, 18; cf. Col 1:13–20 and 2:15) and visions played an important part in their religious life (Col 2:18). At the same time they appear to have had a legalistic strand to their teaching: They enjoined the observance of religious festivals, new moons and sabbaths, and the Jewish dietary laws (Col 2:16, 21); they may also have demanded circumcision from converts (cf. Col 2:11). New Testament scholars have described the Colossian "heresy" vaguely as "gnosticizing Judaism," or as "syncretistic Judaism," or have attempted to link it with Qumran and Essenes. They appear to be agreed that (despite its legalistic side) it cannot be linked with the Pharisaic movement. However, the Merkabah texts make it clear that these ideas can exist side by side with strict Torah-observant Judaism.

2. Paul in Paradise: According to 2 Corinthians 12:1–7 Paul himself experienced ascent to heaven. He describes it as being "caught up to the third heaven" and as being "caught up to paradise." The term "paradise" here recalls the expression "to enter Pardes," which was used early on in the Merkabah movement to designate the mystical ascent. Like the Merkabah mystics Paul is reluctant to speak of his experiences, though his reticence may be rather stronger than theirs; the words he heard in heaven were "so secret that human lips may not repeat them" (2Cor 12:4, NEB). Paul speaks of his ascension as "visions and revelations of the Lord" (2Cor 12:1). The genitive here may be objective: Just as the Merkabah mystics saw God enthroned at the climax of their ecstasy, so Paul may have seen Christ enthroned. However, certain differences between 2 Corinthians 12:1-7 and the Merkabah texts should be noted. Paul's cosmology may allow only for three heavens, as against seven in Merkabah mysticism, while his use of the verb "to be caught up" (harpazesthai) suggests involuntary rapture in contrast to the Merkabah mystics' use of trance-inducing techniques.

⁶⁷ On this verb see the references in n. 4.

3. The Book of Revelation: The Book of Revelation is basically an apocalypse (a vision of the end-time) but it does contain material related to Ma'āseh Merkabah. The description of God's throne in Revelation 4 harmonizes elements from Ezekiel 1, Daniel 7, and Isaiah 6, just as the Merkabah texts do. The heavenly hymns in Revelation form, perhaps, the most interesting link with the Merkabah texts. Their repetition of emotive words such as "praise," "honor," "glory," "might," "power," and "wealth" are rather reminiscent of some of the Merkabah hymns. See especially Revelation 4:11; 5:12, 13; 7:12; 15:3f.

4. God's "House" and "Family": The reference in John 14:1 to God's "house" with its many "rooms" recalls the Merkabah traditions about God's heavenly "palaces" and "dwellings" with their many "chambers" (see 3En 1:1, n. d). Ephesians 3:14 appears to imply that there are "families" in heaven as well as on earth. This idea may be illuminated by the Merkabah designation of the angels as "the celestial family" (pamalyā' šelema'alāh), in contrast to God's "earthly family" (pamalyā' šelemaṭṭāh), Israel. The Merkabah texts also speak of "families" of angels (see 12:5, n. f).

Relation to earlier pseudepigrapha, Dead Sea Scrolls, and Merkabah literature

PSEUDEPIGRAPHIA

The close links between the Merkabah literature and the Pseudepigrapha may be illustrated from five apocalyptic texts: 1 Enoch, 2 Enoch, Testament of Levi, Ascension of Isaiah 6-11, and Apocalypse of Abraham 15-29. The last two of these works (both dating probably from the second century A.D.) in certain respects form a bridge between apocalyptic and the Merkabah texts.

1 Enoch

1 Enoch has the same kind of complex angelology as we find in Merkabah mysticism; note, for example, the different orders of angels listed in 1 Enoch 61:10-12. 1 Enoch 20 mentions seven archangels: Uriel, Raphael, Raguel, Michael, Saraqael, Gabriel, and Remiel; cf. the angels of the seven heavens in 3 Enoch 17. There is a fair number of angelic names in 1 Enoch; besides the archangels just mentioned, note the list of fallen angels in 1 Enoch 6:7: Kokab'el (4QEn^a 1 iii, l. 7), Baraq'el (4QEn^a 1 iii, l. 8), Ziqi'el (4QEn^a 1 ii, l. 26), etc. (cf. 1En 8:3; 69:2). Angelic names of precisely this type are well attested in the Merkabah texts: Ziqi'el occurs in 3 Enoch 14:4; compare further 1 Enoch's Kokab'el and Baraq'el with the slightly different forms in 3 Enoch—Kokabi'el (3En 14:4; 17:7) and Baraqi'el (3En 14:4). There are two Merkabah passages in 1 Enoch, viz. 14:8-25 and 71:5-11; the latter appears to be dependent on the former, which draws on Ezekiel 1 and 10, Isaiah 6, and Daniel 7:9f. Particularly interesting is the reference to the two heavenly houses, one apparently inside the other, with God's throne standing in the inner one. This is probably an anticipation of the idea of the seven concentric heavenly palaces which we find in the Merkabah texts (3En 1:1-2). 1 Enoch's treatment of the final translation of Enoch is also noteworthy (see chs. 70f): Enoch is exalted to the heaven of heavens and by some mysterious process ends up as the Son of Man (1En 71:14). This may perhaps be compared with the metamorphosis of Enoch into the archangel Meṭatron in 3 Enoch 3-15.

2 Enoch

2 Enoch is in some ways even closer to 3 Enoch than is 1 Enoch. Its basic scheme is as follows: Under the protection of two heavenly guides Enoch passes through the seven heavens and views the contents of each heaven. He comes to God's throne, is transformed (by being stripped of his earthly garments and anointed with holy oil), and then is brought by the archangel Michael before God's face (2En 22). He is instructed by the archangels Vreveil and Gabriel about various subjects, particularly the workings of nature and the story of creation. The cosmology of the seven heavens found in 2 Enoch is fundamental to the Merkabah texts. The description of the contents of the seven heavens is also a standard Merkabah motif (cf. Re'uyot Yehezqe'l, BM, vol. 2, p. 131; ed. Gruenwald, p. 121; Seper HaRazim; b.Ḥag 12b). Enoch's ascent through the seven heavens to God's throne, where he receives instruction from the archangels in various mysteries, is parallel to Ishmael's journey in 3 Enoch. The transformation of Enoch in 2 Enoch 22 provides the closest approximation, outside Merkabah literature, to Enoch's transformation in 3 Enoch 3–15.

Testament of Levi

The Testament of Levi 2:6–5:3 tells of how Levi ascended through the heavens to the "throne of glory," where he received his priestly commissioning from God (5:1–2) and learned mysteries which he was to declare to men (2:10). Levi's heavenly journey was made under the protection of an angelic guide whom he questions about the wonders that he sees (2:8–9). Among the many motifs in this account which can be paralleled in the Merkabah texts, the following are particularly noteworthy:

The title of God, "The Great Glory" (3:4), is found in its Aramaic equivalent Ziwa' Rabba' as a title of Metatron in 3 Enoch 48D:1(88).

The designation of God's heavenly throne as the "throne of glory" (TLevi 5:1, following the text-witnesses beta, A[e]f[g] and S in Charles's edition) is found very frequently in the Merkabah texts; see e.g. 3 Enoch 1:6.

The "Angels of the Presence of the Lord" in Testament of Levi 2:5–7 should be compared with the "Princes of the Divine Presence" in the Merkabah texts (e.g. 3En 8:1).

With the allusion to the heavenly choirs in Testament of Levi 3:8, cf. 3 Enoch 35f.

The "gates of heaven" in Testament of Levi 5:1 (4QTLLevi ar^a 2:18, tr'y šmy') recall the "gates" (petāhim / še'ārim) of the heavenly palaces (hēkālôt) in the Merkabah texts (3En 1:2; Hekalot Rabbati 17:1, BHM, vol. 3, p. 95).

There is perhaps an allusion to the treasuries of fire, ice, and snow in Testament of Levi 3:2; cf. 3 Enoch 22B: 3, 4; 37:2.

The motif of the sea suspended in the first heaven, Testament of Levi 2:7, occurs again in Re'uyot Yehezqe'l (BM, vol. 2, p. 131; ed. Gruenwald, p. 123).

Ascension of Isaiah

The structure of Ascension of Isaiah 6–11 is very similar to that of 2 Enoch and Testament of Levi 2–5: Isaiah is conducted by a heavenly guide through the seven heavens to God's throne, where he receives the revelation of a mystery. Several details call for comment.

In each heaven, except the sixth, Isaiah sees a throne, with angels to its right and to its left, and "one sitting on the throne" (see e.g. AscenIs 7:18–20). These thrones may represent the angels in charge of the various heavens (cf. 3En 17), or they may be related to the idea that there is a Merkabah in each heaven (Re'uyot Yehezqe'l, BM, vol. 2, p. 131; ed. Gruenwald, p. 119).

In Ascension of Isaiah 7:18–23, 28–31 we find the motif of the dimensions of the heavens, which occurs also in the Merkabah tradition (Re'uyot Yehezqe'l, BM, vol. 2, p. 131; ed. Gruenwald, p. 121; b.Ḥag 13a).

Ascension of Isaiah 10:24–31 mentions angelic guardians of the gates of the various palaces, to whom passwords have to be given. This recalls the Merkabah notion of the gatekeepers of the seven heavenly palaces, to whom "seals" have to be shown by the mystic on his way up to heaven (Hekalot Rabbati 17:1–20:3, BHM, vol. 3, pp. 95–98).

With the angelic challenge to Isaiah as he ascends to heaven, "How far shall he ascend who dwells among aliens?" (AscenIs 9:1f.), cf. 3 Enoch 2:1f. and 6:2.

The theme of the angels praising God "with one voice," found in Ascension of Isaiah 7:15, 8:18, and 9:28, is paralleled in the Merkabah tradition (see Scholem, Gnosticism, pp. 29f.). With Isaiah's participation in the celestial hymns, cf. 3 Enoch 1:11.

Perhaps most significant of all is the setting which Ascension of Isaiah gives for Isaiah's vision (see 6:1–11). Isaiah makes his ascent in the presence of the king, his counselors, and forty prophets and sons of prophets; there is a clear description of him falling into a trance (6:10f.), and it is stressed (6:17) that he did not impart his heavenly vision to anyone but the inner circle of Hezekiah, Jasub, and the remaining prophets. This whole picture is strongly reminiscent of the description of the Merkabah conventicle in Hekalot Rabbati 13–20 (BHM, vol. 3, pp. 93–98).

Apocalypse of Abraham 15–20

In this work we find once again the pattern of an ascension through the seven heavens (ApAb 19) to God's throne, followed by a revelation of secrets. Abraham's heavenly guide is the archangel Jaoel, whose name (in the form Yaho'el) appears as one of the names of Metatron in 3 Enoch 48D:1. When God approaches Abraham in a frightening theophany, Abraham recites a hymn taught to him by Jaoel. Like the Merkabah hymns this is theurgical in character: It protects him from being consumed and it opens up the way to a vision of the Merkabah (ApAb 17–18). The Merkabah is described mainly in terms of Ezekiel 1 and Isaiah 6. The revelation that Abraham receives is a vision of the seven heavens, the earth, the garden of Eden, and the whole course of human history from Adam to the Messiah (ApAb 19–29; cf. this last element with 3En 45:3–5).

THE DEAD SEA SCROLLS

The Merkabah literature has links also with Qumran. Perhaps the closest parallels are in the following texts:

The angelic liturgy (4QŠirŠabb)

This poorly preserved text⁶⁸ appears to give an elaborate account of the liturgy used by the angels in the heavenly temple. The first of the published fragments alludes to various orders of angels and mentions in particular seven "sovereign princes" (nešp'ê rôš), i.e. archangels. The Qumran text uses the Hebrew term nešp'im for the angels; the Merkabah texts normally call them sārim; however, we find the expression nešp'ê kâbôd ("glorious princes") in Seper HaRazim 5:4 (ed. Margalioth, p. 100). The second fragment contains a Merkabah piece, which is based on Ezekiel 1, but includes elements derived from Daniel 7 and 1 Kings 19. In line 1 it uses "the Glory" (hakkâbôd) as a title of God (cf. above on TLevi 3:4) and it appears to refer to a heavenly tabernacle (miškân): this may be compared with the tabernacle of Metatron in 3 Enoch 15B:1. It brings in from 1 Kings 19:12 (RSV) the "still small voice"; this motif is prominent in the Merkabah texts (see 3En 22C:5, n. m). Line 2 appears to read, "there is a murmur of jubilation when they [i.e. the cherubim] raise their wings." The idea here may be similar to that in 3 Enoch 22:15: The cherubim raise their wings to praise God. Line 2 also refers to God's throne as the "throne [kissê?] of the Merkabah" and the "seat of his glory" (mwšb kbwdw); cf. the Merkabah designations "throne of glory" (kissê hakkâbôd) and "seat of his glory" (mošab hadârô, mošab yeqârô) (see 3En 1:6, n. j, and 22:12, n. t). Ezekiel 1:26 and 10:1 only refer to a "throne" (kissê). Lines 4–5 seem to distinguish between the galgallim and the ophanim (cf. 3En 19 and 25). Line 5 possibly refers to "streams of fire";⁶⁹ cf. the "river(s) of fire" in the Merkabah texts (e.g. 3En 19:4). Finally, we should note in line 8 the reference to "the camps of the 'elohim" (mhny 'lwhym). Here 'elohim is probably not a designation of God but of the angels in general or of an angelic order (cf. 3En 15B:1, n. c); the idea is probably as in the Merkabah texts (3En 1:6, n. i) that the angelic choirs are organized into "camps."

The heavenly Melchizedek (11QMelch)

In this text⁷⁰ Melchizedek appears as being exalted over all the angels. It is stated that he will preside over a heavenly assize and exact punishment, with the help of the other angels, ⁶⁸ J. Strugnell, "The Angelic Liturgy at Qumran," VT Sup 7 (1959) 318–45. A fragment of the same work was unearthed at Masada (MasŠirŠabb): see Y. Yadin, "The Excavations at Masada," IEJ 15 (1965) 81f., 105–8. There are other, unpublished Merkabah fragments from cave 4 at Qumran.

⁶⁹ If this is, indeed, what is meant by šybyly 'š or šbwly 'š; Strugnell reports that later, in an unpublished fragment, there is a reference to nhry 'wr, "rivers of fire."

⁷⁰ A. S. van der Woude, "Melchisedek als himmlische Erlösergestalt," OTS 14 (1965) 354–73; J. T. Milik, "Milki-sedeq et Milki-reša" dans les anciens écrits juifs et chrétiens," JJS 23 (1972) 96–109; F. L. Horton, The Melchisedek Tradition (Cambridge, 1976) pp. 64–82.

from Belial and his minions. In view of the priestly functions of Melchizedek in the Bible (Gen 14:8; Ps 110:4), van der Woude has conjectured that at Qumran Melchizedek may have been regarded as the high priest of the heavenly Temple and identified with the archangel Michael, who fulfills the role of the heavenly high priest in rabbinic tradition (Hagigah 12b; cf. Midraš hanne'elam, Lek leka, quoted in M. M. Kasher, Torah Šelemah, Genesis, vol. 3 [Jerusalem, 1931] p. 615, no. 111; Yalquṭ Ḥadaš, MaPakim no. 19 [Warsaw, 1879] p. 122).⁷¹ However, all of this is very uncertain. A number of clear parallels between the heavenly Melchizedek of Qumran and the Meṭatron of 3 Enoch at once suggest themselves: both figures hold exalted, if not pre-eminent, positions among the angels; both are heavenly judges (for Meṭatron's court see 3En 16:1), and both, apparently, had earthly lives prior to their exalted, heavenly states.

Physiognomies (4QCryptic)

Like the Merkabah mystics the Qumran community was interested in physiognomy. 4QCryptic contains fragments of several texts which apparently attempted to establish that there is a significant relationship between a man's physical features, the astrological conditions prevalent at the time of his birth, and the number of parts his spirit possesses in the House of Light and in the Pit of Darkness.⁷² Another text from Qumran cave 4 (4QMess ar) refers to the distinguishing physical marks of someone who is called "the elect of God"; the first editor of this fragment thought that the reference is to the Messiah.⁷³ Gruenwald has published some physiognomies which apparently emanated from Merkabah circles (see Tarbiš 40 [1971] 301–19). He has attempted to show that there are significant parallels between these Merkabah physiognomies and 4QCryptic (pp. 304f.). For example, his second fragment, 3/1 line 3 (p. 317), and 4QCryptic (1) 3:4 both seem to speak of "thick legs" (šôqayim 'ābôt) as an important distinguishing physical trait. He has further pointed out that the lentil-shaped marks (tlwphyn) on the body, mentioned in the Qumran messianic text (4QMess ar 1:2) are paralleled in a Merkabah physiognomy published by Scholem (Seper Assap [Jerusalem, 1953] p. 491, l. 1: "And the signs, some are like lentils ['adāšāh] and some are like the seeds of cucumbers"), though the precise word for lentil is different in each case.

MERKABAH LITERATURE

3 Enoch cannot be fully understood unless it is related to the corpus of Merkabah texts of which it forms a part. The parallels between 3 Enoch and the other Merkabah tracts will not be pursued here; they are amply covered elsewhere, in the introduction and in the notes to the translation. Some of the texts still remain in manuscript, or have been published only in part, or in very faulty editions. The more important printed editions are as follows:

1. Re'uyot Yehezqel ("The Visions of Ezekiel"): BM, vol. 2, pp. 127–34; I. Gruenwald, Temirin. Texts and Studies in Kabbalah and Hasidism, ed. I. Weinstock (Jerusalem, 1972) vol. 1, pp. 101–39. ET in L. Jacobs, Jewish Mystical Testimonies (New York, 1977) pp. 27–31.
2. Hekalot Zūṭarti ("The Lesser Hekalot"): fragment in S. Musajoff, Merkabah Šelemah (Jerusalem, 1921) fols. 6a–8b.
3. Hekalot Rabbati ("The Greater Hekalot"): BHM, vol. 3, pp. 83–108; BM, vol. 1, pp. 63–136; cf. M. Smith, "Observations on Hekalot Rabbati," in Biblical and Other Studies, ed. A. Altmann (Cambridge, Mass., 1963) pp. 142–60, which summarizes the text.
4. Maseket Hekalot: BHM, vol. 2, pp. 40–47; BM, vol. 1, pp. 55–62. German translation in A. Wünsche, Aus Israels Lehrhallen, vol. 3 (Leipzig, 1909) pp. 33–47.
5. Ma'aseh Merkabah: Scholem, Gnosticism, pp. 101–17.
6. Ši'ur Qomah: fragments in Seper Razi'el (Amsterdam, 1701) fols. 37a–38b; Musajoff, Merkabah Šelemah, fols. 32a–33b, 34a–43b.

⁷¹ Meṭatron also fulfilled the role of the heavenly high priest; see 3En 15B:1.

⁷² See J. M. Allegro and A. A. Anderson in DJD, vol. 5, pp. 88–91.

⁷³ J. Starcky, "Un texte messianique araméen de la grotte 4 de Qumrân," École des langues orientales anciennes de l'Institut Catholique de Paris: Mémorial du cinquantenaire 1914–1964 (Paris, 1964) pp. 51–66.

7. Merkabah Rabbah: Musajoff, Merkabah Šelemah, fols. 1–6. See further, P. Schäfer, “Prolegomena zu einer kritischen Edition und Analyse der Merkabah Rabba,” Frankfurter Judäische Beiträge 5 (1977) 65–99.

8. Cairo Genizah Hekalot: fragments published by I. Gruenwald, Tarbiš 38 (1969) 354–73; 39 (1970) 216f.

9. Tosepta Targumica to Ezekiel 1: BM, vol. 2, pp. 135–40.

10. Physiognomies: Scholem, in Seper Assap (Jerusalem, 1953) pp. 459–95; Scholem in Liber Amicorum: Studies in Honour of C. J. Bleeker (Leiden, 1969) pp. 175–93 (contains a German translation of one of the fragments published in Seper Assap); I. Gruenwald, Tarbiš 40 (1970–71) 301–19.

11. Seper HaRazim: M. Margalioth, Seper Ha-Razim (Jerusalem, 1966). See further, J. Maier, “‘Das Buch der Geheimnisse.’ Zu einer neu entdeckten Schrift aus talmudischer Zeit,” Judaica 24 (1968) 98–111; J. Maier, “Poetisch-liturgische Stücke aus dem ‘Buch der Geheimnisse,’” Judaica 24 (1968) 172–81; N. Séd, “Le Sefer Ha-Razim et la méthode de ‘Combination des lettres,’” REJ 130 (1971) 295–300; J. H. Niggermeyer, Beschwörungsformeln aus dem ‘Buch der Geheimnisse’ (Hildesheim and New York, 1975).

12. Baraita deMa’aseh Bere’šit: this work contains Merkabah material; BM, vol. 1, pp. 19–48; cf. also pp. 365–69; N. Séd, REJ 123 (1964) 259–305; N. Séd, REJ 124 (1965) 22–123 (includes French translation).

13. Šar happānīm: P. Schäfer, “Die Beschwörung des Sar ha-panim: Kritisch Edition und Übersetzung,” Frankfurter Judäische Beiträge 6 (1978) 107–45.

Cultural importance

WITHIN JUDAISM

Merkabah mysticism has made a contribution to Jewish life and thought in three main areas: (1) the liturgy of the synagogue; (2) the mystical theology of the Ḥaside ṾAškenaz; and (3) the Spanish Qabbalah.

The synagogue liturgy

The Merkabah mystics had some influence on the development of synagogue hymnology. Two synagogue hymns will serve to illustrate this point. The first is ’El ’ādôn ‘al kol hamma’asīm (“God, the Lord over all works”), which is used in the morning service for sabbaths; it is found in all the prayer books, apart from Sa’adya’s Siddur. This hymn praises God as the one who is “exalted above the holy creatures [ḥayyot] and is adorned in glory above the Merkabah”; it speaks of “purity and rectitude before his throne, loving-kindness and mercy before his glory,” and it ends, “All the hosts on high render praise to him, the seraphim, the ophanim, the holy creatures ascribing glory and greatness.” This is probably an example of a hymn composed by a poet who was acquainted with Merkabah ideas and used them to enrich his composition.

The second example seems to provide a clear case of a Merkabah hymn which was composed within the mystical circles, but later appropriated for public use. It is the Ha’adderet wehā’emānāh leḥay ’ōlāmīm (“Excellence and faithfulness are his who lives for ever”), which is found in the ṾAškenazi prayer books as the sixteenth section of the Qerobah ’Emeykā nāsā’⁷⁴ for the morning service on Yom Kippur. The Qerobah is attributed to Meshullam b. Kalonymus (10th–11th cent. A.D.), but it seems that he did not compose this particular hymn; he simply lifted it bodily from the Merkabah traditions with which he was acquainted. It can be found in Hekalot Rabbati 26:7 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 103).⁷⁴ There is nothing obviously ⁷⁴ See I. Davidson, Thesaurus of Mediaeval Hebrew Poetry (New York, 1924) vol. 1, p. 139, n. 2976, and vol. 2 (1929) p. 116, n. 16.

mystical about this composition; however, it is a classic example of the "polylogy" of the Merkabah hymns, which was the basis of their theurgic power.⁷⁵

The Haside 'Aškenaz

Merkabah literature played a central role in shaping the theology of the medieval German-Jewish mystics known as the Ḥaside 'Aškenaz. For example, Eleazar b. Judah of Worms (c. A.D. 1165–c. 1230) frequently quotes the Merkabah tracts in his voluminous writings (see esp. his Sode Razayya', pt. 2, Sod hammerkabah, published by Israel Kamelhar [Bilgoraj, 1936] under the title Sode Razayya'). He gives many substantial and exact quotations from 3 Enoch. The interest of the Haside 'Aškenaz in these mystical tracts is evidenced by the fact that the vast majority of our surviving Hekalot texts exist in late medieval copies that emanated from their circle. German Jewry may have been first introduced to the Merkabah literature by the Kalonymus family, which emigrated from southern Italy to the Rhineland in the ninth century, and which came to hold an eminent position among German Jews (Eleazar was a Kalonymide). It is possible that the Merkabah texts were first brought to southern Italy by Aaron of Baghdad, who arrived there in the ninth century. Tradition has it that Aaron was a great master of mystical lore (see Megillat 'Aḥima'aš, ed. A. Neubauer, Mediaeval Jewish Chronicles, vol. 2 [Oxford, 1895] p. 112; ed. B. Klar [Jerusalem, 1944] p. 13), and Eleazar bears witness that Aaron met Moses b. Kalonymus at Lucca and transmitted to him "all his secrets."⁷⁶

The Spanish Qabbalah

The influence of the Merkabah traditions on the development of Jewish mysticism in medieval Spain may be illustrated from the Zohar, the most important text of the Spanish Qabbalah (composed probably by Moses de Leon in the late 13th cent. A.D.). There can be no doubt that the author of this work was acquainted with Merkabah traditions and that they helped to shape his thought. Thus in two passages he reworks, at considerable length, the Merkabah teachings about the seven heavenly palaces (Zohar Berēšit 1.38a–45a, and Peqūḏé 2.244b–262b). Meṭaṭron is also frequently mentioned in the Zohar (e.g. Zohar Wayeḥi 1.223b: "From beneath her feet went forth a Youth [Na'ar = Meṭaṭron] who stretched from one end of the world to the other . . . and who is called 'Enoch, the son of Yared'"). But in many instances the concept of Meṭaṭron has been developed far beyond the comparatively simple ideas of the Merkabah mystics (see e.g. Zohar Miṣpāṭim 2.94a/b).⁷⁷ The author of the Zohar often refers to the "Book of Enoch" as one of his authorities; some of these references correspond reasonably well to 3 Enoch (see e.g. Zohar Wayeḥi 1.223b, and Berēšit 1.37b); however, the correspondences are never very exact, and there is much material attributed to this "Book of Enoch" which could never conceivably have formed part of 3 Enoch (see e.g. Zohar Prologue 1.13a, and Miṣpāṭim 2.100a).⁷⁸

⁷⁵ On the influence of the Merkabah mystics on the synagogue liturgy see I. Elbogen, Der jüdische Gottesdienst in seiner geschichtliche Entwicklung (Frankfurt am Main, 1931) pp. 377–81; P. Bloch, "Die Yorede Merkabāh, die Mystiker der Gaonenzeit, und ihr Einfluss auf die Liturgie," MGWJ 37 (1893) 18–25, 69–74, 257–66, 305–11. Gruenwald and others have argued for the influence of Merkabah traditions on the early Palestinian liturgical poet Yannai; see Gruenwald, Tarbiš 36 (1966/67) 257–77; cf. Z. M. Rabinowitz, "The Relationship of the Payyetan Yannai to Hekhalot and Merkabah Literature," Tarbiš 36 (1966/67) 402–5 (in Heb.). The influence is hard to deny; see e.g. Yannai's Qeḏuṣta' for Yom Kippur, which begins Missōd ḥakānim ūmillemed ḥaberim (ed. Zulay, pp. 328–42, no. 132).

⁷⁶ See A. Neubauer, REJ 23 (1891) 230–37; see H. Gross, in MGWJ 49 (1905) 692–700. On the influence of Merkabah mysticism on medieval German Hasidism see Scholem, Major Trends, pp. 84–87; J. Dan, The Mysticism of the Haside 'Askenaz (Jerusalem, 1968) (in Heb.).

⁷⁷ On Meṭaṭron in the Zohar and in related mystical texts, see Odeberg, 3 Enoch, pt. 1, pp. 111–25; Margalioth, Ma'ake 'Elyon, pp. 73–108.

⁷⁸ For references to this "Book of Enoch" in the Zohar see Odeberg, 3 Enoch, pt. 1, p. 22; Margalioth, Ma'ake 'Elyon, pp. 80–3; BHM, vol. 3, pp. 195f. Moses de Leon in his Miṣkan ha'edut also has a long quotation from a "Book of Enoch": for the text see BHM, vol. 2, p. xxxi.

OUTSIDE JUDAISM

The influence of Merkabah mysticism outside the Jewish tradition is extremely hard to document. Its possible links with Gnosticism were explored above. The following are some notes on other areas which would be worth investigating.

Odeberg (3 Enoch, pt. 1, pp. 64–79) tried to establish that there are significant parallels between 3 Enoch and the literature of the Mandaean community of southern Iraq. J. Greenfield is skeptical about these parallels and asserts that they “are mostly verbal and are on the whole meaningless” (prolegomenon to KTAV reprint of Odeberg’s 3 Enoch, p. xxxix). Two things should, however, be borne in mind: first, Meṭatron and the curtain (pargôd) have turned up on a Mandaean incantation bowl; and, second, the Mandaeans were, for several centuries, in close historical contact with the rabbinic communities of Babylonia in which Merkabah mysticism flourished.

Following N. Séd’s interesting study “Les hymnes sur le paradis de Saint Ephrem et les traditions juives,” Le Muséon 81 (1968) 455–501, it would seem to be worth investigating the possibility of Jewish Merkabah speculation having had some influence on Syriac Christian writers.

As we noted above, H. Graetz argued that the Merkabah doctrine of Ši‘ur Qomah was influenced by anthropomorphic views of God held by certain Islamic thinkers. Though this is a mistaken notion, the parallels to which he pointed remain. It is possible that the influence worked in the other direction, and that the Islamic mushabbiha thinkers drew on Jewish Merkabah traditions.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 106f.

Denis, Introduction, p. 28.

Alexander, P. S. "The Historical Setting of the Hebrew Book of Enoch," JJS 28 (1977) 156–80.

Blumenthal, D. R. Understanding Jewish Mysticism: The Merkabah Tradition and the Zoharic Tradition. New York, 1977.

Goldberg, A. "Der Vortrag des Ma'asse Merkawa, Eine Vermutung zur frühen Merkawamystik," Judaica 29 (1973) 4–23.

———. "Einige Bemerkungen zu den Quellen und redaktionellen Einheiten der Grossen Hekhalot," Frankfurter Judaistische Beiträge 1 (1973) 1–49.

———. "Der verkannte Gott: Prüfung und Scheitern der Adepten in der Merkawamystik," ZRGG 26 (1974) 17–29.

———. "Rabban Yoḥanans Traum: Der Sinai in der frühen Merkawamystik," Frankfurter Judaistische Beiträge 3 (1975) 1–27.

Gruenwald, I. "Yannai and Hekhaloth Literature," Tarbiš 36 (1966/67) 257–77. (In Hebrew.)

———. "Knowledge and Vision: Towards the Clarification of Two 'Gnostic' Concepts in the Light of their Alleged Origins," Israel Oriental Studies 3 (1973) 63–107.

———. "The Jewish Esoteric Literature in the Time of the Mishnah and the Talmud," Immanuel 4 (1974) 37–46.

———. Apocalyptic and Merkabah Mysticism. AGAJU 14; Leiden, 1980.

Halperin, D. J. The Merkabah in Rabbinic Literature. American Oriental Series 62; New Haven, 1980.

Maier, J. Vom Kultus zur Gnosis. Studien zur Vor- und Frühgeschichte der "jüdischen Gnosis". Kairos: Religionswissenschaftliche Studien 1; Salzburg, 1964.

Odeberg, H. 3 Enoch. Cambridge, 1928. (This volume contains text, translation, commentary, and introduction; despite its weaknesses it remains valuable. It has been reprinted by KTAV [New York, 1973] with a useful prolegomenon by J. Greenfield.)

Schäfer, P. "Engel und Menschen in der Hekhalot-Literatur," Kairos 3–4 (1980) 201–25.

———. Jewish Gnosticism, Merkabah Mysticism and Talmudic Tradition. New York, 1954³.

———. Jewish Gnosticism, Merkabah Mysticism and Talmudic Tradition. New York, 1965².

———. Kabbalah. Library of Jewish Knowledge; Jerusalem, 1974. (This work collects together Scholem's numerous articles on mystical subjects in the EncyJud.)

Séd, N. "Les traditions secrètes et les disciples de Rabban Yoḥanan b. Zakkai," RHR 184 (1973) 49–66.

Urbach, E. E. "The Traditions About Merkabah Mysticism in the Tannaitic Period," Studies in Mysticism and Religion Presented to G. G. Scholem. Jerusalem, 1967. Hebrew section, pp. 1–28.

Wewers, G. A. Geheimnis und Geheimhaltung im rabbinischen Judentum. Religionsgeschichtliche Versuche und Vorarbeiten 35; Berlin, 1975.

THE BOOK OF ENOCH BY RABBI ISHMAEL THE HIGH PRIEST

Ishmael enters the seventh palace^a

“Enoch walked with God. Then he vanished because God took him.”

Gen 5:24

1 1 Rabbi Ishmael^b said:

2 When I ascended to the height to behold the vision of the chariot,^c I entered Ezek 1
 3 six palaces, one inside the other,^d and when I reached the door of the seventh 18:3
 4 said: “Lord of the Universe, grant, I beseech you, that the merit of Aaron, Ex 24:9f.: 28:1
 son of Amram, lover of peace and pursuer of peace,^e who received on Mount Sinai the crown of priesthood in the presence of your glory, may avail for me now, so that Prince Qaspi’el,^f and the angels with him, may not prevail over

1 a. Chs. 1f. provide a setting for the revelations that follow. It is not clear whether they were added to chs. 3–48A by the final redactor of 3En, or whether they had already been introduced at an earlier stage as a preface to a shorter form of the work (e.g. chs. 3–15/16). Chs. 1f. contain many parallels to the rest of the book. Two are particularly striking: (1) the way in which Ishmael, when he ascends to heaven, is challenged by the archangels and defended by God is similar to the challenge and defense of Enoch on his ascent (cf. 1:7f. and 2:1–3 with 4:7f. and 6:2f.); (2) the bestowal of spiritual gifts on Ishmael is exactly matched by the bestowal of spiritual gifts on Enoch (cf. 1:11f. with 8:1f.). It is possible that chs. 1f. have been pieced together from material lifted from the rest of the work. On the other hand, the parallelism could have deeper significance: It may be meant to suggest that the ascent of Ishmael (and so of every adept) is in certain respects analogous to the elevation of Enoch.

b. A famous Palestinian scholar who died before A.D. 132. There is a rabbinic tradition that he was of priestly descent (b.Ket 105b; b.Hull 49a; t.Hall 1:10), but he cannot have been high priest since he was only a child when the Temple was destroyed in A.D. 70 (b.Gitt 58a). In view of the privileged relationship of the high priest to God, the mystics had a vested interest in claiming that their master held the supreme priestly office. Ishmael’s name was early linked with mystical lore: b.Ber 7a claims that as high priest he had a vision in the Holy of Holies of “‘Aktari’el Yah, the Lord of Hosts, sitting on a high and lofty throne” (cf. 3En 15B:4), and b.Ber 51a mentions three things which he is supposed to have learned from the Prince of the Divine Presence; note further the interpretation of ‘Aza’zel (Lev 16:8) attributed to “the school of Ishmael” in b.Yoma 67b. R. Ishmael appears as the narrator in a number of other Merkabah texts; see Hekalot Rabbati, Ma’aseh Merkabah (though in this work he is closely associated with R. Aqiba), and the Cairo Genizah Hekalot (note e.g. A/2, 34, ed. Gruenwald, p. 366, and B/1, 18, ed. Gruenwald, p. 368).

c. “To behold the vision of the chariot.” F: “to behold in my vision the chariot.” A. For the technical phrase, “the vision of the chariot” (sepiyyat hammerkābāh), see 16:2; Ma’aseh Merkabah 9 and 33 (ed. Scholem, pp. 107, 116); Hekalot Rabbati 1:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 83, l. 3); 2:3 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 84, l. 17).

d. Lit. “chamber within chamber” (heder betōk heder), i.e. concentrically; cf. Hekalot Rabbati 15:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 94): “Tōtōrsī’i YHWH, the God of Israel, dwells in seven palaces [hēkālōt], one within the other [heder betōk heder].” 3En combines here the tradition about the heavenly palaces (hēkālōt) (18:3; 37:1) with the tradition about the heavenly chambers (hadārim) (18:18; 38:1; Hekalot Rabbati 3:1 [BHM, vol. 3, p. 85, l. 9]; 6:3 [BM, vol. 1, p. 76, l. 4 = BHM, vol. 5, p. 167, l. 20]; 7:2 [BHM, vol. 3, p. 89, l. 6]; 7:4 [BHM, vol. 3, p. 89, l. 13]; 7:5 [BHM, vol. 3, p. 89, l. 19]; Ma’aseh Merkabah 6 and 7 [ed. Scholem, pp. 106f.]; Tanhuma’ ed. Buber, vol. 1, 71a). In 3En 7 the heavenly palaces are designated by the Lat. loanword palatium or praetorium (see ch. 7, n. d).

e. Cf. m.Ab 1:12: “Hillel said: Be of the disciples of Aaron, loving peace and pursuing peace.”

f. “Qaspi’el.” A E F, is correct as against B’s “Qapsi’el,” since the name is derived from the root qsp, “to be angry.” Qesep is the name of an angel of destruction in TarJon to Num 17:11. In Hekalot Rabbati 15:7 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 94, l. 26) Qaspi’el is a gatekeeper of the sixth palace; in Seper HaRazim 4:2 (ed. Margalioth,

4 me and cast me from heaven." • At once the Holy One, blessed be he, summoned to my aid his servant, the angel Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence.^g He 5 flew out to meet me with great alacrity, to save me from their power. • He grasped me with his hand before their eyes and said to me, "Come in peace into the presence of the high and exalted King^h to behold the likeness of the 6 chariot." • Then I entered the seventh palace and he led me to the camp of the Šekinahⁱ and presented me before the throne of glory^j so that I might behold 18:4 7 the chariot. • But as soon as the princes of the chariot^k looked at me and the Dan 8:17f.;
 fiery seraphim fixed their gaze on me, I shrank back trembling and fell down,^l 10:9.10.15 stunned by the radiant appearance of their eyes and the bright vision of their Rev 1:17 8 faces, until the Holy One, blessed be he, rebuked them and said, "My servants, 4:6; 6:2.3
 my seraphim, my cherubim, and my ophanim, hide your eyes from Ishmael my beloved son and honored friend, so that he does not shrink and tremble 9 so." • At once Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, came and revived me 10 and raised me to my feet, • but still I had not strength enough to sing a hymn^m
 ' before the glorious throne of the glorious King, the mightiest of kings, the most 11 splendid of potentates, until an hour had passed. • But after an hour the Holy One, blessed be he, opened to me gates of Šekinah,ⁿ gates of peace, gates of 8:1
 wisdom, gates of strength, gates of might, gates of speech, gates of song, gates 12 of sanctifying praise,^o gates of chant. • He enlightened my eyes and my heart to utter psalm, praise, jubilation, thanksgiving, song, glory, majesty, laud,^p and strength. And when I opened my mouth and sang praises before the throne

p. 97) he is one of the angels who guide the sun during the night. For the motif of the angels attacking the adept as he ascends to the Merkabah, see b. Hag 15b: "And R. Aqiba too the ministering angels sought to thrust away; the Holy One, blessed be he, said to them: Let this elder be, for he is worthy to avail himself of my glory." See further 15B:2; Hekalot Rabbati 17:6 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 96); 24 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 102, ll. 11–19 = BM, vol. 1, pp. 107f.).

g. "Prince of the Divine Presence": the title of an angel who serves in God's immediate presence, within the curtain; see "Theological Importance."

h. "The high and exalted King" (melek rām weniššā), E F; A B have simply rām weniššā, "the high and exalted (One)."¹ The expression rām weniššā is common in the Merkabah texts. It is sometimes used absolutely as a title of God (cf. Isa 57:15), and sometimes in the phrases "high and exalted King" and "high and exalted throne" (cf. Isa 6:1); see Masseket Hekalot 1 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 40); Hekalot Rabbati 7:2 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 89); Seper HaRazim 5:24 (ed. Margalioth, p. 102).

i. "Camp [mahanēh] of the Šekinah." A and probably B; "sight [or "vision"] [marēh] of the Šekinah." E F. Normally we find "camps" in the plural; thus "four camps" in 18:4; 37:1; 40:3; Masseket Hekalot 6 (BHM, vol. 2, pp. 43f.); "seven camps" in Seper HaRazim 1:16 (ed. Margalioth, p. 67); "camps" in 22:2; 34:2; 36:1. But 35:5 also speaks of the "camp of the Šekinah"; the same expression is used as a designation of the inner court and the holy place in the Temple; see t. KelBQ 1:12; SifNum 1 (ed. Horowitz, p. 4, ll. 7–9); b. Zeb 116b; NumR 7:8. The camps are companies of angels, sometimes identified with the heavenly choirs; see further

18:4, n. h, and 35:1, n. c. The idea may be derived from Gen 32:1f.: "While Jacob was going on his way angels of God met him, and on seeing them he said, "This is God's camp [mahanēh 'elōhim]," and he named the place Maḥanayim [The Two Camps]." The Šekinah is the visible manifestation of God's presence; see "Theological Importance."

j. "The throne of glory" (kisse' hakkābōd), A E F; "the Holy One, blessed be he." B. God's celestial throne is most commonly called kisse' hakkābōd in the Merkabah texts, though various expressions with mošāb are also found; see 22:12, n. t.

k. The angels who minister to the chariot.

l. For the motif of fainting and being revived see the margin and 1En 71:11; ApAb 10.

m. At the climax of his ecstasy the mystic worships God in song; see Hekalot Rabbati 24:1 (BHM, vol 3, p. 100): "When he (the mystic) stands before the throne of glory, he begins to recite the hymn which the throne of glory sings each day"; cf. Ma'asēh Merkabah 8 (ed. Scholem, p. 107, l. 15). The Merkabah hymns (see "Original Language") are examples of the hymns which the throne sings.

n. "Gates of Šekinah": the gates belong to the heavenly treasures (see "Theological Importance"). "Šekinah" is the reading of A B E F Mus; Jellinek (BHM, vol. 5, p. 171) conjectures "understanding" (bināh), presumably because Šekinah is not something that can be stored in treasures. Note, however, 8:1, where A D E F Mus have "gates of Šekinah," and 5:4, where Šekinah is spoken of as if it were a beneficial substance.

o. "Sanctifying praise" = Qeduššah.

p. "Laud" (hillūl), A E F (cf. Mus); B repeats "psalm" (tehillāh).

of glory^a the holy creatures below the throne of glory^c and above the throne responded after me, saying,

Holy, holy, holy,

Isa 6:3

and,

Blessed be the glory of the Lord in his dwelling place.^c

Ezek 3:12

Meṭatron vouches for Ishmael

1 2 R. Ishmael said:

Then the eagles^a of the chariot, the flaming ophanim^b and the cherubim of 25:1
 2 devouring fire, asked Meṭatron, "Youth,^c why have you allowed one born of Ezek 1:16 woman to come in and behold the chariot? From what nation is he? From what 6:2; Job 15:14; 25:4 3 tribe? What is his character?" • Meṭatron replied, "He is of the nation of Israel, whom the Holy One, blessed be he, chose from the seventy nations^d to be his 3:2; 17:8; 30:2; Gen people. He is of the tribe of Levi, which presents the offering^e to his name. He 10 is of the family of Aaron, whom the Holy One, blessed be he, chose to minister in his presence and on whose head he himself placed the priestly crown on 4 Sinai." • At once they began to say, "This one is certainly worthy to behold 4:9
 the chariot, as it is written,^f

Happy is the nation of whom this is true, happy is the nation whose God is the Lord."

Ps 144:15

Ishmael questions Meṭatron^a

1 3 R. Ishmael said:

Then I questioned the angel Meṭatron, Prince of the Divine Presence. I said to 2 him, "What is your name?" • He answered, "I have seventy names, corre- 48D:1; 2:3
 sponding to the seventy nations of the world, and all of them are based on^b the 48C:9; 29:1
 name of the King of the kings of kings;^c however, my King calls me 'Youth.'^d

q. "Before the throne of glory." A Mus: "before the Holy One, blessed be he." B: cf. n. j above.

r. "Below the throne of glory." B: "below the throne of the King of Glory." A E F. It is odd to have the creatures both above and below the throne. Mus is corrupt, but it suggests a reading, "[The holy creatures below the throne of the King of Glory/throne of glory], and the holy seraphim above the throne of glory." This may be the original text.

s. Like a synagogue precentor Ishmael leads the angels in the chanting of the Qeduššah; see "Theological Importance."

2 a. "Eagles" (nīsrē). A B Mus: "attendants" (na'arē). E F. For eagle-like angels see 24:11; 26:3; 44:5, and for the expression "eagles of the Merkabah" see Alphabet of Aqiba (BHM, vol. 3, p. 26, l. 21); note also that one of the creatures is an eagle (Ezek 1:10; 10:14). Nevertheless the expression is strange; perhaps read "princes" (šārē) as in 1:7; 22:10.

b. "The flaming ophanim." A B E; F omits.

c. "Youth": see 4:10.

d. "From the seventy nations." A Mus: compare 17:8.

e. "Which presents the offering" (še-mērim terūmah). Odeberg's conjecture. For the idiom see Num 15:19; Ezek 45:1. A B have only terūmah and E has only mērim; Mus omits.

f. "As it is written." A E: "and they said." B.

3 a. Chs. 3–15, on the elevation of Enoch, may have been the earliest edited section of 3En, and may have formed the core round which the rest of the work crystallized. They develop essentially as an answer to Ishmael's question why Meṭatron is called "Youth." Chs. 4–7 describe the ascent of Enoch to heaven; chs. 8–15, his transformation into an archangel. As elsewhere in 3En diverse earlier traditions have been utilized and adapted: see 4:1, n. a; 4:3, n. d; 4:6, n. l; 10:3, n. i; 14:4, n. d.

b. "And all of them are based on" (wekūllām 'al). A B E F: "and similar to" (ūke'ēn). C D Mus: see the margin and cf. 10:3; 12:5; 30:1; further n. c below.

c. "The name of the King of the kings of kings." A E F: "the name of my King and my Creator." C: "the name of my King, the Holy One, blessed be he." D: "the name of my King." Mus: "the name of Meṭatron, the Angel of the Divine Presence." B. Three things are asserted in this verse: (1) Meṭatron has seventy names; for a list of them see 48D:1. (2) The number of the names corresponds to the number of the nations of the world. The idea probably is that Meṭatron is the Prince of the World, in charge of the seventy princes of kingdoms (see "Theological Importance"). (3) The names are "based on" the name of God. The natural interpretation of this would be that they are derived (by temurah, gematria, and other systems of letter and number magic) from the tetragram YHWH. However, according to 48C:9; 48D:5,

Metatron is Enoch

1 4 R. Ishmael said:

- I said to Metatron, "Why are you called by the name of your Creator^a with seventy names? You are greater than all the princes, more exalted than all the angels, more beloved than all the ministers, more honored than all the hosts, and elevated over all potentates in sovereignty, greatness, and glory; why, then, do they call you 'Youth'^b in the heavenly heights?" • He answered, "Because I am Enoch, the son of Jared.^c • When the generation of the Flood sinned and turned to evil deeds, and said to God, 'Go away! We do not choose to learn your ways,' the Holy One, blessed be he, took me^d from their midst to be a witness against them in the heavenly height to all who should come into the world,^e so that they should not say, 'The Merciful One is cruel!'^f • Did all those multitudes of people sin? And even if they sinned, what sin did their wives, their sons, and their daughters commit? And what of their horses, their mules, their beasts, their cattle, and all the birds of the world which the Holy One destroyed with them in the waters of the Flood—what sin did they commit that they should have perished as well?^g • Therefore the Holy One, blessed be he, brought me up in their lifetime, before their very eyes, to the heavenly height, to be a witness against them to future generations.^h And the Holy One, blessed be he, appointed meⁱ in the height as a prince and a ruler among the ministering angels.
- Then three of the ministering angels, 'Uzzah, 'Azzah, and 'Aza'el,^j came and laid charges against me in the heavenly height. They said before the Holy

the idea is that they were seventy of God's own names which he bestowed on Metatron (thus symbolizing the transfer to Metatron of some of his power). This is probably the sense of the reading "seventy names . . . similar to the name of the King" (see n. b above). Cf. b.Sanh 38b, "Metatron . . . whose name is similar to that of his Master," and Re'uyot Yebezeq^l, BM, vol. 2, p. 132, l. 14 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 130), where the name of the angel of the third heaven is said to be "Mitatron, like the name of the Almighty [haggebüräh]." The simplest explanation of b.Sanh and Re'uyot Yebezeq^l is that "Metatron" was not only the angel's name, but a secret name of God as well.

d. "Youth"; see 4:10.

4 a. "Why are you called by the name of your Creator?" A Mus: "Why is your name like the name of your Creator?" C. There is no answer to this question; a passage containing a discussion of the seventy names of Metatron has probably been edited out. Its omission would be in keeping with the anti-theurgical tendency of the final redaction of 3En (see "Historical Importance").

b. "Youth"; see 4:10.

c. "Because I am Enoch, the son of Jared." A C D E Mus: cf. TarJon to Gen 5:24: "Enoch was taken up and ascended to heaven and his name was called Metatron, the great scribe." The identification of Enoch and Metatron is probably a late development (see "Theological Importance").

d. "Took me." A B: "took me up." C D Mus: "rescued me." E F. There are three different traditions concerning Enoch's elevation in 3En: (1) ch. 4, Enoch is elevated to be "a witness" (4:3, 5), but the manner of his ascent is unspecified; (2) ch. 6, he is carried up in a fiery chariot (6:1), to be God's "reward" (6:3); (3) ch. 7, he ascends on the wings of the Šekinah, and is set to serve the throne of glory day by day.

e. "All who should come into the world" or "all the inhabitants of the world": Heb. bā'ē hā'ōlām.

f. "So that . . . cruel." A.

g. "Did all those multitudes . . . perished as well?" reconstructed text. There are a great many variations in the MSS and all forms of the text are more or less corrupt. The charge is that God destroyed the innocent with the guilty; cf. GenR 28:8; b.Sanh 108a (both references concerned with the Flood). See further PRE 14: "If Adam sinned, what sin did the earth commit that it should be cursed?"; b.Yoma 22b, with regard to God's command to wipe out the Amalekites: "If the humans sinned, what sin did the cattle commit? If the adults sinned, what sin did the little ones commit?"

h. Lit. "to the world to come" (lā'ōlām habbā'), here the new world after the Flood, not the messianic age.

i. "Appointed me" (netānani). Mus: A E F have ziwwegani = (?) "took me into partnership."

j. "Uzzah, 'Azzah, and 'Aza'el." A B: "Izzah, 'Uzzah, and 'Aza'el." E F: "Azzah, 'Azzi'el, and 'Uzzi'el." Mus: "Azzah, and 'Aza'el." C D. These angels are probably evil agencies, in view of the fact that they "laid charges" (hāyū maš'īnim) against Enoch: cf. 14:2, "Samma'el, Prince of the Accusers" (šar hammaš'īnim). They are certainly bad in 5:9.

- One, blessed be he, 'Lord of the Universe,^k did not the primeval ones^l give you good advice when they said, Do not create man!' The Holy One, blessed be he, replied,^m 'I have made and will sustain him; I will carry and deliver him.'ⁿ Isa 46:4
- 7 When they saw me they said before him, 'Lord of the Universe, what right 2:2; 6:2 has this one to ascend to the height of heights? Is he not descended from^o those who perished in the waters^p of the Flood? What right has he to be in heaven?'
- 8 Again the Holy One, blessed be he, replied,^q and said to them, 'What right 8 have you to interrupt me?' I have chosen this one in preference to all of you, 9 to be a prince and a ruler over you in the heavenly heights.' *At once they all 9 arose and went to meet me and prostrated themselves before me, saying, 'Happy 2:4 are you, and happy your parents, because your Creator has favored you.'
- 10 Because I am young in their company^s and a mere youth among them in days 2:2; 3:2; 4:1; and months and years—therefore they call me 'Youth.'^t 48D:1(89)

God removes the Šekinah

- 1 Š R. Ishmael said: Meṭatron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me: 1 From the day that the Holy One, blessed be he, banished the first man from Gen 3:23f. the garden of Eden, the Šekinah^a resided on a cherub beneath the tree of life.
- 2 The ministering angels used to muster and come down from heaven in com- 2 panies, and in bands and cohorts from heaven, to execute his will in all the 3 earth. *The first man and his generation dwelt at the gate of the garden of Eden 3 so that they might gaze at the bright image of the Šekinah, or the brilliance of the Šekinah radiated from one end of the world to the other, 365,000^b times 22:7,13; 28:2
- 4 more brightly than the sun; * anyone who gazed at^c the brightness of the Šekinah 22B:7

k. "Lord of the Universe." C D E F Mus; A B omit.

l. "The primeval ones": The tradition behind this is found in b.Sanh 38b: When God wanted to create man, he first created a company of angels and asked their advice. They opposed the creation of man, so God destroyed them. The same fate befell a second company, but a third company allowed man to be created. However, when the generation of the Flood came, these angels said: "Lord of the Universe, did not the first company of angels speak aright?" God replied, "Even to old age I am the same, and even to grey hairs will I carry" (Isa 46:4). This tradition has been adapted here: (1) The third company of angels is identified with 'Uzzah, 'Azzah, and 'Aza'el; (2) the charge brought against mankind in general is incongruously applied specifically to Enoch; (3) the point of the expression "the first ones" (i.e. the first company of angels) has been obscured. The talmudic form of the tradition clearly has priority; what we have in 3En is a rather clumsy reworking of it. On the theme of angelic opposition to man, see 1:3, n. f, and 5:10, n. 1.

m. "Replied." C D Mus; "replied again" ('ōd mēšib), A B E F; cf. n. q below.

n. The sense given to the biblical verse is either: "I will sustain man—you angels will not be troubled"; or: "I will be long-suffering with man."

o. "Descended from." lit. "one of the sons of the sons of"; so A B Mus and, substantially, C D. But the chronology is awry: according to Gen 5:21–24 and 7:11 Enoch was translated 669 years before the Flood.

p. "Waters." C D Mus; "days." A B E F.

q. "Again . . . replied" ('ōd mēšib), A B E;

C D F Mus omit "Again"; cf. n. m above.

r. "To interrupt me." lit. "to enter into my words." For the idiom of m.Ab 5:7. "The wise man . . . does not break in upon the words of his fellow" (Danby, p. 456).

s. "Young in their company" (qātān betō-kām), A E; "young" (qātān), B.

t. "Youth" (Na'ar): a standard title of Meṭatron; see margin. Originally it meant "servant," and may have referred to Meṭatron's service in the heavenly sanctuary; for the use of na'ar for a temple servant see Ex 24:5; 1Sam 2:13. However, the name is reinterpreted here, in the context of the equation of Meṭatron with Enoch, to mean "youth" (see "Date"). Cf. b.Yeb 16b: "The following verse was uttered by the Prince of the World, 'I have been a youth (na'ar) and now I am old'" (Ps 37:25).

5 a. The visible manifestation of God's presence; see "Theological Importance." In the garden of Eden the Šekinah resided on a cherub; in heaven it resides on the throne of glory.

b. "365,000." C D; "65,000." A B E F Mus. For the number see 9:4.

c. "Gazed at," E F; "made use of," A B C Mus. The second reading is not out of the question, since Šekinah could be regarded as a luminous substance; see 1:11. For the Šekinah as a protection against demons see NumR 12:3. "Before the Tabernacle was erected demons vexed mankind, but from the moment the Tabernacle was erected, and the Šekinah took up its residence here below, the demons were exterminated from the world." According to b.Ber 17a, the righteous will feast on the brightness of the Šekinah in the world to come. Note also the tradition that the angels feed on the radiance of the Šekinah (see 22:7).

- was not troubled by flies or gnats, by sickness or pain; malicious demons were 5 not able to harm him,^d and even the angels^e had no power over him. • When the Holy One, blessed be he, went out and in from the garden to Eden, and from Eden to the garden, from the garden to heaven, and from heaven to the garden of Eden,^f all gazed at the bright image of his Šekinah and were unharmed 6 —until the coming of the generation of Enosh,^g who was the chief of all the idolaters in the world.
- 7 What did the men of Enosh's generation do? They roamed the world from end to end, and each of them amassed silver, gold, precious stones, and pearls in mountainous heaps and piles. In the four quarters of the world they fashioned them into idols, and in each quarter they set up idols about 1,000 parasangs^h 8 in height. • They brought down the sun, the moon, the stars and the constellations and stationed them before the idols, to their right and to their left, to serve them in the way they served the Holy One,ⁱ blessed be he, as it is written, "All the 9 array of heaven stood in his presence, to his right and to his left." • How was it that they had the strength to bring them down? It was only because 'Uzzah, 'Azzah, and 'Aza'el^j taught them sorceries that they brought them down and employed them, for otherwise they would not have been able to bring them down.
- 10 Thereupon the ministering angels conspired to bring a complaint^k before the Holy One, blessed be he. They said in his presence, "Lord of the Universe, what business have you with men, as it is written, 'What is man (ʿenoš) that you should spare a thought for him?' It does not say here, 'What is Adam?' 11 but, 'What is Enosh?' because Enosh is the chief of the idolaters.^l • Why did you leave the heaven of heavens above, the abode of your glory,^m the high and exalted throne which is in the height of 'Arabot,ⁿ and come and lodge^o with men who worship idols? Now you are on the earth, and the idols are on the 12 earth; • what is your business among the idolatrous inhabitants of the earth?"
 Immediately the Holy One, blessed be he, took up his Šekinah from the earth,

Gen 2:8,10

Gen 4:26

1Kgs 22:19

4:6

4:6; Job 1:6

Ps 8:4

17:3

6:1

d. "Malicious demons were not able to harm him." A and, substantially, C D Mus: "malicious demons had no power over him and were not able to harm him." B.

e. "Even the angels." A C Mus: B E F omit "even"; the reference is to good angels as opposed to demons.

f. "From heaven to the garden of Eden." A B: "from heaven to the upper garden." D. The D reading alludes to the tradition that there is both a terrestrial and a celestial garden of Eden: see Seder Gan 'Eden, BHM, vol. 3, pp. 137f. For the distinction in the text between "Eden" and "the garden" see b.Ber 34b: "Perhaps you will say. The garden and 'Eden are the same. Not so! For the text says, 'A river went out from Eden to water the garden [Gen 2:10]; the garden is one thing and Eden is another." Cf. b.Sanh 99a: b.Ta'an 10a; GenR 15:2; note also Milton, Paradise Lost, bk. 12, ll. 624–29.

g. It is a standard theme of rabbinic Midrash that idolatry began in the time of Enosh; see e.g. b.Shab 118b; GenR 23:6f. This view is based on a forced interpretation of Gen 4:26, in which the unique form hūhal is linked with hullin = "profane things" (see Rashi). 3En makes Enosh himself an idolator; most Midrashim speak only of his generation as idolaters. According to Philo, Abr 7–14, Enosh was righteous.

h. "Parasang": a Persian measure of length (= 3.88 miles), used frequently in Hekalot texts.

i. "They served the Holy One." A F: "they served before the Holy One." E (cf. Mus): "they serve before the Holy One." C D.

j. "'Uzzah.'" B C; "'Uzza'." A. "'Azzah and 'Aza'el.'" A: "'Azzah and 'Azzi'el.'" B C. In E the three names are: "'Azza', 'Uzzai, and 'Aza'el"; in F: "'Azza', 'Uzzai, and 'Azzi'el"; and in Mus: "'Azza', 'Azzi'el, and 'Uzzi'el." These angels are definitely evil agencies here; cf. 4:6. According to TarJon to Gen 6:4, 'Aza'el was one of the "Sons of God" who fell from heaven; cf. b.Yoma 67a; 1En 6–8.

k. "Conspired to bring a complaint": Heb. qāšerū qategor; so A B C D Mus. For the same phrase see ARN A 2, ed. Schechter 5b: "The ministering angels conspired to bring a complaint against Moses." E F have here qāre'ū qategor = "recited a complaint." Note also Re'uyot Yehezqel, BM, vol. 2, p. 127, l. 9 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 105): "Ezekiel began to complain [hiṭhil qategor] before God."

l. Angelic opposition to man is an important theme of the Hekalot texts: see 1:3, 7: 2:1f.; 4:6f.; 6:2; 15B:2; Hekalot Rabbati 29:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 105); see "Theological Importance." Further, PRE 13. The hostility was shown supremely when the angels attempted to stop the Law being revealed to Moses: see 3En 15B:2, n. e; 48D:7.

m. "Your glory." E F Mus: "the glory of your name." A B.

n. "'Arabot": the seventh heaven; see "Theological Importance."

o. "Come and lodge." A F.

14 from their midst.^a •Then the ministering angels came, and the cohorts of the hosts, and the armies of 'Arabot, one thousand companies strong, and myriads of hosts. They took trumpets and seized horns and surrounded the Šekinah with psalms and songs, and it ascended to the heavenly heights, as it is written, Ps 47:5

God went up to the sound of horns,
the Lord went up with a fanfare of trumpets.

The Angels object to Enoch's elevation

1 6 R. Ishmael said: The angel Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:

When the Holy One, blessed be he, desired to bring me up^a to the height, he sent me Prince 'Anapi'el YHWH^b and he took me from their midst, before their very eyes, and he conveyed me in great glory on a fiery chariot, with fiery horses and glorious attendants,^c and he brought me up with the Šekinah to 2Kgs 2:11
4:3,5; 5:13

2 heavenly heights. •As soon as I reached the heavenly heights, the holy creatures, the ophanim, the seraphim, the cherubim, the wheels of the chariot and the ministers of consuming fire, smelled my odor 365,000 myriads of parasangs off^d; they said, "What is this smell of one born of a woman? Why does a white 21:1-4; 25:5-7; 26:9-12; 22:11-16;
19:2f.
Job 14:1; 15:14

3 drop^e ascend on high and serve^f among those who cleave the flames?"^g •The Holy One, blessed be he, replied and said to them, "My ministers, my hosts, my cherubim, my ophanim, and my seraphim, do not be displeased at this, for 2:2; 4:7
1:8

for all mankind has rejected me and my great kingdom and has gone off and worshiped idols. So I have taken up my Šekinah from their midst and brought it up^h to the height. And this one whom I have removed from them is the choicest of them allⁱ and worth them all in faith,^j righteousness, and fitting conduct. This one whom I have taken is my sole reward from my whole world under heaven."^k 4:3; 7 p. The removal of the Šekinah in 3En appears to be absolute and final: this would accord with the emphasis in Merkabah mysticism on the transcendence of God (see "Theological Importance"). In some rabbinic traditions it is taught that the Šekinah returned to earth from heaven at various points in history; see e.g. GenR 19:7; LamR proem 24; Pesiqta' deRab Kahana 1:1 (ed. Buber, 1b).

6 a. "To bring me up." A.

b. "'Anapi'el YHWH": an archangel. This same angel punishes Metatron in 16:5, and an etymology of his name is offered in 18:18. According to Hekalot Rabbati 23:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 100) he is one of the gatekeepers of the seventh palace. A variant form of the name—'Anap'el—is attested in Cairo Genizah Hekalot A/2, 45-49 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 367), but the parallel passage in Hekalot Zujarti (Bodleian MS 1531, fol. 45b) speaks of 'Anapi'el, as in 3En. The highest archangels all carry the tetragram YHWH as part of their names: see 10:3; 12:5, n. e.

c. "He conveyed me . . . glorious attendants." A; "he conveyed me on a great cherub with fiery chariots and fiery horses and glorious attendants." Mus. Enoch's translation is described in terms borrowed from the account of Elijah's translation in 2Kgs 2:11f.: see "Relation to Canonical Books."

d. "365,000 myriads of parasangs off." A. For the number see 9:5, n. f.

e. "One born of woman . . . a white drop": the language is contemptuous. The expression "one born of woman" is derived from Job 14:1 and 15:14, where it has a denigratory connotation: the angels are often represented as using it in derogatory reference to mankind. The "white drop" recalls m.Ab 3:1, "Akabya b. Mehalalel said: Consider . . . from which you have come— from a putrid drop!" See further b.Shab 88b; PR 20:4 (ed. Friedmann, 96b, ll. 27f.); LevR 14:2; Peṭirat Mošeh, BM, vol. 1, p. 287, l. 5; Ascens 9:1; 3En 48D:8.

f. "And serve." F; "and a gnat (come)." B.
g. "Those who cleave the flames": a name for the angels derived from Ps 29:7. "The voice of the Lord cleaves the flames of fire"; cf. Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 45, l. 10, where it is used of God's voice. The reading "those who cleave [hōsebē] the flames" is supported by A B C E F; D Mus. however, have "those hewn out of [hušūbē] flames": this form of the phrase is found in the early liturgical poets; see further 15:2 and 22B:6.

h. "My Šekinah . . . and brought it up." A.

i. "Choicest of them all." E Mus; "choicest in the world." A.

j. "Faith." A E F.

k. "From my whole world under heaven"; following the reading of Mus.

On the wings of the Šekinah

- 1 7 R. Ishmael said: The angel Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:
 When the Holy One, blessed be he, removed me from^a the generation of the Flood, he bore me up^b on the stormy wings of the Šekinah^c to the highest heaven and brought me into the great palaces^d in the height of the heaven of ‘Arabot, where the glorious throne of the Šekinah^e is found, and the chariot, the cohorts of wrath, the hosts of fury, the fiery šin’anim,^f the blazing cherubim, the smoldering ophanim, the ministers of flame, the lightning ḥašmallim and the flashing seraphim.^g He stationed me there to serve the throne of glory^h day by day.

The heavenly treasures

- 1 8 R. Ishmael said: Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me: Before the Holy One, blessed be he, set me to serve the throne of glory, he opened for me
- 300,000 gates^a of understanding,
 - 300,000 gates of prudence,
 - 300,000 gates of life,
 - 300,000 gates of grace and favor,
 - 300,000 gates of love,
 - 300,000 gates of Torah,^b
 - 300,000 gates of humility,

7 a. “From” (mibbên). C D Mus: “from the sons of” (mibbenê). A B E F.

b. “When the Holy one, blessed be he, removed me . . . he bore me up.” A C D F Mus.

c. “Wings of the Šekinah”: the proper context for this expression is conversion to Judaism; proselytes are said to be brought “under the wings of the Šekinah”: see b. Shab 31a; b. Yeb 46b; RuthR 5:4. (In LevR 2:9 backsliding Israelites are also said to be brought back “under the wings of the Šekinah.”) The phrase is derived from Ruth 2:12. Here it has been fancifully adapted; cf. b. Sot 13b: “Moses was borne to burial on the wings of the Šekinah.” Note also Hekalot Rabbati 2:4 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 84, l. 28). “I came to take refuge under the shadow of your wings,” which echoes Pss 36:7 and 57:1.

d. “Palaces.” AE = palatin, from the Lat. praetorium, “a palace, magnificent residence” (in post-Augustan usage). C has palatin, from the Lat. palatium, “a palace.” On the heavenly palaces see 1:1, n. d. and “Theological Importance.”

e. “The glorious throne of the Šekinah.” A B: “the throne of glory and the Šekinah (are found).” E F: “the glory of the Šekinah.” C D Mus.

f. “Šin’anim.” A B C E F Mus: “šetanim” (= “Satan,” “Accusers”), D.

g. “The cohorts of wrath . . . seraphim”: orders of angels; see margin and “Theological Importance.” The šin’anim are derived from the phrase ‘alpê šin’an in Ps 68:18 (English text 68:17). This is commonly interpreted to mean “thousands of repetition” i.e. thousands upon thousands, but an early Jewish exegetical tradition takes šin’an as a name for the angels; see Midraš Tehillim, ed. Buber, 159b (to Ps 68:18); Seper HaRazim 6:2 (ed. Margalioth, p. 104); and the Targum for the verse: the KJV follows this tradition: “thousands of angels.” See also 24:6.

h. “To serve the throne of glory”: cf. 48C:4 and Hekalot Rabbati 11:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 91). “The Angel of the Divine Presence enters to adorn and arrange the throne of glory, and to prepare a seat for the Mighty One of Jacob.”

8 a. These are the gates into the heavenly treasures; see “Theological Importance.” The list of treasures varies greatly from MS to MS; B has been followed. A D E F Mus all mention “300,000 gates of Šekinah”: see 1:11. Cf. 48D:2f. and Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 16: “5,000 gates of wisdom were opened to Moses on Sinai, corresponding to the five books of Torah; 8,000 gates of understanding, corresponding to the eight prophets; 11,000 gates of knowledge, corresponding to the eleven Writings.” The qualities stored in the treasures (“understanding, prudence,” etc.) correspond roughly (1) to the qualities by which the world was created (b. Hag 12a: “By ten things was the world created, by wisdom, by understanding, by knowledge, by strength, by rebuke, by might, by righteousness, by judgment, by grace, and by mercy”); and (2) to the qualities by which the world is sustained (see 41:2; m. Ab 1:2; Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 20). Note also the “seven qualities that minister before the throne of glory—wisdom, righteousness, justice, loving-kindness and compassion, truth and peace” (ARN A 37, ed. Schechter 55b).

b. “Torah”: see 48D:2f.; Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, pp. 43f.; perhaps cf. Col 2:3; contrast DeutR 8:6: no part of Torah was left in heaven when it was revealed to Moses on Sinai.

300,000 gates of sustenance,
300,000 gates of mercy,
300,000 gates of reverence.

- 2 Then the Holy One, blessed be he, bestowed upon me wisdom^c heaped upon wisdom, understanding upon understanding, prudence upon prudence, knowledge upon knowledge, mercy upon mercy, Torah upon Torah, love upon love, grace upon grace, beauty upon beauty, humility upon humility, might upon might, strength upon strength, power upon power, splendor upon splendor, loveliness upon loveliness, comeliness upon comeliness; and I was honored and adorned with all these excellent, praiseworthy qualities more than all the denizens of the heights. 10:6; 41:3

Enoch is enlarged

- 1 9 R. Ishmael said: Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me: In addition to all these qualities,^a the Holy One, blessed be he, laid his hand on me and blessed me with 1,365,000^b blessings. • I was enlarged^c and increased in size till I matched the world in length and breadth. • He made to grow on me 72 wings, 36 on one side and 36 on the other,^d and each single wing covered the entire world.^e • He fixed in me 365,000^f eyes and each eye was like the Great Light. • There was no sort of splendor, brilliance, brightness, or beauty in the luminaries of the world^g that he failed to fix in me. 21:1; 22:3; 25:4; 26:4 21:1.2; 26:5
Ezek 1:17; 22:8; 25:2

Enoch's throne

- 1 10 R. Ishmael said: Meṭaṭron, Prince of Divine Presence, said to me: After all this, the Holy One, blessed be he, made for me^a a throne like the throne of glory,^b and he spread over it^c a coverlet^d of splendor, brilliance, 16:1

c. "Wisdom": God bestows on Enoch the contents of the treasures. The MSS vary a little in the list of qualities; B is followed.

9 a. "In addition to all these qualities." A C F Mus.

b. "1,365,000." A E F; "1,305,000." B; "500,360." C D; "5,360." Mus.

c. "I was enlarged." D Mus. The vast size of the angels is a theme of 3En: see margin and b.Hag 13a; Ma'yan Hokmah. BHM, vol. 1, p. 58, l. 10; Gedullat Mošeh 4 (BM, vol. 1, p. 278). According to 48C:5, Meṭaṭron's height, in keeping with his supreme rank, is greater than that of all the other angels. In the Hekalot texts size conveys the idea of majesty and sublimity. It is found not only in the motif of the measurements of the angels, but in Ši'ur Qomah, the measurements of the body of God, and in the motif of the dimensions of the heavens (see 22C:2 and "Theological Importance").

d. "On the one side . . . on the other." B C E; "on the right side . . . on the left side." D. The number 72 corresponds to the number of the princes of kingdoms in 17:8; the idea may be that, as Prince of the World, Meṭaṭron is in charge of the princes of kingdoms; see 3:2.

e. "Covered the entire world." lit. "(was) the fullness of the world"; so A E F. For the expression see margin and Re'uyot Yebezeq'1, BM, vol. 2, p. 132 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 128): "The Prince . . . is the fullness of Zebul"; cf. Isa 6:3, "his glory fills the whole earth."

f. "365,000." A B E F; "500,360." C Mus; "5,360." D. The number 365 and multiples of it are common in the mystical texts; see e.g. 5:3;

6:2; 17:7. The number 365 is most obviously connected with the number of days in the solar year.

g. "In the luminaries of the world"; emending to še-bamme'ōrōt še-bā'ōlām.

10 a. "After all this . . . made for me." D; "All this the Holy One, blessed be he, made for me: he made for me." E F; "All this the Holy One, blessed be he, made for me." A B.

b. "A throne like the throne of glory": According to a dictum in b.Hag 15a no one is allowed to sit in heaven except God; cf. 3En 18:24 and GenR 65:21; LevR 6:3; y.Ber 2c.23; PR 22:6 (ed. Friedmann, 114a). Meṭaṭron, therefore, is highly privileged to have a throne. In Masseket Hekalot 7 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 46) the seven angels who were created first are said to sit in front of the curtain; note also the angels with thrones in Seper HaRazim 3:2-3 (ed. Margalioth, p. 92) and 5:4 (ed. Margalioth, p. 101).

c. "Over it." Mus; "over me." A B E F; see n. d.

d. "A coverlet": this is the natural sense of the word perās (usually spelled perās), if we follow Mus's reading "over it" (see n. c). For this meaning of perās see Masseket Šišit 2 (ed. Higger, p. 50): "Evening garments and bed-covers [pirsē mitāh] are exempt from fringes." On the other hand, if we adopt A B E F's reading "over me," the perās would presumably be a canopy; cf. NumR 10:4: "Pharaoh's daughter spread a sort of canopy [perās] above him (i.e. Solomon) and set therein all kinds of precious stones and pearls which glittered like constellations."

brightness, beauty, loveliness, and grace, like the coverlet of the throne of glory, in which all the varied splendor of the luminaries that are in the world is set.^c • He placed it at the door of the seventh palace and sat me down upon it. • And the herald^d went out into every heaven and announced concerning me: "I have appointed Metatron my servant^e as a prince and a ruler over all the denizens of the heights, apart from the eight great, honored, and terrible princes^b who are called YHWH by the name of their King.ⁱ • Any angel and any prince who has anything to say in my presence should go before him and speak to him. • Whatever he says to you in my name you must observe and do, because I have committed to him^j the Prince of Wisdom and the Prince of Understanding, to teach him the wisdom of those above and of those below, the wisdom of this world and of the world to come. • Moreover I have put him in charge of all the stores of the palaces^k of 'Arabot, and all the treasuries that are in the heavenly heights."

God reveals secrets to Enoch

1 11 R. Ishmael said: The angel Metatron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:

The Holy One, blessed be he, revealed to me from that time onward^a all the mysteries of wisdom, all the depths of the perfect Torah^b and all the thoughts of men's hearts. All the mysteries of the world and all the orders of nature^c

2 stand revealed before me as they stand revealed before the Creator.^d • From that time^e onward I looked and beheld deep secrets and wonderful mysteries.^f Before a man thinks in secret, I see his thought; before he acts, I see his act.^g • There is nothing in heaven above or deep within the earth concealed from me.^h

e. "All the varied splendor . . . is set," A E F Mus; "all the kinds of luminaries that are in the world are set," B C.

f. For the herald see Hekalot Rabbati 6:4 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 88); Haggadat Šema' Yisra'el, BHM, vol. 5, p. 165, l. 29; Cairo Genizah Hekalot A/2, 13 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 362); PR 33:10 (ed. Friedmann, 154b).

g. "My servant": for "servant" (ebed) as a title of Metatron see the margin. It is borne also by Surya', the Prince of the Divine Presence, in Hekalot Rabbati 13:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 93, l. 10), and by the angel 'Ozahyah in Cairo Genizah Hekalot A/2, 11 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 362). Its full form, "servant of the Lord" (ebed YHWH) occurs in Hekalot Rabbati 26:8 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 104, l. 17); cf. Isa 49:3. In one Merkabah text Metatron is referred to as the "beloved servant" (šammāšā' rehīmā'); see "Date."

h. "The eight great, honored, and terrible princes," A, and, substantially, D Mus.

i. "YHWH by the name of their King," A; "Yah, Yah, 'Ah, 'Ah by the name of their King," Mus; "YHWH like the name of their King," D. "Apart from . . . their King" appears to be a gloss aimed at demoting Metatron; see "Theological Importance." It is not stated who the eight princes are, but from 16:5 we may deduce that 'Anapi'el is one of them.

j. "I have committed to him" (mesartim lō), A; but B D E F have mešāreim lō = "(the Prince of Wisdom and the Prince of Understanding) (are) his servants."

k. "Palaces," C Mus; "palace," A D E F.

11 a. "From that time onward" (me'āz), A B E F; cf. n. e below; C D Mus have ma'yan = "the wellspring (of all the secrets of Torah)."

b. "Wisdom, all the depths of the perfect Torah," C Mus; "perfect wisdom," B. Torah has both its outer and its inner meanings: cf. m.Ab 6:1, "Whosoever engages in the study of Torah for its own sake merits many things . . . to him are revealed the secrets [rāzē] of Torah." The expression "perfect Torah" is derived from Ps 19:8 (English text 19:7); it occurs again in Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 14: "But for the perfect Torah the whole world would not endure; but for the whole world the perfect Torah would not endure."

c. "The orders of nature": Heb. sidrē berē'šit; so A C D Mus. For the phrase see b.Shab 53b: "Rab Judah observed: How difficult are man's wants that the orders of nature had to be changed for him"; further 3En 13:1; Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 13, l. 7; Hekalot Rabbati 9:5 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 91, l. 3). E has here "all the secrets [sitrē] of nature"; B F have "all the mysteries [rāzē] of nature."

d. "The Creator" (yōšēr berē'šit), A B C E F; "the Maker of all" (yōšēr hakkōl), Mus; "the Maker of the work of creation" (yōšēr ma'asēh berē'šit), D.

e. "From that time onward" (me'āz), E F; cf. n. a above. A B have me'ōd; C D Mus omit.

f. "Deep secrets and wonderful mysteries": emending to berāzīm 'amuqqim ūbesōdōt muplā'im.

g. "Before a man thinks . . . I see his act," A; "before a man thinks, I know his thought; before a man thinks in secret, I see his thought; before he acts, I know his act," C Mus.

h. It is a fundamental idea of 3En that Metatron knows all mysteries; see margin. His relationship to Ishmael is that of revealer of secrets.

Enoch's robe, crown, and name

- 1 12 R. Ishmael said: Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:
 Out of the love which he had for me, more than for all the denizens of the heights, the Holy One, blessed be he, fashioned for me a majestic robe,^a in 2 which all kinds of luminaries were set,^b and he clothed me in it. •He fashioned 9:5; 10:1
 for me a glorious cloak in which brightness, brilliance, splendor, and luster of 3 every kind were fixed, and he wrapped me in it.^c •He fashioned for me a kingly 16:1f.; 18:1 4 crown^d in which 49 refulgent stones were placed, each like the sun's orb, •and its brilliance shone into the four quarters of the heaven of 'Arabot, into the seven heavens, and into the four quarters of the world. He set it upon my head 17:3 5 and he called me, "The lesser YHWH"^e in the presence of his whole household 48C:7; 48D:1(90) in the height,^f as it is written, "My name is in him." Ex 23:21

The crown is inscribed

- 1 13 R. Ishmael said: The angel Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, the glory of highest heaven,^a said to me:
 Out of the abundant love^b and great compassion wherewith the Holy One, blessed be he, loved and cherished me more than all the denizens of the heights, he wrote with his finger, as with a pen of flame, upon the crown which was on my head, 18:25; 29:1; 39:1; 41:4
 the letters^c by which heaven and earth were created; 41:1
 the letters by which seas and rivers were created;
 the letters by which mountains and hills were created;
 the letters by which stars and constellations, lightning

12 a. "A majestic robe," D and, substantially, C; cf. 2En 22:8 (A and B); Alphabet of Meṭaṭron: "Meṭaṭron is clad in eight garments made out of the splendor of the Šekinah" (quoted from Odeberg). The eight garments here allude to the eight garments of the high priest (m. Yoma 7:5); for Meṭaṭron as the high priest of the heavenly sanctuary see 15B:1. Meṭaṭron's robe may be analogous to the robe (hālūq) of God; on this see Hekalot Rabbati 3:4 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 86, l. 1); 24:3 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 101, l. 15—reading hālūqō for hylwqō); Hekalot Zutarti (MS Bod. 1531, fol. 45a); see further 3En 16:1, n. a. However, it is a common idea that the celestials in general wear glorious garments; 1En 62:15; Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, pp. 33f.; see further 18:22, n. i2.

b. "In which all kinds of luminaries were set," A E F Mus and, substantially, D. C points to the reading "in which all the varied brightness, brilliance, and luster of the luminaries (was set)."

c. "And he wrapped me in it," A C D and, substantially, E Mus.

d. "A kingly crown": this probably corresponds to God's "terrible crown" (29:1). For crowned archangels see margin and Hekalot Rabbati 11:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 91). The crowns may be a sort of turban; see 16:2, n. f.

e. "The lesser YHWH": Meṭaṭron's most revealing name, given to him as God's vice-regent. 48B:1(44) has the corresponding divine title, "The greater YHWH." From the quotation of Ex 23:21 here and elsewhere, it is clear that the concept of the "lesser YHWH" arose through speculation about the angel of the Lord in whom God's name resides; see "Theological Importance," and 30:1, n. d.

f. "Household [pamalyā'] in the height":

Rabbinic texts refer to the angels in general, or the heavenly law court in particular, as God's "heavenly household" (pamalyā' šelema'alāh), in contrast to Israel or the sages—God's "earthly household" (pamalyā' šelema'āh). The use of the Lat. loanword familia suggests that there is an allusion to the familia Caesaris (see "Theological Importance"). Sometimes the Merkabah texts speak of "families" of angels (see "Relation to the Canonical Books"). See 16:1; 18:21; Cairo Genizah Hekalot A/1, 37 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 359); Perek mippirke hekalot, BHM, vol. 3, p. 161, ll. 7f.; Pe'irat Mošeh, BM, vol. 1, p. 287, l. 6; below 30:1, n. b.

13 a. "The glory of highest heaven": a title of Meṭaṭron repeated in 15:1; 16:1; and 24:1. In Hekalot Rabbati 6:3 (BM, vol. 1, p. 76, ll. 2–3) the archangel Segansag'el is addressed as "the glory of the splendor of the height."

b. "Abundant love," A C E F.

c. The twenty-two letters of the Heb. alphabet; cf. the "twenty-two seals" (B, "twenty-two letters") in 48D:5. The classic statement of this doctrine is in Sefer Yeširah 2:2 (ed. Gruenwald, Israel Oriental Studies 1 (1971) 148, no. 19): "The twenty-two letters: God carved them and shaped them, weighed them, changed them round and combined them and created with them the soul of all that has been created, and the soul of all that will be created." See also b. Ber 55a: "Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: Bezalel [Ex 31:2] knew how to combine the letters by which the heavens and the earth were created." For creation of the world by the letter beth see y. Hag 77c.41; GenR 1:10; for creation by the letters of the divine name Yah see b. Men 29b; Masseket Hekalot 7 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 46).

and wind, thunder and thunderclaps, snow and hail, hurricane and tempest were created;
the letters by which all the necessities of the world and all the orders of creation^d were created.

11:1

- 2 Each letter flashed time after time like lightnings, time after time like torches, time after time like flames, time after time like the rising of the sun, moon, and stars.

Enoch receives homage

- 1 14 R. Ishmael said: The angel Metatron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:

When the Holy One, blessed be he, placed this crown upon my head, all the princes of kingdoms who are in the height of the heaven of 'Arabot and all the legions of every heaven trembled at me. Even the princes of the 'elim, the princes of the 'er'ellim and the princes of the 'apsarim,^a who are greater than all the ministering angels that serve before the throne of glory, trembled and shrank from me when they saw me. • Even Samma'el, the Prince of the Accusers,^b who is greater than all the princes of kingdoms that are in the height, was afraid and shuddered at me. • Even the angel of fire, the angel of hail, the angel of wind, the angel of lightning, the angel of whirlwind,^c the angel of thunder, the angel of snow, the angel of rain, the angel of day, the angel of night, the angel of the sun, the angel of the moon, the angel of the stars, the angel of the constellations, who guide the world by their direction, trembled and shrank back in alarm from me when they saw me.

17:8; 18:2; 30:2

17:3

39:2

26:12; Job 1:6; Zech

3:1

- 4 These are the names of the princes^d who guide the world:

d. "The letters by which heaven . . . all the orders of creation." A Mus. A B Mus have "orders [sitrê] of creation"; E F. "secrets [sitrê] of creation"; see 11:1, n. c.

14 a. "'Elim . . . 'er'ellim . . . 'apsarim"; classes of angels. The 'elim are derived from passages such as Ex 15:11: "Who among the 'elim [JB, "gods"] is your like, Lord." The Mekilta deRabbi 'Išma'el paraphrases this: "Who is your like among those who serve before you in heaven" (Bešallah 8, ed. Horowitz-Rabin, p. 142, l. 14). Cf. also the use of 'elim in Ps 29:1; 89:7; Dan 11:36. The 'er'ellim are derived from Isa 33:7: "Look, the 'er'ellim [JB fn., "their brave men"] cry in the streets; the angels [JB, "ambassadors"] of peace weep bitterly." Tipsār, plural tipsārim, occurs twice in the Bible as a designation of rank: in Jer 51:27 JB translates it "officer," and in Nah 3:17, "scribe." In neither passage does there seem to be anything which could connect the word with the heavenly world. However, in the early synagogue poets (the paytanim) and in the Hekalot texts it was used of the angels, and in 3En it denotes a distinct order of angels. 'Er'ellim and 'apsarim are mentioned together in 39:2; Masseket Hekalot 5 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 43, l. 30) and 6 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 45, l. 11). For 'elim and 'er'ellim see Seder Rabbah diBere'sit, BM, vol. 7, p. 45, l. 7. 'Er'ellim on their own are found in b.Ket 104a; Midraš Kohen, BHM, vol. 2, p. 25, l. 20; Gedullat Mošeh 7 (BM, vol. 1, p. 179, l. 16).

b. "Samma'el, the Prince of the Accusers [šar hammas'inim]." A B: "Samma'el, the Prince of all the Accusers." C Mus: "Wicked Samma'el, the Prince of all the Accusers." F. Samma'el, the leader of the wicked angels, is one of the most important figures of talmudic and post-talmudic angelology. DeutR 11:10 describes him as "Head of the Accusers [šetānim]"': cf. 3En 4:6, n. j. In 26:12 he appears as the Prince of Rome, who, along with Dubbi'el, the Prince of Persia, acts as Satan's assistant in bringing accusations against Israel in the heavenly law court. His identification with the Prince of Rome, the great earthly adversary of Israel, is natural; cf. Hekalot Rabbati 4:5 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 87, l. 2). On Samma'el see also 3Bar 4:8; Ascens 11:41; b.Sot 10b; GenR 56:4; ExR 18:5; 21:7; PRE 13 and 46; Midraš "'Eלה 'ezkerāh." BHM, vol. 3, p. 66, l. 1.

c. "Whirlwind" (za'am): the Heb. word usually means "wrath," "anger," but in this context it must refer to a natural phenomenon; cf. the double sense of the semantically related word za'ap, which can mean either (1) "anger," "rage," or (2) "storm," "hurricane." For this latter sense of za'ap see vs. 4: "'Za'api'el, who is in charge of hurricane [za'ap]"': cf. Jonah 1:15 and m.Ta'an 3:8.

d. "The princes." A E F: "the angels." Mus. The list of angels is a secondary gloss on vs. 3. The angelic names here are composed of a stem which indicates the phenomenon over which the angel has control, plus the theophoric ending 'el; e.g. Ruḥi'el is rūah, "wind," plus 'el, "God"; see "Theological Importance." The only exceptions to this pattern are the names Šimšī'el and Gabriel, in which the stem does not correspond to the natural element which the angel rules; see nn. e and g below. For a similar list of angelic names see 1En 6:7; 8:3f.

- Gabriel,^e the angel of fire; Dan 8:16
 Baradi^{el}, the angel of hail;
 Ruḥi^{el}, who is in charge of wind;
 Baraqi^{el}, who is in charge of lightning;
 Za^{ami}^{el}, who is charge of whirlwind;
 Ziqi^{el}, who is in charge of comets; 42:7
 Ziⁱ^{el},^f who is charge of tremors;
 Za^{api}^{el}, who is in charge of hurricane;
 Ra^{ami}^{el}, who is charge of thunder;
 Ra^{aši}^{el}, who is in charge of earthquakes;
 Šalgi^{el}, who is charge of snow;
 Maṭari^{el}, who is in charge of rain;
 Šimši^{el},^g who is in charge of day;
 Laili^{el}, who is in charge of night;
 Galgali^{el}, who is in charge of the orb of the sun; 17:4
 ʾOpanni^{el},^h who is in charge of the diskⁱ of the moon; 17:5
 Kokabi^{el},^j who is in charge of the stars; 17:7
 Raḥaṭi^{el}, who is in charge of the constellations. 17:6
- 5 They all fell prostrate when they saw me and could not look at me because of the majesty, splendor, beauty, brightness, brilliance, and radiance of the glorious crown which was on my head. 12:3

Enoch is transformed into fire

- 1 *15 R. Ishmael said: The angel Metatron, Prince of the Divine Presence, the glory of highest heaven, said to me:
 When the Holy One, blessed be he, took me to serve^a the throne of glory, the 7 wheels of the chariot and all the needs of the Šekinah, at once my flesh turned 19:2
 to flame, my sinews to blazing fire, my bones to juniper coals, my eyelashes^b 22:4; 26:4
 to lightning flashes, my eyeballs to fiery torches,^c the hairs of my head to hot 9:2
 flames, all my limbs to wings of burning fire,^d and the substance of my body
 2 to blazing fire. •On my right—those who cleave flames of fire—on my left— 6:2 burning brands^e—round about me^f swept wind, tempest, and storm; and the roar of earthquake upon earthquake^g was before and behind me.

e. "Gabriel." A B E F. For Gabriel as the angel of fire see b. Pes 118a. Mus. however, has "Nuri^{el}," which corresponds more closely to the rest of the angelic names in the list; nūrā is the Aram. for "fire." See n. d above and n. g below.

f. "Ziⁱ^{el}": so A B E F, but the form of the name is probably corrupt. Perhaps read "Zewaⁱ^{el}" to correspond more closely to zewā'āh, "earthquake."

g. "Šimši^{el}." A B C E Mus: the name is derived from šemeš, "the sun"; cf. Gen 1:16. F has "Yomi^{el}" from yōm, "day."

h. "ʾOpanni^{el}." A E F Mus.

i. "Disk." E F; cf. 17:5; but A B Mus have "disks," presumably in reference to the phases of the moon.

j. "Kokabi^{el}." A F Mus.

15 * For chapter 15B see the Appendix.

a. "To serve." C D Mus; "in service to serve." A B E F.

b. "My eyelashes": Heb. 'ap'appay; so C D

Mus. The Heb. word basically means "eyelids," but this hardly fits the context here. It can also be used as a synonym for 'ēnayim, "eyes"; see Jer 9:17. The reading of A B E F, 'ōr 'ap'appay, demands the translation "the light of my eyes."

c. "Fiery torches." D E F; A B have the singular, "a fiery torch." Cf. the description of the transformation of Enoch here with the transformation of Moses in Gedullat Mošeh 2 (BM, vol. 1, p. 277).

d. "Burning fire." A C E F.

e. "Burning brands" (bō'arim lappidim). C D. Note the attributive adjective is in an unusual position before the noun. This is perhaps the best of the variant readings, but it does not supply a fully satisfactory complement to "those who cleave flames of fire." Should we read hōqe'ē lappidē 'ēš = "those who split firebrands [or "tongues of flame"]"? f. "Round about me." A Mus; "round about." B E F.

g. "Earthquake upon earthquake." A C E F Mus; "thunder upon earthquake." B.

Metatron dethroned

- 1 16 R. Ishmael said: The angel Metatron, Prince of the Divine Presence, the glory of highest heaven, said to me:^a
 At first I sat upon a great throne^b at the door of the seventh palace, and I judged 10:1
 all the denizens of the heights^c on the authority of the Holy One, blessed be 17:3
 he. I assigned greatness, royalty, rank, sovereignty, glory, praise, diadem, crown, and honor to all the princes of kingdoms, when I sat in the heavenly 10:3
 court.^d The princes of kingdoms stood beside me, to my right and to my left, 28:7-9 2 by authority of the Holy One, blessed be he. •But when 'Aḥer^e came to behold 1:1
 the vision of the chariot and set eyes upon me, he was afraid and trembled 1:7 before me. His soul was alarmed to the point of leaving him because of his fear, dread, and terror of me, when he saw me seated upon a throne like a king, with ministering angels standing beside me as servants and all the princes of 3 kingdoms crowned with crowns^f surrounding me. •Then he opened his mouth 12:3; 18:1
 4 and said, "There are indeed two powers in heaven!"^g •Immediately a divine 4 voice^h came out from the presence of the Šekinahⁱ and said, "Come back to 5 me, apostate sons—apart from 'Aḥer!" •Then 'Anapi'el^j YHWH, the honored, Jer 3:22 glorified, beloved, wonderful, terrible, and dreadful Prince, came at the com- 6:1
 mand of the Holy One, blessed be he, and struck me with sixty lashes of fire^k and made me stand to my feet.

16 a. Ch. 16 is probably a secondary addition to chs. 3-15: It runs counter to the whole tenor of the foregoing description of the role of Metatron, and is probably aimed at minimizing his powers: cf. the gloss at 10:3, and see further "Historical Importance" for evidence of concern over the powers of Metatron. Such a story would hardly have originated in the mystical circles responsible for the traditions in chs. 3-15; it must have come from elsewhere. Its most obvious source is the account of the humbling of Metatron in b. Hag 15a. The talmudic version of the story probably has priority over the one quoted here. Allusions to the humbling of Metatron and to many other ideas in 3-16 are found in Cairo Genizah Hekalat A/2, 13-18 (ed. Gruenwald, pp. 362f.): "A youth [na'ar] comes out to meet you from behind the throne of glory. Do not bow down to him—for his crown is as the crown of his King, and the sandals on his feet are as the sandals of his King, and the robe [ḥālāq] upon him is as the robe [ḥālāq] of his King . . . his eyes blaze like torches, his eyeballs burn like lamps; his brilliance is as the brilliance of his King, his glory is as the glory of his Maker—Zehobadyah is his name."

b. "A great throne." A C Mus. (A, in fact, reads, "a great throne of glory," but cancels "of glory.")

c. "Denizens of the heights." C Mus.; "denizens of the heights, the heavenly household," A B.

d. "The heavenly court [yešibāh]" : Metatron's court is analogous to God's heavenly law court (bēt dīn); cf. 28:7.

e. "'Aḥer." A B; "Elisha b. Abuya." Mus; "Elisha b. Abuya, and he stood behind YHWH." C. Elisha b. Abuya was a Palestinian scholar of the late 1st and early 2nd cents. A.D. He was one of the four who entered Pardes (b. Hag 14b;

"Historical Importance"). He came to be regarded as the arch-heretic and was referred to contemptuously as 'Aḥer. "Another." (For another explanation of the name see b. Hag 15a.)

f. "Crowned with crowns." lit. "bound with crowns." The Merkabah texts normally speak of "binding" in connection with the heavenly crowns: see 12:4; 16:2; 17:8; 18:25; 21:4; Hekalat Rabbati 3:2 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 85, l. 15); 11:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 91). The idiom is found also in b. Hag 13b: "Sandalpon . . . stands behind the chariot and binds crowns on his Creator." The "crowns" may be diadems or turbans, or else "bind" has magical significance.

g. "Two powers in heaven": i.e. Elisha denied the unity of God. The precise nature of the dualism involved in asserting that there are two powers in heaven is not clear: for the expression, see b. Ber 33b; b. Meg 25a; SifDeut 329 (ed. Finkelstein, p. 379); Mekilta' deRabbi 'Isma'el, Šīrāh 4 (ed. Horovitz-Rabin, p. 130), Yīrō 5 (p. 220). m. Sanh 4:5 (cf. b. Sanh 38a) mentions heretics who speak of many powers in heaven.

h. "A divine voice": Heb. bat qōl, the voice that on special occasions mysteriously announces God's will (b. Yoma 9b; b. 'Erub 13b; b. AZ 18a; b. Ber 61b).

i. "From the presence of the Šekinah." A C Mus; "from heaven, from the presence of the Šekinah." B.

j. "'Anapi'el." A Mus; on this angel see above 6:1, n. b. B has here "'Aniyel"; cf. the angel 'Ani'el in Zohar Pequdē 1.247b, and Seper Razi'el (Amsterdam, 1701) 5b, l. 12, and the angel 'An'el in Zohar Hadaš Yīrō 38b and Judah b. Barzillai's commentary on Seper Yeširah (ed. Halberstam [Berlin, 1885]) p. 247, l. 27.

k. In b. Yoma 77a Gabriel is punished with forty lashes of fire.

The princes of the seven heavens

- 1 17 R. Ishmael said: The angel Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, the glory of highest heaven, said to me:^a
 There are seven great, beautiful, wonderful, and honored princes^b who are in charge of the seven heavens. They are, Michael, Gabriel, Šatqi²el, Šahaqi²el, 35:1; 40:3 2 Baradi²el, Baraqi²el, and Sidri²el.^c • Each of them is a prince over a heavenly host, and every one of them is attended by 496,000 myriads of ministering angels.
- 3 Michael, the Great Prince, is in charge of the seventh heaven, the highest, 33:5; 38:1
 which is in ‘Arabot.^d Gabriel, Prince of the Host, is in charge of the sixth heaven, which is in 14:4
 Makon.
 Šatqi²el, Prince of the Host, is in charge of the fifth heaven, which is in Ma‘on.
 Šahaqi²el, Prince of the Host, is in charge of the fourth heaven, which is in Zebul.
 Baradi²el, Prince of the Host, is in charge of the third heaven, which is in 14:4
 Šehaqim.
 Baraqi²el, Prince of the Host, is in charge of the second heaven, which is 14:4
 in Raqia^c.^e
 Sidri²el, Prince of the Host, is in charge of the first heaven, which is in Wilon.^f
- 4 Under them is Galgalli²el,^g the Prince, who is in charge of the orb of the sun, 14:4
 and with him are 96 angels, mighty and honored, who make the sun’s orb run^h 9:5
 365,000 parasangsⁱ through Raqia^c every day.

17 a. Chs. 17–40, which form the third major division of 3En, contain the discourses of Meṭaṭron on the heavenly world. The material falls into three rough sections: Chs. 17–28/29 deal with the angelic hierarchies; chs. 29/30–33 describe the sessions of the heavenly law court; chs. 34–40 are concerned with the recitation of the celestial Sanctus. Once again disparate traditions have been combined: There are three originally distinct angelologies (the first in ch. 17; the second in ch. 18; the third in 19–22; 25:1–28:6) and several different accounts of the heavenly assize, and of the performance of the celestial Qeduššah. See further 18:1, n. a; 18:24, n. p2; 19:1, n. a; 23:1, n. a; 28:7, n. g; 29:1, n. a; 30:1, n. a; 34:1, n. a; 35:1, n. a.

b. “Seven . . . princes”: the idea that there are seven archangels is very old; see 1En 20 and 4QŠirŠabb. Cf. the “seven angels who were created first” in Masseket Hekalot 7 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 46, l. 30), and the seven Prōtoktistoi in Clement of Alexandria, Eclogae propheticae 57.1.

c. “Michael . . . Sidri²el”: the list of angels here and in vs. 3 follows A and, substantially, Mus. As usual, the vocalization of some names is uncertain.

d. On the seven heavens see “Theological Importance.” It is clear from the parallel passage in b.Hag 12b that, apart from Wilon (on which see n. f below), the various names of the heavens are derived by exegesis from Scripture.

e. “Which is in Raqia^c,” Lemb: “which is in the height of Raqia^c,” A B; “which is in Šamayim,” Mus.

f. “The first heaven, which is in Wilon,” Mus: “the first heaven, which is in Wilon, which is in Šamayim,” A. Wilon as a name for the first heaven appears to have originated among Babylonian Jews, whereas Šamayim is the standard Palestinian term. Wilon, derived from the Lat. velum, “curtain,” “veil,” denotes an ordinary door curtain in rabbinic Heb. (m. Kel 20:6; m. Neg 11:11). It would seem, then, that the first heaven is regarded as a sort of veil or curtain which either conceals the heavenly world from human eyes, or which, by being opened and shut, is the cause of daylight and darkness. b.Hag 12b describes its function thus: “It does not serve for anything, but enters in the morning and leaves in the evening and renews every day the work of creation” (cf. Midraš Konen, BHM, vol. 2, pp. 36f.; Seder Rabbah diBerešit, BM, vol. 1, p. 39; Baraita’ di Ma’ašeh Berešit, ed. Séd, A 70–72; B 58f.). Note also Midraš ‘ašeret hadibberot (BHM, vol. 1, pp. 63f.): “The Holy One, blessed be he, created seven heavens. The lowest of them is called Wilon and it is like a curtain [wilôn] drawn across the doorway of a house, so that those within can see those without, but those without cannot see those within.” See further, b.Ber 58b; ARN A 37 (ed. Schechter, 55b); Midraš Tehillim 19:6 (ed. Euber, 83a–b), and 114:2 (ed. Euber, 236a). On the other heavenly curtain, the pargód, see 3En 45:1, n. a.

g. “Under them is Galgalli²el”: The angels who move the heavenly bodies (Galgalli²el, ‘Opanni²el, Raha²iel, and Kokabi²el) are subordinate to the angels of the seven heavens.

h. “Make . . . run,” A Mus: “make descend,” B. The expression is repeated in vss. 5 and 7.

i. “365,000 parasangs”: an obvious multiple of the number of days in the solar year. In the astronomical passage in vss. 4–7 the heavenly

- 5 Under them^j is ʾOpanniʿel, the Prince, who is in charge of the globe of the moon, and with him are 88 angels^k who make the moon's globe run 354,000^l parasangs every night, whenever the moon stands in the east at its turning point. When does the moon stand^m in the east at its turning point? Answer: On the 15th day of every month.ⁿ
- 6 Under them is Rahatiʿel, the Prince, who is in charge of the constellations, and with him are 72 angels, great and honored. Why is his name called Rahatiʿel? Because he makes the constellations run 339,000 parasangs in their cycles and orbits^o each night, from the east to the west and from the west to the east. For the Holy One, blessed be he, made for them all, for the sun, the moon, and the constellations, a tent to move in^p by night from the west to the east.
- 7 Under them is Kokabiʿel, the Prince, who is in charge of all the stars, and with him are 365,000 myriads of ministering angels, great and honored, who make the stars run from city to city and from state to state in the Raqiaʿ of the heavens.
- 8 Above them^q are 72 princes of kingdoms in the height, corresponding to the 72 nations^r in the world. All of them are crowned with kingly crowns, clothed in regal dress, and decked with royal jewels.^s All of them ride on royal horses and grasp kingly scepters in their hands. Before each of them, when he travels through the Raqiaʿ, royal servants^t run, with great honor and much pomp, just as kings travel on earth in chariots attended by horsemen and great armies, in glory, greatness, praise, acclamation, and splendor.

14:4

Isa 40:22

9:2

Deut 4:19

30:2; 3:2; 48D:3

18:1

Zech 1:8

An angelic hierarchy

- 1 18 R. Ishmael said: Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, the glory of highest heaven, said to me:
The angels of the first heaven, when they see their Prince, they dismount from their horses^a and fall prostrate.

17:3

Zech 1:8

bodies are classified into four groups: sun, moon, constellations, and stars (i.e. planets). They are assigned to the second heaven (Raqiaʿ), and their orbits (in diminishing length) are given. In 46:1–4 and probably also in 5:8, the heavenly bodies are animate beings; here they are inert masses which the angels trundle through the heavens. For this latter idea see 1En 80:1; 4Ezra 6:3; 3Bar 6:2. Astronomy forms an element in some apocalyptic texts; see e.g. 1En 72–82. It is, strictly speaking, a motif of Maʿāseh Bereʿsit (see “Theological Importance”).

j. “Under them,” A Mus.

k. “88 angels,” A B; “85 angels,” Mus.

l. “354,000”: This figure is a multiple of the number of days in the lunar year (1 lunar month = 29½ days).

m. “When does the moon stand,” A Mus; “when does the moon sit,” B.

n. The words within parentheses are a gloss.

o. “In their cycles and orbits,” A.

p. “To move in,” A Mus.

q. “Above them”: either above the angels in charge of the heavenly bodies or above the angels in charge of the seven heavens. In favor of the former view is the fact that the princes of kingdoms, like the angels of the heavenly bodies, are here located in the second heaven. Note also 38:3, where the Prince of the World (who in 30:2 is said to be the leader of the princes of kingdoms) exercises authority over the heavenly bodies. In favor of the latter view is the fact that in 18:2 the princes of kingdoms are placed on the hierarchical ladder above the seven princes of the seven heavens.

r. “72 nations,” B; “70 nations,” A Mus. The division of mankind into seventy or seventy-two nations is based on a count of the names in the Table of the Nations in Gen 10. The normal rabbinic reckoning is seventy (b. Sukk 55b; NumR 14:12; Midraš Tehillim 68:6 [to Ps 68:12], ed. Buber, 159a; cf. m. Soṭ 7:5; b. Shab 88b), and this idea may be as old as 1En 89:59 (the “seventy shepherds”). However, there are variations: e.g. Midraš Haggadol to Gen 10:1 reckons sixty nations, but to Gen 10:32 speaks of seventy-two languages; normally the number of languages correlates with the number of nations in the world; see margin.

s. “Decked with royal jewels,” A and, substantially, Mus.

t. “Royal servants,” A Mus.

18 a. “Horses”: emending to sūsīm; A B have the singular “horse” (sūs). For angelic horsemen see Hekalot Rabbati 15:8–16:2 (BHM, vol. 3, pp. 94f.); Masseket Hekalot 4 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 46); Seper HaRazim 2:132f. (ed. Margalioth, p. 88). The angelology of ch. 18 was originally independent of that in ch. 17. Two differences are noteworthy: (1) Ch. 17 goes in descending order, from the highest angels to the lowest, but ch. 18 in ascending order; (2) the heavenly palaces are mentioned in ch. 18, but not in ch. 17.

