²⁰ A. Baker, JBL 87 (1968) 285. J. Jeremias disputes the claim that Justin has improperly attributed this saying to Jesus (Unknown Sayings of Jesus, pp. 86f.; the second English edition cited in Bibliography was translated from the substantially revised third German edition of 1963). He proposed that the Liber graduum preserved the most original form of the saying and attributed it clearly to Jesus, just as Justin did. The attribution to Ezekiel appears later only as a result of a change in the form of the citation that brings it into close alignment with Ezek 33:12–20.

²¹ See J. Danielou, The Theology of Jewish Christianity (London, 1964) pp. 105–7, and more recently, Baker, JBL 87 (1968) 285f. Resch (Agrapha, pp. 381–84) suggests that the fragments are actually from a Christian reworking of the canonical Ezekiel.

²² Epiphanius, AdvHaer 64.70.

the Jewish historian knew of two books attributed to that prophet. The five fragments presently extant and the testimony of Jewish and Christian writers in antiquity weigh heavily in favor of the separate existence of the Apocryphon of Ezekiel. A more detailed statement of its relationship to canonical literature must unfortunately await the discovery of a more complete text of the apocryphon.

Relation to apocryphal books

The Apocryphon of Ezekiel seems to have enjoyed a certain amount of popularity in the first centuries of the present era. Besides the numerous quotations from the apocryphon in the patristic literature, fragment 2 is quoted in the Exegesis on the Soul from the gnostic library at Nag Hammadi;²³ fragment 3 is found in the Acts of Peter;²⁴ and fragment 5 is found in the Manichaean Psalmbook.²⁵

The Ascension of Isaiah may also have known the apocryphon, for in chapter 11, as the rumor of Mary's maternity is spread throughout Bethlehem, some affirm and some deny the report. This is quite reminiscent of fragment 3, especially as preserved by Epiphanius.²⁶ The characterization of the Messiah's mother as a heifer probably finds its precedent in Jewish literature at 1 Enoch 90:37. Here Enoch symbolically represents the coming of a Messiah by the birth of a white bull. Our apocryphon has taken over this motif and has logically assumed that Enoch's white bull would have been born from a heifer. This motif of the heifer who bears the Messiah is taken up by the Church Fathers in later controversies over the virginity of Mary.²⁷

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 109f.

Delling, Bibliographie, p. 165.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 187–91.

Baker, A. "Justin's Agraphon in the Dialogue with Trypho," JBL 87 (1968) 277–87.

Bellinzoni, A. J. The Sayings of Jesus in the Writings of Justin Martyr. NovTSup 17; Leiden, 1967; ch. 5, pp. 131–34.

Bonner, C. The Homily on the Passion by Melito, Bishop of Sardis, and Some Fragments of the Apocryphal Ezekiel. Studies and Documents 12; London, 1940; pp. 183–202.

Eckart, K.-G. "Das Apokryphon Ezechiel," JSHRZ 5.1 (1974) 45–54.

Holl, K. "Das Apokryphon Ezechiel," Aus Schrift und Geschichte. Theologische Abhandlungen, Adolf Schlatter zum seinem 70. Geburtstage. Stuttgart, 1922; pp. 85–98. (Reprinted in Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Kirchengeschichte. Tübingen, 1928; vol. 2, pp. 33–43.)

James, M. R. "The Apocryphal Ezekiel," JTS 15 (1914) 236–43.

———. "Ezekiel," LAOT. New York, 1920; pp. 64–70.

Jeremias, J. Unknown Sayings of Jesus. London, 1964; pp. 83–88.

Stroker, W. D. "The Source of an Agraphon in the Manichaean Psalm-Book," JTS 28 (1977) 114–18.

²³ Robinson, The Nag Hammadi Library, p. 186.

²⁴ See James, ANT, p. 325.

²⁵ See Allberry, A Manichaean Psalm-Book, vol. 2, p. 39.

²⁶ AdvHaer 30:30.

²⁷ All citations of fragment 3 are examples of this use of ApocEzek.

THE APOCRYHON OF EZEKIEL FRAGMENTS

THE APOCRYPHON OF EZEKIEL

Fragment 1

Epiphanius, Against Heresies 64.70, 5–17^a

Introduction

“For the dead will be raised and those in the tombs will be lifted up.” speaks the prophet. And also, so that I might not pass over in silence the things mentioned about the resurrection by Ezekiel the prophet in his own apocryphon,^b I will present them here also. For speaking enigmatically, he refers to the righteous judgment, in which soul and body share:^c

The lame and blind men in the garden

- 1 1 A certain king had everyone in his kingdom drafted,^d and had no civilians^e except two only: one lame man and one blind man, and each one sat by himself and lived by himself. •And when the king was preparing a wedding feast for his own son, he invited all those in his kingdom, but he snubbed the two civilians, 2 the lame man and the blind man. •And they were indignant within themselves and resolved to carry out a plot against the king.
- 3 Now the king had a garden^f and the blind man called out from a distance to the lame man, saying, “How much would our crumb of bread have been among the crowds who were invited to the party? So come on, just as he did to us, let us 4 retaliate (against) him.” •But the other asked, “In what way?” •And he said, “Let 5,6 us go into his garden and there destroy the things of the garden.” •But he said, 7 “But how can I, being lame and unable to crawl?” •And the blind one spoke, 8 “What am I able to do myself, unable to see where I am going? But let us use subterfuge.”
- 9 Plucking the grass near him and braiding a rope, he threw (it) to the blind man 10 and said, “Take hold and come along the rope to me.” •And he did as he (the lame man) had urged (and) when he approached, he said, “Come to me, be (my) feet and carry me, and I will be your eyes, guiding you from above to the right 11,12 and left.” •And doing this they went down into the garden. •Furthermore, whether they damaged or did not damage (anything), nevertheless the footprints were visible in the garden.
- 13 Now when the partygoers dispersed from the wedding feast, going down into 14 the garden they were amazed to find the footprints in the garden. •And they reported these things to the king, saying, “Everyone in your kingdom is a soldier and no one is a civilian. So how then are there footprints of civilians in the garden?” 15 And he was astounded.

Parenthetic remark by Epiphanius

So says the parable of the apocryphon, making it clear that it refers to a man, for God is ignorant of nothing. For the story says:

The judgment of the intruders

- 1 2 He summoned the lame man and the blind man, and he asked the blind man, 2 “Did you not come down into the garden?” •And he replied, “Who, me, lord? 3 You see our inability, you know that I cannot see where I walk.” •Then approaching

Babylonian Talmud, Sanhedrin 91a, b⁸

Introduction

Antoninus said to Rabbi,^h "The body and the spirit are both able to escape from judgment. How? The body says, 'The spirit sinned, for from the day it separated from me, behold, I have been lying like a silent stone in the grave.' Also the spirit can say, 'The body sinned, for from the day I separated from it, behold, I have been flying in the air like a bird.' " And he (Rabbi) said to him, "I will give you an illustration:

ApMos 37-39

QuesEzra 6(B)

The lame and blind men in the garden

"To what may this be compared? To a king of flesh and blood who possessed a beautiful gardenⁱ which had beautiful early figs. And he set in it two guards, one lame and one blind.^j The lame man said to the blind man, 'I see beautiful early figs in the garden. Come and carry me on your back, and we will gather (them) to eat them.' The lame man rode upon the blind man and they gathered them and ate them.

"After a few days the owner of the garden came. He said to them, 'Where are those beautiful early figs?' Then the lame man said to him, 'Do I have feet to walk with?' Then the blind man said to him, 'Do I have eyes to see with?'

"What did he (the king) do? He made the lame man ride upon the blind and he judged them as one. So the Holy One, blessed be he, brings the spirit and placing it in the body, he also judges them as one. For it is said, 'He will call to the heavens from above and to the earth, so he might judge his people.' 'He will call to the heavens from above'—this to the spirit. 'And the earth so he might judge his people'—this to the body."^k

Ps 50:4
4Ezra 7:28-44
TAb 20
TJob 4:9
ApMos 41:1-3
ApPaul 14
QuesEzra 12-14(B)

1 a. GCS 31, pp. 515-17. See also the possible allusion to the story by Epiphanius (64.17), by George Cedrenus (PG 121, cols. 225f.), by George Hamartolos (PG 110, cols. 268f.), and in the History of Peter (cf. E. A. Budge, Contendings of the Apostles 2:8-18) and the Palatine Anthology 9:11-13.

b. Gk. en tō idiō apokruphō; it is from this phrase that the title "Apocryphon of Ezekiel" has been derived. Epiphanius' statement substantiates the witness of Josephus (Ant 10.6) to a second book of Ezekiel. Such a book is also listed among the OT Apocrypha in the stichometry of Nicephorus.

c. Epiphanius' introduction surely indicates that in the ApocEzek the story and the interpretation are inextricably bound, just as they are in the rabbinic parallel (see below).

d. I.e. into the army.

e. Gk. paganoi; this term is significant for the dating of the ApocEzek: Its presence, if original, confirms an earliest possible date for ApocEzek of 63 B.C., the date of the Roman occupation of Palestine. For a full discussion of the term, cf. T. Zahn, "Paganus," Neue kirchlichen Zeitschrift 10 (1899)

18-43; and B. Altaner, "Paganus," ZKG 58 (1939) 130-41.

f. Gk. paradeisos. The Heb. form of this word is found in the rabbinic parallel (see below n. i).

g. Cf. the parallels in Mekhilta Shirata 2 and LevR 4:5.

h. This story is part of a fictitious dialogue between Marcus Aurelius and Judah the Prince. Cf. L. Wallach, "The Parable of the Blind and the Lame," JBL 62 (1943) 333-39.

i. Heb. prds.

j. In the form of the story preserved in the Tanhuma (Wayyikra 12) the problems associated with the choosing of a blind man and a lame man to guard the king's garden are alleviated; the king reasons that a healthy man would see the beautiful fruits and eat them for himself. Thus to save the fruits he decides to appoint the lame man and the blind man as guardians.

k. In Sifra on Deut 32:2 the appendix to the story in which Ps 50:4 is cited is attributed to Simai, a disciple of Judah. Cf. Wallach, JBL 62 (1943) 337.

4 the lame man, he asked him also, "Did you come down into my garden?" •And answering, he said, "O lord, do you wish to embitter my soul in the matter of my inability?" •And finally the judgment was delayed.

6 What then does the just judge do? Realizing in what manner both had been joined, he places the lame man on the blind man and examines both under the 7.8 lash. •And they are unable to deny; they each convict the other. •The lame man on the one hand saying to the blind man, "Did you not carry me and lead me 9 away?" •And the blind man to the lame, "Did you yourself not become my eyes?" 10 In the same way the body is connected to the soul and the soul to the body, to 11 convict (them) of (their) common deeds. •And the judgment becomes final for both body and soul, for the works they have done whether good or evil.

Lk 20:15
2Tim 4:8

4Ezra 7:28-44
TAb 20
TJob 4:9
ApMos 41:1-3
ApPaul 14
QuesEzra 12-14(B)

Fragment 2

1 Clement 8:3^a

Repent, house of Israel, from your lawlessness. I say to the children of my people, "If your sins reach from the earth to heaven, and if they are redder than scarlet or blacker than sackcloth, and you turn back to me with a whole heart and say, 'Father,' I will heed you as a holy people."

Ezek 39:22
Isa 1:18
Rev 6:12
Jer 3:19
Ezek 3:16-21;
18:31
Rom 8:15
Gal 4:6
Mk 14:36
Jub 1:24

Fragment 3

Tertullian, De carne Christi 23

We read also in the writings of Ezekiel^a concerning that cow which has given birth and has not given birth. 1EEn 90:37

Epiphanius, Panarion Haeresies 30.30, 3

And again in another place he says, "And the heifer^b gave birth and they said, 'She has not given birth.'"

Gregory of Nyssa, Against the Jews 3

Behold, the heifer has given birth, and has not given birth.

Clement of Alexandria, Stromata 7:16

She has given birth and she has not given birth, say the Scriptures.

AscenIs 11:14
Isa 7:14

Acts of Peter 24

And again he (the prophet) said, "She has given birth and has not given birth."

AscenIs 11
Isa 7:14

2 a. The last portion of this citation can also be found in Clement, Paid 1.10, and is cited in full in the Nag Hammadi Exegesis on the Soul. For a discussion of the latter, cf. A. Guillaumont, "Une Citation de l'apocryphe d'Ézékiel dans l'exégèse au sujet de l'âme," in Essays on the Nag Hammadi Texts, ed. M. Krause (NHS 6; Leiden, 1975) pp. 35-39; M. Scopello, "Les Citations d'Homère dans le traité de l'exégèse de l'âme," in Gnosis and Gnosticism: Papers Read at the Seventh International Conference on Patristic Studies, ed. M. Krause (NHS 8; Leiden, 1978) pp. 3-12; and M. Scopello, "Les 'Testimonia' dans le traité de 'L'exégèse de l'âme' (Nag Hammadi, II, 6)," RHR 191 (1977) 159-71; and B. Dehandschutter, Orientalia Lovaniensia Periodica 10 (1979) 227-35.

3 a. Tertullian is the only ancient author who ascribes this saying to Ezekiel.

b. K.-G. Eckart has argued that the form of the saying as found in Epiphanius is original based upon Epiphanius' familiarity with ApocEzek (see fragment 1) and his faithful quotation of the story of the lame man and the blind man ("Die Kuh des apokryphen Ezechiel," Antwort aus der Geschichte, ed. W. Sommer and H. Ruppel [Berlin, 1969] pp. 44-48). This conclusion is unconvincing because of the uncertainty surrounding the transmission history of fragment 1 (compare the two versions above); Epiphanius may have embellished the simple story with references to such NT passages as the parable of the great feast (Mt 22:2; Lk 14:16).

Fragment 4

Justin Martyr, Dialogue with Trypho 47^a

Wherefore also our Lord Jesus Christ^b said, "In the things which I find^c you, in these also I will judge (you)."

Ezek 18:30;
33:12-20
4Ezra 7:102-15
1En 50:4
2Bar 85:12
QuesEzra 5(B)

Fragment 5

Clement of Alexandria, Paedagogus 1:9^a

Therefore he says by Ezekiel . . . , "And the lame I will bind up, and that which is troubled I will heal, and that which is led astray I will return, and I will feed them on my holy mountain . . . and I will be," he says, "their shepherd and I will be near to them as the garment to their skin."

Ezek 34:14-16
Jer 13:11; 23:23

4 a. Cf. n. 12 to the Introduction.

b. Justin is the only ancient author to attribute this saying to Jesus. K. Holl proposed that this ascription is false; he postulated that the saying was originally attributed to "the prophets" (cf. the citations by Elias of Crete and in Pseudo-Athanasius) and that Justin mistakenly read the kurios, "Lord," of the original as Jesus Christ instead of God (Aus Schrift und Geschichte, p. 95).

The only authors to attribute the agraphon to Ezekiel are Evagrius of Antioch in his Lat. translation of the Life of Antony 16 (c. 375 A.D.; cf. PL 26, col.

869) and John Climacus (c. 649 A.D.). J. Jeremias claims that the ascription to Ezekiel is secondary and is based upon the similarity of the agraphon to Ezek 33:12-20 (cf. above, "Texts").

c. Gk. katalabō, "overtake, find upon arrival."

5 a. Cf. also the fragmentary text preserved in the Chester Beatty Papyri (cf. n. 16 to the Introduction). Misspellings abound in the papyrus fragment; they have not been noted here because they do not represent significant departures from the text found in Clement.

APOCALYPSE OF ZEPHANIAH

(First Century B.C.—First Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY O. S. WINTERMUTE

If the calculations of Carl Schmidt are correct, only about one fourth of the text of the Apocalypse of Zephaniah has been preserved, with a lacuna of over one half of the text at the beginning.¹ Even the text that survived is not continuous. There is preserved: (1) a short Greek quotation cited by Clement of Alexandria,² (2) two pages of a Sahidic manuscript, and (3) eighteen pages of Akhmimic text, broken by a lacuna after page 12.

Despite the fragmentary nature of the text, the genre and structure are quite obvious: It is an apocalypse; more specifically it shares the greatest number of literary features with other apocalyptic writings such as 1 Enoch, 2 Enoch, 3 Baruch, and The Apocalypse of Paul (cf. Nag Hammadi CG V, 2.).³ Each of these works contains the first-person account of a seer who is led through heavenly spheres by an angelic guide or guides and bears witness to the splendor of various heavenly glories (cf. TLevi and Ascens) as well as terrifying scenes of sinners as they suffer the torment of their just punishment. Such writings normally have an episodic structure consisting of a series of short vignettes and dialogue strung together or set side by side with other independent literary units inside the loose framework of a "cosmic journey." The isolated episodes or scenes that make up such a work are frequently complete and self-consistent. Consequently they are readily subject to modification. They may be expanded upon, abbreviated, omitted, or supplemented by the addition of new episodes. Thus various episodes or scenes within 1 Enoch have been assigned correctly to different authors from different periods of time. In 3 Baruch, which is a fairly straightforward trip through five heavens, the seer can pause along the way to include one digression on the tree (actually a grape vine) of Paradise and another on the Phoenix, as well as lesser concerns. In the case of 2 Enoch, a simple comparison of the translations of the two main Slavonic manuscripts illustrates how easily the separate scenes may be modified, abbreviated, expanded upon, or omitted without doing serious violence to the overall structure of the work. The Apocalypse of Paul, moreover, contains doublets that are found in the seer's journeys to the promised land and his subsequent visit to Paradise, suggesting that the writer drew into his account episodes from separate, overlapping sources.

The Apocalypse of Zephaniah undoubtedly had a similar structure. Within the surviving fragments there are indications of repetition and overlapping. The sea of fire first appears in 6:1, but it is taken up again in 10:3, where the author describes the torment of the souls who sink in the sea. The punishment of sinners that is discussed in 10:4–9 is also the concern of the first eight lines of the Sahidic fragment.

This type of literature is composed of self-contained scenes and episodes that are loosely joined rather than tightly woven into a developing plot or interconnected sequence of events; hence, it is virtually impossible to guess what the initial forty-six pages⁴ of missing text contained. Most likely they recorded a general description of Zephaniah's cosmic travels, in which he saw both heavenly glories and the torments of hell. This rather safe conjecture is supported by the contrasting content of Clement's quotation about the fifth heaven and the Sahidic fragment's description of a tortured soul in Hades; both of these may have been located somewhere in the first half of the text. There is a positive aspect to the self-contained nature of the episodes: We can understand the surviving fragments of the Akhmimic text quite well, despite having only the most general understanding of what preceded it.

¹ C. Schmidt, "Der Kolophon des Ms. Orient. 7594 des Britischen Museums; eine Untersuchung zur Elias-Apokalypse," Sitzungsberichte der Preussischen Akademie der Wissenschaften, pp. 312–21. Schmidt said that he was assisted in reconstructing the MS by Ibscher.

² Strom 5.11.77.

³ This newly discovered text from Nag Hammadi CG V, 2 is also titled "The Apocalypse of Paul," but it is a gnostic text which should not be confused with the previously cited apocalypse which has the same name. See n. 12 below.

The surviving text begins with a brief glimpse of angelic glory in the fifth heaven. After a lacuna of unknown length, the seer describes a vision of the scourging of a soul in Hades and his own terrified response. This is followed by an angelic exhortation to prevail over the accuser so that the seer might come up from Hades. Subsequently, the seer journeys with the angel of the Lord to a great broad place in which further visions begin.

The Akhmimic manuscript contains the largest portion of surviving text. It may be divided into two major sections: (1) scenes from the travelogue, and (2) trumpet scenes.

The travelogue describes the seer's movements, which introduce a new setting for the visions and dialogue that follow. The first travel notice is found at 2:1: "Now I went with the angel of the Lord and he took me up (over) all my city." The scenes and dialogue from on high continue until 3:1, where the second travel notice begins with the sentence: "The angel of the Lord said to me, 'Come, let me show you the place of righteousness.' And he took me up upon Mount Seir . . ." Other travel notices appear in 4:1, 5:1, 6:1, and 8:1, where the seer is transported by boat to the site of the trumpet scenes. Both the quotation cited by Clement and the Sahidic text (B8) contain similar travel notes. The author of the text used the travel notices to break up his travelogue into a number of episodes. If we count the brief introductory fragment dealing with burial, there are seven such episodes:

1. A brief fragment dealing with burial (ch. 1).
2. Scenes from some heavenly location above Jerusalem (ch. 2). Here the seer witnesses scenes of city life, discusses the nature of the continuous light that shines with the righteous, and sees men in torment.
3. Scenes from Mount Seir (ch. 3). A vision of three men led by two angels provides the starting point for a dialogue in which the angel who accompanies the seer describes the manner in which angels record the good and evil deeds of men on a manuscript for the time of judgment.
4. Scenes outside the heavenly city (ch. 4). Here Zephaniah sees the terrifying angels who bring the souls of evil men to their eternal punishment. He prays for deliverance, and his petition is heard.
5. Scenes within the city (ch. 5). Here the seer's attention is centered on the gates and the city square. He also witnesses the transformation of his angelic guide.
6. Scenes from Hades (chs. 6f.). After turning back, Zephaniah observes a sea of fire. Subsequently he is confronted by the accuser, who has his manuscript of sins and shortcomings, and Eremiel, who has a record of his good deeds.
7. Scene in a boat (ch. 8). At this point the seer puts on an angelic garment and joins the angelic host.

The text ends with four trumpet scenes in which the episodes are introduced by a great angel who blows on a golden trumpet. The scenes appear in the following order:

1. The trumpet that heralds the seer's triumph over the accuser (ch. 9). This episode describes the seer's wish to embrace the angel, and the angel's conversation with Old Testament saints (Abraham, Isaac, etc.).
2. The trumpet that heralds the opening of heaven (ch. 10). In this episode the seer once again sees the fiery sea and the sinners who are tormented in it. He also sees bodies with hair and learns that the Lord provides body and hair.
3. The trumpet that calls the saints to intercessory prayer (ch. 11). In this scene, the seer sees a pious multitude interceding for those in torment; he is told that the pious assemble for prayer daily when the trumpet sounds.

⁴ The pagination which is noted here is based on Schmidt's analysis of the text. See n. 1 above for bibliography.

4. The trumpet that introduces a discussion of the end (ch. 12). The seer is told about a trumpet that will be blown in the future and hears about God's coming wrath.

Title

The title, the Apocalypse of Zephaniah, is not preserved in either of the surviving Coptic manuscripts, but the Sahidic manuscript contains the following statement: "Truly, I, Zephaniah, saw these things in my vision." That statement together with the general content of the text is sufficient to classify the work as an Apocalypse of Zephaniah.

It is not entirely clear from the content of the surviving portions of text why the author selected Zephaniah as the name of the seer. There are some parallels with the biblical Book of Zephaniah (cf. the nn. to the translation), but there are stronger parallels to Zechariah. The strongest parallels to Zephaniah in the surviving text are the concern for apostate priests in 3:2–6 (cf. Zeph 1:4) and the mention of God's coming wrath in 12:5–8 (cf. Zeph 1:14–18). Since a considerable amount of text is missing, it is quite probable that some lost episode near the beginning of the text provided a literary tie to the biblical prophet Zephaniah.

Texts

The text of the Apocalypse of Zephaniah has been partially preserved in two separate manuscripts that come from the White Monastery of Shenuda near Sohag. The earlier manuscript, which Steindorff dated at the end of the fourth century, is written in Akhmimic; the second manuscript, which Steindorff dated at the beginning of the fifth century, is written in Sahidic.⁵ Both manuscripts contain the text of the Apocalypse of Elijah as well as the Apocalypse of Zephaniah.

Since the surviving text was purchased for European libraries leaf by leaf in two separate lots, there was originally a considerable amount of confusion about the identity and the content of these texts. The first group of papyri, which was purchased by Maspero between 1881 and 1884, contained not only two pages of the text of the Apocalypse of Zephaniah and twelve pages of the text of the Apocalypse of Elijah from the Sahidic manuscript but also fourteen pages of the Apocalypse of Elijah from the Akhmimic manuscript. That group of papyri is now in the Bibliothèque Nationale, inventory number Copte 135.

A second lot of papyri from the same Akhmimic manuscript was uncovered in 1888 by K. Reinhardt. That collection consisted of sixteen pages of text: four from the Apocalypse of Zephaniah and twelve from the Apocalypse of Elijah. The papyri are now located in the Egyptological section of the State Museum of Berlin (German Democratic Republic), inventory number P 1862.

The Greek text of Clement's citation has been published in Stählin's edition of the Stromata, book 5.11.77.⁶ In addition to that quotation, there are three ancient witnesses who mention an Apocalypse of Zephaniah. Since they simply list the title without quoting from the document, there is some uncertainty about the relationship between the Coptic apocalypse and the work cited in those three lists.

The first of these is the stichometry that was appended to the chronography of Nicephorus, Patriarch of Constantinople (806–15). That list, which may be several centuries older than the work of Nicephorus, includes a text entitled "(The Book of the) Prophet Zephaniah," which contained 600 stichoi. The listing of the Zephaniah title immediately follows a work entitled "(The Book of the) Prophet Elijah." The proximity of the works attributed to Zephaniah and Elijah in the stichometry and the fact that the works appear together in two separate Coptic manuscripts lend some support to the assumption that the Coptic works are to be identified with the ancient works mentioned in the stichometry. Nevertheless, it would appear that we do not have texts in the recension used for counting stichoi, since the calculations of Schmidt reveal that the text of Elijah is a bit short for the suggested 316 stichoi and the space needed for the text of Zephaniah is a bit more than the suggested 600 stichoi.

The second ancient witness is the Synopsis scripturae sacrae of Pseudo-Athanasius, an early list (perhaps 6th cent.) which Zahn treated as an independent tradition.⁷ The list of books in general is similar to that found in the stichometry of Nicephorus, but there is no stichometry provided. The works assigned to Elijah and Zephaniah appear in precisely the same order and with the same title that was given to them in the stichometry of Nicephorus.

⁵ G. Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias. eine unbekannte Apokalypse und Bruchstücke der Sophonias-Apokalypse.

⁶ Clemens Alexandrinus, ed. O. Stählin (GCS 15).

The third writing is the anonymous Catalogue of the Sixty Canonical Books. It lists the Apocalypse of Elijah, the Vision of Isaiah, and the Apocalypse of Zephaniah in that order. Here the works attributed to Elijah and Zephaniah are both designated as apocalypses, and the Vision of Isaiah is placed between them. Nevertheless, there is nothing in this listing of the two works that prevents their being identified with the parallel works mentioned in the previous lists. In fact, the probability lies with their being the same.

It has generally been assumed that the ancient lists refer to the same work cited by Clement. Be that as it may, a more important question to consider is the relationship between Clement's citation and the Coptic texts. There are details in the quotation that both parallel and contradict data in the Coptic fragments. The most striking parallel is that both quotations deal with angels and describe them as singing hymns before God (as in the AscenIs). Contradictory features are most noticeable in the description of the deity; he is called "the ineffable most high God" in the Clement citation, but the "Lord Almighty" in the Coptic text. The "Holy Spirit" is mentioned in Clement's quotation, but not in the Coptic fragments. The quotation also assigns the spirit a role in transporting the seer; the Coptic fragments portray the seer traveling with the angel of the Lord. None of these contradictory features excludes the possibility that the quotation was taken from the same text as the Coptic fragments. Variation between Clement and the Coptic text may occur because Clement had a Christian recension of the text. Variation may also exist because the author of the apocalypse was following a different source in writing about the fifth heaven. Nevertheless, the majority of scholars appear to have followed the lead of E. Schürer and assumed that this quotation was taken from the same Apocalypse of Zephaniah as that preserved in the surviving Coptic fragments.⁸ Thus the simplest hypothesis is to assume that there was a single ancient text entitled "The Apocalypse of Zephaniah," which was attested by the four ancient witnesses listed above, and the Coptic fragments represent two different versions of that text.

Original language

It is generally assumed that the Coptic texts of the Apocalypse of Zephaniah are translations of a Greek original. There is no reason to suspect a pre-Greek stage of writing behind any of the surviving fragments. On the contrary, there is reason to believe that the writer did not fully understand Hebrew (compare the note regarding "Eloe, Lord, Adonai, Sabaoth" at 6:7).

Date

If the quotation by Clement of Alexandria is part of the apocalypse, then there are distinct limits for the time within which the text is to be dated. The earliest date for the Apocalypse of Zephaniah is sometime after the story of Susanna was circulated in Greek as part of the Book of Daniel. In 6:10 the author of the apocalypse appeals to the accounts of Susanna, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego as examples of God's power to deliver. Unfortunately, the date and even the original language of composition of the tale of Susanna are still matters of debate, but one could assume with some certainty that the text would be well known in Alexandria as part of the Book of Daniel during the first century B.C. The latest date is, of course, the time of Clement of Alexandria's Stromata. If we are correct in assuming that Clement accepted the work as that of the biblical prophet Zephaniah, it must have circulated long enough to have acquired that prestige. That would set the latest date sometime before the last quarter of the second century of the Christian era.

As a result of the preceding arguments we can fix the date of this writing somewhere between 100 B.C. and A.D. 175. In commenting on the author's use of Mount Seir in 3:2 we have speculated about the historical period in which such a setting would be most apt to occur, concluding that motives for a pro-Edomite tradition may have persisted until the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. If the author of this text is responsible for the tradition that places the seer's vision on Mount Seir, then he probably wrote before A.D. 70.

⁷ T. Zahn, Geschichte des Neutestamentlichen Kanons (Erlangen, 1889) vol. 2, pp. 302–18.

⁸ E. Schürer, Review of Die Apokalypse des Elias by Steindorff in TLZ 24 (1899) cols. 4–8.

Provenance

We have no knowledge of the author apart from what we can deduce from his work. Although the claim is made that these are the visions of Zephaniah, reported in the first person, the well-known literary conventions of apocalyptic writing have led scholars to disregard that claim. Zephaniah is generally considered to be a pseudonym used by an anonymous writer who either believed that he was writing in the spirit of the biblical prophet Zephaniah or simply wished to enhance the prestige of his own ideas by invoking the name of an illustrious man of God.

Whatever his name, it is fairly clear that the writer was a Jew. In the surviving portions of the text that deal with doctrines as basic as judgment for sin, intercessory prayer, and life after death, there is nothing distinctively Christian. The lack of Christian elements is even somewhat surprising when we remember that the manuscripts came from the library of a Christian monastery. They were preserved by monks, and in all probability copied by monks from earlier manuscripts that had been translated from Greek to Coptic within a Christian community. Over a period of one or two centuries of transmission by Christian scribes there are a number of ways that Christian concerns might have entered the document short of a conscious redaction of the text: (1) a Christian translator might have assumed that certain Greek terms in the document he was translating had a "Christian" meaning; (2) a Christian copyist might unconsciously have expanded a phrase or reformulated a sentence to agree with a familiar liturgical statement drawn from a Christian context; or (3) a monk might even have been tempted to add the name of Jesus or Paul to the list of righteous saints in Paradise. As a matter of fact, however, there is no clear example of any such modification of the text. The closest point of contact with Christian writings is found in the Akhmimic text. At 2:1-4 there is a close parallel to Matthew 24:40f. and Luke 17:34-36. At 6:11-15 there is a description of the angel Eremiel that has several features in common with descriptions of angels in Revelation. At 10:9 there is a quotation containing the word katēchoumenos, which is used in a sense frequent in patristic texts. Nevertheless, each of these parallels may be rather easily explained as due to a common Jewish-Christian heritage. The most important point to observe is that in the surviving fragments there is no evidence of any Christian modification of any of the major theological concerns expressed in the work.

Further study of the document by other scholars who are more knowledgeable about the sectarian divisions of ancient Judaism will be required before it is possible finally to set this apocalypse in its proper sociological context, but the following preliminary statements may be set forth. The author, who was concerned about the question of life after death, was not a Sadducee. His dualism is not compatible with that of Qumran. There is no zealot theology in evidence. He comes across as a gentle man, concerned for intercession on behalf of those in torment. He has concern for proper fulfillment of priestly ordinances (3:3f.) and times of daily prayer (11:5f.), but there is no reason to believe that the author himself was a priest. As a writer of apocalyptic, he shares features with a wide range of similar writings, a number of which are indicated in the accompanying notes, but his writing is also illuminated by referring to the Old Testament and to books within the Apocrypha such as Tobit, the Wisdom of Solomon, and the additions to Daniel.

Since the author wrote in Greek, he may well have resided in a Jewish community outside of Palestine, somewhere in the hellenistic world. Evidence favoring Egypt is strongest. Two separate manuscripts have survived in Egypt. The Coptic (Budge) Apocalypse of Paul probably contains a quotation from a third Egyptian manuscript (see fragment B, n. c), attesting to the popularity of the text in Egypt. The only remaining Greek fragment of the work is the quotation by Clement of Alexandria. Consequently, it is reasonable to assume that the work was produced in that city. The comment regarding the weighing of good and evil (see ch. 8, n. b) also reminds one of an Egyptian motif, but such a comment could scarcely be decisive.

Theological importance

A basic theme present in all of the Coptic fragments is that of a divine judgment which faces all men. The Sahidic fragment, for example, contains a description of the scourging of a soul that was found in lawlessness. The same theme provides a connecting link joining the separate episodes in the travelogue. In 3:1 the angel of the Lord says, "Come, let me show you the place of righteousness." If the translation "place of righteousness" is correct, it probably refers to the heavenly realm beyond the river of Hades, in which dwell the righteous men of old: Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Enoch, Elijah, and David. In order to reach that place it is necessary for the seer to travel the route of a departed soul, which involves a harrowing confrontation with the accuser in Hades. The journey is carried out in stages. At the first stage, on Mount Seir, the seer learns how the evidence for and against a man is collected by angels who sit upon the gate. At the second stage, which is outside the heavenly city, he sees the terrifying angels who bring up the souls of ungodly men to their justly deserved eternal punishment. They cannot touch Zephaniah, however, because he is pure. The third stopping point is within the city before the gates, where fire is being cast forth. After withdrawing from there, the seer finds himself in Hades, where he encounters both Eremiel and the accuser. Eremiel is clearly a beneficent angel who cares for the souls imprisoned there, but the accuser, true to his title, seeks to condemn men before the Lord. Thus he functions as a prosecutor in the final judgment of men. It is also in Hades that the seer recognizes his own manuscripts, which contain testimony for and against him. When he finally prevails over the accuser and is judged victorious, he joins the ranks of angelic beings and summarizes his experience by saying, "Now, moreover, my sons, this is the trial because it is necessary that the good and the evil be weighed in a balance" (8:5).

In the trumpet scenes there are further descriptions of punishment for sinful souls and mention of a final day "when the Lord will judge," but the theme of intercessory prayer by the righteous becomes equally prominent. The concern of the righteous for those in torment appears in several passages. In 2:8f. Zephaniah sees the souls of men in torment and he offers a strong intercessory appeal which prompts the angel of the Lord to show him the place of righteousness. Along the way he observes two angels weeping over the three sons of Joatham because they have no righteous deeds to record. Nevertheless, this theme reaches its climax in the third trumpet scene, where we read of "multitudes" (including Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob) and "all the righteous" who intercede daily for those in torment.

The intercessory prayers are addressed to a God who is capable of mercy (11:2), who remains with his saints, and has compassion on behalf of the world (2:9). A similar conception of God lies behind Zephaniah's prayer for his own deliverance. In 6:10 he appeals to the God whose faithfulness to his saints is illustrated by his salvation of Israel, Susanna, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. In 7:8 he appeals to God's mercy, which is "in every place and has filled every space."

A corollary of God's mercy and patience is his willingness to permit repentance, which could spare man the punishment he justly deserves. In the second trumpet scene the seer is shown the torment of sinful souls. When he has seen them, he asks, "do they not have repentance here?" The answer is "yes," and the opportunity continues right up until "the day when the Lord will judge." This text is written with a strong appeal for repentance. The two most extended and specific descriptions of the torment of sinners are found in the second trumpet scene and in the Sahidic fragment. Each time the description is closed with a comment about repentance. The comment from the second trumpet scene was discussed above and encourages repentance by emphasizing God's patience. The comment at the end of the torments described in the Sahidic fragment encourages repentance by warning that the soul is being tormented because it was "found in its lawlessness" and taken from its body before "it attained to repenting."

Despite the emphasis on God's mercy and his willingness to accept repentance, the author never forgets that God is the final judge, and that those found wanting will be subject to his wrath. The Akhmimic fragment is broken off after page 18, just as the author begins his final description of God's wrath. It is reasonable to assume that the four missing pages of the Akhmimic manuscript described the eschatological woes that are to be expected at the end of the age.

God's glory is presented indirectly in the Coptic texts. His transcendence is preserved throughout, but the splendor of his angel, Eremiel, is so great that the seer assumes that he is God and falls down to worship him. He is soon corrected by the angel, but one implication of the encounter is that if one could see him, God would be even more glorious than his great angel. In the quotation preserved by Clement, the angelic thrones in the fifth heaven are described as being "sevenfold more (brilliant) than the light of the rising sun." By implication, the glory of God, who is far above the fifth heaven, is beyond description, a view explicit in the name for God: "the ineffable most high God" (fragment A).

In contrast to Clement's quotation, the Akhmimic text refers to God as "Lord Almighty" (pjaeis pantokrator = Gk. kurios pantokratōr). This Greek phrase is consistently used in the Septuagint to render the Hebrew Yahweh Š'ba'ōt, the "Lord of Hosts." In the pre-exilic period this expression identified Yahweh as the God of the Armies (Hosts) of Israel, but by the time of the Exile "the Hosts" were identified with heavenly beings (cf. Isa 13:4f.). Thus it is natural in a text that places so much emphasis on the angelic hosts to confront the phrase "Lord of Hosts."

The angelology was very important for the author's understanding of the divine world. God is everywhere assumed to be an absolutely sovereign monotheistic deity; yet the author's angelology allows him to deal with data that is moderately dualistic. There are basically two types of angels: (1) beautiful angels, who praise God and assist righteous men, and (2) ugly angels, who are sent to terrify evil men, transport their souls to eternal punishment, and torment them. The ugly angels are not described as demons or evil angels but as "servants of all creation" (4:6), and hence servants of the God of all creation, the pantokratōr. The ugliest angel is "the accuser," but there is nothing to suggest that he is either a fallen angel or a lord of demons. His task remains much the same as that of Satan in the Book of Zechariah, a document that extensively influenced the author of this apocalypse.

One of the important tasks of the angels in the Akhmimic text is to watch men and record every deed, both good and bad. Ultimately the writer is dealing with the omniscience of God, the righteous judge, who knows our every deed, but he deals with it in a very homely figure. Ugly angels write down all the evil deeds of men and take them to the accuser, who records them in order to accuse men before God. The beautiful angels write down all the good deeds of the righteous and give them to the great angel—Zephaniah's guide—and he takes them to God, who enrolls them in the Book of the Living. In this mode of operation we can see two groups of angels serving in different camps. One group works for the great angel and the other works for the accuser. The great angel and the accuser appear to be on a level of parity before the Lord Almighty. A similar picture may be drawn from the scene in Hades, where Eremiel, the guardian of souls, appears vis-à-vis the accuser of souls. There are striking parallels between the structure presented here and similar views that appear in the Qumran Manual of Discipline (1QS 3.13–4.26), where God created two spirits to govern the affairs of men: a spirit of truth and a spirit of falsehood. The significant difference, however, is that the ugly angels in the Apocalypse of Zephaniah are not commissioned to deceive men or to contribute to their downfall; they merely report it.

The anthropology of the text has already been touched upon in dealing with theology and angelology. Here we may summarize. There are two ways open to men. One leads to enrollment in the Book of the Living (9:2), investiture in angelic garments (8:3), participation in angelic liturgy, and communion with the righteous, including the patriarchs, Enoch, Elijah, and David. The other way leads to eternal punishment (4:6f.). Every man is judged on the basis of his earthly deeds, and the righteous are delivered from Hades. Repentance is capable of changing the ultimate destiny of man. In all of this, man is represented as being free to make moral choices. He is not deceived or misled by evil spirits. On the contrary, there is evidence that the angels and the righteous continually seek to intercede with prayers and weeping on behalf of the fallen.

Relation to canonical books

Inasmuch as the Apocalypse of Zephaniah was written within a Jewish community, the author was familiar with the Old Testament and also expected his readers to be. It seems likely that he was familiar with the Pentateuch, prophets, and a number of the writings. The edition of Daniel that he used contained the story of Susanna. At 2:5 the description of a drop suspended from a bucket is probably dependent on Isaiah 40:15.

Elsewhere, the author's use of the Old Testament is less specifically related to a particular text. He knows a number of epithets for God (6:7), the names of patriarchs (11:4; 9:4), heroes (6:10; 9:4), and the prophet Zephaniah (fragment B, 7). He also mentions Psalms (1:2) and the Book of the Living (3:7; 9:2; cf. Ps 69:28). The manner in which the dialogue between the prophet and his angelic interpreter is described follows the model found in Zechariah 1–6. The use of such data does not suggest that the author was a particularly careful student of the Scriptures who would rank with Paul, Philo, or the author of Jubilees. His knowledge is the casual sort available to a layman in the Jewish community. He is not interested in either studying the Scriptures directly or using them to support his theological position. The Old Testament simply provides him with a literary model for a portion of the angelic discourse, a number of well-known characters, a few ethical concerns, and incidental descriptive details.

The author's limited use of the Old Testament is determined by his concern for postmortem judgment of souls, a concern virtually unmentioned in the Old Testament. Conversely, many significant concerns of the Old Testament are barely noted by the author. From the Pentateuch he is familiar with the phrase "commandments and ordinances" (3:4), but the phrase is split up so that the "commandment" is that of a priest Joatham, and the ordinances are from the Lord. The writer mentions the sons of Israel (7:7), but there is no mention of covenant, election, or land. He lists the patriarchs (9:4), but treats them merely as examples of pious men who were saved. He mentions God's mighty act of saving Israel from Pharaoh (6:10), but reveals no theological feeling for sacred history.

The historical texts of the Old Testament have little interest for our author. He mentions David and Elijah simply as examples of holy men. He is somewhat more interested in the prophets, but both Zephaniah, who appears as the central figure in the apocalypse, and Zechariah, whose angelic dialogue serves as a model, are portrayed here, not as messengers of God's judgment or blessing, but as apocalyptic seers to their own age.

The author's interest in angels, thrones, and apocalyptic judgment represents a more direct influence from the later Old Testament collection of writings, particularly Daniel and Psalms. The sins of omission that are listed on the seer's manuscript (7:3–8) are expressed in a form (i.e. "If I did not . . .") reminiscent of Job 31:16, 20. Both Job and the present text ultimately reflect the "Negative Confessions," which are found in the Egyptian Book of the Dead, confessions to be made in the underworld at the judgment of the soul. The ethical concern for the widow and orphan (7:4f.) is found throughout the Old Testament (Deut 24:17; Isa 1:17; Job 31:16f.), and so is the mention of prayer and fasting (Judg 20:26; 1Kgs 21:9; Ezra 8:21), but the concern for turning to the sons of Israel reflects a post-exilic setting when life within a non-Jewish environment has singled out the children of Israel as a distinctive group among the nations for whom the pious express continual concern. Although the author of the present apocalypse has no interest in Nehemiah's political hopes for his people, he accepts the model of piety expressed in Nehemiah 1:4–6. In that passage Nehemiah is described as engaging in daily fasting and intercessory prayer for the children of Israel.

Since there is little reason to believe that the present text was influenced by the New Testament, any parallels that occur are due to borrowing from a common milieu or a New Testament dependence on the present work. One of the most striking parallels is the seer's vision of two women grinding at a mill (2:3; cf. Mt 24:41). In that case, we are probably dealing with a well-known proverbial expression that was used by both the author of the present apocalypse and the evangelist.

At 6:14f. there is a significant parallel to Revelation 19:10 (cf. 22:8f.). In both cases the seer falls down to worship an angel, and in both cases he is told not to worship the angel because he is not God. The context in which the adoration occurs in the present text is clear and logical. The seer was so awed by the splendor of the angel Eremiel that he mistook him for God. The author may have wished to indicate the surpassing majesty of God by suggesting that what might appear to men to attain the level of divine glory does not rise above the level of angelic splendor. The motif is repeated twice in Revelation (19:10; 22:8f.) in a context that is less clear. The angel who appears there describes himself as merely a fellow servant of the seer. The New Testament author may be dependent on a tradition that wishes to combat the worship of angels.

In the Apocalypse of Zephaniah the angel who is worshiped is both identified and described (6:11–15) in a passage that is strikingly similar to Revelation 1:13–18. The passage is obviously based on the description of a figure appearing in Daniel 10:5–14. The fact that the figure in Daniel is not identified undoubtedly generated a considerable amount of speculation. His legs are burnished bronze like those of the divine figure described in Ezekiel 1:27. He also claims to have been aided by Michael in resisting the Persians. It would appear from the description that Daniel saw either God or one of his highest angels. Whoever seeks to solve the problem of Daniel's vision must decide that issue, and if he decides that it is an angel he is then obliged to try to identify him. In the present text the issue is resolved when Zephaniah encounters the same figure that Daniel saw and identifies him as Eremiel, denying that he is the Lord Almighty.

The author, or the source on which he relies, has both edited and expanded Daniel's vision at points. He eliminates Daniel's reference to the figure as a man and also the notice of his linen garment because he is not interested in his human features. He adds a notice that his face was shining like the sun and reports that he is responsible for those imprisoned in the abyss and Hades. What is surprising is to find the two added details in Revelation 1:11–18.

There are, of course, differences in the vision that is preserved in Revelation. The human features of Daniel's figure have been retained because the Christian tradition has identified the man in Daniel 10:5 with the Son of Man in Daniel 7. The Christian tradition is probably also responsible for providing the figure in Revelation 1:11–18 with white hair, a portrayal taken from the description of the Ancient of Days in Daniel 7.

Despite the differences, however, the descriptions of Eremiel and the figure of the Son of Man in Revelation are strikingly similar. The figures also share a benevolent concern for the souls in Hades. On the basis of the parallels, it is reasonable to assume that the Apocalypse of Zephaniah bears witness to a Jewish tradition that portrays Eremiel, the good angel of Sheol, in imagery based on Daniel 10:5–12, which was subsequently expanded. When the Christians began to identify the figure in Daniel 10:5–7 with the Son of Man, they used that expanded description of Eremiel to portray the risen Christ in his role as one who has power over death and Sheol.

Relation to apocryphal books

The Apocalypse of Zephaniah is dependent upon a tradition of apocalyptic writing that is concerned with demonstrating God's justice and mercy by permitting a seer to witness scenes of postmortem judgment and places of blessing prepared for the righteous. One of the earliest of these writings is found in 1 Enoch 21–25, a portion of "The Book of Watchers," which Milik dates "towards the middle of the third century B.C."⁹ Subsequent treatments of the same theme in Jewish and Christian circles involved the seer's ascent through three, four, seven, eight, or ten heavens to the throne of God. As Bousset has shown in his study of Die Himmelsreise der Seele, later elaborations of the form involved many additional details, such as the removal of earthly garments and investiture with heavenly ones, sacramental anointing, and magical defense against demons who threaten the seer's ascent to the highest heaven.¹⁰ There also appears to be a clear shift of emphasis from a simple display of God's justice toward a direct focus on the experiences of the seer as a prototype of the postmortem trials of a pious soul as it advances toward the throne of the Almighty.

The surviving portions of the Apocalypse of Zephaniah reflect a relatively early stage in the evolution of the type of apocalypse outlined above. Its closest parallels in both form and content are to be found in the apocalyptic portions of 1 Enoch, 2 Enoch, 3 Baruch, the Apocalypse of Paul, and the Nag Hammadi text CG V, 2,¹¹ which also bears the title "The Apocalypse of Paul." To a lesser extent there is also a formal parallel to be seen with the Testament of Levi and the Ascension of Isaiah. Specific parallels in content between the Apocalypse of Zephaniah and the apocalyptic writings listed above will be found in the notes that accompany the text.

⁹ J. T. Milik, The Books of Enoch (Oxford, 1976) p. 28.

¹⁰ W. Bousset, Die Himmelsreise der Seele (Darmstadt, 1960; a reprint of essays first published in 1901).

¹¹ An ET by G. MacRae and W. Murdock is now available in NHL, pp. 239–41.

The Coptic (Budge) Apocalypse of Paul¹² contains a number of unique readings or expansions. In two passages there are expressions that contain literal parallels to the Apocalypse of Zephaniah. Since the expansions in the manuscript that Budge published are undoubtedly later than the Apocalypse of Zephaniah, there is good reason to suspect some sort of dependence. Both parallels are discussed in the notes that accompany the present text (see fragment B, n. c and ch. 3, n. a).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 220–23.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 192f.

Bouriant, U. "Les papyrus d'Akhmim," Mémoires publiées par les membres de la mission archéologique française au Caire, 1.2 (1885) 260–79. (This was the first publication of the Papyri purchased by Maspero and subsequently preserved in the Bibliothèque Nationale.)

Houghton, H. P. "The Coptic Apocalypse," Aegyptus 39 (1959) 43–67, 177–210. (Houghton's work consists of a transliteration of Steindorff's text with a literal translation.)

James, M. R. The Lost Apocrypha of the Old Testament. London, 1920; pp. 72–74. (James provides a brief appraisal of the text similar to the work of Schürer and Lods.)

Lacau, P. "Remarques sur le manuscrit akhmimique des apocalypses de Sophonie et d'Élie," JA 254 (1966) 169–95. (Lacau's work is the most extensive and most recent linguistic study of the ApZeph. It represents a significant advance in the study of the text.)

Lods, A. Histoire de la littérature hébraïque et juive. Paris, 1950; pp. 943f. (A brief survey of the text of ApZeph.)

Riessler, P. Altjüdisches Schrifttum ausserhalb der Bibel. Augsburg, 1928 (repr. 1966); pp. 114–25. (This German translation is good, but is scarcely an advance on the pioneering work of Steindorff.)

Schmidt, C. "Der Kolophon des Ms. Orient. 7594 des Britischen Museums; eine Untersuchung zur Elias-Apokalyse," Sitzungsberichte der Preussischen Akademie der Wissenschaften. Philosophisch-Historische Klasse, Berlin, 1925; pp. 312–21. (In this study, Schmidt sought to reconstruct the original order and length of the Akhmimic MS.)

Schürer, E. Review of Die Apokalypse des Elias by Steindorff in TLZ 24 (1899) cols. 4–8. (Schürer's review of Steindorff's work provided an important response and correction; he insisted that Steindorff's "anonymous Apocalypse" was part of ApZeph.)

Steindorff, G. Die Apokalypse des Elias, eine unbekannte Apokalypse und Bruchstücke der Sophonias-Apokalyse. TU 17.3a; Leipzig, 1899. (Steindorff was the first to sort out the confusing textual problems of ApZeph and ApEl; he was able to publish all of the pp. of both documents in their proper order. All subsequent studies are indebted to him.)

Stern, L. "Die koptische Apokalypse des Sophonias, mit einem Anhang über den unter-sahidischen Dialect," Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache und Altertumskunde 24 (1886) 115–29. (Stern produced a helpful grammatical study and translation of the texts published by Bouriant.)

¹² E. A. W. Budge, Miscellaneous Coptic Texts in the Dialect of Upper Egypt (London, 1915) pp. 534–74. The Nag Hammadi ApPaul must be carefully distinguished from the previously known ApPaul. The Nag Hammadi text might be designated "II Apocalypse of Paul" or "The Gnostic Apocalypse of Paul." Although it survives in Cop., it should not be referred to as "The Coptic Apocalypse of Paul" because there is also a Cop. version of the previously known ApPaul which was published by Budge in Miscellaneous Coptic Texts in the Dialect of Upper Egypt.

- Till, W. "Bemerkungen und Ergänzungen zu den achmimischen Textausgaben," Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache und Altertumskunde 63 (1928) 90f. (Till's brief comments deal primarily with minor grammatical points.)
- Von Lemm, O. "Kleine koptische Studien, X, 1-3," Bulletin de l'académie impériale des sciences de Saint-Petersbourg 13 (1900) 1-11. (In this study, Von Lemm identified several obscure words and made a significant start toward the restoration of lacunae at the beginning of the text.)
- . "Kleine koptische Studien, XXVI, 7-12," Bulletin de l'académie impériale des sciences de Saint-Petersbourg 21 (1904) 41-45. (Another brief linguistic study of ApZeph.)

THE APOCALYPSE OF ZEPHANIAH

Clement, Stromata 5.11.77

The scene in the fifth heaven

A And a spirit took me and brought me up into the fifth heaven. And I saw angels who are called "lords,"^a and the diadem was set upon them in the Holy Spirit,^b and the throne of each of them was sevenfold more (brilliant) than the light of the rising sun.^c (And they were) dwelling in the temples of salvation and singing hymns to the ineffable^d most high God.^e

Ezek 11:1
2En 18
3Bar 11
Ascens 7:32-37
TLevi 3
Rev 19:12
1Kgs 22:19
Isa 6:1-8
Ezra 1:26-28

Sahidic fragment

The seer's vision of a soul in torment

B [I s]aw a [sou]l which five thousand angels punished [?]a [an]d gua[r]ded. They took [it] to the East and they brought it to the West. They beat its . . . they gave it a hundred . . . lashes for each one^b daily. •I was afraid and I cast myself up[o]n my face so that my joints dissolved. •The angel helped me. He said to me, "Be strong, O one who will triumph,^c and prevail so that you will triumph^d over the accuser and you will come up from Hades." •And after I arose I said, "Who is this whom they are punishing?" •He said to me, "This is [a] soul which was found in its lawlessness." And before it attained to repenting it was [vi]sited, and taken out of its body. •Truly, I, Zephaniah, saw these things in my vision.

Rev 22:8

A a. In 2En 18 the seer also finds a host in the fifth heaven. In that text they are called "Egoroi" ("Gregori" in text A). Charles identifies them with the Aram. irim who appear in Dan. That word is translated into Gk. as egrēgoroi. "watchers" (Aquila, Symmachus). When Enoch first saw them, they were lamenting for their fallen brethren, but he persuaded them to praise God with their singing, as the "lords" are doing in the present passage. The background for designating an angelic host as "lords" may be sought in the LXX version of Deut 10:14–17 where the God of the heavens is described as "God of gods and Lord of lords." The mention of "many gods and many lords" in 1Cor 8:5 may also be related to Deut 10:17, but it is basically pejorative in its thrust and consequently belongs to a different tradition than the present work.

b. We have capitalized the Holy Spirit because the spirit is undoubtedly that of God. Nevertheless, there is no need to understand this in a trinitarian or Christian sense as Clement may have done. There is sufficient attestation of the use in Jewish sources: Cf. WisSol 9:17; Martls 5:14; 4Ezra 14:22; PssSol 17:42; CD 2.10.

c. In Dan 7:9 there is mention of "thrones" being set up for a scene of judgment. The use of the plural suggests that members of the heavenly host are also to be enthroned beside the Ancient of Days. The same passage provides an OT background for the brilliant, luminous quality of the thrones portrayed in the present text. Cf. Col 1:16; Rev 4:4; Ascens 7:13.

d. The Gk. arrētos. "ineffable," may be used of God in two senses: (1) one who is indescribable because he is beyond comprehension, and (2) one whose name ought not to be spoken because it is prohibited outside of a limited cultic setting. It is difficult to know which sense is intended here because of the lack of context. Both uses were current in Jewish sources.

e. The Gk. hupsistos. "most high," was used in the LXX to render the Heb. elyon. It was subsequently rather widely used in the apocrypha and pseudepigrapha as a divine name. Cf. Tob 1:4, 13; Jdt 13:13; 2Mac 3:31; 3Mac 6:2. See also TWOT, vol. 8, p. 618.

B a. The meaning of the Cop. word used here and in vs. 5 is uncertain.

b. "Each one" must refer to the angels.

c. There is a similar phrase on fol. 35b of the Cop. version of the ApPaul edited by Budge. It reads, "Be strong, O one who will triumph and you will triumph over the accuser, who will come up from Hades." The text of ApPaul must represent either a quotation from the present text or a borrowing from a common stock of liturgical expressions. The version in ApPaul has been corrupted so that it appears that the accuser is the one who will come up from Hades, but when it is corrected to agree with the wording of the present apocalypse the sense of ApPaul is improved.

The reading "O one who will triumph" in the present text requires reading the Cop. peknajro as petnajro.

d. Reading jeknajro for petnajro.

The scene in a broad place

- 8 And the angel of the Lord^c went with me. I saw a great broad place, thousands of thousands surrounded [it] on its left side and myriads of myriads on its right [side]. The form^f of [each] one was different. •Their hair was loose^e like that belonging to women. [Their] teeth were like the teeth of . . .^h

The Akhmimic Text

Fragment dealing with burial

- 1.2 1 . . . dead. We will bury him like any man.^a •Whenever he dies, we will carry him out playing the cithara before [him] and chanting psalms and odes^b over his body.

Scenes from above the seer's city

- 1 2 Now I went with the angel of the Lord, and he took me up (over) all my city.^a 2 There was nothing^b before my eyes. •Then I saw two men walking together[er] on Mt 24:40f.
 3 one road.^c I watched [them] as they ta[lk]ed. •And, moreover, I also saw two Lk 17:34f.

e. The angel of the Lord appears in the OT as a figure closely identified with Yahweh. In the earlier portions of the OT he is sent to deliver a message from God or to assist Israel in time of distress. With the prophet Zechariah, however, the angel of the Lord becomes a guide and interlocutor who explained the visions that the prophet saw. It is in that role that the angel of the Lord appears in the present text.

f. The Cop. word can also represent the Gk. words genos, "genus," or phusis, "nature."

g. The same phrase is found at vs. 4:4.

h. The remainder of the text is broken off. The reverse side of the papyrus is illegible, except for isolated words.

1 a. The author may be explaining what the burial practice in a typical situation is. That would contrast with the seer's own transformation. It is also possible that the seer is here quoting someone else who is describing the seer's own body, which appeared to be dead. In PJ there is an account of what happened when Jeremiah was undergoing a visionary experience. Those who were left on the earth thought that he was dead and considered preparing his body for burial. The Cop. word that is used in the present passage means either "to bury" or "to prepare the corpse for burial." In the Nag Hammadi ApPaul (CG V, 19, 27–29), Paul is apparently told to look back and see his own "[likeness]" upon the earth. Unfortunately the text must be restored at that critical point.

b. This description of the funeral rite is so brief that it is not possible to tell whether it is Christian or Jewish. The pattern clearly conforms to very early Christian practice, but that does not exclude the possibility of it being Jewish. In 2Sam 3:31–4, King David provides a prototype for Jewish funeral processions together with the accompanying lamentation. Josephus (Apion 2.27) describes the appropriate response of pious Jews of his time to a passing funeral procession. The recitation of Ps 91 during the procession is apparently very ancient.

2 a. Jerusalem would be the most likely city to appear in an apocalypse of Zephaniah. Note God's word in Zeph 1:10–13. It is also of interest to note Zechariah's considerable interest in Jerusalem since our author is greatly indebted to that prophet.

b. Possibly "no one."

c. The present passage is obviously related to the words of Jesus reported in Mt 24:40f. and Lk 17:34f. (cf. GThom 91, 23). Unfortunately, the nature of the relationship is not easy to determine. If we agree with P. Lacau, "remarques sur le manuscrit akhmimique des apocalypses de Sophonie et d'Élie," JA 254 (1966) 176, that the quotation "two men . . . on one road" is simply a variant of the "two men . . . in the field," which appears at Mt 24:40, then we may compare the three versions in the following manner: (1) two men on one road (= field)—two women grinding at the mill—two in one bed (ApZeph), (2) two men in the field—two women grinding at the mill (Mt), (3) two in one bed—two women grinding—[two men in the field] (Lk). The ApZeph contains the fullest account. It mentions the "mill" of Mt and the "bed" of Lk.

A simple solution might be to assume that the version of ApZeph is a conflation of the Gospel passages, but there are a number of reasons for rejecting that position. Lacau has already noted that this would then be the only passage in the apocalypse that could be specifically identified as Christian.

The structure of the saying suggests a carefully worked proverbial phrase, similar to the proverb about the drop on the bucket that follows. In the present saying, the action moves from two men on the road to two women who are presumably straining together in a common effort to turn the upper millstone, and then, finally, to a couple in bed. The scene becomes progressively more intimate as the saying continues. It begins with two men, turns to two women, and concludes with a couple (presumably a man and a woman). The fact that the proverb is so well constructed and complete in its present form means that it is not a simple conflation. One is not obliged to accept the opinion that it is derived from the Gospel accounts. In fact, one could argue that Mt and Lk provide abbreviated variants of a longer parable. It is our opinion that this was a familiar parable that was used in the present work and alluded to by Mt, Lk, and the author of GThom.

The proverbial nature of the saying is also apparent

- 4 women grinding together at a mill. And I watched them^d as they talked. • And I [also] saw two upon a bed, [each] one of them acting for their (mutual) . . . ^e upon
 5 a bed. • And [I saw] the whole inhabited world ha[n]ging like a drop of wa[ter], Isa 40:15
WisSol 11:22
 6 which is suspended^f from a buc[ket] when it comes up from^g a well. • I said to the 7 angel of the Lord, “Then does darkness or night not exist in this place?”^h • He said to me, “No, because darkness does not exist in that place where the righteous and the saints are, but rather they always exist in the light.” Ps 139:12
- 8.9 And I saw all the souls of men as they existed in punishment. • And I cried out Isa 57:15 1Clem 59:3
 to the Lord Almighty,ⁱ [“O Go]d, if^j you remain with the [saj]nts, you (certainly) have compassion^k on behalf of the world [and] the souls which are in [this] punishment.”

Vision of recording angels from Mount Seir

- 1 3 The angel of the Lord said to me, “Come, let me show you the [place (?)] of Ecl 3:16
 2 righteousness.”^a • And he took me [up] upon Mount Seir^b and he [showed me] Deut 33:2
 3 three men, as two angels walked with them rejoicing and exulting over them. • I Isa 21:11
Judg 5:4

from the manner in which it is used by the author. Although there is a slight lacuna at the end of the statement, it is hardly large enough to permit the author to explain his saying; he reasonably expected his readers to understand the saying as a familiar proverb dealing with the frailty of life and its inevitable end. It is a vision that follows his discussion of a typical funeral procession; the reader was expected to supply a traditional understanding of the visitation of the Angel of Death, who would remove one of the partners in each of these vignettes (cf. GThom 91, 24). In order for the writer to assume that sort of reading, the proverb must have circulated in a form that made it readily applicable to the typical human experience. The Gospel quotations will not meet that requirement because they are set in the context of the sudden appearance of an eschatological age.

The motif of a seer ascending and looking back to see events on earth is also found in ApPaul 13. The seer in that text watches men at the point of death as the soul leaves the body. Compare Nag Hammadi CG V, 19, 29–32.

d. The pronoun must be restored in the text.

e. The translation of “[each] one of them acting for their (mutual) . . . upon a bed,” is uncertain. If we were certain of the reading “on a bed,” or if we were able to restore the word that fits in the lacuna, we could then be more confident about reading the rest of the phrase. The word in the lacuna is a Gk. word ending in ia. We also know that it was feminine singular. Lacau suggested adikia, anomia, or some word suggesting repose. The list of words could be extended to include words meaning “harmony,” “pleasure,” or “accord.” The parallel from the GThom describes the two as “resting” or “being at repose” upon a bed.

f. There are two scribal errors in this sentence. In the phrase “which is suspended,” the scribe wrote a chai instead of an e.

g. In the phrase “up from,” he wrote an e instead of a chai. The translation of 2:3–5 depends upon reconstructions of the text suggested by Lacau in JA 254 (1966) 169–95.

h. The question appears to be a non sequitur in the present context, where it follows proverbial observations on the tenuous nature of human existence. It is possible that there was a lacuna in the MS from which the present text was copied, or perhaps the abrupt change is simply a witness to a rather crude conflation of sources.

In its present setting, the question concerning the absence of darkness is introduced by the comment that “There was nothing before my eyes,” and examples of the seer’s unusual vision as he observes people engaged in various activities from his location high above the city.

i. The term pantokratōr was well established in Jewish writings on the basis of its use for translating šba’ōi and šaddai in the LXX. Although the term gains currency among the patristic writers, its use in the NT is strictly limited. Apart from an OT quotation in 2Cor 6:18, it is found only in Rev. For its use within the OT see “Theological Importance.”

j. There is a scribal error at this point. He wrote o instead of e at the beginning of the word for “if.”

k. A slight emendation is required to permit the reading “you (certainly) have compassion.”

3 a. A feminine noun that describes a location is needed at this point. There is a similar phrase in the Cop. (Budge) ApPaul, a work that appears to depend on the present text in several places. The Cop. text published by Budge (Miscellaneous Coptic Texts in the Dialect of Upper Egypt, p. 568) records the following command by Paul’s guiding angel: “Rise up now and follow me and let me show you your place.” The angel then leads Paul into Paradise.

b. Probably Edomite Seir, which is closely associated with Mount Sinai in the theophanies that appear in the Song of Deborah (Judg 5:4f. and Deut 33:2). Throughout the OT, Edom is treated as a model of villainy, but after the conquest of Edom by John Hyrcanus, the Idumeans begin to be fully involved in the affairs of Judah. During the period of Antipater and the Herodians, pro-Edomite sentiment undoubtedly flourished. Despite the fact that hatred for those Idumean monarchs only intensified the traditional mistrust of Edom among certain Jewish parties, there were others who sought their favor. For example, Josephus reports in his War (4.4) that the Idumeans came to Jerusalem to assist the Zealots shortly before that city fell to the Romans. The most likely period for this pro-Edomite portion of the narrative that locates the prophet’s vision on Mount Seir is between 128 B.C. and A.D. 70, when there was a reasonable motive for recalling positive references to Mount Seir in the OT or for making it the locus of a new vision.

In the Nag Hammadi ApPaul, the ascent of the apostle takes place from the mountain of Jericho. CG V, 19, 12.

- 4 said to the angel, "Of what sort are these?" •He said to me, "These are the three sons of Joatham,^c the priest, who neither kept the commandment of their father nor observed the ordinances of the Lord." Deut 6:1
Lk 1:6
Ps 119:4
- 5 Then I saw two other angels weeping^d over the three sons of Joatham, the priest.
- 6 I said, "O angel, who are these?" He said, "These are the angels of the Lord Almighty. They write down all the good deeds^e of the righteous upon their 7 manuscript^f as they watch at the gate of heaven. •And I take them from their hands and bring them up before the Lord Almighty; he writes their name in the Book of 8 the Living.^g •Also the angels of the accuser who is upon the earth,^h they also write 9 down all of the sins of men upon their manuscript. •They also sit at the gate of heaven. They tell the accuser and he writes them upon his manuscript so that he might accuse them when they come out of the world (and) down there."ⁱ

Vision of ugly angels who carry off the souls of ungodly men

- 1 4 Then I walked with the angel of the Lord. I looked before me and I saw a place Dan 7:10
Rev 5:11
1En 40:1
60:1
2 there. •[Thousands] of thousands and myriads of myriads of an[gels] entered 3 through [it]. •Their faces were like a leopard[d], their tusks being outside their 4 mouth [like] the wild boars. •Their eyes were mixed with blood. Their hair was 5 loose like the hair of women, and fiery scourges were in their hands. •When I saw 6 them, I was afraid. I said to that angel who walked with me, "Of what sort are 7 these?" •He said to me, "These are the servants of all creation who come to the 8 souls of ungodly men and bring them and leave them in this place. •They spend 9 three days going around with them in the air before they bring them and cast them 10 into their eternal punishment."
- 8 I said, "I beseech you, O Lord, don't give them authority to come to me."
9 The angel said, "Don't fea[r]. I will not permit them to come to [you] because 10 you are pure^a before the Lord. I will not permit them to come to you because the 10 Lord Almighty sent me to you because (you) are pure before him." •Then he beckoned to them, and they withdrew themselves and they ran from me.

c. This passage might possibly be decisive for dating the apocalypse if we could identify Joatham and his sons. Unfortunately, that is not a simple matter. The name Joatham appears in Josephus as a spelling for Jotham (cf. spelling of Jotham in Mt 1:9). Josephus identifies two high priests by that name. In a list that parallels 1Chr 6:4–8, 50–53, and Ezra 7:2–5, Josephus (Ant 8.12) has inserted Joatham at the point where the biblical writers list Uzzi and Zerariah as ancestors of Solomon's priest, Zadok.

A second Jotham, son of Juelus, is mentioned in a list of high priests who held office between the time of Solomon and the Babylonian captivity. Jotham is the tenth priest in line. Using an average of twenty years for the length of a high priest's tenure, Jotham, son of Juelus, would have served sometime during the period of Ahaz or Hezekiah. It is conceivable that his sons might have disgraced themselves during the reign of Manasseh and Amon. The biblical Zephaniah, who provided the pseudonym for the present work, and who began his labors shortly after the reign of Amon, delivered an important oracle (Zeph 1:1–6) against the priests in Jerusalem, who are charged with swearing by both Yahweh and Milcom (vss. 4f.). In the Heb. text, the errant priests are called kemarim, a term not used for legitimate priests of Yahweh, but the Heb. text also adds the phrase "with the priests." Zephaniah threatened to remove the names of those priests.

At best any argument for identifying the Jotham of this text with either of the priests mentioned by Josephus remains a fragile hypothesis. It is equally possible that the author has in mind some lesser priest whose family affairs were notorious among the contemporaries of the author of ApZeph.

d. There may be a temporal sequence here, with two angels rejoicing before the three sons sin (3:2–4) and two others weeping afterward. It is also possible that the text simply describes two different angelic responses. Two bad angels rejoice in wickedness and two good angels weep.

e. Compare ApPaul, chs. 7, 9, and 10. In that text angels bring forth deeds of men, whether good or evil, at sunset. One angel goes forth rejoicing and another goes out with a sad face.

f. "Their manuscript" is corrected from scribal "his manuscript." The plural pronoun refers to the angels. The plural is correctly used in 3:8, and the singular is correctly used in 3:9, where the pronoun refers to the accuser.

g. Compare Ps 69:28, where the Book of the Living is parallel to those "enrolled among the righteous." Compare also Ex 32:32f.; Ps 40:7; Isa 34:16; Dan 7:10; 12:1; Mal 3:16; Phil 4:3; Rev 3:5; 13:8.

h. It may also be read "who is over the earth," in the sense of authority, or it could refer to the angels who are upon or over the earth.

i. The Cop. construction is adverbial, describing the direction of the verb of motion. Perhaps the region of the accuser is "down there."

4 a. The word for "pure" also means "saint."

Vision of the heavenly city

- 1 5 But I went with the angel of the Lord, and I looked in front of me and I saw 2 gates. •Then when I approached them I discovered that they were bronze gates.
 3 The angel touched them and they opened before him. I entered with him and 4 found its whole square like a beautiful city, and I walked in its midst. •Then the angel of the Lord transformed himself^a beside me in that place.
 5 Now I looked at them, and I discovered that they were bronze gates and bronze Isa 45:2 6 bolts and iron bars. •Now my mouth was shut^b therein. I beheld the bronze gates Ps 107:16 in front of me^c as fire was being cast forth for about fifty stadia.

Vision of the accuser and the angel Eremiel in Hades

- 1.2 6 Again I turned back and walked, and I saw a great sea. •But I thought that it 1En 67:13 was a sea of water. I discovered that it was entirely a sea of flame like a slime ApPet 23 3 which casts forth much flame and whose waves burn sulfur and bitumen. •They Rev 19:20 began to approach me.
 4.5 Then I thought that the Lord Almighty had come to visit me. •Then when I saw,
 6 I fell upon my face before him in order that I might worship him. •I was very Dan 10:10; 8:17 7 much afraid, and I entreated him that he might save me from this distress. •I cried out, saying, "Eloe, Lord, Adonai, Sabaoth,^a I beseech you to save me from this distress because it has befallen me." 8 That same instant I stood up, and I saw a great angel before me. His hair was spread out like the lionesses'.^b His teeth were outside his mouth like a bear. His hair was spread out like women's. His body was like the serpent's when he wished 9 to swallow me. •And when I saw him, I was afraid of him so that all of my parts 1En 21:9

5 a. In Ascenss there are a number of transformations. At 9:30 Isaiah is apparently transformed to appear like an angel. In 10:18–27 Isaiah witnesses the various transformations of the Lord as he descends from heaven to heaven. The reader is reminded of the transfiguration scenes in Mk 9:2f.; Mt 17:2; Lk 9:28f.; or the theological commentary of 2Cor 3:18. The ancestor of the transfiguration motif in Judaism may ultimately be the translation of Elijah in 2Kgs 2:11 or the account of Moses' shining face in Ex 34:29. The expectation that all who are righteous will be transfigured is based on Dan 12. The theme is enthusiastically expanded in apocalyptic literature. Compare 4Ezra 7:97, 125; 2Bar 51:3, 10; 1En 39:7; 104:2. The writers also conceived of a continuum between the angels and men who would become like the angels. Cf. 1En 104:6 and 2Bar 51:10. Consequently, angels might also be subject to transformations. Angelic messengers faced the same problem that confronted Moses when he was forced to veil and unveil his face as he moved between God and men in Ex 34:33–35. Apparently the angels dealt with the problem through a series of transformations.

b. This translation assumes that the sights within the city were not meant to be revealed. Compare ApPaul 21, where Paul is prohibited from revealing what he has seen in the third heaven. ApPaul is obviously dependent on Paul's note in 2Cor 12:1–4. Nevertheless, the idea of secret lore, sealed books, hidden knowledge is the stock-in-trade of Jewish apocrypha (= hidden matters) generally. Compare 4Ezra 14:4–6, 44–46; Dan 12:4.

If the seer's mouth was closed with respect to mysteries seen within the city, that would explain why very little is described beyond the gates and the overall beauty of the square. The reader has been led to expect a report of the seer's vision and an angelic explanation of each scene, but that is missing from the episode within the city.

c. In most of the apocalyptic writings gates are described as part of the heavenly city, but in TAB 11 (rec. A), there are two gates within the first gate of heaven. One leads on a narrow way for the blessed and one leads to a wide path for those who are evil. An earlier ancestor of that scene is to be found in the Myth of Er in Plato's Republic 614–21. Plato does not describe the entrances to heaven and Hades as gates, but TAB provides evidence that such a feature was known in apocalyptic writings. The gates which our seer beheld with fire being cast forth could possibly be the gates opening up from Hades.

6 a. Steindorff suggests that this represents a Heb. phrase, ^a*lôhay*, ^a*dônay*, ^a*dônay š'ba'ôit*, which would be translated "My God, my Lord, Lord of Hosts." That looks like a curious expression indeed. It is hard to imagine that it would be constructed in a Heb.-speaking community. It is also strange that anyone would translate the first ^a*dônay* and transcribe the second. It would appear that the author of this text was not well acquainted with Heb. He apparently knew two Heb. Epithets: "Eloe" and "Adonai Sabaoth." He used the two of them together with his own Gk. term kurios to address God by means of three of his titles: "Eloe, Kurios, Adonai Sabaoth." The Cop. translator translated the Gk. and left the Heb. transcriptions in place.

b. This vs. also contains the phrase "his hair was spread out like women's." One of these descriptions appears to be redundant. Steindorff suggested that there might have been a description of his face which was like "the lionesses'." At this point he compared a text from Cod. Bruc. 227, l. 6, in which the description of the face of the figure precedes the description of its teeth. Cf. also 4:3f., above, and Rev 9:8.

10 of my body were loosened and I fell upon my face. •I was unable to stand, and I prayed before the Lord Almighty, “You will save me from this distress. You are the one who saved Israel from the hand of Pharaoh, the king of Egypt. You saved Susanna from the hand of the elders of injustice. You saved the three holy men, Shadrach, Meshach, Abednego, from the furnace of burning fire. I beg you to save me from this distress.”

11 Then I arose and stood, and I saw a great angel standing before me with his face shining like the rays of the sun in its glory since his face is like that which is perfected in its glory. •And he was girded as if a golden girdle were upon his breast. His feet were like bronze which is melted in a fire. •And when I saw him, I rejoiced, for I thought that the Lord Almighty had come to visit me. •I fell upon my face, and I worshiped him. •He said to me, “Take heed. Don’t worship me. I am not the Lord Almighty, but I am the great angel, Eremiel,^c who is over the abyss and Hades, the one in which all of the souls are imprisoned from the end of the Flood, which came upon the earth, until this day.”

Rev 1:13-15

Dan 10:5f.
Rev 2:18Rev 19:10:
22:8f.
AscenIs 7:21

16 Then I inquired of the angel, “What is the place to which I have come?”^d He said to me, “It is Hades.” •Then I asked him, “Who is the great angel who stands thus, whom I saw?” He said, “This is the one who accuses men in the presence of the Lord.”

Vision of the two manuscripts

1 7 Then I looked, and I saw him with a manuscript in his hand. He began to unroll it. •Now after he spread it out, I read it in my (own) language. I found that all my sins which I had done were written in it, those which I had done from my youth until this day. •They were all written upon that manuscript of mine without there being a false word in them. •If I did not go to visit a sick man or a widow, I found it written down as a shortcoming upon my manuscript. •If I did not visit an orphan, it was found written down as a shortcoming on my manuscript. •A day on which I did not fast (or) pray in the time of prayer I found written down as a failing upon my manuscript. •And a day when I did not turn to the sons of Israel—since it is a shortcoming—I found written down upon my manuscript^e •so that I threw myself upon my face and prayed before the Lord Almighty, “May your mercy reach me and may you wipe out my manuscript because your mercy has [co]me to be in every place and has filled every [p]lace.”

ApPaul 17

Job 31

Dan 6:10

9 Then I arose and stood, and I saw a great angel before me saying to me, “Triumph, prevail because you have prevailed and have triumphed^b over the accuser, and you have come up from Hades and the abyss. You will now cross over the crossing place.”

10,11 Again he brought another manuscript which was written by hand. •He began to unroll it, and I read it, and found it written in my (own) language . . .

TWO PAGES MISSING

(In the missing pages the author probably discussed the content of the second manuscript, which should have recorded the good deeds of the seer. If the missing material is parallel to the preceding section, the reading of

c. This is the angel whose duty it is to watch over the souls in Hades. The same figure appears in 4Ezra 4:36 as Jeremiel. In that text Ezra asks how long he must wait until the new age, and he is informed that the righteous are in the underworld and in the chambers of the souls, which are like a womb that will bear when its time is filled. In 2Bar 55:3 and 63:6 the name is spelled Ramiel. He is described in that text as “the angel . . . who presides over true visions” (55:3). In 1En 20, the spelling is Remiel. He is listed as one of the seven archangels; he is set over “those who rise.”

d. The Cop. phrase is ambiguous. It could mean

“which I have come up to” (so Steindorff) or “which I have come down to.” The seer is in Hades, but the location is not clear.

7 a. The grammar of this last notice of sin differs from the others. Perhaps it is done for climactic effect.

b. A slight emendation would make this passage conform more closely to the parallel texts by reading “triumph, prevail so that you will prevail and triumph.” Such an emendation does little to improve the sense, however, and there is reason to believe that this statement was meant to express the vindication of the seer, who has already triumphed.

the manuscript would be followed by a prayer—possibly a prayer of thanksgiving—and a pronouncement of triumph by a great angel. That would be followed by preparations for crossing over the river in a journey out of Hades. The section that follows begins after the arrival of a boat.)

1,2 8 . . . They helped me and set me on that boat. •Thousands of thousands and 3 myriads of myriads of angels gave praise before me. •I, myself, put on an angelic
4 garment. I saw all of those angels praying. •I, myself, prayed together with them, 5 I knew their language, which they spoke with me. •Now, moreover, my sons,^a this is the trial because it is necessary that the good and the evil be weighed in a balance.^b

The first trumpet, a proclamation of triumph and visitation of the righteous

1 9 Then a great angel came forth having a golden trumpet in his hand, and he blew it three times over my head, saying, "Be courageous! O one who has triumphed.
Prevail! O one who has prevailed. For you have triumphed over the accuser, and 2 you have escaped from the abyss and Hades. •You will now cross over the crossing 3 place. For your name is written in the Book of the Living." •I wanted to embrace him, (but) I was unable to embrace the great angel because his glory is great.
4 Then he ran to all the righteous ones, namely, Abraham and Isaac and Jacob 5 and Enoch and Elijah and David. •He spoke with them as friend to friend speaking with one another.

Gen 18
Jas 2:23

A second trumpet, the opening of heaven, a vision of souls in torment

1 10 Then the great angel came to me with the golden trumpet in his hand, and he 2 blew it up to heaven. •Heaven opened from the place where the sun rises to where 3 it sets, from the north to the south. •I saw the sea which I had seen at the bottom

8 a. This sentence is an attempt to sum up the preceding episode. It is addressed to the hearers, who are identified as "my sons." The homiletical aside suggests that this portion of the text was prepared for use within an organized religious community that assembled to hear lectures or sermons. It is not possible to determine whether the text was originally written for that purpose or simply used in that manner by later generations.

b. The mention of weighing good and evil in a balance reminds one of the Egyptian prototype for judgment in the underworld.

9 a. "Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Enoch, Elijah, and David." These six righteous ones have a special status for the writer of ApZeph. After leaving Hades, where Eremiel watches over the souls entrusted to him, the seer enters the realm of the righteous and meets those who did not sojourn in Hades. In this group, Enoch serves as the prototype for others. The statement that "Enoch walked with God. Then he vanished because God took him" (Gen 5:24) gave rise to early speculation about where he was taken. Jub 4:23 reports that he was conducted to the garden of Eden, where he writes down all the wickedness of the children of men. In 1En 70 we are told that his name was raised aloft and he saw angels measuring the place for the elect and righteous. He also saw the first fathers and the righteous who dwell there. Unfortunately, that ch. in 1En cannot be dated. According to J. T. Milik, The Books of Enoch, p. 4, it is from a portion of 1En which was not attested at Qumran.

The removal of the patriarchs and David to Paradise presented a more severe problem because their death and burial was an accepted fact, and their tombs were available as shrines. TAb, TIsaac, and TJac, which are relatively late documents, preserve an account of how it was done. The body of each patriarch was buried, but his soul was removed to be with God (cf. ApMos for the removal of Adam's soul). An earlier witness to that tradition may possibly be seen in Jesus' argument preserved in Mt 22:29–33. The climax of the argument is found in vs. 32, "I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob? God is God, not of the dead, but of the living."

Apparently a similar removal was accorded King David, whose eternal presence was required as a musician who leads the praise of God with his harp and song (cf. ApPaul 29). See also the Cop. (Budge) ApPaul, fol. 36a. The motivation for David's transfer to a heavenly scene is probably to be located in a text such as the LXX version of Ps 16(LXX 15):10, in which it is stated that God would not leave his (i.e. David's) soul in Hades. It is also quite possible that the author of Acts 2:25–36 was arguing against a popular Jewish opinion that the soul of David was in Paradise while his incorruptible body remained in the tomb. The author of Acts would be opposed to the theology of the present text because he explicitly states that "David did not ascend into the heavens." It is interesting to note that the Christian addition to 4Ezra, commonly referred to as 5Ezra, contains a list of Jewish heroes that begins with Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Elijah, and Enoch. It then adds the names of the prophets, but it does not mention David.

The number of righteous persons in the heavenly Paradise described in our text is not obvious. Ch. 11:1 mentions "multitudes," but it is not clear that they are presently in Paradise.

4 of Hades. Its waves came up to the clouds. •I saw all the souls sinking in it. I saw 5 some whose hands were bound to their neck, with their hands and feet being 6 fettered. •I said, "Who are these?" He said to me, "These are the ones who were 7 bribed^a and they were given gold and silver until the souls of men were led astray."
 8 And I saw others covered with mats of fire. •I said, "Who are these?" He said
 9 to me, "These are the ones who give money at interest, and they receive interest
 10 for interest." •And I also saw some blind ones crying out. And I was amazed 11 when I saw all these works of God. •I said, "Who are these?" He said to me, 12 "These are catechumens who heard the word of God, but they were not perfected 13 in the work which they heard."^b •And I said to him, "Then do they not have 14 repentance here?" He said, "Yes." •I said, "How long?" He said to me, "Until the day when the Lord will judge." •And I saw others with their hair on them.
 I said, "Then there is hair and body in this place?" •He said, "Yes, the Lord gives body and hair to them as he desires."

Zeph 1:17

Jas 1:22

1Cor 15:38

The intercession of the saints for those in torment

1.2 11 And I also saw multitudes. He brought them forth. •As they looked at all of the torments they called out, praying before the Lord Almighty, saying, "We pray to you on account of those who are in all these torments so that you might have 3 mercy on all of them." •And when I saw them, I said to the angel who spoke with 4 me, "Who are these?" •He said, "These who beseech the Lord are Abraham
 5 and Isaac and Jacob. •Then at a certain hour daily they come forth with the great 6 angel. He sounds a trumpet up to heaven and another sound upon the earth. •All the righteous hear the sound. They come running, praying to the Lord Almighty daily on behalf of these who are in all these torments."

Another trumpet blast heralding the coming wrath of God

1 12 And again the great angel comes forth with the golden trumpet in his hand
 2 blowing over the earth. •They hear (it) from the place of the sunrise to the place
 3 of the sunset and from the southern regions to the northern region. •And again he 4 blows up to heaven and his sound is heard. •I said, "O Lord, why did you not 5 leave me until I saw all of them?" •He said to me, "I do not have authority to 6 show them to you until the Lord Almighty rises up in his wrath to destroy the 7 earth and the heavens. •They will see and be disturbed, and they will all cry out, 8 saying, 'All flesh which is ascribed to you we will give to you on the day of the 9 Lord.' •Who will stand in his presence when he rises in his wrath (to destroy) the 10 earth (and the heaven?) •Every tree which grows upon the earth will be plucked up with their roots and fall down. And every high tower and the birds which fly^a will fall . . ."

Zeph 1:15

Rev 6:17

Mal 3:2

FOUR PAGES MISSING

10 a. The Gk. word for "bribed" had to be restored because the scribe confused it with a Gk. word meaning "to wear."

b. The quotation could certainly pass as a Christian statement with its use of the word katechoumenos in close proximity to metanoia in vs. 10 and joined to a discussion of ones who were not "perfected," which probably reflects a Vorlage containing teleioi. But one is not compelled to read it that way. The word metanoia received from the intertestamental Jewish writings many of the nuances that it has in the NT (cf. WisSol 12:10, 19; PrMan 8).

The idea of the perfection of just men has a wider history. It has philosophical antecedents as well as currency to describe initiates in mystery religions. Furthermore, the use of telios in the LXX to translate tamin and shalem gave it wide currency in Jewish writings. Thus Noah is designated "perfect" in the LXX of Gen 6:9 in the sense of wholeness, so too Enoch was described as perfected in WisSol 4:13, 16.

Consequently the only word that is not fully current in Jewish writings is katechoumenos, but that does not exclude its possible use by a Jewish author. There was a considerable degree of continuity between Jewish and Christian methods of instruction. The verb katecheō was used by both Philo and Josephus in the sense of giving information. It would therefore not be too surprising to discover a Jewish writer who used the passive participle to describe those who were taught. Finally, there is one element in Christian usage which is not clearly present in this text. In Christian usage, the term often refers to instruction of proselytes, but there is no reason to assume that those who were instructed in this text were any other than members of the community who had been fully informed of the significance of their own tradition.

12 a. After "fly" the scribe has created a dittography by repeating the phrase "upon the earth and every high tower."

TABLE OF TITLES GIVEN TO BOOKS ASSOCIATED WITH EZRA (AND NEHEMIAH) IN SELECTED VERSIONS

Version \ Document	Old Testament Book of Ezra	Old Testament Book of Nehemiah	Paraphrase of 2 Chronicles chs. 35-36; the whole Book of Ezra; Nehemiah 7:38-8:12; plus a tale about Darius's bodyguards	A Latin Apocalypse
Septuagint	II Esdras		I Esdras
Latin Vulgate	I Esdras	II Esdras	III Esdras	IV Esdras
Many later Latin Manuscripts	I Esdras		III Esdras	II Esdras =chs. 1-2 IV Esdras = chs. 3-14 V Esdras = chs. 15-16
Great Bible (1539) Douay Bible (1609-1610)	I Esdras	II Esdras	III Esdras	IV Esdras
Russian Bible, Moscow Patriarchate (1956)	I Esdras	Nehemiah	II Esdras	III Esdras
Geneva Bible (1560) Bishops' Bible (1568) King James Version (1611) Revised Standard Version (1957)	The Book of Ezra	The Book of Nehemiah	I Esdras	II Esdras

THE FOURTH BOOK OF EZRA

(Late First Century A.D.)

With the Four Additional Chapters

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY B. M. METZGER

The treatise identified in Latin manuscripts as 4 Ezra (Esdrae liber IV) comprises chapters 3–14 of an expanded form of the book traditionally included among the Apocrypha of English Bibles under the title 2 Esdras. This expanded form includes a Christian framework, comprising chapters 1f. and 15f., commonly called 2 and 5 Esdras in the later Latin manuscripts.¹ For the convenience of the reader, the following pages provide a translation of the entire sixteen chapters. The accompanying chart shows the confused and confusing nomenclature of the diverse titles applied to the work.

The opening two chapters set forth a divine call to Ezra, a man of priestly descent (1:1–3), to reprove the Jewish people for their waywardness despite God's repeated mercies (1:4–2:32). Rejected by Israel, Ezra turns to the gentiles (2:33–41) and is granted a vision of a great multitude that stands on Mount Zion, each receiving a crown from "the Son of God, whom they confessed in the world" (2:42–48). Following this Christian introduction, the main body of the book (chs. 3–14), written by a Jewish author and preserved in several Oriental versions (see "Texts"), sets forth seven visions granted to Salathiel, also called Ezra, in Babylon. In the first vision (3:1–5:19), presented in dialogue form, Ezra bewails the fate of his people and raises perplexing questions concerning the origins of the world's sin and suffering. He is assured that the end of the age is near.

In the second vision (5:21–6:34), after reiterating his complaint that God has abandoned his own chosen people to the gentiles, Ezra raises a new problem concerning the lot of those who die before the present age has passed away (5:41) and is assured that their lot will be similar to that of those living at the inauguration of the new age (5:42–6:10). There follows a list of the signs of the end of the age (6:11–28).

The lengthy third vision (6:35–9:25) describes the final judgment and the future state of the righteous and the wicked (7:26–[131]). Expressing great compassion for the lost, Ezra struggles with the problem of reconciling God's mercy with the destruction of the wicked (7:[132–40]) and once again makes intercession to God on their behalf (8:4–36). This is followed by an admonition that Ezra, who is destined for eternal bliss, would do better to think about his own future than to brood over the lot of sinners, which they deserve (8:37–62). The vision concludes with a recapitulation of the signs that will precede the end (8:63–9:25).

The fourth vision (9:26–10:59) depicts a woman in deep mourning for her only son and describes her suffering (9:38–10:4). She is suddenly transformed into a glorious city, identified as heavenly Zion in the day of salvation (10:25–59).

The fifth vision (11:1–12:39) is an elaborate allegory illustrating the course of future history by means of an eagle rising from the sea (11:1–35). The eagle, Ezra is told, represents the Roman Empire, which will be punished by God's Messiah for persecuting his elect (12:10–34).

In the sixth vision (13:1–58) Ezra sees one like a man rising from the sea, who, with the clouds of heaven at the head of a great army, annihilates his enemies with a stream of fire issuing from his mouth.

¹ Modern scholars sometimes designate chs. 1–2 as 5 Ezra and chs. 15–16 as 6 Ezra.

The seventh and final vision (14:1–48) is an account of how an angel commissions Ezra to dictate for forty days to five men, who produce in this manner ninety-four books, namely twenty-four canonical books and seventy esoteric books that will remain hidden.

At this point the Oriental versions of the book come to an end (see “Texts”). The Christian form of the book, preserved in Latin manuscripts, continues with a kind of appendix comprising chapters 15 and 16. These contain denunciations against the enemies of God’s people and exhortations for the chosen people to put their trust in God.

Texts

The following translation is made from the Latin text edited by R. L. Bensly, The Fourth Book of Ezra. In general the translation follows the rendering of the Revised Standard Version of the book (the initial draft of which was prepared by the present writer), but is modified by minor alterations and corrections.

The Latin manuscripts cited by Bensly are the following:

1. Codex Sangermanensis, A.D. 822, formerly in the Library of the Benedictine Abbey of S. Germain des Prés at Paris, now in the Bibliothèque Nationale, number 11505 Fonds Latin. This, the oldest known copy of 4 Ezra, lacks 7:[36]–[105] and is the parent of the vast majority of extant manuscripts.² The missing section had at one time been contained on a leaf that had been cut out in early times. Since the passage contains an emphatic denial of the value of prayers for the dead (7:[105]), it is probable that the excision was made deliberately for dogmatic reasons.

2. Codex Ambianensis, a Carolingian minuscule of the ninth century is number 10 in the Bibliothèque Municipale of Amiens. This manuscript contains the “missing” section (7:[36]–[105]).³

3. Codex Complutensis, written in a Visigothic hand and dating from the ninth to tenth centuries, formerly of Complutum (Alcalá de Henares), is now MS 31 in the Library of the Central University at Madrid.

4. Codex Mazarinaeus is in two volumes, dating from the eleventh century, numbered 3 and 4 (formerly 6, 7) in the Bibliothèque Mazarine at Paris. The text of 4 Ezra is given in the sequence of chapters 3–16, 1 and 2.

The types of text of 4 Ezra in these and other Latin manuscripts fall into two main families: the French group (represented by MSS S and A) and the Spanish group (represented by MSS C and M). In general the French family presents a superior text.

Other versions of 4 Ezra (chs. 3–14) are the Syriac, Ethiopic, Armenian, and two independent Arabic versions; the last three are rather free renderings, of little value in reconstructing the original text. In addition, fragments of a Coptic and of a Georgian version are extant. The following are the chief editions of these seven Oriental versions.⁴

Syriac: The Old Testament in Syriac According to the Peshitta Version, edited on behalf of the International Organization for the Study of the Old Testament by the Peshitta Institute of the University of Leiden (eds. P. A. H. de Boer and W. Baars) part IV, fascicle 3, Apocalypse of Baruch. 4 Esdras, ed. R. J. Bidawid (Leiden, 1973).

Ethiopic: Veteris Testamenti Aethiopici, ed. A. Dillmann, tomus V, Libri apocryphi (Berlin, 1894) pp. 152–93, based on ten manuscripts.

Armenian: J. Zohrab’s text of 4 Ezra, included in his edition of the Armenian Bible

² So M. R. James in R. L. Bensly, The Fourth Book of Ezra, p. xiii. For a convenient list of eleven Lat. MSS containing 4Ezra see L. Gry, Les Dires prophétiques d’Esdras (IV. Esdras), vol. 1, pp. xi–xiii. For information concerning other Lat. MSS containing excerpts and paraphrases of 4Ezra, see M. McNamara, The Apocrypha in the Irish Church (Dublin, 1975) p. 27.

³ See R. L. Bensly, The Missing Fragment of the Fourth Book of Ezra (Cambridge, 1875). Actually, the text of the so-called missing section had been published in Ar. and in German in preceding centuries; see B. M. Metzger, “The ‘Lost’ Section of II Esdras (= IV Ezra),” JBL 76 (1957) 153–57; reprinted in B. M. Metzger, Historical and Literary Studies, Pagan, Jewish, and Christian (Leiden, 1963) pp. 48–51.

⁴ A convenient edition, printed in parallel columns, is B. Violet’s Die Ezra-Apokalypse (IV. Ezra) I. Teil: Die Überlieferung. This provides a critical Lat. text with German translations of the Syr., Eth., and two Ar. versions, and a Lat. translation of the Arm. version.

(Venice, 1805) and translated into English by J. Issaverdens, Uncanonical Writings of the Old Testament (Venice, 1901) pp. 481–691, is superseded now by M. E. Stone's edition (based on twenty-two MSS) and English translation, The Armenian Version of IV Ezra (University of Pennsylvania Armenian Texts and Studies, 1; Missoula, Mt., 1979).⁵

Arabic: The version known as Arab 1 is preserved in two manuscripts, the original and a copy of it. The original is Bodleian MS Or 251 (cat. Nicoll, p. 13, no. VI) of A.D. 1354,⁶ and the copy is in the Vatican (Arab. 3). The Arabic text was published by E. G. A. Ewalt in "Das vierte Ezrabuch nach seinem Zeitalter, seinen arabischen Übersetzungen und einer neuen Wiederherstellung," in Abhandlungen der Königlichen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen, vol. XI (1863). A second Arabic version, known as Arab 2, exists in a complete form in a Vatican manuscript (Arab. 462) of the fourteenth century and in partial form in two other manuscripts. The Vatican manuscript was edited with a Latin translation by J. Gildemeister, Esdrae liber quartus arabice e codice Vaticano (Bonn, 1877). Two further fragments of an Arabic version independent of Arab 1 and Arab 2 are also known.⁷

Coptic (Sahidic): A fragmentary parchment leaf, dating from the sixth to the eighth centuries, was edited by J. Leipoldt and B. Violet, "Ein saïdisches Bruchstück des vierten Esrabuches," Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache und Altertumskunde 41 (1904) 138–40. The leaf contains 4 Ezra 3:29–46.

Georgian: Portions of 4 Ezra are contained in two manuscripts: one preserved in the Library of the Greek Patriarchate at Jerusalem (MS 7 + 11 written A.D. 1050), and the other—containing excerpts comprising about two thirds of the book—in the lavra of Iveron on Mount Athos (written A.D. 978). The two manuscripts, according to Blake, "go back to the same archetype, and that by no means a remote one" (HTR 19 [1926] 303). See R. P. Blake, "The Georgian Version of Fourth Esdras from the Jerusalem Manuscript," HTR 19 (1926) 299–375, and "The Georgian Text of Fourth Esdras from the Athos MS," HTR 22 (1929) 57–105. Blake is of the opinion that the Georgian and the Ethiopic versions go back to a single Greek archetype (HTR 19 [1926] 309). In a more recent study Kourtsikidzé finds that the Georgian texts edited by Blake are represented also by a fragment of the Paris Lectionary (ed. M. Tarchnichvili).⁸

Greek: A tiny scrap of papyrus found at Oxyrhynchus, dating from about the fourth century (POxy 1010), preserves the text of 15:57–59.

There is also a condensation in Greek of chapters 11 and 12 contained in a manuscript dated A.D. 1656, which is in the Library of the Greek Orthodox Patriarchate at Jerusalem (no. 160). When the text is compared with that of the several versions of 4 Ezra, it appears that the condensation was made from the current Latin form of the book.⁹

Original language

The relation of the extant versions of the Ezra Apocalypse (chs. 3–14) to each other and to a lost original has received prolonged and repeated study. Not a few instances have been collected in which differences between the several versions (with the possible exception of

⁵ Textural problems in the Arm. version of 4Ezra are dealt with by Stone in Muséon 79 (1966) 387–400; HTR 60 (1967) 107–15; and Textus 6 (1968) 48–61; see also Stone's Concordance and Texts of the Armenian Version of IV Ezra (Oriental Notes and Studies 11; Jerusalem, 1971).

⁶ In 1646, John Gregory of Christ Church, Oxford, called attention to this MS as preserving "the most authentick remaine" of 4Ezra. At the beginning of the 18th cent., at the request of William Whiston, Simon Ockley, the noted Arabist at Oxford, prepared an ET of this version for inclusion in the former's curious work entitled Primitive Christianity Reviv'd (London, 1711) vol. 4. On the continent J. A. Fabricius made a Lat. translation of Ockley's rendering for his Codicis pseudepigraphi Veteris Testamenti (Hamburg, 1723) vol. 2, pp. 173–307, and J. H. Haug made a German translation (probably from Fabricius) of the "missing" section of ch. 7 for the Berleburg Bibel (1742) vol. 8, pp. 105f.

⁷ For details, see Violet, Die Ezra-Apokalyse, p. xxxix, and G. Graf, Geschichte der christlichen arabischen Literatur (Vatican City, 1944) vol. 1, pp. 219–21. For details of a newly identified witness, see M. E. Stone, "A New Manuscript of the Syrio-Arabic Version of the Fourth Book of Ezra," JSJ 8 (1977) 183f.

⁸ Ts. Kourtsikidzé, Versions géorgiennes des livres apocryphes de l'Ancien Testament (Académie des sciences de Géorgie, Institut des manuscrits, Metsniereba; Tiflis, 1973) vol. 2, pp. 270–308 [in Georgian, with Russ. résumé, pp. 309–43]. According to B. Outtier (Bedi Kartlisa 33 [1975] 382), this study represents, with some changes and corrections, Kourtsikidzé's work that appeared in Mrvaltavi 1 (1971) 93–109.

⁹ So R. Rubinkiewicz, "Un Fragment grec du IV^e Livre d'Esdras (chapitres XI et XII), Muséon 89 (1976) 75–87.

the Armenian) can be explained by presupposing corruptions in or misunderstanding of a Greek text underlying them. For example, in 8:6 the Latin locum obviously arose from misreading Greek typon as topon, and in 9:19 the Latin and Oriental versions took nomos (accented on the first syllable) as "law," which does not fit the context, instead of nomos (accented on the last syllable) as "pasture." Likewise the internal evidence of versions often suggests dependence upon an underlying Greek text. For example, the Latin sometimes reproduces Greek constructions (e.g. the genitive absolute) or Greek genders that are unknown to Latin grammar. Furthermore, quotations of 4 Ezra included in Greek patristic and apocryphal documents presuppose knowledge of a Greek version of the book.¹⁰ In modern times Hilgenfeld, with the assistance of Lagarde and H. Rönisch, reconstructed the lost Greek text from the Latin version.¹¹

There remain, however, many other phenomena that suggest a Semitic original lying behind the lost Greek text. Several scholars have argued that this was Aramaic.¹² On the other hand, the presence of instances of notable Hebraisms (such as the infinitive absolute construction) has led most modern scholars to postulate a Hebrew original underlying the Greek.¹³

Date

According to most scholars,¹⁴ the original Jewish document known today as 4 Ezra was composed about A.D. 100. This opinion rests upon a more or less plausible interpretation of the opening sentence, which states that "in the thirtieth year after the destruction of our city" Salathiel, who is also called Ezra, was in Babylon and underwent the experiences recounted in the visions that follow (3:1). Although this purports to be in the thirtieth year after the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar in 586 B.C., it becomes obvious when one begins to study the book that this statement is intended to refer cryptically to the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 (3:2; 6:19; 10:48; and elsewhere).

Since it is difficult to believe that a Jewish book of this kind could have found its way into Christian circles after the Bar-Kokhba revolt, when Church and Synagogue had become hopelessly alienated, the date of the completion of the Hebrew original cannot be placed much after A.D. 120. This would allow time for the Greek version to have been made and taken up in Christian circles.

Near the middle or in the second half of the third century four chapters were added, two at the beginning and two at the end, by one or more unknown Christian writers.

Provenance

Although several scholars have thought that the core of 4 Ezra was composed in Rome among the Jewish Diaspora (the reference to Babylon [3:1] being understood as a cryptic reference to Rome), the obviously Semitic coloration of the work rather suggests Palestine as the place of writing and publication of the Hebrew original. There is no trace of any influence from Egyptian Judaism or from the Qumran community.

Theological importance

Among the more prominent theological ideas presented in 4 Ezra is the author's belief in God as the one and only Creator (3:4; 6:38–55; 6:1–6). The term by which he usually refers ¹⁰ For the quotations, see e.g. Denis, Introduction, pp. 194f.

¹¹ A. Hilgenfeld, Messias Judaeorum (Leipzig, 1869) pp. 36–113.

¹² E.g. Gry, Les Dires prophétiques d'Esdras, pp. xxiii–lxxvi; C. C. Torrey, Apoc. Lit., p. 122; J. Bloch, "The Ezra Apocalypse: Was It Written in Hebrew, Greek, or Aramaic?" JQR 48 (1957–58) 279–94.

¹³ See especially G. H. Box, The Ezra-Apocalypse, pp. xiii–xix; A. Kaminka, "Beiträge zur Erklärung der Esra-Apokalypse und zur Rekonstruktion ihres hebräischen Urtextes," MGWJ 76 (1932) 121–38, 206–12, 494–511, 604–7; 77 (1933) 339–55; and F. Zimmerman, "Underlying Documents of IV Ezra," JQR 51 (1960–61) 107–34. Editions of the reconstructed Heb. text of 4Ezra have been published by A. Kaminka, Sefer Hazonot Assir Shealtiel (Tel Aviv, 1936) and by J. Licht, Sefer Hazon 'Ezra (Jerusalem, 1968).

¹⁴ See, inter alia, J. M. Myers, I and II Esdras, pp. 129–31; and J. A. T. Robinson, Redating the New Testament (Philadelphia, 1976) pp. 247, 315.

to God is the Most High (altissimus); it occurs sixty-eight times in the apocalypse proper, but not once in the Christian additions. Besides being Judge at the final judgment (6:1-6), God is merciful and compassionate (7:[132-38]). The Law is a divine gift to Israel (3:19f.; 9:31f.). It had indeed been offered to the other nations of the world but was deliberately rejected by them (7:23f., [72]); Israel, on the other hand, had accepted it. It was for this reason, the writer holds, that Israel was elected by God to be his special possession and chosen people.

It is here that the particular pathos of the book emerges as the author wrestles with the question: Why has God delivered his people into the hands of their enemies? What puzzles the author is that God should permit Israel's oppressors to be in prosperity, while his own people, who are at least no worse than these, he leaves to perish (3:30, 32). It is with this question bearing on divine justice that the seer agonizes, seeking "to justify the ways of God to man." In the end, however, the author concludes that God's ways are inscrutable.

The teaching of 4 Ezra on the subject of mankind and human free will is basically pessimistic. Sin is conceived as consisting essentially in unfaithfulness to the Law (9:36), resulting in alienation and estrangement from God (7:[48]). Although free will is definitely asserted in a few passages (e.g. 3:8; 8:56-58), the seer believed that inevitably all have turned away from God. This defection is due, in some way, to the sin of Adam (7:[118]), who possessed an evil heart (cor malignum, 3:20) in which a grain of evil seed (granum seminis mali) had been sown (4:30). Since all of Adam's descendants have followed his example in clothing themselves with an evil heart (3:26), each is morally responsible.¹⁵ It will be seen that this view corresponds to the rabbinic doctrine of the evil inclination or impulse (yeşer ha-ra').

The eschatological speculations of the book are extensive and somewhat involved. The author's consideration of the traditional belief in a messianic kingdom set up on earth, a kingdom which in his view will endure for four hundred years (7:28f.), is overshadowed by concern to penetrate the mystery of the world to come and the conditions of the afterlife. The dawn of the end of the age will be heralded by wonderful and terrible signs—physical, moral, and political (4:52-5:13a; 6:11-29; 7:26-[44]; 8:63-9:12). After the resurrection (5:45; 7:32, [37]) and the judgment (7:33-35; 7:[105, 115]) the wicked will go to the furnace of Hell and the righteous to the Paradise of delight (7:36, [78-101]).

In addition to these otherworldly speculations, 4 Ezra also contains, in other sections of the book, quite different eschatological teachings. In the Eagle Vision (ch. 12) a purely political eschatology is concerned with release from the tyranny of Rome, secured by the Messiah, who will then set up the Kingdom of God upon earth (12:32-34; cf. 11:44-46). Different again is the eschatology of the Vision of the Man rising from the Sea (ch. 13); in this vision the pre-existent Messiah, after annihilating all his enemies, gathers a peaceful multitude (the ten "lost" tribes of Israel) to himself.

In this connection a comment may be added as to the role of the Messiah in the total eschatological thought of 4 Ezra. This role, as Stone points out,¹⁶ is difficult to assess. Besides taking up the whole attention of chapter 13 and playing a significant role in chapters 11-12, the Messiah is mentioned elsewhere in the book only at 7:28f. Stone conjectures that the reason for the relative paucity of references to the Messiah may be that he was not the answer to the questions that Ezra was asking. At the same time, though the Messiah is not the exclusive center of the seer's aspirations, he plays a significant role in the author's eschatological scheme.

One other feature of the seer's theological outlook deserves comment. This is his universalism, shown in his world-embracing solicitude not only for his own nation, but for all people whose wickedness will bring them to a tragic fate in the next life. His pathetic lament concerns humanity as a whole, regardless of racial origins (7:[62-69]). In fact, the compassion of Ezra for the lost seems at times to exceed that attributed by the author to God himself (cf. 8:37-62), for when he makes intercession at length in behalf of the mass of mankind who, as sinners, will be doomed, his prayer is in vain. He is told bluntly, "Many have been created, but few will be saved" (8:3).

¹⁵ For the most recent discussion of this doctrine see A. L. Thompson, Responsibility for Evil in the Theodicy of IV Ezra.

¹⁶ M. E. Stone, "The Concept of the Messiah in IV Ezra," Goodenough Festschrift, pp. 295-312.

Unity of the book

From what has been said in the preceding section concerning the eschatological features of 4 Ezra 3–14, it can be seen that quite disparate elements are represented. There has been, therefore, not a little debate as to whether the book is the product of a redactor who combined the diverse productions of several authors,¹⁷ or whether, despite more or less minor inconsistencies arising from the utilization of varying traditions, the artistry of the book suggests the hand of a single author who managed to fit heterogeneous details into a more or less coherent scheme.¹⁸ Although such a question cannot, perhaps, be regarded as permanently settled, many scholars today tend to regard chapters 3–14 as representing the author's own conception and handiwork.

Relation to canonical books

A number of resemblances in thought and diction with the New Testament occur in the Ezra Apocalypse (chs. 3–14), but none of them suggests direct dependence. In 7:7 the writer speaks of the narrow entrance that leads to the abode of the righteous, a concept that occurs also in Matthew 7:13f. With the statement "Many have been created, but few will be saved" (8:3) compare Matthew 22:14 and Luke 13:23f. In 4:33 the seer asks, in reference to the time when the new age will come, "How long and when will these things be?"—with which may be compared the words of the disciples to Jesus in Luke 21:7.

Parallels with Pauline theology occur in the seer's treatment of the evil yezer (see "Theological importance") as compared with Romans 5:12–22, and the personification of Zion as "the mother of us all" (10:7) as compared with Galatians 4:26, "the Jerusalem that is above . . . is our mother."

The transiency of human life as described in 7:[61], "the multitude . . . are now like a mist, and are similar to a flame and smoke," may be compared with James 4:14: "What is your life? For you are a mist that appears for a little time and then vanishes."

In 4 Ezra 12:42 the comparison of Ezra as being "like a lamp in a dark place" reminds one of the exhortation to pay attention to the prophetic word "as to a lamp shining in a dark place" (2Pet 2:19). The Messiah's destruction of a hostile multitude by the breath of his mouth (13:10f.) finds a parallel in 2 Thessalonians 2:8.

The reader will find a considerable number of parallels between 4 Ezra and the Book of Revelation.¹⁹ Among these are the noteworthy similarities between the account in 13:32–39 and the context of Revelation 7:9 and 14:1. The former refers to the messianic woes followed by the coming of the Son of Man, who will stand on Mount Zion and gather to himself "a multitude that was peaceable."

Relation to apocryphal books

Many scholars have pointed to a very considerable number of parallel passages between 4 Ezra and 2 Baruch, which is also sometimes called the (Syriac) Apocalypse of Baruch.²⁰ The latter work, which on the whole represents a point of view and a theological outlook somewhat more in accordance with later rabbinical Judaism than 4 Ezra, appears to have been written as an answer to the perplexities mentioned by the seer.

Several striking parallels can be found between 4 Ezra and 1 Enoch, particularly the latest section of 1 Enoch (i.e. chs. 37–71, the Similitudes of Enoch). These include 4 Ezra 6:49–52 and 1 Enoch 60:7–9; 4 Ezra 7:32f. and 1 Enoch 51:1, 3; 4 Ezra 7:[37] and 1 Enoch 62:1.

¹⁷ See e.g. R. Kabisch, Das vierte Buch Esra (Göttingen, 1889), who identified two basic documents and three minor ones that were combined by a redactor; Box, The Ezra-Apocalypse, pp. xxii–xxxiii; W. O. E. Osterley, II Esdras, pp. xif.; and Torrey, Apoc. Lit., pp. 116–23; and "A Twice-Buried Apocalypse," Munera Studiosa, eds. M. H. Shepherd, Jr., and S. E. Johnson (Cambridge, Mass., 1946) pp. 23–39.

¹⁸ See e.g. H. Gunkel in Kautzsch's APAT: W. Sanday in Box, The Ezra-Apocalypse, pp. 5*–8*; M. R. James, "Salathiel qui est Esdras," JTS 19 (1918) 347–49; Gry, Les Dires prophétiques d'Esdras, pp. cxiii–cxxiv; Pfeiffer, History, pp. 81–86; and Myers, I and II Esdras, pp. 119–21.

¹⁹ For two dozen parallels see the index to passages in Box, The Ezra-Apocalypse, p. 377.

²⁰ See e.g. P. Bogaert, Apocalypse de Baruch. Introduction, traduction du syriaque et commentaire (SC 144; Paris, 1969) vol. 1, pp. 58–67; cf. also Thompson, Responsibility for Evil, pp. 121–27.

The author of 4 Ezra seems to have been acquainted also with the Psalms of Solomon, though the similarity of the phraseology of the parallel passages is hardly close enough to justify the view that the seer borrowed from the earlier work.²¹

Cultural importance

Among ancient Jewish apocalyptic works, the cultural importance of 4 Ezra over the centuries is noteworthy. A few extracts from it are still used in the Christian liturgy; e.g. the Introit of the Mass for the Dead in the Roman Missal (Requiem aeternam . . .) is based on 2:34f. The dying words of Bishop Latimer spoken to his brother martyr when, in 1555, both were about to be burned at the stake in front of Balliol College, Oxford ('Be of good comfort, Master Ridley. Play the man. We shall this day light such a candle, by God's grace, in England, as I trust shall never be put out.') echo the traditional rendering of 14:25.

Of greater significance is the remarkable influence of 4 Ezra on Christopher Columbus, William Whiston, and John Ruskin.²² A passage from "the prophet Ezra" encouraged Columbus to venture to set sail. In 6:42 a comment is made about God's work of creation: "On the third day you commanded the waters to be gathered together in the seventh part of the earth; six parts you dried up and kept so that some of them might be planted and cultivated and be of service before you." Although, of course, the proportion of water to dry land is nearly the reverse of Ezra's figures, Columbus was heartened by Ezra's erroneous comment on Genesis. In fact, it was partly by quoting this verse to the hesitant sovereigns of Spain that Columbus finally obtained financial support for his several voyages.

In the first half of the eighteenth century the learned and eccentric William Whiston, Sir Isaac Newton's successor as Lucasian Professor of Mathematics in Cambridge University, drew up a list of ninety-nine "proofs" that the end of the age was at hand. One third of these signs come from 4 Ezra (5:1-13; 6:20-24; 9:1-8) and are quite general, resembling similar predictions in the canonical Scriptures. For example, the forty-sixth and the sixty-fifth "Signals" in his total list are that "Wickedness should be vastly encreas'd beyond Measure of former Ages" and that "Incontinency, Vileness, and Wickedness, shall be increased upon the Earth." Much more specific was Whiston's interpretation of the significance of the rumor, circulating in 1726, that an illiterate farm woman of Surrey, named Mary Toft, had given birth to a litter of rabbits. To the torrent of pamphlets and editorials written for and against the truth of the story, Whiston added his impassioned defense—for he was convinced that here was a signal fulfillment of Ezra's prophecy that at the end of the age "women shall bring forth monsters" (5:8).

Among the books of the Apocrypha to which Milton gave repeated attention was 4 Ezra, which he referred to as 2 Esdras. On the occasion of writing the introduction to his Deucalion, he says:

It chanced, this morning, as I sat down to finish my preface that I had, for my introductory reading, the fifth chapter of the second book of Esdras; in which, though often read carefully before, I had never enough noticed the curious verse, "Blood shall drop out of wood, and the stone shall give his voice, and the people shall be troubled" [5:5]. Of which verse, so far as I can gather the meaning from the context, and from the rest of the chapter, the intent is, that in the time spoken of by the prophet, which, if not our own, is one exactly corresponding to it, the deadness of men to all noble things shall be so great, that the sap of trees shall be more truly blood, in God's sight, than their hearts' blood; and the silence of men, in praise of all noble things, so great, that the stones shall cry out, in God's hearing, instead of their tongues . . .

²¹ For a list of nearer and more remote parallels, see H. E. Ryle and M. R. James, Psalms of the Pharisees, commonly called the Psalms of Solomon (Cambridge, 1891) pp. lxvi-lxix.

²² For more detailed information about the influence of 4 Ezra on each of these three, see Metzger, Intr. to the Apoc., pp. 232-38.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 111–16.
 Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 160–62.
 Denis, Introduction, pp. 194–200.
- Bensly, R. L., ed. The Fourth Book of Ezra, the Latin Version Edited from the MSS. T&S 3.2; Cambridge, 1895. (The edition of the Lat. version from which the present translation was made.)
- Box, G. H. The Ezra-Apocalypse, being chapters 3–14 of the Book commonly known as 4 Ezra (or II Esdras). London, 1912. (A thorough investigation, with commentary.)
- . “4 Ezra,” The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, ed. R. H. Charles, Oxford, 1913; vol. 2, pp. 542–624. (A condensation of the preceding work.)
- Gray, M. L. Towards the Reconstruction of 4 Esdras and the Establishment of Its Contemporary Context. Unpublished B. Litt. thesis, Oxford, 1976. (The people in Israel for whom the author wrote did not survive; we do not know who he was or to which group he belonged.)
- Gry, L. Les Dires prophétiques d'Esdras (IV. Esdras). Paris, 1938. 2 vols. (A comprehensive study of the Lat. text.)
- Myers, J. M. I and II Esdras: Introduction, Translation and Commentary. Anchor Bible 42; Garden City, N.Y., 1974. (A fresh translation, with full textual nn. and commentary.)
- Oesterley, W. O. E. II Esdras (the Ezra Apocalypse), with Introduction and Notes. London, 1933. (A brief commentary based on the Revised Version [1896] of II Esdras.)
- Thompson, A. L. Responsibility for Evil in the Theodicy of IV Ezra. SBLDS 29; Missoula, Mont., 1977. (An informative study of the theology of 4Ezra.)
- Violet, B. Die Ezra-Apokalypse (IV. Ezra) I. Teil: Die Überlieferung. GCS 18; Leipzig, 1910. (Convenient edition of the Lat. text with translations of the several Eastern versions in parallel columns, with textual nn.)

THE FOURTH BOOK OF EZRA

The genealogy of Ezra

1 1 The second^a book of the prophet Ezra the son of Seraiah, son of Azariah, son
2 of Hilkiah, son of Shallum, son of Zadok, son of Ahitub, •son of Ahijah, son of Phinehas, son of Eli, son of Amariah, son of Azariah, son of Meraioth, son of Arna, son of Uzzi, son of Borith, son of Abishua, son of Phinehas, son of Eleazar, 3 son of Aaron, of the tribe of Levi, who was a captive in the country of the Medes in the reign of Artaxerxes, king of the Persians.

Ezra's prophetic call

4.5 The word of the Lord came to me, saying, •“Go and declare to my people their evil deeds, and to their children the iniquities which they have committed against Isa 58:1 6 me, so that they may tell their children's children •that the sins of their parents have increased in them, for they have forgotten me and have offered sacrifices to 7 strange gods. •Was it not I who brought them out of the land of Egypt, out of the 8 house of bondage? But they have angered me and despised my counsels. •Pull out the hair of your head and hurl all evils upon them, for they have not obeyed my 9 law; they are a rebellious people. •How long shall I endure them, on whom I have 10 bestowed such great benefits? •For their sake I have overthrown many kings; I Ex 14:2 11 struck down Pharaoh with his servants, and all his army. •I have destroyed all nations before them, and scattered in the east the people of two provinces, Tyre and Sidon;^b I have slain all their enemies.

Summary of God's mercies to Israel

12.13 “But speak to them and say, Thus says the Lord: •Surely it was I who brought you through the sea, and made safe highways for you where there was no road; Ex 14:29 14 I gave you Moses as leader and Aaron as priest; •I provided light for you from a Ex 13:21 pillar of fire, and did great wonders among you. Yet you have forgotten me, says the Lord.
15 “Thus says the Lord Almighty: The quails were a sign to you; I gave you camps Ex 16:13 16 for your protection, and in them you complained. •You have not exulted in my 17 name at the destruction of your enemies, but to this day you still complain. •Where are the benefits which I bestowed on you? When you were hungry and thirsty in 18 the wilderness, did you not cry out to me, •saying, ‘Why hast thou led us into this Neh 14:3 wilderness to kill us? It would have been better for us to serve the Egyptians than 19 to die in this wilderness.’ •I pitied your groanings and gave you manna for food; Ps 78:25
20 you ate the bread of angels. •When you were thirsty, did I not cleave the rock so WisSol 16:20 that waters flowed in abundance? Because of the heat I covered you with the leaves Num 20:11 21 of trees. •I divided fertile lands among you; I drove out the Canaanites, the WisSol 11:4 Perizzites, and the Philistines before you. What more can I do for you? says the 22 Lord. •Thus says the Lord Almighty: When you were in the wilderness, at the 23 bitter stream, thirsty and blaspheming my name, •I did not send fire upon you for Ex 15:22-25 your blasphemies, but threw a tree into the water and made the stream sweet.

1 a. Codex Ambianensis omits “second” here and reads “third” in the title of the book.

b. The author is confused; Tyre and Sidon were cities (not provinces) lying west (not east) of the country of the Medes (vs. 3).

God's appeal to Israel

- 24 "What shall I do to you, O Jacob? You would not obey me, O Judah. I will 25 turn to other nations and will give them my name, that they may keep my statutes.
 26 Because you have forsaken me, I also will forsake you. When you beg mercy of 26 me, I will show you no mercy. •When you call upon me, I will not listen to you; Isa 1:15: 5 for you have defiled you hands with blood, and your feet are swift to commit 27 murder. •It is not as though you had forsaken me; you have forsaken yourselves, says the Lord.
- 28 "Thus says the Lord Almighty: Have I not entreated you as a father entreats his 29 sons or a mother her daughters or a nurse her children, •that you should be my Jer 24:7 people and I should be your God, and that you should be my sons and I should Heb 8:10 30 be your father? •I gathered you as a hen gathers her brood under her wings. But Mt 23:37
 31 now, what shall I do to you? I will cast you out from my presence. •When you Lk 13:34 offer oblations to me, I will turn my face from you; for I have rejected your feast 32 days, and new moons, and circumcisions of the flesh. •I sent to you my servants the prophets, but you have taken and slain them and torn their bodies in pieces; their blood I will require of you, says the Lord.

A new people

- 33 "Thus says the Lord Almighty: Your house is desolate; I will drive you out as 34 the wind drives straw; •and your sons will have no children, because with you they 35 have neglected my commandment and have done what is evil in my sight. •I will give your houses to a people that will come, who without having heard me will believe. Those to whom I have shown no signs will do what I have commanded.
 36,37 They have seen no prophets, yet will recall their former state.^c •I call to witness the gratitude of the people that is to come, whose children rejoice with gladness; though they do not see me with bodily eyes, yet with the spirit they will believe Jn 20:29
 the things I have said.
- 38 "And now, father,^d look with pride and see the people coming from the east;
 39 to them I will give as leaders Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob and Hosea and Amos 40 and Micah and Joel and Obadiah and Jonah •and Nahum and Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi,^e who is also called the messenger of the Lord.

Divine judgment upon Israel

- 1 2 "Thus says the Lord: I brought this people out of bondage, and I gave them commandments through my servants the prophets; but they would not listen to 2 them, and made my counsels void. •The mother^a who bore them says to them, Isa 54:1
 3 'Go, my children, because I am a widow and forsaken. •I brought you up with 1Bar 4:19 gladness; but with mourning and sorrow I have lost you, because you have sinned
 4 before the Lord God and have done what is evil in my sight. •But now what can 1Bar 4:11
 I do for you? For I am a widow and forsaken. Go, my children, and ask for mercy
 5 from the Lord.' •I call upon you, father,^b as a witness in addition to the mother 6 of the children, because they would not keep my covenant, •that you may bring confusion upon them and bring their mother to ruin, so that they may have no 7 offspring. •Let them be scattered among the nations, let their names be blotted out from the earth, because they have despised my covenant.
- 8 "Woe to you, Assyria, who conceal the unrighteous in your midst! O wicked Gen 19:24 9 nation, remember what I did to Sodom and Gomorrah, •whose land lies in lumps of pitch and heaps of ashes. So I will do to those who have not listened to me, says the Lord Almighty."

c. Other authorities read "their iniquities."

d. God is represented as addressing Ezra as "father" of the nation (cf. 2:5).

e. The minor prophets are arranged in the order of the LXX.

2 a. I.e. Jerusalem.

b. The author addresses Ezra as "father" (cf. 1:38).

10 Thus says the Lord to Ezra: "Tell my people that I will give them the kingdom 11 of Jerusalem, which I was going to give to Israel. •Moreover, I will take back to myself their glory, and will give to these others the everlasting habitations, which 12 I had prepared for Israel.^c •The tree of life shall give them fragrant perfume, and 13 they shall neither toil nor become weary. •Ask and you will receive; pray that your days may be few, that they may be shortened. The kingdom is already prepared 14 for you; watch! •Call, O call heaven and earth to witness, for I left out evil and created good, because I live, says the Lord.

Lk 16:9
 Rev 2:7; 22:2,14

Mt 25:34

Exhortation to good works

15 "Mother,^d embrace your sons; bring them up with gladness, as does the dove; 16 establish their feet, because I have chosen you, says the Lord. •And I will raise up the dead from their places, and will bring them out from their tombs, because 17 I recognize my name in them. •Do not fear, mother of the sons, for I have chosen 18 you, says the Lord. •I will send you help, my servants Isaiah and Jeremiah.
 According to their counsel I have consecrated and prepared for you twelve trees 19 loaded with various fruits, •and the same number of springs flowing with milk and honey, and seven mighty mountains on which roses and lilies grow; by these I will 20 fill your children with joy. •Guard the rights of the widow, secure justice for the 21 fatherless, give to the needy, defend the orphan, clothe the naked, •care for the injured and the weak, do not ridicule a lame man, protect the maimed, and let the 22 blind man have a vision of my glory. •Protect the old and the young within your 23 walls; •when you find any who are dead, commit them to the grave and mark it.^e 24 and I will give you the first place in my resurrection. •Pause and be quiet, my 25 people, because your rest will come. •Good nurse, nourish your sons, and strengthen 26 their feet. •Not one of the servants whom I have given you will perish, for I will 27 require them from among your number. •Do not be anxious, for when the day of tribulation and anguish comes, others shall weep and be sorrowful, but you shall 28 rejoice and have abundance. •The nations shall envy you but they shall not be able 29 to do anything against you, says the Lord. •My hands will cover you, that your 30 sons may not see Gehenna. •Rejoice, O mother, with your sons, because I will 31 deliver you, says the Lord. •Remember your sons that sleep, because I will bring them out of the hiding places of the earth, and will show mercy to them; for I am 32 merciful, says the Lord Almighty. •Embrace your children until I come, and proclaim mercy to them; because my springs run over, and my grace will not fail."

Rev 22:2

Deut 31:20

Rejected by Israel, Ezra turns to the gentiles

33 I, Ezra, received a command from the Lord on Mount Horeb to go to Israel.
 When I came to them they rejected me and refused the Lord's commandment.
 34 Therefore I say to you, O nations that hear and understand, "Await your shepherd;
 he will give you everlasting rest, because he who will come at the end of the age 35 is close at hand. •Be ready for the rewards of the kingdom, because the eternal 36 light will shine upon you forevermore. •Flee from the shadow of this age, receive 37 the joy of your glory; I publicly call on my Savior to witness.^f •Receive what the Lord has entrusted to you and be joyful, giving thanks to him who has called you 38 to heavenly kingdoms. •Rise and stand, and see at the feast of the Lord the number 39 of those who have been sealed. •Those who have departed from the shadow of this 40 age have received glorious garments from the Lord. •Take again your full number, O Zion, and conclude the list of your people who are clothed in white, who have 41 fulfilled the law of the Lord. •The number of your children whom you desired is

Isa 60:20
 Rev 21:23; 22:5

Rev 3:4; 6:11;
 7:1

c. Lat. "those."

d. "Mother." probably a reference to the Church.

e. Or "seal it"; or "mark them and commit them to the grave."

f. Other authorities read "I testify that my Savior has been commissioned by the Lord."

full; beseech the Lord's power that your people, who have been called from the beginning, may be made holy." 4:36f.
Rev 6:11

Ezra's vision of a great multitude

42 I, Ezra, saw on Mount Zion a great multitude, which I could not number, and Rev 7:9
 43 they all were praising the Lord with songs. •In their midst was a young man of 1En 46:1 great stature, taller than any of the others, and on the head of each of them he placed a crown, but he was more exalted than they. And I was held spellbound.
 44,45 Then I asked an angel, "Who are these, my lord?" •He answered and said to me,
 "These are they who have put off mortal clothing and put on the immortal, and they have confessed the name of God; now they are being crowned, and receive 46 palms." •Then I said to the angel, "Who is that young man who places crowns 47 on them and puts palms in their hands?" •He answered and said to me, "He is the Son of God, whom they confessed in the world." So I began to praise those 48 who had stood valiantly for the name of the Lord. •Then the angel said to me, "Go, tell my people how great and many are the wonders of the Lord God which you have seen."

THE EZRA APOCALYPSE

The first vision

1 3 In the thirtieth year after the destruction of our city, I, Salathiel,^a who am also 2Kgs 25:1f.
 called Ezra, was in Babylon. I was troubled as I lay on my bed, and my thoughts 2 welled up in my heart, •because I saw the desolation of Zion and the wealth of 3 those who lived in Babylon. •My spirit was greatly agitated, and I began to speak
 4 anxious words to the Most High, and said, •"O sovereign Lord, did you not speak at the beginning when you formed the earth—and that without help—and com-5 manded the dust^b •and it gave^c you Adam, a lifeless body? Yet he was the workmanship of your hands, and you breathed into him the breath of life, and he 6 was made alive in your presence. •And you led him into the garden which your 7 right hand had planted before the earth appeared. •And you laid upon him one commandment of yours; but he transgressed it, and immediately you appointed WisSol 1:13f.;
2:23f.
 death for him and for his descendants. From him there sprang nations and tribes, 8 peoples and clans, without number. •And every nation walked after its own will Gen 6:12 and did ungodly things before you and scorned you, and you did not hinder them.
 9 But again, in its time you brought the flood upon the inhabitants of the world and Gen 6:1f.
 10 destroyed them. •And the same fate befell them: As death came upon Adam, so 11 the flood upon them. •But you left one of them, Noah with his household, and all the righteous who have descended from him.

The patriarchs

12 "When those who dwelt on earth began to multiply, they produced children and Gen 12:1 peoples and many nations, and again they began to be more ungodly than were 13 their ancestors. •And when they were committing iniquity before you, you chose 14 for yourself one of them, whose name was Abraham; •and you loved him and to Gen 15:5,12,17 15 him only you revealed the end of the times, secretly by night. •You made with him an everlasting covenant, and promised him that you would never forsake his descendants; and you gave to him Isaac, and to Isaac you gave Jacob and Esau.
 16 And you set apart Jacob for yourself, but Esau you rejected; and Jacob became 17 a great multitude. •And when you led his descendants out of Egypt, you brought 18 them to Mount Sinai. •You bent down the heavens and shook^d the earth, and moved Ex 19:16-18
Ps 68:7f.

3 a. "Salathiel" is the Gk. form of Shealtiel (the father of Zerubbabel, Ezra 3:2; 5:2; Neh 12:1).
 b. Syr., Eth.

c. Syr.

d. Syr. Eth., Arab 1, Georgian; Lat. "set fast."

19 the world, and made the depths to tremble, and trouble the times. •And your glory passed through the four gates of fire and earthquake and wind and ice, to give the Law to the descendants of Jacob, and your commandment to the posterity of Israel.

The evil heart

20 “Yet you did not take away from them their evil heart, so that your Law might 21 bring forth fruit in them. •For the first Adam, burdened with an evil heart, transgressed and was overcome, as were also all who were descended from him.
22 Thus the disease became permanent; the law was in the people’s heart along with 23 the evil root, but what was good departed, and the evil remained. •So the times passed and the years were completed, and you raised up for yourself a servant, 24 named David. •And you commanded him to build a city for your name, and in 25 it to offer you oblations from what is yours. •This was done for many years; but 26 the inhabitants of the city transgressed, •in everything doing as Adam and all his 27 descendants had done, for they also had the evil heart. •So you delivered the city into the hands of your enemies.

Babylon compared with Zion

28 “Then I said in my heart, Are the deeds of those who inhabit Babylon any 29 better? Is that why she has gained dominion over Zion? •For when I came here I saw ungodly deeds without number, and my soul has seen many sinners during 30 these thirty years.^e And my heart failed me, •for I have seen how you endure those who sin, and have spared those who act wickedly, and have destroyed your people,
31 and have preserved your enemies, •and have not shown to anyone how your way
32 may be comprehended.^f Are the deeds of Babylon better than those of Zion? •Or has another nation known you besides Israel? Or what tribes have so believed your 33 covenants as these tribes of Jacob? •Yet their reward has not appeared and their labor has borne no fruit. For I have traveled widely among the nations and have seen that they abound in wealth, though they are unmindful of your commandments.
34 Now therefore weigh in a balance our iniquities and those of the inhabitants of the world; and so it will be found which way the turn of the scale will incline.
35 When have the inhabitants of the earth not sinned in your sight? Or what nation 36 has kept your commandments so well? •You may indeed find individual men who have kept your commandments, but nations you will not find.”

Job 31:6
Ps 62:9
Prov 16:2
1En 41:1; 61:8

Uriel’s reply: God’s ways are inscrutable

1,2 4 Then the angel that had been sent to me, whose name was Uriel, answered •and said to me, “Your understanding has utterly failed regarding this world, and do
3 you think you can comprehend the way of the Most High?” •Then I said, “Yes, my lord.” And he replied to me, “I have been sent to show you three problems.
4 If you can solve one of them for me, I also will show you the way you desire to see, and will teach you why the heart is evil.”
5 I said, “Speak on, my lord.”
And he said to me, “Go, weigh for me the weight of fire, or measure for me a measure^a of wind, or call back for me the day that is past.”
6 I answered and said, “Who of those that have been born can do this, that you ask me concerning these things?”
7 And he said to me, “If I had asked you, ‘How many dwellings are in the heart of the sea, or how many streams are at the source of the deep, or how many streams are above the firmament, or which are the exits of hell, or which are the 8 entrances^b of Paradise?’ •perhaps you would have said to me, ‘I never went down

e. Eth., Arab 1, Arm.; Lat., Syr. “in this thirtieth year.”

f. Syr.; Lat. “how this way should be forsaken.”

4 a. Syr., Eth., Ar., Georgian; Lat. “a blast.”

b. Syr.; cf. Eth., Arab 2, Arm.; Lat. omits “of hell, or which are the entrances.”

9 into the deep, nor as yet into hell, neither did I ever ascend into heaven.' •But now I have asked you only about fire and wind and the day, things through which you have passed and without which you cannot exist,^c and you have given me no answer about them!" •And he said to me, "You cannot understand the things with which you have grown up; •how then can your mind comprehend the way of the Most High? And how can one who is already worn out^d by the corrupt world understand incorruption?"^e When I heard this, I fell on my face^f •and said to him, "It would be better for us not to be here than to come here and live in ungodliness, and to suffer and not understand why."

Parable of conflict between forest and sea

13 He answered me and said, "I went into a forest of trees of the plain, and they Isa 55:8f. made a plan •and said, 'Come, let us go and make war against the sea, that it may recede before us, and that we may make for ourselves more forests.' •And in like manner the waves of the sea also made a plan and said, 'Come, let us go up and subdue the forest of the plain so that there also we may gain more territory for ourselves. •But the plan of the forest was in vain, for the fire came and consumed it; •likewise also the plan of the waves of the sea, for the sand stood firm and stopped them. •If now you were a judge between them, which would you undertake to justify, and which to condemn?"

19 I answered and said, "Each has made a foolish plan, for the land is assigned to the forest, and to the sea is assigned a place to carry its waves."

20 He answered me and said, "You have judged rightly, but why have you not judged so in your own case? •For as the land is assigned to the forest and the sea to its waves, so also those who dwell upon earth can understand only what is on earth, and he who is above the heavens can understand what is above the height of the heavens."

Why Israel has become a reproach

22 Then I answered and said, "I beseech you, my lord, why^g have I been endowed with the power of understanding? •For I did not wish to inquire about the ways above, but about those things which we daily experience: why Israel has been given over to the gentiles as a reproach; why the people whom you loved has been given to godless tribes, and the Law of our fathers has been made of no effect and the written covenants no longer exist; •and why we pass from the world like locusts, and our life is like a mist,^h and we are not worthy to obtain mercy. •But what will he do for his name, by which we are called? It is about these things that I have asked."

The near approach of the end of the age

26 He answered me and said, "If you are alive, you will see, and if you live long,ⁱ you will often marvel, because the age is hastening swiftly to its end. •For it will not be able to bring the things that have been promised to the righteous in their appointed times, because this age is full of sadness and infirmities. •For the evil about which^j you ask me has been sown, but the harvest of it has not yet come. If therefore that which has been sown is not reaped, and if the place where the evil has been sown does not pass away, the field where the good has been sown will not come. •For a grain of evil seed^k was sown in Adam's heart from the

c. Other Lat. MSS read "from which you cannot be separated."

d. The text here is uncertain.

e. Syr., Eth. "the way of the incorruptible?"

f. Syr., Eth., Arab 1; Lat. is corrupt.

g. Syr., Eth., Arm.; Lat. is corrupt.

h. Syr., Eth., Ar., Georgian; Lat. "a trembling."

i. Syr.; Lat. "live."

j. Syr., Eth.; Lat. is uncertain.

k. I.e. evil yeşer.

beginning, and how much ungodliness it has produced until now, and will produce 31 until the time of threshing comes! •Consider now for yourself how much fruit of 32 ungodliness a grain of evil seed has produced. •When heads of grain without number are sown, how great a threshing floor they will fill!”

When will the new age come?

33 Then I answered and said, “How long^l and when will these things be? Why are 34 our years few and evil?” •He answered me and said, “You do not hasten faster than the Most High, for your haste is for yourself,^m but the Highest hastens on 35 behalf of many. •Did not the souls of the righteous in their chambers ask about these matters, saying, ‘How long are we to remain here?’ⁿ And when will come 36 the harvest of our reward?” •And Jeremiel^o the archangel answered them and said, ‘When the number of those like yourselves is completed;^p for he has weighed the 37 age in the balance, •and measured the times by measure, and numbered the times by number; and he will not move or arouse them until that measure is fulfilled.’ ”

38 Then I answered and said, “O sovereign Lord, but all of us also are full of 39 ungodliness. •And it is perhaps on account of us that the time of threshing is delayed for the righteous—on account of the sins of those who dwell on earth.”

40 He answered me and said, “Go and ask a woman who is with child if, when her nine months have been completed, her womb can keep the child within her any longer.”

41 “No, my lord,” I said, “it cannot.”

42 He said to me, “In Hades the chambers of the souls are like the womb. •For just as a woman who is in travail makes haste to escape the pangs of birth, so also do these places hasten to give back those things that were committed to them from 43 the beginning. •Then the things that you desire to see will be disclosed to you.”

How much time remains?

44 I answered and said, “If I have found favor in your sight, and if it is possible, 45 and if I am worthy, •show me this also: whether more time is to come than has 46 passed, or whether for us the greater part has gone by. •For I know what has gone by, but I do not know what is to come.”

47 He said to me, “Stand at my right side, and I will show you the interpretation of a parable.”

48 So I stood and looked, and behold a flaming furnace passed by before me, and 49 when the flame had gone by I looked, and behold, the smoke remained. •And after this a cloud full of water passed before me and poured down a heavy and violent rain, and when the rainstorm had passed, drops remained in the cloud.

50 And he said to me, “Consider it for yourself; for as the rain is more than the drops, and the fire is greater than the smoke, so the quantity that passed was far greater; but drops and smoke remained.”

51 Then I prayed and said, “Do you think that I shall live until those days? Or who will be alive in those days?”

52 He answered me and said, “Concerning the signs about which you ask me, I can tell you in part; but I was not sent to tell you concerning your life, for I do not know.

Signs of the approaching end of the age

1 5 “Now concerning the signs: Behold, the days are coming when those who dwell

l. Syr., Eth.; Lat. is uncertain.

m. Syr., Eth., Ar., Arm.; Lat. is corrupt.

n. Syr., Eth., Arab 2, Georgian; Lat. “How long do I hope thus?”

o. Syr. Remiel; cf. the seventh of the seven archangels listed in 1En 20:1–8.

p. Syr., Eth., Arab 2; Lat. “number of seeds is completed for you.”

on earth shall be seized with great terror,^a and the way of truth shall be hidden,
 2 and the land shall be barren of faith. •And unrighteousness shall be increased Mt 24:1 3 beyond what you yourself see, and beyond what you heard of formerly. •And the land^b which you now see ruling shall be waste and untrodden,^c and men shall see 4 it desolate. •But if the Most High grants that you live, you shall see it thrown into confusion after the third period;^d and the sun shall suddenly shine forth at night, and the moon during the day.

5 Blood shall drip from wood, and the stone shall utter its voice;
 the peoples shall be troubled, and the stars shall fall.^e

Hab 2:11
Lk 19:40

6 And one shall reign whom those who dwell on earth do not expect, and the birds
 7 shall fly away together; •and the sea of Sodom^f shall cast up fish; and one whom the many do not know shall make his voice heard by night, and all shall hear his 8 voice.^g •There shall be chaos also in many places,^h and fire shall often break out, and the wild beasts shall roam beyond their haunts, and menstruous women shall 9 bring forth monsters. •And salt waters shall be found in the sweet, and all friends shall conquer one another; then shall reason hide itself, and wisdom shall withdraw 10 into its chamber, •and it shall be sought by many but shall not be found, and 11 unrighteousness and unrestraint shall increase on earth. •And one country shall ask Isa 59:14f.
 its neighbor, 'Has righteousness, or anyone who does right, passed through you?'
 12 And it will answer, 'No.' •And at that time men shall hope but not obtain; they 13 shall labor but their ways shall not prosper. •These are the signs which I am permitted to tell you, and if you pray again, and weep as you do now, and fast 5:20; 6:35; 12:51
 for seven days, you shall hear yet greater things than these."

Conclusion of the vision

14 Then I awoke, and my body shuddered violently, and my soul was so troubled 15 that it fainted. •But the angel who had come and talked with me held me and strengthened me and set me on my feet.

16 Now on the second night Phaltiel, a chief of the people, came to me and said, 17 "Where have you been? And why is your face sad? •Or do you not know that 18 Israel has been entrusted to you in the land of their exile? •Rise therefore and eat some bread, so that you may not forsake us, like a shepherd who leaves his flock in the power of savage wolves."

19 Then I said to him, "Depart from me and do not come near me for seven days, and then you may come to me."

20 He heard what I said and left me. •So I fasted seven days, mourning and weeping, as Uriel the angel had commanded me.

THE SECOND VISION

Ezra reiterates his complaints of divine inequity

21 And after seven days the thoughts of my heart were very grievous to me again.
 22 Then my soul recovered the spirit of understanding, and I began once more to 5 a. Syr.; Eth. "confusion"; Lat. is uncertain.

b. I.e. the Roman Empire.

c. Syr.; Lat. is corrupt.

d. Lit. "after the third"; Eth. "after three months"; Arm. "after the third vision"; Georgian "after the third day."

e. Eth.; cf. Syr. and Ar.; Lat. is uncertain.

f. I.e. the Dead Sea.

g. Bensly's correction; Lat. "fish; and it shall make its voice heard by night, which the many have not known, but all shall hear its voice."

h. Syr. "a fissure shall arise over wide regions" (cf. Zech 14:4).

23 speak words in the presence of the Most High. •And I said, “O sovereign Lord, 24 from every forest of the earth and from all its trees you have chosen one vine, Ps 80:8 25 and from all the lands of the world you have chosen for yourself one region,ⁱ and 26 from all the flowers of the world you have chosen for yourself one lily, •and from Song 2:2
 all the depths of the sea you have filled for yourself one river, and from all the Hos 14:5 27 cities that have been built you have consecrated Zion for yourself, •and from all Ps 132:13 the birds that have been created you have named for yourself one dove, and from Ps 74:19 28 all the flocks that have been fashioned you have provided for yourself one sheep, Ps 79:13 29 and from all the multitude of people you have gotten for yourself one people; and to this people, whom you have loved, you have given the Law which is approved 30 by all. •And now, O Lord, why have you given over the one to the many, and 28 dishonored^j the one root beyond the others, and scattered your only one among the 1En 93:8
 29 many? •And those who opposed your promises have trodden down on those who 30 believed your covenants. •If you really hate your people, they should be punished at your own hands.”

Response to Ezra’s complaints

31 When I had spoken these words, the angel who had come to me on a previous 32 night was sent to me, •and he said to me, “Listen to me, and I will instruct you; pay attention to me, and I will tell you more.” 33 “Speak on, my lord,” I said. And he said to me, “Are you greatly disturbed in mind over Israel?^k Or do you love him more than his Maker does?” 8:47 34 “No, my lord,” I said, “but because of my grief I have spoken; for every hour
 I suffer agonies of heart, while I strive to understand the way of the Most High and to search out part of his judgment.”
 35 He said to me, “You cannot.” And I said, “Why not, my lord? Why then was Job 3:11;
 I born? Or why did not my mother’s womb become my grave, that I might not 10:18-19 see the travail of Jacob and the exhaustion of the people of Israel?” 36 He said to me, “Count up for me those who have not yet come, and gather for me the scattered raindrops, and make the withered flowers bloom again for me; 37 open for me the closed chambers, and bring forth for me the winds shut up in them, or show me the picture of a voice; and then I will explain to you the travail that you ask to understand.”^l 38 “O sovereign Lord,” I said, “who is able to know these things except he whose 39 dwelling is not with men? •As for me, I am without wisdom, and how can I speak concerning the things which you have asked me?” 40 He said to me, “Just as you cannot do one of the things that were mentioned, so you cannot discover my judgment, or the goal of the love that I have promised my people.”

Why successive generations have been created

41 I said, “Yet behold, O Lord, you have charge of those who are alive at the end, but what will those do who were before us, or we, or those who come after us?” 42 He said to me, “I shall liken my judgment to a circle,^m just as for those who are last there is now slowness, so for those who are first there is no haste.” 43 Then I answered and said, “Could you not have created at one time those who have been and those who are and those who will be, that you might show your judgment the sooner?”
 44 He replied to me and said, “The creation cannot make more haste than the Creator, neither can the world hold at one time those who have been created in it.”
 45 And I said, “How have you said to your servant that youⁿ will certainly give

i. Eth.; Lat. “pit.”

j. Syr., Eth., Ar.; Lat. “prepared.”

k. Or “You are greatly distracted in mind over Israel.”

l. Lat. “see.”

m. Or “crown.”

n. Syr., Eth., Arab 1; Lat. is uncertain.

life at one time to your creation? If therefore all creatures will live at one time^o and the creation will sustain them, it might even now be able to support all of them present at one time.”

46 He said to me, “Ask a woman’s womb, and say to it, ‘If you bear ten^p children, why one after another?’ Request it therefore to produce ten at one time.”

47 I said, “Of course it cannot, but only each in its own time.”

48 He said to me, “Even so have I given the womb of the earth to those who from time to time are sown in it. •For as an infant does not bring forth, and a woman who has become old does not bring forth any longer, so have I organized the world which I created.”

50 Then I inquired and said, “Since you have now given me the opportunity, let me speak before you. Is our mother, of whom you have told me, still young? Or is she now approaching old age?”

51 He replied to me, “Ask a woman who bears children, and she will tell you. 52 Say to her, ‘Why are those whom you have borne recently not like those whom you 53 bore before, but smaller in stature?’ •And she herself will answer you, ‘Those 54 born in the strength of youth are different from those born during the time of old 55 age, when the womb is failing.’ •Therefore you also should consider that you and 55 your contemporaries are smaller in stature than those who were before you. •And those who come after you will be smaller than you, as born of a creation which already is aging and passing the strength of youth.”

The end of the age

56 I said, “O Lord, I beseech you, if I have found favor in your sight, show your servant through whom you are going to visit your creation.”

1 6 He said to me, “At the beginning of the circle of the earth,^a before the portals 2 of the world were in place, and before the assembled winds blew, •and before the rumblings of thunder sounded, and before the flashes of lightning shone, and before 3 the foundations of Paradise were laid, •and before the beautiful flowers were seen, and before the powers of movement^b were established, and before the innumerable 4 hosts of angels were gathered together, •and before the heights of the air were lifted up, and before the measures of the firmaments were named, and before the 5 footstool of Zion was established, •and before the present years were reckoned, and before the imaginations of those who now sin were estranged, and before those 6 who stored up treasures of faith were sealed—•then I planned these things, and they were made through me and not through another, just as the end shall come through me and not through another.”

The division of the times

7 I answered and said, “What will be the dividing of the times? Or when will be the end of the first age and the beginning of the age that follows?”

8 He said to me, “From Abraham to Isaac,^c because from him were born Jacob 9 and Esau, for Jacob’s hand held Esau’s heel from the beginning. •For Esau is the 10 end of this age, and Jacob is the beginning of the age that follows. •For the beginning of a man is his hand, and the end of a man is his heel,^d between the heel and the hand seek for nothing else, Ezra!”

o. Lat. omits “If . . . one time.”

p. Syr., Eth., Arab 2, Arm.; Lat. is corrupt.

6 a. The text is uncertain; cf. Syr.: “The beginning by the hand of man, but the end by my own hands. For as before the land of the world existed there, and before”; Eth.: “At first by the Son of Man, and afterwards I myself. For before the earth and the lands were created, and before.”

b. Or “earthquake.”

c. Other authorities read “Abraham.”

d. Syr.; Lat. is defective here.

Signs of the end of the age

- 11 I answered and said, "O sovereign Lord, if I have found favor in your sight, 12 show your servant the end of your signs which you showed me in part on a previous night." 4:51-5:13
- 13 He answered and said to me, "Rise to your feet and you will hear a full, 14 resounding voice. • And if the place where you are standing is greatly shaken 15 while the voice is speaking, do not be terrified; because the word concerns the end, 16 and the foundations of the earth will understand • that the speech concerns them.
 They will tremble and be shaken, for they know that their end must be changed."
- 17 When I heard this, I rose to my feet and listened, and behold, a voice was 18 speaking, and its sound was like the sound of many waters. • And it said, "Behold, the days are coming, and it shall be that when I draw near to visit the inhabitants 19 of the earth, • and when I require from the doers of iniquity the penalty of their 20 iniquity, and when the humiliation of Zion is complete, • and when the seal is placed upon the age which is about to pass away, then I will show these signs: The 21 books shall be opened before the firmament, and all shall see it together. • Infants a year old shall speak with their voices, and women with child shall give birth to 22 premature children at three or four months, and these shall live and dance. • Sown places shall suddenly appear unsown, and full storehouses shall suddenly be found 23 to be empty; • and the trumpet shall sound aloud, and when all hear it, they shall 24 suddenly be terrified. • At that time friends shall make war on friends like enemies, and the earth and those who inhabit it shall be terrified, and the springs of the fountains shall stand still, so that for three hours they shall not flow. Dan 7:10; 12:1 Mal 3:16
 Rev 20:12
- 25 "It shall be that whoever remains after all that I have foretold to you shall be 26 saved and shall see my salvation and the end of my world. • And they shall see the men who were taken up, who from their birth have not tasted death; and the heart of the earth's^e inhabitants shall be changed and converted to a different spirit. 1Cor 15:52
 1Thes 4:16
- 27.28 For evil shall be blotted out, and deceit shall be quenched; • faithfulness shall flourish, and corruption shall be overcome, and the truth, which has been so long without fruit, shall be revealed. Gen 5:24 2Kgs 2:11f.

Conclusion of the vision

- 29 While he spoke to me, behold, little by little the place where I was standing 30 began to rock to and fro.^f • And he said to me, "I have come to show you these 31 things this night.^g • If therefore you will pray again and fast again for seven days, 32 I will again declare to you greater things than these,^h • because your voice has surely been heard before the Most High; for the Mighty One has seen your uprightness and has also observed the purity which you have maintained from your 33 youth. • Therefore he sent me to show you all these things, and to say to you:
 34 'Believe and do not be afraid! • Do not be quick to think vain thoughts concerning the former things, lest you be hasty concerning the last times.' "

THE THIRD VISION

- 35 Now after this I wept again and fasted seven days as before, in order to complete 36 the three weeks as I had been told. • And on the eighth night my heart was troubled 37 within me again, and I began to speak in the presence of the Most High. • For my spirit was greatly aroused, and my soul was in distress.

e. Syr.; cf. Eth., Arab 1, Arm.; Lat. omits "earth's."

f. Syr., Eth.; cf. Ar., Arm.; Lat. is corrupt.

g. Syr.; cf. Eth.; Lat. is corrupt.

h. Syr., Eth., Arab 1, Arm.; Lat. adds "by day."

God's work in creation

- 38 I said, "O Lord, you spoke at the beginning of creation, and said on the first Gen 1:1-4 39 day, 'Let heaven and earth be made,' and your word accomplished the work. •And then the Spirit was hovering, and darkness and silence embraced everything; the 40 sound of man's voice was not yet there.ⁱ •Then you commanded that a ray of light be brought forth from your treasuries, so that your works might then appear.
 41 "Again, on the second day, you created the spirit of the firmament, and commanded him to divide and separate the waters, that one part might move upward and the other part remain beneath.
 42 "On the third day you commanded the waters to be gathered together in the seventh part of the earth; six parts you dried up and kept so that some of them 43 might be planted and cultivated and be of service before you. •For your word went 44 forth, and at once the work was done. •For immediately fruit came forth in endless abundance and of varied appeal to the taste; and flowers of inimitable color; and odors of inexpressible fragrance. These were made on the third day.
 45 "On the fourth day you commanded the brightness of the sun, the light of the 46 moon, and the arrangement of the stars to come into being; •and you commanded them to serve man, who was about to be formed. Ps 8:6-8 47 "On the fifth day you commanded the seventh part, where the water had been gathered together, to bring forth living creatures, birds, and fishes; and so it was 48 done. •The dumb and lifeless water produced living creatures, as it was commanded,^j that thereafter the nations might declare thy wondrous works.
 49 "Then you kept in existence two living creatures;^k the name of one you called 50 Behemoth and the name of the other Leviathan. •And you separated one from the Job 7:12; other, for the seventh part where the water had been gathered together could not 26:12f.
 51 hold them both. •And you gave Behemoth one of the parts which had been dried Ps 74:12-15
 52 up on the third day, to live in it, where there are a thousand mountains; •but to Isa 30:7; Leviathan you have the seventh part, the watery part; and you have kept them to 51:9f.
 be eaten by whom you wish, and when you wish.
 53 "On the sixth day you commanded the earth to bring forth before you cattle, 54 beasts, and creeping things; •and over these you placed Adam as ruler over all the works which you had made; and from him we have all come, the people from whom you have chosen.

Why does Israel not possess her inheritance?

- 55 "All this I have spoken before you, O Lord, because you have said that it was 56 for us that you created this world.^l •As for the other nations which have descended from Adam, you have said that they are nothing, and that they are like spittle, and 57 you have compared their abundance to a drop from a bucket. •And now, O Lord, Isa 40:15 behold, these nations, which are reputed as nothing, domineer over us and devour 58 us. •But we your people, whom you have called your first-born, only begotten, 59 zealous for you,^m and most dear, have been given into their hands. •If the world has indeed been created for us, why do we not possess our world as an inheritance?
 How long will this be so?"

Response to Ezra's questions

- 1 7 When I had finished speaking these words, the angel who had been sent to me 2 on the former nights was sent to me again, •and he said to me, "Rise, Ezra, and listen to the words that I have come to speak to you."
 3 I said, "Speak, my lord." And he said to me, "There is a sea set in a wide

i. Syr., Eth.; Lat. "was not yet from you."

j. The text of this verse is uncertain.

k. Syr., Eth.; Lat. "two souls."

l. Syr., Eth., Arab 2; Lat. "the first-born world." Compare Arab 1 "first world."

m. The meaning of the Lat. text is obscure.

4 expanse so that it is broad^a and vast, •but it has an entrance set in a narrow place,
5 so that it is like a river. •If anyone, then, wishes to reach the sea, to look at it or 6 to navigate it, how can he come to the broad part unless he passes through the 7 narrow part? •Another example: There is a city built and set on a plain, and it is 8 full of all good things; •but the entrance to it is narrow and set in a precipitous
9 place, so that there is fire on the right hand and deep water on the left; •and there 10 is only one path lying between them, that is, between the fire and the water, so 11 that only one man can walk upon that path. •If now that city is given to a man for 12 an inheritance, how will the heir receive his inheritance unless he passes through 13 the danger set before him?"

10.11 I said, "He cannot, lord." And he said to me, "So also is Israel's portion. •For 12 I made the world for their sake, and when Adam transgressed my statutes, what 13 had been made was judged. •And so the entrances^b of this world were made narrow 14 and sorrowful and toilsome; they are few and evil, full of dangers and involved 15 in great hardships. •But the entrances of the greater^c world are broad and safe, and 16 really yield the fruit of immortality. •Therefore unless the living pass through the 17 difficult and vain experiences, they can never receive those things that have been 18 reserved for them. •But now why are you disturbed, seeing that you are to perish?
19 And why are you moved, seeing that you are mortal? •And why have you not 20 considered in your mind what is to come, rather than what is now present?"

1Cor 2:9

17 Then I answered and said, "O sovereign Lord, behold, you have ordained in 18 your Law that the righteous shall inherit these things, but that the ungodly shall 19 perish. •The righteous therefore can endure difficult circumstances while hoping 20 for easier ones; but those who have done wickedly have suffered the difficult 21 circumstances and will not see the easier ones."

19 He said to me, "You are not a better judge than God, or wiser than the Most 20 High! •Let many perish who are now living, rather than that the law of God which 21 is set before them be disregarded! •For God strictly commanded those who came 22 into the world, when they came, what they should do to live, and what they should 23 observe to avoid punishment. •Nevertheless they were not obedient, and spoke 24 against him;

23 they devised for themselves vain thoughts,
24 and proposed to themselves wicked frauds;
25 they even declared that the Most High does not exist, 26 and they ignored his ways!
27 They scorned his Law, and denied his covenants;
28 they have been unfaithful to his statutes
29 and have not performed his works.

25 "Therefore, Ezra, empty things are for the empty, and full things for the full.

The temporary messianic kingdom and the end of the world

26 "For behold, the time will come, when the signs which I have foretold to you 27 will come to pass; the city which now is not seen shall appear,^d and the land which 28 now is hidden shall be disclosed. •And everyone who has been delivered from the 29 evils that I have foretold shall see my wonders. •For my son the Messiah^e shall 30 be revealed with those who are with him, and those who remain shall rejoice four 31 hundred years.^f •And after these years my son the Messiah shall die, and all who 32 draw human breath. •And the world shall be turned back to primeval silence for 33 seven days, as it was at the first beginnings; so that no one shall be left. •And after 34 seven days the world, which is not yet awake, shall be roused, and that which is

6:20-24

7 a. Syr.; cf. Eth., Arab 1; Lat. "deep."

b. Eth. "the ways."

c. Syr. "future."

d. Arm.; Lat., Syr. "that the bride shall appear, even the city appearing."

e. Syr., Arab 1; Eth. "my Messiah"; Arab 2 "the Messiah"; Arm. "the Messiah of God"; Georgian "the elect my Messiah"; Lat. "my son Jesus."

f. Lat., Arab 1; Syr. "thirty years"; Arab 2 "one thousand years"; Eth., Arm. omit.

32 corruptible shall perish. •And the earth shall give up those who are asleep in it; and the chambers shall give up the souls which have been committed to them. Dan 12:2
 33 And the Most High shall be revealed upon the seat of judgment,^g and compassion 34 shall pass away,^h and patience shall be withdrawn;ⁱ •but judgment alone shall 35 remain, truth shall stand, and faithfulness shall grow strong. •And recompense shall follow, and the reward shall be manifested; righteous deeds shall awake, and [36] unrighteous deeds shall not sleep.^j •Then the pit^k of torment shall appear, and Rev 9:2 opposite it shall be the place of rest; and the furnace of Hell^l shall be disclosed, Lk 16:23f.
 [37] and opposite it the Paradise of delight. •Then the Most High will say to the nations that have been raised from the dead, 'Look now, and understand whom you have denied, whom you have not served, whose commandments you have despised!
 [38] Look on this side and on that; here are delight and rest, and there are fire and [39] torments!' Thus he will^m speak to them on the day of judgment—•a day that has [40] no sun or moon or stars, •or cloud or thunder or lightning or wind or water or air, [41] or darkness or evening or morning, •or summer or spring or heat or winterⁿ or frost [42] or cold or hail or rain or dew, •or noon or night, or dawn or shining or brightness or light, but only the splendor of the glory of the Most High, by which all shall [43] see what has been determined for them. •For it will last for about a week of years.
 [44] This is my judgment and its prescribed order; and to you alone have I shown these things."

The small number of the saved

[45] I answered and said, "O sovereign Lord, I said then and I say now:^o Blessed [46] are those who are alive and keep your commandments! •But what of those for whom I prayed? For who among the living is there that has not sinned, or who [47] among men that has not transgressed your covenant? •And now I see that the world [48] to come will bring delight to few, but torments to many. •For an evil heart has grown up in us, which has alienated us from God,^p and has brought us into corruption and the ways of death, and has shown us the paths of perdition and removed us far from life—and that not just a few of us but almost all who have been created!"
 [49] He answered me and said, "Listen to me, Ezra,^q and I will instruct you, and 5:32
 [50] will admonish you yet again. •For this reason the Most High has made not one [51] world but two. •For whereas you have said that the righteous are not many but few, while the ungodly abound, hear the explanation for this.
 [52] "If you have just a few precious stones, will you add to them lead and clay?"^r [53] I said, "Lord, how could that be?"
 [54] And he said to me, "Not only that, but ask the earth and she will tell you; defer
 [55] to her, and she will declare it to you. •Say to her, 'You produce gold and silver [56] and brass, and also iron and lead and clay; •but silver is more abundant than gold, and brass than silver, and iron than brass, and lead than iron, and clay than lead.' [57] Judge therefore which things are precious and desirable, those that are abundant or those that are rare?" [58] I said, "O sovereign Lord, what is plentiful is of less worth, for what is more rare is more precious." [59] He answered me and said, "Weigh within yourself^s what you have thought, for he who has what is hard to get rejoices more than he who has what is plentiful.
 [60] So also will be the judgment^t which I have promised; for I will rejoice over the

g. Syr. adds "and then comes the end."

h. Syr. adds "and pity shall be far off."

i. Lat. "gather together."

j. The passage from vs. [36] to vs. [105], formerly missing in the Lat. MSS used for editions of the Vulgate, has been restored (see "Texts").

k. Syr., Eth.; Lat. "place."

l. Lat. "gehenna."

m. Syr., Eth., Arab 1; Lat. "you shall."

n. Or "storm."

o. Syr.; Lat. "And I answered, 'I said then, O Lord, and I say now: . . .'"

p. Bensly's correction; Lat., Syr., Eth. "from these."

q. Syr., Arab 1, Georgian; Lat., Eth. omit "Ezra."

r. Arab 1; Lat., Syr., Eth. are corrupt.

s. Syr., Eth., Arab 1; Lat. is corrupt here.

t. Syr., Arab 1; Lat. "creation."

few who shall be saved, because it is they who have made my glory to prevail [61] now, and through them my name has now been honored. •And I will not grieve over the multitude of those who perish; for it is they who are now like a mist, and are similar to a flame and smoke—they are set on fire and burn hotly, and are extinguished.”

Lamentation of Ezra, with response

[62] I replied and said, “O earth, what have you brought forth, if the mind is made [63] out of the dust like the other created things! •For it would have been better if the 4:12 dust itself had not been born, so that the mind might not have been made from it.
 [64] But now the mind grows with us, and therefore we are tormented, because we [65] perish and know it. •Let the human race lament, but let the beasts of the field be glad; let all who have been born lament, but let the four-footed beasts and the [66] flocks rejoice! •For it is much better with them than with us; for they do not look for a judgment, nor do they know of any torment or salvation promised to them [67] after death. •For what does it profit us that we shall be preserved alive but cruelly [68] tormented? •For all who have been born are involved in iniquities, and are full of [69] sins and burdened with transgressions. •And if we were not to come into judgment after death, perhaps it would have been better for us.”

[70] He answered me and said, “When the Most High made the world and Adam and all who have come from him, he first prepared the judgment and the things [71] that pertain to the judgment. •And now understand from your own words, for you [72] have said that the mind grows with us. •For this reason, therefore, those who dwell on earth shall be tormented, because though they had understanding they committed iniquity, and though they received the commandments they did not keep them, and though they obtained the Law they dealt unfaithfully with what they [73] received. •What, then, will they have to say in the judgment, or how will they [74] answer in the last times? •For how long the time is that the Most High has been patient with those who inhabit the world, and not for their sake, but because of the times which he has foreordained!”

The state of the departed before the judgment

[75] I answered and said, “If I have found favor in your sight, my lord, show this also to your servant: whether after death, as soon as every one of us yields up his soul, we shall be kept in rest until those times come when you will renew the creation, or whether we shall be tormented at once?”

[76] He answered me and said, “I will show you that also, but do not be associated with those who have shown scorn, nor number yourself among those who are [77] tormented. •For you have a treasure of works laid up with the Most High; but it 8:33,36
 [78] will not be shown to you until the last times. •Now, concerning death, the teaching is: When the decisive decree has gone forth from the Most High that a man shall die, as the spirit leaves the body to return again to him who gave it, first of all [79] it adores the glory of the Most High. •And if it is one of those who have shown scorn and have not kept the way of the Most High, and who have despised his [80] Law, and who have hated those who fear God—such spirits shall not enter into habitations, but shall immediately wander about in torments, ever grieving and [81] sad, in seven ways. •The first way, because they have scorned the Law of the [82] Most High. •The second way, because they cannot now make a good repentance [83] that they may live. •The third way, they shall see the reward laid up for those [84] who have trusted the covenants of the Most High. •The fourth way, they shall [85] consider the torment laid up for themselves in the last days. •The fifth way, they shall see how the habitations of the others are guarded by angels in profound [86] quiet. •The sixth way, they shall see how some of them will pass over^u into

u. Bensly's correction; the text of this vs. is corrupt.

[87] torments. •The seventh way, which is worse^v than all the ways that have been mentioned, because they shall utterly waste away in confusion and be consumed with shame,^w and shall wither with fear at seeing the glory of the Most High before whom they sinned while they were alive, and before whom they are to be judged in the last times.

[88] “Now this is the order of those who have kept the ways of the Most High, [89] when they shall be separated from their mortal body.^x •During the time that they lived in it,^y they laboriously served the Most High, and withstood danger every [90] hour, that they might keep the Law of the Lawgiver perfectly. •Therefore this is [91] the teaching concerning them: •First of all, they shall see with great joy the glory
[92] of him who receives them, for they shall have rest in seven orders. •The first order, because they have striven with great effort to overcome the evil thought^z which was formed with them, that it might not lead them astray from life into [93] death. •The second order, because they see the perplexity in which the souls of [94] the ungodly wander, and the punishment that waits them. •The third order, they see the witness which he who formed them bears concerning them, that while
[95] they were alive they kept the Law which was given them in trust. •The fourth order, they understand the rest which they now enjoy, being gathered into their chambers and guarded by angels in profound quiet, and the glory which awaits
[96] them in the last days. •The fifth order, they rejoice that they have now escaped what is mortal, and shall inherit what is to come; and besides they see the straits and toil^{a2} from which they have been delivered, and the spacious liberty which [97] they are to receive and enjoy in immortality. •The sixth order, when it is shown to them how their face is to shine like the sun, and how they are to be made like
[98] the light of the stars, being incorruptible from then on. •The seventh order, which is greater than all that have been mentioned, because they shall rejoice with boldness, and shall be confident without confusion, and shall be glad without fear, for they hasten to behold the face of him whom they served in life and from
[99] whom they are to receive their reward when glorified. •This is the order of the souls of the righteous, as henceforth is announced,^{b2} and the aforesaid are the ways of torment which those who would not give heed shall suffer hereafter.”

[100] I answered and said, “Will time therefore be given to the souls after they have been separated from the bodies, to see what you have described to me?”

[101] He said to me, “They shall have freedom for seven days, so that during these seven days they may see the things of which you have been told, and afterward they shall be gathered in their habitations.”

Dan 12:3
Mt 13:43

Mt 5:8
Rev 22:4

1Cor 3:14
Rev 22:12

May the righteous intercede for the ungodly?

[102] I answered and said, “If I have found favor in your sight, show further to me, your servant, whether on the day of judgment the righteous will be able to intercede
[103] for the ungodly or to entreat the Most High for them, •fathers for sons or sons for parents, brothers for brothers, relatives for their kinsmen, or friends^{c2} for those who are most dear.”

[104] He answered me and said, “Since you have found favor in my sight, I will show you this also. The day of judgment is decisive^{d2} and displays to all the seal of truth. Just as now a father does not send his son, or a son his father, or a master his servant, or a friend his dearest friend, to be ill^{e2} or sleep or eat or be healed [105] in his stead, •so no one shall ever pray for another on that day, neither shall anyone lay a burden on another;^{f2} for then everyone shall bear his own righteousness or unrighteousness.”

v. Lat. “greater.”

w. Syr., Eth.; Lat. is corrupt.

x. Lit. “the corruptible vessel.”

y. Syr., Eth.; Lat. is corrupt.

z. I.e. evil yeşer.

a2. Syr., Eth.; Lat. “fulness.”

b2. Syr.; Lat. is corrupt here.

c2. Syr., Eth., Arab 1; Lat. “kinsmen for their nearest, friends [lit. ‘the confident’] for their dearest.”

d2. Lat. “bold.”

e2. Syr., Eth., Arm.; Lat. “understand.”

f2. Syr.; Lat. omits “on that . . . another.”

36[106] I answered and said, "How then do we find that first Abraham prayed for the 37[107] people of Sodom, and Moses for our fathers who sinned in the desert, •and Joshua 38[108] after him for Israel in the days of Achan, •and Samuel in the days of Saul,^{g2} and 39[109] David for the plague, and Solomon for those in the sanctuary, •and Elijah for those 40[110] who received the rain, and for the one who was dead, that he might live, •and 41[111] Hezekiah for the people in the days of Sennacherib, and many others prayed for many? •If therefore the righteous have prayed for the ungodly now, when corruption has increased and unrighteousness has multiplied, why will it not be so then as well?"

42[112] He answered me and said, "This present world is not the end; the full glory 43[113] does not^{h2} abide in it;ⁱ² therefore those who were strong prayed for the weak. •But the day of judgment will be the end of this age and the beginning^{j2} of the immortal 44[114] age to come, in which corruption has passed away, •sinful indulgence has come to an end, unbelief has been cut off, and righteousness has increased and truth has 45[115] appeared. •Therefore no one will then be able to have mercy on him who has been condemned in the judgment, or to harm^{k2} him who is victorious."

Gen 18:23
 Ex 32:11
 Josh 7:6f.
 1Sam 7:9; 12:23
 2Sam 24:17
 1Kgs 8:22f., 30
 1Kgs 18:42; 45
 17:20f.
 2Kgs 19:15-19

Lamentation over the fate of the mass of humanity

46[116] I answered and said, "This is my first and last word: It would have been better if the earth had not produced Adam, or else, when it had produced him, had 47[117] restrained him from sinning. •For what good is it to all that they live in sorrow 48[118] now and expect punishment after death? •O Adam, what have you done? For though it was you who sinned, the fall was not yours alone, but ours also who are 49[119] your descendants. •For what good is it to us, if an eternal age has been promised 50[120] to us, but we have done deeds that bring death? •And what good is it that an 51[121] everlasting hope has been promised us, but we have miserably failed? •Or that safe and healthful habitations have been reserved for us, but we have lived wickedly?
 52[122] Or that the glory of the Most High will defend those who have led a pure life, 53[123] but we have walked in the most wicked ways? •Or that a paradise shall be revealed, whose fruit remains unspoiled and in which are abundance and healing, but we 54[124] shall not enter it, •because we have lived in unseemly places? •Or that the faces
 55[125] of those who practiced self-control shall shine more than the stars but our faces 56[126] shall be blacker than darkness? •For while we lived and committed iniquity we did not consider what we should suffer after death."

57[127] He answered and said, "This is the meaning of the contest which every man
 58[128] who is born on earth shall wage, •that if he is defeated he shall suffer what you 59[129] have said, but if he is victorious he shall receive what I have said.^{l2} •For this is the way of which Moses, while he was alive, spoke to the people, saying, 'Choose 60[130] for yourself life, that you may live!' •But they did not believe him, or the prophets 61[131] after him, or even myself who have spoken to them. •Therefore there shall not be^{m2} grief at their damnation, so much as joy over those to whom salvation is assured."

Dan 12:3

Enumeration of seven divine attributes: an implicit appeal to God's mercy

62[132] I answered and said, "I know, my lord, that the Most High is now called merciful, because he has mercy on those who have not yet come into the world;
 63[133] and gracious, because he is gracious to those who turn in repentance to his law;
 64[134] and patient, because he shows patience toward those who have sinned, since they 65[135] are his own works; •and bountiful, because he would rather give than take away;ⁿ²

g2. Syr., Eth., Arab 1; Lat. omits "in the days of Saul."

h2. Lat. omits "not."

i2. Or "the glory does not continuously abide in it."

j2. Lat. omits "the beginning."

k2. Syr., Eth.; Lat. "overwhelm."

l2. Syr., Eth., Arab 1; Lat. "I say."

m2. Syr.; Lat. "was not."

n2. Or "is ready to give according to requests."

66[136] and abundant in compassion, because he makes his compassions abound more 67[137] and more to those now living and to those who are gone and to those yet to come, 68[138] for if he did not make them abound, the world with those who inhabit it would not have life; •and he is called giver, because if he did not give out of his goodness so that those who have committed iniquities might be relieved of them, not one 69[139] ten-thousandth of mankind could have life; •and judge, because if he did not pardon those who were created by his word and blot out the multitude of their sins,^{o2} 70[140] there would probably be left only very few of the innumerable multitude.”

1 8 He answered me and said, “The Most High made this world for the sake of 2 many, but the world to come for the sake of few. •But I will tell you a parable, Ezra. Just as, when you ask the earth, it will tell you that it provides very much clay from which earthenware is made, but only a little dust from which gold comes;
 3 so is the course of the present world. •Many have been created, but few will be saved.”

Ezra implores God to show mercy to his creation

4 I answered and said, “Then drink your fill of understanding, O my soul, and 5 drink wisdom, O my heart!^a •For not of your own will did you come into the world,^b and against your will you depart, for you have been given only a short 6 time to live. •O Lord who art over us, grant to your servant that we may pray before you, and give us seed for our heart and cultivation of our understanding so that fruit may be produced, by which every mortal who bears the likeness^c of a 7 human being may be able to live. •For you alone exist, and we are of your hands, 8 as you have declared. •And because you give life to the body which is now fashioned in the womb, and furnish it with members, what you have created is preserved in fire and water, and for nine months the womb that you have fashioned^d 9 bears your creation which has been created in it. •But that which keeps and that which is kept shall both be kept by your keeping.^e And when the womb gives up 10 again what has been created in it, •you have commanded that from the members themselves (that is, from the breasts) milk should be supplied, which is the fruit 11 of the breasts, •so that what has been fashioned may be nourished for a time; and 12 afterward you will guide him in your mercy. •You have brought him up in your righteousness, and instructed him in your law, and reproved him in your wisdom.
 13 You will take away his life, for he is your creation; and you will make him live, 14 for he is your work. •If then you suddenly and quickly^f destroy him who with so 15 great labor was fashioned by your command, to what purpose was he made? •And now I will speak out: About mankind you know best; but I will speak about your 16 people, for whom I am grieved, •and about your inheritance, for whom I lament, and about Israel, for whom I am sad, and about the seed of Jacob, for whom I am 17 troubled. •Therefore I will pray before you for myself and for them, for I see the 18 failings of us who dwell in the land, •and^g I have heard of the swiftness of the 19 judgment that is to come. •Therefore hear my voice, and understand my words, and I will speak before you.”

The beginning of the work of Ezra’s prayer, before he was taken up. He said, 20 “O Lord who inhabits eternity,^h whose eyes are exaltedⁱ and whose upper chambers
 21 are in the air, •whose throne is beyond measure and whose glory is beyond 22 comprehension, before whom the hosts of angels stand trembling •and at whose command they are changed to wind and fire,^j whose word is sure and whose

o2. Lat. “contempts.”

8 a. Syr.; Lat. “let it feed on what it understands.”

b. Syr.; Lat. is corrupt here.

c. Syr.; Lat. “place” (see Introduction, “Original language”).

d. Lit. “for nine months your fashioning.”

e. Syr.; Lat. is corrupt here.

f. Syr.; Lat. “will with a light command.”

g. Lit. “but.”

h. Or “abide forever.”

i. Another Lat. text reads “whose are the highest heavens.”

j. Syr.; Lat. “they whose service takes the form of wind and fire.”

Isa 44:6; 45:11;
60:21

Ps 139:14f.

Ps 28:9

Ps 104:4
Heb 1:7

utterances are certain, whose ordinance is strong and whose command is terrible, 23 whose look dries up the depths and whose indignation makes the mountains melt 24 away, and whose truth is established forever^k—hear, O Lord, the prayer of your 25 servant, and give ear to the petition of your creature; attend to my words. •For as 26 long as I live I will speak, and as long as I have understanding I will answer. •O 27 look not upon the sins of your people, but at those who have served you in truth.
 28 Regard not the endeavors of those who act wickedly, but the endeavors of those 29 who have kept your covenants amid afflictions. •Think not on those who have 30 lived wickedly, in your sight; but remember those who have willingly acknowledged 31 that you are to be feared. •Let it not be your will to destroy those who have had 32 the ways of cattle; but regard those who have gloriously taught your Law.^l •Be not 33 angry with those who are deemed worse than beasts; but love those who have 34 always put their trust in your glory. •For we and our fathers have passed our lives 35 in ways that bring death,^m but you, because of us sinners, are called merciful.
 36 For if you have desired to have pity on us, who have no works of righteousness, 37 then you will be called merciful. •For the righteous, who have many works laid 38 up with you, shall receive their reward in consequence of their own deeds. •But 39 what is man, that you are angry with him; or what is a mortal race, that you are 40 so bitter against it? •For in truth there is no one among those who have been born 41 who has not acted wickedly, and among those who have existedⁿ there is no one 42 who has not transgressed. •For in this, O Lord, your righteousness and goodness 43 will be declared, when you are merciful to those who have no store of good 44 works.’’

Isa 50:2; 51:10
 Micah 1:4
 Sir 16:18f.

Response to Ezra’s prayer

37 He answered me and said, “Some things you have spoken rightly, and it will 38 come to pass according to your words. •For indeed I will not concern myself about 39 the fashioning of those who have sinned, or about their death, their judgment, or 40 their damnation; •but I will rejoice over the creation of the righteous, over their 41 pilgrimage also, and their salvation, and their receiving their reward. •As you^o 42 have spoken, therefore, so it shall be.

Humankind is compared with seeds and plants

41 “For just as the farmer sows many seeds upon the ground and plants a multitude 42 of seedlings, and yet not all that have been sown will come up^p in due season, and 43 not all that were planted will take root; so all those who have been sown in the 44 world will not be saved.’’
 42,43 I answered and said, “If I have found favor before you, let me speak.^q •For if 44 the farmer’s seed does not come up, because it has not received your rain in due 45 season, or if it has been ruined by too much rain, it perishes. •But man, who has 46 been formed by your hands and is called your own image because he is made like 47 you, and for whose sake you have formed all things—have you also made him like 48 the farmer’s seed? •No, O Lord^s who are over us! But spare your people and mercy 49 on your inheritance, for you have mercy on your own creation.’’

Joel 2:17

The final divine answer

46 He answered me and said, “Things that are present are for those who live now, 47 and things that are future are for those who will live hereafter. •For you come far

k. Arab 2; other authorities read “bears witness.”

l. Syr. “have received the brightness of your law.”

m. Syr., Eth.; the Lat. is uncertain.

n. Syr.; the Lat. is uncertain.

o. Eth. “you”; Lat. “I.”

p. Syr., Eth. “will live”; Lat. “will be saved.”

q. Or “If I have found favor, let me speak before you.”

r. Bensly’s correction; cf. Syr., Arab 1, Arm.; the Lat. is corrupt.

s. Eth., Ar.; cf. Syr.; Lat. omits “O Lord.”

short of being able to love my creation more than I love it. But you have often 48 compared yourself^t to the unrighteous. Never do so! •But even in this respect you 49 will be praiseworthy before the Most High, •because you humble yourself, as is becoming for you, and have not deemed yourself to be among the righteous in 50 order to receive^u the greatest glory. •For many miseries will affect those who 51 inhabit the world in the last times, because they have walked in great pride. •But think of your own case, and inquire concerning the glory of those who are like 52 yourself, •because it is for you that Paradise is opened, the tree of life is planted, Rev 2:7; 22:2
 the age to come is prepared, plenty is provided, a city is built, rest is appointed,^v 53 goodness is established and wisdom perfected beforehand. •The root of evil is sealed up from you, illness is banished from you, and death^w is hidden; hell has 54 fled and corruption has been forgotten;^x •sorrows have passed away, and in the end the treasure of immortality is made manifest. •Therefore do not ask any more 55 questions about the multitude of those who perish. •For they also received freedom, but they despised the Most High, and were contemptuous of his Law, and forsook 57,58 his ways. •Moreover they have even trampled upon his righteous ones, •and said in their hearts that there is no God—though knowing full well that they must die. Pss 14:1; 53:1 59 For just as the things which I have predicted await^y you, so the thirst and torment which are prepared await them. For the Most High did not intend that men should 60 be destroyed; •but they themselves who were created have defiled the name of him who made them, and have been ungrateful to him who prepared life for them.
 61,62 Therefore my judgment is now drawing near; •I have not shown this to all men, but only to you and a few like you.”

The end, and the signs preceding it

63 Then I answered and said, •“Behold, O Lord, you have now shown me a multitude of the signs which you will do in the last times, but you have not shown me when you will do them.”

1 9 He answered me and said, “Measure carefully in your mind, and when you see 2 that a certain part of the predicted signs are past, •then you will know that it is the very time when the Most High is about to visit the world which he has made.
 3 So when there shall appear in the world earthquakes, tumult of peoples, intrigues 4 of nations, wavering of leaders, confusion of princes, •then you will know that it was of these that the Most High spoke from the days that were of old, from the 5 beginning. •For just as with everything that has occurred in the world, the beginning 6 is evident,^a and the end is manifest; •so also are the times of the Most High: The beginnings are manifest in wonders and mighty works, and the end in requital^b and 7 signs. •And it shall be that everyone who will be saved and will be able to escape 8 on account of his works, or on account of the faith by which he has believed, •will survive the dangers that have been predicted, and will see my salvation in my land and within my borders, which I have sanctified for myself from the beginning.
 9 Then those who have now abused my ways shall be amazed, and those who have 10 rejected them with contempt shall dwell in torments. •For as many as did not 11 acknowledge me in their lifetime, although they received my benefits, •and as many as scorned my Law while they still had freedom, and did not understand but 12 despised it^c while an opportunity of repentance was still open to them, •these must 13 in torment acknowledge it^d after death. •Therefore, do not continue to be curious

t. Syr., Eth.; Lat. “brought yourself near.”

u. Or “righteous; so that you will receive.”

v. Syr.; Lat. “allowed.”

w. Syr., Eth., Arm.; Lat. omits “death.”

x. Syr.; Lat. “Hades and corruption have fled into oblivion” or “corruption has fled into Hades to be forgotten.”

y. Syr.; Lat. “will receive.”

9 a. Syr.; Eth. “in the world”; Lat. is corrupt.

b. Syr.; Lat., Eth. “in effects.”

c. Or “me.”

d. Or “me.”

as to how the ungodly will be punished; but inquire how the righteous will be saved, those to whom the age belongs and for whose sake the age was made.”^e

The fate of the wicked

- 14,15 I answered and said, •“I said before, and I say now, and will say it again: There 16 are more who perish than those who will be saved, •as a wave is greater than a drop of water.”
- 17 He answered me and said, “As is the field, so is the seed; and as are the flowers, 18 so are the colors; and as is the work, so is the product; and as is the farmer, so 19 is the threshing floor. •For there was a time in this age when I was preparing for those who now exist, before the world was made for them to dwell in, and no one 20 opposed me then, for no one existed. •But now those who have been created in this world, which is supplied both with an unfailing table and an inexhaustible 21 pasture,^f have become corrupt in their ways. •So I considered my world, and behold, it was lost, and my earth, and behold, it was in peril because of the devices 22 of those who^g had come into it. •And I saw and spared some^h with great difficulty, and saved for myself one grape out of a cluster, and one plant out of a great forest.ⁱ 23 So let the multitude perish which has been born in vain, but let my grape and my 24 plant be saved, because with much labor I have perfected them. •But if you will let seven days more pass—do not fast during them, however; •but go into a field of flowers where no house has been built, and eat only of the flowers of the field, 25 and taste no meat and drink no wine, but eat only flowers, •and pray to the Most High continually—then I will come and talk with you.”

THE FOURTH VISION

The abiding glory of the Mosaic Law

- 26 So I went, as he directed me, into the field which is called Ardat;^j and there I sat among the flowers and ate of the plants of the field, and the nourishment they 27 afforded satisfied me. •And after seven days, as I lay on the grass, my heart was troubled again as it was before. •And my mouth was opened, and I began to speak 28 before the Most High, and said, •“O Lord, you showed yourself among us, to our fathers in the wilderness when they came out from Egypt and when they came into 29 the untrodden and unfruitful wilderness; •and you said, ‘Hear me, O Israel, and 30 give heed to my words, O descendants of Jacob. •For behold, I sow my Law in you, and you shall be glorified through it forever.’ •But though our fathers received the Law, they did not keep it, and did not observe the statutes; yet the fruit of the 31 Law did not perish—for it could not, because it was yours. •Yet those who received 32 it perished, because they did not keep what had been sown in them. •And behold, it is the rule that, when the ground has received seed, or the sea a ship, or any dish 33 food or drink, and when it happens that what was sown or what was launched or 34 what was put in is destroyed, •they are destroyed, but the things that held them 35 remain; yet with us it has not been so. •For we who have received the Law and 36 sinned will perish, as well as our heart which received it; •the Law, however, does not perish but remains in its glory.”

Ex 19:9; 24:10
Deut 4:12

The vision of a dependent woman

- 38 When I said these things in my heart, I lifted up my eyes^k and saw a woman

e. Syr.; Lat. “saved, and whose is the age and for whose sake the age was made and when.”

f. Bensly’s correction. Lat. “law” (see Introduction, “Original language”).

g. Bensly’s correction. Lat. “devices which.”

h. Lat. “them.”

i. Syr., Eth., Arab 1; Lat. “tribe.”

j. Syr., Eth., “Arpad”; Arm. “Ardab.”

k. Syr., Ar., Arm.; Lat. “I looked about me with my eyes.”

on my right, and behold, she was mourning and weeping with a loud voice, and was deeply grieved at heart, and her clothes were rent, and there were ashes on her head. •Then I dismissed the thoughts with which I had been engaged, and turned to her •and said to her, “Why are you weeping, and why are you grieved at heart?”

41 “Let me alone, my lord,” she said, “that I may weep for myself and continue to mourn, for I am greatly embittered in spirit and deeply afflicted.”

42 And I said to her, “What has happened to you? Tell me.”

43 She said to me, “Your servant was barren and had no child, though I lived with my husband thirty years. •And every hour and every day during those thirty years I besought the Most High, night and day. •And after thirty years God heard your handmaid, and looked upon my low estate, and considered my distress, and gave me a son. And I rejoiced greatly over him, I and my husband and all my neighbors,¹ and we gave great glory to the Mighty One. •And I brought him up with much care. •So when he grew up and I came to take a wife for him, I set a day for the marriage feast.

1 10 “But it happened that when my son entered his wedding chamber, he fell down and died. •Then we all put out the lamps, and all my neighbors^a attempted to console me; and I remained quiet until evening of the second day. •But when they all had stopped consoling me, that I might be quiet, I got up in the night and fled, and came to this field, as you see. •And now I intend not to return to the city, but to stay here, and I will neither eat nor drink, but without ceasing mourn and fast until I die.”

5 Then I broke off the reflections with which I was still engaged, and answered her in anger and said, “•You most foolish of women, do you not see our mourning, and what has happened to us? •For Zion, the mother of us all, is in deep grief and great humiliation. •It is most appropriate to mourn now, because we are all mourning, and to be sorrowful, because we are all sorrowing; you are sorrowing for one son, but we, the whole world, for our mother.^b •Now ask the earth, and she will tell you that it is she who ought to mourn over so many who have come into being upon her. •And from the beginning all have been born of her, and others will come; and behold, almost all go to perdition, and a multitude of them are destined for destruction. •Who then ought to mourn the more, she^c who lost so great a multitude, or you who are grieving for one? •But if you say to me, ‘My lamentation is not like the earth’s, for I have lost the fruit of my womb, which I brought forth in pain and bore in sorrow; •but it is with the earth according to the way of the earth—the multitude that is now in it goes as it came’; •then I say to you, ‘As you brought forth in sorrow, so the earth also has from the beginning given her fruit, that is, man, to him who made her.’ •Now, therefore, keep your sorrow to yourself, and bear bravely the troubles that have come upon you. •For if you acknowledge the decree of God to be just, you will receive your son back in due time. •Therefore go into the city to your husband.”

18 She said to me, “I will not do so; I will not go into the city, but I will die here.”

Further remonstrance of Ezra

19.20 So I spoke again to her, and said, “•Do not say that, but let yourself be persuaded because of the troubles of Zion, and be consoled because of the sorrow of Jerusalem. 21 For you see that our sanctuary has been laid waste, our altar thrown down, our temple destroyed; •our harp has been laid low, our song has been silenced, and our rejoicing has been ended; the light of our lampstand has been put out, the ark of our covenant has been plundered, our holy things have been polluted, and the name by which we are called has been profaned; our free men^d have suffered abuse,

1. Lit. “all my fellow citizens.”

b. Cf. Syr.; Lat. is corrupt.

c. Syr.

10 a. Lit. “all my fellow citizens.”

d. Or “children.”

our priests have been burned to death, our Levites have gone into captivity, our virgins have been defiled, and our wives have been ravished; our righteous men have been carried off, our little ones have been cast out, our young men have been 23 enslaved and our strong men made powerless. •And, what is more than all, the seal of Zion—for she has now lost the seal of her glory, and has been given over 24 into the hands of those that hate us. •Therefore shake off your great sadness and lay aside your many sorrows, so that the Mighty One may be merciful to you again, and the Most High may give you rest, a relief from your troubles.”

A vision of the heavenly Jerusalem

25 While I was talking to her, behold, her face suddenly shone exceedingly, and her countenance flashed like lightning, so that I was too frightened to approach 26 her, and my heart was terrified. While^e I was wondering what this meant, •behold, she suddenly uttered a loud and fearful cry, so that the earth shook at the sound.
 27 And I looked, and behold, the woman was no longer visible to me, but there was an established city,^f and a place of huge foundations showed itself. Then I was 28 afraid, and cried with a loud voice and said, •“Where is the angel Uriel, who came to me at first? For it was he who brought me into this overpowering 4:1 bewilderment; my end has become corruption, and my prayer a reproach.”

Interpretation of the vision

29 As I was speaking these words, behold, the angel who had come to me at first 30 came to me, and he looked upon me; •and behold, I lay there like a corpse and I was deprived of my understanding. Then he grasped my right hand and strength-
 31 ened me and set me on my feet, and said to me, •“What is the matter with you? And why are you troubled? And why are your understanding and the thoughts of your mind troubled?”
 32 I said, “Because you have forsaken me! I did as you directed, and went out into the field, and behold, I saw, and still see, what I am unable to explain.”
 33 He said to me, “Stand up like a man, and I will instruct you.” 5:15; 6:13,17
 34 I said, “Speak, my lord; only do not forsake me, lest I die before my time.^g 35 For I have seen what I did not know, and I have heard what I do not understand.
 36,37 Or is my mind deceived, and my soul dreaming? •Now therefore I entreat you to give your servant an explanation of this bewildering vision.”
 38 He answered me and said, “Listen to me and I will inform you, and tell you about the things which you fear, for the Most High has revealed many secrets to you. •For he has seen your righteous conduct, that you have sorrowed continually 40 for your people, and mourned greatly over Zion. •This therefore is the meaning 41 of the vision. •The woman who appeared to you a little while ago, whom you saw 42 mourning and began to console—•but you do not now see the form of a woman, 43 but an established city^h has appeared to you—•and as for her telling you about the 44 misfortune of her son, this is the interpretation: •This woman whom you saw,
 45 whom you now behold as an established city, is Zion.ⁱ •And as for her telling you that she was barren for thirty years, it is because there were three thousand^j years
 46 in the world before any offering was offered in it.^j •And after three thousand^j years Solomon built the city, and offered offerings; then it was that the barren woman
 47 bore a son. •And as for her telling you that she brought him up with much care, 48 that was the period of residence in Jerusalem. •And as for her saying to you, ‘When my son entered his wedding chamber he died,’ and that misfortune had overtaken 49 her,^k that was the destruction which befell Jerusalem. •And behold, you saw her likeness, how she mourned for her son, and you began to console her for what had

e. Syr., Eth., Arab 1; Lat. omits “I was too . . . terrified. While.”

f. Syr., Eth., Ar.; Lat. “a city was being built.”

g. Syr., Eth., Ar.; Lat. “die to no purpose.”

h. Syr., Eth., Ar.; Lat. “a city to be built.”

i. Syr., Eth., Ar., Arm.; Lat. is corrupt.

j. Bensly's correction. Lat., Syr., Ar., Arm. “her.”

k. Or “him.”

50 happened.¹ •For now the Most High, seeing that you are sincerely grieved and 51 profoundly distressed for her, has shown you the brightness of her glory, and the 52 loveliness of her beauty. •Therefore I told you to remain in the field where no
 53 house had been built, •for I knew that the Most High would reveal these things
 54 to you. •Therefore I told you to go into the field where there was no foundation 54 of any building, •for no work of man's building could endure in a place where the city of the Most High was to be revealed.

55 "Therefore do not be afraid, and do not let your heart be terrified; but go in and see the splendor and vastness of the building, as far as it is possible for your eyes 56.57 to see it, •and afterward you will hear as much as your ears can hear. •For you are more blessed than many, and you have been called^m before the Most High, as 58.59 but few have been. •But tomorrow night you shall remain here, •and the Most High will show you in those dream visions what the Most High will do to those who dwell on earth in the last days."

So I slept that night and the following one, as he had commanded me.

THE FIFTH VISION

(The Eagle Vision)

1 11 On the second night I had a dream, and behold, there came up from the sea 2 an eagle that had twelve feathered wings and three heads. •And I looked, and behold, he spread his wings over^d all the earth, and all the winds of heaven blew 3 upon him, and the clouds were gathered about him.^b •And I looked, and out of 4 his wings there grew opposing wings; but they became little, puny wings. •But his heads were at rest; the middle head was larger than the other heads, but it also 5 was at rest with them. •And I looked, and behold, the eagle flew with his wings, 6 to reign over the earth and over those who dwell in it. •And I saw how all things under heaven were subjected to him, and no one spoke against him, not even one 7 creature that was on the earth. •And I looked, and behold, the eagle rose upon his 8 talons, and uttered a cry to his wings, saying, •"Do not all watch at the same time;
 9 let each sleep in his own place, and watch in his turn; •but let the heads be reserved for the last."

Dan 7:3
Rev 13:1

10 And I looked, and behold, the voice did not come from his heads, but from the 11 midst of his body. •And I counted his opposing wings, and behold, there were 12 eight of them. •And I looked, and behold, on the right side one wing arose, and 13 it reigned over all the earth. •And while it was reigning it came to its end and disappeared, so that its place was not seen. Then the next wing arose and reigned, 14 and it continued to reign a long time. •And while it was reigning its end came also,
 15 so that it disappeared like the first. •And behold, a voice sounded, saying to it, 16 "Hear me, you who have ruled the earth all this time; I announce this to you 17 before you disappear. •After you no one shall rule as long as you, or even half as long."

18 Then the third wing raised itself up, and held the rule like the former ones, and 19 it also disappeared. •And so it went with all the wings; they wielded power one 20 after another and then were never seen again. •And I looked, and behold, in due course the wings that followed^c also rose up on the right^d side in order to rule.
 21 There were some of them that ruled, yet disappeared suddenly; •and others of them rose up, but did not hold the rule.

22 After this I looked and behold, the twelve wings and the two little wings 23 disappeared; •and nothing remained on the eagle's body except the three heads that

1. Most Lat. MSS and Arab 1 add "these were the things to be opened to you."

m. Arab 1 "your name is known."

b. Syr.; cf. Eth., Ar.; Lat. omits "the clouds" and "about him."

c. Syr., Arab 2 "the little wings."

d. Some Eth. MSS read "left."

11 a. Arab 2, Arm.; Lat., Syr. "in."

24 were at rest and six little wings. •And I looked, and behold, two little wings separated from the six and remained under the head that was on the right side; but 25 four remained in their place. •And I looked, and behold, these little wings^e planned
 26 to set themselves up and hold the rule. •And I looked, and behold, one was set 27 up, but suddenly disappeared; •a second also, and this disappeared more quickly
 28 than the first. •And I looked, and behold, the two that remained were planning 29 between themselves to reign together; •and while they were planning, behold, one 30 of the heads that were at rest (the one which was in the middle) awoke; for it was 31 greater than the other two heads. •And I saw how it allied the two heads with 32 itself, •and behold, the head turned with those that were with it, and it devoured 33 the two little wings^f which were planning to reign. •Moreover this head gained control of the whole earth, and with much oppression dominated its inhabitants; and it had greater power over the world than all the wings that had gone before.
 34 After this I looked, and behold, the middle head also suddenly disappeared, just 35 as the wings had done. •But the two heads remained, which also ruled over the earth and its inhabitants. •And I looked, and behold, the head on the right side devoured the one on the left.
 36 Then I heard a voice saying to me, “Look before you and consider what you 37 see.” •And I looked, and behold, a creature like a lion was aroused out of the forest, roaring; and I heard how he uttered a man’s voice to the eagle, and spoke, 38.39 saying, •“Listen and I will speak to you. The Most High says to you, •“Are you not the one that remains of the four beasts which I had made to reign in my world, 40 so that the end of my times might come through them? •You, the fourth that has come, have conquered all the beasts that have gone before; and you have held sway over the world with much terror, and over all the earth with grievous 41 oppression; and for so long you have dwelt on the earth with deceit.^g •And you 42 have judged the earth, but not with truth; •for you have afflicted the meek and injured the peaceable; you have hated those who tell the truth, and have loved liars; you have destroyed the dwellings of those who brought forth fruit, and have 43 laid low the walls of those who did you no harm. •And so your insolence has come 44 up before the Most High, and your pride to the Mighty One. •And the Most High has looked upon his times, and behold, they are ended, and his ages are completed!
 45 Therefore you will surely disappear, you eagle, and your terrifying wings, and your most evil little wings, and your malicious heads, and your most evil talons, 46 and your whole worthless body, •so that the whole earth, freed from your violence, may be refreshed and relieved, and may hope for the judgment and mercy of him who made it.’ ”

1.2 12 While the lion was saying these words to the eagle, I looked, •and behold, the remaining head disappeared. And the two wings that had gone over to it arose^a 3 and set themselves up to reign, and their reign was brief and full of tumult. •And I looked, and behold, they also disappeared, and the whole body of the eagle was burned, and the earth was exceedingly terrified.

Ezra asks for an interpretation of the vision

Then I awoke in great perplexity of mind and great fear, and I said to my spirit, 4 “Behold, you have brought this upon me, because you search out the ways of 5 the Most High. •Behold, I am still weary in mind and very weak in my spirit, and not even a little strength is left in me, because of the great fear with which I have 6 been terrified this night. •Therefore I will now beseech the Most High that he may strengthen me to the end.”
 7 So I said, “O sovereign Lord, if I have found favor in your sight, and if I have

e. Syr.; Lat. “underwings.”

f. Syr.; Lat. “underwings.”

g. Syr., Ar., Arm.; Lat., Eth. “The fourth came, however, and conquered . . . and held sway . . .

and for so long dwelt.”

12 a. Eth.; Lat. omits “arose.”

been accounted righteous before you beyond many others, and if my prayer has 8 indeed come up before your face, •strengthen me and show me, your servant, the interpretation and meaning of this terrifying vision, that you may fully comfort my 9 soul. •For you have judged me worthy to be shown the end of the times and the last events of the time.’’

The interpretation of the vision

10 He said to me, ‘‘This is the interpretation of this vision which you have seen:
 11 The eagle which you saw coming up from the sea is the fourth kingdom^b which 12 appeared in a vision to your brother Daniel. •But it was not explained to him as 13 I now explain or have explained it to you. •Behold, the days are coming when a kingdom shall arise on earth, and it shall be more terrifying than all the kingdoms 14 that have been before it. •And twelve kings shall reign in it, one after another.
 15 But the second that is to reign shall hold sway for a longer time than any other 16,17 of the twelve. •This is the interpretation of the twelve wings which you saw. •As for your hearing a voice that spoke, coming not from the eagle’s^c heads but from 11:10 18 the midst of his body, this is the interpretation: •In the midst of^d the time of that kingdom great struggles shall arise, and it shall be in danger of falling; nevertheless 19 it shall not fall then, but shall regain its former power.^e •As for your seeing eight
 20 little wings^f clinging to his wings, this is the interpretation: •Eight kings shall arise 11:3,11 21 in it, whose times shall be short and their years swift; •and two of them shall perish when the middle of its time draws near; and four shall be kept for the time 22 when its end approaches; but two shall be kept until the end. •As for your seeing 23 three heads at rest, this is the interpretation: •In its last days the Most High will 11:30-52 raise up three kings,^g and they^h shall renew many things in it, and shall rule the 24 earth •and its inhabitants more oppressively than all who were before them; therefore 25 they are called the heads of the eagle. •For it is they who shall sum up his 26 wickedness and perform his last actions. •As for your seeing that the large head 27 disappeared, one of the kingsⁱ shall die in his bed, but in agonies. •But as for the 28 two who remained, the sword shall devour them. •For the sword of one shall devour him who was with him; but he also shall fall by the sword in the last days.
 29 As for your seeing two little wings^j passing over to^k the head which was on the 30 right side, •this is the interpretation: It is these whom the Most High has kept for the eagle’s^l end; this was the reign which was brief and full of tumult, as you have seen.
 31 ‘‘And as for the lion that you saw rousing up out of the forest and roaring and 11:37f.
 speaking to the eagle and reproving him for his unrighteousness, and as for all his 32 words that you have heard, •this is the Messiah^m whom the Most High has kept Dan 7:13-14 until the end of days, who will arise from the posterity of David, and will come IEn 48:6: 62:7 and speak to them;ⁿ he will denounce them for their ungodliness and for their 33 wickedness, and will cast up before them their contemptuous dealings. •For first he will set them living before his judgment seat, and when he has reproved them, 34 then he will destroy them. •But he will deliver in mercy the remnant of my people, those who have been saved throughout my borders, and he will make them joyful 7:2
 until the end comes, the day of judgment, of which I spoke to you at the beginning.
 35,36 This is the dream that you saw, and this is its interpretation. •And you alone were 11:1 37 worthy to learn this secret of the Most High. •Therefore write all these things that 38 you have seen in a book, and put it in a hidden place; •and you shall teach them to the wise among your people, whose hearts you know are able to comprehend

b. In Daniel’s vision (Dan 7:7) the fourth kingdom symbolized the Greek or Macedonian Empire; here it is reinterpreted (vs. 12) as the Roman Empire.

c. Lat. ‘‘his.’’

d. Syr., Arm.; Lat. ‘‘After.’’

e. Eth., Arab 1, Arm.; Lat., Syr. ‘‘beginning.’’

f. Syr.; Lat. ‘‘underwings.’’

g. Syr., Eth., Ar., Arm.; Lat. ‘‘kingdoms.’’

h. Syr., Eth., Arm.; Lat. ‘‘he.’’

i. Lat. ‘‘them.’’

j. Arab 1; Lat. ‘‘underwings.’’

k. Syr., Eth.; Lat. omits ‘‘to.’’

l. Lat. ‘‘his.’’

m. Lit. ‘‘anointed one.’’

n. Syr.; Lat. omits ‘‘of days . . . and speak.’’

39 and keep these secrets. •But wait here seven days more, so that you may be shown whatever it pleases the Most High to show you.” Then he left me.

Grief over Ezra’s absence

40 When all the people heard that the seven days were past and I had not returned to the city, they all gathered together, from the least to the greatest, and came to 41 me and spoke to me, saying, •“How have we offended you, and what harm have 42 we done you, that you have forsaken us and sit in this place? •For of all the prophets you alone are left to us, like a cluster of grapes from the vintage, and like
43 a lamp in a dark place, and like a haven for a ship saved from a storm. •Are not 44 the evils which have befallen us sufficient? •Therefore if you forsake us, how much better it would have been for us if we also had been consumed in the burning of 45 Zion! •For we are no better than those who died there.” And they wept with a loud voice.

2Pet 1:19

Ezra comforts his people

46 Then I answered them and said, •“Take courage, O Israel; and do not be 47 sorrowful, O house of Jacob; •for the Most High has you in remembrance, and 48 the Mighty One has not forgotten you in your struggle. •As for me, I have neither forsaken you nor withdrawn from you; but I have come to this place to pray on account of the desolation of Zion and to seek mercy on account of the humiliation
49 of our^o sanctuary. •Now go, every one of you to his house, and after these days
50.51 I will come to you.” •So the people went into the city, as I told them to do. •But I sat in the field seven days, as the angel^p had commanded me; and I ate only of the flowers of the field, and my food was of plants during those days.

THE SIXTH VISION

(The Man from the Sea)

1.2 13 After seven days I dreamed a dream in the night; •and behold, a wind arose
3 from the sea and stirred up all its waves. •And I looked, and behold, this wind made something like the figure of a man come up out of the heart of the sea. And I looked, and behold,^a that man flew^b with the clouds of heaven; and wherever he 4 turned his face to look, everything under his gaze trembled, •and whenever his voice issued from his mouth, all who heard his voice melted as wax melts^c when it feels the fire.

Micah 1:4
Jdt 16:15

5 After this I looked, and behold, an innumerable multitude of men were gathered together from the four winds of heaven to make war against the man who came 6 up out of the sea. •And I looked, and behold, he carved out for himself a great 7 mountain, and flew up upon it. •And I tried to see the region or place from which the mountain was carved, but I could not.

Dan 2:4

8 After this I looked, and behold, all who had gathered together against him, to 9 wage war with him, were much afraid, yet dared to fight. •And behold, when he saw the onrush of the approaching multitude, he neither lifted his hand nor held
10 a spear or any weapon of war; •but I saw only how he sent forth from his mouth as it were a stream of fire, and from his lips a flaming breath, and from his tongue
11 he shot forth a storm of sparks.^d •All these were mingled together, the stream of fire and the flaming breath and the great storm, and fell on the onrushing multitude which was prepared to fight, and burned them all up, so that suddenly nothing was

Isa 11:4

o. Syr., Eth.; Lat. “your.”
p. Lit. “he.”

hold.”

b. Syr., Eth., Ar., Arm.; Lat. “grew strong.”

c. Syr.; Lat. “burned as the earth rests.”

d. The text is uncertain.

13 a. Syr.; Lat. omits “this wind . . . and be-seen of the innumerable multitude but only the dust of ashes and the smell of smoke. When I saw it, I was amazed.

12 After this I saw the same man come down from the mountain and call to him 13 another multitude which was peaceable. •Then many people^e came to him, some of whom were joyful and some sorrowful; some of them were bound, and some were bringing others as offerings.

Request for interpretation of the vision

14 Then in great fear I awoke; and I besought the Most High, and said, •“From the beginning you have shown your servant these wonders, and have deemed me 15 worthy to have my prayer heard by you; •now show me also the interpretation of this dream. •For as I consider it in my mind, woe to those who will survive in 17 those days! And still more, woe to those who do not survive! •For those who do not survive will be sorrowful, •because they understand what is in store for the 19 last days, but not attaining it. •But woe also to those who do survive, for this reason—they shall see great dangers and much distress, as these dreams show.
20 Yet it is better^f to come into these things,^g though incurring peril, than to pass from the world like a cloud, and not to see what shall happen in the last days.”

The interpretation of the vision

21 He answered me and said, •“I will tell you the interpretation of the vision, and 22 I will also explain to you the things which you have mentioned. •As for what you 23 said about those who are left,^h this is the interpretation: •He who brings the peril at that time will himself protect those who fall into peril, who have works and 24 have faith in the Almighty. •Understand therefore that those who are left are more 25 blessed than those who have died. •This is the interpretation of the vision: As for 26 your seeing a man come up from the heart of the sea, •this is he whom the Most High has been keeping for many ages, who will himself deliver his creation; and 27 he will direct those who are left. •And as for your seeing wind and fire and a storm 28 coming out of his mouth, •and as for his not holding spear or weapon of war, yet destroying the onrushing multitude which came to conquer him, this is the inter-29 pretation: •Behold, the days are coming when the Most High will deliver those 30 who are on the earth. •And bewilderment of mind shall come over those who 31 dwell on the earth. •And they shall plan to make war against one another, city against city, place against place, people against people, and kingdom against 32 kingdom. •And when these things come to pass and the signs occur which I showed you before, then my son will be revealed, whom you saw as a man coming up 33 from the sea.ⁱ •And when all the nations hear his voice, every man shall leave his 34 own land and the warfare that they have against one another; •and an innumerable multitude shall be gathered together, as you saw, desiring to come and conquer 35.36 him. •But he will stand on the top of Mount Zion. •And Zion will come and be made manifest to all people, prepared and built, as you saw the mountain carved 37 out without hands. •And he, my Son, will reprove the assembled nations for their 38 ungodliness (this was symbolized by the storm), •and will reproach them to their face with their evil thoughts and with the torments with which they are to be tortured (which were symbolized by the flames); and he will destroy them without 39 effort by the law^j (which was symbolized by the fire). •And as for your seeing him 40 gather to himself another multitude that was peaceable, •these are the ten tribes which were led away from their own land into captivity in the days of King Hoshea, 2Kgs 17:1-6 whom Shalmaneser the king of the Assyrians led captive; he took them across the 41 river, and they were taken into another land. •But they formed this plan for

Isa 19:2
Mt 24:7

Rev 16:16;
19:19

Dan 2:34,45

e. Lat., Syr., Arab 2 lit. “the faces of many people.”

f. Eth.; cf. Arab 2; Lat. “easier.”

g. Syr.; Lat. “this.”

h. Syr., Arab 1 add “and of those that do not survive.”

i. Syr. and most Lat. MSS omit “from the sea.”

j. Syr.; Lat. “and the law.”

themselves, that they would leave the multitude of the nations and go to a more 42 distant region, where mankind had never lived, •that there at least they might keep 43 their statutes which they had not kept in their own land. •And they went in by the 44 narrow passages of the Euphrates River. •For at that time the Most High performed Josh 3:14-16 signs for them, and stopped the channels of the river until they had passed over.
 45 Through that region there was a long way to go, a journey of a year and a half;
 and that country is called Arzareth.^k

46 “Then they dwelt there until the last times; and now, when they are about to 47 come again, •the Most High will stop^l the channels of the river again, so that they Isa 11:15f.
 may be able to pass over. Therefore you saw the multitude gathered together in 48 peace. •But those who are left of your people, who are found within my holy 49 borders, shall be saved.”^m •Therefore when he destroys the multitude of the nations 50 that are gathered together, he will defend the people who remain. •And then he will show them very many wonders.”

51 I said, “O sovereign Lord, explain this to me: Why did I see the man coming up from the heart of the sea?”

52 He said to me, “Just as no one can explore or know what is in the depths of the sea, so no one on earth can see my Son or those who are with him, except in 53 the time of his day.” •This is the interpretation of the dream which you saw. And 54 you alone have been enlightened about this, •because you have forsaken your own 55 ways and have applied yourself to mine, and have searched out my law; •for you 56 have devoted your life to wisdom, and called understanding your mother. •Therefore I have shown you this, for there is a reward laid up with the Most High. And after three more days I will tell you other things, and explain weighty and wondrous matters to you.”

57 Then I arose and walked in the field, giving great glory and praise to the Most 58 High because of his wonders, which he did from time to time, •and because he governs the times and whatever things come to pass in their seasons. And I stayed there three days.

THE SEVENTH VISION

The Lord commissions Ezra

1 14 On the third day, while I was sitting under an oak, behold, a voice came out
 2 of a bush opposite me and said, “Ezra, Ezra.” •And I said, “Here I am, Lord,” Ex 3:4
 3 and I rose to my feet. •Then he said to me, “I revealed myself in a bush and spoke 4 to Moses when my people were in bondage in Egypt; •and I sent him and led^a my people out of Egypt; and I led him up on Mount Sinai, where I kept him with me 5 many days; •and I told him many wondrous things, and showed him the secrets of the times and declared to him^b the end of the times. Then I commanded him, 6 saying, •“These words you shall publish openly, and these you shall keep secret.”
 7,8 And now I say to you: •Lay up in your heart the signs that I have shown you, 9 the dreams that you have seen, and the interpretations that you have heard; •for you shall be taken up from among men, and henceforth you shall live with my Son 10 and with those who are like you, until the times are ended. •For the age has lost 5:50-55
 11 its youth, and the times begin to grow old. •For the age is divided into twelve 12 parts, and nine^c of its parts have already passed, •as well as half of the tenth part; 13 so two of its parts remain, besides half of the tenth part.^d •Now therefore, set your

k. Heb. for “another land.”

l. Syr.; Lat. “stops.”

m. Syr.; Lat. omits “shall be saved.”

n. Syr.; Eth. “except when his time and his day have come”; Lat. omits “his.”

b. Syr., Eth., Ar., Arm.; Lat. omits “declared to him.”

c. Bensly’s correction. Lat., Eth. “ten.”

d. Syr. omits vss. 11, 12; Eth. “For the world is divided into ten parts, and has come to the tenth, and half of the tenth remains. Now . . .”

14 a. Other authorities read “he led.”

house in order, and reprove your people; comfort the lowly among them, and 14 instruct those that are wise.^e And now renounce the life that is corruptible •and put away from you mortal thoughts; cast away from you the burdens of man, and 15 divest yourself now of your weak nature, •and lay to one side the thoughts that 2Cor 5:4
 16 are most grievous to you, and hasten to escape from these times. •For evils worse 17 than those which you have now seen happen shall be done hereafter. •For the weaker the world becomes through old age, the more shall evils be multiplied 18 among^f its inhabitants. •For truth shall go farther away, and falsehood shall come near. For the eagle^g which you saw in the vision is already hastening to come.” 11:1f.

Ezra's prayer for inspiration to restore the Scriptures

19,20 Then I answered and said, “Let me speak in your presence, Lord.^h •For behold, I will go, as you have commanded me, and I will reprove the people who are now living; but who will warn those who will be born hereafter? For the world lies in 21 darkness, and its inhabitants are without light. •For your Law has been burned, and so no one knows the things which have been done or will be done by you.
 22 If then I have found favor before you, send the Holy Spirit to me, and I will write everything that has happened in the world from the beginning, the things which were written in your Law, that men may be able to find the path, and that those who wish to live in the last days may live.” 23 He answered me and said, “Go and gather the people, and tell them not to seek 24 you for forty days. •But prepare for yourself many writing tablets, and take with Ex 24:18; 34:28 you Sarea, Dabria, Selemia, Ethanus, and Asiel—these five, because they are 25 trained to write rapidly; •and you shall come here, and I will light in your heart the lamp of understanding, which shall not be put out until what you are about to 26 write is finished. •And when you have finished, some things you shall make public, and some you shall deliver in secret to the wise; tomorrow at this hour you shall begin to write.”

Ezra's address to the people

27 Then I went as he commanded me, and I gathered all the people together, and 28,29 said, “Hear these words, O Israel. •At first our fathers dwelt as aliens in Egypt, 30 and they were delivered from there, •and received the Law of life, which they did 31 not keep, which you also have transgressed after them. •Then land was given to you for a possession in the land of Zion; but you and your fathers committed 32 iniquity and did not keep the ways which the Most High commanded you. •And because he is a righteous judge, in due time he took from you what he had given.
 33,34 And now you are here, and your brethren are farther in the interior.ⁱ •If you, then, 13:45 will rule over your minds and discipline your hearts, you shall be kept alive, and 35 after death you shall obtain mercy. •For after death the judgment will come, when we shall live again; and then the names of the righteous will become manifest, and 36 the deeds of the ungodly will be disclosed. •But let no one seek me for forty days.”

Ezra's experience in the field

37 So I took the five men, as he commanded me, and we proceeded to the field, 38 and remained there. •And on the next day, behold, a voice called me, saying, 39 “Ezra, open your mouth and drink what I give you to drink.” •Then I opened my mouth, and behold, a full cup was offered to me; it was full of something like 40 water, but its color was like fire. •And I took it and drank; and when I had drunk it, my heart poured forth understanding, and wisdom increased in my breast, for

e. Lat. omits “and . . . wise.”

f. Lit. “upon.”

g. Syr., Eth., Ar., Arm.; Lat. is corrupt.

h. Most Lat. MSS omit “Let me speak.”

i. Syr., Eth., Arm.; Lat. “are among you.”

41 my spirit retained its memory; •and my mouth was opened, and was no longer 42 closed. •And the Most High gave understanding to the five men, and by turns they wrote what was dictated, in characters^j which they did not know.^k They sat forty 43 days, and wrote during the daytime, and ate their bread at night. •As for me, I 44 spoke in the daytime and was not silent at night. •So during the forty days ninety-45 four^l books were written. •And when the forty days were ended, the Most High spoke to me, saying, “Make public the twenty-four^m booksⁿ that you wrote first 46 and let the worthy and the unworthy read them; •but keep the seventy^o that were 47 written last, in order to give them to the wise among your people. •For in them is the spring of understanding, the fountain of wisdom, and the river of knowledge.”
 48 And I did so.^p

AN APPENDIX

1 15^a The Lord says, “Behold, speak in the ears of my people the words of the 2 prophecy which I will put in your mouth, •and cause them to be written on paper; Isa 51:16
 3 for they are trustworthy and true. •Do not fear the plots against you, and do not Jer 1:9 4 be troubled by the unbelief of those who oppose you. •For every unbeliever shall die in his unbelief.”

God’s vengeance upon the wicked

5 “Behold,” says the Lord, “I bring evils upon the world, the sword and famine 6 and death and destruction. •For iniquity has spread throughout every land, and 7 their harmful deeds have reached their limit. •Therefore,” says the Lord, •“I will be silent no longer concerning their ungodly deeds which they impiously commit, neither will I tolerate their wicked practices. Behold, innocent and righteous blood 9 cries out to me, and the souls of the righteous cry out continually. •I will surely avenge them,” says the Lord, “and will receive to myself all the innocent blood 10 from among them. •Behold, my people is led like a flock to the slaughter; I will Ps 44:22
 11 not allow them to live any longer in the land of Egypt, •but I will bring them out Isa 53:7
 with a mighty hand and with an uplifted arm, and will smite Egypt^b with plagues, as before, and will destroy all its land.”

Denunciation against oppression of Israel

12 Let Egypt mourn, and its foundations, for the plague of chastisement and 13 punishment that the Lord will bring upon it. •Let the farmers that till the ground mourn, because their seed shall fail and their trees shall be ruined by blight and 14 hail and by a terrible tempest. •Alas for the world and for those who live in it!
 15 For the sword and misery draw near them, and nation shall rise up to fight against Mt 24:7
 16 nation, with swords in their hands. •For there shall be unrest among men; growing Mk 13:8
Lk 21:10

j. I.e. in a new script, the Aram. (square) characters.

k. Syr.; cf. Eth., Arab 2, Arm.; Lat. is corrupt.

l. Syr., Eth., Arab 1, Arm.; Lat. is corrupt.

m. Syr., Arab 1; Lat. omits “twenty-four.”

n. I.e. the books of the Hebrew canon, comprising the five books of the Law (Gen. Ex, Lev, Num, Deut), eight books of the Prophets (the former prophets, Josh, Judg, 1 and 2Sam [as one book], 1 and 2Kgs [as one book]; the latter prophets, Isa, Jer, Ezek, and the Twelve [counted as one book]), and eleven books of the Writings (Pss, Prov, Job, Song, Ruth, Lam, Eccl, Esth, Dan, Ezra-Neh [as one book], 1 and 2Chr [as one book]).

o. I.e. esoteric, apocalyptic books.

p. Syr. adds “in the seventh year of the sixth week, five thousand years and three months and twelve days after creation.

“At that time Ezra was caught up, and taken to the place of those who are like him, after he had written all these things. And he was called the Scribe of the knowledge of the Most High for ever and ever.” Eth., Arab 1, Arm. have a similar ending.

15 a. Chs. 15 and 16 (except 15:57–59, which has been found in Gk.) are extant only in Lat.

b. Perhaps an allusion to the occurrence during the reign of Gaius (A.D. 260–68) of a terrible famine, followed by a plague, which killed two thirds of the population of Alexandria.

strong against one another, they shall in their might have no respect for their king 17 or the chief of their leaders. •For a man will desire to go into a city, and shall not 18 be able. •For because of their pride the cities shall be in confusion, the houses Lk 21:26 19 shall be destroyed, and people shall be afraid. •A man shall have no pity upon his neighbors, but shall make an assault upon their houses with the sword, and plunder their goods, because of hunger for bread and because of great tribulation.

Denunciation against sinners

20 “Behold,” says God, “I call together all the kings of the earth to fear me, from the rising sun and from the south, from the east and from Lebanon; to turn and 21 repay what they have given them. •Just as they have done to my chosen people until this day, so I will do, and will repay into their bosom.” Thus says the Lord 22 God: •“My right hand will not spare the sinners, and my sword will not cease 23 from those who shed innocent blood on the earth.” •And a fire will go forth from his wrath, and will consume the foundations of the earth, and the sinners, like 24 straw that is kindled. •“Woe to those who sin and do not observe my command-25 ments,” says the Lord; •“I will not spare them. Depart, you faithless children!
 26 Do not pollute my sanctuary.” •For the Lord knows all who transgress against 27 him; therefore he will hand them over to death and slaughter. •For now calamities have come upon the whole earth, and you shall remain in them; for God will not deliver you, because you have sinned against him.

A vision of terrifying warfare

28.29 Behold, a terrifying sight, appearing from the east! •The nations of the dragons of Arabia shall come out with many chariots, and from the day that they set out, their hissing shall spread over the earth, so that all who hear them fear and tremble.
 30 Also the Carmonians,^c raging in wrath, shall go forth like wild boars of the forest, Ps 80:13 and with great power they shall come, and engage them in battle, and shall devastate 31 a portion of the land of the Assyrians with their teeth. •And then the dragons, remembering their origin, shall become still stronger; and if they combine in great 32 power and turn to pursue them, •then these shall be disorganized and silenced by 33 their power, and shall turn and flee. •And from the land of the Assyrians an enemy in ambush shall beset them and destroy one of them, and fear and trembling shall come upon their army, and indecision upon their kings.

Ominous storm clouds

34 Behold, clouds from the east, and from the north to the south; and their appearance 35 is very threatening, full of wrath and storm. •They shall dash against one another and shall pour out a heavy tempest upon the earth, and their own tempest; and 36 there shall be blood from the sword as high as a horse’s belly •and a man’s thigh Rev 14:20 37 and a camel’s hock. •And there shall be fear and great trembling upon the earth; and those who see that wrath shall be horror-stricken, and they shall be seized with 38 trembling. •And, after that, heavy storm clouds shall be stirred up from the south, 39 and from the north, and another part from the west. •And the winds from the east shall prevail over the cloud that was^d raised in wrath, and shall dispel it; and the tempest that was to cause destruction by the east wind shall be driven violently 40 toward the south and west. •And great and mighty clouds, full of wrath and tempest, shall rise, to destroy all the earth and its inhabitants, and shall pour out 41 upon every high and lofty place^e a terrible tempest, •fire and hail and flying swords and floods of water, that all the fields and all the streams may be filled with the 42 abundance of those waters. •And they shall destroy cities and walls, mountains

c. Carmania (Kirman) was the northern province of the Parthian Empire.

d. Lit. “that he.”

e. Or “eminent person.”

43 and hills, trees of the forests, and grass of the meadows, and their grain. •And 44 they shall go on steadily to Babylon,^f and shall destroy her. •They shall come to her and surround her; they shall pour out the tempest and all its wrath upon her;
 then the dust and smoke shall go up to heaven, and all who are about her shall wail 45 over her. •And those who survive shall serve those who have destroyed her.

Asia has become like Babylon

46 And you, O Asia, who share in the glamour of Babylon and the glory of her 47 person—woe to you, miserable wretch! For you have made yourself like her; you Rev 14:8; 17:4f.
 have decked out your daughters in harlotry to please and glory in your lovers, who 48 have always lusted after you. •You have imitated that hateful harlot in all her 49 deeds and devices; therefore God says, •“I will send evils upon you, widowhood, poverty, famine, sword, and pestilence, to lay waste your houses and bring you Rev 17:7f.
 50 to destruction and death. •And the glory of your power shall wither like a flower, 51 when the heat rises that is sent upon you. •You shall be weakened like a wretched woman who is beaten and wounded, so that you cannot receive your mighty lovers.
 52,53 Would I have dealt with you so violently,” says the Lord, •“if you had not always killed my chosen people, exulting and clapping your hands and talking about their 54,55 death when you were drunk? •Trick out the beauty of your face! •The reward of 56 a harlot is in your bosom, therefore you shall receive your recompense. •As you will do to my chosen people,” says the Lord, “so God will do to you, and will 57 hand you over to adversities. •Your children shall die of hunger, and you shall fall by the sword, and your cities shall be wiped out, and all your people who are in 58 the open country shall fall by the sword. •And those who are in the mountains and highlands^g shall perish of hunger, and they shall eat their own flesh in hunger for 59 bread and drink their own blood in thirst for water. •Unhappy above all others, 60 you shall come and suffer fresh afflictions. •And as they pass they shall wreck the hateful^h city, and shall destroy a part of your land and abolish a portion of your 61 glory, as they return from devastated Babylon. •And you shall be broken down 62 by them like stubble, and they shall be like fire to you. •And they shall devour you and your cities, your land and your mountains; they shall burn with fire all 63 your forests and your fruitful trees. •They shall carry your children away captive, and shall plunder your wealth, and abolish the glory of your countenance.”

