

VOLUME 2

THE OLD TESTAMENT

Pseudepigrapha

---

EXPANSIONS OF
THE "OLD TESTAMENT" AND LEGENDS, WISDOM AND PHILOSOPHICAL LITERATURE, PRAYERS, PSALMS AND ODES, FRAGMENTS OF LOST
JUDEO-HELLENISTIC WORKS

EDITED BY
JAMES H. CHARLESWORTH

---

New Translations from Authoritative Texts with Introductions and Critical Notes by an International Team of Scholars

THE OLD TESTAMENT PSEUDEPIGRAPHA

THE OLD TESTAMENT PSEUDEPIGRAPHA

VOLUME 2

Expansions of
the “Old Testament” and Legends, Wisdom and Philosophical Literature,
Prayers, Psalms, and Odes, Fragments of Lost Judeo-Hellenistic Works

EDITED BY

JAMES H. CHARLESWORTH

1985

DOUBLEDAY & COMPANY, INC.

GARDEN CITY, NEW YORK

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

Main entry under title:

Old Testament pseudepigrapha.

Includes indexes.

1. Apocryphal books (Old Testament)—Criticism, interpretation, etc. I. Charlesworth, James H.

BS1830.A3 1985 229 80-2443

ISBN 0-385-09630-5 (v. 1)

ISBN 0-385-18813-7 (v. 2)

Library of Congress Catalog Card Number: 80-2443

ISBN: 0-385-18813-7

Copyright © 1985 by James H. Charlesworth

All Rights Reserved

Printed in the United States of America

First Edition

Designed by Joseph P. Ascherl

Dedicated to my family
—Jerrie, Michelle, Eve, and James—to other families supporting our common labors, and to families who read these documents.

CONTENTS

|  |                               |        |
|--|-------------------------------|--------|
| Foreword   | George W. MacRae, S.J. | ix     |
| Foreword for Christians                            | James T. Cleland       | x      |
| Foreword for Jews                                  | Samuel Sandmel         | xi     |
| Editor's Preface                                   | James H. Charlesworth  | xv     |
| Board of Advisors                                  |                               | xviii  |
| Contributors                                       |                               | xviii  |
| Introduction for the General Reader                | James H. Charlesworth  | xxi    |
| Explanation of Typographical and Reference Systems |                               | xxxv   |
| List of Abbreviations                              |                               | xxxvii |

DOCUMENTS

EXPANSIONS OF THE "OLD TESTAMENT" AND LEGENDS

|   |                           |     |
|---|---------------------------|-----|
| Introduction  | J. H. Charlesworth | 5   |
| Letter of Aristeas (Third Century B.C.–First Century A.D.)                  |                           |     |
| R. J. H. Shutt   |                           | 7   |
| Jubilees (Second Century B.C.)  | O. S. Wintermute   | 35  |
| Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah (Second Century B.C.–Fourth Century A.D.) | M. A. Knibb        | 143 |
| Joseph and Aseneth (First Century B.C.–Second Century A.D.)                 |                           |     |
| C. Burchard  |                           | 177 |
| Life of Adam and Eve (First Century A.D.)                                   | M. D. Johnson      | 249 |
| Pseudo-Philo (First Century A.D.)   | D. J. Harrington   | 297 |
| The Lives of the Prophets (First Century A.D.)                              | D. R. A. Hare      | 379 |
| Ladder of Jacob (c. First Century A.D.?)                                    | H. G. Lunt         | 401 |
| 4 Baruch (First to Second Century A.D.)                                     | S. E. Robinson     | 413 |
| Jannes and Jambres (First to Third Century A.D.)                            |                           |     |
| A. Pietersma and T. R. Lutz  |                           | 427 |
| History of the Rechabites (First to Fourth Century A.D.)                    |                           |     |
| J. H. Charlesworth   |                           | 443 |
| Eldad and Modad (prior to Second Century A.D.)                              | E. G. Martin       | 463 |
| History of Joseph (prior to Fourth Century A.D.)                            | G. T. Zervos       | 467 |

WISDOM AND PHILOSOPHICAL LITERATURE

|  |                           |     |
|--|---------------------------|-----|
| Introduction                           | J. H. Charlesworth | 477 |
| Ahiqar (Seventh to Sixth Century B.C.) | J. M. Lindenberger | 479 |

|   |                            |     |
|---|----------------------------|-----|
| 3 Maccabees (First Century B.C.)                          | H. Anderson         | 509 |
| 4 Maccabees (First Century A.D.)                          | H. Anderson         | 531 |
| Pseudo-Phocylides (First Century B.C.–First Century A.D.) | P. W. van der Horst | 565 |
| The Sentences of the Syriac Menander (Third Century A.D.) | T. Baarda           | 583 |

PRAYERS, PSALMS, AND ODES

|   |  |     |
|---|--|-----|
| Introduction  | J. H. Charlesworth                    | 607 |
| More Psalms of David (Second Century B.C.–First Century A.D.) | J. H. Charlesworth with J. A. Sanders | 609 |
| Prayer of Manasseh (Second Century B.C.–First Century A.D.)   | J. H. Charlesworth                    | 625 |
| Psalms of Solomon (First Century B.C.)                        | R. B. Wright                          | 639 |
| Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers (Second to Third Century A.D.)  | D. R. Darnell and D. A. Fiensy        | 671 |
| Prayer of Joseph (First Century A.D.)                         | J. Z. Smith                           | 699 |
| Prayer of Jacob (First to Fourth Century A.D.)                | J. H. Charlesworth                    | 715 |
| Odes of Solomon (Late First to Early Second Century A.D.)     | J. H. Charlesworth                    | 725 |

SUPPLEMENT

FRAGMENTS OF LOST JUDEOHELLENISTIC WORKS

|  |                           |     |
|--|---------------------------|-----|
| Editor's Introduction  | J. H. Charlesworth | 775 |
| General Introduction, with a Note on Alexander Polyhistor      | J. Strugnell       | 777 |
| POETRY   |                           |     |
| Philo the Epic Poet (Third to Second Century B.C.)             | H. Attridge        | 781 |
| Theodotus (Second to First Century B.C.)                       | F. Fallon          | 785 |
| ORACLE   |                           |     |
| Orphica (Second Century B.C.–First Century A.D.)               | M. Lafargue        | 795 |
| DRAMA  |                           |     |
| Ezekiel the Tragedian (Second Century B.C.)                    | R. G. Robertson    | 803 |
| OTHER  |                           |     |
| Fragments of Pseudo-Greek Poets (Third to Second Century B.C.) | H. Attridge        | 821 |
| PHILOSOPHY   |                           |     |
| Aristobulus (Second Century B.C.)                              | A. Yarbro Collins  | 831 |
| CHRONOGRAPHY   |                           |     |
| Demetrius the Chronographer (Third Century B.C.)               | J. Hanson          | 843 |

CONTENTS

viii

HISTORY

|  |                  |     |
|--|------------------|-----|
| Aristeas the Exegete (prior to First Century B.C.) | R. Doran  | 855 |
| Eupolemus (prior to First Century B.C.)            | F. Fallon | 861 |
| Pseudo-Eupolemus (prior to First Century B.C.)     | R. Doran  | 873 |
| Cleodemus Malchus (prior to First Century B.C.)    | R. Doran  | 883 |

ROMANCE

|  |                      |     |
|--|----------------------|-----|
| Artapanus (Third to Second Century B.C.) | J. J. Collins | 889 |
|--|----------------------|-----|

APPENDIX

|   |  |     |
|---|--|-----|
| Pseudo-Hecataeus (Second Century B.C.—First Century A.D.) |  |     |
| R. Doran   |  | 905 |

|       |  |     |
|-------|--|-----|
| INDEX |  | 921 |
|-------|--|-----|

FOREWORD

GEORGE W. MACRAE, S.J.

The ancient Jewish and Jewish-Christian documents that are here called Pseudepigrapha have in their long history been both problematic and promising in both Jewish and Christian communities. It is heartening to observe that the very publication of this new collection testifies more to their promise than to their problems. An ancient witness to both problem and promise can be found within two late books of the New Testament itself. The Epistle of Jude, in its strong antiheretical polemic, refers at least twice to the language of the book we call 1 Enoch and in a third instance quotes it in an authoritative manner as prophetic. It also refers to a legend about the body of Moses known to us in the book called the Assumption of Moses. The Second Epistle of Peter, generally regarded as the latest of the New Testament books, incorporates much of Jude into its second chapter, but it is very careful to excise all of the allusions to the Pseudepigrapha.

The problem to which this situation points is that of the canonical status of the Pseudepigrapha in early Christianity—and the consequent propriety or impropriety of citing them in public documents. Clearly the authors of Jude and 2 Peter reflect different views. This problem persisted for centuries in the Church and can further be seen in the reluctance of some churches to accept Jude into the New Testament because of its controversial sources. In the synagogue the problem did not persist so long, and the decision was clearly against the Pseudepigrapha.

The promise to which the episode of Jude and 2 Peter points is the value of studying the Pseudepigrapha for a better understanding of prerabbinic Judaism and of the religious matrix of Christianity. Whatever canonical decisions were taken by the official leadership, it is clear that in popular religious circles, especially Christian ones, this literature continued to be prominent and to influence thought and piety.

The most recent decades have seen an astonishing rebirth of scholarly interest in the Pseudepigrapha, and these volumes are an excellent guide to much of it. The renewed interest has been and continues to be stimulated in part by new manuscript discoveries. One thinks of the Dead Sea Scrolls among others. These have provided access to much more extensive knowledge of Judaism in the period immediately following the Old Testament. But perhaps even more important than such a largely accidental factor as manuscript discoveries has been the ever increasing acceptance of historical-critical method on the part of students of the Bible at all levels. To study the Bible by this method involves knowing as much as one can about the biblical world in all of its facets. And this of course includes knowing the Jewish and Christian religious literature that ultimately did not become part of the Bible. What we find, as these volumes show, is a bewildering variety of ideas, styles, and literary genres that is as diversified as the Bible itself yet often quite different from it. One of the merits of this edition, especially when compared to the few earlier ones in modern languages, is that it is inclusive rather than exclusive. It includes much more of the surviving literature than others have. Thus it affords a rich insight into the creative religious imagination from a singularly important formative period in Western religious culture.

Readers of these volumes and those who consult them for reference should include scholars and teachers, students, and any others who have an interest in the biblical world. All will be grateful to the many scholars who have contributed to the work. But more especially, they will have an enormous debt of gratitude to Professor Charlesworth and his immediate associates who boldly undertook and so competently executed the formidable task of editing this major work.

FOREWORD FOR CHRISTIANS

JAMES T. CLELAND

As one brought up in the home of a Church of Scotland minister, my father, and as one prepared for the Christian ministry in the Divinity Hall of Glasgow University, I have been trying to recall any unique impact made upon me by these related experiences, apart from family worship; the daily reading of the Word of God: Genesis to Revelation, one chapter per night, before falling asleep. The unexpected outcome is that I still find it somewhat difficult to decide if a Scots Presbyterian is an Old Testament Christian, with a stress on the Law and the Psalms, or a New Testament Jew, who attends his synagogue—as Jesus' custom was—on the sabbath day (Luke 4:16). There he hears a sermon which may be based on the Old Testament, or on the New Testament, or on both, as equally valid, equally authoritative. Why not? Is it not the same God in both testaments?