- The Prince of the first heaven, when he sees^b the Prince of the second heaven, he removes^c the glorious crown^d from his head and falls prostrate. 12:3; 16:2
- The Prince of the second heaven, when he sees the Prince of the third heaven, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate.
- The Prince of the third heaven, when he sees the Prince of the fourth heaven, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate.
- The Prince of the fourth heaven, when he sees the Prince of the fifth heaven, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate.
- The Prince of the fifth heaven, when he sees the Prince of the sixth heaven, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate.
- The Prince of the sixth heaven, when he sees the Prince of the seventh heaven, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate.
- 2 The Prince of the seventh heaven, when he sees the 72 princes of kingdoms,^e he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate. 30:2
- 3 The 72 princes of kingdoms, when they see the guardians of the door^f of the first palace which is in 'Arabot, the highest heaven, they remove the kingly crowns^g from their heads and fall prostrate. 1:1
- The guardians of the door of the first palace, when they see the guardians of the door of the second palace, they remove their glorious crowns from their heads and fall prostrate.
- The guardians of the door of the second palace, when they see the guardians of the door of the third palace, they remove their glorious crowns and fall prostrate.
- The guardians of the door of the third palace, when they see the guardians of the door of the fourth palace, they remove their glorious crowns and fall prostrate.
- The guardians of the door of the fourth palace, when they see the guardians of the door of the fifth palace, they remove their glorious crowns and fall prostrate.
- The guardians of the door of the fifth palace, when they see the guardians of the door of the sixth palace, they remove their glorious crowns and fall prostrate.
- The guardians of the door of the sixth palace, when they see the guardians of the door of the seventh palace, they remove their glorious crowns and fall prostrate. 1:3
- 4 The guardians of the door of the seventh palace, when they see the four great and honored princes who are in charge of the four camps of the Šekinah,^h they remove their glorious crowns and fall prostrate. 1:6; 37:1

b. "When he sees." A Mus.

c. "He removes." A Mus.

d. "The glorious crown": Contrast the "kingly crowns" assigned to the two highest princes (vs. 25), and to the princes of kingdoms (vs. 3). Note also the "crown of holiness" in 22:5. For doffing the crown as a mark of homage see Rev 4:4, 10 and Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 61, l. 32.

e. "The 72 princes of kingdoms": see 30:2, n. e, and "Theological Importance." Like the number of nations in the world (see 17:8, n. r), the princes of kingdoms are usually reckoned as seventy in number: so e.g. 1En 89:59 (the "seventy shepherds"), and PRE 24: "The Holy One, blessed be he, descended with the seventy angels that surround the Throne of Glory, and they confounded their [i.e. men's] speech into seventy nations and seventy languages."

f. "The guardians of the door": These angels are given names in Hekalot Rabbati 15:2-7; 25:1 (BHM, vol. 3, pp. 94, 99); see also Ma'ašeh Merkabah 23 (ed. Scholem, p. 112); Masseket Hekalot 4 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 42, l. 29). Qaspi'el, the leader of the guardians of the seventh palace, is mentioned by name in 3En 1:3. See further "Theological Importance."

g. "Kingly crowns." A B: "glorious crowns." Mus. A B Mus, in fact, have the singular "crown" (keter), but A Mus give the plural kitré in vss. 4 and 5, and this should be read also in vs. 3.

h. "The four . . . princes . . . four camps of the Šekinah": Cf. 37:1, "four chariots . . . and . . . four camps of the Šekinah"; 35:3, angels grouped into four rows, with a mighty Prince at the head of each row; Masseket Hekalot 6 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 43f.). "Four companies of ministering angels utter praises before the Holy One, blessed be he. The first camp, on the right, is Michael's; the second camp, on the left, is Gabriel's; the third camp, in front of him, is 'Uri'el's; and the fourth camp, behind him, is Raphael's; and the Šekinah of the Holy One is in the middle." Further, PRE 4; 1En 40:8-10, the Four Presences, Michael, Raphael, Gabriel, and Phanuel; 2En 18:9 (A), the four ranks in heaven. See 1:6 n. i and 35:1, n. c.

- 5 The four great princes, when they see Tag'as,ⁱ the Prince, great and honored in song and praise at the head of all the celestials, they remove the glorious crowns from their heads and fall prostrate.
- 6 Tag'as, the great and honored Prince,^j when he sees Baraṭṭi'el,^k the great Prince, Dan 12:1
upon the tops of whose fingers 'Arabot is spread out,^l he removes the glorious 33:3 crown from his head and falls prostrate.
- 7 Baraṭṭi'el, the great Prince, when he sees Hamon, the great, terrible, honored, beautiful, and dreaded Prince, who makes all the denizens of the heights quake when the time comes to recite the Qeduššah, as it is written, "At the voice of 19:6; 35:5; 38:1 Hamon^m the peoples flee, when you arise, the nations scatter", he removes Isa 33:3
the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate.
- 8 Hamon, the great Prince, when he sees Ṭatrasī'elⁿ YHWH, the great Prince, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate.
- 9 Ṭatrasī'el YHWH, the great Prince, when he sees 'Aṭruḡi'el^o YHWH, the great Prince, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate.
- 10 'Aṭruḡi'el YHWH, the great Prince, when he sees Na'ariri'el^p YHWH, the great Prince, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate.
- 11 Na'ariri'el YHWH, the great Prince, when he sees Sasnigi'el^q YHWH, the great Prince, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate.
- 12 Sasnigi'el YHWH, the Prince, when he sees Zazri'el YHWH, the great Prince, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate.
- 13 Zazri'el YHWH, the Prince, when he sees Geburati'el YHWH, the Prince, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate.
- 14 Geburati'el YHWH, the Prince, when he sees 'Arapī'el^r YHWH, the Prince, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate.
- 15 'Arapī'el YHWH, the Prince, when he sees 'Ašroilu' YHWH, the Prince, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate.
- 16 'Ašroilu YHWH, the Prince, the head of every session of the heavenly academy,^s when he sees Galliṣur YHWH, the Prince, who reveals all the secrets of Torah,^t 48D:2-4 he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate.

i. "Tag'as": Many of the angelic names in this chapter occur again in Hekalot Rabbati 15 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 94). The vocalization of most of them is uncertain, and there are numerous variants. The forms followed in the text are those of B. The meanings of many of the names are obscure and some of them are undoubtedly corrupt. On the formation of angelic names see "Theological Importance."

j. "The great and honored Prince": This phrase is in Aram. In Dan 12:1 Michael is called "the great prince" but the title is in Heb.

k. "Baraṭṭi'el." B: "'Atati'el." A; "'Atapi'el." Mus.

l. "Upon the tops of whose fingers 'Arabot is spread out." Mus: "of three fingers in the height of 'Arabot, the highest heaven." A B.

m. JB: "At the sound of your throat." RSV: "At the thunderous noise."

n. "Ṭatrasī'el." A B; "Ṭutrasī'el." Mus. Variant forms of the name appear as names of God in Hekalot Rabbati 11:2 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 91); 12:3f. (BHM, vol. 3, p. 92); 13:2 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 93). The tatras element may be the Gk. tetras (= the number four); the reference could then be to the tetragram YHWH.

o. "'Aṭruḡi'el." B; "'Aṭarguni'el." Mus; "'Aṭruḡi'el." A.

p. "'Na'ariri'el." B; "'Na'aruri'el." A. Cf. Metatron's title Na'ar, on which see 4:10.

q. "Sasnigi'el": a variant of Metatron's name

Seganzag'el in 48D:1(93).

r. "'Arapī'el." A B; "'Nirpi'el." Mus.

s. "'Ašroilu." B; "'Ašroili." A; "'Ašroilai." Mus. Cf. the divine name 'Ašrawlun in Ma'ašeh Merkabah 31 (ed. Scholem, p. 115. l. 18), and the divine name 'Ašroili'i in Hekalot Rabbati 12:4 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 92). In Hekalot Rabbati 30:3 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 10. l. 17) 'Ašroili'i'el is the name of an angel.

t. "The head of every session of the heavenly academy." lit. "the head of every session [or "chapter"] of the denizens of the heights"; Heb. rō's kol pereq benē m'rōmim. The rabbinical Heb. perēq and the Jewish Aram. pirqā' can be used in the sense of a session of an academy; see b.Pes 100a: "I visited the session [pirqā'] of R. Phineas." Rō's happereq was a title of the heads of academies in the gaonic era. Lemb reads here "the head of the students of the heavenly academy" (rō's 'al benē pereq mer-ōmim); cf. b.Ket 62a. Mus omits the clause altogether. On the heavenly academy see "Theological Importance." It is possible, however, that the text means nothing more than "the most honored of the celestials"; cf. also DeutR 4:8. "we too are aware of your good deeds, and we have made you head of the chapter [rō's pereq]" (cf. y.Hor 48a.39-55; LevR 5:4).

u. "Galliṣur YHWH . . . who reveals all the secrets of Torah"; cf. PR 20:4 (ed. Friedmann, 97b): "Galliṣur . . . reveals the reasons of God [šur]."

- 17 Galliṣur YHWH, the Prince, when he sees Zakzaki'el YHWH, the Prince, who is appointed to record the merits of Israel upon the throne of glory, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate.
- 18 Zakzaki'el YHWH, the great Prince, when he sees 'Anapi'el' YHWH, the Prince, who keeps the keys of the palaces of the heaven of 'Arabot, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate. Why is his name called 'Anapi'el? Because the bough of his majesty, glory, crown, brilliance, and splendor overshadows^a all the chambers of 'Arabot,^y the highest heaven, like the glory of the Creator of the World. As it is written of the Creator of the world, "His majesty veils the heavens, and the earth is filled with his glory,"^{6:1; 16:5} so does the majesty and glory of 'Anapi'el YHWH, the Prince, overshadow all the chambers of highest 'Arabot.^{17:3}
- 19 'Anapi'el YHWH, the Prince, when he sees Šoteraš'el' YHWH, the great, terrible, and honored Prince, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate. Why is his name called Šoteraš'el? Because he is appointed to serve in the Divine Presence over the four heads of the River of Fire, opposite the throne of glory, and any prince who wishes to leave or to enter the presence of the Šekinah may do so only by his permission, because the seals of the four heads of the River of Fire^{a2} are entrusted to his keeping. Further, he is called Šoteraš'el because his height is 70,000 myriads of parasangs and he stirs up the fire of the River of Fire, and he leaves and enters the presence of the Šekinah to explain the records^{b2} concerning the inhabitants of the earth, as it is written, "A court was held and the books were opened."^{Hab 3:3}
- 20 Šoteraš'el YHWH, the Prince, when he sees Šoqedḥozi YHWH, the great, mighty, terrible, and honored Prince, he removes the glorious crown^{a2} from his head and falls prostrate. Why is his name called Šoqedḥozi? Because he weighs men's merits in scales in the presence of the Holy One, blessed be he.^{Gen 2:10; Dan 7:10}
- 21 Šoqedḥozi YHWH, the Prince, when he sees^{a2} Zehanpuryu^{a2} YHWH, the Prince, great, mighty, honored, glorified, and dreaded in the whole heavenly household, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate. Why is his name called Zehanpuryu? Because he is angry at the River of Fire and quenches it in its place.^{Dan 7:10}

v. "The merits of Israel." Mus: "the merits of Israel, which they perform." A B.

w. "'Anapi'el': The MSS vary between this form and "'Anap'el.'" The name is here connected with the word 'anāp, "a bough."

x. "Overshadows." A Mus.

y. "The chambers [hadrē] of 'Arabot," Mus. The concept of the heavenly "chambers" is similar to that of the heavenly "palaces"; see 1:1, n. d. The chambers may include the heavenly treasuries over which Metatron has charge; see 10:6. A B read "the glories [hadrē] of 'Arabot." "Glories" may refer to the angels; cf. Metatron's title "the glory [hadar] of highest heaven" (13:1).

z. "Šoteraš'el': The name is pointed thus in A B. The remaining angels of this ch. belong to the heavenly law court. Šoteraš'el is the accuser who stands for strict justice; he seeks to punish men by burning them in the River of Fire; Zehanpuryu is the defender who represents mercy; he quenches the River of Fire; Šoqedḥozi impartially weighs men's merits in the balance; 'Azbogah rewards those who have been adjudged righteous; Sopen'el YHWH and Soper'el YHWH are the two recording scribes of the court. Note that in the hierarchy mercy dominates over justice. On the heavenly law court see the margin and "Theological Importance."

a2. "The seals of the four heads of the River of Fire." A: "the seals of the four rivers of fire." B: "the seals of the River of Fire." Mus. The River of Fire is a standard motif in the descriptions of the Merkabah: it is derived from Dan 7:10. We find references to one River of Fire (A Mus and 36:1); four rivers of fire (B and 19:4; 37:1); and seven rivers of fire (33:4). The usual name for the River of Fire is Nehar diNir, which is taken from Dan 7:10, but it is also called Rigyon. The meaning of the latter name is uncertain. The bridges which span the River of Fire were a subject of speculation; see 3En 22B:1; 22C:1. On the River of Fire see 1En 14:19; GenR 78:1; b. Hag 14a; Hekalot Rabbati 13:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 93, l. 7); Ma'yan Hokmah, BHM, vol. 1, pp. 59f.; Seder Rabbah diBerešit 46 (BM, vol. 1, p. 45); Haggadat Šema' Yišra'el, BHM, vol. 5, p. 165, l. 20; Masseket Hekalot 6 (BHM, vol. 2, pp. 44f.); Ma'ašeh Merkabah 3 (ed. Scholem, p. 103); Seper HaRazim 7:7 (ed. Margalioth, p. 107); PR 20:4 (ed. Friedmann, 97a, l. 25). See further n. u2 below; 33:3, n. e. and 33:4, n. h.

b2. "To explain the records." A Mus.

c2. "The glorious crown." A Mus.

d2. "Šoqedḥozi YHWH . . . when he sees." A and, substantially, Mus: "and when he sees." B. For Šoqedḥozi see Ma'ašeh Merkabah (ed. Scholem, p. 108, l. 21); Cairo Genizah Hekalot B/1, 37 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 369).

e2. "Zehanpuryu." B: "Zehapnurai." A:

22 Zehanpuryu YHWH, the Prince, when he sees^{r2} ʾAzbogah^{s2} YHWH, the Prince, great, mighty, terrible, honored, glorified, wonderful, beloved, and dreaded among the princes who know the secrets^{h2} of the throne of glory, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate. Why is his name called ʾAzbogah? Because he girds men with garments of lifeⁱ² and in time to come he will wrap the righteous and pious of the world in robes of life, so that clad in them they may enjoy eternal life.

23 ʾAzbogah YHWH, the Prince, when he seesⁱ² the two great, sovereign, and honored princes who stand above him, he removes the glorious crown from his head and falls prostrate. These are the names of the two princes:^{k2} Šoperiʾel YHWH, who puts to death, the great, honored, glorified, pure, ancient, and mighty Prince; and Šoperiʾel YHWH, who makes alive, the great, honored,

24 glorified, pure, ancient, and mighty Prince. •Why is the name of the one called Šoperiʾel YHWH, who puts to death? Because he is in charge of the books of the dead, for he records in the books of the dead everyone whose day of death has come. Why is the name of the other called Šoperiʾel YHWH, who makes alive? Because he is in charge of the books of the living,ⁱ² for he records in the books of the living everyone whom the Holy One, blessed be he, is pleased to bring into life,^{m2} by authority of the Omnipresent One.ⁿ² So that you should not suppose that since the Holy One, blessed be he, sits on a throne, they too sit and write; Scripture states, “The whole host of heaven stood beside him.” It does not say, “host of heaven” but “the whole host of heaven,”^{o2} which only attend to the needs of the Šekinah while standing.^{p2}

27:2; 28:7; 30:2;
32:1; 44:9

45:1.6

1Kgs 22:19; 2Chr
18:18

25 But how can they write while standing?

The one stands upon wheels of storm; the other stands upon wheels of storm.^{q2}

The one is clothed in a royal robe;^{r2} the other is clothed in a royal robe.

12:1; 17:8

“Zehaptai,” Mus. A variant of this name appears as the name of the Prince of the Divine Presence in Hekalot Rabbati 17:5 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 96), and as the name of one of the gatekeepers of the seventh palace in Hekalot Rabbati 22:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 99).

i2. “Zehanpuryu YHWH . . . when he sees.” A and, substantially, Mus; “and when he sees.” B.

g2. “ʾAzbogah”: Like several other angelic names in 3En, ʾAzbogah also occurs as a secret name of God; see e.g. Hekalot Rabbati 30:4 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 107, l. 23), where it is called a “great seal.” It is explained in 3En as a kind of notarikon for “He who girds men with the garments of life” (ʾözēr bigdē hayyim); see n. i2 below. The original significance of the name, however, lay in the fact that it is made up of three groups of letters which each add up to eight; see “Date.”

h2. “The secrets,” A Mus; “the secret,” B. The reference is probably to the seven angels who serve within the curtain and are party to the deepest secrets of God; see Masseket Hekalot 7 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 46).

i2. “He girds men with garments of life,” A Mus; “he is girt with garments of life,” B. The “garments of life” and the “robes of life” are the immortal bodies which the righteous receive in heaven; cf. 1En 62:15, 16; AscenIs 9:9; 2Cor 5:1–5; 2En 22:8 (A B).

j2. “ʾAzbogah YHWH . . . when he sees.” A and, substantially, Mus; “and when he sees,” B.

k2. “These are the names of the two princes,”

A Mus. The various elements that make up the description of these two angels are almost all found elsewhere in 3En; see margin.

i2. “Books of the dead” and “books of the living”: In this context these books appear to record the moment when each man should be born, and the moment he should die. Usually, however, such books are supposed to contain the names of those destined for eternal perdition, and of those destined for immortality; see Dan 12:1f.; 1En 47:3; 108:3; Rev 3:5; 20:12.

m2. “Everyone whom the Holy One . . . is pleased to bring into life (leḥayyôt),” Lemb. It would be also possible to translate “. . . is pleased to raise from the dead”; see n. i2 above. A B have here: “everyone with whom the Holy One, blessed be he, is pleased in life.”

n2. “The Omnipresent One,” lit. “the Place” (ḥammāqôm). This is a common rabbinic name of God. It is explained in GenR 68:9: “He is the place of the world, but the world is not his place.” See also m. Taʿan 3:8; t. Naz 4:7. In 3En it is characteristic of chs. 40–48; see 44:3; 45:1, 6; 47:1, 4; 48A:1, 4, 5; 48D:8.

o2. “It does not say, ‘host of heaven’ but ‘the whole host of heaven,” A Mus.

p2. “. . . while standing”: It is a standard rabbinic idea that the angels do not, or cannot, sit; see 10:1. Vs. 25 is probably a secondary addition; the connection between it and vs. 24 is rather awkward.

q2. “Wheels of storm,” Lemb; “wheels of tempest,” A B Mus.

r2. “Royal robe,” A Mus; “robe of angels,” B.

The one is wrapped in a cloak of majesty; the other is wrapped in a cloak of majesty.

The one wears a kingly crown; the other wears a kingly crown.

The body of the one is full of eyes; the body of the other is full of eyes. 22:8; Ezek 1:18

The appearance of the one is like lightning; the appearance of the other is like lightning.

The eyes of the one are like the sun in its strength; the eyes of the other are like the sun in its strength.

The splendor of the one is as the splendor of the throne of glory; the splendor of the other is as the splendor of the throne of glory.^{s2}

The height^{u2} of the one is as the seven heavens; the height of the other is as the seven heavens. 17:3

The wings of the one are as the days of the year; the wings of the other are as the days of the year.

The wings of the one are as the breadth of a heaven; the wings of the other are as the breadth of a heaven. 9:3

The lips of the one are like the gates of the east; the lips of the other are like the gates of the east.

The tongue of the one is as high as the sea's waves; the tongue of the other is as high as the sea's waves.

From the mouth of the one flames issue; from the mouth of the other flames issue. 22:4

From the mouth of the one lightnings shoot out; from the mouth of the other lightnings shoot out.

From the sweat of the one fire is kindled; from the sweat of the other fire is kindled.^{u2} 33:4

The tongue of the one is a blazing torch; the tongue of the other is a blazing torch.

On the head of the one is a sapphire stone; on the head of the other is a sapphire stone. 26:5

On the shoulder of the one is the wheel of a swift cherub; on the shoulder of the other is the wheel of a swift chehub. 24:17

In the hand of the one is a burning scroll; in the hand of the other is a burning scroll.

In the hand of the one is a pen of flame; in the hand of the other is a pen of flame. 13:1; 29:1; 39:1; 41:4

The length of the scroll is 3,000 myriads of parasangs; the height of the pen is 3,000 parasangs;^{v2} and the height of each single letter that they write is 365 parasangs.

Rikbi'el, prince of the wheels

19 R. Ishmael said: The angel Meṭatron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:

Above these two great princes^a is a prince, distinguished, honored, noble, glorified, adorned, dreaded, valiant, mighty, great, magnified, potent, crowned, wonderful, exalted, pure, beloved, sovereign, proud, elevated, ancient, and

s2. "The splendor of the one . . . throne of glory." A and, substantially. Mus; B omits.

i2. "The height." A.

u2. "From the sweat . . . fire is kindled": Cf. the idea that the River of Fire is formed from the sweat of the creatures as they strain to carry the throne; see 33:3f.

v2. "3,000 parasangs." Mus; "3,000 myriads of parasangs." A B.

The connection with ch. 18 is awkward; note that B reads "Above these three angels." Chs. 19–22; 25:1–28:6 contain a new angelology which was originally independent of the angelologies in chs. 17 and 18; see 17:1. n. a. The three significant facts about this new angelology are: (1) It is concerned only with the Merkabah angels; (2) it lists those angels in ascending order of rank; (3) unlike the angelologies of chs. 17 and 18 it does not have a cosmological element.

19 a. "Above these two great princes." A Mus.

strong, without a peer among all the princes. His name is Rikbi'el^b YHWH, the great and terrible Prince. •Why is his name called Rikbi'el? Because he is in charge of the wheels^c of the chariot, and they are committed to his keeping. Ezek 10:3; 6:2; 15:1; 41:2

How many wheels are there? Eight—two for each direction. Four winds enclose them in a circle, and these are their names: Storm, Tempest, Hurricane, and Gale. •Four rivers of fire flow out from beneath them, one on each side. 18:19

Between them, forming a circle, four clouds stand, opposite their wheels.^d These are their names: Clouds of Fire, Clouds of Firebrand, Clouds of Glowing Coal, and Clouds of Brimstone. •The feet of the creatures rest on the wheels and between one wheel and another earthquake roars and thunder rumbles. • 21:1-4

When the time comes to recite the song,^e the multitude of the wheels trembles, the multitude of the clouds shudders, all the captains^f tremble, all the horsemen are agitated, all the valiant shiver,^g all the hosts quake, all the legions are afraid,^h all the overseers are terrified, all the princes and armies are alarmed, 18:7; 35:5; 38:1

all the ministers faint, all the angels and cohorts writhe in agony. •And one wheel utters a voice to another,ⁱ cherub to cherub, creature to creature, ophan to ophan, and seraph to seraph, saying, "Extol him who rides in the 'Arabot,^j Isa 6:3 whose name is the Lord, and exult before him."

Ps 68:4

Hayli'el, prince of the holy creatures

20 R. Ishmael said: The angel Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:

Above them^a is a great and powerful prince, Hayli'el^b YHWH is his name, a prince noble and terrible, a prince sovereign and mighty,^c a prince great and dreaded, a prince from whom all the celestials shrink back, a prince who is able

b. "Rikbi'el." A Mus. The construction of the angelic names in chs. 19–22 and 25–28 (apart from Radweri'el in 27:1) is transparent: They are made up of an element corresponding to the function of the angel plus the theophoric ending 'el. Thus Rikbi'el is rekeb, "chariot" (a synonym of merkābāh), plus 'el, "God." On the formation of the angelic names see 14:4, n. d, and "Theological Importance." However, since Rikbi'el is in charge of the "wheels of the chariot" (galgallē hammerkābāh), the name Galgall'el would have been more obvious; see 14:4; 17:4.

c. "The wheels" (galgallim) are derived from Ezek 10:13, where it is implied that they are the same as the ophanim. In the present angelological system they are different from ophanim; see 25:5–7. In the Hekalot texts the word galgal has several senses: (1) it denotes the literal wheels of the chariot (see 15:1; 41:2; Masseket Hekalot 7, BHM, vol. 2, p. 45, l. 20; this is probably the meaning here); (2) it denotes a class of angels (see 6:2; Masseket Hekalot 5, BHM, vol. 2, p. 43, l. 17); (3) it denotes the "orb" (galgal) of the moon, in contrast to the "globe" (ōpān) of the moon (see 17:4f.). In medieval Jewish texts the galgallim are the heavenly spheres; see e.g. Ibn Gabirol, Keter Malkut 14, l. 131, and cf. b.BB 74a.

d. "Between them . . . their wheels": The exact sense is obscure; "forming a circle . . . stand" is muqqāpin we'ōmedim in Heb., but the muqqāpin, "forming a circle," is redundant. Cf. b.Yoma 25a: "The chamber of hewn stone was built like a large basilica. The count [payis] took place on the eastern side, with the elder sitting on the west and the priests standing around [muqqāpin we'ōmedin in the form of a spiral": cf. 33:3; 34:1; 37:2.

e. "The song": the heavenly Qeduššah; see "Theological Importance." For commotion at the recitation of the Qeduššah see margin and Ma'yan Hokmah, BHM, vol. 1, p. 59, ll. 15–22.

f. "Captains . . .": The various names for the angels in vs. 6 are mostly derived from Scripture; cf. Masseket Hekalot 5 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 43).

g. "All the valiant shiver," A.

h. "All the legions are afraid," Lemb.

i. "One wheel utters a voice to another": Cf. Masseket Hekalot 7 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 45, l. 23): "A heavenly voice [bat qōl] stands beside one wheel, and a heavenly voice stands beside another wheel."

j. "In the 'Arabot," A Mus. The JB translates 'arābōt as "clouds": "Build a road for the Rider of the Clouds" (Ps 68:4). Rabbinic exegesis took it as a name for heaven, specifically the seventh heaven; see the Targum: "Praise him who sits on the throne of his glory in 'Arabot," and Midraš Tehillim 68:3 (to Ps 68:4) (ed. Buber, 158b). The KJV follows the rabbinic tradition: "Extol him that rideth upon the heavens."

20 a. "Above them": i.e. above Rikbi'el and the galgallim of ch. 19.

b. "Hayli'el": This name is supposed to be derived from hayyāh, "a creature" (for the hayyot, "the creatures," see ch. 21), but, in fact, it is derived from hayil, "an army." The term "armies" (hayālim) is sometimes applied to the angelic hosts; see 19:6.

c. "A prince sovereign and mighty," A Mus.

- 2 to swallow the whole world at one gulp. •Why is his name called Ḥayli'el?^a 21:1-4
 Because he is in charge of the creatures and he whips them with lashes of fire.^c 16:5
 He extols them when they utter praise and glory, and he makes them hasten 1:12; 35:1-36:2
 to say, Isa 6:3
- and, Holy,^f holy, holy,
 Blessed he the glory of the Lord in his dwelling place. Ezek 3:12

The holy creatures

- 1 21 R. Ishmael said: The angel Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:
 There are four creatures^a facing the four winds. Each single creature would fill the whole world.^b Each of them has four faces and every single face looks like the sunrise. •Each creature has four wings and every single wing would cover the world.^c •Each one of them has faces within faces and wings within wings.^d Ezek 1:5
 2 The size of a face is 248 faces, and the size of a wing is 365 wings. •Each 9:3
 3 creature is crowned with 2,000 crowns and every crown is like the rainbow; 33:4
 4 its brightness is as the brightness of the sun's orb^e and the rays which shine 16:2 from each separate crown are as the brightness of the morning star in the east. Gen 9:14; Ezek 1:28

Kerubi'el, prince of the cherubim

- 1 22 R. Ishmael said: The angel Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:
 Above them is a prince, noble,^a wonderful, mighty, praised with all manner of praise: Kerubi'el^b YHWH is his name, a valiant prince, full of boundless power; a majestic prince, with whom is majesty;^c a righteous prince, with whom is righteousness; a holy prince, with whom is holiness; a prince glorified by thousands of hosts, a prince extolled by countless legions. •At his wrath^d the earth quakes; at his rage the camps tremble; the foundations shudder from fear 18:4 2 of him and 'Arabot quakes at his rebuke. •His body is full of burning coals; 17:3
 3 it is as high as the seven heavens, as broad as the seven heavens, as wide as 9:2
 4 the seven heavens. •The opening of his mouth blazes like a fiery torch,^e and his 15:1
 tongue is a consuming fire. His eyelashes are as the splendor of lightning, his 16:2; 18:1,3 5 eyes like brilliant sparks, and his face looks like a blazing fire. •A crown of

d. "Ḥayli'el." Mus.

e. "Because he is in charge . . . lashes of fire." A and, substantially, Mus.

f. "To say, 'Holy.'" B; "to say after him, 'Holy.'" Mus; i.e. Ḥayli'el acts as the heavenly precentor (cf. 1:12); "to say after 'Holy' . . . Blessed . . ." A. On the celestial Qeduššah see margin and "Theological Importance."

21 a. "Creatures": Heb. ḥayyot, derived from Ezek 1:5; cf. the description of the ḥayyot in Masseket Hekalot 6 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 44).

b. "Would fill the whole world." lit. "is as the fullness of the whole world": for the expression see 9:3, n. e. On the vast dimensions of the angels in general see 9:1, and of the creatures in particular see b. Ḥag 13a.

c. "Would cover the world." lit. "is as the covering of the world": cf. n. b above.

d. "Faces within faces and wings within wings": Cf. Ezek 1:16, "a wheel within a wheel."

e. "The sun's orb." Lemb; "the orb." A B.

22 *For chapters 22B, 22C, 23, and 24 see the Appendix.

a. "Noble." A C Mus.

b. "Kerubi'el": According to 1En 20:7 it is Gabriel who is in charge of the cherubim.

c. "A majestic prince, with whom is majesty": emending to šar ge'eh weg'awāh 'immō; the MSS are corrupt.

d. "At his wrath." A C.

e. "The opening . . . a fiery torch." A. It is a common idea that the angels are formed out of fiery matter; see e.g. 2En 29:3 (A B); PR 33:10 (ed. Friedmann, 154a/b); Seper HaRazim 6:3-8 (ed. Margalioth, p. 104). The idea is derived from Ps 104:4. For other descriptions of the angels see Hekalot Rabbati 15:8-16:2 (BHM, vol. 3, pp. 94f.); Masseket Hekalot 4 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 42); Masseket Hibbut haqqeber 1 (BHM, vol. 1, p. 150); 2En 1:4f. (A B). See further "Theological Importance."

- holiness^f is on his head, with the sacred name^g engraved upon it, from which 6 lightning flickers. The bow of the Šekinah is across his shoulders; •his sword, like a lightning flash,^h is on his thigh; his arrows,ⁱ like lightning flashes, are in his belt; a breastplate of consuming fire hangs round his neck, and coals of 7 juniper encompass him. •The splendor of the Šekinah is on his face;^j horns of 8 majesty^k are on his wheels, and a royal turban crowns his head. •His whole 9 body is full of eyes;^l from head to toe he is covered with wings. •On his right hand a flame blazes; on his left hand fire burns; coals blaze from his body and firebrands shoot from him; lightnings flash from his face. He is always accompanied by thunderclap upon thunderclap; earthquake upon earthquake 10 are ever with him, •and the two princes of the chariot^m dwell with him. 1:7; 2:1 11 Why is his name called Kerubi'el?ⁿ Because he is in charge of the chariots of the cherubim^o and the mighty cherubim are committed to his keeping. He shines the crowns on their heads,^p and furbishes the diadems on their foreheads; 12 he promotes the praise of their form,^q and adorns^r their majestic beauty; he makes them, very lovely as they are, still lovelier, and increases their great glory;^s he sings the song of their praise, and recites the strength of their beauty; he makes their glorious splendor gleam, and the glory of their comeliness and grace he makes more fair; he decks their dazzling loveliness, and beautifies their gracious beauty; he honors their majestic rectitude, and extols the order of their praise—so as to prepare a throne^t for him who sits upon the cherubim. 1Sam 4:4; Ezek 10:1 13 The cherubim stand beside the holy creatures and their wings are raised up to the height of their heads. The Šekinah rests upon their backs, the splendor of the glory is on their faces,^u and song and praise are in their mouths. Their hands are under their wings and their feet are covered by their wings, and horns of glory are on their heads. The brilliance of the Šekinah is on their countenances, and the Šekinah rests upon their backs. Sapphire stones surround them; pillars 14 of fire are on their four sides; pillars of flame flank them. •A sapphire stone 22:7
 Isa 6:2
 22:7; 29:2
 18:25; 25:6,7; 26:5

f. "Crown of holiness": Cf. "glorious crown" of 18:1. and the "kingly crowns" of 18:3. For angelic crowns see 16:2.

g. "The sacred name," i.e. God's name par excellence—YHWH.

h. "His sword, like a lightning flash," A C; "his sword," B.

i. "His arrows": emending to hissāyw: "his arrow," A; "arrows," C.

j. "The splendor of the Šekinah": The sense probably is that Kerubi'el stands in full view of the Šekinah and its light is reflected from his face; cf. vs. 13 below, and note Ex 34:29. According to PR 16:2 (ed. Friedmann, 80a); 48:3 (ed. Friedmann, 194a), the angels draw nourishment from the radiance of the Šekinah.

k. "Horns of majesty" or "rays of majesty": Heb. qarnē hahōd; see margin and Masseket Hekalot 5 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 43, l. 24); Seper HaRazim 2:178f. (ed. Margalioth, p. 90). For the use of qeren in the sense of a ray of light see Hab 3:4 and note the verb qāran in Ex 34:29, 30, 35. (JB translates it "was radiant" and "shone.")

l. "His whole body," A; "his body," B C. For the "eyes" see margin and Hekalot Rabbati 22:5 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 100); 23:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 100); Masseket Hekalot 5 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 43, l. 23). Hekalot Rabbati 3:4 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 86, l. 7) speaks of "eyes" in God's robe (hālūq).

m. "The two princes of the chariot," A C; cf. Hekalot Rabbati 30:4 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 107.

l. 20); "Sarbi'el, one of the princes of the chariot": Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 36, l. 13.

n. "Kerubi'el," Lemb: "Kerubi'el YHWH, the Prince," A B C.

o. "Chariots of the cherubim," B; "chariots of the creatures," C. See 24:1, n. d.

p. With Kerubi'el's functions as described here cf. the angel who, according to Hekalot Zutarti (MS Bod. 1531, fol. 45a), "arranges the throne and clothes (the glory with) the garment, and adorns the hašmal, and opens the gates of salvation."

q. "The praise of their form," A.

r. "Adorns" (mehaddēr). Lemb.

s. "He makes them . . . great glory," Lemb: other texts are more or less corrupt.

t. "A throne": Heb. mōšāb. For the use of this term for the throne of glory see 4QŠirŠabb. mōšab kebōdō, "the seat of his glory": Hekalot Rabbati 2:4, mōšāb 'elyōn, "lofty seat"; so the text should read: BHM, vol. 3, p. 84, l. 25; BM, vol. 1, p. 70, l. 4; Masseket Hekalot 3 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 41, l. 20; BM, vol. 1, p. 56, l. 8) and Midraš 'Alpa' Betot, BM, vol. 2, p. 423, l. 15. mōšab yeqārō, "the seat of his honor": Seper HaRazim 7:32 (ed. Margalioth, p. 109), mōšab hadārō, "the seat of his splendor": cf. Hekalot Rabbati 10:1 (BM, vol. 1, p. 84, l. 1; BHM, vol. 3, p. 89, l. 28).

u. "The splendor of the glory is on their faces": See n. j above.

stands on one side and a sapphire stone on the other,^v and beneath the sapphires,^w 15 coals of juniper.^x • A cherub stands on one side and a cherub on the other, and the wings of the cherubim enfold each other in glory above their heads. They spread them^y to sing with them the song to him who dwells in clouds, and to praise with them the glory of the King of kings.^z 16 Kerubi²el YHWH, the Prince, who is in charge of them, marshals them into pleasing, fine, and beautiful array, and extols them with all kinds of praise, glory, and honor. He makes them haste with glory and strength to do the will of their Creator at every moment, for on top of their heads abides perpetually the glory of the high and exalted King^{a2} who dwells upon the cherubim.

Ezek 10:5
Ps 97:2

1Sam 4:4; Ezek 10:1

ʿOpanniʿel, prince of the ophanim

1 25 R. Ishmael said: The angel Metatron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:
 Above them is a prince, great, terrible, mighty, exalted, distinguished, dreaded, 2 ancient, and strong: ʿOpanniʿel YHWH is his name. • He has sixteen faces, four on each side, and 100 wings on each side. He has 8,766 eyes, corresponding 3 to the number of hours in a year, 2,191 on each side.^a • In each pair of eyes in each of his faces lightnings flash; from every eye torches blaze, and no one 4 can look^b on them, for anyone who looks at them is at once consumed. • The height of his body is a journey of 2,500 years;^c no eye can see it.^d No mouth can tell the mighty strength of his power,^e save only the King of the kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be he.
 5 Why is his name called^f ʿOpanniʿel? Because he is appointed to tend the ophanim,^g and the ophanim are entrusted to his keeping.^h Every day he stands over them and tends them and beautifies them: he praises and arranges their running;ⁱ he polishes their platforms; he adorns their compartments; he makes their turnings smooth, and cleans their seats. Early and late, day and night, he 14:4; 17:5

9:3

9:2

Ezek 1:15; 10:12f.

v. "A sapphire stone . . . on the other." A C.
 w. "The sapphires." A.
 x. "Coals of juniper." A C.
 y. "Enfold each other in glory above their heads. They spread them." C, substantially. The idea is that the cherubim sing by moving their wings; cf. Hekalot Rabbati 11:4 (BHM, vol. 3,
 p. 92, l. 11); Pesiqta' deRab Kahana 9:3 (ed.
 Mandelbaum, p. 151, l. 17); PRE 4 (end); 'Arugat habbošem, ed. Urbach, vol. 1, p. 213. The idea is based on Ezek 10:5. For the singing of the cherubim see 2En 19:6 (A B).
 z. "The King of kings." A.
 a2. "The glory of the high and exalted King."
 C; "the great glory of the King." B; "the glory of the great King" (?), A.

must cover the whole body (cf. 22:8 and vs. 6 below), since, according to vs. 3, there is only one pair of eyes in each face.
 b. "Can look." A E F; "can stand and look,"
 B.
 c. "A journey of 2,500 years": Measurements in terms of a year's journey are a variation on measurements by parasangs (5:7); see b.Hag 13a; Re'uyot Yehezqel', BM, vol. 2, p. 131 (ed.
 Gruenwald, p. 121).
 d. "No eye can see it." A.
 e. "Strength of his power." A E F.
 f. "Why is his name called." A E F.

25 a. "He has 8,766 eyes . . . 2,191 on each side": The MSS appear to be all more or less corrupt. "8,766." A = 3654 × 24; "8,769."
 E F; "8,466." B; "according to the number of," A E F. "Hours in a year" (še'ot yemot haššānāh) is a conjecture of Jellinek BHM, vol.5, p.178), which can be easily derived from the text of A E F (ššr to š'wr); cf. Masseket Hekalot 2 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 42): "In every palace are 8,766 gates of lightnings corresponding to the number of hours in the days of the year."
 "2,191" is read by all the MSS (though all add the unintelligible words "and sixteen" after it).
 However, 8,766 divided by 4 is 2191½. The eyes

g. "The ophanim": derived from Ezek 1:15 and 10:12f. In Ezek 10:13 the ophanim and the galgallim are identified, but they are usually distinguished from the galgallim in the Merkabah tracts, and taken as a distinct class of angels (see 19:2). The description of the ophanim in this passage is inconsistent: Vs. 6 speaks of them as living beings, but the language of vs. 5 ("their running," "their platforms," etc.) seems more in keeping with their original function as simply wheels or a wheeled vehicle. In 4QŠirSabb the ophanim appear to be literal wheels, but they are a class of angels in 1En 61:10; 71:7; 2En 29:3
 (B); b.RH 24b; Midraš Konen. BHM, vol. 2, p.
 25, l. 21.
 h. A B add "and he is appointed to attend the ophanim"; text follows E F.
 i. "Their running." A E F.

tends them, so as to increase their beauty, to magnify their majesty, and to make them swift in the praise of their Creator.

- 6 All the ophanim are full of eyes and full of wings, eyes corresponding to wings and wings corresponding to eyes. From them light shines, like the light of the morning star.^j Seventy-two sapphire stones are set in their garments, on the right side of each of them; seventy-two sapphire stones are set in their garments, on the left side of each of them, •and four emeralds^k are set in each one's crown, the brightness of which shines into the four corners of 'Arabat, just as the brightness of the sun's orb shines into the four corners of the world.^l Pavilions of brilliance, pavilions of splendor, pavilions of light, sapphire, and emerald envelop them, so that no one should see the appearance of their eyes and of their faces.^m

Šerapi'el, prince of the seraphim

- 1 26 R. Ishmael said: The angel Metatron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:
Above them^a is a prince, wonderful, noble, great, respected, mighty, lordly, a captain and a leader,^b glorified, honored, and beloved. •He is all full of brightness; all full of praise and radiance; all full of splendor; all full of light; all full of beauty; all full of loveliness; all full of greatness and magnificence.^c
3 His face is like the face of angels, and his body is like the body of eagles.^d
4 His brilliance^e is like lightning, his appearance is like firebrands, his beauty like lightning flashes, his majesty like fiery coals, his adornment like hašmallim,^f his radiance like the light of the morning star, his image like the greater light, his height as the seven heavens, the light of his eyes like sevenfold light.^g •The sapphire stone on his head is the size of the whole world and like the brilliance of the heavens themselves in clarity. •His body is full of eyes like the stars of heaven, beyond reckoning, without number, and each eye is like the morning star. Some of them are like the lesser light, some like the greater light. From his ankles to his knees they resemble stars of lightning; from his knees to his thighs, the morning star; from his thighs to his waist, the light of the moon; from his waist to his neck, the light of the sun; and from his neck to his forehead, "unfading light."
7 The crown on his head is radiant like the throne of glory, and the height of the crown is a journey of 502 years. There is no kind of radiance, no kind of splendor, no kind of brilliance, no kind of light in the world which is not placed

j. "All the ophanim . . . the morning star." E F, substantially.

k. "Emeralds," A: "sapphires," B.

l. A F (and B E in corrupt form) add a gloss: "Why is its name called 'emerald' [bāreqet]? Because its splendor is like the appearance of lightning [bārāq]."

m. "Pavilions of brilliance . . . their faces." A; E F omit "and of their faces." The "pavilions" shield the other angels from the destructive glare of the ophanim; see 29:2. Cf. the function of the clouds in 34:2, and of the parḡôd (see 45:1; 22B:6, n. g; "Theological Importance"). Note, too, how Gallisur shields the other angels from the River of Fire (PRE 4), and from the fiery breath of the creatures (PR 20:4, ed. Friedmann, 97b).

26 a. "Above them," A E F.

b. "A leader," E F; "a leader and a ready scribe," A B.

c. "All full of loveliness . . . magnificence," A.

d. "His face . . . the body of eagles": "Face" is demût, which denotes appearance or likeness in general. Here, however, it is contrasted with "body" (gûp), and so must have the restricted sense of the appearance of the face (demût pānāyw); cf. 35:2; 44:5; 47:4; and Ezek 1:10. For other descriptions of the appearance of angels see 22:4, n. e.

e. "His brilliance," A E F.

f. "Hašmallim": derived from the word hašmal in Ezek 1:27, where the JB translates it "bronze." In the Hekalot-Merkabah texts, however, hašmal denotes either (1) a heavenly substance of dazzling appearance (so here and in 36:2), or (2) an order of angels (so ch. 7; Midraš Koneh, BHM, vol. 2, p. 25, l. 1; Haggadat Šema' Yisra'el, BHM, vol. 5, p. 165, l. 17; Ma'yan Hokmah, BHM, vol. 1, p. 59, l. 25). In b.Ḥag 13b hašmal is taken as a kind of abbreviation (notarikon) for "the creatures speaking fire" (hayyôt 'eš memallelôt).

g. "Sevenfold light": from Isa 30:26. Cf. Seder Rabbah diBere'sit, BM, vol. 1, p. 47, l. 3; Seper HaRazim 7:1 (ed. Margalioth, p. 107).

- 8 in that crown. *Šerapi'el is the name of that prince, and the name of the crown on his head is "Prince of Peace." Why is his name called Šerapi'el?^h Because Isa 9:5 he is in charge of the seraphim,ⁱ and the seraphim of flame are committed to Isa 6:2 his care. He stands over them day and night and teaches them song, psalm, eulogy, might, and majesty, so that they might glorify their king with all manner of praise and sanctifying song.
- 9 How many^j seraphim are there? Four, corresponding to the four winds of the world. How many wings have each of them? Six, corresponding to the six days Gen 1 of creation. How many faces have they? Sixteen, four facing in each direction.^k
- 10 The measure of the seraphim and the height of each of them corresponds to the seven heavens. The size of each wing is as the fullness of a heaven, and the 9:2; 17:3 size of each face is like the rising sun. *Every one of them radiates light like 21:1 the splendor of the throne of glory,^l so that even the holy creatures, the majestic ophanim, and the glorious cherubim cannot look on that light, for the eyes of 21:1-4; 25:5-7; anyone who looks on it grow dim from its great brilliance. 22:11-15
- 12 Why is their name called seraphim? Because they burn the tablets of Satan.^m 14:2; Job 1:6; Every day Satan sits with Samma'el, Prince of Rome, and with Dubbi'el, Prince Zech 3:1f. of Persia, and they writeⁿ down the sins of Israel on tablets and give them to the seraphim to bring them before the Holy One, blessed be he, so that he should destroy Israel from the world. But the seraphim know the secrets of the Holy One, blessed be he, that he does not desire^o that this nation of Israel^p should fall. What, then, do the seraphim do? Every day they take the tablets from Satan's hand and burn them in the blazing fire that stands opposite the high and exalted throne,^q so that they should not come into^r the presence of the Holy One, blessed be he, when he sits upon the throne of judgment and judges 31:1; 33:1 the whole world in truth.

Radweri'el, the heavenly archivist

- 1 27 R. Ishmael said: The angel Metaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:
Above the seraphim is a prince, more exalted than all princes, more wonderful

h. "And the name of the crown . . . Serapi'el." A B: E F omit. Cf. God's crown which has the name Keter Nora' (29:1). "Prince-of-Peace" is a title of the Messiah in Isa 9:5.

i. "In charge of the seraphim." A E F: "in charge of the seraphim, and the holy seraphim." B. In Isa 6 it is the seraphim who sing the Qeḏuṣṣah, so it is natural that they should be regarded as singing angels. On the seraphim see 1En 61:10; 71:7; 2En 19:6 (A B); 29:3 (B); b.Hag 12b; RuthR 5:4; DeutR 11:10.

j. "How many." A E F.

k. "Four facing in each direction." E F.

l. "Every one of them . . . throne of glory." A E F.

m. "Why is their name . . . tablets of Satan." A B E; "Why is his name called Šerapi'el? Because he burns the tablets of Satan." F. Here Satan is the Prince of the Accusers, and his assistants are the princes of the two great political enemies of the Jews—Rome and Persia. For Samma'el see 14:2. n. b. Here he is an angel distinct from Satan; in some texts Samma'el is simply a name of Satan. For Dubbi'el see b. Yoma 77a. This name may be derived from the word dōb, "a bear," the symbol of the Persians (Dan 7:5; b. Meg 11a; b. Kid 72a; b. AZ 2b). Instead of "Dubbi'el" (which is read by A B), F has

"Dummi'el," for which angel see Hekalot Rab-bati 18:6 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 97); Seper HaRazim 2:91 (ed. Margalioth, p. 86); see further 3En 22C:5, n. m. For Satan see 23:16; 1En 53:3; 54:6. Note also the use of the root s/štn in 4:6; 14:2. 3En appears to be the only Merkabah text which mentions Satan by name. The context here is the heavenly law court (see "Theological Importance"). The accusers are excluded from God's immediate presence (cf. 1En 40:7) and so are not party to his innermost secrets. Their accusations are burnt by the seraphim and never reach God. This explanation of the name seraphim turns on the fact that the Hebrew root šrp means "to burn."

n. "And they write." B F: "and he writes." A E.

o. "That he does not desire." A E F.

p. "This nation of Israel." A: "this Israelite nation." B: "this nation of the Holy One, blessed be he, Israel." E and, substantially, F.

q. "High and exalted throne." A E: "high and exalted throne of glory." B F.

r. "So that they should not come into." E F: "so that he [Satan?] should not bring them into." A B.

than all ministers, Radweri'el^a YHWH is his name, and he is in charge of the 2 archives. •He takes out the scroll box^b in which^c the book of records^d is kept, and brings it into the presence of the Holy One, blessed be he. He breaks the seals of the scroll box, opens it, takes out^e the scrolls and puts them in the hand of the Holy One, blessed be he.^f The Holy One receives them from his hand and places them before the scribes,^g so that they might read them out to the Great Law Court which is in the height of the heaven of 'Arabot, in the presence 3 of the heavenly household.^h •Why is his name called Radweri'el? Because from every utterance that issues from his mouth an angel is formed,ⁱ and it joins in the songs^j of the ministering angels, and recites the song before the Holy One, blessed be he, when the time comes^k to say "Holy."^l

18:24; 28:7; 30:2;
32:1; Esth 6:1

18:23–25; 33:2

18:19–25; 28:9;
30–32

17:3

40:4

22B:8; 35–40

The Watchers and the holy ones

1 28 R. Ishmael said: The angel Metaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:

Above all these are four great princes called Watchers and holy ones,^a high, honored, terrible, beloved, wonderful, noble, and greater than all the celestials, 2 and among all the ministers there is none equal to them, for each of them singly is a match for all the others together. •Their abode is opposite the throne of glory, and their station is facing the Holy One, blessed be he, so that the splendor of their abode resembles the splendor of the throne of glory, and the 3 brilliance of their image is as the brilliance of the Šekinah. •They receive glory from the glory of the Almighty,^b and are praised with the praise of the Šekinah.^{22:7}

Dan 4:13,17

22:7

27 a. "Radweri'el." B Lemb (Lemb gives the pointing); "Dadweri'el." A; "Daryo'el." E; "Daryoi'el." F. The etymology of the name is completely obscure and the explanation of it in vs. 3 does not fit its form. The angel Vreveil in 2En 22:11, 12 (A B) and 23:6 (A B) performs a similar function to Radweri'el's.

b. "Scroll box": Heb. delūsqām šel ketābīm, lit. "box" or "chest of writings." The reference is probably to a kind of bucket or box (known as a capsa in Lat.) which was used in antiquity for storing scrolls. Delūsqām is the Gk. word glōssokomon (see Jn 12:6; 13:29). It is found a number of times in rabbinic texts (e.g. m.Gitt 3:3; b.Meg 26b); it sometimes means "sarcophagus" (see b.MK 24b).

c. "In which," Lemb.

d. "The book of records": For the expression see Esth 6:1. The book contains the record of all men's deeds and forms the basis of God's judgment in the heavenly law court (see "Theological Importance").

e. "Takes out," A E F.

f. "In the hand of the Holy One, blessed be he." A E F; "(and places them) before the Holy One, blessed be he." B.

g. "Before the scribes": emendation; "before him, before the scribes." A B; "before him into the hands of the scribes." E F. In 18:23–25 and 33:2 (E F) two scribes are mentioned; in 33:2 (A B) and Hekalot Rabbati 5:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 87, l. 9), only one. Maseket hibbut haqqeber. BHM, vol. 1, p. 150, speaks of "A scribe and one appointed with him." The majority ruling in m.Sanh 4:3 states that there should be two recording scribes in a court; R. Judah rules that there should be three. According to MSS A B to 26:1 Šerapi'el is "a ready scribe": Hekalot Rabbati 20:2 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 98, l. 19) designates Gabriel "the scribe"; Metaṭron is the heavenly scribe in b.Hag 15a and TarJon to Gen 5:24. With the scene as described here cf. the account of Moses and Aaron's audience with Pharaoh in Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 45, l. 24.

h. "Heavenly household": pamalya' šel-lemā'alāh—here used in the restricted sense of the members of the heavenly law court; see "Theological Importance."

i. "An angel is formed": This power is usually attributed to God; see 40:4.

j. "Joins in the songs," lit. "stands in the songs [šrōt]"; cf. the language of 40:4, "Each of them stands in song before his throne of glory." It is tempting to emend to "stands in the rows [šārōt]," in the light of 35:3; 36:2; cf. m.Pes 5:4, "The priests stood row upon row [šārōt šārōt]."

k. "When the time comes," A E.

l. That is, to recite the celestial Qeđušah; see "Theological Importance."

28 a. "Watchers and holy ones": derived from Dan 4:10, 14. The Watchers and the holy ones are a separate order of angels in the Merkabah texts (see e.g. Gedullat Mošeh 8, BM, vol. 1, p. 279), and in the early liturgical poets, the payanim (see Yannai's piyyut, 'Eḥād 'atāh 'amī yešibāk, ed. Zulay, p. 242, no. 101, l. 85), but apparently not in talmudic angelology (see the texts in n. c below). They play a notable part in 1En: There they are taken either as fallen angels (see 1En 1:5; 10:9, 15; 12:4; 13:10; etc.; 1QapGen 2:1, 16), or as angels close to God's throne (1En 12:2, 3; 20:1; 39:12, 13). In 3En they function in the context of divine judgment.

b. "From the glory of the Almighty [Gebūrāh]," A B; "from the glory of the Šekinah," E F. Gebūrāh, "the power," is a frequent title of God in the rabbinic texts; see b.Yeb 105b; b.Shab 88b; and cf. Mt 26:64.

- 4 Moreover the Holy One, blessed be he, does nothing in his world without first taking counsel with them; then he acts, as it is written, "Such is the sentence proclaimed by the Watchers, the verdict announced by the holy ones."^c Dan 4:17
- 5 There are two Watchers and two holy ones.^d How do they stand before the Holy One, blessed be he? It is taught that a Watcher stands on one side and a holy one on the other, and a Watcher stands on one side and a holy one on the other.^e •They abase the arrogant to the earth and exalt the lowly on high.^f 48C:9
- 7 Every day when the Holy One, blessed be he, sits on the throne of judgment and judges all the world,^g with the books of the living and the books of the dead open before him, all the celestials stand before him in fear, dread, terror, and trembling. When the Holy One, blessed be he, sits in judgment^h on the throne of judgment, his garment is white like snow, the hair of his head is as pure wool, his whole robeⁱ shines like a dazzling light and he is covered all over with righteousness as with a coat of mail. •The Watchers and the holy ones stand before him like court officers before the judge;^j they take up and debate every single matter and they close each case that comes for judgment before the Holy One, blessed be he, as it is written, "Such is the sentence proclaimed by the Watchers, the verdict announced by the holy ones." •Some of them decide the cases; some of them issue the verdicts in the great court in 'Arabot; some of them raise the questions in the presence of the Almighty;^k some complete the cases before the One Above,^l and some carry out the sentences on the earth beneath,^m as it is written,

Behold, a Watcher and a holy one came down from heaven.
At the top of his voice he shouted,
"Cut the tree down, lop off its branches,
strip off its leaves, throw away its fruit;
let the animals flee from its shelter and the birds from its branches."

Dan 4:10f. (MT)

- 10 Why are their names called Watchers and holy ones? Because they sanctify 16:5; 20:2

c. Cf. b.Sanh 38b: "The Holy One, blessed be he, does nothing without consulting his heavenly law court, for it is written, 'Such is the sentence proclaimed by the Watchers . . .'" Note, however, that in b.Sanh 38b the biblical "Watchers and holy ones" are taken as the whole heavenly law court, and not as a distinct class of angels; see n. a above and further Midraš Tehillim 119:35 (to Ps 119:89) (ed. Buber, 249a). For God consulting his angels see 4:6, and further GenR 8:4f.; LevR 29:1; Midraš Konen, BHM, vol. 2, p. 26, l. 30.

d. "Two Watchers . . . two holy ones": These numbers are hardly consistent with the functions the angels perform according to vss. 8f. 1En implies that the Watchers are numerous; cf. 1En 6:6; 10:9.

e. "It is taught . . . on the other," A: "It is taught that a Watcher stands on one side and a Watcher on the other, and a holy one stands on one side and a holy one on the other." B: "A Watcher stands on one side and a holy one on the other." E F. The E F reading implies that there is only one Watcher and only one holy one.

f. "They abase . . . the lowly on high": emended text. A B add before this: "They are always exalting"; and E F add, "They are always exalting the lowly." F subsequently omits "and exalt the lowly on high," thus avoiding the repetition. For the theme of humbling and raising see 48C:9 and Hekalot Rabbati 1:2 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 83).

g. With vs. 7 begins a section on divine judgment which (with the possible exception of ch. 29) runs to 33:5. Judgment takes place daily (cf. R. Yosi's view in t.RH 1:13), and is concerned with (1) adjusting affairs among the living (so vss. 8f.), and (2) with passing judgment on those who have just died (vs. 10). The concept of a final, eschatological judgment (for which see the fragment in BHM, vol. 6, pp. 152f.) is absent from 3En; see "Historical Importance" and "Theological Importance."

h. "Sits in judgment," A and, substantially, B F; "sits as a judge," E. The description is based on Dan 7:9; cf. 1En 47:3; 90:20; 4Ezra 7:33; Rev 20:11; LevR 29:3.

i. "His whole robe" (me'il). A E F. On God's "robe" (hālūq) see 12:1, n. a.

j. "Like court officers before the judge": See m.Kid 4:5 (with b.Kid 76b); t.Sanh 3:9; 8:2. Masseket Hekalot 7 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 46, l. 31) speaks of seven heavenly "court officers."

k. "The Almighty," A E F marg; see n. b above.

l. "The One Above" (Ma'alah): For this title of God see b.Ber 19a; m.RH 3:8.

m. "Some carry out the sentences," F; "some complete, descend, and carry out the sentences," A B.

the body and the soul with lashes of fire on the third day of judgment,^a as it is written,^o "After two days he will revive us, on the third day he will raise us and we shall live in his presence."

Hos 6:2f.

The names of the Watchers and the holy ones

1 29 R. Ishmael said: The angel Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:

Each one of them^a has seventy names corresponding to the seventy languages^{3:2; 17:8; 48D} that are in the world,^b and all of them are based on the name of the Holy One,^c 3:2; 48C:9 blessed be he. Every single name is written with a pen of flame^d upon the^{13:1; 39:1; 41:4} 2 terrible crown^e that is on the head of the high and exalted King. • From each^{26:8} of them sparks and lightning shoot forth; from each of them rays^f of splendor stream out, and from each of them lights flash; pavilions and tents of brilliance^e 25:7 surround them, for even the seraphim and the creatures, who are greater than all the celestials, cannot look on them.

The heavenly Law Court

1 30 R. Ishmael said: The angel Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:^a

Whenever the Great Law Court^b sits in the height of the heaven of 'Arabot,^c only the great princes who are called YHWH^d by the name of the Holy One,^{17:3; 10:3}

n. The reference here is to the "judgment of the grave" (din haqqeber), which each man undergoes when he dies; see Masseket bibbat haqqeber. 2 (BHM, vol. 1, pp. 150f.): "The ministering angels [= 3En's Watchers and holy ones] come . . . and smite him [i.e. the dead man] a third time and exact from him judgment, and judge him in respect of every quality the first day, and the second day likewise they judge him; the third day they judge him with blows." Cf. further BHM, vol. 5, pp. 49–51. On the lashes of fire see margin and cf. the "chain half-fire, half-iron" with which the Angel of Death beats the dead man (BHM, vol. 1, p. 151, ll. 1f.); also Ma'ašeh deRabbi Yehošua' b. Levi, BHM, vol. 2, p. 50, l. 33. The punishment is purgatorial, aimed at fitting men for God's presence.

o. "As it is written," A E.

29 a. "Each one of them": i.e. of the Watchers and holy ones. It is probable, however, that originally this ch. was an independent fragment which described another class of angels.

b. "That are in the world," A B; E F omit.

c. "Based on the name of the Holy One": See 3:2, n. c.

d. "A pen of flame," A E F; "an iron pen of flame," B.

e. "The terrible crown": Heb. keter nōrā', a technical name for God's crown. See Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 50, ll. 1–3: "R. Aqiba said, 'These are the 22 letters in which the whole Torah was given to the tribes of Israel, and they are written with a pen of flame upon the terrible and awful crown of the Holy One, blessed be he.'" Further, b. Hag 13b; PR 20:4 (ed. Friedmann, 97a); Ma'yān Ḥokmah, BHM, vol. 1, p. 59; Masseket Hekalot 7 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 46, l. 28). According to 26:8 Serapi'el's crown is called "Prince of Peace."

f. "From each of them rays," A E F.

g. "Brilliance" (nōgah), A B; "wisdom" (bināh), E; F omits.

30 a. Ch. 29 is intrusive (see 29:1, n. a), and so at an earlier stage in the evolution of 3En the account of the heavenly assize in chs. 30–33 probably followed directly on the account of the same subject in 28:7–10. The passage on the divine judgment in 28:7–10 forms the climax of the angelology of chs. 19–28. Different traditions have been combined in chs. 30–33: Contrast 31:1 with 33:1 (see 33:1, n. a); it seems very likely that each of the present chs. originally formed an independent unit of tradition.

b. "The Great Law Court" (Bêt dīn haqqā-dōl): The heavenly law court is called either Bêt dīn šelema'alāh or Pamalyā' šelema'alāh. For the equivalence of these expressions (in certain contexts) cf. the form of R. Yoḥanan's dictum in y. Sanh 18a.59 with that in b. Sanh 38b; see further 12:5, n. f. The heavenly law court is mentioned frequently in rabbinic texts: See y. Ber 14c.16; b. RH 8b; b. Makk 13b, 14a; b. Shab 21a; b. Ter 3a/b; b. Sanh 99b; GenR 12:1; EcclR 2:12:1; LevR 29:4. In 3En 30 the heavenly law court is said to meet at a fixed time daily; cf. 28:7 and contrast b. RH 16a, which speaks of judgment being passed on New Year's Day. The court is made up of the seventy-two princes of kingdoms: Contrast the accounts of the workings of the heavenly law court in 18:20–24; 26:12; and 28:7–9. See further "Theological Importance."

c. "In the height of the heaven on 'Arabot," A E F.

d. "The great princes who are called YHWH": i.e. the high archangels who, like 'Anapi'el YHWH (6:1), bear the tetragram as part of their names; see the margin and Hekalot Rabbati 22:1, 3 (BHM, vol. 3, pp. 99f.). Cf. Pesiqta' deRab Kahana 12:22 (ed. Mandelbaum, p. 221): "Resh Laqish said: There is a tablet upon the heart of every angel and the name of the Holy One, blessed be he, is engraved on it, together with

2 blessed be he, are permitted to speak. •How many princes are there? There are 72 princes of kingdoms^e in the world, not counting the Prince of the World, who speaks in favor of the world before the Holy One, blessed be he, every day at the hour when the book is opened in which every deed in the world is recorded, as it is written, "A court was held, and the books were opened." 17:8; 18:2f.; 26:12; 38:3; 18:24; Dan 7:10

Justice, Mercy, Truth

1 31 R. Ishmael said: The angel Meṭatron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:

When the Holy One, blessed be he, sits on the throne of judgment, Justice stands on his right hand, Mercy on his left,^a and Truth stands^b directly facing him. •When a man^c enters his presence for judgment,^d as it were,^e extends toward him from the splendor of Mercy and takes up a position in front of him. At once the man falls prostrate, and all the angels of destruction^f fear and shrink from him, as it is written, "His throne is established through Mercy and he sits upon it in truth." 33:1; 18:19–21; Ps 89:14; 32:1; 33:1; 44:2; Isa 16:5

that of the angel—Michael, Gabriel, Raphael"; see also Midraṣ Tehillim 68:10 (to Ps 68:17, "The Lord is in them") (ed. Buber, 160a). There is presumably a difference between being "called YHWH" and having a name "based on" the name YHWH (see 29:1; 3:2).

e. "Princes of kingdoms": See margin and "Theological Importance." For the idea that each nation has its angelic representative see Mekilta deRabbi 'Isma'el, Širah 2 (ed. Horowitz-Rabin, p. 124f.); ExR 21:5; LevR 29:2; DeutR 1:22; Song 8:14, 1; PRE 24; TarJon to Gen 11:7–18. The earthly Sanhedrin had only seventy or seventy-one members according to m.Sanh 1:6, but m.Zeb 1:3 and m.Yad 4:2 speak of "72 members of the college."

f. "The Prince of the World," A B E: "one Prince." F. If we take this vs. in conjunction with 10:3 it would appear that Meṭatron is the Prince of the World; see "Theological Importance."

31 a. "Justice [sedeq] . . . Mercy [hesed]" Cf. Ps 89:14: "Righteousness [sedeq] and Justice support your throne, Love [hesed] and Faithfulness are your attendants." The relationship between the divine attributes of "justice" (ḏin) and "compassion (raḥamim)" is a common problem of rabbinic texts; see b.Ber 7a; GenR 8:4; ARN A 37 (ed. Schechter, 55b). The name YHWH is linked with "mercy" and 'Elohim with "justice"; see SifDeut 26 (end) (ed. Finkelstein, p. 41); GenR 33:3; but contrast Mekilta deRabbi 'Isma'el, Širah 3 (ed. Horowitz-Rabin, p. 128, l. 6). For the conflict between Mercy and Justice in the divine judgment see 3En 18:19–21 and 33:1. Note further the idea of God's two thrones—one of Justice and one of Mercy (b.Hag 14a; b.Sanh 38b; b.AZ 3b; LevR 39:3). Mercy usually triumphs over Justice; Mekilta deRabbi 'Isma'el, Mišpaṭim 18 (ed. Horowitz-Rabin, p. 314); cf. t.Sot 4:1 and contrast GenR 26:6 (end). The procedures of the earthly Sanhedrin leaned to the side of leniency; see m.Sanh 1:6; 5:5. For hypostatization of the divine attribute of justice see b.Shab 55a; Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 50, l. 19 (cf. b.Sanh 97b; 103a; b.Pes 119a).

b. "And Truth stands." A E F.

c. "A man," B: "a wicked man." A E F.

d. "For judgment": presumably just after death; see 28:10.

e. "A staff, as it were": Heb. kemaqqel. The idea obviously is that Mercy extends to the man its protection, but the language is awkward. Perhaps read ziv for mizziv: "The splendor of Mercy extends towards him, like a staff, and takes up position in front of him." There appears to be an allusion here to a passage in b.Sanh 108a. b.Sanh 108a quotes Ezek 7:11: "Violence is risen up into a rod of wickedness [lemattēh reša']; none of them shall remain, nor of their multitude, nor of their wealth: neither shall there be wailing for them." Then it cites a comment of R. Eleazar on this obscure verse: "This teaches that violence erected itself like a staff [kemaqqel], stood before the Holy One, blessed be he, and said before him: 'Lord of the Universe, none of them shall remain, nor of their multitude, nor of their wealth: neither shall there be wailing for them!' " Violence personified is here seen as accusing the generation of the Flood in the heavenly law court; the staff is presumably a symbol of chastisement. In 3En 31, however, the idea has been transposed: The staff is now wielded by Mercy in the heavenly court and has become a symbol of protection. The connection between "violence" and "staff" in b.Sanh 108a must surely be original, since the connection was derived from Ezek 7:11. 3En 31 presupposes R. Eleazar's exegesis in b.Sanh 108a.

f. "Angels of destruction": mentioned frequently in rabbinic texts. They have two main functions: (1) to exact punishment from the wicked in this world; see 32:1; 33:1; b.Shab 55a, 88a; b.Pes 112b; Hekalot Rabbati 5:3 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 87); Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, pp. 50f. and p. 62, l. 3; cf. 1En 53:3; 56:1; 63:1; (2) to act as warders, torturers (and purifiers) of the souls in hell; see 44:2; b.Ket 104a; b.Sanh 106b; Masseket Gehinnom 1 (BHM, vol. 1, p. 147, l. 19); Midraṣ Koneh, BHM, vol. 2, p. 32; cf. 2En 10:3 (Vaillant 5). Ma'yan Hokmah (BHM, vol. 1, p. 58, l. 4) names Qemu'el as "the angel appointed over the 12,000 angels of destruction who stand at the gates of heaven." See also 3En 1:3, n. f.

The sword of judgment

1 32 R. Ishmael said: The angel Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:

When the Holy One, blessed be he, opens the book^a half of which is fire and half flame, the angels of destruction^b go out from his presence moment by moment to execute judgment against the wicked with the unsheathed sword of God,^c the brilliance of which flashes like lightning and passes through the world from end to end, as it is written,

For by fire will the Lord execute judgment, and by his sword, against all mankind.

Isa 66:16

2 All the inhabitants of the world are fearful before him when they see his sword sharpened and gleaming like lightning from one end of the world to the other,^d and rays and sparks shooting from it as big as the stars of heaven, as it is written, "When I have sharpened the lightning of my sword."

Deut 32:41

The heavenly assize

1 33 R. Ishmael said: The angel Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:

When the Holy One, blessed be he, sits on the throne of judgment, the angels of mercy stand on his right, the angels of peace stand on his left, and the angels

31:1

2 of destruction stand facing him.^a *A scribe stands below him and a scribe stands

31:2

3 above him.^b *Glorious seraphim surround the throne on its four sides with walls of lightning, and the ophanim surround them like torches, round the throne of

18:23f.; 27:2

glory,^c and clouds of fire and clouds of flame are round about them,^d to the right and to the left. Beneath them the holy creatures bear up the throne of glory,^e each with three fingers,^f and the height of each finger is 8,766 parasangs.^g

26:8-12

25:5-7

19:4; 34:1f.; 37:2

21:1-4

32 a. "When the Holy One, blessed be he, opens the book." A B: "When they open the book before the Holy One, blessed be he." E F. For fiery books see Seper HaRazim 7:7 (ed. Margalioth, p. 107).

b. "The angels of destruction": supplied; the texts simply say, "they (go out)": see 31:2.

c. "With the sword of God." lit. "with his sword"; so B; but A E F have, "and his sword" (which makes the construction of the sentence awkward). In Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 62, l. 4, the angels of destruction are said to wield a sword. The sword (hereb) of God is a common end-time image in the OT; see Deut 32:41; Isa 27:1; 34:5; 66:16; Ezek 21:3. Cf. the "great sword" that was given to the sheep (Israel) to wreak God's judgment on their enemies in 1En 90:19, 34; 91:11; see also 1En 88:2 and Rev 19:15. For God's sword in rabbinic texts see SifDeut 40 (ed. Finkelstein, p. 84); DeutR 4:2 (both cases sayip); Mahzor Vitry, ed. Hurwitz, p. 54, l. 13 (hereb). In GenR 21:9 the sword of Gen 3:24 is personified as fiery angels.

d. The language is reminiscent of descriptions of the end-time (cf. Rev 6:15f.), but the judgment is represented as taking place "moment by moment" (vs. 1).

33 a. "Angels of mercy [raḥamim] . . . angels of peace [šālôm] . . . angels of destruction [ḥab-bālah]" corresponding respectively to Mercy, Truth, and Justice in 31:1f. Here the agencies of mercy are on the right and those of justice on the left; there the position is reversed. For the conflict between Mercy and Justice see 31:1. For angels of mercy see Hikot hakkisse' (BM, add. 27199, fol. 139a): "211 myriads of angels of mercy are standing beside the Throne and they plead in favour of Israel" (quoted from Odeberg). The angels of peace are derived from Isa 33:7; cf. b.Hag 5b; 1En 40:8. For the angels of destruction see 31:2.

b. "A scribe stands below him and a scribe stands above him." E and, substantially, F: "a scribe stands above him and a cherub stands above him." A B.

c. "Glorious seraphim . . . round the throne of glory." A and, substantially, E F.

d. "Clouds of fire . . . are round about them [muqqāpim]" : The idea of concentric circles round the throne is treated more elaborately in ch. 34. Once again the precise sense of muqqāpim is obscure; see 19:4, n. d, and 34:1, n. b.

e. "The holy creatures bear up the throne of glory": See b.Hag 13b; GenR 78:1; LamR 3:23.8; and Ma'yan Hokmah, BHM, vol. 1, p. 60, ll. 1f., where it is stated that the River of Fire is formed from the perspiration of the creatures as they bear up the throne (see vs. 4 below and cf. 18:25).

f. "Each with three fingers." E margin; A B repeat "each with three fingers"; see 18:6, n. 1.

g. "8,766 parasangs": emendation. The MSS are confused: A has "8,766,000"; B, "800,766,000"; and E, "8,706,000"—all surely too large. The emendation is achieved by omitting the second 'alāpim.

4 From under the feet of the holy creatures seven rivers of fire^b flow out: the 18:19 breadth of each river is 365,000 parasangs; its depth is 248,000 myriads^d of 21:3 5 parasangs; its length cannot be reckoned or measured. •Each river flows round in an arc^e through the four quarters of the heaven of 'Arabot; then each one^k 17:3; 38:1
falls into Ma'on; from Ma'on it descends to Zebul; from Zebul to Šeḥaqim; from Šeḥaqim to Raqia'; from Raqia' to Šamayim; from Šamayim it falls on the heads of the wicked in Gehinnom, as it is written,

Now a storm of the Lord breaks,
a tempest whirls,
it bursts over the head of the wicked.

Jer 23:19

The circles round the creatures

34 R. Ishmael said: The angel Metatron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:^a

The hooves of the creatures^b are encircled^c by seven clouds of burning coal. 19:4; 33:3; 37:2
The clouds of burning coal are encircled by seven walls of flame.^d The seven walls of flame are encircled by seven walls of firebrands. The seven walls of firebrands are encircled by seven walls of hailstones.^e The seven walls of hailstones are encircled by seven walls of stones of hail. The stones of hail are encircled by stones of hurricane blasts.^f The stones of hurricane blasts are encircled by 37:2; 47:3 environs of flame. The environs of flame are encircled by the upper chambers of storm wind. The upper chambers of storm wind are encircled by fire and 42:7

h. "Seven rivers of fire": See 18:19, n. a2. For the notion that the fiery rivers fall on the heads of the wicked in Gehinnom see b.Ḥag 13b; Masseket Gehinnom 4 (BHM, vol. 1, p. 149, l. 7) and cf. 2En 10:2 (A), where the idea may have been linked with the Greek idea of Pyriphlegethon, one of the rivers of the Underworld (Homer, Odyssey 10.513; Plato, Phaedo 114a).

i. "365,000 . . . 248,000": 365 is the number of the negative commandments, and 248 the number of the positive (see b.Makk 23b; and cf. 3En 21:3). Such dimensions for the river of judgment are appropriate.

j. "In an arc": Heb. kemin kippāh, lit. "like a dome or a skullcap." The image is not clear. In GenR 4:5 and b.Meg 11a (end) kippāh denotes the vault of the heavens (cf. Midraš Konen, BHM, vol. 2, p. 33); in b.Yeb 80b it denotes the arc described in the air by spurring liquid. The closest parallel is Seder Rabbah diBere'sit, BM, vol. 1, p. 27, l. 22: "Some say that the world is round and the sea goes round the world like a skullcap [kemin kippāh]." There it means "in a circle." Note also b.Ḥag 14b: "The heavens became overcast and a kind of bow [kemin qešet] appeared in the cloud."

k. "Each one": emendation, reading kōl 'elḥād for B's unintelligible wk'l and A E F's wkh.

l. "'Arabot . . . Šamayim": The list of heavens agrees more or less with that in 17:3, but (1) Makon (the sixth heaven) has been accidentally omitted; (2) the first heaven here is Šamayim, but there it is Wilon (see, however, 17:3, n. f). See further "Theological Importance."

34 a. Ch. 34, which depicts the phenomena of heaven as arranged in concentric circles round the Merkabah (see n. c below), was linked to ch. 33 on the catchword principle: Cf. 34:1, "The hooves of the creatures," with 33:4, "the feet of the holy creatures." Ch. 34 ends with a reference to the celestial Qeḏuššah. This leads naturally into a section (chs. 35–40) concerned with the same subject.

b. "The hooves of the creatures": Heb. parsat raglê haḥayyōt; so A E F. But the singular parsat, "hoof," is rather odd; contrast the plural in t.Mik 5:1, parsōt raglê habbehēmāh, "the hooves of the animal"; note also Masseket Hekalot 6 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 44, l. 29), where again the plural is found. However, we find the singular in the phrase parsat haḥayyōt, which occurs in Hekalot Zutarti (MS Bodleian 1531, fol. 41a), and in Re'uyot Yehezque¹, ed. Gruenwald, p. 137 (BM, vol. 2, p. 133, l. 22, has a different text). The syntax of this chapter is confused in all the MSS. It is necessary to read throughout lipnē . . . muqqāpim, lit. "in front of X, Y forms a circle" (cf. 19:4, n. d; 33:3, n. d; 37:2, n. b). For the idiom see Maimonides, Yad. Hilkot Talmud Torah 4:2: "The teacher sits at the head, and the pupils in front of him form a circle [lepānāyw muqqāpim] like a crown." See also Masseket Hekalot 6 (BHM, vol. 2, pp. 44f.).

c. "Encircled": For the idea that heaven is arranged in concentric circles round the Merkabah see the margin and Masseket Hekalot 6 (BHM, vol. 2, pp. 44f.). In Midraš Konen (BHM, vol. 2, pp. 33f.) and Seder Rabbah diBere'sit (BM, vol. 1, pp. 30f.) this principle is extended to the whole cosmos.

d. "Walls of flame": Cf. 1En 14:9–16; 71:5; Masseket Hekalot 4 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 42).

e. "Hailstones": 'abnē 'elgābiš—an expression taken from Ezek 13:11, 13; cf. b.Ber 54b; Seder Rabbah diBere'sit, BM, vol. 1, p. 45, l. 7.

f. "Stones of hurricane blasts," lit. "stones of the wings of hurricane"—presumably another name for hailstones. For "wings of storm" see margin and Midraš Konen, BHM, vol. 2, p. 32 (bottom line).

2 water.^a • Fire and water are encircled by those who say “Holy.” Those who say “Holy” are encircled by those who say “Blessed.”^b Those who say “Blessed” are encircled by bright clouds. The bright clouds are encircled by coals of juniper. The coals of juniper are encircled by a thousand camps of fire and myriads of hosts of flame, and between each camp and each host a cloud stands, so that they should not burn each other with fire.

The camps of the angels

- 1 35 R. Ishmael said: The angel Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:^a
 The Holy One, blessed be he, has 496,000^b myriads of camps^c in the height of the heaven of ‘Arabot, and in each camp are 496,000 angels. • Every angel is as the Great Sea^d in height, and the appearance of their faces is like lightning; their eyes are like torches of fire; their arms and feet look like burnished bronze, and the roar of their voices when they speak is as the sound of a multitude.
- 3 They all stand before the throne of glory in four rows and mighty princes stand at the head of each row.^e • Some of them say “Holy” and some of them say “Blessed”;^f some run on missions and some stand and serve, as it is written,
- A thousand thousand waited on him,
 ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him.
 A court was held
 and the books were opened.
- 5 When the time comes to say “Holy,” a storm wind first goes out from the presence of the Holy One, blessed be he, and falls on the camps^g of the Šekinah, and a great storm arises among them, as it is written,
- Now a storm of the Lord breaks,
 a tempest whirls.
- 6 Thereupon a thousand thousand of them become sparks, a thousand thousand firebrands, a thousand thousand glowing coals, a thousand thousand flames, a thousand thousand males, a thousand thousand females, a thousand thousand winds, a thousand thousand blazing fires, a thousand thousand flames, a thousand thousand sparks, a thousand thousand ḥašmallim of light,^h until they accept the

g. “Fire and water.” A B: “walls of fire and water.” E F.

h. “Those who say ‘Holy’ . . . those who say ‘Blessed’ ”: i.e. the angels who recite the heavenly Qeḏuššah in the form of versicle and response; see margin and “Theological Importance.”

35 a. Chs. 35–40 contain an account of the performance of the celestial Sanctus by the angelic choirs. A number of internal contradictions suggests that diverse traditions have been combined (cf. 35:1; 37:1; and 40:1; see 40:3, n. h). It seems very probable that each of the present chs. was originally an independent unit of tradition.

b. “496,000.” A E F: “506,000.” B.

c. “Camps”: Cf. Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 21, l. 21: “1,018 camps stand before the Šekinah in the sanctuary which is in Šebaqim [= the third heaven, as in 3En 17:3], and say before him every day, ‘Holy,’ and in every camp are (1008) (?1018) myriads of ministering angels.” See further 1:6, n. i, and 18:4, n. h.

d. “The great sea”: either the Mediterranean (Num 34:6f.) or the primeval ocean (Midraš Konen. BHM, vol. 2, p. 32, l. 14).

e. “Four rows and mighty princes stand at the head of each row”: Cf. the four camps of the Šekinah and their respective princes in 18:4.

f. “Some of them say ‘Holy’ and some of them say ‘Blessed’ ”: i.e. they recite the celestial Qeḏuššah; see the margin and “Theological Importance.”

g. “Camps”: emending to mahanē: B has the singular mahanēh, for which see 1:6, n. i.

h. “Thereupon a thousand thousand . . . ḥašmallim of light.” A and, substantially, E F. Cf. GenR 21:9: “The angels turn about: sometimes they appear as men, sometimes as women, sometimes as spirits, sometimes as angels”: Midraš Haggadol to Gen 3:24 (ed. Margulies, p. 111); ExR 25:2; Yannai, Qerobot leSeper Berešit, ed. Zulai, p. 16; no. 5/8; ll. 118–22. Maimonides, Moreh Nebukim 1.49. In 40:3 and 47:1f. it states that the angels are punished for not reciting the Qeḏuššah properly, but here apparently they are disciplined before they have even begun to recite.

yoke of the kingdomⁱ of the High and Exalted One who created them all,^j in dread, in fear, in awe, with shuddering, quaking, anguish, terror, and trembling. Then they return to their original state.^k Thus the fear of their King is kept before them every hour, so that they should set their hearts to recite the song every hour, as it is written, "One called to another and said."^l

Isa 57:15
Isa 6:3

The angels bathe in the River of Fire

1 36 R. Ishmael said: The angel Metatron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:

When the ministering angels desire to recite the song, the River of Fire rises, and its fires increase in strength a thousand thousand and myriads of myriads of times,^a and it flows out from beneath^b the throne of glory between the camps^c of ministering angels and cohorts of 'Arabot. •All the ministering angels first go down into the River of Fire and bathe themselves^d in the fire of the River of Fire,^e and dip their tongues and their mouths seven times in the River of Fire, and afterward they get out and don garments of ḥašmal,^f and they stand in four rows over against the throne of glory in every heaven.^g

18:19; 33:4

2 1:6; 18:4; 35:1
17:3
2Kgs 5:10, 14
26:4
35:3
37:1

The four chariots of the Šekinah

1 37 R. Ishmael said: The angel Metatron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:

i. "The yoke of the kingdom": To accept "the yoke of the kingdom of heaven" is to acknowledge God's sovereignty. Cf. the Yošer prayer: "Be Thou blessed, O our Rock . . . Creator of ministering spirits, all of whom stand in the heights of the universe, and proclaim with awe and unison aloud the words of the living God and everlasting King . . . And they all take upon themselves the yoke of the kingdom of heaven" (Singer, pp. 39f.). Jews accept the yoke when they recite the Šema' (m.Ber 2:2; SifNum 115, ed. Horovitz, p. 126). The Šema' benediction, "Blessed be the name of his glorious kingdom for ever and ever" (t.Ta'an 1:13; b.Pes 56a), is introduced into the celestial Qeđuššah in 3En 39:2; cf. 48B:2.

j. "The kingdom of the High and Exalted One who created them all": Heb. malkūt rām weniššā' yōšēr kullām; so A E F. B has malkūt šamayim rām weniššā' yōšēr kullām. For rām weniššā' as a title of God see Isa 57:15 and Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 37, l. 11.

k. "Their original state," A E F.

36 a. A paraphrase of rather obscure Heb., following the A E F text. The idea appears to be that the River of Fire increases both in volume and intensity to provide more effective cleansing for the angels. Verbally the language recalls Dan 7:10.

b. "From beneath," A E F.

c. "The camps," A E F; "camp," B.

d. "Bathe themselves": a literal "baptism of fire"; cf. Seder Rabbah diBere'sit, BM, vol. 1, p. 46; Ma'yan Ḥokmah, BHM, vol. 1, p. 59; Hilkot Ma'akim, BM MS, Add. 27199, fol. 125a: "All the angels and all the camps bathe in fiery rivers seven times and restore themselves 365 times" (quoted from Odeberg). See further Seper HaRazim 7:16 (ed. Margalioth, p. 108);

'Arugat habbošem, ed. Urbach, vol. 2, p. 184 (cf. Perek mippirque hekalot, BHM, vol. 3, p. 162). Contrast Re'uyot Yebezqe'l (BM, vol. 2, p. 132; ed. Gruenwald, p. 126): "The angels stretch out their hands and take some fire from the River of Fire and cleanse their lips and their tongues" (note the echo of Isa 6:6f.).

e. "In the fire of the River of Fire," A E F; "in the fire," B.

f. "And don garments of ḥašmal": the text contains several unintelligible words. A (which is well supported by the other MSS) reads: welōbešin lebūš mḥmqy sml we'ōtepīn tply ḥašmal, "and don garments of . . . and wrap themselves in . . . of ḥašmal." All that it seems possible to say is that mḥmqy sml must conceal the name of a substance parallel to ḥašmal and tply a word corresponding to lebūš. Perhaps for the latter read me'ilē ("and wrap themselves in cloaks of ḥašmal"); cf. 17:8; 18:25; Seder Rabbah diBere'sit, BM, vol. 1, p. 46, l. 20; Seper HaRazim 7:16f. (ed. Margalioth, p. 108); Req-anati's quotation from Seper Hekalot in BHM, vol. 2, p. xvii.

g. "In every heaven": It is not clear whether this goes with "stand" or with "throne of glory." If it is construed with the former then the sense would be that the angels in every heaven line up facing the throne of glory in the seventh heaven. If it is construed with the latter then the sense would be that there is a throne of glory in each of the seven heavens, and that the angels stand facing the throne in their respective heavens. The second interpretation is supported by the tradition that there is a Merkabah in each heaven (see 37:1, n. a). According to Ascens 7:13-9:2 there is a throne in every heaven (except the sixth), though it is not clear whether these thrones belong to God, or to the angelic princes who rule over the various heavens (cf. 3En 17).

Four chariots of the Šekinah stand in the seven palaces,^a and before each of them stand four camps of the Šekinah. Between one camp and another a River of Fire flows along. •Between one river and another is a circle of bright clouds,^b and between each cloud^c pillars of sulfur stand fixed; between one pillar and another stands a circle of fiery wheels; between one wheel and another is a circle of tongues of flame; between one tongue and another is a circle of treasuries of lightning; behind the treasuries of lightning is a circle of hurricane blasts; behind the hurricane blasts is a circle of storehouses of storm; behind the storehouses of storm is a circle of winds, thunderclaps, thunders, and sparks; behind the sparks is a circle of tremors.^d

Cosmic commotion at the singing of the Qeduššah

1 38 R. Ishmael said: Meṭaṭron said to me:
When the ministering angels utter the "Holy," all the pillars of the heavens and their bases shake, and the gates of the palaces of the heaven of 'Arabot quiver; the foundations of the earth and of Šeḥaḳim shudder; the chambers of Ma'on^a and the chambers of Makon^b writhe, and all the orders of Raḳia',^c the constellations and the stars, are alarmed; the orb of the sun and the orb of the moon^d hurry from their paths^e in flight and, running backward^f 12,000 parasangs,
2 seek to fling themselves from heaven, •because of the thunder of their voices,^g and the sparks and lightning flashes that shoot from their mouths,^h as it is written,

Your thunder crashed as it rolled,
your lightning lit up the world,
the earth shuddered and quaked.

Ps 77:18

3 But the Prince of the World calls to them and says, "Stay at rest in your places; be not afraid because the ministering angels recite the song before the Holy One, blessed be he," as it is written,

When all the stars of the morning were singing with joy, and the Sons of God in chorus were chanting praise.

Job 38:7

Sacred names fly off from the throne of glory

1 39 R. Ishmael said: The angel Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:
When the ministering angels recite the "Holy," all the sacred names^a engraved 37 a. "Four chariots . . . in the seven palaces": Cf. Re'uyot Yebezeq'el, BM, vol. 2, p. 130 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 119): "The Holy One, blessed be he, created seven heavens and seven chariots in them." For a list of the chariots of God see ch. 24.

b. "A circle of bright clouds": The description in this chapter is confused and the problem is created once again by an obscure use of the verb nq̄p (cf. 19:4, n. d; 33:3, n. d; 34:1, n. b). Here two distinct formulae are employed: (1) "Between one X and another X, Y forms a circle [maq̄q̄ipim/muqq̄ipim]." (2) "Behind X, Y forms a circle [maq̄q̄ipim]." This second formula is found in Midraš Konen, BHM, vol. 2, pp. 33f.; Seder Rabbah diBere'sit, BM, vol. 1, pp. 30f. As in ch. 34 the idea appears to be of phenomena arranged concentrically around the Merkabah.

c. "Between each cloud" or "between each river." lit. "between each one": so A E F.

d. "Behind the sparks is a circle of tremors." E F.

38 a. "The chambers of Ma'on," A E F; "the orders of Ma'on," B. For the heavenly chambers see 1:1, n. d.

b. "The chambers of Makon," A B; "the palaces of Makon," E. Against E's reading is the fact that the palaces are usually located in 'Arabot; see 18:3 and "Theological Importance."

c. "Orders [sitrê] of Raḳia'," A B; "secrets [sitrê] of Raḳia'"; cf. 13:1, n. d.

d. "The orb of the sun and the orb of the moon," A E F.

e. "Their paths," A E F.

f. "Running backwards," A E F.

g. "Their voices," A E F; A B add (in asyndeton) "their chanting"; text follows E F.

h. "From their mouths," A E F; "from their faces," B.

39 a. "Sacred names": either (1) the name YHWH inscribed many times over on the throne (cf. 22:5); or (2) many different names, all permutations of the name YHWH (cf. 48B:1).

with a pen of flame on the throne of glory fly off like eagles,^b with sixteen wings, and encompass and surround the Holy One, blessed be he, on the four sides of the abode of his glorious Šekinah. •The angels of the host, the fiery ministers, the ophanim of power,^c the cherubim of the Šekinah, the holy creatures, the seraphim, the ʾerellim and ʾapsarim, the cohorts of flame and the cohorts of devouring fire,^d the ranks of firebrands, the hosts of flame, the holy princes,^e crowned with crowns, robed with royalty, covered with glory, girded with beauty, girt with magnificence, girdled with majesty, fall prostrate three times^f and say, “Blessed be the name of his glorious kingdom for ever and ever.”^g

25:5-7
22:11-16;
21:1-4;
26:8-12; 14:1
16:2
48B:2

The proper order for the Qeđuššah

40 R. Ishmael said: Meṭaṭron said to me:

When the ministering angels say “Holy” according to its proper order before the Holy One, blessed be he, the ministers of his throne and the servants of his glory go out with great joy from under the throne of glory. •Each of them has in his hands^a a thousand thousand and myriads of myriads of starry crowns like the brilliance of the morning star in appearance. They put them on the heads of the ministering angels and the great princes. Those that say “Holy” receive three crowns: one for saying “Holy,”^b one for saying “Holy, Holy,” and one for saying “Holy, Holy, Holy, YHWH of Hosts.”^c

Isa 6:3

Whenever they do not recite the “Holy” according to its proper order, devouring fire^d goes out from the little finger of the Holy One,^e blessed be he. It falls^f on their ranks, and splits^g into 496,000 myriads of parts corresponding to the four camps^h of the ministering angels, and devours them at a stroke, as it is written,

47:1
17:2
1:6; 18:4; 35:1

A fire precedes him as he goes,
devouring all enemies around him.

Ps 97:3

4 Then the Holy One, blessed be he, opens his mouth, and, with one word,

See margin and Alphabet of Aqiba. BHM, vol. 3, p. 25: “The seals of the Holy One, blessed be he, by which were sealed all the sacred names which are on the throne of glory.” See also the quotation from the Alphabet of Aqiba quoted in n. b below.

b. “Like eagles”: Cf. Alphabet of Aqiba. BHM, vol. 3, p. 26 (BM, vol. 2, p. 366): “But God revealed to Moses all the names, whether sacred names, or names engraved upon the kingly crown on his head, or names engraved upon the throne of glory, or names engraved upon the ring on his hand, or names which stand like pillars of fire around his chariots, or names which surround the Šekinah like the eagles of the chariot [cf. 3En 2:1], or names by which were sealed heaven and earth [cf. 3En 48D:5] . . .” See also b.AZ 18a (letters flying off from a burning Torah scroll); b.Pes 87b (letters flying from the tables of the Law). The angels are sometimes described as being like eagles; see 2:1; 24:11; 26:3; 47:4.

c. “The ophanim of power”: i.e. “the powerful ophanim” or “the ophanim of the Almighty [Gebūrāh]”: see 28:3, n. b.

d. “Cohorts of devouring fire”: emending to gedūdē ʾēs ʾōkelāh.

e. “The holy princes”: emending to šārim qedōšim.

f. “Fall prostrate three times.” A E F.

g. This is normally a response for the Šemaʿ, not the Qeđuššah; see “Theological Importance.”

40 a. “In his hands.” A E F. For crowned angels chanting the Qeđuššah see Seder Rabbah diBereʾšit, BM, vol. 1, p. 46, l. 19. Cf. the story of the crowning of Israel at Sinai in b.Shab 88a.

b. “One for saying ‘Holy.’” E F.

c. For a similar division of the Qeđuššah see Seder Rabbah diBereʾšit, BM, vol. 1, p. 47, and Seder Rab Amram Gaon, ed. Coronel 4b, pt. 1, p. 18a.

d. “Devouring fire”: Here the fire that punishes the angels proceeds directly from God; in 47:2 they are burned in the River of Fire. For punishment of the angels for wrongly reciting the Qeđuššah see Hekalot Rabbati 30 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 108); Seder Rabbah diBereʾšit, BM, vol. 1, p. 47; Reqanati’s quotation from Seper Hekalot in BHM, vol. 2, p. xvii; Hilkot Malʾakim, BM, MS Add. 27199, fol. 123a (the angels are lashed by Haiyiel with lashes of fire) (quoted from Odeberg).

e. “The little finger of the Holy One, blessed be he”: cf. margin and Midraš Konen, BHM, vol. 2, p. 25, l. 12. The measurement of God’s little finger is an element of Šiʾur Qomah; see “Historical Importance.”

f. “It falls” (wenōpelet), A E F.

g. “And splits.” A.

h. “Four camps”: Two ideas have been combined here: (1) that there are four camps (see 18:4; 37:1), and (2) that there are 496,000 myriads of camps (see 35:1).

creates new ones like them to take their place.ⁱ Each of them stands in song before his throne of glory and recites "Holy," as it is written,

Every morning they are renewed;
great is his faithfulness.^j

Lam 3:23

The cosmic letters

1 41 R. Ishmael said: Meṭaṭron said to me:^a

Come and I will show you^b

the letters^c by which heaven and earth were created;
the letters by which seas and rivers were created;
the letters by which mountains and hills were created;
the letters by which trees and grasses were created;
the letters by which stars and constellations were created;
the letters by which the orb of the moon and the disk of the sun, Orion and the Pleiades, and all the various luminaries of Raqia^c were created;

13:1; 48D:5

2 the letters by which the ministering angels were created;

17:3, 4, 7;

33:5; 38:1

the letters by which the seraphim and the creatures were created;^d

26:8–12

the letters by which the throne of glory and the wheels of the chariot were created;

21:1–4

19:2–4

the letters by which the necessities of the world^e were created;

the letters by which wisdom and understanding, knowledge and intelligence, humility and rectitude were created, by which the whole world is sustained.^f

8:1

3 I went with him and he took me by his hand, bore me up on his wings, and showed me those letters,^g engraved with a pen of flame upon the throne of glory, and sparks and lightnings^h shoot from them and cover all the chambersⁱ of 'Arabot.

13:1; 29:1; 39:1

17:3

The cosmic power of divine names

1 42 R. Ishmael said: Meṭaṭron said to me:

Come and I will show you where water is suspended in the height of Raqia^c;^a

Gen 1:6f.

i. "New ones like them to take their place." E F; "others, new ones, like them to take their place." A B. Angels are created in two ways: (1) from the utterance (dibbār) of God (see 27:3, n. i); (2) from the River of Fire. On the creation of the angels see b.Hag 14a: Re'uyot Yebezeq'1, BM, vol. 2, p. 132 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 126); ExR 15:6; GenR 78:1; LamR 3:23.8.

j. According to one view the angels endure only for a day and the creation of new ones each morning is a natural consequence of this fact, and not connected with the idea of them being punished for not reciting the Qeḏuṣṣah properly; see the references in n. i above.

41 a. Chs. 41–48A are the final section of 3En. They contain a series of revelations by Meṭatron to Ishmael, in which Meṭatron fulfills his function of disclosing secrets (cf. 48D:2f.). The characteristic formula of the section is: "Come and I will show you . . . I went with him and he took me by his hand, bore me up on his wings, and showed me." Chs. 41f. are cosmological and belong to Ma'aṣeh Bere'sit speculation. Chs. 43–44 and 46–47 are concerned with "souls." Ch. 45 interrupts this subject and may be a later intrusion. Chs. 45 and 48 have basically to do with the end-time. The book ends with a vision of the messianic age.

b. "I will show you." E F; "see." A B.

c. "The letters": the twenty-two letters of the Heb. alphabet; see 13:1, n. c; 48D:5.

d. "The letters by which the ministering angels . . . and the creatures were created. A E and, substantially, F; B omits.

e. "The world." A E F; "the worlds." B.

f. "Wisdom and understanding . . . by which the whole world is sustained": Cf. the heavenly treasures in 8:1.

g. "Those letters." A and, substantially, E F.

h. "Sparks and lightnings." A E F; "sparks." B.

i. "All the chambers [ḥadrê]." F (cf. 1:1, n. d; 38:1); "all the glories [ḥadrê]." A (cf. 18:18, n. y); "all the inhabitants [dārê]." B.

42 a. "In the height of Raqia'" (berûm rāqia'): Odeberg's conjecture for the reading of A B (brwm rmym); cf. vs. 2: "I saw water suspended in the height of the heaven of 'Arabot [berûm 'arâbôt rāqia']" and the Yoṣer prayer: "Creator of ministering spirits, all of whom stand in the height of the universe [berûm 'ôlām]" (Singer, p. 39). The reference is to the "upper waters," above the firmament (Gen 1:6f.); see Jub 2:4; TLevi 2:6, 7; GenR 2:4; 4:4, 5, 7; b.Pes 104a; b.Hag 15a; b.Ta'an 9b; Seder Rabbah diBere'sit, BM, vol. 1, p. 25. See also n. f below.

where fire burns in the midst of hail;^b
 where lightnings flash in the midst of mountains of snow;
 where thunders rumble in the highest heights;
 where flame blazes^c in the midst of burning fire;
 where voices can be heard^d above thunder and earthquake.^e

- 2 I went with him, and, taking me by his hand, he bore me up on his wings and showed me all these things. I saw water suspended in the height of the heaven of 'Arabot, through the power of the name Yah, I am that I am, and its fruits were descending from heaven^f and watering the surface of the earth, as it is written, 17:3 Ex 15:2, 3:14

From your palace you water the uplands, the earth is full of the fruit of your works.

Ps 104:13

- 3 I saw fire, snow, and hailstones enclosed^g one within the other, without one destroying the other, through the power of the the name A Consuming Fire, Ex 9:24
 4 as it is written, "For YHWH your God is a consuming fire." • I saw lightnings flashing in the midst of mountains of snow, without being quenched, through the power of the name Yah, YHWH,^h the Everlasting Rock, as it is written, Deut 4:24
 5 "Yah, YHWH is the everlasting Rock." • I saw thunders and voices roaring in the midst of flames of fire, without being overwhelmed, through the power Isa 26:4
 6 of the name Great God Almighty, as it is written, "I am God Almighty." • I saw flames of fire flaring and burning in the midst of blazing fire without being Gen 17:1
 7 swallowed up, through the power of the name A Hand upon the Throne of Yah, as it is written, "And he said: a hand upon the throne of Yah." • I saw rivers of fire in the midst of rivers of water, and rivers of water in the midst of rivers of fire,ⁱ through the power of the name He Keeps the Peace, as it is written, "He keeps the peace in his heights"^j; He keeps peace between fire and water, between hail and fire, between wind and cloud, between tremors and comets.^k Ex 17:16 18:19 Job 25:2

The souls of the righteous

- 1 43 R. Ishmael said: Meṭaṭron said to me:
 Come and I will show you the souls^a of the righteous who have already been created and have returned,^b and the souls of the righteous who have not yet

b. "Hail" (bārād), A B: "ʿabné ʿelgābiš," E F: For the E F reading see 34:1, n. e.

c. "Blazes," A and, substantially, E F.

d. "Voices can be heard," A B F: "his voice can be heard." E. The E reading makes an appropriate reference to the "still, small voice" (IKgs 19:12); see 4QŠirŠabb; Midraš Konen. BHM, vol. 2, p. 34, l. 14; Seder Rabbah di-Bereʿšit, BM, vol. 1, p. 30, l. 9, and p. 47, l. 11.

e. "Thunder and earthquake," A E.

f. "And its fruits were descending from heaven." A B: "and from it rain was descending." E F. Cf. b.Taʿan 10a: "The upper waters are suspended by the word of God and their fruits are the rain waters." There may be an allusion to the idea that the upper waters are masculine and the lower waters feminine: See 1En 54:8; GenR 13:13; Seder Rabbah di-Bereʿšit, BM, vol. 1, p. 25; Zohar I (Bereʿšit) 29b (end).

g. "Enclosed," A E: cf. Ex 9:24, "The hail fell, and lightning flashing in the midst of it."

h. "Yah, YHWH," A E F.

i. "And rivers of water in the midst of rivers of fire," A E F. For the juxtaposition of fire and water see 34:1; 2En 29:1f. (A): y.RH 58a.37; b.Hag 12a; GenR 4:9; 10:3; SongR 3:11.1.

j. "His heights": so MT: the MSS read "the heights."

k. "Tremors and comets" (ben zewā'im [= zewā'ōt] leziqim): The sense is not certain. The context demands two natural phenomena thought to be connected in some way. For comets as portending disasters see b.Ber 58b; Pliny, Naturalis historia 2.96f. Seneca, Quaestiones naturales 7. For ziq = "comet" see b.Ber 58b; ziq can also mean "a gust of wind": See b.Ber 60b, "a gust of wind [ziqā] came and put out the lamp." For the juxtaposition of ziqim and zewā'ōt see m.Ber 9:2 and b.Hull 86a.

43 a. "I will show you the souls," A E F: "Soul" here is nešāmāh; for the term see 47:1, n. a. On the ideas in chs. 43f. see, in general, "Theological Importance."

b. "Have returned": Cf. vss. 2f. For the abode of the righteous after death see b.Hag 12b, "'Arabot, in which are . . . the souls of the righteous and the spirits and souls which are yet to be created [i.e. to be born]"; b.Shab 152b, "The souls of the righteous dead are hidden under the throne of glory"; EcclR 3:21.1, "The souls of the righteous ascend after death and are placed in the divine treasury"; SifDeut 344 (ed.

- 2 been created.^c • He bore me up with him, and, taking me by his hand, he led me^d to the throne of glory^e and showed me those souls which have already been created and have returned, flying above the throne of glory in the presence of ^{46:2} the Holy One, blessed be he.^f • Then I went and expounded this verse, and found with regard to the text “The spirit shall clothe itself in my presence, and the souls which I have made,” that “the spirit shall clothe itself in my presence”^g ^{Isa 57:16} refers to the souls of the righteous^h which have already been created in the storehouse of beingsⁱ and have returned to the presence of God; and “the souls which I have made”^j refers to the souls of the righteous^k which have not yet been created in the storehouse.

The souls of the wicked and the intermediate

- 1 44 R. Ishmael said: Meṭatron said to me:
Come and I will show you where the souls of the wicked stand, and where the souls of the intermediate stand; whither the souls of the intermediate^a descend, and whither the souls of the wicked descend.^b
- 2 He said to me:
The souls of the wicked are brought down to Sheol^c by two angels of destruction, ^{31:2}

Finkelstein, p. 401); ARN A 12 (ed. Schechter, 25b); Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 26, l. 25, “the treasuries of spirits and the treasuries of the souls of the living and of the dead”; Sefer HaRazim 6:1f. (ed. Margalioth, p. 104); 7:2f. (p. 107). Contrast the “treasuries/chambers” in which the souls of the righteous are kept in Sheol till the resurrection according to 2Bar 21:23; 30:2; 4Ezra 4:35, 42; 7:32, 80, 95; cf. 1En 22:2f.

c. The pre-existence of the soul is implied throughout this chapter. There are three possible explanations why unborn souls may be called “righteous”: (1) Souls may be created “righteous” and “unrighteous”; see WisSol 8:19f.; 4Mac 18:23; GenR 8:7; cf. b.BB 16a, “God creates both the righteous and the wicked.” (2) Unborn souls may be designated as “righteous” by God in virtue of his foreknowledge of the righteous lives they live on earth; so GenR 8:7 (on another interpretation). (3) “Righteous” may be loosely used to express the idea that all souls before birth are pure; see b.Shab 152b; EcclR 12:7.1; and the benediction ‘Elôhay nešâmâh, recited on waking from sleep: “O my God, the soul which thou gavest me is pure” (Singer, p. 5; cf. b.Ber 60b).

d. “He led me.” E F; “he bore me up.” A B.

e. “To the throne of glory”: A B add “to the abode of the Šekinah, and he revealed to the throne of glory.” The text follows E F.

f. Ishmael is not shown the unborn souls as promised in vs. 1. There may be a lacuna in the text.

g. “That ‘the spirit shall clothe itself in my presence,’” A F.

h. “The souls of the righteous”: emendation (cf. vs. 1). The MSS misplace the expression after “of beings.”

i. “The storehouse of beings”: Heb. gûp habberiyvôt. This storehouse is mentioned in b.Yeb 62a; 63b; b.AZ 5a; b.Nidd 13b. Rashi explains the idea thus: “There is a treasure-house [ôšâr] called gûp, and at the time of creation all souls destined to be born were formed and placed there” (to b.AZ 5a). “Gûp: A chamber like a body [gûp]; the name for the special place for souls which are about to be born” (to b.Nidd 13b). “Gûp: A curtain [pargôd] which forms a partition between the Šekinah and the angels, and there are placed spirits and souls created since the six days of creation, which are to be put into bodies yet to be created” (to b.Yeb 63b). When this ch. of 3En speaks of “souls which have been created” and “souls which have not yet been created” it cannot mean creation in any absolute sense, but must refer to the entry of the soul into the body. Cf. b.Hag 12b, quoted in n. b above; see further Re’uyot Yehezqel, BM, vol. 2, p. 133, l. 18 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 136).

j. Isa 57:16 is used in connection with speculation on the soul in b.Yeb 62a; 63b; b.Nidd 5a; b.Hag 12b.

k. “Souls of the righteous.” A B E: “souls”. F. See vs. 1, n. c.