Denunciation of Babylon, Asia, Egypt, and Syria

1.2 16 Woe to you, Babylon^a and Asia! Woe to you, Egypt and Syria! •Gird yourselves with sackcloth and haircloth, and wail for your children, and lament for them; for 3 your destruction is at hand. •The sword has been sent upon you, and who is there
 4 to turn it back? •A fire has been sent upon you, and who is there to quench it?
 5,6 Calamities have been sent upon you, and who is there to drive them away? •Can one drive off a hungry lion in the forest, or quench a fire in the stubble, when once 7,8 it has begun to burn? •Can one turn back an arrow shot by a strong archer? •The 9 Lord God sends calamities, and who will drive them away? •Fire will go forth 10 from his wrath, and who is there to quench it? •He will flash lightning, and who 11 will not be afraid? He will thunder, and who will not be terrified? •The Lord will 12 threaten, and who will not be utterly shattered at his presence? •The earth and its Ps 18:15 foundations quake, the sea is churned up from the depths, and its waves and the fish also shall be troubled at the presence of the Lord and before the glory of his 13 power. •For his right hand that bends the bow is strong, and his arrows that he shoots are sharp and will not miss when they begin to be shot to the ends of the 14 world. •Behold, calamities are sent forth and shall not return until they come over

f. I.e. Rome.

g. Gk.; Lat. omits “and highlands.”

h. Another reading is “idle” or “unprofitable.”

16 a. I.e. Rome.

15 the earth. •The fire is kindled, and shall not be put out until it consumes the 16 foundations of the earth. •Just as an arrow shot by a mighty archer does not return, 17 so the calamities that are sent upon the earth shall not return. •Alas for me! Who will deliver me in those days?

The beginning of calamities

18 The beginning of sorrows, when there shall be much lamentation; the beginning of famine, when many shall perish; the beginning of wars, when the powers shall be terrified; the beginning of calamities, when all shall tremble. What shall they 19 do in these circumstances, when the calamities come? •Behold, famine and plague, 20 tribulation and anguish are sent as scourges for the correction of men. •Yet for all this they will not turn from their iniquities, nor be always mindful of the scourges.
 21 Behold, provisions will be so cheap upon earth that men will imagine that peace is assured for them, and then the calamities shall spring up on the earth—the sword, 22 famine, and great confusion. •For many of those who live on the earth shall perish 23 by famine; and those who survive the famine shall die by the sword. •And the dead shall be cast out like dung, and there shall be no one to console them; for 24 the earth shall be left desolate, and its cities shall be demolished. •No one shall 25 be left to cultivate the earth or to sow it. •The trees shall bear fruit, and who will 26 gather it? •The grapes shall ripen, and who will tread them? For in all places there 27 shall be great solitude; •one man will long to see another, or even to hear his 28 voice. •For out of a city, ten shall be left; and out of the field, two who have 29 hidden themselves in thick groves and clefts in the rocks. •As in an olive orchard 30 three or four olives may be left on every tree, •or as when a vineyard is gathered some clusters may be left by those who search carefully through the vineyard, 31 so in those days three or four shall be left by those who search their houses with 32 the sword. •And the earth shall be left desolate, and its fields shall be for briers, and its roads and all its paths shall bring forth thorns, because no sheep will go 33 along them. •Virgins shall mourn because they have no bridegrooms; women shall mourn because they have no husbands; their daughters shall mourn because they 34 have no helpers. •Their bridegrooms shall be killed in war, and their husbands shall perish of famine.

Isa 17:6

Warnings of impending disasters

35 Listen now to these things, and understand them, O servants of the Lord.
 36 Behold the word of the Lord, receive it; do not disbelieve what the Lord says.^b 37.38 Behold, the calamities draw near, and are not delayed. •Just as a woman with child, in the ninth month, when the time of her delivery draws near, has great pains about her womb for two or three hours beforehand, and when the child comes 39 forth from the womb, there will not be a moment's delay, •so the calamities will not delay in coming forth upon the earth, and the world will groan, and pains will seize it on every side.
 40 "Hear my words, O my people; prepare for battle, and in the midst of the 41 calamities be like strangers on the earth. •Let him that sells be like one who will 42 flee; let him that buys be like one who will lose; •let him that does business be like one who will not make a profit; and let him that builds a house be like one 43 who will not live in it; •let him that sows be like one who will not reap; so also 44 him that prunes the vines, like one who will not gather the grapes; •them that marry, like those who will have no children; and them that do not marry, like 45.46 those that are widowed. •Because those who labor, labor in vain; •for strangers shall gather their fruits, and plunder their goods, and overthrow their houses, and take their children captive; for in captivity and famine they will beget their children.

4:40

1Cor 7:29-31

b. Bensly's correction. Lat. "do not believe the gods of whom the Lord speaks."

c. Lit. "he."

d. Lit. "consent to them shall be for these in."

e. The Lat. is uncertain.

f. Another reading is "seed."

47 Those who conduct business do it only to be plundered; the more they adorn their 48 cities, their houses and possessions, and their persons, •the more angry I will be 49 with them for their sins,” says the Lord. •Just as a respectable and virtuous woman 50 abhors a harlot, •so righteousness shall abhor iniquity, when she decks herself out, and shall accuse her to her face, when he comes who will defend him who searches out every sin on earth.

The power and wisdom of God

51,52 Therefore do not be like her or her works. •For behold, just a little while, and 53 iniquity will be removed from the earth, and righteousness will reign over us. •Let no sinner say that he has not sinned; for God^c will burn coals of fire on the head 54 of him who says, “I have not sinned before God and his glory.” •Behold, the Lord knows all the works of men, their imaginations and their thoughts and their 55 hearts. •He said, “Let the earth be made,” and it was made; “Let the heaven be 56 made,” and it was made. •At his word the stars were fixed, and he knows the 57 number of the stars. •It is he who searches the deep and its treasures, who has 58 measured the sea and its contents; •who has enclosed the sea in the midst of the 59 waters, and by his word has suspended the earth over the water; •who has spread 60 out the heaven like an arch, and founded it upon the waters; •who has put springs of water in the desert, and pools on the tops of the mountains, to send rivers from 61 the heights to water the earth; •who formed man, and put a heart in the midst of 62 his body, and gave him breath and life and understanding •and the spirit of Almighty 63 God; who made all things and searches out hidden things in hidden places. •Surely he knows your imaginations and what you think in your hearts! Woe to those who 64 sin and want to hide their sins! •Because the Lord will strictly examine all their 65 works, and will make a public spectacle of all of you. •And when your sins come out before men, you shall be put to shame; and your own iniquities shall stand as 66 your accusers in that day. •What will you do? Or how will you hide your sins 67 before God and his angels? •Behold, God is the judge, fear him! Cease from your sins, and forget your iniquities, never to commit them again; so God will lead you forth and deliver you from all tribulation.

Impending persecution of the chosen people

68 For behold, the burning wrath of a great multitude is kindled over you, and they 69 shall carry off some of you and shall feed you what was sacrificed to idols. •And those who consent to eat shall be held in^d derision and contempt, and be trodden 70 under foot. •For in many places^e and in neighboring cities there shall be a great 71 insurrection against those who fear the Lord. •They shall be like madmen, sparing 72 no one, but plundering and destroying those who continue to fear the Lord. •For they shall destroy and plunder their goods, and drive them out of their houses.
 73 Then the tested quality of my chosen people shall be manifest, as gold that is tested by fire.

Zech 13:9
 1Pet 1:7

Promise of divine deliverance

74 “Hear, my chosen people,” says the Lord. “Behold, the days of tribulation are 75 at hand, and I will deliver you from them. •Do not fear or doubt, for God is your 76 guide. •You who keep my commandments and precepts,” says the Lord God, 77 “do not let your sins pull you down, or your iniquities prevail over you.” •Woe to those who are choked by their sins and overwhelmed by their iniquities, as a field is choked with underbrush and its path^f overwhelmed with thorns, so that no 78 one can pass through! •It is shut off and given up to be consumed by fire.

GREEK APOCALYPSE OF EZRA

(Second to Ninth Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY M. E. STONE

The Greek Apocalypse of Ezra contains the visions received by Ezra, who had fasted and prayed to have the mysteries of God revealed to him. His prayer is answered; and he is taken up into heaven, where he intercedes for the sinners whom he sees being punished. God replies that he rewards the righteous for their righteousness (1). Ezra once again prays, expressing deep questions about the righteousness of the world and the punishment of sinners. Angels appear to him and he again prays for the sinners. Adam's sin, he is told, was due to Satan, but Ezra observes that "If you had not given him Eve, the serpent would never have deceived her" (2:16). Ezra again remonstrates with God, requesting mercy for mankind (2:18–25). He asks for a vision of the day of judgment; it is granted (2:26–3:7). The signs of the approaching end, particularly internecine strife, are set before him.

In chapter 4, Ezra is led down into Tartarus. He sees Herod being punished; then he descends to the bottom of hell. There he sees various sorts of sinners being punished as befits their crimes. Next, he sees the Antichrist; his appearance and his signs are described. Subsequently, he sees further cases of punishments and is taken to heaven (5:1–7). The wonders of the development of the fetus are set forth before him, emphasizing Ezra's doubts about the creation of man (5:12–14). He then sees the saints in heaven, certain cosmological secrets, and some details of the judgment. The final part of the writing contains an account of Ezra's struggle with the angel for his own soul, a description of God's comfort to him as death approaches, his concluding prayer, and the narrative of his death and burial. The whole concludes with a doxology (chs. 6 and 7).

Text

The writing was first published in 1866 by C. Tischendorf from a fifteenth-century Greek manuscript preserved in Paris (Cod. Par. Graec. 929), although scholars earlier had noted its existence.¹ It has been translated into English and German.² There doubtless exist a number of other manuscripts, and at least one further has already been noted.³ The text of the manuscript upon which Tischendorf based his edition also serves as the base of the present translation. The manuscript, unfortunately, is both faulty and corrupt at a number of points. Tischendorf suggested numerous emendations, most of which have been accepted herein. In a number of cases additional emendations have been suggested. Sometimes his suggestions have been rejected, changed, or modified (the more significant of these are placed in the notes to the translation).⁴ The Greek language of the writing is late in character. It is notable for a number of anomalous forms and usages: among them, kolasasthai, "condemn," in 1:11; anapausōmai, "I shall give rest," and kathestēka, "I am," in 1:12;

¹ C. von Tischendorf, Apocalypses Apocryphae, pp. 24–33. On earlier scholars, see his Introduction, pp. xii–xiv.

² A. Walker, "The Revelation of Esdras," ANF, vol. 8, pp. 571–74. P. Riessler, pp. 126–37 and brief nn. on p. 1273.

³ Cod. Par. Graec. 390, 16th cent., noted by A.-M. Denis, Introduction, p. 92. Denis's chapter on this work is the only attempt at a study of the apocalypse and contains much valuable information; see his Introduction, pp. 91–96.

⁴ These will be published by M. E. Stone in "The Metamorphosis of Ezra: Jewish Apocalypse and Mediaeval Vision," JTS N.S. 33 (1982) 17f.

dikazesthai en, "presses suit against," in 2:6; pisteuei, "let him believe," in 4:11; and apheis, "you permit," in 4:34. The Greek style is inelegant and the single published manuscript often unclear or clumsy. The English translation, in such cases, is inevitably somewhat rough; efforts have been made to make it as clear as possible within the limits of faithfulness to the text. Such cases are particularly prominent in 2:16 and 3:11.

Composition

The Greek Apocalypse of Ezra as extant is a Christian composition in which a series of sources, Jewish and Christian, have been utilized.⁵ The whole has been put together in a somewhat crude fashion and the writing is characterized by literary unevenness and inconsistency, repetitions, and a measure of incoherence. Many of these features are discussed in the following paragraphs, others are pointed out in the notes. The corrupt state of the Paris manuscript makes it possible that amelioration of the text by recourse to a broader range of witnesses might obviate some clumsy passages. Yet their abundance makes it unlikely that they are all the result of textual corruption. Furthermore, the careless nature of the final editor has on occasion resulted in a strange or fanciful utilization of a source which has led to an absurdity or at least a measure of the bizarre. For example, in 1:5, Ezra is said to fast for 120 weeks, a somewhat excessive period based on the seven one-week fasts in 4 Ezra. Other examples are found in the commentary.

A study of the apocalypse enables the attentive reader to recover certain stages of the editor's work. It is best to start from the descriptions of heaven and Tartarus in chapters 4-5. In 4:5, very abruptly, Ezra asks to be shown "the lower parts of Tartarus." He descends, with angels, and sees Herod (9-12), a fiery place of punishment (13-14), the disobedient (16-18), the unsleeping worm and consuming fire (20). By now he has reached the foundation of hell and is led to the south. He sees first "hanging" punishment there (22-24) and is then led to the north, where he sees the Antichrist, who is described in detail (25-33). In this connection a prophecy about the end-time is pronounced and its explanation given (35-43). Then, bracketed by two prayers for pity (5:1, 6), follows one more "hanging" punishment and a description of the terrors of hell (5: 2-4). The seer is then returned to heaven (5:7), where he sees many punishments and gives vent to his feeling of the futility of the birth of man (8-11). The wonders of conception and birth and their purpose are described (12-14).

So far, at least on the face of it, the narrative is moderately coherent; 5:1-6, however, is a section that does not fit in its present position but would better follow 4:22-24. In 5:20-28 confusion reigns. In 5:20, Ezra asks to see punishments and Paradise. He is taken to the east (21) and sees Paradise and the righteous, some meteorological phenomena, and "eternal punishments." Then, in 5:27, he is apparently back in Tartarus for he sees a "hanging" punishment and is led "further down into Tartarus," where he sees the sinners mourning (5:24-28).

This confusion is the result of the combination of diverse sources. The first source describes a descent into Tartarus (4:5-21); the seer descends to the lowest level of Tartarus, called apōleia, "destruction." This section is straightforward and self-contained. The remaining types of material occurring here are also found combined in other apocalypses.⁶ These are (1) the descriptions of the "hanging" punishments; (2) the physiognomy of the Antichrist;⁷ and (3) the description of Paradise. These may have originally been represented by the following fragments: (1) "hanging" punishments: 4:22-25; 5:2-4 (5-7?), 8-11, 24-25 (26?); (2) Antichrist and prophecy about the end-time: 4:25-43; and (3) Paradise: 5:20-23. Fragment 1 in particular was broken up and combined by redactional links with the first source but, like fragments 2 and 3, it is of an indubitably ancient character. It is this redactional work that has caused the various inconsistencies in the text. This analysis finds considerable support from an examination of the Vision of Ezra, which contains another form of the "hanging" punishments, Tartarus, and Paradise material found in the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra. A comparison of the two writings clearly indicates that they shared common sources but each used them differently.

⁵ The problem of definition of Jewish and Christian materials in such works as this is referred to by R. A. Kraft, "The Multiform Jewish Heritage of Early Christianity," Christianity, Judaism and Other Graeco-Roman Cults, ed. J. Neusner (Leiden, 1975) pp. 174-99, particularly pp. 184-87.

⁶ The best examples are to be found in the fragmentary Elijah apocryphon; see M. E. Stone and J. Strugnell, The Books of Elijah: Parts 1-2 (T&T 18, Pseudepigrapha No. 8; Missoula, Mont., 1979).

⁷ See further discussion, "Theological importance."

It may be observed further that 5:7–11 fits very well with 1:7f. A difficulty of the latter passage is that it refers to the “first heaven,” where no more follow, while its references to “judgments” and to the voices of the wicked imploring Ezra’s intercession are nicely complemented by 5:9–11 in which the sinners tell Ezra that “since you came here . . . we have obtained a slight respite.” Both passages are typified by the seer’s exclamation “It were better that man was not born . . .” (1:6; 5:8). Observe also that 1:9, Ezra’s prayer on behalf of the sinners, is still in the first person with which the book opens. Ezra’s speech is introduced in 1:10 and follows immediately upon his prayer in 1:9; but it is in the third person: “And Ezra said.” Again a clear sign of the literary “seam” can be discerned.⁸

A final observation in this connection is that 3:11–15 may be an originally independent piece of text as is indicated by the two second plural verbs found only there in the book.⁹

Original language

It follows from the above that the writing was composed in Greek. Riessler suggested that the supposed Jewish source was written in Hebrew. His chief examples adduced to support this view are as follows: 1:20 contains a corruption of a hypothetical mdr to gdr; in 2:12 a supposed barah, “to eat” was confused with bara, “to do”; in 4:21, apōleia, supposedly from Hebrew sht, was misinterpreted in context; it should mean “grave”; in 5:23, kolasis is a mistranslation of pqwdh. All these examples are unlikely, unnecessary, or unconvincing. Most scholars correctly contend that the writing as extant is Christian and was originally written in Greek.¹⁰

Date and provenance

The dependence of the writing on (presumably the Greek version of) 4 Ezra and its Christian character indicate a date sometime in the first millennium. If James is correct and this is the writing referred to in the Canon of Nicephorus (c. A.D. 850), then a date sometime between A.D. 150 and 850 is probable. Its provenance cannot be discerned.¹¹

Historical importance and literary implications

This writing clearly conveys no historical information in the ordinary sense of the word. In the broader context of Byzantine apocalyptic writing, it is an important witness of the way in which older Jewish apocalyptic traditions were taken over and reused by the Church. It may be appropriate in this context to observe that there are a number of other Christian compositions connected with this writing. One is the Armenian Questions of Ezra and another is most probably the Apocalypse of Sedrach (see the contribution herein). Other Ezra writings exist in Syriac, Ethiopic, Latin, and Greek.

1. Syriac Apocalypse of Ezra. It includes a vision of Four Empires, an account of the Antichrist, and other material.¹²

2. Ethiopic Apocalypse of Ezra. This Falasha work preserves details of judgment, historical prediction, and related legends. It is clearly dependent upon 4 Ezra and Jubilees. If the latter part is original, it was composed in Ethiopic. It does not belong to the cycle of Ezra books

⁸ It should be observed that the vacillation between first- and third-person narrative occurs frequently in the book. It indicates its composite and poorly authored character but cannot serve on its own as a criterion for literary analysis.

⁹ See nn. to 3:11–15. Riessler suggested that GkApEzra is a composite work containing an older Jewish source that has been Christianized. In his view, the Jewish sections are 1:1–3:10; 3:16–4:8; 4:16–21; 5:6–6:2 and the Christian passages are 3:11–15; 4:9–15; 4:22–5:5; 6:6–7:16. This analysis is incompatible with the analysis suggested above. See further in the next section.

¹⁰ Denis, Introduction, pp. 91f., presents a summary of views.

¹¹ M. R. James, “Introduction,” The Fourth Book of Ezra, p. lxxxvii. Certain general observations are made by H. Weinel, “Die spätere christliche Apokalypitk,” Gunkel Festschrift, pp. 157–60, but he offers no firm conclusions or even hypotheses.

¹² A. Baethgen, “Beschreibung der Syrischen HS ‘Sachau 131.’ ” ZAW 6 (1886) 199–211; more fully in J.-B. Chabot, “L’Apocalypse d’Esdras,” RevSem 2 (1894) 242–50, 333–46. Further on this work see Denis, Introduction, p. 94.

to which the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra appertains and does not contain dialogues between the seer and God.¹³

3. Visio Beati Esdrae, "The Vision of the Blessed Ezra." The Vision of Ezra belongs to the same body of literature as our Apocalypse of Ezra. It contains a fuller form of the descent into Tartarus and the "hanging" punishments, without the material on the Antichrist. Several features indicate it to have been translated from Greek; Mercati claims that there are almost no New Testament references in it.¹⁴ For the sake of clarity it should be noted that there are some references to the New Testament, particularly in the description of Herod's slaying of the infants. Thus no particular presumption of antiquity vis-à-vis the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra and the Apocalypse of Sedrach seems to follow. Many features of the apocalypse are lacking.

4. Revelatio Esdrae de qualitatibus anni, "The Revelation to Ezra Concerning the Characteristics of the Year." This is an astrological treatise, presumably belonging to the same category of astrological-divinatory literature associated with Ezra of which Tischendorf gave some Greek excerpts and of which James noted some texts in Old English. To the Latin texts, Mercati added some fragments in Italian, while Nau discussed some further Greek versions.¹⁵ Charlesworth has recently drawn our attention to an astrological document in Syriac attributed to Shem which is similar to this document (see the contribution herein).

5. A Greek calendar of events of patriarchal history, combined with astrological portents and auguries arranged by days of the lunar month, is also attributed to Ezra.¹⁶

6. Finally, mention should be made of chapters 1–2 and 15–16 of 4 Ezra, which occur only in the Latin Vulgate. These chapters, fragments of which have been discovered in Greek, are sometimes called 3 and 5 Ezra respectively (see Metzger's contribution herein).¹⁷

Theological importance

GOD

God is mentioned in the work chiefly in dialogue with the seer. Ezra remonstrates with him, invoking his mercy (1:20, 12; etc.), and God responds, admitting his merciful character but insisting that he must punish the wicked for their sins. This idea returns throughout the first part of the work, and is perhaps most clearly expressed by the exclamation "Your sins exceed my kindness" (2:21). One of the sins against God is the crucifixion: "they gave me vinegar and gall to drink" (2:25; 7:1). This statement, of course, implies, as does 6:16 (cf. 6:17), a Christological view, but the book refrains from any reference to salvation through Christ. Other noteworthy Christian features are the mention of Paul and John (1:20) and of "the Christian people" (1:6; 2:7; 5:1; etc.), and the idea that Antichrist turned the stones into bread and water into wine (4:27).

God is entitled usually "Lord" (passim), but he is also called "Most High" (1:2), merciful, greatly pitying one (1:10), and Father (2:22). He is associated with the cherubim (2:26) and is the one who drives the cherubim (7:6). He is opposed by Satan. The most striking feature of the concept of God is that he can be argued with. The seer can reproach him, remonstrate with him, and beseech him on behalf of mankind. This feature is inherited from 4 Ezra.

¹³ James, Fourth Ezra, p. lxxxvii, refers to its occurrence in BM Eth. No. 27.7, fol., 67a–71b, and BM Eth. No. 61.1, fols. 1–7r. It was published with a French translation by J. Halévy, Tê'ezâza Sanbat (Bibl. Ec. Hautes Études 137; Paris, 1902).

¹⁴ G. Mercati, Note di letteratura biblica e cristiana, pp. 70–73. Translation is found in Riessler, pp. 350–54. Denis concludes from the claimed absence of NT references that it is older than GkApEzra, ApSedr, and certain other works (Introduction, p. 93). In this he follows the view of Mercati, p. 66. P. Dinzelbacher, "Die Vision Alberichs und die Esdras-Apokryphe," Studien und Mitteilungen zur Geschichte der Benediktiner-Ordens (Othobeu, 1976) pp. 435–42, points to the older printing of an inferior longer rec. of the Visio B. Esdrae and some of its relationships in medieval apocalyptic literature.

¹⁵ G. Mercati, Note di letteratura biblica e cristiana, pp. 74–79; Tischendorf, Apocalypses Apocryphae, pp. xiii–xiv; James, Fourth Ezra, pp. lxxxvii–lxxxix; F. Nau, "Analyse de deux opuscules astrologiques attribués au Prophète Esdras . . .," ROC 12 (1907) 14–16. The Eth. text published by S. Grébaud, ROC 18 (1913) 97f., seems not to be closely related to the above.

¹⁶ Nau, ROC 12 (1907) 16–21.

¹⁷ For more extensive bibliography on Ezra literature, see Denis, Introduction, pp. 91–96. For older works see E. Schurer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes (Leipzig, 1898³) vol. 3, p. 330.

MANKIND AND CREATION

Mankind, the book stresses, is a special creation by God. In 1:10; 2:10–11, 23, as also in 4 Ezra and the Apocalypse of Sedrach, God's direct responsibility for the creation of mankind is stressed (see 1:10 margin). The same idea also occurs elsewhere.¹⁸ This emphasis makes even more acute the seer's reproach of God for the perilous state of things. In 5:19 this concept is developed further: The world was created for the sake of mankind (see also 4 Ezra 6:55; 7:11; 8:44; and 2Bar 14:19).¹⁹

Great emphasis is placed in the book on mankind's sinfulness and the rigor of their punishment. This stress is, of course, inherent to the seer's argument with God and is a sustained theme of the writing. Not only are the punishments of the sinners repeatedly stressed (1:7–11, 18; 4:9–20; 5:1–6), but the very point of the creation or birth of sinful mankind is repeatedly questioned. The expression of this theme derives from 4 Ezra (see 1:6 margin) and it recurs in various forms in many sources: for example, 2 Baruch 3:1, 4 Ezra 7:69, Babylonian Talmud 'Erubin 13b. Adam, who was created by God, sinned as a result of Satan's activity, although the name of Satan does not occur (2:12–14). The prophet's observation that without the creation of Eve by God, the serpent would not have deceived her, and that God creates and destroys whom he wishes (2:16f.), receives no response. The emphasis on Eve may be a reminiscence of the minimization of Adam's responsibility for the Fall to be found in the Adam books (contrast especially 4 Ezra 3:20f.).

Mankind is weak and limited; their knowledge is such that they cannot answer divine challenges. This is expressed by a "riddle" question posed in 2:32: "count the stars and the sand of the sea," to which Ezra responds that he, being merely human, finds this beyond his ability (3:2). A similar question occurs in 4:2 and the seer's response is likewise similar (cf. 4:4). These questions are clearly inspired by similar questions preserved in 4 Ezra (4:3–9 and 5:36–38). In the Bible the idea that the stars cannot be counted is commonplace, yet the number of stars was revealed to an apocalyptic seer in 1 Enoch 43:1–4 and in 2 Enoch 40:2–3. The use of such questions is extensive and goes back to biblical roots in Job and elsewhere. While using expressions designed to deny the possibility of men achieving secret knowledge, the Apocalypse of Ezra is in fact full of revelations of such mysteries, including natural phenomena (5:23).²⁰ This situation naturally indicates a tension between the theme of mankind's limited nature (derived from 4 Ezra) and the disclosure of secrets to them (not from 4 Ezra). Yet the basic and pervasive concept is mankind's limitations.

Humans are composed of soul and body; on death the soul leaves the body and departs for heaven, while the body returns to the earth (7:3). It would seem to follow, perhaps only by implication, that all those whom Ezra sees being punished are in fact the souls of the sinners. The contrast of the soul and body comes out most explicitly in the passage in 6:5–15 in which Ezra argues with the angel about giving up his soul. This theme—the unwillingness of the righteous man to yield up his soul—is widespread. The most extensive example preserved and one which resembles the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra in many ways is the Testament of Abraham, the whole of which is formed around this theme. In that work the angel fails to bring forth Abraham's soul, hence Death is sent. Different from the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra and the Testament of Abraham is Origen's description of the struggle between the good and evil angels over Abraham's soul (HLk 35). In the two former works the righteous man himself is the protagonist. Most recently J. T. Milik related the source referred to by Origen with the Visions of Amram from Qumran Cave 4. Be this as it may, the common theme of the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra and the Testament of Abraham also recurs in the Apocalypse of Sedrach 9, there sharing a source with the Apocalypse of Ezra.

¹⁸ 2En 44:1; Alpha Beta de R. Akiba (A. Jellinek, Bet ha-Midrash [repr. Jerusalem, 1938] vol. 3, p. 59): "for the whole world was created by the speech of the Holy One, Blessed be He, and man by his hand"; and ApMos 37:2; Philo, De somniis 210.

¹⁹ For similar rabbinic views see E. E. Urbach, The Sages, Their Concepts and Beliefs, trans. I. Abrahams (Jerusalem, 1975) vol. 1, pp. 214f. It is also clearly brought out in the ApSedr 3; cf. here 5:19.

²⁰ The development of the "riddle" questions is traced in detail in M. E. Stone, "Lists of Revealed Things in Apocalyptic Literature," Magnalia Dei, eds. F. M. Cross, W. E. Lemke, P. D. Miller (New York, 1976) pp. 414–52. The development of the language of denial of possible secret knowledge is discussed in M. E. Stone, "Paradise in IV Ezra iv:8 and vii:3b, viii:52," JJS 17 (1966) 85–88.

A similar situation relating to Moses is contained in the Armenian Life of Moses; and a situation like Origen's quotation and 4Q Visions of Amram is referred to in Jude 9.²¹

THE SEER

The protagonist is Ezra, who is the figure known from the biblical Book of Ezra. Here he is called "the prophet" and not "the scribe"; this shift occurs either because of the later Christian tendency to make every biblical author into a prophet or because of his role as a recipient of visions. The selection of Ezra as the seer is due to 4 Ezra, the book which has inspired the present writing. In 6:5ff. Ezra is assimilated to Moses. This identification is found in other sources, of which some chief ones are: (1) the interpretation of 4 Ezra 14 as a second Sinai event; (2) rabbinic dicta such as that of R. Jose: "Ezra was worthy that the Torah be given by him had not Moses preceded him" (Tosefta Sanhedrin 4:7 and par.); (3) Armenian traditions developing this view.²² Many of the verses in which Ezra appears referred originally to Moses. The intercessory function which Ezra fulfills throughout the book bears a similarity to that of Enoch in 1 Enoch 12 (see Isaac's contribution herein).

ANGELS

Angels play a large role in the book. The cherubim associated with God were mentioned above. In addition to the tasks already mentioned, the cherubim guard the tree of life (2:14). A chief function of the angels in this apocalypse, however, is the common one of guide and interpreter for the seer. There is considerable variation in the names and titles of these guides: 1:3 Michael the archangel; 1:4 the archistrategos Raphael; 2:1 Michael and Gabriel and all the apostles; 4:7 Michael and Gabriel and thirty-four other angels; 4:24 Michael the archistrategos; in 6:2 Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, Uriel, and five other angels with strange (some Greek-sounding) names are mentioned. In 4 Ezra it is Uriel who reveals the secrets; in the Vision of Ezra, Ezra is led to Tartarus by seven angels of Tartarus (l. 2) and to heaven by Michael and Gabriel (l. 79).

The title "archistrategos" (1:4 and commentary) most frequently refers to Michael, as it does in older sources: Testament of Abraham; Joseph and Asenath 14; Daniel 8:11; 2 Enoch 22:6f.; 33:10f.; 3 Baruch 11:1f.²³ In Sefer Zerubbabel (Even-Shmuel, Midreshe-Ge'ula, p. 73) variant readings are "Michael" and "chief of the army of the Lord." The five strange names in 6:2 are not readily paralleled. Akēr might be compared with 'kyr in Sefer Harazim (ed. Margalioth, Index, s.v.) and an angel Zebuleon might conceivably be related to Hebrew zebul.

In 1:7 reference is made to a "great command of angels" who come and lead the seer to the judgments. In 2:13 Adam is said to have been guarded by an angel, and the tree of life by a cherub. In 3:8 the angels are said to be destined to glorify God, and in 4:22 angels beat a wicked man. The nine angels in 6:2 are "over the consummation." These tasks, like that of an angelic guide, are in no way extraordinary in a writing as late as the Apocalypse of Ezra.

AFTERLIFE

The book clearly foresees a final judgment, whose character is set forth in some detail (2:26). On that day there will be no rain upon the earth (2:29) but only merciful judgment (2:30). There is a strict judgment (see 1:16; 5:17; cf. also 2:30); God eventually will assemble wicked men in the valley of Jehosaphat and annihilate them and the world (3:5f.). Moreover, the book refers to the signs and portents that will precede that day, namely the breakdown

²¹ An extensive discussion of TAb and related issues is in M. R. James, Testament of Abraham (T&S 2.2; Cambridge, 1892) pp. 14–29. 4Q Amram was published by J. T. Milik, "4Q Visions de 'Amram et une citation d'Origène," RB 79 (1972) 77–97. The Arm. Life of Moses was published by M. E. Stone, "Three Armenian Accounts of the Death of Moses," Studies on the Testament of Moses, ed. G. W. E. Nickelsburg (SCS 4; Missoula, Mont., 1973) pp. 118–21. The same theme occurs in the Heb. Petirath Mose ("Death of Moses") in Jelinek, BHM, vol. 1, pp. 115–29, and in some rabbinic sources.

²² See M. E. Stone, "The Apocryphal Literature in the Armenian Tradition," Proceedings Israel Academy 4 (1971) 67.

²³ Compare also J. Z. Smith, "The Prayer of Joseph," Religions in Antiquity, ed. J. Neusner (Leiden, 1968) p. 269 and nn. there. Also see Smith's contribution herein.

of society and human relationships, and the appearance of the Antichrist. This is most clearly expressed in 3:12, where well-known language and literary forms are involved. The same occur, with some changes, in Armenian 4 Ezra 5:9; 6:4; and elsewhere (see Mt 10:21; 1En 100:1; Melito, Paschal Homily 51; Hesiod, Works and Days, 183–90; Ovid, Metamorphoses 1.144–46; m. Soṭah 9:16; Tiburtine Sibyl 36f.).²⁴

Next the Antichrist will appear. He is first mentioned in the book in 3:15, where it says that he will come up from Tartarus and show many things to men. In connection with the extensive Antichrist passage in chapter 4, reference is also made to the final judgment (4:36–43). This event is described in the following way: the Antichrist will come and perform signs by which he will lead astray the race of men (4:32–34). Then a trumpet will sound, the graves will be opened, and the dead will rise (4:36). The Antichrist will hide in the outer darkness and then heaven and earth and sea will perish—heaven will be burned for eighty cubits and earth for eight hundred cubits; this melting of the earth and men results because of the hiding of the Antichrist (4:37–39, 43).

The idea of the burning of the heavens and the earth in a conflagration at the end of days is ancient and widespread; see, for example: Josephus, Antiquities 1.70; Philo, Vita Mosi 2, 263; Life of Adam and Eve 49f.; 2 Peter 3:10; and Agadat Bereshit (Jellinek, Beḥa-Midrash, vol. 4, p. 1).²⁵ No exact parallel is known to the measurements given for the conflagration. The manuscript is sadly corrupt at the point where the sin of the heavens should be mentioned, but the sin of the earth is the hiding of the Antichrist.

All of 4:25–43 is an extensive description of the Antichrist and his activities; Ezra has reached the lowest level of Tartarus. He sees a “hanging” punishment. Then he proceeds to the north, where he sees the imprisoned Antichrist. The chief themes expressed in this section are:

1. the imitation of Christ (4:27)
2. the danger of men being led astray (4:28)
3. the details of the physiognomy of the Antichrist (4:29–31)
4. the “Lucifer” theme (4:32)
5. the Antichrist becomes a child and an old man (4:33)
6. divine warning and the signs of the end (4:34–43):
 - a. the trumpet (4:36)
 - b. graves open and the dead rise (4:36)
 - c. Antichrist hides (4:37)
 - d. heaven, earth, and sea perish (4:38)
 - e. heaven burns for eighty cubits and earth for eight-hundred and the reasons for this (4:39–43)

A body of themes are gathered here that have old, widespread roots. The idea of the wicked king of the last generation may already be found in Ezekiel 28:2; Daniel 7:24f.; and that of the leader of the forces of evil in the last battle in 1QM 18:1; 1QS 4:18f.; Testament of Levi 3:3; Testament of Dan 5:6, 10f.; and Assumption of Moses 8. In the New Testament the term “Antichrist” is first encountered (1Jn 2:18, 22; 4:3; 2Jn 7). This figure is also probably the “son of perdition” and the “man of lawlessness” in 2 Thessalonians 2:2–4.

A particularly Christian development is that the Antichrist will take on features in imitation of those of Christ in order to deceive men. This idea is clear in the Apocalypse of Ezra 4:27 and the warning against it comes out once again in 4:35. Another particularly clear example is in the Seventh Vision of Daniel, where the Antichrist is described as “a wonder-worker having near him the souls of the lost, drawing bread out of stones,” and giving sight to the blind. All this is said to be in resemblance (that is, of Christ). The passage concludes with a lament for those who believe in him. Earlier in the same section he is said to be born of an unholy virgin and to turn many away from the worship of God. The same theme may also be observed in the Coptic Apocalypse of Elijah 3:1–11 and other sources.²⁶

²⁴ P. J. Alexander, The Oracle of Baalbek (Washington, 1967) p. 10.

²⁵ There are numerous texts giving lists of cosmic signs which will precede the end-time. Many such have been assembled in M. E. Stone, Signs of the Judgement, Onomastica Sacra and the Generations from Adam (University of Pa. Arm. Texts and Studies 3; Chico, Cal., 1981), pp. 2–57. Compare also the ApThom. For one text with widespread ramifications see W. W. Heist, The Fifteen Signs Before Doomsday (East Lansing, 1954).

²⁶ E.g. the Seventh Vision of Daniel (see J. Issaverdens, The Uncanonical Writings of the Old Testament [Venice, 1934] p. 263). See ApEl in J.-M. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie (Textes et Études 1; Paris, 1972) pp. 95–98.

The description of the physiognomy of the Antichrist is to be found in a series of different sources. Most similar to the Apocalypse of Ezra (4:29–32) is the description in the Greek Apocalypse of Ioannis (according to Tischendorf, Apocalypses Apocryphae, pp. 74f.):

The appearance of his face is gloomy; the hairs of his hand are sharp as missiles, his eyebrows like those of a wild man, his right eye like the star which rises at dawn and the other like that of a lion; his mouth (is as wide) as one cubit, his teeth a span long, his fingers like scythes; the soles of his feet (are) two span; and on his forehead (is) an inscription: "Antichrist." He will be exalted up to heaven, he will descend as far as Hades, performing false apparitions.

This description draws upon the same source as the Apocalypse of Ezra, and apparently not on the Apocalypse of Ezra itself.²⁷ Another description is that occurring in a Greek fragment attributed to an Elijah apocryph which has numerous parallel forms.²⁸ Likewise, such descriptions are to be found in the Coptic Apocalypse of Elijah, which goes back to a Greek original, 3:12f.,²⁹ in Sefer Eliyahu (ed. M. Bittenweiser, p. 16), in Sefer Zerubbabel (ed. Even-Shmuel, Midreshe-Ge'ula, p. 79), and in a series of other sources. This type of description of the features of the face and body, in combination with astrological indications of the character is to be found in 4Q186 (DJD, vol. 5, pp. 88–91). This is presumably to be related to Jewish physiognomic literature of a somewhat later date, Hebrew texts of which have been preserved.³⁰ It should also be set in the broader context of the physiognomic literature in Greek, which is sadly fragmentarily preserved.

The "Lucifer" features are the presumption of the Antichrist to set himself above God. The old mythical fragment in Isaiah 14:12–15 has had a decisive influence on later developments of this theme. It is clearly found in the description of the "little horn" in Daniel 7:8, 20, 25, an important early "Antichrist" text. The theme of the primordial pride that led to the fall of Satan is clear in the Vita Adae et Evae and in certain later forms of this story.³¹ These features are appropriately assigned herein to the Antichrist.

The relationship between these events and the punishments that Ezra sees in the course of his descent to Tartarus is not clear. The "hanging" punishments, typical of this section, are widespread, the two oldest texts dealing with them being the Apocalypse of Peter (22–24) and the Elijah apocryphon.³² They are also to be found in the Apocalypse of Paul 39f. and the Apocalypse of the Virgin 9f. Both these writings also contain material on the Antichrist, that in the Elijah apocryphon being a physiognomic description. These punishments might be seen, then, as forming an intermediate state between death and final judgment. This possibility is not stated, however, and their occurrence in the Apocalypse of Ezra may be due either to the combination of diverse sources or to the combination of just such material in 4 Ezra. The same factors have doubtless led to the confusion about the place of punishment, which is sometimes located in the heavenly spheres and sometimes in the abyss (see n. to 1:7).

Relationship to canonical and apocryphal books

While the Apocalypse of Ezra uses the biblical writings of both the Old and New Testaments, it is difficult to signal any particular biblical books with which it shows special

²⁷ On further possible relationships of this description see W. Bousset, The Antichrist Legend, trans. A. K. Keane (London, 1896) p. 42. This work contains an invaluable study of the legend of the Antichrist and a wealth of sources are cited.

²⁸ See Stone and Strugnell, The Books of Elijah, and the Gk. fragment published by F. Nau in JA 11 (1917) 454. The parallel texts are all adduced in the former work. See also J.-M. Rosenstiehl, "Le Portrait de l'Antichrist," Pseudépigraphes de l'Ancien Testament et manuscrits de la Mer Morte, ed. M. Philonenko (Paris, 1967) pp. 45–60.

²⁹ See most recently J.-M. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Elie.

³⁰ G. Scholem, "Physiognomy and Chiromancy," Sefer Asaf (Jerusalem, 1953) pp. 459–95 [in Heb.]; idem, "Ein Fragment zur Physiognomik und Chiromantik aus der Tradition der spätantiken jüdischen Esoterik," Liber amicorum C. J. Bleeker (Leiden, 1969) p. 181; I. Gruenwald, "Further Jewish Physiognomic and Chiromantic Fragments," Tarbiz 40 (1971) 301–19 [in Heb.].

³¹ Particularly the unpublished Gk. Discourse Concerning the Four Archangels contained in a number of MSS presently under study. This document contains details of the ancient attempt by Samael (or Satan) to seat himself as God and of his defeat.

³² See Stone and Strugnell, The Books of Elijah; cf. also ActsThom 56.

connections.³³ A number of cases appear to point to a dependence on the Septuagint.

The relationship of the work with 4 Ezra is intimate. First, the very form of the writing, a dialogue between the prophet Ezra and an angel (or God) in which the seer taxes his interlocutor with telling questions, doubtlessly derives from that writing.³⁴ Second, a number of the topics raised are clearly taken from 4 Ezra, even though the Apocalypse of Ezra treats or expresses them differently.³⁵ Such are not merely the questions about the purpose and nature of creation or the repeated calls for God's mercy, appealing to his own self-predication, but the "riddle" questions (2:32-3:2; 4:2-4; cf. 4Ezra 4:3-9; 5:36-38), the description of the development of the fetus (5:12f.; cf. 4Ezra 8:6-13) and of the messianic woes (3:11-14; cf. 4Ezra 5:1-13; 6:21-24; 9:3). In a number of cases there is more or less a literal use of the text of 4 Ezra (see margins),³⁶ and many words and expressions strongly resemble 4 Ezra. Moreover, the literary framework is perfunctory, a fact which emphasizes the dependence of the Apocalypse of Ezra upon 4 Ezra.

The Apocalypse of Sedrach and the Vision of Ezra are both closely related to the Apocalypse of Ezra and 4 Ezra.³⁷ The Apocalypse of Sedrach has expressions in common with the Apocalypse of Ezra that do not occur in 4 Ezra, while nearly all its allusions to 4 Ezra also occur in the Apocalypse. It is, therefore, tempting to think of the Apocalypse of Sedrach as based on another form of the materials in the Apocalypse of Ezra, perhaps with some "access to 4 Ezra."³⁸ A similar situation was observed above to obtain as to the relationship between the Apocalypse of Ezra and the Vision of Ezra. The chief parallels between the Apocalypse of Ezra and the Apocalypse of Sedrach are noted in the margins (the references are according to James's paragraph division). The most striking parallel between the Apocalypse of Sedrach and 4 Ezra not found in the Apocalypse of Ezra is the passage about the choice representative of each kind (ApSedr 8; 4Ezra 5:23-27). There are also some parallels with the Armenian Questions of Ezra (see the contribution herein), but it seems unwise to state that the Armenian is "a version of the apocryphon."³⁹ The independent relations between the Questions of Ezra and the Apocalypse of Sedrach do indicate, however, that the Questions of Ezra belongs to the same literary tradition.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 116f.
 Denis, Introduction, pp. 91-96.

TEXT

Tischendorf, C. von. Apocalypses Apocryphae. Leipzig, 1866; pp. xii-xiv, 24-33.

TRANSLATIONS

Riessler, P. Altjüdisches Schrifttum ausserhalb der Bibel. Augsburg, 1928; pp. 127-37, 1237.
 Walker, A. "The Revelation of Esdras," ANF, vol. 8, pp. 571-74.

³³ This observation, naturally, refers to special literary relationships. The origins of the figure Ezra in the canonical Ezra have been discussed above ("Theological importance").

³⁴ Tischendorf, Apocalypses Apocryphae, p. xii.

³⁵ See also note on 7:5ff.

³⁶ Parallels are conveniently set forth by B. Violet, Die Ezra-Apokalyse, pp. l-lix. Many of his "parallels" are in fact collections of associated terminology in similar contexts. Particularly striking, however, is the parallel between the ApEzra 1:10-18 and 4Ezra 7:133-38, both writings utilizing language drawn from Ex 34:6-7. Note the use of eusplagchnos, "compassionate," in ApEzra 1:10 and see the observations by M. E. Stone, "Apocryphal Notes and Readings," Israel Oriental Studies 1 (1971) 127-29.

³⁷ On the Vision of Ezra see "Historical importance and literary implications."

³⁸ M. R. James, Apocrypha Anecdota (T&S 2.3; Cambridge, 1893) p. 129.

³⁹ Denis, Introduction, p. 93.

STUDIES

James, M. R. Introduction, The Fourth Book of Ezra, ed. R. L. Bensly. T&S 3.3; Cambridge, 1895; pp. lxxxvi–lxxxix.

Mercati, G. Note di letteratura biblica e cristiana antica. Studi e Testi 5; Rome, 1901; pp. 61–69.

Violet, B. Die Ezra-Apokalypse. GCS 18; Leipzig, 1910; pp. 1–1x.

[After the preparation of this contribution, the following appeared:

Müller, U. Die griechische Ezra-Apokalypse. JSRZ 5; Gütersloh, 1976. (German translation)

Wahl, O. Apocalypsis Esdrae, Apocalypsis Sedrach, Visio Beati Esdrae. PVTG 4; Leiden, 1977. (text)]

CRITICAL SIGNS

- | | |
|----------|---|
| (10Δ348) | word/s added |
| [#973UL] | lacuna in manuscript or text, or incomprehensible letters; words within brackets are restorations |
| ⟨10Δ348⟩ | emendations |
| !#973UR! | uncorrected corruption of the text |

THE GREEK APOCALYPSE OF EZRA^a

Introduction and prayer

1.2 1 It came to pass in the thirtieth year on the twenty-second of the month,^b • I was 4Ezra 3:1
in my house and I cried out, saying to the Most High, “Lord, grant (me) glory so 3 that I may see your mysteries.” • When night fell the angel Michael, the archangel, came and said to me, “Prophet Ezra,^c lay aside bread for seventy weeks.”^d And Gen 30:37(LXX)
4 I fasted just as he told me. • And the archistrategos^e Raphael came and gave me
5 a storax staff,^f • and I fasted twice sixty weeks, and I saw the mysteries of God
6 and his angels. • And I said to them, “I wish to plead^g with God concerning the Christian people. It were better that man were not born than that he entered the world.”^h

2:7,31; 4:1,4;
6:20; 5:1; 1:21;
5:9,14
4Ezra 4:12;
7:62-68,116
2Bar 10:6
ApSedr 4

Ezra taken up to heaven: his prayer for mercy

7 Therefore, I was taken up into heaven and I saw in the first heavenⁱ a great 5:7
8 command of angels and they led me to the judgments. • And I heard a voice saying 9 to me, “Have pity upon us, Ezra elect of God.”^j • Then I began to say, “Woe to 4Ezra 7:85f.
the sinners when they see the righteous man (elevated) above angels, and they are 10 for fiery Gehenna.”^k • And Ezra said, “Have pity upon the works of your hands,^l 2:11,23 11 merciful and greatly pitying one.”^m • Condemn me rather than the souls of the 4Ezra 3:5; sinners, for it is better to punishⁿ one soul and not to bring the whole world to 7:132-39
12 destruction.” • And God said, “I shall give rest to the righteous in Paradise and ApSedr 3 13 I am merciful.” • And Ezra said, “Lord, why do you show favor to the righteous?
14 For as a hired man completes his time of service and goes away, and again a slave serves his masters in order to receive his wage,^o thus the righteous man receives 15 his reward in the heavens.^p • But, have mercy upon the sinners for we know that 5:6; 2:24
ApVirg 26

1 a. The title in the MS is “Treatise and Revelation of Esdras [Ezra] the Holy Prophet and Beloved of God.” This title is frequently numbered as vs. 1.

b. The date in years, but not that in days, derives from 4Ezra 3:1; this dependency explains why the phrase “the thirtieth year” appears without proper clarification.

c. For the emendation behind this translation see Stone, “Metamorphosis of Ezra.”

d. The seventy weeks are perhaps inspired by the prophet’s seven weeks’ fasting in 4Ezra and 2Bar, in both of which a week’s fast intervenes between each vision.

e. Archistrategos—lit. “commander-in-chief of an army”—is an angelic title most frequently used of the angel Michael; cf. Introduction.

f. The significance of this gift to the seer is unclear. M. Himmelfarb has drawn my attention to the storax rod of the pearl merchant in the Acts of Peter and the Twelve Apostles (CG VI,1) 2:25.

g. The legal character of Ezra’s disputation with God here and below (see margin) may derive from expressions such as those in 4Ezra 7:19. See also ApSedr 3.

h. This expression, drawn from 4Ezra, recurs a number of times in GkApEzra. See margin.

i. This reference to a first heaven probably reflects a source which contained a vision of a number of heavenly spheres. Here in GkApEzra the sinners are said to be punished in the heavens (cf. 5:7–11, 24–26; 2En 7:10). This is confused with another view placing the place of punishment in Tartarus or the abyss. See in detail Introduction.

j. This title has become commonplace in late pseudepigrapha.

k. The word “elevated” is supplied only for the sake of translation. B. Violet’s suggestion that phroureisthai, “guarded,” should be supplied on the basis of 4Ezra 7:85f. seems gratuitous. The idea that the vision of the punishment of the sinners is part of the reward of the righteous, and the reverse, is found in 4Ezra 7:83–86, 93f.; 2Bar 51:5. Cf. 4Ezra 7:38.

l. Here, in 2:10f., 23 and in various places in 4Ezra and ApSedr (see margin), it is stressed that God himself is directly responsible for the creation of man not with his word, but with his very hand. See also the note to 5:19.

m. The Gk. word for “merciful” is uncommon, but occurs in certain sources in connection with polyeleas, “greatly pitying,” as a rendering of the divine attributes listed in Ex 34:6f.; Jonah 4:2; Joel 2:13; Ps 86:16. See Introduction and n. 34.

n. “To punish”—lit. “to be punished.”

o. The sense of the Gk. verb (epituchein) is difficult here. The translation follows a suggestion of T. Korteweg; for the sense see 6:22. Korteweg would read arou for autou preceding, but for the absolute use, see Jas 4:2.

p. For the image of the wage, a common one also in the NT, see 4Ezra 8:33. Cf. particularly Mt 20:1–15 and see M. Smith, Tannaitic Parallels to the Gospels (SBLMS 6; Philadelphia, 1968²) pp. 49–70 and nn.

16.17 you are merciful.” •And God said, “I have no way to be merciful to them.” •And 18 Ezra said, “(Be merciful) because they cannot sustain your anger.”^q •And God said, “(I am wrathful) because such (are the deserts) of such (men) as these.”
 19.20 And God said, “I wish to keep you as both Paul and John. •You have given me uncorrupted the inviolate treasury, the treasure of virginity, the wall of men.”^r

4Ezra 8:34

Ezra's second prayer

21 And Ezra said, “It were better if man were not born; it were well if he were 22 not alive. •The dumb beasts are a better thing than man, for they do not have 23.24 punishment. •[You to]ok^s us and delivered us to judgment. •Woe to the sinners in the world to come, for their condemnation is endless and the flame unquenched.”

v. 21
 1:6: 5:9-14
 4Ezra 4:12;
 7:62-68, 116
 2Bar 10:6
 ApSedr 4
 v. 22
 4Ezra 7:65-67
 QuesEzra A5
 v. 24
 Isa 66:24

Ezra remonstrates with God: the sin of Adam

1 2 As I said this to him, Michael and Gabriel and all the apostles came and said, 2.3.4 “Greetings!” •[And Ezra said, “Faithful man of God!] •Arise and come hither with me, O Lord, to judgment.”^a And God said, “Behold I am giving you my 5 covenant, both mine and yours, so that you will accept it.” •And Ezra said, “We 6 shall plead our case in your ear(s).” •And God said, “Ask Abraham your father what kind of son presses suit against his father^b and come and plead the case with 7 us.” •And Ezra said, “As the Lord lives, I shall never cease pleading the case
 8 with you on account of the Christian people. •Where are your former mercies, O 9 Lord? Where your long-suffering?” •And God said, “As I made night and day I made the righteous and the sinner and it were fitting to conduct yourself like the 10 righteous man.” •And the prophet said, “Who made Adam, the protoplast, the 11 first one?” •And God said, “My immaculate hands,^c and I placed him in Paradise
 12 to guard the region of the tree of life.”^d •[. . .] “Since he who established
 13 disobedience made this (man) sin.”^e •And the prophet said, “Was he not guarded 14 by an angel?” •And was life not preserved (by) the cherubim for the endless age?
 15 And how was he deceived who was guarded by angels (whom) you commanded 16 to be present whatever happened?^f Attend also to that which I say! •If you had 17 not given him Eve, the serpent would never have deceived her.^h •If you save whom you wish you will also destroy whom you wish.”

(vs. 3) 2:18,26

ApSedr 2

1:6: 2:13; 4:1.4;
 6:20
 ApSedr 4

WisSol 7:1: 10:1

1:10; 2:23
 ApSedr 4
 Gen 2:9,15-19
 4Ezra 3:5
 v. 12
 ApSedr 4
 v. 13
 LAE 33:1f.
 ApMos 7:2
 ApSedr 8
 v. 14
 Gen 3: 24
 v. 15
 ApSedr 4

q. The idea that mankind cannot sustain God's wrath is analogous to 4Ezra 8:34, where it says that man, being corruptible, is not a fitting object of divine anger.

r. Riessler suggests that these vss. are an interpolation. They do seem to interrupt the course of the dialogue and, more notably, are divine speech following directly upon divine speech.

s. In Gk. only the beginning of this word is preserved by the MS and the restoration is uncertain.

2 a. Clearly this vs. is not a response to vs. 2 nor a continuation of it. It appears that the speaker must be Ezra, and that more than the introductory formula, which has been restored here, was actually lost.

b. The sense is obscure here. ApSedr 3 has “the son has a lawsuit with [?] the father” (cf. Plato, Euthyphro 4e). Apparently Abraham is invoked to testify about some specific past case of a son pressing suit against his father, but it remains uncertain to which event reference is made. Abraham's dialogue with God about Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen 18) does not seem to fit here.

c. The expression “immaculate hands” is common to GkApEzra and ApSedr in connection with the creation of man but does not occur in 4Ezra.

d. Or “the food of the tree of life”; cf. Walker, ANF 8, p. 571. 4Ezra does not mention any task assigned to Adam in the garden of Eden. The Bible (Gen 2:15) says “to till it and keep it.” In Gk-ApEzra 5:21 the tree of life is in the East, i.e. in Eden (Gen 2:8). Cf. 1En 24:3f.

e. He who established disobedience is Satan. The vs. is not a response to the question in vs. 10. T. Korteweg suggests the loss of something like “And the prophet said, ‘Why are we now separated from the tree of life?’ And God said . . .” This may have been due to scribal error. The text lying behind the translation is discussed in detail in Stone, “Metamorphosis of Ezra.”

f. Vita 33:1f. reports that Adam and Eve had guardian angels and the Fall took place at the hour when these angels had ascended to heaven to pray. This is related of Eve alone in ApMos 7:2. ApSedr 8 relates that angels guarded Adam continually.

g. Tischendorf has numerous emendations for vss. 14f.; nearly all are accepted. See in detail Stone, “Metamorphosis of Ezra.”

h. This vs. seems tautological but it may in fact preserve a reminiscence of the minimizing of Adam's responsibility for the Fall, stressed in LAE and Vita.

Ezra remonstrates with God: the sins of men

- 18 And the prophet said, "O my Lord, let us continue to a second judgment." 2:3,26
 19,20 And God said, "I cast fire upon Sodom and Gomorrah." •And the prophet said, Gen 19:24
 21 "Lord, you bring upon us what we deserve." •And God said, "Your sins exceed v. 23
 22 my kindness." •And the prophet said, "Remember Scripture, my father, who 1:10; 2:11
 23 measured out Jerusalem and rebuilt her.ⁱ •Pity, Lord, the sinners, pity your own 4Ezra 8:24;
 24 molding,^j have mercy upon your works." •Then God remembered his works and 7:134
 25 said to the prophet, "How can I have mercy upon them? •They gave me vinegar ApSedr 3 and gall to drink and [. . .]^k they repented." v. 24 1:16 ApVirg 27
 v.25
 7:1
 Ps 69:21
 Mt 27:34
 Mk 15:36
 Lk 23:36
 ApVirg 29

The day of judgment

- 26 And the prophet said, "Reveal your cherubim^l and let us go together to judgment, 7:6; 2:3,18
 27,28 and show me what is the character of the day of judgment." •And God said, "You 4Ezra 7:39,41
 29 have digressed, Ezra, •for such is the day of judgment upon which there is no rain 1:6; 2:7; 4:1,4; 30,31 on the earth, •for there is a merciful judgment during that day." •And the prophet 6:20 said, "I shall never cease to argue the case with you until I see the day of 32 consummation." •(And God said,) "Count the stars and the sand of the sea and Jer 33:22 if you will be able to count this, you will also be able to argue the case with me." •ⁿ Sir 1:2
 Gen 15:5; 32:13
 Heb 11:12
- 1,2 3 And the prophet said, "Lord, you know that I bear human flesh. •And how can 4:4 3 I count the stars of heaven and the sand of the sea?" •And God said, "O my elect 4Ezra 4:6 prophet, no man will know that great day and the manifestation which prevails to 4 judge the world. •For your sake, O my prophet, I told you the day, but the hour
 5,6 I told you not." •^a And the prophet said, "Lord, tell me also the years." •And God Joel 4:2,12 said, "If I see that the justice of the world has become abundant, I will be long- 1En 53:1 suffering toward them.^b If not, I will stretch out my hand and I will grasp the MidPs 8:10

i. The vs. is difficult. The Gk. actually reads "memorial of writings." The text reflected by the translation is as emended by Tischendorf but he has not avoided all difficulties, notably the nominative case of "father." The vs. might be emended to "through the recollection of Scripture, O my Father, you measured out Jerusalem and rebuilt her." This would be better Gk. and does not require very extensive tampering with the transmitted text. Yet it does involve accepting four distinct changes in it and, at the present stage of textual knowledge (see n. g above), perhaps Tischendorf's more conservative suggestion is to be preferred. The actual statement is somewhat odd, if the reference is to be the pseudepigraphic background of Ezra, for he was one of those responsible for the rebuilding of Jerusalem. Perhaps our author was thinking of the angelic guide in Ezek 40–48 and the angel in Zech 2:5–9. The underlying idea may be that God, who, in accordance with the scriptural promises of restoration, rebuilt Jerusalem in his mercy, will also have mercy upon the sinners.

j. The Gk. plasis is used in EpBar 6:9 much as it is here, apparently meaning "creation."

k. The Gk. has four corrupt words here that cannot be read. Tischendorf emends, dubiously, to "and not then." This is certainly a Christian reference. The apparent denial of divine mercy, justified by citing the crucifixion as evidence for the wickedness of mankind, seems strange. In ApPaul 44 a similar reproach precedes Christ's statement that he will grant some respite to the suffering sinners.

l. God's cherub throne; cf. e.g. Ezek 1.

m. Certainly a corrupted text based upon 4Ezra 7:39–42, where the phenomena of nature are said to be removed on the day of judgment. Aploan (Tischendorf, Apocalypses Apocryphae, p. 75) speaks of the removal of dew, clouds, and winds. It is unclear why GkApEzra should have singled out the rain alone from this list. Compare, however, the Daniel Apocalypse according to A. Vassiliev, Anecdota Graeco-Byzantina Pars Prior (Moscow, 1893) p. 47. The statement in vs. 30 is strange. In 4Ezra great emphasis is laid upon the view that, although divine compassion and human prayer can bring forgiveness and mercy in this age (most strikingly in 7:106–12), the day of judgment will be characterized by the strictest divine justice. This is particularly clear in 4Ezra 7:33, the latter part of which might have been misunderstood by GkApEzra. In fact, in 1:16 and 5:17 GkApEzra refers to strict judgment. The same view as in 4Ezra is also found in 2Bar 85:12. Compare also TAbbr. rec. A, 13. See also the note to 5:10. Walker's translation (ANF 8, p. 572) is "for such is the day of judgment as that in which there is no rain upon the earth; for it is a merciful tribunal as compared with that day." This is barely possible on the basis of the Gk.

n. The similarity between these questions and those in 4:2–4, the answers to which are beyond human knowledge, and those in 4Ezra 4:3–9 and 5:36–38 is noted in the Introduction. They come to show the limitations of man, yet of course GkApEzra is actually full of special revelations, including meteorological ones in 5:23.

3 a. This vs. stands in evident contradiction with vs. 3. Compare Mk 13:32: "But of that day and hour no one knows."

b. The import of these vss. is unclear. If even the days and hours have been revealed (vs. 5), then inhabited world from its four corners and I will gather them all together to the valley of Jehosaphat and I will wipe out the human race and the world will be no more.” • And the prophet said, “And how will your right hand be glorified?”

 8 And God said, “I will be glorified by my angels.”

Why was man created?

9 And the prophet said, “Lord, if this was your calculation, why did you form 10 man? • You said to Abraham our father, ‘I will surely multiply your seed as the stars of the heaven and as the sand along the shore of the sea.’^c And where is your promise?”

4Ezra 8:7,44
 ApSedr 4
 Gen 22:17(LXX)

Signs of the end

11 And God said, “First I shall cause by shaking^d the fall of four-footed beasts and 12 men. • And when you see that brother delivers brother over to death and children 13 will rise up against parents and a wife abandons her own husband, • and when 14 nation will rise up against nation in war, then you shall know that the end is near.
 15 And then brother will not have mercy upon brother, nor man upon his wife, nor 16 children upon parents, nor friends upon friends, nor slave upon master.^f • For the opponent of men^e himself will come up from Tartarus and will show many things to men. • What shall I do to you, Ezra, and will you argue the case with me?”

4Ezra 6:24
 4Ezra 9:3;
 13:31f.

4Ezra 7:102f.

Ezra descends to Tartarus

1 4 And the prophet said, “Lord, I shall never cease arguing the case with you.”
 2,3 And God said, “Count the flowers of the earth. • If you can count them you also will be able to argue the case with me.”^a 4 And the prophet said, “Lord, I cannot count them—I bear human flesh—but 5 neither will I stop arguing the case with you. • I wish, Lord, to see the lower parts
 6,7 of Tartarus.” • And God said, “Go down and see!” • And he gave me Michael 8 and Gabriel and thirty-four other angels,^b • and I descended eighty-five steps and they led me down five hundred steps.

1:6; 2:7,31; 6:20
 4Ezra 5:36
 3:1

The punishment of Herod

9 And I saw a fiery throne and an old man seated on it, and his punishment was 10,11 merciless. • And I said to the angels, “Who is this and what is his sin?” • And they said to me, “This is Herod, who was king for a time, and he commanded to kill 12 the infants two years old or under.” • And I said, “Woe upon his soul!”

VisEzra 50-55
 Mt 2:16

The disobedient and the abyss

13 And again they led me down thirty steps. And I saw boiling fires there, and a

VisEzra 16,30-35

why should the prophet wish to know the years? The response, in vs. 6, is that the length of the years is determined by human conduct.

c. The quotation is the LXX of Gen 22:17. The point made resembles 4Ezra 3:4-16.

d. Tischendorf’s emendation of this phrase sies-mou ptosin, “the falling . . . through shaking,” to seismon eis ptosin, “shaking for falling,” is rejected. The phrase is difficult to translate.

e. The picture of internecine strife given in vs. 12 is a commonplace; see Introduction. On the verbs in vss. 12f., see Introduction.

f. Although this list is related to that in vs. 12, it stems apparently from a different source as is indicated particularly by the phrase “nor slave upon master.” This phrase occurs in 4Ezra 7:102-4 and not in the other passages that probably stand behind vs. 12. 4Ezra 7:102-4 proclaim that on the day of judgment no man, however intimately related, will be able to pray for his fellow. In GkApEzra, intercessory prayer has become “to have mercy upon.” The original intent of the verses is preserved in the Ethiopic Ezra Apocalypse (cf. Halévy, Tē’ēzāza Sanbat, p. 182).

g. The opponent of men is the Antichrist; see 4:37. The reproach of God implied here resembles 4Ezra 3:4-7.

4 a. See n. on 2:32.

b. In VisEzra there are seven angels of Tartarus. In 6:2, Michael and Gabriel appear together with seven other angels; see also ApVirg 4.

14 multitude of sinners in them. •And I heard their voices, but I did not perceive their 15 forms.^c •And they led me down deeper many steps which I was unable to count. VisEzra 29
 16.17 And I saw old men there, and fiery axes were revolving upon their ears.^d •And 18 I said, “Who are these and what is their sin?” •And they said to me, “These are 19.20 the eavesdroppers.”^e •And again they led me down five hundred other steps. •And 21 there I saw the unsleeping worm and fire consuming the sinners. •And they led me
 22 down to the foundation of Apoleia (Destruction)^f and there I saw the twelfthfold
 23 blow of the abyss.^g •And they led me away to the south and there I saw a man 24 hanging from his eyelids and the angels were beating him. •And I asked, “Who is this and what is his sin?” •And Michael the archistrategos said to me, “This man is incestuous; having carried out a small lust, this man was commanded to be hanged.” Isa 66:24
Mk 9:48
ApPaul 12
VisEzra 44
VisEzra 24-28

The Antichrist

25 And they led me away to the north and I saw a man there restrained^h with iron 26.27 bars. •And I asked, “Who is this?” And he said to me, •“This is the one who says, ‘I am the son of God and he who made stones bread and water wine.’”ⁱ 28 And the prophet said, “Make known to me what sort of appearance he has and 29 I will inform the race of men lest they believe in him.”^j •And he said to me, “The appearance of his face is as of a wild man. His right eye is like a star rising at 30 dawn and the other is unmoving. •His mouth is one cubit, his teeth are a span 31 long, •his fingers like scythes, the soles of his feet two span, and on his forehead
 32 an inscription ‘Antichrist.’^k •He was exalted up to heaven, he will descend as far 33.34 as Hades.^l •One time he will be a child, another an old man.”^m •And the prophet 35 said, “Lord, how do you permit the race of men to stray?” •And God said, “Hear, my prophet! He becomes a child and an old man and let no one believe him that 36 he is my beloved son. •And after these things a trumpet, and the graves will be 37 opened and the dead will rise up uncorrupted.ⁿ •Then the opponent, having heard
Isa 14:12(LXX)
Isa 14:13-15
1Cor 15:52

c. See 5:10, n.

d. The text is emended at this point; see Stone, “Metamorphosis of Ezra.”

e. The eavesdroppers are a class of sinners well known in visions of punishments like this; cf. ApVirg 10. Other sources are collected by S. Lieberman, “On Sins and Their Punishment,” L. Ginzberg Jubilee Volume (New York, 1945) vol. 2, p. 258 (in Heb.). The particular punishment in GkApEzra here is paralleled in certain of the medieval Heb. sources he cites.

f. Is the description of the Antichrist introduced following this section because of his title “Son of Perdition” (apoleias) derived from 2Thes 2:3? This title is not found in GkApEzra, but see the Daniel Apocalypse, published by Vassiliev, Anecdota Graeco-Byzantina, p. 43. See in general Bousset-Keane, Antichrist.

g. The Gk. word is rare. Lampe (Patristic Greek Lexicon) offers “the twelve last plagues of hell” with no further support (cf. also Aploan in Tischendorf, Apocalypses Apocryphae, p. 94).

h. The Gk. word here, katecho, is that generally used for the imprisonment or restraint of the Antichrist; see 2Thes 2:6, 7 and the remarks of Vielhauer according to HSW, vol. 2, pp. 614f.

i. The Antichrist claims to be Christ and performs his miracles; see Seventh Vision of Daniel (Introduction), Cop. ApEI 3:1, 8–10. There is denied him only the resurrection of the dead. Cf. also the Daniel Apocalypse published by Vassiliev, Anecdota Graeco-Byzantina, p. 43.

j. The idea that the purpose of the revelation of the signs of the Antichrist is that the seer might warn men against him is also to be found; e.g. Cop. ApEI 3:2ff.

k. The chief physiognomic descriptions are noted in the Introduction. They do not bear particular resemblance in detail to what we find here except for Aploan. The same style and the same literary type are, however, clearly observable. Note the “high” soles of his feet in Sefer Elyahu, p. 16.

l. See the discussion of this theme in the Introduction. It is also prominent in the Vision of Enoch the Just (ed. Issaverdens, Unconventional Writings, pp. 245f.).

m. This detail also recurs in the Cop. ApEI, 3:14. Its source and significance are not clear. See also Tiburtine Sibyl 190–92 (Alexander, Oracle of Baalbek, p. 113, n. 54). The matter is discussed with suggestions as to its origins in Bousset-Keane, Antichrist, pp. 150–53.

n. The trumpet announces the redemption; see Isa 27:13; Zech 9:14; Mt 24:31; 1Thes 4:16f.; Did 16:6. The closest parallel is, however, 1Cor 15:52, upon which GkApEzra depends entirely.

The graves are opened and the dead arise uncorrupted. This is the general resurrection of the dead and not the grisly portent which is the falling of the dead bodies from their graves. This latter is to be found in Signs of the Judgement XI (Stone, Signs of the Judgement, pp. 26f.) and probably also in Mt 27:51. The sources for the resurrection are manifold, but here, again, GkApEzra seems directly dependent on 1Cor 15:52. Parallels to these two events in later literature are abundant and are not cited.

38 the terrible threat, will hide himself in the outer darkness.^o •Then the heaven and 39 the earth and the sea will perish.^p •Then I shall burn the heaven for eighty cubits 40 and the earth for eight hundred cubits.” •And the prophet said, “And (in) what 41,42 did the heaven sin?” •And God said, “Since [. . .] is the evil.”^q •And the prophet 43 said, “Lord, (in) what did the earth sin?” •And God said, “Since the opponent having heard my terrible threat will hide (in it), and because of that I shall melt the earth and with it the rebel of the race of men.”^r

Further punishments

1,2 5 And the prophet said, “Pity, O Lord, the race of Christians.” •And I saw a 1:6 3 woman suspended and four wild beasts were sucking upon her breasts.^a •And the angels said to me, “She begrudged giving her milk but also cast infants into the 4,5 rivers.” •And I saw terrible darkness and night without stars or moon. •There is there neither young nor old, neither brother with brother nor mother with child nor 6 wife with husband. •And I wept and said, “O Lord, Lord, have mercy upon the 1:15 sinners.”

Ezra taken to heaven

7 And as I said these things a cloud^b came and seized me and took me up again 1:7f.
 8,9 to the heavens. •And I saw many judgments and I wept bitterly and I said, •“It 1:6,21; 5:14
 10 were better if man did not come forth from his mother’s belly.” •Those who were ApSedr 4 in punishment called out, saying, “Since you came here, holy one of God, we 4Ezra 4:12; 11 have obtained a slight respite.”^c •And the prophet said, “Blessed are they who 7:62-68,116 bewail their own sins.” 2Bar 10:6

Birth and its purpose

12 And God said, “Hear Ezra, beloved one! Just as a farmer casts down the seed 13 of corn into the earth, so a man casts down his seed into a woman’s place.”^d •In

o. The opponent hides himself in outer darkness. If vs. 43 is correctly understood, the “outer darkness” must be somewhere on earth since the earth is burned in order to melt the hidden Antichrist. The term occurs in contexts not particularly significant for the present text in the NT (Mt 8:12; 22:13; 25:30). In a context not unlike the present it occurs in QuesEzra, rec. A, 3; cf. also ApPaul 16.

p. There is some contradiction here between the perishing of heaven, earth, and sea (vs. 38) and the burning of heaven and earth to various measures (of breadth? of depth?) in vs. 39–43. A similar contradiction is to be observed in the Arm. version of Signs of the Judgement between the signs cited below:

1. Heaven, earth, and sea perish; cf. Arm. Signs of the Judgement VII.

2. Heaven is burned for 80 cubits and earth for 800; cf. Signs of the Judgement XIV. Earth is burned for 30 (variant 33) cubits: ApDaniel published by Tischendorf, Apocalypses Apocryphae, p. xxxii, and Vassiliev, Anecdota Graeco-Byzantina, p. 47; Eth. Ezra Apocalypse according to Halévy, Tē'ēzāa Sanbat, p. 178; and 8,500 (variants: 500, 1,800, 660, 30) cubits in ApIoan 14 (Tischendorf, Apocalypses Apocryphae, p. 81); 72 cubits Cop. ApEl 3:83.

The idea of a general conflagration at the end of days is found in quite early sources; see Josephus, Ant 1.70; Philo, Vita Mos 2:263; Vita 49f.: cf. 2Bar 70:8; 2Pet 3:10. The idea has been attributed to Stoic origins.

q. The sin of heaven is unclear due to textual corruption.

r. The sin of the earth is that in it is hidden the rebel (for the title compare Vision of Enoch the Just [ed. Issaverdens, Unconventional Writings, pp. 246f.]).

5 a. Cf. ApVirg 20, where this punishment is recorded for a different sin, one of ecclesiastical character. The first sin here appears to be complemented by the punishment, although a second sin has been added. The ecclesiastical character of the sins in ApVirg indicates that work to be later in character than GkApEzra. See also 4:13f. (margin) for a similar case.

b. The idea of a cloud taking the seer up to heaven occurs elsewhere, e.g. 1En 14:8; ApIoan (Tischendorf, Apocalypses Apocryphae, pp. 71, 93); TAb, rec. A, 9, 15; rec. B, 8, 10, etc.; cf. Isa 19:1 (of God).

c. The view that the prayer of the righteous can be instrumental in gaining some respite for the suffering sinner is, of course, clear in TAb and ApPaul 44. It also bears on the concluding section of QuesEzra. The term for respite is not that of ApPaul, regarding which see Lieberman, Ginzberg Volume, vol. 2, p. 252; see 2:30 n.

d. The image of mankind as the husbandman’s seed is to be found in 4Ezra 8:41–44; cf. the parable of the sower, Mt 13:1–9 and parallels. Note the literalistic treatment of the image in GkApEzra.

the first (month) it is a whole, in the second it is swollen, in the third it grows hair, in the fourth it grows nails, in the fifth it becomes milky, in the sixth it is ready and quickened, in the seventh it is prepared, [in the eighth . . .], in the ninth the bars of the gateways of the woman are opened and it is born healthy on the earth.”

- 14,15 And the prophet said, “It were better for man not to have been born. •Alas, O 16 human race, at that time when you come to judgment!” •And I said to the Lord, 17 “Lord, why did you create man and give him over to judgment?” •And God said in his exalted pronouncement, “I will not pardon those who transgress my cov-18,19 enant.” •And the prophet said, “Lord, where is your goodness?” •And God said, “I prepared everything because of man and man does not keep my commandments.”^e

1:6,21; 5:9
 ApSedr 4
 ApSedr 6
 4Ezra 4:12
 7:62-68, 116
 2Bar 10:6
 4Ezra 6:55;
 7:11; 8:44
 ApSedr 3

Punishments and rewards

- 20 And the prophet said, “Lord, reveal to me the punishments and Paradise.”
 21,22 And the angels led me away to the east^f and I saw the tree of life. •And I saw there Enoch and Elijah and Moses and Peter and Paul and Luke and Matthew and all 23 the righteous and the patriarchs.^g •And I saw there the [punishment] of the air and the blowing of the winds and the storehouses of the ice and the eternal 24,25 punishments. •And I saw there a man hanging by his skull. •And they said to me, 26 “This one transferred boundaries.” •And there I saw great judgments and said to 27 the Lord, “O Lord, Lord, which of men, having been born, did not sin?” •And they led me farther down in Tartarus and I saw all the sinners lamenting and 28 weeping and evil mourning. •And I too wept, seeing the race of men punished thus.

QuesEzra A4
 4Ezra 7:68
 8:35; cf.
 4Ezra 3:35f.

- 1 6 Then God said to me, “Ezra, do you know the names of the angels who are 2 over the consummation: •Michael, Gabriel, Uriel, Raphael, Gabuthelon, Aker, Arphugitonos, Bebueros, Zebuleon?”^a

Ezra struggles for his soul

- 3 Then a voice came to me, “Come here, die, Ezra, my beloved! Give back that 4 which has been entrusted (to you).”^b •And the prophet said, “And whence can 5 you bring forth my soul?”^c •And the angels said, “We can cast it forth through 6 your mouth.” •And the prophet said, “I spoke mouth to mouth with God and it
 7 will not go forth from there.” •And the angels said, “We will bring it forth through 8 your nostrils.” •And the prophet said, “My nostrils smelled the glory of God.”^d
 9,10 And the angels said, “We can bring it forth through your eyes.” •And the prophet 11 said, “My eyes have seen the back of God.” •And the angels said, “We can bring 12 it forth through your head.” •[. . . And the angels said, “We can bring it forth through your feet.”] And the prophet said, “I walked with Moses on the mountain, 13 and it will not come forth from there.”^e •And the angels said, “We can cast it

Num 12:8(LXX)
 ApSedr 2

OdesSol 11:15
 Ex 33:23

e. Here the view is not only that man is the special creation of God (see 1:10, commentary) but that creation was for the sake of man. See “Theological Importance.”

f. Paradise is in the East; cf. Gen 2:8.

g. Paul meets the patriarchs in Paradise, ApPaul 47.

6 a. On the angelic name, see “Theological Importance.”

b. The term “that which is entrusted” refers to the soul; see also vss. 17, 21. It occurs also in 1Tim 6:20; 2Tim 1:12, 14; cf. ShepHerm, Mand. 3:2.

c. On this theme, the struggle for the soul of the righteous, see “Theological Importance.”

d. The idea of smelling the glory of God is to be found elsewhere. Note in particular OdesSol 11:15: “And my breath was refreshed/By the fragrance of the Lord” (trans. Charlesworth). Another parallel is the Arm. Life of Moses, where Moses says, “My mouth spoke with God and my eyes saw the light of the Godhead and my nostrils smelt the fragrance of sweetness . . .” (Stone in SCS 4, pp. 118f.). 1En 24f. has the idea of the fragrance of the tree of life, which stands near the divine throne. Cf. also P. A. H. de Boer, “An Aspect of Sacrifice, II: God’s Fragrance,” Studies in the Religion of Ancient Israel (VTSup 23; Leiden, 1972) pp. 37–47. To this passage in which each member of the body is tested as to the departure of the soul, cf. ApSedr 10.

e. If this is a response to vs. 11, it is incoherent. Presumably something has been lost between vss. 12 and 13, perhaps the response to vs. 11 and the question that provoked vs. 12. The reconstruction here claims only to convey the apparent sense of that lost sentence.

14 forth through the tips of your (toe)nails." •And the prophet said, "My feet walked 15 in the sanctuary." •And the angels departed unsuccessful, saying, "Lord, we 16 cannot receive his soul." •Then he said to his only begotten son, "Go down, my ApSedr 9 beloved son, with a numerous host of angels, taking the soul of my beloved Ezra."
 17 For the Lord, having taken a numerous army of many angels, said to the prophet, 6:21
 "Give me that deposit which I entrusted to you. The crown is readied for you." 18 And the prophet said, "Lord, if you take my soul from me, who will you have OdesSol 1:1-5; 9:8f.,11; 17:1;
20:7f.
 19 left to plead on behalf of the race of men?" •And God said, "You who are mortal
 20 and earthly, do not plead the case with me." •And the prophet said, "I shall never 21 cease pleading." •And God said, "Give, in the meanwhile, that which is entrusted 4Ezra 4:11 1:6; 2:7,31;
4:1,4; 6:17
QuesEzra A6
 22 (to you). The crown is readied for you. •Come here, die, so that you may attain 23 it." •Then the prophet began to speak with tears, "O Lord, what profits it that I OdesSol 1:1-5;
9:8f.,11; 17:1;
20:7f.
 24 plead the case with you, and I am going to fall to the earth? •Woe, woe! for I will 25 be consumed by worms. •Bewail me, all holy and pious ones, I plead greatly and 26 am delivered over to death! •Bewail me, all holy and just ones, because I have entered the bowl of Hades."^g

Soul and body

1 7 And God said to him, "Hear, Ezra, my beloved one. I, being immortal, received 2:25
Ps 69:21
Mt 27:34
Mk 15:36
Lk 23:36
4Ezra 7:32
 2 a cross, I tasted vinegar and gall, I was set down in a grave. •And I raised up my elect ones and I summoned up Adam from Hades so that the race of men 3 [. . .].^a Therefore, fear not death. •For that which is from me, that is the soul, departs for heaven. That which is from the earth, that is the body, departs for the 4 earth from which it was taken." •And the prophet said, "Woe, woe! What shall I do? How shall I act? I know not."

Concluding prayer^b

5 And then the blessed Ezra began to say, "O eternal God, Creator of the whole Isa 40:12(LXX)
2:26
2Sam 22:11
Ps 18:11
v. 6
2Kgs 2:11f.
Sir 48:9
v. 7
Ps 136(135):25
4Ezra 8:21-23
 creation, who measured out the heaven with a span and contained the earth in his 6 hand,^c •who drives the cherubim, who took the prophet Elijah to the heavens in 7 a fiery chariot, •who gives nurture to all flesh, whom all things fear and tremble 8,9 from the face of your power, •hear me who pleads greatly •and give to all who copy this book and preserve it and recall my name and preserve my memory fully, 10 give them blessing from heaven. •And bless all of his things, just as the ends of 11,12 Joseph.^d •And remember not his previous sins on the day of his judgment. •Those 13 who do not believe this book will be burned like Sodom and Gomorrah." •And

f. The crown or garland of the righteous at the end of days. The origins of the idea are found in Isa 28:5; 62:3; Ezek 28:12 (LXX); 1Cor 9:25; 2Tim 4:8; Jas 1:12; 1Pet 5:4; Rev 2:10; 3:11. This is doubtless the "crown of glory" of the righteous in 1QS 4.7, 1QH 9.25, and "crown with great glory" in 2Bar 15:8. Cf. also Sir 45:12; TBenj 4:1; WisSol 5:16; AscenIs 7:22; 9:24. Cf. also the Sabbath morning Amidah, which states of Moses "you placed a crown of glory on his head" (The Authorised Daily Prayer Book, with commentary by J. H. Hertz [London, 1947] p. 456). The concept of the crown is prevalent in the OdesSol; note the parallels cited in the margin to the translation and especially OdesSol 9:8-11 (see the translation by Charlesworth herein).

g. The expression "bowl of Hades" is unusual and not of biblical origin. Can it be compared with the "hollow places" in which the souls reside according to 1En 22? The Gk. words differ in the two sources.

7 a. A reference to the descent into hell, the oldest extended narrative of which is in the GNic 5(21):1ff. This idea is also perhaps referred to by Eph 4:8f. and in OdesSol 42:11f.

b. Violet, Ezra-Apokalypse, p. li, suggests a number of phrases in this section to be similar to 4Ezra 8:20-36. These are not particularly striking but the overall resemblance of the two passages in tone and function is noteworthy.

c. Gk. draken. This form is untranslatable; perhaps read drakin, "hand"; cf. Isa 40:11 (LXX).

d. The import of the vs. as it stands is unclear. The reference might be to Joseph's flourishing in Egypt or to the story of the bearing off of his remains by the departing Israelites (Ex 13:19). R. A. Kraft suggests that "Joseph" is the result of a scribe's misreading of "Job" as an abbreviation for Joseph. This is confirmed by Paris MS 390, which reads ta eschata tou Job, "the ends of Job." If this is so, the vs. refers to the restoration of Job's prosperity after his sufferings.

a voice came to him saying, "Ezra, my beloved, I shall grant to each one the things which you asked."

Death and burial of Ezra

14 And at once he gave over his precious soul with much honor on the eighteenth 15 of the month of October. • And they buried him with incense and psalms. His precious and holy body provides unceasingly strengthening of souls and bodies for those who approach him willingly.

Doxology

16 Glory, might, honor, and worship to him for whom it is fitting, for the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, now and always and for ever and ever. Amen.

VISION OF EZRA

(Fourth to Seventh Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY J. R. MUELLER and G. A. ROBBINS

Although this pseudepigraphon is thoroughly Christian¹ and has as its closest parallels certain New Testament apocrypha,² its place within the Old Testament Pseudepigrapha is assured for two reasons: (1) its attribution to the figure of Ezra; and (2) its affinities with the other Ezra-related pseudepigrapha, most notably 4 Ezra, the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, and the Apocalypse of Sedrach.³

The Vision opens abruptly. Unlike the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, there is no preparation for the petition that Ezra makes in the first verse: "Grant me, O Lord, courage that I might not fear when I see the judgments of the sinners." That Ezra will receive a vision of the damnation of the wicked is presupposed. His entreaty is scarcely uttered before he is transported by seven angels of hell to the infernal regions.

The series of visions commences with Ezra's arrival at the fiery gates of hell (vss. 3–11). Here Ezra sees the just passing untouched through the flaming portals. When the damned attempt to do likewise, they are ripped apart by the dogs (or in some MSS, lions) that lie in front of the gates and are consumed by the fire. It is a recurrent feature of the vision that the just pass through the infernal regions unscathed, whereas the damned are unable to escape.

After passing through the gates, Ezra begins his descent into Tartarus. The account of this descent is fuller (vss. 12–55) than that of the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra. He sees the torments of adulterers, both men and women (vss. 12–18); of incestuous mothers and sons (vss. 19–22); of those who failed to make confession, who were niggardly in almsgiving, who were inhospitable to the sojourner (vss. 23–26); of Herod, on account of his slaughter of the holy innocents (vss. 37–39); of false teachers (vss. 40–42, 45–47); of unchaste virgins (vss. 43f.); of unjust rulers (vss. 48f.); of disrespectful children (vs. 50); of unfair masters (vs. 50); and of women who murdered the children they conceived in adultery (vss. 51–55).

Having witnessed all the "judgments of sins," Ezra enters into Paradise. Escorted no longer by the angels of hell, but rather by Michael and Gabriel (vs. 56), he catches a glimpse of the heavenly habitations and their splendor. Before placing him in the presence of God, the angels of heaven beg Ezra to plead the case of the sinners whose punishments he has recently witnessed. Ezra does intercede on their behalf, but is assured by God that they are receiving "according to their works" (vs. 61), just as the elect, who made good confession, who were penitent, who gave alms freely (vss. 26, 64), receive theirs, i.e. "eternal rest" in the kingdom of heaven (vss. 64, 66).

Texts

The Vision of Ezra is preserved in seven Latin manuscripts, which date from the eleventh ¹ Cf. vss. 10 (the Lord's day); 37–39 (Herod and the slaughter of the infants in Bethlehem); and the numerous allusions to the NT noted in the margins (see also "Relation to canonical books").

² E.g. ApPet, ApVirg, ApJohn, ApPaul (VisPaul). Cf. "Relation to apocryphal books."

³ Cf. "Relation to apocryphal books."

to the thirteenth centuries. While at least three of these may be considered major witnesses, the present translation is based upon a manuscript preserved in the Vatican Library, Vat. lat. 3838, fols. 59^a–61^a (12th cent.; referred to below as V).⁴ This text is to be preferred because its language is closer to the earlier, classical Latin than any of the other manuscripts, which suffer from numerous vulgarities of language, syntax, and spelling common to the medieval period. They also are interpolated at five points in the narrative. At least one of these interpolations could not have been possible before the late sixth century, which rules out any claim that the manuscripts in which it appears represent the original form of the document.⁵

The second and third major witnesses both represent this longer, interpolated tradition. Their alternate readings and additions are included in the notes to the translation. The first of these witnesses is a twelfth-century manuscript from Heiligenkreuz, Austria, Codex 11, fols. 272^b–73^a (referred to below as H).⁶ The second witness to the longer traditions is MS AI/6 (Hs 1) from the Bibliothek des Priesterseminars in Linz, Austria (11th cent.; referred to as L below).⁷ Manuscript L is distinct from the remainder of the manuscripts in that Ezra speaks in the first person.⁸

In addition to the above, O. Wahl has recently discovered in Austria four new manuscripts that contain the Vision of Ezra: (1) Klosterneuburg, Stiftsbibliothek, Codex 714, fols. 139^{ba}–41^{ba} (12th cent.; referred to below as K); (2) Lilienfeld, Stiftsbibliothek, Codex 145, fols. 70^{aa}–70^{bb} (13th cent.; referred to below as Lf); (3) Melk, Stiftsbibliothek, Codex 310.F.8, fols. 208^b–9^b (13th cent.; referred to below as M); and (4) Lilienfeld, Stiftsbibliothek, Codex 134 Klein-Maria-Zell, fols. 109^{ab}–10^{aa} (13th cent.; referred to below as Z).⁹

These manuscripts contain innumerable textual variants, few of which significantly alter the sense of the three major witnesses. The variants are primarily spelling differences, word omissions and transpositions, and minor additions.¹⁰

Original language

There is almost unanimous agreement that the extant Latin of the Vision of Ezra is a translation from an earlier Greek tradition.¹¹ Two points favor this conclusion: (1) the tangible literary kinship with the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra (see the contribution by M. E. Stone herein) and the Apocalypse of Sedrach (see the contribution by S. Agourides herein), both extant in Greek,¹² and (2) variations within the witnesses to the Vision itself, which are most easily explained as variant translations of a Greek original. The following may be adduced as examples: (1) verse 2, V: portaverunt, “they carried”; L: levaverunt, “they lifted”; (2) verse 4, L, V: tangebant, “it touched”; Lf: nocuit, “it injured”; (3) verse 10, V: peccaverunt, “they sinned”; L: manserunt, “they remained”; (4) verse 13, V: flagellis, “with scourges”; L: vectibus, “with bars”; (5) verse 14, V: nolite parcere, “refuse to have mercy”; L: non parcite, “do not have mercy”; (6) verse 23, V: fluctuabat, “it was roiling”; L: inundabat, “it was overflowing”; (7) verse 26, V: faciebant, “were making”; L: proficiebant, “were offering”; (8) verse 28, V: miserere, “have pity”; L: parce, “have mercy”; (9) verse 31, V: elemosinam non fecerunt, “they did not give alms”; L: elemosinas nullas fecerunt, “they gave no alms”; (10) verse 34, V: immortalem, “immortal”; L: inextinguibilem, “inextinguishable”; (11) verse 35, V: quasi, “like”; L: sicut, “as”; (12) verse 37, V: hominem, “person”; L: virum, “man”; (13) verse 38, V: per multa temporum, “for a long time”; L: multum tempus annorum, “for many years”; (14) verse 44, V: violaverunt, “they violated”; L: disruperunt, “they disrupted”; (15) verse 49, V: laedebant, “they wounded”;

⁴ G. Mercati, Note di letteratura biblica e cristiana antica, pp. 70–73.

⁵ Cf. the arguments of P. Dinzelbacher, “Die Vision Alberichs und die Esdras-Apokryphe,” Studien und Mitteilungen zur Geschichte des Benediktiner-Ordens 87 (1976) 435–42 and n. 2. For the view that the longer text is the more original, cf. O. Wahl, “Vier neue Textzeugen der Visio Beati Esdrae,” Salesianum 40 (1978) 583–89.

⁶ A. Mussafia, “Sulla visione di Tundalo,” Sitzungsberichte d. phil.-hist. Klasse d. Kaiserl. Akademie d. Wissenschaften 67 (1871) 157–206.

⁷ O. Wahl, Apocalypsis Esdrae—Apocalypsis Sedrach—Visio beati Esdrae, pp. 49–61.

⁸ But cf. vss. 1, 11, 15, 30, 36, 38, 39, 65, where the third person form is found; this inconsistency points to the secondary nature of this MS.

⁹ Wahl, Salesianum 40 (1978) 584.

¹⁰ Ibid., 587–89.

¹¹ Cf. Mercati, Note, p. 67; and Wahl, Salesianum 40 (1978) 586f.

¹² Cf. “Relation to apocryphal books.”

L: laeserunt, "they injured"; (16) verse 53, V: accusabant, "they accused"; L: interpellant, "they accosted"; (17) verse 58, V: duxerunt, "they led"; L: deposuerunt, "they brought"; (18) verse 65, V: intrent in, "they enter in"; L: acceperunt, "they receive"; (19) verse 66, V: fecerit, "he performed"; L: servierit, "he served." While none of these examples could carry the weight of the hypothesis of a Greek original on its own, collectively they are capable of bearing such weight.

O. Wahl has also noted a few verses that he claims represent Semitisms, most notably verse 7 (cf. also vss. 17, 21): bonum desiderium desideraverunt, "they desired a good desire."¹³ Wahl makes no explicit claims that these few examples represent evidence for a Semitic original, yet his mention of them implies that the possibility might be entertained. Such a possibility is doubtful for two reasons: (1) the previously mentioned literary relationships to works known only in Greek, and (2) the likelihood that phrases like desiderium desideraverunt may be biblicisms or "Vulgatisms" (cf. Ps 115:14) rather than Semitisms.

Date and provenance

There are no historical allusions in the Vision of Ezra that would yield an approximate date for the work. Given the numerous allusions to the New Testament, especially the Herod episode (vss. 37–39), the earliest possible date would be the late first century A.D. That a medieval work, the Vision of Alberich, is literarily dependent both on the shorter (MS V) and the longer versions of the Vision (MSS H and L), which would mean that they had to be available prior to A.D. 1111, the latest possible date would be the early twelfth century (even earlier if the eleventh-century date of MS L is accurate).¹⁴ The upper limit may be reduced slightly to allow time for the original to circulate in translation before being interpolated. This seems especially applicable here, as the Latin translations witness to both a longer and a shorter tradition. The lower limit may be raised for two reasons: (1) the Vision lacks many features of classical intertestamental apocalyptic works such as 4 Ezra and 2 Baruch; its features are derivative, not originative; (2) the Vision shares features, such as the "hanging" punishments and the journey through the underworld, with many New Testament apocrypha. While no literary dependence need be postulated, the Vision certainly shares the Zeitgeist, "ethos," of their era, the third and fourth centuries A.D. For these reasons, the Greek original of the Vision of Ezra, whose Latin translations assured it an important role in later medieval literature, should probably be dated from A.D. 350–600.

Apocalyptic works, especially those that do not recount history and do not have other historical allusions, are nearly impossible to locate geographically and culturally. All that may be said in the case of the Vision of Ezra is that it is a Christian document of unknown origin circulated in medieval times in the West.¹⁵

Historical and theological importance

It is a commonly held notion that, by the beginning of the second century A.D., apocalypticism had died out in Christianity. As the early Church attempted to come to grips with the continued delay of the Parousia (the second coming of Christ), with waning hopes for an imminent end of history, and with the implications this realization had for a longer-than-anticipated institutional life, the apocalyptic tradition, it is argued, a tradition inherited from Judaism and incorporated into the very fabric of the Church's daily existence, its worship and its authoritative writings, was largely abandoned.¹⁶

As recent studies have shown,¹⁷ such an opinion cannot be maintained. While apocalyptic expectations underwent numerous transformations, both in content and in the manner in ¹³ Wahl, Salesianum 40 (1978) 586.

¹⁴ Dinzlacher, Studien 87 (1976) 440.

¹⁵ Ibid., 435–42.

¹⁶ B. McGinn, in Visions of the End: Apocalyptic Traditions in the Middle Ages (New York, 1979) p. 16, quotes M. Werner as the foremost proponent of this view: "The delay of the Parousia of Jesus, which after his Death became increasingly obvious, must, in view of the non-fulfillment of the eschatological expectation, have grown into a problem which was conducive to the transformation of the original eschatological doctrine." See Werner, The Formation of Christian Dogma (New York, 1957) p. 22.

¹⁷ E.g. J. Pelikan, The Emergence of the Catholic Tradition, 100–600 (Chicago, 1971) pp. 123–32; N. Cohn, The Pursuit of the Millennium, rev. ed. (New York, 1970); and McGinn, Visions.

which those expectations were given expression, apocalypticism remained a vital component of the Catholic faith not only in the patristic period but throughout the Middle Ages as well. In the second through the fourth centuries A.D., those hopes were preserved and fostered by such writers as Irenaeus, Commodian, and Lactantius. Even those early Church Fathers who were opposed to overt apocalypticism—Eusebius, Jerome, Augustine, and Tyconius—witnessed to its resiliency, and often served as sources of information for later medieval views with which they would have found little sympathy.

B. McGinn¹⁸ has noted that classical apocalypticism had twin offspring. On the one hand, a visionary literature was produced which increasingly centered on the fate of the individual soul, on the personal afterlife, with a detailed account of the pains of hell and the joys of heaven. Although such visions could exhibit the common eschatological pattern of crisis, judgment and salvation, and include speculation about the career of the Antichrist, interest in history as a unitary structure was not strong. On the other hand, there also existed a variety of texts more closely linked to apocalyptic proper which evinced explicit historical concerns, especially a view of the present as a moment of supreme crisis, and a fervent hope of an imminent judgment that would vindicate the just. Texts of the latter sort frequently, though not invariably, incorporated concern with the structure of history, usually in terms of a theory of world ages.

The Vision of Ezra can best be understood as belonging to the first of McGinn's categories, to that visionary literature which laid stress on the personal afterlife. Unlike the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, to which it is clearly related, the Vision of Ezra makes no mention of the Antichrist. Christ himself is referred to only obliquely (vss. 38, 46). There is no concern for the number and duration of the ages of the world or with Christ's thousand-year reign (Rev 20:4-6). Nor does the document address itself to an impending eschatological crisis. Rather, the primary concern of the Vision of Ezra is the punishment of sinners, the contrast between their torments and the beatitude of the just. The punishments and rewards in the afterlife correspond directly to the sin(s) or good deed(s) wrought on this side of the grave. Moreover, God's judgment of the sinners is unimpeachable. When Ezra bewails humanity's fate before God, God thunders back with the central theme of the Vision: "In my image I have formed man and I have commanded that they not sin, and they sinned. Therefore they are in torments" (vs. 63; cf. GkApEzra 5:12-19; ApSedr 4).

How does such a vision function in the life of a community? Sociologists are inclined to view millenarian movements as agents of social change, as prepolitical phenomena, at times as protorevolutionary ones. The literature they produce functions, then, as a critique of social, political, and economic institutions. But if the Vision of Ezra is not a millenarian text, as we have argued above, then the sociological stereotypes used to characterize such literature probably will not apply. McGinn has correctly observed that apocalypticism is broader than either millenarianism or messianism, and its literature can have more than one function.¹⁹ Though he does not discuss this document, the Vision of Ezra aptly illustrates McGinn's point. By correlating as it does the punishments and rewards in the afterlife with actions committed in the earthly sphere, the Vision confronts us with an apocalyptic tradition intended to support and recommend the existing values and mores espoused by the institutional Church. The Church of the seer, opposing reprobates within and without, will not compromise its long-held demands of almsgiving, fidelity in marriage, confession, hospitality, chastity, right teaching, the just use of power, and respect of parents. Rather, by means of the Vision, those values receive divine imprimatur, eternal validation. The elect who "go into eternal rest" do so on account of "confession, penitence, and largesse in almsgiving" (vs. 64), by maintaining the Church's ethical norms. To do otherwise is to "sin" (vs. 63) and "enter into judgment" (vs. 65).

Relation to canonical books

Beyond the name, Ezra, the Vision displays no contact with the canonical books of the Old Testament. Mercati also claimed that there were practically no New Testament references or allusions in the Vision.²⁰ M. E. Stone (see contribution herein) has rightly noted that there are indeed some references to the New Testament discernible in the text. He cites the description of Herod's slaughter of the infants (vs. 38 = Mt 2:16-18) as a clear example. It may be that, in this instance, the Vision is relying more on the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra (4:9-12), which also mentions Herod in this context, than on the New Testament directly. The emphasis placed on largesse in almsgiving (vss. 7, 26, 31, 64) probably derives from injunctions in Matthew 6:2-4, but especially in Acts 9:36, 10:2, and 24:17. The doctors of the Law in verse 46, "who were teaching with words, but they did not spur on to work," bear resemblance to the scribes and Pharisees in Matthew 23:1-7, "who sit on Moses' seat," who "preach but do not practice." In verse 57b of manuscript H, "those who altered the last things and spoke false testimony" suffer the sort of fate Revelation 22:19 promises for the "one who takes away from the words of the book of this prophecy." Other allusions are noted in the margins and in the notes to the text.

¹⁸ McGinn, Visions, pp. 14f.

¹⁹ Ibid., pp. 28-36. McGinn's critique and corrective of Cohn's analysis of medieval millenarian movements and those of other anthropologists who study millenarianism in primitive societies are trenchant. We are indebted to him for the remarks that follow.

Relation to apocryphal books

The strongest and most consistent links with any other apocryphal works occur between the Vision and the other literature of the Ezra cycle: 4 Ezra, the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, the Questions of Ezra, and the Apocalypse of Sedrach.²¹ But even these links, with one notable exception, are not close enough to postulate any theory of literary dependence one way or the other. They all share in the Zeitgeist of the collapse of classical apocalyptic during the fall of the Roman Empire. All share, to varying degrees, the pessimism of their progenitor, 4 Ezra, and are built around the figure of Ezra and his complaints against God. These complaints are somewhat muted in the Vision of Ezra. There is really only one complaint in the Vision of Ezra (paralleled in the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra): that the animals are better off than humans because they are not required to praise God yet do no sin (vs. 62).

The one episode in the Vision of Ezra that is closely paralleled in the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra is the scene in which Herod is seated upon a throne and being tortured (VisEzra 37-39; GkApEzra 4:9-12). In this one instance literary dependence could be posited, but the brevity and singleness of this example, coupled with the elusiveness of establishing dates for the two documents, leave the question open as to which document served as the source for the other.²²

Numerous other parallels exist between the Vision and the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra (especially 4:5-5:6), but, again, these are general in nature and preclude any attempt to establish priority. The situation in this regard is further complicated by the parallels all the Ezra literature displays with the New Testament apocryphal works (ApPet, ApPaul, ApVirg, VisPaul). The common features include the journey through hell and heaven and the "hanging" punishments of the sinners in hell (cf. the marginal references). It is unlikely that any theory of literary dependence would account for the similarities; often individual sins and their punishments occur in different combinations in all the documents.

Cultural importance

It has been noted repeatedly that Dante Alighieri's Divine Comedy, the supreme literary creation of the Middle Ages, bears striking resemblance to the apocalyptic literature of its own and earlier centuries. What were the sources for Dante's compelling vision of inferno, purgatorio, and paradiso? Surprisingly, the Vision of Ezra may be put forward. P. Dinzelsbacher has recently demonstrated that the medieval Vision of Alberich, a treatise recognized by Dante scholars since its publication in the early nineteenth century as a sure source and inspiration for Dante, had itself relied on both shorter and longer recensions of the Vision of Ezra.²³

²⁰ Mercati, Note, p. 66.

²¹ Cf. Müller, "Die Griechische Esra-Apokalyse," JSHRZ 5.2 (1976) 88; Wahl, Apocalypsis Esdrae, pp. 2-7. For a general survey of extant Ezra literature, cf. R. A. Kraft, "'Ezra' Materials in Judaism and Christianity," ANRW II.19.1 (1979) 119-36.

²² Mercati, Note, pp. 65-68, has suggested that VisEzra may be older than the GkApEzra and ApSedr. This opinion has been generally disregarded by most modern scholars. Cf. Wahl, Apocalypsis Esdrae, p. 8.

²³ Dinzelsbacher, Studien 87 (1976) 435-42. For a discussion of vision literature in the medieval period, see Dinzelsbacher, Vision und Visionliteratur im Mittelalter (Monographien zur Geschichte des Mittelalters 23, Stuttgart, 1981).

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, p. 119.

Denis, Introduction, p. 93.

Dinzelbacher, P. "Die Vision Alberichs und die Esdras-Apokryphe," Studien und Mitteilungen zur Geschichte des Benediktiner-Ordens 87 (1976) 435-42.

Mercati, G. Note di letteratura biblica e cristiana antica. Studi e Testi 5; Rome, 1901; pp. 61-73.

Mussafia, A. "Sulla visione di Tundalo," Sitzungsberichte d. phil.-hist. Klasse d. Kaiserl. Akademie d. Wissenschaften 67 (1871) 157-206.

Wahl, O., ed. Apocalypsis Esdrae—Apocalypsis Sedrach—Visio beati Esdrae. PVTG 4; Leiden, 1977.

———. "Vier neue Textzeugen der Visio Beati Esdrae," Salesianum 40 (1978) 583-89.

VISION OF THE BLESSED EZRA

- 1 Ezra^a prayed to the Lord, saying, "Grant me courage, O Lord, that I might not 2 fear when I see the judgments^b of the sinners." • And there were granted to him^c
 3 seven angels of hell^d who carried^e him beyond the seventieth grade in the infernal
 4 regions. • And he saw^f fiery gates,^g and at these gates he saw two lions lying there 5 from whose mouth and nostrils^h and eyes proceeded the most powerful flames.
 6 The most powerfulⁱ men were entering^j and passing through the fire, and it did 7 not touch^k them. • And Ezra^l said, "Who are they, who advance so safely?"^m • The 8 angels said to him,ⁿ "They are the just^o whose repute has ascended to heaven, 9 who gave alms generously, clothed^p the naked, and desired a good desire."
 10 And others^q were entering^r that they might pass through the gates, and dogs^s 11 were ripping them apart^t and fire was consuming them.^u • And Ezra^v said,^w "Who 12 are they?"^x The angels said,^y "They denied the Lord^z and sinned^{a2} with women 13 on the Lord's Day."^{b2} • And Ezra^{c2} said, "Lord, have mercy on the sinners!"
 14 And they led him lower beyond the fiftieth^{d2} grade, and he saw in that place
 15 men standing in torments.^{e2} • Some^{f2} were throwing fire in their faces;^{g2} others, 16 however, were whipping them with fiery scourges.^{h2} • And the earth cried aloud,ⁱ²
 17 saying, "Whip them and refuse to have mercy^{j2} on them, because they worked 18 impiety upon me." • And Ezra said,^{k2} "Who are they, who are in such torments
 19 daily?" • The angels said,^{l2} "They dwelled with married women; • the married 20 women are those who adorned themselves not for their husbands, but that they 21 might please others, desiring an evil desire."^{m2} • Ezra said,ⁿ² "Lord, have mercy 22 on the sinners!"

- a. L: "When the blessed Ezra."
 b. L: "all the judgments."
 c. H K M Lf V; omitted in Z L.
 d. Cf. ApPaul 16, 18: angelo tartaruchio, qui prepositus est penis, "the angel Tartaruchus that is set over the torments." This similarity probably does not represent anything more than a shared Zeitgeist; the parallels here are general in nature and do not give reason to suspect literary dependence. In fact, both works may have no relation to one another; the phrase may be derived from earlier works such as TAB.
 e. V H K M Z Lf: portaverunt; L: levaverunt, "lift, elevate, support." This variation suggests a Gk. Vorlage pherō, "to bear, lift, carry."
 f. L: vidi, "I saw." The major difference between L and the rest of the MSS is the first-person presentation; but even L is inconsistent in its usage (cf. vss. 1, 8a, 11, 15, 30, 36, 38, 39, 65).
 g. L adds ingrediebatur per flammam eius, et LXX duos pedes foras portam, "He was entering through this flame, and 72 foot-soldiers outside the gate."
 h. L: auribus, "ears."
 i. L: magni, "great."
 j. L adds per se, "by themselves."
 k. L V: tangebatur (H K M Z: tegitit); Lf: nocuit, "to hurt, injure, harm."
 l. L: "And I asked the angels who were leading me."
 m. L: cum tanto gaudio, "with such great joy."
 n. L: mihi, "to me." Cf. n. f.
 o. H omits iusti, "the just."
 p. L K M add et calciaverunt, "and shod."
 q. L: "other men."
 r. L adds per se, "by themselves."
 s. V obscure: eanes; read with H K M Z L: canes. Mercati (p. 70), unaware of the existence

- of other MSS of VisEzra, proposed leones (cf. vs. 3).
 t. H K M Z V L Lf: a canibus laniabantur, "and they were being mangled by dogs."
 u. H K M Z V Lf: ab igne comburebantur, "they were being consumed by the fire"; L omits the clause. H L add, following vs. 8, "And Ezra said [L: "And the blessed Ezra was saying to the Lord"], 'Lord, have mercy on the sinners!' And he did not have pity on them." Cf. 2Pet 2:4.
 v. H omits "Ezra."
 w. L: "And I asked the angels who were leading me." Cf. n. l.
 x. H L K M Z add "who are in such pain and such torment"; Lf: "who are in such torments."
 y. L adds mihi, "to me." Cf. n. n.
 z. So V; H: deum, "God."
 a2. V H L^{corr}: peccaverunt; L: manserunt, "remained."
 b2. L H add ante missam, "before the Mass." L also adds "and for that reason they are in such torment."
 c2. L: "Blessed Ezra."
 d2. H K M Z V Lf: "forty."
 e2. L: "And they bore me downward toward a grade in the infernal regions, and I saw (people) being thrown downward."
 f2. L H add angeli, "of the angels."
 g2. L: "Some of the angels were ministering."
 h2. V: flagellis; L: vectibus, "with bars."
 i2. L: "And the earth interrupted."
 j2. V: nolite parcere; L H: non parcite, "do not have mercy."
 k2. L: "And the blessed Ezra asked the angels."
 l2. L: "And they said to me."
 m2. Lat.: malum desiderium desiderantes. Cf. Ps 105:14 in the Vulgate and vs. 7.
 n2. L: "And I said."

27,40
 TAB 13.11
 ApPaul 16

v. 5,6
 Acts 9:36; 10:2; 24:17
 Mt 6:2f.
 2En 42:8

Mt 25:36
 Jas 2:15f.
 Ps 105:14

Rev 14:4
 18,20,22,33,42,
 47,55,61

GkApEzra 1:15, 5:6
 v. 12
 GkApEzra 4:18

ApPet 32

VisPaul (Syr.) 6

v. 16,17
 GkApEzra 4:24
 VisPaul 38f.
 ApPet 23
 TAB B 12:2
 11,20,22,33,42,
 47,55,61
 GkApEzra 1:15;
 5:6

- 19 And again they brought him to the south,^{o2} and he saw a fire, and poor ones and 20 also women hanging,^{p2} and angels^{q2} were whipping them with fiery clubs.^{r2} • And 21 Ezra said, "Lord, have mercy on the sinners!^{s2} Who are they?" • And the angels 22 said, "They dwelled with their mothers, desiring an evil desire." • And Ezra said,^{t2} "Lord, have mercy on the sinners!"
- 23 And they led (him)^{u2} downward in the infernal regions,^{v2} and he saw a caldron^{w2} in which were^{x2} sulfur and bitumen, and it was roiling^{y2} just like the waves of the 24 sea. • And the just were entering,^{z2} and in the midst of it they were walking over the fiery waves, praising greatly the name of the Lord, just like those who walk 25 over dew or cold water.^{a3} • And Ezra said,^{b3} "Who are they?"^{c3} The angels said,^{d3} 26 "They are the ones who daily were making^{e3} better confession before God and 27 the holy priests, freely bringing alms^{f3} (and) resisting sins."^{g3} • And the sinners came, wishing to pass over, and the angels of hell came and submerged them in 28 the fiery stream.^{h3} • And from the fire they cried out, saying, "Lord, have pityⁱ³ 29 on us!" But he did not have pity.^{j3} • A voice was heard, but a body was not seen 30,31 because of the fire and the anguish. • And Ezra said,^{k3} "Who are they?" • The angels said,^{l3} "They were brought down by lust all their days;^{m3} they did not 32 receive strangers;ⁿ³ they did not give alms;^{o3} • they took unjustly the things of others for themselves;^{p3} they had an evil desire; therefore, they are in anguish."^{q3}
- 33 And Ezra said,^{r3} "Lord, have mercy on the sinners!"
- 34 And he walked as before and he saw^{s3} in an obscure place an immortal^{t3} worm, 35 its magnitude he was not able to reckon.^{u3} • And in front of its mouth stood many^{v3} sinners, and when it drew in a breath, like^{w3} flies they entered into its mouth; then, 36 when it exhaled, they all exited a different color. • And Ezra said,^{x3} "Who are they?" And they said,^{y3} "They were full of every bad thing and they went about without confession or penitence."^{z3}

GkApEzra 4:22-24

11, 18, 22, 33, 42, 47, 55, 61

GkApEzra 1:15; 5:6

11, 18, 20, 33, 42, 47, 55, 61

GkApEzra 1:15; 5:6

GkApEzra 4:13-18

1, 40

GkApEzra 1:8

VisPaul 32

VisPaul 40

11, 18, 20, 22, 42, 47, 55, 61

GkApEzra 1:15; 5:6

GkApEzra 4:21

ApJohn Mk 9:48

Isa 66:24

ApPaul 12

ApPet 24, 26

VisPaul 42

o2. "And they bore me downward and brought me to the south."

p2. L: "And I saw poor people hanging over the fire, (both) women and men"; H K M Z: "And he saw men and women hanging in a fire."

q2. H: *quatuo*r, "four"; L: quaterni, "four at a time."

r2. V: fustibus; H: vecibus, "with clubs"; L omits last prepositional phrase.

s2. H L omit.

t2. L: "And I said."

u2. V omits; H supplies.

v2. L: Et assumpservunt me deorsum II quingentos gradus, "And they took me downward II five-hundredth grades."

w2. L adds "and large, the height of it was 200 cubits."

x2. L H add ardebat, "were burning."

y2. V: fuctuabat, L: inundabat, "overflowing."

z2. V: veniebant; L H: venerunt, "entered."

a3. L omits "or cold water."

b3. H omits "Ezra"; L: "And I asked the angels."

c3. L adds "who proceed in such joy?"

d3. L adds mihi, "to me."

e3. V: faciebant; H: proficiebant, "were offering."

f3. H adds "freely."

g3. Vs. 26 in L reads "Those are the ones who gave alms generously and clothed the naked" (cf. vs. 7).

h3. Vs. 27 in L reads "And the sinners came; and they made them heavy, so that they who did not wish to sink might sink. They were pressing them down with fiery yokes on their necks."

i3. V H: miserere; L: parce, "have mercy." Cf. the refrain of Ezra which L connects with the sinners' plea in this vs.

j3. H K M Lf add eis, "on them."

k3. L: "And the blessed Ezra said to the angels." Cf. n. f.

l3. L: "And they said to me."

m3. L: "Those were in lust and ravishing all the days of their lives."

n3. H L add et hospites, "and sojourners."

o3. V H: elemosinam non fecerunt; L: elemosinas nullas fecerunt, "they gave no alms."

p3. L reverses the order of the clauses in this vs.; the transposition does not significantly alter the sense.

q3. L adds dimersi, "plunged."

r3. L omits the beginning of this vs.

s3. L: "And I walked and I saw."

t3. V: immortalem; L H: inextinguibilem, "inextinguishable."

u3. L: "Its length and height I was not able to reckon, at least seventy cubits."

v3. L adds milia, "thousands."

w3. V: quasi; L: sicut, "as, just like."

x3. L: "And the blessed Ezra said to the angels"; H: "And Ezra said to the angels."

y3. L adds mihi, "to me."

z3. L omits the last clause. H K M Z Lf and L then add: "And I walked as before and I saw a fiery stream, (and) a great bridge was over it, its width able to accommodate equally seventy oxen. When the just were coming, they went across with joy and exultation. And truly, when the sinners were coming, the bridge shook itself into fragility like a string of thread. (And) they were falling into that river acknowledging their own sins, saying, 'Because we did every evil thing, for that reason we were delivered into this torment.' And they requested pity and not one of them received it." For a detailed discussion of this theme in medieval literature, cf. P. Dinzelsbacher, Studien und Mitteilungen 87 (1976) 435-42; and idem, Die Jenseitsbrücke im Mittelalter (Ph.D. dissertation; Wien, 1973).

- 37 And^{a4} he saw^{b4} a person^{c4} sitting on a fiery throne, and his counselors stood around him in the fire, and they served him from the fire and out of every^{d4} side. GkApEzra 4:9-12
- 38 And Ezra said, ^{e4} "Who is that?"^{f4} And the angels said, ^{g4} "That man, whose name is Herod, was king for a long time, ^{h4} who, in Bethlehem of Judea, slewⁱ⁴ the infant males on account of the Lord."^{j4} • And Ezra^{k4} said, "Lord, judge a right judgment!"^{l4} Mt 2:16
VisPaul 18
Jn 7:24
- 40 And he walked and saw^{m4} men who were bound and the angels of hell were pricking their eyes with thorns. • And Ezra said, ⁿ⁴ "Who are they?" The angels said, ^{o4} "They showed strange paths to those wandering." • Ezra said, ^{p4} "Lord, have mercy on the sinners!" • And he saw virgins with five-hundred-pound neck irons^{q4} on, as if near death, coming^{r4} to the west. And Ezra said, "Who are they?" ApPet 33
v. 42
11,18,20,22,33,
47,55,61
GkApEzra 1:15;
5:6
VisPaul 39
- 44,45 And the angels said, ^{s4} "They violated^{t4} their virginity before marriage." • And there was^{u4} a multitude of old men, lying prostrate, and over them molten iron and lead were being poured.^{v4} And he said, "Who are they?" • And the angels said, ^{w4} "They are the doctors of the Law^{x4} who confused baptism and the law of the Lord, because they were teaching with words, but they did not spur on to work;^{y4} and in this they are judged."^{z4} • And Ezra said, ^{a5} "Lord, have mercy on the sinners!" Mt 23:1-3 11,18,20,22,33,
42,55,61
GkApEzra 1:15;
5:6
- 48 And he saw visions of a furnace, against the setting sun, burning with great fire, into which were sent many kings and princes of this world;^{b5} • and many thousands of poor people were accusing^{c5} them and saying, "They, through their power, wounded^{d5} us and dragged free men into servitude." • And he saw^{e5} another furnace, burning with pitch and sulfur,^{f5} into which sons were cast who acted wretchedly at the hands of their parents^{g5} and caused injury by means of their mouth.^{h5} • And he sawⁱ⁵ in a most obscure place another furnace burning, into which many women^{j5} were cast. And he said, ^{k5} "Who are they?"^{l5} • And the angels^{m5} said, "Theyⁿ⁵ had sons in adultery and killed them." • And those little ones themselves accused^{o5} them, saying, "Lord, the souls which you gave to us" Rom 1:30
ApPet 23,25
VisPaul 40

a4. L adds an introductory clause (cf. previous note): "And I walked as before." H also adds "And he walked farther." These introductory clauses form an inclusion with the beginning of the long addition cited in the previous note; this sort of literary device is commonly found at points where the text has been interpolated.

b4. L: "I saw."

c4. V: hominem; L H: virum (L: bonum), "man" (H), "good man" (L).

d4. V: omni; L H: utraque, "both sides."

e4. L: "And the blessed Ezra asked."

f4. L: "Who are they?" (cf. vs. 5, 9, 15, 20, 30, 36, 41, 43, 45, 51, 54). The question is not exceptional inasmuch as it is regularly repeated throughout the VisEzra. It is not appropriate here, however, as the answer demonstrates. The singular of V is to be preferred.

g4. L adds mihī, "to me."

h4. V: per multa temporum; L: multum tempus annorum, "for many years."

i4. Read with L H: interfecit; V omits the verb.

j4. L reads instead "on account of the name of the Lord."

k4. L: "blessed Ezra."

l4. All MSS: rectum iudicium iudicasti; possibly a Semitism, but more likely a biblicism.

m4. L: "And I walked and I saw."

n4. L: "And I asked the angels."

o4. L: "And they said to me."

p4. L: "And I said."

q4. V H: bogitis; L: pogines, "neck irons." The text of this vs. is quite corrupt.

r4. L H add clamando, "crying out."

s4. L adds mihī, "to me."

t4. V: violaverunt (H: violabant); L: disruperunt, u4. H: vidit, "he saw"; L: vidi, "I saw." V omits the verb.

"disrupted."

v4. L reads "I went out as before and I saw a baptismal pool and the pushing of multitudes before that baptismal pool and many thousands were pouring molten iron and lead over them."

w4. L adds mihī, "to me."

x4. L adds "and the corrupters of God."

y4. L reads simply "who corrupted baptism."

z4. V: et in hoc iudicantur; L: et ideo iudicantur, "and for that reason they are judged."

a5. L: "And I said."

b5. L: "And I walked as before toward the setting sun, (and) I saw men descending into a burning furnace of fire where kings and princes were being sent."

c5. L reads "were standing and accosting."

d5. V: laedebant; L: laeserunt, "injured."

e5. L: "I saw there."

f5. L adds "and bitumen."

g5. V: qui in parentes manus miserunt; L: qui in parentes manserunt, "who dwelled with (their) parents."

h5. L H add "Also there were sent there those who denied God, and who did not give servants justice [H: "just recompense"]."

i5. L: "And I saw."

j5. V: multae mulieres; L: multi, "many (men)."

k5. L: "The blessed Ezra asked the angels."

l5. V: istae; L: isti, "they" (masculine).

m5. L: dixerunt, "they said."

n5. All MSS use the feminine istae; the feminine is consistently used in V.

o5. V: accusabant; L: interpellant, "accosted" (cf. n. c5).

- 54 these (women) took away."^{p5} •And he said,^{q5} "Who are they?" And the angels 55 said,^{r5} "They killed their sons."^{s5} •And Ezra said,^{t5} "Lord, have mercy on the sinners!"^{u5} 11,18,20,22, 33,42,47,61
 GkApEzra 1:15;
 5:6
- 56 Then Michael and Gabriel came and said to him,^{v5} "Come into heaven!"^{w5}
 57 And Ezra said,^{x5} "As my Lord lives, I may not come until I see^{y5} every judgment 58 of sinners."^{z5} •And they led^{a6} him downward into the infernal regions beyond the fourteenth level. And he saw^{b6} lions and little dogs^{c6} lying around fiery flames.
 59 And the just came through them and they crossed over into Paradise. •And he saw many thousands of the just and their habitations were the most splendid of any time.^{d6} GkApEzra 1:12
- 60 And after he saw this, he was lifted up into heaven, and he came to a multitude of angels, and they said to him, "Pray to the Lord for the sinners." And they put 61 him down within the sight of the Lord.^{e6} •And he said,^{f6} "Lord, have mercy on the sinners!" And the Lord said,^{g6} "Ezra, let them receive according to their 62 works." •And Ezra said,^{h6} "Lord, you have shown more clemency to the animals,ⁱ⁶ which eat the grass and have not returned you praise, than to us; they die and have 63 no sin; however, you torture us, living and dead." •And the Lord said,^{j6} "In my image I have formed man and I have commanded that they not sin and they sinned;
 64 therefore they are in torments. •And the elect are those who go into eternal^{k6} rest 65 on account of confession,^{l6} penitence, and largesse in almsgiving." •And Ezra said,^{m6} "Lord, what do the just do in order that they may not enter intoⁿ⁶ judgment?" 66 And the Lord said to him, "(Just as) the servant who performed^{o6} well for his master will receive liberty, so too (will) the just in the kingdom of heaven." Amen.
 11,18,20,22,
 33,42,47,55
 GkApEzra 1:15;
 5:6
 GkApEzra 1:18
 ApSedr 4
 4Ezra 4:12;
 7:62-68,116
 GkApEzra
 1:6,21f.; 5:9,14
 2Bar 10:6
 v. 62
 VisPaul 15,42
 QuesEzra 6(A),
 3(B)
 v. 63
 GkApEzra 5:19
 4Ezra 6:55;
 7:11; 8:44
 ApSedr 3
 GkApEzra 1:14

p5. L H add "And I saw [H: 'he saw'] other women hanging in the fire and serpents were sucking their breasts" (cf. GkApEzra 5:2).

q5. L: "And I said to the angels."

r5. L: "And they said to me."

s5. L H add "And they did not give suck to other orphans."

t5. L: "And I said"; H: "and the blessed Ezra said."

u5. L adds "And he did not have pity upon them" (cf. vs. 28).

v5. L: "Then the angels, Michael and Gabriel, came and said to me."

w5. L adds "so that we might make the Paschal feast."

x5. L: "And I said."

y5. V: videam; L: videro, "I will see."

z5. L adds "And I walked as before and I saw the beasts ripping them apart. And I said, 'Who are they?' And the angels said to me, 'These are the ones who altered the last things [Rev 22:18] and spoke false testimony.'" H also adds this section, but follows the third-person format of MS V over against the first person of MS L.

a6. V: duxerunt; L: deposuerunt, "brought down."

b6. L: "I saw."

c6. V: caniculos; L H: camelos, "camels."

d6. L adds "Here is light and joy and rejoicing and salvation (Mt 13:42); (and those) who did good things upon the earth; and there was no sorrow for them; and heavenly manna nourished them because they gave alms generously. Many are (here) who did not give because they did not have any (thing) from which to give (for) they have suffered on account of poverty. The needy, because they did not have any (alms) from which to give, said a good word; they were more firm in piety than others who did many good things. They praised the Lord who loved justice, for the great alm which will be around him is acceptable." H adds similarly "Here is light, joy, and health. And daily they have manna from heaven because they gave alms generously on earth. And many are here who did not give because they did not have any (thing) from which to give. Nevertheless, they also have a similar rest on account of the good will which they had. And therefore they praise the Lord, our God, who loved justice."

e6. Vs. 60 in MS L reads "And I saw all the judgments of sinners; and Michael, Gabriel, (and) Uriel came and pushed me into a flaming cloud and lifted me above one heaven and they lifted me above seven, and many thousands of angels came because I saw God's judgment of sinners, asking, 'Beseech the Lord on behalf of the sinners.' And they lifted me into the seventieth heaven to the entrance of the Lord, my God, (but) I have not merited to see another heaven" (cf. GkApEzra 5:7-11).

f6. L: "And I said."

g6. L: ad me, "to me." Cf. the usual mihī, nn. n, y, l2, d3, l3, y3, g4, o4, s4, w4, r5.

h6. L omits "And Ezra said."

i6. L: "You made it better for the animals than for people."

j6. L omits "And the Lord said."

k6. L omits "eternal."

l6. L adds orationem, "prayer."

m6. L: "And the blessed Ezra asked."

n6. V: intrent; L: acceperunt, "receive."

o6. V: fecerit; L: servierit, "serves."

QUESTIONS OF EZRA

(Date Unknown)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY M. E. STONE

The Questions of Ezra is a work that purports to relate a dialogue between the prophet Ezra and the angel of the Lord. The subject of the dialogue, which survived in two recensions, is the fate of the souls of men after death. The prophet asks about the fate of the righteous and sinners—the righteous are destined, he is told, for “great joy and eternal light” and the sinners for “the outer darkness and the eternal fire” (vs. 3). Next follows Ezra’s question about the fate of the sinners and the fact that nearly all men are sinners. What will be the fate of the souls, he asks, immediately after death (vs. 10)? A page is missing from the manuscript of one recension at this point, but from the second it can be surmised that there followed a discussion of the purpose of creation and the temporary places of the sinners (they are imprisoned by demons in the lower atmosphere) and the righteous (they rise to the Divinity in the upper atmosphere). There follows a characterization of the seven steps up to the Divinity and of the guardians of the divine throne (vss. 19–30) abounding in vivid and bizarre descriptions. The freeing of the souls from the hands of Satan through expiatory prayers is then discussed and, in recension B, the document concludes with a prediction of the resurrection and final judgment.

Texts

The Questions of Ezra is extant in two textual forms. The first is that published by Yovsēpʿiancʿ in his edition of the Armenian apocrypha¹ and first translated into English by J. Issaverdens.² Yovsēpʿiancʿ based his edition on a single manuscript, a Maštocʿ (Ritual), manuscript number 570 of the Library of the Mechitarist Fathers in Venice.³ The manuscript was written in A.D. 1208, and the Questions of Ezra occurs on folios 203r–206v.

In the present translation a second form of the Questions of Ezra is added to the published information. This is found in the Menologium (Lives of Saints) of the Armenian Church, in the fourth recension thereof, that was printed in Constantinople in 1730 (pp. 424–25).⁴ This printed text was compared with that of a seventeenth-century manuscript in the Bodleian Library, Oxford (MS Marsh 438, vol. 3, fol. 402). No major differences were to be observed between these two witnesses.⁵

The Venice text is here given first as recension A and the Menologium text as recension B. B differs from A in several respects:

1. It is much shorter but, even where the texts are parallel, it contains a number of details not in the longer A text.

¹ S. Yovsēpʿiancʿ, Uncanonical Books of the Old Testament, pp. 300–3 [in Arm.].

² J. Issaverdens, The Uncanonical Writings of the Old Testament, pp. 505–9.

³ B. Sargissian and S. Sargsian, Grand Catalogue of the Armenian Manuscripts of the Mechitarist Library in Venice, vol. 2 (Venice, 1966) pp. 55–66 (in Arm.).

⁴ On the Armenian Menologium, see J. Mércérian, “Introduction à l’étude des synaxaires arméniens,” Bulletin arménologique (Mélanges de l’Université de S. Joseph 40; Beirut, 1953).

⁵ Clearly a broad collation of MSS might produce some significant variants. See Stone, Sion 52 (1978) 54–60, where the text is published.

2. It seems to preserve text in two places where there is a physical lacuna in A: following verse 10 of A and following verse 40 of A.
3. It lacks verses 11–30 of A.

Original language and date

There is insufficient evidence to determine whether the writing was originally composed in Armenian or whether it was translated into Armenian from another language. Possible arguments based on literary considerations will be adduced in the next section. There seems no clear basis for establishing the date except to say that the writing is a Christian composition clearly based on Jewish models. There is no indication of provenance.

Composition and literary affinities

The Questions of Ezra should be viewed in the context of the apocryphal Ezra literature. Its general inspiration derives clearly from 4 Ezra, which may also have provided certain patterns of the questions posed. (See the marginal notes to the translation.) The amount of verbal parallelism is very limited, however, and decisive evidence whether dependence is on the extant Armenian version or on the lost Greek version of 4 Ezra is unclear. The contacts between the two writings are shared general ideas and not direct parallels. Special note should be taken of the seven steps or ways of ascent of the souls in the Questions of Ezra A 19–21, and the similar material in 4 Ezra 7:81–98. Beyond this, however, the very dialogue style and the subject matter indicate the dependence on 4 Ezra.

The general resemblance to the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra is also quite striking; both writings center on questions about the fate of the souls and share the dialogue form. The Latin Vision of Ezra is another form of this writing. The third body of apocryphal Ezra material with which the Questions of Ezra should be related is the extensive expansionary passages found in the Armenian version of 4 Ezra. These passages are dialogues on various theological issues inserted into the dialogue of 4 Ezra.⁶ Taken together, these writings constitute a fairly extensive body of literature, inspired by 4 Ezra and preserved in the Armenian tradition. (The apocryphal Ezra writings in various languages are discussed in the Introduction to GkApEzra.)

In a study of the Questions of Ezra published in Armenian in 1898, B. Sargissian pointed out certain parallels between it and two other Armenian texts, the Inquiries of St. Gregory the Illuminator and the Martyrdom of St. Kalistratos.⁷ He published the chief parallels with these writings in his work. Both contain dialogues concerning the fate of the souls of men. Sargissian is of the opinion that the Inquiries of Gregory is later than the Questions of Ezra of which he knew only recension A, but that the Martyrdom of Kalistratos is an Armenian translation of an older Greek source that may also have served the Questions of Ezra.⁸ Although the Martyrdom of Kalistratos contains closer verbal parallels to the Questions of Ezra than does the Inquiries of St. Gregory, it also has close parallels with this latter work. It is by no means certain, however, that this implies that it served as a source for the Questions of Ezra.⁹ This is particularly so in view of the affinities of the latter with the Ezra literature noted above, as well as with the text of recension B.

Concerning the composition of the writing, Sargissian suggests that the section A 31–40 is a later addition to an older description of the heavens. Moreover, he considers this older description to have some features in common with Zoroastrianism. This theory requires reevaluation in view of the new information to be gained from recension B. On the basis

⁶ See the publication of one such dialogue: M. E. Stone, "Some Features of the Armenian Version of IV Ezra," Le Muséon 79 (1966) 395–400. A translation based on an inadequate text may be found in Issaverdens, Uncanonical Writings, pp. 361–501. See now M. E. Stone, The Armenian Version of IV Ezra (Univ. of Pennsylvania Armenian Texts and Studies 1; Missoula, Mont., 1979).

⁷ B. Sargissian, Studies on the Uncanonical Writings of the Old Testament, pp. 452–82 (in Arm.). The text of parts of the Inquiries of St. Gregory is on pp. 465–69; that of extracts from the Martyrdom of St. Kalistratos is on pp. 475–78. The latter may also be found in P. Awgerian, Complete Lives and Martyrdoms of the Saints (Venice, 1810–14) vol. 6, pp. 489–94 (in Arm.).

⁸ Sargissian, Studies, pp. 469–77.

⁹ The final resolution of these issues must await the full publication of the Arm. texts involved.

of a comparison of the two recensions it may be suggested that the cosmological description from verses 16 to 30 is derived from a separate source, although the supposed Zoroastrian features are not as striking as Sargissian thought. This section is not represented in B.

The comparison of A and B thus seems to imply that two source documents are involved. The first contained the dialogue between the prophet and the angel concerning the fate of the souls. It comprised six parts: (1) A 1–10; (2) the section upon which B 4 is based, which fell in the lacuna after verse A 10; (3) A 11–15; (4) the section upon which B 6 is based; (5) A 31–40; and (6) a section corresponding to B 10–14. The second document comprised the dialogue about the ascent of the soul corresponding to A 16–30. This section is distinctive in its views and contains a pastiche of ideas drawn from older sources.

This analysis would contradict the view of Sargissian referred to above, for it is clear that the discussion of the fate of the souls belonged in the same document as the indubitably Christian section dealing with the freeing of the souls from Satan. This means that the writing as extant is Christian; but it probably draws upon older sources. The point in its development at which the description of the ascent of the souls was combined with the dialogue about the fate of the righteous and the wicked is unclear. If recension B was based on a form of the text in which this section did not occur, then we must say that it was incorporated subsequently into the original composition. If, on the other hand, the epitomist of B simply left it out, as he did other isolated verses of A, then this material may go back to an older source utilized by the person who put the Questions of Ezra together in its present shape in recension A.

The forty-day period of repentance (A 32) appears in a somewhat different form in another of the documents associated with the pseudepigraphical Ezra literature, the Apocalypse of Sedrach 13–14. In that writing there is emphasis on prayer and service of God that in general resembles that in the Questions of Ezra. This may, however, reflect merely a common concern and a similar response of monastic piety to similar issues (see vss. 31ff., n. q). In the Introduction to the Greek Apocalypse of Ezra the relationship between the Ezra apocrypha is discussed.

Theological importance

The central issue of this document is the fate of the souls of men after death and at the end of time. This issue devolves naturally from certain assumptions about the nature of God as revealed in his dealings with men. On the first hand God requites the righteous and wicked after death for their actions. Emphasis is laid on the fact that this requital is just and fitting “and those things in which God finds man, by those is he judged” (B 4). Yet God’s mercy is displayed; by means of prayer, repentance, and due memorial service, it is possible to gain release of the souls of men from the power of Satan who punishes them (A 31–36; B 9f.).

According to A 16–30, God is seated in the highest heaven, surrounded by angelic hosts, and his glory is such that sinful man in his weakness can only approach the throne of God; even the angels cannot see his face (A 24–26). The throne of God is situated opposite the garden (the heavenly paradise), and there is sublime light (A 21). He is surrounded by seraphim who sing the Trisagion to him perpetually (A 24), a picture derived ultimately, of course, from Isaiah, chapter 6.

Man is sinful and only the martyrs who died in tortures for the sake of God are seen to be righteous (A 7).

The details of the cosmological view of the document, based as it is on common hellenistic assumptions, have been set forth in the notes to A 16–20. There are seven heavenly spheres, the lower ones characterized by evil, negative traits, the upper ones by fiery, positive ones. Hell is in the third sphere. The soul of the righteous is led by an angel through these spheres until it reaches the presence of the Divinity. Apparently, in A 16, various fearsome and dangerous areas are described through which the soul passes with its angelic guide until it commences the ascent through the heavenly spheres. There is no suggestion of the inhabitants of the heavenly spheres beyond the list of the guardians around the divine throne (A 27–30).

¹⁰ The idea that the souls of the wicked find no rest until judgment, but wander about, is found in 4Ezra 7:80. This may have provided an impetus in the tradition for the introduction of these concepts, but the views are by no means identical.

On the other hand there are two quite distinctive angelological views that should be mentioned. The first is the idea of the good and evil angels who will come after death to take the souls of the righteous and the wicked, respectively. This idea bears a certain resemblance to Zoroastrianism, as pointed out in the note to A 15; however, clear parallels in older Jewish sources and some later Christian ones are also shown to exist, but the view, as it occurs here, is not to be found exactly in any other source. The other view touches on demonology. In the description of the intermediate state of the souls in B 6, it says that the souls of the righteous rise to the upper atmosphere, while those of the wicked are imprisoned in the lower atmosphere, held by demons. This idea is not found in the ancient Jewish sources and it seems to represent an adaptation of concepts of hellenistic religion in which the atmosphere is thought to be full of semidivine beings both good and bad, and according to which the soul of the righteous rises to the supralunar spheres. These ideas have been taken over and adapted to a description of the intermediate state of the souls, between death and resurrection. The punishment of the souls of the wicked in this intermediate state is then thought to be in the hands of demons or of Satan (A 31–33; B 12).¹⁰

This indicates that the dualistic views in which there is a contrast between angels and demons, corresponding to the contrast between the righteous and the sinners, are well established in this writing. What is not clear is the extent of cosmic dualism. At one level, there is a clear contrast of the earthly sphere and the heavenly spheres above it. At another, there is the expectation of an end-time, which suggests an opposition between this world and that to come. But neither of these views is developed as a dominant one in the document.

It is clear, from recension B in particular, that an end-time is expected, and that it is thought of in conventional terms. Gabriel will sound the trumpet, the souls will be reunited with the bodies, and the resurrected will pass in judgment before Christ at the time of his return (B 11–14). What is more distinctive is the view of the intermediate state, which includes the punishment of the souls of the wicked by demons in the atmosphere and the ascent of the souls of the righteous who will see the throne of God. The view of an intermediate state is derived, in general, from 4 Ezra, but here has received a special development.

Cultural importance

The Questions of Ezra is an interesting example of the development and Christianization of themes deriving from the great Jewish apocalypses of the period of the second Temple. The questions with which it deals, the fate of the souls of men and reward and punishment, are among those that have always aroused men to thought and speculation. This work is one of those developments that show the way in which various Christian churches developed and amplified themes of special interest to them.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 117f.

TEXTS

Recension A

Yovsēp'ianc', S. Uncanonical Books of the Old Testament. Venice, 1896; pp. 300–3. (In Arm.)

Recension B

Stone, M. E. "Two New Discoveries Concerning the Uncanonical Ezra Books," Sion 52 (1978) 54–60. (In Arm.)

TRANSLATION

Issaverdens, J. The Uncanonical Writings of the Old Testament. Venice, 1934²; pp. 505–9.

STUDIES

Sargissian, B. Studies on the Uncanonical Writings of the Old Testament. Venice, 1898; pp.
452–84. (In Arm.)

Stone, M. E. "The Apocryphal Literature in the Armenian Tradition," Proceedings of the Israel Academy of Sciences and Humanities 4 (1971) 59–77, 371–72.

THE QUESTIONS OF THE PROPHET EZRA OF THE ANGEL OF THE LORD CONCERNING THE SOULS OF MEN

Recension A

What is the fate of the righteous and the sinners?

- 1 Ezra the prophet saw the angel of God and asked him one question after another.^a B 1 2 And the angel approached him and said what will be at the consummation. •The 10, 4Ezra 7:75 prophet asked the angel and said, “What has God prepared for the righteous and the sinners? And at the time at which the day of the end arrives, what will become 3 of them? Where do they go, to honor or to tortures?”^b •The angel replied and said B 2; 4Ezra 7:38 to the prophet, “Great joy and eternal light have been prepared for the righteous and for the sinners there have been prepared the outer darkness^c and the eternal 4 fire.” •The prophet said to the angel, “Lord, who of the living has not sinned 4Ezra 3:35
5 against God? •And if that is so, then blessed are the beasts and the birds who do GkApEzra 5:26 not await resurrection and have not expected the end.^d •If you will crown the B 3; 4Ezra righteous, who have endured all tortures, and the prophets and the martyrs when 7:65ff.
they were taking stones and with a hammer were pounding their faces until their GkApEzra 1:21-6 innards were seen, •they were tortured for your sake. Have mercy upon us sinners 23
7 who have been occupied and have been seized by Satan.”^e 31 GkApEzra 6:21

The prophet rebuked

- 8 The angel replied and said, “If there is someone above you, do not talk with 9 him anymore, otherwise great evil will befall you.” •The prophet said to the angel, 10 “Lord, I would speak a little more with you, reply to me! •When the day of the 2; 4Ezra 7:75 end arrives and he takes the soul, will he assign it to the place of punishment or to the place of honor until the Parousia? [. . .]”

The day of the end^f

- 11 The angel replied and said, “Do not wait until the day of the end, but like a 12 flying eagle hasten to do good deeds and mercy. •For that day is fearsome, urgent, 13 and exacting. It does not permit care of children or of possessions. •It comes and arrives suddenly like someone merciless and impartial, it takes a captive unexpectedly, surely. Whether he weeps or mourns, it will have no mercy.

The good and evil angels

- 14 “But when the day of the end arrives, a good angel comes to the good soul and B 6 an evil one to the evil. Just as someone sent by the kings to doers of evil deeds

a. Lit. “matter by matter.”

b. Here and in vs. 3 the reference appears to be to final rewards and punishments. Yet vss. 14–17 perhaps refer to an intermediate state; see particularly B 6–8, 11–14. This seems to be further evident from vs. 10.

c. See GkApEzra 4:38, n.

d. The form of this common expression here is closer to 4Ezra 7:65ff. than the similar sentiment as formulated in GkApEzra 1:21–23.

e. Compare the idea, expressed here in Christian terms, with 4Ezra 8:26–28.

f. Following this vs., according to Sargissian in Studies, p. 453, a page of MS has been lost. The text contained by B 8 probably derives from the missing section (see Introduction). The Parousia is the second coming of Christ, expected to occur at the end of days.

g. The idea of the impartiality of the day of judgment expressed in vss. 11–13 is prominent in 4Ezra, but it is formulated there in different terms: See 4Ezra 5:42; 7:33–35, 66, 102–15. There, moreover, intercessory prayer is denied as a possibility; here vss. 31–40 are a paean of praise to it.

15 and good deeds recompenses good to the good and evil to the evil, •even in the B 6 same way a good angel comes to the good soul and an evil one to the evil.^h Not 16 that the angel is evil, but each (man's) deeds (are evil).ⁱ •He takes the soul, brings it to the east; they pass through frost, through snow, through darkness, through hail, through ice, through storm, through hosts of Satan, through streams, through the winds of terrible rains, through terrible and astounding paths, through narrow 17 defiles, and through high mountains.^j •O wondrous way, for one foot is behind the 4Ezra 7:7-8 18 other and before it are fiery rivers!^k •The prophet was amazed and said, "O, that wondrous and terrible way!"

The seven steps to the Divinity^k

19 The angel said, "To that way there are seven camps and seven steps to the 4Ezra 7:81-99
 20 Divinity, if I can make (someone) pass along it. •Because the first lodgings are 22.28 bad and wondrous; the second fearsome and indescribable; the third hell and icy cold; the fourth quarrels and wars;^l in the fifth, then, investigation—if he is just, he shines, and if he is a sinner, he is darkened; in the sixth, then, the soul of the 21 righteous man sparkles like the sun; •in the seventh, then, having brought (him)
 I make him approach the great throne of the Divinity, opposite the garden, facing the glory of God^m where the sublime light is."

h. ApPaul 11–16 describes groups of good and evil angels who receive the souls of the righteous and wicked men: Cf. 2Bar 51:1–6; TAB A 17, B 13. The idea of personification of a man's deeds in the form of two women occurs commonly in Zoroastrianism; see J. Duchesne-Guillemin, La Religion de l'Iran ancien (Paris, 1962) pp. 332f. This is not necessarily the direct source of the passage here. Other features of Iranian eschatology, notably the Činval bridge of testing, are noticeably absent. Cf. the rather different story in Xenophon (Memorabilia 2.1.20ff.).

i. This observation may be compared with Armenian 4Ezra 8:62L, there emphasizing the essential goodness of creation: "That which was created for good, he did not use well and he (man) sinned. Not that I created anything evil, but everything which I created was very good; each thing which existed, existed for its own purpose, just as iron existed not that it might kill, but that it might work the ground and be of use to all."

j. This description apparently refers either to the first part of the ascent through the heavenly spheres (see vss. 20–21) or, more likely, to some preliminary stage. The east as the direction in which the soul is led should be contrasted with GkApEzra 5:21 (see also n.). There east is the direction of Paradise. In 1En 22:1 Sheol is in the west (cf. also 23:1), while the gardens of spices are in the east (chs. 28–32) and Paradise in the north (ch. 32). In 2En, hell is on the northern side. The presence of the meteorological phenomena in the lower heavens is commonplace, e.g. 2En 5; TLevi 3:2. With the list of phenomena in 2En 40:1–11, cf. 1En 34; 41:3f.

k. ApPaul 14, 16 relates how the angels lead the souls to the presence of God. The idea of seven steps of ascent to the Divinity (which correspond to seven heavens) is widely known. On the seven heavens, see H. Bietenhard, Die himmlische Welt im Urchristentum und Spätjudentum (WUNT 2; Tübingen, 1951) pp. 3–8, for the chief sources. The idea of the seven spheres that bear the planets and that form stages for the ascent of the soul is common in hellenistic thought, and these are sometimes described as the steps of a ladder; see the sources assembled by H. Lewy, The Chaldean

Oracles and Theurgy (Cairo, 1956) p. 413. The term "lodging" is not a common expression in this context but may perhaps be compared with "habitations" (used differently) in 4Ezra 7:80. The seven lodgings here are comparable with the seven "ways" or "orders" of the ascent of the soul after death in 4Ezra 7:80–98. Are the "lodgings" the same as the mansiones or "way stations" of Roman travel and route descriptions, such as the Peutinger Table?

l. In this description, the lower stages, apparently heavens, have a negative character. Such may also be observed in the description of the heavens, e.g. in 2En and 3Bar. Hell, in the sources that bear this character, is often in the third heaven, so 3Bar 4:1–6; 2En 10; TIsaac (apud G. H. Box, Testament of Abraham [London, 1927] pp. 67–70). The idea of hell's being associated with icy cold may be compared with TLevi 3:2; ApPaul 42. The description in this vs. is paralleled by that in vs. 22, which refers to terrors, quarrels and wars, burning heat. A similar series of terms also occurs in vs. 28—"quarrels, wars, burning heat"—but there it is preceded by "thunders, earthquakes." The "burning heat" of vss. 22 and 28 is not referred to in vs. 20, and the term may refer to the fiery environs of the Godhead; cf. Dan 7:9–10; 1En 14:19; 71:5–6; etc. Alternatively it might refer to hell, but then it would be in the wrong position in the series. The "thunder" and "earthquakes" of vs. 28 are not echoes of anything in either vs. 20 or vs. 22. The heavenly repositories of meteorological phenomena are widely known. Elements of this description may be drawn from 4Ezra 3:19, in which vs. God's descent on Sinai is described: "And your glory passed through the four gates of fire and earthquake and wind and ice." In the present text only "wind" is missing. Cf. also the order of elements in the list of revealed things in 2Bar 59:11—innumerable angels, flaming hosts, splendor of the lightnings, voice of thunders, chiefs of the angels, treasures of light, etc.

m. The glory of God is also the climax of the ascent of the souls through the seven "ways" or "orders" according to 4Ezra 7:87, 98, and elsewhere.

God cannot be seen

22 The prophet said to the angel, “My lord, when you cause him to pass through 20,28 such terrors, through quarrels, through wars, through burning heat, why do you not cause him to meet the Divinity, rather than causing him to approach only the 23 throne?” •The angel said to the prophet, “You are one of the foolish men and you 4Ezra 4:10-11
 24 think according to human nature. •I am an angel and I perpetually serve God, and I have not seen the face of God. How do you say that sinful man should be caused 25 to meet the Divinity? •For the Divinity is fearful and wondrous and who dares to 26 look toward the uncreated Divinity? •If a man should look he will melt like wax 30; 4Ezra 13:4 before the face of God: for the Divinity is fiery and wondrous. For such guardians ApSedr 2 stand around the throne of the Divinity.

Those around the divine throne

27 “There are stations, . . . ,ⁿ hollows, fiery ones, girdle wearers, (and) lanterns.
 28 At that place there are thunders, earthquakes, quarrels, wars, burning heat,^o fire 20,22
 29 wearers, flame-swarming ones, (and) fiery hosts. •Around him are incorporeal Isa 6:1-3 seraphim, six-winged cherubim: With two wings they cover their face, and with two wings their feet, and flying with two, they cry, ‘Holy, Holy, (Holy) Lord of 30 Hosts, the heaven and earth are full of your glory.’^p •Such guardians stand around 26 the throne of the Divinity.”

Freeing of the soul from Satan

31 The prophet asked the angel and said, “Lord, what will become of us, for we 7; B 7 are all sinners and seized in the hands of Satan? Now, by what means are we 32 delivered or who will bring us forth from his hands?” •The angel answered and B 8-9 said, “If someone remains after death, father or mother or brother or sister or son 4Ezra 7:102-5 or daughter or any other Christian, and he offers prayers,^q with fasts, for forty 1Cor 15:29 33 days, there will be great rest and mercy through the sacrifice of Christ. •For Christ B 9 was sacrificed for our sake upon the cross and for six ages he delivered (our) soul LAE 44 34 from the hands of Satan. •How the soul is delivered through that offered reverently 35 by a priest, if he fulfills the forty days in such a way as is pleasing to God!^r For forty days he will remain in the church not going in the public places, but from 36 time to time will recite the Psalms of David together with prayers. •It is this which brings us forth from the hands of Satan. If not, give to the poor.

The nature of prayer

37 “For your prayers are thus: just as a farmer goes forth, comes to sow, and the Mt 13:22 shoot comes forth joyous and graceful and desires to produce numerous fruit, and ApSedr 13-14 thorn and weeds also come forth and choke (it) and do not let numerous fruit be

n. The Arm. word occurring at this point is unknown and does not have a clear etymology. Sargissian (Studies, pp. 470f.) suggests that the word manasruank' derives from Avestan manah + sravha, apparently supposed to mean “beautiful spirits.” A forced Arm. etymology might be derived from the stem man-, “spin,” and the word sur, “sword,” i.e. “those of spinning swords.” The rest of the strange terms in this vs. and in the latter part of vs. 28 seem to refer to classes of angels, but they are unparalleled in the descriptions of the guardians of the divine throne. Sargissian reports that the Inquiries of St. Gregory substitutes the symbols of the Four Evangelists for the difficult angelic names. Throughout vs. 27, the Armenian reads lit. “these are hollow, these are fiery ones,” etc. In vs. 28 it reads “these are earthquakes” and similarly up to “burning heat.” From “burning heat” until the end of the vs. it reads “there are fire wearers,” etc. Note also that the word “heat” is lit. plural in vs. 22 and vs. 28.

o. The words from “thunders” to “burning heat” appear to be out of place. The list of beings surrounding the throne of God is distorted by these features that apparently appertain to the lower heavens; see vs. 20, n.

p. This vs. is almost a quotation of Isa 6:2-3, adapted so as to fit the literary context.

q. On the prayer of the righteous man as efficacious in bringing repentance, see GkApEzra 5:10 commentary and ApPaul 44.

r. The original is highly confusing; thus, the non-verbal sentence.

38 assembled.^s • Similarly, also you, when you go inside the church and desire to offer prayers before the Divinity, the cares of this world and the deceit of greatness 39 (wealth) come forth and choke you and do not let numerous fruit be sown. • For if your prayer were such as Moses wept for forty days and spoke with God mouth 40 to mouth, • likewise also Elijah was taken up to heaven in a fiery chariot, likewise
 Daniel also pray[ed] in the li[ons'] den [. . .]

Ex 24:18
 Num 12:8
 Ex 33:11
 v. 40
 2Kgs 2:11f.
 Dan 6

(See Recension B, 10–14.)

Recension B

1 He saw the angel of God and asked concerning the righteous and sinners when A 1-2
 2 they go forth from this world. • The angel said, “For the righteous there is light A 3
 3 and rest, eternal life, but for the sinners, unending tortures.” • Ezra said, “If that A 5 is so, then blessed are the animals and the beasts of the field and the creeping 4 things and the birds of heaven who do not await resurrection and judgment.” • The angel said, “You sin in saying this, for God has made everything for the sake of man and man for the sake of God. And those things in which God finds man, by 5 those is he judged.” • Ezra said, “When you take the souls of men, where will 6 you bring them?” • The angel said, “I bring the souls of the righteous to worship A 14-15
 God and establish them in the upper atmosphere, and the souls of the sinners are 7 seized by the demons who are imprisoned in the atmosphere.” • And Ezra said, A 31
 8 “And when will the soul which is seized by Satan be delivered?” • The angel said, A 32
 “When the soul has someone as a good memorial in this world, (this) one releases
 9 it from Satan through prayer and (acts of) mercy.” • Ezra said, “By what means?” A 32-33
 The angel said, “By prayer, by (acts of) mercy, and by sacrifices.” (Ezra said)
 10 “If the sinner’s soul has no good memorial, which helps him, what will happen
 11 to him?” • The angel said to him, “Such a one is in the hand of Satan until the 13
 12 coming of Christ, when the trumpet of Gabriel sounds. • Then the souls are freed 13 from the hands of Satan and soar down from the atmosphere. • And they come and are united each with its body which had been returned to dust and which the sound 14 of the trumpet had built and aroused and renewed. • And it raises (it) up before Christ our God who comes to judge (those on) the earth, that is the righteous and the wicked, and requites each for his deeds.”

11: Mt 24:31
 1Cor 15:51f.
 1Thes 4:16

Through the petition of your divinely narrated prophets, have pity upon the readers of this writing.

s. A similar problem as previous footnote: It is impossible to clarify it with original text.

t. Lit. “if the soul . . . who releases it . . .”

REVELATION OF EZRA

(prior to Ninth Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY D. A. FIENSY

The Revelation of Ezra is a kalandologion,¹ or almanac describing the nature of the year depending on the day of the week on which the year begins. Natural conditions such as rainfall and drought, the severity of winter, and the abundance of crops can be predicted; while the fate of national rulers can also be foreseen.

Text

G. Mercati² edited three Latin manuscripts in 1901 that purported to be revelations of Ezra. His oldest manuscript (MS A),³ which is translated here, was produced in the ninth century.⁴

Original language

There is no reason to conclude that this text is a translation. Grammatical and syntactical evidence is lacking for a Greek or Semitic original.⁵ The original language, then, is probably Latin.

Date

The latest possible date for this text is the ninth century, since the earliest extant manuscript comes from that period. However, kalandologia were obviously composed prior to the ninth century and had become very popular by that time. Nicephorus (c. 806–15) condemned the use of certain “profane” books, among them brontologia,⁶ selēnodromia,⁷ and kalandologia.⁸ Thus the composition of this text may have been well before the ninth century.

¹ See A. A. Sophocles, Greek Lexicon of the Roman and Byzantine Periods (Cambridge, 1914) p. 621; F. Boll and C. Bezold, Stern Glaube und Sterndeutung (Leipzig, 1931) pp. 159, 186.

² Note di letteratura biblica e cristiana antica, pp. 74–79.

³ Palat. Lat. 1449, fol. 119^v–120.

⁴ Mercati's MSS B and C (which are actually later recs.) date from the 12th and 15th cent. respectively. For Gk. MSS see F. Boll, F. Cumont, G. Kroll, and A. Olivieri, eds., Catalogus codicum astrologicorum Graecorum (Brussels, 1898–1932). The kalandologia listed in it attributed to Ezra range from the 12th to the 16th cent., three hundred or more years after Mercati's MS A. Although these texts are similar in form to the Lat., they are altogether different compositions.

⁵ It must be asked whether the document is a translation due to the many astrological texts extant in Gk. (see Boll et al., Catalogus) and to the numerous Heb. and Ar. astrological texts that were translated into Lat. See K. Kohler, “Astrology,” JE, vol. 2, pp. 241–45, and the bibliography given there, especially M. Steinschneider, Die Hebraischen Übersetzungen des Mittelalters und die Juden als Dolmetscher (Graz, 1956) pp. 186, 501–649, 666.

⁶ Predictions based on thunder. See Sophocles, Lexicon. An example is found in Boll et al., Catalogus, vol. 10, pp. 58f.

⁷ Predictions based on the course of the moon. See Sophocles, Lexicon. An example is found in Boll et al., Catalogus, vol. 10, pp. 243–47.

⁸ I translate literally the text found in PG 100, p. 852, Canon 3: “The Apocalypse of Paul and those (books) called brontologies, selenodromies, and calendologies must not be received, for they are profane.” See the comments of J. A. Fabricius, Codex apocryphus Novi Testamenti (Hamburg, 1703) vol. 2, pp. 952f., on this passage.

Provenance

If the work was composed in Latin it originated from Western Europe or North Africa. The work is evidently the product of a Christian, since the author uses the expression "the Lord's Day."

Historical importance

The Revelation of Ezra demonstrates the importance of Ezra as an astrological figure. It was probably due to the popularity of 4 Ezra⁹ that "Ezra" became the most common pseudonym for prognosticators in the Middle Ages.¹⁰ In addition to the Latin manuscripts edited by Mercati there are numerous Greek texts¹¹ as well as English and Old French prognostications that claim Ezra as their author.¹²

Relation to non-canonical literature¹³

The Revelation of Ezra is strikingly similar to the Treatise of Shem. Both documents attest to the same belief: The beginning of the year determines the nature of the year. The difference between the two is that in Shem it is the zodiacal sign that determines the year, while in Ezra it is the day of the week. If Shem was composed in the first century B.C. (see the contribution in this volume), it may be the prototype of the genre to which the Revelation of Ezra belongs.

The Revelation of Ezra also bears a resemblance to the Testament of Solomon. As Solomon became for Jews the magician par excellence, so at a later period Ezra's name was associated with astrology and he became for Christians (and perhaps for Jews) the prognosticator par excellence.

The best parallels to the Revelation of Ezra are other medieval kalandologia. A Latin text attributed to Bede¹⁴ and several anonymous Greek *kalandologia*¹⁵ are extant in addition to those attributed to Ezra cited above. Although they differ in details, they are identical in structure.¹⁶ They begin with something like: If the first of January is on Sunday, such and such will occur during the year. The formula is then repeated for each day of the week. The authors share the same interests: the success of the harvest, the weather, wars, plagues, and the fate of national rulers.

⁹ According to M. R. James, The Fourth Book of Ezra (T&S 3.2; Cambridge, 1895) p. lxxxix.

¹⁰ See Boll and Bezold, Sternglaube, p. 175, who say that although the names Aristotle, Melampus, Adam, David, and Solomon were used, Ezra's name was most popular.

¹¹ Gk. astrological texts similar to our Revelation of Ezra (and attributed to Ezra) are cited and extracted by: C. Tischendorf, Apocalypses Apocryphae (Hildesheim, 1866, 1966) pp. xiif. This same MS is described by F. Nau, "Opusculs astrologiques d'Esdras," Revue de l'Orient chrétien 2, second series (1907) 15f.; J. A. Fabricius, Codex pseudepigraphus Veteris Testamenti (Hamburg, 1722) p. 1162; C. Tischendorf, "Versuch einer vollständigen Einleitung in die Offenbarung des Johannes und die apokalyptische Literatur überhaupt," Theologische Studien und Kritiken 24 (1851) 430f.; and numerous places in Boll et al., Catalogus, for example, vol. 4, pp. 44, 77; vol. 5, part 4, pp. 23, 69, 106, 156; vol. 8, part 3, pp. 17, 26, 75, 88; vol. 12, pp. 23, 46 etc. (see the index to each vol.).

¹² See R. L. Bensley, The Missing Fragment (Cambridge, 1875) pp. 80f., who gives bibliography for the English and French texts and argues that the "Erra Pater" of the English books is a corruption of "Ezra Pater." E. F. Bosanquet, English Printed Almanacks and Prognostications (London, 1917) p. 163, extracts a text of Erra Pater: "Pronostycacion For euer of Erra Pater: A Iewe borne in Iewery."

¹³ See J. H. Charlesworth, "Jewish Astrology in the Talmud, Pseudepigrapha, the Dead Sea Scrolls, and Early Palestinian Synagogues" HTR 70 (1977) 183–200, for the influence of astrology on the pseudepigrapha as well as on ancient Jewish literature in general.

¹⁴ PL 90, p. 951. Bede lived in the 8th cent.

¹⁵ See the text edited by R. Wünsch, "Zu Lydus de Ostentis," Byzantinische Zeitschrift 5 (1896) 419f. (Codex Vaticanus gr. 1823, fol. 103"); Boll et al., Catalogus, vol. 7, p. 126; vol. 10, pp. 151f., 153f. C. D. F. Du Cange, "Kalandologia" glossarium ad scriptores mediae et infimae graecitatis (Lugduni, 1688) vol. 1, p. 548, also prints on anonymous kalandologion.

¹⁶ But I have only had access to the following texts: the text attributed to Bede, Du Cange's text, the texts printed in the appendices of Catalogus, vol. 7, p. 126 (Codex Monacensis 7, fol. 132^v), and vol. 10, pp. 151f. (Codex Atheniensis 11, fol. 24), that printed by Wünsch, Byzantinische Zeitschrift 5 (1896) 419f., and extracts in Tischendorf, Apocalypses, pp. xiiif. and Theologische Studien und Kritiken 24 (1851) 430f. The other kalandologia to which I refer are listed and described in various publications already cited.

Theological emphasis

The author believed that the nature of the year was predetermined by the day of the week on which it began. Though the author may have been at least nominally Christian, he made no attempt to reconcile such fatalism with Christian belief.¹⁷

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 118f.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 94f.

Mercati, G. Note di letteratura biblica e cristiana antica. Studi e Testi 5; Rome, 1901.

¹⁷ As we find in Clementine Recognitions 10.12 (ANF 3) and Firmicius Maternus, Mathesis, where the stars can only influence one's behavior but the final choice is one's own. See C. McIntosh, The Astrologers and their Creed: an Historical Outline (New York, 1969) pp. 59–62.

THE REVELATION OF EZRA

The revelation which was made to Ezra and the children of Israel concerning the nature of the year through^a the beginning of January.

- 1 If the first day of January comes on the Lord's Day,^b it makes a warm winter, a wet spring, a windy autumn, good crops, abundance of cattle, sufficient honey, good vintages, plenty of beans, successful gardens. (But) young men will die, there will be battles and great robberies, (and) something new will be heard about kings and rulers.
- 2 The Day of the Moon (Monday) makes both winter (and) summer moderate.^c There will be great floods and sickness, infantry warfare,^d changes of rulers, many wives will sit in lamentation, there will be much ice,^e kings will die, (there will be) a good vintage, bees will die.
- 3 The Day of Mars (Tuesday) makes a severe and gloomy winter, spring snow, rainy summer, (and) a dry autumn. Grain will be high-priced. (There will be) a destruction of pigs, (and) a sudden plague among cattle. Sailing (will be) dangerous, (and) honey sufficient; flax (will be) high-priced, fires (will be) numerous, beans, garden vegetables, (and) oil will be abundant. Women will die and kings (also will die). The vintage (will be) troubled.
- 4 The Day of Mercury (Wednesday): productiveness of crops, a good vintage, lack of fruits, success in business, a destruction of men, a warm winter. Autumn will be moderate. (There will be) dangers from the sword, plenty of oil, looseness of the bowels and entrails. Women will die, there will be famine in diverse places (and) a good summer. Something new will be heard (and) there will be no honey.
- 5 The Day of Jupiter (Thursday): (There will be) worthlessness of grain; meat (will be) high-priced (and) there will be an) abundance of fruits. There will be less honey; winter (will be) moderate, spring windy, autumn good, summer good. (There will be) a destruction of pigs (and) much rain; rivers will flood.^f There will be sufficient oil, the crop will spoil, beans will be mixed,^g and (there will be) peace.
- 6 The Day of Venus (Friday) makes a moderate winter, a bad summer, dry autumn, worthless grain, a good vintage, inflammation of the eyes. Infants will die, there will be an earthquake, (there will be) peril for kings; oil (will be) abundant, sheep and bees will perish.
- 7 The Day of Saturn (Saturday) makes a windy winter, a bad spring, a summer (which) changes as it is harassed by storms, a dry autumn, scarcity of grain (and) high-priced flax. Fevers will spread,^h people will be harassed by various ailments, old men will die.ⁱ

a. Lat. per, "through" or "by means of." The meaning is that the nature of the year is determined on the first day or beginning of January.

b. The days of the week are named after the seven planets except for the first day where dies dominicus replaced solis dies. Thus the dies Lunae is Monday, etc. See the contributions on "Week" in The Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church (ed. F. L. Cross and E. A. Livingstone, London, 1974) p. 1464, and in Harper's Dictionary of Classical Literature and Antiquities (ed. H. T. Peck, New York, 1897) p. 1669. Also see R. L. Poole, Medieval Reckonings of Time (London, 1935) pp. 17f.

c. Lat. facit hiemem aestatem communem temperatam. Mercati's later recs. have produced two different readings: MS B, erit hyems communis, vernus et estas temperati, "Winter will be ordinary, spring and summer moderate." MS C, hyems erit aspera, ver communis et estas ventosa, "Winter will be harsh, spring ordinary, and summer windy."

d. Lat. bella militum, "wars of foot soldiers."

e. This seems to conflict with the moderate winter mentioned just above.

f. Lat. exeo, "to spread abroad," usually of a report. See A. Souter, A Glossary of Later Latin (Oxford, 1949) p. 136.

g. Lat. promiscua. Perhaps it means that several varieties of beans will grow together.

h. Lat. dominentur, "will have dominion."

i. The outlook for a year beginning on Saturday is wholly gloomy, while the other days bring mixed expectations. Perhaps this is due to the ancients' belief that the planet Saturn's influence was only baneful. See Firmicius Maternus, Mathesis 3.2, Marcus Manilius, Astronomicum 2.

APOCALYPSE OF SEDRACH

(Second to Fifth Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY S. AGOURIDES

The Apocalypse of Sedrach begins with a sermon by Sedrach on the necessity of unfeigned love and on its paradigmatic expression in the sacrifice of the Son of God. At the conclusion of the sermon, Sedrach hears the voice of an angel and is taken up into the presence of the Lord. Sedrach asks the Lord why the world was created, and when the Lord replies that it was created for man, Sedrach reproaches him for the condition of man in the world. Sedrach's objections are centered on the problem of evil in the world, while the answers offered by the Lord in reply to Sedrach's charges are centered on man's own responsibility for evil. In the end, Sedrach pleads that the Lord will be merciful to men.

At this point, the Lord directs his only begotten Son to take the soul of Sedrach and place it in Paradise. Sedrach resists the attempt with a series of questions and lamentations. Christ reminds Sedrach that he has been promised Paradise, but still Sedrach resists, for he is concerned with the fate of sinners. The Lord promises Sedrach that if a man lives a hundred years of sin and then repents for only three years, he will be saved. Then Sedrach, with the help of the archangel Michael, gradually persuades the Lord to reduce the required period of repentance to twenty days. Having been thus satisfied, Sedrach allows his soul to be taken to Paradise.

Although the word "apocalypse" is not found in either the title or the body of the text, the ascent of the seer into heaven to speak with God face to face certainly justifies the classification of this work as an apocalypse. The seer is identified only as Sedrach; but, since the only Sedrach known to Byzantine writers was the character from Daniel 3:12, it is probable that he is intended as the author.

Text

The Apocalypse of Sedrach is preserved in only one fifteenth-century Greek manuscript, which is located in the Bodleian Library: Cod. Misc. Gr. 56, fols. 92–100. The text was published in part by M. R. James.¹ James omitted as irrelevant to the main theme of the work the largest part of the sermon on love with which the manuscript begins. The text published by James was translated into English by A. Rutherford.² The text published here issues from an independent reading of the Greek and differs with that of James in several respects, the principal difference being that the text of the sermon is here included in its entirety.

Original language

There is no reason to doubt that Greek was the original language of the Apocalypse of ¹ I am grateful to the editor and his staff for polishing this introduction. M. R. James, Apocrypha anecdota, pp. 130–37.

² A. Rutherford, "The Apocalypse of Sedrach," ANF, vol. 10, pp. 175–80.

Sedrach. The extant Greek text is replete with patristic and Byzantine vocabulary and syntax, although elements of modern Greek also appear.

Date

Although there is general agreement that the Apocalypse of Sedrach dates, in its final redacted form, to the Byzantine period, the probability that the apocalypse is shaped out of much earlier material is accepted by most scholars. It is the opinion of M. R. James and A.-M. Denis that the Apocalypse of Sedrach received its final form around the tenth or eleventh century A.D., but that the author drew upon materials which extended back to an earlier age.³ M. E. Stone and J. H. Charlesworth have argued that the materials so used must have dated from the early centuries of the present era.⁴

Much of the doctrinal content of Sedrach is atypical of medieval Christianity and many other elements of the Apocalypse are more Jewish than Christian (see below, "Provenance"). Where "Christ" is briefly mentioned, the term seems to be a substitute for the name of the Jewish archangel Michael. While no precise dates can be given, it appears that the Apocalypse was originally composed between A.D. 150 and 500, and that it was joined together with the sermon on love and received its final form shortly after A.D. 1000.

Provenance

The Apocalypse of Sedrach appears to be from a Jewish original for the following reasons: First, the role of Sedrach as explorer of the divine will and mediator for divine compassion does not fit the Christian tradition of either the earlier or later period. In popular Christian tradition this role is attributed to Mary, the mother of God. For example, in the Apocalypse of Mary, she travels through hell, sees the torments of the sinners, and tearfully pleads with her son for them. As a result he grants them a respite of fifty days in Paradise between Easter and Pentacost.

Second, the final period of twenty days' repentance agreed to by the Lord at Sedrach's pleading seems to be in conflict with much of later Church discipline. Most of the serious sins in the later Church require several years of repentance.⁵

Third, Christian elements such as the incarnation or the cross are conspicuously absent. Christ plays practically no role at all. He is sent for Sedrach's soul; but this motif probably originates with the role of Michael,⁶ who appears elsewhere in the text. The Christian redactor here has substituted the figure of Christ for the figure of Michael.

Fourth, one can detect a change not only in content but in style, when moving from the first section to the last. The difference between the bombastic rhetoric of the sermon on love and the more subtle tones of the apocalypse itself is readily apparent. The contrast is accentuated by a sudden transition from the sermon to the ascent of Sedrach. All of these indicate that the author of the second section is not the author of the Christian homily.

Fifth, the theme of man's debate with God is typically Jewish and the reluctant reduction of the period of penitence at the badgering of the favored seer qualifies as the leit-motif of the Apocalypse of Sedrach. Other Jewish features of the Apocalypse are the bat qol received by the seer, and the belief that the soul filled the entire body.⁷ The tradition about the creation of Adam and Eve, and their comparison to the sun and the moon, is typically Jewish as is also the angelology of this document. Finally, those things represented as most beloved by God are: "among the rivers, (the) Jordan; among the cities, Jerusalem."⁸

It appears that the original Sedrach apocalypse was at some time put together with one or more Christian sermons on love, repentance, orthodoxy, and the second coming of Christ. In the course of time all but the sermon on love and the apocalypse itself dropped out, with the remainder of the collection still bearing the more inclusive title, but now being attributed to the main character, Sedrach.

³ James, Apocrypha anecdota, p. 128f.; and A.-M. Denis, Introduction, p. 98.

⁴ M. E. Stone, "Prophets, Lives of the," EncyJud, vol. 13, cols. 1149f.; and J. H. Charlesworth, PMR, p. 178.

⁵ See J. Nicolaidis, ed., The Rudder, trans. D. Cummings (Chicago, 1957) pp. 931-52.

⁶ As it is, for example, in TAB.

⁷ As R. Meier relates in GenR 14:9.

⁸ ApSedr 8:2.

It may be fairly stated that the sermon on love is a product of Byzantine Christianity and that the apocalypse itself originated in Jewish circles, but nothing further can be said about the place of composition.

Theological importance

The main theme of the Apocalypse of Sedrach is the love of God and his compassion for the sinner and full understanding of man's weakness. This theme ties together both the sermon and apocalypse portions of the text and gives them a thematic unity which M. R. James did not recognize. Particular emphasis is placed on the mercy of God, who reduces the period of repentance required of even the most inveterate sinner, and who, in a unique passage (14:5), grants salvation even to the unbaptized. The mercy of God, for the author of Sedrach, overcomes all confessional barriers if only man will repent. Even man's capacity to sin, the gift of free will, is granted to man as a result of God's unbounded love. Thus God's love and mercy are emphasized in three ways: first, in his granting to humans their freedom of choice; second, in his accepting of long-delayed repentance; and third, in his granting salvation to the unbaptized. The universalism evident in the unrestricted application of God's mercy to all is contradictory to most contemporaneous Christian views on the subject, and only serves to emphasize how thin the Christian veneer on this document is.

The analogy of a prodigal son found in the apocalypse has a most un-Christian twist to it: The father does not forgive, but takes back the inheritance from the prodigal and casts him out. It is uncertain whether this analogy is related to the famous parable of Jesus, but if it is, it may represent a Jewish form of the parable that was later adapted by Jesus to make a different point.

Finally, the description of the beauty of the human body (" . . . your hair is known from Theman, your eyes from Bosra . . .")⁹ and the lamentation over the prospect of separation from it would surely have brought a blush to the cheek of many Christian ascetics. Sedrach laments over the human body that decays in the grave as one laments over the body of his sweetheart. This glorification of the body seems anomalous with the ascetic ideal of later Christianity.

Relation to canonical and non-canonical books

Scholars recognize the indebtedness of the Apocalypse of Sedrach to the canonical book of Job, the Apocalypse of Baruch, and the Testament of Abraham. The most striking parallels, however, are to the book of 4 Ezra. James cites many resemblances in language and subject matter, and there is no question that the author of the Apocalypse of Sedrach has borrowed from 4 Ezra.¹⁰ There are major differences between Ezra and Sedrach. The latter is not set against a background of biblical events, not even those relating to the person of Sedrach. There is no eschatological interest about the end-time, and the national problems of the Jews are not mentioned. However, the main theme of the Apocalypse of Sedrach, namely, the compassion of God for the lost sinner, is also one of the main themes of 4 Ezra.

The idea that man was created superior to the angels, who were invited to worship him, and that Satan's refusal to prostrate himself led to his exile from heaven, is found in the Life of Adam and Eve.¹¹

The statement of J. H. Charlesworth that "very little critical work has been published on this pseudepigraphon" is woefully correct.¹² A more complete introduction and a commentary to the text of Sedrach are needed. It is hoped that the present translation will stimulate further research on this rich but neglected document.

⁹ ApSedr 11:1.

¹⁰ James, Apocrypha anecdotae, pp. 128f.

¹¹ Vita (ApMos) 16.

¹² Charlesworth, PMR, p. 178.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, J. H., PMR, pp. 178–82.

Delling, Bibliographie, p. 165.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 97–99.

James, M. R. Apocrypha anecdota, T&S 2.3; Cambridge, 1893; repr. 1963; pp. 130–37.

Knippenberg, R. “Sedrachapokalypse,” BHH, vol. 3, col. 1754.

Meier, R. “Sedrach-Apokalypse,” *RGG*³, vol. 5, col. 1631.

Rutherford, A. “The Apocalypse of Sedrach,” ANF, vol. 10, pp. 175–80.

Stone, M. E. “Prophets, Lives of the,” EncyJud, vol. 13, cols. 1149f.

THE APOCALYPSE OF SEDRACH

A sermon by the holy and blessed Sedrach on love, and repentance, and Orthodox Christians, and on the second coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Master, grant (thy) blessing.

1,2 1 Beloved, we must prefer nothing more than unfeigned love. •We commit many faults every hour, day and night, and for this reason let us acquire love, because
3 it covers a multitude of sins. •What do we gain, my children, if we possess 1Pet 4:8
4 everything yet do not have saving love? •How does one benefit, my children, if 1Cor 13:1-3
one gives a great banquet and invites king and nobleman and prepares every sort of expensive fare in order that nothing should be missing; nevertheless, if there is no salt, that banquet cannot be eaten; and one not only bears the expense but 5 one also wastes (his) efforts and is disgraced by the guests. •It is the same in our situation, my brethren; what will we profit, for what grace do we possess without
6 love? •Our every deed is false, even if one has virginity and fasts and keeps vigil
7 and prays and gives a banquet for the poor. •And if one brings gifts to God, or offers the first fruits of all his goods, or builds churches or does anything else without love, it shall be counted by God as nothing, for (these things) are not
8 acceptable. •Thus the prophet says: "The sacrifice of the impious is an abomination Prov 15:8 9,10 to the Lord." •Do not be advised to do anything without love. •If you say, "I hate my brother but I love Christ," you are a liar, and John the Theologian rebukes 1Jn 4:20 you, for how can one who does not love his brother whom he has seen, love God 1Jn 4:20 11 whom he has not seen? •It is clear that anyone who hates his brother but thinks that he loves Christ is a liar and is deluding himself. •For John the Theologian says that we have this commandment from God, that he who loves God should also love 1Jn 4:21
13 his brother. •And again the Lord himself says, "Upon these two (commandments) depend all the law and the prophets." •Oh, how extraordinary and paradoxical Mt 22:40
14 is the miracle that he who has love fulfills all the law; love is the fulfilment of the Rom 13:10
15 law. •Oh, power of love beyond imagination; oh, power of love beyond measure! There is nothing more honorable than love, nor is there anything greater either
16 in heaven or on the earth. •This divine love is the capital (virtue); among all the virtues love is the highest perfection in the world.^a •It dwelt in the heart of Abel; it worked together with the Patriarchs; it guarded Moses; it made David the dwelling 17 place of the Holy Spirit; it strengthened Joseph. •But why do I say these things? TJos 17:1f.
18 The most important is that this love brought the Son of God down from heaven.
19 Through love all good things were revealed; death was trampled down, Hades was made captive, Adam was recalled (from death), and through love one flock
20 was made thereafter of angels and men. •Through love Paradise has been opened; the kingdom of heaven is promised; the waste places it made^b (into) cities, and filled^b the mountains and the caves with song; it taught men and women who were 21 treading the narrow and sorrowful path. •But how long shall we prolong this sermon on the achievements of love which even the angels cannot accomplish?
22 Oh, blessed love which bestows all good things! •Blessed is the man who possesses true faith and unfeigned love; for, as the Master said, nothing is greater than love
24,25 for which a man lays down (his) life for his friends. Jn 15:13

1 2 And he heard a hidden^a voice in his ears: "Here, Sedrach, you who wish and desire to talk with God and to ask him to reveal to you the things that you wish Rev 1:12

1 a. Gk. to telos tou kosmou, "the ideal (or goal) of the world."

b. The translations "made" and "filled" are from the same Gk. word anadeiknumi, lit. "exhibit." See Lampe.

2 a. Lit. "he received a voice invisibly (aoratōs)."

2,3 to ask.” •And Sedrach said, “What (is it), my Lord?” •And the voice said to him, 4 “I was sent to you that I may carry you up into heaven.” •And he said, “I want to speak to God face to face,^b but I am not able, Lord, to ascend into the heavens.”
 5 But the angel, having stretched out his wings, took him and went up into the heavens, and took him up as far as the third heaven, and the flame of the divinity stood there.

1,2 3 And the Lord said to him, “Welcome, my dear Sedrach. •What kind of complaint do you have against the God who created you, for you have said, ‘I want to speak 3 with God face to face?’” •Sedrach said to him, “Indeed, the son does have a 4 complaint against the Father: My Lord, what did you create the earth for?” •The 5 Lord said to him, “For man.” •Sedrach said, “What did you create the sea for 6 and why did you spread every good thing upon the earth?” •The Lord said, “For 7 man.” •Sedrach said to him, “If you have done these things, why did you destroy 8 man?” •And the Lord said, “Man is my work and the creature of my hands, and I discipline^a him as I find it right.”

1 4 Sedrach said to him, “Your discipline^a is punishment^b and fire; and they are 2,3 very bitter, my Lord. •It would be better for man if he were not born. •Indeed, what have you done, my Lord; for what reason did you labor with your spotless 4 hands and create man, since you did not desire to have mercy upon him?” •God said to him, “I created the first man, Adam, and placed him in Paradise in the midst of (which is) the tree of life, and I said to him, ‘Eat of all the fruit, only 5 beware of the tree of life, for if you eat from it you will surely die.’ •However, he disobeyed my commandment and having been deceived by the devil he ate from the tree.”

4Ezra 4:12;
 7:64; 7:46

1 5 Sedrach said to him, “It was by your will that Adam was deceived, my Master.
 2 You commanded your angels to worship Adam, but he who was first among the angels disobeyed your order and did not worship him; and so you banished him, because he transgressed your commandment and did not come forth (to worship)
 3 the creation of your hands. •If you loved man, why did you not kill the devil, the 4,5 artificer of all iniquity? •Who can fight against an invisible spirit? •He enters the 6 hearts of men like a smoke and teaches them all kinds of sin. •He even fights
 7 against you, the immortal God, and so what can pitiful man do against him? •Yet have mercy, Master, and destroy punishment; otherwise receive me also with the sinners, for if you will not be merciful with the sinners, where are your mercies and where is your compassion, O Lord?”

Vita 13:1-14:3

1 6 And God said to him, “Be it known to you, that everything which I commanded 2 man to do was within his reach. •I made him wise and the heir of heaven and earth, and I subordinated everything under him and every living thing flees from 3 him and from his face. •Having received my gifts, however, he became an alien, 4 an adulterer and sinner. •Tell me, what sort of a father would give an inheritance to his son, and having received the money (the son) goes away leaving his father, 5 and becomes an alien and in the service of aliens. •The father then, seeing that the son has forsaken him (and gone away), darkens his heart and going away, he retrieves his wealth and banishes his son from his glory because he forsook his 6 father. •How is it that I, the wondrous and jealous God, have given everything to him, but he, having received them, became an adulterer and sinner?”

Lk 15:11-24

1 7 Sedrach said to him, “You, Master, created man; you know the low state of

b. Or “mouth to mouth.”

4 a. Or “education,” paideusis.

3 a. Or “educate,” paideuein.

b. Kolasis should not be translated as “hell,” but as “punishment.”

his will and his knowledge^a and you send man into punishment on a false pretext;
 2,3 so remove him. •Am I alone supposed to fill the celestial realms? •If that is not
 4 so, Lord, save man also. •Pitiful man has transgressed by your will,^b O Lord.”
 5,6 “Why do you throw words around me as if they were a net, Sedrach? •I created Adam and his wife and the sun and I said, ‘Look at each other (to see) who is 7 illuminated.’ •And the sun and Adam were of one character, but the wife of Adam 8 was brighter than the moon in beauty, and she gave life to her.” •Sedrach said, 9 “What is the use of beautiful things if they wither away to dust? •How is it that 10 you said, Lord, ‘Do not repay evil for evil’? •How is it, Master, for the word of 11 your divinity never lies? •And why did you thus repay man, if you do not wish 12 (to return) evil for evil? •I know that among the four-footed beasts the mule is a 13 crafty animal,^c it is none other; yet, with the bridle we turn it where we wish.
 You have angels; send them to watch (over man) and when he makes a move toward sin hold onto his foot, and he will not go where he wants.”

Rom 12:17
 1Thes 5:15
 1Pet 3:9

4Ezra 7:46

1 8 God said to him, “If I hold his foot, he says, ‘You have given me no grace in the world,’ and so I left him to his own desires because I loved him and thus I sent 2 my righteous angels to watch him night and day.” •Sedrach said, “I know that among your own creatures, Master, you loved man first; among the four-footed creatures, the sheep; among trees, the olive; among plants which bear fruit, the vine; among things that fly, the bee; among the rivers, (the) Jordan; among the 3,4 cities, Jerusalem. •But man also loves all these, Master.” •God said to Sedrach, “I will ask you one thing, Sedrach; if you can answer me, then you have rightly
 5 challenged me, although you have tempted your creator.” •Sedrach said, “Speak.”
 6 The Lord God said, “Since I created everything, how many people have been born, and how many have died and how many shall die and how many hairs do 7 they have? •Tell me, Sedrach, since the heaven and the earth have been created, how many trees have been made in the world, and how many shall fall and how 8 many shall be made, and how many leaves do they have? •Tell me, Sedrach, since I made the sea how many waves have billowed, and how many have rolled slightly, and how many will arise, and how many winds blow near the shore of the sea?
 9 Tell me, Sedrach, since the creation of the world of the ages when the air is full of rain, how many drops have fallen upon the world and how many shall fall?” 10 And Sedrach said, “You alone know all these things, Lord; you alone are acquainted with all of these; I only beg you to make man free from punishment, for otherwise I myself am going to punishment and am not separated from our race.”

4Ezra 5:23-27

4Ezra 4:7; 5:36f.

1 9 And God said to his only begotten Son, “Go, take the soul of my beloved 2 Sedrach, and put it in Paradise.” •The only begotten Son said to Sedrach, “Give me that which our Father deposited in the womb of your mother in your holy 3 dwelling place since you were born.” •Sedrach said, “I will not give you my 4 soul.” •God said to him, “And why was I sent, and why did I come here, and 5 you make a pretense^a to me? •I was commanded by my father not to hesitate in taking your soul; hence, give me your most desired soul.”

Tab 16-20

1 10 And Sedrach said to God, “From where will you take my soul, from which

7 a. Lit. “of what kind of will and what kind of knowledge we are.”

b. [Or “Pitiful man has transgressed your will, O Lord.” Within the present context alone, sou thelematos hemarten would be translated normally with sou thelematos (your will) as the object of the transitive verb hemarten (to sin). However, this phrase should be viewed in conjunction with a similar occurrence in 5:1, in which sou thelematos appears with a passive verb and is rendered “by your will.” The double occurrence of this phrase suggests that sou thelematos is an idiomatic expression used by the author to indicate means or agent. The verb hemarten in 7:4 should probably be understood as intransitive. This rendering of 7:4 suits the overall spirit of the present document and provides a better climax for the argument that Sedrach is developing in 7:1-4. —J.H.C.]

c. The Gk. is alagon. See Lampe.

9 a. Or “an excuse,” prophazizein.

2 member?" •And God said to him, "Do you not know that it is placed in the middle 3 of your lungs and your heart and that it is spread out to all the members? •It is removed through the pharynx and larynx and the mouth; and whenever it is due to go out (from the body) it is drawn with difficulty at the beginning and as it comes together from the fingernails and from all the members there is, of necessity, a great strain^a in being separated from the body and detached from the heart."
 4 When he had heard all these things, and recalled the memory of death, Sedrach was very troubled and he said to God, "Lord, give me a little while that I may cry, for I have heard that tears accomplish much and can become a sufficient cure for the humble body of your creatures."

1 11 And crying and lamenting he started saying, "O wondrous head, ornamented like heaven; O sunlight upon heaven and earth; your hair is known from Theman, your eyes from Bosra, your ears from thunder, your tongue from bugle, and your brain is a small creation; the head, the movement of the whole body, is trustworthy and very beautiful, beloved of all but as soon as it falls in the earth it is unrecognized.
 2 O hands which hold so well, which are easily taught and hard-working, through
 3 which the body is fed. •O hands so adept, gathering materials, together you 4 ornamented houses. •O fingers, beautified and adorned with gold and silver; even great structures are made by the fingers; the three joints stretch the palms and they gather good things together; but now you have become strangers to this world.
 5 O feet, which walk so well, moving by themselves so very quickly and untiring.
 6 O knees, thus joined, without you the body does not move; the feet run together with the sun and the moon, night and day, gathering all things together, food and 7 drink which nourish the body. •O feet, so swift and well moving, stirring up the 8 face of the earth and ornamenting houses with every good thing. •O feet, which bear the whole body, which walk straightway to the temples,^a making repentance 9 and supplicating the saints, and now suddenly you are to remain unmoved. •O 10 head, hands, and feet, till now I have held you fast. •O soul, what placed you in 11 the humble and wretched body? •Yet now, separated from it, you ascend where 12 the Lord calls you and the wretched body goes away for judgment. •O beautiful 13 body, hair shed by the stars, head like heaven adorned. •O face sweet-smelling,^b eyes like windows, a voice like a bugle's sound, a tongue which talks so easily, a beard well trimmed, hair like the stars, head high as heaven, a body adorned, the illuminator^c elegant and renowned, yet now after falling within the earth, your beauty beneath the earth is unseen."

1 12 Christ said to him, "Stop, Sedrach, how long will you shed tears and groan?
 2.3 Paradise has been opened to you, and after dying you will live." •Sedrach said 4Ezra 8:52 to him, "Once more will I speak to you, Lord, while I live, before I die; and do 4.5 not ignore my supplication." •The Lord said to him, "Speak, Sedrach." •(And Sedrach said,) "If man lives eighty or ninety or a hundred years, and lives them Gen 18:22-33 in sin but in the end is converted and the man lives in repentance, for how many 6 days of repentance do you forgive (him) his sins?" •God said to him, "If he returns after living one hundred or eighty years and repents for three years and bears the fruit of righteousness and death should reach him, then shall I not remember all his sins."

1.2 13 Sedrach said to him, "Three years are too many, my Lord. •His death
 3 perchance will arrive and he will not fulfill his repentance. •Have mercy, Lord, 4 upon your image and be compassionate, because three years are too many." •God said to him, "If, after a hundred years, a man lives and remembers his death and confesses before men, and I find him, after one year^a I will forgive all his sins."

10 a. Lit. "there is great force in being separated . . ."

c. The Gk. is to phōtagōgon. This is also translated in the same verse as "window."

11 a. The Gk. is naoi, "temples"; cf. 14:10.
 b. Lit. "well anointed with sweet oil."

13 a. Chronos, "a time."

- 5 Again Sedrach said, "Lord, I beg for your mercy again upon your creature; one year is much, and his death will perchance arrive and suddenly snatch him away."
 6 The Savior said to him, "Sedrach, my beloved, one question will I ask you, then you can resume your inquiries; if the sinner repents for forty days, shall I not indeed remember all the sins he has done?"

1 14 And Sedrach said to the archangel Michael, "Hear me, strong protector; help
 2 me and intercede that God may be merciful to the world." •And falling upon their 3 faces, they besought God and said, "Lord, teach us in what way and through what 4 repentance man may be saved, or by what labor." •God said, "By repentances, 5 supplications, and liturgies, through draining tears and fervant groanings. •Do you
 6 not know that my prophet David (was saved) because of tears, and that the rest
 7 were saved in one moment? •You know, Sedrach, that there are nations which 8 have no law, yet fulfill the law; they are not baptized, but my divine spirit enters 9 them and they are converted to my baptism, and I receive them with my righteous
 10 ones in the bosom of Abraham. •And there are some baptized with my baptism Lk 16:22 and anointed with my divine myrrh, but they have become full of despair and they 7 will not change their mind. •Yet I await them with much pity and much rich mercy, 8 that they may repent. •But they do that which my divinity hates, and they did not 9 hear the wise man who asked and said, 'We in no way justify the sinner.' •Are you not at all aware that it is written, 'And those who have repented will not see punishment'?^a •And they heard neither the apostles nor my word in the Gospels and they cause sorrow to my angels, and of a certainty in my meetings and in my liturgies they do not heed my angel and they do not stand in my holy churches;^b they stand and do not prostrate (themselves) in fear and trembling but they pronounce long words^c which neither I nor my angels accept."

1 15 Sedrach said to God, "Lord, you alone are without sin and very merciful, showing pity and grace to sinners, but your divinity said, 'I did not come to call 2 the righteous but sinners to repentance.' " •And the Lord said to Sedrach, "Do Mt 9:13 you not know, Sedrach, that after changing his mind the robber was saved in one Lk 23:43 3 instant? •Do you not know that even my apostle and evangelist was saved in an instant? [. . . but sinners are not saved]^a because their hearts are like decayed stone; they are those who walk along impious paths and who perish with the Antichrist."
 4 Sedrach said, "My Lord, you also said, 'My divine spirit entered the nations Rom 2:14 5 which though having no law yet do the things of the law.' •However, as the robber and the apostle and evangelist and the rest who have stumbled (are) in your kingdom, my Lord, in the same manner forgive those who in recent days^b have sinned against you, Lord, because life is full of toil and (is) obdurate."

1 16 The Lord said to Sedrach, "I made man in three stages; when he is young,
 I overlook his mistakes because of his youth; again, when he is a man I watch over his mind; again, when he grows old I preserve him so that he may repent."
 2 Sedrach said, "Lord, you know and are acquainted with all this; yet have compassion 3 with sinners." •The Lord said to him, "My beloved Sedrach, I promise to have compassion even less than forty days, as far as twenty, and whoever remembers your name will not see the place of punishment but he will be with the just ones in a place of refreshment and rest, and the sin of him who copies this admirable 4 sermon will not be reckoned for ever and ever." •And Sedrach said, "Lord, also whoever preforms a liturgy in honor of your servant, rescue him, Lord, from all 5 evil." •And the servant of God, Sedrach, said, "Now, Master, take my soul."
 6,7 And God took him and put him in Paradise with all the saints. •To him be glory and power for ever and ever, amen.

14 a. The source for the two quotations is unknown.

b. The Gk. here is ekklēsiai. Cf. n. 11.a.

c. Or "boast of things," megalorēmonein.

15 a. The clause in brackets is in Lat.

b. ep' eschatōn, lit. "in the last (days)."

2 (Syriac Apocalypse of) BARUCH

(early Second Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY A. F. J. KLIJN

Although the destruction of Jerusalem in 587 B.C. is given by the apocalyptist as the occasion for writing this work, it was in fact written after the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. 2 Baruch is a work with varied contents consisting of lamentations, prayers, questions with answers, apocalypses with explanations, addresses to the people, and a letter to Jews in the Dispersion. The contents can be summarized as follows:

1:1–8:5. Jerusalem is destroyed by the Babylonians after the angels remove the holy vessels from the Temple.

9:1–12:4. After fasting for seven days, Baruch sends up a lamentation to God.

12:5–20:4. Baruch fasts for seven days. Questions follow concerning the usefulness of being righteous and living a long life with the answer that man must not direct himself to corruption.

20:5–30:5. Baruch fasts for seven days, and after praying, declares that God will finish that which he began. Twelve disasters are announced, followed by the coming of the Anointed One, the resurrection of the dead, and the final judgment.

31:1–34:1. Baruch warns the people that disasters will come before the end of time.

35:1–43:3. In the Holy of Holies Baruch receives a vision of a forest and a plain surrounded by mountains. The forest changes into a cedar; then he sees a vine and a spring. The vision is explained and those who will live to see its consummation are named.

44:1–46:7. Baruch speaks to the people about God's judgment.

47:1–48:50. Baruch fasts for seven days. In a prayer he expresses his conviction that everything is determined by God.

49:1–52:7. Baruch asks about the outward appearance of the righteous ones after the resurrection.

53:1–74:4. Baruch sees a vision of a cloud from which bright and dark waters alternately pour. The vision is explained.

75:1–77:26. Baruch thanks God, then speaks to the people a third time about the righteous ones who will be saved.

78:1–87:1. The work concludes with a letter to the nine and a half tribes in which the Jews of the Dispersion are exhorted to obey God's commandments and to trust in God.

Text

The textual tradition regarding chapters 1–77, the apocalypse proper, must be dealt with separately from that of chapters 78–87, the attached letter.

The text of the apocalypse is known from one Syriac manuscript: Bibliotheca Ambrosiana B. 21 Inf. in Milan, fols. 257a–265b, dated from the sixth or seventh century. Three small excerpts are known from Jacobite lectionaries: BM Add. 14.686, dated 1255, fol. 77a, c. 1, l. 14–77b, c. 2, l. 9, contains 44:9–15; BM Add. 14.687, dated 1256, fol. 157b, c. 1, l. 6–158a, c. 2, l. 3, contains 72:1–73:2, and fol. 175a, c. 2, l. 12–176a, c. 1, l. 1, also contains 72:1–73:2. A fourth portion is mentioned for the first time in D. Dederling's edition:

“Pampakuda [in Kerala, India]. A. Konath Libr., MS 77. The MS is dated A.D. 1423: 44:9–15; 72:1–73:2.”¹

Recently an Arabic version of the apocalypse has been discovered (Sinai No. 589), but the text has not yet been published. Preliminary observations show that this manuscript is a translation of a Syriac document, but probably not the same text as present in Bibliotheca Ambrosiana B. 21 Inf. The translation is rather free and thoroughly adapted to Muslim ideas. The recently discovered manuscript does not significantly improve our understanding of the Syriac text, but it is sometimes useful in evaluating conjectured improvements to the Syriac proposed by former editors of this pseudepigraphon.

One fragment, verso and recto, is known in Greek among the Oxyrhynchus Papyri: 12:1–13:2 (verso) and 13:11–14:3 (recto) from the fourth or fifth century.²

There are thirty-six different texts of the letter in Syriac. The translation below follows the text of Bibliotheca Ambrosiana, fols. 265b–267a, which is the letter as it is attached to the apocalypse. In the following translation, this text is indicated by the siglum c while the other manuscripts are cited according to the sigla presented in the List of Old Testament Peshitta Manuscripts.³ Only in a few cases are readings of other manuscripts preferred over c.

Original language

The heading of the Syriac text states that the document has been translated from Greek; the report is certainly true. The existence of a Greek version is proved by the fragment of this work discovered among the Oxyrhynchus Papyri (see also 3:6). The extant Greek is different from the Syriac and seems to be a free rendering.

The Greek version, most of which is lost, appears to have been translated from Hebrew. An original Hebrew version should be accepted because of the many parallels between 2 Baruch and other Jewish writings composed in Hebrew or Aramaic. In some cases the Syriac text is intelligible only after translating it into Hebrew. Finally, a translation of the Syriac text into Hebrew restores a play on words apparently contained in the original.⁴

Date

Several passages help determine the probable date of the Apocalypse of Baruch.

32:2–4 states that “after a short time the building of Zion will be shaken in order that it will be rebuilt. But that building will not remain because it will again be uprooted”; finally a new Temple will appear that will last forever. In this passage two destructions are presupposed, indicating that the author lived after the destruction of the second Temple in A.D. 70.

In 67:1, the author speaks about the disaster that befalls “Zion now.” In 68:5, he writes about the restoration of the Temple. If he assumes the view of Baruch, the author speaks about the destruction of the Temple in 587 B.C. and the building of the second Temple without mentioning its destruction. In that case the author used a source that has to be dated before A.D. 70. If, however, he is referring to the restoration of the Temple which probably took place in A.D. 130 during the time of Hadrian, then the “last black waters,” mentioned in chapters 69 and 70, might refer to the time of Bar Kokhba.⁵

In 28:2, it is said: “For the measure and the calculation of that time will be two parts:

¹ S. Dederer, Apocalypse of Baruch, p. iii. The present translation is based on Dederer's edition. The existence of an Ar. version of this work was announced by P. S. van Koningsveld, “An Arabic Manuscript of the Apocalypse of Baruch,” JSS 6 (1975) 205–7. The Ar. MS is being studied for publication by G. J. H. van Gelder, A. F. J. Klijn, and F. Leemhuis.

² The Oxyrhynchus Papyri, part III, ed. B. P. Grenfell and A. S. Hunt (London, 1903) pp. 4–7 (12:1–13:2 on 4–5; 13:11–14:3 on 5).

³ List of Old Testament Peshitta Manuscripts (Preliminary Issue). (Peshitta Institute, Leiden, 1961) p. 99.

⁴ See F. Zimmermann, “Textual Observations on the Apocalypse of Baruch,” JTS 40 (1939) 151–56; and F. Zimmermann, “Translation and Mistranslation in the Apocalypse of Baruch,” Studies and Essays in Honour of Abraham A. Neuman, ed. by M. Ben-Horin, et al. (Leiden, 1962) pp. 580–87.

⁵ See H. Bientenhard, “Die Freiheitskriege der Juden unter den Kaisern Trajan und Hadrian und der messianische Tempelbau,” Judaica 4 (1948) 164–66.

weeks of seven weeks." This passage is thoroughly unclear and cannot be used to arrive at a date of origin.⁶

The passage 61:7 is quoted in Barnabas 11:9, an indication that the author of Barnabas knew this work. It is, however, not quite clear when Barnabas was written. Two proposed dates are A.D. 117 and 132.⁷

These passages point to a date after A.D. 70, although the author probably made use of earlier sources.

In this connection the relation with 4 Ezra is significant. If this work is dependent on 4 Ezra, a date around A.D. 100 is probable. A dependence, however, of both writings on a common source seems the most acceptable hypothesis. 2 Baruch is probably later than 4 Ezra, since it appears to show an advanced stage of theological development.

Therefore, the Apocalypse of Baruch seems to come from the first or second decade of the second century.

Provenance

There are three reasons why this work was probably written in Palestine. The original language, Hebrew, indicates this region. Also, the work shows a close acquaintance with Jewish rabbinical literature. Finally, the author takes his stand with the inhabitants of Palestine, who, especially in the final letter, try to exhort and encourage the Jews in the Dispersion.

Historical importance

The work shows a composite character. The first part is characterized by certain, sometimes conflicting, traditions about the Temple. In chapter 4 the author used a tradition in which a new, already existing Temple from heaven will appear on earth. This differs from the tradition used in chapter 6 in which angels are sent from heaven to take away the vessels from the Temple in order to preserve them in the earth "until the last times, so that you may restore them when you are ordered" (6:8).⁸ Here a restoration of the second Temple is supposed. Both traditions about the Temple have parallels in Jewish literature before A.D. 70.⁹ They show that in the Jewish world many ideas existed with regard to the future of the Temple.

But the author of this work was not himself interested in the Temple. The destruction was for him a suitable starting point from which to raise a general lamentation about Israel's fate after the disaster in 70. Subsequent to a narrative section the author starts, in chapter 10, a long passage in which Baruch speaks about Israel's sorrows but ironically does not mention the Temple. It is striking that in the final letter, the author speaks about the destruction and writes that the angels came from heaven to remove the vessels "lest they be polluted" (80:2), which only means that he does not expect a restoration of the Temple.

An important part of the apocalypse is devoted to the three visions (27:1-30:5; 36:1-40:4; and 53:1-76:5). These visions contain the announcement of the appearance of the Anointed One, after whose appearance there will be a time of abundance. While the importance of the land of Israel is emphasized, nothing is said about the Temple. Here we are dealing with traditions which apparently predate A.D. 70. At the same time, we should note that the author inserts these visions into his work explaining them in his own way. In addresses to the people after the visions, he does not mention their contents. After the first vision (31:1-32:6), Baruch emphasizes that disasters will come at the end of time (31:5); in the address after the second vision (44:1-46:7), he tells the people that everyone will be judged according to

⁶ L. Gry, "La Date de la fin des temps, selon les révélations ou les calculs du Pseudo-Philo et de Baruch (Apocalypse syriaque)," RB 48 (1939) 337-56.

⁷ This depends on Barnabas 16:4, from which no certain conclusions can be drawn because its text is corrupt.

⁸ In PR 26:6 we read that an angel breached the walls of Jerusalem so that the enemies cannot boast that they have vanquished the city, but nothing is said about the holy vessels. See W. G. Braude Pesikta rabbati (Yale Judaica Series 18; New Haven, London, 1968) pp. 524, 534f. In 2Bar two traditions are brought together.

⁹ For the concept of a temple in heaven see 1En 90:28f.; 1Q32; 2Q24; 5Q15; 4QFlor; Tob 14:5; SibOr 5.402, 414-44; Jub 1:27-29. For the concept of vessels hidden in the earth, see 2Mac 2:4f.

his work (46:6); and after the third vision (77:1–26), he says that the righteous ones will be saved (77:26). In the final letter nothing is said about an Anointed One. Here the author speaks about the corruptibility of the world, the final judgment, and the necessity of living according to the Law.

From this we may gather that the importance of this work lies in the manner in which the author deals with traditional material. He knows of traditions concerning the Temple and the Messiah, but was not himself influenced by these ideas. He was impressed by the holiness of God and his inscrutable ways. He was convinced that God's judgment has confronted Israel and will come over the whole world; the only way to survive is to live according to God's commandments. Without losing his belief in a coming judgment, he has separated himself from all speculations about the way this judgment will arrive.

Theological importance

A description of the theological importance includes the traditions about the Temple; the apocalyptic parts of the writing; passages in which the author speaks by means of addresses, prayers, answers and questions; and the final letter. With regard to the visions, the following particulars are of importance:

The Anointed One will be revealed after the tribulation, which will afflict the earth (29:3). In two of the visions the Anointed One shows a warlike character. He will execute the last ruler over the earth (39:7–40:2), allowing some nations to survive but destroying others (70:9 and 72:2).

The first and the third visions present the idea of a great abundance on the earth after the appearance of the Anointed One (29:4–7 and 73:2–74:4).

All the visions express the idea that the land of Israel will be protected during the culmination of the tribulations (29:2; 40:2; and 71:1).

In the second and third visions it is revealed that the Anointed One will either judge or destroy the nations (39:7–8; 40:1; and 72:2).

The rest of the work contains the following concepts:

God is the creator (14:17; 21:4–5; 54:13; 78:3; 82:2) who rules his creation (21:5; 54:2–4) and will judge it in the future (5:2–3; 48:27, 39; 83:7; 85:9). God's government is not always evident because he is inscrutable (14:8; 21:9–10; 44:6; 75:2–5). However, he knows the times and periods and has appointed a day on which to judge the earth (21:8; 48:2; 54:1). He also knows the number of men on the earth (21:10; 23:4; 48:6, 46). He will fulfill everything he promised in the past (44:13; 83:5; 84:6), and he will avenge himself on the enemies of Israel (82:2, 4–9). He is merciful to those who show themselves to be righteous (24:2; 75:1; 78:13; 85:8).

Israel is loved by God (5:1; 21:21; 78:3) but cannot be compared with the other nations since she was elected by God (48:20; 77:5). For that reason she is separated from the other nations (42:5). Israel has Abraham as her father (78:4) and is not mixed with the other nations (48:23). She has acquired for herself some privileges and received others: She possesses righteous men (14:7), the righteousness of the fathers (84:10), God's promises (78:7), knowledge (14:5), and the Law (48:24; 77:3). This has created more responsibility for Israel (15:6; 19:3). However, she did not sin in the same way as the other nations (14:5), although she trespassed certain of the commandments (1:2; 77:8–10). For this reason she will be punished for some time (4:1; 6:9; 13:9; 78:3; 79:2). Israel deserved this suffering (78:5; 79:2). Her punishment will be the destruction of the Temple and the Dispersion among the nations (1:4). However, all of this shows that God did not reject his people, and the disasters reconcile her sins (13:9–10). Therefore, Israel should rejoice in her sufferings (52:6). After the destruction of the city, Israel has nothing left other than God and his Law (85:3), which will last for ever and ever (77:5). Some Jews separated themselves from Israel (41:3) and mixed themselves with other nations (42:4); they will be rejected. Those who live according to the Law will be gathered together (78:7), will take part in the resurrection of the dead, and will enjoy life on a new earth (30:1–2).

The Law is a lamp given by Moses (17:4) on the occasion of the establishment of the covenant (19:1). The Law illuminates (38:1–2; 54:5) and divides between life and death (46:3). Darkness is the result of Adam's sin (18:2). Everyone is free to choose between light and darkness (54:15, 19; 85:7). He who chooses to live according to the Law will receive eternal life (32:1; 38:1; 48:22; 51:3, 4–7; 54:15), the good things (44:7), and grace and truth (44:14). The Law should be explained and expounded (3:6; 46:3) and will last for ever and ever (46:4; 77:16). Wisdom and intelligence are given in order to scrutinize God's Law (44:14; 46:5; 48:24; 51:3), and to understand God's actions, especially those at the end of time (54:5). But many wise men will be silent at that time (70:5; cf. 48:36). The Law has to be learned (32:1; 84:1–9) so that Israel will live according to God's will in the future (44:3; 46:5; 82:6).

The nations have rejected God's goodness (13:12). Although they know that they act unrighteously, still they resist God (82:9). They have become "their own Adam" (54:15, 19). They may live happily (12:3–4; 82:3–9) and boast before their own gods (5:1; 7:2; 67:2; 80:3), but, in fact, they served the God of Israel when they destroyed Jerusalem (5:3; 7:2–3). They acted out of their hatred for Israel (3:5); therefore, they await unknowingly their just punishment (5:1; 12:4; 13:5–7; 48:32). They dispersed Israel, but this will benefit both of them (1:4; 41:4). Only a few individuals have joined Israel (41:4f.; 42:5), but eventually all nations will be subjected to Israel (72:5).

The world was created by God because of man (14:18), the righteous ones (15:7), or the Patriarchs (21:24). Death rules over all men because of Adam's sin (17:3; 19:8; 23:4; 48:42–43). Therefore, life is a struggle (15:8; 16:1) and full of pain (48:50). Nothing is more bitter than the world (21:13). Creation will be destroyed (21:4, 83), being subject to corruption (21:9; 28:5; 40:3; 42:2; 44:9; 74:2; 83:9–11; 85:5). The world is only temporary (85:10), but will be renewed (32:6; 44:12; 57:2).

At the time of the judgment God will vindicate himself (5:2; 48:27; 85:9). Before that time (83:2–7), however, the number to be borne must be completed (23:4f.), because everything has its own time (22:1–8). The destruction of Jerusalem is only one of the things that will happen at the end (20:2); horror will cover the whole earth (25:3; 32:1; 48:30f.). Then one will know that the end is near (23:7; 82:2; 83:1). God will not tarry (20:15; 54:1; 83:1). On the day of judgment the books will be opened (24:1). Until that day the righteous will sleep in the earth, the realm of death and the treasure of souls (11:4; 21:23–24; 31:1–2). These righteous possess a treasure of good works (14:12; 24:1). They will rise from the dust (21:23; 31:1–2), no longer corruptible (40:3; 85:5). Their outward appearance will be changed (50–51), and they will receive the world that was promised to them (14:13; 44:13; 84:6). They will be like angels (51:10), but even more excellent than the angels (51:12). Sinners will waste away in the fire (30:4–5; 44:15; 51:6; 54:14, 21–22).

The author's clear theological concepts were shaped by reinterpreting traditions passed down to him. He rejected the idea of a messianic kingdom on earth. He awaits God's judgment; only the Law, which is known to Israel alone, is efficacious. The author tried to show the individual Jews living all over the world that at present nothing is left apart from God and his Law (80:3).

Relation to canonical books

The number of quotations from the Old Testament is small. In 4:2 Isaiah 49:16 is quoted according to the text of the Peshitta. There might also be quotations in 5:1 (Josh 7:9), 13:2 (Ezek 2:1), and 64:3 (2Chr 33:7), but it is not certain that the author really quoted since he is deeply steeped in the usage of the Old Testament and its contents. He continually uses Old Testament expressions and easily shifts from alluding to them to quoting them. It is, therefore, to be expected that the author often refers to the books of Kings and Chronicles and alludes to the prophet Jeremiah in the final letter to Baruch.

It is striking that there are many parallels to the New Testament. It is, of course, impossible to prove dependency on the part of the author. He most likely shared with the New Testament authors a dependency on apocalyptic imagery. The parallels are especially striking with the Pauline Epistles, in particular Romans and 1 and 2 Corinthians.

Relation to apocryphal books

The work shows a great number of parallels with 4 Ezra and Pseudo-Philo. The parallels with Pseudo-Philo are too incidental to suppose dependency, and are explicable from a common knowledge of haggadic material. The parallels with 4 Ezra are attributed by many scholars to a dependence by 2 Baruch on 4 Ezra; but since the theological ideas of the two writings differ widely, a common source is also more likely here. This source might be written, but it is also possible that we are dealing with common knowledge and teaching popular in the synagogues.

Some parallels with 4 Baruch apparently are due to dependence by the author of 4 Baruch on 2 Baruch.

There are, in addition, a number of parallels with 1 and 2 Enoch, but only in isolated passages.

Cultural importance

2 Baruch is extremely important for an understanding of early Judaism since it copes with the catastrophe of A.D. 70. After the destruction of the Temple, a new period arrived that was characterized by the influence of the rabbis. The author opened a way for studying the Law after a period of apocalyptic expectations. He was an expert on both apocalyptic imagery and rabbinic teaching, and, as such, was one of the Jews who managed to bring Judaism into a new era.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 83–86.

Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 162f.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 182–86.

Bogaert, P. Apocalypse de Baruch, introduction, traduction du Syriac et commentaire. SC 144 and 145; Paris, 1969.

Charles, R. H. The Apocalypse of Baruch Translated from the Syriac. London, 1896. (An old but still useful work.)

Dederer, S. Apocalypse of Baruch. Peshitta Institute, part IV, fasc. 3; Leiden, 1973. (The Syr. text of the apocalypse proper.)

Ginzberg, L. "Apocalypse of Baruch (Syriac)," Jewish Encyclopedia, ed. I. Singer. New York, 1902; cols. 551–56. (Important for the relationship of 2Bar to rabbinic literature.)

Harnisch, W. Verhängnis und Verheissung der Geschichte. Untersuchungen zum Zeit- und Geschichtsverständnis im 4. Buch Esra und in der syr. Baruchapokalypse. FRLANT 97; Göttingen, 1969. (Useful for understanding the theological background of 2Bar.)

Klijn, A. F. J. "The Sources and the Redaction of the Syriac Apocalypse of Baruch," JSS 1 (1970) 65–76.

Kmosko, M. Epistola Baruch filli Neriae. Patrologia Syriaca, Pars Prima, Tomus secundus, accurate R. Graffin; Paris, 1907; cols. 1215–36. (The Syr. text of the letter.)

THE BOOK OF THE APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH THE SON OF NERIAH

translated from the Greek into Syriac

Jerusalem will be destroyed*

- 1 1 And it happened in the twenty-fifth year of Jeconiah^a, the king of Judah, that 2 the word of the Lord came to Baruch, the son of Neriah, and said to him:
Have you seen all that this people are doing to me, the evil things which the two tribes which remained have done—more than the ten tribes^b which were carried 3 away into captivity? •For the former tribes were forced by their kings to sin, but 4 these two have themselves forced and compelled their kings to sin.^c •Behold, therefore, I shall bring evil upon this city and its inhabitants. And it will be taken away from before my presence for a time. And I shall scatter this people among 5 the nations that they may do good to the nations.^d •And my people will be chastened, and the time will come that they will look for that which can make their times prosperous.^e
- 1 2 This, then, I have said to you that you may say to Jeremiah^a and all those who are like you that you may retire from this city.^b For your works are for this city like a firm pillar and your prayers like a strong wall.
- 1 3 And I said:
O Lord, my Lord,^a have I therefore come into the world to see the evil things 2 of my mother? •No, my Lord. If I have found grace in your eyes, take away my spirit first that I may go to my fathers and I may not see the destruction of my 3 mother. •For from two sides I am hard pressed: I cannot resist you, but my soul
4 also cannot behold the evil of my mother. •But one thing I shall say in your 5 presence, O Lord: Now, what will happen after these things? •For if you destroy your city and deliver up your country to those who hate us, how will the name of 6 Israel be remembered again? •Or how shall we speak again about your glorious 7 deeds? Or to whom again will that which is in your Law be explained? •Or will the universe^b return to its nature and the world go back to its original silence?
8 And will the multitude of the souls be taken away and will not the nature of man
9 be mentioned again? •And where is all that which you said to Moses about us?

10:1
Jer 1:1-3
Ezek 1:1-3
Hos 1:1
Jer 32:12-16;
36:4, 8, 14, 32;
43:3-6; 45:1;
31:59
2Kgs 17:21-23
2Kgs 22:16
2Chr 34:28
Jer 6:19; 19:3
4:1; 32:3
Dan 11:29, 35
2Kgs 23:27;
24:3
Jer 32:31

21:24; 57:1;
59:1; 66:7
4Ezra 4:36; 8:51
14:7
Jer 1:18; 15:20

14:8, 16; 16:1;
23:1; 38:1;
48:45
4Ezra 3:4; 5:23
Isa 50:1
Jer 50:12
Hos 4:5
4Ezra 10:6-7
28:6
Gen 6:8
4Ezra 5:56;
7:102; 8:42;
12:7
1Kgs 19:4
44:2
Gen 15:15
Phil 1:23
Rom 9:19
46:3-4
83:13, 14, 16, 21
4Ezra 7:30

1 * [A. F. J. Klijn has aimed at an idiomatic translation. Some vss. in the Syr. are, as R. H. Charles stated, clearly "unintelligible." No attempt has been made to rewrite or improve the document. The reader needs to be informed that Klijn's translation "the Anointed One" could also have been rendered "the Messiah"; cf. e.g. 30:1; 39:7; 40:1; 70:9; and 72:2. —J.H.C.]

a. This is King Jehoiachin, Jechonias in 2Chr 36:9 (LXX) and Josephus, Ant 6.103, who became king in his eighteenth year, i.e. 597 B.C., according to 2Kgs 24:8. In the eighth year of his reign King Nebuchadnezzar came to Jerusalem and carried away Jehoiachin to Babylon (2Kgs 24:12). This is in agreement with "the twenty-fifth year of Jeconiah" in 1:1 (cf. 6:1), but not with 8:5, where the imprisonment of Zedekiah is mentioned. This can refer only to the devastation of Jerusalem ca. 587 B.C. This discrepancy is not due to different sources used by the author but to inaccuracy on his part.

b. In 62:5; 77:19; 78:1 the nine and a half tribes are mentioned. The same is found in 4Ezra 13:40 in the Syr., Eth., and Ar. translations. This can be explained if one accepts that west of the river Jordan nine and a half tribes were living, i.e. the twelve apart from those of Reuben, Gad, and the half of Manasseh.

c. Contrary to 2Kgs 24:9 Jehoiachin was "king and just" according to Josephus, Ant 10.100, and "a noble example" according to his War 6.106. See also b.Arak 17a.

d. The verb n^hb is used. The Jews in the Dispersion make known the God of Israel to the nations, cf. 41:4 and 42:5.

e. Lit. "... will look for their prosperity of their time."

2 a. According to Jer 37:11-16 and 38:23 Jeremiah was taken captive after the capture of the city.

b. Also in 4Bar 1:1 and PR 26:6.

3 a. Probably from the Gk. despota kyrie as in Gen 15:1 and 8.

b. In the Syr. text we find the word tzbyr, "ornament." This is obviously a mistranslation from the Gk. word kosmos.

The New Jerusalem

1 4 And the Lord said to me:

This city will be delivered up for a time, 1:4
 And the people will be chastened for a time, 3:5-7
 And the world will not be forgotten.

2 Or do you think that this is the city of which I said: On the palms of my hands Isa 49:16
 3 I have carved you^a? • It is not this building that is in your midst now; it is that 6:9; 32:4 which will be revealed, with me, that was already prepared from the moment that Ex 25:9,40
 I decided to create Paradise.^b And I showed it to Adam before he sinned.^c But Mk 14:58 when he transgressed the commandment, it was taken away from him—as also 4 Paradise. • After these things I showed it to my servant Abraham in the night 54:4
 5 between the portions of the victims.^d • And again I showed it also to Moses on 4Ezra 3:13-14
 Mount Sinai^e when I showed him the likeness of the tabernacle and all its vessels. Ex 25:9,40 6,7 Behold, now it is preserved with me—as also Paradise.^f • Now go away and do 51:11; 59:8
 as I command you. 4Ezra 7:123;
8:52
2Cor 12:4
Rev 2:7

Preparation made by the angels before the enemies arrive

1 5 And I answered and said:

So then I shall be guilty^a in Zion, that your haters will come to this place and pollute your sanctuary, and carry off your heritage into captivity, Deut 9:26,29 and rule over them whom you love.
 And then they will go away again to the land of their idols, and boast before them.^b 7:1; 67:2; 80:3
 And what have you done to your great name?

2 And the Lord said to me:

My name and my glory shall last unto eternity. Josh 7:9
 My judgment, however, shall assert its rights in its own time. 4Ezra 4:25; 10:22
Pss 135:13;
48:27; 85:9;
6:4ff.
 3 And you shall see with your eyes that the enemy shall not destroy Zion and burn Jerusalem, but that they shall serve the Judge for a time.
 4 You, however, go away and do all which I have said to you.

5 And I went away and took with me Jeremiah and Adu and Seraiah and Jabish^c and 2:1
 Gedaliah and all the nobles of the people. And I brought them to the valley of 4Ezra 8:17
 6 Kidron and told them all which had been said to me. • And they raised their voices Neh 12:4
 7 and they all lamented. • And we sat there and fasted until the evening. Jer 51:59,61
44:1
Jer 38:1; 40:14
22:1; 31:2
10:1; 31:3; 32:7;
44-46; 77:1-17
9:2; 12:5; 20:5;
21:1; 43:3; 47:2
4Ezra 5:20;
6:35; 9:26-27;
12:51
1:1
 1 6 Now it happened on the following day that, behold, an army of the Chaldeans surrounded the city.^a And in the evening I, Baruch, left the people, went outside, 2 and set myself by an oak. • And I was grieving over Zion and sighed because of 3 the captivity which had come upon the people. • And behold, suddenly a strong 4 spirit^b lifted me and carried me above the wall of Jerusalem. • And I saw, and behold, there were standing four angels at the four corners of the city, each of 55:1; 77:18
4Ezra 14:1

4 a. The quotation is according to the Peshitta version of the Old Testament.

b. According to b.Pes 54a the Temple is one of the seven things created before the creation of the world. See for a temple in heaven TLevi 5 and Wis 9:8, cf. Heb 8:2.

c. About revelations given to Adam see 2En 31:2; Ps-Philo 13:8-9; 26:6; LAE 25:1-28:4.

d. See Ps-Philo 23:6 and GenR 44:12.

e. See Ps-Philo 11:15.

f. See Ps-Philo 19:10.

5 a. Is it because his prayer was not heard (cf. ch. 3), or because he leaves the city (cf. 2:1)?

b. Cf. 4Bar 1:5 and 4:7.

c. This name is unknown.

6 a. Cf. 4Bar 4:1.

b. Or "wind."

Ez 3:12,14
 Acts 8:38

5 them with a burning torch in his hands.^c • And another angel came down from heaven and said to them, “Hold your torches and do not light them before I say 6 it to you.^d • Because I was sent first to speak a word to the earth and then to deposit 7 in it what the Lord, the Most High, has commanded me.” • And I saw that he descended in the Holy of Holies and that he took from there the veil, the holy ephod, the mercy seat, the two tables, the holy raiment of the priests, the altar of incense,^e the forty-eight precious stones^f with which the priests were clothed, and 8 all the holy vessels of the tabernacle. • And he said to the earth with a loud voice: Exod 26:31;
29:5; 25:17
Deut 10:5
Ex 29:5
Jer 22:29

Earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the mighty God, and receive the things which I commit to you, 80:2 and guard them until the last times, 2Mac 2:5
 so that you may restore them when you are ordered, 10:19 so that strangers may not get possession of them.

9 For the time has arrived when Jerusalem will also be delivered up for a time, until the moment that it will be said that it will be restored forever.

And the earth opened its mouth and swallowed them up. 4:2; 32:4

1 7 And after these things I heard this angel saying to the angels who held the torches:

Now destroy the walls and overthrow them to their foundations so that the enemies do not boast and say, “We have overthrown the wall of Zion and we have burnt down the place of the mighty God.” And they restored me to the place 5:1 where I once stood.

The enemies enter the city

1 8 Now the angels did as he had commanded them; and when they had broken up the corners of the wall, a voice was heard from the midst of the temple after the 2Kgs 25:3-4 wall had fallen, saying:

2 Enter, enemies, and come, adversaries, because he who guarded the house has Jer 34:2 left it.^a

3,4 And I, Baruch, went away. • And it happened after these things that the army 5 of the Chaldeans entered and seized the house and all that is around it. • And they carried away the people into captivity and killed some of them. And they put King 2Kgs 25:7,11
Jer 39:5,9
 Zedekiah in irons and sent him to the king of Babylon.

1 9 And I, Baruch, came with Jeremiah, whose heart was found to be pure from 2 sins, and who was not captured during the seizure of the city; • and we rent our Jer 39:14; 40:6 5:6
 garments, and wept and mourned, and fasted for seven days.

Baruch's lamentation

1 10 And it happened after seven days that the word of God came to me and said to me:

2,3 Tell Jeremiah to go away in order to support the captives unto Babylon.^a • You, 1:1
 however, stay here in the desolation of Zion and I shall show you after these days Rev 1:1; 4:1 what will happen at the end of days.

c. Cf. 4Bar 3:2-4 and PR 26:6.

d. Cf. 4Bar 3:4.

e. Syr. pyrm, lit. “censer,” Gk. thymiatêrion.
 In Philo, Heres 226; Vita Mos 2.94; Josephus, Ant
 3.147 and 198; and War 5.218, the Gk. word means “altar of incense.”

f. Nothing is known about this number of precious stones; cf. Ex 28:21 speaking about twelve precious stones.

8 a. Cf. 4Bar 4:1. The same tradition in Josephus, War 6.300 and Tacitus, Histories 5.13.

10 a. The word ngym can be translated as “support” only. Jer 43:6-7 reports that Jeremiah went to Egypt. Bar 1:1 states that he is in Babylon.
 According to 4Bar 4:5, he also went to Babylon.
 PR 26:6 states that he was sent to Babylon, but that he returned to Jerusalem; cf. 33:1-2.