Many years later, in a Duke Divinity School morning chapel service, instead of a meditation, I just read the Prayer of Manasseh, now recognized, in its own right, as one of the Pseudepigrapha. After the service, a colleague asked me, "Where did you find that?" I told him. His surprised, almost awed, comment was: "That is the gospel outside of the Gospels." Why such a reaction? Manasseh was acknowledged to be the wickedest king of Judah, one who both majored and minored in iniquity, and yet maintained his throne in Jerusalem for fifty-five years, which was something of a record. Dr. James Moffatt sums up Manasseh, that royal rake, in a few simple words: "He did ample evil in the sight of the eternal to vex him" (2Chr 33:6). That is the emphasis of underemphasis. However, Manasseh repented; he prayed; God forgave (2Chr 33:13). The God who forgave is the same, yesterday, today, and forever, the God of Jew and Christian alike.

What I, a pulpiteer, hope from this volume, supervised by Professor Charlesworth, aided and abetted by scholars throughout the world, is that, as never before, Judaism and Christianity will be recognized as heirs of the same God, with what Jew and Christian have in common uniting us, rather than continuing a separation which may be emotionally understandable but is spiritually devitalizing. The very text of parts of the Pseudepigrapha may have been edited by later Jews or Christians. It would be good if one of the scholars discovered in his research that a section was prepared by Jew and Christian working together, not always in agreement in minor matters, but one in scholarship and editing because each had faith, academic and spiritual, in the same Father, who is at the heart of both testaments, and to be found in the Pseudepigrapha.

So, may it come to pass that what unites us as brethren will far surpass what seems to separate us, too often, even too willingly. We need each other. We are both children of the Kingdom, and the Pseudepigrapha may become a bridge between the Old and New testaments, helping us cross to and fro, back and forth, until we are equally at home in both, to our mental satisfaction, and our spiritual growth in grace.

So read the Prayer of Manasseh in the Pseudepigrapha. It is a model for a prayer, public or private: the invocation of God: "O Lord, God of our fathers, . . . unending and immeasurable are your promised mercies" (vss. 1-6); the confession of sin, verses 9-10: "O Lord, I am justly afflicted . . . because I did evil things before you"; the entreaty for forgiveness, verses 11-15, including the wonderful metaphor of complete surrender to God: "And now behold I am bending the knees of my heart" (v. 11); "Forgive me, O Lord, forgive me" (v. 13); "I shall praise you continually all the days of my life" (v. 15). It is a bonny prayer; my gratitude to the Jew who wrote it. I shall use it.

This prayer is to more than a few people the most famous instance of "the infinite compassion of God." If a Manasseh can be absolved, there is hope for anyone—including me. No wonder that I bend "the knees of my heart." It is the gospel outside the Gospels.

FOREWORD FOR JEWS

SAMUEL SANDMEL

By the strangest quirk of fate respecting literature that I know of, large numbers of writings by Jews were completely lost from the transmitted Jewish heritage. These documents stem roughly from 200 B.C. to A.D. 200. Not only the so-called Pseudepigrapha, but even such important and extensive writings as those by Philo and Josephus have not been part of the Jewish inheritance from its past; these were preserved and transmitted by Christians. It was rather only in the backwash of the Renaissance that Jews began to encounter Philo and Josephus. A sixteenth-century Italian rabbi, Azariah de Rossi, in a book called Me-or Enayim ("Light for the Eyes”), inaugurated this Jewish rediscovery of the “lost” literature. He wrote with great praise of Philo, but with only reserved admiration for Josephus, whose Jewish loyalty he doubted. After de Rossi, Jews began slowly to deepen their study of Josephus and Philo, and thereafter the other literature, as legitimate parts of the Jewish heritage.

The ancient literary legacy which Jews did preserve and transmit was primarily the rabbinic literature. This huge body of writings might be divided into three categories: one, the Midrashim; two, Mishna and Gemara; and three, the Targumim. The Midrashim are commentaries on Scripture arranged according to the sequence of the biblical verses. The Mishna is a laconic statement of the secondary laws (Halacha) derived from Scripture. The Targumim allude to the Aramaic translation of Scripture; these translations have come down to us in differing styles and in somewhat differing ages. While within the rabbinic literature, especially in passages called haggadic (“narrative”), there are allusions to some of the documents found in the Apocrypha and occasionally to those in the Pseudepigrapha, it is only Ecclesiasticus (Jesus, the son of Sirach) who figures in any prominence at all in the talmudic literature. The Pseudepigrapha as such might be said with very little exaggeration to be without reflection in rabbinic literature.

As is known, the Pseudepigrapha were first gathered by Johannes Fabricius in the early part of the eighteenth century. Subsequent collectors of this material were able to add certain books that were unknown to Fabricius and certain editors, such as R. H. Charles, included in editions of the Pseudepigrapha materials the presence of which might be questioned. Charles, for example, included the talmudic tractate the Ethics of the Fathers. The point is that there is no such thing as a “canon” of the Pseudepigrapha. Rather, there is an abundance of this scattered literature, some of it preserved in entirety and some preserved in part, usually in translation rather than in the original Hebrew or Aramaic. It is in reality only in the eighteenth century that the earnest and ever increasing study of the Pseudepigrapha began. Because most of the Pseudepigrapha were not preserved in Hebrew or Aramaic, it has been only the rare Jewish scholar who has made this study a major concern. By and large it has been Christians who have done the painstaking work of gathering this material, comparing the various manuscripts, producing critical editions, and providing translations into modern languages.

I do not think it is wrong to say that much of the Christian interest in the Pseudepigrapha in the early nineteenth century was based on the light this literature was deemed to throw on early Christianity. Since the documents in the Pseudepigrapha were not being studied for their own sake, often that roundedness which one should expect from the best of scientific scholarship was absent. Even more to be deplored was the circumstance that there were Christian scholars who seemed to feel the need to choose, as it were, between the Pseudepigrapha on the one hand and the rabbinic literature on the other hand, and who, on the basis of only part of the total Jewish literary productivity, came to some occasionally quixotic or reckless or even partisan conclusions about the nature of Judaism at the time of the birth of Christianity. Such an allegation would not be unjust respecting R. H. Charles.

A complete turnaround in the approach to the Pseudepigrapha in the last decades has been most gratifying. These writings have become the object of study for their own sake, part of the wish to illuminate the totality of the Jewish creativity of that bygone age. The recent scholarship has not tried to make the literature fit into a procrustean bed for some parochial purpose. It should be said that the relevancy of the Pseudepigrapha to early Christianity is not in any way diminished by the recent admirable mode of the study of Pseudepigrapha.

The result of the work of fine scholars, such as are represented herein, has been a significant broadening and deepening of the appreciation of the Jewish literary creativity. The cooperative study enlisting the gifted minds of Christians of various denominations and Jews of varying backgrounds is surely as moving and exciting a development as any cooperative academic venture could be. Perhaps it was the abundance of this ancient literature which the author of Ecclesiastes had in mind when he spoke rather cynically in these words: "of making many books there is no end and most of them are a weariness of the flesh." Obviously the author of Ecclesiastes did not admire every bit of writing that was in his ken. I do not think that the modern student needs to admire every example of the Pseudepigrapha, any more than we today need to regard every novel as a masterpiece. But he can still be astonished, amazed, enlightened, and overwhelmed by the abundance and variety and recurrent high quality of the Jewish literary activity of that period.

Old as this literature is for most modern people, it is also in a sense something brand-new, for most American laypeople have never heard the word Pseudepigrapha, or, if they have heard it, are not sure what it means. Now through the work of Professor Charlesworth and his associates a door is being opened anew to treasures that are very old. How gratifying it is that scholars devote themselves to the recovery of that which was lost or strayed or hidden. How gratifying that cooperative study is reviving this literature. How much such study contributes to understanding the richness of the Jewish legacy, now the heritage of both Jews and Christians.

EDITOR'S PREFACE

The present work is designed for the scholar and for the interested non-specialist. The general introduction, the introductions to each subdivision and to each document, and the translations with accompanying notes are shaped to help the reader understand these ancient writings. At the outset it is wise to stress three caveats for the general reader: 1) The following collection of writings, many of which claim to preserve a message from God for his people, are not gathered here in order to replace or add to those scriptures considered canonical by Jews or the larger collections claimed to be canonical by various groups of Christians. 2) In order to understand the Bible better the Pseudepigrapha should not be read in isolation, but along with the writings collected in the Old and New testaments (terms used for convenience and without confessional bias), and in ten other collections of ancient Jewish or early Christian writings (see Introduction). 3) The expanded definition of the Pseudepigrapha, now universally recognized as necessary by scholars, represents a more extended historical period than Charles's selection of writings; hence it must not be used prima facie as a group of writings representative of Early Judaism. The late documents, and Christian expansions of early Jewish writings, as the contributors themselves clarify, must not be read as if they were composed by contemporaries of the early ones. Conversely, late writings must not be ignored in a search for ideas possibly characteristic of Early Judaism; these documents frequently preserve edited portions of early Jewish writings.

In the fall of 1972, an editor at Doubleday, John J. Delaney, on the advice of his consultants, invited me to prepare a new edition of the Pseudepigrapha. The present work, completed ten years later, is the product of an international team of collaborators. Because it is a widely used term today, we have decided to retain the technical term "Pseudepigrapha"; it is explained in the following Introduction.

Each contributor was asked to discuss all issues requisite for a meaningful reading of the document translated, and given some freedom in utilizing the following format:

The contributor begins the presentation either with a synopsis of the narrative or with a discussion of the key characteristics and central ideas in a non-narrative writing.

Texts. The scholar discusses only the most important extant texts, and clarifies the textual base or the critical edition behind the translation.

Original Language. The translator briefly discusses the original language of the document, reviews published scholarly conclusions, and usually advocates one possibility.

Date. The contributor assesses the debates (if any) over the date of the original composition, explains, if appropriate, the dates of any subsequent expansions or interpolations, and then presents his or her own scholarly opinion.

Provenance. The expert briefly evaluates the hypotheses regarding the place or places in which the work may have been composed, and subsequently voices his or her own judgment.

Historical Importance. The contributor discusses the importance of the document for an appreciation of the historical period in which it was composed.

Theological Importance. The specialist explains the motifs, symbols, and major theological ideas contained in the pseudepigraphon.

Relation to Canonical Books. The expert assesses the possible relationships between the pseudepigraphon and writings now customarily judged canonical.

Relation to Apocryphal Books. The scholar succinctly discusses the apocryphal books to which the document is especially close.

Cultural Importance. If appropriate, the contributor discusses the importance of the pseudepigraphon for a better understanding of the origin of our culture. Briefly mentioned are possible parallels between it and the great classics, such as Plato's Dialogues, Dante's Divina Commedia, and Milton's Paradise Lost.

At the end of each introduction to a document the contributor lists the most important publications on the document.

The organization of these documents follows considerable discussion with the Board of Advisors and the contributors themselves. Any system for ordering these documents has weaknesses. A listing of the documents in chronological order is impractical at the present time. We are still uncertain about the date or dates of composition for many of these writings; moreover, some are composite and represent more than one century. Merely placing them in alphabetical order is attractive in the sense that one knows where a particular document is in such a recognized sequence; hence, an alphabetical listing on the endpapers of this volume. An alphabetical listing is confusing, however, because some of the documents collected below are known by more than one title, some may be listed alphabetically according to more than one word in the title, and—most importantly—an alphabetical order is artificial and does not signal the relationships between documents that are related. We have decided to organize the documents according to broadly conceived literary types. Within these groups they are listed chronologically in terms of the earliest probable date with the exception that cycles of traditions, like the Enoch and Ezra books, are grouped together.