44 a. “The intermediate” (bênônîyyim): see Maimonides, Yad. Hilkoî Tešubâh 3.1: “Every human being has both merits and iniquities. He whose merits are greater than his iniquities is righteous; he whose iniquities are greater than his merits is wicked; he in whom merits and iniquities are evenly balanced is intermediate.” Cf. b.RH 16b; b.Ber 61b; b.Yoma 75a; ARN A 41 (ed. Schechter, 67a); t.Sanh 13:3.

b. “Where the souls of the wicked stand . . . the wicked descend,” A and, substantially, B.

c. “Brought down to Sheol”: Like descriptions of heaven, descriptions of hell and its torments form a distinct genre of Jewish Midrash; see Masseket bibbûḥ haqgeber, BHM, vol. 1, pp. 150–52; Masseket Gehinnom, BHM, vol. 1, pp. 147–49; Gan ‘Eden weGehinnom, BHM, vol. 5, pp. 42–51; Ma‘ašeh deRabbi Yehošua’ b. Levi, BHM, vol. 2, pp. 50f.; Midraš Konen, BHM, vol. 2, pp. 30f., 35f. (cf. BM, vol. 1, pp. 33–38); Šib’ah hekalot haṭṭum‘ah, BM, vol. 1, pp. 123–26; Gedullat Mošeh, BM, vol. 1, pp. 281–85.

- 3 Za'api'el and Samki'el.^d •Samki'el is in charge of the souls of the intermediate, to support them and purify them from sin, through the abundant mercies of the Omnipresent One.^e Za'api'el is appointed to bring down the souls of the wicked from the presence of the Holy One, blessed be he, from the judgment of the Šekinah,^f to Sheol,^g to punish them with fire in Gehinnom,^h with rods of burning coal. •I went with him, and, taking me by his hand, he bore me up and showed them all to me with his fingers. •I saw that their faces looked like human faces, but their bodies were like eagles.ⁱ Moreover, the faces of the intermediate were a greenish color,^j on account of their deeds, for they are tainted until purified of their iniquity by fire. •And the faces of the wicked souls were as black as the bottom of a pot,^k because of the multitude of their wicked deeds.^{2Kgs 23:10; Mk 9:45; 28:10}

The souls of the patriarchs^m

- 7 I saw the souls of the fathers of the world, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the rest of the righteous, who had been raised from their graves and had ascended into heaven. They were praying before the Holy One, blessed be he, and saying in prayer, "Lord of the Universe, how long will you sit upon your throne, as a mourner sitsⁿ in the days of his mourning, with your right hand behind you,^o and not redeem your sons and reveal your kingdom in the world? Do you not pity your son who are enslaved among the nations of the world? Do you not pity your right hand behind you, by which you stretched out and spread^p the heavens, the earth, and the heaven of heavens? Have you no pity?"^{Isa 42:5; 48:13; Ezek 1:22; Jer 10:12}
- 8 Then the Holy One, blessed be he, answered each and every one of them and said: "Since these wicked ones have sinned thus and thus,^q and have transgressed thus and thus before me, how can I deliver my sons from among the nations of the world, reveal my kingdom in the world before the eyes of the gentiles and deliver^r my great right hand, which has been brought low^s by them."
- 9 Then Meṭaṭron, the servant of YHWH, called me and said to me:^{18:24} "Take the

d. "Angels of destruction, Za'api'el and Samki'el": Za'api'el's name is derived from za'ap, "wrath," and Samki'el's from semek, "support." Note that Samki'el's function is to "support" the intermediate. On the angels of destruction see 31:2, n. f.

e. "Mercies of the Omnipresent One," A E F. For the divine title "Omnipresent One" see 18:24, n. n2. After purgation the intermediate are allowed to ascend to join the righteous; cf. b.RH 16b; ARN A 41 (ed. Schechter, 67a); cf. Se'udat Gan 'Eden, BHM, vol. 5, p. 46, l. 30; Pirque Mašīab, BHM, vol. 3, p. 75, l. 28. According to one view the wicked are ultimately annihilated; see b.Shab 33b; b.RH 16b/17a.

f. "From the judgment of the Šekinah," A E F; "from the splendor of the Šekinah," B. The judgment is the judgment that takes place after a man's death; see 28:10, n. n.

g. "To Sheol," A E.

h. "To punish them with fire in Gehinnom," E; "to punish them in the fire of Gehinnom," F.

i. "Their bodies were like eagles": The souls possess a sort of "spiritual" body distinct from the ordinary, physical bodies which they tenant during their earthly life. Cf. the idea of the "astral body" in spiritism, and the ochēma, "vehicle," of the soul in Neoplatonism (Proclus, Institutio theologica 205). Angels are represented as being like eagles; see 2:1; 24:11; 26:3.

j. "A greenish color" (yarqūt), A E F.

k. "Black as the bottom of a pot": For the phrase see b. Meg 11a; b. Shab 30a; b. Sanh 107b.

For its use to describe the wicked in hell see b.RH 17a; Masseket Gehinnom 4 (BHM, vol. 7, p. 149, l. 4); Pirque Mašīab, BHM, vol. 3, p. 75, l. 29.

l. "Wicked deeds," E F and, substantially, A.

m. 44:7–10 is an apocalyptic fragment only loosely connected with the theme of the fate of souls. It is based on Ps 20:6 (MT 20:7); cf. Ex 15:6, 12.

n. "As a mourner sits," A E.

o. "Behind you," E; the place of forgetfulness and rejection; see 47:2f.; 48A:1.

p. "And spread," A E F.

q. The implication is that the sins of Israel delay the messianic redemption; see y.Ta'an 64a.29: "Rabbi Aḥa said in the name of R. Tanḥum b. Rabbi: If Israel would repent for only one day, immediately the Son of David would come." Cf. b.Sanh 98a; ExR 5:18; LamR proem 21.

r. "My sons . . . and deliver," E and, substantially, F; A B omit by homeoteleuton.

s. "Which has been brought low": emending the A B text to hammuppelet; E has "falling and brought low" (nepilāh umuppelet).

t. "Then Meṭaṭron . . . and said to me": following the E text in the main, but emending 'abdi, "my servant," to 'ebed Y, "the servant of YHWH." For this title of Meṭaṭron see 10:3, n. g. Cf. Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 33, l. 27: "At once the Holy One, blessed be he, called to Meṭaṭron and said, My servant, go . . ." Odeberg (following the B text) trans-books and read their wicked deeds." At once I took the books and read their deeds, and it was recorded that each and every one of those wicked ones had incurred extirpation^a thirty-six times over. Moreover, it was recorded that they had transgressed against all the letters of the Torah,^c as it is written. "The whole of Israel has transgressed your Torah." It does not say here "against your Torah," but simply "your Torah," because they transgressed it from

Dan 9:11

¹⁰ At once Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob began to weep. Then the Holy One, blessed be he, said to them: "Abraham, my friend, Isaac, my chosen one, Jacob, my firstborn,^d how can I save them at this time from among the nations of the world?" Thereupon Michael, the Prince of Israel,^e cried out and lamented in a loud voice, saying, "Lord, why do you stand aside?"

Dan 12:1

Ps 10:1

The heavenly curtain

¹ 45 R. Ishmael said: Metatron said to me:

Come and I will show you the curtain^a of the Omnipresent One, which is spread^b before the Holy One, blessed be he, and on which are printed all the generations of the world and all their deeds, whether done or to be done, till the last generation. *I went and he showed them to me^c with his fingers,^d like a father teaching his son the letters of the Torah; and I saw:^e

each generation and its potentates;^f

lates: "Metatron called and spake to me: 'My servant! Take the books . . . ' But it is unlikely that Metatron would call Ishmael 'My servant.' The text may imply that Metatron is in charge of the heavenly records; b.Hag 15a states that Metatron is the heavenly scribe.

u. "Extirpation": Heb. kāret. This term refers, strictly speaking, to premature death inflicted by God for certain sins (b.MK 28a; y.Bikk 64c.37). Here, however, it is not used literally, but to indicate the enormity of Israel's transgressions. For "thirty-six" see m.Ker 1:1: "For thirty-six transgressions is kāret prescribed in the Law."

v. "Moreover, it was recorded that they . . . all the letters of the Torah": a paraphrase of obscure Heb. following the E text. The other MSS appear to be corrupt.

w. "'Alep to Tau':" the first and last letters of the Heb. alphabet. Cf. LamR proem 24, where the twenty-two letters of the alphabet come to testify against Israel's transgressions of the Law.

x. "Thirty-six," A E F; "forty," B.

y. "Then the Holy One, blessed be he, said to them . . . Jacob, my firstborn," A E and, substantially, F.

z. "Michael, the Prince of Israel": Dan 12:1; b.Yoma 77a. Cf. PR 44:10 (ed. Friedmann, 185a.27), where Michael pleads for Israel before God.

45 a. "The curtain [pargôd] of the Omnipresent One": This curtain is the heavenly counterpart of the Veil which divided the Holy Place from the Holy of Holies in the earthly Tabernacle and Temple (Ex 26:31; 2Chr 3:14). The earthly veil is called the pārôket; the heavenly veil, though sometimes called a pārôket, is more commonly designated the pargôd. Pargôd is a loanword from Persian: Cf. the Pahlavi pardag, "curtain," "veil," and the cognate Hindustani pardah, from which the English "purdah" is derived. The heavenly pargôd separates the immediate presence of God from the rest of heaven. It shields the angels from the destructive glare of the divine glory (Targum Job 26:9; cf. 3En 22B:6), and it conceals the ultimate mysteries of the deity; only the Prince of the Divine Presence is allowed to go within the curtain (cf. b.Yoma 77a). Sometimes secrets are announced by a heavenly voice "from behind the curtain" (b.Ber 18b; b.Hag 15a; 16a; b.Sanh 89b; Ma'ayan Hokmah, BHM, vol. 1, p. 60, l. 10; Ma'aseh 'asarah haruge malkut, BHM, vol. 6, p. 21, l. 32, and p. 31, l. 28; Midraš " 'Ēlleh 'ezkeräh," BHM, vol. 3, p. 65, l. 25; Midraš 'aseret hadibberot, BHM, vol. 1, p. 81, ll. 3f.; Haggadat Sema' Yiśra'el, BHM, vol. 5, p. 165, ll. 29f.; Masseket hibbut haqqeber 4; BHM, vol. 1, p. 152, l. 10). The idea in 3En 45 appears to be that the whole course of human history is already worked out "in blueprint" in the heavenly realm, and has been totally foreordained by God. Cf. the heavenly tablets on which, according to Hekalot Rabbati 6:3 (BM, vol. 1, p. 76), all the trials foreordained for Israel are already recorded. On the pargôd see further b.Sot 49a; b.BM 59a; PRE 4; Masseket Hekalot 7 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 46, l. 30); Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 44, ll. 3, 9, and 16 (= BM, vol. 2, p. 388); Seder Gan 'Eden, BHM, vol. 3, p. 135, l. 25, and p. 138, l. 3; Rashi to b.Yeb 63b, catchword gûp. The first heaven, Wilon, is also regarded as a celestial veil; see 17:3, n. f.

b. "Which is spread," A E F.

c. "Showed them to me": Cf. Alphabet of Aqiba, BM, vol. 2, p. 388, where R. Aqiba is shown by the angel Segansag'el the future sages of Israel in "the curtain of the Omnipresent One"; b.Sanh 38b: "The Holy One, blessed be he, showed to Adam every generation and its expositors, every generation and its sages."

d. "With his fingers," A E F.

e. "Like a father . . . and I saw," A E F.

f. "Each generation and its potentates," A E F; B omits.

each generation and its heads;
 each generation and its shepherds;
 each generation and its keepers;
 each generation and its oppressors;^f
 each generation and its tormentors;^h
 each generation and its officials;ⁱ
 each generation and its judges;
 each generation and its officers;
 each generation and its teachers;
 each generation and those who establish it;
 each generation and the heads of them all;
 each generation and the heads of its academies;^j
 each generation and its magistrates;
 each generation and its princes;
 each generation and its spokesmen;
 each generation and its chiefs;
 each generation and its nobles;
 each generation and its elders;
 each generation and its leaders.

3 And I saw:

Adam and his generation, their deeds and their thoughts;
 Noah and the generation of the Flood, their deeds and their thoughts;^k Gen 2:19
 Nimrod and the generation of the division of tongues,^l their deeds and their thoughts;^m Gen 6:8
 Gen 10:8; 11:9
 Abraham and his generation, their deeds and their thoughts;
 Gen 17:5
 Isaac and his generation, their deeds and their thoughts;
 Gen 17:19
 Ishmael and his generation, their deeds and their thoughts;
 Gen 16:11
 Jacob and his generation, their deeds and their thoughts;
 Gen 25:26
 the twelve tribes and their generations,ⁿ their deeds and their thoughts;
 Amram and his generation, their deeds and their thoughts;
 Num 26:59
 Moses and his generation, their deeds and their thoughts;
 4 Aaron and Miriam [and their generation],^o their deeds and their acts;^p Ex 15:20 the princes and the elders [and their generations],^p their deeds and their acts;
 Ex 17:9
 Joshua and his generation, their deeds and their acts;
 the judges and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 Eli and his generation, their deeds and their acts;
 1Sam 1:3
 Phineas and his generation, their deeds and their acts;
 Elkanah and his generation, their deeds and their acts;
 1Sam 1:1
 Samuel and his generation, their deeds and their acts;
 1Sam 1:20
 the kings of Judah and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 the kings of Israel and their generations, their deeds and their acts;

g. "Oppressors" (nôgésêhem): See Ex 5:6; Isa 9:3; 60:17.

h. "Tormentors": emending to sôreqêhem (the E text is nearest to this). The verb sâraq means lit. "to comb"; however, in view of the parallelism with "oppressors," it must have a metaphorical sense here. It probably means "to torment," "to torture"; there may be allusion to the story of the martyrdom of Aqiba: "They brought out R. Aqiba to kill him, and they combed [sôreqin] his flesh with combs of iron" (b. Ber 61b). The reference is to the Roman torture of hanging up a victim naked and scraping his body with "claws" (ungulae). Cf. b. Sanh 96b; b. Giṭṭ 57b.

i. "Officials" (pequddôêhem): For this usage see 2Kgs 11:18; Ezek 44:11; Isa 60:17.

j. "Its teachers . . . the heads of its academies." B, but emending (with A) rô's to râ'sê.

"heads (of them all)." A E F have a different text.

k. "Noah and the generations of the Flood, their deeds and their thoughts." A E F.

l. "Nimrod and the generation of the division of tongues." E. The "division of tongues" is associated in the Bible with the tower of Babel (Gen 11:1-9). Nimrod is usually linked in Jewish Midrash with the building of the tower of Babel (b. Hull 89a; b. AZ 53b).

m. "The twelve tribes and their generations." A E.

n. "[And their generation]" (wedôrân): has accidentally fallen out of the MSS.

o. "Their deeds and their acts": The formula changes here from "their deeds and their thoughts."

p. "[And their generations]" (wedôrân): has accidentally fallen out of the MSS.

the kings of the gentiles^a and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 the rulers of Israel and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 the rulers of the gentiles and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 the heads of the academies of Israel and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 the heads of the academies of the gentiles and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 the princes of Israel and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 the princes of the gentiles and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 the chiefs of Israel and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 the chiefs of the gentiles and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 the men of renown of Israel and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 the men of renown of the gentiles and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 the judges of Israel and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 the judges of the gentiles and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 the teachers of children in Israel and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 the teachers of the children of the gentiles and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 the spokesmen of Israel and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 the spokesmen of the gentiles and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 all the prophets of Israel and their generations, their deeds and their acts;
 all the prophets of the gentiles and their generations, their deeds and their acts;

- 5 and every battle in the wars^r which the gentiles fight with Israel^b in the days of their dominion.

And I saw:

the Messiah the son of Joseph^c and his generation, and all that they will do to the gentiles.

And I saw:

the Messiah the son of David and his generation, and all the battles and wars, and all that they will do to Israel whether for good or bad.

And I saw:

all the battles and wars which Gog and Magog^d will fight with Israel in the days of the Messiah, and all that the Holy One, blessed be he, will do to them in the time to come. Ezek 38:2; 39:6

- 6 All the rest of the leaders of every generation and every deed of every generation both of Israel and of the gentiles, whether done or to be done in the time to

q. "The kings of the gentiles": From here to the end of the vs. the MSS have many variants and inconsistencies. B is followed, but its inconsistencies are eliminated.

r. "Every battle in the wars," A.

s. "Which the gentiles fight with Israel," E F and, substantially, A.

t. "Messiah the son of Joseph": a forerunner of the Messiah the son of David who will fight against Israel's enemies at the end-time and fall in battle. In earlier texts he is a rather nebulous figure, but he is treated fully in the late apocalypses: See b.Sukk 52a/b; TarJon to Ex 40:11 ("Messiah son of Ephraim . . . at whose hand Israel will triumph over Gog and his allies at the end of days"); GenR 75:6; 95 (= MS Vatican Ebr. 30 fols. 175b/176a); 99:2; NumR 14:1; SongR 2:13.4; PR 36:1f. (ed. Friedmann, 161b.8; 162a.7); Pesiqta' deRab Kahana 5:9 (ed. Buber, 51a.16); Midraš Tehillim 87:6 (to Ps 87:5) (ed. Buber, 189b); Midraš Tanḥuma', ed. Buber, vol. 1, 103a; Targumic Tosepta' to Zech 12:10 (Sperber, vol. 3, p. 495); Targum Song 4:5 (cf. 7:4); Seper Zerubbabel, BHM, vol. 2, p. 55; Ništarot R. Šim'on b. Yoḥai, BHM, vol. 3, p. 80; 'Otot hammašiah, BHM, vol. 2, p. 60; Tepillat R. Šim'on b. Yoḥai, BHM, vol. 4, p. 124; Midraš Wayyoša', BHM, vol. 1, pp. 55f.; 'Aggadat Mašiah, BHM, vol. 3, p. 141; Pirqe mašiah, BHM, vol.3, pp. 71-73; Pereq R. Yo'siyياهو, BHM, vol. 6, p. 115; Sa'adya, 'Emunot weDe'ot 8.5f.

u. "Gog and Magog": Ezek 38:2; 39:6. The leaders of the gentile nations in their final, concerted attack on Israel in the end-time. Their defeat marks the establishment of the messianic kingdom: Rev 20:8; SiDeut 343 (ed. Finkelstein, p. 398); m.'Eduy 2:10; b.AZ 3b; b.Ber 7b.

come, to all generations, till the end of time, were all printed on the curtain^v of the Omnipresent One. I saw them all with my own eyes, and when I had seen^w them I opened my mouth and said in praise of the Omnipresent One, "For the word of the king is paramount, and who dare say to him, 'Why do that?' He who obeys the command will come to no harm."^x And I said, "Lord, Ecc1 8:4f. what variety you have created," and, "Great are your achievements, Lord."^y Ps 104:24

The spirits of the stars

- 1 46 R. Ishmael said: Meṭaṭron said to me:
 [Come and I will show you]^a the spirits^b of the stars, which stand in the Raqia^c every night in fear^c of the Omnipresent One—where they go and where they 17:3,7 2 stand. • I went with him, and, taking me by his hand, he showed me them all with his fingers. They were standing like fiery sparks around the chariots of the Omnipresent One.^d What did Meṭaṭron do? At once he clapped his hands and 24:1; 37:1 chased^e them all from their places. Immediately they flew up^f on wings of flame and fled to the four sides of the throne of the chariot, and he told me the name of each of them,^g as it is written,

He counts the number of the stars and gives each of them a name. Ps 147:4

- This teaches us that the Holy One, blessed be he, has given to every single star 13 a name.^h • They are all counted in to the Raqia^c of the heavens by Raḥaṭi'el, Isa 40:26 to serve the world;ⁱ and they are counted out,^j to go and glorify the Holy One, 14:4; 17:6
 blessed be he, with songs and praises, as it is written, 6:8

The heavens declare the glory of God, and the vault of heaven proclaims his handiwork. Ps 19:1

- 14 In time to come the Holy One, blessed be he, will create them anew, as it is written, "Every morning they are renewed." They open their mouths and recite a song. What is the song they recite? "I look up at your heavens, made by your fingers." 40:4; Lam 3:23
Ps 8:3

The spirits of the punished angels

- 1 47 R. Ishmael said: Meṭaṭron said to me:
 Come and I will show you the souls of the angels and the spirits of the ministers^a

- v. "Printed on the curtain." A E F.
 w. "And when I had seen." A E F.
 x. "For the word of the king . . . come to no harm"; giving the quotation indicated by A.
 y. "And, 'Great are your achievements, Lord.'" A E F.

46 a. "[Come and I will show you]": (bō' wə'arākā); these words have accidentally fallen out of the MSS.

b. "The spirits (rāḥān) of the stars." A E F; "the plain" or "space" (riwḥān) "of the stars." B. The A E F reading is supported by the fact that (1) this section of 3En (chs. 43f., 46f.) is largely concerned with "spirits/souls"; and (2) the stars are clearly regarded as animate beings, like angels, and so can be said to possess "spirits." Like angels they have fiery bodies (vs. 2: "They were standing like fiery sparks"); they have wings (vs. 2); they perform songs before God (vs. 4); and Lam 3:23 is applied to them (vs. 4; cf. 40:4). For stars with animate form see also 1En 88:1; 90:21. Here the stars are sentient beings (cf. 5:8; b.AZ 42b; 43a; 43b; Maimonides, Moreh Nebukim 2.5); but in 14:4 and 17:6 they appear to be regarded as inert masses of matter that are moved by the angels.

- c. "In fear." lit. "in wrath" (za'am).
 d. "The chariots of the Omnipresent One." A E; "the chariot of the Omnipresent One." F.
 e. "And chased." A E F.
 f. "Immediately they flew up": A E add "from their places"; text follows B.
 g. "And he told me the name of each one of them." B (but adding "(to) me" with A E F); "and each of them told me its name and its surname [kimmūy]." A E F. Cf. 1En 43:1; 69:21.
 h. "To every single star a name." A E F.
 i. "To serve the world": Cf. 4Ezra 6:46.
 j. "Counted in . . . counted out": i.e. in the evening they enter the sky to give light to the world; in the morning they depart and ascend to the throne to praise God. Cf. Midaš Tehillim 19:7 (to Ps 19:3) (ed. Buber. 83b) for the stars worshiping God during the day.

47 a. "The souls of the angels and the spirits of the ministers." A; "the souls and spirits of the ministers." E F. The constitution of the angels in this ch. is exactly parallel to that of men in chs. 43f.: they possess both "body" whose bodies have been burned in the fire of the Omnipresent One, which goes out from his little finger. They are turned to fiery coals in the middle of the River of Fire,^b but their spirits and souls stand behind the Šekinah. •Whenever the ministering angels do not recite the song at the right time or in a proper and fitting manner,^c they are burned^d and consumed by the fire of their Maker and by the flames of their Creator in their places,^e and a storm wind blows on them and casts^f them into the River of Fire, and they are reduced there to mountains of burning coal. But their spirits and souls return to their Creator and all of them stand behind their Maker.

40:3

2 River of Fire,^b but their spirits and souls stand behind the Šekinah. •Whenever the ministering angels do not recite the song at the right time or in a proper and fitting manner,^c they are burned^d and consumed by the fire of their Maker and by the flames of their Creator in their places,^e and a storm wind blows on them and casts^f them into the River of Fire, and they are reduced there to mountains of burning coal. But their spirits and souls return to their Creator and all of them stand behind their Maker.

18:19,21; 44:7;
48A:1
35:6; 40:3f.

35:5

3 I went with him,^g and, taking me by his hand, he showed me all the souls of the angels and the spirits of the ministers, which stand behind the Šekinah upon storm blasts,^h surrounded by walls of fire. •Then Meṭaṭron opened for me the gates in the walls of fire, within which they were standing, behind the Šekinah. At once I looked up and saw that their faces were like angels' faces, and their wings like birds' wings, made of flame and wrought in burning fire.ⁱ Then I opened my mouth in praise of the Omnipresent One, and I said, "Great are your achievements, Lord."

44:5

Ps 92:5

The right hand of God

1 *48A R. Ishmael said: Meṭaṭron said to me: Come and I will show you the right hand of the Omnipresent One,^a which has been banished behind him^b because of the destruction of the Temple.^c From it all kinds of brilliant lights shine, and by it the 955 heavens^d were created. Even the seraphim and the ophanim are not allowed to look^e on it, till the day of salvation comes.

Ex 15:6;
Ps 78:54
44:7; 47:1

26:8–12; 25:5–7

2 I went with him, and, taking me by his hand, he bore me up on his wings and showed it^f to me, with all kinds of praise, jubilation, and psalm: No mouth can tell its praise,^g no eye behold it, because of the magnitude of its greatness, its praise, its glory, its honor, and its beauty. •Moreover, all the souls of the righteous who are worthy to see the joy of Jerusalem^h stand beside it, praising and entreating it, saying three times every day,

Neh 12:43

(gûp) and "spirit/soul" (rûah/nēsâmâh). The former is consumed in the River of Fire; the latter "returns to God" (cf. 43:1–3). The spirit/soul has its own peculiar bodily shape: It has a human face and a birdlike body (cf. 44:5, n. i).

b. "They are turned . . . River of Fire": According to one view all the angels return to the River of Fire (from which they emerged) after reciting the Qeduššah; see 40:4, n. i.

c. "Or in a proper and fitting manner," A E.

d. "They are burned," A E F.

e. "In their places," A E F.

f. "And casts," A E F.

g. "With him," A E F.

h. "Upon storm blasts," lit. "upon wings of storm" (kanpê se'arâh); Odeberg's conjecture; cf. 34:1, n. f. The angels are often associated with phenomena of storm and fire; see 18:25; 22:13; 33:3.

i. "Burning fire," A E F.

48A * For chapters 48BCD see the Appendix.

a. "The right hand of the Omnipresent One": With the material about the end-time in this ch. cf. 44:7–10. The end-time plays only a small part in Merkabah texts; see "Theological Importance." The hypostatized right hand of God in this ch. should be compared with the representations of God's hand in Jewish synagogue art in late antiquity (e.g. in the synagogues of Beth 'Alpha and Dura-Europos).

b. "Behind him": the place of forgetfulness or rejection.

c. "The Temple," A E F. The idea seems to be that God's right hand cannot operate till the Temple is restored.

d. "The 955 heavens": Contrast the seven heavens of 17:3 and 18:1f. Cf. Masseket Hekalot 7 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 45): "The Holy One, blessed be he, descends from the upper heaven of heavens, from 955 heavens, and sits in 'Arabot on the throne of his glory." The number 955 is derived by gematria from the word "heavens" (šamayim, final mēm = 600). See "Theological Importance."

e. "Are not allowed to look," A E F.

f. "Showed it," A E F.

g. "Its praise," A F.

h. "The joy of Jerusalem": Either (1) they are granted a vision of the future glory of the terrestrial Jerusalem (cf. Pesiqta' deRab Kahana 20:7, ed. Buber, 143a; PR 41:1–5, ed. Friedmann, 172b); or (2) they see the heavenly Jerusalem Yerūšalayim šelema'alâh—the celestial counterpart of the earthly city which, according to one view, would descend to earth at the end of time; see 1En 90:28f.; 2Bar 4:2–7; 4Ezra 7:26; Gal 4:26; Rev 21:2; b.Ta'an 5a; b.Ḥag 12b; Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 67, l. 30; Ništarot R. Šim'on b. Yoḥai, BHM, vol. 3, p. 80, l. 26; Re'uyot Yebezeq¹, BM, vol. 2, p. 133 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 132).

“Awake, awake! Clothe yourself in strength, arm of the Lord,

Isa 51:9

as it is written, ‘He made his glorious arm go at the right hand of Moses.’”

Isa 63:12

4 Then the right hand of the Omnipresent One wept, and five rivers of tears flowedⁱ from its five fingers, and, falling into the Great Sea, made the whole world quake,^j as it is written,

The earth will split into fragments,
the earth will be riven and rent.
The earth will shiver and shake,
the earth will stagger like a drunkard,
sway like a shanty

Isa 24:19f.

—five times, corresponding to the five fingers of his great right hand.

5 But when the Holy One, blessed be he, shall see that there is none righteous in that generation,^k none pious on the earth, no righteousness in men’s hands, no one like Moses, no intercessor like Samuel, who could entreat^l the Omnipresent One for salvation, for redemption, for his kingdom to be manifested

6 so that he might effect with it a great deliverance for Israel; • then the Holy
One, blessed be he, will at once remember his own righteousness, merit, mercy, and grace, and, for his own sake, will deliver his great arm, and his own righteousness will support him, as it is written, “He saw that there was no one”^m—like Moses, who sought mercy many times for Israel in the wilderness and annulled the decreeⁿ against them—“and he was astonished that there was no intercessor”^o—like Samuel, who interceded with the Holy One, blessed be he, and cried to him; and the Holy One answered him,^p and did what he wanted, even what was not foreordained,^q as it is written, “It is now wheat harvest, is it not? I will call on the Lord and he shall send thunder and rain.” • Moreover,

Isa 59:16

7 Samuel is linked with Moses,^r as it is written, “Moses and Aaron among his priests, and Samuel among those who invoke his name”; moreover, Scripture 8 says, “Even if Moses and Samuel were standing in my presence.” • “My own arm brought me salvation”: the Holy One, blessed be he, will say then, “How long shall I expect the children of men to work salvation for my arm^s by their righteousness? For my own sake, for the sake of my own merit and righteousness, I shall deliver my arm, and by it save my sons^t from among the gentiles,” as it is written, “For my own sake and my sake alone^u shall I act—

1Sam 12:17

Ps 99:6

Jer 15:1

Isa 63:5

9 is my name to be profaned?” • Then the Holy One, blessed be he, will reveal his great arm in the world,^v and show it to the gentiles: it shall be as long as the world and as broad as the world,^w and the glory of its splendor shall be like 10 the brilliant light of the noonday sun at the summer solstice.^x • At once Israel

Isa 48:11

32:1

i. “Flowed.” A E F.

j. “And, falling into the great sea . . . quake.”
A E and, substantially, F.

k. The idea is that the final redemption will begin in an age of great iniquity; m.Sot 9:15;
SongR 2:13.4; b.Sanh 97a; 2Thes 2:7–12; Lk 21:28; cf. 44.8, n. q.

l. “Who could entreat,” A B; “who entreated,” E F. Samuel is frequently compared to Moses in the haggadah, and is sometimes even regarded as his superior; see ExR 16:4; PR 43:7 (ed. Friedmann, 182a); Midraš Tehillim 1:3 (to Ps 1:3) (ed. Buber, 2b); Pesiqta’ deRab Kahana 4:5 (ed. Buber, 38a).

m. “And annulled the decree.” A and, substantially, B; “and annulled the decrees.” E and, substantially, F.

n. “Answered him.” A E F.

o. “Foreordained” or “fitting”: Heb. ra’ûy.
In 1Sam 12:17 Samuel commands an event out of the natural order of things, such as rain at harvest time.

p. “Linked with Moses”: A B add, “in every place”; text follows E F. See n. l above.

q. “For my arm,” A E F.

r. “By their righteousness,” A.

s. “And by it save my sons,” A.

t. “For my own sake and my sake alone,” A E F = MT.

u. “In the world,” A E F; B omits.

v. “It shall be as long . . . as broad as the world,” F. Cf. 32:1f., where the splendor of God’s sword pervades the world from end to end.

w. “The brilliant light of the noonday sun at the summer solstice,” lit. “the light of the sun in its strength (Judg 5:31) at its turning point in Tammuz (June–July).” “Turning point” (te-qûpat) is the reading of A E F. See PRE 6.

shall be saved from among the gentiles and the Messiah shall appear to them and bring them up to Jerusalem with great joy. Moreover, the kingdom of Israel, gathered from the four quarters of the world, shall eat with the Messiah,^x and the gentiles shall eat^y with them, as it is written,

The Lord bares his holy arm
in the sight of all the nations, and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God;

Isa 52:10

and it also says,

The Lord alone is his guide,
with him is no alien god;

Deut 32:12

and it says,^z

The Lord will be King of the whole world.

Zech 14:9

x. "Moreover, the kingdom of Israel . . . with the Messiah," E: "moreover, their kingdom shall extend to the end of the world," F. A B appear to be corrupt. The reference is to the Messianic banquet: See 1En 62:14; 2Bar 29:3f.; Mt 8:11; Lk 22:30; Rev 19:9; Pesiqta' deRab Kahana 29 (= Additional Pisqa' for Sukkot) (ed. Buber, 188b); Ništarot R. Šim'on b. Yošai, BHM, vol. 3, p. 80; Pirqe Mašiab, BHM, vol. 3, p. 76, l. 32; Se'udat Liwyatan, BHM, vol. 6, pp. 150f.

y. "Eat," A E F.

z. "And it says," E.

APPENDIX TO 3 ENOCH

CHAPTERS 15B, 22B, 22C, 23, 24, 48B, 48C, 48D, WITH NOTES

The ascension of Moses^a

- 1 15B Meṭatron is Prince over all princes,^b and stands before him who is exalted above all gods.^c He goes beneath the throne of glory, where he has a great heavenly tabernacle of light,^d and brings out the deafening fire, and puts it in the ears of the holy creatures, so that they should not hear the sound of the utterance that issues from the mouth of the Almighty. Ps 82:1 21:1-4
- 2 When Moses ascended to the height,^e he fasted 121 fasts,^f until the dwellings of the ḥašmal^g were opened to him, and lo, his heart was as the heart of a lion;^h he saw countless legions of the hosts surrounding him,ⁱ and they desired to consume him, but Moses besought mercy,^j first for Israel and then for himself, and he who sits on the chariot opened the windows^k which are above the heads of the cherubim and 1,800,000 advocates for Israel^l came out to meet Moses, Ex 19:3 7: 26:4; 36:2
2Sam 17:10
1:7; 48D:7
Gen 7:11;
22:11-16

15B a. A difficult and fragmentary chapter; it is found only in C and in Eleazar, fol. 116ab. Vs. 1 is concerned with the heavenly tabernacle of Meṭatron; vss. 2, 4, and 5, with the ascension of Moses to heaven to receive the Law; vs. 3 is a mystical fragment about the Sema'.

b. "Meṭatron is Prince over all princes," Eleazar; C has "R. Ishmael said to me, Meṭatron, Prince of the Divine Presence and Prince over all princes, said to me"; but C has an awkward sentence structure, which appears to provide no object-clause for the verb "said."

c. "Gods": Heb. 'elohim: a class of angels; see 4QŠirŠabb; Maimonides, Yad. Yesode ha-torah 2.7; "Theological Importance."

d. "A great heavenly tabernacle of light": For Meṭatron as the high priest of the heavenly tabernacle see NumR 12:12: "When the Holy One, blessed be he, told Israel to set up the tabernacle, he intimated to the ministering angels that they also should make a tabernacle, and when the one was erected below, the other was erected on high. The latter was the tabernacle of the youth (na'ar), whose name is Meṭatron, and there he offers up the souls of the righteous to atone for Israel in the days of their exile."

e. The connection between vss. 1 and 2 probably is the idea that when Moses ascended to heaven to receive the Law, it was Meṭatron whom he met; see 48D:7; b.Sanh 38b. For other accounts of the ascension of Moses and the opposition of the angels to it, see b.Shab 88b-89a; Midraš Tanḥuma', ed. Buber, vol. 3, 56b; Gedullat Mošeh, BM, vol. 1, pp. 281-85; Haggadat Sema' Yišra'el, BHM, vol. 5, pp. 165f.; Ma'yan Hokmah, BHM, vol. 1, pp. 58-61; PR 20:4 (ed. Friedmann, 96b); 25:3 (ed. Friedmann, 128a); Midraš Tehillim 8:2 (ed. Buber, 37a-38a); PRE

46; SongR 8:11.2.

f. "121 fasts": i.e. he fasted for 121 days.

g. "Dwellings of the ḥašmal": i.e. the innermost of the celestial palaces. On ḥašmal see 26:4, n. f.

h. "And lo [ūre'ēh], his heart was as the heart of a lion," C. Cf. 2Sam 17:10, where David is said to have had a heart like the heart of a lion. Here the expression refers to Moses' steadfastness when confronted by the threatening hosts of heaven. The text, however, is rather difficult. Odeberg translates: "and he saw the heart within the heart of the Lion." He identifies the lion with one of the four creatures (Ezek 1:10). Eleazar reads: "and he saw [werā'āh] that it was white [lābān; or, repointing libbān, "(that) their heart (was)"] like the heart of the lion." The lion has magical significance; see Seper HaRazim 1:133-35 (ed. Margalioth, p. 74): "And put the heart of the lion over your heart." Note also the description of the angels in Seper HaRazim 2:105 (ed. Margalioth, p. 87): "Their strength is like that of a lion."

i. Or "surrounding it," i.e. the ḥašmal.

j. "Mercy," Eleazar.

k. "The windows" (ḥallônôt): Cf. the "windows" ('arubbôt) of heaven in Gen 7:11. See IEn 72:3, 7; 75:7; 101:2; Gedullat Mošeh, BM, vol. 1, p. 278, l. 2; Midraš 'ašeret hadibberot, BHM, vol. 1, p. 64, ll. 3f.

l. "For Israel," Eleazar; C omits. The context here is the heavenly assize; cf. 28:7-33:2 and "Theological Importance." For Meṭatron as a heavenly advocate see Yalqut Re'ubeni 1.62b; as Israel's advocate, see in particular Semot šel Meṭatron, Bodleian MS 1748, fols. 33b and 40b. Michael is usually Israel's heavenly representative; see 44:10, n. z.

and with them was Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence. They received the prayers of Israel and placed them as a crown^m on the head of the Holy One, blessed be he. •And he (Meṭaṭron) said,ⁿ “Hear, Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is one!,” and the face of the Šekinah^o rejoiced and was glad. They (the hosts) said to Meṭaṭron, “Who are these (the advocates), and to whom do they give all this honor and glory?” They received answer,^p “To the Majestic One of the House of Israel.” They (the hosts) said, “Hear, Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is one! To whom ought glory and greatness to be given more than to you, Lord of greatness and of power, God and King, living and eternal?”

4 Then ’Aktari’el Yah YHWD of hosts^q answered and said to Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, “Fulfill every request he makes of me. Hear his prayer and do what he wants, whether great or small.”^r •At once Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to Moses, “Son of Amram, fear not! for already God favors you. Ask what you will^s with confidence and boldness, for light shines from the skin of your face from one end of the world to the other.” But Moses said to him, “Not so! lest I incur guilt.” Meṭaṭron said to him, “Receive the letters^t of an oath which cannot be broken!”

Deut 6:4

Ex 34:29f.

Heavenly numbers^s

1 22B R. Ishmael said: Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me: How do the angels stand on high? He said to me: Just as a bridge is laid across a river and everyone crosses over it, so a bridge is laid from the beginning of the entrance^b to its end, •and the ministering angels^c go over it and recite the song before YHWH, the God of Israel. In his presence^d fearsome warriors and dread captains stand. A thousand thousand and myriads of myriads chant praise and laud before YHWH, the God of Israel.

3 How many bridges are there? How many rivers of fire? How many rivers of hail? How many treasuries of snow? How many wheels of fire? •How many

35:1–40:4

18:19; Dan 7:10

Job 38:22

m. “They received the prayers of Israel and placed them as a crown.” C: “they received his (Moses’) prayer and placed it as a crown.” Eleazar. According to one tradition it is the angel Sandalpon who places the prayers of Israel as a crown on God’s head: see b.Hag 13b; PR 20:4 (ed. Friedmann, 97a); Midraš Tehillim 19:7 (to Ps 19:3) (ed. Buber, 84a); Ma’yan Hokmah, BHM, vol. 1, p. 59; Midraš Konen, BHM, vol. 2, p. 26, l. 24; Yalqut Hadaš, Ma’akim no. 9 (Warsaw, 1879) p. 122.

n. “And he (Meṭaṭron) said . . .”; vs. 3 is a highly confused fragment: it is impossible to say for certain who are the subjects of the verbs. The question “Who are these?” is not answered. Something may be missing.

o. “The face of the Šekinah,” Eleazar.

p. “They received answer” or “they answered.” But if the latter translation is adopted, who is the subject?

q. “’Aktari’el Yah, YHWD of hosts”: YHWD is a pious substitute for YHWH. ’Aktari’el is here a name for God as he manifests himself on the throne; so b.Ber 7a. It is found also as the name of an angel; cf. Zohar Terumah, 2.146b; Yalqut Hadaš, Ma’akim no. 25 (Warsaw, 1879) p. 122. In origin it was probably the name of a crown (keter) of God; see 29:1, n. e.

r. “Small,” Eleazar. On Meṭaṭron as God’s executor see 10:3.

s. “What you will,” C: “what you need,” Eleazar.

t. “The letters”: Probably the letters of the divine name; see 13:1.

22B a. 22B is a fragment found as a whole only in C. Vss. 1–5 occur again in Ma’aseh Merkabah 3 (ed. Scholem, p. 103) and in the Haggadic Fragment in BHM, vol. 6, pp. 153f. Vs. 8 occurs again in Hekalot Rabbati 8:4 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 90; BM, vol. 1, p. 85). The fragment originally took the form of a question from R. Ishmael (“How do the angels stand on high?”), followed by the answer of his heavenly mentor (“He said to me . . .”). “Meṭaṭron, Prince of the Divine Presence” was later inserted to bring the opening of the passage into conformity with the openings of chs. 5–22.

b. “The entrance” (mābōy): This leads into God’s immediate presence. According to vs. 4 there are several entrances. The gates of the palaces are called petāhim (Hekalot Rabbati 15:2, BHM, vol. 3, p. 94, l. 15) or še’arim (Massekot Hekalot 4, BHM, vol. 2, p. 42, l. 17). Cf. the ladder by which the angels ascend into God’s presence in Pereq mippirqē hekalot, BHM, vol. 3, p. 162, l. 12 (cf. Gen 28:12). The bridge spans the river(s) of fire; cf. 22C:1; Hekalot Rabbati 13:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 93); Midraš Mišle 10 (ed. Buber, 34a).

c. “And the ministering angels,” Ma’aseh Merkabah and the Haggadic Fragment.

d. “In his presence,” C: “upon it” (i.e. upon the bridge), Ma’aseh Merkabah.

ministering angels? There are 12,000 myriads of bridges, six above and six below; 12,000 myriads of rivers of fire, six above and six below; 12,000 treasuries of snow, six above and six below; 24,000 myriads of wheels of fire, twelve above and twelve below, surrounding the bridges, the rivers of fire, the rivers of hail, the treasuries of snow, and the ministering angels.^e How many ministering angels are at each entrance? Six for every single human being, and they stand in the midst of the entrances, facing the paths of heaven.^f

5 What does YHWH, the God of Israel, the glorious King, do? The great God, 6 mighty in power, covers his face. • In 'Arabot there are 660 thousands of myriads of glorious angels, hewn out of flaming fire, standing opposite the throne of glory. The glorious King covers his face,^g otherwise the heaven of 'Arabot would burst open in the middle, because of the glorious brilliance, beautiful brightness, lovely splendor, and radiant praises of the appearance of the Holy One,^h blessed be he.

7 How many ministers do his will? How many angels?ⁱ How many princes in the 'Arabot of his delight, feared among the potentates of the Most High, favored and glorified in song and beloved, fleeing from the splendor of the Šekinah, with eyes grown dim from the light of the radiant beauty of their King, with faces black and strength grown feeble?

The Heavenly Qeđuššah

Rivers of joy, rivers of rejoicing, rivers of gladness, rivers of exultation, rivers of love, rivers of friendship pour out^j from the throne of glory, and, gathering strength, flow through the gates of the paths of the heaven^k of 'Arabot, at the melodious sound of his creatures' harps, at the exultant sound of the drums of his wheels, at the sound of the cymbal music of his cherubim. The sound^l swells and bursts out in a mighty rush—

Holy, holy, holy, Lord of hosts, the whole earth is full of his glory.^m

Isa 6:3

Heavenly measurementsⁿ

1 22C R. Ishmael said: Meṭatron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:^b
What is the distance between one bridge and another?^c 12 myriads of parasangs:^d e. "How many bridges . . . ministering angels." Ma'ašeh Merkabah.

f. "Six for every single human being . . . the paths of heaven": emending to w' lekōl biryāh biryāh we'ōmedin betōkām; w' lekōl is from C's wlkwl; we'ōmedin is read by Ma'ašeh Merkabah, and betōkām by the Haggadic Fragment. However, the text is very uncertain.

g. "Covers his face": a reference to the heavenly curtain (see 45:1), or to the thick darkness with which God surrounds himself (b. Hag 12b end, quoting Ps 18:2; Masseket Hekalot 3, BHM, vol. 2, p. 41). See further 45:1, n. a, and 25:7, n. m.

h. "The Holy One": inserting haqqādōš.

i. "Angels": emending to mal'ākīm.

j. "Pour out." Hekalot Rabbati (BHM and BM).

k. "Paths of heaven": See 4QŠirŠabb (šbyly š or šbwly š); Yannai, Qeđušta' for Yom Kippur (ed. Zula, p. 333, l. 97), "Environs of fire . . . paths of water"; Cairo Genizah Hekalot A/2, 3 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 361).

l. "The sound," Hekalot Rabbati (BHM and BM).

m. "Holy . . . his glory." C: "with Qeđuššah, when Israel recites before him, Holy, holy, holy," Hekalot Rabbati (BHM; BM omits "with Qeđuššah").

22C a. A fragment found in C. Vss. 1–3 occur also in Ma'ašeh Merkabah 10 (ed. Scholem, p. 108); in the Haggadic Fragment in BHM, vol. 6, p. 154, and in a quotation by Eleazar (fol. 126a). Vss. 4–7 are also quoted by Eleazar (fol. 78a). Vss. 1–3 deal with the subject of the dimensions of the heavens; vss. 4–7 form a distinct unit of material concerned with the heavenly rainbow.

b. "R. Ishmael said: Meṭatron . . . said to me." C: "R. Ishmael said: I said to Aqiba." Haggadic Fragment.

c. For the motif of the dimensions of the heavens see b. Hag 13a: Re'uyot Yeḥezqe'l. BM, vol. 2, p. 131, ed. Gruenwald, p. 121; Masseket Hekalot 2 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 41).

d. "12 myriads of parasangs." C, Ma'ašeh Merkabah; the Haggadic Fragment omits.

in their ascent 12 myriads of parasangs, and in their descent^e 12 myriads of 2 parasangs. •Between the rivers of fear and the rivers of dread, 22 myriads of parasangs; between the rivers of hail and the rivers of darkness^f, 36 myriads of parasangs; between the chambers of hail^g and the clouds of mercy, 42 34:1: 37:2
 myriads of parasangs; between the clouds of mercy and the chariot, 84 myriads 19:4; 33:3
 of parasangs; between the chariot and the cherubim, 148 myriads of parasangs; 22:11-16
 between the cherubim and the ophanim, 24 myriads of parasangs; between the 25:5-7
 ophanim and the chambers of chambers, 24 myriads of parasangs;^h between the chambers of chambers and the holy creatures, 40,000ⁱ parasangs; between 21:1-4
 one wing and another, 12 myriads of parasangs, and their breadth is the same;
 3 between the holy creatures and the throne of glory, 30,000^j parasangs; •from the foot of the throne of glory to the place where he sits, 40,000 parasangs,^k and his name is sanctified there.

The celestial rainbow

- 4 The arches of the bow rest upon 'Arabot, 1,000 thousand and a myriad of myriads of measures high, by the measure of the Watchers and the holy ones, as it is written, "I have set my bow in the clouds." Now, "I will set in the clouds" is not written here, but "I have set"—already, in the clouds that encircle the throne of glory, when his clouds pass by the angels of hail and the coals of fire.^l 17:3 28:1-10
 Gen 9:13
- 5 The fire of the voice descends to^m the holy creatures, and because of the breath of that voice they "run" to another place, fearing lest it should bid them go; and they "return," lest it should harm them on the other side; therefore "they run and return."ⁿ Ezek 1:25 21:1-4
- 6 Those arches of the bow are fairer and brighter than the whiteness of the sun at the summer solstice;^o they are whiter than blazing fire, and they are
 17:5; 48A:9
- 7 great and fair. •Above them^o the wheels of the ophanim rest upon the arches of the bow, 1,000 thousand and one myriad of myriads high, according to the 25:5-7
 measure of the seraphim and the legions. 26:8-12

e. "Ascent . . . descent": The distinction between "ascent" and "descent" here recalls the distinction between the angelic gatekeepers on the ascent to the Merkabah and the descent in Hekalot Rabbati 22:3 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 99).

f. "Darkness," Eleazar (1), Ma'aseh Merkabah, Haggadic Fragment.

g. "Chambers of hail," C, Ma'aseh Merkabah (the reference is to the heavenly storehouses; see 10:6 and "Theological Importance"); "orders of hail," Eleazar (1), Haggadic Fragment.

h. "Parasangs," Eleazar (1), Ma'aseh Merkabah.

i. "40,000," Eleazar (1), Ma'aseh Merkabah, Haggadic Fragment.

j. "30,000," Ma'aseh Merkabah.

k. Cf. Hekalot Rabbati 10 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 91): "From the throne of his glory and upwards is a distance of 180,000 myriads of parasangs."

l. "When his clouds . . . coals of fire": The text is very obscure. Odeberg translates: "As his clouds pass by, the angels of hail (turn into) burning coal."

m. "To" ('ēsel), Eleazar (2): "from" (mē'ēsel), C. Cf. Ezek 1:15: "There was a wheel on the ground beside the creatures ('ēsel haḥayyōt)."ⁿ The voice, which presumably belongs to God, is derived from Ezek 1:25: "And there was a voice from above the firmament over their [i.e. the creatures'] heads." In Hekalot Rabbati 4:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 86) this idea has been elaborated into six heavenly voices which no one can endure to hear. Cf. also the "still small voice" (qōl demāmāh daqqāh) (1Kgs 19:12) which denotes in the Merkabah texts sometimes a divine voice, and sometimes the singing of the heavenly choirs; see 4QŠirŠabb (see "Relation to Earlier Pseudoepigrapha"); Midraš Konen, BHM, vol. 2, p. 34, l. 24; Hekalot Rabbati 26:8 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 104, l. 6). Note also the "palace of silence" (hēkal demāmāh) (Hekalot Rabbati 3:1, BHM, vol. 3, p. 85, l. 10); "the angels of silence" (mal'akē demāmāh) (Sefer HaRazim 2:21, ed. Margalioth, p. 82); and the angel "Dummi'el," "silence of God" (3En 26:12, n. m). The reading "from the creatures" in C may have been influenced by the etymology of ḥayyōt in b.Ḥag 13b as "the creatures speaking fire"; this would suggest that the fire issues from the creatures.

n. "The sun at the summer solstice," lit. "the sun at the turning point in Tammuz." See the margin.

o. "Above them," Eleazar (2).

The winds of god^a

- 1 23 R. Ishmael said: The angel Meṭatron, Prince of the Divine Presence, said to me:
 How many^b winds blow from under the wings of the cherubim? From there the hovering wind blows,^c as it is written, "God's wind hovered over the water." Gen 1:2
- 2 From there the strong wind^d blows, as it is written, "The Lord drove back the sea with a strong easterly wind all night." Ex 14:21
- 3 From there the east wind^e blows,^f as it is written, "The east wind brought the locusts." Ex 10:13
- 4 From there the wind of quails blows, as it is written, "A wind came from the Lord and it drove quails in." Num 11:31
- 5 From there the wind of jealousy blows, as it is written, "If a wind of jealousy comes upon him." Num 5:14
- 6 From there the wind of earthquake blows, as it is written, "Afterwards the wind of earthquake, but the Lord was not in the earthquake." 1Kgs 19:11
- 7 From there the wind of YHWH blows, as it is written, "He carried me away by the wind of the Lord and set me down." Ezek 37:1
- 8 From there the evil wind blows, as it is written, "And the evil wind left him." 1Sam 16:23
- 9 From there the wind of wisdom and insight, the wind of counsel and power,^g and the wind of knowledge and the fear of YHWH blow, as it is written,
 On him the wind of the Lord rests,
 a wind of wisdom and insight,
 a wind of counsel and power,
 a wind of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord. Isa 11:2
- 10 From there the wind of rain blows, as it is written, "The rain is born of the north wind." Prov 25:23
- 11 From there the wind of lightning blows, as it is written,
 He makes the lightning flash for the downpour and brings the wind out of his storehouses. Jer 10:13
- 12 From there the wind that shatters the rocks blows, as it is written, "Then the Lord himself went by. There came a mighty wind, so strong it tore the mountains and shattered the rocks before the Lord." 1Kgs 19:11
- 13 From there the wind of the abatement of the waters^h blows, as it is written, "God sent a wind across the earth and the waters abated." Gen 8:1
- 14 From there the wind of wrath and sorrowⁱ blows, as it is written, "Suddenly from the wilderness a gale sprang up, and it battered all four corners of the house, which fell in on the young people." Job 1:19
- 15 From there the storm wind blows, as it is written, "Storm wind that obeys his decree." Ps 148:8
- 16 Satan stands among these winds, for there is no storm wind that is not sent by Satan.^j All these winds blow only from beneath the wings of the cherubim, as it is written, "He mounted a cherub and flew, and soared on the wings of the wind." Ps 18:10; 2Sam 22:11

23 a. Chs. 23–24 are secondary since they interrupt the angelological system of 19–22, 25–28. Ch. 22 is on the cherubim and ch. 23 got attached to it because of the reference to the cherubim in 23:1. In the biblical quotations in ch. 23 the key word is rūah. This means both "wind" and "spirit." In several of the texts it must have the latter sense (see e.g. vs. 5), but it has been taken fancifully to mean "wind" throughout. For similar enumerations see Masseketh Hekalot 1 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 40); Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 1, p. 27.

b. "How many." A B E F: "I will tell you how many." C.

c. "Blows." A E F.

d. "Strong wind." A C E F.

e. "East wind." A C E F.

f. "Blows." A E F.

g. "The wind of counsel and power." C.

h. "Waters." A E F; "sea." B.

i. "Wrath and sorrow." A E F.

j. "There is no storm wind that is not sent by Satan," lit. "there is no storm wind but the storm wind of Satan"; so A. FLemb have: "there is no storm wind but Satan" (?). Perhaps the background to this statement is Job 1 (see esp. vss. 12 and 19).

- 17 Whither do all these winds go? It is taught that they go out from under the wings of the cherubim and fall on the orb of the sun, as it is written, "Southward goes the wind, then turns to the north; it turns and turns again; back then to its circling goes the wind."^k From the orb of the sun they go round and fall upon the mountains and the hills, as it is written, "For he it is who formed the mountains, created the wind."^l • From the mountains and hills they go round and fall upon seas and rivers; from the seas and rivers they go round and fall upon towns and cities; from towns and cities they go round and fall upon the garden, and from the garden they go round and fall upon Eden, as it is written, "He walked in the garden at the time of the daily wind." In the midst of the garden they mingle and blow from one side to the other. They become fragrant from the perfumes of the garden and from the spices of Eden,^m until scattering, saturated with the scent of pure perfume,ⁿ they bring the scent of the spices of the gardenⁿ and the perfumes of Eden before the righteous and the godly who shall inherit the garden of Eden and the tree of life in time to come, as it is written,
- Ecc 1:6
Amos 4:13
Gen 3:8
Gen 3:22
- Awake, north wind,
come, wind from the south!
Breathe over my garden,
to spread its sweet smell around.
Let my beloved come into his garden,
let him taste its rarest fruit.
- Song 4:16

The chariots of God^a

- 1 24 R. Ishmael said: The angel Metaṭrōn, Prince of the Divine Presence, the glory of highest heaven,^b said to me:
How many^c chariots has the Holy One, blessed be he?
He has the chariots of the cherubim,^d as it is written, "He mounted a cherub and flew."
2 He has the chariots of wind, as it is written, "He soared on the wings of the wind."
3 He has the chariots of swift cloud, as it is written, "See! the Lord comes, riding a swift cloud."
4 He has the chariots of clouds, as it is written, "I am coming to you in a dense cloud."
5 He has the chariots of the altar, as it is written, "I saw the Lord standing upon the altar."
6 He has the chariots of twice ten thousand, as it is written, "The chariots of God are twice ten thousand, thousands of angels."^e
7 He has the chariots of the tent, as it is written, "The Lord showed himself in the tent, in a pillar of cloud."
- 13:1
Ps. 18:10;
2Sam 22:11
Ps 18:10
Isa 19:1
Ex 19:9
Amos 9:1
Ps 68:17
Deut 31:15

k. "Southward . . . goes the wind": The quotation is given after A E.

l. "Spices of Eden." A E and, substantially, F. For the distinction between Eden and the garden see 5:5. The fragrance of the garden of Eden is mentioned in b.BB 75a; NumR 13:2; Midraṣ Kōnen, BHM, vol. 2, p. 28.

m. "Scent of pure perfume." E F.

n. "Spices of the garden." A E F.

see 13:1, n. a.

c. "How many." A B E F; "I will tell you how many." C.

d. "Chariots of the cherubim." A B C; "chariots of the cherub." E F; cf. 22:11. According to 37:1 God has four chariots; according to Re'uyot Yeḥezqe'l, BM, vol. 2, p. 130 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 119), he has seven, one of which is the "chariot of the cherub." See further 37:1, n. a.

24 a. See ch. 23 n. a. Ch. 24 was introduced after 23 because (1) it contains a list similar to the one in ch. 23, and because (2) 24:1 mentions the cherubim; cf. 23:1 and 22:16.

b. "The glory of highest heaven": Heb. hadar merôm kōl: so A E. For this title of Metaṭrōn

e. The JB translates Ps 68:17, "With thousands of divine chariots the Lord has left Sinai for his sanctuary." For the translation given in the text see Midraṣ Tehillim 68:10 (to Ps 68:17) (ed. Buber, 159b) and 3En 7, n. g.

- 8 He has the chariots of the tent of meeting, as it is written, "The Lord addressed Moses from the tent of meeting." Lev 1:1
- 9 He has the chariots of the mercy seat, as it is written, "He heard a voice that spoke to him from above the throne of mercy." Num 7:89
- 10 He has the chariots of sapphire stone, as it is written, "Beneath his feet there was, it seemed, a sapphire pavement." Ex 24:10
- 11 He has the chariots of eagles, as it is written, "I carried you on eagles' wings." They are not eagles but fly like eagles.^f Ex 19:4
- 12 He has the chariots of acclamation, as it is written, "God has gone up in acclamation." Ps 47:5
- 13 He has the chariots of 'Arabot, as it is written, "Extol him who rides in the 'Arabot." 17:3; 19:7
Ps 68:4
- 14 He has the chariots of clouds, as it is written, "He makes the clouds his chariots." Ps 104:3
- 15 He has the chariots of the creatures,^g as it is written, "The creatures ran and returned"—they run by permission and return by permission, for the Šekinah is above their heads. Ezek 1:14
22:13
- 16 He has the chariots of the wheels, as it is written, "Go in between the wheels." Ezek 10:2
- 17 He has the chariots of the swift cherub, as it is written, "Riding upon a swift cherub."^h When he rides upon the swift cherub, between placing one foot on its back and placing the other foot on it, he perceives 18,000 worldsⁱ at a glance; he discerns and sees into all of them, and knows all that is in them, as it is written, "Eighteen thousand round about."^j Ezek 48:35
- How do we know that he views every one of them each day? Because it is written,
- The Lord is looking down from heaven
at the sons of men,
to see if a single one is wise,
if a single one is seeking God. Ps 14:2
- 18 He has the chariots of the ophanim, as it is written, "The ophanim were covered all over in eyes." Ezek 10:12
- 19 He has the chariots of the holy throne, as it is written, "God sits on his holy throne." Ps 47:8
- 20 He has the chariots of the throne of Yah, as it is written, "A hand upon the throne of Yah." Ex 17:16
- 21 He has the chariots of the throne of judgment, as it is written, "The Lord of hosts shall be exalted in judgment." Isa 5:16
- 22 He has the chariots of the throne of glory, as it is written, "A throne of glory, set high from the beginning." Jer 17:12
- 23 He has the chariots of the high and exalted throne, as it is written, "I saw the Lord sitting on a high and exalted throne."^k Isa 6:1

f. "They are not eagles but fly like eagles." A B (the subject is "the chariots"); C E F omit. The words are an obvious gloss.

g. "The creatures," C E F; "life," A B.

h. "Swift cherub" (kerāb qal): a fusion of the "cherub" (kerāb) of Ps 18:11 (ET, 18:10) and the "swift cloud" ('āb qal) of Isa 19:1. The "swift cherub" is mentioned also in b.AZ 3b; cf. PRE 4 (ed. Friedlander, p. 25, n. 3).

i. "18,000 worlds": perhaps to be identified with the worlds which God created and rejected prior to the creation of the present world; see GenR 3:7: "The Holy One, blessed be he, went on creating worlds and destroying them until he created this one and declared, 'This one pleases me; those did not please me.'" In other texts, however, the 18,000 worlds clearly coexist with the present world, but they constitute a region of ultimate mystery into which God alone can penetrate; see b.AZ 3b; Midraš Konen, BHM, vol. 2, p. 34, l. 16; Baraita 'diMa'ašeh Bere'šit, ed. Séd, p. 72; Seder Gan 'Eden, BHM, vol. 3, p. 139.

j. "When he rides . . . round about," A.

k. Vss. 15–23 contain a short angelological system which runs (in ascending rank): creatures — wheels — cherubim — ophanim — thrones. With the list of thrones in vss. 19–23 cf. Masseket Hekalot I (BHM, vol. 2, p. 40).

The names of God^a

1 48B The Holy One, blessed be he, has seventy names^b which may be expressed, and the rest, which may not be expressed, are unsearchable and without number. These are the names which may be expressed:^c 3:2; 29:1; 48C:9

- (1) Hadiriron^d YHWH of Hosts, Holy, Holy, Holy; (2) Meromiron;
- (3) Beroradin; (4) Ne'uriron; (5) Gebiriron; (6) Kebiriron; (7) Dorriron;
- (8) Sebiroron; (9) Zehiron; (10) Hadidron; (11) Webidriron;
- (12) Wediriron; (13) Peruriron; (14) Hisiridon; (15) Ledoriron;
- (16) Ťatbiron; (17) Ťatiriron; (18) 'Adiriron; (19) Dekiriron; (20) Lediriron;
- (21) Ťeririron; (22) Tebiriron; (23) Taptapiron; (24) 'Ap'apiron;
- (25) Ťapŝapiron; (26) Ťapŝapiron; (27) Gaggapiron; (28) Raprapiron;
- (29) Dapdapiron; (30) Qapqapuron; (31) Haphapiron; (32) Wapwapiron;
- (33) Pappapiron; (34) Zapzapiron; (35) ŤapŤapiron; (36) 'Ap'apiron;
- (37) Mapmapiron; (38) Sapsapiron; (39) Napnapiron; (40) Laplapiron;
- (41) Wapwapiron; (42) Kapkapiron; (43) Haphapiron;^e (44) Tabtabib, that is Yah, the greater YHWH;^f (45) 'Ab'abib; (46) Qabqabib; (47) Ťabŝabib; 12:5; 48D:1(90)
- (48) Babbabib; (49) Ťabŝabib; (50) Gabgabib; (51) Rabrabib;
- (52) Harabrabib; (53) Pabpabib; (54) Habhabib; (55) 'Ab'abib;
- (56) Zabzabib; (57) Sabsabib; (58) Haŝaŝabib; (59) ŤabŤabib; (60) Wesisib;
- (61) Pabpabib; (62) Basbasib; (63) Papnabib; (64) Lablabib;
- (65) Mabmabib; (66) Nupkabib; (67) Mammambib; (68) Nupnubib;
- (69) Paŝpabib; (70) Ťaŝŝabib.^g

These are the names of the Holy One, blessed be he, which go forth adorned with many crowns^h of fire, with many crowns of flame, with many crowns of lightning, with many crowns of haŝmal, with many crowns of lightning flash, from before the throne of glory, and with them go a thousand camps of Ťekinah, and myriads of myriads of the hosts of the Almighty, conducting them like a king, with trembling, terror, fear, and quaking, with praise, glory, and dread, with trepidation, greatness, honor, and dignity, with strength and with great jubilation and singing, with pillars of fire and pillars of flame, with bright lightning flashes and with the appearance of haŝmal. •They give to them glory and strength, and cry before them, "Holy, holy, holy," as it is written, "And one cried to another and said, Holy, holy, holy." They roll them through every heaven in the height, like the sons of kings,ⁱ noble and revered, and when they 48B a. The translation of chs. 48BCD is based on Wert; see "Texts." These chs. did not belong originally to 3En; they were taken from the Alphabet of Aqiba and attached to 3En in the A B recension of the text. See further 48C, n. a.

b. "Seventy names": See margin and cf. the Targum to Song 2:17, and the piyyut for musap on the second day of Ťabu'ot: "God is called by seventy names and his people he chose from seventy nations." Midraŝ Haggadol to Gen 46:8 gives a list of seventy non-mystical names of God. NumR 14:5 refers to a seventy-letter or seventy-syllable divine name ("Seventy shekels . . . alludes to the fact that Gabriel came and added to Joseph's name one letter from the name of the Holy One . . . and taught him seventy languages"). However, a seventy-two-letter magical name of God is more common; see PR 15:17 (ed. Friedmann, 76b); Pesiqta' deRab Kahana 5:11 (ed. Buber, 52b); Rashi to b.Sukk 45a; Seper Razi'eI 24b.

c. The list which follows is found only in Wert. Crac omits it, but has the editorial note "Here are written 22 names according to the alphabet 'albam; 22 according to the alphabet 'atbaŝ; and 22 according to taŝraq." This information does not appear to be correct; the names are not based on temurot.

d. "Hadiriron . . .": The vocalization of many of the names on this list is uncertain.

e. Names 2–43 are all followed by "YHWH of Hosts, Holy, Holy, Holy" in the MS, but for the sake of brevity this formula is omitted.

f. "The greater YHWH," or "great YHWH": The name corresponds to Metatron's title "the lesser YHWH"; see 12:5; 48D:1(90).

g. Names 45–70 are all followed by "that is Yah, the greater YHWH," in the MSS, but for the sake of brevity this formula is omitted.

h. "Adorned with many crowns": Cf. Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 24: "the letters of the divine name are adorned with crowns of lightning"; Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 36: "The letters on the chariot go out to meet the Holy One with songs . . . and the Holy One crowns each one with two crowns"; Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 25: "The Holy One, blessed be he, sits on a fiery throne and round about him stand sacred names like pillars of fire."

i. "Like the sons of kings." A G Crac: "like the sons of angels." B E F.

bring them back to the place of the throne of glory, all the creatures of the chariot open their mouths in praise of the glorious name of the Holy One, blessed be he, and say, "Blessed be the glory of the Lord in his dwelling place."ⁱ

21:1-4
Ezek 3:12

Short account of the elevation of Enoch^a

- 1 48C ^a*Alep*: The Holy One, blessed be he, said: I made him strong, I took him, I appointed him, namely Meṭaṭron my servant, who is unique among all the denizens of the heights.

10:3

^a*Alep*: "I made him strong"^b in the generation of the first man. When I saw that the men of the generation of the Flood were behaving corruptly, I came and removed my Šekinah from their midst, and I brought it^d up with the sound of the horn and with shouting to the height above, as it is written,

5:1; Gen 1:27

4:3

5:14

God went up to the sound of horns,
the Lord went up with a fanfare of trumpets.

Ps 47:5

- 2 Lamed: "I took him"—Enoch the son of Jared, from their midst, and brought him up with the sound of the trumpet and with shouting to the height, to be my witness, together with the four creatures of the chariot, to the world to come.

4:3

4:5

21:1-4

- 3 Peh: "I appointed him"—over all the storehouses and treasures which I have in every heaven, and I entrusted to him the keys of each of them. I set him as a prince over all the princes,^c and made him a minister of the throne of glory. [I set him over] the palaces of 'Arabot, to open for me their doors; over the throne of glory, to deck and arrange it; over the holy creatures,^e to adorn their heads with crowns; over the glorious ophanim, to crown them with strength and honor, over the majestic cherubim, to clothe them with glory; over the bright sparks,^h to make them shineⁱ with brilliant radiance; over the flaming seraphim, to wrap them in majesty; over the ḥašmallim of light, to gird them with radiance every morning, so as to prepare for me a seat, when I sit upon my throne in honor and dignity, to increase my honor and my strength in the height. I committed to him wisdom and understanding, so that he should behold^j the secrets of heaven above and earth beneath

10:6

4:5

7

17:3

22:11f.

25:5-7

22:11-16

26:8-12

7: 26:4; 36:2

10:5; 11:1f.

j. "Blessed be the glory . . . dwelling place." Wert; "Blessed be the name of his glorious kingdom for ever and ever." A B E F G Crac. For the responsa of the Qeđuššah see "Theological Importance."

48C a. The material taken over from the Alphabet of Aqiba and attached to the end of the A B recension of 3En (see 48B, n. a) consists of two main components. First, 48C:1-9: These verses are structured in the form of an acrostic on the first letter of the Heb. alphabet (^a*Alep*) and evidently constitute the core of the Alphabet of Aqiba traditions. Second, 48B, 48C:10-12, and 48D: This material contains secondary expansions of the acrostic section.

b. "I made him strong" or "I made him pre-eminent": Heb. 'ibbartiw, from 'abbir = (1) "strong"; (2) "eminent." Since Enoch's elevation is not treated till later, 'ibbartiw must refer to something that took place during his lifetime. The verb 'ibbēr is used of hardening one's heart in b.Sanh 109b; perhaps it refers here to Enoch's determination to be righteous in a sinful generation. The verb also occurs in Midraš 'Alpa'

Betot 2 end (BM, vol. 2, p. 427, l. 27): the use there is very similar to that here, but the sense is equally uncertain. Here the "generation of the first man" is regarded as extending down to the time of the Flood; cf. the tradition that Adam lived till the time of Enoch and was buried by him (Seder 'Olam 1, ed. Neubauer, p. 26). For the expression "the first man" ('ādām ḥārī'šōn) see b.BB 75a.

c. "I came": emending to bū'ti.

d. "I brought it up," B; "I brought him up," A G; "I went up," Wert Crac.

e. "Princes," A B G Crac; "heavens," Wert.

f. "[I set him over]"; (wēšamtīw 'al), or a similar phrase, has accidentally fallen out of the MSS.

g. "Over the holy creatures": Cf. Hekalot Rabbati 11:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 91): "When the Angel of the Presence enters to exalt and arrange the throne of God's glory and to prepare a seat for the Mighty One of Jacob, he adorns the ophanim of glory with a thousand thousand crowns . . ."

h. "The bright sparks," Crac.

i. "To make them shine," A B.

j. "I committed . . . should behold," Crac.

- 5 I increased his stature by seventy thousand parasangs,^k above every height, among those who are tall of stature. I magnified his throne from the majesty
 6 of my throne. I increased his honor from the glory of my honor. •I turned his flesh to fiery torches and all the bones of his body to coals of light. I made the appearance of his eyes^l like the appearance of lightning, and the light of his eyes like “light unfailing.”^m I caused his face to shine like the brilliant light of the sun, the brightness of his eyes like the brilliance of the throne of glory.
 7 I made honor, majesty, and glory his garment; beauty, pride, and strength, his outer robe, and a kingly crown, 500 times 500 parasangs, his diadem. I bestowed on him some of my majesty, some of my magnificence, some of the splendor of my glory, which is on the throne of glory, and I called him by my name,ⁿ “The lesser YHWH, Prince of the Divine Presence, knower of secrets.”^o Every secret I have revealed to him in love, every mystery I have made known to him in uprightness.
 8 I have fixed his throne at the door of my palace, on the outside,^p so that he might sit and execute judgment over all my household in the height. I made every prince stand before him to receive authority from him and to do his will.^q
 9 I took seventy of my names and called him by them, so as to increase his honor. I gave seventy princes into his hand, to issue to them my commandments in every language; to abase the arrogant to the earth at his word; to elevate the humble to the height at the utterance of his lips;^r to smite kings at his command; to subdue rulers and presumptuous men at his bidding; to remove kings from their kingdoms, and to exalt rulers over their dominions, as it is written,

He controls the procession of times and seasons;
 he makes and unmakes kings;

Dan 2:21

to give wisdom to all the wise of the world, and understanding and knowledge to those who understand, as it is written,

He confers wisdom on the wise,
 and knowledge on those with wit to discern;

Dan 2:21

- 10 to reveal to them the secrets of my word, and to instruct them in the decree of my judgment, •as it is written, “So the word that goes from my mouth does not return to me empty: he carries out my will.” It does not say here, “I carry out,” but, “he carries out,”^s which teaches us that Meṭatron stands^t and carries out every word and every utterance that issues from the mouth of the Holy One, blessed be he, and executes the decree of the Holy One.
 11 It is written,^u “He shall prosper to whom I send it”; “I shall prosper”^v is not written here, but “he shall prosper”: This teaches that every decree that goes out from^w the Holy One, blessed be he, against a man, when he repents, it is not executed against him, but against another, wicked man,^x as it is written,

Isa 55:11

Isa 55:11

k. “Seventy thousand parasangs”: Cf. 9:2, though the measurement is not given there. The relative stature of the angels is an indication of their rank; see PR 20:4 (ed. Friedmann, p. 97a): “The angel Hadarni’el, who is sixty myriads of parasangs taller than his fellows.”

l. “The appearance of his eyes”: emending to mar’eh ’enāyw; otherwise read mar’ehū, “his appearance,” with G.

m. “Light unfailing,” A B G Crac; Wert omits.

n. “By my name,” A Crac Wert; B omits.

o. “Knower of secrets”: Cf. Hekalot Rabbati 26:8 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 104, l. 17): “Metatron . . . wise in secrets.”

p. “On the outside,” A G Crac Wert; B omits.

q. “To do his will,” B G Crac; “to do my will,” A Wert.

r. “At his word . . . at the utterance of his lips”: emended text; Wert has, “at my word . . . at the utterance of my lips.”

s. “He carries out”: The English versions (e.g. RSV, JB) construe “(unless) it [i.e. God’s word] carries out.”

t. “Metatron stands”: There is perhaps a stress on Meṭatron’s standing posture; cf. 10:1, n. b, and 16:5.

u. A gloss catching up the exposition of Isa 55:11 in the previous verse.

v. “I shall prosper,” A B G.

w. “From,” lit. “from before”; so A B Wert; “from the mouth of,” G Crac.

The virtuous man escapes misfortune,
the wicked man incurs it instead.

Prov 11:8

12 Moreover, Meṭatron sits for three hours every day in the heavens above, and assembles all the souls of the dead that have died in their mothers' wombs, and of the babes that have died at their mothers' breasts, and of the schoolchildren that have died while studying the five books of the Torah. He brings them beneath the throne of glory,^y and sits them down around him in classes, in companies, and in groups, and teaches them Torah, and wisdom, and haggadah, and tradition, and he completes for them their study of the scroll of the Law, as it is written,

15B:1

To whom shall one teach knowledge, whom shall one instruct in the tradition?
Them that are weaned from the milk,
them that are taken from the breasts.^z

Isa 28:9

The seventy names of Meṭatron

1 48D Meṭatron has seventy names,^a and these are they:

3:2; 4:1; 48C:9

- (1) Yaho^xel^b Yah; (2) Yoppi^{el}; (3) ³Apap^{el}; (4) Margay^{el}; (5) Geyor^{el};
- (6) Tandu^{el}; (7) Taṭnadi^{el}; (8) Taṭri^{el}; (9) Taṭtabi^{el}; (10) ³Ozahyah;
- (11) Zaḥzahyah; (12) ^cEbed; (13) Zebuli^{el}; (14) Šapšapi^{el}; (15) Sopri^{el};
- (16) Pašpaši^{el}; (17) Senigrōn; (18) Sarpupirin; (20) Miṭatron;^d
- (20) Sigron; (21) ³Adrigon; (22) ³Astas; (23) Saqqas; (24) Saqqus;
- (25) Mikon; (26) Miṭon; (27) Ruah Pišqonit;^e (28) ³Atayyah;^f
- (29) ³Asasyah; (30) Zagzayah; (31) Pašpašyah; (32) Mešamyah;
- (33) Mašmašyah; (34) ³Abšannis; (35) Mebargaš; (36) Bardaš;
- (37) Mekarkar; (38) Mašpad; (39) Tašgaš; (40) Tašbaš; (41) Meṭarpiṭaš;
- (42) Pašpišahu; (43) Bešihi; (44) ³Itmon; (45) Pišqon; (46) Šapšapyah;
- (47) Zerah Zerahyah; (48) ³Ab³abyah; (49) Habhabyah; (50) Papatpalyah;
- (51) Rakrakyah; (52) Hašasyah; (53) Taṭpapyah; (54) Tamtamyah;
- (55) Šašahyah; (56) ^cAr^caryah; (57) ^cAl^calyah; (58) Zazruyah;
- (59) ^cAramyah; (60) Sebar Suhasyah; (61) Razrazyah; (62) Taḥsanyah;
- (63) Sasrasyah; (64) Šabšebibyah; (65) Qeliqalyah; (66) Hahhahyah;
- (67) Warwahyah; (68) Zakzakyah; (69) Tiṭrisyah; (70) Sewiryah;
- (71) Zehapnuryah; (72) Za^zayah; (73) Galrazyah; (74) Melakmelapyah;
- (75) ^cAtayyah; (76) Perišyah; (77) ^cAmqaqyah; (78) Šašalyah;

x. "Another, wicked man," A B; "another man," Crac Wert and, substantially, G.

y. "Beneath the throne of glory": Meṭatron's tabernacle is located beneath the throne; see 15B:1.

z. Cf. the tradition in b. AZ 23b that God also instructs the prematurely dead.

48D a. "Seventy names," A B G Wert; "seventy-two names," Crac. B adds: "which the Holy One, blessed be he, took from his own name and bestowed on him." The list of names is based on Wert. The other MSS have many variants and Crac gives only the last name. On the forms of the names see "Theological Importance." Though the text records that there are seventy names, the actual list has more than seventy. There are two possible explanations of this fact: The original list of seventy has been expanded at various stages in the course of its transmission. Or, the list given here is not original but was added to the text at a late date, after the original list had dropped out. See n. n below. Lists of the names of Meṭatron, some of them with elaborate commentaries, are a distinct genre of mystical literature (see e.g. Seper Habešeḡ, BM MS Add. 27120, and Šemot šel Meṭatron, Bodleian MS 1748). In Hekalot Rabbati 26:8 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 104, l. 13) we find an early list of eight names of Meṭatron.

b. "Yaho^xel": See "Theological Importance."

c. "Ebed": short for "Ebed YHWH," "the Servant of the Lord"; see 10:3, n. g.

d. "Miṭatron": a common variant form of Meṭatron; see e.g. Re'uyot Yebezeḡe'l, BM, vol. 2, p. 132, l. 14 (ed. Gruenwald, p. 130).

e. "Ruah Pišqonit": i.e. "the interceding [or "arguing"] spirit." The expression occurs again in b. Sanh 44b: "the interceding spirit said before the Holy One, blessed be he . . ." The Tosapote identify this spirit as Gabriel. b. Sanh 44b also quotes the view of R. Hanina that the interceding spirit has three names: "Pišqon, because he argues [pōšēq debārīm] against the Most High; ³Itmon, because he hides [ōtēm] the sins of Israel; and Sigron, because when he closes [šō-gēr] a matter none can reopen it."

- (79) Şaḅşabyah; (80) Ge'it Ze'ityah; (81) Ge'ityah; (82) Perişperişyah;
 (83) Şepaṭ Şepatyah; (84) Ḥasamyah; (85) Śar Śaryah; (86) Gebir
 Geburyah; (87) Gurṭaryah; (88) Ziwa' Rabba';^s (89) Na'ar Ne'emān;^h 12:5
 (90) lesser YHWH, after the name of his Master, as it is written, "My name is in him"; (91) Rabrakī'el; (92) Ne'amī'el; (93) Seganzag'el, Prince of Wisdom.ⁱ
- 2 Why is his name called Seganzag'el? Because all the storehouses of wisdom
 3 were committed into his hand. •All of them were opened for Moses on Sinai, 8:1f.;10:6
 until he had learned, in the forty days that he stood on the mount, Ex 34:28 Torah in the seventy aspects of the seventy languages; 29:1
 the Prophets in the seventy aspects of the seventy languages;
 the Writings in the seventy aspects of the seventy languages;
 halakot in the seventy aspects of the seventy languages;
 haggadot in the seventy aspects of the seventy languages;
 traditions in the seventy aspects of the seventy languages;
 toseptas in the seventy aspects of the seventy languages.
- 4 As soon as they were completed, at the end of forty days, he forgot them all in a moment—until the Holy One, blessed be he, summoned Yepipyah, the Prince of Torah,^j and he gave them as a gift^k to Moses, as it is written, "The Lord gave them to me." After that he remembered the Torah.^l How do we know he remembered it? Because it is written, "Remember the Torah of my servant Moses, to whom at Horeb I prescribed laws and customs for the whole of Israel": "the Torah of Moses" refers to the Torah, the Prophets, and the Writings; "laws" refers to halakot and traditions; "customs" refers to haggadot and toseptas; all these were given to Moses on Sinai.^m Deut 10:4
 Mal 4:4
- 5 These are the seventyⁿ names—each of them like the sacred name on the chariot, engraved^o on the throne of glory—which the Holy One, blessed be 39:1
 he, took from his sacred name and bestowed on Meṭaṭron—seventy names by which the ministering angels address the King of the kings of kings in heaven above. He bestowed on him the twenty-two seals^p which were struck out^q by 13:1
 his finger, by which all the orders of the heaven of 'Arabot were sealed; by
- f. "Aṭaṭyah": found as a name of the angel of the third heaven (= ? Michael) in Re'uyot Yehezq'e'l, BM, vol. 2, p. 132, l. 14 (ed.
 Gruenwald, p. 130).
- g. "Ziwa' Rabba'": i.e. "the Great Glory."
 This was originally a title of God; see TLevi 3:4; 1En 14:20, 102:3. The expression occurs also in Mandaean texts, e.g. Right Ginza 76:1, aiar ziua rba, "the Great Radiant Ether."
- h. "Na'ar Ne'emān": i.e. "the faithful serv-vant"; see 4:10, n. t for Meṭaṭron's title Na'ar;
 note further the "faithful servant" (ebed ne'emān)
 in Hekalot Rabbati 3:1 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 85).
- i. "Seganzag'el," Wert; "Segansag'el," B.
 This angelic name (with many variations) is found frequently in the Merkabah texts and sometimes designates an angel distinct from Meṭaṭron: See Cairo Genizah Hekalot B/1, 17 and 40 (ed.
 Gruenwald, pp. 368 and 370); Hekalot Rabbati 6:3 (BM, vol. 1, p. 75). The title "Prince of Wisdom" appears to be equivalent to "Prince of Torah": See n. j below.
- j. "The Prince of Torah": Wert adds "As it is written, 'Of all men you are the most handsome [yopyāpitā, with a play on Yepipyah], your lips are moist with grace, for God has blessed you for ever'" (Ps 45:2). The text follows A B G Crac. TarJon to Deut 34:6 names Meṭaṭron, Yopi'el, Uri'el, and Yepipyah as "Princes of Wisdom," i.e. Princes of Torah; see "Theological Importance." According to the parallel passage in Ma'yan Hokmah, BHM, vol. 1, p. 61, it was the fear of the angels that caused Moses
- to forget the Law. On the theme of angelic opposition to the revelation of the Law to Moses see 3En 15B:2, n. e.
- k. "As a gift": See b.Ned 38a: "At first Moses used to study the Torah and forget it, until it was given him as a gift."
- l. "Remembered the Torah": Wert adds "and did not forget it again." Text follows A B G Crac.
- m. "On Sinai," Wert; B has "In the height [mārôm], on Sinai." Both the oral and the written Torah were given to Moses on Sinai; see ExR
 47:1; b.Ber 5a.
- n. "Seventy," B; "ninety-two," A G Crac Wert. See n. a above.
- o. "Engraved": Wert Crac (which are followed in the text) have a singular participle which must agree with "the sacred name." B has a plural participle which goes with "the seventy names."
- p. "Twenty-two seals," A G Crac Wert;
 "twenty-two letters," B. The seals are magical divine names; see Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol.
 3, p. 25 (cited in 39:1, n. a); Hekalot Rabbati
 17:1–5 (BHM, vol. 3, pp. 95f.); Masseket Hekalot 4 (BHM, vol. 2, p. 43, l. 4); cf. 7 (BHM,
 vol. 2, p. 47); Ma'ašeh Merkabah 11 (ed. Scholem, p. 108, l. 17); 15 (p. 109, l. 28). In incantation texts these seals are used to bind the powers of angels or demons.
- q. "Struck out": The Heb. verb ib' is used of minting coins.

which the destinies^r of the princes of kingdoms in the height, with regard to sovereignty, dominion, greatness,^s and majesty, were sealed; by which the destinies of the Angel of Death and the destinies of every nation and kingdom were sealed. 17:3

6 The angel Metatron, Prince of the Divine Presence, Prince of Torah; the angel, Prince of Wisdom; the angel, Prince of Understanding; the angel, Prince of Glory; the angel, Prince of the Palace; the angel, Prince of Kings; the angel, Prince of Rulers; the angel, Prince of the exalted, lofty, great and honored
7 Princes, who are in heaven and earth, said, •“YHWH the God of Israel is my witness that when I revealed this secret to Moses, all the armies of the height,
8 in every heaven, were angry with me. They said to me, •“Why are you revealing this secret to mankind, born of woman, blemished, unclean, defiled by blood and impure flux, men who excrete putrid drops—that secret^t by which heaven and earth were created, the sea and the dry land, mountains and hills, rivers and springs, Gehinnom, fire and hail, the garden of Eden and the tree of life? By it Adam was formed, the cattle and the beasts of the field, the birds of heaven and the fish of the sea, Behemoth and Leviathan, the unclean creatures and reptiles, the creeping things of the sea and the reptiles of the deserts, Torah, wisdom, knowledge, thought, the understanding of things above, and the fear of heaven. Why are you revealing it to flesh and blood?””

I said to them, “Because the Omnipresent One has given me authority from the high and exalted throne, from which all the sacred names proceed with fiery lightnings, with brilliant sparks^u and flaming ḥašmallim.” •But their minds were not set at ease until the Holy One, blessed be he, rebuked them and drove them out of his presence with a rebuke, saying to them, “I wished, I desired, I ordered it, and entrusted it to Metatron my servant alone, because he is unique among all the denizens of the heights. •Metatron brought it out from my storehouses and committed it to Moses,^v and Moses to Joshua, Joshua to the Elders, the Elders to the Prophets, the Prophets to the Men of the Great Synagogue, the Men of the Great Synagogue to Ezra the Scribe, Ezra the Scribe to Hillel the Elder, Hillel the Elder to R. Abbahu, R. Abbahu to R. Zira, R. Zira to the Men of Faith, and the Men of Faith to the Faithful—so that they should use it to admonish men and to heal the diseases that befall the world, as it is written, “Then he said, If you listen carefully to the voice of the Lord your God and do what is right in his eyes, if you pay attention to his commandments, and keep his statutes, I shall inflict on you none of the diseases that I inflicted on the Egyptians, for it is I, the Lord, who gives you healing.””^w

r. “Destinies,” lit. “lots” (peṭāqim). Cf. Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 63, l. 18: The destinies of every nation, save Israel, are in the keeping of Negarsan’el, the angel of Gehinnom.

s. “Greatness,” A B Crac.

t. “That secret”: The secret could be either (1) the Torah, or (2) the secret names of God. For the cosmic power of the Torah see GenR 1:1, and for angelic opposition to the revelation of Torah see 5:10, n. 1. The identification of the secret with the Torah appears to be excluded by the fact that Torah is one of the things created by the secret. On the theme of the cosmic power of divine names see 42:1–7; Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 26: “Names by which heaven and earth were sealed, sea and dry land . . .”

u. “With brilliant sparks”: emending to ūbe-zīqē.

v. Vs. 10 gives a chain of mystical tradition similar to the chains of tradents of the oral law: Cf. m.Ab 1:1. The chain, however, has many missing links since Ezra lived in the mid-5th cent. B.C., Hillel in the late 1st cent. B.C., and Abbahu in the late 3rd cent. A.D.! Hillel was a prominent Palestinian Pharisaic teacher; Abbahu was head of the rabbinic academy at Caesarea Maritima; Zira (= Ze’ira) was a Babylonian who associated with Abbahu. The expressions “men of faith” (anšē ’emūnāh) and “faithful” (ba’alē ’emūnāh) appear to be quasi-technical terms for the mystics: See Hekalot Rabbati 26:3 (BHM, vol. 3, p. 103, l. 10); cf. “Men of Knowledge” (anšē maddā) in Sefer HaRazim 1:199f. (ed. Margalioth, p. 72). According to the Alphabet of Aqiba, BHM, vol. 3, p. 29, l. 11, “the men of faith” constitute a distinct category of the righteous in the world to come.

w. The use of Ex 15:26 as an incantation is condemned in m.Sanh 10:1: “R. Aqiba says, ‘He that utters a charm over a wound and says, ‘I will inflict on you none of the diseases . . . [Ex 15:26],’ . . . has no part in the world to come.’” According to Ma’yan Ḥokmah, BHM, vol. 1, p. 61, l. 18, “a word of healing” was one of the secrets committed to Moses when he ascended to heaven to receive the Torah. In an Aram. incantation text Metatron is called “The Great Healer” (syh rb).

SIBYLLINE ORACLES

(Second Century B.C.—Seventh Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY J. J. COLLINS

Sibylline oracles are a widely attested phenomenon in the ancient world. They are found invariably in epic Greek hexameters (perhaps under the influence of the Delphic oracle) but the phenomenon was not peculiar to Greece. Many of the alleged Sibyls were Asiatic and their type of prophecy is widely assumed to have come to Greece from the East, although there is no clear evidence to support (or refute) this view.¹ No satisfactory etymology of the word "Sibyl" has been proposed,² so no light is thrown on the phenomenon from this source. In the earliest attestations, from the fifth and fourth centuries B.C., the word "Sibyl" refers to a single individual.³ It is quite possible that the word was originally the proper name of a prophetess.

The Sibyl is always depicted as an aged woman uttering ecstatic prophecies. Ovid tells us that she was granted by Apollo that she might live as many years as there were grains of sand on the seashore. However, she did not ask for youth, so she remained for thousands of years a shriveled, shrunken old woman.⁴ According to Heracleides Ponticus (c. 360–25 B.C.) the Sibyl was older than Orpheus.⁵ If any historical prophetess ever underlay the figure of the Sibyl, she was already lost in the mists of legend by the fifth century. According to Heraclitus she "reaches through thousands of years" with her voice.⁶ Her prophecy was even said to continue after her death, while her soul revolved in the face of the moon.⁷ She was sometimes thought to be intermediate between the divine and human state, and a coin from Erythraea refers to her as Thea Sibylla, "the Goddess Sibyl."⁸ In Jewish tradition she was said to be a daughter (or daughter-in-law) of Noah.⁹

As from the fourth century B.C. we read of a number of Sibyls.¹⁰ The most famous Sibyls were those of Erythraea and Marpeessus in Asia Minor and of Cumae in Italy.¹¹ Various attempts were made in late antiquity to reduce the chaotic plurality to order by making lists. The most influential list was that of Varro, who enumerated ten, Persian, Libyan, Delphic, Cimmerian, Erythrean, Samian, Cumean, Hellespontian, Phrygian, and Tiburtine.¹² Notably the Hebrew, Chaldean, and Egyptian Sibyls are omitted from this list. The Suda and the anonymous Prologue to the present collection of Sibylline Oracles repeat this list but identify the Persian Sibyl with the Hebrew. In the Middle Ages the number was increased to twelve,

¹ See A. Rzach, "Sibyllen," Pauly-Wissowa 2A (1923), cols. 2073f.

² See the discussion of the various proposed etymologies by V. Nikiprowetzky, La Troisième Sibylle, p. 2.

³ So Heraclitus, in Plutarch, De Pythiae oraculis 6 (397a); Aristophanes, Peace 1095–117; Plato, Phaedrus 244b.

⁴ Ovid, Metamorphoses 14.132.

⁵ Clement, Strom 1.108.1. Cf. ShepHerm Vis 1.2.2 where an aged woman appears who at first is thought to be the Sibyl, but then is identified as the Church (Vis 2.4.1).

⁶ Plutarch, De Pythiae oraculis 6 (397a).

⁷ See further Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, col. 2079.

⁸ Ibid., col. 2078.

⁹ Cf. SibOr, Prologue 33, 1.289, 3.827.

¹⁰ Cf. Aristotle, Problemata 954a, and Heracleides Ponticus in Clement, Strom 1.108.1.

¹¹ On the individual Sibyls see especially the discussion by Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2081–103. Also A.-M. Kurfess, Sibyllinische Weissagungen, pp. 9–16.

¹² Lactantius, Divlnst 1.6.

to correspond to the twelve apostles.¹³ We find a shorter list in Pausanias 10.12.1–9 where only four are mentioned: the Libyan Sibyl, Herophile of Marpessus (whom he identifies with the Delphic Erythrean and Samian Sibyls), Demo of Cumae, and Sabbe of the Hebrews (whom some call Babylonian, some Egyptian). The name of the Hebrew Sibyl, Sabbe or Sambethe (so the Suda and the anonymous Prologue to the Sibylline Oracles), is as enigmatic as the term “Sibyl.” Derivations range from Sibtu, Queen of Mari and the Queen of Sheba, to the Jewish sabbath or the divine epithet Sabaoth.¹⁴ There is no conclusive evidence to tie the name to any one etymology.

Also obscure is the relation between the Hebrew Sibyl and the Babylonian (or Chaldean). Pausanias reports that some people identified Sabbe as a Babylonian Sibyl and said that she was daughter of Berossus. Berossus was a Chaldean priest who lived in the first quarter of the third century B.C. He was said to be an astrologer, and he wrote a history of Babylonia which began with the myths of the creation of the world and ended with a prediction of cosmic destruction.¹⁵ Such a well-known historical figure could not possibly be the father of the legendary Sabbe.

In Sibylline Oracles 3.809f. the Sibyl says that she has come from Babylon. The same book, Sibylline Oracles 3.97–161, contains a description of the fall of the tower of Babel and a euhemeristic account of Greek mythology. Since the work of Bousset and Geffcken this passage has been widely accepted as a fragment of the Babylonian Sibyl.¹⁶ The relation of that Sibyl to Berossus is then explained by postulating that Berossus derived material from the Sibyl or vice versa. However, close examination of the passage in Sibylline Oracles 3 reveals no evidence of Babylonian origin.¹⁷ The story of the fall of the tower is a natural expansion of the biblical narrative. The euhemeristic account of Greek mythology may well be a borrowing from another source but there is no reason to suspect that the source was Babylonian. In fact there is no extant oracle or fragment that can be attributed to a Babylonian Sibyl.¹⁸ Such a Sibyl may possibly have existed but any alleged relationship to the Jewish Sibyl or to Berossus must be purely hypothetical. The outline of Berossus’ history, which has a cosmic sweep from creation to final destruction, bears obvious analogy to many of the Sibylline books. This analogy may be due to a historical influence which cannot now be traced, but the analogy itself may have been enough to give rise to the supposed relationship between the Sibyl and Berossus.

The nature of Sibylline oracles

The most characteristic feature of Sibylline oracles is the prediction of woes and disasters to come upon mankind. In the words of the Erythrean Sibyl, the Sibyl was “foreseeing on behalf of men hardships difficult to bear.” In this they show some similarity to the Old Testament prophets, since “from remote times the prophets . . . prophesied war, famine and plague for many countries and for great kingdoms” (Jer 28:8). Further, like the prophets, their words of doom are often directed against specific peoples and cities, and occasionally, at least, a ray of hope does penetrate their message, indicating restoration after the destruction. The disasters are due to the wrath of the gods, which can be incurred by ritual offenses, but also, especially in the Jewish and Christian oracles, by ethical violations. The fragments of the pagan Sibyls which have survived are relatively brief and describe either the Sibyl herself and her relationship with the gods—especially Apollo—or woes to come upon specific ¹³ So the Chronicum paschale, ed. L. Dindorfius (Bonn, 1832), 1.201f.

¹⁴ See the discussion of Nikiprowetzky, La Troisième Sibylle, pp. 12–16, and most recently J. M. Rosenstiehl and J. G. Heintz, “De Sibtu, la reine de Mari, à Sambethe.” RHPR 52 (1972) 13–15.

¹⁵ See P. Schnabel, Berossus und die babylonisch-hellenistische Literatur (Leipzig, 1923). The authenticity of the passage that refers to cosmic destruction (Seneca, Naturales quaestiones 3.29.1) has been questioned by Jacoby (FGH, vol. 3C, pp. 395–97) and others because it is the first such reference in Babylonian literature. However, this is not an adequate reason to reject the attribution. Berossus may well have derived the idea from a non-Babylonian source.

¹⁶ W. Bousset, “Die Beziehungen der ältesten jüdischen Sibylle zur Chaldäischen,” ZNW 3 (1902) 23–50; J. Geffcken, “Die Babylonische Sibylle,” Nachrichten der königlichen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen, Phil.-Hist. Kl. (1900) 88–102.

¹⁷ See the detailed discussion of Nikiprowetzky, La Troisième Sibylle, pp. 15–36.

¹⁸ SibOr 3.381–87 is ascribed to a Babylonian Sibyl by S. K. Eddy, The King Is Dead, p. 127. The same passage is attributed to a Persian Sibyl by J. Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit. Neither attribution has any basis other than the reference to the destruction of Babylon.

places.¹⁹ None of them is extensive enough to show the pretended outline of the entire course of world history which we find in some of the Jewish and Christian books.

For this reason some scholars tend to distinguish sharply between the early Sibylline oracles and the longer continuous oracles found in our collection, and see the prototype of the later Sibylline oracles in the long poem attributed to Lycophron, the Alexandra.²⁰ Lycophron lived in the first half of the third century B.C., but since vss. 1446–50 of the poem seem to refer to the battle of Cynoscephalae in 197 B.C., many scholars think the attribution is false. The Alexandra consists of an allegorical ex eventu prophecy, put in the mouth of Alexandra or Cassandra, daughter of Priam, which dwells at length on the fate of the heroes after the Trojan War, but also (in vss. 1412–50) deals with Greek and Roman history in the hellenistic age. The poem is notoriously difficult, partly because of the allegorical language, which can be highly confusing—Agamemnon is referred to as Zeus and vice versa. The poem has a clear political tendenz. It glorifies the Trojans and prophesies the exaltation of their descendants, the Romans. Yet the prophetic form of the poem is a clear literary fiction—no one ever suggested that it was a real prophecy of Cassandra.

The Alexandra shows a number of features characteristic of the later Sibylline oracles which are not found in the extant pagan fragments, most notably extended ex eventu prophecy, which might be taken as an attempt to cover the whole course of world history, from the earliest known events to the present time. It also emphasizes the theme of the conflict between East and West, a favorite subject of the Sibylline oracles.²¹ Yet it is by no means clear that this poem was the prototype of the Sibylline oracles. Ex eventu prophecy was a common device in Greek drama—Cassandra herself figured in the Oresteia of Aeschylus. Also the Erythrean (or Marpessan) Sibyl was said to have prophesied about Helen, the war between Asia and Europe, and the fall of Troy;²² therefore, most probably, an ex eventu prophecy of some length was ascribed to her. It is more likely that Lycophron, or Pseudo-Lycophron, modeled his poem on the Sibylline form than vice versa.

Neither the Alexandra nor the Erythrean Sibyl divide world history into a set number of periods, in the manner typical of the later Sibylline oracles. However, such periodization of history was certainly a feature of the pagan Sibyls as can be seen by Virgil's reference to the ultima aetas, "final age," of the Cumean Sibyl in the Fourth Eclogue. The periodization of history was probably a relatively late development in the Sibylline tradition (i.e. after 400 B.C.) under Persian influence.²³

The Roman Sibylline oracles

The most famous collection of Sibylline oracles in antiquity was the official one at Rome. Legend places the origin of these oracles in the time of Tarquinius Priscus.²⁴ This probably indicates that the Romans had acquired a collection of oracles in Greek hexameters before the fall of the monarchy.²⁵ These oracles were entrusted to special keepers, first two men, then ten, finally fifteen.²⁶ They were consulted only in time of crisis for the state, and the consultation had to be authorized by a decree of the senate. No other body of literature was accorded such official authority in the Greco-Roman world.

¹⁹ The fragments of the pagan Sibyls can be found in C. Alexandre, Oracula Sibyllina, vol. 2, pp. 118–47. To these should be added the Oslo fragment published by G. Crönert, "Oraculorum Sibyllinorum fragmentum Osloense," Symbolae Osloenses 6 (1928) 57–59.

²⁰ So especially M. J. Wolff, "Sibyllen und Sibyllinen," Archiv für Kulturgeschichte 24 (1934) 312–25. Cf. also Kurfess, Sibyllinische Weissagungen, pp. 19f. On the Alexandra see J. J. Collins, The Sibylline Oracles of Egyptian Judaism, pp. 8, 128 n. 67.

²¹ Alexandra 1283–450. See E. Kocsis, "Ost-West Gegensatz in den jüdischen Sibyllinen," NovT 5 (1962) 105–10.

²² Pausanias 10.12.1–9.

²³ See K. Kerényi, "Das Persische Millennium im Mahabharata, bei der Sibylle und Vergil," Klio 29 (1936) 1–35; D. Flusser, "The Four Empires in the Fourth Sibyl and in the Book of Daniel," Israel Oriental Studies 2 (1972) 148–75.

²⁴ The legend is recounted in the anonymous Prologue to the Sibylline Oracles. See also Dionysius of Halicarnassus, Roman Antiquities 4.62.

²⁵ On the Roman Sibylline oracles see Hermann Diels, Sibyllinische Blätter (Berlin, 1890); A. Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2103–16; W. Hoffmann, Wandel und Herkunft der Sibyllinischen Bücher in Rom (diss., Leipzig, 1933); and most recently R. Bloch, "L'Origine des Livres Sibyllins à Rome: Méthode de recherche et critique du récit des annalistes anciens," Neue Beiträge zur Geschichte der Alten Welt (Berlin, 1965) Bd. 2, pp. 281–92.

²⁶ See Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, col. 2106.

When the temple of Jupiter was burned down in 83 B.C. the Sibylline books were destroyed. When the temple was rebuilt in 76 B.C. oracles were collected from various Sibylline centers, especially Erythraea.²⁷ In view of the diverse origins of these oracles it is probable that the collection was made up of short oracles rather than long continuous ones. The content of these oracles may have varied. Tibullus, 2.5.66–78, suggests that they were preoccupied with prodigies and portents. One of the main extant examples of Roman Sibyllines deals with the birth of an androgyne, who will have “all the male characteristics and those which young girls show forth,” and the other prescribes rituals for the occasion of the founding of the Ludi Saeculares, “Secular Games.”²⁸ The use to which these oracles were put could vary too. In the early fifth century the Sibylline oracles were used as the authority for founding temples to Greek gods.²⁹ In 173 B.C. they were consulted when the Romans were alarmed by prodigies during a war with Macedonia.³⁰ In general they were consulted in serious crises of any kind.

The function of Sibylline oracles

Besides the superstitious fascination with prodigies to which they attest, Sibylline oracles (like other oracles and prophecies) seem to have functioned widely as political propaganda.³¹ Callisthenes wrote that both Apollo of Didyma and the Erythraean Sibyl prophesied Alexander’s coming kingship.³² Nicanor, who like Callisthenes accompanied Alexander on his campaigns, is cited by Varro for the statement that the Persian Sibyl was oldest of all.³³ Nicanor’s interest in the Sibyl strongly suggests that there were Sibylline oracles that had a bearing on Alexander’s campaign. Plutarch associates Sibylline oracles primarily with political upheavals.³⁴ In A.D. 12 the Emperor Augustus destroyed more than two thousand prophetic verses, including some Sibylline verses, because he found them politically subversive.³⁵ The fact that some Sibylline books were spared by exception shows that their prestige in Rome was exceptional, but does not mean that they were devoid of political significance. It should also be remembered that the idea of a golden age, which Virgil apparently derived from the Cumaean Sibyl, was closely bound to the expectation of an ideal monarch. Accordingly, it lent itself readily to political propaganda, whether or not the relevant Sibylline sources had such a purpose.

All the Sibylline oracles were, of course, essentially religious. Prodigies, portents, and political crises were all related to the will of the gods and often related to matters of right worship (so, for example, the extant Roman Sibylline oracles). The pagan Sibyl spoke for Apollo, as surely as her Jewish counterpart spoke for Yahweh.