4.5 And I spoke to Jeremiah as the Lord commanded me. •He, then, went away with the people, but I, Baruch, came back and sat in front of the doors of the Temple, and I raised the following lamentation over Zion and said: 35:1,4 6 Blessed is he who was not born, or he who was born and died.^b Jer 20:14

4Ezra 4:12
Mt 26:24

7 But we, the living, woe to us, because we have seen those afflictions of Zion, and that which has befallen Jerusalem.

8 I shall call the Sirens^c from the sea, and you, Lilin,^d come from the desert, and you, demons^e and dragons^f from the woods. Isa 13:21; 34:13; 43:20
Mic 1:8 (LXX)
Isa 34:14

Awake and gird up your loins to mourn, and raise lamentations with me,
and mourn with me.

9 You, farmers, sow not again.
And you, O earth, why do you give the fruit of your harvest?^g
Keep within you the sweetness of your sustenance.

10 And you, vine, why do you still give your wine?
For an offering will not be given again from you in Zion, and the first fruits will not again be offered.

11 And you, heaven, keep your dew within you, and do not open the treasuries of rain.

12 And you, sun, keep the light of your rays within you.
And you, moon, extinguish the multitude of your light.
For why should the light rise again,
where the light of Zion is darkened?

13 And you, bridegrooms, do not enter, and do not let the brides adorn themselves.

14 And you, wives, do not pray to bear children, for the barren will rejoice more. Mt 24:19

And those who have no children will be glad, and those who have children will be sad. Isa 54:1
Lk 23:29

15 For why do they bear in pains only to bury in grief?
16 Or why should men have children again?
Or why should the generation of their kind be named again, where this mother is lonely, and her children have been carried away in captivity?

17 Henceforth, do not speak anymore of beauty, and do not talk about gracefulness.

18 You, priests, take the keys of the sanctuary, and cast them to the highest heaven,
and give them to the Lord and say, “Guard your house yourself, because, behold, we have been found to be false stewards.”^h

19 And you, virgins who spin fine linen, and silk with gold of Ophir, make haste and take all things, and cast them into the fire,
so that it may carry them to him who made them.

b. Cf. 2En 41:2; 1En 38:2; and b.‘Erub 13b.
c. Syr. syrynws as in 1En 19:2 (Gk. version).
Mic 1:8 (LXX) mentions seirenēs.
d. Syr. lyr are mentioned in Isa 34:14 (Heb.);
see also b.Shab 151b.
e. Syr. š’d. In Deut 32:17 and Ps 106:37, they are identified with idols.

f. Syr. yrrw. The word is used in the Peshitta version of the Old Testament in Isa 13:22 and 43:20.
g. See for the following b.Sot 9:12 and b.BB 60b.
h. Cf. 4Bar 4:3–4; b.Ta’an 29a; LevR 19:6; and PR 131b.

And the flame sends them to him who created them, so that the enemies do not take possession of them.ⁱ

1 11 Now this I, Baruch, say to you, O Babylon:

If you had lived in happiness and Zion in its glory, it would have been a great 2 sorrow to us that you had been equal to Zion. •But now, behold, the grief is infinite and the lamentation is unmeasurable, because, behold, you are happy and Zion 3 has been destroyed. •Who will judge over these things? Or to whom shall we complain about that which has befallen us?

4 O Lord, how have you borne it? Our fathers went to rest without grief and, 4Ezra 3:30
5 behold, the righteous sleep at rest in the earth. •For they did not know this anguish 21:24; 30:1-2 6 nor did they hear that which has befallen us.^a •Would that you had ears, O earth, 4Ezra 7:32 and would that you had a heart, O dust, so that you might go and announce in 7 7 the realm of death and say to the dead, •“You are more happy than we who 82:3 live.” Eccl 9:5

1 12 But^a I shall say as I think and I shall speak to you, O land, that which is happy.

2 The afternoon will not always burn nor will the rays of the sun always give 3 light. •Do not think and do not expect that you will always have happiness and 4 joy, and do not raise yourself too much and do not oppress.^b •For surely wrath will arise against you in its own time, because long-suffering is now held back, as it were, by reins.

5 And having said these things, I fasted for seven days.

5:6

The nations will be judged

1 13 And after these things, it happened that I, Baruch, was standing on Mount 21:2; 47:2;
Zion and, behold, a voice came from the high heavens, saying to me: 48-72

2.3 Stand upon your feet, Baruch, and hear the word of the mighty God. •Because Ezek 2:1
you have been astonished at that which has befallen Zion, you will surely be 4 preserved until the end of times^a to be for a testimony. •This means that if these happy cities will ever say, “Why has the mighty God brought upon us this 25:1 5 retribution?”, •you and those who are like you, those who have seen this evil Mk 6:11; 13:9 and par.
6.7 that the nations will be thoroughly punished.” •And this they may expect. •And when they say in that time, “When?”, you will say to them:

8 You who have drunk the clarified wine,
you now drink its dregs,

for the judgment of the Most High is impartial.

9 Therefore, he did not spare his own sons first, but he afflicted them as his enemies because they sinned.

Ps 75:9

44:4
Deut 10:17

10 Therefore, they were once punished, that they might be forgiven.^b

Prov 3:11-12
Rom 11:21
Heb 12:4-11

11 But^c now, you nations and tribes, you are guilty, because you have trodden the earth all this time, and because you have used creation unrighteously.

78:3
Wis 12:2
2Mac 6:13-15;
7:16-17, 33
Jdt 8:22
82:3
2Mac 6:14

i. Cf. b.Ket 106a; PR 26:6; ProtJames 10.

78:5; and 84:1 Baruch is said to die before long; cf. 4Ezra 14:9, where the death of Ezra is announced.

11 a. Cf. 4Bar 4:9.

b. Especially in PssSol this idea is met; cf. 3:3-4; 7:8; ch. 10; and 13:8.

12 a. 12:1-13:2 is available in Gk.

b. 12:3 reads in Gk. as follows: “And do not expect to have joy and do not excessively oppress.”

c. 13:11-14:3 is available in Gk.: “You have trodden the earth and misused the created things in it. For you were always ungrateful.”

13 a. The same in 25:1, but in 43:2; 44:2; 46:7;

12 For I have always benefited you, and you have always denied the beneficence.

What is the profit of being righteous?

1 14 And I answered and said:

Behold, you have shown me the course of times,^a and that which will happen 2 after these things. •And you have told me that the retribution of that which has been spoken by you will come upon the nations. And now, I know there are many who have sinned and who have lived in happiness and who have left the world, but there will be few nations left in those times to which those words can be spoken 3 which you said. •For what is the advantage (of this), or what evil worse than that 4 which we have seen befall us can we expect to see? •But I will continue to speak Rom 3:1 5 before you. •What have they profited who have knowledge before you, and who did not walk in vanity like the rest of the nations, and who did not say to the dead: Jer 2:5 6 “Give life to us,” but always feared you and did not leave your ways? •And, Isa 8:19 behold, they have been diligent and, nevertheless, you had no mercy on Zion on 7 their account. •And if there are others who did evil, Zion should have been forgiven on account of the works of those who did good works and should not have been 8 overwhelmed because of the works of those who acted unrighteously. •O Lord, my Lord, who can understand your judgment? Or who can explore the depth of 9 your way? •Or who can discern the majesty of your path? Or who can discern your incomprehensible counsel? Or who of those who are born has ever discovered 10 the beginning and the end of your wisdom? •For we all have been made like Ps 146:4
11 breath. •For as breath ascends without human control and vanishes, so it is with Job 7:7
the nature of men, who do not go away according to their own will, and who do Jas 4:14 12 not know what will happen to them in the end. •For the righteous justly have 48:15 good hope for the end and go away from this habitation without fear because they 4Ezra 8:5 possess with you a store of good works which is preserved in treasures. 24:1 13 Therefore, they leave this world without fear and are confident of the world which 4Ezra 7:77
14 you have promised to them with an expectation full of joy. •But woe to those of 8:33 us who have also now been treated shamefully and who await evils at that time. Tob 4:9 15 But you know exactly what you have made of your servants, for we are not able Mt 6:19-20 16 to understand that which is good like you, our Creator. •I shall continue to speak 15:7; 44:15;
17 before your presence, O Lord, my Lord. •When in the beginning the world did 51:3 not exist with its inhabitants, you devised and spoke by means of your word and 18 at the same time the works of your creation stood before you. •And you said that you would make a man for this world as a guardian over your works that it should 19 be known that he was not created for the world, but the world for him. •And now, I see that the world which was made for us, behold, it remains; but we, for whom it was made, depart.

1 15 And the Lord answered and said to me:

You are rightly astonished about man’s departure, but your judgment about the 2 evils which befell those who sin is incorrect. •And with regard to what you say about the righteous who are taken away and the wicked ones who are happy, Rom 4:15 3,4 and with regard to what you say that man does not know your judgment, •for this reason, now, listen and I shall speak to you; pay attention and I shall let my 5 words be heard. •It is true that man would not have understood my judgment if he had not received the Law and if he were not instructed with understanding.
6 But now, because he trespassed, having understanding, he will be punished 7 because he has understanding. •And with regard to the righteous ones, those whom you said the world has come on their account, yes, also that which is 8 coming is on their account. •For this world is to them a struggle and an effort with much trouble. And that accordingly which will come, a crown with great glory.

14 a. Syr. dwbrhwn dzbñ, in Gk. kairon taxeis. In 59:4 we have to render the first word by “ways” (of the Law) and in 93:3 and 4 by “kinds.” Cf.

1QpHab 7:13: kwl qysy’l ybw’w ltkwnm, “all times of God come according to their order”; see also 1Cor 15:23.

4Mac 17:15
1Cor 9:25
2Tim 4:8
Jas 1:12
1Pet 5:4
Rev 2:10

1 16 And I answered and said:

O Lord, my Lord, behold, the present years are few and evil, and who can inherit that which is unmeasurable in this short time?

Gen 47:9
Pss 90:9-10

Gen 5:5

1 17 And the Lord answered and said to me:

2 With the Most High no account is taken of much time and of few years. •For what did it profit Adam that he lived nine hundred and thirty years and transgressed that which he was commanded? •Therefore, the multitude of time that he lived did not profit him, but it brought death and cut off the years of those who were born from him. •Or what did it harm Moses that he lived only one hundred and twenty years and, because he subjected himself to him who created him, he brought the Law to the descendants of Jacob and he lighted a lamp to the generation of Israel?^a 19:8; 23:4;

48:42-43; 54:15-19; 56:5-6
4Ezra 3:7, 21-22; 4:30; 7:118-121
Rom 5:12
1Cor 15:21
Deut 34:7
31:3; 46:4
4Ezra 3:19; 9:30
59:2
Ps 119:105

1 18 And I answered and said:

2 He who lighted took from the light, and there are few who imitated him. •But many whom he illuminated took from the darkness of Adam and did not rejoice in the light of the lamp.

Jn 1:9
Jn 3:19; 5:35

1 19 And he answered and said to me:

Therefore he appointed a covenant for them at that time and said, "Behold, I appoint for you life and death," and he called heaven and earth as a witness against them. •For he knew that his time was short, but that heaven and earth will stay forever. •They, however, sinned and trespassed after his death, although they knew that they had the Law to reprove them and that light in which nothing could err, apart from the spheres, which witnessed, and me. And I judge everything that exists. •You, however, should not think about this in your heart and you should not be afflicted because of the things which have been. •For now the end of times is at stake whether it be property, happiness, or shame; and not its beginning. •For when a man is happy in his youth and is treated badly in his old age, he forgets all happiness he possessed. •And further, when a man is badly treated in his youth but will be happy in the end, he does not remember his disgrace anymore.^a •And further, listen: Even if everyone had been happy continually since the day death was decreed against those who trespassed, but was destroyed in the end, everything would have been in vain.

84:2
Deut 30:19;
31:28
AsMos 3:12

1 20 Therefore, behold, the days will come and the times will hasten, more than the former, and the periods will hasten more than those which are gone, and the years will pass more quickly than the present ones.^a •Therefore, I now took away Zion to visit the world in its own time more speedily. •Now, however, remember everything which I commanded you and seal it in the interior of your mind. •And then I shall show you my strong judgment and my unexplorable ways. •Therefore, go away and sanctify yourself for seven days and do not eat bread and do not drink water and do not speak to anybody. •And after this time come to this place, and I shall reveal myself to you, and I shall speak to you true things, and I shall command you with regard to the course of times, for they will come and will not tarry.

54:1; 83:1
4Ezra 4:26
4Ezra 5:56;
6:18; 9:2

5:5

14:1

Prayer of Baruch, the Son of Neriah

1 21 I went from there and sat in the valley of Kidron in a cave of the earth and sanctified myself there and ate no bread, but I was not hungry; I drank no water, but I was not thirsty. And I stayed there until the seventh day as he had commanded me. •And after this I came to the place where he had spoken with me. •And it

5:5
5:6
13:1; 20:5

17 a. Cf. Ps-Philo 9:8; 15:6; and 19:4.

1-3; and Euripides, Andromache 100-3.

19 a. The same idea is found in classical Gk. writers; cf. Herodotus 1.32; Sophocles, Trachiniae

20 a. Cf. Ps-Philo 19:13.

happened at sunset that my soul received many thoughts, and I began to speak in the presence of the Mighty One, and said:

- 4 O hear me, you who created the earth, the one who fixed the firmament by the word^a and fastened the height of heaven by the spirit, the one who in the beginning
 5 of the world called that which did not yet exist and they obeyed you. • You who gave commandments to the air with your sign and have seen the things which are 6 to come as well as those which have passed.^b • You who reign with great thoughts over the powers which stand before you, and who rules with indignation^c the
 7 countless holy beings, who are flame and fire,^d whom you created from the beginning, those who stand around your throne. • For you alone (all) this exists
 8 so that you may create at once all that you want. • You are the one who causes the rain to fall on earth with a specific number of raindrops. You alone know the end
 9 of times before it has arrived. Hear my prayer. • For only you can sustain those who exist, those who have gone and those who will come, those who sin and those 10 who have proved themselves to be righteous,^e since you are the Living One, the Inscrutable One. • For you are the only Living One, the Immortal One and the 11 Inscrutable One, and you know the number of men. • And while many have sinned once, many others have proved themselves to be righteous.
 12 You know where you have preserved the end of those who have sinned or the 13 fulfillment of those who have proved themselves to be righteous. • For if only this life exists which everyone possesses here, nothing could be more bitter than this.
 14 For of what help is strength which changes into weakness, or food in abundance
 15 which changes into famine, or beauty which changes into ugliness? • For the nature of men is always changeable. • For as we were once, we are no longer, and as we 16 are now, we shall not remain in the future. • For if an end of all things had not been prepared, their beginning would have been senseless. • But let me know all that 17 which comes from you, and regarding that which I ask you, enlighten me.
 18 How long will corruption remain, and until when will the time of mortals be 19 happy, and until when will those who pass away be polluted by the great wickedness in this world?^f • Therefore, command mercifully and confirm all that you have said
 20 that you would do so that your power will be recognized by those who believe that your long-suffering means weakness. • And now show it to them, those who do
 21 not know, but who have seen that which has befallen us and our city, up to now, that it is in agreement with the long-suffering of your power, because you called
 22 us a beloved people on account of your name. • From now, therefore, everything is in a state of dying. • Therefore, reprove the angel of death,^g and let your glory
 23 appear, and let the greatness of your beauty be known, and let the realm of death be sealed^h so that it may not receive the dead from this time, and let the treasures
 24 of the soulsⁱ restore those who are enclosed in them. • For as many years have passed as those which passed since the days of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob and all
 25 those who were like them, who sleep in the earth—those on whose account you have said you have created the world. • And now, show your glory soon and do 26 not postpone that which was promised by you.
 And it happened that when I had ended the words of this prayer, I became very weak.

Ps 33:6
 Jer 10:12; 51:15
 48:8

2Mac 7:28
 Rom 4:17
 48:8,10; 54:2

48:10
 4Ezra 8:21
 Dan 7:9f.

Ps 104:4
 Isa 6:1-2
 48:8

4Ezra 8:23
 59:5 48:2; 54:1

Rev 1:8
 21:11,12;
 24:1,2; 51:1,3; 62:7
 14:9

23:4; 48:6,46

1Cor 15:19
 48:35; 88:11-21

28:5
 4Ezra 6:7

2Pet 3:9

Jer 14:9; 15:16

30:2
 4Ezra 4:35-41;
 7:32,95
 11:4

14:18; 15:7

44:13; 51:3;
 83:4,5

21 a. The MS reads bmPh, "in his fullness," which is corrected into bmlth.

b. The MS reads d'bd, "that which you are doing"; corrected by Kmosko and Dederling.

c. Syr. bz'ypwr. The same word is found in 4Ezra 8:23: "whose indignation melts the mountains." This sentence was quoted in AposCons 8:7: kai hē apeilē tēkei horē. The Gk. apeilē is used as a translation of the Heb. g'z' in the LXX; cf. Isa 50:2, which is also rendered by epitimēsis, an important word in the NT, cf. Mt 8:26; Lk 4:39; 9:42. The eschatological overtone is also seen in AsMos 10:3: "And he will go forth from his holy habitation with indignation and wrath on account of his sons."

d. Cf. 2En 29:3.

e. In Syr. the Ethpael of the verb zdq is used. This is usually translated "to act righteously," but the above translation seems to be better; cf. also 11, 12; 24:1 and 2; 51:1 and 3; and 62:7.

f. Answers are given in 23:7-24:1.

g. See for the angel of death Strack-Billerbeck, vol. 1, pp. 144-49.

h. Cf. Ps-Philo 3:10.

i. Cf. Ps-Philo 32:13.

1 22 And afterward it happened that, behold, the heaven was opened, and I saw, and strength was given to me, and a voice was heard from on high which said to me:

2,3 Baruch, Baruch, why are you disturbed? •Who starts on a journey and does not complete it? Or who will be comforted making a sea voyage unless he can reach 4 a harbor? •Or he who promises to give a present to somebody—is it not a theft, 5 unless it is fulfilled? •Or he who sows the earth—does he not lose everything unless 6 he reaps its harvest in its own time? •Or he who plants a vineyard—does the planter 7 expect to receive fruit from it, unless it grows until its appointed time? •Or a woman who has conceived—does she not surely kill the child when she bears 8 untimely? •Or he who builds a house, can it be called a house, unless it is provided with a roof and is finished? Tell this to me first.

48:25
4Ezra 5:14; 12:5
Dan 10:17
Ezek 1:1
Acts 7:57
Mt 3:16; 17:5
and par.; pass.
Rev 4:1

1 23 And I answered and said:

No, Lord, my Lord.

2 And he answered and said to me:

Why, then, are you disturbed about that which you do not know, and why are 3 you restless about that of which you do not possess any knowledge? •For as you have not forgotten men who exist and who have passed away, I remember those 4 who will come. •For when Adam sinned and death was decreed against those who were to be born, the multitude of those who would be born was numbered. And for that number a place was prepared where the living ones might live and where 5 the dead might be preserved.^a •No creature will live again unless the number that has been appointed is completed. For my spirit creates the living, and the realm 6 of death receives the dead. •And further, it is given to you to hear that which will 7 come after these times. •For truly, my salvation which comes has drawn near^b and is not as far away as before.

17:3
21:10

4Ezra 4:33-36
Rom 11:25
Rev 6:11

Rev 4:1
82:2
Lk 21:28
1Pet 4:7
Jas 5:3

1 24 For behold, the days are coming, and the books will be opened in which are written the sins of all those who have sinned,^a and moreover, also the treasures in which are brought together the righteousness of all those who have proven 2 themselves to be righteous. •And it will happen at that time that you shall see, and many with you, the long-suffering of the Most High, which lasts from generation to generation, who has been long-suffering toward all who are born, both those who sinned and those who proved themselves to be righteous.

4Ezra 6:20
1Dan 7:10
1En 90:20
Rev 20:12
14:12
21:9
21:20
Rom 9:22

3 And I answered and said:

But, behold, O Lord, a man does not know the number of things which pass 4 away nor those which come. •For behold, I also know what has befallen me; but that which will happen with our enemies, I do not know, or when you will command your works.

21:9

1 25 And he answered and said to me:

You also will be preserved until that time, namely until that sign which the Most 2 High will bring about before the inhabitants of the earth at the end of days. •This 3 then will be the sign:^a •When horror seizes the inhabitants of earth, and they fall 4 into many tribulations and further, they fall into great torments. •And it will happen that they will say in their thoughts because of their great tribulations, “The Mighty One does not anymore remember the earth”; It will happen when they lose hope, that the time will awake.

13:3

Mt 24:30
Mk 13:4
Lk 21:7; 11:25
Rev 12:1-3
70:2
4Ezra 13:30
Lk 21:25-26

23 a. Cf. 2En 49:2 and b.Hag 15a.

b. Cf. 1En 51:2.

24 a. 1En 90:20.

25 a. About signs announcing the coming judgment, cf. 4Ezra 4:51-5:13; 8:63-9:6; 1En 99:4-7; Jub 23:22-31; SibOr 3.796-808.

The apocalypse of the twelve calamities and the coming of the Messiah

1 26 And I answered and said:

That tribulation which will be will it last a long time; and that distress,^a will it embrace many years?

1 27 And he answered and said to me:

That time will be divided into twelve parts, and each part has been preserved
 2 for that for which it was appointed. •In the first part: the beginning of commotions.^a 53:6
 3,4 In the second part: the slaughtering of the great. •In the third part: the fall of 4Ezra 14:11-12
 5,6 many into death. •In the fourth part: the drawing of the sword. •In the fifth part: Mt 24:8
 7 famine and the withholding of rain. •In the sixth part: earthquakes and terrors. Rev 15:1
 8,9 In the eighth part:^b a multitude of ghosts^c and the appearances of demons. •In the Mt 24:7
 10 ninth part: the fall of fire. •In the tenth part: rape and much violence. •In the Mk 13:8
 11,12 eleventh part: injustice and unchastity. •In the twelfth part: disorder and a mixture Lk 21:11
 13 of all that has been before. •These parts of that time will be preserved and will 10:8
 14 be mixed, one with another, and they will minister to each other. •For some of 70:8
 15 these parts will withhold a part of themselves and take from others and will 4Ezra 5:18 accomplish that which belongs to them and to others; hence, those who live on earth in those days will not understand that it is the end of times. 48:32

1,2 28 But everyone who will understand will be wise at that time. •For the measure Dan 12:10 and the calculation of that time will be two parts: weeks of seven weeks.^a Mt 24:15

3 And I answered and said:

It is good that man should come so far and see, but it is better that he should 4Ezra 13:16-20 4,5 not come so far lest he fall. •But I shall also say this: •Will he who is incorruptible despise those who are corruptible, and will he despise what happens with those 40:3; 43:2; 44:9; who are corruptible so that he might only look to those who are not corruptible? 74:2; 85:5 6 But when, O Lord, these things will surely come of which you spoke to me before, 4Ezra 4:11;
 7 let me also know this, if I have found grace in your eyes: •Is it in one place or 7:31,114 in one part of the earth that these things will come or will they be noticed by the Gen 6:8; 19:19 whole earth? 4Ezra 4:56

1 29 And he answered and said to me:

That which will happen at that time bears upon the whole earth. Therefore, all
 2 who live will notice it. •For at that time I shall only protect those found in this 69:1
 3 land at that time.^a •And it will happen that when all that which should come to 40:2; 71:1
 pass in these parts has been accomplished, the Anointed One will begin to be 4Ezra 9:8; 4 revealed.^b •And Behemoth will reveal itself from its place, and Leviathan will 12:48-49 come from the sea, the two great monsters which I created on the fifth day of 39:7; 72:2 creation and which I shall have kept until that time. And they will be nourishment^c 4Ezra 7:27-28; 5 for all who are left.^d •The earth will also yield fruits ten thousandfold.^e And on 12:32; 13:32 one vine will be a thousand branches, and one branch will produce a thousand Isa 27:1 clusters, and one cluster will produce a thousand grapes, and one grape will 4Ezra 6:49-52 6 produce a cor of wine.^f •And those who are hungry will enjoy themselves and they 4Ezra 6:25;
 7 will, moreover, see marvels every day. •For winds will go out in front of me 7:28; 9:8; 12:34; every morning to bring the fragrance of aromatic fruits and clouds at the end of 13:24,26
 4Ezra 7:28;
 12:34; 13:50

26 a. Syr. 'nnq' from the Gk. anagkē; cf. Lk 21:23.

27 a. Syr. zw^o, which in the Syr. translations of the NT is used to render the Gk. seismos, "earthquake"; cf. Lk 21:11; Mt 24:71; and Mk 13:5.

b. The seventh part is absent.

c. Syr. pntsy^p; cf. Gk. phantasia, also in 48:34.

28 a. This indication is not clear.

29 a. Cf. Ps-Philo 7:4 and b.Pes 113a.

b. In PssSol the Anointed One is mentioned in 18:6; cf. 17:23ff. about the Son of David and the Servant. See also 1En 48:10 and 52:4. About the "appearance" of the Anointed One, see Jn 1:31 and 2Thes 1:7.

c. See Strack-Billerbeck, vol. 4, pp. 1156f.

d. Cf. 1En 90:30; SibOr 5: 384; and PssSol 18:7.

e. We find a close parallel in Irenaeus, Adv Haer 5.33.3-4, see also 1En 10:19.

f. See for this measure Josephus, Ant 15.14.

8 the day to distill the dew of health.^g •And it will happen at that time that the treasury of manna will come down again from on high, and they will eat of it in those years^h because these are they who will have arrived at the consummation of time.ⁱ

73:2
Isa 26:19
4Ezra 7:12;
8:52ff.
Ps 78:25
Rev 2:17

1 30 And it will happen after these things when the time of the appearance^a of the Anointed One has been fulfilled and he returns with glory,^b that then all who sleep in hope of him will rise. •And it will happen at that time that those treasuries will be opened in which the number of the souls of the righteous were kept,^c and they will go out and the multitudes of the souls will appear together, in one assemblage, of one mind. And the first ones will enjoy themselves and the last ones will not be sad. •For they know that the time has come of which it is said that it is the end of times. •But the souls of the wicked will the more waste away^d when they shall see all these things. •For they know that their torment has come and that their perditions have arrived.

48:22
21:23; 50:2
1Cor 15:52

Baruch speaks to the people

1 31 And it happened after these things, that I went to the people and said to them: Assemble to me all our elders and I shall speak words to you.
2.3 And they all assembled in the valley of the Kidron. •And I began to speak and said to them:
Hear, O Israel, and I shall speak to you, and you, O seed of Jacob, pay attention, and I shall teach you. •Do not forget Zion but remember the distress of Jerusalem. For, behold, the days are coming, that all that has been will be taken away to be destroyed, and it will become as though it had not been.

5:5; 44:1
5:5

17:4

1 32 You, however, if you prepare your minds to sow into them the fruits of the law,^a he shall protect you in the time in which the Mighty One shall shake the entire creation. •For after a short time, the building of Zion will be shaken in order that it will be rebuilt. •That building will not remain; but it will again be uprooted after some time and will remain desolate for a time. •And after that it is necessary that it will be renewed in glory and that it will be perfected into eternity.^b •We should not, therefore, be so sad regarding the evil which has come now, but much more (distressed) regarding that which is in the future. •For greater than the two evils will be the trial when the Mighty One will renew his creation.^c •And now, do not draw near to me for some days and do not call upon me until I shall come to you.

46:5
Job 11:13
4Ezra 9:31

4:2

ch. 27

44:12; 57:2
Isa 65:17
4Ezra 7:75
4Ezra 5:1

8 And it happened after having said all these words to them that I, Baruch, went my way. And when the people saw that I went away, they raised their voices and lamented and said:

9 Where are you going from us, Baruch, and do you leave us as a father who leaves his children as orphans and goes away from them?

4Ezra 5:18

1 33 These are the commands which your friend Jeremiah, the prophet, gave to you. And he said to you, •“Look to this people during the time I am absent, while I help the rest of our brothers in Babylon, against whom has been declared the sentence that they should be carried away into captivity.” •And now, if you

10:2
4Ezra 17:40

g. About dew as an eschatological gift see 1En 60:20; cf. 34:1–2; 36:1; and 75:5; and cf. b.Hag 12b.

h. SibOr 3.746; Ps-Philo 19:10; and b.Hag 12b.

i. Syr. *šwlmh dzbn*²; see Gal 4:4.

30 a. Syr. *m'tyr*², Gk. parousia; see Mt 24:37.

b. The Anointed One is pre-existent; cf. 1En 46:1–2; 48:3; 62:7; 4Ezra 12:32 and 13:26.

c. Cf. Ps-Philo 3:10; 11:6; 19:2; and 51:5.

d. Cf. Ps-Philo 16:3.

32 a. Lit. “to sow in them.” The Law as source of life, cf. 38:2 and 48:24; cf. also Sir 17:11; 32:24; 45:5; 1Bar 4:1; WisSol 6:18; 7:14; PssSol 14:2; and 4Ezra 7:45.

b. See Introduction.

c. Transformation of the creation is in 1En 45:4–5, and about a new heaven and earth see 1En 72:1 and 91:15–16.

abandon us too, it would have been better for all of us that we shall die first, and that then you should abandon us.

1 34 And I answered and said to the people:

Heaven forbid that I should abandon you or that I should go away from you. But I shall go to the Holy of Holies to ask from the Mighty One on behalf of you ^{10:5} and Zion so that I may receive in some ways more light, and after that I shall return to you.

The apocalypse of the forest, the vine, the fountain, and the cedar

1 35 And I, Baruch, went to the holy place and sat on the ruins and wept and said:

2 O that my eyes were springs, Jer 9:1
 and my eyelids, that they were a fountain of tears.
 3 For how shall I be sad over Zion,
 4 and lament over Jerusalem?
 For at the place where now I am prostrate,
 the high priests used to offer holy sacrifices, and placed thereon incense of fragrant spices.
 Now, however, that of which we are proud has become dust, and that which our soul desired is ashes.

1 36 And when I had said this, I fell asleep at that place and saw a vision in the Zech 1:8
 2 night. •And behold there was a forest with trees that was planted on the plain and Ezek 17:3-9 surrounded by high mountains and rugged rocks. And the forest occupied much 3 space. •And behold, over against it a vine arose, and from under it a fountain (ran) 4 peacefully. •And that fountain came to the forest and changed into great waves, and those waves submerged the forest and suddenly uprooted the entire forest and 5 overthrew all the mountains which surrounded it. •And the height of the forest became low, and that top of the mountains became low. And that fountain became 6 so strong that it left nothing of the great forest except one cedar. •When it had also cast that one down, it destroyed the entire forest and uprooted it so that nothing Ps 29:5 was left of it, and its place was not even known anymore. Then that vine arrived with the fountain in peace and in great tranquillity and arrived at a place which was not far away from the cedar, and they brought to him that cedar which had 7 been cast down. •And I saw, and behold, that vine opened its mouth and spoke and said to the cedar, “Are you not that cedar which remained of the forest of wickedness? Because of you, wickedness remained and has been done during all 8 these years, but never goodness. •And you possessed power over that which did not belong to you; you did not even show compassion to that which did belong to you. And you extended your power over those who were living far from you, and you keep those who are close to you in the nets of your wickedness, and you 9 uplift your soul always like one who could not be uprooted. •But now your time 10 has hastened and your hour has come. •Therefore O cedar, follow the forest which has departed before you and become ashes with it, and let your earth be mixed 11 together. •And now, sleep in distress and rest in pain until your last time comes in which you will return to be tormented even more.”

1 37 And after these things I saw that the cedar was burning and the vine growing, while it and all around it became a valley full of unfading flowers. And I awoke and arose.

Interpretation of the apocalypse

1 38 And I prayed and said:

O Lord, my Lord, you are the one who has always enlightened those who 44:14; 46:5;

 48:24,36; 51:3; 54:5; 59:7
 Prov 16:22

2 conduct themselves with understanding. •Your Law is life, and your wisdom is 3,4 the right way. •Now, show me the explanation of this vision. •For you know that my soul has always been associated with your Law, and that I did not depart from your wisdom from my earliest days.

32:1
 Prov 4:11
 Mk 10:20
 Lk 18:21

1 39 And he answered and said to me:

2 Baruch, this is the explanation of the vision which you have seen. •As you have seen the great forest surrounded by high and rocky mountains, this is the word:
 3 Behold, the days will come when this kingdom that destroyed Zion once will be 4 destroyed and that it will be subjected to that which will come after it. •This again will also be destroyed after some time. And another, a third, will rise and also that 5 will possess power in its own time and will be destroyed. •After that a fourth kingdom^a arises whose power is harsher and more evil than those which were before it, and it will reign a multitude of times like the trees on the plain, and it 6 will rule^b the times and exalt itself more than the cedars of Lebanon. •And the truth will hide itself in this and all who are polluted with unrighteousness will flee to it 7 like the evil beasts flee and creep into the forest. •And it will happen when the time of its fulfillment is approaching in which it will fall, that at that time the dominion of my Anointed One which is like the fountain and the vine, will be revealed. And when it has revealed itself, it will uproot the multitude of its host.
 8 And that which you have seen, namely the tall cedar, which remained of that forest, and with regard to the words which the vine said to it which you heard, this is the meaning.

4Ezra 5:1

29:3
 Jn 15:1
 40:2

1 40 The last ruler who is left alive at that time will be bound, whereas the entire host will be destroyed. And they will carry him on Mount Zion, and my Anointed One will convict him of all his wicked deeds and will assemble and set before him
 2 all the works of his hosts. •And after these things he will kill him^a and protect the 3 rest of my people who will be found in the place that I have chosen. •And his dominion will last forever until the world of corruption has ended^b and until the 4 times which have been mentioned before have been fulfilled. •This is your vision, and this is its explanation.

4Ezra 12:32;
 13:37
 29:2
 Dan 7:27
 28:4; 30:1
 Gal 4:4
 Tob 14:5
 4Ezra 11:44

About the apostates and the believers

1 41 And I answered and said:

2 For whom and for how many will these things be? Or who will be worthy to 2 live in that time? •I shall now say before you everything that I think, and I shall 3 ask you about the things of which I meditate. •For behold, I see many of your people who separated themselves from your statutes and who have cast away from 4 them the yoke of your Law.^a •Further, I have seen others who left behind their 5 vanity^b and who have fled under your wings.^c •What will, therefore, happen with 6 those? Or how will that last time receive them? •Their time will surely not be weighed exactly, and they will certainly not be judged as the scale indicates?

1:4
 Ps 36:8; 57:2
 Ruth 2:12

1 42 And he answered and said to me:

2 Also these things I shall show you. As for what you said: "To whom and to how many will these things be?" The good that was mentioned before will be to those who have believed,^a and the opposite of these things will be to those who 39 a. Apparently Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome are meant; cf. Dan 7.

b. The verb 'hd is used; cf. 48:8, "to take" or "to seize."

40 a. The Messiah as warrior, cf. 72:2; Isa 11:4; 1En 46:3-6; 62:2. See also the Targum of Ps. Jonathan on Genesis 49:11.

b. The rule of the Anointed One seems to be of a limited time.

41 a. This applies to Christians from the Jews; see for the expression "yoke of the Law" Ab 3:5 and b.Sanh 94b.

b. The heathen idols are meant; cf. Deut 32:2.

c. The author refers to proselytes; see for the expression "to flee under your wings" Pss 36:8; 57:2; and Ruth 2:12.

42 a. To believe in God is to live according to the Law. Cf. 54:5 and 21; 59:2; 4Ezra 6:27, 28; 9:7-8; and 1En 47:8.

3 have despised.^b •And as for that which you said with regard to those who have 4 drawn near^c and to those who have withdrawn, this is the explanation. •As for those who have first subjected themselves and have withdrawn later and who mingled themselves with the seed of the mingled nations,^d their first time will be 5 considered as mountains. •And those who first did not know life and who later knew it exactly and who mingled with the seed of the people who have separated 6 themselves, their first time will be considered as mountains.^e •And times will inherit times, and periods periods, and they will receive from one another. And then, with a view to the end, all will be compared according to the length of times 7 and the hours of periods.^f •For corruption will take away those who belong to it, 8 and life those who belong to it. •And dust will be called, and told, "Give back that which does not belong to you and raise up all that you have kept until its own 30:1-2 time."

1 43 You, however, Baruch, strengthen your heart with a view to that which has been said to you, and understand that which has been revealed to you because you 2 have many consolations which will last forever. •For you will go away from this place and leave the regions which are now before your eyes. And you shall forget 13:3 that which is corruptible and not again remember that which is among the mortal 21:19; 28:5 3 ones. •Go away, therefore, and command your people and come to this place and afterward fast seven days. And then I shall come to you and speak with you. 5:6

Baruch speaks to the people

1 44 And I, Baruch, went from there and came to my people and called my first- 46:1 born son and the Gedaliahs, my friends, and seven of the elders of the people and 5:1; 5:6; 46:1 said to them:

2,3 Behold, I go to my fathers in accordance with the way of the whole earth. •You, 3:2; 13:3
 however, do not withdraw from the way of the Law, but guard and admonish the Gen 15:15 people who are left lest they withdraw from the commandments of the Mighty J Josh 23:14 4 One. •For you see that he whom we serve is righteous and that our Creator is 1Kgs 2:2
 5,6 impartial. •And see what has befallen Zion and what happened to Jerusalem, •that 13:8
 the judgment of the Mighty One will be made known, as well as his ways which 7 are inscrutable and right. •For when you endure and persevere in his fear and do 14:9
 not forget his Law, the time again will take a turn for the better for you.^a And they 8 will participate in the consolation of Zion. •For that which is now is nothing. But Lk 2:25
 9 that which is in the future will be very great. •For^b everything will pass away 28:4 which is corruptible, and everything that dies will go away, and all present time will be forgotten, and there will be no remembrance of the present time which is 10 polluted by evils. •For he who runs now runs in vain and he who is happy will 11 fall quickly and be humiliated. •For that which will be in the future, that is what one will look for, and that which comes later, that is what we shall hope for. For 12 there is a time that does not pass away. •And that period is coming which will remain forever; and there is the new world which does not carry back to corruption 32:6
 those who enter into its beginning, and which has no mercy on those who come 13 into torment or those who are living in it, and it does not carry to perdition. •For those are the ones who will inherit this time of which it is spoken, and to these 14 is the heritage of the promised time. •These are they who prepared for themselves 21:25

b. Cf. for the destruction of sinners 4Ezra 7:93; 9:9-12; 1En 53:2; 56:1-4; 60:6; 69:27; 90:3-10; and 102:1-3.

c. See for the expression "to draw near" Eph 2:13 and 17; cf. Strack-Billerbeck, vol. 3, pp. 585f.

d. See for the expression Ex 30:5 and Jer 25:20; cf. Jub 30:7; TLevi 9:10; Philo, Spec Leg 3.29, about the prohibition of mixed marriages.

e. As in v. 4, we find the expression wrm? mhsb, which is unknown and cannot be satisfactorily emended. The author wants to say that the periods before the conversion no longer have significance.

f. It seems that the length of time during which one has been disobedient is taken into consideration.

44 a. The same promise in 46:5-6; 84:2; 85:4; Jub 1:22-23; 5:17; 23:26; and TJud 26:1.

b. 9-15 also in BM Add. 14.686 and A. Konath Library MS 77; see Introduction.

treasures of wisdom. And stores of insight are found with them. And they have 15 not withdrawn from mercy and they have preserved the truth of the Law. •For the coming world will be given to these, but the habitation of the many^c others will be in the fire.^d 28:1-2

1 45 You, therefore, admonish the people as much as you can. For this is our work.
 2 For, when you instruct them, you will make them alive.

1 46 And my son and the elders of the people said to me: 44:1

Did the Mighty One humiliate us to such an extent that he will take you away
 2 from us quickly? •And shall we truly be in darkness, and will there be no light
 3 anymore for that people who are left? •For where shall we again investigate the Law, or who will distinguish between death and life for us? 3:6

4 And I said to them:

I cannot resist the throne of the Mighty One. But Israel will not be in want of 5 a wise man, nor the tribe of Jacob, a son of the Law.^a •But only prepare your heart so that you obey the Law, and be subject to those who are wise and understanding 6 with fear. And prepare your soul that you shall not depart from them. •If you do this, those good tidings will come to you of which I spoke to you earlier, and you 7 will not fall into the torment of which I spoke to you earlier. •But with regard to the word that I shall be taken up, I did not let it be known to them at that time, not even to my son. Ps 119:92-93
 Prov 13:14
 4Ezra 14:20-21
 Jer 14:21; 17:12
 17:4; 77:16
 32:1 38:1-2 44:7
 13:3; 48:13
 4Ezra 14:50

1 47 And after I had left, having dismissed them, I returned from there and said to them:

Behold, I go to Hebron, for to there the Mighty One has sent me.

2 And I arrived at that place where the word was spoken to me, and I sat there and fasted seven days. 5:6

Prayer of Baruch

1 48 And it happened after seven days that I prayed before the Mighty One and said:

2 O Lord, you summon the coming of the times, and they stand before you.
 You cause the display of power of the worlds to pass away and they do not resist you.
 You arrange the course of the periods, and they obey you. 14:1

3 Only you know the length of the generations, and you do not reveal your secrets to many.
 4 You make known the multitude of the fire, and you weigh the lightness of the wind.
 5 You investigate the end of the heights, and you scrutinize the depths of darkness.
 6 You command the number which will pass away, and which will be preserved. 21:10

And you prepare a house for those who will be. Jn 14:2
 2Cor 5:1-2
 7 You remember the beginning which you created, and you do not forget that destruction which will come.
 8 With signs of fear and threat you command the flames, and they change into winds. 21:5-6
 And with the word you bring to life that which does not exist,

c. The word "many" is absent in the two MSS mentioned under n. b.

d. Cf. 4Ezra 7:36; 1En 90:26f.; 100:9; TZeb 10:3; and 4Mac 12:12.

46 a. In b.Shab 139b we meet "the disciples of the wise men," but it is not certain that they are identical with the unknown "son of the Law."

- and with great power you hold^a that which has not yet come.
- 9 You instruct the creation with your understanding, 21:6,4 and you give wisdom to the spheres so that they minister according to their positions.^b 51:11
- 10 Innumerable hosts^c stand before you, and serve peacefully your sign according to their positions. 48:8
- 11 Hear your servant,
and regard my appeal.
- 12 For we are born in a short time, and in a short time we return.
- 13 With you, however, the hours are like times, and the days like generations.
- 14 Be, therefore, not angry at man because he is nothing;
and do not take count of our works;
for what are we?
- 15 For behold, by your gift we come into the world, and we do go not of our own will. 14:11
- 16 For we did not say to our parents: "Beget us," nor have we sent to the realm of death saying: "Receive us."
17 What therefore is our strength that we can bear your wrath, or what are we that we can endure your judgment?
- 18 Protect us in your grace, and in your mercy help us.
- 19 Look at the small ones who submit to you, 8:10; Mt 10:42;
and save all those who come to you. 18:6,10
- 20 And do not take away the hope of our people, and do not make short the times of our help.
- 21 For these are the people whom you have elected, and this is the nation of which you found no equal.
- 22 But I shall speak to you now, and I shall say as my heart thinks.
- 23 In you we have put our trust, because, behold, your Law is with us, and we know that we do not fall as long as we keep your statutes. 44:7; 77:3
- 24 We shall always be blessed; at least, we did not mingle with the nations.
For we are all a people of the Name; 42:4
- 25 we, who received one Law from the One.
And that Law that is among us will help us, 78:4; 85:4 and that excellent wisdom which is in us will support us. Eph 4:4-6 38:1-2
- 26 And when I had prayed these things I became very weak. 21:26
- 27 And he answered and said to me:
- You have prayed honestly, Baruch, and all your words have been heard.
- 28 But my judgment asks for its own,
and my Law demands its right.
- 29 For from your words I shall answer you, and from your prayer I shall speak with you.
- 30 Because it is as follows: There is nothing that will be destroyed unless it acted wickedly, if it had been able to do something without remembering my goodness and accepting my long-suffering.
- 31 For this reason surely you will be taken up, as I said to you before. • And the 46:7 time will come of which I spoke to you and that time is appearing which brings affliction. For it will come and pass away with enormous vehemence; and arriving 48 a. See 29:5.

b. Cf. 1En 2:1 and 1Clem 20; see also Jude 6.

c. 2En 20:1-3.

32 in the heat of indignation, it will be turbulent. • And it will be in those days that all inhabitants of the earth will live with each other in peace, because they do not 33 know that my judgment has come near.^d • For in that time there will not be found many wise men and there will also be not many intelligent ones, but, in addition, 34 they who know will be silent more and more.^e • And there will be many tidings and not a few rumors, and the works of the phantoms will be visible, and not a 35 few promises will be told, some idle and others affirmed.^f • And honor will change itself into shame, and strength will be humiliated to contempt, and the strong one 36 will be broken down, and beauty will become contemptible. • And many will say to many in that time, “Where did the multitude of intelligence hide itself and 37 where did the multitude of wisdom depart?”^g • And when one thinks about these things, jealousy will arise in those who did not think much of themselves; and passion will take hold of those who were peaceful; and many will be agitated by wrath to injure many; and they will raise armies to shed blood; and they will 38 perish with those at the end. • And it will happen in that time that a change of times will reveal itself openly for the eyes of everyone because they polluted themselves in all those times and caused oppression, and each one walked in his 39 own works and did not remember the Law of the Mighty One. • Therefore, a fire will consume their thoughts, and with a flame the meditations of their kidneys^h 40 will be examined. For the Judge will come and will not hesitate. • For each of the inhabitants of the earth knew when he acted unrighteously, and they did not know 41 my Law because of their pride. • But many will surely weep at that time—more, however, because of the living ones than of the dead.

27:15
 Jer 6:14; 8:11
 Ezek 13:10

ch. 28; 70; 5
 Mt 24:6, 11, 24
 27:9

38:1-2; 70:5
 4Ezra 5:9-11

70:6
 Mt 24:6

44:7

4Ezra 3:8

Ps 7:10
 Jer 11:20; 17:10;
 20:12
 Sir 35:18
 2Pet 3:9
 Rom 2:14-15

42 And I answered and said:

O Adam, what did you do to all who were born after you? And what will be 43 said of the first Eve who obeyed the serpent, • so that this whole multitude is going to corruption? And countless are those whom the fire devours.

17:3

44 But again I shall speak before you.

45,46 You, O Lord, my Lord, you know that which is in your creation, • for you commanded the dust one day to produce Adam; and you knew the number of those who are born from him and how they sinned before you, those who existed and 47 who did not recognize you as their Creator. • And concerning all of those, their end will put them to shame, and your Law which they transgressed will repay them on your day.

48 But now, let us cease talking about the wicked and inquire about the righteous.

49 And I will tell about their blessedness and I shall not be silent about their glory
 50 which is kept for them. • For surely, as you endured much labor in the short time in which you live in this passing world, so you will receive great light in that world which has no end.

2Cor 4:17

1 49 But further, I ask you, O Mighty One; and I shall ask grace from him who 2 created all things. • In which shape will the living live in your day? Or how will 3 remain their splendor which will be after that? • Will they, perhaps, take again this present form, and will they put on the chained^a members which are in evil and by which evils are accomplished? Or will you perhaps change these things which have been in the world, as also the world itself?

1Cor 15:51

1 50 And he answered and said to me:

Listen, Baruch, to this word and write down in the memory of your heart all

d. [Klijn has accurately represented the Syr. Charles saw a problem with this verse and emended the Syr. so as to obtain “shall be moved one against the other, because they know not that my judgement has drawn nigh.” APOT, vol. 2, p. 506. —J.H.C.]

e. 33 is quoted in Cyprian, Testimoniorum libri III ad Quirinum 3.29.

f. 34 is quoted in Cyprian, Testimoniorum libri III ad Quirinum 3.29.

g. 36 is quoted in Cyprian, Testimoniorum libri III ad Quirinum 3.29.

h. This Syr. idiom means “the meditations of their innermost self.”

49 a. Cf. OdesSol 17:4: “My chains were cut off by his hands” and 21:2: “Because he cast off my bonds for me.” [The Syr. text here is difficult to understand. —J.H.C.]

2 that you shall learn. •For the earth will surely give back the dead at that time; it 30:2 receives them now in order to keep them, not changing anything in their form. But as it has received them so it will give them back. And as I have delivered them 3 to it so it will raise them. •For then it will be necessary to show those who live that the dead are living again, and that those who went away have come back.
 4 And it will be that when they have recognized each other,^a those who know each other at this moment, then my judgment will be strong, and those things which have been spoken of before will come.

1 51 And it will happen after this day which he appointed is over that both the shape of those who are found to be guilty as also the glory of those who have 2 proved to be righteous will be changed. •For the shape of those who now act wickedly will be made more evil than it is (now) so that they shall suffer torment.
 3 Also, as for the glory of those who proved to be righteous on account of my law, 21:9 those who possessed intelligence in their life, and those who planted the root of wisdom in their heart—their splendor will then be glorified by transformations, and the shape of their face will be changed into the light of their beauty so that they may acquire and receive the undying world which is promised to them. 33:1-2 4 Therefore, especially they who will then come will be sad, because they despised Sir 1:6,20 my Law^a and stopped their ears lest they hear wisdom and receive intelligence. Wis 3:15 5 When they, therefore, will see that those over whom they are exalted now will 4Ezra 7:97 then be more exalted and glorified than they, then both these and those will be Mt 17:2 changed, these into the splendor of angels and those into startling visions and Phil 3:21 6 horrible shapes; and they will waste away even more. •For they will first see and 74:2 then they will go away to be tormented. 21:25 7 Miracles, however, will appear at their own time to those who are saved because Zech 7:11 of their works and for whom the Law is now a hope, and intelligence, expectation, 30:4 8 and wisdom a trust. •For they shall see that world which is now invisible to them, 51:3
 9 and they will see a time which is now hidden to them. •And time will no longer Lk 20:36 10 make them older. •For they will live in the heights of that world and they will be like the angels^b and be equal to the stars.^c And they will be changed into any shape which they wished, from beauty to loveliness, and from light to the splendor of 11 glory. •For the extents of Paradise will be spread out for them, and to them will 4:7 be shown the beauty of the majesty of the living beings under the throne,^d as well 48:10 as all the hosts of the angels, those who are held by my word now lest they show 48:10 themselves, and those who are withheld by my command so that they may stand 12 at their places until their coming has arrived. •And the excellence of the righteous 13 will then be greater than that of the angels. •For the first will receive the last, those whom they expected; and the last, those of whom they had heard that they had 14 gone away. •For they have been saved from this world of affliction and have put 15 down the burden of anguishes. •Because of which men lost their life and for what 15:8
 16 have those who were on the earth exchanged their soul? •For once they chose for Mt 16:26 themselves that time which cannot pass away without afflictions. And they chose for themselves that time of which the end is full of lamentations and evils. And they have denied the world that does not make those who come to it older. And they have rejected the time which causes glory so that they are not coming to the glory of which I spoke to you before.

50 a. Cf. Ps-Philo 62:9.

51 a. This can be compared with 1QpHab 1:11 and 5:11–12.

b. According to 1En 62:13–16 “the righteous and elect” will be clothed with “garments of glory,” and according to 104:4 their joy will be as that of the angels of heaven; see also Strack-

Billerbeck, vol. 1, p. 891.

c. Cf. Dan 12:3 and 1En 104:2; see also 2En 66:7.

d. b.Shab 152b speaks about the souls under the throne. If we have to accept that “the living beings” are standing lower than the throne, we can refer to Rev 6:4 or 7:11.

1 52 And I answered and said:

2 How shall we forget^a those for whom at that time woe is preserved? •And why
 3 are we again sad for those who die? Or why do we weep for those who go into 4 the realm of death? •The lamentations should be kept for the beginning of that 5 coming torment; let the tears be laid down for the coming of that destruction which 6 will then come. •But with a view of these things, I shall also speak. •And concerning 7 the righteous ones, what will they do now? •Enjoy yourselves in the suffering
 8 which you suffer now.^b For why do you look for the decline of your enemies?
 9 Prepare your souls for that which is kept for you, and make ready your souls for 10 the reward which is preserved for you.

And when I had said this I fell asleep there.

The apocalypse of the clouds

1 53 And I saw a vision. And behold, a cloud was coming up from the great sea.
 2 And I was looking at it, and behold, it was entirely filled with black water and 3 there were many colors in that water. And something like great lightning appeared
 4 at its top. •And I saw that the cloud was rapidly passing in a quick run and covering
 5 the whole earth. •And it happened after this that the cloud began to pour the water
 6 that it contained upon the earth. •And I saw that the water which descended from 7 it was not of the same likeness. •For at first, it was very black until a certain time.
 8 And then, I saw that the water became bright, but there was not much of it. And 9 after this, I saw black water again, and after this bright again, and black again and 10 bright again. •This, now, happened twelve times, but the black were always more 11 than the bright. •And it happened at the end of the cloud that, behold, it poured 12 black water and it was much darker than all the water that had been before. And 13 fire was mingled with it. And where that water descended, it brought about 14 devastation and destruction. •And after this I saw how the lightning which I had 15 seen at the top of the cloud seized it and pressed it down to the earth. •That 16 lightning shone much more, so that it lighted the whole earth and healed the regions 17 where the last waters had descended and where it had brought about destruction.
 18 And it occupied the whole earth and took command of it. •And after this I saw, 19 behold, twelve rivers^a came from the sea and surrounded the lightning and became 20 subject to it. •And because of my fear I awoke.

Prayer of Baruch

1 54 And I asked the Mighty One and said:

2 You alone, O Lord, knew the heights of the world beforehand and that which 3 will happen in the times which you bring about by your word. And against the 4 works of the inhabitants of the earth you hasten the beginnings of the times. And 5 the ends of the periods you alone know. •You are the one for whom nothing is 6 hard; but you are, however, the one who easily accomplishes all by a sign. •You 7 are the one to whom both the depths and the heights come together, and whose 8 word the beginnings of the periods serve. •You are the one who reveals to those 9 who fear that which is prepared for them so that you may comfort them. •You 10 show your mighty works to those who do not know. You pull down the enclosure 11 for those who have no experience and enlighten the darknesses, and reveal the 12 secrets to those who are spotless, to those who subjected themselves to you and 13 your Law in faith.
 14 You showed this vision to your servant; open to me its exposition also. •For ⁵² a. MS ḥyn, "how will they forget," but with the editions of Charles, Ryssel, and Kmosko ḥynn must be read.

b. About the joy to suffer see 4Mac 15:24; 16:17ff.; 17:2; 9f.; b.Sanh 101a; GenR 33:1; Mt

5:10; Acts 5:41; Jas 1:2.

⁵³ a. The rivers can refer either to Israel or the nations.

- I know that I have received the answer regarding the subjects about which I asked you, and that you gave me a revelation about that which I asked, and that you have let me know with what voice I should honor you or from which members I should
- 8 cause glory and praise to go up to you. •For if my members should be mouths and the hairs of my head voices, even so I should not be able to honor you properly; and I should not be able to utter your glory or to express the excellence of your
- 9 beauty.^a •For who am I among men or what is my significance among those who are more excellent than I that I have heard all these marvelous things from the
- 10 Most High and innumerable promises from him who created me? •Blessed is my mother among those who bear, and praised among women is she who bore me.
- 11 For I shall not be silent in honoring the Mighty One but with the voice of glory
- 12 I shall narrate his marvelous works. •For who is able to imitate^b your miracles, O God, or who understands your deep thoughts of life? Jdg 5:24
Lk 1:42; 11:27
Ps 107:22
75:1
Ps 40:6
Sir 18:4-5; 42:17
4Ezra 3:5
- 13 For with your counsel, you reign over all creation which your right hand has created, and you have established the whole fountain of light with yourself, and
- 14 you have prepared under your throne the treasures of wisdom. •And those who do not love your Law are justly perishing. And the torment of judgment will fall upon
- 15 those who have not subjected themselves to your power. •For, although Adam sinned first and has brought death upon all who were not in his own time, yet each of them who has been born from him has prepared for himself the coming torment.
- 16 And further, each of them has chosen for himself the coming glory. •For truly, the one who believes will receive reward. 17:3
Rom 5:12
Hab 2:4
Rom 1:17
Heb 10:38
- 17 But now, turn yourselves to destruction, you unrighteous ones who are living now, for you will be visited suddenly, since you have once rejected the understanding of the Most High. •For his works have not taught you, nor has the artful
- 18 work of his creation which has existed always persuaded you.^c •Adam is, therefore, not the cause, except only for himself, but each of us has become our own Adam. Wis 13:1-9
Rom 1:20-21
54:15
- 19 You, however, O Lord, explain to me what you have revealed to me. And
- 20 inform me about that which I asked you. •For at the end of the world, a retribution will be demanded with regard to those who have done wickedly in accordance with their wickedness, and you will glorify the faithful ones in accordance with
- 21 their faith. •For those who are among your own, you rule; and those who sin, you blot out among your own. 42:2

Interpretation of the apocalypse

- 1 55 And it happened that when I had finished the words of this prayer, I sat down
- 2 there under a tree to rest in the shadow of its branches. •And I was surprised and
- astonished, and I pondered in my thoughts about the multitude of the goodness
- which the sinners who are on earth have rejected from them, and about the great
- punishment which they have despised, when they knew that they should be punished
- 3 because of the sins they have committed. •And while I was pondering these and
- similar things, behold, Ramael,^a the angel who is set over true visions, was sent
- to me and said to me: 15:6 63:6
4Ezra 4:36
- 4 Why does your heart trouble you, Baruch, and why are you disturbed by your
- 5 thought? •For if you are already disturbed, only hearing about the judgment, what
- 6 about when you see it with your eyes openly? •And if you are already so disturbed by the expectation with which you expect the day of the Mighty One, what about
- 7 when you arrive at its coming? •And if you are so fully terrified by the words of the announcement of the punishment of those who have transgressed, how much
- 8 more when this event itself will reveal marvelous things? •And if you have heard the names of the good and evil things which will come at that time, and if you are 54 a. PssSol 15:3 and OdesSol 26:4.

b. Syr. midm', also in 75:1, can be translated as "to imagine" and "to imitate." Both translations are possible here.

c. Cf. 1En 36:4.

55 a. In 4Ezra 4:36 he is called Jeremiel, but in the Syr. translation he is also named Ramael; cf. SibOr 2.215-17 and 1En 20:8, where he is one of the archangels.

grieved, what about when you will see what the Majesty will reveal, who will convince some and cause others to rejoice?

1 56 But now, since you have asked the Most High to reveal to you the explanation
 2 of the vision which you have seen, I have been sent to say to you •that the Mighty
 One has let you know the course of times, namely those which have passed and ^{14:1} those which in his world will come to pass, from the beginning of his creation 3 until the end, (the times) which are known by deceit and by truth. •For as you saw a great cloud which came up from the sea and went and covered the earth; this is the length of the world which the Mighty One has created when he took counsel 4 in order to create the world.^a •And it happened when the word had gone out from him, that the length of the world was standing as something small, and it was established^b in accordance with the abundance of the intelligence of him who let 5 it go forth. •And as you first saw the black waters on the top of the cloud which first came down upon the earth; this is the transgression which Adam, the first 6 man, committed. •For when he transgressed, untimely death came into being, ^{17:3} mourning was mentioned, affliction was prepared, illness was created, labor accomplished, pride began to come into existence, the realm of death began to ask to be renewed with blood, the conception of children came about, the passion of the parents was produced, the loftiness of men was humiliated, and goodness ^{Prov 27:20}
 7 vanished. •What could, therefore, have been blacker and darker than these things? ^{Isa 5:14}
^{Hab 2:5}
^{Gen 3:16}
 8,9 This is the beginning of the black waters which you have seen. •And from these 10 black waters again black were born, and very dark darkness originated. •For he 11 who was a danger to himself was also a danger to the angels. •For they possessed 12 freedom in that time in which they were created. •And some of them came down
 13 and mingled themselves with women. •At that time they who acted like this were ^{Gen 6:1-4} 14 tormented in chains.^c •But the rest of the multitude of angels, who have no number, 15 restrained themselves. •And those living on earth perished together through the 16 waters of the flood. •Those are the first black waters.

1 57 And after these you saw the bright waters; that is the fountain of Abraham and his generation, and the coming of his son, and the son of his son, and of those 2 who are like them. •For at that time the unwritten law was in force^a among them, and the works of the commandments were accomplished at that time, and the belief ^{32:6} in the coming judgment was brought about, and the hope of the world which will be renewed was built at that time, and the promise of the life that will come later 3 was planted. •Those are the bright waters which you have seen.

1 58 And the third black waters you have seen; that is the mingling of all sins which the nations committed afterward, after the death of those righteous men, and the wickedness of the land of Egypt, in which they acted wickedly in the 2 oppression with which they oppressed their sons. •But also these perished at the ^{Ex 1:14} end.

1 59 And the fourth bright waters which you have seen; that is the coming of ^{Ex 2:10}
 Moses, and of Aaron, and of Miriam, and of Joshua, the son of Nun, and of ^{Ex 4:14; 15:20}
 2 Caleb, and all those who are like these. •For at that time the lamp of the eternal ^{Ex 17:9} law which exists forever and ever illuminated all those who sat in darkness. This ^{Num 13:6} (lamp) will announce to those who believe the promise of their reward and to those ^{17:4}
 3 who deny the punishment of the fire which is kept for them. •But also the heaven ^{42:2} will be shaken from its place at that time; that is, the heavens which are under the throne of the Mighty One were severely shaken when he took Moses with him.^a ^{Ex 24:12-18} 56 a. The cloud exists of thirteen parts: twelve parts alternately black and bright and finally one very black part.

b. [Klijn here follows Charles, who accepted Ceriani's emendation of the Syr., and rendered this verb as "was established." —J.H.C.]

c. Cf. 1En 10:4; see also 2En 18:4–6 and Sir 44:20.

57 a. See Jub 23:10 and b.Yoma 28b.

59 a. Cf. Ps-Philo 19:16.

4 For he showed him many warnings together with the ways of the Law and the end of time, as also to you; and then further, also the likeness of Zion with its measurements which was to be made after the likeness of the present sanctuary. Ex 25:40; 26:30
4:5
Heb 8:5

5 But he also showed him, at that time, the measures of fire, the depths of the abyss,^b the weight of the winds,^c the number of the raindrops,^d •the suppression of wrath, the abundance of long-suffering, the truth of judgment, •the root of wisdom, the richness of understanding, the fountain of knowledge, •the height of the air,^e the greatness of Paradise, the end of the periods, the beginning of the day of judgment,^f •the number of offerings,^g the worlds which have not yet come, •the mouth of hell,^h the standing place of vengeance, the place of faith, the region of hope, •the picture of the coming punishment, the multitude of the angels which cannot be counted, the powers of the flame, the splendor of lightnings,ⁱ the voice of the thunders, the orders of the archangels,^j the treasures of the light, the changes of the times,^k and the inquiries into the Law. •These are the fourth bright waters you have seen.

1 60 And the fifth black waters which you have seen poured down; those are the works which the Amorites have done, and the invocations of their incantations which they wrought, and the wickedness of their mysteries, and the mingling of their pollutions.^a •But even Israel was polluted with sins in these days of the judges, although they saw many signs which were from him who created them. Josh 24:18
Judg 3:5

1 61 And the sixth bright waters which you have seen; this is the time in which David and Solomon were born. •And at that time the building of Zion took place, and the dedication of the sanctuary, and the shedding of much blood of the nations which sinned at that time, and the many offerings which were offered at that time 1Kgs 8:1ff

3 at the inauguration of the sanctuary. •And rest and peace reigned at that time. 1Kgs 8:62-63

4 And wisdom was heard in the assembly, and the richness of understanding was magnified in the congregations. •And the holy festivals were fulfilled in happiness 1Kgs 3:12

6 and much joy. •And the judgment of the rulers was seen at that time without deceit, and the righteousness of the commandments of the Mighty One was accomplished 21:9

7 in truth. •And the land which then received mercy, since its inhabitants did not sin, was praised above all countries, and the city of Zion ruled over all countries EBar 11:9

8 and regions at that time. •These are those bright waters you have seen.

1 62 And the seventh black waters you have seen; that is the perversion of the ideas of Jeroboam who planned to make two golden calves, •and all the iniquities accomplished by the kings who succeeded him, •and the curse of Jezebel, and the idolatry which Israel practiced at that time, •and the withholding of rain, and the famines of such a kind that the women ate the fruits of their womb, •and the time of their exile which befell the nine and a half tribes because they lived in many sins. •And Salmanassar, the king of the Assyrians, came and carried them away into captivity. •And concerning the nations much could be said: how they acted unrighteously and wickedly, and how they never proved themselves to be righteous. 1Kgs 12:32
1Kgs 18:4
2Kgs 6:28-29
1:2
1:2
2Kgs 17:3-6
4Ezra 13:40
21:9

8 These are those seventh black waters you have seen.

1 63 And the eighth bright waters you have seen; that is the righteousness and the integrity of Hezekiah, King of Judah, and the grace which came upon him. •For at that time Sennacherib was moved to destroy, and his wrath roused him, and also the multitude of the nations which were with him in order to destroy; •when Hezekiah the king heard that which the Assyrian king devised, namely, to come 2Kgs 16:20
2Kgs 18:13-37

b. Cf. 1En 18:11 and 21:7-10.

c. Cf. 1En 41:4 and 2En 40:11.

d. Cf. Sir 1:2; 2En 47:5; and Ps-Philo 19:10.

e. Cf. 1En 40:12.

f. Cf. 2En 65:7-10.

g. Cf. Ps-Philo 19:10.

h. Cf. 1En 27:2f.; 54:1-6; and 90:26f.

i. Cf. 1En 41:3; 43:1f.; 60:13-15; and 2En 40:9.

j. Cf. 1En 61:10; 71:7-9; and 2En 30:1 and 3.

k. Cf. 1En 82:11-20; 2En 13:5; and 40:6.

60 a. Cf. Jub 29:11 and Ps-Philo 25:10-13.

and seize him and destroy his people—the two and a half tribes which were left— and that he also wanted to destroy Zion, then Hezekiah trusted upon his works, and hoped upon his righteousnesses, and spoke with the Mighty One and said: ^{21:9} 4 “Pay attention, behold, Sennacherib is ready to destroy us, and he will boast and 5 be uplifted when he has destroyed Zion.” • And the Mighty One heard him for ^{2Kgs 19:14-19} 6 Hezekiah was wise, and he paid attention to his prayers for he was righteous. • And 7 the Mighty One then commanded Ramael, his angel who speaks with you. • And ^{55:3}
 I went away and destroyed their multitude, of which the number of the chiefs alone was one hundred and eighty-five thousand, and each of them had an equal 8 number.^a • And at that time I burned their bodies within, but I preserved their clothes and their arms on the outside so that still more of the marvelous works of the Mighty One might be seen, and so that his name might be mentioned throughout 9 the entire earth.^b • Thus Zion was saved, and Jerusalem was delivered from its 10 tribulations. • And all those who were in the holy land rejoiced, and the name of 11 the Mighty One was praised so that it was spoken of. • These are those bright waters which you have seen.

1 64 And the ninth black waters you have seen; that is, the wickedness that existed
 2 in the days of Manasseh, the son of Hezekiah. • For he acted very wickedly, and ^{2Kgs 21:2} killed the righteous, and perverted judgment, and shed innocent blood, and violently polluted married women, and overturned altars, and abolished their offerings, and 3 drove away the priests lest they minister in the sanctuary. • And he made a statue with five faces: Four of them looked into the direction of the four winds, and the fifth was on the top of the statue so as to challenge the zeal of the Mighty One.^a 4 And then the wrath of the Mighty One went out so that Zion should be uprooted 5 as has also happened in your days. • But also the judgment went out against the two and a half tribes so that they also should be carried away into captivity as 6 you have now seen. • And the impiety of Manasseh increased to such a degree 7 that the glory of the Most High removed itself from the sanctuary.^b • Therefore, Manasseh was called the impious one in that time, and finally his habitation was 8 in the fire. • For although the Most High had heard his prayer, in the end when he fell into the brazen horse and the brazen horse was melted, it became to him as 9 a sign regarding the hour (which was to come).^c • For he had not lived perfectly since he was not worthy, but (the sign was given to him) that he might know 10 henceforth by whom he should be punished at the end. • For he who is able to benefit is also able to punish.

1 65 This Manasseh sinned and he thought in his time that the Mighty One would 2 not call account for these things.^a • These are those ninth black waters you have seen.

1 66 And the tenth bright waters you have seen; that is the purity of the generation ^{2Kgs 22:1} of Josiah, the king of Judah, who was the only one in his time who subjected 2 himself to the Mighty One with his whole heart and his whole soul. • He purified ^{2Kgs 23:4-30} the country from the idols, sanctified all the vessels which were polluted, restored the offerings to the altar, raised the horn of the holy, exalted the righteous, and honored all those who were wise with understanding. He brought the priests back to their ministry, and destroyed and removed the magicians, enchanters, and

63 a. 2Kgs 19:35–36; 2Mac 8:19 and 15:22 mention a number of one hundred and eighty-five thousand killed. 2Chr 32:21 does not speak about a particular number, but b.Sanh 95b writes about a baraita giving the number as two thousand and six hundred million “less one.”
 b. Cf. b.Sanh 94a.

in the Peshitta version of 2Chr 33:7 and also in the Commentary on the Diatessaron by Ephraem Syrus; see L. Leloir (ed.), Commentaire de L'Évangile Concordant ou Diatessaron (SC 121; Paris, 1966) p. 200. See also b.Sanh 103b.
 b. Cf. b.Sanh 103b.

c. Cf. 2Chr 33:10–13 and Targum 2Chr 33:11.

64 a. The same or a similar tradition is available

65 a. Cf. b.Sanh 90a.

3 diviners from the land. •And he not only killed the impious who were living, but 4 also the bones were taken from the graves of the dead and burned with fire. •And he established the festivals and the sabbaths with their holy practices, and he burned the polluted with fire, and as for the lying prophets who deceived the people, also these he burned with fire. He cast the people who obeyed them, as 5 long as they lived, into the Kidron valley, and heaped stones upon them. •And he was zealous with the zeal of the Mighty One with his whole soul, and he alone was strong in the Law at that time so that he left no one un-circumcised or anyone 6 who acted wickedly in the whole country all the days of his life. •He, then, is one who shall receive reward forever and ever and be honored with the Mighty 7 One more than many in the last time. •For on his account and on account of those who are like him, the precious glories have been created and prepared which were 8 spoken to you earlier. •These are those bright waters which you have seen.

1 67 And the eleventh black waters you have seen; that is the disaster which has 2 befallen Zion now. •Do you think that there is no mourning among the angels before the Mighty One, that Zion is delivered up in this way? Behold, the nations 5:1
 rejoice in their hearts, and the multitudes are before their idols and say, “She who has trodden others down for such a long time has been trodden down; and she who 3 has subjugated has been subjugated.” •Do you think that the Most High rejoices
 4 in these things or that his name has been glorified? •But how will it be with his 5 righteous judgment? •But after these things those scattered among the nations will 6 be taken hold of by tribulations and live in shame in every place. •For so far as Zion has been delivered up and Jerusalem laid waste, the idols in the cities of the nations are happy and the flavor of the smoke of the incense of the righteousness of the Law has been extinguished everywhere in the region of Zion; behold, the 7 smoke of the impiety is there. •But the king of Babylon will arise, the one who now has destroyed Zion, and he will boast over the people and speak haughtily 8,9 in his heart before the Most High. •And he too will fall finally. •These are those black waters.

21:9
Rom 10:5
Phil 3:6

1,2 68 And the twelfth bright waters which you have seen; this is the word. •For there will come a time after these things, and your people will fall into such a 3 distress so that they are all together in danger of perishing. •They, however, will 4 be saved, and their enemies will fall before them.^a •And to them will fall much 5 joy one day. •And at that time, after a short time, Zion will be rebuilt again, and the offerings will be restored, and the priests will again return to their ministry.^b 6,7 And the nations will again come to honor it.^c •But not as fully as before. •But it Ezra 3:12 8 will happen after these things that there will be a fall of many nations. •These are the bright waters you have seen.

1 69 With regard to the last waters you have seen which are blacker than all those preceding which came after the twelfth, those which were brought together; they 2 apply to the whole world. •For the Most High made a division at the beginning 29:1
 3 for only he knows what will happen in the future. •For with regard to the evils of 4 the coming impieties which occurred before him, he saw six kinds. •And of the good works of the righteous which would be accomplished before him, he foresaw six kinds, with the exclusion of that which he should accomplish himself at the 5 end of the world. •These are, therefore, not black waters with black, nor bright with bright. For that is the end.

1 70 Therefore, hear the exposition of the last black waters which will come after 2 the black waters. This is the word. •Behold, the days are coming and it will happen when the time of the world has ripened and the harvest of the seed of the evil ones 68 a. This might refer to Esther.

b. This refers to the restoration of the Temple

after the exile in Babylon.

c. Cf. Tob 14:5-6.

and the good ones has come that the Mighty One will cause to come over the earth and its inhabitants and its rulers confusion of the spirit and amazement of the heart.

3 And they will hate one another and provoke one another to fight. And the despised will rule over the honorable, and the unworthy will raise themselves over the 4 illustrious. •And many will be delivered to the few, those who were nothing will rule over the strong, the poor will be greater in number than the rich, and the 5 impious will exalt themselves over the brave. •The wise will be silent, and the foolish will speak. And the thought of men will not be realized then, nor the 6 counsel of the strong, and the hope of those who hope will not be realized. •Then it will happen when those things occur which have been said before will come to pass, that confusion will fall upon all men. And some of them will fall in war, and others will perish in tribulations, and again others of them will be troubled by their 7 own. •The Most High will then give a sign to those nations which he has prepared before, and they will come and wage war with the rulers who will then remain.
8 And it will happen that everyone who saves himself from the war will die in an earthquake, and he who saves himself from the earthquake will be burned by fire,
9 and he who saves himself from the fire will perish by famine. •And it will happen that everyone who will save himself and escape from all things which have been 10 said before—both those who have won and those who have been overcome—that all will be delivered into the hands of my Servant, the Anointed One. •For the whole earth will devour its inhabitants.

25:3
4Ezra 6:24

48:33,36

4Ezra 5:12

48:37

27:7,10,6
4Ezra 9:3;
13:29-32

Isa 21:9; 42:1; 42:9; 43:10;
44:21; 49:3
Acts 3:13,26; 4:27.

1 71 And the holy land will have mercy on its own and will protect its inhabitants
2 at that time. •This is the vision which you have seen, and this is its explanation. For I have come to tell you these things since your prayer has been heard by the Most High.

29:2

1 72 Now,^a hear also about the bright waters which come at the end after these
2 black ones. This is the word. •After the signs have come of which I have spoken to you before, when the nations are moved and the time of my Anointed One comes, he will call all nations, and some of them he will spare, and others he will
3.4 kill.^b •These things will befall the nations which will be spared by him. •Every nation which has not known Israel and which has not trodden down the seed of 5 Jacob will live. •And this is because some from all the nations have been subjected 6 to your people. •All those,^c now, who have ruled over you or have known you, will be delivered up to the sword.

1 73 And it will happen that after he has brought down everything which is in the world, and has sat down in eternal peace on the throne of the kingdom,^a then joy 2 will be revealed and rest will appear.^b •And then health will descend in dew, and illness will vanish, and fear and tribulation and lamentation will pass away from
3 among men, and joy will encompass the earth. •And nobody will again die
4 untimely, nor will any adversity take place suddenly. •Judgment, condemnations, contentions, revenges, blood, passions, zeal, hate, and all such things will go into 5 condemnation since they will be uprooted.^c •For these are the things that have filled this earth with evils, and because of them life of men came in yet greater
6 confusion. •And the wild beasts will come from the wood and serve men, and the asps and dragons will come out of their holes to subject themselves to a child.^d

1Cor 15:24-25

Heb 4:3

29:7

Rev 21:4

54:15

Rev 21:4

72 a. 72:1-73:2 also in BM Add. 14.687 twice and A. Konath Library MS 77; see Introduction.

b. The Messiah as warrior, see 39:7-40:2. Concerning his dominion over the nations, see Ps 72:11 and 17; Isa 14:2; 66:12; 19-21; 4Ezra 13:37-38 and 49; AsMos 10; TJud 24:6; 1En 90:30; and PssSol 17:32.

c. The second text of BM Add. 14.687 omits the words "who ruled . . . [73:1] brought down everything."

73 a. Cf. Rev 21:5; 1En 69:27 and 29; 61:8.

b. Cf. Jub 23:29; 1En 5:7-9; 25:6; 51:6; TLvii 18:4; and TJud 24:1.

c. Cf. 4Ezra 6:26-28; SibOr 3.376-80 and 751-55.

d. See also the quotation from Papias in Irenaeus, Adv Haer 5.33.3-4.

7 And women will no longer have pain when they bear, nor will they be tormented when they yield the fruits of their womb.^c Isa 11:6-9

1 74 And it will happen in those days that the reapers will not become tired, and the farmers will not wear themselves out, because the products of themselves will shoot out speedily, during the time that they work on them in full tranquillity.
 2 For that time is the end of that which is corruptible and the beginning of that which is incorruptible. •Therefore, the things which were said before will happen in it. 28:4 3 Therefore, it is far away from the evil things and near to those which do not die.
 4 Those are the last bright waters which have come after the last dark waters.

1 75 And I answered and said:

Who can equal your goodness, O Lord?
 for it is incomprehensible.

2 Or who can fathom your grace which is without end?

54:12
 14:8f.
 Isa 40:13f.

3 Or who can understand your intelligence?

4 Or who can narrate the thoughts of your spirit?
 5 Or who of those born can hope to arrive at these things, apart from those to whom you are merciful and gracious?

6 For if you were not merciful to men, those who are under your right hand,
 they were not able to come to them, apart from those who are named among the famous number.^a

4Ezra 7:132-34;
 8:31f.,36,45;
 12:48

7 But we who exist, when we know why we have come, and then subject ourselves to him who brought us out of Egypt, we shall come again^b and remember those things which have passed away, and rejoice with regard to the things which have been.

8 But if we do not know now why we have come, and do not recognize the sovereignty of him who brought us up from Egypt, we will come again and ask for that which has now occurred, and shall be severely grieved because of that which has happened.

1 76 And he answered and said to me:

Since the revelation of this vision has been explained to you as you prayed for, hear the word of the Most High that you know that which will happen to you after 2 these things. •For you will surely depart from this world, nevertheless not to death

3 but to be kept unto (the end) of times. •Therefore, go up to the top of this mountain, and all countries of this earth will pass before you, as well as the likeness of the inhabited world, and the top of the mountains, and the depths of the valleys, and 13:3

 Deut 34:1-3
 Mt 4:8
 3:3

4.5 you leave and whither you go. •This will happen after forty days. •Go, therefore, now during these days and instruct the people as much as you can so that they may learn lest they die in the last times, but may learn so that they live in the last times.

Ex 24:18; 34:28
 Deut 9:9,18
 4Ezra 14:23,
 43,45

Baruch speaks to the people

1 77 And I, Baruch, went away from there and came to the people, and assembled them from the greatest to the smallest and said to them:

2 Hear, O children of Israel, behold how many are left from the twelve tribes of 3.4 Israel. •To you and to your fathers the Lord gave the Law above all nations. •And

Jer 6:13; 8:10;
 31:34

because your brothers have transgressed the commandments of the Most High, he brought vengeance upon you and upon them and did not spare the ancestors, but 48:22

 1Bar 3:37; 4:4
 4Ezra 5:27

e. Cf. LevR 14:9.

75 a. The elect ones, cf. 1Clem 2:4.

b. At the resurrection of the dead.

he also gave the descendants into captivity and did not leave a remnant of them.
 5,6 And, behold, you are here, with me. •If, therefore, you will make straight your ways, you will not go away as your brothers went away, but they will come to 7 you. •For he is merciful whom you honor, and gracious in whom you hope, and 8 true so that he will do good to you and not evil. •Have you not seen what has 9 befallen Zion? •Or do you think that the place has sinned and that it has been destroyed for this reason, or that the country has done some crime and that it is 10 delivered up for that reason? •And do you not know that because of you who sinned the one who did not sin was destroyed, and that because of those who acted unrighteously, the one who has not gone astray has been delivered up to the enemies?

Bar 2:26

The people invite Baruch to write a letter

11 And the whole people answered and they said to me:
 Everything which we can remember of the good things which the Mighty One has done to us we shall remember, and that which we do not remember he knows 12 in his grace. •But do this for us, your people: Write also to our brothers in Babylon a letter of doctrine and a roll of hope so that you might strengthen them also before 13 you go away from us.^a •For the shepherds of Israel have perished, and the lamps which gave light are extinguished, and the fountains from which we used to drink 14 have withheld their streams. •Now we have been left in the darkness and in the thick forest and in the aridness of the desert.
 15 And I answered and said to them:
 Shepherds and lamps and fountains came from the Law and when we go away, 16 the Law will abide. •If you, therefore, look upon the Law and are intent upon wisdom, then the lamp will not be wanting and the shepherd will not give way and 17 the fountain will not dry up. •Nevertheless, I shall also write to your brothers in Babylon, as you have said to me, and I shall send it by means of men. Also I shall write to the nine and a half tribes, and send it by means of a bird.
 18 And it happened on the twenty-first day of the ninth month that I, Baruch, came and sat down under the oak in the shadow of the branches, and nobody was with 19 me; I was alone. •And I wrote two letters. One I sent by means of an eagle^b to the nine and a half tribes, and the other I sent by means of three men to those who 20 were in Babylon. •And I called an eagle and said to him these words:
 21 You have been created by the Most High that you should be higher than any 22 other bird. •But now go and do not stay in any place, do not go into a nest, do not sit on any tree until you have flown over the breadth of the many waters of the river Euphrates and have come to the people that live there and cast down to 23 them this letter. •Remember that Noah at the time of the flood received the fruit 24 of the olive tree from a dove when he sent it away from the ark. •And also the ravens served Elijah when they brought food to him as they were commanded.
 25 Also Solomon, in the time of his kingship, commanded a bird whither he wanted to send a letter and in whatever he was in need of and it obeyed him as he 26 commanded it.^c •And do not be reluctant and do not deviate to the right nor to the left, but fly and go straight away^d that you may preserve the command of the Mighty One as I said to you.

Gen 8:11

1Kgs 17:6

The letter to the nine and a half tribes

1 78 The letter of Baruch, the son of Neriah which he wrote to the nine and a half tribes.^a

77 a. This letter is unknown.
 b. Cf. 4Bar 7:3.
 c. Cf. EcclR 2.25.
 d. Cf. 4Bar 7:12.

78 a. This is the heading of the text as it is found attached to the apocalypse. This text is generally followed in the translation; see Introduction. In other texts of this letter different headings are avail-
 -11-

These are^b the words of the letter^c which Baruch, the son of Neriah, sent to the nine and a half tribes which were across the river^d in which were written the following things:

- 2 Thus speaks Baruch, the son of Neriah, to the brothers who were carried away
 3 in captivity: •Grace and peace be with you.^e I remember, my brothers, the love of him who created me,^f who loved us from the beginning and who never hated
 4 us but, on the contrary,^g chastised us. •And truly I know: Are we not all,^h the twelve tribes, bound by one captivity as we also descend from one father?
 5 Therefore, I have been the more diligent to leave you the words of this letter before I die so that you may be comforted regarding the evilsⁱ which have befallen you, and you may also be grieved with regard to the evils which have befallen your brothers, and then further, so that you may consider the judgment of him who decreed it against you to be righteous,^j namely, that you should be carried away into captivity, for what you have suffered is smaller than what you have done, in 6 order that you may be found worthy of your fathers in the last times. •Therefore, if you think about the things you have suffered now for your good so that you may not be condemned at the end and be tormented, you shall receive hope which lasts forever and ever, particularly if you remove from your hearts the idle error for 7 which you went away from here. •For if you do these things in this way, he shall continually remember you. He is the one who always promised on our behalf to those who are more excellent than we^k that he will not forever forget or forsake^l our offspring, but with much mercy assemble all those^m again who were dispersed.ⁿ

Rom 1:7
 1Cor 1:3
 2Cor 1:2
 1:5; 4:1; 13:10
 48:24
 13:3 83:8
 77:6
 Deut 30:3
 Jer 23:3
 Bar 4:36-37; 5,6 2Mac 2:18
 Tob 13:13
 4Ezra 13:12f.

- 1 79 Therefore, my brothers, learn first what befell Zion, namely, that Nebucad-
 2 nezzar, the king of Babylon, came up against us. •For we had sinned against him who created us, and had not observed the commandments^a which he ordered us.
 3,4 And yet he has not chastised us as we deserved. •For what befell you, we suffered even more,^b for it befell us also.

- 1 80 And now, my brothers,^a when the enemies had surrounded the city, angels were sent from the Most High. And they demolished the fortification^b of the strong wall, and he destroyed^c their solid iron corners which could not be loosened.
 2 Nevertheless, they hid the holy vessels^d lest they be polluted^e by the enemies.
 3 And when they had done these things,^f they left the demolished wall, the looted house, the burned temple, and the people who were overcome to the enemies, for
 4 they were delivered up lest the enemies should boast and say, "We have overcome^g to such an extent that we have even destroyed the house of the Most High." •They have also bound your brothers and carried them away to Babylon and have caused
 5,6 them to live there. •And we have been left here with very few. •That is the affliction about which I write to you. •For truly I know that the inhabitants^h of

- b. "These are," l; "and these are," c solus.
 c. "Of the letter," l; om., c solus.
 d. "The river," l; "the river Euphrates," c solus.
 e. "Be with you," l; om., c solus.
 f. "Me," l; "us," c solus.
 g. MSS 17a1/2/3/4 p w 16g6 12a1 17/15a1 omit "on the contrary."
 h. "Are we not all," l; "that, behold . . .," c solus.
 i. "The evils," l; "the evil," c solus.
 j. Cf. 4Ezra 10:16 and PssSol 3:3; 4:9; 8:7.
 k. The Patriarchs.
 l. "That he will . . . forsake," l; "that he will never forget or forsake us," c solus.
 m. "All those," l; "those," c solus.
 n. Cf. 1En 90:33 and PssSol 17:50.

- ment," c solus.
 b. "For what . . . us also": The various readings in the MSS are all corrupt, but the meaning of the text is clear.
 80 a. "I make known to you that" post "brothers," c solus omits.
 b. "Fortification," l; "fortifications," c solus.
 c. "He destroyed," l; "they destroyed," c solus.
 d. "The holy vessels," l; "the vessels of the holy vessels," c solus.
 e. "Destroyed," l; "polluted," 17a2; "taken," l; "polluted," 17a3 p w 16g6 17/15a1.
 f. "And when these things had gone by," l; "And when they had done these things," c solus (wrong reading).
 g. "Overcome," l; "overcome with power," c solus.
 h. "Inhabitants," l; "habitation," 7a1 and c.

- 79 a. "The commandments," l; "the command-

Zion were a comfort to you. As long^d as you knew that they were happy, this was more important than the affliction you endured being separated from them.

1.2 81 But also hear the word of consolation. •For I mourned with regard to Zion Heb 13:22
 3 and asked grace from the Most High and said, •“Will these things exist for us 4 until the end?^a •And will these evils befall us always?” And the Mighty One did according to the multitude of his grace,^b and the Most High according to the magnitude of his mercy, and he revealed to me a word that I might be comforted, and showed me visions that I might not be again sorrowful, and made known to me the mysteries^c of the times, and showed me the coming of the periods.

1 82 My brothers, therefore I have written to you that you may find consolation
 2 with regard to the multitude of tribulations.^a •But you ought to know that our Creator will surely^b avenge us on all our brothers according to everything which 13:10-12 they have done against us and among us; in particular that the end which the Most Bar 4:30-35 High prepared is near, and that his grace is coming,^c and that the fulfillment of 3 his judgment is not far. •For now we see^d the multitude of the happiness of the 4 nations although they have acted wickedly; but they are like a vapor.^e •And we behold the multitude of their power while they act impiously; but they will be 4Ezra 7:6-1 5 made like a drop.^f •And we see the strength of their power^g while they resist the Isa 40:15
 6 Mighty One every hour;^h but they will be reckoned like spittle.ⁱ •And we will 4Ezra 6:56 ponder about the glory of their majesty while they do not keep the statutes^j of the 7 Most High; but as smoke they will pass away. •And we think about the beauty of their gracefulness^k while they go down in impurities;^l but like grass which is Isa 40:6-7 8 withering, they will fade away. •And we ponder about the strength of their cruelty while they themselves do not think about the end; but they will be broken like a 9 passing wave. •And we notice the pride^m of their power while they deny the goodness of Godⁿ by whom it was given to them; but as a passing cloud^o they will vanish.

1 83 For the Most High will surely hasten his times, and he will certainly cause 20:1
 2 his periods to arrive. •And he will surely judge^a those who are in his world, and 20:2 will truly inquire into everything with regard to all their works which were sins.^b 3 He will certainly investigate the secret thoughts and everything which is lying in the inner chambers of all their members^c which are in sin.^d And he will make them Jer 17:9 4 manifest in the presence of everyone with blame. •Therefore,^e nothing of the 1Cor 4:5; 14:25 present things should come into your heart, but they should, on the contrary, be Heb 4:12 5 expected, since that which was promised^f will come. •And we should^g not look 21:25

i. “So far,” l; “As long,” f w p.

81 a. “Will these . . . the end,” l; “How long will these things exist for us,” c solus.

b. “His grace,” l; “grace,” 7a1 c 6h14 10g1 12d2 17/15a1.

c. “Mysteries,” l; “mystery,” c 12d2 17/15a1.

82 a. “Tribulations,” l; “your tribulations” (or: “your tribulation,” 17a1/2/3/4 16g6 12a1 17/15a1 w p), c solus.

b. “Surely,” l; “surely . . . us,” c solus.

c. Cf. Did 10:6.

d. “For now we see,” l; “For, see, we see,” c solus.

e. “Like impure,” l; “like a vapor,” c solus (wrong reading).

f. “Impurity,” l; “drop,” c solus (wrong reading).

g. “Truth,” l; “power,” c solus (wrong reading).

h. “Every year,” l; “every hour,” c solus

(wrong reading).

i. Cf. Isa 40:15 (LXX); 4Ezra 6:56; and Ps-Philo 7:3.

j. “Statutes,” l; “commandments,” c solus.

k. “Their gracefulness,” l; “their life,” c solus.

l. “Impurities,” l; “impurity,” c solus.

m. “Pride,” l; “beauty,” c solus.

n. “Of God,” l; om., c solus.

o. Cf. Ps-Philo 19:13.

83 a. “And our God will judge,” l; “And he . . . judge,” 6h14 10g1.

b. “Which were sins,” l; “which were hidden,” c solus.

c. “In the inner chambers of all their members,” l; “which is in the inner chamber [“chambers,” 17a2/3/4 16g6 w p] which is in all their members,” c solus.

d. “Which are in sin,” l; “of man,” c solus.

e. “Therefore,” l; “For therefore,” 7a1 c.

f. “Promised,” l; “promised us,” c solus.

g. “We should,” l; “we should now,” c solus.

upon the delights of the present^h nations, but let us think about that which has been 6 promised to us regarding the end. •For the ends of the times and the periods will 7 surely pass away and all which is in them together. •The endⁱ of the world will then show the great power of our Ruler since everything will come to judgment.
 8 You should, therefore, prepare your hearts for that which you have believed before, lest you should be excluded from both worlds, namely, that you were 9 carried away into captivity here and tormented there.^j •For that which exists now or that which has passed away or that which will come, in all of that, neither the 10 evil in it is fully evil, nor the good is even fully good. •For all sorts of health 11 which exist now changes into illnesses.^k •And every might which exists now changes into weakness, and every power that exists now changes into miseries,^l 12 and every youthful energy changes into old age and consummation. And every beauty of gracefulness which exists now changes into withering and ugliness.
 13 And every infantile pride^m which exists now changes into lowliness and shame.
 And every glory of haughtiness which exists now changes into the shame of 14 silence. •And every delight and all splendor which exists now changes into ruin
 15 of silence. •And every joy and every delightⁿ which exist now change into rejection 16.17 and ruin.^o •And every clamor of pride^p changes into silent dust.^q •And every possession of richness^r which exists now changes into the realm of death alone.
 18 And every seizing^s desire which exists now changes into involuntary death, and 19 every desire of lust^t changes into the judgment of punishment. •And every 20 capability of deceit^u which exists now changes into refutation by truth. •And every sweetness of ointments which exists now changes into judgment and condemnation.
 21.22 And every friendship^v changes into silent^w defamations.^x •Since all these things 23 happened now, do you think^y that they will not be avenged? •But the end of everything will come to light.^z

1 84 Now, I gave you knowledge,^a while I still live. For I have said that you should particularly learn my mighty commandments^b which he has instructed you. And I shall set before you some of the commandments of his judgment before I die. 13:3
 2 Remember that once Moses called heaven and earth to witness against you and 19:1-3 said, "If you trespass the law, you shall be dispersed. And if you shall keep it, Deut 33:19-20 3 you shall be planted."^c •And also^d other things he said to you when you were in Isa 60:21
 4 the desert as twelve tribes together. •And after his death you cast it away from 5 you and, therefore,^e that which has been said before has come upon you.^f •And Bar 2:14-20 now, Moses spoke to you before it befell you and, behold, it has befallen you for 6 you have forsaken the Law. •Also I, behold, I say to you after you suffered that if you obey the things which I have said to you, you shall receive from the Mighty 7 One everything which has been prepared and has been preserved for you. •Therefore,

h. "The present," l; "the," c solus.

i. "The end," l; "And the end" (17a3), or: "In the end," c solus.

j. "That you were . . . tormented there," l; "that will be carried away in captivity now and be tormented thereupon," c solus.

k. "Illness," l; "illnesses," 17a1/2/4 15/17a1 w p.

l. "Miseries," l; "misery," c solus.

m. "Infantile pride," l; "dominion and vanity," c solus.

n. "Every joy and every delight," l; singular, c solus.

o. "Ruin," l; "worms," c solus.

p. "Pride," l; "pride which is now," c solus.

q. "Silent dust," l; "dust and silence," c solus.

r. "Of richness," l; "and richness," c 7a1/2/3/

4 16g6 w p.

s. "Seizing," l; plural, 17a1/3 6h14 w p.

t. Lit., "lusts," l; singular, c 17a1/3 6h14 10g1

12d2; "which now (are)" post "lusts," c solus omits.

u. "Deceit," l; plural, c solus.

v. "Of treachery" post "friendship," c solus omits (wrong reading).

w. "Silent," l; "true," c solus.

x. "Defamations," l; singular, c solus.

y. "Do you think," l; "does anyone think," c solus.

z. Lit. "truth."

84 a. "I gave you," l; "behold, I gave you," c solus.

b. "My mighty commandments," l; "the commandments of the Mighty One," c solus.

c. "Be planted," l; "be preserved," c solus.

d. "And also," l; "But also," c solus.

e. "And therefore," l; "therefore," c 12d2.

f. See for 2-4: 19:1-3; Deut 30:19-20; Isa 60:21; IQS 8.5 and 11.8; Jub 7:34; 1En 84:6; and PssSol 14:3.

let this letter be a witness between me and you that you may remember the commandments of the Mighty One, and that it also may serve as my defense in 8 the presence of him who has sent me. • And remember Zion and the Law^g and the holy land and your brothers and the covenant and your fathers,^h and do not forget
 9 the festivals and the sabbaths. • And give this letter and the traditionsⁱ of the Law
 10 to your children after you as also your fathers handed down to you. • And ask always^j and pray seriously with your whole soul that the Mighty One may accept you in mercy and that he may not reckon the multitude of your sinners,^k but 4Ezra 10:24 11 remember the integrity of your fathers. • For if he judges us not according to the 14:7 multitude of his grace, woe to all us who are born.^l 75:6

1 85 Further, know that our fathers in former times and former generations had 2 helpers, righteous prophets and holy men.^a • But we were also in our country, and Mt 13:17 they helped us when we sinned, and they intervened for us with him who has created us since they trusted in their works. And the Mighty One heard them^b and 3 purged us from our sins. • But now, the righteous have been assembled, and the prophets are sleeping.^c Also we^d have left our land, and Zion has been taken away 1Mac 9:27 from us, and we have nothing now apart from the Mighty One and his Law.^e 4 Therefore, if we direct and dispose our hearts, we shall receive everything which 5 we lost again by many times.^f • For that which we lost was subjected to corruption, 44:7
 6 and that which we receive will not be corruptible. • We also have written to our 28:4 7 brothers in Babylon so that I may^g attest to them these things also. • And these things which I have said earlier should be before your eyes always, since we are 8 still in the spirit of the power^h of our liberty. • And further, the Most High is alsoⁱ 4Ezra 8:56; 9:11 long-suffering to us here and has shown to us that which comes and has not 9 concealed from us what will happen at the end. • Therefore, before his judgment^j exacts his own and truth of that^k which is its due, let us prepare ourselves that we 5:2 may possess and not be possessed, and that we may hope and not be put to shame, and that we may rest with our fathers and not be punished with those who hate us.

10 For the youth of this world has passed away, and the power of creation is 4Ezra 5:50-56; already exhausted, and the coming of the times is very near and has passed by. 14:10-16
 And the pitcher is near the well, and the ship to the harbor, and the journey to the 11 city, and life to its end. • Further, prepare yourselves so that, when you sail and ascend from the ship, you may have rest and not be condemned when you have 12 gone away. • For behold, the Most High will cause all these things to come. There will^l not be an opportunity to repent^m anymore, nor a limit to the times, nor a duration of the periods, nor a change to rest,ⁿ nor an opportunity to prayer, nor sending up petition, nor giving knowledge,^o nor giving love, nor opportunity of repentance, nor supplicating^p for offenses, nor prayers^q of the fathers, nor in-

g. "Zion and the Law," l; "the Law and Zion," c solus.

h. "And your fathers," l; "of your fathers," c
solus.

i. "Traditions," l; "tradition," c solus.

j. "Always," l; "always continuously," c solus.

k. "Sinners," l; "sins," c solus.

l. Cf. Ps-Philo 19:9 and 28:5.

85 a. "Prophets and holy men," l; "holy prophets," c solus.

b. "Them," l; "their prayer," c solus.

c. Cf. b.Sanh 11a.

d. "Also we," l; "And also we," c solus.

e. Cf. b.Sot 49ab.

f. "We shall receive . . . by many times," l;
 "shall we receive again everything which we lost, and much more than we lost, by many times," c

solus.

g. "That I may . . .," l; "And I may," c solus.

h. "Of the power," l; "and in the power," c
solus.

i. "Also," l; om., c solus.

j. "His judgment," l; "the judgment," 7a1, or
 "the Judge," c solus.

k. "Of that," l; "that," 7a1 c.

l. ". . . the Most High . . . There will . . .," l; "when the Most High . . . there will . . .," c solus.

m. 4Ezra 7:82 and 9:12 and 2En 62:2.

n. "To rest," l; "for the ways," 6h14 10g1 w p; "for the way," 17a2/3/4 15/17a1 16g6; "for the souls," 12d2, 7a1 c 17a1 10ml.

o. "Nor giving of knowledge," l; "nor a giver," 17a2 c.

p. "Supplicating," l; "supplication," c solus.

q. "Prayers," l; "prayer," c solus.

13 tercessions of the prophets, nor help of the righteous.^r •There is the proclamation of judgment to corruption,^s regarding the way^t to the fire and the path that leads Mt 7:13
14 to the glowing coals.^u •Therefore, there is one Law by One, one world and an end 48:24
15 for all those who exist. •Then^v he will make alive those whom he has found, and^w he will purge them from sins, and at the same time he will destroy those who are polluted with sins.

1 86 When you, therefore, receive the letter,^a read it carefully in your assemblies.
And think about it, in particular, however,^b on the days of your fasts. And Bar 1:14 remember me by means of this letter in the same way as I remember you by means Col 4:16 of this, and always.^c 1Mac 12:11
Rom 1:9

1 87 And^a it happened when I had finished all the words of this letter and had written it carefully until the end, I folded it, sealed it cautiously, and bound it to the neck of the eagle. And I let it go and sent it away.

The end of the letter of Baruch, the son of Neriah.

r. Cf. Ps-Philo 33:5.

s. "To corruption," l; "of corruption," c solus.

t. "Regarding the way," l; "and the way," c solus.

u. "To the glowing coals," l; "to the realm of death," c solus.

v. "Then," l; "And then," 6h14 10g1 12d2 c.

w. "Has found and . . .," l; "has found that . . .," c solus.

86 a. "The letter," l; "this my letter," c solus.

b. "However," l; om., c solus.

c. "And always," l; "and it may fare you well always," c solus.

87 a. This ch. is available in c only.

3 (Greek Apocalypse of) BARUCH

(First to Third Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY H. E. GAYLORD, JR.

In this pseudepigraphon, Baruch, the scribe of Jeremiah, weeps over the destruction of Jerusalem and its Temple and the mockery of its heathen destroyers. The Lord sends an angel to comfort him and to guide him through the heavens and show him their mysteries. This angel then leads Baruch through five heavens:

1. The first contains a plain where those being punished for waging war against God are found (ch. 2).

2. The second contains a plain where those who forced others to build a tower to heaven in order to discover its contents are found (ch. 3).

3. The third contains a plain in which are a snake, a sea, and primal rivers, as well as the garden of Eden (perhaps Hades), the sun with the Phoenix, and the moon (chs. 4–9).

4. The fourth contains a plain on which are a pool and exotic birds, and the gathering place of the souls of the righteous (ch. 10).

5. The fifth is where the angels responsible for men on earth bring the gifts of men to Michael, who presents them to God. Baruch does not pass inside the gates of this heaven; they remain closed. In these chapters, three classes of mankind are mentioned: the righteous, the insufficiently righteous, and the sinners. In the Slavonic version, Baruch is granted permission to intercede for the suffering sinners (chs. 11–16).

After his heavenly journey, Baruch is returned to earth to relate what he has seen to his fellow men (ch. 17).

Texts

3 Baruch is found in both Greek and Slavonic. The Slavonic is a translation from a lost Greek original.

GREEK MANUSCRIPTS

1. BM MS Add. 10073. This manuscript is dated from the late fifteenth to the early sixteenth century. It is described by M. R. James.¹

2. Andros, Monastery of the Hagia, MS 46; dated by J.-C. Picard to the beginning of the fifteenth century.

On the relation between these manuscripts, Picard concludes that they "were both copied from the same manuscript, today lost."²

¹ Apocrypha Anecdota II.

² J.-C. Picard, Apocalypsis Baruchi Graeci, p. 69. MS 46 is described in P. Lambros, "Katalogos ton en te kata ten Andron mone tes Hagias Kodikon," Epeteris tou Parnassou 2 (1898) pp. 180–83, and A. Ehrhard, Überlieferung und Bestand der hagiographischen und homiletischen Literatur der Griechischen Kirche (Leipzig, 1939–1952), I.3, pp. 587, 839. The first sixty-two fols. contain homilies, but it should be noted that all subsequent items of this MS are also contained in BM MS Add. 10073.

SLAVONIC MANUSCRIPTS

Family stemma:

A B¹ B²

The Slavonic manuscript tradition is preserved in at least twelve manuscripts; these can be divided into two major families, one of which is composed of two subfamilies. In most respects the more original readings have been preserved in family A. Clear revisions can be found in family B as a whole, and further redaction has led to its subfamilies. Until now, subfamily B¹ has been used for comparison with the Greek manuscript tradition, with the exception of a comment by W. Lüdtké.³ The translation below is based on family A wherever possible. Unfortunately, its best representatives, manuscripts L and T, both lack the sections 1:2–2:2 and 16:8–17:1, and these have been supplied by family B.

Family A:

L. Leningrad Greek 70 fols. 105–111v and St. Catherine's Monastery Slavonic 34 fols. 27–29v. One large manuscript, formerly in St. Catherine's Monastery, Sinai, has been split into four parts. One part (Slavonic 34) remains there, and the other three were removed to Russia and are now in the Salykov-Ščedrin State Library of Leningrad. The folios containing 3 Baruch were misbound into two of the parts of this manuscript. B. M. Zagrebin has recently discovered the relationship of these parts and described the contents of the original manuscript.⁴ The manuscript was written by several scribes; the portion containing 3 Baruch dates from the thirteenth century. This scribe copied a number of apocrypha. A tentative list includes the Abgar Legend, 3 Baruch, and 4 Baruch. The proper sequence of folios in 3 Baruch as now recovered is Greek 70 fols. 105–108; Slavonic 34 fols. 27–29; Greek 70 fols. 109–111v. Three gaps still damage the text of this manuscript. 1:2–2:2a is missing (fols. 105v and 106r [first half] are blank). The order of 2:7–4:5a and 4:5b–5:2a is reversed because of a confusion in an antecedent manuscript, and this is probably what caused the loss of text at 5:2b–12a. The third missing portion is from 16:8 to the end. Both L and T contain an addition before 5:1, and end with an expanded version of the prayer of Baruch in chapter 16. The ending (16:8 to the end) is contained only in the manuscripts of family B. For further details on this manuscript and a diplomatic edition of it, see my forthcoming edition.

T. Theological Academy of Moscow No. 363/679, reportedly now in the Historical Museum of Moscow. This manuscript from the fifteenth century was published by N. Tichonravov (see bibliography). In addition to the faults it has in common with L, this manuscript shares with manuscript B the loss of 1:1–3:1, and an addition at the end of 5:3. (This seems to be a fragment from Vita 13–17, otherwise unknown in Slavonic.) Both T and B omit 3:8b. T omits 6:6–10:5.

B. Originally in the Barsov collection, this manuscript has passed into the Theological Academy of Kiev. It was written in A.D. 1701 and was published by M. Sokolov (see bibliography). Its language is very late, and it summarizes and rephrases passages freely. Manuscript B ends with a summary conclusion after chapter 9.

Family B:

The effects of the redaction behind this group can be clearly seen at a number of points:

1. 2:6 is omitted.
2. An interpolation occurs at 3:5.

³ W. Lüdtké, "Beiträge zu slavischen Apokryphen: 2 Apokalypse des Baruch," ZAW (1911) 220: "Stimmt T [in family A] mehr fach genauer mit G [Gk.] überein als S [in family B¹]." MS N, a very inferior MS of family B¹, is the basis for the earlier translations of Bonwetsch ("Das slavisch erhaltene Baruchbuch," Nachrichten von der Königlichen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen: philologische-historische Klasse [1896] 91–101) and W. R. Morfill (in Apocrypha Anecdota II, pp. 95–102), and MS S, the best representative of family B¹, was used by W. Hage for his more recent translation in JSHRZ 5.1. For a fuller description of the MSS, see E. Turdeanu ("L'Apocalypse de Baruch en slave," Revue des études slaves 48 [1969] 23–48) and H. E. Gaylord (The Slavonic Version of 3 Baruch [forthcoming]).

⁴ This important discovery was announced in B. M. Zagrebin, "O proischozhenii i sud'be nekotorych slavjanskich palimpsestov Sinaja," in Iz istorii rukopisnyh i staropečatnyh sobranij Otdela rukopisej i redkich knig GPB (Issledovanija, obzory, publikacii; Sbornik naučnyh trudov; Leningrad, 1979) pp. 61–80.

3. 3:8 is revised and has an interpolation.
4. 4:1–2a is omitted.
5. 4:5b is revised in two respects.

This is not an exhaustive list; there are also a large number of small variants that support this grouping. The arrangement of subfamilies B¹ and B² is largely based on small variants. A full description of the manuscripts in family B can be found in Gaylord (see n. 3).

THE TEXTUAL BASIS FOR THE TRANSLATIONS

The translation below of the Greek is based on the texts of M. R. James and J.-C. Picard. The translation of the Slavonic is based on my forthcoming edition. In that edition manuscript L has been used as the base text, emended when necessary on the basis of a thorough comparison of all the known manuscripts, as described above. When manuscripts L and T are absent (1:2–2:2 and 16:8 to the end), an eclectic text has been made. T and family B are used for 5:2b–12a.

News of the discovery of the Sinai manuscript portion of L reached me only after this work was completed. I have had time only to make a preliminary examination of it and a provisional translation. My definitive analysis and translation, especially of 6:6–11:3, will be found in my critical edition.

Parallel translations of the Greek and Slavonic texts are presented rather than an eclectic one for several reasons. Firstly, the divergences between the two textual traditions are so many and so great that the apparatus would rapidly be filled with variants alone. Secondly, the systematic variations and tendencies of each tradition should be examined not only on individual readings, but as a whole. Furthermore, the divergence of the textual tradition of present Greek manuscripts and the Greek basis of the present Slavonic tradition occurred not later than the tenth century, approximately five hundred years before the earliest extant Greek manuscript. In several important differences, which separate the Greek from the Slavonic traditions, a strong argument for the priority of the Slavonic exists:

1. The possible dependencies of the Greek on 4 Baruch in the introduction and chapter 1 are omitted in the Slavonic.
2. Explicit New Testament citations in the Greek (4:15; 5:3(?); 15:4; 16:2), and the phrase “through Jesus Christ Emmanuel” at 4:15 are all lacking in the Slavonic.
3. The story of the planting of the garden by angels in the Slavonic, lacking in the Greek, is worthy of consideration as original.
4. The structure and content of chapter 4.

These matters are discussed below.

Original language

The Slavonic version is a translation from Greek. A few linguistic features of the Greek could be explained by supposing a Semitic base text but are not unknown in later Koine Greek usage. There is no convincing argument that the Greek is a translation from another language.

Date and provenance

The dating and assignment of a historical context for 3 Baruch have been the subject of considerable discussion. M. R. James⁵ was the first to suggest a reference to this work in Origen, De principiis 2.3.6: “Finally they appeal to the book of the prophet Baruch to bear witness to this assertion, because in it there are very clear indications of the seven worlds or heavens.”⁶ If this identification is correct then the latest possible date for the writing of 3 Baruch would be A.D. 231. The suggestion that the earliest possible date may be set by 4 Baruch because of allusions to it in 3 Baruch (introduction and chapter 1) has been cautioned against by James himself.⁷ James concluded that 3 Baruch is “a Christian Apocalypse of the second century."⁸ L. Ginsberg argued that it is a Jewish-gnostic work from the beginning of the second century.⁹ H. M. Hughes maintained that the original version is a second-century Jewish work that has been modified by Christian redactors.¹⁰ J.-C. Picard claimed that it is a product of Jewish mysticism in the Diaspora from the first or second century with very minor Christian interpolations.¹¹ The most recent statement concerning the provenance is that it is a product of Syrian Jewry.¹²

⁵ James, Apocrypha Anecdota II, p. li.

⁶ Translation by G. W. Butterworth, Origen on First Principles (London, 1936; repr. New York, 1966) p. 91.

⁷ James, Apocrypha Anecdota II, p. lv.

Origen's statement does not help us to determine the latest possible date for our present work. Either he knew a version other than the present one (i.e. one with seven heavens), or he is speaking about another work altogether that has not survived. The only clear references to 3 Baruch are of a much later date, namely the use of 3 Baruch, chapter 2, in the History of the Rechabites¹³ and in later Slavonic literature.¹⁴ Nor is the suggested earliest possible date reliable since the possible references to 4 Baruch (absent in the Slavonic version) are probably secondary.¹⁵

Another argument for the earliest possible date is the dependency of 3 Baruch on 2 Baruch 76:3, in which Baruch is promised a vision.¹⁶ However, the interests of the author of 3 Baruch suggest that he belongs to a group completely other than that of the author of 2 Baruch. There is no apocalyptic notion of an end-time in 3 Baruch, nor would that interest him. Furthermore, his interest would seem to be focused on heavenly realities and not on those on earth. A timeless heavenly service in which the good deeds or prayers of men are offered by Michael on the altar is his chief answer to the crisis caused by the destruction of the earthly temple, and not a patient waiting for the new temple (whether in heaven or in Jerusalem) at the end of days.

Chapters 11–16 have often been singled out as having Christian characteristics, and even as being a secondary Christian conclusion replacing the earlier Jewish one. Yet many of these Christian elements are lacking in the Slavonic version, e.g. the citation of Matthew 25:23 in 15:4, Romans 10:19 or Deuteronomy 32:21 in 16:2, the monastic expression pneumatikous pateras in 13:4 (although it does contain references to the Church here and in chs. 15 and 16). The Slavonic also lacks the reference to Christian priests, Greek version 16:4. The Greek version would also appear to show a Christianizing tendency at the end of 5:3 (cf. Slavonic 5:3; the phrase as in the Slavonic also appears in 1:6 and 2:6), cf. also 4:15 in the Greek. One definitely sees Christian editing in chapters 11–16 in the Slavonic and even more in the Greek. Christian revision of the Greek manuscript tradition may also be seen in 4:3–6 and 4:15.

One cannot be certain about a time and place of composition for 3 Baruch. The alternatives are that it is a Christian composition that has made use of Jewish traditions, which may or may not have been later reworked, or that it is a basically Jewish composition that has undergone Christian reworking. The most likely dating of the initial composition in the latter case would be during the first two centuries after Christ; in the former, the dating would be very difficult. However, the scholarly dichotomy of Jewish and Christian writings in the first two centuries, like the earlier one between Diaspora and Palestinian Jewry, may be a misleading attempt to distinguish what is closely interrelated.

Historical importance

The greatest problem in establishing a historical context for this work is the evaluation

⁸ Ibid., p. lxxi.

⁹ L. Ginsberg, "Greek Apocalypse of Baruch," JE, vol. 2, p. 551.

¹⁰ H. M. Hughes, "The Greek Apocalypse of Baruch," APOT, vol. 2, pp. 529f.; accepted by W. Hage, Die griechische Baruch-Apokalyse, JSHRZ 5.1, pp. 19f.

¹¹ Picard, Apocalypsis Baruchi, pp. 75–78; and "Observations sur l'Apocalypse grecque de Baruch," Sem 20 (1970) 100–3.

¹² L. Rost, Einleitung in die alttestamentlichen Apokryphen und Pseudepigraphen einschliesslich der grossen Qumran-Handschriften (Heidelberg, 1971) p. 88.

¹³ Formerly called the Apocalypse of Zosimus. Cf. especially chs. 2f.; see James, Apocrypha Anecdota II, pp. lvf. [Also see HistRech discussed and translated in the present collection. —J.H.C.]

¹⁴ See Turdeanu, Revue des études slaves 48 (1969) 36–38, 44–48.

¹⁵ The points in common with the 4th cent. ApPaul chs. 7–11 do not necessarily reflect a literary relationship, but see Introduction, "Historical importance."

¹⁶ James, Apocrypha Anecdota II, p. liv.; P. Bogaert, Apocalypse de Baruch (SC: Paris, 1969) vol. 1, p. 455.

of the two versions. Previously it has been argued that the Slavonic is a rewritten version of the Greek. With the new manuscript evidence it can be seen that the Slavonic represents in the main the same text as the Greek. At some points it is shorter and at others it is longer.

Three sections (chs. 4f., 10, and 11–16) are most important in judging the two versions. The Slavonic places the resting place of the righteous and hell apparently elsewhere than in the first four heavens. The Greek version places hell in the third heaven (cf. chs. 4f.), and the resting place of the righteous in the fourth (ch. 10). In chapters 4 and 5 the Slavonic concentrates upon the incidents associated with the Fall: the garden of Eden and the serpent being punished for his role in the Fall. Further, in chapter 10 the inhabitants of the fourth heaven are not the righteous but probably angels singing the praises of God. Yet in both places it can be argued that those passages occurring only in the Greek are a reworking of the original construction, which is better represented by the Slavonic version.

In his introduction to the Greek text, M. R. James raised the issue of the relation between 3 Baruch and the fourth-century Apocalypse of Paul and suggested the possibility that the Apocalypse of Paul in chapters 9–18 was dependent on a version of 3 Baruch, chapters 11–16, closer to the original than the present Greek version.¹⁷ The Slavonic version of these chapters would reflect such a text, which includes the same sequence at that point as the Apocalypse of Paul. Another possibility would be the dependence of both 3 Baruch and the Apocalypse of Paul on a common original.

If the contents of the concluding chapters of the Slavonic version are more original than the Greek, then the earlier chapters 4 and 5 and chapter 10 also must be considered more original. Furthermore it is precisely in chapters 4f. and 11–16 that the Greek has suffered the most at the hands of Christian scribes. Wine is identified as the "blood of God" (4:15); "spiritual fathers" (mentioned in 13:4) is a Christian term especially used for monastics and bishops, and the function of the priests in 16:4 would also suggest a Christian context. Moreover, the New Testament is explicitly cited in the Greek at 15:4 and perhaps at 16:2. Yet the Slavonic itself is not free from Christian elements (cf. 13:4 and 16:2).

While there is evidence of Christian reworking of this apocalypse, there is also strong evidence of its original writing being Jewish or early Christian. The many parallels with Jewish traditions are not likely to have been known after the clear separation between Jewish and Christian communities. Therefore the original work should probably be dated in the first two centuries A.D.

Theological importance

The visions found in 3 Baruch share elements with many Jewish and Graeco-Roman traditions, yet differ from their parallels at crucial points.

The supreme episode in most heavenly visits in the apocryphal and mystical (Merkabah) literature is the appearance before the throne of God. Although the throne is mentioned twice in 3 Baruch (6:8[S]; 9:4[S]), this element is missing in the journey. The gates of the fifth heaven remain closed to Baruch, and he does not see the throne. It is possible, however, that the original text contained descriptions of further heavens, but the original form cannot be reconstructed from the extant versions.

There seem to be two differing views concerning God in this work. He acts directly against the two sets of tower builders (2:7; 3:6, 8), but in the later chapters he intervenes only through intermediaries, meting out rewards and punishments (chs. 11–16). Angels implement the will of God in the creation of the garden of Eden and in the daily care of the sun and moon. Moreover, another group of angels render daily (?) account of the activities of men to their commander-in-chief Michael. He receives from them the good works of men, which he as high priest then takes to the temple in an upper heaven to offer upon the altar. The same angels then give rewards and punishments to the men in their charge.

This work has a wealth of angels. Two angelic messengers are mentioned: Phanael is described as an archangel (10:1[G]), an angel of hosts (2:6[G]; 10:1[S]), and an interpreter of revelations (11:7[G]). An otherwise unknown angel, Sarasael, delivers a revelation to Noah (4:15). The central angelic figure in 3 Baruch is Michael, who is addressed as the commander-in-chief of all the angels (see n. to 11:4). Yet his activities are even broader: He holds the keys to the gates of the upper heavens, the kingdom of God or heaven (11:2), and functions as priest in the heavenly temple. In chapters 11–16 he is also the single intermediary between God and the angels overseeing men.

¹⁷ A close relation between ApPaul and 3Bar was first suggested by N. Bonwetsch, Nachrichten, pp. 92f. Cf. also James, Apocrypha Anecdota II, pp. 70f.; Turdeanu, Revue des études slaves 48 (1969) 42. 3Bar has many other parallels with ApPaul. An edition of the Slavonic version of ApPaul would aid in sorting out this problem.

Five angels are mentioned by name in the Slavonic version of 3 Baruch: Michael, Gabriel, Uriel, Raphael, and Satanael (the MSS of family A), and Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, Phanuel, and Satanael (the MSS of family B). The name Satanael, modeled upon the -EL element in other angels' names, is changed to Satan when he loses his favored status. Satanael is mentioned in several other works as well. The earliest is 2 Enoch 18, 31, where he is the chief of the fallen Watchers. Moreover, he is probably identified with the figure in Isaiah 14:13f. who falls from heaven. A parallel account is also found in the Gospel of Bartholomew 3:25–29 and in the Book of the Cave of Treasures.¹⁸ Yet the name Satanael in the Slavonic is probably secondary to the name Samael in the Greek version. Samael became a centralizing figure in the later rabbinic literature, incorporating the functions of several angels. Yet Diabolos, or Satan, functioned in the same manner among Christians, and we find little record of Samael in Christian literature. The first four archangels in the two lists are each paralleled in early Jewish and Christian sources (see n. to 4:7[S]). The name Samael is very common as the chief of evil angels in rabbinic literature and some apocryphal works. Possible etymologies are the poison of God (cf. the poison administered by the Angel of Death, b. AZ 20b), or the blind one.

Both versions of 3 Baruch are confused in their treatment of Samael and the vine. In the Greek they are both cursed before the fall of Adam and Eve, but the vine is to be transformed for the good (4:15). In the Slavonic version the vine is first identified with "sinful desire which Satanael spread over Eve and Adam," and then Noah is told to "alter its name and change it for the better." Implied in both versions is disobedience among the angels before that of Adam and Eve. At least three different backgrounds are possible for the account of Samael here, and it is impossible to make a definitive judgment. Though the vine was planted by Samael and cursed by God, in the new creation after the Flood the vine and its fruit remain useful, within reason.

By his disobedience Adam lost "the glory of God" (4:16[G]), which may have been comparable to that of angels (cf. 13:4[S]). The reward of the righteous is oil, possibly the sign of the glory of God, which the angel-guide promises to show Baruch several times in this text (6:12; 7:2; 11:2; 16:3[S]). It is hardly accidental that there are traditions that Adam sought to receive the "oil of mercy" at the point of death, and that Enoch was transformed by the "oil of his glory" (see n. to 15:1). The angel describes the resting place of the righteous as one of glory (16:4[S]), but Baruch does not visit it.

The story about the phoenix bird, known in classical, Jewish, and Christian antiquity, also appears here.¹⁹ Many of the details correspond to the classical tradition. Early Christianity used this story as a symbolic representation of the resurrection of Jesus: the new phoenix rising out of the ashes of its predecessor. Yet here, without parallel, the phoenix is the protector of the world, shielding its inhabitants from the fierce pure rays of the sun, which would destroy them and their impure deeds were it not for this mediator.

Two central themes run through the entirety of 3 Baruch. At the opening, Baruch is crying over the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple. The angel tells him not to be concerned for the salvation of Jerusalem (1:3), and he promises to show Baruch the mysteries of God. These mysteries concern obedience and disobedience to God's commands and their results. Another aspect of the mysteries that Baruch encounters at many points is the wonders of the natural, albeit heavenly world. He observes the workings of the sun and moon and, most clearly in the Slavonic, observes other wonders too: the snake that keeps the great sea in balance and the origin of fruitful rains. Baruch sees the punishment of those who waged war with God (ch. 2), of those who forced others to build a tower to the heavens (ch. 3), of the serpent who participated in the temptation of Adam and Eve (ch. 4), of the moon that helped Samael in the temptation (ch. 9), and the punishment of men who disobey God's commands

¹⁸ See E. A. W. Budge, The Book of the Cave of the Treasures (London, 1927) pp. 56f.

¹⁹ [See the recent and very important work on the phoenix—and the discussion of the phoenix in 3Bar (especially pp. 261–304)—by R. van den Broek, The Myth of the Phoenix (Leiden, 1972); also cf. nn. d, e, h, j, and k to ch. 6 below. —J.H.C.]

(ch. 16). Moreover, Adam himself lost the "glory of God" because of his disobedience (4:13, 16). In chapters 11–16 the focus is shifted to those presently living. No final Day of Judgment is even hinted at (except in Baruch's remark in 1:7). It appears that angels take a daily account of the lives of men and receive new instructions concerning them. Those who have lived virtuously receive their reward, and those who have clearly been disobedient are punished for committing the sins listed at several points in the text (chs. 4, 8, 13). The two versions give differing accounts of those who have insufficient accomplishments.

Baruch's initial concern would seem to be about the proper functioning of the Temple in Jerusalem. How can the proper relation between God and men be maintained without the sacrifices of the Temple? The answer becomes clear: There is a heavenly temple in which the prayers, virtues, and good deeds are offered by Michael. The rewards, the oil (of mercy) and the glory of God, will not be withheld because of the absence of the Temple in Jerusalem. This answer is quite different from others given in this period. Here there is no mention of a messiah, no division between Israel and the other nations (except possibly in Baruch's opening lament), and no notion of two ages.

Relation to canonical books

The opening chapters of 3 Baruch are most closely bound to stories from the Book of Genesis, but these are expanded and reworked in a manner common to much of the literature of second Temple Judaism.

A good example of this is the treatment of the tower of Babel (Gen 11:1–9). Two different groups of men seem to be distinguished here.²⁰ The first group attempted to reach heaven in order to wage war with God and are punished in the first heaven. The second group, imprisoned in the second heaven, forced others to build a tower so as to discover the composition of heaven. Here several elements of the Egyptian enslavement of Israel are incorporated into the story. The store cities (fortified cities in LXX) of Exodus 1:11 may here have been interpreted as a tower. The story of the woman forced to work while giving birth is elsewhere told of the Egyptian period (see n. to 3:5). Bricks are also a strong element of the account in Exodus 1. The punishment with blindness is mentioned in Genesis 19:11 in relation to the citizens of Sodom and Gomorrah, but it is suggested already in the Wisdom of Solomon 19:17 that the plague of darkness (Ex 10:21–23) was also blindness.

Again, the story of the garden of Eden is expanded here. The planting of the garden was not done directly by God but by his angels, and the angel who caused Adam and Eve to sin was one of these angels. The punishment of the snake (Gen 3:14f.) takes place in the third heaven, where, according to the Slavonic version, he "eats earth like grass" (4:3). The giants who, we are told, were drowned in the Flood may be the children of the unions described in Genesis 6:1–4 (cf. e.g. 1En 6–16). A strong typological relation is set up between Adam and Noah, who discovers a piece of the vine through which Adam and Eve sinned washed out of the garden by the receding floodwaters. Afraid to provoke God's wrath, Noah hesitates to plant the vine, but the angel Sarasael is sent to instruct him to do so.²¹

Relation to apocryphal books

Baruch, a minor figure in the Book of Jeremiah, became an important pseudonym in the second Temple period of Jewish history. In the second century B.C., 1 Baruch 1:1–3:8 was written. After A.D. 70 the works 2 and 4 Baruch were written. These books attributed to Baruch are not the work of a single school, but this name brought associations of the fall of Jerusalem and the destruction of the Temple in 587 B.C. and the crisis that resulted. Furthermore, there is a Christian Apocalypse of Baruch in Ethiopic which was adapted by ²⁰ A threefold division of tower builders is mentioned in rabbinic sources: "Rabbi Jeremiah ben Eleazer said, 'They (the builders) were split into three groups.' One said, 'Let us go up and dwell there,' and one said, 'Let us go up and practise idolatry,' and one said, 'Let us go up and make war.'" The first group is dispersed, the second is stopped when God confuses their tongues, and the third group is changed into apes, evil spirits, and demons (b.Sanh 109a).

²¹ The two versions diverge greatly here (5:15). The Gk. "and its fruit . . ." is a Christian addition, but its opening and closing phrases may be original.

the Falashas.²² Justin the Gnostic in the second century also had a book of Baruch.²³ James thinks that still another book of Baruch was known to Cyprian.²⁴ One can see by the last three books the degree to which Baruch's name was used for very different purposes: He is even identified as an angel by Justin the Gnostic.

3 Baruch is one of a number of books concerning the visions of a man conducted through the various heavens. Similar visions are recorded in the Testament of Abraham, the Apocalypse of Abraham, 1 Enoch, 2 Enoch, the Testament of Levi, the Vision of Isaiah, and the Merkabah literature. Lists of seven heavens and their contents are also given in rabbinic sources. These lists are far from uniform, and different items occur in the various works.

On many specific points common traditions are shared between 3 Baruch and other apocryphal literature, and these are mentioned in the notes below. Among these is the tradition about Adam's pre-Fall glory, which he lost (4:16[G]). This important tradition is closely related to the books concerning Adam and Eve. The secondary references to Satanael in the Slavonic version have probably been influenced by Christian traditions; this may also be true of the mention of Satanael in 2 Enoch. Still, it is possible that this myth, based on Isaiah 14:12–14, and found in the Latin Vita Adae et Evae as well as in one late rabbinic source, is much older than is sometimes thought.

In what A. Vaillant considers the oldest version of 2 Enoch²⁵ seven phoenixes are located in the sixth heaven (2En 19:6). However, in the long text, phoenixes and chalkydii accompany the sun in the fourth heaven (2En 12:1–3). Moreover, they announce to the earthly birds the entrance of the sun at dawn (2En 15:1). Yet the main function of the phoenix in 3 Baruch, guardian of the world, has no parallel.

Cultural importance

This work has not made a great impact in later history. It is possible that it has influenced certain parts of the Apocalypse of Paul and the History of the Rechabites. Origen may cite it at one point.

Yet in Slavic literature it has had some importance, as witnessed by the fact that twelve known manuscripts exist today. The Slavonic version was reedited before the fourteenth century (MSS of family B). Moreover, it gave rise to a Bulgarian folktale known from the eighteenth century.²⁶ There are also Russian manuscripts (15th–17th cent.) of a moral discourse against the abuse of wine, which uses chapters 4 and 5 of 3 Baruch to confirm its point.²⁷

Thus while in Western Europe and Greece 3 Baruch has lain in libraries unread until the late nineteenth century, it has been in popular and religious use among Slavic peoples.

²² Cf. W. Leslau, Falasha Anthology (New Haven, 1951) pp. 57–76.

²³ Cf. Hippolytus, Ref 5.24.

²⁴ Cyprian Testimonia 3.29. See M. R. James, LAOT, pp. 77f. [Also see S. E. Robinson's discussion of Baruch in 4Bar in the present collection. —J.H.C.]

²⁵ See A. Vaillant, Le Livre des Secrets d'Hénoch (Paris, 1952). [But regarding Vaillant's methods and conclusions see the contribution herein on 2En by F. Andersen. —J.H.C.]

²⁶ Published by P. Lavrov, in Sbornik old. russk. jaz. i slov. 67 (1899) 149–51.

²⁷ See Turdeanu, Revue des études slaves 48 (1969) 36–38, 44–48.

ANNOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 86f.
 Delling, Bibliographie, p. 163.
 Denis, Introduction, pp. 79–84.

GREEK TEXT

- James, M. R. Apocrypha Anecdota II, ed. J. A. Robinson. T&S 5; Cambridge, 1899. (Introduction, pp. li–lxxi; Gk. text, pp. 83–94. This is the first edition of the Gk. text based on BM MS Add. 10073, and the Introduction is still an important study of 3Bar and its themes. Repr. Kraus, 1967. For a translation of Slavonic MS N see W. R. Morfill's work in the same vol., pp. 95–102.)
 Picard, J.-C. Apocalypsis Baruchi Graece, ed. A.-M. Denis and M. de Jonge. PVTG 2; Leiden, 1967. (Picard's text is based upon the two extant MSS.)

SLAVONIC TEXT

- Hercigonja, E. "'Videnje Varuhovo' u Petrisovu Zborniku iz 1468 Godine," in Zbornik za filologiju i lingvistiku N.S. 7 (1964) 63–93. (Transcription of MS Z, textual commentary including comparisons with MSS S and N, and linguistic discussion of MS Z.)
 Novaković, S. "Otkrivene Varuhovo," in Starine 18 (1886) 203–9. (Transcription of MS N.)
 Sokolov, M. I. "Apokričeskoe otkrovenie Varuka," Drevnosti, Trudi slavjanskoj kommissi imp. Moskovskago archeologičeskago obščestva 4 (1907) 201–58. (Transcriptions of MSS S, P, and B are included in this study, the only extensive comparison of Gk. and Slavonic traditions.)
 Tichonravov, N. "Otkrovenie Varuka," in Sbornik otd. russk. jas. i slov. 58 (1894) 48–54. (Transcription of MS T.)
 Turdeanu, E. "L'Apocalypse de Baruch en slave," Revue des études slaves 48 (1969) 23–48.

STUDIES

- Bonwetsch, N. "'Das slavisch erhaltene Baruchbuch,'" Nachrichten von der Königlichen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen: philologische-historische Klasse (1896) 91–101. (Translation and discussion of Slavonic MS N.)
 Ginsberg, L. "Greek Apocalypse of Baruch," JE, vol. 2, pp. 549–51. (Argues for a Jewish origin. This article is still quite valuable.)
 Hage, W. Die griechische Baruch-Apokalypse. JSHRZ 5.1; Gütersloh, 1974; pp. 15–44. (Translation of Slavonic MS S.)
 Hughes, H. M. "The Greek Apocalypse of Baruch," APOT, vol. 2, pp. 527–41.
 Picard, J.-C. "Observations sur l'Apocalypse grecque de Baruch," Sem 20 (1970) 77–103.
 Riessler, P. Altjüdisches Schrifttum ausserhalb der Bibel. Heidelberg, 1928; repr. Heidelberg, 1966; pp. 40–54, 1269f.
 Turdeanu, E. "Apocryphes bogomiles et apocryphes pseudo-bogomiles," Revue de l'histoire des religions 69 (1950) 22–52, 176–218. (For 3Bar, see especially pp. 177–81.)
 ———. "Les apocryphes slaves et roumains: Leur apport à la connaissance des apocryphes grecs," Studi bizantini e neoellenici 8 (1953) 47–52. (For 3Bar, see especially 50–52.)

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH

Slavonic

when the angel Phanuel^c was sent to him on the holy mountain Zion^d beside the river, as he cried over the captivity of Jerusalem. Lord, give thy blessing.^e

- 1 1 When King Nebuchadnezzar captured Jerusalem and enriched Babylon,^a then I Baruch cried loudly and said,
- 2 "Lord, in what way was King Nebuchadnezzar righteous?^d Why did you not spare your city Jerusalem which is your vineyard of glory?^c Why have you acted so, Lord?"
- 3 And behold, as I was crying to myself, an angel of the Lord appeared and said to me, "Be silent, O man of his pleasure!^e Jerusalem had to suffer this. But thus speaks the Lord Almighty to you,
- 4 and he sent me before your face so that I could show you all the mysteries of God.^g
- 5 For both your tears and your voice entered the ears of the Almighty God.
- 6 Only tell me that you will neither add nor omit (anything), and I will show you mysteries which no man has ever seen."
- 7 And I Baruch said to the angel, "As the Lord God lives, if you will show me, I will listen; I will not subtract nor will I add one word.^h If I do omit (anything), then Deut 4:2 may the Lord pass judgment upon me on the Day of Judgment."

a. The Gk. contains two introductions. The first has signs of being a medieval creation. On "narration" cf. e.g. ApMos, introduction; TAb (both versions), introduction.

b. This term differs from that in the body of this work, mystery, cf. 1:4(S); 1:6; 1:8(G); 2:6; 5:3(S).

c. The name of Baruch's angelic guide is mentioned also at 2:5. This is one of the four archangels in the Parables of Enoch. See Introduction, "Theological Importance."

d. This is also the place of revelation to Baruch in 2Bar 13:1f.

e. The invocation in an introduction is a common patristic device, e.g. ActsThom, introduction; ActsJn, introduction; ApZos (= HistRech), introduction; ApSed, introduction. Cf. Lampe, eulogē ad loc.

f. M. R. James emends the Gk. gel to read Kedrōn, lacking in the Slavonic. The geographical reference would be to the eastern side of the Temple mount, facing the Kidron brook. Cf. 2Bar 5:5; 21:1; 31:1.

g. The second introduction of the Gk. seems influenced by 4Bar 3:14. The background of these stories of Abimelek is in Jer 38:7–13 and 39:15–18.

h. Possibly the gates of Nicanor, cf. Josephus, War 5.201–6; m.Middot 1:4; t.Yoma 2:4; and A. Schalit, König Herodes (Berlin, 1969) p. 389, n. 834. These gates may be referred to in Acts 3:10. Baruch also laments before the Temple gates in 2Bar 10:5.

i. This is the place of revelations in 2Bar 34:1;

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH

Greek

1. Narration^a and Apocalypse of Baruch concerning the secret things^b he saw by the command of God. Lord, give thy blessing.^c
 2. Apocalypse of Baruch who is by the Kidron River^f weeping over the captivity of Jerusalem while Abimelek was safeguarded in the estate of Agrippa by the hand of God,^g and who was seated by the beautiful gates^h where the Holy of Holiesⁱ stood.

- 1 1 Woe, now I Baruch (was) weeping in my mind^b and considering the people and how King Nebuchadnezzar was permitted by God to plunder his city, saying,
 2 "Lord, why have you set fire to your vineyard and laid it waste?^c Why have you done this? And why, Lord, did you not requite us with another punishment, but rather handed us over to such heathen so that they reproach us saying, 'Where is their God?' "
 3 And behold, while I was weeping and saying such things, I saw an angel of the Lord coming and saying to me, "Know, O man, greatly beloved man,^e and do not concern yourself so much over the salvation of Jerusalem.^f For thus says the Lord God Almighty,
 4 and he sent me before you in order that I should proclaim and disclose to you all things of God.^g
 5 For your prayer has been heard before him and has entered the ears of the Lord God."
 6 And when he told me these things, I became calm, and the angel said to me, "Cease irritating God, and I will disclose to you other mysteries greater than these."ⁱ
 7 And I Baruch said, "As the Lord lives, if you disclose a word to me and I hear it from you, I shall speak no further. May God add to me punishment on the Day of Judgment if I speak in the future."
 8 ^jAnd the angel of hosts^k said to me, "Come and I shall disclose to you the mysteries of God."

Isa 5;
 Ezek 15;
 Ps 80:8-16
 Pss 42:3,10;
 79:10; 115:2;
 Joel 2:17;
 Micah 7:10

35:1. The Gk. contains three conflicting geographical references. The Holy of Holies was set apart by a curtain, not gates. Between it and the end of the Temple mount stood the gates of Nicanor. The Slavonic has a plausible geographic reference.

1 a. The opening of 4Ezra 3:2 voices the same contrast. Cf. also 2Bar 11:1f.

b. Cf. also 2Bar 6:2; 10:5; 35:1.

c. This theme is also prominent in 2Bar 3:5; 5:1; 4Ezra 3:27-36; 5:28-30.

d. Cf. 4Ezra 3:28.

e. Dan 10:11 Θ. There also an angel is sent to announce God's hearing of a prayer.

f. In the Slavonic this seems to be misplaced from here to 2:3.

g. The Slavonic may conflate Gk. vss. 4 and 8b here. The mysteries are mentioned at 1:4(S), 6, 8(G); 2:6; 5:3(S); 17:1(S).

h. The requirement of precise transmission of revelations is also mentioned in Deut 4:2; 13:1 and Rev 22:18.

i. None has been mentioned except perhaps the salvation of Jerusalem. Cf. also 4Ezra 5:13 and ApPaul (Lat.) 40 [end].

j. Lacking in S. Cf. vs. 4.

k. Cf. 2:1(S). This class of the angelic guide is also mentioned in 2:6(G); 10:1(S); elsewhere cf. 1En 20:1(G^g); 61:10; TAB (A) 9, 14; 2Thes 1:7; Josh 5:14 LXX.

1 2 And the angel of hosts took me and carried me where the firmament of heaven^a is.

2 And it was the first heaven,^d and in that heaven he showed me very large doors.^e And the angel said to me, "Let us pass through these doors." And we passed through like the passing of 30 days. He showed me salvation.^g

3 And I saw a plain,^h there were menⁱ living there whose faces were those of cattle, with the horns of deer, the feet of goats, and the loins of rams.

4 And I Baruch asked the angel, "Tell me what is the thickness of the heaven which we have crossed, and what is the plain, so that I can tell the sons of men."

5 Phanael^k said to me, "The gates which you saw are as large as (the distance) from east to west; the thickness of heaven is equal to the distance from earth to heaven, the plain where we are standing is equal to its width (i.e. heaven's)."

6 He said to me, "Go and I will show you the mysteries."

7 I said to the angel, "Lord, who are these strangely shaped creatures?" And the angel said to me, "These are those who built the tower of the war against God.^l The Lord threw them out."

1 3 And the angel took me and led me to the second heaven and showed me large open^a doors, and the angel said to me, "Let us pass through them."

2 And we passed through, flying like the passing of 7 days.^b

3 And he showed me a great prison,^c and there were strangely shaped creatures living in it, with the faces of dogs, the horns of deer, and the feet of goats.^d

4 And I asked the angel of the Lord, "Who are these?"

5 And he said to me, "These are the ones who had planned^e to build the tower, for at that time they forced men and a multitude of women to make bricks.^f Among them was one woman who was near to giving birth, and they did not release her, but, working, she gave birth, and took her cloak and wrapped the infant, and left her infant, and made bricks again.

6 And the Lord God appeared to them and confused their languages.^g And they built their tower 80 thousand cubits in height, and in width 5 hundred and twenty.

7 They took an auger so that they could proceed to bore heaven so that they could see whether heaven is (made) of stone or of glass or of copper.

8 And God saw them and did not heed them, but he chastened them invisibly."ⁱ

2 a. The heavens rest upon the firmament, cf. 1En 18:5; 33:2. This is the Rāqia' in the creation story, Gen 1:6-8, which separates the upper and lower waters.

b. Identified as the ocean in ApPaul 21 and TAb (B) 8, or possibly the Upper Waters (Gen 1:6-8), which are discussed in GenR 4:3 and b.Hag 15a and elsewhere. In the ApZos 2 the Eumeles River is mentioned at this juncture. This work is very similar to 3Bar here and possibly dependent on it. In the heavenly journey of TLevi 2:7 a "hanging sea" is mentioned under the first heaven. Further a river of fire and the ocean appear also in 1En 17:5.

c. Gk. proē can also mean "living creature" as in 8:7 and e.g. LXX Ps 40:6; 24:12. Cf. ApZos 2, where the cloud over the waters says, "Through me passes no bird, nor breath of wind . . ." [See the contribution herein on ApZos = HistRech. —J.H.C.]

d. See Introduction on the arrangement of the heavens. This formulation is repeated in 3:1f.; 4:2. The entrances to other heavens are at 10:1(G) and 11:1f.

e. Cf. Ps 78:23 and also below 3:1; 11:1.

f. Lacking in the Slavonic. "Flying" is mentioned at 3:2. The winds carry Enoch to heaven in 1En 14:8. Cf. also ApZos 2.

g. Probably a misplaced fragment in Slavonic from 1:3.

h. Plains are mentioned in chs. 2, 3 (second heaven), 4 (third heaven), and 10 (fourth heaven).

i. Cf. 3:3. Cf. the rabbinic division into three groups, mentioned in the Introduction.

- 1 2 And taking me, he led me to where the heaven was set fast^a and where there was a river^b which no one is able to cross, not even one of the foreign winds^c which God created.
- 2 And taking me, he led me up to the first heaven^d and showed me a very large door.^e And he said to me, "Let us enter through it." And we entered as on wings^f about the distance of 30 days' journey.
- 3 And he showed me a plain^h within the heaven. And there were menⁱ dwelling on it with faces of cattle and horns of deer and feet of goats and loins of sheep.
- 4 And I Baruch asked the angel, "Tell me, I pray you,^j what is the thickness of this heaven in which we have journeyed, and what is its width, and what is this plain, that I may report these to the sons of men."
- 5 And the angel, whose name was Phamael,^k said to me, "This door which you see is (the door) of heaven, and (its thickness) is as great as the distance from earth to heaven, and the width of the plain which you saw is the same (distance) again."
- 6 And again the angel of hosts said to me, "Come and I will show you greater mysteries."
- 7 And I said, "I pray you, show me what those men are." And he said to me, "These are the ones who built the tower of the war against God,^l and the Lord removed them."
- 1 3 And taking me, the angel of the Lord led me to a second heaven. And he showed me there a door similar to the first. And he said, "Let us enter through it."
- 2 And we entered, flying about the distance of 60 days' journey.
- 3 And he showed me there also a plain, and it was full of men, and their appearance was like (that) of dogs, and their feet (like those) of deer.
- 4 And I asked the angel, "I pray you, lord, tell me who these are."
- 5 And he said, "These are the ones who plotted^e to build the tower. These whom you see forced many men and women to make bricks.^f Among them one woman was making bricks in the time of her delivery; they did not permit her to be released, but while making bricks she gave birth. And she carried her child in her cloak and continued making bricks.
- 6 And appearing to them, the Lord changed their languages;^g by that time they had built the tower 463 cubits (high).
- 7 And taking an auger, they attempted to pierce the heaven, saying, 'Let us see whether the heaven is (made) of clay or copper or iron.'
- 8 Seeing these things, God did not permit them (to continue), but struck them with blindness^h and with confusion of tongues, and he made them be as you see."

j. Oft-used phrase in Gk., lacking in Slavonic. Cf. also 2:7; 3:4; 4:8; 4:14.

k. Mentioned in the Introduction (S). Phamael is probably a corruption, the Slavonic MSS vary between Phanael and Phaniel.

l. Gen 11:1-9. Cf. Introduction.

3 a. Perhaps an addition under the influence of 11:1.

b. Probably confusion of letters that were used as numbers.

c. The Slavonic reading here is based upon a Gk. uncial error, PEDION/KELLION. This would indicate that the Gk. Vorlage of the Slavonic and the present Gk. MS family diverged during the period when uncials were still being written.

d. Contamination from 2:3.

e. This second group planned the tower and forced others to build it. This also is an expansion of Gen 11. Cf. also b.Sanh 109a and parallels and Introduction above.

f. A similar story about the Egyptian enslavement is told in PRE 48 and TarJon to Ex 24:10.

g. Cf. Gen 11:7f.

h. This seems to be the ninth plague against the Egyptians (Ex 10:21-23), which is reinterpreted as blindness. The men of Sodom received this punishment (Gen 19:11), and WisSol 19:17 makes this interpretation explicit.

i. Slavonic has misunderstood the point here. The confusion of tongues is mentioned twice in the Gk. (vss. 6, 8), but only once in Slavonic.

- 1 4 And I Baruch said, "The Lord has shown me great (things)."
- 2 And the angel said, "Come and let us pass through these doors; you will see the glory of God."^b And I passed through with the angel like the passing of 187 days.
- 3 And he showed me a plain, and there was a serpent on a stone mountain.^d And it drinks one cubit of water from the sea every day, and it eats earth like grass.^e
- 4 And I Baruch said to the angel, "Lord, does he drink one cubit from the sea?"
- 5 The angel said to me, "Listen, Baruch, the Lord God made 353 rivers,ⁱ and the first river is the Alpheia, the second Aboura, the third Agirenik, the fourth Dounab, the fifth Ephrat, the sixth Zephon, the seventh Matepus, the eighth Arenous, the ninth Pelkuri. And there are 354 others flowing into the sea, and thus it is washed,^j and it does not diminish^k because his heart is enflamed."
- 6 And I Baruch said to the angel, "Show me the tree^l which deceived Adam."^m
- 7 And the angel said to me, "When God made the garden and commanded Michael to gather two hundred thousand and three angels so that they could plant the garden, Michaelⁿ planted the olive and Gabriel, the apple; Uriel, the nut; Raphael, the melon; and Satanael,^o the vine. For at first his name in former times was Satanael, and similarly all the angels planted the various trees."
- 8 And again I Baruch said to the angel, "Lord, show me the tree through which the serpent^p deceived Eve and Adam." And the angel said to me, "Listen, Baruch. In the first place, the tree was the vine,^q but secondly, the tree (is) sinful desire which Satanael spread over Eve and Adam, and because of this God has cursed the vine because Satanael had planted it, and by that he deceived the protoplast Adam and Eve."
- 9 And I Baruch said to the angel, "Lord, if God has cursed the vine and its seed, then how can it be of use now?"
- 10 And the angel said to me, "Rightly you ask me. When God made the Flood upon the earth, he drowned every firstling, and he destroyed 104 thousand giants,^u and the water rose above the highest mountains 20 cubits above the mountains, and the water entered into the garden, bringing out one shoot from the vine as God withdrew the waters.^v
- 11 And there was dry land, and Noah went out from the ark
- 12 and found the vine lying on the ground, and did not recognize it having only heard about it and its form.
- 13 He thought to himself, saying, 'This is truly the vine which Satanael planted in the middle of the garden, by which he deceived Eve and Adam; because of this God cursed it and its seed. So if I plant it, then will God not be angry with me?'

4 a. Cf. Slavonic. The Gk. may be a Christian addition reflecting Rev 15:1, 3. Cf. n. on 5:3.

b. Omission due to homoeoteleuton; text preserved in the Slavonic.

c. James has suggested that this figure as presented in the Gk. version is related to the huge dragon that is the outer darkness of Pistis Sophia ch. 126. The Slavonic presents the serpent of Gen 3 being punished for its part in the fall of Adam.

d. Text corrupt. James et al. emend the text to read "two hundred plethra in length."

e. One of the punishments of the serpent in Gen 3:14; cf. also Isa 65:25. James suggests the background of LXX Ex 15:7.

f. Vss. 3-6 in the Gk. are perhaps later additions concerning Hades and punishments, absent from the Slavonic. Here the serpent is distinct from Hades, but in 5:3(G) Hades is identified as the belly of the serpent.

g. Or "in which also." This may be the rough seam of an interpolation. Cf. Slavonic "like a stone mountain and it drinks . . ."

h. In time or importance.

i. An acrostic may lie behind the list of rivers, cf. H. Jacobson, "A Note on the Greek Apocalypse of Baruch," JSJ 7 (1976) 201-3.

j. Cleansed?

k. The sense requires "does not increase."

l. Here the tree deceives Adam, but in vs. 8 it is the serpent and Satanael (or Samael) who deceive.

m. The following section in Slavonic may have fallen out of the Gk. by homoeoteleuton, or may be an addition. The story is not preserved elsewhere

- 1 4 And I Baruch said, "Behold, lord, you have shown me great and wondrous^a things. Now show me all, for the Lord's sake."
- 2 And the angel said to me, "Come, let us go through"^b . . . with the angel from that place, a journey of about 185 days.
- 3 And he showed me a plain and a serpent^c who appeared to be stone.^d And he showed me Hades,^f and its appearance was gloomy and unclean.
- 4 And I said, "What is this dragon and this monster around it?"
- 5 And the angel said, "This dragon is the one which eats the bodies of those who pass through their lives badly, and he is nourished by them.
- 6 And this is Hades which is like him, in that^g also he drinks about one cubit from the sea, and nothing is diminished from it (i.e. the sea)."
- 7 Baruch said, "And how is that?" And the angel said, "Listen, the Lord God made 360 rivers, the primary^h ones of them being the Alphias, the Aburos, and the Gerikos, and because of these the sea is not diminished."
- 8 And I said, "I pray you, show me which is the treeⁱ which caused Adam to stray." And the angel said, "It is the vine^a which the angel Samael^f planted by which the Lord God became angered, and he cursed him and his planting. For this reason he did not permit Adam to touch it.^s And because of this the devil became envious,^t and tricked him by means of his vine."
- 9 And I Baruch said, "And since the vine became the cause of such evil and was cursed by God and (was) the destruction of the first formed, how is it now of such great use?"
- 10 And the angel said, "Rightly you ask; when God caused the Flood over the earth and destroyed all flesh and 409,000 giants,^u and the water rose over the heights 15 cubits, the water entered Paradise and killed every flower, but it removed the sprig of the vine completely and brought it outside.^v
- 11 And when the earth appeared from the water and Noah left the ark, he started to plant (some) of the discovered plants.
- 12 He also found the sprig, and taking it, he considered in his mind what it was. And I came and told him about it.
- 13 And he said, 'Should I plant it, or what (should I do with it)? Since Adam was destroyed by means of it,^w will I also encounter the anger of God through this?' And while saying these things, he prayed for God to reveal to him what he should do with this.

except in a Slavonic fable based on this story (see Introduction).

n. The order of the angels here follows MS family A. The list in family B is: Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, and Phanuel (corrupt in all MSS). The first four angels of A correspond with the list in ApMos 40:1 and in 1En 9:1(Gk.), as well as rabbinic lists. The list in family B is paralleled by the Parables of Enoch: 1En 40:9; 54:6; 71:8, 9, 13.

o. He lost his title, -EL, when he was exiled. Cf. Isa 14:12.

p. Is this the same serpent as in ch. 4?

q. This tree is identified as the vine by 2nd-cent. sages as well: R. Meir (b.Sanh 70a) and R. Judah b. Ilai (GenR 15:7). It is also mentioned in ApAb 23:5 and the Palea Historica (ed. Vassiliev, p. 190).

r. The Gk. MSS read Samuel, as in the Palea Historica (ed. Vassiliev, p. 258), but this is most probably a mistake for Samael, cf. 9:7. Samael is probably the original name. He is the chief of the evil angels in rabbinic literature, and appears in Ascens 7:9; 11:41(Eth.); and TarJon on Gen 3:6. In the Acts of Andrew and Matthew 24 both names are attested in MSS.

s. Omitted in Slavonic. In the biblical account God commands Adam not to eat from it (Gen 2:17), but Eve tells the serpent that they may not even touch it (Gen 3:3).

t. WisSol 2:24; Vita 12:1.

u. The offspring in Gen 6:1-4.

v. TarJon on Gen 9:20.

w. Connection established between Adam and Noah.

- 14 And he knelt down on (his) knees and fasted 40 days. Praying and crying, he said, 'Lord, if I plant this, what will happen?'
- 15 And the Lord sent the angel Sarasael; he declared to him, 'Rise, Noah, and plant the vine, and alter its name, and change it for the better.'

16 "But beware, Baruch: The tree still possesses its evil.

- 17 Those who drink wine in excess do all evil: Brother does not show mercy to brother, nor father to son, nor son to father. And from the evil of wine comes forth murder and adultery, fornication and cursing, as much evil as exists, because of wine."

Micah 7:6
Mk 13:12
Mt 10:21

1 5 I Baruch said to the angel, "Let me ask you, lord, about one thing still which you said to me:

2 that the serpent drinks one cubit of water from the sea a day: How great then is its stomach that it drinks so much?"

3 And the angel said to me, "As great as is its stomach, so great is Hades."^b And he said to me, "If you wish, come and I will show you mysteries greater than these."

1 6 And the angel took me where the sun goes forth.^a

2 And he showed me a chariot-of-four, and the horses were flaming, for the horses were winged angels. And upon this chariot sat a man wearing a fiery crown.^b And the chariot was drawn by forty angels,^c and (there was) also a bird^d flying, large as a mountain.

3 I said to the angel, "Lord, what is this bird?" And he said to me, "This is the guardian of the world."^f

4 And I said, "For what purpose is it the guardian of the world? Show me!"

5 And the angel said to me, "This bird which goes before the sun stretches out its wings and hides the burning rays of the sun.

6 For if he did not hide the rays of the sun, the human race and every creature on earth would not survive because of the flames of the sun. Thus God has commanded this bird to serve the world.

7 But look on the right wing, at what is written." And he commanded the bird to spread his wings, and I saw letters, greater than a threshing floor on earth of 4000. Those letters were pure gold.

8 And he said to me, "Read them aloud!" And they said thus: "The earth has not borne me, nor has the heaven, but wings of fire bear me. And the birds wait for me."

x. Such pairs occur also in Isa 5:20. Cf. also 4Bar 9:18.

y. The Gk. version is the result of considerable reworking.

z. This emendation by James is quite probable. However, the vs. conflicts with vs. 9. Several scholars have viewed this vs. as a Christian interpolation.

5 a. Cf. ApPaul 32.

b. The Slavonic compares the serpent's stomach with Hades, rather than identifying them. Cf. 4:3(G) which seems to conflict with this vs.

c. Mysteries have been consistently promised. The Gk. may be a Christian revision; cf. Jn 5:20.

6 a. The sun and moon appear to be in the third heaven, cf. 7:2; 10:1.

b. This hellenistic conception of a crowned sun, riding in a chariot, was incorporated into Jewish art as well. Such a representation is found in the 4th-cent.-A.D. mosaic on a synagogue floor at Hammat Tiberias. The 6th-cent.-A.D. synagogue floor at Beth Alpha contains a depiction of Helios in a

- 14 And in 40 days he completed his prayer and entreating much and crying, he said, 'Lord, I implore you to reveal to me what I should do with this plant.'
- 15 And God sent the angel Sarasaël, and he said to him, 'Rise, Noah, plant the sprig, for the Lord says this: "Its bitterness will be changed into sweetness, and its curse will become a blessing,^x and its fruit will become the blood of God, and just as the race of men have been condemned through it, so through Jesus Christ Emmanuel in it (they) will receive a calling and entrance into Paradise.'" ^y
- 16 Then know, Baruch, that just as Adam through this tree was condemned and was stripped of the glory of God, thus men now who insatiably drink the wine deriving from it transgress worse than Adam, and become distant from the glory of God, and will secure for themselves eternal fire.
- 17 For (no)^z good derives from it. For those who drink excessively do these things: Brother does not have mercy on brother, nor father on son, nor children on parents, but by means of the Fall through wine come forth all (these): murder, adultery, fornication, perjury, theft, and similar things. And nothing good is accomplished through it."

Micah 7:6
Mk 13:12
Mt 10:21

1 5 And I Baruch said to the angel, "May I ask you one question, lord?"

- 2 Since you told me that the serpent drinks one cubit from the sea, tell me how large its belly is."
- 3 And the angel said, "Its belly is Hades. As far as 300 men can throw a weight,^a so great is his belly.^b Come now and I will show you works^c greater than these."

1 6 And taking me, he led me where the sun goes forth.^a

- 2 And he showed me a chariot drawn by four horses and fire underneath it. And upon the chariot sat a man wearing a fiery crown.^b The chariot was drawn by forty angels.^c And behold, a bird^d runs along before the sun, as large as nine mountains.^e
- 3 And I said to the angel, "What is this bird?" And he said to me, "This is the guardian of the world."^f
- 4 And I said, "Lord, how is it the guardian of the world? Teach me."
- 5 And the angel said to me, "This bird accompanies the sun and spreading its wings absorbs its fire-shaped rays.
- 6 For if it did not absorb them, none of the race of men would survive, nor anything else that lives, so God appointed this bird."
- 7 And he unfolded his wings, and I saw on his right wing very large letters like the place of a threshing floor, having the space of 4000 modia,^g and the letters were gold.
- 8 And the angel said to me, "Read them." And I read, and they said thus: "Neither earth nor heaven bear me, but the wings of fire bear me."

chariot, pulled by four horses.

c. In 1En 72:4f. this chariot is driven by the winds, but in 2En 11 it seems to be drawn by angels. Cf. also PRE 6.

d. Phoenixes and chalydii accompany the sun in 2En 12 (A) and seven more phoenixes are in the sixth heaven. On the phoenix in antiquity, see R. Van den Broek, The Myth of the Phoenix (Leiden, 1972).

e. This is James's conjecture on the corrupt text, partially confirmed by the Slavonic. Another suggestion is to emend in the light of 2En 12 (A): "about nine hundred measures" or with Discourse of the Paniogate, "about nine cubits" (Hughes, APOT, vol. 2, p. 536). The most interesting suggestion is by Moulton in Hughes to read hōs oreuōn, "as a guardian," cf. vs. 3. Cf. also V. d. Broek, The Myth of the Phoenix, p. 252.

f. This title and function of the phoenix is not attested elsewhere.

g. About 24,000 feet.

- 9 I Baruch said, "Lord, what is the name of this bird?"
 10 And he said to me, "Phoenix."
 11 I Baruch said, "What does he eat?" And the angel said, "Heavenly manna."^h
 12 And I said, "Does he produce excrement?" He said to me, "He produces it."
 And again he said to me, "You will observe the glory of God^m; see what this bird is going to become." He went past in front of the sun.
 13 And while we were singing, there was a noise, great as 30 cows, and the place where we stood shook. And I Baruch said, "What is this noise, my lord?" And he said to me, "The angels are opening the 65 gates of heaven, and light is being separated from darkness."^p
 14 And the sun entered (the chariot)^q and a voice came, "O Sun, giver of light, give splendor to the world." The bird spread his wings and covered the rays of the sun and it flapped its wings and there was a noise like thunder and the bird cried out, saying, "O giver of light, give splendor to the world."
 15 As I heard the voice of the bird, I said, "What is that sound?"
 16 And he said, "This is the cocks on earth beginning to waken in the world. At the first call they call out, knowing that the sun is rising. And the cocks cry out."^t

- 1 7 I Baruch said, "Does the sun rest much?" And the angel said to me, "From when the cocks crow until the light comes."
 2 And the angel said to me, "Listen, Baruch, what I have shown you is in the first and second heavens, but this place in heaven (is where) the sun goes and it is where he gives light to the world." And he said to me, "Be patient and you will see the glory of God."^a

1 8 And the sun came with the crown and 36 angels and also the bird, exhausted.

- 3 And I said, "Lord, where are they carrying the crown of the sun, and why is the bird exhausted?"
 4 And the angel said to me, "The crown of the sun which he wears during the day, 4 angels take and carry to heaven. They cleanse the rays of the sun from the earth."^b

h. On the food of the phoenix, cf. V. d. Broek, The Myth of the Phoenix, pp. 335–56. The dew of heaven is mentioned in 10:9.

i. Family B² of the Slavonic contains the following here: "Its excrement becomes black cumin, and with this kings are anointed, and without cumin he is not king, not having (it) in a vessel when the king is enthroned." For fuller details, see H. E. Gaylord, The Slavonic Version of 3 Baruch (forthcoming).

j. See V. d. Broek, The Myth of the Phoenix, pp. 187, 214–16.

k. This is an element of the phoenix's nest in the classical tradition. Cf. V. d. Broek, The Myth of the Phoenix, pp. 164–70.

l. Is this for coronation or embalming?

m. Cf. 7:2; 11:2; 16:4(S).

n. Lit. "thunder like the sound of thunder."

o. This must relate to the solar calendar. The solar year contains 364 days according to 1En 72:32. However, in 1En 72–82 and 2En 13f. there are only six gates in the east and six in the west. The 300 has dropped out of S.

- 9 And I said, "Lord, what is this bird, and what is its name?"
 10 And the angel told me, "His name is Phoenix."
 11 "And what does he eat?" And he told me, "The manna of heaven and the dew of earth."^h
 12 And I said, "Does the bird excrete?" And he said to me, "He excretes a worm, and from the excretion, this worm,^j cinnamon^k comes into existence, which kings and princes use.^l But wait and you will see the glory of God."^m
 13 And while he was speaking, there was a thunderclapⁿ and the place where we stood was shaken. And I asked the angel, "My lord, what is this sound?" And the angel said to me, "The angels are opening the 365 gates^o of heaven now, and light is separating itself from darkness."^p
 14 And a voice came saying, "Light giver, give splendor to the world!"^r

- 15 And hearing the sound of the bird, I said, "Lord, what is this sound?" 16 And he said, "This is what wakens the cocks on earth, for just as articulate beings do,^s thus also the cock informs those on the earth according to its own tongue. For the sun is being prepared by the angels and the cock is crowing."^t

- 1 7 And I said, "And where does the sun begin to work after the cock crows?"
 2 And the angel said to me, "Listen, Baruch, everything I have shown you is in the first and second heaven; and in the third heaven the sun passes through and gives splendor to the world. But wait and you will see the glory of God."
 3 And while I was speaking to him, I saw the bird, and he appeared ahead and grew little by little, and became full sized.
 4 And after him (I saw) the sun gleaming and with him angels carrying (him) and a crown on his head; we were not able to look directly into this sight and see.
 5 And at the same time as the sun shone out, the phoenix spread out its wings. Seeing such glory, I became overcome with a great fear and fled and hid in the wings of the angel.
 6 And the angel said to me, "Do not fear, Baruch, but wait and you will see them setting."^b

- 1 8 And taking me, he led me to the west. And when the time of the setting (of the sun) came, I saw again the bird coming in front and the sun coming with the angels. When he came, I saw the angels, and they removed the crown from his head.
 2 And the bird was overcome and let his wings droop.
 3 And when I saw these things, I said, "Why do they remove the crown from his head and why is the bird so overcome?"
 4 And the angel said to me, "When the day is completed, 4 angels take the crown of the sun and carry it to heaven and renew it because it and its rays are defiled upon earth. And every day it is renewed."^a

p. According to the Syr. TAdam (ed. Kmosko, Pat. Syriaca, 1.2, p. 1337) in the eleventh hour of the night. [See the contribution herein on TAdam. —J.H.C.]

q. The translation "entered (the chariot)" is a rare meaning for this word. It often means "set, go down"; but this meaning does not fit here.

r. 2En 15:2(A).

s. This is the conjectural translation of James; Ryssel. APAT. proposes "just as men do through the mouth."

t. Family B of the Slavonic for vss. 15f. read "And I said to the angel, 'What is this bird singing?' The angel said to me, 'He excites your cocks on earth, and the cocks sing when the sun rises.'"

7 a. S refers to the setting of the sun here and probably should be placed with 8:1f.(G).

b. See parallel in S 8:5.

8 a. 2En 14:2.

b. In S family B preserves vs. 6 as follows: "It

5 And the angel said to me, "The sun sees all the lawlessness in the world; he does not countenance lewdness, adultery, jealousy, rivalry, theft, murder, all of which are not acceptable to God. And also the bird is exhausted, just as one of the earthly birds; it takes up the fiery rays of the sun and is exhausted by them."

And then the angels brought the crown of the sun. And I saw such glory, I was frightened, I fled into the wings of the angel. And the angel said, "Do not fear, Baruch, the Lord is with you, but be comforted."

2 9 And I said to the angel of the Lord, "Teach me what the moon is."

3 And he said to me, "It is like a woman, sitting on a chariot, and twenty angels are leading the chariot by means of oxen, and the oxen are angels. The form of the moon is like a woman."^b

5 And I Baruch said, "Lord, why does it sometimes wax and sometimes wane?"

6 And he said to me, "Listen, Baruch, it was beautiful.

7 But when the first-created Adam sinned, having listened to Satanael, when he covered himself with the serpent, it (i.e. the moon) did not hide but shone forth, and God was angered by it. He lay bare its days to affliction."

1.2 10 And the angel of power took me to a very wide mountain, and in the middle of the mountain was a large lake of water.^b

3 And there were birds from all heaven. But the very large ones were not like these (ones), they were similar to a crane. And there were other birds larger than those.

4 And I asked the angel, "Lord, what is this lake in the midst of the mountain and what are these birds?"

5 And he said to me, "The birds are ready day and night, praising God ceaselessly.^c

6 And the clouds take the water from here and rain upon the earth, and plants sprout."

is overcome because of the burning heat and warmth of the sun."

c. Cf. 6:6; TLevi 3:1; ApPaul 4.

9 a. Ryssel, APAT, emends to read "the chariot of the moon."

b. This representation of the moon is hellenistic and has no parallel in Jewish literature of the period. In the Book of the Luminaries, 1En 72-82, the sun rides in a chariot and by implication so does the moon. 2En 16:7 explicitly states that the moon rides in a chariot pulled by angels.

c. The term "the first Adam" is very common in rabbinic literature and need not imply the Pauline second Adam.

- 5 And I Baruch said, "Lord, by what are its rays defiled upon earth?" And the angel said to me, "By the sight of the lawlessness and unrighteousness of men committing fornication, adultery, theft, robbery, idol-worship, drunkenness, murder, discord, jealousy, slander, murmuring, gossip, divination, and other things which are unacceptable to God. By means of these it is defiled, and because of this it is renewed.
- 6 And now, concerning how the bird becomes overcome: It is overcome because it checks the rays of the sun and the fire and burning the whole day.^b
- 7 For if its wings did not draw around the rays of the sun as earlier said, no living being would survive."^c

- 1 9 And when they had withdrawn, night arrived, and with it the moon^a and the stars.
- 2 And I Baruch said, "Lord, explain this also to me, please. How does it depart and where is it going, and in what pattern does it travel?"
- 3 And the angel said, "Wait and you will see this shortly." And on the morrow I saw this also in the form of a woman, seated in a wheeled chariot. And in front of it were oxen and lambs near the chariot, and also many angels.^b
- 4 And I said, "Lord, what are the oxen and lambs?" And he said to me, "These are angels also."
- 5 And again I asked, "Why does it sometimes grow larger and sometimes grow smaller?"
- 6 "Listen, O Baruch: This which you see was designed by God to be beautiful without peer.
- 7 And during the transgression of the first Adam,^c she gave light to Samael when he took the serpent as a garment, and did not hide, but on the contrary, waxed. And God was angered with her, and diminished her and shortened her days."
- 8 And I said, "And why does she not shine all the time, but only at night?" And the angel said, "Listen: Just as servants are unable to speak freely before kings, so also before the sun, the moon and stars are unable to shine. For the stars are permanently suspended, but they are dispersed by the sun; and the moon, while being safe, is exhausted by the heat of the sun."

- 1 10 And when I had been taught all these things by the archangel, he took me to a third^a heaven.
- 2 And I saw an unbroken plain and in the middle of it was a lake of water.^b
- 3 And in it were many birds of every species but unlike those here. But I saw a crane, like large oxen. And all were great, excelling those on earth.
- 4 And I asked the angel, "What is the plain and what is the lake and what are the multitude of birds around it?"
- 5 And the angel said, "Listen, Baruch: This plain which surrounds the lake, and in which are other mysteries, is the place where the souls of the righteous^d come when they assemble, living together choir by choir.
- 6 And the water is that which the clouds receive to send as rain upon the earth, and (then) fruit grows."

10 a. Lit. "third," but this must be the entrance to the fourth heaven. They entered the third in ch.

4. cf. also 7:2.

b. James and others identify this as the Acherusian lake; cf. ApMos 37:3; SibOr 2:334–38; ApPet 14; ApPaul 22.

c. Cf. TLevi 3:8; 2En 17:1; ApZeph (in Strom

5.11.77) for angelic choirs in the heavens.

d. It is not clear from the text if these are the birds. Various Jewish and Christian traditions portray the righteous souls as birds. On the Jewish traditions concerning the soul represented as a bird, cf. V. Aptowitz, "Die Seele als Vogel," MGWJ 69 (1925) 150–69.

8 And I said, "How is it that men say that clouds come to the sea and take water and rain?"

9 And the angel said to me, "The race of men is ignorant, for all the water of the sea is salty so that if it rained because of the sea, no plant would sprout on earth. But know that they come from that lake and the clouds rain."

1 11 And the angel of power took me and led me to the fifth heaven.

2 And he showed me large gates, and names of men were written (on them),^a and they were closed. And I said, "Lord, will these gates open so that we can enter through them?" And the angel said to me, "It is not possible to enter through them until Michael, the holder of the keys of the kingdom,^b comes." And the angel said to me, "Wait and you will see the glory of God."

3 And while we were waiting, there was a noise from the highest heaven like triple thunder. And I Baruch said, "Lord, what is this noise?"

4 And he said to me, "Michael is descending to accept the prayers of men."^d

5 And then a voice came, saying that the gates should open, and they opened. And there was a great noise, greater than the first.

6 And Michael came, and the angel who was with me met him and bowed to him.

7 And I saw him holding a very large receptacle, and its depth was that from heaven to earth, and its width that from east to west.

8 And I said, "Lord, what is Michael holding?"

9 And he said to me, "This is where the prayers of men go."^h

1 12 And while he was speaking to me, angels came, carrying gifts full of flowers.^a

2 And I said, "Lord, who are these?"

3 And he said to me, "These are the angels who are in the service of men."^b

4 And Michael took the gifts from them and put them in the receptacle.

5 And I saw other angels carrying gifts, and they were dejected and did not dare to draw near because they did not have (sufficient) measure.

6 And Michael called, saying, "Come also, you angels, bring what you have brought."

7 And Michael cried greatly over the [un]filled receptacle.^c

11 a. Cf. ApPaul 19.

b. Cf. 4Bar 9:5. Peter as the heavenly major-domo, cf. Mt 16:19.

c. This is the rank of Michael in several works, cf. e.g. Dan 10:13, 21; 2En 22:6; 33:10(A); TAb(A) passim, (B) 14. Cf. Josh 5:14 LXX.

d. These he apparently offers on the altar of the heavenly temple, which is mentioned in TLevi 5:1 and elsewhere. See also b.Ḥag 12b: "In it (the fourth heaven) is Jerusalem and the temple and an altar constructed and Michael, the great commander, stands and offers sacrifices on it." On the rabbinic sources for this idea, see V. Aptowitz,

"The Heavenly Temple in the Agada," Tarbiz 2 (1931) 137-53, 257-77. TLevi 3:6 mentions "a reasonable and bloodless offering." On prayer and good deeds as the proper sacrifice at Qumran, cf. CD 11:20f., 1QS 9.4f. Cf. also the words of R. Johanan ben Zakkai in ARN A ch. 4.

e. This function is also ascribed to other angels, e.g. Ramiel in 2Bar 55:3 and Gabriel in Dan 9:23.

f. Contrasted with those portrayed in 4:5(G).

g. Probably the bowl for offerings at the heavenly altar. The LXX uses this term for sprinkling pans used in the Temple worship. The prayers of the saints are offered in such golden bowls in Rev

- 7 And again I said to the angel of the Lord, "What are the birds?" And he said to me, "These are the ones who continuously praise the Lord."^c
- 8 And I Baruch said, "Lord, why do men say that the water which rains is from the sea?"
- 9 And the angel said, "There is rain from the sea and from water on earth; but that which produces the fruits is from here. Know from now on that what is called the dew of heaven comes from here."

- 1 11 And taking me from this, the angel led me to the fifth heaven.
- 2 And the gate was closed. And I said, "Lord, will the gate be opened so that we can enter?" And the angel said to me, "We are not able to enter until Michael the holder of the keys of the kingdom of heaven^b comes. But wait and you will see the glory of God."
- 3 And there was a great noise like thunder, and I said, "Lord, what is this noise?"
- 4 And he said to me, "The commander-in-chief^c Michael is descending to receive the prayers of men."^d
- 5 And behold a voice came: "Let the gate be opened!" And they opened, and there was a shriek as from thunder.
- 6 And Michael came, and the angel with me went to meet him and made obeisance to him and said, "Hail, commander-in-chief of all our regiment."
- 7 And the commander-in-chief Michael said, "Hail thou also, our brother, interpreter of revelations^e to those who pass through life rightly."^f
- 8 And after they greeted each other, they stood still. And I saw the commander-in-chief Michael take hold of a very large bowl,^g its depth being so great as from heaven to earth, and its width so great as from north to south. And I said, "Lord, what is it that Michael the archangel is holding?"
- 9 And he said to me, "This is where the virtues of the righteous and the good works which they do are carried,^h which are brought by him before the heavenly God."

- 1 12 And while I was speaking with them, behold angels came carrying baskets filled with flowers,^a and they gave them to Michael.
- 2 And I asked the angel, "Lord, who are these and what is it that they are carrying?"
- 3 And he said to me, "These are the angels over the principalities."^b
- 4 And taking the baskets, the archangel emptied them into his bowl.
- 5 And the angel said to me, "These above-mentioned flowers are the virtues of the righteous."
- 6 And I saw other angels carrying baskets which were less than full.^c And they came distressed, and did not dare to approach, for they did not achieve the full prizes.^d
- 7 And Michael cried out, saying, "Come also, you angels, bring what you have brought."
- 8 And Michael was greatly distressed and so was the angel with me, because they had not filled the bowl.

5:8, cf. also Rev 8:3.

h. Slavonic seems influenced by vs. 4.

12 a. James (in his introduction to R. L. Bensley, The Fourth Book of Ezra [Cambridge, 1895] pp. lii–liii) noticed that twelve angels with flowers are mentioned in the Spanish MSS of 4Ezra 1:40, a Christian work.

b. Angels of power and angels of principalities, cf. 1En 61:10. The powers and principalities in lists of heavenly forces are mentioned several times in the NT and in other sources, e.g. TLevi 3:8. Angels of hosts are mentioned in 1:8(G) and 10:1(S). The relation between these different heavenly forces is unclear.

c. Hughes, APOT, emended this to read "neither empty nor full." The text is uncertain but the meaning clear.

d. Ryssel, APAT, first suggested that the Gk. is here dependent on Phil 3:14; 1Cor 9:24.

e. The negative has dropped out of S.

- 1 13 And I saw others coming and crying, and they were trembling with fear, saying, "Woe to us, darkened ones, that we have been handed over to places of demons and of men. And we want to depart from them, if possible."
- 2 And Michael said, "You are not able to depart from them, but tell me what you want."
- 3 And they said to him, "We entreat you, Michael our chief, transfer us from them, for we do not want to remain with the disobedient, unreasonable men."
- 4 Their wives flee to the church, and from thence they bring them out to jealousy and to fornication and envy, and they sin in many other ways, which you, O Glorious One,^b know."
- 5 And Michael answered and said, "Be patient until I ask God what he commands concerning you."

- 1 14 Michael ascended and the gates closed; there was thunder as if there (were) 40 oxen.^a
- 2 And I said to the angel, "What is the noise?" And he said to me, "Now Michael is bringing the prayers^b of men."

- 1 15 And at that time Michael descended and brought the first angels full mercy.^a
- 2 And he said, "Come, angels, and receive mercies; just as you brought prayers to God, so receive. In the measure that men requested, thus give to them."
- 3 And Michael called out again, "Come, you angels who brought lesser gifts. Just as you brought, thus receive, in the measure that men offered prayers. Announce it to them and be not negligent. But (they should) prostrate themselves in prayer in the holy church."^d

- 1 16 Michael again called the other angels who were crying, "Come also, you angels, and take (back) the petitions (and) what the Lord has prophesied about those men. There is no command for you to depart from them."
- 2 But bring them painful diseases and horrors and caterpillars and locusts and storms, thunder and hail and devastation to their cities, and demons to strangle their children, because they do not fear God and they do not come to church and to the place of prayers. Bring them curses, and no success in good, and murder."
- 3 The angels took their commands from Michael; trembling and crying they went.

13 a. This expression is used to refer to monastics and Christian leaders, especially bishops, cf. Lampe, p. 1105b. Note that both versions are Christian.

b. It would appear that Michael is referred to as "Glorious One."

14 a. See 10:3(G).

b. The Slavonic calls the offerings "prayers" consistently, but the Gk. version refers to them as "prayers" and "virtues" and "good works," cf. 11:4, 9; 12:5; 15:2f.

15 a. The Slavonic version may have misread

- 1 13 And then similarly came other angels crying and lamenting and saying with fear, "See how we are, blackened, Lord, for we are handed over to evil men, and we want to be withdrawn from them."
- 2 And Michael said, "So that the enemy will not dominate at the end, you must not withdraw from them. But tell me what you desire."
- 3 And they said, "We beg you, Michael our commander-in-chief, transfer us from them, for we are unable to remain with evil and foolish men. For there is no goodness in them, but only every unrighteousness and greediness."
- 4 Indeed we have seen them enter into no church, nor (go) to the spiritual fathers,^a nor to anything good. But wherever there is murder, they are in the midst of it, and wherever there is fornication, adultery, theft, slander, perjury, envy, drunkenness, strife, jealousy, grumbling, gossip, idol worship, divination, and things similar to these. There are (with these men) works of such nature and worse; therefore we ask to be released from them."
- 5 And Michael said to the angels, "Wait until I learn from the Lord what is to happen."

- 1 14 And at that time Michael departed and the doors closed. And a noise like thunder came.
- 2 And I asked the angel, "What is the noise?" And he said to me, "Now Michael is bringing the virtues^b of men to God."

- 1 15 And at that time Michael came down, and the gate opened, and he brought oil.^a
- 2 And for the angels who had brought the full baskets, he filled (the baskets) with oil, saying, "Take, give a hundredfold reward^b to our friends, and to those who have laboriously done good works.^c For those who have sown well, harvest well."
- 3 And he said to those who had brought half-full baskets, "Come you also, receive the reward according to what you brought, and give it to the sons of men."
- 4 Then he said to those who brought the full (baskets) and those (who brought) the half-full (baskets), "Go, bless our friends and tell them that thus says the Lord: You have been faithful over a little, he will set you over much; enter into the delight of our Lord."^d Mt 25:23

- 1 16 And turning, he said to those who had brought nothing, "Be not sad, and cry not, but do not let the sons of men alone.
- 2 But since they have provoked me to anger by their deeds, go and provoke them to jealousy, and provoke them to anger, and embitter them against those who are no nation, against a people without understanding.
- 3 Moreover, send forth caterpillars and locusts, rust and grasshoppers, hail with lightning and fury. Punish them with the sword and death, and their children with demons.

Deut 32:21
(LXX)
Rom 10:19

elaion as eleos. Seth seeks the "oil of mercy" from the garden of Eden in ApMos 9:3; 13:1; cf. also 2En 8:1. Enoch is anointed before God with a "good oil" (2En 22:8), or the "oil of God's glory" (2En 56:2). Cf. E. Quinn, The Quest of Seth for the Oil of Life (Chicago, 1962) for other traditions concerning this oil.

b. Cf. Mt 19:29 and Mk 10:30.

c. Cf. nn. to 11:9 and 14:2.

d. The Gk. paraphrases the NT verse. The Slavonic parallel seems to be addressed to only those who brought an insufficient measure, but also appears to be Christian.

- 4 And the angel said to me, "By the command of the Ruler I say to you, Baruch, stand on the right side and you will see the glory of God.^a And you will see the resting place of the righteous, glory and joy and rejoicing and celebration.^b And you will see the torture of the impious, wailing and groans and lamentations and the eternal worm. Their voice goes up to heaven and implores, 'Have mercy on us, God.' "
- 5 And I Baruch said to the angel, "Lord, who are these?"
- 6 And he said to me, "These are the sinners, having despised the command of God."
- 7 And I said to the angel, "Permit me, Lord, to cry on their behalf."
- 8 And the angel said to me, "You also may cry for them; perhaps the Lord God will hear your voice and have mercy on them."
- 1 17 And a voice from heaven came, saying, "Bring Baruch down to the face of all the earth so that he will tell the sons of men that which he has seen and heard, and all the mysteries you have shown him. And glory be to our God forever." AMEN.

16 a. There appear to be three glories of God referred to in this work: that of the sun (6:12; 7:2; 7:5), that of Michael (11:2; 13:4[S]), and that of the righteous in their resting place (16:4). Note that Adam lost the glory of God in the Fall (4:16[G]).

b. This promise is not fulfilled.

4 For they did not listen to my voice, nor observe my commands, nor carry them out, but they despised my commands and my churches, and insulted the priests proclaiming my words to them.”

5

6

7

8

- 1 17 And while he was speaking, the door closed and we withdrew.
- 2 And taking me, the angel returned me to where I was at the beginning.
- 3 And when I came to myself, I praised God, who had deemed me worthy of such honors.
- 4 And you, brethren, who happen upon these revelations, glorify God also so that he will glorify us now and forever to all eternity! AMEN.

APOCALYPSE OF ABRAHAM

(First to Second Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY R. RUBINKIEWICZ

The theme of the Apocalypse of Abraham seems to be Israel's election and its covenant with God. The document can be divided into two parts, chapters 1–8 and chapters 9–32. Chapters 1–8 constitute a story of Abraham's youth and his perception of idolatry. Abraham concludes that his father's idols are not gods, because some stone idols are crushed and a wooden idol is accidentally consumed by fire. Abraham consequently beseeches God to reveal himself, whereupon he hears God's voice, which instructs Abraham to leave his father's house.

Abraham is commanded to offer a sacrifice so that God will reveal "great things which you have not seen . . ." (9:6). God sends his angel Iaoel to lead Abraham up to heaven (15:4), where he sees seven visions: the light and fiery angels (15:5–7), the fire (17:1–3), the throne (18:1–14), the firmaments (19:4–9), the world (21:2–7), the seven sins of the world (24:3–25:2), and the destruction of the Temple (27:1–3). Finally God announces the punishment of the gentiles through ten plagues (chs. 29f.) and the victory of the just (chs. 31f.).

Texts

The Apocalypse of Abraham is known only in an Old Slavonic translation, which has come down to us in several Russian redactions. The combined witness of six manuscripts that contain essentially the full text allows us to discern fairly clearly the original form of the Slavonic text, although many details remain obscure. Four manuscripts provide confirmatory evidence only for the first eight chapters. Other fragments, summaries, and reworkings are obviously derived from the older long form; they will not concern us here.

The apocalypse appears as a completely independent unit only in one manuscript, but basically the same text is found in a second manuscript with a slightly different beginning and a radically truncated ending. A slightly different redaction is reflected in the text that has been incorporated into the Explanatory Palaia (Tolkovaja Paleja), a broad account of Old Testament history interspersed with exegesis, much of it anti-Jewish polemic. These are the manuscripts:

- S– Sil'vestrovskij sbornik, Moscow, Central'nyj Gosudarstvennyj Arkhiv Drevnikh Aktov, Sin. Tip. 53, fols. 164–83. 14th cent. Facsimile published as vol. 99, Obščestvo ljubitelej drevnej pis'mennosti, St. Petersburg, 1891. Published by N. S. Tikhonravov in Pamjatniki otrečenoj russkoj literatury (St. Petersburg, 1863) vol. 1, pp. 32–53.
- D– A miscellany, Lenin Library, Moscow, Tikhonravov 704, fols. 70–79. 16th cent. Unpublished.
- A– The Volokalamsk Paleja Tolkovaja, Moscow, Lenin Library, Mosk. Dukh. Akad. 172/549, fols. 85–101. 15th cent. Printed in N. S. Tikhonravov, Pamjatniki, vol. 1, pp. 54–77.
- B– The Synodal Paleja Tolkovaja, Moscow, Gosudarstvennyj Istoričeskij Muzej, 869 (Sin. 211) fols. 76–90. 16th cent. Unpublished.

C— A Palaia, Lenin Library, Moscow, fond 173.III, No. 136, fols. 18–43. 16th cent. Unpublished.

K— Solovec Palaia, Leningrad, Public Library, Kaz. Dukh. Akad. 431, fols. 79–95. 16th–17th cent. Published by I. J. Porfir'ev, in "Apokrificheskie skazaniia o vetkhovzetnykh licakh i sobytijakh po rukopisjam Soloveckoj biblioteki," Sbornik Otd. russ. jaz. i slov. Imp. Akad. Nauk 17 (1877) 111–30.

We were able to consult the unpublished texts D, B, and C in microfilms, which were made available through the cooperation of the libraries and museums of the U.S.S.R.¹

The Palaia manuscripts, which contain the longer form of the Ladder of Jacob, have the first eight chapters of the Apocalypse of Abraham; this is the later Palaia redaction. The earlier redaction, represented by the Kolomna manuscript of A.D. 1406, has only a few fragments of the Apocalypse of Abraham. An abbreviated text, summarizing chapters 1–12, 15, 17, 20, and 30, is found in two manuscripts, while a derived legend is found in seven. They are not helpful in establishing the early Slavonic text.

Most critics have distinguished two parts to the Apocalypse of Abraham: chapters 1–8 and chapters 9–32; they claim that the former did not belong to the original apocalyptic work but was added later by an editor.² If our interpretation of the apocalypse 1–6 is correct, these chapters form an integral part of the work and were written by the same author who composed the rest of the apocalypse. It is generally accepted that the present text of the apocalypse has many insertions which are due to Slavonic editors. All of chapter 7 seems to be redactional.³

Original language

A thorough investigation of the original language of the Apocalypse of Abraham has never been undertaken. A. Rubinstein studied only ten passages from the apocalypse and concluded that the document probably was written in Hebrew.⁴ The Slavonic text of the Apocalypse of Abraham contains several Hebrew names, words, and phrases. The most impressive examples are the following: Ioavan is a Slavonic deformation of the Hebrew ywn (Greece); Souzouch is probably a transcription of the name kwrwš (Cyrus); and Maroumat is an abbreviation of the Hebrew Martā Rômā. The use of parts of the body instead of a simple pronoun is frequent: "My heart was perplexed" (1:4), "Why now have you afflicted my heart?" (27:6).⁵ The parallelism of the verses reflects Semitic thought.⁶

The positive instead of a comparative betrays a Semitic original. "It was heavy of a big stone" (1:5) renders the Semitic kbd mn (cf. also 6:9), which has to be translated: "heavier than a big stone." Moreover, the prepositions are sometimes utilized according to Hebrew rather than Slavonic syntax (for example: 8:4, "for the sins," lit. "in the sins"; 12:10, "you will see all," lit. "you will see in all" [= Heb. ʾh bʿ]⁷; 27:11, "to rule from them in them," lit. "to rule in them" [= Heb. hmšlyty bhm]).

The syntax of the temporal phrases reflects the Hebrew original of our apocalypse. Frequently a phrase is introduced by the verb hyh: "And it came to pass, that when I saw it, my heart was perplexed . . ." (1:4; cf. e.g. 1:7; 2:5; 5:4; 5:10, 11; 8:5). Numerous other examples could be cited. The foregoing suggests that the Apocalypse of Abraham was written in a Semitic language, probably in Hebrew.

The Slavonic version of the Apocalypse of Abraham was made in the eleventh or twelfth

¹ A seventh text (Uvarov 85, fols. 297–313, Historical Museum, Moscow) turned out to be a copy of S and therefore of no interest. E. Turdeanu, in his preliminary study of the MSS on the basis of published materials ("L'Apocalypse d'Abraham en slave," JJS 3 [1972] 156–64), did not know of MSS C and D, which we found during our work toward a critical edition of the ApAb. He believed that MS Sin. 548 (Historical Museum, Moscow) contained ApAb; N. B. Tikhomirov of the Lenin Library has kindly informed us that this is an error. I am grateful to the editor for polishing the introduction and to H. G. Lunt for improving the English translation.

² Cf. N. Bonwetsch, Die Apokalypse Abrahams: Das Testament der vierzig Märtyrer, p. 41.

³ Ch. 7 seems to be derived from Palaea Tolkovaja (Moscow, 1892) pp. 123–45.

⁴ Cf. A. Rubinstein, "Hebraisms in the Slavonic 'Apocalypse of Abraham,'" JJS 4 (1953) 108–15; idem, "Hebraisms in the 'Apocalypse of Abraham,'" JJS 5 (1954) 132–35. He analyzed ten examples: ApAb 8:4; 12:3, 10; 14:4, 6, 13; 29:8, 20; 31:1, 2.

⁵ Cf. also 17:23; 22:2.

⁶ Cf. especially 1:4; 3:1; 6:1, 11; 12:20; 21:3.

⁷ Cf. also 31:4.

century A.D. in the south of the Slavic world, probably in Bulgaria. It may be that this pseudepigraphon was translated directly from Hebrew into Slavonic. Between 1108/9 and 1120 the archbishop of Ochride (Macedonia) was Leon Mung, a Jew converted to Christianity.⁸ His teacher was Tobias b. Eleazar (11th cent.), the author of the Midrash Lekah Tov. Bulgaria at that time had educated men who could make the translation from Hebrew into Slavonic. Further study needs to be made regarding this issue.

Date

It is commonly held that our pseudepigraphon was composed at the end of the first century A.D. No decisive argument, however, has been given in support of this date. In the following paragraphs the issue will be discussed first in terms of the external and then in terms of the internal data.

The testimonies of Nicephorus,⁹ patriarch of Constantinople (806–15), of Pseudo-Athanasius (6th cent.),¹⁰ and of the Apostolic Constitutions (4/5th cent.)¹¹ are very vague and nothing can be deduced from them in regard to our apocalypse. Epiphanius (4th cent.) speaks about some "Apocalypse of Abraham" used by the Sethians.¹² The same apocalypse was utilized by the Audiens and we know its content, thanks to Theodore bar Konai (8th cent.)¹³ and Origen.¹⁴ There can be no doubt, however, that the writing used by the Sethians and our pseudepigraphon are two different works.

The text of Recognitiones (2nd cent.) gives us at least two traditions. The first one presents Abraham as an astrologer (Rec. 32:3f.), the second one (33:1f.) may be an allusion to the Apocalypse of Abraham. These witnesses permit us to suggest that the Apocalypse of Abraham was possibly known by the second century.

Our pseudepigraphon was written after A.D. 70, because the author describes the destruction of Jerusalem (cf. ch. 27). Hence, the apocalypse—that is the early Jewish stratum—was composed sometime after A.D. 70 and before the middle of the second century.¹⁵ It is unwise to speculate further regarding the date of the apocalypse in the present collection of documents.¹⁶

Provenance¹⁷

If the original language of the Apocalypse of Abraham is Hebrew, then it was most likely composed in Palestine. It is necessary to be conservative regarding the probable provenance of the apocalypse for two main reasons: First, it is preserved in Slavonic manuscripts that are far removed from the conjectured time and place of the original composition. Second, as stated herein by H. G. Lunt and F. I. Andersen respectively in the presentations of the Ladder of Jacob and 2 Enoch, pseudepigrapha preserved only in Slavonic may have been considerably altered by the Bogomils (a medieval dualist sect), who were influenced by passages in the pseudepigrapha and composed new ones.

⁸ Cf. "Notitia Archiepiscopi Iannis Comneni," ed. in: Fontes Historiae Bulgaricae (Sofia, 1968) vol. 7, p. 110; see also: N. Snegarov, Istirija na Ochridskata archiepiskopija (Sofia, 1924) vol. 1, pp. 204f.; I. S. Emmanuel, Histoire des Israélites de Salonique (Paris, 1935) p. 34.

⁹ PG, vol. 100, col. 1059.

¹⁰ PG, vol. 28, col. 432.

¹¹ PG, vol. 1, col. 1100.

¹² PG, vol. 41, col. 669.

¹³ Cf. H. Pognon, Inscriptions mandaites des coupes de Khouabir (Paris, 1892) p. 195; H. C. Puech, "Fragments retrouvés de l'Apocalypse d'Allogène," in Mélanges Franz Cumont (Brussels, 1936) pp. 937f.

¹⁴ PG, vol. 13, col. 1889.

¹⁵ L. Ginzberg ("Apocalypse of Abraham," JE, vol. 1, p. 92) placed the ApAb in "the last decades of the first century." G. H. Box and J. I. Landsman argued that the ApAb was composed between A.D. 70 and the first decades of the 2nd cent. See their discussion in The Apocalypse of Abraham, pp. xvf. This n. 15 and the sentence to which it is attached in the text have been added by J.H.C.

¹⁶ [R. Rubinkiewicz speculates on the date for the composition of ApAb in L'Apocalypse d'Abraham en slave. Édition critique du texte, introduction, traduction et commentaire. He argues that plagues 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9 describe the events of the years A.D. 69 and 70, especially the war between the Jews and the Romans; and that plagues 2, 4, 6, 8, and 10 reflect the eruption of Vesuvius in A.D. 79. On the basis of these observations he suggests that the ApAb was written shortly after A.D. 79, perhaps between 79 and 81. —J.H.C.]

¹⁷ The section of the introduction regarding provenance was written by J.H.C.

The Christian interpolations and gnostic glosses

Chapter 7 appears to be inserted from the legend of Abraham found in the Palaia. The interpolator of 29:3–13 was probably a Christian editor who had nothing to do with gnostic circles. However, the gloss in 22:5, the censure in 20:5, and the gloss in 20:7 reveal that their author wanted to indicate that the God of Abraham is a god of evil. This point of view is usually associated with the gnostics. The gloss in 22:5 and the censured text of 20:5, however, show that they could be made only in the Slavic world. The only Slavs who claimed that the God of the Old Testament was the god of evil were the Bogomils. Their founder was Pope Bogomil (10th cent. A.D.). According to the Bogomils, God had two sons: Satanael and Jesus. Satanael rebelled against God and created the visible world; everything described in the book of Genesis is the work of the devil. If then this world is created by Satanael (= god of the OT), one has to abstain from every contact with the material world. The Bogomils, therefore, condemned marriage, abstained from meat and wine, and did not believe in the resurrection of the body.¹⁸

The glosses in 20:5, 7 and 22:5 perfectly suit their doctrine. We can say the same about the interpolator of 29:3–13; he shows that Jesus came forth from the heathens and not from the Jews (= the people with Azazel!). Perhaps also inserted by a Bogomil were 9:7, an injunction against meat and wine, and 23:4–10, which claims that the sin of Adam and Eve consisted in the conjugal relation. Maybe the same Bogomil editor interpolated 10:6–12 and 17:8b–19. The general content of the account of the sin of Adam and Eve reveals that it comes from Jewish sources. It fits the Bogomil doctrine, however, and therefore was inserted into our apocalypse.

Theological importance

God. The God of eternity (9:3) is the God who protects Abraham and his descendants (9:4). He created the world (9:4), chose Israel, called this nation "my people" (22:5; 31:1), and will give it victory over its enemies (31:1f.).

Angelology. Angelology plays a large role in our apocalypse. The most important figure is the Angel of God, Iael. His fundamental role is to protect and strengthen Abraham (10:3).

Demonology. The chief of the fallen angels is Azazel (13:6). His power is over the earth, because he has chosen it for his dwelling place (13:7f.; 14:6). However, his power is limited (13:10) since God does not permit him to tempt all the righteous (13:11). For example, he cannot seduce Abraham (13:14), and he has no power over the body of the righteous (13:10).

Cosmology. God shows Abraham the firmaments in order that he may know that "on no single expanse is there any other but the one whom" Abraham has searched for or who has loved him (19:3). God says to Abraham: "Look now beneath your feet at the firmament and understand the creation that was depicted of old on this expanse" (21:1). Abraham sees then the earth with the wicked men, and the garden of Eden with the just, he sees the sea with Leviathan, and the waters over the firmaments; at last, he watches the men on the right and on the left side of the "picture of creation" (chs. 21f.). Abraham is told that as the world is divided into two parts: earth and Eden, the waters of the sea and the waters over the firmaments, so mankind is divided into the people of God and the heathens (21:3–7).

The numeration of the firmaments is due to editorial expansions, probably by a Slavic editor. The descriptions of the three heavens is similar to that in the Testament of Levi 3:1–4.

Dualism. In the Apocalypse of Abraham there is no ontological dualism. The created world is good before the eyes of God (22:2). There is no other God in the universe than "the one whom" Abraham has "searched for" and "who has loved" him (19:3).

There is evil in the world, but it is not inevitable. God has full control over the world and he does not permit the body of the just to remain in the hand of Azazel (13:10). Azazel is wrong if he thinks he can scorn justice and disperse the secret of heaven (14:4). He will be banished in the desert forever (14:5).

Eschatology. The age of ungodliness endures "twelve periods" (29:2). After the last period comes the final judgment, which precedes the redemption of the just. God announces ten plagues (29:15; 30:2–8); when they pass, he will send his “chosen one” (31:1) who will gather the dispersed people. Together with him God will punish the heathens (31:2). The apostates will be burned through the fire of Azazel (31:6); the Temple and the sacrifices will be restored (29:17f.).

¹⁸ Cf. D. Obolenski, The Bogomils (Cambridge, 1948); S. Runciman, The Medieval Manichees (Cambridge, 1947); D. Angelov, Bogomilstvo vŭ Bŭlgarija (Sofia, 1961).

The doctrine of resurrection is noticeably absent, although it may be reflected in the symbol of the dew (19:4). The Apocalypse of Abraham, however, passed through the hands of the Bogomils, who did not believe in the resurrection of the body. It is possible that phrases mentioning the resurrection were omitted. It is clear, regardless of that possibility, that our author believed in life after death (cf. 21:6).

Relation to the canonical books¹⁹

The books of Genesis and Ezekiel play a fundamental role in the Apocalypse of Abraham. The author begins with the text of Genesis 20:13 (ApAb 1:1), which is quoted according to the exegesis of the Targums; he ends his work with the citation of Genesis 15:13–16 (= ApAb 32:1–3), but he changes the biblical “fourth generation” into “seventh,” i.e. a perfect one.

The Apocalypse at 8:4 and 9:1–4 reflects respectively Genesis 12:1 and 15:1 seen in the light of Psalm 20:2f. or Deuteronomy 33:29. The author quotes Genesis 15:9f. (ApAb 9:5), and Genesis 15:17a (ApAb 15:1). Apocalypse of Abraham 20:4 calls to mind Genesis 18:27; 20:6 is based on Genesis 18:30.

Chapters 1 and 10 of Ezekiel are behind chapters 18f. Abraham sees four living creatures (ApAb 18:5–11; Ezek 1:10; 10:14), the wheels full of eyes (ApAb 18:3, 12), the throne (ApAb 18:3; Ezek 1:23), and the divine chariot (ApAb 18:12; Ezek 10:6).

There is no direct relationship between the Apocalypse of Abraham and the New Testament. There are some parallel expressions, however, which may indicate that both drew from a shared tradition.

Relation to the apocryphal books

The author of the Apocalypse of Abraham follows the tradition of 1 Enoch 1–36. The chief of the fallen angels is Azazel, who rules the stars and most men. It is not difficult to find here the traditions of Genesis 6:1–4 developed according to the tradition of 1 Enoch. Azazel is the head of the angels who plotted against the Lord and who impregnated the daughters of men.²⁰ These angels are compared to the stars.²¹ Azazel revealed the secrets of heaven and is banished to the desert.²² Abraham, as Enoch, receives the power to drive away Satan.²³ All these connections show that the author of the Apocalypse of Abraham drew upon the tradition of 1 Enoch.

Cultural importance

The Apocalypse of Abraham is one of the most important works written after the destruction of the nation in A.D. 70. The importance of the apocalypse may be compared to that of 2 Baruch or 4 Ezra, but our author analyzes the causes of the destruction of Jerusalem from a different perspective: The defeat was caused by the infidelity of Israel toward the covenant with God and the opportunistic politics of some leaders.

The pseudepigraphon is written with great talent and with a good understanding of biblical exegesis. The symbolical language is clear, logical, and easy to understand. The Apocalypse of Abraham provides us with an insight into the literary “workshop” of the Palestinian ¹⁹ For a full discussion see Rubinkiewicz, L'Apocalypse d'Abraham.

²⁰ ApAb 14:4; 1En 6:4 and ApAb 14:6; 1En 6:1f.; 10:4.

²¹ ApAb 14:6; 1En 86:1.

²² ApAb 14:4; 1En 8:1 and ApAb 14:5; 1En 10:4.

²³ ApAb 14:3; 1En 14:3.

writers of the first century A.D.; in consequence we may understand better the literary genres of that period.

The Apocalypse of Abraham was practically unknown for ten centuries. Neither the Semitic original nor the supposed Greek version has been found. Perhaps the latter never existed. Translated into Slavonic, our document circulated first in Bulgaria and afterward in Russia. Known only in the Orient, it had no influence on occidental literature.

The transmission of the Apocalypse of Abraham²⁴

The Slavonic Apocalypse of Abraham is to be ascribed to the extraordinarily productive burst of cultural activity during the reign of Simeon of Bulgaria (893–927), when a prodigious amount of material was translated from Greek into Old Church Slavonic as part of the effort of the Bulgarian emperor to bring his realm to the level of Byzantium itself.²⁵ The translation contains Greek words well known from Old Church Slavonic (adū: “haidēs, Hades”; aerū: “aēr, air”; stuxija: “stoicheion, element”), along with the conventional bizarre rendering of Gehenna as “fiery race” (by a confusion of gēenna with genēd or some other derivative of the Gk. root gen-) and numerous literalistic phrases that make better sense in Greek than in Slavonic. There can be no question that this text, like the whole Slavonic culture of Bulgaria of the time, was translated from Greek.²⁶ It is, then, fully realistic to assume that a Greek text of the Apocalypse of Abraham still existed in the Balkans as late as the ninth century, although no trace has yet been found in surviving Greek manuscripts.

The style is strongly Semitic but generally within the bounds of the biblical Greek that was presumably used by some hellenistic Jews for original works, e.g. Revelation. It is reasonable to hypothesize that the text was composed in Hebrew or Aramaic and rendered very literally into Greek. While no decisive arguments for a Semitic original have yet been advanced, the sheer number of Semitisms is best explained by this hypothesis. The quotation of the Divine Name El, El, El, El (retained only in copy S) and Eli (glossed “that is, my God”; replaced, except in copy S, by the spelling Ili, in line with the accepted form in Mt 27:46) is suggestive but inconclusive. Final -il for Hebrew ’ēl in the names Azazel, Iael, and Michael indicates Greek mediation. Perhaps the strange wording of 9:4 reflects the Hebrew of Genesis 15:1 (see n. b to ch. 9). It is not impossible that putī zemīnū (10:4) reflects drk ’rṣ in the sense of “manners, morality,” but it may be an inept way of expressing “the road to the (promised) land.” This meager evidence may suggest a Hebrew original.

The Slavonic text has come down to us in relatively full form in six manuscripts, the oldest from the early fourteenth century, the second from the fifteenth, and the others from the sixteenth century. The chief distinction among the copies is that four contain the apocalypse more or less integrated into the Explanatory Palaia, while two present the text as an independent (copy S) or nearly independent unit (copy D). The Palaia variants contain long interpolations of anti-Jewish polemical passages, but otherwise the text is so close to S D that only in chapter 7 is a new redaction indicated. The oldest copy, S, is unfortunately extremely faulty, with numerous omissions of syllables, sentences, and even paragraphs; with frequent distortions even of obvious words; and with unsuccessful efforts to update the archaic language, the forms and vocabulary of which were often not understood by the

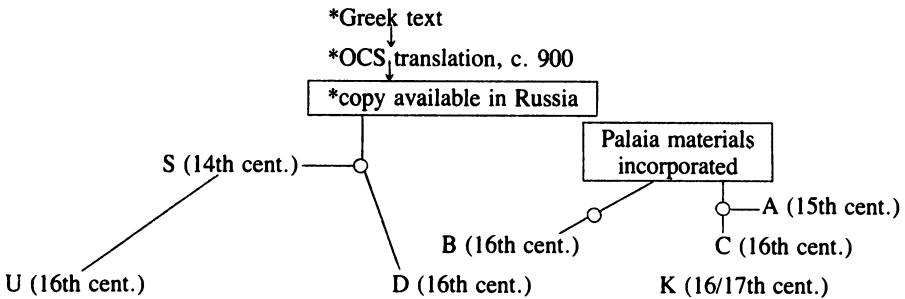

²⁴ [Due to the complicated history of transmission of ApAb, the following remarks by H. G. Lunt are intended to supplement the work of R. Rubinkiewicz. —J.H.C.]

²⁵ The translation of ApAb could be slightly earlier, from the last years of the initial period of Slavonic culture, viz., the Moravian mission of Cyril and Methodius (863–84), and its Bulgarian offshoot after 864; for it appears that the translation was made into an occidental version of OCS and then, like most texts that have come down to us through East Slavic mediation, adapted to the more eastern norm that was elaborated under Simeon. It is impossible, however, to exclude a dating up to about 1050, the end of the OCS period. In any case, the archaic language of ApAb makes Turdeanu’s ascription of the translation to the 13th cent. unacceptable (cf. E. Turdeanu, JSlJ 3 [1972] 156–64). The combined evidence of such works as IEn, the Palaia, and the Visls requires us to posit Slavonic versions of many apocryphal and pseudepigraphic works—along with a remarkable store of more orthodox texts—before the final Byzantine military triumph of 1018 and the rapid withering of Slavonic cultural activity in the Balkans. See H. G. Lunt, “On the Language of the Slavonic Apocalypse of Abraham,” Festschrift for Moshé Altbauer (Slavica Hierosolymitana: in press).

²⁶ A few translations from Lat., made in Moravia (or Pannonia or perhaps Dalmatia), may have been in use in Macedonia and Bulgaria, e.g. the GNic. The products of western Slavonic culture are somewhat better represented in Russia, where they were introduced between about 988 and 1100.

scribe.²⁷ Copy D stems ultimately from the same Vorlage as copy S, but unfortunately the scribe, clearly not at home in the style and special sphere of apocalyptic tradition and allusions, gave up well before the end and simply omitted most of the apocalyptic vision (from 26:5 on), reducing all of it to a few phrases. On the other hand, the Palaia texts A B C K continue beyond the end of S (in 31:3).²⁸ Tikhonravov²⁹ apparently chose to exclude a paragraph (ch. 32) that Porfir'ev,³⁰ probably rightly, assigns to this text rather than to the subsequent episode in the Palaia account of Abraham's life.

It is reasonable to assume that all six copies stem originally from a single old manuscript (very likely with some faults) representing the archaic language in South Slavic orthography. All copies reflect Novgorod phonetics at some state in their history; this shows up in 6:7 (učinen: "appointed, installed") of A B C K instead of S D's correct učenen: "valued." B is, overall, the most reliable text, occasionally agreeing with S D against A C K (e.g. in retaining in 17:2 pokljače, "knelt," a word not known in Russian, against the replacement ponik, "having bowed his head," of A C K). A and C often go together,³¹ but they have independent omissions and distortions. K, the youngest copy, shows many clarifying paraphrases or lexical substitutions that are illuminating even when they only show precisely in what way the scribe understood the old text. B has as marginal notes materials K incorporates into the text. The picture is approximately as follows:

Agreement of S D B provides the most reliable readings. On the whole, variations are minor and a plausible text can be established, but there are important passages where the textual corruptive cannot be repaired.

The German translation by Bonwetsch³² and the English one by Box, assisted by Landsman,³³ were based on rather indiscriminate selections of variants from the published texts of S A K. Neither translator was fully acquainted with the medieval language, and both made a number of conjectures and emendations based on modern Russian rather than Old Slavonic. Since these translations have been the basis of much of the work on the apocalypse, we have felt it necessary to point out some of their mistakes in our notes.

The aim of the present translation is to give readers the clearest possible picture of the complicated Slavonic text we believe to have been available in Russia in the thirteenth or fourteenth century. The history of that text back to about A.D. 900 and of its Greek model or models of earlier date remains a matter for speculation. It is quite possible that individual component parts have very diverse origins.

The translation follows the chapter divisions established by Bonwetsch and, with a few exceptions, the verses used by Rubinkiewicz in his Rome dissertation. The song in chapter 17 is treated as verse, but 21:3–7, which might be viewed as poetry, is set as prose.

²⁷ The scribe mistreats in the same way the other texts in the codex; however, some of these are far less exotic in theme and archaic in language. Thus no editorial purpose is to be discerned for the odd omissions and distortions in S, although of course they must be noted in cases where we must depend on the witness of other MSS.

²⁸ The scribe of S ends another text in mid-sentence.

²⁹ N. S. Tikhonravov, Pamjatniki otrečenoj russkoj literatury, vol. 1, p. 77.

³⁰ I. J. Porfir'ev, Sbornik Otd. r. jaz. i slov. 17 (1877) 130.

³¹ E.g. the angel's headdress in 11:3 is sudari, "handkerchief, sudarium," in A C, but kidari, "kidaris," in S D B K. See also the variants discussed in n. c to ch. 8.

³² N. Bonwetsch, Die Apokalypse Abrahams.

³³ In G. H. Box and J. I. Landsman, The Apocalypse of Abraham (London, 1918).

In view of the difficulty and obscurity of much of the text, the translation has adhered as closely as possible to the original, and the notes supply even more literal renderings when necessary. The notes also point out the most important cases where the translation is based on emendations of S, where various manuscripts have omissions, where significant variants occur, or where the text must be deemed corrupt. Words added in the text to obtain idiomatic English have been enclosed in parentheses.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 68f.

Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 163f.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 37f.

Bonwetsch, G. N. Die Apokalypse Abrahams. Das Testament der vierzig Märtyrer. Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und der Kirche, Bd. 1, Heft 1; Leipzig, 1897.

Box, G. H., and Landsman, J. I. The Apocalypse of Abraham. London, 1918.

Frey, J. B. "Abraham (Apocalypse d')," DBSup, vol. 1, cols. 28–38.

Ginzberg, L. "Abraham, Apocalypse of," JE, vol. 1, pp. 91f.

Rubinkiewicz, R. "Apokalipsa Abraham," Ruch Biblijny i Liturgiczny 27 (1974) 230–37.

———. L'Apocalypse d'Abraham en slave. Édition critique du texte, introduction, traduction et commentaire. Ph.D. diss.; Rome, 1977.

———. "Les Sémitismes dans l'Apocalypse d'Abraham," Folia Orientalia 21 (1980) 141–48.

———. "La Vision de l'histoire dans l'Apocalypse d'Abraham," ANRW II.19.1. Pp. 137–51.

Rubinstein, A. "Hebraisms in the Slavonic 'Apocalypse of Abraham,'" JJS 4 (1953) 108–15.

———. "Hebraisms in the 'Apocalypse of Abraham,'" JJS 5 (1954) 132–35.

———. "A Problematic Passage in the Apocalypse of Abraham," JJS 8 (1957) 45–50.

Turdeanu, E. "L'Apocalypse d'Abraham en slave," JSJ 3 (1972) 153–80.

THE APOCALYPSE OF ABRAHAM

TRANSLATED BY R. RUBINKIEWICZ

REVISED AND NOTES ADDED BY H. G. LUNT

The Book of the Apocalypse of Abraham, son of Terah, son of Nahor, son of Serug, son of Arphaxad, son of Shem, son of Noah, son of Lamech, son of Methuselah, son of Enoch, son of Jared.^a

Abraham's rejection of idolatry

1 1 On the day I was guarding^b the gods of my father Terah and the gods of my brother Nahor, while I was testing (to find out) which god is in truth the strongest, 2 I (then) Abraham, at the time when my lot came, when I was completing the services of my father Terah's sacrifice to his gods of wood, of stone, of gold, of 3 silver, of copper, and of iron, •having entered their temple for the service, I found a god named Marumath, carved from stone, fallen at the feet of the iron god 4 Nakhin.^c •And it came to pass, that when I saw it my heart was perplexed and I thought in my mind that I, Abraham, could not put it back in its place alone, 5 because it was heavy, (being made) of a big stone. •But I went and told my father, 6 and he came in with me. •And when^d we both lifted it to put it in its place, its head 7 fell off, even while I was holding it by its head. •And it came to pass, when my father saw that the head of his god Marumath had fallen, he said to me, "Abraham!" 8 And I said, "Here I am!" •And he said to me, "Bring me the axes and chisels^e 9 from the house." And I brought them to him from the house.^f •And he cut another Marumath from another stone, without a head, and he smashed the head that had fallen off Marumath and the rest of Marumath.

1 2 He made five other gods and he gave them to me and ordered me to sell them 2 outside on the town road. •I saddled my father's ass and loaded them on it and 3 went out on the highway to sell them. •And behold, merchants from Phandana^a of Syria were coming with camels, on their way to Egypt to buy kokonii^b from 4 the Nile. •I asked them a question and they answered me. And walking along I conversed with them. One of their camels screamed. The ass took fright and ran

1 a. The heading is only in S; the badly garbled names are normalized here. D contains instead a few introductory lines (following a completely different text, from the Chronicle of John Malalas), which may be rendered as follows: "Moses put together the following, which he wrote in the Book of the Small Genesis (= Jubilees), how Abraham came to know God. For previously he obeyed the gods of his father Terah the astrologist. And (while I was) guarding his gods and the gods of my brother Nahor, my father complained about me. And it came to pass on one of the days . . ."

In the Palaia MSS, A B C K, the preceding text briefly mentions Serug's idol-making and the beginning of idol worship by his son Nahor, continued (to the joy of the Devil) by Nahor's son Terah, father of Abraham. But Abraham perceives that the idols are of unfeeling wood and recalls Ps 115:5-7. Then ApAb begins.

In view of the abrupt opening in all three variants, it is possible that the original beginning of the story has been lost.

b. The verb is found in no other text. G. N. Bonwetsch (Die Apokalypse Abrahams) and G. H. Box and J. I. Landsman (The Apocalypse of Abraham) translated "planed," supposing the root *strug, "scrape." Variant readings indicate rather nastřzajušću here, with the root *sterg, "guard."

c. S by error naricena, "named"; A Nakhon.

d. S jegda, "when"; D K jedva = A B C odva, "scarcely."

e. Exact sense uncertain, but etymologically iz'malo is "tool for taking (something) out."

f. A B C K omit.

2 a. Probably Paddan-aram, cf. Gen 25:20 and LadJac 4, n. b.

b. Unknown word, perhaps reflecting Gk. kokkina, "scarlet clothing," or koukkinos, "dour palm; fiber of palm." Bonwetsch's "papyrus" is a groundless conjecture.

away and threw off the gods. Three of them were crushed and two remained (intact). •And it came to pass that when the Syrians saw that I had gods, they said to me, “Why did you not tell us that you had gods? We would have bought them before the ass heard the camel’s voice and you would have had no loss. •Give us at least the gods that remain and we will give you a suitable price.” •I considered it in my heart. And they paid both for the smashed gods and the gods which remained. •For I had been grieving in my heart how I would bring payment to my father. •I threw the three broken (gods) into the water of the river Gur, which was in this place. And they sank into the depths of the river Gur and were no more.

1 3 As I was still walking on the road, my heart was disturbed and my mind
2 distracted. •I said in my heart, “What is this inequality^b of activity which my 3 father is doing? •Is it not he rather who is god for his gods, because they come 4 into being from his sculpting, his planing, and his skill? •They ought to honor my 5 father because they are his work. What is this food^c of my father in his works?
6 Behold, Marumath fell and could not stand up in his sanctuary, nor could I myself
7 lift him until my father came and we raised him up. •And even so we were not 8 able (to do it) and his head fell off of him. And he put it on another stone of 9 another god, which he had made without a head. •And . . .^d the other five gods 10 which got smashed (in falling) from the ass, who could not save themselves and 11 injure the ass because it smashed them, nor did their shards come up out of the 12 river.” •And I said to my heart,^e “If it is so, how then can my father’s god
13 Marumath, which has the head of another stone and which is made from another 14 stone, save a man, or hear a man’s prayer, or give him any gift?”

WisSol 13:10-16

1 4 And thinking thus, I came to my father’s house. And I watered the ass and gave 2 him hay. And I took out the silver and placed it in the hand of my father Terah.
3 And when he saw it, he was glad, and he said, “You are blessed, Abraham, by 4 the god of my gods, since you have brought me the price for the gods, so that my 5 labor was not (in) vain.” •And answering I said to him, “Listen, father Terah!
6 The gods are blessed in you, because you are a god for them, because you made 7 them, for their blessing is their perdition and their power is vain. •They did not
8 help themselves; how then can they help you or bless me? •I was good for you 9 in this transaction,^a for through my good sense I brought you the silver for the 10 smashed (gods).” •And when he heard my speech he became furiously angry with 11 me, because I had spoken harsh words against his gods.

1 5 But having pondered my father’s anger, I went out. And afterward when I had 2 gone out, he called me, saying, “Abraham!” •And I said, “Here I am!” •And 3 he said, “Up, gather wood chips, for I was making gods from fir before you came,
4 and prepare with them food for my midday meal.” •And it came to pass, when 5 I was choosing the wooden chips, I found among them a small god which would 6 fit^a . . .^b in my left hand.^c •And on its forehead was written: god Barisat. •And 7 it came to pass when I put the chips on the fire in order to prepare the food for 8 my father, and going out to inquire about the food, I put Barisat near the enkindling

3 a. S omits through vs. 4.

b. Slav. likhoti, usually “excessiveness, superfluity,” but it also represents Gk. “anōmalia,” “unevenness.”

c. Though grammatical, (si) izēdi, “(this) food,” is probably corrupt; izēdi usually renders the Gk. katabrōma, i.e. “food for beasts.” K makes things worse by changing it to estī zlo prelisti, “is the evil of deceit,” but the pronoun si does not fit.

d. Corrupt; perhaps “he made” is omitted.

e. Sic. Perhaps a Hebraism, meaning simply “to myself.”

4 a. Slav. obrjašča, probably for Gk. heurēma, “what is found unexpectedly, piece of good luck; sum realized by a sale.”

5 a. S D; A B C K “(was).”

b. Slav. vū oslony, meaning unknown. Bonwetsch’s (Die Apokalypse Abrahams) “in die Streu” and Box and Landsman’s (The Apocalypse of Abraham) “among the brush-wood” are both thoroughly implausible.

c. Slav. vū šuici mi cannot mean “on my left,” as Bonwetsch and Box and Landsman render it.

7 fire,^d saying to him threateningly,^e •“Barisat, watch that the fire does not go out
8 before I come back! If the fire goes out, blow on it so it flares up.” •I went out 9 and I made my counsel.^f •When I returned, I found Barisat fallen on his back, his 10 feet enveloped by fire and burning fiercely. •And it came to pass when I saw it,
I laughed (and) said to myself, “Barisat, truly you know how to light a fire and 11 cook food!” •And it came to pass while saying this in my laughter,^g I saw (that) he burned up slowly from the fire and became ashes. •I carried the food to my 13 father to eat.^h •I gave him wine and milk, and he drank and he enjoyed myself
14 and he blessed Marumath his god. •And I said to him, “Father Terah, do not bless Marumath your god, do not praise him! Praise rather Barisat, your god, because, as though loving you, he threw himself into the fire in order to cook your food.” 15,16 And he said to me, “Then where is he now?” •And I said, “He has burned in 17 the fierceness of the fire and become dust.” •And he said, “Great is the power of Barisat! I will make another today, and tomorrow he will prepare my food.”

1 6 When I, Abraham, heard words like this from my father, I laughed in my mind,
2 and I groaned in the bitterness and anger of my soul. •I said, “How then is a 3 figment of a body made by him (Terah) an aid for my father? •Or can he have subordinated (his) body to his soul, his soul to a spirit, and the spirit to stupidity
4 and ignorance?” •And I said, “It is only proper to endure evil that I may throw 5 my mind to purity and I will expose my thoughts clearly to him.” •I answered and said, “Father Terah, whichever of these gods you extol, you err in your thought.
6 Behold, the gods of my brother Nahor standing in the holy sanctuary are more 7 venerable than yours. •For behold, Zouchaios,^a my brother Nahor’s god is more venerable than your god Marumath because he is made of gold, valued^b by man.
8 And if he grows old with time, he will be remodeled, whereas Marumath, if he 9 is changed or broken, will not be renewed, because he is stone. •What about^c Ioav, the god on the other god,^c who stands with Zouchaios?^d For he is also more venerable than the god Barisat; ^ehe is carved from wood and forged from silver.^e Because he too is a term of comparison,^f being valued by man according to external 10,11 experience. •But Barisat, your god, when he was still not carved,^g •rooted^h in the earth, being great and wondrous, with branchesⁱ and flowers; and praise^j . . . •But 12 you made him with an axe, and by your skill he was made a god. •And behold 14 he has already dried up and his fatness has perished. •He fell from the height to 15 the earth, he came from greatness to smallness, •and the appearance of his face
16,17 wasted away.^k •And he himself was burned up by the fire •and he became ashes
18 and is no more. •And you say, Let me make another and tomorrow he will make 19 my food for me. •But in perishing ^lhe left himself no strength^l for his (own) destruction.”

d. Lit. “the enkindling (or catching) of the fire.”

e. S prěšćeniměi, “with a threat”; A B C K prisěšćeniměi (D prě-), “with a visitation.”

f. Old sūvētū, “counsel, council, advice,” is hopelessly confused orthographically with svētū, “light,” in all medieval Slav. MSS. We may posit here Gk. epoiēsa boulēn (or phōs). Box and Landsman suggest this phrase reflects Heb. ’sh ’sh in the sense of “execute a plan.”

g. S D; A B C K “in my mind and laughing.”

h. S D; A B C K “and he ate it.”

6 a. Here zukhe, below in vs. 9 zukhej or zukhij (or possibly uzukhej); a Gk. form Zouchaios is thus probable.

b. S D ucēnen-, “valued”; A B C K, by phonetic substitutions common in Novgorod texts, učinen-, “ordered, ordained.”

c. S D corrupt; A B C K may reflect text altered

by scribal conjecture. Original possibly “Iao, the other god.”

d. S omits from here through vs. 15.

e. D omits.

f. A B C sūprimirenie, K sūpriměrenie; Gk. symmetria, symmetrēsis; D omits prefix, producing primirenie, “reconciliation.”

g. D A C K lit. “before being worked”; B “before the division” or “separation.”

h. Lit. “uprooted,” surely from an early scribal error.

i. C sū vēiem, B D sū vēem; A K by error sū vēnem, “with a bride-price” or “dowry.”

j. S omits. The whole sentence is obscure, possibly corrupt.

k. Either vū istjasknovenie D or vū istjasknovenii B (others distorted), lit. “became in wasting-away.”

l. S omits. The sentence is probably corrupt.

(S C)

(A B C K)

- 1 7^a This I say: Abraham, having thought this, came to his father and said, "Father Terah,
- 2 "Fire is more venerable in formation, for even the unsubdued (things) are subdued in it, and it mocks that which perishes^b easily by means of its burning.^c •^dBut neither is it venerable, for it is subject^e to the waters.^d
- 3 But rather the waters are more venerable than it (fire), because they overcome fire and sweeten the earth with fruits. •But I will not call them god either, for the waters subside under the earth ^gand are subject to it.^g •But I will not call it a goddess either, for it is dried by the sun (and) subordinated to man for his work.
- 4 More venerable among the gods, I say, is the sun, for with its rays it illuminates the whole universe and the various airs.^h
- 5 Nor will I place among the gods the one who obscures his course by means of the moon and the clouds.ⁱ
- 6 Nor again shall I call the moon or the stars gods, because they too at times during the night dim their light.
- 7 Listen, Terah my father, I shall seek before you the God who created all the gods supposed by us (to exist).^j
- 8 For who is it, or which one is it who made the heavens crimson and the sun golden, who has given light to the moon and the stars with it, who has dried the earth in the midst of the many waters, who set you yourself among the things^k and who has sought me out in the perplexity of my thoughts?
- 9 If [only]^l God will reveal himself by himself to us!"

Abraham, having thought this, came to his father and said, "Father Terah, fire is more venerable than your gods, the gold and silver ones, and the stone and wooden ones, because the fire burns your gods. And your gods being burned obey the fire, and the fire mocks them while it is consuming your gods.

But neither will I call it (fire) god, because it is subjugated to the waters.^f
The waters

The sun I call more venerable than the earth, for with its rays it illuminates the whole universe.

But I will not call it a god because when night comes it becomes murky with darkness.

But hear this, Terah my father, let me proclaim to you the God who created all things.

But this is the true God who has made the heavens crimson me out now in the perplexity of my thoughts.

7 a. Ch. 7 (plus 8:1) is the only part of ApAb that occurs in the early redaction of the Explanatory Palaia (represented by the 1406 Kolonna MS and its family), where it follows immediately after Abraham's paraphrase of Ps 115:5-7 that in the later type of Palaia (like A B C K) precedes the beginning of ApAb. The ch. was supplied with somewhat clearer opening lines than the obscure text witnessed by S D, and subsequent minor modifications clearly change the emphasis and, as far as can be judged from the faulty work of the scribes of S and D, simply remove difficult phrases. Later, when the first six chs. were inserted into the Palaia type that underlies A B C K, the modified text of ch. 7 was unchanged, even though in B C the third-person reference to Abraham at the beginning violates the first-person narration that precedes and follows.

b. Lit. plural "the things which perish."

c. Plural palenii, "burnings" (D by error pa-denii, "fallings").

d. S omits.

e. D by error pokrovenū, "covered," for pokorenū, "subjugated, subject."

f. The plural "waters" is probably a Hebraism.

g. A B C K omit.

h. Cf. aer in the sense of "atmosphere" or "firmament" in 15:5 below. D has an ungrammatical phrase which adds a form (instrumental plural?) of the word "man, human."

i. Both S and D are slightly corrupt here, but together they yield a plausible sentence.

j. Lit. "the, supposed by us, gods."

k. Slav. vŭ gl[ago]l[exū], "in the words," reflecting Gk. rēmata (or logoi) for Heb. dbrym.

l. Lit. merely "if," which would imply omission of a clause; the Palaia exegesis obviously considers this a complete sentence. Possibly Gk. eiper or eithe translated as simple ei.