In the past scholars often felt free to emend a text and to aim at a loose idiomatic translation (although Charles himself was a literalist). Modern scholarship has demanded more rigorous devotion to extant readings, more thorough attempts to understand the grammar and syntax of ancient languages, and, in general, more loyalty to the manuscripts. While we have aimed whenever possible at an idiomatic rendering, we have avoided the temptation to paraphrase the meaning of a complicated passage or to conceal sometimes confusing readings behind elegant English prose. Besides trustworthiness to the transmitted text, there are other advantages in these literal renderings: The reader is introduced to the flavor of ancient expressions, phrases, and images. We have also presented literal translations of texts written in a language two or three times removed from that of the lost original. For example, Pseudo-Philo is extant in Latin but the original was composed in another language, probably Hebrew. The same situation lies behind 1 Enoch and Jubilees; both seem to derive ultimately from a Semitic language, which may be immediately behind the Ethiopic or be separated from it by an intermediary Greek version.

The preparation of this volume has been financed by generous grants and gifts from the Phillips Investment Corporation, the Phillips family, the Mary Duke Biddle Foundation, Brigham Young University's Religious Studies Center, Raymond and Hazel Mueller, Frances DeMott, the Welch family, and the Duke University Research Council. I am deeply grateful to each of them.

Finally after years of sacrificial work by so many it is difficult to articulate my deep appreciation and indebtedness to all those who have helped in the completion of the present edition of the Pseudepigrapha. I am indebted to the editors and staff at Doubleday, to my Board of Advisors, to the external readers, notably H. D. Betz, I. Gruenwald, J. Neusner, J. F. Oates, B. Schaller, J. L. Sharpe III, J. F. Strange, N. Turner, J. C. VanderKam, and F. W. Young, who have labored over many of these contributions, and to the contributors, who had to live for a long time with a frequently stern and demanding editor. I am grateful to my colleagues here at Duke, who had to live with unexpected responsibilities due to the tasks that fell my way, to the administrators, especially President Sanford, Chairman Bill Poteat, Chairman Bob Osborn, and Dean Langford, who provided space for editing and preparing the work. W. D. Davies, Moody Smith, Ray Brown, and John Strugnell helped me improve the Introduction. Many of my assistants worked long and hard hours, often during the trying summer months in Durham, and I wish to express my appreciation to all of them, notably Gary Martin, Jim Dumke, Dave Fiensy, Steve Robinson, George Zervos, and most especially to James Mueller, who served the longest, saw the task through to completion, and has proved to be a gifted and dedicated assistant. Marie Smith, my secretary, has without complaint typed and retyped much of the manuscript, and all of the voluminous correspondence. To all of these mentioned and many others I wish to express my sincere appreciation and hope that the final product is worthy of their sacrifices and support.

J. H. Charlesworth

Duke University
December 1982

BOARD OF ADVISORS

- Brown, R. E., Auburn Professor of Biblical Studies, Union Theological Seminary, New York, New York
- Davies, W. D., Bradford Distinguished University Professor of Religion Studies, Texas Christian University, Fort Worth, Texas
- Harrelson, W., Distinguished Professor of Old Testament, Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tennessee
- Metzger, B. M., George L. Collord Professor of New Testament Language and Literature, Emeritus, Princeton Theological Seminary, Princeton, New Jersey
- Murphy, R. E., G. W. Ivey Professor of Old Testament, Duke University, Durham, North Carolina
- Strugnell, J., Professor of Christian Origins, Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts

CONTRIBUTORS TO VOLUME TWO

- Anderson, H., Professor of New Testament Language, Literature, and Theology, Head of the Department of New Testament, University of Edinburgh, Edinburgh, Scotland
3 Maccabees, 4 Maccabees
- Attridge, H., Perkins School of Theology, Southern Methodist University, Dallas, Texas
Philo the Epic Poet, Fragments of Pseudo-Greek Poets
- Baarda, T., Professor of the New Testament, Vrije Universiteit, Amsterdam, Holland
Syriac Menander
- Burchard, C., Heidelberg-Ziegelhausen, West Germany
Joseph and Aseneth
- Charlesworth, J. H., George L. Collord Professor of New Testament Language and Literature, Princeton Theological Seminary, Princeton, New Jersey
Editor's Preface, Introduction for the General Reader, Introduction to Expansions of the "Old Testament" and Legends, History of the Rechabites, Introduction to Wisdom and Philosophical Literature, Introduction to Prayers, Psalms, and Odes, More Psalms of David, Prayer of Manasseh, Prayer of Jacob, Odes of Solomon, Editor's Introduction to Fragments of Lost Judeo-Hellenistic Works
- Collins, A. Yarbro, Associate Professor of New Testament, McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, Illinois
Aristobulus
- Collins, J. J., Associate Professor of Religious Studies, De Paul University, Chicago, Illinois
Artapanus
- Darnell, D. R., Minister, First Christian Church (Disciples of Christ), Perryton, Texas
Hellenistic Synagoga Prayers

- Doran, R., Department of Religion, Amherst College, Amherst, Massachusetts Aristeas the Exegete, Pseudo-Eupolemus, Cleodemus Malchus, Pseudo-Hecataeus
- Fallon, F., Visiting Assistant Professor, Boston College, Chestnut Hill, Massachusetts
Theodotus, Eupolemus
- Fiensy, D. A., Assistant Professor of Religion, Kentucky Christian College, Grayson, Kentucky
Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers
- Hanson, J., Department of Religious Studies, University of Kansas, Lawrence, Kansas
Demetrius the Chronographer
- Hare, D. R. A., William F. Orr Professor of New Testament, Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania
The Lives of the Prophets
- Harrington, D. J., S. J., Associate Professor of New Testament, Weston School of Theology, Cambridge, Massachusetts
Pseudo-Philo
- Johnson, M. D., Academic Editor, Augsburg Publishing House, Minneapolis, Minnesota
Life of Adam and Eve
- Knibb, M. A., Lecturer in Old Testament Studies, University of London, King's College, London, England
Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah
- Lafargue, M., Lecturer, Religion Department, University of Massachusetts at Boston
Orphica
- Lindenberger, J. M., Associate Professor of Old Testament, Director of Graduate Studies, Vancouver School of Theology, Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada
Ahiqar
- Lunt, H. G., Samuel Hazzard Cross Professor of Slavic Languages and Literatures, Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts
Ladder of Jacob
- Lutz, R. T., Department of Near Eastern Studies, University of Toronto, Toronto, Ontario, Canada
Jannes and Jambres
- Martin, E. G., Perkins Library, Duke University, Durham, North Carolina
Eldad and Modad
- Pietersma, A., Department of Near Eastern Studies, University of Toronto, Toronto, Ontario, Canada
Jannes and Jambres
- Robinson, S. E., Assistant Professor of Religion, Lycoming College, Williamsport, Pennsylvania
4 Baruch
- Robertson, R. G., Federated Church of Ashland, Ashland, Massachusetts
Ezekiel the Tragedian
- Sanders, J. A., President, Ancient Manuscript Center for Preservation and Research, School of Theology at Claremont and Claremont Graduate School, Claremont, California
More Psalms of David
- Shutt, R. J. H., Professor Emeritus, Department of Religious Studies, Worcester College of Education, Worcester, England
Letter of Aristeas
- Smith, J. Z., William Benton Professor of Religion and Human Sciences, The Divinity School, University of Chicago, Chicago, Illinois
Prayer of Joseph

CONTRIBUTORS

xx

Strugnell, J., Professor of Christian Origins, Harvard Divinity School, Cambridge, Massachusetts

Introduction to Fragments of Lost Judeo-Hellenistic Works

Van der Horst, P. W., Lecturer of New Testament Exegesis and New Testament Background, Faculty of Theology, University of Utrecht, Utrecht, The Netherlands

Pseudo-Phocylides

Wintermute, O. S., Professor of Religion, Duke University, Durham, North Carolina

Jubilees

Wright, R. B., Director of Graduate Religion Studies, Temple University, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Psalms of Solomon

Zervos, G. T., Research Assistant, Duke University, Durham, North Carolina

History of Joseph

INTRODUCTION FOR THE GENERAL READER

BY J. H. CHARLESWORTH

Western culture has been largely shaped by a unique collection of ancient books: the Bible. Not only our culture's language, but also its theology, philosophy, art, and law have been affected profoundly by the ideas, symbols, morality, commitments, perceptions, and dreams preserved in the biblical books. In the attempt to understand these books, scholars, especially since the time of the European Enlightenment, in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, have coupled an intensive study of them with a search for other ancient writings related to them.

The search for lost writings

Mere perusal of the biblical books discloses that their authors depended upon sources that are no longer extant. We know so little about these sources that we cannot be certain of the extent to which they were actual documents. A list of these lost sources would be extensive; it would include at least the following: the Book of the Wars of Yahweh (Num 21:14), the Book of the Just (Josh 10:13, 2Sam 1:18), the Book of the Acts of Solomon (1Kgs 11:41), the Book of the Annals of the Kings of Israel (1Kgs 14:19, 2Chr 33:18; cf. 2Chr 20:34), the Book of the Annals of the Kings of Judah (1Kgs 14:29, 15:7), the Annals of Samuel the seer (1Chr 29:29), the History of Nathan the prophet (2Chr 9:29), the Annals of Shemaiah the prophet and of Iddo the seer (2Chr 12:15), the Annals of Jehu son of Hanani (2Chr 20:34), an unknown and untitled writing of Isaiah (2Chr 26:22), the Annals of Hozai (2Chr 33:18), and an unknown lament for Josiah by Jeremiah (2Chr 35:25). In the Apocrypha (defined below) lost books also are mentioned; in particular, 1 Maccabees 16:24 refers to the Annals of John Hyrcanus. Within the Pseudepigrapha themselves there are references to "documents" now lost (cf. e.g. TJob 40:14, 41:6, 49:3, 50:3).

Christianity and rabbinic Judaism evolved within a milieu that was distinguished by considerable and significant literary activity. Some of the documents composed during the early centuries have been transmitted by copyists; many remain lost; and others have been recovered during the last two centuries. The search for lost writings is aided by ancient lists of "extracanonical" books. One of these lists is a catalogue, perhaps from the sixth century, falsely attributed to Athanasius of Alexandria (c. 296–373). The author includes among the disputed parts of the Old Testament (ta antilegomena tēs palaias diathēkēs), the four Books of the Maccabees (1–4 Mac), the Psalms and Ode (sic) of Solomon. He defines the Apocrypha of the Old Testament (*ta de apokrupha palin tēs palaias diathēkēs tauta**) as follows:

|                                      |                              |
|--------------------------------------|------------------------------|
| Enoch                                | Elijah the Prophet           |
| Patriarchs                           | Zephaniah the Prophet        |
| Prayer of Joseph                     | Zechariah the Father of John |
| Testament of Moses                   | Baruch                       |
| Assumption of Moses                  | Habakkuk                     |
| (And the) pseudepigrapha      | Ezekiel                      |
| ( pseudepigrapha ) of Abraham | Daniel                       |
| Eldad and Modad                      |                              |

All of the documents judged to be disputed parts of the Old Testament or the Apocrypha (if we understand their titles correctly) are included, if only fragmentarily, in the present collection, except for 1 and 2 Maccabees (which belong in the Apocrypha), and except for the lost pseudepigrapha attributed to Habakkuk and Zechariah (which is to be placed among the New Testament Pseudepigrapha because it is related to Zechariah the father of John the Baptist).

Numerous writings not mentioned by Pseudo-Athanasius are included in this volume. Many of these are named in other canonical lists, notably the List of Sixty Books (c. sixth to seventh century?) and the list of Mechitar of Ayrivank' (c. 1290). Others do not appear in any early list. Some pseudepigrapha mentioned in medieval lists are not included; they are judged to be characteristically different from and too late for the present collection (see below). The search continues for documents not yet found but cited in the classical lists: an Apocryphon of Lamech (Sixty Books), the Interdiction of Solomon (Gelasian Decree), and the Book of the Daughters of Adam (Gelasian Decree; perhaps this document is another name for Jubilees). Likewise scholars are seeking to understand the origin of ancient quotations from or allusions to unnamed Jewish apocryphal documents. Many of these citations or traditions are preserved by the Church Fathers, especially Clement of Rome, Clement of Alexandria, Hippolytus, Tertullian, Origen, and the compiler of the Apostolic Constitutions, as well as by the Byzantine chroniclers (especially George Syncellus [c. 800] and George Cedrenus [c. 1057]).