The Sibylline oracles, like all oracles in antiquity, were subject to interpolation, falsification, and manipulation.³⁶ This fact was well known in the ancient world. The Sibyls were mercilessly parodied by Aristophanes and Lucian,³⁷ while Cicero and even Plutarch show themselves aware of the deceptions of oracle-mongers.³⁸ Nevertheless, the prestige of these oracles was enormous. It was doubtless because of the high esteem in which these prophecies were held that Jewish and Christian writers used the form so extensively to present their own messages.

Text

The present collection of Sibylline oracles is composed of two distinct collections in ²⁷ Dionysius of Halicarnassus 4.62.5f.

²⁸ For the text of these oracles see Jacoby, FGH, vol. 2B, pp. 1179–91, also Alexandre, Oracula Sibyllina, vol. 2, pp. 242–52. For bibliography see Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, p. 124, nn. 33f.

²⁹ See H. W. Parke, Greek Oracles (London, 1967), p. 52.

³⁰ Livy 42.2.6.

³¹ See Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, ch. 1.

³² Strabo 17.1.43 (814).

³³ Lactantius, DivInst 1.6. See Eddy, The King Is Dead, p. 11.

³⁴ Plutarch, De Pythiae oraculis 398.

³⁵ Suetonius, Augustus 31.1.

³⁶ See especially A. D. Nock, “Oracles théologiques,” Revue des études anciennes 30 (1928) 280–90, and “Religious Attitudes of the Ancient Greeks,” Proceedings of the American Philosophical Society 85 (1942) 472–82.

³⁷ See the texts in Alexandre, Oracula Sibyllina, vol. 2, pp. 140–47.

³⁸ Cicero, De divinatione 2.54.110f.; Plutarch, De Pythiis oraculis 25.

manuscript.³⁹ The first consists of the two manuscript groups usually referred to as ϕ and ψ and contains books 1–8. In group ϕ only, these are preceded by the anonymous Prologue. The collection in ϕ begins with the present book 1, which gives an account of creation, while ψ begins with book 8, which has a strong interest in Christology. ϕ lacks 8.487–500.

The second collection consists of the group of manuscripts known as Ω . This begins with a ninth book, made up of material already found in the first collection: book 6, then a single verse, which has been placed at the beginning of book 7 since the edition of Alexandre, then 8.218–428. Then follows book 10, which is identical with book 4 of the first collection, and then books 11–14. The first two books of the second collection should be numbered 9 and 10, in sequence after the first collection. Since these books merely reduplicate material found in books 1–8 they are omitted in the editions, but the numbering of books 11–14 is retained. Hence the anomaly whereby there are no books 9 and 10 in the present collection.

The chief manuscripts in each group are:

Ω :

- M: Codex Ambrosianus E64 sup. (15th cent.)
 Q: Codex Vaticanus 1120 (14th cent.)
 V: Codex Vaticanus 743 (14th cent.)
 H: Codex Monacensis gr. 312 (1541)
 Z: Codex Hierosolymitanus Sabaiticus 419 (end of 14th cent.)

ϕ :

- A: Codex Vindobonensis hist gr. XCVI 6 (15th cent.)
 P: Codex Monacensis 351 (15th cent.)
 B: Codex Bodleianus Baroccianus 109 (end of 15th cent.)
 S: Codex Scorialensis II Σ 7 (end of 15th cent.)
 D: Codex Vallicellianus gr. 46 (16th cent.)

ψ :

- F: Codex Laurentianus plut. XI 17 (15th cent.)
 R: Codex Parisinus 2851 (end of 15th cent.)
 L: Codex Parisinus 2850 (1475)
 T: Codex Toletanus Cat 99.44 (c. 1500)

The abundant quotations in the Church Fathers also provide important evidence to the text.

The first edition was published in Basel in 1545 by Xystus Betuleius (Sixtus Birken). It was based on manuscript P and contained only the first eight books. Only in the nineteenth century were books 11–14 first published, when Angelo Mai discovered manuscripts M, Q, and V (1817–28). The first complete edition was that of C. Alexandre, who published the Prologue and books 1–8 and the fragments in 1841, and books 11–14 in 1853. The two major editions are those of A. Rzach, Oracula Sibyllina (1891) and J. Geffcken (who incorporated suggestions of K. Buresch, L. Mendelssohn, and U. Wilamowitz-Möllendorf), Die Oracula Sibyllina (1902). Opinions are divided as to which is the better edition. In general, Rzach prints emendations more readily, which gives a smoother text, but one which on occasion improves the manuscripts unduly. Geffcken is more cautious. His work is also more extensively informed by other oracular literature. The present translation is based on Geffcken's text. Occasions where other readings are followed (those of Rzach, those suggested in Geffcken's apparatus or others) are listed in the notes.

Mention should be made of the contributions of A.-M. Kurfess in Sibyllinische Weissagungen (1951), which gives a text and German translation of books 1–11, and in several articles.⁴⁰ For book 3 see V. Nikiprowetzky, La Troisième Sibylle (1970).

³⁹ For full discussion of the text of the Sibylline Oracles see J. Geffcken, Die Oracula Sibyllina, pp. XXI–LIII. Also Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2119–22.

⁴⁰ See especially Kurfess, "Ad Oracula Sibyllina ed. Geffcken (1902)," Symbolae Osloenses 28 (1950) 95–104; 29 (1952) 54–77; "Zu den Oracula Sibyllina," Colligere Fragmenta (A. Dold Festschrift; Beuron, 1952) pp. 75–83.

Date

The dates of the various Sibylline books range from the mid-second century B.C. to the seventh century A.D. The dates of the individual books will be discussed in the separate introductions that follow. Books 3, 4, and 5 and the fragments were known to Clement of Alexandria at the end of the second century. These, and books 6, 7, and 8 were known to Lactantius about A.D. 300. The Prologue must be dated about A.D. 500, since it depends on the Theosophy, which contains at the end a chronicle from Adam to Caesar Zenon (474–91) and therefore was written after or during the latter's reign. The Prologue was probably composed for the first collection of Sibylline oracles as found in ϕ .⁴¹

Provenance

The provenance of the individual books will also be discussed in the separate introductions that follow. Approximately half the collection can be ascribed to Egypt—books 3, 5, 11–14. Other books can be traced (with varying degrees of probability) to Syria (4, 6, 7), to Asia Minor (1/2), or only to an undetermined region of the Near East (most of SibOr 8).

Historical importance

Despite their wealth of historical allusions, the Sibylline oracles cannot be expected to provide reliable chronological or factual data. Some books, especially the later ones, show only the vaguest knowledge of the events they describe. The stylized presentation of the oracles is in any case not intended for factual reporting. The main historical value of the books lies in their representation of popular attitudes in the realm of politics, the legend-laden view of kings and empires, and the hopes and fears of Eastern peoples under first Greek and then, for most of the books, Roman rule. In particular they are a major source for the ideology of resistance to Rome throughout the Near East.⁴² Historical interest is notably lesser in the oracles that are clearly Christian (6, 7, and parts of 1, 2, and 8).

Theological importance

The theological importance of the Sibylline oracles lies perhaps less in their actual content than in the phenomenon which they represent—the attribution of inspired Jewish and Christian oracles to the pagan Sibyl. It is true, of course, that the Sibyl was identified as the daughter (or daughter-in-law) of Noah. However, Christian apologists explicitly emphasized that she was pagan, hoping thereby to establish her as an independent witness to the truth of the Christian faith. The logic of this position is clearly stated by Lactantius, Epitome Institutionum 68 (73):

Therefore since all these things are true and certain, foretold by the harmonious prediction of all the prophets, since Trismegistus, Hystaspes and the Sibyl all uttered the same things, it is impossible to doubt that hope of all life and salvation resides in the one religion of god . . .

Even before Christian writers adapted the Sibyls for their apologetic purposes, the oracles represented a remarkable attempt to find a mode of expression common to Jews (or Christians) and gentiles. As such the Jewish Sibylline oracles originated in the apologetic literature of hellenistic Judaism. The willingness to incorporate material from pagan oracles shows a significant readiness to build on the common human basis of Jews and gentiles. At least the earliest oracles in Sibylline Oracles 3 express a very positive attitude to their gentile neighbors. Later, after the destruction of the Temple, the Jewish oracles, e.g. Sibylline Oracles 5, adopt a more negative attitude but persist in using the international Sibylline form.

⁴¹ See Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2119f.

⁴² See especially H. Fuchs, Der geistige Widerstand gegen Rom in der antiken Welt; Eddy, The King Is Dead; and R. MacMullen, Enemies of the Roman Order (Cambridge, 1966) pp. 128–62.

⁴³ See F. Christ, Die Römische Weltherrschaft in der antiken Dichtung (Stuttgart, 1938).

ESCHATOLOGY

In content, the Sibylline oracles are dominated by eschatology. The only books that do not contain significant eschatological passages are Sibylline Oracles 11–13, and even there eschatological passages may well have been lost or displaced. The eschatology of the Jewish oracles is political in nature: It is concerned with the advent of a glorious kingdom and the transformation of the earth. As such it was a suitable medium of propaganda for the hellenistic world. A similar interest in the transformation of the earth under an ideal ruler is also found throughout the hellenistic world. The most famous example is Virgil's Fourth Eclogue, and, in general, such an earthly eschatology was well harnessed in the service of Roman propaganda.⁴³ However, political eschatology also functioned widely in the ideology of resistance to Rome (and earlier to Greece) in the Near East. The best-known examples are the Egyptian Demotic Chronicle and Potter's Oracle, and the Persian Oracle of Hystaspes and Bahman Yasht, and of course the Jewish apocalyptic literature.⁴⁴

The negative side of this eschatology is the threat of the destruction of the world, usually by fire. Here again plentiful parallels can be found in the pagan world, especially in Persian eschatology and in the Stoic concept of the ekpurōsis, "conflagration."⁴⁵ The idea of the conflagration is often associated with the Flood, as the two great destructions which punctuate the history of the world. (So especially SibOr 1/2 and 4.) The idea of a twofold destruction of the world is related to that of the Great Year, which is attested in some Greek writings.⁴⁶

Periodization is ubiquitous in the Sibylline Oracles. Usually history is divided into ten generations, but the pattern of four kingdoms also occurs, at least in Sibylline Oracles 4. The division of history into ten periods ultimately derives from Persian religion,⁴⁷ but it is also found widely in Jewish apocalyptic.⁴⁸

The affinities of the Sibylline Oracles with pagan eschatology are further augmented by the incorporation of popular motifs and legends. The most famous example is the legend that Nero would return as an eschatological adversary at the head of a Parthian host, which is especially prominent in Sibylline Oracles 4, 5, and 8.⁴⁹ Another example is provided by the schema of four kingdoms in Sibylline Oracles 4.⁵⁰

Only in the Christian books do we find extensive interest in the fate of the individual after death. Belief in a resurrection is attested in the Jewish Sibylline Oracles 4 but only very tersely. There is some doubt as to how much of the judgment scene in Sibylline Oracles 2 is Jewish or Christian. However, the developed interest in the sufferings of the condemned is most prominently displayed in Sibylline Oracles 2, which is largely Christian, the Christian Sibylline Oracles 7, and the Christian parts of Sibylline Oracles 8. Sibylline Oracles 2 is especially characterized by its detailed interest in the fiery sufferings of the damned. Even in the Christian books, however, the paradise of the resurrected saints is an earthly one, depicted in terms of a transformation of the earth.

MORAL EXHORTATION

The eschatology of the Sibylline Oracles usually provides a framework for exhortation. Destruction is a punishment for sins and can be avoided by certain righteous actions. The sins in which the Sibyl expresses most interest are idolatry and sexual offenses, while most of the standard ethical prohibitions of injustice, violence, etc., are also present. The polemic against idolatry is found throughout and is related to the Sibyl's repeated insistence on monotheism. All forms of sexual offenses are condemned, but special reproach is poured on homosexuality. It should be noted that the sexual polemics usually are not inspired by asceticism but rather by a concern for natural law. Only in Sibylline Oracles 2.51, in a Christian passage, is virginity commended as a virtue. While both polemic against idolatry and against homosexuality are typical features of Jewish apologetic, both can also be paralleled amply in the preachings of gentile moralists.

⁴⁴ See Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, ch. 1.

⁴⁵ Ibid., ch. 6.

⁴⁶ Ibid., pp. 101f.

⁴⁷ Cf. n. 23 above.

⁴⁸ Especially the Apocalypse of Weeks in 1En 93; 91:12–17; and 11QMelch. See n. b on SibOr 2.15.

⁴⁹ Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, pp. 80–87.

⁵⁰ See especially Flusser, Israel Oriental Studies 2 (1972) 148–75.

One further vice that is frequently condemned, especially in Sibylline Oracles 8, is greed. At this point the religious polemic of the oracles is more directly related to the political polemic that often surrounds it.

Cultural significance

The impact of the Sibylline oracles on the culture of the West lies mainly in their impact on the theological tradition. The oracles are quoted hundreds of times in the Church Fathers.⁵¹ They were important enough to find a place in the Emperor Constantine's "Speech to the Saints."⁵² More significant, however, was the fact that production of Sibylline oracles continued down through the Middle Ages, and had an important influence on millenarian thinking, notably on Joachim of Fiore.⁵³ The Tiburtine Sibyl was especially popular in the Middle Ages.⁵⁴ In liturgical circles the fame of the Sibyl was perpetuated by her mention in the Dies irae of Tomas a Celano. About 1600, Orlando di Lasso composed a polyphonic arrangement of Sibylline prophecies.⁵⁵

The impact of the oracles on secular culture was not great and was probably most significant in the Latin poets. In addition to Virgil's use of the Cumean Sibyl, echoes of the oracles have been found in Horace and Juvenal, although it is not certain that there was literary dependence.⁵⁶ The depictions of the tortures of the damned in Sibylline Oracles 2 are echoed in a long tradition of Western writing, most notably in Dante's Inferno. However, this tradition is not specifically indebted to the Sibyl, but to the broader phenomenon of apocalyptic literature.

One final area in which the influence of the Sibylline oracles should be noted is that of art. Michelangelo juxtaposed five Sibyls (Persian, Erythrean, Delphic, Cumean, and Libyan) with the Old Testament prophets in the Sistine Chapel. Raphael used four Sibyls (Cumean, Persian, Phrygian, and Tiburtine) to adorn Santa Maria della Pace in Rome. Various other painters depicted individual Sibyls.⁵⁷ Eschatological motifs of the Sibylline tradition such as the Antichrist figure also appear in medieval art, but specific influence of the Sibyl is more difficult to establish in these cases.

⁵¹ See B. Thompson, "Patristic Use of the Sibylline Oracles," The Review of Religion 6 (1952) 115-36.

⁵² Kurfess, Sibyllinische Weissagungen, pp. 208-22.

⁵³ B. McGinn, "Joachim and the Sibyl," Citeaux 24 (1973) 97-138; Kurfess, Sibyllinische Weissagungen, pp. 344-48; Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2169-83.

⁵⁴ For the text of the Tiburtine Sibyl see E. Sackur, Sibyllinische Texte und Forschungen (Halle, 1898) pp. 177-87; Kurfess, Sibyllinische Weissagungen, pp. 262-78. See also P. J. Alexander, The Oracle of Baalbek: The Tiburtine Sibyl in Greek Dress (Dumbarton Oaks Studies 10; Washington, 1967).

⁵⁵ On the influence of the oracles on the Western Church see further E. S. Demougeot, "Jérôme, les oracles sibyllins et Stilicon," Revue des études anciennes 54 (1952) 83-92; K. Prumm, "Der Prophetenamt der Sibyllen in kirchlichen Literatur," Scholastik 2 (1929) 54-77, 221-46, 498-533.

⁵⁶ See especially a series of articles by A.-M. Kurfess: "Horaz und die Sibyllinen," ZRGG 8 (1956) 253-56; "Juvenal und die Sibylle," Judaica 10 (1954) 60-63 (also Historisches Jahrbuch 76 [1957] 79-83); "Virgil's vierte Ekloge und die Oracula Sibyllina," Historisches Jahrbuch 73 (1954) 120-27; and "Virgil's 4 Ekloge und die christlichen Sibyllinen," Gymnasium 62 (1955) 110-12. See also F. Dornseiff, "Die sibyllinischen Orakel in der augusteischen Dichtung," Römische Dichtung der augusteischen Zeit (Berlin, 1960) pp. 43-51. For traces of the Sibyl in medieval English literature see W. L. Kinter, Prophetess and Fay. A Study of the Ancient and Mediaeval Tradition of the Sibyl (Ph.D. diss.; Columbia, New York, 1958). Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2180f., cites a few instances of Sibylline influence on German literature.

⁵⁷ Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2181f.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 184–88.
 Dellings, Bibliographie, pp. 155f.
 Denis, Introduction, pp. 111–22.

TEXTS

- Alexandre, C. Oracula Sibyllina I. Paris, 1841 (Part 1), 1853 (Part 2). (Text, Lat. translation and nn. to the entire twelve books and fragments.)
 Geffcken, J. Die Oracula Sibyllina. GCS 8; Leipzig, 1902. (Gk. text and apparatus. It also contains a valuable apparatus of religio-historical parallels.)
 Rzach, A. Oracula Sibyllina. Leipzig, 1891. (Gk. text and apparatus, with a list of parallels to Homer and Hesiod.)

TRANSLATIONS

- Bate, H. N. The Sibylline Oracles, Books III–V. London, 1918. (Introduction, translation, and nn. to SibOr 3–5.)
 Kurfess, A.-M., and McL. Wilson, R. “Christian Sibyllines,” HSW, vol. 2, pp. 703–45. (Translation of SibOr 1.323–400; 2.34–55, 149–347; books 6–8; and the Latin Prophetia sibillae magna from the 4th or 5th cent. A.D. with biblical cross-references.)
 Lanchester, H. C. O. “The Sibylline Oracles,” APOT, vol. 2, pp. 368–406. (Introduction, translation, and nn. to SibOr 3–5.)
 Terry, M. S. The Sibylline Oracles. New York, 1890. (Translation of the twelve books into English blank verse.)

THE MOST IMPORTANT OTHER TRANSLATIONS ARE

- Blass, F. “Die Sibyllinischen Orakel,” APAT, vol. 2, pp. 177–217. (Introduction, translation, and nn. to books 3–5.)
 Kurfess, A.-M. Sibyllinische Weissagungen. Berlin, 1951. (Gk. text [without apparatus], German translation, and nn. to SibOr 1–11. Also contains other relevant texts—Virgil’s Fourth Eclogue, Constantine’s Speech, extracts from Lactantius and the Theosophy, and the Tiburtine Sibyl.)
 A new German translation of “Sibyllinen,” by Dr. Merkel for JSHRZ, was announced but not yet available when this manuscript was sent to press.

STUDIES

- Alexandre, C. Oracula Sibyllina II. Paris, 1856. (A collection of excursus on particular topics with a useful collection of the pagan Sibylline fragments.)
 Bousset, W. “Sibyllen und Sibyllinische Bücher,” Real-Encyclopedie der protestantische Theologie und Kirche 18 (1906) 265–80. (A review of the phenomenon of Sibylline prophecy and of the individual books.)
 ———. The Antichrist Legend. London, 1896. (An important collection of eschatological passages from Christian writers which frequently parallel the Sibylline Oracles.)
 Collins, J. J. The Sibylline Oracles of Egyptian Judaism. SBLDS 13; Missoula, 1974. (Date, provenance, context, and motifs of SibOr 3–5.)
 Eddy, S. K. The King Is Dead. Lincoln, Nebraska, 1961. (Important though erratic study of the resistance literature of the hellenistic Near East.)
 Fuchs, H. Der geistige Widerstand gegen Rom in der antiken Welt. Berlin, 1938. (Brief but richly documented study of Near Eastern resistance literature in the Roman period.)
 Geffcken, J. Komposition und Entstehungszeit der Oracula Sibyllina. TU N.F. 8.1; Leipzig, 1902. (Date and provenance of each of the twelve books.)

- Nikiprowetzky, V. La Troisième Sibylle. Etudes Juives 9; Paris, 1970. (Extensive introduction, Gk. text, French translation, and nn. to SibOr 3.)
- Peretti, A. La Sibilla Babilonese nella propaganda ellenistica. Firenze, 1943. (A study of SibOr 3 against the background of Near Eastern propaganda such as Berossus.)
- Pincherle, A. Gli Oracoli Sibillini Giudaici. Rome, 1922. (Merits mention as one of the few book-length studies, but contributes little to the discussion.)
- Rzach, A. "Sibyllinische Orakel," "Sibyllen," Pauly-Wissowa 2A (1923), cols. 2073–183. (Extensive review of the phenomenon of Sibylline prophecy and of the individual Sibylline books.)

Further bibliography on particular books and topics will be found in the notes to the introductions of the individual books. The older literature on the oracles is listed by Lanchester, APOT, vol. 2, p. 376. At the time this manuscript was sent to press studies by V. Nikiprowetzky, "La Sibylle Juive depuis Ch. Alexandre," for ANRW, and by J. J. Collins, "The Development of the Sibylline Tradition," for the same volume, were announced but not yet available.

An extensive bibliography can be found in Collins, The Sibylline Oracles.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES, PROLOGUE

Introduction

The Prologue is found only in manuscript group ϕ . It is anonymous and its exact provenance is unknown. It can be dated no earlier than the sixth century A.D. since it depends on the Theosophy, which in turn refers to Caesar Zenon (474–91) and can be no earlier than the end of the fifth century.¹

The Prologue explains briefly why its author decided to collect the Sibylline Oracles. It then gives a list of ten Sibyls and recounts the legendary origin of the Sibylline books at Rome. It appeals to Lactantius for a defense of the value of the oracles. Finally it concludes by citing a few parallels in Sibylline Oracles 3.1–45, in the Sibylline fragments, and in the Pseudo-Orphic fragments.

SIBYLLINE ORACLES

Prologue

If the hard labor involved in reading Greek literature produces great benefit for those who accomplish it, inasmuch as it is able to make those who toil at these things very learned, it befits the wise much more to busy themselves with the sacred writings—inasmuch as they 5 treat of God and the things which provide spiritual benefit—•and gain from that source a double profit throughout being able to benefit both themselves and those who meet them. For these reasons, therefore, I decided to set forth the oracles called Sibylline, which are
10 found scattered and confusedly read and recognized, •in one continuous and connected book, so that they might be easily reviewed by the readers and award their benefit to them, by expounding a not inconsiderable number of necessary and useful things, and making the 15 study at once more valuable and more diversified. •For they expound very clearly about Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, the divine Trinity, source of life;^a about the incarnate career of our Lord and God and Savior Jesus Christ; the birth, I mean, from an unchanging virgin,^b
20 and the healings performed by him; •similarly his life-giving passion and resurrection from the dead on the third day and the judgment which will take place, and the retribution for what we all have done in this life. In addition to these things they clearly recount the things which are expounded in the Mosaic writings and the books of the prophets, about the creation 25 of the world, •the fashioning of man and the expulsion from the garden and again the new formation. In manifold ways they tell of certain past history, and equally, foretell future events, and, to speak simply, they can profit those who read them in no small way.

The name “Sibyl”

30 “Sibyl” is a Latin word, interpreted as “prophetess,” that is to say “seer.” •Therefore the female seers were called by one name. Now Sibyls, as many have written, have lived in various times and places, and are ten in number.^c First, then, the Chaldean, that is to say the Persian, who is called by the proper name Sambethe,^d who is of the family of the most 35 blessed Noah. She is said to have prophesied the career of Alexander the Macedonian. •^e

SibOr
1.289;
3.827

¹ Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, col. 2120.

a. Or “which rules over life.”

b. Lit. “without flux.” The expression is used with reference to the son in trinitarian discussions, so the flux in question can scarcely be physical.

c. So also Varro in Lactantius, DivInst 1.6; Tübingen Theosophy, 75.

d. So the Suda (C. Alexandre, Oracula Sibyllina II, Excursus 1, 84).

e. Callisthenes, in Strabo 17.1.43 (814).

Nicanor, who wrote the life of Alexander, mentions her.^f Second, the Libyan, of whom Euripides made mention in the prologue of the Lamia. Third, the Delphian, who was born in Delphi, of whom Chrysippus spoke in the treatise on divinity. Fourth, the Italian, at 40 Cimmeria in Italy, whose son was Evander •who founded the shrine of Pan at Rome which is called Lupercum.^g Fifth, the Erythrean, who also prophesied about the Trojan war.^h Apollodorus the Erythrean confirms her. Sixth, the Samian, who is called by the proper name Phyto, about whom Eratosthenes wrote. Seventh, the Cumean, who is called Amaltheia 45 who is also Erophile, but with some, Taraxandra. Virgil calls the Cumean Deiphobe, daughter of Glaucus.ⁱ Eighth, the Hellespontian, born in the village Marmessus, around the small town Gergition. She was once within the boundaries of Troy in the times of Solon and Cyrus, as Heracleides Ponticus wrote.^j Ninth, the Phrygian. Tenth, the Tiburtian, Abounaea by name.

The Cumean Sibyl

50 They say that the Cumean brought nine books of her own prophecies to Tarquinius Priscus, who then ruled the Roman state, and asked three hundred didrachms for them.^k She was 55 slighted, and was not asked what was contained in them •so she consigned three of them to the fire. Again, in another approach to the king, she brought forward the six books and asked the same sum. She was considered of no account, so she again burned three more. Then, a third time, she approached, bringing the three that were left, and asked the same
 60 price, saying that if he did not accept she would burn them also. •Then, they say, the king read them and was amazed. He gave a hundred didrachms for them and took them, and he entreated her about the others. When she answered that she did not have the equivalent of what had been burned, and could not know anything of the sort without inspiration, but that 65 sometimes certain people had selected from various cities and regions what they considered necessary and beneficial •and that a collection must be made from them, they did this also with all speed. For that which was given by God did not escape notice, though it truly lay hidden in a nook. The books of all the Sibyls were deposited in the Capitol of ancient Rome.
 70 Those of the Cumean were concealed and not released to many •since they expressed what would happen in Italy very precisely and clearly, but those of the others were known to all. Those of the Erythrean have as superscription this name by which she is called, derived from the region. But the others are not inscribed as to what belongs to whom, but are not 75 distinguished. •Now Firmianus,^l a not inconsiderable philosopher, and priest of the aforementioned Capitol, looking toward Christ, our eternal light, set forth in his own works what had been said by the Sibyls about the ineffable glory, and capably refuted the absurdity of 80 Greek error. His powerful commentary •was in Latin, but the Sibylline verses were set forth in Greek. That this may not appear incredible, I will provide a testimony of the aforementioned man as follows:^m When the Sibylline verses found with us can easily be despised by those who are knowledgeable in Greek culture, not only because they are easily available (for 85 things which are rare are thought valuable) •but also because not all the verses preserve metrical accuracy, he has a rather clear argument. This is the fault of the secretaries, who did not keep pace with the flow of speech or even were ignorant, not of the prophetess. For the memory of what had been said ceased with the inspiration. With regard to this even Plato
 90 said •that they describe many great things accurately while knowing nothing of what they say.ⁿ

For my part, therefore, I will set forth as much as possible of what has been handed on in Rome by the elders.

Now she expounded about the God who had no beginning, as follows:

f. Varro, in Lactantius, DivInst 1.6.

g. Ovid, Fasti 2.279f.

h. Lactantius, DivInst 1.6; Pausanias 10.2.2.

i. Virgil, Aeneid 6.36.

j. Clement, Strom 1.108.1–3.

k. Dionysius of Halicarnassus, Roman Antiquities 4.62.

l. Better known as Lactantius. He is not otherwise known to have been a priest of the Capitol.

m. Kurfess, following Erbse, conjectures that some Lat. words are missing here.

n. Meno 99d. Vss. 86–91 appear to be derived, not from Lactantius, but from Justin, Cohortatio ad Graecos 37.15 (Geffcken). For vss. 91–100, however, see Lactantius, DivInst 1.6.

One God, the creator

95 One God, who alone rules, exceedingly great unbegotten but God alone, one highest of all, who made heaven and sun and stars and moon
 and fruitful earth and waves of water of sea who alone is God, abiding as indomitable creator.
 He himself established the shape of the form of mortals.
 He himself mixed the nature of all, begetter of life.

100 Which she said, meaning either that they join^o by coming together into one flesh or that he made both the world under heaven and man from the four elements which are opposed to each other.

o. Reading prosginontai (Alexandre). Geffcken retains the MSS reading patros (prs). The sense is clear enough. Two explanations are offered for the phrase "He mixed the nature of all"—the coupling involved in the act of procreation or the blending of the four elements.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES, BOOKS 1 AND 2

Introduction

The first two books of the Sibylline Oracles are not separated in the manuscripts and, in fact, constitute a unit.¹ The work consists of an original Jewish oracle and an extensive Christian redaction. The Jewish oracle was structured on the familiar Sibylline division of world history into ten generations. The first seven generations are preserved without interpolation in Sibylline Oracles 1.1–323.² Then follows a Christian passage on the incarnation and career of Christ in 1.324–400. After a transitional passage in 2.1–5 the original sequence is resumed in 2.6–33. However, a considerable portion of the Jewish oracle has been lost, as there is no reference to the eighth or ninth generations, but we are thrust immediately into the climactic events of the tenth (2.15).

The remainder of Sibylline Oracles 2 (vss. 34–347) is an account of eschatological crises and the last judgment. It shows clear signs of Christian redaction but is probably not an original Christian composition. Rather the Christian Sibyllist modified the eschatological conclusion of the Jewish work by interpolations. The extent of the redactor's work is difficult to determine exactly. One passage, 2.154–76, is surely Jewish, as it culminates in the universal rule of the Hebrews (175). A number of passages are certainly Christian:

- 2.45–55 refers to Christ and allots a special place to virgins and martyrs.³
- 2.177–83 is based on the parable of the watchful servant (Mt 24:46–51; Lk 12:36–40).
- 2.190–92 (cf. Mark 13:17): It is possible that both Mark and Sibylline Oracles 2 could have derived this motif independently from Jewish tradition.
- 2.238–51: For the coming of Christ in glory with his angels cf. Matthew 25:31. The condemnation of the Hebrews in verse 250 is obviously Christian.
- 2.311f.: These verses refer to the intercession of the virgin.
- 2.264: This verse refers to presbyters and deacons. It is part of a catalog of sins condemned at the judgment (255–83). The rest of the passage is not necessarily Christian.⁴

The remainder of Sibylline Oracles 2 could have been written by either a Jew or a Christian. Most scholars incline to the opinion that such passages were taken over as part of the Jewish original.

In the ψ group of manuscripts, Sibylline Oracles 2 contains a lengthy insert from the sayings of Pseudo-Phocylides⁵ (vss. 56–148). These verses contain a number of clear indications of Jewish authorship or redaction. We find references to the Old Testament in verse 82—“God wants not sacrifice but mercy instead of sacrifice” (cf. Hos 6:6)—and in 100f., which warns against transgressing boundaries (cf. Ex 22:5; Deut 19:14). The polemic against homosexuality (vs. 73), while less conclusive, is also typically Jewish. Nothing in these verses is necessarily Christian. However, they form part of the longer passage on the contest for entry into heaven, of which at least verses 45–55 are Christian. While Jewish in authorship, the verses may have been first inserted into the Sibylline Oracles by a Christian.

¹ The main discussions of these books are those of Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, pp. 47–53; Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2146–52; A. Kurfess, “Oracula Sibyllina I/II,” ZNW 40 (1941) 151–65.

² Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 48, argued that SibOr 1 175–79 and 193–96 were Christian interpolations based on SibOr 8.184–87 and 7.7, 9–12 respectively, but he has been convincingly refuted by Kurfess, ZNW 40 (1941) 151–60.

³ For the association of martyrdom and virginity in the early Church see H. von Campenhausen, Die Idee des Martyriums in der alten Kirche (Göttingen, 1964) pp. 139f. They are already the two chief distinguishing marks of the elect in Rev.

⁴ Geffcken inclined to Christian authorship because of the parallels with such Christian writings as ApPaul (Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 52).

⁵ See especially A. Kurfess, “Das Mahngedicht des sogenannten Phokylides im zweiten Buch der Oracula Sibyllina,” ZNW 38 (1939) 171–81. For a more complete study of Ps-Phoc see the work of P. van der Horst in this volume, and in The Sentences of Pseudo-Phocylides with Introduction and Commentary (SVTP 4; Leiden, 1978).

Date

Such evidence as we have for the date of Sibylline Oracles 1 and 2 is scanty and less than conclusive. There are two major opinions:

1. Geffcken dated both Jewish and Christian stages in the third century A.D.⁶ For the Jewish stage he advanced three arguments:

a. The Sibyl and Noah are depicted on coins from Apamea-Kibotos in the third century. However, this proves only that the association of the Sibyl and Noah was known in Asia Minor in the third century. It does not prove that it was not known earlier. The Sibyl and Noah were associated already in Sibylline Oracles 3.827, in the second century B.C. This criterion must be considered inconclusive.

b. Certain metrical peculiarities in the book find their closest analogies in book 12, which dates from the third century. However, given the metrical irregularity of the entire Sibylline corpus,⁷ no firm conclusion can be based on this.

c. Geffcken's third argument is the author's poor style. This again cannot be said to point to any particular date.

For the Christian redaction Geffcken posits dependence on Sibylline Oracles 8, which was written in the late second century. This dependence, as we shall see, is open to question.

2. The second major position on the date of this book is that of Kurfess.⁸ Kurfess dates the Jewish stage about the turn of the era and the Christian stage before A.D. 150.

For the Jewish stage the latest possible date is supplied by the comparison with Sibylline Oracles 7, which is usually dated in the mid-second century A.D. Now Sibylline Oracles 7.7, 9–12 correspond exactly to Sibylline Oracles 1.183, 193–96. Since these verses are well integrated in their context in book 1 and are part of a fragmentary isolated oracle in book 7 we must assume the priority of Sibylline Oracles 1.⁹ The date of Sibylline Oracles 7, however, is by no means certain, but since it is quoted by Lactantius we can at least take the mid-third century A.D. as the latest possible date for Sibylline Oracles 1.

The earliest possible date for the Jewish stage is supplied by the fact that Rome is the only power singled out for destruction in the tenth generation (SibOr 2.18). Rome was prominent in Asia Minor from the beginning of the second century B.C., but the fact that it is the only power mentioned suggests that the oracle was written at a time when Roman power in the Near East was consolidated, therefore no earlier than 30 B.C. This gives a period from 30 B.C. to A.D. 250 within which the oracle could have been written.

This period can probably be limited further. The Jewish stage contains no reference to the destruction of Jerusalem, and there is no reference in book 2 to the favorite Sibylline theme of Nero's return. There is a reference to the fall of Jerusalem in 1.393–96. However, it is passed over briefly without any recrimination against Rome, and there is no reference to it in the context of the tenth generation. In fact, the only offense mentioned in connection with the destruction of Rome is idolatry (2.17). It is unlikely that a Jew writing after A.D. 70, who is at all concerned with historical events, would pass over the destruction of the Temple so lightly. Therefore the consensus of scholars that 1.387–400 is part of the Christian redaction is probably right. These verses are the only part of the Christian addition to book 1 that do not deal with the career of Christ. Presumably they were added to bring the oracle up to date. If this is so, the original Jewish oracle probably carried its review of history no later than the time of Augustus, and so the dating suggested by Kurfess, about the turn of the era, is most likely correct.

The earliest possible date for the Christian redaction is the fall of Jerusalem. The latest possible date is more difficult to find. Kurfess argues that the book must be earlier than Sibylline Oracles 7 and 8.¹⁰ There is in fact no reason to posit literary dependence between ⁶ Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 49.

⁷ See A. Rzach, Metrische Studien zu den Sibyllinischen Orakel (Wien, 1892); Bousset, "Sibyllen und Sibyllinische Bücher," p. 274.

⁸ Kurfess, ZNW 40 (1941) 151–65. A similar position was maintained by H. Dechent, Über das 1, 2 und 11 Buch der Sibyllinische Weissagungen (Frankfurt am Main: diss., Jena, 1873).

⁹ Contra Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 48.

¹⁰ Kurfess, ZNW 40 (1941) 165.

the Christian redaction of books 1 and 2 and book 7, but the parallels between books 2 and 8 are too numerous for mere coincidence:

2.305–12	cf. 8.350–58
2.318–21	cf. 8.208–12
2.322–24	cf. 8.110f., 121
2.325–27, 329	cf. 8.424–27

The direction of the influence is disputed. Geffcken presumes the priority of book 8, Kurfess of book 2. There is no clear conclusive evidence either way. The contention of Kurfess that the verses are more likely to be original in the sustained eschatological treatise of book 2 seems to carry the greater probability. In any case, the highly developed eschatology of the book is presumably later than the Revelation of John. Since no other historical event is mentioned after the destruction of Jerusalem, the Christian redaction should probably be dated no later than A.D. 150.¹¹

Provenance

At least the Jewish substratum of Sibylline Oracles 1 and 2 comes from Phrygia.¹² This is indicated by 1.196–98, where Phrygia is said to be the first land to emerge after the Flood, and to become the nurse of restored humanity in the sixth generation. Also, in 1.261f., Ararat is located in Phrygia. The prominence thus given to Phrygia is the only indication of local provenance. There is nothing to indicate the provenance of the Christian redaction. The speech of Noah in 1.150–98 underlines the hortatory function of the book, but there is nothing to indicate its actual setting in life.

Historical importance

If the early dating proposed for both Jewish and Christian stages of Sibylline Oracles 1 and 2 is correct, then these books acquire considerable historical importance. The Jewish substratum is the only extensive document we have from the Judaism of Asia Minor in this period. The historical importance of the Jewish stage is somewhat diminished by the doubt as to whether much of book 2 is Jewish or Christian, but it remains a substantial source for an area of Judaism of which little is known. The book is remarkable among the Sibylline Oracles for its lack of reference to particular cities and events (though such references may have been part of the lost account of the eighth and ninth generations). Accordingly it is more difficult to relate to a specific historical situation than the other Sibylline books.

Theological importance

The main theological interest of Sibylline Oracles 1 lies in its use of the schematization of history into ten generations. Such a schematization is presupposed in several Sibylline Oracles, including those of the Cumean Sibyl of Virgil's Fourth Eclogue,¹³ but it is most elaborately developed here and in Sibylline Oracles 4.¹⁴ In Sibylline Oracles 1 it is combined with the idea of the Great Year. The first five generations end with a destruction by flood; the second five with a destruction by fire.¹⁵

ETHICS

The schematization of history is used by the Sibyllist as a framework for exhortation. The ¹¹ Ibid., p. 165.

¹² Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 50.

¹³ See especially the commentary of Servius, who identified the "last age" of Virgil's Sibyl as the tenth, Servii Grammatici qui feruntur in Vergilia Bucolica et Georgica commentarii (ed. G. Thilo; Leipzig, 1887) pp. 44f.; D. Flusser, "The Four Empires in the Fourth Sibyl and in the Book of Daniel," Israel Oriental Studies 2 (1972) 163.

¹⁴ On the schematization of world history in SibOr 1 see A. Rzach, "Sibyllinische Weltalter," Wiener Studien 34 (1912) 114f. Cf. also the Apocalypse of Weeks (1En 93; 91:12–17) and 11QMelch.

¹⁵ See Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, pp. 101f. Such a doctrine of two world cycles seems to be implicit in Hesiod, and is explicit in Heraclitus and Plato (see esp. Politics 273 b–c). For such a belief in Judaism see especially Vita 49; Josephus, Ant 1.2.3 (70f.). See further I. Chaine, "Cosmogonie aquatique et conflagration finale d'après la secunda Petri," RB 46 (1937) 207–16. Cf. also the late Apocalypse of Asclepius, from Egypt.

impending destruction of the world provides an occasion for presenting the crucial ethical values on which the judgment is based. So in Sibylline Oracles 1.150–70 and again in 174–98 Noah preaches to his contemporaries about the sins which lead to destruction and the ways to avoid it. The sins mentioned are obvious ones—violence (155–57, 176), deceit (177), adultery and slander (178), and lack of reverence for God (179). The remedy is simple—repentance and supplication (167–69). Because of the Christian redaction it is not clear whether humanity is given a similar warning before the final destruction by fire.

ESCHATOLOGY

It is also uncertain how far the eschatological rewards and punishments of Sibylline Oracles 2 can be ascribed to the Jewish oracle. At least 2.154–76 appears to be Jewish. This passage describes the eschatological dominion of the Hebrews “as of old,” therefore presumably an earthly kingdom of the historical order.

The description of the resurrection in 2.214–37 is quite possibly Jewish. The four archangels, Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, and Uriel, are familiar from Jewish sources.¹⁶ The reference to the Giants (2.231f.) is an explicit point of contact with book 1. The actual description of resurrection, with its very physical conjunction of bones and flesh, recalls Ezekiel 37. The natural sequel to such a resurrection is not a heavenly state but rather a transformation of the earth, which we find in 2.317–29. The punishment of the wicked by fire (2.285–310) is of course attested as early as Isaiah 66:24 and was common in intertestamental Judaism,¹⁷ so it too could have formed part of the Jewish work.

THE CHRISTIAN REDACTION

The Christian redactor was interested primarily in the eschatology of the book. His impatience with the earlier history is shown by his omission of the eighth and ninth generations.

The redactor also makes use of the end-time for a hortatory purpose. The ethical instruction is presented in two passages:

1. The contest for entry into heaven (2.39–153) provides a framework for exhortation. Much of this is taken up (at least in the ψ MSS) by the sayings of Pseudo-Phocylides, which consist of the rather banal commonalities of Greek and Near Eastern folk wisdom with a few distinctly Jewish verses.¹⁸ Of course the inclusion of this material is significant as an indication of the Sibyl's willingness to find common ground for gentile, Jew, and Christian. The most significant indication of the values of the Christian redactor, however, is found in 2.46–48, where two classes are singled out for special honor—martyrs and virgins. This combination is quite typical of early Christianity.¹⁹ Other virtues specifically mentioned are justice, monotheistic worship, and marital fidelity (2.49–52).

2. The second passage important for the ethics of the redactor is found in 2.255–83.²⁰ This is a catalog of sins for which people are condemned. In addition to the usual condemnation of idolatry, violence, injustice, etc., special emphasis is laid on the treatment of widows and orphans (2.270–73) and of parents (273–76) and on sexual offenses and abortion (279–82).

Much more emphasis is laid on the punishment of the bad than on the reward of the good. The plight of the damned in the fiery underworld is described in lurid detail in 2.285–310. The detailed interest in punishment after death and the use of the wisdom teachings of Pseudo-Phocylides reflect an interest in the judgment of the individual rather than a political notion of the end-time focused on the overthrow of Rome. Yet the Christian redaction retains much of the Jewish oracle, and salvation is ultimately presented as a transformation of the earth rather than as a heavenly state. Neither the Jewish nor the Christian stage attaches any significance to a distinction between soul and body.

One final feature of the eschatology is worthy of note. According to 2.330–38 the blessed ¹⁶ E.g. 1En 9:1; ApMos 40:1. See Y. Yadin, The Scroll of the War of the Sons of Light Against the Sons of Darkness (Oxford, 1962) p. 238.

¹⁷ E.g. 1QS 2:8; 1En 21. See Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, p. 109.

¹⁸ [See the different evaluation of Ps-Phoc by P. van der Horst found herein. —J.H.C.]

¹⁹ Cf. n. 3 above.

²⁰ This passage could conceivably be Jewish. Cf. n. 4 above.

can obtain the release of some condemned souls by intercession. In a gloss in the ψ manuscripts this doctrine is condemned and attributed to Origen.

Relation to other literature

The most conspicuous parallels in these books to a biblical text are found in the account of the Flood, which draws heavily on the Septuagint.²¹ However, even here the Sibyllist is not solely dependent on biblical tradition, since some details of the story correspond, not with Genesis, but with Babylonian myth.²² Rzach suggests that the Sibyl may have been influenced by Berossus, who shows a similar sweep of cosmic history from creation to the end.

Various parallels are found in the Jewish stratum of the work to the intertestamental writings of Judaism. The most significant perhaps are the parallels to the Watchers in 1 Enoch.²³ Sibylline Oracles 1 and 2 is more obviously related to the rest of the Sibylline literature, especially book 4, in its organization of history into periods, and to book 8 in the eschatology of the Christian redaction.

A conspicuous feature of Sibylline Oracles 1 and 2 is the extent of the influence of Hesiod, especially the Works and Days.²⁴ In book 1 each half of world history is divided into four declining ages, followed by a fifth in which the world is actually destroyed. The sixth generation, the first after the Flood, is said to be golden (1.284). The schema, and several verbal parallels, reflects direct use of Hesiod by the Sibyl.

Finally the eschatology of Sibylline Oracles 2, with its heavy concentration on the punishments of hell, is paralleled in late Jewish and early Christian apocalypses—especially the apocalypses of Zephaniah, Peter, and Paul.²⁵ The idea of punishment in Orphism (e.g. Plato, Republic 10.614–21, Gorgias 523) and some Greek influence is probable in book 2. However, the most prominent feature of the Sibylline writing is the fiery character of the netherworld. The destruction of the world by fire, and the attendant destruction of sinners, was very prominent in the Persian notion of the end and throughout the Sibylline tradition. Kurfess has emphasised the parallels between Sibylline Oracles 2 and the Oracle of Hystaspes.²⁶ However, the distinctive character of the eschatology of Sibylline Oracles 2 is a fiery hell as an eternal place of punishment. This concept appears to be a Jewish development. The Watchers in 1 Enoch are consigned to a fiery abyss, and the sinners in the judgment share a like fate (e.g. 1En 90:23f.). Eternal fiery punishment of the wicked is a standard feature of the concept of the end-time of intertestamental Judaism. Descriptions of the tortures of the damned receive great attention in Christian literature down through the Middle Ages. The climactic product of the genre is of course Dante's Inferno.

²¹ See Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2146f.

²² Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, col. 2148. In both the SibOr and the Babylonian myth the raven is sent out third, and the dove rests on the ground before returning with the olive twig.

²³ E.g. the Watchers in 1En 1–16; SibOr 1.87–103.

²⁴ For the detailed parallels see A. Kurfess, "Homer und Hesiod im 1 Buch der Oracula Sibyllina," Philologus 100 (1956) 147–53.

²⁵ See A. Kurfess, "Dies irae," Historisches Jahrbuch 77 (1958) 328–38.

²⁶ Kurfess, ibid., p. 328; also Kurfess, Sibyllinische Weissagungen, pp. 282–86. On the Oracle of Hystaspes see H. Windisch, Die Orakel des Hystaspes (Amsterdam, 1929), and J. R. Hinnells, "The Zoroastrian Doctrine of Salvation in the Roman World," Man and His Salvation: Studies in Memory of S. G. F. Brandon (Manchester, 1973) pp. 125–48.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES

Book I

FROM THE FIRST BOOK

The Sibyl's introduction

Beginning from the first generation of articulate men down to the last, I will prophesy all in turn, such things as were before, as are, and as will come upon the world through the impiety of men.

The creation

- 5 First God bids me tell truly how the world came to be. But you, devious mortal, so that you may never neglect my commands, attentively make known the most high king. It was he who created the whole world, saying, "let it come to be" and it came to be. Gen 1
For he established the earth, draping it around with Ps 93:1; cf.
10 Tartarus,^a and he himself gave sweet light. Ps 97:2
He elevated heaven, and stretched out the gleaming sea, and he crowned the vault of heaven amply with bright-shining stars and decorated the earth with plants. He mixed the sea with rivers, pouring them in, and with the air he mingled fragrances, 15 and dewy clouds. He placed another species, fish, in the seas, and gave birds to the winds;
to the woods, also, shaggy wild beasts, and creeping serpents to the earth; and all things which now are seen.
He himself made these things with a word, and all came to be, 20 swiftly and truly. For he is self-begotten WisSol 9:1; looking down from heaven. Under him the world has been brought to Ps 33:6 completion. Frag 3
And then later he again fashioned an animate object, making a copy from his own image, youthful man, beautiful, wonderful.^b He bade him live in an Gen 1:26; WisSol 2:23 25 ambrosial garden, so that he might be concerned with beautiful works. Sir 17:3
But he being alone in the luxuriant plantation of the garden CavTr (ed. Budge), p. 52 desired conversation, and prayed to behold another form like his own. God himself indeed took a bone from his Gen 2:21f.
flank and made Eve, a wonderful maidenly 30 spouse, whom he gave to this man to live with him in the garden.
And he, when he saw her, was suddenly greatly amazed in spirit, rejoicing, such a corresponding copy did he see. They conversed with wise words which flowed spontaneously, for God had taken care of everything.
35 For they neither covered their minds with licentiousness nor felt shame, but were far removed from evil heart;
and they walked like wild beasts with uncovered limbs.

The Fall

To these did God then address commands

a. The nether world.

b. On the beauty of Adam see L. Ginzberg, Leg- ends of the Jews (Philadelphia, 1909–25) vol. I, pp. 59–62; vol. 6, pp. 78–80.

- and instruct them not to touch the tree. But a very horrible 40 snake craftily deceived them to go to the fate of death and receive knowledge of good and evil. Gen 3:1-6
 But the woman first became a betrayer to him.
 She gave, and persuaded him to sin in his ignorance.
 He was persuaded by the woman's words, forgot 45 about his immortal creator, and neglected clear commands.
 Therefore, instead of good they received evil, as they had done.
 And then they sewed the leaves of the sweet fig tree and made clothes and put them on each other.
 They concealed their plans, because shame had come upon them.
 50 The Immortal became angry with them and expelled them from the place of immortals. For it had been decreed that they remain in a mortal place, since they had not kept the command of the great immortal God, and attended to it.
 But they, immediately, going out on the fruitful earth 55 wept with tears and groans. Then the immortal God himself spoke to them for the better:
 "Increase, multiply,^c and work on earth with skill, so that by sweat you may have your fill of food."
 Thus he spoke, but he made the serpent, cause of the deceit, 60 press the earth with belly and flank, Gen 3:14 having bitterly driven him out. He aroused a dire enmity between them. The one guards his head to save it, the other his heel, for death is at hand in the proximity of men and malignant poisonous snakes. Gen 3:14

The first generation

- 65 And then the race multiplied as the universal ruler himself commanded, and innumerable peoples grew one after another. They constructed all sorts of houses and also made cities and walls, well and with understanding. To these he granted 70 a lengthy day for a very lovely life. For they did not die worn out with troubles, but as if overcome by sleep.^d I.301 Blessed were the great-hearted mortals, whom the immortal savior king, God, loved. But they also sinned, smitten with folly. For they shamelessly 75 ridiculed their fathers and dishonored their mothers.
 Plotters against their brothers, they did not know their familiar friends.
 They were polluted, sated with the blood of people, and they made wars. Upon them came a final ruin, cast from heaven, which removed them, 80 terrible ones, from life. But Hades received them.
 They called it Hades, since Adam first went (there) having tasted death, and earth covered him.
 Therefore all men who are born on earth
 are said to go to the House of Hades.^e 85 But all these, even when they went to Hades, had honor, since they were the first race.

c. The command to multiply is given here after the Fall.

d. Vss. 65-124 show close contacts with Hesiod, Works and Days 109-74, both in ideas and in terminology. The division of this segment of history into five generations is, of course, inspired by Hesiod.

e. The attempt to associate Hades with Adam is apparently original to the Sibyl. Needless to say it is without foundation.

The second generation

But when it had received these, he fashioned again another very diverse second race from the most righteous men who were left.

These were concerned with

- ⁹⁰ fair deeds, noble pursuits, proud honor, and shrewd wisdom. They practiced skills of all kinds, discovering inventions by their needs. One discovered how to till the earth with plows, another, carpentry, another was concerned with sailing, ⁹⁵ another, astronomy and divination by birds, another, medicine, again another, magic. Different ones devised that with which they were each concerned, enterprising Watchers,^f who received this appellation because they had a sleepless mind in their hearts and an insatiable personality. They were mighty, of great form, ¹⁰⁰ but nevertheless they went under the dread house of Tartarus guarded by unbreakable bonds, to make retribution, to Gehenna of terrible, raging, undying fire.

1En 6–16; 69:4–15

2.292

The third generation

- After these again a third race, mighty in spirit, ¹⁰⁵ of overbearing terrible men appeared, who performed many evils among themselves. Wars, slaughters, and battles destroyed these^g continually, men of proud heart.

The fourth generation

- After these things, in succession came another race of men, ¹¹⁰ late of fulfilment, the youngest, bloodthirsty, indiscriminate, in the fourth generation.^h They shed much blood, neither fearing God nor respecting men. For a raging wrath and grievous impiety was indeed inflicted on them. ¹¹⁵ Wars and slaughters and battles cast some to the netherworld, though they were miserable impious men. Others the heavenly God himself later removed from his world in wrath, draping them around with great Tartarus, under the base of the earth.

The fifth generation

- ¹²⁰ Again he made afterward another far inferior race of men, for whom thereafter immortal God fashioned no good, since they suffered many evils. For they were insolent, much more than those Giants,ⁱ crooked ones, abominably pouring forth slander.

f. In 1En 6–16 the “Watchers” are identified with the fallen “sons of God” of Gen 6. Fragments of the myth are also found in 1En 69, 86–88; Jub 5; 2En 18:7 (rec. A); TReu 5:6f.; TNaph 3:5; CD 2:18; 1QapGen 2:1; 2Pet 2:4; Jude 6, etc. In SibOr 1 the “Watchers” are a generation of humans, but their mastery of diverse skills is paralleled in 1En 7f., 69, and their punishment in a “Gehenna of fire” in 1En 10:7, 13. On Gehenna see SibOr 2.293. The term ‘tr,’ “Watcher,” is found in Dan 4:10, 14, 20.

g. Cf. Hesiod, Theogony 228.

h. In Hesiod, Works and Days 156–60, the fourth generation is “nobler and more righteous.”

i. In Hesiod, Theogony 185, the Giants spring from the Earth when it is impregnated by the blood of Heaven, who had been castrated by Cronos. They are also mentioned in Homer, Odyssey 7.59; 10.120. In Gen 6:4 (LXX) the Giants are begotten by the fallen “sons of God.” Here in SibOr 1 the Giants are simply identified with the Watchers. See also Philo’s allegorical treatment of the Giants in De gigantibus. The analogy between Gen 6 and the Giants of Greek mythology is noted by Josephus, Ant 1.3.1 (73).

Noah bidden prepare for the Flood

- 125 Noah alone among all was most upright and true,
 a most trustworthy man, concerned for noble deeds.^j
 To him God himself spoke as follows from heaven:
 "Noah, embolden yourself, and proclaim repentance
 to all the peoples, so that all may be saved.
- 130 But if they do not heed, since they have a shameless spirit,
 I will destroy the entire race with great floods of waters.
 But I bid you to construct quickly an imperishable wooden house, flourishing with unthirsting roots.
 I will place a mind in your breast, and crafty 135 skill, and (will put) measures in your lap; I will take care of everything so that you and as many as live with you will be saved.

Gen 6:9;
 WisSol 10:4f.
 Sir 44:17

3.403; 1.185; 5.185

A riddle on the name of God

- I am the one who is, but you consider in your heart:^k
 I am robed with heaven, draped around with sea, the earth is the support of my feet, around my body is poured 140 the air, the entire chorus of stars revolves around me.
 I have nine letters, I am of four syllables. Consider me.^l
 The first three have two letters each.
 The last has the rest, and five are consonants.
 The entire number is: twice eight 145 plus three hundred, three tens and seven. If you know who I am you will not be uninitiated in my wisdom.

Frag. 1.7; 8.429–36; 3.20
 Ex 3:14

Isa 66:1

1.326–30; 5.1–51; 8.148;
 11–14 (passim);
 Rev 13:18; EBar 9:8

Noah preaches repentance

- Thus he spoke, but an immeasurable fear seized the man, such a thing did he hear.
 And then, having craftily devised all in turn,
 he entreated the peoples and began to speak in words like these:^m
- 150 "Men sated with faithlessness, smitten with a great madness, what you did will not escape the notice of God, for he knows all things,
 the immortal savior, who oversees everything, who commanded me to announce to you, so that you may not be destroyed by your hearts.
 Be sober, cut off evils, and stop fighting violently 155 with each other, having a bloodthirsty heart, drenching much earth with human blood.
 Mortals, stand in awe of the exceedingly great, fearless heavenly creator, imperishable God, who inhabits the vault of heaven, and entreat him, all of you—for he is good—160 for life, cities, and the whole world, four-footed animals and birds, so that he will be gracious to all.
 For the time will come when the whole immense world of men perishing by waters will wail with a dread refrain.
 Suddenly you will find the air in confusion
 165 and the wrath of the great God will come upon you from heaven.
 It will truly come to pass that the immortal savior

2Pet 2:5

j. Philo, Congr 90, says that Noah was the first righteous man.

k. Vss. 137–46 are found in the Tübingen Theosophy 81. Cf. also the Ps-Orph fragments preserved by Aristobulus in Eusebius, PrEv 13.12.5. Similar formulations are also found in the magical papyri.

l. The riddle remains problematic. Kurfess plau-sibly identifies the letters as monogenēs, but the numerical values do not produce the required total. Other unsuccessful proposals noted by Geffcken are theos sôtēr and zōēs buthos. For a parody of gematria see Lucian, Alexander, 11.

m. For Noah as a preacher see Josephus, Ant 1.3.1 (74); 2Pet 2:5; ApPaul 50.

will cast forth upon menⁿ . . . unless you propitiate God and repent as from now, and no longer anyone do anything ill-tempered or evil, lawlessly against one another 170 but be guarded in holy life."^o
When they heard him they sneered at him, each one, calling him demented, a man gone mad.
Then again Noah cried out a refrain:
"O very wretched, evil-hearted fickle men,^p 175 abandoning modesty, desiring shamelessness,
tyrants in fickleness and violent sinners,
liars, sated with faithlessness, evildoers, truthful in nothing, adulterers, ingenious at pouring out slander,
not fearing the anger of the most high God, 180 you who were preserved till the fifth generation to make retribution.
You do not bewail each other, cruel ones, but laugh.
You will laugh with a bitter smile when this comes to pass,
I say, the terrible and strange water of God.
Whenever the abominable race of Rheia,^p a perennial shoot 185 on the earth, flourishing with unthirsting roots, disappears root and all in a single night,
and the earth-shaking land-quaker will scatter cities complete with their inhabitants, and the hiding places of the earth and will undo walls,
then also the entire world of innumerable men 190 will die. But as for me, how much will I lament, how much will I weep in my wooden house, how many tears will I mingle with the waves?
For if this water commanded by God comes on,
earth will swim, mountains will swim, even the sky will swim.
All will be water and all things will perish in water.
195 Winds will stop, and there will be a second age.
O Phrygia, you will emerge first from the surface of the water.
You, first, will nourish another generation of men as it begins again. You will be nurse for all."

ApPaul 50

8.184-87;
cf. 2.254-83; 3.36-45;
Rom 1:29-31; 13:13;
1Cor 5:10f.; 6:9f.

7.7

3.402-9

1.133, etc.

7.9-12

Noah enters the Ark

But when he had spoken these things in vain to a lawless generation 200 the Most High appeared. He again cried out and spoke.
"Now the time is at hand, Noah, (to say all in turn),
to do to the immense world everything which on that day I promised and indicated to you, as much as the myriad evils generations did previously, on account of a faithless people.
205 But quickly go on board with your sons and wife and daughters-in-law. Call as many as I bid you to address, species of four-footed animals, and serpents and birds.
I will subsequently put in the breasts of as many as I apportion life to go willingly."^q 210 Thus he spoke. But the man went, cried out loudly and spoke and then his spouse and sons and daughters-in-law entered the wooden house. But then the other creatures went in turn, as many as God wished to save.^q

Gen 7:7;
1Pet 3:20

n. Geffcken assumes a lacuna here: "It will truly come to pass that He will cast forth upon . . . the immortal savior . . ."

o. Lists of vices recur frequently in the Sibylline corpus, NT, Philo, and other hellenistic and Jewish writings. See H. Conzelmann, 1 Corinthians (Philadelphia, 1975) p. 100.

p. Rheia, or Rhea, was daughter of Ouranos and Gaia, wife of Cronos, mother of Zeus and the gods. Here the "race of Rheia" should probably be understood as those who worship the pagan gods.

q. Reading rhusai for rhexas (Hase, listed by Geffcken).

But when the joining bolt was about the shutter, 215 fitted to a side in the polished wall,
 then indeed the plan of the heavenly God was accomplished.

The Flood

He threw clouds together and hid the brightly gleaming disk.
 Having covered the moon, together with the stars, and the crown of heaven

all around, he thundered loudly, a terror to mortals, 220 sending out hurricanes. All the storm winds were gathered together and all the springs of waters were released as the great cataracts were opened from heaven, and from the recesses of the earth and the endless abyss measureless waters appeared and the entire immense earth was covered.

225 The wondrous house itself swam on the flood.
 Battered by many raging waves and swimming under the impact of the winds, it surged terribly.
 The keel cut immense foam
 as the rushing waters were moved.

CavTr (ed. Budge), p. 114

230 But when God had deluged the entire world with rains then Noah considered that he might look on the counsel of the immortal, and see the Hades of Nereus.^r
 He quickly opened the shutter from the polished wall, fixed as it was skillfully with fastenings opposite each other.

Gen 8:6

235 Beholding the great mass of limitless waters, Noah was struck with terror to see with his eyes only death on all sides,^s and he quivered greatly at heart.
 And then the air drew back a little, since it had labored many days drenching the whole world, and showed then the great vault 240 of heaven at evening, as it were bloodied, greenish-yellow, and the brightly gleaming disk hard pressed. Noah barely maintained his courage.

And then taking one dove aside,^t he cast it out, so that he might know in his heart whether firm land had yet appeared. But she, laboring with her wings, 245 having flown all over, returned again; for the water was not receding, but rather it had filled everything.
 But he waited again some days and sent a dove once more,
 so that he might know if the great waters had ceased.
 But she, flying, winged her way and went on the land.

250 Having rested herself a little on the damp land,
 she returned to Noah again, bringing an olive twig,
 a great sign of her message. Courage and great joy seized them all because they were hoping to see land.
 And then afterward he sent out quickly another black-winged 255 bird. But this one, trusting in his wings, flew prudently, and when he came to the land he stayed there.
 And Noah knew that land was near, closer by.

r. Nereus was an old sea-god.

s. The text is corrupt. I read moron monon ophthal- moisin with Alexandre.

t. Vss. 233–57 diverge from the biblical narrative and are more closely related to Babylonian traditions.
 (Izdubar Epic Tablet XI; A. Jeremias in W. Roscher, Ausführliches Lexikon der griechischen und römischen Mythologie [Leipzig, 1909] vol. 2, p. 798.)
 In Gen Noah sends first a raven, then a dove, three times. Here he sends two doves and then a "black-winged bird," or raven. The latter is the sequence in the Babylonian account. In both Babylonian and Sibylline accounts the second bird touches the ground.

 This detail is also found in Josephus, Ant 1.3.5 (92) and in Berossus F 4:15 (Jacoby, FGH, vol. 3C, p.
 380). In the Gilgamesh epic (ANET, p. 95) the second bird finds no resting place. In Gen 8:11 the second bird brings back an olive twig. This detail is also picked up in SibOr 1.251.

But when the heavenly craft had swum to and fro
 on the dashing waves, by the billows of the sea, 260 it was fastened on a small beach and made fast.

The Ark lands in Phrygia

There is a certain tall lofty mountain on the dark mainland of Phrygia.^u It is called Ararat.
 When all were about to be saved on it,
 thereupon there was a great heartfelt longing.
 265 There the springs of the great river Marsyos had sprung up.
 In this place the Ark remained on lofty summits when the waters had subsided. Then again from heaven the wondrous voice of the great God cried out as follows: "Noah, trustworthy righteous man who has been preserved, 7.8 270 go forth boldly with your sons and wife and three daughters-in-law and fill the whole earth increasing and multiplying, dealing justly with each other, to generations of generations, until the whole race of men comes to trial, when there will be judgment for all."
 275 Thus the heavenly voice spoke. But Noah took courage and jumped to the land from the Ark, and his sons with him and his wife, and daughters-in-law and serpents and birds, the species of four-footed animals and all the other creatures together went out of the wooden house into one place.
 280 And then Noah, most righteous of men, came out eighth, having fulfilled forty-one dawns
 on the waters, through the counsels of the great God.

I.57; Gen 9:1

Gen 7:17

The sixth generation

Then again a new generation of life dawned, the first golden,^v excellent one, which is the sixth 285 since the time of the first formed man. Its name is "heavenly," for God will take care of everything.
 O the first race of the sixth generation! O great joy!
 in which I later shared,^w when I escaped dire destruction, having been much buffeted by waves, suffering terrible things with my husband and brothers-in-law, 3.823-27; Prologue 33 290 and father-in-law and mother-in-law, and fellow brides.
 I will tell exactly. There will be a multicolored flower on the fig tree. Time will be at its midpoint. There will be a royal scepter-bearing rule. For three great-spirited kings,^x most righteous men, will destroy the fates 3.110-15 295 and will rule for a period of many years, administering justice to men. They will be concerned with labor, and fair deeds.
 The earth will rejoice, sprouting with many spontaneous fruits, overladen with offspring.
 Those who give nourishment will be ageless, always.

u. The usual location of Ararat in Armenia is given by Josephus, Ant 1.3.5 (90). Africanus, reported by Syncellus, located it in Parthia, but recorded that some thought it was in Phrygia (Geffcken). Berossus F4:16 locates the landing place of the ark in Armenia.

v. On vss. 283-314 cf. Hesiod, Works and Days 108-39.

w. In Constantine's "Speech to the Saints," 18 (Kurfess, Sibyllinische Weissagungen, p. 208) the Erythrean Sibyl is said to have lived in the sixth generation after the Flood and to have been a priestess of Apollo. The relationship to Noah is also noted in the scholion to the Phaedrus 244b.

x. The three sons of Noah: Shem, Ham, and Japheth (Gen 6:9). In SibOr 3.110-15 the three are identified as Cronos, Titan, and Iapetus. Presumably the similarity of the names Japheth and Iapetus facilitated the equation.

- 300 Free from hard raging diseases
they will die, smitten by sleep, and will go away to Acheron in the halls of Hades, and there they will have honor, since they were a race of blessed ones, happy men, to whom Sabaoth gave a noble mind.
305 To these also he always confided his counsels.
But they will be blessed, even entering Hades.

1.71

The seventh generation: the Titans

- Then thereafter another grievous, mighty second race of earthborn men (will arise),
the Titans.^y Each individual will have a similar form, 310 appearance, and size; there will be one nature and one language, as God previously put in their breasts, from the first generation.
But they also will have a proud heart and finally rushing toward destruction will plot to fight in opposition against the starry heaven.^z 315 And then the rushing of the mighty ocean of raging waters^{a2} will be among them. But the great Sabaoth in anger will shut them out, preventing them, because he promised not to make a flood again against evil-spirited men.
But when he will make the immense billow of many waters 320 of a wave surging this way and that, to cease from anger, the great loud thundering God will reduce the depths of the sea to other measures, having defined it around the land with harbors and rough shores.

3.147-58

Dan 8:10f.;
Isa 14:13;
Rev 12:4
Isa 17:12;
Ps 65:7Gen 9:11;
Isa 54:9f.
Sir 44:19Job 38;
8-11; Prov
8:29; Pss
65:7; 104:9;
PrMan 3

Christian passage on the incarnation and life of Christ

- Then indeed the son of the great God will come,^{b2} 325 incarnate, likened to mortal men on earth, bearing four vowels, and the consonants in him are two.
I will state explicitly the entire number for you.
For eight units, and equal number of tens in addition to these,
and eight hundreds will reveal the name^{c2}
330 to men who are sated with faithlessness. But you, consider in your heart Christ, the son of the most high, immortal God.
He will fulfill the law of God—he will not destroy it—bearing a likeness which corresponds to types,^{d2} and he will teach everything.
Priests will bring gifts to him, bringing forward gold, 335 myrrh, and incense. For he will also do all these things.
But when a certain voice will come through the desert land bringing tidings to mortals, and will cry out to all to make the paths straight and cast away

1.141-45,
etc.

Mt 5:17

Mt 2:11

Mt 3:1-6;
Mk 1:1-6;
Lk 3:1-6;
Jn 1:23

y. The Titans in Greek mythology were children of Heaven and Earth. Cronos was the youngest of the Titans and their leader. The revolt of the Titans against Zeus is recounted in Hesiod, Theogony 618-885, Apollodorus, Library 1.2.1; 6.3.

z. In Hesiod, Theogony 687-735, the Titans were defeated by the thunderbolt of Zeus and imprisoned at the ends of the earth. In the more elaborate account of the revolt against Zeus by Nonnos of Panopolis in Egypt (5th cent. A.D.) the revolt includes an attack by Typhon on the stars (Dionysiaca 2.361f.). The revolt against the stars in the biblical tradition may be related to the fragmentary Ugaritic myth of Athtar's attempt to occupy the throne of Baal (ANET, p. 140).

a2. The rushing of the ocean must be seen against a long background of the metaphorical use of the sea as a symbol of chaos in the OT, which derives ultimately from the role of Yamm in the Ugaritic myths. Cf. Hab 3:15; Isa 7:12-14.

b2. Vss. 324-400 are Christian. Cf. Tübingen Theosophy, 83.

c2. Iêsous has a numerical equivalence of 888.

d2. I.e. which fulfills the implicit prophecies of the OT. On vss. 332-82, cf. SibOr 8.269-320.

- evils from the heart, and that every human person 340 be illumined by waters, so that, being born from above they may no longer in any respect at all transgress justice
 —but a man with barbarous mind, enslaved to dances will cut out this voice and give it as a reward—
 then there will suddenly be a sign to mortals when a beautiful 345 stone which has been preserved will come from the land of Egypt.
 Against this the people of the Hebrews will stumble. But the gentiles will be gathered under his leadership.
 For they will also recognize God who rules on high on account of this man's path in common light.
 For he will show eternal life to chosen men 350 but will bring the fire upon the lawless for (all) ages.
 Then indeed he will cure the sick and all who are blemished, as many as put faith in him.
 The blind will see, and the lame will walk.
 The deaf will hear; those who cannot speak will speak.
 355 He will drive out demons, there will be a resurrection of the dead;
 he will walk the waves, and in a desert place
 he will satisfy five thousand from five loaves and a fish of the sea, and the leftovers of these will fill twelve baskets for the hope of the peoples.^{e2} 360 And then Israel, intoxicated, will not perceive^{f2}
 nor yet will she hear, afflicted with weak ears.
 But when the raging wrath of the Most High comes upon the Hebrews it will also take faith away from them, because they did harm to the son of the heavenly God.
 365 Then indeed Israel, with abominable lips and poisonous spittings, will give this man blows.
 For food they will give him gall and for drink unmixed vinegar, impiously, smitten in breast and heart with an evil craze, not seeing with their eyes 370 more blind than blind rats, more terrible than poisonous creeping beasts, shackled with heavy sleep.^{g2}
 But when he will stretch out his hands and measure all,
 and bear the crown of thorns—and they will stab
 his side with reeds—on account of this, for three hours 375 there will be monstrous dark night in midday.
 And then indeed the temple of Solomon will effect^{h2} a great sign for men, when he goes to the house of Adonisⁱ² announcing the resurrection to the dead.
 But when he comes to light again in three days 380 and shows a model to men and teaches all things, he will mount on clouds and journey to the house of heaven leaving to the world the account of the gospel.
 Named after him, a new shoot will sprout from the nations, of those who follow the law of the Great One.
 385 But also after these things there will be wise leaders, and then there will be thereafter a cessation of prophets.

Jn 3:3

Mk
6:17–29;
Mt 14:3–12

1Pet 2:4; Mt 2:20

1Pet 2:4 (Isa 8:14f.)

Mt 11:2–6;
Lk 7:18–23

8.205–7

6.13; Mk 6:45–51; Mt 14:22–33
8.275–78; Mt 14:13–21;
Mk 6:30–44; 8:1–10;
Lk 9:10–17; Jn 6:1–13Isa 6:9f.; Mt 13:13–15;
Mk 4:12; Lk 8:10;
Jn 12:40; Acts 28:26

Mt 27:34

Mt 27:27–31; Mk 15:16–20;
Jn 19:1–3 Mt 27:45;
Mk 15:33; Lk 23:44
8.305f.; Mt 27:51;
Mk 15:38; Lk 23:45

1Pet 3:19 (Eph 4:9?)

Acts 1:9

e2. Geffcken assumes a lacuna here. One MS, ψ , inserts: "Then, in addition to what has been said, the Erythrean adduces the account of the mad and unforgivable outrage of the killers of the Lord and of the movement of all this which took place on this account and the resurrection of the dead as follows:"
 f2. On vss. 360–80, cf. SibOr 8.287–320.

g2. Cf. the widespread metaphor of sleep and waking in gnostic literature—e.g. Berlin Codex 58:16–59:1, but also Eph 5:14.

h2. Reading ektelesē (ψ , Alexandre, Rzach) for ekesei.

i2. I.e. Hades. For the myth of Adonis see Ovid, Metamorphoses 10.298–559, 708–39.

Prophecy of dispersion of the Jews

Then when the Hebrews reap the bad harvest, a Roman king will ravage much gold and silver.^{j2}

2.164;
 14.356; Mt
 13:36-43;
 Rev 14:15

390 Thereafter there will be other kingdoms continuously, as kingdoms perish, and they will afflict mortals. But there will be a great fall for those men when they launch on unjust haughtiness.

But when the temple of Solomon falls in the illustrious land cast down by men of barbarian speech

395 with bronze breastplates, the Hebrews will be driven from their land;

wandering, being slaughtered, they will mix much darnel in their wheat.

There will be evil strife for all men;

and the cities, violated in turn, will weep for each other on receiving the wrath of the great

Mt 24:7;
 Mk 13:8;
 Lk 21:10

400 God in their bosom, since they committed an evil deed.

j2. An obvious reference to the defeat of the Jews in A.D. 70. Vs. 393 refers to the same event. The "other kingdoms" of vs. 389 are probably an oracular cliché. In any case, they do not precede the fall of the Temple.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES

Book 2

The inspiration of the Sibyl

When indeed God stopped my most perfectly wise song as I prayed many things, he also again placed in my breast a delightful utterance of wondrous words.
I will speak the following with my whole person in ecstasy
5 For I do not know what I say,^a but God bids me utter each thing.

2.346f;
3.1-7,
295-300,
489-91;
11.322-24;
12.293-95;
13.172f.

Prophecy of disasters in the tenth generation

But when on earth there are raging earthquakes and thunderbolts, thunders, and lightnings . . . and mildew of the land and frenzy of jackals and wolves, and slaughters and destructions of men and bellowing oxen, 10 four-footed cattle and laboring mules and goats and sheep, then much farmland will be left barren through neglect, and fruits will fail. Selling of free men into slavery will be practiced among very many people, and robbing of temples.
15 Then indeed the tenth generation of men^b will also appear after these things, when the earth-shaking lightning-giver^c will break the glory of idols and shake the people of seven-hilled Rome.^d Great wealth will perish, burned in a great fire by the flame of Hephaestus.^e 20 Then there will be bloody precipitation from heaven . . .
but the entire world of innumerable men will kill each other in madness. In the tumult God will impose famines and pestilence^f and thunderbolts on men who adjudicate without justice.
25 There will be a scarcity of men throughout the whole world so that if one were to see a man's footprint on the ground, one would wonder.
Then further, the great God who lives in the sky
will be a savior of pious men in all respects.
Then also there will be deep peace and understanding, 30 and the fruitful earth will again bear more numerous fruits, being neither divided nor in servitude any longer.
Every harbor, every port will be free for men
as it was before, and shamelessness will perish.
And then again God will perform a great sign,

Mt. 24:7;
Mk 13:8;
Lk 21:10;
4Ezra
5:1-7, etc.

3.156-61; 4.20,47,86; 7.97;
8.199; 1En 91:15; 11QMelch 7

8.37-49
3.350-62; 5.159,177f., 367,434-46; 8.37-49;
Rev 17f.
4.134; 12.56f.; 14.89

Mt 24:7; Mk 13:8; Lk 21:10;
Lactantius, DivInst 7.15.10
3.332; 8.175;
11.46, 240; 12.114

4Ezra 16:27

3.619-23; 744-56;
2Bar 29:5-8; 1En 10:18-20;
SibOr 8.209-12

5.155

a. Cf. Plato, Meno 99d; Prologue to SibOr, 90.

b. At this point the original numerical sequence of the Jewish oracle is resumed. In the commentary on Virgil's Eclogue 4:4, Servius (c. A.D. 400) states that the Cumean Sibyl divided history into ten generations. In addition to the Jewish and Christian passages listed in the margin, the idea is also found in the Persian Zand-I Vohūman Yasn (Bahman Yasht) 1:11; 3:29; 4:1, etc., and the rabbinic PRE II, Targum to Esther (beginning) and second Targum to Esther (beginning). See further in the general introduction to SibOr 2.

Note also that the Flood took place in the tenth generation from Adam (cf. Gen 5). For Philo's reflections on the number 10 see Congr 90-121; Dec 20-31.

c. "Earth-shaker" was a traditional epithet of Poseidon, "lightning-giver" of Zeus.

d. So also the Oracle of Hystaspes in Lactantius, DivInst 7.15.19. For references in later Christian literature to the destruction of Rome see Bousset, The Antichrist Legend, pp. 121-32.

e. The Greek god of fire.

f. A proverbial cliché since Hesoid, Works and Days 243. Cf. Herodotus 7.171; Thucydides 2.54, etc. It is especially common in oracular literature.

35 for a star will shine like a resplendent crown,^g resplendent, gleaming from the radiant heaven for no small number of days. For then he will show from heaven a crown to men who strive in contest.

The heavenly contest

Then again^h there will be a great contest for entry 40 to the heavenly city.ⁱ It will be universal for all men, holding the glory of immortality.
Then every people will strive for the immortal prizes of most noble victory. For no one there can shamelessly buy a crown for silver.
45 For holy Christ will make just awards to these and crown the worthy. But to martyrs he will give an immortal treasure, to those who pursue the contest even to death.
He will give an imperishable prize from the treasure to virgins who run well and to all men 50 who perform justice and to diverse nations who live piously and acknowledge one God, who love marriage and refrain from adultery.
He will give rich gifts and eternal hope to these also.
For every soul of mortals is a gracious gift of God 55 and it is not lawful for men to defile it with any grievous things.

1Cor 9:24; Heb 12:1; 2Tim 4:7;
Gal 5:7; Phil 2:16;
4Mac 17:11-14; 6:10; TJob 27

[Extract from Pseudo-Phocylides:]

On justice

Do not gain wealth unjustly, but live from legitimate things.
Be satisfied with what is available, and refrain from what belongs to others.
Do not tell lies, but preserve^k all truths.
(Do not revere idols, to no good purpose, but always the imperishable one.)
60 First, honor God, then your parents.
Dispense all things justly, and do not come to an unjust judgment.^l
Do not unjustly cast down poverty. Do not be partial in judgment.
If you judge badly, God will judge you later.
Avoid false witness. Adjudicate justly.
65 Guard that which is deposited with you. Preserve love^m in all things.
Give just measures, but an overmeasure to allⁿ is good.
Do not cheat in measuring, but weigh evenly.
Do not commit perjury either in ignorance or willingly.
God detests a perjurer, whatever one swears.^o

g. Such astral phenomena are frequently understood as signs of great changes and upheavals in the hellenistic age. The astrological writings of Nechepso and Petosiris from Egypt in the 2nd cent. B.C. consist of the interpretation of such signs. Cf. the star and comet which appear before the fall of Jerusalem in Josephus, War 6.5.3 (289).

h. Reading kai tote men megas autis agōn (Rzach) for kai tothmai megas gar agōn.

i. The agōn, or "contest," motif is derived from Stoicism (V. C. Pfitzner, Paul and the Agon-Motif [Leiden, 1967] pp. 23-37). It is also used extensively by Philo, Agr 113, 119; Praem 52; Mut 106; Abr 48. Also in later Christian literature: Clement of Alexandria, Quis dives salvetur 3; Tertullian, Ad martyras 3, etc.

j. See P. van der Horst, "Pseudo-Phocylides," in this vol., and The Sentences of Pseudo-Phocylides with Introduction and Commentary (SVTP 4; Leiden, 1978) for a more complete treatment. The translation offered here is an independent rendering of Geffcken's text. Nn. are added only where the sentences diverge from the edition of Young (D. Young, Theognis, Ps.-Pythagoras, Ps.-Phocylides [Leipzig, 1961, 1971]), which is used by van der Horst. Verses not in Young's edition are put in parentheses here. The first four verses of Young are omitted in SibOr 2.

k. Young: "Speak."

l. Young: "judgment for favor."

m. Young: "faith."

n. Young: "of all."

o. Young: "the immortal God . . . whoever swears."

- 70 (Never accept in your hand a gift which derives from unjust deeds.)
 Do not steal seeds. Whoever takes for himself is accursed (to generations of generations, to the scattering of life.
 Do not practice homosexuality, do not betray information, do not murder.)
 Give one who has labored his wage. Do not oppress a poor man.
- 75 Take heed of your speech. Keep a secret matter in your heart.
 (Make provision for orphans and widows and those in need.)
 Do not be willing to act unjustly, and therefore do not give leave to one who is acting unjustly.

On mercy

- Give to the poor^p at once and do not tell them to come tomorrow.
 (With perspiring hand give a portion of corn to one who is in need.^q Did 1:6
- 80 Whoever gives alms knows that he is lending to God.
 Mercy saves from death when judgment comes.
 God wants not sacrifice but mercy instead of sacrifice.
 Therefore clothe the naked. Give the hungry a share of your bread.)
 Receive the homeless into your house and lead the blind.
 85 Pity the shipwrecked, for the voyage is uncertain.
 Give a hand to one who has fallen. Save a solitary man.
 All have a common lot, the wheel of life,^r unstable prosperity.
 If you have wealth, stretch out your hand to the poor.
 The things which God gave you, give of them to one in need.^s
- 90 Every life of men is common, but falls out unequally.^t (When you see a poor man, never mock him with words and do not verbally abuse a person who is at fault.
 Life is assessed in death. Whether one acted lawlessly or righteously will be distinguished when one comes to judgment.

8.390; Hos 6:6;
 Mt 9:13; 12:7
 8.404; Isa 58:7

On moderation

- 95 Do not damage your mind with wine or drink to excess.)
 Do not eat blood. Abstain from what is sacrificed to idols.
 Gird on the sword, not for killing but for defense.
 May you not use^u it either lawlessly or righteously.
 For even if you kill an enemy, you defile your own hand.
- 100 Keep off a neighboring field. Do not trespass.
 (Every boundary is just; but trespass is grievous.)^v
 The acquisition of legitimate things is profitable, but that of unjust things is bad.
 Do not damage any fruit of the soil when it is growing.
 Let strangers have equal honor among citizens,
 105 for all will experience exile of many hardships^w (as guests of each other. But no one will be a stranger among you since you are all mortals of one blood),^x and a country has no secure place for men.^y

Tob 4:16

Acts 15:20,
 29; 21:25;
 1Cor 8:10

Ex 22:5;
 Deut 19:14

3.247

p. Young has the singular "poor man" here.
 q. Young (vs. 23): "It will fill your hand, give alms to the needy."
 r. Young: "life is a wheel."
 s. Young has the plural "needy."
 t. Young (vs. 30): "Let all of life be in common and all things be in agreement."

u. Young: "need."
 v. Young: "Measure is best of all, excesses are grievous."
 w. Young (vs. 40): "we all experience poverty that makes one wander."
 x. This is a common Stoic sentiment.
 y. Slightly different wording in Young.

On money

(Neither wish to be wealthy nor pray for it. But pray for this:
110 to live on a little, having nothing unjust.)

The love of money is mother of all evil.

(Have no desire for gold or silver. Also in these there will be double-edged iron which destroys the spirit.)

Gold and silver are always a deception for men.

115 Life-destroying gold, originator of evils, crushing all things, would that you were not a desired affliction for men,
for because of you are battles, plunderings, murders, children hostile to their parents and brothers to their kindred.

7.89;
Theognis
1155
3.325, 641;
8.17; 1Tim
6:10

On honesty and moderation

(Do not weave plots, and do not arm your heart against a friend.)

120 Do not hide one thought in your heart while you say another.

Do not change in your place like a many-footed creature which clings to rock.

Be straightforward with all. Speak what comes from your soul.

Whoever deliberately does injustice is an evil man. As for one who acts under compulsion,

I will not pronounce his end. But let the counsel of each man be straight.

125 Do not boast of wisdom or strength or wealth.

There is One, God, at once wise, powerful, and rich.

Do not wear out your heart with passing evils

for that which has happened can no longer be undone.

Be not precipitous to the hand. Bridle wild anger,

130 for often one who struck a blow unintentionally committed murder.

Let your passions be normal, neither great nor excessive.

Abundant profit is not a good thing for mortals.

Much luxury draws toward inordinate desires.

Great wealth is proud, and it fosters arrogance.

135 Ire, when it takes the initiative,^{a2} fashions a destructive frenzy.

Anger is a propensity, but wrath goes to excess.

The zeal of the good is noble, but that of the bad is bad.^{b2}

The daring of the wicked is destructive, but that of the good brings glory.^{c2}

Love of virtue is revered, but that of Aphrodite augments disgrace.

140 A man who is too simple is called a fool among the citizens.^{d2}

Eat, drink, and discourse in moderation.

Of all things, moderation is best, but excess is grievous.^{e2}

(Be not envious or faithless or a slanderer or of evil mind, or an inordinate deceiver.)

145 Practice temperance. Refrain from base deeds.^{f2}

Do not imitate evil but leave vengeance to justice, for persuasion is a profit, but strife engenders strife in turn.

Do not trust quickly, before you see the end with certainty.

[End of passage from Ps-Phoc]

Conclusion of the contest

This is the contest, these are the prizes, these the awards.

z. Young: "liver."

a2. Young: "steals over one."

b2. Young: "monstrous."

c2. Young: "greatly helps a man who labors at noble deeds."

d2. Following Young's reading hēdus agan aphrōn for hēdus aganophrōn (ψ).

e2. Young has the plural: "excesses."

f2. Young's vss. 70–75 are missing here. SibOr
2.145–48 corresponds to Young's 76–79.

150 This is the gate of life and entry to immortality which the heavenly God appointed as reward of victory for most righteous men. But they, when they receive the crown, will pass through this in glory.

Mt 21:13;
Tab 10
(rec. A), 9
(rec. B)

Signs of the end

But whenever this sign appears throughout the world, 155 children born with gray temples from birth,^{g2} afflictions of men, famines, pestilence, and wars, change of times, lamentations, many tears;
alas, how many people's children in the countries will feed on their parents, with piteous lamentations. They will place 160 their flesh in cloaks and bury them in the ground, mother of peoples, defiled with blood and dust. O very wretched dread evildoers of the last generation, infantile, who do not understand that when the species of females does not give birth,^{h2} the harvest of articulate men has come.
165 The gathering together is near when some deceivers,
in place of prophets, approach, speaking on earth.
Beliar also will comeⁱ² and will do many signs for men.^{j2} Then indeed there will be confusion of holy chosen and faithful men, and there will be a plundering 170 of these and of the Hebrews. A terrible wrath will come upon them when a people of ten tribes will come from the east to seek the people, which the shoot of Assyria destroyed, of their fellow Hebrews. Nations will perish after these things.

4Ezra 6:21
2.23, etc.
8.214;
14.298a

1.387, etc.
14.365

Mk 13:22; Mt 24:11,24;
Did 16; ApEl 1:12
3.63; 73; 2Cor 6:15;
Ascens 2:4; 4:2; IQM 13:10f.
3.66; ApEl 3; Did 16
3.69

4Ezra 13:40; AsMos 4:9;
Ant 11.5.2 (133)

Eschatological rule of the Hebrews

Later the faithful chosen Hebrews will rule over 175 exceedingly mighty men, having subjected them
as of old, since power will never fail.
The Most High, who oversees all, living in the sky,
will spread sleep over men, having closed their eyes.
O blessed servants, as many as the master, when he comes, 180 finds awake; for they have all stayed awake
all the time looking expectantly with sleepless eyes.
For he will come, at dawn, or evening, or midday.
He will certainly come, and it will be as I say.
It will come to pass for future generations, when from the starry heaven 185 all the stars appear in midday to all,
with the two luminaries, as time presses on.

ApEl 3:45f.

Mt
24:45–51;
25:1–13; Lk
12:42–46
Did 16

3.804;
8.204; War
6.5.3 (288);
4Ezra 5:4

Coming of Elijah and other signs

Then the Thesbite,^{k2} driving a heavenly chariot at full stretch from heaven, will come on earth and then display three signs^{l2} to the whole world, as life perishes.

Mal 3:23;
ApEl 3:25;
Mt 11:14;
16:14;
17:10

g2. The oldest attestation of this sign is in Hesiod, Works and Days 181. It is also found in Stoic writings and in the Christian Testamentum domini 7.

h2. Cf. GEgypt; Clement of Alexandria, Strom 3.6.45; Tiburtine Sibyl (ed. Sackur), p. 181.

i2. Beliar (Belial) occurs more than thirty times as the demonic adversary in the Qumran scrolls.

j2. See further Bousset, The Antichrist Legend,

pp. 175–81.

k2. Elijah. Cf. Commodian, Carmen apologeticum 833; Lactantius, DivInst 7.17.1; Bousset, The Antichrist Legend, pp. 203–8.

l2. Did 16:6: "And then shall appear the signs of the truth. First the sign spread out in heaven, then the sign of the sound of the trumpet, and thirdly the resurrection of the dead."

190 Alas, for as many as are found bearing in the womb on that day, for as many as suckle infant children, for as many as dwell upon the wave;
 alas, for as many as will see that day.
 For a dark mist will cover the boundless world
 195 east and west and south and north.

Mt 24:19;
 Mk 13:17;
 Lk 21:23;
 ApEl 2:30

Destruction by fire

And then a great river of blazing fire will flow from heaven,^{m2} and will consume every place, land and great ocean and gleaming sea,
 lakes and rivers, springs and implacable Hades 200 and the heavenly vault. But the heavenly luminaries will crash together, also into an utterly desolate form.ⁿ²
 For all the stars will fall together from heaven on the sea.
 All the souls of men will gnash their teeth, burning in a river, and brimstone and a rush of fire 205 in a fiery plain, and ashes will cover all.^{o2}
 And then all the elements of the world will be bereft—
 air, land, sea, light, vault of heaven, days, nights.
 No longer will innumerable birds fly in the air.
 Swimming creatures will no longer swim the sea at all.
 210 No laden ship will voyage on the waves.
 No guiding oxen will plow the soil.
 No sound of trees under the winds. But at once all will melt into one and separate into clear air.

2.286;
 3.54, 72,
 83; 7.121;
 8.243, 338;
 IEn 52:6;
 IQH
 3:29-33

5.512-31;
 8.340; 2Pet
 3:12

8.190, 341; Mt 24:29;
 Mk 13:25
 2.305; 8.105, 231, 350;
 Mt 14:12

4.179; ApEl 3:83
 3.80f.; 8.337; Rev 6:12

ApEl
 3:62f.

3.87; 8.412

The judgment

Then the imperishable angels of immortal God, 215 Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, and Uriel,^{p2} who know what evils anyone did previously, lead all the souls of men from the murky dark to judgment, to the tribunal of the great immortal God.^{q2} For one alone is imperishable, 220 the universal ruler, himself, who will be judge of mortals.

ApMos 40:3; 1En 9:1
 1En 109:7; AscenIs 7:27

Tab 10-11 (rec. A)
 9-10 (rec. B)

Resurrection of the dead

Then the heavenly one will give souls and breath and voice to the dead and bones fastened with all kinds of joinings . . . flesh and sinews and veins and skin about the flesh, and the former hairs.
 225 Bodies of humans, made solid in heavenly manner, breathing and set in motion, will be raised on a single day.

4.181; Ezek
 37:1-10;
 ApPet 4

m2. The river of fire is a standard element in Persian eschatology, e.g. Bundahishn 30:19; Cf. also ApPet 5-6.

n2. This conception is found in Stoicism (e.g. Seneca, Consolatio ad Marciam 26:6) and in Berossus (Seneca, Naturales quaestiones 3.29.1).

o2. This passage refers to the sufferings involved in the destruction of the world by fire, not yet the eternal punishment of the damned. On vss. 200-13, cf. SibOr 8.337-50.

p2. So ψ, Kurfess. Geffcken, following φ with emendations reads "Barakiel, Ramiel, Uriel, Samiel, Azrael." Michael, Gabriel, Uriel, and Raphael, in varying sequence, are the most usual archangels: 1En 9:1; ApMos 40:3; NumR 2:10; PR 46; PRE 4. Uriel is replaced by Phanuel in 1En 40:9; 54:6; 71:8, and by Sariel in IQM 9:14-16. Barakiel, Ramiel, and Azrael are fallen angels in Gen 6-13. Sammael is an evil angel in AscenIs.

q2. For the tribunal of God, cf. Dan 7, where the Ancient of Days presides. In TAB, Abel has the role of judge. In the Similitudes of 1En the "Son of Man" is judge. In Mt 19:28 the apostles will sit as judges. In 1Cor 2:6 all the faithful will judge. Most often, as here, God himself is judge.

Then Uriel, the great angel, will break the gigantic bolts, of unyielding and unbreakable steel, of the gates of Hades, not forged of metal; he will throw them wide open^{r2} 230 and will lead all the mournful forms to judgment, especially those of ancient phantoms, Titans
and the Giants and such as the Flood destroyed.
Also those whom the wave of the sea destroyed in the oceans,
and as many as wild beasts and serpents and birds 235 devoured; all these he will call to the tribunal.
Again, those whom the flesh-devouring fire destroyed by flame, these also he will gather and set at the tribunal of God.
When Sabaoth Adonai, who thunders on high, dissolves fate and raises the dead, and takes his seat 240 on a heavenly throne, and establishes a great pillar,^{s2}
Christ, imperishable himself, will come in glory on a cloud toward the imperishable one with the blameless angels.
He will sit on the right of the Great One, judging at the tribunal
the life of pious men and the way of impious men.
245 Moses, the great friend of the Most High, also will come, having put on flesh. Great Abraham himself will come, Isaac and Jacob, Joshua, Daniel and Elijah, Habbakuk and Jonah, and those whom the Hebrews killed.
He will destroy all the Hebrews after Jeremiah, 250 judged on the tribunal, so that they may receive and make appropriate retribution for as much as anyone did in mortal life.

ApZeph
6-7; ApPet
4; cf.
Hesiod,
Theogony
732-33

1.91, 103;
2En 18

1En 61:5

7.27
Mt 25:31;
24:30;
16:27; Mk
8:38; 13:26;
ApPet 1;
ApEI 3:97;
Lk 9:26
Acts 7:56;
ApPet 6

4Ezra 1:39;
Mt 23:34,
37; Lk
11:49-51;
Aploan (ed.
Tischendorf) p. 22

Distinction of righteous and wicked

And then all will pass through the blazing river and the unquenchable flame.^{r2} All the righteous will be saved, but the impious will then be destroyed 255 for all ages, as many as formerly did evil^{u2} or committed murders, and as many as are accomplices, liars, and crafty thieves, and dread destroyers of houses, parasites, and adulterers, who pour out slander,
terrible violent men, and lawless ones, and idol worshipers;
260 as many as abandoned the great immortal God and became blasphemers and ravagers of the pious, breakers of faith and murderers of the righteous men,
and as many elders and reverend deacons
as, by crafty and shameless duplicity regard^{v2} . . .
265 judge with respect, dealing unjustly with others, trusting in deceitful statements . . .
More destructive than leopards and wolves, and most wicked;
or as many as are very arrogant or are usurers,

8.411;
ApPaul 31,
34, 39;
ApPet 6, 12

ApPet
8-12;
ApPaul
31-43;
GkApEzra
4:1-24
1.175, etc.
Rev 21:8

ApPaul
35-36

r2. Lit. "straight." Uriel plays a similar role in the judgment in ApPet 4.

s2. In Plato, Republic 10.616b (myth of Er), the place of judgment is marked by a "straight light like a pillar, most nearly resembling a rainbow." Its fastenings held together the entire vault of heaven, and from the extremities was stretched the spindle of necessity. The concept is most probably Orphic. In ApPet 9 a pillar of fire is an instrument of torture.

t2. The idea of a river ordeal is ancient in the Near East and underlies many passages in the Psalms (Ps 69:2f.; Ps 18:5; Jonah 2:4, 6). However, the river of fire derives from Persian belief about the end-time where it serves to distinguish the good from the bad.

Cf. Bundahishn 30:19f. (tr. West, Sacred Books of the East, vol. 5, p. 125f.): "Afterwards the fire and halo melt the Shatvairo in the hills and mountains, and it remains on this earth like a river. Then all men will pass into that melted metal and become pure; when one is righteous, then it seems to him just as though he walks continually in warm milk; but when wicked, then it seems to him in such a manner as though, in the world, he walks continually in melted metal." Cf. Lactantius, DivInst 7.21.6, who may be dependent on the Persian Oracle of Hystaspes.

u2. On lists of vices cf. n. on SibOr 1.174.

v2. Lacuna: presumably "regard persons."

who gather interest upon interest in their homes 270 and harm in each case orphans and widows, or as many as give to widows and orphans what derives from unjust deeds, and as many as make reproach when they give from the fruit of their own labors; as many as abandoned their parents in old age, not making return at all, not providing 275 nourishment to their parents in turn.^{w2} Also as many as disobeyed or answered back an unruly word to their parents, or as many as denied pledges they had taken, and such servants as turned against their masters.
 Again, those who defiled the flesh by licentiousness, 280 or as many as undid the girdle of virginity
 by secret intercourse, as many as aborted what they carried in the womb, as many as cast forth their offspring unlawfully.

EpBar
 19:11;
 ShepHerm
 Sim 9.24.2

3.765;
 ApPet 8;
 EpBar 19:5;
 Did 2;
 ApPaul 40

Punishment of the wicked

These and the sorcerers and sorceresses in addition to them will the anger of the heavenly imperishable God 285 also bring near to the pillar, around which an undying fiery river flows in a circle. All these at once the angels of the immortal, everlasting God will punish terribly from above with whips of flame, having bound them around with fiery chains 290 and unbreakable bonds. Then, in the dead of night, they will be thrown under many terrible infernal beasts
 in Gehenna,^{x2} where there is immeasurable darkness.
 But when they have inflicted many punishments
 on all whose heart was evil, then later 295 a fiery wheel from the great river will press them hard all around, because they were concerned with wicked deeds.
 Then they will wail here and there at a distance
 in most piteous fate, fathers and infant children, mothers and weeping children at the breast.
 300 They will not have their fill of tears, nor will their voice be heard as they lament piteously here and there, but in distress they will shout at length below dark, dank Tartarus. In places unholy they will repay threefold what evil deed they committed, 305 burning in much fire. They will all gnash their teeth,^{y2} wasting away with thirst and raging violence.
 They will call death fair, and it will evade them.
 No longer will death or night give these rest.
 Often they will request God, who rules on high in vain,

2.240, 252

ApZeph 5;
 GkApEzra
 4:1-24

1.103; 4.43
 Mt 5:22;
 AsMos
 10:10

ApPet 12

Hesiod,
Theogony
 736-39
 8.350-58

Rev 9:6;
 ApEl 2:24

w2. This is one of the outrages of the fifth generation in Hesiod, Works and Days 186f.

x2. In the OT, Gehenna refers to a valley outside Jerusalem where, on occasion, incense was burned and children were sacrificed to "Molech" (2Kgs 23:10; Jer 7:31; 32:35). It refers to a place of punishment for the dead in AsMos 10:10 and Mt 5:22. Cf. also 1En 27:2f.; 54:1-2, where the "valley" is not named.

The idea of a place of punishment in the netherworld was prominent in Orphism (e.g. Plato, Republic 10.614-21; Gorgias 523). The destruction of the wicked by fire is prominent in Persian belief about the end, but it is not an eternal punishment in the netherworld. The idea of a fiery hell seems to be a Jewish development. It is suggested by Isa 66:24, but that passage does not imply that the wicked will be alive to feel the flames. The fallen "Watchers" are consigned to a fiery abyss consistently in 1En 10:13; 18:11, etc., and this punishment was extended to sinful humans (90:23f.; cf. 54:1f.). A place of fiery eternal punishment is presupposed in the Qumran scrolls (e.g. 1QS 2) and is ubiquitous in later apocalypses (e.g. Rev 19:20; 20:14f.). Darkness and gloom are characteristic of Tartarus in Hesiod, Theogony 736-39.

y2. Vss. 305-12 correspond to SibOr 8.350-58.

310 and then he will manifestly turn away his face from them.

For he gave seven days of ages to erring men for repentance through the intercession^{z2} of the holy virgin.^{a3}

4Ezra 7:101

Rewards of the righteous

But as for the others, as many as were concerned with justice and noble deeds,

and piety and most righteous thoughts,

315 angels will lift them through the blazing river and bring them to light and to life without care, in which is the immortal path of the great God and three springs of wine, honey, and milk.^{b3}

ApPet 13

The earth will belong equally to all, undivided by walls

8.208–12;
3.622f.;
5.282f.

320 or fences. It will then bear more abundant fruits spontaneously. Lives will be in common and wealth will have no division.

Virgil,
Eclogue
4.18–22

For there will be no poor man there, no rich, and no tyrant, no slave. Further, no one will be either great or small anymore.

8.110f., 121

No kings, no leaders. All will be on a par together.

325 No longer will anyone say at all “night has come” or “tomorrow” or “it happened yesterday,” or worry about many days.

8.424–27

No spring, no summer, no winter, no autumn,
no marriage, no death, no sales, no purchases,
no sunset, no sunrise. For he will make a long day.

330 To these pious ones imperishable God, the universal ruler, will also give another thing.^{c3} Whenever they ask the imperishable God to save men from the raging fire and deathless gnashing he will grant it, and he will do this.

For he will pick them out again from the undying fire

335 and set them elsewhere and send them on account of his own people to another eternal life with the immortals in the Elysian plain where he has the long waves of the deep perennial Acherusian lake.^{d3}

ApPet 14;
ApPaul 22

Confession of the Sibyl

Alas for me, wretched one. What will become of me on that day

340 in return for what I sinned, ill-minded one, busying myself about everything but caring neither for marriage nor for reasons?

7.151–55

But also in my dwelling, which was that of a very wealthy man,
I shut out those in need; and formerly I committed lawless deeds knowingly. But you, savior, rescue me, a brazen one,

345 from my scourges, though I have done shameless deeds.
I beseech you to give me a little rest from the refrain, holy giver of manna, king of a great kingdom.

z2. Lit. “through the hand of.”

a3. In 4Ezra 7:101 the souls of the dead have seven days of freedom after they separate from their bodies to see the eschatological secrets. Then they shall go to their destined abodes. 4Ezra goes on to say that there will be no intercession at the judgment. SibOr 2 apparently knew this tradition and so assigned the seven days to the intercession of the Virgin.

b3. Vss. 318–21—cf. SibOr 8.208–12. On the general concept of the transformation of the earth, cf. Isa 11 and Virgil’s Fourth Eclogue.

c3. In ψ a refutation is inserted here: “Plainly false. For the fire which tortures the condemned will never cease. Even I would pray that this be so, though I am marked with very great scars of faults, which have need of very great mercy. But let babbling Origen be ashamed of saying that there is a limit to punishment.” Cf. Origen, Princ 2.10.5, 6; Contra 5.15.

d3. The Elysian fields or Isles of the Blest appear in Homer, Odyssey 4.561–69 and Hesiod, Works and Days 167–73. They figured prominently in Orphic eschatology.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES, BOOK 3

Introduction

The third Sibyl is the only book of the collection that has received extensive scholarly attention.¹ The composite nature of the book has been recognized by virtually all scholars,² but the fragmentation of the book proposed by Geffcken³ is certainly excessive. In fact we may distinguish three stages in the book:⁴

1. The main corpus: verses 97–349 and 489–829.
2. Oracles against various nations: 350–488.
3. Verses 1–96, which probably constitute the conclusion of a different book.

One verse (776) must be regarded as a Christian interpolation.⁵

1. The main corpus

In the main corpus of the book five oracles may be distinguished: (1) 97–161; (2) 162–95; (3) 196–294; (4) 545–656; (5) 657–808. The first of these, 97–161, stands apart from the rest of the book. It contains: (a) the fall of the tower of Babylon (97–104); (b) a euhemeristic account of the war of the Titans against Cronos and his sons (105–55); (c) a list of world empires (156–61).

The description of the fall of the tower has been widely thought to be a fragment from a collection of oracles of a Babylonian sibyl, perhaps influenced by Berosus, but this theory has been soundly refuted by Nikiprowetzky.⁶ There is nothing in the Sibylline account that could not be developed from Genesis.

The euhemeristic account of Greek mythology is exceptional in Sibylline Oracles 3, and may possibly be borrowed from a non-Jewish source but, on the other hand, is not incompatible with anything else in the book.

The list of world empires is, of course, a typical Sibylline feature. Sibylline Oracles 3.156–61 lists eight kingdoms, but we should assume that the kingdom of Cronos is presupposed as a first kingdom and that a tenth, final kingdom is expected. The passage therefore conforms to the typical Sibylline division of history into ten periods.⁷

The entire section 3.97–161 serves as an introduction to the remaining portions of the book. It introduces the theme of world kingship and shows that it was a cause of strife from the beginning. It therefore provides a context for the oracles about the end-time that are in the rest of the book.

The other four sections present a recurring pattern: (a) sin, usually idolatry, which leads to (b) disaster and tribulation, which is terminated by (c) the advent of a king or kingdom.

The third section of the book (196–294) differs from the others insofar as it is not about the end-time but describes the Babylonian exile and restoration. In the second section (162–95) the king who terminates the period of disasters is identified as the seventh king of Egypt from the Greek dynasty and in the fourth section (545–656) as a king “from the sun,” which should be taken as a reference to an Egyptian king.⁸ In the final section the reference is to a kingdom raised up by God (767).

DATE

The date of the main corpus is fixed by three references to the seventh king of Egypt in ¹ See especially the studies of A. Peretti, La Sibilla Babilonese nella propaganda ellenistica; V. Nikiprowetzky, La Troisième Sibylle; J. J. Collins, The Sibylline Oracles of Egyptian Judaism, pp. 21–71.