1 8 And it came to pass as I was thinking things like these with regard to my father
 2 Terah in the court of my house,^a the voice of the Mighty One came down^b from 3 the heavens in a stream of fire, saying and calling, "Abraham, Abraham!" •And 4 I said, "Here I am." •And he said, "You are searching for the God of gods, the 5 Creator, in the understanding of your heart.^c I am he. •Go out from Terah, your 6 father, and go out of the house, that you too may not be slain in the sins of your 7 father's house." •And I went out. And it came to pass as I went out—I was not 8 yet outside the entrance of the court— that the sound of a great thunder came and 9 burned him and his house and everything in his house, down to the ground, forty 10 cubits.^d Gen 12:1

The Apocalypse

1.2 9 Then a voice came speaking to me twice: "Abraham, Abraham!" •And I said, Gen 15:1
 3 "Here I am." •And he said, "Behold, it is I. Fear not, for I am Before-the-World
 4 and Mighty, the God who created previously, before the light of the age.^a •I am
 5 the protector for you^b and I am your helper. •Go, get me a three-year-old heifer, Gen 15:9f.
 6 a three-year-old she-goat, a three-year-old ram, a turtledove, and a pigeon, and 7 make me a pure sacrifice. And in this sacrifice I will place the ages.^c •I will 8 announce to you guarded things^d and you will see great things which you have not 9 seen, because you desired to search for me, and I called you my beloved. •But Isa 41:8
 10 for forty days abstain from every kind of food cooked by fire,^e and from drinking Jas 2:23
 11 of wine and from anointing (yourself) with oil. •And then you shall set out for me Tab 2 12 the sacrifice which I have commanded you, in the place which I will show you 13 on a high mountain. •And there I will show you the things which were made by 14 the ages and by my word, and affirmed, created, and renewed. •And I will announce 15 to you in them what will come upon those who have done evil and just things in 16 the race of man."

1 10 And it came to pass when I heard the voice pronouncing such words to me
 2 that I looked this way and that. •And behold there was no breath of man. And my 3 spirit was amazed, and my soul fled from me. And I became like a stone, and fell 4 face down upon the earth, for there was no longer strength in me to stand up on 5 the earth. •And while I was still face down on the ground, I heard the voice^a 6 speaking, "Go, ^bIaol of the same name,^b through the mediation of my ineffable 7 name, consecrate this man for me and strengthen him against his trembling." •The 8 angel he sent to me in the likeness of a man came, and he took me by my right

8 a. At this point, the text of A B C K is interrupted by a long passage (identical to that in the older redaction, cf. MS of 1406) with heterogeneous material. There is some exegesis, then the story of how Abraham burned Terah's sanctuary and his brother Haran perished trying to save the gods (derived from the Chronicle of George the Monk), then more exegesis concerning the lineage from Abraham to the Virgin Mary. Then the first part of 8:1 is repeated and ApAb continues.

b. Lit. "fell."

c. S D vũ umě srdca svojego, probably Gk. "en dianoia kardias sou," "in the thought of your heart." Since umũ often means "mind," B K expanded to "in your mind and the thoughts of your heart," while A C simplified to "in your mind."

d. The syntax of the last two words is obscure.

9 a. D iže preže pervėje stvorixũ svęta věka; S omits preže; A B C preže s. pervėje sv. v. (K expands to "first created heaven and earth and then the first light of the light and world"). Not fully clear, for both preže and pervėje may mean "first of all" and "previously." Further, světũ may represent older sůvětũ, "counsel, council." Věkũ reflects Gk. aiōn, "age, eternity," Heb. wlm; both can also mean "world."

b. Probably Gen 15:1, 'nky mgn lk, read as mégēn 'alēka and translated absolutely literally.

c. A B C K add "for you." Věky, "ages," perhaps replaces archaic větũ, "word, pact, agreement, permission"; a similar conjecture was made by the scribe of C, who substitutes zavět, "covenant," producing the plausible "I will set down a covenant."

d. Slav. sũbljudenaja, possibly Gk. (syn)tēr-ēmena.

e. Lit. "which issues from fire."

10 a. A B C K add "of the Holy One."

b. Slav. ioailũ tize can be restored from the variants here, and at vss. 10:8, 13:1, and 17:7. The element -il- in the angels' names shows Gk. mediation, with -el for Heb. 'l. Here yhw'h'l is indicated.

5 hand and stood me on my feet. •And he said to me, “Stand up, Abraham, friend 6 of God who has loved you, let human trembling not enfold you! •For lo! I am sent to you to strengthen you and to bless you in the name of God, creator of heavenly 7.8 and earthly things, who has loved you. •Be bold and hasten to him. •I am Iael and I was called so by him who causes those with me on the seventh expanse, on the firmament,^c to shake, a power through the medium of his ineffable^d name in 9 me. •I am the one who has been charged according to his commandment, to restrain the threats of the living creatures^e of the cherubim^f against one another, and I teach those who carry the song^g through the medium of man’s night of the seventh hour.^h 10 I am appointed to hold the Leviathans, because through me is subjugated the 11 attack and menace of every reptile. •I am orderedⁱ to loosen Hades and to destroy 12 those who wondered^j at the dead. •I am the one who ordered your father’s house 13 to be burned with him, for he honored the dead. •I am sent to you now to bless you and the land which he whom you have called the Eternal One has prepared 14,15 for you. •For your sake I have indicated the way of the land.^l •Stand up, Abraham, go boldly, be very joyful and rejoice. And I (also rejoice) with you, for a venerable^m 16 honor has been prepared for you by the Eternal One. •Go, complete the sacrifice of the command.ⁿ Behold, I am assigned (to be) with you and with the generation 17 which is predestined (to be born) from you.^o •And with me Michael blesses you forever. Be bold, go!”

1 11 And I stood up and saw him who had taken my right hand and set me on my
2 feet. •The appearance of his body^a was like sapphire, and the aspect of his face 3 was like chrysolite, and the hair of his head like snow. •And a kidaris^b (was) on his head, its look that of a rainbow, and the clothing of his garments (was) purple; 4 and a golden staff^c (was) in his right hand. •And he said to me, “Abraham.” And I said, “Here is your servant!” And he said, “Let my appearance not frighten
5 you, nor my speech trouble your soul. Come with me! •And I will go with you 6 visible until the sacrifice, but after the sacrifice^d invisible forever. •Be bold and go!”

Dan 7:9
Rev 1:14

1,2 12 And we went, the two of us alone together, forty days and nights. •And I ate no bread and drank no water, because (my) food was to see the angel who was 3 with me, and his discourse with me was my drink. •We came to God’s mountain, 4 glorious Horeb. •And I said to the angel, “Singer of the Eternal One, behold I have no sacrifice with me, nor do I know a place for an altar on the mountain, so how 5,6 shall I make the sacrifice?” •And he said, “Look behind you.” •And I looked

c. Slav. na tverdi is possibly a gloss explaining “on the seventh expanse.”

d. Only S has the negation; the others thus read “speakable name.”

e. I.e. Heb. hywt.

f. Or simply “the cherubim,” an apposition explaining “living creatures.”

g. A B C K “his song.”

h. Slav. posredstvomi človečiskyja nošči sedmago časa is unclear, but Box and Landsman’s (The Apocalypse of Abraham) omission of “medium” and the inversion to produce “the song of the seventh hour of the night of man” requires justification. Perhaps “at the seventh hour” might be possible. Cf. TAdam.

i. S D povelěnu, passive “having been commanded”; A B C K povelěvyi, active “who gave the command.”

j. The sentence is clear, but offers no clue as to why these people merit destruction. The verb diviti sja unambiguously means “wonder, be astonished at” and often renders Gk. thaumazein. Perhaps the Gk. version of ApAb had a related verb or phrase denoting some wonder-working that involved corpses, a practice abominated by pious Jews.

k. S omits from i to k through homoeoteleuton.

l. Conjecturing that puti zemenū, “the way of the land,” reflects Heb. drk ’rs, we may translate “I have established manners (or morals) for you.”

m. A B D K; S “eternal.”

n. Probably means “the sacrifice which was commanded,” cf. 9:8.

o. Slav. prougotovlenym is tebe, lit. “prepared out of you.”

11 a. S B těla ego; D A C K těla nogu ego, perhaps “of his body (and) legs,” or perhaps sapphire refers only to the legs or feet and a separate description of the body has been lost.

b. Kidaris in LXX is “headdress” (e.g. Ex 39:28), “turban” (e.g. Zech 3:5), and “cap” (e.g. Ezek 45:18). A D by error sudari, “handkerchief” (Gk. sudarion), a word known to Slavs from Jn 20:7. but probably unclear in meaning.

c. Or “scepter.”

d. B adds in margin “I will be for you.”

behind me. And behold all the prescribed sacrifices were following us: the calf, ^{Gen 15:9f.}
 7 the she-goat, the ram, the turtledove, and the pigeon. •And the angel said to me, 8 “Abraham.” And I said, “Here I am.” •And he said to me, “Slaughter all these 9 and divide the animals exactly into halves. But do not cut the birds apart. •And give them to the men whom I will show you standing beside you, for they are the 10 altar on the mountain, to offer sacrifice to the Eternal One.” •The turtledove and the pigeon you will give to me, for I will ascend on the wings of the birds to show you (what)^b is in the heavens, on the earth and in the sea, in the abyss, and in the lower depths, in the garden of Eden and in its rivers, in the fullness of the universe.
 And you will see its circles in all.”^c

1 13 And I did everything according to the angel’s command. And I gave the angels who had come to us the divided parts of the animals. And the angel Iael^a took 2,3 the two birds. •And I waited for the evening gift.^b •And an unclean bird flew down ^{Gen 15:11}
 4 on the carcasses, and I drove it away. •And the unclean bird spoke to me and said, “What are you doing,^c Abraham, on the holy heights, where no one eats or drinks, nor is there upon them food for men. ^dBut these all will be consumed by fire and 5 they will^d burn you up. •Leave the man who is with you and flee! For if you
 6 ascend to the height, they will destroy you.”^e •And it came to pass when I saw the bird speaking I said this to the angel: “What is this, my lord?” And he said, 7 “This is disgrace,^f this is Azazel!” •^gAnd he said to him, “Shame^h on you, 8 Azazel!^h For Abraham’s portionⁱ is in heaven, and yours is on earth, •for you have selected here, (and) become enamored of the dwelling place of your blemish.^j Therefore the Eternal Ruler, the Mighty One, has given you a dwelling^k on earth.
 9 Through you the all-evil spirit (is) a liar, and through you (are) wrath and trials 10 on the generations of men who live impiously. •For the Eternal, Mighty One did not allow the bodies of the righteous to be in your hand, so through them the 11 righteous life is affirmed and the destruction of ungodliness. •Hear, counselor, be 12 shamed by me! You have no permission to tempt all the righteous.^l •Depart from 13 this man! •You cannot deceive him, because he is the enemy of you and of those 14 who follow you and who love what you wish.^m •For behold, the garment which in heaven was formerly yours has been set aside for him, and the corruption which was on him has gone over to you.”

1 14 And the angel said to me,^a “Abraham!” And I said, “Here I am, your 2 servant.” •And he said, “Know from this that the Eternal One whom you have 3 loved has chosen you. •Be bold and do through your authority whatever I order
 4 you against him who reviles^b justice. •Will I not be able to revile^b him who has ^{1En 9:6} scattered about the earth the secrets of heaven^c and who has taken counsel against 5 the Mighty One? •Say to him, ‘May you be the firebrand^d of the furnace of the 12 a. The men are the altar. The infinitival phrase prinostii žertvu specifies no subject and its connection with the men remains unclear. Perhaps it should be taken literally, “to carry the sacrifice to the Eternal One.”

b. The sentence is incomplete.

c. Obscure, perhaps corrupt. Possibly “in the fullness of the universe and its circles, and you will see . . . in all.” Seems to look forward to ch. 21.

13 a. S D A C omit, B in margin.

b. Or “reward”; Gk. dōron, dōrea.

c. Or “what business do you have”; Gk. ti soi.

d. S (D unclear); A B C K, with unspecified subject, “they all will consume (you) with fire and.”

e. Only in S.

f. Gk. atimia, “dishonor,” or asebeia, “impiety.”

g. S omits.

h. Gk. oneidos, “reproach.”

i. Texts all have spellings reflecting čstī, “honor,” but surely častī, “part, portion,” was original.

j. Or “filth.”

k. Texts faulty; emend acc. tja to dat. ti and read žitěli, “dwelling-place” rather than ungrammatical žiteli, “dweller.”

l. Text odd, more literally “to be a tempter as far as all just men are concerned.”

m. Or “want.”

14 a. S omits from here through vs. 4.

b. Or “mocks,” “mock.”

c. Cf. 1En 9:6.

d. Or “torch” or “burning coal”; Gk. dolos or anthrax.

6 earth! Go, Azazel, into the untrodden parts of the earth.^e •For your heritage is over those who are with you, with the stars and with the men born by the clouds,^f
 7 whose portion you are, indeed they exist through your being.^g •Enmity^h is for you 8 a pious act.ⁱ Therefore through your own destruction be gone^j from me!" •And 9 I said the words as the angel had taught me. •And he said, "Abraham." And I
 10 said, "Here I am, your servant!" •And the angel said to me, "Answer him not!"
 11.12 ^kAnd he spoke to me a second time. •And the angel said, "Now, whatever he 13 says to you, answer him not,^k lest his will run up to you.^l •For the Eternal, Mighty 14 One gave him the gravity^m and the will. Answer him not." •And I did what the angel had commanded me. And whatever he said to me about the descent,ⁿ I answered him not.^o

1 15 And it came to pass when the sun was setting, and behold a smoke like that Gen 15:17 of a furnace, and the angels who had the divided portions of the sacrifice ascended 2 from the top of the furnace of smoke. •And the angel took me with his right hand and set me on the right wing of the pigeon and he himself sat on the left wing of 3 the turtledove, (both of) which were as if^a neither slaughtered nor divided. •And 4 he carried me up to the edge of the fiery flames. •And we ascended^b as if (carried)
 5 by many winds to the heaven that is fixed on the expanses.^c •And I saw on the air^d 6 to whose height we had ascended a strong light which can^e not be described. •And behold, in this light a fiery Gehenna was enkindled,^f and a great crowd in the 7 likeness of men.^g •They all were changing in aspect and shape, running and changing form and prostrating themselves and crying aloud words I did not know.

1 16 And I said to the angel, "Why is it you now brought me here? For^a now I can 2 no longer see, because I am weakened and my spirit is departing from me." •And 3 he said to me, "Remain with me, do not fear. •He whom you will see coming directly toward us in a great sound^b of sanctification^c is the Eternal One who has 4 loved you. You will not look at him himself. •But let your spirit not weaken,^d for I am with you, strengthening you."

1 17 And while he was still speaking, behold the fire coming toward us round about, and a voice was in the fire like a voice of many waters, like a voice of the 2.3 sea in its uproar. •And the angel knelt down^a with me and worshiped. •And I wanted to fall face down on the earth. And the place of highness on which we

e. Vss. 6–14 are omitted by S, which has only "And the angel said to me, 'Answer him not, for God has given him freedom [lit. 'will'] over those who answer him.'"

f. I.e. men to whom the clouds gave birth.

g. Or "generation"; Gk. to einai or genēsis. The whole sentence is obscure.

h. Possibly Gk. echthra, "hatred."

i. Probably Gk. dikaiōma, "just action," or eusebeia, "piety." The sentence is unclear.

j. Lit. "may you have disappeared."

k. D omits.

l. Textual pritecheti, "runs up to," surely represents archaic pritiūčeti*, "touch, come in contact with": "lest his will affect you."

m. Probably Gk. baros for Heb. kbd, "honor, glory."

n. Slav. o sūnitii is clear (Landsman to the contrary). The word usually reflects Gk. katabasis, referring to Christ's descent into Hades, but it may also be synkatabasis or sybasis in any meaning possible.

o. S D negative; A C věščax, "I said, told," B K ověščax, "I answered."

15 a. S D omit "as if."

b. S omits from here to "ascended" in vs. 5.

c. Or "firmaments," see note to 19:3, below.

d. Slav. na aerē presents the air as a surface.

e. S; others "could."

f. Text somewhat corrupt. Archaic gen. ognīna rodu, "of fiery Gehenna," misread as nom. ognī narodu, "fire for the crowd (or nation)," and the grammar was adjusted, possibly with the loss of a word or two.

g. Lit. "of male shape, of male form."

16 a. S D jako; A B C K zane jako, "for it is as though."

b. Lit. "in many voice," perhaps rendering Gk. en polyphōnia.

c. Variants of S D A C establish svjatiby, "of sanctification." Gk. hagiasmos. B K understood this old word in its narrower meaning "threefold Sanctus" and modified the text to clarify it: "saying, 'holy, holy, holy'" (K adds "[is] the Lord").

d. A B C K add "because of the shouting."

17 a. S D B K; A C replace an unfamiliar verb with "bent his head."

4 were standing now stopped on high, now rolled down low.^b •And he said, “Only 5 worship, Abraham, and recite the song which I taught you.” •Since there was no ground to which I could fall prostrate, I only bowed down, and I recited the song 6.7 which he had taught me. •And he said, “Recite without ceasing.” •And I recited, and he himself recited the song:^c

8 Eternal One, Mighty One, Holy El,^d God autocrat 9 self-originate, incorruptible, immaculate, unbegotten, spotless, immortal, 10 self-perfected,^e self-devised,^f without mother, without father, ungenerated,^g 11 exalted, fiery,
12 just, lover of men, benevolent, compassionate, bountiful, jealous over me, patient one, most merciful.
13 Eli,^h eternal, mighty one, holy, Sabaoth, most glorious ⁱEl, El, El, El,ⁱ Iael, 14 you are he my soul has loved, my protector.
15 Eternal, fiery, shining,^j light-giving, thunder-voiced, lightning-visioned, many-eyed, 16 receiving the petitions of those who honor you^k and turning away from the petitions of those who restrain you by the restraint^l of their provocations, 17 redeemer of those who dwell in the midst of the wicked ones, of those who are dispersed among the just of the world,
in the corruptible age.^m 18 Showing forthⁿ the age of the just, you make the light shine^o before the morning^p light upon your creation ^qfrom your face^r to spend the day^s on the earth,^q 19 and in your heavenly dwelling place (there is) an inexhaustible light of an invincible^t dawning from the light^u of your face.
20 Accept my prayer ^vand delight in it,^v and (accept) also the sacrifice which you yourself made to yourself through me as I searched for you.
21 Receive me favorably, teach me, show me, and make known to your servant
what you have promised me.

b. That is, the surface is undulating up and down.

c. A B C K add “with me.” B has a marginal note, incorporated into the text of K: “The first song of Abraham which the holy angel Iael taught him when he was traveling with him about the air, crying out like this:”

d. Only S retains “El.”

e. Gk. autoteleios or autotelēs.

f. Assuming original samosūvētine, Gk. auto-boulētos, rather than the derivationally implausible samosvētine. An inept calque of the Gk. autophōs or autophōtos, “absolute light,” is not impossible, however.

g. Slav. bezrodine is probably Gk. agennētos or agenealōgētos (cf. Heb 7:3), but it could also mean “without kin.”

h. A B C K all distort this form and add a gloss: “that is, my God.”

i. S omits.

j. Possibly a compound, “shining with fire,” Gk. pyrophengēs, pyrophlogos.

k. S omits from here to end of first clause in vs. 22.

l. Or “hold you by the compassing.”

m. The translation of vs. 21f. can only be approximate, for the grammatical relations are ambiguous.

n. D projavljaja; A B C K ponovljaja, an innovated form for expected old ponavljaja, “renewing, restoring.”

o. Or “you, the light, shine.”

p. S utrinimū; A B C D K vnutrinimū, “inner.”

q. S omits.

r. Or possibly “by your face, through the agency of your countenance.”

s. Or “continue through the day.”

t. D nepobédima (S nepovédimo, surely with v for b, and with incorrect ending); A B C K neispovédima, a late form (for neispovédoma), “indescribable, unexpressible.”

u. A C; S D B K plural “lights.”

v. S omits.

1 18 And as I was still reciting the song, the mouth^a of the fire which was on the 2 firmament^b was rising up on high. •And I heard a voice like the roaring of the sea, 3 and it did not cease from the plenitude of the fire. •And as the fire rose up, soaring to the highest point, I saw under the fire a throne of fire ^cand the many-eyed ones round about, reciting the song, under the throne four fiery living creatures, singing. Ezek 1:6-12,23 4.5 And the appearance of each of them was the same, each having four faces. •And this (was) the aspect of their faces: of a lion, of a man,^d of an ox,^e and of an eagle.
 Each one had four heads ^fon its body so that the four living creatures had sixteen 6 faces. •And each one had^f six wings: two on the shoulders, two halfway down, and 7 two at the loins. •With the wings which were on their shoulders they covered their faces, with the wings at their loins they clothed their feet, and they would stretch 8 the two middle wings out and fly, erect.^g •And when they finished singing, they 9 would look at one another and threaten one another. •And it came to pass when the angel who was with me saw that they were threatening each other, he left me 10 and went running to them. •And he turned the face of each living creature from the face which was opposite it so that they could not see each other's faces 11 threatening each other. •And he taught them the song of peace which the Eternal 12 One has in himself.^h •And while I was still standing and watching, I saw behindⁱ the living creatures a chariot with fiery wheels. Each wheel was full of eyes round 13 about. •And above the wheels was the throne which I had seen. And it was covered Ezek 1:15-25;
10:6-12
 with fire and the fire encircled it round about, and an indescribable light^j surrounded 14 the fiery crowd.^k •And I heard the voice of their sanctification^l like the voice of Ezek 1:26-28 a single man.

1 19 And a voice came to me out of the midst of the fire, saying, "Abraham, 2.3 Abraham!" •And I said, "Here I am!" •And he said, "Look at the expanses^a which are under the firmament to which you have now been directed and see that on no single expanse is there any other but the one whom you have searched for 4 or who has loved you." •And while he was still speaking, behold, the expanses under me, the heavens, opened and I saw on the seventh firmament upon which I stood a fire spread out^b and a light^c and dew^d and a multitude of angels and a host 5 of the invisible glory, ^eand up above^e the living creatures I had seen; I saw no one else there. •And I looked from on high, where I was standing, downward to the 6 sixth firmament. •And I saw there a multitude of spiritual angels, incorporeal, carrying out the orders of the fiery angels who were on the eighth^f firmament, as 18 a. Perhaps for Gk. cheilos in the sense of "edge, brink," i.e. the fire is envisioned as a brimming lake or river.

b. Or "expanse," see n. to 19:3, below.

c. Ambiguous as to whether ot ognja, "from fire," describes the throne or the "many-eyed ones" (Gk. polyommatoi), or both; or perhaps the creatures were standing at a distance, "away from the fire."

d. S člvcí for člověči, "of a human being"; D A B C K mužesk, "of a male," placed after "of an ox," perhaps under the influence of Rev 4:7.

e. As in Heb. Ezek 1:10; LXX has "calf," as does Rev 4:7.

f. S omits because of homoeoteleuton.

g. The last clause is faulty and obscure. The final word is prosti, "simple," but may mean "upright."

h. Obscure; unclear whether "self" refers to the Eternal One or the angel, and whether "which" refers to "song" or "peace."

i. Or "following after."

j. If světú; possibly, however, sūvētū, "council."

k. Or "nation." Also possible: "an indescribable light (or council) of the fiery crowd (or nation) surrounded (it)." The text is probably corrupt.

l. Or "acclamation," Gk. hagiasmos, cf. 16:3 above.

19 a. Three Slav. roots underlie synonyms for "heaven" that probably stand for three Gk. words. Tvirdi (19:6, well-known elsewhere) and tvirdstvo (19:4) with a variant tvirdstvie (19:8), both known only from ApAb, surely translate stereōma, "firmament." Projaženie, "a pulling out tightly," and prostirnie, "a spreading out broadly," doubtless reflect forms based on Gk. ten. Here prostirnie is rendered "firmament" (18:1; 19:3, 6; 21:1, 2) and protjaženie "expanse" (19:3, 4; 21:1); but the plural, prostirija, at 15:4 is rendered "expanses."

b. Or "a widespread fire."

c. B adds "great" in the margin; K places it in the text. Cf. n. c to 17:7.

d. Slav. rosu; D ručku, "vessel, container."

e. S A C K ot svyšē, D i tū svyšē, B i svyšē; perhaps something has been omitted.

f. Surely for "sixth"; the Glagolitic letter-symbol for 8 corresponds to the Cyrillic letter whose numerical value is 6. S has other indications of a fore-text written in Glagolitic.

7 I was standing on its elevation (?)^g. •And lo, neither on this firmament was there
8 in any shape any other host, but only the spiritual angels. •And the host I saw on 9 the seventh firmament commanded the sixth firmament and it removed itself.^h •I saw there, on the fifth (firmament), hostsⁱ of stars, and the orders they were commanded to carry out, and the elements^j of earth obeying them.

1.2 20 And the Eternal, Mighty One said to me, "Abraham, Abraham!" •And I said,
3 "Here I am!" •And he said, "Look from on high^a at the stars which are beneath Gen 15:5
4 you and count them for me and tell me their number!" •And I said, "When can
5 I? For I am a man."^b •And he said to me, "As the number of the stars and their Gen 18:27
6 power^c so shall I place for^d your seed the nations and men, set apart for me in my 7 before you and let your fury not rage against your chosen one. •Behold, before Gen 18:30 you led me up, Azazel^e insulted me. How then, since he is now not before you, did you establish^f yourself with them?"^h

1 21 And he said to me, "Look now beneath your feet at the firmament and understand the creation that was depicted of old^a on this expanse, (and) the creatures 2 which are in it^b and the age^c prepared after it."^d •And I looked beneath the firmament at my feet and I saw the likeness of heaven^e and the things that were therein.

3 And (I saw) there the earth and its fruit, and its moving things and its things that had souls, and its host^f of men and the impiety of their souls and their justification, ^gand their pursuit^h of their worksⁱ and the abyss and its torments,ⁱ 4 and its lower depths and (the) perdition in it. •And I saw there the sea and its islands, and its cattle and its fish, and Leviathan and his realm and his bed and his lairs, and the world^j which lay upon him, and his motions and the destruction 5 he caused the world.^k •I saw there the rivers and their upper (reaches) and their circles.

6 And I saw there the garden^l of Eden and its fruits, and the source and the river flowing from it, and its trees and their flowering, making fruits, and I saw men doing justice^m in it, their food and their rest.

7 And I saw there a great crowd of men and women and children, half of them

g. Unclear; the word appears to mean lit. "suspensions."

h. Or "to remove itself."

i. "Hosts" here and "host" in vss. 4, 7, 8 above could be translated "powers" or "power."

j. Gk. stoicheia.

20 a. Explicitly contrasts with the "look up" of Gen 15:5.

b. B K add "earth and ashes" from LXX Gen 18:27. A C harmonize further by omitting "man."

c. Or "host."

d. Or "to," or perhaps "under."

e. Possibly "the lot [Gk. klēros] belonging to me and Azazel." S is slightly corrupt, and the others may represent some sort of modification of the original text.

f. Possibly "before Azazel led me up, he."

g. Or "support" or "secure."

h. S D sū nimī; (A?) B C K sū nimū "with him." The whole sentence is obscure.

21 a. Lit. "formerly shadowed," with a unique verb (D stēnovanuju, S corrupt, A B C K stēnevanuju, cf. stēnī, "shadow") which may be a clumsy calque of Gk. skiagraphēin, "sketch, outline, depict; prefigure, foreshadow."

b. Viz. "creation."

c. S (D "unto the age, forever"); A B C K "ages."

d. Or "according to it (creation)." The sentence is obscure, not least because vari is used apparently both for "creation" and "creature."

e. D A B C K podobie nebesa; S corrupt, podū 6 nbsē, roughly "under 6th heaven" (less likely "under 6 heavens"), but ungrammatical. The original text was surely acc. podūnebesie, Gk. tēn hyp' ouranon, i.e. "I saw (the terrestrial world) beneath the sky."

f. Or "power."

g. S omits because of homoeoteleuton.

h. Gk. epitēdeumata.

i. Perhaps a gloss; in S it stands after "lower depths and perdition."

j. Or "inhabited world," oikoumenē.

k. Lit. "destructions to the world because of him."

l. Slav. sadū, usually "plant," Gk. phyton; "tree," Gk. dendron; here probably "newly planted area." At 12:10 Eden is vertepū, kēpos, at 23:4 ovošćnikū, "orchard."

m. Slav. pravdu dějuščixū is not found elsewhere. Pravda is "righteousness, justice, rule, truth"; dikaiošynē, dikaion, dikaiōma, alētheia.

on the right side of the portrayal, and half of them on the left side of the portrayal.ⁿ

1.2 22 And I said, “Eternal, Mighty One! What is this picture of creation?” •And he said to me, “This is my will with regard to what is^a in the light^b and it was^c good before my face. And then, afterward, I gave them^d a command by my word and they came into existence. Whatever I had decreed was to exist had already been outlined^e in this^f and all the previously created (things) you have seen stood^g before me.” •And I said, “O sovereign, mighty and eternal! Why are the people in this picture on this side and on that?” •And he said to me, “These who are on the left side are a multitude of tribes who existed previously . . . and after you^h some (who have been) prepared for judgment and order,ⁱ others for revenge and perdition at the end of the age. •Those on the right side of the picture are the people set apart for me of the people with Azazel; these are the ones I have prepared to be born of you and to be called my people.

Ps 33:9

23 “Look^a again at the picture: Who is the one who seduced Eve, and what is the fruit of the tree?^b •And you will know what will be ^cand how much will be for your seed^c in the last days. •And what you cannot understand,^d I will make known to you because you have been pleasing before my face and I will tell you what^e I have kept in my heart.” •And I looked at the picture, and my eyes ran to the side of the garden of Eden. •And I saw there a man very great in height and terrible in breadth, incomparable in aspect, entwined with a woman who was also equal to the man in aspect and size. •And they were standing under a tree^f of Eden, and the fruit of the tree was like the appearance of a bunch of grapes of the vine.^g •And behind the tree was standing (something) like a dragon in form, but having hands and feet like a man’s, on his back six wings on the right and six on the left. •And he was holding the grapes of the tree^f and feeding^h them to the two I saw entwined with each other. •And I said, “Who are these two entwined with each other, or who is this between them, and what is the fruit which they are eating, Mighty One, Eternal?” •And he said, “This is the worldⁱ of men,^j this is Adam and this is their thought^k on earth, this is Eve. •And he who is between them is the impiety of their behavior^l ^muntoⁿ perdition, Azazel himself.”^m •And I said, “Eternal,

Gen 3

n. Slav. obrazstvo, attested only here, must be more than obrazū, “image,” Gk. eikōn, typos, implying a suffixed Gk. form like eikonisma or eikonismos.

22 a. Slav. kū sušĉemu, lit. “toward that which is (or exists),” possible Gk. pros (or eis, epi) to onta.

b. If svĉtū; possibly sūvĉtū, “council, counsel.”

c. Lit. “became, came to be.”

d. The text of the previous sentence is probably corrupt; in any case it provides no clear referent for this plural pronoun.

e. S naĉerta sja; others inappropriately naĉertaša, “they outlined.”

f. S B K imply original vū seml, although the reference is not clear; distorted in D A C to vsĉmū, “to all.”

g. Or “came to stand, took position.”

h. Or “because of, through you.” The following phrases are in the acc., so loss of a preceding verb must be assumed.

i. Slav. ustrojĉenie, “ordering, being put in order; restoration.”

23 a. D A B C K posmotri; S po smotrenii, “after a look.”

b. Slav. dreva; A C ĉrĉva, “of the womb.”

c. S differs: “for your name among people.”

d. S “days of the age, or how one cannot understand.”

e. Or “the things that.”

f. Slav. sadū, not specifically a tree, cf. n. 1 to ch. 21.

g. Slav. viniĉna, probably “of a wild vine”; A K finiĉna, “of the palm [Gk. phoenix],” is surely secondary within Slav.

h. B C zalaĝaše, a verb with the specialized sense “put morsels of food into the mouth of someone” (a meaning preserved in Serbo-Croatian), other MSS distorted because this meaning was unknown. Bonwetsch (Die Apokalypse Abrahams) and Box and Landsman (The Apocalypse of Abraham) ignored the grammar and completely mistranslated the sentence. Here the serpent explicitly is feeding the fruit both to Adam and to Eve.

i. Slav. svĉtū only rarely means “world,” Gk. kosmos, ordinarily rendering “light,” phōs, phenogōs, photismos. Or this may be sūvĉtū, “council, counsel.”

j. Or “of man, human.”

k. Slav. pomyšlenie is “thought” in any possible sense, including “intention, plan” or negative “plot, evil design,” and “desire.”

l. Slav. naĉinanija, lit. “deed, act, doing.”

m. D omits.

n. S A K vū; B C omit, making “perdition” an apposition with “impiety” and “Azazel.”

Mighty One, why then did you adjudge him such dominion that through his works 13 he could ruin humankind on earth?" •And he said to me, "Hear, Abraham! Those who desire evil, and °all whom I have hated as they commit^o them^p—over them 14 did I give him dominion, and he was to be beloved of them." •And I answered and said, "Eternal, Mighty One! Why did it please you to bring it about that evil should be desired in the heart of man, because you are angered^q at what was chosen by you^r . . . him who does useless things^s in your light (?)."^t

1 24 And he said to me thus, "Close^a to the nations . . . for your sake and for the sake of those set apart after you, the people of your tribe, as you will see in the 2 picture, what is burdened on^b them. •And I will explain to you what will be, and 3 everything that will be in the last days. •Look now at everything in the picture."
 4 And I looked and saw there ^cthe creatures that had come into being^c before me.
 5 And I saw, as it were,^d Adam, and Eve who was with him, and with them the crafty adversary and Cain, who had been led by the adversary to break the law, and (I saw) the murdered Abel (and) the perdition brought on him and given 6 through the lawless one.^e •And I saw there fornication^f and those who desired it, and its defilement and their zeal; and the fire of their corruption in the lower depths
 7 of the earth. •And I saw there theft and those who hasten after it, and the system
 8 of their ^gretribution, the judgment of the great court.^g •I saw there naked men, forehead to forehead, and their shame and the harm (they wrought) against their 9 friends and their retribution. •And I saw there desire,^h and in her hand (was) the head of every kind of lawlessness; ⁱand her tormentⁱ and her dispersal^k destined^l to destruction.

1 25 I saw there the likeness of the idol of jealousy, like a carpenter's figure such as my father used to make, and its body was of glittering copper,^a and before it
 2 a man, and he was worshiping it. •And (there was) an altar opposite it and boys
 3 being slaughtered on it in the face of the idol. •And I said to him, "What is this idol, or what is the altar, or who are those being sacrificed, or who is the sacrificer, or what is the handsome temple which I see, the art and beauty^b of your glory that 4 lies beneath your throne?" •And he said, "Hear, Abraham! This temple which

o. Reading vŭtvorjašćixŭ as acc. plural, whereby the sense of the prefix is unclear. Or perhaps "everything I hated in those who commit," reading vŭ tvorjašćixŭ as a prepositional phrase.

p. The plural pronoun has no obvious referent; it might be an error and somehow refer to "evil," or there may be an omission here.

q. The rest of the sentence is obscure, probably corrupt.

r. S D na izvolenoe tebe; A B C K na izvolenie tebe is meaningless.

s. Slav. děljajuščemu nepoleznoje is clear, but the only possible dat. that could agree is tebe, which would mean "by you who are doing useless things." Could Abraham be upbraiding God? If not, there must be a lacuna here.

t. S has nŭ světsŭvojemŭ, which could be emended to a plausible světsŭstvŭjemŭ and mean "but through your radiance"; this phrase precedes děljajuščemu. The D A B C K vŭ světe vŭvojemŭ, "in your light [or world; or counsel, council]," could well be secondary, an attempt to repair an incomprehensible passage.

24 a. The text is corrupt and at some point there must be omissions. Perhaps "thus" goes with "close." The notion of anger introduced by Bonwetsch and copied by Box and Landsman is totally absent from the passage.

b. Slav. utjažičenaja, possibly "things which have been made grievous against"; grammatical connection with the preceding text is not clear.

c. Or "what had come into being in creation."

d. Slav. jako, "as," Gk. hōs.

e. Slav. bezakontnikomŭ, presumably an echo of the description of Cain just before, vragomŭ bezakontnovavŭšago Kaina.

f. I.e. Gk. porneia.

g. S omits.

h. Slav. želanie, a neuter, but the following possessives are feminine, surely reflecting mechanical translation of pronouns referring to Gk. epithymia.

i. S omits to end of the sentence.

j. D mučenie, Gk. martyrion, basanos, timōria; A B C K molčanie, "silence." Gk. hēsychia, is surely secondary, a scribal slip in the fore-text common to the Palaea MSS.

k. Slav. rastočenie, usually renders the Gk. diaskorpismos, but also possibly "alienation," ekpoiēsis, or "abortion."

l. Slav. predajemo, lit. "being given over."

25 a. Or "bronze," Gk. chalkos.

b. None of the MSS is quite grammatical. Perhaps emend to dobrolēpinu xyrostiju i krasotoju, "handsome [Gk. euprepēs] with the art and beauty."

you have seen, the altar and the works of art, this is my idea of the priesthood of the name of my glory, where every petition of man^c will enter and dwell; the ascent of kings^d and prophets and whatever sacrifice I decree to be made for me among my coming people, even of your tribe. • And the body^e you saw is my anger, because the people who will come to me out of you will make me angry. 6 And the man you saw slaughtering is he who angers me, and the sacrifice is a killing of those who are for me a testimony of the judgment of the completion at the beginning of creation.”

1 26 And I said, “Eternal, Mighty One! Why did you establish it to be so and to 2 call on the testimonies of this one?” • And he said to me, “Hear, Abraham, and 3 understand what I will explain to you, and answer whatever I ask you. • Why did 4 your father Terah not obey your voice and abandon the demonic worship of idols 5 until he perished, and all his house with him?” • And I said, “Eternal, Mighty 6 One, surely because it did not please him to obey me, nor did I follow his works.” 7 And he said to me, “Hear, Abraham. As the counsel^a of your father is in him, as 8 your counsel is in you, so also the counsel of my will is ready.^b • In days^c to come 9 you will not know them in advance, nor the future (men) you will see with your 10 own eyes that^d they are of your seed. • Look at the picture!”

1 27 And I looked and I saw, and behold the picture swayed. And from its left side 2 a crowd of heathens^a ran out and they captured the men, women, and children who 3 were on its right side. • ^bAnd some they slaughtered^b and others they kept with 4 them. • Behold, I saw (them) running to them^c by way of four ascents^d and they 5 burned the Temple with fire, and they plundered the holy things that were in it. 6 And I said, “Eternal One, the people you received from me are being robbed by 7 the hordes of the heathen. • They are killing some and holding others as aliens, and 8 they burned the Temple with fire and they are stealing ^eand destroying^e the beautiful 9 things which are in it. • Eternal, Mighty One! If this is so, why now^f have you 10 afflicted my heart and why will it be so?” • And he said to me, “Listen, Abraham, 11 all that you have seen will happen on account of your seed who will (continually) 12 provoke me because of the body^g which you saw and the murder in what was 13 depicted in the Temple of jealousy, and everything you saw ^hwill be so.”^h • And 14 I said, “Eternal, Mighty One! Let the evil works (done) in iniquity now pass by; 15 but make commandments in themⁱ more than his^j just works. • For you can do 16 this.” • And he said to me, “Again the time of justice will come upon them, at 17 first through the holiness^k of kings. • And I will judge with justice^l those whom I 18 created earlier,^m to rule from them in them. • And from these same ones will come 19 men who will have regard forⁿ them, as^o I announced to you and you saw.”

c. Specifically “male.”

d. S D; A B K “kingdoms”; C by error “temple.”

e. Or “statue.”

26 a. S D A C have světū, “light,” but B specifies súvət and K the newer spelling súvėtū, “counsel, council.” B K thus believed that “light” was inappropriate here.

b. Or “prepared.”

c. From this point D departs radically from other MSS, reducing the rest of the work to a dozen lines made up of recognizable phrases from later chs., but utterly incoherent and therefore useless for our purposes.

d. Or “for, since.” The sentence is not clear.

27 a. Or “a heathen people.”

b. S omits because of homoeoteleuton.

c. Slav. pritekšaja, “(them) running,” probably is the heathen, while “to them” denotes the victims; but the passage is not clear.

d. S súxody, “descents, going down”; A B C

K vúxody, “entrances, goings in”; philologically also vúsxody, “ascents, goings up,” or isxody, “exits, goings out,” are justifiable, cf. also 28:4, 5 below and LadJac 5, n. d. The acc. numeral četyri here makes no sense (“four descents running”); instrumental četyrimi is to be posited.

e. S omits.

f. A B C K “from now.”

g. Or “statue.”

h. A B C K omit.

i. S zapovědi stvori vū nixū, probably corrupt. Others are not much better, zapovědi stvorivúšixū, “those who have made commandments”; but neither acc. nor gen. fits the context.

j. Reference unclear. This whole sentence is garbled and probably has lost words or phrases.

k. Archaic prėpodobie, Gk. hosiotēs, simplified in A B C K to podobie, “semblance.”

l. Slav. vū pravėdē, lit. “in justice.”

m. Or “at first.”

n. Slav. potúščati, probably Gk. spoudazein.

o. Or “inasmuch as.”

1 28 And I answered and said, "Mighty, Eternal One, you who are sanctified by your power, be merciful in my petition, since for this you informed me ^aand showed me. •Since you have brought me up on to your height, therefore inform me, ^a your beloved, about whatever I ask: Will what I saw be their lot^b for long?"

3.4 And he showed me a multitude of his people. •And he said to me, "For this reason (it is) through the four ascents^c you saw^d (that) my anger will be because

5 of them,^e and in them will be retribution^f for their works. •And in the fourth ascent^g is one hundred years. And one hour of the age will also be one hundred years^h in evil among the heathenⁱ and an hour in their mercy, even with reproaches as among the heathen."^j

1 29 And I said, "Eternal, Mighty^a One! How long a time is an hour of the age?"

2 And he said, "I decreed to keep twelve periods of the impious age among the heathens and ^bamong your seed, and what you have seen will be^b until the end of time. •Count (it) up, and you will understand. •Look down at the picture." •And I looked^c and saw a man going out from the left, the heathen side. From the side of the heathen went out men and women and children, a great crowd, and they

5 worshiped him. •And while I was still looking, those on the right side came out, 6 and some insulted this man, and some struck him and others worshiped him. •And I saw that as they worshiped him Azazel ran and worshiped and, kissing his face,

7 he turned and stood behind him. •And I said, "Eternal, Mighty One! Who is this 8 man insulted and beaten by the heathen, with Azazel worshiped?"^d •And he answered and said, "Hear, Abraham, the man whom you saw insulted and beaten and again worshiped is the liberation^e from the heathen for the people who will

9 be (born) from you. •In the last days, in this twelfth hour of impiety, in the twelfth period of the age of my fulfillment,^f I will set up this man from your tribe, the one

10 whom you have seen from my people. •All will imitate him, . . . (you) consider^g 11 him as one called by me . . . (they) are changed^h in their counsels.ⁱ •And those you saw coming out from the left side of the picture and worshiping him, this

12 (means that) many of the heathen will trust in him. •And those of your seed you saw on the right side, some insulting him, some beating him, and others worshiping

13 him, many of them shall be offended^j because of him. •It is he who will test those of your seed who have worshiped him in the fulfillment of the twelfth hour, in the 28 a. S omits because of homoeoteleuton.

b. Lit. "will what I saw be to them."

c. S B C K sxody, "descents"; A isxody, "exists"; cf. n. d to ch. 27.

d. S A C K "which you saw"; B "as you saw."

e. Obscure. Lit. "will be to me from them anger (or angering)."

f. S B C K vūzdanie; A vzderžanie, "restraint."

g. S sxodū, "descent"; A B C K vxod, "entrance"; cf. n. c.

h. C omits to end of vs.; but a mark in the MS leads one to expect a marginal note that is not visible in the microfilm.

i. S omits rest of sentence because of homoeoteleuton.

j. Sense of last clause is obscure.

29 a. S omits.

b. Ambiguous, could be "what you have seen will be among your seed even."

c. S omits.

d. This sentence is obscure and may well be corrupt; the translation is strictly literal and retains the original word order. Two opposite interpretations are possible. In one, the phrase "with Azazel" is construed with "by the heathen" to mean that the heathen are being aided by Azazel in insulting, beating, and, presumably, also worshiping the man. In the other, "with Azazel" is construed with the following participle to mean that both Azazel and the man are being worshiped.

e. Slav. oslaba, "liberation, security, relaxation," Gk. adeia, anesis.

f. Slav. sūkončanie, "ending, completion, consummation," Gk. symplērōsis, plērōsis, synteleia.

g. Slav. pritiūči, apparently imperative of pritiūknuti, "push, touch, prove," which furnishes the stem for the noun pritiūča, "comparison, proverb," and related words. The connection of this clause with the context is obscure.

h. This clause is corrupt, and omissions must be assumed. The nom. plural present participle preminujušče sja has no subject; and it requires emendation. Assuming the Novgorod substitution of i for ě (well attested in all MSS elsewhere), prēmēnujušče sja means "being exchanged for, turning into." Alternatively, the reflexive particle sja may be suppressed, yielding the sense "passing by, going past."

i. The reflexive possessive may refer to the lost subject of the participle, or to some other possessor not preserved in the context. Instead of "counsels," the meaning may be "lights" or possibly "words."

j. Or "led into error," Gk. skandalizontai.

14 curtailment of the age of impiety. • Before the age of justice starts to grow,^k my 15 judgment will come upon the heathen who have acted wickedly through the people of your seed^l who have been set apart for me. • In those days I will bring upon all earthly creation ten plagues through evil and disease and the groaning of the 16 bitterness of their souls. • Such will I bring upon the generations of those who are on it,^m out of anger and corruption of their creationⁿ with which they provoke me.
 17 And then from your seed will be left the righteous men in their number, protected by me, who strive^o in^p the glory of my name toward the place prepared beforehand 18 for them, which you saw deserted in the picture. • And they will live, being affirmed 19 by the sacrifices and the gifts of justice and truth in the age of justice. • And they will rejoice forever in me, and they will destroy those who have destroyed them, they will rebuke those who have rebuked them through their mockery, and they 20 will spit in their faces. • Those rebuked^q by me when they are to see me rejoicing^r 21 with my people for those who rejoice and receive and truly return^s to me. • See, Abraham, what you have seen, hear^t what you have heard, know what you have known.^u Go to your inheritance! And behold I am with you forever.”^v

1 30 And while he was still speaking, I found myself on the earth, and I said, “Eternal, Mighty One, I am no longer in the glory in which I was above, and all
 2 that my soul desired to understand in my heart I do not understand.” • And he said to me, “I will explain to you the things you desired in your heart, for you have sought^a to know the ten^b plagues^c which I prepared against the heathen, and I 3 prepared them beforehand in^d the passing of the twelve hours on earth. • Hear what 4 I tell you, it will be thus. • The first: sorrow from much need. The second: fiery
 5 conflagrations for the cities. • The third: destruction by pestilence^e among the cattle.
 6 The fourth: famine of the world, of their generation.^f • The fifth: among the rulers, destruction by earthquake and the sword. The sixth: increase of hail and snow.
 7 The seventh: wild beasts will be their grave. The eighth: pestilence and hunger 8 will change their destruction.^g • The ninth: execution by the sword and flight in distress. The tenth: thunder, voices, and destroying earthquakes.

1 31 “And then I will sound the trumpet out of the air, and I will send my chosen one, having in him one measure of all my power, and he will summon my people,

k. This clause may belong to the preceding sentence.

l. It is possible to read “of your seed” as describing the heathen.

m. Presumably on earth.

n. Slav. tvāri, “creation, creature, creatures”; but also Gk. epitēdeuma, perhaps then ultimately here (as in Ezek 20:39) Heb. glwlym, “idols.” Yet the whole vs. is obscure, and may well be corrupt.

o. Or “hastening,” Gk. spoudazontes.

p. S vū, “in”; A B C K kū, “toward.” Either could be secondary.

q. Passage unclear; it is possible that the ones who “will be spitting in their faces” are identical with those “being rebuked.”

r. Grammatical agreement fails here and the connections of this and the following participles cannot be established with certainty; the whole verse is corrupt.

s. S obrazujuščix sja, “forming themselves, being formed (shaped, depicted);” B K obraščajuščix sja (acc. or gen.), A C -im sja (dat.), “returning, turning back, converting.”

t. S omits.

u. S omits.

v. At this point A B C K insert a long passage beginning “And the Lord said to him from the clouds: ‘Abraham, I am the Lord himself, maker of heaven and earth.’” In the earlier Palaia which does not contain ApAb this passage is an independent unit, which is introduced by the sentence: “This is written out of the Book of the Sons of Jacob [is knigū iže sutl ljakoviči].” The passage has some echoes from earlier parts of ApAb, then specific reference to 29:11f., 14, 15, 19, 20, but simplified. (Porfir’ev prints this much in his edition of K, p. 129.) These quotations, or rather paraphrases, are then explicated in the anti-Jewish Christian polemic manner usual in the Palaia commentaries.

30 a. A B C K iskalū; S by error skazalū, “explained.”

b. All desjatyja, acc. plural “tenth,” surely by error for desjati, “ten,” but perhaps this is a sign of a more serious corruption.

c. S vredy (from vrēdū), “wound, ulcer, illness; hurt, harm,” Gk. blabē; A B C K věry, “faiths.” The word translated “plague” in 29:15 is jazva, “wound,” Gk. plēgē.

d. A B C K v; S po, “after.”

e. S gen. mora; A B C K nom. morū, making it appositive to “destruction.”

f. Obscure.

g. Obscure; possibly means “take turns in causing destruction,” but this cannot be certain.

2 humiliated by the heathen. •And I will burn with fire^a those who mocked them and ruled over them in this age^b and I will deliver those who have covered me with
3 mockery over to the scorn^c of the coming^d age. •Because I have prepared them^e (to be) food for the fire of Hades, and (to be) ceaseless soaring in the air of the underworld (regions)^f of the uttermost depths,^g (to be) the contents^h of a wormy
4 belly. •For the makersⁱ will see in them^j justice, (the makers) who have chosen my desire and manifestly kept my commandments, and they will rejoice with merry-making over the downfall of the men who remain and who followed^k after the 5 idols and after their murders. •For they shall putrefy in the belly of the crafty 6 worm Azazel, and be burned by the fire of Azazel's tongue. •For I waited so they 7 might come to me, and they did not deign to. •And they glorified an alien (god).
8 And they joined one to whom they had not been allotted, and they abandoned the Lord who gave them strength.^l

1 32 •“Therefore, hear, Abraham, and see, behold your seventh generation shall
2.3 go with you. •And they will go out into an alien land. •And they will enslave^a Gen 15:13
4 them and oppress them as for one hour of the impious age. •But of the nation
5 whom they shall serve^b I am the judge.”^c •And the Lord said this too,^d “Have you 6 Abraham, having heard, accepted the words of God in his heart.

31 a. S ognimī; A B C K s nimī, “with him.”

b. Slav. vū vēkū, “in an age, for an age” (or “the age”), but usually “forever,” Gk. eis aiōnion.

c. Slav. ukoriznistvo, unique to this passage; not clearly different from usual ukorū or ukorizna, “shame, mockery, derision, reproach.”

d. S nastajuščago, a rare word; A B C K substitute the ordinary nastajaščego, “present” (which is used for Gk. epiousios in the Lord's Prayer).

e. S ty; A B C K to “this.”

f. S podzemnymū, dat. plural adjective, “underworld, subterrestrial”; A B C K pod zemnymi, “under the earthly,” with an instrumental plural noun to be supplied.

g. S ends here; the rest of ApAb is transmitted only in the Palaia texts.

h. C napolnenie, “filling”; B adds ploda, “fruit,” which might mean “fullness of/with fruit” but the syntax is odd; A has past passive participle napolneny (acc.), “filled”; K has nom. napolneni, plus ploda, “filled with (the) fruit.” Translation assumes plod is a gloss to explain napolnenie.

i. Slav. tvorici, “doers,” Gk. poiētoi.

j. Reference unclear.

k. The participle sedūše lacks agreement, but this is a common fault of Slavonic MSS. It is probably to be taken as gen. referring to the same people as the previous clause. If it is nom. and follows with the next clause, then the conjunction bo, “for,” is inappropriate.

l. Accepting either A vozmogšago ja, “having strengthened them,” or C vozmoguščago ja, “strengthening them”; B vūzmužišago sja, “who became a man [adult], gained courage,” does not fit; and K vozmožaščago is meaningless.

32 a. The text gives no clue that the subject of this sentence is different from that of the preceding and following sentences, but perhaps this represents secondary harmonization with LXX Gen 15:13.

b. Lit. “to whom they will be slaves,” not exactly either LXX or Heb. Gen 15:14.

c. Lit. “I am the one who judges,” reflecting Heb. dn translated as (ho) krinōn.

d. The exact end of ApAb is not certain. Porfir'ev printed vss. 5, 6 in his edition of K (p. 130). Tikhonravov, however, excluded them from his edition of A, surely because he considered them additions made by the editors of the Palaia. To be sure, these two sentences do occur in the older Palaia, following the text referred to above in n. v to ch. 29, but in the absence of detailed studies of the Abraham material in different redactions of the Palaia, it is premature to make a final judgment. After the two sentences, the older Palaia says: “After this, it is said, Abraham rose up (to go) to Egypt because of the famine,” and continues with a paraphrase of Gen 12:14–20 about Sarah and Pharaoh. B C (and presumably A K, which are not available), on the other hand, quote Gen 12:1–3 and paraphrase in some detail the following account.

APOCALYPSE OF ADAM

(First to Fourth Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY G. MACRAE

The Apocalypse of Adam is a gnostic secret revelation or "apocalypse" communicated by Adam to his son Seth and destined to be preserved for Seth's posterity, the race of the gnostics. Because it is narrated by Adam immediately before his death, it also bears some of the literary characteristics of the genre testament. Adam first narrates the story of the Fall in a peculiarly gnostic version without much direct dependence on the Genesis garden story. In his fallen state of subservience to the creator God, without knowledge of the God of truth above, he receives a revelation of the future from three mysterious strangers, and it is this revelation that forms the substance of the remaining narrative. Adam then foretells the story of the Flood, of the resettlement of the world, and of a cosmic conflagration that is perhaps based on the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah. These catastrophic events are interpreted as efforts on the part of the creator God to destroy the race of Seth, of which he is envious, but heavenly beings save them in each case. In a third episode a saving figure, called the "Illuminator of knowledge," comes and is persecuted by the powers of the world, who in their wrath are perplexed about his origin and their own ignorance. There follows a long poetic passage in which erroneous myths about his origin on the part of thirteen "kingdoms" are narrated in very stylized form. In contrast with these, the "kingless race" (i.e. the Sethian gnostics) know his true origin from above and are enlightened by him. The peoples of the earth then acknowledge their error and the supremacy of the gnostics, and a voice confirms both. In the formal conclusion of the work baptism is equated with gnosis, or knowledge.

Text

The Apocalypse of Adam is preserved in a unique manuscript in the collection of Coptic codices discovered near Nag Hammadi, Egypt, in 1946. It is the fifth and last treatise in Codex V (64,1–85,32), which also contains three Christian gnostic apocalypses and a speculative non-Christian gnostic tractate.¹ The codex may be dated to the second half of the fourth century A.D.; Codex VII of the same collection has been dated after A.D. 348 on the basis of documentary papyri embedded in its cover.² The codex is now preserved in the Coptic Museum at Old Cairo (inventory number 10548). Almost all of the pages of the Apocalypse of Adam have suffered damage at the bottom and sometimes at the top so that several lines of text are often missing.

Original language

The extant version of the Apocalypse of Adam is in the Sahidic dialect of Coptic with some other dialectal traits characteristic of the dominant language of the Nag Hammadi library. Like most Coptic literature of the early period, it is undoubtedly a translation from Greek, and there are no linguistic features in the work that would point to any other language underlying the Greek. In the rare cases where the apocalypse seems close to the biblical text, it is clearly the Septuagint version that it depends on.

¹ See the table of contents of the library in A. Böhlig and F. Wisse, Nag Hammadi Codices III, 2 and IV, 2: The Gospel of the Egyptians (NHS 4; Leiden, 1975) pp. xi–xii.

² J. W. B. Barns, "Greek and Coptic Papyri from the Covers of the Nag Hammadi Codices," in M. Krause, ed., Essays on the Nag Hammadi Texts (NHS 6; Leiden, 1975) pp. 9–18; see especially p. 12.

Date

The only certain conclusion that may be drawn about the date of composition of the work is that it is older than the extant Coptic version. Because the form of the gnostic myth contained in it shows apparently primitive features, and because the work seems to be independent of Christian influence, some interpreters assign it a conjectural date in the first or early second century A.D.³ One author detects in its description of the destruction by fire an allusion to the Vesuvius eruption in A.D. 79 and would date the work no earlier than the first decade of the second century.⁴ The allusion is a doubtful one, however. The limits for dating are approximately the first to the fourth centuries A.D., and the document probably belongs earlier rather than later in this period. In addition, it may contain traditional elements that are much earlier.

Provenance

Some of the Nag Hammadi codices bear indications that they were copied in the vicinity of, and perhaps in close relation to, the monastic communities of Upper Egypt, especially Chenoboskion.⁵ The site of the find confirms this location. If the Apocalypse of Adam is a late document, it might have originated in Egypt. But there is no positive reason to associate the Greek original with Egypt, and it might have been composed anywhere in the Mediterranean world. Epiphanius, writing his descriptive catalog of heresies around A.D. 375, describes a sect called the Archontics, whose teachings resemble the Apocalypse of Adam in several ways.⁶ He locates this sect in his own time in the province of Palestine and in Armenia. The connection with the Archontics is not a strong one, but an earlier Palestinian origin for the apocalypse is not inherently improbable.

Historical importance

The Apocalypse of Adam, like the majority of gnostic documents that have come down to us, especially the many retellings and embellishments of the Genesis story, provides few if any clues to its milieu or function. It is generally assumed that such gnostic works were written for the edification of gnostic individuals or communities. It has been suggested that this one served as an elementary introduction to Gnosticism for initiates,⁷ but it does not bear the marks of clearly propagandistic works such as the Letter of Ptolemy to Flora.⁸ Its real importance lies in the absence of any unmistakably Christian influences in its depiction of the Illuminator of knowledge, opening up the possibility that the work reflects a transition from some form of apocalyptic Judaism to Gnosticism. Much greater specificity would be merely conjecture at the present stage of investigation into the problem of the origins of Gnosticism. Some scholars regard the work as a product of late Gnosticism, but such a view does not exclude the possibility that elements in it may be very much older.⁹

If the final pages of the document are an indication, it seems to reflect a polemical context

³ E.g. M. Krause in W. Foerster, ed., Gnosis: A Selection of Gnostic Texts, vol. 2, p. 15.

⁴ H. Goedicke, "An Unexpected Allusion to the Vesuvius Eruption in 79 A.D.," American Journal of Philology 90 (1969) 340-41.

⁵ T. Säve-Söderbergh, "Holy Scriptures or Apologetic Documentations? The 'Sitz im Leben' of the Nag Hammadi Library," in J.-E. Ménard, ed., Les Textes de Nag Hammadi (NHS 7; Leiden, 1975) pp. 3-14.

⁶ Panarion 40; Foerster, Gnosis, vol. 1, pp. 295-98.

⁷ W. Beltz, Die Adam-Apokalypse aus Codex V von Nag Hammadi: Jüdische Bausteine in gnostischen Systemen (diss. Berlin, 1970).

⁸ Epiphanius, Panarion 33.3-7; Foerster, Gnosis, vol. 1, pp. 155-61.

⁹ See H.-M. Schenke, OLZ 61 (1966) col. 32; R. Haardt, WZKM 61 (1967) 153-59; R. McL. Wilson, Gnosis and the New Testament (Oxford, 1968) pp. 135-39.

in which the interpretation, if not perhaps even the practice, of baptism is a point of serious disagreement. Since nothing in the text clearly suggests Christian baptism, it is possible that the document reflects an encounter between Jewish practitioners of baptism and sectarian gnostics who diverge from them on this issue in particular.

The presence of repetitious and occasionally awkward transitions in the narrative suggests that the Apocalypse of Adam in its present form is the result of a process of growth in which several elements were combined or in which the narrative was expanded in successive stages. Such stages may reflect a progressively explicit gnosticizing of Jewish apocalyptic themes.

Theological importance

One of the most characteristic features of the Apocalypse of Adam, as of many other gnostic writings that retell the creation story, is the sharp distinction drawn between the creator God and the remote supreme God. The former is at times called "the ruler of the aeons and the powers," at times "God the Almighty," even "Sakla," a derisive name. The creator God, the God of Genesis, becomes a hostile power whose mission is to thwart the attempts of humanity to preserve a knowledge of the supreme God, the "God of truth" or "the eternal God." This radical dualism of the deity is a gnostic commonplace; it is uncommon, however, for a gnostic work to use the name "God" for both the Demiurge and the supreme Father.

Humanity in this conception is the creature of the Demiurge and normally lives in servitude to him and in ignorance of the eternal God, destined for death. But the Apocalypse of Adam also distinguishes two categories of people, the followers of the Demiurge and the descendants of Seth, the gnostics, in whom knowledge of the higher God is preserved and who are destined for imperishability:

For the whole creation that came from the dead earth will be subject to the power of death. But those who reflect on the knowledge of the eternal God in their hearts will not perish.

The apocalypse does not speculate on the eternal or divine element in this type of man, as many gnostic works do, but it clearly seems to presuppose a qualitative difference. The encounter between the types of humanity that is resolved in the final pages of the work does not appear to hold out hope for the ultimate salvation of the non-gnostics. But beyond the promise of imperishability, the precise nature of salvation is not spelled out.

As in most gnostic systems, and indeed in many forms of ancient Judaism and Christianity, the cosmos of the Apocalypse of Adam is subject to the influence of a host of spiritual beings, both gracious and malevolent, variously called aeons, angels, and powers. The terms are not used consistently, but the powers are in general the minions of the creator God who oppress humanity and attempt to persecute the gnostics, while "the great eternal angels" or "the holy angels" are representatives of the eternal God who share the knowledge of the gnostic race and intervene in the world to save them from harm.

Relation to canonical books

Many gnostic cosmogonic treatises are closely dependent on the text of Genesis, which they paraphrase or comment on consciously and sometimes with careful attention to the original text.¹⁰ The Apocalypse of Adam is unusual in that it is clearly dependent on the Genesis story but never quotes it exactly except for an occasional word or phrase. It has the character of a gnostic Midrash on the text, but a text already mediated by a Jewish exegetical tradition. There are no other exact allusions to Old Testament texts in the document, but there is evidence of an acquaintance with the Old Testament, especially with the figure of the Isaian servant of Yahweh in the depiction of the Illuminator of knowledge. Several New Testament passages may be cited as parallels to statements in the Apocalypse of Adam, but there is no reason to postulate dependence on the New Testament text.

¹⁰ E.g. The Nature of the Archons. The Apocryphon of John, etc. See O. Wintermute, "A Study of Gnostic Exegesis of the Old Testament," in The Use of the Old Testament in the New and Other Essays, ed. J. M. Efrid (Durham, N.C., 1972) pp. 241-70.

Relation to apocryphal books

Because the Apocalypse of Adam contains gnostic theology, it stands apart from most of the pseudepigrapha. Nevertheless, it is closely related to the extensive Adam literature and has many parallels to the Life of Adam and Eve in particular.¹¹ An exact identification of the work with any previously known document is not possible, however. Epiphanius mentions "apocalypses of Adam" as well as "books in the name of Seth" in use among the sectarians whom he calls the "gnostics,"¹² but nothing more specific is known of them. The Cologne Mani Codex quotes passages from an "Apocalypse of Adam,"¹³ the first of a series of apocalypses in the names of Genesis figures, but the quotations have nothing in common with the Nag Hammadi work. Within gnostic literature itself the work shares many features with the Nag Hammadi Gospel of the Egyptians, an explicitly Christian gnostic treatise in the name of Seth. In addition, the Apocalypse of Adam shares its concern about the meaning of baptism and its various names of angels with gnostic writings, especially the Nag Hammadi tractates Zostrianos and Triple Protennoia, and an untitled work from the Bruce Codex.¹⁴

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 72–74.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 11–14.

Böhlig, A. "Jüdisches und iranisches in der Adamapokalypse des Codex V von Nag Hammadi," Mysterion und Wahrheit: Gesammelte Beiträge zur spätantiken Religionsgeschichte. AGAJU 6; Leiden, 1968; pp. 149–61.

Böhlig, A., and P. Labib. Koptisch-gnostische Apokalypsen aus Codex V von Nag Hammadi im Koptischen Museum zu Alt-Kairo. Halle-Wittenberg, 1963; pp. 86–117.

Foerster, W. (ed.). Gnosis: A Selection of Gnostic Texts. Oxford, 1972–74; vol. 2, pp. 13–20. (Brief introduction by M. Krause, and ET by R. McL. Wilson.)

Hedrick, C. W. The Apocalypse of Adam. A Literary and Source Analysis. SBLDS 46; Chico, Calif., 1980. (This book appeared after the present work was completed.)

Kasser, R. "Bibliothèque gnostique V: Apocalypse d'Adam," RTP 17 (1967) 316–33. (Introduction and French translation.)

MacRae, G. W. "The Apocalypse of Adam," in D. M. Parrott (ed.), Nag Hammadi Codices V, 2–5 and VI with Papyrus Berolinensis 8502, 1 and 4. NHS 11; Leiden, 1979; pp. 151–95. (Annotated text and translation.)

MacRae, G. W. "The Coptic Gnostic Apocalypse of Adam," HeyJ 6 (1965) 27–35.

MacRae, G. W., and D. M. Parrott. "The Apocalypse of Adam (V, 5)," in J. M. Robinson (ed.), The Nag Hammadi Library in English. San Francisco, 1977; pp. 256–64.

Robinson, J. M. (ed.). The Facsimile Edition of the Nag Hammadi Codices: Codex V. Leiden, 1975; pp. 66–85. (This edition contains photographs of the Cop. MS.)

Rudolph, K. "Gnosis und Gnostizismus, ein Forschungsbericht," ThRu 34 (1969) 160–69. (A detailed survey of the discussion about ApAdam in scholarship.)

Schottruff, L. "Animae naturaliter salvandae: Zum Problem der himmlischen Herkunft des Gnostikers," in W. Eltester (ed.), Christentum und Gnosis. BZNW 37; Berlin, 1969; pp. 65–97.

¹¹ See the contribution herein on LAE and ApMos.

¹² Panarion 26.8.1; Foerster, Gnosis, vol. 1, p. 320.

¹³ 48, 16–50, 7; A. Henrichs and L. Koenen, "Der Kölner Mani-Codex (P. Colon. inv. nr. 4780)," Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik 19 (1975) 48–51.

¹⁴ For the Bruce Codex tractate see C. A. Baynes, A Coptic Gnostic Treatise Contained in the Codex Brucianus (Cambridge, 1933). The Nag Hammadi tractates mentioned are published in translation in J. M. Robinson, ed., The Nag Hammadi Library in English (San Francisco, 1977).

Note on the translation

In the translation that follows, the division into paragraphs and the section titles have been introduced by the translator. Most of the explanations of the Illuminator's origin, however, are set off by paragraph signs in the margin of the manuscript. To facilitate references to the text, the page numbers of the original manuscript have been included in parentheses. Square brackets are used to indicate lacunae and to enclose words reconstructed by the translator. Occasional explanatory or interpretative phrases are included in parentheses.

(64) THE APOCALYPSE OF ADAM

1 1 The revelation (apocalypse) which Adam taught his son Seth in the seven Gen 5:4(LXX)
2 hundredth year,^a saying, "Listen to my words, my son Seth. •When God created LAE 25:1
me out of earth along with Eve your mother, I used to go about with her in a glory^b Gen 2:7 3 which she had seen in the aeon^c from which we had come. •She taught me a word of knowledge of the eternal God. And we were like the great eternal angels, for we were loftier than the God who created us and the powers that were with him, whom we did not know.

The Fall

4 "Then God, the ruler of the aeons^c and the powers, separated us^d wrathfully.
5 Then we became two aeons, and the glory in our hearts deserted us, me and your ApMos 20:1-2;
6 mother Eve, along with the first knowledge that used to breathe within us. •And 21:6
the glory fled from us, entering into other great [aeons] and another great [race],^e one that did not [come (65) from] the aeon that [we] came from, I and Eve your 7.8 mother. •But the knowledge entered into the seed of great aeons.^f •That is why I myself have called you by the name of that man who is the seed of the great race Gen 5:3 or from whom (it comes).^g 9 "After those days the eternal knowledge of the God of truth withdrew from me
10 and your mother Eve. •Since that time we have learned about dead things, like 11 men. •Then we recognized the God who created us, for we were not strangers to 12 his powers, and we served him in fear and subjection. •And afterward our hearts Deut 6:13; were darkened. Ps 2:11

Adam's vision

1 2 "Now I was sleeping in the thought of my heart, and I saw before me three Gen 18:2; men^a whose appearance I could not recognize because they were not from the TAB 6 powers of the God who created me. They surpassed [those powers in their] glory.
2 The men [spoke], (66) saying to me, 'Rise up, Adam, from the sleep of death,^b and hear about the aeon and the seed of that man to whom life has come, the one who came forth from you and from Eve your wife.'

1 a. The seven hundredth year, according to the LXX of Gen 5:4 (MT = 800), is the length of Adam's life after the birth of Seth; cf. Josephus, Ant 1.2.3. Thus the apocalypse is a deathbed "testament" of Adam.

b. Throughout, the word "glory" is a literal translation of the Cop. for Gk. doxa. It may sometimes refer to honor or dignity, sometimes to external splendor, as often in the LXX.

c. The word "aeon" in Gk., a loanword in Cop., is sometimes a temporal, sometimes a spatial concept. In addition, in gnostic literature it is also used for personal beings, whether spiritual or material. All these meanings occur in ApAdam, but the word is translated "aeon" throughout.

d. The primordial state of Adam and Eve, as often in gnostic literature, is seen as that of a single androgynous being. Here the androgyne myth is used to interpret Gen 2:21–23.

e. The Gk. word genea, a loanword in Cop., is variously translated here as "race," "nation," or "generation," according to the context.

f. The point may be to assert that the external splendor of Adam and Eve reverted to heavenly beings, but their knowledge (gnōsis) passed into the posterity of Seth. The words "glory" and "knowledge" are not in the text at this point but are inferred from the grammatical gender of the verbs. The "seed" is the posterity or offspring of Seth; two Gk. words, possibly reflecting different sources, and a Cop. word are all rendered "seed" throughout the translation.

g. The final phrase is obscure and may be an editorial gloss. Seth, perhaps a heavenly prototype of Seth, is the "man" referred to.

2 a. The appearance of three "men" is common in the Abraham legends and is frequent in gnostic literature, where it is sometimes interpreted in a trinitarian sense. In TAB 6 (rec. A) the strange appearance of the "men" is also emphasized.

b. The sleep of Adam and his awakening to a revelation of knowledge, which may be rooted in Gen 2:21, is a widespread gnostic motif.

- 3 "When I heard these words from those great men who stood before me, we 4 sighed in our hearts, I and Eve. •And the Lord, the God who created us, stood Gen 3:8 5 in our presence and said to us, 'Adam, why were you sighing in your hearts? •Do you not know that I am God who created you, and that I breathed into you a spirit^c of life for a living soul?' Isa 45:5ff.
Gen 2:7
- 6.7 "Then darkness fell over our eyes. •Then the God who created us created a son from himself [and Eve your mother] [. . . 3 lines missing].
- 8 (67) "[Then I was defiled] in the thought of my heart. I recognized a sweet 9 desire for your mother. •Then the vigor of our eternal knowledge perished in us,
 10 and feebleness pursued us. •For this reason the days of our life became few, for Gen 6:3
 I knew that I had become subject to the power of death. Gen 3:19

The Flood

- 1 3 "Now then, my son Seth, I will reveal to you what was revealed to me by those 2 men whom I once saw before me. •After I have completed the times of this generation and the years of [the generation] have been fulfilled, then [. . . 3 lines 3 missing]. (69)^a •Rain showers of God the Almighty will be poured forth so that Gen 6:17 he may destroy all flesh from the earth because of the things it seeks after,^b including [those who] come from the seed of the men to whom the life of knowledge, which went out from me and Eve your mother, was passed on. For they were strangers to him.
- 4 "Afterward great angels will come on high clouds to bring those men to the place where the spirit of life dwells [. . . 7 lines missing] (70) from heaven to Gen 6:17 5 earth. •[But] the whole [multitude] of flesh will be left behind in the [waters].
- 6.7 Then God will rest from his wrath. •He will cast his power upon the waters, and he will give power to (Noah and his wife and)^c his sons and their wives by means Gen 6:18 of the ark, together with their animals, whichever he pleased, and the birds of Gen 7:2-3 heaven, which he called^d and placed upon the earth.
- 8 "And God will say to Noah—whom the nations will call Deucalion^e—"Behold, I have guarded you in the ark, together with your wife and your sons and their wives and their animals and the birds of heaven, which you called [and placed 9 upon the earth . . . 4 lines missing]. (71) •For this reason I shall give the [earth] Gen 9:1-3 to you and your sons. In sovereignty you shall rule over it, you and your sons.
 10 And from you no seed will come forth of the men who will not stand in my presence in another glory.'^f
- 11.12 "Then they will be like the cloud of great light. •Those men will come, the ones 13 who were sent forth from the knowledge of the great aeons and the angels. •They 14 will stand in the presence of Noah and the aeons. •And God will say to Noah, 15 'Why have you departed from what I told you? •You have created another race in order that you might scorn my power.'
- 16 "Then Noah will reply, 'I shall bear witness before your might that it is not from me that the race of these men has come, nor from [my sons . . . 5 lines missing] (72) knowledge.'
- 17 "And [he]^g will release those men and bring them into their proper land and

c. Or "breath," as in Gen 2:7.

3 a. P. 68 was left entirely blank by the copyist.

b. The Flood is prompted by the desires and pursuits of humanity.

c. The words "Noah and his wife and" are not in the text but are required if the creator God is the subject of the verb "will give power."

d. The verb for "called" (i.e. summoned) might be rendered "named," in which case the allusion would be to the naming of the animals, which in Gen 2:19–20 is the task of Adam, not Noah.

e. Deucalion, son of Prometheus, is the mythical hero of the Greek flood story; see Apollodorus, Bibliotheca, 1.7.2; Pseudo-Lucian, De dea Syria 12–13.

f. Alternate rendering: "the men who will not also stand in honor before me" (Krause-Wilson). The awkward double negative may be an error on the part of the Cop. translator.

g. The antecedent of the pronoun is unclear because of the preceding lacuna; it would make most sense if it were Seth or some other heavenly figure. For the 600-year sojourn in tranquillity, see Josephus, Ant 1.3.9.

18 build them a holy dwelling place. •And they will be called by that name and will Jas 2:7 19 dwell there six hundred years in a knowledge of imperishability. •And angels of 20 the great light will dwell with them. •Nothing abominable will be in their hearts, but only the knowledge of God.

The division of the earth

1 4 “Then Noah will divide all the earth among his sons, Ham and Japheth and Gen 9:18-19
 2 Shem. •He will say to them, ‘My sons, hear my words. Behold, I have divided 3 the earth among you. •But serve him in fear and subjection all the days of your 4 life. •Do not let your seed depart from the face of God the Almighty^a [. . . 5 lines missing].’
 5 (73) “[Then Shem^b the] son of Noah [will say, ‘My] seed will be pleasing before 6 you and before your power. •Put a seal on it with your strong hand in fear and commandment, so that all the seed that has come forth from me will not be inclined away from you and God the Almighty, but they will serve in humility and fear of their knowledge.’
 7 “Then from the seed of Ham and Japheth others will go, four hundred thousand^c
 8 men, and will enter into another land and sojourn with those men who came forth from the great eternal knowledge. •For the shadow of their power will guard those who have sojourned among them from every evil deed and every foul desire.
 9 Then the seed of Ham and Japheth will make twelve kingdoms,^d and [their other] Gen 10:1ff
(LXX); 49:28;
1Chr 1:1-16
 seed will enter the kingdom of another people [. . . 3 lines missing] (74) great aeons of imperishability.

The fire

1.2 5 “And they will approach Sakla^a their God. •They will go in to the powers, 3 making accusations against the great men who dwell in their glory. •They will say to Sakla, ‘What is the power of these men who have stood in your presence, the ones who were taken from the seed of Ham and Japheth to become four hundred 4 (thousand)^b men? •They have been received into another aeon, the one from which they came forth, and they have overturned all the glory of your power and the 5 dominion of your hand. •For the seed of Noah from his son has done all your will together with all the powers in the aeons over which your might rules, while both those men and the ones who are sojourners in their glory have not done what you 6 wish. •Instead, they have turned aside your entire multitude.’
 7 “Then the God of the aeons will give them some of those who serve him
 8 [. . . 1 line missing]. •They will come to that land (75) where dwell the great men 9 who have not been defiled nor will be defiled by any desire. •For it is not from a defiled hand that their soul has come, but it came from a great commandment

4 a. The title “God the Almighty” (Gk. pantokratōr), like “God who created us,” clearly designates the inferior creator, or Demiurge. It is a frequent epithet of God in the LXX.

b. The separate mention of Ham and Japheth a few lines below makes the reconstruction of the name of Shem very likely here. The story in Gen 9:20–27 singles out Ham negatively over against Shem and Japheth; Canaan, Ham’s son, is to be a slave to Shem and Japheth and Japheth is to dwell in the tents of Shem. By identifying Shem, ancestor of the Israelites, so closely with Noah and God the Almighty, ApAdam seems to show an anti-Jewish bias that is not uncommon in gnostic sources.

c. The number 400,000 may be simply a large round number. The Manichean Homilies 68.18 refers to “400,000 righteous,” and Josephus (Ant 7.13.1) uses the same number of the tribe of Judah.

Here it apparently refers to non-Jewish converts to the race of Sethian gnostics.

d. The twelve kingdoms may be modeled on the twelve tribes of Israel. In the LXX of Gen 10:2 and 10:6 there are twelve sons of Japheth and Ham. For the twelve plus one, cf. the thirteen kingdoms mentioned below, which have parallels in the Nag Hammadi documents such as the Gospel of the Egyptians (Codex III, 63, 18: thirteen aeons) and Marsanes (Codex X, 2, 14–4, 23: thirteen “seals”).

5 a. Sakla or Saklas, probably from an Aram. word for “fool,” is a common derivative name for the lower God in gnostic sources (e.g. Gospel of the Egyptians, 58, 24).

b. The omission of “thousand” in the MS is undoubtedly a scribal error.

- 10 of an eternal angel. •Then they will cast fire and sulfur and asphalt^c upon those men; and fire and mist will come over those aeons, and the eyes of the powers of the luminaries^d will be darkened so that the aeons may not see by them in those days.
- 11 “And great clouds of light^e will come down and other clouds of light will 12 descend on them from the great aeons. •Abraxas and Sablo and Gamaliel^f will 13 come down to take those men out of the fire and the wrath and bring them above
14 the aeons and the rulers of the powers and take them away •[. . . 3 lines missing]
(76) dwelling place of the great ones [. . .] there with the holy angels and the aeons. •The men will resemble those angels, for they are not strangers to them, but they are at work in the imperishable seed.

Gen 19:24;
Ps 11:6

Gen 1:16;
Isa 13:10;
Mk 13:24 par.

TAb 9

The coming of the Illuminator

- 1 6 “Again for the third time^a the Illuminator^b of knowledge will pass by in great 2 glory in order to leave a remnant of the seed of Noah and the sons of Ham and 3 Japheth so that he might leave behind for himself fruit-bearing trees.^c •And he will 4 redeem their souls from the day of death, for the whole creation that came from 5 the dead earth will be subject to the power of death. •But those who reflect upon 6 the knowledge of the eternal God in their hearts will not perish. •For they have 7 not received spirit from this kingdom alone, but from an eternal angel they have 8 received (it) [. . . 4 lines missing] (77) of Seth. •And he will do signs and wonders 9 in order to scorn the powers and their ruler.
- 10 “Then the God of the powers will be disturbed, saying, ‘What is the power of 11 the man who is loftier than we?’ •Then he will stir up a great wrath against that 12 man, and the glory will withdraw and dwell in holy houses which it has chosen 13 for itself. •The powers will not see it with their eyes, nor will they see the 14 Illuminator either.^d •Then they will punish the flesh^e of the man upon whom the 15 holy spirit has come.^f
- 16 “Then the angels and all the races of the powers will use the name in error, 17 asking, ‘Where has it (the error) come from?’ or ‘Where have the words of 18 deception, which all the powers have failed to discover, come from?’

Ps 1:3;
Jer 17:8;
Mt 3:10 par.;
7:16-20 par.

Ex 7:3;
Mk 13:22;
Jn 4:48

1QpHab 9.2

c. The biblical model for the apocalyptic destruction by fire is the story of Sodom and Gomorrah in Gen 19:24–28. The scheme of destruction first by flood, then by fire, is well known in Jewish and Christian apocalyptic sources; cf. e.g. LAE 49:3–50:2. In Ant 1.2.3 Josephus portrays Adam as having predicted these events to Seth.

d. The “luminaries” or “lights” are the sun and the moon. The darkening of them is a common apocalyptic theme in biblical contexts.

e. Clouds of light or bright clouds are a common means of ascent to the heavens in the pseudepigrapha as well as in gnostic literature; cf. e.g. TAb 9 (rec. A).

f. In various combinations these three names occur frequently in the gnostic literature from Nag Hammadi and elsewhere, usually designating angelic beings in a gracious or protective role, e.g. Gospel of the Egyptians 52, 19–53, 9.

6 a. Though the coming of the Illuminator has not been mentioned previously, this is the “third time” in relation to the rescue of the race of Seth in the Flood and the fire. In an important parallel passage in the Gospel of the Egyptians (63, 4–8) the great Seth passes through “three Parousias”: “the Flood, and the conflagration, and the judgment of the rulers and the powers and the authorities.” In that work, Seth in his third Parousia is identified with Jesus; here such an identification is not explicit if indeed it is intended at all.

b. The Gk. word, phōstēr, is used elsewhere in ApAdam to refer to the sun and the moon. As a title it is widely used in Christian, gnostic, and Manichean sources to refer to the savior figure, e.g. Hippolytus, Refutation 5.8.40; Letter of Peter to Philip (Codex VIII, 139, 15). Compare the phrases “the light of knowledge” in TLevi 4:3, the “light of the nations” in Isa 42:6, and “the light of the world” in Jn 8:12; 9:5.

c. The metaphor of fruit-bearing trees for people is found in the NT but is already traditional. See also PssSol 14:2[5] and OdesSol 11:16a–21.

d. The theme of the ignorance or blindness of the Demiurge and the powers in the presence of the heavenly redeemer is a favorite gnostic motif; see e.g. Paraphrase of Shem (Codex VII, 36, 2–24), where it appears without reference to Jesus. Cf. also 1Cor 2:6–8.

e. The scene of the punishment of the Illuminator presupposes the kind of Docetism familiar in gnostic accounts of the passion of Jesus. The expression “punish the flesh” does not necessarily imply this, however; at Qumran the wicked priest is said to suffer “vengeance in the body of his flesh.”

f. Reference to the holy spirit recalls Isa 42:1, and there are other traces of servant imagery in the portrayal of the Illuminator.

The origin of the Illuminator

- 1 7 "Now the first kingdom says of him,
 'He came [. . . 3 lines missing] (78) a spirit [. . .] to heaven.
 2 He was nourished in the heavens.
 3 He received the glory of that one^a and the power. He came to the bosom of his mother.
 4 And thus he came to the water.'^b
- 5 "And the second kingdom says about him,
 'He came from a great prophet. And a bird came, took the child who was born, and carried him to a high mountain.
 6 And he was nourished by the bird of heaven. An angel came forth there and said to him, "Rise up! God has given you glory."
 7 He received glory and strength.
 8 And thus he came to the water.'
- 9 "“The third kingdom says of him,
 'He came from a virgin womb. He was cast out of his city, he and his Rev 12:1-6 mother; he was taken to a desert place.
 10 He was nourished there.^c
 11 He came and received glory and power.
 12 And thus he came to the water.'
- 13 "“The fourth kingdom says [of him]:
 'He came [from a virgin . . . Solomon] (79) sought her, he and Phersalo and Saue^d and his armies which had been sent out. Solomon also sent his army of demons^e to seek the virgin. And they did not find the one they TSol passim sought, but the virgin who was given to them was the one they fetched.^f Solomon took her. The virgin conceived and gave birth to the child there.
 14 She nourished him on a border^g of the desert. When he had been nourished, 15 He received glory and power from the seed from which he had been begotten.
 16 And thus he came to the water.'
- 17 "“And the fifth kingdom says of him,
 'He came from a drop from heaven. He was cast into the sea. The abyss received him, brought him forth, and took him to heaven.^h 18 He received glory and power.
 19 And thus he came to [the water].'
- 20 "“And the sixth kingdom says,
 '[. . . 2 lines missing] (80) which is below, in order to [gather] flowers.

7 a. "Of that one" or possibly "of that place."
 For a parallel to this passage and several of the others, see the traditions of the Archontics about the birth and youth of Seth in Epiphanius, Panarion 40.7.1-3.

b. This puzzling refrain could be understood as a reference to baptism (cf. the baptism of Jesus in the Gospels). In other gnostic sources, however,
 "the descent to (or upon) the water" refers to coming into the world; cf. e.g. the Second Logos of the Great Seth (Codex VII, 50, 16-18).

c. The text reads: "he nourished him(self)"; it has been emended to conform to other instances in the list.

d. These two names are not attested elsewhere in gnostic or pseudepigraphical literature.

e. Solomon's army of demons is mentioned in magical and other gnostic sources; see TSol passim.
 Josephus (Ant 8.2.5) mentions Solomon's peculiar power over demons.

f. The substitution of the virgin recalls the gnostic myth of the substitution of the earthly or shadow Eve when the powers sought to defile the spiritual Eve; cf. e.g. Nature of the Archons (Codex II, 89, 18-31).

g. The exact meaning of the Cop. word translated "border" is uncertain.

h. The line about nourishing is omitted, possibly by accident.

She conceived from the desire of the flowers and gave birth to him in that place.

21 The angels of the flower gardenⁱ nourished him.

22 He received glory there and power.

23 And thus he came to the water.'

24 "And the seventh kingdom says of him,

'He is a drop. It came from heaven to earth. Dragons brought him down to caves.^j He became a child. A spirit came upon him and took him on high to the place where the drop had come from.^k

25 He received glory and power there.

26 And thus he came to the water.'

27 "And the eighth kingdom says of him,

'A cloud came upon the earth and enveloped a rock. He came from it.

28 The angels who were above the cloud nourished him.

29 He received glory and power there.

30 And [thus he] came [to the water].'

31 (81) "And the ninth kingdom says of him,

'Of the nine Muses one separated away.^l She went to a high mountain and spent some time dwelling there so as to desire herself alone, that she might become androgynous. She fulfilled her desire and conceived from her desire. He was brought forth.

32 The angels who were over the desire nourished him.

33 And he received glory there and power.

34 And thus he came to the water.'

35 "The tenth kingdom says of him,

'His god loved a cloud of desire. He begot him in his hand and cast some of the drop upon the cloud near him.^m And he was brought forth.ⁿ

36 He received glory and power there.

37 And thus he came to the water.'

38 "And the eleventh kingdom says,

'The father desired his own daughter. She also conceived from her father. She put [the child] in a tomb (82) out in the desert.

39 The angel nourished him there.^o

40 And thus he came to the water.'

41 "The twelfth kingdom says of him,

'He came from two luminaries.^p

42 He was nourished there.

43 He received glory and power.

44 And thus he came to the water.'

Gen 1:16

i. Translation uncertain; the Gk. word appears to be in the genitive case, antheōnos, which is very unusual in Cop.

j. In Gk. mythology the infant Zeus is said to have been hidden and nourished in a cave; cf. Apollodorus, Bibliotheca 1.1.6-7.

k. See n. h above.

l. This particular story is not told of the Muses in Gk. sources, but the motif of conception without intercourse is a common one, e.g. in the gnostic Sophia myth and in Gk. mythology; cf. Apollodorus, Bibliotheca 1.3.5 (Hera giving birth to Hephaestus).

m. The Cop. expression rendered "near him" is uncertain. The underlying myth is a common description of the creation of other beings by the Egyptian god Atum; cf. S. G. F. Brandon, Creation Legends of the Ancient Near East (London, 1963) pp. 21-23.

n. A line of the common refrain is missing and perhaps should be supplied.

o. See previous n.

p. The luminaries or lights are again the sun and the moon.

- 45 "And the thirteenth kingdom says of him,
 'Every birth of their ruler is a word.'^q
 46 And this word received a mandate' there.'^s
 47 He received glory and power.
 48 And thus he came to the water—so that the desire of those powers might be fulfilled.'^t
- 49 "But the race without a king over it^u says, 'God chose him from all the aeons.'
 50,51 He made a knowledge of the undefiled one of truth exist in him. •He said, '[From] 52 an alien air [out of a] great aeon the [great] Illuminator has come forth. •And he had made (83) the race of those men whom he chose for himself shine, so that they should shine upon the whole aeon.' 'w

Dan 12:3;
 Mt 13:43;
 Phil 2:15;
 LAE 29:9

The victory

- 1 8 "Then the seed will fight against the power, those who will receive his name
 2 upon the water, and of them all.^a •And a cloud of darkness will come upon them.
 3 Then the peoples will cry out with a loud voice, saying, 'Blessed is the soul of 4 those men because they have known God with a knowledge of the truth. •They will live for aeons of aeons^b because they have not been corrupted in their desire with the angels, nor have they accomplished the works of the powers, but they have stood before him in a knowledge of God like light that has come out of fire 5,6 and blood. •But we have done every deed of the powers senselessly. •We have 7 gloried in the transgression of all our works. •We have cried out against [God 8 . . . 2 lines missing] (84) is eternal. [. . .] our spirits. •For now we know that our souls will surely die.'

The voice

- 9 "Then a voice came to them, saying—Micheu and Michar and Mnesinous,^c who are over the holy baptism and the living water—'Why were you crying out against the living God with impious voices and tongues without law over them and 10 souls full of blood and abominable deeds? •You are full of works that are not of 11 the truth, but your ways are full of gladness and joy. •Having defiled the water of life, you have drawn it within the will of the powers to whom you have been 12 given to serve them. •And your thought does not resemble that of those men whom you persecute, [for] they have not [obeyed your] desires and (85) their fruit does 13 not wither. •But they will be known to the great aeons because the words they have kept, of the God of the aeons, were not set down in the book nor were they 14 written. •But angelic beings will bring them, words which all the generations of

q. Or logos; compare Jn 1:1–14 and the logos speculations of the hellenistic world.

r. The Cop. word rendered "mandate" has multiple meanings; one might possibly translate "received form there" or "was provided for there."

s. See n. n above.

t. This remark is apparently an editorial insertion referring to the context in which the passage was introduced.

u. "The kingless race (or generation)" is a frequent self-designation of the gnostics in the Nag Hammadi writings. It may be related to the biblical tradition reflected in 1Sam 8. This race's explanation contrasts with the others in form and content. It is the "true," gnostic explanation over against the speculations of the powers.

v. Ambiguous; perhaps "from eternity."

w. It is uncertain where to terminate the quo-

8 a. The sentence is completely ambiguous and perhaps textually corrupt. The phrase "those who will receive" may refer either to the seed (the race of Seth) or the power (their opponents). Despite the antibaptism sentiments of the following passage, the former seems preferable. The final phrase may refer to the name (of Seth and) of all Sethians.

b. "Aeons of aeons" here clearly has the sense of "forever and ever."

c. In gnostic literature these names are regularly associated with baptism or water; cf. e.g. Gospel of the Egyptians 64, 14–20. Their syntactical function here is unclear, however. The voice may be addressing them directly or making a statement about them ("Micheu . . . are over the holy baptism"); or the mention of them may be an editorial remark or gloss identifying the voice.

men will not know, for they will be on a high mountain, upon a rock of truth.^d 15 For this reason they will be called "the words of imperishability [and] truth," of those who know the eternal God in wisdom of knowledge and teaching of eternal angels, for he knows all things.'"^e

Conclusion

16 These are the revelations which Adam made known to Seth his son, and his son 17 taught his seed about them. • This is the secret knowledge of Adam which he imparted to Seth, which is the holy baptism^f of those who know the eternal knowledge through the ones born of the word and the imperishable illuminators, those who came from the holy seed: Jesseus, Mazareus, Jessedekeus, [the living water].^g

d. There is a tradition connected with Adam and Seth concerning revelations written on stone and brick to survive the Flood and the conflagration; cf. Josephus, Ant 1.2.3; LAE 50:1-2. The Gospel of the Egyptians (68, 1-13) is described as a book written by Seth and placed on a hidden mountain.

e. The revelation spoken by Adam ends logically here. Where to end the words of "the voice" is

f. The identification of knowledge with, or the substitution of it for, baptism is known in gnostic sources; cf. e.g. Epiphanius, Panarion 40.2.6; Paraphrase of Shem 30-31.

g. The phrase "the living water" is reconstructed from a parallel passage, involving the same names, in Gospel of the Egyptians 66, 10-11. The role of these figures in the present context, however,

APOCALYPSE OF ELIJAH

(First to Fourth Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY O. S. WINTERMUTE

The Apocalypse of Elijah is a composite work that contains the following: an opening homiletical section that discusses prayer and fasting (ch. 1); a prophetic description of events that precede the advent of the Antichrist (ch. 2); a description of the Antichrist (ch. 3); an account of three martyrdoms (ch. 4); and oracles depicting events that are to occur "on that day" (ch. 5).

The title of the present work is given at the end of the Akhmimic text as tiapoklupsis nhēleias: "The Apocalypse of Elijah." That title might lead one to expect the work to contain an account of secret lore revealed by an angelic messenger to Elijah, but it does not. The work begins in the form of a prophecy spoken by a figure who is identified simply as "son of man," a title that was used of Ezekiel (Ezek 2:1) in the Old Testament. Within the text, Elijah is mentioned twice, both times in the third person and in association with Enoch. The fact that Elijah is mentioned in the text might explain why his name was joined to the title, but it will be argued below that the portions of text that refer to Elijah and Enoch are Christian interpolations added to an earlier Jewish work. If that is true, the title of the original Jewish work remains unknown.

The designation "apocalypse" is also a somewhat inadequate description of the basic document. An apocalypse, i.e. "revelation," usually contains the account of a secret revelation conveyed to a seer by an angelic messenger who directs that the revelation be written down for the benefit of those who will remain faithful in the last days. The present document does not have such a framework. The writer presents his opening statements as "the word of the Lord," which comes to him in a normal prophetic form (cf. Ezek 6:1; 12:1; 13:1). Although the point of view changes in the document, there is no evidence to suggest that the writer begins to assume the role of an apocalyptic seer.

The fact that the document is not written in apocalyptic form leads one to ask why it is called an apocalypse. The answer is to be sought in an examination of the type of material contained in the document. Much of the portrayal of the final days of the present age is typical of the apocalypses. In fact, there is reason to believe that the description of the martyrdom of Enoch and Elijah (in ch. 4) is strongly influenced by the account of two martyrs in Revelation 11:4–12. In other words, the present text, which is not written in the form of an apocalypse, contains passages that may rightly be described as apocalyptic inasmuch as they are similar to descriptions found in works constructed in the form of an apocalypse. Not only the Christian editor who inserted the Enoch-Elijah martyrdom but also other early readers would have been aware of its dependence on Revelation. Consequently, the final Christian edition of this text, which described the martyrdom of Elijah in an "apocalyptic" manner, came to be designated "The Apocalypse of Elijah."

A closer analysis of the structure of this work reveals its composite nature more clearly:

Chapter 1

The first chapter contains a prophetic homily encouraging fasting and prayer. This is possibly an early Jewish work that has been supplemented by a Christian editor. The original Jewish homily would have had the following structure:

1. Introduction: a description of the call of a prophet who is identified as a "son of man" (1:1).
2. Exhortation: "remember" what is prepared for the sealed and for the sinners (1:8–12).
3. Exhortation: "hear" about deceivers who will appear in the last days and oppose the fast (1:13f.).
4. Exhortation: "remember" the benefits of a pure fast, which was created by God (1:15–22).
5. Closing comment: the value of single-mindedness, and a simile comparing the farmer's tool and the soldier's breastplate to single-mindedness (1:23–27).

The Christian editor who added 1:3–7 was aware of the homiletical structure of the work and so he added his comments in a similar form. After the prophet's call, he also added a quotation from 1 John 2:15 (at 1:2), which contains an imperative that aptly suits the homiletical style.

Neither of these added comments have anything to do with fasting and prayer, which constituted the main concern of the earlier Jewish composition. They are, however, thematically related to the larger text, which deals with the judgment of the Antichrist and the salvation of the saints. That would indicate that the Christian editor had much of the present text before him when he began his editing.

It is obvious that additional verses in chapter 1, particularly 1:8–12, might be regarded as the work of a secondary Christian editor. In fact, there is nothing in any part of chapter 1 that could not be regarded as the work of a Christian writer. Nevertheless, it is clear that the verses that are most intrusive and irrelevant to the basic theme of prayer and fasting are verses 1:2–7 (possibly 8–12), which contain explicit quotations and themes drawn from the New Testament.

Chapter 2

The second chapter is the most difficult portion of the text to analyze. That is due in part to the fact that the recently published Chester Beatty Papyrus has added some fifteen verses (2:15b–30b) to the chapter, increasing its length by more than one fourth and drastically changing the presumed scenario. The scholarly community has not yet had an opportunity to examine the text and make its contribution to a study of the many tantalizing questions that it raises.

The difficulties involved in an attempt to understand this chapter are aggravated by the problem of identifying the genre involved. The chapter attempts to provide a description of events preceding the advent of the Antichrist. At first impression it appears to fit somewhere in the continuum of Jewish and Christian apocalyptic prophecies, which extend from Daniel to 6 Ezra. It seems to share with them a method of surveying history in the form of future predictions that make use of such coded expressions as "a king who rises in the north" (2:3, cf. Dan 11:6) or "in the west" (2:6, cf. Dan 8:5) or the three "kings of Persia" who will struggle with four "kings of Assyria" for three years (2:42). Since the code is unclear, both the interpretation and the dating of this chapter remain uncertain.

Chapter 2, together with chapter 5, also shares another literary feature with the type of apocalyptic prophecy found in Daniel. That is the tendency to repeat certain characteristic motifs and even to restate the same sequence of events in several different forms. Thus chapters 2, 7, 8, and 11 of Daniel abound in descriptions of beasts, kingdoms, and horns. They speak of powers arising with "four winds of heaven" (Dan 7:2; 8:8) and a kingdom that will never be destroyed (Dan 2:44; 7:14). The same chapters of Daniel provide four different descriptions of the sequence of Median-Persian, Greek, and Seleucid kingdoms which precede the final age.

In a similar manner chapter 2 of the Apocalypse of Elijah repeats the notice that "your children will be seized" (2:4, 30), the land or cities of Egypt "will groan" (2:4, 31), many will "desire death, but death will flee" (2:5, 32) from them, and good rulers will "take vengeance" (2:8, 48) on the land of Egypt. Chapter 2 also appears to give two different accounts of events preceding the advent of the son of lawlessness. The chapter begins with a description of the desperate plight of those who live in Egypt. The women who bear children are tormented and lament their giving birth. At that point Persian kings intervene and remove the Jews from Egypt to Jerusalem, and we are informed that "the son of perdition will soon come." The following oracle begins "In those days the lawless (one) will appear in the holy places," but at that point the text breaks off and the writer returns to discuss the Persian rise to power in much greater detail. This time the author describes how a native king from Heliopolis assisted the Persians in their conquest of Memphis. Finally, at the end of the chapter the king from Heliopolis is fully established in power and his reign is characterized by a short-lived era of peace, which immediately precedes the coming of the son of lawlessness.

The most difficult problem to be resolved in the study of the Apocalypse of Elijah is the historical significance of the various kings mentioned in the text. There are at least three possibilities:

1. All of the kings are drawn from a literary tradition, and the author himself believes or speculates that at some future date the first of these kings will appear.
2. Some of the kings had already appeared, but the author casts his work in the style of a seer who desires to warn his contemporaries of the imminent end of the age by joining their own history to that of the final age and casting it all in the form of a future prophecy.
3. The author has made use of a prior literary tradition or even a complete apocalypse from an earlier time, which he brought up to date by modifying details of the predicted future to conform more accurately to the actual course of history as he knew it.

Chapter 2 may be outlined in the following manner:

1. An introductory subtitle (2:1).
2. A description of historical events that will precede the advent of the Antichrist (2:2–28).
3. A lament for Egypt "in those days" (2:29–38).
4. A homiletical aside and announcement of the appearance of the lawless one (2:39f.).
5. A further description of historical events "in those days," which will precede the advent of the Antichrist (2:41–53).

The introductory subtitle in 2:1 introduces the remainder of the tractate, which begins with the discussion of an Assyrian king (2:3) and ends with a destruction of heaven and earth and the creation of new ones (5:23, 30, 38). If the subtitle has been correctly identified, its presence would suggest that the present work was created when an editor or writer joined the opening homily on fasting and prayer to an independent document that is described by this subtitle.

The first description of coming events, which begins at 2:2 and ends at 2:28, contains a series of references to kings who cannot be identified at this time. It clearly begins with an Assyrian king who is wicked. He is replaced by a pious king from the west. The new Chester Beatty Papyrus introduces an evil, demon-faced son (vs. 19), who seems to be responsible for the evil events described in verses 24–27.

The lament for Egypt begins in verse 2:29. It is characterized by a loose literary description of times of affliction, and (with the exception of a mention of three Persian kings in vs. 39) lacks specific allusion to political events. The lament is also characterized by the recurring phrase "in those days," which continues to the end of the chapter. This lament for Egypt begins immediately after the writer informs us that "the priests of the land will tear their clothes." The author may have intended the lament to represent the response of those priests. At the point where the lament ends, there is a homiletical aside addressed to the same priests of the land.

Verse 2:41 begins with the phrase "in those days," which generally introduces a larger paragraph. In this case, however, it simply contains an announcement that the lawless one will appear. One might expect the author to begin his treatment of that important figure at this point, but he immediately drops the subject and turns once again to events preceding the appearance of the son of lawlessness, whose more complete introduction is delayed until chapter 3.

Chapter 2 ends with the discussion of a war between Persians and Assyrians. In the midst of their struggle for Egypt, a native ruler appears at Heliopolis, sides with the Persians, and comes to power in Memphis as a righteous king. This portion of text is heavily influenced by a literary tradition that appears in the Oracle of the Potter,¹ an Egyptian text from the end of the third century B.C., surviving in three fragmentary Greek versions dated between the first and third centuries A.D. That text presents itself as an oracle given by a potter to King Amenophis concerning things that shall come to pass in Egypt. It was produced by native Egyptians who resented Greek domination of their land from Alexandria, which is referred to as "the city by the sea" that will be reduced to a place where fishermen dry their nets. Both the cities of Heliopolis, where the potter is buried in honor, and Memphis, where native rule should flourish, are mentioned favorably. The heart of the prophecy, however, is the prediction that a native king who will rule bountifully will appear from the sun and be established by Isis so that those who survive will call upon the dead to arise and share the good things with them. The literary tradition regarding that native king obviously plays a part in the righteous king from the "city of the sun" (2:46) who comes to power in Memphis and introduces "abundant well being" (2:52) so that the living will say to the dead, "Rise up and be with us in this rest" (2:53). It can be concluded, therefore, that in addition to apocalyptic motifs inherited from Jewish and Christian literature, the author has drawn on motifs attested in Egyptian apocalyptic writing.

¹ See C. C. McCown, "Egyptian Apocalyptic Literature," HTR 18 (1925) 397–400; L. Koenen, "Die Prophezeiungen des Töpfers," Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphie 2 (1968) 178–209.

Chapter 3

This chapter contains a discussion of the following matters:

1. The advent of the son of lawlessness (1:1).
2. The signs of the advent of the true Christ (1:2-4).
3. The works of the Antichrist (1:5-13).
4. The physical signs of the Antichrist (1:14-18).

The main concern of this section is the figure of the son of lawlessness, who falsely claims to be the Christ. His works are reported and his physical signs given. The description of the advent of the true Christ (1:2-4) is obviously a digression inserted by a Christian editor of this work. The descriptions of the physical signs of the Antichrist, however, are well known from such late Hebrew texts as the Apocalypse of Zerubbabel, the Prayer of Simon ben Yochai, the Signs of the Messiah, and Midrash Wayissou, which were published by A. Jellinek in his Bet ha-Midrash.² Although there are also parallel descriptions in later Christian texts, it is difficult to believe that Jewish writers would borrow their basic description of the physical appearance of the man of lawlessness from Christians. Therefore, it may be assumed that the parallel portions of our present text originated in Jewish circles. Of course, in its present form the entire section was reworked by a Christian editor who inserted the description of the true Christ and modified the description of the works of the Antichrist to agree with a Christian typology.

From chapter 3 we learn little about the speaker or his audience, which is addressed in a homiletical style (cf. e.g. 3:1, 13f., 18). There is also little evidence for dating this section; all that can be said is that the description of the true Christ is post-Christian, and that it is later than the Jewish document to which it was joined.

Chapter 4

This chapter may be outlined in the following manner:

1. The martyrdom of Tabitha (4:1-6).
2. The martyrdom of Elijah and Enoch (4:7-19).
3. The persecution of the righteous (4:20-29).
4. The martyrdom of the sixty righteous men (4:30-33).

One of the noticeable literary features of this section is the manner in which the martyrdoms parallel one another. The following chart displays the most obvious parallels:

TABITHA	ELIJAH-ENOCH	SIXTY MARTYRS
will hear that the shameless one has revealed himself in the holy place	will hear that the shameless one has revealed himself in the holy place	will hear
she will put on her garment		they will gird on the breastplate

² A. Jellinek, Bet ha-Midrash (Jerusalem, 1938) vol. 2, pp. 54-57 (Apocalypse of Zerubbabel); vol. 4, pp. 117-26 (Simon ben Yochai); vol. 2, pp. 58-63 (The Signs of the Messiah); vol. 3, pp. 1-5 (Midrash Wayissou).

she will pursue him up to Judea scolding him up to Jerusalem	they will come down and fight with him	they will run to Jerusalem and fight with the shameless one
Tabitha delivers a speech scolding the shameless one	Elijah and Enoch deliver a speech scolding the shameless one	the sixty deliver a speech scolding the shameless one
then the shameless one will be angry	the shameless one will hear and he will be angry	he will hear and he will be angry
description of martyrdom	description of martyrdom	description of martyrdom resurrection of Tabitha	resurrection of Elijah and Enoch a second scolding speech	a second scolding speech
	two additional episodes which include an ascension

The Elijah-Enoch martyrdom, written in Christian circles, is strongly influenced by the martyrdom of the two witnesses in Revelation 11:1–12. Most interpreters of Revelation identify the two witnesses described there as Elijah and Moses, but from the time of Hippolytus onward a number of Church Fathers reinterpreted the passage in Revelation to apply to Enoch and Elijah, the two men who had never died. Since Elijah was taken to heaven in a fiery chariot (2Kgs 2:11), it was generally assumed that he never died. The case for Moses, although less clear, was made in certain Jewish circles because the burial place of Moses was never found (Deut 34:5f.). The case for Enoch was stronger than the one for Moses, and probably much older since it is clearly set forth in 1 Enoch. Consequently, it was possible for Christian exegetes to replace Moses with Enoch, particularly if they had misgivings about Moses' reputed longevity.³

The Martyrdom of Tabitha was also composed by a Christian author. The name, which means "gazelle," is that of a woman from Joppa, who was also known as Dorcas. In Acts 9:36–41 a story is told of the manner in which Peter raised her from the dead. Lacking any report of her subsequent death, it must have been assumed that she was still alive and would survive in order to serve as a witness in the last days. Her speeches are quite similar to those of Enoch and Elijah, and like them she is resurrected to deliver a concluding rebuke to the shameless one.

When we turn to the story of the sixty martyrs, the account is much simpler. It has nothing that marks it as distinctively Christian. There is no resurrection. There is nothing to suggest that the sixty men previously shared the "deathless" nature of the first three martyrs. When they speak of the powers of the shameless one, they liken them to the powers "which the prophets have done," a phrase that contrasts with a Christian version in 3:12, "He will do the works which the Christ did." The context in which the third martyrdom is set is smoother than that of the earlier martyrdoms. Tabitha heard about the appearance of the shameless one and accused him of being "hostile to all the saints," but the persecution of the saints had not yet been described. In the case of the sixty, however, they girded on their armor and fought with the shameless one in response to the persecution of the saints after it is fully described. The present location of this martyrdom is anticlimactic. The first two martyrdoms are far more spectacular. Tabitha was resurrected to scold a second time. Enoch and Elijah are resurrected, scold and fight again, and apparently ascend in full view of all the people of the world. It is difficult to see why anyone would want to add a relatively simple martyrdom tale concerning sixty pious men immediately after such a spectacular account. It is more reasonable to assume that the spectacular accounts were inserted into an original martyr tale written on a more modest scale.

In view of the preceding arguments, the present section may be understood to have originally contained a Jewish account of the persecution of the saints followed by the martyrdom of the sixty. A later Christian editor inserted the first two martyrdoms. There are also some features in the account of the persecution of the saints, such as the dominical words of the Christ in 4:27, that suggest that the Christian editor expanded the original persecution scene.

³ For a brief discussion on the manner in which Enoch came to be more highly regarded in Christian circles than in early rabbinic circles cf. G. H. Box, APOT, vol. 1, p. 482; J. T. Milik, The Books of Enoch: Aramaic Fragments of Qumran Cave 4 (Oxford, 1976) p. 7. Cf. also R. Bauckham, "The Martyrdom of Enoch and Elijah: Jewish or Christian?" JBL 95 (1976) 447–58.

As with chapter 3 we learn little about the speaker, although he could be a prophet. This chapter lacks the type of direct address that was found in the previous chapter. It is written in a narrative style and was possibly intended for general circulation within the Jewish and Christian communities. The section does not contain any specific historical allusions that might be of significance for dating either its Christian or Jewish strata.

Chapter 5

The oracles in the final chapter describe the following events:

1. Many who witness the persecution of the righteous flee from the Antichrist and denounce him (5:1).
2. The Christ sends angels to save those who are sealed. Gabriel and Uriel lead them to paradise (5:2–6).
3. Cosmic signs occur and sinners rebuke the Antichrist because he misled them so that they are destined to suffer famine and thirst (5:7–14).
4. The Antichrist laments his end, pursues the saints, and fights against the angels (5:15–21).
5. There is a description of a cosmic fire (5:22f.).
6. The byways speak describing the coming judgment (5:24–29).
7. After a description of the Lord's judgment, Elijah and Enoch return to kill the son of lawlessness (5:30–32).
8. There is a description of the death of the Antichrist (5:33–35).
9. The chapter concludes with a description of the beginning of the millennium (5:36–39).

The series of oracles found in this section is somewhat difficult to analyze. There are no specific historical references. The material is drawn from traditional apocalyptic lore common to both Judaism and early Christianity. On the basis of what we have concluded about the admixture of Jewish and Christian materials in the previous sections, we are inclined to confront the present section with the a priori assumption that it contains an early Jewish stratum that has been supplemented by a Christian editor. Unfortunately, the process of disentangling the Jewish and Christian strata will require a considerable amount of further research. At this point in our research we can only point to isolated examples that support our a priori assumption.

One example of the mixing of Jewish and Christian strata may be seen at 5:2–6, where there appear to be two slightly different versions of the salvation of the saints. The second version may well be the earlier one. It describes the return of the saints to Eden in terms of the Exodus motif. "Gabriel and Uriel will become a pillar of light leading them into the holy land." The version that now stands first is somewhat more elaborate and betrays a Christian inclination. The Christ will send sixty-four thousand angels to save "those upon whose forehead the name of Christ is written." That statement should be contrasted with the statement in 1:9, where it is "the Lord" who is quoted as saying that "I will write my name upon their forehead." The reference in 5:11 to "the Christ who created us" also helps to identify this portion of the text as the work of a Christian writer.

A second example of the mixing of strata may be seen in the doublet concerning the burning of the earth. The earlier version occurs at 5:22f., where "the Lord" commands the fire that prevails over the earth in a manner reminiscent of the Flood story. The Christian version is found at 5:36f., where "the Christ" comes forth with his saints and it is reported that "He will burn the earth."

There is no clear identification of either the speaker or the audience in this chapter, but presumably it is intended to be taken as the word of a prophet addressed to the larger community of Christians and Jews. The chapter opens with people fleeing from the Antichrist, who persecuted sixty righteous men in Jerusalem; but the scene is enlarged in this section when the writers begin to describe the final events on a cosmic scale.

Text

Until recently, the two most important manuscripts of the Apocalypse of Elijah were those edited by G. Steindorff.⁴ The earliest manuscript, which Steindorff dated in the fourth century, was written in Akhmimic, and the second manuscript, which he dated at the beginning of the fifth century, was written in Sahidic. In addition to the Apocalypse of Elijah, both manuscripts contained the text of the Apocalypse of Zephaniah. The history of both of these manuscripts was discussed in the introduction to the Apocalypse of Zephaniah, to which the reader is referred.

In addition to the two manuscripts published by Steindorff, fragments of two additional manuscripts have long been available. One was written in Sahidic and the other in Greek. The Sahidic fragment, which contains only the opening section of the text, was written at the end of a manuscript now preserved in the British Museum as Orient. 7594; it was published by E. A. W. Budge in 1912.⁵ The manuscript contained the books of Deuteronomy, Jonah, and Acts. The Sahidic fragment itself was added in a later hand and has been dated in the first half of the fourth century.⁶

The Greek fragment contains only a few words that parallel the Akhmimic text at 5:30–32. Nevertheless, it is an important witness to support the assumption that there was a Greek text underlying the present Coptic texts. It also bears witness to the close relationship between the Greek text and the Akhmimic translation. The fragment, which was first published by E. Pistelli,⁷ was also dated in the fourth century.

Of the manuscripts available at the time when the present translation was begun, the Akhmimic manuscript was the most complete. Consequently, the Akhmimic text was chosen as the basis for the translation presented here. After that translation was completed, a new papyrus manuscript (4th–5th cent.) from the Chester Beatty Library and Gallery of Oriental Art (inventory no. 1493) was edited by A. Pietersma, S. T. Comstock, and H. Attridge.⁸ During the final stages of preparing the present work for publication, the editors of the Chester Beatty Papyrus very generously permitted me to make use of a prepublication version of their text so that it was possible to take advantage of many of its readings to supplement and improve the present translation. The Chester Beatty Papyrus is the most complete manuscript now available. It is written in Sahidic and covers ten folios, which contain the text of the Apocalypse of Elijah from verse 1:1 to 5:15a.

Inasmuch as the Akhmimic text contains three lacunae, it had to be supplemented by following the Sahidic text. The only manuscript evidence available for the Sahidic text at the time the translation was begun was the manuscript published by Steindorff,⁹ and that was used to fill in two lacunae. It was not possible to fill in the third lacuna until a copy of the Chester Beatty Papyrus was made available, because it is the only manuscript that contains that portion of the text. As a result of the procedure that had to be followed, the basic text used for the present translation is the Akhmimic version, but it was supplemented by readings taken from Sahidic manuscripts in the following manner:

Chapter 1:1–2:15b	follows the Akhmimic text.
Chapter 2:15b–2:30a	follows the Chester Beatty Papyrus.
Chapter 2:30b–4:2	follows the Akhmimic text.
Chapter 4:3–4:15a	follows the Sahidic manuscript edited by Steindorff.
Chapter 4:15b–5:13a	follows the Akhmimic text.
Chapter 5:13b–5:23a	follows the Sahidic manuscript edited by Steindorff.
Chapter 5:23b–5:39	follows the Akhmimic text.

⁴ Die Apokalypse des Elias, eine unbekannte Apokalypse und Bruchstücke der Sophonias-Apokalypse.

⁵ Coptic Biblical Texts in the Dialect of Upper Egypt, pp. lv–lvii, 270f.

⁶ See the review of Budge's work by W. E. Crum in ZDMG 66 (1912) 782.

⁷ Papiri greci e latini, vol. 1, p. 16, no. 7.

⁸ The Apocalypse of Elijah: Based on Pap. Chester Beatty 1493.

⁹ Die Apokalypse des Elias.

Ancient witnesses

Both Steindorff¹⁰ and J.-M. Rosenstiehl¹¹ have provided surveys of ancient witnesses to apocryphal works that have been attributed to Elijah. There are three types of witnesses: early lists of canonical and noncanonical works, citations in early Christian writings, and a complete Hebrew text also known as the Apocalypse of Elijah.

The most important lists are: the Stichometry of Nicephorus, the closely related Synopsis of Sacred Scripture of Pseudo-Athanasius, the Catalogue of the Sixty Canonical Books, and a list of ancient works preserved in the Apostolic Constitutions. Most lists do not provide much information about the text beyond the canonical status and the title, which may appear in a slightly different form from list to list. The Stichometry of Nicephorus, however, reports that the length of the work was 316 stichoi (lines). On the basis of that bit of information, Steindorff¹² noted that the work was approximately the same length as Paul's Epistle to the Galatians. He then compared the length of a Coptic (Bohairic) text of Galatians with the length of the Coptic (Akhmimic) text of the Apocalypse of Elijah and discovered that the Apocalypse of Elijah was about 7 percent shorter than Galatians. Nevertheless, Bohairic may be written a bit more pleonastically than Akhmimic, and the parallel is probably close enough to represent a recension of the Apocalypse of Elijah cited in the Stichometry of Nicephorus. An argument of that type merely establishes the possibility that the present text is the one mentioned by Nicephorus. The possibility is strengthened by two facts: First, it is significant that we have five surviving manuscripts of the present work. That would indicate that it was rather widely used, an important criterion for a work to be included in the ancient lists. Secondly, it should be noted that the present text circulated in two separate manuscripts with the Apocalypse of Zephaniah. In the lists of Nicephorus and Pseudo-Athanasius, the two works are listed side by side. In the Catalogue of the Sixty Canonical Books the order of books is: the Apocalypse of Elijah, the Vision of Isaiah, and the Apocalypse of Zephaniah.

At the present stage of research, we can only speak of the possibility that the ancient lists referred to the present Apocalypse of Elijah because citations in early Christian writings clearly bear witness to other works attributed to Elijah. In his Commentary on Matthew (27:9) Origen traced Paul's quotation in I Corinthians 2:9 to the Apocalypse of Elijah (in Secretis Eliae). Jerome (Epistle 101 to Pammachius and Commentary on Isaiah, vol. 17) did not deny that the quotation was to be found in the Apocalypse of Elijah, but he denies that Paul was dependent on an apocryphal work. The relevant point, however, is that the ancients were familiar with an Apocalypse of Elijah that spoke of things "which the eye has not seen nor the ear heard." No such phrase is to be found in our apocalypse.

Three ancient witnesses attribute citations to Elijah without specifically identifying the work that contained them as the Apocalypse of Elijah. The first of these is Epiphanius (AdvHaer 42), who claimed that the quotation in Ephesians 5:14 was circulated "in Elijah" (empheretai para tōi Eliai). That quotation is not found in the Coptic Apocalypse of Elijah. The second witness is the writer of the Pseudo-Titus Epistle.¹³ He attributed a description of souls tormented in Gehenna to "the prophet Elijah." No such description is found in the Coptic Apocalypse of Elijah. The third witness is a Greek fragment published by F. Nau,¹⁴ which contains a description of the Antichrist quite similar to the description that appears in the Testament of the Lord; but the Greek description is introduced by the statement that "Elijah the prophet spoke concerning the Antichrist." In that case, the fragment parallels an episode in the Coptic Apocalypse of Elijah that contains a description of the Antichrist, but the details of the two descriptions are quite different.

The only other complete Apocalypse of Elijah to survive is a Hebrew text published by A. Jellinek.¹⁵ The Hebrew text is significantly different from the Coptic work. It more nearly approximates the form of an apocalypse. The text begins with a detail from 1 Kings 19:5, ¹⁰ Ibid., pp. 20–22.

¹¹ L'Apocalypse d'Élie, pp. 13–15.

¹² Die Apokalypse des Elias, p. 14.

¹³ See HSW, vol. 2, p. 158.

¹⁴ F. Nau, "Methodius-Clement-Andronicus," Journal Asiatic 9 (1917) 454.

¹⁵ Bet ha-Midrash, vol. 3, pp. 65–68.

where we are told that Elijah "lay down and slept under a broom tree; and behold an angel touched him." The writer of the apocalypse then informs us that Michael, the Great Prince, revealed to Elijah on Mount Carmel a vision concerning the end. The vision begins with a brief spiritual tour of various heavenly regions, in which he sees a burning fire, stars in combat, and souls being judged according to their deeds. Then he is told that a false ruler (i.e. the Antichrist), who is known by many different names, will appear. A description of the "signs" of that ruler is given. This one section has close parallels with the Coptic Apocalypse of Elijah. Thereafter the Hebrew apocalypse describes the various kings who will appear at the end of the age, the advent of the Messiah, and various other eschatological events. Although both the Hebrew Apocalypse of Elijah and the Coptic Apocalypse of Elijah deal to some extent with similar matters, the only point of close verbal agreement is in the description of the signs of the Antichrist.

When Jellinek first published the text of the Hebrew Apocalypse of Elijah, he traced its composition to Persia in the Gaonic period,¹⁶ but there is reason to believe that the writer made use of much earlier traditions. That possibility was rather clearly established with regard to the signs of the Antichrist by W. Bousset¹⁷ and more recently by J.-M. Rosenstiehl.¹⁸ One suspects that there are other antique traditions contained in the Hebrew Apocalypse of Elijah. Steindorff was probably correct in suggesting that it is possible that "both writings have been partially created out of the same Hebrew source."¹⁹

Original language

Portions of the text of the Apocalypse of Elijah have survived in both the Sahidic and Akhmimic dialects of Coptic as well as in Greek. It is generally assumed that the Apocalypse was translated from Greek, and there is no reason to deny that assumption, especially in light of the existence of a fragment of Greek text that has survived.

When Steindorff published his edition of Die Apokalypse des Elias, he offered convincing evidence that the Sahidic version was translated from Akhmimic.²⁰ The evidence was primarily in the form of unusual Akhmimic features that appeared in the Sahidic text which he edited. It seemed reasonable to assume that a translator of the Sahidic text found some puzzling constructions in the text from which he worked. Being unable to translate them or careless about translating every expression, he allowed them to enter the Sahidic text. In strong contrast to the Sahidic manuscript edited by Steindorff, the newly discovered Chester Beatty Papyrus provides a different sort of evidence. It contains essentially the same Sahidic text as that found in Steindorff's edition, but without the unusual Akhmimic features. It is also more extensive. On the basis of a limited study of the evidence provided by the new Chester Beatty Papyrus, it seems reasonable to conclude that the Akhmimic and Sahidic texts represent independent translations from the Greek. The problem deserves further study. The strange Akhmimic features in Steindorff's Sahidic manuscript remain puzzling. Perhaps they are due to a scribe whose native dialect was Akhmimic, thereby making him more familiar with the Akhmimic version.

Date

Since there are Coptic manuscripts of the present text dated to the early fourth century at the latest, the original Greek text can scarcely be later than the end of the third century. On the other hand, the text in its present form is obviously post-Christian. At verses 4:13f. there seems to be dependence on Revelation 11:8f. At verse 1:2 there is apparently a quotation from 1 John 2:15, a writing that shares with the Apocalypse of Elijah a concern for the last days and the coming of the Antichrist (1Jn 2:18). The dating of these documents from the Johannine circle remains a problem for New Testament scholars. Nevertheless, an extremely ¹⁶ Ibid., p. xviii.

¹⁷ The Antichrist Legend, trans. A. H. Keane (London, 1896) pp. 108f., 156.

¹⁸ "Le Portrait de l'antichrist," Pseudépigraphes de l'Ancien Testament et manuscrits de la mer morte, vol. 1, pp. 45-63.

¹⁹ Die Apokalypse des Elias, p. 22.

²⁰ Ibid., pp. 16-18, 23-31.

conservative guess at the date when both 1 John and Revelation might be available for use together by a Christian writer in Egypt would scarcely fall before the middle of the second century. Consequently, it is possible to set a reasonable date somewhere between A.D. 150 and 275 for the final composition of the present work. Such scholars as E. Schürer,²¹ W. Bousset,²² and J.-M. Rosenstiehl²³ have concluded that the work must be dated after the middle of the third century, and it is probable that the document was composed closer to 275 than to 150. Nevertheless, most of the evidence used for dating the text will need to be revised in terms of the additional information provided by the new Chester Beatty Papyrus. Although the new portion of text is not large, it radically changes our understanding of chapter 2, the primary chapter consulted by previous scholars in an attempt to discover historical allusions of value for dating. Until scholars have time to appraise carefully the new material, the date of the final composition should be left open.

Most scholars who have studied the Apocalypse of Elijah have concluded that it is a composite work containing both Jewish and Christian materials. The task of sorting out the various passages to be assigned to each group is still being pursued. Once that has reached a state of general consensus, it will be possible to examine the Jewish data separately and propose a date for its composition. That task should be carried out with a close examination of related Jewish works such as the Hebrew Apocalypse of Elijah,²⁴ in order to determine more precisely the nature of a possible common ancestor. Until that is done, any statement about a date for the earlier Jewish material in this tractate remains too conjectural. Nevertheless, the Jewish stratum seems to predate the destruction of the Jewish quarter in Alexandria in A.D. 117.

Provenance

The events described in chapters 3 and 4 are eschatological events that will take place in Jerusalem. They are part of the eschatological lore that anticipates the appearance of the Messiah in that city. Chapter 3, however, describes events that will occur in Egypt before the time of the Antichrist. It is that interest in Egypt which betrays the provenance of the writers of this work. The Jewish community in Alexandria may have been the home of the writer of the Jewish portions of the work. Chapter 2:15 apparently mentions the removal of "the wise men" to that city. It is quite possible that the Christian reworking of the document also took place in that city. One of the sources of the present work is the Oracle of the Potter,²⁵ which expresses a very hostile attitude toward "the city by the sea." In the present text, the hostility is removed, and the wise men are taken there in much the same way as Jews are returned to Jerusalem in 2:39.

Theological concerns

The theology of the present document is not the product of a single writer or community. It is only natural that a work that contains both Jewish and Christian strata would express different theological concerns in different parts of the document. Therefore, it is obvious that a simple survey of the various statements concerning God, angels, and men would scarcely do justice to the complexity of this important text. It is also obvious that no final statement can be made about the theological concerns of the several parts of the document until research on the present text reaches a point where there is general agreement on the respective Jewish and Christian components. Therefore, the following survey must be limited to an attempt to review the theological content of the text on the basis of our present understanding.

A discussion of the theology of the various chapters of this document must distinguish between the earlier Jewish stratum and the later Christian additions. From a literary point of view, it is probable that the Jewish document itself was composed of several different

²¹ Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi (Leipzig, 1898–1901) vol. 3, p. 368.

²² Die Religion des Judentums in späthellenistischen Zeitalter (Tübingen, 1926) p. 46.

²³ L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 75.

²⁴ Jellinek, Bet ha-Midrash, vol. 3, pp. 65–68.

²⁵ See p. 1

sources. It is quite likely that chapter 1, which deals with prayer and fasting, was once an independent document. However, there are only very slight differences between the basic theological framework of the Jewish portion of chapter 1 and the theology expressed elsewhere in the Jewish stratum. Consequently, it is possible to describe the Jewish theology contained within this document as a unity.

The view of God expressed in the Jewish document is that he is the enthroned Creator of the heavens who has prepared a place for the righteous. One slight discrepancy between chapter 1 and the rest of the document is that in chapter 1 the place prepared with thrones and crowns is within a heavenly city. Elsewhere the place of the righteous is expressed in terms of Exodus typology as a "place of rest" or "the holy land," which is likened to the garden of Eden, where the tree of life is found.

The God who appears in the Jewish document may also be described as a Lord of history who raises up kingdoms and brings them down as he hastens this age to its end. The righteous kings are opposed to idols, confess that the name of God "is one," and care for his house. God demands that his Law be obeyed, and prepares his wrath for sinners who disobey. Under his command are angels—including Gabriel and Uriel—who lead the righteous to their place of reward. There are also thrones of death who bar the way for the unrighteous, and there are demons who probably served to punish sinners.

Within the world there is a dualism of good and evil. The righteous obey the Law and are part of the Covenant. The sinners disobey and are cut off from the Covenant so that they are under God's wrath. The kingdoms of the earth are also good or evil as each one follows in its turn. As history moves toward its culmination, two human leaders will appear. The one expected to lead the righteous is a prophet like Moses, who will perform signs and wonders. The text does not describe this messianic figure directly. Knowledge of the Messiah must be extrapolated from the figure of the lawless one, who is a false Messiah. The false Messiah, who rules as an earthly monarch, will also do the signs and wonders that the prophets did, but the righteous will be able to recognize him by the signs on his head. Although the forces of evil come to dominate at the end of the age under the rule of the lawless one who will torture and slay the righteous, this world is not regarded as totally evil. So long as the righteous remain in it, the sun will rise and the earth will bear fruit. It is only when the righteous are removed that natural calamities will abound and the sun will fail to rise.

In its discussion of the final destiny of the righteous, the Jewish document contains an apparent discrepancy between chapter 1 and later sections of the text. In chapter 1, the righteous who die are led to a heavenly city by the angels. Elsewhere we are told that those who flee the lawless one will "lie down as one who sleeps." Their spirit and soul returns to the Lord, but their body is turned into stone until the day of the great judgment when they will be resurrected and find a place of rest. Presumably the place of rest is the holy land, to which the righteous are led by Uriel and Gabriel. Although there is a conflict between this view and the one expressed in chapter 1, the Jewish writer who joined the two together apparently saw none. He could easily have interpreted the journey to the heavenly city as the route the soul followed after death to await the day of judgment and resurrection.

The destiny of the unrighteous is the opposite of that of the righteous. In chapter 1 they are prevented from reaching the heavenly city by the thrones of death. Elsewhere the wrath of God is brought upon them in the form of a final judgment by fire. They do not share in the rest. There is no way of knowing whether or not the writer expected the unrighteous to be resurrected for their final judgment. There is no specific mention of it.

It is important to note the recurrence of the Exodus motif in the latter part of the document. It seems reasonable to assume that the writer's thinking about the Messiah and false Messiah was stimulated by Deuteronomy 18:18, 20. In verse 18 God promises to send a prophet like Moses, but in verse 20 he speaks of the false prophet who "presumes to say in my name a thing I have not commanded him to say." The problem of discerning between the true and the false eschatological prophets was of crucial importance to the writer of this text.

The Christian theology expressed in this text is strikingly different. This is true despite the fact that the Christian editor must have accepted in a general way the Jewish theology contained in the document he emended. In the Christian text, the merciful God of glory is virtually identified with the Christ, the Son of God. Both God and Christ are hailed as Creator, and it is God who "changed himself (to be) like a man when he was about to come to us so that he might save us."

The dualism within the Christian additions is not between good and evil men, but it is between God and Satan. The son of lawlessness, the Antichrist, is identified with Satan in the same way that the Christ is identified with God. Within the world, the Christ is God incarnate and the Antichrist is Satan incarnate. Therefore the struggles are no longer those of human adversaries, but a cosmic struggle between God and Satan in an effort to remove man from captivity of this age and bring him to the kingdom of the Christ. The Christ is consistently portrayed as a triumphant divine figure, walking upon the clouds, shining like the sun, commanding sixty-four thousand angels. The Antichrist is painted in similar colors. He acts against heaven and is hostile to the thrones. He has fallen from heaven. He can do all of the works the Christ did except for giving life.

In contrast to the Jewish theology, which saw the struggle between good and evil largely in terms of human adversaries who were righteous or sinful men, the Christian theology views man as virtually a helpless pawn in the larger cosmic struggle. The world is conceived of as totally evil. Men are captives. All that they can do is to refuse to love the world and endure in the face of martyrdom. Since this world is so dominated by evil, the chief concern of men is to escape. That is possible for the pious who have turned from the world to "live in the Lord." The Antichrist has power to torture them and even kill them, but he has no power over their spirit or soul.

The final destiny of the pious is to live in the kingdom of Christ in a new heaven and a new earth, which will replace this evil one. The fate of the Antichrist is to be destroyed in the judgment by Elijah and Enoch, but his death is no more final for him than it was for the pious. After death he is to be cast to the bottom of the abyss together with all who believe in him.

Relation to canonical books

In its present form the Apocalypse of Elijah reflects a familiarity with the major collections of books within both the Old and New Testaments. The Old Testament works most frequently alluded to are the books within the Pentateuch and Prophets. The Apocalypse of Elijah begins in the style of a prophetic writing. In the Akhmimic text the prophet is called "son of man" (1:1) in imitation of the prophet Ezekiel. At 5:5 there is an obvious use of the Exodus motif. From the collection of later writings, an allusion to Ecclesiastes 12:7 may appear at 4:25. The figure of the lawless one who will appear in the holy places is ultimately derived from the book of Daniel.

Turning to the New Testament, the gospel tradition is most clearly reflected in the list of works the Antichrist will do in imitation of the true Christ (3:9f.). The influence of the Pauline corpus may be noted at many points, but it is most clearly illustrated at 2:41 and 3:1, which make use of the description of the advent of the man of lawlessness in 2 Thessalonians. Literature from the Johannine circle is used at 1:2, which contains a quotation from 1 John 2:15, and at 4:13-14, which is dependent on Revelation 11:8f. In light of the breadth of literary allusions that appear in this text, it is quite probable that the writer knew most if not all of the books of the Old and New Testaments. We cannot, of course, draw any final conclusion about the extent of his canon on the basis of that observation.

Relation to apocryphal books

In the notes that follow, attention is called to parallels that may be found in the Wisdom of Solomon and Sirach. Nevertheless, the parallels are not of such a nature as to suggest that the author of the Apocalypse of Elijah relied on those works. There are no a priori reasons why he might not have known that group of works traditionally referred to as the Old Testament Apocrypha, but neither is there clear evidence that he did. A similar observation may be made with regard to the larger group of anonymous Jewish writings composed between 200 B.C. and A.D. 200. The author discusses Enoch, but there is no obvious dependence on the books of Enoch. He shares apocalyptic motifs with the Sibylline Oracles and the Psalms of Solomon, but the very nature of apocalyptic speculation makes the source of such material difficult to determine.

Introduction to the translation

The translation is based on the Akhmimic text of the Apocalypse of Elijah where that is extant. When it is lacking, it is necessary to follow one or another of the Sahidic manuscripts. Chapters 4:3–4:15a and 5:13b–5:23b follow the Sahidic manuscript edited by Steindorff in Die Apokalypse des Elias. Chapter 2:15b–2:30a follows the Chester Beatty Papyrus edited by A. Pietersma, S. T. Comstock, and H. W. Attridge.²⁶

In the notes that follow, reference is made to the Akhmimic text, the Sahidic text, and the several Sahidic manuscripts. Since there is only one Akhmimic manuscript, the designation “Akhmimic text” clearly refers to that unique manuscript. The term “Sahidic text” is used in an unqualified manner only when all of the Sahidic manuscripts available for that portion of the text agree. Otherwise the separate Sahidic manuscripts are named.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 95–98.
 Denis, Introduction, pp. 163–69.
- Bouriant, U. “Les Papyrus d’Akhmim,” Memoires publiés par les membres de la mission archéologique française au Caire. Paris, 1885; vol. 1, pp. 260–79. (A partial publication of the text based on leaves of the MSS available to Bouriant in 1885.)
- Bousset, W. Der Antichrist in der Überlieferung des Judenthums, des Neuen Testaments und der Alten Kirche. Göttingen, 1895; ET 1896. (This work provides an excellent background study for chs. 3–5.)
- . “Beitrage zur Geschichte der Eschatologie,” Zeitschrift für Kirchengeschichte 20 (1900) 103–12. (Published the year after Steindorff’s text appeared, this article provides a first attempt to interpret the text. He suggested that the text had a Jewish background, attempted to identify the historical allusions in ch. 3, and called attention to a number of parallel texts.)
- Budge, E. A. W. Coptic Biblical Texts in the Dialect of Upper Egypt. London, 1912; pp. lv–lvii and 270–71. (This is the first publication of the Sahidic text of Or. 7594 from the BM. At the end of the MS a later scribe has added the opening portion of the Sahidic text.)
- Lacau, P. “Remarques sur le manuscrit akhmimique des Apocalypses de Sophonie et d’Élie,” Journal asiatique 254 (1966) 169–95. (This work contains a large number of helpful grammatical nn. on the text.)
- McNeil, B. “Coptic Evidence of Jewish Messianic Beliefs (Apocalypse of Elijah 2:5–6),” Revista degli Studi Orientali 51 (1977) 39–45. (This article traces the literary background of the figure of a king who walks on water and roars like a lion. He believes that the figure provides “evidence about Jewish messianic beliefs in the first century A.D.”)
- Pietersma, A., Comstock, S. T., and Attridge, H. W. The Apocalypse of Elijah: Based on Pap. Chester Beatty 2018. T&T p. 19, Pseudepigrapha Series 9; Chico, Calif., 1981 (p.) (This important publication makes available the Chester Beatty Papyrus for the first time. The authors have indicated variant readings from all other MSS in the footnotes. Future studies of the Apocalypse of Elijah should begin with this edition of the text.)
- Pistelli, E. Papiri greci e latini. Florence, 1912; vol. 2, p. 16, no. 7.
- Rosenstiehl, J.-M. L’Apocalypse d’Élie. Paris, 1972. (This is the most significant recent study of ApEl. It contains an important introduction to the work, a translation, and extensive nn.)

²⁶ The Apocalypse of Elijah.

- . “Le Portrait de l’antichrist,” Pseudépigraphes de l’Ancien Testament et manuscrits de la mer morte, ed. M. Philonenko. Paris, 1967; vol. 1, pp. 45–63.
- Schmidt, C. “Der Kolophon des Ms. Orient. 7594 des Britischen Museums: Eine Untersuchung zur Elias-Apokalypse,” Sitzungsberichte der Preussischen Akademie der Wissenschaften, philosophisch-historische Klasse. Berlin, 1925; pp. 312–21. (In this article, Schmidt makes sense of the Colophon published by Budge in his Coptic Biblical Texts in the Dialect of Upper Egypt.)
- Steindorff, G. Die Apokalypse des Elias, eine unbekannte Apokalypse und Bruchstücke der Sophonias-Apokalypse. TU 17; Leipzig, 1899. (This masterful work made the full text available in an essentially correct order for the first time. It is the starting point for all subsequent studies of the text.)
- Till, W. “Bemerkungen und Ergänzungen zu den achmîmischen Textausgaben,” Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache und Altertumskunde 63 (1928) 90f. (This work contains some helpful grammatical notes on the text.)
- Von Lemm, O. “Kleine koptische Studien, XXVI, 13–18,” Bulletin de l’académie impériale des sciences de Saint-Petersbourg, 5^e série, 21 (1904) 045–050.

THE APOCALYPSE OF ELIJAH

The call of the prophet

- 1 1 The word of the Lord came to me,^a saying,^b "Son of man, say to this people, 'Why do you add sin to^c your sins and anger^d the Lord God who created you?' "^e
- 2 Don't love the world or the things which are in the world,^f for the boasting^g of the world and its destruction belong to the devil.

ApPaul 3
Ezek 33:1f, 6:1, 12:1, 13:1, 14:2
Isa 30:1
Sir 3:27
PssSol 3:6, 10
1Jn 2:15

Deliverance from captivity is through the Incarnate Son

- 3 Remember^h that the Lord of glory,ⁱ who created everything,^j had mercy upon
- 4 you so that he might save us^k from the captivity of this age.^l For many times the

1En 22:14, 25:3

1 a. For the opening phrase compare Ezek 33:1–2; 6:1; 12:1; 13:1; 14:2. G. Steindorff in Die Apokalypse des Elias, p. 67, called attention to a very close parallel in the ApPaul, which reads: "The word of the Lord came to me, saying, 'Say to this people, 'How long will you sin and add to the sin and anger the God who created you?'" (ApPaul 3).

The last part of this quotation is parallel to the LXX version of Isa 30:1, which reads, "to add sins to sins."

The opening portion of this text has been preserved in the Sahidic text written at the end of BM MS 7594. The best edition of that Sahidic text was provided by C. Schmidt in "Der Kolophon des Ms. Orient. 7594 des Britischen Museums: Eine Untersuchung zur Elias-Apokalyse," Sitzungsberichte der Preussischen Akademie der Wissenschaften, Philosophisch-Historische Klasse, pp. 312–21. The Sahidic text differs from the Akhmimic slightly and is somewhat closer to the ApPaul. It reads "The word of the Lord came to me, saying to me, 'Say to this people, 'Why do you sin and add (reading n)tetnoueh, with Schmidt) sin to your sin and anger (reading n)tetnitcom, with Schmidt) the Lord God who created you?'" In agreement with the ApPaul the text of BM MS 7594 does not include the phrase "son of man," but it does include the phrase "why do you sin?" A similar Sahidic text is provided by the new Chester Beatty Papyrus.

In writing the phrase "to me," the scribe corrected an original a to r in writing šarai. The siglum { } indicates words (or letters) in the Cop. text that are otiose and, therefore, not translated. The siglum [] indicates a letter eliminated by the Cop. scribe in antiquity. The siglum () indicates a passage omitted by the scribe.

b. The text of BM MS 7594 adds "to me" at this point.

c. Reading aj {er} n.

d. The word for anger in the Akhmimic text is tinouks. BM MS 7594 and the Chester Beatty Papyrus read tičōnt.

e. The Akhmimic text reads etahtene-tēne. BM MS 7594 is to be read pentafamie-tēun (the scribe wrote pentauftamie-tēun) in agreement with the Chester Beatty Papyrus.

f. A quotation from 1Jn 2:15. Cf. 1En 108:8; Jas 1:27; 4:4.

g. An important motif in several gnostic texts from Nag Hammadi is the "boasting" of the chief ruler of this world. Cf. CG II 103. 9; 107, 30; 112, 28; 86, 30; 94, 21. The biblical background for the boasting of a demonic power may be traced to Dan 11:36–39; 2Thes 2:3–4. Cf. Ascens 4:2. J.-M. Rosenstiehl in L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 79, called attention to a large number of parallel passages in the Pseudepigrapha as well as in other Jewish and Christian writings that share this writer's negative view of the present world and its domination by Satan.

h. The style of this first section is homiletical. It was written to be preached. The literary units in this section begin with exhortations to "remember" or "hear." These exhortations recall the rhetorical style of Deut. Cf. Deut 9:1; 6:4; 7:18; 8:2, 18; 20:3. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 29, has called attention to the similarity between 1:3 and 1:5. He thought that both sections were Christian interpolations, with intervening text from an earlier Jewish work. It is our opinion that the entire paragraph was introduced by the Christian editor.

i. The Akhmimic text reads "the Lord of glory." BM MS 7594 and the Chester Beatty Papyrus read only "the Lord." The expression "Lord of glory" is a frequent epithet in 1En. Cf. 1En 22:14; 25:3; 27:3, 5; 36:4; 40:3; 63:2; 75:3; 83:8. If Milik's reconstruction of the Qumran fragments of 1En 22:14 is correct, the original Ar. phrase read mr' rbwr. See his work The Books of Enoch: Aramaic Fragments (Oxford, 1976) p. 218.

j. Reading etahtano nho(b) nim. BM MS 7594 and the Chester Beatty Papyrus read pentafamie nka nim. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 80, has called attention to the juxtaposition of the double motif of Creator who also delivers from captivity. He notes the parallels in Isa 44:24f.; 40:21–26; 41:17–20.

k. In the phrase "had mercy upon you so that he might save us," Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 80, assumed that the shift of pronoun was due to a confusion between the Greek words humin and hēmin. It is also possible that a person writing in a homiletical style might have intended the shift. Compare the well-known pronominal change in the famous "credo" of Deut 26:5–10.

l. The idea of souls in captivity in this world was a widespread feature of gnostic theology. CG II 114, 20 contains a simple, basic statement of this doctrine. It reads "And these are the ones who are taken captive by the First Father according to lot. And thus they were shut up in the prisons of the moulded bodies until the consummation of the eon." Cf. Eph 4:8.

devil desired not to let the sun rise^m above the earth and not to let the earth yield fruit,ⁿ since he desires to consume men like a fire^o which rages in stubble,^p and he desires to swallow^q them like water.^r •Therefore, on account of this,^s the God of glory^t had mercy upon us, and he sent his son to the world^u so that he might save us from the captivity.^v •He did not inform an angel or an archangel or any principality^w when he was about to come to us,^x but he changed himself to be like a man^y when he was about to come to us so that he might^z save us [from flesh].^{a2}
7 Therefore become sons to him since he is a father to you.

Eph 4:8
Mal 4:1
Joel 2:5
Acts 7:2
Jn 3:17, 10:36
Phil 2:6-8

What is prepared for both the sealed and the sinners

8 Remember that he has prepared thrones and crowns^{b2} for you in heaven, saying, "Everyone who will obey^{c2} me will receive thrones and crowns among those who are mine."^{d2} •The Lord said, "I will write my name^{e2} upon their forehead and I

Col 1:16; Jas 1:12
Rev 20:4
Rev 3:12, 7:3, 14:1, 7:16

m. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 80, calls attention to 5:18, where the writer claims that it is because of the saints that the sun shines above the earth. He also calls attention to a number of texts dealing with the deceptions and plots of the devil.

The present text contains a number of features that suggest an Egyptian origin. At this point, one is reminded of the Apophis myth. Apophis was a serpent of the Underworld who continually sought to hinder the sun god on his daily journey. For the Christian editor of this text, the devil, who is incarnate as the Antichrist, may be conceived of as a serpent. Cf. 5:33, where the Antichrist is said to "perish like a serpent which has no breath in it."

n. Written atī[al]karpos. In 5:18 the fertility of the land is also attributed to the presence of the saints.

o. BM MS 7594 and the Chester Beatty Papyrus read "the fire."

p. Reading etpēt hn ourōoui, lit. "which runs within straw." The reading is supported by BM MS 7594 and the Chester Beatty Papyrus, which read etpēt hn ourouue, but the Akhmimic MS reads etpēt hn ougray, lit. "who runs with a shout" or "roar." Cf. 1Pet 5:8. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 115, has cited the following parallels for the figure of fire-destroying stubble: Ex 15:7; Isa 5:24; Nah 1:10; Mal 3:19; Joel 2:5; WisSol 3:7; 1En 48:9; 6Ezra 15:23; IQM 11.10.

q. The Cop. word for "swallow" is ōmk. It was translated "consume" in the preceding line.

r. One tradition that developed in the OT was the view that the world, which had once been destroyed by a flood, was threatened with a future destruction by fire. Cf. Zeph 1:2-3, which recalls the flood imagery of Gen 7:4, 23, and Zeph 1:18. The fire imagery is a figure rooted in the practice of herem, which involved burning all the booty after a holy war. When the wicked are finally destroyed in a cosmic holy war, all things will be consumed by fire. Cf. Joel 2:30; 2Pet 3:10. In the present text, however, it is the devil who is held responsible for the desire to consume men like fire and like water. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 80, sees the devil as the executive of God's wrath against Sodom (fire) and against the sinners of Noah's time (water). He also notes the imagery in Ex 15:4-7; Rev 12:15; and Hos 5:10, which is quoted in CD 19.15.

s. BM MS 7594 and the Chester Beatty Papyrus read "and on account of this." They lack "Therefore."

t. At 1:3 the Akhmimic text reads "Lord of glory," which is familiar from 1En. The expression "God of glory" is familiar from Acts 7:2 and Ps 29(LXX 28):3. The passage in Pss is based on a Heb. 'l hkbwd. Contrast the phrase mr' rbwr, which Milik, Books of Enoch, identified as the Ar. antecedent for "Lord of glory" in Enoch. See n. i above.

u. Reading afnnau instead of the scribe's afnnaf. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads afnatnoou, "He will send." Passages such as Jn 3:17 and 10:36 immediately come to mind. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, pp. 49, 80, compares the theology of Isa 63:8-9 (LXX) and cites a long list of Jewish texts that treat "Son of God" as a messianic title.

v. The scribe wrote aijmalōsia for aichmalōsia here and elsewhere.

w. The phrase "or any principality" is lacking in BM MS 7594 and the Chester Beatty Papyrus.

x. Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias, p. 68, called attention to the parallel in Ep. ad Diognetum 7:2. Could this passage reflect a tradition contrary to the Lucan birth narratives?

y. Cf. Phil 2:6-8. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 81, called attention to several Christian interpolations in the T12P: TAsh 7:3; TSim 6:5, 7; TBenj 10:7.

z. BM MS 7594 breaks off at this point, except for a few fragments. It is lacking for about fourteen lines and resumes at vs. 1:13 of the Akhmimic text.

a2. There is a lacuna in the Akhmimic text. The Chester Beatty Papyrus has preserved the writing [s]arx, which would neatly fill the Akhmimic lacuna when joined with the preposition hn.

b2. Cf. Rev 2:10; 20:4. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 81, has already called attention to WisSol 5:16; 1En 108:12; 4Ezra 2:46; AscenIs 9:25; and IQS 4.7.

c2. The scribe began to write eta, but corrected the a to n and continued to write etnacōme nsōi. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads "everyone who will obey his Voice."

d2. "Those who are mine" are probably the righteous, but they might include angels.

e2. Cf. Rev 3:12; 7:3; 14:1; 20:4. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 49, calls attention to Ex 13:9; Deut 6:8. On p. 82 he cites passages that describe men, both good and evil, who were marked by God.

- 10 will seal their right hand, and they will not hunger or thirst.^{r2} •Neither will the son of lawlessness^{g2} prevail over them, nor will the thrones hinder them,^{h2} but they 11 will walk with the angelsⁱ² up to my city.^{j2} •Now, as for the sinners, they will be shamed^{k2} and they will not pass^{l2} by the thrones, but the thrones of death^{m2} will 12 seize them and rule over them because the angels will not agree with them. •They have alienated themselves from his dwellings.

2Thes 2:3

ApPaul 13:1, 14

ApPaul 15-16

The deceivers who oppose the fast

- 13 Hear, O wise men of the land,ⁿ² concerning the deceivers^{o2} who will multiply in the last times so that they will set down for themselves doctrines which do not belong to God, setting aside the Law of God, those who have made their belly their God,^{p2} saying, "The fast^{q2} does not exist, nor did God create it," making themselves strangers to the covenant of God^{r2} and robbing^{s2} themselves of the 14 glorious promises.ⁱ² •Now these are not ever correctly established^{u2} in the firm

2Tim 4:1-5

Phil 3:19

3Mac 7:11

Jer 22:9

Eph 2:12

Jas 1:12, 2:5

f2. Cf. Isa 49:10; Rev 7:16.

g2. The "son of lawlessness" is the most frequent title used in this text to designate the Antichrist. Cf. 3:1, 5, 13, 18; 4:2, 15, 20, 28, 31; 5:6, 10, 32. The Cop. reflects a Gk. huios anomias. That Gk. term is found in Ps 89:22 (LXX 88:22) in a context that speaks of David and his messianic heirs, assuring him that the son of lawlessness will not harm him again. The Heb. text reads bn 'wlh, "son of wickedness," i.e. "a wicked person." "The man of lawlessness" in 2Thes 2:3 is obviously a similar figure.

h2. These thrones are members of the angelic host. Cf. Col 1:16. In vs. 1:11 they are characterized as "thrones of death," i.e. "angels of death," who seize sinners.

i2. Angels accompany the souls of the righteous as they leave the world. Cf. ApPaul 13, 14. In TAB the angel of death comes to Abraham disguised in beauty. In TIsaac and TJac, angels are sent for the souls of the Patriarchs. In the ApMos Gabriel removes the soul of Adam.

j2. "My city" is the heavenly Jerusalem. Cf. 4Ezra 8:52; 10:27; 2En 55:2; Heb 11:16; Phil 3:20.

k2. The Chester Beatty Papyrus lacks "they will be shamed."

l2. Reading sen(ou)ôitbe.

m2. Reading nthronos npmou. The scribe wrote ngmau. These are the angels of death that confront the wicked. Cf. ApPaul 15f. for an example of the plight of a wicked soul after death.

n2. This phrase provides another example of the author's homiletical style. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 83, has called attention to "the wise" in Dan 11:33, 35; 12:3. He also noted the use of the term mškyf in a technical sense at Qumran. At 2:15 below "the wise men" are taken to the metropolis by the sea.

o2. BM MS 7594 reads "these deceivers." Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 83, cites TJud 19:4 and other texts where Satan is described as "Prince of error." Cf. AsMos 7; Mt 24:11. 1Tim 4:1-5 provides an interesting counterpoint vis-à-vis the present text. Timothy describes those who enjoy abstinence from foods as "giving heed to . . . doctrines of demons." In the present text, the author is attacking those who make their belly their God and fail to abstain.

p2. Reading (e)staueire ntouhei nnonoute neu. The scribe wrote nnoute instead of nnoute. BM MS 7594 and the Chester Beatty Papyrus read ete peu- noute pe hêtou, "whose belly is their God." Cf. Phil 3:19; 3Mac 7:11.

q2. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 83, has noted that this discussion of fasting may be explained in a Jewish context. The most important single cultic fast in the OT is related to the Day of Atonement; compare Lev 16:29-31; 23:27-32; Num 29:7. The expression for fasting in those passages is "to afflict oneself." In SpecLeg 2.195, Philo says that a purpose of the fast that occurs on the Day of Atonement is to control the tongue, the belly, and the organs below the belly, a view of fasting similar to that of the present text.

There are a number of passages that deal with the fasting of individuals as a work of piety. Cf. Ezra 10:6; Neh 1:4; Dan 9:3; Jdt 8:5-6; TReu 1:10; TSim 3:4. The practice was enthusiastically supported by the Pharisees and other Jewish sects (Lk 18:12; Mt 6:16-18), including the followers of John the Baptist (Mk 2:18-20). The fact that Jesus' earliest disciples were accused of not fasting suggests that during the life of Jesus the freedom to fast or not to fast was still a debatable issue.

r2. Reading eueipe mmou (n)šmmo atdiathêkê m(pnoute) in agreement with BM MS 7594 and the Chester Beatty Papyrus. For references to alienation from the Covenant see Eph 2:12; 4:18; 1Clem 1:1; Deut 29:25; Jer 22:9; and frequently in the documents from Qumran; cf. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 84. Both the sect of Qumran and the early Christians used "covenant" as a technical term to describe their community. Cf. Jer 31:31; Jub 23:16-21.

s2. The Akhmimic text uses the Gk. term aposterei. BM MS 7594 and the Chester Beatty Papyrus have translated it as fôce.

t2. The Akhmimic text uses špôp for "promises." BM MS 7594 and the Chester Beatty Papyrus have erêt. These promises probably refer to the "crowns" and "thrones" mentioned in line 1:8. Cf. PssSol 12:8; Jas 1:12; 2:5. The NT frequently links the promises to the covenants with Abraham, Moses, and David, which were realized in the coming of the Messiah. Cf. Heb 11:13, 39-40, or 2Pet 1:2-4, where the ethical implications are spelled out. The present text does not contain any suggestion that these promises are to be realized in a messianic figure.

u2. Reading nei de desmant en nouaeiê. Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias, p. 72, had mis-faith.^{v2} Therefore, don't let those people lead you astray.^{w2}

Mt 24:4
Mk 13:5

The benefits of the fast

15 Remember that from the time when he created^{x2} the heavens, the Lord created the fast^{y2} for a benefit to men on account of the passions and desires^{z2} which fight 16 against you so that the evil^{a3} will not inflame^{b3} you. •“But it is a pure fast^{c3} which 17 I^{d3} have created,” said the Lord. •The one who fasts continually^{e3} will not sin 18 although jealousy and strife are within him. •Let the pure one fast, but whenever 19 the one who fasts is not pure he has angered the Lord and also the angels. •And he has grieved his soul, gathering up wrath for himself for the day of wrath.

Jas 4:1
1Pet 2:11

Zeph 2:3, 1:15,18

Ezek 7:19
Rom 2:5

20 ^{f3}But a pure fast^{g3} is what I^{h3} created, with a pure heart and pure hands.ⁱ³
21 I^{j3} releases sin.^{k3}
It heals diseases.
It casts out demons.^{l3}
22 It is effective up to the throne of God for an ointment^{m3} and for a release from sin by means of a pure prayer.

Pss 24:4

PssSol 3:8

divided the reading as semante nnoaeis, giving a positive rather than a negative reading, but the use of an in BM MS 7594 and the Chester Beatty Papyrus confirms the reading with en. The text of BM MS 7594 also requires some reconstruction. It should read nai ete n(se)semont an (n)ouoeis nim, “these who are not correctly established at all times.” This reconstruction is supported by the Chester Beatty Papyrus.

v2. Reading hn(t)pistis etajraeit. BM MS 7594 reads hn tpistil[s]. It was also necessary to restore the article in the Akhmimic text because the relative clause requires a definite antecedent. The scribe originally wrote hm pistis etachraeit. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads hn tpistis etajrēu.

w2. Reading nei etmmo for “those people” with Schmidt, “Der Kolophon,” p. 315. Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias, p. 72, had read netmmo. BM MS 7594 reads [n]ai etmmau. A similar warning is found in Mt 24:4 and Mk 13:5.

x2. Reading (j)ntafiano. BM MS 7594 reads intafamie. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads jintafamie.

y2. Reading rpmeeue (je) apjaeis cōnt n(t)nēstia. Restored on the basis of the parallel with l. 1:3, 8, BM MS 7594 and the Chester Beatty Papyrus.

z2. After the word “desires” the text of BM MS 7594 has a lacuna which is larger than the parallel Akhmimic text can supply. The Chester Beatty Papyrus contains the phrase “which change,” i.e. “changing” or “fickle desires.” For the sense of the passage cf. Jas 4:1; 1Pet 2:11; Tit 2:12. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 84, calls attention to Josephus, War 2.8.2, which speaks of the value the Essenes placed on resisting passions. Cf. Tjos 4:8; 10:1f. The struggle against passions was a hellenistic commonplace. Cf. Plato, Phaedo 83b; Philo, LegAll 2.106; SpecLeg 2.195.

a3. Reading ppo(nē)ros. The reading has been confirmed by the Chester Beatty Papyrus. BM MS 7594 preserved . . . jēros at this point. From here on the BM text breaks off, except for a few isolated letters. Schmidt, “Der Kolophon,” p. 315, suggests that approximately thirteen lines were lost.

b3. The Cop. word šōbh (Akhmimic šōbh) may be used to render the Gk. word ek kaiō in the figurative sense in which it appears in Rom 1:27. It could also reflect the Gk. word phlegō. The Chester

Beatty Papyrus reads “so that the evil [or evil one] will not deceive you.”

c3. Instead of “a pure fast” one could read “clean” or “holy fast.” In vs. 1:20, where the word is found again, the same adjective is used of “hands” and “heart.” Joel 1:14; 2:15 speak of sanctifying a fast. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 84, has noted that the discussion of fasting in this text parallels Isa 58:1–11. In both cases a true fast involves avoiding sin, but the present emphasis on “purity” or “sanctity” of the fast is lacking in Isa.

d3. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads “which he has created.” The use of the first-person pronoun seems to require that the quotation precede the phrase “said the Lord.” In reading the Sahidic text, it is possible to assume that the phrase “The Lord said” begins a new sentence, and that the phrase that follows is to be treated as a quotation.

e3. In the Chester Beatty Papyrus the expression “continually” follows and clearly modifies the verb “sin.” In the Akhmimic text, the word order makes the reference of “continually” somewhat ambiguous. It could be rendered “The one who fasts will never sin,” in agreement with the Chester Beatty Papyrus.

f3. The passage that follows is probably not poetry in the strict sense, but the saying is expressed in obvious parallel construction.

g3. Read (ou)nēstia. Cf. l. 1:16. The reading is supported by the Chester Beatty Papyrus.

h3. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads “what the Lord created.”

i3. Reading hnouhēt (ef)ouaabe mn henčij(eu)-ouaabe for grammatical reasons. The reading is supported by the Chester Beatty Papyrus. The sense recalls Ps 24:4.

j3. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads “For the pure fast releases sin.”

k3. A well-known purpose of fasting on the Day of Atonement is the release of sin. Cf. PssSol 3:8.

l3. Although the phrase “and fasting” is generally considered to be an addition to Jesus' discussion of casting out demons at Mk 9:29, it reflects an ancient view of the importance of fasting for an exorcist.

m3. The Chester Beatty Papyrus adds “for a fragrance.”

The need for single-mindedness

23 Whoⁿ³ among you, if he is honored in his craft, will go forth to the field^{o3} without a tool in his hand? Or who will go forth to the battle to fight^{p3} without a breastplate on? • If he is found, will he not be killed because he despised^{q3} the service^{r3} of the king? • Likewise no one is able to enter the holy place if he is double-minded. • The one who is double-minded^{s3} in his prayer^{t3} is darkness to himself.^{u3} And even the angels do not trust him. • Therefore be^{v3} single-minded in the Lord at all times so that you might know every moment.^{w3}

Subtitle for the remaining portion of the text

1 2 Furthermore,^a concerning the kings of Assyria and the dissolution of the heaven and the earth^b and the things beneath the earth:^c

The Assyrian king of injustice

2 "Now therefore (those who are mine)^d will not be overcome" says the Lord, Mk 13:7
 3 "nor will they fear in the battle."^e • When^f they see [a king]^g who rises in the Deut 1:29f, 7:18 north, [who will be called]^h "the king of [Assyria]" and^h "the king of injustice,"ⁱ Dan 11:40

n3. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 86, viewed the extended figure of speech that begins here as an addition. He thought it had the nature of a logion, which remains unidentified. The peasant and the mercenary suggested to him an origin in the Ptolemaic period, but soldiers and farmers are standard figures in any age.

o3. Reading atka(i)e effieau with W. Till, "Bemerkungen und Ergänzungen zu den achmimischen Textausgaben." Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache und Altertumskunde 63 (1928) 90. We have altered the word order for clearer sense in English.

p3. The words "to fight" are lacking in the Chester Beatty Papyrus.

q3. The parallel Sahidic text published by Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias, pp. 114–45, begins at this point. This phrase is preceded by the words mmof mmaw, "him there." This could be part of a slight variation of the Akhmimic sentence "Will he not be killed?"

r3. Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias, p. 74, restored oph[ik]ion. In Sahidic 1. S3, 2, the form is ophikion. Steindorff correctly identified the word as the Gk. ophphikion, which represents Lat. officium. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 86, suggested that the use of a Lat. official term indicated a date after Diocletian in the 3rd cent. A.D., but that is not necessarily true. There is no reason why such a common Lat. term could not have entered Egypt much earlier.

s3. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 86, has tracked down a long list of parallels for this passage, including IQH 4.14; TASH 3:1–4:1; Jas 4:8; and a very close parallel in the thirteenth canon published by A. Harmack in Die Lehre der zwölf Apostel (TU 2; Leipzig, 1886) p. 231.

t3. Reading (hn) ifproseuchē in agreement with the Sahidic text published by Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads hm teuproseuche.

u3. Reading eie nkeke araf. W. E. Crum, A Coptic Dictionary (Oxford, 1962) p. 101, lists several idioms involving darkness of the heart, i.e. mind. A similar use is probably intended here. To make the mind dark suggests creating a shady, furtive mentality within a man so that the angels will not trust him.

v3. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads "If you become single-minded always in the Lord be wise in the time." The phrase in italics is lacking in Akhmimic. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias, reads *erri ake hn pehroei. ake* should undoubtedly be read sabe, and hroei is quite possibly a corruption of the Akhmimic plural for the word hoou, "day." There are a number of Akhmimic forms in that Sahidic text.

w3. Translating nhate nim. The Sahidic text reads hob nim, "everything." It is possible that the Akhmimic text is corrupt. The point of single-mindedness is to keep the mind from clouding up in a darkening manner so that one will be able to perceive everything or perceive at every moment.

2 a. The Sahidic text omits "Furthermore." The abrupt transition clearly marks the introduction of a new source.

b. For the dissolution of the heaven and the earth cf. vs. 1:4; 4:28; 5:37.

c. The phrase "and the things beneath the earth" is omitted in the Sahidic text.

d. Restoring (nete noui ne) to agree with the Sahidic text. The phrase "Now therefore" is lacking in Sahidic. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 87, assumed that the Akhmimic "Now therefore" was a corruption of the phrase "those who are mine," which is found in Sahidic.

e. The Sahidic text reads "in a battle." Cf. Mk 13:7 and the synoptic parallels. The command not to fear is a traditional OT phrase derived from the institution of holy war. Cf. Deut 1:29f.; 7:18; 20:1.

f. The Sahidic text reads "and when."

g. Restored on the basis of the Sahidic text.

h. Restored on the basis of the Sahidic text.

i. King of injustice is a title of Beliar in Ascensals 4:2.

j. Restored on the basis of the Sahidic text.

4 [he will increase]^j his battles and his disturbances^k against Egypt. •The land will 5 groan together^l because^m your children will be seized. •Many will desire death in Rev 9:6
those days, but death will flee from them.ⁿ

The western king of peace

6 And^o a king who will be called "the king of peace" will rise up in the west.^p
7.8 He will run upon the sea like a roaring lion.^q •He will kill the king of injustice, 1Pet 5:8 and he will take vengeance on Egypt with battles^r and much^s bloodshed.
9 It^t will come to pass in those days^u that he will^v command a [peace]^v and a 10 [vain]^v gift in Egypt. •[He will give]^v peace to these who are holy, [saying].^w
11 "The name of [God]^x is one."^y •[He will]^x give honors to the s[aints]^z and] an Zech 14:9
12 exalting^{a2} to the places of the saints.^{b2} •He will give vain gifts to the house of God. Deut 6:4 13 He will wander around in the cities of Egypt with guile, without their knowing.
14 He will take count of the holy places. He will weigh the idols of the heathen. He 15 will take count of their wealth. He will establish priests for them. •He will command Dan 11:33 that the wise men and the great ones of the people be seized, and they will be brought to the metropolis which is by the sea,^{c2} saying,^{d2} "There is but one

k. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads "the disturbances."

l. Here "land" is used to represent the people who live in Egypt. The writer begins the sentence with this figure, treats the people in the third person, and then shifts to the second person to address them directly when he writes "your children will be seized." This is part of the homiletical style of the writer of this section. The hearers or readers are assumed to be the citizens of Egypt.

m. The word "because" is omitted in the Sahidic text.

n. The phrase "but death will flee from them" is lacking in the Sahidic text. Cf. vs. 2:32 below, which is a precise parallel of Rev 9:6.

o. For the word "and" the Sahidic text reads "then."

p. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 88, has called attention to the messianic attributes of the king of the west. He is king of peace (Isa 9:6), walks on water (?) (Mt 14:25), like a lion (Gen 49:9; 4Ezra 11:37; 12:31f.). He also noted the striking parallel with the description given in the Tiburtine Sibyl.

q. The same figure is used of the devil in 1Pet 5:8. Hippolytus, in his work On the Antichrist, ch. 6, speaks of both the Christ and the Antichrist as lions.

r. The Sahidic text has a singular form: "a battle," or "a war."

s. The word "much" is lacking in the Sahidic text published by Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias.

t. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias, begins the sentence with "And."

u. Reading (b) nnhooue etmmo. This is a standard phrase. Cf. vss. 2:31, 33, 35.

v. Restorations based on readings in the Sahidic text. The Akhmimic text reads "he commanded," a past tense.

w. Restored on the basis of sense. The Sahidic text reads "He will begin to say." There does not appear to be enough room in the Akhmimic text to permit restoration of all of that.

x. Restored on the basis of the Sahidic text published by Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias.

y. Cf. Zech 14:9 and Deut 6:4. According to the History of the Patriarchs, Patrologia Orientalis, vol. 1, p. 142, Mark's first convert in Alexandria was a cobbler whom the evangelist heard shouting heis ho theos, "God is one." It is reported that Mark was surprised that the cobbler knew God's name. The story illustrates the fact that this formula had wide currency within both the Jewish and Christian communities and elsewhere in the hellenistic world. In his volume entitled heis theos (Göttingen, 1926), E. Peterson traced the use of this formula in both Christian and non-Christian circles. In Christian circles outside Egypt there was a strong tendency to expand the acclamation to include either the name of Christ or both the name of Christ and the name of the Holy Spirit.

z. The Sahidic text reads "He will give glory to the priests of God." Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 89, was persuaded that the reading of the Akhmimic text was incorrect at this point. The Sahidic reading, "priests of God" instead of "saints," may be influenced by the use of these texts in monastic circles. The Akhmimic text used the expression "priests of the land" in vs. 2:40 to identify the audience addressed by the writer. The priests appear again at 4:21 together with the saints. The word that is translated "saints" is literally "the ones who are pure" or "holy." It is the word that one would use to designate either the "hasidim" of the OT or the "saints" of the NT.

a2. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 89, reads "restoration." The Cop. word is jise, which means "a lifting up," generally in the sense of "praise."

b2. The Sahidic text has "the holy places."

c2. This metropolis is generally considered to be Alexandria. Cf. The Oracle of the Potter.

d2. Both the Akhmimic and Sahidic texts published by Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias, break off at this point. The Akhmimic text preserves only two letters, i.e. ou, from the quotation that follows. There is a single sheet (two pages) of papyrus missing from the Akhmimic text at this point. The lacuna in Steindorff's Sahidic text is larger and resumes its parallel at vs. 3:7 of the Akhmimic text.

16 language.” •But when you hear, “Peace and joy exist,” I will . . .^{e2}

The evil son on the right

- 17.18 Now I will tell you his signs so that you might know him. •For he has two sons:
 19 one on his right and one on his left. •The one on his right will receive a demonic
 20 face, (and) he will fight against the name of God. •Now four kings will descend 21 from that king. •In his thirtieth year he will come up to Memphis, (and) he will 22 build a temple in Memphis. •On that day his own son will rise up against him and 23 kill him. •The whole land will be disturbed.
 24 On that day he will issue an order over the whole land so that the priests of the land and all of the saints will be seized, saying, “You will repay doubly every 25 gift and all of the good things which my father gave to you.” •He will shut up 26 the holy places. He will take their houses. He will take their sons prisoner. •He will order and sacrifices and abominations and bitter evils will be done in the 27.28 land. •He will appear before the sun and the moon. •On that day the priests of the land will tear their clothes.

A lament for Egypt in those days

- 29.30 Woe to you, O rulers of Egypt, in those days because your day has passed. •The violence (being done to) the poor will turn against you, and your children will be 31 seized as plunder. •In those days the cities of Egypt will groan for the voice of the one who sells and the one who buys will not be heard. The markets of the 32 cities of Egypt^{f2} will become dusty. •Those who are in Egypt will weep together.
 They will desire death, (but) death will flee and leave them.^{g2} Rev 18:11
 33 In those days,^{h2} they will run up to the rocks and leap off, saying, “Fall upon 34 us.” And still they will not die.ⁱ² •A double affliction will multiply upon^{j2} the whole land. Rev 9:6
Hos 10:8
Lk 23:30
Rev 6:16
 35 In those days^{k2} the king will command, and all the nursing women will be seized and brought to him bound. They will suckle serpents. And their blood will be 36 drawn^{m2} from their breasts, and it will be applied as poison to the arrows.^{m2} •On account of the distress of the cities,ⁿ² he will command again, and all the young lads from twelve years and under will be seized and presented in order to teach them to shoot^{o2} arrows.

e2. The translation of the Chester Beatty Papyrus inserted at this point is based on the text provided by A. Pietersma, S. T. Comstock, and H. W. Attridge. They were kind enough to allow me to use the text that will appear under their names in the Texts and Translations: Pseudepigrapha Series, published by the Society of Biblical Literature.

f2. The Chester Beatty Papyrus has a different reading. There is a preposition “in” before “the markets” so that the complete phrase “in the markets of the cities of Egypt” is joined to the preceding sentence. A new sentence is then created by providing a new pronoun so that the following sentence reads “They will become dusty.”

g2. Restoring ⟨tepmou pōt fkaoue. Restoring the conjunctive helps the sense of the passage and provides a precise parallel for the Cop. version of Rev 9:6. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads awō ntemou pōt nsabol mmoou, “and death will flee from them.”

h2. The Chester Beatty Papyrus lacks the phrase “In those days.”

i2. The Chester Beatty Papyrus adds “but death flees from them.”

j2. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads “round about the whole land.”

k2. The Chester Beatty Papyrus adds “in that time.”

l2. The Akhmimic text has the verb sōk abal, “draw forth.” The Chester Beatty Papyrus has sōōng ebol, “suck out.”

m2. O. Von Lemm, “Kleine koptische Studien, X, 4–6,” Bulletin de l’académie impériale des sciences de Saint-Petersbourg, 5^e série, 13 (1900) X, 4, clearly identified the Cop. word klo as the word for “poison.” In an extended discussion he concluded that it was a vegetable poison. The word that follows is sate, which could be the word for “arrow,” “dart,” or less likely an irregular Akhmimic spelling of the Sahidic sate, “fire,” “fiery.” Assuming that it means “arrow,” the Sahidic form should be sote, but the Chester Beatty Papyrus has soto, a form more difficult to interpret.

n2. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads “wars” instead of “cities.”

o2. Reading at(s)ebau atik sate. The restoration is supported by the Chester Beatty Papyrus, which reads nsetsaboou enej.

- 37 p²The midwife who is upon the earth will grieve.^{q2}
The woman who has given birth^{t2} will lift her eyes to heaven, saying, "Why did I sit upon the birthstool,^{s2} to bring forth a son to the earth?"
- 38 The barren woman and the virgin will rejoice,^{l2} saying, "It is our time to rejoice, because we have no child upon the earth, but our children are in heaven."^{w2}

Lk 23:29
Isa 54:1
WisSol 3:13

The return of the Jews to Jerusalem

- 39 In those days, three kings will arise among the Persians, and they will take captive the Jews who are in Egypt. They will bring them to Jerusalem,^{v2} and they will inhabit it and dwell there.^{v2}

Homiletical aside

- 40 Then when you hear that there is security^{w2} in Jerusalem, tear your garments, O priests of the land,^{x2} because the son of perdition^{y2} will soon come.^{z2}

1Thes 5:2f
Jn 17:12
2Thes 2:3

Truncated oracle mentioning the lawless one

- 41 a³In those days, the lawless one^{b3} will appear in the holy places—

2Thes 2:8

Persian-Assyrian wars

- 42 In (those) days^{c3} the kings of the Persians will hasten and they will stand to fight

p2. The passage that follows has a number of poetic characteristics. In addition to parallelism, there is a continual play on the contrast between "earth" and "heaven." The two words are set in antithetical parallelism in ll. 1 and 2, where "The midwife . . . upon the earth" is set in parallel with the mother who "will lift her eyes to heaven." There is a similar antithetical parallelism involving the same two words in the last two lines. By using the same type of parallelism in the opening and closing lines the writer has devised an enclosure that marks off the limits of the poem. The poem may be divided into two stanzas. The first four lines describe the lament of fertile women and the last four lines describe the rejoicing of childless women. The first stanza ends with the word "earth," and the second stanza ends with "heaven."

q2. The Chester Beatty Papyrus adds "then. And."

r2. Reading tetasmise. The scribe wrote tatasmise.

s2. Lit. "the brick." Cf. Ex 1:16, where the Heb. word 'bnym, "stones," is used. They are translated "birthstools." The Egyptian hieroglyphic determinative for the word msi, "to give birth," clearly portrays a woman giving birth in the squatting position that was normal when she was seated on a birthstool.

t2. Lacau, "Remarques," 190, would restore as(n)areše. For the sense of the passage cf. Isa 54:1; WisSol 3:13; 2Bar 10:14-15; Lk 23:29.

u2. The Akhmimic text writes "heaven" in the plural. The Chester Beatty Papyrus uses the singular.

v2. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads "and they will populate it for them again."

w2. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Elie, p. 92, who followed an earlier reading of pōrj, "division," wished to relate this passage to "the house of division," which is apparently his translation of byt plg in CD 20, 22 and 4QpNah 4.1. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads "when you hear that there is security and safety in Jerusalem." The word I have translated as "safety" is asphaleia, and its presence in the expanded reading of the Chester Beatty Papyrus together with a preceding definite article indicates that the preceding noun should be read as ōrj, "security," plus the definite article. The words ōrj and asphaleia are virtually identical in meaning.

x2. This is a homiletical aside to the reader or hearers of this text, who are called "priests of the land." This passage may simply reflect the use of the text in monastic circles.

y2. Reading (p)šēre mpteko. Cf. Jn 17:12; 2Thes 2:3.

z2. Lit. the text reads "he will not delay before he comes."

a3. The Chester Beatty Papyrus begins this sentence with the word "Immediately."

b3. Cf. 2Thes 2:8. Perhaps this figure is to be identified with "the son of lawlessness" at 3:1, 5. In Semitic parlance "son of" can simply mean "one of" a particular class. "The son of lawlessness" could be rendered "the lawless one." The Cop. construction describing the appearance of the "lawless one" here is similar to that used in 3:5 to describe the appearance of the "son of lawlessness."

c3. Reading hnhhooue(etmmo) to make this phrase conform to the reading elsewhere in the text. Cf. 2:35, 39, 42. The Chester Beatty Papyrus also reads "In those days."

43 (?)^{d3} with the kings of Assyria. Four kings will fight with three. •They will spend three years in that place until they carry off the wealth of the temple which is in that place.^{e3}

44 In those days,^{f3} blood will flow from Kos^{g3} to Memphis. The river of Egypt will become blood, and they will not be able to drink from it for three days. Gen 15:18
Ex 7:19f

45 Woe to Egypt and those who are in it.^{h3}

46 In those days, a king will arise in the city which is called "the city of the sun,"ⁱ³ and^{j3} the whole land will be disturbed. (He will)^{k3} flee to Memphis (with the Persians).^{l3}

The Persian triumph

47 In the sixth year, the Persian kings will plot an ambush in Memphis. They will 48 kill the Assyrian king. •The Persians will take vengeance on the land,^{m3} and theyⁿ³ will command to kill all the heathen and the lawless ones. They will command to 49 build the temples of the saints.ⁿ³ •They will give double gifts to the house of God.
50 They^{o3} will say, "The name of God is one." •The whole land will hail^{p3} the Persians.

The reign of the righteous king from the city of the sun

51 Even the remnant, who did not die under the afflictions, will say, "The Lord has

d3. Reading (se)ahē aretou with the word amihe implied. The scribe wrote ahēarit. Von Lemm, Bulletin de l'académie impériale des sciences de Saint-Petersbourg, 5^e série, 21 (1904) XXVI, 14, provided a number of examples of armies "standing to fight." He interpreted the idiomatic use of ōhe erat to mean "to stand over against hostilely." Lemm's emendation was fully justified on the basis of the Akhmimic text alone, but there is now evidence from the Chester Beatty Papyrus that makes Lemm's reading and that provided in the present translation questionable. Unfortunately the Chester Beatty reading contains a lacuna, but the remaining text reads [. . .]hrit, which does not agree with what Lemm proposed.

Lemm saw this section, with its battle between Persia and Assyria, as a recollection of Cyrus and Nebuchadnezzar. The mention of taking treasure from the temple in 2:43 recalled for him the activity of Nebuchadnezzar in Jer 52:19. The subsequent triumph over Assyrians in Memphis in 2:47 he attributed to the Persian kings who overthrew the Babylonians.

e3. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads "carry off the wealth from that place."

f3. The phrase "In those days" is lacking from the Chester Beatty Papyrus.

g3. Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias, pp. 84f., has identified this with the Arabic city of Qūs, the ancient Apollinopolis Parva. It is located a few kilometers south of Coptos on the eastern bank of the Nile.

h3. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads "in Egypt."

i3. Most likely Heliopolis, biblical On. Cf. the LXX text of Gen 41:45; 46:20. The Cop. biblical texts translate the LXX form as tpolis mprē.

j3. Instead of "and" the Chester Beatty Papyrus reads "in those days."

k3. Reading (fn)pōi with the Chester Beatty Papyrus.

l3. The Akhmimic text does not contain the phrase "with the Persians," but that is the sense of the passage. A native Egyptian king will arise in Heliopolis. By associating himself with the Persian kings and assisting them in the plot against Memphis, he will share in their triumph over the Assyrians and come to reign as the "righteous king." The sequence of events is made clear by the new Sahidic text provided by the Chester Beatty Papyrus. I would translate the relevant passages in the following manner: "In the sixth year of the kings, he will flee to Memphis with the Persians. He will plot an ambush in Memphis. He will kill the Assyrian kings. The Persians will take vengeance on the land."

By inserting a preposition and changing the personal pronoun to third masculine singular at two points, the Sahidic text provides a slightly different reading, which clarifies the role of the king from Heliopolis. The Akhmimic text may be interpreted in a similar way, but prior to the publication of the Chester Beatty Papyrus its meaning was not obvious.

m3. See n. 13 for the Sahidic translation up to this point.

n3. The Sahidic text continues to describe the close cooperation between the Persians and the king from Heliopolis. I would translate it as follows: "He will command and they will kill all the heathen and the lawless ones. He will command and they will plunder the temples of the heathen and they will exterminate the priests. He will command and they will build the temples of the saints." It should be noted that the Sahidic text is a bit longer than the Akhmimic text at this point.

o3. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads "he."

p3. The Cop. word ouōšt can mean "worship." It was a normal practice to extend divine honors to the rulers of Egypt, whether natives or conquerors. For example, the Persian kings, Cambyses and Darius, and the Macedonian king, Alexander the Great, were all accorded divine honors.

52 sent us a righteous king so that the land will not become a desert.” • He will Jer 50:12f command that no royal matter be presented^{q3} for three years and six months.^{r3} The Dan 7:25 53 land will be full of good in an abundant well-being. • Those who are alive will go to those who are dead, saying, “Rise up and be^{s3} with us in this rest.”^{t3}

The advent of the son of lawlessness

1 3 In the fourth year of that king,^a the son of lawlessness^b will appear, saying, Mt 24:5
“I am the Christ,”^c although he is not. Don’t believe him!^d

Digression concerning the advent of the true Christ

2 When the Christ comes, he will come in the manner of a covey of doves^e with Mt 3:16 the crown^f of doves surrounding him. He will walk upon the heaven’s vaults with 3 the sign of the cross^g leading him. • The whole world will behold him like the sun Isa 60:1-3 4 which shines from the eastern horizon to the western. • This is how he^h will come, 2Thes 1:7 with all his angels surrounding him.ⁱ Mt 24:27
Lk 17:24

q3. This passage presents the translator with a crux. The Akhmimic text reads lit. “He will command not to give any royal thing (or person).” It has traditionally been emended to read “He will command not to give anything to the king,” but the emendation is not supported by the new Chester Beatty Papyrus, which reads “He will command so that nothing royal will be given.” One might speculate that the passage involves the suspension of certain royal taxes or royal honors.

r3. Josephus, Ant 12.3.3, reports on a three-year remission of taxes for Judah which was ordered by Antiochus the Great. Earlier in Ant 11.8.5 Josephus reported that Alexander the Great agreed to remit taxes during the sabbatical year.

s3. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads “remain.”
3. Cf. Ps 95:11; Heb 3:11, 18; 4:1–11. The psalmist equates “the rest” with the attainment of the land of promise. Subsequently writers easily identified the rest with the realization of eschatological promises in other forms. At this point in the text, the present writer uses a figure close to that found in Ps 95:11, although he has reinterpreted the good land of rest to apply to Egypt. Cf. the following NHL text On the Origin of the World, II, 122:34, “These great signs appeared only in Egypt, signifying that it is like the Paradise of God.” At 4:27 below, the author sets the place of rest in an eschatological context. Surprisingly, it is not part of the kingdom of the Messiah, but it is a lesser place. A writer who was in any way dependent on Heb. would probably not have made that sort of adjustment. It is our opinion that this discussion of “rest” goes back to the early Jewish stratum within the text. Cf. WisSol 4:7; TLevi 18:9; TDan 5:12.

3 a. The scribe left a space before the phrase “in the fourth year of that king.” Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias, p. 86, suggested that it might be the result of the scribe’s attempt to indicate a new section. The Chester Beatty Papyrus has preserved a longer reading at the beginning, which I would restore as hrai nteh[ē ni] mahfto nromp[e], “In the beginning of the fourth year.” Rosenstiehl, L’Apocalypse d’Élie, p. 95, has a long footnote attempting to pin down the significance of “the fourth year.” He calls attention to the three and one half years in Dan 7:25; Lk 4:25; Jas 5:17; Rev 11:3; 12:14; 13:5. But all of those refer to times of suffering for the saints in contrast to the three and one half years of bounty in our text. He then calls attention to the period of forty years in the Tiburtine Sibyl, but he comes to no firm conclusion.

b. “The son of lawlessness” is lacking from the Chester Beatty Papyrus.

c. The Cop. probably translates an ego eimi statement. Cf. Mt 24:5 and the synoptic parallels. This boast of the Messiah is also present in Heb. versions of the Antichrist legend. Cf. Jellinek, Bet ha-Midrash, vol. 2, p. 56 (“ny hw” mšyh) and vol. 4, p. 124 (“ny mšyhkm).

d. Reading pistieue (a)raf.

e. Cf. Mt 3:16 and the gospel parallels. Cf. also Mt 10:16 and 12:39 since the name Jonah means “dove.” The translation “covey of doves” is supported by the Chester Beatty Papyrus, which I would restore to read nrouneh[ou]lal ngrompe. The word mehoual is listed by Crum, Coptic Dictionary, p. 208a, as meaning “nest, dovecot,” but just as the word ohe means both “sheepfold” and “flock” the word for “nest” or “dovecot” may be extended to mean “covey” or “flock.” The Akhmimic word that is translated “covey” is samnt. Crum, Coptic Dictionary, p. 339b, listed its meaning as “collecting place.” It is also used of small bodies of water. I would suggest a semantic evaluation similar to that which occurred in the mah, “nest, brood.” In Middle Egyptian the hieroglyphic determinative for mḥ is the picture of three ducklings in a pool. The duck pond is conceived of as a “brooding place.” That expression may then be used for other “brooding places” and applied to other species of birds.

f. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads “his crown.”

g. Mt 24:30 speaks of the “sign of the son of man” appearing before him. W. Bousset in The Antichrist Legend, trans. A. H. Keane (London, 1896) pp. 232–36, traced the various apocalyptic descriptions of the sign of the son of man, particularly the sign of the cross.

h. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads “the Christ.”

i. Cf. 2Thes 1:7; Mk 8:38; Mt 16:27.

Works of the Antichrist

- 5 But the son of lawlessness^j will begin to stand again in the holy places.^k
- 6 ^lHe will say to the sun,^m "Fall," and it will fall. Mt 24:29
 He will say, "Shine," and it will do it.
 He will say, "Darken," and it will do it.
- 7 He will say to the moon, "Become bloody," and it will do it.ⁿ Joel 2:31
- 8 He will go forth with them from the sky.^o Rev 6:12
 He will walk upon the sea and the rivers as upon dry land.^p Mk 6:48
- 9 He will cause the lame to walk.^q Mt 11:5
 He will cause the deaf to hear.
 He will cause the dumb to speak.
 He will cause the blind to see.
- 10 The lepers he will cleanse.
 The ill he will heal.
 The demons he will cast out.^r
- 11,12 He will multiply his signs and his wonders in the presence of everyone. •He will
- 13 do the works which the Christ did,^s except for raising the dead alone.^t •In this you will know that he is the son of lawlessness, because he is unable to give life.

Signs of the Antichrist

- 14,15 For behold^u I will tell you his signs^v so that you might know him. •He is a

j. Cf. 2Thes 2:4. The figure can be traced to Dan 9:27; 11:31; 12:11. Cf. 1Mac 1:54; Mt 24:15; Mk 13:14. [Cf. also especially TAdam 3:1. — J.H.C.]

k. Reading hnumma (e)touaabe. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads "in the holy place."

l. The passage that follows is probably not poetry in the strict sense, but we have printed it in this form to call attention to the considerable amount of parallelism.

m. The Antichrist was generally expected to produce signs. Cf. 2Thes 2:9; Rev 13:13. Bousset discussed "the wonders of the Antichrist" at length in The Antichrist Legend, pp. 175–81.

n. This sentence is lacking in the Chester Beatty Papyrus. The two preceding sentences lack the phrase "he will say." The order is also reversed. The text reads: "darken, and it will; shine, and it will."

o. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias, resumes its parallel at this point. That text has a difficult reading, which translates as follows: "saying, 'walk upon the dry land,' and you will walk upon the sea and the rivers as upon the dry land." The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads "and he will say 'walk upon the sea and the rivers as upon the dry land.'"

p. Reading souou at Steindorff's suggestion in Die Apokalypse des Elias, p. 88. The scribe wrote sousou.

q. The following list of miracles parallels Mt 11:5. Cf. TAdam 3:1.

r. When the author grants the Antichrist power to cast out demons, one is reminded of Jesus' statement concerning a house divided against itself, Mt 12:24–27.

s. The Sahidic text edited by Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias, reads "which the Christ is going to do." The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads chrēstos in place of Christos. Cf. Jn 2:11; 2:23; 3:2. In 4:31 below the writer speaks of the Antichrist as doing "every power which the prophets did."

t. In the apocalyptic texts mustered by Bousset in The Antichrist Legend, pp. 176–81, there is a disagreement over the ability of the Antichrist to raise the dead. Some texts include that among his abilities as a sign of his power, but others explicitly deny it.

u. The Sahidic text edited by Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias, lacks the word "for."

v. See Bousset, The Antichrist Legend, p. 156, for examples of "The Antichrist in the Character of a Monster." Bousset calls attention to the "original Jewish character" of our apocalypse at this point. Rosenstiehl has collected all of the relevant descriptions together in "Le Portrait de l'antichrist," which appears in Pseudépigraphes de l'ancien testament et manuscrits de la mer morte (Paris, 1967) vol. 1, pp. 45–63.

. . . of a skinny-legged young lad,^w having a tuft of gray hair^x at the front of his bald^y head. His eyebrows^z will reach to his ears. There is a leprous bare spot on the front of his hands. •He will transform himself in the presence of those who see him.^{a2} He will become a young child. He will become old.^{b2} •He will transform himself in every sign.^{c2} But the signs of his head will not be able to change.^{d2} Therein you will know that he is the son of lawlessness.

The martyrdom of Tabitha

1 4 The virgin, whose name is Tabitha,^a will hear that the shameless one has revealed himself^b in the holy places.^c And she will put on her garment of fine 2 linen. •And she will pursue him up to Judea,^d scolding him up to Jerusalem,^e

w. The translation of this section is difficult and uncertain. The texts read as follows: Akhmimic, oupeleč noušēm pe nḥr-šire nšam-ouerēte; Sahidic (text published by Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias), oupeleč noukouei pe nsa-lašeie nšamaref; the Chester Beatty Papyrus, oupeleč nou[koui pe nsalašeie] nšamaratf.

The first word in the Akhmimic text, peleč (= peleč), is unknown, but it is probably a noun. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 98, transcribed the word as Peleg and treated it as a title for Hyrcanus II which was concealed in the Qumran references to plg. That thesis is a bit too speculative for us to follow. Although it must be admitted that if he was correct in interpreting the word "division" in 2:40 as a translation of the Heb. plg his argument would be strengthened. It is clever to say the least. Both references to the appearance of the Antichrist (2:40 and the present passage) contain a reference to Peleg according to his view.

The second word in the description of the Antichrist is a familiar word meaning "small, young." The Akhmimic šēm and the Sahidic kouei are synonyms. They normally precede the noun that they modify. Cf. W. Till's Koptische Grammatik (Leipzig, 1961²) p. 69.

The last word in the Akhmimic phrase given above is šam-ouerēte. The Sahidic šamaref šamaratf is apparently a synonym. The words are written without an article and should normally be translated as an attribute of the preceding noun. The word šamouerēte is a compound expression composed of the word šma, "thin, light, subtle," and ouerēte, "foot, leg." Fortunately, we have a close Heb. parallel for this Cop. phrase. In the HebApEl (in Bet ha-Midrash, vol. 3, p. 65) we read that šwgyw dqym, "his legs are thin." The word dq, "thin, light, subtle," is the precise equivalent of the Cop. šma.

The noun which is modified by both "thin-legged" and "young" is not the same in Akhmimic and in Sahidic. In Akhmimic the word is ḥr-šire, "little servant, lad." When it is modified by the two attributives the phrase reads "a skinny-legged young lad." Rosenstiehl's translation (in L'Apocalypse d'Élie) of the complete phrase as "a little Peleg, young, with slender legs," assumes a less orthodox syntax on the part of the writer.

The noun in Sahidic is sa-lašeie. I know of no reason to ignore Crum's interpretation of this word as "tall," perhaps more lit. "grotesquely tall man." Compare the Ar. gloss indicating a "monstrous form" (Crum, Coptic Dictionary, pp. 333a and 148a). Thus the Sahidic text reads "a skinny-legged young grotesquely tall man." A mention of great height (sometimes ten or twelve cubits) is a frequent characteristic of descriptions of the Antichrist. Cf. Rosenstiehl, Pseudépigraphe, p. 54.

x. The mark of Cain (?), Gen 4:15. The Antichrist cannot change this sign. See 3:17 below.

y. The Akhmimic word is šamehēl, and the Sahidic word is čaloubih. Both forms of the word were discussed by Von Lemm, Bulletin de l'académie impériale.

z. The Chester Beatty Papyrus has bouhe, which Crum (Coptic Dictionary, p. 48a) lists as meaning "eyelid." W. Westendorff, Koptisches Handwörterbuch (Heidelberg, 1977) pp. 30, 496, has added the meaning "Wimper." It seems clear from its use in the present context that the meaning "eyebrow" should also be added.

a2. The Sahidic text reads "He will change himself in your presence."

b2. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) reads "Sometimes he will become old, but other times [reading hinkeop for hinkeop] he will become young again." The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads "Sometimes he will become old but sometimes he will become young again." An interesting theophany of Christ as a child and as an old man is found at the beginning of the Apocryphon of John from Nag Hammadi.

c2. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) reads "in his signs."

d2. The Sahidic text reads "he will not be able to change." Although they may be translated in the same way, the Sahidic text published by Steindorff and the Chester Beatty Papyrus use different forms to express the future tense. The former uses a negative first future and the latter uses a negative third future.

4 a. This is apparently the woman from Joppa, who was also known as Dorcas (Acts 9:36). Peter raised her from the dead. That would suggest that this martyr tale, which is closely parallel to those that follow, was the work of a Christian editor of a later time who may have sought to preserve an etiological detail about the healing blood of Tabitha by writing her story into a martyr tale that paralleled those that follow.

b. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) reads "The one who is shamed appeared."

c. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) reads "in the holy place."

d. Lit. "run after him up to Judea." The Sahidic text reads "and she will run up to Judea."

e. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) reads "and she will scold him. He (is) up to Jerusalem." The introduction of the pronoun "he" is an error.

saying,^f "O shameless one, O son of lawlessness,^g O you who have been hostile to all the saints."^h

3 Then the shameless one will be angry at the virgin. He will pursue her up to 4 the regions of the sunset.ⁱ He will suck her blood in the evening. •And he will 5 cast her upon the temple, and she will become a healing^j for the people. •She will rise up at dawn. And she will live and scold him, saying, "O shameless one, you have no power against my soul or my body, because I live in the Lord 6 always.^k •And also my blood which you have cast^l upon the temple has become a healing for the people."

The martyrdom of Elijah and Enoch

7 Then when Elijah and Enoch^m hear that the shameless one has revealed himself in the holy place,ⁿ they will come down and fight with him, saying,

8 °Are you indeed not ashamed?^p
When you attach yourself to the saints,^q because you are always estranged.
9 You have been hostile to those who belong to heaven.
You have acted against those belonging to^r the earth.
10 You have been hostile to the thrones.^s
You have acted against the angels.^t
You are always a stranger.
11 You have fallen from heaven like the morning stars.^u

2En 20:1

Rev 4:4

Col 1:16

Job 38:7

f. Reading (esjou mmas) je. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) has esjō mmos je. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads esjō m[mos] naf je.

g. This phrase is the same one that is used by Enoch and Elijah in 4:15.

h. The Antichrist's hostility to all the saints, which Tabitha condemns here, is described in some detail in 4:20–29 below.

The Akhmimic text breaks off at this point. There is a single sheet (two pages) of Akhmimic text missing, but the Sahidic text continues uninterrupted and preserves a complete text until the Akhmimic text is resumed.

i. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 100, notes that Tabitha came from Joppa, in the extreme west with respect to Jerusalem.

j. The Cop. word oujai can also be translated "a salvation."

k. A similar statement is made by Elijah and Enoch at 4:15 below.

l. The reading at the beginning of this sentence is provided by the Chester Beatty Papyrus. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) reads simply "Even my blood you have cast."

m. The expectation that Elijah would return before the coming of the Messiah is based on Mal 4:5. The assumption that Enoch would return before the day of judgment is based on 1En 90:31, a part of the Book of Dreams. Bousset, The Antichrist Legend, pp. 203–8, assembled a large number of Christian texts dealing with the return of Elijah and Enoch. Although one assumes that the two witnesses in Rev 11 were probably intended by the author to represent Moses and Elijah, the Christian exegetes began to interpret them as Elijah and Enoch at a very early date, i.e. from the time of Irenaeus and Hippolytus (cf. Bousset, The Antichrist Legend, p. 27).

n. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads "holy places."

o. The passage that follows has several poetic features in addition to the obvious parallelism in ll. 4f., 6f., 9f. The last three lines are parallel to the first three lines, providing an enclosure. In l. 2 there is a contrast between the Antichrist's attempt to attach himself to the saints and his standing firmly against God in l. 11. Within the poem the writer identifies the one who would attach himself to the saints as a devil. The poem has a symmetrical structure when the lines are grouped together in a sequence of three lines (1–3), two lines (4f.), three lines (6–8), two lines (9f.), three lines (11–13). When it is read this way the first group of three lines ends with the phrase "you are always estranged." The second group of three lines ends with the phrase "you are always a stranger," and the last group ends with "you are a devil."

p. Not necessarily a question. It could be read "you are indeed not ashamed."

q. Reading enetouaab for nenetouaab. Cf. the Sahidic text edited by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) 7.22. This line is lacking from the Chester Beatty Papyrus.

r. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads "those who are upon the earth."

s. In the third ch. of the TLevi, the author describes various ranks of angels, including a group described as "thrones." Cf. 2En 20:1; Col 1:16; Rev 4:4. At 1:10f. the "thrones" were conceived of as being potentially hostile to men. Here they are apparently good angels who deserve the respect of the shameless one.

t. The Chester Beatty Papyrus has a slightly different reading for the last two lines, i.e. "you have been hostile to the angels and the thrones."

u. Cf. Job 38:7; Isa 14:12. An elaboration of the fallen star motif is found in 1En 86:1; 88:1–3; 90:24; Jude 13.

You were changed, and your tribe^v became dark for you.

Isa 14:12

- 12 But you are not ashamed, when you stand firmly against God.
You are a devil.

- 13 The shameless one will hear and he will be angry, and he will fight with them in the market place of the great city.^w And he will spend seven days fighting with 14 them.^x • And they will spend three and one half days in the market place dead,^y while all the people see them. Rev 11:8

- 15 But on the fourth day they will rise up and they will scold him saying, “O shameless one,^z O son of lawlessness.^{a2} Are you indeed not ashamed of yourself since you are leading astray the people of God for whom you did not suffer?^{b2} Do you not know that we live in the Lord?”

- 16 As the words were spoken, they prevailed over him, saying,^{c2} “Furthermore, we will lay down the flesh for the spirit,^{d2} and we will kill you since you are unable to speak on that day because we are always strong in the Lord.^{e2} But you are always hostile to God.”^{f2}

- 17,18 The shameless one will hear, and he will be angry and fight with them. • And 19 the whole city will surround them. • On that day they will shout up to heaven as they shine^{g2} while all the people and all the world see them.^{h2} Dan 12:3

The persecution of the saints

- 20 The son of lawlessness will not prevail over them. He will be angryⁱ² at the 21 land, and he will seek to sin against the people.^{j2} • He will pursue all of the saints.
22 They and the priests of the land will be brought back bound. • He will kill them and destroy them . . .^{k2} them. And their eyes will be removed^{l2} with iron spikes.
23 He will remove their skin from their heads.^{m2} He will remove their nails one by one.ⁿ² He will command that vinegar and lime be put in their nose.
24 Now those who are unable to bear up under the tortures of that king will take

v. The reading “your tribe” is found in the Chester Beatty Papyrus. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) reads simply “tribe.” The noun in both cases is the Gk. word phylē. The meaning of the sentence is not obvious.

w. The great city is undoubtedly Jerusalem, but Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 43, notes that the epithet is frequently a pejorative expression based upon Jonah's use of the term for Ninevah. Although the term is used of Jerusalem in SibOr 5:154, 226, 413 and Jer 22:8, it is more frequently applied to the metropolis of a detested enemy. The use of the expression in Rev is a case in point. The author of that work always uses the term to refer to Rome, except in Rev 11:8 where it is used to describe the city in which the Lord was crucified. There are numerous parallels between the present passage and Rev 11:7–11 which presume a dependence on either the present text of Rev or one of its sources.

x. The Chester Beatty Papyrus adds “and he will kill them.”

y. Reading eumoo(u)t in agreement with the Chester Beatty Papyrus.

z. Restoring [o pa]šipe in the Akhmimic text on the basis of the Sahidic. The Akhmimic text resumes at this point.

a2. The phrase “O son of lawlessness” is lacking in the Sahidic text.

b2. This need not be a question.

c2. This is a straightforward attempt to translate a passage which Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des

Elias, p. 93, and others have found incomprehensible. The Sahidic text reads “we live in the Lord in order to scold you always. When you say ‘I have prevailed over these,’ we will lay down the flesh of the body.” Admittedly, the Sahidic text is a bit smoother.

d2. The Sahidic text reads “the flesh of the body.” Cf. 5:32 below, where a doublet preserves a fuller form in which Elijah and Enoch put off the flesh of the world and receive spiritual flesh.

e2. The Sahidic text reads “We always live in the Lord.” For the Akhmimic expression cf. Eph 6:10.

f2. The Sahidic text reads “because you are always hostile.”

g2. Cf. Dan 12:3; Rev 11:12; Mt 13:43.

h2. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) reads “the whole world will see them.” The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads “while the whole world sees them.” Both lack reference to “all the people.”

i2. Reading fnabō(l)k. The Sahidic parallel reads fnacōnt, “he will be angry.”

j2. The next three sentences are lacking from the Sahidic text.

k2. This line is no longer legible in the Akhmimic text.

l2. The Sahidic text reads “He will command and their eyes be burned with an iron borer.”

m2. This sentence is lacking from the Chester Beatty Papyrus.

n2. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) reads “separately.”

gold and flee over the fords to the desert places.^{o2} They will lie down as one^{P2} who 25,26 sleeps. •The Lord will receive their spirits and their souls^{a2} to himself. •Their flesh will petrify.^{r2} No wild animals will eat them until the last day of the great 27 judgment.^{s2} •And^{t2} they will rise up and find a place of rest.^{u2} But they will not be in the kingdom of the Christ as those who have endured^{v2} because the Lord 28 said,^{w2} “I will grant^{x2} to them that they sit on my right hand.”^{y2} •They will receive favor over others,^{z2} and they will triumph^{a3} over the son of lawlessness. And they 29 will witness the dissolution of heaven and earth. •They will receive the thrones of glory and the crowns.^{b3}

The martyrdom of the sixty righteous

30,31 Sixty^{c3} righteous ones^{d3} who are prepared for this hour^{e3} will hear.^{f3} •And they will gird on the breastplate of God.^{g3} and they will run to Jerusalem and fight with the shameless one,^{h3} saying, “All powersⁱ³ which the prophets have done from the beginning^{j3} you have done. But you were unable^{k3} to raise the dead because you have no power to give life.^{l3} Therein we have known that you are the son of 32 lawlessness.” •He will hear,^{m3} and he will be angry and command to kindle 33 altars.ⁿ³ •And the righteous ones will be bound. They will be lifted up and burned.

o2. The Sahidic text reads “flee upon the rivers saying ‘ferry us across to the desert.’” Bousset, The Antichrist Legend, pp. 211–14, has collected a number of Christian texts dealing with the flight of the faithful. Mt 24:16–20; Lk 17:31–33; and Mk 13:14–19 preserve a picture of the flight of the faithful.

p2. The Chester Beatty Papyrus appears to have repeated the phrase “as one” twice.

q2. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) reads “the spirit and the soul.” Cf. Eccl 12:7.

r2. Lit. “become rock.” The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) reads “taste like hams.” The confusion arose in Gk. when someone wrote perna, “ham,” for petra, “rock.” Subsequently, the Cop. sōpe, “become,” was changed to tōpe, “taste,” and the preposition “like” was added. The Chester Beatty Papyrus has the word for “ham” following a lacuna.

s2. Reading šā{ph}phae nhooue, “until the last day.” The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) reads “until the day of the great [reading nt{ē}nog] judgment.” For the day of judgment see 5:25 below.

t2. Reading aou. The scribe wrote asu. The Sahidic text lacks a word for “and.”

u2. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) reads “receive a rest.” The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads “receive a place of [rest].”

v2. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) reads “but they are able to come to a rest. Be with the Christ as those who have endured.” The text is apparently confused. Steindorff, p. 128, suggested restoring the text to agree with the Akhmimic reading.

w2. The Chester Beatty Papyrus has a different reading at this point. It apparently reads “(as for) those who have endured, [the Lord said].”

x2. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) has tasse, “command, order, arrange.” The Chester Beatty Papyrus unfortunately has a lacuna at this point.

y2. Reading hiounem mmaei with the Sahidic (mmoeti). The scribe wrote hiounem mmau, “on their right.” Cf. Mk 12:36 and the synoptic parallels.

z2. The phrase could be translated “favor for [i.e. on behalf of] others.” The phrase is lacking in Sahidic.

a3. Reading sena{ē}cro.

b3. Cf. 1:8 above and the footnotes at that point.

c3. Written hnt-jouōt, lit. “three twenties.”

d3. The Chester Beatty Papyrus adds “in those days.”

e3. Reading atiou{ou}nou. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) has nneuneuneu, which is probably a corruption of neunou. The Chester Beatty Papyrus has eteun{ou}.

f3. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) reads “will be chosen on that day.” The Akhmimic text reads sōme, “hear,” but Steindorff, p. 96, and others had been convinced that it should be changed to sōp, “choose,” to agree with the Sahidic text. Each of the preceding martyr tales began with the martyr “hearing” that the shameless one revealed himself. Cf. 4:1 and 4:7. The parallelism among the three stories supports the reading “hear” at this point. The Chester Beatty Papyrus now supports the Akhmimic reading.

g3. Cf. Isa 59:17; WisSol 5:18; Eph 6:14; 1Thes 5:8.

h3. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) reads “Fight with them and the shameless one.”

i3. Reading šam for the scribal šim. The parallel in the Sahidic text is šom.

j3. The phrase “from the beginning” is lacking in the Sahidic text.

k3. The Chester Beatty Papyrus apparently adds [na]me, “truly.”

l3. The phrase “to give life” is lacking in Sahidic.

m3. The Sahidic text reads “the shameless one will hear,” but the text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) requires a slight emendation, i.e. p{a}atšipe.

n3. The phrase “to kindle altars” is lacking in the Sahidic text at this point; it reads “and they will place them on the altars.” Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 107, calls attention to a number of later Christian texts that describe the sacrifice of Elijah and Enoch on the altar of Zion.

Eccl 12:7

Mk 12:36

Isa 59:17

1Thes 5:8

Men flee from the Antichrist

- 1 5 And on that day the heart^a of many will harden^b and they will flee from him,^c saying, "This is not the Christ. The Christ does not kill^d the righteous. He does not pursue men^e so that he might seek them, but he persuades them^f with signs and wonders."^g Deut 26:8, 29:2

The removal of the righteous

- 2 On that day^h the Christ will pity those who are his own. And he will send from heavenⁱ his sixty-four thousand angels, each of whom has six wings.^j •The sound^k Isa 6:2
3 will move heaven and earth when they give praise and glorify. •Now those upon Rev 4:8
4 whose forehead the name of Christ is written and upon whose hand^l is the seal, both the small and the great,^m will be taken up upon their wings and lifted up before his wrath.
5 Then Gabriel and Uriel will become a pillar of light leading them into the holy Ex 13:21f
6 land.ⁿ •It will be granted to them to eat^o from the tree of life. They will wear white Isa 49:10
7 garments^p . . . •and angels will watch over them.^r They will not thirst,^s nor will Rev 7:16 8 the son of lawlessness be able to prevail over them.

Natural disasters which follow the removal of the righteous

- 7 And on that day the earth^t will be disturbed, and the sun will darken, and peace
8,9 will be removed from the earth.^u •The birds will fall on the earth, dead. •The earth
10 will be dry.^v The waters of the sea will dry up. •The sinners will groan^w upon the 5 a. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) contains an example of ditto-graphy at this point. The text is written hnpehoou emmau phēt {emmau phēt}.

b. Taking arau as an ethical dat. Cf. Von Lemm, Bulletin de l'académie impériale. The Sahidic text reads "many will turn aside."

c. The Sahidic text reads "they will remove themselves from him," but the Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) requires an emendation, i.e. read sesahōou for seshōou.

d. Reading hōtbe. The scribe wrote hōtbe.

e. The Sahidic text reads "true men."

f. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) has a somewhat smoother reading, "But does he not seek even more to persuade them?" The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads "will he not seek to persuade them."

g. Cf. Deut 26:8; 29:2; and frequently throughout the OT. Cf. also WisSol 10:16; Jn 4:48; Acts 2:19, 22, 43; 4:30.

h. Reading in agreement with the Sahidic text. The Akhmimic text has "In those days."

i. Reading abal(h)npe in agreement with the Sahidic text.

j. The scribe wrote nibh and corrected it to nih. For the sense of the passage cf. Isa 6:2; Rev 4:8; 2En 16:7; 19:6; 21:1; ApMos 37:3.

k. The phrase "the sound" could be rendered "the voice." The Sahidic text reads "their sound."

l. The Sahidic text reads "right hand." For the sealing of the righteous cf. Rev 3:12; 7:3; and vs. 1:9 above.

m. The Sahidic text reads "from their least to their greatest." Cf. Rev 11:18; Jer 31:34; Ps 115:13.

n. The Sahidic text reads "and they will lead them until they bring them into the holy place."

o. Reading at(ou)ouōm. For texts dealing with eating from the tree of life cf. TLevi 18:11; 1En

25:5.

p. Reading ser ph[orei]nhbsou [nouobh . . .]. The restoration is based on the Sahidic but the lacuna in the Akhmimic text may be large enough to accommodate an additional word. For white garments cf. Rev 7:13 and perhaps Zech 3:4-5.

q. The last five lines on this page have been successfully restored by C. Schmidt, Sitzungsberichte, p. 321. He was able to reconstruct the text after discovering that the fragment of the text which Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias, p. 108, had published at the end of his Akhmimic text actually belonged at the bottom of p. 39, with its reverse side fitting into p. 40, 12-16. Our readings in both these sections are based on Schmidt's reconstruction rather than Steindorff's text.

r. Reading [se]rais arau ēe na[ggelos]. The scribe wrote se instead of ēe.

s. The Sahidic text reads "They will not hunger or thirst." Cf. Isa 49:10; Rev 7:16.

t. The Chester Beatty Papyrus apparently reads "the [who]le earth."

u. Reading [c]enafei nit[rene hm pkah]. The Sahidic text continues "and the heaven. The trees will be plucked up and they will fall. The wild beasts and the cattle will die in a disturbance." In the Sahidic text published by Steindorff, however, the scribe wrote by mistake the words "the spirit" instead of "the heaven."

v. Bousset, The Antichrist Legend, pp. 195-99, has collected a large number of texts that describe the final drought and famine. This sentence is lacking from the Chester Beatty Papyrus.

w. The Nag Hammadi tractate "On the Origin of the World" II, 125, 34, provides the following parallel: "Then the rulers will lament, crying out on account of their death. The angels will mourn for their men, and the demons will weep for their times, and their men will mourn and cry out on account of their death."

earth saying, "What have you done to us, O son of lawlessness, saying I am the 11 Christ,^x when you are the devil?" • You are unable to save yourself^z so that you might save us. You produced signs^{a2} in our presence until you alienated us from 12 the Christ who created us.^{b2} Woe to us because we listened to you.^{c2} • Lo now we will die^{d2} in a famine.^{e2} Where indeed is now the trace of a righteous one^{f2} and we will worship him,^{g2} or where indeed is the one who will teach us and we will 13 appeal to him. • Now indeed we will be wrathfully destroyed^{h2} because we 14 disobeyed God. • We went to the deep places of the sea, and we did not find water. We dug in the rivers and papyrus reeds,ⁱ² and we did not find water."

The lament of the Antichrist and the pursuit of the righteous

Then on that day, the shameless^{j2} one will weep,^{k2} saying, "Woe to me because 15 my time has passed by for me^{l2} while I was saying that my time would not pass
 16 by for me. • My years became months and my days have passed away^{m2} as dust
 17 passes away.ⁿ² Now therefore I will perish together with you. • Now therefore run 18 forth to the desert. Seize the robbers and kill them. • Bring up the saints.^{o2} For because of them, the earth yields fruit.^{p2} For because of them the sun shines upon 19 the earth. For because of them the dew will come upon the earth." • The sinners will weep saying, "You made us hostile to God. If you are able,^{q2} rise up and pursue them."
 20 Then he will take his fiery wings^{r2} and fly out after the saints. He will fight with 21 them again. • The angels will hear and come down. They will fight with him a battle of many swords.^{s2}

x. Cf. vs. 3:1.

y. The Sahidic text reads "you are the son of lawlessness." Lacau, Journal asiatique 254 (1966) 191, reconstructed the phrase "saying I am the Christ when you are the devil." He reads ekjou mmas{je}anok pe pchs eniak{pe}pdiabolos. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) contains both je and the restored pe.

z. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 110, recognized this as a traditional reproach. Cf. Jer 2:28; Isa 46:2; Lk 23:37; Mk 15:31; Mt 27:42.

a2. The Sahidic reads "vain signs."

b2. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads "who created every one."

c2. Reading [an]cōtme nsōk. The scribe wrote nsoub for the second word.

d2. Here again we begin the use of Schmidt's text, Sitzungsberichte, p. 321.

e2. Lacau, Journal asiatique 254 (1966) 191, restored hnouhebou[oune] in place of Schmidt's hebou[oun]. The Sahidic text adds "and an affliction." See Bousset, The Antichrist Legend, pp. 195–99, for examples of drought and famine.

f2. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 111, sees this as an intercessory appeal for a just man. He compares Gen 18:23–33 and 4Bar 1:1–3, which suggests that a city cannot fall if there are enough just men in it. He assembled a large number of citations.

g2. The Chester Beatty Papyrus reads "and we will worship you."

h2. The Akhmimic text breaks off at this point, but the Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) continues uninterrupted. That is the text being followed in this edition. The Akhmimic text lacks a single sheet (two pp.). The Akhmimic text resumes at 5:25.

i2. This is certainly a figure of severe drought. When water is not available anywhere else, it is normally possible to find it beneath a riverbed. The reading "and papyrus reeds" is an attempt to make sense of mmn nase mmahe. Steindorff's emendation, in Die Apokalypse des Elias, to read mmntase mmahe, "sixteen cubits," seems unlikely in view of the spelling [m]n nase [mma]he in the Chester Beatty Papyrus. I have taken ase to be a hitherto unattested form of the New Egyptian "isy," "reeds." The word mahe is well known in Cop. as "flax," a plant that requires abundant water. In Middle Egyptian the word for "flax" is mhyt and the word for "papyrus plant" is mhyt. Either "papyrus" or "flax" would fit the present context.

j2. Reading pat{si}pe.

k2. The reading is taken from the Chester Beatty Papyrus, where it is followed by a lacuna of nearly a full line. The Sahidic text published by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) reads "the shameless one wept," without any lacuna.

l2. The Chester Beatty Papyrus ends at this point.

m2. Reading anahooue ouōtb for anahooueēt. For shortening of days see Bousset, The Antichrist Legend, pp. 218f.

n2. Reading esauouōtb for the scribe's eššafouōtb.

o2. Reading {a}netouaab anisou ah{h}rai.

p2. The scribe accidentally repeated himself in writing this ere pkah{ere pkah} iikarpōs.

q2. Reading e{šōpe} oum{com} {com}.

r2. Reading nef{h}tnh nkōht.

s2. Bousset, The Antichrist Legend, p. 223, gathered texts describing the battles between the angels and the demons.

The cosmic fire

- 22 It will come to pass on that day that the Lord will hear and command the heaven 23 and the earth with great wrath. And they will send forth fire.^{t2} • And the fire will prevail over the earth seventy-two cubits. It will consume the sinners and the devils 24 like stubble. • A true judgment will occur.^{u2}

Word of the coming judgment

- 25 On that day, the mountains and the earth will utter speech.^{v2} The byways^{w2} will speak with one another, saying, "Have you heard today the voice of a man who 26 walks who has not come to the judgment of the Son of God."^{x2} • The sins of each one will stand against him^{y2} in the place where they were committed, whether those 27 of the day or of the night.^{z2} • Those who belong to the righteous^{a3} and . . . will see the sinners and those who persecuted them and those who handed them over to death in their torments.
 28,29 Then the sinners [in torment^{b3}] will see the place of the righteous. • And thus grace will occur. In those days, that which the righteous will ask for many times will be given to them.

The judgment and the execution of the Antichrist

- 30 On that day, the Lord will judge the heaven and the earth.
^{c3}He will judge those who transgressed in heaven, and those who did so on earth.
 31 He will judge the shepherds of the people.^{d3}
 He will ask about the flock of sheep, and they will be given to him, without any deadly guile^{e3} existing in them.
 32 After these things, Elijah and Enoch will come down.^{f3} They will lay down the flesh of the world,^{g3} and they will receive their spiritual flesh.^{h3} They will pursueⁱ³ the son of lawlessness and kill him since he is not able to speak.^{j3} 33 On that day, he will dissolve in their presence like ice which was dissolved by 34 a fire. He will perish like a serpent^{k3} which has no breath in it. • They will say to

t2. Bousset, The Antichrist Legend, pp. 237–44, has assembled a large number of texts dealing with the final conflagration.

u2. The Akhmimic text resumes at this point. It reads "[stubble] with true judgment." Cf. Rev 16:7; 19:2; Rom 2:5; Jn 5:30; Ps 119:75.

v2. This recalls a detail of the ancient prophetic riv motif, i.e. the courtroom trial. The heavens and the earth (Isa 1:2), the mountains and the foundations of the earth (Micah 6:2), who were original witnesses to the covenant, were called again to witness the lawsuit for breach of contract. It is only fitting that they should be present in the final judgment scene. Cf. 4Ezra 5:11.

w2. Till, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache und Altertumskunde 63 (1928) 91, correctly identified this word as hōou, the plural of hō, "way, path." The Sahidic text edited by Steindorff (Die Apokalypse des Elias) lacks this word. The Sahidic text ends at this point with the reading "on [that] day."

x2. Rosenstiehl, L'Apocalypse d'Élie, p. 113, has provided a very long list of citations that describe the Messiah as Son of God or portray him as presiding over the judgment. Cf. for example 1En 105:2; 4QFlor 1, 11–13; 4Ezra 12:31–33; Jn 5:22, 27.

y2. Cf. WisSol 4:20. A picturesque version of this motif is found in ApPaul 16. Cf. ApPet 6.

z2. Cf. 1En 104:7f.

a3. Reading na(n)dikaïos. The motif of sinners and righteous observing each other is widespread. Cf. 1En 108:14f.; 62:11f.; Jub 23:30; Lk 16:23–26.

b3. Reading h[lnk]o[las]is. We would prefer h[lnk]o[las]is or h[lnn]o[ukolas]is, but there is apparently not enough room.

c3. This passage is characterized by a pronounced parallel structure. It may have been poetic.

d3. There is a fragment of Gk. text, published by E. Pistelli, Papiri greci e latini, p. 16, which contains a portion of this phrase, e.g. poimēnos tou [laou]. The judgment of the shepherds is a dominant motif in Ezek 34 and 1En 90:1–26.

e3. The Gk. text contains the words aneu dolu, "without guile."

f3. The Gk. text reads hote ēleias kai en[och].

g3. The Gk. text preserved tou kosm [ou], "of the world."

h3. Cf. Paul's "spiritual body" in 1Cor 15:44.

i3. The Gk. fragment has only kata[diōkousin]. It ends at this point.

j3. Cf. Mk 1:34.

k3. Cf. TAsH 7:3. Satan was traditionally identified with the serpent that tempted Eve. Cf. ApMos 15–17.

him, “Your time has passed by¹³ for you. Now therefore you and those who believe 35 you will perish.” •They will be cast into the bottom of the abyss^{m3} and it will be closedⁿ³ for them.

The millennial age

36 On that day, the Christ, the king, and all his saints will come forth from heaven.^{o3} 37,38 He will burn the earth. He will spend a thousand years^{p3} upon it. •Because the sinners prevailed over it, he will create a new heaven and a new earth.^{q3} No deadly 39 devil^{r3} will exist in them. •He will rule with his saints, ascending and descending,^{s3} while they are always with the angels and they are with the Christ for a thousand years. Rev 21:1
Rev 20:4

13. Reading (ou)ine as suggested by Steindorff, Die Apokalypse des Elias, p. 190.

m3. Cf. Rev 20:3.

n3. Reading cehōjp mmas. The scribe wrote hōjč.

o3. Reading nnēu abal(h)nipe. Cf. Lacau, Journal asiatique 234 (1966) 192. Cf. 4Ezra 7:28; 1Thes 4:16; Mt 24:30.

p3. Cf. Rev 20:6. It is fitting that events “on that day” should continue for a thousand years since one day in the sight of the Lord is equal to a thousand years. Cf. Ps 90:4; 2Pet 3:8; Jub 4:30. By uniting Ps 90:4 with Gen 2:2, it was possible to construct a view of the world which continues for six thousand years before reaching the Sabbath, i.e. “the rest” of one thousand years. Cf. 2En 32:1–33:2 and Irenaeus AdvHaer 5.28.3.

q3. Cf. Rev 21:1; 2Pet 3:10–13; Isa 65:17; 66:22; 1En 91:16; Jub 1:29.

r3. Reading diabolos [m] mōu (?) If there were space, the reading diabolos [mp] mōu, “devil of death,” might make better sense. It would then be a pejorative designation for the “angel of death.” Actually, Rosenstiehl’s reading in L’Apocalypse d’Élie, p. 116, makes good sense, “neither devil [nor] death,” but that would require reconstructing a compound subject between the negative mn and the verb hoop, a syntactic construction that is quite unusual. Normally when a compound subject is desired, one subject is set before the verb and the second is joined after it. The reconstruction of diabolos with an adjective is not entirely satisfactory, but it is more idiomatic than the attempt to reconstruct a compound subject at this point.

For the elimination of death cf. Rev 21:4; Isa 25:8; 4Ezra 8:53; Rev 20:14.

s3. Reading [j]nneu ehrai. Cf. Gen 28:12; Jn 1:51.

APOCALYPSE OF DANIEL

(Ninth Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY G. T. ZERVOS

In its present form the Apocalypse of Daniel¹ is a comparatively late Byzantine apocalypse in which earlier traditions concerning the coming of the Antichrist and the end of the world are adapted to the particular historical situation of eighth-century Byzantium. Accordingly, the text may be divided into two major heterogeneous sections, the first of which (chs. 1–7) is based upon the historical events of the Byzantino-Arab wars of the eighth century and their aftermath leading up to the coronation of Charlemagne in Rome in A.D. 800, all of which the author relates in a cryptic manner and projects into the future as prophecies. The narrative leaves the historical sphere and enters the realm of apocalyptic with the beginning of the second major section (chs. 8–14) in which the author draws upon earlier traditions and sources and presents his own version of the end of the world as a direct continuation of the series of historical events described in chapters 1–7. The events of the last years of the world, which in this section also are recounted in the future tense as prophecies, are dominated by the figure of the Antichrist. Described in some detail are the origin and personal characteristics of the Antichrist as well as his rise to power as king and messiah of the Jewish nation, which has been previously restored in Judea. His brief reign—characterized by the deterioration of nature, the persecution of Christians, an unsuccessful attempt at a miracle, and confrontations first with a dragon and then with three holy men—is brought to an abrupt end by the coming of the day of judgment and the appearance of Christ.

Texts

The text of the Apocalypse of Daniel is preserved complete in each of two manuscripts and partially—and in a much freer rendering—in a third. The complete texts are found in a fifteenth- or sixteenth-century manuscript (MS M) in the School of Medicine at Montpellier, France (Nr. 405, fols. 105r–15), and in a fifteenth-century manuscript (MS B) in the Bodleian Library at Oxford (Codex Canonicianus Nr. 19, fols. 145–52). The partial text (MS V) is in the Bibliotheca Marciana in Venice (Marc. Grec. VII 22, fols. 14–16).² The present translation is derived from photographs of manuscript B. This manuscript was published by V. Istrin in Otkrovenie Mefodie Patarskago i Apokrificheskie Vidienie Daniila (Moscow, 1897) pp. 145–50; but a reexamination of the photographs revealed numerous errors in Istrin's edition, which reappeared recently in K. Berger's Die griechische Daniel-Diegesse.³

Manuscript B is an extremely corrupt text with misspelled words in almost every line. The majority of these misspellings are obviously due to the confusion of the scribe over various groups of Greek letters and diphthongs that during the course of the development of the language have come to be pronounced identically.⁴ Most of these misspellings or itacisms were corrected by Istrin and will receive no comment in the critical notes of the present translation. Other misspellings, omissions of words and phrases, and mistaken transcriptions by Istrin will be noted.