The present edition of the Pseudepigrapha reflects the search for lost writings. We have included many apocryphal documents, fragmentary or complete, which may be related to those named in the canonical lists or cited by the Church Fathers; note, for example, the following: Apocalypse of Adam, Apocalypse of Abraham, Testament of Abraham, Prayer of Joseph, Eldad and Modad (still preserved in only one brief quotation), Apocalypse of Elijah, Apocryphon of Ezekiel, Apocalypse of Zephaniah, and Apocalypse of Ezra.

Many documents, recently discovered in the Near East or recognized in distinguished libraries, are translated here into English for the first time. Not including the documents placed in the Supplement, the writings now available for the first time in English are the Testament of Adam, the Testaments of Isaac and Jacob (from the Arabic), the Apocalypse of Daniel, the Revelation of Ezra, the Vision of Ezra, the History of Joseph, Syriac Menander, and the History of the Rechabites (from the Syriac). Additional writings translated for the first time in a full English translation are the Questions of Ezra, the Ladder of Jacob, Jannes and Jambres, and the Apocalypse of Sedrach.

In addition to these documents, four writings presented only in a truncated version in Charles's edition are presented here in their full extant form. From the Martyrdom of Isaiah Charles himself included only chapters 1, 2, 3, and 5; the present edition presents all of that document along with the other traditions now preserved in the Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah. From 2 Enoch Forbes and Charles omitted the conclusion to the document; the present edition includes chapters 68 through 73, which contain the fascinating account of Melchisedek's miraculous birth. From the Sibylline Oracles Lanchester collected only the fragments and Books 3, 4, and 5; the present edition includes all of the Sibylline Oracles now extant. Finally, from 4 Ezra Box selected chapters 3-14; the present edition also includes the Christian additions (chapters 1 and 2, and 15 and 16).

Canon

The preceding discussion brings forward the question of the origin of the closed canons of the Old and New Testaments. Impressive research is presently focused upon these issues, and it is possible to summarize only briefly my own opinions regarding this complex issue. For a long time scholars postulated that two canons of the Old Testament developed, one in Palestine and another in Egypt, and that Alexandrian Jews added the Apocrypha (see below) to the Hebrew canon. It now seems clear that there never was a rival Alexandrian canon. Philo and other Jews in Alexandria did not cite the Apocrypha, and the Alexandrian Church Fathers witness to the fact that Alexandrian Jews did not have an expanded canon.

When R. H. Charles published his edition of the Pseudepigrapha there was widespread agreement that the Hebrew canon, the Old Testament, was fixed finally at Jamnia around A.D. 90. Today there is considerable debate regarding the importance of the rabbinic school at Jamnia in the history of the codification of the Hebrew canon. On the one hand, it is becoming obvious that the process of canonization began long before the first century A.D., and that perhaps the earliest part of the Bible, the Law, had been closed and defined as authoritative well before the second century B.C., and the Prophets surely by that time. On the other hand, it is clear that after A.D. 90 there were still debates regarding the canonicity of such writings as the Song of Songs, Ecclesiastes, and Esther, but it is not clear what were the full ramifications of these debates. It seems to follow, therefore, both that the early pseudepigrapha were composed during a period in which the limits of the canon apparently remained fluid at least to some Jews, and that some Jews and Christians inherited and passed on these documents as inspired. They did not necessarily regard them as apocryphal, or outside a canon.

The writings collected into the New Testament were written during the end of this same period since they are dated from about A.D. 50 to 150. The New Testament canon was not closed in the Latin Church until much later; certainly not before the late fourth century and long after Constantine the Great established Christianity as the official religion of the Roman Empire. All the twenty-seven books of the New Testament, for example, are listed for the first time as the only canonical New Testament scriptures by Athanasius, bishop of Alexandria, in his Easter letter of A.D. 367. If the Latin Church finally accepted twenty-seven books as the canonical New Testament by the fifth century, the Greek Church apparently was not thoroughly convinced about the canonicity of one book, Revelation, until about the tenth century. The Syrian Church witnessed to an even more complicated debate over the canon of the New Testament; for many east Syrians today the Peshitta is the canon and it contains only twenty-two documents, excluding 2 Peter, 2 and 3 John, Jude, and Revelation. Moreover, the assumption that all Christians have the same canon is further shattered by the recognition that the Copts and Ethiopians have added other documents to the canon.

Even in America today there are different canons among the various Christian communions: for example, Protestants exclude from the canon the Apocrypha, the additional books in the Greek Old Testament; the Roman Catholics, following the edicts of the Council of Trent in 1546, include them as deuterocanonical. The Mormons, moreover, argue that more books belong in the canon, and that it should remain open.

Most Jews throughout the world acknowledge only the Old Testament as canonical (cf. e.g. 4Ezra 14:37–48). The Falashas, Ethiopian Jews probably dependent on Ethiopian Christianity, however, have an expanded canon, including various apocrypha and pseudepigrapha, especially the Prayer of Manasseh, Jubilees, 1 Enoch, 3 and 4 Ezra.

For our present purposes it is wise to add to the above insights the recognition that many authors of pseudepigrapha believed they were recording God's infallible words. Early communities, both Jewish and Christian, apparently took some pseudepigrapha very seriously. The author of Jude, in verses 14 and 15, quoted as prophecy a portion of 1 Enoch, and this passage, 1 Enoch 1:9, has now been recovered in Aramaic from one of the caves that contained the Dead Sea Scrolls. Jude probably also was dependent, in verses 9 and 10, upon a lost Jewish apocryphon about Moses.

This brief overview of the historical development of the canons reveals that to call the Pseudepigrapha "non-canonical," or the biblical books "canonical," can be historically inaccurate prior to A.D. 100 and the period in which most of these documents were written. These terms should be used as an expression of some later "orthodoxy" with regard to a collection that is well defined regarding what belongs within and what is to be excluded from it. It is potentially misleading to use the terms "non-canonical," "canonical," "heresy," and "orthodoxy" when describing either Early Judaism or Early Christianity.

Definition of pseudepigrapha

The technical term "pseudepigrapha" has a long and distinguished history. It was used in the late second century by Serapion when he referred to the New Testament Pseudepigrapha (ta pseudepigrapha, "with false superscription"; cf. Eusebius, HE 6.12). It was given prominence in the early years of the eighteenth century by J. A. Fabricius, who called the first volume of his massive work Codex pseudepigraphus veteris testamenti. The nineteenth-century collection of "pseudepigrapha" was by the Roman Catholic M. L'Abbé J.-P. Migne and titled Dictionnaire des apocryphes, ou collection de tous les livres apocryphes relatifs à l'ancien et au nouveau testament; this work did not use the term "pseudepigrapha" because Roman Catholics consider the Apocrypha to be deuterocanonical writings and refer to the Pseudepigrapha as "the Apocrypha." In the year 1900, E. Kautzsch edited the first German collection of the Pseudepigrapha, titled Die Apokryphen und Pseudepigraphen des Alten Testaments. The first, and until the present the only, English collection of the Pseudepigrapha was published in 1913 by the Clarendon Press of Oxford, England, and edited by R. H. Charles; he included in his large two-volume work both The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament. The importance of the Pseudepigrapha in the international community at the present time is evidenced by the preparation of translations into Danish, Italian, French, German, modern Greek, Japanese, Dutch, and Spanish.

It is appropriate at this point to clarify the meaning of the term "pseudepigrapha." Several definitions are current. Webster's Third New International Dictionary (p. 1830) defines the term as denoting "spurious works purporting to emanate from biblical characters." That definition is misleading; ancient writings are dismissed subjectively as illegitimate. The Random House Dictionary of the English Language (the Unabridged Edition, p. 1159) offers the following: "Certain writings (other than the canonical books and the Apocrypha) professing to be Biblical in character, but not considered canonical or inspired." Three reactions appear to this definition: First, it would have been informative to clarify for whom the writings are "not considered canonical or inspired." Second, it is good to see a recognition of the claim to be "Biblical in character," which I believe is implied by some pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament. Third, it is unfortunate that neither of the two definitions presented by these authoritative volumes recognizes that this term is also employed for documents not related to the Bible. Scholars have used the term, for example, to denote some rabbinic writings, referring to the Othijoth de Rabbi 'Akiba and the Pirkê de Rabbi Eliezer as rabbinic pseudepigrapha; moreover, "pseudepigrapha" is a technical term for some writings by the post-Platonic Pythagoreans.

Strictly speaking, the term "pseudepigrapha" has evolved from pseudepigrapha, a transliteration of a Greek plural noun that denotes writings "with false superscription." The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, the title of this collection, etymologically denotes writings falsely attributed to ideal figures featured in the Old Testament. Contemporary scholars employ the term "pseudepigrapha" not because it denotes something spurious about the documents collected under that title, but because the term has been inherited and is now used internationally.

In entitling the volume The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, I have had to take a stance on the definition of "pseudepigrapha" as illustrated by the selection of works other than those included by Charles. Only two works from Charles's volume of seventeen documents are not included: Pirke Aboth and "The Fragments of a Zadokite Work," the former because it is rabbinic and the latter because it is now recognized to belong among the Dead Sea Scrolls. The following collection of fifty-two writings together with a long Supplement has evolved from the consensus that the Pseudepigrapha must be defined broadly so as to include all documents that conceivably belong to the Old Testament Pseudepigrapha. The present description of the Pseudepigrapha is as follows: Those writings 1) that, with the exception of Ahiqar, are Jewish or Christian; 2) that are often attributed to ideal figures in Israel's past; 3) that customarily claim to contain God's word or message; 4) that frequently build upon ideas and narratives present in the Old Testament; 5) and that almost always were composed either during the period 200 B.C. to A.D. 200 or, though late, apparently preserve, albeit in an edited form, Jewish traditions that date from that period. Obviously, the numerous qualifications (e.g. "with the exception of," "often," "customarily," "frequently," "almost always") warn that the above comments do not define the term "pseudepigrapha"; they merely describe the features of this collection.

Writings cognate to the Pseudepigrapha

Including fifty-two documents plus a Supplement in the present collection of the Pseudepigrapha meant excluding other writings, although they may have some characteristics of the Pseudepigrapha. These writings were usually omitted because they were far removed from the Old Testament in date and character. Most notable among them are the following: The Vision of Daniel, The Death of Abraham (both ed. by A. Vassiliev in Anecdota Graeco-Byzantina, vol. 1. Moscow, 1893), the Hebrew Apocalypse of Elijah (ed. and trans. M. Bittenwieser, Die hebräische Elias-Apokalypse. Leipzig, 1897), the Book of Jasher (ed. J. Ilive, The Book of Jasher. Bristol, 1829), the Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan (ed. A. Dillmann, Das christliche Adambuch des Oriens. Göttingen, 1853; ET: S. C. Malan, The Book of Adam and Eve. London, 1882), the Cave of Treasures (ed. C. Bezold, Die Schatzhöhle: Syrisch und Deutsch, 2 vols. Leipzig, 1883, 1888; ET: E. A. W. Budge, The Book of the Cave of Treasures. London, 1927), the Book of the Rolls (cf. M. D. Gibson, Apocrypha Arabica. Studia Sinaitica 8. London, 1901), the Sin of Solomon (unpublished, probably a homily, cf. Cod. Par. Gr. 1021, fols. 184v–185v in the Bibliothèque Nationale), Pirkê de Rabbi Eliezer (trans. G. Friedlander, Pirkê de Rabbi Eliezer. New York, 1981<sup>4</sup>), the Syriac Apocalypse of Ezra (ed. and trans. J.-B. Chabot, “L’Apocalypse d’Esdras,” Revue sémitique 2 [1894] 242–50, 333–46), the Book of the Bee (ed. and trans. E. A. W. Budge, The Book of the Bee. Anecdota Oxoniensia, Sem. Ser. 1.2. Oxford, 1886), and the Questions Addressed by the Queen (of Sheba), and Answers Given by Solomon (trans. J. Issaverdens, The Uncanonical Writings of the Old Testament. Venice, 1901).