² See Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, p. 21. The only significant exception is Nikiprowetzky.

³ Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, pp. 1–17.

⁴ Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, p. 28.

⁵ Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 14. Nikiprowetzky, La Troisième Sibylle, p. 329, apparently takes the verse as Jewish and understands “son of God” as a reference to the Temple.

⁶ Nikiprowetzky, La Troisième Sibylle, pp. 17–36.

⁷ See H. Jeanmaire, La Sibylle et le retour de l'âge d'or (Paris, 1939) p. 103.

⁸ Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, pp. 40f.

verses 193, 318, and 608. While seven was a sacred number, thus perhaps describing the seventh king as the ideal king, the number could not have been introduced, with any credibility, later than the reign of the seventh Ptolemy.⁹ The identification of the seventh Ptolemy is not, however, unambiguous. There are three possible identifications:

Ptolemy 6, Philometor, who reigned from 180–64, 163–45;

Ptolemy 7, Neos Philopator, 145–44;

Ptolemy 8, Physcon (also called Euergetes II), 170–64, 164–63, and 144–17.

Philometor and Physcon were co-regents from 170–64 and Physcon replaced Philometor for a time in 164–63. The enumeration of the kings is further confused by the possibility that Alexander was counted as the first king. Finally, the Sibylline oracle may have been written either during the reign of the seventh king or during that of the sixth, when the seventh was proximately expected. Accordingly, the reference to the seventh king could conceivably point to a date at any time in the second century B.C. down to the death of Physcon in 117 B.C.

However, this period can be further defined. The prominence of the Romans in verses 175–90 requires a date after the battle of Magnesia in 190 B.C. and probably after Rome's intervention in the affairs of Egypt in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes. This already brings us down to the time of Philometor, and so the oracles were most probably written at some time during the reigns of Philometor and Physcon. In view of the remarkable confidence which the Sibyl places in the Ptolemaic kings and of the celebrated relations of Philometor with the Jews,¹⁰ it is most probable that the Sibyl wrote in the period 163–45 B.C.¹¹

PROVENANCE

There is no doubt that Sibylline Oracles 3 was written in Egypt. This is clear from the double reference to Egypt in 155–61, in which the kingdom of Macedonia is followed by a kingdom of Egypt, and from the repeated references to the seventh king of Egypt.

Within Egypt the work has been usually located in Alexandrian Judaism. However, there is reason to believe that it was written in the circles associated with the priest Onias, founder of the temple at Leontopolis.

The strongest clue to the provenance of Sibylline Oracles 3 is the enthusiastic endorsement of a Ptolemaic king as a savior figure who will put an end to war and usher in a reign of peace. The emphasis on warfare and politics throughout the book contrasts sharply with the spiritualizing tendencies usually associated with Alexandrian Judaism. However, it seems entirely appropriate for a follower of Onias, who was a prominent general in the army of Philometor.¹² The hailing of a Ptolemaic king (either Philometor or his expected heir) as a virtual messiah points also to the circles of Onias, who benefited most obviously from the

⁹ The only dissenter from this view is Nikiprowetzky (La Troisième Sibylle, p. 215). He identifies the seventh king as Queen Cleopatra VII (?). It is very doubtful whether the numeral 7 was associated with Cleopatra in antiquity. In any case, whatever the queen's many qualities, history leaves little possibility that she could have been mistaken for a king.

¹⁰ Josephus, Apion 2:49, claims that Philometor entrusted his whole realm to the Jews. While this is certainly an exaggeration there must have been some basis for the statement. The Jewish temple at Leontopolis was built under Philometor (War 1.1.1 and 7.10.2 [432]; Ant 12.9.7 [382f.] and 13.3.1 [62f.]). Also, the Jewish philosopher Aristobulus was said to have been teacher of Philometor or at least to have dedicated a book to him (2Mac 1:10). See J. J. Collins, "The Provenance of the Third Sibylline Oracle," Bulletin of the Institute of Jewish Studies 2 (1974) 8f.

¹¹ Nikiprowetzky, La Troisième Sibylle, pp. 209–12, argues for a 1st-cent. date mainly on the basis of the prominence of Rome in vss. 175–90. However, that oracle makes special note of Roman outrages in Macedonia (190). This reference points not to a 1st-cent. date but rather to the Macedonian wars in the 2nd cent. B.C. Peretti, La Sibilla Babilonese, p. 190, regarded the references to the Romans as a late insertion. J. Nolland, "Sib Or III. 265–94, An Early Maccabean Messianic Oracle," JTS 30 (1979) 158–67, argues that vss. 282–94, which ostensibly refer to the restoration under Cyrus, refer typologically to the author's own day, which he identifies as the time when the Temple was profaned by Antiochus Epiphanes. Since he takes the oracle to refer to a Davidic messiah, and since it does not refer to the Maccabees, he dates it "prior to significant Maccabean success." However, even if we accept the typological interpretation of the passage, which is not certain, the only individual king mentioned in the passage is Cyrus. Typologically, the passage suggests that a gentile king will fill the messianic role. Silence on the Maccabees may be due to a lack of sympathy with them, and the Maccabean restoration of the Temple may not have been recognized.

¹² Josephus, Apion 2.149.

patronage of Philometor, rather than to any academic circles in Alexandria. Further, the third Sibyl displays an interest in the Temple which is unparalleled in any document from Egyptian Judaism¹³—see verses 286–94, 564–67, 657–59, 715–18. This interest in the Temple does not require priestly origins but is obviously highly compatible with the attitudes of a follower of Onias:

The Temple to which Sibylline Oracles 3 refers is certainly the Jerusalem Temple. This fact, and the lack of any explicit reference to Leontopolis, might be thought to constitute an objection to provenance in the circles of Onias. The objection, however, is not a serious one, and rather provides a closer indication of the date of the work. The temple of Leontopolis was not built until several years after Onias arrived in Egypt.¹⁴ The land for the temple was probably given in recognition of services over a number of years.¹⁵ Sibylline Oracles 3 was probably written in this period before the new temple was built—therefore approximately 160–50 B.C. We should note moreover that there is no reason why the community of Leontopolis should not have continued to look on Jerusalem as the ideal temple even after the new shrine was built, just as the Qumran community continued to look to the Jerusalem Temple after they had severed connections with it.¹⁶

HISTORICAL IMPORTANCE

The main historical interest of Sibylline Oracles 3 lies in its attestation of a Jewish community that could hail a Ptolemaic king as a savior figure or Messiah. The transformation at the end-time is dated to the reign of the seventh king of Egypt in verses 193, 318, and 608, but the most striking instance is found in verses 652–56. There we read that a “king from the sun” will bring peace to the earth by the counsels of God. The phrase “a king from the sun” is also found in the closely contemporary Egyptian Potter’s Oracle,¹⁷ where it clearly refers to an Egyptian king. In Egyptian mythology the king was thought to be an incarnation of the sun-god.¹⁸ There is nothing to indicate that Sibylline Oracles 3 endorsed the Egyptian mythology, but in view of the frequency with which the Egyptian kings (including the Ptolemies) were associated with the sun,¹⁹ verse 652 must be taken as a reference to an Egyptian king. This Egyptian “king from the sun” cannot be held distinct from the “seventh king” of the Greeks in whose reign war will cease. In short, Sibylline Oracles 3 looked upon the seventh Ptolemaic king, whether present or still future, as a messiah sent by God. Such veneration of a gentile king was not without precedent in Jewish tradition but strikingly recalls how Deutero-Isaiah hailed Cyrus as messiah (Isa 45:1).

A work that hails a Ptolemaic king as a savior figure must be presumed to have at least in part a propagandistic purpose. The work might at least hope to ingratiate the royal house and show that Jews and gentiles could share a common hope.

¹³ Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, pp. 48f.; Bulletin of the Institute of Jewish Studies, pp. 11f. A. Momigliano, “La portata storica dei vaticini sul settimo re nel terzo libro degli Oracoli Sibillini,” in Forma futuri: Studi in onore del Cardinale Michele Pellegrino (Turin, 1975) pp. 1077–84, argues that SibOr 3 was written to assert the unity of Egyptian and Palestinian Judaism after the Maccabean revolt. He sees a reference to the revolt in vss. 194f.: “And then the people of the great God will again be strong.” This allusion, however, is far too vague and should be understood as future hope, not accomplished fact. There is nothing in SibOr 3 that indicates sympathy with the Maccabees. The emphasis placed on a king of Egypt is quite alien to the nationalism of the Maccabees, but is strikingly compatible with the politics of the Oniads both before and after the revolt.

¹⁴ See M. Delcor, “Le Temple d’Onias en Egypte,” RB 125 (1968) 196.

¹⁵ V. Tcherikover, Corpus papyrorum Judaicarum (Cambridge, 1957) vol. 1, p. 45.

¹⁶ Collins, Bulletin of the Institute of Jewish Studies, pp. 15f.; The Sibylline Oracles, p. 51.

¹⁷ See L. Koenen, “Die Prophezeiungen des ‘Töpfers,’” Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik 2 (1968) 178–209; idem, “The Prophecies of a Potter: A Prophecy of World Renewal Becomes an Apocalypse,” Proceedings of the Twelfth International Congress of Papyrology, ed. D. H. Samuels (Proceedings of the 12th International Congress of Papyrology, 1970) pp. 249–54; F. Dunand, “L’Oracle du Potier et la formation de l’apocalyptique en Egypte,” L’Apocalyptique (Études d’Histoire des Religions 3; Paris, 1977) pp. 39–67.

¹⁸ See J. Bergman, Ich bin Isis (Uppsala, Sweden, 1969) p. 67.

¹⁹ In a hieroglyphic stele dated to 311 B.C., Alexander IV is described as “chosen of the sun, son of the sun.” On the Rosetta Stone, Ptolemy V Euergetes is described as the son of the sun “to whom the sun has given victory.” See E. R. Bevan, A History of Egypt under the Ptolemaic Dynasty (London, 1927) pp. 28, 30, 263; W. Dittenberger, Orientalis Graeci inscriptiones selectae (Hildesheim, Germany, 1960) vol. 1, p. 143; A. Momigliano, Forma futuri: Studi in onore del Cardinale Michele Pellegrino, pp. 1077–84, suggests that in SibOr 3, as in the Potter’s Oracle, the king from the sun is anti-Ptolemaic. This view ignores the association of sun mythology with the Ptolemies and makes a strained distinction between the seventh king and the king from the sun. Momigliano’s thesis that the oracle was written in support of the Maccabean revolt suffers from the lack of any clear reference to the Maccabees.

THEOLOGICAL IMPORTANCE

As usual in the Sibylline Oracles the concept of the end-time provides a framework for exhortation. Certain types of action lead to destruction, certain others to deliverance. In section 2 (vss. 162–95) the main cause of destruction is the misconduct of the Romans, especially homosexuality (185–86) and covetousness (189). In section 3 (196–294) the Babylonian exile is a direct punishment for idolatry (275–85). In the fourth section (545–656) the Greeks are endangered because of idolatry (545–55) but can avoid disaster by sending sacrifices to the Temple (565). They are contrasted with the Jews, who honor the Temple with sacrifices and avoid idolatry (575–90), adultery and homosexuality (595–600). Again in verses 601–7 the gentiles are said to be in danger because of homosexuality and idolatry. Finally in the last section (657–808) the Sibyl again appeals to the Greeks to refrain from idolatry, adultery, and homosexuality (762–66) and prophesies that people from all countries will send gifts to the Temple (715–19, 772f.). The main message of Sibylline Oracles 3 then would seem to lie in the denunciation of idolatry and sexual abuses and in the advocacy of the Temple. This message is explicitly directed to the gentiles but no doubt was intended for Jewish readers as well.

One brief passage (vss. 591–95) gives us a glimpse of some of the more specific practices of this branch of Judaism. They raise their arms in prayer to God at dawn and take ritual baths (or wash their hands ritually).²⁰ Despite occasional attempts to relate these practices to the Essenes or Pythagoreans, the evidence is not specific enough to warrant the identification of a sect.²¹

The eschatology of Sibylline Oracles 3 centers on the expectation of an ideal king or kingdom. The enemies of that king will be killed or subdued by oaths (654). The state of salvation is envisaged in political earthly terms, as a transformation of the earth and exaltation of the Temple (701–61, 767–95).

Before this ideal king comes there will be a period of chaotic tribulation. In verses 611–15 this is brought about in part by a king from Asia, the traditional threat to Egypt.²² In verses 660–701 a final period of confusion is caused by the attack of the gentiles on Jerusalem. They are destroyed directly by God by various means, including brimstone from heaven.

RELATION TO OTHER BOOKS

The ethics of Sibylline Oracles 3 are commonplace in the Judaism of the hellenistic age. Similar polemics against sexual aberrations are found, for example, in Epistle of Aristeas 152, Philo, Abr 135; SpecLeg 2.50, 3.37; and Romans 1:26. Polemic against idolatry is ubiquitous in Jewish writing after Deutero-Isaiah. The polemic against astrology and Chaldean divination in verses 220–28 is paralleled in Jubilees 12:16–18 and 1 Enoch 80:7.

The eschatology of Sibylline Oracles 3 finds its closest parallels in pre-exilic Jewish literature such as Isaiah and the Psalms. The assault of the gentiles on Jerusalem is especially reminiscent of Psalms 2 and 48, while the transformation of the earth in verses 785–95 is obviously dependent on Isaiah 11. The idea of the pilgrimage of the gentiles at the end-time to Jerusalem is found in Isaiah 2:1–4, Micah 4:1–4, and Zechariah 14:16–21.

The expectation of an ideal king, followed by a transformation of the earth, is also paralleled in a number of contemporary gentile writings, most notably the Potter's Oracle and (somewhat later) Virgil's Fourth Eclogue. Sibylline Oracles 3 shows no sign of a belief in resurrection or afterlife typical of the apocalyptic writings of the period.

2. Sibylline Oracles 3.350–488. Oracles Against Various Nations

Verses 350–480 consist of four diverse oracles that lack any ethical exhortation and are included because of the general Sibylline interest in political oracles. The four oracles are vss. 350–80, 381–87, 388–400, 401–88.

²⁰ According to a quotation in Clement (Protrepticus 6:70) they purify their flesh by washing. According to the MSS they wash their hands.

²¹ See the discussion by Nikiprowetzky, La Troisième Sibylle, pp. 238–59. Nikiprowetzky errs in trying to eliminate the differences between SibOr 3 and SibOr 4.

²² See Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, pp. 39f. Peretti, La Sibilla Babilonese, mistakenly takes the king from Asia as a messianic figure.

VERSES 350–80

This oracle is distinguished from the rest of the book by the fact that the antithetical powers are Rome and Asia, whereas the rest of the book deals with internal Egyptian matters and presents a contrast between Rome and Egypt or Asia and Egypt. The theme of the oracle is the vengeance of Asia on Rome, which will be exacted by a lady, a despoina. The lady in question should be identified as Cleopatra, representing also Egypt, of which she was queen, and the goddess Isis, whom she claimed to incarnate.²³ The only serious alternative to this interpretation, which has been put forward,²⁴ is that the oracle was part of the propaganda of Mithridates (in which case the despoina must be identified as Asia). However, one detail of the oracle renders this interpretation highly unlikely. Not only is the destruction of Rome envisaged but also its restoration (361) and an ultimate state of harmony (375). Such an idea of reconciliation had no place in Mithridates' war to the death against Rome.²⁵ Cleopatra's ambition, however, was to rule over the Roman Empire, not to destroy it. She stood in the tradition of Alexander—her son by Antony was called Alexander Helios—and therefore in a tradition which envisaged the unity of East and West.²⁶

Date and provenance

This oracle must have been written shortly before the battle of Actium (31 B.C.) and, presumably, in Egypt. There is nothing specifically Jewish in these verses but, whether they were composed by a Jew or only taken over, we must note that they are quite in harmony with the enthusiasm for the Ptolemaic house noted in the main corpus of Sibylline Oracles 3. It is true that relations between Cleopatra and the Jews were not always cordial. The queen wanted to restore Egyptian rule in Palestine, a desire naturally resented by Herod.²⁷ There is also a report, of less than complete reliability, that she withheld corn from the Jews in time of famine.²⁸ However, there is no reason to suppose that Cleopatra was at odds with all Jews or that some of them could not have espoused her cause, especially those who had a tradition of loyalty to the Ptolemaic house.

Significance and relation to other literature

The importance of this oracle lies in its attestation of Near Eastern anti-Roman propaganda. The fact that at least one strand of Egyptian Judaism could espouse such an oracle is also of interest.

Two traditions are important for understanding this oracle. The first is an old tradition, common to the entire eastern Mediterranean, which saw world history as an ongoing conflict between East and West, Asia and Europe. This theme is found in Herodotus 1.4 and is used in the Alexandra of Lycophron, in oracles preserved by Phlegon which are said to have been uttered at the time of the battle of Magnesia,²⁹ and above all in the Oracle of Hystaspes.³⁰ It also finds mention in Tacitus' account of the Jewish war.³¹ Significantly, Cleopatra's campaign against Rome was presented as a world conflict between East and West not only by the Roman poets Virgil (Aeneid 8.685f.) and Florus (2.21) but most explicitly by the Egyptian Jew Philo (Legatio ad Gaium 144).³²

The second tradition is native to Egypt. According to Egyptian tradition every queen was an incarnation of Isis. This claim was made explicitly by Cleopatra.³³ Many aspects of the ²³ Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, pp. 57–71.

²⁴ So Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 8; Lanchester, "The Sibylline Oracles," p. 372; Peretti, La Sibilla Babilonese, p. 340.

²⁵ See H. Jeanmaire, La Sibylle et la retour de l'Âge d'or, p. 58. On the Mithridatic wars see E. Will, Histoire politique du monde hellénistique, 323–30 av. J.C. (Nancy, France, 1967) vol. 2, pp. 387–422.

²⁶ See especially W. W. Tarn, "Alexander Helios and the Golden Age," Journal of Roman Studies 22 (1932) 135–59.

²⁷ Josephus, Ant 15.4.2 (96ff.).

²⁸ This report is attributed by Josephus to Apion, who used it in anti-Jewish polemic. Apion 2.56–61.

²⁹ F. Jacoby, FGH, vol. 2B, pp. 1174–77; Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, p. 7.

³⁰ Especially Lactantius, DivInst 7.15.11.

³¹ Tacitus, Histories 5.13.

³² See E. M. Smallwood, Legatio ad Gaium (Leiden, 1970) p. 228.

³³ Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, pp. 170f.

final state envisaged in this Sibylline oracle are paralleled in the Isis aretologies—the title despoina, abolition of war and slaughter, introduction of harmony and justice.³⁴ The Jewish Sibyllist need not have endorsed the worship of Isis, but the endorsement of the queen reflects the same cordial attitude to the Egyptian royal house that was attested in the oracles from the time of Philometor.

VERSES 381–87

These verses are ascribed to a Persian Sibyl by Geffcken because they predict the fall of the Macedonian kingdom after the conquest of Babylon.³⁵ They are ascribed to a Babylonian Sibyl by S. K. Eddy for exactly the same reason.³⁶ At least the existence of a Persian Sibyl is attested.³⁷ (The existence of the Babylonian Sibyl is more dubious.) However, the evidence for attributing this oracle to a specific situation is simply inadequate. It could have been written by anyone hostile to the Macedonians at any time after the fall of Babylon to Alexander.

VERSES 388–400

This oracle is again directed against the Macedonians. The man, clad in purple, who will come to Asia is certainly Alexander.³⁸ This oracle was updated by a Jewish Sibyllist who added references to the root with ten horns and the horn growing on the side, clearly alluding to Daniel 7. Since all the oracles in verses 350–488 were apparently late additions to Sibylline Oracles 3, the reference to Daniel is of no help in dating the book. The oracle stands as an isolated piece of anti-hellenistic propaganda.

VERSES 401–88

These verses have been plausibly attributed by Geffcken to the Erythrean Sibyl.³⁹ Varro tells us that the Sibyl of Erythrea prophesied that Troy would fall and that Homer would write falsehoods,⁴⁰ and Pausanias (10.2.2) says that she sang of Helen and the Trojan War. These are precisely the themes we find in Sibylline Oracles 3.401–32. Further, this is the only section of Sibylline Oracles 3 where there are regular references to places in Asia Minor.

The only indications of date are in verses 464–69, where there is clear reference to a Roman civil war, and in 470, which speaks of a man from Italy who goes to Asia. The man from Italy has been identified by Lanchester as Sulla.⁴¹ This oracle might well be associated with the Mithridatic wars.

The oracles in verses 350–480 show no ethical interest. They were presumably inserted to bring Sibylline Oracles 3 up to date and to add to its Sibylline flavor by increasing the prophecies of destruction against particular cities.

3. The oracles in Sibylline Oracles 3.1–96

The first ninety-six verses of Sibylline Oracles 3 are dissociated from the rest of the book by all scholars except Nikiprowetzky.⁴² Even the manuscripts contain indications that these verses are part of a separate work. In most manuscripts the present Sibylline Oracles 3 is introduced as an extract from the “second book, about God.” Before verse 93 three manuscripts in the class ψ insert the note “seek here the remnants of the second book and the beginning of the third.”⁴³ Sibylline Oracles 3.1–45 are quite different from anything else

³⁴ Tarn, “Alexander Helios,” pp. 139–48; Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, p. 62.

³⁵ Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 13.

³⁶ Eddy, The King Is Dead, p. 127.

³⁷ Varro, cited by Lactantius, DivInst 1.6.

³⁸ So Eddy, The King Is Dead, p. 12, following Bousset, “Die Beziehungen der ältesten jüdischen Sibylle zur Chaldäischen,” ZNW 3 (1902) 23–50. H. H. Rowley, “The Interpretation and Date of the Sibylline Oracles, III. 388–400,” ZAW 44 (1926) 324–27, suggests Antiochus Epiphanes. Eddy considers this oracle Persian in origin, but his opinion rests on no firm basis.

³⁹ Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 13.

⁴⁰ Lactantius, DivInst 1.6.

⁴¹ Lanchester, “The Sibylline Oracles,” p. 387.

⁴² See his discussion, La Troisième Sibylle, pp. 60–66, 217–25.

⁴³ Vss. 93–96 form a distinct oracle which may or may not have been associated with the preceding section.

in Sibylline Oracles 3 and find their closest analogues in the fragments found in Theophilus and in the verses cited in the Prologue. Kurfess has suggested that the first three fragments with verses 1–92 make up the original second book of the collection.⁴⁴ This suggestion is attractive insofar as verses 46–92 would then form the conclusion of a book, whereas they now stand rather incongruously at the beginning of a book.⁴⁵ There must, however, be some doubt as to whether verses 46–96 really belong with verses 1–45 at all. Also verses 63–74 must be considered later than the rest of the material.

DATE

Verses 1–45 and the fragments in Theophilus are direct hortatory material that are concerned chiefly with monotheism and polemic against idolatry. This material finds its closest parallels in the Jewish Orphic fragments, which probably date to the second century B.C.,⁴⁶ and also in Philo. In themselves, they could have been composed at any time in the late hellenistic or early Roman periods. If we may assume that they originally formed a unit with any part of verses 46–92 we can fix their date more precisely.

Verses 46–92 consist of three oracles: 46–62, 63–74, 75–92. Verses 46–62 must be dated shortly after the battle of Actium. Verse 52 refers to the second triumvirate.⁴⁷ Verses 46f. presuppose that Rome has already gained control over Egypt.

Verses 75–92 were also written shortly after the battle of Actium. This oracle is dominated by the figure of Cleopatra, the “widow” of verse 77.⁴⁸ Here she is no longer the glorious queen of Sibylline Oracles 3.350–80 but the widow who has brought disaster upon the world. The oracle reflects the disillusionment of the Egyptian Jews after the defeat of Cleopatra.

Verses 63–74 relate the coming of Beliar, the signs he will perform, and his eventual destruction. He is said to come “ek Sebastēnōn.” Two main interpretations of this phrase have been proposed:

a. It means: from the people of Sebaste, the name given to Samaria by Herod in 25 B.C. in honor of Augustus. Beliar is then identified with Simon Magus or simply said to be associated with Samaria as an anti-Messiah.⁴⁹ In fact, however, there is no parallel for an anti-Messiah from Samaria in Jewish writings.

b. The phrase “ek Sebastēnōn” means “from the line of the Augusti.”⁵⁰ In this case Beliar can be most plausibly identified with Nero. This interpretation is supported by two parallels. First there is the prominence of Nero as an eschatological adversary throughout the Sibylline corpus.⁵¹ Second, in the Ascension of Isaiah 4:1, Beliar is clearly said to come in the likeness of Nero (“a lawless king, the slayer of his mother”).

Most probably, then, Sibylline Oracles 3.63–74 should be taken as a reference to Nero. It was added sometime after A.D. 70 to bring this collection up to date with current eschatological expectations. Even if we were to understand verse 63 as a reference to Sebaste we would have to assume that it was a late insertion in its present context.

PROVENANCE

The interest in Cleopatra points to an Egyptian setting for verses 75–92, and this is confirmed by the reference to Egypt in verse 46. Nothing in the other passages is incompatible with Egyptian provenance.

HISTORICAL AND THEOLOGICAL IMPORTANCE

The opening forty-five verses of Sibylline Oracles 3 and the fragments are important as ⁴⁴ A. Kurfess, “Christian Sibyllines” in HSW, vol. 2, p. 707. On the other fragments see A. Kurfess, “Wie sind die Fragmente der Oracula Sibyllina Einzuordnen?” Aevum 26 (1952) 228–35.

⁴⁵ Nikiprowetzky attempts to include in SibOr 3 not only the present vss. 1–96 but also the fragments found in Theophilus and the fragment of Ps-Phoc from SibOr 2 (La Troisième Sibylle, p. 65). See the critique by Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, p. 25.

⁴⁶ See N. Walter, Der Thoraausleger Aristobulus (Berlin, 1964).

⁴⁷ So Friedlieb, Geffcken, Jeanmaire, Kurfess; Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, p. 65.

⁴⁸ So Friedlieb, Jeanmaire, Bousset, Tarn. For full discussion see Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, pp. 66–70.

⁴⁹ Nikiprowetzky, La Troisième Sibylle, pp. 140–43.

⁵⁰ So Bousset, Lanchester, Charles. See Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, p. 86.

⁵¹ See Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, pp. 80–87.

an attestation of a highly spiritual idea of God, similar to that found in the Orphic fragments and Philo. God is eternal (3.15), self-begotten, and invisible (3.11). Great emphasis is laid on the contrast between perishable and imperishable (frags. 1–3) and on the unity and uniqueness of God. Idolatry is the supreme sin because it is not in accordance with truth. This highly spiritual religion is not, however, adverse to sacrificial cult but insists only that it be offered to the true God (frag. 1:20–22).

The passages 46–62 and 75–92, referring to the end-time, are important indicators of the reaction of some Egyptian Jews to the defeat of Cleopatra. The tone in each oracle is one of bitter disillusionment. The main emphasis falls on a day of destruction—with brimstone from heaven in 3.60f. and the collapse of the heavens, accompanied by a stream of fire from heaven in verses 80–85. It is noteworthy that here, after the battle of Actium, the horizons of the Sibyl are no longer confined to Egypt but extend to the whole world. The “holy prince” of 3.49 will gain sway over the whole earth. This conception of the savior figure may well be influenced by Roman propaganda, which emphasized the universality and eternity of the empire.⁵²

Again in verses 75–92 the Sibyl is concerned with the whole universe, but this time there is no mention of a savior figure. Drawing on the language of Isaiah 34:4, the Sibyl envisages the collapse of the heavens and a final conflagration. The widow Cleopatra brings widowhood and desolation on the universe. Like Babylon in Isaiah 47:8f., her claim to universal rule is made void by her widowhood.

The destruction of the heavens is an important recurring theme in the Sibylline Oracles. The most striking elaboration is found in Sibylline Oracles 5.512–31. It also occurs in apocalyptic writings such as Revelation 6:13–14.

⁵² Ibid., pp. 65f.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES

Book 3

FROM THE SECOND BOOK CONCERNING GOD

The inspiration of the Sibyl

Blessed, heavenly one, who thunders on high, who have the cherubim as your throne,^a I entreat you to give a little rest to me who have prophesied unending truth, for my heart is tired within. But why does my heart shake again? and why is my spirit lashed by a whip, compelled from within to proclaim an oracle to all? But I will utter everything again, as much as God bids me say to men.

Ps 80:1;
99:1, etc.

3.295-300;
489-91;
698-701;
818; 2.1-5,
etc.

Praise of God and denunciation of idolatry

Men, who have the form which God molded in his image,^b why do you wander in vain, and not walk the straight path ever mindful of the immortal creator?
There is one God, sole ruler, ineffable, who lives in the sky, self-begotten, invisible, who himself sees all things. No sculptor's hand made him, nor does a cast of gold or ivory reveal him, by the crafts of man, but he himself, eternal, revealed himself as existing now, and formerly and again in the future. For who, being mortal, is able to see God with eyes? or who will be able even to hear only the name of the great heavenly God who rules the world? who created everything by a word, heaven and sea, untiring sun, full moon, shining stars, strong mother Tethys,^c springs and rivers, imperishable fire, days, nights. Indeed it is God himself who fashioned Adam, of four letters, the first-formed man, fulfilling by his name east and west and south and north. He himself fixed the shape of the form of men and made wild beasts and serpents and birds. You neither revere nor fear God, but wander to no purpose, worshiping snakes and sacrificing to cats,^d speechless idols, and stone statues of people; and sitting in front of the doors at godless temples^e you do not fear^f the existing God who guards all things. You rejoice in the evil of stones, forgetting the judgment of the immortal savior who created heaven and earth. Alas for a race which rejoices in blood, a crafty and evil race

2.126; 3.629,760; 8.377

4.12

Isa 40:18-26
WisSol 13:10-19
LetAris 135-38; 2En 33
(A&B);
Ps-Heraclitus Letter 4
Philo, Dec 76-80

Ex 33:20; Judg 13:22; 1Jn 4:12

1.19; WisSol 9:1
Ps 33:6

2En 30:13

WisSol
15:18
Ezek 9:17

a. Lit. "who have the cherubim, enthroned" (following Geffcken).

b. On vss. 8-45 cf. SibOr frags. 1 and 3 and the Ps-Orph fragments in Eusebius, PrEv 13.12.5.

c. Tethys was a sea-goddess and therefore personified the sea.

d. The polemic is specifically directed against the Egyptians. Cf. LetAris 138; Philo, Dec 76; WisSol 15:18.

e. Nikiprowetzky, La Troisième Sibylle, p. 229, convincingly explains this verse with reference to the cult of Isis. Cf. Ovid, Tristes 296f.: Isidis aede sedens vir ante fores. "A man sitting in front of the doors in the shrine of Isis."

f. Reading ou tremete (Geffcken) for têreite.

of impious and false double-tongued men and immoral adulterous idol worshipers who plot deceit.

There is wickedness in their breasts, a frenzy raging within.

- 40 They ravage booty for themselves and have a shameless spirit.
For no one who is rich and has possessions will give a share to another but there will be terrible wickedness among all mortals.
They will have no fidelity at all. Many widowed women will love other men secretly for gain;
45 and those who have^e husbands will not keep hold of the rope of life.

1Tim 5:13

Universal rule of Rome, followed by eschatological destruction

But when Rome will also rule over Egypt guiding it toward a single goal,^h then indeed the most great kingdom of the immortal king will become manifest over men.

AsMos
10:1;
PssSol 17:4
PssSol
17:32-34;
8.169

- 50 For a holy prince will come to gain sway over the scepters of the earth forever, as time presses on.

Then also implacable wrath will fall upon Latin men.

Three will destroy Rome with piteous fate.ⁱ

All men will perish in their own dwellings
when the fiery cataract flows from heaven.

2.196, etc.

- 55 Alas, wretched one, when will that day come,
and the judgment of the great king immortal God?

Yet, just for the present, be founded, cities, and all be embellished with temples and stadia, markets and golden silver and stone statues so that you may come to the bitter day.

8.123;
13.64

- 60 For it will come, when the smell of brimstone spreads among all men. But I will tell all in turn, in how many cities mortals will endure evil.

3.462;
7.142

The advent of Beliar

Then Beliar will come from the Sebastēnoi^j

2.167, etc. Ascens 2:4; 4:2

- and he will raise up the height of mountains, he will raise up the sea, 65 the great fiery sun and shining moon, and he will raise up the dead,^k and perform many signs for men. But they will not be effective in him.

Ascens 4:5; ApEI 3:7
Ephrem Syrus 9;
Ps-Methodius 93B; ApPet 2
Ps-Hippolytus 23.106.
14.24

But he will, indeed, also lead men astray, and he will lead astray
many faithful, chosen Hebrews, and also other lawless men

- 70 who have not yet listened to the word of God.

But whenever the threats of the great God draws nigh and a burning power comes through the sea to land
it will also burn Beliar and all overbearing men, as many as put faith in him.

3.54.84,
etc.

Cosmic destruction in the reign of Cleopatra

- 75 Then indeed the world will be governed under the hands of a woman,^l and be obedient in everything.

Then when a widow reigns over the whole world,
and throws gold and silver into the wondrous brine

11.279.
290: Isa
47:8f.; Rev
18:7-8

g. Reading hai lachousai (φ, ψ, Nikiprowetzky) for lelachousa.

h. Reading eis hen ithunousa (ψ, Nikiprowetzky).
The reference is to Rome's conquest of Egypt after the battle of Actium in 31 B.C.

i. This should be read as a reference to the second triumvirate (Antony, Lepidus, and Octavian).

j. I.e. Nero will come from the line of Augustus.
See the Introduction to SibOr 3.

k. Contrast ApEI 3:10f., where the Antichrist is distinguished from the Messiah precisely by his inability to raise the dead.

l. The woman here and widow in vs. 76 should be identified as Cleopatra.

- and casts the bronze and iron of ephemeral men 80 into the sea, then all the elements of the universe will be bereft, when God who dwells in the sky rolls up the heaven as a scroll is rolled,
 and the whole variegated vault of heaven falls on the wondrous earth and ocean. An undying cataract 85 of raging fire will flow, and burn earth, burn sea, and melt the heavenly vault and days and creation itself into one and separate them into clear air.
 There will no longer be twinkling spheres of luminaries,
 no night, no dawn, no numerous days of care,
 90 no spring, no summer, no winter, no autumn.
 And then indeed the judgment of the great God will come into the midst of the great world, when all these things happen. 2En 65 (B)

2.206;
8.3378.413
Isa 34:4;
Rev 6:143.54;
2.196, etc.

2.213

2.326;
8.425f.

Fragmentary oracle

- O, O for the floating waters and all dry land, and the rising sun which will never set again.
 95 All will obey him as he enters the world again because it was the first to recognize his power also.^m

Mal 4:2

The tower of Babel

- But when the threats of the great God are fulfilled with which he once threatened men when they built the tower in the land of Assyriaⁿ . . . They were all of one language 100 and they wanted to go up to starry heaven.
 But immediately the immortal one imposed a great compulsion^o on the winds. Then the winds cast down the great tower from on high, and stirred up strife for mortals among themselves.
 Therefore humans gave the city the name Babylon.
 105 But when the tower fell, and the tongues of men were diversified by various sounds, the whole earth of humans was filled with fragmenting kingdoms.
 Then was the tenth generation of articulate men, from the time when the Flood came upon the men of old.

Gen 11:1-9; Jub 10:19-26
Ant 1.4.3 (118); Ps-Eup F1,
F2 (PrEv 9:17,18)

Jub 10:26; Ant 1.4.3 (118)

Gen 11:9

2.15, etc.

The Titans

- 110 Cronos and Titan and Iapetus reigned,^p
 the best children of Gaia and Ouranos, whom men called earth and heaven, giving them a name because they were the first of articulate men.
 The portions of the earth were threefold, according to the lot of each 115 and each one reigned, having his share, and they did not fight for there were oaths imposed by their father, and the divisions were just.
 When the full time, the old age of the father, came,
 he also died, and the sons made a dire

1.293

m. This fragment is enigmatic. It is sometimes regarded as Christian.

n. Anakoluothon.

o. The parallel passage in Josephus, Ant 1.4.3 (118), uses the plural "gods." This has often been taken to reflect a pagan source, probably Berossus. Josephus explicitly claims to be citing the Sibyl at this point. Even if Josephus had access to a Babylonian source it does not follow that the Sibyl also drew on that source.

p. The account of the Titans is paralleled in Hesiod, Theogony 421ff., but differs in details and is interpreted euhemeristically to refer to human beings.

transgression of oaths and stirred up strife against each other 120 as to who should have royal honor and reign over all men.
 Cronos and Titan fought against each other but Rhea, Gaia, Aphrodite who loves crowns, Demeter, Hestia, and fair-tressed Dione brought them to friendship, having assembled 125 all the kings, kindred and brothers, and other men who were of the same blood and parents.
 And they chose Cronos king to rule over all because he was eldest and best in appearance.
 But Titan, for his part, imposed great oaths on Cronos 130 that he should not rear a family of male children, so that he himself might reign when old age and fate came upon Cronos.
 Whenever Rhea gave birth, the Titans sat by her,
 and they tore apart all male children,
 but they allowed the females to live and be reared with their mother.
 135 But when Lady Rhea gave birth in the third^q child-bearing she brought forth Hera first. When they saw with their eyes the female species, the Titans, savage men, went home. Then Rhea bore a male child, whom she quickly sent away to be reared secretly and in private,
 140 to Phrygia, having taken three Cretan men under oath.
 Therefore they named him Zeus, because he was sent away.^r
 Similarly she sent away Poseidon secretly.
 Further, the third time, Rhea, marvel of women, bore Pluto
 as she went past Dodona, whence the watery paths 145 of the river Europus flowed and the water ran to the sea mingled with the Peneius, and they call it Stygian.^s
 When the Titans heard that children existed in secret, whom Cronos had begotten with Rhea, his consort, Titan assembled sixty sons
 150 and held Cronos and Rhea, his consort, in fetters.^t
 He hid them in the earth and guarded them in bonds.
 Then indeed the sons of mighty Cronos heard it and they stirred up great war and din of battle against him.
 This is the beginning of war for all mortals 155 for this is the first beginning of war for mortals.

Hesiod,
Theogony
 629f.

1.310-17

A list of kingdoms

Then God inflicted evil upon the Titans and all the descendants of Titans and of Cronos died. But then as time pursued its cyclic course the kingdom of Egypt arose, then that of the Persians, 160 Medes, and Ethiopians, and Assyrian Babylon, then that of the Macedonians, of Egypt again, then of Rome.^u

3.199-201

4.49-104;
 8:6-9

A further prophecy of world kingdoms

Then the utterance of the great God rose in my breast

3.297-99;
 490f.: 698f.

q. Gk. tē tritatē geneē (φ, ψ, Nikiprowetzky) for tēn tritatēn geneēn.

r. A pun on the Gk. word dia, accusative of Zeus, but also a preposition. Cf. Cornutus 2: hoi di' auton ginetai kai sōzetai panta, "because on account of him all things come into being and are saved." So also LetAris 16. This etymology is Stoic in origin. The usual story of the birth of Zeus says that he was sent to Crete.

s. The Styx was one of the rivers of the underworld.

t. For the revolt of the Titans against Zeus see Hesiod, Theogony 618-885; Apollodorus, Library 1.2.1; 6.3.

u. If we include the kingdom of Cronos and an anticipated kingdom of the end-time, this list gives the usual number 10.

- and bade me prophesy concerning every land
and remind kings of the things that are to be.
- 165 And God first put this in my mind:
How many kingdoms of men will be raised up?
The house of Solomon will rule first of all,
and the Phoenicians, who disembark on Asia and other islands, and the race of Pamphylians, and Persians and Phrygians,
- 170 Carians and Mysians, and the race of the Lydians, rich in gold.
Then the overbearing and impious Greeks:
Another, great diverse race, of Macedonia, will rule, who will come as a terrible cloud of war on mortals.
But heavenly God will destroy them from the depth.
- 175 But then will be the beginning^v of another kingdom, white and many-headed from the western sea.^w
It will rule over much land, and will shake many,
and will thereafter cause fear to all kings.
It will destroy much gold and silver
- 180 from many cities. But there will again be gold on the wondrous earth, and then silver also and ornament.
They will also oppress mortals. But those men will have a great fall when they launch on a course of unjust haughtiness.
Immediately compulsion to impiety will come upon these men.
- 185 Male will have intercourse with male and they will set up boys in houses of ill-fame and in those days there will be a great affliction among men and it will throw everything into confusion. 2.73; 3.596.764; 4.34; 5.166, 387.430; LetAris 152
Philo, Abr 135
SpecLeg 2.50; 3.37
Rom 1:26; 1Cor 6:9f.
- It will cut up everything and fill everything with evils 3.613 with disgraceful love of gain, ill-gotten wealth, 190 in many places, but especially in Macedonia.^x
It will stir up hatred. Every kind of deceit will be found among them until the seventh reign, when 3.318; 608
a king of Egypt, who will be of the Greeks by race, will rule.^y
And then the people of the great God will again be strong
- 195 who will be guides in life for all mortals. 1.385

A prophecy of various woes

- But why did God also prompt me to say this:
What first, what next, what will be the final evil
on all men, what will be the beginning of these things?
First God will inflict evil upon the Titans 3.156
- 200 for they will make retribution to the sons of mighty Cronos, because they bound Cronos and the noble mother.
Second, the Greeks will have tyrannies and proud kings overbearing and impious, adulterous^z and wicked in all respects. There will no longer
- 205 be respite from war for mortals. All the terrible Phrygians will perish, and evil will come upon Troy on that day.
Immediately evil will also come upon the Persians and Assyrians, 11.53-55
all Egypt, Libya, and the Ethiopians,

v. Or: "dominion."

w. Rome. The reference is to the Senate. As Lanchester notes, Rome still appears here as a remote and unfamiliar power. The passage fits the impression of Rome in the East after the battle of Magnesia (190 B.C.).

x. Macedonia was divided after the battle of Pydna in 168 B.C. and was made a Roman province in 147 B.C.

y. Most probably either Ptolemy VI Philometor (if Alexander is counted as the first king) or his anticipated successor. See the Introduction to SibOr 3.

z. A possible reference to Helen of Troy.

so that great evil will be shared^{a2} among the Carians and Pamphylians 210 and all men. But why should I narrate them individually?
 But when the first things reach an end, immediately the second things will come upon men. I will proclaim to you first of all:

Evil will come upon the pious men who live around the great Temple of Solomon, and who are the offspring 215 of righteous men. Nevertheless I will also proclaim the race of these; and the genealogy of their fathers, and the people of them all, all very thoughtfully, O devious, crafty mortal.

Praise of the Jews

There is a city . . . in the land of Ur of the Chaldeans, whence comes a race of most righteous men.
 220 They are always concerned with good counsel and noble works for they do not worry about the cyclic course of the sun or the moon or monstrous things under the earth
 nor the depth of the grim sea, Oceanus, nor portents of sneezes, nor birds of augurers, 225 nor seers, nor sorcerers, nor soothsayers,
 nor the deceits of foolish words of ventriloquists.
 Neither do they practice the astrological predictions of the Chaldeans^{b2} nor astronomy. For all these things are erroneous, such as foolish men inquire into day by day, 230 exercising themselves at a profitless task.
 And indeed they have taught errors to shameful men from which many evils come upon mortals on earth so that they are misled as to good ways and righteous deeds.
 But they care for righteousness and virtue^{c2} 235 and not love of money, which begets innumerable evils for mortal men, war, and limitless famine.
 They have just measurements in fields and cities and they do not carry out robberies at night against each other nor drive off herds of oxen, sheep, or goats, 240 nor does neighbor move the boundaries of neighbor, nor does a very rich man grieve a lesser man
 nor oppress widows in any respect, but rather helps them, always going to their aid with corn, wine and oil.
 Always a prosperous man among the people gives a share 245 of the harvest to those who have nothing, but are poor, fulfilling the word of the great God, the hymn of the law, for the Heavenly One gave the earth in common to all.^{d2}
 But when the people of twelve tribes leaves Egypt and travels the path with leaders sent by God 250 traveling along at night with a pillar of fire and travels by day, every dawn, with a pillar of cloud, he will appoint a great man, as leader for this people,
 Moses, whom the queen found by the marsh, took home, reared, and called her son. But when he came 255 leading this people, which God led from Egypt

Gen 11:1-9; Jub 12; LAB 6:18;
 Ps-Eup F1 (PrEv 9:17); Deut
 18:10; Lev 19:31; 20:6,27

Isa 47:12;
 Did 3:4

Deut 4:19;
 Jer 8:2;
 2Kgs 23:
 24f.
 Isa 8:19f.;

44:25
 1.95; 1En 8

2.111f.,
 114f.;

3.641; 8.17
 2.66

2.100; Ex
 22:5; Deut
 19:14

2.76
 Hos 2:8

2.79

2.319

Ex 13:21;
 WisSol
 18:3

Ex 2:5-10

a2. Gk. kakon mega koinōthēnai (Geffcken) for metakinēthēnai.

b2. Ps-Eup claimed that Abraham not only practiced "Chaldean science" but discovered it, and so the present passage has often been understood as a polemic against that view. Abraham also rejects the observation of the stars in Jub 12:17. Cf. Philo, Abr 84; Migr 187f.

c2. On vss. 234-47 cf. the extract from Ps-Phoc in SibOr 2.

d2. A common Stoic idea.

to the mountain, Sinai, God also gave forth the Law from heaven, having written all just ordinances on two tablets and enjoined them to perform it. And if anyone should disobey he would pay the penalty by law, whether at human hands 260 or escaping men; he would be utterly destroyed in all justice.
 [For the Heavenly One gave the earth in common to all and fidelity, and excellent reason in their breasts.] 3.247
 For these alone the fertile soil yields fruit from one- to a hundredfold, and the measures of God are produced.

Exile and restoration

265 But on these also evil will come, and they will not escape pestilence. And you will surely flee, leaving the very beautiful temple, since it is your fate to leave the holy plain.
 You will be led to the Assyrians^{e2} and you will see innocent children and wives in slavery 270 to hostile men. All means of livelihood and wealth will perish.
 The whole earth will be filled with you and every sea.
 Everyone will be offended at your customs. Deut 28:37
 Your whole land will be desolate; your fortified altar and temple of the great God and long walls Deut 29:21–23 275 will all fall to the ground, because you did not obey in your heart the holy law of the immortal God, but in error Deut 29:25–28;
 you worshiped unseemly idols and you did not fear Jer 5:19;
 the immortal Begetter of gods and of all men 16:11
 but were not willing to honor him. But you honored the idols of mortals.
 280 Therefore for seven decades of times all your fruitful earth Jer 25:11 and the wonders of the Temple will be desolate.
 But a good end and very great glory await you as immortal God decreed for you. But, you, remain, trusting in the holy laws of the great God, 285 whenever he may lift your wearied knee upright to the light.
 And then the heavenly God will send a king^{f2}
 and will judge each man in blood and the gleam of fire.
 There is a certain royal tribe whose race will never stumble.
 This too, as time pursues its cyclic course,
 290 will reign, and it will begin to raise up a new temple of God. Ezra 5–6; Hag 1–2
 All the kings of the Persians will bring to their aid Ezra 1:7–11; 7:14–23 gold and bronze and much-wrought iron.
 For God himself will give a holy dream by night Joel 3:1
 and then indeed the temple will again be as it was before.

Woes against various nations

295 When indeed my spirit ceased the inspired hymn, 3.1–5, etc.
 and I entreated the great Begetter that I might have respite from compulsion,
 the word of the great God rose again in my breast
 and bade me prophesy concerning every land
 and remind kings of the things that are to be. 3.162–64,
 etc.
 300 God prompted me to say this first,
 how many grievous woes the Immortal devised for Babylon, because it destroyed his great Temple.
 Woe to you, Babylon, and race of Assyrian men. 5.434;
 11.204; Isa
 13:47; Jer
 50f.; cf.
 Rev 18

^{e2}. The Assyrians and Babylonians are regarded as equivalent: Cf. SibOr 3.160.

^{f2}. Most probably Cyrus is meant. The royal tribe in 288 is the people of the Jews.

- At some time a rushing destruction will come upon the whole land of sinners
- 305 and a tumult will destroy the entire land of mortals and an affliction of the great God, leader of hymns.
For a heavenly eternal destruction will come upon you, Babylon,
one day, from above, and on the children of wrath,
(but it will come down upon you from heaven from the holy ones).
- 310 Then you will be as you were before, as if you had not been. 2Bar 31:5
Then you will be filled with blood, as you yourself formerly poured out the blood of good men and righteous men, whose blood even now cries out to high heaven. Gen 4:10; 2Mac 8:3
Rev 6:10; Deut 32:43
Isa 19
- 315 A great affliction will come upon you, Egypt, against your homes,
a terrible one which you never expected to come upon you,
for a sword will pass through your midst^{g2} 7.18
and scattering and death and famine will lay hold of you in the seventh generation of kings, and then you will rest. 3.192f., 608
- 320 Woe to you, land of Gog and Magog, situated in the midst of Ethiopian rivers.^{h2} How great an effusion of blood you will receive and you will be called a habitation of judgment among men and your dewy earth will drink black blood. 3.512; Rev 20:7-10; Ezek 38:1
Woe to you, Libya,ⁱ² woe to sea and land, daughters of the west, how you have come to a bitter day.
- 325 You will also come pursued by a hard struggle, terrible and hard. There will again be a terrible judgment, and you will all of necessity go to destruction because you have utterly destroyed the great house of the Immortal and have chewed it terribly with iron teeth. Dan 7:7
- 330 Therefore you will see your land full of corpses,
some (slain) by war and every assault of the demon of famine and pestilence, others by barbarous-spirited enemies. 2.23, etc.
All your land will be desolate and your cities desolate ruins.
But in the west a star will shine which they call "Comētēs,"^{j2}
- 335 a sign to mortals of sword, famine, and death, destruction of leaders and of great illustrious men. 8.191:
Nechepso-
Petosiris
(ed. Riess)
p. 345
There will again be very great signs among men.
The deep-flowing Tanais will leave Lake Maeotis^{k2} and there will be the track of a fertile furrow down
- 340 the deep stream, while the immense current occupies a narrow channel.
There will be chasms and yawning pits. Many citiesⁱ² will fall with their inhabitants: in Asia: Iassus, Cebren, Pandonia, Colophon, Ephesus, Nicaea, Antioch, Tanagra, Sinope, Smyrna, Maros,
- 345 prosperous Gaza, Hierapolis, Astypalaea;
of Europe: famous Cyagra, royal Meropeia, Antigone, Magnesia, divine Mycenae.
Know then that the destructive race of Egypt is near destruction and then for the Alexandrians the year which has passed will be the better one.

g2. Probably a reference to the civil war between Ptolemy VI Philometor and Ptolemy VIII Euergetes II.

h2. The association of Gog and Magog with Ethiopia is probably due to the mention of Cush in Ezek 38:5.

i2. The Lybians are listed in Ezek 38:5 among those who follow Gog.

j2. Lanchester relates this comet to that mentioned in Seneca, Naturales quaestiones 7:15, as occurring at the death of Demetrius, king of Syria, but astral phenomena are a favorite topic of such oracles. See especially Nechepso-Petosiris.

k2. Tanais is the river Don. Lake Maeotis the sea of Azov.

l2. A few of these places, Maros, Cyagra, and Meropeia, are unknown. The others are located in Asia Minor and Greece.

An oracle against Rome

- 350 However much wealth Rome received from tribute-bearing Asia, Asia will receive three times that much again
from Rome and will repay her deadly arrogance to her.
Whatever number from Asia served the house of Italians, twenty times that number of Italians will be serfs 355 in Asia, in poverty, and they will be liable to pay ten-thousandfold.
O luxurious golden offspring of Latium, Rome, virgin, often drunken with your weddings with many suitors,^{m2}
as a slave will you be wed, without decorum.
Often the mistressⁿ² will cut your delicate hair 360 and, dispensing justice, will cast you from heaven to earth, but from earth will again raise you up to heaven,
because mortals are involved in a wretched and unjust life.
Samos will be sand, and Delos will become inconspicuous, Rome will be a street. All the oracles will be fulfilled.
365 Smyrna will perish and there will be no mention of it. There will be an avenger,
but for the bad counsels and the wickedness of its leaders . . .
Serene peace will return to the Asian land, and Europe will then be blessed. The air will be good for pasture for many years, bracing, free from storms and hail, 370 producing everything—including birds and creeping beasts of the earth.
O most blessed, whatever man or woman will live to what time!
There will be report of the blessed ones, as among countryfolk.^{o2}
For all good order and righteous dealing will come upon men from starry heaven and with it 375 temperate concord, best of all things for men and love, faithfulness and friendship even from strangers.
Bad government, blame, envy, anger, folly, poverty will flee from men, and constraint will flee,^{p2} and murder, accursed strife, and grievous quarrels, 380 night robberies, and every evil in those days.

4.145;
8.72;
Oracle of Hystaspes,
Divlnsi
7.15.11

5.162–78

Isa 47:1;
Jer 25:27;
48:26

Isa
14:13–16

4.91;
8.165f.; 7.4

3.619–23; 751–59; 11.79,237;
12.87,172; Philo, Praem
90–92; Horace, Epode 16.53ff.

4.192; Virgil, Eclogue 4.53

An oracle on Alexander the Great

- But Macedonia will bring forth a great affliction for Asia and a very great grief for Europe will spring up from the race of Cronos, the progeny of bastards and slaves.^{q2}
She will conquer^{r2} even the fortified city of Babylon.
385 Having been called mistress of every land which the sun beholds, she will perish by evil fate,
leaving a name among her much-wandering posterity.

5.6f.;
11.195–203

An oracle on Alexander and his descendants

Also at a certain time there will come to the prosperous land of Asia a faithless man^{s2} clad with a purple cloak on his shoulders, m2. Possibly a response to Roman taunts at the multiple weddings of Cleopatra.

11.215–18

n2. The mistress should be identified as Cleopatra (who also identified with Isis).

o2. Gk. makarōn ken eē phatis hōs en agraulois (Geffcken). Geffcken regards this as a Christian interpolation, referring to the shepherds of Luke 2. It may however simply refer to rustic credulity on matters of supernatural apparitions.

p2. In the Isis aretalogies Isis was said to hold sway over fate. The utopian picture of peace and justice presented here is also paralleled in the Isis aretalogies.

q2. Alexander claimed to be a son of Zeus Ammon after his visit to the shrine of the God in Egypt in 332 B.C.

r2. Gk. dedamēset' (Badt) for dedomēset'.

s2. This reference is widely disputed but should be taken to refer to Alexander.

390 savage, stranger to justice, fiery. For a thunderbolt beforehand raised him² up, a man. But all Asia will bear an evil yoke, and the earth, deluged, will imbibe much gore.
 But even so Hades will attend him in everything though he knows it not.

Those whose race he wished to destroy,

395 by them will his own race be destroyed.

Yet leaving one root, which the destroyer will also cut off from ten horns, he will sprout another shoot on the side.^{u2}

Dan 7:7

He will smite a warrior and begetter of a royal race and he himself will perish at the hands of his descendants in a conspiracy of war,^{v2}

11.250-53

400 and then the horn growing on the side will reign.

Dan 7:8

Prophecies of various catastrophes (from the Erythrean Sibyl)

There will also be immediately a sign for fertile Phrygia, when the abominable race of Rhea,^{w2} a perennial shoot

1.184

in the earth, flourishing with unthirsting roots, will disappear stump and all in a single night^{x2}

1.133, etc.

405 in the city of the earthquaking land-shaker, complete with its inhabitants,^{y2}

which they will at one time call by the name Dorylaeon^{z2} of ancient, much-lamented dark Phrygia.

That time is by name "earth-shaker."

It will scatter the hiding places of the earth and undo walls.

410 The signs will be a beginning, not of good, but of evil.

It will have princes who are knowledgeable in the war of all tribes, producing native^{a3} descendants of Aeneas, kindred blood.

But thereafter you will be a prey to men who are lovers.^{b3}

Ilium, I pity you. For a fury will sprout in Sparta,^{c3}

11.125-40

415 a very beautiful, famous, most excellent shoot, leaving the widespread wave of Asia and Europe.

It will bring lamentations and labors and groans and inflict them especially on you, but your fame will be ageless for future generations.

There will also be again a certain false writer, an old man,^{d3}

11.163-71

420 of falsified fatherland. The light will go out in his eyes.

He will have much intelligence and will have speech well proportioned to his thoughts,

blended under two names. He will call himself a Chian and write the story of Ilium, not truthfully

but cleverly. For he will master my words and meters.

t2. Gk. auton (φ, ψ, Kurfess, Nikiprowetzky); Geffcken suggests autou, "raised up a man before him."

u2. The reference to the ten horns and the eleventh that sprouts on the side is a Jewish addition to this oracle, based, of course, on Dan 7. The identity of the final "shoot" is open to a wide variety of interpretations; Alexander Balas is perhaps the most probable one.

v2. Gk. huph huiōnōn en homophrosunēsīn Arēos (Geffcken) for huph huiōn hōn es homophrona aision arrēs. The reference is to the fratricidal struggles for the Syrian throne in the decades following Antiochus Epiphanes. It is not possible to authenticate the reference with regard to any individual king. Alexander Balas was assassinated, though not literally by his descendants.

w2. Cf. SibOr 3.140. When Rhea gave birth to Zeus she sent him to Phrygia.

x2. The fall of Troy.

y2. The walls of Troy were built by Poseidon.

z2. Dorylaeon is in Phrygia, on the Thymbris.

a3. Gk. autochthonas (Lanchester) for autochthonos.

b3. Menelaus and the Greeks, motivated by the love of Helen.

c3. Helen. Pausanias 10.12.2 says the Erythrean Sibyl sang of Helen.

d3. Homer. Lactantius, DivInst 1.6.9, mentions that the Erythrean Sibyl prophesied that Homer would write falsehoods. Cf. also Diodorus Siculus 4.66.

- 425 He will be the first to unfold my books with his hands,
but he will especially embellish the helmeted men of war, Hector, son of Priam, and Achilles, son of Peleus,
and the others, as many as cared for warlike deeds.
He will also make gods to stand by these
- 430 writing falsely, in every way, about empty-headed men.
It will also be great glory for these to die at Ilium,
but he himself will also receive appropriate recompense.
For Lycia also the race of Locrus will engender many evils.
Chalcedon, to whose lot has fallen the way of the sea strait,
- 435 you also will an Aetolian youth at some time come and destroy.
Cyzicus, the sea will also break off your great wealth.
You, Byzantium, will love war in Asia and receive groans and blood beyond reckoning.
Cragos, also, lofty mountain of Lycia, water will rush
- 440 from your peaks when the rock has been opened in a chasm, until it stops even the prophetic signs of Patara.^{e3} Cyzicus, inhabitant of wine-selling Propontis, the crested wave of Rhyndacus will crash around you.
You also, Rhodes, will indeed be free from slavery for a long time, 7.1
- 445 daughter of a day, and you will have great wealth thereafter, and you will have power at sea surpassing others.
But afterward you will be a prey to lovers in beauty and wealth. You will place a terrible yoke on your neck.^{f3}
A Lydian earthquake will destroy the affairs of Persia, causing most dire disasters for Europe and Asia.
- 450 The destructive king of the Sidonians and the battle cry of others will bring deadly destruction by sea on the Samians.
The plain will sweep to the sea with the blood of perishing men. Wives with splendidly robed maidens
- 455 will cry aloud their private unseemly outrage,
some for the dead, some for sons who are perishing.
A sign for Cyprus; an earthquake will destroy the ravines and Hades will receive many souls at once.
Trallis, the neighbor of Ephesus, will undo by an earthquake 5.289
- 460 her well-made walls, and a people of grave-minded men.
The earth will flood with boiling water, then the earth, weighed down, will drink of it. There will be a smell of brimstone. 3.60; 7.142
Samos also will build royal palaces in due time.^{g3}
Italy, no foreign war will come to you
- 465 but native blood, much bemoaned, inexhaustible,^{h3} notorious, will ravage you, shameless one;
and you yourself, stretched out by the warm ashes,
will kill yourself with no foresight in your breast.
You will not be mother of good people, but nurse of wild beasts.
- 470 But when a destructive man comes from Italyⁱ³
then, Laodicea, dashed down headlong 4.107;
by the wonderful water of Lycus, beautiful town of the Carians, 5.290;
you will bemoan your famous parent^{j3} and be silent. 7.22;
The Thracian Crobyzi will rise up throughout Haemus. 12.280;
14.85
- 475 Chattering of teeth comes upon the Campanians because of the famine which destroys cities.^{k3}

e3. Patara had a famous oracle of Apollo.

f3. Rhodes was subdued by Rome in 167 B.C.

g3. Samos was conquered by the Ptolemies in the early 3rd cent. B.C.

h3. This might refer to the Slave Wars. Social War, or the civil war of Marius and Sulla, from the late 2nd cent./early 1st cent. B.C.

i3. Sulla, who sailed for Greece in 87 B.C. to fight Mithridates.

j3. Zeus, who often appears on coins of Laodicea.

k3. Gk. ptoliporthon (Castalio) for polukarpon.

- Cyrnus, bemoaning its aged parent,¹³ and Sardinia, will sink in the wave 7.96 with sea-children, amid great storms of winter and afflictions of the holy God throughout the depths of the sea.
- 480 Alas for all the virgins whom Hades will wed
 and unburied youths whom the deep will attend.
 Alas for infant children floating in the sea, and great wealth.
 The blessed land of Mysians will suddenly produce a royal race.
 Truly Carthage will not survive long.^{m3}
- 485 There will be lamentation with many groans among the Galatians. 4.106
 A final but greatest disaster will come upon Tenedus.
 Brazen Sicyon, and you,ⁿ³ Corinth, will boast 4.105; 7.60 over all, with howls, and the flute will sound equally.

A further prophecy of various disasters

- When indeed my spirit stopped its inspired hymn 3.1-7, etc.
 490 the utterance of the great God again rose in my breast and bade me prophesy concerning the earth.
 Woe to the race of Phoenician men and women 5.456; 7.64; 12.105, 153;
 and all the maritime cities, none of you 14.80
 will come to the sunlight in common light.
- 495 No longer will there be a number and tribe alive because of the unjust tongue and lawless, unholy life which all have carried out, opening an unholy mouth;
 and they composed terrible words, false and unjust,
 and stood before God the great king,
- 500 and they opened their loathsome mouth falsely. Therefore God will terribly subdue them with afflictions beyond all the earth, and send a bitter fate upon them, burning their cities from the ground, and many foundations.
 Woe to you, Crete, of many sorrows. To you will come
- 505 affliction and fearful, eternal destruction.^{q3}
 The whole earth will again see you smoking and fire will not leave you forever, but you will burn.
 Woe to you, Thrace, how you will come to a yoke of slavery!
 when Galatians mingled with Dardanidae
- 510 ravage^{p3} Greece with a swoop, then will evil come upon you.
 You will give to another land and will receive nothing.
 Woe to you, Gog and Magog, and to all in turn 3.319, etc.
 of the Marsians and Angians. How many evils fate brings upon you!
 Many too upon the sons of Lycians and Mysians and Phrygians.
- 515 Many peoples of Pamphylians and Lydians will fall, Maurians and Ethiopians and strange-speaking peoples, Cappadocians and Arabs. Why indeed should I proclaim each one according to its fate? for on all peoples, as many as inhabit the earth will the Most High send a terrible affliction.
- 520 But when a vast barbarian people comes against the Greeks^{q3}
 it will destroy many heads of chosen men.
 They will ravage many fat flocks, which belong to mortal men,
 and herds of horses and mules, and loud-bellowing oxen.
 They will burn well-constructed houses lawlessly with fire

13. Gk. pouluetē (ψ, Nikiprowetzky) for pouluetis.

m3. Fall of Carthage in 146 B.C.

n3. Gk. su for se (Kurfess).

o3. Gk. exalapaxis (Wilamowitz) for exalapaxei.

p3. Gk. persousi (Rzach) for portheontes. The reference is to the invasion by the Gauls in 280 B.C.

 q3. Probably the Roman invasion that led to the capture of Corinth in 146 B.C. It is possible that the reference is to the invasion of the Gauls.

- 525 and will take many slaves to another land by compulsion, children and broad-girdled women, delicate ones from the chambers, falling forward on tender feet. Deut 28:56
 They will see themselves suffering every terrible outrage
 in fetters at the hand of strange-speaking enemies, 530 and they will have no one to ward off a war a little or be a helper in life.
 They will see the enemy enjoying their private possessions and all their wealth. They will tremble beneath the knees.
 A hundred will flee, but one will destroy them all. Isa 30:17;
 Five will stir up grievous wrath but shamefully Deut 32:30 535 coming to grips with each other in terrible war and din of battle they will cause joy to their enemies, but grief to the Greeks.
 A yoke of slavery will come upon all Greece.
 At once war and pestilence will come upon all. 3.603; Frag. 3.20
 God will make a great bronze heaven on high Deut 28:23;
 540 and cause drought over the whole earth, and make the earth iron. 1En 80:2
 But then all mortals will weep terribly for the lack of sowing and plowing, and the one who created heaven 5.276 and earth will set down much lamented³ fire on the earth. 5.274,377
 One third of all mankind will survive. 5.103; Zech 13:8
 Rev 9:15, 18; Cf. Ezek 5:12

Exhortation to the Greeks

- 545 Greece, why do you rely on mortal leaders who are not able to flee the end of death? Lactantius, DivInst
 1.15.15
 To what purpose do you give vain gifts to the dead and sacrifice to idols? Who put error in your heart that you should abandon the face of the great God and do these things? Lactantius, DivInst
 1.15.15;
 550 Revere the name of the one who has begotten all, and do not forget it. WisSol
 14:12-20
 It is a thousand years and five hundred more since the overbearing kings of the Greeks reigned, who began the first evils for mortals, setting up³ many idols of dead gods. WisSol 13:10; 14:12 555 On account of them you have been taught vain thinking.
 But when the wrath of the great God comes upon you, then indeed you will recognize the face of the great God.
 All the souls of men will groan mightily and stretch out their hands straight to broad heaven 560 and begin to call on the great king as protector and seek who will be a deliverer from great wrath. Oracle of Hystaspes,
DivInst
 7.17.18
 But come and learn this and place it in your heart, how many woes there will be as the years circle on.
 Greece, also, by offering the holocausts of oxen 565 and loud-bellowing bulls, which she has sacrificed, at the Temple of the great God,
 will escape the din of war and panic and pestilence
 and will again escape the yoke of slavery.
 But the race of impious men will survive up to this point:
 whenever this fated day comes to pass.
 570 You will certainly not sacrifice to God until everything happens.
 What God alone has planned will not go unfulfilled.
 A strong necessity will insist that everything be fulfilled. 4Ezra
 5:45-49;
 2Thes 2:3;
 1QpHab 6,
 etc.

r3. Gk. polyn oikton (Alexandre) for polun histon.

s3. Gk. anathentes (Alexandre) for thaneontōn.

Eulogy of the Jews

3.218–20

There will again be a sacred race of pious men who attend to the counsels and intention of the Most High,

4.45,136; 5.281

575 who fully honor the temple of the great God with drink offering and burnt offering and sacred hecatombs, sacrifices of well-fed bulls, unblemished rams, and firstborn sheep, offering as holocausts fat flocks of lambs on a great altar, in holy manner.

580 Sharing in the righteousness of the law of the Most High,
they will inhabit cities and rich fields in prosperity, themselves exalted as prophets by the Immortal
and bringing great joy to all mortals.

For to them alone did the great God give wise counsel 585 and faith and excellent understanding in their breasts.

They do not honor with empty deceits works of men,
either gold or bronze, or silver or ivory,
or wooden, stone, or clay idols of dead gods,
red-painted likenesses of beasts,

WisSol
13–15; Isa
44:8–20,
etc.

Ezek 8:10

590 such as mortals honor with empty-minded counsel.

For on the contrary, at dawn they lift up holy arms toward heaven, from their beds, always sanctifying their flesh¹³ with water, and they honor only the Immortal who always rules, and then their parents. Greatly, surpassing all men,

4.165f.;
PssSol 6:6;
War 2.8.5
(128)

2.60

595 they are mindful of holy wedlock, and they do not engage in impious intercourse with male children,
as do Phoenicians, Egyptians, and Romans,
spacious Greece and many nations of others,
Persians and Galatians and all Asia, transgressing 600 the holy law of immortal God, which they transgressed.

3.185, etc.

Prophecy of judgment

Therefore the Immortal will inflict on all mortals disaster and famine and woes and groans and war and pestilence and lamentable ills, because they were not willing to piously honor the immortal begetter

Frag. 3.20

605 of all men, but honored idols made by hand, revering them, which mortals themselves will cast away, hiding them in clefts of rocks, through shame, whenever the young^{u3} seventh king of Egypt rules
his own land, numbered from the dynasty of the Greeks, 610 which the Macedonians, wonderful men, will found.

8.224; 11.88; Isa 31:7
1En 91.9

Isa 2:18–20

3.318,193

A great king will come from Asia,^{v3} a blazing eagle, who will cover the whole land with infantry and cavalry.
He will cut up everything and fill everything with evils.
He will overthrow the kingdom of Egypt. He will take out 615 all its possessions and ride on the broad back of the sea.

Potter's Oracle, col. 1
Nechepso-Petosiris
(ed. Riess), p. 339
AsMos 3:1
3.188; 5.365

Then they will bend a white knee on the fertile ground to God the great immortal king but all handmade works will fall in a flame of fire.

Lactantius,
DivInst
7.19.9

¹³. So Clement, Protrepticus 6.70; MSS read "hands."

^{u3}. The youth of Philometor at the time when Antiochus Epiphanes invaded Egypt is emphasized in the classical accounts of the incident: e.g. Livy 42.29.5–7. "Young" (neos) was also an epithet of Horus.

^{v3}. A "king from Asia" was a traditional enemy of Egypt; e.g. the Hyksos, who were still remembered in hellenistic times (Josephus, Apion 1.74–92). The tradition was reinforced by the careers of Cambyses and Artaxerxes III and again by Antiochus Epiphanes. The present passage may be influenced by the relatively recent memory of Antiochus, but should be taken as a more general reference.

Transformation of the earth

And then God will give great joy to men, 620 for earth and trees and countless flocks of sheep will give to men the true fruit of wine, sweet honey and white milk and corn, which is best of all for mortals.

2.29–32,
 etc.
 2.318;
 8.211;
 5.282
 Philo,
SpecLeg
 2.181

Appeal for conversion

But you, devious mortal, do not tarry in hesitation 625 but turn back, converted, and propitiate God.
 Sacrifice to God hundreds of bulls and firstborn lambs and goats at the recurring times.
 But propitiate him, the immortal God, so that he may have pity for he alone is God and there is no other.
 630 Honor righteousness and oppress no one,
 for so the Immortal bids wretched mortals.
 But you, guard against the wrath of the great God, whenever the culmination of pestilence comes upon all mortals and they are subdued and meet with terrible justice.

Clement,
Protrepticus
 7.74

Deut 4:35
 Isa 43:11; 45:5.14, etc.
 2.56f.

Eschatological woes

635 King will lay hold of king and take away territory.
 Peoples will ravage peoples, and potentates, tribes.
 All leaders will flee to another land.
 The land will have a change of men and foreign rule will ravage all Greece and drain off 640 the rich land of its wealth, and men will come face to face in strife among themselves because of gold and silver.
 Love of gain will be shepherd of evils for cities.
 All will be unburied in a foreign country.
 Vultures and wild beasts of the earth 645 will ravage the flesh of some. Indeed when this is completed the huge earth will consume the remains of the dead.
 It itself will be completely unsown and unplowed,
 wretched, proclaiming the curse of innumerable men,
 (for many lengths of yearly recurring times—650 light shields, long shields, javelins and diverse weapons and not even wood will be cut from a thicket for the flame of the fire.^{w3})

1En 99:4;
 2Bar 70:3;
 4Ezra 6:24;
 9:3;
 13:30f.; Mt
 24:6f.; Mk
 13:8; Lk
 21:10

2.111;
 3.235; 8.17

3.542;
 5.276
 Ezek 39:9

The savior king

And then God will send a King from the sun^{x3}
 who will stop the entire earth from evil war, killing some, imposing oaths of loyalty on others;
 655 and he will not do all these things by his private plans but in obedience to the noble teachings of the great God.

3.286; 5.109; 13.151, 164
 Potter's Oracle, col. 2
 ApEl 2:39

Jn 6:38; Mt 26:39, etc.

The final assault on the Temple

The Temple^{y3} of the great God (will be) laden with very beautiful wealth, w3. Vss. 649–51 are probably intrusive. Cf. vss. 728, 729, 731.

x3. I.e. an Egyptian king. Cf. Potter's Oracle, col. 2, Rosetta Stone, etc., and the Introduction to SibOr 3. The cessation of war is attributed to Isis in the aretalogies (Andros, 158). In the Potter's Oracle the king from the sun is sent by Isis.

y3. Following Geffcken and Rzach, and the context. Nikiprowetzky has laos "people" (ϕ).

- gold, silver, and purple ornament, and earth (will be) productive and sea full 660 of good things. And kings will begin to be angry with each other, requiting evils with spirit. 1En 56:7
Envy is not good for wretched mortals.
But again the kings of the peoples will launch an attack together against this land, bringing doom upon themselves, Ps 2; 4Ezra 13:33
665 for they will want to destroy the Temple of the great God Ezek 38-39 and most excellent men when they enter the land.
The abominable kings, each one with his throne and faithless people, will set them up around the city. Jer 1:15
Oracle of Hystaspes, DivInst
7:17

Cosmic judgment

- And God will speak, with a great voice, 670 to the entire ignorant empty-minded people, and judgment will come upon them from the great God, and all will perish at the hand of the Immortal. Fiery swords will fall from heaven on the earth. Torches, great gleams, will come shining into the midst of men. Oracle of Hystaspes, DivInst
7:19; SibOr 3.798
War 6.5.3 (288)
- 675 The all-bearing earth will be shaken in those days by the hand of the Immortal, and the fish in the sea and all the wild beasts of the earth and innumerable tribes of birds, all the souls of men and all the sea will shudder before the face of the Immortal and there will be a terror. Ps 18:7; Judg 5:4f.; Hab 3:6
AsMos 10:4
Ezek 38:20
- 680 He will break the lofty summits of the mountains and the mounds of giants and the dark abyss will appear to all. 1En 1:6; Micah 1:4;
Isa 40:4
3.409
High ravines in lofty mountains will be full of corpses. Rocks will flow with blood and every torrent will fill the plain. Isa 30:25 3.804
- 685 All well-constructed walls of hostile men will fall to the ground, because they knew neither the law nor the judgment of the great God, but with mindless spirit you all launched an attack and raised spears against the sanctuary.
God will judge all men by war and sword
- 690 and fire and torrential rain. There will also be brimstone from heaven and stone and much grievous hail. Death will come upon four-footed creatures.
Then they will recognize the immortal God who judges these things. Ezek 38:23
Wailing and tumult will spread throughout the boundless earth 695 at the death of men. All the impious will bathe in blood.
The earth itself will also drink of the blood of the dying; wild beasts will be sated with flesh.
God himself, the great eternal one, told me to prophesy all these things. These things will not go unfulfilled. 3.1-7, etc.
- 700 Nor is anything left unaccomplished that he so much as puts in mind for the spirit of God which knows no falsehood is throughout the world. WisSol 1:7

The salvation of the elect

- But the sons of the great God will all live peacefully around the Temple, rejoicing in these things which the Creator, just judge and sole ruler, will give. Hos 11:1; WisSol 2:13,16
- 705 For he alone will shield them, standing by them magnificently as if he had a wall of blazing fire round about. Zech 2:5
They will be free from war in towns and country.
No hand of evil war, but rather the Immortal himself

- and the hand of the Holy One will be fighting for them.
- 710 And then all islands and cities will say,
 "How much the Immortal loves those men!
 for everything fights on their side and helps them,
 heaven, divinely driven sun and moon"
 (but the all-bearing earth will be shaken in those days). 3.675
- 715 They will bring forth from their mouths a delightful utterance in hymns,
 "Come, let us all fall on the ground and entreat
 the immortal king, the great eternal God.
 Let us send to the Temple, since he alone is sovereign and let us all ponder the Law of the Most High God, 720 who is most righteous of all throughout the earth.
 But we had wandered from the path of the Immortal.
 With mindless spirit we revered things made by hand, idols and statues of dead men." 3.9; Isa 53:6
 WisSol 5:6
 3.554; WisSol 13:10; 14:12
- 725 "Come, let us fall on our faces throughout the people of God, and let us delight with hymns God the begetter, throughout our homes, gathering the weapons of enemies throughout all the land for seven lengths of annually recurring times, light shields and long shields, helmets, many diverse arms, 730 a large number of bows also, and an abundance of unjust weapons.
 For not even wood will be cut from a thicket for the flame of the fire." 3.651
 Ezek 39:9f.
 3.649
 3.650

Exhortation to the Greeks

- But wretched Greece, desist from proud thoughts.
 Entreat the great-hearted Immortal and take precautions.
 Do not send against this city your thoughtless people 735 which is not from the holy land of the Great One.
 Do not disturb Camarina, for it is better undisturbed.^{z3} (Do not disturb) a leopard from its lair lest evil befall you, but keep away from it. Do not have a proud overbearing spirit in your breast, making ready for a hard contest.
 740 Serve the great God so that you may have a share in these things.

The day of judgment

- When indeed this fated day also reaches its consummation and the judgment of immortal God comes upon mortals,
 a great judgment and dominion will come upon men.
 For the all-bearing earth will give the most excellent unlimited fruit 745 to mortals, of grain, wine, and oil and a delightful drink of sweet honey from heaven, trees, fruit of the top branches, and rich flocks
 and herds and lambs of sheep and kids of goats.
 And it will break forth sweet fountains of white milk.
 750 The cities will be full of good things and the fields will be rich. There will be no sword on earth or din of battle, and the earth will no longer be shaken, groaning deeply.
 There will no longer be war or drought on earth,
 no famine or hail, damaging to fruits,
 755 but there will be great peace throughout the whole earth.
 King will be friend to king to the end of the age.
 The Immortal in the starry heaven will put in effect
- Lactantius, DivInst 7.20.1
 Amos 5:18; Isa 2:12, etc.
 3.620–23; 2.29–32, etc.
 3.243; Hos 2:8
 3.367–80

^{z3}. This vs. is an old proverb. Quoted by Servius in his commentary on Virgil's Aeneid 3.701.

a common law^{a4} for men throughout the whole earth
for all that is done among wretched mortals.

760 For he himself alone is God and there is no other,
and he himself will burn with fire a race of grievous men.

3.629, etc.
2.196; Ps
97:3; Isa
66:16

Moral exhortation

But urge on your minds in your breasts and shun unlawful worship. Worship the Living One.
Avoid adultery and indiscriminate intercourse with males.

765 Rear your own offspring and do not kill it, for the Immortal is angry at whoever commits these sins.

3.184–86,
etc.
2.280f.

The eschatological kingdom

And then, indeed, he will raise up a kingdom for all ages among men, he who once gave the holy Law to the pious, to all of whom he promised to open the earth 770 and the world and the gates of the blessed and all joys and immortal intellect and eternal cheer.

Dan 2:44;
7:27

From every land they will bring incense and gifts to the house of the great God. There will be no other house among men, even for future generations to know, 775 except the one which God gave to faithful men to honor
(for mortals will invoke the son of the great God).^{b4}

Isa 2:3;
Micah 4:2;
Zech 14:16

All the paths of the plain and rugged cliffs, lofty mountains, and wild waves of the sea
will be easy to climb or sail in those days,

780 for all peace will come upon the land of the good.
Prophets of the great God will take away the sword for they themselves are judges of men and righteous kings.^{c4}
There will also be just wealth among men for this is the judgment and dominion of the great God.

2.29–32,
etc.

785 Rejoice, maiden, and be glad, for to you the one who created heaven and earth has given the joy of the age.
He will dwell in you. You will have immortal light.
Wolves and lambs will eat grass together in the mountains.
Leopards will feed together with kids.

Zech 2:10;
Isa 12:6
8.324, etc.
Isa 60:1

790 Roving bears will spend the night with calves.
The flesh-eating lion will eat husks at the manger like an ox, and mere infant children will lead them with ropes. For he will make the beasts on earth harmless.
Serpents and asps will sleep with babies

Isa 11:6–8;
65:25; 2Bar
73:6; Philo,
Praem
85–90;
Virgil,
Eclogue
4:18–25

795 and will not harm them, for the hand of God will be upon them.

Lactantius,
DivInst
7:24

The signs of the end

I will tell you a very clear sign, so that you may know when the end of all things comes to pass on earth:
when swords are seen at night in starry heaven toward evening and toward dawn,

800 and again dust is brought forth from heaven upon the earth and all^{d4} the light of the sun

2.185; 3.672; Oracle of Hystaspes, DivInst 7:19
War 6.5.3 (288)

2.185, etc.:
Joel 2:10

a4. A common Stoic notion—cf. the last vs. of Cleanthes' "Hymn to Zeus."

b4. This vs. must be regarded as a Christian interpolation.

c4. The idea that prophets will rule in a kingdom at the end-time is unusual, but cf. the role assigned to prophets in 1Mac 14:41. In Vita Mos 2:1 Philo says that Moses is both prophet and king. The Has-monean king John Hyrcanus was also said to have the gift of prophecy (Josephus, Ant 13.10.7 [299]).

d4. Gk. kai hapan (Wilamowitz) for hapan kai hoi.

is eclipsed in the middle from heaven, and the rays
of the moon appear and return to the earth.

There will be a sign from the rocks, with blood and drops of gore.

805 You will see a battle of infantry and cavalry in the clouds, like a hunt of wild beasts, like a mist.

This is the end of war which God, who inhabits heaven, is accomplishing.
But all must sacrifice to the great king.

3.683

2Mac 5:2; War 6.5.3 (288)
Tacitus, History 5.13

The Sibyl's conclusion

(I say) these things to you, having left

810 the long Babylonian walls of Assyria, frenzied, a fire sent to Greece, prophesying the disclosures^{e4} of God to all mortals,
so that I prophesy divine riddles to men.

Lactantius,
DivInst
1.6.13

Throughout Greece mortals will say that I am of another country, a shameless one, born of Erythrae.^{f4} Some will say that 815 I am Sibylla born of Circe^{g4} as mother and Gnostos as father, a crazy liar. But when everything comes to pass,

11.317; Lactantius,
DivInst 4.15.29

then you will remember me and no longer will anyone say that I am crazy, I who am a prophetess of the great God.

3.1-7, etc.

For he did not reveal to me what he had revealed before to my parents

820 but what happened first, these things my father^{h4} told me, and God put all of the future in my mind

so that I prophesy both future and former things and tell them to mortals. For when the world was deluged with waters, and a certain single approved man was left

825 floating on the waters in a house of hewn wood

1.287;
Prologue 33

with beasts, and birds, so that the world might be filled again,

I was his daughter-in-law and I was of his blood.

The first things happened to him and all the latter things have been revealed,

so let all these things from my mouth be accounted true.

e4. Gk. mēnumata (ψ) for mēnimata. On the supposed Babylonian origin of the Sibyl cf. Pausanias 10.12.9 and Justin, Cohortatio ad Graecos 37, who also say that she was daughter of Berossus. See the general introduction.

f4. Lactantius also identifies the Sibyl of SibOr 3 with the Erythrean Sibyl.

g4. Circe was the magic-working goddess who changed Odysseus' men into swine (Odyssey 10.210; Aeneid 7.19-20). According to Virgil, Aeneid 6.36, Deiphobe, the Cumean Sibyl, was daughter of Glaucus. Gnostos is enigmatic. Kurfess emends to agnōstoio, "of an unknown father." Nikiprowetzky gives the name as Gnostēs, which might mean "diviner" or "one who knows." Epiphanius, AdvHaer 26.1, says the gnostics attributed certain books to Noriah, the wife of Noah. In SibOr 3.827 the Sibyl is daughter-in-law of Noah.

h4. Gk. genetiēs, "father" (Wilamowitz).

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES, BOOK 4

Introduction

Sibylline Oracles 4 is a composite oracle which consists of a political oracle from the hellenistic age updated by a Jew in the late first century A.D., and adapted for specifically religious purposes.¹ The older hellenistic oracle is structured by a twofold division of history into ten generations and four kingdoms. This is found in Sibylline Oracles 4.49–101. There we read that the Assyrians will rule for six generations, the Medes for two, and the Persians for one. Then the tenth generation and fourth kingdom coincide in the Macedonian Empire. We should expect that this climactic generation would be followed by a definitive kingdom or judgment, but instead we find history prolonged to refer to Rome and its eventual downfall (145–48). Since Rome is not integrated into the numerical schematization of history we must assume that verses 102–51 are a later addition, and that the original oracle referred to no historical empire after Macedonia. We should expect, however, that the original oracle built up to some conclusion, which is not now contained in verses 49–101. It is quite possible that the conclusion now found in verses 173–92, which tells about the end-time, also formed the conclusion of the original oracle, but this, of course, cannot be conclusively demonstrated.²

The second stage of the oracle is found in verses 1–48 and 102–72 (and possibly 173–92). Verses 102–51 are a collection of oracles relating to particular events and legends that bring the older oracle up to date. Verses 1–48 and 152–72 give the moral and religious teachings of the redactor. There is no trace of Christian redaction in Sibylline Oracles 4.

Date and provenance

The original oracle was probably written not long after the time of Alexander.³ The Macedonian Empire is thought to have lasted only one generation, and there is no clear reference to any events between the death of Alexander and the rise of Rome.

In schematizations of history of this sort the last enumerated kingdom/generation is either a glorious one (e.g. the seventh king in SibOr 3) or is especially marked out for destruction (as in Dan 2 and 7). Since the Macedonians do not in any sense usher in a glorious age in Sibylline Oracles 4 we must assume that the oracle was anti-Macedonian in tendency. If the present conclusion was part of the original oracle, then Macedonia would have been the immediate victim of the judgment of God. Such an oracle could have been written in any place that was subject to Macedonia. Although the schematization of history may reflect Persian influence,⁴ the oracle is not likely to be Persian, since the Persians are allotted only one generation of world empire, and the author shows no special sympathy for them. Nothing in the oracle necessarily requires Jewish authorship. Even the passage about the end-time, 173–92, while it probably contains at least Jewish redactional elements, could have been largely composed by a gentile, as both the destruction of the world by fire and the resurrection of the dead could be derived from Persian doctrines.⁵ Also the reference to the Flood in verses 51–53 could be derived from Babylonian or even Greek tradition. The particular ¹ The most important discussions of SibOr 4 are those of Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, pp. 18–21; J. Thomas, Le Mouvement baptiste en Palestine et Syrie (Gembloux, Belgium, 1938) pp. 46–60; V. Nikiprowetzky, "Reflexions sur quelques problemes du quatrieme et du cinquieme livre des Oracles Sibyllins," HUCA 43 (1972) 29–76; A. Peretti, "Echi di dottrine esseniche negli Oracoli Sibillini Giudaici," La parola del passato 17 (1962) 247–95; D. Flusser, Israel Oriental Studies 2 (1972) 148–75; and J. J. Collins, "The Place of the Fourth Sibyl in the Development of the Jewish Sibyllina," JJS 25 (1974) 365–80.

² Collins, JJS 25 (1974) 373–75.

³ Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 20, suggests a date after A.D. 60 on the basis of the reference to an earthquake in vs. 107. However, that vs. is probably part of the later redaction and, in any case, the identification of the earthquake in question is doubtful. Cf. Lanchester, APOT, vol. 2, p. 395.

⁴ See Flusser, Israel Oriental Studies 2 (1972) 162–74.

⁵ See Collins, JJS 25 (1974) 374. On the role of the conflagration in Zoroastrianism see R. Mayer, Die biblische Vorstellung vom Weltbrand (Bonn, 1956) pp. 1–79. The belief in resurrection is attributed to the Persians by Diogenes Laertius (Proem 9), who derives his statement from Theopompus (3rd cent. B.C.).

enumeration of world kingdoms, Assyria, Media, Persia, Macedonia, cannot be derived from the Book of Daniel, where the first empire is Babylon; it is paralleled in Tobit 14 and in Roman sources⁶ and so was widely known in the eastern Mediterranean. While Jewish authorship remains as plausible as any other, there is nothing distinctively Jewish about the original oracle.

The redaction of Sibylline Oracles 4 can be located with more precision. It refers to the destruction of the Jerusalem Temple (116), the legend of Nero's flight to the Parthians and future return (119–24, 138–39),⁷ and the eruption of Vesuvius in A.D. 79 (130–35). All scholars agree that it was written shortly after the last datable event mentioned—therefore about A.D. 80. Its Jewish character is revealed by its doctrines and most specifically by the fact that it understands the eruption of Vesuvius as a punishment for the destruction of Jerusalem (136).

The geographical provenance of the first-century redaction is more controversial. Most scholars locate it in Syria or the Jordan Valley because of the importance attached to baptism,⁸ and, while the evidence is less than conclusive, this position carries the balance of probability. Recently Nikiprowetzky has attempted to associate it with Sibylline Oracles 3 and 5, and therefore to assign it to Egypt.⁹ However, Sibylline Oracles 4 shows an attitude to the Temple diametrically opposed to what we find in Sibylline Oracles 3 and 5. In the latter two books the Temple plays a central role. In Sibylline Oracles 4.5–12 and 27–30 there is a complete rejection of temple worship.¹⁰ Since Sibylline Oracles 5 must be dated later than Sibylline Oracles 4, the difference in attitude to temple worship cannot be explained by the fact that the Jewish Temple was no longer in existence when book 4 was written. Sibylline Oracles 4 also attaches far greater importance to baptism than either books 3 or 5. Since the only reference to Egypt in book 4 (vs. 72) is part of the hellenistic oracle,¹¹ there is no basis whatever for Egyptian provenance.

Historical and theological importance

The hellenistic oracle is important as a specimen of anti-Macedonian political prophecy. Our appreciation of the hellenistic oracle is, however, hindered by doubt as to how it originally concluded.

The periodization of the hellenistic oracle has multiple parallels in Jewish apocalyptic. The ten generations appear in the Apocalypse of Weeks in 1 Enoch, the Melchizedek text from Qumran Cave 11, Sibylline Oracles 1 and 2, but also in the Cumean Sibyl, as reported by Servius in his commentary on the Fourth Eclogue.¹² The four kingdoms are best known from Daniel 2 and 7, but are also found in Aemilius Sura and the Persian Zand-ī Vohūman Yasn.¹³ It should be noted that Sibylline Oracles 4 is concerned with world history only since the Flood (vss. 51–53). Therefore, its four kingdoms, followed presumably by a destruction of fire, are analogous to the four generations that come between the Flood and the destruction by fire in Sibylline Oracles 1 and 2. The view of the end-time of Sibylline Oracles 4, with its emphasis on bodily resurrection, finds its closest parallel in Sibylline Oracles 2. In both Sibylline books the good are restored to life on earth while the wicked are condemned to the underworld. The description in Sibylline Oracles 2 is, however, much more elaborate and probably represents a later stage of this tradition about the end-time. The Jewish first-century redaction used the schematization of history as a framework for exhortation. In verses 161–77 we get a concise summary of what is necessary to avert disaster—to refrain from violence, “wash your whole bodies in perennial rivers” and supplicate God. The rejection of violence is, of course, commonplace, although we should note that deeds of violence are ⁶ See Flusser, Israel Oriental Studies 2 (1972) 153–62; J. W. Swain, “The Theory of Four Monarchies, Opposition History Under the Roman Empire,” Classical Philology 25 (1940) 1–21.

⁷ On the Nero legend in the Sibylline Oracles see Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, pp. 80–87.

⁸ See Thomas, Le Mouvement baptiste, pp. 48f.; Collins, JJS 25 (1974) 379. Asia Minor has also been suggested.

⁹ Nikiprowetzky, La Troisième Sibylle, pp. 232f.; idem, HUCA 43 (1972) 59. Also B. Noack, “Are the Essenes Referred to in the Sibylline Oracles?” Studia Theologica 17 (1963) 92–102.

¹⁰ See further Collins, JJS 25 (1974) 366–69.

¹¹ Contra Noack, Studia Theologica 17 (1963) 97.

¹² See further Flusser, Israel Oriental Studies 2 (1972) 162–74.

¹³ Ibid., pp. 153–62.

blamed for the fall of Jerusalem (118), so the book may reflect a quietist attitude. However, the distinctive requirement, if disaster is to be averted, is baptism. The role of baptism here and its relation to the judgment is strikingly reminiscent of John the Baptist and quite different from the ritual washings of Sibylline Oracles 3.592f., which are not presented in an eschatological context. This baptism is also quite different from the ritual washings of the Essenes despite the efforts of scholars to identify them.¹⁴

Our knowledge of the doctrines of the Jewish first-century redactor is supplemented by verses 1–48. There we find polemic against idolatry (6f.), sexual offenses (33f.), injustice, and violence. Monotheism and God's power as creator are emphasized. The distinctive doctrine of these verses, however, is the rejection of temple worship. According to verses 8–11, God does not have a temple of stone, but one which is not made by hands. According to verses 27–30, the pious reject all temples and sacrificial cults. While these passages are not specifically an attack on the Jewish Temple (which no longer existed), they undermine the very idea of temple worship and make no allowance for the possibility of an acceptable temple. This rejection of temple worship has its parallels in the Bible, most proximately in the speech of Stephen in Acts 7.

The distinctive doctrines of Sibylline Oracles 4 then are baptism, as a prerequisite for salvation, and the rejection of temple cults. To these must be added a lively expectation of the end. This complex of doctrines finds its closest parallels in the beliefs of the Christian Ebionites and Elcasaites.¹⁵ There is nothing in Sibylline Oracles 4 to suggest Christian authorship, but the book was presumably written in Jewish baptist circles, of a kind similar to those Christian sectarian movements and perhaps historically related to them.

¹⁴ Most recently Peretti, La parola del passato 17 (1962) 247–95, and Noack, Studia Theologica 17 (1963) 92–102. See the thorough critique of this position by Nikiprowetzky, HUCA 43 (1972) 29–57.

¹⁵ Collins, JJS 25 (1974) 379.

THE SYBILLINE ORACLES

Book 4

Proclamation of the Sibyl

People of boastful Asia and Europe, give ear to the unfailing truths that I am about to prophesy through my honey-voiced mouth from our shrine. 2.1–5, etc.
I am not an oracle-monger of false Phoebus, whom vain
5 men called a god, and falsely described as a seer,^a Clement, Protr 4.50

Polemic against idolatry and temples

but of the great God, whom no hands of men fashioned 3.12ff., etc.
in the likeness of speechless idols of polished stone.
For he does not have a house, a stone set up as a temple,^b Acts 7:48f. dumb and toothless, a bane which brings many woes to men, (cf. Isa 66:1–2)
10 but one which it is not possible to see from earth nor to measure Heb 8:1–5; 9:11f.; Ex 25:40 with mortal eyes, since it was not fashioned by mortal hand. Acts 7:44
He sees all at once but is seen by no one himself. 3.12
Dark night is his, and day, sun and 3.20–23
stars, moon and fish-filled sea, 15 and land and rivers and source of perennial springs, things created for life, also showers which engender
the fruit of the soil, and trees, both vine and olive. WisSol 1:14
He it is who drove a whip through my heart within,
to narrate accurately to men what now is, 3.162–64, 20 and what will yet be, from the first generation etc.
until the tenth comes. For he himself will prove everything 2.15, etc.
by accomplishing it. But you, people, listen to the Sibyl in all things 3.700 as she pours forth true speech from her holy mouth.

Praise of the righteous

Happy will be those of mankind on earth 25 who will love the great God, blessing him Justin, before drinking and eating, putting their trust in piety. Cohort ad Graec 16;
3.573–96
They will reject all temples when they see them;^c Clement, altars too, useless foundations of dumb stones Protr 4:62 28a (and stone statues and handmade images)^d defiled with blood of animate creatures, and sacrifices 7.78 30 of four-footed animals. They will look to the great glory of the one God and commit no wicked murder, nor deal in dishonest gain, which are most horrible things.
Neither have they disgraceful desire for another's spouse 3.764 3.184–86,
etc.

a. Pausanias 10.12.6 says that the Sibyl is a prophetess of Phoebus (Apollo).

b. Gk. naon lithon hidruthenta (ψ) for naō lithon helkusthenta.

c. This rejection of temple worship and animal sacrifice is characteristic of the Ebionites. See the PseudClemRec 1.54–65. The rejection of bloody sacrifices is also characteristic of the Elcasaites (Epiphanius, Panarion Haeresium 19.3). The attitudes of the Essenes to temple worship are more complex. Philo (Quod Omn 75) says they expressed their devotion "not by sacrificing animals but by determining to render their own minds holy." Josephus (Ant 18.1.5 [19]) says that they sent gifts to the temple but offered sacrifices by themselves. While the question as to whether sacrifices were offered at Qumran is disputed, temple worship is never rejected in principle in the scrolls. The custom of saying grace before meals is attested for both the Essenes (War 2.8.5 [131]) and the Pharisees (m.Ber 3).

d. This vs. is found only in Clement and is rejected by Geffcken.

or for hateful and repulsive abuse of a male.

- 35 Other men will never imitate their way or piety or customs, because they desire shamelessness.
On the contrary, they deride them with mockery and laughter. 1.171 Infantile in their foolishness, they will falsely attribute to those what wicked and evil deeds they themselves commit.

The coming judgment

- 40 For the entire race of men is slow of faith. But when the judgment of the world and of mortals has already come, which God himself will perform, judging impious and pious at once, then he will also send the impious down into the gloom in fire,^e and then they will realize what impiety they committed. Lactantius,
DivInst
7.23.4 2.292
- 45 But the pious will remain on the fertile soil, and God will give them spirit and life and favor at once. 2.313–38; 3.573
All these things will be accomplished in the tenth generation, but now, the things which will happen from the first generation, these will I say. 4.189
2.15, etc.

The first kingdom

- First, the Assyrians will rule over all mortals,^f 50 holding the world in their dominion for six generations from the time when the heavenly God was in wrath with the cities themselves and all men, and the sea covered the earth when the Flood burst forth. Lactantius, De ira Dei
23.4

The second kingdom

- These will the Medes destroy,^g and boast on their thrones.
55 They will have only two generations. In their time the following things will take place:
There will be dark night in the mid-hour of day;^h
the stars and the circles of the moon will disappear from heaven;
the earth, shaken by the turmoil of a great earthquake, will cast down headlong many cities and works of men. 1.375, etc.
5.347;
8.204
8.433;
3.675,714,
752
- 60 Then islands will emerge from the depth of the sea.
But when the great Euphrates is flooded with blood, then indeed a terrible din of battle will arise for the Medes and Persians in war. The Medes will fall under the spears of the Persians and flee over the great water of the Tigris.ⁱ

The third kingdom

- 65 The power of the Persians will be the greatest of the whole world.
They are destined to have one generation of very prosperous rule.
All evils which men pray to be spared will come to pass:
battles and murders, dissensions and exiles, headlong crashes of towers and overthrow of cities, 12.113;
13.9,107; 14.122

e. On the idea of a fiery hell see n. x2 to SibOr 2.292.

f. For discussion and bibliography on the four kingdoms see the Introduction to SibOr 4. The succession of Assyrian, Median, and Persian empires is found in Herodotus 1.95, 130, in Ctesias, Diodorus Siculus 2.1–34. It is also implied in Tob 14.

g. Nineveh fell to an alliance of Medes and Babylonians in 612 B.C.

h. Lanchester sees here a reference to a phenomenon said to have occurred during a battle between Medes and Lydians in 585 B.C. (Herodotus 1.71). Such portents are common in oracular literature, e.g. Nechepso-Petosiris.

i. Cyrus the Persian had conquered Media by 550 B.C.

- 70 when boastful Greece sails to the wide Hellespont bringing grievous doom to the Phrygians and Asia.^j Further, famine and failure of crops will visit much-furrowed wheat-bearing Egypt, for a twenty-year cycle, when the Nile, which nourishes corn, hides 75 its dark water somewhere else under the earth.
 A king will come from Asia, brandishing a great spear, 3.611 with countless ships.^k He will walk the watery paths of the deep, and will cut through a lofty mountain as he sails.
 Him will wretched Asia receive as a fugitive from war.
 80 When the flame of Aetna belches forth a stream of great fire 7.6
 it will burn all miserable Sicily, and the great city Croton will fall into the deep stream.
 There will be strife in Greece.^l Raging against each other,
 they will cast many cities down headlong and will destroy many men 85 by fighting. But the strife will have equal effect on all parties.
 But when the race of men comes to the tenth generation 2.15 then there will also be yokes of slavery and terror for the Persians.

The fourth kingdom

- But when the Macedonians boast of scepters, thereafter there will also be dire capture for Thebes.^m 8.161
 90 The Carians will inhabit Tyre, and the Tyrians will perish.ⁿ
 Sand will cover all Samos under beaches. 3.363:
 Delos will no longer be visible, and all the affairs of Delos will be 8.166 inconspicuous.
 Babylon, great in appearance but insignificant in battle,^o will stand, built on useless hopes.
 95 Macedonians will colonize Bactria, but the people of^p Bactria and Susa will all flee to the land of Greece.
 It will come to pass in future generations that Pyramus of the silver current,^q
 pouring forward its shoreline, will reach the sacred island, and you, Baris, will fall, and Cyzicus, when cities slide 3.442 100 as the earth is shaken by earthquakes. 4.58, etc.
 Upon the Rhodians, too, a final, but greatest, disaster will come. 8.160

The rise of Rome

- Nor will the power of Macedonia survive, but from the west
 a great Italian war will bloom^r under which the world will serve, bearing the yoke of slavery for the Italians.
 105 You also, miserable Corinth, will one day behold your capture.
 Carthage, your tower will also bend the knee to the ground.^s Wretched Laodicea, at some time an earthquake will throw you headlong^t 3.471 and spread you flat, but you will be founded again as a city, and stand.
 Beautiful Myra of Lycia, the shuddering earth will no longer 110 support you, but falling down headlong on the earth,

j. A reference to the Greek assistance to the Ionian revolt against Persia in 499 B.C.

k. The invasions of Greece by Xerxes in 480 B.C. Xerxes made a bridge of boats across the Hellespont and cut a canal through the Athos Peninsula.

l. A reference to the continual wars among the Greeks, but especially the Peloponnesian War of 431–404 B.C.

m. Thebes was captured by Alexander in 335 B.C.

n. Tyre was captured in 332 B.C.

o. Babylon was captured without resistance in 331 B.C.

p. Reading apo (Rzach) for hupo.

q. The Pyramus is a Cilician river. This oracle is also found in Strabo 1.3.7 and 12.2.4.

r. The Macedonian wars, beginning in 214 B.C. and culminating in the battle of Pydna in 168 B.C.

s. Carthage and Corinth fell in 146 B.C.

t. Tacitus, Annals 14.27, reports an earthquake at Laodicea in A.D. 60.

you will pray to flee to another land as an exile
when the Lord^u spreads out the dark water of the sea with thunderings and earthquakes because of the impieties of Patara.
Armenia, the compulsion of slavery awaits you also.^v

The destruction of Jerusalem

- 115 An evil storm of war will also come upon Jerusalem from Italy, and it will sack the great Temple of God, whenever they put their trust in folly and cast off piety and commit repulsive murders in front of the Temple.^w
Then a great king will flee from Italy like a runaway slave^x unseen and unheard over the channel of the Euphrates, when he dares to incur a maternal curse for repulsive murder^y and many other things, confidently, with wicked hand.
When he runs away, beyond the Parthian land, many will bloody the ground for the throne of Rome.^z
- 120
125 A leader of Rome will come to Syria^{a2} who will burn the Temple of Jerusalem with fire, at the same time slaughter many men and destroy the great land of the Jews with its broad roads.
Then indeed an earthquake will destroy at once Salamis and Paphos when the dark water overwhelms Cyprus, which is washed by many waves.
- 5.154,
398-409
- 5.143,216;
12.81-94
- 5.30,145,
363; 8.71;
Ascens 4:2
- 4.116, etc.
- 4.143;
5.450-51;
7.5
- ### Various disturbances
- 130 But when a firebrand, turned away from a cleft in the earth
in the land of Italy, reaches to broad heaven,^{b2}
it will burn many cities and destroy men.
Much smoking ashes will fill the great sky,
and showers will fall from heaven like red earth.
- 135 Know then the wrath of the heavenly God,
because they will destroy the blameless tribe of the pious.
Then the strife of war being aroused will come to the west, and the fugitive from Rome will also come, brandishing a great spear,^{c2}
having crossed the Euphrates with many myriads.
- 140 Wretched Antioch, they will no longer call you a city
when you fall under spears by your own folly;
and then pestilence and terrible din of battle will destroy Cyprus.
Woe to miserable Cyprus, a broad wave of the sea will cover you when you have been tossed up by wintry blasts.
- 145 Great wealth will come to Asia, which Rome itself
once plundered and deposited in her house of many possessions.
She will then pay back twice as much and more
- 5.28-34,138-53,215-24, 363-70; 3.63-74; 8.70-72,
140-47; Rev 17:11
Ascens 4:1-2
13.125
13.126
- 4.129
- 3.350-55; 8.72; Oracle of Hystaspes, DivInst 17.15.11

u. Gk. ho medōn (Lanchester) for homadon. The Lord in question could be Poseidon.

v. The Armenian wars of A.D. 43-66.

w. The reference is most probably to the Romans, but possibly to the Zealots.

x. Nero. The emperor committed suicide in A.D. 68, but there was a widespread belief that he had fled to the Parthians and would return. See further vs. 138.

y. Nero had his mother put to death (Suetonius, Nero 34; cf. 39).

z. A reference to the rapid succession of emperors, Galba, Otho, Vitellius, and Vespasian, and the accompanying strife.

a2. Titus.

b2. The eruption of Vesuvius which destroyed Pompeii in A.D. 79.

c2. The legend of Nero's return arose from the belief that he had fled to the Parthians and was boosted by a series of impostors who claimed to be the returned emperor. At least two such impostors are known, one in A.D. 69 (Tacitus, Historiae 2.8, 9; Dio Cassius 64.9) and the other about twenty years later (Suetonius, Nero 57). At first Nero was believed to be still alive and operating on a human level. In the Jewish tradition, however, he is mythicized and even identified with Belial in SibOr 3.63-74 and Ascens 4:1-2.

to Asia, and then there will be a surfeit of war.^{d2}

A bitter famine will destroy the cities of the Carians, 150 which are very beautifully turreted, by the waters of the Maeander, whenever the Maeander hides its dark water.