¹ This particular apocalypse should not be confused with numerous other medieval works associated with the names of Daniel and Methodius. These are catalogued briefly by A.-M. Denis in "Les Apocalypses de Daniel," Introduction, pp. 309–14.

² MSS M and B were studied by photographs, V by reference to K. Berger, Die griechische Daniel-Diegesse, pp. 8–11. I would like to express my appreciation to the Bodleian Library at Oxford and the School of Medicine at Montpellier for excellent photographs of these MSS, and to the International Center for the Study of Christian Origins at Duke University for access to them.

³ Berger, Daniel-Diegesse, pp. 12–23.

Original language

There is no apparent reason why the original language of the Apocalypse of Daniel should be considered to be other than Greek. This assertion is supported by the use of the Greek Septuagint text for Old Testament quotations (4:14; 5:12; 11:11; 14:12) and for Semitic proper names (Hagar in 1:2f.; Ishmael in 1:4), as well as for the reference to the "flinty rock" in 13:8 (cf. Deut 8:15).

The case for Semitic sources for parts of the apocalyptic section (chs. 8–14) would have to be built on such slight evidence as the occurrence of the odd Semitic place-name Gouzēth⁵ (9:7), which may be contrasted with the easily identifiable Greek place-names in chapter 1, and the Semitism "sons of men" (14:5). This phrase, although unique in this document, could still be explained as the influence of the Septuagint or possibly even of the New Testament.

Of interest also within this context is the confusion of the manuscripts over the three letters on the forehead of the Antichrist (9:25). While manuscripts M and V have readings that are easily understandable in Greek, manuscript B has the letters A K T; the scribe is obviously hard-pressed to explain their significance.⁶ This could suggest that this manuscript has preserved the original letters from an earlier source. It is not inconceivable that this source was written in a different, possibly Semitic, language, thus explaining an almost ridiculous attempt to elucidate the meaning in Greek of three letters transliterated from such a language as Aramaic or Syriac.⁷ However, for lack of more conclusive evidence, the most that can be said is only that these three examples—Gouzēth in 9:7, "sons of men" in 14:5, and the three letters on the forehead of the Antichrist in manuscript B (9:25)—could conceivably be faint traces of an earlier, possibly Semitic, source or sources that underlie the whole or parts of the apocalyptic section of the Apocalypse of Daniel.

Date

The date of the present form of our apocalypse can be determined with some precision by identifying the last historical event to which it makes reference. This appears to be the transfer of the kingdom from Constantinople to Rome (7:14), which may with reasonable certainty be interpreted as an allusion to the coronation of Charlemagne as emperor in Rome on Christmas Day, A.D. 800. This interpretation is supported by the description of the last Byzantine ruler before this event took place as a woman (6:10f.), who corresponds to the historical figure of the Empress Irene, sole ruler of Byzantium from 797 to 802. It may therefore be concluded that the Apocalypse of Daniel was in all probability written between the early months of 801, allowing time for the news of Charlemagne's coronation to reach Byzantium, and the end of Irene's reign on October 31, 802.⁸

The determination of the date of any possible earlier traditions and sources of the apocalyptic section would be extremely difficult and would have to depend on the identification of passages of the present apocalypse with those found in known earlier works. As will be seen below, the Apocalypse of Daniel, and especially its apocalyptic section, contains elements parallel to such early documents as the Sibylline Oracles (books 3–5, 2nd cent. B.C. to 2nd cent. A.D.), 2 Baruch, 4 Ezra, and the Revelation of John (all late 1st cent. A.D.).

⁴ These itacisms indicate that the scribe who copied MS B did so while hearing the original text being read orally.

⁵ See n. 12.

⁶ See ch. 9, n. d2.

⁷ Aram. 'kth is mentioned as a root associated with the meaning "venomous" or "vindictive" in M. Jastrow's A Dictionary of the Targumim, the Talmud Babli and Yerushalmi, and the Midrashic Literature (New York, 1903) vol. 1, p. 66. In Syriac 'chth is a noun form meaning "wrath" or "lasting anger." Both of these Semitic words could apply as characteristics of the Antichrist.

⁸ Cf. Berger, Daniel-Diegesse, pp. 36f.

Furthermore, our apocalypse describes the conception of the Antichrist by a virgin who touches the head of a small fish into which the Antichrist has previously entered (ch. 9). This account resembles a cryptic Christian inscription of the late second century on the tomb of Aberkios of Hierapolis,⁹ which depicts Christ as a fish that has been caught by a pure virgin. This parallel, in addition to those with the early pseudepigraphical works mentioned above, could indicate that the author of the Apocalypse of Daniel was familiar with early traditions and incorporated some of them into his own work. It may be concluded, therefore, that the original date of certain elements of this apocalypse could be centuries earlier than that of the document as a whole and that some of them could fit into the apocalyptic environment that produced such works as the Sibylline Oracles, 2 Baruch, 4 Ezra, and the Revelation of John.

Provenance

Berger's suggestion of a provenance in the Greek islands rather than in Byzantium itself, because of what he describes as the considerable role which the former play in the manuscripts of the apocalypse,¹⁰ does not seem to be well founded. The word nēsos (island) occurs only twice each in manuscripts M (2:15; 5:9) and V (vss. 34, 36)¹¹ and three times in manuscript B (5:9; 11:8 twice). Such a paucity of references to the term "island" within the document could hardly warrant the conclusion of a provenance in the Greek islands. Even these few instances could perhaps be explained more satisfactorily as an example of the dependence of the Apocalypse of Daniel on the imagery of the Revelation of John (see "Relation to Canonical Books"), in which islands are mentioned three times (Rev 1:9; 6:14; 16:20). Rather, the overwhelming concern of the apocalypse for the city of Constantinople, at least throughout the historical section, suggests that the "mother of cities" (7:11), Constantinople itself, is the place of origin.

The change in the overall character of the Apocalypse of Daniel in proceeding from the historical to the apocalyptic section is also apparent in the corresponding geographical shift from Greek Byzantium to Hebrew Judea. This probably reflects the distinctive provenance of the supposed earlier sources of the apocalyptic section, but to determine this provenance with any degree of certainty would be most difficult. Aside from the references to Judea (8:1) and Jerusalem (8:5; 9:14), the only other geographical clue is the place-name Gouzēth (9:7), which Berger explains as the transcription of Kush, the Semitic name for Ethiopia. He concludes, however, that it is more satisfactorily identified as Egypt by a literary parallel occurring in another Christian apocalyptic work.¹² At any rate, on the basis of such meager information the most that can be said is that the provenance of the hypothetical sources of the apocalyptic section is perhaps in a Semitic rather than a Greek environment; Palestine and possibly Egypt are suggested by references in the text.

Historical importance

In its present form, the Apocalypse of Daniel has significance mainly within the context of late eighth-century Byzantine history. The author describes three Byzantine rulers, the first very favorably and the last two in a derogatory manner. The first emperor, as described in chapters 3–5, has characteristics of both Leo III (717–41) and his son Constantine V (741–75); but he is probably to be identified with the latter.¹³ Both Leo III and Constantine ⁹ Ibid., pp. 104–6.

¹⁰ Ibid., p. 9.

¹¹ Ibid., p. 25.

¹² Ibid., p. 106. The place-name Gouzē is identified explicitly as the "land of the Egyptians" in the Logos tou Kyriou hēmōn Iēsou Christou peri tēs antilogias tou diabolou, which was published by A. Vassiliev in his Anecdota Graeco-Byzantina, Paris Prior (Moscow, 1893) p. 8. It is perhaps worthy of note that Jastrow identifies Goza as "a river or channel in Babylon" (Dictionary, vol. 1, p. 220).

¹³ Concerning the complicated matter of the divergence of the MSS as to the succession of Byzantine emperors presented in ApDan, see Berger, Daniel-Diegesis, pp. 32–39. It seems that the number of years of rule (thirty-four for Constantine V against thirty-six in 5:13 of ApDan), the mention of the two small boys in 3:15; 4:1, 4; 5:2, 18 (see ch. 3, n. r), and the letter "K" denoting the name of the emperor in 3:12 (see ch. 3, n. m) would strongly suggest that Constantine V is indeed the savior-king of ApDan, or at least of the version contained in MS B. This is verified by the descriptions of the two rulers who succeed him in ch. 6, who in fact correspond to the two historical successors of Constantine V—Leo IV and Irene.

V are notorious in Byzantine history, the former as the initiator and the latter as the most zealous proponent of the iconoclastic movement, which literally shook Byzantium to its very foundations for over a century until it was finally defeated in A.D. 842. On the contrary, the last two rulers, who are described so unfavorably in chapter 6, correspond to Leo IV (775–80) and Irene (797–802 as sole ruler), both of whom in varying degrees opposed the iconoclasts. Irene, in fact, convened the Seventh Ecumenical Synod which met at Nicea in 787 and officially reinstated the veneration of icons and condemned iconoclasm as heresy, acts for which she was later canonized by the Orthodox Church.

The extreme favoritism of the author of the Apocalypse of Daniel toward Constantine V and his obvious dislike of Leo IV and Irene perhaps betray his own iconoclastic tendencies. These, however, he never states in this work, possibly out of fear, since he probably wrote during Irene's reign after the decision of the Seventh Ecumenical Synod. Thus, a supporter of iconoclasm, writing at a time when his party was apparently defeated by what must have seemed to him as a heretic empress, could have viewed this development in connection with the rise of a new political power under Charlemagne as the beginning of a series of events that were expected to take place at the end of the world.¹⁴ Accordingly, the author drew upon earlier traditions and sources dealing with the last days and composed his own version of what was supposed to follow in the near future. If this hypothesis is correct, it would explain the sudden leap in the story line of the Apocalypse of Daniel from the Byzantine political scene in 801 to the apocalyptic narrative concerning the Antichrist and the last days of the world.

Theological importance

Since the Apocalypse of Daniel is historically and politically oriented, there is relatively little theological material contained in it. God appears mainly when he intervenes in the political or military history of nations, as for example in chapter 3, in which he determines the outcome of the Byzantino-Arab wars (cf. 6:9 and 7:11); but he is also responsible for the abundance of the fruits of the earth in peacetime (5:16). Man also is shown chiefly in political and military situations; but in the sphere of religion he is divided into two camps according to faith: the Roman Christians and the misbelievers (especially the Arabs and Jews). World history is presented as proceeding toward a final "judgment and recompense" (14:14), but exactly what is to follow is not specified beyond a single statement concerning the flowering of Christ as "Lord and king of glory" (14:16). There is only one mention of an angel in 3:7, but this verse could be dependent on the imagery contained in chapter 16 of the Revelation of John (see "Relation to Canonical Books"). As far as can be ascertained from the description of the sinful rulers in chapter 6 and from the account of liturgical degeneration in chapter 2.5–8, the ethics of the apocalypse seem to be along the traditional lines that would be expected in a medieval Christian work.

The most important single theological aspect of the Apocalypse of Daniel—and which significantly seems to belong to the earlier underlying sources—is a relatively complex dualism centering on the figure of the Antichrist,¹⁵ who is the leader of the final assault by the forces of evil against the Christians. Jews (ch. 11), demons (ch. 12), and even nature itself (chs. 11:5–11; 12:9–13) take part in this great persecution, while the whole affair is summarily described as "the deception of the devil" (14:15). Given in chapter 9 are important details about the origin of the Antichrist as well as a bizarre description of his person. The "theology" of the Antichrist as presented in this apocalypse is completed by the addition, in the last two chapters, of the accounts of his unsuccessful attempt at a miracle and his confrontation with three holy men leading up to his final downfall, which coincides with the coming of the day of judgment and the appearance of Christ.

¹⁴ For a discussion of the belief that the fall of the Roman Empire, which to our author was the Byzantine Empire, would immediately precede the end of the world, see W. Bousset's The Antichrist Legend, pp. 123–32.

¹⁵ Concerning the Antichrist tradition see Bousset, Legend, and more recently H. D. Rauh's Das Bild des Antichrist im Mittelalter: von Tyconius zum deutschen Symbolismus (Beiträge zur Geschichte der Philosophie und Theologie des Mittelalters N.F. 9; Münster, 1979); see especially pp. 145–52.

Relation to canonical books

Except for such scattered references to biblical books in 1:1 (Mk 13:7, 8, and parallels), 4:14 (Deut 32:30), 5:12 (Isa 2:4), 9:9f. (2Thes 2:3), 11:11 (Prov 11:32), 14:9 (Heb 11:38), and 14:12 (Ps 51:19), the Apocalypse of Daniel seems to be primarily dependent on the imagery and language of the Revelation of John. In fact, the overall framework of this apocalypse is reminiscent of the sixth and seventh bowls of God's wrath described in Revelation 16:12–21 and of the fall of the great harlot Babylon portrayed in chapters 17 and 18. In Revelation 16:12 we find the idea that the Euphrates River will dry up so that the way of the kings of the East may be prepared. Similarly, in the Apocalypse of Daniel 1:2 a bush that restrains the three sons of Hagar also dries up, and according to 1:3 these three figures enter Babylonia, the area around the Euphrates River. In Revelation 16:13–16 three unclean spirits go forth to gather the nations of the world to the great final battle of Armageddon. This brings to mind the three armies led by the three sons of Hagar against Byzantium, where they engage in a great war with the savior-king and his two small boys (chs. 1–4). A significant parallel may be seen at the climax of the attack by the respective forces of evil in each of the narratives in question. In both cases very similar statements occur concerning sounds and voices from heaven and a great earthquake, which seem to signal the turning point in the battle (Rev 16:17f.; ApDan 3:7). Finally, the description of the great harlot Babylon in Revelation (chs. 16–18) is obviously the prototype of the references to Babylon in our apocalypse (7:2, 5, 11). This is verified by similarities even in details such as the seven hills of the city Babylon (Rev 17:9; ApDan 7:2, 5) and the woes pronounced upon this city (Rev 18:10, 16, 19; ApDan 7:2, 5, 11).

Aside from the possibility that the historical structure of the Apocalypse of Daniel is dependent on the succession of events described in chapters 16–18 of the Revelation of John, there also seems to have been a certain amount of borrowing of specific images. For example, Revelation 14:20 presents the image of blood as deep as the bridles of horses, and the Apocalypse of Daniel 4:8 portrays horses as being submerged and drowning in blood. According to Revelation 9:6 men will seek death and desire to die, and according to our apocalypse 12:4f. people will be calling on death and will be blessing those who have already died. The drying up of all greenery, trees, and flowers and the description of the earth as being like copper according to the Apocalypse of Daniel 12:9–11 could be a reflection of the burning of one third of the trees and green grass on the earth that is depicted in Revelation 8:7. Finally, a striking parallel image in the two documents is the description in Revelation 6:15f. of the kings of the earth and magnates, among others, hiding themselves in the caves and the rocks of the mountains and calling on the mountains and rocks to fall on them. This seems to be reproduced in the Apocalypse of Daniel at 2:15, where it is written that rulers and magnates will "flee to the glens of the mountains" and in 12:6 (MS M only), where it is said that people will entreat and beg the mountains to cover them.

Finally, there are a number of parallel phrases and terms in the two works that would support a dependence of the Apocalypse of Daniel on the Book of Revelation. The most outstanding of these are the phrases "sand of the sea" used to describe the multitudes of the enemy in our apocalypse at 12:1 (cf. Rev 20:8), and "foundation of the world" found in our apocalypse at 4:6; 5:16; and 10:1 (cf. Rev 13:8). The terms "mountains" and "islands" are used together twice in Revelation (6:14; 16:20), while appearing also together in the present apocalypse at 5:9 and separately at 1:9; 2:15, 17; 11:8; and 14:9. Also of interest are the similes of the mourners of fallen Babylon as sailors in Revelation 18:17–19 and as merchants in 18:3, 11, and 15. Sailors will lament over fallen Babylon according to the Apocalypse of Daniel 7:13, merchants will do likewise according to 7:14 (MS M only). Each of these parallel terms and phrases would seem insignificant alone. However, when viewed together and in connection with the previously discussed similarities of historical structure and imagery, they strongly indicate a dependence of the Apocalypse of Daniel on the Revelation of John.

Relation to apocryphal books

The Apocalypse of Daniel is only one of a considerable number of similar apocalypses

that are strangely reminiscent of the early Jewish pseudepigraphical works.¹⁶ That the Apocalypse of Daniel either influenced or was influenced by one or more of these contemporary documents cannot be doubted, as this is evidenced by several examples of direct dependence.¹⁷ It is beyond the scope of this introduction, however, to examine this matter in more detail. The most that will be done will be to point out some of the most significant parallels between this apocalypse and some early pseudepigrapha.

The reference to the king of the Romans by the initial letter of his name (ApDan 3:12) could stem from Sibylline Oracles 5.1–51, in which most of the Roman emperors from Julius Caesar to Marcus Aurelius are identified by the numerical value of the first Greek letter of their names. It is perhaps significant that among the names of these emperors, Caesar and Claudius begin in Greek with the letter K, which has the numerical value twenty, as is the case with the Roman king mentioned in the Apocalypse of Daniel 3:12. It should be noted that this apocalypse follows the motif of the Sibylline Oracles as opposed to that used in the Revelation of John 13:18, in which the figure represented by the second beast is identified by the number 666, the sum of the numerical values of all the letters of his name. In view of the probable dependence of this apocalypse on Revelation, as discussed in the preceding section, the method for denoting emperors could indicate that this particular element is borrowed from another source, possibly the Sibylline Oracles.

Another concept of the Sibylline Oracles worthy of note in relation to the Apocalypse of Daniel is that found in Book 3.75–77, in which a woman is described as the last ruler before the end of the world. This idea accords with 6:10f. of our apocalypse, which also presents a woman as the last ruler of the “Seven-hilled” city in an eschatological context (cf. Rev 17). The similarity between the two texts is strengthened by the appearance in both of a malevolent figure who will deceive people, especially the Jews. In Sibylline Oracles 3.63–69 the deceiver is Beliar, or Satan, and in our apocalypse the later chapters are concerned with the Antichrist, who will deceive the Jews into worshipping him as the Messiah.

A final motif of the Sibylline Oracles present also in the Apocalypse of Daniel is that expressed in 3:10 and concerns the savior-king of the Romans, “who people say is dead and useful for nothing, who people think died many years before.” This is apparently a reference to the early Nero redivivus legend, which found its way repeatedly into the Sibylline Oracles (e.g. 4.119, 138f.; 5.33f., 101–7, 137–54) and is implied in Revelation 13:3. The essential difference between the use of this motif in the Sibylline Oracles and Revelation on the one hand and in the Apocalypse of Daniel on the other is that in the former two works it refers to the monstrous figure of Nero as an enemy of the people of God, and in the present apocalypse it is applied to the savior-king sent by God.

Chapter 10 of the Apocalypse of Daniel contains an interesting description of the fruitfulness of the earth just prior to the rise to power of the Antichrist. The phraseology in 10:3f. includes vine branches, grape clusters, and individual grapes; this cluster of images is strongly reminiscent of what R. H. Charles referred to as a “fragment of an old Apocalypse”¹⁸ recorded in 1 Enoch 10:19, 2 Baruch 29:5, and later by Papias through a quotation preserved in Irenaeus, Contra haereses 5.33.3. Exactly which of these documents was the source of the parallel passage in our apocalypse cannot be determined with certainty. However, the occurrence of such a passage serves to demonstrate that the author of the Apocalypse of Daniel did at least take into consideration much earlier sources and in this particular case interpolated, although not without modification, early apocalyptic material into his own work.

Another possible case of the insertion of foreign material into the Apocalypse of Daniel may perhaps be seen in chapter 13, which concerns an unsuccessful attempt by the Antichrist to turn a stone into bread in the presence of his Jewish worshipers. There appear to be elements from another tradition interwoven into the fabric of this chapter. This is indicated by the use of two different Greek words—lithos (stone) in verses 1 and 2, and petra (rock) in verses 8 and 10—to describe the stone. Furthermore, the verses in which the term petra is located (vss. 8–13) stand apart from the rest of chapter 13 and from the apocalypse as a whole in two significant ways. First, these verses are written as a block in the present tense as opposed to the rest of the document, which, except for a very few scattered instances, is in the future tense.¹⁹ Secondly, verses 8–13 relate a series of events that are theologically incompatible with the Book of Revelation, which has been shown to be a major source of the imagery in our apocalypse.

¹⁶ See n. 1. Berger gives an extensive list of 188 apocryphal works, both early and medieval, in pp. xi–xxiii of Daniel-Diegese.

¹⁷ Aside from the aforementioned parallel in the document published by Vassiliev, Anecdota Graeco-Byzantina, p. 8, there are also strong literary affinities between ApDan and the so-called “Apocalypse of John” published by C. Tischendorf in his Apocalypses Apocryphae Mosis, Esdrae, Pauli, Iohannis, item Mariae Dormitio (Leipzig, 1866) pp. 73–76. Berger (Daniel-Diegese) deals extensively with the matter of parallels between ApDan and other—especially medieval—apocryphal works in his commentary on the text of the Apocalypse of Daniel.

¹⁸ APOT, vol. 2, p. 497.

Verses 8–13 describe the Antichrist commanding a “flinty rock” to become bread in order to impress the Jews. Instead, the rock becomes a dragon and reviles him as iniquitous and unjust, thus shaming him before the Jews. This picture of a dragon as an enemy of the Antichrist is contrary to the portrayal of the dragon (Satan) in Revelation 13:2, 4, 11; and 16:13 as an ally of the two bestial Antichrist figures described in Revelation 13. The linguistic evidence of the two different Greek words for the stone used in the two sections of chapter 13, the grammatical peculiarity of the second section being in the present tense, and the theological incompatibility of this section with the main source of the imagery of the apocalypse as a whole, the Book of Revelation, would indicate that verses 8–13 of chapter 13 of the Apocalypse of Daniel are based on material originating from another source. The closest parallel to the imagery presented in these verses may be found in 4 Ezra 5:5, in which a stone is also said to “utter its voice” within an eschatological context closely resembling the woeful times preceding the end of the world as presented in the last chapters of the Apocalypse of Daniel.²⁰

Finally, and of particular interest in connection with the relation of the Apocalypse of Daniel to other apocryphal works, is the suggestion made by W. Bousset²¹ concerning the existence of a now lost apocalypse dealing with the Antichrist, which was entitled, according to Bousset, the Apocalypse of Daniel. Even more interesting is the possibility raised by Bousset²² that this lost apocalypse was used as a source by the third-century Christian Father Hippolytus, thus bringing the date of this hypothetical document to a period approaching that of the early pseudepigrapha. An investigation of the possibility of the existence of such a document and its relation to the other medieval apocalypses would perhaps clear up many of the questions concerning the sources of the apocalyptic material preserved in the Apocalypse of Daniel.

Cultural importance

The present Apocalypse of Daniel was until very recently accessible only through the manuscripts themselves or through Istrin’s rare edition of 1897, and then only to those with a knowledge of Greek. Berger’s publication in 1976 made it available in German, while the present translation is the first appearance of this document in English. Under such circumstances the Apocalypse of Daniel can hardly be said to have exercised any significant influence on our culture. However, certain concepts embodied in this and similar Byzantine works, although originally intended for one specific period of history, have lived on through the popular beliefs and aspirations of those nations that have inherited the Byzantine spiritual tradition.

As the centuries passed, the Turks replaced the Arabs as the “sons of Hagar” and the “Ishmaelites” and became the relentless enemies of the Orthodox nations of the Balkans and eastern Europe. The Ottoman Empire eventually enveloped all these peoples, except the Russians, and took the “Seven-hilled” city of Constantinople in 1453. The subsequent decline of the Turkish Empire was paralleled by the emergence of Russia as a world power and later by the establishment of such independent and restive Balkan states as Greece, Bulgaria, Serbia, and Romania. Thus was created a political situation reminiscent of eighth-century Byzantium, with free Orthodox nations again in conflict with the “sons of Hagar.”

A new significance was acquired by the old Byzantine apocalypses that told of a Roman ¹⁹ See ch. 13, n. j.

²⁰ Cf. 4Bar 9:30.

²¹ Bousset, Legend, pp. 68–72, 160.

²² Ibid., pp. 82f.

king named Constantine who would defeat the Ishmaelites and drive them away from the "Seven-hilled" city. This concept was especially tantalizing to the Russians, who considered themselves to be the inheritors of the Roman sovereignty after the fall of the Byzantine Empire. The Russian rulers were called czars after the Caesars and Moscow was the Third Rome—after classical Rome and the New Rome, which was the official title of Constantinople. The centuries-long struggle of Russia to gain strategic access to the Mediterranean Sea also took on the nature of a holy war to liberate the old Byzantine imperial city of Constantinople, which happened to sit astride the Bosphorus, the natural gateway from the Black Sea to the Mediterranean.

Catherine the Great went so far as to christen her second grandson Constantine in 1779 as part of a plan to drive the Turks out of the Balkans and Asia Minor and to reestablish the Byzantine Empire with her grandson as its ruler in Constantinople. The Romanov dynasty also pursued an aggressive foreign policy against the Turks throughout the nineteenth century. This culminated in World War I with the secret treaty of the Allies awarding Constantinople to Russia after victory. The Russian Revolution of 1917 intervened, however, and Russia withdrew from the war, thus losing by a matter of months the prize it had sought through centuries of wars and struggles. At any rate, this interest of the Russians in medieval apocalyptic traditions explains the appearance in the late nineteenth century of collections of Byzantine apocalypses in Russian editions, such as that of Istrin and the Anecdota Graeco-Byzantina of A. Vassiliev, which appeared in Moscow in 1893.

The influence of medieval apocalyptic traditions may also be seen in the case of modern Greece. The Greeks were the first of the Balkan peoples to achieve their independence from the Ottoman Empire in 1830 and have added traditional Greek territories to their state roughly every generation since that time at the expense of the ever-dwindling Turkish Empire. The old prophecies concerning a king named Constantine who would drive the Turks from Constantinople seemed to be coming true in the early 1920s when indeed King Constantine XII (twelfth in line from Constantine the Great) ruled Greece at a time when a Greek army of occupation had landed in Asia Minor and was moving eastward. Although the expedition failed and the Greeks were driven out of Asia Minor, there can be little doubt that the ancient popular traditions had played a not inconsiderable role in the formulation of the Greek war plans. Even today the belief is widespread among the Greek people, as the only remaining free Orthodox nation, that someday a Constantine will accomplish the reconquest of the "Queen of cities," which has until now eluded their grasp. The examples of Russia and Greece serve to demonstrate how Byzantine apocalyptic traditions, if not such works themselves as the Apocalypse of Daniel, have significantly influenced major historical events throughout the centuries and continue to have the potential to do so.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 180–82.

Berger, K. Die griechische Daniel-Diegesse. SPB 27; Leiden, 1976. (This is by far the most helpful work on the Apocalypse of Daniel with critical text, German translation, and exhaustive notes pointing out and analyzing parallels with numerous other apocryphal works.)

Bousset, W. The Antichrist Legend, trans. by A. H. Keane. London, 1896. (The usefulness of this book lies mainly in its discussion of the various elements of the Antichrist theme, which is so central to our apocalypse, as they developed from the earliest times through the medieval period.)

Istrin, V. Otkrovenie Mefodie Patarskago i Apokrificheskie Vidienie Daniila. Moscow, 1897. (This book is valuable for the text of MS B which it contains, although it must be used with caution because of Istrin's often heavy-handed corrections of the very corrupt MS.)

THE APOCALYPSE OF DANIEL^a

- (1)^b (1)^p 1 According to the God-spoken word^c which says: “When you hear^d of wars and rumors of wars,^e nation will fight against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, earthquakes, plagues and deviations^f of stars.”^g • Then the bush which restrains the sons of Hagar^h will dry up. • And three sons of Hagar will go forth into great Babylonia,ⁱ (whose) name(s) are) Ouachēs,^j and another^k Axiaphar, and the third Morphosar. • And Ishmael will come down^l the region of the land of swift passage. • And he will establish his camp in Chalcedon across from Byzantium. • And the other one^m will come to Antioch, Cilicia, and Iberian Anatolia, the Thrakysan country and Smyrnaⁿ and as far as the Seven-hilled (city).^o • And^p he will spill Roman^q blood.^r • And another^s will come to the region of Persia and (to) the Galilean country, the Armenian border, and the city of Trebizond. • And he will come to the region of the land of the Meropes. • And he will massacre male children from two and three years old and younger.^t • And he will consume them by the sword. • And the third one^u will come down the regions of the north^v and Mesiaspolis^w and Synopolis, and Zalichos, the regions of Chrysiapetra, and the well-lit valley and Bithynia, and of Daphnousia, Chrysioupolis, and Damoulion and as far as the Seven-hilled (city).^x

Mk 13:7f.

Mt 2:16

- (3) 1 2 And therefore all these (will) slaughter an infinite multitude of Romans from two and three years old^a and younger.^b • And they will gather together toward the

I a. The title of MS B is: “The Discourse of Our Holy Father Bishop Methodius Concerning the Last Days and Concerning the Antichrist”; of MS M: “Narrative Concerning the Days of the Antichrist, How He Will Come to Be, and Concerning the End of Time”; and of MS V: “The First Vision of Daniel. The Vision and Apocalypse of Daniel the Prophet.” Only the more significant variations among the MSS will be pointed out in the critical notes. Translations from M that will appear in the textual notes are often based upon corrupt passages.

b. In the margin the Roman numerals in parentheses denote the divisions of the text in V. Istrin’s edition, Otkrovenie Mefodie Patarskago i Apokrificheskie Vidientie Daniila; the regular numerals in parentheses are K. Berger’s chapter divisions in Daniel-Diegese.

c. Lit. “voice.”

d. Read akousēte for akousate in B.

e. Read polemōn for polemon in B. Istrin has polemou.

f. Read paratropai with M for epitropai in B.

g. The first part of this quotation is an exact rendering from Mk 13:7f., while the latter part seems to reflect the concern with heavenly signs in the parallel passage in Lk 21:10f.

h. Hagar was the maidservant of Sarah who gave birth to Ishmael by Abraham (Gen 16). Hence, the Byzantines commonly referred to the Arabs and later to the Turks, whom they thought to be the descendants of Hagar and Ishmael, as Agarenes and Ishmaelites.

i. M: “And the nations and the three sons of Hagar will go forth from great Babylonia,” but it may also be translated: “And the nations of great Babylonia and the three sons of Hagar will go forth.”

j. As supported by the reading of this name as Oualleis in M, this is probably a reference to the Arab Caliph Walid I who ruled early in the 8th cent. See Berger, Daniel-Diegese, pp. 47–49, for a discussion of the identities of the three sons of Hagar mentioned by name in this verse.

k. Istrin corrects the corrupt reading ho hete in B to ho heteros (lit. “the other”).

l. Istrin corrects the corrupt reading kato meros in B to katelthē to meros. This is supported by M.

m. The three individuals vaguely referred to in B as “the other one,” “another,” and “the third one” are more clearly identified in M as the aforementioned three sons of Hagar.

n. Read Smyrnēn for Smirnin in B. Istrin has Smirnēn.

o. The “Seven-hilled” city which will be mentioned many times in this document is Constantinople (Byzantium), the capital of the Byzantine Empire, which, like Rome, was built upon seven hills.

p. B has kai twice.

q. The Byzantines considered themselves to be the successors of the Roman Empire and therefore as a rule referred to themselves as Romans.

r. Read haima for haiman in B.

s. Lit. “the other one.” Istrin omits the article ho in B. See n. m.

t. Lit. “from above.”

u. See n. m.

v. Read the noun borra with M for the adjective boreiou in B.

w. This is probably, with M, the city Amasia.

x. The geographical places mentioned in this chapter correspond in general to those involved in the Arab invasions of Asia Minor in the early 8th cent.

2 a. The tryetous in Istrin’s text is his correction of an obscure reading in B.

b. Lit. “from above.”

3,4 sea. •And in their ships^c (will be) a myriad myriads. •And there will be other
5 infinite and innumerable multitudes. •And in that place many will deny our Lord
6 Jesus Christ and the holy gifts and will follow the apostates.^d •And every sacrifice
7,8 will cease from the churches. •And the liturgy of God will be mocked.^e •And the 9 priests will be as laymen.^f •And Ishmael will cry out with a great voice, boasting^g
10 and saying, •“Where is the God of the Romans? There is no one helping them,
(4) 11 for we have defeated them completely.” •For truly^h the three sons of Hagar will 12 roarⁱ against the Romans. •And they will cross over against the Seven-hilled (city) 13,14 toward Byzantium. •And conferring, they will say (among) themselves, •“Come and let us make a bridge in the sea^j with boats and transport^k horses for ourselves 15 to Byzantium, the Seven-hilled (city).” •But the rulers of the Romans and the 16 magnates of the Seven-hilled (city) will flee to the glens of the mountains.^l •And 17 there will be fear and affliction. •And there will be much necessity of the moun-18 tains.^m •And the people of the Seven-hilled (city) will be afflicted by the sword.
19,20 Woe, woe then. •How will the orthodox faith of the Christians and the invincible power of the honorable and life-giving cross be overcome?ⁿ

Rev 6:15

(5) 1,2 3 But hear, brethren, that because of their iniquity God forbears. •And the first
3 will set up his couch across from Byzantium. •And he will strike and they will be 4,5 stricken. •And then the rulers of the Romans blaspheme, saying, •“Woe, woe, 6 neither in^a heaven do we have a king^b nor on the earth.” •And with this word^c the Lord will incline his mercy toward the Romans and toward their revenge and will 7 repay^d justice to his enemies. •And there will be a great sound from heaven and 8 a fearful earthquake and a voice from the angel from heaven. •And the Lord will 9 incline his head and will set his fury^e against the sons of Hagar and upon the feet^f of Ishmael. •And the Lord will lift up the cowardice of the Romans and put^g (it) 10 into the hearts of Ishmael, and the courage of the Ishmaelites into the hearts of the Romans. •And the Lord will raise up a king of the Romans, who people say is 11 dead and useful for nothing, who people think^h died many years before.ⁱ •The 12 Lord is reserving this man in the outer country^j of Persia.^k •This (is) his name: that 13 which (begins with) the letter K^m of the alphabet. •And this man is coming to the 14,15 Seven-hilled city toward the evening.ⁿ •And he will prepare for his enemies. •And on Saturday^o morning, as the sun rises, he will engage in a great war with the Rev 16:17f.

SibOr 5.1-51

c. Istrin corrects auklais in B to nauklais.

d. Istrin corrects hypostatais in B to apostatais.

e. The obscure reading hypomōxei in B could possibly be a corrupt form of the verbal root mōkaō with the preposition hypo. Berger corrects this word as hypochōrei (“to recede”).

f. Vss. 5–8 do not appear in M.

g. Read egkauchōmenos for enkauchomenos in B.

h. Istrin corrects allēthōs in B to alēthōs.

i. Read bryxousin for bryzousin in B. M supports this with brixousin.

j. Istrin corrects thallassē in B to thalassē.

k. Lit. “cross over” with causative meaning.

l. M: “will take refuge in the islands of the sea.”

m. M: “of the Romans.”

n. Istrin’s text omits the preposition kata from before the verb kyrieuthēsetai in B. Vss. 19f. do not appear in M.

3 a. Istrin’s text omits the article tō in B.

b. Read basilea for basilean in B.

c. Lit. “voice.” In place of the present text up to this point in ch. 3, M has: “However, beloved ones, hear of the most compassionate philanthropy of the all-merciful God. For as the son of Hagar and of godless Ishmael is roaring like wild lions against the Romans . . .”

d. Read antapodōsei for antapodosei in B.

e. Istrin’s text omits the phrase kai thisei ton thymon autou in B. Read thēsei for thysei.

f. M: “implacable race.”

g. Read balei for ballei in B.

h. Read nomizousin (“to think”) with M for onomazousin (“to name”) in B.

i. This verse brings to mind the Nero redivivus legend. See “Relation to apocryphal books.”

j. Istrin’s text has the mistaken reading ex eōchōran for eis exochōran in B.

k. M: “in the inner country of the Persian and Syrian nations.”

l. Lit. “that which (is) in the letter.”

m. The letter “K” is the reading of M and probably refers to Constantine V. B has Ē, which, if referring to the Emperor Heraclius, could be the original reading from a more primitive tradition. See W. Bousset, The Antichrist Legend, p. 78.

n. M mentions that this man’s entrance will occur on a Friday (Paraskeuē), which is an obvious play on the verb paraskeuazō (“to prepare”) in the next verse.

o. Istrin corrects Sabatō in B to Sabbatō.

16 nation^p and the sons of Hagar, both he and^q the two small boys.^r •And the rulers 17 of the Romans will gather together in Byzantium. •Then even the priests of the Romans and the bishops and abbots who are found will bear weapons of war.

1 4 And when he has gathered those together with (the) two small boys, that king
2 also will join^a in a mighty war with the nation of the sons of Hagar.^b •And he will
3 massacre them like the grass of a reed being burned by fire. •And from their blood 4 a three-year-old^c bull will drown.^d •And the king alone will pursue a thousand and 5 the two small boys myriads. •And Ishmael and the sons of Hagar will be butchered^e
(6) 6 to the end. •And there will be war and great bloodshed such as has not been since 7 the foundation of the world. •The blood will be mixed^f in the sea one and a half
8 miles.^g •And in the streets of the Seven-hilled (city) horses will be submerged,^h Rev 14:20 9 drowning in the blood. •And from that nation and from Ishmael there will remainⁱ 10 only three tents of men. •And (the) sons of Ishmael will serve the Romans to the end and will serve the chief donkey drivers^j of the Seven-hilled (city for) thirty 11 years. •And the nature of Ishmael in the sword and in captivity is more bitter and 12 more grievous^k beyond that of the Romans.^l •And the Roman race will desire to 13 see^m a trace of Ishmael and will not find (it). •And then the prophetic word will 14 be fulfilled (that says): “How will one pursue a thousand and two remove myriads Deut 32:30LXX unlessⁿ the Lord God rejected them and the Lord gave them over?”^o

1 5 And the king of the Romans will subdue every enemy and adversary under his 2 feet. •And the scepter of that king will be long-lived, likewise^a (that) of the two 3,4 small boys. •And his fame will go forth from the east and the west. •And there
5 will be one empire.^b •And no one will resist him because this man has come from 6,7 God and^c he will cause all^d war to cease. •And there will be great peace. •And 8 every city and fortresses will be built. •And there will be many altars acceptable 9 to God^e in all the civilized world. •And all the islands^f and the mountains will be 10 inhabited.^g •And the bread and the wine and the olive oil and the gold and the 11 silver will increase^h in allⁱ the earth. •And that king will cause all hostility to cease Isa 2:4
12,13 upon the earth. •And they will make their weapons into scythes. •And his reign 14 will be (for) thirty-six years.^j •And the rulers of the Romans will desire^k to join

p. M: “Ishmael.”

q. Istrin’s text has this kai in parentheses unnecessarily, since it does occur in B.

r. Constantine V in fact did have two sons, besides Leo IV, by another wife.

4 a. Istrin corrects sykrotēsei in B to sygkrotēsei.

b. The phrase “of the sons of Hagar” is supplied from M.

c. Istrin corrects tryotēs in B to trietēs.

d. Read pnigēsetai for pnigysētai in B. Istrin has pnigizetai.

e. Read sygkopēsetai for sygkopicētai in B. Istrin has sygkopēsetai.

f. Gk. rasthēsetai in B could conceivably be a corrupt form of the verb rainō (“to sprinkle”), but more probably the words kai rasthēsetai taken together are a mistaken writing of kerasthēsetai (“to mix”). This is supported by the reading sygkerasthēsetai of M.

g. Lit. “twelve stades” of about one-eighth mile each.

h. Istrin’s reading of kaphēsontai for baphēsontai could be a mistake, since b and k are often written alike in B.

i. Read mēnē for mynē in B. Istrin has menei.

j. Gk. archionēlatai (“chief donkey drivers”) has been suggested by Berger for the obscure reading archiolōtai in B.

k. Read pikrotera kai odynērōtera for pykrotera kai odynōtera in B. Istrin has mistakenly written pokrotera.

l. Vss. 10f. do not appear in M.

m. Read idein with M for ē d’ an in B. V also supports M.

n. The reading eimē (unless) of M is more in accord with the text of this LXX quotation (Deut 32:30) than is the oimoi (“alas”) of B.

o. Read paredōken with M for eparedōken in B.

5 a. Read estai makroēmereuon homoiōs for estin makro hemerebonte ho misos in B. Istrin has mistakenly written makron.

b. In place of this vs., M has: “And he will thrust his broadsword in the east and his bow into the sides of the north and the bear.”

c. Read with M apo tou theou houtōs (correctly houtos) for apo thē holos in B. Istrin’s text omits the phrase apo thē holos elēlythen.

d. Read panta for pasa in B.

e. The phrase “acceptable to God” does not appear in M.

f. Istrin corrects nisai in B to nēsai.

g. For this vs. M reads: “The islands also will be inhabited.”

h. Read plēthynthēsetai with M for the corrupt planthēsetai in B.

i. Read pasē for mpasē in B.

j. This vs. does not appear in M.

k. Read epithymōsousin for epithymōsousin in B.

15 in war but will not find (it).¹ •And all the perimeter(s) of the earth^m will fear them.
16 And that king will glorify God because in his reign God gave to him the good 17 things of the earth which he did not give since the foundation of the world. •And 18 the king will fall asleepⁿ in peace. •And his two small boys will be taken up^o in peace^p after thirty-three years.^q

- (M) (7) 1,2 6 And after him there will arise from the north^a another king.^b •And working 3 great impurities^c and many injustices, he will also work great iniquities. •And he 4 will couple^d mother and son and brother and sister. •And^e he will bring the monks out of the holy monasteries and will join the monasteries together^f and will cause 5,6 the nuns^g to lie with his nation. •And he will work great transgressions. •Woe,
7,8 woe then (to) the Christian race. •Woe to those who are pregnant.^h •And the praises 9 of God also will cease. •And the Lord God will call fire from heaven and will
(8) 10 consume them.ⁱ •And after him a foul and alien woman^j will reign in the Seven- Sib Or 3.75-77
11 hilled (city). •And she will settle on the southern side of the Seven-hilled (city).^k
- (9) 1,2 7 And therefore woe (to) the Christian race. •And woe to you, Seven-hilled Rev 18:10,16,19
3 Babylon, because the Byzantium of God will flee from you. •And your holiness
4,5 and your temples will flee from you. •And your glory will fall. •And woe to you, Rev 17:9, 18 6 Seven-hilled Babylon, the new Byzantium. •And woe to you, the Christian race.
7 Again (there will be) an inroad of nations, again fear (among) the Romans, again
8 slaughters and disturbances (for) the Roman nation.^a •Churches will be destroyed.
9,10 The faith^b has been dissolved. •Women conceive^c the babies of misbelievers.^d
11 And therefore woe to you, wretched^e Babylon, the mother of cities,^f because God
12,13 will incline his wrath which emits fire. •And your^g high walls will fall. •And there Rev 18:17-19 will remain in you only one^h pillar of Constantine the Great, so that they who sail

l. At this point M inserts: "And that king will be called by the name of a wild beast." This could be a reference to Leo III (717–41), father of Constantine V.

m. Lit. "all the circle of the earth."

n. Istrin mistakenly reads synkoitēthēsetai for synkōimēthēsetai in B (correct to synkoimēthēsetai).

o. Read aparhōsin for the obscure apar(?)thōsin in B.

p. M: "And he and his two small boys will fall asleep . . ." Istrin's text omits the whole phrase kai ta dio autou myraki apar(?)thōsin en eirēnē in B (correct to kai ta dyo autou meirakia aparhōsin en eirēnē).

q. The thirty-three years given in this vs. for the reign of the king conflict with the thirty-six given in vs. 13. This conflict does not exist in M, which omits vs. 13. Constantine V in fact ruled for thirty-four years (741–75).

6 a. Istrin corrects bora in B to borra.

b. This king from the north corresponds to Leo IV, who was known as the "Khazar" because he was the son of Constantine V and a princess of Khazaria, a kingdom to the north of Byzantium. He ruled from 775 to 780.

c. Istrin corrects akartasias in B to akarthasias.

d. Read syzeuxei for synzeuxei in B.

e. Istrin mistakenly reads kai for ek in B.

f. Istrin's text omits the phrase kai synzeuxei ta monastēria in B.

g. Read monastrias for monēstērias in B.

h. In place of vss. 4–7, M has: "And the iniquity of transgression will be accomplished and of licentiousness and of incest as the people will behave licentiously by his decrees."

i. M: "he (the king) will be shaken by heavenly fire."

j. This woman corresponds to the Empress Irene who ruled with her son Constantine VI from 780 to 797 then as sole ruler from 797 to 802.

k. Instead of vss. 10f., M has: "And after him a tall alien man will arise from the sides of the south. And he will reign in the Seven-hilled (city)." This reading upsets the chronology that has been established for B and raises the possibility of a different date, if not for the apocalypse as a whole, at least for the version of the text represented by M.

7 a. Istrin's text omits the phrase to genos tōn Rōmaiōn in B.

b. Istrin corrects ai poistois in B to hē pistis.

c. Read sylambanousin for synlambanousin in B.

d. In place of vss. 1–10, M has: "And therefore woe to you, Seven-hilled Babylon, because your wealth and your glory will be proclaimed. For, boasting, you said, 'I am clothed in gold and in hyacinth and pearl and in scarlet raiment and in purple and in silver and amber and my hand is not [In place of the obscure phrase ouk estin hē emi cheira, V has: "there is nothing inferior in me"], because kings will reign in me and potentates will come in and go out and great rulers will reside in me.'" Cf. Rev 18:7, 16.

e. Read talaipōre for talaiopore in B.

f. Istrin corrects pollaiōn in B to poleōn.

g. Istrin mistakenly writes a second ta for sou in B.

h. Istrin omits the heis in B.

14 the sea¹ may lament there. •And furthermore the kingdom will be taken up^j from him^k and will be given to Rome.¹

(10) 1,2 8 And another great scepter will arise from Judea. •And^a his name (is) Dan.^b 3 And then the Jews, the implacable Hebrew race, who are dispersed into cities and 4 countries, will be gathered together. •And they will be gathered together there.^c
5,6 And they will come into Jerusalem toward their king.^d •And they will afflict the 7 Christian race in all^e the earth. •Woe, woe,^f good people.^g

(III) (11) 1 9 With him^a reigning, the Antichrist will go forth from the lower regions^b and the 2,3 chasms of Hades. •And he will come into a small garidion^c fish. •And he is coming
4,5 in the broad sea. •And he will be caught^d by twelve fishermen. •And the fishermen 6 will become maddened^e toward each other. •One will prevail over them, whose 7 name (is) Judas. •And he takes that fish for his inheritance and comes into a place Mt 26:14f.
8 named Gouzēth and there sells^f the fish for^g thirty silver pieces. •And a virgin girl
9 will buy the fish. •Her name (is) Injustice because the son of injustice will be born^h 2Thes 2:3
10,11 from her. •And her surnameⁱ will be Perdition. •For by touching^j the^k head of the 12 fish she will become pregnant^l and will conceive the Antichrist himself. •And he 13 will be born from her (after) three months. •And he will suckle (from) her (for) 14,15 four^m months. •He comes into Jerusalemⁿ and becomes a false teacher.^o •And he Ascens 4 16 will appear quiet and gentle^p and guileless.^q •The height of his stature (will be) 17,18 fifteen feet.^r •And the hairs of his head^s (will reach) as far as his feet. •And he 19,20 (will be) large and three-crested.^t •And the track^u of his feet (will be) large.^v •His eyes (will be) like the star which rises^w in the morning, and his right (eye will be) 21,22 like a lion's.^x •His lower teeth^y (will be) iron and his lower jaw diamond.^z •And

i. Istrin corrects thalasan in B to thalassan.

j. Istrin mistakenly writes aparthēsetai for eparthēsetai in B.

k. M: "from you," and furthermore inserts at this point: "Your merchants will flee from you and will be lost. And every city and country will lament over you, the mother of cities. For at that time the kingdom will be lifted up from Byzantium . . ."

l. This is probably a reference to the coronation of Charlemagne as emperor in Rome on Christmas Day, 800.

8 a. Istrin omits this kai in B.

b. M adds at this point: "And he will reign in Jerusalem." Based upon the OT passages in Gen 49:17, Deut 33:22, and Jer 8, a tradition arose very early that associated the Antichrist with the tribe of Dan. Irenaeus attributes to this concept the omission in Rev 7:5–8 of the tribe of Dan from the list of the tribes of the sons of Israel who are sealed as servants of God (Contra haereses 5.30.2). For an earlier form of the tradition, see TDan 5:4–13.

c. M transposes to this point from the preceding vs. the phrase: "from every city and country."

d. Istrin corrects basilean in B to basilea.

e. Istrin corrects mpasē in B to pasē.

f. Istrin's text omits the second "woe" in B.

g. In place of this vs., M has: "And they will oppress the Romans unto death."

9 a. M specifies Dan.

b. Read katachthoniōn for kakochthoniōn in B. M supports this with katachthonion.

c. Istrin writes garidion for gabridion in B. The original spelling was probably gauidion and was doubtless the name of a particular type of fish.

d. Read halieuthēsetai for hallieuthēsetai in B.

e. Read ekmaneis for egymaneis in B. Istrin has egmaneis.

f. Read pōlei for pōllei in B.

g. Istrin's text omits the preposition eis in B.

h. Read gennēthēnai for genēthēnai in B.

i. Read epōnymon for epōnyman in B.

j. Istrin mistakenly writes hepsomenē ("to cook") for hapsamenoi in B (correct to hapsamenē, "to touch").

k. Istrin's text omits the article tēs in B.

l. Read eggyos for eggonos ("grandson") in B. M and V support this reading.

m. M: "five months."

n. Read Hierosolyman for Hierosolyman in B.

o. Istrin corrects parodaskalos in B to paradas-kalos. M: "teacher of children."

p. "Gentle" seems to be the general import of the obscure readings praophylēs (B) and praophaleis (M). Berger corrects this to prophilēs ("beloved").

q. M further describes the Antichrist as "down-cast" and "prosecuting transgressions."

r. Lit. "ten cubits" of about eighteen inches each.

s. "Head" is the reading of M. B repeats the hēlikia ("stature") of the preceding vs., probably by a scribal error.

t. B has the difficult reading trikoryphos, which may best be translated as "three-crested." M: "topped with hair." V supports B.

u. Istrin's text mistakenly has ichnys for ichnos in B.

v. M: "three cubits" (four and a half feet).

w. Istrin corrects anatelōn in B to anatelōn.

x. Istrin's text omits kai ho dexios autou hōs leōntos in B.

y. M and V: "the upper part of his teeth."

z. M has the correct neuter singular ending of the adjective "diamond"; B has the plural.

23 his right arm (will be) iron and his left copper. •And his right hand (will be) four 24 and a half feet (long).^{a2} •(He will be) long-faced, long-nosed,^{b2} and disorderly.^{c2}
 25,26 And he also has upon his forehead three letters: A, K, T.^{d2} •And the A signifies:
 “I deny,” the K: “And I completely reject,” the T: “The befouled dragon.”^{e2}
 27 And the Antichrist will be teaching and being taught.^{f2}

1 10 At that time there will be an abundance of grain and wine and olive oil such 2 as has not been since the foundation of the world.^a •And in those times the^b ear 2Bar 29:5
 3 will pour out a half measure of grain.^c •And the vine branch^d will put out a hundred
 4 grape clusters. •And the grape cluster will bear ten thousand^e (grapes) and will pour 5,6 out a hundred measures.^f •And the seed of the olive tree will be complete.^g •And 7 there will be much^h fruitfulness of all kinds. •And the land will be fruitful and will produce her fruits a hundredfold.ⁱ

(12) 1 11 And the Jewish nation and the Jerusalemites^a will take counsel^b saying,
 2,3 “Come, let us make this admirable man king.”^c •And they make^d him king and 4,5 crown him (after) three days. •And he will reign (for) three years. •And in his first 6 year^e all the grass upon the earth will fail. •And in the whole world there will not 7 be found a half measure^f of grain or a half jar of wine nor other fruit.^g •Then there 8 will be a mighty plague. •And those on the mainland will flee to the islands and 9 those on the islands to the mainland. •And for a time a manner^h of disease will be upon the whole earth and a great plague which has never occurred until that 10,11 era.ⁱ •And the people will be deadened. •If^j the just man is barely saved, how will Prov 11:31LXX the sinner appear?

a2. M: “His left hand (will be) three cubits (long) and his right hand four cubits.”

b2. Read makrorinos with M for the obscure makroradēs in B.

c2. Istrin writes eudiathetos (“well-disposed”) for adoiathetos (correct to adiathetos, “disorderly”) in B.

d2. M: “A T Ch, that is, Antichrist”; V: “Denying, Ch X St.” The verb arnoumai (“to deny”) occurs in connection with the three letters on the forehead of the Antichrist because the numerical equivalents of the Gk. letters that make up this verb spelled as arnoume add up to 666, the number of the Antichrist figure in Rev 13:18. The numerical values of the Gk. letters Ch, X, and St also add up to 666. The letters A K T, however, which are preserved in B, obviously puzzled even the scribe of this MS. The A is explained adequately as representing arnoumai, but the K and T are presented as signifying the conjunction kai (“and”) and the article ton (“the”), which introduce the phrases: “And I completely reject” and “The befouled dragon.” This ludicrous explanation by the scribe of B indicates that he is dealing with a set of letters foreign to him—possibly from another source—for which he concocts an obviously forced interpretation. For the possibility that these letters were originally from a Semitic source, see the Introduction, n. 7.

e2. This vs. does not appear in M.

f2. In place of this vs., M has: “And when the scepter of Dan has come to an end, the Antichrist will be teaching and being taught, trying and being tried.” Cf. OdesSol 38:9f.

10 a. M inserts at this point: “For they who cultivated the good things of the world will be (for) three years.”

b. Istrin’s text omits the article tou in B, which has no grammatical place in the sentence.

c. Read choinikon sitou for phoinikos in B. This is supported by M. A choinix was a dry measure of about a quart.

d. My conjectured meaning: The reading agkōn (“angle” or “bend”) suggested by M is preferable to the askos (“wine skin”) of B, although the meaning is still obscure.

e. Lit. “will become a bearer of ten thousand.” Read genēsetai for gennēsetai in B and myriagōgos for myriorygos in B.

f. M: “two measures of wine” (oinon metra dyo).

g. M adds at this point: “the whole of it not containing (extraneous) matter.”

h. Istrin corrects pollē in B to pollē.

i. At this point M adds: “And there will be much elation, such as has not been from the foundation of the world until those times should come.”

11 a. Istrin corrects hoi erosolymitai in B to hoi Hierosolymitai.

b. Read symbolion with M for symbolon in B.

c. Read basilea for basilean in B.

d. Istrin corrects poioun in B to poiouin.

e. M: “first year of his reign.”

f. Read hēmichoinikon, as suggested by the readings of M and V. B: “a half tablet” (hēmison pinakion), which Istrin corrects to hēmisy pinakion.

g. M: “And other fruit will not be found.”

h. The phrase kata spithamēn kai opēan is extremely obscure.

i. In place of vs. 7–9, M has: “And there will be upon the face of the earth a great famine, such as has not been since the foundation of the world until that time. For the earth will be worn out by the plague.”

j. Istrin’s text omits oi, which should be read ei (“if”).

- 1 12 And then the unclean spirits and the demons will go forth like the sand^a of 2 the sea, those in the abyss^b and those in the crags and ravines.^c • And they will adhere to the Antichrist and they also will be^d tempting the Christians^e and killing^f 3,4 the babies of the women. • And they themselves will suckle from them. • And then Rev 9:6
 the people will be calling upon death and digging up the tombs and saying, 5 “Blessed and thrice blessed are you who have already died,^g because you did not 6 reach these days.”^h • Andⁱ they who go down to the sea also (will be) saying,
 7 “May the fury of your waves swallow us also, O holy sea.”^j • And then all flesh
 8 of the Romans will lament. • And while there will be temporary^k joy^l and exultation of the Jews, (there will be) affliction and oppression of the Romans^m from every 9,10 necessity of the evil demons. • And the earth will become like copper. • And all 11 greenery will dry up. • And every tree and every flower upon the earth will fail.
 12,13 And the lakes and the rivers and the wells will dry up. • And the moistureⁿ of the waters will completely dry up.^o
- (13) 1,2 13 And then the Antichrist will lift up a stone in his hands and say, • “Believe 3 in me and I will make these stones (into) bread.” • And then (the)^a Jews will 4 worship (him), who are saying, • “You are Christ for whom we pray and on 5 account of you the Christian race has grieved^b us greatly.”^c • And then the Antichrist 6,7 will boast, saying to the Jews, • “Do not be grieved thus. • A little (while and) the 8 Christian race will see and will realize^d who I am.”^e • And the Antichrist lifts up
 9 (his) voice toward the^f flinty rock,^g saying,^h • “Become bread before the Jews.” 4Ezra 5:5
 10,11 And disobeyingⁱ him, the rock becomes a dragon. • And the dragon says to the 12 Antichrist, • “O you who are full of every iniquity and injustice, why do you do 4Bar 9:30 13 things which you are not able?” • And the dragon shames^j him before^k the Jews.
- (14) 1 14 And then three men will go forth and will condemn^a him (as) a liar and a 2 deceiver. • And these three men, two from heaven and one from the earth,^b also 12 a. Istrin corrects amos in B to amos.

b. Istrin corrects abēsō in B to abyssō.

c. In place of “ravines,” M has: “in the lower regions, in the caves, in the lakes, in the springs, in the pools, and in the air.”

d. Istrin’s text omits pros ton antuchruston (correct to antichriston) kai esontai in B.

e. M: “people.”

f. Read anairoutes for anairoutai in B. This is supported by M.

g. Istrin’s text mistakenly has protereutēsantes for proteleutēsantes in B.

h. At this point M inserts: “final, grievous, and wholly evil (days), entreating and begging the mountains and saying, ‘Cover us, O mountains.’”

i. Istrin’s text omits men in B.

j. At this point M inserts: “And woe to those who suckle and are pregnant in those most evil days” (Mt 24:19; Mk 13:17; Lk 21:23).

k. Read proskairōs for proikerōi in B. Istrin’s text has proskarē.

l. Istrin’s text mistakenly has kara for chara in B.

m. M: “Christians.”

n. Read iknades for ekmades in B. The plural is translated here as singular.

o. At this point M inserts: “And the faces of the people will be deadened by the coming plague.”

13 a. Istrin corrects oioudeoi in B to hoi loudaioi.

b. Read elypēsen for ellypēsen in B.

c. At this point M inserts: “And the Jews will be in great joy then, speaking with the Antichrist.”

d. The text of B is extremely corrupt at this point.

e. At this point M inserts: “The day will try you and I will tempt you.”

f. Read tēn for ton in B.

g. Gk. akrotomos petra is the same phrase used in the LXX to describe the rock out of which Moses brought forth water miraculously in the wilderness (Deut 8:15).

h. Read legōn with M for legontes in B, which Istrin writes legonta. At this point M inserts: “I made heaven and earth. I say to you, the flinty rock . . .”

i. Istrin’s text mistakenly has parakalousa for parakousasa in B.

j. Istrin has the verb kataischynō in the future tense with the accent on the last syllable. Since the spelling of this verb is exactly the same in the present tense, except for the accent being on the next to the last syllable, it is possible to translate it here in the present. MSS B and M support this interpretation; in B the ending of this verb is in an abbreviated form showing no accent, and in M it is clearly written in the present tense. Thus, this vs. is in harmony with the preceding five vs., which seem to constitute a distinct unit (see “Relation to apocryphal books”).

k. Istrin corrects enōpoi in B to enōpion.

14 a. Istrin corrects exelēxousin (“to choose”) in B to exēlegousin (“to condemn”).

b. The two men from heaven who will confront the Antichrist were already identified from early patristic times as Enoch and Elijah, the two biblical figures who did not suffer death but were taken up to heaven still living (Irenaeus, Contra haereses

3 walk before the Antichrist and say,^c • “Woe to you, O worker of injustice and 4 inheritor^d of eternal fire.” • And they will walk in all the earth, crying out^e and 5 saying to the afflicted Christians, • “Hear,^f O sons of men, and do not worship Ascens 4 him, because he is not the Christ nor^g a God-fearing man, but he is the Antichrist.” 6.7 And many Christians will run to the feet of the saints and say,^h • “What shall we 8.9 do, O saints? • Where shall we Christians hide?” • And many of the Christians will Heb 11:38 hide in mountains and caves and in the holes of the earth (and) will be saved, so 10 that the treacherous Samuelⁱ might not seize them. • And when the Antichrist finds 11 these three men^j he will kill them by the sword. • Then that spoken by the prophet 12,13 David will be fulfilled: • “Then they will offer up bulls upon your altar.”^k • And Ps 51:19
(50:21LXX)
 with the Antichrist reigning and with the demons persecuting, the Jews contriving 14 vanities^l against the Christians, the great day of the Lord draws near. • And there
 15,16 will be^m judgment and recompense. • And the deception of the devil will fall. • And Jn 8:12 the light of the world, Christ our Lordⁿ and king of glory, will flower, to whom is due all glory and honor and dominion forever.^o Amen.

5.5.1; cf. Gen 5:24; 2Kgs 2:11; Mal 4:5; Rev 11:3–13; 4Ezra 6:26). The third man from the earth, John the Evangelist, was added in later times. For a discussion of the three witnesses see Bousset’s The Antichrist Legend, pp. 203–11.

c. Lit. “and saying.”

d. Read klêronome for klêrônome in B.

e. Istrin’s text mistakenly has kraxontes for krazontes in B.

f. Read akousate for akousête in B. Istrin has akouseite.

g. Lit. “but not.”

h. Lit. “and saying.”

i. M: “Samaël.”

j. M inserts at this point: “in the midst of the altar . . .”

k. This quote is from the LXX text of Ps 50:21.

l. Read kena meletoutôn for kai namele touton in B.

m. Read genêsetai for gennêsetai in B.

n. M: “Christ our God.”

o. Lit. “unto the ages.” M inserts a typical liturgical formula: “Together with the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, now and always and unto the ages of ages.”

TESTAMENTS

OFTEN WITH APOCALYPTIC SECTIONS

INTRODUCTION

BY J. H. CHARLESWORTH

The traditions in the Old Testament provided the framework and most of the presuppositions for the following testaments. These documents represent a type of writing that was presaged in the Old Testament (cf. Gen 49), but which did not reach maturity until the time of the second Temple. Just as the Old Testament contains for Jews and Christians a record of God's covenant, testament, and will (nouns represented by one word in Gk., diathēkē), so the following compositions reputedly preserve the solemn last words and wills of model figures. No binding genre was employed by the authors of the testaments, but one can discern among them a loose format: The ideal figure faces death and causes his relatives and intimate friends to circle around his bed. He occasionally informs them of his fatal flaw and exhorts them to avoid certain temptations; he typically instructs them regarding the way of righteousness and utters blessings and curses. Often he illustrates his words—as the apocalyptic seer in the apocalypses—with descriptions of the future as it has been revealed to him in a dream or vision. The latter feature is common to apocalyptic literature and plays a significant role in some of the testaments, especially the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, the Testament of Abraham, and the Testament of Moses. The unique features and peculiarities of some of these documents and the significant differences among them should not be overshadowed by their sharing of the title "testament." Some scholars, for example, have argued that the Testament of Abraham is not a testament because it lacks one of the form's reputed features: Abraham is not portrayed as preparing and giving a testament.

It is clear that the testaments do not represent a well-defined genre; moreover, the testamentary framework often includes, for example, apocalyptic, ethical, and Midrashic types of literature. Some works included under "Expansions of the 'Old Testament' and Other Legends" have even been called testaments; for example, Jubilees has been denominated "The Testament of Moses."

Also to be consulted when reading the testaments are the following: the Testament of Hezekiah (in the Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah), the Testament of Zosimus (an earlier name for the History of the Rechabites), and the Testament of Orpheus (cf. Orphica in the Supplement).

CONTENTS

Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs
Testament of Job
Testaments of the Three Patriarchs
Testament of Abraham
Testament of Isaac
Testament of Jacob
Testament of Moses Testament of Solomon
Testament of Adam

TESTAMENTS OF THE TWELVE PATRIARCHS

(Second Century B.C.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY H. C. KEE

The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs purport to be the final utterances of the twelve sons of Jacob, on the model of Jacob's last words in Genesis 49. Just prior to his death, each of the sons is depicted as gathering around him his offspring, reflecting on aspects of his life, confessing his misdeeds, exhorting his family to avoid his sins and exemplify virtue, concluding with predictions about the future of Israel and giving instructions concerning his burial. In the process, each patriarch calls for special honor to be given to Levi and Judah, progenitors, respectively, of the priestly and kingly lines of the nation. The account in each case ends with a report of the burial of the patriarch. Most of the Testaments include a section in which the destiny of the nation is described according to a pattern of the nation's sin, its exile as divine judgment, and its restoration in glory in the eschatological future.¹

Texts

GREEK

1. Vatican Library, Cod. Graec. 731, thirteenth century, complete (= c).
2. St. Catherine's Monastery, Mount Sinai, MS 547, seventeenth century, ends at the Testament of Joseph 15:7 (= h).
3. Bodleian Library, MS Baroccio 133, Oxford, fourteenth century, numerous omissions (= a).
4. Monastery of Koutloumousiou, Cod. 39, Mount Athos, tenth century (= e), includes extensive additions following the Testament of Levi 2:3; 18:2; the Testament of Asher 7:2. The second of these corresponds to the version of the Testament of Levi that exists in Aramaic fragments (see below).
5. University Library, Cambridge, MS Ff. 1.24, tenth century (= b).

In his edition of the Greek text of the Testaments, R. H. Charles assumed the existence of two ancient recensions of the work, one of which he designated α and the other β . He believed he could trace these two different textual traditions back to two recensions of what he thought to be the original Hebrew of the Testaments. For the most part the differences between the Greek textual traditions were accounted for by Charles as having arisen by chance, based in many cases on corruption in the process of translation. According to Charles, both α and β texts contain Christian interpolations, with a greater number in the latter text tradition. Charles based his critical text primarily on the α text, but acknowledged that sometimes one tradition preserves the true text, and at times the other, so that the translator is obliged to move back and forth between α and β . M. de Jonge, on the other hand, based his critical text on the β tradition. H. J. de Jonge, in M. de Jonge, Studies on the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, rejects the α/β classification of manuscripts and concludes that only manuscripts b and k (only contains excerpts) have preserved the oldest stage of the Greek archetype.

¹ My studies in T12P were initiated by my esteemed teachers at Yale, Millar Burrows and Clarence Tucker Craig. More recently I have benefited by way of stimulus, challenge, and criticism from the members of the Pseudepigrapha Seminars of the Society of Biblical Literature and the Studiorum Novi Testamenti Societas, especially M. de Jonge and J. H. Charlesworth. John Priest, of Florida State University, read a draft of this material and offered most helpful comments and criticism; Dr. Ellen Young likewise provided perceptive editorial assistance. To all of them I hereby express gratitude, in recognition that I bear responsibility for the results.

ARMENIAN

Nearly all of the twelve manuscripts of the Testaments in Armenian known to R. H. Charles were from western Europe (chiefly in the library of the Mechitarist Fathers in Venice); of these, nine were used by Charles in preparing his critical edition of the text. C. Burchard now lists forty-five manuscripts of the Testaments in Armenian, some of which are now in the Armenian Patriarchate in Jerusalem and which have been published in part by M. Stone in his critical study of the Testament of Levi. Until new evidence from previously unpublished manuscripts shows otherwise, however, the Armenian manuscripts are still to be classified as A^a and A^b , of which A^a is an abbreviated text that includes readings of a secondary nature, although on the whole it stands closer to the α text of the Greek tradition. In addition, it represents several superior readings. The Armenian manuscripts remain translations from the Greek, however, and give no evidence of dependence on Semitic originals.

SLAVONIC

The Slavonic manuscripts are few and late, consisting mostly of material excerpted from Greek sources in which Old Testament narratives are retold in expanded form.

HEBREW

Late Hebrew fragments of a Testament of Judah and a complete Testament of Naphtali have long been known, but the Late Hebrew style in which they are written and their divergence in both structure and basic substance from the Greek Testaments exclude them from consideration as being merely late copies of an original Hebrew document that might underlie our Greek Testaments. They present only occasional and fragmentary verbal parallels with the Greek Testaments. An unpublished genealogy of Bilhah from Qumran Cave 4 seems to have an affinity with the Testament of Naphtali 1:6–12, but determination of the relationship must await publication of the text.

ARAMAIC

The fragments of an Aramaic Testament of Levi, discovered in the Cairo Genizah (a synagogue storeroom) and first published in 1910, have since been supplemented by a somewhat fuller Greek version of this same work found at the Monastery of Koutloumousiou on Mount Athos, and more recently by numerous fragments discovered at Qumran. The latter include possible parallels—their fragmentary nature precludes certainty—to the Testament of Levi 21 and to a Prayer of Levi which is not found in our Greek Testament of Levi but which does appear in the Athos version after Testament of Levi 2:3. All these fragments evidence kinship with the Testaments and at some points with the Jubilees, but the divergences in wording are so great as to exclude the possibility of a direct literary dependence of our Greek Testaments on this Aramaic material.

The textual basis for this translation is the critical edition of R. H. Charles, although some readings have been adopted from the β text published by M. de Jonge, usually in the interests of literary coherence or clarity of meaning. In addition, the edition of S. Agourides has been consulted. Where the weight of evidence between the two main text traditions seems to be balanced, or where one offers an interesting variant to the content of the other, both have been printed in parallel columns.

Original language

The discovery of fragments of testaments in Aramaic that are in some way akin to the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs has led some scholars to conclude that the Greek form of this work is dependent on a hypothetical Aramaic or Hebrew document that included testaments of all twelve of the patriarchs. The direct links between the Greek version and the Aramaic works are so few, however, and the absence from the Semitic fragments of some of the fundamental concepts of the Testaments presented here is so complete as to rule out an Aramaic original for our Testaments.

Charles sought to make a case for Hebrew as the original language of the Testaments on the grounds that (1) Hebrew idiom underlies the Greek text and (2) that awkward turns of speech, puzzling etymologies for personal and place-names, and seemingly unintelligible passages can best be accounted for by reconstructing a Hebrew original. But the Semitic idiom can just as well be explained as deriving from the language and style of the Septuagint in use among Greek-speaking Jews.

The evidence adduced for mistranslations from a Semitic original is purely hypothetical and is more than offset by the clear indication that our document is dependent on the Septuagint as Testament of Joseph 20:3 (hippodromos) shows, and by the occurrence of puns on Greek words (e.g. TLevi 6:1). The pervasive use of technical terms of hellenistic piety for which there are no exact counterparts in Hebrew or Aramaic, in addition to the influence of hellenistic romances on the style and scope of the narrative portions of the Testaments, points rather to the conclusion that they were originally written in Greek. There were possibly some additions to the text made by Greek-speaking Jews in the period around the turn of the eras; for example, Testament of Reuben 6:7 and Testament of Levi 18:9 may have been expanded by later Jewish (non-Essene) editors.

A large number of passages in the Testaments are messianic, but ten or more of them also sound specifically Christian. Examples of this are Testament of Levi 4:1; 14:2, which speak of laying hands (violently) on the "Son" or "the Savior of the world." In Testament of Asher 7:3, God is said to come eating and drinking, as a man. Testament of Benjamin 9:3 depicts the Lord entering "the first temple," after which he is "raised up on wood." Charles designated these passages as Christian interpolations into a basically Jewish document. M. de Jonge, on the other hand, asserted that the whole of the Testaments is Christian: building on Jewish traditions—the testaments of Levi and Naphtali, as well as other testaments which have survived in fragmentary form or in later copies—a Christian author produced the present complete set of twelve testaments around A.D. 200. His theory, however, seems both unwarranted and unnecessary.

The existence of the Aramaic fragments of a Testament of Levi and of the fragmentary Hebrew Testament of Naphtali at Qumran, together with the much later Hebrew testaments of Judah and Naphtali, shows that in the testamentary literature linked with the sons of Jacob and produced in the period of the second Temple we are dealing with a broad and free tradition. The genre "testament" is itself loosely defined, and its exemplars are transmitted in versions which vary in language and content. As a result of this generic and conceptual fluidity, it is not surprising that there are only very occasional points of verbal contact between the Greek Testaments and the Hebrew and Aramaic testaments. Literary dependence cannot be inferred, much less demonstrated. Rather, we must reckon with an author who, in writing the Testaments, is drawing on a free tradition and creating from it his own distinctive literary product. The peculiarities of the document can be accounted for fully if we assume that it was written originally in Greek, with Hebrew and Aramaic testaments serving loosely as models and perhaps to a very limited extent as sources for details. The Christian interpolations, which number not more than twelve, and which occur in the latter part of those testaments that contain them, are conceptually peripheral to the main thrust of the document and are literarily incongruous, so that they may be readily differentiated from the original Greek text.

Date

Apart from the Christian interpolations, which seem to have a special affinity with Johannine thought and probably date from the early second century A.D., the basic writing gives no evidence of having been composed by anyone other than a hellenized Jew. Its use of the Septuagint suggests that it was written after 250 B.C., which is the approximate year that the Septuagint translation was completed. Syria is the last world power to be mentioned in the sketch of successive world empires, and the lack of any unambiguous reference to the Maccabees might suggest a date before that nationalist revolt circa early second century B.C. If, however, the combination of prophetic, priestly, and kingly roles in Testament of Levi 18:2 is taken as a reference to John Hyrcanus (so R. H. Charles), then the Testaments may well have been written during his reign (137–107 B.C.). Others have inferred from some evidences of kinship between the Testaments and the Dead Sea writings that the former is Essene in origin (so M. Philonenko and A. Dupont-Sommer). Certainly the view in the Testaments of a dual messiahship, with an anointed king from Judah and an anointed priest from Levi, parallels the (not always consistent) messianic outlook at Qumran. And since the Qumran community seems to have flourished in the period beginning about 150 B.C., this link could also be taken as evidence pointing to the Maccabean period as the date of origin of the Testaments.

Provenance

Proponents of the Aramaic origin of the writing look to Palestine as its place of writing, although the marked differences between it and the Dead Sea Scrolls on the essence of obedience to the law rule out Qumran. Champions of a Christian origin for the Testaments have a wide range of options for provenance. The internal evidence, however, could be read as pointing to Egypt, because of the special interest in Joseph (which seems to have flourished among Egyptian Jews) and possibly because of the loose links between the Christian interpolations and Johannine thought, which is at times assigned to Alexandrine Christianity. More likely, however, is a Syrian provenance: It is Syria rather than the Ptolemies of Egypt that appears as the current world power in this writing; the knowledge of Palestinian place-names but the lack of accuracy as to their location may point to a neighboring land such as Syria, while almost certainly ruling out Palestine proper.

Historical importance

When the ten or twelve Christian interpolations are set aside, the basic document of the Testaments bears witness to the diversity of outlook that developed within Judaism in the period prior to the Maccabean Revolt and flourished throughout the Maccabean period. Secondly, the Greek text as it has been preserved demonstrates the various ways in which the perspectives represented by this writing were appropriated by Jews and Christians in subsequent centuries. The oldest discernible stage of this writing represents (1) a synthesis of devotion to the Law of Moses and dyarchic messianism (king and priest); incorporated with that synthesis is (2) a piety employing the religious and ethical language and concepts of Hellenism. By the time the testaments were taken over by Christians, they included not only universal precepts of hellenistic ethics but apocalyptic expectations, ascetic exhortations, entertaining embellishments of the biographical sections of the book of Genesis, and a primitive kind of somatic psychology as well. The document demonstrates, therefore, the openness of one of several segments of Judaism during the period of the second Temple to non-Jewish cultural insights and influences, as well as to the inadequacy of the neat division of Jews into the “three philosophies” that historians have inherited from Josephus in his Antiquities (13.171–73).

Theological importance

God. Although God is represented as merciful and gracious (TIsa 6:4; TJos 2:1; TJud 23:5), his qualities as emphasized in this document are his holiness (TLevi 3:4) and his wrath (TLevi 6:11). He effects judgments in the world (TLevi 4:1; 18:1f.; TJud 22:1; 23:3) and does so with such vengeance that the patriarchs intercede in behalf of others (TReu 1:7; 4:4; 6:6). In the end-time, he will dwell in the midst of Israel (TLevi 5:2; TJud 22:2; TZeb 9:8; TNaph 8:3).

Man is portrayed as possessing seven (or eight) spirits (i.e. the senses; TReu 2:2–9); these “are commingled” with seven other “spirits of error” (TReu 3:3–6). His organs function to influence his behavior by means of a kind of somatic psychology (TSim 2:4; TZeb 2:4; TGad 5:11; TJos 15:3). Sleep leads him into fantasy and error, as well as to visions of death (TReu 3:1, 7). In contrast to women, men are basically pure in mind (TReu 6:2; see below under Ethics).

Cosmology. The universe is ceiled by three heavens, in ascending order: of water, of light, and of God's dwelling place (TLevi 2:7–10). It is essential to preserve natural order (TNaph 3:2–5), since natural law is identical with the Law of God (TNaph 3:4). The present age will end in the consummation of God's purpose (TReu 6:8).

Angels. The angels who instruct the righteous (TReu 5:3; TIss 2:1; TJud 15:5) are present in the first heaven, where they also serve as instruments of punishment on the wicked (TLevi 3:2–3). In the second heaven are the spirits of Beliar, and in the third are the archangels of the Lord's presence, who offer to him a bloodless oblation. The angel of peace enables Israel to withstand her enemies (TDan 6:5). In addition to interceding in behalf of Israel (TLevi 5:6), the angels offer special guidance to Levi and Judah (TLevi 5:4).

Dualism. Two kinds of spirits are abroad in the world: the spirits of truth and the spirits of error (TJud 20:1f.). This has been so since the beginning of time when the Watchers brought a curse on the earth by defying the natural order (TNaph 3:5). The fundamental split now manifests itself in the choice between Two Ways, one guided by the angels of the Lord and the other by the angels of Beliar (TAsh). It is Beliar who instigates human acts of sin (TDan 1:7; 3:6, where he is called Satan; 5:6; TBenj 6:1; 7:1f.), especially by taking advantage of human sexual urges (TReu 4:11; 6:3; 7:2). He will carry many off into apostasy in the last days (TIss 6:1), but will be defeated by God's agents of salvation (TDan 6:3; TJos 20:2).

Eschatological Agents and Events. Levi and Judah are central figures in the eschatology of the Testaments (TReu 6:8, 11; TSim 7:1; TIss 5:7–8; TJos 19:11; TNaph 5:1–5; 6:7; 8:2) with Judah as king (TJud 1:6; 24:1–6) but with Levi as his superior (TJos 19:4). As God's anointed priest, Levi will be the agent of redemption (TLevi 18:1–11) and will overcome Beliar (TLevi 18:12). After the temple has been destroyed in judgment (TLevi 10:3; 15:1; 16:4–5), it will be rebuilt in the end (TBenj 9:2). In some passages there appears (in addition to Levi and Judah) a unique prophet in the eschatological temple (TBenj 9:2), while in other texts there is a single agent "from Levi and Judah" who accomplishes redemption (TDan 5:10; TGad 8:1; TBenj 4:2). Finally, God himself will be revealed to all the nations (TLevi 4:4), among whom Israel will stand as a light (TLevi 14:34; TSim 7:2; TJud 22:3; 25:5; TBenj 9:5).

Ethics. Although there is throughout the Testaments a stress on obedience to the Law, the ethical appeal rarely refers to specific legal statutes of the Torah. Rather, universal virtues are presented in a manner strongly reminiscent of Stoicism: integrity (TSim 4:5; TLevi 13:1; TIss 3:2; 4:8; 5:1; 7:8; TJud 23:5), piety (TReu 6:4; TIss 7:5; TLevi 16:2), uprightness (TIss 13:1; 4:6; TGad 7:7; TSim 5:2), honesty (TDan 1:3), generosity (TIss 3:8; 4:2; 7:3), compassion (TIss 7:5; TJud 18:3; TZeb 2:4; 5:1–3; 7:1–4; 8:6), hard work (TIss 5:3–5), and self-control (TJos 4:1–2; 6:7; 9:2–3; 10:2–3). Conversely, the grossest sin is sexual promiscuity (TReu 1:6; 1:9; 3:10–4:2; 4:7–8; 5:3–4; 6:1; TLevi 9:9; 14:6; 17:11; TSim 5:3; TIss 4:4; 7:2; TJud 11:1–5; 12:1–9; 13:5–8; 17:1–3; 18:2–6), a failing that Beliar exploits (TReu 4:10). But sexual misdeeds are not linked to specific commandments; rather, they are handled by injunctions to temperance or asceticism, for which there is no basis in the Torah. Sin is instigated not only by Beliar directly (TReu 4:8, 10), but also by the power of anger (TDan 2:1–5:2), of envy (TDan 1:4; TGad 7:1–7; TSim 4:5, 7, 9; 6:2), and of greed (TJud 17:1; 19:103). Women are inherently evil (TReu 5:1) and entice men (TReu 5:1–7; TJud 10:3–5; 15:5f.) as well as the Watchers (TReu 5:6) to commit sin. The sabbath law does not figure in the Testaments and circumcision is mentioned only in connection with the enforced circumcising and subsequent slaughter of the Shechemites by Jacob's sons. The issue there is not circumcision, however, but cruelty to fellow human beings. The food laws are mentioned only as a metaphor of moral purity (TAsh 2:9; 4:5).

The resources for right living are God's spirit (TSim 4:4), one's conscience (TReu 4:3; TJos 20:2), God's fidelity (TJos 9:2), and the inherent power of good to overcome evil (TBenj 5). One of the highest virtues is brotherly love (TSim 4:7; TIss 5:2; TDan 5:4), which is instilled in the reader by both the negative example of the consequences of hatred of one's brother (TGad 3:1–5:11; TSim 2:6–7) and by the exemplary model of Joseph (TSim 4:5f.; TJos 17:2–8).

The Law is treated in the Testaments as a virtual synonym for wisdom (TLevi 13:1–9), as it is at times in rabbinical tradition. Unlike its function among the rabbis, however, in the Testaments, law (= wisdom) is universal in its application (TLevi 14:4) and is equated with natural law (TNaph 3). Accordingly, homosexuality and idolatry are condemned, not because they are specifically prohibited in the Torah, but because they are not compatible with the law of nature (TNaph 3:3–4). The linking of wisdom with natural law, including the movement of the heavenly bodies, goes beyond even the viewpoint expressed in Wisdom of Solomon 7. The understanding of law in the Testaments, with its movement away from legal requirements toward general moral ideals or to conscience, contrasts with that of the nascent Pharisaic movement of the period, the leaders of which were primarily concerned with the relevance of legal precepts to their daily lives, and with that of the Essenes, whose stringent interpretation of the Torah led them to withdraw from their Jewish co-religionists and from all outside contacts in order for them to maintain their Torah-demanded purity. The appeal to a universal law of nature in the Testaments is incompatible with the concept of the Torah as a protective wall of covenantal identity that characterized most of Jewish piety in the period of the second Temple and subsequently.

Afterlife. In much of the writing there is no clear evidence of a hope of an afterlife (TIss 4:3); in some passages, however, the resurrection of the faithful is affirmed (TJud 25:1–4; TZeb 10:2).

Relation to canonical books

The blending of ethical exhortations and eschatological expectations recalls the teaching of Jesus in the gospel tradition in a general way, but the one obvious common element is the uniting of love for God with love for one's neighbor. "Neighbor," however, seems to be understood in the Testaments as a fellow Israelite. The dyarchic (Levi and Judah) or triadic (Levi, Judah, the Prophet) messianic hopes of this writing are not present in the New Testament, although the messianic roles of prophet, priest, and king are assigned to Jesus in the various New Testament books (prophet in Lk 13:33; Jn 6:14; priest and king in Heb 7; king in Mt 2:2; Lk 19:38; Jn 1:49; Rev 19:16). The description of the high priest's investiture (TLevi 8:1–10) recalls the Christian's armor in Ephesians 6:13. It is only in the Christian interpolations that there are direct links—especially with Johannine thought and language—but these are, of course, secondary in nature and not part of the original document. The document offers rather different solutions for the same problems—messianic hope, eschatology, obedience to the Law—dealt with in the New Testament.

Relation to apocryphal books

This pseudepigraphon is the most extensively preserved representative of that part of the testamentary literature of the period of the second Temple that builds on Genesis 49 and the last words of Moses in order to serve as a vehicle for ethical and eschatological teaching. Closest to our work in specific content and literary method is Jubilees, although several fragments from the Dead Sea Scrolls show real kinship with the Testaments in detail (1QapGen, 4QP Bless, 11QMelch, 4QPrNab ar, 4QFlor). Still closer in form, though manifesting only occasional fragmentary verbal links, are the testamentary fragments (4QTLevi ar^a; a fragment of TNaph in Heb.). Behind both the Qumran material and the Testaments stands an oral tradition expressed in testamentary form, but the verbal and conceptual differences are so great as to rule out literary dependence of our Greek documents on these Semitic texts.

Cultural importance

In antiquity the most significant impact of the Testaments was on the Christians, who took them up and adapted them to their own purposes. The most striking modern example of romantic expansion of the patriarchal narratives is Thomas Mann's massive Joseph cycle, where Joseph appears as something of a prig, just as he does to modern eyes in the Testaments.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 211–20.
 Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 167–71.
 Denis, Introduction, pp. 49–59.
- Agourides, S. Diathēkai tōn XII Patriarchōn. Athens, 1973. (Brief critical introduction and text, based on the work of Charles and de Jonge, but incorporating readings from two MSS of T12P from the Great Laura at Athos.)
- Becker, J. Untersuchungen zur Entstehungsgeschichte der Testamente der Zwölf Patriarchen. Leiden, 1970. (Perspicacious analysis of the document, including careful comparison with other testamentary literature, especially from Qumran. Concludes our document was written in Gk., and is not of Qumranian origin.)
- Burchard, C., Jervell, J. and J. Thomas, Studien zu den Testamenten der Zwölf Patriarchen. Berlin, 1969.
- Charles, R. H. The Greek Versions of the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs. Oxford, 1908; Hildesheim, 1960. (First and still the most valuable critical text, based primarily on the α MSS tradition.)
- . The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, Translated . . . with Notes. London, 1908. (Unsurpassed nn., references to relevant biblical and apocryphal material.)
- . Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament. 2 vols. Oxford, 1913 (repr. 1963). (Summary of discussions found in his commentary, with translation of Gk., as well as of Heb. and Aram. fragments.)
- de Jonge, M. (ed.). Studies on the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs. Leiden, 1975. (Technical studies primarily concerned with classification of the MS tradition and the relationship of the Gk. to the Arm. MSS.)
- . Testamenta XII Patriarchum (Pseudepigrapha Veteris Testamenti Graece 1). Leiden, 1964; a second edition of this editio minima appeared in 1970. (Gk. text and apparatus, assuming that the β MSS tradition is closer to the original.)
- . The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs: A Study of Their Text, Composition, and Origin. Leiden, 1953. (An earnest, learned, but unconvincing attempt to show the Christian origin of T12P.)
- . The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs: A Critical Edition of the Greek Text, with H. W. Hollander, H. J. de Jonge, and Th. Korteweg. (Pseudepigrapha Veteris Testamenti Graece 1.2). Leiden, 1978. (This editio maior appeared after Kee had completed his work on the T12P for the OTP. —J.H.C.)
- Dupont-Sommer, A. The Essene Writings from Qumran, trans. G. Vermes. New York, 1962 (repr. Gloucester, Mass.: Peter Smith, 1973). (In ch. 9 Dupont-Sommer asserts that T12P originated at Qumran, though he offers no detailed analysis to support his theory.)
- Kee, H. C. "The Ethical Dimensions of the Testaments of the XII as a Clue to Provenance," NTS 24 (1978) 259–70.
- Philonenko, M. Les Interpolations chrétiennes des Testaments des Douze Patriarches et les manuscrits de Qumran. (Cahiers de la RHPR 35) Paris, 1960. (Reduces Christian interpolations to a minimum; sees basic kinship with Qumran documents.)
- Stone, M. E. The Testament of Levi: A First Study of the Armenian Manuscripts of the Testaments of the XII Patriarchs in the Convent of St. James, Jerusalem, with Text, Critical Apparatus, Notes and Translation. Jerusalem: St. James, 1969.

TESTAMENTS OF THE TWELVE PATRIARCHS, THE SONS OF JACOB THE PATRIARCH

Testament of Reuben, the firstborn son of Jacob and Leah

1 1 A copy of the testament of Reuben: the things which he commanded to his sons
2 before he died in the one hundred twenty-fifth year of his life.^a •Two years after 3 the death of Joseph, his brother Reuben became sick and there gathered to watch
4 over him^b his sons and his sons' sons. •And he said to them, "My children, behold
5 I am dying, and I am going the way of my fathers." •When he saw Judah and Gad 6 and Asher his brothers there he said to them, "Raise me up so that I can tell my 7 brothers and my children the things that I have hidden in my heart, for behold I 8 am departing from you now." •And when he was raised up he kissed them and 9 said to them, "Listen, my brothers and my sons; give heed to the things which 10 I, Reuben, your father, command you. •See here, I call the God of heaven to bear witness to you this day,^c so that you will not behave yourselves in the ignorant ways of youth and sexual promiscuity in which I indulged myself and defiled the marriage bed of my father, Jacob. •But I tell you he struck me with a severe wound in my loins for seven months, and if my father, Jacob, had not prayed to the Lord in my behalf, the Lord would have destroyed me. •For I was thirty years old when I committed this evil deed in the sight of the Lord, and for seven months I was an invalid on the brink of death. •And after this, with determination of soul, for seven years I repented before the Lord: I did not drink wine or liquor; meat did not enter my mouth, and I did not eat any pleasurable food. Rather, I was mourning over my sin, since it was so great. Never had anything like it been done in Israel.

1 2 "And now give heed to me, my children, concerning the things which I saw
2 during my time of penitence, concerning the seven spirits of deceit.^a •For seven 3 spirits are established against mankind, and they are the sources of the deeds of 4 youth. •And seven other spirits are given to man at creation so that by them every 5 human deed (is done). First is the spirit of life, with which man is created as a 6 composite being. The second is the spirit of seeing, with which comes desire.
7 The third is the spirit of hearing, with which comes instruction. The fourth is the 8 spirit of smell, with which is given taste for drawing air and breath. •The fifth is 9 the spirit of speech, with which comes knowledge. •The sixth is the spirit of taste for consuming food and drink; by it comes strength, because in food is the substance of strength. •The seventh is the spirit of procreation and intercourse, with which come sins through fondness for pleasure. For this reason, it was the last in the creation and the first in youth, because it is filled with ignorance; it leads the young person like a blind man into a ditch and like an animal over a cliff.

1 a. The simple fact that Reuben died is asserted in Jub 46:4, but no date for his demise is indicated.

b. The pattern for instructions and exhortations to one's posterity, together with predictions concerning the future, was set by the tradition attributed to Jacob (Gen 49).

c. Although the Law is the declared norm for ethical behavior in T12P, the details of moral obligation and the overall framework in which obedience to the Law is enjoined are shaped by Stoic virtues and by Stoic anthropological conceptions, and also by the dualistic notions of Jewish apocalypticism. Cf. TLevi 13:1-9; TIs 5:1, n.

2 a. The spirits of deceit seem to be human qualities, or at least each exploits some basic human quality (2:4-8). As such they are akin to the Stoic notion of spirits. Elsewhere in T12P, however, the evil spirits are personified, given specific names, and identified as the spirits of Beliar (alternate spelling, Belial; see n. on TReu 4:7), as in TIs 7:7, or as agents of Beliar, as in TAsh 6:4. Satan figures relatively infrequently in T12P (TDan 3:6; 5:6; 6:1; TGad 4:7; TAsh 6:4, in α text), whereas Beliar appears more than thirty times (depending on which textual tradition is used as the basis for the count). The devil (diabolos) is somewhat more common than Satan in T12P.

1 3 "In addition to all is an eighth spirit: sleep, with which is created the ecstasy
 2 of nature and the image of death. •With these are commingled the spirits of error.^a 3,4 First, the spirit of promiscuity resides in the nature and the senses. •A second spirit of insatiability, in the stomach; a third spirit of strife, in the liver and the gall; a fourth spirit of flattery and trickery, in order that through excessive effort 5 one might appear to be at the height of his powers; •a fifth spirit of arrogance, that one might be boastful and haughty; a sixth spirit of lying, which through destructiveness and rivalry, handles^b his affairs smoothly and secretly even with his 6 relatives and his household. •A seventh spirit of injustice, with which are thefts and crooked dealings, in order that one might gain his heart's desire. For injustice 7 works together with the other spirits through acceptance of bribes. •With all these 8 the spirit of sleep forms an alliance, which results in error and fantasy. •And thus every young man is destroyed, darkening his mind from the truth, neither gaining 9 understanding in the Law of God nor heeding the advice of his fathers—just this was my plight in my youth. And now, my children, love truth and she will preserve you. Give heed to the words of Reuben, your father.

10 "Do not devote your attention to a woman's looks, nor live with a woman who is already married, nor become involved in affairs with women.

11 "For if I had not seen Bilhah bathing in a sheltered place, I would not have fallen Gen 35:22
 12 into this great lawless act.^c •For so absorbed were my senses by her naked femininity 13 that I was not able to sleep until I had performed this revolting act. •While our father, Jacob, had gone off to visit his father, Isaac, and we were at Gader near Ephratha in Bethlehem, Bilhah became drunk and was sound asleep, naked in her 14 bedchamber. •So when I came in and saw her nakedness, I performed the impious deed without her being aware of it. Leaving her sleeping soundly, I went out.
 15 And immediately a messenger from God revealed it to my father. He came and made lamentation over me, and never again touched her.

1 4 "Do not devote your attention to the beauty of women, my children, nor occupy your minds with their activities. But live in integrity of heart^a in the fear of the Lord, and weary yourself in good deeds, in learning, and in tending your flocks, until the Lord gives you the mate whom he wills, so that you do not suffer, as I
 2 did. •For until my father's death I never had the courage to look him in the face
 3 or speak to any of my brothers because of my disgraceful act. •Even until now my 4 conscience^b harasses me because of my impious act. •And yet my father consoled me greatly and prayed to the Lord in my behalf so that the Lord's anger would pass me by—which is just how the Lord treated me. From that time until now I 5 have kept a careful watch and have not sinned. •So then, my children, observe all 6 the things that I command you •and do not sin, for the sin of promiscuity is the pitfall of life, separating man from God and leading on toward idolatry, because 7 it is the deceiver of the mind and the perceptions, and leads youths down to hell before their time. •For promiscuity has destroyed many. Whether a man is old, well born, rich, or poor, he brings on himself disgrace among mankind and provides 8 Beliar^c with an opportunity to cause him to stumble. •You heard how Joseph

3 a. Although in T12P there is no direct statement of the inherent evil of the human body, the "spirits of error" exploit human frailties for evil ends.

b. Or "speaks."

c. Another version is offered in Jub 33:1-9.

4 a. The highest virtue in TReu is integrity. But cf. also T1ss 4:1-5:1; TSim 4:5. Similarly in hellenistic Judaism (WisSol 1:1) and the later Pauline tradition (Col 2:22; Eph 6:5).

b. This is a Gk. (Stoic) conception, according to which moral consciousness induces guilt; elsewhere it is regarded as a force that aids in ethical decisions and thus positively fosters moral rectitude. Cf. TJud 20:2 (reading with the α text).

c. Beliar is prince of the demonic powers. He appears in other writings of the period (MartIs 1:8; 2:4; 3:11) and is identical with Belial (CD 4.13; Jub 1:20). In 2Cor 6:15 he is called Beliar. He is to be overcome in the last days by God's anointed agents (TLevi 18:12; TDan 5:10-11) and is to be cast into the fire (TJud 25:3). In the present age the righteous may be delivered from his power (TReu 4:11).

9 protected himself from a woman and purified his mind from all •promiscuity: He found favor before God and men. For the Egyptian woman did many things to him, summoned magicians, and brought potions for him, but his soul's deliberation 10 rejected evil desire. •For this reason the God of our fathers rescued him from every 11 visible or hidden death. •For if promiscuity does not triumph over your reason, then neither can Beliar conquer you.^d

1 5 "For women are evil, my children, and by reason of their lacking authority or power over man, they scheme treacherously how they might entice him to themselves by means of their looks. •And whomever they cannot enchant by their 2 appearance they conquer by a stratagem. •Indeed, the angel of the Lord told me
3 and instructed me that women are more easily overcome by the spirit of promiscuity than are men. They contrive in their hearts against men, then by decking themselves out they lead men's minds astray, by a look they implant their poison, and finally 4 in the act itself they take them captive. •For a woman is not able to coerce a man 5 overtly, but by a harlot's manner she accomplishes her villainy. •Accordingly, my children, flee from sexual promiscuity, and order your wives and your daughters not to adorn their heads and their appearances so as to deceive men's sound minds.
For every woman who schemes in these ways is destined for eternal punishment.
6 For it was thus that they charmed the Watchers, who were before the Flood.^a As they continued looking at the women, they were filled with desire for them and perpetrated the act in their minds. Then they were transformed into human males, and while the women were cohabiting with their husbands they appeared to them.
Since the women's minds were filled with lust for these apparitions, they gave birth to giants. For the Watchers were disclosed to them as being as high as the heavens. Gen 6:1-4

1 6 "So guard yourself against sexual promiscuity, and if you want to remain pure
2 in your mind, protect your senses from women. •And tell them not to consort with 3 men, so that they too might be •pure in their minds. For even recurrent chance meetings—although the impious act itself is not committed—are for these women an incurable disease, but for us they are the plague of Beliar and an eternal disgrace.
4 Because in sexual promiscuity there is a place for neither understanding nor piety,^a
5 and every passion dwells in its desire. •For this reason, I say to you, you will vie 6 with the sons of Levi and will seek •to be exalted above them, but you will not be able: For God will perform vengeance in their behalf, and you will die an evil 7 death, •since God gave Levi the authority, and to Judah with him, [as well as to 8 me and to Dan and to Joseph],^b to be rulers. •It is for this reason that I command you to give heed to Levi,^c because he will know the law of God and will give Deut 33:8-10

d. Moral forces operate at two levels: the human and the demonic. If the human will is strong, Beliar is unable to gain control; if the will is weak, Beliar dominates.

5 a. In the story recounted in Gen 6:1–4, according to which sexual union between human females and heavenly male creatures violates the divine order, there is no clear assignment of blame. In Jub 4:15, where the narrative is elaborated, the heavenly Watchers come to offer moral instructions to the earthlings. But here blame is placed on the women, who are the villainesses, since they lure the Watchers into the illicit sexual relations, with dire consequences for the whole of the human race, as exemplified in their monstrous progeny. The Watchers appear in other texts of the period as well. Cf. CD 2.18; TNaph 3:5; Jub 4:22; 7:21; 8:3; 10:5; and often in the Enochic literature.

6 a. The blending of cultural backgrounds is evident here, in that eusebeia, which is a commonplace hellenistic ethical term for piety, is here used apparently as a translation of ḥṣṣḗd, from which the Hasidim took their name.

b. Possibly a later Jewish interpolation, since Dan and Joseph did not have messianic significance in Hasidic or Essene circles, nor in early Christianity.

c. Levi has a multiple role here as both interpreter of the Law and as officiator at the priestly sacrifices, just as in the Dead Sea Scrolls the functions of priest and teacher-prophet are at times linked closely. In CD 7.15–20, however, the interpreter of the Law is identified as the star of Num 24:17, while in the Psalms of Joshua the role of the star and that of Levi are set side by side. The term for consummation of the ages is a technical one in apocalyptic literature (cf. TLevi 10:2). In TZeb 9:5 (b d g texts) the event is called simply "in the last days." Cf. Dan 9:27; 12:4, 13 (LXX); Mt 13:39, 40; Heb 9:26. Similar phrases in 1En 10:13; 16:1.

- instructions concerning justice and concerning sacrifice for Israel until the con-9 summation of times; he is the anointed priest of whom the Lord spoke. •I call to witness the God of heaven that you do the truth, each to his neighbor, and that 10 you show love,^d each to his brother. •Draw near to Levi in humility of your hearts 11 in order that you may receive blessing from his mouth. •For he will bless Israel and Judah, since it is through him that the Lord has chosen to reign^e in the presence 12 of all the people. •Prostrate yourselves before his posterity, because (his offspring) TSim 5:5 will die in your behalf in wars visible and invisible. And he shall be among you an eternal king.”
- 1.2 7 And Reuben died, having spoken these commandments to his sons. •And they placed him in a coffin until they carried him up from Egypt and buried him in Hebron, in the cave where his father was.

Testament of Simeon, the second son of Jacob and Leah

- 1 1 A copy of the words of Simeon, which he spoke to his sons before he died in 2 the hundred and twentieth year of his life, at the time when his brother •Joseph died. While Simeon was sick his sons came to see him, and becoming stronger, he sat up, kissed them, and said,
- 1 2 “Listen, my children, to Simeon, your father, and I shall tell you the things which I have in my heart.
 2 I was born of Jacob, a second son for my father; and Leah, my mother, called me Simeon because the Lord had heard her prayer. Gen 29:33 3 And I became extraordinarily strong; I did not hold back from any exploit, nor did I fear anything.
 4 My heart was firm,
 my courage was high, and my feelings were dispassionate.
- 5.6 “For by the Most High, manly courage is given to men in soul and body. •In the time of my youth I was jealous of Joseph, because my father loved him more 7 than all the rest of us. •I determined inwardly to destroy him, because the Prince of Error^a blinded my mind so that I did not consider him as a brother nor did I 8 spare Jacob, my father. •But his God and the God of our fathers sent his messenger 9 and delivered him from my hands. •For when I went to Shechem to procure an unguent for the flocks, and Reuben went to Dothan where our supplies and stores Gen 37:25-28 10 were, my brother Judah sold him to the Ishmaelites. •When Reuben heard this he 11 was sorrowful, for he wanted to restore him to his father. •But when I heard it,
 I was furious with Judah because he had let him go away alive. For five months 12 I was angry with him. •The Lord bound my hands and feet, however, and thus prevented my hands from performing their deeds, because for seven days my right 13 hand became partly withered. •I knew, children, that this had happened to me because of Joseph, so I repented and wept. Then I prayed to the Lord God that

d. The appeal for brotherly love here contrasts with that found in other testaments, where the injunction to love one's brother is accompanied by the negative example according to which Joseph is hated by his brothers. The opposite view of the relationship among the twelve brothers is given as well in Jub 46:1, where it is declared that “They were of one accord . . . brother loved brother . . .”

e. Possibly “and Judah” is a Jewish interpolation, since the following pronouns are singular.

Apparently Levi is here seen as fulfilling the kingly role, just as the eternal priest “after the order of Melchizedek” does in Ps 110. Melchizedek, the prototype of the priest-king, appears in canonical texts only in a fragmentary passage in Gen 14:18–20, though he is also mentioned in numerous apocryphal writings.

2 a. The Prince of Error (other MSS add “and the spirit of jealousy”) is here personified, unlike the seven spirits of TRew 2:1–3:6.

my hand might be restored and that I might refrain from every defilement and grudge and from all folly, for I knew that I had contemplated an evil deed in the sight of the Lord and of Jacob, my father, on account of Joseph, my brother, because of my envying him.

1 3 “And now, my children, pay heed to me. Beware of the spirit of deceit and 2 envy. •For envy dominates the whole of man’s mind and does not permit him to 3 eat or drink or to do anything good. •Rather it keeps prodding him to destroy the 4 one whom he envies. Whenever the one who is envied flourishes, the envious one
5 languishes. •Out of the fear of the Lord I chastened my soul by fasting for two 6 years. And I came to know that liberation from envy occurs through fear of the 7 Lord. •If anyone flees to the Lord for refuge, the evil spirit will quickly depart 8 from him, and his mind will be eased. •From then on he has compassion on the 9 one whom he envied and has sympathetic feelings with those who love him; thus 10 his envy ceases.

1 4 “Now my father was inquiring about me because he saw that I was sullen.
2 And I said to him, I am inwardly in pain, for I was more sorrowful than all of them
3 because it was I who was responsible for what had been done to Joseph. •And 4 when we went down into Egypt and he placed me in fetters as a spy, I knew that 5 I was suffering justly, and I did not lament. •But Joseph was a good man, one who 6 had within him the spirit of God, and being full of compassion and mercy he did
7 not bear ill will toward me, but loved me as well as my brothers. •Guard yourselves 8 therefore, my children, from all jealousy and envy. Live in the integrity of your 9 heart, so that God might give you grace and glory and blessing upon your heads, 10 just as you have observed in Joseph. •In all his days he did not reproach us for 11 this deed, but he loved us as his own life; he extolled us more than he did his own 12 sons, and he showered us with wealth, flocks, and produce. •And you, my children, 13 each of you love his brothers with a good heart, and the spirit of envy will depart
14 from you. •For that attitude makes the soul savage and corrupts the body; it foments
15 wrath and conflict in the reason, excites to the shedding of blood, drives the mind
16 to distraction, arouses tumult in the soul and trembling in the body. •Even in sleep
17 some passion for evil fills his fantasy and consumes him; by evil spirits it stirs up 18 his soul and fills his body with terror. In distress it rouses his mind from sleep, 19 and like an evil, penetrating spirit, so it manifests itself to human beings.

1 5 “Because nothing evil resided in Joseph, he was attractive in appearance and 2 handsome to behold, for the face evidences any troubling of the spirit. •And now
3 my children,^a

“Make your hearts virtuous in the Lord’s sight, make your paths straight before men, and you shall continually find grace with the Lord and with men.

3 Guard yourselves from sexual promiscuity because fornication is the mother of all wicked deeds;
it separates from God and leads men to Beliar.

4 “For I have seen in a copy of the book of Enoch^b that your sons will be ruined by 5 promiscuity, and they shall injure with a sword the sons of Levi. •But they shall 6 not be able to withstand Levi, because he shall wage the Lord’s war and will 7 triumph over all your battalions.^c •These forces distributed among Levi and Judah

5 a. The piety here enjoined is closely akin to that of the wisdom literature (Ps 5:8; Prov 8:35): In Prov 6:23–35 and 7:1–17 there are solemn warnings about sexual indulgence with harlots.

b. Not in extant Enoch literature, although there is a similar outlook in 2En 34:2, where Enoch is told why God sent the Flood. Curiously, references to Enoch in T12P are frequently to otherwise unknown material.

c. Levi as warrior-leader may be a reference to the Maccabees or to the eschatological battle of the kind depicted in 1QM.

will be few in number, and from you there will be no one for leadership, just as our father predicted in his blessings.^d

Gen 49:7

1 6 “See, I have told you everything, so that I might be exonerated with regard to your sin.

2 “If you divest yourselves of envy and every hardness of heart, my bones will flourish as a rose^a in Israel and my flesh as a lily in Jacob. My odor shall be like the odor of Lebanon.

Holy ones shall be multiplied from me forever and ever, and their branches shall extend to a great distance.

3 Then the seed of Canaan will be destroyed, and there will be no posterity of Amalek. All the Cappadocians^b shall be destroyed and all the Hittites shall be wholly obliterated.

4 The land of Ham shall be wanting, and all that people shall perish. Then the whole earth shall be at rest from trouble, and everything under heaven shall be free from war.

5 “Then Shem shall be glorified; because God the Lord, the Great One in Israel, will be manifest upon the earth [as a man].^c By himself will he save Adam. •Then all the spirits of error shall be given over to being trampled underfoot. And men will have mastery over the evil spirits. •Then I shall arise in gladness^d and I shall bless the Most High for his marvels, [because God has taken a body, eats with human beings, and saves human beings^e]. Jub 7:12

1 7 “And now, my children, be obedient to Levi and to Judah. Do not exalt yourselves above these two tribes, [because from them will arise the Savior come from God]. •For the Lord will raise up from Levi someone as high priest and from Judah someone as king^a [God and man]. He will save all the gentiles and the tribe of Israel. •For this reason I command these things to you and you command them to your children, so that they may observe them in their successive generations.”

1 8 And when Simeon had finished his instructions to his sons, he fell asleep with his fathers at the age of one hundred and twenty years. •They placed him in a wooden coffin in order to carry his bones up to Hebron; they took them up in secret during a war with Egypt. •The bones of Joseph the Egyptians kept in the tombs of the kings, since their wizards told them that at the departure of Joseph’s

d. Apart from an oblique reference in TLevi 6:6, the factor of a curse on Levi is wholly suppressed in T12P.

6 a. Imagery like this is found in both the prophetic and wisdom traditions: Cf. Isa 35:1; Song 2:1; especially Hos 14:5–7, where the fragrance of Lebanon is specifically mentioned.

b. The Cappadocians are mentioned also in 1QapGen 21:23, where this designation replaces Ellasar (= Larsa) in the biblical text as Gen 14:9. The names of the enemies as here given, therefore, include both the traditional foes mentioned in the biblical accounts (Ham, the Amalekites) as well as those contemporary with the writer of the T12P.

c. The MSS differ here in detail; some link the glorification with Seth rather than Shem; some omit the reference to God as “the Great One in Israel.” But all agree that God will be manifest “as a man.”

Apparently, this is the first of the Christian interpolations. The theological viewpoint of these insertions stresses the humanity of the “body” that “God has taken”—a view that was later denounced by orthodox Christians as Patripassianism, since it affirmed the suffering of the Father. The second part of this interpolation (TSim 6:7b), in addition to employing characteristically Christian language, interrupts the flow of thought in the passage as a whole.

d. Possibly an affirmation of a doctrine of the resurrection of the righteous at the end of the age. Dan 12:2, on the other hand, teaches the resurrection of both the just and the unjust.

e. See n. c above.

7 a. The kingly rule is here assigned to Judah, as is traditional, but in contrast to TReu 6:12, where Levi rules.

bones there would be darkness and gloom in the whole land and a great plague^a Ex 10:21-23 on the Egyptians, so that even with a lamp no one could recognize his brother.

- 1.2 9 And the sons of Simeon uttered lamentations for their father. •And they were in Egypt until the day of their departure by the hand of Moses.

Testament of Levi, the third son of Jacob and Leah

- 1 1 A copy of the words of Levi: the things that he decreed to his sons concerning all they were to do, and the things that would happen to them until the day of 2 judgment.^a •He was in good health when he summoned them to him, but it had been revealed to him that he was about to die. When they all were gathered together he said to them:

- 1.2 2 “I, Levi, was born in Haran and came with my father to Shechem. •I was a youth, about twenty years old. It was then that, together with Simeon, I performed
3 vengeance against Hamor because of our sister, Dinah.^a •As I was tending the flocks in Abel-Maoul^b a spirit of understanding from the Lord came upon me, and I observed all human beings making their way in life deceitfully. Sin was erecting
4 walls and injustice was ensconced in towers. •I kept grieving over the race of the sons of men, and I prayed to the Lord that I might be delivered. •Then sleep fell
5 upon me, and I beheld a high mountain, and I was on it.^c •And behold, the heavens were opened, and an angel of the Lord spoke to me: ‘Levi, Levi, enter!’ •And I
6 entered the first heaven,^d and saw there much water suspended. •And again I saw a second heaven much brighter and more lustrous, for there was a measureless
7 height in it. •And I said to the angel, ‘Why are these things thus?’ And the angel said to me, ‘Do not be amazed concerning this, for you shall see another heaven
8 more lustrous and beyond compare. •And when you have mounted there, you shall stand near the Lord.^e You shall be his priest and you shall tell forth his mysteries 9 to men. You shall announce the one who is about to redeem Israel. •Through you and Judah the Lord will be seen by men, [by himself saving every race of 10 humankind]. •Your life shall be from the Lord’s provision; he shall be to you as field and vineyard and produce, as silver and gold.
11 12

- 1 3 “Listen, therefore, concerning the heavens which have been shown to you.

8 a. Perhaps the “great plague” is the death of the firstborn (Ex 11:1–11), although the passage shifts to the plague of darkness.

1 a. The real writer of TLevi obviously thinks that he is standing near the day of judgment; hence his eagerness to convey his warnings and promises.

2 a. The story of the vengeance against Hamor and the men of Shechem (depicted as an individual) for having defiled Dinah is told in Gen 34. Here Levi is credited with having taken the initiative in slaughtering the male inhabitants.

b. Abel-Maoul is apparently a variant spelling for Abel-Meholah (Judg 7:22). In the biblical tradition, the gift of understanding, which was granted to Solomon as king and archetypal wise man (1Kgs 3:12) and to Daniel as seer (Dan 1:17), is linked with the spirit of the Lord and promised as a divine gift to the shoot from the royal Davidic line in Isa 11:1–3.

c. The sleep, the vision, the mountain, the ascent to the heavens and on to the throne of God are standard elements in Merkabah (throne) mysticism. Based on the visions of the divine dwelling place in Isa 6 and Ezek 1 (cf. 1En 14 and 3En) as well as on the mountaintop visions granted to Moses and Elijah, this movement began to flourish in Judaism during the hellenistic period and influenced both apocalyptic and Jewish mystical tradition.

d. The vision originally included three heavens, although in some forms of the text (α) 3:1–8 has been modified and expanded in order to depict seven heavens. Cf. 2Cor 12:2, where Paul ascends in a vision to the “third heaven.”

e. Similarly, when Daniel is taken up to the divine throne (Dan 7:9–14), he is given a vision of the end-time and of the eschatological conflict that will precede the consummation.

2 The lowest is dark^a for this reason: It sees all the injustices of humankind • and contains fire, snow, and ice, ready for the day determined by God's righteous judgment. In it are all the spirits^b of those dispatched to achieve the punishment of mankind. • In the second are the armies arrayed for the day of judgment to work vengeance on the spirits of error and of Beliar. Above them are the Holy Ones. 3 In the uppermost heaven of all dwells the Great Glory^c in the Holy of Holies superior to all holiness. • There with him are the archangels, who serve and offer propitiatory sacrifices to the Lord in behalf of all the sins of ignorance of the righteous ones.^d • They present to the Lord a pleasing odor, a rational and bloodless 4 oblation. • In the heaven below them are the messengers who carry the responses to the angels of the Lord's presence. • There with him are thrones and authorities; 5 there praises to God are offered eternally. • So when the Lord looks upon us we all tremble. Even the heavens and earth and the abysses tremble^e before the presence 6 of his majesty. • But the sons of men, being insensitive to these matters, keep sinning and provoking the anger of the Most High.

2Bar 53:5; 58:1

Rom 12:1

Col 1:16

Rev 4:1-11

Eph 6:12

Isa 6:4; 24:18-23

Hag 2:6-7,21-22

1 4 "Know, then, that the Lord will effect judgment on the sons of men.

"For even when stones are split, when the sun is extinguished,
the waters are dried up,
fire is cowed down,
all creation is distraught, invisible spirits are vanishing, and hell is snatching spoils by sufferance of the Most High,
men—unbelieving still—will persist in their wrongdoing.
Therefore they shall be condemned with punishment.

2 "The Most High has given heed to your prayer that you be delivered from wrongdoing, that you should become a son^a to him, as minister and priest in his presence. • The light of knowledge you shall kindle in Jacob, and you shall be as 3 the sun for all the posterity of Israel. • Blessing shall be given to you and to all your posterity until through his son's compassion the Lord shall visit all the nations forever, [although your sons will lay hands on him in order to impale him].^b 4 Therefore counsel and understanding have been given to you so that you might 5 give understanding to your sons concerning this. • Because those who bless him shall be blessed, and those who curse him shall be destroyed.'

Isa 60:1-3
Dan 12:3
Mt 13:43Jub 31:17;
Gen 12:3

1 5 "At this moment the angel opened for me the gates of heaven and I saw the 2 Holy Most High sitting on the throne.^a • And he said to me, 'Levi, to you I have given the blessing of the priesthood until I shall come and dwell in the midst of

Gen 28:17;
Isa 6:1-5;
Rev 21:5-22:5
TSim 6:5
TLevi 4:4
Hos 11:9

3 a. Following the so-called α text, which contains fewer evidences of expansion of the (original) account of the three heavens. The pervasion of the lower heaven by darkness is a common feature in apocalyptic literature; see 2Bar 53:5; 58:1; 60:1; cf. also 2Pet 2:4; Jude 13. The wintry elements held in reserve for the day of judgment appear also in 2En 5:1; 1En 60:17-18; cf. Jub 37:1-10.

b. Instruments of God's judgment; cf. Sir 39:28-31. The Holy Ones in 3:3 are angels.

c. Great Glory is a favorite name of God in Merkabah circles; cf. 1En 14:19; 102:3; similar titles in 1En 25:3, 7; 47:3 (from Isa 6).

d. The liturgy performed in the heavenly archetypal sanctuary corresponds to the offerings in the earthly temple, which is a copy of the heavenly temple (Ex 25:9, 40; 26:30; 27:8).

e. Isa 13:9-13, where the shaking occurs on the day of the Lord (= day of judgment); also in the Isaiah apocalypse (Isa 24:17-20). In Hag 2:6f. God shakes loose from the nations their treasures.

4 a. "Son" is here a designation for the anointed priest, in parallel to the king who is God's son (Ps 2:7; cf. Ps 110, though there "son" is not referred to).

b. One of the clearest instances of a Christian interpolation: "impale" (= crucify). Probably "his son" is a Christian addition as well.

5 a. The climax of the vision comes when Levi sees God on his throne. In addition to texts cited in ch. 3, n. d, cf. Ps 24:7-10, where Yahweh enters the sanctuary.

b. The notion of God as visibly reigning on earth lent itself readily to Christian interpretation in relation to Christ, and to interpolations which make the links with the incarnation explicit, as in 4:4.

3 Israel.^b • Then the angel led me back to the earth, and gave me a shield and a sword, and said to me, 'Perform vengeance on Shechem for the sake of Dinah, 4 your sister, and I shall be with you, for the Lord sent me.' • At that time I put an 5 end to the sons of Hamor, as is written in the tablets of the fathers.^c • And I said to him, 'I beg you, Lord, teach me your name, so that I may call on you in the 6 day of tribulation.' • And he said, 'I am the angel who makes intercession^d for the 7 nation Israel, that they might not be beaten.' • And after this I awoke^e and blessed the Most High.

1 6 "And as I was going to my father, I found a brass shield. Thus the name of 2 the mountain is Aspis, which is near Gebal to the right of Abima.^a • And I guarded 3 these words in my heart. • Then I advised my father and Reuben that they tell the 4 sons of Hamor that they should not be circumcised,^b because I was filled with zeal 5 on account of the abominable thing they had done to my sister. • And I destroyed 6 Shechem first, and Simeon destroyed Hamor. • Then my brothers came and destroyed 7 that city by the sword. • When my father heard of this he was angry and sorrowful, 8 because they had received circumcision and died,^c and so he passed us by in his 9 blessings. • Thus we sinned in doing this contrary to his opinion, and he became 10 sick that very day. • But I saw that God's sentence was 'Guilty,' because they had 11 wanted to do the same thing to Sarah and Rebecca that they did to Dinah, our 12 sister. But the Lord prevented them. • They persecuted Abraham when he was a 13 nomad, and they harassed his flocks when they were pregnant, and they grossly 14 mistreated Eblaen,^d who had been born in this house. • This is how they treated 15 the nomadic people, seizing their wives and murdering them. • But the wrath of 16 God ultimately came upon them.

Gen 34:25-31
Jub 30:1-26

1Thes 2:16

1 7 "And I said to my father, Jacob, 'Through you the Lord will bring the Canaanites 2 to nothing and will give their land to you and your descendants after you. • For 3 from this day forward, Shechem shall be called "City of the Senseless,"^a because 4 as one might scoff at a fool, so we scoffed at them, • because by defiling my sister 5 they committed folly in Israel,' • and we left there and came to Bethel.

Sir 50:25f.

Deut 22:12

1 8 "There I again saw the vision as formerly,^a after we had been there seventy

c. The tablets are thought of as the record of divine historical decrees, which are fixed and immutable, just as were the laws written by the hand of God (Ex 24:12; 32:15f.; Deut 9:9, 11, 15).

d. The intercessory angel served a necessary function at a time when stress on the notion of God's transcendence distanced him from mankind, as in this document. Michael fulfills this mediatorial role in Dan 10:13, 21; 12:1 (cf. 1En 20:5). An unnamed "one" intercedes in 1En 89:76 and in 90:14. The angel of peace aids the faithful in TDan 6:5; TASH 6:4; TBenj 6:1; and in 1En 52:5; 53:4. In 1En 40:8 the roles of Michael and that of the angel of peace are linked. Cf. also Rev 12:7; TMos 10:1f.

e. The vision is ended, but the message is to be guarded until the time appropriate for its disclosure (6:2), with which is to be compared Dan 4:25 (LXX).

6 a. The common Gk. word aspis is unknown as a place name, a phenomenon which suggests that the text as we have it, including the names of the locales, originated in a Gk.-speaking setting. Abima, though not distinctively Gk, is also otherwise unknown. The wide range of textual variants (Abila, Amēba, Abēma, Abina) and conjectural readings (Abilēnē) show that the difficulty is an ancient one.

b. In this passage—though not in Gen 34—Levi's opposition to circumcising the Shechemites was based on his determination to kill them in revenge, but he wanted to do so without resort to a subterfuge and without involving them, however superficially, in the sacred rites of the covenant people.

c. Circumcision is not mentioned in the accounts of this incident in Jub 30 or Josephus, Ant 1.21, apparently on the ground that it was wrong to kill circumcised persons. In the Gen 49 account of Jacob's deathbed pronouncements, Simeon and Levi are cursed; in Deut 33, Moses' farewell blessings omit Simeon but promise Levi the roles of priest and instructor in the Law of God (Deut 33:8-11).

d. Eblaen is otherwise unknown. The textual tradition offers a wide range of variants.

7 a. Sir 50:25-26 declares that the "foolish people" of Shechem are a non-nation; cf. CD 13.23-14.2.

8 a. Jacob's vision (Gen 28:10-17; 35:9; Jub 27:19-27) is replaced—or supplemented—in TLevi by Levi's vision. Jub 3:3-9, however, depicts Levi as fulfilling the role of priest for his father and the clan at Bethel.

2 days. •And I saw seven men^b in white clothing, who were saying to me, 'Arise, put on the vestments of the priesthood, the crown of righteousness, the oracle of understanding, the robe of truth, the breastplate of faith, the miter for the head, and the apron for prophetic power.' •Each carried one of these and put them on me and said, 'From now on be a priest, you and all your posterity.' •The first anointed me with holy oil and gave me a staff.^c •The second washed me with pure water, fed me by hand with bread and holy wine, and put on me a holy and glorious vestment. •The third put on me something made of linen, like an ephod. •The fourth placed . . . around me a girdle which was like purple. •The fifth gave me a branch of rich olive wood. •The sixth placed a wreath on my head. •The seventh placed the priestly diadem on me and filled my hands with incense, in order that I might serve as priest for the Lord God.^d •And they said to me, 'Levi, your posterity shall be divided into three offices as a sign of the glory of the Lord who is coming. The first lot shall be great; no other shall be greater than it. •The second shall be in the priestly role. •But the third shall be granted a new name, because from Judah a king will arise and shall found a new priesthood in accord with the gentile model and for all nations. •His presence is beloved, as a prophet of the Most High,^e a descendant of Abraham, our father. •To you and your posterity will be everything desired in Israel, and you shall eat everything attractive to behold, and your posterity will share among themselves the Lord's table. •From among them will be priests, judges, and scribes, and by their word the sanctuary will be controlled.' 18.19 When I awoke, I understood that this was like the first dream. •And I hid this in my heart as well, and I did not report it to any human being on the earth.

Ex 28:3-43;
Eph 6:13

Gen 28:10-22

1 9 "And after two days Judah and I went with our father, Jacob, to Isaac, our grandfather. •And my father's father blessed me^a in accord with the vision that I had seen. And he did not want to go with us to Bethel. •When we came to Bethel my father, Jacob, saw a vision^b concerning me that I should be in the priesthood. 4.5 He arose early and paid tithes for all to the Lord, through me. •And thus we came to Hebron to settle there. •And Isaac kept calling me continually to bring to my remembrance the Law of the Lord,^c just as the angel had shown me. •And he taught me the law of the priesthood: sacrifices, holocausts, voluntary offerings of the first produce, offerings for safe return. •Day by day he was informing me, occupying himself with me. And he said to me, •'Be on guard against the spirit of promiscuity, for it is constantly active and through your descendants it is about

b. Jub 32:3 represents Jacob as clothing Levi in the priestly garments. The investiture here described is performed by seven men (angels?) who are God's agents, as are the six who execute judgment in Ezek 9:2. The scene is offered in a more elaborate form in 4QŠirSabb 39. Similar references to the seven angels are found in 1En 20; 81:5; 87:2; 90:21; 3En 17-18. The basic biblical description of the priestly garb is given in Ex 28:3-43; Sir 45:8-12 portrays Aaron in a brief sketch. The virtues linked with the various garments are reminiscent of Eph 6:13-17, where the armor of God is described along similar lines.

c. The anointing, as in Ex 28:41-43; 29:1-8; Ps 133:2. The process of robing the high priest on the Day of Atonement is described in Lev 16:1-34. Bread and wine are Melchizedek's offering in Gen 14:18; cf. Ps 110:4. 1QapGen 22:14 retells the story of Melchizedek's bringing food and drink to Abram, but with no elaboration of the concise Genesis account.

d. The climax of the investiture of Levi as priest is the giving of the priestly diadem, but that is followed by an enigmatic reference to a threefold office (8:11). The first office is "greater" than the others; the second is the priesthood; the third is the kingship, although it is granted to Judah rather than to Levi (8:14) and is immediately defined as a "new priesthood." That new role, which is said to follow the model of the gentiles, may allude to the Maccabean priest-kings, with their increasingly secular discharge of the dual role.

e. Having blended priestly and kingly roles, the office is associated with that of prophet, and then with those of judge and scribe. Clearly the present form of the text is confused, or at least has undergone substantial modification from the typical dyarchic pattern of Levi as priest and Judah as king. But cf. Jub 31:14f.

9 a. The story parallels that of Isaac's blessing Jacob and Esau (Gen 27) and is given in a more elaborate form in Jub 31:8-23, where Levi is blessed (as priest) by Isaac's right hand and Judah by his left hand (as king).

b. In Jub 32:1, it is Levi rather than Jacob who has the dream vision at Bethel (Gen 28). The paying of tithes recalls Abraham's payment to Melchizedek in Gen 14:20.

c. Isaac's instructions to Levi are a briefer version of those given by Abraham to Isaac in Jub 21:1-25.

10 to defile the sanctuary. •Therefore take for yourself a wife while you are still young, a wife who is free of blame or profanation, who is not from the race of 11 alien nations. •Before you enter the sanctuary, bathe; while you are sacrificing, 12 wash; and again when the sacrifice is concluded, wash. •Present to the Lord the Jub 21:12
 13 twelve trees^d that have leaves, as Abraham taught me. •And from every clean 14 living animal and bird, bring a sacrifice to the Lord •And of all your first produce and wine bring the very first as a sacrifice to the Lord God. And salt with salt Mk 9:49 every sacrificial offering.'

1 10 "And now, my children, observe the things which I commanded you, since 2 what I heard from my ancestors I have told to you. •See, I am free of responsibility for your impiety or for any transgression which you may commit until the consummation of the ages,^a [against Christ, the Savior of the world] in leading Israel 3 astray and in fomenting in it great evils against the Lord. •And you shall act lawlessly in Israel, with the result that Jerusalem cannot bear the presence of your wickedness, but the curtain of the Temple will be torn,^b so that it will no longer 4 conceal your shameful behavior. •You shall be scattered as captives among the 5 nations,^c where you will be a disgrace and a curse. •For the house which the Lord shall choose shall be called Jerusalem, as the book of Enoch the Righteous maintains.^d

1,2 11 "I was twenty-eight when I took a wife; her name was Melcha. •She conceived and gave birth to a son, and I gave him the name Gersom, because we were 3 sojourners in the land. •And I saw that, as concerns him, he would not be in the 4 first rank. •And Kohath was born in the thirty-fifth year of my life, before sunrise.
 5 And in a vision I saw him standing in the heights, in the midst of the congregation.
 6 This is why I called him Kohath, that is the Ruler of Majesty and Reconciliation.
 7 And she bore me a third son, Merari, in the fortieth year of my life, and since his mother bore him with great pain, I called him Merari; that is bitterness.
 8 Jochebed was born in Egypt in the sixty-fourth year of my life, for by that time
 I had a great reputation in the midst of my brothers.

1,2 12 "And Gersom took a wife who bore him Lomni and Semei. •The sons of Ex 6:16-25
 3 Kohath were Abraham, Issachar, Hebron, and Ozeel. •And the sons of Merari
 4 were Mooli and Moses. •And in my ninety-fourth year Abraham took Jochebed, Ex 6:20 my daughter, as his wife, because he and my daughter had been born on the same 5 day. •I was eight years old when I entered the land of Canaan, and eighteen years Jub 30:17-23 old when I killed Shechem. At nineteen years I served as a priest; at twenty-eight years I took a wife; and at forty-eight I entered Egypt. See, my children, you are a third generation. During my one hundred eighteenth year Joseph died.

1 13 "And now, my children, I command you:^a Fear the Lord your God with your whole heart, and walk according to his Law in integrity.
 2 Teach your children letters also,
 so that they might have understanding throughout all their lives

d. The twelve trees are named in Jub 21:12; cf. the trees in the desert according to Ezek 47:12 and the eschatological tree with the twelve kinds of fruit in Rev 22:2.

10 a. The consummation is expected soon. Cf. TLevi 5:2, "Until I (= God) shall come." The bracketed words are a Christian interpolation, but much of this ch. appears to have been modified by a Christian hand.

b. The figure of speech here describing the temple veil as covering Israel's shame is awkward and may have been altered by a Christian editor from an original reference to "garment." That would be consonant with the picture of God's judgment in Hos 2:9-10, which may provide the background for the imagery of this passage in TLevi.

c. The eschatological scattering of Israel, as announced in Zech 7:14; Ezek 12:15; Jer 9:16.

d. No known parallel in Enochic literature.

13 a. A poem in praise of devotion to the Law. Compatible with Ps 1 and Sir 39, but the passage, seems intrusive here.

as they ceaselessly read the Law of God.

3 For everyone who knows the Law of God shall be honored wherever he goes, he shall not be a stranger.

4 He shall acquire many more friends than his parents, and many men will want to serve him and to hear the Law from his mouth.

5 Therefore, my sons, do righteousness on earth in order that you might find it in heaven.

Mt 6:20f.

6 Sow good things in your souls and you will find them in your lives.

Prov 22:8

Gal 6:7f.

If you sow evil,
you will reap every trouble and tribulation.

7 Acquire wisdom in fear of the Lord because if a captivity occurs, if cities and territories are laid waste, if silver and gold and every possession are lost, nothing can take away the wisdom of the wise man except the blindness of impiety and the obtuseness of sin.

8 For if anyone preserves himself from these evil deeds, his wisdom shall be glorious, even among his opponents;
it will be found to be a homeland in a foreign territory, and a friend in the midst of his enemies.

9 Whoever teaches good things and practices them shall be enthroned with kings, as was Joseph my brother.

1 14 "And now, my children,^a I know from the writings of Enoch that in the end-time you will act impiously against the Lord, setting your hands to every evil deed; because of you, your brothers will be humiliated and among all the nations you shall become the occasion for scorn. •For your father, Israel, is pure with respect to all the impieties of the chief priests, [who laid their hands on the Savior of the world,] •as heaven is pure above the earth; and you should be the lights of Israel^b as the sun and the moon. For what will all the nations do if you become darkened with impiety? You will bring down a curse on our nation, because you want to destroy the light of the Law which was granted to you for the enlightenment of every man, teaching commandments which are opposed to God's just ordinances.

5 You plunder the Lord's offerings; from his share you steal choice parts, contemptuously eating them with whores. •You teach the Lord's commands out of greed for gain; married women you profane; you have intercourse with whores and adulteresses. You take gentile women for your wives and your sexual relations will become like Sodom and Gomorrah. •You will be inflated with pride over your priesthood, exalting yourselves not merely by human standards but contrary to the commands of God. •With contempt and laughter you will deride the sacred things.

Micah 3:11

1 15 "Therefore the sanctuary which the Lord chose shall become desolate through your uncleanness, and you will be captives in all the nations.^a •And you shall be to them a revolting thing, and you shall receive scorn and eternal humiliation through the just judgment of God. •All who hate you will rejoice at your destruction. 4 And unless you had received mercy through Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, our fathers, not a single one of your descendants would be left on the earth.

14 a. Here the priesthood is portrayed as corrupt, self-serving, and sensual. Perhaps this reflects disillusionment with the increasingly secularized later Maccabean priests, as suggested in the n. for 8:10–14 above. The passage may be later than the rest of TLevi.

b. The α text adds "for all the nations"; the same meaning is implied in the other MS readings. Israel does not discharge her role as a light to the nations (Isa 49:6).

15 a. 15:1–2; 16:1; 17:1. Both the predictions of the pollution of the Temple and the announcement of the divinely ordained chronology of seventy cycles of seven years leading up to the appearance of the eschatological priest show kinship with Dan 9:1–27. Apparently Dan 9 and TLevi are dependent on a common apocalyptic tradition.

1 16 “Now I have come to know that for seventy weeks you shall wander astray
 2 and profane the priesthood and defile the sacrificial altars. •You shall set aside the Law and nullify the words of the prophets by your wicked perversity. You persecute just men: and you hate the pious; the word of the faithful you regard with revulsion. CD 1.15 3 A man who by the power of the Most High renews the Law you name ‘Deceiver,’ and finally you shall plot to kill him,^a not discerning his eminence; by your wickedness you take innocent blood on your heads. •I tell you, on account of him 4 your holy places shall be razed to the ground. •You shall have no place that is clean, but you will be as a curse and a dispersion among the nations until he will again have regard for you, and will take you back in compassion. Mk 11:18; 14:1
Mt 27:24f.

1 17 “Because you have heard about the seventy weeks, listen also concerning the 2 priesthood. •In each jubilee there shall be a priesthood:^a In the first jubilee the first person to be anointed to the priesthood will be great, and he shall speak to God as father; and his priesthood shall be fully satisfactory to the Lord, and in the days 3 of his joy, he shall rise up for the salvation of the world. •In the second jubilee the Anointed One shall be conceived in sorrow of the beloved one, and his priesthood
 4 shall be prized and shall be glorified by all. •The third priest shall be overtaken 5 by grief, and •the fourth priesthood shall be with sufferings, because injustice shall be imposed upon him in a high degree, and all Israel shall hate each one his 6,7 neighbor. •The fifth shall be overcome by darkness; •likewise the sixth and the 8 seventh. •In the seventh there shall be pollution such as I am unable to declare in the presence of human beings, because only the ones who do these things understand 9 such matters. •Therefore they shall be in captivity and will be preyed upon; both 10 their land and their possessions shall be stolen. •And in the fifth week they shall return to the land of their desolation, and shall restore anew the house of the Lord.
 11 In the seventh week there will come priests: idolators, adulterers, money lovers, arrogant, lawless, voluptuaries, pederasts, those who practice bestiality.

1 18 “When vengeance will have come upon them from the Lord, the priesthood will lapse.
 2 And then the Lord will raise up a new priest^a to whom all the words of the Lord will be revealed.
 He shall effect the judgment of truth over the earth for many days.
 3 And his star^b shall rise in heaven like a king;
 kindling the light of knowledge as day is illumined by the sun.
 And he shall be extolled by the whole inhabited world.
 4 This one will shine forth like the sun in the earth;
 he shall take away all darkness from under heaven,
 and there shall be peace in all the earth.
 5 The heavens shall greatly rejoice in his days Isa 44:23 and the earth shall be glad;
 the clouds will be filled with joy and the knowledge of the Lord will be poured out on the earth like the Isa 11:9 water of the seas.
 And the angels of glory of the Lord’s presence will be made glad by him. 1En 51:4

16 a. As in TLevi 10, ch. 16 gives evidence, not of interpolation, but of reworking by a Christian editor in light of the gospel tradition about the complicity of Jewish priests in the death of Jesus.

17 a. The progressive debasement of the priesthood is depicted as occurring in seven stages.

18 a. The glorious epoch of the eschatological priest. Cf. Ps 110; his priesthood endures forever. Much of what is predicted concerning him appears in the prophetic tradition in relation to the king.

Some scholars see here allusions to one or another of the Maccabean priest-kings.

b. The image of the star builds on Num 24:17; the motif also appears in CD 7.18, where there is a differentiation between the Star, who is the interpreter of the Law, and the Scepter, who is the Messiah of Israel and a kingly figure (CD 7.19–20). In 1QPs J 9–13 the Star is an eschatological figure—presumably the king—and is distinguished from Levi (1QPs J 14–18). The Num 24 passage is also referred to in 1QM 9.6; 4QP Bless 5.27. Cf. TJud 24:1.

- 6 The heavens will be opened, and from the temple of glory sanctification will come upon him, with a fatherly voice, as from Abraham to Isaac.
- 7 And the glory of the Most High shall burst forth upon him.
And the spirit of understanding and sanctification shall rest upon him [in the water].^c Isa 11:2
- 8 For he shall give the majesty of the Lord to those who are his sons in truth forever.
And there shall be no successor for him from generation to generation forever.
- 9 And in his priesthood the nations shall be multiplied in knowledge on the earth,
and they shall be illumined by the grace of the Lord, but Israel shall be diminished by her ignorance and darkened by her grief.
In his priesthood sin shall cease and lawless men shall rest from their evil deeds, and righteous men shall find rest in him.
- 10 And he shall open the gates of paradise;^d
he shall remove the sword that has threatened since Adam, and he will grant to the saints to eat of the tree of life. Gen 2:9
Rev 22:2,4,19
- 11 The spirit of holiness shall be upon them.
- 12 And Beliar shall be bound^e by him.
And he shall grant to his children the authority to trample on wicked spirits.
- 13 And the Lord will rejoice in his children;
he will be well pleased by his beloved ones forever.
- 14 Then Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob will rejoice,^f and I shall be glad, and all the saints shall be clothed in righteousness.

- 1 19 "And now, my children, you have heard everything. Choose for yourselves
2 light or darkness, the Law of the Lord or the works of Beliar." • And his sons Deut 30:15-20
3 replied, "Before the Lord we will live according to his Law." • And their father said to them, "The Lord is my witness and his angels are witnesses, and you are 4 witnesses, and I am witness concerning the word from your mouth." • And his sons said, "(We are) witnesses." Then Levi finished giving instructions to his 5 sons. He stretched out his feet on his bed and was gathered to his fathers, having 6 lived a hundred and thirty-seven years. • And they put him in a coffin and later buried him in Hebron with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

Judah, the fourth son of Jacob and Leah

- 1 1 A copy of the words of Judah which he spoke to his sons before he died. When 2 they gathered together and came to him, he said to them, • "Listen, my children,
3 to Judah, your father. I was the fourth son born to my father, Jacob, and Leah, Gen 29:35 4 my mother, named me Judah, saying, 'I give thanks to the Lord, because he has 5 given me a fourth son.' • In my youth I was keen; I obeyed my father • in accord
6 with his every word, and I honored my mother and her sister. • And it happened

c. "[In the water]" is apparently an interpolation based on Jesus' having received the spirit at baptism (Mk 1:9-11), which also linked with a heavenly voice.

d. The primordial paradise is restored, its entrance guarded by a sword (Gen 3:24).

e. The binding of Beliar, as in Isa 24:22-23, where the wicked angels are rendered powerless; cf. Mk 3:27; Lk 11:14-22. The motif of trampling on the evil spirits appears also in Lk 10:19; cf. TSim 6:6; TZeb 9:8.

f. Cf. Jn 8:56; Mt 8:11, where the patriarchs share in the eschatological blessings.

that as I matured, my father declared to me, 'You shall be king,^a achieving success Gen 49:8-10 in every way.'

1 2 "And the Lord bestowed on me grace in all my undertakings, in the field and 2 at home. •I know that I raced a deer, caught it, prepared it as food for my father,^a 3 and he ate it. •By chasing it, I captured a gazelle, and everything that was in the 4 fields I overtook. •I killed a lion and removed a kid from his mouth. Seizing a bear 5 by the paw, I dropped it over a cliff and it was crushed. •I raced a wild boar and 6 as I ran, overtook it and dismembered it. •In Hebron a leopard leapt on a dog and 7 seized it; I snatched it by the tail and broke it in two on a rock. •I found a wild ox grazing in the country; grasping it by the horns and brandishing it in a circle until it was blind, I hurled it down and destroyed it.

1 3 "When two armor-clad kings of the Canaanites came with a large force to seize
2 our flocks, I ran out alone^a against one of the kings, struck him on his leg armor, 3 knocked him down, and killed him, •as I did the other, the king of Tappual, while 4 he was astride his horse, with the result that all his people were scattered. •Achor,
5 the king, a giant of a man, was shooting arrows before and behind while on a 6 horse; I lifted a stone of sixty pounds weight, hurled it at his horse, and killed it.
7 After I had fought with Achor for two hours, I killed him, cut his shield in two,
8 and hacked off his feet.^b •While I was removing his breastplate, eight of his 9 companions started to attack me. •Wrapping my clothing in my hand, I slung 10 stones at them, killing four of them, and the rest fled. •My father, Jacob, killed
1Sam 17:4
2Sam 21:19-22
11 Trembling seized them and they stopped attacking us, •so that my father had no
12 anxiety about battles so long as I was with my brothers. •For he saw in a vision concerning me that a powerful angel accompanied me everywhere so that no one might touch me.

1 4 "After that, an attack against us occurred in the south that was greater than the 2 one at Shechem. After my brothers and I joined forces, we pursued a thousand 3 men and killed two hundred of them, and destroyed four kings. •I went up on the 4 wall and killed their king. Thus we liberated Hebron and took all the captives.

1 5 "Next day we went off to Areton, a city secure and strong which threatened
2 us with death. •Gad and I went up from east of the city, while Reuben and Levi
3 came from the west. •Those who were on the wall, supposing that we were the sole 4 attackers, were drawn out against us. •And so, secretly, by means of pegs, my 5 brothers climbed up the wall on the other sides and invaded the city without their 6 knowing it.^a •And we captured it with the edge of the sword; those on the walls 7 fled into a tower, which we set afire, and thereby took all of them and all their 8 possessions. •As we were leaving, the men of Tappual killed them and burned
9 their city, plundering everything that was in it.^b

1 6 "When I was in the waters of Chozeba, the men of Jabel launched an attack
2 against us. •And having joined battle with them, we put them to flight, slew their 3 allies from Siloam, and we left them with no means to attack us. •Again, on the 4 fifth day, the people of Macher attacked. Marshaling our forces, we triumphed

1 a. It is Judah's obedience that leads to his being rewarded by his designation as king rather than an arbitrary divine choice, as might be inferred from Gen 49:8-10. Cf. TJud 17:5f.

2 a. This exploit sounds like an echo of Jacob's undertaking in providing savory food for the aged Isaac (Gen 27).

3 a. These stories of military strategy and triumph over the Canaanites are similar to those told about Jacob's battles with the Amorites in Jub 34:1-9, as well as to David's exploits in 1Sam 17:1-54. All this material is an expansion based on a brief hint concerning Jacob's encounters with the Amorites in Gen 48:22.

b. Missing in α text. Reading from β .

5 a. Reading from β .

b. Reading from β .

over them in a mighty onslaught, and killed them even before they could withdraw 4 into their stronghold. •When we approached their city, the women rolled stones from the crest of the hill on which the city was built. But Simeon and I, entering the city secretly from behind, seized its heights and completely destroyed it as well.

1 7 “On the next day we were told that the king of the city of Gaash was coming
 2 against us with a large force. •So Dan and I, pretending to be Amorites, entered 3 their city as allies. •In the depth of night our brothers came and we opened the gates for them. All their possessions and all their loot we destroyed; their three 4,5 walls we razed. •We drew near to Thamna, where all their equipment was. •Then since I was being insulted by them, I became angry and launched an attack against 6 them up to the heights, while they were slinging stones and shooting arrows. •Had it not been that Dan, my brother, fought along with me, they would have killed 7 me. •We went out against them with wrath and they all fled. Proceeding by another 8 route, they petitioned my father, and he made peace with them; •we did them no harm, but we kept them subject to tribute and returned to them the spoils taken 9,10 from them. •I built Thamna and my father built Rabael.^a •I was twenty when this 11 battle occurred. •And the Canaanites were fearful of me and my brothers.

1,2 8 “I had many cattle; I had Hiram the Adullamite as chief herdsman.^a •When I Gen 38:1-5 approached him, I saw Barsaba, the king of Adullam. He conversed with us and held a drinking party for us. When I urged him, he gave me his daughter, named 3 Saba, as a wife. •She bore me Er, Onan, and Shelom. The Lord took away two of them, but Shelom lived.

1 9 “For eighteen years my father was at peace with his brother Esau^a and his sons
 2 with us, after we had come out of Mesopotamia from Laban. •When the eighteen years were completed, Esau, my father’s brother, came up against us with a force 3 powerful and strong. •Jacob struck Esau with an arrow, and in death he was carried 4 up to Mount Seir. •We pursued Esau’s sons, who had possession of a fortified city 5 which we were unable to enter. Encamping around it, we besieged it. •When they had not opened to us after twenty days, I set up a ladder and, holding a shield in 6 position over my head, climbed up in spite of being hit by stones. •I killed four 7 of their powerful men while Reuben and Gad killed six others. •Then they asked us for peace terms, and following consultation with our father we took them as 8 subjects under tribute. •They regularly gave us 200 cors of wheat and 500 baths of oil and 500 measures of wine, until the famine, when we went down into Egypt.

1 10 “After this my son Er brought from Mesopotamia Tamar,^a daughter of Aram,
 2 as a wife for himself. •Er was wicked,^b and a difficulty arose concerning Tamar, Gen 38:6-11

7 a. Reading from β.

8 a. The writer here introduces the background of the narrative of Jacob and Tamar with its sensuality and scheming (Gen 38:1–30); the story is developed further in TJud 10–12.

9 a. The conflict between Jacob (and sons) and Esau (and sons) is also reported, with minor variations, in Jub 38:1–24. Both accounts expand on the biblical evidence for conflict between the sons of Isaac (Gen 27) and on the personal and place-names in the genealogy of Esau in Gen 36.

10 a. There are in TJud 10–13 three motifs in the portrayal of the evils resulting from sexual irresponsibility or promiscuity: (1) the scheming mother theme in 10–12; (2) the seductive widow in 12; (3) the plotting father-in-law, who not only decks out his daughter for enticement purposes but also offers wealth as an added inducement for taking her (13). The confusion of names in the textual tradition is only incidental; central is the delineation of these modes of seduction.

b. Here is specified why Er’s wickedness led to his death: Contrary to the divine priorities (as our author discerns them), exogamy is a graver moral issue for him and his mother than is his failure to beget posterity (cf. 10:6). Also Er’s death without offspring and Onan’s failure to fulfill his obligation to his dead brother are blamed on the scheming, xenophobic mother. It was because of her that he and Onan failed to have intercourse with their wives and thus were victims of divine judgment.

because she was not of the land of Canaan. An angel of the Lord took him away 3 on the third night. •He had not had intercourse with her, in keeping with his mother's treacherous scheme, because he did not want to have children by her.
 4 In the days designated for the bridal chamber, I assigned Onan to fulfill the marital role with her, but in his wickedness he did not have intercourse with her even 5 though he was with her for a year. •When I threatened him, he lay with her, but let his semen spill out on the ground, as his mother ordered him. He also died 6 through his wickedness. •I wanted to give Shelom to her also, but his mother would not allow it. She did this evil thing because Tamar was not the daughter of Canaan as she was.

1 11 "And I knew that the race of the Canaanites was evil, but youthful impulses 2 blinded my reason, •and when I saw her, I was led astray by the strong drink and had intercourse with her. •While I was absent, she went off and brought from 4 Canaan a wife for Shelom. •When I realized what she had done, I pronounced a 5 curse on her in the anguish of my soul, •and she died in her wickedness, together with her children.

1 12 "After this, while Tamar was a widow she heard two years later that I was Gen 38:12-26
 2 going up to shear sheep. •Decking herself in bridal array she sat at the entrance of the inn in the city of Enan, for there was a law among the Amorites that a Jub 41:8-23 3 woman who was widowed should sit in public like a whore. •Since I was drunk with wine, I did not recognize her and her beauty enticed me because of her manner 4 of tricking herself out. •I bent down and said to her, 'I shall go in to you.' And she said, 'What will you give me?' And I gave her my staff, my ring, my royal 5 crown as a pledge. So I had intercourse with her and she conceived. •Not understanding what I had done, it was my wish to kill her. But she sent me secretly 6 the pledges and utterly humiliated me. •I summoned her and heard the words spoken in a mystery, when I was drunk and sleeping with her. So I could not kill 7 her, because it was from the Lord. •I kept saying, 'What if she did it deceitfully, 8 having received the pledge from some other woman?' •But I did not go near her again^a until the end of my life because I had done this thing which was revolting 9 in all Israel. •Those who were in the city were saying that there had been no whore at the gate, because she had come quickly from another district and sat at the gate.
 10,11 So I supposed no one knew that I had gone in to her. •Afterward I went to Egypt 12 to Joseph on account of the famine. •I was forty-six years old and I spent seventy years in Egypt.

1 13 "And now, my children,^a I command you give heed to Judah, your father, and keep my words so as to perform all the Lord's just decrees and to obey the command 2 of God. •Do not pursue evil impelled by your lusts, by the arrogance of your heart, and do not boast the exploits and strength of your youth because this too 3 is evil in the Lord's sight. •Since I had boasted that during a war not even a beautifully formed woman's face would entice me, and I had scolded Reuben my brother concerning Bilhah, my father's wife, the spirit of envy and promiscuity plotted against me until I lay with Anan,^b the Canaanite woman, and with Tamar, 4 who was pledged in marriage to my son. •For I said to my father-in-law, 'I will confer with my father and then I will take your daughter.' But since he was unwilling to delay, he showed me a measureless mass of gold which was in his 5 daughter's name. •He decked her in gold and pearls, and made her pour out wine
 6 for us in a feast. •The wine perverted my eyesight; pleasure darkened my heart.

12 a. Although Tamar is said to have conceived (12:4), there is no indication here of offspring, much less of the names of children, as in Gen 38:27-30.

13. a. From 13:1-16:5 there is further expansion of Gen 38, interspersed with hortatory features:

warning against youthful sensual urges, against drunkenness, sexual promiscuity, and the power of women over men.

b. Anan, otherwise unknown (α text). β text has Bathshua variously spelled. The name Anan is probably invented but Bathshua derives from Gen 38:12.

7 I longed for her and lay with her; thus I transgressed the Lord's command and 8 that of my father when I took her as my wife. •And the Lord repaid me according to the rashness of my soul, because I had no delight in her children.

1 14 “And now, my children, I tell you, Do not be drunk with wine, because wine perverts the mind from the truth, arouses the impulses of desire, and leads the eyes Eph 5:18 2 into the path of error. •For the spirit of promiscuity has wine as its servant for the 3 indulgence of the mind: •If any one of you drinks wine to the point of drunkenness, your mind is confused by sordid thoughts, and your body is kindled by pleasure 4 to commit adultery. Thus he commits sin and is unashamed. •Such is the drunkard, 5 my children; he who is drunken has respect for no one. •See, even I was deceived so that I was not ashamed before the throng in the city, because before the eyes of all I turned aside to Tamar and committed a great sin, and disclosed to my sons 6 my acts of uncleanness. •When I had drunk wine I flouted shamelessly God's 7 command and took the Canaanite woman. •He who drinks wine needs much perception, my children, and this is the perception the wine drinker requires: So 8 long as he is decent, he may drink. •But if he exceeds the limit, the spirit of error invades his mind and makes the drunkard become foul-mouthed and lawless; yet rather than be ashamed, he boasts in his dishonorable action and considers it to be fine.

1 15 “The promiscuous man is unaware when he has been harmed and shameless
2 when he has been disgraced. •For even someone who is a king, if he is promiscuous, is divested of his kingship, since he has been enslaved by sexual impulses, just 3 as I experienced. •For I gave my staff (that is, the stability of my tribe), my girdle
4 (that is, my power), and my crown (that is, the glory of my kingdom). •Since I repented of these acts, I consumed neither wine nor meat until my old age, and 5 I saw no merriment at all. •And the angel of the Lord showed me that women have 6 the mastery over both king and poor man: •From the king they will take away his glory; from the virile man, his power; and from the poor man, even the slight support that he has in his poverty.

1 16 “Take care to be temperate with wine, my children; for there are in it four 2 evil spirits: desire, heated passion, debauchery, and sordid greed. •If you drink wine in merriment, showing due respect for the fear of God, you shall live. But if you drink without restraint and the fear of God departs, the result is drunkenness 3 and shamelessness sneaks in. •But if you wish to live prudently, abstain completely from drinking in order that you might not sin by uttering lewd words, by fighting, by slander, by transgressing God's commands, then you shall not die before your 4 allotted time. •The mysteries of God and men wine discloses, just as I disclosed to the Canaanite woman the commandments of God and the mysteries of Jacob, my father, which God had told me not to reveal.^a 1 17 “And now, my children, I command you not to love money or to gaze on the beauty of women.^a Because it was on account of money and attractive appearance 2 that I was led astray to Bathshua the Canaanite. •And I know that on account of 3 these two things my tribe is doomed to wickedness. •For even the wise men from among my sons will be changed for the worse, and the kingdom of Judah they shall cause to be diminished, though the Lord gave it to me because of my obedience 4 to my father. •For at no time did I bring grief to Jacob, my father, because

16 a. The climax of Judah's confession is that while drunk and indulging in sex with a Canaanite (β text) he disclosed to a non-Israelite certain divine commandments and mysteries. This detail points toward the T12Ps having been written by a mystical or esoteric sect.

17 a. The solemnity of the warning about sexual promiscuity is intensified by the writer's showing that even kings can fall victim to feminine wiles and disgrace the kingdom.

5 everything he said, I did.^b • And Abraham, my father's father, blessed me as 6 destined to be the king in Israel; and Jacob blessed me similarly. • And so I know that through me the kingdom will be established.

1 18 "For in the books of Enoch the Righteous I have read the evil things you will 2 do in the last days. • Guard yourselves therefore, my children, against sexual 3 promiscuity and love of money; • listen to Judah, your father, for these things distance you from the Law of God, blind the direction of the soul, and teach 4 arrogance. They do not permit a man to show mercy to his neighbor. • They deprive his soul of all goodness, and oppress him with hardships and grief, they take away 5 sleep from him and utterly waste his flesh. • They impede the sacrifices to God, he does not remember the blessings of God, he does not obey the prophet when 6 he speaks, and he is offended by a pious word. • For two passions contrary to God's commands enslave him, so that he is unable to obey God: They blind his soul, and he goes about in the day as though it were night.

1 19 "My children, love of money leads to idolatry, because once they are led Eph 5:5 astray by money, they designate as gods those who are not gods. It makes anyone Col 3:5 2 who has it go out of his mind. • On account of money I utterly lost my children, and had it not been for the penitence of my flesh, the humility of my soul, and 3 the prayers of my father, Jacob, I would have met death childless. • But the God of my fathers, who is compassionate and merciful, pardoned me because I acted 4 in ignorance. • The prince of error blinded me, and I was ignorant—as a human being, as flesh, in my corrupt sins—until I learned of my own weakness after supposing myself to be invincible.

1 20 "So understand, my children, that two spirits await an opportunity with 2 humanity: the spirit of truth and the spirit of error. • In between is the conscience TAsh 1:3-9; of the mind which inclines as it will.^a • The things of truth and the things of error IQS 3:13-4:26 3 are written in the affections of man, each one of whom the Lord knows. • There is no moment in which man's works can be concealed, because they are written 4 on the heart in the Lord's sight. • And the spirit of truth testifies to all things and Jn 16:7-13 brings all accusations. He who has sinned is consumed in his heart and cannot raise his head to face the judge.

1 21 "And now, children, love Levi so that you may endure. Do not be arrogant
2 toward him or you will be wholly destroyed. • To me God has given the kingship and to him, the priesthood; and he has subjected the kingship to the priesthood.
3.4 To me he gave earthly matters and to Levi, heavenly matters. • As heaven is superior to the earth, so is God's priesthood superior to the kingdom on earth, unless through sin it falls away from the Lord and is dominated by the earthly 5 kingdom. • For the Lord chose him over you to draw near to him, to eat at his table
6 to present as offerings the costly things of the sons of Israel. • You shall be to them like the sea; as in it the just and the unjust are tempest-tossed, some are taken captive, some become rich, so shall it be in every race of mankind: Some shall be exposed to danger, some taken captive, some shall grow rich by looting:

7 "Those who rule shall be like sea monsters, swallowing up human beings like fish.

b. Contrast 17:4 and 6. See n. for TJud 1:6. The reasons for Judah's receiving the kingship and both the extent and the durability of his kingdom are inconsistently portrayed in TJud. This is perhaps another indication that the document in its present form has undergone modification by Jews with views that differed from those of the original author.

23 a. Among the predictions of judgment upon Israel in the last days is the destruction of the Temple, which may be an authentic prediction on the analogy of Dan 9, or it may be an interpolation based on the Roman assault on city and Temple in A.D. 66–70.

b. Reading with β text.

Free sons and daughters they shall enslave; houses, fields, flocks, goods they shall seize.

8 With the flesh of many persons they shall wickedly gorge crows and cranes.

They shall make progress in evil; they shall be exalted in avarice.

9 Like a whirlwind shall be the false prophets:
They shall harass the righteous.

1 22 "The Lord will instigate among them factions set against each other and 2 conflicts will persist in Israel. •My rule shall be terminated by men of alien race,
3 until the salvation of Israel comes, until the coming of the God of righteousness, 4 so that Jacob may enjoy tranquility and peace, as well as all the nations. •He shall 5 preserve the power of my kingdom forever. With an oath the Lord swore to me
6 that the rule would not cease for my posterity.

Gen 49:10;
Ps 89:1-4,34-37

1 23 "My grief is great, my children, on account of the licentiousness and witchcraft
2 and idolatry that you practice contrary to the kingship, following ventriloquists, 3 omen dispensers, and demons of deceit. •You shall make your daughters into 4 musicians and common women, and you will become involved in revolting gentile 5 affairs. •In response to this the Lord will bring you famine and plague, death and 6 the sword, punishment by a siege, scattering by enemies like dogs, the scorn of 7 friends, destruction and putrefaction of your eyes, slaughter of infants, the plunder
8 of your sustenance, the rape of your possessions, consumption of God's sanctuary 9 by fire,^a a desolate land, and yourselves enslaved by the gentiles. •And they shall 10 castrate some of you as eunuchs for their wives, •until you return^b to the Lord in 11 integrity of heart, penitent and living according to all the Lord's commands. Then 12 the Lord will be concerned for you in mercy and will free you from captivity under 13 your enemies.

1 24 "And after this there shall arise for you a Star from Jacob^a in peace: And a 2 man shall arise from my posterity like the Sun of righteousness, walking with the 3 sons of men in gentleness and righteousness, and in him will be found no sin. •And 4 the heavens will be opened upon him to pour out the spirit^b as a blessing of the 5 Holy Father. •And he will pour the spirit of grace on you. And you shall be sons
6 in truth, and you will walk in his first and final decrees. •This is the Shoot of God^c
7 Most High; this is the fountain for the life of all humanity. •Then he will illumine
8 the scepter of my kingdom, •and from your root will arise the Shoot, and through 9 it will arise the rod of righteousness for the nations, to judge and to save all that 10 call on the Lord.

Joel 2:28-29
Ps 45:1f.

1 25 "And after this Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob will be resurrected to life and I
2 and my brothers will be chiefs (wielding) our scepter in Israel: Levi, the first; I,
3 second; Joseph, third; Benjamin, fourth; Simeon, fifth; •Issachar, sixth; and all the 4 rest in their order. And the Lord blessed Levi; the Angel of the Presence blessed
5 me; the powers of glory blessed Simeon; the heaven blessed Reuben; the earth
6 blessed Issachar; the sea blessed Zebulon; the mountains blessed Joseph; the Tent
7 blessed Benjamin; the lights blessed Dan; luxury blessed Naphtali; the sun blessed 8 Gad; the olive tree blessed Asher.

24 a. A mosaic of eschatological expectations based on Num 24:17 (vs. la); Mal 4:2 (vs. lb); Ps 45:4 in LXX (vs. lc); Isa 53:9 (vs. ld). Cf. CD 7.11-20, especially 19-20. For the Star, see TLevi 18:3, n.

b. The outpouring of the spirit is linked with the advent of the ideal king (Isa 11:2), to the coming of the messenger bringing good news to the oppressed (Isa 61:11), and to the eschatological effusion of all humanity (Joel 3:1 in Heb.). The first ordinances or decrees are mentioned in 1QS 9.10 and CD 20.31.

c. The Shoot (= Branch) is the eschatological king: Isa 11:1; Jer 23:5; 33:15; Zech 3:8; 6:12; CD 1.7.

25 a. The adoption of one language restores the unity of mankind shattered since the divine judgment at the Tower of Babel confused the language of man (Gen 11:1-9). Cf. Jub 3:28.

- 3 “And you shall be one people of the Lord, with one language.^a Jn 17:22
There shall no more be Beliar’s spirit of error, because he will be thrown Eph 4:4 into eternal fire. Rev 20:2,14
- 4 And those who died in sorrow shall be raised in joy;
and those who died in poverty for the Lord’s sake shall be made rich;
those who died on account of the Lord shall be wakened to life.
- 5 And the deer of Jacob shall run with gladness; Dan 12:2;
the eagles of Jacob shall fly with joy; Rev 12:11;
the impious shall mourn and sinners shall weep, Rev 20:4
but all peoples shall glorify the Lord forever. Isa 40:28-31

1 26 “Observe the whole Law of the Lord, therefore, my children, because it is 2 hope for all who pursue his way.” •And he said to them, “At one hundred nineteen 3 years of age, I am dying before your eyes this day. •Do not bury me in expensive clothing or disembowel me for embalming because that is what is done for royal 4 rulers. But take me up to Hebron with you.” •When he had said this, Judah fell asleep and his sons did everything as he had instructed them, and they buried him in Hebron with his fathers.

Testament of Issachar, the fifth son of Jacob and Leah

1 1 A copy of the words of Issachar. He called his sons to him and said, “Listen, children, to Issachar, your father; give ear to the words of one who is beloved of 2 the Lord. •I was the fifth son to be born to Jacob as a payment for mandrakes,^a
3 for when Reuben, my brother, brought in mandrakes from the field, Rachel met Gen 30:1-24
4 him on the way and took them. •Reuben wept, and at the sound of his voice his 5 mother, Leah, came out. •These were fragrant fruit produced in the land of Horan
6 in the high country below a waterfall. •Rachel said, ‘I will not give you these 7 because they shall be mine in place of children.’^b •There were two of the fruits.
Leah said, ‘Is it not enough that you took the husband of my virginity? Must you 8 take these as well?’ •And Rachel said, ‘In exchange for your son’s mandrakes let 9 Jacob be yours tonight.’ •Leah replied to her, ‘Do not boast, and do not hold too high opinion of yourself, for Jacob is mine and I am the wife of his youth.’ 10 Rachel said, ‘What do you mean? I was prepared for marriage to him first and for 11 my sake he served our father fourteen years. •What can I do with you? Treachery and human trickery are increasing, and treachery is spreading over the earth. If 12 that were not so, you would not see Jacob’s face. •You are not his wife, but by 13 craftiness you were taken to him in my place. •My father deceived me and replaced me that night, not allowing Jacob to see me. Because if I had been there this would 14 not have happened.’ •Then Rachel said, ‘In exchange for the mandrakes I will hire out a woman to Jacob for one night.’ And Jacob had intercourse with Leah; she 15 conceived and bore me. •And on account of the ‘hire,’ I was called Issachar.

1 2 “Then an angel of the Lord appeared to Jacob and said, ‘Rachel shall bear two children, because she despised intercourse with her husband, choosing rather 2 continence.’ •If Leah, my mother, had not given up the two fruits in exchange for sexual intercourse, she would have borne eight sons. But accordingly, she bore six and Rachel bore two, because through the use of mandrakes^a the Lord had 3 regard for her. •For he perceived that she wanted to lie with Jacob for the sake

1 a. An herb with a large forked root, considered to be a love philter and an aid to pregnancy.

b. Or “they shall be mine as a means of getting children.”

2 a. Tlss adds the curious explanation that God listened to Rachel “because of the mandrakes” (cf. Gen 30:22), as though the potency of the roots invoked or encouraged divine intervention.

4 of children and not merely for sexual gratification. •In addition, she gave up Jacob on the following day so that she might obtain the other mandrake. Thus it was 5 through the mandrakes that the Lord listened to Rachel. •Even though she longed for them passionately, she did not eat them, but presented them in the house of the Lord, offering them up to the priest of the Most High who was there at that time.

1 3 “Accordingly, when I grew up, my children, I lived my life in rectitude of heart; I became a farmer for the benefit of my father and my brothers,^a and I 2 brought the produce from the fields at their appropriate times. •And my father 3 blessed me, since he saw that I was living in integrity.^b •I was no meddler in my 4 dealings, nor was I evil or slanderous to my neighbor. •I spoke against no one, 5 nor did I disparage the life of any human; •I lived my life with singleness of vision. Accordingly, when I was thirty-five I took myself a wife because hard work consumed my energy, and pleasure with a woman never came to my mind; rather 6 sleep overtook me because of my labor. •And my father was continually rejoicing in my integrity. Whatever it was that I labored over at every harvest and whenever there was a firstborn, I first made an offering to the Lord through the priest, then 7 for my father, and then for myself. •And the Lord doubled the good things in my 8 hands. Jacob knew that God collaborated with my integrity. •In the integrity of my heart, I supplied everything from the good things of the earth to all the poor and the oppressed.

Gen 49:15

1 4 “Now, listen to me, children, and live in integrity of heart, for in it I have observed everything that is well-pleasing to the Lord.
2 The genuine man does not desire gold, he does not defraud his neighbor,
he does not long for fancy foods,
nor does he want fine clothes.
3 He does not make plans to live a long life, but awaits only the will of God.
4 And the spirits of error have no power over him, since he does not include feminine beauty in the scope of his vision, lest by allowing distraction he might corrupt his mind.
5 Envy will not penetrate his thinking;
no malice dissipates his soul;
no avarice intrudes upon his integrity.
6 For he lives by the integrity of his soul, and perceives all things by the rectitude of his heart, making no place for an outlook made evil by this world’s error, in order that he might envision no turning aside from any of the Lord’s commands.

Mt 6:22

1 5 “Keep the Law of God, my children; achieve integrity; live without malice, not tinkering with God’s commands or your neighbor’s affairs.^a 2 Love the Lord and your neighbor; be compassionate toward poverty and sickness.
3 Bend your back in farming,

Lk 10:27

3 a. An interpretation of Jacob’s prediction in Gen 49:15 that places Issachar in a more favorable light than what seems to be mindless submission to slavery and drudgery. LXX and the Targums similarly modify Gen 49:15.

b. Cf. n. to TReu 4:1. Integrity is the central element in the portrait of Issachar (3:1–6) as well as in the moral injunctions that follow in 4:1–6:1.

5 a. Although observance of the Law is affirmed and obedience to certain provisions of it are enjoined, the basic ethical outlook here is that of hellenistic morality, especially of the Stoic type, with its stress on self-discipline and personal integrity. Similarly in 7:1–6, where there is added to integrity, piety (eusebeia); cf. TReu 6:4; TJud 18:5.

perform the tasks of the soil in every kind of agriculture, offering gifts gratefully to the Lord.

Gen 49:15

4 “Thus the Lord will bless you with the first fruits, as he has blessed all the saints
5 from Abel until the present. •For to you is given no other portion than the fertility Gen 4:2-5 6 of the earth, from which comes produce through toil.^b •Our father, Jacob, blessed 7 me by the blessing of the earth and of the first fruits. •And Levi and Judah were glorified by the Lord among the sons of Jacob.^c The Lord made choice among 8 them: To one he gave the priesthood and to the other, the kingship. •Subject yourselves to them, and live in integrity as did your father, because to Gad^d has been assigned the rout of the attackers who are coming against Israel.

1 6 “Understand, my children, that in the last times your sons will abandon sincerity and align themselves with insatiable desire. Forsaking guilelessness, they will ally 2 themselves with villainy. Abandoning the commands of the Lord, they ally themselves with Beliar. •Giving up agriculture, they pursue their own evil schemes;^a 3 they will be scattered among the nations and enslaved by their enemies. •Tell these things to your children, therefore, so that even though they might sin, they may 4 speedily return to the Lord, •because he is merciful: He will set them free and take them back to their land.

1 7 “I am a hundred and twenty-two years old, and I am not aware of having committed a sin unto death.

Jub 21:22
Jub 33:18
1Jn 5:16f.

2 “I have not had intercourse with any woman other than my wife, nor was I promiscuous by lustful look.
3 I did not drink wine to the point of losing self-control.
I was not passionately eager for any desirable possession of my neighbor.
4 There was no deceit in my heart;
no lie passed through my lips.
5 I joined in lamentation with every oppressed human being,
and shared my bread with the poor.
I did not eat alone; I did not transgress boundaries;
6 I acted in piety and truth all my days.
The Lord I loved with all my strength;
likewise, I loved every human being as I love my children.^a 7 You do these as well, my children, and every spirit of Beliar will flee from you, and no act of human evil will have power over you.
Every wild creature you shall subdue, so long as you have the God of heaven with you, and walk with all mankind in sincerity of heart.”

8 And he instructed them that they should take him up to Hebron and bury him there 9 in the cave with his fathers. •And he stretched his legs and died at a good old age—the fifth son, with all his members sound and still strong; he slept the eternal sleep.

b. A more positive view of human toil than that of Gen 3:17, where the ground is cursed.

c. The honor here demanded for Levi and Judah is typical of the whole of the T12P.

d. Mention of Gad seems intrusive and unsuitable here.

6 a. Implicit here is the ideal of agrarian life as especially conducive to morality.

7 a. Universal love and brotherhood are here commanded rather than merely neighborly obligation to one's fellow covenant member.

Zebulon, the sixth son of Jacob and Leah

1 1 A copy of the testament of Zebulon, which he decreed for his sons in the one hundred fourteenth year of his life, thirty-two years after the death of Joseph.
 2 And he said to them, “Listen to me, sons of Zebulon; heed the words of your
 3 father. •I am Zebulon, a good gift to my parents, for when I was born my father prospered exceedingly, in flocks and herds, when he got his share of them by 4 means of the spotted rods.^a •I am not aware, my children, that I have sinned in 5 all my days, except in my mind. •Nor do I recall having committed a transgression, 6 except what I did to Joseph in ignorance, because in a compact with my brothers
 7 I kept from telling my father what had been done, although I wept much in secret.
 8 I was afraid of my brothers because they had all agreed that, if any one disclosed
 9 the secret, he should be killed by a sword. •Even when they wanted to kill him,
 I exhorted them with tears not to commit this lawless act.^b Gen 30:20

1 2 “Simeon and Gad came upon Joseph to kill him. Falling on his face, Joseph
 2 began to say to them, •‘Have mercy on me, my brothers; pity the deep feelings
 3 of Jacob, our father. Do not put your hands on me to pour out innocent blood, 4 because I have not sinned against you. •If I have sinned, discipline me as one
 5 trains a child, but do not lay your hand on me for the sake of our father, Jacob.’
 6 As he was saying these words, I was moved to pity and began to weep; my 7 courage grew weak and all the substance of my inner being became faint within 8 my soul. •Joseph wept, and I with him; my heart pounded, the joints of my body 9 shook and I could not stand. •And when he saw me crying with him, while the 10 others were coming to kill him, he rushed behind me beseeching them. •Reuben
 11 stood up and said, ‘My brothers, let us not kill him, but let us throw him into one 12 of those dry cisterns which our fathers dug and in which there is to be found no 13 water.’ •Accordingly, the Lord prohibited any water from rising up in them so that 14 Joseph’s preservation might be accomplished. Jer 4:19
 15 And the Lord did this until the time when they sold him to the Ishmaelites. Gen 37:21f.

1,2 3 “I had no share in the price received for Joseph, my children. •But Simeon,
 2 Gad, and our other brothers accepted the money, bought shoes for themselves, 3 their wives, and their children. •‘We will not use the money for eating, which is 4 the price of our brother’s blood, but we will trample it underfoot in response to 5 his having said he would rule over us. Let us see what comes of his dreams.’ TarJon on Gen 37:28
 6 Accordingly, it is written in the book of the Law of Moses that anyone who is 7 unwilling to raise up posterity for his brother, his shoe should be removed and one 8 should spit in his face.^a •Joseph’s brothers did not want their brother to live, and 9 the Lord removed Joseph’s shoe from them. •For when they arrived in Egypt their 10 shoes were removed by Joseph’s servants before the gate, and thus they did 11 obeisance to Joseph in the manner of the Pharaoh. •Not only did they do obeisance, 12 but they were spit upon, prostrating themselves forthwith before him. And thus 13 they were humiliated before the Egyptians. •After that the Egyptians heard all the 14 wicked things that we had done to Joseph. Gen 37:20
Deut 25:5-10

1,2 4 “After they had thrown him into the pit,^a they sat down and began to eat; •as for me, I tasted nothing for two days and two nights, being moved with compassion

1 a. An allusion to the imitative magic by which Jacob sought to guarantee the breeding of mottled cattle in his deal with Laban (Gen 30:25–31:16). Nothing in the Gen account links the narrative with Zebulon, however.

b. The Gen 37 report of the sale of Joseph as a slave gives no hint of a special role for Zebulon, as does TZeb 2:1–4:13, or for Dan (as in 4:7–9). TZeb exonerates Judah, however (cf. Gen 37:26f.).

3 a. A variant practice is attested in Ruth 4:7–8.

4 a. Reading with the β text to vs. 6.

for Joseph. And Judah joined me in abstaining from food; he stayed near the cistern, because he was afraid that Simeon and Gad might go out and kill Joseph.

3 When they observed that I was not eating, they assigned me to guard him until 4 he might be sold. •He remained in the cistern three days and three nights, so that 5 when he was sold he was starving. •When Reuben heard that Joseph had been sold while he was away, he tore his clothing in mourning, saying, 'How can I look my 6 father in the face?' •He took money and ran after the merchants, but found no one, since they had left the highway and had traveled by a shortcut through the region
 7 of the Troglodytes.^b •And Reuben ate no food that day. Then Dan came to him
 8 and said, •'Do not weep; do not mourn, for I have found what we should say to 9 our father, Jacob. •Let us kill a goat's kid and dip Joseph's coat in its blood. Then 10 we shall say, "Do you recognize whether this is your son's garment?"' • (For they had taken off from Joseph his father's coat when they were about to sell him 11 and put on him an old garment of a slave.) •Simeon had the garment and was unwilling to give it to him, preferring to cut it up with his sword, since he was 12 burning with anger that he had not killed him. •But we all rose in opposition to him and said, 'If you don't give it up we shall say you alone did this evil deed 13 in Israel.' •So he gave it up and they did as Dan had stated.

Jonah 1:17LXX
 Mt 12:40
 Gen 37:22,29

Gen 37:32

Gen 49:13

1 5 "Now, my children, I tell you to keep the Lord's commands; show mercy to your neighbor, have compassion on all, not only human beings but to dumb 2 animals. •For these reasons the Lord blessed me, and when all my brothers were ill, I alone passed without sickness, for the Lord knows the purpose of each man.
 3 Have mercy in your inner being, my children, because whatever anyone does to 4 his neighbor, the Lord will do to him. •For the sons of my brothers were sickly and died on account of Joseph, because they did not act in mercy out of their inner 5 compassion. •But you, my sons, were preserved free from illness, as you know.
 When I was in Canaan catching fish by the sea^a for our father, Jacob, many were drowned in the sea, but I survived unharmed.

1 6 "I was the first to make a boat to sail on the sea, because the Lord gave me
 2 understanding and wisdom concerning it. •I positioned a rudder behind it, put up
 3 a sail on a straight piece of wood in the middle. •In it I sailed along the shores,
 4 catching fish for my father's household until we went to Egypt. •Being compas-5 sionate, I gave some of my catch to every stranger. •If anyone were a traveler, or sick, or aged, I cooked the fish, prepared it well, and offered to each person 6 according to his need, being either convivial or consoling. •Therefore the Lord made my catch to be an abundance of fish; for whoever shares with his neighbor 7 receives multifold from the Lord. •I fished for five years, sharing with every person
 8 whom I saw, and sufficing for my father's household. •Summers, I fished; winters,
 I tended the flock of my brothers.

1 7 "Now I will tell you what I did. I saw a man suffering from nakedness in the wintertime and I had compassion on him: I stole a garment secretly from my own 2 household and gave it to the man in difficulty. •You, therefore, my children, on the basis of God's caring for you, without discrimination be compassionate and 3 merciful to all. Provide for every person with a kind heart. •If at any time you do not have anything to give to the one who is in need, be compassionate and merciful 4 in your inner self. •For when my hand could not find the means for contributing

b. Mention of "Troglodytes" (= cave dwellers), which is the meaning for Suki-im conjectured by the translators of 2Chr 12:3 (LXX). Since another Gk. version (Lucian) merely transliterates the name of this otherwise unknown people, we must assume that the word did not automatically mean cave dwellers and that T12P is using LXX, not the Heb. text.

5 a. Building on the words of Jacob about Zebulon's dwelling by the sea (Gen 49:13), the text here depicts him as an expert fisherman and a pioneer builder of seagoing boats.

to a needy person, I walked with him for seven stades,^a weeping; my inner being was in torment with sympathy for him.

1 8 “You also, my children, have compassion toward every person with mercy, in 2 order that the Lord may be compassionate and merciful to you. •In the last days
3 God will send his compassion on the earth, and whenever he finds compassionate 4 mercy, in that person he will dwell. •To the extent that a man has compassion on 5 his neighbor, to that extent the Lord has mercy on him. •For when we went down 6 into Egypt, Joseph did not hold a grudge against us. When he saw me, he was 7 moved with compassion. •Whomever you see, do not harbor resentment, my 8 children; love one another, and do not calculate the wrong done by each to his 9 brothers. •This shatters unity, and scatters all kinship, and stirs up the soul. He 10 who recalls evil receives neither compassion nor mercy.

Mt 7:2

Gen 43:30; 45:1-15

1 9 “Pay heed to the streams: When they flow in the same channel^a they carry
2 along stones, wood, and sand, •but if they are divided into many channels, the 3 earth swallows them and they become unproductive. •And you shall be thus if you 4 are divided. •Do not be divided into two heads, because everything the Lord has 5 made has a single head. He provides two shoulders, two hands, two feet, but all 6 members obey one head. •In the writing of the fathers I came to know that in the 7 last days you shall defect from the Lord, and you shall be divided in Israel, and 8 you shall follow after two kings; you shall commit every abomination and worship 9 every idol. •Your enemies will take you captive and you shall reside among the 10 gentiles with all sorts of sickness and tribulation and oppression of soul. •And 11 thereafter^b you will remember the Lord and repent, and he will turn you around 12 because he is merciful and compassionate; he does not bring a charge at wickedness
13 against the sons of men, since they are flesh and the spirits of deceit lead them
14 astray in all their actions. •And thereafter the Lord himself will arise upon you, 15 the light of righteousness with healing and compassion in his wings. He will liberate 16 every captive of the sons of men from Beliar, and every spirit of error will be 17 trampled down. He will turn all nations to being zealous for him. And you shall 18 see [God in a human form], he whom the Lord will choose: Jerusalem is his name.
19 You will provoke him to wrath by the wickedness of your works, and you will 20 be rejected until the time of the end.

Mal 4:2

1 10 “And now, my children, do not grieve because I am dying, nor be depressed
2 because I am leaving you. •I shall rise again^a in your midst as a leader among your 3 sons, and I shall be glad in the midst of my tribe—as many as keep the Law of 4 the Lord and the commandments of Zebulon, their father. •But the Lord shall bring 5 down fire on the impious^b and will destroy them to all generations. •I am now 6 hurrying to my rest, like my fathers. •But you fear the Lord your God with all your 7 strength all the days of your life.” •When he had said this, he fell into a beautiful
8 sleep, and his sons placed him in a coffin. Later they carried him up to Hebron 9 and buried him with his fathers.

Ps 11:5f.

CD 2.5;
1En 90:24;
100:9; 108:3

7 a. Use of a Gk. unit of measure (= about 600 feet or less than one fifth of a kilometer) is a further indication of a provenance in a Gk.-speaking area for T12P.

9 a. Metaphors and prophecies in praise of unity, a corollary of personal integrity and a guarantee of corporate strength.

b. Reading with β; with b d g in vs. 8.

10 a. An apparent reference to the resurrection of the just; cf. TJud 25:1. Zebulon's own moral instructions are added to the general appeal to obey the law.

b. Cf. Ps 11:5f., as in the judgment that fell in patriarchal times in Gen 19:24.

The Testament of Dan, the seventh son of Jacob and Bilhah

1 1 A copy of the words of Dan, which he spoke to his sons at the last of his days,
 2 in the one hundred twenty-fifth year of his life. •Assembling his clan, he said,
 3 “Sons of Dan, hear my words; give heed to what is uttered by the mouth of your
 4 father. •I have made proof in my heart and in my life that truth with honest dealings
 5 is good and well-pleasing to God, while falsehood and anger are evil because they 6 instruct mankind thoroughly in every evil.^a •My children, I confess to you today
 7 that in my heart I rejoiced over the death of Joseph, a man who was true and good.
 8 I was glad about the sale of Joseph, because Father loved him more than the rest
 9 of us. •For the spirit of jealousy and pretentiousness kept saying to me, ‘You too
 10 are his son.’ •And one of the spirits of Beliar was at work within me, saying, CD 12.2
 11 ‘Take this sword, and with it kill Joseph; once he is dead, your father will love 12 you.’ •This is the spirit of anger that persuaded me that as a leopard sucks the 13 blood of a kid, so I should suck the blood of Joseph. •But the God of Jacob, our 14 father, did not allow him to fall into my hands so that I might find him alone, nor 15 did he permit me to accomplish this lawless act, lest two tribes be lost from Israel.

1 2 “And now, my children, I am dying, and I say to you in truth that if you do
 2 not guard yourselves against the spirit of falsehood and anger, and love truth and 3 forbearance, you will perish. •There is blindness in anger, my children, and there
 4 is no angry person who can perceive the face of truth. •For even if one is his father
 5 or mother, he treats them as enemies; if it is a brother, he does not recognize him;
 6 if it is a prophet of the Lord, he misunderstands; if it is a just man, he is unaware
 7 of him; if a friend, he ignores him. •For the spirit of anger ensnares him in the CD 4.15
 8 nets of deceit, blinds his eyes literally, darkens his understanding by means of a 9 lie, and provides him with its own peculiar perspective. •By what means does it 10 ensnare the vision? By hatred in the heart, it gives him a peculiar disposition to 11 envy his brother.

1 3 “Anger is evil, my children, for it becomes the motivating force of the soul
 2 itself.^a •That force has strange effects on the body of the angry man; it dominates
 3 his soul, and provides the body with a peculiar power so that it can accomplish
 4 every lawless act. •When the soul acts, it justifies whatever is done since it lacks
 5 discernment. •So then whoever is angry, if he is a powerful person, has triple 6 strength by reason of his anger: First through the power and support of his 7 subordinates; second through his wealth, by which he can win by persuasive acts 8 and triumph in injustice; third, he has the natural force of his own body, and 9 through it he accomplishes evil. •But if the angry one is a weak person, his strength 10 is twice that of nature, for anger always supports such persons in their transgression.
 11 This spirit always moves with falsehood at the right hand of Satan, in order that 12 such deeds may be done through savagery and deception.

1.2 4 “Understand, then, the power of anger, that it is senseless. •First, it arouses
 2 by spoken word; then by actions it gives strength to the one who is aroused, by 3 sharp losses it perturbs his mind, and thus arouses his soul with great anger.
 4 When anyone speaks against you, do not be moved to anger; and if anyone praises 5 you as being kind, do not be elated, nor be carried away, neither by pleasure nor 6 by shame. •First it is pleasant to hear and thus it sharpens the mind to be sensitive
 7 to some provocation; and then when anyone is aroused by anger, it makes him

1 a. Honesty and freedom from anger are the virtues upheld and exemplified in TDan, as the ensuing confession shows (1:4-6).

3 a. A mingling of moral injunctions and a kind of primitive psychology.

5 suppose his self-esteem is justified. • If you suffer a loss, if you undergo the destruction of anything, do not become alarmed, my children, because this spirit makes one desire what is transitory in order that he might be made angry over
6 what he is missing. • If you lose something, by your own action or otherwise, do
7 not be sorrowful, for grief arouses anger as well as deceit. • Anger and falsehood together are a double-edged evil, and work together to perturb the reason. And when the soul is continually perturbed, the Lord withdraws from it and Beliar rules it.

- 1 5 “Observe the Lord’s commandments, then, my children, and keep his Law.^a TZeb 8:2 Avoid wrath, and hate lying,
in order that the Lord may dwell among you,
and Beliar may flee from you.
- 2 Each of you speak truth clearly to his neighbor, and do not fall into pleasure and troublemaking, but be at peace, holding to the God of peace.
Thus no conflict will overwhelm you. Zech 8:16f.
1Thes 5:23
Rom 15:33
Heb 13:20f.
- 3 Throughout all your life love the Lord, and one another with a true heart.
- 4 For I know that in the last days you will defect from the Lord,
you will be offended at Levi, and revolt against Judah; TIsa 6:1
TZeb 9:5
2Tim 3:1-5
2Pet 3:3
but you will not prevail over them.
An angel of the Lord guides them both, because by them Israel shall stand.
- 5 “To the extent that you abandon the Lord, you will live by every evil deed, committing the revolting acts of the gentiles, chasing after wives of lawless men, 6 and you are motivated to all wickedness by the spirits of deceit among you. • For I read in the Book of Enoch the Righteous that your prince^b is Satan and that all the spirits of sexual promiscuity and of arrogance devote attention to the sons of Levi in the attempt to observe them closely and cause them to commit sin before the Lord.
- 7 “My sons will draw close to Levi, will participate with them^c in all manner of sins;
and with the sons of Judah they will share in greed, like lions snatching what belongs to others.
- 8 Accordingly you will be led off with them into captivity;
there you will receive all the plagues of Egypt, and all the evils of the gentiles.
- 9 Therefore when you turn back to the Lord, you will receive mercy, and he will lead you into his holy place, proclaiming peace to you.
- 10 And there shall arise for you from the tribe of Judah and (the tribe of) Levi
the Lord’s salvation.^d
He will make war against Beliar;
he will grant the vengeance of victory as our goal.
- 11 And he shall take from Beliar the captives, the souls of the saints;
and he shall turn the hearts of the disobedient ones to the Lord,

5 a. The standard appeal to obey the Law. Cf. TDan 6:10.

b. No known Enochic text supports this, although Jewish and patristic speculation linked Dan and the Antichrist, possibly on the basis of the idolatry attributed to Dan in Judg 18:11-31 and the prophecies of judgment linked to Dan in Jer 8:16-17.

c. Curiously, Levi and Judah set the pattern for these evil acts of Dan. Perhaps 5:7 is a Jewish interpolation, since it contrasts sharply with 5:4 and 5:10.

d. The salvific tasks of Levi and Judah are not specified, but are loosely grouped as “the Lord’s salvation.” God is the agent in all that follows.

and grant eternal peace to those who call upon him.

12 And the saints shall refresh themselves in Eden;
the righteous shall rejoice in the New Jerusalem, which shall be eternally for the glorification of God.

13 And Jerusalem shall no longer undergo desolation, nor shall Israel be led into captivity, because the Lord will be in her midst [living among human beings].^c
The Holy One of Israel will rule over them in humility and poverty, and he who trusts in him shall reign in truth in the heavens.

1 6 "And now fear the Lord, my children, be on guard against Satan and his spirits.
2 Draw near to God and to the angel who intercedes for you,^a because he is the mediator between God and men for the peace of Israel. He shall stand in opposition 3 to the kingdom of the enemy. •Therefore the enemy is eager to trip up all who call 4 on the Lord, •because he knows that on the day in which Israel trusts, the enemy's 5 kingdom will be brought to an end. •This angel of peace will strengthen Israel so 6 that it will not succumb to an evil destiny. •But in Israel's period of lawlessness it will be the Lord who will not depart from her and therefore she will seek to do 7 his will, for none of the angels is like him. •His name shall be everywhere 8 throughout Israel; [and the Savior will be known among the nations].^b •Keep yourselves from every evil work, my children, and cast aside anger and every lie; 9 love truth and patience. •What you have heard from your father pass on to your Zech 9:9 children, so that the father of nations may accept you. For he is true and patient, 10 lowly and humble, exemplifying by his actions the Law of God. •Forsake all 11 unrighteousness and cling to the righteousness of the Law of God. •And bury me near my fathers."

1,2 7 When he had said this, he kissed them and slept an eternal sleep. •And his sons buried him and later they carried his bones to be near Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.
3 Dan prophesied to them, however, that they would go astray from God's law, that they would be estranged from their inheritance, from the race of Israel, and from their patrimony; and that is what occurred.

The Testament of Naphtali, the eighth son of Jacob and Bilhah

1 1 A copy of the testament of Naphtali, which he decreed at the time of his death
2 in the one hundred thirty-second year of his life. •When his sons were gathered together in the seventh month, on the fourth day of the month, and he was in good 3 health, he gave a feast and drinking party. •After he awoke early the next morning, 4 he told them, "I am dying," but they did not believe him. •And while he was blessing the Lord he confirmed that after the previous day's feast he would die.

e. Probably the detail of God's living among mankind is a Christian interpolation.

6 a. The intercessory angel; see TLevi 5:5-6 and the n. there. Cf. 1En 40:6; also Tit 2:5; Heb 9:15;

12:22-24.

b. Possibly a Christian interpolation, although the statement stands in poetic parallel to vs. 7a and its universalism can be documented elsewhere in T12P.

5 Then he began to say to his sons, "Listen, my children, sons of Naphtali, hear
 6 your father's words. •I was born from Bilhah; Rachel acted by trickery, giving Gen 30:8
 Bilhah to Jacob in place of herself, and she bore me on the knees of Rachel, for 7 which reason she called me Naphtali. •Rachel loved me because I was born in her lap; while I was tender in appearance^a she would kiss me and say, 'May I see a 8 brother of yours, like you, from my own womb!' •Thus Joseph was like me in 9 every way, in keeping with Rachel's prayer. •But my mother was Bilhah,^b daughter of Rotheos, Deborah's brother, nurse of Rebecca; she was born the very day on 10 which Rachel was born. •Rotheos was of Abraham's tribe, a Chaldean, one who 11 honored God, free and well-born, •but he was taken captive and bought by Laban, who gave him Aina, his servant girl, as a wife. She bore a daughter and called her Zelpha^c from the name of the village in which he had been taken captive.
 12 After that she bore Bilhah, saying, 'My daughter is ever eager for new things: No sooner had she been born than she hurried to start sucking.'

1 2 "Since I was light on my feet like a deer, my father, Jacob, appointed me for Gen 49:21
 2 all missions and messages, and as a deer he blessed me. •For just as a potter knows the pot, how much it holds, and brings clay for it accordingly, so also the Lord forms the body in correspondence to the spirit,^a and instills the spirit cor-
 3 responding to the power of the body. •And from one to the other there is no discrepancy, not so much as a third of a hair, for all the creation of the Most High 4 was according to height, measure, and standard. •And just as the potter knows the WisSol 11:20 use of each vessel and to what it is suited, so also the Lord knows the body to what 5 extent it will persist in goodness, and when it will be dominated by evil. •For there Gen 1:26f.
 is no form or conception which the Lord does not know since he created every WisSol 2:23 6 human being according to his own image. •As a person's strength, so also is his 1Cor 11:7 work; as is his mind, so also is his skill. As is his plan, so also is his achievement; as is his heart, so is his speech; as is his eye, so also is his sleep; as is his soul, so also is his thought, whether on the Law of the Lord or on the law of Beliar.
 7 As there is a distinction between light and darkness, between seeing and hearing, thus there is a distinction between man and man and between woman and woman.
 8 One cannot say they are one in appearance or in rank, •for God made all things good in their order: the five senses in the head; to the head he attached the neck, in addition to the hair for the enhancement of appearance; then the heart for prudence; the belly for excretion from the stomach; the windpipe for health; the liver for anger; the gallbladder for bitterness; the spleen for laughter; the kidneys for craftiness; the loins for power; the lungs for the chest; the hips for strength and 9 so on. •Thus my children you exist in accord with order for a good purpose in fear of God; do nothing in a disorderly manner, arrogantly, or at an inappropriate time.
 10 If you tell the eye to hear, it cannot; so you are unable to perform the works of light while you are in darkness.

1 a. Following the text of β ; other MSS are best translated by simply "young."

b. It is important for the writer to prove that Bilhah is a relative of the Abraham-Isaac-Jacob clan in order that her son, Naphtali, may have a proper place in that tribe's destiny. Here her ancestry is traced back to the time of Abraham, when he was among the Chaldeans (Gen 11:27-28).

c. In Jub 28:9 Bilhah's sister's name is Zilpah; she was given by Laban as a maidservant to Rachel. In Gen 30:9-13 Zilpah is Leah's maid and the mother of Asher and Gad, while Bilhah is Rachel's maid and the mother of Dan and Naphtali, as here (1:9).

2 a. More of the psychophysiology of T12P. All that happens is in keeping with the divine plan, which is especially suited by God for each individual. Phrases from 2:8 match a fragmentary Heb. TNaph found in 12th-13th-cent. MSS. The possible relationships of the Qumran TNaph fragment can be determined only when the text is published. Judging by the published TLevi text from Qumran, we might expect only occasional overlapping.

1 3 "Do not strive to corrupt your actions through avarice or to beguile your souls
 2 by empty phrases, because those who are silent in purity of heart will be able to 3 hold fast God's will and to shunt aside the will of Beliar. •Sun, moon, and stars
 4 do not alter their order; thus you should not alter the Law of God by the disorder
 5 of your actions. •The gentiles, because they wandered astray and forsook the Lord,
 6 have changed the order, and have devoted themselves to stones and sticks, patterning
 7 themselves after wandering spirits. •But you, my children, shall not be like that:
 8 In the firmament, in the earth, and in the sea, in all the products of his workmanship
 9 discern the Lord who made all things, so that you do not become like Sodom, 10 which departed from the order of nature. •Likewise the Watchers departed from 11 nature's order; the Lord pronounced a curse on them at the Flood. On their account 12 he ordered that the earth be without dweller or produce.

Deut 4:28
 WisSol 14:21
 Jude 22,23

Gen 19:1
 Gen 6:1
 TReu 5:6
 Jude 7

1 4 "I say these things, my children, because I have read in the writing of holy
 2 Enoch that you also will stray from the Lord, living in accord with every wickedness
 3 of the gentiles and committing every lawlessness of Sodom. •The Lord will impose
 4 captivity upon you; you shall serve your enemies there and you will be engulfed
 5 in hardship and difficulty until the Lord will wear you all out. •And after you have 6 been decimated and reduced in number, you will return and acknowledge the Lord
 7 your God. •And it shall happen that when they come into the land of their fathers,
 8 they will again neglect the Lord and act impiously, •and the Lord will disperse
 9 them over the face of the whole earth until the mercy of the Lord comes, a man 10 who effects righteousness,^a and he will work mercy on all who are far and near.

1.2 5 "In the fortieth year of my life, I saw on the Mount of Olives east of •Jerusalem^a 2 that the sun and the moon stood still. And behold, Isaac, my father's father, was 3 saying to us, 'Run forth, seize them, each according to his capacity; to the one
 4 who grasps them will the sun and the moon belong.'^b All of them ran, but Levi 5 seized the sun and Judah,^b outstripping the others, grasped the moon. Thus they 6 were exalted above others. •When Levi became like the sun, a certain young man 7 gave him twelve date palms. •And Judah became luminous like the moon, and 8 twelve rays were under his feet. Then running toward the others, Levi and Judah
 9 seized them. •And behold, there was a bull on the earth^c with two great horns 10 and an eagle's wings on his back. They tried to lay hold of him, but were unable.
 11 But Joseph overtook them and seized him and went up with him into the heights.
 12 And I looked, since I was there, and behold a sacred writing appeared to us, 13 which said, 'Assyrians, Medes, Persians, Elamites, Gelachians, Chaldeans, Syrians 14 shall obtain a share in the twelve staffs of Israel through captivity.'

Zech 14:4-7
 Gen 37:9
 Rev 12:1

Ezek 1:10
 Rev 4:7
 Dan 8:5-8

4 a. There is here no identification by tribe or specific role of God's human agent to restore the disobedient nation.

5 a. The location of the vision on the Mount of Olives is in keeping with the late prophetic tradition which expects God's eschatological activity there both in judgment (Ezek 11:23, when the nimbus of glory abandons the Temple, departing from the mountain on the east) and in revelation (Ezek 43:2, when the glory returns). The final defeat of God's enemies is foreseen as occurring on this mountain as well (Zech 14, especially vss. 3-4). In the gospel tradition, the judgment of Israel is pronounced from a vantage point on the Mount of Olives (Mk 13:3f. and parallels). The place from which the New Jerusalem is seen in Rev 21:10 is called simply "a great, high mountain."

b. The ascendancy of Levi and Judah is here depicted in imagery that recalls Ezek 11 and 43, with their descriptions of the departure and return of the divine glory (see n. 5a above) and the details of Joseph's dream (Gen 37:9-11). Here, however, it is not Joseph but Levi and Judah who receive the highest places.

c. The animal vision recalls the succession of earthly empires in Dan 10-11, where the series culminates in the kingdom of Greece (= Alexander), which then bifurcates into the kingdom of the south (= the Ptolemies in Egypt) and the kingdom of the north (= Seleucids in Syria). Here, however, Syria is the last nation to be named, which implies that it is the world power with which the writer and his contemporaries are confronted. The Chaldeans (= Babylonians?) are mentioned in what appears to be completely out of sequence, but they may simply be here because they are part of the tradition, as in Dan, where they figure as the

1 6 "And again after seven months^a I saw our father, Jacob, standing by the sea
 2 at Jamnia and we, his sons, were with him. •And behold a ship came sailing past
 3 full of dried fish, without sailor or pilot. •Inscribed on it was 'The Ship of Jacob.'
 4 So our father said to us, 'Get into our boat.' •As we boarded it, a violent tempest
 5 arose, a great windstorm, and our father, who had been holding us on course, was 6 snatched away from us. •After being tossed by the storm, the boat was filled with 7 water and carried along on the waves until it broke apart. •Joseph escaped in a 8 light boat while we were scattered about on ten planks; Levi and Judah were on 9 the same one. •Thus we were all dispersed, even to the outer limits. •Levi, putting 10 on sack cloth, prayed to the Lord in behalf of all of us. •When the storm ceased, the ship reached the land, as though at peace. •Then Jacob, our father, approached, and we all rejoiced with one accord.

1 7 "These two dreams I recounted to my father, and he replied, 'These things must be fulfilled at their appropriate time, once Israel has endured many things.'
 2 Then my father said, 'I believe that Joseph is alive, for I continually see that the 3 Lord includes him in the number with you.' •And he kept saying tearfully, 'You
 4 live, Joseph, my son, and I do not see you, nor do you behold Jacob who begot 5 you.' •He made me shed tears by these words of his. I was burning inwardly with compassion to tell him that Joseph had been sold, but I was afraid of my brothers.

1 8 "Behold, my children, I have shown you the last times, all things that will happen in Israel.

2 "Command your children that they be in unity with Levi and Judah,^a for through Judah will salvation arise for Israel, and in him will Jacob be blessed.
 3 Through his kingly power God will appear [dwelling among men on the earth],
 to save the race of Israel,
 and to assemble the righteous from among the nations.
 4 If you achieve the good, my children, men and angels will bless you;
 and God will be glorified through you among the gentiles.
 The devil will flee from you;
 wild animals will be afraid of you, and the angels will stand by you.^b 5 Just as anyone who rears a child well is held in good esteem, so also there will be a virtuous recollection on the part of God for your good work.

national designation of the oppressors and the title for the court wise men (Dan 2:2; 3:8; 4:7; 5:7; 11). The bull is linked with Joseph in Deut 33:13-17. The eagle's wings recall Ezek 17:3, while the eagle image itself appears in Ezek 1:10 and is then taken up in Rev 4:7 and 12:14. Here Joseph seeks to control both bull and eagle. If these animals are to be interpreted as representing earthly powers, then possibly the bull is Alexander, the horns are the Seleucids and the Ptolemies; the eagle is the Romans, a rising power in the west during the 2nd and 1st cent. B.C. The Heb. TNaph (2-3) has a more elaborate version of this vision.

6 a. As in the β text, perhaps seven months corresponds to Daniel's seventy haptads, or "weeks" of years (Dan 9:24). The α text reads "seven days." While maintaining the hegemony of Levi and Judah, TNaph makes a special place for Joseph, who in turn enjoys special favor with Jacob and with God.

8 a. More credit is given to Judah than to Levi here as God's eschatological agent. The ambiguity as to whether Levi or Judah has primacy is evident in the Dead Sea texts as well as here. The interpolated phrase underscores the fact that God appears among men "in human form," and hence that his appearance benefits all humanity.

b. The link between the devil and the wild animals recalls the account of Jesus' temptation in the synoptic gospel tradition (Mk 1:13).

- 6 The one who does not do the good, men and angels will curse, and God will be dishonored among the gentiles because of him;
the devil will inhabit him as his own instrument.
Every wild animal will dominate him, and the Lord will hate him.
- 7 The commandments of the Lord are double,
and they are to be fulfilled with regularity.
- 8 There is a time for having intercourse with one's wife, and a time to abstain for the purpose of prayer.

Ecd 3:5

9 "And there are the two commandments:^c Unless they are performed in proper sequence they leave one open to the greatest sin. It is the same with the other 10 commandments. •So be wise in the Lord and discerning, knowing the order of his commandments, what is ordained for every act, so that the Lord will love you."

1 9 He gave them many similar instructions, urging them to transfer his bones to 2 Hebron and bury him with his fathers. •He ate and drank in soulful glee, covered his face, and died. And his sons acted in accord with the things commanded by the father, Naphtali.

The Testament of Gad, the ninth son of Jacob and Zilpah

1 1 A copy of the testament of Gad, concerning what he said to his sons in the one 2 hundred twenty-seventh year of his life, saying, •"I was Jacob's ninth son; among 3 the shepherds I was brave. •I guarded the flock at night, and when the lion came, TJud 2:2 the wolf, the leopard, the bear or any other wild animal attacked the flock, I pursued it, seized it by the foot with my hand, crushed and blinded it, and hurled 4 it a distance of twelve hundred feet. •Now Joseph^a was tending the flocks with me for about thirty days, and since he was delicate, he became faint from the heat, 5 and went back to Hebron to his father. •He made Joseph lie down close to him 6 because he loved him. •And Joseph said to his father, the sons of Zilpah and Bilhah Gen 37:2 are killing the best animals and eating them against the advice of Judah and Reuben. 7 He saw that I had set free a lamb from the mouth of a bear, which I then killed, but that I had killed the lamb when I was saddened to see that it was too weak to 8 live; and we had eaten it. •This he told our father. On this matter I bore a grudge 9 against Joseph until the day he was sold into Egypt; •the spirit of hatred was in me, and I wanted to see or hear nothing of Joseph. He reproved us to our faces because we had eaten the newborn of the flocks without Judah. And whatever Joseph told our father, he believed him.

1 2 "I now confess my sin, children, that frequently I wanted to kill him; to the depth of my soul I hated him and any inner feeling of mercy toward him was 2 completely absent. •Because of his dreams my hatred toward him increased and I wanted to gobble him up from among the living as an ox gobbles up grass from

c. No indication is given as to which are the "two" commandments, and thus what the correct sequence of obeying them is. One might infer from 8:1-8 that they are (1) loving God and (2) loving neighbor. This sequence would then mean to give obligation to God priority over responsibility to fellow humans.

1 a. Unsympathetic expansion of the Joseph story from Gen 37; here Joseph is portrayed as a tattler and as one who misrepresents his brothers' actions to his father.

3 the ground. •For this reason Judah and I^a sold him to the Ishmaelites for thirty pieces of gold; we hid ten pieces and showed only the twenty to our brothers.
 4,5 Thus it was through greed that our plot to kill him was carried out. •But the God of my fathers rescued him from my hands so that I might not perform a lawless deed in Israel.

1 3 “And now children, listen to the words of truth: to perform justice and every law^a of the Most High; not to be led astray by the spirit of hatred because it is evil
 2 beyond all human deeds. •Whatever anyone does, he who hates is revolted; if he
 3 fears the Lord and hopes for good things, the hater has no love for him. •The hater disparages truth, envies the successful person, relishes slander, loves arrogance, because hatred blinds his soul. It was in this way that I regarded Joseph.

1 4 “Beware, my children, of those who hate, because it leads to lawlessness against 2 the Lord himself. •Hatred does not want to hear repeated his commands concerning 3 love of neighbor, and thus it sins against God. •For if a brother makes a false step, immediately it wants to spread the tale to everyone, and is eager to have him
 4 condemned for it, punished, and executed. •If the hater is a slave, he conspires against his master, and whenever difficulty arises it plots how he might be killed.
 5 Hatred collaborates with envy, when it sees or hears about the prosperity of those
 6 who do well; it is perpetually peevish. •Just as love wants to bring the dead back to life and to recall those under sentence of death, so hate wants to kill the living and does not wish to preserve alive those who have committed the slightest sin.
 7 For among all men the spirit of hatred works by Satan through human frailty for the death of mankind; but the spirit of love works by the Law of God through forbearance for the salvation of mankind.

1 5 “Hatred is evil, since it continually consorts with lying, speaking against the truth; it makes small things big, turns light into darkness, says that the sweet is bitter, teaches slander, conflict, violence, and all manner of greed; it fills the heart
 2 with diabolical venom. •I tell you this, my children, from experience, so that you
 3 might escape hatred and cling to love of the Lord. •Righteousness expels hatred; humility kills envy. For the person who is just and humble is ashamed to commit an injustice, not because someone else will pass judgment on him but out of his
 4 own heart, because the Lord considers his inner deliberations. •He will not denounce
 5 a fellow man, since fear of the Most High overcomes hatred. •Being concerned not to arouse the Lord’s anger, he is completely unwilling to wrong anyone, even in 6 his thoughts. •I understood this at the last, after I had repented concerning Joseph,
 7 for according to God’s truth, repentance destroys disobedience, puts darkness to flight, illumines the vision, furnishes knowledge for the soul, and guides the 8 deliberative powers to salvation. •What it has not learned from human agency, it
 9 understands through repentance. •For God brought on me a disease of the liver,^a 10 and if it had not been for the prayers of Jacob, my father, he would shortly have 11 summoned from me my spirit. •For by whatever human capacity anyone transgresses, by that he is also chastised. •Since my anger was merciless in opposition to Joseph, through this anger of mine I suffered mercilessly, and was brought under judgment for eleven months, as long as I had had it in for Joseph, until he was sold.

2 a. Gad joins with Judah in the plan to sell Joseph into slavery; cf. Gen 37:26. From 3a–5 we follow the β text. The α text omits “for thirty . . . brothers,” which may be an indication of a Christian interpolation, based on Mt 26:15 and 27:3 (cf. Zech 11:12), although it is possibly a direct allusion to Ex 21:32, where this amount is the price of a slave.

3 a. Although introduced by an appeal to obey the Law, the main thrust of this hortatory section from 3:1–7:6 is the general ethical appeal for avoidance of hatred, of which the manifestation of love and forgiveness are the positive counterparts.

5 a. The liver was regarded as the seat of anger and strong emotions.

1 6 “Now, my children, each of you love his brother. Drive hatred out of your 2 hearts. Love one another in deed and word and inward thoughts. •For when I stood 3 before my father I would speak peaceably about Joseph, but when I went out, the 4 spirit of hatred darkened my mind and aroused my soul to kill him. •Love one 5 another from the heart, therefore, and if anyone sins against you, speak to him in 6 peace. Expel the venom of hatred, and do not harbor deceit in your heart. If anyone
 7 confesses and repents, forgive him. •If anyone denies his guilt, do not be contentious 8 with him, otherwise he may start cursing, and you would be sinning doubly. •In 9 a dispute do not let an outsider hear your secrets, since out of hatred for you he 10 may become your enemy, and commit a great sin against you. He may talk to you 11 frequently but treacherously, or be much concerned with you, but for an evil end, 12 having absorbed from you the venom. •Even if he denies it and acts disgracefully 13 out of a sense of guilt, be quiet and do not become upset. For he who denies will 14 repent, and avoid offending you again; indeed he will honor you, will respect you 15 and be at peace. •But even if he is devoid of shame and persists in his wickedness, 16 forgive him from the heart and leave vengeance to God.

Deut 32:35
 Rom 12:19

1 7 “If anyone prospers more than you, do not be aggrieved, but pray for him that 2 he may prosper completely, for this is what is precisely to your advantage. •And 3 if he becomes even more exalted, do not be envious, but remember that all humanity
 4 dies. Offer praise to the Lord who provides good and beneficial things for all
 5 mankind. •Search out the Lord’s judgments, and thus you shall gain an inheritance
 6 and your mind will be at rest. •Even if someone becomes rich by evil schemes, 7 as did Esau, your father’s brother, do not be jealous; wait for the Lord to set the 8 limits. •For if he takes away the things obtained by evil means, those who repent
 9 receive forgiveness, and the impenitent one receives eternal punishment. •The man 10 who is poor but free from envy, who is grateful to the Lord for everything, is 11 richer than all, because he does not love the foolish things that are a temptation
 12 common to mankind. •Drive hatred away from your souls, and love one another 13 in uprightness of heart.

1 8 “Tell these things to your children as well, so that they will honor Judah and 2 Levi, because from them the Lord will raise up a Savior for Israel.^a •I know that 3 at the end your children will depart from them and will live in all manner of 4 wickedness and evildoing and corruption in the sight of the Lord.” •Then after 5 he had been silent for a brief time he said again to them, “My children, obey your 6 father. Bury me near my fathers.” •He drew up his feet and fell asleep in peace.
 7 And after five years they took him up and buried him in Hebron with his fathers.

The Testament of Asher, the tenth son of Jacob and Zilpah

1 1 A copy of the testament of Asher, the things he spoke to his sons in the one
 2 hundred twenty-fifth year of his life. •While he was still healthy he said to them, 3 “Listen, children of Asher, to your father, and I will show you everything that 4 is right in the sight of God. •God has granted two ways^a to the sons of men, two

8 a. The special roles for Levi and Judah are a feature shared by T12P and the Dead Sea documents, where a kingly and priestly Messiah are awaited; cf. 1QS^a 2.11–21; CD 11.23; 14.19; 19.10; 20.1. It is also implied in Zech 4:14.

the Doctrine of the Two Ways, an ethical tradition which is anticipated in the choices set before Israel by Moses (Deut 30:15) and by Joshua (Josh 24:15). It is stated explicitly in Jer 21:8–14, and further developed in Sir 15:11–17 and in 2En 30:15. In earliest Christian writings it is echoed in Mt 7:13–14, elaborated in EpBar 17 and Did 1; in post-

1 a. In 1:3–5:4 is set forth an elaborate version of 4 mind-sets, two lines of action, two models, and two goals. •Accordingly, everything 5 is in pairs, the one over against the other. •The two ways are good and evil; concerning them are two dispositions within our breasts that choose between them.

6 If the soul wants to follow the good way, all of its deeds are done in righteousness
7 and every sin is immediately repented. •Contemplating just deeds and rejecting 8 wickedness, the soul overcomes evil and uproots sin. •But if the mind is disposed toward evil, all of its deeds are wicked; driving out the good, it accepts the evil 9 and is overmastered by Beliar, who, •even when good is undertaken, presses the struggle so as to make the aim of his action into evil, since the devil's storehouse is filled with the venom of the evil spirit.

1 2 “The soul, they say, may in words express good for the sake of evil, but the 2 outcome of the action leads to evil. •There is a man who has no mercy on the one who serves him in performing an evil deed; there are two aspects of this, but the 3 whole is wicked. •And there is a man who loves the one who does the evil, as he is himself involved in evil, so that he would choose to die in evil for the evildoer's 4 sake. There are also two aspects of this, but the whole situation is evil. •Although indeed love is there, yet in wickedness is evil concealed; in name it is as though 5 it were good, but the outcome of the act is to bring evil. •Someone steals, deals unjustly, robs, cheats, but yet has pity on the poor. This also has two aspects, but 6 is evil as a whole. •He who cheats his neighbor provokes God's wrath; he who serves falsely before the Most High, and yet has mercy on the poor, disregards the Lord who uttered the Law's commands; he provokes him, and yet he alleviates 7 the plight of the poor day laborer. •He defiles the soul and takes pride in his own body; he kills many, yet has pity on a few. This also has two aspects, but is evil 8 as a whole. •Someone else commits adultery and is sexually promiscuous, yet is abstemious in his eating. While fasting, he is committing evil deeds. Through the 9 power of his wealth he ravages many, and yet in spite of his excessive evil, he performs the commandments. •This also has two aspects, but is evil as a whole.
Such persons are hares, because although they are halfway clean, in truth they are 10 unclean, •for this is what God has said on the tables of the commandments.

Lev 11:6
Deut 14:7

1 3 “But you, my children, do not be two-faced like them, one good and the other evil; rather, cling only to goodness, because in it the Lord God is at rest, and men 2 aspire to it. •Flee from the evil tendency, destroying the devil by your good works.
For those who are two-faced are not of God, but they are enslaved to their evil desires, so that they might be pleasing to Beliar and to persons like themselves.

1 4 “For persons who are good, who are single-minded—even though they are 2 considered by the two-faced to be sinners—are righteous before God. •For many who destroy the wicked perform two works—good and evil—but it is good as a 3 whole, because evil is uprooted and destroyed. •One person hates the man who, though merciful, is also unjust, or who is an adulterer, even though he fasts, and thus is two-faced. But his work is good as a whole, because he imitates the Lord, 4 not accepting the seeming good as though it were the truly good. •Another person does not want to see any pleasant days among the convivial, lest they disgrace the body and pollute the soul. This also has two aspects, but is good on the whole.
5 For such persons are like gazelles and stags: In appearance they seem wild and unclean, but as a whole they are clean. They live by zeal for the Lord, abstaining from what God hates and has forbidden through his commandments, staving off evil by the good.

apostolic literature it is a popular motif: AposCon 7.1; Clementine Homilies 5.7; Clement of Alexandria, Strom 5.5. Notable here is the effort to set authentic works of mercy over against merely external manifestations of piety.

1 5 “Children, you see how in everything there are two factors, one against the 2 other, one concealed by the other: In possessions is greed, in merriment is 3 drunkenness, in laughter is lamentation, in marriage is dissoluteness. •Death is 4 successor to life, dishonor to glory, night to day, darkness to light, but all these 5 things lead ultimately to day: righteous actions to life, unjust actions to death,
 6 since eternal life wards off death. •One cannot say truth is a lie, nor a righteous
 7 act is unjust, because all truth^a is subject ultimately to the light, just as all things 8 are subject ultimately to God. •I have demonstrated all these things in my life, and 9 have not strayed from the Lord’s truth. I have searched out the commandments 10 of the Most High and lived them according to all my strength.

1 6 “You also, my children, give attention to the Lord’s command, pursuing the 2 truth with singleness of mind. •The two-faced are doubly punished because they 3 both practice evil and approve of others who practice it; they imitate the spirits of 4 error and join in the struggle against mankind. •You therefore, my children, keep 5 the Law of the Lord; do not pay attention to evil as to good, but have regard for 6 what is really good and keep it thoroughly in all the Lord’s commandments, taking 7 it as your way of life and finding rest in it. •For the ultimate end of human beings
 8 displays their righteousness, since they are made known to the angels of the Lord
 9 and of Beliar. •For when the evil soul departs, it is harassed by the evil spirit 10 which it served through its desires and evil works. But if anyone is peaceful with 11 joy he comes to know the angel of peace and enters eternal life.

1 7 “Do not become like Sodom, which did not recognize the Lord’s angels and Gen 19:1
 2 perished forever. •For I know that you will sin and be delivered into the hands of 3 your enemies; your land shall be made desolate and your sanctuary wholly polluted.
 4 You will be scattered to the four corners of the earth; in the dispersion you shall 5 be regarded as worthless, like useless water, until such time as the Most High
 6 visits the earth. [He shall come as a man eating and drinking with human beings,]^a 7 crushing the dragon’s head in the water. He will save Israel and all the nations, 8 [God speaking like a man]. •Tell these things, my children, to your children, so 9 that they will not disobey him. •For I know that you will be thoroughly disobedient, 10 that you will be thoroughly irreligious,^b heeding not God’s Law but human 11 commandments, being corrupted by evil. •For this reason, you will be scattered 12 like Dan and Gad, my brothers, you shall not know your own lands, tribe, or 13 language. •But he will gather you in faith through his compassion and on account 14 of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.”

1 8 After he had said these things he gave instructions, saying, “Bury me in 2 Hebron.” And he died, having fallen into a beautiful sleep. •And his sons did as 3 he commanded them: They took him up to Hebron and buried him with his fathers.

5 a. The ground of this ethical appeal is an ultimate quasi-philosophical judgment concerning abstract realities such as truth and integrity rather than a moral evaluation based simply on individual acts performed in conformity to the commandments of Jewish law; cf. 6:3–7:7.

7 a. Probably these references to the humanity of the God who comes to save are Christian interpolations. The crushing of the dragon’s head recalls the water imagery of primordial chaos and the serpent (Gen 1:7–9; 7:11; Ps 74:12–17; 148:7; Isa 27:1), which resurfaces in Rev 12:1–17; 20:2.

b. Typical of T12P is the stylized reference to the Law mingled with the conventions of hellenistic ethics (e.g. asebountes).

The Testament of Joseph, the eleventh son of Jacob and Rachel

- 1 1 A copy of the testament of Joseph.^a When he was about to die, he called his sons and his brothers and said to them:
- 2 “My brothers and my children.
Listen to Joseph, the one beloved of Israel.
Give ear to the words of my mouth.
- 3 In my life I have seen envy and death.
But I have not gone astray: I continued in the truth of the Lord.
- 4 These, my brothers, hated me but the Lord loved me.
They wanted to kill me, but the God of my fathers preserved me.
Into a cistern they lowered me; the Most High raised me up.
- 5 They sold me into slavery; the Lord of all set me free. Mt 23:31-46
I was taken into captivity; the strength of his hand came to my aid.
I was overtaken by hunger; the Lord himself fed me generously.
- 6 I was alone, and God came to help me.
I was in weakness, and the Lord showed his concern for me.
I was in prison, and the Savior acted graciously in my behalf.
I was in bonds, and he loosed me;
- 7 falsely accused, and he testified in my behalf.
Assaulted by bitter words of the Egyptians, and he rescued me.
A slave, and he exalted me.
- 1,2 2 “And this chief officer of Pharaoh entrusted to me his household. •I struggled with a shameless woman who kept prodding me to transgress with her, but the 3 God of my father rescued me from the burning flame. •I was jailed, I was whipped, TJos 6:6
I was sneered at, but the Lord granted me mercy in the sight of the prison-keeper.
- 4 “For the Lord does not abandon those who fear him, neither in darkness, or chains, or tribulation or direst need.
- 5 For God does not disappoint as does man, Num 23:19
Isa 40:28-31
nor is he timorous like a son of man nor like an earthborn is he weak or frightened away.
- 6 In all these matters he takes his stand, and in various ways he offers assistance, even though for a brief time he may stand aside in order to test the disposition of the soul.
- 7 In ten testings^a he showed that I was approved, Jub 19:8
Gen 22:1
Ab 5:3
and in all of them I persevered, because perseverance is a powerful medicine and endurance provides many good things.
- 1 3 “How often the Egyptian woman threatened me with death! How often, after turning me over to the tormentors she would call me back and threaten me! But 2 since I was unwilling to have intercourse with her, she kept saying to me, •‘You will be master over me and all my household if you will only give yourself over

1 a. Consisting largely of an expansion on the narratives of Gen 37:39-45, TJos is probably composite in the form in which it appears in the present text. This is indicated, for example, by awkward syntactical shifts in the narration (from first to third person) in 14:3, 6; 16:3. After 10:4, the theme of chastity seems to be eclipsed by concern for manifestation of brotherliness, especially by safeguarding the reputation of one's brothers, but the anti-sexual motif keeps appearing and no clear break is evident. At 19:3-7 the Arm. MSS offer a more complete version of the apocalyptic predictions, probably in the more original form. The other MS evidence diverges at that point, however, and there occurs one of the clearest instances of Christian interpolation.

2 a. Num 14:22 mentions Israel's ten testings of God.

3 to me; then you will be our ruler.' •But I recalled my father's words, went weeping
 4 into my quarters, and prayed to the Lord. •For those seven years I fasted, and yet seemed to the Egyptians like someone who was living luxuriously, for those who 5 fast for the sake of God receive graciousness of countenance. •If my master was absent, I drank no wine; for three-day periods I would take no food but give it to 6 the poor and the ill. •I would awaken early and pray to the Lord, weeping over the Egyptian woman of Memphis because she annoyed me exceedingly and 7 relentlessly. •In the night she would come in to me, pretending a mere visit.
 8 Because she had no male child, she pretended to consider me as a son. •For a time she would embrace me as a son, but then I realized later that she was trying to lure 9 me into a sexual relationship. •When I became aware of this I lamented to the point of death. After she had gone out, I came to myself and mourned in her behalf 10 for many days, because I had recognized her deceit and her deviousness. •I spoke to her the words of the Most High, hoping he might divert her from evil desire.

Dan 1:8-16

1 4 "How often, then, did she flatter me with words as a holy man, deceitfully praising my self-control through her words in the presence of her husband, but 2 when we were alone she sought to seduce me. •Publicly she honored me for my self-control, while privately she said to me, 'Have no fear of my husband, for he is convinced of your chastity so that even if someone were to tell him about you, 3 he would not believe it.' •During all these affairs I stretched out on the ground 4 praying God to rescue me from her treachery. •When she achieved nothing by means of it, she began to approach me for instruction, so that she might learn the 5 Word of God. •And she kept saying to me, 'If you want me to abandon the idols, have intercourse with me, and I shall persuade my husband to put away the idols, 6 and we shall live in the presence of your Lord.' •But I kept telling her that the Lord did not want worshipers who come by means of uncleanness, nor would he be pleased with adulterers, but with those who were pure in heart and undefiled 7.8 in speech. •She was consumed with jealousy, wanting to fulfill her desire. •But I devoted myself the more to fasting and prayer that the Lord might rescue me from her.

1 5 "Again on another occasion she said to me, 'If you do not want to commit
 2 adultery, I shall kill my husband by a drug and take you as my husband.' •When I heard this, I tore my clothing and said to her, 'Woman, show reverence to God; do not commit this wicked deed, lest you be utterly destroyed. For you should 3 know that I shall make it known to all that this is your scheme.' •Filled with fear, 4 she ordered me not to disclose her plan. •Then she withdrew, but kept trying to entice me with gifts and every manner of pleasurable things.

1.2 6 "Later she sent me food mixed with enchantments. •When the eunuch who was carrying it arrived, I looked up and saw a frightening man who offered me a sword 3 along with a bowl. So I perceived it was a trick to lead me astray.^a •When he departed, I wept; I tasted neither one item nor the other of the food he brought.
 4 A day later she came to me and said, when she recognized the food, 'Why didn't 5 you eat the food?' •And I said to her, 'Because you filled it with a deadly enchantment. How can you say, "I do not go near the idols, but only to the Lord."' 6 Now then understand that the God of my father revealed to me through an angel^b your wickedness, but I have kept it for this reason: to shame you if somehow by 7 seeing it you might repent. •In order for you to learn that the evil of the irreligious will not triumph over those who exercise self-control in their worship of God, I will take this and eat it in your presence.' When I had said that, I prayed aloud,

6 a. God's miraculous preservation of his servant from the harmful effects of drugs or poison is a recurrent theme in the biblical tradition, as in Elisha's deliverance in 2Kgs 4:38-41 or in Paul's immunity to the viper in Acts 28:1-6. Cf. the additional ending to Mark (Mk 16:18).

b. Abraham's "angel" in Gen 16:7 and 22:15-18 is a circumlocution for Yahweh himself, but here the angel is a messenger or intermediary, as in TLevi.

8 'May the God of my fathers and the angel of Abraham be with me.' •And I ate. When she saw this, she fell upon her face at my feet weeping. I raised her up and warned her, and she agreed with me that she should no longer commit this impiety.

1 7 "But her heart was still inclined to evil and she turned over in her mind how she might entrap me. Shortly she was groaning and depressed, even though she was not sick. •When her husband saw her, he said to her, 'Why are you so downcast?' She responded to him, 'I am suffering from a pain in my heart, and groans of my spirit have taken hold of me.' •He tried to cure her with words. Then she seized the occasion and came running in to me, while her husband was still outside, and said to me, 'I shall hang myself, or hurl myself over the precipice if you do not have intercourse with me.' •Since I perceived that the spirit of Beliar was troubling her, I prayed to the Lord, but I said to her, 'Why, wretched female, are you troubled and disturbed, blinded by sin? Remember that if you kill yourself, Astetha, your husband's concubine, who is filled with envy of you, will beat your children; thus you will destroy your memory from the earth.' •And she said, 'See, then, you do love me. That is enough. Only keep contending for my life and that of my children, and I shall cling to my expectation of gaining my desire.' •She did not understand that I spoke in this way for the Lord's sake and not for hers. 8 For if anyone is subjected to the passion of desire and is enslaved by it, as she was, even when he hears something good bearing on that passion he receives it as aiding his wicked desire.

1 8 "I tell you, my children, it was about the sixth hour when she left me. Bending my knees before the Lord, I prayed a whole day and a whole night. Toward dawn I arose, crying and begging deliverance from her. •Finally, she grasped my clothing, Gen 39:12-20 determined to force me into having intercourse with her. •When I saw, therefore, that in her madness she had seized my garment, I shook loose and left it and fled naked. •She held on to it, and brought false accusation against me. Her husband came and threw me in prison in his own house; then the next day he whipped me and sent me to the Pharaoh's prison. •When I was in fetters, the Egyptian woman was overtaken with grief. She came and heard the report how I gave thanks to the Lord and sang praise in the house of darkness,^a and how I rejoiced with cheerful voice, glorifying my God, because through her trumped-up charge I was set free from this Egyptian woman.