Later documents related to the Pseudepigrapha have been edited in important collections; most important are those from Armenian by Jacques Issaverdens, from Ethiopic by Wolf Leslau, and from rabbinic Hebrew by Adolph Jellinek (cf. the German translation by A. Wünsche). Recently Father Martin McNamara in The Apocrypha in the Irish Church (Dublin, 1975) drew attention to “probably the richest crop of apocrypha in any of the European vernaculars, possibly in any vernacular language” (p. 2).

While some of the documents mentioned above may prove to be ancient or preserve portions of early Jewish pseudepigrapha, the following ten collections of ancient Jewish or early Christian writings are recognized as important for understanding the period in which the Pseudepigrapha were composed. First and second are the works of the Jewish philosopher and exegete Philo of Alexandria (c. 20 B.C.–A.D. 50) and the Jewish historian Josephus (c. A.D. 37–c. 100); these are essential reading for an understanding of first-century Jewish life and thought. Third are the Dead Sea Scrolls, which are Jewish sectarian documents first found in 1947 in caves to the west of the Dead Sea; these inform us of the apocalyptic and eschatological ideas and of the surprising interpretations of the Old Testament by one sect of Jews, which flourished from the second century B.C. (c. 150 B.C.) to the first century A.D. (viz. A.D. 68). These scrolls are extremely important for an understanding of many pseudepigrapha, especially Jubilees, the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1 Enoch, and the Odes of Solomon. Fourth are the rabbinic writings, and there can be no doubt that some of the traditions recorded in these documents predate the destruction of the Temple in A.D. 70; these early traditions are helpful in understanding the daily life of the religious Jew before the destruction of the nation and the Temple. Fifth are the targums, which are Aramaic translations and expansive interpretations of the Hebrew scriptures; these sometimes seem to preserve important evidence of an ancient understanding of the Old Testament. Since a Targum of Job, dating from the first half of the first century A.D., was found at Qumran, it is now clear that the earliest traditions in the other, but much later, targums must be included in an assessment of early Judaism. Sixth are the "Jewish" magical papyri, especially those edited by K. L. Preisendanz; these should not be ignored, as should become evident from a careful reading of some pseudepigrapha, especially the Prayer of Jacob, the Prayer of Joseph, and the History of Joseph. Seventh are the Hermetica, which are writings of the first few centuries A.D. attributed to Hermes that describe the means to personal salvation; these may contain (although I personally am not convinced) some early Jewish traditions that are important for an understanding of Early Judaism and earliest Christianity. Eighth are the Nag Hammadi codices; these Coptic codices were composed from perhaps the first to the fourth centuries A.D., but were not found until 1945 in Upper Egypt. These writings, most of which are gnostic, are intermittently influenced by early Jewish traditions. Of special importance among these codices is the Apocalypse of Adam included below. Ninth are the New Testament Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha, which contain many early Christian writings that are usually legendary expansions of the New Testament itself; these only infrequently were shaped by early Jewish traditions.

Tenth are the Apocrypha, which are writings that like many pseudepigrapha are usually related to the Hebrew scriptures; as indicated earlier, the Apocrypha are documents preserved in the Greek, but not in the Hebrew, Old Testament. These documents are often designated by Roman Catholics as "deuterocanonical," but most scholars have now accepted the Protestant terminology and call them "Apocrypha."

Different collections of the Apocrypha are available today. In order to harmonize with the contemporary, enlarged concept of Pseudepigrapha the Apocrypha should include only the additional writings preserved in almost all Septuagint manuscripts, and not the additional documents in the Vulgate (see PMR, p. 19). The Apocrypha, therefore, includes thirteen documents: 2 Ezra (= 1 Esdras),* Tobit, Judith, Additions to Esther, Wisdom of Solomon, Sirach, 1 Baruch, Letter of Jeremiah, Prayer of Azariah with the Song of the Three Young Men, Susanna, Bel and the Dragon, 1 Maccabees, and 2 Maccabees. Often two pseudepigrapha, 4 Ezra (= 2 Esdras)* and the Prayer of Manasseh,* are considered part of the Apocrypha. The thirteen documents in the Apocrypha, with the exception of Tobit, which may be much earlier, date from the last two centuries before the common era. These documents may be found in Protestant ecumenical Bibles that contain the Apocrypha in a center section between the testaments, or at the end of the two testaments. All except the three marked with asterisks will be found in Roman Catholic Bibles interspersed among the Old Testament writings or even as part of them (esp. Esth and Dan).

It is important to draw attention to these other significant collections of early Jewish and Christian documents. Along with them, the Pseudepigrapha preserve ideas essential for an understanding of Early Judaism and Early Christianity.

Importance of the Pseudepigrapha

We may now assess briefly the importance of the Pseudepigrapha for a better understanding of the history and thought of Jews during the centuries that preceded and followed the beginning of the common era. Four aspects of that period are impressive. First, there is the very abundance of the literature, although we possess only part of the writings produced by Jews during the period 200 B.C. to A.D. 200. We know many works are lost since early Christians quoted from and referred to documents now lost, since some writings are available only in truncated manuscripts or in fragments, since there are references to lost volumes produced, for example, by Jason of Cyrene, Justus of Tiberias, and Nicolaus of Damascus, and since each new discovery of a manuscript reminds us that there are still more works to be recovered.

It is obvious that post-exilic Judaism was distinguished by voluminous and varied literature: from the production of epics or tragedies in hexameters or iambic trimeters (viz. PhEPoet, EzekTrag) to philosophical tractates (viz. Aristob, Philo, 4Mac), from perhaps reliable histories (viz. 1Mac, some of Josephus' publications) to imaginative recreations of the past (viz. the Chronicler, 3Mac, JosAsen), from apocalyptic dreams and visions of another world (viz. 1En, 2Bar; cf. HistRech) to humanistic wisdom (viz. Sir, Ps-Phoc), and even from charges against God in seemingly Promethean arrogance (viz. Eccl; cf. ApSedr) to hymnic and introspective submissions to God as the sole means of righteousness and salvation (viz. 1QH, PrMan; cf. OdesSol). During the post-exilic period, the Jewish genius exploded into creative new writings.

Second, the Pseudepigrapha illustrate the pervasive influence of the Old Testament books upon Early Judaism. That is seen not only in the following group of works designated "Expansions of the Old Testament," but also in many similar ones, especially in the selection of "apocalypses" and "testaments." Judaism became for all time a religion of the Book, God's eternal message.

Third, we learn from the Pseudepigrapha that the consecutive conquests of Palestinian Jews by Persians, Greeks, and Romans, and the intermittent invasions by Syrian, Egyptian, and Parthian armies did not dampen the enthusiasm of religious Jews for their ancestral traditions. The ancient Davidic Psalter was constantly expanded until some collections included 155 psalms. Other psalmbooks appeared, especially the Psalms of Solomon, the Hodayoth, the Odes of Solomon, and perhaps the Hellenistic Synagogal Hymns. Apocalypses that stressed the grandeur and transcendence of God were customarily interspersed with hymns that celebrated God's nearness, and by prayers that were perceived as heard and answered. Post-exilic Judaism was a living and devout religion. New hymns, psalms, and odes witness to the fact that persecution could not choke the blessings by the faithful.

Fourth, the Pseudepigrapha attest that post-exilic Jews often were torn within by divisions and sects, and intermittently conquered from without by foreign nations who insulted, abused, and frequently employed fatal torture. Persecutions inflamed the desire to revolt and some pseudepigrapha mirror the tensions among the Jews. Especially noteworthy are the Psalms of Solomon and the Testament of Moses, which record the idea that God alone is the source of power; it is he who will initiate action against the gentiles and purge Jerusalem of the foreigners. The apocalypses usually are pessimistic about the present: God had withdrawn from the arena of history and from the earth; he would return only to consummate the end and to inaugurate the new. Thereby the apocalyptists affirm the loyalty of God to covenant, invite the reader to live in terms of, indeed within, another world, and envisage an optimistic conclusion for Israel in God's completed story.

The Pseudepigrapha, therefore, are an important source for understanding the social dimensions of Early Judaism. The simplistic picture of Early Judaism should be recast; it certainly was neither a religion which had fallen into arduous legalism due to the crippling demands of the Law, nor was it characterized by four dominant sects. A new picture has been emerging because of ideas preserved in the documents collected below. Three examples suffice to demonstrate this insight: First, none of the present translators strives to identify a document with a particular Jewish sect. We cannot identify with certainty any author of a pseudepigraphon as being a Pharisee or an Essene or a member of another sect. Second, Palestinian Jews were influenced by Egyptian, Persian, and Greek ideas. Hence, the old distinction between "Palestinian Judaism" and "Hellenistic Judaism" must be either redefined or discarded. Third, because of the variegated, even contradictory, nature of the ideas popular in many sectors of post-exilic Judaism, it is obvious that Judaism was not monolithically structured or shaped by a central and all-powerful "orthodoxy."

When Charles published his edition of the Pseudepigrapha, it was widely held that Early Judaism was shaped and characterized by "normative Judaism" or a ruling orthodoxy centered in Jerusalem. This idea is no longer defended by most biblical scholars. Since 1947, when the first of the Dead Sea Scrolls were discovered, there has even been a tendency to emphasize unduly the diversity in Early Judaism. While it is now recognized that foreign ideas penetrated deep into many aspects of Jewish thought, and that sometimes it is difficult to decide whether an early document is essentially Jewish or Christian, it is, nevertheless, unwise to exaggerate the diversity in Early Judaism. In the first century Judaism was neither uniformly normative nor chaotically diverse.

The above discussion leads to the following observations that should be emphasized. The documents contained herein certainly demonstrate the rich vitality and diversity of Judaism during the early centuries. This is not the place to attempt to articulate further what, if anything, seems to unify them. Certainly confirmed is Charles's own statement that was controversial in his time: Without the Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha (and we would add other documents recovered since his time, notably the Dead Sea Scrolls) "it is absolutely impossible to explain the course of religious development between 200 B.C. and A.D. 100" (APOT, vol. 1, p. x).

Significant theological conceptions

The general reader will find it helpful, when reading the documents collected below, to learn that at least four significant theological concerns are frequently found in the Pseudepigrapha: preoccupations with the meaning of sin, the origins of evil, and the problem of theodicy; stresses upon God's transcendence; concerns with the coming of the Messiah; and beliefs in a resurrection that are often accompanied with descriptions of Paradise. Each of these interests was developed—at least partly—from ideas and beliefs found in the Old Testament. At the beginning it is prudent to emphasize that scholars' understanding of early Jewish theology has evolved from decades of research not only upon the Pseudepigrapha, but also upon the Old Testament, the Apocrypha, early rabbinics, Philo, Josephus, and the Dead Sea Scrolls.