Impiety of the last times

But when faith in piety perishes from among men, and justice is hidden in the world,
untrustworthy men, living for unholy deeds, 155 will commit outrage, wicked and evil deeds.
No one will take account of the pious, but they will even destroy them all, by foolishness, very infantile people, rejoicing in outrages and applying their hands to blood.
Even then know that God is no longer benign 160 but gnashing his teeth in wrath and destroying the entire race of men at once by a great conflagration.

Clement.
Paid 3.3.15

Lactantius,
DivInst
7.17.8

Lactantius,
De ira Dei
23.5
4.176

Exhortation to conversion and baptism

Ah, wretched mortals, change these things, and do not lead the great God to all sorts of anger, but abandon daggers and groanings, murders and outrages, 165 and wash your whole bodies in perennial rivers.^{e2}
Stretch out your hands to heaven and ask forgiveness for your previous deeds and make propitiation for bitter impiety with words of praise; God will grant repentance and will not destroy. He will stop his wrath again if you all 170 practice honorable piety in your hearts.

Lactantius,
De ira Dei
23.7

Isa 1:16; Mt 3:1-6; Mk 1:4f.
Lk 3:3f.
3.591. etc.

The conflagration

But if you do not obey me, evil-minded ones, but love
impiety, and receive all these things with evil ears, there will be fire throughout the whole world,^{f2} and a very great sign with sword and trumpet at the rising of the sun.
175 The whole world will hear a bellowing noise and mighty sound.
He will burn the whole earth, and will destroy the whole race of men and all cities and rivers at once, and the sea.
He will destroy everything by fire, and it will be smoking dust.

2.186. etc.
4.161

d2. This should not be interpreted with Lanchester as a reference to a specific event. As in the parallel Sibylline passages, it attests the common Asiatic hope for vengeance on Rome. See the Introduction to SibOr 3 on vss. 350-80.

e2. The most obvious parallel to the baptism of SibOr 4 is provided by John the Baptist, who also preached a baptism of repentance in the face of imminent eschatological destruction. Baptism and eschatology are also linked in the Ebionite and Elcaisite sects (PseudClemRec 1.54-65; Hippolytus, Ref 9; Epiphanius, AdvHaer 19, 30). The baptism of SibOr 4 shows little resemblance to the ritual washings of the Essenes. All that we know of the baths of the Essenes from Josephus or from the Qumran scrolls points to daily purifications, not to a baptism of repentance. The ritual washings in SibOr 3.591-93 also refer to daily purifications.

f2. The destruction of the world by fire was part of several traditions in the hellenistic age. In Stoicism, the ekpurosis, "conflagration," would reduce everything to its primal substance. The doctrine of the Great Year, found already in Heraclitus and Plato, envisaged two great cycles, one ending in a flood, the other in a conflagration (e.g. Plato, Timaeus, 22b). This idea is found in Berossus (Seneca, Naturales quaestiones 3.29.1) and may have influenced SibOr 1 and 2 and even SibOr 4, which deals only with the period after the Flood. It is also found in Vita 49, Josephus, Ant 1.2.3 (70f.), and 2Pet 3:6f. Fire as a stream of molten metal is a standard feature of Persian eschatology. In the Bundahishn this stream of fire melts mountains and makes the earth level. The Oracle of Hystaspes also predicted the destruction of the world by fire (Justin, Apologies 1.20). In the biblical tradition fire is an instrument of Yahweh's judgment (Amos 7:4; Isa 66:16, etc.). The belief in a final conflagration is attributed to both the Essenes and the Pharisees by Hippolytus (Ref 9). It is attested in IQH 3.29-33; 1En 52:6; and Ps-Sophocles (Ps-Justin De Monarchia 3; Clement, Strom 5.121.4-122.1).

Resurrection and judgment

- But when everything is already dusty ashes, 180 and God puts to sleep the unspeakable fire, even as he kindled it, God himself will again fashion the bones and ashes of men and he will raise up mortals again^{g2} as they were before. 2.221; Ezek 37:1-10
 ApPet 4
 4Ezra 7:32; 2Bar 50:2
 And then there will be a judgment over which God himself will preside, 2.218f., etc.
 judging the world again. As many as sinned by impiety, 185 these will a mound of earth cover,
 and broad Tartarus and the repulsive recesses of Gehenna.
 But as many as are pious, they will live on earth again when God gives spirit and life and favor Lactantius, DivInst 7.23.4 4.46
 190 to these pious ones.^{h2} Then they will all see themselves beholding the delightful and pleasant light of the sun.
 Oh most blessed, whatever man will live to that time. 3.371; 8.164
 Virgil, Eclogue 4:53

g2. Belief in resurrection is attributed to Persian religion by Theopompus (Diogenes Laertius, Proem 9) but is, of course, also widely attested in Jewish

texts.

h2. Vs. 188 "and the imperishable wealth of the great God" is rejected by Geffcken and Rzach.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES, BOOK 5

Introduction

Sibylline Oracle 5 is made up of six oracles (or in some cases collections) which may or may not have been composed to form a unified whole, but in any case are held together by certain recurring themes.¹ They are: (1) Verses 1–51: an introduction to the book, which reviews history from Alexander to Hadrian (or, if vs. 51 be original, Marcus Aurelius).² The emperors are not referred to explicitly but by gematria (the numbers represented by their initials).

The next four oracles are (2) 52–110; (3) 111–78; (4) 179–285; (5) 286–434. These show a common pattern:

- a. Oracles against various nations. In (2) and (4) the oracles are mainly against Egypt, in (3) and (5) against Asiatic countries.
- b. The return of Nero as an eschatological adversary.
- c. The advent of a savior figure.
- d. A destruction, usually by fire. (The manner of destruction is not specified in [2].)

Finally, there is a concluding oracle (6), verses 435–530. This oracle is largely concerned with Egypt. Verses 493–504 describe the building of a temple to the one true God in the land of Egypt and its subsequent destruction by the Ethiopians. The oracle concludes with an elaborate battle of the stars (512–53).

The only passage in Sibylline Oracles 5 that reflects Christian redaction is verses 256–59. Even here it is probable that a reference to a Jewish savior figure in the original Jewish oracle has been modified only by an allusion to the crucifixion.³

Date

The prominence of the Nero legend in (2), (3), (4), and (5) requires a date no earlier than A.D. 70 but more probably later than 80. The latest possible date for the collection is supplied by the favorable reference to Hadrian in verses 46–50, which must have been written before the Jewish revolt of A.D. 132. Not all sections of the book were necessarily written at the same time. The bitterness of complaint about the destruction of the Temple (cf. esp. vss. 398–413) suggests that at least the central oracles—(2), (3), (4), and (5)—were not far removed in time from that event. By analogy with 4 Ezra and 2 Baruch we might suggest a date in the last years of the first century A.D. Expectation of Nero's return is also likely to have flourished at that time. One detail may give a closer indication of date. In a number of places the Sibyl speaks of the destruction or dereliction of pagan temples (52–59, 484–91). The destruction of pagan temples was a notable feature of the Jewish revolt in the Diaspora of A.D. 115.⁴ We may see in these Sibylline oracles an indication of the atmosphere which fostered that revolt in the early years of the second century. The opening oracle, (1), which refers to Hadrian, must be dated after the revolt. The concluding oracle, (6), which has no reference to a saving figure and is considerably more pessimistic in tone than the other oracles, may also be thought to reflect the failure of the revolt.⁵

Provenance

The Egyptian origin of Sibylline Oracles 5 is not disputed. Sections (2) and (4) deal

¹ See especially Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, pp. 73–95. SibOr 5 is discussed by Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, pp. 22–30; Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2134–40; Nikiprowetzky, HUCA 43 (1972) 30–33.

² See Lanchester, APOT, vol. 2, p. 373. The objection to vs. 51 is that a Jew who wrote of Hadrian in favorable terms must have written before the Jewish revolt of A.D. 132.

³ Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, p. 88, following Lanchester, APOT, vol. 2, p. 402; B. Noack, "Der hervorragende Mann und der Beste der Hebraer (SibOr 5.256–59)," Annual of the Swedish Theological Institute 3 (1964) 122–46; Kurfess, Sibyllinische Weissagungen, p. 310, takes the passage as Jewish, consisting of a hybrid reference to Moses and Joshua.

⁴ See A. Fuks, "Aspects of the Jewish Revolt in A.D. 115–117," Journal of Roman Studies 51 (1961) 98–104.

⁵ See Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, pp. 94f. There is little substantial disagreement on the date of SibOr 5. All scholars date it between A.D. 80 and 130.

primarily with Egypt. In verse 53 (2) the Sibyl claims to be the familiar friend of Isis. The opening section, (1), begins with a reference to Egypt and includes a reference (vss. 17–18) to Cleopatra. The final section of the book, (6), includes a direct address to Isis (484) and Sarapis (487) and looks forward to the erection of a temple to the true God in the land of Egypt. Egyptian references are lacking in sections (3) and (4), but there is nothing in these sections incompatible with Egyptian authorship. The manner in which Sibylline Oracles 5 alternates its emphasis on Egypt and Asia suggests deliberate arrangement.

Sibylline Oracles 5 continues the major themes of Sibylline Oracles 3—interest in the Temple, expectation of a savior figure, the eschatological adversary (cf. SibOr 3.611; 75–92). Like Sibylline Oracles 3, it has little of the formal periodization characteristic of books 1 and 2 and 4. Sibylline Oracles 3 and 5 can be seen as the two extremities of one tradition in Egyptian Judaism. In Sibylline Oracles 5.501–3 we read that there will be a temple to the true God in the land of Egypt,⁶ which will be destroyed by an Ethiopian invasion. It is not clear, however, whether the Sibyl actually envisages an invasion from Ethiopia. The Ethiopians are said to leave the Triballi, who were properly a tribe in Thrace, and this makes little geographical sense. In Sibylline Oracles 3.319f. the Ethiopians are identified with Gog and Magog and so may be understood as a general name for eschatological adversaries. It is possible then that the destruction of the temple in Egypt, which precipitates the battle of the stars, is actually the destruction of Leontopolis by the Romans. However, even if we should understand both the temple and its destruction as eschatological, the idea would be more intelligible if the Sibyllist stood in a tradition once related to Leontopolis.

Historical and theological significance

Sibylline Oracles 5 is an important witness to at least one strand of Egyptian Judaism in the period between the Jewish revolts. By contrast with Sibylline Oracles 3, book 5 shows advanced alienation from all its gentile neighbors. In the period between the two books relations between Jews and gentiles in Egypt had deteriorated considerably.⁷ Whereas Sibylline Oracles 3 could look to the Ptolemaic house with enthusiasm, Sibylline Oracles 5 shows clear antipathy to the Egyptians (e.g. vss. 82–85 and 484–96) and their persecution of the Jews (vss. 68f.). Consequently two sections, (2) and (4), are dominated by oracles of doom for Egypt.

Much more powerful, however, is the Sibyl's animosity toward Rome. The outburst against Rome in verses 162–78 is unparalleled in bitterness anywhere in the Sibylline Oracles. Rome is denounced because of immorality, adultery, and homosexuality (166), but more significantly because of the destruction of Jerusalem (160–61). Ultimately Rome had laid claim to divine honors—"you said, 'I alone am, and no one will ravage me.'" (vs. 173) For this reason she must be cast down.⁸

The great adversary of the end-time in Sibylline Oracles 5 is the Roman emperor Nero. Utilizing the popular legend that Nero had fled to Parthia and would one day return, the Sibyl presents him both as king of Rome (vs. 139) and as leading an attack on Rome in the eschatological time (vs. 367). It should be noted that Nero was expected to return from the Parthians, not (at least explicitly) from the dead.⁹ In verse 147 he is said to go to the Persians. In verse 93 he is referred to as a Persian. In verse 363 he is said to come from the ends of the earth. He is not yet identified with Belial as he is in Sibylline Oracles 3.63–74 and in Ascension of Isaiah 4:1, but his wickedness consists, in large part, of his claim to be God (vss. 34, 139f.). In fact the evil of Nero has the same three dimensions as the evil of Rome: he is morally evil,¹⁰ he was responsible for the destruction of Jerusalem (vs. 150), since the Jewish war began in his reign, and he claimed to be God.

The four central oracles, (2), (3), (4), (5), contain references to a savior figure—in verses 108f., 155–61, 256–59, and 414–25. The striking feature of this figure is that he is depicted

⁶ The idea had a biblical basis in Isa 19:19 but is nevertheless highly unorthodox.

⁷ See Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, pp. 76f.

⁸ Ibid., p. 79.

⁹ See A. Yarbro Collins, The Combat Myth in the Book of Revelation (Harvard Dissertation Series; Missoula, Mont., 1976) p. 177.

¹⁰ His major crime was matricide (vss. 30, 142, and 363) but he is also accused of violence and of "sinning against spouses" (146).

as coming from heaven. This is most explicit in 414, where he is said to come "from the expanses of heaven." In verse 256 the savior figure is said to come "from the sky," but since verse 257 is clearly Christian, 256 may also be redactional. In verse 108 the savior figure is a king "from God" who is sent against Nero. This figure is not necessarily heavenly (cf. SibOr 3.286) but obviously could be. In section (3) the function of the savior is exercised by "a great star" that comes from heaven and burns the sea and Babylon (158f.). Stars were frequently associated with savior figures in the hellenistic world.¹¹ Messianic figures in Judaism could be designated as stars by application of the Oracle of Balaam.¹² The leader of the Jewish revolt in A.D. 132 was given the name Bar Kokhba, son of the star. Stars were frequently identified with angels in Jewish tradition.¹³ The star that destroys the sea and Babylon (here a metaphor for Rome) in Sibylline Oracles 5.158f. must be seen in the Jewish tradition of angelic or heavenly savior figures represented by Michael in the Book of Daniel, in the War Scroll from Qumran Cave 1, and Melchizedek in the text from Qumran Cave 11.¹⁴

The heavenly character of the savior figure in Sibylline Oracles 5 reflects the alienation of the Jewish community from its environment. In Sibylline Oracles 3 the Sibyllist could hope for a savior figure from the Ptolemaic house. In Sibylline Oracles 5 he must look outside the earthly realm for a heavenly figure.

Two passages in Sibylline Oracles 5 envisage a restored and glorious Jerusalem (vss. 249–55 and 420–27). In each case the restoration is upon the earth. According to verse 251 the wall of Jerusalem will extend as far as Joppa. Both passages emphasize that Jerusalem will be admired by other nations. There is no question here of resurrection of the dead.

The emphasis in Sibylline Oracles 5, however, falls not on restoration but on destruction. This is most strikingly evident in the final section of the book. Even the temple of the true God in Egypt will be destroyed by the Ethiopians (vs. 507). The book ends with a conflagration of the earth and desolation of the heavens, without any sign of further hope.

ETHICS

The ethics of Sibylline Oracles 5 are reflected chiefly in the vices for which the nations are condemned. As elsewhere in the Sibylline Oracles we find polemic against idolatry (vss. 75–85, 278–80, 353–56, 403–5, 495f.) and sexual offenses, especially homosexuality (vss. 386–93, 430). The most striking feature of the piety of Sibylline Oracles 5, however, is its emphasis on the Temple and cultic piety. Verses 406f. recall the sacrifices offered to God in the Temple and, in the final section, a temple in Egypt is envisaged where sacrifices will be offered. This interest in sacrifices is remarkable in view of the fact that the Temple had been destroyed for several years. It shows the gulf that separates the tradition in which Sibylline Oracles 5 stands from that of Sibylline Oracles 4.

Relation to other literature

Apart from its relation to Sibylline Oracles 3, book 5 has its most significant contacts with the Revelation of John. While the total eschatological conceptions of the two books are quite different, they share a number of important motifs.¹⁵ Chief of these are the use of the Nero legend (Rev 13:3, 18; 17:11), the designation "Babylon" applied to Rome (SibOr 5.159; Rev 18), the contrast of the two cities, Rome and Jerusalem (cf. SibOr 5.418–25; in Rev contrast ch. 18 with ch. 21), and certain astral imagery (SibOr 5.155–59; Rev 8:10; 9:1).

The final conflagration and battle of the stars finds its closest parallel in Seneca, Consolatio ad Marciam 26.6, which is influenced by Stoic doctrines but can also be understood against the biblical background of such passages as Isaiah 34:4.

The opening oracle in Sibylline Oracles 5.1–11 is a summary of Sibylline Oracles 11 but the two books share little beyond this. See the introduction to Sibylline Oracles 11.

¹¹ See Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, pp. 90–92.

¹² Num 24:17; cf. TJud 24:1. At Qumran the Oracle of Balaam is used in both CD and 4QTest.

¹³ E.g. Judg 5:20; Job 38:7; 1En 80:6; 2Bar 51:10; Dan 8:10. See W. Foerster, "Astér," TDNT, vol. 1, pp. 503–5.

¹⁴ See J. J. Collins, "The Son of Man and the Saints of the Most High in the Book of Daniel," JBL 93 (1974) 64–66.

¹⁵ See C. Holzinger, Erklärungen zu einigen der umstrittensten Stellen der Offenbarung Johannis und der Sibyllinische Orakel (Sitzungsbericht der Akad. der Wiss., Ph.-Hist. Kl. 216, 3; Wien, 1936); Yarbrow Collins, Combat Myth, ch. 4.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES

Book 5

A review of history

- But come, hear my woeful history of the Latin race. 12.1-11
First of all, indeed, after the death of the kings
of Egypt, all of whom the evenhanded earth took under,
and after the citizen of Pella, to whom 5 all the East and prosperous West were subjected,
whom Babylon tested and held out as a corpse to Philip, alleged, not truly to be descended from Zeus or Ammon,^a 3.383; 11.197
and after the one of the race and blood of Assaracus, who came from Troy, who split the onslaught of fire,^b 11.144 10 and after many princes, after warlike people, and after infants, children of the flock-devouring beast,^c 11.110-17
there will be the first prince who will sum up twice ten^d with his initial letter. He will conquer long in wars. 1.141, etc.
He will have his first letter of ten,^e so that after him
15 will reign whoever obtained as initial the first of the alphabet.^f
Thrace will crouch before him and Sicily, then Memphis. 12.20-23
Memphis, cast down headlong through the wickedness of its leaders 8.162 and of an indomitable woman who fell upon the wave.^g
He will give laws to the peoples and subordinate all things.
20 After a long time he will hand over sovereignty to another, who will present a first letter of three hundred, 12.39
and the beloved name of a river.^h He will rule over Persians and Babylon. He will indeed then conquer the Medes with the spear.
Then whoever obtained an initial of three will rule.ⁱ
25 Next, a prince who will have twice ten on his first letter.^j
But he will reach the farthest water of Oceanus 12.88f.
cleaving^k the tide under the Ausonians.
One who has fifty as an initial^l will be commander, 12.78-86
a terrible snake, breathing out grievous war, who one day 30 will lay hands on his own family and slay them, and throw everything into confusion, 4.121, etc.
athlete, charioteer, murderer, one who dares ten thousand things. Juvenal 8.224
He will also cut the mountain between two seas and defile it with gore.
But even when he disappears he will be destructive. Then he will return declaring himself equal to God. But he will prove that he is not. 4.138, etc.
35 Three princes after him will perish at each others' hands.^m 12.95-101

a. Alexander the Great. He died of fever in Babylon in 323 B.C. Clement, Protrepticus 10.96, quotes part of vs. 6. After his visit to the shrine of Zeus Ammon in 332 B.C., Alexander claimed to be son of that god.

b. Aeneas, who escaped from burning Troy. Assaracus, king of Phrygia, was his great-grandfather.

c. Romulus and Remus.

d. Kaisar (Caesar); K is 20.

e. Julius.

f. Augustus.

g. A reference to the defeat of Cleopatra at Actium.

h. Tiberius.

i. Gaius (Caligula).

j. Klaudios (Claudius).

k. Gk. daixas (Rzach) for aixas. The reference is to Claudius' expedition against Britain. Ausonia is strictly southern Italy, but is used poetically for the whole country.

l. Nero. Vs. 31 refers to his competing as a charioteer in the Olympian games; vs. 32 to his attempt to cut through the Isthmus of Corinth in A.D. 66-67. The fact that he is called a snake may be influenced by the story that a serpent was found around his neck when he was an infant (Tacitus, Annals 11:11), but it may be a more general derogatory term. On the legend of Nero's return see SibOr 4.138, etc., and SibOr 4, n. c2.

m. Galba, Otho, and Vitellius.

- Then will come a certain great destroyer of pious men, who show a clear initial of seven times ten.ⁿ
 His son, with a first initial of three hundred, will get the better of him^o and take away his power. After him will be a commander, 40 with an initial of four, a cursed man,^p but then 12.125
 a revered man, of the number fifty.^q After him 12.143
 one who obtained a marked initial of three hundred,^r 12.147-64
 a Celtic mountaineer, hastening to an Eastern war.
 He will not avoid an unseemly fate, but will die.
 45 Foreign dust will cover him, a corpse, but dust which has the name of the Nemean flower. After him another will reign, a silver-headed man. He will have the name of a sea.^s 8.52; 12.164
 He will also be a most excellent man and he will consider everything.
 And in your time, most excellent, outstanding, dark-haired one,
 50 and in the days of your descendants, all these days will come to pass. 8.136
 After him three will rule, but the third will come to power late in life.^t 12.176
 8.65

Prophecies of destruction against Egypt

- Thrice-wretched one, I am weary of putting an utterance of disaster in 3.1-7, etc.
 my heart and the inspired chant of oracles, I who am the familiar friend of Isis. 5.484
 First, indeed, around the steps of your much-lamented temple 55 maenads will dart, and you will be in bad hands on that day, when the Nile traverses 14.119f.
 the whole land of Egypt up to sixteen cubits, Artapanus so as to flood the whole land and drench it with streams. (PrEv 9.27)
 The beauty of the land and glory of its appearance will disappear.
 60 Memphis, you indeed will weep most of all over Egypt, 5.180 for formerly you were the one who mightily ruled the land, wretched one, so that even he who rejoices in thunder will cry out from heaven with a great voice, "Mighty Memphis, who formerly boasted most to wretched mortals, 65 you will weep in dire straits and disastrous fate, so that the eternal immortal God will notice you in the clouds.
 Where is your sturdy spirit among men?
 Because you raged against my children who were anointed by God^u and incited evil against good men, 70 you in return have such a nurse^v for recompense.
 You will no longer have any right openly among the blessed.
 You have fallen from the stars, you will not go up to heaven."^w Isa 14:12
 These things God bade me declare to Egypt
 in the final time when men will be utterly evil.
 75 But the wicked endure evil, awaiting the anger of the immortal deep-sounding heavenly one.
 They worship stones and brute beasts instead of God, 3.30-35, etc.;
 WisSol 13-15

n. Ouespasianos (Vespasian), who conducted the war against the Jews.

o. Titus. Suetonius, Titus 5, reports an ungrounded suspicion that Titus plotted to overthrow his father.

p. Reading epitharmenos (Lanchester) for epithos moros. The reference is to Domitian. For a sharply different assessment of Domitian see SibOr 12.124-42.

q. Nerva.

r. Trajan, who was born in Spain. He died at Selinus in Cilicia. The word selinon means "parsley," which was used in the victory wreath at the Nemean games.

s. Hadrian (Adriatic Sea).

t. Marcus Aurelius. The other two are Antoninus Pius and Lucius Verus. Hadrian had no children, but he adopted Antoninus. Antoninus in turn adopted Marcus Aurelius and Lucius Verus.

u. The reference is a general one to the traditional enmity of Israel and Egypt from the time of the Exodus, and more proximately the feuds in the 1st cent. A.D.

v. Presumably Rome.

- revering very many things, one here another there, which have no reason, or mind or hearing, and things which it is not even lawful for me to mention, Frag. 3.31
- 80 the particular types of idols, brought into being by the hands of mortals. Isa 44:9-20;
40:19f.
From their own labors and wicked notions,
men have accepted gods of wood and stone.
They have made them of bronze and gold and silver, vain, lifeless, dumb, and smelted in fire, 5.356; 8.47
- 85 vainly putting their trust in such as these.
Thmouis and Xouis are oppressed,^w the counsel of Heracles, Zeus, and Hermes is cut off,
and you, Alexandria, famous nurse of cities,
war will not leave you . . . 11.234
- 90 You will make retribution for pride, the things you formerly did.
You will be silent for a long age, and the day of return . . .
and the luxurious drink will no longer flow for you^x . . .

The return of Nero

- For the Persian will come onto your soil^y like hail, 4.138. etc.
1En 56:5f.
Rev 9:13-18
and he will destroy your land and evil-devising men
- 95 with blood and corpses, by terrible altars,
a savage-minded mighty man, much-bloodied, raving nonsense, with a full host numerous as sand, bringing destruction on you.^z
And then, most prosperous of cities,^{a2} you will be in great distress. 5.88
All Asia, falling to the ground, will lament for the gifts she enjoyed from you
- 100 when she wore a crown on her head.
But the one who obtained the land of the Persians will fight, and killing every man he will destroy all life
so that a one-third portion will remain for wretched mortals. 3.544; Zech 13:8; Rev 9:15,18
He himself will rush in with a light bound from the West,^{b2} 5.371
- 105 besieging the entire land, laying it all waste.
But when he attains a formidable height and unseemly daring, he will also come, wishing to destroy the city of the blessed ones, and then a certain king sent from God against him will destroy all the great kings and noble men. 3.286; 3.652; 5.414; Oracle of Hystaspes, DivInst 7.17;
Lactantius, DivInst 7.18.5
- 110 Thus there will be judgment on men by the imperishable one.

Prophecies of destruction against various Eastern places

- Alas for you, wretched heart, why do you provoke me 5.286 to show these things to Egypt, a grievous multiplicity of sovereignty?
Go to the East, to the mindless tribes of the Persians,
and show them what now is and what will be.
- 115 The current of the river Euphrates will bring on a flood and will destroy Persians, Iberians, and Babylonians and Massagetae, who love war and trust in bows.
All Asia will blaze, burned with fire as far as the islands.

w. Towns in lower Egypt.

x. I.e. the Nile will dry up. Contrast SibOr 5.56, but cf. Isa 19:5-8.

y. Gk. pedon for dapos (Geffcken). The Persian is Nero, returning from the Parthians. See SibOr 4,
n. c2. 1En 56:5f. also refers to a Parthian invasion
but is probably influenced by the historical invasion of Palestine by the Parthians in 40 B.C.

z. Gk. epaxôn (Geffcken) for apaixôn.

a2. The reference is apparently to Alexandria—cf.
vs. 88.

b2. Presumably he will have conquered the West first. Nero acts as king of Rome (SibOr 5.139) but is also attacking Rome (SibOr 5.367). When he comes from the West he must be understood to have come from Rome.

- Pergamos, which was formerly revered, will perish like a bunch of grapes, 120 and Pitane will appear totally desolate among men.
 All Lesbos will sink in the deep abyss, so as to perish. 5.316
 Smyrna will one day weep, rolled down the cliffs.
 She who was once revered and famous will perish.
 Bithynians will bewail their land, reduced to ashes,
 125 and great Syria, and Phoenicia of many tribes.
 Woe to you, Lycia, how many evils the sea devises against you, spontaneously encroaching on the grievous land, so that it will flood with a bad earthquake and bitter streams
 the watery^{c2} shore of Lycia which once breathed perfume.
 130 A terrible wrath will also come upon Phrygia because of the pain for which Rhea, mother of Zeus, came and remained there.^{d2}
 The sea will destroy the race and savage people of the Tauri, and will destroy the plain of the Lapiths and break it off down from the earth.^{e2}
 A deep-eddying river, deep-flowing Peneius, will destroy the land of 7.56
 Thessaly,
 135 chasing men^{f2} from the land,
 (Eridanus,^{g2} which claims to have once begotten forms of wild beasts).

The career of Nero and his flight to the East

- The poets will bewail thrice-wretched Greece
 when a great king of great Rome, a godlike man 4.119 from Italy, will cut the ridge of the isthmus. 5.32,218; 8.155; 12.84
 140 Him, they say, Zeus himself begot and lady Hera.^{h2} 8.153 Playing at theatricals with honey-sweet songs rendered 12.92 Suetonius; Nero 20 with melodious voice, he will destroy many men, and his wretched mother.
 He will flee from Babylon,ⁱ² a terrible and shameless prince whom all mortals and noble men despise.
 145 For he destroyed many men and laid hands on the womb. 4.121, etc.
 He sinned against spouses, and was sprung from abominable people. Suetonius, Nero 34,39
 He will come to the Medes and to the kings of the Persians, those whom he first desired and to whom he gave glory,^{j2} lurking with these evil ones against a true people.
 150 He seized the divinely built Temple and burned the citizens^{k2} and peoples who went into it, men whom I rightly praised.
 For on his appearance the whole creation was shaken and kings perished,ⁱ² and those in whom sovereignty remained destroyed a great city and righteous people.

c2. Or: unperfumed. The pun is presumably intentional and is also playing on the name of Myra, the chief city of Lycia.

d2. In SibOr 3.140 Rhea sent the infant Zeus to Phrygia. In the usual form of the myth she sent him to Crete.

e2. Reading: exolesas Lapithôn dapedon kata gēs aporēxei (Rzach). The Lapiths were a wild tribe living in Thessaly in heroic times.

f2. Gk. meropas for morphas (Lanchester).

g2. Geffcken reads Eridanus for the MS Eridanus. The reference is enigmatic and probably corrupt. Eridanus was the name of a mythical river, later identified with the Po.

h2. Blatantly sarcastic. For the mysterious occurrences at Nero's birth see Suetonius, Nero 6.

i2. For Babylon as a symbolic name for Rome see especially Rev 14:8; 16:19; 18:2, 21, 22. The analogy between Babylon and Rome, both of which destroyed Jerusalem and the Temple, underlies the fictional setting of 4Ezra and 2Bar.

j2. See SibOr 4, n. c2. In A.D. 63 Nero crowned Tiridates of Parthia as king of Armenia, thereby ceding to him, in effect, the province of Armenia. Tiridates hailed Nero as imperator and made obeisance to him as an emanation of Mithras. Nero's popularity with the Parthians endured after his death.

k2. Nero did not, of course, capture Jerusalem, but the war began in his reign.

l2. Possibly a reference to Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, but it may be more general. Lanchester emends to read "when he died," thaneontos for prophanentos, but the passage does not suppose that Nero had in fact died.

Cosmic destruction

- 155 But when after the fourth year a great star shines^{m2} which alone will destroy the whole earth, because of the honor which they first gave to Poseidon of the sea,ⁿ² a great star will come from heaven to the wondrous sea and will burn the deep sea and Babylonⁿ² itself and the land of Italy, because of which many holy faithful Hebrews and a true people perished.

Rev 8:10; 9:1

5.143

Oracle against Rome

- You will be among evil mortals, suffering evils, but you will remain utterly desolate for all ages yet, (it will exist, but it will remain utterly desolate forever), 165 despising your soil, because you desired sorcery. With you are found adulteries and illicit intercourse with boys. Effeminate and unjust, evil city, ill-fated above all. Alas, city of the Latin land, unclean in all things, maenad, rejoicing in vipers,^{p2} as a widow you will sit 170 by the banks, and the river Tiber will weep for you, its consort. You have a murderous heart and impious spirit. Did you not know what God can do, what he devises? But you said, "I alone am,^{q2} and no one will ravage me." But now God, who is forever, will destroy you and all your people, 175 and there will no longer be any sign of you in that land, as there was formerly, when the great God found your honors. Remain alone, lawless one. Mingled with burning fire, inhabit the lawless nether region of Hades.

3.356-62; Rev 18

5.342

3.764,185; Clement, Paid 2.10.99

Rev 18:7; Isa 47:9

Rev 18:7; Isa 47:8; Isa 14:3 Ezek 28:2

8.101; Isa 14:15

Oracles of destruction against Egypt

- Now again, Egypt, I will bewail your fate.
 180 Memphis, you will be leader of labors, smitten on the ankles. In you the pyramids will utter a shameless sound. Python, rightly called "double-city" of old, be silent forever, so that you may desist from wickedness. Arrogance, treasury of evil labors, maenad of many laments,
 185 dire sufferer, tearful one, you will remain a widow forever. For many years you alone were ruler of the world. But when Barca^{r2} puts on a white skirt over a dirty one, may I neither be nor come into being. O Thebes, where is your great strength? A savage man 190 will destroy your people. But you will take gray garments and lament, wretched one, alone, and will make retribution for everything which you did before, having a shameless spirit. They will see lamentation because of lawless deeds. A great man of the Ethiopians will destroy Syene.^{s2}

5.60

Ex 1:11 (Pithom)

5.231

m2. The "fourth year" is an equivalent of the "three and a half times" of Dan 7:25; 12:7, at the end of which comes deliverance from persecution. The star here performs the role of destroying angel in accordance with the widespread identification of stars and angels in the OT and intertestamental writings. See the Introduction to SibOr 5.

n2. Poseidon was god of the sea. In the OT the sea is frequently a symbol of chaos and hostility to God: Hab 3:15; Isa 7:12-14, etc. On the destruction of the sea here cf. Rev 21:1.

o2. I.e. Rome. Above, n. i2.

p2. This remark is clearly pejorative but its precise relevance is enigmatic. Lanchester suggests the analogy of the death of Cleopatra, which might also be suggested by the term "widow." (Cf. SibOr 3.77.)

q2. Cf. the divine claim, Ex 3:14; Isa 43:11; 44:6; 45:7.

r2. A city captured by the Persians in the time of Darius. The kilt was a Persian garment, so this may be an old oracle.

s2. There was an Ethiopian invasion of Egypt in 24 B.C., but the Ethiopians had always been a threat to the southern part of the country.

195 Dark-skinned Indians will occupy Teuchira^{a2} by force.
 Pentapolis, you will weep, but a very mighty man will destroy you.
 Much lamented Libya, who will narrate your doom?
 Cyrene, who of men will weep piteously for you?
 You will not desist from hideous lamentation until the time of destruction.

An oracle against the Gauls

200 Among the Britains^{a2} and wealthy Gauls
 the ocean will be resounding, filled with much blood, for they also did evil to the children of God
 when the purple king led a great Gallic host from Syria against the Sidonians.^{a2} He will also kill you, 205 Ravenna, and lead you to slaughter.

Destruction for the Ethiopians

Indians, have no courage, and great-spirited Ethiopians;^{a2} for when the wheel of arched^{a2} Axis, Capricorn and Taurus amid Gemini, revolves in mid-heaven,
 Virgo, coming forth, and the sun, fixing a belt 210 all about its brow, shall lead.
 There will be a greatly heavenly conflagration on earth and from the battling stars^{a2} a new nature will emerge, so that the whole land of the Ethiopians will perish in fire and groanings.

The return of Nero

You, too, Corinth, bewail the mournful destruction within you. 7.60 215 For when the three sister Fates, spinning with twisted threads, lead the one who is (now) fleeing deceitfully^{a2} 4.119f.; 5.143 beyond the bank of the isthmus on high so that all may see him, who formerly cut out the rock with ductile bronze, 5.139, etc.
 he will destroy and ravage your land also, as is decreed.
 220 For to him God gave strength to perform 3.66; ApEl 3:6–10 things like no previous one of all the kings.
 For, first of all, cutting off^{a3} the roots from three heads Dan 7:8
 mightily with a blow, he will give them to others to eat, so that they will eat the flesh of the parents of the impious king.^{b3} 225 For murder and terrors are in store for all men because of the great city and righteous people which is 5.154 preserved throughout everything, which Providence held in special place.

Denunciation of arrogance

Arrogance, unstable one of evil counsels, surrounded by evil fates, t2. Also known as Arsinoe.

u2. Gk. Brutessi for Brugessi (φ, ψ).

v2. Most probably a reference to Vespasian, who had Gauls in his army.

w2. Ancient geographers were confused on the relation of India and Ethiopia and sometimes claimed that there were two Ethiopias, one in Africa, one in India. Cf. Strabo 1.2. The same confusion is found in SibOr 11.61–79.

x2. Gk. kurton for toutous (Lanchester).

y2. Gk. astrōn d'ek machimōn for en machimois (Geffcken). The tradition of an astral battle is reflected in diverse sources, such as Judg 5:20; Isa 14:12; Dan 8:10; Seneca, Consolatio ad Marciam 26.6; Hercules furens 944–52; Nonnus, Dionysiaca 38.347–409.

z2. Nero, see SibOr 4, n. c2.

a3. Gk. schissamenos for stēsamenos (Rzach). This detail recurs in several forms of the Antichrist legend—e.g. Commodian, Carmen apologeticum 911; Hippolytus, De Christo et Antichristo 52. (See Bousset, The Antichrist Legend, p. 159.) The origin of the tradition lies apparently in the conflation of the three uprooted horns of Dan 7:8 and the three defeated powers, Egyptians, Libyans, and Cushites, in Dan 11:43.

b3. Possibly a reference to Nero's murder of his mother.

- beginning and great end of toil for men 5.244
 230 when creation is damaged and saved again by the Fates. 5.245
 Leader of evils and great affliction to men, 5.184 which of mortals desired you, who did not resent you within.
 By you a certain king, cast down, destroyed his revered life.^{c3}
 You arranged all things badly and brought on a full flood of evil, 235 and through you the beautiful folds of the world were changed.
 Put forward these causes for our strife, perhaps they are the last.
 How and what do you say? I will persuade you and even if I blame you somewhat I will speak.

Praise and exaltation of the Jews

- There was once among men a shining light of the sun 3.218-60, when the harmonious ray of the prophets was being spread abroad, 573-600 240 a tongue dripping a beautiful drink for all mortals with honeyed sweetness;
 it made manifest, offered and effected gentle things for all.
 Therefore, narrow-minded leader of greatest evils,
 the reaping hook and grief will come in that day. 1.387, etc.
 Beginning and great end of toil for men, 5.229
 245 when creation is damaged and saved again by the Fates. 5.230
 Give ear to the bitter harsh-sounding speech, you affliction to men.
 But whenever the Persian land desists from war, pestilence, and groaning, then on that day it will come to pass that the divine and heavenly race of the blessed Jews, Lactantius, 250 who live around the city of God in the middle of the earth, DivInst 4.20.11 are raised up even to the dark clouds, LetAris 83f.
 5.424f.
 having built a great wall round about, as far as Joppa.
 No longer will trumpet whistle the sound of war, 8.117
 and no longer will they perish at raging hostile hands, 255 but they will set up^{d3} trophies won from the wicked, forever.
 There will again be one exceptional man from the sky 5.414, 108, etc.; Oracle of (who stretched out his hands on the fruitful wood),^{e3} Hystaspes, DivInst 7.17
 Dan 7:13; 4Ezra 13:3
 the best of the Hebrews, who will one day cause the sun to stand, Josh 10:12 speaking with fair speech and holy lips.
 260 Blessed one, no longer weary your spirit in your breast, divinely born, wealthy, sole-desired flower,
 good light, holy shoot, beloved plant,^{f3} CD 1:3; delightful Judea, fair city, inspired with hymns. 1Cor 3:6
 No longer will the unclean foot of Greeks 265 revel around your land but they will have a mind in their breasts that conforms to your laws.
 But glorious children will honor you exceedingly,
 and they will attend table with devout music,
 all sorts of sacrifices and with prayers honoring God. 5.407
 Such righteous men as endured toils will receive 270 greater, pleasant things in exchange^{e3} for a little distress.
 But the wicked, who dispatched lawless utterance against heaven, will desist from speaking against each other but will hide themselves until the world is changed.
 There will be a shower of blazing fire from the clouds, 3.543; 5.377 275 and mortals will no longer enjoy bright corn from the earth.
 All will remain unsown and unplowed until mortal men 3.542

c3. Presumably Nero.

d3. Gk. anastēsousi for stēsamenos (Rzach).

e3. At least this verse is Christian.

f3. Gk. semnon te thalos, pephilēmenon ernos for telos poepthēmenon hagnos.

g3. Gk. enallaxousi for kalon arxousi (Mendelssohn).

pay attention to the immortal eternal God, ruler of all,
and no longer honor mortal things, neither dogs nor vultures, which Egypt taught 280 men to revere with vain mouths and foolish lips.
But the holy land of the pious alone will bear all these things:
a honey-sweet stream from rock and spring,
and heavenly milk will flow for all the righteous.
For with great piety and faith they put their hope 285 in the one begetter, God, who alone is eminent.

3.30, etc.;
WisSol 15:18
Lactantius,
DivInst 7.24.14
3.622
8.211

Woes for Asia

But why does my clever mind suggest these things to me? 5.111
Now, wretched Asia, I bewail you piteously and the race of Ionians, Carians, and Lydians rich in gold.
Woe to you, Sardis,ⁿ³ woe lovely Trallis, 3.459
290 woe Laodicea, beautiful city, how you will perish 3.471 destroyed by earthquakes and changed to dust.
To dark Asia . . .
The well-built shrine of Artemis of Ephesus Acts 19:28
with cleavings and earthquakes will fall to the wondrous sea, 295 headlong, as storm winds overwhelm ships.
Ephesus, supine, will wail, weeping on the shores, Clement, Protr seeking the temple which is no longer there. 4.50
And then the imperishable God who dwells in the sky in anger will cast a lightning bolt from heaven against the power of the impious.
300 Instead of winter there will be summer on that day 2.157; 8.215;
and then indeed there will be great affliction¹³ for mortal men 14.299 for the One who thunders on high will destroy all shameless men with thunders and lightnings and blazing thunderbolts on hostile men, and he will destroy the impious in such a manner 305 that corpses will remain on earth more numerous than sand.
Smyrna also will come, bewailing its musician,^{j3} 5.122 to the gates of Ephesus, and she herself will truly perish.
Foolish Cyme, with her divinely inspired streams,^{k3}
cast down at the hands of godless, unjust and lawless men, 310 will no longer take her chariot forward to such a height but will remain, a corpse, in swelling¹³ streams.
And then they will cry out at once, awaiting evil.
The difficult people and shameless tribe of the Cumaeans will have a sign and know because of what it labored.
315 Then when they bewail a wicked land reduced to ashes, Lesbos will be destroyed forever by Eridanus. 5.121,136
Woe to you, Cibra,^{m3} fair city, desist from revelry.
Hierapolis also, the only land which has mingled with Pluton,ⁿ³ 12.280 you will have what you have desired to have, a land of many tears, 320 piling a mound on the earth by the streams of Thermodon.
Rock-clinging Tripolis by the waters of the Maeander, apportioned to nightly waves on the shore,
the providence of God will one day destroy you utterly.
May I never willingly take the land which is neighbor to Phoebus.^{o3} 4.4

h3. Sardis was destroyed by an earthquake in A.D. 17.

j3. Gk. mega pēm? for metepeit? (Rzach).

k3. Gk. lourougon for lukougon (Geffcken). The reference is to Homer.

k3. The inspired streams suggest the Sibylline shrine at Cumae in Italy, but the context favors the Cumae in Asia.

l3. Gk. kumainousi for kumēoisi (Lanchester).

m3. Gk. kibura for kerkura (Mendelssohn).

n3. Pluton was god of the underworld; Plutus was god of wealth. Presumably the pun is intended.

o3. Pausanias 10.12.5 says the Sibyl Herophile went to Claros, the famous oracular shrine of Phoebus Apollo.

325 A lightning bolt from above will one day destroy luxurious Miletus because it chose the deceitful strain of Phoebus and the clever practice of men and prudent counsel.

Prayer for Judea

Be gracious, begetter of all, to the fertile, luxurious, great land of Judea, so that we may behold your plans.
330 For you knew this one first, God, with favors, so that she seemed to be your special gift to all men and to attend as God enjoined.

Woes for Europe

Thrice wretched one, I desire to see the affairs of the Thracians and the wall between two seas swept down in the dust 335 by Ares (sweeping) like a river on a fishing diver.^{p3}
Wretched Hellespont, one day the offspring of the Assyrians will put a yoke on you.^{q3}
The battle of the Thracians against you will utterly destroy your mighty strength.
An Egyptian king seizes Macedonia, and a foreign region will cast down the strength of leaders.^{r3} 340 Lydians and Galatians, Pamphylians and Pisidians en masse will conquer, armed in evil strife.
Thrice-wretched Italy, all desolate, unwept, you will await a destructive beast in a blooming land, to be destroyed.
It will be possible to hear a heavenly crash of thunder, the voice of God
345 throughout broad heaven above.^{s3}
The imperishable flames of the sun itself will no longer be, 5.477 nor will the shining light of the moon be anymore 5.480
in the last time, when God assumes command.
Everything will be blackened, there will be darkness throughout the earth,
350 and blind men, evil wild beasts, and woe.
That day will last a long time, so that men will take note of God himself, the prince who oversees all from heaven.
Then he will not pity hostile men who sacrifice herds of lambs and sheep, and loud-bellowing bulls, 355 and great golden-horned calves to lifeless Hermes and gods of stone. 3.31; Ezek 9:17
But let law, wisdom, and glory rule over the righteous, lest one day the imperishable God in anger destroy 3.31; Ezek 9:17 the livelihood of men with every race^{t3} and a shameless tribe. Lactantius, De ira Dei 23.8 360 It is necessary to love God, the wise eternal begetter.

The return of Nero

There will come to pass in the last time about the waning of the moon a war which will throw the world into confusion and be deceptive in guile.

p3. The wall in question spanned the isthmus on which Byzantium stood. Ares was the god of war.
q3. Xerxes' bridge across the Hellespont in 481 B.C.

r3. Seleucus I defeated Lysimachus of Thrace at the battle of Corupedion in 281 B.C. but was himself murdered by Ptolemy Keraunos. The latter, in turn, was defeated and killed by the Gauls in 280 B.C.

s3. Reading: estai d'aitherion ana ouranon eurun huperthen (Geffcken).

t3. Gk. paggenei for pan genos (Wilamowitz).

- A man who is a matricide will come from the ends of the earth in flight and devising penetrating schemes in his mind. 4.138, etc.; 4.121, etc.
Ascens 4:2
- 365 He will destroy every land and conquer all
and consider all things more wisely than all men.
He will immediately seize the one because of whom he himself perished. 8.142
He will destroy many men and great rulers, and he will set fire to all men as no one else ever did.
- 370 Through zeal he will raise up those who were crouched in fear.
There will come upon men a great war from the West. 5.104
Blood will flow up to the bank of deep-eddy rivers. Lactantius, DivInst 7.19.5
Wrath will drip in the plains of Macedonia, 1En 100:3
an alliance to the people^{w3} from the West, but destruction for the king.
- 375 Then a wintry blast will blow throughout the land, and the plain will be filled again with evil war.
For fire will rain on men from the floors of heaven, 3.543; 5.274 fire and blood, water, lightning bolt, darkness, heavenly night, and destruction in war, and a mist over the slain
- 380 will destroy at once all kings and noble men.
Then the piteous destruction of war will cease thus and no longer will anyone fight with swords or iron or with weapons at all, which will no longer be lawful. 3.653, 727-30; Isa 2:4
Ps 46:9; Ezek 39:9
A wise people which is left will have peace,
- 385 having experienced evil so that it might later rejoice.

Admonition to the Romans

- Matricides, desist from boldness and evil daring, 5.363
you who formerly impiously catered for pederasty 3.185, etc.
and set up in houses prostitutes who were pure before,
with insults and punishment and toilsome disgrace.
- 390 For in you mother had intercourse with child unlawfully, 7.43-45 and daughter was joined with her begetter as bride.
In you also kings defiled their ill-fated mouths.
In you also evil men practiced bestiality.
Be silent, most lamentable evil city, which indulges in revelry.
- 395 For no longer in you will virgin maidens tend the divine fire of sacred nourishing wood.^{v3}

Destruction of the Temple

- The desired Temple has long ago been extinguished by you,
When I saw the second Temple cast headlong, soaked in fire by an impious hand,
- 400 the ever-flourishing, watchful Temple of God made by holy people and hoped by their^{w3} soul and body to be always imperishable.
For among them no one carelessly praises a god 3.13, etc.
of insignificant clay, nor did a clever sculptor make one from rock,
- 405 nor worship ornament of gold, a deception of souls.
But they honored the great God, begetter of all who have God-given breath, with holy sacrifices and hecatombs. 5.268
But now a certain insignificant and impious king has gone up, cast it down, and left it in ruins
- 410 with a great horde and illustrious men.

^{u3}. Gk. leō(i) for dō d' (Geffcken).

^{v3}. Gk. para soi g'hierēs for para soio tēn tēs (Rzach). The reference is to the burning of the temple of Vesta in A.D. 64.

^{w3}. Gk. autōn for autou (Rzach). The reference is, of course, to Herod's Temple.

He himself perished at immortal hands when he left the land,^{x3}
and no such sign has yet been performed among men that others should think to sack a great city.

The advent of a savior figure

- For a blessed man came from the expanses of heaven^{y3} 5.256. etc.
415 with a scepter in his hands which God gave him, and he gained sway over all things well, and gave back the wealth to all the good, which previous men had taken.
He destroyed every city from its foundations with much fire and burned nations of mortals who were formerly evildoers.
420 And the city which God desired, this he made more brilliant than stars and sun and moon, 5.261:
and he provided ornament and made a holy temple,^{z3} Lactantius, exceedingly beautiful in its fair shrine,^{a4} and he fashioned DivInst 7.24.6
a great and immense tower over many stadia 425 touching even the clouds and visible to all, 5.251f.
so that all faithful and all righteous people could see the glory of eternal God, a form desired.
East and West sang out the glory of God. Ps 19:1
For terrible things no longer happen to wretched mortals, 430 no adulteries or illicit love of boys, 3.764
no murder, or din of battle, but competition is fair among all.
It is the last time of holy people when God, who thunders on high, founder of the greatest temple, accomplishes these things.

An oracle against Babylon

- Woe to you, Babylon, of golden throne and golden sandal. 3.303. etc.
435 For many years you were the sole kingdom ruling over the world. Isa 13; Jer 51
You who were formerly great and universal, you will no longer lie on golden mountains and streams of the Euphrates. Isa 47:5
You will be spread out flat by the turmoil of an earthquake. Terrible Parthians
made you shake^{ba} all over. Restrain your mouth with a bridle, 440 impious race of Babylonians. Neither ask nor take thought how you will rule over the Persians or how you will hold sway over the Medes.
Because of your dominion which you had, you will send to Rome hostages, even those who were in bondage to Asia.^{c4}
So also, though thinking as a queen, you will come 445 under the judgment of your adversaries on whose account you sent ransom.
You will pay a bitter reckoning to your enemies in return for your crooked words.

Eschatological upheavals

- In the last time, one day the sea will be dry, Rev 21:1
and ships will then no longer sail to Italy. 8.237.348

x3. Reading chersin hup' athanatois apobas ges (Geffcken). The king is Titus, but his death was not in any way miraculous.

y3. The past tense is used by anticipation. The heavenly origin of the savior figure accords with the consistent expectation of SibOr 5.

z3. Gk. hagion poikon; (Rzach: oikon ["house" or "temple"] is added).

a4. Gk. en sēkō kalō for ensarkon kalon (Lanchester). Contrast the new Jerusalem in Rev 21:22 in which there is no temple.

b4. Gk. krotein for kratein (Lanchester).

c4. A possible reference to Roman prisoners captured at Carrhae and recovered by Augustus.

- Great Asia then will be water, bearing all cargo, 450 and Crete a plain. Cyprus will have a great affliction, 4.128f.
 and Paphus will bewail a terrible fate so that even the great city of Salamis, suffering a great affliction, will notice it.
 Now there will again be barren dry land on the shore.
 A not inconsiderable swarm of locusts will destroy the land of Cyprus.
 455 Ill-fated men, you will weep when you look toward Tyre. 7.62: 14.87
 Phoenicia, terrible wrath awaits you, until you fall 3.492
 a bad fall so that the Sirens may truly weep. 2Bar 10:8
 It will come to pass in the fifth generation when the destruction of Egypt ceases, when the shameless kings intermingle.
 460 The clans of the Pamphylians will settle in Egypt and in Macedonia, and in Asia, and among the Lycians there will be a bloody war throwing the world into confusion in dust, which a king of Rome and the potentates of the West will stop.^{d4}
 Whenever a wintry blast drips as snow, 465 when a great river and the biggest lakes are frozen over, immediately a barbarian throng will march to the land of Asia^{e4} and will destroy the race of terrible Thracians as if it were weak.
 Then desperate men weakened by famine will devour their parents and gulp them down as food.
 470 Wild beasts will devour the table^{f4} from all dwellings.
 Even birds will devour all mortals.
 The bloody ocean will be filled with flesh and blood of the senseless, from evil war.
 There will be such weakness on earth 2.25
 475 that it will be possible to know the number of men and count of women.
 A wretched generation will groan ten thousandfold at the end when the sun is setting so that it never rise again, 5.346: 3.94 remaining to be plunged in the waters of the ocean,
 for it saw the impious wickedness of many men.
 480 There will be moonless night round the great heaven itself. 5.347
 No small mist will cover the folds of the world about, a second time. But then the light of God will lead WisSol 18:1
 the good men, as many as sang out the praise of God.

The conversion of Egypt

- Isis, thrice-wretched goddess, you will remain by the streams of the Nile 5.53: Clement, Protr 4.50
 485 alone, a speechless maenad on the sands of the Acheron.^{g4}
 No longer will memory of you remain throughout the whole earth.
 And you, Sarapis, reposing on many unwrought stones, will lie, a very great casualty in thrice-wretched Egypt.
 But as many as brought the desire of Egypt to you will all 490 bewail you bitterly, turning their attention to the imperishable God.
 Those who sang out your praises as a god will know that you are nothing.
 Then a man clad in linen, one of the priests, will say,
 "Come, let us erect a sanctuary of the true God. 3.716-31 Come, let us change the terrible custom we have received from our ancestors

d4. This rather confused passage seems to refer to the defeat of Antony and Cleopatra. The "fifth generation" may be analogous to the tenth generation of SibOr 2.15, etc.—i.e. the fifth generation after the Flood.

e4. Geffcken compares an oracle in Pausanias 10.15.3 on the invasion of the Gauls. This may be an old oracle from the time of the Gaulish invasions in the early third century B.C.

f4. (The Gk. noun reflects metonymy; "food" would be preferable, but it has already been used in the preceding sentence. —J.H.C.)

g4. I.e. in Hades.

- 495 on account of which they performed processions and rites to gods of stone and earthenware, and were devoid of sense. 3.30.14, etc.
Let us turn our souls, singing out the praises of the imperishable God himself, the begetter who is eternal,
the ruler of all, the true one, the king,
500 the begetter who nourishes souls, the great eternal God."⁴
Then there will be a great holy temple in Egypt,^{4a} Isa 19:19 and a people fashioned by God will bring sacrifices to it.
To them the imperishable God will grant to reside there.
But when the Ethiopians leave the shameless tribes of the Triballi 505 and are about to till the land⁴ of Egypt, they will launch on a course of wickedness, so that all the later things may come to pass, for they will destroy the great temple of the land of Egypt. War 7.10.2
God will rain on them a terrible wrath, down on earth, (420-36)
so as to destroy all the wicked and all the lawless. 5.373
- 510 There will no longer be any sparing in that land, because they did not guard what God entrusted to them.

The battle of the stars

- I saw the threat of the burning sun among the stars and the terrible wrath of the moon among the lightning flashes. 3.207-13;
The stars travailed in battle;⁴ God bade them fight. 2.200-1, etc.
- 515 For over against the sun long flames were in strife,
and the two-horned rush of the moon was changed.
Lucifer fought, mounted on the back of Leo.
Capricorn smote the ankle of the young Taurus,
and Taurus deprived Capricorn of his day of return.
520 Orion removed Libra so that it remained no more.
Virgo changed the destiny of Gemini in Aries.
The Pleiad no longer appeared and Draco rejected its belt.
Pisces submerged themselves in the girdle of Leo.
Cancer did not stand its ground, for it feared Orion.
525 Scorpio got under the tail⁴ because of terrible Leo, and the dog star perished by the flame of the sun.
The strength of the mighty day star burned up Aquarius.
Heaven itself was roused until it shook the fighters.
In anger it cast them headlong to earth.
- 530 Accordingly, stricken into the baths of ocean, 2.202, etc.
they quickly kindled the whole earth. But the sky remained starless. 7.125

^{4a}. This idea may have been influenced by the historical temple at Leontopolis. It is even possible that the passage refers to that temple directly.

⁴. Gk. Aiguptou gaiān for Aiguptou heēn (Alexandre). The Triballi were properly a tribe living in Thrace. The Ethiopians were traditional enemies of Egypt. Their eschatological role is suggested in SibOr 3.319f. where they are identified with Gog and Magog. It is not clear then whether the Ethiopians are literally Ethiopians or just a name for the eschatological adversary. If the latter is the case, then it is possible that the destruction in question is the destruction of the Leontopolis temple by the Romans.

Otherwise, both the temple and the invasion must be taken as eschatological.

^{j4}. Cf. n. y2 above. Cf. especially the conflagration in Seneca, Consolatio ad Marciam 26.6; Thyestes, 844-74; Naturales quaestiones 3.29.1 (which he attributes to Berossus); Nonnus, Dionysiaca 38.347-409. The collision of the stars here may be understood as a parallel to the apocalyptic battle in heaven (Rev 12:7) expressed in more cosmological terms. Here, however, all the stars are cast down.

^{k4}. Gk. oura(i) hupēlthe (Geffcken) for ouran epēlthe.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES, BOOK 6

Introduction

The twenty-eight verses which make up Sibylline Oracles 6 are not even presented as a Sibylline oracle but are quite simply a hymn to Christ. There is nothing to indicate a Jewish or pagan substratum in this book. It consists of a brief account of the career of Christ, beginning with his baptism and concluding with an apostrophe to the cross.

The hymn has been designated heretical by Geffcken¹ because of the association of fire with the baptism of Christ in verse 6, which is paralleled in Sibylline Oracles 7.84. Geffcken sees a parallel here to the Gospel of the Ebionites, but there the reference is to a light which shone around Christ rather than to fire.² The Gospel of the Ebionites also begins with the baptism of Christ, but the evidence is not sufficient to support a literary relationship between the two works. Kurfess has rightly protested that the association of fire with the baptism of Christ is not necessarily sectarian in any case.³

The latest possible date for this hymn is fixed by the fact that Lactantius (c. A.D. 300) cites it. Geffcken very tentatively proposes a second-century date, because the meter is better than is usual in third-century works.⁴ This criterion must be considered dubious. Kurfess posits that Sibylline Oracles 7 depends on Sibylline Oracles 6 for the association of fire with the baptism of Christ, but in fact there is nothing to suggest literary dependence between the two books.⁵ At most the parallel would suggest that the books come from similar milieus.

The interest in baptism in the Jordan might suggest that Sibylline Oracles 6 originated near the Jordan Valley, but this again is by no means necessary. Ultimately all we can say with confidence about the provenance of Sibylline Oracles 6 is that it was written by a Christian before the time of Lactantius.

The idea expressed in verse 37, that the cross would be taken up to heaven, was popular in later Christian writings.⁶

¹ Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 31, following Alexandre and Mendelssohn.

² Epiphanius, AdvHaer 30.13.

³ Kurfess, Sibyllinische Weissagungen, p. 313.

⁴ Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 32.

⁵ Kurfess, HSW, vol. 2, p. 708. Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 32, already argued against literary dependence here.

⁶ See Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, col. 2141.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES

Book 6

A hymn to Christ

- I speak from my heart of the great famous son of the Immortal, to whom the Most High, his begetter, gave a throne to possess before he was born, since he was raised up the second time according to the flesh, when he had washed in the streams of the river 5 Jordan, which moves with gleaming foot, sweeping the waves.
He will escape the fire and be the first to see delightful God coming in the spirit on the white wings of a dove.
A pure flower will bloom, fountains will burst forth.
He will show ways to men; he will show heavenly paths.
10 He will teach all with wise words.
He will come to judgment and persuade a disobedient people, boasting praiseworthy descent from the Heavenly Father.
He will walk the waves; he will undo the sickness of men;
he will raise the dead. He will repel many woes.
15 From one wallet men will have surfeit of bread when the house of David brings forth a shoot. In his hand are the whole world and earth and heaven and sea.
He will flash like lightning on the earth as the two begotten from each other's sides once saw him when he first shone forth.^a 20 It will come to pass when earth rejoices in the hope of a child.
For you alone, land of Sodom, evil afflictions are in store.
For with your hostile mind you did not perceive your God when he came before mortal eyes. But you crowned him with a crown from the thornbush, and you mixed terrible gall 25 for insult and drink.^b That will cause great afflictions for you.
O wood, o most blessed, on which God was stretched out;
earth will not contain you, but you will see heaven as home when your fiery eye, o God, flashes like lightning.
- 8.264
7.66–67; Mt 3:16–17
Mk 1:9–11; Lk 3:21–22
Jn 1:31–32
7.84; Epiphanius, AdvHaer
30.13.7 (Gebion)
Lactantius, DivInst 4.15.3
Isa 11:1; Lactantius,
DivInst 4.13.21
- 1.204
1.356, etc.; 1.351; Lactantius,
DivInst 4.15.25; Mt 14:26
Mk 6:48; Jn 6:19
1.355; 8.205; Mt 11:5; Lk 7:22
1.357, etc.
7.31; Isa 11:1
Mt 24:27; Lk 17:24
- ProtJames 18
Rev 11:8
Lactantius, DivInst 4.18.20
8.303; 1.367; Mt 27:29,34
Mk 15:18,23; Lk 23:36
Ps 69:21
5.257
GPet 39–42
Rev 1:14; 19:12

a. The Sibyl asserts that Adam and Eve saw Christ.
Cf. John 8:56: "Your father Abraham rejoiced to think that he would see my Day; he saw it and was glad."

b. Gk. pōma for pneuma (Alexandre).

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES, BOOK 7

Introduction

Sibylline Oracles 7 is poorly preserved and at best seems to be a loosely structured collection of oracles.¹ The collection is framed by passages that deal with the Flood (7–15)² and by an extended eschatological tableau that predicts a conflagration, eternal punishment of sinners by fire, and the restoration of the earth (118–51). Much of the intervening section is taken up with oracles against various nations and places: verses 1–6, 16–23, 40–63, 96–117. These could very well have been derived from pagan oracles. The sequence of references is chaotic. So verses 40–50 refer to a war of Rome with the Parthians, which ended in the rout of the Romans, possibly at Carrhae. This is followed by an oracle on Troy (51–54). Later the Sibyl returns to Rome (vss. 108–11), but the reference is to the rise of Rome after the fall of Macedonia.

These oracles of destruction are interrupted by an eschatological passage in 24–39, which includes a conflagration (24–28) and a messianic prophecy (29–39), and by a passage on the baptism of Christ, followed by certain ritual prescriptions in 64–95. The latter passage contains the most distinctive doctrines of Sibylline Oracles 7. The book concludes with a confession of the Sibyl.³

Since the book is framed by passages on the Flood and conflagration it corresponds approximately to the second half of Sibylline Oracles 1 and 2 and, less directly, Sibylline Oracles 4. However, one important feature is missing. The periodization, which was the main structuring element in the earlier oracles, is completely lacking. The eschatology of in Sibylline Oracles 7 has close affinities with both Sibylline Oracles 4 and Sibylline Oracles 2.

There is nothing to suggest a Jewish substratum in the book. The hope in the house of David (29–39) does not envisage an earthly kingdom but the enthronement of Christ above the angels.

Date

Most scholars have dated Sibylline Oracles 7 to the second century,⁴ but there is no clear evidence. The latest possible date is provided by Lactantius.⁵ The vague and disordered historical prophecies provide no clear allusion later than the time of Christ. The second-century date has been proposed mainly on the basis of the alleged Jewish-Christian and gnostic character of the book. In fact, there is nothing in the book to enable us to fix its date with any precision within the second and third centuries.

Provenance

The provenance of the book is equally elusive. The interest in the baptism of Christ and the fact that Christ is introduced in an oracle against Coele-Syria and Phoenicia might suggest that Sibylline Oracles 7 was composed somewhere in Syria, but this is very far from conclusive.

Theological and historical importance

The book has been designated “gnostic” and “Jewish-Christian” by Geffcken and ¹ The main discussions of SibOr 7 are: Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, pp. 33–37; Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2141f.; Kurfess, Sibyllinische Weissagungen, pp. 313–16; and J. G. Gager, “Some Attempts to Label the Oracula Sibyllina. Book 7,” HTR 65 (1972) 91–97.

² This section is heavily dependent on SibOr 1. See Kurfess, “Oracula Sibyllina, I/II,” ZNW 40 (1941) 151–65.

³ Kurfess, “Die Sibylle über sich selbst,” Mnemosyne (1941) pp. 195–98.

⁴ Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 36; Kurfess, Sibyllinische Weissagungen, pp. 313f.; Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, col. 2142, prefers the third century.

⁵ Cf. Lactantius, DivInst 7.16.13; SibOr 7.123.

Kurfess, but both designations have been challenged by Gager.⁶ The evidence for "Jewish-Christianity" consists of the reference to the Davidic house in verses 29–39 and the condemnation in verses 134–35 of those who claim to be Hebrews when that is not their race. Neither of these references in a Christian context in the second or third century need necessarily imply affinity with Judaism. The house of David is summed up in an individual figure, presumably Christ, who is enthroned above the angels (32–35). The term "Hebrews" may well be used in a spiritual sense or merely be an allusion to Revelation 2:9; 3:9.⁷ Of course, the possibility that Sibylline Oracles 7 was produced by people who were Jews by race cannot be ruled out, but the evidence is inconclusive.

A number of unusual references in the book have gnostic parallels:⁸

1. On the towers in verse 71, compare Acts of Thomas 17–23, where Thomas builds a spiritual palace (cf. ShepHerm Vis 3.3.3, 4.1).
2. On Uranus as a mythological person (vs. 71) compare Epiphanius, AdvHaer 31.3.
3. On God's noble "mothers" (Hope, Piety, and Holiness, vss. 72–73) compare Irenaeus 1.5.2f., Epiphanius, AdvHaer 31.5 (also ShepHerm Vis 3:8).
4. On the "third lot" (vs. 139) compare Pistis Sophia (244–45).
5. On the "Ogdoad" (vs. 140) compare Epiphanius, AdvHaer 31.6.

These allusions are isolated in Sibylline Oracles 7 and, at least in the case of the Ogdoad, quite out of context. Gager is surely right in insisting that they do not make the book gnostic in any clearly defined sense. They show that this Sibyl, who drew freely on gentile oracles, was familiar with some gnostic terminology and could draw on it too. Ultimately we cannot identify Sibylline Oracles 7 with any known sect.

Yet the interest of the book is considerable if only as a specimen of the diversity within second- or third-century Christianity. The author is clearly Christian, however unusual his Christianity, and is also monotheistic, as his polemic against idolatry shows (vss. 14, 21, 129–31).⁹ Sacrifice is replaced by a strange rite commemorating the baptism of Christ (76–84). Water is sprinkled on fire and a dove released to heaven, which is said to symbolize the begetting of the Logos by the Father. Here, as in Sibylline Oracles 6, the begetting of Christ is closely associated, if not identified, with his baptism and also with a theophany by fire.

The ritualism of verses 76–84 is continued in verses 85–91, where a rite is prescribed for accepting supplicants. Strikingly, the Sibyl does not enjoin that anything be given to the beggars but only that a prayer be recited over them. Geffcken rightly draws attention to the implications of magic here,¹⁰ but they are not sufficient to associate the Sibyl with any particular sect.

The eschatology of Sibylline Oracles 7 is closely modeled on Sibylline Oracles 2¹¹ and Sibylline Oracles 4. The world will be destroyed by a conflagration, and the wicked will not simply perish but will be tortured by fire forever. The infernal punishment is somewhat more elaborate here than in Sibylline Oracles 4 but does not approach the vividness and detail of Sibylline Oracles 2. As in Sibylline Oracles 4 and Sibylline Oracles 2 the just are rewarded, not by a heavenly life, but by the resurrection and transformation of the earth. Sibylline Oracles 7 does not make an explicit connection between its ritual prescriptions and its eschatology. We should note that sacrifices are also rejected in Sibylline Oracles 4, and the importance attached to the baptism of Christ in book 7 also recalls the importance of baptism in book 4.

The final confession of the Sibyl (150–62) is obviously related to the concluding verses of Sibylline Oracles 2.

⁶ Gager, HTR 65 (1972) 91–97.

⁷ In Rev 2:9 the reference is probably to people who were Jews by race but whom the author did not consider heirs to the promises of Judaism.

⁸ See especially Kurfess, HSW, vol. 2, p. 707.

⁹ Gager's emphasis on the syncretism of the Sibyl must be qualified by this fact.

¹⁰ Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 34.

¹¹ On the priority of SibOr 2 to SibOr 7 see the introduction to books 1 and 2 and Kurfess, ZNW 40 (1941) 151–65.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES

Book 7

Destruction of various places

- O Rhodes, you wretched one, for you first will I weep. 3.444
You are first of cities, but you will perish first, widowed of men, completely failing to gain a livelihood.^a Delos, you will swim and be unstable on the water. 3.363; 4.92; 8.165
Herodotus 6.98
5 Cyprus, one day the wave of the gleaming sea will destroy you. 4.129,143; 5.450-51
Sicily, the fire that flares beneath you will burn you up. 4.81
* * *

The Flood

- This I say, the terrible and strange water of God. 1.183
* * *
A certain Noah came, a solitary fugitive from all men. 1.125, etc.
* * *
Earth will swim, mountains will swim, even the sky will swim. 1.193-96
10 All will be water and all things will perish in waters.
Winds will stop, and there will be a second age.
O Phrygia, you will shine forth first from the surface of the water,
but you, the same, first to impiety, will reject God;
pleasing to speechless idols, which will destroy you, 3.30,14, etc.
15 wretched one, as many years pursue their cyclic course.

Further oracles of destruction

- The unfortunate Ethiopians, also suffering piteous woes,^b 5.206 will be smitten with swords under the skin as they crouch in fear.
Civil strife among themselves will destroy sleek Egypt, 3.316 always concerned with corn blades, which the Nile 20 saturates with seven swimming streams. Thence, unexpectedly, men will drive out Apis, who is not a god to men.^c Alas, Laodicea, daring one, you will speak falsehood, 3.471, etc.
you who have never seen God. The wave of Lycus will dash over you.
The great God himself, the begetter,^d will make many stars 25 and will hang an axis through the middle of the sky and set up a great terror for men to behold on high, an immense^e pillar, with great fire, from which drops will destroy the evil races of men who have done harm. 2.240; Plato, Republic 10.616b

A messianic oracle

- For one day that time will come to pass when once for all men 30 will beseech God, but will not stop fruitless troubles. But all will be fulfilled through the house of David. 6.16
For God entrusted and gave a throne to him.^f 2Sam 7:16; Pss 132:11; 89:36
The angels will sleep under his feet—
Heb 1:4-14
those who cause fires to gleam and those who pour forth^g rivers, ShepHerm Vis 3.4.1

a. Gk. ateuktos for adeukēs (Geffcken).
b. Gk. id' algea for hyp' algea (Geffcken).
c. Apis was the sacred bull worshiped at Memphis.
d. Gk. ho gennētēs for gennētheis (Buresch).
e. Gk. kion' ametrēton for kiona metrēsas (cf. Kurfess, HSW, vol. 2, p. 721).

f. In view of the following vs., the reference is most probably to Christ rather than to David.
g. Gk. procheousi for phainousi (Kurfess). On the angels of the elements see further Strack-Billerbeck 3:818.

- 35 those who protect cities and those who send out storm winds.
 A difficult life will come upon many men,
 entering souls and changing hearts of men.
 But when a young shoot puts forth eyes from the root, which once distributed abundant nurture to all branches . . .^h
 * * *
- Rev 16:5; 1En 60:12–22;
 82:10–14; Jub 2:2
 2En 4–6; 19:4; 40:9
 6.16; Isa 11:1

Oracles against various nations

- 40 These things will further be in time. But when others rule over the tribe of warlike Persiansⁱ then there will be terrible weddings of brides because of lawless tribes.
 For mother will have her own son also as husband. Son will have intercourse with mother.^j Daughter, reclining on father, 53.390–91
 45 will sleep according to this savage custom. Later a Roman Ares will shine out on them from many a lance.
 They will mix much earth with human blood.
 A prince of Italy will then flee from the might of the spear.^k
 They will leave on the ground a flower engraved with gold, 50 which always bears an unholy sign when it goes forth.^l
 It will come to pass when Ilias, all evil and ill-fated, piteously drinks deep not marriage but the tomb, then brides will weep deeply, because they did not take thought of God but always made noise with cymbals and rattling sounds.
 55 Prophecy, Colophon, a great terrible fire hangs over you.
 Ill-wedded Thessaly, the earth will no longer see you, even as ashes, but you will sail alone, a fugitive from the mainland.
 Thus,^m O wretched one, you will be the mournful refuse of war,
 O one who falls to dogs and rivers and swords.
 60 O wretched Corinth, you will receive grievous war about yourself, miserable one, and you will perish at each other's hands.
 Tyre, you alone will receive so great a fate, for you will excel in small-mindedness, bereft of pious men.
 5.214
 5.455; 14.87

Baptism of Christ

- Ah, Coele-Syria, last possession of the Phoenician men
 3.492
 65 on whom the brine of Beirut lies belched up, wretched one, you did not recognize your God, whom once Jordan 6.4–5, etc.
 washed
 in its streams,ⁿ and the spirit flew like a dove.
 6.7
 He, before either earth or starry heaven, was sovereign Word, with the Father and Holy Spirit.
 Jn 1:1
 70 He put on flesh but quickly flew to his Father's home.
 Great heaven established three towers for him^o
 in which the noble mothers of God now live:
 Acts of Thomas 17–23
 ShepHerm Vis 3.3.3:
 3.4.1, etc.

h. Gk. klēmasin for tēn ktisin (Geffcken).

i. Gk. Persōn machimōn phu? (Rzach) for Persai machimōn phulon.

j. Gk. homilēsei for dēlēsei (Kurfess).

k. The most famous defeat of Romans by Parthians was at Carrhae in 53 B.C. The Roman leader on that occasion, Crassus, was killed after he had surrendered, but that detail may have been overlooked by the Sibyl. Alexandre, Excursus V, 385, sees here a reference to the campaign of Alexander Severus to recover Mesopotamia from the Parthians in A.D. 231. The success of that campaign is disputed but Mesopotamia was recovered. A reference to Carrhae seems more likely here.

l. Gk. ekpromolon to pheron g'aei sēmeion anagnon for ekpromolonta pheron g'aei sēmeion anagkēs (Geffcken). Cf. the Jewish reaction to Roman standards in War 2.9.2 (169–71); Ant 18.3.1 (55–59).

m. Gk. houtōs for autois (Alexandre).

n. Gk. prochoēsi for tritatoisi (Fabricius).

o. For Uranos as a mythological person cf. Epi-phanus, AdvHaer 31.3. See the Introduction to SibOr 7.

hope and piety and desirable holiness.

They do not rejoice in gold or silver but in reverential acts 75 of men, sacrifices, and most righteous thoughts.

Irenaeus 1.5.2; ShepHerm Vis
3.8; Epiphanius, AdvHaer 31.5

Ritual prescriptions

- You shall sacrifice to the immortal great noble God, not by melting a lump of incense in fire or striking a shaggy ram with a sacrificial knife, but with all who bear your blood, by taking a wild dove,^p 4.29-30
- 80 praying, and sending it off, while gazing to heaven.
You shall pour a libation of water on pure fire, crying out as follows:
"As the father begot you, the Word, so^q I have dispatched a bird, a word which is swift reporter of words, sprinkling with holy waters your baptism, through which you were revealed out 6.6
of fire.
- 85 You shall not shut the door when some other stranger comes, begging you to ward off poverty and hunger. Ps-Phoc 22f.
But take the head of this man, sprinkle it with water, Did 1:5; 4:5 and pray three times. Cry out to your God as follows:
'I do not desire wealth. I am poor and I have received a poor man.' 2.56,109
- 90 You, father, provider, deign to listen to both."^r
He will give to you when you pray. Mt 7:7

Fragmentary verses

- 91a Thereafter a man led away . . .
* * *
Do not afflict me, sacred and righteous holiness of God
(holy, indomitable, proved concerning the offspring . . .)^r
Father, check my wretched heart. I have looked to you, 95 to you, the undefiled, whom no hands made. 3.1-5, etc.
3.14, etc.
* * *

Oracles against various nations

- Sardinia, you who are powerful now, will be changed to ashes. 3.447
You will no longer be an island, when the tenth time comes. 2.15, etc.
Sailing on the waters they will seek you, who no longer exist.
Kingfishers will wail a piteous lament over you.
- 100 Rugged Mygdonia, beacon of the sea, difficult of exit, you will boast for an age; you will perish through ages, entirely, with a hot wind. You will rage with many ills.
Celtic land, upon your mountain beyond the Alps, which are difficult to cross, deep sand will make a mound over you entirely. You will no longer give tribute,
- 105 corn, or fodder. You will be desolate without people, forever frozen with icy crystals.
You will make amends for the outrage, impious one, which you had not noticed.
Sturdy-spirited Rome, after the Macedonian spear you will flash like lightning to Olympus. But God will make you 3.161,175 110 utterly unknown when you will seem in appearances 3.350, etc.
Oracle of Hystaspes,
DivInst 7.15.11

p. Gk. agriēn su peleian for agriēna peteina (Geffcken). The origins and extent of this ritual remain enigmatic.

q. Gk. hōs for pater (Geffcken).
r. This vs. is defective in the MSS.

to remain much better established. Then I will cry out to you as follows:
 "You who once gleamed brightly will lift your voice as you perish."

Further, Rome, I will again utter further things to you.

Now you, wretched Syria, will I bewail piteously.

13.119

- 115 Thebes of ill counsel, an evil sound will come upon you, with the voice of flutes. A trumpet will sound a bad sound for you. You will see the whole land perishing.

Cosmic destruction

Woe to you, wretched one, woe, evil-spirited sea.

You will all be devoured by fire, and you will destroy people with brine.

5.159

- 120 For there will be as much fire raging on the earth
 as water, and it will flow and destroy the whole earth.

2.196, etc.

It will burn up mountains, burn rivers and empty springs.

4.176;

The world will be chaos when men perish.

1En 52:6;

Then wretched men, burning badly, will look

IQH 3:29-33

- 125 on heaven, void of stars but overcome by fire.

Lactantius,
DivInst 7.16.3
5.531

They will not be destroyed quickly but, being burned in spirit
 by their perishing flesh for the years of ages forever, they will know, by dire tortures, that it is not possible to deceive the law of God. The earth, under constraint,

- 130 has perceived that whichever of the gods she dared to accept in falsehood on her altars was smoke, misty^t through the sky.

False prophets

But they will endure extreme toil who, for gain, will prophesy base things, augmenting an evil time;
 who putting on the shaggy hides of sheep

Mt 7:15

- 135 will falsely claim to be Hebrews, which is not their race.

Rev 2:9; 3:9

But speaking with words, making profit by woes, they will not change their life and will not persuade the righteous and those who propitiate God through the heart, most faithfully.

Restoration of the world

In the third lot of circling years, 140 of the first ogdoad, another world is seen again.

Pistis Sophia
244f.
Epiphanius,
AdvHaer 31.4

All will be night, long and unyielding, and then a terrible smell of brimstone will extend announcing murders, when those men perish
 by night and famine. Then he will beget a pure mind

3.60.462

- 145 of men and will set up your race as it was before for you.

4.182

No longer will anyone cut a deep furrow with a crooked plow;
 no oxen will plunge down the guiding iron.

Virgil, Eclogue
4.40-45

There will be no vine branches or ear of corn, but all, at once,
 will eat the dewy manna with white teeth.

1En 10:18-19; 2Bar 29:5-8
Ex 16

Confession of the Sibyl

- 150 God will then be with them, who will teach you, even as me, the sorrowful one. For what evils
 I formerly did, knowingly! and I performed many other things badly through neglect.

2.339-47

s. Gk. marmairousa for kai marmaran se t. Gk. achlunthenta for algèthenta (Wilamowitz).
 (Geffcken).

I have known innumerable beds, but no marriage concerned me.
Utterly faithless, I imposed a savage oath on all.

Ovid, Metamorphoses 14.142

155 I shut out those in need, and going among those who go forth to a shady^u glen, I did not observe the oracle of God.

Therefore fire has eaten and will devour me. For I myself will not live, but an evil time will destroy me, when men who pass by will fashion a tomb for me by the sea;

160 and they will destroy me with stones, for when I was speaking to the Father

he communicated to me the dear son.^v May you stone me! Stone me all of you!

For thus will I live and fix my eyes on heaven.

u. Gk. euskion for ikelon (Geffcken).

v. Gk. epi moi gar patri lalouse(i) huia philon

metedōke; so φ, except that it reads lalousa not lalouse(i).

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES, BOOK 8

Introduction

The eighth book is clearly composite and falls obviously into two quite different sections.¹ Verses 1–216 are mainly concerned with political prophecies, especially directed against Rome. Verses 217–500, by contrast, are largely taken up with Christology, the incarnation, and the praises of God. The political concerns that dominated the first half of the book are completely lacking in the second.

Within each half of the book there are a number of loosely structured oracles. In verses 1–216 we find:

1–16 refer to the fall of the tower of Babylon and repeat substantially the list of kingdoms found in Sibylline Oracles 3.159–61.

There follows (17–36) an admonition against greed. Next we find a series of oracles against Rome:

37–49 attack Rome for idolatry.

50–72 present an attack on Hadrian and expect the return of Nero.

73–130 describe the woes to come upon Rome and the equality of all in the eschatological time.

131–38 predict power and stability for the fifteenth king of Egypt in the sixth generation of Latin kings—i.e. Hadrian.²

139–50 again pick up the Nero legend.

151–59 present yet another prophecy of the return of Nero.

160–68 consist of oracles against various gentile nations.

169–93 describe eschatological upheavals, which, in part at least (vs. 171), have special relevance for Rome.

194–216 relate the eschatological reign of a woman in the tenth generation.

Geffcken ascribes three passages to a pagan Sibyl. He rightly notes that verses 131–38, which are favorable to Hadrian, are incompatible with verses 50–72 and are the work of an Egyptian Sibyllist (Hadrian is called the fifteenth king of Egypt). This Sibyllist may have been either a pagan or a Christian, but certainly not a Jew. The oracle was inserted here to counteract or correct the attack on Hadrian in the earlier passage. Geffcken also ascribes verses 160–68 to a pagan Sibyl. These are typical Sibylline verses, the clichés of the genre. They could indeed be taken over from a pagan Sibyl but could just as easily have been composed by a Jew or Christian. In fact, several of the verses seem to be taken from, or modeled on, earlier Jewish Sibyls—160 from Sibylline Oracles 4.101; 162 from 5.17; 164, cf. 3.371; 165f. from 3.363f. A third passage that Geffcken ascribes to a pagan Sibyl is the Nero oracle in verses 151–59. Geffcken rightly notes that Nero is here presented in historical terms with little mythological elaboration.³ However, this is equally true of the other Nero passages in Sibylline Oracles 8 and does not necessarily require gentile authorship.

In the rest of the first half of the book Geffcken distinguishes the work of two Christian authors, one in verses 1–49 and 73–130, the other in 50–72, 139–50, 169–216, 337–58. This enables him to unite the two Nero passages (50–72 and 139–50), but the differences which he alleges between the two sets of oracles are exceedingly vague. The persistent interest in Rome rather suggests that the entire first half of the book, except for verses 131–38, is a unified work.

Geffcken assumes that all this material is Christian.⁴ The only evidence to support this view consists of a few random parallels with Christian apologists. Rzach prefers to see the work as Jewish, while admitting that the eschatological reign of the woman (vss. 194–216)

¹ The most important discussions are those of Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, pp. 38–46 and Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2142–46. Also Kurfess, Sibyllinische Weissagungen, p. 316–33.

² See Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 39.

³ Ibid., p. 39. See also his "Studien zur älteren Nerossage," Nachrichten der Göttingen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften (1899) 433.

⁴ Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 44. So also Bousset, Real-Encyclopedie, p. 277.

could be Christian, under the influence of Revelation 17–18 and 21.⁵ The eschatological woman in Sibylline Oracles 8 could equally well be modeled on the oracle about Cleopatra in Sibylline Oracles 3.75–92, which was written by a Jew, but verses 196f., which refer to “the sacred child” who “destroys the malignant abyss,” seem clearly to presuppose the New Testament apocalypse. The eschatological passage in verses 205–8 also probably depends on Matthew 11:5 or alternatively on a Christian passage in Sibylline Oracles 1.353–55. However, the indications of Christian origin are confined to the eschatological passage in 194–216.

Jewish authorship of the remainder of the first section of Sibylline Oracles 8 is supported by the animosity toward Hadrian in verses 50–59, although no explicit reference is made to the Jewish revolt. More significant is the fact that Nero in verse 141 is said to attack specifically “the nation of the Hebrews.” This reference excludes gentile authorship, though not necessarily Christian. Since Sibylline Oracles 8.1–193 contains nothing that is specifically either Jewish or Christian, the question of authorship cannot be decisively settled.⁶ However, in view of the prominence of Christology in the rest of the book and in the Christian Sibylline Oracles in general, the lack of Christian elements may be a significant indication of non-Christian authorship.

We may conclude then that a slight balance of probability favors the Jewish authorship of Sibylline Oracles 8:1–216, with the exception of the gentile oracle in verses 131–38 and the Christian eschatological section in 194–216.

Verses 217–500

The second half of the book consists again of a collection of oracles, although separate authorship is not necessarily implied. We find:

- 217–50: an acrostic poem that spells out with the initials of each line the words Iēsous Christos Theou Huios Sōtēr Stauros, “Jesus Christ, Son of God, Savior, Cross.”⁷
- 251–336: a long poem on Christ, including a sketch of his earthly career.
- 337–58: a description of eschatological disturbances.
- 359–428: a speech of God that concentrates on denunciation of idolatry.
- 429–55: a hymn in praise of God.
- 456–79: the incarnation.
- 480–500 conclude the book with ethical and ritual exhortation.

Geffcken wished to ascribe the eschatological section in verses 337–58 to the author of the first half of the book.⁸ However, there is no positive reason for this attribution. Since a number of verses in this passage recall the Christian Sibylline Oracles 2, especially in the punishment of the damned (vss. 350–58),⁹ it should be thought to belong with the clearly Christian second half of the book.

Date

The date of verses 1–216 can be fixed with some precision. Verses 65–74 envisage the return of Nero during the reign of Marcus Aurelius. Therefore this oracle must have been written before the death of that emperor in A.D. 180. Verses 148f. say that Rome will have completed 948 years before it is destroyed. Strictly speaking, that should point to a date of A.D. 195. However, given that this destruction of Rome is still in the future, and that Sibylline chronology is never exact,¹⁰ this statement is quite compatible with a date about A.D. 175.

The latest possible date for the second half of the book is provided by Lactantius, who quotes extensively from the entire book. There is no closer indication of date. Geffcken

⁵ Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, col. 2144.

⁶ SibOr 8.205–7 might seem to depend on SibOr 1.353–55 or Mt 11:5 and therefore be Christian, but this has been disputed by Kurfess, ZNW 40 (1941) 159. None of the alleged cases of dependence on the NT cited by H. Fuchs, Geistige Widerstand, p. 79, are necessarily so.

⁷ The first five initials, of course, spell the famous Christian cryptogram Ichthus, “fish.”

⁸ Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 41.

⁹ See Geffcken, Die Oracula Sibyllina, pp. 164f.

¹⁰ See Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 40.

notes similarity of style throughout the book and suggests that there was no great lapse of time between the various parts.¹¹

Provenance

There is nothing to indicate the place of origin of Sibylline Oracles 8. Verses 131–38 were obviously written in Egypt (vs. 138), but the rest of the work could have been written in any part of the Near East that was subject to Rome.

Historical and theological importance

Sibylline Oracles 8.1–216 is a striking example of anti-Roman prophecy, which surpasses even Sibylline Oracles 5 in vehemence. The explicit basis for this polemic is not, as we might expect, Rome's violation of the sovereignty of any particular people (even the Jews) but rather her greed and social injustice (vss. 18–36). In this respect, and also in the opposition of Rome and Asia (e.g. vs. 72), Sibylline Oracles 8 continues the tradition of Sibylline Oracles 3.350–80. Rome is also attacked for idolatry (vss. 43–49), but the sexual polemic of the earlier Sibylline Oracles is missing. The fate of Rome is that she will be cast down to the underworld, where she will be punished in fire and brimstone (102). This punishment is evidently modeled on the individual tortures described, for example, in Sibylline Oracles 2.305. It is followed by a description of Hades, as the place where all are equal, recalling the description of Sheol in Job 3:17–19. There are references to the resurrection of the dead in verses 83 and 170, but this section of Sibylline Oracles 8 shows little interest in the afterlife. The main theme is the coming destruction of Rome and the removal of its wickedness.

The acrostic poem in verses 217–50 is the only example of this phenomenon in the Sibylline Oracles, although acrostics were considered criteria for the authenticity of pagan Sibylline Oracles.¹² The use of acrostics here reflects the desire of the Christian author to present his work as a gentile oracle. Christian forgeries and interpolations of this sort aroused bitter disputes in apologetic debates.¹³

The remainder of the Christian oracles contain no striking doctrinal peculiarities. There is a polemic against idolatry in verses 377–98. Verses 404–8 recommend almsgiving and charity as a substitute for sacrifice. In verses 480–500 the commandments to love God and neighbor are repeated, and sacrifices are replaced by hymns and pure minds.

Sibylline Oracles 8 makes extensive use of the first five Sibylline books. The oracles against Rome are especially close to the tradition of Sibylline Oracles 3.350–80 and Sibylline Oracles 5. They also find close parallels in the Carmen apologeticum of Commodian, a Christian apologist of the fifth century A.D.¹⁴

¹¹ Ibid., p. 44.

¹² Cicero, De divinatione 2.54, 111, 112. SibOr 11 claims to give an acrostic but does not.

¹³ See especially Origen, Contra Celsum 7.53.

¹⁴ Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 40; Bousset, Antichrist Legend, pp. 79–81; Fuchs, Geistige Widerstand, p. 79.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES

Book 8

Prophecy of world kingdoms and destruction

As the great wrath comes upon the disobedient world I show forth the wrath of God to the last age, prophesying to all men, city by city. From the time when the tower fell and the tongues of men	Lactantius, De ira Dei 23.3 1Thes 1:10; Mt 3:7; Lk 3:7 3.811
5 were divided into many dialects of mortals, first the Egyptian kingdom, then that of the Persians, Medes, Ethiopians, and Assyrian Babylon,	3.105; Gen 11:1-9 3.159-61; 4.49-104
then that of Macedonia, which boasted in great arrogance, then, fifth, the famous lawless kingdom of the Italians ^a 10 last of all, will show many evils to all men and will expend the toils of the men of all the earth. It will lead untiring kings of nations to the west and will legislate for peoples and subdue all things. The mills of God grind fine flour, though late. ^b
15 Then fire will destroy everything and reduce to fine dust the heads of lofty mountains and of all flesh.	2.196; 4.173; 7.120, etc. 7.122, etc.

Admonition against greed

The beginning of evils for all will be love of gain and folly for there will be a desire for deceitful gold and silver. For there is nothing that mortals preferred to these,	2.111, etc.; 1Tim 6:10
20 not the light of the sun, not heaven nor sea nor the broad earth whence everything grows nor God who gives everything, begetter of all. Nor did they prefer faith and piety to these. It is the source of impiety and forerunner of disorder,
25 deviser of wars, hostile troubler of peace which alienates parents from their children and children from their parents. Even marriage will never be wholly honored apart from gold. Earth will have boundaries and all the sea guards, craftily divided among those who have gold.
30 As if wishing to have the much-nurturing earth forever they will ravage the poor, so that they themselves may acquire additional land and subject them by imposture. If the huge earth did not have its throne far from starry heaven, men would not have equal light 35 but it would be marketed for gold and would belong to the rich, and God would have prepared another world for beggars.

Oracle against Rome

One day, proud Rome, there will come upon you from above an equal heavenly affliction, and you will first bend the neck and be razed to the ground, and fire will consume you, altogether	3.350, etc.
---	-------------

a. Babylon is presumably distinguished from the Persian Empire but placed after it in chronological sequence. The Roman Empire is also fifth in SibOr 4, but there the number is not attached to it and the reference belongs to the second, redactional, stage of the oracle.

b. An old proverb, found in a number of Gk. sources.

- 40 laid low on your floors, and wealth will perish
and wolves and foxes will dwell in your foundations. Isa 34:11–15
Then you will be utterly desolate, as if you had never been. 3.310;
Where then will be the Palladium?^c What sort of God will save you? 2Bar 31:5
One of gold, or stone or bronze? Or where then will be your 65 senatorial decrees? Where the race of Rhea or Cronos or Zeus and of all those whom you revered? 3.122, 547–48, Lifeless demons, likenesses of dead corpses, 554; 8:393;
whose tombs ill-fated Crete will have as boast,^d Lactantius, worshiping senseless corpses with ritual enthronements. DivInst 1.11.47

Hadrian

- 50 But when, luxurious one, you have had fifteen kings 8.138 who enslaved the world from east to west, there will be a gray-haired prince with the name of a nearby sea,^e 5.47; 12.164 inspecting the world with polluted foot,^f giving gifts.
Having abundant gold, he will also gather more 55 silver from his enemies and strip and undo them. 12.169
He will participate in all the mysteries of magic shrines.^g
He will display a child as god,^h and undo all objects of reverence.
From the beginning he will open up the mysteries of error to all.
Then will be a woeful time, because “the woeful” himself will perish.
60 One day the people will say, “Your great power, o city, will fall,” knowing that the fated evil day is immediately at hand.
Then fathers and infant children will mourn together,
regarding your most piteous fate.
Mournful, they will raise dirges by the banks of Tiber.
65 After him, three will ruleⁱ who have the last day of all, 5.51; 12.176 fulfilling the name of the heavenly God, whose power is both now and for all ages.

The return of Nero in the time of Marcus Aurelius

- One, an old man,^j will control dominions far and wide, a most piteous king, who will shut up and guard all the wealth 70 of the world in his home, so that when the blazing matricidal exile returns from the ends of the earth
he will give these things to all and award great wealth to Asia.^k 4.119–24;
138–39, etc.
3.350, etc.

Woes to come upon Rome

- Then you will mourn, doffing the garment^l of leaders, with its broad purple border, and wearing a garment of mourning.
75 O proud queen, offspring of Latin Rome. 3.356, etc.
No longer will you have the fame of your pride

c. The Palladium was a sacred image of Pallas Athene, said to have been brought from Troy and kept in the temple of Vesta. It was believed to protect the city and was credited with saving Rome from the Gauls in 390 B.C.

d. Crete laid claim not only to the cave where Zeus was hidden as a child but also to his grave.

e. Contrast the negative presentation of Hadrian here with the positive attitude of SibOr 5.47f. and SibOr 8.131–38. SibOr 12.164–75 is also basically positive.

f. Hadrian toured the provinces of the empire in the years A.D. 120–31.

g. Hadrian was one of several emperors initiated at Eleusis, and oriental religions flourished in his reign.

h. Antinous, the favorite of Hadrian, was deified upon his death, by drowning, in Egypt in A.D. 130.

i. See SibOr 5, n. t. The three are Lucius Verus, Antoninus Pius, and Marcus Aurelius.

j. Marcus Aurelius.

k. On the contrast between East and West, Asia and Europe, see the Introduction to SibOr 3 on vss. 350–55.

l. Gk. zōsma for phōs (Geffcken).

- nor will you ever be lifted up, ill-fated one, but you will be laid low.
 For the glory of the eagle-bearing legions will also fall.
 Where then is your strength? What sort of land will be an ally 80 which has been lawlessly enslaved by your vain thoughts?
 For then there will be confusion of all the land of mortals, when the universal ruler himself comes and judges on the tribunal
 the souls of the living and dead, and the whole world.
 Neither will parents be friendly to children nor children to parents 85 because of impiety and affliction beyond hope.
 Then you will have gnashing of teeth and scattering and capture when the fall of cities comes and yawning gaps in the earth.
 When the purple dragon comes on the waves,^m pregnant with a host, and will nurture your children 90 when famine and civil war are at hand;
 then the end of the world and the last day is near,
 and the judgment of the immortal God for the approved elect.
 First there will be implacable wrath of Romans.
 A bloodthirsty time, and wretched life will come.
 95 Woe to you, Italian land, great savage nation.
 You did not perceive whence you came, naked and unworthy to the light of the sun, so that you might go again naked to the same place and later come to judgment
 because you judge unjustly . . .
 100 By gigantic hands, alone in the whole world, you will come from a height and dwell under the earth
 in naphtha and asphalt and brimstone and much fire, and you will disappear and will be blazing dust forever. Everyone who looks will hear a mournful 105 great bellowing from Hades and gnashing of teeth
 as you strike your godless breast with your hands.
 Night is equal to all at once, to those who have wealth and to beggars. Coming naked from the earth, going naked again to the earth, they cease from life, having completed their time.

Lancantius, DivInsr 7.24.1;
 2.218, 239–43, etc.; Dan 7:9– 10

1En 56:7; 99:5; 100:2
 Micah 7:6; Mt 10:35–36
 Lk 12:53

8.105, 125; Mt 8:12; Lk 13:28

Rev 12:3; 13:1

8.108;
 Job 1:21;
 Eccl 5:14;
 Rev 17:16

5.178;
 Isa 14:15

Rev 19:20;
 20:10; 21:8

8.86; 2.203, etc.
 2.302

8.97, etc.

The equality of all in the eschatological time

- 110 No one is slave there, no lord, no tyrant,ⁿ no kings, no leaders who are very arrogant, no forensic rhetoricians, no ruler judging for money.
 They do not pour blood on altars in libations of sacrifices.
 No drum sounds, no cymbal, 115 no flute of many holes, which has a sound that damages the heart, no pipe, which bears an imitation of the crooked serpent,
 no savage-sounding trumpet, herald of wars,
 none who are drunk in lawless revels or dances,
 no sound of the lyre, no evil-working device, 120 no strife, no anger, in its diverse kinds; nor will there be a knife beside the dead, but the age will be common to all.
 * * *
 Key-bearer of the great enclosure on the tribunal of God . . . 2.227
 * * *

m. The dragon and the sea are symbols of chaos in Near Eastern religion, deriving from Yamm in Ugaritic myth, Tiamat in Babylonian myth, etc. The dragon in Rev 12 and beast from the sea in Rev 13 provide the most obvious parallels for the eschatological use of this symbolism (but cf. Isa 27:1; Dan 7f.). It is not clear whether any more specific reference is intended here. It is possible that the returning Nero is here identified with the dragon, as he is identified with the beast in Rev 13.

n. Originally a Stoic notion—e.g. Seneca, Consolatio ad Marciam 26.4.

Destruction of Rome

- and with statues of gold and silver and stone,^o 3.58 be beautiful, so that you may come to a bitter day, 3.59
 125 to see your punishment first, Rome, and the gnashing of teeth. 8.86, etc.
 No longer will Syrian, Greek, or foreigner, or any other nation, place their neck under your yoke of slavery.
 You will be utterly ravaged and destroyed for what you did.
 Groaning in panic, you will give until you have repaid all, 3.350–55, etc.;
 130 and you will be a triumph-spectacle to the world and a reproach of all. 12.227

An encomium on Hadrian

- Then the sixth generation of Latin kings 1.284
 will complete its last life and abandon the scepters.
 Another king of the same race will reign^p who will rule the whole earth and gain sway over dominions.
 135 He will rule by the counsels of the great God without contamination, his children and the race of his unshaken children.
 For thus it is prophesied, in the cyclic course of time, whenever there will have been fifteen kings of Egypt.^q 8.50

The return of Nero

- Then when comes the time of the Phoenix, of the fifth period . . .
 * * *
 140 he will come to ravage the race of peoples, undistinguished tribes, 4.119, etc.: 138, the nation of the Hebrews. Then Ares^r will take Ares captive. etc.
 He himself will destroy the overbearing threat of the Romans.^s 5.361
 For the empire of Rome, which then flourished, has perished, the ancient queen over the surrounding cities.
 145 No longer will the plain of luxuriant Rome be victorious when he comes from Asia, conquering with Ares.
 Having done all these things, he will come to the trampled town.
 You will fulfill thrice three hundred and forty-eight years^t when an evil violent fate 150 will come upon you fulfilling your name. 13.46–47;
 1.141, etc.

Another oracle on the return of Nero

- Alas for me, thrice-wretched one, when will I see that day, 3.55 destructive indeed to you,^v Rome, and especially to all Latins?
 Celebrate, if you wish, the man of secret birth, 5.140 riding a Trojan chariot from the land of Asia 155 with the spirit of fire. But when he cuts through the isthmus 5.139, etc.
 glancing about, going against everyone, having crossed the sea, then dark blood will pursue the great beast.

o. Alexandre would fill the lacuna between 123 and 124 by inserting SibOr 3.57: "Yet just for the present, be founded, cities, all be embellished."

p. The reference is to Hadrian. Contrast SibOr 8.50–72 and see the Introduction to SibOr 8.

q. I.e. Roman kings, beginning with Julius Caesar and counting Galba, Otho, and Vitellius.

r. The reference to the fifth period must be seen in the context of the division of history into ten periods, divided by the Flood in the fifth, which underlies SibOr 1 and 2 and SibOr 4. The reference here is to the fifth period after the Flood, when the conflagration will take place, and mankind will rise again from the ashes—cf. SibOr 4.179–82.

s. The god of war.

t. Cf. Rev 17:16 where the beast and its horns reject the prostitute and devour her. On the complex relations between the returned Nero and Rome see further Bousset, The Antichrist Legend, pp. 81f.

u. Strictly speaking this should give the date A.D. 195, but the Sibyl's chronology is less than reliable. See the Introduction to SibOr 8.

v. Gk. soi g'ooloon for seio pote (Rzach).

The hound pursued the lion that was destroying the herdsmen. 14.17
They will take away dominion, and he will pass over to Hades.

Oracles against various nations

- 160 A final but greatest evil will come upon the Rhodians, 4.101
and for the Thebans evil captivity awaits thereafter. 4.89
Egypt will be destroyed by the wickedness of its rulers. 5.17 (Also, like the men who afterward fled dire destruction, thrice happy was the man, and four times blessed.)^w 3.371
- 165 Rome will be a street and Delos inconspicuous 3.363–64 and Samos sand . . .
Then later, also, evil will come upon the Persians.
In return for overbearing pride, all arrogance will be destroyed.

Eschatological upheavals

- Then a holy prince^x will gain control of the scepters of the whole world 3.49 for all ages, he who raised the dead.
- 170 The Most High will lead three, then, in piteous fate at Rome,^y 3.52 and all men will perish in their own dwellings.
But they will not be persuaded, which would be much better.
But whenever there rises upon all the evil day 175 of famine and pestilence, hard to bear, and tumult, 2.23, etc.
and then again the former wretched lord^z will assemble the council and deliberate how he will destroy^{a2} . . .
* * *
- The withered will bloom, appearing together with leaves. Lactantius,
The floor of heaven will rain^{b2} on the hard rock DivInst 7.16.6
- 180 shower and flame and many breezes on the earth and an abundance of poisonous seeds throughout the whole earth.
But they will act again with shameless spirit, not fearing the wrath of God or of men, 1.175–79
abandoning modesty, desiring shamelessness,
185 tyrants in fickleness and violent sinners, liars, lovers of faithlessness, evildoers, truthful in nothing, 3.36–40 breakers of faith, ingenious at pouring out slander.
They will not have surfeit of wealth, but shamelessly they will collect more. Under the sway of tyrants they will perish.
- 190 All the stars will fall directly into the sea, 2.202, etc.; 5.530; 8.341
all in turn,^{c2} and men will call a shining comet Commodian, Carmen
"the star," a sign of much impending toil, apologeticum 1011 war, and slaughter. 3.334; Nechepso-Petosiris
May I not be alive when the abominable woman^{d2} reigns, (ed. Riess), p. 345
3.75; Rev 17; 8.200

w. Geffcken puts these vss. in parentheses because of their incoherence.

x. Geffcken and Kurfess identify this figure as Elijah and cite Commodian, Carmen apologeticum 839, 850, as a parallel. However, in the context here the more natural interpretation is to identify him as God himself.

y. The precise reference of the "three" is not possible to determine. The verse is clearly modeled on SibOr 3.52, where the reference was to the second triumvirate. We may also compare the three heads of the eagle in 4Ezra 11–12. Commodian, Carmen apologeticum 871, says that the returned Nero adopts two Caesars, and in 911 the Antichrist slays three kings. We may conclude that three Romans figure widely in apocalyptic traditions, but their role and precise reference may vary.

z. Nero redivivus. Cf. Commodian, Carmen apologeticum 910.

a2. Geffcken supposes that the passage which has been lost here narrated Elijah's murder by Nero (cf. Commodian, 858). There is, however, no clear reference to Elijah here. Nero's victims may have been diverse.

b2. Gk. brexei for deixei (Geffcken).

c2. Gk. panta mala hexeiēs atar for polla men hexēs astra (Rzach).

d2. This is not a reference to a historical figure but to an eschatological one modeled on the whore of Babylon of Rev 17 or the widow of SibOr 3.75. For the contrast between this woman and "heavenly grace" cf. the contrasts between Babylon in Rev 18

- 195 but rather then, when heavenly grace comes to rule, and whenever the sacred child, the destroyer^{e2} of all,
destroys the malignant abyss with bonds, opening it up.
Suddenly a wooden house will cover men round about.
But when the tenth generation is within the house of Hades, 200 thereafter the power of the female will be great. God himself will increase many evils for her when she is crowned and receives royal honor. The entire year will be an age turned upside down.^{f2}
The sun, seeing dimly,^{g2} shines at night.
Stars will leave the vault of heaven. A raging storm with many a hurricane 205 will lay the earth desolate. There will be a resurrection of the dead and most swift racing of the lame, and the deaf will hear and blind will see, those who cannot speak will speak, and life and wealth will be common to all.
The earth will equally belong to all, not divided 210 by walls or fences, and will then bear more abundant fruits.
It will give fountains of sweet wine and white milk and honey . . .
* * *
and judgment of the immortal God . . .
but when God changes the times . . .
215 making winter summer, then all the oracles are fulfilled.
But when the world perished . . .