1 9 "Many times she sent messages to me saying, 'Acquiesce in fulfilling my desire, and I will release you from the fetters and liberate you from the darkness.' •Not even in my mind did I yield to her, for God loves more the one who is faithful in self-control in a dark cistern than the one who in royal chambers feasts on delicacies with excess. •If a man strives for self-control and at the same time desires glory—and the Most High knows that it is appropriate for him—he brings it about for him, even as he did for me. •How often, as though she were ill, she came down at odd hours and listened to my voice as I prayed! When I was aware of her groanings, I fell silent. •For when I had been with her in her house, she would bare her arms and thighs so that I might lie with her. For she was wholly beautiful and splendidly decked out to entice me, but the Lord protected me from her manipulations.

1 10 "So you see, my children, how great are the things that patience and prayer with fasting accomplish. •You also, if you pursue self-control and purity with patience and prayer with fasting in humility of heart, the Lord will dwell among you, because he loves self-control. •And where the Most High dwells, even if envy befall someone, or slavery or false accusation, the Lord who dwells with him on account of his self-control not only will rescue him from these evils, but will 4 exalt him and glorify him as he did for me. •For these problems beset all mankind

^a 8 a. The praise of God sounding forth from prison appears in the story of Daniel in the lion's den (Dan 6) as well as in Acts 16:25–34.

 5 either in deed or word or thought. •For my brothers know how much my father loved me, yet I was not puffed up in my thoughts. Even while I was a child I had 6 the fear of God in my heart, for I understood that all things pass away. •I did not arouse myself with evil design, but honored my brothers, and out of regard for them even when they sold me I was silent rather than tell the Ishmaelites that I was the son of Jacob, a great and righteous man.

11 “You, therefore, my children, in every act keep the fear of God before your eyes and honor your brothers. For everyone who does the Law of the Lord will 2 be loved by him. •As I was going with the Ishmaelites, they kept asking me, ‘Are you a slave?’ And I replied, ‘I am a slave out of a household,’ so as not to disgrace 3 my brothers. •The greatest of them said to me, ‘You are not a slave; even your 4 appearance discloses that.’ But I told them that I was a slave. •As we were reaching Egypt they began to squabble over me as to which of them would put up the money
 5 and take me. •Accordingly it seemed good to all of them that I should be left in Egypt with a trader handling their trading post until they returned bringing their 6 merchandise. •The Lord granted me favor in the eyes of the trader and he entrusted 7 me with his household. •And God blessed him by my hand, and he prospered in gold and silver and in business. And I was with him three months.

12 “At that time the Memphian woman, Pentephris’ wife, came down in a palanquin with great splendor, because she had heard about me from one of her 2 eunuchs. •She said to her husband that through^a a certain young Hebrew the trader had become rich; they say that he surely stole him out of the land of Canaan.
 3 Now, then, work justice concerning him; take the young man to your household, and the God of the Hebrews will bless you, because grace from heaven is with him.

13 “Pentephris believed her words, ordered the trader to come, and said to him, ‘What is this I hear about you, that you steal persons from the land of Canaan and 2 sell them as slaves?’ •The trader fell at his feet and besought him saying, ‘I pray 3 you, my lord, I do not know what you are saying.’ •Pentephris said to him, ‘Where is this Hebrew from, then?’ And he said, ‘The Ishmaelites left him with me until 4 they return.’ •But he did not believe the trader and ordered that he be stripped and 5 beaten. •But since he persisted in his statements, Pentephris said, ‘Bring in the young man.’ When I entered I prostrated myself before Pentephris, for he was 6 third in rank among Pharaoh’s officers. •And taking me aside from the trader he 7 said to me, ‘Are you a slave or a freeman?’ •I said to him, ‘A slave.’ He said,
 8 ‘Of whom?’ I replied, ‘Of the Ishmaelites.’ •He said, ‘How did you become a 9 slave?’ And I said, ‘They bought me out of the land of Canaan.’ •But he said to me, ‘You are really lying.’ And immediately he ordered that I also be stripped and whipped.

14 “The Memphian woman was watching through the doors as they beat me, for her residence was nearby. So she sent a message to him. ‘Your sentence is unjust, because you have punished as a wrongdoer someone who, though a freeman, was 2 stolen.’ •But since I did not change my statement while they were beating me, he ordered me to be imprisoned ‘until,’ he said, ‘the masters of the servant boy 3 arrive.’ •But the woman said to her husband, ‘Why do you detain in bonds this 4 young man who, though a captive, is well-born? •Rather he should be set free and attended to by servants.’ She wanted to see me by reason of her sinful passion, 12 a. Lit. “by the hand(s) of.”

ors good intentions. The ethical outlook resembles that enjoined in the Dead Sea community, according to 1QS 10.17f.

17 a. The ground of harmony among brothers is the concealment of the failures of others. God hon-

5 but I was ignorant of all these things. •He said to her, 'It is not proper for Egyptians to take away what belongs to others before the evidence has been presented.' He said this concerning the trader, but the young man he kept incarcerated.

1 15 "Twenty-four days later the Ishmaelites came; they had heard that Jacob, my
2 father, was mourning greatly over me, and they came and told me. •Why did you
3 tell us that you were a slave? Look, we now know that you are the son of a great
4 man in the land of Canaan, and that your father is mourning for you in sackcloth
5 and ashes.' •When I heard this my inner being was dissolved and my heart melted,
6 and I wanted to weep very much, but I restrained myself so as not to bring disgrace 7 on my brothers. So I said to them, 'I know nothing, I am a slave.' •Then they 8 conferred about selling me so that I might not be discovered in bondage to them, 9 for they feared my father, that he might come and avenge himself powerfully 10 against them. They had heard that he was a great person in the sight of God and 11 men. •Then the trader said to them, 'Release me from Pentephris' judgment.' So 12 they came and requested of me, 'Say that you were purchased by us with money, 13 and then he will release us from responsibility.'

1 16 "The Memphian woman said to her husband, 'Buy the young man, for I hear
2 it said that they are selling him.' •Immediately she sent a eunuch to the Ishmaelites,
3 requesting them to sell me. •But the eunuch was not willing to buy me and came 4 away after testing them out. He told his mistress that they were asking a great deal
5 of money for the boy. •She sent the eunuch back again and told him, 'Even if they 6 are asking two minas; offer it. Do not be sparing of the gold; just buy the boy and 7 bring him to me.' •The eunuch went and gave them eighty pieces of gold and took 8 me away, but he told the Egyptian woman he had paid a hundred. Although I 9 knew the facts, I kept quiet in order not to bring the eunuch under disgrace.

1 17 "So you see, my children, how many things I endured in order not to bring
2 my brothers into disgrace.^a •You, therefore, love one another and in patient
3 endurance conceal one another's shortcomings. •God is delighted by harmony 4 among brothers and by the intention of a kind heart that takes pleasure in goodness.
5 When my brothers came to Egypt they learned that I had returned their money
6 to them, that I did not scorn them, and that I sought to console them. •After the 7 death of Jacob, my father, I loved them beyond measure, and everything he had 8 wanted for them I did abundantly in their behalf. •I did not permit them to be 9 troubled by the slightest matter, and everything I had under my control I gave to 10 them. •Their sons were mine, and mine were as their servants; their life was as 11 my life, and every pain of theirs was my pain; every ailment of theirs was my 12 sickness; their wish was my wish. •I did not exalt myself above them arrogantly 13 because of my worldly position of glory, but I was among them as one of the least.

Gen 42:25-35

Gen 50:19-21

Lk 22:27

1 18 "If you live in accord with the Lord's commands, God will exalt you with 2 good things forever.^a •And if anyone wishes to do you harm, you should pray for 3 him, along with doing good, and you will be rescued by the Lord from every evil.
4 Indeed you can see that on account of my humility^b and patient endurance I took 5 to myself a wife, the daughter of the priest of Heliopolis; a hundred talents of gold
6 were given to me along with her, and my Lord caused them to be my servants.
7 And he also gave me mature beauty, more than those of mature beauty in Israel;
8 he preserved me until old age with strength and beauty. In every way I was like 9 Jacob.

18 a. Here ethical motivation is chiefly instrumental: Obedience to the Law guarantees that God will exalt the obedient one.

b. The reader is not impressed in this portrait with Joseph's humility in spite of his claim to possess it. His self-praise for possessing "mature beauty" (18:4) does not sound strikingly humble.

1,2 19 "Listen, my children, concerning the dream that I saw. •Twelve stags were grazing at a certain place; nine were scattered over the whole earth, and likewise also the three.^a ^bAnd as I looked, the three stags became three lambs; they cried out to the Lord, and the Lord led them into a fertile, well-watered place. He led them out of darkness into light. •And there they cried out to the Lord until the nine stags were gathered to him, and they all became like twelve sheep. After a short time they multiplied and became many herds. •Later as I was looking, twelve bulls were nursing from one cow, who furnished a sea of milk. •The twelve herds and the innumerable herds drank from it. And the horns of the fourth bull ascended to heaven and became as a rampart for the herds. And from between the two horns there sprouted forth yet another horn. •And I saw a heifer which surrounded them twelve times and which became to perfection an aide to the bulls.

A

3

4

5

6

7

8 And I saw that a virgin was born from Judah, wearing a linen stole; and from her was born a spotless lamb. At his left there was something like a lion, and all the wild animals rushed against him, but the lamb conquered them, and destroyed them, trampling them underfoot.

^cAnd I saw in the midst of the horns a certain virgin wearing a multicolored stole; from her came forth a lamb. Rushing from the left were all sorts of wild animals and reptiles, and the lamb conquered them.

9 And the angels and mankind and all the earth rejoiced over him.

Because of him the bull rejoiced and the cow and the stags were also glad with them.

10 These things will take place in the last days.

These things must take place in their appropriate time.

11 You, therefore, my children, keep the Lord's commandments; honor Levi and Judah, because from their seed will arise the Lamb of God who will take away the sin of the world, and will save all the nations, as well as Israel.

And you, my children, honor Levi and Judah, because from them shall arise the salvation of Israel.

19 a. The division of the twelve tribes into nine and three, rather than the normal biblical ten and two (1Kgs 12:21), is paralleled in 1En 89:72 and IQM 1:2, where the sons of Levi, Judah, and Benjamin receive special mention.

b. 19:3-7 is preserved only in Arm.; the Arm. version of 19:8-12 differs significantly from the Gk. as well. Since an important segment is available only in the Arm. version, this passage is textually problematic. 19:8-12 is preserved in different textual forms, and evidence of Christian interpolation seems clear. Everything is compatible with the dyarchic eschatological expectations of the T12P until vs. 11b is reached; then follows characteristically Christian terminology.

c. The right-hand column continues the Arm. text; the left column is based on c, β. This ch. contains some of the most extended apocalyptic material in all the T12P. The animals may represent nations, but more likely they are individual rulers or leaders, as in the case with the "horns" of Dan 7:8. Possibly Maccabean rulers are intended, but sectarian leaders and their opponents could as well be depicted in this cryptic fashion.

- 12 For his kingdom is an everlasting kingdom which will not pass away. But my kingdom will come to an end among you, like a guard^d in an orchard who disappears at the end of the summer.
- For my kingdom shall have an end among you, like an orchard guard who disappears after the summer.

- 1 20 "For I know that after my death the Egyptians will oppress you, but God will work vengeance on your behalf, and will lead you into the promises made to your 2 fathers. •You shall carry my bones along with you, for when you are taking my bones up there, the Lord will be with you in the light, while Beliar will be with 3 the Egyptians in the dark. •Take Asenath, your mother, and bury her by the hippodrome, near Rachel, your grandmother."^a Gen 50:25
Ex 13:19
- 4 And when he had said this he stretched out his feet and fell into a beautiful
5,6 sleep. •And all Israel and all Egypt mourned with great lamentation. •And at the departure of the sons of Israel from Egypt, they took along Joseph's bones and buried him in Hebron with his fathers. The years of his life were one hundred ten.

The Testament of Benjamin, the twelfth son of Jacob and Rachel

- 1 1 A copy of the words of Benjamin which he testified to his sons, having lived
2 one hundred twenty-five years. •He kissed them and said, "Just as Isaac was born
3 to Abraham in his old age, so I was born to Jacob. •Since Rachel, my mother, died Gen 35:16-20
4 as she was bearing me, I had no milk from her, but was nursed instead by Bilhah,
5 her maid servant. •For after Rachel bore Joseph she was sterile for twelve years;
6 she prayed to the Lord, with fasting, •and conceived and gave birth to me. My father loved Rachel exceedingly, and prayed that he might see two sons born from 7 her. •For this reason I was called Benjamin, that is 'son of days.'^a
- 1 2 "When I came to Joseph in Egypt and my brother recognized me, he said,
2 'What did they say to my father when they sold me?' •And I replied to him, 'They Gen 37:31
3 spattered your shirt with blood and sent it to him and said, "Do you know if this 4 shirt belongs to your son?"' •And (Joseph) said to me, 'Yes, brother. When they 5 stripped off my shirt and gave me to the Ishmaelites, they gave me a loincloth,
6 beat me, and told me to run. •One of them who had whipped me was met by a 7 lion and it ate him. •So his partners were terrified and kept me under a looser rein.'
- 1 3 "Now, my children, love the Lord God of heaven and earth; keep his com-
2 mandments; pattern your life after the good and pious man Joseph. •Let your 3 thoughts incline to the good, as you know to be so with me, because he who has 4 the right set of mind sees everything rightly. •Fear the Lord and love your neighbor.
5 Even if the spirits of Beliar seek to derange you with all sorts of wicked oppression,
6 they will not dominate you, any more than they dominated Joseph, my brother.
7 How many men wanted to destroy him, and God looked out for him! For the 8 person who fears God and loves his neighbor cannot be plagued by the spirit of 9 Beliar^a since he is sheltered by the fear of God. •Neither man's schemes nor those

d. The guard in the orchard recalls Isa 1:8; 5:2; Mk 12:1, where a tower or booth serves to guard the Lord's vineyard or grove. Apparently what is contrasted here is the temporary nature of Joseph's rule and the eternal duration of God's kingdom in the end-time.

20 a. According to Gen 48:7, Rachel was buried on the way to Ephrath, which in LXX = Hippodromos. The mention of the hippodrome here points to a culturally hellenistic provenance for T12P.

1 a. This is one of a series of etymologies connected with Benjamin's name: "Son of days" = "son of old age" (?); see Gen 44:20, "son of old age"; Gen 35:18, "son of sorrow," "son of [my] right hand."

of animals can prevail over him, for he is aided in living by this: by the love which he has toward his neighbor. •Joseph also urged our father to pray for his brothers, that the Lord would not hold them accountable for their sin which they so wickedly committed against him. •And Jacob cried out, 'O noble child, you have crushed the inner feelings of Jacob, your father.' He embraced him and kept kissing him for two hours, saying,^b

8 'Through you will be fulfilled the heavenly prophecy concerning the Lamb of God, the Savior of the world, because the unspotted one will be betrayed by lawless men, and the sinless one will die for impious men by the blood of the covenant for the salvation of the gentiles and of Israel and the destruction of Beliar and his servants.'

'In you will be fulfilled the heavenly prophecy which says that the spotless one will be defiled by lawless men and the sinless one will die for the sake of impious men.'

1 4 "See then, my children, what is the goal of the good man. Be imitators of him in his goodness because of his compassion, in order that you may wear crowns of glory.^a •For a good man does not have a blind eye, but he is merciful to all, even though they may be sinners. •And even if persons plot against him for evil ends, by doing good this man conquers evil, being watched over by God. He loves those who wrong him as he loves his own life. •If anyone glorifies himself, he holds no envy. If anyone becomes rich, he is not jealous. If anyone is brave, he praises him. He loves the moderate person; he shows mercy to the impoverished; to the ill he shows compassion; he fears God. •He loves the person who has the gift of a good spirit as he loves his own life.

1 5 "If your mind is set toward good,^a even evil men will be at peace with you; the dissolute will respect you and will turn back to the good. The greedy will not only abstain from their passion but will give to the oppressed the things which they covetously hold. •If you continue to do good, even the unclean spirits will flee from you and wild animals will fear you. •For where someone has within himself respect for good works and has light in the understanding, darkness will slink away from that person. •For if anyone wantonly attacks a pious man, he repents, since the pious man shows mercy to the one who abused him, and maintains silence. And if anyone betrays a righteous man, the righteous man prays. Even though for a brief time he may be humbled, later he will appear far more illustrious, as happened with Joseph, my brother.

1 6 "The deliberations of the good man are not in the control of the deceitful spirit, Beliar, for the angel of peace guides his life.^a •For he does not look with passionate longing at corruptible things, nor does he accumulate wealth out of love for pleasure. •He does not find delight in pleasure, nor does he grieve his neighbor, nor does he stuff himself with delicacies, nor is he led astray by visual excitement: The Lord is his lot. •The good set of mind does not receive glory or dishonor from men, nor does it know deceit, or lying, or conflict, or abuse. For the Lord dwells

^TLevi 5:6
^{TDan} 6:5
^TAsh 6:6

3 a. On Beliar, see TRew 2:1, n.

b. On the left, c. β text; on the right, the Arm. The major text traditions include a Christian interpolation at this point; one group of MSS refers explicitly to "Lamb of God" (Jn 1:29). For the destruction of Beliar in the end-time, see Lk 10:18; Rev 12:9; 20:2.

4 a. Crowns of glory are a familiar image in Christian usage: 1Pet 5:4; 1Cor 9:25; 2Tim 4:8; Jas 1:12; Rev 2:10.

5 a. Here, in contrast to other sections of T12P where sin is defeated only by divine judgment or by expulsion of Beliar, there is a wholly optimistic view that good deeds will overcome the evil inclination of others.

6 a. Extols the hellenistic virtue of integrity, although it incorporates a dualistic view of mankind; the unwary are subject to the control of Beliar.

in him, illumines his life, and he rejoices in everything at every appropriate time.

- 5 The good set of mind does not talk from both sides of its mouth: praises and curses, abuse and honor, calm and strife, hypocrisy and truth, poverty and wealth,
6 but it has one disposition, uncontaminated and pure, toward all men. •There is no duplicity in its perception or its hearing. Whatever it does, or speaks, or perceives, 7 it knows that the Lord is watching over its life, •for he cleanses his mind in order that he will not be suspected of wrongdoing either by men or by God. The works of Beliar are twofold, and have in them no integrity.

- 1 7 “So I tell you, my children, flee from the evil of Beliar, because he offers a 2 sword to those who obey him. •And the sword is the mother of the seven evils;^a it receives them through Beliar: The first is moral corruption, the second is 3 destruction, the third is oppression, the fourth is captivity, the fifth is want, the sixth is turmoil, the seventh is desolation. •It is for this reason that Cain was handed 4 over by God for seven punishments, for in every hundredth year the Lord brought upon him one plague. •When he was two hundred years old suffering began and in his nine hundredth year he was deprived of life. For he was condemned on 5 account of Abel his brother as a result of all his evil deeds, but Lamech was condemned by seventy times seven.^b •Until eternity those who are like Cain in their moral corruption and hatred of brother shall be punished with a similar judgment.

Gen 4:15

Gen 4:24

- 1,2 8 “But you, my children, run from evil, corruption, and hatred of brothers; •cling to goodness and love. For the person with a mind that is pure with love does not 3 look on a woman for the purpose of having sexual relations. •He has no pollution in his heart, because upon him is resting the spirit of God. For just as the sun is unpolluted, though it touches dung and slime, but dries up both and drives off the bad odor, so also the pure mind, though involved with the corruptions of earth, edifies instead and is not itself corrupted.

- 1 9 “From the words of Enoch the Righteous^a I tell you that you will be sexually promiscuous like the promiscuity of the Sodomites and will perish, with few 2 exceptions. You shall resume your actions with loose women, and the kingdom of the Lord will not be among you, for he will take it away forthwith. •But in your allotted place will be the temple of God, and the latter temple will exceed the former in glory. The twelve tribes shall be gathered there and all the nations, until such time as the Most High shall send forth his salvation through the ministration 3 of the unique prophet.^b •[He shall enter the first temple, and there the Lord will be abused and will be raised up on wood. And the temple curtain shall be torn, and the spirit of God will move on to all the nations as a fire is poured out. And he shall ascend from Hades and shall pass on from earth to heaven. I understand how humble he will be on the earth, and how splendid in heaven.]^c

Hag 2:9

TLLevi 10:3

- 1 10 “When Joseph was in Egypt I earnestly desired to see his appearance and the form of his face, and through my father Jacob’s prayers I saw him, while I was awake during the day, just as he was, his whole appearance.”

7 a. TBenj has its own version of the seven deadly sins, according to which stress falls on sexual indulgence.

b. Lamech’s seventy times seven condemnation (Gen 4:24) contrasts precisely with Mt 18:22, where forgiveness is to be extended by an identical formula.

9 a. Not found in extant Enochic material.

b. The expectation of the eschatological prophet builds on Deut 18:15 and figures importantly at Qumran: IQS 9.10–11; IQS^a 2.11–12. Possibly the star, mentioned in CD 7.15–20 (which is based on Num 24:17) is the One Who Teaches Rightly (IQS

1.11), forerunner of the unique prophet of the end-time. The prophet is directly mentioned in PssJosh 5–8 (= 4QTestim) in a passage which leads into a declaration about the star. The text from Num 24 is quoted in Stephen’s sermon (Acts 7:37), where it is taken to refer to Jesus as the eschatological prophet.

c. Perhaps the most explicit of all the Christian interpolations. The tearing of the Temple veil is mentioned in TLLevi 10:3 and may be a “prediction” after the event of Jerusalem’s fall in A.D. 70, or it could be an authentic predictive note that was exploited by Christians and expanded into the present extended interpolation.

2 After he had spoken these things to them he said, "You know then, my children, 3 that I am dying. Do the truth, each of you to his neighbor; •keep the Law of the 4 Lord and his commandments, •for I leave you these things instead of an inheritance.

Give them, then, to your children for an eternal possession; this is what Abraham, 5 Isaac, and Jacob did. •They gave us all these things as an inheritance, saying,
'Keep God's commandments until the Lord reveals his salvation to all the nations.'

TJud 25:4

6 And then you will see Enoch and Seth and Abraham and Isaac and Jacob being 7 raised up at the right hand in great joy.^a •Then shall we also be raised, each of us over our tribe, and we shall prostrate ourselves before the heavenly king.

Mt 19:28-30

Dan 12:2

1Cor 15:51

8 Then all shall be changed, some destined for glory, others for dishonor, for the 9 Lord first judges Israel for the wrong she has committed •and then he shall do the 10 same for all the nations. •Then he shall judge Israel by the chosen gentiles as he tested Esau by the Midianites who loved their brothers. You, therefore, my 11 children, may your lot come to be with those who fear the Lord. •Therefore, my children, if you live in holiness, in accord with the Lord's commands, you shall again dwell with me in hope; all Israel will be gathered to the Lord.

Jer 31:31

Rom 11:26

1 11 "And I shall no longer be called a rapacious wolf on account of your rapine, 2 but 'the Lord's worker' providing food for those who do good works. •And in later times there shall rise up the beloved of the Lord, from the lineage of Judah and Levi, one who does his good pleasure by his mouth, enlightening all the nations with new knowledge. The light of knowledge will mount up in Israel for her salvation, seizing them like a wolf coming upon them, and gathering the gentiles.

Gen 49:27

Deut 33:12

Isa 42:1

3 Until the consummation of the ages he shall be in the congregations of the gentiles
4 and among the rulers, like a musical air in the mouths of all. •He shall be written of in sacred books, both his work and his word. And he shall be God's Chosen

5 One forever. •He shall range widely among them, like my father, Jacob, saying,
'He shall fill up what was lacking of your tribe.' "

1 12 "And when he had finished his statements he said, "I command you, my children, carry my bones up out of Egypt; bury me in Hebron near my fathers."

2 Benjamin died last of all in his one hundred twenty-fifth year at a ripe old age, 3 and they placed him in a coffin. •And in the ninety-first year after the departure of the sons of Israel for Egypt, they and their brothers took up the bones of their fathers secretly, because of the war with Canaan, and buried them in Hebron by 4 the feet of their fathers. •Then they returned from the land of Canaan and resided in Egypt until the day of the departure from Egypt.

¹⁰ a. A doctrine of the resurrection as in TJud 25:4; but here, as in Dan 12:2, there is the expectation that both the just and the unjust will be raised in the last day. As the final doctrinal statement, the passage serves as a fitting conclusion to the T12P, with only the stylized account of Benjamin's death as the actual end of the book.

TESTAMENT OF JOB

(First Century B.C.–First Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY R. P. SPITTLER

The Testament of Job resembles the form and purpose of the better-known Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs. It is slightly shorter than Paul's Letter to the Romans, and commends the virtue of endurance (or patience: hypomonē) based on the biblical character, Job. It is not equal to the literary and philosophic grandeur of the canonical book of Job but is prosaic and at times humorous.

A Prologue (ch. 1) gives the title and setting. An Epilogue (chs. 51–53) describes Job's death, soul ascent, and burial. The main body of the Testament (chs. 2–50) falls into four literary divisions: Job relates in turn to a revealing angel (chs. 2–5), to Satan (chs. 6–27), to the three kings (chs. 28–45), and to his three daughters (chs. 46–50). The bulk of the testament (1:4–45:4), embracing the first three of the four sections, is Job's first-person account of the cause and consequences of his sickness.

At the end of his life, the patriarch (identified as Jobab, a descendant of Esau, before God named him Job) gathers his children for last words of counsel and for distribution of his estate (ch. 1). Job's perplexity over the idolatry he sees (chs. 2f.) occasions the appearance of an angel, who promises catastrophe yet renown (ch. 4) should Job persist in his resolve to destroy the idol's shrine. He does (ch. 5).

Satan's consequent attack on Job (chs. 6–27) begins subtly with his disguise as a beggar (chs. 6–8) seeking to take advantage of Job's generosity and piety, which Job recounts at length (chs. 9–15). But the former charities are displaced by tragic losses (chs. 16–26) in property, family, and health. Nevertheless, Job endures nobly and when Satan finally confronts him directly, it is to surrender before the athlete of endurance (ch. 27).

The three kings appear, astonished at the extent of Job's calamities (chs. 28–30): Eliphaz laments Job's losses (chs. 31–34). Baldad tests his sanity (35:1–38:5). Sophar offers their royal physicians (38:6–8). As a final blow, Job's grieving wife, Sitis, dies and is buried (chs. 39f.). Finally, Elihu speaks (ch. 41). The kings are forgiven by Job's intercession (ch. 42), while Elihu is cursed (ch. 43). Job recovers (ch. 44), gives final counsels, and divides the inheritance among his seven sons (ch. 45).

When the three daughters inquire about their share of the inheritance, Job calls for the triple-stranded phylactery by which he was cured when at God's direction he girded himself (ch. 46). As one of the magical cords is given to each of the daughters in turn, they lose interest in earthly concerns and begin to speak ecstatically in the language of angels (chs. 47–50), yielding hymns said to have been preserved by Nereus, Job's brother (ch. 51) and blessing God in their distinctive dialects as the soul of Job is carried off in a heavenly chariot (ch. 52). Finally (ch. 53), Job's body is buried with a proper lament.

Text

The Testament of Job survives in four Greek manuscripts, in an Old Church Slavonic version, and in an incomplete Coptic version. No Semitic witnesses to the text exist. Modern translations have appeared in French,¹ Serbo-Croatian (in part),² English,³ German,⁴ and modern Hebrew.⁵

- P— Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale, fonds grec 2658, complete; dated in the eleventh century. It was edited by M. R. James⁶ and S. Brock.⁷ As a whole, P is the best manuscript, although traces of Christian intrusions appear (Brock). A second manuscript in the same library, fonds grec 938, is a sixteenth-century copy of P.
- S— Messina, Sicily, San Salvatore 29, complete; dated A.D. 1307/1308. It was edited by A. Mancini⁸ and (with V) by R. Kraft.⁹ S apparently represents (with V?) a separate textual tradition from P.
- V— Rome, Vatican, Greek 1238, complete; a palimpsest manuscript dated A.D. 1195, with earlier writing in the same century. This manuscript restyles textual difficulties into smooth paraphrases, shows some evidence of Christian terminology, harmonizes chronological references, and frequently abbreviates. V is accessible now in the edition of Brock; it is the first manuscript published in modern times.¹⁰
- Slav— An Old Church Slavonic version was published by G. Polívka¹¹ based on a manuscript known once to have been owned by P. J. Šafarik (1795–1861) and apparently located in Prague. Two other manuscripts also were consulted by Polívka: Belgrade National Library, no. 149 (incomplete), and the Moscow Rumjancov Museum, no. 1472.
- Coptic—Papyrus Cologne 3221, incomplete and unevenly preserved. It is now being edited by M. Weber of the Institute for Antiquity at the University of Cologne. Preliminary details¹² show the Coptic text (Sahidic dialect, with Bohairic influence) differs from the Greek. This oldest (A.D. 5th cent.) of witnesses to the text of the Testament of Job will aid the production of a critical text.

Original language

Earlier modern scholars (Kohler, James, Riessler) held the work to have been written originally in Hebrew, even though no manuscript evidence of a Semitic origin exists. Strongest considerations supporting the possibility of a Hebrew original arise from hymnic portions of the text, where such phrases as “while crowns lead the way with praises” (43:14) may reflect Hebraisms.

An Aramaic origin was argued by C. C. Torrey,¹³ on alleged linguistic grounds. But his arguments have convinced few modern scholars.¹⁴

Greek is most likely the language in which the Testament of Job was originally composed. No Semitic versions or manuscripts are known. Moreover, the close, though complicated, linguistic relation of the Testament to the Septuagint Book of Job provides the strongest argument in favor of original composition in Greek.

¹ J. Migne, Dictionnaire des apocryphes (Troisième et dernière encyclopédie théologique, t. 24; Paris, 1858) vol. 2, cols. 401–20; M. Philonenko, “Le Testament de Job, Introduction, traduction et notes,” Sem 18 (1968) 1–75.

² S. Novaković, “Apocrična priča o Jovu,” Starine 10 (1878) 157–70. This work translates into Serbo-Croatian about half of TJob from Migne’s earlier French translation, making up what was lacking in the one Old Church Slavonic MS known to the author.

³ K. Kohler, “The Testament of Job,” in G. Kohut, ed., Semitic Studies in Memory of Rev. Dr. Alexander Kohut, pp. 264–338; R. Spittler, The Testament of Job: Introduction, Translation, and Notes, Harvard University Ph.D. (1971) pp. 75–130; R. Kraft et al., eds., The Testament of Job According to the SV Text.

⁴ P. Riessler, Altjüdisches Schriftum ausserhalb der Bibel übersetzt und erklärt (Augsburg, 1928) pp. 1104–34, 1333f.; B. Schaller, “Das Testament Hiobs,” in W. Kümmel et al., eds., JSHRZ (Gütersloh, 1979) vol. 3, pt. 3, pp. 325–74. [We are grateful to Schaller for sending us page proofs —J.H.C.]

⁵ A. Kahana, ha-Sefarim ha-Hitsonim (Tel Aviv, 1936/37¹, 1956²) vol. 1, pp. 515–38; A. Hartom, ha-Sefarim ha-Hitsonim (Tel Aviv, 1965) vol. 6, pp. 1–42.

⁶ M. R. James, Apocrypha Anecdota, 2nd Series, pp. lxxii–cii, 104–37.

⁷ S. Brock, Testamentum Iobi.

⁸ A. Mancini, “Per la critica del ‘Testamentum Job,’” Rendiconti della Reale Accademia dei Lincei, Classe di Scienze Morali, Storiche e Filologiche, Serie Quinta 20 (1911) 479–502.

⁹ Kraft et al., Testament of Job.

¹⁰ A. Mai, Scriptorum veterum nova collectio e Vaticanis codicibus, vol. 7, cols. 180–91.

¹¹ G. Polívka, “Apokrifna priča o Jovu,” Starine 24 (1891) 135–55.

¹² Found in M. Philonenko, Sem 18 (1968) 9, 61–63.

¹³ C. C. Torrey, The Apocryphal Literature (New Haven, 1945) p. 143.

¹⁴ Earlier, an Aram. origin was affirmed by R. Pfeiffer, History of New Testament Times (New York, 1941) p. 70.

Relation to the Septuagint

The Septuagint Book of Job is 20 percent shorter than the underlying Masoretic text; nevertheless, the Greek at points considerably expands the Hebrew version. Especially is this true of the speech of Job's wife: Two sentences appear in the Hebrew text ("Do you hold fast your integrity? Curse God and die." Job 2:9). These become a plaintive paragraph in the Septuagint, while the Testament of Job (24f.) gives Job's wife a name (Sitis) and embellishes her speech even more.

Similarly, the Septuagint differs from the Masoretic text at the end of the Book of Job: The Greek version closes with a paragraph about Job's homeland and his ancestors (Job 42:17b–e LXX). This longer Septuagint ending shows correspondences with the Testament of Job. It also embodies marked parallels to an Aristeas fragment preserved by Alexander Polyhistor (in Eusebius, PrEv 9.25.1–4).

The Testament of Job draws mainly from the narrative framework of the Septuagint Book of Job, which appears at Job 1–2; 42:7–17. But in addition, Job 29–31 (LXX) furnished Testament of Job 9–16 with numerous concepts and phrases by which to amplify Job's wealth, piety, and generosity. At times, merely a phrase of the Septuagint language is worked into the Testament (seven thousand sheep: Job 1:3 LXX; TJob 9:3). In a few instances, more complete Septuagint quotations appear.

Reliance of the testament on the Septuagint is clear also from the testament's agreement with Septuagint passages where there is no Hebrew equivalent (e.g. TJob 13:5). As yet unresolved is the complicated problem of the textual relations between the several Greek manuscripts of the Testament of Job and the textual growth of the Septuagint Book of Job.

The testament genre

The mere phrase "My son(s)," found already in short units of wisdom literature (e.g. Prov 5:1, 7), implies the essence of the testament (diathēkē): A wise aged (and usually dying) father imparts final words of ethical counsel to his attentive offspring. In the major biblical instance—the blessing of Jacob on his twelve sons (Gen 47:29–50:14)—specific elements characteristic of the later Jewish testaments already appear: (1) An ill father (48:1), (2) near death (47:29), (3) and on his bed (47:31), (4) calls his sons (49:1), (5) disposes of his goods (48:22), and (6) issues a forecast of events to come (49:1, et passim). The father (7) dies (49:33) and (8) a lamentation ensues (50:2–14). Each of these features appears in the Testament of Job.

J. Munck¹⁵ found a sufficient grouping of these features in late Jewish (e.g. Tob 14:3–11; 1En 91:1–19) as well as New Testament (Acts 20:17–38; 1Tim 4:1–16) literature to identify the "farewell address" as a widely used literary technique in which features of the testament genre show up in literature not in the testament form.

The notion of the term "testament" in the sense of a legal will, not to mention the derived notion of a spiritual legacy, was only possible as a hellenistic development. For the Hebrew language apparently has no specific word for "testament," even though inheritance laws flourished in Israel. The Hebrew term bryt refers to a covenant or a contract, not a will.

The first century B.C. and the first century A.D. were eminently the centuries of the testament. Some products of the genre of that era were absorbed into other works: The Testament of Moses, composed in the first century A.D., was absorbed into the Assumption of Moses. The Testament of Hezekiah, a Christian product, must have originated late in the first century A.D.; but since the second to fourth centuries A.D., it has been part of the Ascension of Isaiah (3:13b–4:18). In its Greek form, the Testament of Adam probably goes back to the environs of the first century A.D.

The Testament of Abraham is another first-century A.D. product. The fourth-century Christian document Constitutiones apostolorum (6.16.3) in its list of apocryphal works cites the "apocryphal books . . . of the three patriarchs," which presumably refers to the testaments of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who are elsewhere widely remembered together.

In the Testament of Orpheus appears a Jewish-hellenistic text that called on the pagan mystagogue as a witness to monotheism.

¹⁵ "Discours d'adieu dans le Nouveau Testament et dans la littérature biblique," in O. Cullmann and P. Menoud, eds., Aux sources de la tradition chrétienne (M. Goguel Festschrift) (Neuchâtel/Paris, 1950) pp. 155–70.

Subsequent Christian testaments display tendencies: The third-century Testament of Solomon was a guide to magical exorcistic rites. The Testamentum Domini (extant only in Syr.) reflects ecclesiastical interests of the fourth and fifth centuries.

The strong ethical note of the earlier Jewish testaments endured throughout the Middle Ages, when Jewish scholars wrote (nonpseudepigraphic) moral wills for their children. The earliest of these was the Orhot Hayyim ("Ways of Life"), written by Eliezer Ben Isaac Gershom around A.D. 1050. In his study Jewish Magic and Superstition, J. Trachtenberg¹⁶ made use of very late representatives of this genre, including the Testament of Judah the Pius and the Testament of Shabbetae Horowitz, dated in the sixteenth century A.D.

Development also characterized the testament genre; it obtained the sense of a will, which legally specified the testator's wishes regarding the disposition of his estate following death. Testamentum Platonis (in Diogenes Laertius 3.41–43) provides a first-century B.C. example. The same classical author preserves (among others) the will of Theophrastus (Diogenes Laertius 5.51–57). Wealthy persons could designate the establishment of memorial cults or institutions, resulting in such epigraphic remains as the Testamentum Galli, the Testamentum Epicuri, and the Testamentum Epictetae. Showing the possibilities of evolving literary elaboration of this form, the Testament of Diogenes (c. A.D. 200) is a summary of the philosopher's parting words inscribed on a wall for travelers to see. Similarly, the third- or fourth-century A.D. Testamentum Porcelli was said by Jerome to amuse schoolboys, since it was a "satiric parody" of a will contrived by a pig named Grunnius Corocotta prior to his slaughter.

But it is above all the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs with which the Testament of Job most readily aligns. As do these, the Testament of Job (1) opens with a deathbed scene; (2) celebrates a virtue; (3) offers moral exhortations; and (4) closes with the death, burial, and lamentation scene.

But the Testament of Job embodies distinctive modifications of the testament genre. It treats but one biblical character, who was not from the Torah but from the wisdom literature. Of the features identified as characteristic of the testament genre, the Testament of Job may, in comparison with the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, be said to be more haggadic, considerably less hortatory, and almost entirely devoid of any apocalyptic element.

It is fair to say that the biblical details have undergone considerably more haggadic embellishment in the Testament of Job than in the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, which nowhere equal the hagiographic fantasy apparent in the extensive magnification of Job's generosity (TJob 9–15).

Exhortation in the Testament of Job is almost limited to 45:1–3, which may have been an original end to an earlier form of the testament. The "two-ways"—the way of righteousness and the way of evil—motif does not appear. Overall, the Testament of Job is a far more artistic tale—a "novelized" testament, one might say—than the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs.

Traditional apocalyptic features in the Testament of Job show through only slightly, such as in the description of the splendid sashes Job bequeathed his daughters (TJob 46:7f.) or the appearance of the angel (TJob 3–5). There is no assumption to heaven (nor even seven or three heavens), no tour of celestial scenes with an angelic interpreter (the angel is not heard of again), and no foreboding promises of cosmic doom. There is, in the Testament of Job, no messianism (as in TLevi 18), no "Belial" nor any named angels, no sense of eschatological imminence, no concern for the end of the age, and no discontent with the present world. To the contrary, the praise of Job's philanthropy amounts to praise of social institutions. The Testament of Job does not indulge in portentous grotesque symbolism or in apocalyptic zoology.

Although it has been drawn up by one disinterested in the testament form, the Testament of Job more nearly retains testamentary elements than does, for example, the Testament of Abraham, the Testament of Isaac, or the Testament of Jacob. It clearly aligns more with the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs than with the legal or literary pagan "testaments" or the medieval Hebraic varieties.

¹⁶ Cleveland/New York, 1961.

Provenance, purpose, and date

The Testament of Job was almost certainly written in Greek, probably during the first century B.C. or A.D., and possibly among the Egyptian Jewish sect called the Therapeutae, described extensively by Philo in his tract Vita contemplativa.

Although Christian editing is possible, the work is essentially Jewish in character. It draws heavily from the Septuagint Book of Job, to which text the Testament of Job also may have contributed. Characteristic features of the text include Job's affirmation of the "upper world" (hypercosmos), concerns for proper burial, and attention to women. Some aspects of the Testament of Job resemble those found in the sectarian Qumran texts, but more singular interests appear in its use of magic and "merkabah mysticism" (Jewish mystical speculation focusing on God's chariot, mrkbh).

The earliest modern opinion on the Testament of Job was that of Cardinal Mai,¹⁷ who concluded that the work was produced by a Christian. James,¹⁸ although suggesting that it may have had a Semitic origin, claimed that in its present form the work stems from a second-century A.D. Christian, born a Jew, who put the Hebrew original into Greek and added his own material (TJob 46–53 and the poetic pieces at TJob 25, 32, 33, 43).

A decade after James, F. Spitta¹⁹ published an extensive study on the Testament of Job. He concluded that the testament is a piece of pre-Christian folk piety not attributable to the Essenes. He also argued that the tradition about Job lay behind the New Testament portrayal of Jesus as sufferer.

Similarly, D. Rahnenführer²⁰ views the Testament of Job as a pre-Christian, non-Essene text the purpose of which was to serve propagandistic missionary interests of hellenistic Judaism.

M. Delcor²¹ suggests that the invasion of Palestine by the Persian general Pacorus in 40 B.C. may lie behind the reference to Satan's disguise as the "king of the Persians" (TJob 17:2). But J. Collins²² tempers this proposal, noting that Persian kings were traditional enemies of Egyptian royalty. As the testament suggests a time of persecution, when the "patience" (or "endurance") it commends would be specially relevant, Collins proposes a first-century A.D. date as more likely. But the state of the evidence hardly permits any more precise dating than the first century B.C. or A.D.

About the same time as James, near the end of the last century, K. Kohler²³ described the Testament of Job as an Essene Midrash on the biblical Book of Job, possibly traceable to the Therapeutae.

More recently, M. Philonenko²⁴ re-evaluated Kohler's thesis in view of the Qumran finds. He concluded that the Egyptian Therapeutae are to be distinguished from the Qumran Essenes and that the former is a more likely source for the Testament of Job than the latter. While the Essenes were misogynists, the Therapeutae allowed women a significant role. Prayer toward the east (TJob 40:3) also characterizes the Therapeutae (Vita cont 89). Most importantly, Philo recounts (80) how spontaneous hymnic compositions sprang from sacred meetings of the Therapeutae, in which both men and women were present.

Several internal features of the testament appear to confirm an Egyptian origin. Job is called "the king of all Egypt" (TJob 28:7). The reference to Job's "fifty bakeries" (TJob 10:7) finds no Septuagint source, as do many of the quantities mentioned in the Testament. The Therapeutae held the number fifty in special reverence, perhaps as a reference to the Feast of Pentecost. Gem collecting, attributed to Job (TJob 28:4f.; 32:5; cf. Job 31:24 LXX), was an Egyptian royal pastime according to Theophrastus (De lapidibus 24.55).

A few considerations warrant hesitancy in accepting an Egyptian provenance among the ¹⁷ Mai, Scriptorum veterum nova collectio, vol. 7, col. 191.

¹⁸ Apocrypha Anecdota, pp. xciii–xciv.

¹⁹ "Das Testament Hiobs und das Neue Testament," Zur Geschichte und Literatur des Urchristentoms, vol. 3, pt. 2, p. 165.

²⁰ "Das Testament des Hiob und das Neue Testament," ZNW 62 (1971) 88–93.

²¹ "Le Testament de Job, la prière de Nabonide et les traditions targoumiques," in S. Wagner, ed., Bibel und Qumran, p. 72.

²² "Structure and Meaning in the Testament of Job," in G. MacRae, ed., Society of Biblical Literature: 1974 Seminar Papers, vol. 1, p. 50.

²³ Semitic Studies, p. 273.

²⁴ Sem 18 (1968) 21–24.

Therapeutae. Philo made a special point (70–72) about the absence of slaves in the community of the Therapeutae; yet they are assumed in the Testament of Job, and are both male (13:4) and female (14:4). Philo does not mention any glossolalic hymn singing, as does the Testament of Job (48:3; 50:1). Nor does he include laments among the forms or purposes of the hymns of the Therapeutae. Even so, an origin of the Testament among the Egyptian Therapeutae seems very possible.

But has there been any Christian editing? Job's first-person address ends at chapter 45. Testament of Job 46–53 supplements 1–45 in reporting Job's recovery. Apocalyptic language more conspicuously appears in chapters 46–53, which contain no extended poetic piece to match those found in chapters 1–45. In the single reference to the devil found in 46–53, he is called "the enemy" (TJob 47:10), while the terms "Satan," the "devil," and the "evil one" appear in 1–45.

Spittler²⁵ suggested that the Testament may have been reworked in the second century by Montanists. Eusebius (HE 5.17.1–4) preserves the argument of an unnamed anti-Montanist who demanded to know where in the range of biblical history any precedent appeared for ecstatic prophecy. The descriptions of Job's daughters speaking in ecstasy (TJob 48–50) may have been a Montanist move to supply such a precedent. Furthermore, the document—or at least the tradition it preserves, that of Job's return of the escaping worm to his body (TJob 20:8f.)—is reflected in one of Tertullian's books (De anima 14.2–7) written just before his Montanist period.

The following reconstruction of the origin and development of the Testament of Job mingles probabilities with possibilities. The result is a scenario for the emergence of the Testament of Job that must be seen as conjectural; how in fact the Testament arose cannot be described with faultless historical accuracy.

Somewhere in the second half of the first century B.C., a member of the Therapeutae near Alexandria produced a "testament" in praise of patience, which is surely a "contemplative" virtue. Although he (or someone before him) may have used a Semitic original, his own work bore unmistakable evidences of a lover of the Septuagint. Having himself spontaneously composed hymns at the Therapeutae vigils, and with his poetic skills now refined by writing, he—or she—produced at least three (TJob 25, 32, 43; 33?) poetic pieces in the work. As the document left the Therapeutic community and found its way to the Phrygian regions, it was in Greek and consisted of the Testament of Job 1–45, a true "testament" of a tested servant (therapōn) of God.

The work was artful enough—at least so far as the speech of Job's wife (TJob 24) is concerned—to have been interlaced with the developing text of the Septuagint. If the Testament was influential enough to have affected the Septuagint text, or been affected by it, it may be no surprise to find it in Phrygian regions two centuries later.

When the new prophecy erupted, there was no contest over canon, scripture, or doctrine. When, however, the original Montanist trio passed and the foretold end had not yet come, the movement organized and prophetic ecstasy spread. Prophetic virgins constituted themselves into an institution. At one point—before A.D. 195—an anti-Montanist writer demanded of the Montanists where in scripture prophecy in ecstasy might be claimed. In an era of canonical flexibility, a Montanist apologist, probably of Jewish background, made use of a "testament" known to him and in which he found ideas compatible with his own species of Judaistic practice. By creating Testament of Job 46–53, possibly inserting chapter 33, and certain other restyling, the apologist for the new prophecy produced a text wherein the daughters of Job were charismatically, or magically, lifted into prophetic ecstasy, enabling them to speak in the language of angels.

The work remained in Montanist hands as a propaganda text, perhaps particularly useful for Jews. Tertullian, at any rate, came by the text even before he became a Montanist. He used this Jewish testament in praise of patience in producing his own work De patientia. The work may even have played some part in his attraction to the Montanist movement.

By the sixth century, the work appeared on a list of proscribed apocrypha, the Gelasian Decree. But even before then it had been translated into Coptic, showing its continued popularity in Egypt. By the tenth century, it had been translated into Slavonic. In spite of four late medieval Greek manuscripts, the work remained virtually unknown in the West till modern times.

²⁵ Spittler, Testament of Job, pp. 58–69.

Theological importance

As a whole, the theological outlook of the Testament of Job aligns with hellenistic Judaism. The living (37:2) and just (43:13) God is the one who created heaven, earth, the sea, and mankind (2:4). God is called the "Master of virtues" (despotēs tōn aretōn 50:2) as well as the "Demiurge" (39:12), but without subsequent gnostic notions attached to that term. The title "Father" (33:3, 9; 40:3; 47:11; cf. 50:3; 52:6; see n. i to 52) need not be viewed as a Christian intrusion (see n. g to 33). In the Testament, it is Job's zeal against an idol's shrine (2–5) that is made the occasion of the calamities that befall him. God is the receiver of praise (14:3) and present in praise (51:1). He is Job's source of healing, the creator of physicians (38:8), to the end that even at death Job felt no pain (52:1f.).

Human nature in the Testament of Job is subject to the deception of the devil (3:3), exemplified in the various disguises assumed by Satan in his opposition to Job (see n. c to 6). Job's wife, his servants, and he himself are the objects of Satan's attacks. Indeed, a highly developed doctrine of Satan marks the Testament. He is variously identified as Satan (6:4), the devil (3:3), the evil one (7:1 V), the enemy (47:10). He is not human (23:2; cf. 42:2) nor of flesh, as Job (27:2), but is a spirit (27:2) who was responsible for the nefarious inspiration of Elihu (41:5f.; cf. 17:1f.). As in the canonical account, Satan derives his limited authority from God (8:1–3; cf. Job 1:12; 2:6).

The notion of angels in the testament corresponds to Jewish and Christian thought. An interpreting angel, also called a "light" (4:1; cf. 3:1), figures in Testament of Job 2–5 in a manner characteristic of Jewish and Christian apocalyptic. Job's daughters speak in ecstasy the language of the angels (48:3), the archons (49:2), and the cherubim (50:2). Unidentified heavenly creatures (angels?), functioning as the psychopomps of Greek mythology, carry off Job's soul at his death (52:6–10; cf. 47:11).

Distinctive emphasis is given in the testament to a cosmological dualism that inculcates a certain otherworldliness. This motif most clearly appears in Job's psalm of affirmation, in which he boldly asserts, "My throne is in the upper world" (33:3). By contrast, this world and its kingdoms pass away (33:4, 8), a claim that infuriates the friendly kings who came to help (34:4). But the cosmic superiority of the upper world—which nowhere is elaborately described in the Testament of Job—also emerges in the effects of the charismatic sashes once they are donned by Job's daughters. Their hearts were changed, they no longer cared for earthly things, they used the tongues of angels (48–50). Even so, the testament celebrates Job's exemplary care for the poor (9–13), which is an earthbound enterprise to which he returns following his recovery (44:2–5).

Several eschatological ideas exist side by side in the testament. Among the rewards promised Job by the angel is participation in the resurrection (4:9; cf. n. c to 4). Job's children, who died when their house collapsed (39:8), however, need no burial; they were taken directly to heaven by their creator (39:8–40:3). Yet the testament ends with a description of Job's soul being carried off in a chariot (52:10); his body is buried a few days later (53:5–7).

In fact, burial concerns are a distinct interest of the testament, reflecting its Jewish origin. Not only did Job's wife, Sitis, plead for the burial of her children (39:1–10), her own burial is told in detail: the procession, the place, the lament used, even animals mourning her death (40:6–14). Similarly, Job's burial is described (53:5–7). The poetic compositions at Testament of Job 25 and 32 stem from the lament form, the life setting of which was the funeral.

A high interest in women marks the testament. This first appears in the names given to both Job's present wife (Dinah) and his earlier spouse (Sitis). Sitis, unnamed at Job 2:9f. in the canonical account, becomes a leading figure in the testament, which extensively elaborates her speech (TJob 24:1–25:10) compared to the Septuagint adjustment of the Masoretic text (TJob 24:1–25:10; Job 2:9a–d LXX). More than this, in Testament of Job 21–26 Sitis becomes something of a figure of pity, driven to enslavement and finally forced to sell her hair ignominiously to Satan. Even so, the Sitis cycle functions to accentuate Job's troubles. In the Testament of Job 39–40, she reappears on behalf of her deceased—but as yet unburied—children, three of whom were women.

No less than six words are used in the Testament of Job for female slave.²⁶ Widows, too, make their appearance: Job is their champion. (His funeral dirge has the line "Gone is the clothing of widows!" 53:3.) And by his musical skills Job could quell their murmuring (14:1–5). At Testament of Job 13:4–6 (quoting Job 31:31 LXX) complaints against Job are attributed specifically to his male servants, apparently exonerating the female servants mentioned at Job 31:31 (LXX).

²⁶ Pais (7:3); doulē (7:7); therapainē (14:4); paidiskē (21:2); doulis (21:3); latris (24:2); all are used with the feminine article.

Aside from the wives, the widows, and the slaves, there are the daughters of Job already named in the canon and said to have had such beauty that "Throughout the land there were no women as beautiful as the daughters of Job" (Job 42:15). The fact that "their father gave them inheritance rights like their brothers" triggered a distinct section of the testament (46–50), where the earlier interest in patience has been displaced by a concern for ecstatic and perhaps magical participation in the upper world through glossolalia.

Finally, the motif of endurance, or patience (hypomonē), receives high praise in the testament. The degree to which this theme is worked into the testament is clear evidence of its kinship with the testament genre. Job is the hero of patience; he is born to it (1:5). If he is patient—the angel promises (4:6)—he will gain fame and be restored. On the dung heap, he invites his wife Sitis to endure with him (26:5). Underwriting the charitable exploits of others whose mismanagement led to bankruptcy, Job acceded to their pleas for patience (11:10). He would undergo whatever Satan could bring; that adversary finally learned Job could not be enticed away from patience to contempt (20:1). Job was like the underdog wrestler who nevertheless won the match "because he showed endurance and did not grow weary" (27:4). It was their prior knowledge of Job and his former happy estate—and not their patience—that led to the speechlessness of the king-friends upon their discovery of Job (28:5). Sitis bitterly condemns Job's dung heap motto: "Only a little longer!" (24:1). No more fitting summary of the hortatory intent of the testament could be quoted than 27:7: "Now then, my children, you also must be patient in everything that happens to you. For patience is better than anything."²⁷

Cultural importance

Rejected by the rabbis and the Church, the Testament of Job not surprisingly has been virtually unnoticed till modern times and has had little detectable effect on the development of Western culture. Nothing in Archibald MacLeish's play J.B., for example, suggests any roots traceable to the testament.

Early Church Fathers developed parallels between Job and Jesus as sufferers, a theme at times expressed in early medieval Christian art. Tertullian may have used the testament in some form of its literary history (see n. f to 20). According to Kohler²⁸ the Islamic tradition preserves features of the saga of Job distinctive to the testament. A few plays and works on the biblical book of Job from the sixteenth to the eighteenth century were cited over a century ago in a short preface to the first French translation of the testament.²⁹ Whether or not any of these reflects aspects of the story of Job distinctive to the testament remains to be investigated (as do possible relations between the text traditions of the testament and the Vulgate).

The chief contribution of the Testament of Job lies in its witness to the sectarian diversity of hellenistic Judaism. Much of its vocabulary and concepts it shares with the New Testament, as well as with other contemporary literature in the testament genre. Here in a single document, however, typical hellenistic Jewish monotheistic propaganda and moral exhortation mix with a primitive form of Merkabah mysticism, with the sharply dualistic outlook at Qumran (especially TJob 43), with the beginnings of Jewish magic (46:3–47:6), and with a Montanist-like interest in angelic glossolalia. The testament is in fact a valuable monument to the rich variety of hellenistic Jewish piety.

²⁷ Some of the T12P, rather than commending virtues, condemn vices, as TSim (envy), TJud (love of money, fornication). TJob incidentally depreciates arrogance (alazoneia, 15:8), exultation (gauriama, 33:6), boasting (kaukēma, 33:8), scorn (kataphronēsis, 15:6), contempt (oliguria, 20:1), pride (hyperēphania, 15:8); all are inconsistent with enduring patience.

²⁸ Semitic Studies, pp. 292–95.

²⁹ J. Migne, Dictionnaire des apocryphes, vol. 2, col. 402.

About the translation

The text employed is eclectic and has been critically reviewed, but it largely follows Brock and therefore reflects P. While a generally conservative stance has been taken toward the text, a conjectured reading of "Eliphas" for "Elihu" has been adopted at Testament of Job 31:1, 5; 32:1; 33:1. This choice is not supported in the extant Greek witnesses, but it draws partial support from the Coptic version as well as from the order of appearance of Job's friends in the Septuagint (see n. a to 31).

Versification follows that of Brock. Marginal references focus on parallels internal to the testament itself, although frequent reference is provided to likely Septuagint sources for the language of the Testament. All marginal references to Job are to the Septuagint version. A number standing by itself refers to the verse of that number in the same chapter. Where chapter and verse are given with no preceding book cited, the reference is to the Testament of Job itself.³⁰

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 134–36.

Delling, Bibliographie, p. 167.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 100–4.

Brock, S. Testamentum Iobi. J. C. Picard, Apocalypsis Baruchi graece. PVTG 2; Leiden, 1967. (Re-edits MS P, noting all significant variations in S and V and selected variants in Slavonic. Useful introduction covering the characteristics and interrelations of the text witnesses.)

Collins, J. J. "Structure and Meaning in the Testament of Job," in G. MacRae, ed., Society of Biblical Literature: 1974 Seminar Papers. Cambridge, Mass., 1974; vol. 1, pp. 35–52. (Views TJob as a coherent 1st-cent. A.D. product of Egyptian Judaism. Valuable suggestions regarding opposition between Job and others [notably Satan, his friends, and his wife] as a possible clue to the underlying structural unity of the work.)

Delcor, M. "Le Testament de Job, la prière de Nabonide et les traditions targoumiques," in S. Wagner, ed., Bibel und Qumran. Beiträge zur Erforschung der Beziehungen zwischen Bibel- und Qumranwissenschaft. Hans Bardke zum 22.9.1966. Berlin, 1968; pp. 57–74. (Concludes that the Gk. interpolation at Job 2:9 derives from TJob and that TJob 17:1 alludes to the invasion of Palestine by Pacorus in 40 B.C., after which TJob was composed.)

Jacobs, I. "Literary Motifs in the Testament of Job," JJS 21 (1970) 1–10. (Sees TJob as an early sample of Jewish martyr literature, distinctively featuring a convert who suffers for his faith.)

James, M. R. Apocrypha Anecdota, 2nd Series. T&S, 5.1, Cambridge, England, 1897; pp. lxxii–cii, 104–37. (Standard text, with ch. divisions, used until Brock. Helpful introductory material; biblical parallels cited.)

³⁰ Aiming for readability without violating the sense of the underlying text, the translation does not hesitate to omit Gk. particles and conjunctions (where these would not affect the sense), to exchange a singular for a plural (where more natural in English), to reorder sentence components (always, however, with the resulting ET vs. corresponding to the Gk. vs. of the same number). The terms "endurance" and "patience" are used interchangeably to translate the Testament's celebrated virtue, hypomonē.

The translation has had a circuitous history. At first part of my Harvard doctoral dissertation, it was placed at the disposal of R. Kraft to be revised as he and his staff were directed by their work in producing a preliminary text of the SV strand of the TJob text tradition. In the process, H. Attridge provided many helpful suggestions regarding both text and translation. Since I have had the benefit of their work, along with that of J. Timbie, I am expressly grateful not only for the distinct textual advances they have made but also for their concurrence in letting the translation once again be reworked for publication here. I have profited much from a critical reading of the work in the present form by B. Schaller of Göttingen. Inadequacies that remain are my own, of course.

- Kee, H. C. "Satan, Magic, and Salvation in the Testament of Job," in G. MacRae, ed., Society of Biblical Literature: 1974 Seminar Papers. Cambridge, Mass., 1974; vol. 1, pp. 53–76. (TJob is a 1st-cent. A.D. text, originally Gk., most closely aligned with magical and mystical features of early merkabah mysticism. Its eschatology is a temporal process—modeled by Job's endurance—and hence not gnostic.)
- Kohler, K. "The Testament of Job: An Essene Midrash on the Book of Job Reedited and Translated with Introductory and Exegetical Notes," in G. Kohut, ed., Semitic Studies in Memory of Rev. Dr. Alexander Kohut. Berlin, 1897; pp. 264–338. (Uses Mai's Gk. text [=V]. Kohler's ch. and vs. divisions differ from those of James. Introduction focuses on Semitic, especially rabbinic and Muslim, folklore about Job. Sees TJob as originating from Therapeutae "in the outskirts of Palestine in the land of Hauran, where the Nabatheans [sic] lived, and the Essene brotherhoods spread it all over the Arabian lands," p. 295.)
- Kraft, R. A. (ed.), with H. Attridge, R. Spittler, J. Timbie. The Testament of Job According to the SV Text. T&T 5; Pseudepigrapha series 4: Missoula, Mont., 1974. (Valuable nn. on the textual history of the TJob and an extensive bibliography.)
- Mai, A. Scriptorum veterum nova collectio e Vaticanis codicibus. Rome, 1833. (10 vols.; TJob = vol. 7, cols. 180–91; editio princeps, using the V text.)
- Mancini, A. "Per la critica del 'Testamentum Job,'" Rendiconti della Reale Accademia dei Lincei, Classe di Scienze Morali, Storiche e Filologiche. Serie Quinta 20 (1911) 479–502. (Collation of S with P [James] and V [Mai], with some philological and text-critical observations.)
- Philonenko, M. "Le Testament de Job, Introduction, traduction et notes," Sem 18 (1968) 1–75. (French translation with brief nn. and introduction. Original language of TJob not determined—at least parts come from Heb., e.g. ch. 43. An authentically Jewish writing of Egyptian Therapeutic origin, from 1st cent. A.D. [pre 70]. Also announces existence of the Cop. version. See also "Le Testament de Job et les Thérapeutes" Sem 8 [1958] 41–53, which supports Kohler's thesis of a Therapeutic origin by appealing to Qumran parallels.)
- Polivka, G. "Apokrifna priča o Jovu," Starine: Jugoslavenska Akademija Znanosti i Umjetnosti ("Antiquities: for the Yugoslav Academy of Sciences and Humanities," Zagreb) 24 (1891) 135–55. (Edition of the three Slav. MSS.)
- Rahnenführer, D. "Das Testament des Hiob und das Neue Testament," ZNW 62 (1971) 68–93. (Summarizes his 1967 doctoral dissertation at Halle-Wittenberg. Pre-Christian, originally Gk., example of hellenistic Jewish missionary literature. Useful data on the vocabulary of TJob and its affinities with the NT.)
- Schaller, B. "Das Testament Hiobs," in W. Kümmel et al., eds., JSHRZ (1979) 303–74 (seen in page proofs). (Highly useful introduction, translation with nn. TJob was composed in Gk. as a product of hellenistic Judaism; but it is not specifically attributable to the Therapeutae. Dated probably early to middle 2nd cent.)
- Spitta, F. "Das Testament Hiobs und das Neue Testament," Zur Geschichte und Literatur des Urchristentums, vol. 3, pt. 2. Göttingen, 1907; pp. 139–206. (TJob is a pre-Christian, but not Essene, product of Jewish popular piety and furnished NT writers with a model for Jesus as sufferer. Includes some nn. provided by James correcting Mai's text of V.)

TESTAMENT OF JOB^a

Prologue (1)

Title

1 1 The book of the words of Job, the one called Jobab.^b

Gen 36:33f.

Setting^c

2 Now on the day when, having fallen ill,^d he began to settle his affairs, he called
3 his seven sons and his three daughters.^e •whose names^f are Tersi, Choros, Hyon, Job 1:2
4 Nike, Phoros, Phiphe, Phrouon, Hemera,^g Kasia, and Amaltheia's Horn.^h •And Job 42:14 when he had called his children he said,ⁱ Gather round, my children. Gather round me so that I may show you the things which the Lord did with me and all the things which have happened^j to me.
5 I am your father Job, fully engaged in endurance.^k But you are a chosen and Jas 5:11
6 honored race from the seed of Jacob,^l the father of your mother. •For I am from Job 42:17c the sons of Esau, the brother of Jacob, of whom is your mother Dinah,^m from 1 a. So P (diathēkē). “Testament (diataxis) of Job.” S; “Testament (diathēkē) of the Blameless, Sorely Tried, and Blessed Job, His Life and a Copy of His Testament,” V; “Life and Conduct of the Holy and Righteous Job,” Slav.

b. Reference is made probably to the Jobab of Gen 36:33f., who is described as the second king of Edom. This suggests a setting in the patriarchal era, confirmed by Job’s genealogy “from the sons of Esau” (TJob 1:6). Similarly, Job 42:17c LXX describes Job as a descendant of Abraham and speaks (in reverse order from TJob) of “Jobab, the one called Job” (42:17d).

c. Following the testament form, 1:2–7 pictures Job at the end of his life (248 years old, according to 53:8 S V Slav), his children gathered around him, about to urge endurance (hypomonē) by a recital of his own famed perseverance.

d. But, according to 52:1, he fell ill without pain or suffering, due to the miraculous effects of the splendid girdle (46:7f.) by which he had recovered from his earlier stroke (47:4–8). Among the T12P, TReu (1:2) and TSim (1:2) likewise describe their subjects as ill as part of the deathbed scene, while TLevi (1:2), TNaph (1:2), and TAsh (1:2) each expressly state the patriarch is in good health even though—in conjunction with the testament form—about to die.

e. The second set of ten children: The first ten (also seven sons and three daughters according to Job 1:2, but not specifically so stated in TJob) were all lost in Job’s tragedy (TJob 1:6; 18:1; cf. Job 1:18f.). The total and the male-female ratio thus agree with Job 42:13. On seven sons, cf. Ruth 4:15; 1Sam 2:51; Tob 14:3A. Job’s 7,000 sheep and 3,000 camels (Job 1:3; cf. TJob 9:2–4) appear in the same ratio.

f. V Slav omit all names. S omits the first five. The seven sons, listed first, play no further role in TJob (cf. 46:1f.), while the daughters figure prominently in 46–53.

g. The last three names correspond to those given

Job’s daughters at Job 42:14 LXX (cf. MT). The sons are not named in canonical Job.

h. “Amaltheia’s Horn” is the legendary horn of plenty (cornucopia) ascribed in Gk. mythology to the broken horn of the she-goat who nursed Zeus. Gk. myth likewise knows of Nereus, the name of Job’s brother (see n. b to 51).

i. Job’s own words begin here, and the first person is used throughout TJob 1:4b–45:4. The quotation marks appropriate here, and after TJob 45:4, are omitted to ease reading; inclusion also would require initial quotation marks at every intervening paragraph and the introduction of needlessly complicating quotations within quotations.

j. Cf. 1:7. Contrast the similar but future phrase characteristic of apocalypses (e.g. Rev 1:1; 22:6; Dan 2:28, 45; 1En 1:2). Testaments tend to look back, apocalypses ahead.

k. Or patience (hypomonē), the virtue celebrated by TJob and that for which Job is remembered at the only place where he is mentioned in the NT, Jas 5:11: “You have heard of the patience of Job . . .”

l. Job is distinguished by patient endurance, his children by noble ancestry.

m. In canonical Job the first wife is unnamed and the second unmentioned. In TJob the wife of Job’s trials is named Sitis (n. b to 25), while the mother of the ten children just named and before whom Job declares this “testament” is Dinah, the daughter of Jacob and Leah (Gen 20:31; 46:15). That makes Job an in-law to the twelve patriarchs and thereby further legitimates a testament from one outside the circle of patriarchal worthies, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and the twelve sons of Jacob. Dinah as Job’s wife is known elsewhere in the Jewish tradition: Ps-Philo 8:7f.; Targum on Job 2:9; jBB 15b; GenR 57:4; cf. 73:9 and 80:4. While no more is heard of Dinah in TJob, Sitis plays a major role (21–26, 39f.) and is the subject of an extensive lament (25), which is one of several carefully wrought poetic pieces in TJob.

cf. James on 11 of whom I begot you. (My former wife died with the other ten children in a bitter death.)

7 So hear me, children, and I will show you the things which have befallen me. 4

I. Job and the Revealing Angel (2–5)^a

Job's perplexity over idolatry

1,2 2 Now I used to be Jobab before the Lord named me Job. •When I was called 3 Jobab, I lived quite near a venerated idol's temple.^b •As I constantly saw whole-burnt offerings being offered up there, I began reasoning within myself saying, 3:6; 4:1,4; 5:2; 4 "Is this really the God who made heaven and earth, the sea too,^c and our very 17:4 selves? How shall I know?"

1 3 One night as I was in bed a loud voice came to me in a very bright light saying, 4:1; 5:2; 18:5,8 2 "Jobab, Jobab!" •And I said, "Yes? Here I am." And he said, "Arise, and I will 3 show you who this is whom you wish to know. •This one whose whole-burnt offerings they bring and whose drink offerings they pour is not God. Rather, his is the power of the devil,^a by whom human nature^b is deceived."
4,5 When I heard these things, I fell on my bed worshiping and saying, •"My Lord,
6 who came for the salvation of my soul, •I beg you—if this is indeed the place of 47:11; 52:5,6,10
Satan^c by whom men are deceived—grant me authority to go and purge his place 7 so that I may put an end to the drink offerings being poured for him. Who is there to forbid me, since I rule this region?"^d 28:7; 29:3

The angel's disclosure of impending calamities

1 4 The light^a answered me and said, "You shall be able to purge this place. But 3:1
I am going to show you all the things which the Lord charged me to tell you."

2 a. TJob here (2–5) blends apocalyptic features into the testament form. A revealing angel responds in a night vision to Job's concern over a nearby idol's shrine. His destruction of it, authorized by the angel, becomes the cause of Satan's attack on Job. The nighttime sleep interrupted by a voice and a light, the perplexity motif, worship of the revealing angel, the call by name, all these are typical features of apocalypses roughly contemporary with TJob; e.g. 2En 1:2–9A; 4Ezra 3:1–4; 4:1f.; 3Bar 1:2–8; Rev 1:9–19. Such features are not common in the T12P, but cf. TLevi 2:4–6.

b. Elsewhere the pagan temples are called "the place of Satan" (3:6; 4:4), "the temple of the idol" (5:2), "the temple of the great god . . . the place of drink offerings . . . the house of god" (17:4). Opposition to idolatry in TJob 2–5 resembles the similar iconoclasm of Abraham (Jub 12:12).

c. Quite nearly a creedal formula at Ps 145 (146):6; Acts 4:24; 14:15; Rev 10:6; 14:7, probably arising from Ex 20:11; Neh 9:6 (2Ezra 19:6 LXX). Except for Rev 14:7 (which has "and every water-spring"), these all add "and all that is in them" (or similarly), for which TJob alone reads, "and our very selves." In all cases the order heaven, earth, and sea is retained. Cf. Jub 2:2 (where the addition is "all the spirits" [angels], which are then extensively enumerated); PrMan 2f.; Jdt 13:18.

3 a. Elsewhere "the devil" is called "Satan" (3:6), "the enemy" (47:10; cf. 7:11, Slav addition to 53:8), and in V only "the evil one" (7:1; 20:2) and "wretched one" (27:1). Belial (or Beliar) does not appear. Satan as enemy: TDan 6:3f.; Mt 13:39; Lk 10:18f.

b. The phrase "human nature" occurs in the NT only at Jas 3:7, where various bestial natures are said to have been tamed by it. TJob elsewhere shows sensitivity to the distinction between human and beastly (39:10) or Satanic (7:5; 42:2) natures. Such deception by Satan later in TJob overtakes Job's doorman (7:6), his wife (23:11), and threatens even Job himself (26:6).

c. The "place of Satan" is not as strongly polemic as the NT expression "synagogue of Satan" (Rev 2:9; 3:9) and "the place where Satan is enthroned" (Rev 2:13).

d. Where LXX had already called Job's friends "kings" (Job 2:11), TJob makes Job a king too, most strongly at 28:7, "Jobab, the king of all Egypt." The friends speak of him as their "fellow king" (29:3), and his throne—mentioned at 20:4—becomes the taunting refrain in the lament of Eliphaz (32:2–12): "Where then is the splendor of your throne?" Perhaps the canonical Job 19:9 (cf. 31:36)—speaking already in the MT of Job's crown—implies he was there too considered a ruler (cf. 29:25, "like a king amid his armies . . .").

4 a. I.e. the angel who appeared in "a very bright light" (3:1).

- 2 And I said, "Whatever he has charged me, his servant, I will hear and do."
 3,4 Again he said, "Thus says the Lord: "If you attempt to purge the place of Satan, 2:2
 he will rise up against you with wrath for battle. But he will be unable to bring 18:5; 27:1 5 death upon you. He will bring on you many plagues, he will take away for himself 37:3f.
 6 your goods, he will carry off your children. •But if you are patient, I will make your name renowned in all generations of the earth till the consummation of the 53:8 7 age.^b •And I will return you again to your goods. It will be repaid to you doubly, 44:5
 8 so you may know that the Lord is impartial—rendering good things to each one 43:13
 9,10 who obeys. •And you shall be raised up in the resurrection.^c •For you will be like Job 42:17a
 11 a sparring athlete,^d both enduring pains and winning the crown. •Then will you 27:3-5 know that the Lord is just, true, and strong, giving strength to his elect ones."

Job's destruction of the idol's shrine

- 1 5 And I, my little children, replied to him, "Till death I will endure: I will not 1:4 2 step back at all." •After I had been sealed by the angel when he left me, my little 3:1 1:4
 children, then—having arisen the next night—I took fifty youths with me, struck 3 off for the temple of the idol, and leveled it to the ground. •And so I withdrew 2:2
 into my house, having ordered the doors to be secured.^a

II. Job and Satan (6–27)^a

A. SATAN'S ATTACK AND JOB'S TRAGEDY (6–8)^b

Satan disguised as a beggar

- 1,2 6 Listen, little children, and marvel. •For as soon as I entered into my house and 3 secured my doors, I charged my doormen thus, •"If anyone should seek me today, give no report; but say, 'He has no time, for he is inside concerned with an urgent matter.'"
 4 So while I was inside Satan knocked at the door, having disguised himself as 17:2; 20:5; 23:1

b. Not in LXX, the expression "consummation of the age" occurs in the T12P and at Mt 13:39; Heb 9:26.

c. Both syntactically and doctrinally, this verse could qualify as a Christian interpolation: even more V's additional phrase "to eternal life." But LXX Job already taught a future resurrection, even apart from the interesting statement in the appendix (42:17a) "And it is written that he will rise again with those whom the Lord will raise up" ("... whom the Lord raised up" reads V distinctively at TJob 53:8). Resurrection in 4:9 as well as in 53:8V (and Job 42:17a LXX) seems limited to the righteous, as in 2Mac 7:14. This contrasts with, e.g., TBenj 10:8, where "All shall arise—some to glory, and others to dishonor."

d. This phrase artfully anticipates 27:3–5, where similar athletic imagery marks the end of the episode of Satan and Job.

5 a. According to 6:2 and 9:7f., the doors ordinarily stood open for the benefit of the poor seeking food. The author has the habit of introducing a major section with a brief advance summary: 5:3 brings on 6–8, while 8:3 announces 9–26. Cf. 46:11 for 48–50.

6 a. Chiasmic structure marks this section: 6–8 describe Satan's attack issuing in Job's tragedy, while the closing ch. (27) reverses the matter with Job conquering Satan. Where at 6:1–6 Job secludes himself from Satan, by 27:1f. it is Satan who is hiding from Job. The remaining chs. (9–26) appear to be modeled after the temporal contrast characteristic of certain mocking laments: 9–15 tells what Job once was (wealthy, philanthropic, hospitable, musically skilled, pious). Then 16–26 details what he later became (deprived of wealth, family, health).

b. Having just razed the idol's temple (5:2), Job conceals himself in his house shutting doors (5:3; 6:2f.) that usually stand open (9:7f.). Coming in disguise as a beggar—many such beggars came to Job's house to share in his care for the poor (9:8)—Satan first asked an interview (6:5f.), then a loaf of bread (7:2). Denied both, with Job's assertion of his "estrangement" from him (7:4, 10), Satan negotiates authority over Job with God (8:1f.) and discomfits him (8:3). Throughout 6–8, Job is thoroughly insulated from Satan. Job is occupied within his house, all communication with Satan is relayed by the doorman, who at first was unaware of Satan's true identity.

5 a beggar.^c • And he said to the doormaid, “Tell Job I wish to meet with him.”
6 When the doormaid came and told me these things, she heard me say to report that I had no time just now.

1 7 When he heard that, Satan departed and put a yoke^a on his shoulders. And
2 when he arrived, he spoke to the doormaid saying, •“Say to Job, ‘Give me a loaf
3 of bread from your hands, so I may eat.’” •So I gave a burnt loaf of bread to the 4 girl to give to him and said to him, •“Expect to eat my loaves no longer, for you are estranged from me.”

5 Then the doormaid, ashamed to give him the burnt and ashen loaf of bread
6 (for she did not know he was Satan), took the good loaf of her own and gave it 23:2; 27:2; 42:2
7 to him. •And when he received it and knew what had occurred he said to the girl, “Off with you, evil servant. Bring the loaf of bread given you to be given to me.”

8 The girl wept with deep grief, saying, “Truly, you well say I am an evil servant.
9 For if I were not, I would have done just as it was assigned to me by my master.” 20:9

And when she returned, she brought him the burnt loaf of bread, saying to him, 10 “Thus says my lord, ‘You shall no longer eat from my loaves at all, for I have 11 been estranged from you. •Yet I have given you this loaf of bread in order that I may not be accused of providing nothing to a begging enemy.’”^b

12 When he heard these things, Satan sent the girl back to me saying, “As this loaf of bread is wholly burnt, so shall I do to your body also. For within the hour, I 13 will depart and devastate you.” •And I replied to him, “Do what you will. For if you intend to bring anything on me, I am prepared to undergo whatever you inflict.” 47:10; cf.
Prov 25:21

Satan implores the Lord for power over Job

1,2 8 After he withdrew from me, when he had gone out under the firmament, •he 3 implored the Lord that he might receive authority over my goods. •And then, when 41:3
he had received the authority,^a he came and took away all my wealth. 16:2,4

B. JOB'S GENEROSITY AND PIETY (9–15)^a

His philanthropy

1 9 So listen, for I will show you all the things which have befallen me, my losses. 1:4
2,3 For I used to have 130,000 sheep;^b •of them I designated 7,000 to be sheared for Job 1:3; 16:3; 32:2
the clothing of orphans and widows, the poor, and the helpless. And I had a pack

c. Satan in disguise appears elsewhere in TJob: 17:2 (as “king of the Persians”); 23:1 (as “bread seller”). At 20:5 Satan also appeared as a “great whirlwind.” The motif serves a literary, rather than a dogmatic, purpose: In each case what Satan becomes suits the requirements of the narrative context. Here, Satan appears as a beggar precisely because it is beggars who gained ready entrance to Job’s house (9:8–10:4). TReu 5:6 refers to the fallen angels who were disguised as men. Paul’s awareness that Satan disguises himself as an “angel of light” leads him to view his opponents as fake apostles (2Cor 11:13–15). Satan’s impersonations may have been among the designs of Satan known to Paul (2Cor 2:11).

7 a. The meaning is unclear, since the word (assalion) is not found elsewhere in the Gk. of any period. Since it goes on the shoulders, it must be something worn or borne. Possibilities: garment, shawl, wallet, basket, wineskin, water bag, shield.

That upon his return with the item Satan asks for bread may suggest it was suited to carrying the bread. Even that might be a garment with roomy folds.

b. The phrase possibly reflects Prov 25:21a, “If your enemy is hungry, give him something to eat; if thirsty, something to drink” (behind Rom 12:20).

8 a. Job likewise had to obtain authority to raze the idol’s shrine (3:6; 4:1).

9 a. Typical Midrashic embellishment characterizes this section magnifying the pious generosity of Job. Job 29 and 31, both LXX (less so Job 30 LXX), clearly inform the author here, supplying numerous details and actual language and illuminating several textual problems in TJob 9–15.

b. Cf. 10:5. Job 1:3 lists 7,000 sheep, 3,000 camels, 500 yoke of oxen, 500 she-asses, all doubled following his recovery (42:10, 12). TJob,

- of 80 dogs guarding my flocks.^c I also had 200 other dogs guarding the house. Job 30:1
- 4 And I used to have 9,000 camels; from them I chose 3,000 to work in every city. Job 1:3; 16:3; 32:2
- 5 After I loaded them with good things, I sent them away into the cities and villages, charging them to go and distribute to the helpless, to the destitute, and to all the widows. •And I used to have 140,000 grazing she-asses. From these I marked off Job 1:3
- 6 500 and gave a standing order for their offspring to be sold and given to the poor and needy.
- 7 From all regions people began coming to me for a meeting. The four doors^d of Job 31:32
- 8 my house stood open. •And I gave a standing order to my house servants that these doors should stand open, having this in view: Possibly, some would come asking alms and, because they might see me sitting at the door, would turn back ashamed, getting nothing. Instead, whenever they would see me sitting at one door, they could leave through another and take as much as they needed.

His hospitality

- 1 10 And I established in my house thirty^a tables spread at all hours, for strangers 25:5; 32:7
- 2.3 only. •I also used to maintain twelve^b other tables set for the widows. •When any 13:4; 14:2
- 4 stranger approached to ask alms, he was required to be fed at my table before he would receive his need. •Neither did I allow anyone to go out of my door with an empty pocket.^c 11:12; 12:4
- 5 I used to have 3,500 yoke of oxen. And I chose from them 500 yoke and Job 1:3; 16:3; 32:3
- 6.7 designated them for plowing, which they could do in any field of those who would use them. •And I marked off their produce for the poor, for their table. •I also used to have fifty bakeries^d from which I arranged for the ministry of the table for the poor.

His underwritten charities^a

- 1 11 There were also certain strangers^b who saw my eagerness, and they too desired 2 to assist in this service. •And there were still others, at the time without resources and unable to invest a thing, who came and entreated me, saying, “We beg you, 3 may we also engage in this service. We own nothing, however. •Show mercy on us and lend us money so we may leave for distant cities on business and be able 9:4
- 4 to do the poor a service. •And afterward we shall repay you what is yours.”
- 5 When I heard these things, I would rejoice that they would take anything at all in true Midrashic style, vastly expands the totals owned by Job, but the net of those specifically designated for the poor agrees exactly with the canonical totals. The figures in P S V all agree in the three places where they are given in TJob (9:2–6/10:5; 16:3; 32:2f.), except for V’s two enlargements at 16:3 (“the multitude” for “the seven thousand”) and 32:3 (3,000 for 1,000). The details about the dogs is parenthetical; none of them is said to be marked off for the poor, they do not appear in the lists at 16:3 or 32:2f.

c. Retain here the reading of S V (“guarding my flocks . . . guarding the house.”). P has likely dropped out the line by a characteristic error in copying, the close proximity of the two occurrences of “guarding” in vs. 3. On the dogs, cf. Tob 5:16, 11:4 and see the surprising number of references in L. Ginzberg, Legends of the Jews (Philadelphia, 1967) vol. 7, pp. 115f.

d. A reason for this many doors is offered in the talmudic text, ARN 7:1, “And why did Job make four doors to his house? So that the poor should not have the trouble of going round the entire house. He who came from the north entered straight ahead, and he who came from the south entered straight ahead, and so on all sides. For this reason Job made four doors to his house.” Job 31:17, 20—which inform TJob 9–10—are also quoted at ARN 7:1.

10 a. This figure is doubled to sixty at 32:7, except for Slav, which reads fifty. Slav also attributes fifty such tables to Sitis (25:5), where P S V read seven. The wife of Job thus shared in his continuous hospitality.

b. So 13:4; 14:2; 15:1. Probably from such LXX sources as Job 22:9; 29:13b; 31:16b. Cf. NT care (1Tim 5:9–16) and feeding (Acts 6:1) of widows.

c. An LXX connection emerges in the similarity of this sentence to Job 31:34 LXX, which differs considerably from the MT.

d. As with the dogs of 9:3, these are added to the canonically listed property of Job.

11 a. Although parts of Job 29–31 appear in this section (e.g. 11:11f./Job 31:35f.), the Midrashic connection of TJob 11f. with Job 29–31 is not as evident as that of the other chs. in TJob 9–15.

b. The “strangers” are presumably among those whom he fed (10:1).

- 6 from me for the care of the poor. •And receiving their note eagerly, I would give 7 them as much as they wished, •taking no security from them except a written note.
8 So they would go out at my expense.
9,10 Sometimes they would succeed in business and give to the poor. •But at other times, they would be robbed. And they would come and entreat me saying, “We beg you, be patient with us. Let us find how we might be able to repay you.” 11 Without delay, I would bring before them the note and read it granting cancellation Job 31:36f.
as the crowning feature^c and saying, “Since I trusted you for the benefit of the 12 poor, I will take nothing back from you.” •Nor would I take anything from my 10:4 12:4 debtor.^d

- 1 12 On occasion a man cheerful at heart^a would come to me saying, “I am not wealthy enough to help the destitute. Yet I wish to serve the poor today at your 2 table.” •When it was agreed, he would serve and eat. At evening, as he was about to leave for home, he would be compelled to take wages from me as I would say, 3 “I know you are a workingman counting on and looking for your wages. You Job 7:2 4 must accept.” •Nor did I allow the wage earner’s pay to remain at home with me 10:4 11:12;
in my house.^b Lev 19:13

His fabulous wealth in cattle: the buttered mountains^a

- 1 13 Those who milked the cows grew weary, since milk flowed in the mountains. Job 29:6
2 Butter^b spread over my roads, and from its abundance my herds bedded down
3 in the rocks and mountains because of the births. •So the mountains were washed 4 over with milk and became as congealed butter. •And my servants,^c who prepared
5 the meals for the widows and the poor, grew tired and •would curse me in contempt, 10:2
6 saying, “Who will give us some of his meat cuts to be satisfied?” •Nevertheless, Job 31:31
I was quite kind.

His musical prowess

- 1,2 14 And I used to have six psalms^a and a ten-stringed lyre. •I would rouse myself 52:3 daily after the feeding of the widows, take the lyre, and play for them. And they 10:2 Job 21:12
3 would chant hymns. •And with the psaltery I would remind them of God so that Job 21:12 4 they might glorify the Lord. •If my maidservants ever began murmuring, I would 5 take up the psaltery and strum as payment in return.^b •And thus I would make them stop murmuring in contempt.

c. “Granting . . . feature” tentatively translates the unclear adaptation of Job 31:36 LXX. V characteristically smooths the text: “. . . And tearing it up, I would free them of the debt,” omitting the vexing LXX word “crown” (stephanos) retained in P S.

d. The phrase again draws on the same LXX source, which radically differs from the MT at this point (Job 31:37).

12 a. The words are reminiscent of Paul’s “cheerful giver” (hilaron . . . dotēn, 2Cor 9:7), using the language of Prov 22:8 LXX, which is a line absent from the Heb. text.

b. Basic law at Lev 19:13. (Cf. Deut 24:135; Tob 4:14; BMes 9:11f.; Mal 3:5; Jas 5:4.) Job 7:2 may be in view: “. . . the workman with no thought but his wages” (cf. Job 31:39 LXX).

13 a. To portray Job’s fabulous wealth in cattle, the author utilizes the LXX version of Job 29:6 (cf. TJob 13:2f.) and 31:31 (cf. 13:5f.) drawn from Job’s final speech in the dialogue (Job 20:1–31:40)—itself a wishful longing for prior days of affluence and status corresponding in mood to the plaintive tone of TJob 9–15.

b. Bountiful milk led to lavish supplies of butter, which is invariably linked with milk (Gen 18:8; Judg 5:25) or honey (2Sam 17:29; Isa 7:15) or both (Deut 32:13f.; Job 17:20) as a token of affluence.

c. While Job 31:31 LXX reports Job never provoked his female servants to this complaint, TJob makes it the content of the male servants’ exasperated curse. In the MT, males likewise are in view.

14 a. Perhaps a repertoire specifically used to quell murmuring among the widows, vs. 5. A Dead Sea Scroll text (11QPs^a 27:2–11) speaks of four psalms of David “for making music over the stricken” (trans. of J. A. Sanders, The Dead Sea Psalms Scroll [Ithaca, 1967] p.137).

b. Lit. “the wages of repayment.”

His familial piety^a

1,2 15 After the ministry of the service, my children daily^b took their supper. •They 1:4
 3 went in to their older brother to dine with him, taking along with them their three* Job 1:18; 1:4 4 sisters also. The urgent matters were left with the maidservants, •since my sons also sat at table with the male slaves who served.^c

I therefore early would offer up sacrifices on their behalf according to their Job 1:5 5 number, 300 doves, 50 goat's kids, and 12 sheep. •I issued a standing order for all that remained after the rites to be furnished to the poor.^d And I would say to 1BBar 6:27 6 them, "Take these things remaining after the rites, so that you may pray on behalf
 7 of my children. •Possibly, my sons may have sinned before the Lord through 8 boasting by saying with disdain, •"We are sons of this rich man, and these goods
 9 are ours. •Why then do we also serve?" " For pride^e is an abomination before God. •And again, I offered up a select calf on the altar of God, lest my sons may have thought evil things in their heart toward God.

C. JOB'S LOSSES (16–26)^a

1. His cattle

1 16 As I was doing these things^b during the seven years^c after the angel had made
 2 the disclosure to me, •then Satan—when he had received the authority—came 8:3
 3 down unmercifully •and torched 7,000^d sheep (which had been designated for the 9:3 clothing of the widows), the 3,000 camels, and the 500 she-asses, and the 500 9:4; 9:6; 10:1

15 a. Dependence on Job 1:1–4 LXX is evident in 15:1–9: LXX adds the calf to MT, and to the calf TJob adds the list of sacrificial animals (15:4; cf. Job 42:8). Thus in TJob even the domestic piety of Job—resulting in a recurring supply of fresh meat—contributes to his care for the poor.

b. TJob follows Job 1:4 LXX in making definitely daily banquets out of the probably annual celebrations mentioned in MT.

c. By slight emendation of the text (so Kraft), this sentence could read "and the sisters were attended by the maidservants, as my sons also were waited on by the male slaves who served them."

d. Contrasting with the stinginess of the Babylonian priests, LetJer 6:27, "Whatever is sacrificed to them [the idols], the priests re-sell and pocket the profit; while their wives salt down part of it, but give nothing to the poor or to the helpless."

e. While patience is the major virtue extolled in TJob, the leading vices it combats are pride (hyperphania, 15:8), contempt (oligoria, 20:1), and arrogance (alazoneia, 21:3).

16 a. This reaction narrates the sequence of Job's losses: in turn, his cattle (16), his children (17–19), his health (20), finally his wife (21–26). The order follows that of the canonical story (Job 1:14–19). Literary exaggeration is used, but with restraint.

b. Doing what? Presumably Job is made to refer to the charitable practices just rehearsed in 9–15.

c. Chronological details appear elsewhere in the TJob at 21:1; 26:1; 27:6; 28:1, 8; 41:2; 52:1; 53:7; 53:8 S V Slav. Cf. Job 42:16, where MT agrees with LXX (V and S) against LXX (A) and TJob 53:8 S V Slav. According to P, Job spent at least forty-eight years on the dung heap outside the city (21:1). After eleven years (22:1) his bread ration was reduced, producing a famine crisis that would have lasted six years since it was in the seventeenth year (26:1) that Sitis invited Job to blaspheme God and die (26:1). Again according to P, the visiting kings came in the twentieth year (28:1, 8), reviewed Job's situation for twenty-seven days (41:2; On this figure P S V agree), after which Job recovered (42:1; 44:1; 47:5–7; but how long is unspecified). P lacks the longer ending of 53:8 found in S, V, or Slav so that this witness is not bound by any length of years for Job's total life span. As for S, it is only by the addition of this longer ending—which resembles Job 42:16—that S varies from P in its chronology. With V the matter is quite otherwise: By omission (28:1 V; cf. 27:6 V) and alteration (16:1 V, 22:1 V) a believable seven-year period of testing is ascribed to Job (21:1 V) and uniformly maintained. For V, the spreading of incense took—not three days (as 31:4 P S)—but three hours (31:4 V). V's artistry emerges again in its own version of the longer ending: Only V calculates how long Job lived before his plague (85 years, apparently derived by halving the 170 years that, according to the major LXX MSS, Job lived after his recovery). That V's total for the years Job lived is not the expected sum of 255 but 248 finds V haplessly recording the traditional figure for the length of Job's life. This feature alone should preclude a wrongheaded expectation of chronological perfection in an apocryphon where the interest lies quite beyond mathematical accuracy. In summary, P's scheme is not really self-contradictory, although it is rather artless and certainly less believable than V's consistent seven-year scheme. S simply accords with P, except for its longer ending.

d. On this and the other figures in 16:3, see n. b to 9.

- 4 yoke of oxen. •All these he destroyed by himself, according to the authority he had received against me. 8:3
- 5,6 The rest of my herds were confiscated by my fellow countrymen, who •had been well treated by me, but who now rose up against me and took away the 7 remainder of my animals. •They reported to me the destruction of my goods, but I glorified God and did not blaspheme.

cf. Job 1:22;
2:10

2. His children

- 1 17 Then the devil, when he had come to know my heart, laid a plot against me. 20:1
2 Disguising himself as the king of the Persians,^a he stood in my city gathering 6:4
3 together all the rogues in it. •And with a boast he spoke to them saying, “This 2Mac 1:20,33 man Jobab is the one who destroyed all the good things of the earth and left nothing—the one who distributed to the beggars, to the blind, and to the lame—
4 yet the one who destroyed the temple of the great god and leveled the place of drink offerings. Therefore, I also shall repay him according to what he did against the house of god. Come along then and gather spoils for yourselves of all his animals and whatever he has left on the earth.” 2:2
5 They answered him and said, “He has seven sons and three daughters. Possibly they might flee to other lands and plead against us as though we were tyrants and in the end rise against us and kill us.” 1:2 Job 1:2
6 So he said to them, “Have no fear at all. Most of his possessions I have already destroyed by fire. The others I confiscated. And as for his children, I shall slay them.”
- 1 18 When he said these things to them, he departed and smashed the house down 1:19
2 upon my children and killed them.^a •My fellow countrymen, when they saw that what was said truly happened, pursued and attacked me and began to snatch up 3 everything in my house. •My eyes witnessed cheap and worthless men at my tables and couches.^b
4 I was unable to utter a thing; for I was exhausted—as a woman numbed in her pelvic region by the magnitude of birth pangs^c—remembering most of all the battle foretold by the Lord through his angel and the songs of victory which had 4:4 3:1
6 ^dAnd I became as one wishing to enter a certain city to discover its wealth and 17 a. This is the second disguise of Satan—here the “devil” (see n. c to 6). Appropriately, only another king could rally opposition to Job “the king of all Egypt” (28:7; see n. d to 3). And what better “king” (conveniently here left nameless, however) than “the king of the Persians,” who in the person of Cyrus (Ezra 1:2–7)—to name but one—had previously shown kindness to the Jews? Disguised thus as a royal benefactor, Satan could appeal to Job’s countrymen the more convincingly. Choice of the phrase may reflect the author’s conviction that Job lived in the Persian era. See the Introduction above for a possible clue to date of composition furnished by this reference to the king of the Persians.

18 a. Again (as 17:6) Satan is blamed for the tragedy attributed in Job 1:18f. to a great wind.

b. S here has an unusual longer reading: “My eyes saw those who make lamps at my tables and couches: Cheap and worthless men they were.”

c. The same simile at 1Thes 5:3 stresses suddenness, rather than exhaustion as here.

d. The point of this striking parable of the beleaguered mariner (18:6–8) lies in Job’s expressed willingness to see his vast wealth plundered (18:2), buoyed as he is by the hope of eventual improved survival as the angel promised (4:6–11). It is tempting to wonder if the author of TJob may have intended a connection with the promise of 4:9, “You shall be raised up in the resurrection,” in a mood similar to Heb 11:8–16 (cf. 12:21f.). Although the notion of a heavenly citizenship—with earthbound living thought of as a sojourn—emerges strongly in Christian circles (Phil 3:20; Eph 2:19; Rev 21:2; later Augustine, De civitate dei), Philo speaks similarly (Agr 65). In yet another Alexandrian piece (4Mac 7:1–3), marine imagery very similar to TJob 18:6–8 occurs. It may be merely coincidental that the same three figures used in TJob 18:4–8 (parturient woman, valued city, beleaguered ship) likewise describe personal distress in one of the Qumran hymns: “And they made my soul like a ship on the depths of the sea, and like a fortified city before them that besiege it. And I was confined like the woman about to bring forth at the time of her first child-bearing” (1QH 3.6f.). The otherworldliness motif implied in the parable—relinquish any worldly goods necessary to reach the destined port—also characterizes Job’s psalm of affirmation (33:2–4) and the “changed hearts” of his daughters when they were in ecstasy (48:2; 49:1; 50:2).

7 gain a portion of its splendor, *and as one embarked with cargo in a seagoing ship. ^{4Mac 7:1-3}
 Seeing at mid-ocean the third wave^e and the opposition of the wind, he threw the cargo into the sea, saying, "I am willing to lose everything in order to enter this 8 city so that I might gain both the ship and things better than the payload." *Thus, I also considered my goods as nothing compared to the city about which the angel ^{3:1} spoke to me.

1 19 When the final messenger^a came and showed me the loss of my children, I
 2 was deeply disturbed. *And I tore my garments,^b saying to the one who brought 3 the report, "How were you spared?" *And then when I understood what had 4 happened I cried aloud, saying, *"The Lord gave, the Lord took away. As it seemed ^{Job 1:21b} good to the Lord, so it has happened. Blessed be the name of the Lord!"

3. His health

1 20 So when all my goods were gone, Satan concluded that he was unable to ^{17:1}
 2 provoke me to contempt.^a *When he left he asked my body from the Lord so he 3 might inflict the plague on me. *Then the Lord gave me over into his hands to be used as he wished with respect to the body; but he did not give him authority over my soul.

4 Then he came to me while I was sitting on my throne mourning the loss of my 5 children. *And he became like a great whirlwind and overturned my throne. For ^{6:4} 6 three hours^b I was beneath my throne^c unable to escape. *And he struck me with a severe plague from head to toe.^d ^{Job 2:7f.}

7.8 In great trouble and distress I left the city,^e and I sat on a dung heap *worm- ^{Job 7:5} ridden^f in body. Discharges from my body wet the ground with moisture. Many 9 worms were in my body, *and if a worm ever sprang off, I would take it up and

e. Popularly (as sometimes the ninth, or tenth) held to be the most devastating one, as Plato, Republic 472a = 5:17.

19 a. The only messenger mentioned in TJob, while LXX describes four such envoys of disaster (1:14, 16, 17, 18).

b. As a sign of grief: See n. d to 28. The scene parallels Job 1:18–21 LXX, but there shaving of the head is included.

20 a. See n. e to 15.

b. Similar three-hour periods at 30:2; 31:4 V; cf. three days at 23:7; 24:9; 31:4 P S and three years at 27:6 P S.

c. P, followed by Slav, has Satan on the throne; V puts Job on the ground; S is followed in this translation as giving the necessary sense.

d. Lit. "From feet to head" P; "from pate to the toenails of my feet" S V Slav. Note reversal of order.

e. TJob follows LXX (Job 2:8) in locating Job outside the city; no such statement is made in the MT. The crucifixion of Jesus, in line with common practice, was effected outside the city (Jn 19:20). Cf. Heb 13:9–14.

f. Cf. 24:3. This detail of Job's illness seems to be worked into the narrative of TJob (perhaps from there to the LXX interpolation at Job 2:9) from the more poetic plaint of Job at Job 7:5. Worms, which were said to accompany certain cases of illness (Herodotus 4.205; 2Mac 9:9; Josephus, Ant 17.169 = 16.6.5; Acts 12:23; Eusebius, HE 2.10.1; Lucian, Alexander 59), became a Jewish, then Christian, eschatological forecast for the ungodly (Isa 66:24; Jdt 16:17; Eccl 7:17; Mk 9:48). It is boils that afflict Job according to the LXX (helkos, Job 2:7) and the MT (š'hîn). But TJob speaks of Job as worm-ridden (skōlēkobrōton to sōma). A similar feature appears in Visio Pauli 49 (M. R. James, ed., Apocrypha Anecdota [T&S 2.3; Cambridge, 1893] p. xx). A similar reference appears in ARN, where the relevant passage may be translated, "And worms would crawl down him and worms would make holes, holes in his flesh, until one of the worms made a strife with its fellow. What did Job do? He took up one and laid it down upon its hole. And the other he laid down on its hole." (S. Schechter, ed., Aboth de Rabbi Nathan [New York, 1945] p. 164, ll. 26–28.) Even more significant, however, is the similar tradition in Tertullian, De patientia 14.2–7 (J. Borleffs, ed., pp. 42f.). In this work—written before he became a Montanist—Tertullian clearly reflects TJob 20:8f. in a vivid, if vulgar, passage: "How God laughed! How what was already lacerated was the more mangled when, with laughter, he would call the little beasts breaking forth back into the pits and pastures of his furrowed flesh!" (De patientia, 14.5). So much resembles the passage in ARN just listed; but De patientia shows other parallels to features of the Job story not found in LXX (De patientia 14.2/TJob 1:5; De patientia 14.4/TJob 24:4; 25:10c). It appears warranted to conclude Tertullian utilized a Jewish testament praising patience as a source for his own treatment of the same theme.

return it to its original place, saying, "Stay in the same place where you were put until you are directed otherwise by your commander."^g 7:9

4. His wife^a

Sitis enslaved

1 21 I spent forty-eight^b years on the dung heap outside the city under the plague Job 2:8 2 so that I saw •with my own eyes, my children,^c my first^d wife carrying water into the house of a certain nobleman as a maidservant so she might get bread^e and bring 3 it to me. •I was stunned. And I said, "The gall^f of these city fathers! How can they 4 treat my wife like a female slave?" •After this I regained my senses.^g 35:4-6

1 22 After eleven years they kept even bread itself from me, barely allowing her 21:1 2 to have her own food. •And as she did get it, she would divide it between herself and me, saying with pain, "Woe is me! Soon he will not even get enough bread!"^a

Sitis sells her hair to Satan

3 She would not hesitate to go out into the market to beg bread from the bread cf. 24:7-10 sellers so she might bring it to me so I could eat.

1,2 23 When Satan knew this, he disguised himself^a as a bread seller.^b •It happened 6:4 by chance that my wife went to him and begged bread, thinking he was a man.^c 7:6 3,4 And Satan said to her, "Pay the price and take what you like."^d •But she answered 24:8 him and said, "Where would I get money? Are you unaware of the evils that have 5 befallen us? •If you have any pity on me, show mercy; but if not, you shall see!"^e 6 And he answered her, saying, "Unless you deserved the evils, you would not 7 have received them in return."^d •Now then if you have no money at hand, offer me

g. The worm's forced compliance with its ordained role shows a touch of humor on the part of the author, who elsewhere associates animals and humans by having the cattle mourn over the death of Sitis (20:11; cf. Mk 1:13b). Acquiescence in one's fate has links with a well-known Stoic principle, "Fate (heimarmenē) is said to be the cause of all that is, the rational principle by which the world is managed (Diogenes Laertius 7.149). The incident of the replaced worms functions as but one more way to extol the virtue of patience. Curiously, while the "commander" is in the author's mind assuredly God (cf. 26:4; Job 2:10), it is nevertheless Satan to whom Job's plague was just attributed (20:6; cf. n. a to 18).

c. Such direct address is characteristic of the testament form. V reads "my beloved children."
d. S V Slav read "my humiliated wife."

e. Frequently mentioned in TJob, including Satan's disguise as a bread seller (22:3–23:2). The LXX Job makes no mention of bread in connection with Job's diet.

f. Lit. "pretentious boastfulness." See n. e to 15.

g. Lit. "I regained my patient capacity to reason"; this is another reference to the patience motif. At 35:4–6 Baldad undertakes an assessment of Job's mental balance.

22 a. Unlike the speech of Sitis (24f.), these words have no counterpart in the text of the LXX.

21 a. According to the storytelling artistry of the author, Job loses his first wife, Sitis, in three stages. She is first driven to impoverished slavery in order to support Job (21:1–22:2). When her owners restrict her food supply, she sells her hair to Satan (22:3–23:11). Finally, in a passage closely resembling the LXX addition to Job 2:9, she makes a prolonged and embittered speech inviting Job to curse God and die (24; 25:9f.). Her speech is interrupted by a poetic lament for Sitis (25:1–8) and followed by Job's "patient" response (26). The account of Sitis is resumed and completed in 39f.

b. So P S, but seven years in V Slav. See n. c to 16.

23 a. This is the third (or fourth? See n. c to 6) disguise of Satan, who first (6:4) became a beggar, a role now assumed by Job's wife. As in the first disguise, Satan appears to a woman in Job's circle (6:4, to his female servant; 23:2, to his wife). In none of the disguised appearances (6:4; 17:2; 23:2) does Satan encounter Job directly, which leads to Job's challenge for confrontation at 27:1.

b. P has simply "merchant."

c. Cf. 7:6; 27:2; 42:2. NT also knows of the confusion of angels with men: Acts 12:15; Heb 13:2; Rev 19:9f.

d. Similar ideas abound in the biblical Job (e.g. 4:7f.; 11:6c; cf. Jn 9:2).

the hair of your head^e and take three loaves of bread. Perhaps you will be able to 8 live for three more days.” •Then she said to herself, “What good is the hair of 9 my head compared to my hungry husband?” •And so, showing disdain for her hair, she said to him, “Go ahead, take it.”

10 Then he took scissors, sheared off the hair of her head, and gave her three 11 loaves, while all were looking on. •When she got the loaves, she came and brought them to me. Satan followed her along the road, walking stealthily, and leading her heart astray.

25:10; 27:1;
 48:2; 49:1; 50:2

The speech of Sitis: begun

1 24 At once my wife drew near. Crying out with tears^a she said to me, “Job, Job!^b Job 2:8b-9d
 How long will you sit on the dung heap outside the city thinking, ‘Only a little 20:7 2 longer!’ and awaiting the hope of your salvation? •As for me, I am a vagabond and a maidservant going round from place to place. Your memorial has been wiped 39:8; 40:4; away from the earth—my sons and the daughters of my womb for whom I toiled 43:5,17
 3 with hardships in vain.^c •And here you sit in worm-infested^d rottenness, passing 20:8 4 the night in the open air. •And I for my part am a wretch immersed in labor by day and in pain by night, just so I might provide a loaf of bread and bring it to 5 you. •Any more I barely receive my own food, and I divide that between you and 6 me—wondering in my heart that it is not bad enough for you to be ill, but neither do you get your fill of bread.

7,8 “So I ventured unashamedly to go into the market, •even if I was pierced in cf. 22:3-23:11 my heart to do so. And the bread seller said, ‘Give money, and you shall receive.’
 9 But I also showed him our straits and then heard from him, ‘If you have no money, woman, pay with the hair of your head and take three loaves. Perhaps you will 10 live for three more days.’ •Being remiss, I said to him, ‘Go ahead, cut my hair.’
 So he arose and cut my hair disgracefully in the market, while the crowd stood by and marveled.”

e. No mention was made at TJob 19:2 of Job’s own head-shaving, listed among the grief reactions at Job 1:20. Shaving of the head in TJob is not a sign of grief but of disgrace (23:10; 24:10), as it is also at 1Cor 11:6: “In fact, a woman who will not wear a veil ought to have her hair cut off. If a woman is ashamed to have her hair cut off or shaved, she ought to wear a veil.” The disgrace might arise from cropped hair as (1) a mode of humiliating punishment (Aristophanes, Thesmophoreazusae 838: for rearing a cowardly son; or, Tacitus, Germania 19: for adultery) or (2) the practice of female homosexuals (Lucian, Dialogi meretricii 290 = 5.3).

24 a. A sample of the high interest of TJob in lamentation.

b. The double vocative is repeated near the end of Sitis’ speech (25:9) but appears in neither the LXX nor the MT.

c. The very close agreement between TJob 24:1-3 and the longer LXX form of Job 2:9 (cf. Job 2:8b-9e LXX) does not clearly settle the uncertain textual relation between the two.

d. See n. f to 20.

e. This paragraph repeats information in 23:2-10.

f. TJob 24:8 is textually unclear. V smooths the text, “And the bread seller said to me . . .” Translation is conjectural.

A lament for Sitis^a

- 1 25 Who is not amazed that this is Sitis,^b the wife of Job? 40:13
- 2 Who used to have fourteen draperies sheltering her chamber and a door within doors, so that one was considered quite worthy merely to gain admission to her presence:
- 3 Now she exchanges^c her hair for loaves!
- 4 Whose camels, loaded with good things, used to go off into the regions of 9:4 the poor:
- 5 Now she gives her hair in return for loaves!
- 6 Look at her who used to keep seven tables reserved at her house, at which 10:1 the poor and alien used to eat:
- 7 Now she sells outright her hair for loaves!
- 8 See one who used to have a foot basin of gold and silver, and now she goes along by foot:
- 9 Even her hair she gives in exchange for loaves!
- 10 Observe, this is she who used to have clothing woven from linen with gold: 39:1,4 But now she bears rags and gives her hair in exchange for loaves!
- 11 See her who used to own couches of gold and silver: 32:4 But now she sells her hair for loaves!

The speech of Sitis: concluded

- 9 "Job, Job! Although many things have been said in general, I speak to you in 10 brief: ^aIn the weakness of my heart, my bones are crushed.^d Rise, take the loaves, 23:11 be satisfied. And then speak some word against the Lord and die.^e Then I too shall Job 2:9e be freed from weariness that issues from the pain of your body."

25 a. Possibly an interpolation, inserted at a logical point, just following the report of the reaction of the crowd to the cutting of her hair (24:10). Omission of the lament for Sitis (25:1–8) leaves undisturbed the continuity of the narrative. Inclusion of poetic pieces appropriate to narrative context but abruptly inserted without introduction is paralleled at 1Mac 1:24–28; 3:3–9, 45; 14:4–15; and Lk 1:14–17, 32f. This lament for Sitis contrasts her former wealth and charity with her present state in a way very similar to the description of Job's pious generosity (TJob 9–15), followed by the recital of his losses (TJob 16–26), and corresponding exactly in form to the lament for Job (TJob 32:2–12). As Job commissioned charitable missions to the poor (9:4f.) and set up free food centers in his own home (10:1–4), Sitis did likewise (25:4f.). While Job's wealth is described in terms of cattle (9:1–6; 10:5; 13:1–3), bakeries (10:7), and jewels (28:5f.), more feminine objects figure in the wealth of Sitis: draperies (25:2), a gold and silver foot basin (25:6), expensive clothing and furniture (25:7f.). Such connections between the descriptions of Sitis and Job argue against viewing 25:1–8 as an interpolation, a point strengthened by the fact that the similar lament for Job (32:2–12) is carefully worked into the prose context (see especially 31:5–32:1; 33:1). The abcb'db'e . . . pattern, which also characterizes the lament for Job, appears elsewhere in Jewish poetry: most clearly, Ps 136. While the repetition of a line is found in the pure lament form (e.g. 2Sam 1:19, 25, 27; cf. 1Mac 9:21), the taunting quality of the refrain in the lament for Sitis (25:3–8) more closely parallels the prophetic mocking songs sampled in Rev 18, with its thrice-repeated (18:10, 16–17a, 19) refrain of doom for Babylon. The form of the lament for Sitis thus represents none of the earlier, purer forms of funeral dirges. In fact, the lament is occasioned not by death but by disgrace (as that for Job was occasioned by privation). Since laments were recorded and passed on traditionally (TJob 40:14; 2Sam 1:18; Jer 9:19 [20]; 2Chr 35:35), the appearance of the lament for Sitis at this point in the TJob is not surprising. TJob's own term is a "royal lament" (basilikos thrēnos, 31:7), in which the refrain served for antiphonal response (31:8; 33:1; 43:3). The sharp temporal contrast between what one was and what one has become (in a tragic direction) is used at Ezek 27:32–36. What amounts to an inverse lament—contrasting a former disparaged with a present blessed state—appears in Christian literature (1Cor 6:9–11; Tit 3:3–7).

b. Various spellings in P S V and everywhere omitted by Slav. Apparently derived from Ausitis, the LXX translation (Job 1:1; 42:17b, e LXX [A]) for Job's home city, called Uz (úš) in the MT. LXX, but not MT, links Elihu with the same region (Job 32:2 LXX).

c. Reflecting TJob's characteristic interest in lexical variety, a different word for "exchange" is used in the six references (25:3, 4, 5, 6, 8); vs. 7 uses the same term as vs. 6. V assures variety by omitting the refrain ("Even . . . loaves") from vs. 6.

d. Or read, with S V, ". . . in brief: The weakness of my heart crushed my bones."

e. "Speak . . . and die," Job 2:9e LXX (A). The wording is a Heb. euphemism, actually inviting Job to curse God.

Job's response

- 1 26 So I answered her, "Look, I have lived seventeen^a years in these plagues 2 submitting to the worms in my body, •and my soul has never been depressed by 3 my pains so much as by your statement, 'Speak some word against the Lord and die.' •I do indeed suffer these things, and you suffer them too: the loss both of 4 our children and our goods.^b Do you suggest that we should say something against the Lord, and thus be alienated from the truly great wealth?^c •Why have you not 5 remembered those many good things we used to have? If we have received good things from the hand of the Lord, should we not in turn endure evil things? •Rather 6 let us be patient till the Lord, in pity, shows us mercy.
 7 "Do you not see the devil standing behind you^d and unsettling your reasoning
 8 so that he might deceive me too? For he seeks to make an exhibit of you as one of the senseless women who misguide their husbands' sincerity."^e

D. JOB'S TRIUMPH AND SATAN'S DEFEAT (27)

- 1 27 Again turning to Satan, who was behind my wife, I said, "Come up front!
 2 Stop hiding yourself!^a Does a lion show his strength in a cage? Does a fledgling
 3 take flight when it is in a basket?"^b Come out and fight!"
 4 Then he came out from behind my wife. And as he stood, he wept, saying, 5 "Look, Job, I am weary and I withdraw from you, even though you are flesh and 6 I a spirit. You suffer a plague, but I am in deep distress. •I^c became like one 7 athlete wrestling another, and one pinned the other. The upper one silenced the 8 lower one, by filling his mouth with sand^d •and bruising his limbs. But because 9 he showed endurance and did not grow weary, at the end the upper one cried out
 10 in defeat. •So you also, Job, were the one below and in a plague, but you conquered 11 my wrestling tactics which I brought on you."
 12 Then Satan, ashamed, left me for three years. •Now then, my children, you also 13 must be patient in everything that happens to you. For patience is better than 14 anything.^e

26 a. V Slav have "seven years." On chronology, see n. c to 16.

b. The text is corrupt at this point, the translation tentative.

c. Doubtless to be identified with Job's eternal and supercosmic splendor and majesty celebrated in Job's psalm of affirmation at 33:2-9.

d. The phrase with a similar ring at Mk 8:33 (cf. Mt 4:10; 16:23; Lk 4:8) wishes the devil out of sight. Here, inspiration for the speech of Sitis is attributed to Satan (going beyond LXX), who by his location behind Sitis continues to be hidden from Job. See n. a to 23.

e. Developed from a line in Job 2:10 LXX, the same source as that used for the quotation at TJob 26:4.

27 a. Only here does Job meet Satan directly.

Hitherto, Satan appeared, largely in disguise, to members of Job's circle: Now he is climactically challenged by Job (cf. n. a to 23).

b. Neither the caged lion (as Ezek 19:9 LXX) nor the boxed fledgling (cf. Eccl 11:30) can show its full capabilities; likewise Satan cannot perform his best in hiding.

c. Following S V: P has "You became . . ."

d. The wrestling was often done in sand pits (e.g. Lucian, Anacharsis 2).

e. This paragraph concludes the first major section of the TJob, in which Job successfully withstood the indirect attacks of Satan, finally challenging him directly and conquering (27:5) the one whom the angel promised would wage war against Job (4:3). The concluding aphorism in praise of patience is typical of the testament genre.

III. Job and the Three Kings (28–45)^a

A. JOB RECOGNIZED AND THE KINGS ASTONISHED (28–30)

- 1.2 28 After I had spent twenty years under the plague, •the kings^b also heard about 21:1
what happened to me. They arose and came to me, each from his own country,^c Job 2:11-13 3 so that they might encourage me by a visit. •But as they approached from a distance, they did not recognize me. And they cried out and wept, tearing their 4 garments and throwing dust.^d •They sat beside me for seven days and nights. And 29:4; 30:4; 31:1
 5 not one of them spoke to me.^e •It was not due to their patience^f that they were silent, but because they knew me before these evils when I lived in lavish wealth.
 • For when I used to bring out for them the precious stones,^g they would marvel, Job 31:24 clapping their hands, and say, “If the goods of our three kingdoms were gathered 32:5
 into one at the same place, they would be no equal to the glorious stones of your 6 kingdom.” •For I was more noble^h than those from the east.
 7 But when they came to Ausitis asking in the city, “Where is Jobab, the king Job 1:3 of all Egypt?”ⁱ they said to them about me, •“He sits on a dung heap outside the 44:1 3:7 8 city. For twenty years he has not returned to the city.” •Then they asked about 20:7 9 my goods and the things which had befallen me were shown to them. 21:1
- 1 29 When they heard that, they left the city together with the citizens. And my 20:7 2 fellow citizens showed me to them, •but they remonstrated, saying I was not Jobab.
 3 Since they were still quite in doubt, Eliphas—the king of the Temanites^a—turned Job 2:11
 31:5; 32:12;

28 a. This second major section of the TJob retains the order of the canonical Job in bringing on the three friends only after the incident with Job's wife. The “friends” of MT (Job 2:11) in LXX already became kings (see n. d to 3), a shift shared by TJob. A bit of suspense characterizes this as the preceding and following sections: Only after a series of disguises does Satan meet Job head on (27:1f.); only after seven days of silence (28:4), extensive fumigation (31:2–4), and interrogation (31:1; 38:6) are the fellow kings convinced that the tragic figure before them is indeed Job in his right mind; only after donning the charismatic sashes do the daughters—and they alone—get to witness Job's ascent to heaven (47:11; 52:9). The sequence of the appearance of the kings follows that of the discourses in the biblical Job: Eliphas, Baldad, Sophar, Elihu.

b. See nn. d to 3 and a to 28.

c. See n. a to 29.

d. A customary symbol of grief, here done by the three friends, later by Job himself (29:4). The language in both places parallels Job 2:13 LXX, where, however, LXX omitted “toward heaven” of MT (cf. Acts 22:23). The custom of throwing the earth “toward heaven” or on one's head (TJob 29:4; cf. 2Mac 10:25; Jdt 9:1; Rev 18:19) may have originated with the conveyance in baskets carried on the head of earth used by grieving relatives to bury a deceased member of the family.

e. V adds here the names of the four kings, which contrasts with its omission of the names of the ten children at 1:3f., but agrees in both instances with LXX.

f. Job's patience is contrasted with the absence of that virtue in his friends.

g. Such as characterized Job's throne (32:5); cf. the disclaimer that he put his trust in them (Job 31:24 LXX). Josephus (War 2.8.136 = 7.137) reports that the Essenes cherished among their esoteric interests “the works of the ancients” wherein “they study the healing of diseases, the roots offering protection, and the properties of stones.” BB 16b preserves a tradition that “Abraham had a precious stone hung about his neck which brought immediate healing to any sick person who looked on it.” But it is not such medicinal values of stones but their proof of wealth which is in view here. Collections of gems (daktuliothēke) existed after Alexander, and the elder Pliny (Historia naturalis 37.5.11) names the first Roman gem collector (Scaurus). Is Job here portrayed as such a gem collector? Theophrastus (De lapidibus 24.55) refers, with some hesitation, to unspecified records that mention unusually large gems sent to Egyptian kings as gifts from Babylonian kings (24) and that describe royal Egyptian synthetic gem manufacture (55). If gemology was a feature of hellenistic Egyptian royalty, the argument for an Alexandrian provenance for TJob may thereby be strengthened.

h. “You are more noble” S V.

i. This phase may suggest an Egyptian origin for TJob. V's longer reading adds to Job's Egyptian kingdom “all this territory,” suggesting V may have known that Ausitis was not to be located in Egypt. The reference to Egypt might also have arisen from the frequent appearance of the word in the T12P, probably well known to the author of TJob.

29 a. Only for Eliphas is the homeland of any of the kings identified in TJob. The ethnic references for the other kings given at Job 2:11 LXX may have been omitted in TJob because Teman was much better known than the other sites (Ezek 25:13; Amos 1:12) and was renowned for its wisdom (Jer 49:7; Obad 8, 9; 1Bar 3:22f.).

4 to me and said, "Are you Jobab, our fellow king?" • And I wept, shaking my head^b and throwing dust on it. And I said to them, "I am indeed."^c 36:1; 3:7
28:3 31:6; 36:1

1 30 When they saw me shaking my head, they dropped to the ground in a faint. 31:8; 34:5
2 And their troops were disturbed at seeing their three kings collapsed on the ground 42:3
3 as if dead, for three hours. • Then they arose and began saying to one another,
4 "We do not believe that this is he!" • Then they sat for seven days reviewing my 28:4 5 affairs, recalling my herds and goods and saying, • "Have we not known about the many good things sent out by him into the cities and the surrounding villages^a to 9:4 be distributed to the poor, besides those established at his house? How then has he now fallen into such a deathly state?"

B. ELIPHAS: LAMENTS JOB'S LOSSES (31–34)

Eliphaz confirms Job's identity

1 31 And after seven days of such considerations, Eliphaz^a spoke up and said to 28:4 his fellow kings, "Let us approach him and question him carefully to see if it is 35:6 really he himself or not."
2 But since they were about a half stadion^b distant from me because of the stench^c of my body, they arose and approached me with perfumes in their hands, 32:8; 34:4 3 while their soldiers accompanied them scattering incense^d around me so they would 39:8
4 be able to approach me. • And they spent three days^e furnishing the incense.
5 And when they had come near me, Eliphaz spoke up and said to me,
"Are you Jobab, our fellow king?^f 29:3
Are you the one who once had vast splendor?
Are you the one who was like the sun by day in all the land?
Are you the one who was like the moon and the stars that shine at midnight?"
6 And I said to him, "I am indeed." 29:4

A lament of Eliphaz for Job

7 And so, after he had wept with a loud wailing, he called out a royal lament 40:14
8 while both the other kings and their troops sang in response.^g 30:2 33:1; 43:3; 44:1

b. In both LXX (Job 16:14; Lam 2:15) and NT (Mt 27:39) references to shaking the head refer to scornful derision mounted by others; Job here in pained grief heaps scorn on himself.

c. Same language (egō eimi) as used of Jesus in the Gospels.

30 a. P reads "villages and the surrounding cities." The translation follows S V.

31 a. Confusion exists in the textual witnesses between the names of Elihu and Eliphaz. P S V here all read Elious. At 29:3 Eliphaz appears as the first of the royal interviewers, corresponding with the biblical order. Eliphaz should dominate through TJob 34, after which Baldad appears. Indeed Eliphaz is named at 34:2, 5 by P S V. Yet the same witnesses all read Elious at 31:1, 5; 32:1 (also 33:1 P S). Possibly, Elious (Elihu probably is intended) is a sort of pseudo-Satan figure standing behind and inspiring Eliphaz (cf. 41:5; 42:2) so that either may be said to be the originator of the insulting words. This translation adopts the conjecture of Riessler (p. 1334) reading Eliphaz for Elihu at 31:1, 5; 32:1; 33:1, thereby unifying 29–34 as an Eliphaz section. Eliphaz at 31:1, at least, appears in the recently discovered 5th cent. A.D. Cop. translation of the TJob, Papyrus Colon 3221.

b. About 304 feet.

c. 2Mac 9:9–12 says the terminal illness of Antiochus IV was accompanied by worms and by an odor so repulsive to his troops that he could not be carried.

d. But without magical connotations of fumigation such as appear with the apotropaic effects of a smoke contrived from the heart and liver of a fish; cf. Tob 6:8.

e. V has "three hours."

f. The questions anticipate the poetic lament in ch. 32.

g. Antiphonal singing also at TJob 43:3; 44:1, but the references are absent in V at 31:8; 44:1. The refrains of the hymns at TJob 25, 32, 33, 43:4, 17 suit remarkably Philo's remark that the Therapeutae use traditional as well as newly composed hymns, at times joining in on "the last lines or the refrains" (Vita cont 80).

- 1 32 Hear then the lament^a of Eliphaz as he celebrates for all^b the wealth of Job:^c
 2 "Are you the one who appointed 7,000 sheep for the clothing of the poor?"^d 9:3
 Where then is the splendor of your throne?
 Are you the one who appointed 3,000 camels for the transport of goods to 9:4
 the needy?
 Where then is the splendor of your throne?
 3 Are you the one who appointed the thousand^e cattle for the needy to use 10:5 when plowing?
 Where then is the splendor of your throne?
 4 Are you the one who had golden couches^f but now sits on a dung heap? 25:8
 Now where is the splendor of your throne?
 5 Are you the one who had a throne of precious stones, but now sits in 28:5 ashes?^g
 Now where is the splendor of your throne?
 6 ^hWho opposed you when you were in the midst of your children? For you cf. Job 29:5 were blooming as a sproutⁱ of a fragrant fruit tree!
 Now where is the splendor of your throne?
 7 Are you the one who established the sixty^k tables set for the poor? 10:1
 Now where is the splendor of your throne?
 8 Are you the one who had the censers of the fragrant assembly,^l now you 52:4 live amid a foul stench? 31:2 9 Are you the one who had golden lamps on silver stands, but now you await the light of the moon?
 Where then is the splendor of your throne?
 10 Are you the one who had the ointment of frankincense,^m but now you are in straits?
 Where then is the splendor of your throne?
 11 Are you the one who jeered at the unjust and the sinners, but now you too Job 5:22 *have become a joke?*ⁿ Job 12:4
 Now where is the splendor of your throne?

32 a. Possibly a development of a line at Job 29:20 LXX, "My splendor was newly upon me."

b. "For the children" in P, a change calling only for an additional iota (pasin for pasin).

c. S here adds "Where then is the splendor of his throne?" Use of the third person pronoun, in contrast to the second person refrain throughout the lament itself, may suggest S used the phrase as a title for the lament.

d. The question that introduces the refrain may be translated, with equal grammatical warrant, as an assertion tinged with sarcasm: "You are the one who appointed 7,000 sheep for the clothing of the poor: Where then is the splendor of your throne?" and similarly throughout 32:2–12.

e. Equivalent to the "500 yoke" mentioned at 10:5; 16:4; Job 1:3.

f. Sitis also was said to have had couches of gold and silver; cf. 25:8. Cf. Job's golden lamps on silver stands (32:9) and Sitis' clothing of gold-woven linen (25:7).

g. S. P reads "sits on the road."

h. This verse closely parallels in thought, if not in language, Job 29:5 LXX (lines reversed), a favorite source for the author: "When I was very fruitful and my children surrounded me . . ."

i. The Qumran hymns speak often (1QH 6:15; 7:19; 8:6, 8, 10) of the "sprout" (nēser), but apparently as a self-designation for their own community drawn from Isa 11:1; 60:21. Some of these passages have been taken to refer to the Teacher of Righteousness and thus to a revered individual, as here (TJob 32:6) to Job.

j. S omits vs. 6. The obvious difference in style suggests these lines may have been added later.

k. But thirty according to 10:1—with twelve more for widows (10:2)—while Sitis is credited with seven (25:5). Slav evens the count, reading "fifty" for both Job (32:7) and Sitis (25:5).

l. The text is uncertain. References to Job's use of censers, lamps (32:9), and frankincense (32:10) appear to ascribe to him prerogatives held only by priests (cf. 2Chr 26:16–21). Use here of "assembly" (ekklēsia) may derive from Job 30:28 ("I stand up in the assembly" RSV), where Job contrasts his present cry for help with his former honored status in the city gate (Job 29:7–25, especially 29:7). It is difficult to say whether the assembly in view is cultic, juridical (as would suit Job 29:7–25), or even military (as TJob 31:2–4).

m. The parallelism here, which continues that in the two preceding verses, shows that the frankincense (libanos) is here a token of costliness, as it was in the two NT occurrences (Mt 2:11; Rev 18:13). See G. Van Beek, "Frankincense and Myrrh," BA 23 (1960) 70–95.

n. The word joke (chleuē) appears nowhere in LXX, but possibly stems from Job 12:4 LXX, "For a just and blameless man has become the object of mockery (chleuasma)."^o The idea, however, appears in the favored LXX source at Job 30:9; 31:30; cf. 30:1; 17:6.

- 12 Are you Job, the one who had vast splendor?
Now where is the splendor of your throne?''^o 29:3

Job's psalm of affirmation^a

- 1 33 After Eliphaz^b finished wailing while his fellow kings responded to him all 31:8 2 in a great commotion, *when the uproar died down, I said^c to them, "Quiet! Now I will show you my throne with the splendor of its majesty, which is among the 43:6 holy ones.^d 43:10
- 3 "My throne is in the upper world,^f and its splendor and majesty come from the right hand of the Father.^g
- 4 *The whole world shall pass away^h 33:4 and its splendor shall fade. And those who heed it shall share in its overthrow.
- 5 But my throne is in the holy land,ⁱ and its splendor is in the world of the 7 changeless one.^j 36:5

o. This vs. is found only in P, which—though it uses "Job" here—employs the name Jobab at 31:5 (and Job again at 33:2). At 25:1, the very similar taunting lament uses the name of Job's wife; cf. "Elihu" at 43:5, 17. Thus of the four poetic pieces in TJob, three are directed against named individuals.

33 a. Directly responding to the reproachful refrain in Eliphaz' mocking lament, Job asserts in this psalm of affirmation (TJob 33:3-9) his allegiance to the supramundane (hyperkosmos, 33:3), heavenly realm where—contrary to transient earthly reigns (33:8)—he has an eternal kingdom (33:9). In form, the seven-part poem alternates between four assertions of the supercosmic permanence of his "throne" (33:3, 5, 7, 9) and three evenly interspersed derogations of mundane transience (33:4, 6, 8). Each of the positive statements contains some variation of "my throne," which is reminiscent of the refrain characteristic of the two earlier poems (TJob 25, 32). The ascription of a heavenly throne to a revered figure is a frequent hagiographic technique in the literature of the period (Mt 19:28b = Lk 22:30, and cf. Mt 20:21; Rev 4:4; 11:16; 20:4; neo-Heb. examples in H. Odeberg, 3 Enoch or the Hebrew Book of Enoch [Cambridge, 1928, repr. 1973] p. 27, note to 3En 10:1, where Enoch has just such a throne set for him as he is proclaimed Metatron). But the rabbis felt anyone seated in heaven gives affront to the Holy One (Hag 15a). Job's claim to have a throne at the Father's right is thus a daring one.

b. Only V so reads. P has Elihu and S, Elious. See n. a to 31.

c. Dropping the first person, P reads "Job said."

d. A striking resemblance to the Qumran concept of the fellowship of the just with the angels (e.g. 1QH 3.21-23; 4.24f.; 11.10-12; 1QS 11.709; 1QSa 2.8f.) elsewhere in TJob expressed in his daughters' charismatic access to the language of the angels (48:3; 49:2; 50:2). Among the harsh (excommunicative?) judgments invoked on Elihu was the loss of such fellowship: "And the holy ones abandoned him" (43:10). Exactly as the Qumran members were themselves called "men of holiness" (1QS 8.17, 23; 9.8; cf. 8.20), so may "the holy ones" now rejoice at the discomfiture of Elihu (43:15; cf. 43:14). The whole of the hymn against Elihu (TJob 43:4-17), in fact, is replete with Qumran affinities.

e. This vs. follows 33:4 in V.

f. Neither LXX nor MT uses this term (hyperkosmos), which first appears in 5th cent. Christian (Cyril of Alexandria) or pagan (Iamblichus) mystical authors.

g. Only P reads "Father" here. S has "God" and V reads "Savior." S V speak of "the Father in the heavens." S V Slav add the line "My throne is eternal." Surprisingly, the phrase "from the Father's right hand" is not readily paralleled in the biblical tradition (MT, LXX, NT) though the tendency apparent at Acts 2:33 and Eph 1:17, 20 emerges clearly in later Christian examples, including exactly this phrase in a variant reading for Mk 16:19 (quoting Ps 109 [110]:1). The wide NT use of Ps 109 (110):1 regularly appears with "Lord" (as LXX), "God," or a circumlocution such as "power" (Mt 26:64; but note conflation at Lk 22:69: "at the right hand of the Power of God") or "majesty" (Heb 1:3; 8:1). "Father" is used of God nationally already at such places as Isa 63:16; 64:8; Mal 1:6; 2:10, and of God as the Father of individuals at least since Eccl 23:4 (cf. 23:1): "Lord Father and God of my life . . ."

h. Both NT parallels (1Cor 7:31; 1Jn 2:17) use the present tense. Cf. Did 10:6: "Let grace come and this world pass on."

i. "The holy land" as early as Zech 2:16; WisSol 12:3; 2Mac 1:8 refers to the promised land. But it is apparently not until Origen (Contra Celsum 7:29) that the term is used metaphorically of heaven, though the meaning might be anticipated in such places as Mt 5:5: "The gentle . . . shall have the earth for their heritage." One motif in intertestamental literature is the special privilege that attaches to those who live in Palestine (Joel 2:32; 4Ezra 13:48f.; 2Bar 29:3; 40:2). Charles, in a note to 2Bar 29:2 (Apocalypse of Baruch [London, 1896] pp. 51f.), summarizes rabbinic notions that (1) of three who will inherit the coming world, one is he who lives in Israel (Pes 113a); (2) leaving Israel forfeits the accumulated merit of the fathers (BB 91a); (3) he who dies in the Holy Land will rise first in the resurrection (Jalkut Shimeoni; Bereshit 130); and (4) the righteous dead, if they are to participate in the resurrection, would have to roll through underground passageways to Palestine (Ket 111a).

j. S V have "the unchangeable world." Parallelism with "Father" in 33:3, 9 suggests "the changeless one" here is a title for God, but there seems no firm reason to associate the title with a similar expression for an eon ("endless and un-

- 6 •Rivers will dry up, and the arrogance of their waves goes down into the depths of the abyss. Job 14:11
- 7 But the rivers of my land, where my throne is, do not dry up nor will they disappear, but they will exist forever.^k
- 8 •These kings will pass away, and rulers come and go; but their splendor and boast shall be as in a mirror.^l 34:4
- 9 But my kingdom is forever and ever, and its splendor and majesty are in the chariots of the Father.^m 52:6,8,10

Eliphaz' rejoinder

- 1,2 34 As I was saying these things to them so they would be quiet, •Eliphaz^a became enraged and said to the other friends, "What good has it done that we have come here with our armies to comfort him? •Look, now he accuses us! Let us then go back to our own countries. •Here he sits in the misery of worms and foul odors: and yet he is piqued at us. 'Kingdoms pass away and so do their sovereigns.^b But as for my kingdom,' he says, 'it shall last forever.' " •So Eliphaz, arising with great consternation, turned away from them in deep sadness and said, "I am leaving: We came to cheer him, and yet he demeans us in the presence of our troops."^c

C. BALDAD TESTS JOB'S SANITY (35:1–38:5)

- 1 35 Then Baldad seized him^a and said, "One should not speak that way to a man who not only is in mourning but also is beset by many plagues. •Take note: Although we are quite healthy, we were not strong enough to approach him because of the foul stench, except by the use of much perfume. •You there, Eliphaz, do you forget how you were when you fell ill^b for two days? •Now then, let us be patient in order that we may discover his true condition. Perhaps he is emotionally disturbed.^c Perhaps he recalls his former prosperity and has become mentally deranged. •For who would not be driven senseless and imbalanced when he is sick? •But allow me to approach him, and I will determine his condition."^d changing power") in Simonian Gnosticism (Hippolytus, Ref 6.17.7; cf. 6.12.4; 6.14.6).

k. The term "forever" (eis to diēnekēs)—found in Heb 7:3; 10:1, 12, 14—is not elsewhere used in NT or LXX, but the 2nd-cent. A.D. historian Appian uses it to say Julius Caesar was made dictator "forever" (Bella civilia 1.4).

l. I.e. transient. The same feature (not opacity) characterizes the mirrors of 1Cor 13:12 and Jas 1:23.

m. This remarkable phrase, "the chariots of the Father," is attested in P S V, while "Father" is used elsewhere of God only by P (33:3; 40:2; 47:11 [possibly of God here also]; 52:12). The textual validity of "Father" at 33:3 draws some strength from its appearance here; for the result then has the term "Father" artfully arranged in the first and last units of the poem, in each of which Job says his splendor and majesty are associated with the "Father." The passage is commonly connected with the so-called Merkabah mysticism (mystical speculation about the "chariots" [mrkbw] of God thriving on the fringe of hellenistic Judaism through and beyond NT times). Such speculations appear in a minor sectarian document from Qumran. Called the "Angelic Liturgy" (4QŠirŠabb 37–40), these fragmentary texts suggest an order of worship merging angelic cultic actions with the liturgy of the Qumran covenanters. But in contrast with these Qumran fragments, TJob has no sevenfold heaven nor is it even concerned with ecstatic descriptions of the throne or chariot as 4QŠirŠabb 40. In fact, TJob 33:9 asserts yet again the supramundane permanence of Job's own throne—not God's—by locating it with "the chariots of the Father." Perhaps an Alexandrianized early Merkabah tradition lies behind this unusual phrase.

34 a. Here, as not since 29:3, triply attested in P S V. See n. a to 31.

b. P has "administrations."

35 a. Seized Eliphaz, that is, who according to 34:5 was about to leave. S V Slav add "by the hand."

b. There is no canonical reference to the illness of Eliphaz, which may have been occasioned by the stench of Job's sickness.

c. The Gk. of chs. 35–38 shows a rich vocabulary for mental (in)stability which taxes the translator's ingenuity. The section may have been informed by Job 36:28b LXX: "In all these things your understanding was not deranged nor was your mind disturbed in your body."

- 1 36 Then Baldad, when he had arisen, approached me and said, “Are you Job?” 29:3
 And I said to him, “Yes.” 29:4
- 2 And he said, “Is your heart untroubled?”
- 3 And I said to him, “My heart is not fixed on earthly concerns, since the earth 48:2; 49:1; 50:2 and those who dwell in it are unstable. But my heart is fixed on heavenly concerns, 47:3 for there is no upset in heaven.”^a
- 4 And Baldad replied and said, “We know the earth is unstable, since of course 33:4
 it changes from time to time. Sometimes it steers an even course and is at peace;
 5 there are also times of war. •But as for heaven, we hear that it stays calm. But 33:5
 6 if you are truly sound of mind, I will ask you about something.^b • And if you answer me sensibly regarding the first query, I will ask you about a second matter.
 And if you answer me calmly, it will be clear that you are not emotionally disturbed.”
- 1 37 So he said, “In whom do you hope?”^a
- 2 And I said, “In the God who lives.”
- 3 And again he said to me, “Who destroyed^b your goods or inflicted you with these plagues?”
- 4 And I said, “God.” 4:3-5
- 5 And again he replied and said, “Do you hope upon God? Then how do you reckon him to be unfair^c by inflicting you with all these plagues or destroying your 6 goods? •If he were to give and then take away, it would actually be better for him not to have given anything. At no time does a king dishonor his own soldier who bears arms well for him. Or who will ever understand the deep things^d of the Lord 7 and his wisdom? Who dares to ascribe to the Lord an injustice? •Answer me this, Job.
- 8 “And again I say to you, if you are sound of mind and have your wits about you, tell me why we see the sun on the one hand rising in the east and setting in the west, and again when we get up early we find it rising again in the east? Explain these things to me if you are the servant of God.”^e
- 1 38 And to all this I said, “I do have my wits about me, and my mind is sound.
 Why then should I not speak out the magnificent things of the Lord?^a Or should 36 a. The gist of Job’s response—his alliance with the stable “heavenly concerns”—accords with the central theme of his psalm of affirmation (TJob 33). There it was his throne, here it is his mind (kardia/pseuchē). There it was the supramundane (hyperkosmos), here it is the “heavenlies” (epourania). With this relate the glossolalic participation of Job’s daughters in the same upper world (TJob 48:3; 49:2; 50:2). The whole motif, furthermore, may be compared to the postresurrection understanding of Christian existence implied in Col 3:1f.: “Since you have been brought back to true life with Christ, you must look for the things that are in heaven, where Christ is, sitting at God’s right hand. Let your thoughts be on heavenly things, not on the things that are on the earth.”

b. Putting riddles follows a typical wisdom motif (cf. H. Torczyner, “The Riddle in the Bible,” HUCA 1 [1924] 125–49). Job has his own riddle to ask, 38:3f.

37 a. The question—now sincere, not rhetorical—may arise from Job 17:15 LXX: “Where then is my hope?” The longer recension of Tob—reflected in the Vulgate as well as in the Heb. and Aram. fragments of Tob from Qumran—says Tobit’s misfortune happened “so that the example of his patience might be given to posterity, just as was also that of saintly Job” (Tob 2:12 Vulgate; cf.

Jas 5:11: “You have heard of the patience of Job”). The same passage (not paralleled in the shorter Gk. recension) also shows very high similarities with certain elements in the TJob: “For just as the kings would mock blessed Job, so also those who were subject to him and his kin would laugh at his way of life, saying, ‘Where is your hope? To what end did you give alms and perform burial rites?’” (Tob 2:15f. Vulgate).

b. God here, but Satan at 4:3–5.

c. The text is corrupt. P reads “How then can he be unfair by inflicting . . . ?” Kraft conjectures, “How then does he act unjustly when he judges, inflicting . . . ?”

d. This phrase is closer to NT expressions (1Cor 2:10) than to anything in LXX (but cf. Dan 2:22 LXX, “the deep and dark things”).

e. In LXX (e.g. 1:8; 2:3), Job is frequently called the “servant” (ho therapōn) of God. S V Slav omit the “if” clause.

38 a. The phrase “the magnificent things (ta megaleia) of the Lord” has been suggested as the title of a collection of angelic hymns. If so, Job appears here (38:1f.) to say that recital of angelic hymns, while entirely open to him in full possession of his mental powers, is inappropriate as a demonstration of sanity. Rather, he will show mental acuity in a way that will not offend the Lord, by

- 2 my mouth utterly blunder regarding the Master?^b Never! •Who are we to be busying ourselves with heavenly matters, seeing that we are fleshly, having our lot in dust and ashes?^c 5 Job 30:19
- 3 “Now then, so you may know that my heart is sound, here is my question for you: Food enters the mouth, then water is drunk through the same mouth and sent into the same throat. But whenever the two reach the latrine,^d they are separated from each other. Who divides them?”
- 4 And Baldad said, “I do not know.”
- 5 Again I replied and said to him, “If you do not understand the functions^e of the body, how can you understand heavenly matters?” 2

D. SOPHAR: OFFERS THE ROYAL PHYSICIANS (38:6–8)

- 6 Then Sophar replied and said, “We are not inquiring after things beyond us,^f but we have sought to know if you are of sound mind. And now we truly know 7 that your intelligence has been unaffected. •What then do you wish us to do for you? Look, since we are traveling^g we have brought along with us the physicians of our three kingdoms. Do you wish to be treated by them? Perhaps you will find relief.” cf. Job 36:28b
- 8 But I answered and said, “My healing^h and my treatment are from the Lord, who also created the physicians.” 47:6
Sir 38:1

E. SITIS: LAMENTS HER CHILDREN, DIES, AND IS BURIED (39–40)^a

- 1 39 While I was saying these things to them, my wife Sitis arrived in tattered 25:7 2 garments, •fleeing from the servitude of the official she served, since he had 3 forbidden her to leave lest the fellow kings see her and seize her. •When she came,
4 she threw herself at their feet and said weeping, •“Do you remember me, Eliphaz—you and your two friends—what sort of person I used to be among you and how 5 I used to dress? •But now look at my debut and my attire!”^b 25:7

asking a counterriddle—which baffles Baldad (38:3f.). “The great things” refers, in LXX, to the mighty deeds of God, chiefly those displayed at the Exodus (Deut 11:2; Ps 105 [106]:21). They were to be recited widely (Ps 70 [71]:19; Eccl 36:7). So the “mighty deeds” became a praiseful recital of the acts of God. Luke uses the same phrase to describe the content of glossolalia heard on the Day of Pentecost (Acts 2:11; cf. 10:46, “Since they could hear them speaking strange languages and proclaiming the greatness [megalounotōn] of God”). As the companion of Paul, who himself knew of tongues of angels (1Cor 13:1), Luke, with Paul, may have been aware of some tradition linking the glossolalic praise of God with angelic hymnody. While there is not sufficient evidence to say either Luke or Paul knew of the TJob, the concern of all three with prophetic experience at once ecstatic and angelic brings them closer together on this point than any other contemporary texts.

b. “Master” (despotēs) appears only here in the TJob. Cf. Job 5:8 LXX: “Lord and Master of all.”

c. This view of the “nothingness” of mankind, which permits neither ability nor right to meddle in heavenly matters, is frequently expressed; it constitutes the thrust of the God speeches in Job 38:1–41:25 (cf. especially Job’s response at 42:3b, “I have been holding forth on matters I cannot understand, on marvels beyond me and my knowledge”). See further the conversations concluded by 4Ezra 4:10f., 21 and Jn 3:12. TJob sees no conflict between this anthropological abnegation—reflected here in Job’s own words—and Job’s earlier claim that he sides with the “heavenlies” (36:3).

d. Neither P, S, nor V adopts a euphemism for “latrine” as Codex Bezae does for Mk 7:19 (= Mt 15:17, only here in NT) by reading (“sewer, drain,” ochetos).

e. “Foresight” in S.

f. Sophar’s denial that he and his friends were exploring inscrutables shows that the gist of Job’s remarks (38:1–5) was a caution against such speculation.

g. The text is uncertain.

h. In the ongoing narrative, Job’s healing is not detailed, though it must have occurred during the appearance of God to Job “through a hurricane and clouds” (42:1). Later (47:4–9), the effects of the healing and the role of Job’s charismatic phylactery are recalled.

39 a. TJob 39f. resume and complete the Sitis episode earlier treated at 21–26. On the name, see n. b to 25.

b. TJob 39:4f. summarize the lament for Sitis (25:1–8). Even the characteristic contrast (“But now . . .”) of the refrain is preserved.

6 Then, when they had made a great lamentation^c and were doubly exhausted, 53:2 7 they fell silent •so that Eliphaz seized his purple robe,^d tore it off, and threw it about my wife.

8 But she began to beg them, saying, “I plead with you, order your soldiers to 31:3 dig through the ruins of the house that fell on my children so that at least their 18:1 9 bones might be preserved as a memorial •since we cannot because of the expense. 24:2 10 Let us see them, even if it is only their bones. •Have I the womb of cattle or of a wild animal that my ten children have died and I have not arranged the burial 40:13 of a single one of them?”

11 And they left to dig, but I forbade it, saying, “Do not trouble yourselves in 12 vain. •For you will not find my children, since they were taken up into heaven^e by the Creator their King.”^f

13 Then again they answered me and said, “Who then will not say you are demented 35:4 and mad when you say,^g ‘My children have been taken up into heaven!’ Tell us the truth now!”

1 40 And I replied to them and said, “Lift me up so I can stand erect.” And they
2 lifted me up, supporting my arms on each side. •And then when I had stood up,
3 I sang praises to the Father.^a •And after the prayer I said to them, “Look up with 50:3; 52:12

c. Jewish funereal interests apparent here are illustrated at Tob 1:17–19 and Eccl 38:16–23. Here, as also TJob 19:2; 20:4; 53:1–4, it is a question of sincere and traditional laments (even if, fantastically, the animals share in the lamentation, 40:10!), and not the mocking laments of TJob 25:1–8 and 32:1–12. See also n. d to 28.

d. This sign of royalty was placed even about idols (LetJer 6:11, 71; cf. Jn 19:2, 5).

e. Body and soul, apparently, since (1) the search for bones would be fruitless (39:11) and (2) it is the children, not their souls, or spirits, merely, that have been taken to heaven (39:12f.; 40:3). Yet this seems to contradict the account of Job’s demise, where although his soul was borne off in a chariot to the east (42:10), his body was at once prepared (53:11) and buried after three days “in a beautiful sleep” (53:7). At the outset of the story, the angel had promised Job would be raised up in the resurrection (4:9; see n. c to 4), an echo (or source?) of Job 42:17a LXX. Though nothing direct is said of the future of the wicked in the TJob, the hymn against Elihu (TJob 43) speaks more of banishment, of separation from the “holy ones,” than it does of extinction or of consignment to any special abode of the wicked dead, either with or without a resurrection. (See 43:5, 6, 10.) Except for the assumption of the children, the view of life after death expressed in these passages in TJob is not unlike that of Job 23:28–31; 1En 91:10; 92:3; 103:3f.; TAB B 7, in which the bones and the bodies rest in the earth but the spirits rise in conscious joy. If the ascent to heaven of the children (leaving no bones behind!) seems inconsistent with the other references, it is only because TJob reflects a stage in the development of Jewish eschatology where considerable diversity appeared. Compared to Qumran thought, TJob openly asserts (as 4:9) the resurrection of the righteous, where Qumran (e.g. 1QH 3.19) tacitly assumes it, or, by virtue of intense eschatological immediacy, obviates it. TJob never reaches (at best, 43) the execratory vocabulary of damnation for the wicked characteristic of the Qumran texts (e.g. 1QS 4.11–14). Finally, Qumran knows nothing comparable to the bodily assumption into heaven, following death, of Job’s deceased children. While ancient worthies such as Elijah (without death, 2Kgs 2:9 LXX), Abraham (TAB B 7), Paul (before death, 2Cor 12:2, 4) were said to have been “taken up” (analambanein/analanēmpsis; for 2Cor, harpazein), the ascension of Jesus (Acts 1:11) should not be overlooked in this case. With Jesus, there was no discussion about body and/or soul, whereas Paul twice (2Cor 12:2f.) wondered if he were “in the body” during the ascent. The model of Jesus—ascension after death, consequent to resurrection—may betray a Christian hand somewhere in the editorial history of TJob.

f. TJob employs some unusual divine titles: “the great God” (17:4); “Master” (despotēs) (38:1); “the Master of virtues” (50:2); “the Creator” (dēmiourgos) and “King” here at 39:12. “Creator” (dēmiourgos) is used in NT only at Heb 11:10. None of the later gnostic contempt for the term “creator” appears here.

g. V reads for the quotation, “for when we were about to recover the bones of your children, you forbid us, saying, ‘They have been gathered up and are kept by their Creator.’”

40 a. So P; “I sang praises first to the Lord and to God” S; “. . . to God first” V. Kraft conjectures “I first gave thanks to the Lord.” On “Father” in TJob, see n. g to 33. Cf. singing praises to the Father with a similar line in the speculative hellenistic theosophic tract Poimandres 1.26, which says of the climax of the ascended soul upon its arrival at the eighth sphere, “And it sings (hymnei) to the Father with those who are there.”

your eyes to the east^b and see^c my children crowned^d with the splendor of the heavenly one.^e 52:10 43:14

4 And when she saw that, Sitis my wife fell to the ground worshiping and said, 21:2
 "Now I know that I have a memorial with the Lord. So I shall arise^f and return 24:2
 to the city and nap awhile and then refresh myself before the duties of my 5 servitude." •And when she left for the city she went to the cow shed of her oxen, 6 which had been confiscated by the rulers whom she served. •And she lay down near a certain manger and died in good spirits.^g 1:6

7,8 When her domineering ruler sought her but could not find her, •he went when 9 it was evening into the folds of the herds and found her sprawled out dead. •And all who saw^h cried out in an uproar of lament over her, and the sound reached 10 through the whole city. •When they rushed in to discover what had happened, 11 they found her dead and the living animals standing about weepingⁱ over her.^j

12 And so bearing her in procession, they attended to her burial, locating her near 52:12 13 the house that had collapsed on her children. •And the poor of the city made a 18:1 53:1,5f. great lamentation, saying,^k "Look! This is Sitis, the woman of pride and splendor! 25:1
 She was not even considered worthy of a decent burial!" 39:10

14 So then you will find in "The Miscellanies"^l the lament made for her. 41:6; 48:3; 49:3; 50:3; 51:4

F. JOB'S RECOVERY AND VINDICATION (41–45)

Elihu's insult

1 41 Eliphaz and the rest sat beside me after these things arguing and talking big 2 against me.^a •After twenty-seven days, they were about to arise and go to their 3 own countries, •when they were implored by Elihu, saying, "Stay here till I clarify Job 36:2
 this issue for him. You held on quite some time while Job boasted himself to be 4 a just man. •But I will not hold on. From the start I too made lamentation for him, 32:1
 remembering his former prosperity.^b And here now he speaks out in boastful 35:4

b. Same direction toward which Job is carried off at death (52:10). At least at Lk 1:78, the "east" (anatolē) had messianic connotations. Literal aid from the east—fellow Jews in Babylon—was recalled in 1Bar 4:36; 5:5. Josephus (War 2.128 = 2.8.5) mentions the prayers of the Essenes directed toward the sun; and according to Athanasius, Quaestiones ad Antiochum 37 (PG 28.620A), the Jews prayed toward the east. Christian practices in patristic times included baptizing toward the east and orienting churches in that direction. Contrast the north-south orientation of most graves at Qumran.

c. S V Slav have "when they looked, they saw."
 d. The anticipated future of the sons of truth, according to IQS 4.7, includes "the glorious crown" (k'ill kabbōd).

e. V has "the heavenly king."

f. This expression is not strong enough to suggest that Sitis shares Job's hope of resurrection (TJob 4:9).

g. S V have "... died disheartened."

h. Probably the city folk, but possibly the mourning animals of vs. 11.

i. Sympathetic participation of animals is an occasional feature of certain popular sectarian literature: the cooperative worm (20:9); Ignatius (Rom 4:2) seeks the aid of beasts in becoming the "pure bread of Christ"; cf. Mk 1:13, Jesus with the wild beasts; and 2En 58:6, where beasts are said to survive to accuse their abusers. (See an extensive n. to 2En 58:6 regarding Jewish and Greek notions of the rationality of animals in Charles, APOT, vol. 2, p. 464.

j. Vss. 9–11 show considerable disarray in the text witness. S has twice written the words "and the living animals . . . over her." V places vs. 9 after vs. 11.

k. The minuscule lament shows the same contrastive form as the longer laments of TJob 25, 32 (see n. a to 25).

l. Lit. "things omitted." Used in LXX as Gk. title for the two books commonly called 1 and 2 Chr. So called, because the books of "Chronicles" were to supply additional events omitted from 1 and 2 Kgs. TJob shows high interest in fabulous "books." Besides these unidentified "Miscellanies," also mentioned are "The Miscellanies of Eliphaz" (41:6), the "Hymns of Kasia" (49:3), and the "Prayers of Amaltheia's Horn" (50:3). Parallels at 49:3 and 50:3 suggest "The Spirit" as a title at 48:4. "The Great Things" (51:3; cf. 38:1; 51:4) could be yet another such title (see n. a to 38). The principle is anticipated by numerous "lost" books mentioned in the canonical literature (Num 21:14; Josh 10:13 MT; 2Sam 1:18; 1Kgs 11:41; 14:19, 29; 15:7; 1Chr 29:29; 2Chr 9:29; 12:15; 20:34; 26:22; 33:18f.; 35:25. Cf. 1Mac 16:24).

41 a. V has a lengthy restyling of vss. 1–3, showing dramatic literary improvement: "... against me, saying for 27 days that I had suffered this justly due to many sins and that there was no hope left for me. But I vigorously remonstrated. Filled with anger, they arose to leave in a rage. Then Elihu implored them . . ."

b. P adds here "And suddenly he has undertaken to exalt himself."

5 grandeur, saying he has his throne in heaven. •Listen to me now, and I will tell 33:2-9 you about his imaginary estate.” Then Elihu, inspired by Satan,^c spoke out against 6 me insulting words, •which are written down in “The Miscellanies of Eliphaz.”^d 40:14

The kings forgiven through Job’s intercession

1 42 After Elihu ended his arrogant speech, the Lord—having appeared plainly to Job 38:1
2 me through a hurricane and clouds^a—spoke •and censured Elihu,^b showing me
3 that the one who spoke in him was not a human but a beast.^c •And when the Lord 7:6 spoke to me through the cloud, the four kings also heard^d the voice of him who 30:2 52:9 spoke.
4.5 ^eAfter the Lord finished speaking to me, he said to Eliphaz, •“You there, Job 42:7-10
Eliphaz—you and your two friends—why did you sin? You have not spoken truly 6 regarding my servant Job. •Arise and have him offer up sacrifices on your behalf so your sin might be taken away. Except for him, I would have destroyed you.” 7.8 So they brought me the things for sacrifice. •And I took them and made an offering on their behalf, and the Lord received it favorably and forgave their sin. 43:4

A hymn against Elihu

1 43 Then when Eliphaz, Baldad, and Sophar knew that the Lord had showed them
2 favor regarding their sin—but had not considered Elihu worthy—•Eliphaz replied^a 3 and spoke up with a hymn^b •while the other friends and their troops sang to him
4 in response near the altar. •Eliphaz^c spoke in this manner:^d 31:8

c. In the canonical Job, Elihu makes a very graphic and explicit claim to inspiration: “For I am filled with words, choked by the rush of them within me. I have a feeling in my heart like new wine seeking a vent, and bursting a brand-new wineskin. Nothing will bring relief but speech, I will open my mouth and give my answer” (Job 32:18–20; cf. 32:8, “But now I know that it is a breath in man, the inspiration of Shaddai, that gives discernment”). While the biblical book attributes the inspiration to God (Job 32:8), TJob ascribes it to Satan (41:5; cf. 42:2).

d. See n. 1 to 40. The words of Elihu are preserved in the records of Eliphaz perhaps because Elihu is the subject of execration (TJob 43) and any invitation to consult his own records would be inappropriate.

42 a. A less restrained apocryphon may well have easily or fabulously amplified this event mentioned at Job 38:1.

b. Beyond his speech, nothing is heard of Elihu in the canonical book.

c. Cf. 23:2; 27:2, all of which attest a developed yet restrained view of Satan not unlike that of NT (e.g. Eph 2:2).

d. V omits the whole verse. S reads “. . . the cloud, they heard.”

e. TJob 42:4–8 slightly compresses Job 42:7–9 LXX, with the following differences: (1) LXX (42:7) says the kings did not speak the truth as Job did—TJob (42:5) says they did not speak truly regarding (kata) Job; (2) LXX (42:8) speaks of seven bullocks and seven rams, TJob (42:6) merely of “sacrifices”; (3) the names of the kings (42:9) in LXX are omitted in TJob (42:9; but cf. 28:4 V, where V has the names); (4) unusually, TJob in one or two cases does not follow the Alexandrian text of LXX.

43 a. P reads “Eliphaz received a spirit . . .” (or “the Spirit”?) P here omits “holy” before “spirit,” but includes it at 51:2. The activity of the spirit here is associated with speaking (or singing) the hymn (cf. 1Cor 14:15; Eph 5:18f.), but not with the inspiration of composing the hymn. Describing the hymn composition of the Therapeutae, Philo mentions no “spirit” (Vita cont 29.80). On the other hand, the Holy Spirit (according to 51:2 P; S has “holy angel,” V omits) is present in Nereus’ recording of the hymns (51:2 P). “Spirit” as inspiring agent is clear in such Jewish literature as 1En 91:1; MartIs 1:7; 5:14; TAB A 4; and 4Ezra 14:22. But in none of these examples is it a matter of hymn composition. But cf. Job’s query of Baldad, found at Job 26:4 LXX: “Whose breath is it that has come forth from you?”

b. See n. g to 31. Philo (Vita cont 80) identifies among the hymns of the Therapeutae those that were sung at the altar, as here and at 44:1, where in view is the altar where the sacrifices had just been offered by Job for his fellow kings (42:6–43:3).

c. Eliphaz, as the leading one of the visiting kings, gives the hymn. He also is the only one identified as to homeland (29:3); was first to speak upon the kings’ discovery of Job (29:3); and was first to be addressed by Sitis (39:4).

d. This hymn (43:4–17) is an imprecatory execration text given, according to TJob, at the altar when it became clear Elihu did not share in the forgiveness just mediated through Job’s sacrificial offices (42:5–43:3). Something like a refrain appears as the opening and closing lines (43:4, 17); it is not impossible the refrain originally appeared in alternation with the remaining verses so as to approximate the form of the laments in TJob 25, 32 (see n. g to 25). Some parallels with other material in TJob appear: e.g. cf. 43:10 with 33:2

	"Our sins were stripped off, and our lawlessness buried.	17; 42:8
5	Elihu, Elihu—the only evil one ^e —will have no memorial ^f among the living.	24:2
	His quenched lamp lost its luster,	Job 18:5
6	and the splendor of his lantern will flee from him into condemnation. For this one is the one of darkness and not of light.
	And the doorkeepers of darkness shall inherit his splendor and majesty. ^g	33:2
7	His kingdom is gone, his throne ^h is rotted.	33:3,5,7,9
	And the honor of his tent ⁱ lies in Hades.	11
8	He loved the beauty of the snake and the scales of the dragon .	Job 20:16
	Its venom and poison shall be his food.	12
9	He did not take to himself the Lord, nor did he fear him.
	But even his honored ones ^j he provoked to anger.
10	The Lord has forgotten him, and the holy ones abandoned him. ^k	33:2
11	But wrath and anger shall be his tent. ^l	7
	He has no hope in his heart, nor peace in his body.
12	He had the poison of asps ^m in his tongue.	Job 20:14
13	Righteous is the Lord, true are his judgments.
	With him there is no favoritism. He will judge us all together .	Job 9:32
14	Behold the Lord has come! Behold his holy ones are prepared, while crowns ⁿ lead the way with praises.	10 40:3

(for use of Job 18 LXX, see n. g to 43). Yet much of the language of the psalm is distinctive and its affinities with Qumran hymnody have been noted by Philonenko ("Le Testament de Job," Sem 18 [1968] 52f.). Even though it belongs to a considerably later period (5th to 6th cent. A.D.), a striking parallel is afforded by the Cop. gnostic apocryphon entitled Book of the Resurrection of Jesus Christ by Bartholomew the Apostle (ResBart). This text contains an execration against Judas Iscariot said to have been pronounced by Jesus in "Amente," an Egyptian mythological term for hell, where Jesus went following death and prior to resurrection and where he found Judas Iscariot. Both the Elihu hymn and the Judas invective (1) are poetic in form, (2) appear in the third person, (3) amount to an excommunicative curse, and (4) are uttered against a named individual. Striking conceptual similarities appear in the following paired excerpts (utilizing the present translation of TJob and, for ResBart, that of E. Budge, Coptic Apocrypha [London, 1913] p. 185; Cop. text, pp. 7-9 with plates VII-IX; excerpts from TJob are in textual sequence, those from ResBart are not):

TJob 43:5	Elihu . . . will have no memorial among the living
ResBart	Judas' inheritance has been taken away from among the living
TJob 43:5	his quenched lamp lost its luster
ResBart	the light departed and left him, and darkness came upon him
TJob 43:7	His kingdom is gone, his throne is rotted, and the honor of his tent lies in Hades
ResBart	his crown has been snatched away . . . the worm has inherited his substance . . . his house hath been left a desert
TJob 43:8	He loved the beauty of the snake and the scales of the dragon. Its venom and poison shall be his food.

ResBart

His mouth was filled with thirty snakes so that they might devour him

The Elihu hymn shows more literary finesse; it begins and ends with a similar couplet, for example. But both hymns must arise from the same literary stock, the roots of which reach through Job 18 LXX as far back as the "mocking dirges" in Isa 14 and Ezek 28.

e. Close the the Christian title for Satan, "the Evil One," which occurs at TJob 7:1 V; 20:2 V; cf. Mt 13:19 and 6:13.

f. The frequency of the expression "no memorial" in TJob (24:2; 39:8; 40:4; 43:5, 17) was anticipated by its occurrence at Job 18:17 LXX (cf. Job 2:9 with TJob 24:2 and see n. c to 24). With whom the "memorial" occurs varies: the earth (24:2; Job 2:9b), the living (43:5, 17), the Lord (40:4), or no such reference (39:8).

g. The themes and the language of 43:5f. appear in the LXX poem of Job: the vanished memorial (Job 18:17); the quenched lamp (Job 18:5f.; 21:17; 29:3); light/darkness motifs (Job 12:25; 17:12; 18:6, 18; 23:11; 26:10). Baldad's derisive description of the ungodly (Job 18:2-21 LXX), in particular, seems to inform TJob 43:5f.

h. The ill end of Elihu's "splendor and majesty" (vs. 6) and of his "throne" (vs. 7) contrast with the heavenly, supramundane character of Job's kingdom and throne (33:2, 3, 5, 9).

i. S V have "stateliness."

j. A title for angels, cf. 43:10, 14f.; 33:2.

k. The second member of a parallelism, first part of which is 43:9. Banishment, or excommunication, seems to be implied.

l. S V have "for emptiness."

m. S V Slav have "an asp."

n. Possibly angels.

- 15 Let the holy ones rejoice, let them leap for joy in their hearts,^o 10 16 for they have received the splendor they awaited.
 17 Gone is our sin, cleansed is our lawlessness. 4: 42:8
 And the evil one Elihu has no memorial among the living.^p 24:2

Job's restoration

- 1 44 After Eliphaz ended the hymn, while all were singing in response to him and 31:8
 encircling the altar, we arose^a and entered the city^b where we now make our home. 28:7 2 And we held great festivities in the delight of the Lord. Once again I sought to 9:1-15:9; 45:2 do good works for the poor.
 3 And all my friends and those who had known me as a benefactor came to me. Job 42:10f.
 4 ^cAnd they queried me, saying, "What do you ask of us now?" And remembering the poor again to do them good, I asked them, saying, "Let each one give me a 5 lamb for the clothing of the poor who are naked." • So then every single one brought a lamb and a gold coin.^d And the Lord blessed all the goods I owned,^e and he doubled my estate. 4:7

Job's final counsels and the division of the inheritance^a

- 1 45 And now, my children, behold I am dying. Above all, do not forget the Lord. 1:4 2,3 Do good to the poor. Do not overlook the helpless. • Do not take to yourselves
 4 wives from strangers.^b • Look, my children, I am dividing among you everything 1:4, 46:4 that is mine, so each one may have unrestricted control over his own share.^c o. Vs. 15 appears to describe, in poetic form, the more prosaic conclusion of 43:17, which virtually repeats 43:5. S V Slav read "Let their hearts leap for joy."

p. Eliphaz, Baldad, and Sophar are thus forgiven and they may, with the "holy men," rejoice (43:15). But Elihu now stands under divine judgment, excluded from the group; he is not again heard of in TJob.

44 a. One expects at this point, or earlier, some description of Job's healing. But none is given, although 47:2-9 recounts how his recovery was effected through a triple-stranded band, or sash, Midrashically derived from a literal interpretation of the biblical injunction, "Gird your loins like a man" (Job 38:3; 40:7 RSV). The band is then split into three parts and given to the daughters as their inheritance.

b. Reference is made either probably to the unnamed city of the region of Ausitis (TJob 28:7 and Job 1:1; 42:17b, e A) or possibly to the city the angel mentioned (TJob 18:8).

c. TJob 44:3-5 restyles Job 42:10-12 so as to reflect Job's charitable deeds detailed earlier at TJob 9-15.

d. Lit. a "tetradrachma of gold." V makes it an alloy: ". . . of gold and silver." Cf. Job 42:11

LXX B, "a tetradrachma of uncoined gold."

e. V completes the verse with a characteristic and lengthy reading: "and within a few days I abounded in goods and cattle and the remaining things which I had lost. And I gained others in double quantity. And I took a wife, your mother, and I fathered the ten of you in lieu of my ten children who had died."

45 a. This paragraph is typical of the close of the usual "testament": the death scene, exhortations to the children, summary injunctions. But the death itself is not described (till 52:1-53:8), and there is no concern to take the bones back to Hebron (found in all T12P).

b. The essentially Jewish ban against foreign marriage has been widely recognized. From biblical roots (Gen 24:3, 37; 27:46-28:1; Num 36:8; Ezra 10:10; cf. Gen 26:34f.), it has spread to such texts as JosAsen 8:5; Tob 1:9; 3:15; 4:12f.; 6:10-12 (pre-eminently); Jub 20:4; 22:20; 25:1-10; 30:7-17; TLevi 9:10; Ps-Philo 9:15; 18:13; 43:5; AddEsth 4:17w, x.

c. This final sentence serves as a transition to the following (fourth and final) major section of TJob, 46-53. Here end Job's testamentary words to his children begun in the first person at 1:4b (see n. i to 1).

IV. Job and His Three Daughters (46–50)^a

The daughters' inheritance: their father's phylactery

- 1 46 And they brought forth the estate for distribution among the seven males^b only.
 2 For he did not present any of the goods to the females. They were grieved and said to their father, "Our father, sir, are we not also your children? Why then did you not give us some of your goods?"
- 3 But Job said to the females, "Do not be troubled, my daughters: I have not 4 forgotten you. •I have already designated for you an inheritance better than that 45:4; 47:1 of your seven brothers."^c Job 42:15
- 5 Then when he had called his daughter who was named Hemera he said to her,
 "Take the signet ring, go to the vault, and bring the three golden boxes, so that 6 I may give you your inheritance." •So she left and brought them back.
- 7 And he opened them and brought out three multicolored cords^d whose appearance 8 was such that no man could describe, •since they were not from earth but from 9 heaven,^e shimmering with fiery sparks like the rays of the sun.^f •And he gave each one a cord, saying, "Place these about your breast, so it may go well with you all the days of your life."
- 1 47 Then the other daughter, named Kasia,^a said to him, "Father, is this the inheritance which you said was better than that of our brothers? Who has any use 46:4 for these unusual^b cords?^c We cannot gain a living from them, can we?"
- 2 And their father said to them, "Not only shall you gain a living from these,
 3,4 but these cords will lead you into the better world, to live in the heavens.^d •^eAre 36:3
 you then ignorant, my children, of the value of these strings? The Lord considered 46 a. Merely named (1:3 P) prior to this point in TJob, the three daughters dominate the final main section. Chs. 1–45 have been related in the first person; with 46:1, however, there is a sudden shift to third-person discourse, which is sustained through 50:3; thereafter the first person returns, but it is Job's brother Nereus who speaks throughout (51–53). Although such a shift may suggest compositional evolution, similar shifts of person occur in texts where unity is not in question, such as 2Ezra 6:28; Tob 3:7; and 1QapGen 21.23–30. While TJob 1–45 serves to commend the virtues of patience and philanthropy in a manner reminiscent of the T12P, TJob 46–53 seems rather to legitimate charismatic communion with the angels in a mode approaching Merkabah mysticism.

b. A similar interest in males occurs at 15:4. It may be possible to detect here rudimentary proto-gnostic interests, such as the process of "becoming male" as an expression for saving enlightenment.

c. The whole of TJob may be considered as a Midrashic development from Job 42:15b: "And their father gave them inheritance rights like their brothers." The daughters each receive as their portion one cord of the tri-stranded belt, or girdle, by which Job was miraculously cured (47:5). No particular theological use is made here of "inheritance."

d. S has "the multicolored objects." V has "three cordlike aprons." The meaning is unclear. Elsewhere it is called a cord (spartē, 48:1), cincture (perizōsis, 52:1), phylactery (47:11), while more likely words for "girdle" (zōnē, kestos) are not used. These terms suggest a sash, or cord, derived from the tri-stranded therapeutic girdle that God provided Job (47:5) when the challenge was given,

"Gird up your loins . . ." (Job 38:3; 40:7; cf. 42:4 RSV). By this object, Job was cured (47:4–8). Now each of the three daughters is given as her inheritance one of the three cordlike strands, which she is to don as a sash. These "cords" are possibly a magical device for fending off evil; see n. i to 47:11.

e. In accord with the earth/heaven bifurcation of TJob 33:2–9; 36:3.

f. 3En 29:2 describes a class of angels thus: "And from each of them sparks and lightnings shoot forth; from each of them rays of splendor stream out, and from each of them lights flash; pavilions and tents of brilliance surround them, for even the seraphim and the creatures who are greater than all the celestials cannot look on them."

47 a. Kasia and Hemera (46:5) have a part in the conversation with their father. But Amaltheia's Horn is not introduced till 50:1.

b. Or, "useless."

c. S Slav put the question: "What then is so unusual about these cords?"

d. As Job affirmed in his psalm (33:2–9) and asserted during his interrogation (36:3), the daughters too will now be enabled to share in the heavenly world, specifically by ecstatic utilization of the language of heavenly beings (48:3; 49:2; 50:2).

e. The account of Job's miraculous cure (vss. 4–9) occurs neither in the canonical book nor after TJob 42:3 or 43:17, where it might logically appear. From God's challenge to Job to arise and gird himself for divine questioning (Job 38:3; 40:7; cf. 42:4), TJob in Midrashic style fashions the very "girdle" that now becomes the inheritance for the daughters.

me worthy of these in the day in which he wished to show me mercy and to rid my body of the plagues and the worms.

20:8

5 "Calling me, he furnished me with these three cords and said, 'Arise, gird your loins like a man. I shall question you, and you answer me.'

Job 38:3; 40:2

6 "So I took them and put them on. And immediately from that time the worms disappeared from my body and the plagues, too. •And then my body got strength through the Lord as if I actually had not suffered a thing.^f •I also forgot the pains in my heart. •And the Lord spoke to me in power,^g showing me things present and things to come.

20:8

38:8

52:1

10 "Now then, my children, since you have these objects you will not have to face the enemy at all,^h but neither will you have worries of him in your mind, •since it is a protective amuletⁱ of the Father.^j Rise then, gird yourselves with them before I die in order that you may be able to see those who are coming for my soul, in order that you may marvel over the creatures^k of God."

1:4

7:11

52:2

The charismatic sashes^a

1 48 Thus, when the one called Hemera^b arose, she wrapped around her own string^c just as her father said. •And she took on another heart—^dno longer minded toward

23:11

f. See n. d to 1.

g. Probably this refers to the event described in TJob 42:1–3 and Job 38:1 LXX. The scene is taken as the origin of an apocalyptic vision disclosing "things present and impending," a typical apocalyptic agenda (cf. Rev 1:1; see n. j to 1). Such apocalyptic visions—more precisely the claims based on them made by his opponents—led Paul to his statement in Rom 8:38: "no angel, no prince, nothing that exists, nothing still to come." Yet he allowed even at Corinth a "revelation" (apokalypsis) among the components of an ordered Christian service (1Cor 14:26).

h. Cf. 7:11 and n. a to 3.

i. Lit. "phylactery" (phylaktērion). In view of its therapeutic and evil-averting effects, this phylactery appears to stem from the sphere of magic. No hint is given that this phylactery corresponds to the usual arm and head cases for miniature Scripture portions, examples of which (with slight differences) have been found at Qumran. In common with the traditional Jewish phylacteries, those of Job's daughters were to be tied on, or at least donned (47:11; 48:1; 49:1; 50:1; 52:1). But it is striking that they wore them at all, since talmudic tradition exempted from the use of phylacteries slaves, mourners, and females (Kid 34a; MK 15a; Tefillin 3). Yet neither is it a pure magical amulet (a written prescription for magically fending off evil). It is thus a case of restrained Jewish magic, resulting in a wearable "charm" Midrashic in origin and capable of effects including those (1) therapeutic (47:5–7; 52:1); (2) economic (47:2); (3) evil-averting (47:10); (4) glossolalic (48:3; 49:2; 50:2); and (5) apocalyptic-visionary (47:2, 9, 11; 52:9).

j. Job, or God? The text is ambiguous. S V Slav read "the Lord," understanding the term as a divine title, as they also did at 40:2, where according to P, Job "sang praises to the Father." "Father" is a frequent title for Job in the immediate context: 47:1, 2; 48:1 (cf. 52:9, 12). The "father" here seems to be Job, whose own phylactery he is about to grant his daughters as their inheritance.

k. V has "wonders."

48 a. The accounts of the daughters putting on their sashes (48–50) show several common elements: (1) the name of the daughter; (2) donning the sash; (3) having the "heart changed"; (4) no longer concerned with worldly things; (5) glossolalia in the language of specified heavenly beings; (6) a brief characterization of the contents of glossolalia; and (7) reported preservation of the speeches in mythical books (but see n. h to 48).

b. Lit. "Day." See nn. f, g, and h to 1.

c. S has "wrapped it around herself."

d. V heightens by adding "and at once she was outside her own flesh," which parallels Paul's ecstatic ascent; he twice wondered whether the ascent was "in the body" or "outside the body" (2Cor 12:2f.). The changed "heart" (cf. 49:1; 50:2) refers not to conversion but appears rather to describe the onset of the ecstatic state, "the descent to the Merkabah." When Saul was "also among the prophets," it is said that "God gave him another heart." Note the similarity to the language of Montanus preserved in the 4th-cent. heresiologist Epiphanius: "Behold! Humankind is like a harp, and I strum as a plectrum; humans sleep, I am awake. Behold! The Lord is the one who excites the hearts of humans, the one who gives them a heart" (AdvHaer 48.4.1).

3 earthly things^e—[→] but she spoke ecstatically in the angelic dialect,^f sending up a hymn to God in accord with the hymnic style of the angels. And as she spoke ecstatically, she allowed “The Spirit”^g to be inscribed on her garment.^h 40:14

1 49 Then Kasia bound hers on and had her heart changed so that she no longer 23:11
2 regarded worldly things. • And her mouth took on the dialect of the archons and 3 she praised God for the creation of the heights. • So, if anyone wishes to know
“The Creation of the Heavens,”^a he will be able to find it in “The Hymns of 40:14 Kasia.”^b

1 50 Then the other one also, named Amaltheia’s Horn, bound on her cord. And 2 her mouth spoke ecstatically in the dialect of those on high, • since her heart also 23:11 2 was changed, keeping aloof from worldly things. For she spoke in the dialect of 3 the cherubim, glorifying the Master of virtues^a by exhibiting their splendor. • And finally whoever wishes to grasp a trace^b of “The Paternal Splendor” will find it 40:3 written down in “The Prayers of Amaltheia’s Horn.”^c 40:14

e. Cf. 49:1 and 50:2, but also 2En 56:2 A: “And Enoch answered his son and said, ‘Listen, my child! Since the time when the LORD anointed me with the ointment of my glory, it has been horrible for me, and food is not agreeable to me, and I have no desire for earthly food.’” 2Clem 5:6 urges Christians “to regard worldly things (ta kosmika) as not their own.” But 2Clem deals with “this world and the coming one” (2Clem 6:3), which is an eschatological dualism not central to the TJob. With this avoidance of “worldly things” can be related Job’s own deprecation of “earthly things” (TJob 36:3; see n. a to 36) and especially his psalm of affirmation (TJob 33), where the heavenly throne is described as Job’s present possession, an ontological rather than eschatological dualism. The ontology resembles Heb, especially 9:1 and 8:5: While eschatological events are not absent (Heb 9:28; TJob 4:9; 47:9) they play no major role. To the contrary, the enduring reality of the upper world is already realized (Heb 12:22–24, in community; TJob 48–50, by ecstatic access). Overall, TJob shows an eschatology closer to Heb. than to Qumran (or, for that matter, to the Montanists with their hope for the descending New Jerusalem; Epiphanius, AdvHaer 49.1.2f.).

f. Similarly, “the dialect of the archons” (49:2), “the dialect of those on high” (50:1), “the dialect of the cherubim (50:2), “the distinctive dialect” (52:7). The source of Paul’s “tongues . . . of angels” (1Cor 13:1)? Paul, however, does not use “dialect” (dialektos), which in NT is Luke’s word alone. In the account of the Pentecostal glossolalia, Luke uses the word expressly for humans (of varied nationality) and not for angels; contrast his use of “magnify” (megalunein; see n. a to 38). In ApAb 17, an angel teaches Abraham a heavenly song, recital of which leads him to a vision of the Merkabah. The singing of hymns by females (“virgins”) in the language of the cherubim—as well as the notion of the “Chariot of the Father”—is known also to Resurrection of Bartholomew (ed. Budge, Coptic Apocrypha, pp. 11f., 189).

g. See n. a to 43. “Spirit” here could be the subject: “As she spoke ecstatically, the Spirit let it be inscribed on her garment.” In view of parallel titles of poems at 49:3 and 50:3, Kraft—followed here—takes “The Spirit” as also a title of a poem or hymn. V omits the entire sentence.

h. For “on her garment (en stolē),” M. J. Schwartz (in Philonenko, Sem 18 [1968] 56) ingeniously conjectures “in her epistle” (en epi stolē). The proposal has in its favor the provision of a book corresponding to the “Hymns of Kasia” (49:3) and the “Prayers of Amaltheia’s Horn” (50:3). But the conjecture may be unnecessary. Philo (Vita cont 29) speaks of hymnic composition by the Therapeutae using the same term (charatō). The existence of mystically engraved gems pertaining to 3rd-cent. Gnosticism is well known (cf. C. Bonner, Studies in Magical Amulets [Ann Arbor, 1950] pp. 1–21). So are the “garments of glory” prepared for such persons as Isaiah (Ascens 9:2–11); Metatron (3En 12:1); and Enoch (2En 22:8). Most interesting is the line in Hekhalot Rabbati 24, where God is described as “glorified with embroideries of songs” (hmkwdr brkmy syr; cf. G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism [New York, 1965²] p. 26; cf. p. 128 and n. to p. 26). Scholem (p. 24) also calls attention to AZ 24b, where animals addressing the ark sing a hymn containing the line describing the throne as “girdled in golden embroidery.” Finally, Hekhalot Rabbati 3.4 says of God’s garment, “And it is every part engraved from within and from without JHWH JHWH.” These and other comparatively inaccessible texts grouped by Scholem disclose a motif of the “garment of God,” sometimes said to be inscribed. While these sources are late (3rd. cent. A.D.), it may be possible to see in Hemera’s inscribed skirt a development of early Merkabah traditions already present in 4QŠirŠabb 37–40.

49 a. Probably this is another title of a poem. Possibly “the creation of the heavens” was one of the various subjects of mystical inquiry featured in Merkabah mysticism.

b. Cf. Ps 71 (72):20, “the hymns of David, son of Jesse.”

50 a. See n. f to 39.

b. The meaning is unclear. S omits the title in quotes. P obscurely adds “of Hemera.” “Trace” (lit. “footprint”) might mean (so Kraft) “poetic rhythm.”

c. “Amaltheia’s Horn,” latinized then anglicized to “Cornucopia,” is widely used as a book title, ancient and modern. But the 2nd-cent. A.D. grammarian Aulus Gellius expressly rejected this title for his own miscellany called Attic Nights (praefatio 6).

*Epilogue (51–53)Nereus' literary activity

1,2 51 After the three had stopped singing hymns,^a •while the Lord was present as was I, Nereus,^b the brother of Job, and while the holy angel^c also was present, 53:1 3 I sat near Job on the couch. And I heard the magnificent things,^d while each one 4 made explanation to^e the other. •And I wrote out^f a complete book of most of the 40:14 contents of hymns that issued from the three daughters of my brother, so that these things would be preserved. For these are the magnificent things of God.

Job's death, soul ascent, and burial

1 52 After three days, as Job fell ill^a on his bed (without suffering or pain, however, 47:7 since suffering could no longer touch him on account of the omen of the sash he 2,3 wore), •after those three days he saw those who had come for his soul.^b •And rising 5,6,8; 47:11
 4 immediately he took a lyre^c and gave it to his daughter Hemera. •To Kasia he gave 14:1f.
 5 a censer,^d and to Amaltheia's Horn he gave a kettle drum, •so that they might 32:8
 6 bless those who had come for his soul. •And when they took them, they saw the 2
 7 gleaming chariots^e which had come for his soul.^f •And they^g blessed and glorified 33:9 2
 God^h each one in her own distinctive dialect.
 8 After these things the one who sat in the great chariot got off and greeted Job 33:9
 9 as the three daughters and their fatherⁱ himself looked on, though certain others

51 a. Here and at 51:4, as well as 52:12 (cf. 18:2: songs of victory taught by the angel), the products of the daughters' glossolalic speeches are described as hymns, although they are called "prayers" at 50:3. What singing angels sound like, which presumably those using their language would resemble, can be gauged from 2En 17:1 J: "In the middle of the heaven, I saw armed troops, worshipping the LORD with tympani and pipes, and unceasing voices, and pleasant [voices and pleasant and unceasing] and various songs which it is impossible to describe. And every mind would be quite astonished, so marvelous and wonderful is the singing of these angels. And I was delighted listening to them."

b. The shift back to first person (as TJob 1:4–45:4)—but now to Nereus—affects at least 51:1–4 and 53:1–4. See nn. i to 1 and a to 46. The name "Nereus" is a Gk. mythological deity. Nereus, sometimes said to be the oldest of the gods, was an apt choice for the name of an oracular recorder, since this god himself was said to have had the gift of prophecy (Horace, Carmina 1.15). Like Job, the god Nereus had daughters, the fifty (number varies) Nereids, whose names were recorded. Like Satan, Nereus could transform himself into many shapes (fire, water, etc., Apollodorus 2.5.11). Paul knew a Christian of this name at Rome (Rom 16:15). Nereus is called Nahor (Naōr) at TJob 1:6 S V Slav, where he is made a brother to Esau by S and a brother to Job by V.

c. Perhaps the same angel as the one who met Job earlier, TJob 5:2 (cf. 18:5). P speaks here of "the Holy Spirit," while V omits the whole phrase.

d. See n. a to 38. V adds so as to read "the magnificent things of the three daughters of my brother."

e. The translation is uncertain; possibly, "made signs to each other," or "noted things down for each other" (so Kraft).

f. 2En knows of books written by angels (22:11) and—at the angel's dictation—by Enoch (23:6; cf. Rev 2:1 and Rom 16:22). 4Ezra 14:42, on the other hand, has five men writing in unfamiliar letters what Ezra himself uttered under inspiration. In TJob, however, it is Nereus himself who takes the literary initiative, even though both the Lord and the "holy angel" (or, "Holy Spirit"?) were present.

52 a. See n. d to 1.

b. Regularly called angels by V (52:5, 6, 8; 47:11).

c. According to 14:1f., Job had a ten-stringed lyre with which he entertained the widows after dinner.

d. A censer as Job had in earlier days of glory (32:8).

e. The ascent of Job's soul is not unlike that said of Enoch, where, however, there is no death involved and no soul/body separation: 3En 6:1, "When the Holy One, blessed be he, desired to lift me up on high, he first sent 'Anaphiel H [H = tetragrammaton], the Prince, and he took me from their midst in their sight and carried me in great glory upon a fiery chariot with fiery horses, servants of glory. And he lifted me up to the high heavens together with the Shekinah" (trans. H. Odeberg, 3 Enoch [Cambridge, 1928] p. 19). Biblical accounts of the ascensions of Enoch (Gen 5:24) and Elijah (2Kgs 2:11) no doubt inform such descriptions. Similar also is Abraham's death, ascent, and burial as told in TAB 20A.

f. S omits "they saw the gleaming chariots which had come for his soul."

g. S has Job himself blessing God "in the distinctive dialect," cf. TJob 40:2: "I [Job] sang praises to the Father."

h. Only S reads "God."

i. Or, Father? Presumably Job, but see 52:12 and n. j to 47.

10 did not see.^j •And taking the soul he flew up, embracing it, and mounted the chariot 42:3 33:9
 11 and set off for the east.^k •But his body, prepared for burial, was borne to the tomb 40:3 40:12
 12 as his three daughters went ahead girded about and singing hymns to God.^l 40:2

1 53 And I Nereus, his brother, with the seven^a male children accompanied by the 51:1 1:2
 2 poor and the orphans^b and all the helpless, we were weeping •and saying: 40:13

“•Woe to us today! A double woe! 39:6

Gone today is the strength of the helpless! Job 29:15f.

3 Gone is the light of the blind!

Gone is the father of the orphans!

Gone is the host of strangers!^d

Gone is the clothing of widows!

4 Who then will not weep over the man of God?”

5 And as soon as they brought the body to the tomb, all the widows and orphans 6,7 circled about •forbidding it to be brought into the tomb. •But after three days they 8 laid him in the tomb in a beautiful sleep, •since he received a name renowned^e in 4:6
 all generations forever. AMEN.^f

j. It was a property of the charismatic sash (47:11) that gave the daughters access to the vision. Restriction of the vision of the assumption also appears in an earlier, Gk. form of the AsMos (in Clement of Alexandria, Strom 6.15), where only Joshua and Caleb witness the sight. In the finally edited form, Moses' assumption is not mentioned and he dies in the presence of all the people, AsMos 1:15. Cf. 2Kgs 2:10–12; 6:17.

k. Where his former ten children already were. See n. b to 40.

l. S V Slav have “to God.” P reads “hymns of the(ir) father.”

53 a. S Slav omit.

b. The poor also made lamentation for Sitis (40:13). The mourners included those aided by Job's philanthropy (TJob 9–15; e.g. 9:3).

c. Cf. the lament for Sitis at 40:13f. The language of Job 29:15 LXX informs this lament: “I was the eye of the blind, the feet of the lame. I was a father to the weak. I tracked out a cause not my own.” The lament contains numerous echoes of the earlier celebration of Job's philanthropy (TJob 9–15).

d. The texts read variously, including or combining such ll. as “Gone is the way of the heart,” “Gone is the shelter/clothing of the naked,” “Gone is the protector of widows.”

e. The angel's promise is fulfilled.

f. In place of the “Amen” with which P ends, S V provide longer endings close in content to Job 42:16 LXX. Noteworthy is the contrast between the future tense of Job 42:17a LXX (“And it is written that he will again rise with those whom the Lord raises up”) and the past tense of TJob 53:8 V (“And it is written that he was raised with those whom the Lord raised up”). Slav has a distinctive ending: “And Job lived after his plague and his sufferings 170 years. And the whole span of his life was 248 years. And he saw his sons and grandsons and great-grandsons, to the third generation. Do not believe his enemies forever, for just as honey makes wine bitter, so is his deceitfulness. And if he humbles himself before you and bows, make firm your heart and beware of him and guide him over yourself. Do not place him higher than yourself, lest he seek out your seat. And when you announce your thoughts to him with your own lips, your enemy will call you blessed, but in his heart he thinks of throwing you into a ditch. Your enemy sheds tears before you, but in his heart he thinks of drinking your blood. Glory be to our God forever. Amen.” (Translation kindly supplied by J. Kolsti.)

TESTAMENTS OF THE THREE PATRIARCHS

INTRODUCTION

BY E. P. SANDERS

The works that now bear the titles "The Testament of Abraham," "The Testament of Isaac," and "The Testament of Jacob" apparently spring from an apocryphal book, written in Greek during the first century by a Jewish author in Egypt, which dealt with the death of Abraham, his tour of the inhabited world, and his view of the judgment. It is no longer possible to ascertain the history of the story in Jewish usage, but it would appear that the story about Abraham developed into two distinct recensions before it was appropriated by Christians. The Testament of Isaac and the Testament of Jacob are derivative from the Testament of Abraham, perhaps being written to round out the stories of the deaths of the three patriarchs, and they were apparently written in that order: The Testament of Isaac refers to Michael's being sent to Abraham (2:1), as well as to the story of Abraham's death (8:1), while the Testament of Jacob refers to the commemoration of the deaths of both the other two patriarchs (1:2; 8:1). In addition, as the marginal references will make clear, the Testament of Jacob echoes many of the themes of the Testament of Isaac. As they now stand, the latter two testaments contain more Christian elements than the Testament of Abraham in either recension; but it cannot be said with certainty whether they were originally composed by Jews or Christians.

It is certain, however, that eventually all three were Christianized and became the exclusive property of the Church. They were for some centuries immensely popular in Christianity, as may be seen both from their wide distribution and from the influence of the Testament of Abraham on later Christian writing and art.

Because of the derivative and often repetitive character of the Testament of Isaac and the Testament of Jacob, principal interest attaches to the Testament of Abraham, which will receive a fuller introduction and notes than do the other two testaments.

TESTAMENT OF ABRAHAM

(First to Second Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY E. P. SANDERS

The events preceding the death of the patriarch Abraham form the setting for the testament that bears his name. When it is time for Abraham to die, God sends the archangel Michael to inform him to prepare for death and to make a will. It is hoped that Abraham will voluntarily surrender his soul to Michael. Abraham, however, is recalcitrant and refuses to go, requesting first to be shown all the inhabited world. After consulting with God, Michael conducts Abraham on such a tour. Abraham, seeing people engaged in various sins, calls down death upon them, but God tells Michael to stop the tour; for he, unlike Abraham, is compassionate and postpones the death of sinners so that they may repent. Abraham is then conducted to the place of judgment to witness the fate of souls after they depart from their bodies, so that he may repent of his severity. He learns that souls are tried in three ways: by fire, by record, and by balance; and he learns that there are three judgments: by Abel, by the twelve tribes of Israel, and, finally, by God. Abraham intercedes on behalf of a soul that is judged to be neither wicked nor righteous and, repenting for his former harshness, he then pleads on behalf of those whom he had caused to die. God saves the former and restores the latter. Abraham is taken back home, but he still declines to surrender his soul. God finally sends Death, who shows Abraham his ferocity and who at last takes his soul by a deception. The soul of Abraham is conducted to heaven by angels.

Texts

The Testament of Abraham exists in two basic forms, a longer form, attested by several Greek manuscripts and supported on the whole by a Rumanian version (Tab A), and a shorter form, attested by several Greek manuscripts and supported on the whole by the Slavonic version, a Rumanian version, and by the Coptic, Arabic, and Ethiopic versions (Tab B).¹ The best witnesses for each of the two forms are the Greek manuscripts, although the versions are useful in shedding light on various points.² There are several minor and two major differences between the two Greek recensions, but it is likely that they have a common ancestor.

The only published critical text of the two recensions of the Testament of Abraham is that of M. R. James,³ and the present translation is based on his text, taking into account some of the major variants. In his recent thesis, F. Schmidt has argued strongly that, for the shorter recension, manuscript E, which was not known to James, provides the best Greek text. The notes to B give special attention to the readings of E, a typed copy of which was kindly provided by Schmidt.

¹ The most complete discussion of the texts and versions is that by F. Schmidt, Le Testament d'Abraham: Introduction, édition de la recension courte, traduction et notes, vol. 1, pp. 1–20. See also A.-M. Denis, Introduction, pp. 32–34; M. Delcor, Le Testament d'Abraham, pp. 5–24. Delcor misstates the relationship of the northern versions, Slavonic and Rumanian, to the Gk. recs. on p. 23, although he describes it accurately on p. 16.

² Schmidt (Le Testament d'Abraham) has shown that one of the Slavonic versions is an important supporter of what may be the best MS of Tab B, Gk. MS E.

³ M. R. James, The Testament of Abraham.

James based his text primarily on the following manuscripts:

A (the long recension)

MS A: Paris, Bibl. Nat. Fonds Grec 770, fols. 225^v–241^r, dated A.D. 1315.

MS B: Jerusalem, Saint Sepulcri 66, dated in the fifteenth century.

B (the short recension)

MS A: Paris, Bibl. Nat. Fonds Grec 1613, fols. 87^v–96^v, dated in the fifteenth century.

Now to be especially noted is MS E: Milan, Abrosienne Grec 405, fols. 164^r–171^r, dated in the eleventh or twelfth century.

Scholarly opinion is divided on the relative antiquity of the two forms of the Testament of Abraham.⁴ With regard to the story, the Testament of Abraham B differs from the Testament of Abraham A in two major ways: First, in B Abraham's view of the judgment is before his tour of the world, not after; second, in B the judgment scene itself is much less fully described. Instead of the elaboration of A (three means of judgment; three judgments), there is only the story of the condemnation of a woman who was a heinous sinner. The style and vocabulary of B are simpler and less verbose than that of A. There are also fewer late words and fewer places where Christian influence is probable.⁵

The first editor of the Greek recensions, M. R. James, was of the opinion that A best represents the contents and order of the original composition, while B sometimes preserves earlier wording.⁶ In spite of the difficulties inherent in any complicated solution, this still seems to be the soundest conclusion. But even though it is best to conclude that the contents and order of the original are better preserved in A, James's other point must also be emphasized: B lacks most of the late words of A in its present form, some of which are not evidenced before the fifth century A.D., and B lacks most of A's evidence of Christian influence.⁷ The story itself is not substantially Christianized; the Messiah, or the Son of Man, or Christ, for example, does not appear in the judgment scene. The present form of A, however, does show some instances of Christian editing, such as a few verbal dependencies on the New Testament, and these are almost entirely absent from B. (See "Relation to canonical books.")

Although there are numerous differences among the various Greek manuscripts that support each recension, the difference between the two recensions is even more strongly marked, and it is necessary to postulate a separate Vorlage for each of them. These two Vorlage themselves probably have a common ancestor, but neither appears to be directly dependent on the other. The existence of an ultimate common ancestor is indicated not only by the general similarity of the story line but also by the high degree of verbatim agreement between the two recensions in some chapters and occasional striking verbatim agreements even in the sections where the order of events differs.⁸ On the other hand, the existence of two separate intermediate ancestors is indicated by the consistency in style, syntax, and vocabulary within each recension.⁹

It appears that there was originally a book about Abraham that contained approximately the contents of the Greek Testament of Abraham A in the order given there. It was rewritten in at least two principal recensions, each one of which was translated into different languages and copied in Greek without close concern for exactitude. The later copyists were presumably Christians, with the result that some Christian phraseology crept into A and a Christian doxology was added to both recensions (so all MSS except E of rec. B). Different manuscripts and versions were Christianized to different degrees, but no thoroughly systematic Chris-

⁴ It is debatable whether or not TAB A and TAB B are directly or indirectly related and even whether there is an original behind either or both of them. See R. A. Kraft, SCS 6, pp. 121–37. The present proposal is for an indirect and complicated relationship between the two recs. and for a common ancestor at some remove from the extant witnesses.

⁵ The most thorough examination of the vocabulary of TAB and of parallels with the NT is that of N. Turner, The Testament of Abraham: A Study of the Original Language, Place of Origin, Authorship, and Relevance. See esp. pp. 242–48 on date of vocabulary, and pp. 14–48 on Christian influence.

⁶ James, Testament, p. 49; so also G. H. Box, The Testament of Abraham, p. xiii; Delcor, Le Testament d'Abraham, p. 33; G. W. E. Nickelsburg, SCS 6, p. 92. Nickelsburg convincingly argues the case in favor of the priority of the story as it appears in A. See also n. b to B10 below.

⁷ These points have been emphasized in the theses of Turner and Schmidt; cf. Nickelsburg, SCS 6, p. 92.

⁸ The amount and the significance of verbatim agreement between the two recs. have been underestimated. See e.g. Kraft, SCS 6, pp. 123, 126 (citing Turner).

⁹ A few of the details that support these two generalizations will be given in the nn. to the translations.

tianizing of the document was carried out, since it is still easily recoverable as a Jewish document. The precise wording of the original cannot be ascertained, although frequently it may be better represented by B.¹⁰

Original language

Among early scholars, L. Ginzberg and K. Kohler favored a Hebrew original of the Testament of Abraham, while G. H. Box maintained that the work was originally Palestinian and may have had a Semitic original, even though the present Greek does not read like a translation. N. Turner agreed with Box's view with regard to recension A, but argued that B was a translation from Hebrew, written not in Palestine but in Egypt. Schmidt has accepted the hypothesis of a Hebrew original for B.¹¹ Of the scholars mentioned, only Turner systematically and in detail tried to establish a Hebrew original for one of the recensions.¹² It is noteworthy that he first modified his position to the view that a Hebrew original is only slightly more likely than the alternative (that B was written in "Jewish Greek");¹³ and he has now kindly indicated to the present writer that he "cannot believe either recension to be a translation."¹⁴

M. Delcor is the principal exponent of the view that the original was written in Greek.¹⁵ He cites the closeness of much of the language to the later, or Alexandrian, books of the Septuagint and regards the Semitisms as being "Septuagintalisms." Delcor, however, based his study primarily on A. Turner had already noted that A shows knowledge of the Septuagint of Genesis, although he considered that B does not; and also that A, but not B, has "a strong linguistic similarity with 2, 3, 4 Maccabees."¹⁶ Thus there is no dispute about the language of A: It is not based directly on a Hebrew original and it does reflect Alexandrian Greek. There is still, however, the question of B: Is the language, besides being simpler, also indicative of a Hebrew original?

The only weakness in Turner's original analysis points the way to the solution of the problem. He meticulously dated the Greek of both recensions (See "Date"), but not the Hebrew of his retroversion.¹⁷ B can, for the most part, be smoothly translated into Hebrew, but it is the classical Hebrew of the early narrative sections of the Bible that emerges, not any form of late Hebrew as known from the late canonical books, the Dead Sea Scrolls, and rabbinic literature.

Thus what we have in B, and occasionally also in A, is an imitation of the classical biblical prose style, which the author doubtless thought was appropriate to his theme. The question of whether this sort of Jewish Greek existed as a spoken language among Jews of ¹⁰ Although A contains more late words than B, and clearer evidence of Christian influence, it also has more terminological affinity with other Jewish literature of Egyptian provenance, as the nn. to the translation will show. The language of A cannot always be considered later than that of B, and room for conjecture as to the original wording will remain. The verbatim agreements between the two recs. should afford the best evidence for the original vocabulary and style.

¹¹ Schmidt, Le Testament d'Abraham, vol. 1, p. 120.

¹² No one has proposed an Aram. original, and Turner's study shows that the Semitisms are Hebraisms rather than Aramaisms. See his The Testament of Abraham, p. 57.

¹³ Turner, "The 'Testament of Abraham': Problems in Biblical Greek," NTS 1 (1954/55) 222f.

¹⁴ Letter of November 24, 1976. The reason for the change in Turner's view since he wrote his thesis in 1951 is that, in his comprehensive studies of the syntax and grammar of biblical Gk. (see n. 18 below), he repeatedly found the same Semitizing style that marks the Testament of Abraham, especially rec. B. In a further note to the present writer, dated November 10, 1977, he wrote in part, "I now think that books written freely in 'biblical Greek' were relatively representative phenomena among Jews and Christians who had tasted the influence of the synagogue and knew the Greek versions of the Bible very well . . . Like Professor Sanders I would think that both recensions were more likely to have been composed in this dialect of Greek than to have been literally rendered from a Vorlage; that the Semitic idioms had already infused the dialect known to the author, who was not consciously translating nor even thinking in one language and writing in another."

¹⁵ Delcor, Le Testament d'Abraham, p. 34: written in Gk. in Alexandria. Cf. E. Janssen, "Testament Abrahams" (JSHRZ 3 [1975]) 193-256; see pp. 198-200: written in Gk. in Palestine.

¹⁶ Turner, NTS 1 (1954/55) 221, summarizes the detailed demonstration in his thesis. In favor of the use of LXX in B, however, see the agreements noted in B2, nn. b, c; B5, n. a.

¹⁷ A similar problem exists in the study by R. A. Martin, "Syntax Criticism of the Testament of Abraham," SCS 6, pp. 95-120. Many of the control texts used for establishing the characteristics of translation Gk. are the LXX translations of classical Heb.

the period is a large topic that cannot be broached here,¹⁸ but the occurrence of the imitation, or partial imitation, of the classical biblical style in literary works composed in Greek can be well documented,¹⁹ and this seems to be the best solution to the problem of the style of B. It would be possible to imitate the classical style in Hebrew, but there are no clear instances of such an imitation, even when biblical themes are being dealt with in late apocalypses.

It was earlier noted that there is extensive verbatim agreement between the two recensions, which in general seem to have had separate histories of transmission, and this fact argues strongly in favor of Greek as the language of the original composition.²⁰ When we add to this evidence the observation that the habit of composing in Semitizing Greek was widespread, the best conclusion is seen to be that both recensions had Greek originals.

Date

Estimates of the date of the Testament of Abraham have ranged very widely and for good reason. There are no references to historical events, the doctrines of the book are not datable to any narrow historical period, and even the language of the work does not present a sure criterion, since, on the one hand, it is doubtful that we have the original language; and, on the other, B is written in a style partly imitative of classical biblical prose. James, who regarded the work as Christian, thought that it must have been later than the Apocalypse of Peter²¹ and earlier than Origen: "That it was written in the second century, that it embodies legends earlier than that century, and that it received its present form perhaps in the ninth or tenth century, seems . . . a sufficiently probable estimate."²² Turner's original estimate of the date of the book was much earlier. He regarded it as having been written in Egypt before the Septuagint was translated or in wide use, and when at least some Jews still spoke Hebrew. He dated the Greek translation represented by B to c. 200–165 B.C. and that represented by A to a period not much later, though perhaps as late as the second century A.D., with some late additions.²³ Schmidt, who regards the work as Palestinian, composed in Hebrew in either Essene or related circles, dates the original to the first half of the first century A.D.²⁴ He argues that, since the Testament of Abraham is concerned with only individual eschatology, it must come after 4 Ezra, where both individual and collective or national eschatology are matters of concern. Apart from the fact that it is impossible to suppose that there was a steady progression from national eschatology to a mixture of national and individual eschatology to purely individual eschatology,²⁵ the argument that the Testament of Abraham comes after 4 Ezra is itself in conflict with the pre-50 date, since 4 Ezra must be dated after the destruction of the Temple in A.D. 70.

On the assumption that the original work was written in Greek and comes from Egypt (See "Provenance"), it is possible to make a reasonable conjecture of the date on the basis of general considerations. It is doubtful if Egyptian, especially Alexandrian, Judaism was sufficiently intact after A.D. 117 to allow the production of such literature,²⁶ especially a work like the Testament of Abraham, which does not distinguish Jew from gentile in the judgment. On the other hand, it is unlikely that the work is very early. It combines genres and motifs that must have been known to the author from other literature: some aspects of ¹⁸ Most recently, see N. Turner, A Grammar of New Testament Greek IV: Style (Edinburgh, 1976) p. 7, and further references there.

¹⁹ For examples from Lk, ProtJames, Acts of Pilate, see E. P. Sanders, The Tendencies of the Synoptic Tradition (Cambridge, 1969) pp. 200–02, 226, 228.

²⁰ Turner's original view, The Testament of Abraham, pp. 242–48, that A and B are independent translations, does not account for the verbatim agreement between them. Considering the gross differences between A and B, the degree of verbatim agreement is remarkable and points toward a Gk. original.

²¹ James's hypothesis about ApPet as a source for many traditions in TAb and elsewhere (Testament, p. 23) was not borne out when fragments of the lost work were subsequently found.

²² James, Testament, p. 29.

²³ Turner, The Testament of Abraham, pp. 242, 248.

²⁴ Schmidt, Le Testament d'Abraham, p. 120.

²⁵ Note, for example, the late (3rd cent. or later) story of R. Joshua b. Levi (BHM, vol. 2, pp. 48–51) and the still later apocalypse of Elia (BHM, vol. 2, pp. 65–68), where the expectation of Israel's victory over the gentiles in the messianic time appears.

²⁶ For the date, see V. Tcherikover, Hellenistic Civilization and the Jews (Philadelphia, 1959) p. 356 and n. 65, where further references are given.

the testament genre, the "ascension" or heavenly tour genre, and the motif of resistance to death apparently borrowed from the Moses traditions. (See below.) Further, there is a concern, assuming that A preserves the original contents, to bring into one picture the different images of the judgment: fire, balance, and written records. It seems best to assume a date for the original of c. A.D. 100, plus or minus twenty-five years. The work was rewritten by more than one hand, and A in particular shows the traces of late redactional activity. The redactional activity that imparted to A, and to a lesser extent to B, late words and traces of New Testament passages, however, must be distinguished from the rewriting that produced the ancestors of the two recensions. If the late redactional activity had extended to rewriting, it would doubtless also have resulted in a pronounced Christianizing of the text, especially the judgment scene.²⁷ Despite being repeatedly copied by Christian scribes, the Testament of Abraham in both recensions remains unmistakably Jewish.

Provenance

If the Testament of Abraham is regarded as having been originally written in Greek, the most likely place of origin is Egypt.²⁸ The evidence for this may be summarized as follows: The vocabulary, especially of A, shows strong similarity to that of the late books of the Septuagint and to other Jewish books written in Greek in Egypt (e.g. 3Mac); the motif of the weighing of souls is most closely paralleled in late Egyptian depictions; the three levels of judgment may reflect the three levels of government in Egypt. These arguments are decisive only for recension A. Since it appears that the story as it is found in A, especially the account of the judgment scene, more accurately reflects the ultimate common ancestor (see above, n. 6, and references there), it is best to postulate Egyptian provenance for the original story. Recension B is as lacking in definite signs of its place of origin as it is in definite indications of its date. It would be reasonable to assume that the story was redacted where it first circulated, in Egypt, but there is nothing that would decisively rule out other Jewish centers in the Mediterranean basin.

In the discussion of provenance it is instructive to consider the connections between the Testament of Abraham and other Jewish literature. The closest parallels, both in terms of some of the major motifs and in terms of details, are to be found in the Testament of Job, 3 Baruch, 2 Enoch, and the Apocalypse of Moses. Some scholars have argued that each of these works originates from Egypt. The Egyptian origin of most of them (TJob is the exception) is now questioned.²⁹ If such works as 3 Baruch and the Apocalypse of Moses do not come from Egypt, their close resemblance to some aspects of the Testament of Abraham would seem to indicate the degree to which themes, motifs, and ideas "floated" around the Mediterranean world. In any case, as will be shown in more detail in the notes to the translation, there are more parallels between the Testament of Abraham and the works just named than between it and any other grouping of more or less contemporary literature.³⁰

There have been repeated attempts to find a connection between the Testament of Abraham and one of the Jewish parties named by Josephus, particularly the Essenes. Ginzberg hesitated

²⁷ Thus even if the judgment scene in A is not original, it is still Jewish and comes from A.D. 100.

²⁸ Turner, even when arguing for a Heb. original, proposed Egypt as the country of origin, while Schmidt, who favors a Palestinian provenance for the original, considers A to be the result of an Egyptian redaction. See Turner, The Testament of Abraham, pp. 177–85; Schmidt, Le Testament d'Abraham, pp. 119–21. Janssen (JSHRZ 3, pp. 198f.) proposed Gk. composition and a Palestinian origin, but the latter rests on very weak grounds, e.g. that the interest in Mamre shows "palestinian coloring" (p. 199). The phrase "oak of Mamre" is derived from the LXX; see Al n. a. For arguments in favor of Egyptian origin, see also Delcor, Le Testament d'Abraham, pp. 28–32, 59–62, 67f.

²⁹ In favor of the Egyptian origin of ApMos, see A.-M. Denis, Introduction, p. 6; on 2En (the long rec.), see J. H. Charlesworth, PMR, p. 104; on 3Bar, see J. C. Picard, PVTG 2, pp. 77f.; on TJob, see M. Philonenko, "Le Testament de Job," Sem 18 (1968) 24. For the latest views see the introductions to each work in the present edition.

³⁰ There are numerous parallels with regard to details in rabbinic and other Heb. and Aram. literature, but many of them are in late material; and, when the vast size of this material is considered, the proportion of parallels is seen to be relatively small. Kohler ("The Pre-Talmudic Haggada II: The Apocalypse of Abraham and its Kindred," JQR 7 [1895]) exaggerated the degree to which motifs of TAB are paralleled in rabbinic literature. Thus, for example, the passages referred to on p. 593 as showing that "the Midrash . . . preserved the memory of Abraham's ride above the vault of heaven" (GenR 48, 82) are not really to the point. Further, in considering the relation of TAB to rabbinic sources, the different and even contradictory motifs in the latter should be noted: E.g. Abraham was the first to dispose of his property in his lifetime (TanBub Noah 20, vol. 1, p. 47), a motif that is directly opposite one of the themes of TAB.

on whether to attribute the Testament of Abraham to the Pharisees or Essenes, while Kohler definitely attributed it to the Essenes. Recently Schmidt has called it "a writing springing from a popular Essenism,"³¹ while Delcor also sees a link with Essenism, and concludes that the Testament of Abraham may come from the Therapeutae.³² Kohler's evidence could now be dismissed were it not for the fact that recent scholars cite him as having shown that both the Testament of Abraham and the Testament of Job have Essene traits and continue to consider his outmoded list of Essene characteristics as accurate. Kohler's view of Essenism was eccentric in his own time³³ and now should be considered completely discredited; his finding of Essene "traits" (hospitality, cosmopolitanism, an emphasis on angels and the like) in the Testament of Abraham should no longer be cited as evidence for an Essene origin of the work.

Kohler mentioned that the eschatology of the Testament of Abraham was Essene without specifying why he came to this conclusion.³⁴ Recently Schmidt has argued that it is Essene because of the clear distinction between body and soul, a distinction Josephus attributes to the Essenes.³⁵ The evening prayers (B4:5),³⁶ the mention of a divine chariot, the elaborate angelology, and the mention of the "River Ocean" (B8:3)³⁷ have also been cited as showing some connection with Essenism. None of these points is convincing. Josephus also attributes belief in the immortality of the soul to the Pharisees, adding that they believed in the transmigration of souls (War 2.163). Josephus' comments demonstrate two points: First, supposing that his description is accurate, belief in the immortality of the soul was not peculiarly Essene; and, second, his attribution of a doctrine of transmigration to the Pharisees should make one cautious about relying very strictly on his descriptions. Morning and evening prayers are common in Judaism, and one learns more about merkabah ("chariot") speculation from rabbinic literature than from the Dead Sea Scrolls. A developed angelology is common in Judaism, and the angels of the Testament of Abraham have no particularly Essene traits.³⁸ Finally, in the Testament of Abraham, at least in B, Abraham lives in a city (B3:2), which would seem to rule out a connection with Philo's Therapeutae, who were strictly non-urban dwellers.³⁹

The most important observation is that the Testament of Abraham, far from presenting the particular doctrines of some Jewish sect, represents a kind of lowest-common-denominator Judaism. In some ways its most characteristic feature is its characterlessness; it lacks peculiar traits.

Historical importance

The Testament of Abraham, along with 2 Enoch and 3 Baruch, bears witness to the existence of a universalistic and generalized Judaism, in which "good works" consisted of such obvious virtues as charity and hospitality, coupled with avoidance of obvious moral sins—murder, adultery, and robbery—and according to which all people, whether Jew or gentile, are judged according to how well they observe these ethical requirements. The Torah ³¹ Schmidt, Le Testament d'Abraham, vol. 1, p. 120.

³² Delcor, Le Testament d'Abraham, pp. 69–72.

³³ Kohler, for example, equated the hasidim ("pious") of rabbinic literature with the Essenes and thus greatly extended the range of "Essene traits." See Kohler, JQR 7 (1895); countered by A. Büchler, Types of Jewish-Palestinian Piety from 70 B.C.E. to 70 C.E.: The Ancient Pious Men (London, 1922). Kohler further thought that "Essenism" was represented by such leading rabbis of the post-Essene period as R. Eliezer the Great and R. Ishmael (JQR 7 [1895]), and he attributed to the Essenes the trait of universalism, just the opposite of the sectarianism that we now know was the characteristic of the sect. Kohler is still cited, however, as having shown the Essene traits of TAB and TJob by such modern scholars as Delcor, Schmidt, and Philonenko.

³⁴ Kohler, JQR 7 (1895).

³⁵ Schmidt, Le Testament d'Abraham, vol. 1, pp. 54f., referring to War 2.7. 154–58 and other passages such as 4Ezra 7:78. He must also then consider 4Ezra as related to Essenism (p. 55a).

³⁶ Schmidt, Le Testament d'Abraham, pp. 82f.

³⁷ Delcor, Le Testament d'Abraham, pp. 70f. Josephus, when describing the Essenes (War 2.155), writes, "Sharing the belief of the sons of Greece, they maintain that for virtuous souls there is reserved an abode beyond the ocean" (trans. H. Thackeray, LCL). Josephus clearly has in mind the Gk. "Isles of the Blessed," and it is precarious to see here vocabulary used by Essenes themselves. Delcor also refers to 3Bar 2:1: "A river which no one can cross," which shows how widely spread the supposed Essene influence must be on his hypothesis.

³⁸ On angelology, see recently A. Kolenkow, SCS 6, pp. 153–62.

³⁹ See Philo, Vita cont 18–20.

and the covenant of Israel seem to play no role. The Testament of Abraham is one of the few witnesses, and thus a very important one, to the existence in Egypt of a form of Judaism that stressed neither the philosophical interpretation of Judaism, as did Philo, nor the need to retain strictly the commandments that set Jews apart from gentiles, as did the author of Joseph and Asenath. Judaism is depicted here as a religion of commonplace moral values, which nevertheless insists both on the strictness of God's judgment and on his mercy and compassion.

Theological importance

The most striking feature of the Testament of Abraham is the one that has just been noted: the lowest-common-denominator universalism of its soteriology. This feature was especially noted by Kohler, who spoke of the work's "cosmopolitan humanity."⁴⁰ Other commentators have noted the universalism of the work but have not seen it as a particularly striking feature.⁴¹ The principal component parts of the lowest-common-denominator universalistic soteriology are these: First, there is no distinction between Jew and gentile. The only reference to Israel is the one in A13:6, which mentions the judgment by the twelve tribes; this implies a special role for Israel, but Israel's importance is not developed and does not inform the rest of the book. Abraham looks down on the sins of "the inhabited world," (A10:1; cf. B12:12, "all the creation"); it is the souls of all mankind which will be judged, the descendants of Adam, not of Abraham or Jacob (A11:9; B8:12f.). The vast majority of Jewish documents provide a special place for Israel in the divine economy, either restricting salvation to Israel,⁴² providing for the future restoration of the twelve tribes,⁴³ or allowing that some righteous gentiles will be saved along with faithful Israelites;⁴⁴ but in any case making a clear distinction.⁴⁵ The works that most closely parallel the universalism of the Testament of Abraham are 2 Enoch and 3 Baruch.⁴⁶ Second, the sins mentioned in the Testament of Abraham are heinous by anyone's definition; and no specifically Jewish transgressions, such as hiding circumcision, transgressing the Sabbath or the dietary laws, and the like, are mentioned—not even idolatry, which is condemned in 2 Enoch 10:6 and 3 Baruch 13:4. Third, everyone is judged by the same standard, whether the majority of his deeds be good or evil, and even Abraham's intercessory prayer is not specified as being for his descendants.⁴⁷ One hears nothing about the merits of the patriarchs aiding their descendants, God's forgiving observant Jews on the Day of Atonement, or anything of the sort. Fourth, the only means of atonement mentioned are repentance and premature death. Repentance plays a principal part in any Jewish work dealing with sin and atonement, and there are good rabbinic parallels for the idea that death, especially premature death, atones. Those whom God punishes by death will not be further punished.⁴⁸ But again this is not applied in the Testament of Abraham to those in the covenant, who need only to repent or be sufficiently punished in order to retain their share of the covenant promises; the atoning efficacy of repentance and premature death applies equally to all. This universalism stands in sharp contrast to the strong emphasis on converting to Judaism in the Egyptian work

⁴⁰ Kohler, JQR 7 (1895).

⁴¹ Cf. Turner, The Testament of Abraham, pp. 149f. Turner saw the universalism as supporting an early date, since he thought that it soon disappeared from Judaism.

⁴² E.g. AsMos 10:7f.; R. Eliezer in tSanh 13:2; JosAsen 8:5; 9:2; 15:3, 7f.; perhaps Philo: See Sanders, "The Covenant as a Soteriological Category and the Nature of Salvation in Palestinian and Hellenistic Judaism," Jews, Greeks and Christians, R. Hamerton-Kelly and R. Scroggs, eds. (Leiden, 1976) pp. 26–38.

⁴³ E.g. AsMos 4:6f.; Philo, Praem 162–72; 4Ezra 13:39f.

⁴⁴ E.g. R. Joshua in tSanh 13:2; ApAb 22; perhaps 1En 108:11 (note "those who were born in darkness").

⁴⁵ Note, for example, the prohibition of intermarriage: TJob 45:3; JosAsen 7:6; earlier, Jub 30:7.

⁴⁶ In 3Bar there is no clear distinction between Jews and gentiles. The lists of vices, for example, are quite general, although idolatry is mentioned (13:4). In 2En, note such phrases as "all the souls of mankind, however many are born" (23:4; cf. 43:1); race of Adam (30:15); no one shall escape notice in the day of judgment (46:3); whoever accepts and obeys (48:6–9). There are, however, some motifs that are more distinctly Jewish: sacrifices atone (59:2; but cf. 45:1–3); "upper Jerusalem" as a name for heaven (55:2). One can find a few other sentences in Jewish materials that put "all the children of the world" or "all nations" on equal terms at the end. See 1En 10:21; 91:14 (J. T. Milik, ed., The Books of Enoch [Oxford, 1976] p. 267).

⁴⁷ Contrast the prayer of Moses in AsMos 11:17; 12:6.

⁴⁸ E.g. Mek Bahodesh 7 (Lauterbach, vol. 2, pp. 249–51) and parallels; mYoma 8.8; SifNum 4 (Horovitz, 7). See E. P. Sanders, Paul and Palestinian Judaism (London, Philadelphia, 1977) pp. 159, 172–74.

Joseph and Asenath, or the emphasis on loyalty to the dietary laws in 4 Maccabees (see 1:33; 13:2), or Philo's insistence on the importance of being in the commonwealth of Israel,⁴⁹ or the repetition in the Testament of Job and even 2 Enoch of the significance of the Temple sacrifices.⁵⁰ Further, since Abraham is the subject, it is remarkable that nothing is said about proselytism, since Abraham was known as the first proselyte.⁵¹

Numerous other theological characteristics should be noted. The emphasis on judgment on the basis of deeds (A12f.; B9f.) is standard, both in Jewish and Christian literature,⁵² although the literal depiction of it in the Testament of Abraham is unique. The efficacy of repentance and God's merciful inclination to delay the death of sinners until they repent are noteworthy, and the delay of death to allow for repentance is perhaps a unique motif.⁵³ God is the final judge, although recension A differs from most Jewish and Christian literature in interposing two prior levels of judgment. God can be directly prayed to and is directly concerned with men's conduct, although he uses angels as intermediaries. Michael, as often elsewhere, is the chief intermediary. Two angels not mentioned elsewhere are named: Dokiël, who weighs, and Puriel, who tests by fire. The idea that the soul separates from the body at the time of death, and that it is the soul that goes either to salvation or punishment, is relatively widespread. Recension A does not, as do some documents, explicitly provide for the future resurrection of the body and the reunion of body and soul, although B7:16, where the resurrection is mentioned, does imply such a reunion (see A20 n. h).

Since it appears likely that one of the main purposes of the original author was to describe the judgment scene (see "Genre and relation to other Jewish and Christian literature"), and thus to indicate on what basis all individuals would gain either life or punishment, this theme deserves further comment. As has been noted, the soteriology of A is simple: If sins not repented of or punished by premature death prior to the judgment outweigh or outnumber righteous deeds, the soul is sentenced to punishment. If righteous deeds predominate, the soul goes to life. If they are equally balanced, the implication of A14:6 seems to be that the balance can be tilted in favor of life by intercessory prayer. God is merciful and desires that sinners repent, but if they deserve punishment, he is righteous and will punish. All this is straightforward, and most of these themes are common in Jewish materials. The author's particular contribution is in having everyone, Jew or gentile, judged on the same basis and in describing the judgment concretely. The author brought together in graphic form three traditional images of judgment, although they are not actually harmonized or assigned separate roles in the testing of deeds. The operative means of testing appears to be the enumeration of deeds written in a book.

Further, the author harmonized three levels of judgment: the judgment of individual souls immediately after death, the traditional nationalistic theme of the judgment of gentiles by Israel (or of the wicked by the righteous), and the final apocalyptic judgment by God.

In both these cases—the presentation of three modes of judgment and the presentation of three levels of judgment—the author is reconciling separate traditional motifs, but the harmony is only pictorial and is not based on a systematic explanation of how the harmonization works.

⁴⁹ Virt 219 (on proselytes who join the [Jewish] commonwealth, which is "full of true life and vitality"). Cf. the importance of being initiated into the mysteries of Moses, Virt 178.

⁵⁰ TJob 15:9; 42:6–8; cf. 2En 59:2; 62:1.

⁵¹ Delcor, Le Testament d'Abraham, p. 36, thinks that the reference to Abraham's hospitality implies his activity in proselytism, citing a rabbinic Midrash to that effect. Cf. Schmidt (Le Testament d'Abraham, vol. 1, p. 120). What is striking about TAB is that proselytism is not mentioned at all; nor is there need to refer to it, since all the race of Adam is judged by the same standard.

⁵² E.g. Rom 2:13; 2Cor 5:10; Mt 25:31–46. For the theme of weighing deeds in Paul and Palestinian Jewish literature, and an argument to the effect that "weighing" does not, as it does in TAB, constitute soteriology in other literature, see Sanders, Paul and Palestinian Judaism, pp. 128–47, 515–88, 543.

⁵³ See A10:14 and n.

⁵⁴ The full evidence was set out by Turner; see n. 5 above. When one takes into account the probable date of composition, the late redactional activity, and the full evidence of the dependence of TAB on the NT in at least three places, it becomes impossible to accept the view of C. W. Fishburne, "ICor. iii 10–15 and the Testament of Abraham," NTS 17 (1970) 109–15, that Paul used TAB A13:13. Fishburne did not have access to Turner's study, nor did he note the numerous late elements in TAB A.

Relation to canonical books

Almost nothing of the Old Testament appears in the Testament of Abraham except the obvious references to Abraham in Genesis (see A1:5; 3:6; 4:11; 6:4; 8:5–7; see also 13:8; 11:12; B2:8–10; 6:10–13; see also 5:1). Recension A, as we now have it, has been influenced by the wording of the New Testament in at least three places (see A11:2, 10f.; 13:13 and nn.).⁵⁴ Recension B may also have been influenced by the wording of Matthew 7:13,⁵⁵ although the image of two gates probably does not depend on Matthew.

Genre and relation to other Jewish and Christian literature

The Testament of Abraham is not properly a testament.⁵⁶ Michael, at God's behest, instructs Abraham to make testamentary disposition of his goods, but no testament is made and there are no last words of advice to his son, although Isaac figures in the story. Nor is there any direct paraenesis, although the value of doing good works and avoiding evil is made prominent. The tour of earth and the view of the judgment are related to numerous other views of heaven, hell, the afterlife, and the like, which are usually called "apocalypses" or "ascensions." The third principal part of the work concerns Abraham's reluctance to die and a description of how his soul is taken. There are parallels to this motif, especially in stories about Moses.

The purpose of the book appears to be this: The author was concerned to present the judgment scene, in order to stress the value of good works, the efficacy of repentance, and God's justice and mercy, and in order to reconcile and depict the various images of judgment—by fire, balance, and deeds written in books. He chose as his medium a narrative that plays on the testamentary motif in order to provide an introduction: Michael goes to Abraham to advise him that it is time to draw up a will in view of his impending death. The author employs the theme of resisting death, borrowed from Moses traditions, as the occasion of Abraham's being given a tour of earth and subsequently a view of the judgment. Thus the judgment scene is central, and the other two principal motifs are employed to introduce it and provide a setting for it.