Sin, Evil, and the Problem of Theodicy. The Jews who returned to Palestine following the sixth-century B.C. exile in Babylon attempted to be faithful to the covenant; they rebuilt the Temple and emphasized the study of the Torah. Dedication to purity involved not only heightened rules for worship and daily life but also racial purity and separation from the heathen. Despite renewed dedication and faithfulness, the righteous did not prosper and live in a holy land free from domination. It was the sinners and the unfaithful who seemed to be rewarded, and the land—indeed the land promised to Abraham as an inheritance—was ruled by foreign oppressors. Sin and injustice were rewarded; evil appeared to be the ruling power in a world created by God. Raised repeatedly was the question: "How could the God of Israel be holy, just, and all-powerful, and at the same time permit evil forces to oppress the righteous?" Many pseudepigrapha are shaped by this question and the problem of theodicy (see especially 4Ezra, 2Bar, ApAbr, 3Bar).

This problem evoked mutually exclusive reactions in Judaism. Qoheleth concluded, "Vanity of vanities. All is vanity!" (Eccl 1:2). Authors of some pseudepigrapha, basing their insight upon the story of Adam and Eve's first sin, described in Genesis 3, took the position that evil was dominant in the world because of Eve's sin. The author of the Life of Adam and Eve 18:1, as the author of Sirach 25:24 (in the Apocrypha), put the blame squarely upon Eve. The source of the guilt shifts completely from Eve to Adam in 4 Ezra. Evil reigns in the world certainly not because of God's actions, but because of Adam, who "transgressed" and was overcome, and not only he himself but all who descend from him (4Ezra 3:20f.; cf. 7:118). About the same time as 4 Ezra, the author of 2 Baruch argued that sin is in the world and continues to be a power because each individual chooses to sin (2Bar 54:15, 19; cf. 1En 98:4f.).

An appreciably different explanation for the origin of sin is found emphasized in numerous pseudepigrapha. Taking as their starting point the story in Genesis 6 about "the sons of God" who married "the daughters of men," the authors of some pseudepigrapha—especially the authors of 1 and 2 Enoch—claim that evil is in the world and is a powerful force because of evil angels. Four possible explanations for the fall of these angels may be discerned: 1) The angels had lusted for earth's beautiful women (1En 6:1–16:4, 40:7, 54:6; 2En 18). 2) The angels perhaps had desired to reproduce themselves (1En 6:2b, 7:1–3). 3) The Devil and his followers refused to worship Adam (Vita 14:3). 4) An angel and his legions desired to exalt themselves (2En 29:4f.). All these explanations, despite their significant differences, reflect the seriousness with which evil was perceived by post-exilic Jews, and all attempt to absolve God of the responsibility for evil. This balanced perspective is upset in a much later document, the Apocalypse of Sedrach (ch. 5).

Evil is a dominant force in the world, despite God's will and actions. The righteous suffer primarily because of the power evil has obtained on the earth. The land of Israel has been engulfed by nations either sent by God to punish his sinful people or by foreigners ruled by evil forces or angels; hence God can both send evil and allow it to continue. God's people suffer, and he tends to remove himself from a special portion of his creation.

Transcendence of God. The emphasis in many pseudepigrapha that God is far from Israel contrasts markedly with earlier traditions, especially two accounts: According to Genesis 18 God encountered Abraham on the earth and by the oaks of Mamre, just north of Hebron; according to Exodus 3 the Lord God calls Moses from a burning bush on Mount Horeb, and the presence of God defines the place as "holy ground." After the exile God is usually perceived as one who is above. The apocalypstists place him in the highest heaven, far removed from the earth (1En 1:4, 71:5-11; 2En 20:5), but the prayers interspersed through the apocalypses reveal that he is not inaccessible. He has withdrawn from the world and no longer acts in its history; he will, however, act again, probably through intermediaries (PssSol 17, TLevi 18, TJud 24, 4Ezra 7, 2Bar 72f.). Most pseudepigrapha, in contrast to earlier Jewish writings, are characterized by an increasing claim that God is thoroughly majestic and transcendent (2Mac 3:39; 3Mac 2:15; SibOr 3.1, 11, 81, 807; 5.298, 352; MartIs 1:6b; 1En 71:5-11; 2En 20:5). Knowledge of him is obtained almost always only through the sacred books, the descent of angels (TAB 2:15), the gift of vision (1En 1:2), or the journey of a seer through the various heavens (2En, AscenIs). The contrast of these ideas with earlier ones is demonstrated by the way the author of the Testament of Abraham rewrites Genesis 18: God does not descend to visit Abraham; he sends his angel Michael to speak with the patriarch (TAB 1; cf. 16).

The contrast between ideas or tendencies in early documents, such as Genesis, and those in the Pseudepigrapha should not be exaggerated; and the rewriting of God's encounter with Abraham should not be interpreted to mean that religious Jews came to believe that God was absolutely extramundane, remote, and exiled. As the hymns, odes, and prayers in the apocalypses themselves demonstrate, the Jew continued to affirm efficacious and personal communion with God. With these caveats it is possible to point out that early Jews tended to emphasize God's holiness, majesty, gloriousness, and sovereignty; he was transcendent.

Messianism. The belief in a Messiah—a term which here means an ideal person, probably a king or priest, who will bring in perfect peace—is not found in the Old Testament, in the Apocrypha, or in Philo and Josephus (except for allusions). The belief in a future messianic Davidic king, however, is recorded in the prophets (viz. Isa 9:2-7, 11:1-9; Jer 33:14-22; Ezek 37:24-28); and the belief in a future Messiah (or Anointed One) of Aaron and Israel (CD Text B 19.10f.; cf. 1QS 9.11) is recorded in the Dead Sea Scrolls. The term "Messiah" also appears in the later Targums (especially Pseudo-Jonathan [Jerusalem Targum] at Gen 49:1 and Num 24:17-24). Numerous titles were given to the expected messianic figure; but since it is difficult to be certain in which passages these are indeed titles for the Messiah, it is wise to limit this overview only to the places in the Pseudepigrapha which mention the terms "the Messiah" (the Heb. noun) or "the Christ" (the Gk. translation) or "the Anointed One" (which is the meaning of both the Heb. and the Gk.).

Significantly, most pseudepigrapha do not contain a reference to the coming of a Messiah; and it is impossible to derive a systematic description of the functions of the Messiah from the extant references to him. Only five pseudepigrapha contain clearly Jewish traditions about the Messiah. Late in the first century B.C. the author of the Psalms of Solomon yearned for the coming of the Messiah, who will “purge Jerusalem from gentiles.” Notably he shall perform this task “with the word of his mouth,” and do this not from his own initiative, but because he is God’s agent and belongs to God (PssSol 17f.).

Apparently late in the first century A.D.—when many of the New Testament writings were being written, especially Matthew, Luke, and John—three authors of pseudepigrapha elaborated on traditions concerning the Messiah. The author of 2 Baruch focused upon the role of the Messiah in three separate sections (chs. 29f., 39–42, 72–74). When “all is accomplished” the Messiah will be revealed and the righteous resurrected (2Bar 29f.). In contrast to this apparently passive role, the Messiah, according to the second section (2Bar 39–42), will act decisively, convicting and putting to death the last evil leader, and protecting God’s people. The Messiah is also active in the third section (2Bar 72–74): He shall summon all the nations, sparing those who have not mistreated Israel, and slaying those who have ruled over her. In both the second and third messianic sections the Messiah appears to be described as a militant warrior who slays the gentiles by the sword (72:6).

At about the same time as the author of 2 Baruch the author of 4 Ezra, in three passages (chs. 7, 11:37–12:34, 13:3–14:9), discusses the functions of the Messiah. According to the first of these (4Ezra 7), in the future age, the world to come (7:50, 8:1), the Messiah shall be revealed, bringing rejoicing for four hundred years, and eventually die (7:28f.). According to the second passage (4Ezra 11:37–12:34), the Messiah, who is depicted as “the lion,” will denounce, judge, and destroy the ungodly; but he shall deliver the faithful and make them joyful. According to the third section (4Ezra 13:3–14:9), the Messiah, who is “my son” (13:32, 37, 52; 14:9; cf. 7:28f.) and “a man” (13:26, 32), withstands a warring multitude and consumes them with “a stream of fire” that proceeds from his mouth.

Perhaps roughly contemporaneously with 2 Baruch and 4 Ezra (see the introduction to 1En), the author of 1 Enoch 37–71 recorded his ideas about the Messiah. In contrast to his vivid depictions of “the Son of Man,” “the Righteous One,” and “the Elect One,” the author’s two meager references to the Messiah (or “the Anointed One”) are surprisingly brief (48:10, 52:4). No functions are attributed to the Messiah.

The fifth document in the Pseudepigrapha that contains a clearly Jewish perspective on the Messiah is the late document titled 3 Enoch. Noteworthy is the portrayal of a Messiah who is son of Joseph, and a Messiah who is son of David (45:5). It is possible that one Messiah is meant; but if two Messiahs are denoted, then the Messiahs of Israel will wage war against Gog and Magog at the end of time. This war appears to end in a draw; God himself eventually enters the war and wins the last battle. Subsequently the author of 3 Enoch describes the celebration of Israel’s salvation (48:10A). The possibly early date of these traditions has been raised by the discovery of similar ones in the Dead Sea Scrolls (especially IQS, CD, IQM).

Obviously different from the above are the references to “the Messiah” (and derived terms) in the pseudepigrapha that appear to be Christian compositions. Observe especially the use of the term in the Odes of Solomon (9:3, 17:17, 24:1, 29:6, 39:11, 41:3, 41:15), the Apocalypse of Zephaniah (10:24–12:32), the Apocalypse of Elijah (13:15–15:14, 25:8–19), and the Apocalypse of Sedrach (ch. 12). Lengthy Christian additions in the Vision of Isaiah (9:12–13, 30:7–15) and the Testament of Adam (Rec. 2) also contain significant references to “the Anointed One” or “the Christ.”

Resurrection and Paradise. Scholars generally agree that the Old Testament writings, with the possible exception of Isaiah 26 and Daniel 12, do not contain explicit references to the resurrection of the dead. At death the individual simply is gathered to his final (or father’s) place, the tomb. Sheol and the netherworld (‘eres) is described as the abode of the dead, not of people who continue to live after death (cf. Isa 38:18, Sir 17:28, 14:12–19). Only through his reputation or a son does his life continue on the earth. In contrast to this perception are the ideas developed in post-exilic Judaism. Some books in the Apocrypha contain numerous explicit references to the resurrection of the dead (see especially 2Mac 7, 14), or possibly even to the immortality of the soul (WisSol), and the Dead Sea Scrolls preserve ambiguous sections possibly referring to an afterlife (see especially IQH 5.34, 6.29f., 11.10–14). Some pseudepigrapha, even more than these other documents, contain many passages that with pellucid clarity express the belief in a resurrection after death (viz. TJob, PssSol, 4Mac, Ps-Phoc, 2En, HistRech). The author of 2 Baruch, moreover, devotes a section, 49–52, to the description of the resurrected body.

Logically subsequent to the development of this idea is the attempt to describe the future place of rest for the righteous. Hence, picturesque images of Paradise appear in many pseudepigrapha. The various pictorial descriptions are characterized by mutually exclusive ideas. Paradise is placed sometimes in the third heaven (2En 8A, ApMos 37:5, 40:1), and sometimes on the earth (1En 32; 2En 8:1–6A, 30:1A; ApMos 38:5). It is depicted as either without inhabitants (1En 32, 2En 8f., 4Ezra 8:52) or with inhabitants (PssSol 14, 2En 42:3B, ApAb 21, OdesSol 11:16–24; cf. HistRech). It is portrayed as both an eternal inheritance (PssSol 14:3f.; 2En 65:10A; OdesSol 11:16d, 16f.; 4Ezra 8:52) and a state preceding the end (ApMos 37:5, 40:1–41:3; Vita 48:6f.; AscenIs 9; cf. HistRech 13–15). There are some common beliefs, notably that Paradise is full of fruitful trees (see 2En 8A, OdesSol 11:11–16, 23) and distinguished by a sweet-smelling odor (viz. see 1En 32:3, 2En 8A, OdesSol 11:15, 2En 23:18).