Rev 12:5
Rev 20:2-3
11.135;
1.132-33
2.15, etc.
8.194, etc.
3.801, etc. 4Ezra 5:4

8.190, etc.
1.353-55: Mt
11:5; Lactantius,
DivInst 4.15.15

2.318-21

5.282f.;
3.620-23;
Virgil, Eclogue
4.18-22; ApPaul
25f.
2.157; 14.298a,
299; Lactantius,
DivInst 7.16.9

Acrostic poem on the judgment

Jesus Christ, son of God, savior, cross.^{h2}

- The earth will sweat when there will be a sign of judgment.
A king will come from heaven who is to judge
all flesh and the whole world forever when he comes.
220 Both faithful and faithless men will see God
the Most High with the holy ones at the end of time.
He will judge the souls of flesh-bearing men on the tribunal when the whole world becomes barren land and thorns.
Men will throw away idols and all wealth.
225 Fire will burn up land, heaven, and sea, pursuing the hunt, and will break the gates of the confines of Hades.
Then all the flesh of the dead, of the holy ones, will come to the free light. The fire will torture the lawless forever.
Whatever one did secretly, he will then say everything, 230 for God will open dark breasts with lights.
A lament will rise from all and gnashing of teeth.
The light of the sun will be eclipsed and the troupes of stars.
He will roll up heaven. The light of the moon will perish.
He will elevate ravines, and destroy the heights of hills.
235 No longer will mournful height appear among men.
Mountains will be equal to plains, and all the sea

5.108, etc.

8.82; 2.218,
239-43, etc.

3.606; Isa 2:18; Lactantius,
DivInst 7.19.9
2.196, etc.; 4.176
2.227

2.291f.

2.305; 8.350; Mt 8:12; 13:42
Lk 13:28
4.57, etc.

3.82; Isa 34:4; Rev 6:12-14
Isa 40:4; AsMos 10:4; 1En 1:6

and the New Jerusalem in Rev 21, and between Rome and the despoina in SibOr 3.356-62.

e2. Gk. delêmon' for dolophôn. The reference is to the "iron scepter" of Rev 12:5 and the subsequent destructive role of the Messiah in Rev 19-21. Contrast the peaceful rule of the child in Virgil, Eclogue 4.11-17.

f2. Gk. huptios for hêpios (Geffcken).

g2. Gk. amaura blepôn for auchmêra trechôn

(Rzach).

h2. This line is not a vs., but is the title for the following vs. (218-50), which form an acrostic in Gk. The first letters of the lines spell out Iêsous Chreistos (H)uïos Sôtêr Stauros. It is not possible to reproduce the acrostic in English. A Lat. rendering is found in Augustine's De civitate Dei 18.23. See also Constantine's "Speech to the Saints," 18-19.

- will no longer bear voyage. For earth will then be parched with its springs. Bubbling rivers will fail. 8.348; 5.447f.
- A trumpet from heaven will issue a most mournful sound, wailing for the defilement of limbs and the woes of the world. 1Thes 4:16;
Mt 24:31;
1Cor 15:52
- The gaping earth will then show the abyss of the nether world.
All will come to the tribunal of God the king. Lactantius,
DivInst 7.20.3
2.218,243; 8.82, etc.
- A river of fire and brimstone will flow from heaven. 2.196, etc.
- There will then be a sign for all men, a most clear seal:ⁱ²
- the wood among the faithful, the desired horn,
the life of pious men, but the scandal of the world, illuminating the elect with waters in twelve streams.^{j2} Lk 1:68
- An iron shepherd's rod will prevail. 1Cor 1:17-25; Rom 9:33
1Pet 2:6-8
- This is our God, now proclaimed in acrostics, Ps 2:9; Rev 2:27; 12:5; 19:15
- the king, the immortal savior, who suffered for us.

A poem on Christ

- Moses prefigured him, stretching out his holy arms, conquering Amalek by faith so that the people might know that he is elect and precious with God his father, the staff of David and the stone he promised. Ex 17:11;
EpBar 12:2
- The one who has believed in him will have eternal life. Isa 11:1; 1Pet 2:6
Jn 3:36
- For he will come to creation not in glory, but as a man, pitiable, without honor or form, so that he might give hope to the pitiable. Isa 53:2-3;
Lactantius,
DivInst 4.16.17
- He will give form to perishable flesh and heavenly faith to the faithless,
and he will fashion the original man, formed by the holy hands of God, Rom 5:15; 1Cor 15:45; Justin, Cohortatio ad Graecos 38:1
- whom the snake craftily caused to err, to go to the fate of death and receive knowledge of good and evil, so as to abandon God and serve mortal customs. Gen 3:1-13; 1.40
- For the universal ruler took him into his counsel first of all from the beginning and said, "Let us both, child, make mortal tribes, copying our likeness. 8.439f.; ShepHerm Sim
9.12.2
- Now I with my hands, then you with a word, will tend our form so that we may produce a common construct."
Mindful therefore of this resolution, he will come to creation bearing a corresponding copy to the holy virgin, 8.442;
Gen 1:26
- illuminating by water, at the same time through the hands of elders, doing all with a word, healing every disease. 8.247; Jn 4:1f.
- He will stop the winds with a word. He will calm the raging sea by walking on it with feet of peace and with faith. Lactantius, DivInst 4.15.9
Mt 15:30f.; 1.356, etc.
Mk 4:35-41;
6:48-52; Jn 6:18-21
Lactantius, DivInst 4.15.24
1.357-59, etc.
- From five loaves and a fish of the sea
he will satisfy five thousand men in the desert, and taking all the leftover fragments,
he will fill twelve baskets for the hope of the peoples.
- He will call on the souls of the blessed; he will love the wretched, who will do good in return for evil when they are mocked, beaten, and whipped, desiring poverty.
- Perceiving everything and seeing everything and listening to everything, he will observe the heart and lay it bare for trial.
- He himself is the hearing and mind and sight and reason

i2. Cf. the seven seals in Rev 6.

j2. The language of illumination is commonly used for baptism from the second half of the 2nd cent. A.D., e.g. Justin, Apologies 1.61.14.

- 285 of all, who creates forms, to whom everything is subject,
 who saves the dead and cures every disease.
 Later he will come into the hands of lawless and faithless men,^{k2} and they will give blows to God with unholy hands and poisonous spittings with polluted mouths. 1.366
- 290 Then he will stretch out his back and give it to the whips
 (for he will hand over to the world the holy virgin).^{l2} Isa 50:6
 Beaten, he will be silent, lest anyone recognize Jn 19:26f.
 who he is, whose son, and whence he came, so that he may speak to the dead; Lactantius,
DivInst 4.18.17
- and he will wear the crown of thorns. For, made of thorns, 1.373
- 295 the crown of chosen men is an eternal delight.
 They will stab his sides with a reed on account of their law.
 For by winds shaken by another wind Mt 11:7
 the inclinations^{m2} of the soul are turned from wrath and change.
 But when all these things of which I have spoken are fulfilled, 300 then for him every law will be dissolved which from the beginning was given in teachings to men, on account of a disobedient people. Lactantius, DivInst 4.17.4
 Rom 7:1-6
- He will stretch out his hands and measure the entire world. 1.372
 They gave him gall for food and vinegar to drink. 1.367; Ps 69:21
 They will show forth this table of inhospitality.
- 305 The veil of the Temple will be rent, and in midday 1.375f.. etc.
 there will be dark monstrous night for three hours.
 For no longer with secret law and temple must one serve the phantoms of the world. That which had been hidden was again made manifest
 when the eternal sovereign came down to earth.
- 310 He will come to Hades announcing hope for all 1.378; 1Pet 3:19: 4:6
 the holy ones, the end of ages and last day, and he will complete the fate of death when he has slept the third day.
 And then, returning from the dead, he will come to light, first of the resurrection, showing a beginning to the elect, 1Cor 15:20
- 315 having washed off their former vices with the waters of an immortal spring, so that, born from above, Jn 3:3.7
 they may no longer serve the lawless customs of the world.
 First, then, the Lord was seen clearly by his own, incarnate as he was before, and he will show in hands and feet
- 320 four marks fixed in his own limbs, Jn 20:27
 east and west and south and north. 3.26
 For so many kingdoms of the world will accomplish the unlawful blameworthy action as our archetype.
 Rejoice, holy daughter Sion, who have suffered much. 3.785
- 325 Your king himself comes in, mounted on a foal, appearing gentle to all so that he may lift our yoke of slavery, hard to bear, which lies on our neck and undo the godless ordinances and constraining bonds.
 Know that he is your God, as he is son of God. Jn 12:15; Mt 21:5; Zech 9:9
 Mt 11:29
- 330 Honor him and keep him in your heart
 and love him from your soul and bear his name.
 Set aside the former (customs) and wash from his blood,
 for he is not propitiated by your laments or prayers.
 Since he is imperishable he pays no attention to perishable sacrifices, 4.29f.; 7.78; 8.390; Hos 6:6
 Mt 9:13
- 335 except when intelligent mouths bring forth a hymn.ⁿ² 8.498
 Know who he is, and then you will see the begetter.

k2. On the account of the passion (287-320) see SibOr 1.360-80 and the parallels there listed. SibOr 8.287-90 are quoted by Lactantius, DivInst 4.18.15.

l2. Kurfess omits this verse as doubtful.
 m2. Gk. prosklimata for pros krimata (Rzach).
 n2. Gk. ekprophetontōn for ekprophetontes.

Eschatological disturbances

- Then in time all the elements of the world will be bereft, air, land, sea, light of blazing fire, 3.80; 2.206, etc.
and heavenly dome and night and all days
340 will rush together into one, into an utterly desolate form. 2.201
For all the stars of luminaries will fall from heaven 8.190, etc.
and no longer will well-winged birds fly on the air
nor will there be walking on earth, for all wild beasts will perish. 4Ezra 5:6;
Lactantius,
DivInsr 7.16.8
There will be no voices of men, or beasts, or birds.
345 The world, in disorder, will hear no useful sound.
The deep sea will resound with a great sound of threat.
All the swimming creatures of the sea will die, trembling.
No longer will a ship bearing cargo sail on the waves. 8.237, etc.
The earth, being bloodied by wars, will bellow.
350 All the souls of men will gnash their teeth 8.231, etc.
with the wailings and panic of the lawless souls, dissolving with thirst and famine and pestilence and murders, and they will call death fair and it will evade them. 2.305f.; 13.118; ApEl 2:24
Rev 9:6
For no longer will death give rest to those, or night.
355 Often will they make request of God who rules on high, in vain, 2.309-12
and then he will manifestly turn away his face from them.
For he gave seven days of ages for repentance to erring men, through the intercession of the holy virgin.^{o2}

A speech of God against idolatry

- God himself showed me all these things in my mind, 3.1-7, etc.
360 and he will fulfill all the things which are spoken through my mouth:
“I know the number of sand and the measures of sea. Job 38-41
I know the recesses of earth and murky Tartarus. 4Ezra 4
I know the numbers of stars and trees and how many tribes of four-footed animals, swimming creatures, and birds that fly, 365 and men that are, and that will be, and the dead.
For I myself fashioned the forms and minds of men, 3.27
and I gave right reason, and I taught understanding,
I who formed eyes and ears, seeing and hearing and knowing every thought, and sharing the knowledge of all. Ps 94:9 370 Being within, I am silent, and later I myself will test and bring about . . . whatever any one of mortals did in secret WisSol 1:11 coming also to the tribunal of God and telling to mortals . . .
I understand the dumb, and I hear one who does not speak and how much is the total height from earth to heaven.
375 Beginning and end I know; I who created heaven and earth for all things are from him, he knows what is from the beginning to the end.
For I alone am God, and there is no other God. 3.11, etc.; Isa 44:6; 45:5
Lactantius, DivInsr 1.6.16
They decree an image, fashioned of wood, to be mine, Isa 44:9-20; WisSol 13:11 and shaping it with their hands, a speechless idol; 380 they honor it with prayers and unholy worship.
Abandoning the Creator, they worshiped licentiousness.
All have gifts from me but give them to useless things, and they think all these things useful, like my honors, Hos 2:8 (10) making burnt offerings at meals, as to their own dead. WisSol 14:15, 20
385 For they burn flesh and, sacrificing bones full of marrow on altars, they pour blood to demons and light lamps for me, the giver of light.

o2. See SibOr 2.312, n. z2.

- Mortals pour libations of wine as if to a thirsty god, getting drunk to no purpose, for useless idols.
- 390 I have no need of your sacrifice or libation or polluted burnt offerings or most hated blood.
For they will do these things to the memory of kings and tyrants,
for dead demons, as if they were heavenly beings, performing a godless and destructive worship.
- 395 Godless ones also call their images gods, abandoning the Creator, thinking to have all hope and life from them. Trusting in dumb and speechless things with evil result, they are ignorant of good end.
- I myself proposed two ways, of life and death,^{p2}
400 and proposed to the judgment to choose good life.
But they turned eagerly to death and eternal fire.
Man is my image, having right reason.^{q2}
Set for him, you, a pure and unbloodied table, having filled it with good things, and give the bread to the hungry
- 405 and drink to the thirsty and clothes to the naked body, supplying them from your own labors with holy hands.
Accept the afflicted and stand by the suffering and provide for me, the living one, a living sacrifice.
Sowing now on water,^{r2} so that I also may one day give you
- 410 immortal fruits, and you will have eternal light and unfading life, when I test all by fire.
For I will melt all things and separate them into clear air.
I will roll up heaven, open the recesses of the earth, and then I will raise the dead, having undone fate
- 415 and the sting of death, and later I will come to judgment, judging the life of pious and impious men.
I will set ram by ram and shepherd by shepherd and calf by calf, near each other for trial.
Whoever are convicted in the trial because they were exalted
- 420 and stopped the mouth of all so that they in envy could equally subject those who act in holy manner, ordering them to be silent, pressing on for gain,
will all depart then, as not^{s2} approved by me.
No longer will you say in sorrow "it will be tomorrow,"
- 425 or "it happened yesterday," nor worry about many days,
nor spring, nor winter, nor summer, nor autumn, nor sunset, nor sunrise. For I will make a long day forever; light will be desired.
- * * *

8.333f., etc. Isa 1:11

WisSol 14:15-21

8.47, etc. Frag. 1.22

Did 1-6; EpBar 18-21
Deut 30:15; TAsh 1:3-8

1.23, etc. Gen 1:26

2.96, etc. Lev 17:10

2.83f., etc.

Rom 12:1

2.252, etc.

2.213; 3.87

3.82; Isa 34:4; Rev 6:14
Lactantius, DivInst 7.20.4

4.182, etc.

1Cor 15:55

2.244

Mt 25:32f.

2.255, etc.

2.325-27.29; 3.89

Hymn to God

- Self-begotten, undefiled, everlasting, eternal,^{l2}
- 430 master of heaven in might, measuring the fiery breath.
He holds the scepter of thunder with a rough firebrand,
and he soothes the peals of deep-sounding thunderbolts,

Frag. 1.17; 3.12; Ps-Orph. vs.
10 (ed. Denis), 3.20-23

Pss 93: 97: 148

p2. The doctrine of the two ways has its roots in the ethics of the OT, especially in the Wisdom tradition—Prov 4:10-14; Ps 1:6—but also in the Deuteronomic covenant (Deut 30:15). A similar contrast is found in Hesiod, Works and Days 287-92. The two ways recur in T12P and in early Christian instructions, but cf. also the contrast of the "ways" of the Two Spirits in IQS 4.

q2. Cf. Philo, Op 69: "It is in respect of the Mind, the sovereign element of the soul, that the word 'image' is used."

r2. A Gk. proverb. See Geffcken's apparatus.

s2. Gk. ou for kai (Rzach).

t2. This conception of deity is also found in pagan writings. See the Tübingen Theosophy, 18-21.

storming the earth, he restrains the rushing noises,
and he dulls the fiery whips of lightnings; 435 he contains the unspeakable pourings of showers and storms of icy hail, missiles of clouds and attacks of winter.

Micah 1:3-4;
Hab 3:6;
1En 1:3-6;
AsMos 10:1-4

* * *

For they bear witness to each thing that you yourself decide to do and approve in your mind.
With your son, before all creation, you shared deliberations 440 with equal breasts, fashioner of men and creator of life.
Him you addressed with the first sweet voice from your mouth:
"Look, let us make a man like in all respects to our form, and let us give him the life-supporting breath to have.
Though he is mortal all the things of the world will serve him;
445 when he is fashioned of clay we will subject all things to him."
These things you said to the Word, and all was done in your heart.
All the elements together obeyed your command,
and eternal creation was arranged for a mortal creature:
heaven, air, fire, earth, land and sea current, 450 sun, moon, chorus of stars, mountains, night, day, sleep, waking, spirit and motion, soul and intellect, skill and voice and strength and wild tribes of living creatures, those of swimming creatures and birds,
walking creatures and amphibians and serpents and things of double nature;
455 for all things were arranged spontaneously^{u2} under your leadership.

8.264f.

8.265. etc.

1Cor 15:47

WisSol 19:18

3.20-23

The incarnation

In the last times he changed the earth and, coming late^{v2}
as a new light, he rose from the womb of the Virgin Mary.
Coming from heaven, he put on a mortal form.
First, then Gabriel was revealed in his strong and holy person.
460 Second, the archangel also addressed the maiden in speech:
"Receive God, Virgin, in your immaculate bosom."
Thus speaking, he breathed in the grace of God,^{w2} even to one who was always a maiden. Lk 1:31-36

Fear and, at the same time, wonder seized her as she listened.
She stood trembling. Her mind fluttered 465 while her heart was shaken by the unfamiliar things she heard.
But again she rejoiced, and her heart was healed by the voice.
The maiden laughed and reddened her cheek, rejoicing with joy and enchanted in heart with awe. ProtJames 17

Courage also came over her. A word flew to her womb.
470 In time it was made flesh and came to life in the womb,
and was fashioned in mortal form and became a boy
by virgin birth. For this is a great wonder to men, but nothing is a great wonder for God the Father and God the Son. Jn 1:14

The joyful earth fluttered to the child at its birth.
475 The heavenly throne laughed and the world rejoiced.
A wondrous, new-shining star was venerated by Magi. Mt 2:2

The newborn child was revealed in a manger to those who obey God:
cowherds and goatherds and shepherds of sheep. Lk 2:7f.

And Bethleḡem was said to be the divinely named homeland of the Word. Micah 5:1f.

u2. Gk. automatōs for autos soi (Rzach).

v2. Gk. bradus for brachus (Rzach).

w2. Gk. theou for theos (Rzach).

Ethical and ritual exhortation

- 480 Be humble in heart, hate bitter power,
 and, above all, love your neighbor as yourself,
 and love God from the soul and serve him.
 Therefore we are also of the holy heavenly race of Christ, and are called brethren.
- 485 Having a remembrance of joy in worship,
 we walk the paths of piety and truth.
 We are never allowed to approach the sanctuaries of temples nor to pour libations to statues nor to honor them with prayers, nor with delightful scents of flowers nor with gleams 490 of lamps, nor even to embellish them with offerings, nor with breaths of incense sending up a flame on altars^{x2} nor with libations from the sacrifice of bulls, rejoicing in gore,^{y2} to send blood from the slaughter of sheep as propitiatory offerings for earthly penalty;
 nor to defile the light of the sky with smoke from burnt offerings 495 and polluted breezes from a fire that burns flesh.
 But rejoicing with holy minds and glad spirit, abundant love and hands that bring good gifts with gracious psalms and songs appropriate to God, we are bidden to sing your praises as imperishable and pure from all deceit,
 500 God, wise begetter of all.

Mt 22:37-39;
 Mk 12:29-31;
 Lk 10:27

4. 8. etc.

8. 335;
 Eph 5:19;
 Col 3:16

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES, BOOK 11

Introduction

The last four books of the Sibylline collection (11–14) provide a more or less continuous outline of history from the Flood down to the Arab conquest, with a very brief eschatological conclusion in Sibylline Oracles 14.351–61. The end of each book is marked by a prayer of the Sibyl (SibOr 11.315–24, 12.293–99, 13.172f.), and there are similar introductory verses at the beginning of each book. However, the contents of the oracles in each book pick up where the preceding one left off. No one would suggest that all this material was composed by the same author at one time. Rather we have an ongoing tradition that was repeatedly updated. Since every stage presumably had an eschatological conclusion, it is probable that the present ending of Sibylline Oracles 14 was composed early and repeatedly moved back.¹

Sibylline Oracles 11 reviews history from the Flood to the death of Cleopatra.² References to historical figures are not direct but veiled thinly by gematria—i.e. the numbers represented by the letters of a name or only by the initial. Kurfess has suggested that the sequence of kingdoms is modeled on Sibylline Oracles 3.159–61,³ and this seems essentially correct. The first kingdom is the Egyptian (vss. 19–32). Then we find the unhistorical sequence of Persia (47–50), Media (51–60), Ethiopia (61–79),⁴ Assyria (80–105), Macedonia (186–223), Egypt (232–60), and Rome (261–314). Within this framework Sibylline Oracles 11 has made some modifications. Between the first rule of Egypt and that of Persia there is inserted a Hebrew kingdom (33–41) ruled by Moses. Next, the kingdom of the Assyrians contains no reference to Babylon (unlike SibOr 3.160) and is described in remarkably favorable terms. The Assyrian king is a champion of the law of God (vss. 81–82) and will build the temple of God (vs. 87)! In fact we must understand Assyrians here as a name for the Jews and the king as Solomon.⁵

Verses 109–71 are a digression on Romulus and Remus (vss. 109–71), the Trojan War (122–43), Aeneas (144–62), and Virgil (163–71).⁶ A confused passage that includes a reference to the Persian invasion of Greece (179–82) intervenes before the rise of the Macedonians.

The account of the Ptolemaic Empire dwells at length on the time of Cleopatra (vss. 243–60), and the book culminates in an oracle on the conquest of Egypt by the Romans.

Date

There is no agreement as to the date of Sibylline Oracles 11. J. Strugnell contends that the present book is not an independent piece but is continued directly in Sibylline Oracles 12.⁷ Even those who accept the book as an independent unit disagree on its date. Geffcken dates it after A.D. 226 because verse 161 presupposes the fall of the Parthians.⁸ However, the tense of the verb in question is disputed. Geffcken reads mēkuneto, “tarried,” but Kurfess emends to mēkuneth, which he interprets as a present tense. mēkunetai. following Bousset. Even if we retain mēkuneto, the use of tenses in the Sibylline Oracles does not permit a firm conclusion that the event in question was already past. Rzach accepts the present tense, “where the Parthian tarries,” but still argues for a later date.⁹ He assumes

¹ See esp. W. Scott, “The Last Sibylline Oracle of Alexandria,” The Classical Quarterly 9 (1915) 144–47.

² The main discussions are those of H. Dechent. Über das erste, zweite und elfte Buch, pp. 49–88; Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, pp. 64–66; Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2152–55; Bousset, Real-Encyclopedie, p. 278; Kurfess, Sibyllinische Weissagungen, pp. 333–41; “Oracula Sibyllina XI (IX)–XIV (XII). Nicht Christlich sondern Jüdisch,” ZRGG 7 (1955) 270–72.

³ Kurfess, Sibyllinische Weissagungen, p. 333.

⁴ Ethiopia and India are often confused in the SibOr. Cf. SibOr 5.206. See Kurfess, Sibyllinische Weissagungen, p. 334.

⁵ Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 66.

⁶ This passage is modeled on the figure of Homer in SibOr 3.419–25.

⁷ Private communication. See Collins, The Sibylline Oracles, p. 181.

⁸ Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 66.

⁹ Pauly-Wissowa 2A, col. 2154.

that the prophecy of the Roman conquest of Mesopotamia (vss. 159–60) is a vaticinium ex eventu, “‘prophecy’ after the actual event.” Mesopotamia was first conquered under Trajan but was lost again in the time of Hadrian and not reconquered until the reign of Septimius Severus. Accordingly, Rzach accepts Geffcken’s dating of the book to the third century. Both scholars support this date with references to stylistic considerations and to the similarity of Sibylline Oracles 11 to books 12–14.

Over against this position, Dechent, Bousset, and Kurfess have argued for a date in the first century A.D. Dechent’s position rests on the extremely dubious argument that the word geneē, “race,” in verse 159 refers to the Julio-Claudian house, and that the oracle must therefore have been written before the death of Nero.¹⁰ It is more natural, however, to understand the geneē in verse 159 with reference to Aeneas and the Roman race. Bousset’s argument is simply that the oracle would not have stopped with Cleopatra if it were written much later.¹¹ Kurfess supports this argument with further considerations. There is no reference in the book to peoples with whom Rome came into conflict in the second century. There is no reference to the fall of the Temple, and there is little real hostility to Rome. The main object of the Sibyl’s wrath is Egypt (298–314). Kurfess infers that the book was written under Augustus or Tiberius, before relations between Jews and Romans in Egypt began to deteriorate in the time of Caligula.¹²

The argument of Bousset, that an oracle which ends with Cleopatra must be presumed to be written soon after her death, would be conclusive if it were certain that Sibylline Oracles 11 was composed as an independent unit. However, Strugnell’s suggestion that Sibylline Oracles 11 and 12 were composed as a unit deserves careful consideration. The date proposed for Sibylline Oracles 11 by Geffcken and Rzach, sometime in the third century, not long after the conquest of Mesopotamia by Septimius Severus, is also a plausible date for Sibylline Oracles 12, which concludes with the death of Alexander Severus. Further, Sibylline Oracles 12.1–11 may be considered a summary of Sibylline Oracles 11, since it singles out the “citizen of Pella” (cf. SibOr 11.219: “Pellaeon Ares”), who falsely claimed descent from Zeus Ammon (11.197), Aeneas, the descendant of Assaracus (11.144), and the “children of the flock-devouring beast,” Romulus and Remus (SibOr 11.110–17). Further, Sibylline Oracles 12 picks up where Sibylline Oracles 11 leaves off, has a similarly positive attitude to the Romans, and shows equally little interest in moral and religious questions.

However, the question is complicated by the fact that Sibylline Oracles 12.1–11, which provide the summary of Sibylline Oracles 11, are taken directly from Sibylline Oracles 5. Two possibilities therefore emerge:

1. Sibylline Oracles 11 may have drawn on Sibylline Oracles 5. We have seen that much of Sibylline Oracles 11 is built on the list of kingdoms in Sibylline Oracles 3.159–61. Further, the passage on Virgil in verses 163–71 is based on Sibylline Oracles 3.419–25 and even the passages on Cleopatra in 250–53 and the conquest of Egypt in 285–90 are modeled on Sibylline Oracles 3.397–400 and 350–60 respectively. On this hypothesis Sibylline Oracles 11 would be virtually completely composed by borrowings and expansions of earlier Sibyls.

2. Alternatively, Sibylline Oracles 5.1–11 may already have been a summary of Sibylline Oracles 11. Both Sibylline Oracles 5 and 12 are interested primarily in the period after the battle of Actium. Verses 1–11 (common to both books) are distinctly a summary. However, some of the details in that summary, the references to the “son of Assaracus” and the “children of the beast,” do not occur in any Sibyl earlier than Sibylline Oracles 5, unless we assume an earlier date for Sibylline Oracles 11. The references to the Roman origins could be supplied in Sibylline Oracles 11 from popular lore (or in some part from Virgil) and would have been sought out to complement the Sibylline history of the East.

Neither of these hypotheses can be established with certainty, but the second seems the more probable. The choice of details in Sibylline Oracles 5.1–11 is more easily understandable if that passage is summarizing an earlier Sibyl. Further support for an earlier dating can be found in Sibylline Oracles 11.171, which says that Virgil will conceal the Sibyl’s writings until after his death. This reference makes most sense if the book was written shortly after Virgil’s death in 19 B.C. The anti-Egyptian attitude of Sibylline Oracles 11 fits well with the picture of Alexandrian Judaism found in such works as 3 Maccabees and the Wisdom of Solomon. Finally, the book is intelligible in itself as an oracle which culminates in the conquest of Egypt and has been recognized by the tradition as an independent book. The fact that Sibylline Oracles 12 picks up where Sibylline Oracles 11 leaves off may be somewhat coincidental, since that is the beginning of the Roman Empire, the subject matter of Sibylline Oracles 12. Otherwise Sibylline Oracles 12 is not conspicuously dependent on book 11 and draws much more directly on Sibylline Oracles 5.

¹⁰ Dechent, Über das erste, zweite und elfte Buch, pp. 49–88.

¹¹ Bousset, Real-Encyclopedie, p. 278.

¹² Kurfess, Sibyllinische Weissagungen, p. 339.

The reference to the Parthians in verse 161 should then be understood as a real prophecy. The Parthians were already prominent as a threat to Rome in the East in the first century B.C. An oracle that proclaimed the universal rule of Rome might very naturally prophesy the conquest of the Parthians to complete the ideal extent of Roman dominion.

The stylistic arguments for a later date were adequately refuted by Bousset. Sibyllists at all times and places were capable of poor style and faulty meter.¹³

Sibylline Oracles 11 then should be dated tentatively about the turn of the era.

Provenance

There is no doubt that this book was written in Egypt. Its review of history begins with Egypt and ends there, and the culmination of the book is an oracle on the destruction of Egypt.

The reference to the foundation of Alexandria in verses 219f. and the eulogy in verses 232–35 suggest that the Sibyllist wrote in that city. Despite the parallels in Sibylline Oracles 3 and Sibylline Oracles 5.1–11 noted above, Sibylline Oracles 11 lacks most of the concerns of books 3 and 5—interest in the Temple, expectation of a savior figure and eschatological judgment, polemic against idolatry and sexual abuses. The motif of widowhood with references to Cleopatra recalls Sibylline Oracles 3.75–92, but this does not require literary dependence as the motif would arise naturally in the context of Cleopatra's defeat. The use of gematria is paralleled in Sibylline Oracles 5.1–51, but this, of course, is not peculiar to the Sibylline Oracles.¹⁴

The book is Jewish, as is shown by the references to Joseph (29f.), Moses (38–40), Solomon (80–103) and by the fact that Egypt is said to be finally destroyed because it oppressed God's chosen people (307). There is nothing to indicate a Christian origin or redaction. The oracle may well have been written before the origin of Christianity.

The book does not seem to belong to the same tradition as Sibylline Oracles 3 or 5. Yet it can be located in the development of Egyptian Judaism by reference to these other Sibyls. It stands closest to Sibylline Oracles 3.75–92 by its antipathy to Cleopatra, while it lacks the vehemence of that passage. It shows no sign of the resentment against Rome that burns in Sibylline Oracles 5. In fact, the book lacks any criticism of Rome, even such as we find in the earliest stage of Sibylline Oracles 3 (vss. 175–91).

Historical and theological importance

The only theological interpretation offered in Sibylline Oracles 11 is in verses 307–10, which say that Egypt will be subjected because of its treatment of the Jews. The obvious reference here is to the sojourn in Egypt before the Exodus, but it probably also suggests strained relations between the Egyptians and the community that the Sibyl represents. Otherwise, Sibylline Oracles 11, like books 12–14, is remarkably void of theology. There is no eschatological conclusion. There may have been one, and it is possible that Sibylline Oracles 14.351–61 originally stood at the end of Sibylline Oracles 11 and was moved back gradually as additions were made. Even that passage, however, contains nothing more specific than the hope that the Jewish people would rule the whole earth. There is no description of a judgment, and the review of history is not used to frame ethical and ritual exhortations as is often the case in books 1–5.

The historical value of the book is extremely scant. The author's ignorance of history is ¹³ Bousset, Real-Encyclopedie, p. 278.

¹⁴ See F. Dornseiff, Das Alphabet in Mystik und Magie (Leipzig, 1922).

amazing. Not only does he list Persian, Median, and Ethiopian kingdoms before the time of Solomon, but he can blandly identify Jews and Assyrians and completely ignore the Babylonian kingdom. Nearer his own time he describes the rulers of Rome as Caesars even before Julius and Augustus (vs. 265), and he gives the number of kings of Egypt before Cleopatra as eight (243). The only period on which he seems reasonably well informed is that of Cleopatra, and even there he gives few specific data.

The only literary contact of note is with Sibylline Oracles 3, which it echoes in many places, most notably in the list of kingdoms and in the account of Virgil in verses 163–69, which is modeled on Homer in the earlier Sibyl.

Unlike most of the other Sibylline Oracles, Book 11 is not a vehicle for religious exhortation. The most obvious function of the book lies in its anti-Egyptian propaganda. Verses 277–97 can be read as a direct rejoinder to the pro-Cleopatran ideology in Sibylline Oracles 3.350–61. In view of its attention to Aeneas and his progeny, the book might be said to be pro-Roman, but it shows no explicit enthusiasm for Rome and is much more interested in the discomfiture of Egypt.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES

Book 11

Introduction of the Sibyl

World of widespread men, long walls, great cities, and innumerable nations of east, west, south, and north, 2.195 divided in many diverse languages and kingdoms,
5 to you^a I am about to speak the most disastrous tidings.

The tower of Babylon

For from the time when the Flood came upon the men of old 3.109 and destroyed that^b generation with many waters,
the universal ruler himself furnished another race
of restless men, who in opposition to heaven 10 built a tower to an awful height. The tongues of all^c were loosed, but on them came the wrath of the Most High God, hurled down, and the wondrous tower fell. For they roused evil strife against each other.
Then also was the tenth generation of articulate men. 3.108; 2.15, etc.
15 From the time when these things happened, the entire earth was divided between diverse men and all sorts of dialects of which I will tell the numbers and name them in acrostics,^d
according to the first initial, and I will reveal the name.

The rule of Egypt

First Egypt will receive royal dominion 20 outstanding and just. Then many counseling men will govern in her. But then a terrible man will rule, a very mighty skirmisher.
His name will have the letter of the acrostic.
Swords^e will he extend against pious men.
25 While he wields power this^f great sign will be in the land of Egypt. In great glory she will then feed with corn people who are perishing by famine.
The same man, prisoner and judge, will nurture the East and the race of Assyrian men. Know his name 3.108; 2.15, etc.
30 . . . of the measure of the tenth number.^g
But when the affliction of ten plagues comes upon Egypt from shining heaven, then I will again proclaim these things to you. Ex 7:14-12:34
Woe to you, Memphis, woe, great kingdom.
The Red Sea will destroy a great multitude of you. Ex 14-15 35 Then when the people of twelve tribes, bidden by the Immortal, leave the fruitful plain of destruction^h

a. Gk. alla per eis hymas for all' haper humōn (Rzach).

b. Gk. keinēn for peniēn (Rzach).

c. Gk. hapantōn for ap'allōn (Rzach).

d. The list of kingdoms is apparently based on SibOr 3.159-61. There is no real acrostic in SibOr 11, although rulers are indicated by their initial letters.

e. The Gk. word for swords here is phasgana, which has the same initial as Pharoah.

f. Gk. d'eseitai ekeino for d'estai ekeinō (Alexandre).

g. I is 10. The name is Iosēph, Joseph. SibOr 11.80 also uses the name "Assyrians" for the Israelites.

h. Gk. olethrou for olethron (Rzach). The plain in question is, of course, Egypt.

and God himself, the prince, gives a law to men,
 then a great, great-spirited king will rule the Hebrews,
 one who has a name from sandy Egypt,ⁱ 40 a man falsely thought to have Thebes as his homeland.
 But a terrible snake will love Memphis, and will devour^j many things in wars.

Ex 19-20

The rule of Persia

In the twelfth decade of revolving kingship in the seventeenth century of years, when five more are left,^k then will be the empire of Persia.
 45 Then there will be darkness upon the Jews, and they will not escape famine and pestilence, which is hard to bear, on that day.^l
 But when a Persian rules and leaves the scepters to the sons of his grandson^m as the years pursue their cyclic course, for only five times four and a hundred in addition to these,ⁿ 50 you will complete^o a hundred enneads and make amends for all.

Amos 5:18
2.23. etc.

The rule of Media

Then, Persia, you will be given as a servant to the Medes, perishing with afflictions through mighty war.
 Immediately disaster will come upon Persians and Assyrians, all Egypt, Libyans and Ethiopians.
 55 Carians and Pamphylians, and all other mortals.
 Then he will give the royal empire to descendants who again will lay waste races for many spoils, ravaging the entire earth without sympathy.
 Mournful, the Persians will wail dirges by the Tigris.
 60 Egypt will moisten much earth with tears.
 Then a very rich Indian will cause many evils for you, Median land, until you make amends for all which you had formerly done with shameless spirit.
 Woe to you, Median nation, thereafter you will serve 65 Ethiopian men^p beyond the land of Merois.
 You will complete a hundred years from the beginning, wretched one, adding seven to these, and you will place your neck under the yoke.

3.207-9

8.64

5.206

The rule of India/Ethiopia

Then thereafter there will arise a dark-skinned, gray-haired,

i. Kurfess sees here a pun on "sandy" (psa-mathōdeos) and a reference to Psammetichus, mistaken here for a Hebrew. However, the reference is surely to Moses, whose name was Egyptian and who had been treated like a son by Pharaoh's daughter (Ex 2:10).

j. Gk. laphuxetai for phulaxetai (Buresch). Geffcken sees here a further reference to Moses, who is depicted by Artapanus (a Jewish-Egyptian historian of the 2nd cent. B.C.) as an Egyptian general and also as the founder of the animal cults. Alexandre takes the snake in this passage to represent "wisdom" and so to be applicable to Moses. The phrase "terrible snake" is, however, most naturally understood in a pejorative sense. It refers to Nero in SibOr 5.29 and 12.81 and to Severus in 12.264. The phrase may refer to some unspecified Pharaoh or rather be a general derogatory reference to the Egyptian monarchy.

k. In view of the chaotic sequence of kingdoms

no real chronological value can be attached to these numbers.

l. Dechent saw here a reference to the destructions of Samaria and Jerusalem, but the verse is not specific.

m. Gk. huiōnoio huiōis for huios huiōnoio (Geffcken). The Persian may be Cyrus or Cambyses, the conquerer of Egypt.

n. Gk. hekatōn d'epi tautais for dekateusei de tautais (Rzach). Here again the numbers have no historical value. The Persians, in fact, overthrew the Medes, not vice versa.

o. Gk. teleseis for teletheis (Rzach).

p. On the confusion of India and Ethiopia see SibOr 5.206, n. w2. The confusion in Jewish sources may have been increased by the fact that India and Ethiopia are mentioned together in Esth 8:9 as the limits of the Persian Empire. The geographical indication "beyond . . . Merois" (65) shows that the author had the African country in mind.

great-spirited Indian prince^a who will cause many evils 70 to the East through mighty war, and he will damage you, or rather destroy you beyond all.
 But when he reigns twenty years and ten plus seven and ten, then every nation of the royal empire will rage and display freedom,^r 75 abandoning slave blood for three single years.
 But he will come again and every nation of men will place its neck under the yoke for the mighty one again 3.448 as it was formerly subject to the king, and it will willingly be subordinate.
 There will be great peace throughout the whole world. 3.755; 11.237

The rule of the "Assyrians"

80 Then a great man will be king over the Assyrians.^s
 He will rule and persuade everyone to speak according to his mind what God disposed in laws. Then all the kings will fear this man. They who plume themselves with spears, fearful and speechless, exceedingly mighty and lovely to behold, 85 will serve this man, through the plans of the great God.
 For he will persuade everything by speech and subdue everything, and he will mightily build the temple of the great God 1Kgs 5-8 and the lovely altar, and he will cast down idols. 3.606, etc.
 He will gather tribes and the generation of fathers 90 and infant children into one place as settlers and build a wall around 1Kgs 9:15 them.
 He will have a name of the number two hundred, 12.258
 and will show the signs of an initial of eighteen.
 But whenever he prevails, as decades pursue their cyclic course, for two plus five, coming to the end of (his) time, 95 there will be as many kings as tribes of men,
 as clans, as cities, and as islands,
 lands of the blessed and fields of shining fruit,
 but there will be one great king over them, a leader of men.
 Many great-spirited kings will yield to him.
 100 They will give to him and his sons and prosperous grandsons portions of the kingdom for empire until eight decades of decades and six single years' in addition to these. He will rule even those who are his opponents to the end.

The advent of Macedonia

But when a strong wild beast comes with mighty Ares,^u

q. Kurfess take the Indians of SibOr 11 as the Persians and the prince as Ahasuerus (Artaxerxes) of the Book of Esther. While it is true that the author may have been influenced by Esth 8:9, the passage is too confused to permit identifications.

r. Kurfess sees a reference to revolts under Xerxes, but there are no historical data that correspond to the statements here.

s. Solomon, who built the Temple (vs. 87) and the wall of Jerusalem (vs. 90. cf. 1Kgs 9:15), and whose initial (S) has a numerical value of 200 (vs. 91) and is the eighteenth letter of the alphabet (vs. 92). Kurfess, following Dechent, takes the Assyrians as Persians and the king as the Artaxerxes of Ezra 7:11 who "did much" for the Temple and in whose reign Ezra and Nehemiah reorganized Jerusalem. Kurfess is obliged to regard vss. 91f. as an insert modeled on SibOr 12.258. However, the parallel in SibOr 12 is only partial. Even with the emendation Kurfess is still obliged to say that Artaxerxes built the Temple, which is simply untenable. The history of SibOr 11 is muddled on any interpretation. If we accept the present text we must take this passage as a reference to Solomon. The term "Assyrians" is also used for the Israelites in SibOr 11.29.

t. As usual in SibOr 11 the numbers make no historical sense.

u. Ares was god of war. Alexandre and Kurfess plausibly see here a reference to Alexander, who overthrew the Persians. It does not, however, follow that the previous vss. also referred to the Persians. The sequence of kingdoms is not chronological but is determined by SibOr 3.159-61.

105 then for you also, royal land, will wrath spring up.

Woe to you, Persian land, how many effusions you will receive of human blood when that man of mighty spirit comes to you. Then again I will proclaim these things to you.^v

Romulus and Remus

But when Italy produces a great marvel for men, 110 a murmuring of infants by an unpolluted spring, 5.11
 in a shady cave, children of a flock-devouring beast, who, when they have become men, will cast down headlong many who have shameless spirit on seven strong hills. Rev 17:9
 Both number a hundred.* Their name will show them 115 a great sign of things to come.^x They will build strong walls on seven hills and will set up grievous war about them. Then there will be an insurrection of men springing up about you, great land of beautiful corn, great-spirited Egypt.^y But I will again proclaim these things, 120 and in addition^z you will receive a great affliction in your homes, 3.314 and again you will have an insurrection of your own men.

The Trojan War

Now you, wretched Phrygia, do I bewail piteously, for on you will come captivity from Greece, which subdues horses,
 and terrible war, through mighty battles.
 125 Ilium, I pity you, for a fury from Sparta^{a2} 3.414-18 will come to your dwelling, mingled with a destructive star.
 It will especially cause you toils, labors, groanings, and wailings when skilled men begin battle, the heroes of the Greeks, by far the best of those who love war.
 130 One of these, a mighty warrior, will be king.^{b2}
 For the sake of his brother he will perform most evil deeds.
 They will destroy the famous walls of Troy of the Phrygians, when the son of Cronos^{c2} for twice five revolving years fulfills the murderous deeds of war.
 135 Suddenly a wooden deceit^{d2} will cover men around, 8.198 and the one of deep grief will receive it, on her knees, not perceiving that it is an ambush pregnant with Greeks.
 Alas, how many Hades will receive in one night!
 How much spoils will it carry off from the old man of many tears!^{e2} 140 but there will be ageless glory in future generations.
 A great man from Zeus,^{f2} a king, will have the name of the first letter. He, when he has returned home, will then fall at the hand of a deceitful woman.

v. The digressions on Romulus and Remus, the Trojan War, Aeneas, and Virgil are explained by Kurfess as a résumé of Western history to prepare the reader for the final conflict of East and West. It is probably true that the Sibyl digresses at this point to fill in some of the more significant historical traditions for which the list of kingdoms makes no provision. It is typical of the historical confusion of the book that two conflicting accounts of the foundation of Rome are juxtaposed (115, 155).

w. R, the initial of both Romulus and Remus, has a numerical value of 100.

x. I.e. by suggesting the name Rome.

y. This reference is quite enigmatic and indicative of the confusion of the book.

z. Gk. proseti for pros epi (Rzach).

a2. Helen.

b2. Agamemnon, and his brother Menelaus.

c2. Zeus.

d2. Gk. dolos for domos (Ω, Rzach). The reference is to the Trojan horse. The phrase echoes SibOr 8.198, where the word domos refers to a means of salvation, modeled on the Ark in SibOr 1.133.

e2. Priam, king of Troy.

f2. Agamemnon, murdered by his wife, Clytemnestra.

A famous child of heroes from the race and blood 145 of Assaracus will rule,^{g2} a mighty and brave man. 5.8; Virgil, Aeneid 6.778
 He will come from Troy when it has been destroyed by a great fire, fleeing from his fatherland on account of the turmoil of Ares.
 Carrying on his shoulders his elderly father, holding his only son by the hand, he will perform 5.9 150 a pious deed, glancing around, he who split the onslaught of the fire of blazing Troy, and pressing on through the throng.
 In fear he will cross the land and frightful sea.
 He will have a name of three syllables; for the first letter is not insignificant but reveals the supreme man.^{h2}
 155 Then he will set up the mighty city of the Latins.ⁱ²
 In the fifteenth year on the depths of brine perishing on the waters he will meet the end of death.^{j2}
 But even when he dies the nations of men will not forget him.
 For the race of this man will later rule over all 160 as far as the rivers Euphrates and Tigris, in the midst of the land of the Assyrians, where the Parthian tarried.^{k2}
 It will come to pass in future generations when all these things happen.

Virgil

There will be again a certain elderly wise man, a bard, 3.419-25 whom all call the wisest among men, 165 by whose noble mind the whole world will be educated.
 For he will write the chief points with power and intelligence^{l2} and at various times he will write clearly, very wondrous things, having mastered my words and meters and phrases.
 For he will be the very first to unfold my books.
 170 Afterward he will also conceal them and will no longer show them to men^{m2}
 until the goal of wretched death, the end of life.

Prophecies of confusion and tumult

But whenever these things are accomplished of which I spoke,
 the Greeks will again fight against each other.
 Assyrians and Arabs, and further, quiver-bearing Medes, 175 Persians and Sicilians and Lydians will rise up, Thracians and Bithynians and those who inhabit the land of beautiful corn by the streams of the Nile. Imperishable God will cause tumult among them all at once. But an Assyrian man, a bastard Ethiopian, will very terribly come, suddenly, 180 with the spirit of a wild beast, and he will cut through the entire isthmusⁿ² 8.155f.

g2. Aeneas. Assaracus, his great-grandfather, was king of Phrygia.

h2. A pun on the coincidence of the initials of Aeneas and Adam.

i2. Aeneas was usually considered founder not of Rome itself but of Lavinium, head of the Latin league. Romulus and Remus are usually said to come after Aeneas. SibOr 11 presents, in effect, a double founding of Rome.

j2. This tradition is found in Dionysius of Halicarnassus, Roman Antiquities 1.64.4; Origo gentis Romanae 14.3; Scholion Veronense ad Vergili Aeneid 1.259.

k2. The tense of this verb is disputed. Kurfess reads mēkuneth?, "tarries." In any case, since the whole passage is prophetic, no firm conclusions as to the date of the book can be based on the use of the past tense.

l2. Supply kata before dunamin (Alexandre). The passage is modeled on SibOr 3.419–25, where the reference is to Homer. Kurfess notes that the distinctive references to Homer's blindness and place of origin are omitted and that the content of his songs concerns Aeneas more immediately than the fall of Troy. Accordingly, the passage should be taken as a reference to Virgil. From this it follows that the Sibyl wrote later than Virgil's death in 19 B.C.

m2. The fiction that the pseudepigraphical writings were hidden in antiquity is common in Jewish apocalyptic—cf. Dan 12:4, 9; 4Ezra 14:46.

n2. The reference is most probably to Xerxes' invasion of Greece in 480 and to his canal through the Athos Peninsula, but cf. the description of Nero's return in SibOr 8.155f.

glancing about, going against everyone, and will sail across the sea.
 Then very many things will happen to you, faithless Greece.
 Woe to you, wretched Greece, how many lamentations you must make!
 For seven and eighty revolving years

185 you will be the mournful refuse of frightful war of all the tribes.

The rise of Macedonia

Then again the affliction of the Macedonians will come upon Greece, 3.381; 4.88 and it will destroy all Thrace and the turmoil of Ares, in islands and mainlands and among the Triballi,^{o2} who love war.

* * *

He will be among the foremost fighters, and will have this name, 190 an initial which shows the number fifty ten times.^{p2}

He will have swift fate in empire, but he will leave behind a very great kingdom throughout the boundless earth.

He himself will fall at the hand of a bad counselor, a spear-bearer, having lived as a leader with fair wind^{q2} as no one else.

Alexander

195 Thereafter the great-spirited son of this man will rule, of the first letter.^{r2} There will be a detailed account of his race.

Although this man was not born of Zeus or Ammon, all 5.7; 3.383 will nevertheless declare him to be, and will depict him as a bastard of the son of Cronos.

He will lay waste the cities of many articulate men,
 200 but the greatest wound will spring up for Europe. 3.382

This man will also afflict the city of Babylon with pestilence, 3.384 and every land on which the sun looks,
 in the East. He alone will sail the world.

Woe to you, Babylon, you will be in servitude at triumphal processions, 3.303, etc.
 205 you who were called mistress. Ares will come to Asia.

He will truly come and will kill many of your children.

Then you will send out your royal man whose name is of the number four,^{s2} fighter with the spear, and terrible arrow-shooter, with mighty warriors.

210 Then indeed famine and war will seize the midst of Cilicians and Assyrians. But great-spirited kings will drape themselves in terrible conflict of spirit-destroying strife.

But you, flee the former king^{r2} and abandon him.

Do not wish to remain and do not be ashamed to be cowardly, Herodotus 1.55

215 for a terrible lion will come upon you, a carnivorous beast, wild, stranger to justice wearing a cloak about his shoulders. 3.389-92

Flee the man who is like a thunderbolt. An evil yoke will come to Asia, and the whole earth will drink inundating murder.

But whenever Pellaean Ares will establish 220 the great city of Egypt, giver of wealth, and name it for himself,^{u2} betrayed deceitfully by his companions, (he will undergo) fate and death . . .

o2. Gk. Triballois for toratrois (Rzach).

p2. Philip of Macedon. He did not extend his empire beyond Greece but laid the foundations for Alexander's conquests. He was assassinated in 336 B.C. at the age of forty-six.

q2. Gk. ouria for suria (Geffcken).

r2. Alexander. He claimed to be son of Zeus Ammon after he visited the shrine of that god in Egypt in 332 B.C.

s2. Darius III, the Persian king defeated by Alexander.

t2. Gk. pheugōn proteron basilēa for phuge peron ton basilēa (Rzach).

u2. I.e. when Alexander founds Alexandria. Alexander was not, however, assassinated, but died of fever in Babylon in 323 B.C.

For when he leaves the Indians and goes to Babylon, foreign murder will destroy him about the tables.

The Diadochi

- Thereafter others will rule each individual tribe, 225 kings who are devourers of the people and ovebearing and faithless for a few years; then a great-spirited leader who will glean all^{v2} Europe bare from the time when the whole earth drinks the blood of all the tribes, but he will leave life, having undone it by his own fate.^{w2} 230 There will be other kings, twice four men from his race, all of whom have the same name.

The second rule of Egypt

- Then Egypt will be a ruling bride and the great city of the Macedonian prince, revered Alexandria, famous nurse of cities, 5.88; 11.302 235 glittering with beauty, will alone be metropolis.
Then let Memphis blame its rulers.^{a2} 5.17; 8.162
There will be deep peace throughout the whole world, 3.755; 11.79 and the earth of dark soil will then give more abundant fruits.
And then evil will come upon the Jews, and they will not escape 240 famine and pestilence on that day which is hard to bear,^{v2} 2.23, etc.
but the ambrosial earth, dark-soiled with its beautiful corn, newly adorned, will receive many dying men.

Cleopatra

- But eight kings of marshy Egypt
will complete numbers of years three and thirty 245 plus two hundred.^{v2} But their race will be destroyed, 3.395f.
not of them all, but a root will grow out,
a female, destructive of mortals, betrayer of her own kingdom.
But thereafter they will perform evil deeds
among themselves in wickedness, and one will destroy another.
250 A royal son will cut down a warrior father, 3.397-400 and he himself will fail at the hands of his son, but before that he will sprout another plant. A root will shoot up thereafter spontaneously. From it there will be a race that grows on the side.^{a3}
For there will be a queen of the land by the streams of the Nile, 255 which advances to the sea with sevenfold mouths;
she will have a much-loved name of the number twenty.^{b3}

v2. Gk. hos hapasan for hos pasin (Geffcken). Antiochus the Great invaded Europe in 196 B.C., but his campaign ended in failure. There were eight Seleucid kings named Antiochus counting from Antiochus I (vs. 230). Alexandre suggested that the reference is to Antigonos, but there never were eight kings by that name (in the same dynasty).

w2. Gk. leipsei atar bioton moirē(i) idiē(i) analusas (Geffcken) for biotou morphēn idian.

x2. The reference is to the decline of the traditional centers of Egyptian power in favor of Alexandria. Cf. the Potter's Oracle, col. 1, which prophesies that the Agathos Daimōn, "Good Spirit," will leave Alexandria and return to Memphis.

y2. The reference is obscure but Josephus (Apion

2.56–61) claimed that in time of famine Cleopatra withheld corn from the Jews.

z2. Here again the numbers are inaccurate. There were more than eight Ptolemies before Cleopatra. However, the time from the death of Ptolemy I to the rise of Cleopatra was approximately 231 years.

a3. These vss. are modeled on SibOr 3.397–400, prompted by the association of the "root growing on the side." They do not, however, fit the historical situation which led up to the reign of Cleopatra.

b3. Cleopatra. Her popularity in Egypt is widely attested. For Cleopatra in the earlier Sibylline tradition see SibOr 3.350–61 (which shows enthusiasm for her) and 75–92 (which is very negative).

She will make innumerable requests and collect all wealth of gold and silver. There will indeed be treachery against her from her own men.^{c3} Then again, blessed land, you will have 260 wars and battles and slaughters of men. 3.78f.
4.68, etc.

Julius Caesar

But when many rule luxuriant Rome,
in no respect chosen from the blessed but tyrants,
leaders of thousands and myriads, supervisors of lawful assemblies and most great 265 Caesars will rule in succession all the days.
Last of these, of the number ten,
Caesar will rule last, who^{d3} will be struck in dread war by hostile men, and stretch out his limbs on the ground.
The children of Rome will carry him in their own hands 270 and bury him piously and pour a mound on him sharing favor to his memory, because of his friendship.
But when the end of the time of the age is at hand fulfilling twice three hundred^{e3} and twice ten 12.12 from the time when your founder, the son of the beast, was leader,ⁱ³ 11.109-21 275 no longer will a dictator be a limited ruler but a prince will be king, a godlike man. 3.49

The conquest of Egypt

Know then, Egypt, that a king is coming against you.
He will truly come, a terrible Ares with gleaming helmet.
Then for you, widow,^{g3} there will thereafter be captivity. 3.77
280 For there will be wars which cause evils, terrible and raging in force around the walls of the land. In wars you yourself, suffering mournfully, will flee, wretched one, over the newly slain. Later you will come to bed with the terrible one himself. The conclusion is the joining marriage.^{h3} 285 Woe to you, ill-wed maiden, you will give the royal rule to a Roman king and will make amends 12.18 for all you formerly did in wars of men.ⁱ³
You will give your whole land as a dowry to a powerful man as far as inner Libya and dark-skinned men.
290 You will no longer be a widow,^{j3} but you will live with a lion,
a man-eating, terrible warrior of the war cry.
And then, wretched one (you will be) inconspicuous to all among men for you will depart with shameless spirit.
A tomb like a circular mound well-wrought,

c3. We know of no conspiracy against Cleopatra, but some of Antony's followers defected after Actium.

d3. Gk. Kaisar hos for Kaisaros (Alexandre). Apparently the Sibyl thought all Roman consuls were called Caesar, so Julius (Iulus) is said to be last. Caesar was not, of course, killed in battle but was assassinated.

e3. Gk. Triēkosios for diēkosion (Alexandre). Here and in SibOr 12.12 the age of Rome at the time of Caesar's death is given as 620 years. The usual date for the founding of Rome was 753 B.C., which would give the age of Rome as 709 at the time of Caesar's death.

f3. Romulus.

g3. The widow is at once bereaved Egypt and Cleopatra.

h3. The king is evidently Octavian, the prince of vs. 276, not Antony (as claimed by Kurless). Since Cleopatra did not marry Octavian, we must conclude either that the Sibyllist is giving a figurative account of the conquest of Egypt or, as in so many other passages in this book, is referring to Cleopatra but embellishing fact with legend. The symbolic reference to Egypt remains, of course, in any case.

i3. This passage seems to be a direct inversion of SibOr 3.350-61.

j3. Widowhood is usually conceived as an ultimate disaster (Isa 47:8f.; Rev 18:7f.), but here the "union" with victorious Rome is, ironically, a worse fate.

295 fitted with pinnacles, will receive you alive within it, in a snare^{k3} cleverly made . . . A great people will mourn you, and a king will raise a terrible piteous lament for you.

Punishment for Egypt

Then also Egypt of many labors will be a servant, which for many years brought spoils from the Indians.
300 She will disgracefully be enslaved and will mingle tears in the river, the fruit-bearing Nile, because when she has acquired wealth and abundance of all goods, nurse of cities, 11.234
she will nourish the race of the devourer of flocks, of terrible men. 13.43-49
Alas, to how many wild beasts will you be servant and booty, 305 prosperous Egypt, lawgiver to peoples.
You who formerly also rejoiced in great kings will be slave to peoples, wretched one, on account of that people which formerly, when it was living piously, you brought to great Ex 1:8-22 affliction^{l3}
of labors and lamentations, and you placed on its neck 310 the yoke of a plow and you moistened the fields with tears of mortals.
Therefore God himself, the imperishable prince who lives in the sky, 5.298 will utterly destroy you and impel you to lamentation, and you will make amends for what you formerly did lawlessly.
At last you will realize that the anger of God has come upon you.

Conclusion of the Sibyl

315 But I will go to Pytho^{m3} and well-built Panopeia.
There all will pronounce me a true seer, chanter of oracles,ⁿ³ though someone will call me^{o3} 3.816 a messenger with frenzied spirit. But when he approaches the books let him not shrink from them. He will know both all that is to be and 3.820-22 that was before 320 from our words. Then no longer will anyone call the divinely possessed seer an oracle-monger of necessity.
But, prince, now stop my very lovely speech, thrust away the frenzy and the true inspired voice 3.1-7, etc.
and the terrible madness, but grant a pleasant refrain. 13.173; 12.297

k3. These two lines are hopelessly corrupt. I follow Kurfess:

kai labetai se mnēma, peridromos hoia te tumbos zōsan esō, husplegxin epharmostos koruphaisin.

The reference is to the death of Cleopatra.

l3. The reference is to the oppression of the Hebrews before the Exodus.

m3. Pausanias 10.12.6 says that the Sibyl is a prophetess of Apollo, but this is expressly denied in SibOr 4.4f.

n3. Gk. chrēsmōdon for chrēsmō (Friedlieb).

o3. Supply est' ereōn tis, "someone will call," in vs. 318 after aggelon (Kurfess).

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES, BOOK 12

Introduction

Sibylline Oracles 12 continues the political review of book 11, in the same style.¹ The first eleven verses are borrowed directly from Sibylline Oracles 5, and the influence of Sibylline Oracles 5.1–51 is evident down to verse 176. After the introductory verses 1–11 the review of history proper begins with Augustus (i.e. where SibOr 11 left off) and outlines the history of the emperors to the death of Alexander Severus.

There are Christian insertions in verses 30–34 and 232, but the book as a whole is Jewish not Christian. It is unthinkable that a Christian would have written of Domitian in such glowing terms as we find in Sibylline Oracles 12.124–38.² The references to the Jews in verses 99–104 and 152 and the name Sabaoth for God in verse 132 reflect Jewish rather than pagan authorship. The book concludes with the Sibyl's account of her own inspiration (vss. 293–99).

Date and provenance

The book is dated by its latest reference, the death of Alexander Severus in A.D. 235 (vs. 288). Like books 11 and 13–14, with which it forms a tradition, it was most probably written in Alexandria—compare the reference to “the city of Egypt,” in verse 42, and to Egypt as the “land of splendid fruit” (vs. 17).

Theological and historical importance

Like the other late Sibylline Oracles, the book contains little material of theological interest. It does, however, echo the traditional Sibylline polemic against idolatry (vss. 111f. and 292).

The historical interest of the book is considerable as it provides a rare witness to the popular perception of Roman emperors in the eastern provinces. Fact is mixed with legend and error throughout. Tiberius is erroneously said to have been murdered (vs. 47). Titus is said to have been murdered by his soldiers (122f.). The Sibyl reports bloody drops from heaven in the time of Caligula (vss. 56f.), rain of stone in the reign of Claudius (vs. 75), and miraculous rain in the time of Marcus Aurelius (vs. 200). The latter emperor is said to have been granted whatever he asked by God. The Sibyl gives negative accounts of emperors who were widely unpopular—Caligula (vss. 50–67), Nero (vss. 78–94), Nerva (vss. 142–46), Commodus (vss. 206–28), Septimius Severus (vss. 256–68). However, the general attitude to the emperors is favorable. Praise is lavished on Augustus (vss. 12–35), Domitian (vss. 124–38), Hadrian (vss. 163–75), and Marcus Aurelius (vss. 187–205). Most significant is the treatment of the emperors who suppressed Jewish revolts. Vespasian is admittedly a destroyer of pious men (vs. 99), but greatest attention is paid to his destruction of Phoenicia and Syria (vss. 105–12), and these countries are said to be punished for idolatry. Vespasian himself is described at the end as “noble” and “excellent” (vss. 115f.). Trajan's suppression of the Jewish revolt of A.D. 115–17 is passed over as briefly as possible (vs. 152), and again the emphasis falls on the destruction of Phoenicia and Syria (vss. 153–55). The account of Hadrian makes no reference whatever to a Jewish revolt and contrasts sharply with the hostile account in Sibylline Oracles 8.52–59 on which it is partly based. It should also be noted that the description of Nero, while based on Sibylline Oracles 5.28–34, contains no reference to the legend of Nero's return which played so prominent a part in the earlier books. In all, Geffcken's opinion is well-founded that this Sibyllist placed loyalty to Rome above his Judaism.³

¹ The only extensive discussion of SibOr 12 is that of Geffcken, “Römische Kaiser im Volksmunde der Provinz.” Nachrichten von der königlichen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen, Phil.-Hist. Kl. (Göttingen, 1901) pp. 183–95. See also Komposition und Entstehungszeit, pp. 56–58; Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2155–58; Kurfess, ZRGG 7 (1955) 271.

² Cf. Bousset, Real-Encyclopedie, p. 278.

The book must be classified as political propaganda, although its immediate objective is not clear. It does little more than record popular recollections of the emperors in a traditional form.

The main literary parallels are in the earlier Sibylline Oracles, especially books 3, 5, and 8.

³ Geffcken, Nachrichten, pp. 183f.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES

Book 12

A review of history

- But come, hear my woeful history of the Latin race.^a 5.1-11
First of all, indeed, after the death of the kings
of Egypt, all of whom the evenhanded earth took under,
and after the citizen of Pella, to whom 5 all the East and prosperous West were subjected,
whom Babylon tested and held out as a corpse to Philip, alleged, not truly to be descended from Zeus or Ammon,^b 3.383; 11.197
and after the one of the race and blood of Assaracus, who came from Troy, who split the onslaught of fire,^c 11.144 10 and after many princes, after warlike people, and after infants, children of the flock-devouring beast,^d 11.110-17
and after the passage of six hundred years 11.273
and two decades of the dictatorship of Rome,

Augustus

- will be the very first man from the western sea, 5.12; 3.176
15 great lord of Rome and a brave warrior who obtained the first of the letters.^e When he has shackled you, land of splendid fruit, he will be sated with man-slaying war.^f
You will make amends for the outrage which you have willingly unleashed. 11.286f.
For he, the great-spirited one, will be best in wars.
20 Thrace will crouch in fear before him and Sicily and Memphis; 5.16-19
Memphis, cast down headlong on account of the wickedness of its 8.162; 13.53 leaders
and of an indomitable woman^g who fell beneath the spear.
He will give laws to the peoples and subordinate all things.
With mighty glory he will control dominions far and wide.
25 For no other scepter-bearing king of the Romans will ever exceed this man, even for a little time, not for one hour, because God approved all for this man;
and indeed he manifested wonderful great times
on the wondrous earth, and in them he showed signs.

Christian insertion

- 30 But whenever a bright star most like the sun 8.476; Mt 2:2
shines forth from heaven in midday, then indeed the secret word of the Most High will come 1n 1:14 wearing flesh like mortals. But with him the power of Rome will increase, and of the famous Latins,

a. Vss. 1-11 are taken directly from 5.1-11.

b. Alexander, who claimed to be son of Zeus Ammon after he visited the shrine of that god in Egypt in 332 B.C.

c. Aeneas. Assaracus, king of Phrygia, was his great-grandfather.

d. Romulus and Remus.

e. Augustus.

f. Gk. plēsthēsetai for pagēsetai (Rzach). The reference is to the conquest of Egypt.

g. Cleopatra.

Death of Augustus

- 35 but the great king himself will die by his own fate, having handed on the royal dominion to another.

Tiberius

After this man there will be a certain mighty warrior. 12.124
He will rule, wearing a purple cloak on his shoulders, 3.389 and he will be of the number three hundred on his first initial. 5.21f.

* * *

- 40 He will destroy Medes and also arrow-shooting Parthians.
In his might he will destroy a city of high gates, and evil will come upon the city of Egypt and the Assyrians, Colchians, Heniochians, and the Germans who live by the streams of the Rhine beyond the sandy banks.
45 He will also sack thereafter the city with high gates near the Eridanus,^h which was devising evils, 5.136 and then he will fall, smitten with glittering iron.ⁱ

Gaius (Caligula)

- Thereafter another man, with deceitful locks, will rule, who has obtained the number three. The initial will show 5.24 50 his name. He will collect much gold.
There will be no surfeit from much gold but shamelessly
he will ravage more and deposit it throughout all the earth.
There will be peace, and Ares will rest from wars.
He will reveal many things, having the greatest faith 55 in prophecies for the sake of livelihood and life. But on him there will come a most great sign. Bloody drops will flow from heaven on^j the dying king. Suetonius, Caligula 51
He will do many lawless things. Trusting in prophecies, 2.20, etc.;
Suetonius,
Caligula 57
he will place woes about the neck for the Romans.
60 He will kill the heads of the senate. Famine will seize Campanians and Thracians, Macedonians, Italians. Suetonius,
Caligula 26
Egypt alone will nourish numerous tribes.
The prince himself will deceitfully bring to ruin a virgin maiden, having used the mystery in utter deception.^k But citizens 65 will mourn and bury her. All will be in wrath against the prince and will deceitfully maltreat him.
A mighty man, he will perish at the hands of mighty men in flourishing
Rome.^l

Claudius

- Another lord will rule again of the number twice ten. 5.25
Then wars and mournful cares will come upon 70 the Sauromatae and Thracians and the javelin-throwing Triballi.
The Roman Ares will destroy all.
There will be a terrible sign when this man rules 11.25
over the land of the Italians and Pannonians. Around them

h. The reference is not clear. Geffcken suggests Augustodunum near the Rhone. The Eridanus was a mythical river. Cf. SibOr 5.136.

i. This assertion is erroneous.

j. Gk. kat' for kai (Rzach).

k. This reference is obscure, but presumably refers to the seduction of a vestal virgin. The Sibyllist possibly confused Caligula with Nero, who is known to have raped a vestal virgin (Suetonius, Nero 28).

l. Caligula was assassinated in A. D. 41.

- there will be dark night in the mid-hour of day^m 4.56, etc.
 75 and rain of stone from heaven. But then 14.235
 a mighty lord and judge of the Italians will go to the halls of Hades by his own fate.ⁿ

Nero

- Another man of the number fifty will come again, 5.28 terrible and frightful. He will destroy many 80 who are outstanding in wealth from all the cities, a terrible snake, breathing grievous war,^o who one day 5.29 will lay hands on his own family^p and kill them and perform many things as athlete, charioteer, murderer, one who dares ten thousand things. 5.31
 He will also cut the mountain between two seas and will defile it with 5.32 gore.
 85 But he will be destructive to the Italians, even when he has disappeared. 5.33
 Making himself equal to God, he will convince a willing people. 5.34
 There will be deep peace when this man rules 3.755; 12.172 and quaking of men. Cleaving the tide^q under the Ausonians, he will reach^r the strange water from the streams of Oceanus. 5.26f.
 90 Glancing about him, he will set up many contests for peoples, and he himself will compete as a contestant Suetonius, Nero with voice and lyre, singing a song accompanied by strings. 22-25
 Later he will flee, abandoning the royal dominion.
 Perishing wretchedly, he will make amends for what he did. 4.119, etc.

Galba, Otho, and Vitellius

- 95 After him three will rule, two lords who have obtained 5.35 in their names the number seventy, and in addition to these one of the third letter.^s They will perish, one here, another there, in mighty war, at the hands of an army.

Vespasian

- Then will come a certain lord, a great destroyer 5.36 100 of pious men,^t a man of mighty spirit, an Ares who wields the spear, who will clearly show an initial seven times ten. 5.37
 He will destroy Phoenicia and bring Syria to destruction.
 A sword will also come upon the land of Solyma
 as far as the last turning of the sea of Tiberias.
 105 Alas, Phoenicia, how much you will endure, one of great sorrows. 12.153
 You will be bound with cords^u and every nation will trample you.
 Alas, you will come to the Assyrians and will see 3.268, etc.
 infant children in slavery among hostile men,
 and wives also and your whole livelihood. Wealth will perish.
 110 For the anger of God will come upon you, one of great sorrows,

m. There were, in fact, four solar eclipses in the reign of Claudius, but none of them was noted in Italy.

n. According to Suetonius, Claudius 44: "Most people think Claudius was poisoned."

o. Gk. phusōn polemon barun for phuseōs ho bra-chus logos (Rzach). Cf. SibOr 5.29.

p. Gk. hēs geneēs for hēgemonas (Rzach). Cf. SibOr 5.30.

q. Gk. daixas for d'aixas (Rzach).

r. Gk. hixeth' for eixen (Rzach). Vss. 88f. seem to be misplaced here. They refer to Claudius' expedition against Britain in SibOr 5. Ausonians is a poetic name for Italians.

s. I.e. Galba. Otho and Vitellius (Quietellios) have the same initial in Gk.

t. While SibOr 12 recognizes that Vespasian suppressed the Jewish revolt, he stresses rather the destruction of Phoenicia and Syria.

u. Gk. sphichtēsē stropheiois for sphiktē(i)si tro-paiēsi (Geffcken).

because they did not keep his law but served all idols with disgraceful devices. 3.275-77

There will be many wars, battles and slaughters, famines and pestilence, and upheavals of cities. 4.68, etc.

115 At the end of life a noble great-spirited king, excellent himself, will fall by compulsion of the army.^v 2.23, etc.

Titus

Thereafter two other princes^w will rule, loving the memory of their father the great king,
winning much glory among spear-wielding warriors.

120 One man of these will be a noble lord.
He will have the name of three hundred, but he will fall by deceit, stretched out, even among the ranks smitten on the soil of Rome with double-edged bronze.^x 5.38

Domitian

Also after him a certain man, a mighty warrior, 125 with an initial four will rule a great kingdom, whom all mortals will love throughout the boundless earth.^y 12.37 5.40

Then there will be respite from war throughout the whole world.

From West to East all will serve this man willingly, not by compulsion,

130 and cities will spontaneously be subject or subordinate.
For heavenly Sabaoth, the imperishable God who dwells in the sky,
will especially confer glory on him.

Then famine will diminish Pannonia and all the Celtic land, and will destroy them on top of each other.

135 The Assyrians, whom the Orontes floods, will have buildings and embellishment and anything that may seem greater.^z

These the great king will love, and he will cherish them beyond the other citizens. But he himself will receive a great wound in the middle of his breast

140 at the end of life, taken deceitfully by a companion.
Within the wondrous, great palace of the kingdom
he will fall, slain.^{a2} After him will be a lord,

Nerva

a majestic man, of the number fifty who will destroy many townsmen and citizens of Rome, for every reason. 5.41

145 But he will have short rule,^{b2} for on account of the former king he will go, slain, thereafter,^{c2} to the halls of Hades.

v. Vespaian was not, in fact, assassinated.

w. Titus and Domitian.

x. This is incorrect. Titus died of fever.

y. Contrast the terse comment in SibOr 5.40: "a cursed man."

z. Domitian was famous as a benefactor of the provinces.

a2. Domitian was assassinated in A.D. 96. His wife, Domitia, was one of the conspirators.

b2. This translation of oligarchēsei, "he will have a short rule," seems to be demanded by the context. The word normally means "he will form/participate in an oligarchy."

c2. Nerva ruled for only sixteen months but he was not assassinated. He lacked support in the army, and rapidly lost prestige, but he was morally blameless. Geffcken suspects that the charges leveled against him here are tendentious. Nerva had his greatest problems with those who resented the murder of Domitian.

Trajan

- Then immediately there will be another king and mighty warrior who has obtained the marked initial of three hundred. 5.42
 He will rule and ravage the diverse land 150 of the Thracians and the Germans who inhabit the savage extremities of the Rhine, and the arrow-shooting Iberians.
 Immediately another very great evil will come upon the Jews,^{d2} and Phoenicia, after these things, will drink torrential slaughter. 12.105
 The walls of the Assyrians will fall with many warriors.
 155 Again a spirit-destroying man will destroy these.
 Thereafter will be the threats of the powerful God, earthquakes and great famines throughout the whole earth,
 and snowstorms out of season and fierce thunderbolts. 3.71
 Then also a king, the great Celtic mountaineer, 5.43 160 rushing through the tumult of war to the strife of battle, will not escape an unseemly fate but will die.
 Foreign dust, which has the name of a Nemeian flower,^{e2} 5.45f.
 will cover him, a corpse. After him another will be prince,

Hadrian

- a silver-headed man. He will have the name of a sea, 5.47; 8.52
 165 presenting the beginning of the alphabet, an Ares of four syllables.
 He will also dedicate temples in all cities, inspecting the world on his own foot, bringing gifts. 8.53-56
 Gold and much alloy he will give to many.
 He will also master all the mysteries of 170 the magic shrines. Indeed the thunderbolt will give a much better ruler to men.^{f2}
 There will be long peace when this prince 3.755; 12.87 will be. He will also be a singer of splendid voice, sharer in lawful things, and just legislator. Spartan.
 175 He will fall, undone by his own fate. Hadrian 14;
 16: 26

The Antonines

- After him three will rule, but the third will come to power late in life,^{g2} 5.51; 8.65 containing three decades. But another prince will rule again, of the first unit.^{h2} After him another lord, of seven decades.ⁱ² They will have noble names.
 180 They will destroy much-spotted men, Britons and Moors, great Dacians and Arabs.

d2. The Jewish revolt in the Diaspora in A.D. 115. Again the Sibyllist touches lightly on the unpleasant chapters in Jewish-Roman relations and stresses the destruction in Phoenicia and Syria.

e2. Gk. alla Nemeiēs for ounoma d'eiē (Rzach). The wreath at the Nemean games was parsley, "selinon." Trajan died at Selinus in Cilicia. He is called Celtic because he was born in Spain.

f2. Some words are missing in this vs. The passage is a deliberate inversion of the attack on Hadrian in SibOr 8.50–59. In SibOr 8 Hadrian travels with polluted foot, here on his own foot. In SibOr 8 he will collect money, here he will bestow it. Even the mysteries in SibOr 12 are no longer "mysteries of error" (SibOr 8.58). The deification of Antinous is omitted. See further the warm praise of Hadrian in SibOr

8.131–38. The thunderbolt is associated with Zeus and is here a sign of divine approval. Spartan. Hadrian 14.3, claims that a thunderbolt once burned the victim when Hadrian was sacrificing.

g2. In SibOr 5 the third is Marcus Aurelius. The other two are Antoninus Pius and Lucius Verus. Hadrian had no children, but he adopted Antoninus. Antoninus in turn adopted Marcus Aurelius and Lucius Verus. However, in SibOr 11 the third is apparently Lucius (L = 30), although the reference is not appropriate, since he was ten years younger than Marcus Aurelius.

h2. Antoninus Pius.

i2. V = 70. The reference is to M. Annius Verus, or, as he was subsequently and more usually called, Marcus Aurelius.

But whenever the youngest of these^{j2} perishes, then indeed terrible Ares will come upon Parthia^{k2}
 again, who formerly wounded it and will finally utterly destroy it.
 Then also the prince himself will be felled by a deceitful beast while exercising his hands.^{l2} This is the alleged cause of death.

Marcus Aurelius

After him another man will rule, who knows many wise things, with the name of the first powerful king, of the first unit.^{m2} He will be good and great.

190 A mighty man, he will accomplish many things for the great Latins, for the sake of his father's memory. He will immediately decorate the walls of Rome with gold and silver and ivory, going in the marketplaces and temples with strong light.ⁿ²
 One day also a most terrible wound will spring up

13.66;
 14.131.211

195 for the Romans in wars. He will utterly destroy^{o2} the entire land of the Germans whenever the great sign of God appears from heaven, and saves bronze-helmeted men who are being worn out on account of the piety of the king.
 For the heavenly God will indeed hearken to him in everything.

200 At his prayer he will shower rainwater out of season.^{p2}
 But when those things of which I spoke are completed then also the famous kingdom of the great pious prince will fail with the revolving years.

At the end of his life, having displayed his son 205 rising to kingship, he will die by his own fate,

Commodus

leaving the royal dominion to a fair-haired lord, who will have the name of two decades.^{q2} A king from birth,
 he will receive dominion from his father.
 This man will contain all things with extraordinary calculation.

210 He will emulate the very great-spirited mighty Heracles,^{r2} and he will excel with mighty weapons, having the greatest glory in hunts with dogs and horse riding.
 He will live dangerously, quite alone.

There will be a terrible sign when this man rules.

215 On the soil of Rome there will be cloud and mist
 so that no one of mortals can see another who is near him.^{s2}
 Then indeed there will be simultaneously wars and mournful cares, whenever the prince himself, the madman crazed with love,^{t2} will come shaming his race, base, on ill-advised

Ex 10:21-23

220 couches in unholy wedlock.

Then indeed a great destructive man, concealed in bereavement, incurring wrath, will suffer evil^{u2} in the bath,
 a murderous man, shackled by deceptive fate.

j2. Lucius Verus.

k2. Avidius Cassius, who conquered Mesopotamia in A.D. 165–66. L. Verus died in 169.

l2. Avidius proclaimed himself emperor in A.D.
 175, but was assassinated three months later. The reference to the beast is, of course, legendary.

m2. The famous philosopher king succeeded as Emperor in 161 as M. Aurelius Antoninus. The reference here is to the name Antoninus.

n2. M. Aurelius was not noted for building in Rome, but he did build roads in the provinces.

o2. Gk. men for min (Alexandre).

p2. The Sibyl follows pagan tradition here—cf.
Vita Marci 24.

q2. Kommodos. He had been gradually promoted and became joint ruler in 177 at the age of sixteen.

r2. Commodus claimed to be Heracles incarnate as Hercules Romanus.

s2. This legend is recorded in Lampridius, Com-modus 16.2.

t2. Commodus is said to have lived incestuously with his sisters (Lampridius, Commodus 5.8).

u2. Gk. kaka peisetai for kaka chōsetai (Rzach).

Confusion after the death of Commodus

Know then that the destructive time of Rome is near 225 because of the passion of the ruler. Many will perish in the halls of the Palladium^{v2} at the hands of Ares.
 Then Rome will be bereft and make amends for all that it alone did formerly in many wars.
 My heart weeps, it weeps within me.

8.43
 8.129;
 3.350-55, etc.
 5.169f., etc.

230 For from the time when the first king,^{w2} proud Rome, a single man, gave a noble law to earthly men and the word of the great immortal God came to earth^{z2} until the end of the nineteenth kingdom,^{y2}
 the time of years has been fulfilled: twice a hundred, 235 twice twenty and twice two, plus six months.^{z2} Then

12.32; Jn 1:14

Pertinax

the twentieth king will bereave the race, because in his dwelling he will shed his blood, smitten with a sharp bronze sword, having an initial of the number eighty,^{a3} which shows his name^{b3} and grievous old age. But he will make a widow 240 in a short time when there will be many warriors, many destructions, and murders and slaughters,
 destructive strife and woes for the sake of conquest of the lordship, and many horses and men in confusion will fall on the ground, rent asunder by wars.

Didius Iulianus

245 Then another man will come, having the sign of his name of the number ten,^{c3} and he will inflict many griefs and groanings and he will destroy many.
 He himself will again have swift fate and he will fall in mighty war, smitten with glittering iron.

Pescennius Niger

250 Another warrior of the number fifty will come,^{d3} roused from the East for the sake of the lordship.
 A warlike Ares, he will come as far as Thrace, but will flee thereafter and come to the plain of Bithynians and the soil of Cilicians. Brazen, spirit-destroying Ares 255 will quickly destroy him on the Assyrian plains.

Septimius Severus

Then a resourceful man who craftily knows what is expedient will come to power,^{c3} roused from the West.

v2. The Palladium was a sacred image of Pallas Athene, said to have been brought from Troy and kept in the temple of Vesta. It was believed to protect the city and was credited with saving Rome from the Gauls in 390 B.C.

w2. Augustus.

x2. A Christian insertion.

y2. As the emperors have been enumerated (including Avidius Cassius) Commodus is the nineteenth.

z2. This calculation is not quite correct. The death of Commodus took place in A.D. 193.

a3. Reading vs. 238 with Rzsch: thēsei ogdoëkonti^o
arithmōn for ogdoëkonti^o arithmon eteos.

b3. Pertinax ruled for only three months. He was assassinated. Vss. 237-44 refer to the tumult of the times, not to any deeds of Pertinax.

c3. Iulianos. He was also assassinated after three months. The statement that he "will destroy many"
 is without basis.

d3. Pescennius Niger. He was proclaimed emperor by his legions in Syria when Pertinax was murdered.
 He was defeated by Septimius Severus.

e3. Gk. kratēsei for kratēsai.

- His name will have the sign of the number two hundred.^{f3} 11.91
 Much more will he contrive war for the sake 260 of royal dominion, having gathered his whole army against the men of Assyria,^{g3} and he will subordinate everything.
 The great power will rule for the Romans. In his heart will be many a scheme, the wrath of destructive Ares.
 A terrible snake, grievous in war, who will destroy all 265 earthly men who have become exalted. 5.29; 12.81;
 11.41
 Having killed noble men for the sake of wealth, like a star,
 and having ravaged the whole earth of perishing men, he will goⁿ³ to the East, and every deceit will be his.ⁱ³ 5.155, etc.

Alexander Severus

- Then when an infant Caesar reigns with him, 270 having the name of the mighty Macedonian prince of the first letter, there will be tumult around him.^{j3}
 He will escape the dread deceit of the advancing king in the bosom of the army.^{k3} But the temple-warden^{l3} ruler, of savage customs, will suddenly 275 perish in mighty war, overcome by glittering iron.
 Even when he is dead the people will rend him in pieces. 14.169
 Then indeed the kings of the Persians will rise up^{m3} 13.13.110
 . . . a Roman Ares . . . a Roman prince.
 Phrygia of many flocks will also groan with earthquakes.
 280 Alas, Laodiceia, alas, wretched Hierapolis, 3.471;
 for you first did the yawning earth receive . . .ⁿ³ 5.290,318
 * * *
 . . . will wail as men perish
 285 in the hands of Ares. But an evil fate of men will come upon you. But then, as he hastens through the eastern route to see Italy, he will fall, by glittering iron, stripped, having aroused hatred because of his mother.^{o3}

Conclusion

- For there are all sorts of seasons and each contains something different^{p3} Eccl 2:1-8 290 . . . but not all know it at once.
 For not all things belong to all. Only those who honor God and forget idols will have joy. 3.14.30, etc.
 But now, prince of the world, king of every kingdom, immortal one without falsehood—for you placed an ambrosial voice 3.1-7, etc.
 295 in my heart—stop my speech. For I do not know what I say. For it is you who utter everything in me. Prologue 90
 Let me rest a little and grant a pleasant refrain 11.324 of my heart. For my heart within is wearied of oracular words, proclaiming royal dominions.

f3. Septimius, a native of Africa, was governor of Upper Pannonia and saluted as emperor at Carnuntum after the death of Pertinax.

g3. I.e. against the army of Pescennius in the East.

h3. Gk. bēsei' for thēsei (Rzach).

i3. Gk. autō(i) for autois (Rzach). There is evidently a lacuna here. The accounts of Caracalla and Elagabalus are lost.

j3. Gk. huparxei for apaxas (Geffcken). The reference is to Alexander Severus (Alexianus), adopted by Elagabalus and entrusted with the secular administration in A.D. 221.

k3. Alexander's mother bribed the Pretorians to murder Elagabalus in A.D. 222.

l3. Elagabalus was priest of the sun-god, also named Elagabalus, in his native Emesa in Syria.

m3. In 231 the Persian king, Artaxerxes, invaded Mesopotamia.

n3. The next two lines are hopelessly fragmentary.

o3. Alexander and his mother were murdered in A.D. 235.

p3. Gk. pantoiai hekastē for panta . . . tariē (Alexandre).

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES, BOOK 13

Introduction

Sibylline Oracles 13 continues the historical sequence of Sibylline Oracles 12.¹ Some verses are lost at the beginning, before verse 7, but the first clear reference is to Gordianus III (A.D. 240–44) in verses 13–20. The review of history is very brief and extends only to the time of Odenath of Palmyra, in the reign of Gallienus (A.D. 260–68) in verses 150–73.

The reference to the persecution of Decius in verses 87f. is assumed by all commentators to have been written by a Christian. Geffcken assumed that the entire work is Christian. Against this, Rzach, followed by Kurfess, has pointed out that there is no reference to the persecution under Valerian or to his capture by the Persians, which a Christian might have seen as a punishment of God.² Verses 87f. could easily have been inserted later. There is nothing else in the book to suggest Christian authorship. If, then, the book was not written by a Christian, it is probably Jewish, not pagan. This is indicated by the references to divine providence in verse 112, the wrath of the great God (vs. 54) or of the Most High (vs. 109) and the polemic against astrology in verses 69–73 (cf. SibOr 3.227f.).³

Date and provenance

Since Sibylline Oracles 13 does not refer to the deaths of either Gallienus or Odenath, it can be dated with some confidence about A.D. 265. The place of origin is less certain. The enthusiasm shown for Odenath of Palmyra might suggest an origin somewhere in Syria, but there is also a eulogy of Egypt and Alexandria in verses 43–49. Since the other Sibylline books with which Sibylline Oracles 13 is in continuity come from Alexandria, this book was probably written there too.

Historical and theological importance

Apart from the few indications of Jewish authorship listed above, Sibylline Oracles 13 is quite without theological interest. Its historical interest is, however, considerable. Most important are the references to Mareades (also called Kyriades), a Roman traitor who twice tried to lead Parthian forces against Rome and of whom little is known.⁴ As presented in Sibylline Oracles 13.89–100 and 119–30, this figure is modeled on the Nero legend.⁵ For the Sibyllist the legend of Nero's return, which was no longer alive in its original form, was actualized in Mareades.

The hero of the book is ultimately Odenath of Palmyra, who fought for the Romans against the Parthians. He is twice described as heliopemptos, "sent from the sun" (vss. 151, 164), and while the title derives from the association of the sun with Palmyra, the phrase also recalls the savior king of Sibylline Oracles 3.652 and suggests that Odenath too was a savior figure.⁶ At the end the Sibyl prophesies that Odenath will be "intact, unblemished, and great," and will rule over the Romans (vss. 170f.). The oracle then can be understood as political propaganda in praise of Odenath.

The most significant literary contacts are with the earlier Sibyls; but there are also a number of parallels to the Apocalypse of Elijah.⁷

¹ SibOr 13 is discussed by Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, pp. 59–63; Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2158–62; Kurfess, ZRGG 7 (1955) 271f.; Bousset, Real-Encyclopedie, p. 278.

² Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, col. 2161.

³ Ibid., cols. 2160f.; Kurfess, ZRGG 7 (1955) 272.

⁴ The only other source is Trebellius Pollio. See Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 60.

⁵ See Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, col. 2159. SibOr 12.122f. are taken from SibOr 4.138f.

⁶ Compare also ApEl 2:39, which refers to a king from "the city of the sun." (Palmyra or, possibly, Heliopolis). See J. M. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Elie (Paris, 1972) pp. 63f.

⁷ See Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Elie, p. 65:

ApEl 2:28; cf. SibOr 13.62

ApEl 2:24; cf. SibOr 13.118

ApEl 2:39; cf. SibOr 13.151, 164.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES

Book 13

The Sibyl's introduction

The holy immortal imperishable God bids me again sing a great wondrous word.^a He who gave power to kings, and took it away again, and delimited for them
a time of both things, of life and of wretched death.

2.1-5, etc.

Lk 1:52

5 The heavenly God also presses me hard, though I am reluctant, to proclaim these things to kings about royal dominion.

* * *

A period of strife

Ares, furious with the spear.^b At his hand all will perish—
the infant child and the elder who legislates^c for assemblies.
For there will be many wars and battles and slaughters, 10 famines and pestilence, earthquakes and fierce thunderbolts, and many volleys of lightnings^d throughout the whole world,
and plundering and despoiling of temples.

4.68, etc.

2.6f., etc.

Gordianus III

Then indeed there will be an insurrection of enterprising Persians, Indians, Armenians, and Arabs, simultaneously, and round about these 15 a Roman king will approach, insatiable for war, a young Ares,^e leading on warriors even against Assyrians.
The warlike Ares will stretch out his spear, sending as far as the deep-flowing, silver-eddying Euphrates for the sake of retribution.^f For, betrayed by a companion,^g 20 he will fall in the rank, smitten with glittering iron.

12.277; 13.110

Philippus

Immediately a warrior who loves the purple will rule, appearing from Syria,^h a terror of war, and with Caesar, the son, he will also ravage the whole earth. Both will have the one name, five hundred added 25 to the first letter and the twentieth.ⁱ But when these lead in wars and become adjudicators, there will be rest from war for a little while, not for long.
But when the wolf pledges oaths to the flock against the white-fanged dogs, then it will do mischief, 30 hurting the wool-fleeced sheep, and will cast off the oaths.^j

14.348;

Isa 11:6

a. Gk. thespesion for theon, and add autis (Rzach).

b. Presumably a reference to the civil strife in the year A.D. 238 when the emperors Gordianus I and II, Bulbinus, and Pupienus Maximus all met their deaths.

c. Gk. geraos te themisteuōn for gegaōs te themisteuei (Alexandre).

d. Gk. asteropōn te phorai pollai for assuriōn te poroi polloi (Geffcken).

e. Gordianus III (A.D. 238–44) became emperor at thirteen. In his time Goths and Persians were defeated by Rome.

f. Gk. nemeseōs for ideteōs (Wilamowitz).

g. Gordianus III was assassinated in A.D. 244.

h. Julius Verus Philippus conspired to have Gordianus III assassinated and replaced him as emperor. In 247 he elevated his son to the rank of Augustus. Both were killed in a battle at Verona in A.D. 249.

i. A for Augustus (1), K for Kaiser (20), and Ph for Philippus (500).

j. The reference is to a treaty with the Parthians which was not fully observed.

Then also there will be lawless strife of overbearing kings in wars. Syrians will perish terribly.
Indians, Armenians, Arabs, Persians, and Babylonians will destroy each other through mighty war.

- 35 But when the Roman Ares destroys the German,^k
having conquered the spirit-destroying Ares of the ocean, then also the Persians, overbearing men, will have war for many years, but they will not have victory.
For as a fish does not swim on the summit of a lofty rock 40 with many ridges, windy and high, nor does a tortoise fly, nor an eagle swim in water,
so also the Persians are far from victory^l
on that day, insofar as the dear nurturer of Italians, which lies in the plain of the Nile by the wondrous water, 45 dispatches a seasonal tribute to seven-hilled Rome. 2.18; Rev 17:9
These things are fated. For as much, Rome, as your name 8.150 contains in numbers of counted time, for that many years the marvelous great city of the Macedonian prince will willingly supply you with corn.^m 11.303

Prophecies of woe against various peoples

- 50 But I will sing another toilsome distress for the Alexandrians, who will perish through strife of shameful men:
males, cowardly and without courage, who will love peace by preference, on account of the wickedness of their leaders. 3.366; 5.17; 8.162; 12.21
The wrath of the great God will also come upon the Assyrians, 55 and a winter flood of a river will destroy them, (a river) which will come to the cities of Caesar and harm the Canaanites.ⁿ
The Pyramus will water the city of Mopsos,^o where the Aegeans will fall on account of the strife of exceedingly mighty men.
Wretched Antioch, grievous Ares will not leave you, 4.140; 13.125
60 when Assyrian war presses around you.
For in your halls a leader of men^p will dwell who will fight all the arrow-shooting Persians, ApEI 2:28 himself sprung from the royal dominion of the Romans.
Now cities of Arabs, be embellished with temples and stadia 3.57; 8.123f.
65 and broad marketplaces and resplendent wealth, and statues of gold and silver and ivory, but above all Bostra and Philippiopolis, though given to learning,^q that you may come to great grief.
For neither the joyful spheres of the circular zodiac, 3.221-30 70 Aries, Taurus, and Gemini, nor those stars, regulating time, which appear with these in heaven, in which you, wretched one, have trusted much, will profit you when that day which is yours approaches hereafter.
Now I will sing most terrible wars for the Alexandrians, 75 who love war. A great people will perish

k. The Goths. They were not, however, defeated by Philippus.

l. The Sibyl is not referring to a historical defeat of the Parthians but is affirming a belief that Rome will eventually overcome them.

m. Alexandria. Egypt was historically a major source of corn.

n. The reference is enigmatic. Presumably the Palestinian Caesareae, not the Cappadocian or Mauretanian, are intended.

o. Mopsuestia in Cilicia.

p. Alexandre suggests Philippus, who was a native of Arabia, but this is by no means certain.

q. These cities were not especially known for astrological or astronomical learning, but there is nothing implausible in the assertion.

when townsmen are destroyed by opposing citizens, who fight for the sake of hateful strife.

Darting around these, Ares, terrible in appearance, will stir up (the strife) of war.

Then also the great-spirited one will fall, with his mighty son, 80 by deceit on account of an older king.^r

Decius

After him another great-spirited prince, skilled in the art of warfare, will rule mighty, flourishing Rome.

Emerging from the Dacians, he will be of the number three hundred, with an initial of four.^s He will destroy many.

85 And then the king will indeed slay all his kinsmen and friends, and as kings perish there will be immediately plunderings and murders of faithful men,^t suddenly, because of the former king.

Mareades/Kyriades

Then when a deceitful man comes, a foreign ally,^u 13.119-30 90 appearing as a bandit from Syria, an inconspicuous Roman, he will also deceitfully approach the race of Cappadocians and will besiege them and press them hard,^v insatiable for war.
Then you, Tyana and Mazaka, will experience captivity.

You will be in servitude, and will place your neck under the yoke for this man.

95 Syria also will weep when men perish,
nor will Selenaea then save its sacred town.

But when a wanton man flees^w from Syria in anticipation before the Romans, fleeing through the streams of the Euphrates, no longer like the Romans but like the proud arrow-shooting

4.119f., etc.

Death of Decius

100 Persians, then a lord of Italians,^x will fall in the rank, smitten by glittering iron, letting go his decorum. His sons will perish in addition to him.

Trebonianus Gallus

But when another king rules Rome
then also nations in agitation will come against the Romans;

105 a destructive Ares, with a bastard child, against the walls of Rome.^y 13.142

Then indeed there will be famines, pestilence, and fierce thunderbolts,

r. Philippus and his son were killed in battle (above, n. h). Decius had already been acclaimed emperor by his troops. He had pledged loyalty to Philippus, but his sincerity was doubted.

s. Decius (4) took the name Trajan (300) when he became emperor.

t. Decius persecuted Christianity because he wished to revive the state religion. Vss. 87–88 are usually assumed to be written by a Christian.

u. Gk. epiklētōs for epi klinēs (Rzach). The reference is to Mareades/Kyriades, a traitor who twice tried to lead Parthian forces against Rome. See the Introduction to SibOr 13.

v. Gk. piesei for pesetai (Rzach).

w. Gk. prophugēsīn aselgēs for periphuxana-selgēn (Rzach). Mareades takes on some characteristics of the Nero legend of SibOr 4 and 5.

x. Decius and his son were killed fighting against the Goths.

y. Trebonianus Gallus was a lieutenant who betrayed Decius but succeeded him as emperor in A.D. 251. His reign was a disaster. The Parthians overran Mesopotamia, the Goths again invaded, and plague was rampant. Gallus' son Volusianus was raised to the rank "Augustus," but he is not known to be illegitimate. Geffcken refers to an illegitimate son, Hostilianus.

- and terrible wars and upheavals of cities,
suddenly. Syrians will perish frightfully. 4.68, etc.
For great wrath from the Most High will come upon them.
- 110 Immediately there will be an insurrection of enterprising Persians. 12.277; 13.13
Syrians, mingled with Persians, will slay Romans, but nevertheless they will not conquer by the divinely decreed plan.
Alas, for as many as sprung from the East will flee, 3.392 with their possessions, to strange-tongued men.
- 115 Alas, of how many men will the earth drink dark blood.
For this will be the time when the living one day will pronounce a blessing on the dead with their mouths and will say that death is fair, and it will evade them. 2.307, etc.; 8.353
ApEI 2:24

The return of Mareades/Kyriades

- Now, wretched Syria, I bewail you piteously.
- 120 On you too will come an affliction from arrow-shooting men,
a terrible one, which you never expected to come upon you. 3.315
For the fugitive of Rome will come, brandishing a spear,^c 4.138f.
having crossed the Euphrates with many myriads,
who will burn you down and dispose everything badly.
- 125 Wretched Antioch, they will no longer call you a city 4.140f.; 13.59
when you fall under spears by your own folly.
When he has completely plundered and stripped you he will abandon
you,
exposed and uninhabited. Suddenly whoever sees you will weep.
And you, Hierapolis, will be a triumph-spectacle, and you, Beroea, 130 you will weep with Chalcis for her newly slain children.

Further woes in the reign of Gallus

- Alas, for as many as dwell on towering Mount Casius and as many as are in Amanus and those whom Lycus deluges, and Marsyas and silver-eddyng Pyramus.
For they will dedicate spoils as far as the ends of Asia, 135 having stripped cities, and they will take away the images of all and cast down temples on the fertile earth.
Then there will be great affliction for Gallia and Pannonia, Mysians and Bithynians, when the warrior comes.
O Lycians, Lycians, a wolf is coming to lick blood 140 when the Sanni come with Ares, sacker of cities, and the Carpians approach to fight against the Ausonians.
And then a bastard son, by his shameless daring, 13.105 will destroy a king but will immediately perish himself, because of impiety.^{a2} Afterward again another will rule, 145 bearing dominion in his names. He will fall quickly,^{b2} smitten in mighty war with glittering iron.

Odenath

Again the world will be in chaos as men perish
by pestilence and war. Persians will again set out to the tumult of Ares, raging against the Ausonians.

z. Vss. 122f. are borrowed from SibOr 4.138–39, where they are used of the return of Nero.

a2. The Sibyl mistakenly asserts that Gallus was murdered by his son. Both Gallus and Volusianus were murdered by their troops in A.D. 253.

b2. Aemilianus was acclaimed emperor by his troops in Moesia in A.D. 252 and was accepted in Italy after the death of Gallus. However, he was murdered by his troops after only three months, when Valerian was proclaimed emperor.

- 150 Then there will be a flight of Romans,^{c2} but afterward the last priest of all will come, sent from the sun,^{d2} appearing from Syria, and he will accomplish everything with deceit.
 Then there will be a city of the sun.^{e2} Around it Persians will endure terrible threats of Phoenicians.^{f2}
- 155 When two men, lords swift in war, rule over the exceedingly mighty Romans, the one will present the number seventy, the other will be of the number three,^{g2} then also a stately bull^{h2} digging the earth with its hoofs and raising dust with its two horns will do many evils to the dark-skinned serpentⁱ² which drags its coils on its scales. But he himself will perish with it.
 After him another, a well-horned stag,^{j2} will come again, hungering in the mountains, desiring in its belly to eat venomous beasts. Then will come, sent from the sun, a lion, terrible and frightful, breathing a great flame.^{k2}
- 165 Then indeed he will destroy with much shameless daring
 the stag, well-horned and swift, and the greatest beast,
 the frightful venomous one which issues many hissing noises, and the goat which goes sideways.^{l2} Him will glory attend.
- 170 He himself intact, unblemished and great, will rule over the Romans, and the Persians will be powerless.^{m2}

3.652, etc.
 13.164
 ApEl 2:39

13.151; 3.652
 ApEl 2:39

Conclusion

But God, prince, king of the world, stop the refrain of our words, but grant a pleasant refrain.

11.323f.;
 3.1-7, etc.

c2. Valerian was captured by the Parthians and died in captivity (A.D. 260).

d2. Odenath of Palmyra, who assumed the title of king when Valerian was captured. He inflicted several defeats on the Persians and was given the title "Imperator" by Gallienus with authority over the entire Near East. He is not known to have been a priest. Perhaps the Sibyl assumes the coincidence of priesthood and kingship in an oriental ruler.

e2. Palmyra.

f2. The Palmyreans are called Phoenicians here, probably because they were great traders, possibly because of a legend that they were descended from Solomon.

g2. Valerian (70) and his son Gallienus (3). Gallienus was co-regent with his father from A.D. 253 and subsequently succeeded him.

h2. Valerian. Cf. the animal imagery in Dan 7-8; 1En 83-90; 4Ezra 11-12, etc.

i2. The Parthians, in general, or their king, Shapur.

j2. Either Macrianus, sent to the East by Valerian, or his son Quietus. Quietus was killed by Odenath.

k2. Odenath, who not only defeated the Parthians but also disposed of his Roman rivals.

l2. Some rival of Odenath, possibly Balista.

m2. Odenath was murdered in A.D. 267 (possibly by his wife, Zenobia). SibOr 13 was apparently written before that date.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES, BOOK 14

Introduction

For anyone who has labored through the first eleven books of the Sibylline Oracles, the twelfth (bk. 14) must seem the ultimate reductio ad absurdum of a genre never noted for its rationality.¹ Alexandre's despairing conclusion was that the book was composed "either in insane zeal for prophecy or . . . in hope of profit."² Geffcken's indignant outburst was worthy of a Sibyl: The Sibyllist was a "Phantast . . . an ignoramus who knew nothing except the names of peoples, countries and cities, and arbitrarily mixes these, now with one, now with another traditional motif, playing mindlessly," and his prophecy was "general raving."³ Even W. Scott, who was heavily committed to finding authentic historical references in the book, can do no better than suggest "that each of the several paragraphs was originally composed as an account of some known ruler, but that they were not originally connected together in one series, and that their present arrangement is merely accidental."⁴ Precedent can be found for such random collections of oracles (e.g. SibOr 3.381–489), but in Sibylline Oracles 14 it comprises very nearly the entire book, at least verses 1–283. Since the text is also hopelessly corrupt, the book has little meaning, let alone importance.

It is possible to discern that verses 1–283 are, like the preceding books, concerned with Roman emperors, but scarcely any can be identified with any certainty.⁵ The later part of the book (vss. 284 to the end) is concerned with Egypt rather than Rome. Scott has advanced an elaborate interpretation of these verses with reference to the Arab conquest of Egypt in the seventh century. He relies heavily on emendations, and while no one can doubt that the text he emends is corrupt, that which he produces has only a dubious relation to the tradition and can scarcely serve as the basis for historical inferences.

The most interesting part of the book is in verses 340–49, which refer to a battle involving Jews, Arabs, and "Fair heads" (Europeans of some sort). Scott sees here the conquest of Alexandria by the Arabs and assumes Jewish collaboration with the conquerors.⁶ No more plausible identification has been advanced.

Date and provenance

If Scott's interpretation is correct, the book took its final form no earlier than the seventh century. In any case it seems to be the latest of the Sibylline collection and certainly cannot be earlier than the third century. The poor state of the text and uncertainty of the references prevent any definite conclusion.

There is consensus that the book was written by an Alexandrian Jew. The Alexandrian setting is obvious in verses 284–349. The Judaism of the author is reflected chiefly in the eschatological conclusion (vss. 350–61). There is nothing to suggest Christian authorship.⁷

Historical and theological importance

If Scott's interpretation is accepted, Sibylline Oracles 14 acquires some significance with reference to the Arab conquest of Egypt, but the uncertainties are too great for the oracle to have any real importance. The eschatological conclusion portrays a rather communistic

¹ The main discussions of SibOr 14 are those of Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, pp. 66–68; Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2162–65; and W. Scott, "The Last Sibylline Oracle of Alexandria," Classical Quarterly 9 (1915) 144–66, 207–28; and 10 (1916) 7–16.

² Quoted by Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2162f.

³ Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, p. 66.

⁴ Scott, Classical Quarterly 9 (1915) 146f. For an earlier attempt to find historical references in the book see A. Wirth, "Das vierzehnte Buch der Sibyllinen," Wiener Studien 14 (1892) 35–50.

⁵ See the summary by Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2163f.

⁶ Scott, Classical Quarterly 9 (1915) 223f.

⁷ Bousset, Real-Encyclopedie, p. 279, strangely assumes, without argument, that the book is Christian.

golden age when there will be no more wealth or poverty, a theme reminiscent of some earlier Sibylline passages: for example, Sibylline Oracles 2.319f.; 8.17–36, 110. The ultimate ideal, tersely expressed in verse 360, is the universal dominion of the Jews. The main theological point of the book is expressed in the opening verses: God brings to naught the pride of kings.