The only real connection with the testamentary literature is the emphasis on one virtue. Just as Job exemplifies endurance and charity, Abraham exemplifies hospitality.

The reluctance of the seer to die, as well as the connection of this motif with a vision, probably comes from Moses traditions. The exegetical base for the connection between resistance to death and revelations about the world to come seems to be Deuteronomy 34:1–4, which the earliest Midrashim interpret thus: God shows Moses "all the land" in compensation for not letting him enter, after Moses had protested the restriction. The rabbis understand the vision of the land to include its historical future: Moses saw the Temple and "the whole land" from the time of creation until the resurrection of the dead; while "the city of palm trees" (Deut 34:3) is understood to mean that Moses saw Paradise and the righteous leisurely strolling in it.⁵⁷ The Mekilta also mentions in this connection that God showed Abraham the land and some of its future history.⁵⁸ In later Midrashim, Moses is depicted as having been given a tour of heaven and hell, conducted by angels.⁵⁹ It may be that the motif of Michael's coming for Abraham's soul is also dependent on Moses traditions, and it is likely that a now lost "Assumption of Moses" told of Michael's being sent to bury Moses, Satan's opposition, and Michael's victory.⁶⁰ There is a twofold scene of Moses' disposition: His soul is taken to heaven and his body buried.⁶¹ Moses' protest of death and his being given a view of the other world have a better exegetical grounding and are more widespread than the story about Abraham, and it is likely that Moses traditions influenced the Testament of Abraham.

⁵⁵ See B8 n. e.

⁵⁶ See recently Nickelsburg, SCS 6, pp. 85–88; A. Kolenkow, SCS 6, pp. 139–52.

⁵⁷ SifDeut 357 (to 34:1f.).

⁵⁸ Mek Amalek 2 (Lauterbach, vol. 2, pp. 151–54).

⁵⁹ See GedMos; "The Revelation of Moses," by M. Gaster, repr. in Studies and Texts (Jerusalem, 1971; ET first published 1893) pp. 125–41.

⁶⁰ See S. E. Loewenstamm, "The Death of Moses," SCS 6 (1976) p. 208: ". . . in all the midrashim that recognize the participation of the angels in the burial of Moses, Michael, the guardian angel of Israel, occupies the leading role."

⁶¹ Clement, Strom 6.5. It is not unlikely that these Moses traditions also influenced the stories about Adam and Eve in ApMos.

There are, however, other stories about Abraham's being conducted on a heavenly tour or being shown a vision of the afterlife. In connection with the promise to Sarah (not, it is to be noted, in connection with Abraham's death), Pseudo-Philo wrote that God showed Abraham a vision of the place of fire for punishing the wicked and the torches for enlightening the righteous.⁶² On the occasion of the sacrifice mentioned in Genesis 15:17 (again, not his death), the Apocalypse of Abraham 15–29 describes a heavenly tour in which Abraham sees the seven heavens and some historical events. There is a similar story in Targum Neophiti at the same point.⁶³ There are numerous other stories of ascensions and heavenly tours, but it still appears most likely that the author, in connecting a protest against death with a heavenly tour, was principally indebted to the Moses traditions.⁶⁴

The heavenly tour of the Testament of Abraham must be distinguished from other "ascensions" and "apocalypses." It is not a tour of the different layers of heaven (usually seven), nor is it a tour of the place of repose of the righteous and the punishment of the wicked. It is a view primarily of the place of judgment to which souls go for sentencing. Thus the work lacks the paraenetic purpose of other "tour" works, which describe the awful torment of the damned and the bliss of the righteous.

The testament of Abraham is also related to works that give an account of the departure of the soul and the burial of the body, such as the Apocalypse of Moses, the Testament of Job, and the lost Assumption of Moses. Other comparisons and contrasts are cited in the notes.

Some of the themes—that angels do not eat, the heavenly tour, the departure of the soul and its ascent—are so widespread that direct influence is impossible to determine. The Testament of Abraham, however, does seem to have been used by the author of the Christian Apocalypse of Paul. Note, for example, God's repeated statement in chapters 4, 5, and 6 that his "patience bears with them until they are converted and repent" (cf. TAB A10:14; B12:13). It also appears to have been used by the author of the Christian Apocalypse of Sedrach. Other parallels are cited in the notes.

⁶² Ps-Philo, LAB 23:6.

⁶³ See Delcor, Le Testament d'Abraham, p. 39. Delcor (p. 41) regards this as the point of departure for the story in TAB.

⁶⁴ In this as in many other matters it is difficult to decide whether one tradition influenced another or whether similar stories arose spontaneously. The date of the final redaction of the materials is not always decisive. In the present case, the final redaction of the materials in which the Moses stories appear is probably later than the date of the original composition of TAB. The arguments in favor of TAB's dependence on Moses traditions are as follows: The other Abraham traditions about a vision or heavenly tour do not connect it with a protest against death, while this is the standard connection in the Moses traditions; the connection of protest with tour or vision arises naturally from the biblical story of Moses' protest in Deut 34; although the earliest sources for the Moses tradition (SifDeut and Clement of Alexandria) are to be dated at the end of the 2nd cent., it is noteworthy that essentially the same tradition appears in both Palestine and Egypt; finally, Clement was drawing on an early (but now lost) work, while the exegesis of Deut 34:1 in SifDeut almost certainly antedates the final redaction of SifDeut.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 70–72.
 Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 166f.
 Denis, Introduction, pp. 31–39.

EDITIONS: THE GREEK TEXT

- James, M. R. The Testament of Abraham: The Greek text now first edited with an introduction and notes. T&S 2.2; Cambridge, 1892. (The edition contains W. E. Barnes's appendix, which gives in ET extracts from all three testaments in the Ar. version.)
 Schmidt, F. Le Testament d'Abraham: Introduction, édition de la recension courte, traduction et notes. (Unpublished doctoral dissertation, University of Strasbourg, 1971, 2 vols.)
 Stone, M. E., trans. The Testament of Abraham: The Greek recensions. T&T 2; Pseudepigrapha Series 2; Missoula, Mont., 1972. (A reprint of James's text with ET on facing pp.)

EDITIONS: ANNOTATED TRANSLATIONS

- Box, G. H. The Testament of Abraham. TED; London, 1927.
 Craigie, W. A. "The Testament of Abraham . . .," ANF, vol. 10, pp. 183–201. (The introduction and nn. are quite brief, but the two recs. are conveniently printed in parallel cols.)
 Delcor, M. Le Testament d'Abraham: Introduction, traduction du texte grec et commentaire de la recension grecque longue, suivie de la traduction des Testaments d'Abraham, d'Isaac et de Jacob d'après les versions orientales. SVTP 2; Leiden, 1973. (This is the most nearly complete edition. Information on the most important editions and translations of the non-Gk. versions is given on pp. 15–22.)
 Janssen, E. "Testament Abrahams," JSHRZ 3 (1975) 193–256.

GENERAL

- Nickelsburg, G. W. E., Jr., ed. Studies on the Testament of Abraham, rev. ed. SCS 6; Missoula, Mont., 1976.
 Turner, N. The Testament of Abraham: A Study of the Original Language, Place of Origin, Authorship, and Relevance. (Unpublished doctoral dissertation, London, 1953.)
 ———. "The 'Testament of Abraham': Problems in Biblical Greek," NTS 1 (1954/55) 219–23.

TESTAMENT OF ABRAHAM

Recension A

1 1 Abraham lived the measure of his life, 995 years. All the years of his life he lived in quietness, gentleness, and righteousness, and the righteous man was very hospitable: •For he pitched his tent at the crossroads of the oak of Mamre^a and welcomed everyone—rich and poor, kings and rulers, the crippled and the helpless, friends and strangers, neighbors and passersby—(all) on equal terms did the pious, entirely holy, righteous, and hospitable Abraham welcome. •But even to him came the common and inexorable bitter cup of death and the unforeseen end of life. 4 Therefore the Master God called his archangel Michael^b and said to him, “Commander-in-chief^c Michael, go down to Abraham and tell him about his death, so that he may arrange for the disposition^d of his possessions. •For I have blessed him as the stars of heaven and as the sand by the seashore, and he lives in abundance, (having) a large livelihood and many possessions, and he is very rich.^e But above all others he is righteous in all goodness, (having been) hospitable^f and loving until the end of his life. •But you, archangel Michael, go to Abraham, my beloved friend,^g announce his death to him, and give him this assurance. •‘At this time you are about to leave this vain world and depart from the body, and you will come to your own Master^h among the good.’ ”

bSot 10a

1 2 So the Commander-in-chief left the presence of God and went down to Abraham at the oak of Mamre, and he found the righteous Abraham in the nearby field, sitting beside yokes of plow oxen with the sons of Masek^a and other servants, twelve in number. And behold the Commander-in-chief came toward him. •When Abraham saw the Commander-in-chief Michael coming from afar, in the manner of a handsome soldier, then Abraham arose and met him, just as was his custom to greet and welcome all strangers.^b •And the Commander-in-chief saluted him and said, “Hail, honored father, righteous soul elect of God, true friend of the heavenly One.” •And Abraham said to the Commander-in-chief, “Hail, honored soldier, bright as the sun and most handsome, more than all the sons of men. Well met! •Therefore I ask your presence whence has come your youthfulness of age.^c Teach me, your suppliant, whence and from what army and from what road your beauty has come here.” •The Commander-in-chief said, “Righteous Abraham, I come from the great city. I have been sent from the great king to provide for the

1 a. In both recs., “oak” is always singular and “Mamre” is treated as an adjective, as in LXX Gen 18:1, both points in contrast to the Heb.

b. Michael as head of the angels and God’s principal messenger to men: ApMos 3:2; 13:2; 22:1; Rev 12:7; perhaps AsMos 10:2; cf. Dan 12:1, especially Theodotus.

c. Gk. archistratēgos; a common title in A but not B: See B14, n. b. The title is apparently Egyptian Jewish: See also 3Bar 11:6; 13:3; 2En 22:6; 33:10 (both in MS A); JosAsen 14:7; GkApEzra 1:4; 4:24. It appears to originate in the title LXX gives to the sword-bearing man who is captain of the Lord’s army in Josh 5:13–15.

d. “Arrange for the disposition” is diataxetai, the verb consistently used in A. See also 4:11; 8:11; 15:1. The verb does not appear in B: Note dioikēsē (1:3) and diatithēmi (7:17).

e. Gen 22:17 is taken to refer to Abraham’s wealth rather than his descendants; so also 4:11.

The quotation is in precise agreement with LXX.

f. Gk. philoxenos. On philoxenia as the principal virtue, cf. ApPaul 27.

g. Isa 41:8LXX, “whom I loved”; Heb., “my friend”; cf. also 2 Chron 20:7. On Abraham as the friend (philos) of God: Jas 2:23; ApAb 9, 10; Philo, Sobr 56 (adding “my friend” to Gen 18:17).

h. Gk. despotēs as a title for God: Gen 15:2, 8 LXX; and frequently in LXX.

2 a. Masek as proper name: Gen 15:2 LXX; contrast the Heb.

b. Cf. Heb 13:2: “And remember always to welcome strangers, for by doing this, some people have entertained angels without knowing it”; see Gen 18:1f.; Tob 5:5–12:22; Homer, Odyssey 17.485f.; Ovid, Metamorphoses 8.626f.

c. Apparently, “you”; cf. “your presence,” “your beauty.”

7 succession of^d a true friend of his, for the king summons him.” •And Abraham said, “Come, my lord, go with me as far as my field.” And the Commander-in-
 8 chief said, “I am coming.” •And so they went and sat in the plowed field beside 9 the company. •Abraham said to his servants, the sons of Masek, “Go to the herd of horses and get two gentle and tame horses, well broken, so that I and this 10 stranger may ride.” •And the Commander-in-chief said, “No, my lord Abraham, do not let them bring horses, for I abstain from ever sitting on a four-footed animal.
 11 For is not my king rich with great possessions, having authority over both men and every kind of beast?^e But I abstain from ever sitting upon a four-footed animal.
 12 Let us go then, righteous soul, walking in high spirits until (we reach) your house.” And Abraham said, “Amen; let it be so.”

1,2 3 As they were leaving the field in the direction of his house, •beside the road
 3 there stood a cypress tree. •And by the command of God the tree cried out in a human voice and said, “Holy, holy, holy is the Lord God who is summoning him 4 to those who love him.”^a •Abraham hid the mystery, thinking that the Commander-5 in-chief had not heard the voice of the tree. •Then they came near the house and sat in the courtyard. And when Isaac saw the face of the angel he said to Sarah his mother, “My lady mother, behold: The man who is sitting with my father 6 Abraham is no son of the race which dwells upon the earth.” •And Isaac ran and did obeisance^b to him and fell at the feet of the incorporeal one. And the incorporeal one blessed him and said, “The Lord God will bestow upon you his promise which he gave to your father Abraham and to his seed, and he will also bestow upon 7 you the precious prayer^c of your father and your mother.” •Then Abraham said to Isaac his son, “Isaac, my child, draw water from the well and bring it to me in the vessel so that we may wash this stranger’s feet; for he is tired, having come 8 to us from a long journey.” •And so Isaac ran to the well and drew water into 9 the vessel and brought it to them. •Then Abraham went forward and washed the feet of the Commander-in-chief Michael. Abraham’s heart was moved and he 10 wept over the stranger. •When Isaac saw his father crying, he also cried. When 11 the Commander-in-chief saw them crying, he too wept with them; •and the Commander-in-chief’s tears fell to the vessel, into the water of the basin,^d and 12 they became precious stones. •Abraham saw the wonder and was astonished, and he picked up the stones secretly and hid the mystery, keeping it in his heart alone.

Gen 12:1-7;
22:17

1 4 Then Abraham said to Isaac his son, “My beloved son, go into the guest room^a and beautify it. Spread out for us there two couches, one for me and one for this 2 man who is staying as our guest today. •Prepare for us there a dining couch and a lampstand and a table with an abundance of everything good. Beautify the chamber, my child, and spread linens and purple cloth and silk^b underfoot. Burn every valuable and prized incense, and bring fragrant plants from the garden to 3 fill our house. •Light seven lamps filled with oil so that we may make merry,

d. “Provide for the succession of”: diadochên . . . komizomenos; so also Schmidt. Box, Craigie, and Stone: “To take the place of”; Delcor: “Porteur d’une invitation.” Delcor’s translation gives a satisfactory translation of the participle, but neither translation makes good sense of diadochên. The meaning apparently is that Michael’s assignment is to encourage Abraham to make testamentary dispositions; see 1:4; 4:11; 8:11; 15:1.

e. In 2:10f. the words for “animal” and “beast” are zôon and ktênos respectively. The same two words appear in B2:5, 12, in a different context and where there is little verbatim agreement.

3 a. The meaning is not completely clear, but it is probably “is summoning Abraham to be with those who love God.” So Box.

b. Gk. proskuneô, which can vary in significance from “worship,” “prostrate oneself before,” and the like, to “salute.” It is understood here in the stronger sense. Cf. Gen 18:2, where Abraham prostrates himself before the angels.

c. Gk. euchê, “prayer or vow,” but usually “vow” in LXX. Gen mentions no relevant euchê, but cf. Jub 22:6-9, where Abraham prays for his descendants.

d. Gk. nîptêr, for which LSJM cites only Jn 13:5.

4 a. Gk. to tameian tou triklinou, lit. “chamber with three couches.” Triklinos is subsequently used for individual rooms and is translated “room.”

b. Gk. byssos: LSJM: “flax,” the linen made from it; Indian cotton; silk.

because this man who is staying as our guest today is more honorable than kings 4 and rulers; for even his appearance surpasses all the sons of men." •Isaac prepared everything well. And Abraham, taking along the archangel Michael, went up to the guest chamber, and they both sat on the couches, and he placed between them 5 a table with an abundance of everything good. •Then the Commander-in-chief rose up and went outside, as if he needed to urinate; and he ascended into heaven in 6 the twinkling of an eye and stood before God and said to him: •"Master, Lord,^c let your might know that I cannot announce the mention of death to that righteous man, because I have not seen upon earth a man like him—merciful, hospitable, righteous, truthful, God-fearing, refraining from every evil deed. And so now 7 know, Lord, that I cannot announce the mention of death." •Then the Lord said, "Michael, Commander-in-chief, go down to my friend Abraham, and whatever he should say to you, this do;^d and whatever he should eat you also eat with him.
 8 And I shall send my holy spirit upon his son Isaac, •and I shall thrust the mention of his death into Isaac's heart, so that he will see his father's death in a dream.
 Then Isaac will relate the vision, you will interpret it, and he himself will come 9 to know his end." •And the Commander-in-chief said, "Lord, all the heavenly spirits are incorporeal, and they neither eat nor drink.^e Now he has set before me a table with an abundance of all the good things which are earthly and perishable.
 And now, Lord, what shall I do? How shall I escape his notice while I am sitting 10 at one table with him?" •The Lord said, "Go down to him, and do not be concerned about this. For when you are seated with him I shall send upon you an all-devouring spirit, and, from your hands and through your mouth, it will consume everything 11 which is on the table. Make merry with him in everything. •Only interpret well the things of the vision, so that Abraham will come to know the sickle of death and the unforeseen end of life, and so that he might make arrangements for the disposition of all his belongings; for I have blessed him more than the sand of the sea and as the stars of heaven."^f

1 5 Then the Commander-in-chief went down to the house of Abraham and sat with 2 him at table, while Isaac served them. •When the supper was finished, Abraham prayed, according to his custom, and the archangel prayed with him. Then they 3 rested, each on his couch. •Isaac said to his father, "Father, I too should like to rest with you in this room, so that I too might hear your conversation. For I love 4 to hear the distinction of speech of this man who has every virtue." •But Abraham said, "No, my son, but go to your own room and rest on your couch, so that we 5 should not become burdensome to this man." •Then Isaac received the blessing from them and blessed them, and he went to his own room and rested on his 6 couch. •Then God thrust the mention of death into Isaac's heart as in a dream.
 7 And around the third hour of the night Isaac woke up and rose from his couch and 8 went running up to the room where his father was asleep with the archangel. •Then when Isaac reached the door he cried out saying, "Father Abraham, get up and open (the door) immediately for me, so that I can come in and hang on your neck 9 and kiss you before they take you from me." •Then Abraham arose and opened (the door) for him. Isaac entered, hung upon his neck, and began to cry in a loud
 10 voice. •Then Abraham's heart was moved, and he too cried with him in a loud 11 voice. When the Commander-in-chief saw them crying he too cried. •Then Sarah, who was in her tent, heard their crying and came running to them. She found them 12 embracing and crying. •And Sarah said with tears, "My lord Abraham, what are 13 you crying about? Tell me, my lord. •Did this brother who is staying as our guest

c. Gk. despota kyrie: Gen 15:2, 8 LXX; and elsewhere.

d. Cf. Ma'aseh d'R. Joshua b. Levi, BHM, vol. 2, p. 48, top.

e. Angels neither eat nor drink: DeutR 11:4; cf. bYoma 4b, top; 75b (where the question is debated). The angels who visited Abraham only pretended to eat: GenR 48:14; TarJon Gen 18:8 (Cf. TargOnk 18:8); cf. Tob 12:19. Angels' food is distinct from animals': Vita 4:2; WisSol 16:20 (= manna); JosAsen 16:8 (= the honey that gives immortality).

f. "More than": also 8:5. Cf. "as": Gen 22:17 LXX; 1:5 above.

today bring you news about your nephew Lot, that he has died? Is it for this that 14 your mourn thus?" •Then the Commander-in-chief answered and said to her, "No, sister Sarah, it is not as you say. Rather, your son Isaac, it appears, had a dream and came to us crying, and when we saw him our hearts were likewise moved, and we cried."

1 6 When Sarah heard the Commander-in-chief's distinction of speech, she im-
 2 mediately realized that the speaker was an angel of the Lord. •Then Sarah beckoned Abraham to come to the door (and step) outside, and she said to him, "My lord
 3 Abraham, do you know who this man is?" •Abraham said, "I do not know."
 4 Sarah said, "You must know, my lord, the three heavenly men who stayed as guests^a in our tent beside the oak of Mamre when you slaughtered the unblemished Gen 18:1-8 5 calf and set a table for them. •After the meat had been eaten, the calf got up again and exultantly suckled its mother. Do you not know, my lord Abraham, that they gave us Isaac, the very fruit of my womb, as was promised to us? For this man 6 is one of those three holy men." •Then Abraham said, "O Sarah, you have spoken truly. Glory and blessing from (our) God and Father! For I too, late this evening, when I was washing his feet in the vessel (which has) the wash basin,^b said in my heart, 'These feet are (those of one) of the three men that I washed previously.' 7 And later when his tears fell into the basin they became precious stones." And (Abraham) took them out of his bosom and gave them to Sarah and said, "If you
 8 do not believe me, look at them." •Sarah took them and knelt down^c and embraced (him) and said, "Glory be to God who shows us wonders. And now know, my lord Abraham, that a revelation of something is among us, whether it be evil or good."

1 7 Then Abraham left Sarah and entered the room and said to Isaac, "Come, my beloved son, tell me the truth. What were the things that you saw and what 2 happened to you that you came running to us thus?" •Isaac answered and began to say, "My lord, I saw, this night, the sun and the moon above my head, and 3 its (i.e. the sun's) rays were encircling and shedding light on me. •And while I was thus watching and exulting at these things, I saw heaven opened, and I saw a light-bearing man coming down out of heaven, flashing (beams of light) more 4 than seven suns. •And that sunlike^a man came up and took the sun from my head, and he went up into the heavens, whence also he had come. And I was deeply 5 grieved that he had taken the sun from me, •and after a little while, as I was still grieving and anguishing, I saw that man for a second time coming down out of 6 heaven. And he took from me also the moon from my head. •And I cried greatly and I besought that light-bearing man and I said, 'No, my lord, do not take my glory from me. Have mercy on me and heed me. And if you do take the sun from 7 me, at least leave the moon with me.' •But he said, 'Let them be taken up to the king above, because he wants them there.' And he took them from me, but he left the rays with me."

8 The Commander-in-chief said, "Hear, righteous Abraham: The sun which your child saw is you, his father. And the moon similarly is his mother Sarah. And the light-bearing man who came down from heaven, this is the one sent from God, 9 who is about to take your righteous soul from you. •And now know, most honored Abraham, that at this time you are about to leave the earthly life and journey to 10 God." •And Abraham said to the Commander-in-chief, "O most surprising wonder 11 of wonders! And is it you, then, who are about to take my soul from me?" •The Commander-in-chief said to him, "I am Michael, the Commander-in-chief who 6 a. The verb is epizenizomai, which appears here and in B6:10, but apparently nowhere else. See Delcor, Le Testament d'Abraham, p. 112, n. 1.

b. "Basin" is here apparently an adjectival genitive, "the wash-basin-vessel." The only other construction ("the vessel of the basin") would make the vessel (lekanē) a part of the basin (niptēr), contrary to the obvious sense of 3:11 above.

c. Gk. proskuneō. See ch. 3, n. b.

7 a. Lit. "sun-shaped."

stands before God, and I was sent to you that I might announce to you the mention 12 of death. And then I shall return to him just as we were commanded.” • And Abraham said, “Now I do know that you are an angel of the Lord, and you were sent to take my soul. Nevertheless, I will not by any means follow you, but you do whatever he commands.”

1 8 When the Commander-in-chief heard this statement, he immediately became invisible. And he went up into heaven and stood before God and told (him) 2 everything which he saw at Abraham’s house. • And the Commander-in-chief also said this to the master, “Your friend Abraham also said this, ‘I will not by any 3 means follow you, but you do whatever he commands.’ • Almighty Master, what 4 do your glory and (your) immortal kingship command now?” • God said to the Commander-in-chief Michael, “Go to my friend Abraham one more time and say 5 this to him: • “Thus says the Lord your God, who led you into the promised land, 6 who blessed you more than the sand of the sea and the stars of heaven, • who opened the womb of the barren Sarah and graciously granted to you Isaac, the fruit 7 of the womb in old age. • Truly^a I say to you that blessing I will bless you and multiplying I will multiply your seed,^b and I will give to you whatever you ask 8 of me; for I am the Lord your God and besides me there is no other.^c • Tell me why you are resisting me and why there is grief in you? And why have you resisted 9 my archangel Michael? • Do you not know that all those who (spring) from Adam and Eve die? And not one of the prophets escaped death, and not one of those who reign has been immortal. Not one of the forefathers has escaped the mystery of 10 death. All have died, all have departed into Hades, all have been gathered by the sickle of Death.^d • But to you I did not send Death. I did not allow a fatal disease to befall you. I did not permit the sickle of Death to come upon you. I did not 11 allow the nets of Hades to entwine you. I did not ever want any evil to come upon you. • But for (your) good comfort I sent my Commander-in-chief Michael to you, in order that you might come to know of your departure from the world and that you might make arrangements for the disposition of your house and everything that belongs to you, and so that you might bless Isaac your beloved son. And now 12 know that I have done these things not wanting to grieve you. • And so why did you say to my Commander-in-chief, “I will not by any means follow you”? Why did you say these things? Do you not know that if I give permission to Death, and he should come to you, then I should see whether you would come or not come?”^e

Ex 6:8
Heb 11:9
Gen 22:17
Gen 18:11-14

1 9 The Commander-in-chief received the exhortations of the Lord and went down to Abraham. When the righteous man saw him he fell upon his face on the ground 2 as one dead, • and the Commander-in-chief told him everything which he had heard from the Most High. Then the pious and righteous Abraham stood up and with many tears he fell at the feet of the incorporeal one and besought (him), saying, 3 “I beg you, Commander-in-chief of the powers above, since you have thought it altogether worthy yourself to come to me, a sinner and your completely worthless servant,^a I beseech you now too, Commander-in-chief, to serve me (by delivering) 4 a communication yet once more to the Most High, and say to him; • “Thus says Abraham your slave: “Lord, Lord, in every deed and word which I have asked 5 of you you have heeded me, and you have fulfilled my every wish. • And now,

8 a. Amēn.

b. Gen 22:17, retaining verbatim the Hebraism from LXX. The Heb. idiom means “I will surely bless . . .”

c. Gk. plēn emou ouk estin allos. Cf. Ex 20:3 and Deut 5:7, theoi heteroi plēn emou; Deut 4:35, 39, ouk estin eti [allos] plēn autou; 2En 36:1.

d. Cf. the argument with Moses, PetMos, BHM, vol. 1, p. 116 bottom.

e. Cf. PetMos, BHM, vol. 1, pp. 127f.; DeutR 11:10: God first commands his chief angels to take Moses’ soul, but they decline because they are not great enough. Then Samael, the angel of death, goes but is unsuccessful. Finally God himself takes Moses’ soul.

9 a. It is common in Jewish sources for those who are considered “righteous” to consider themselves unworthy in prayer or in comparison with God. See E. P. Sanders, Paul and Palestinian Judaism, pp. 224–28, 266f., 291f., 375, 395, 421f.

Lord, I do not resist your might, for I too know that I am not immortal, but rather mortal. Although, therefore, at your command everything yields and shudders and trembles before your power, and I too fear, yet I ask one request of you. • And now, Master Lord, heed my plea: While I am yet in this body I wish to see all the inhabited world and all the created things which you established, master, through one word;^b and when I have seen these things, then, if I depart from life, I shall have no sorrow.' ' ' • The Commander-in-chief then went again and stood before God and told him everything, saying, "Thus says your friend Abraham, 'I wish to behold all the inhabited world in my life, before I die.' " • When the Most High heard these things, he again commanded the Commander-in-chief Michael and said to him, "Take a cloud of light, and the angels who have authority over the chariots, and go down and take the righteous Abraham on a chariot of cherubim and lift him up into the air of heaven so that he may see all the inhabited world."

10 And the archangel Michael went down and took Abraham on a chariot of cherubim and lifted him up into the air of heaven and led him onto the cloud, as well as sixty angels. And on the carriage^a Abraham soared over the entire inhabited world. • And Abraham beheld the world as it was that day: Some were plowing, others leading wagons; in one place they were pasturing (flocks), elsewhere abiding (with their flocks) in the fields,^b while dancing and sporting and playing the zither; in another place they were wrestling^c and pleading at law; elsewhere they were weeping, then also bearing the dead to the tomb. • And he also saw newlyweds being escorted in procession.^d In a word, he saw everything which was happening in the world, both good and evil. • Then continuing on, Abraham saw men bearing swords, who held in their hands sharpened swords, and Abraham asked the Commander-in-chief, "Who are these?" • And the Commander-in-chief said, "These are robbers, who want to commit murder and rob and burn and destroy." • Abraham said, "Lord, Lord, heed my voice and command that wild beasts come out of the thicket and devour them." • And as he was speaking wild beasts came out of the thicket and devoured them. • And he saw in another place a man with a woman, engaging in sexual immorality with each other, • and he said, "Lord, Lord, command that the earth open and swallow them up." And immediately the earth split in two and swallowed them up. • And he saw in another place men breaking into^e a house and carrying off the possessions of others, • and he said, "Lord, Lord, command that fire come down from heaven and consume them." • And as he was speaking fire came down from heaven and consumed them. • And immediately a voice came down from heaven to the Commander-in-chief, speaking thus, "O Michael, Commander-in-chief, command the chariot to stop and turn Abraham away, lest he should see the entire inhabited world. • For if he were to see all those who pass their lives in sin, he would destroy everything that exists. • For behold, Abraham has not sinned^f and he has no mercy on sinners. • But I made the world, and I do not want to destroy any one of them; but I delay^g the death

Ezek 53:11
4Ezra 8:60

b. Cf. 1Clem 27:4, "By the word of his majesty he established all things"; Poimandres 31, "By a word you established all things"; similarly WisSol 9:1; SibOr 3:20; Jub 12:4; and elsewhere, apparently depending on Ps 33:6. Contrast Ab 5:1, "with ten words."

10 a. The "carriage" or "vehicle" is now apparently the cloud.

b. "Abiding in the fields," agraulountas. The word means "live out of doors," and LSJM gives only Lk 2:8 as applying it to shepherds. Thus the usage may here depend on Lk. Most translators add "by night" or "overnight."

c. For the evidence that Jews in the Diaspora watched and perhaps participated in sports and theater, see Philo, Ebr 177 (theater) and passages cited by H. A. Wolfson, Philo, vol. 1, pp. 80f. (although Wolfson denies their significance).

d. Gk. opsikeuō, "escort in procession," a late word, cited by Lampe and Sophocles, but not LSJM. Cf. also below, 20:12, where the angels escort the soul of Abraham.

e. Lit. "digging" or "tunneling"; the word appears in Mt 6:19f.; 24:43.

f. Cf. Abraham's self-description in 9:3, "a sinner."

g. "Delay . . . until," anamenō . . . heōs. The usual translation of anamenō is "await," but LSJM gives "delay" as a possibility, and this yields better sense here. So also Box. Note that B has "my heart is moved (with compassion) . . . so that they may convert." The Slavonic has "for they may turn from their sins and save themselves" and the Ro-

15 of the sinner until he should convert and live. •Now conduct Abraham to the first gate of heaven, so that there he may see the judgments and the recompenses^h and repent overⁱ the souls of the sinners which he destroyed.”

1 11 Michael turned the chariot and brought Abraham toward the east, to the first 2 gate of heaven. •And Abraham saw two ways.^a The first way was strait and narrow
3 and the other broad and spacious.^b •[And he saw there two gates. One gate was 4 broad],^c corresponding to the broad way, and one gate was strait, corresponding 5 to the strait way. •And outside the two gates of that place, they^d saw a man seated 6 on a golden throne. And the appearance of that man was terrifying, like the 7 Master's. •And they saw many souls being driven by angels and being led through 8 the broad gate, and they saw a few other souls and they were being brought by 9 angels through the narrow gate. •And when the wondrous one who was seated on 10 the throne of gold saw few entering through the strait gate, but many entering 11 through the broad gate, immediately that wondrous man tore the hair of his head 12 and the beard of his cheeks, and he threw himself on the ground from his throne crying and wailing. •And when he saw many souls entering through the strait gate, then he arose from the earth and sat on his throne, very cheerfully rejoicing and exulting. •Then Abraham asked the Commander-in-chief, “My lord Commander-in-chief, who is this most wondrous man, who is adorned in such glory, and sometimes he cries and wails while other times he rejoices and exults?” •The incorporeal one said, “This is the first-formed^e Adam who is in such glory, and he looks at the world, since everyone has come from him. •And when he sees many souls entering through the strait gate, then he arises and sits on his throne rejoicing and exulting cheerfully, because this strait gate is (the gate) of the righteous, which leads to life, and those who enter through it come into Paradise.
And on account of this the first-formed Adam rejoices, since he sees the souls being saved. •And when he sees many souls entering through the broad gate, then he pulls the hair of his head and casts himself on the ground crying and wailing bitterly; for the broad gate is (the gate) of the sinners, which leads to destruction and to eternal punishment.^f And on account of this the first-formed Adam falls from his throne, crying and wailing over the destruction of the sinners; for many are the ones who are destroyed, while few are the ones who are saved. •For among seven thousand there is scarcely to be found one saved soul, righteous and undefiled.”^g

Gen 2:8(LXX)
1En 32:2

manian “I do not desire the death of the wicked, but that he should repent and live.” Cf. ApPaul 4, 5, 6 (“bear with them . . . so that”). The idea that God postpones the punishment of sins in order to allow time for repentance is relatively widespread: Rom 2:4; 3:25; WisSol 11:23; 12:10; Philo, LegAll III.106; cf. the rabbinic view that God postpones the deserved punishment of the world for the sake of the patriarchs (Sifra Behuqqotai perek 8:7; to Lev 26:42). Actually delaying death is a striking development of this theme.

h. Gk. antapodosis may have either a negative or a positive meaning.

i. Or, “change his mind about.”

11 a. Two ways: see e.g. SifDeut 53 (Finkelstein, pp. 120f.); bBer 28b; Did 1:1; J. P. Audet, La Didachè: Instructions des apôtres (Paris, 1958): See Audet's index under “Duae viae.”

b. The commentators correctly note that the theme of two ways is a common feature of Jewish literature. The verbatim agreement between this passage and Mt 7:13f., however, is marked: the combination of “gate” and “way,” the use of precisely the same four adjectives (stenē, teihlimenē, plateia, and eurochōros), and the phrases that appear later in this chapter, “which leads to life” and “which leads to destruction.” The compact and balanced form of Mt could hardly have been derived from TAB; and in view of other evidence of verbatim agreement between TAB A and the NT, the dependence of the former on the latter here seems indisputable. See “Relation to Canonical Books.”

c. Following James's reconstruction.

d. Or “I.” Either the person or the number of the verb changes here: from eiden to idon.

e. Gk. ho prōtoplastos; in LXX at WisSol 7:1; 10:1. LSJM cites in addition only Philo, Fragmenta 61 H (=QE 2.46); but so also the introduction to ApMos (referring to both Adam and Eve). Cf. also Philo, Op 27: En archē (Gen 1:1) means prōtos; the verb plassein appears in Gen 2:7 LXX. Prōtos and plassein are also connected in SibOr 3:25: ton prōton plasthenta.

f. Apparently conflating Mt 7:13 (“that leads to perdition”) and Mt 25:46 (“eternal punishment”).

g. For the “many” and “few” theme, cf. Mt 22:14; 4Ezra 8:3 (so Box, Delcor). The Romanian here is more severe: one saved in 7,000 years. Cf. the sevenfold of Gk. rec. B, where the Falasha has thirteen times. Cf. the “well nigh all that have been created” of 4Ezra 7:48 and 7:68: “all the earth-born are defiled with iniquities . . .”

1 12 While he was yet saying these things to me,^a behold (there were) two angels,
 2 with fiery aspect and merciless intention and relentless look, and they drove myriads
 3 of souls, mercilessly beating them with fiery lashes. • And the angel seized one 4 soul. And they drove all the souls into the broad gate toward destruction. • Then 5 we too followed the angels and we came inside that broad gate. • And between the 6,7 two gates there stood a terrifying throne with the appearance of terrifying crystal, 8 flashing like fire. • And upon it sat a wondrous man, bright as the sun, like unto 9 a son of God. • Before him stood a table like crystal, all of gold and byssus.^b • On 10 the table lay a book whose thickness was six cubits, while its breadth was ten 11 cubits. • On its right and on its left stood two angels holding papyrus and ink and 12 pen. • In front of the table sat a light-bearing angel, holding a balance in his hand.
 13 [On] (his) left there sat a fiery angel, altogether merciless and relentless, holding 14 a trumpet in his hand, which contained within it an all-consuming fire (for) testing 15 the sinners.^c • And the wondrous man who sat on the throne was the one who 16 judged and sentenced the souls. • The two angels on the right and on the left 17 recorded. The one on the right recorded righteous deeds, while the one on the left 18 (recorded) sins.^d • And the one who was in front of the table, who was holding the 19 balance, weighed^e the souls.^f • And the fiery angel, who held the fire, tested the 20 souls.^g • And Abraham asked the Commander-in-chief Michael, “What are these 21 things which we see?” And the Commander-in-chief said, “These things which 22 you see, pious Abraham, are judgment and recompense.” • And behold, the angel
 23 who held the soul in his hand brought it before the judge. • And the judge told one 24 of the angels who served him, “Open for me this book and find for me the sins
 25 of this soul.” • And when he opened the book he found its sins and righteous deeds 26 to be equally balanced,^h and he neither turned it over to the torturers nor (placed 27 it among) those who were being saved, but he set it in the middle.ⁱ

1 13 And Abraham said, “My lord Commander-in-chief, who is this all-wondrous
 2 judge? And who are the angels who are recording? And who is the sunlike angel 3 who holds the balance? And who is the fiery angel who holds the fire?” • The 4 Commander-in-chief said, “Do you see, all-pious Abraham, the fruitful man who 12 a. Here the change to the first person is clear.

b. See ch. 4 n. b.

c. MSS CDE read “sins,” perhaps influenced by 13:13 below, which in turn seems to have been influenced by 1Cor 3:13–15. According to the Rumanian, the fiery angel holds not a trumpet with fire, but a page on which are written temptations and sins. Rec. B and the other versions do not have the passage.

d. Judgment by deeds written in a book or books: 1En 81:1f.; SifDeut 307; Ab 2:1; bNed 22a, top; RH 16b, 32b; 2En 52:15; and elsewhere. Contrast the books of the living or the book of life: Dan 12:1; Jub 30:20–22; 1En 47:3; 108:3; and elsewhere.

e. Gk. zugiazō, a verb unattested in LSJM and in Sophocles. Lampe cites only its two appearances in TABA 12, 13. The “weighing” scene appears to have led the author to use neologisms. Cf. the n. on zugias below.

f. The imagery of weighing deeds, as distinct from this graphic description of weighing souls, is very widespread. In Jewish literature, see e.g. 1En 41:1; 4Ezra 3:34 (of nations); 2En 52:15 (combining balance and books). See further Pearson, SCS 6, pp. 244, 249–53. On the theme in rabbinic material, see Sanders, Paul and Palestinian Judaism, pp. 128–47. For evidence that emphasis on the strict weighing of deeds is closer to Iranian than rabbinic thought, see D. Winston, “The Iranian Component in the Bible, Apocrypha, and Qumran,” History of Religions 5 (1966) 195, n. 33. The depiction of weighing souls, however, is generally considered Egyptian; see Delcor ad loc.; Schmidt, Le Testament d'Abraham, vol. 1, pp. 72–76 (Egyptian, somewhat altered); Turner, The Testament of Abraham, pp. 177–85.

g. Fire as a means of testing, as distinct from being the means of punishing sinners, is not so common a judgment theme as weighing and recording. It is, however, indicated in such passages as Ps 66:10–12 (65:10–12 LXX): “You tested us, God, you refined us like silver . . . but now the ordeal by fire and water is over.” Here “test” is dokimazō, the word used in TAB. So also Zech 13:9; Jer 6:29; WisSol 3:6. For refining by fire, see Mal 3:2. The image of testing (dokimazō) by fire is picked up by Paul (1Cor 3:13–15) and in 1Pet 1:7 (cf. also 1Pet 4:12, “for a test,” peirasmos). For refining by fire, see Rev 3:18. The theme as such is readily explicable in TAB as an independent use of the motif of testing by fire, although the precise wording in 13:13 below seems to have been influenced by 1Cor.

h. Gk. zugias . . . ex isou: The adjective zugios, “balanced” or “balancing,” is not found in this meaning in LSJM or Sophocles, and Lampe gives only this reference. “Balanced” is required by the context, but MSS A and B correct the neologism. Cf. n. e above. Here there is a striking agreement with B9:8: isozugousas, “evenly balanced.”

i. “In the middle”: Cf. tSanh 13:1.

is seated on the throne? This is the son of Adam, the first-formed, who is called 3 Abel, whom Cain the wicked killed. •And he sits here to judge the entire creation, Gen 4:8 examining both righteous and sinners. For God said, 'I do not judge you, but 4 every man is judged by man.' •On account of this he gave him judgment, to judge the world until his great and glorious Parousia.^a And then, righteous Abraham, there will be perfect judgment and recompense, eternal and unalterable, which no 5 one can question. •For every person has sprung from the first-formed, and on 6 account of this they are first judged here by his son.^b •And at the second Parousia they will be judged by the twelve tribes of Israel,^c both every breath and every 7 creature. •And, thirdly, they shall be judged by the Master God of all; and then thereafter the fulfillment of that judgment will be near, and fearful will be the 8 sentence and there is none who can release. •And thus the judgment and recompense of the world is made through three tribunals. And therefore a matter is not ultimately established by one or two witnesses, but every matter shall be established by three witnesses.^d

9 "The two angels, the one on the right and the one on the left, these are those who record sins and righteous deeds. The one on the right records righteous deeds, 10 while the one on the left (records) sins. •And the sunlike angel, who holds the balance in his hand, this is the archangel Dokiel,^e the righteous balance-bearer, and he weighs the righteous deeds and the sins^f with the righteousness of God.^g 11 And the fiery and merciless angel, who holds the fire in his hand, this is the archangel Purouel, who has authority over fire,^h and he tests the work of men 12 through fire. •And if the fire burns up the work of anyone, immediately the angel of judgment takes him and carries him away to the place of sinners, a most bitter 13 place of punishment. •But *if the fire tests the work of anyone*ⁱ and does not touch it, this person is justified and the angel of righteousness takes him and carries him 14 up to be saved in the lot of the righteous. •And thus, most righteous Abraham, all things in all people are tested by fire and balance."

1 14 Abraham said to the Commander-in-chief, "My lord Commander-in-chief,
 2 how was the soul which the angel held in his hand adjudged to the middle?" •The Commander-in-chief said, "Hear, righteous Abraham: Since the judge found its sins and its righteous deeds to be equal, then he handed it over neither to judgment 3 nor to be saved, until the judge of all should come." •Abraham said [to] the Commander-in-chief, "And what is still lacking to that soul in order (for it) to be 4 saved?" •And the Commander-in-chief said, "If it could acquire one righteous deed

13 a. The final judgment will be held by God when he comes; thus the traditional view of the judgment is combined with judgment of individuals immediately after death. On God's coming, see 2En 32:1 (where it implies the resurrection). The final judgment is not connected with the word parousia in LXX, although it is linked with God's coming; e.g. Mal 3:2, eisodos. Parousia (usually of Christ) is frequently linked with judgment in the NT: e.g. 1Thes 4:15; 1Jn 2:28; for parousia used of God, see Jas 5:7; 2Pet 3:12. The term was probably more common in Jewish literature than can now be directly demonstrated.

b. For the assignment of individual souls to torment or bliss immediately after death, without waiting for the resurrection, see ApAb 21.

c. This brings in and modifies another traditional motif: the judgment of gentiles by Israel (or of the wicked by the righteous, in which case the righteous could be understood as Israel): Dan 7:22 LXX: "He gave the judgment to the saints of the Most High," i.e. to Israel; Jub 32:19: "They (Israel) shall judge all the nations . . ."; WisSol 3:8: "They (the righteous) shall judge (the) Gentiles" (ethnē); IQpHab 5.4: "God will give the judgment of the Gentiles (goyim) into the hands of his elect"; cf. IQS 5.6f.; IQH 4.26; IQM 6.6; 11.13f.; ApAb 22:29. The theme is applied to the disciples in Mt 19:28, which helps attest to its existence as a Jewish theme of judgment. The present passage in TAB is the only reference to Israel in the work.

d. Deut 19:15 LXX. "By the mouth of two witnesses, and by the mouth of three witnesses, shall every matter be established."

e. The name is elsewhere unattested, or virtually so. See Delcor, ad loc. Box (ad loc.) proposed a Heb. original, dōqī'el, which would refer to exactitude (in weighing). Schmidt (Le Testament d'Abraham, vol. 1, p. 75) proposed that the original was Sedeqiel, "justice of God."

f. Note that instead of souls (12:13), deeds are to be weighed. See ch. 12 n. f above.

g. Gk. en dikaiosunē theou: i.e. with perfect equity. Thus Delcor: "suivant la justice de Dieu." But Stone takes en to mean "by means of."

h. Fire in Gk. is pur. This is apparently a grecoized form of Uriel. Cf. 1En 20:2.

i. The italicized words are found in a different sequence in 1Cor 3:13f.

5 more than (its) sins, it would enter in to be saved.”^a • Abraham said to the Commander-in-chief, “Come, Commander-in-chief Michael, let us offer a prayer on behalf of this soul and see if God will heed us.”^b And the Commander-in-chief
6 said, “Amen, let it be so.” • And they offered supplication and prayer on behalf of the soul, and God heeded them, and when they arose from prayer they did not
7 see the soul standing there. • And Abraham said to the angel, “Where is the soul
8 which you were holding in the middle?” • And the angel said, “It was saved through your righteous prayer, and behold a light-bearing angel took it and carried 9 it up to Paradise.” • Abraham said, “I glorify the name of the Most High God and 10 his boundless mercy.” • Abraham said to the Commander-in-chief, “I beg you, archangel, heed my plea; and let us beseech the Lord yet (again) and let us prostrate
11 ourselves for his compassion • and beg his mercy on behalf of the souls of the sinners whom I previously, being evil-minded, cursed and destroyed, whom the earth swallowed up and whom the wild beasts rent asunder and whom the fire
12 consumed because of my words. • Now I have come to know that I sinned before the Lord our God. Come, Michael, Commander-in-chief of the powers above, come, let us beseech God with tears that he may forgive me (my) sinful act and 13 grant them to me.” • And the Commander-in-chief heeded him and they offered supplication before God. When they had besought him for a long time, a voice
14 came out of heaven, saying, • “Abraham, Abraham,^c I have heeded your voice and your supplication and I forgive you (your) sin; and those whom you think that I destroyed, I have called back, and I have led them into life by my great 15 goodness. • For I did punish them in judgment for a time. But those whom I destroy while they are living on the earth, I do not requite in death.”^d

1 15 The voice of the Lord said also (to) the Commander-in-chief, “Michael, Michael, my servant, return Abraham to his house, because behold his end is near and the measure of his life is completed, so that he may make arrangements for
2 the disposition of everything. And then take him and conduct him up to me.” • The ^{1:1; ApMos 13:6} Commander-in-chief turned the chariot and the cloud around and conducted Abraham to his house. • And he went to his room and sat on his couch. • And Sarah his wife came and embraced the feet of the incorporeal one and made supplication, saying, “I thank you, my lord, for bringing my lord Abraham. For behold, we
3,4 thought that (he) had been taken away from us.” • Isaac his son also came and embraced his neck. Similarly all his male and female servants also surrounded
5 Abraham in a circle and embraced him, glorifying God. • The incorporeal one said to him, “Hear, righteous Abraham: Behold your wife Sarah, behold also your beloved son Isaac, behold also all your male and female servants around you.
6 Make arrangements for the disposition of everything which you have, because the day has drawn near on which you are to depart from the body and once again go
7 to the Lord.” • Abraham said, “Did the Lord say so, or are you saying these things on your own?”^a • The Commander-in-chief said, “Hear, righteous Abraham: The 8 Master commanded and I tell (it) to you.” • Abraham said, “I will by no means

14 a. One rabbinic tradition was that God himself would remove an iniquity in the case of one whose deeds were balanced. See yKid 1.10 (61d); bRH 17a. And note the similar view in the Cop. Enoch apocryphon: B. Pearson, SCS 6, pp. 244, 275.

b. Note Abraham's intercession on behalf of Sodom, Gen 18:22–33. On intercessory prayer as such, see AsMos 11:17; 12:6 (Moses on behalf of Israel); Ps-Philo, LAB 33:5 (effective only before death); 2En 53:1 (efficacy denied); 4Ezra 7:102–15 (intercession at the time of judgment denied). This may be the earliest instance in Jewish sources in which intercessory prayer is considered effective after the death of the person on whose behalf it is offered. From later sources, see e.g. EcclR 4:1. See further E. E. Urbach, The Sages (Jerusalem, 1975) pp. 508–10 and notes. On intercession generally, see R. le Déaut, “Aspects de l’intercession dans le Judaïsme ancien,” JSJ 1 (1970) 35–57.

c. Note the repetition, “Abraham, Abraham” in Gen 22:11.

d. Cf. the well-known rabbinic view that those who are punished with suffering or premature death in this world are considered to have been sufficiently punished and to have atoned for their sins, so that they are not punished in the world to come: See Sanders, Paul and Palestinian Judaism, pp. 168–74.

15 a. Cf. PetMos, BHM vol. 1, p. 127, bottom: Moses asks Sammael: “Who sent you . . .”

11 follow you.” •When the Commander-in-chief heard this statement, he immediately 12 left Abraham’s presence and went up into the heavens and stood before the Most High God and said, •“Lord Almighty, behold I have heeded your friend Abraham with regard to everything that he mentioned to you and I have fulfilled his request:
 I showed him your power and the entire earth under heaven as well as the sea; I showed him judgment and recompense by means of a cloud and chariots. And 13 again he has said, ‘I will not follow you.’” •And the Most High said to the angel, 14 “Does my friend Abraham say still again, ‘I will not follow you?’” •The archangel said, “Lord Almighty, thus he speaks, and I refrain from touching him because from the beginning he has been your friend and he did everything which is pleasing 15 before you. •And there is no man like unto him on earth, not even Job, the wondrous man.^b And for this reason I refrain from touching him. Command, then, immortal king, what is to be done.”

1 16 Then the Most High said, “Call Death here to me, who is called the (one of) 2 abominable countenance and merciless look.”^a •And the incorporeal Michael went and said to Death, “Come! The Master of creation, the immortal king, calls you.”
 3 When Death heard, he shuddered and trembled, overcome by great cowardice; and he came with great fear and stood before the unseen Father, shuddering, 4 moaning and trembling, awaiting the Master’s command. •Then the unseen God said to Death, “Come, bitter and fierce name of the world, hide your ferocity, cover your decay, and cast off from yourself your bitterness, and put on your 5 youthful beauty and all your glory, •and go down to my friend Abraham and take him and conduct him to me. But I also tell you now that you may not terrify him; but rather you are to take him with soft speech, because he is my true friend.”
 6 When Death heard these things he left the presence of the Most High and donned a most radiant robe and made his appearance sunlike and became more comely and beautiful than the sons of men, assuming the form of an archangel, his cheeks flashing with fire; and he went away to Abraham.
 7 Now the righteous Abraham (had) come out of his room and (was) seated under the trees of Mamre, holding his chin in his hand and waiting for the arrival of the 8 archangel Michael. •And behold a sweet odor^b came to him and a radiance of light.^c And Abraham turned around and saw Death coming toward him in great glory and youthful beauty. And Abraham arose and went to meet him, thinking that he was 9 the Commander-in-chief of God. •And when Death saw him he knelt^d before him and said, “Greetings,^e honored Abraham, righteous soul, true friend of the Most 10 High God, and companion of the holy angels.” •Abraham said to Death, “Greetings, you who are sunlike in appearance and form, most glorious assistant, bearer of light, marvelous man. Whence comes your glory to us, and who are you and 11 whence have you come?” •Then Death said, “Most righteous Abraham, behold, 12 I tell you the truth. I am the bitter cup of death.”^f •Abraham said to him, “No, rather you are the comeliness of the world, you are the glory and beauty of angels and of men, you are the best formed of all forms. And you say, ‘I am the bitter cup of death,’ and do you not rather say, ‘I am the best formed of everything 13 good?’” •Death said, “I am telling you the truth. What God has named me, that 14,15 I tell you.” •Abraham said, “Why have you come here?” •Death said, “I have 16 come for^g your holy soul.” •Then Abraham said, “I understand what you are

b. Note that TJob comes from approximately the same time and place as TAB. On rabbinic views about the relationship between Job and Abraham, see A. Büchler, Studies in Sin and Atonement in the Rabbinic Literature of the First Century (London, 1929; repr. 1967) pp. 130–50.

16 a. Cf. ch. 8 n. e above.

b. Gk. osmē euōdías, as in Gen 8:21.

c. Gk. phōtos apaugasma; cf. WisSol 7:26, apaugasma . . . phōtos aidou.

d. Gk. proskuneō; see ch. 3 n. b above.

e. For chairis instead of chaire to mean “greetings,” “hail,” cf. 3Bar 11:6f.

f. The phrase “bitter cup of death” is often taken to reflect one of the names of the angel of death, Sammael, “the poison of God.” So Box, ad loc.; Delcor, ad loc. For Sammael, see DeutR 11:10 (Heb.); 3Bar 4:8; 9:7 (Gk.). In PetMos (above, ch. 8 n. e), he is called simply Sam.

g. Or, “on account of”; so also 18:4 below.

saying, but I will by no means follow you." And Death became silent and did not answer him a word.

1 17 Abraham arose and went into his house, and Death followed him there. Abraham went up into his room, and Death also went up with him. Abraham
2 reclined on his couch, and Death came and sat by his feet. •Then Abraham said, 3 "Leave, leave me, because I want to rest on my couch." •Death said, "I shall 4 not depart until I take your spirit^a from you." •Abraham said to him, "By the immortal God I say to you that you must tell me the truth! Are you Death?"
5.6 Death said to him, "I am Death. I am the one who ravages the world." •Abraham said, "I beg you, since you are Death, tell me, do you also come to all thus, in 7 pleasing shape and glory and such youthful beauty?" •And Death said, "No, my lord Abraham; for your righteous deeds and the boundless sea of your hospitality and the greatness of your love for God have become a crown upon my head. In youthful beauty and very quietly and with soft speech I come to the righteous, 8 but to the sinners I come in much decay and ferocity and the greatest bitterness 9 and with a fierce and merciless look." •Abraham said, "I beg you, heed me and 10 show me your ferocity and all your decay and bitterness." •And Death said, "You could by no means bear to behold my ferocity, most righteous Abraham." 11 Abraham said, "Yes, I shall be able to behold all your ferocity, on account of the name of the living God, because the power of my heavenly God is with me."
12 Then Death put off all the bloom of youth and beauty and all the glory and the 13 sunlike form which he had worn, •and he put on (his) robe of tyranny, and he made his appearance gloomy and more ferocious than any kind of wild beast and more 14 unclean than any uncleanness. •And he showed Abraham seven fiery heads of dragons and fourteen faces: (one of) most brightly burning fire and great ferocity, and a dark face, and a most gloomy viper's face, and a face of a most horrible precipice, and a fiercer face than an asp's, and a face of a frightening lion, and 15 a face of a horned serpent^b and of a cobra.^c •And he showed him also the face of a fiery broad sword and a sword-bearing face^d and a face of lightning flashing 16 frighteningly and a noise of frightening thunder.^d •And he showed him also another face, of a fierce, storm-tossed sea and a fierce, turbulent river and a frightening 17 three-headed dragon and a mixed cup of poisons; •and, in a word, he showed him great ferocity and unbearable bitterness and every fatal disease as of the odor of 18 death. •And from the great bitterness and ferocity, male and female servants, 19 numbering about seven thousand, died. •And the righteous Abraham entered the depression of death,^e so that his spirit failed.

1 18 And when the all-holy Abraham saw these things, he said to Death, "I beg you, all-destroying Death, hide your ferocity and put on the youthful beauty and 2 form which you previously had." •Death immediately hid his ferocity and put on 3 his youthful beauty which he previously had. •Abraham said to Death, "Why did you do this, that you killed all my male and female servants? Was it for the sake 4 of this that God sent you here today?" •And Death said, "No, my lord Abraham,
5 it is not as you say. Rather, I was sent here for^a you." •Abraham said to Death, 6 "Then how did these die? Did not the Lord even say (that they should)?" •Death said, "Believe, most righteous Abraham, that it is itself a marvel that you too 7 were not carried off with them. But still I tell you the truth: •For had not the right

17 a. For the variation of "soul" and "spirit," cf. ApMos 13:6 (soul); 32:4 (spirit).

b. Gk. kerastēs; see Prov 23:32.

c. Gk. basilikos; LSJM: "kind of serpent, basilisk, perh. Egyptian cobra"; Sophocles: "an imaginary reptile."

d. Each of these two pairs apparently counts as one.

e. Gk. eis oligōrian thanatou, "into indifference of death." Perhaps the meaning is "entered the state of indifference produced by fear or certainty of death." The phrase apparently does not mean a "faint" (as Stone), though perhaps "faintness" (Box) is implied. Note 20:7–9 below, where, in this state, Abraham kisses Death's hand.

18 a. See ch. 16 n. g above.

hand of God been with you in that hour, you too would have had to depart from this life.” •The righteous Abraham said, “Now I know that I entered into the depression of death, so that my spirit failed. •But I beg you, all-destroying Death, since the servants died untimely, come, let us plead to the Lord our God that he should heed us and raise those who died untimely through your ferocity.” •And Death said, “Amen, let it be so.” Then Abraham arose and fell upon the face of the earth and prayed, and Death with him, •and God sent a spirit of life into the dead, and they were made alive again.^b Then, therefore, the righteous Abraham gave glory to God.

19 And he went up into his room and lay down. And Death also came and stood before him. •Abraham said to him, “Leave me, because I wish to rest; for my spirit is beset with depression.” •And Death said, “I shall not depart from you until I take your soul.” •And Abraham, with a harsh countenance and an angry look, said to Death, “Who has commanded you to say these things?^a You on your own say these words, boasting; and I will by no means follow you until the Commander-in-chief Michael comes to me; and I shall go with him. •But I will say this to you: If you want me to follow you, teach me all your metamorphoses, the seven fiery heads of the dragons, and what is the face of the precipice, and what the sharp sword, and what the great turbulent river, and what the turbid, fiercely storm-tossed sea. •Teach me too about the unendurable thunder and the frightening lightning and what is the ill-smelling cup mixed (with) poisons. Teach me concerning all (these).” •And Death said, “Hear, righteous Abraham, for seven ages^b I ravage the world and I lead everyone down into Hades—kings and rulers, rich and poor, slaves and free I send into the depth of Hades. And on this account I showed you the seven heads of the dragons. •And I showed you the face of fire, since many will die burned by fire, and through the face of fire they see death. •And I showed you the face of the precipice, since many men, coming down from the heights of trees or frightening precipices, and passing out, die; and they behold death in the shape of a frightening precipice. •And I showed you the face of the sword, since many fall in wars by the sword, and they behold death in a sword. •And I showed you the face of the great turbulent river, since many, being carried off by the inundation^c of many waters and swept away by great rivers, are suffocated; and they die and see death untimely. •And I showed you the face of the fierce, storm-tossed sea, since many, encountering a great wave at sea, are shipwrecked and are (pulled) under the water and see the sea as death. •And I showed you the unendurable thunder and the frightening lightning, since many men, meeting in an hour of wrath unendurable thunder and frightening lightning coming with a carrying off of men, become . . . , and thus they see death.^d •I showed you also venomous wild beasts—asps and cobras and leopards and lions and lion cubs and bears and vipers—and in a word I showed you the face of every wild beast, most righteous one, since many men are borne off by wild beasts,

b. Gk. anazōpoieō, a rare word and probably Egyptian Jewish, see JosAsen 8:11; 15:4.

19 a. Cf. ch. 15 n. a above.

b. On the time limit of the world, see D. Winston, “The Iranian Component in the Bible, Apocrypha, and Qumran: A Review of the Evidence,” History of Religions 5 (1966) 187.

c. Gk. hypo embasēs.

d. As James notes, the passage is corrupt. Delcor (Le Testament D’Abraham, p. 170) comments, “Without changing the evidently corrupt text, the general idea seems to be the following: certain men who perish of violent death are victims of the divine wrath by reason of their sins and deserve a sudden punishment.” Schmidt has considered more recent MS evidence and proposed the following for 19:13–15, which does not, however, solve all the problems (see Schmidt, Le Testament d’Abraham, vol. 1, p. 102; vol. 2, p. 122): “And I showed you the unendurable thunder and the frightening lightning, since many men, at the hour of wrath of dragons and asps, surprised by the coming of unendurable thunder and frightening lightning, are carried off; and thus they see death. I showed you also venomous wild animals and asps and cobras and leopards and lions and lion cubs and bears and in a word I showed you the face of every wild animal, most righteous Abraham, since many men are borne off by wild animals; while others are snatched away by lions; while others, being breathed on by asps, and others by a viper, depart (life); while others are killed by a venomous snake.”

15 while others, being breathed on by venomous snakes—[dragons and asps and 16 horned serpents and cobras] and vipers—depart (life). • And I showed you also mixed cups of noxious poisons, since many men are given poisons to drink by other men, and they at once depart (life) unexpectedly.”

1 20 Abraham said, “I beg you, is there also an unexpected death? Tell me.”
 2 Death said, “Truly, truly,^a I tell you by the truth of God that there are seventy-two deaths. And one is the just death which has (its appropriate) hour. And many men
 3 go to death in one hour and are consigned to the grave. • Now behold, I have told you everything that you have asked. Now I tell you, most righteous Abraham, set aside every wish^b and leave off questioning once and for all, and come, follow me
 4 as the God and judge of all commanded me.” • Abraham said to Death, “Leave me yet a little while, that I may rest on my couch, for I feel very faint of heart.
 5 For from the time when I beheld you with my eyes, my strength has failed; all the limbs of my flesh seem to me to be like a lead weight, and my breath is very 6 labored.^c Depart for a little; for I said, I cannot bear to see your form.” • Isaac his son came and fell upon his breast weeping. Then also his wife Sarah came and 7 embraced his feet, wailing bitterly. • Also all his male and female servants came and encircled his couch, wailing greatly. And Abraham entered the depression of 8 death. • And Death said to Abraham, “Come, kiss my right hand, and may 9 cheerfulness and life and strength come to you.” • For Death deceived Abraham. And he kissed^d his hand and immediately his soul cleaved to the hand of Death.
 10 And immediately Michael the archangel stood beside him with multitudes of angels, and they bore his precious soul in their hands in divinely woven linen.
 11 And they tended the body of the righteous Abraham with divine ointments^e and perfumes until the third day after his death.^f And they buried him in the promised 12 land at the oak of Mamre, • while the angels escorted^g his precious soul^h and ascended into heaven singing the thrice-holyⁱ hymn to God, the master of all, and 13 they set it (down) for the worship^j of the God and Father. • And after great praise in song and glorification had been offered to the Lord, and when Abraham had worshiped, the undefiled voice of the God and Father came speaking thus:
 14 “Take, then, my friend Abraham into Paradise, where there are the tents of my righteous ones and (where) the mansions^k of my holy ones, Isaac and Jacob, are in his bosom,^l where there is no toil, no grief, no moaning, but peace and exultation
 15 and endless life.” • [Let us too, my beloved brothers, imitate the hospitality of the patriarch Abraham and let us attain to his virtuous behaviour, so that we may be worthy of eternal life, glorifying the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit: to whom be the glory and the power forever. Amen.]^m

20 a. Amên, amên.

b. Cf. above, 9:4: “you have fulfilled my every wish,” but there were still further requests.

c. Gk. to pneuma mou epi polu talanizetai: The usual meaning of the verb, in all periods, is “call unhappy.” As a seventh meaning Lampe gives “vex, torture,” citing this passage and one in Chrysostom. The meaning appears to be otherwise unattested. The passage should perhaps be translated “my spirit is exceedingly unhappy.” The Romanian has “my spirit is trembling within me.”

d. The soul is taken by a kiss or greeted with a kiss (in Gk., aspazô): TJob 52:8; ApPaul 14; PetMos, BHM, vol. 1, p. 129; DeutR 11:10.

e. Angels anoint the body: ApMos 40:1

f. The third day: TJob 53:7; cf. Jn 11:6, 39; 4Bar 9:7–14. In the last case the soul returns in the three-day period. Cf. further Winston, History of Religions 5 (1966) 196 and n. 34.

g. Angels receive and escort the soul: TJob 47:11; 52:2, 5 (“creatures of God” and the like);

ApMos 33:2; PetMos, BHM, vol. 1, p. 129; DeutR 11:10 (in the last two, accompanying God himself); ApPaul 14.

h. The soul is taken and the body buried: TJob 52:10f.; ApMos 32–42; Clement of Alexandria, Strom 6:15 (apparently from the lost AsMos); by implication in Ps-Philo, LAB 23:13; PetMos, BHM, vol. 1, p. 129; DeutR 11:10; ApPaul 14. ApMos 41:1–3 and ApPaul 14, among others, definitely state that at the resurrection body and soul will be reunited, and this may be implied in TJob: See 4:9. See also TAb B7.16.

i. The Trisagion, based on Isa 6:3. Cf. also 1En 39:12; ApMos 40:5; bHull 91b.

j. Gk. eis proskunêsîn; cf. ApMos 35:2, “on its face.”

k. Gk. monai, as in Jn 14:2.

l. Illogically, Abraham’s bosom is already in Paradise, as are his descendants. For Abraham’s bosom, see Lk 16:22f.

m. A Christian exhortation and doxology.

TESTAMENT OF ABRAHAM

Recension B

1 1 It came to pass, when the days of Abraham's death drew near, the Lord said
2 to Michael, •“Arise and go^a to Abraham my servant and say to him, ‘You shall 3 depart from life, •because behold, the days of your temporal life are fulfilled,’ so that he may administer the affairs of his household before he dies.”

1 2 And Michael went and came to Abraham, and he found him sitting before his 2 oxen (used) for plowing. He was very old in appearance, and he had his son in 3 his arms.^a •Then when Abraham saw the archangel Michael, he arose from the 4 ground and welcomed him, not knowing who he was, and said to him, •“God
5 save you! May you be well as you continue your journey!” •And Michael answered 6 him, “You are a benevolent man, good father.” •And Abraham answered and 7 said to him, “Come, draw near to me, brother, and sit for a little while so that 8 I may command an animal to be brought, •in order that we may go to my house 9 and you may rest with me, because it is near evening; and you may rise early and 10 go wherever you wish, lest (now) an evil wild beast meet you and harm you.”
11 Michael asked Abraham, saying, “Tell me your name before I enter your house, 12 lest I become burdensome to you.” •And Abraham answered and said, “My 13 parents named me Abram, and the Lord renamed me Abraham, saying, ‘Arise and 14 go from your house and from your family and come into a land which I shall show 15 you.’^b •And when I left for the land which the Lord showed me, he said to me, 16 ‘Your name shall no longer be called Abram, but your name shall be Abraham.’”^c 17 Michael answered and said to him, “Bear with me, my father, man who has been 18 taken thought of by God, because I am a stranger, and I heard about you when 19 you went apart forty stadia and took a calf and slaughtered it, entertaining angels 20 as guests in your house, so that they might rest.” •While they were talking about 21 these things, they rose and went to the house. •Abraham called one of his servants
22 and said to him, “Go, bring me a beast (of burden) so that the stranger might sit 23 on it, because he is tired from walking.” •And Michael said, “Do not trouble the youth, but let us go in high spirits^d until we reach your house, for I love your company.”

Gen 18:1-8

1.2 3 And they rose and went. •And as they drew near to the city, about three stadia away, they found a great tree, having three hundred branches, like a tamarisk.
3 And they heard a voice singing from its branches, “Holy (are you), because you 4 carried out the purpose concerning (the things for) which you were sent.”^a •And 5 Abraham heard the voice and hid the mystery in his heart, saying to himself,
6 “What, then, is the mystery that I have heard?” •As he came into the house,
7 Abraham said to his servants, “Arise and go out to the flock and bring three 8 lambs and slaughter (them) quickly and prepare (them), so that we may eat and 9 drink, because this day is (a day of) good cheer.” •And the servants brought the

1 a. The verb for “go” is poruomai, which is frequent in B but absent from A.

2 a. The last phrase does not appear in MS E.

b. In close agreement with Gen 12:1 LXX.

c. Virtually verbatim with Gen 17:5 LXX.

d. A: apelthōmen . . . pezeuontes . . . meteōrizonomenoi; B: apelthōmen meteōrizonomenoi. It is best to understand meteōrizonomenoi as “being in high spirits,” or some similar meaning (See Lampe and Sophocles), rather than as itself implying walking (“lifting [our feet]”). Thus B makes no explicit mention of walking, and no reason for avoiding riding is given, at least in the text as printed by James. Several Gk. MSS, however, have peripatēsōmen for apelthōmen, thus solving the difficulty (so A C D E). Both the Slavonic and the Ar., which are generally closer to B than A, explicitly have the word “walk.”

3 a. MS E: “Holy is the one who brings news.”

lambs, and Abraham called his son Isaac and said to him, "Isaac, my child, arise and put water into the vessel, so that we may wash the feet of this stranger."

7.8 And he brought (it) as he was commanded. •And Abraham said, "I have an insight (into) what will come to pass, that in this bowl I shall not again wash the 9 feet of a man who is entertained as a guest with us." •When Isaac heard his father saying these things, he wept and said to him, "My father, what is this that you 10 say, 'It is my last time to wash a stranger's feet'?" •And when Abraham saw his son crying he also cried greatly. And Michael, seeing them crying, also cried. And Michael's tears fell into the vessel and became a precious stone.

1 4 When Sarah heard their crying (for she was inside her house),^a she came out 2 and said to Abraham, "My lord, why is it that you cry thus?" •And Abraham answered and said to her, "It is nothing evil. Go into your house^a and do your own 3 work, lest we become burdensome to the man." •And Sarah departed, because 4 she was about to prepare supper. •And the sun was near setting. And Michael went outside the house, and he was taken up into the heavens to worship^b before God; 5 for at the setting of the sun all angels worship God;^c and the same Michael is the 6.7 first of the angels. •And all worshiped and left, each to his own place.^d •But Michael answered before God and said, "Lord, command me to be questioned 8 before your holy glory." •And the Lord said to Michael, "Tell whatever you 9 wish." •The archangel answered and said, "Lord, you sent me to Abraham to say 10 to him, 'Depart from your body and leave the world; the Lord calls you.' •And I cannot bring myself, Lord, to be revealed to him,^e because he is your friend and 11 a righteous man, who welcomes strangers. •But I beseech you, Lord, command 12 the mention of Abraham's death to enter into his heart, •and let me not tell it to him. For it is very curt to say, 'Leave the world,' and above all from one's own 13 body. •For from the beginning you made him to have mercy on the souls of all 14 men."^f •Then the Lord said to Michael, "Arise and go to Abraham and stay with 15 him as a guest. •And whatever you see (him) eating, you also eat; and wherever 16 he sleeps, you also sleep there; •for I shall thrust the mention of Abraham's death into the heart of Isaac his son in a dream."

1 5 Then Michael left for Abraham's house in that evening, and he found them 2 preparing supper. And they ate and drank and made merry.^a •And Abraham said to his son Isaac, "Arise, child, spread out the man's couch so that he may rest, 3 and place the lamp on the lampstand."^b •And Isaac did as his father commanded. 4.5 And Isaac said to his father, "Father, I am also coming to sleep near you." •And Abraham answered him, "No, my child, lest we become burdensome to this man; 6 but go to your room and rest." •And Isaac, not wanting to disobey his father's command, went and rested in his room.

1 6 And it came to pass, around the seventh hour of the night, Isaac woke up and went to the door of his father's house crying out and saying, "Father, open (the 2 door), so that I may enjoy (the sight of) you before they take you from me." •And Abraham arose and opened (the door), and Isaac entered and hung upon his father's 3 neck crying; and bewailing, he kissed him. •And Abraham cried with his son. And

4 a. MS E has "tent."

b. Gk. proskuneō; see A3 n. b.

c. The angels worship God at a set time: ApMos 7:2; 17:1; especially at sunset (ApPaul 7). Morning and evening prayers are standard in Judaism: mBer 1:1-4 (with no insistence on precise correspondence with the sun); probably implied in IQS 10:10; Philo, Vita cont 27 (correspondence with sunset and sunrise).

d. Cf. 2En A20:3f.

e. MS E: "to reveal (the) message (logos) to him"

f. MS E: "for this message (logos) is very curt: 'Do not depart in the body.' Rather, you, Lord, from the beginning had mercy on our souls." Neither reading yields good sense: Note the "our souls" of MS E and "made him to have" of James's text.

5 a. For this sequence of verbs, see 3Ezra 9:54 LXX; Lk 12:19.

b. MS E: "and leave a light (on) in the house." Note "tent" above, 4:1.

4 Michael saw them crying and he too cried. •And when Sarah heard the crying 5 from her bed chamber,^a she cried out, saying, •“My lord Abraham, what is the crying about? Did the stranger tell you about your nephew Lot,^b that he has died?
 6 Or has anything else happened to us?” •Michael answered and said to Sarah, “No,
 Sarah, I did not bring news about Lot; rather, I learned about all your^c benevolence, 7 that you surpass all who are on the earth, and God has remembered you.”^d •Then Sarah said to Abraham, “How could you dare cry when the man of God has come 8 to you? •And how could your eyes, the fountains^e of light, shed tears? Because 9 today is (a day of) rejoicing.” •Then Abraham said to her, “Whence do you know
 10 that he is a man of God?” •Sarah answered and said, “Because I declare and say that this is one of the three men who stayed as our guests at the oak of Mamre, Gen 18:1-8 11 when one of the servants went and brought a calf and you slaughtered (it). •And you said to me, ‘Rise, prepare, so that we may eat with these men in our house.’ ” 12,13 And Abraham answered and said, “You have perceived well, O wife; •for I too, when I bathed his feet, knew in my heart that these are the feet that I bathed at the oak of Mamre. And when I began to inquire about his journey, he said to me, Gen 19:12f.
 ‘I am going to protect (your) brother Lot from Sodom.’ And then I knew the mystery.”

1 7 Abraham said to Michael, “Tell me, man of God, and reveal to me why you
 2 have come here.”^a •And Michael said, “Your son Isaac will disclose (it) to you.”
 3 And Abraham said to his son, “My beloved son, tell me what you saw in a dream 4 today and became alarmed. Tell me.” •And Isaac answered his father, “I saw the 5 sun and the moon in my dream. •And there was a crown upon my head, and there was an enormous man, shining exceedingly from heaven, as (the) light which is 6 called father of light.^b •And he took the sun from my head, and then he left the 7 rays with me. •And I cried and said, ‘I beseech you, my lord, do not take off the 8 glory of my head and the light of my house and all my glory.’ •The sun and the moon and the stars mourned, saying, ‘Do not take off the glory of our power.’ 9 And that radiant man answered and said to me, ‘Do not cry because I took the light of your house. For it has been taken up from labors into rest and from 10 lowliness into height; •they are taking it from straitness into spaciousness,^c they 11 are taking it from darkness into light.’ •I said to him, ‘I beseech you, lord, take 12 also the rays with it.’ •He said to me, ‘There are twelve hours of the day, and 13 then I take all the rays.’ •When the radiant man said these things, I saw the sun 14 of my house going up into heaven, but I saw that crown no more. •That sun was 15 like you, my father.” •And Michael said to Abraham, “Your son Isaac has spoken 16 the truth; for you are (the sun), and you will be taken up into the heavens, •while your body remains on the earth until seven thousand ages are fulfilled.^d For then 17 all flesh will be raised.^e •Now, therefore, Abraham, make a will (governing) the things of your household and concerning your sons, for you have heard completely

6 a. MS E: “in her tent, and she arose and went to the door of the room where Abraham was asleep.”

b. MS E: “brother.”

c. Gk. humōn, plural, referring to both Abraham and Sarah.

d. MS E: “‘No, Sarah, (you) who minister to the righteous, I did not bring news about Lot.’ And as Sarah heard Michael speaking, she knew (by) his distinction of speech that he surpassed all men who dwell up on the earth, because his voice was glorious.” Cf. A6:1.

e. Gk. zeuma: LSJM cites it only from the 5th-century lexicographer Hesychius as a Phrygian equivalent of pēgē. Zeuma is not in Sophocles, and Lampe cites only this passage. MS E reads “How can your eyes shed tears, since the light of the bēma has risen in our house?” Schmidt (Le Testament d’Abraham, vol. 1, p. 84) explains bēma as a transliteration of the Heb. bimah, “an elevated stand for public meetings” (Jastrow), and proposes that Michael is thus identified as a reader at a liturgical service.

7 a. MS E here has a further exchange: “Michael answered and said, ‘I am Michael.’ And Abraham said to him, ‘Declare why you have come.’ ”

b. Or, “shining exceedingly from heaven as light, called the father of light.”

c. The nouns are cognate with the adjectives “strait” and “spacious” used to describe the two ways or gates in A11:2f.

d. MS E: “And Michael answered and said, ‘In truth it has happened truly. The sun, Isaac, is your father. Abraham will be taken up into the heavens, while his body . . . until 6,000 years are fulfilled.’ ” Cf. A19 n. b.

e. See A20 n. h.

18 the dispensation concerning you.” •And Abraham answered and said to Michael,
 “I beseech you, lord, if I am to leave my body, I want to be taken up bodily, in order that I may see the things of creation which the Lord my God created in 19 heaven and on earth.” •And Michael answered and said, “This is not my task, but I shall go and report to the Lord^f about this, and if I am commanded I shall show you all these things.”

1 8 And Michael went up in the heavens and spoke before the Lord concerning 2 Abraham. •And the Lord answered Michael, “Go and take up Abraham in the body and show him everything, and whatever he says to you, do (it), as (you 3 would) for him who is my friend.”^a •Then Michael left and took Abraham up onto 4 a cloud in the body and bore him up to the river Oceanus.^b •And Abraham looked 5 and saw two gates, one small and the other large. •And between the two gates there sat a man upon a throne of great glory. And a multitude of angels encircled 6 him. •And (sometimes) he was crying and again laughing, and the crying exceeded 7 his laughter sevenfold. •And Abraham said to Michael, “Who is this who is seated between the two gates with great glory, and sometimes he laughs but others he 8 cries, and the crying exceeds the laughter sevenfold?” •And Michael said to 9,10 Abraham, “Do you not know who he is?” •And he said, “No, lord.” •And Michael said to Abraham, “Do you see these two gates, the small and large?
 11,12 These are the (gates) which lead to life and to destruction,^c and this man who is 13 sitting between them, this is Adam, the first man whom God formed.^d •And he placed him in this place to see every soul leaving (its) body, since everyone is 14 from him. •When, therefore, you see him crying, know that he has seen many 15 souls being led to destruction. •But when you see him laughing, he has seen a few 16 souls being led to life. •Do you see him, how the crying exceeds the laughter?
 Since he sees the greater part of the world being led through the broad (gate)^e to destruction, therefore the crying exceeds the laughter sevenfold.”

1 9 And Abraham said, “Is one who is unable to enter through the strait gate unable 2 to enter into life?” •Then Abraham cried, saying, “Woe to me, what shall I do?
 3 Because I am a man of broad body, and how shall I be able to enter into the strait
 4 gate, into which a child of fifteen years^a would not be able to enter?” •And Michael answered and said to Abraham, “Do not you fear, father, nor grieve; for you will 5 enter through it unhindered, as will all those who are like you.”^b •And as Abraham was standing and marveling, behold (there was) an angel of the Lord driving six 6 myriads of souls of sinners to destruction.^c •And Abraham said to Michael, “Are 7 all these going to destruction?” •And Michael said to him, “Yes, but let us go and seek among these souls, (to see) if there is even one among them (which is) 8 righteous.”^d •And when they went, they found an angel holding in his hand one soul of a woman from among the six myriads, because he found (her) sins evenly balanced with all her works, and they were neither in distress nor at rest, but in 9,10 an intermediate place.^e •But those (other) souls he took to destruction. •And Abraham said to Michael, “Lord, is this the angel who brings forth the souls from

f. MSS A C E: “my father.”

8 a. MS E: “because he is my friend.”

b. See Introduction, n. 37.

c. “Lead to life,” “to destruction”: see A11 n. b.

d. Gk. ho prōtos anthrōpos hon eplasen ho kyrios. Cf. A11.9: prōtoplastos.

e. From this point the adjectives become the same as in Mt 7:13f. and A11. At this point MS E reads “being led through the gate which leads to destruction,” but MS E does have “strait” at the beginning of ch. 9.

9 a. MS E: “ten years.”

b. MS E adds “but the majority of the world enter through the gate which takes (them) to destruction.”

c. MS E: “. . . driving about six myriads of souls, but holding one in his hand; and he took away the myriads of souls into the gate which leads to destruction.”

d. “if . . .”: MS E reads “and if we find (one) worthy to be brought to life, let us bring it.”

e. MS E: “and Michael and Abraham went and sought and did not find (one) worthy of life, except only that one which the angel held in his hand; for he found (its) sins evenly balanced with its good works. And he did not leave it in distress nor at rest, but in an intermediate place.”

11 the body, or not?" •Michael answered and said, "This (i.e. the latter) is Death, and he leads them to the place of judgment, so that the judge may judge them."

1 10 And Abraham said, "My lord, I beseech you that you should conduct me to 2 the place of judgment so that I too may see how they are judged." •Then Michael 3 took Abraham onto a cloud, and he brought him to Paradise. •And when he reached 4 the place where the judge was, the angel went and gave that soul to the judge.
4.5 The soul said, "Have mercy on me, lord."^a •And the judge said, "How shall I
5 have mercy on you, since you did not have mercy on the daughter whom you bore,
6 the fruit of your womb? Why did you murder her?" •And she answered, "No, 7 lord, the murder did not come from me, but my daughter has herself lied against 8 me." •The judge commanded the one who writes the records to come. •And 9 behold, (there came) cherubim bearing two books, and with them was a very 10 enormous man. And he had on his head three crowns, •and one crown was higher 11 than the other two crowns. The crowns are called the crowns of witness. •And 12 the man had in his hand a golden pen. And the judge said to him, "Give proof 13 of the sin of this soul." •And that man opened one of the books which the 14 cherubim had and sought out the sin of the woman's soul, and he found (it).
15 And the judge said, "O wretched soul, how can you say that you have not 16 committed murder? •Did you not, after your husband's death, go and commit 17 adultery with your daughter's husband and kill her?" •And he charged her also 18 with her other sins, including whatever she had done from her childhood. •When 19 the woman heard these things, she cried aloud, saying, "Woe is me, woe is me!
20 Because I forgot all my sins which I committed in the world, but here they were 21 not forgotten."^b •Then they took her too and handed (her) over to the torturers.

1 11 And Abraham said to Michael, "Lord, who is this judge? And who is the 2 other one who brings the charges of sins?" •And Michael said to Abraham, "Do
3 you see the judge? This is Abel, who first bore witness,^a and God brought him
4 here to judge. •And the one who produces (the evidence) is the teacher of heaven
5 and earth and the scribe of righteousness, Enoch."^b •For the Lord sent them here 6 in order that they might record^c the sins and the righteous deeds of each person."
7 And Abraham said, "And how can Enoch bear the weight of the souls, since 8 he has not seen death? Or how can he give the sentence of all the souls?" •And 9 Michael said, "If he were to give sentence concerning them, it would not be 10 accepted. But it is not Enoch's business to give sentence; •rather, the Lord is the 11 one who gives sentence, and it is this one's (Enoch's) task only to write. •For 12 Enoch prayed to the Lord saying, 'Lord, I do not want to give the sentence of the 13 souls, lest I become oppressive to someone.' •And the Lord said to Enoch, 'I shall 14 command you to write the sins of a soul that makes atonement, and it will enter 15 into life. •And if the soul has not made atonement and repented, you will find its 16 sins (already) written, and it will be cast into punishment.'"^d

10 a. MS E: "Then when he reached the place where the judge was, he heard a soul crying, 'Have mercy on me, lord.'" The soul is not identified with the one of 9:8.

b. Cf. Ab 2:1, where the point of knowing that all of one's deeds are written in a book is that then one will not fall into transgression. In Ab 2:1 and B10 the bookkeeping theme is not based on a theory of balancing of deeds, as it is in A12:18, but has the paraenetic purpose of assuring that transgressions are not forgotten. Thus the reference to "evenly balanced" deeds in B9:8 has no context. It appears to be a remnant of the story in A.

11 a. Gk. martyrēsas: possibly "the first martyr."

b. Enoch as scribe: Jub 4:23; 1En 12:3f.; 15:1; 2En 23:1-4; 40:13; 53:2; 64:5; 68:2. See further

B. A. Pearson, SCS 6, p. 238, and nn.; J. T. Milik, The Books of Enoch (Oxford, 1976) pp. 103-06, 237, 262.

c. Gk. apographōsin. Note the plural (two angels record) in A12:12 (apegraphonto) and 13:1 (hoi apographomenoi). In B11:4 the plural logically includes Abel, but Abel is not in fact depicted as recording, but only judging; Enoch records. MS E avoids the difficulty: "and the Lord sent him (Enoch) here so that he might record . . ." Similarly D B F, all of which have a singular verb.

d. Apparently the meaning is that, to make Enoch's task less onerous, God commands him to record only the sins that do not count, since they had been atoned for; while if a person has not made atonement and is therefore to be condemned, Enoch himself does not record the sins but only has to

1 12 And after Abraham saw the place of judgment, the cloud took him down to 2 the firmament below.^a • And when Abraham looked down upon the earth, he saw
 3 a man committing adultery with a married woman. • And Abraham turned and said
 4 to Michael, “Do you see this sin? But, lord, send fire from heaven, that it may 5 consume them.” • And immediately fire came down from heaven and consumed
 6 them. • For the Lord (had) said to Michael, “Whatever Abraham asks you to do B8:2 7 for him, do.” • And again Abraham looked up and saw other men slandering (their) 8 fellows, • and he said, “Let the earth open and swallow them up.” • And while he 9 was speaking, the earth swallowed them up alive. • And again the cloud brought 10 him to another place. And Abraham saw some people leaving for a desert place 11 to commit murder. • And he said to Michael, “Do you see this sin? But let wild 12 beasts come out of the desert and rend them in two.” • And in that very hour wild 13 beasts came out of the desert and devoured them. • Then the Lord God spoke to 14 Michael, saying, “Turn Abraham away to his house, and do not let him go round 15 all the creation which I made, because his heart is not moved for sinners, • but my 16 heart is moved for sinners, so that they may convert and live and repent of their 17 sins and be saved.”^b • And about the ninth hour Michael returned Abraham to his 18 house. • But Sarah, his wife, since she had not seen what had become of Abraham, 19 was consumed with grief and gave up her soul. • And after Abraham returned, he 20 found her dead, and he buried her.

1 13 Now when the days of Abraham’s death drew near, the Lord God said to 2 Michael, “Death will not dare draw near to take away the soul of my servant,
 3 because he is my friend. • But you go and adorn Death with great youthful beauty
 4 and send him thus to Abraham so that he may see him with his eyes. • And Michael 5 immediately, as he was commanded, adorned Death with great youthful beauty, 6 and sent him thus to Abraham so that he might see him. And he sat down near 7 Abraham. • When Abraham saw Death sitting near him, he was struck with great 8 fear. • And Death said to Abraham, “Greetings, holy soul. Hail, friend of the Lord
 9 God. Hail, hospitable consolation of travelers.” • And Abraham said, “Welcome, 10 servant of God Most High.^a I beseech you, tell me who you are and come into the 11 house and partake of food and drink and take leave of me. For from the time when 12 I saw you sitting near me, my soul has been troubled. • For I am entirely unworthy 13 to be in close proximity with you, for you are a high spirit, while I am flesh and 14 blood, and therefore I cannot bear your glory. • For I see that your youthful beauty
 15 is not of this world.” • And Death said to Abraham, “I tell you, in all the creation
 16 which God created, there is not to be found one like you. • For even God himself
 17 has searched and has not found such a one on the entire earth.”^b • And Abraham 18 said to Death, “How do you dare to lie? Because I see that your youthful beauty 19 is not of this world.” • And Death said to Abraham, “Do not think, Abraham, 20 that this youthful beauty is mine, or that I come thus to every man.^c • No, but if 21 anyone is righteous as you are, I take crowns thus and go to him. But if he is a 22 sinner, I go in great decay; and from their sin I make a crown for my head, and 23 I trouble them with great fear, so that they may be dismayed.”^c • Then Abraham look them up in the book, where they have (already) been written (he finds them written, gegrammenas), by whose agency we are not told. MS E is clearer: “If a soul has shown mercy, you will find its sins atoned for and it will enter into life. But if the soul has not shown mercy, you will find its sins written, and it will be cast into punishment.”

12 a. MS E: “the cloud took him away to the firmament.”

b. MS E: “. . . lest he destroy all the creation which I made. His heart is not moved for them, since he did not make them. But I made them; therefore my heart is moved for them. Perhaps they shall convert and repent of their sins and be saved.”

13 a. For this exchange of greetings, cf. A2:3f. as well as the parallel in A16:9f. The exchange is not in MS E, supported by A D B F.

b. MS E: “. . . like you. For he searched among the angels and archangels, and principalities and powers, as well as thrones; and (upon) all the earth, including four-footed animals and wild beasts of the earth and everything that is in the water, as far as heaven, and he did not find (one) like you.” A similar list is in D.

c. MS E omits here; see below.

15 said to him, "And whence comes this youthful beauty?" • And Death said, "There 16 is no other more full of decay than I." • Abraham said to him, "You are not, are 17 you, the one called Death?"^d • He answered him and said, "I am the bitter name:
I am crying . . ."^e

1,2 14 Abraham said to Death, "Show us your decay."^a • And Death made his decay
3 manifest. And he had two heads: • The one had the face of a dragon, and through 4 it some die suddenly by asps; • and the other head was like a sword. On account
5 of it some die by the sword, as (they do) by bow and arrows. • On that day
6 Abraham's servants died because of the fear of Death. • When Abraham saw them
7 he prayed to the Lord, and he raised them. • Then God turned and drew out the 8 soul of Abraham as in a dream, and the Commander-in-chief Michael took it into 9 the heavens. • And Isaac buried his father near his mother Sarah, glorifying and praising God. • For to him belong glory, honor, and worship, of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, now and always and forever and ever. AMEN.^b

d. MS E: "Show me who you are."

e. MS E: " 'I am the most bitter name: I am crying; I am the calamity of all.' Abraham said to him, 'And who are you?' And Death said, 'I am Death, who brings the souls out of the body.' And Abraham said, 'Are you Death? Are you able to impel all to be cast out of the body?' Death said to Abraham, 'Do you think that this youthful beauty is mine? Or that I act (thus) with all? No, but if anyone is righteous, they take to him all righteousness and it becomes a crown on my head and I go to him in persuasiveness and his (own) righteousness. But if he is a sinner I go to him in great decay, but they also make all his sins a crown on my head in great fear. And I trouble him greatly.' " The original ending of the ch. may be reflected here. E is here supported in general by D, although there are variants. F has a continuation which is in partial agreement.

14 a. MS E inserts "and Death took (his) righteousness off of himself."

b. MS E: "and it came to pass, as Abraham turned, Death brought forth his soul as in a dream. And chariots of the Lord God came and took his soul into the heavens, blessing the friend of the Lord. They brought him into rest. And Isaac buried his father Abraham near his mother, glorifying the Most High God, to whom be glory forever and ever. Amen." C has a longer ending, but agrees with E in having "chariot of the Lord" for "the Commander-in-chief Michael." MS F has "the archangel Michael" take Abraham's soul. Thus this one appearance of "Commander-in-chief" may not be original in B.

TESTAMENT OF ISAAC

(Second Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY W. F. STINESPRING

This document commemorates Isaac on a fixed day in the Coptic Church calendar. Sometimes a narrator speaks, sometimes Isaac himself. After the Trinitarian formula is stated, Isaac delivers a brief homily on the futility of the worldly life and the glorious, eternal rewards promised to the faithful. Then God sends the archangel Michael to Isaac to announce the approaching end of the patriarch's life. Isaac is willing to go but is concerned about Jacob. The angel assures him that all will be well with Jacob, from whom twelve tribes will come forth. Michael departs and Isaac informs Jacob of what is about to happen. Jacob is disturbed and wishes to accompany his father. Isaac explains that God's decrees cannot be changed, and tells Jacob of his great ancestry from Adam on, and of his great future as progenitor of the twelve tribes and ultimately of Jesus the Messiah, son of the Virgin Mary and incarnation of God.

At this point the narrator tells of the extreme asceticism of Isaac, such as his frequent fasting and praying night and day, also his abstention from meat and fruit and his refusal to sleep on a bed. A crowd gathers and Isaac delivers a lengthy homily on the strict obligations incumbent on all who are devout, and especially on all priests, among whom Isaac includes himself. After this an angel comes and takes Isaac for a preliminary visit to the next world. He is shown hell and some of the horrible tortures being inflicted on sinners, especially those who have died still in enmity with others. Soon he declares that he cannot endure the sight of any more horrors.

The angel takes him to heaven, where he sees his father Abraham and many saints. They lead him up to a curtain, behind which is the throne of God. God utters a few words of welcome to Isaac, but most of the conversation is between God and Abraham. God emphasizes that he is very compassionate and forgiving to all who earnestly try to live a good life. The conversation concluded, God orders Michael to bring a delegation of angels and saints, along with the chariot of the seraphim. With the cherubim and angels going ahead, they descend to bring Isaac back. Again Jacob is disturbed and needs to be reassured. Then the Lord takes Isaac's soul, white and pure as snow, to heaven in the holy chariot, with the cherubim and angels singing before it. The narrator ends by describing the delights of heaven, exhorting the readers to celebrate the special day of Isaac, and affirming the eternal nature of the Holy Trinity.

Texts

The present translation was based on the Arabic text, with some help from the Coptic and Ethiopic. The principal manuscripts are these:

Arabic

Paris, Bibl. Nat., MS no. 132, fols. 2^v-24^r, dated A.D. 1269. The translation may have been made around the year 800.

Coptic (Bohairic)

Rome, Vatican Library, Coptic MS no. 61, fols. 163^v-189^v, dated A.D. 962.

Coptic (Sahidic)

New York, Pierpont Morgan Library, MS no. M 577, fols. 12^v–25^v, dated A.D. 894–895.

Ethiopic (Christian)

Paris, Bibl. Nat., MS no. 134 in the catalogue of Zotenberg.

Original language, date, and provenance

The Testament of Isaac is now extant only in the languages listed above, all from the area south of the Mediterranean. Unlike the Testament of Abraham, it is not extant in Greek or in the northern versions, Romanian and Slavic. The dependence on the Testament of Abraham, however, makes it possible that the Testament of Isaac was originally written in Greek, shortly after the Testament of Abraham and in the same milieu.

There are pronounced Christian elements in the Testament of Isaac as it now stands, and in its present form it has the function of emphasizing the date of the deaths of Abraham and Isaac as commemorated in the Coptic Church. Thus it would be possible to see the work as springing from the Coptic Christian Church. The Christianizing is not thoroughgoing, however, and it seems more likely that the original composition was a product of Egyptian Judaism.

Historical and theological importance

The Testament of Isaac maintains the universalism of the Testament of Abraham (see 2:9, “fathers to all the world”), and the admonitions concerning proper behavior remain quite general. (See, for example, 4:11–54.) It is also noteworthy that Jacob is called “the father of many nations” as well as of the twelve tribes (2:22), despite the wording of the Bible, which limits Jacob’s progeny to the twelve tribes of Israel. Thus, assuming that the Testament of Isaac was originally Jewish, it represents very much the same values as are represented by the Testament of Abraham: Men should set their houses in order in preparation for death, they should live good moral lives, they should remember the judgment, but they should forget neither the mercy of God nor the need that they themselves be merciful.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 123–25, 131–33.

Denis, Introduction, p. 34.

Box, G. H. The Testament of Abraham, with appendix on The Testaments of Isaac and Jacob by S. Gaselee. TED; London, 1927.

Delcor, M. Le Testament d’Abraham: Introduction, traduction du texte grec et commentaire de la recension grecque longue, suivie de la traduction des Testaments d’Abraham, d’Isaac et de Jacob d’après les versions orientales. SVTP 2; Leiden, 1973.

James, M. R. The Testament of Abraham, with appendix on The Testament of Isaac and Jacob by W. E. Barnes. T&S 2.2; Cambridge, 1892.

Kuhn, K. H. “An English Translation of the Sahidic Version of the Testament of Isaac,” JTS n.s. 18 (1967) 325–36.

———. “The Sahidic Version of the Testament of Isaac,” JTS n.s. 8 (1957) 225–39.

THE TESTAMENT OF ISAAC

1 1 In the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, the One God.
2 We begin with the help of God and through his mediation to celebrate the death
3 of the patriarch Isaac, son of the patriarch Abraham, and his ascension from his 4 body on this same day, which is the twenty-eighth of the month Misri. •May the 5 blessing of his intercession be with us and protect us from the temptations of the 6 enemy! Amen!

7 [Now the patriarch Isaac wrote his testament and addressed his words of 8 instruction to Jacob his son and all those who were gathered together with him.]^a

9 He said, "Hear, my brethren and my beloved ones, this speaker's instruction
10 and this curative medicine. •Because the way of God goes on forever, hear not 11 only with chaste bodily ears, but also with the depth of the heart and with true faith 12 without any doubt, as it is written, 'Behold, you have heard a firm word as to what 13 a man should become. If he has heard it with a pure heart, God will give him 14 compassion when he asks for something from him.'

15 "And it also is written, 'There is no profit for someone to ask God for what 16 human beings solicit on earth.' And if God has given us mastery on the earth, then 17 how much the advantage of the one who has been firm in the faith in the word of 18 God, and has held fast without doubt and with an upright heart to the knowledge 19 of the commandments of God and the stories of his saints; for he will be the 20 inheritor of the kingdom of God.

21 "For behold, God is compassionate and merciful, the one who has received 22 unto himself thieves and tax collectors in past times because of the sincerity of 23 their faith that comes from God. And God, moreover, is with the ages to come."

1 2 It came to pass, when the time drew near for our father Isaac, the father of 2 fathers, to depart from this world and to go out from his body, that the Compas-
3 sionate, the Merciful One sent to him the chief of the angels, Michael, the one
4 whom he had sent to his father Abraham, on the morning of the twenty-eighth day
5 of the month Misri.

TAB A1:4
B1:1

6 The angel said to him, "Peace be upon you, O chosen son, our father Isaac!"
7 Now it was customary every day for the holy angels to speak to him. So he 8 prostrated himself and saw that the angel resembled his father Abraham. •Then 9 he opened his mouth, cried with a loud voice, and said with joy and exultation, 10 "Behold, I have seen your face as if I had seen the face of the merciful Creator."

11 Then the angel said to him, "O my beloved Isaac, I have been sent to you from 12 the presence of the living God to take you up to heaven to be with your father
13 Abraham and all the saints. •For your father Abraham is awaiting you; he himself
14 is about to come for you, but now he is resting. •There has been prepared for you 15 the throne beside your father Abraham; likewise for your beloved son Jacob. •And 16 all of you shall be above every one else in the kingdom of heaven in the glory of 17 the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit. •You shall be entrusted with this name 18 for all future generations: The Patriarchs. Thus you shall be fathers to all the world, 19 O faithful elder, our father Isaac."

20 Isaac answered, saying to the angel, "I am truly amazed concerning you. Are 21 you not my father Abraham?" •Then said the angel to him, "I am not your Father
22 Abraham, but I am the one who ministers to your father Abraham. •So now rejoice 23 and be glad; for you will not be smitten (with disease)^a and will not be taken (in 24 death) with pain but with joy. •You shall attain to blessings and repose forever and

TAB B7:10

1 a. Supplied from the Sahidic Cop. version. [In the Cop. calendar the three patriarchs are commemorated on Sept. 4. J.H.C.] See also 8:1.

2 a. Words in parentheses are explanatory additions by the translator.

14 shall go forth from confinement into spaciousness. •Also you shall go away to rejoicing which has no end, and to light and bliss which have no limit, and to acclaim and delight without ceasing.

15 “And now, make your will and set your house in order; for you are about to go away to (final) rest. •Nevertheless, blessedness shall be upon the father who begot you and upon your offspring which shall come after you!” Tab A1:4
B1:3

17 Now when our father Jacob heard them talking in this manner with one another, he began to listen to them, but he did not speak. •Then our father Isaac said to the angel with patience and humility, “What shall I do now with regard to the light of my eye, my beloved Jacob? •I fear concerning him on account of Esau. You, of course, know the whole story.”

20 Then the angel said to him, “My beloved Isaac, all the peoples which are in the world, if they were gathered together in one place, would not be able to undo your blessing upon Jacob; because, at that time when you blessed him, he was blessed by the supreme God, also by the Son and the Holy Spirit, and by your father Abraham; all of them responded, saying, ‘Amen.’ •The iron (sword?) will not frighten him, but he will be exceedingly strong and will gain sovereignty. Gen 27

22 Then he will become the father of many nations, and twelve tribes will come forth from him.” •Then Isaac said to the angel, “You have informed me and have brought me good news. •But let Jacob not hear, for he will be sad and disturbed; for I have never pained his heart at all.” Gen 28:10-22

25 Then the angel of the Lord said, “O my beloved Isaac, all the righteous who go out from their bodies have blessedness, and they are blissful when they see God, the Merciful, the Compassionate. •But woe, woe three times, to the sinner when he has been born upon the earth, for he has many pains. •You shall teach your sons your ways and the commandments of your father—all of them which he commanded you. •And do not hide these things from Jacob, that they may be a reminder to the generations of his offspring after him, so that the faithful may observe them and by them attain to the life eternal, which is forever. •But I shall take account of your concern. •Behold, I came to you with joy, speedily. The peace which the Lord gave, I give to you. •And now I go quickly to the one who sent me.”

1 3 When the angel had said this, he rose from the bed of our father Isaac and moved away from him. •Isaac kept looking at him and was amazed at what he had heard and seen. •So he undertook to say, “I shall not see the light until you send for me.”

4 While he was meditating on this, Jacob had come forward to the door of his father’s chamber. •The angel had already cast sleep upon him to prevent him from hearing them. •So when he entered the resting place of his father, he said, “Father, with whom were you speaking?” •Isaac his father said to him, “Now you must hear me, my son. Word has been sent to your venerable father that he shall be taken from you, O my son Jacob.” •Then Jacob embraced his father and wept, saying, “My strength has gone from me; will you make me an orphan, O my father, so that this day I shall become wretched?” •Again he embraced our father Isaac and kissed him; both of them wept until they were worn and weary.

10 Then Jacob said, “O father, I will go away with you and I will not give you up.” •But Isaac said to him, “My boy, this is not for me to do, O my child and my beloved Jacob; but I thank God that you also have become a father and that you will remain until you are summoned . . .” •As my father Abraham informed me, I am not able to set aside any part of the decree, which is valid for everyone; thus it will come to pass, for what is written will not be frustrated. •But God knows, my son, that my heart is weary on account of you. Yet I am happy in my going to the Lord. •So now that you have experienced growth in the Spirit, put away from you this weeping and lamenting. Tab A8:9

3 a. There are some difficult words at this point, and the other versions do not help.

- 15 "Listen, my boy, that I may speak to you and give you understanding about the first man, I mean our father Adam, the created one, whom God formed with his own hand; likewise our mother Eve; also Abel and Seth and our father Enoch (Enosh?) and Mahalalel, the father of Methusaleh, and Lamech, the father of Jared, and Enosh (Enoch?), the father of our father Noah and his sons, Shem, Ham, and Japheth; and after them Phinehas and Kenan and Noah(?)^b and Eber and Reu and Terah and Nahor and my father Abraham and Lot the son of his brother. •All of these death took away except our father Enoch, the perfect one who ascended to heaven. Gen 2:7
- 16 Gen 5:24
- 17,18 "And after this there shall come forth twelve giants.^c •Then will come Jesus the Messiah from your descendants out of a virgin named Mary.^d •And God will become incarnate in him until the completion of a hundred years." Mt 1:18-25
Lk 1:34-38
- 1,2 4 Now Isaac used to fast every day, not breaking his fast until evening. •He would offer up sacrifices for himself and for all people of his household, for the salvation of their souls. •He would rise up for prayer in the middle of the night, and in the daytime he would pray to God. He kept on doing this for many years. •He would also fast the three forty-day periods, every time the forty-day period came around.^a
- 3,4
- 5,6 And he would not eat meat or drink wine all his life long. •He also would not enjoy the taste of fruit, nor would he sleep upon a bed, because he was devoted to prayer every day and to supplication to God all his life.
- 7 So when the crowds heard that a man of God had appeared, they flocked to him from all the districts and places to hear his instructions and life-giving recommendations and to be assured that the spirit of God was speaking in him. •Then the great ones who had flocked to him said, "What is this power which descended upon you after the time when the brightness of your eyesight went from you, and how have you had a reprieve to see now?"
- 8
- 9 Then the faithful old man smiled and said to them, "As to those who have presented themselves, I will inform them that God healed me when he saw that I had drawn near to the gate of death. •He awarded me this honor in my old age that I might be a priest of the Lord."
- 10
- 11 Then someone (Jacob?) said to him, "Begin for me a discourse that I may be consoled by it and hold fast to it." •So our father Isaac said to him, "If you speak in anger, guard yourself from slander and beware of empty boasting. •See that you do not converse alone (with a woman).^b •Be careful that an evil word does not come forth from your mouth. •Guard your body, that it may be pure, for it is the temple of the Holy Spirit, which dwells within it. •Take care of the lesser functions of your body, that it may be pure and sanctified. •See that you do not make sport with your tongue lest an evil word go forth from your mouth."
- 12,13
- 14,15
- 16,17
- 18,19 "Beware of stretching out your hand to what you do not own. •Do not present an offering when you are not ritually clean; bathe yourself in water when you intend to approach the altar. •Do not mingle your thoughts with the thoughts of the world, as you stand at the altar in the presence of God. •Make your offering so that you may be a peacemaker between men. •As you are about to present your offering to God, when you have moved forward to approach the altar, you shall pray to God a hundred times without ceasing."
- 20,21
- 22
- 23 "At the beginning you shall voice this thanksgiving, as follows, 'O God, the incomprehensible, who cannot be searched out, the possessor of power, the source of purity, cleanse me by your mercy, a free gift from you to me. •For I am a creature of flesh and blood, fleeing to you. •I know of my uncleanness, and surely you will cleanse me, O Lord.'
- 24,25
- 26,27 " 'For behold, my cause is in your hands and my recourse is to you. •I know

b. All the versions show confusions and contradictions in their lists of patriarchs at this point.

c. Other versions say "tribes."

d. Ar. "Maryam."

4 a. Apparently three times a year.

b. The words "with a woman," necessary to complete the sentence, are added from the Bohairic Cop. and Eth. versions.

my sin, so cleanse me, O Lord, that I may enter into your presence with self-respect. •Now my offenses are weighty; I have drawn near to the fire which burns. Your mercy is upon all things, so that you can take away all my transgressions. Pardon me, even me, the sinner. •And pardon all your creatures whom you have fashioned, but who have not heard and learned of you.

“I am like all who are in your image. I have turned to the doing of what is forbidden to me. •I have come to you and I am your servant and the sinful son of your nation, but you are the very forgiving one. •Forgive me by the graciousness that comes from you, and hear my entreaty that I may be worthy of standing at your holy altar. •May this burnt offering be acceptable to you. •Do not turn me back to my ignorance because of my sins. Receive me like the lost sheep. •May the God who provided for our father Adam, and Abel and Noah, and our father Abraham, be with you, O Jacob, and with me also. •Receive my offering from me.’

“So if you have approached and have done this before your ascent to the altar, then offer your sacrifice. •But you shall take care and be alert that you do not grieve the spirit of the Lord. •For the work of the priesthood is not easy, since it is incumbent upon every priest, from today until the completion of the last of the generations and the end of the world, that he should not be filled by the drinking of wine nor be satisfied by the eating of bread; and that he should not talk about the concerns of the world nor listen to one who does talk about them. •But priests must expend all of their efforts and their lives in prayer and watchfulness and perseverance in piety, in order that each one may petition the Lord successfully.

“Moreover, every man on earth, whether wretched or fortunate, has incumbent upon him the keeping of the proper commandments. •For men, after a short time, will be removed from this world and its intense anxiety. •Then they will be engaged in holy, angelic service by reason of purity. •They will be presented before the Lord and his angels because of their pure offerings and their angelic service. •For their earthly conduct will be reflected in heaven, and the angels will be their friends because of their perfect faith and purity. •Great is their esteem before the Lord, and there is no one either small or great in whom the Lord will not make improvement; for the Lord wishes that each be without fault or offense.

“And now, continue to supplicate God with repentance for your past sins, and do not commit more sin. •Accordingly, do not kill with the sword, do not kill with the tongue, do not fornicate with your body, and do not remain angry until sunset. Do not let yourself receive unjustified praise, and do not rejoice at the fall of your enemies or of your brothers. •Do not blaspheme; beware of slander. •Do not look at a woman with a lustful eye. •These things and what is like them you shall guard against, in order that each one of you may be saved from the wrath which will be manifested from heaven.”

5 When the throngs who were surrounding them heard this, they cried out with one accord, saying, “Truly everything which this venerable man has said is worthy of attention.” •But he remained silent, pulled up his cloak, and covered his face. The assemblage and the priest who was present, after a silence, said: “Let him rest a little.”

Then the angel of God came to him and took him to the heavens. •There he beheld certain things in fear. •Many wild beasts(?) were within easy reach. •The sides . . . (?) like the brothers so that they could not get sight of one another.^a Their faces were like the faces of camels and some were like the faces of dogs. Others were like the faces of lions and hyenas and tigers; and some had only one eye.

Isaac said, “I looked and, behold, they had agreed on a person and were hurrying

^a This sentence seems to be confused in all the versions. The general idea seems to be that these creatures were frightful in appearance.

11 him along. •And when they had made a sign to the lions, those who were walking 12 with him withdrew from him. •Then the lions turned upon him, tore him apart in 13 the middle, dismembered him, and chewed and swallowed him. •After this they 14 ejected him from their mouths and he returned to his original state. •And after the 15 lions the others came forward and did the same thing to him. •One after the other 16 they would take him, and every one of them would chew him, swallow him, and 17 eject him, and he would return to his original state.” •Then I said to the angel, “O my lord, what is the sin which this man has committed that he should have to endure a burden like this?”

17 The angel said to me, “It is because this man, whom you see, was in enmity with his neighbor for five hours, and he died without having been reconciled with 18 him. •So he was handed over to five of the tormentors that they might torment him a whole year for each of the five hours which he spent as the enemy of his friend.” 19 Then the angel said to me, “O my beloved Isaac, see here the sixty myriads who 20 inflict torture for each hour that the man remains hostile to his neighbor. •He is brought here to these creatures who torture him, each one of them for an hour until a full year is completed if he had not been making peace and repenting of his sin before his removal and his separation from his body.”

21 Then he brought me to a river of fire. I saw it throbbing, with its waves rising 22 to about thirty cubits; and its sound was like rolling thunder. •I looked upon many 23 souls being immersed in it to a depth of about nine cubits. •They were weeping and crying out with a loud voice and great groaning, those who were in that river.
 24 And that river had wisdom in its fire: It would not harm the righteous, but only 25 the sinners by burning them. •It would burn every one of them because of the stench and repugnance of the odor surrounding the sinners.

26 Then I observed the deep river^b whose smoke had come up before me, and I saw a group of people at the bottom of it, screaming, weeping, every one of them 27 lamenting. •The angel said to me, “Look at the bottom to observe those whom you see at the lowest depth. They are the ones who have committed the sin of Sodom; truly, they were due a drastic punishment.”

28,29 Then I saw the overseer of punishment and he was all of him fire. •He would strike the myrmidons of hell (his helpers) and say to them, “Kill them that it may 30 be known that God exists forever.” •Then the angel said to me, “Lift up your 31 eyes and look at the whole gamut of punishments.” •But I said to the angel, “My sight cannot embrace them because of their great number; but I desire to understand 32 how long these people are to be in this torture.” •He said to me, “Until the God of mercy becomes merciful and has mercy on them.”

1,2 6. After this the angel took me to heaven and I saw Abraham. •So I prostrated
 3 myself before him and he received me graciously, he and all the godly ones. •Then 4 they all came together and did me honor because of my father. •Then they took 5 me by the hand and led me to the curtain before the throne of the Father. •So I prostrated myself before him and worshiped him with my father and all the saints, while we uttered praises and cried aloud, saying, “Most holy, most holy, most 6 holy is the Lord Sabaoth! Heaven and earth are filled with your sanctified glory.”
 7 Then the Lord said to me from his holy height, “As to everyone who shall name his son after my beloved Isaac, my blessing shall rest upon him and be in his house 8 forever. •Excellent is your coming, O Abraham, faithful one; excellent is your lineage, and excellent is the presence here of this blessed lineage. •So now, everything which you ask in the name of your beloved son Isaac you shall have today as a covenant forever.”

9 Then my father Abraham answered and said, “Yours is the sovereignty, O Lord, 10 ruler of the universe.” •The Lord from his holy height said to my father Abraham,

Tab A20:12

b. The Bohairic Cop. and Sahidic Cop. versions have “abyss,” a more appropriate term.

“Every man who shall call his son by the name of my beloved Isaac, or shall write his own testament, shall have a blessing which shall not come to an end, and my blessing upon his house shall not cease. •Or if anyone will give a poor man something to eat on the day of the festival of my beloved Isaac then I will give him to you in my kingdom.”

12 Then my father Abraham said, “O Father, God, ruler of the universe, even if he is not able to write his testament or his covenant, let your blessing and your mercy enfold him, for you are the merciful one.” •The Lord said to Abraham, “Let him feed the hungry one with bread and I will give him a place in my kingdom and he shall be present with you from the first moment of the millennial banquet.”

14 The saving God also said to my father Abraham, “And if he is so poor that he does not find bread in his house, then let him spend a whole night commemorating my beloved Isaac without sleeping and I will bestow upon him a heritage in my kingdom.”

15 My father Abraham said, “And if he is weak and cannot endure the vigil, then may your mercy and compassion still enfold him.” •So the Lord said to him,

16 “Then let him offer a little incense in my name on the memorial day of my beloved Isaac, your son. •And if it should be that he does not know how to read, then let him go to hear the reading from one who can read it. •If he cannot do any of these things, then let him enter his house, lock the door behind him, and pray a hundred prayers of repentance; then I will give him to you as a son in my kingdom. •But above and beyond all this, let him bring an offering on the memorial day of my beloved Isaac. •And all those who shall do all that I have said shall be granted the inheritance of the kingdom in my heaven. •And all who took pains to write their testaments and covenants and life stories, and showed mercy if only (by giving) a cup of cold water, and believed with all their hearts—with them shall be my

Mt 25:35

17 strength and my Holy Spirit for the prosperity of their affairs in the world. •There shall not be any trouble in their departure (from this world), I will grant them a lifetime in my kingdom, and they shall be present from the first moment of the millennial banquet. •Peace be upon you, O my beloved ones, the saints!”

18 When he had concluded all this discourse, the heavenly beings began to cry out, saying, “Most holy, most holy, most holy is the Lord, Sabaoth! Heaven and earth

6:5

19 are filled with your sanctified glory.” •The Father who controls everything answered from this holy place and said, “O Michael, my faithful servant, call in all the angels and all the saints.” •Then he mounted the chariot of the seraphim, while the cherubim went before [with the angels. •And when they had come to the couch of our father Isaac, our father Isaac immediately beheld the face of our Lord, full of joy toward him. •He cried out, “It is well that you have come, my Lord, with your great archangel, Michael. It is well that you have come, my Father, with all the saints.”].^a

Tab A20

20 When he has said this, Jacob was greatly disturbed and he clung to his father and kissed him, weeping. •Then our father Isaac raised him up and made a sign to him, giving a hint with his eyes, meaning, “Be silent, my boy.” •So Abraham said to the Lord, “O Lord, remember also my (grand)son Jacob.”

Tab A5:9
B6:2

21 Then the Lord said to him, “My power shall be with him, he shall glorify my name, he shall become master of the land of promise, and the enemy shall not hold sway over him.” •And our father Isaac said, “Jacob, my beloved son, keep my injunction which I lay down today that you preserve my body. •Do not profane the image of God by how you treat it; for the image of man was made like the image of God; and God will treat you accordingly at the time when you meet him and see him face to face. •He is the first and the last, as the prophets have said.”

Isa 44:6
Rev 1:8

1 7 When Isaac had said this, the Lord took his soul from his body and it was white as snow; he took possession of it and carried it with him upon his holy chariot and

Tab B14:7
A20

6 a. This necessary section, missing in the Ar. is supplied from the Sahidic Cop. version.

ascended with it to the heavens, while the cherubim were singing praises before 2 it, likewise his holy angels. •The Lord bestowed upon him the kingdom of heaven; and everything which our father desired out of the abundance of blessings from God he had, including the fulfillment of his covenant forever.

1 8 Such was the decease of our father Abraham and our father Isaac, son of Abraham, on the twenty-eighth day of the month of Misri, on this very day. This 2 day we have consecrated and designated. •And on the day when our father Abraham offered the sacrifice to God, on the twenty-eighth day of the month of Amshir, the heavens and the earth were filled with the sweet fragrance of his way of life before the Lord.

3 And our father Isaac was like the silver which is burned, smelted, purified, and refined in the fire; likewise everyone who shall come forth from our father Isaac, 4 the father of fathers. •On the day when Abraham, the father of fathers, offered him Gen 22 as a sacrifice to God, the perfume of his sacrifice ascended to the veil of the curtain of the one who controls everything.

5 Blessed is everyone who manifests mercy on the memorial day of the father of fathers, our father Abraham and our father Isaac, for each of them shall have a dwelling in the kingdom of heaven, because our Lord has made with them his true Gen 17 6 covenant forever. •And he will keep it for them and for those who come after them, saying to them, “Whatever person has manifested mercy in the name of my beloved Isaac, behold I will give him to you in the kingdom of heaven and he shall be present with them at the first moment of the millennial banquet to celebrate with them in the everlasting light in the kingdom of our Master and our God and our 7 King and our Savior, Jesus the Messiah. •He is the one to whom are due the glory, the dignity, the majesty, the dominion, the reverence, the honor, the praise, and the adoration, along with the merciful Father and the Holy Spirit now and for all time, and to all eternity and forever and ever, amen!”

1 9 The obsequies of our father Isaac are finished. Thanks and praise to God, always, forever, and eternally.

TESTAMENT OF JACOB

(Second to Third Century A.D.?)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY W. F. STINESPRING

After the statement of the Trinitarian formula, the narrator begins a commemoration of Jacob on the same day set aside in the church calendar to honor Isaac. As in the case of Isaac, the Lord sends the archangel Michael to Jacob to announce his imminent demise. Jacob, accustomed to speaking with angels, replies that he is ready to die, now that he has been able to come to Egypt to see and enjoy his son Joseph once more (Gen 46:30).

After an interval, another angel, resembling Isaac, appears and somewhat frightens Jacob. Then the heavenly visitor identifies himself as Jacob's guardian angel, who has already saved him from Laban, Esau, and various dangers, and will continue to see that all will be well. The angel departs, with Jacob's confidence restored. Jacob then requires Joseph to swear that he will take his body back to the land of Canaan to be buried in the ancestral tomb (Gen 47:29–31). Next the narrator relates the story of the blessing of Ephraim and Manasseh (Gen 48), followed by a condensed version of Jacob's blessing on his twelve sons (Gen 49).

Then, like Isaac, Jacob is taken up for a preliminary tour of the next world, first to hell with all its horrors, afterward to heaven with all its bliss. He returns to earth and dies at the age of 147 years. The Lord and his angels come down and take his soul to heaven. Joseph orders his body embalmed in the Egyptian manner. Many days of mourning ensue (Gen 50:2f.). Then follows the great procession of Israelites and Egyptians to the land of Canaan to bury Jacob's body (Gen 50:4–14).

In conclusion, the narrator presents his own views and advice. He recommends reading the Torah, written by Moses (sic), and imitating the patriarchs in one's own life to avoid the tortures of hell. Much prayer and fasting are necessary, likewise alms-freely given out of mercy and compassion. Such living will drive away demons. Avoid danger, depravity, and all sexual immorality, including homosexuality. Honor the patriarchs every year on their special day. Finally, all we weak sinners will have urgent need of intercessors in heaven on the day of judgment. We must plead for mercy before Jesus the Messiah, who is both judge and helper. Our best intercessors will be the Virgin Mary, "mistress of intercessions" and "mother of salvation," also the martyrs and saints and all who have pleased the Lord with pious deeds.

Texts

The present translation is based on the Arabic text, with some help from the Coptic and Ethiopic. The principal manuscripts are the same as those used for the Testament of Isaac, except that in the Sahidic Coptic version only the Testament of Isaac is extant.

THE TESTAMENT OF JACOB

1 1 In the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, the one God.

2 We begin, with the help of God Most High and through his mediation, to write the life story of our father, the patriarch Jacob, son of the patriarch Isaac, on the twenty-eighth day of the month of Misri. •May the blessing of his prayer guard us and protect us from the temptations of the obstinate enemy. Amen, amen, amen!

4 He said, "Come, listen, my beloved ones and my brethren who love the Lord, 5 to what has been received." •Now when the time of our father Jacob, father of fathers, son of Isaac, son of Abraham, approached and drew near for him to steal 6 away from his body, this faithful one was advanced in years and distinction. •So the Lord sent to him Michael, the chief of the angels, who said to him, "O Israel, my beloved, of noble lineage, write down your spoken legacy and your instruction for your household and give them a covenant; also concern yourself with the proper ordering of your household, for the time has drawn near for you to go to your fathers to rejoice with them forever."

7 So when our father Jacob, the faithful one, heard this from the angel, he answered and said, as was his custom every day to speak in this manner with the angels, 8 "Let the will of the Lord be done." •And God pronounced a blessing upon our 9 father Jacob. •Jacob had a secluded place which he would enter to offer his prayers
10 before the Lord in the night and in the day. •The angels would visit him and guard him and strengthen him in all things.

11 God blessed him and multiplied his people in the land of Egypt at the time when 12 he went down to the land of Egypt to meet his son Joseph. •His eyes had become dull from weeping, but when he went down to Egypt he saw clearly when he 13 beheld his son. •So Jacob-Israel bowed with his face to the ground, then fell upon the neck of his son Joseph and kissed him, while weeping and saying, "I can die now, O my son, because I have seen your face once more in my lifetime; O my beloved son."

1 2 Joseph continued to rule over all Egypt, while Jacob stayed in the land of Goshen for seventeen years and became very old, so that his life-span was completed. •He continually kept all the commandments and feared the Lord. •His eyes grew dim and his lifetime was so nearly finished that he could not see a single person because of his long life and senility.

4 Then he lifted his eyes toward the light of Isaac,^a but he was afraid and became 5 disturbed. •So the angel said to him, "Do not fear, O Jacob; I am the angel who 6 has been walking with you and guarding you from your infancy. •I announced that 7 you would receive the blessing of your father and of Rebecca, your mother. •I am the one who is with you, O Israel, in all your acts and in everything which you 8 have witnessed. •I saved you from Laban^b when he was endangering you and 9 pursuing you. •At that time I gave you all his possessions and blessed you, your wives, your children, and your flocks.

10,11 "I am the one who saved you from the hand of Esau. •I am the one who accompanied you to the land of Egypt, O Israel, and a very great people was given 12 to you. •Blessed is your father Abraham, for he has become the friend of God—may he (God) be exalted!—because of his generosity and love of strangers.
13 Blessed is your father Isaac who begot you, for he was a perfect sacrifice, acceptable to God.

14,15 "Blessed are you also, O Jacob, for you have seen God face to face. •You saw

2 a. An angel that resembled Isaac; cf. TIsaac 2.
b. The French translation in Delcor, Le Testament d'Abraham, p. 262, has "Satan" here. There seems to be no MS evidence for this reading. [The error appears to originate with Delcor's typist; "Satan" looks like and is more familiar than "Laban." J.H.C.]

the angel of God—may he be exalted!—and you saw the ladder standing firm on 16 the ground with its top in the heavens. •Then you beheld the Lord sitting at its top 17 with a power which no one could describe. •You spoke out and said, ‘This is the 18 house of God and this is the gate of heaven.’ •Blessed are you, for you have come near to God and he is strong among mankind, so now do not be troubled, O chosen one of God.

19,20 “Blessed are you, O Israel, and blessed is all your progeny. •For all of you will be called ‘the patriarchs’ to the end of the age and of the epochs; you are the 21 people and the lineage of the servants of God. •Blessed be the nation which will 22 strive for your purity and will see your good works. •Blessed be the man who will 23 remember you on the day of your noble festival. •Blessed be the one who will perform acts of mercy in honor of your several names, and will give someone a cup of water to drink, or will come with an offering to the sanctuary, or will take in strangers, or visit the sick and console their children, or will clothe a naked one in honor of your several names.

TIsaac 2:9

TIsaac 8:5

TIsaac 6:21

24 “Such a one shall neither lack any of the good things of this world, nor life 25 everlasting in the world to come. •Moreover, whoever shall have caused to be written the stories of your several lives and sufferings at his own expense, or shall have written them by his own hand, or shall have read them soberly, or shall hear them in faith, or shall remember your deeds—such persons will have their sins forgiven and their trespasses pardoned, and they will go on account of you and your progeny into the kingdom of heaven.

TIsaac 6:21

26 “And now rise up, Jacob, for you will be translated from hardship and pain of heart to eternal rest, and you will enter into the repose which shall not pass away, 27 into mercy, eternal light, and spiritual joy. •So now make your statement to your household, and peace be upon you, for I am about to go to him who sent me.”

TIsaac 2:13

1 3 So when the angel had made this statement to our father Jacob, he ascended
 2 from him into heaven, as Jacob bade him farewell. •Those who were around Jacob 3 heard him as he thanked God and glorified him with praise. •And all the members of his household, great and small, gathered around him, weeping over him, deeply 4 grieving and saying, “You are going away and leaving us as orphans.” •And they kept on saying to him, “O our beloved father, what shall we do, for we are in a 5 strange land?” •So Jacob said to them, “Do not fear; God himself appeared to me in Upper Mesopotamia^a and said to me, ‘I am the God of your fathers; do not fear, for I am with you forever and with your descendants who will come after you.
 6 This land in which you are I am about to give to you and to your descendants after 7,8 you forever. •And do not be afraid to go down to Egypt. •I will make for you a 9 great people and your descendants will increase and multiply forever. •Joseph will put his hand on your eyes and your people will multiply in the land of Egypt.
 10,11 Afterward they will come to this place and will be without care. •I will do good to them for your sake, though for the time being they will be displaced from here.’ ”

Gen 46:1-7

1,2 4 After this, the time for Jacob-Israel to leave his body had arrived. •So he summoned Joseph and said to him, “If indeed you have found grace, place your blessed hand under my side and swear an oath before the Lord that you will place 3 my body in the tomb of my fathers.” •Then Joseph said to him, “I will do exactly
 4 what you command me, O beloved of God.” •But he said to Joseph, “I want you 5 to swear to me.” •So Joseph swore to Jacob, his father, to the effect that he would carry his body to the tomb of his fathers, and Jacob accepted the oath of his son.
 6,7 Afterward, this report reached Joseph: “Your father has become uneasy.” •So he took his two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, and went before his father Jacob.
 8 Joseph said to him, “These are my sons whom God has given me in the land of

Gen 47:27-31

3 a. The translator in Delcor, Le Testament but the Ar. word for “island” is also the word for d’Abraham, has rendered “I’ile,” “the island,” “Upper Mesopotamia.”

9.10 Egypt to come after me.” •Israel said, “Bring them closer to me here.” •For the eyes of Israel had become dim from his advanced age so that he could not see.
 11.12 So Joseph brought his sons closer and Jacob kissed them. •Then Joseph commanded them, namely Ephraim and Manasseh, to bow down before Jacob to the ground.
 13 Joseph took Manasseh and put him at Israel’s right hand and Ephraim at his left 14 hand. •But Israel reversed his hands and let his right hand rest upon the head of 15 Ephraim and his left hand upon the head of Manasseh. •He blessed them and gave them back to their father and said, “May the God under whose authority my fathers, Abraham and Isaac, served in reverence, the God who has strengthened me from my youth up to the present time when the angel has saved me from all 16 my afflictions, may he bless these lads, Manasseh and Ephraim. •May my name be upon them, also the names of my holy fathers, Abraham and Isaac.”
 17 After this, Israel said to Joseph, “I shall die, and all of you will return to the 18 land of your fathers and God will be with you. •And you personally have received a mighty favor, greater than that of your brothers, for I have taken this arrow with my bow and my sword from the Amorites(?)”^a

Gen 48

1 5 Then Jacob sent for all his children and said to them, “Gather around me that I may inform you of everything which will come upon you and what will overtake each one of you in the last days.” •So they gathered around Israel from the eldest
 3 to the youngest of them. •Then Jacob-Israel spoke up and said to his sons, “Listen, O sons of Jacob, listen to your father Israel, from Reuben my firstborn to Benjamin.”
 4 Then he told them what would come upon the twelve children, calling each one of them and his tribe by name; and he blessed them with the celestial blessing.
 5.6 After this they were silent for a short time in order that he might rest. •So the heavens rejoiced that he could observe the places of repose.^a

7 And behold, there approached numerous tormentors differing in their aspects.
 8 They were prepared to torment the sinners, who are these: adulterers, male and female; those lusting after males; the vicious who degrade the semen given by God;^b the astrologers and the sorcerers; the evildoers and the worshipers of idols who hold onto abominations; and the slanderers who pass judgment(?) with two tongues (deceitfully). •And as to all these sinners, their punishment is the fire which will not be extinguished and the outer darkness where there is weeping and gnashing of teeth.

TIsaac 5

Mt 8:12; 22:13

10 [Here there is a lacuna in the Arabic text. In the Bohairic, Jacob is again taken
 11 up, this time to heaven, where all is light and joy. •He sees Abraham and Isaac 12 and is shown all the joys of the redeemed. •Jacob returns to earth, gives instructions for his burial in the land of his fathers, and passes away at the age of 147 years.
 13 The Lord comes down with the angels Michael and Gabriel to bear Jacob’s soul
 14 to heaven. •Joseph orders his father’s body to be embalmed in the Egyptian manner.
 15 Forty days are spent in the embalming process, and eighty more days are spent in mourning for the patriarch.]

TIsaac 6:26

1 6 And when the days of their mourning were finished, Pharaoh was still weeping
 2 over Jacob because of his regard for Joseph. •Then Joseph addressed the nobles of Pharaoh and said to them, “Since I have found favor with you, will you speak on my behalf to Pharaoh the king, and say to him that Jacob made me take an oath that when he went out from his body I would bury his body in the tomb of my 3 fathers in the land of Canaan, in that very place?” •So Pharaoh said to Joseph,
 4 “Go in peace and bury your father in accordance with the oath which he required of you. •And take with you chariots and horses, the best of my kingdom and from my own household as you desire.”

Gen 50:6

5 So Joseph worshiped God in the presence of Pharaoh, went forth from him,

4 a. The end of this sentence is corrupt in the Ar. text. This tentative translation relies partly upon the Bohairic Cop. and Eth.

5 a. I.e. places where the dead go; he was taken up to these places, as other versions say.
 b. masturbators?

6 and set out to bury his father. •And there set out with him the slaves of Pharaoh, the elders of Egypt, all the household of Joseph, and his brothers and all Israel.
 7 They all went up with him into the chariots, and the entourage moved along like 8 a great army. •They descended into the land of Canaan to the riverbank across the 9 Jordan and they mourned for him in that place with very great grief indeed. •They 10 maintained that great grief for him for seven days. •So when the inhabitants of 11 Dan heard about the mourning in their land, they said, “This great mourning is 12 that of the Egyptians.” •To this day [they call that place “the Mourning of the 13 Egyptians”].^a

12 Then Israel was carried forward and was buried in the land of Canaan in the 13 second tomb. •This is the one which Abraham had bought with authorization for 14 burials from Ephron opposite Mamre. •After that Joseph returned to the land of 15 Egypt with his brothers and all the retinue of Pharaoh. •And Joseph lived after the 16 death of his father many years. •He continued to rule over Egypt, though Jacob had died and was left behind with his own people.

1 7 This is what we have transmitted: We have described the demise of and the mourning for the father of fathers, Jacob-Israel, to the extent of our ability to do this; also as it is written in the spiritual books of God and as we have found it in the ancient treasury of knowledge of our fathers, the holy, pure apostles.

2 And if you wish to know the life history and get new knowledge of the father
 3 of fathers, Jacob, then take a father who is attested in the Old Testament. •Moses
 4 is the one who wrote it, the first of the prophets, the author of the Law. •Read
 5 from it and enlighten your insights. •You will find this and more in it, written for 6 your sake. •You will find that God and his angels were their friends while they 7 were in their bodies, and that God kept on speaking to them many times in various 8 passages from the Book. •Also he says in many passages with regard to the patriarch Jacob, the father of fathers, in the Book, thus, “My son, I will bless 9 your descendants like the stars of the heavens.” •And our father Jacob would speak to his son Joseph and say to him, “My God appeared to me in the land of Canaan at Luz and blessed me and said to me, ‘I will bless you and multiply you and make 10 you a mighty people. •They shall go out (to war?) like the other nations of this earth and your descendants will increase forever.’ ”

Gen 35:11-15

10 This is what we have heard, O my brothers and my loved ones, from our fathers, 11 the patriarchs. •And it is incumbent upon us that we have zeal for their deeds, their purity, their faith, their love of mankind, and their acceptance of strangers; in order that we may lay claim to be their sons in the kingdom of heaven, so that they will intercede for us before God that we may be saved from the torture of hell.

2:20

12,13 These are the ones whom the Arabs have designated as the holy fathers. •Jacob instructed his sons with regard to punishment, and he would call them the sword of the Lord, which is the river of fire, prepared with its waves to engulf the 14 evildoers and the impure. •These are the things the power of which the father of fathers, Jacob, expounded and taught to all his sons that the wise ones might hear 15 and pursue righteousness in mutual love with mercy and compassion. •For mercy 16 saves people from penalties and mercy overcomes a multitude of wrongs. •Truly, one who shows mercy to the poor, that one makes a loan to God.

17 So now, my beloved sons, do not slacken from prayer and fasting ever at any 18 time, and by the life of the religion you will drive away the demons. •O my dear son, avoid the evil ways of the world, which are anger and depravity and all vicious 19,20 deeds. •And beware of injustice and blasphemy and abduction. •For the unjust will not inherit the kingdom of God, nor will the adulterers, nor the accursed, nor those who commit outrages and have sexual intercourse with males, nor the gluttons, nor the worshipers of idols, nor those who utter imprecations, nor those who pollute themselves outside of pure marriage; and others whom we have not presented or even mentioned shall not come near the kingdom of God.

1Co 6:9

6 a. The sentence is completed from the Bohairic Cop.

21 O my sons, honor the saints, for they are the ones who will intercede for you.

22 O my sons, be generous to strangers and you will be given exactly what was given to the great Abraham, the father of fathers, and to our father Isaac, his son. Tab A1:2

23 O my sons, do for the poor what will increase compassion for them here and now, so that God will give you the bread of life forever in the kingdom of God. JosAsen 8:5

24 For to the one who has given a poor person bread in this world God will give Jn 6

25 a portion from the tree of life. •Clothe the poor person who is naked on the earth, so that God may clothe you with the apparel of glory in the kingdom of heaven, and you will be the sons of our holy fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in heaven

26 forever. •Be concerned with the reading of the word of God in his books here below, and remember the saints who have written of their lives, their sufferings,

27 and their prostrations in prayer. •In the future, it shall not be prevented that they

28 should be inscribed in the book of life in the kingdom of heaven. •And you will be counted among the saints, those who pleased God in their lifetime and will rejoice with the angels in the land of eternal life.

1 8 You shall honor the memory of our fathers, the patriarchs, at this time each TIsaac 1:2; 8:1

2 year and on this same day, which is the twenty-eighth of the month of Misri. •This is what we have found written in the ancient documents of our fathers, the saints

3 who were pleasing to God. •Because of their intercession and their prayer, we shall have all things, namely a share and a place in the kingdom of heaven which belongs to our Lord and our God and our Master and our Savior, Jesus the Messiah.

4 He is the one whom we ask to forgive us for our mistakes and our errors and to

5 overlook our misdeeds. •May he be kind to us on the day of his judgment and let us hear the voice filled with joy, kindness, and gladness, saying, "Come to me, O blessed ones of my Father, inherit the kingdom which was yours from before the creation of the world."

6 And may we be worthy to receive his divine secrets, which are the means to

7 the pardon of our sins. •May he help us toward the salvation of our souls, and may

8 he ward off from us the blows of the wicked enemy. •May he let us stand at his right hand on the great and terrible day for the intercession of the mistress of intercessions, the source of purity, generosity, and blessings, the mother of salvation;^a and for the intercession of all the martyrs, saints, doers of pleasing deeds, and everyone who has pleased the Lord with his pious deeds and his good will.

9 Amen, amen, amen. •And praise to God always, forever, eternally.

^a A reference to the Virgin Mary as an aid in intercession for sinners

TESTAMENT OF MOSES

(First Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY J. PRIEST

The Testament of Moses is the farewell exhortation given by Moses to his chosen successor Joshua just prior to the leader's death and Israel's entrance into the promised land. Apart from a few responses of Joshua, which serve to facilitate the flow of Moses' speech, the format is a predictive delineation of the history of the people from their entrance into Canaan until the end of days.

In summary fashion, Moses outlines the conquest (2:1–2), the time of the judges and the united kingdom (2:3–4), and the period of the divided kingdoms (2:5–9). Chapter 3 speaks of the fall of Jerusalem (3:1–3) and the reunion of all Israel in the land of their exile (3:4–14). Next, Moses foretells the return from captivity (4:1–6) and the rebuilding of Jerusalem (4:7–9).

The return is, however, followed by a renewed apostasy (5:1–6; 7:1–9). Those responsible for this apostasy are usually considered to be the hellenizing priests of the Seleucid period (175–165 B.C.) and/or the priest-kings of the Hasmonean era (142–37 B.C.). The consequence of these evil deeds is the partial destruction of the Temple (6:9), and the torture, imprisonment, and death of the faithful (6:3–9; 8:1–5).

An episode that appears to be the culmination of this historical survey tells of the resolve of a Levite and his seven sons to die rather than betray their ancestral faith (9:1–7). There follows an eschatological hymn that portrays the destruction of the evil one at the hands of Israel's guardian angel (10:1–2), cataclysmic cosmic events (10:3–6), and the exaltation of Israel in the end of days (10:7–10).

Finally, there is a dialogue between Moses and Joshua in which the latter questions his own ability to lead the people and laments that Moses' death will encourage Israel's enemies to attack, once they believe that his presence will no longer protect the chosen people (11:1–12:1). Moses, however, assures Joshua that God is in complete control of all that is and will be (12:1–5). It is his will and mercy, not the merit of Moses, that have guarded the people up to now (12:6–7), and the same will suffice in the days of Joshua (12:8–9). The concluding verses exhort faithfulness to the commandments, promising good to those who fulfill them and evil to those who disregard them (12:10–11), and affirm that, in spite of all hazards, a nucleus of God's people will survive in accord with the covenant promises made long ago (12:12–13).

At this point, in the middle of a sentence, there is a break in the text and the remaining contents of the document are lost.

Text

The sole extant copy of our text is a Latin palimpsest discovered by A. M. Ceriani in the Ambrosian Library in Milan in 1861. It dates from the sixth century, but the style and orthography indicate that the original Latin text is about a century earlier. The preserved text is clearly incomplete with perhaps one third to one half being lost. There are gaps in those sections that do remain, and in many places the writing is scarcely legible.¹ Further, it is apparent that either the Latin translator or the copyist, or both, were careless in both spelling and grammar. Consequently, editors and translators have had to resort to many emendations and reconstructions.

Original language

It was apparent to the first editors of the text that the Latin was translated from Greek. A few Greek words appear as transliterations, certain syntactical constructions clearly reflect a Greek background, and some difficult passages may be clarified by reconstructing the Greek that underlies the Latin. Most of the first editors and translators assumed that the original language was indeed Greek. Further investigation, however, indicates that the Greek itself was, in all probability, a translation of a Semitic original. This view is almost universally accepted today, but there remains a question as to whether the original was Aramaic or Hebrew. Certainty is not possible, but the balance of probability leans toward Hebrew.² That the text is a translation of a translation further complicates the problem for modern translators as will be indicated in some of the notes.

Date

Widely differing estimates have been proposed for the date of the document, but these may be classified into three broad categories: (1) in the first half of the second century A.D., most likely in the period just following the war of A.D. 132–135; (2) during the period of the Maccabean revolt, i.e. 168–165 B.C.; and (3) in the first century A.D., before the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 and most likely during the first three decades of that century. The first option has been most vigorously argued by S. Zeitlin,³ but though many of his arguments deserve careful attention, they fail to carry conviction as a whole. The second option has most recently been proposed by J. Licht⁴ and adopted especially by G. Nickelsburg.⁵ The thrust of Licht's argument rests on his theological interpretation of the role of Taxo in chapter 9 and of the eschatological hymn in chapter 10. Nickelsburg accepts this position but develops more intricate arguments for the Maccabean dating. He bases his position on a form-critical analysis of the document as a whole and on the apparent description of the persecutions of Antiochus IV Epiphanes in chapter 8. He believes that the vividness of this description indicates that the persecution was contemporary with the author. However, chapter 6 contains a serious difficulty for a Maccabean dating as there is near universal agreement that Herod's reign and death are there referred to. This would mean that the text, in its present form, could not have been written before 4 B.C. Licht and Nickelsburg solve this problem by suggesting that chapter 6, and perhaps chapter 7, are interpolations into a document that had its origin in the Maccabean period.

The arguments for a date in the first century A.D., before A.D. 70, were stated in their fullest form by R. H. Charles.⁶ His main points were that the date must be (1) before A.D. 70, since the Temple is still standing (1:17); (2) after 4 B.C., since Herod is already dead (4:6); (3) before A.D. 30, since it is stated that Herod will beget heirs who will reign for shorter periods than he (6:7), i.e. less than his reign of thirty-four years; and (4) after A.D. 7 since he supposed that the text implies that Archelaus has already been deposed.

¹ D. H. Wallace, in private correspondence, has indicated that all technological efforts to restore illegible portions of the text have thus far resulted in failure.

² See the discussions in E. M. Laperrousaz, Le Testament de Moïse, pp. 16–25; R. H. Charles, The Assumption of Moses, pp. xxxvi–xlv; R. H. Charles, APOT, vol. 2, p. 410; D. H. Wallace, "The Semitic Origin of the Assumption of Moses," TZ 11 (1955) 321–28.

³ S. Zeitlin, "The Assumption of Moses and the Bar Kokhba Revolt," JQR 38 (1947/48) 1–45.

⁴ J. Licht, "Taxo, or the Apocalyptic Doctrine of Vengeance," JJS 12 (1961) 95–103.

⁵ G. Nickelsburg, Resurrection, Immortality and Eternal Life in Inter-Testamental Judaism (HTS 26; Cambridge, 1972) especially pp. 28–31, 43–45, 97; and "An Antiochan Date for the Testament of Moses," Studies on the Testament of Moses, pp. 33–37.

⁶ Charles, Assumption, pp. lv–lviii; APOT, vol. 2, p. 411.

⁷ Charles, Assumption, pp. 28–30; APOT, vol. 2, p. 420. Some scholars have modified this view and transpose only ch. 8. See H. H. Rowley, The Relevance of Apocalyptic, p. 107.

Just as the obvious Herodian references in chapter 6 posed a serious problem for a Maccabean date, so also the apparent chronological discrepancy in chapters 5 through 9 required Charles to propose a theory of dislocation of the text and a suggested rearrangement. Since he believed that in those chapters the author was describing historical events with chronological consistency, the references to Herod's reign in chapters 6 and 7 should follow chapters 8 and 9, which reflect the persecutions of Antiochus IV Epiphanes. Concluding that at some stage of transmission there was dislocation, he solved the problem by inserting chapters 8 and 9 between 5 and 6, thus restoring what he presumed to be the original order.⁷

Although this proposal has been widely accepted, it is cogent only if one assumes that contemporary canons of consistency must apply to an apocalyptic author. Rejection of Charles's theory on this point does not, however, affect his overall argument for a first-century A.D. date, while acceptance of the interpolation proposal is mandatory for a Maccabean dating. The possibility of interpolation is not to be dismissed arbitrarily. Indeed, it is probable that the text has a long and obscure literary history, which includes additions, interpolations, and other forms of editing. The fragmentary, often untrustworthy, nature of the Latin, itself one language removed from the Semitic original, precludes operating with the critical precision implicit in any specific theory of interpolation, dislocation, or rearrangement. Consequently, it is better to retain the first-century date of the document, with the recognition that some of the materials may have had a considerable prior history in either oral or written form.

Provenance and historical importance

The geographical locale of the Testament of Moses has elicited little discussion by commentators. A few have tentatively proposed a Western, probably Roman origin, but most assume a Palestinian locale. Though specific evidence is lacking, the latter proposal is probably correct.

The question of the community to which the author belonged has prompted a wide variety of answers. At one time or another almost every well-known Jewish religious group from the Sadducees to the Samaritans has been suggested.⁸ Three suggestions seem to warrant serious consideration: (1) the rather amorphous group called the Hasidim, known to us to have been a party from Maccabean times at least; (2) a branch of the Pharisaic party; and (3) the Essenes. Two difficulties, neither insurmountable, appertain to the first suggestion. Information about the Hasidim is too general in nature to isolate specific features that might separate them ideologically; and it is generally agreed that from the first century B.C. onward the general Hasidic movement became focused in more clearly defined sectarian groups. The question of the date of the Testament of Moses, therefore, is significant in determining the group in which it originated. A Maccabean date would be appropriate for the general Hasidic movement while the first century A.D. date would require a more specific identification.

Charles presented the most forceful argument for a Pharisaic origin. He insisted that the author was a Pharisaic quietist who was resisting a growing nationalistic tendency within the party. Charles also noted the continuity between the outlook of the author and of the old Hasidic ideals. The majority of commentators since Charles have accepted his position.

A few early commentators suggested that the book came from Essene circles and the discovery of the Qumran and related materials resulted in fresh adherents to this opinion. There are, indeed, many parallels between the Qumran materials and the Testament of Moses. Some of these will be found in the notes. That no fragments of the work have been identified at Qumran is a serious, though by no means decisive, objection to the Essene theory. Some may subsequently be identified, and there is no reason to suppose that the entire corpus of Essene literature has been preserved. The Testament of Moses does appear to have closer affinities with the Essenes than with any other known group in the Judaism of the period.

There is increasing evidence, however, that the Judaism of this period was quite complex. It would appear unwise, therefore, to insist on the identification of every document with a specific group.⁹ Our present information requires a measure of tentativeness. It seems preferable not to assign to the Testament of Moses either a Pharisaic or an Essene origin but to state simply that it reflects the general outlook of the later Hasidic movement with a stress on apocalyptic motifs. Whether this was an individual or sectarian view cannot be ascertained.¹⁰

⁸ For a convenient review, see Laperrousaz, Testament, pp. 88–95. Charles, Assumption, pp. li–liv, and APOT, vol. 2, p. 411, surveyed earlier scholarship but his review needs to be brought up to date.

Theological importance

E. Laperrousaz has rightly remarked that the theology of the Testament of Moses is not very original.¹¹ Fundamentally, the theology reflects apocalyptic determinism although the Deuteronomic view that evildoers will be punished and the righteous will be rewarded is also present (12:10–11). This somewhat paradoxical combination is not unknown in other works of the period.

The deterministic theme, however, is dominant. All that has happened in the past was determined by God and revealed to Moses (3:11–12; 12:4–5). Thus, the promises of Moses that God's eschatological intervention is at hand (10:1–12) and that his covenant promises will not fail (12:3–13, and see below) may be received with full assurance. This, of course, is a primary purpose of apocalyptic, to give hope to those who are oppressed and in despair. The Testament of Moses fully shares that purpose.

The central argument for the assertion of Israel's final hope lies in the author's conviction that the covenant promises of God are certain (cf. 1:8–9; 3:9; 4:2–6; 12:7–13). Moses asserts that just as the guidance in the wilderness was not due to his strength (12:7) nor the impending conquest due to the piety of the people (12:8), so the final deliverance would result solely from the action of God, predetermined by his covenant and oath (12:13).

It has been claimed that the statement in 1:12 "God has created the world on behalf of his people" is not found in any work prior to the first century B.C. though it is found often in subsequent writings.¹² Chronological priority may belong to our document, but whether the idea originated with the author of the Testament of Moses cannot be determined.

Similarly, 1:14 says, "But he did design and devise me, who (was) prepared from the beginning of the world, to be the mediator of his covenant." This has been cited as being original in speaking of Moses' pre-existence and in designating him as a mediator. It seems dubious that the text can bear the weight of claiming pre-existence for Moses as a person, though this is not impossible since such a claim may have been made for the Son of Man in 1 Enoch (see especially 48:2, 3, 6; 62:7) and 4 Ezra (especially 12:32; 13:26) and since some Alexandrian Jewish circles taught the pre-existence of all souls. It seems wiser simply to say that our author, consistent with his thorough determinism, stated that Moses' role had been decreed from the beginning of the world. Whether he believed that Moses himself was "precreated" is not clear.

Moses' decreed role is clearly that of mediator. It is true that in the Old Testament Moses is not called a mediator and that the word occurs only in Job 9:33, but many narratives portray him in that role and the designation is quite well known in other documents of the first century A.D. (e.g. Gal 3:18; Heb 8:6; 9:15; 12:21; Philo, Vita Mos 3:19). Again, chronological priority may reside with the Testament of Moses, but it is probably too much to claim originality. Both the ideas of pre-existence and the designation of Moses as a mediator were in the air at the time.

One passage, the story of Taxo and his seven sons (ch. 9) warrants a more detailed examination. Not here applicable is whether its significance belongs properly to the issue of theological importance, historical importance, or relation to apocryphal works; that issue

⁹ Charles, Assumption, p. liv, and APOT, vol. 2, p. 411, felt required to subdivide the Pharisees and speak of the author as a "quietistic Pharisee." Laperrousaz, Testament, p. 95, argues for Essene origin but notes that the author was an Essene with particular qualities. The necessity of such qualifications damages attempts to make clear positive identifications.

¹⁰ M. Smith, in Palestinian Parties and Politics that Shaped the Old Testament (New York, 1971) p. 157, suggests that the author of TMos founded a sect that declared all sacrifices of the second Temple impure (see 5:4–5). The evidence is somewhat tenuous.

¹¹ Laperrousaz, Testament, p. 80. For convenient summaries of the theology of TMos as a whole, see Laperrousaz, Testament, pp. 80–87; Charles, Assumption, pp. lviii–lxi, and APOT, vol. 2, pp. 411–12.

¹² Other views, that the world was created for the righteous, e.g. 2Bar 14:19; 15:7; 21:24; 4Ezra 9:13; or for all mankind, e.g. 4Ezra 8:1, 44, are also common.

is problematical and results perhaps from an arbitrary division. Most scholars who have dealt with Taxo attempted to decipher the cryptic name and thus identify him historically. Their ingenuity is impressive but not very productive.¹³ Focus on the function of Taxo rather than on historical identification is a more fruitful angle of approach.

C. J. Lattey suggested that Taxo be understood as the suffering Messiah whose appearance and death bring about the divine consummation.¹⁴ The methods by which the name Taxo is made to refer to the Messiah are too oblique to convince many of the identification, but an understanding of Taxo as the one who precipitates the divine vengeance that inaugurates the end-time has recently gained considerable support.¹⁵ It has been maintained that the death of Taxo and his sons was intended to provoke the divine vengeance and thus be the instrument provoking the onset of the eschatological age. The death of Taxo and his sons will "compel God to exercise His vengeance."¹⁶

Comparison of the story of Taxo and his sons with other accounts of martyrdom in contemporary documents, particularly 1, 2, and 4 Maccabees, raises questions about this conclusion. There the reasons for and the results of martyrdom are by no means consistent. In some cases the martyrs are innocent, in others they suffer for their own sins. Their deaths may be simply exemplary, they may lead to restoration of life, or they may serve as a vicarious expiation for the sinful community. It should be noted that even when expiation is mentioned, there is no eschatological dimension envisaged.¹⁷

It might, nevertheless, be argued that the role of a righteous sufferer as provoking divine vengeance is a unique teaching in the Testament of Moses. This is possible, but the text does not demand such an interpretation. It is more likely that the author has used a typical martyr story to introduce his pronouncement of the end of time. He has included in the story motifs, known to us elsewhere, of God's avenging innocent suffering and, perhaps, has hinted at the idea of vicarious propitiation, although this is not clear. That he has set forth a unique teaching that Taxo's innocent suffering is the act that provokes the divine vengeance that leads to the consummation of the end-time seems to require much more than the text will bear.

Taxo is better seen as a singular example of the extreme woes that will beset God's people in the last days than as one who plays a significant part in precipitating the advent of those days. That the Testament of Moses proclaims divine vengeance is not to be denied. That Taxo is the instrument of that divine vengeance remains unproved. For the author of the Testament of Moses, God alone is the worker of his predetermined will.

Relation to canonical books

The most obvious relationship between the Testament of Moses and the Hebrew canon is with Deuteronomy, especially chapters 31 to 34 of that book. The basic outline of the Testament of Moses follows the pattern of those chapters to such an extent that the Testament of Moses may be considered a virtual rewriting of them.¹⁸ This is true not only with respect to general outline but also regarding specific allusions and theological perspective. Deuteronomy 31–34 is clearly the author's model, though he has recast his own work in light of the history of the people from the conquest to his own day and through the prism of his own apocalyptic outlook.

Influence by other canonical books is much more difficult to assess. Attention has been drawn to possible relationships between the Testament of Moses and Daniel. Most commentators conclude that the person in the Testament who prays for the people at 4:1 is Daniel and note the passage in Daniel 4:4–19. Further, parallels between the judgment scene in Daniel 12 and the hymn in Testament of Moses 10 have been cited. It is probable that the ¹³ Convenient summaries of this interesting episode in the history of scholarship may be found in Rowley, Relevance, pp. 149–56; Zeitlin, JQR 38 (1947/48) 4–5.

¹⁴ C. J. Lattey, "The Messianic Expectation in 'The Assumption of Moses,'" CBQ 4 (1942) 9–21.

¹⁵ Licht, JJS 12 (1961) 95–103. Cf. n. 4 above.

¹⁶ Licht, JJS 12 (1961) 98.

¹⁷ For a more extensive treatment comparing the martyr stories, see J. Priest, Perspectives in Religious Studies 4 (1977) 99–103. The entire article, 92–111, elaborates a number of points alluded to in this introduction.

¹⁸ Nickelsburg, Resurrection, p. 29. The use of Deut 31–34 is so extensive that marginal references to biblical parallels in the translation will note only those that contain direct verbal allusions.

identification of the prayer with Daniel is correct. This, however, would not necessarily mean that the author of the Testament of Moses was familiar with the book of Daniel but rather with certain Danielic traditions. There are enough differences between the judgment scenes in Daniel and the Testament of Moses to raise serious questions about the precise nature of their relationship.¹⁹ Thus, though it is probable that the author of the Testament of Moses was acquainted with the book of Daniel, it is not possible to assert definite dependence on his part. Allusions, both verbal and in thought, to a number of Old Testament books do appear in the Testament and will be noted in the references to the following translation. However, the Testament of Moses does not seem to reflect direct influence by any work other than Deuteronomy. It may be noted that priestly interests occur prominently but hardly as a reflection of any definite text.

Some influence by the Testament of Moses on a number of New Testament passages has been suggested. Those most often cited are Jude 9, 12–13, 16; 2 Peter 2:13; Acts 7:36–43; and Matthew 24:19–21 (with parallels). Jude 9 refers to the story of the dispute between Michael and Satan for the body of Moses, an account that does not appear in our text. That the episode was contained in the lost ending of the Testament of Moses or in a cognate work, properly called the Assumption of Moses, is possible; but our present information does not warrant any positive conclusion. (The relation between a Testament of Moses and an Assumption of Moses will be discussed below.) Jude 12–13 utilizes nature metaphors reminiscent of Testament of Moses 10:5–6²⁰ and Jude 16 describes opponents in language similar to a number of passages in our document. In both instances, however, the contexts are quite different. Nevertheless, the strongest case for possible knowledge of the Testament of Moses by a New Testament writer is with the letter of Jude. The other proposals are not compelling. The possibility exists that some New Testament authors were familiar with the Testament of Moses, but it would be better to say that both the Testament of Moses and certain New Testament texts show familiarity with common traditional material.²¹

Relation to apocryphal books

Evidence for literary relations among apocryphal books is difficult to assess. Two factors, primarily, contribute to this difficulty. First is the problem of relative dating. There is far from universal agreement regarding the date of most works, and even the relative dates suggested may vary widely. Second, unless there is a direct reference linking two works together, there is the possibility, even probability, that similar passages represent a similar development of Old Testament passages or common sources rather than direct dependence of one on the other. Many phrases and themes in the Testament of Moses do have parallels in other apocryphal works, but they should probably be considered as parallel statements emanating from a common milieu. Evidence of dependence or acquaintance cannot be demonstrated.

Since the view that the Testament of Moses is of Essene origin has been renewed,²² its relationship with the Qumran materials should be mentioned. There are, indeed, many instances of verbal similarities, particularly with CD and 1QH.²³ Further, some of the polemic interests in the Qumran materials are also to be found in the Testament of Moses. But the overall theological perspective of the Testament of Moses differs so much at crucial junctures from the Qumran literature that it is difficult to see how it could be a product of the Qumran community, though it is not improbable that the author, given the date proposed here, could have been acquainted with the thought and perhaps some of the writings of that sect.

¹⁹ Nickelsburg, Resurrection, p. 30.

²⁰ See the discussion by D. J. Rowton, "The Most Neglected Book in the New Testament" NTS 21 (1974/75) 558.

²¹ For detailed discussions, see Charles, Assumption, pp. lxii–lxv, and APOT, vol. 2, pp. 412f.; Laperrousaz, Testament, pp. 50–76.

²² E.g. by A. Dupont-Sommer, The Essene Writings from Qumran (Cleveland, 1967) p. 96, and the discussion in Laperrousaz, Testament, pp. 91–95.

²³ A number of similarities will be referred to in the nn. on the translation. One Qumran text, 1QDM, could be of considerable interest, but the extant fragments show no particular connections with TMos. The editors remark that "One may suppose that the composition ended with the death of Moses, and eventually his assumption" (p. 91). Of this there is no textual evidence. See D. Barthelemy and J. T. Milik, Qumran Cave I (Oxford, 1955) pp. 91–97, and plates xviii–xix.

Nevertheless, his own sectarian outlook did have its own peculiar development. And again, a common milieu may account for the apparent parallels.

Finally, apocryphal works associated with the name of Moses are mentioned frequently in early Jewish and Christian sources.²⁴ Precise identification is often difficult or impossible. Of particular interest, however, are those references that speak of both an Assumption of Moses and a Testament of Moses. Both are mentioned in some lists of noncanonical books,²⁵ and the former is specifically named in some early Greek and Latin writings.²⁶ Other writings, though not specifically naming a source, cite material that would be appropriate to a work describing the death and assumption of Moses.

Ceriani identified the present manuscript as the Assumption of Moses on the basis of a passage from the Acts of the Council of Nicea that appeared to cite 1:14, and perhaps parts of 1:6 and 1:9, as "having been written in the book of the Assumption of Moses." Later on, the same text spoke of the struggle between the archangel Michael and the devil, which is known from other early texts to be a part of the Assumption of Moses, and again cited its source as "book of the Assumption of Moses."²⁷ Since his initial identification, the book has regularly been called the Assumption of Moses.

Commentators on the manuscript discovered by Ceriani have regularly noted that the extant text nowhere mentions the assumption of Moses. Indeed all references to his impending death imply that it is to be a natural one (1:15; 3:3; 10:12, 14). The form of the present text is that of a farewell speech, or testament, which is a well-known genre in itself. Since the ancient lists recorded both an Assumption of Moses and a Testament of Moses, was Ceriani correct in identifying the manuscript as the Assumption or would it be more appropriate to infer that it is indeed the Testament?

There is no unambiguous answer to this question. Since the extant manuscript is clearly incomplete it may be that the lost section did go on to tell of Moses' death and assumption. The evidence from the Acts of the Council of Nicea can be interpreted in this way. Charles proposed that there were originally two separate works, a testament and an assumption account, which were joined together at an early period and that subsequently the whole was referred to as the Assumption of Moses.²⁸ This is an attractive suggestion but cannot be demonstrated. The matter remains open but since the only text we have is a farewell speech, a testament, most modern commentators prefer to refer to it as the Testament of Moses, and that is the practice followed in this work.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 163–66.

Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 164f.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 128–41.

Charles, R. H. The Assumption of Moses. London, 1897. (This contains the unemended Lat. text, a proposed emended text, introduction, translation, and copious annotation.)

———. The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament. Oxford, 1913. vol. 2, pp. 407–24. (This is an abbreviated version of the previous entry, with modest modifications of position.)

²⁴ See J. H. Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 159–66 and the literature cited there.

²⁵ A convenient collection of various lists, with a brief discussion, may be found in D. H. Russell, The Method and Message of Jewish Apocalyptic (Philadelphia, 1964) pp. 391–95.

²⁶ The citations and discussion may be found in Laperrousaz, Testament, pp. 29–62; Charles, Assumption, pp. xlv–1, 105–10; and APOT, vol 2, pp. 407–10; A. M. Denis, Fragmenta pseudepigraphorum quae supersunt graeca, pp. 63–67.

²⁷ Denis, Fragmenta, pp. 63–64.

²⁸ Charles, Assumption, pp. xlv–1, and APOT, vol. 2, p. 208.

- Denis, A. M. Fragmenta pseudepigraphorum quae supersunt graeca. PVTG 3; Leiden, 1970; pp. 63–67. (This contains the actual Gk. citations which are directly related to TMos.)
- Laperrousaz, E. M. Le Testament de Moïse (généralement appelé 'Assomption de Moïse') : Traduction avec introduction et notes. Semitica 19; Paris, 1970. (This is the most recent and most important full-scale treatment. The Introduction is superb and the translation eminently readable. The conclusions, in the main, follow Charles though the author proposes an Essene origin and reduces the number of emendations proposed by Charles.)
- Lathey, C. J. "The Messianic Expectation in 'The Assumption of Moses,'" CBQ 4 (1942) 9–21. (Lathey attempts to identify Taxo as a suffering Messiah. While the result is not convincing, the evidence adduced warrants careful attention.)
- Licht, J. "Taxo, or the Apocalyptic Doctrine of Vengeance," JJS 12 (1961) 95–103. (Licht stresses that it is the martyrdom of Taxo which brings about the divine vengeance and that this teaching is unique with TMos. Though that view is not accepted here, the evidence deserves serious attention. The article is also important for the influence it has had upon recent scholarship which argues for a Maccabean dating for TMos.)
- Nickelsburg, G. (ed.). Studies on the Testament of Moses. SCS 4; Cambridge, 1973. (This is a valuable collection of working papers devoted to a number of aspects of the study of TMos.)
- Priest, J. "Some Reflections on the Assumption of Moses," Perspectives in Religious Studies 4 (1977) 92–111. (This deals particularly with the function of Taxo and the eschatological hymn in ch. 10.)
- Rowley, H. H. The Relevance of Apocalyptic. New York, 1963; pp. 106–10, 149–56. (This is a valuable review of different scholarly opinions about TMos.)
- Wallace, D. H. "The Semitic Origin of the Assumption of Moses," TZ 11 (1955) 321–28. (This is a cautious and constructive survey of the evidence for a Semitic original.)
- Zeitlin, S. "The Assumption of Moses and the Bar Kokhba Revolt," JQR 38 (1947/48) 1–45. (Zeitlin's citations of rabbinic materials and some of his conjectural translations are useful and stimulating.)

THE TESTAMENT OF MOSES

1 1 [The first three lines of text are missing. There was probably some reference to the year of Moses' life when he delivered the farewell speech to Joshua. Cf. Deut 31:2; 34:7.] . . . *which is twenty five hundred years after the creation of the world, •but according to an oriental chronology [. . .] after the departure from Phoenecia.^a •When, after the exodus, which had been led^b by Moses, the people had gone up to Amman across the Jordan, •this is the prophecy which was made by Moses in the book of Deuteronomy.

6 Moses^c called to himself Joshua, the son of Nun, a man approved by the Lord, Deut 31:7 that Joshua might become the minister^d for the people in the tent of testimony which contained all the holy objects, •and that he might lead the people into the land which had been promised to their fathers,^e •(the land) which he, in^f the tent, Deut 31:14f. had declared by covenant and oath that he would give them through the leadership^g of Joshua. •^hThen Moses spoke to Joshua this word, “Go forward with all your strength, that you may do everything which has been commanded in such a way J Josh 1:7 as will cause you no blame in the sight of God. •For this is what the Lord of the world has decreed.^h •He created the world on behalf of his people, •but he did not make this purpose of creation openly known from the beginning of the world so that the nations might be found guilty, indeed that they might abjectly declare themselves guilty by their own (mistaken) discussions (of creation's purpose).
14 “But he did design and devise me, who (was) prepared from the beginning of the world, to be the mediator of his covenant. •Therefore, I shall speak plainly to you. The years of my lifeⁱ have come to an end and, in the presence of the entire community, I am going to sleep with my fathers.^j •But (you) take this writing so that later you will remember how to preserve the books which I shall entrust to 17 you. •You shall arrange them, anoint them with cedar, and deposit them in earthenware jars in the place which (God) has chosen from the beginning of the 18 creation of the world, •(a place) where his name may be called upon until the day of recompense when the Lord will surely have regard for his people.^k

1 2 “[. . .]^a (The people), under your leadership,^b will enter into the land which 2 (God) firmly promised^c to give to their fathers. •In that land,^d you will bless them and give to each of them their individual portions. Further, you shall firmly establish a kingdom for them and, with discernment and justice, you shall appoint local

1 a. Ancient sources give various dates for Moses' death. If the scheme used by TMos were known it might help date the composition of the book, but this is not the case. The reference to an oriental chronology, probably another dating system known to the author, is too broken to be reconstructed.

b. Lit. “given.”

c. Lit. “who.”

d. Lat. “successor.” It has been suggested that Gk. diadochos is underlying; LXX uses that word for chief minister in 1Chr 18:17; 2Chr 26:11; 28:7; and Sir 46:1. The usage is also found in Josephus, Ant 15.10, and frequently in Philo.

e. Lit. “with respect to their tribes.”

f. Lit. “and.”

g. Lit. “by means of.”

h. Lit. “Speaking to Joshua this word, and go forth according to your strength so that you may do all things which have been commanded without blame. It is for this purpose the Lord of the world speaks.”

i. Lit. “the time of the years of my life.”

j. The biblical account of Moses' death (Deut 34:5–8) states that no one witnessed the death. Later Jewish tradition is divided on the matter. Some writings assert that Joshua and Caleb were present while others affirm that Moses did not die at all.

k. Lit. “so that his name may be called upon till the day of recompense (or repentance) with regard to which the Lord will regard them in the consummation of the end of days.” This is a clear attempt to render literally a Semitic original.

2 a. The lacuna, of four to seven letters, is often restored with “and now” or “behold now.”

b. Lit. “through you.”

c. Lit. “he determined and promised.” This is another example of a literal rendering of a Semitic original.

d. Lit. “in which.”

3 magistrates in accordance with the will of the Lord. • Then, (some)^e years after they shall have entered their land, they shall be ruled by leaders and princes for eighteen years. (But during a period) of nineteen years the ten tribes will separate themselves.^f

4 “(During the first-mentioned time) the twelve^g tribes will move the tent of testimony to the place where the God of heaven will build a place for his sanctuary.^h
5 The two holy tribes will be settled there. • But the ten tribes will establish for 6 themselves their own kingdom with its own ordinances.ⁱ • (The two tribes will) 7 offer sacrifices in the chosen place for twenty years.^j • Seven will strongly build the walls, and I will protect nine. (Four), however, will violate the covenant of 8 the Lord and defile the oath which the Lord made with them.^k • They will offer their sons to foreign gods and they will set up idols in the Temple^l that they may 9 worship them. • (Yes), even in the house of the Lord they will perpetrate idolatry^m and carve images of all sorts of animals.

2Kgs 16:3; 21:6
Ezek 16:20; 20:26
Ps 106:34-39
Ezek 8:8-16

1 3 “[. . .] in those days a king against them from the east and (his) cavalry will 2 overrun their land.^a • And with fire he will burn their city^b with the holy Temple 3 of the Lord and he will carry off all the holy vessels. • And he will exile all the people and will lead them to his own land, yea the two tribes he will take with him.

2Chr 36:7
Jer 27:18-22

4 “Then, considering^c themselves like a lioness in a dusty plain, hungry and 5 parched, the two tribes will call upon the ten tribes, • and shall declare loudly, ‘Just and holy is the Lord. For just as you sinned, likewise we, with our little ones,^d 6 have now been led out with you.’ • Then, hearing the reproachful words of the two 7 tribes, the ten tribes will lament • and will say, ‘What shall we, with you, do, 8 brothers? Has not this tribulation come upon the whole house of Israel?’^e • Then 9 all the tribes will lament, crying out to heaven and saying, • ‘God of Abraham, God of Isaac, and God of Jacob, remember your covenant which you made with them, and the oath which you swore to them by yourself, that their seed would never fail from the land which you have given them.’

Gen 22:16-18
Ex 32:13
Heb 6:13-18

10 “Then, in that day, they will remember me, saying from tribe to tribe, even 11 each man to his neighbor, • ‘Is this not that which was made known to us in prophecies by Moses, who suffered many things in Egypt and at the Red Sea and 12 in the wilderness for forty years • (when) he solemnly called heaven and earth as

Acts 7:36-41

e. Although the text reads only “years” there is a space and most commentators insert a specific number, the choices being five, six, or seven, depending on the length of time assumed for the conquest. See Josh 14:10 and Josephus, Ant 5.1.19.

f. References are to the fifteen judges, the three kings of the united monarchy, and the nineteen kings of the northern kingdom.

g. Text “two,” but the historical reference is to a time when the tribes were still united. The error may be due to mention of the two holy tribes later in the vs., or it may be a sectarian rewriting of history, which limited the association of the ark to the two faithful tribes, although this is doubtful.

h. The Lat. “fecit palam scenae suae et ferrum sancturii sui . . .” is hardly translatable. The translation gives the general sense.

i. This vs. is parenthetical as it interrupts the story of the two southern tribes begun in the previous vs. and continued in the following.

j. A reference to the twenty monarchs of the southern kingdom.

k. There are three textual problems in this vs., though only the first is important for interpretation. The verb here translated “protect” indicates a positive attitude toward the second grouping of Judean monarchs, but translated “beset” or “besiege” it would connote a negative attitude. The final number “four” is not in the text but is supplied to bring the total to twenty as in the previous vs. Finally, the Lat. here translated “oath” is finem (“end,” “aim,” or “purpose”). “Oath” is used because of the close connection between “covenant and oath” elsewhere (1:9; 3:9; 11:17; 12:13).

l. Lit. “tent.”

m. Lit. “will act wickedly.”

3 a. The reference is probably to the invasion by Nebuchadnezzar. 1QpHab 3.6–14 offers an interesting parallel.

b. Lit. “colony,” reflecting a date for the translation after A.D. 135, as Jerusalem was made a Roman colony at that time.

c. Lat. ducent se. Perhaps docent should be read, but duco can bear the meaning proposed in the translation.

d. In the text “with our little ones” is in the previous vs., but seems to belong here.

e. It has been suggested that the two tribes blame their present plight on the previous sins of the other ten, but the mention of the sinful acts of the last Judean kings (2:7–9) precludes this interpretation. The fact of mutual exile, in any event, restores the solidarity of the entire community.

witnesses against us that we should not transgress God's^f commandments of which 13 he had become the mediator for us? •These things which have come upon us since that time are according to his admonition declared to us at that time. And (those words) have been confirmed even to our being led as captives in the land of the 14 East.' •And they will be as slaves for about seventy-seven years.^g

Deut 4:26;
30:19; 31:28
Dan 9:13

1 4 "Then one who is over them^a will come upon the scene, and he will stretch
 2 forth his hands, and bow his knees and pray for them, saying, •'Lord of all, king on the lofty throne, you who rules the world, who has willed that this people be for you a chosen people, yea, who has willed to be called their God according to 3 the covenant which you made with their fathers, •yet they, with their wives and children, have gone as captives into a foreign land, surrounded by the gates of 4 strangers where there is great majesty.^b •Have regard for them, and have compassion for them, O heavenly Lord.'

Dan 9:4-19

5 "Then God will remember them because of the covenant which he made with 6 their fathers and he will openly show his compassion. •And in those times he will inspire a king to have pity on them and send them home to their own land.^c

2Chr 36:22-23
Ezra 1:1-4

7 Then some parts of the tribes will arise and come to their appointed place, and 8 they will strongly build its walls.^d •Now, the two tribes will remain steadfast in their former faith, sorrowful and sighing because they will not be able to offer 9 sacrifices to the Lord of their fathers.^e •But the ten tribes will grow and spread out among the nations during the time of their captivity.^f

Neh 2:17;
6:15-16
Ezra 6:6-12

1 5 "•And when the times of exposure come near and punishment arises through
 2 kings who (though) sharing their crimes yet punish them, •then they themselves 3 will be divided as to the truth. •Consequently the word was fulfilled that they will avoid justice and approach iniquity; and they will pollute the house of their worship with the customs of the nations; and they will play the harlot after foreign gods.^b 4 For they will not follow the truth of God, but certain of them will pollute the high altar by [four to six letters are lost] the offerings which they place before the Lord.
 5 They are not (truly) priests (at all), but slaves, yea sons of slaves.^c •For those who are the leaders, their teachers, in those times will become admirers of avaricious persons, accepting (polluted) offerings, and they will sell justice by accepting 6 bribes.^d •Therefore, their city^e and the full extent of their dwelling places^f will be

Deut 31:16

Isa 5:23

f. Lit. "his."

g. According to Jer 25:11-12 and 29:10, the exile was to last seventy years. Dan 9:21 interprets this to mean seventy weeks of years. The background of the number here is unknown, but apocalyptic numerology often defies precise interpretation.

4 a. The "one over them" is usually interpreted as Daniel. This is probable, though Ezra or an angel (see Zech 1:12) have also been suggested.

b. Text maiestas, which is retained here. The emendation to vanitas ("vanity") is often made.

c. Lit. "their own land and region."

d. Lit. "they will build a palisade, restoring the place." This is another clear attempt to render a Semitic original.

e. "Former" is more properly translated "given" but this hardly changes the meaning. The crucial issue is whether the author rejects all sacrifice in the second Temple or deplors the conditions in the second Temple as compared with the First. That the situation in the second Temple was deplored in works of the period is clear, cf. 1En 89:73; 2Bar 68:5-6; and many instances from Qum-ran and in PssSol. The evidence in TMos does not permit a definitive interpretation. That the second Temple was considered inferior to the first is a common theme in both biblical and extrabiblical writings and that TMos asserts more than this is not likely.

f. The Lat. does not make sense and the translation is an educated guess based on several emendations.

5 a. Ch. 5 probably refers to the Hasmonean period (142-63 B.C.). This negative attitude toward the Hasmoneans is also found at Qumran but this need not mean that TMos and the Qumran literature emanate from the same group. Though there are many parallels, these should be attributed to a common situation rather than to a common source.

b. See PssSol 1:8; 2:2; 8:13, 16; etc.; and CD 4.16-18; 5.6-7; etc., for similar examples of sectarian controversy.

c. This charge was made against (John Hyrcanus), Josephus, Ant 13.10.5.

d. Lit. "atonement fees."

e. Lit. "colony."

f. Lit. "bounds of their habitation." This is another clear Semitism.

filled with crimes and iniquities. For they will have in their midst judges who will act with impiety toward the Lord and will judge just as they please.^g

- 1 6 "Then powerful kings will rise over them, and they will be called priests of the 2 Most High God. They will perform great impiety^a in the Holy of Holies. •And a 3 wanton king, who will not be of a priestly family, will follow them. He will be 4 a man rash and perverse, and he will judge them as they deserve. •He will shatter 5 their leaders with the sword, and he will (exterminate them) in secret places^b so 6 that no one will know where their bodies are.^c •He will kill both old and young,
 7 showing mercy to none.^d
 8.6 "Then fear of him will be heaped^e upon them in their land, •and for thirty-four 9 years he will impose judgments upon them as did the Egyptians, and he will punish 10 them. •And he will beget heirs who will reign after him for shorter periods of 11 time.^f •After his death there will come into their land a powerful king of the West
 12 who will subdue them; •and he will take away captives, and a part of their temple 13 he will burn with fire. He will crucify some of them around their city.^g

- 1.2 7 "When this has taken place, the times will quickly come to an end. •[. . .]^a 3 Then will rule destructive and godless men, who represent themselves as being 4 righteous, •but who will (in fact) arouse their inner wrath,^b for they will be deceitful
 5 men, pleasing only themselves, false in every way imaginable, (such as) loving 6 feasts at any hour of the day—devouring, gluttonous.
 7 "[Seven lines of the text are either totally missing or are so broken as to permit
 8 no translation.] •But really they consume the goods of the (poor), saying their acts 9 are according to justice, •(while in fact they are simply) exterminators,^c deceitfully
 10 seeking to conceal themselves so that they will not be known as completely godless 11 because of their criminal deeds (committed) all the day long,^d •saying, 'We shall 12 have feasts, even luxurious winings and dinings. Indeed, we shall behave ourselves
 13 as princes.' •They, with hand and mind, will touch impure things, yet their mouths
 14 will speak enormous things, and they will even say, •'Do not touch me, lest you 15 pollute me in the position I occupy . . .'^e

- 1 8 "And there will come upon them [. . .]^a punishment and wrath such as has 2 never happened to them from the creation till that time when he stirs up against

Dan 12:1
 Mt 24:21
 Ezra 7:12
 Ezek 26:7
 Dan 2:37

g. This vs. contains an obvious lengthy dittography. The translation represents a plausible reconstruction.

6 a. Lit. "making, they will make impiety." A Semitism.

b. The bulk of this ch. (6:2–7) almost certainly reflects the reign of Herod the Great (37–4 B.C.). Precise historical details need not be expected in an apocalyptic writing, but the reference to a reign of thirty-four years (vs. 6) is decisive. See Josephus, Ant 17.8.1.

c. The text of the second half of this vs. is confused. There is a dittography and the main verb has dropped out. The translation is an attempt to paraphrase accurately the difficult Lat. text.

d. Lit. "he will not spare" or "he will not refrain from injury."

e. The Lat. aceruus (acervus?) is often emended to acerbus ("bitter"). The sense of the passage, however, is clear.

f. The text is slightly broken in this vs.

g. Lit. "colony."

7 a. The rest of this vs. and the following are badly broken. Mention is made of "four hours" or "at the fourth hour" which will come, of the "nine tribes," something to do with "three,"

"seven," and "in the third part of two." Though many attempts have been made to restore the lacunae, this seems impossible. We have a stock apocalyptic introduction. The times have passed and the author is convinced that he is living in the last days. The details would, of course, be of philological, historical, and theological interest, but the lacunae are so extensive as to render reconstructions too tenuous to be of value.

b. Lit. "the wrath of their minds."

c. The text here is fragmentary.

d. Lit. "from morning till evening."

e. The whole of this ch. is an attack on the enemies of the author and his party. The identification of the enemies is not certain, although they are wealthy and apparently connected with the Temple. Similar attacks against an avaricious priesthood are found in the Qumran materials, e.g. CD 2.12–20; 6.12–17; 20.20–27; 1QpHab 8.8–13; 11.4–15; 12.1–10; and in the PssSol, especially psalms 1; 2; 4; and 8. One should be cautious in attempting to identify precisely as documents of this type tend to use stereotyped language for both praise and vilification.

8 a. Most of the first line is illegible. Many restore "second" in the illegible portion and then speculate about the "first" punishment. It appears doubtful them a king of the kings of the earth who, having supreme authority, will crucify

 2 those who confess their circumcision. •Even those who deny^b it, he will torture
 3 and hand them over to be led to prison in chains. •And their wives will be given to the gods of the nations^c and their young sons will be cut by physicians to bring 4 forward their foreskins.^d •Still others among them will be punished by torture, both by fire and sword, and they will be compelled to bear publicly (as burdens) 5 idols which are polluted just as those who revere them are polluted. •Likewise, they will be compelled by their torturers to enter into their secret place, where they will be compelled to blaspheme outrageously the word, and finally (to blaspheme) both their laws and what they had placed upon their own altar.^d

1 9 “Then, even as he was speaking,^a there will be a man from the tribe of Levi
 2 whose name is Taxo. He, having seven sons, will speak earnestly to them, •‘See
 (my) sons, behold a second^b punishment has befallen the people; cruel, impure, 3 going beyond all bounds of mercy—even exceeding the former one. •For which nation or which province or which people, who have (all) done many crimes 4 against the Lord,^c have suffered such evils as have covered us? •Now, therefore, sons, heed me. If you investigate, you will surely know^d that never did (our) fathers 5 nor their ancestors tempt God by transgressing his commandments.^e •Yea, you 6 will surely know that this is our strength. Here is what we shall do. •We shall fast for a three-day period and on the fourth day we shall go into a cave,^f which is in the open country. There let us die rather than transgress the commandments 7 of the Lord of Lords, the God of our fathers. •For if we do this, and do die, our blood will be avenged before the Lord.’^g

1 10 “Then his kingdom will appear throughout his whole creation.
 Then the devil will have an end.
 Yea, sorrow will be led away with him.

that the precise historical setting of this ch. can be discovered through any restoration. Similar allusions in other works are also inconclusive. For example, CD 19.11 = 7.21 mentions a “first” or “former” punishment (Heb. pqdh, which probably lies behind the Lat. here), but this has been variously interpreted as an allusion to the fall of Jerusalem in 587 B.C., the Antiochan persecution, the capture of Jerusalem by Pompey in 63 B.C., or to some otherwise unknown historical event. It seems better to assume that the author has put together many past events that he believes are about to be replicated in the end-time. See also the n. on 9:2 below.

b. The verb translated “deny” has been emended from necantes (“to kill or slay”) to negantes as a parallel to confitentes (“confess”), but another emendation would yield the parallelism “conceal and reveal.”

c. The reading, if correct, probably refers to sacred prostitution (cf. 2Mac 6:4). The text is often emended to read “will be violently given to the nations” (cf. 2Mac 5:24). The general sense is the same as slavery might well involve prostitution.

d. The text of these two vss. is very uncertain. The coerced participation of Jews in pagan rites is mentioned in 2Mac 6:7–9.

9 a. The text illo dicente (“even as he was speaking”) is usually emended to illo die (“in that day”), and this may well be correct. The translation adopted here presupposes that ch. 9 is part of an originally independent document and that illo dicente refers to someone not mentioned in the present text.

b. Lat. altera. “Another” is an alternative translation, but in the present form of TMOs the typological use of the fall of Jerusalem as punishing event (3:1–3) weighs in favor of the translation adopted.

c. Lat. domum (“house”). The translation assumes an emendation to dominum.

d. Lit. “look and know.”

e. The assertion of sinlessness seems out of place in the work and may support the view that the ch. had an independent origin. Consistency, however, is not a characteristic of apocalyptic writing.

f. Refuge in caves was common in times of persecution, e.g. 1Mac 1:53; 2:31; 2Mac 6:11; 10:6; Josephus, Ant 12.6.2 and the caves at Qumran. There is a story of a man who took refuge in a cave with his wife and seven sons, slew all of them, and committed suicide rather than submit to Herod (Ant 14.15.5).

g. The function of Taxo’s proposed martyrdom was discussed in the Introduction.

- 2 Then will be filled the hands of the messenger, who is in the highest place appointed.
Yea, he will at once avenge them of their enemies.^a
- 3 For the Heavenly One will arise^b from his kingly throne.
Yea, he will go forth from his holy habitation^c with indignation and wrath on behalf of his sons.
- 4 And the earth will tremble, even to its ends shall it be shaken.
And the high mountains will be made low.
Yea, they will be shaken, as enclosed valleys will they fall.
- 5 The sun will not give light.
And in darkness the horns of the moon will flee.
Yea, they will be broken in pieces.
- It will be turned wholly into blood.
Yea, even the circle of the stars will be thrown into disarray.
- 6 And the sea all the way to the abyss will retire, to the sources of waters which fail.
Yea, the rivers will vanish away.^d
- 7 For God Most High will surge forth, the Eternal One alone.
In full view will he come to work vengeance on the nations.
Yea, all their idols will he destroy.
- 8 Then will you be happy, O Israel!
And you will mount up above the necks and the wings of an eagle.
Yea, all things will be fulfilled.^e
- 9 And God will raise you to the heights.
Yea, he will fix you firmly in the heaven of the stars, in the place of their habitations.^f
- 10 And you will behold from on high.
Yea, you will see your enemies on the earth.^g
- And recognizing them, you will rejoice.
And you will give thanks.
Yea, you will confess your creator.

Micah 1:3
Deut 26:15
Isa 63:15
Jer 25:30

10 a. "Filling the hands" is a technical term for ordination to the priesthood. The messenger, usually identified as Michael, the guardian angel of Israel (see Dan 10:13, 21; 12:1; 1En 20:5; 1QM 9.15-16; 17.6-7), is here more a warrior than a priest. There is an interesting parallel in 11QMelch where Melchizedek, a heavenly priest, works vengeance against Belial. Some late Jewish sources identify Michael and Melchizedek, but there is no evidence for this identification at the time of TMos. "Yea" at the beginning of 10:2b assumes that a Lat. qui (Gk. kai or Semitic Wālw) has been lost in transmission.

b. There are three or four letters missing at the beginning of this line. "Will arise" is a suitable reconstruction.

c. See 1QS 10.2; 1QSb 4.25; 1QM 12.1f.; and 1QH 12.2.

d. The cosmic events described here are common in apocalyptic literature, though the exact formulations often differ. No attempt has been made to emend the text, as Charles did, to bring it into conformity with other documents as this seems to imply a uniformity not implicit in apocalyptic. Further, it does not seem appropriate to cite possible allusions from other writings as the language is too typical to assume verbal dependence.

e. The meaning of this vs. is not clear as it is susceptible of two quite different interpretations. The translation adopted assumes that the author is referring to Israel's exaltation (see the following vs.) being achieved by being borne aloft as by an eagle. Cf. Deut 32:11-13; Isa 40:31; 1En 96:2. However, the reference may be to the extermination of Israel's enemies, in which case the appropriate translation would be, "You will arise upon the 11,12 “But you, Joshua son of Nun, keep these words and this book, •for from my 13 death and burial^h until his coming there will pass 250 times. •And this is the course

14 [three to five letters are lost] timesⁱ which come until they be completed. •However, 15 I shall be asleep with my fathers. •Therefore, you, Joshua son of Nun, be strong; for God has chosen you to be my successor^j in the same covenant.”

1 11 And when Joshua heard the words of Moses, so written in his testament, all 2 the things which he had said, he tore his garments and fell at Moses’ feet. •And 3 Moses, though he wept with him, encouraged him, •and Joshua replied to him, 4 saying, •“Why do you console me,^a master Moses, and in what way may I be 5 consoled concerning that bitter message spoken, which has gone forth from your 6 mouth, a message full of tears and sobbings? Because you are departing from this 5,6 people [five to seven letters are lost] •^bWhat place will receive you •or where 7 will be the marker of your sepulcher? •Or who as a man will dare to move your 8 body from place to place?^b •For all who die, there are appropriately^c their sepulchers in the earth,^d but your sepulcher is from the rising to the setting of the sun, and from the South to the limits of the North, the whole world is your sepulcher.
9,10 “Now, master, you are going away,^e and who will sustain this people? •Or who will have compassion on them, and will be for them a leader on (their) way?
11 Or who will pray for them,^f not omitting a single day, so that I may lead them 12 into the land of their forefathers?^g •How, therefore, can I be (guardian) of this people, as a father is to his only son, or as a mother^h is to her virgin daughter (who) is being prepared to be given to a husband; a mother who is disquieted, guarding (the daughter’s) body from the sun and (seeing to it) that (the daughter’s) 13 feet are not without shoes when she runs upon the ground?ⁱ •[five to seven letters are lost] can I be responsible for food for them as they desire and drink according 14 to their will?^j •[six to eight letters are lost] for there were 100,000^k of them, but 15 they have, by your prayers, increased so much, master Moses. •And what wisdom and intelligence do I have, either to judge or give an opinion in the house [five 16 to seven letters are lost]^l •Moreover, when the kings of the Amorites hear (of your death), believing that there is no longer with us that sacred spirit, worthy of the necks and wings of the eagle, and they will be brought to an end.” One might see then an allusion to Josh 10:24 and 1QM 12.11; 19.3. The alternative is attractive, especially if the allusion is to the eagle of Rome.

f. Whether this is to be interpreted literally or metaphorically remains problematical. Of the many parallels usually cited, the most significant are Dan 12:3; 1En 104:2–7; 2Bar 51:5–12; and 1QM 17.7.

g. Lat. in terram. Charles’s emendation to “in Gehenna” has been widely accepted and the conclusion drawn that TMos thus speaks of a totally extramundane salvation and damnation. The translation here assumes simply an imagistic contrast between the exaltation of Israel and the fall of its enemies. Another alternative is that in terram (Heb. ba’ares) is used in the sense of the lower regions, which would be equivalent to Gehenna. Theology based on emendation and/or imagery is precarious.

h. The word translated “burial” has sometimes been rendered “assumption” and taken to be an interpolation attempting to relate TMos to an AsMos proper. This is unnecessary. See 11:5–6.

i. Lat. horum (“hours or moments”).

j. Lat. successor. See n. on 1:7.

11 a. Lat. celo (“to hide or conceal”). The translation follows the usual emendation to solor (“comfort, console”).

b. The text of vss. 5–7 is difficult and hardly legible in places. Many reconstructions have been proposed. Two attractive ones are: “Who will dare to move your body, as if it were that of a mere man, from place to place?” and “Who will dare to move your body from within the earth from place to place?”

c. Lit. “according to their times.”

d. Perhaps “in their lands.”

e. Lat. ab his. The translation assumes the emendation to abis.

f. LAB 19:3 speaks of Moses’ praying for the sins of the people at all times.

g. Lat. araborum, emended here to atavorum. Some emend to Amorreorum (“Amorites”). The meaning is the same, the reference is to the land of promise.

h. Lat. dominam, “mistress of the house.”

i. The Lat. is virtually untranslatable and many emendations and transpositions have been proposed. The words in parentheses are intended to facilitate an understanding of the general sense of the passage. Joshua is comparing his new role to that of a father who has but one son or to that of a mother who seeks to shield her betrothed daughter from all harm.

j. Lit. “can I, according to their will, be responsible to them for food and drink according to the will of their will.” Something is clearly amiss here.

k. Most emend to “600,000” on the basis of numerous passages in Ex and Num.

l. “Of the Lord” is often restored in the lacuna.

Lord, manifold and incomprehensible, master of leaders,^m faithful in all things, the divine prophet for the whole earth, the perfect teacher in the world, now 17 believing that they can storm us, they will say,ⁿ 'Let us go up against them. •If the enemies have, up till now, but a single time, acted impiously against their Lord, there is (now) no advocate for them who will bear messages to the Lord on their behalf in the way that Moses was the great messenger. He, in every hour both day and night, had his knees fixed to the earth, praying and looking steadfastly toward him who governs the whole earth with mercy and justice, reminding the 18 Lord of the ancestral covenant and the resolute oath.'^o •Thus they will say, 'He is no longer with them. Therefore, let us go up and crush^p them from the face of 19 the earth.' •What, then, will happen to these people, master Moses?'

1 12 And when he had finished (speaking these) words, Joshua again fell at the feet
 2 of Moses. •And Moses grasped his hand and raised him into the seat before him,
 3 and responding to him, he said, •“Joshua, do not demean (yourself), but free
 4 yourself from care and pay attention to my words. •God has created all the nations which are in the world (just as he created) us. And he has foreseen both them and us from the beginning of the creation of the world even to the end of the age.
 Indeed, nothing, to the least thing, has been overlooked by him. But, (rather), he 5 has seen all things and ^ahe is the cause of all.^a •[. . .]^b has seen beforehand all things which may come to be in the world, and, behold, they have come to pass 6 [twelve to eighteen letters are lost] •established me for them, and for their sins [eleven to seventeen letters are lost] and [four to seven letters are lost] on their 7 behalf.^c •Yet (this is) not on account of either my strength or weakness,^d (it is) 8 simply that his mercies and long-suffering have lighted on me. •Likewise, I say to you, Joshua, that it is not on account of the piety of this people that you will 9 drive out the nations.^e •All of the supports of the canopy of heaven, created and 10 declared good by God, are indeed under the ring^f of his right hand. •Therefore, those who truly fulfill^g the commandments of God ^hwill flourish and will finish^h 11 the good way, •but those who sin by disregarding the commandments will deprive themselves of the good thingsⁱ which were declared before. They, indeed, will be 12 punished by the nations with many tortures. •But it is not possible for the nations 13 to drive them out or extinguish them completely. •For God, who has foreseen all things in the world,^j will go forth, and his covenant which was established, and by the oath which . . .’ [MS ends.]

Deut 31:3-8

m. Lit. “master of the word.” This may well be correct. The translation here assumes that the Heb. consonants abr were read by the Gk. translator as “word” but that the intention of the Heb. was “leader,” a possible though less used rendering.

n. This vs. is a curious mixture of both dittography and omissions.

o. Lit. “and propitiating the Lord with an oath.”

p. Lit. “throw them into disorder.” The translation follows the usual emendation of confundamus to contundamus. It is not likely that the two verbs would connote any difference to an apocalyptic writer.

12 a. These words are conjectural. The verb in the clause must be emended and six to eight letters are illegible. The sense is clear; God is in control from beginning to end.

b. Traces of letters in this lacuna support the restoration of dominus (“the Lord”).

c. The text is too broken to allow reconstruction. The sense of the vs. might be “It is the Lord who has established me as a mediator for them, that I might pray unceasingly for their sins and make intercession on their behalf.”

d. The Semitic idiom underlying this would mean “not by me or in any way at all.”

e. Cf. CD 8.14.

f. Lat., nullo (“by nothing”). The translation adopts an emendation to anulo (“ring”).

g. Lit. “those who do and fulfill.” Another literal rendering of a Semitic original.

h. Lit. “flourish and finish.” The shift of tenses is not otherwise unknown in the text.

i. The grammar and syntax here are difficult. A literal rendering would be “to those who sin and neglect the commandments to be absent from the good.”

j. Or “forever.”

TESTAMENT OF SOLOMON

(First to Third Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY D. C. DULING

The Testament of Solomon is a haggadic-type folktale about Solomon's building the Temple of Jerusalem combined with ancient lore about magic, astrology, angelology, demonology, and primitive medicine. According to the majority of manuscripts, the testament begins with the story of Solomon's favorite, a boy who inspires the artisans of the Temple, but whose soul is being sucked out of him by a pesky demon, Orniat. In response to Solomon's prayer to God for aid, the archangel Michael grants Solomon a magic seal ring by which he is able to call up the demons, to interrogate them as to their names, astrological locations, demonic activities (pains, diseases, immoral deeds), to compel them to reveal their thwarting angels, and to enlist their help with the construction of the Temple. Thus, Solomon learns that the pesky demon is named Orniat, is located in Aquarius, can undergo several transformations (strangler of those who are located under Aquarius; a man who craves bodies of effeminate boys; a heavenly, winged creature), and is thwarted by the archangel Ouriel. With Ouriel's help, Orniat is sentenced to cut stone in the stone quarry and, with the aid of the ring, to go and get Beelzeboul, the Prince of Demons (chs. 1–3). Beelzeboul is interrogated and promises to bring forth the unclean spirits bound. Beelzeboul shows Solomon Onoskelis, a cliff-dwelling satyra, who associates with men and travels by the full moon; she is commanded to spin hemp for construction ropes (ch. 4). Beelzeboul brings forth the impertinent Asmodeus, who is the Great Bear constellation, who spreads the wickedness of men, hatches plots against newlyweds, spreads madness about women through the stars, and commits murders; Solomon learns that Asmodeus is thwarted by the angel Raphael and smoke from a burning liver and gall of a fish (ch. 5). Solomon learns that Beelzeboul is a fallen angel who destroys by means of tyrants, causes demons to be worshiped, arouses desires in holy men, brings about jealousies and murders, and instigates wars. Beelzeboul prophesies about the Arabian wind demon Ephippas (chs. 22–24), tells that he is thwarted by the Almighty God and the oath "the Elo-i," and informs Solomon about heavenly things; he is commanded to cut marble (ch. 6). Solomon interrogates the wind demon Lix Tetrax, learns that he creates divisions among men, makes whirlwinds, starts fires, disrupts households, is the offspring of the Great One, has a star near the tip of the southern moon, and is thwarted by the archangel Azael; he is commanded to hurl stones up to the heights of the Temple for the workmen (ch. 7).

Solomon interrogates the seven heavenly bodies (Deception, Strife, Fate, Distress, Error, Power, The Worst), learns of their evil activities and their thwarting angels (respectively, Lamechiel, Baruchiel, Marmaroth, Balthioul, Ouriel, Asteroth, [name unknown]), seals them with the ring, and commands them to dig the Temple foundation (ch. 8). Solomon interrogates the headless demon called Murder, who sees through his breasts, attacks the voices of infants, cuts off heads, attaches them to himself and consumes them through his neck, inflames limbs, inflicts feet, and produces festering sores; he is ordered to stay with Beelzeboul (ch. 9). Solomon interrogates the doglike demon, Scepter, who deceives those who follow his star and subdues the hearts of men through their throats; Scepter then helps Solomon to obtain an emerald stone for the Temple; Solomon learns that the demon is thwarted by the great Briathos (ch. 10). Solomon interrogates the Lion-Shaped Demon, who prolongs illness and rules a legion of demons; they are thwarted by Emmanouel, who will drive them over the cliff into the water; the legion is commanded to carry wood and the Lion-Shaped One is made to saw it with his claws and to fuel the perpetually burning kiln (ch. 11). Solomon interrogates the three-headed dragon spirit, Head of the Dragons, and learns that he blinds fetuses and makes them deaf and dumb, and causes men to fall down and grind their teeth; he is thwarted by the place marked "Place of the Skull" and the angel of the Wonderful Counselor on the cross; after revealing a treasure of gold in the Temple, he is sealed and ordered to make bricks for the Temple (ch. 12).

Solomon interrogates Obyzouth, the female demon with disheveled hair, who strangles newborn infants at birth, injures eyes, condemns mouths, destroys minds, and creates pain; learning that she is thwarted by the angel Raphael, or writing her name on a piece of papyrus when women give birth, Solomon binds her by the hair and hangs her in front of the Temple (ch. 13). Solomon interrogates the Winged Dragon, who copulates through the buttocks of women who have beautiful bodies and who suddenly sets on fire with his breath wood for constructing the Temple. Learning that the demon is thwarted by Bazazath, Solomon invokes the angel and condemns the demon to cut marble for constructing the Temple (ch. 14). Solomon interrogates Enepsigos, the female demon with two heads, learns that she hovers near the moon, can also take the form of Kronos or another form, and that she is thwarted by the angel Rathanael; Solomon prays to God, invokes Rathanael, seals Enepsigos with a triple-link chain, and after she prophesies the destruction of kingdom, Temple, and Jerusalem, the scattering of the demons, and the coming of the Son of God, Emmanouel, who is crucified on a cross and born of a virgin, Solomon explains that he wrote the testament so that the sons of Israel might know the powers and forms of the demons and their thwarting angels (ch. 15). Solomon interrogates Kunopegos, the cruel sea-horse demon who becomes a great wave that causes ships to capsize, drowns men, and causes seasickness; learning that he is thwarted by the angel lameth, Kunopegos is sealed in a bowl and stored away in the Temple (ch. 16). Solomon interrogates a lecherous spirit born from a giant in the age of giants, a spirit who has the shadowy form of a man and gleaming eyes; at midnight in the tombs the demon slays men with a sword or possesses a man, causing him to gnaw his own flesh; learning that the demon will be thwarted by the Savior or his mark written on the forehead (the sign of the cross), Solomon locks up the demon (ch. 17). Solomon interrogates the thirty-six heavenly bodies who are divisions (decans) of the Zodiac; he learns their names, the mental, physical, and social illnesses they cause, their thwarting angels, and orders them to bear water and to go to the Temple (ch. 18).

Riches are given to Solomon by all the kings of the earth, including Sheeba, the Queen of the South, who is a witch (ch. 19). Solomon hears the conflict between an old man and his son; Ornias the demon prophesies that the son will die and Solomon compels him to explain how he knows God's plan for the future; Ornias tells that demons in the heavens overhear God's decisions and that falling stars are really demons who are exhausted because they have no way stations on which to rest; Ornias's prophecy is fulfilled (ch. 20). Sheeba, impressed with the new Temple, contributes ten thousand shekels (ch. 21).

A letter from Adarkes, king of Arabia, requests Solomon's help against the wind demon Ehippas, which kills man and beast; when the gigantic cornerstone of the Temple cannot be moved by the artisans or demons, Solomon dispatches his servant boy to Arabia, where the boy entraps the wind demon in a leather flask by the aid of the ring; the boy brings the demon to the Temple, where he is interrogated by Solomon, who learns that his thwarting angel is the one who will be born of a virgin and crucified by the Jews (ch. 22). Solomon learns that the wind demon has great powers and requests that he put the cornerstone in place; the demon agrees and states that, with the aid of the demon who lives in the Red Sea, he will lift up the pillar of air which is in the Red Sea and place it where Solomon wishes; the cornerstone is inserted in place by the wind demon, fulfilling the keystone prophecy (Ps 118:22; ch. 23). The Arabian demon Ehippas and the demon of the Red Sea bring back the pillar from the Red Sea and continue to hold it in the air to this very day (ch. 24). Solomon interrogates the demon from the Red Sea, learns that his name is Abezethibou, that he was the one whom Iannes and Iambres called to their aid against Moses in Egypt, that he hardened Pharaoh's heart and caused the pursuit of the sons of Israel to the Red Sea, where, with the company of the Egyptians, he was trapped when the waters receded; Solomon adjures him to continue holding up the pillar (ch. 25). Solomon falls madly in love with a beautiful Shummanite woman; to have her, he sacrifices five locusts to the foreign gods Raphan and Moloch, and takes her to his palace; the glory of God departs from Solomon after he builds temples to her idols; to those who hear he writes his testament (ch. 26).

Texts

The standard edition of the Greek text of the Testament of Solomon, introduced and edited by C. C. McCown, comments on fourteen Greek manuscripts.¹ Another Greek manuscript² and a fragment³ are known. A description of seven manuscripts in order of importance, according to McCown, is as follows:⁴

1. D: Dionysius monastery, Mount Athos, No. 132, folios 367 (recto)–374 (verso), sixteenth century, entitled peri tou Solomontos (“About Solomon”). The text of this manuscript was published in V. M. Istrin’s Griecheskii spiski zabesania Solomona (“Greek Manuscripts of the Testament of Solomon”) (Odessa, 1898) and in Lietopis istoriko-philologetscheskago Obchestva VII (Byzantine Division IV; Odessa, 1899; pp. 49–98; contains also MSS I and Q). McCown collated the manuscript from photographs from which the title is missing; the pages are deleted by transverse lines; it is carefully written and well preserved. The manuscript is not really the testament, but a biography of Solomon characterized by a strong demonological interest. McCown believed that it was a revision of the story (d) which lay behind the testament and printed it separately.⁵ It includes David’s sin with Bathsheba (1:1–3); God’s inability to stop David (1:4–6); Nathan’s reproof of David (1:7–11); Solomon’s birth, reign, power, and wisdom (1:12f.); the building of the Temple (2:1); Solomon’s favorite servant (2:2); Solomon’s prayer about the matter (2:3); Solomon’s interrogation of the servant (2:3f.); Solomon’s supplication for him (2:5); the granting of the magic ring (2:6f.); Solomon’s gift of the ring to the servant (2:8f.); the capture of Ornias the demon (2:10–13); Solomon’s interrogation of Ornias (3:1–4); treatment of the demons (3:5–9); dispute of father and son and Ornias’s prophecy (4:1–18); the admiration of the Temple by the “Queen of the South” and others (5:1); the king of Arabia’s letter to Solomon (6:1f.);

¹ C. C. McCown, ed., The Testament of Solomon, pp. 10–28 of the Introduction (p. numbers of the Introduction have no asterisk; those of the Gk. text and apparatus do), describes eleven texts in the order of their importance to him (MSS D, H, I, L, P, Q, S, T, U, V, W) and lists a twelfth from Mt. Athos (No. 3221), which he was not able to obtain and which apparently has never been studied. To these twelve MSS should be added two others which McCown discovered too late to be evaluated in their proper order. The first (MS N) is described and its variants listed separately as an appendix to the Introduction, pp. 112–23; it is included in the list of most important MSS here (see n. 9). The other (MS E) is described by McCown separately (pp. 123–26), but because it is not the full testament, it is printed separately (pp. 102–20*; the same is the case for MS D, pp. 88–97*). Apart from MSS D, E, and N, the MSS are collated and printed as an eclectic text with three recs.: A (MSS H I L), B (MSS P Q), and C (MSS S T U V W). Furthermore, parts of rec. C (TSol 1:1–5; 9:8–13:15) have such unique material that they are also printed separately (pp. 76–87*). All three recs. are distinguished in the opening VSS. Where McCown favors rec. B over what he considered the best rec. overall, rec. A. [The introduction to TSol is longer than usual because of the complexity of the issues involved and the relative unfamiliarity of the document itself. —J.H.C.]

² Bibliothèque Nationale No. 2011, printed in a collection of Solomonian texts, A. Delatte, Anecdota Atheniensia 36 (1927) 211–27. This is an 18th-cent. MS, 17.4 × 11.5 CCS. It is not the full testament but a shortened form like MSS D and E. Briefly, its contents include a narrative of David’s sin, Nathan’s rebuke, and the birth and glories of Solomon; Solomon’s favorite boy and the story of the boy; the gift of the ring through Michael; the capture of Ornias by the boy with the ring; Solomon’s interrogation of Ornias; fetching of Beelzeboul by the boy and Ornias; interrogation of Beelzeboul, thwarted by Raphael; the story of the old man and his son interspersed with material about Ornias and Michael; Sheeba (Sibulla); the letter of the king of Arabia; fetching of Ehippas by the boy; interrogation of Ehippas; the cornerstone account; a parenthetical remark about Jesus; bringing of the pillar by the boy with the seal and Ehippas; Solomon’s learning about the chief Satan, Chathrou Samael; the fetching of the demon and his corps by the boy and Ornias; observation of the demons at work on the Temple; interrogation of Chathrou Samael, thwarted by the Savior of the world, the Son and Word of God; rebuke of Samael, who is commanded to work on the Temple; account of the kings of the earth who are impressed by the Temple and Solomon’s power; glories of the Temple; parenthetical remark about John of Damascus and the Church; parenthetical remark about Christ, the disciples, and the Temple; Jeremiah and the Temple; the destruction of the Temple by the Chaldeans; Christian conclusion and note about the boy, whose name is Chiram.

³ K. Preisendanz, “Ein Wiener Papyrusfragment zum Testamentum Salomonis,” EOS 48 (1956) 161–67. Note also J. H. Charlesworth’s discovery of, and brief description of, a Syriac MS (see Bibliography).

⁴ McCown, Testament, pp. 10–28; see n. 9 below on MS N.

⁵ McCown, Testament, pp. 32–36.

Solomon's instructions to his servant on how to trap the Arabian wind demon Ephippas (6:3–5); the servant's entrapment of the demon and return of him to Solomon (6:6–8); Ephippas's placement of the keystone (6:9–11); Ephippas, Abezethibou, and the air pillar (6:12–14); Solomon and the demon prince, Samael (7:1–6); the glory and wisdom of Solomon (8:1–7).⁶

2. H: private library of the Earl of Leicester, Holkham Hall, Norfolk, England, No. 99. This sixty-eight-page manuscript from the fifteenth century, perhaps from Greece, measuring 16 × 21.5 centimeters per folio page, is entitled diēgēsis peri tēs diathēkēs Solomōntos . . . (“An Account Concerning the Testament of Solomon . . .”). It is clear, has many abbreviations, and places rubrics before the chief divisions of the story. Its title and the initial letters of lesser sections are in red. It omits 14:3–16:1 (cf. MS L). Except for 26:8–10, its text is usually abbreviated.

3. I: Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, Supplément grec, No. 500. This manuscript is from the sixteenth century and measures 16 × 22 centimeters. The testament is found on folios 78–82. Its title begins Solomōntos . . . ([“concerning] Solomon”), with diathēkē t (“Testament of [f]”) carelessly written in the upper margin (see TSol 1:00, n. c). The manuscript is well preserved. It was published by Istrin (see MS D, above). The Testament of Solomon follows Ecclesiastes and Song of Songs in the codex. The copyist seems to have wearied of the many demons, for he broke off in the middle of a sentence in the middle of a column at 5:8.

4. L: Harleian MSS, British Museum, No. 5596. This fifteenth-century manuscript measures 23 × 34 centimeters and has a catalog description “Geomantica, exorcismi, divinationes et huius modi” (“Geomantics, exorcisms, divinations and things of this sort”) with the addition “quaedam Salominis” (“certain things of Solomon”). It is well preserved. Folios 8 (recto) to 18 (recto) of manuscript 5596 contain the incomplete testament, omitting 14:3–16:1 (cf. MS H) and ending at 18:41. Other portions of the manuscript make up “MS T”⁷ because they represent for McCown recension C rather than A in which manuscript H falls. The testament has been worked over by a medieval magician who included magical, astrological, and demonological lore. The largest section of the manuscript is the Clavicula Salomonis, probably the best-known medieval Solomonic document.⁸ Titles to sections in the Clavicula, a large circular seal containing magical signs, and the numbers of “MS T”^d are painted with silver over red. Places that direct one to a magical remedy for disease are marked with a cross and a circle.

5. N: Library of the Greek Patriarchate, Jerusalem, Sancti Saba, No. 422. This is a fifteenth- or sixteenth-century manuscript measuring 11 × 15 centimeters. The beginning and end of the codex are missing. The testament begins on folio 49 and ends on folio 93, though its first page is missing, causing it to go unnoticed until McCown rediscovered it in 1920–21. Too late to be collated with the others, McCown described it and printed its variant readings separately as an appendix, pp. 112–23.⁹ The manuscript often makes no sense, but it is virtually complete and McCown judged it closer to the original form of the testament than manuscript P (rec. B), to which it is most similar. It is the only other manuscript besides manuscript P to contain Testament of Solomon 14:3–16:1, the latter part of which incorporates the testament's most Christian comment (TSol 15:10–12) and a separate explanation as to why the testament was written (TSol 15:13–15; cf. 26:7f.). Yet, near the end of the testament, manuscript N supports manuscript H (rec. A) enough that McCown, who had come to have more confidence in recension B and to print it at that point, was willing to revise his judgment back in favor of recension A (cf. TSol 26:8, n. f). Finally, it should be noted that manuscript N equates each of the thirty-six decans in chapter 18 with ten days of the Coptic month. This equation relates manuscript N to Egypt.

⁶ McCown, Testament, pp. 88–97.* The two other shorter versions of the testament are MS E, which McCown discovered too late to collate with MS D (McCown, Testament, pp. 123–26; 102–20*), and Delatte's Bibliothèque Nationale No. 2011 (summarized in n. 2 above).

⁷ Three fragments from this MS are designated by McCown as T^a, T^b, and T^c since they are separate fragments and belong to his rec. C. They make up his eighth “MS.”

⁸ See below, “Cultural importance.”

⁹ MS N is not included among McCown's eleven MSS in this order (see n. 1), but he writes that “It is certainly much nearer the original than P . . .” in most instances (McCown, Testament, p. 113). Therefore, I have placed MS N before MSS P and Q.

6. P: Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, Anciens fonds grecs, No. 38 (Colbert 4895). This sixteenth-century manuscript has twenty-four folios and measures 15.5 × 20.5 centimeters. Its title begins diathēkē Solomōntos (for the full title, see TSol 1:00). The manuscript, which belonged to the library of M. le President de Mesmes (died 1596), is carefully written and worked over by an editor. It is cataloged as “no. 38 olim Colbert.” Though known and occasionally cited by scholars in the seventeenth century, it was first printed by F. F. Fleck in Wissenschaftliche Reise durch das südliche Deutschland, Italien, Sicilien und Frankreich 2/3, Anecdota maximam partem sacra (Leipzig, 1837, pp. 113–40). This text of the testament became the standard work until Istrin (see above, MS D); but Istrin’s work was in Russian and not easily accessible in the West. The Fleck text of manuscript P was reprinted by J. Fürst, Der Orient 5 (1844) and 7 (1846), with a German translation, and in Literaturblatt editions; but it was incomplete. It was also reprinted in the standard collection of early Christian writings in Greek (cf. J. P. Migne, Patrologia graeca, vol. 122 [Paris, 1864], cols. 1315–58). McCown wrote that “Fleck rather inaccurately copied the editio princeps from MS P, mistaking many letters, and so causing himself and those who have had to depend upon his edition much difficulty.”¹⁰ Yet, the only English translation to date is based on the Fleck edition (cf. F. C. Conybeare, JQR 11 [1898] 1–45). To facilitate comparison with Conybeare’s translation of Fleck, the present translation attempts to follow, where possible, Conybeare’s paragraph divisions and places his paragraph division numbers in parentheses in the margin. There is also an English paraphrase of the testament in L. Ginzberg’s The Legends of the Jews (trans. H. Szold; 7 vols. [Philadelphia, 1913] vol. 4, pp. 150–54). F. A. Bornemann (Zeitschrift für die historische Theologie 14 [1844] 9–56) translated Fleck’s edition into German.

7. Q: Andreas Convent, Mount Athos, No. 73. This represents folios 11–15 of the materials published by Istrin (see above, MS D), who bracketed many letters and omitted sections, indicating to McCown many lacunae. Testament of Solomon 3:1–20:9 is missing.

It is important to understand why these manuscripts are given in this particular order.¹¹ The first manuscript, D, is not the testament but, according to McCown, a revision of the story (d) which lay behind the testament. For that reason, it is not translated below; rather, the base text is McCown’s eclectic text, which is an attempt to reconstruct the Testament of Solomon which lay behind recensions A (MSS HIL) and B (MSS PQ, to which note must be taken of N). Hence, manuscripts HIL, or recension A, come next, followed by NPQ, or recension B. McCown described five other manuscripts or parts thereof (MSS STUVW) which he called recension C. Mount Athos 3221 (not obtained) and manuscript E (McCown, pp. 123–26; 102–20*) account for the other two manuscripts.

Original language

In 1896, Moses Gaster, on the basis of what he considered to be a misunderstanding of a Hebrew term, argued that the testament (the Fleck edition of MS P) was a translation from the Hebrew.¹² McCown, skeptical of an argument based on a single instance from what he, in his day, knew to be a single manuscript among several, turned up two more possibilities,¹³ one in an important passage of Egyptian origin.¹⁴ However, though it is possible that the testament has Semitic language materials behind it, or its sources, these meager instances cannot support the hypothesis that it is a translation document. McCown’s conclusion still stands: the native language of the writer of the Testament of Solomon as a testament was Koine Greek, the commonly spoken Greek of the hellenistic era, and thus of the New Testament.¹⁵ It is no surprise that in most respects the language and style of the testament are similar to that of the Greek New Testament.¹⁶

¹⁰ McCown, Testament, p. 28.

¹¹ See n. 1, and TSol, Title, n. a.

¹² See M. Gaster, “The Sword of Moses,” JRAS (1896) 155, 170; reprinted in Studies and Texts in Folklore, Magic, Medieval Romance, Hebrew Apocrypha, and Samaritan Archeology, 3 vols. (New York 1928; repr. 1971) vol. 1, pp. 294, 309.

¹³ McCown, Testament, pp. 42f.; TSol 2:4; 18:24–40.

¹⁴ E.g. Rhyx (-ruah, “Spirit”), TSol 18:24–40.

¹⁵ McCown, Testament, p. 43, and scholars since him.

¹⁶ Ibid., p. 40. With respect to recs. A and B, McCown suggests the grammar probably points to the period subsequent to the NT. Readers of the Gk. NT will find many terms of the NT on every page.

Date

The story of the Testament of Solomon purports to take place during the reign of Solomon in the tenth century B.C. Nonetheless, there is no doubt that it comes from much later times, not only because of its language, but because it presupposes events, some in the form of prophecies, which took place in the first century A.D., and because in general it assumes thought forms generally accepted as having arisen in hellenistic times.¹⁷ Nonetheless, because explicit references to historical events, apart from the story line and prophecy, are lacking, opinions about its date have varied. In the preface to the testament in Migne's patrology (1864), F. F. Fleck argued that the writing (again, MS P) was a Byzantine work from the Middle Ages;¹⁸ the Russian Istrin, who discovered manuscript D and first argued in 1898 that it was the basis for the testament, thought that the latter was written about A.D. 1200.¹⁹ In 1844, the German F. A. Bornemann moved the date back to the early fourth century, because he believed that its demonology resembled Lactantius' "Institutiones,"²⁰ and in 1907 this view was echoed by C. H. Toy in the Jewish Encyclopedia.²¹ Meanwhile, A. Harnack, though he would not fix a date, thought it might not be in the earliest period,²² while E. Schürer left the date open.²³

In 1898, F. C. Conybeare, in the preface to his English translation of the testament (MS P), noted that it was quoted as one of Solomon's authentic writings in the Greek Dialogue of Timothy and Aquila. The Dialogue, a Christian document from about A.D. 400, was thought by Conybeare to go back to an earlier dialogue from the middle of the second century.²⁴ During the course of the Dialogue, the Christian applies Psalm 2:7 ("You are my son, today I have become your father") to Jesus as Messiah. The Jew, however, says the passage refers to Solomon and adds 2 Samuel 7:14 ("I will be a father to him and he a son to me") as further proof. The Christian responds, with reference to 1 Kings 11:3-6, that the promise to David's son was conditional on Solomon's walking in the Lord's ways as David did; but Solomon did not keep God's commandments. He sacrificed locusts to idols. The dialogue continues:

The Jew responded, "Not sacrificed [esphaxen, "split the throat"], but unwillingly crushed [ethlasen] in his hand. The Book of Kings does not encompass these things, but it is written in his Testament."

The Christian said, "On this I take my stand with confidence, because this was not made clear by the hand of a historian, but out of the mouth of Solomon himself."²⁵

This reference unambiguously refers to the Testament of Solomon (cf. TSol 26:5). Conybeare went on to propose that the testament was a Christian revision of a Jewish document, the original form of which might well have been "the very collection of incantations which, according to Josephus, was composed and bequeathed by Solomon,"²⁶ that is, in one form it goes back at least to the late first century A.D. Conybeare also suggested that certain Christian additions to this originally Jewish document sounded very "archaic" and "seem to belong to about 100 A.D.,"²⁷ that the section about the thirty-six heavenly bodies (TSol 18) shared a common demonology with the apostle Paul, and that its faith had an analogue in that of the Essenes, a Jewish sect described by Josephus (Wars 2.142).²⁸ K. Kohler

¹⁷ See the discussion below.

¹⁸ F. F. Fleck in Migne, PG, vol. 122, p. 1315.

¹⁹ Istrin, Griecheski spiski zabesania Solomona (Odessa, 1898) pp. 18f.

²⁰ F. A. Bornemann, Zeitschrift für die historische Theologie 14 (Leipzig, 1844) Introduction.

²¹ C. H. Toy, "Solomon, Testament of," The Jewish Encyclopedia, ed. I. Singer (New York, 1901-6) vol. 11, p. 449.

²² A. Harnack, Geschichte der altchristlichen Literatur bis Eusebius (Leipzig, 1893) vol. 1, p. 858.

²³ E. Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi (Leipzig, 1901-9) vol. 3, p. 419.

²⁴ F. C. Conybeare, "The Testament of Solomon," JQR 11 (1898) 14.

²⁵ F. C. Conybeare, ed., The Dialogues of Athanasius and Zachaeus and of Timothy and Aquila. Anecdota Oxoniensia (Classical Series, Part 8; Oxford, 1898) p. 70. C. C. McCown, "The Christian Tradition as to the Magical Wisdom of Solomon," JPOS 2 (1922) 15, states, "The writer of the Dialogue claims a greater trustworthiness for the Testament than for the Book of Kings."

²⁶ Conybeare, JQR 11 (1898) 12.

²⁷ Ibid.

²⁸ Ibid., p. 8.

accepted Conybeare's results in the Jewish Encyclopedia (1907),²⁹ and so did G. Salzberger in his extensive study of the whole Solomon legend in Semitic literature.³⁰

In his ground-breaking critical edition of the testament (1922), McCown suggested that the latest possible date, on the basis of the Dialogue of Timothy and Aquila, was about A.D. 400. In some respects, he agreed with Conybeare, for he stated that if one removed the Christian and pagan elements, "the Test comes to be of assistance in reconstructing the thought world of the Palestinian Jew in the first century of our era . . ." ³¹ He even pointed to a number of ideas which he thought represented first-century Judaism.³² Yet, in contrast to Conybeare, McCown stressed the view that the testament as a testament was a Christian work (i.e. not simply a Jewish work edited by a Christian) from the early third century A.D. Building on Istrin's hypothesis that manuscript D was closer to the original form of the document which later became the testament, McCown suggested that originally there existed a collection of first-century Jewish Midrashim, or interpretative stories, about Solomon and the demons. These came from Palestine, perhaps Galilee.³³ They formed a more connected story (the hypothetical d), a revision of which is preserved in manuscript D, which was transcribed by an educated Greek from Byzantine times.³⁴ From d, an early third-century Christian—his demonology is like that found in Origen's Against Celsus—removed the episodes about David's sin and Nathan's inability to warn David on account of the devil; he added demonologic, astrological, and magical material, concluding with Solomon's demise. This work our Christian author called a "testament"³⁵; it is best represented by recension A (MSS HIL). Then, another Christian from the fourth or fifth century added especially demonologic, but also gnostic, cabalistic, and Christian elements;³⁶ these can be seen in recension B (MSS PQ, along with N, collated separately).³⁷ Recension B, which is better at the beginning and end of the testament, is to be compared with recension A to arrive at the autograph.³⁸ Finally, a Christian of the Middle Ages, perhaps in the twelfth or thirteenth century, added magical formulas, gnostic-sounding terms, and a number of medieval ideas to make recension C.³⁹ To McCown, it was inconceivable that any one should take the Test as found in Recs. A, B, or C, and, by eliminating all the magico-medical element and the "testament" motif, reduce it to the simple tale of Solomon's birth and greatness, his temple building with demons, which appears in MS D.⁴⁰

In 1922, M. R. James found McCown's theory of the evolution of the testament "plausible, but not wholly convincing,"⁴¹ and raised the question whether such a reduction to the simple tale might not have taken place, just as the author of the "Greek Legend of Isaiah" pruned the Ascension of Isaiah; nonetheless, James went on to accept McCown's early third-century dating of the testament itself, as have most other scholars since McCown, notably A.-M. Denis.⁴² An exception to this trend, however, is the recognized authority on the magical papyri, K. Preisendanz, who suggested that the original was from the first or second century

²⁹ K. Kohler, "Demonology," The Jewish Encyclopedia, vol. 4, p. 578.

³⁰ G. Salzberger, Die Salomosage in der semitischen Literatur (Berlin, 1907) p. 10.

³¹ McCown, Testament, p. 3.

³² Ibid., pp. 59–62.

³³ Ibid., pp. 85, 108.

³⁴ Ibid., pp. 35, 86. The contents of d, he suggested, consisted of that which is common to MS D and the testament, e.g. essentially TSol 1–2, 20, 22–24.

³⁵ TSol 15:13–15 from a redactional critical perspective sounds like an ending; McCown, Testament, p. 83, suggests that it is "probably the work of the B redacteur," noting that the term "testament" occurs in TSol 15:14 and in 26:8, the latter reference being also probably a Christian addition.

³⁶ McCown, Testament, p. 89, argued that there was too much Christian material in the testament to be Jewish and that Josephus the Jew would not have referred to a Christian document. The argument is, of course, circular.

³⁷ Ibid., pp. 35, 82f.

³⁸ McCown modified his distrust of rec. A at the end of TSol in the light of his discovery of MS N; see above, "Texts" (N) and note 1; Textual Emendations; TSol 26:8, n. f.

³⁹ McCown, Testament, pp. 83f., 100, 108.

⁴⁰ Ibid., p. 32.

⁴¹ M. R. James, "The Testament of Solomon (Review)," JTS 24 (1922) 468.

⁴² A.-M. Denis, Introduction, p. 67. Denis and M. de Jonge ("The Greek Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament," NovT 7 [1965] 322) judge the testament "too late to be included in our collection."

A.D.⁴³ Whether one follows McCown's early third-century dating or Preisendanz's earlier one, there is general agreement that much of the testament reflects first-century Judaism in Palestine.

Before concluding a discussion of the testament's date, one unexpected and interesting datum should be mentioned. In 1945, Coptic translations of fifty-one tractates, mostly gnostic, were discovered in southern Egypt in the vicinity of Nag Hammadi. Four of the tractates mention Solomon,⁴⁴ and one of them, "On the Origin of the World," mentions "the Book of Solomon." The context of this reference deals with "Death," begotten by the First Father of Chaos, Ialdabaoth, and set up over the sixth heaven. The passage continues:

Then since Death was androgynous, he mixed with his nature and begot seven androgynous sons. These are the names of the males: Jealousy, Wrath, Weeping, Sighing, Mourning, Lamenting, Tearful Groaning. And these are the names of the females: Wrath, Grief, Lust, Sighing, Cursing, Bitterness, Quarrelsomeness. They had intercourse with one another, and each one begot seven so that they total forty-nine androgynous demons.