The contradicting ideas should not be explained away or forced into an artificial system. Such ideas in the Pseudepigrapha witness to the fact that Early Judaism was not a speculative philosophical movement or theological system, even though the Jews demonstrated impressive speculative fecundity. The Pseudepigrapha mirror a living religion in which the attempt was made to come to terms with the dynamic phenomena of history and experience.

These are only four of the theological characteristics of the Pseudepigrapha, namely the problems of sin and theodicy, emphasis upon God’s transcendence, speculations about the Messiah, and the ideas concerning the afterlife. Many other theological features could also be highlighted. The choice between a lunar and a solar calendar (see Jub and 1En) produced major upheavals in Judaism in the second century B.C. Calendrical issues contained cosmic and profound theological dimensions. How exasperating to discover you were not observing the Sabbath on the correct day and with the angels and the rest of the universe. How astounding to learn that Passover was celebrated at the wrong time. Similarly, the search for authority and reliable insight into God's will is reflected in the search for the quintessence of Torah and its text. The search for God himself and the tendency toward belief in a transcendent and apparently aloof Creator spawned complex angelologies. The impossibility of obtaining satisfactory meaning in present history helped produce the theological perspectives behind apocalypticism.

Conclusion

These introductory comments are far too brief to constitute an introduction to the Pseudepigrapha, and they should not be taken to indicate that scholars have arrived at anything like a consensus on the major issues. These few comments should, however, enable the general reader to understand better the documents collected below; at least they reflect how the editor perceives them. Each of the Pseudepigrapha is preceded by an introduction (see Editor's Preface) and organized under categories which also have brief introductions. These collectively serve to help the reader appreciate the documents themselves.

EXPLANATION OF TYPOGRAPHICAL AND REFERENCE SYSTEMS

Chapter and verse numbers

We have endeavored to present the documents below in a format similar to that of the Jerusalem Bible. Hence, chapters and verses are supplied. A new chapter is indicated by a large bold numeral. Verse numbers are placed in the margin in ordinary roman type; in the text itself, the beginning of each verse is marked by a • which precedes the first word of the verse except when the verse begins a new line or a new chapter. Because of their linguistic nature, some documents—such as the Sibylline Oracles, Letter of Aristeas, and Syriac Menander—are not divided into chapters and verses. These are presented so that the beginning of each line or section of text is noted in the margin with numbers in ordinary roman type as with verse numbers.

Italics in the text

Italic type in the text denotes full or partial quotations of the Bible. The biblical passage from which the quotation is derived is noted in the margin.

Brackets and other sigla in the translation

- [ ] Square brackets denote restorations.
- < > Pointed brackets signify corrections to a text.
- ( ) Parentheses circumscribe words added by the translator. Ancient languages are cryptic; verbs, nouns, and pronouns are often omitted. These are, of course, necessary for idiomatic English and are presented within parentheses.
- | | This siglum indicates a letter incorrectly omitted by an ancient scribe.
- { } Braces denote unnecessary words or letters in an ancient text.

Footnotes

In each chapter, footnotes are lettered alphabetically. The footnotes are not intended to be a mini-commentary, but to supply significant information, such as important related thoughts contained in ancient writings not considered either canonical or extracanonical. Only significant variants in the manuscripts are cited. These notes assume that the reader has read the general introduction and the introduction to each document being footnoted.

Punctuation of biblical references

Chapter and verse are separated by a colon, e.g. Ex 20:7. A subsequent verse in the same chapter is separated from the preceding by a comma. Subsequent citations in other biblical or apocryphal writings are separated by semicolons: e.g. Ex 20:17, 20; Lev 9:15. Citations which are not preceded by an abbreviation refer to the respective passage in a document being footnoted.

Marginal references

Marginal references are kept to a minimum and except in rare occasions are limited to significant parallels in biblical and apocryphal writings. These marginal references should help the reader better understand the relevant passage by drawing attention to the source of a biblical quotation, and to other uses of special terms, phrases, or images. The references in the margin often occur in groups all relating to one text line; in such cases, the position of the first reference indicates the line to which the whole group applies. Marginal references not preceded by the abbreviation of a book indicate a passage elsewhere in the document before the reader.

Care has been taken to assure that each marginal reference begins on the line to which it refers. However, in some cases this is not possible because of the length of necessary marginal references. In these cases, the marginal reference is preceded by a verse reference (i.e. the letter v plus the number of the verse) so the reader can attach the marginal references to the correct verses.

Secondary divisions within the document

The manuscripts from which the translators have worked usually do not separate the text so that each new thought or development in the narrative is indicated. The translators have supplied the subdivisions to help the reader follow the flow of the document.

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

I. MODERN PUBLICATIONS

|                        |  |
|------------------------|--|
| AAR                    | American Academy of Religion   |
| AcOr                   | Acta orientalia   |
| AGAJU                  | Arbeiten zur Geschichte des antiken Judentums und des Urchristentums   |
| Agrapha         | Resch, A., ed. Agrapha: Aussercanonische Schriftfragmente . TU 30.3–4; Leipzig, 1906.   |
| ALBO                   | Analecta lovaniensia biblica et orientalia   |
| ALGHJ                  | Arbeiten zur Literatur und Geschichte des hellenistischen Judentums  |
| ALUOS                  | Annual of the Leeds University Oriental Society   |
| ANET                   | Pritchard, J. B., ed. Ancient Near Eastern Texts . Princeton, 1969 <sup>3</sup> .   |
| ANF                    | Roberts, A., and J. Donaldson, eds. The Ante-Nicene Fathers: Translations of the Writings of the Fathers down to A.D. 325 . 10 vols. Edinburgh, 1868–72; rev. and repr. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1950–52. |
| ANRW                   | Haase, W., and H. Temporini, eds. Aufstieg und Niedergang der römischen Welt . Berlin, New York, 1979– .  |
| ANT                    | James, M. R. The Apocryphal New Testament . Oxford, 1924; corrected ed., 1955.  |
| APAT                   | Kautzsch, E., ed. Die Apokryphen und Pseudepigraphen des Alten Testaments . 2 vols. Tübingen, 1900.   |
| Apoc. Lit.      | Torrey, C. C. The Apocryphal Literature: A Brief Introduction . New Haven, Conn., 1945; repr. Hamden, Conn., 1963.  |
| Apocrifi del NT | Erbetta, M. Gli Apocrifi del Nuovo Testamento . 3 vols. Turin, 1966–69.   |
| APOT                   | Charles, R. H., ed. The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament in English . 2 vols. Oxford, 1913.  |
| ArOr                   | Archiv orientální   |
| ASOR                   | American Schools of Oriental Research  |
| ASTI                   | Annual of the Swedish Theological Institute   |
| ATANT                  | Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments  |
| ATR                    | Anglican Theological Review   |
| AusBR           | Australian Biblical Review  |
| BA                     | The Biblical Archeologist   |
| BASOR                  | Bulletin of the American Schools of Oriental Research   |
| BDT                    | Harrison, E. F., et al., eds. Baker's Dictionary of Theology . Grand Rapids, Mich., 1960.   |
| BEvT                   | Beiträge zur evangelischen Theologie   |
| BHH                    | Reicke, B., and L. Rost, eds. Biblich-historisches Handwörterbuch . 3 vols. Göttingen, 1962–66.   |

|                                     |   |
|-------------------------------------|---|
| BHM                          | Jellinek, A. Bet ha-Midrasch . 2 vols. Jerusalem, 1967 <sup>3</sup> .  |
| Bib                          | Biblica  |
| Biblia Sacra                 | Weber, R., et al., eds. Biblia Sacra: Iuxta Vulgatam Versionem . 2 vols. Stuttgart, 1969.  |
| Bibliographie                | Delling, G. Bibliographie zur jüdisch-hellenistischen und intertestamentarischen Literatur 1900–1970 . TU 106 <sup>2</sup> ; Berlin, 1975 <sup>2</sup> . |
| BibSt                        | Biblische Studien   |
| BIFAO                        | Bulletin de l'institut français d'archéologie orientale  |
| BiKi                         | Bibel und Kirche   |
| BIOSCS                       | Bulletin of the International Organization for Septuagint and Cognate Studies  |
| BJRL, BJRULM                 | Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, Bulletin of the John Rylands University Library of Manchester  |
| B-L<sup>2</sup>              | Haag, H., ed. Bibel-Lexikon . Zurich, 1968 <sup>2</sup> .  |
| BLE                          | Bulletin de littérature ecclésiastique   |
| BO                           | Bibliotheca orientalis   |
| BSOAS                        | Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies   |
| BZ                           | Biblische Zeitschrift  |
| BZAW                         | Beihefte zur Zeitschrift für die alttestamentliche Wissenschaft   |
| BZNW                         | Beihefte zur Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft und die Kunde der älteren Kirche  |
| CB                           | Cultura biblica  |
| CBQ                          | Catholic Biblical Quarterly  |
| CCSL                         | Corpus Christianorum. Series Latina.  |
| CETEDOC                      | Centre de traitement électronique des documents   |
| CG                           | Cairensis Gnosticus   |
| Crucible                     | Toynbee, A., ed. The Crucible of Christianity: Judaism, Hellenism and the Historical Background to the Christian Faith . New York, 1969.                 |
| CSCO                         | Corpus scriptorum christianorum orientalium   |
| CTM                          | Concordia Theological Monthly  |
| DB                           | Vigouroux, F., ed. Dictionnaire de la Bible . 5 vols. Paris, 1895–1912.  |
| DBSup                        | Pirot, L., et al., eds. Dictionnaire de la Bible, Suppléments . Paris, 1928– .   |
| DJD                          | Discoveries in the Judaean Desert   |
| Dogmengeschichte<sup>4</sup> | Harnack, A. Lehrbuch der Dogmengeschichte . 3 vols. Tübingen, 1909–10 <sup>4</sup> .   |
| DTT                          | Dansk teologisk Tidsskrift   |
| Enciclopedia de la Biblia    | Gutiérrez-Larraya, J. A., ed. Enciclopedia de la Biblia . 6 vols. Barcelona, 1963.   |
| Encyclopedia of Christianity | Palmer, E. H., et al., eds. The Encyclopedia of Christianity . Wilmington, Del., 1964– .   |
| EncyJud                      | Roth, C., et al., eds. Encyclopedia Judaica . 16 vols. New York, 1971–72.  |
| EOS                          | Eos. Commentarii Societatis Philologiae Polonorum  |
| ETL                          | Ephemerides theologicae lovanienses  |
| EvT                          | Evangelische Theologie   |
| Exégèse biblique et judaïsme | Ménard, J.-E., ed. Exégèse biblique et judaïsme . Strasbourg, 1973.  |
| ExpT                         | Expository Times   |