The main literary parallels of the book are with the earlier Sibylline Oracles.⁸

⁸ See Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, col. 2165.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES

Book 14

Against the pride of kings

- Men, why do you vainly think excessively proud thoughts
as if you were immortals, though your lordship is short,
and all wish to reign over mortals,
not perceiving that God himself hates 5 the love of lordship, and especially insatiable kings, terrible and impious. He stirs up darkness against these, because instead of good deeds and righteous thoughts
they all prefer purple mantles and cloaks, desiring the wars, woes, and murders.
10 Imperishable God, who dwells in the sky, will utterly destroy these men and make them short-lived, and will slay one here, another there.

Prophecies of various rulers

- But whenever the destroyer of bulls,^a trusting in his strength, comes, with beautiful shaggy hair, and destroys all and crushes the shepherds, they will have no strength 15 unless the young dogs, with fleetness of feet, come to the strife through the glens, eager to pursue.
The hound pursued the lion which was destroying the herdsmen.
Then there will also be a prince of four syllables,^b trusting in his strength, manifest from a unit. Brazen Ares will quickly destroy him 20 on account of the strife of insatiable men.
Thereafter two other men, princes, will rule, both of the number forty.^c In their time there will be great peace of the world and on all the people, and law and justice. But men with gleaming helmets, 25 in need of gold and silver, because of this will kill them impiously, taking them in their hands.
Then again a terrible young warrior will rule,
a lord of the number seventy, a fiery destroyer of spirits, who will impiously hand over to an army the people of Rome, 30 which is being slain in wickedness on account of the wrath of kings, when he has cast down the entire famous city of the Latins.
It is no longer possible to see Rome, nor is it possible to hear, in such form as another^d bypasser saw her a short time before.
For all this will lie in ashes, and there will be no
4.179
35 sparing of works. For the destructive^e one himself will come from heaven. Immortal God will send lightning bolts and thunderbolts
5.302f.
from the sky against men. Some he will destroy with blazing lightnings, others with fierce^f thunderbolts.
Then the infants of mighty Rome and the famous^g Latins 40 will kill the dread shameless lord.

a. The animal imagery of this passage (12–17) recalls Dan 7–8 and the Animal Apocalypse of 1En, but especially SibOr 13.158–69. Accordingly, Alexandre sees here a reference to Odenath.

b. Perhaps Aureolus, proclaimed emperor in A.D. 268 and assassinated in the same year.

c. I.e. with the initial M. No identification is possible here or in the majority of the references in this book.

d. Gk. allos for toian (Rzach).

e. Gk. oloos for holos (Alexandre).

f. Gk. maleiroisi for krueroisi (Rzach).

g. Gk. kleinoi for Rhômēs (Geffcken).

- Nor will light dust lie around him when he is dead, but he will be a plaything for dogs and birds and wolves,
 because he despoiled a warlike people.
 After him another famous man of the number forty will rule,^h
 45 a destroyer of Parthians and Germans, who unleashed terrible manslaying beasts which harass constantly on the streams of the ocean and Euphrates.
 And then Rome will be again as it was before.
 But when a great wolf comes on his soil,
 50 a prince risen from the West will thereafter die,
 cloven by sharp bronze in mighty war.
 Then another Ares of mighty spirit will rule
 the exceedingly mighty Romans, manifested from Assyria.
 He will be of the first letter and will subordinate everything in wars.
 55 He and his armies simultaneously will display dominion and establish laws. Brazen Ares will quickly destroy him when he falls in the deceitful ranks.
 After him three who have a proud heart will rule,ⁱ 5.51; 8.65;
 one with the number of a unit, one of three decades, 12.176 60 the other, a prince, will share in three hundred.
 Wretched ones, who will melt gold and silver in a great fire, the statues of temples made by hands, 3.606,618 and they will give them to the armies, furnishing them with money for the sake of victory, dividing great and noble treasures.
 65 Desiring base things, they will equally ravage
 the arrow-shooting Parthians of the deep-flowing Euphrates and hostile Medes and Massagetae, warriors with delicate hair, and Persians, men who carry quivers.
 But whenever the king comes to an end by his own fate, 70 leaving his royal scepter to his younger sons 3.115-21
 and imposing law, they will immediately forget the injunctions of the father, arm their hands for war, and set out for strife for royal dominion.^j
 The another single prince of the number three will rule 75 again, and he will quickly see fate, smitten with a spear.
 After him, then, many will perish on top of each other,
 mighty men, for royal dominion.
 One great-spirited man will rule over the exceedingly mighty Romans, an elderly man of the number four, and he will arrange all things well.
 80 Then war and strife will come upon Phoenicia when the nations of the arrow-shooting Persians come near.
 Alas, how much will fall at the hands of savage-speaking men:
 Sidon and Tripoli and proud Beirut will see each other amid corpses and blood.
 85 Wretched Laodicea, you will raise up about yourself 3.471, etc.
 a great unsuccessful war through the impiety of men.
 Alas, wretched Tyrians, you will reap the bad harvest 1.387, etc.
 whenever the sun which gives light to men fails in the day,

h. Rzach sees here a reference to Marcus Aurelius, who at various times was known as Parthicus Maximus and as Germanicus. Such a reference is quite out of context here.

i. This passage (58–64) recalls the treatment of the Antonines in SibOr 8 and 12. the letters A and L might refer to Antoninus Pius and Lucius Verus. The third initial, T, makes no sense, but the distribution of gold and silver recalls the prophecy in SibOr

8.68–72 that Marcus Aurelius would surrender the wealth of the world to the returned Nero. It is impossible to attach any meaning to the passage in its present context.

j. Rzach sees here a reference to the brothers Caracalla and Geta (the prince of the number 3 in vs. 74). Caracalla assassinated Geta and became sole emperor in defiance of their father's wishes.

- and the disk does not shine. Bloody drops will come on the earth 90 thick and frequent from heaven. 2.20, etc.
 Then a king will die, betrayed by his companions.
 After him many shameless leaders will kill each other, carrying on wicked strife.
 Then there will be a majestic prince of many counsels, 95 with a name of the number five, relying on great armies, whom men will love for the sake of royal dominion.
 Having a noble name, he will associate it with noble deeds.
 There will be a terrible sign. When he holds sway 14.179 between Taurus and snowy Amanus, 100 one certain city will perish from the land of the Cilicians,
 a beautiful and strong city of a mighty river.
 There will be many earthquakes in Propontis and Phrygia.
 A famous king will lose his life in a consumptive disease of death, by his own fate.
 105 After this man, two princely kings will rule, the one presenting a number of three hundred, the other of three.
 Therefore he will also destroy many, for the city of seven-hilled Rome, on account of the mighty kingdom. 2.18, etc.
 Then evil will come upon the senate, and it will not escape 110 when the angry king is in wrath against it.
 There will be a sign among all earthly men.
 There will be numerous showers of snow. Hail will destroy the fruits of cattle on the boundless earth.
 They themselves will fall overcome in wars 115 by mighty Ares because of the war of Italians.
 Then another resourceful king will rule, having gathered the entire army and divided money between those with bronze breastplates for the sake of war. But then the Nile beyond fruitful Libya of the mainland 5.56 120 will water for two years the black plain of Egypt and arable land. But famine will prevail over everything; and war and bandits, murders and slaughters. 4.68, etc.
 Many cities will be destroyed by warrior men with demolitions at the hands of an army.
 125 He himself will fall by glittering iron, betrayed.
 After him one who obtained an initial of the number three hundred will rule the Romans and exceedingly powerful men.
 He will stretch out a spirit-destroying spear against the Armenians, Parthians, Assyrians, and Persians, steadfast in battle, 130 and then will the foundation of splendidly built Rome be raised up with gold and alloy and silver 14.211; 12.192 and ivory ornament. A great people of all the East and prosperous West will live in her.
 A king will impose other laws on her.
 135 Afterward wretched death and powerful fate will receive him again on a huge island.
 Another man will rule of ten times three, like to a beast with beautiful shaggy hair. He will be from the Greeks by race.
 Then the town of Phthia of the Molossians, which nurtures much, 140 and Larissa will be laid low^k on the banks of the Peneius.
 Then there will be an insurrection of horse-grazing Scythia and a terrible war by the waters of Lake Maiotis, on the streams by the furthest source of the spring of Phasis, with moist foliage in the flowery meadow.

k. Gk. klithēser[?] for klutē kai (Rzach).

- 145 Many will fall at the hands of mighty warriors.
 Alas, wretched ones, as many as Ares takes with bronze.
 Then the king, having utterly destroyed the Scythian race,
 will die by his own fate, having undone his life.
 Another terrible man will rule thereafter, revealed 150 by the number four, whom all the Armenians, who drink the thick ice of the very swift-flowing Araxis,
 and the great-spirited Persians will fear in wars.
 In the midst of the Colchians and mighty Pelasgians
 there will be terrible wars and slaughters.
- 155 Also the Phrygian land and the towns of the land of Propontis, baring double-edged swords from their scabbards,
 will strike each other on account of grievous impieties.
 Then God will show a great sign to mortal men from heaven, with the revolving years, 2.34; 14.220
- 160 a bat, a portent of impending evil war.
 Then indeed the king will not escape the hands of the army 14.168
 but will die, overcome by the hand with glittering iron.
 After him another will reign again, of the number fifty, manifested from Asia, a terrible cause of panic, a warrior, 165 and he will wage war even against the splendid walls of Rome, on Colchians, Heniochians, and milk-drinking Agathyrans, the Euxenian Sea, and the sandy Gulf of Thrace.
 Then indeed the king will not escape the hands of the army. 14.161
 Even when he is dead, a corpse, they will rend him asunder. 12.276
- 170 Then indeed when the king has perished, Rome, famed for men, will be desolate, and a great people will perish.
 Then a terrible and frightful man from most great Egypt
 will rule and will destroy the great-spirited Parthians, Medians, Germans, Bosporidans and Agathyrans, 175 Britons, Iernaeans¹ and quiver-bearing Iberians, crooked Massagetae, and overbearing Persians.
 Then a splendid man will look upon all Greece
 at enmity with^m Scythia and the windy Caucasus.
 There will be a mighty sign. When he holds sway 14.98 180 crowns will rise from heaven in south and north 2.34f.
 very like shining stars.
 Then he will leave the royal dominion to his son, who is of the first letter, when by his own fate
 the manly king goes in the halls of Hades. 12.77
- 185 But when this man's son rules in the land of Rome, manifested by a unit, there will be great, very lovely peace throughout the whole earth. The Latins will love this king because of the honor of his father. 3.755; 11.79,
 etc.
 When he is hastening to go to East and West
- 190 the Romans will restrain him, even when he is not willing, as lord of Rome, because all had a friendly spirit
 for the king, the very illustrious prince.
 But after a short time wretched death will snatch him away from life, betrayed in his own fate.
- 195 Thereafter again other mighty warriors will smite each other, carrying on evil strife, having, not a princely kingdom, but one of tyrants.
 They will indeed perform many evil things in the whole world,

1. Gk. Iernaios for Permanious (Rzach).

m. Gk. echthrainōn for echthairōn (Geffcken).

- especially to the Romans, until the third Dionysus,ⁿ 200 until an armed Ares comes from Egypt whom they call by name Prince Dionysus.
 But when a murderous lion and murderous lioness
 rend the illustrious purple royal garment, the winds will snatch up the kingdom as it falls in ruins.^o
- 205 Then a holy prince, who obtained the first of the alphabet, pressing hard^p on hostile rulers for victory,
 will abandon them to dogs and birds to eat.
 Woe to you, city burned with fire, mighty Rome!
 How many things you must suffer when all these things come to pass. 5.15 3.356-62;
 5.162-78;
 Rev 18, etc.
- 210 But a great king, who is very famous for gold and alloy and silver and ivory, will rouse you up completely, and you will be first in the world with possessions and temples, marketplaces, riches, and stadia. 14.131
 Then again you will be a light to all, as you were before. 13.64f.; 3.58, etc.
 Isa 49:6; 60:1
- 215 Alas, wretched Cecropians, Cadmeans, and Laconians, who are around Peneius and Molossos, deep grown with rushes, Trike, Dodona, and high-built Ithone,
 the Pierican mountain pass around the greek peak of Olympus, Ossa, Larissa, and Calydon of high gates.
- 220 But when God performs a great sign for men, 14.158
 a dark night over the world in daytime, then, king, an end will come upon you and you will not escape
 the swift bow of your brother shot at you.
 Then a man will rule, spirit-destroying, unspeakable, fiery, 225 of royal birth, who will have his race from Egypt.
 Younger, but much better than his brother,
 he has obtained the marked initial of the number eighty.
 Then the entire world will receive the grievous wrath of the immortal God in its bosom, because of honor.
- 230 For there will come upon articulate, ephemeral man 4.68, etc.;
 famines and pestilence, wars and slaughters 2.23, etc.
 and inexhaustible darkness on the earth, mother of peoples, and disturbance of times and implacable anger from heaven, and earthquakes and burning thunderbolts 2.6
 235 and showers of stones and squalid drops. 12.75
 The lofty hilltops of the Phrygian land shook.
 The feet of the Scythian mountains were shaken, towns trembled,
 the entire ground of the land of Greece shook with them,
 and many cities will fall with headlong crashes
- 240 under the blazing thunderbolts, and with lamentations when God is greatly in wrath.^q It is not possible to flee the wrath or to escape it.
 Then a king will fall, smitten by the hand of the army,
 by his own men, like no one else.
 After him many men of the Latins will again
- 245 rise up draped with a purple cloak on their shoulders, 3.389; 12.38 who will love to obtain the royal dominion as their lot.
 Then there will be three kings on the splendid walls of Rome.
 Two will have the first number,

n. Even this reference is uncertain, despite the use of the personal name. An Egyptian ruler is evidently intended. Geffcken suggests Mark Antony, who claimed to be Dionysus, and was the third ruler to take the name in the Ptolemaic period.

o. Gk. pneumata summarpsousin ereipomenên

basileian for pneumoni summarpsousin epeigomenês basileiês (Geffcken).

p. Gk. epeigomenos for ameipsamenos (Rzach).
 q. The change in tense is in the Gk., and is typical of the inconsistency, even incoherence, of book 14.

but one will bear the name "strife"^r like no one else.

- 250 They will love Rome and the whole world, caring for men. But they will accomplish nothing.
For God was not propitious to the world, nor will he be gentle to men, because they performed many evil things.
Therefore he will bring a disgraceful spirit upon kings 255 much worse than leopards and wolves. For men with bronze breastplates, 2.267 taking them unsparingly in their own hands, will destroy princes, complete with their scepters,
who are impotently subdued and strengthless like women.
Alas, wretched men, the cream of famous Rome,
260 relying on false oaths, you will be destroyed.
Then many men who are lords of the spear will launch an attack which is not proper and will take away the offspring of the firstborn men with blood.
Then the Most High will bring upon them a fate twice as terrible^s 14.304 265 and he will destroy all men by their own deeds.
But again God will lead those who have a shameless heart to come to judgment, as many as have designed evils. 2.217
They are shut up, shooting at each other,
heading even to the judgment^t of evil.
269a All stars will fall directly into the sea, 8.190-93
270 many stars in turn, and men will call 270a a shining comet "the star," a sign of much impending toil, war, and slaughter.

* * *

- When he gathers many oracles from^u islands which declare^v to strangers battle and grievous strife and destruction of temples,^w he will tell them to gather 275 with all speed wheat and barley in the houses of Rome, as he eagerly seeks abundance for twelve months.
The city will be wretched in those days.
But immediately it will again be prosperous in no small way.
There will be calm, whenever the dominating force is destroyed.
280 Then the race of the Latins will be reigning last,
and no^x other kingdom will sprout after it.
Children and the race of children will be unshaken. 8.136
For it will be well known,^y since God himself will govern.

Conquest of Egypt by the Persians

- There is a certain dear land, a nurturer for men, 285 lying in the plain. The Nile sets limits all about it, flowing by Libya and Ethiopia.
Short-lived Syrians will ravage hither and thither all the spoil from this land. It will have a great noble, princely king, eager to send evils upon thieves.^z

r. Rzach sees here a reference to the two Augusti, Papienus and Balbinus (A.D. 238), and Gordianus III, who shared authority with them. However, he reads "twenty" (K for Kaisar) instead of "strife" to permit the identification of Gordianus.

s. Gk. dis toinun hupsistos agoi moirên tote deinên for toiên d'ou prôton agein oiktrên tote daimôn (Geffcken).

t. Gk. autên este krisin for eisoikrisin (Geffcken).

u. Gk. para for peri (Geffcken). Sibylline oracles were collected after the official oracles at Rome had been destroyed when the temple of Jupiter was destroyed in 83 B.C. (Dionysius of Halicarnassus 4.62.6).

v. Gk. phrazontas for phrazomenoi (Rzach).

w. Gk. hierôn for hieron (Alexandre).

x. Gk. k'ou for kai (Geffcken).

y. Omit hoi.

z. Gk. speudôn kaka phôresi pempein for paidôn kai phôtesi pempôn (Gutschmidt).

- 290 With terrible thought he will bring^{a2} mighty help to all of the land of proud Italy in the most terrible situations. When he comes on the wine-dark sea from Assyria and destroys the Phoenicians in their homes to fetter evil war and dread battle din, 295 there will be one lord of the land of two lordships.^{b2}
Now I will sing the laborious end of the Alexandrians.
The barbarians will inhabit sacred Egypt,
the carefree unshaken one, when envy comes from somewhere.
- 298a But when God changes times
He makes winter summer; then all the oracles will be fulfilled. 8.215
- 300 But when three children win Olympian victories, even if he tells those who ponder^{c2} to purify^{d2} first the famous oracles with the blood of a suckling animal,^{e2} the Most High, who^{f2} stretches out a long spear of mourning against all, will bring a fate three times more terrible. 14.264
- 305 Much barbarian blood will then flow in the dust
when the city is sacked by unsociable guests.^{g2}
Blessed whoever died, and blessed whoever is childless. 13.116f.;
For then^{h2} he who formerly ruled over free people, of which he was 2.190 namesake,ⁱ²
will place his neck under the yoke of slavery. 3.350-61
- 310 The prince, who was formerly very famous, will no longer^{j2} evolve plans but will incur such mournful^{k2} slavery.

The recapture of Egypt by the Romans

Then indeed an ill-fated army of Sicilians^{l2} will come immediately, bringing terror, when a great barbarian nation advances.
If they grow fruit, they will ravage the fields.

- 315 To these God, who thunders on high, will give evil instead of good.
Stranger will always plunder the hateful gold of stranger.

The Arab invasion

But when all see the blood of the flesh-eating lion and the murderous lioness comes upon the body, she will tear away the scepter from him, even from his head.^{m2}

- 320 All the peoples in Egypt will taste as at a friendly feast and will accomplish mighty deeds.
One wards off another, but there will be a great cry of battle among them.

a2. Gk. oisei for hoisin in vs. 291 (Alexandre).

b2. Scott suggests that the king in question is Chosroes II of Persia, who conquered Syria and Phoenicia and occupied Egypt and boasted that the Roman Empire was his (A.D. 616–18).

c2. Gk. phrazomenoisi for dē phrazōsi (Rzach). Scott reads "Persians" for "children" and applies vs. 300 to the conquest of Caesarea, Jerusalem, and Alexandria. The following vss. are hopelessly corrupt.

d2. Gk. kathērai for kathērē (Rzach).

e2. Scott sees here a symbolic reference to "some shedding of Jewish blood." He takes the animal as a lamb, symbolic of Jews as in 1En 90, and notes the parallel with Rev 7:14 for "to wash in the blood of the Lamb."

f2. Gk. hos for ou (Rzach).

g2. Alexandria was captured by force three times in the 7th cent., by the Persians in A.D. 617, by the Romans in 645, and by the Arabs in 646. The latter two are described in vss. 312–47. This passage refers to the first conquest. The "barbarian blood" is Roman.

h2. Gk. dē tote gar for ton gar dē (Geffcken).

i2. Gk. epōnumos for epōnumon (Rzach). The reference is to some Roman ruler.

j2. Gk. meg' aoidimos ouk eth' for men aoidimon houtos (Rzach).

k2. Gk. poludakron for poluedron (Rzach).

l2. Scott sees here a reference to the recapture of Egypt, about A.D. 627, but emends Sikelōn to ek Kilikōn, "out of Cilicia," the conjectural base from which the army set out. The emendation is very dubious, but the Sibyl is quite capable of referring to a Roman army as Sicilian.

m2. Scott suggests that the lion is Rome and the lioness the invading Arabs (A.D. 639). This is plausible, though conjectural.

- Similarly fear of raging strife will come upon men and many others will perish, 325 slaying each other by mighty battle.
Then one will come with thick dark scales.ⁿ² 13.160f.
Two others will come in agreement with each other and third to them a great ram from Cyrene, whom I previously mentioned as having fled from battle by the banks of the Nile.^{o2}
- 330 But not all will complete even an ineffectual journey.
Then with the great revolving years there will be a great length of very peaceful time. But then a second war will come uponⁿ² them in Egypt again.
It will be a naval war, and they will not be victorious.
- 335 O wretched ones, there will be a conquest of an illustrious city and it will be spoiled in wars, but not for long.
Then neighboring men, wretched ones, will flee from a great land, and will lead their gray-haired parents.
Again they will fall on a land,^{u2} greatly victorious.
- 340 The Jews^{r2} will destroy men steadfast in battle, ravaging in wars as far as the gray sea,
taking vengeance for^{s2} fatherland and parents.
He will set a race of spoil-bearing men² among the dead.
Alas, how many men will swim around the waves,
- 345 for many will fall on the sandy shores.
Fair heads will fall to Egyptian birds.^{u2}
Then the blood of mortals will be among the Arabs.^{v2} 13.28
But whenever wolves pledge oaths to dogs on the sea-girt island, then there will be a raising of towers.
- 350 Men will inhabit the city which suffered much.^{w2}

Eschatological prophecy

- No longer will there be deceitful gold or silver or acquisition of land, or laborious slavery,
but one friendship and one manner for a merry people.
All will be in common, and one equal light of life.
355 On earth evil will sink into the wondrous sea.
Then the harvest of articulate men is near. 2.164, etc.
A strong necessity insists that these things be accomplished. 3.572
Then no other chance wayfarer will say that the race of articulate men will cease to be, though they perish.
- 360 Then the holy nation will hold sway over the whole earth for all ages, with their mighty children.^{x2} 2.174-76; 3:49; 8:169;
Dan 2:44; 7:27

n2. Presumably 'Amr, the Arab leader.

o2. There is no (clear) previous reference. The three are on the Roman side in the conflict. Scott interprets the ram as the Patriarch Cyrus and takes Cyrene as "Cyrus-land." Cyrus was a bishop in Colchis before he was appointed Patriarch and Governor of Egypt in A.D. 631. Vs. 330 refers to the failure of Cyrus to expel the invaders.

p2. Gk. essep for thēset (Wilamowitz). After an armistice in A.D. 641 there was peace for four years. In A.D. 645 the Romans broke the truce by a surprise attack on Alexandria.

q2. Gk. gaia(i) for paida (Buresch). The reference is to the return of the Arabs.

r2. Gk. loudaioi for loudaiouos (Scott). Since the Sibyl is clearly favorable to the Arabs, she would not refer to any Jews who may have been killed by the invaders.

s2. Gk. poinēn arnumenoi for paimene amphoterōi (Scott). Scott suggests that the Jews were fighting to avenge Jerusalem.

t2. The Romans. "He" is presumably 'Amr.

u2. "Fair heads" refers to Germanic people in the Roman army. "Egyptian birds" is a pun, since aiguptios also means vulture.

v2. Gk. tous Arabas for tōn Arabōn (Geffcken).

w2. The reference is clearly to Alexandria, although Scott entertains the possibility that it refers to Jerusalem.

x2. Gk. tekessi for tokeusin (Rzach). The reference, of course, is to the eschatological kingdom of the Jews. The concluding eschatological oracle may be older than the remainder of SibOr 14.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES, FRAGMENTS

Introduction

As noted in the introduction to Sibylline Oracles 3, fragments 1–3 are probably part of the lost book 2 and belong with Sibylline Oracles 3.1–45. The major dissenter from this view is Geffcken, who regards them as Christian forgeries by Theophilus, but there is nothing in the fragments that requires Christian authorship.¹ Kurfess has attempted to locate the other fragments within the Sibylline corpus, but they are too brief to admit of confident identification.²

The theological significance of the fragments lies in their insistence on monotheism and denunciation of idolatry, a common theme in the Sibylline Oracles. They show no trace of the political concerns that dominate the other Jewish books and emphasize the spirituality and eternity of God in a manner reminiscent of Pseudo-Orpheus and Philo. The eschatology of the fragments is presented most fully in fragment 3 and has a strong otherworldly character. The wicked will be burned with torches for all eternity while the righteous will enjoy life in paradise. This emphasis on individual afterlife is quite atypical of the Jewish Sibylline Oracles and is most closely paralleled in the Christian redaction of Sibylline Oracles 2.

The fragments are found in Theophilus, Ad Autolyicum 2.36 (frags. 1 and 3) and 2.3 (frag. 2) with some parallels in Clement and Lactantius. Fragments 4–7 are from Lactantius and fragment 8 is from Constantine's "Speech to the Saints."

¹ Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit, pp. 69–75. See the criticisms of Rzach, Pauly-Wissowa 2A, cols. 2129f.

² Kurfess, "Wie sind die Fragmenta der Oracula Sibyllina einzuordnen?" Aevum 26 (1952) 228–35.

THE SIBYLLINE ORACLES

Fragment One

Affirmation of monotheism

- Mortal and fleshly men, who are nothing, how do you so quickly exalt yourselves, while disregarding the end of life?
You do not fear or revere God, who oversees you,
the Most High, the knowing, all-seeing, witness of everything, 5 the Creator who nourishes all, who put a sweet spirit in all and made it a guide for all mortals?
There is one God, who rules alone, exceedingly great, unbegotten, universal ruler, invisible, who himself sees all things.
He is not seen by any mortal flesh.
10 For what flesh can see with eyes the true and heavenly immortal God, who inhabits the vault of heaven?
But men, who are mortal, are not even able to stand against the rays of the sun,^a men who are veins and flesh on bones.
15 Revere him who alone is ruler of the world.
He is alone, from age to age,
self-generated, unbegotten, ruling everything throughout.
Administering judgment to all mortals in common light.
You will have the appropriate reward of wickedness 20 because you abandoned the true and eternal God and (ceased) to honor him and sacrifice sacred hecatombs
but made the sacrifices to the demons in Hades.
You walk in affectation and madness, and, having abandoned the straight, right path, you went away and wandered 25 through thorns and stakes. Vain mortals, stop roaming in darkness and black night without light and leave the darkness of night and take hold of light.
Behold, he is clear and unwavering for all.
Come, do not always follow darkness and gloom.
30 Behold, the sweet light of the sun shines outstandingly.
Put wisdom in your breasts and have knowledge.
There is one God who sends showers, winds, and earthquakes, lightnings, famines, pestilence, and mournful woes, snowstorms, and ice. Why do I name them individually?
35 He rules heaven; holds sway over earth, he himself exists.

Fragment Two

- If gods beget and yet remain immortal
there would have been more gods born than men, and mortals would never even have a place to stand.

Fragment Three

Against idolatry

- But if that which comes into being also absolutely perishes,

a. Geffcken lists several Gk. parallels to this idea, idea is ascribed to Socrates.
notably Clement, Protrepticus 6.71, where such an

Frag. 3.21;
3.8-11, etc.;
Clement, Strom
3.3.14

3.29

2.177

Lactantius, DivInst 4.6.5
WisSol 1:7; 12:1

3.11, etc; Prologue 95
Lactantius, DivInst 1.6.15
3.12; Ps-Orph vs. 12
(ed. Denis)

3.17; 4.10-11; Frag. 3.15
1Jn 4:2; Ps-Orph vs. 13
(ed. Denis), etc.
EpBar 5:10

Lactantius,
DivInst 1.6.16

3.12; 8.429, etc.
Ps-Orph vs. 10

3.547; 8.393,47

3.9f.,721; Clement, Protr 2:27

Jn 1:4-9; 8:12; 1Jn 1:6-7
1QS 3

Clement, Strom 5.14.116

Frag. 1.7, etc.
2.23, etc.

Constantine's
"Speech to the Saints," 4

Lactantius,
DivInst 1.8.3

- a god cannot be formed from the thighs of man and a womb.
But God (is) alone, unique, supreme over all. He has made heaven and sun and stars and moon,
5 fruitful earth and waves of water of the sea,
lofty mountains, perennial streams of springs.
Again, he begets an innumerable multitude of water creatures.
He sustains serpents which move on the earth and diverse kinds of birds, shrill, lisping, 10 trilling, chirping, disturbing the air with their wings.
He placed a wild brood of beasts in the valleys of mountains and made all cattle subject to us mortals.
He established a divinely fashioned ruler of all and subordinated to man things diverse and incomprehensible.
15 For what flesh of mortals is able to know all these things?
But he alone knows, who made these things from the beginning, the eternal incorruptible Creator who lives in the sky,
who provides for the good a much greater good as reward, but stirs up wrath and anger against the wicked and unjust 20 and war and pestilence and tearful woes.
Men, why do you vainly exalt yourselves so that you will be rooted out?
Be ashamed of deifying polecats and brute beasts.^b
Does not madness and frenzy take away the sense of the mind if gods steal dishes and plunder pots?
25 And instead of living in the golden boundless vault of heaven they appear moth-eaten and are woven with thick cobwebs.
Mindless ones, adoring snakes, dogs, and cats,
you revere birds and wild serpents of the earth and stone statues and handmade images 30 and heaps of stones by the roads. These things you revere and many other vain things which it is disgraceful even to mention.
There are gods which by deceit are leaders of mindless men,
from whose mouths pour deadly poison.
But he is life and imperishable eternal light, 35 and he pours out a delight sweeter than honey for men: . . .
Bend the neck to him alone
and you will incline your path among the pious ages.
Leaving all these things, you all with foolishness
and frenzied spirit quaffed a goblet full of judgment, 40 very pure, strong, well fortified, quite unmixed.
You are not willing to become sober and come to a prudent mind and know God the king who oversees all.
Therefore the gleam of blazing fire comes upon you.
You will be burned with torches all day, throughout eternity,
45 shamed by lies on account of useless idols.
But those who honor the true eternal God inherit life, dwelling in the luxuriant garden of Paradise for the time of eternity, feasting on sweet bread from starry heaven.
- Frag. 1.7, etc. Prologue 93-97
3.20-23
- Gen 1:20-21
- Gen 1:22
- Gen 1:26;
Philo, Op 28
(84-86);
Ps 8:5-8
- Job 38-42
- Lactantius,
De ira Dei 22:7
Sir 39:25
- 3.603;
Ps-Orph vs. 16
(ed. Denis)
Frag. 1.2, etc.
- 3.30;
WisSol 15:18;
12:24
- Frag. 3.22, etc.
- 3.31, etc.
- 5.77-79
- 1Jn 1:5;
Dan 2:22
- Isa 51:17; Ps 60:3; Jer 25:15
Rev 14:8
- Frag. 1.4, 15, 17, 35
2.196, etc.
2.292, etc.
- Lactantius, DivInst 2.12.19
Mt 19:29; Mk 10:17; Lk 18:18
2.316-38
2Bar 29:8; Ex 16:4; Jn 6:31-33

Fragment Four

Listen to me, articulate men, the eternal king reigns.

b. The worship of cats was a specifically Egyptian form of idolatry. c. Some words are missing in vss. 35f.

Fragment Five

Who alone is God, the invincible Creator.
 He himself established the form of the shape of mortals.
 He mingled the nature of all, begetter of life.

Prologue 98-100

Fragment Six

. . . whenever it comes
 there will be fire in the dark middle of black night.

2.196, etc.

Fragment Seven

Uncreated God.

Fragment Eight

The Erythrean, then, to God: "Why, she says, O master, do you inflict the compulsion of prophecy on me and not rather guard me, lifted high above the earth, until the day of your most blessed coming?"

3.1-5, etc.
3.296, etc.

Mal 3:2

TREATISE OF SHEM

(First Century B.C.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY J. H. CHARLESWORTH

This pseudepigraphon, attributed to Shem, the son of Noah, describes the characteristics of the year according to the house of the zodiac in which it begins. Documents like this one, which are technically called calendologia, are also attributed to other biblical personalities; one of these is called the Revelatio Esdrae de qualitatibus anni.¹ The Treatise of Shem contains twelve chapters, following the twelve signs of the zodiac running counterclockwise from Aries to Capricorn, but reversing the order of the last two so that Pisces precedes Aquarius. This inverted order was caused by a scribe who omitted a chapter in his haste to finish, but eventually added the missing chapter at the end. The scribe who copied the only extant manuscript, or an earlier scribe, warns the reader that a copyist's mistake places Aquarius after Pisces. Originally the twelve chapters were in an ascending order of desirable features, beginning with Aries, in which apparently the worst year begins, and culminating with Pisces, in which clearly the best year originates: "there will be peace and prosperity among men, and love and harmony among all the kings who are on the entire earth" (TrShem 11:18).

Text

The Treatise of Shem is preserved in a fifteenth-century Syriac manuscript, unbound, in the John Rylands University Library of Manchester (Syr. MS 44, fols. 81b–83b). The base for the present translation² is a critical edition I am preparing for the SBL Texts and Translations, Pseudepigrapha Series.

Original language

The four Greek loan words found in the Syriac text are not indicative that the original language is Greek. Each of them (see nn. a to ch. 3, c to ch. 5, d and k to ch. 7, d and g to ch. 11), with the possible exception of harmonia, "well-ordered" (see n. d to ch. 7), early passed into and became customary in Syriac. The original language seems to be Semitic

¹ See the contribution by D. A. Fiensy and the Introduction ("Theological importance") to the GkApEzra by M. E. Stone herein. Also see James, LAOT, pp. 80f., and Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 182–84. Reliable books are F. Cumont's Astrology and Religion Among the Greeks and Romans, trans. J. B. Baker (New York, 1912; repr. 1960); O. Neugebauer's The Exact Sciences in Antiquity (New York, 1957²); F. Cumont's L'Égypte des astrologues (Brussels, 1937); F. Boll's Stern Glaube und Sterndeutung: Die Geschichte und das Wesen der Astrologie, ed. W. Gundel (Leipzig, Berlin, 1931⁴; repr. 1966 with additions by H. G. Gundel). I am grateful to Professors R. E. Brown and J. F. Oates for significant advice on improving the Introduction.

² The translation attempts to expose the meaning behind the cryptic language without becoming a subjective paraphrase. It is generally an idiomatic rendering; when necessary the literal meaning is supplied in the notes. Parentheses denote words necessary in idiomatic English; brackets circumscribe the boundaries of a textual restoration. I have attempted to be consistent: ʾnš, "people," is distinguished from bynš, "men"; agricultural terms are translated by the same word, tmr?, "date," 'bwr?, "produce," prdr?, "rye," 'llr?, "harvest," zr?, "grain," hr?, "wheat," dq?, "dried peas," s'r?, "barley," dwz?, "rice." Chs. and vss. are provided herein for the first time.

since there are abundant Semitisms that appear to be original and personal names are defined according to the Semitic alphabet (chs. 2, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12). Because of the lacunae and the corrupt nature of the Syriac text³ it is impossible to discern whether the original language is Hebrew or Aramaic (Syr.). If the provenance is Alexandrian, then Aramaic would be a little more probable.

Date

It is impossible to date this document precisely and certainly; but it is logically justifiable to assume that the notations are not fictitious but historically based. If this assumption is correct, then the references to the Romans (1:5; 3:6f.; 11:12) would indicate that the document was composed in the Roman period. A. Mingana speculated that this treatise was composed after the ravaging of Palestine by Vespasian or Hadrian.⁴ His suggestion is unlikely; by that time (c. A.D. 69–138) peace had been established in the Roman Empire, and the singular most notable feature regarding a date of composition is the pervasive references to wars, usually against the Romans (3:6f.; 1:9; 2:2; 3:3; 7:8, 18; 10:10f.; cf. 5:7; 6:13; 12:8). This concern coincides with the terror of war that characterized the eastern portion of the Empire during the first two thirds of the first century B.C., and until Octavian defeated Antony in 31 B.C. at Actium.⁵ Octavian's own inscriptions and Virgil's writings demonstrate that Octavian was popularly conceived as the one who put an end to war.⁶ The fear of war between Rome and Egypt—"And the king of the Romans will not remain in one place . . . a great war and misery (will occur) on all the earth, and especially in the land of Egypt" (1:5–9)—adequately describes the period when Antony was associated with Alexandria and "married according to Egyptian law" to Cleopatra (37–30 B.C.). This passage may also refer obliquely to the suicides of Antony and Cleopatra, and the merciless acts by Octavian in Alexandria in 30 B.C. The claim that the Romans will defeat the Parthians (3:6f.), if our restoration of the text is accurate, indicates a date shortly after Antony's victory over the Armenians, Medes, and Parthians, and the celebration of this triumph in Alexandria (not in Rome as tradition demanded) in the fall of 34 B.C. Likewise the reference in 12:4—"And Egypt (will rule) over Palestine"—also fits nicely into 34 B.C., because in that year Antony, out of his exigencies, especially his need for Cleopatra's money, granted her the rule over Palestine. Then she along with her son Caesarion began a joint reign over it.⁷

The second most notable feature regarding the date of composition is the reference to and fear of "robbers," "thieves," or "marauders" (cf. 7:20; 10:7; 11:11; 12:1; cf. 6:1; 10:1; 11:1). This concern recalls the period before Octavian strengthened the Empire, built impressive and extensive highways, and established a military police, which secured relatively speedy and safe travel within the Empire. These observations cumulatively suggest that the Treatise of Shem was composed in the last third of the first century B.C., probably sometime after the events in the thirties but when the memories of the preceding era were still fresh.

It is possible to speculate further regarding the date of composition. Antony or Cleopatra may be the subject of 2:3: "And a wind will go out from Egypt and will fill the entire earth."⁸ A reference to the battle at Actium between Antony and Octavian may be couched

³ See nn. f to ch. 2, e, g, and i to ch. 5, e to ch. 6, e, j, and o to ch. 7, d and g to ch. 8.

⁴ Some Early Judaeo-Christian Documents in the John Rylands University Library: Syriac Texts (Manchester, 1917; pp. 20–29, 52–59; repr. from BJRL 4 [1917] 59–118).

⁵ Conspicuously absent are references to the internal struggles within the Roman Empire during the 1st cent. A.D., Claudius' charge to the Alexandrians to be "tolerant and friendly to the Jews" (London Papyrus, 1912), the Nero redivivus myth, the two great Jewish wars (A.D. 66–70, 132–35), both of which exacted great costs in Alexandria—50,000 Jewish lives were lost there in the first war and the synagogue was burned in the second. No significant historical event after 30 B.C. seems to be portrayed in the TrShem.

⁶ An inscription at Priene, which is just south of Ephesus in Asia Minor, dated 9 B.C., refers to Octavian as the "savior, who . . . put an end to war and . . . set everything in order." In his Res gestae divi Augusti, Octavian himself spoke of Actium as "the crowning victory," and pointed with justifiable pride at the peace he had established in the Empire: "I restored peace to all the provinces of Gaul and Spain and to Germany, to all . . ." With phrases reminiscent of the dream of a blessed future described in Isa 11, Virgil in his Fourth Eclogue (19–22) spoke of the age Octavian had inaugurated: "He shall receive the life of gods, and see/Heroes with gods commingling, and himself/Be seen of them, and with his father's worth/Reign o'er a world at peace." A reliable edition of the last two texts is contained in C. K. Barrett's The New Testament Background: Selected Documents (London, 1956; New York, 1961).

⁷ See A. E. Samuel, Ptolemaic Chronology (MBPAR 43; Munich, 1962) p. 159.

⁸ For a reliable discussion of Antony and Cleopatra, who are often presented romantically, see R. Syme, The Roman in 2:10: "two kings will oppose one another." Antony's defeat by Octavian in the sea battle at Actium, and his subsequent suicide in Alexandria, may be mentioned in 6:13-17: "And the king [the Roman Emperor Octavian] will strive with a king [Antony] and will slay him. And Alexandria will be lost . . . And many ships will be wrecked." Another reference to the results of this battle may be found in the next chapter, 7:16f.: "And the king [Octavian] will stay in one place [Octavian ends the intermittent wars and resides in Rome]. And power will leave the land [Egypt will become the personal possession of Octavian, the first Roman king of Egypt].⁹ And the nobles will flee to the sea, and there will be between (them) [in the sea] a severe war." If these conjectures are sound, then our author was thinking about the vicissitudes of life evoked by the defeat of the seemingly invincible Antony and Cleopatra. Although they commanded nearly twice as many men and ships as Octavian, they both deserted Actium before the battle was decided; ironically this is one of the greatest non-battles of history.¹⁰ Hence, it appears that a Jew composed this astrological document after 31 B.C.,¹¹ probably by the late twenties, when the victory at Actium had become a major part of Roman propaganda.¹²

Provenance

The two most likely places in which this text was composed are Egypt (mentioned in chs. 1, 2, 7, 8, 9, 12) and Palestine (specified in chs. 4, 6, 11). The latter is improbable since there is a reference to robbers who come from Palestine ("And robbers will come from Palestine" [11:11]). The numerous references to the Nile (chs. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 [restored], 7, 8, 12) demonstrate that the provenance is probably Egyptian; and the products, wheat, barley, peas, are certainly Egyptian crops. The references to irrigation (1:4; 10:18) and illnesses caused by winds bearing desert sands (4:7) increase this probability. References to the city Alexandria (4:3 and 6:14) imply that the provenance may be Alexandrian. The description of the beneficial effects of the north wind (3:1; 5:1; 8:1), the harmful characteristics of the east wind (7:3; 10:2), and the continuous references to the sea (1:10; 2:12 [twice]; 3:7; 4:5; 7:18 [twice, once restored]; 11:5; cf. 10:5), the [se]acoast (10:15), fishing (11:5), and ships (1:10; 2:12; 3:7; 4:5; 6:16; 11:6) denote that the Treatise of Shem was composed probably in Alexandria.¹³

Revolution (Oxford, 1939) and H. H. Scullard, From the Gracchi to Nero (London, 1970). An attractive account of Alexandria is presented in E. M. Forster's Alexandria: A History and a Guide (Garden City, N.Y., 1961). Scholarly discussions of Jewish life in Alexandria can be found in V. Tcherikover's Hellenistic Civilization and the Jews, trans. S. Applebaum (New York, 1959; repr. 1970); in M. Stern's "The Jewish Diaspora," The Jewish People in the First Century, ed. S. Safrai and M. Stern (Assen, 1974) vol. 1, pp. 117-83; see also pp. 184-215; and in P. M. Fraser's Ptolemaic Alexandria, 3 vols. (Oxford, 1972).

⁹ According to Samuel, the Ptolemaic kingdom ended on August 3, 30 B.C.; the following year Octavian began to reign (Ptolemaic Chronology, p. 160).

¹⁰ "The battle of Actium was decided before it was fought" (Syme, The Roman Revolution, p. 296).

¹¹ Some critics will claim the obvious has not been stated emphatically, affirming the date suggested by pointing to the voluminous astrological treatises pseudonymously attributed to King Nechepso and his priest, Petosiris, that were composed in Alexandria sometime in the 2nd cent. B.C. (Boll, Sterngläuberei, p. 24; Fraser, Ptolemaic Alexandria, vol. 1, pp. 436f., vol. 2, pp. 632f.; M. Nilsson, Geschichte der Griechischen Religion [Handbuch der Altertumswissenschaft 5.2.; Munich, 1955-61²] vol. 2, p. 269; earlier scholars dated these texts to the second third of the 1st cent. B.C., e.g. W. Kroll, "Nechepso," Pauly-Wissowa 16.2, cols. 2160-67; and E. Riess, "Astrologie," Pauly-Wissowa 2.2, cols. 1802-28, especially cols. 1816f.). Dating the TrShem in the last third of the 1st cent. B.C. fits nicely with the observation that astrology began to be popular about the time of Jesus' birth (Nilsson, Geschichte, vol. 2, p. 276).

¹² For the myth of Actium see Syme, The Roman Revolution, pp. 297, 440f. Professor J. F. Oates, who read this contribution, opinioned in a letter of February 22, 1978: "I was convinced that this is the area in which we must date it. It must come after 63 B.C., Pompeii's settlement of the East, and before A.D. 69, the Jewish revolt. Within that time period the whole set of references to particular Roman activity, as well as the movement of the vernal equinox from the House of Aires to Pisces at exactly this time, convinces me that we are talking about a period in the late 20's B.C." The severe earthquake in Palestine, which occurred during the battle at Actium, may also have been in the author's mind when he composed 7:19 (see n. k to ch. 7).

¹³ Alexandria during the hellenistic period was characterized by its astrological ideas (cf. especially Cumont, L'Égypte des astrologues; Nilsson, Geschichte der Griechischen Religion, vol. 2, pp. 268-81; Fraser, Ptolemaic Alexandria, vol. 1, pp. 434f.). For examples of zodiacal papyri in late Ptolemaic and early Roman Egypt see O. Neugebauer and R. A. Parker, Egyptian Astronomical Texts, 4 vols. (London, 1960-69; especially see vol. 3, pp. 203-12 and vol. 4, plates 46, 47, and 48). As usual, there are problems that preclude certainty regarding a provenance. Rain is mentioned throughout the treatise, and it almost never rains in Egypt. Perhaps such comments are a convention of this type of writing, or an aspect of the author's dream for a better day (in Jub 12:16-18 Abraham is portrayed as looking to the signs of the stars to see what the year would bring in terms of rain).

Historical importance

A few decades ago historians had no clear evidence that Jews composed astrological tracts at the time of Jesus; many good scholars thought this interest surfaced only late in medieval Jewish mysticism. Even quite recently the erudite and informed editors of the Encyclopedia Judaica reported that the zodiac is "first mentioned in the Sefer Yezirah," a document dated somewhere between the third and sixth centuries (EncyJud, vol. 16, col. 1191).

Jewish interest in astrology and the zodiac is at least so early as Jesus of Nazareth.¹⁴ This new insight is demonstrated by the early date of the Jewish Sibylline Oracles, especially 5.512–31,¹⁵ and the discovery among the Dead Sea Scrolls of two Jewish astrological documents, one called 4QCryptic (formerly 4Q186)¹⁶ and the other still unnamed and unpublished.¹⁷

The clearest and fullest evidence for an early Jewish interest in astrology had been unknown to scholars, although it has been shelved for most of this century in the famous John Rylands University Library of Manchester, England. The document is of course the Treatise of Shem, and like 4QCryptic the concern is not with daily manipulations of nature and man by the stars but with the determination of the year or of people (cf. TrShem 8:12) according to the zodiacal house in which they originate or are born.

If the historical reconstruction attempted above is accurate, we have a significant and unparalleled Jewish response to one of the most significant and epoch-making sea battles in the history of our culture. Jewish soldiers from King Herod of Judea along with troops from throughout the Eastern Empire united under Antony. Octavian won the battle, nevertheless, and his success at Actium enabled him to unite the "civilized" world and to lay the foundations for the greatness of the Roman Empire. He received the title that had been reserved for the gods, and even today he is known as Augustus ("the exalted one"). Significant for an understanding of many passages in the Treatise of Shem is the recognition that Augustus Caesar took Egypt as his own personal possession and began to export Egyptian grain to Rome.

Theological importance

The contention that if the year begins in Virgo then a Jew whose name contains a y, s, b, and n will be robbed and forced to flee his home contradicts the ancient tradition that the Jewish home is protected by God (e.g. cf. Ex 12:13, 22) and each member in it is protected by the solidarity of the family (cf. Lev 25:25; 47–49; Gen 4:23f.). The pervasive idea that fortune, the rise of the Nile, the movement of the stars and the moon, health, and a good harvest depend upon the power of the zodiac flagrantly compromises the ancient tradition that God is lord of the universe (cf. Pss 24, 29) and actively involved in the processes of history (e.g. cf. the cultic confession of faith in Deut 26:5–9; cf. Ps 8). The claim that ample rain depends upon the house of the zodiac in which the year begins compromises the belief that God controls the rain (e.g. cf. Amos 4:7; Zech 10:1), a central Jewish belief popularized by the colorful account of Elijah's successful prayer for rain on Mount Carmel (1Kgs 18:1, 41–46),¹⁸ and contradicts the idea that people can effect the amount of rain by petition(s), prayers, and other actions (TrShem 10:17).

In the Pseudepigrapha this biblical perspective is reaffirmed in an antiastrological context. The author of Jubilees, who venerated Shem (cf. Jub 7:10–18; 8:18; 10:13f.; 19:24f.), ¹⁴ See my "Jewish Astrology in the Talmud, Pseudepigrapha, the Dead Sea Scrolls and Early Palestinian Synagogues," HTR 70 (1977) 183–200.

¹⁵ See the discussion and translation of the SibOr herein by J. J. Collins. Book 5 was composed early in the 2nd cent. A.D. The TrShem is at least a century older, according to our dating.

¹⁶ Published by J. M. Allegro in "An Astrological Cryptic Document from Qumran," JSS 9 (1964) 291–94; repr. DJD 5, 88–91, plate XXXI. See J. Carmignac, "Les Horoscopes de Qumran," RQ 5 (1965) 199–217.

¹⁷ See J. T. Milik, Ten Years of Discovery in the Wilderness of Judaea, trans. J. Strugnell (SBT 26; London, 1959) p. 42.

¹⁸ The only scholar who has read and commented on the TrShem besides Mingana, E. R. Goodenough, claims correctly that the thin veneer of Judaism in the TrShem discloses that the author did not relate his astrological beliefs to his Jewish faith; he writes, "a Jew would seem to have believed in both Judaism and astrology but to have been content to join the two together thus loosely rather than try really to fuse them." See his Jewish Symbols in the Greco-Roman Period (New York, 1958) vol. 8, p. 199.

explicitly rejected¹⁹ ideas characteristic of the Treatise of Shem.

And in the sixth week, in its fifth year, Abram sat up during the night on the first of the seventh month,²⁰ so that he might observe the stars from evening until daybreak so that he might see what the nature of the year would be with respect to rain.

And he was sitting alone and making observations;

And a word came into his heart, saying:

“All of the signs of the stars and the signs of the sun and the moon are in the hand of the LORD. Why am I seeking?

If he desires, he will make rain morning and evening,

And if he desires he will not send (it) down;

And everything is in his hand.” (Jub 12:16–18)

While Jubilees 12, of course, was not written against the Treatise of Shem, it was directed against the astrological claims that the zodiac determined yearly rainfall, an idea expressed, for example, in the Treatise at 5:1: “And if the year begins in Leo: there will be spring rains, then the soil will be deprived of the north winds.”

The author clearly contradicts his astrological ideas when he affirms the older tradition that God is efficacious; he hears petitions and prayers for rain (8:3; 10:17; cf. 12:9). It is significant that the author refers to God only three times (8:3; 11:17; 12:9) and that twice he uses the phrase “the living God.”

The author of the Treatise of Shem was apparently a Jew. Some hellenistic Jews considerably compromised ancient traditions as they became accommodated to foreign lands and customs. Diasporic Judaism, and even Palestinian Judaism, was not guided by an established orthodoxy. The Treatise of Shem significantly improves our perception of the variegated nature of intertestamental Judaism; mere possession of it should invalidate the recent claim that astrology in Judaism was never more than a Qumranite or sectarian aberration.²¹

Noticeably absent in this document are references to angels, a belief in immortality or a resurrection from the dead, and the various levels of heaven. No Jewish festivals are noted except Passover (1:8; 6:12) and the references to it may simply be another indication of the Egyptian provenance.

The author (or a later copyist) may have attributed this document to Shem because he was the oldest son of Noah (Gen 10:21; cf. Jub 4:33), was greatly blessed and loved by his father

¹⁹ Other significant arguments against astrology are as follows: According to the author of the early chapters of 1En, astrology is an evil and demonic idea since it was taught to men by one of the fallen angels, Baraqiyal (1En 8:3). The third book of the SibOr (c. 2nd cent. B.C.) in ll. 220–36 praises righteous men who neither search the mystical meaning of the movements of the heavenly bodies nor are deceived by the predictions of Chaldean astrology. Philo of Alexandria (c. 25 B.C.–A.D. 45) attempted to refute the ideas of the astrologers and argued that Moses, although he apparently had a concept of the universe similar to that of the astrologers, taught that God alone is in control of creation, but he never suggested that the “stars or their motions” affected the fate of men (Migr 32). Josephus mentions that the veil of the Temple, which was composed of Babylonian tapestry, “typified the universe” and possessed “mystic meaning,” but although it “portrayed a panorama of the heavens, the signs of the zodiac” were not represented (War 5.212–14; cf. War 6.228–92). Later R. Johanan argued against Jewish interest in astrology by teaching that Israel is immune from planetary influence (b.Shab. 156a). The entire fourth book of Hippolytus’ Ref is directed against astrology and speculations regarding the influence of the zodiac; his attention is directed against the belief that one’s fate is determined by the house of the zodiac that is rising over the horizon at the moment of birth, an idea different from the thoughts in the TrShem but similar to those in 4QCryptic. For an informative account of the attempts by Octavian and others to control the volatile speculations of the astrologers, see R. MacMullen, “Astrologers, Diviners, and Prophets,” Enemies of the Roman Order (Cambridge, Mass., 1966) pp. 128–62. For further discussion see HTR 70 (1977) 183–200.

²⁰ I.e. Tishri, the beginning of the Jewish year. “There are four ‘New Year’ days: on the 1st of Nisan . . . on the 1st of Elul . . . on the 1st of Tishri is the New Year for [the reckoning of] the years [of foreign kings], of the Years of Release and Jubilee years, for the planting [of trees] and for vegetables; and the 1st of Shebat . . .” (RH 1.1). H. Danby, The Mishnah (Oxford, 1933) p. 188. Danby notes that Tishri “is alone spoken of throughout the rest of the tractate as ‘the New Year.’”

²¹ M. R. Lehman, using the outmoded paradigm of “normative Judaism,” claims solely on the basis of 4QCryptic and an enigmatic passage in the Talmud that “astrology never got a permanent foothold in Judaism, since it was, from the beginning, fraught with sectarian overtones.” See his “New Light on Astrology in Qumran and the Talmud,” RQ 32 (1975) 599–602. It should be added that astrology did make a “foothold in Judaism” as demonstrated by R. P. Hanina b. Hama: “The stars make one wise, the stars make one rich, and there are stars for Israel!” (b.Shab. 156a). For an excellent survey of astrology in Judaism see A. Altman, “Astrology,” EncyJud 3, cols. 788–95. Also see my article on the subject in HTR 70 (1977) 183–200.

(Gen 9:26; Jub 7:11f.; 8:18; 10:14; cf. TSim 6:5), was considered “highly honored” (Sir 49:16), and was a major figure in the sacred line that runs from Adam to Abraham (Gen 11:10–33; Jub 19:24–31). He receives as an inheritance “the middle of the earth” (Jub 8:12–30), which included the Promised Land and the three dwellings of God, the garden of Eden, Mount Sinai, and Mount Zion (Jub 8:18f.). Moreover, according to some ancient traditions, the angels taught Noah every kind of medicine and the cure for diseases; he in turn wrote all these things in a book and gave it to Shem (Jub 10:10–14). These traditions could easily have caused a Jew to attribute the ideas contained in the present document to Shem.²²

Relation to canonical books

Intermittently throughout the preceding discussion the Treatise of Shem has been compared with the Old Testament. The few parallels emphasize a difference in perspective. For example, the Old Testament prophets prophesy about what is soon to happen because of God’s involvement in history; the author of the Treatise of Shem predicts events potentially far distant in the future because of the effect of the zodiac upon earthly cycles. The Old Testament writers saw the stars as obeying God’s commands and displaying his glory;²³ the author of the Treatise of Shem claimed the heavenly bodies caused events to happen on the earth.

One passage in the New Testament²⁴ receives new illumination because of the discovery of Jewish interest in astrology prior to Jesus and his followers. Matthew 2:2 mentions that the wise men (magoi) came to Judea to see a newly born King of the Jews because “we have seen his star in the East . . .” (RSV). An alternative and better translation is “we saw his star as it rose . . .” (JB) or “we saw his star when it came up in the east . . .” (GNMM).²⁵ With either translation, and especially with the latter, it is conceivable that the author of this tradition—either Matthew himself or more probably²⁶ another Jewish Christian before him—was influenced by astrological predictions. So strong were the astrological overtones in this verse (and Mt 2:9) that some early Christians claimed it proved “that astrology may be depended on.”²⁷ Eventually St. John Chrysostom in the fourth and St. Augustine in the fifth century were forced to direct one or more sermons against an astrological interpretation of Matthew 2:1–12. St. Augustine became embroiled in a heated controversy and the influence of his opponents can be surmised by the words he used: “This star confounded the meaningless reckonings and prognostications of the astrologers when it showed these worshippers of stars

²² Shem was also accorded a significant place in holy history in later Jewish writings; cf. N. Pavoncello, “La scuola di Shem e di Ever nella tradizione rabbinica,” RevistB 27 (1979) 325–29. The TrShem is significantly different from other documents attributed to Shem. Most notable among these are the gnostic Paraphrase of Shem (Nag Hammadi Codex VII, 1) and the medieval Kitāb al-Ikhlīlājāt (T-S A45.21), or the “Book of Twitches” composed by Shem (ed. by S. Hopkins, A Miscellany of Literary Pieces from the Cambridge Genizah Collections [Cambridge University Library Genizah Series 3; Cambridge, 1978] pp. 69–71).

²³ Cf. especially Isa 40:26; 45:12; Pss 19:1, 5f.; 148:3. The concept reappears in the Pseudepigrapha: 2Bar 3:34f.; 1En 18:13–16; 21:1–6; 41:5; 86:1–6; 4Ezra 6:3. I am indebted here to W. Foerster, “astēr, astron,” TDNT 1 (1964) 503–5. King Josiah deposed the priests “who offered sacrifice to Baal, to the sun, the moon, the constellations and the whole array of heaven” (2Kgs 23:5, JB).

²⁴ Rev 4:6–8, which describes the four living creatures that surround the heavenly throne, and Rev 12:1, which describes a woman crowned with “twelve stars,” are usually interpreted in terms of the zodiac. The first passage represents the four main zodiacal constellations (Taurus, Leo, Scorpio, Aquarius), the second portrays the twelve signs of the zodiac. See R. H. Charles, The Revelation of St. John, 2 vols. (ICC; Edinburgh, 1920, repr. 1963 and 1966) vol. 1, pp. 122f., 315f.

²⁵ The GNMM is the translation behind E. Schweizer’s The Good News According to Matthew, trans. D. E. Green (Atlanta, 1975).

²⁶ Schweizer correctly sees two traditions behind Mt 2:1–12, one that emphasized the struggle between Herod and the newborn king and another that had as its motif “the homage offered by the astrologers.” These traditions were of different origin, and “Matthew was probably the first to link the two traditions.” Good News According to Matthew, pp. 36f. Another careful argument for the independent prior character of the tradition about the wise men has been published recently by F. Zinniker, Probleme der sogenannten Kindheitsgeschichte bei Mattäus (Freiburg, 1972) cf. especially p. 167.

²⁷ The quotation from these Christians is preserved by St. John Chrysostom; Homilies on the Gospel of Saint Matthew, trans. G. Prevost, rev. M. B. Riddle (Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers 10; New York, 1894) Homily 6, p. 36. Gk.: hoper esti sēmeion tou tēn astrologian einai bebaian.

that the Creator of heaven and earth was worthier of adoration."²⁸ In an earlier sermon St. Augustine claimed that "the star did not determine the marvels of Christ's birth, but Christ determined the appearance of the star among His other miracles."²⁹

The new evidence for astrology among the Jews and the early astrological interpretation of Matthew 2:1–12 should demonstrate that merely discussing the obviously striking parallels between these verses and the tradition about Balaam as recorded in Numbers 22:1–24:25, which have been demonstrated by A. Paul and R. E. Brown,³⁰ does not totally exhaust the rich complexities in Matthew. It is no longer justifiable to approach Matthew 2 with the assumption that all Jews believed the stars intervened in man's destiny only in line with God's will; and it is unwise to presuppose that Matthew's wise men must be pagans because of their astrological beliefs.³¹ Astrological speculation could well have been linked with Jesus' birth by Jewish Christians before Matthew wrote.³² At his birth (or close to it)³³ Jupiter and Saturn over a period of eight months were in conjunction three times in Pisces, the Hebrew zodiacal sign and the sign of the last days.³⁴ Later Jewish and Jewish-Christian astrologers could well have noted the significance: Jupiter, the "star"³⁵ that denoted kingship, was linked with Saturn, the "star" that represented Israel (or Palestine). A derived meaning ²⁸ St. Augustine, Sermons on the Liturgical Seasons, trans. M. S. Muldowney (The Fathers of the Church 38; New York, 1959) Sermon for the Epiphany, Sermon 201, p. 67.

²⁹ Ibid., Sermon 199, p. 62.

³⁰ A. Paul correctly argues that this "coincidence is certainly not fortuitous." See his list of six parallels between Mt and Num; L'Évangile de l'enfance selon saint Matthieu (Lire la Bible 17; Paris, 1968) pp. 100–4. See R. E. Brown, "The Balaam Narrative," The Birth of the Messiah (Garden City, N.Y., 1977) pp. 190–96.

³¹ These assumptions are expressed either explicitly or implicitly by A. Paul, who eventually reaffirms the ancient tradition that the wise men were disciples of Zarathustra (L'Évangile de l'enfance, pp. 104–12, 116–25). R. A. Oriti incorrectly states, "Since the Jews were not believers in astrology, they would attribute no special significance to the chance grouping of planets." "The Star of Bethlehem," Griffith Observer 39 (1975) 9–14. The wise men are called Zoroastrians in Leeds Arabic MS No. 184 (c. 18th cent.), which is a four, in version (Arabic four) of the oriental form of the Tiburtine Sibyl: "The Zoroastrians shall come from the east, bearing gifts for him" (p. 293). While there is no literary dependence between this text and the TrShem, there are some interesting similarities. Note, for example, vs. 9: "The ninth sun is the ninth age, in which the Lion Cub shall come out of the west, and rebuild the earth's ruins, and the world shall be prosperous and the fruit of the earth shall multiply . . ." (pp. 302f.). See E. Y. Ebiad and M. J. L. Young, "An Unrecorded Arabic Version of a Sibylline Prophecy," Orientalia Christiana Periodica 43 (1977) 279–307.

³² A cuneiform tablet, the Celestial Almanac of Sippar, predicted the triple conjunction of Saturn, Jupiter, and Mars in 7 b.c. Hence, astrologers and astronomers eagerly anticipated the celestial wonder. See the discussion and bibliographical notes in E. Stauffer, Jesus and His Story, trans. R. and C. Winston (New York, 1960); especially see pp. 32–34, 217.

³³ Jesus' birth, according to critical research, is placed between 8 and 6 b.c.; in 7 b.c. there was a conjunction of Jupiter and Saturn three times (thanks to the optical illusion of retrograde motion) in Pisces: in late May and early June, throughout October, and in early December. See the astronomical tables published by W. D. Stahlman and O. Gingerich, Solar and Planetary Longitudes for Years –2500 to +2000 by 10-Day Intervals (Madison, Wisc., 1963) p. 306. Shortly after this threefold conjunction, on February 19, 6 b.c., Mars was in conjunction with Saturn, "but the Magi, though they were expecting it, probably were prevented from observing it because the sun had by now moved into the area and all three planets were almost certainly lost in the glare of sunset." R. S. Knapp, A Star of Wonder (Chapel Hill, N.C., 1967) p. 15. For assistance in this research I am grateful to R. S. Knapp and J. P. Charlesworth, both of the Morehead Planetarium.

³⁴ W. Sinnott claims that Matthew's star was probably the conjunction of Venus with Jupiter on June 17, 2 b.c., which occurred in Leo (a lion according to early Semitic records, and Judah is called a "lion's whelp" in Gen 49:9f.) with the planets equidistant from the star Regulus (prince), which always remains between Leo's feet (cf. Gen 49:9f.). See his "Thoughts on the Star of Bethlehem," Sky and Telescope (December 1968) 384–86. Also see the response to Sinnott by the editor in chief, C. A. Federer, who offers the opinion "that Ensign Sinnott's results make the Star of Bethlehem more plausible astronomically than it has seemed heretofore." "Rambling Through December Skies," Sky and Telescope (December 1968) 390, 396.

³⁵ Mt uses the noun astēr, "star," not astron, "star, constellation." Ignatius (Eph 19.2) also uses the noun astēr. R. Rodman argues that astēr should not be taken to denote a conjunction of planets because astron would more appropriately represent "conjunction" and planēs "planet." ("A Linguistic Note on the Christmas Star," Griffith Observer 40 [1976] 8f.) Astron, however, does not mean "conjunction," and astēr does mean "planet" only when combined with planēs, as Rodman reports: planēs astēr means "wandering star." But Mt, who was a Semite not a Greek, did not originate the account (see n. 21), rather he adapted the earlier tradition in line with his pervasive emphasis upon the fulfillment of messianic prophecies. One should remember that astēr is generic and might even represent a "comet," since Origen, who obviously wrote in Gk., claimed that the star was "a new star" (astera en tē anatiolē kainon) like a comet or meteor. He claims that Chaeremon the Stoic's Treatise on Comets shows that comets occasionally did portend good things (Contra Celsum, bk. 1, 58f.). It seems unlikely, however, that astēr denoted the conjunction of two planets; it is more likely that the author of the tradition, if he used astēr, was focusing upon the unique behavior of Saturn, the star of Israel.

seems clear: In the last days a great king shall be born in Israel.³⁶ Proof of astrological speculations among the Jews prior to the birth of Christianity, as now demonstrated by the recovery of the Treatise of Shem, coupled with the indisputable fact of a "most unusual celestial display"³⁷ near the time of Jesus' birth by no means prove that Matthew 2 preserves reliable historical information; but it is now more difficult to claim that Matthew's star was created purely out of a myth.

Cultural importance

It is significant that the Treatise of Shem was composed about the time that the vernal equinox (the traditional beginning of the year, the start of spring) moved from Aries to Pisces, where it has been ever since, although it is about to move into Aquarius. This change, G. de Santillana has argued, would have evoked strong "astrological emotion" since one age was succeeding another.³⁸ It is certainly not clear, however, that this phenomenon was perceived or comprehended in antiquity. If it was, then the Treatise of Shem would be an unparalleled record of this monumental shift, the Precession of the Equinoxes.

The cultural importance of this document is even greater if, indeed, it reflects the unexpected demise of Antony and Cleopatra at Actium and their subsequent suicides in Alexandria. It becomes the first link in that literary chain of classics that features and exposes the paradigm of Antony and Cleopatra's paradoxical lives and love. It would be difficult to overestimate the influence upon our culture of such masterpieces as Plutarch's Life of Marcus Antonius, Shakespeare's The Tragedy of Antony and Cleopatra, Dryden's All for Love, and Shaw's Caesar and Cleopatra.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 182–84.

Charlesworth, J. H. "Rylands Syriac MS 44 and a New Addition to the Pseudepigrapha: The Treatise of Shem," BJRULM 60 (1978) 376–403.

———. "Jewish Astrology in the Talmud, Pseudepigrapha, Dead Sea Scrolls, and Early Palestinian Synagogues," HTR 70 (1977) 183–200.

Mingana, A. "The Book of Shem Son of Noah," Some Early Judaeo-Christian Documents in the John Rylands Library: Syriac Texts. Manchester, 1917; pp. 20–29 (intro. and ET), 52–59 (text); reprint from BJRL 4 (1917) 59–118.

³⁶ This interpretation has been defended repeatedly and has been reasserted recently by E. Nellesen (Das Kind und seine Mutter: Struktur und Verkündigung des 2. Kapitels im Mathäusevangelium [Stuttgarter Bibelstudien 39; Stuttgart, 1969] pp. 117–19, and Zinniker [Probleme] pp. 111–15).

³⁷ For Matthew's wise men this phenomenon would have been "a powerful and awesome omen, (in fact this kind of planet arrangement takes place only every eight centuries)." Knapp, A Star of Wonder, p. 15.

³⁸ G. de Santillana, Hamlet's Mill: An Essay on Myth and the Frame of Time (Boston, Mass., 1969) p. 145.

THE TREATISE COMPOSED BY SHEM, THE SON OF NOAH, CONCERNING THE BEGINNING OF THE YEAR AND WHATEVER^a OCCURS IN IT^b

1,2 1 If the year begins in Aries^c: The year will be lean. • Even^d its four-footed (animals) will die; and many clouds will neither be visible nor appear. • And grain will not reach (the necessary) height,^f but its^g rye will (reach good height) and will ripen. • And the river Nile will overflow^h (at) a good rate. • And the king of the Romans will not remain in one place. 6 And the stars of heaven will be dispersed as sparks of fire;ⁱ and the moon will be eclipsed.^j 7,8 And the first grain will die, but the last grain will be harvested. • And from Passover [until 9 the New Year]^k produce will have a blight.^l • And the year will be bad, for a great war and 10 misery (will occur) on all the earth, and especially in the land of Egypt. • And many ships 11 will be wrecked when the sea billows. • And oil will be valued in Africa; but wheat will be 12 reduced in value in Damascus and Hauran; but in Palestine it^m will be valued. • And (in that 13 region there will be) various diseases, and sicknesses, even fightingⁿ will occur in it. • But it will be allowed to escape from itⁿ and be delivered.

1 2 And if the year begins in Taurus: Everyone whose name contains a Bêth, or Yūdh, or 2 Kāph will become ill, or be wounded by an iron (weapon). • And there will be fighting.^a 3,4 And a wind will go out from Egypt and will fill the entire earth. • And in that (year)^b there will be wheat and abundant rains, but the nobles^c of the land and of the surrounding region 5 will destroy (the crops).^d • And [the rain]^e of (this) year will be withheld for three months, 6 and afterward produce will be exceedingly expensive for thirty-six days. • And many people 7 will die from diseases of the throat, then leanness will cease.^f • And the first grain will perish

1 a. MS: w'lm', "world, age"; ed. corr.: w'lm', "whatever." According to the author of Jub, Shem inherited Palestine when the earth was distributed among the sons of Noah. The land given to Ham is hot, that to Japheth is cold, but that to Shem is neither hot nor cold (see Jub 8:12–30, esp. vs. 18). According to the Book of the Bee (ch. 21), Noah commands Shem "to see the sources of the rivers and the seas and the structure of the earth." ET: E. A. W. Budge, The Book of the Bee (Anecdota Oxoniensia, Semitic Series 1.2; Oxford, 1886) p. 35.

b. Nothing—not even a dot or space—distinguishes the title from the body of the text; both are on the same line and in red ink.

c. Italics denote red lettering in the MS. The author obviously is thinking about the houses (georac) of the zodiac, which change approximately every two hours as the earth daily rotates on its axis. He is not referring to the signs (heliarc) of the zodiac, which divide the year into twelve parts as the earth revolves around the sun. Each year begins in a different house, but years begin in the same sign for intervals of approximately two thousand years. Since the beginning of recorded history years have begun in only three signs: Taurus, Aries, and Pisces.

d. Waw copula is translated in numerous ways: "then," "and," "although," "but," "even," "for." In a more idiomatic translation the superfluous Waw would be omitted.

e. Lit. "come to pass."

f. Lit. "And grain, height will not be to it."

g. The pronoun refers back to Aries.

h. Fol. 81b ends. Lit. "will overflow a good overflow."

i. Perhaps this sentence means that there will be meteor showers.

j. In this text nez'ar, "it will become feeble," means "it will be eclipsed." See 4:4. In Syr. "the waning moon" is sahrā khadh ḥassir.

k. A lacuna of 50 mm., room for approximately fourteen letters. Ed. proposes: ['dmt lwt ryl šj'hr], "until the New Year."

l. Or, "mildew."

m. Lit. "they will be valued"; but "wheat" is lit. "grains of wheat."

n. Syr. wzyn' means "and weapons" but in some phrases denotes "war." However, our author in 1:9 uses qrb' to denote war. Mingana suggested emending the text to zw', "earthquake."

o. I.e. Palestine.

p. The MS incorrectly has a dot over the H.

2 a. See n. n, ch. 1. Mingana emended the text to zw', "earthquake."

b. Lit. "it."

c. "Abundant" and "nobles" are both from rawr'bhā.

d. Lit. "them."

e. A lacuna of 10 mm., which is approximately the size of mtr' in the preceding line. Parts of the m and 'a are barely visible. wmtr', "and rain," moreover, is written in the margin.

f. This phrase is unattractive and unsophisticated in Syr. qynwr', "leanness," is usually a word with good connotations: "fineness." 'bd, "cease," lit. means "perish" (see the next verb in the text).

8 in like manner, but the last grain will be harvested.^a •And barley^b and dried peasⁱ will (also)
 9,10 be harvested. •And devils will attack men but will not harm them in any way. •And two 11,12 kings will oppose one another. •And the large river Nile will rise above its banks.^j •Those who are on a ship in the midst of the sea or people who are on the sea will be in severe 13 misery. •But at the close of the year there will be great blessing.

1 3 And if the year begins in Gemini: The moon will be beautiful and a north wind will blow
 2 and rain will come from it. •And everyone whose name has a Taw, or Hëth, or Mîm will 3 have on his face^a leprosy^b or a mark. •And in the beginning of the year there will be a harsh 4 war.^c •And there will be spring rains and grain [will be good]^d and beautiful, and especially 5,6 the grain that has been irrigated. •And mice^e will multiply^f on the earth. •And the Romans
 7 [and the Parthian]^g will make severe wars with each other. •And the Romans will proceed
 8 by ships on the sea, then they will cause a war and destroy the (Parthians).^h •And evil people will proceed in this world and they will do evil;ⁱ then there will be anxiety and harsh misery.
 9 But at the end of the year there will be prosperity; even the river Nile will overflow exceedingly.

1 4 And if the year begins in Cancer: In the beginning of the year there will be a sufficiency
 2 of produce and people will be healthy.^a •And the Nile will overflow half its (usual) rate.^b
 3,4 And Alexandria will be afflicted, and misery from the plague will be in it. •And the stars
 5 will shine magnificently for the moon will be eclipsed.^c •And many ships will be wrecked
 6,7 in the sea.^d •And in the beginning of the ye[ar wheat and barley will be expensive].^e •And winds will increase, then many people will be ill from sties (of the eyes) and from coughing 8 and vomiting.^f •And wine will be abundant, but bulls, and sheep, and small cattle will perish, 9,10 even dried peas will perish. •But oil will compensate (for) them.^g •Then at the end of the 11 year the harvest will be wearisome^h for nine days, but afterward there will be rain. •And great blessing will be in (this year).ⁱ

g. Cf. 1:7 in which the verb 'r is an imperfect; here it is an active participle with passive meaning.

h. A plural noun in Syr.

i. Legumen aridum, cf. R. Payne Smith's Thesaurus Syriacus, vol. 1, cols. 297f. Also see R. Köbert's Vocabularium Syriacum, p. 45. Mingana, incorrectly: "the watered cereals."

j. Lit. "its measure."

3 a. Gk. prosôpon.

b. There may be a play on words between garb'yâ, "north," and garbâ, "leprosy."

c. The scribe errs and writes twice "a harsh war."

d. A lacuna of approximately 12 mm., just enough room for n'ḇ, "will be good." The scribe extends the T far above the other consonants and here it is visible above the lacuna.

e. Syr. w'qwbḥ is an error for w'wqbr. In Syr. MSS the consonants q and w are easily confused; in MS 44 they are distinguishable.

f. Mingana was surprised by this verb form; it is an Aphel active participle masculine plural: masgîn.

g. A lacuna of approximately 13 mm., or enough room for five or six consonants plus the final 'A, which is barely visible. Mingana restored wprsy, "and the Persians." This restoration is philologically possible, but the Romans fought the Egyptians and Parthians. "Egyptians" is unlikely as a restoration because the bottom of the ṣ in mṣry would have been visible since the lacuna does not extend far enough below the line to absorb the long infralinear tail (see mṣryn in l. 9 of the same folio). Restore: [wprtwy], "[and the Parthian]s."

h. Lit. "them."

i. The verbs and their forms in this sentence are identical with the first two verbs in the preceding sentence.

4 a. Fol. 82a ends.

b. Lit. "And the Nile will ascend half its ascent."

c. See n. j, ch. 1.

d. Mingana forgot to translate this sentence.

e. A lacuna of approximately 50 mm. A hand different from the original scribe's has added these words in the right margin of fol. 82b. This hand appears to have written n'qdn, "will be burned," instead of n'qrn, "will be expensive." See 2:5, "produce will be exceedingly expensive."

f. The word in the MS, *wrs*², is not found in the Syr. lexicons by R. Payne Smith and R. Köbert (but cf. C. Brockelmann, p. 737). Emend the r to a d by simply moving a dot, *wds*²; and compare the Ar. das'atun, "vomiting" (E. W. Lane, bk. 1, pt. 3, p. 879). Mingana (without explanation): "back aches."

g. Lit. "will make them equal"; taking nṣw as an Aphel imperfect. Mingana: "will make up for them."

h. Mingana reported incorrectly that the MS has r'bd; it has r'qd, which should be emended to r'qr, "wearisome" (cf. 2:5). Strictly speaking this restoration is not an emendation since a consonant is not altered; only one diacritical dot is moved.

i. Lit. "it."

1 5 And if the year begins in Leo: There will be spring rains, then the soil will be deprived
 2 of^a the north winds. •And grain will be enjoyed^b, for^c indeed the food of men will be good.
 3.4 And wheat and rice and dried peas will be expensive, and wheat must be irrigated. •And 5.6 oil and dates will be expensive. •And there will be disease among men. •And pregnant
 7.8 (females)^d and small cattle will die. •And the king^e will strive with a king. •And the large locust(s)^f will come and will not subside; but somewhat [gradually]^g they will swirl in circles^h 9.10 and shrink (back) together.ⁱ •And the river Nile will overflow its highest rate.^j •And people
 11 will have headache(s). •Then at the end of the year there will be much rain.

1 6 And if the year begins in Virgo: Everyone whose name contain Yūdhš or Semkath, and 2 Bēth, and Nūn will be diseased and robbed, and will flee from his home. •And (this 3 misfortune) will occur in the beginning of the year.^a •And shortage of water will be in every 4.5 circle.^b •And the first grain will not prosper. •And people will suffer (many) miseries^c in 6.7 winter and summer. •But the last grain will be harvested and it will be good. •And produce will be expensive in Hauran and Bithynia,^d but at the end of the year it^e will be inexpensive.^f 8.9.10 Even wine will be less (expensive) and pleasant. •And dates will be abundant. •But oil
 11 will be expensive. •And wheat and barley will be valued, but dried pea(s) will be reduced 12 in value. •And rain will be late and will not fall upon the earth until^g thirty days before the 13.14 Passover [feast].^h •And the kingⁱ will strive with a king and will slay him. •And Alexandria

5 a. Mingana: "will be scorched by." Although mn often denotes the agent of an action, mn with 'bd means "to be deprived of." If this document was written in Alexandria, then the loss of the north wind would also mean the loss of rain. Clouds heavy with water would form over the Mediterranean to the north of this city and not over the desert in the south. It is noteworthy that 3:1 refers to rain coming from the north wind.

b. Lit. "be beloved." Mingana: "corn will not be injured."

c. Gk. de.

d. Apparently, because of the context, only animals are meant. No distinction is drawn between men and women; the Syr. noun bnyns^g, translated "men" in 5:2, 5:5, and elsewhere, is generic.

e. Cf. 6:13 and 12:8. The MS has the plural "kings" but the verb is clearly singular. If the dots for the plural are not ignored—as they should be since they appeared relatively late in Syr. MSS—and if the verb is emended to the plural—by merely affixing wr—then the sentence would mean "And kings will strive with the king (the Roman Emperor)."

f. Here and in 7:7 "locust" is singular. Collective nouns representing animals in Syr. can take singular or plural verbs (cf. T. Nöldeke's Compensious Syriac Grammar, pp. 251f.), but is odd to have in one sentence both singular ("it will come and it will not subside") and plural verbs ("they will swirl . . . they will shrink [back]").

g. The lacuna measures 11 mm. or enough space for four or five consonants. The final 'ā is visible and is attached to a preceding consonant. The top of an l may be discerned. Restore probably [qlyl] (qallilā), which with the previous qallil means "little by little" or "gradually."

h. Mingana misread the MS, which has dwr' ldwr' not dwk' ldwk'.

i. Lit. "And the large locust will come (3 masc. sing.), and it (sic) will not decrease, but somewhat little [by little] they will turn back from circle to circle and they will shrink one with another." Mingana: "A considerable number of locusts will make their appearance and their number will decrease but slightly . . . (Mingana's desire not to emend) they will turn from one place to another and they will be gathered together." The Syr. is difficult to translate because of the conflicting verbs, idioms, cryptic style, and lacuna.

j. Lit. "its highest overflow."

6 a. Mingana claimed that there "are evidently some words missing here," and left the sentence open: "And there will be at the beginning of the year [. . .]" The line in the MS ends with "in the beginning of the year" and the author refers frequently to the "beginning," "middle," and "end" of the year; it is possible that a line or more has been omitted inadvertently due to the repetition of identical words. In fact, three lines below this one the last word is "year." Another line could have ended in "year" and the copyist could have inadvertently omitted it as his eye returned to "the year" which ended it, thinking it was the one he had just copied. This error is one of the most frequently committed by Syriac scribes. Nevertheless, there is no evidence in the MS that some words have been omitted. Scribes corrected this MS (cf. n. e, ch. 4, and d, ch. 8), and the phrase can be translated sensibly to refer to what precedes. There is, therefore, no need to suppose that some words are missing.

b. Mingana misread the MS: "in some places." See n. h, ch. 5.

c. Lit. "will have miseries." Mingana: "will be in distress and sickness."

d. Linking a plain in Transjordan with a region in northwest Asia Minor seems odd. Note that in 1:11 Hauran is joined in thought with Damascus. Perhaps "Bithynia" was originally "Batanaea," which is just north of Hauran.

e. Following the correction of "they" to "it."

f. Lit. "be valued little."

g. Lit. "the thirty days to Passover." Mingana: "during thirty days down to the time of Passover."

h. At this point the MS has a lacuna of 13 mm., which is space for five or six consonants. Restore [adh' 'idhā]:[feast]. Cf. Jn 2:23.

i. The MS has a plural noun; ignore the dots for the plural because the following singular pronoun demands a singular antecedent. Cf. 5:7 and 12:8.

15,16 will be lost.^j •And [the Nile]^k will not overflow well. •And many ships will be wrecked.
17 But at the end of the year there will be a sufficiency about everything.^l

1.2 7 And if the year begins in Libra: There will be spring rains. •And the year will be transformed. •And people will be spared^a from the east wind. •And fig trees will not produce
3,4 fruit.^b •But dates and oil will be plentiful. •But wine will be expensive. •And wheat will be 5,6,7 valued greatly. And the locust^c will appear. •And a severe war will occur in Africa. •And 8,9 men will have severe diseases. •And in the middle of the year rain will be held back (for)
10 twenty days. •And cultivated^d wheat will not ripen^e well. •And all lands will be good. •And 11,12,13 everyone whose name has a Yūdh or Bēth will be sick, and he will have anxiety, and will 14,15 go into exile^f from his land. •And wine will be damaged. •And adultery will increase, and 16,17 (licentious) desire^g will increase. •And the king^h will stay in one place. •And power will 18 leave the land.ⁱ •And the nobles will flee to the sea, and there will be between (them) [in] 19,20 the [sea]^j a severe war. •And there will be in Galilee a severe earthquake.^k •And robbers^l
21 will gather^m in Hauran and in Damascus.ⁿ •And the river Nile will overflow (at) its highest 22 rate.^o •And a severe plague will occur in Egypt, and it will be in [Gali]lee^p as in Beth Bardune
23 (the Place of Mules?).^q •People will be troubled because of (the lack of) rain.

1 8 And if the year begins in Scorpio: The north wind will blow in the beginning of the year,
2 and there will be many spring rains. •And at the end of the year everything will be expensive.
3 And rain will diminish^a until people recite^b petition(s) and prayer(s), and beseech with alms
4,5 the living God.^c •And there will be disease among women who are pregnant. •And many 6 men on account of affliction [will migrate]^d from their countries. •And wheat and barley will 7 be harvested very little, but dried peas will be harvested. •And there will be (sufficient) wine
8,9 and oil. •And ulcers will develop within the bodies of men but will not injure^e them. •And 10 the Nile will overflow half of its (usual) rate.^f •And (there will be) whispers (of hope) for

j. Mingana: "Living in Alexandria will be dear."

k. The lacuna measures 12 mm. and a final Semkath is partly visible. There is room for an l. nylws, "Nile," occupies the required amount of space in l. 12 of this fol. If further confirmation for the restoration is needed, slq, "to overflow," is used above to describe the rise of the Nile in 1:4; 2:11; 3:9; 4:2; and 5:9. Restore w[nylw]s, "and [the Nile]."

l. Another possible translation: "worth for everything." Mingana: "moderation in everything."

7 a. Lit. "will spare from the east wind." Perhaps the verb form should be changed to the Ethpa'al, "They will make supplication to the east wind."

b. Lit. "they will not have in them fruits."

c. Fol. 82b ends.

d. The Syr. noun seems to be a Gk. loan word, harmonia, which can mean "well-ordered." Since the Gk. word also denotes "means of joining" the expression may denote a hybrid wheat. The Gk. noun, however, is not reported to have been used in an agricultural sense. Mingana merely transliterated the word.

e. Emend the text as Mingana suggested. Although the 'ē is clear in this particular word it is easily confused with the n.

f. Another possible translation: "into captivity." A more expert Syriac translator (or author) perhaps might have used simply one word and not four, since qallf, the Pas'el of g'lá, means "go into exile (or captivity)." Mingana: "and will emigrate from his country."

g. Syr. yā'ābhā, "earnest desire," usually has a good connotation.

h. The Roman Emperor is probably meant; cf. 1:5.

i. The same word as in 7:13. Possibly "earth" is meant (so Mingana).

j. Restore [bym]', "[in] the [sea]." The last consonant looks like an 'ā. The lacuna is 10 mm., the precise size of the preceding bym'. As seen repeatedly

(cf. 7:15), the author tends to repeat the same word. Mingana does not attempt a restoration and gives no indication in the translation that there is a lacuna. Although the space is ideal for byn[hwn], "between [them]," the final 'ā resists this restoration.

k. In the spring of 31 B.C., when the battle at Actium was in full force (akmazontes de tou peri Aktion polemou. Josephus, War 1. 370), there was a severe earthquake in Palestine (cf. Josephus, War II. 369-72; Ant. 15.121-26).

l. Gk. lēstēs.

m. Mingana emended the text to npqwn, "will appear."

n. Cf. 1:11 and 10:15, in which the scribe spells Hauran correctly and Damascus without the w after m.

o. Lit. "all of its overflow." Cf. 1:4.

p. Restore probably ḅ[ḡly]ḅ, in [Gali]lee; "the first and last two consonants and the bottom of the g are visible.

q. This sentence is problematical. Contrast Mingana: "In Egypt there will be a cruel pest, which will be in . . . that is to say mules." Further research on this document should clear up some textual problems.

8 a. This verb was used in 1:6 and 4:4 to describe the eclipse of the moon.

b. "People" is a true plural and should take a plural verb. See Nöldeke's Compendious Syriac Grammar, p. 251.

c. Mingana's translation is an expanded paraphrase: "and rain will be so scarce that people will address prayers and supplications to the living God, for the sake of food."

d. This lacuna of 13 mm. can be restored easily because a later hand has written the missing words in the left margin. Restore n[šnwn mn], "they will migrate."

e. The verb is singular; it should be plural.

f. Lit. "overflow half of its overflow." Cf. 4:2.

11 small cattle.^g • And everyone whose name has a Taw or Yūdh will become sick, but will 12 recover health. • And everyone born in Scorpio (will) survive (his birth),^h but at the end of the year he will be killed.

1 9 And if the year begins in Sagittarius: Everyone whose name contains a Bēth or Pē will have misery and a severe disease, and in the beginning of the year it will increase in severity.
2,3 And men in many places will be troubled. • And in the land of Egypt there will be sown
4,5 only a (very) little.^a • And in the middle of the year there will be much rain. • But men will 6 gather produce into granaries because of the (following) drought.^b • And grain will not be 7,8 pleasing. • Even at the end of the year it will not be good.^c • But wine and oil will be 9 considered good. • And adultery will increase and small cattle will die.

1 10 And if the year begins in Capricorn: Everyone whose name contains a Qōph will become
2 sick and be plundered and wounded with a sword. • And the east^a wind (will) rule^b the year.
3,4 And everyone (should) sow (early); the last (to sow) will be unsuccessful. • And in the 5 beginning of the year [everything]^d will be expensive. • Waves and storms will increase,
6 (so that) they (who are on the sea)^e will die. • And in the middle of the year produce will 7,8,9 be expensive. • And thieves will increase. • And governmental officials will be cruel. • Even 10 wasps and (small)^f reptiles of the earth will increase, and they will harm many people. • And 11 many people (will move)^g from one place to another because of the existing war. • And wars 12,13 will increase on the earth. • Then at the end of the year rain will diminish. • And in (some)
14 places grain will be harvested, but in (other) places grain will perish. • And there will be a 15 disease in Damascus and in Hauran. • And there [will be]^h a famine along the [se]acoast.
16,17 And adultery will increase. • And people will reciteⁱ petition(s) and prayers and (observe) a 18 fast and (give) alm(s) (in hope for) rain. • And irrigated grain will be good.

1 11 And if the year begins in Pisces: Everyone whose name contains a Kāph or Mīm (will)
2,3 become sick and (eventually) slain.^a • The year will be good. • And the grain (will be) good
4,5 and healthy. • And there will be spring rains. • And fishing in the sea will be [prosper]ous.^b
6,7,8 And when (the sea) billows ships will be wrecked. • And (people)^c will become sick. • And

g. Mingana stated concerning 8:10, which he omitted from his translation, "There is here a Syr. sentence for which I cannot find any satisfactory meaning." Cf. 5:6 and 9:9. R. Payne Smith (col. 672) lists under gawgā the following: "locutio secreta, . . . prayers, recommendations." We have reserved "prayer" to represent šlwʔ.

h. Lit. "he is alive." According to 8:12 the author believes that the zodiac determines not only the characteristics of each year but also the fate of people according to the time of their birth, an idea featured in 4QCryptic (see the Introduction).

9 a. Lit. "And the land of Egypt they will not sow in it anything except a little of something."

b. Lit. "failure of rain."

c. Usually the author reserves something good for the end of the year.

10 a. The original scribe observed that he had omitted the n in this word and restored it above the line.

b. This verb and the next one are participles.

c. Fol. 83a ends.

d. When the scribe turned the fol. over and began to copy the text on the back he apparently omitted the noun. Following 8:2 restore [klmdm], "[everything]."

e. Cf. 2:12 and 1:10. Mingana thought the subject again had been omitted. Perhaps it has, but the text is cryptic and is comprehensible as extant.

f. Syr. šeršā denotes vermin, and small creeping things like snakes and mice; large reptiles are represented by raḥshā.

g. Mingana claimed that a verb has been omitted. But a verb is not demanded; the cryptic style and the prepositional phrase "from place to place" can justify a non-verbal sentence.

h. Mingana restored this lacuna with bspr[ym], which is impossible. A y clearly and m partly are visible. A lacuna of 10 mm. remains after which there is a w and ²*ā*: restore bspr ym[² nh]w², "there [will be] along the [se]acoast."

i. Mingana attempted to emend the text to nsqwn, "they will offer," and placed this verb in the text itself. The text should not be altered; cf. 8:3, in which npq also means "to recite."

11 a. Mingana thought the text contained wmtdbyz, relegated this reading to the nn. with "sic!," and placed wmtbzz in his text. The text is not written neatly but seems to contain wmtdbh, "and (will) be slain."

b. A lacuna of 5 mm.; restore, with Mingana: n[s]gʷn. The top of the g is visible. Lit. "And sea fishing will [inc]rease."

c. Mingana claimed that the "subject has been omitted by the copyist." But "people" may be presupposed because of the numerous preceding phrases; cf. e.g. 10:10, 17; 9:2, 5; 8:3. Note especially 7:9, "And people will have severe diseases." Non-specialists in Syr. should be informed that Syr. verbs contain subjects, although they are indefinite pronouns. The present verb means "they will become sick."

9,10 wine and oil and wheat, each of them, shall be pleasing. •Then^d grain will be good. •There 11 will be wars and much desolation in cities; and villages will be transferred and displaced 12 from one place to another.^f •And robbers^g will come from Palestine and [many will wa]ge^h 13,14 a great war against three cities. •And the Romans (sometimes will be) victorious and 15 (sometimes) easily overcome. •And there will be a great disease among men. •And there 16 will come forth a black man who seeks the kingdom. •And the house of the kingdom will 17 perish. •And the king will seek to understand what men are saying, and (will) lay waste 18 many cities. •And no one will be able to stop him; and the fear of God and his mercies (will) be absent from him. •Then at the end of the year there will be peace and prosperity among men, and love and harmony among all the kings who are on the entire earth.ⁱ

1 12 [The section on]^a Aquarius, which (of course) is before Pisces, nevertheless because of a mistake, was copied in the (following) manner:^b When^c the year begins in Aquarius, everyone whose name contains a Lāmadh or Pē (will) become sick or utterly ruined by 2,3 marauders.^d •And in the beginning of the year rain will increase. •And the Nile will overflow
 4,5,6 its full rate.^e •And Egypt (will rule)^f over Palestine. •[Barley]^g will be harvested. •And 7,8 lamb(s) and sheep will prosper. •And the west wind (will) govern the year. •And the king
 9 will fight with a king.^h •And the first grain will prosper; but dried pea(s) will not sprout (very) much although theyⁱ (will) be harvested. And merchants (will) seek help^j from the living God.^k

d. Gk. de.

e. Mingana misread the text; ignore his "(sic)."

f. Lit. "from place to place."

g. Gk. lēstēs.

h. Mingana failed to note in his text that there is here a lacuna of 12 mm. Clearly visible is the following: w[]m̄hwn. Mingana placed in his text wrmhwn. A nun, which takes up only 2mm., will not fill the lacuna, which needs from four to six letters. dyn, "then," plus n is attractive in terms of space, but dyn does not begin a sentence. In 3:6 and 3:7 "will make" wars is n'bdwn, but this is impossible here because of the extant m and h. A key is supplied by the remnant of a S'yāmē, and g or l above the space; restore w[sgy"]m̄hwn, "and [many will wa]ge." sgy" fits neatly; see the third line on this fol.

i. The document originally ended on this very positive note. The ending of the twelve years according to the zodiac is influenced, perhaps, by the emphasis of the author's contemporaries: The fast-approaching future age would be one of peace and prosperity upon the entire earth.

12 a. Syr. [nwgr'd], "the section on," appears to be hidden behind penciled marks.

b. This opening was added by a copyist.

c. The usual introductory formula is broken, probably by the copyist who added the preface.

d. Lit. "from plundering."

e. Lit. "overflow its full overflow."

f. The preposition "over" indicates the meaning suggested above. Mingana claimed a verb had been omitted.

g. Restore [s'ṛ], "[barley]." The noun must be feminine because the verb is feminine. Cf. 2:8.

h. Cf. 5:7 and 6:13.

i. Lit. "it (will) be harvested."

j. Change m'drn, "helpers," to m'drnwt, "helps."

k. See n. i, ch. 11.

APOCRYPHON OF EZEKIEL

(First Century B.C.–First Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY J. R. MUELLER and S. E. ROBINSON

The Apocryphon of Ezekiel has not survived intact; four fragments preserved in secondary sources and one small fragment of the apocryphon itself, which is also quoted by Clement of Alexandria, are all that remain. Of these five fragments, the only one long enough to require summarization here is the story of the lame man and the blind man found in rabbinic literature and in the writings of Epiphanius.

In this story a certain king invites everyone in his kingdom except two cripples, the lame man and the blind man, to attend a great feast. Understandably offended, the two cripples devise a plan to get even. The lame man braids a rope and, throwing it to the blind man, leads the latter to himself. He then climbs onto the shoulders of the blind man. Thus equipped with the eyes of the lame man and the legs of the blind, the two men enter the garden of the king and, presumably, tear down the fruit trees or, as in the Hebrew version, eat the choice fruit. When the deed is discovered, the lame man and the blind man are brought before the king. Each appeals to his particular infirmity as proof that he could not be the guilty party. Then the wise king has the lame man placed on the shoulders of the blind, and having thus demonstrated how the deed was performed, orders them to be flogged together before him. As they are flogged, each accuses the other of being primarily responsible for the crime. The moral which is drawn from the story is that body and soul, like the lame man and the blind man, cooperate in all the deeds performed in mortality; hence, at the judgment of God, body and soul must be reunited in a resurrection so that both may receive their just deserts.

Texts

The texts for fragment 1, the story of the lame man and the blind, are found in Epiphanius' Against Heresies 64.70, 5–17 (ed. Holl), and in rabbinic literature at Sanhedrin 91a, b (attributed to R. Judah ha-Nasi, c. A.D. 200), Leviticus Rabbah 4:5 (attributed to R. Ishmael, c. A.D. 130), and in the Mekhilta on Exodus 15:1 (also attributed to R. Ishmael). The translations below are taken from K. Holl's edition of Epiphanius¹ and from the Soncino Hebrew-English edition of the Babylonian Talmud.²

Fragment 2 is found in several places, the earliest of which is the text of 1 Clement 8:2f. The translation of fragment 2 below is taken from K. Lake's edition of 1 Clement.³ Other versions of this fragment are found in Clement of Alexandria (Paid 1.10),⁴ and in the Coptic Exegesis on the Soul from Nag Hammadi.⁵ There is also an allusion to this passage in Quis dives salvetur 39.2 by Clement of Alexandria.⁶

¹ Epiphanius: Ancoratus und Panarion, ed. K. Holl (GCS 31; Leipzig, 1915) vol. 2, pp. 515–17.

² Sanhedrin, ed. I. Epstein (London, 1969) vol. 9, § 91a, b.

³ K. Lake, The Apostolic Fathers (LCL; London, 1912) p. 20.

⁴ GCS 12, p. 143, l. 20.

⁵ CG II, 6; see The Nag Hammadi Library, ed. J. M. Robinson (San Francisco, 1977) p. 186. For the view that ApocEzek did not exist as an entity prior to the time of Epiphanius, cf. B. Dehandschutter, "L'Apocryphe d'Ézéchiël: Source de l'Exégèse sur l'âme, p. 135, 31–136, 4?" Orientalia Lovaniensia Periodica 10 (1979) 227–35.

⁶ GCS 17, p. 185. A.-M. Denis (Introduction, p. 189) attributes this citation to ApocEzek, but it is an allusion

Fragment 3 is also found in Clement of Alexandria (Strom 7.16),⁷ and in Tertullian (De carni Christi 23),⁸ the Acts of Peter 24,⁹ Epiphanius (AdvHaer 30.30),¹⁰ and Gregory of Nyssa (Against the Jews 3).¹¹ Because this fragment takes on various forms in citation, obscuring the original form, all citations are translated below.

The fourth surviving fragment of the Apocryphon of Ezekiel is cited in no fewer than thirty-two secondary sources, which date from the second century A.D. well into the Middle Ages. The earliest and most important of these citations is found in Justin Martyr's Dialogue with Trypho 47.5, from which the translation below is taken.¹²

Slightly varying versions of fragment 5 are found in Clement of Alexandria (Strom 1.9),¹³ in Origen (Homilies on Jeremiah 18.9),¹⁴ and in the Manichaean Psalmbook (Psalm 239:5f.).¹⁵ The sole surviving fragment of a manuscript of the Apocryphon of Ezekiel itself, as opposed to a citation of the apocryphon found in secondary sources, contains this fifth fragment. This manuscript fragment was identified and edited by C. Bonner from among the Chester Beatty Papyri.¹⁶ This fragment confirms that the citation of Clement is from the apocryphon; the translation is based on the fragmentary text of the papyrus and the complete text of Clement.

Original language

It is extremely hazardous to speculate on the original language of compositions that are no longer extant or that are known by only a few fragments. Bearing this in mind, one may, however, hypothesize that Greek and Hebrew are the most likely candidates for the original language of the apocryphon. On the one hand, Greek might be suggested by the fact that it was so widely spoken in the intertestamental period and by the fact that the only surviving manuscript fragment of the apocryphon is written in Greek. On the other hand, Hebrew might be suggested by the appearance of a Hebrew version of fragment 1 in the rabbinic literature and by the statement of Josephus that there were in his day two books of Ezekiel, the natural inference being that he considered these companion pieces, and hence written in the same language, i.e. Hebrew. However, both of these possibilities are threads too slender to bear much weight, and in the absence of more manuscript evidence, the question of the original language of the Apocryphon of Ezekiel should be left open.

Date

The Apocryphon of Ezekiel cannot be dated later than the end of the first century A.D. I Clement (c. A.D. 95) uses the Apocryphon as one of its sources, and the Jewish historian Flavius Josephus noted (Ant 10.5.1) that Ezekiel had left behind two books, of which we may assume one to have been the apocryphon. The earliest possible date cannot be determined as precisely, although the conjecture of K. Holl¹⁷ and J.-B. Frey,¹⁸ placing the composition of the document between 50 B.C. and A.D. 50, has been generally accepted.

rather than a citation. Influence from ApocEzek can be seen throughout this chapter: (1) the presence of the term "blacker" in what appears to be a quotation from Isa 1:18, which destroys the synonymous parallelism; (2) the emphasis upon repentance "with the whole heart"; and (3) the use of the appellation "Father" (infrequently used in the treatise except on the lips of Jesus) in close conjunction with the theme of repentance.

⁷ GCS 17, p. 66, l. 25.

⁸ PL 2, col. 836.

⁹ See M. R. James, ANT, p. 325.

¹⁰ GCS 25, p. 371, l. 16.

¹¹ PG 46, col. 208.

¹² Corpus Apolegetarum 2, p. 160. For a full listing of citations, cf. A. Resch, Agrapha (TU 30.3-4, pp. 102, 322-24). A corrective to Resch has been proposed by A. Baker, "Justin's Agraphon in the Dialogue with Trypho," JBL 87 (1968) 277-87.

¹³ GCS 12, p. 139, ll. 16-27.

¹⁴ GCS 6, p. 163.

¹⁵ Cf. C. R. C. Allberry, A Manichaean Psalm-Book (Stuttgart, 1938) vol. 2, p. 39; and W. D. Stroker, "The Source of an Agraphon in the Manichaean Psalm-Book," JTS 28 (1977) 114-18.

¹⁶ C. Bonner, The Homily on the Passion by Melito, Bishop of Sardis, and Some Fragments of the Apocryphal Ezekiel, p. 186.

¹⁷ "Das Apokryphon Ezechiel," Aus Schrift und Geschichte, pp. 85-98; cf. especially p. 92.

Provenance

The fragmentary nature of the extant apocryphon makes a determination of its provenance very hazardous. Although some of the fragments may indicate a Christian redaction of the apocryphon, there is little doubt that the original was Jewish in character.¹⁹

Historical importance

Historically, the Apocryphon of Ezekiel is another example of an intertestamental text that, though Jewish in origin, has been preserved, albeit fragmentarily, only in Christian sources. This common phenomenon serves to remind the reader that intertestamental Judaism was not nearly as monolithic in its theology nor as homogenous in its literary tradition as the rabbinic Judaism of a slightly later time. Moreover, the wide popularity of the Apocryphon of Ezekiel in early Christian sources witnesses a certain latitude in the concept of canon that became less common as the Church became less and less diversified in later centuries. The transmission history of fragment 4 illustrates how an apt saying, even from an apocryphal source, could find its way into general usage and become a Christian maxim long after its origins had been forgotten.²⁰

Theological importance

The first and longest fragment is an eloquent statement of the doctrine of the resurrection and of the judgment of God in the end-time. In both the Hebrew and Greek versions the message is clear: God will reunite body and spirit in a future judgment in order to dispense justly either reward or punishment. The resurrection envisioned is a literal reunion of the departed spirit with its former body. Man is neither a spirit in a body, nor a body with a spirit, but both a body and a spirit. Without both, the identity of the individual is incomplete and he cannot be judged. Also, the individual is clearly judged as an individual and not as a member of a people or of a community. In both the Hebrew and Greek versions the criterion for judgment is the deeds performed in mortality. However, the Greek version may reflect the belief that those who were in the service of the king in the parable (Christians?) are exempt from the judgment, or that only those who are not enlisted in the king's service would perform deeds worthy of condemnation, for the Greek version has no judgment of those invited to the banquet.

Relation to canonical books

It has been suggested by some scholars that the Apocryphon of Ezekiel never existed as a separate document, but only as an expanded version of, or Midrash on, canonical Ezekiel.²¹ If we were dealing only with fragments 2, 4, and 5, this suggestion would be very attractive, for these fragments do bear some similarity to passages from the canonical Ezekiel. However, it is very difficult to understand where fragments 1 and 3 would fit in such an expanded or paraphrased text, for they are totally unlike anything in the canonical Ezekiel. Also, Epiphanius explicitly identifies fragment 1 as coming from "Ezekiel's own apocryphon."²² Moreover, any theory that the Apocryphon of Ezekiel is merely an expanded or paraphrased Christian version of canonical Ezekiel must ignore the notice in Josephus (Ant 10.5.1) that ¹⁸ DBSup, vol. 1, cols. 458–60.

¹⁹ Denis, Introduction, p. 190; K.-G. Eckart, "Das Apokryphon Ezechiel," JSHRZ 5.1 (1974) 47, 49; Holl, Aus Schrift und Geschichte, pp. 93f.; T. Zahn, Forschungen zur Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons und der altkirchlichen Literatur 6 (1900) 311; J.-B. Frey, DBSup, vol. 1, col. 460. For the opposite opinion, cf. M. R. James, "The Apocryphal Ezekiel," JTS 15 (1914) 243, and A. Resch, Agrapha, pp. 381–84.