Their names and their functions you will find in "the Book of Solomon."⁴⁵

The identification of "the Book of Solomon" which gives the names and functions of the forty-nine demons has given rise to several hypotheses. J. Doresse originally offered two suggestions. The reference might have been to the "Epistle to Rehoboam," also called the "Hygromancie of Solomon" or "The Key to Hydromancy," perhaps composed in first-century B.C. Egypt.⁴⁶ This Solomonic book contains lists of the seven planets, of angels, and of demons which influence each of the twenty-four hours of each day of the week, followed by prayers to the planets and the angels, magical signs of each planet, and the plants of the zodiacal signs and planets. Doresse, however, thought it might be more likely that the reference was "to something in that vast collection entitled the Testament of Solomon, which enumerates a crowd of genies and mentions, for example, as rulers of this terrestrial world, Deception, Discord, Quarrelsomeness, Violent Agitation, Error, Violence, and Perversity."⁴⁷ Doresse appears to refer here to the seven "world rulers" (stoicheia) of the Testament of Solomon, chapter 8. Doresse's specific reference to the testament, chapter 8, has the complication that, if Giversen's retranslation of the male and female demons of the passage from Coptic into Greek is correct,⁴⁸ the only common name with the Testament, chapter 8, is Eris, "Strife," "Discord." Yet, the reference is to the forty-nine demons; though the testament does not have exactly forty-nine, it does have more than forty-nine,

⁴³ Preisendanz, "Salomo," (Pauly-Wissowa Supplement 8 [1956] col. 689, and EOS 48 [1956] 161-62) draws upon the classic study of W. Gundel, Dekane und Dekansterbilder, Studien der Bibliothek Warburg 19 (Hamburg, 1936), who discusses TSol at length (pp. 49-62), and suggests that ch. 18 was in use in pre-Christian Egypt. In his latter article (EOS 48 [1956] 161) Preisendanz states that the formulation of the Gk. text of the testament itself appears to go back to the 1st or 2nd cent. A.D. However, he uses as one of his arguments a reference to McCown, Testament, p. 40, where McCown does not date the testament itself. For McCown, presumably only the hypothetical d might have been that early. See esp. TSol 18:1, n. a.

⁴⁴ II, 5:107, 3 (On the Origin of the World); V, 5:78, 30, 79, 3, 10 (The Apocalypse of Adam); VII, 2:63, 11 (The Second Treatise of the Great Seth); and IX, 3:70, 6, 27 (The Testimony of Truth). S. Giversen ("Solomon und die Dämonen," in Essays on the Nag Hammadi Texts in Honor of Alexander Böhlig, ed. M. Krause, pp. 16-21) discusses three of these codices (II, 5; V, 5; IX, 3) and attempts to show that Solomon's use of the demons to build Jerusalem makes him an enemy, thus reversing the usual Jewish and Arabic legends.

⁴⁵ H.-G. Bethge and O. W. Wintermute, trans., "On the Origin of the World (II, 5 and XIII, 2)," in The Nag Hammadi Library in English, ed. J. M. Robinson (New York, 1977) p. 167.

⁴⁶ J. Doresse, The Secret Books of the Egyptian Gnostics, trans. P. Mairet, revised and augmented by the author (London, 1960) p. 170. Doresse's first suggestion was taken up by A. Böhlig and P. Labib, Die koptisch-gnostische Schrift ohne Titel aus Codex II von Nag Hammadi (Deutsche Akademie der Wissenschaften zu Berlin Institut für Orientforschung; Berlin, 1962) p. 32. The text was first mentioned by R. Reitzenstein, Poimandres. Studien zur griechisch-ägyptischen und frühchristlichen Literatur (Leipzig, 1904) pp. 186f., in connection with the Solomon story in Josephus, Ant 8.2.5, TSol, and Korè Kosmou. The text of the Epistle to Rehoboam was edited by J. Heeg in Catalogue codicum astrologorum Graecorum VIII.2 (Brussels, 1911) pp. 139-65; cf. also A. M. J. Festugière, La Révélation d'Hermès Trismégiste, 4 vols. (Paris, 1949-54) vol. 1, pp. 339f.; E. R. Goodenough, Jewish Symbols in the Greco-Roman World, vol. 2, p. 233.

⁴⁷ Doresse, Secret Books, p. 171.

⁴⁸ Giversen, in Krause, Essays, p. 20, n. 1.

and some of them are commonly found in the Nag Hammadi texts as a whole.⁴⁹ Either the reference is to the testament in the general sense, or one must admit that precise identification is as yet impossible among the many Solomonic magical works known to have existed.⁵⁰ If the former is so, we have evidence of the testament probably from late third-century Alexandria.

Author and provenance

There is nothing in the Testament of Solomon which would clearly identify its author. As the above discussion indicates, the author did not write in either Hebrew or Aramaic. If a Greek-speaking Jew originally wrote it, it was edited by a Christian; more recent scholarship, however, accepts the view that the author was a Greek-speaking Christian. This is reinforced by what appear to be the final stages of redaction (cf. TSol 11:6; 12:3; 15:10–15).

Equally difficult to establish is its provenance, for, like most hellenistic (-Jewish) magic, the testament has an international quality. Certain elements suggest Babylonia. The ascription of ailments and diseases to specific demons was deeply rooted there, and so was the wind demon, which causes a fever (TSol 22).⁵¹ There are also connections with the Babylonian Talmud, for example, the demons assisting Solomon's temple building, or the lengthy treatment of the legend of Ashmedai (= Asmodeus).⁵² Furthermore, the popular magic of the Aramaic Incantation Bowls from Babylonia, though from about A.D. 600, is in many respects like the magic of the testament, most notably in the importance of Solomon as a "Son of David" whose name is invoked to exorcise the demons.⁵³ Yet, some judge that the testament is both pre-talmudic in its demonology and earlier than the type of magic associated with the sixth-century bowls; thus, Babylonia is not usually suggested as the place of origin.⁵⁴

A second possibility is Asia Minor. The Book of Acts stresses that Ephesus was an important center for the magical arts; whether accurate or not, the claim is made that magical books worth 50,000 pieces of silver were consumed in a book burning at Ephesus (Acts 19:11–20). Though somewhat meager, there are other indications of active magical activity in Asia Minor; for example, a whole magical apparatus has been discovered at Pergamum.⁵⁵ Among the scholars, McCown; followed by James, mildly and cautiously favored Ephesus or some part of Asia Minor, McCown because "no decisive objections appear."⁵⁶

The third, and perhaps most obvious possibility, is Egypt, that melting pot of ancient magical lore. Ethiopia received its Jewish and Christian traditions via Egypt, and Ethiopia preserved magic, demonology, and legends about the Queen of Sheba and Solomon's demise similar to those found in the testament.⁵⁷ The magic of the testament is very much ⁴⁹ For example, Error and Power (cf. TSol 8:5); one also finds in the Nag Hammadi texts Orneos, Michael, Gabriel, cherubim and seraphim, and various forms of Uriel (Ouriel). For an account of the fallen angels (cf. TSol 5:3; 6:2), see On the Origin of the World (II, 5:123). The widespread Jewish tradition that Solomon built Jerusalem (e.g. the Temple) with the aid of the demons is expressed in IX, 3:70.

⁵⁰ H.-G. Bethge, "Vom Ursprung der Welt." Die fünfte Schrift aus Nag-Hammadi-Codex II neu herausgegeben und unter bevorzugter Auswertung anderer Nag-Hammadi-Texte erklärt (diss., Berlin, 1975) p. 270. I am grateful to B. Layton for making Bethge's dissertation available to me. On Solomonic books, see nn. 82, 94, 110–12.

⁵¹ The ašakku marsu; cf. McCown, Testament, p. 53.

⁵² B. A. Pearson in his The Coptic Gnostic Library. Nag Hammadi Codices IX and X (Nag Hammadi Studies; Leiden, 1980), parts of which he has kindly supplied to me in advance, lists in his notes on 70, 7–9 the Jewish haggadic texts which center on the view that Solomon built the Temple with the aid of demons: b. Giṭṭ 68ab; ExR 52.4; Midrash Canticles 1.1.5; NumR 11.3; PR 6.7; cf. b. Meg 11b; Pesikta de-Rab Kahana; Josephus, Ant 8.2.5; the Mandaean account of the building of the Temple in Lidzbarski, Ginza, pp. 28, 46. See also his "Jewish Haggadic Traditions in The Testimony of Truth from Nag Hammadi (CG IX, 3)," Ex orbe religionum. Studia Geo Widengren, vol. 1 (Numen Supp. 21; Leiden, 1972) p. 459. Other traditions related to TSol are mentioned by L. Ginsberg, The Legends of the Jews, 7 vols. (Philadelphia, 1913) vol. 4, pp. 292f., n. 56.

⁵³ McCown, Testament, pp. 65f.; D. Duling, "Solomon, Exorcism, and the Son of David," HTR 68 (1975) 245–47.

⁵⁴ The pre-talmudic view on demonology in TSol is expressed by K. Kohler ("Demonology," The Jewish Encyclopedia, vol. 4, p. 518) and echoed by McCown (Testament, pp. 30, 65).

⁵⁵ R. Wünsch, ed., Antikes Zaubergefäß aus Pergamon (Jahrbuch des Kaiserlich Deutschen Archäologischen Instituts, 6th Ergänzungsheft; Berlin, 1905).

⁵⁶ McCown, Testament, p. 110; James, JTS 24 (1922) 468.

⁵⁷ McCown, Testament, pp. 71–73; E. A. W. Budge, The Queen of Sheba and Her Only Son Menyelek (London, 1922).

like the hellenistic magical papyri discovered in Egypt (which mention Solomon), and the account of the thirty-six heavenly bodies which attack various parts of the human body (TSol 18) is a variation of the thirty-six decans, or 10° divisions and deities of the 360° zodiac, known especially from Egypt. Presumably the papyrus fragments of the decan chapter of the testament came from Egypt.⁵⁸ Gnostic amulets frequently drew on the name of Solomon, and gnostic texts from Nag Hammadi refer to a "Book of Solomon" and the tradition of Solomon and the demons.⁵⁹ Finally, the earliest literary reference to the testament is likely from Egypt (Dialogue of Timothy and Aquila).⁶⁰ Conybeare thought that the testament was probably a favorite book among the Egyptian Ophians or some analogous gnostic sect, but McCown objected to Conybeare's gnostic interpretation of the Testament of Solomon, chapter 8, and believed that neither the testament's cosmology nor its dualism was gnostic enough to derive it from Egyptian gnosticism.⁶¹

A final possibility is Syria-Palestine. The Jews and Samaritans were known in the Greco-Roman world for magic, and the Solomonic magical tradition is well documented in Palestinian Judaism, as will be presently shown.⁶² If Conybeare's suggestion that Josephus was referring to the testament seems a bit farfetched, it is also clear that McCown's primary reason for preferring Asia Minor over Palestine (Galilee)—the testament is "thoroughly Greek in its language and much of its material"⁶³—would no longer be accepted by an increasing number of scholars who are convinced of the hellenization of Palestine.⁶⁴ Thus, the fourth possibility, Syria-Palestine, emerges as more of a live option than could have been possible in McCown's day.

In short, McCown's judgment that it is impossible to reach any certain conclusion about the testament's place of origin must be reaffirmed; but his view of the ascending order of probability—Galilee, Egypt, Asia Minor⁶⁵—might just as likely be stated as Babylonia, Asia Minor, Egypt, Palestine.

Historical importance

The Testament of Solomon is the product of the growth of a legend about a famous biblical character combined with a variety of syncretistic beliefs about astrology, demonology, angelology, magic, and medicine. As the product of long tradition, it represents not only its own period of composition but the period of the Second Jewish Commonwealth and the rise of earliest Christianity. The testament is an important response to basic human problems: the presence of human frailty, sickness, and potential death. It therefore invites comparison with similar responses from the arena of ancient eastern Mediterranean civilizations, especially Persian, Babylonian, Egyptian, Greek, Jewish, Christian, and Islamic religions. Points of ⁵⁸ K. Preisendanz, Papyri Graecae Magicae. Die griechischen Zauberpapyri, 2nd ed. by A. Henrichs (Stuttgart, 1973, 1974), and McCown, Testament, pp. 66–68. McCown states, "The Test . . . differs from the magic papyri chiefly in that it is the work of a Christian using heathen materials rather than that of a heathen working on Jewish or Christian matter." The important papyrus fragment of TSol 18 was published by Preisendanz, EOS 48 (1956) 161–67.

⁵⁹ Gnostic amulets (invoking Solomon's name have been preserved: See McCown, Testament, p. 70, n. 1; Goodenough, Jewish Symbols; see Bibliography.

⁶⁰ Conybeare, Dialogues, p. xxxiv: "The title affixed to TA describes the debate as having taken place in Alexandria in the days of the Archbishop Cyril . . . But this title really no more than marks the time at which the work assumed its present form . . . it is a recension of some older dialogue . . ."

⁶¹ Conybeare, JQR 11 (1898) 14; Origen, Contra 6.24–38, discusses a "Diagram of the Ophians," which Conybeare compared to the seven stoicheia of TSol 8; see W. Foerster, "Ophites and Ophians," in Gnosis, trans. R. McL. Wilson (Oxford, 1972) vol. 1, pp. 84–89. McCown, Testament, p. 70, objects that they are not the gnostic seven but the Pleiades, or seven daughters of Atlas in Gk. myth; cf. Job 9:9; Amos 5:8; TSol 8:2, n. a.

⁶² See the following discussion. For Jewish magic, see L. Blau, Das altjüdische Zaubrerwesen (Budapest, 1898; repr. Westmead, England, 1970); J. Golden, "The Magic of Magic and Superstition," Aspects of Religious Propaganda in Judaism and Early Christianity, ed. E. S. Fiorenza (Notre Dame, 1976) pp. 115–47, which includes a short discussion of the 3rd–4th cent. Jewish magical document, the Sepher Ha-Razim; M. Margalioth, Sepher Ha-Razim. A Newly Recovered Book of Magic from the Talmudic Period (Jerusalem, 1966 [Heb.]); Michael Morgan, Sefer HaRazim (SBL Texts and Translations; Chico, Calif., forthcoming). J. M. Hull, Hellenistic Magic and the Synoptic Tradition (SBT 28, N.S.; Naperville, Ill., 1974); M. Smith, Jesus the Magician (New York, 1978); see n. 82 below.

⁶³ McCown, Testament, p. 110.

⁶⁴ Goodenough, Jewish Symbols; M. Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism, trans. J. Bowden (Philadelphia, 1973) vol. 1, especially pp. 239–41; M. Smith, "Prologomena to a Discussion of Aretologies, Divine Men, the Gospels, and Jesus," JBL 90 (1971) 174–99.

⁶⁵ McCown, Testament, p. 110.

comparison will be found in apocryphal and pseudepigraphic literature, talmudic legends, the Dead Sea Scrolls, Jewish and early Christian literary and non-literary magical and medical conceptions, hellenistic magical papyri, gnosticism, Greek myth, and astrology. It can also be seen in the context of the history of magic, medicine, and science.⁶⁶

One of the historically important features of the testament is that it represents a popular hellenistic Jewish-Christian view of King Solomon, one of the key figures of the Jewish Scriptures, midway between the time he actually lived (10th cent. B.C.) and the period when many of the surviving texts about him stressed his character as the magician par excellence (15th–16th cent. A.D.). The view that Solomon was a magician goes back to ancient interpretations of 1 Kings 4:29–34 (5:9–14 in Heb.).⁶⁷

Yahweh gave Solomon immense wisdom and understanding, and a heart as vast as the sand on the seashore. The wisdom of Solomon surpassed the wisdom of all the sons of the East, and all the wisdom of Egypt. He was wiser than any other, wiser than Ethan the Ezrahite, wiser than Heman and Calcol and Darda, the cantors. He composed three thousand proverbs; and his songs numbered a thousand and five. He could talk about plants from the cedar in Lebanon to the hyssop growing on the wall; and he could talk of animals, and birds and reptiles and fish. Men from all nations came to hear Solomon's wisdom, and he received gifts from all the kings of the world, who heard of his wisdom.

This Old Testament tradition is expanded in the following way: Solomon's wisdom is increasingly seen to include magical knowledge, and his literary productivity grows to include magical incantations and magical books. The literary side to his productivity can already be observed in the Old Testament itself, for it is claimed that he authored Proverbs (Prov 1:1), Song of Songs (Song 1:1; cf. 1:5; 3:7, 9, 11; 8:11), Ecclesiastes (Eccl 1:1, 12, 16–18), and, if extended to the apocrypha, it is implied that he authored the Wisdom of Solomon (WisSol 8:10f.; 9:7f., 12). Other pseudepigraphic books include the Odes of Solomon, the Psalms of Solomon, and the work under consideration, the Testament of Solomon.

In the Wisdom of Solomon (WisSol 7:15–22), probably from second-century B.C. Egypt, it is claimed that Solomon knows astrology, "powers of roots," and "forces of spirits," in part an extension of his knowledge of plants in 1 Kings 5. Perhaps from about the same time and place came a Septuagint translator who changed 1,005 "songs" in 1 Kings 5:12 (4:32) to 5,000 "odes" (Gk. ōdai), and this may be the source of the later view that Solomon wrote "incantations" (Gk. epōdai; cf. Josephus, Ant 8.2.5). In any case, it is clear that Solomon's fame grew in Egypt at a very early period.

Meanwhile, though sometimes difficult to trace, the popular tradition was also growing in Palestine. Josephus wrote that the Essenes, usually thought to have written the Dead Sea Scrolls, did "research into medicinal roots and properties of stones for the healing of diseases" (War 2.8.6). It may be that Solomon was known among them as an exorcist of demons. Certainly, Abraham in the Genesis Apocryphon and probably Daniel in the Prayer of Nabonidus are viewed as types of exorcists. Recently, there has turned up a curious recension of Psalm 91, which was known among the Rabbis as an exorcistic psalm (y. Shab 6:8b: "song for the stricken"; b. Shebu'oth 15b: "song referring to evil demons"; y. Erub 10:26c: "song for the demons"), which contains Solomon's name just before the term "demons" in column 1.⁶⁸ These Dead Sea Scrolls references are at least so early as the first century A.D.

From the late first or early second century A.D., in all probability, comes Pseudo-Philo's Liber antiquitatum biblicarum 60, originally a separate literary piece written in Hebrew, and probably from Palestine. It contains a psalm said to have been played by David on his harp to rebuke the demon that troubled Saul. At the end of the psalm there is a prophecy that some commentators think might refer to Solomon. D. Harrington translates the prophecy

⁶⁶ See L. Thorndike, A History of Magic and Experimental Science, 5 vols. (New York, 1923) especially vol. 1 and vol. 2.

⁶⁷ For much of what follows, see D. Duling, HTR 68 (1975) 235–49; McCown, JPOS 2 (1922) 1–24; Preisendanz, Pauly-Wissowa Supplement 8 (1956) passim.

⁶⁸ J. M. van der Ploeg, "Un Petit Rouleau de psaumes apocryphes (11QPsAp^a)" in Tradition und Glaube, Festgabe für K. G. Kuhn (Göttingen, 1971) pp. 128–39; E. Lövestam, "Jésus Fils de David chez les Synoptiques," ST 28 (1974) 97–109.

“But let the new womb from which I was born rebuke you, from which after a time one born from my loins will rule over you.”⁶⁹

To these early Palestinian Jewish materials one might add The Apocalypse of Adam, a tractate discovered at Nag Hammadi, Egypt, in 1945. The document contains many Jewish, Iranian, and Mandaean ideas and many scholars believe it is non-Christian; in fact, A. Böhlig, G. MacRae, and C. Hedrick would locate it in a first- or second-century A.D. Syrian-Palestinian baptismal sect.⁷⁰ It is interesting in this regard to note that the Mandaean Ginza views Solomon as the ruler over the demons and the seven planetary Dēvs.⁷¹ In any case the Apocalypse of Adam 7:1–48 lists thirteen false explanations for the origin of a redeemer figure called the Photor, or “Illuminator.” Hedrick has attempted to trace the redactional history of this section in Palestinian-Jewish baptismal sects prior to its incorporation into its present context sometime prior to A.D. 150.⁷² The fourth explanation for the origin of the Photor reads:

The fourth kingdom says [of him]:

“He came [from a virgin . . . Solomon] sought her, he and Phersalo and Sauel and his armies which had been sent out. Solomon also sent his army of demons to seek the virgin. And they did not find the one they sought, but the virgin who was given to them was the one they fetched. Solomon took her. The virgin conceived and gave birth to the child there.

She nourished him on a border of the desert. When he had been nourished, He received glory and power from the seed from which he had been begotten. And thus he came to the water.”⁷³ [ApAdam 7:13–16; Italics mine.]

Though the tradition of the virgin who bore Solomon a child is new, it is clear that the text knows of the legend of Solomon’s control of an army of demons so prominent in other Jewish sources, and specifically in the testament. In short, it is possible that the Apocalypse of Adam should be added to early Jewish Palestinian source material about Solomon.

The tradition of Solomon as magician, which is only roughly represented in the above material, is clearly present in Josephus’ Antiquities 8.2.5. This important passage reads:

Now so great was the prudence and wisdom which God granted Solomon that he surpassed the ancients, and even the Egyptians, who are said to excel all men in understanding, were not only, when compared with him, a little inferior but proved to fall far short of the king in sagacity . . . He also composed a thousand and five books of odes and songs, and three thousand books of parables and similitudes, for he spoke a parable about every kind of tree from the hyssop to the cedar, and in like

⁶⁹ M. R. James, “Citharismus regis David contra demonium Saulis,” Apocrypha Anecdota, (T&S 2.3; Cambridge, 1893) pp. 83–85; L. Cohn, “An Apocryphal Work Ascribed to Philo of Alexandria,” JQR 10 (1898) 277–332; also L. H. Feldman, “Prologomenon,” in M. R. James, The Biblical Antiquities of Philo (New York, 1917; repr. 1971) pp ix–clxix. [See Harrington’s contribution on LAB herein. —J.H.C.]

⁷⁰ A. Böhlig, “Die Adamapocalypse aux Codex V von Nag Hammadi als Zeugnis jüdisch-iranischer Gnosis,” OrChr 48 (1964) 44–49; G. MacRae, “The Coptic Gnostic Apocalypse of Adam,” Hey J 6 (1965) 27–35; “The Apocalypse of Adam Reconsidered,” The Society of Biblical Literature One Hundred Eighth Annual Meeting: Book of Seminar Papers, 2 vols. ed. L. C. McGaughey, ([Missoula, Mont.], 1972) vol. 2, p. 577; C. W. Hedrick, The Apocalypse of Adam: A Literary and Source Analysis (diss., Claremont Graduate School, 1977, pp. 266–68, kindly lent to me by Layton of Yale University; Hedrick has a history of research in ch. 1); see also K. Rudolph, “Gnosis und Gnostizismus, ein Forschungsbericht,” ThRu, N.F. 34 (1969) 160–69; A. F. J. Klijn, Seth in Gnostic Literature (NovTSup 46; Leiden, 1977) pp. 90f., n. 42. [Also see MacRae’s contribution on ApAdam herein. —J.H.C.]

⁷¹ M. Lidzbarski, Ginza (Göttingen, 1925), p. 28 (right): “190. Then King Solomon, the Son of David, is born and appears, and he becomes king of Judah and the powerful ruler over Jerusalem. The demons and the dēvs submit to him and walk according to his will until he glorifies himself and is ungrateful for the goodness of his Lord. Then the demons and the dēvs turn away from his speech and dominion is taken from him.”

⁷² Hedrick, The Apocalypse of Adam, pp. 161–268, suggests that the catalog was originally a collection of thirteen theological statements about the birth of some unknown individual which was then taken up as a baptismal liturgy in an initiation rite with thirteen stages paralleling the ascent of the Photor through the thirteen evil powers and cohorts of the creator god. Subsequently, it was adapted by an anti-water baptism community to illustrate thirteen false explanations of the Photor’s origin. Finally, a redactor who combined a Jewish gnostic source (A) with a largely non-Jewish but certainly non-Christian gnostic source (B) incorporated the catalog into source (B). According to Hedrick, the document was “redacted prior to A.D. 150 during an early stage of the Sethian-Archontic tradition by a representative of a minority faction who argued for a spiritualized understanding of baptism and an ascetic life style” (pp. ii–iii). The redaction may have taken place in Palestine, possibly in the Transjordan (p. 266).

⁷³ G. MacRae’s translation. [See his contribution on ApAdam herein. —J.H.C.]

manner about birds and all kinds of terrestrial creatures and those that swim and those that fly. There was no form of nature with which he was not acquainted or which he passed over without examining, but he studied them all philosophically and revealed the most complete knowledge of their several properties. And God granted him knowledge of the art used against demons for the benefit and healing of men. He also composed incantations by which illnesses are relieved, and left behind forms of exorcisms with which those possessed by demons drive them out, never to return. And this kind of cure is of very great power among us to this day, for I have seen a certain Eleazar, a countryman of mine, in the presence of Vespasian, his sons, tribunes and a number of other soldiers, free men possessed by demons, and this was the manner of the cure: he put to the nose of the possessed man a ring which had under its seal one of the roots prescribed by Solomon, and then, as the man smelled it, drew out the demon through his nostrils, and, when the man at once fell down, adjured the demon never to come back into him, speaking Solomon's name and reciting the incantations which he had composed. Then, wishing to convince the bystanders and prove to them that he had this power, Eleazar placed a cup or footbasin full of water a little way off and commanded the demon, as it went out of the man, to overturn it and make known to the spectators that he had left the man. And when this was done, the understanding and wisdom of Solomon were clearly revealed, on account of which we have been induced to speak of these things, in order that all men may know the greatness of his nature and how God favored him, and that no one under the sun may be ignorant of the king's surpassing virtue of every kind.⁷⁴

In this passage, the allusions are clearly to 1 Kings 4:29–34 (5:9–14 in Heb.) again. The numbers 1,005 and 3,000 are those of the Hebrew text (not the Septuagint), but now Josephus refers to 1,005 books of odes (ōdai) and songs and 3,000 books of parables and similitudes, including those about all kinds of trees and creatures (the natural sources for magical incantations). Solomon is thus said to have composed “incantations” (epōdai, perhaps suggested by ōdai) and exorcistic formulas by which one can drive out the demons. In addition, the ring is introduced, though it is really the root under the seal of the ring by which Eleazar performs the exorcism. Finally, Solomon's wisdom and greatness are so acknowledged that speaking his name and reciting his incantations help bring about the exorcism. All of this is an “art” (technē) employed by the ancient physician or magician. Because of its military setting Preisendanz connected this event with Vespasian's campaign in Palestine during the Jewish wars with Rome (A.D. 66–70), and Conybeare suggested (rather implausibly) that the testament might be the very book of incantations about which Josephus wrote.⁷⁵

The interpretation of 1 Kings 5:13 (4:33) occurs again in the Targum Sheni to Esther.

Solomon ruled over the wild beasts, over the birds of the heaven, and over the creeping beasts of the earth, as well as over the devils, the spirits of the night; and he understood the language of all these according as it is written, “and he talked with the trees.”⁷⁶ [Italics mine.]

In this targum, Solomon's mastery over the demons includes the “demons of the night” (Heb. lilīn; cf. Isa 34:14, “night hag”).

The reference to the “demons of the night” recalls the Aramaic Incantation Bowls, another example of Jewish magic.⁷⁷ These bowls are about the size of soup tureens. They are reported to have been found upside down, usually in houses, often in the four corners of the houses, but also in cemeteries. There are several theories about bowl praxis, the most likely being that they were meant to trap or overturn the demons in some way. Almost all contain Eastern Aramaic inscriptions in ink, most frequently written on the inside and in spiral fashion from ⁷⁴ Josephus, Ant 8.2.5 (LCL, trans. H. St. J. Thackeray and R. Marcus, pp. 593–97).

⁷⁵ Preisendanz, Pauly-Wissowa Supplement 8 (1956) col. 667; Conybeare, JQR 11 (1898) 12.

⁷⁶ For the Heb., see Salzberger, Salomosage, pp. 93f.; the translation is from McCown, JPOS 2 (1922) 5.

⁷⁷ J. A. Montgomery, Aramaic Incantation Texts from Nippur (Philadelphia, 1913); cf. Duling, HTR 68 (1975) 245, n. 42 for Bibliography, to which should be added Charles D. Isbell, Corpus of the Aramaic Incantation Bowls (Missoula, Mont., 1975).

the inside out, and sometimes containing in the center a primitive drawing of a demon, often chained. The inscriptions are incantations in the category of "white magic," that is, they are meant to protect homes, families, and possessions from all sorts of witchcraft, diseases, and demons. At least eighteen bowls refer to "King Solomon, Son of David" and twelve or thirteen of them refer to his seal ring. A sample of this protective magic is as follows:

The demon NTY², TTY QLY², BTY², Nuriel, Holy Rock. (2) Sealed and countersealed and fortified are Aĥât, the daughter of Immâ; Rabbi, Malkî and Dipshî, the sons of Aĥât; and Yanâi (3) the daughter of Aĥât, and Aĥât the daughter of Immâ, and Atyônâ the son of Qarqôî, and Qarqôî the daughter of Shiltâ, and Shiltâ the daughter of Immî (4)—they and their houses and their children and their property are sealed with the seal-ring of El Shaddai, blessed be He, and with the seal ring of King (5) Solomon, the son of David, who worked spells on male demons and female liliths. Sealed, countersealed and fortified against the male demon (6) and female lilith and spell and curse and incantation and knocking and evil eye and evil black-arts, against the black-arts of mother (7) and daughter, and against those of daughter-in-law and mother-in-law, and against those of the presumptuous woman, who darkens the eyes and blows away the soul (i.e. causes despair), and against the evil black-arts, that are wrought by (8) men, and against everything bad. In the name of the Lord. Lord, Hosts is His name, Amen, amen, selah. This charm is to thwart the demon Tîfînôs. Sealed are the bodies(?) of 'Š QL, the bodies(?) of 'Š QL MYLY MYLY 'TYGL².⁷⁸ [Italics mine.]

The incantation bowls are relatively late and their demonology and magic are sometimes considered more developed than that in the testament; yet, there are similar incantations from an earlier period. An especially pertinent example is a Jewish incantation written in Hebrew on a small metal-foil amulet which was discovered in 1853 at the southern tip of the Sea of Galilee. Dated in the second or third century A.D., the thirty-two-line inscription is a piece of protective magic for an unborn infant, and it is very similar to an incantation on one of the bowls. It begins with the magician's magical equipment: "And now with the wand of Moses and the shining-plate of Aaron the high priest, and with the seal of Solomon, and with [the Shield] of David, and with the mitre of the chief priest have I pronounced(?) [the wo]rd . . ."⁷⁹ [Italics mine.]

Among the Rabbis, Solomon's wisdom was both exonerated as his greatest asset and deprecated as that which led to his downfall. The testament has obvious points in common with the rabbinic stories about Asmodeus (cf. Tob), who is called Ashmedai.⁸⁰ When Solomon requires the stone-cutting worm, the shamîr ("flint," "diamond"), to cut stones for the Temple—according to law they could not be cut with iron tools (cf. 1Kgs 6:7)—it was surmised that the archdemon Ashmedai alone knew of its location. On earthly visits to watch debates in houses of learning, Ashmedai was known to get a drink at a mountain well which he then capped daily with a large rock and which he always examined before reopening. To obtain the coveted shamîr, Solomon gave his chief man, Benaiah ben Jehoiadah, a chain engraved with the divine name, a ring engraved with the divine name, a bundle of wool, and a skin of wine, and dispatched him to the mountain well. Benaiah drilled a hole and drained off the water, and then, stuffing the hole with the bundle of wool, he filled the well with wine. When Ashmedai, descending from heaven, discovered the wine, he was suspicious; finally, however, he gave in to his thirst, became drowsy with the wine, and fell asleep. Benaiah then chained him about the neck, and when Ashmedai awoke and tried to get free, Benaiah stated that "the name of thy Lord is upon thee" (presumably, the demon was sealed with the ring as well). After the completion of the Temple, the king told Ashmedai he did not understand how the demons' power could be so strong if their chieftain could be bound by a human. Ashmedai responded that if Solomon were to remove the chains and lend the magic ring to him, Ashmedai would prove his greatness. When Solomon agreed, Ashmedai hurled Solomon four hundred parasangs from Jerusalem, and then put himself forward as king. After much wandering, Solomon's lover, the Ammonite Naamah, recovered the magic ring from the belly of a fish, for Ashmedai had thrown it into the sea. Putting it on his finger, Solomon was immediately transported to Jerusalem, where he drove out Ashmedai and ascended the throne.

⁷⁸ C. H. Gordon, "Aramaic Magical Bowls in the Istanbul and Baghdad Museums," ArOr 6 (1934) 324–26 (Text B); Montgomery, Aramaic Incantation Texts, p. 170, contains an incantation in which the ring has on it "the Ineffable Name" (No. 11).

⁷⁹ J. A. Montgomery, "Some Early Amulets from Palestine," JAOS 31 (1911) 274. For other Solomonic amulets, see P. Perdrizet, Sphragis Solomōnos ("Solomon's Seal"), Revue des études grecques 16 (1903) 42–61; Goodenough, Jewish Symbols, vol. 1, p. 68; vol. 2, pp. 226–38; vol. 7, pp. 198–200; vol. 9, pp. 1044–67.

⁸⁰ See Ginsberg, Legends, pp. 165–69; "Asmodeus, or Ashmedai," The Jewish Encyclopedia, vol. 2, pp. 217–20; M. Seligsohn and M. W. Mendelbaum, "Solomon," The Jewish Encyclopedia, vol. 11, pp. 448f. The key text is b. Gitṭ 68ab. See also Strack-Billerbeck, Kommentar, vol. 4, Excursus 21; Salzberger, Salomosage, passim; McCown, Testament, pp. 62f.; McCown, JPOS 2 (1922) 5–8; discussion below and TSol 5, nn.

There are other rabbinic stories that can be compared to stories in the testament. Of Solomonic magical books, however, there was scarcely mention until about the twelfth century when Solomon once again appeared as the source of all wisdom. It may be that the Rabbis were referring to this lack when they said that Hezekiah "suppressed the book of recipes," for medieval commentators said that this book referred to a book which Solomon wrote.⁸¹ In any case, it appears that such books were ignored or, more likely, discouraged. In this connection it may be recalled that the Sepher Ha-Razim, a Jewish magical work pieced together by M. Margalioth and perhaps coming from third- or fourth-century Palestine, noted that Solomon was heir to the Books of the Mysteries, and that these gave him power over all the spirits and demons.⁸²

The earliest Christian tradition about the magical wisdom of Solomon, suggest some modern interpreters, is already implied in the New Testament.⁸³ They refer primarily to the cryptic passage which states "something greater than Solomon is here" (Matt 12:42), which is followed by the story of the return of the unclean spirit (Matt 12:43-45).⁸⁴ One is also led to raise the possibility with the Son of David pericope (Mark 12:35-37 and parallels) and the Markan theology as a whole, e.g. as a conception Mark opposed.⁸⁵ But if such connections are rejected, the first clear reference in the Christian literary tradition is found in Origen's commentary on Matthew 26:63 in which Origen states, "It is customary to adjure demons with adjurations written by Solomon. But they themselves who use these adjurations sometimes use books not properly constituted; indeed they even adjure demons with some books taken from Hebrew."⁸⁶ Possibly Origen was referring to the passage about Eleazar in Josephus, as do later Christian writers, but he might also have been thinking of the testament or the Sepher Ha-Razim.

It has been noted above that the Nag Hammadi texts mention "the Book of Solomon" and contain what is probably a Jewish-gnostic baptismal text from Palestine which refers to Solomon and his army of demons. There are also two Christian gnostic texts from Nag Hammadi which mention Solomon. The first, The Second Treatise of the Great Seth, which is a polemic against "orthodox" Christianity, contains a "laughingstock" passage which polemicalizes against a series of Old Testament figures. The litany-like pattern is that an Old Testament figure (Adam; Abraham, Isaac, Jacob; David; Solomon; the twelve prophets; or Moses) is called a "laughingstock," followed by a reason related to the Hebdomad's (Jaldabaoth's) false claims about them to make himself stronger than the gnostics, concluded

⁸¹ j. Ber 10a; Pes 56a; cf. McCown, JPOS 2 (1922) 6f. The medieval commentators are Maimonides and Rashi.

⁸² M. Morgan, Sepher HaRazim, renders the Opening, 12f.: "And when he [Noah] came forth from the ark, he used (the book [of mystery given to Noah by the angel Raziel]) all the days of his life, and at the time of his death he handed it down [two manuscripts: to Shem, and Shem] to Abraham, and Abraham to Isaac, and Isaac to Jacob, and Jacob to Levi, and Levi to Kohath, and Kohath to Amram, and Amram to Moses, and Moses to Joshua, and Joshua to the elders, and the elders to the prophets, and the prophets to the sages, and thus generation by generation until Solomon the king arose. And the Books of the Mysteries were disclosed to him and he became very learned in books of understanding and so ruled over everything he desired, over all the spirits and demons that wander in the world, and from the wisdom of this book he imprisoned and released, and sent and brought in, and built and prospered." Cf. TSol 18:1, n. a. Also cf. I. Gruenwald, Apocalyptic and Merkavah Mysticism (Leiden, 1980) pp. 225-34.

⁸³ L. Fisher, "Can This Be the Son of David?" in Jesus and the Historian. Written in honor of Ernest Cadman Colwell, ed. F. T. Trotter (Philadelphia 1968) pp. 82-97; E. Lövestam, ST 28 (1974) 97-109 (originally published in Swedish in 1972); K. Berger, "Die königlichen Messiasstraditionen des Neuen Testaments," NTS 20 (1973) 1-44; Duling, HTR 68 (1975) 235-52.

⁸⁴ See previous note and also Goodenough, Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 226.

⁸⁵ Duling, HTR 68 (1975) 49-52.

⁸⁶ In Mattheum comm. ser. (tract. 33) 110, Migne, PG, vol. 13, col. 1757; McCown, Testament, p. 94; JPOS 2 (1922) 9.

by a refrain: "We are innocent before him, since we have not sinned."⁸⁷ The Solomon statement reads, "Solomon was a laughingstock, since he thought that he was Christ, having become vain through the Hebdomad, as if he had become stronger than I and my brothers. But we are innocent with respect to him."⁸⁸ One wonders whether Solomon's "strength" in thinking he had become Christ was related to stories of his miracle working.

Perhaps most interesting of the Nag Hammadi references to Solomon is that found in "The Testimony of Truth" (IX, 3), a Christian gnostic tractate which combines a homily with polemics against "orthodox" Christianity and other gnostic groups. A strongly ascetic (Encratite) document from perhaps the late second or late third century A.D., the tractate's Solomon section has a large lacuna which must be filled. Referring to hypocrites who say they renounce the world but do not, the passage continues as follows:

They become wicked in their action, and some of them fall away [to the worship of] idols. [Others] have [demons] dwelling with them [as did] David the king. He is the one who laid the foundation of Jerusalem; and his son Solomon, whom he begat in [adultery], is the one who built Jerusalem by means of the demons, because he received [their powers]. When he [had finished building, he imprisoned] the demons [in the temple]. He [placed them] into seven [waterpots. They remained] a long [time in] the [waterpots], abandoned [there]. When the Romans [went] up to [Jerusalem] they discovered [the] waterpots, [and immediately] the [demons] ran out of the waterpots as those who escape from prison. And the waterpots [remained] pure (thereafter). [And] since those days [they dwell] with men who are [in] ignorance, and [they have remained upon] the earth.

Who, then, is [David]? And who is Solomon? [And] what is the foundation? And what is the wall which surrounds Jerusalem? And who are the demons? And what are the waterpots? And who are the Romans? But these [are mysteries . . .]⁸⁹

B. A. Pearson connects this passage with Jewish haggadic traditions, referring to a "David-Solomon midrash," and thinks that the author "is probably quoting or adapting from a written source [or sources] . . ."⁹⁰ S. Giversen also makes the link with Solomon's rule over the demons, especially as it is found in other Nag Hammadi texts.⁹¹ The connection with the testament is somewhat stronger if the lacuna at the end of the third sentence just quoted is restored to read "he received [power]" or "he received [wisdom]," thus reading, "Solomon . . . is the one who built Jerusalem by means of the demons, because he received power [or wisdom]."⁹² In the testament the gifts of power and wisdom are from God; it is not the power of the demons ("their power"). Finally, there are instances in the testament when Solomon traps demons in vessels and places them in the Temple until they are freed, though the freeing occurs at the first destruction, not at the coming of "the Romans,"⁹³ and the tradition of seven waterpots is known elsewhere.⁹⁴

⁸⁷ J. A. Gibbons, A Commentary on "The Second Logos of the Great Seth," (Ph.D. diss., Yale University, 1972) p. 255. Gibbons makes no attempt to date or locate the tractate; cf. his views in The Nag Hammadi Library, p. 329.

⁸⁸ R. A. Bullard, trans., in The Nag Hammadi Library, p. 335.

⁸⁹ S. Giversen and B. A. Pearson, trans., "The Testimony of Truth (IX, 3)," in The Nag Hammadi Library, p. 415.

⁹⁰ B. A. Pearson, "Introduction" in his Nag Hammadi Codices IX and X; cf. n. 52 above for the texts of the haggadic tradition.

⁹¹ Giversen, in Krause, Essays.

⁹² This is the opinion of B. Layton. NHC IX 3:70, 9 will be restored in B. Pearson's Nag Hammadi Codices IX and X, thanks to a proposal from S. Emmel, so that the translation will contain "[power]" rather than "[their powers]."

⁹³ TSol 15:8-11; 16:7; cf. 17:5; 18:3, 41f.; 23:16; 25:8. Pearson, "Introduction," in Nag Hammadi Codices IX and X suggests "the Romans" means Pompey (cf. Josephus, Ant 14.72f.).

⁹⁴ The alchemist Zosimus of Panopolis, about A.D. 300 in Egypt, writes, "Among the Egyptians there is a book called The Seven Heavens attributed to Solomon, against the demons; but it is not true that it is by Solomon because these bottles were brought (from Jerusalem) long ago to our (Egyptian) priests. That is what the language used to denote them makes one suppose; for the term 'bottles of Solomon' is a Hebraic expression . . . After these writings had spread everywhere, being still incomplete, they were corrupted. It is he (sc. Solomon) that invented them (sc. the talismanic bottles), as I said above. But Solomon only wrote a single work concerning the seven bottles; and people composed commentaries at different epochs to explain the things that this work contained. Now in these commentaries there was some fraud; (but) all (of them), or almost all, are in agreement on the work of the bottles directed against the demons. These bottles acted (in the same way) as the prayer and the nine letters written by Solomon; the demons cannot resist them . . . The seven bottles in which Solomon shut up the demons were made of electrum. We must

From the time of Origen on, Solomon is found in Christian tradition even more than in Jewish tradition. Many writers praise his magical powers, and he is found in the popular tradition on amulets, talismans, and lintels. When, however, the Jews attribute messianic passages to Solomon that Christians believe Jesus fulfills, the Christian writers become critical of Solomon.⁹⁵

Solomon's fame as a magician in Judaism and Christianity carried over into the magic of the larger hellenistic world, and at least one example must be cited. This is a reference in the Paris Magical Papyrus, probably from the third or fourth century A.D. but containing traditional material of a much older date. The text reads, "I adjure thee, every demonic spirit, say whatsoever thou art. For I adjure thee by the seal which Solomon laid upon the tongue of Jeremiah and he spoke."⁹⁶ Though the passage occurs in a larger context which is probably a Jewish liturgical exorcism and undoubtedly refers to Jeremiah's inability to speak (Jer 1:6), the precise tradition which relates Jeremiah to Solomon's seal has not yet been traced. Nonetheless, it would be generally recognized that the passage illustrates an example of the use of Jewish, specifically Solomonic, magic in the magic of the Greco-Roman world.

Islamic folklore developed the Solomonic tale in tremendously fertile and imaginative ways.⁹⁷ Solomon is the greatest of the world rulers, a true apostle of Allah, his messenger, and a prototype of Muhammad. 1 Kings 4:33 (5:13 in Heb.) is recalled and so are rabbinic traditions such as the stone-cutting worm, the samur (shamir). Solomon's fantastic powers to trap the jinn are recounted, and his ring is said to be engraved with "the most great name" of God. Solomon's seal is a charm, usually in the form of a pentagram or hexagram.

The major historical importance of the Testament of Solomon is that it provides a resource for understanding one type of common religious experience in hellenistic Jewish Christianity, an experience related to everyday problems of sickness and health, death and life. But it is also historically important as a means of seeing a high point in the development of the Solomonic legend. Finally, it is an important religious text to compare with other religious texts of the period.

Theological importance

The Testament of Solomon is a mixed collection of religious legends and beliefs, not a systematically constructed theology. Abstracted from such material is the following:

GOD

In the testament, God is the God of the Bible, but the accent falls heavily on his authority over the demons. He is the one and only God (TSol 26:3), the living God (TSol 1:13; 5:12), the "Lord God of Israel" (TSol 1:13) and the "Holy One of Israel" (TSol 4:12). His most frequent designation, "the God of heaven and earth" (TSol 1:8; 2:9; 3:6; 17:4; 18:41; 20:21), believe, in this respect, the Jewish writings concerning the demons. The altered book which we possess, and which is entitled The Seven Heavens, contains, in summary, the following: [?] The angel ordered Solomon to make these bottles. (The book) adds (that) Solomon made the seven bottles, according to the number of the seven planets, in conformity to the divine prescriptions . . . The wise Solomon knows also how to evoke the demons; he gives a formula of conjuration, and he indicates the electrum, that is, the bottles of electrum, on the surface of which he inscribed this formula." This text comes from a 15th cent. Syr. MS of some of Zosimus's alchemical writings published in French by M. P. E. Berthelot, Histoire des sciences: La Chimie au Moyen-âge (Paris, 1893) vol. 2, pp. 264-66, and translated by W. Scott and A. S. Ferguson, Hermetica IV: Testimonia (Oxford, 1936) pp. 140f. Zosimus may also know of a document in which a certain Mambres spoke to Solomon instructing him about sacrifices to drive off, or make powerless, the demons; see Scott-Ferguson, Hermetica IV, pp. 111, 139f. if Reitzenstein (Poimandres, p. 214) is correct to suggest this is Jambres, "the Egyptian sorcerer," this could be another point of contact with TSol (TSol 25:4; cf. 2Tim 3:8f.). On Jannes and Jambres see TSol 25:4, n. a. [Also see the contribution herein on JanJam. —J.H.C.]

⁹⁵ McCown, JPOS 2 (1922) 14-16.

⁹⁶ Paris Papyrus 3,009 in Preisendanz, Papyri Graecae Magicae, IV, 3,039f.; C. K. Barrett, The New Testament Background: Selected Documents (New York, 1961) pp. 31-35; McCown, Testament, p. 64, n. 2; JPOS 2 (1922) 5 and n. 4; A. Dieterich, Abraxas (Leipzig, 1891) pp. 138-41; W. L. Knox, "Jewish Liturgical Exorcism," HTR 31 (1938) 191-203; in general, A. D. Nock, "Greek Magical Papyri," Journal of Egyptian Archeology 15 (1929) 219-35.

⁹⁷ Salzberger, Salomassage; M. Seligsohn and M. W. Mendelbaum, "Solomon," The Jewish Encyclopedia, vol. 11, pp. 444f.; "Sulaiman," Shorter Encyclopedia of Islam, ed. H. A. Gibb and J. H. Kramers (Ithaca, N.Y., 1953) pp. 549-51; McCown, Testament, pp. 78-82, 94.

implies that all of creation is under his rule, though nothing is said of creation itself. He is designated "the great God Most High" (TSol 11:6), indicating that his abode is in the heavens (cf. TSol 18:3); there he makes decisions about men (TSol 20:12). He is also called simply "God" (TSol 16:1; 25:9), the "Lord God" (TSol 1:7, 13; 5:12; 10:10), the "Lord God Almighty" (TSol 3:5), and the "Lord Sabaoth" (TSol 1:6f.; 5:9), all designations of power and authority. His rule also extends to the underworld, for initially he has "authority over all the spirits of the air, the earth, and (the regions) beneath the earth" (TSol 18:3). Solomon prays to him as one of unquestioned authority (TSol 1:5, 8; 15:1; 18:41). This God, whose power can bind demons with unbreakable bonds (TSol 5:11), gives Solomon power over the demons (TSol 1:00; 18:3), grants him a ring for such power through his archangel Michael (TSol 1:6), and instructs him on how to respond to their evil plots (TSol 7:4). Solomon's power, therefore, always is recognized as a gift for which Solomon continually gives God praise, glory, and thanks (viz. TSol 1:5). When Solomon's lust drives him to idolatry, God's spirit departs from him (TSol 26).

MAN

There is no developed conception of humanity in the testament, but it is clear that apart from Solomon, who has been graciously granted special powers, human beings, who are also "sons of Israel" in the story (TSol 15:14), are to be contrasted with the supernatural angels and demons as "sons of men" and "of earthly origin" (TSol 5:3). As such, they are constantly subjected to all those moral, spiritual, and physical catastrophes brought on by the demons. Even the most holy men and priests can be aroused to desire (TSol 6:4). The only protection against the demonic powers is knowledge of their names, their activities, and their thwarting angels, or magical-medical formulas and praxes, all of which comes from God through Solomon and is preserved in the testament itself (TSol 15:14; 26:8).

COSMOLOGY

The cosmos is tripartite, with the heavens above, the earth in the middle, and hell beneath the earth (TSol 18:3). It is God's world for he is "God of heaven and earth," and he dwells in the highest heaven (TSol 20:11–17). The heavens are also the abode of God's angels (TSol 5:9; 2:7), and the demons are actually "fallen angels." The earth is the realm of nature and the stage for human drama, though God can interrupt natural law. Both angels and demons appear there, and demons like to frequent the more desolate places (TSol 4:4, 6; 17:2). The Prince of Demons, Beelzeboul, is said to hold men bound in Tartarus, the underworld region in control of the demon Abezethibou (TSol 6:3; 23–25).

What is most characteristic of the testament's cosmology is the combination of astrology and demonology. Demons are said "to reside" (keimai) in a "star" or "constellation" (astēr), as well as in a sign of the zodiac (TSol 2:2). One demon travels (hodeuō) with the moon (TSol 4:9). The stars are usually viewed as demonic and seem to have a special destructive power over those humans who share the same constellation (TSol 2:2; 4:6). Indeed, Asmodeus is said to spread madness about women through the stars (TSol 5:8). There are two chapters which especially illustrate this notion, both dealing with the "world rulers" or "heavenly bodies" (stoicheia). In chapter 8 seven small stars, the "rulers of this world of darkness" (TSol 8:2), are described as seven "vices" (Deception, Strife, Fate, Distress, Error, Power, The Worst); each is responsible for certain religious, social, or political evils, and each (with the exception of the last) has a thwarting angel.⁹⁸ In chapter 18 the stars are the thirty-six "world rulers of the darkness of this age" (TSol 18:2), the first of whom is called "the first decan of the zodiac" (TSol 18:4). This refers to the thirty-six decans, or deities, each of whom rules over 10° of the 360° zodiac, a widespread astrological concept in the ancient world.⁹⁹ However, in the testament the decans are demons who cause mental and physical illnesses.

DEMONOLOGY

The Testament of Solomon shares with many ancient Jewish writings the belief (based on an interpretation of Gen 6:1–4) that the demons are fallen angels (TSol 6:2), or at least the offspring of fallen angels and human women (TSol 5:3). Sometimes in Jewish literature the offspring were thought to be giants and perhaps the testament reflects that view (TSol 17:1). One, a female demon, is said to be generated from “a voice of the echo of a black heaven, emitted in matter” (TSol 4:8); another demon is the “offspring of The Great One” (TSol 7:5). As the above summary of the contents of the testament shows, the demons are primarily spirits who take one or several forms or change forms (especially TSol 3:6; 15:5; 20:13). They can be perceived as gods if the names of their thwarting angels are unknown (TSol 5:5; cf. 14:2; 15:3). Their forms include heavenly bodies perceived as vices or persons, forces of nature such as fire or wind, mythical personages such as dragons, part animal and part human creatures such as satyrs, some of whom are female, others of whom are headless or two-headed. Beelzeboul, formerly the highest-ranking angel in heaven (TSol 6:2), is their ruler (TSol 3:6); he seems to rule over the earth as well (subject to God). Yet, though he is consulted by Kunopegos, Beelzeboul’s role as Prince of the Demons is not highly developed. Beelzeboul’s crony, Abezethibou, rules Tartarus, the underworld (TSol 6:3; 25). Beyond this, no complicated hierarchy of demons is developed. Almost all the demons are given names.

⁹⁸ See above, "Date"; TSol 8:2, n. a.

⁹⁹ See above, "Date"; TSol 18:2, n. a. Conybeare, JQR 11 (1898) 6–10; McCown, Testament, pp. 56–59.

There are “spirits of the air, the earth, and beneath the earth” (TSol 22:1). Many of the demons are stars or are in some way associated with the stars. Demons, as mentioned, reside in constellations and, because they can fly up to heaven (TSol 2:3), they sometimes overhear God’s plans for the life of men and know the future (TSol 20:14–17). They also frequent desolate places (TSol 4:4, 6) and haunt tombs (TSol 17:2). Their major function is the implementation of all kinds of wickedness, immorality, natural disaster, deformity, disease, and death. A strikingly Christian view is found in 15:10: “We (the demons) will lead astray all the inhabited world for a long time until the Son of God is stretched upon the cross.”

ANGELOLOGY

Nothing is said of the precise origin or hierarchy of all the angels in the testament, but their major function is clear; each angel has one or more demons which he is able to render powerless or ineffective (katargeō: “I make powerless,” “I destroy,” rendered below as “I thwart”). To know the name of the appropriate “thwarting angel” for a particular demon and to call on him is to gain power over that particular demon and the evil he causes. If human beings do not know the names of the thwarting angels, the demons will be worshiped as gods (TSol 5:5). The angels are also God’s emissaries (TSol 1:7).

Four of the seven archangels, Michael, Ouriel, Raphael, and Gabriel, are found in the testament.¹⁰⁰ Michael, Ouriel, and Raphael are the first three angels to be mentioned by name (TSol 1:6; 2:4; 5:9) and each of the four is said to have power over one of the first four of the thirty-six heavenly bodies (TSol 18:5–8). Specifically, Michael delivers the magic ring granted by God to Solomon and announces to him that he will have power over the demons (TSol 1:6f.); Michael also imprisons the first of the thirty-six heavenly bodies, Ruax, the headache demon (TSol 18:4f.). Ouriel is the first to be introduced as a thwarting angel, namely in connection with the demon Ornias (TSol 2:4); he also thwarts Error, one of the seven heavenly bodies (TSol 8:9), and imprisons Artosael, the third of the thirty-six heavenly bodies, who damages the eyes (TSol 18:7). Raphael thwarts Asmodeus (TSol 5:9) and the Medusa-like Obyzouth (TSol 13:6); he also imprisons Oropel, the fourth of the thirty-six heavenly bodies, who causes sore throat (TSol 18:8). Gabriel imprisons Barsafael, the second of the thirty-six heavenly bodies, who is also a headache demon (TSol 18:6).

There are many other thwarting angels in the testament, usually with Semitic-sounding names. One is called “The Almighty God,” or “Patike” by the Hebrews, or “Emmanuel” by the Greeks (TSol 6:8).

DUALISM

The Testament of Solomon contains no absolute dualism. God responds to Solomon’s prayer for help against the demons by granting him power over them. With the aid of the magical ring, the demons are subdued and their thwarting angels known. Overpowered, they are put to work constructing the Temple.

¹⁰⁰ These four archangels are commonly found together in Judaism and Jewish magic; cf. S. Eitrem, Papyri Osloenses: Fasc. I. Magical Papyri (Oslo, 1925) p. 111; Goodenough, Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, pp. 229, 232.

MAGIC, MEDICINE

The major interest of the author of the testament was medical. Chapter 18 sounds very much like an ancient family medical encyclopedia.¹⁰¹ Here, the “heavenly bodies,” most of whom cause physical and mental disease, are made to “retreat” (anachōrō) not only by reciting the magical formula, “Angel X, imprison Demon Y” (the first ten, the fifteenth, and the nineteenth demons), but also by certain exorcistic words, sometimes simply spoken, sometimes said in conjunction with “medical” rites, sometimes written, usually on various apotropaic materials, sometimes worn on the person, sometimes posted at various protective locations. For example, “The tenth said, ‘I am called Metathiax. I cause pains in the kidneys. If I hear ‘Adonael, imprison Metathiax’ I retreat immediately’ ” (TSol 18:14). “Rhyx Hapax, who unleashes insomnia, retreats if anyone writes ‘Kok; phedismos’ and wears it from the temples” (TSol 18:32). “Rhyx Mianeth, who holds grudges against the body, demolishes houses, and causes flesh to rot, flees from a house if anyone writes ‘Melto Ardad Anaath’ on the front entrance of the house” (TSol 18:40).

Similar ideas occur in the earlier parts of the testament. The Lion-Shaped Demon, in control of a legion of demons, is adjured by the suffering Emmanouel, who binds them and who drives them over a cliff, a passage which recalls the story in Mark 5:1–13 (TSol 11:1–7). In a slight alteration of the Tobit story, Asmodeus is thwarted by Raphael (“but also a liver and a gall of a fish smoking on coals of charcoal . . .”), and the fish is identified as a sheatfish (TSol 5:9f.). Also an apparently dangerous form of magic is revealed—Solomon rebukes Beelzeboul for revealing it—when Solomon is told how to support his household (TSol 6:10f.). In the following chapter Solomon stops the wind demon Lix Tetrax by spitting on the ground and sealing him with his magic ring (TSol 7:3).

ETHICS

The demons involve man in actions that are contrary to traditional biblical morality. Likewise, God is a good God and his angels stand ready to thwart the demons in man’s behalf. Thus, insofar as mental, physical, and moral health is a good, and mental, physical, and moral sickness is an evil, there is a strong ethical flavor in the document.

AFTERLIFE

There is no view of the afterlife expressed. In 25:8, Solomon adjures Abezethibou to hold up the pillar of air “until the End,” and in 26:8 (rec. B) Solomon writes his testament “in order that those who hear might pray about, and pay attention to, the last things and not to the first things, in order that they might finally find grace forever.”

Relation to canonical books

The Testament of Solomon has numerous connections with both the Hebrew Scriptures and the New Testament. There is only one citation, the cornerstone, or keystone, prophecy from Psalm 118:22 (TSol 23:4). Other connections appear to be non-literary. With regard to the Hebrew Scriptures, the major associations are Solomon’s building the Temple (1Kgs 6f.), Solomon’s wisdom (1Kgs 4:29–34), the story of the Queen of Sheeba (1Kgs 10; TSol 19:1–3; 21:1–4), Solomon’s many wives and downfall due to the worship of foreign gods (1Kgs 11; TSol 26), all of which are elaborated in Jewish and Arabic folklore, and the story of the Exodus (Ex 14; TSol 6:3f.; 22:7; 23:2; 24–25). One also finds mention of the divided kingdom (1Kgs 12; TSol 5:5; 15:8), the fall of the angels (Gen 6:1–4; TSol 5:3; 6:1–4), the prophecies of the Wonderful Counselor (Isa 9:6; TSol 12:3) and Emmanouel (Isa 7:14; TSol 6:8; 11:6; 15:11), and the cherubim and seraphim (1Kgs 7:48f.; TSol 18:34; cf. 21:2). As mentioned above, the archangels Michael (Dan 10:13; 12:1; TSol 1:6 [n. j]; 18:5) and Gabriel (Dan 8:16; 9:21; TSol 18:6) are found. Finally, as in the hellenistic magical papyri and gnostic literature, many Semitic-sounding names occur throughout the testament, though these do not necessarily point directly to the Scriptures.

¹⁰¹ See TSol 18:2, n. a.

The testament is also related orally to the New Testament. Conybeare isolated a number of common phrases between the New Testament and manuscript P,¹⁰² some of which are simply illustrations of a common environment. Yet, there are clear allusions to the story of the Gerasene demoniacs (Mark 5:1–13; TSol 11), and Beelzeboul occupies a major place in the documents (cf. Mk 3:22; Mt 10:25; 12:24; Lk 11:15; TSol 3; 4:2). The “virgin” (Mt 1:18–25; Lk 1:25–38) is implied once (TSol 15:10) and explicitly mentioned once (TSol 22:20). The implicit reference occurs in what is the clearest reference to Jesus which McCown thinks might be the work of the redactor of recension B,¹⁰³ though he prints it in his eclectic text:

We will lead astray all the inhabited world for a long time until the Son of God is stretched upon the cross. For there has not yet arisen a king like him, one who thwarts all of us, whose mother shall not have sexual intercourse with a man. •Who holds such authority over the spirits except that one? The one whom the first devil shall seek to tempt, but shall not be able to overcome, the letters of whose name add up to six hundred forty-four—he is Emmanouel (TSol 15:10f.).

The virgin, the reference to the Son of God, the temptation of Jesus, Jesus’ rule over the demons, the crucifixion, and the name Emmanouel are clear. Moreover, there is the curious reference to the number 644. This number is connected with the name Emmanouel in manuscript P of 6:8, which states in response to Solomon’s question about a thwarting angel that the one who thwarts Beelzeboul is “the holy and precious name of the almighty God, the one called by the Hebrews by a row of numbers, of which the sum is 644, and among the Greeks it is Emmanouel.” [Italics mine.] Now 11:6 speaks of a suffering Emmanouel as one who thwarts the Lion-Shaped One, and adds, “As he moves about he is conjured up by means of three letters.” The three letters used for the number 644 in manuscript P of 6:8, however, are Greek letters (chi, mu, delta). Moreover, manuscript P of 11:6 adds, “The ‘Great Among Men’ who is to suffer many things whose name is the formula 644, who is Emmanouel . . .” It is never explicitly stated, but the Greek letters of Emmanouel’s name also add up to 644 (TSol 6:8, n. i).

The crucifixion of Jesus by the Jews is mentioned again in 22:20, and in a difficult passage in 12:3 the three-headed dragon spirit states, “But there is a way by which I am thwarted, (namely,) by (the site) which is marked ‘Place of the Skull,’ for there an angel of the Wonderful Counselor foresaw that I would suffer, and he will dwell publically on the cross.” An oath called “the Elo-i,” recalling Jesus’ words on the cross from Psalm 22:1 (Mk 15:34; Mt 27:46) occurs in 6:8 and the sign of the cross written on the forehead thwarts the lecherous spirit in 17:4.

Special notice should also be taken of the fact that in these references Jesus functions very much like a thwarting angel in the testament (TSol 6:8, n. h).

Finally, there are a number of general relationships such as demonology and the designation of Solomon as “Son of David” (TSol 1:7; 20:1) which have led some scholars to believe that the testament provides an excellent background for understanding many parts of the New Testament.

Relation to apocryphal and pseudepigraphic books

It is already clear that the testament shares much with the apocryphal and pseudepigraphic literature. The account of Asmodeus, who hatches plots against newlyweds and is thwarted by the angel Raphael and a smoking liver and gall of a fish (TSol 5:7–10), reflects the main narrative of Tobit, though in Tobit it is the smoking heart and liver of the fish that cause Asmodeus to flee the newlyweds’ bedchamber, the gall being held in reserve to cure Tobit’s blindness. McCown discovered what he thought was one phrase from the Wisdom of Solomon as well (WisSol 9:4; cf. TSol 3:5).¹⁰⁴ An important theme from the pseudepigraphic literature is the theme of the fall of the angels based on Genesis 6:1–4 (1En 6–7; 15f.; Jub 7:21–25; 10:5; TSol 6:2; 5:3). The fourth major archangel of the testament, Ouriel, is also frequently ¹⁰² Conybeare, JQR 11 (1898) 5f.

¹⁰³ McCown, Testament, pp. 83, 89.

¹⁰⁴ McCown, Testament, p. 61.

found in the Pseudepigrapha (e.g. 4Ezra 5:20; 10:27; 1En 9:1; 10:1). In general, it may be said with McCown, "The angelology and demonology of the Test are practically those of the Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha."¹⁰⁵ Such connections with the testament appear to have been brought about by oral traditions.

Cultural importance

Though the tradition of Solomon's magical wisdom was perpetuated in Judaism, Christianity, and Islam—witness the growth of Solomonic legends in the Talmud, Ethiopic Christianity, the Koran, and Arabian Nights as well as the plethora of amulets, talismans, lintels, and the pentagrams and hexagrams scratched on every type of magical material—the attestation of Solomonic magical books seems to have been avoided in official Judaism until the twelfth century. The Rabbis preserved the tradition that Hezekiah hid the "book of recipes." Hippolytus (c. A.D. 160–236) seems to have been the first Christian writer to mention the notion of the suppression of Solomon's books by Hezekiah, an idea continued in early Christian writers, perhaps in a lost account of Eusebius.¹⁰⁶ Clearly, in the early period, magical books by Solomon were considered suspect, partly because "official" Judaism and Christianity associated the practice of magic with paganism, and perhaps partly because the practice of magic in the Roman Empire was legally punishable by death.¹⁰⁷ Nonetheless, it was quite difficult to distinguish magic from medicine and in practice it flourished everywhere in the popular culture. Thus, alongside the beloved tales of Solomon's great wisdom and magical prowess, Solomonic magical books existed and some survived the sporadic book burnings. Theodoret (A.D. 385/393–458), for example, mentions in his interpretation of 1 Kings 4:33 the existence of Solomon's "medical books" and praises Solomon as the source of all medical knowledge.¹⁰⁸ The first clear reference to the testament, however, attacks Solomon's reputation by referring to his demise in 1 Kings 11:31–36. This is the Dialogue of Timothy and Aquila from about A.D. 400. Other Christian writers also attack Solomon's reputation, but usually only when claims for him come into conflict with claims about Jesus, as in the Dialogue. Where the conflict with Judaism was absent, Solomon's reputation as a healer of diseases seems, in the early period, to have been maintained.¹⁰⁹

In the medieval period, probably about the twelfth century, and probably under Arabian influence, Solomon became known especially as a writer of scientific and magical books. M. Seligsohn mentions forty-nine of these books listed in Arabic and Hebrew literature,¹¹⁰ and McCown adds that this list is by no means exhaustive.¹¹¹ Perhaps most famous of all these medieval works was the Key of Solomon, known in Greek, Hebrew, and Latin (Clavicula Salomonis), so named because like a key which unlocks a treasure, it was believed to unlock the mysteries of the magical arts.¹¹² By the fifteenth century, books of magical secrets were attributed to many major characters of the Jewish Scriptures, including Adam and Moses, and especially Solomon. To this company, Zoroaster, Hermes Trismegistus, Aristotle, Alexander the Great, Virgil, and Muḥammad were joined. Students of history of Western mysticism will recognize here a number of common features with the mystical Jewish cabala, which developed the myths of fallen angels found in Genesis 6:1–4 and ¹⁰⁵ Ibid., p. 59.

¹⁰⁶ Hippolytus, Commentary on Canticles, fragmentarily preserved; see McCown, JPOS 2 (1922) 11 and n. 3. Official Islam appears to have considered Solomonic books to be works of the devil; cf. Koran, Sura 2:95f.; McCown, Testament, pp. 98f., on Eusebius.

¹⁰⁷ Important texts are the Laws of the Twelve Tables (451–450 B.C.); Julius Paulus, Sententiae 5:21, 1–3; 5:23, 17, 19 (early 3rd cent. A.D.); Justinian, Pandects 48:8, 13f. R. Beckmann, Zauberei und Rechts in Roms Frühzeit (Osnabrück, Germany, 1923); E. Tavenner, Studies in Magic from Latin Literature (New York, 1916) pp. 12–17; E. Massonneau, Le Crime de magie dans la droit romaine (Paris, 1933); R. MacMullen, Enemies of the Roman Order (Cambridge, 1966) pp. 124–27.

¹⁰⁸ Theodoret, Quaestiones in III Reg., Qu. X, quoted from Migne, PG, vol. 80, p. 676AB in McCown, Testament, p. 95; JPOS 2 (1922) 10.

¹⁰⁹ McCown, JPOS 2 (1922) 14–16.

¹¹⁰ M. Seligsohn, "Solomon—Apocryphal Works," The Jewish Encyclopedia, vol. 11, p. 447; Charlesworth, PMR (1976), 199–201.

¹¹¹ McCown, Testament, p. 100. See also the indices to Catalogus Codicum Astrologorum Graecorum IV, V, VI, VII, VIII under "Solomon."

¹¹² H. Gollancz, Clavicula Salomonis. A Hebrew Manuscript (Frankfurt, 1903); Sepher Mephteah Shelomo ("The Book of the Key of Solomon") (London, 1914) has facsimiles, texts, and translations.

1 Enoch 6–11. In much of this there is a movement away from the testament's focus on knowledge of the demons as a way of coping with evil toward the attempt to manipulate the demons for positive benefits. Similarly, partly due to Neoplatonic influence, there was an increasing tendency to arrange the demons in hierarchies of power.¹¹³ Manuscript T^d of recension C of the testament (dated by McCown to about the 12th or 13th cent.),¹¹⁴ represents these technical works for the professional astrologer and magician by including in chapter 10 a list of fifty or fifty-one demons who are summoned for the purpose of gaining wealth, power, and happiness. Indeed, this manuscript is really a fragment of a longer manuscript containing a whole body of magical, astrological, and demonologic lore, most notably the Key of Solomon. Many of the other manuscripts, which are from the fifteenth or sixteenth century, also contain such lore, including many pentacles and Solomonic drawings.¹¹⁵

In conclusion, it should be stressed that the Testament of Solomon is an important document for understanding everyday religion in the early centuries of Christianity. On the one hand, there is the romantic story of Solomon. Solomon built the temple and, according to Scripture, "it was with stone prepared at the quarry; so that neither hammer nor ax nor any tool of iron was heard in the temple while it was being built" (1Kgs 6:7). He was a lover of women, which led to his demise. But he was also the wise king, whose knowledge included the magical properties of plants and animals. Most tantalizing is the account of his magical ring and its power over the demons.¹¹⁶ The story provides a backdrop for all manner of important information about sickness, disease, natural tragedy, and death: who causes it (the demons), the world in which it exists (God's mysterious world with its stars and planets), and what to do about it (knowledge about angels, medicine, and magical incantation). As such, the testament is a sample of what R. Ellwood calls the "alternative" religious tradition in the West.¹¹⁷ It arises out of the broader religious environment of which Christianity was a part rather than being a normative document of what orthodox Christianity was to become. If its thought, especially its demonology, helps clarify the type of literature that orthodoxy came to accept as normative, its basic thrust, limited in its Christology, found much in common with, and contributed to, a persistent mysticism, astrology, magic, and what has continued in the modern period as the occult.

TEXTUAL EMENDATIONS

Translator's Note: The text translated is the printed eclectic text of C. C. McCown, The Testament of Solomon, pp. 5–75*; it therefore adheres to his original preference for rec. B at both the beginning and the end. McCown's late discovery of manuscript N (noted above) caused him to make a few minor revisions and, most important, to shift his view of the conclusion back toward rec. A. These revisions are listed as "Emendationes in Textum" in McCown, The Testament of Solomon, pp. 121–22*. I have placed his revised conclusion in n. f of TSol 26:8. The following represents his list of minor changes:

- 1:9 "As fást as you can before he thinks of things which would stop you."
- 1:10 Read phlegon ("flaming") for phlegomenon ("flaming").
- 2:3 Add "when commanded by all the demons" after "of a lion."
- 2:8 Omit the difficult reading "and cast his fate," modifying to "their species on the (dry) land. There he also subjected."
- 5:13 Read "untying Asmodeus I lit a fire under him because."
- 6:5 Insert "the kind" after "whom you said is."
- 6:5 Read "He retorted, 'I will not bring him back to you.'"
- 6:8 Change "a" to "the" before "great name."
- 7:3 Change "the moving air" to "that moving air."

¹¹³ E. M. Butler, Ritual Magic (Cambridge, 1949) ch. 1, has a good discussion of the medieval Solomonic cycle; ch. 2 is based on the "disciples of Solomon"; see pp. 29–44 for a discussion of Jewish elements in magic.

¹¹⁴ McCown, Testament, p. 108.

¹¹⁵ Ibid., pp. 13–15, 18–20, on Harleian MS no. 5596 in the British Museum.

¹¹⁶ In speaking of the cornelian stone of the bishop's ring as a prophylactic against demons, Conybeare (Myth, Magic, and Morals: A Study of Christian Origins [London, 1909] p. 324) wrote, "The ring in itself has a magical use of the same kind, and one of the three great relics kissed by Christian pilgrims to Jerusalem in the fourth century was the ring with which King Solomon controlled the demons and forced them to help him build his temple."

¹¹⁷ R. S. Ellwood, Jr., Religious and Spiritual Groups in Modern America (Englewood Cliffs, N.J., 1973) pp. 42–87.

- 8:4 Change "gods" to "goddesses" (with corresponding feminine forms following).
 8:10 Read "And likewise" for "likewise."
 8:11 After "but to me," read "in contrast, (it is) a desire for wisdom."
 10:2 Read "I was extremely strong, even restraining the stars of heaven."
 10:6 Read "and bring the demon here to me," reading "the demon" for "the ring."
 10:9 Change "leek" to "small horn."
 11:3 Read "I have another activity. I send forth the legions of demons subject to me, but when the sun is setting I am at the (various) places, together with all the demons who are legions under me . . ."
 11:4 Read Leontophrōn for Leontophoron ("Lion-Shaped Demon").
 11:7 Read Leontophrona for Leontophron.
 12:2 Read "infants" for "children."
 18:2 Read hoi (masculine) for hai (feminine).
 18:23 Insert "Rhyx" before "Mardero."
 18:28 Read "nail" for "a piece of wood."
 25:2 Read "Abezethou" for "Abzethibou."
 26:7–8 See TSol 26:8, n. f.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 197–202.
 Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 177f.
 Denis, Introduction, p. 67.

Conybeare, F. C. "The Testament of Solomon," JQR 11 (1898) 1–45. (Conybeare translated F. F. Fleck's text of the testament [McCown's MS P] and included an important introduction. It is the only other extant English translation. Most of Conybeare's paragraphing has been followed in the translation below, designated by numbers in parentheses in the margin.)

Delatte, A. "Testament de Salomon" in Anecdota Atheniensia 36 (1927) 211–27. (In a volume of Solomonic magical, astrological, alchemical, and divinitory literature, these pages print a highly modified version of the testament not included in McCown [Bibliothèque Nationale No. 2011]; there is one page of introduction included.)

Duling, D. C. "Solomon, Exorcism, and the Son of David," HTR 68 (1975) 235–52. (This article tracks the trajectory of the magical wisdom of Solomon primarily in Judaism and makes suggestions about its possible connection to the Gospels; the footnotes contain references to recent bibliography.)

Giversen, S. "Solomon und die Dämonen," Essays on the Nag Hammadi Texts in Honor of Alexander Böhlig, ed. M. Krause. NHS 3; Leiden, 1972; pp. 16–21. (Giversen discusses three of the four passages in the Nag Hammadi texts in which Solomon is mentioned [II, 5:107; V, 5:78 and 79; IX, 3:70] and concludes that the Jewish tradition of Solomon's control over the demons is represented, but criticized.)

Goodenough, E. R. Jewish Symbols in the Greco-Roman World. 13 vols.; Bollingen Series 37; New York, 1953–68; vol. 1, p. 68; vol. 2, pp. 226–38; vol. 7, pp. 198–200; vol. 9, pp. 1044–67. (Goodenough draws from other works and summarizes much of the amulet and talisman material about Solomon from ancient Judaism; the drawings are especially helpful.)

Gundel, W. Dekane und Dekansternbilder. Glückstadt, 1936. (Gundel's work on the decans is extremely important.)

- James, M. R. "The Testament of Solomon (Review)," JTS 24 (1922) 467-68. (James summarizes McCown's results; although he is highly complimentary, he does not think McCown's evolution of the testament beginning with MS D is wholly convincing.)
- McCown, C. C. "The Christian Tradition as to the Magical Wisdom of Solomon," JPOS 2 (1922) 1-24. (After brief sections on the pre-Christian and the Semitic tradition, the article briefly sketches the literary and "living" Christian tradition of Solomon's wisdom.)
- . The Testament of Solomon. Leipzig, 1922. (This is the indispensable critical edition, containing an eclectic text and an apparatus along with MS D, the text of rec. C where it varies, the text of MS E, a conspectus of titles, grammatical and syntactical index, Greek indices, and an English index.)
- Preisendanz, K. "Ein Wiener Papyrusfragment zum Testamentum Salomonis," EOS 48 (1956) 161-67. (Preisendanz, the noted authority on the magical papyri, publishes the most recent discovery of the Gk. testament, a papyrus of TSol 18:34-40 [Vindobonensis 330, designated G 330] which he discovered in 1955 in the Austrian National Library in Vienna. He believes that it is further evidence that ch. 18, if not the testament itself, was in use in Egypt; indeed, he speculates that the fragment could be a thousand years earlier than the other MS associated with Egypt, MS N from Jerusalem [Sancti Saba No. 422; 15th cent. A.D.]. It is the oldest fragment known.)
- . "Salomo." Pauly-Wissowa Supplement 8 (1956) cols. 660-704. (This lengthy article is an excellent summary of the Solomon tradition with an extensive bibliography.)
- Salzberger, G. Die Salomosage in der semitischen Literatur. Berlin, 1907. (Salzberger's dissertation is an extensive study and is especially helpful for the Ar. legends.)

THE TESTAMENT OF SOLOMON^a

The Greek title^c

1:00 Testament of Solomon, Son of David,^d who reigned in Jerusalem, and subdued
(1)^b all the spirits of the air, of the earth, and under the earth; through (them) he also accomplished all the magnificent works of the Temple; (this tells) what their authorities are against men, and by what angels these demons are thwarted.^e

Prologue: Solomon's praise^f

1:0 Blessed are you, Lord God, who has given this authority to Solomon. Glory and 1:5 power to you forever. Amen.^g

5:13
Ps 72:18

Title and Prologue. a. The standard edition, C. C. McCown, The Testament of Solomon, is the basis for the translation. McCown presents, with the exception of the first three VSS., an eclectic text which attempts to reconstruct the original TSol behind recs. A (MSS H I L) and B (MSS P Q). Rec. C (MSS S T U V W), he judged, was descended from rec. B and carried little weight against rec. A; however, when C agreed with A against B, he argued that this agreement came closest to the original. In rec. A, he considered MS H to be the best MS and his rule was "When in doubt, follow H" (McCown, Testament, p. 38). There was an exception to this generalization: McCown thought rec. A to be secondary at the beginning, and here he relied more on rec. B (for the conclusion, see Introduction, MS N; TSol 26:8, n. f). Finally, McCown printed various combinations of MSS in the first three VSS. sometimes separating, sometimes combining recs. A and B, and sometimes printing MS L separately, but always printing MSS V W separately.

b. The numbers in parentheses in the margin correspond, where possible, to the paragraph numbers of F. C. Conybeare's translation of F. F. Fleck's edition of MS P (1837), considered by McCown to contain many errors. I have attempted to follow Conybeare's paragraph divisions in most cases, despite the differences in the underlying Gk. text. These numbers will facilitate comparison with the only other English translation of the text of TSol. Furthermore, I have occasionally put variants from MSS, especially P as found in McCown, in the nn. See F. C. Conybeare, "The Testament of Solomon," JQR 11 (1898) 1-45 for another translation. The subheadings in bold type are those of the translator.

c. This Gk. title, along with others, is printed separately by McCown, Testament, p. 99*. In accord with McCown's judgments about rec. A being secondary at the beginning, I have selected the rec. B (MSS P Q) text here. MS I of rec. A reads, "Solomon, Son of David, who reigned in Jerusalem; and concerning the demons whom he subdued, and what are the authorities against the demons to be granted to him by God, and by what angels the demons are thwarted, and the works of the Temple which he (so) magnificently accomplished," with the words "Testament of [f]" written by another hand and placed in the margin above. Perhaps the original Gk. implied "concerning," that is, "Concerning Solomon . . . and concerning the demons . . .," and the scribe, seeing the genitive form (Solomōntos), interpreted it as a possessive genitive, or "Testament of Solomon . . ." as in rec. B. MS H of rec. A states simply, "An account about the Testament of Solomon, the coming of the demons, and the construction of the Temple." Rec. C (MSS V W), found in McCown, Testament, p. 99*, states, "Testament of the wisest Solomon with its parallel names which were guarded as mysteries by Hezekiah after David the king died." There is a lengthy tradition mentioned in the Talmud (Bet 10a; Pes 56a) and found in early Christian writers that Hezekiah suppressed Solomon's magical writings (cf. Introduction) and this tradition has influenced TSol C 13. See McCown, Testament, pp. 36, 98-100 and pp. 85-87*; also McCown, "The Christian Tradition as to the Magical Wisdom of Solomon," JPOS 2 (1922) 5-7, 9-14. See also TSol 26:8, n. f.

d. Solomon is called Son of David in Gk. titles of MSS P Q I; MS L and rec. C; Prologue 1:1; rec. C 12:1; 13:12; MS D 1:1; MS E 11:1; MS H 26:9; and in McCown, TSol 1:7; 20:1. He is called "son of the prophet David" in MS E 1:1; 2:1. The address "Son of David" could be a link between the magical tradition about Solomon and the activity of Jesus as exorcist and healer.

e. The Gk. verb katargeō is translated throughout TSol as "I thwart." It can mean "I make ineffective," "I make powerless," or "I abolish," "I wipe out," "I set aside." A usual demand of Solomon is that the demon identify the name of the thwarting angel. To know the angel who has power over a demon is to be able to ward off the demon and solve the trouble. The demon Asmodeus later indicates that if men do not know the names of demons, the latter will be worshipped as gods (TSol 5:5). The term katargeō is used to describe the annihilation of the "lawless one" at the coming of the Lord in 2Thes 2:8.

f. McCown combined rec. A (MSS H I; MS L is printed separately in Testament, p. 5* beginning with TSol 1:1) with rec. B (MSS P Q) in this Prologue; rec. C has a lengthy five-verse Prologue; see McCown, Testament, pp. 76*f.

g. The Prologue is apparently meant to be in the third person; TSol is told in the first person.

Ornias the demon tries to interfere with the boy who helps Solomon build the Temple^a

1 I Once upon a time,^b when the Temple of the city of Jerusalem was being built 1Kgs 6-7 2 and the artisans were working on it, •Ornias the demon^c came as the sun was
 (2) setting and took half the wages and provisions of^d the master workman's^e little boy.^f Also, each day (the demon) was sucking^g the thumb of (the boy's) right hand. So the little boy, who was much loved by me, grew thin.

Solomon interrogates the boy^h

3 But I, Solomon, interrogated the boy one day and said to him, "Have I not
 (3) loved you more than all the other artisans working in the Temple of God, and have I not been paying you double wages and provisions? Why then are you growing thinner every day?"
 4 The boy said, "I beg you, King, listen to what is happening to me. After we
 (4) are dismissed from work on the Temple of God, when the sun has set and I am resting, an evil spirit comes and makes off with half my pay and half my provisions.
 Also he grabs my right hand and sucks my thumb. You can see that when my soul is in distress, my body grows thinner every day."

1 a. TSol 1:1 begins with rec. B in McCown (MSS P Q) mainly because it is in the first person. Note that McCown's preferred rec. is printed first where he prints more than one rec. in the main text. See TSol 1:2, n. h.

b. A free translation of the biblical kai idou, "and behold." MSS H I of rec. A begin, "Once upon a time, when Jerusalem was being built and the artisans were at work, a certain boy who had tremendous enthusiasm for the construction of the Temple was making the artisans more enthusiastic for their work and all who heard about it were rejoicing over the boy's enthusiasm. As a result he was much loved by me, Solomon, and received twice as much pay and provisions as all the other artisans. So I, Solomon, was continually rejoicing and happy, praising God for the construction of the Temple." MS L of rec. A reads, "Solomon, Son of David, wanting to rebuild and construct Zion, commanded that there be brought together artisans from every region and district to work on the Temple of God . . ." and continues in TSol 1:1 much like the others; see below, TSol 1:2, n. h. After its extensive Prologue (see above, n. f), rec. C (MSS V W) is similar to A and B, but describes the boy as "exceedingly strong and a master craftsman, whom the king loved very much because he (the boy) was wise and kind. So the king sent him food from his table and was paying him double wages by means of the meal." This identification of the boy with the master craftsman (architecthnitēs) is one possible rendering of the meaning of TSol 1:2; see below, n. f.

c. Rec. C (MSS V W) calls him the "pesky demon named Ornias." Rec. A does not name him until TSol 1:10; see below, TSol 1:10, n. m.

d. Recs. A (MSS H I) and B (MSS P Q) merge at this point; see McCown, Testament, p. 6, n. 3. MS L of rec. A continues, "After being paid and dismissed from work, the evil spirit would come and [cry out. Then the reader spoke for the third time of the one who was talking loudly over the crowded room; then] take the finger of the boy's right hand . . ." The puzzling words beginning with "cry out" and ending with "room; then" seem to be a comment about confusion in the scriptorium.

e. Gk. tou prōtomaīstoros, from ho prōtomaīstōr, is conjectured as "master workman" in Lampe, p. 1200; Conybeare (JQR 11 [1898] 15) translates "chief deviser."

f. Gk. to hēmisu tou mishou tou prōtomaīstoros paidariou ontos kai ta hēmisu sitia. This might be read "half the wages of the master workman, being a little boy, as well as half his provisions," in which case it would agree with rec. C in identifying the boy as a "master craftsman"; see above, n. b.

g. Gk. buzanō, "I suckle," is a cognate of ta buzia, "the breasts," in TSol 18:35; cf. Lampe, p. 306. The demon is capable of "sapping" the boy's energy by sucking it out of the thumb; see the boy's description in TSol 1:4.

h. McCown, Testament, p. 8*, now begins to print all of rec. A (MSS H I L) with rec. B (MSS P Q) with variant readings of words in the apparatus; rec. C (MSS V W) reads, "Then one day King Solomon stretched out his hands toward heaven and said, 'God of gods and alone King of kings, reveal to me the boy's complete torment for the sake of your fearful and all-holy name.' Then a voice came, saying, 'Speak as follows into the right ear of the boy: 'Daphōn, Magata, Palipoul.' Then write these words on a piece of parchment made from an unborn animal. Commit it to fire and burn it up, holding also in your hand the grass called ivy and a healing stone; and at the fifth hour of the night, question the boy, and he will tell you everything.' When he had heard these things and performed them to the letter, Solomon questioned the boy." The parchment from "an unborn animal" (agenetos chartes) refers to fine quality velum from the fetus of an animal; "a healing stone" (lithos iasaphētēs) may refer to a jasper; see Lampe, p. 662 (cf. 1En 18:7). Josephus reports that the Essenes did "research into medicinal roots and the properties of stones for the healing of diseases" (War 2.8.6).

Through the archangel Michael the Lord God grants Solomon the magical ring which gives Solomon power over the demons

5 When I, Solomon, heard these things, I went into the Temple of God and,
 (5) praising him day and night, begged with all my soul that the demon might be 6 delivered into my hands and that I might have authority over him. •Then it happened that while I was praying to the God of heaven and earth, there was granted me from the Lord Sabaothⁱ through the archangel Michael^j a ring which had a seal 7 engraved on precious stone.^k •He said to me, “Solomon, Son of David,^l take the gift which the Lord God, the highest Sabaoth, has sent to you; (with it) you shall imprison all the demons, both female and male, and with their help you shall build Jerusalem when you bear this seal of God.”

5:13
 18:1; 20:7
 Dan 10:13,20f.:
 12:1
 Jub 1:29f.
 1En 20:5f.:
 68:1f.
 3Bar 11-15
 Jude 9
 Rev 12:7
 PssSol 17:23
 Mk 10:47f.:
 12:35
 Mt 1:1,20; 9:27;
 12:23; 15:22;
 20:20,31;
 21:9,15

According to Solomon's instructions, the boy brings back the demon with the aid of the magical ring

8 Now I became so joyful that I continually sang hymns of praise to the God of
 (6) Heaven and earth and glorified him. The next day, I ordered the child to come to 9 me and I gave the seal to him. •Then I said to him, “At the moment the demon appears to you, fling this ring into his chest and say to him, ‘Come! Solomon summons you!’ and come running back to me as fast as you can before he says anything that would frighten you.”

10 Now it happened that at his usual time the pesky demon Ornias^m came like a
 (7) flaming fireⁿ to take the little boy's pay, as was his custom. •According to Solomon's 11 instructions to him, the little boy flung the ring into the chest of the demon and said to him, “Come! Solomon summons you!” and started to take off running to 12 Solomon as fast as he could go. •But the demon screamed^o and said to the little boy, “Why have you done this? Remove the ring and give it back to Solomon, and I shall give you all the silver and gold of the earth.”

13 But the little boy replied, “As the Lord God of Israel lives, I will never withstand
 (8) you if I do not deliver you to Solomon.” Then the little boy went and spoke to Solomon, “King Solomon, I brought the demon to you just as you commanded

1:11; 3:3
 2:1
 9:3; 20:6f., 11
 LetAris 47

1:9; 3:3

Jude 8:19

i. Gk. ho Kyrios, “the Lord,” translates YHWH, the name of God, in the LXX; sabaōth is an indeclinable transliteration of the Heb. šabah, “army.” The meaning is “Lord of the (heavenly) armies.”

j. Heb. Mikā'el, “who is like (the Canaanite god) El.” Michael in the Book of Daniel is called a “chief prince” or “prince” who assists the angel Gabriel against the “prince” of the kingdom of Persia; cf. Dan 10:13, 21; 12:1. In general, he is the protector of the Jewish people. In Jude 9, he is an “archangel” who contends with the devil about the body of Moses (who, according to Jewish tradition, was charged by the devil with being a murderer and therefore not worthy of burial); in Rev 12:7 he leads the angelic armies against the dragon, and his angels cause the latter to be expelled from heaven. See Eitrem, Papyri Graecae Magicae (Leipzig, 1928) p. 111.

k. On magical rings in general, see Eitrem, Papyri Graecae Magicae, p. 112. The connection of Solomon with a magical ring is first documented in Josephus, Ant 8.2.5. The MSS of TSol carry on this seal tradition, e.g. it is a pentalpha (MSS P Q), a thirty-one-letter word written in the second and third of a series of concentric circles (MS L), an engraving with “O Lord our God” plus a group of Semitic-sounding names (MSS H L); the medieval MSS of Solomonic literature frequently contain primitive sketches of these seals. For bibliography, see Duling, HTR 68 (1975) 236, n. 7, and 244, n. 39.

l. On Son of David, see TSol 1:00, n. d.

m. For Ornias, see TSol 1:1, n. c; 2:1; 20:6f.; NHC VIII, 1:127, 22. Chalepos, “pesky,” or “hard to bear,” “hard to deal with,” “troublesome,” “difficult,” “mischievous,” “ill-tempered,” describes the Gerasene demoniacs in Mt 8:28.

n. Demons occasionally appear as fire in hellenistic literature; see Lampe, p. 1208; Acts 7:30 states that an angel appeared to Moses on Mount Sinai “in a flame of fire in a bush.”

o. The Gk. verb kraugazō, “I shout,” describes the response of the exorcised demons who “shout” that Jesus is the Son of God in Lk 4:41.

me; observe how he is standing bound^p in front of the gates outside, crying out^q Mk 5:5; 9:39 with a great voice to give me all the silver and gold of the earth so that I would not deliver him to you.”

Solomon interrogates the demon, learns his name and his activity, and by the power of the seal ring commands him to work on the Temple

- 1 2 When I heard these things, I, Solomon, got up from my throne and saw the (9) demon shuddering and trembling with fear. I said to him, “Who are you? What is your name?” The demon replied, “I am called Ormias.”^a 1:10f.; 9:3; 20:6f.; 20:11 LetAris 47
- 2 I said to him, “Tell me, in which sign of the zodiac^b do you reside?” The
(10) demon replied, “In Aquarius;^c I strangle those who reside in Aquarius because of their passion for women whose zodiacal sign is Virgo.^d • Moreover, while in a
3 trace I undergo three transformations. Sometimes I am a man who craves the bodies of effeminate boys and when I touch^e them, they suffer great pain. Sometimes I become a creature with wings (flying) up to the heavenly regions. Finally, I
4 assume the appearance of a lion.^f • In addition, I am descended from an archangel of the power of God,^g but I am thwarted^h by Ouriel, the archangel.”ⁱ 2En 21:6; 30:3f. SibOr 5:209, 521,527
- 5 When I, Solomon, heard the archangel’s name mentioned, I honored and glorified
(11) the God of heaven and earth. After I sealed (the demon) with my seal, I ordered him into the stone quarry to cut for the Temple stones which had been transported
6 by way of the Arabian Sea and dumped along the seashore.^j • But being terrified to touch iron,^k he said to me, “I beg you, King Solomon, let me have a measure
7 of freedom, and I shall bring up all the demons.” • Since he did not want to be 2:4; 8:9; 18:7, 27

p. “Binding” demons is a common theme in apocryphal and pseudepigraphic literature. The angel Raphael has the task of binding the demon Asmodeus (Tob 3:17; 8:3; cf. TSol 5: 13:6); Raphael was also commanded to bind Azazel “hand and feet, and cast him into the darkness” (1En 10:4; 6–13) where he would eventually be judged; the fallen angels (cf. Gen 6:1–4), described as “stars” and “beasts” (1En 90:23–24; Jub 5:6; Jude 6–7; cf. TSol 5:1; 6:2), are bound presumably by the angels Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, and Phanuel; the hosts of Azazel will be bound in the future (1En 54–56); and Beliar will be bound by the “new priest” (TLav 18:12). Also, demons are frequently bound, and portrayed as such in art, in the Aramaic Incantation Bowls. See TSol 5:12, n. p. Finally, note M. Eliade, “The ‘God Who Binds’ and the Symbolism of Knots,” ch. 3 of Images and Symbols, trans. P. Mairet (New York, 1969), especially p. 94, n. 9, for literature.

q. The Gk. verb krazō, “I cry out,” like kraugazō (n. o), is also used of demons in the NT; cf. the Gaderene demoniac (Mk 5:3) and the deaf and dumb spirit in the boy (Mk 9:26; cf. Lk 9:39).

2 a. See TSol 1:2, n. c.

b. 2En 21:6 states that the twelve signs of the zodiac are above the seventh heaven and that their heavenly homes are in the ninth heaven.

c. Gk. ho Hydrochoos, “the Waterpouner.”

d. Gk. he Parthenos, “the Virgin,” second largest constellation, the goddess of love or mother goddess in myth (or Justice among the Greeks).

e. Gk. haptomenou, from haptomai, “I touch,” “I take hold of,” sometimes with reference to sexual intercourse with a woman; cf. 1Cor 7:1. Gk. thēlykos, the adjective that goes with paidion, “child,” “boy,” normally means “feminine” or “effeminate.” The reference appears to be either to sexual intercourse with young girls or sexual activity with effeminate boys.

f. Cf. Origen, Contra 6.30; the devil is said to go about like a roaring lion in 1Pet 5:8.

g. Gk. hē dynamis, “(the) power,” seems to refer to a personal, supernatural angel, or spirit, as it frequently does in Mediterranean religions; cf. Acts 8:10.

h. On the thwarting angel, see Title, n. e.

i. Seven archangels are named in 1En 20:1f. as Ouriel (“over the world and over Tartarus”), Raphael (“over the spirits of men”), Raguel (“takes vengeance on the world of luminaries”), Michael (“set over the best part of mankind and over chaos”), Saraqael (“set over the spirits, who sin in the spirit”), Gabriel (“over Paradise and the serpents and the cherubim”), and Remiel (“over those who rise”); cf. 1En 9:1; 10:1. The four archangels that are prominent in TSol—Michael, Uriel, Raphael, and Gabriel—are well attested together in Judaism in general and magic in particular. Uriel is probably Suriel, mentioned in Origen, Contra 6.30, as “bull-like.” In magical materials, he is lord of the second or third heaven. See TSol 18:7, n. k.

j. The Babylonian Talmud (b. Gitṭ 68ab) tells the story that Solomon sought the coveted stone-cutting worm, the shamir, to help build the Temple. After binding a male and a female demon, Solomon sent Benaiah to get the shamir from the Prince of Demons, Ashmedai; to bind him, Benaiah was given, among other things, a chain and a ring, each engraved with the divine name. See Introduction.

k. Conybeare, JQR 11 (1898) 18, n. 1, recalls the tradition in folklore that the evil demons fear iron; cf. T. Hopfner, Griechisch-ägyptischer Offenbarungszauber, 2 vols. (Leipzig, 1921–24) vol. 1, § 596. See TSol 5:12, n. p.

subject to me, I prayed that the archangel Ouriel would come to help me. Immediately I saw the archangel Ouriel descending to me from heaven.

1En 9:1; 10:1; 20:1
4Ezra 6:48f.
1En 60:7
2Bar 29:4

The archangel Ouriel aids Solomon in overcoming Ornias

⁸ The angel commanded sea monsters to arise out of the sea and he withered up ⁽¹²⁾ their species and cast his fate to the ground.¹ In this same way he also subjected the great demon Ornias to cut stones and to bring to completion the construction ⁹ of the Temple which I, Solomon, was in the process of building. •Again, I glorified the God of heaven and earth and I commanded Ornias to come near according to his fate. Then I gave him the seal and said, “Go and bring here to me the Prince of Demons.”^m

6:1f.; 16:3
Mk 3:22
Mt 9:34; 10:25;
12:24
Lk 11:15
Jn 12:31; 14:30;
16:11

Ornias the demon brings Beelzeboul, the Prince of Demons, to Solomon with the help of the magical ring

⁽¹³⁾ ¹ So Ornias took the ring and went to Beelzeboul,^a and said to him, “Come!
² Solomon summons you!” •But Beelzeboul said to him, “Tell me, who is the ³ Solomon of whom you speak?” •Then Ornias flung the ring into the chest of ⁴ Beelzeboul and replied, “Solomon the king summons you!” •Beelzeboul cried out like (one who is burned) from a great burning flame of fire, and when he had ⁵ gotten up, he followed (Ornias) under coercion and came to me. •When I saw the ⁽¹⁴⁾ Prince of Demons approaching, I glorified God and said, “Blessed are you, Lord God Almighty, who has granted to your servant Solomon wisdom, the attendant of your thrones,^b and who has placed in subjection all the power of the demons.”

Mk 3:22
Mt 10:25; 12:24
Lk 11:15
1:9,11
4:11; 8:11; 22:1;
24:3
1Kgs 4:29-34
(LXX)
Prov 1:1
Song 1:1
Eccl 1:1
WisSol 7:15-22;
8:10f.; 9:4
LAB 60

Solomon interrogates Beelzeboul

⁽¹⁵⁾ ⁶ Then I interrogated him and said, “Tell me, who are you?” The demon said, “I am Beelzeboul, the ruler of the demons.” I demanded that without interruption he sit next to me and explain the manifestations of the demons. Then he promised to bring to me all the unclean spirits bound. Again, I glorified the God of heaven and earth, continually giving thanks to him.

Solomon interrogates Onoskelis and learns of her activity

⁽¹⁶⁾ ¹ ⁴ I now asked the demon if there were any female demons. When he replied that there were, (I said that) I wanted to see (one). •Beelzeboul went off and showed ² me Onoskelis,^a who had a very beautiful form. Her body was that of a woman

1. This sentence is not clear. Gk. autōn tēn merida, “their species,” could mean “their part” or “their limb,” that is, a member of the body. Gk. autou tēn moiran, “his fate,” could also mean “his part,” and either sense could refer to Ouriel, whose fate is mentioned in the next vs. On the other hand, Conybeare, JQR 11 (1898) 18, n. 2, suggests that the angels and demons both have “destinies” which determine their powers from all eternity, an idea found in the Arabian Nights. “His” is therefore left intentionally ambiguous. See “Textual Emendations” at the end of the Introduction. The sea monsters are named as Behemoth (the male) and Leviathan (the female) in 4Ezra 6:48–52; 1En 60:7.

m. MS Q omits TSol 3:1–20:9; D omits 3:1–18:42; 19; 25–26; and has its own closing.

3 a. Gk. ho Beelzeboul is a NT name for the Prince of Demons by whose authority Jesus was accused by the Pharisees of exorcising demons; cf. Mt 12:24; Lk 11:15; Mk 3:22. In Mt 10:25, Jesus is called Beelzeboul. The Heb. ba'al-zebul is probably a contemptuous corruption of a Philistine god (2Kgs 1:2, 6), its obvious meaning being “lord of the flies.” LXX MSS have Beelzeboul, perhaps referring to Ugaritic Aleyan Baal, “Baal Prince.”

b. The Gk. phrase tōn sōn thronōn paredron sophian [or sophōn], “Wisdom, the attendant of your thrones,” occurs in WisSol 9:4. It is the tradition of Solomon’s wisdom which led to the belief in his power over the demons; cf. 1Kgs 4:29–34 (Heb 5:9–14).

4 a. The Gk. hē onoskelis means “she with the ass’s legs.” The term was used to describe Empusa, a hobgoblin able to assume various shapes. McCown, Testament, p. 67 (cf. p. 88), says she is probably the Gk. female demon, but her manner of birth is found also in Jewish sources (see below, n. d). In TSol she is a satyra, or female satyr. In Gk. myth, the satyr was a half-man, half-beast, a spirit that roamed the woods and hills. He was lustful and mischievous. On Gk. vases satyrs are portrayed as chasing nymphs or reveling at drinking with a fair complexion, but her legs were those of a mule.^b

^{3,4} When she came to me, I said to her, "Tell me who you are." •She responded, ⁽¹⁷⁾ "My name is Onoskelis. I am a spirit which has been made into a body. I recline in a den on the earth. I make my home in caves. However, I have a many-sided ⁵ character. •Sometimes I strangle men; sometimes I pervert them from their true
⁶ natures. Most of the time, my habitats are cliffs, caves, and ravines. •Frequently, I also associate with men who think of me as a woman, especially with those whose skin is honey-colored, for we are of the same constellation.^c It is also true that they worship my star secretly and openly. They do not know that they deceive ⁷ themselves and excite me to be an evildoer all the more. •For they want to obtain gold by remembering (me), but I grant little to those who seriously worship me."
⁸ Next I asked her how she came into being. She said, "I was generated from an ⁽¹⁸⁾ unexpected voice which is called a voice of the echo of a black heaven,^d emitted in matter."

⁹ I said to her, "By what heavenly body do you travel?" She replied, "By the ⁽¹⁹⁾ full moon, because by the moon I pass over more things." •Then I said, "What ¹⁰ angel thwarts you?"^e She responded, "One that is also in you, King!" •Now
¹¹ because I thought these (remarks were meant) in ridicule, I commanded a soldier to strike her. But she cried out in a loud voice and said, "I say to you, King, by God's wisdom I have been entrusted to your power."

3:5; 8:11; 22:1;
 24:3
 1Kgs 4:29-34

Onoskelis compelled to spin hemp for the construction ropes

¹² So I uttered the name of the Holy One of Israel^f and commanded her to spin the ⁽²⁰⁾ hemp for the ropes used in the construction of the Temple of God. She was sealed and bound in such a way that she was made powerless, so that she had to stand day and night to spin the hemp.

1Jn 2:20

Solomon interrogates Asmodeus and learns of his activity

¹ 5 I commanded another demon be brought to me; and he (Beelzeboul) brought ⁽²¹⁾ me the evil demon Asmodeus,^a bound. •I asked him, "Who are you?" He scowled ² at me and said, "And who are you?" •I said to him, "You (dare to) answer (so ³ arrogantly) when you have been punished like this?" He continued to give forth the same look and said to me, "How should I answer you? You are the son of a man, but although I was born of a human mother, I (am the son) of an angel;^b it is impossible for one of heavenly origin (to speak) an arrogant word to one of

Tob 3:8,17
 6:2
 Gen 6:1-4
 1En 6-8; 51:3;
 69:4f.; 86:1f.; 106:13
 2En 18:3
 2Bar 56:11-13

parties with the god of wine, Dionysus. Usually, they have horses' ears and tails as well as goats' legs and hoofs. Origen (Contra 6.30) mentions the Seven Ruling Demons who were probably accepted by the Ophians and described by Celsus; the seventh is said to have the appearance of an ass. See TSol 8 and nn.; Conybeare, JQR 11 (1898) 12-14.

b. Gk. ho hēmionos, "half-ass."

c. Apparently Onoskelis is referring to the constellation Capricorn, the Goat, which is the tenth sign of the zodiac. The ancients identified Capricorn with the god Pan, the god of forests and fields. Pan had goats' horns and hoofs, was a musician who played the pipes, and was always falling in love with the nymphs. See TSol 4:1, n. a.

d. The meaning is uncertain. The term translated "black" (ho molybdos) means "lead." The MSS attempt various explanations. Conybeare (JQR 11 [1898] 19 [see n. 8]), conjectures "ordure" and suggests an analogy between ho echos, "voice," "echo," and the "Daughter Voice" (Heb. bath kōl) in Jewish literature, which refers to God's voice. Also see LAB 60. James (The Biblical Antiquities of Philo [New York, 1971; reprint] p. 233) notes the Leyden Magical Papyrus quoted in A. Dieterich (Abraxas: Studien zur Religionsgeschichte des spätern Altertums [Leipzig, 1891] p. 17-19) which includes, "God laughed seven times, and when he laughed seven gods were born . . . He laughed the second time . . . and the earth heard the echo [ēchous] . . . and a god appeared"; p. 19 has kai egennēthē ek tou ēchous megas theos . . . or "a great god was begotten out of an echo."

e. Solomon's first question about a thwarting angel; see TSol Title, n. e.

f. Gk. to onoma tou Hagiou Israēl, "The Name of the Holy One of Israel," a circumlocution for Yahweh.

5 a. In Tob, Asmodeus is the evil demon who slays the seven husbands of Sarah before the marriages are consummated. TSol 5 has a number of contacts with the Tobit story; see especially TSol 5:9f.; Introduction on Rabbinic Ashmedai.

b. This comment is apparently based on the common Jewish interpretation of Gen 6:1-4 that the angels fell when they lusted after beautiful human women and produced children who were giants; see TSol 6:1f. and n. b.

- 4 earthly origin. • My constellation (is like an animal which) reclines in its den in heaven; some men call me the Great Bear, but others the Offspring of a Dragon.^c Moreover, a smaller constellation accompanies my constellation, for the high position and throne of my father is always in the sky.^d • So do not ask me so many things, Solomon, for eventually your kingdom will be divided. This glory of yours is temporary. You have us to torture for a little while; then we shall disperse^e among human beings again with the result that we shall be worshipped as gods because men do not know the names of the angels who rule over us.”
- 6 When I, Solomon, heard these things, I bound him with greater care. Then I (22) ordered him to be flogged with a rod and to defend himself by stating his name and (reporting) his activity. • The demon stated, “I am the renowned Asmodeus; I cause the wickedness of men to spread^f throughout the world. I am always hatching plots against newlyweds; I mar the beauty of virgins and cause their hearts to grow cold.”^g
- 8 I said to him, “Is this all that you do?” He spoke again: “I spread madness (23) about women through the stars^h and I have often committed a rash of murders.”ⁱ

15:8, 12
1Kgs 12
26:7
Deut 32:17
Ps 106:37
Bar 4:7
1En 19:1

5:1
Tob 3:8, 16f.
Tob 7:11f.

Asmodeus thwarted by the angel Raphael, as well as smoking liver and gall of a fish

- 9 Then I adjured him by the name of the Lord Sabaoth, “Asmodeus, fear God, (24) and tell me by which angel you are thwarted.” The demon said, “Raphael, the one who stands before God;^j but also a liver and a gall of a fish smoking on coals of charcoal drives me away.”^k • I asked him again, saying, “Do not hide anything from me, for I am Solomon, Son of David.^l Tell me the name of the fish you fear.” He replied, “It is called the sheatfish.^m It is found in the rivers of Assyria and it is hatched only there; I am also found in those parts.”

Tob 3:17; 5:4;
6:10f.; 9:5;
12:15
1En 9:1; 10:4;
20:3; 22:3, 6;
40:9; 54:6;
68:2f.; 71:8f.
1:7; 20:1

Tob 6:2

c. Gk. hamaxan, from hē hamaxa, otherwise called hē arktos, the constellation “The Greater Bear.” It is the third largest constellation, seven of its stars forming the Big Dipper. A hamaxa was the chassis of a wagon, or the four-wheeled wagon itself, and the Akkadians referred to “The Greater Bear” as “The Long Chariot.” Gk. drakontopoda, from ho drakontopais, “offspring of a dragon,” so Lampe, p. 386. Was the dragon the constellation Hydra?

d. Gk. mikrotera astra, “a smaller constellation,” perhaps a reference to “The Smaller Bear,” otherwise known as the Little Dipper. Does the reference to “my father” refer to Polaris at the tip of the handle of the Little Dipper?

e. Gk. nomen echomen, “we have pasture.” The spreading out of sheep in a pasture was used figuratively for the diffusion of disease through the body like a cancer.

f. Gk. oidainomai, “I cause to swell,” a medical term.

g. Gk. alloioō, “I change,” “I alter,” usually for the worse, thus “to grow cold.” The references to newlyweds, virgins, and Asmodeus clearly allude to story of Tobit; cf. Tob 3:8; 3:16f.; 8:2f. and TSol 5:1, n. a.

h. Gk. dia tōn astrōn, “through the stars.” K. Dieterich (Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der griechischen Sprache von der hellenistischen Zeit bis zum 10. Jahrhundert nach Christus [Byzantinisches Archiv als Ergänzung der Byzantinischen Zeitschrift, Heft 1; Leipzig, 1898] pp. 220, 230f.) suggested the verb strōnō, “I spread,” was perhaps an error for oistrō, “I sting [or “goad”] to madness” (like a gadfly). Perhaps the stars themselves are mad about women, that is, they are demons, so Lampe, p. 650. If so, the implication could be the fallen angels again; see TSol 5:3f.; 6:1f.; and n. b.

i. Gk. eis trikumias kai heōs heptas ēphoneusa, “I have committed murder for a group of three waves [e.g. a mighty wave or swell] and up to seven.” MS I ends at this point; MSS V W omit TSol 5:6–8.

j. Raphael, according to a vision of Enoch in 1En 71, is one of the heavenly angels who accompanies the Head of Days. In 1En 40:9 he is set over all the diseases and all the wounds of mankind.

k. In Tob, Raphael instructs Tobit to remove the gall, heart, and liver of a fish taken from the Tigris River (see “rivers of Assyria” in the next vs.), promising that they will be useful for medication. In Media, Raphael tells Tobit that the smoking heart and liver before a man or woman who is attacked by a demon or evil spirit will result in the demon’s fleeing forever; this method is then applied by Tobit against Asmodeus on Tobit’s and Sarah’s wedding night; see TSol 5, nn. a and g. Raphael then pursues the demon to Egypt, where he binds and fetters him (TSol 1:13, n. r). The gall is later used to cure Tobit’s blindness. In TSol, the liver and gall are smoked.

l. TSol Title, n. d.

m. Gk. ho, hē glanis, “sheatfish,” a large catfish, so LSJM, p. 350.

Asmodeus required to mold clay for the vessels of the Temple

11 I said to him, "Is there not something else about you,ⁿ Asmodeus?" He said
 (25) to me, "The power of God which binds me with unbreakable bonds by his seal knows that what I have related to you is true. I beg you, King Solomon, do not 12 condemn me to water."^o But I smiled and replied, "As the Lord, the God of my fathers lives, you shall have irons to wear^p and you shall mold clay for all the vessels of the Temple, eliminating the cost of the mold." Then I ordered ten water jars to be made available and (I commanded) him to be encircled^q by them. Though he complained bitterly, the demon carried out the things which he had been 13 commanded. Asmodeus did this because he also had knowledge of the future. •So I, Solomon, glorified God, who gave me this authority; then, taking the liver and the gall of the fish, along with a branch of storax,^r I lit a fire under Asmodeus because he was powerful, and his voice was thwarted, as well as a tooth full of venom.^s

11:6
Mk 5:13
2:6

1:0
1:5

Solomon interrogates Beelzeboul again and learns of his activities

1 6 Then I summoned Beelzeboul to appear before me again. When he was seated,
 (26) I thought it appropriate to ask him, "Why are you alone Prince of the Demons?"^a
 2 He replied, "Because I am the only one left of the heavenly angels (who fell).^b 3 I was the highest-ranking angel in heaven, the one called Beelzeboul. •There also accompanied me another ungodly (angel) whom God cut off and now, imprisoned here, he holds in his power the race of those bound by me in Tartarus.^c He is being nurtured in the Red Sea;^d when he is ready, he will come in triumph."
 4 I said to him, "What are your activities?" He replied, "I bring destruction by
 (27) means of tyrants; I cause the demons to be worshipped alongside men; and I arouse

2:9; 3:1f.; 3:6f.;
10:3

5:3
Gen 6:1-4
1En 6-11
Jub 5:1-9

1En 20:2
Sib 4:186
12:4; 23-25

n. Gk. ouden heteron para sou, "nothing else about you?" The context suggests that Solomon wants to know the truth of what has already been said.

o. Demons often prefer desert regions; cf. Mk 1:12f.; Jesus condemns the Gerasene demoniac to the swine, who then stampede down the cliff into the sea; cf. Mk 5:13.

p. Gk. sidera echeis phoresai, "you have iron to wear," is loosely translated. Ormas is said to fear iron in TSol 2:5 (cf. TSol 2:5, n. k). On binding, see TSol 1:13, n. f. In the Aramaic Incantation Bowls from 6th-cent. Babylon primitive art occasionally shows the demon wearing irons. An Aram. incantation bowl reads, "bound is the bewitching lilith who haunts the house of Zakoy, with a belt of iron on her pate; bound is the bewitching lilith with a peg of iron in her nose; bound is the bewitching lilith with pinchers of iron in her mouth; bound is the bewitching lilith who haunts the house of Zakoy with a chain of iron on her neck; bound is the bewitching lilith with fetters of iron on her hands; bound is the bewitching lilith with stocks of stone on her feet . . ." (See C. H. Gordon, "Two Magic Bowls in Teheran," Orientalia 20 [1951] 310.)

q. Gk. perichonnumsthai. Gk. perichonnumi means "heap earth around" and in the passive voice "to be covered with." Perhaps the meaning is that the demon was drenched with the water in the jars.

r. Gk. meta klasmatos styrakos leukou. Gk. ho styrax means "the spike at the butt end of a spear shaft"; cf. Conybeare's translation of MS P as "spike of a reed" (p. 21). Gk. hē styrax means "the shrub or tree which yields the gum called storax." Storax is a fragrant balsam obtained from the bark of an Asiatic tree (Liquidambar orientalis) of the witchhazel family that was used as incense, an ingredient of perfume, or a respiratory decongestant. The term can refer also to shrubs or trees of the storax family; these have clusters of drooping white flowers. McCown (Testament, p. 25) conjectures lotou, that is, ho lotus, referring to plants and trees of the lotus family, or to fodder plants such as clover; see LSJM, p. 1070. The translation "storax" is suggestive because it can be used medicinally for the respiratory system and it is Asmodeus' voice that is thwarted.

s. Gk. kai plērēs odous pikrias, "and a full tooth of venom." MS L has kai plērois hodou pikrias, "and with (words) full of the way of malice." See "Textual Emendations."

6 a. TSol 3:1, n. a.

b. The widespread Jewish myth that the angels fell because they lusted after beautiful human women and produced children who were giants is based on Gen 6:1-4. A Gk. version that renders "sons of God" in this passage as "angels of God" is preserved in Philo Gig, Justin Martyr Apol 2:5, Eusebius, Augustine, and Ambrose. The myth is well illustrated by 1En 6-11, but is found in many Jewish and early Christian writings; see APOT, vol. 2, p. 191 for numerous references.

c. Tartarus, the murky world of darkness, or hell; the place in which the wicked are punished. See TSol 2:4, n. i.

d. This second demon refers to the one-winged demon Abezethibou, who lived in the first heaven, who was Moses' adversary in Egypt, and who was trapped in the Red Sea when the parted waters returned, so TSol 23-25.

desire in holy men and select priests. I bring about jealousies and murders in a country, and I instigate wars.”^e

⁵ Then I said to him, “Bring to me the one you said is being nurtured in the Red ⁽²⁸⁾ Sea.” He retorted, “I will bring no one back to you. But there will come a certain demon whose name is Ehippas^f who will bind him and bring him up out of the 12:4; 22:1-24:5
 6 abyss.” •I responded, “Tell me why he is in the abyss of the Red Sea and what his name is.” He, however, said, “Do not ask me; you are not able to learn that 7 from me. He will come to you because I, too, am with you.” •So I said to him, 24:1f.
 “Tell me in which star you reside.” “The one called by men the Evening Star,”^g he said.

Beelzeboul thwarted by “the Almighty God”

⁸ Then I said, “Tell me which angel thwarts you.” “The Almighty God,” he ⁽²⁹⁾ replied. “He is called by the Hebrews Patike,^h the one who descends from the heights; he is (called) by the Greeks Emmanouel.ⁱ I am always afraid of him, and trembling. If anyone adjures me with the oath (called) ‘the Elo-i,’^j a great name for his power, I disappear.” 11:6; 15:11
 Isa 7:14; 8:8
 Mt 1:23
 Ps 22:1
 Mk 15:34
 Mt 27:46

Beelzeboul compelled to cut marble for the Temple

⁹ Now when I, Solomon, heard these things, I commanded him to cut blocks of ⁽³⁰⁾ Theban marble.^k As he was beginning to cut, all the demons cried out with a loud voice because (he was their) king, Beelzeboul.

Beelzeboul required to inform Solomon about heavenly things

¹⁰ Nevertheless, I, Solomon, persisted in interrogating him, saying, “If you wish ⁽³¹⁾ to obtain a release, inform me about heavenly things.” Beelzeboul replied, “Listen, King, if you burn oil of myrrh, frankincense, and bulbs of the sea^l along with spikenard and saffron, and light seven lamps during an earthquake,^m you will strengthen (your) house. And if, being ritually clean, you light (them) at the crack of dawn, just before the sun comes up, you will see the heavenly dragons and the 11 way they wriggle along and pull the chariot of the sun.”ⁿ •When I, Solomon, ⁽³²⁾ heard these things, I rebuked him and said, “Be silent^o and continue cutting marble just as I ordered you.” 2Kgs 23:11
 Sir 72:5; 75:3f.
 SibOr 5:22

e. MS P reads, ‘I, Solomon, said to him, ‘Beelzeboul, what is your activity?’ And he said, ‘I destroy kings; I ally myself with foreign tyrants. I impose my demons on men in order that they might believe in them and be destroyed. And I excite desire in the chosen servants of God, priests and faithful men, for wicked sins, evil heresies, and lawless deeds; they obey me and I lead them to destruction. I also inspire men with envy, murder, wars, sodomy, and other evil things. And I will destroy the world.’”

f. TSol 22–24. Ehippas is an Arabian wind demon who will eventually be trapped in Arabia by Solomon’s boy servant; the demon then helps bring back the Red Sea demon, Abezethibou.

g. Gk. hesperia, hē, “the Western Star,” or “the Evening Star,” perhaps with reference to the planet Venus.

h. Conybeare (JQR 11 [1898] 11) notes that Jesus is called “the God of the Hebrews” in the Paris Magical Papyrus 3009. Is Patikē a corruption of ho patēr, “father”?

i. MS P states, “I said to him, ‘Tell me by what angel you are thwarted.’ And he replied, ‘By the holy and precious name of the almighty God, the one called by the Hebrews by a row of numbers, of which the sum is 644, and among the Greeks it is Emmanouël [E = 5; m = 40; m = 40; a = 1; n = 50; o = 70; u = 400; ē = 8; l = 30]. And if one of the Romans adjure me by the great name of power, Eleëth, I disappear.” See Introduction.

j. Aram. “my God”; cf. Ps 22:1 and Jesus’ cry on the cross (Mk 15:34; Mt 27:46).

k. Presumably, Thebes in Egypt.

l. Conybeare (JQR 11 [1898] 22, n. 5) writes, “Perhaps the ‘sea-bulbs’ were balls of hair-like texture which the sea washes up on Mediterranean shores, e.g. in Tunisia.”

m. Gk. en seismō, “in motion,” perhaps swinging. Conybeare (JQR 11 [1898] 6) conjectures eirmō, “in a row.”

n. The view in classical myth was that the sun drove a chariot pulled by horses across the sky from sea to sea.

o. Gk. siōpēsai, “be silent.” Jesus so rebukes the unclean spirit in Mk 1:25.

Solomon interrogates Lix Tetrax, the demon of the wind

- 1 7 After I praised God, I, Solomon, requested the presence of another demon and he appeared before me. He was crawling his face on the air high above and the 2 remaining part of his body was crawling along like a little snail. •Suddenly, he broke through a large contingent of soldiers, raised up a blustering cloud of dust from the earth, transported it upward, and hurled it against me many times (while I watched) in amazement. I exclaimed, “What do we have here?”^a [But this
 3 continued] for a long time.^b •When I stood up, I spat on the ground at that spot and I sealed (him) with the ring of God. As a result, the moving air stopped. Then I asked him, saying, “Who are you?” After he had stirred up another cloud of 4 dust, he answered me, “What do you want, King Solomon?” •I answered him, “Tell me what you are called; also, I want to interrogate you.” Thus, I give thanks to God who instructs me as to how to respond to their evil plots.
- 5 So the demon said to me, “I am called Lix Tetrax.”^c “What is your activity?”
 (33) I queried. He responded, “I create divisions among men, I make whirlwinds, I start fires, I set fields on fire, and I make households non-functional. Usually, I carry on my activity in the summertime. If I get the chance, I slither in under the corners of houses during the night or day. I am the direct offspring of the Great
 6 One.”^d •I asked him, “In which constellation do you reside?” He replied, “Toward the very tip of the horn of the moon when it is found in the South—there is my star. Therefore, I was assigned to draw out the fever which strikes for a day and a half. As a result, many men, when they see (this), pray about the day-and-a-half fever, (invoking) these three names, ‘Baltala, Thallal, Melchal,’ and I heal them.”
 7 Then I, Solomon, said to him, “But when you wish to do evil, who grants you the power?” He replied, “The angel by whom also the day-and-a-half fever is stopped.”

Jub 2:2
1En 60:12

8:11
Jub 2:2
4Mac 7:11

The demon Lix Tetrax, thwarted by the archangel Azazel, is compelled to help raise stones for the Temple workmen

- Finally, I asked him, “By what name are you thwarted?” He responded, “The 8 name of the archangel Azazel.”^e •Then I placed my seal on the demon and commanded him to pick up stones and hurl them up to the heights of the Temple for the workmen; compelled, the demon complied with his orders.

Solomon interrogates the seven heavenly bodies of this world of darkness, and learns of their activities and thwarting angels

- 1 8 Again, I glorified God, who gave me this authority, and I commanded another
 (34) demon to appear before me. There came seven spirits bound up together hand and foot, fair of form and graceful. When I, Solomon, saw them, I was amazed and 2 asked them, “Who are you?” •They replied, “We are heavenly bodies,^a rulers

1En 18:13f.;
21:1f.

15:5; 18:2,4
Gal 4:3,9

7 a. Gk. tina echō erōtēsai, “Whom do I have to ask?”

b. Gk. heōs epi polu, “as long as much.” The meaning is uncertain.

c. Gk. Lix Tetrax. Lix is a magical term referring to the earth, 803; tetrax refers to a four-seasoned year; see Lampe, pp. 803, 1391. McCown (Testament, p. 67) followed by Preisendanz (Pauly-Wissowa Sup. 8, col. 686) identifies Lix Tetrax as an old Ephesian name which, in a tablet from Crete, is connected with a wind. “Blast demons” are found in the Aram. incantation texts; see C. H. Gordon, Orientalia 10 (1941) 121.

d. Gk. tou megalou, “the great [name unknown].” The reference is not clear; perhaps it refers to Beelzeboul. The goddess Artemis, whose worship centered in Ephesus, was called “the Great” (cf. Acts 19:24, 27f., 34f.); she is mentioned in TSol 8:11; see TSol 8:11, n. m.

e. The name Azazel, found in 2Ezra 9:14, is not mentioned in the lists of the archangels in 1En 9–10; Azazel, mentioned in relation to the scapegoat sent into the desert in Lev 16:8, 26, becomes an archdemon in Jewish literature, perhaps because demons were believed to dwell in the desert (cf. Isa 31:21; 34:11f.; Tob 8:3; Mt 12:43; 1En 9:6; 10).

8 a. Gk. esmen stoicheia, “we are heavenly bodies.” In antiquity the stoicheia are mentioned as letters of the alphabet (TSol 17:4); the four basic elements of the world, namely, earth, air, fire, and

- 3 of this world of darkness."^b •The first said, "I am Deception." The second said, "I am Strife." The third said, "I am Fate." The fourth said, "I am Distress." Col 2:8,20
Eph 6:12
- 4 The fifth said, "I am Error." The sixth said, "I am Power." •The seventh said, "I am The Worst. Our stars in heaven look small, but we are named like gods. We change our position together and we live together, sometimes in Lydia, sometimes in Olympus, sometimes on the great mountain."^c
- 5 Then I, Solomon, continued questioning them, beginning with the first. "Tell 18:28 18:33
(35) me what you do." He responded, "I am Deception. I plot deception and I devise the most evil heresies. But there is one who thwarts me, the angel Lamechiel."^d
- 6 The second said, "I am Strife. I cause strife by making available clubs, pellets, 2:4; 2:7f.; 18:7
4Ezra 6:48f
1En 9:1; 10:1f.
(36) and swords, my implements of war. But I have an angel who thwarts me, Baruchiel."^e
- 7 Likewise, the third said, "I am called^f Fate. I cause every man to fight in battle 18:28
18:33
(37) rather than make peace honorably with those who are winning.^g But why am I talking so much? There is an angel who thwarts me, Marmaroth."^h
- 8 The fourth (, Distress,) said, "I cause men to lack moderation; I divide them Acts 19:24, 27f.,34f.
SibOr 5:293
(38) into factions; I keep them separated. Since Strife follows in my footsteps, I set men against each other and do many other similar things to them. But why am I talking so much? There is an angel who thwarts me, the great Balthioul."ⁱ
- 9 The fifth said, "I am Error, King Solomon, and I am leading you into error, 2:4; 2:7f.; 18:7
4Ezra 6:48f
1En 9:1; 10:1f.
(40) and I led you into error when I made you kill your brothers.^j I lead people into error by hunting for graves and I teach them (how) to dig them up. I lead (men's) minds to stray away from religion, and I do many other bad things. However, there is the angel who thwarts me, Ouriel."^k
- 10 Likewise, the sixth said, "I am Power. I raise up tyrants, I depose kings, and 18:28 18:33
(39) I grant power to all those who are enemies. There is an angel who thwarts me, Asteroath."^l
- 11 Similarly, the seventh said, "I am The Worst, and you, King, I shall harm Acts 19:24, 27f.,34f.
SibOr 5:293
(41) when I order (you to be bound) with the bonds of Artemis.^m Because these things affect you, you have desire like a beloved one, but to me (that is) a desire which water (WisSol 7:17; 19:18; 4Mac 12:13; Josephus, Ant 3.7.7; 2Pet 3:10f.); sometimes worshiped as deities (Philo, Vita Cont 3); and heavenly bodies, worthy of worship, often identified with the twelve signs of the zodiac (perhaps Gal 4:3, 9; Col 2:8, 20). One should compare the "seven spirits of deceit" in TReu 2f. and the "seven ruling demons" in Origen, Contra 6.30. Here they are demonic stars grouped by seven (cf. 1En 21:3), a sacred number in ancient astrology (TReu 2; Mt 12:45; Lk 8:2; 11:26; Rev 1:16, 20; 2:1; Origen, Contra 6.30). McCown (Testament, p. 70) states that these seven are to be identified with the Pleiades, the seven daughters of Atlas; originally they were stars, though only six are visible. Cf. Job 9:9; Amos 5:8. The stoicheia, who are the kosmokratores tou skotous (n. b), are the thirty-six decans of the zodiac in TSol 18; see TSol 18:2, 4, nn. d, f; cf. also TSol 15:5. See "Textual Emendations" on 8:4.

b. Gk. kosmokratores tou skotous, "world rulers of the darkness." In hellenistic religions, kosmokratores are gods or spirits who control parts of the cosmos. The Rabbis adopted the term to apply to evil spirits, specifically the angel of death. This phrase is linked with the stoicheia here and in TSol 18:2 (n. a). See also Eph 6:12.

c. Lydia was in southwestern Asia Minor and bordered Gk. colonies on its western border; Olympus, the highest mountain in northeastern Greece, was believed to reach up to the heavens and to be the abode of the gods; presumably "the great mountain" is a similar mythical mountain, or Olympus is being viewed as a mysterious abode of the gods above all mountains.

d. Lamechiel is not named among the archangels of 1En 9, 10; on Lamech, see Gen 4:18-24.

e. Baruchiel is also not named among the archangels of 1En; on "Baruch," meaning "blessed," see Jer 51:59.

f. Gk. kykliskomai, "I encircle." Perhaps "I am Fate. I encircle (soldiers) and cause (them) . . ."; McCown (Testament, p. 33) conjectures kiklēskomai, "I am called . . ."

g. Gk. perievousin, from periechō, "I surround," "I blockade," "I outflank."

h. Marmaroth; see TSol 18:28, n. z2, and Sepher Ha-Razim 4:10.

i. Balthioul does not seem to be mentioned elsewhere in this period.

j. Gk. tous adelphous, "the brothers." MS P reads ton adelphon sou, "your brother," probably a reference to 1Kgs 2:25, Solomon's execution of Adonijah. Note the reverse order of (39) and (40) in MS P.

k. TSol 2:4, n. i; 18:7, n. k.

l. Asteroath, perhaps a variation of a Canaanite fertility goddess Ashtoreth (deliberately misvocalized in Heb.). Solomon patronized her cult, 1Kgs 11:5.

m. Gk. kakōsō hote keleuthō Artimidos desmois, "I shall harm when I -? with the bonds of Artemis." Gk. keleuthō is not clear; Conybeare (JQR 11 [1898] 25, n. 5), following Fleck, conjectured keleusō, "I (should) order." In Gk. myth Artemis (a non-Gk. name) was usually a virgin huntress of corresponds to myself (which is) wisdom.^a For if anyone is wise, he will not follow in my steps."^o 3:5; 4:11; 22:1; 24:3

¹² But I, Solomon, when I heard these things, sealed them with the ring of God ⁽⁴²⁾ and commanded them to dig the foundation of the Temple. It stretched out 250 cubits in length. So all the things which were commanded them were accomplished. 1Kgs 7:2

Solomon interrogates the headless demon called Murder and learns of his activity and what thwarts him

¹ ⁽⁴³⁾ 9 Again I asked that other demons visit me in succession and there was brought to me a demon, a man (who had) all his limbs, but no head.^a I said to him, "Tell me who you are and what you are called." The demon replied, "I am called Murder; for I devour heads, wishing to get a head for myself, but I do not consume enough. I long for a head to do exactly what you do, King."

³ When I heard these things, I stretched out my hand against his chest and put ⁽⁴⁴⁾ my seal on him. Then the demon jumped up, tore himself loose, and muttered, saying, "Woe is me! How did I fall in with a traitor, Ormias? I do not see." So I said to him, "How is it possible for you to see?" He replied, "Through my breasts!" • When I, Solomon, heard the delight in his voice, I wished to learn more. So I asked him, "How is it possible for you to speak?" He responded, "My voice has taken over voices from many men; for I have closed up the heads of those among men who are called dumb. When infants are ten days old, and if one cries during the night, I become a spirit and I rush in and attack (the infant) through his voice. • What is more, my visit to premature (infants) is harmful. My strength happens to reside in my hands, that is, like (that which takes place) at an executioner's block.^b I grab hold of heads, cut (them) off, and attach (them) to myself; then, by the fire which is continually (burning) in me, I consume (them) through my neck. I am the one who inflames the limbs, inflicts the feet, and produces festering sores.^c • It is by a fiery flash of lightning that I am thwarted."⁷ ^(45,46) I ordered him to stay with Beelzeboul until the time when a friend might arrive.^d 1:1-3:4; 20:6-18; LetAris 47; 10:8

Solomon interrogates the doglike demon, Scepter

¹ ⁽⁴⁷⁾ 10 Then I ordered another demon to make his presence before me. He came before me in the form of a gigantic dog,^a and he spoke to me in a loud voice, SibOr 5:526

the wild and associated with the young of all living things, especially wildlife. She was therefore the goddess of birth and patroness of hunting. Sudden, violent deaths among women were said to come from her bow. Artemis of Ephesus, mentioned in Acts 19, was predominantly a mother goddess and patroness of fertility like Cybele or Ashtoreth; she was a many-breasted goddess housed in the Artemisium, one of the Seven Wonders of the Ancient World. See TSol 7:5, n. d.

n. Text uncertain; see "Textual Emendations."

o. Gk. ouk epistrepsei ichnos pros me, "a foot-step will not return to me."

9 a. Eitrem (Magical Papyri, p. 48) notes that the "headless demon" is an old Egyptian conception with astrological associations, and is known as the demon who causes quartan fever. McCown (Testament, p. 67) identifies him with the headless demon of the magical papyrus (Lond. P 46, 145ff.; Gr. Pap. Br. Mus. I, 69f.).

b. Gk. hōs epi xylou, "as upon wood." "Executioner's block" is suggested in Lampe, p. 933.

c. MS P (Conybeare, JQR 11, paragraph [45]) adds, "And when I, Solomon, heard these things, I said to him, 'Tell me how you discharge the fire. From what sources do you emit it?' The spirit replied, 'From the rising sun. For here there has not yet been found that Elbourn as the one to whom one prays. And men light lights to him, and the seven demons call upon his name before men and he heals them.' " For Anatolē, "rising sun," see LXX Zech 3:8; 6:12 where it translates the messianic "Shoot (of David)"; Lk 1:78. MS P (Conybeare, JQR 11, paragraph [46]) continues, "But I said to him, 'Tell me his name.' He answered, 'I cannot tell you. For if I tell his name, I make myself incurable. But he is one who responds to his name.' When I, Solomon, heard these things, I said to him, 'Tell me, therefore, by what angel you are thwarted.' He replied, 'By the fiery flash of lightning.' " MSS V W read, "When I, Solomon, heard these things, I said, 'Tell me, therefore by what angel you are thwarted.' He replied, 'Through the fiery angel.' "

d. Gk. mechri kai toutou philos paragenētai, perhaps "until the time when something pleasing might be present."

10 a. Origen (Contra 6.30) says that the sixth of the Seven Ruling Demons, according to Celsus, had the face of a dog, and in a diagram which he had obtained, the demon was called Eratoth; cf. TSol 18:1.

2 “Hail, O King Solomon!” •I was astounded and said to him, “Who are you, dog?” He said, “You suppose that I am a dog; but before your time, King, I was a man. I accomplished many unlawful deeds in the world and I was so extremely strong that I restrained the stars of heaven, and now I am preparing more evil works. •Consequently, I deceive men who follow my star closely and I lead (them) into stupidity; I also subdue the hearts^b of men through their throats and in this way I destroy (them).”

The demon Scepter helps Solomon obtain an emerald stone for the Temple and Solomon learns of Scepter’s thwarting angel

4,5 (48) I said to him, “What is your name?” He replied, “Scepter.” •Then I said to him, “What is your activity and why do you seem to me to be so prosperous?” The demon said, “Turn over your manservant to me and I shall spirit him off to a place in the mountains where I shall show him an emerald stone shaken loose from its foundation. With it, you will adorn the Temple of God.”

6 (49) When I heard these things, I immediately ordered my household servant to accompany him and to take the ring bearing God’s seal with him. I told him, “Go with him and whoever shows you the emerald stone, seal him with the ring, observe the place in detail, and bring the ring back to me.” •So when (the demon) went out and showed him the emerald stone, (the household servant) sealed him with the ring of God, and brought the emerald stone back to me.^c •I then decided to have the two demons, the headless one and the dog, bound, and (to request that) the stone be carried about day and night like, as it were, a light for the working artisans.^d

9 (50) Next I extracted from that moving stone 200 shekels for the supports of the altar,^e for the stone was shaped like a leek. •Then I, Solomon, when I had glorified the Lord God, locked up the treasure chest containing the stone^f and commanded the demons to cut marble for the construction of the Temple. Also, I asked the dog in private, “By which angel are you thwarted?” He replied, “By the great Briathos.”^g

9:1-7

Solomon interrogates the Lion-Shaped Demon

1 (51) I commanded another demon to come before me. He came roaring like a stately lion and he took his place and questioned me by word: “King Solomon, I have this particular form (and am) a spirit which can never be bound. •I am one who sneaks in and watches over all who are lying ill with a disease and I make it impossible for man to recover from his taint.^a •I have another activity. I involve the legions of demons subject to me for I am at the places (where they are) when the sun is setting.^b The name for all demons which are under me is legion.”^c

Mk 5:9,15
Mt 26:53

b. Gk. tas phrenas, “the hearts,” or “the minds,” “the thoughts,” refers to the midriff regions. The meaning is literal; the way to the midriff is through the throat.

c. An odd sequence since the ring was to be returned; see “Textual Emendations.”

d. At vs. 8, MS P seems to read, “to bind the two, the headless demon, likewise the dog that was so gigantic, and the dog to keep the fiery spirit as lamps lighting the way through their opening for the artisans night and day.”

e. Gk. kai ēra egō ek tou metoikismou ekeinou tou lithou diakosious siklous en tois anaphoreusi tou thysiatēriou, perhaps “Next I levied out of the crystals of that stone 200 shekels from among the bearers of the altar . . .” McCown (Testament, p. 39*) questions whether the text should not read “etar . . . etrechen . . . epi tou thysiatēriou,” that is,

“a prime part of that moving stone was moving quickly among those lifting up upon the altar.”

f. Gk. ton thēsauron tou lithou, perhaps simply “treasure of the stone.”

g. Briathos is not mentioned elsewhere in the Pseudepigrapha.

11 a. Gk. tēn aitian, “cause,” “reason,” “charge” (legal); the meaning here is also physical, hence “taint.”

b. Gk. dytikon, “closing at sunset,” from dytikos, “able to dive,” “setting,” “western.” MS P has dektikos, “received,” which Conybeare (JQR 11 [1898] 28) interprets as referring to the evil spirit’s capability of being received into the habitation of the human body.

c. A clear reference to the Gerasene demoniacs, Mk 5:1–13; cf. TSol 11:6.

- 4 Then I asked him, "What is your name?" He replied, "The Lion-Shaped Demon,^d 5 an Arab^e by descent." •So I said to him, "How are you and your demons thwarted, that is, who is your angel?" The demon said, "If I tell you his name, I place not only myself in chains, but also the legion of demons under me." 6 So I said to him, "I adjure you by the name of the great God Most High: By (52) what name are you and your demons thwarted?" The demon said, "By the name of the one who at one time submitted to suffer many things (at the hands) of men, whose name is Emmanouel,^f but now he has bound us and will come to torture us (by driving us) into the water at the cliff. As he moves about, he is conjured up by means of three letters."^g 7 So I sentenced his legion to carry wood from the grove (of trees. Then I (53) sentenced) the Lion-Shaped One to saw it up as kindling with his claws and to throw it under the perpetually burning kiln.

6:8; 15:11
 Is 7:14; 8:8
 Mt 1:23
 5:11
 Mk 5:13

Solomon interrogates the three-headed dragon spirit, Head of the Dragons, and learns that he is thwarted by the angel of the Wonderful Counselor who ascended at the "Place of the Skull"

- 1 12 Now when I had worshiped the God of Israel I ordered another demon to (54) come forward. This time a three-headed dragon with an awful skin appeared before me. •I asked him, "Who are you?" He said, "I am a three-pronged spirit, one who overpowers by means of three deeds. In the wombs of women, I blind children.
 I also turn their ears around backward and make them dumb and deaf. Finally, I strike men against the body and I make (them) fall down, foam (at the mouth), 3 and grind their teeth. •But there is a way by which I am thwarted (, namely,) by
 (the site) which is marked 'Place of the Skull,'^a for there an angel of the Wonderful Counselor^b foresaw that I would suffer, and he will dwell publicly on the cross.^c
 He is the one who will thwart me, being the one among (the angels) to whom I am subject.
 4 "But at the place at which he ascended, King Solomon, he will erect a dark
 (55) pillar formed on the air after Ehippas has brought gifts from the Red Sea, from inside Arabia.^d In the foundation of the Temple which you have begun to build, King Solomon, there is hidden away much gold. Dig it up and confiscate it." So I, Solomon, sent my servant and found (that it was) just as the demon told me.
 After I sealed (him with) the ring, I praised God.
 5 Next I said to him, "Tell me what you are called." The demon replied, "Head (56) of the Dragons." So I ordered him to make bricks for the Temple of God.

Rev 12:1-17

Mk 9:18,20

15:10; 22:20

Mk 15:22

Mt 27:22

Jn 19:17

Isa 9:6

11:10; 22:20

6:5; 22:1-24:5

Solomon interrogates Obyzouth, the female demon with disheveled hair, and learns of her activity

- 1 13 Then I ordered another demon to appear before me. There came before me
 (57) one who had the shape of a woman but she possessed as one of her traits the form

d. Gk. Leontophoron, "Lion-bearer." Origen (Contra 6.30) says that the first of the Seven Ruling Demons mentioned by Celsus was a goat shaped like a lion, but that in the diagram he obtained, he was called Michael the Lion-like.

e. Araps, perhaps a name?

f. Emmanouel, see TSol 6:8, n. i.

g. MS P reads, "The 'Great Among Men' who is to suffer many things whose name is the formula 644, who is Emmanouel . . ."; see TSol 6:8, n. i; Introduction.

12 a. Gk. topou engkephalou, "place within the head," presumably a reference to "Place of the Skull," or Golgotha (cf. Judg 9:53; 2Kgs 9:35). The usual early Christian term in Gk. is to kranton; the Vulgate has calvaria. This is a clear allusion to the crucifixion of Jesus; cf. TSol 15:10; 22:20.

b. Gk. angelos tēs megalēs boulēs, "angel of the Wonderful Counselor," apparently a reference to Christ as the one who fulfilled Isa 9:6; see Lampe, p. 302.

c. The references are a little confusing; if "angel of the Wonderful Counselor" is not Christ, "I would suffer" should be perhaps "he should suffer," referring to Christ.

d. The story of the Arabian demon Ehippas and the demon of the Red Sea is found in TSol 22-24.

2 of one with disheveled hair.^a • I said to her, “Who are you?” She replied, “And who are you? Or what need is there for you to inquire about the sort of deeds I do? But if you want to inquire, go to the royal chambers and, after you have washed your hands,^b sit again on your throne and ask me and then you will learn, King, who I am.”

³ When I had done this and had sat on my throne, I, Solomon, asked her and said, ⁽⁵⁸⁾ “Who are you?” She replied, “Obyzouth. I do not rest at night, but travel around all the world visiting women and, divining the hour (when they give birth), I search (for them) and strangle their newborn infants.^c I do not go through a single night without success. You are not able to give me orders. I even make the rounds (and ⁴ go) into the remotest areas.^d • Otherwise, my work is limited to killing newborn infants, injuring eyes, condemning mouths, destroying minds, and making bodies feel pain.”

WisSol 12:3f.

Obyzouth, thwarted by the angel Raphael and by writing her name on a piece of papyrus, is hung by her hair in front of the Temple

⁵ When I, Solomon, heard these things, I was amazed. I did not look at her shape, ⁽⁵⁹⁾ ⁶ for her body was darkness and her hair savage. • I, Solomon, said to her, “Tell me, evil spirit, by what angel are you thwarted?” She said to me, “By the angel Raphael; and when women give birth, write my name on a piece of papyrus and ⁷ I shall flee from them to the other world.” • When I heard these things I ordered her to be bound by the hair and to be hung up in front of the Temple in order that all those sons of Israel who pass through and see might glorify the God of Israel who has given me this authority.

Tob 3:17; 5:4;
 6:10,14,18; 9:5;
 12:15
 1En 9:1; 10:4;
 20:3; 22:3,6;
 32:6; 40:9; 54:6;
 68:2f.; 71:8f.

Solomon interrogates the Winged Dragon and learns of his activities

¹ 14 I again ordered another demon to appear before me; and there came to me one ⁽⁶⁰⁾ who was in the form of a wallowing dragon, having the limbs of a dragon and ² wings on its back, but the face and feet of a man. • When I saw him, and became amazed, I said to him, “Who are you and from where have you come?”
⁽⁶¹⁾ The spirit said to me, “This is the first time I have stood before you, King Solomon, a spirit made a god among men, but thwarted by the seal which was ³ given to you by God. • Well, I am the so-called Winged Dragon. I do not copulate with many women, but with only a few who have beautiful bodies, who possess ⁴ a name of Touxylou^a of this star. • I rendezvous with them in the form of a winged spirit, copulating (with them) through their buttocks. One woman I attacked is bearing (a child) and that which is born from her becomes Eros.^b Because it could ⁵ not be tolerated by men, that woman perished. This is my activity. • Suppose, then, that I alone am content while the rest of the demons troubled by you, being downcast, should speak the whole truth; they will cause the stack of wood about to be gathered by you for construction in the Temple to be consumed by fire.”
⁶ As the demon was saying these things, suddenly the breath coming out of his ⁽⁶²⁾

SibOr 5:522

13 a. Disheveled hair was characteristic of the Gk. Medusa, guardian goddess of Aphrodite. In the primitive artwork of Aramaic Incantation Bowls the lilith is frequently pictured with disheveled hair, and is sometimes so described; see Montgomery (Aramaic Incantation Texts [Philadelphia, 1913] p. 190). For an obsidian Medusa on an amulet on a Jewish corpse, see Goodenough, Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 236 (cf. n. 186).

b. Apparently a magical cleansing rite.

c. Gk. ta brephê, “fetuses” or “newborns.” The sense may be that the appropriate moment (hōra, “hour”) is just prior to birth.

d. Gk. ta dysêkê merê, meaning uncertain. Perhaps “hard-of-hearing parts” or (less likely) “the hard-of-hearing classes of people.” MS H has disêka, “doubly soft,” “gentle”; MS L has dysika, “western,” and Conybeare (JQR 11 [1898] 30) took ta dytika merê (MS P) as “westerling parts.”

14 a. Conjectured for tou xylou, “of the wood,” e.g. “who possess a name of the wood of this star.”

b. Gk. Erō[s], “the god of love.” Erō is the name of a decan in the magical papyri; cf. H. G. Gundel, Weltbild und Astrologie (Munich, 1968), p. 22. Cf. also NHC II, 5:109, 2, 10, 14, 16, 20, 25:111, 9, 19.

mouth set the forest of Lebanon on fire and burned up all the wood which I was going to put into the Temple of God. •Now I, Solomon, saw what the spirit had done and I was amazed.

(63) After I glorified God I asked the dragon-shaped demon, saying, "Tell me by what angel you are thwarted." He replied, "By the great angel who is seated in the second heaven, who is called in Hebrew Bazazath."^c •When I, Solomon, heard these things and invoked his angel, I condemned him to cut marble for construction of the Temple of God.

Solomon interrogates Enepsigos, the female demon with two heads, learns of her activities and her thwarting angel, Rathanael

1 15 Then I praised God and commanded another demon to come before me.
 (64) Again, there came before me a spirit who had the shape of a woman, but on her shoulders were two separate heads with arms. •I asked her, "Tell me who you are." She answered, "I am Enepsigos,^a but I am called by countless names."
 3 Then I said to her, "By what angel are you thwarted?" She responded to me, "What are you after? What do you want? I can change my appearance, first being taken for a goddess, and then becoming one who has some other shape. •In this regard, do not expect to know all things about me, but because you are here in my presence, listen to this: I hover near the moon and because of this I assume three forms. •At times, I am conjured up as Kronos^b by the wise men. At other times, I descend around those who bring me down and appear in another form. The capacity of the heavenly body^c is invincible, incalculable, and impossible to thwart. At any rate, changing into three different forms, I also descend and become like what you see. •I am thwarted by the angel Rathanael,^d who takes his seat in the third heaven. On account of this, therefore, I say to you, this Temple cannot contain me."

Amos 5:26
2En 30:3

8:2; 18:2,4

The demon Enepsigos, sealed with a triple-link chain, prophesies

7 Accordingly, when I, Solomon, had prayed to my God and invoked the angel
 (65) Rathanael about whom he spoke, I made use of the seal and sealed her down with a triple-link chain;^e and as I bound her down, I made use of the seal of God. •Then the (evil) spirit prophesied to me, saying, "You are doing these things to us now, King Solomon, but after a period of time your kingdom shall be divided. At still a later time this Temple shall be destroyed and all Jerusalem shall be demolished by the king(s) of the Persians and Medes and Chaldeans. Also, the implements of this Temple which you are making shall serve other gods. •Along with these (events), also all the vessels in which you have entrapped us shall be broken in pieces by the hands of men. Then we shall come forth with much power and we shall be scattered here and there throughout the world. •We will lead astray all the inhabited world for a long time until the Son of God is stretched upon the cross.^f For there has not yet arisen a king like him, one who thwarts all of us, whose

5:5; 15:12

1Kgs 12

2Kgs 25:8-17

Dan 8:20; 9:1

12:3; 22:20

c. Bazazath, not mentioned elsewhere in the Pseudepigrapha.

15 a. McCown (Testament, p. 67) says she is probably Hecate, the moon goddess with three forms. For Hecate in Judaism, see Goodenough, Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 236.

b. The god Kronos, "Time," was identified with the Roman god Saturn, and was the son of Uranos and Gai, the husband of Rhea, and the father of Zeus. His "time" was the "golden age." In Gk. astrology, Kronos is found as a name for one of the seven planets; cf. H. G. Gundel, Weltbild und Astrologie, p. 42.

c. Gk. stoicheiou; see TSol 8:2, n. a; 18:2, 4, nn. d, f.

d. Rathanael, not mentioned elsewhere in the Pseudepigrapha.

e. In the Talmud, Solomon gives Benaiahu "a chain on which was graven the divine Name and a ring on which was graven the Name . . ." to bind Ashmedai; cf. Introduction and nn. (especially b.Gitt 68ab); TSol 1:13, n. p on binding demons.

f. A clear allusion to the crucifixion of Jesus; cf. Mk 15:39; TSol 12:3; 22:20; Origen (Contra 1.60, in which, at the birth of Jesus, "The demons lost their strength and became weak; their sorcery was confuted and their power overthrown"). Thus, the magi came to Judea because they were not able to perform their usual feats by charms or trickery.

- 11 mother shall not have sexual intercourse with a man. •Who holds such authority over the spirits except that one? The one whom the first devil shall seek to tempt, but shall not be able to overcome, the letters of whose name add up to six hundred
- 12 forty-four—he is Emmanouel.^g •Because of this, King Solomon, your time is evil, your years are short, and your kingdom shall be given to your servant.”^h

6:8; 11:6
Isa 7:14; 8:8
Mt 1:23
5:5; 15:8
1Kgs 12

Solomon explains why he wrote the testament

- 13 When I, Solomon, heard these things, I glorified God. Though I was amazed
(66) at the defense of the demons, I distrusted them and did not believe the things
14 which were said by them until they occurred. •But when they happened, then I understood, and at my death I wrote this testament to the sons of Israel and I gave
(it) to them so that (they) might know the powers of the demons and their forms, 15 as well as the names of the angels by which they are thwarted. •When I had glorified the God of Israel, I commanded the spirit to be bound up with unbreakable bonds.

26:8

Solomon interrogates Kunopegos, the cruel sea-horse demon

- 1 16 When I had praised God, I commanded another spirit to appear before me.
(67) There came before me another demon who had the form of a horse in front and a fish in back. He said in a great voice, “King Solomon, I am a cruel spirit of the sea. I rise up and come on the open seas with the sea and I trip up the greater 2 number of men (who sail) on it. •I raise myself up like a wave and, being transformed, I come in against the ships, for this is my activity: to receive beneath the sea treasures and men. For I raise myself up, take men, and hurl them under the sea. So I am always lusting after (their) bodies, but until now I have been 3 casting (the treasures) out of the sea. •However, since Beelzeboul, the ruler of the spirits of the air and the earth and beneath the earth gives advice about the activities with respect to each one of us, I therefore came up out of the sea to have some consultation with him.
4 “But I also have another reputation and activity: I change myself into waves,
(68) come up from the sea, and show myself to men. They call me Kunopegos^a because I change myself into a man. The name is true to me. Moreover, I cause a type of 5 seasickness when I pass into men. •So when I came for a consultation with the ruler Beelzeboul, he bound me up and delivered me into your hands. Now I am standing before you and, because of not having water for two or three days, my spirit is ceasing from speaking to you.”

Jude 13

2:9; 3:1f.,6

The demon Kunopegos, thwarted by the angel Iameth, is sealed in a bowl and stored away in the Temple of God

- 6 So I said to him, “Tell me by what angel you are thwarted.” He replied, “By (69) Iameth.”^b •Then I ordered him to be cast into a broad, flat bowl, and ten receptacles of seawater to be poured over (it). I fortified the top side all around with marble and I unfolded and spread asphalt, pitch, and hemp rope around over the mouth of the vessel. When I had sealed it with the ring, I ordered (it) to be stored away in the Temple of God.^c

g. See TSol 6:8, n. i and TSol 11:6, nn. f, g.
h. Conybeare (JQR 11 [1898] 32, n. 6): “This prophecy corresponds roughly to the one which Lactantius (DivInst 4. 18) quotes from an apocryphal Book of Solomon.” McCown (Testament, p. 104) is correct to doubt the reference.

16 a. Gk. kunopēgos. The term for “wave” is to kuma; pēgazō means “I flow abundantly,” “I well up,” frequently with reference to the source of water. MS P has Kuno[s]paston. Conybeare (JQR

11 [1898] 33, n. 4) attempts an explanation with references to Pliny (Natural History, 24.74) which might be translated: “Cynosbaton, otherwise called Cynospaston, or neurospaston; its leaf is similar to the footstep of a man. The plant is wild and has black berries in whose center is a string; therefore it is called ‘nervefood’ [neurospastos].” McCown (Testament, p. 67) identifies him with Poseidon.

b. Iameth, presumably a compound from Yah-, or iaomai, “I heal.”

c. See the discussion in the Introduction.

Solomon interrogates a lecherous spirit and learns of his activity and that he will be thwarted by the Savior or by the Savior's mark on the forehead

- ¹ 17 I ordered another spirit to appear before me. There came a spirit having the shadowy form of a man and gleaming eyes. I asked him, saying, "Who are you?" He replied, "I am a lecherous^a spirit of a giant man who died in a massacre in the age of giants."^b •So I said to him, "Tell me what you accomplish on earth and where you make your dwelling."
- ² He replied, "My home is in inaccessible places. My activity is this: I seat myself near dead men in the tombs and at midnight I assume the form of the dead; if I seize anyone, I immediately kill him with the sword. •If I should not be able to kill him, I cause him to be possessed by a demon and to gnaw his own flesh to pieces and the saliva of his jowls to flow down."^c •So I said to him, "Fear the God of heaven and earth and tell me by what angel you are thwarted." He replied, "He who is about to return (as) Savior thwarts me. If his mark is written on (one's) forehead, it thwarts me, and because I am afraid of it, I quickly turn and flee from him. This is the sign of the cross."^d •When I heard these things, I, Solomon, locked up the demon just like the other demons.

Gen 6:4
3Mac 2:4
Jdt 16:7
WisSol 14:6
1Bar 3:26
Jub 5:1; 7:22
1En 7:2,4; 9:9;
10:12; 15:8,11;
16:1
Tob 6:14

Lk 2:11
Acts 13:23
Phil 3:20
Rev 9:14;
13:16,17; 14:1

Solomon interrogates the thirty-six heavenly bodies and learns of their activities and what thwarts them

- ¹ 18 Then I commanded another demon to appear before me. There came to me thirty-six heavenly bodies,^a their heads like formless dogs.^b But there were among them (those who were) in the form of humans, or of bulls, or of dragons, with faces like the birds, or the beasts, or the sphinx.^c •When I, Solomon, saw these beings, I asked them, saying, "Well, who are you?" All at once, with one voice, they said, "We are thirty-six heavenly bodies, the world rulers^d of the darkness of this age. •But you, King, are not able to harm us or to lock us up; but since God gave you authority over all the spirits of the air, the earth, and (the regions) beneath the earth, we have also taken our place before you like the other spirits."
- ⁴ Then I, Solomon, summoned^e the first spirit and said to him, "Who are you?"

8:2; 15:5
Gal 4:3,9
Col 2:8,20
Eph 6:12

17 a. Gk. ocheikon, uncertain; perhaps read och-eion, used of stallions kept for breeding, e.g. "lewd," or "lecherous." MS P has ochikon(?).

b. On the battle of the giants, cf. especially 1En 10:12; TSol 6:1, n. b.

18 a. Gk. stoicheia; cf. TSol 8:2, n. a; 15:5; 18:2. TSol 18 is the most discussed passage in the testament; cf. the Introduction. Consult especially W. Gundel, Dekane und Dekansterbilder (Glückstadt, 1936) pp. 1–21, 37–81; H. G. Gundel, Weltbild und Astrologie, pp. 17–24. W. Gundel (p. 45) says the archetype for TSol 18 is 1st cent. b.c. and (p. 49) notes that in TSol 18 the traditional names of the decans are consciously distorted and relegated from deities to secondary evil demons (cf. Origen, Contra 8.58; TSol 18:4, n. f) and that new names and beings are present which dominate the others. Both authors give helpful charts of the names of the decans and include TSol. The discussions of the names of the decans will be based largely on Gundel.

b. Gk. kunes, perhaps "watchdogs," that is, watchers of the gods; cf. TSol 10:1, n. a.

c. Lit. "human-shaped, bull-shaped, beast-faced, dragon-shaped, Sphinx-faced, bird-faced." Gk. hē sphinx, a "she-monster."

d. Gk. stoicheia; cf. TSol 8:2, n. a; 15:5; 18:1, n. a; 18:4, n. f. Gk. hoi kosmokratores tou skoutous tou aiōnos toutou; cf. TSol 8:2, n. b.

e. MS P reads, "Then I, Solomon, invoked the name of the Lord Sabaoth, and I asked each one what his manner of life happened (to be) and I commanded each of them to come forward and tell about his activity. Then the first came and said . . ."

- 5 He replied, "I am the first decan of the zodiac^f (and) I am called Ruax.^g • I cause heads of men to suffer pain and I cause their temples to throb. Should I hear only, 'Michael,^h imprison Ruax,' I retreat immediately."
- 6 The second said, "I am called Barsafael. I cause men who reside in my time (74) period to have pains on the sides of their heads. Should I hear, 'Gabriel,ⁱ imprison Barsafael,' I retreat immediately."
- 7 The third said, "I am called Artosael.^j I do much damage to the eyes. Should (75) I hear, 'Ouriel,^k imprison Artosael,' I retreat immediately."
- 8 The fourth^l said, "I am called Oropel.^m I attack throats, (resulting in) sore throats and mucus. Should I hear, 'Raphael,ⁿ imprison Oropel,' I retreat immediately."
- 9 The fifth said, "I am called Kairoxanondalon.^o I cause ears to have obstructions. (76) If I should hear, 'Ourouel,^p imprison Kairoxanondalon,' I retreat immediately."
- 10 The sixth said, "I am called Sphendonael.^q I produce tumors of the parotid (77) gland and tetanic recurvation.^r If I hear, 'Sabaël, imprison Sphendonael,' I retreat immediately."
- 11 The seventh said, "I am called Sphandor.^s I weaken the strength of the shoulders (78) and deaden the nerves of the hand, and I make limbs paralyzed. If I hear, 'Arael,^t imprison Sphandor,' I retreat immediately."
- 12 The eighth said, "I am called Belbel. I pervert the hearts and minds of men (79) [. . .] If I hear, 'Karael, imprison Belbel,' I retreat immediately."
- 13 The ninth said, "I am called Kourtael.^u I send forth colics into the bowels. If (80)

1:6
Dan 10:13,20f.; 12:1

Dan 8:16; 9:2
Lk 1:19
ApMos 40:1
1En 9:1; 10:1;
20:7; 40:9; 54:6
2En 21:3.5; 24:1
2:4,7f.; 8:9;
18:27
1En 9:1; 10:1; 20:1
Tob 3:17; 5:4;
6:10f.; 9:5;
12:15
1En 9:1; 10:4;
20:3; 22:3f.;
32:6; 40:9; 54:6;
68:2f.; 71:8f.

f. This statement explains the stoicheia in TSol 18:1. The decans were thirty-six deities, each of whom ruled over 10° of the 360° zodiac. Cf. TSol 18:1, n. a. Origen (Contra 8.58) wrote that "among these demons, even down to the least ones, there exists some one or another to whom authority (exousia) has been given, may be learned by any one from what the Egyptians say, namely, that thirty-six demons, or ethereal gods of a kind, have distributed among themselves man's body, which is apportioned into a corresponding number of parts. Some say the number of these demons is much greater. One demon then is appointed to take care of one part and another of another. Of these demons they know the names in the local speech (i.e. Coptic), as, for example, Khnoumèn, and Khnakoumen, and Knat, and Sikat, and Bion, and Eron, and Erebian, and Ramanor, and Reianoor, and the rest of the names used in their tongue. And, of course, by invoking these demons, they cure the sufferings of the several parts" (Conybeare, JQR 11 [1898] 7). Whereas Celsus stated that propitiation of these demons was necessary for health, Origen replied from Phil 2:10 that all are subject to Jesus and that Christians need only trust in the living God. For the stoicheia as the seven demonic stars, see TSol 8:2, n. a, where it is noted that Origen (Contra 6.30) also speaks of the Seven Ruling Demons.

g. Perhaps Rhyx; cf. TSol 18:24–35. The first decan is most important; the name may mean "the Lord" (Gundel, Dekane, pp. 50f.) and be related to rex, "ruler," "king," "prince." It corresponds to Sro, the ram, in Manilius' list of decans.

h. On Michael, cf. Introduction; TSol 1:6f. and n. q; NHC II, 1:17,30.

i. On Gabriel, cf. Introduction; NHC III, 2:52, 23; 53, 6; 57, [7]; 64, 26; VIII, 1:57, 9; 58, 22.

j. Gundel (Dekane, p. 50) suggests the root artos, "a loaf (of wheat bread)."

k. On Uriel, see G. Vermes, "The Archangel

Sariel," in Christianity, Judaism and Other Greco-Roman Cults. Studies for Morton Smith at Sixty, ed. J. Neusner (Studies in Judaism in Late Antiquity 12.3; (Leiden, 1975). Uriel is also common in gnostic texts; cf. NHC Index in The Nag Hammadi Library in English (Oroiael, Oriël, Oroiel, Ariael, Ouriel).

l. MS P has a lacuna at this point; thus Conybeare's paragraph numbers skip TSol 18:8; i.e. 18:7 is (75) and 18:9 is (76).

m. Perhaps the Egyptian god Horus, or (suggests Gundel [Dekane, p. 50]) "press" from oros in analogy with the twenty-third Egyptian decan Sesme.

n. On Raphael, cf. Introduction; TSol 5:9; 13:6.

o. Gundel (Dekane, p. 51) suggests the name is built up out of kairoō, "I fit the right point in time," xainō, "to comb (wool), to make it fit for spinning," and dalos, "torch," and could be analogous to the decan Lampadius, the "torch carrier."

p. Ourouel: a variation of Uriel? Cf. TSol 18:7, n. k above.

q. Gundel (Dekane, p. 50) suggests the root sphendonē, "a sling," or anything shaped like it, in this case the arrow of the protector, or the ax.

r. Conybeare (JQR 11 [1898] 35, n. 5): "The Greek medical terms which stand in the Greek text are found in Hippocrates, Galen, and Cael. Aurel." Gk. opisthotonos, "tetanic recurvation," is a disease in which the body draws back and stiffens.

s. Gundel (Dekane, p. 50) suggests that doron or phandoron could indicate "the Lightgiver," that is, Lampadius again; cf. TSol 18:9, n. o.

t. Another variation of Uriel? Cf. TSol 18:7, n. k; Gundel (Dekane, p. 61) suggests a variation of the decan Arou, e.g. Ouare.

u. Gundel (Dekane, p. 51) suggests the roots kouros, "youthful," or kourizō, "cut," and perhaps either a eunuch or a deity who cuts himself.

I should hear, 'Iaoth,' imprison Kourtael,' I retreat immediately.'"

¹⁴ (81) The tenth said, "I am called Metathiax.^w I cause pains in the kidneys. If I hear, 'Adonael, imprison Metathiax,' I retreat immediately."

¹⁵ (82) The eleventh said, "I am called Katanikotael.^x I unleash fights and feuds in homes. If anyone wishes to make peace, let him write on seven laurel leaves the names of those who thwart me: 'Angel, Eae, Ieo, Sabaoth,' imprison Katanikotael,' and when he has soaked the laurel leaves (in water), let him sprinkle his house with the water and I retreat immediately."

¹⁶ (83) The twelfth said, "I am called Saphthorael.^z I put dissensions into the minds of men and I delight when I cause them to stumble. If anyone writes down these words, 'Iae, Ieo, sons of Sabaoth,'^{a2} and wears them around his neck, I retreat immediately."

¹⁷ (84) The thirteenth said, "I am called Phobothel.^{b2} I cause loosening of the tendons. If I hear, 'Adonai,'^{c2} I retreat immediately."

¹⁸ (85) The fourteenth said, "I am called Leroel.^{d2} I bring on chill(s) and shivering and sore throat. If I hear, 'Iax, do not stand fast, do not be fervent, because Solomon is fairer than eleven fathers,'^{e2} I retreat immediately."

¹⁹ (86) The fifteenth said, "I am called Soubelti. I unleash shivering and numbness. If I hear only, 'Rizoel, imprison Soubelti,' I retreat immediately."

²⁰ (87) The sixteenth said, "I am called Katrax.^{f2} I inflict incurable fevers on men. If anyone wants to regain health, let him pulverize coriander^{g2} and rub it on his lips, saying, 'I adjure you by Zeus,^{h2} retreat from the image of God,' and I retreat immediately."

²¹ (88) The seventeenth said, "I am called Ieropa.ⁱ² I sit on the stomach of a man and cause convulsions^{j2} in the bath; and on the street I find the man and make (him) fall to the ground.^{k2} Whoever says into the right ear of the afflicted for the third time, 'Iouda Zizabou,'^{l2} you see, makes me retreat."

v. Gundel (Dekane, pp. 60f.) notes that the angels called upon in TSol 18:9-14 have Jewish-sounding names found in gnostic texts and magical papyri, i.e. Iaoth; Adonael; Angel, Eae, Ieo, Sabaoth; Iae, Ieo, sons of Sabaoth; Adonai; and Iax. [See the contribution on PrJac contained herein.—J.H.C.]

w. Gundel (Dekane, p. 51) suggests Metathiax goes back to Thiax, a variant of Satyros, that is, Apollo.

x. Gundel (Dekane, p. 52) suggests (cautiously) the goddess Satis, or the decan-goddess Krebses.

y. In addition to gnostic materials and magical papyri, amulets contain such names, e.g. Good-enough, Jewish Symbols, p. 229: "Iaō, Sabaō, Michaēl, Gabriēl, Ouriēl, Cheroubin, Serapi[n]." This amulet also contains the cavalier, e.g. Solomon.

z. Gundel (Dekane, p. 52) thinks it likely that the name is built out of sapha, "clearly," and thoraios, another name for Apollo, i.e. "the one who is fit for the seed, the one who qualified for procreating." He relates him to the Egyptian New Year.

a2. In NHC II, 5:106, Sabaoth begets Death, who begets seven androgynous sons who beget forty-nine androgynous demons; in 107 the text states, "Their names and their functions you will find in 'the Book of Solomon.'" Cf. Introduction. Sabaoth occurs frequently in the Nag Hammadi texts.

b2. Gundel (Dekane, p. 52) suggests a personification of phobos, "fear," who may be related to the old decan Knuphis, who is called to protect against evil powers.

c2. Adonai, "my Lord," from the Heb. Bible, is common to gnosticism and magic; Gundel (Dekane, p. 60) thinks he is placed here to show his power over the gods of the Egyptian pantheon.

d2. Gundel (Dekane, p. 52) guesses the name might refer to a windbag, buffoon, gossip, or also to ornaments and jewelry.

e2. Gk. hoti kallion esti Solomōn hendeka paterōn, "because Solomon is fairer than eleven fathers." Gk. kallion, "fairer," could mean "more powerful." Gk. paterōn, "fathers," might refer to demons, so Lampe, p. 1051; cf. TSol 22:20, n. a (MS P). For the view that the eleven fathers are gnostic, see McCown (Testament, p. 82).

f2. Gundel (Dekane, p. 52) suggests this decan might mean either a peacock or a cat.

g2. Gk. to koliandron, "coriander," either of two plants in the parsley family, one of whose aromatic seeds is used to flavor pastries. The magical use is found in Pliny, Natural History 20:20.

h2. The Gk. is tou Dan, which, according to Gundel (Dekane, pp. 58-59), could be a local name related to the seaport Dan on the Red Sea.

i2. Gundel (Dekane, p. 52) suggests one is reminded of Isis, Dike, and Musa.

j2. Reading spasmous (MS L) instead of aspasmous, "embraces" (MS H), see n. k2.

k2. Gk. ptōmatizō, "I make to fall"; hoi ptōmatizomenoi in Gk. can refer to "those who have the falling sickness," e.g. epilepsy.

l2. McCown (Testament, p. 71) says the words may have a gnostic origin.

²² The eighteenth said, "I am called Modebel.^{m2} I separate wife from husband.
 (89) If anyone writes the names of the eight fathersⁿ² and places them in the doorways,^{o2} I retreat immediately."

²³ The nineteenth said, "I am called Mardero.^{p2} I inflict incurable fevers; write my (90) name in some such way in the house, and I retreat immediately."

²⁴ The twentieth said, "I am called Rhyx Nathotho.^{q2} I locate myself in the knees
 (91) of men. If anyone writes on a piece of papyrus, 'Phounebiel,'^{r2} I retreat immediately."

²⁵ The twenty-first said, "I am called Rhyx Alath.^{s2} I produce the croup in infants.
 (92) If anyone writes, 'Rarideris,'^{t2} and carries it,^{u2} I retreat immediately."

²⁶ The twenty-second said, "I am called Rhyx Audameoth.^{v2} I inflict heart pain.
 If anyone writes, 'Raiouoth,'^{w2} I retreat immediately."

²⁷ The twenty-third said, "I am called Rhyx Manthado. I cause the kidneys to
 (93) suffer pain. If anyone writes, 'Iaoth, Ouriel,'^{x2} I retreat immediately." 2:4, 7f.; 8:9; 18:7

²⁸ The twenty-fourth said, "I am called Rhyx Aktonme. I cause the ribs to suffer
 (94) pain. If anyone writes on a piece of wood from a ship which has run aground,^{y2} 'Marmaraoth of mist,'^{z2} I retreat immediately." 1En 9:1; 10:1f.; 20:1
8:7; 18:33

²⁹ The twenty-fifth said, "I am called Rhyx Anatreth.^{a3} I send gas^{b3} and burning
 (95) up into the bowels. If I hear, 'Arara, Arare,'^{c3} I retreat immediately."

³⁰ The twenty-sixth said, "I am called Rhyx, the Enautha.^{d3} I make off with minds
 (96) and alter hearts. If anyone writes, 'Kalazael,' I retreat immediately."

³¹ The twenty-seventh said, "I am called Rhyx Axesbuth.^{e3} I cause men to suffer
 (97) from diarrhea^{f3} and hemorrhoids. If anyone adjures me in pure wine and gives it to the one who is suffering, I retreat immediately."

m2. Gundel (Dekane, p. 52) says the term might refer to either "water lily" or "rug." A woman with a water lily is known from later decan literature.

n2. Gundel (Dekane, p. 58) associates the "eight fathers" with the Egyptian deities of the Ogdoads, the archetypal "Eight." As the original Father and Mother, they are the foundation of everything through their power.

o2. In white magic, protection of openings of dwellings where demons might enter is necessary; cf. W. K. Prentice, "Magical Formulae on Lintels of the Christian Period in Syria," American Journal of Archeology 10 (1906) 137-50; Montgomery, Aramaic Incantation Texts, pp. 40-45.

p2. Mardero, suggests Gundel (Dekane, p. 53) combined a rare word for "hand," marê, and derô. "to skin," "to flay," with reference to the hand of the virgin.

q2. On Rhyx, see TSol 18:4, n. g. Nathotho, according to Gundel (Dekane, p. 53) could be the moon-god Thoth, found in old Egyptian decan lists; it could also be a combination of naos, "temple," and thôs, "cow," "jackal."

r2. Gundel (Dekane, p. 59) suggests that Phounebiel is based on the deity Pthah-Nun, the father of Atum.

s2. Alath, says Gundel (Dekane, p. 53), might be a name for the wargod Mars, and would therefore be related to the Egyptian wargod Horus.

t2. Rarideris, writes Gundel (Dekane, p. 58), might reflect the Egyptian goddess Thueris, who appears as a hippopotamus or a pig among the decans.

u2. Gk. bastazei, "carries" (on one's person) or perhaps "touches" (the infant).

v2. Gundel (Dekane, p. 53) states that the Heb. author substituted a Syrian sun-god Aumos. MS P has a lacuna which skips TSol 18:26. There is no (92) margin.

w2. Gundel (Dekane, p. 58): it is from rhêouô, meaning "The One in the Sun Barque," i.e. Re.

x2. Cf. TSol 18:7, n. k.

y2. Gk. astochêsantos, "which has failed (to make harbor)"; Lampe, p. 247, suggests "which has been lost."

z2. Gk. aerion, "of air," is possible. A. Audollent (Defixionum Tabellae [Frankfurt, 1904; repr. 1967] p. 328) suggests Marmaroth means "Lord of lords" (Aram. mar means "lord"). Gundel (Dekane, p. 59) suggests a derivation from marmairô, "to flash," "to sparkle," "to glisten," and aoth, or Jaoth, for Yahweh. This would then be "the glittering, shining God," recalling the Gk. names of the planets Phaethon and Phainon. Cf. TSol 8:7 in which Marmaroth (note spelling) thwarts Fate, who encourages war, leading Gundel to make the association with Mars. Cf. TSol 18:33.

a3. Gundel (Dekane, p. 53) suggests a connection of Anatreth with the sun-god Re (Ret, Rat, Srat) or with the Gk. word anatrêtos, suggesting "boring through," since an old Egyptian decan is called "The One Who Bores Through."

b3. Gk. zeseis, "seethings," "effervescences," "boilings."

c3. Arara, Arare, is mentioned in the Gk. Magical Papyri (19a.48); Gundel (Dekane, p. 58) thinks it is a variation of the decan Aroi Aroi.

d3. Gundel (Dekane, p. 54) suggests Enautha contains either the goddess of the heaven, Nut, or the Gk. verb enauô with the meaning "to start a fire," having to do with ancient Gk. and Egyptian notions of fire.

e3. For Axesbuth, Gundel (Dekane, p. 54) proposes a derivation from axetos, "unpolished," "coarse," and bythos, "(the) deep," suggesting the Indic decan associated with a snake.

f3. Gk. hypetikous, meaning uncertain. Perhaps hypaktikos, "suffering from diarrhea," or hyphektikos, "consumptive," cf. Lampe, p. 1436.

³² (98) The twenty-eighth said, "I am called Rhyx Hapax.^{g3} I unleash insomnia. If anyone writes, 'Kok; Phedismos,' and wears it down from the temples, I retreat immediately."

³³ (99) The twenty-ninth said, "I am called Rhyx Anoster.^{h3} I unleash hysteria and cause pains in the bladder. If anyone mashes up the seeds of laurel into pure oil and massages (the body with it), saying, 'I adjure you by Marmaroth,'¹³ I retreat immediately." 8:7; 18:28

³⁴ (100) The thirtieth said, "I am called Rhyx Physikoreth. I bring on long-term illnesses. If anyone puts salt into (olive) oil and massages his sickly (body with it) saying, 'Cherubim, seraphim,^{j3} help (me),' I retreat immediately." 21:2
Ex 25:18-20
1Kgs 6:23-28
Ps 18
Isa 6:2f.

³⁵ (101) The thirty-first said, "I am called Rhyx Aleureth.^{k3} (In the case of) swallowing fish bones, if anyone puts a bone from his fish into the breasts of the one who is suffering, I retreat immediately."

³⁶ (102) The thirty-second said, "I am called Rhyx Ichthuon.^{l3} I detach tendons. If I hear, 'Adonai,^{m3} malthē,' I retreat immediately."

³⁷ (103) The thirty-third said, "I am called Rhyx Achoneōth.ⁿ³ I cause sore throat and tonsillitis. If anyone writes on ivy leaves, 'Leikourgos,' heaping them up in a pile,^{o3} I retreat immediately."

³⁸ (104) The thirty-fourth said, "I am called Rhyx Autoth. I cause jealousies and squabbles between those who love each other. But the letters Alpha and Beta, written down, thwart me."

³⁹ (105) The thirty-fifth said, "I am called Rhyx Phtheneoth.^{p3} I cast the evil eye on every man. But the much-suffering eye,^{q3} when inscribed, thwarts me."

⁴⁰ (106) The thirty-sixth said, "And I am called Rhyx Mianeth. I hold a grudge against the body; I demolish houses; I cause the flesh to rot. If anyone writes on the front entrance of his house as follows, 'Melto Ardada Anaath,'^{r3} I flee from that place."

⁴¹ (107) ⁴² When I, Solomon, heard these things, I glorified the God of heaven and earth and I ordered them to bear water. •Then I prayed to God that the thirty-six demons who continually plague humanity go to the Temple of God.^{s3}

g3. Hapax, according to Gundel (Dekane, p. 54), might be associated with the Gk. word hapax, "one time," perhaps containing number symbolism; the variant Harpax refers to a decan with long, sharp teeth.

h3. Gundel (Dekane, p. 55) suggests Anoster could contain the word nostos, "a return home," and could refer to an evil demon who prevents one from returning home.

i3. On Marmaroth, cf. TSol 18:28; TSol 8:7 (Marmaroth).

j3. For cherubim and seraphim on a protective amulet, see above, TSol 18:15, n. y; cf. also NHC II, 5:105, 19; VII, 2:54, 34; IX, 1:10, 4.

k3. Gundel (Dekane, p. 55) thinks, cautiously, that Aleureth could be related to aleuron, "wheat flour," and thus the Egyptian name for the wine press; it could also have to do with the decan of trouble and tribulation.

l3. Was Ichthuon suggested by ichthuos, "fish," in the previous vs. (TSol 18:35)?

m3. On Adonai, see TSol 18:17, n. c2.

n3. Gundel (Dekane, p. 55) attempts an explanation of Achoneōth in relation to the Egyptian decans Chont-har and Chont-chre (rams), modified by the Gk. Anchonion, suggestive of hangman or strangler, yielding a throat god or a strangler god; note that he causes sore throat and tonsillitis.

o3. Gk. botrydon anachōris is not clear. Gk. botrydon means "in clusters," or "like a bunch of grapes." Gk. anachōris is obscure; perhaps it was originally anachōsis, "raising an embankment."

p3. In Phtheneoth, Gundel (Dekane, p. 55) sees

Phtha, the Egyptian god of the art of forging metals.

q3. On the "much suffering eye," usually thought to be a protection against the "evil eye," cf. C. Bonner, Studies in Magical Amulets Chiefly Graeco-Egyptian (Ann Arbor, 1950) pp. 96-100; Goodenough, Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, pp. 238-41. Both Solomon and the "seal of Solomon" are found on "much suffering eye" amulets; the "much suffering eye," if Bonner is correct in his interpretation, based partly on this vs., is found on the synagogue at Dura; cf. Goodenough, vol. 2, p. 238, and figs. 1065, 1066.

r3. Gundel (Dekane, p. 58) says Ar-ta, an Egyptian creator god, is hidden in Ardada; in Anaath is Neith, an Egyptian crocodile god.

s3. MS P reads at this point, "I condemned some of the demons to do the heavy work of the construction of the Temple of God. Some I locked up in prisons. Others I ordered to battle the fire in (the production of) gold and silver, and to sit down beside lead and cinerary urns, and for the rest of the demons to prepare places in which they ought to be locked up.

"And I, Solomon, had much quiet in all the earth, and spent my life in much peace, honored by all men and those under heaven. I built the whole Temple of God. My kingdom was prosperous and my army was with me. As for the rest, the city of Jerusalem was a repose, rejoicing and delighted. And all the kings of the earth came to me from the other side of the earth to see the Temple which I built for the Lord God. When they heard about the

Riches are given to Solomon by all the kings of the earth, including Sheeba, the Queen of the South, who was a witch

- ¹ 19 Then I, Solomon, was honored by all men under heaven, for I was building
 (108) ² the Temple of God and my kingdom was running well. •All the kings were coming to me to observe the Temple of God that I was building, and they supplied me with gold and silver, and brought in bronze, iron, lead, and wood for the Temple furnishings. 1Kgs 5; 10:1-10
 2Chr 9:1-10
- ³ Among them Sheeba, Queen of the South, who was a witch, came with much (109) arrogance and bowed down before me.^a 21:1f.
 1Kgs 10:1-13
 2Chr 9:1-12
 Mt 12:42
 Lk 11:31

Solomon hears the conflict between an old man and his son

- ¹ 20 Now it happened that one of the artisans, a dignified man, threw himself down
 (110) before me, saying, “King Solomon, Son of David, have mercy on me.^a an elderly man.” I said to him, “Tell me, old man, what you want.” •He replied, “I beg you, King. I have a son, my only son, and every day he does terribly violent things to me, striking me in the face and head and threatening to send me to a terrible death. Because he did this, I came forward (to request) a favor—that you will avenge me.”
- ³ When I heard these things I commanded his son to be brought before me. When (111) ⁴ he came I said to him, “Do you admit to this?” •He replied, “I did not become so filled with rage, King, that I struck my father with my hand. Be kind to me, O King; for it is not right to pay attention to such a story and (to his) distress.”
- ⁵ Therefore, when I, Solomon, heard the young man, I summoned the elderly man to come and reconsider. But he did not want (to come) and said, “Let him be put to death.”

The demon Orniias prophesies that the son will die

- ⁶ Then, noticing that the demon Orniias was laughing, I became very angry that he would laugh in my presence. Dismissing the young man, I ordered Orniias to 7 come out and I said to him, “Cursed one, did you laugh at me?” •He replied, “I beg you, King; I did not laugh because of you, but because of the wretched old man and the miserable young man, his son, because after three days he will die. See, the old man has the intent of doing away with him in an evil manner.”
 8 I said, “Does he really have such an intent?” The demon said, “Yes, King.”
 (112) ⁹ Then I commanded the demon to go away and the old man and his son to come 10 back, and I ordered them to become friends.^b •Then I said to the elderly man, “In three days bring your son back to me.” When they had prostrated themselves before me, they departed. 1:12-3:4; 9:3; 20:11
 LetAris 47

wisdom which was given to me they bowed down before me in the Temple. [They brought] gold and silver and precious stones many and excellent, and bronze, and iron, and lead, and cedar logs. And they brought me types of wood that do not deteriorate for the furnishings of the Temple of God.” This statement could have concluded one version of the TSol.

19 a. The introduction of the Queen of Sheeba at this point seems strange; moreover, her admiration for the Temple in TSol 21 is unrelated to the story of the old man. MS P appears to make the connection in TSol 21 by means of Solomon’s wisdom, e.g. by including her amazement at the story. At this point in TSol 19, MS P adds, “bowed down before me to the earth, and because she had heard of my wisdom, she glorified the God of Israel; in these things also she tested all of my wisdom by examination, so much did I instruct her according to the wisdom given to me. And all the sons of Israel glorified God.” In TSol 21, MSS H P Q continue after the story of the old man. “Sheeba, the Queen of the South, saw all these things and marveled . . .”

20 a. Gk. huios Daveid, eleēson me, “Son of David, have mercy on me,” recalls the cry of Barimaueus in Mk 10:47 and 28. See TSol Title, n. d.

b. MS Q, which has TSol 3:1–20:9 missing, resumes at this point.

Ornias is compelled to explain how he knows God's plan for the future

- 11 Then I ordered Ornias to be brought to me again and I said to him, "Tell me
 (113) 12 how you know that the young man will die in three days." •He responded, "We 13 demons go up to the firmament of heaven, fly around among the stars, and hear the decisions which issue from God concerning the lives of men.^c •The rest of the time we come and, being transformed, cause destruction, whether by domination, or by fire, or by sword, or by chance."
 14 I asked him, "Tell me, then, how you, being demons, are able to ascend into (114) 15 heaven." •He replied, "Whatever things are accomplished in heaven (are accomplished) in the same way also on earth; for the principalities and authorities and 16 powers above fly around and are considered worthy of entering heaven. •But we who are demons are exhausted from not having a way station from which to ascend or on which to rest; so we fall down like leaves from the trees and the men who 17 are watching think that stars are falling from heaven. •That is not true, King; rather, we fall because of our weakness and, since there is nothing on which to hold, we are dropped like flashes of lightning to the earth. We burn cities down and set fields on fire. But the stars of heaven have their foundations laid in the firmament."

1:1-3:4; 9:3; 20:6
LetAris 47

The prophecy of Ornias the demon is fulfilled

- 18 When I, Solomon, heard these things, I commanded the demon to be kept under (115) 19 guard for five days. •After five days I summoned the old man but he did not want to come. Then when he did come, I saw that he was depressed and mourning.
 20 I said to him, "Where is your son, old man?" He replied, "I have become 21 childless, O King, and without hope I keep watch at the grave of my son." •Upon hearing these things and knowing that the things which were spoken to me by the demon were true, I glorified the God of heaven and earth.

Sheeba, the Queen of the South, tours the Temple

- 1 21 Now when Sheeba, the Queen of the South, saw the Temple^a I was building,
 (116) she thought it was marvelous and contributed ten thousand copper shekels.
 2 She entered the inner part of the Temple and saw the altar, the cherubim and seraphim overshadowing the mercy seat, the two hundred gems glittering from the various ornaments of the lamps, and lamps also decorated with emeralds, 3 hyacinth,^b and lapis lazuli. •She also saw the silver, bronze, and gold vessels and the bases of the pillars entwined with bronze wrought in the pattern of a chain.
 4 Finally, she saw the Bronze Sea, which was supported by thirty-six bulls. •And all were busy working in the Temple [. . .]^c of pay amounting to one gold talent apart from the demons.

19:3
1Kgs 10:1-10
2Chr 9:1-10
Mt 12:42
Lk 11:31
18:34
1Kgs 7:48-50
1Kgs 7:23f.
2Chr 4:2
2Kgs 25:13
1Chr 18:8
Jer 52:17

A letter from Adarkes, king of Arabia, requesting Solomon's help against the wind demon

- 1 22 The king of Arabia, Adarkes, sent a letter containing the following:
 (117) "King of Arabia, Adarkes, to King Solomon, greetings. I have heard about the wisdom which has been granted to you and that, being a man from the Lord, there has been given to you understanding about all the spirits of the air, the earth, and 2 beneath the earth. •There still exists a spirit in Arabia. Early in the morning a fresh gust of wind blows until the third hour. Its terrible blast even kills man and beast 3 and no (counter-) blast is ever able to withstand the demon. •I beg you, therefore,

3:5; 4:11; 8:11;
24:3
1Kgs 4:29-34
Prov 1:1
Song 1:1
Eccl 1:1
WisSol 7-9
LAB 60

c. For flying demons who know the future, see b.Hag 16a. Also, the Aboth of R. Nathan notes how demons change appearances; see McCown (Testament, pp. 62f.).

b. Gk. hyakinthou tōn lithōn, "hyacinth of stones," a violet-blue mineral resembling a sapphire.

c. A lacuna. Did the non-demonic workers get paid one talent?

21 a. See TSol 19:3, n. a.

since this spirit is like a wind, do something wise according to the wisdom which has been given to you by the Lord your God and decide to send out a man who is able to bring it under control. •Then we shall belong to you, King Solomon, I and all my people and all my land; and all Arabia will be at peace if you carry out this act of vengeance for us. •Consequently, we implore you, do not ignore our prayer and do become our lord for all time. Farewell my lord, as ever.”

7:2
Jub 2:2
1En 60:12

The immovable cornerstone

(118) 6 After I, Solomon, read this letter, I folded it, gave it to my servant, and said 7 to him, “After seven days, remind me of this letter.” •So Jerusalem was being built and the Temple was moving toward completion. Now there was a gigantic cornerstone which I wished to place at the head of the corner to complete the 8 Temple of God. •All the artisans and all the demons who were helping came to the same (location) to bring the stone and mount it at the end of the Temple, but they were not strong enough to budge it.

23:2-4

Ps 118:22
Isa 28:16
Mk 12:10
Mt 21:42
Lk 20:17f.
Acts 4:11
1Pet 2:6-8

Solomon’s servant boy entraps the Arabian wind demon in a leather flask with the aid of the ring

9 When seven days had passed and I remembered the letter of the king of Arabia,
(119) I summoned my servant boy and said to him, “Load up your camel, take a leather
10 flask and this seal, •and go off to Arabia to the place where the spirit is blowing.
Then take hold of the wineskin and (place) the ring in front of the neck of the flask 11 (against the wind). •As the flask is being filled with air, you will discover that it is the demon who is filling it up. Carefully, then, tie up the flask tightly and when you have sealed (it) with the ring, load up the camel and come back here. Be off, now, with blessings.”

(120) 12 Then the boy obeyed the orders and went to Arabia. Now the men from the region doubted whether it was possible to bring the evil spirit under control.
13 Nonetheless, before dawn the house servant got up and confronted the spirit of the wind. He put the flask on the ground and placed the ring on (its mouth). (The 14 demon) entered the flask and inflated it. •Yet the boy stood firm. He bound up the mouth of the flask in the name of the Lord Sabaoth and the demon stayed inside 15 the flask. •To prove that the demon had been overcome, the boy remained three days and, (when) the spirit did not blow any longer, the Arabs concluded that he had really trapped the spirit.

The Arabian wind demon, named Ehippas, is brought to the Temple, where it is interrogated by Solomon and puts the immovable cornerstone in place

16 Then he loaded the flask on the camel. The Arabs sent the boy on his way with
(121) gifts and honors, shouting praises to God, for they were left in peace. Then the 17 boy brought in the spirit and put it in the foremost part of the Temple. •The following day I, Solomon, went into the Temple (for) I was very worried about the cornerstone. (Suddenly,) the flask got up, walked for seven steps, and fell 18 down on its mouth before me. •I was amazed that (even though the demon was entrapped in) the flask, he had the power to walk around, and I ordered him to get 19 up. Panting, the flask arose and stood up. •Then I asked him, saying, “Who are you?” From inside the spirit said, “I am a demon called Ehippas (and I live) in Arabia.”

6:5; 12:4; 24:1

(122) 20 I said to him, “By what angel are you thwarted?” He said, “By the one who is going to be born from a virgin and be crucified by the Jews.”^a 15:10

Mt 1:18-25
Lk 1:26-38
11:10; 12:3

22 a. An explicit reference to the story of Jesus: cf. TSol 12:3, n. b and 15:10, n. f. For TSol 22:19f., MS P (Q is similar) reads, “And I said to him, ‘Is this your name?’ He answered, ‘Yes; for wherever I want, I alight and set fire and put to death.’ And I said to him, ‘By what angel are you

1 23 Then I said to him, "What can you do for me?" He responded, "I am able 2 to move mountains, to carry houses from one place to another, and to overthrow 2 kings." • I said to him, "If you have the power, lift this stone into the beginning of the corner of the Temple." But he responded, "I will raise not only this stone, King; but, with (the aid of) the demon who lives in the Red Sea, (I will) also (lift up) the pillar of air (which is) in the Red Sea and you shall set it up where you wish."^a Ex 13:21f.; 14:19f.
 3 When he had said these things, he went in underneath the stone, lifted it up,
 (125) went up the flight of steps carrying the stone, and inserted it into the end of the 4 entrance of the Temple. • I, Solomon, being excited, exclaimed, "Truly the Scripture which says, It was the stone rejected by the builders that became the keystone, has now been fulfilled," and so forth.^b Ps 99:7 1Kgs 7:2f.
 22:7
 Ps 118:22
 Mk 12:10
 Mt 21:42
 Lk 20:17
 Acts 4:11
 1Pet 2:4,7

The demon Ehippas and the demon of the Red Sea bring back the pillar and lift it up in the air

1 24 Again, I said to him, "Go, bring to me the one you said (would help lift up (124) the) pillar (which is) in the Red Sea. So Ehippas went off and brought forth the 2 demon and both transported the pillar from Arabia. • However, having outwitted (them) because these two demons could have upset the whole world with one tip of the scales, I sealed (them) around on one side and the other, and said, "Keep 3 watch (on them) carefully." • Thus, they have remained holding up the pillar in 4 the air until this very day as a proof of the wisdom granted to me. • The enormous pillar was suspended through the air, lifted up by the spirits, and thus from below 5 the spirits appeared just like air lifting (it) up. • When we looked intently, the lower part of the pillar became somewhat oblique, and so it is to this day.^a 6:3f.; 12:4; 22:19
 3:5; 4:11; 8:11
 1Kgs 4:29-34

Solomon interrogates the demon from the Red Sea (named Abezethibou), learns of his history and activity, and adjures him to hold up the pillar

1 25 Then I interrogated the other spirit, the one who came up out of the sea with
 (125) the pillar. "Who are you, what are you called, and what is your activity? For I
 2 have heard many things about you." • But the demon said, "I, King Solomon, am called Abezethibou; and once I sat in the first heaven whose name is Amelouth.
 3 Therefore, I am a hostile, winged demon with one wing, plotting against every wind under the heavens. I was present at the time when Moses appeared before 4 Pharaoh, king of Egypt, hardening his heart. • I am the one whom Jannes and Jambres, those who opposed Moses in Egypt, called to their aid.^a I am the adversary of Moses in (performing) wonders and signs." JanJam
 Ex 7:11
 Acts 7:36
 Ex 7:11-13f.
 2Tim 3:8

thwarted?" And he said, "The sovereign God who has authority over me even to be heard, who is going to be born through a virgin and crucified by the Jews on a cross, whom angels (and) archangels worship. He is the one who thwarts me and saps me of my great power which has been given to me by my father the devil."

23 a. The pillar is explained in TSol 24:3-5,7-9. McCown (Testament, p. 46) suggests that the pillar of cloud in the OT is transferred to the heavens and he agrees with M. R. James that the pillar is the Milky Way. See also TSol 24:5, n. a.

b. Ps 118:22 is one of the most quoted testimonies in the NT and early Christian literature. It is the only explicit NT testimony in TSol.

24 a. Conybeare (JQR 11 [1898] 44, n. 5): "This legend of the heavy corner-stone and of the spirits supporting a column in the Temple reappears in the Georgian Acts of Nouna in the fourth century.

There it is a huge wooden column that is lifted by spirit agency, when the king and workmen had failed to move it into place. The spirits support it in the air before letting it sink into its place."

25 a. Cf. 2 Tim 3:6-9. Jewish tradition named the leaders of the Egyptian magicians of Ex 7:11-13 Jannes and Jambres (or "Mambres") and said they were disciples (or sons) of Balaam (Num 22-24). Apuleius, Apologia 90, lists Jannes with other magicians and sorcerers, including Moses. Zosimus of Panopolis, c. A. D. 300, may know of a tradition in which Jambres instructed Solomon about sacrifices to drive off, or make powerless, the demons (see the contribution on JanJam herein). Jannes and Jambres may be identical with the two angels who teach men sorcery, Harut and Marut, in the Koran, Sura 2.96. For further references, see PMR, pp. 133-34; L. L. Grabbe, "The Jannes/Jambres Tradition in Targum Pseudo-Jonathan and its Date," JBL 98 (1979) 393-401.

- 5 I therefore said to him, "How is it that you are found in the Red Sea?" He (126) responded, "During the time of the Exodus of the sons of Israel, I gave Pharaoh pangs of anxiety and hardened the heart of him, as well as of his subordinates. Ex 18:4f.
- 6 I caused them to pursue closely after the sons of Israel, and Pharaoh followed with (me) and (so did) all the Egyptians. I was there at that time and we followed
- 7 together. We all approached the Red Sea. •Then it happened that at the time when Ex 14:21-23 the sons of Israel crossed over, the water turned back upon us and covered over the company of the Egyptians. I was (to be) found there. I, too, was engulfed by the water, and I remained in the sea, being held down there by the pillar until Ehippas arrived."^b
- 8 Next I, Solomon, adjured him to hold up the pillar until the End.
 (127)^b
- 9 Then, under (the direction of) God, I adorned the Temple of God in total beauty.
 (128) And I was rejoicing and praising God.

Solomon falls madly in love with a beautiful Shummanite woman and sacrifices to Jebusite gods to obtain her

- 1 26 I now took countless wives from every land and kingdom. I also took a journey to the kingdom of the Jebusites and saw a woman in their kingdom, and 2 I fell madly in love with her and wanted her to be a wife in my harem. •So I said to their priests, "Give me this Shummanite^a because I am madly in love with her." They replied, "If you love our daughter, fall down before our gods, the 3 great Raphan and Moloch,^b and take her." •However, I did not want to worship (their gods), so I said to them, "I worship no foreign god."^c
- 4 But they threatened violence against the maiden, saying, "If you have the (129)^c opportunity to go to the kingdom of Solomon, say to him, 'I will not go to bed with you unless you become like my people and take five locusts and sacrifice 5 them in the name of Raphan and Molech.' " •So because I loved the girl—she was in full bloom and I was out of my senses—I accepted as nothing the custom (of sacrificing) the blood of the locusts. I took them in my hands and sacrificed in the name of Raphan and Molech to idols, and I took the maiden to the palace of my kingdom.^d

1Kgs 11:1-8
 Gen 10:16
 Josh 18:16,28
 1Chr 11:4f.
 2Sam 5:6f.
 Song 6:3
 1Kgs 2:13-46
 Amos 5:26
 Acts 7:43
 Lev 18:21;
 20:2-5
 Jer 32:35; 49:1f.
 Amos 1:15
 1Kgs 11:7,33
 2Kgs 23:10

b. Eitrem, Magical Papyri, p. 57, notes that the magicians were fascinated with the idea that God had dried up the Red Sea; MSS P Q continue, " 'But when Ehippas came, sent by you shut up in the vessel of a flask, you made me come up to you.' I, Solomon, heard these things and glorified God and adjured the demons not to disobey men, but to remain supporting the pillar. And both swore, saying, '(As) the Lord God lives, we will never let loose of this pillar until the end of the age. But on whatever day this stone should fall, then shall be the end of the age.' And I, Solomon, glorified God and adorned the Temple of the Lord with all beauty, and I was continually glad in spirit in my kingdom and there was peace in my days."

26 a. Perhaps the reference is to the beautiful Shunammite woman brought to David in his old age (1Kgs. 1:1-4, 15; 2:17-22). Her name was Abishag, and Solomon executed Adonijah for treason when he wanted her (1Kgs 2:13-25). McCown (Testament, p. 64) suggests its derivation from the "maid of Shulam" in Song 6:12; 7:1.

b. Raphan and Moloch are mentioned in Acts 7:43 in a quotation from Amos 5:26. Raphan is the LXX translation of Kaiwan, an astral deity. Moloch is the LXX translation of Sakkuth; it is said that Moloch was a deity to whom human sacrifice was made in the Valley of Hinnom (2Kgs 23:10; Jer 32:35; cf. Lev 18:21).

c. MS P (Q is similar) adds, " 'What is this proposal that you compel me to do so much?' But they said, 'That you should become like our fathers.' And when I answered that I would on no account worship foreign gods, they even told the maiden not to sleep with me until I was persuaded to sacrifice to the gods."

d. For TSol 26:5, MS P (Q is similar) appears to read, "Though I, hostile and embittered, was moved, the crafty one (shot) bolts of the maiden's love; I gave pause, but she brought me five grasshoppers, saying, 'Take these grasshoppers and crush them together in the name of the god Molech, and I shall go to bed with you.' This very thing I did."

The glory of God departs from Solomon and he writes this testament

- 6 So the spirit of God departed from me and from that day on my words became as idle talk. She convinced me to build temples of idols.^e 1Kgs 11:1-8
- 7 As a result I, wretched man that I am, carried out her advice and the glory of (130) God completely departed from me; my spirit was darkened and I became a 5:5
- 8 laughingstock to the idols and demons. •For this reason I have written out this, my testament, in order that those who hear might pray about, and pay attention to, the last things and not to the first things, in order that they might finally find grace forever. Amen.^f 15:14

e. For TSol 26:6, MS P (cf. Q) reads, "And immediately the Spirit of God departed from me and I became weak as well as foolish in my words. From this also I was compelled by her to build a temple of idols to Baal and to Rapha and to Moloch and to the other idols."

f. McCown's late discovery of MS N, which is mainly rec. B but supports rec. A at the conclusion, caused him to base the conclusion on rec. A. See McCown, Testament, pp. 121–22*. My translation of his reconstructed conclusion, based on MSS H N: "(7) But I, wretched man that I am, built (them) because of my total love for her, and my kingdom was broken up and I cried aloud greatly, and my spirit was dispersed and ten tribes were taken into slavery with Jeroboam. Then I understood the things spoken to me by the demons, because they said to me, 'By our hands you are about to meet your end.' (8) And I wrote this, my testament, to the Jews and bequeathed it to them as a remembrance of my end. Let my testament be guarded for you as a great mystery against the unclean spirits so that you know the devices of the evil demons and the powers of the holy angels; because a great Lord Sabaoth, the God of Israel, prevails, and he made subject to me all the demons, by whom was given to me a seal of an eternal testament. (9) And I died in my kingdom and was added to my fathers in peace, and the Temple of the LORD God, to whom honor and worship are fitting for ever and ever, was completed. Amen." For other minor textual changes, see "Textual Emendations." MS H by itself continues TSo. 28:8–9a: "Therefore I have written these things which I have come upon among the sons of Israel about spirits and the spirit of unclean insults they offer in the Holy of Holies. (9) Accordingly, I Solomon, Son of David, son of Jesse, have written my testament and have sealed it with the ring of God." After the comment about Solomon's death and burial "in Jerusalem" (v. 9 of the reconstructed text), MS H continues vv. 9f.: "And the Temple of the LORD God, in which a river has its source under his throne, was completed, in which there stood ten thousand angels and a thousand archangels, and cherubim shouting and seraphim calling and saying, 'Holy, holy, holy, Lord Sabaoth,' and 'blessed are you forever and ever. Amen.'"

(10) "Glory to thee, my God and LORD, glory to thee with exceedingly well renowned God-bearer, and (with) the honored

Precursor, and all the saints, glory to thee."

MS D closes with sections on Solomon and the demon prince Samael, and the glory and wisdom of Solomon (D 7:1–8:7; McCown, Testament, pp. 96f.). McCown's rec. C (MSS S T U V W, V W being most extensive, McCown, Testament, pp. 76–87). Rec. C includes a conversation of Solomon with the spirit Paltiel Tzamal (McCown, Testament, pp. 84–87). MS V has a subscription noting that the testament was written down by a physician, John of Aro(?), after Solomon, Son of David, died. John gives the time as December 14, 1440.

TESTAMENT OF ADAM

(Second to Fifth Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY S. E. ROBINSON

The Testament of Adam is divided into three sections known as the Horarium, or hours of the day and night, the Prophecy, and the Hierarchy. The first two sections are attributed to Adam, and Adam speaks in the first person; the third section is not attributed to any specific figure. In the first section, the Horarium, Adam speaks to his son Seth, listing the hours of the day and night and revealing to him which portion of the created world praises God at each hour. In the second section, the Prophecy, Adam reveals information to Seth about the creation and fall of man and foretells the Flood, the birth, passion, and death of Christ, and the final end of the world. At the end of this section, Seth adds that he has personally recorded the testament of his father, Adam, and that he buried it in the legendary Cave of Treasures. The third section, the Hierarchy, is a list of the nine different orders of heavenly beings (angels, archangels, powers, etc.) and a description of the function of each of the nine orders in the divine economy.

Texts

The Syriac Testament of Adam is found in three recensions, witnessed by eight manuscripts which date between the early ninth and late eighteenth centuries. Of these three recensions, recension 1 is the most original.¹ The most important manuscript for recension 1 is British Museum MS Add 14,624 (MS A, 9th cent.). This is the oldest and most important of all the Syriac manuscripts and serves as the base for the translation of the Horarium and Prophecy which follows. The second witness for recension 1 is Vatican Syriac MS 58 (MS B, late 16th cent.). In the translation that follows, lacunae in A have been restored according to B. The Hierarchy is found in only one Syriac manuscript, the best witness for recension 2, Vatican Syriac MS 164 (A.D. 1702). The translation of the Hierarchy is taken from this manuscript. Recension 3 is witnessed by four manuscripts, three of which contain only the Horarium. The fourth, Vatican Syriac MS 159 (A.D. 1632), contains both the Horarium and the Prophecy. One of the other witnesses to recension 3, British Museum MS Arund Or 53 (16th cent., referred to below as E), contains several important variants.

Original language

The Testament of Adam is extant in Syriac, Greek, Arabic, Karshuni, Ethiopic, Old Georgian, and Armenian. M. R. James was also of the opinion that a quotation in Latin by Nicetas of Remesiana was taken from the Testament of Adam, although this is uncertain.² Three languages have been proposed as the original of the Testament of Adam: Hebrew, ¹ See G. J. Reinink, "Das Problem des Ursprungs des Testamentes Adams," OCA 197 (1972) 391-95, especially n. 19; see also S. E. Robinson, The Testament of Adam: An Examination of the Syriac and Greek Traditions, pp. 46, 102-4. The author is indebted to J. H. Charlesworth for his invaluable aid in the preparation of both the dissertation and the present article.

² See M. R. James, "Notes on Apocrypha," JTS 7 (1906) 562f., and Robinson, Testament of Adam, pp. 13f.

Greek, and Syriac. The other languages in which the testament is extant are excluded from consideration by the relatively late dates of their development. The Karshuni and Ethiopic are dependent upon the Arabic, but the Arabic is dependent upon Syriac recension 3 and repeats its errors and expansions.³

The only evidence for a Hebrew original of the testament is the appearance in one of the Greek manuscripts of Hebrew names for each of the hours. M. R. James and others have suggested that these Hebrew names represent the last vestiges of the original Hebrew text. However, examination reveals that these names are not in fact Hebrew but rather Greek words written in Hebrew characters.⁴

F. Nau suggested that the Testament of Adam was originally written in Greek by Apollonius of Tyana. This is untenable for several reasons. First, the extremely large number of biblical allusions in the text make it unlikely that it was written by a pagan. Second, none of the Greek manuscripts is older than the fifteenth century, and all of them employ Byzantine vocabulary not attested before the tenth century A.D., by which time the Testament of Adam had already been circulating in Syriac for six hundred years. Third, the Greek version corresponds most closely with Syriac recension 3, the least reliable of the Syriac recensions.

There can be little doubt that the original language of the Testament of Adam is Syriac, since it has been convincingly shown that the Greek text is dependent upon the Syriac.⁵ None of the variant readings in the Syriac text seem to be instances of alternate translations of the same Greek word, or of mistranslated Greek words, as we should expect if Greek were the original language, but are rather a result of the scribes having mistaken one Syriac word for another.⁶ Further, there are several striking paronomasiae in the Prophecy section which are possible only in Syriac. The Hierarchy section is extant only in Syriac and quotes Zechariah 1:8 according to the Syriac Peshitta version of the Old Testament rather than the Septuagint version.⁷ Finally, the Testament of Adam is known to have been circulating in Syriac by the late fourth century A.D., centuries before there is evidence of its existence in any other language.

Date

The three sections of the Testament of Adam were not written at the same time, but the final Christian redaction, in which the testament took on its present form, probably occurred in the middle or late third century A.D. This tentative date for the final redaction of the Testament of Adam is supported by several bits of evidence. First, the testament is familiar with the Christian traditions found in the New Testament and must therefore be dated after, say, A.D. 100. Second, part of the Prophecy section is quoted in the Syriac Transitus Mariae, which is dated in the late fourth century. Third, the Testament of Adam demonstrates a literary relationship at one point with the Coptic Apocalypse of Elijah, which is dated in the third century A.D. Ordinarily this might be due to copying at some later date, but here the Testament of Adam seems to preserve the passage (a description of the signs of the Messiah) in a more original form than does the Apocalypse of Elijah and should probably not be dated after that document.

Since the Jewish portions of the testament are likely older than the Christian additions, the Horarium and perhaps some of the Prophecy may date from considerably before the third century A.D. The final section, the Hierarchy, is an accretion which does not lend itself to a firm dating, although it may have been composed between the second and fifth centuries A.D.⁸

³ See E. Bratke, "Handschriften Überlieferung und Bruchstücke der Arabisch-aethiopischen Petrusapokalypse," ZWT 1 (1893) 493; S. Grebaut, "Littérature éthiopienne Pseudo-Clémentine," ROC 6 (1911) 73; and Reinink, OCA 197 (1972) 391f.

⁴ See A. Delatte, Anecdota Atheniensia (Liege, 1927) p. 446, and Robinson, Testament of Adam, especially pp. 111, 136f.

⁵ E.g. by Reinink, OCA 197 (1972) 387-99.

⁶ Robinson, Testament of Adam, p. 140.

⁷ A quotation from Zech 1:8 is found in vs. 7 of the Hierarchy. See Robinson, Testament of Adam, p. 143.

⁸ Robinson, Testament of Adam, pp. 148-53.

Provenance

The provenance of the Testament of Adam cannot presently be determined with precision beyond what is suggested by its original language, Syriac. While it was most likely written in Syria or Palestine, the precise location is unknown.

Historical importance

Historically, the Testament of Adam witnesses a pattern in its composition which is also found in some other documents among the Pseudepigrapha. An originally Jewish composition has been redacted (heavily in the Prophecy, lightly in the Horarium and Hierarchy) by a Christian.⁹ The original work, or works if the sections are considered to have circulated separately, has been transformed from a Jewish Midrash on the creation story to a defense of the Church's claim that Jesus was the Messiah. The Testament of Adam thus reflects the high regard in which Jewish traditions were held by many Christians. It also reflects the willingness of some Christians to modify and expand those traditions in support of their own theological position.

Theological importance

In the Testament of Adam, God is represented primarily as the creator of the world and all that is in it. He receives praises at each hour of the day and night from some portion of his creation. There is no dualism; God is the creator of all, including both angels and devils, good and evil, and all things render him proper reverence. There is a definite order to creation and a proper time for every function. In this the document is reminiscent of Jewish wisdom literature.

In the Testament of Adam the cosmos is depicted in familiar Old Testament terms. However, the Flood is said to have been caused by the daughters of Cain, and the career of the world is to last for six thousand years after the Flood, or, presumably, for seven thousand years in all.

One striking theological feature of the Testament of Adam is that Adam is intended from the beginning to become a god; his deification is promised in no uncertain terms (3:2,4). The fall of man is seen as an unfortunate misstep, but the outcome is sure: Adam will become a god. The forbidden fruit is identified as the fig.

The most fully developed doctrine in the Testament of Adam is its angelology, although this is confined mainly to the latest section of the testament, the Hierarchy. While angels and demons are referred to in the Horarium, and both cherubim and seraphim are mentioned, the Hierarchy describes all nine orders of angels and specifies their functions. Angels, the lowest order, act as guardians for human beings. Archangels, the next order, direct the affairs of the rest of creation, human beings excluded. Archons control the weather. Authorities have jurisdiction over the heavenly lights: the sun, the moon, and the stars. The powers keep the demons from destroying the world in general and human beings in particular. Dominions have authority over political kingdoms and grant victory or administer defeat in battle. Angels called "thrones" guard the gate of the holy of holies and stand before the throne of the Lord. Cherubim carry the throne of the Lord and are the keepers of the divine seals. Seraphim serve the inner chamber of the Lord.

Relation to canonical books

Despite its extensive Christian additions, the Testament of Adam is a pseudepigraphon of the Old Testament. Both the Horarium and Prophecy dwell on the themes of creation and the story of Adam and Eve found in Genesis 1–3. It is likely that these two sections were originally Midrashic expansions of the account of the creation in Genesis.¹⁰ Moreover, the Horarium demonstrates striking similarities to Psalm 148, which also deals with the ⁹ Robinson, Testament of Adam, pp. 156–60.

¹⁰ M. R. James, "Apocrypha," in Encyclopedia Biblica (New York, 1899) vol. 1, col. 253. See also Robinson, Testament of Adam, pp. 156–60.

themes of the creation. Other biblical allusions and quotations may be found at Testament of Adam 1:3 (Ps 148:7f.), 1:4 (Isa 6:1–6 and Ezek 3:13), 1:5 (Gen 1:7f.; Ps 148:4; and Ezek 1:24), 1:12 (Ps 104:4), 2:1f. (Ps 148:1f.), 2:10 (Gen 1:2), 4:7 (Zech 1:7–11).

Relation to apocryphal books

Beyond its dependence on the Old and New Testaments, the Testament of Adam manifests a clear literary relationship with several other books from the Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha, and with rabbinic Judaism. Of particular significance are the parallels to the story of Adam and Eve found elsewhere in Jewish literature. The Testament of Adam has much in common with the Life of Adam and Eve (both the Vita and the ApMos), with the gnostic Apocalypse of Adam found at Nag Hammadi, and with the Armenian Death of Adam. Particularly, Adam's prediction of the Flood (3:5) is found also in Josephus' Antiquities 1.2.3 and in the Apocalypse of Adam 69:2–70:9. The death and burial of Adam (3:6) is found in the Apocalypse of Moses 33:1–40:2, Vita Adae et Evae 45:3–46:1, Jubilees 4:29, and in the Armenian Death of Adam. The sisters of Cain and Abel mentioned in the Testament of Adam are a commonplace in rabbinic writing (GenR 22.2, 7; PRE 21; Yeb 62a). The identification of the fig as the forbidden fruit from recension 2 (3:4a) is also found in the Apocalypse of Moses 20:4f. and Genesis Rabbah 15.

The Testament of Adam shares a common passage with the Coptic Apocalypse of Elijah (ApEl 3:5–11), although the passage in the testament appears to be more original (TAdam 3:1; see also recension 2). The passage is a description of the signs of the Messiah based on Jesus' miracles in the New Testament, but in the Apocalypse of Elijah it has been adapted to describe the deceits of the Antichrist.

The testament itself has influenced several later compositions, including the Syriac Transitus Mariae (late 4th cent.), and the Arabic Book of the Rolls (c. 8th–9th cent.). The angelology of the Hierarchy appears to have influenced the Book of the Bee by Solomon of Basra (13th cent.) and may also have influenced the Celestial Hierarchy of Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite (c. A. D. 500).

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 91f.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 7–14.

Frey, J. B. "Adam (Livres apocryphes sous son nom)," DBSup, vol. 1, cols. 117–25.

Gibson, M. D. Apocrypha Arabica. Studia Sinaitica 8; London, 1901; pp. 1–58.

James, M. R. The Lost Apocrypha of the Old Testament. New York, 1920; pp. xi–xiv, 1–4.

Kmosko, M. "Testamentum Adae," Patrologia Syriaca, ed. R. Graffin. Paris, 1907; vol. 2, pp. 1309–60.

Nau, F. "Apotelesmata Apollonii Tyanensis," Patrologia Syriaca, ed. R. Graffin. Paris, 1907; vol. 2, pp. 1363–85.

Reinink, G. J. "Das Problem des Ursprungs des Testamentes Adams," OCA 197 (1972) 387–99.

Renan, E. "Fragments du livre gnostique intitulé Apocalypse d'Adam, ou Pénitence d'Adam ou Testament d'Adam," JA 5.2 (1853) 427–71.

Robinson, S. E. The Testament of Adam: An Examination of the Syriac and Greek Traditions. SBLDS 52; Chico, Calif., 1982.

THE TESTAMENT OF OUR FATHER ADAM^a

1 1 The first hour of the night is the praise of the demons; and at that hour they 2 do not injure or harm any human being. •The second hour is the praise of the 3 doves.^b •The third hour is the praise of the fish and of fire and of all the lower Ps 148:7f.
4 depths. •The fourth hour is the “holy, holy, holy” praise of the seraphim. And Isa 6:2f.
so I used to hear, before I sinned, the sound of their wings in Paradise when the seraphim would beat them to the sound of their triple praise. But after I transgressed 5 against the law, I no longer heard that sound. •The fifth hour is the praise of the Gen 1:7f. waters that are above heaven. And so I, together with the angels, used to hear the sound of mighty waves,^c a sign which would prompt them to lift a hymn of praise 6 to the Creator. •The sixth hour is the construction of clouds and of the great fear 7 which comes in the middle of the night. •The seventh hour is the viewing of their powers while the waters are asleep. And at that hour the waters (can be) taken up and the priest of God mixes them with consecrated oil and anoints those who are afflicted and they rest. Jas 5:14f.
8 The eighth hour is the sprouting up of the grass of the earth while the dew ApMos 9:3 descends from heaven.^d •The ninth hour is the praise of the cherubim. •The tenth Vita 36:2 hour is the praise of human beings, and the gate of heaven is opened through which the prayers of all living things enter, and they worship and depart. And at that hour whatever a man will ask of God is given to him when the seraphim and 11 the roosters beat their wings. •The eleventh hour there is joy in all the earth when 12 the sun rises from Paradise and shines forth upon creation. •The twelfth hour is the waiting for incense, and silence is imposed on all the ranks of fire and wind Ps 104:4 until all the priests burn incense to his divinity. And at that time all the heavenly powers are dismissed.

The End of the Hours of the Night.

1 2 The Hours of the Day^a

2 The first hour of the day is the petition of the heavenly ones. •The second hour Ps 148:1f.
3.4 is the prayer of the angels. •The third hour is the praise of the birds. •The fourth
5 hour is the praise of the beasts. •The fifth hour is the praise which is above 6 heaven. •The sixth hour is the praise of the cherubim who plead against the 7 iniquity of our human nature. •The seventh hour is the entry and exit from the presence of God, when the prayers of all living things enter, and they worship and depart. 1En 40:6

8.9 The eighth hour is the praise of fire and of the waters. •The ninth hour is the 10 entreaty of those angels who stand before the throne of majesty. •The tenth hour is the visitation of the waters when the spirit descends and broods upon the waters and upon the fountains. And if the spirit of the Lord did not descend and brood upon the waters and upon the fountains, human beings would be injured, and everyone the demons saw they would injure. And at that hour the waters (are) taken up and the priest of God mixes them with consecrated oil and anoints those 11 who are afflicted and they are restored and healed. •The eleventh hour is the 12 exultation and joy of the righteous.^b •The twelfth hour, the hour of the evening, is the entreaty of human beings, for the gracious will of God, the Lord of all.

1 a. The translation offered below attempts to render the Syr. into idiomatic English. For a more literal rendering see S. E. Robinson, The Testament of Adam: An Examination of the Syriac and Greek Traditions, pp. 53–85.

b. Syr. recs. 2 and 3 read “of the fish.”

c. E reads “wheels” for “wings.” Cf. 3En 19:5f.

d. Roosters beat their wings and crow at the rising of the sun; apparently the seraphim behave similarly in the presence of God.

2 a. Rec. 2 omits the hours of the day and rec. 3 puts them before the hours of the night.

b. The Gk. reads “elect.”

1 3 (The Prophecy)^a

Adam said to Seth, his son, "You have heard, my son, that God is going to come into the world after a long time, (he will be) conceived of a virgin and put on a body, be born like a human being, and grow up as a child. He will perform signs and wonders on the earth, will walk on the waves of the sea. He will rebuke the winds and they will be silenced. He will motion to the waves and they will stand still! He will open the eyes of the blind and cleanse the lepers. He will cause the deaf to hear, and the mute to speak. He will straighten the hunchbacked, strengthen the paralyzed, find the lost, drive out evil spirits, and cast out demons.

Vita 29:2-8
ApAdam 76:8

ApEl 3:5-11

2 "He spoke to me about this⁷ in Paradise after I picked some of the fruit in which death was hiding: 'Adam, Adam do not fear. You wanted to be a god; I will make you a god,^b not right now, but after a space of many years. I am consigning you to death, and the maggot and the worm will eat your body.' • "And I answered and said to him, 'Why, my Lord?' And he said to me, 'Because you listened to the words of the serpent, you and your posterity will be food for the serpent. But after a short time there will be mercy on you because you were created in my image, and I will not leave you to waste away in Sheol. For your sake I will be born of the Virgin Mary. For your sake I will taste death and enter the house of the dead. For your sake I will make a new heaven, and I will be established over your posterity.

ApMos 13:26

4 " 'And after three days, while I am in the tomb, I will raise up the body I received from you. And I will set you at the right hand of my divinity, and I will make you a god just like you wanted. And I will receive favor from God, and I will restore to you and to your posterity that which is the justice of heaven.'^c

5 "You have heard, my son Seth,^d that a Flood is coming and will wash the whole earth because of the daughters of Cain, your brother, who killed your brother Abel out of passion for your sister Lebuda,^e since sins had been created through your mother, Eve. And after the Flood there will be six thousand years (left) to the form of the world, and then its end will come.'

6 And I, Seth, wrote this testament. And my father died, and they buried him at the east of Paradise opposite the first city built on the earth, which was named (after) Enoch. And Adam was borne to his grave by the angels and powers of heaven because he had been created in the image of God. And the sun and the moon were darkened, and there was thick darkness for seven days. • And we sealed the testament and we put it in the cave of treasures^f with the offerings Adam had taken out of Paradise, gold and myrrh and frankincense. And the sons of kings, the magi, will come and get them, and they will take them to the son of God, to Bethlehem of Judea, to the cave.^g

Vita 45:2
Jub 4:29

ApMos 33-35

Vita 46:1

ApMos 29:5f.

The End of the Testament of Our Father Adam.

3 a. The widespread tradition of Adam's prophecy of future world history is also found in Ant 1.2.3; ApAd 64:2-6 and 85:19-31; Vita 25:1f.; and in the Armenian Death of Adam (M. Stone, "The Death of Adam—An Armenian Adam Book," HTR 59 [1966] 283-91).

b. The explicit promise of deification to Adam is unexpected but not without precedent. Cf. Jn 10:33-36.

c. Here rec. 2 adds, "And I, Seth, said to my father, Adam, 'What is the name of the fruit you ate?' And he said to me, 'The fig, my son, was the gate by which death entered into me and my posterity, and by it life shall come to me and to my children when our Lord becomes a man through the virgin and puts on a holy body at the end of the ages.'"

d. The Syr. can be read "I heard in the beginning" or "you have heard, my son Seth," although the word division and diacritical marks clearly intend the latter. In rec. 2 these indicate the former, in a clear example of a variant which could arise only in Syr.

e. See also GenR 22.7 and PRE 21; L. Ginzberg, Legends of the Jews (Philadelphia, 1928) vol. 1, pp. 180f.; vol. 5, pp. 138f.

f. See E. A. W. Budge, The Book of the Cave of Treasures (London, 1927) pp. 72f.

g. Here rec. 3 adds, "Your father David sang psalms to you before you came, only begotten God; for he sang to you about the gold of Ophir in his prophecy. And behold, the literal meaning of your psalm has stood firm. Behold gold and myrrh and frankincense heaped before you, little child. Gold for your royalty, frankincense for your divine substance, and myrrh for your burial."

1 4 Also from the Testament of Our Father Adam^a

The heavenly powers: what they are like and how each of their orders is occupied in the service and the plan of this world. Listen, my beloved,^b as they are set in order one after another from the bottom, until we reach those who carry our Lord Jesus the Messiah and bear him up. The lowest order is the angels.^c And the plan has been revealed to it by God concerning every human being whom they watch over, because one angel from this lowest order accompanies every single human being in the world for his protection. And this is its service.

2 The second order is the archangels. This is the service: directing everything in this creation according to the plan of God, whether powers or animals, birds, or creeping things, or fish, and to speak briefly and in short, whatever exists in this creation, besides human beings, they care for it and guide it.

3 The third order, which is the archons. This is its service: moving the air so that a cloud rises from the ends of the earth, according to the words of David the prophet, and rain falls upon the earth. And this (order) makes all the variations in the atmosphere, sometimes rain and sometimes snow and sometimes hail and sometimes dust and sometimes blood. And it varies them. These also belong to this (order): thunder and the fire of lightning.

4 The fourth order, which is authorities. This is its service: the administration of the lights, of the sun and the moon and the stars.

5 The fifth order, which is the powers. This is its service: they keep the demons from destroying the creation of God out of their jealousy toward human beings; for if the cursed nature of the demons were allowed to accomplish the lust of its will, in an hour and a moment they would overthrow the whole creation. But the divine power stops them, for a watch is set over them lest they succeed in achieving the lust of their will.

6 The sixth order, which is the dominions. This is its service: they rule over kingdoms, and in their hands are victory and defeat in battle. And this is shown (to be) so by (the example of) the Assyrian king. For when he went up against Jerusalem, an angel descended and ravaged the camp of the wicked, and one

7 hundred eighty-five thousand died in one moment. •And also the blessed Zechariah saw the angel in the form of a man riding on a red horse standing among the trees of the tabernacle, and following him (were others on) white and red horses with lances in their hands. And Judah the Maccabee also saw the angel riding on a red horse all decked out with gold trappings. When they saw him, the camp of Antiochus the wicked fled before him. And wherever there is victory or defeat, these bestow it at the prompting of the living God, who commands them in the hour of battle.

2Kgs 19:35
Isa 37:36
Zech 1:7-11

2Mac 3:24-26

8 These other orders, thrones and seraphim and cherubim, stand before the majesty of our Lord Jesus the Messiah and serve the throne of his magnificence, glorifying him hourly with their "holy, holy, holy." The cherubim bear up and reverence his throne and keep the seals; the seraphim serve the inner chamber of our Lord; the thrones guard the gate of the holy of holies. This is truly the explanation of the services according to the plan of the angels in this world.

By the Power of Our Lord's Help the End of the Writing, the Testament of Our Father Adam.

4 a. This section is found in only one Syr. MS.

b. The use of the plural here indicates that this is no longer Adam speaking to Seth.

c. Cf. Col 1:16; Eph 1:21; 2En 20:1; and TLevi

3:7f. Angelologies similar to that which follows are found in the Book of the Bee, ch. 5, in the hierarchy of Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite, in the opening lines of CavTr, and in VisIs.