- Falasha Anthology* Leslau, W. Falasha Anthology. Yale Judaica Series 6; New Haven, 1951.
- FBBS Facet Books, Biblical Series
- FGH Jacoby, F., ed. Fragmente der griechischen Historiker. 3 vols. Leiden, 1923–
- FRLANT Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments
- GamPseud* Hammershaimb, E., et al., eds. De Gammeltestamentlige Pseudepigrapher. 2 vols. Copenhagen, 1953–76.
- GCS Die griechischen christlichen Schriftsteller der ersten drei Jahrhunderte
- GDBL Nielsen, E., and B. Noack, eds. Gads Danske Bibel Leksikon. 2 vols. Copenhagen, 1965–66.
- Geschichte* [Baumstark] Baumstark, A. Geschichte der syrischen Literatur mit Ausschluss der christlichpalästinensischen Texte. Bonn, 1922.
- Geschichte* [Graf] Graf, G. "Apokryphen und Pseudepigraphen," Geschichte der christlichen arabischen Literatur. Studi e Testi 118; Vatican, 1944; vol. 1, pp. 196–297.
- GLAJJ Stern, M., ed. Greek and Latin Authors on Jews and Judaism. Vol. 1: From Herodotus to Plutarch. Jerusalem, 1974.
- GNT Grundrisse zum Neuen Testament
- Goodenough Festschrift Neusner, J., ed. Religions in Antiquity: Essays in Memory of Erwin Ramsdell Goodenough. Sup Numen 14; Leiden, 1968.
- Gottesvolk* Janssen, E. Das Gottesvolk und seine Geschichte: Geschichtsbild und Selbstverständnis im palästinensischen Schrifttum von Jesus Sirach bis Jehuda ha-Nasi. Neukirchen-Vluyn, 1971.
- Gunkel Festschrift Schmidt, H., ed. Eucharistērion: Studien zur Religion des Alten und Neuen Testaments. H. Gunkel Festschrift. Part 2: Zur Religion und Literatur des Neuen Testaments. Göttingen, 1923.
- Hastings' DB Hastings, J., ed. Dictionary of the Bible, rev. ed. by F. C. Grant and H. H. Rowley. New York, 1963.
- HAW Handbuch der Altertumswissenschaft
- HeyJ* Heythrop Journal
- History* [Pfeiffer] Pfeiffer, R. H. History of the New Testament Times with an Introduction to the Apocrypha. New York, 1949.
- History* [Schürer] Schürer, E. A History of the Jewish People in the Time of Jesus Christ. 5 vols., plus index, trans. J. MacPherson et al. Edinburgh, 1897–98.
- History . . . The Time of the Apostles* Hausrath, A. A History of New Testament Times: The Time of the Apostles. 4 vols., trans. L. Huxley. London, 1895.
- HNT Handbuch zum Neuen Testament
- HSW Hennecke, E., W. Schneemelcher, and R. McL. Wilson, eds. New Testament Apocrypha. 2 vols. London, 1963–65.
- HTKNT Herders theologischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament
- HTR Harvard Theological Review
- HTS Harvard Theological Studies

- HUCA* Hebrew Union College Annual
- IB* Buttrick, G. A., et al., eds. The Interpreter's Bible. 12 vols. New York, 1952–57.
- ICC* International Critical Commentary
- IDB* Buttrick, G. A., et al., eds. The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible. 4 vols. New York, 1962.
- IDBS* Crim, K., et al., eds. The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Supplementary Volume. Nashville, Tenn., 1976.
- IEJ* Israel Exploration Journal
- Int* Interpretation
- Intr. to the Apoc.* Metzger, B. M. An Introduction to the Apocrypha. New York, 1957.
- Introduction* Denis, A.-M. Introduction aux pseudépigraphes grecs d'Ancien Testament. SVTP 1; Leiden, 1970.
- IOCB* Laymon, C. M., ed. The Interpreter's One-Volume Commentary on the Bible. New York, 1971.
- ITQ* Irish Theological Quarterly
- JA* Journal asiatique
- JAAR* Journal of the American Academy of Religion
- JAC* Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum
- JAL* Jewish Apocryphal Literature
- JAOS* Journal of the American Oriental Society
- JBC* Brown, R. E., J. A. Fitzmyer, and R. E. Murphy, eds. The Jerome Biblical Commentary. Englewood Cliffs, N.J., 1968.
- JBL* Journal of Biblical Literature
- JBLMS* Journal of Biblical Literature Monograph Series
- JE* Singer, I., et al., eds. The Jewish Encyclopedia. 12 vols. New York, London, 1901–6.
- Jewish Symbols* Goodenough, E. R. Jewish Symbols in the Greco-Roman Period. 13 vols. New York, 1953–68.
- JJS* Journal of Jewish Studies
- JNES* Journal of Near Eastern Studies
- JPOS* Journal of the Palestine Oriental Society
- JQR* Jewish Quarterly Review
- JRAS* Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society
- JSHRZ* Kümmel, W. G., et al. Jüdische Schriften aus hellenistisch-römischer Zeit. Gütersloh, 1973– .
- JSJ* Journal for the Study of Judaism
- JSS* Journal of Semitic Studies
- JThC* Journal for Theology and the Church
- JTS* Journal of Theological Studies
- Judaic Tradition* Glatzer, N. N. The Judaic Tradition: Texts Edited and Introduced. Boston, 1969.
- Kommentar* Strack, H. L., and P. Billerbeck. Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrasch. 5 vols. Munich, 1922–56.
- KS* Kirjath Sepher
- Kuhn Festschrift* Jeremias, G., H.-W. Kuhn, and H. Stegemann, eds. Tradition und Glaube: Das frühe Christentum in seiner Umwelt. Festgabe für Karl Georg Kuhn zum 65. Geburtstag. Göttingen, 1971.

- Lampe, G. W. H., ed. A Patristic Greek Lexicon. Oxford, 1961–68.
- LAOT James, M. R. The Lost Apocrypha of the Old Testament. TED; London, New York, 1920.
- LCL Loeb Classical Library
- Legends Ginzberg, L. The Legends of the Jews. 7 vols., trans. H. Szold. Philadelphia, 1909–38; repr. 1937–66.
- Literatur und Religion des Frühjudentums* Maier, J., and J. Schreiner, eds. Literatur und Religion des Frühjudentums. Gütersloh, 1973.
- LSJM Liddell, H. G., and R. Scott. A Greek-English Lexicon, rev. by H. S. Jones and R. McKenzie. Oxford, 1940.
- LTK<sup>2</sup> Buchberger, M., J. Höfer, and K. Rahner, eds. Lexikon für Theologie und Kirche. 11 vols. Freiburg, 1957–67<sup>2</sup>.
- LUOS MS Leeds University Oriental Society Monograph Series
- MBPAR Münchener Beiträge zur Papyrusforschung und Antiken Rechtsgeschichte
- McCQ McCormick Quarterly
- MGWJ Monatsschrift für Geschichte und Wissenschaft des Judentums
- Missionsliteratur Dalbert, P. Die Theologie der hellenistisch-jüdischen Missionsliteratur unter Ausschluss von Philo und Josephus. Hamburg-Volksdorf, 1954.
- M. Smith Festschrift Neusner, J., ed. Christianity, Judaism and Other Greco-Roman Cults: Studies for Morton Smith at Sixty. SJLA 12; Leiden, 1975.
- NCCHS Fuller, R. C., et al., eds. A New Catholic Commentary on Holy Scripture. London, 1969.
- NCE McDonald, W. J., et al., eds. New Catholic Encyclopedia. 15 vols. New York, 1967–
- NEB New English Bible
- NHC Nag Hammadi Codex
- NHL Nag Hammadi Library
- NHS Nag Hammadi Studies
- NovT Novum Testamentum
- NovTSup Novum Testamentum, Supplements
- NTS New Testament Studies
- NTTS New Testament Tools and Studies
- OCA Orientalia Christiana Analecta
- Or Orientalia
- OrChr Orientalia Christiana
- OrSyr L'Orient syrien
- OTS Oudtestamentische Studiën
- Pauly-Wissowa Wissowa, G., et al., eds. Paulys Real-Encyclopädie der classischen Altertumswissenschaft, neue Bearbeitung. Stuttgart, Munich, 1893–1972.
- PCB Peake, A. S., M. Black, and H. H. Rowley, eds. Peake's Commentary on the Bible. London, New York, 1962.
- PEQ Palestine Exploration Quarterly
- PETSE Papers of the Estonian Theological Society in Exile
- Peshitta The Old Testament in Syriac According to the Peshitta Version. Leiden, 1966–
- PG Patrologiae graecae, ed. J. Migne
- PIOL Publications de l'institut orientaliste de Louvain

- PL Patrologiae latinae, ed. J. Migne
- PMR Charlesworth, J. H. The Pseudepigrapha and Modern Research. SCS 7; Missoula, Mont., 1976.
- Pseud I* Fritz, K. von, ed. Pseudepigrapha I: Pseudopythagorica, lettres de Platon, littérature pseudépigraphie juive. Entretiens sur l'antiquité classique 18; Geneva, 1972.
- Pseudépigraphes* Philonenko, M., et al. Pseudépigraphes de l'Ancien Testament et manuscrits de la mer morte. Cahiers de la RHPR 41; Paris, 1967.
- PVTG Pseudepigrapha Veteris Testamenti Graece
- RAC Klauser, T., et al., eds. Reallexikon für Antike und Christentum: Sachwörterbuch zur Auseinandersetzung des Christentums mit der antiken Welt. Stuttgart, 1950—
- RB Revue biblique
- RBen Revue bénédictine
- RechBib Recherches bibliques
- REJ Revue des études juives
- RESI Revue des études slaves
- RevistB Revista bíblica
- RevSem Revue sémitique
- RGG<sup>3</sup> Galling, K., et al., eds. Die Religion in Geschichte und Gegenwart. 6 vols. plus index. Tübingen, 1957–65<sup>3</sup>.
- RHPR Revue d'histoire et de philosophie religieuse
- RHR Revue de l'histoire des religions
- Riessler Riessler, P. Altjüdisches Schrifttum ausserhalb der Bibel. Heidelberg, 1927; repr. 1966.
- RivB Rivista biblica
- ROC Revue de l'orient chrétien
- RQ Revue de Qumran
- RSR Recherches de science religieuse
- RSV Revised Standard Version
- RTP Revue de théologie et de philosophie
- Sacramentum Mundi* Rahner, K., et al., eds. Sacramentum Mundi: An Encyclopedia of Theology. 6 vols. New York, 1968–70.
- SBFLA Studii biblici franciscani liber annuus
- SBLDS Society of Biblical Literature Dissertation Series
- SBLMS Society of Biblical Literature Monograph Series
- SBL 1971 Seminar Papers* The Society of Biblical Literature One Hundred Seventh Annual Meeting Seminar Papers—28–31 October 1971, Regency Hyatt House—Atlanta, Ga. 2 vols. Missoula, Mont., 1971.
- SBL 1972 Seminar Papers* McGaughy, L. C., ed. The Society of Biblical Literature One Hundred Eighth Annual Meeting Book of Seminar Papers: Friday–Tuesday, 1–5 September 1972, Century Plaza Hotel—Los Angeles, Ca. 2 vols. Missoula, Mont., 1972.
- SBL 1974 Seminar Papers* MacRae, G., ed. Society of Biblical Literature 1974 Seminar Papers: One Hundred Tenth Annual Meeting, 24–27 October 1974, Washington Hilton, Washington, D.C. 2 vols. Cambridge, Mass., 1974.
- S3T Studies in Biblical Theology

|                        |  |
|------------------------|--|
| SC                     | Sources chrétiennes  |
| ScEs                   | Science et esprit   |
| SCS                    | Septuagint and Cognate Studies   |
| SCS 2                  | Kraft, R. A., ed. 1972 Proceedings: International Organization for Septuagint and Cognate Studies and the Society of Biblical Literature Pseudepigrapha Seminar . SCS 2; Missoula, Mont., 1972. |
| SCS 4                  | Nickelsburg, G. W. E. Jr., ed. Studies on the Testament of Moses: Seminar Papers . SCS 4; Cambridge, Mass., 1973.   |
| SCS 5                  | Nickelsburg, G. W. E. Jr., ed. Studies on the Testament of Joseph . SCS 5; Missoula, Mont., 1975.   |
| SCS 6                  | Nickelsburg, G. W. E. Jr., ed. Studies on the Testament of Abraham . SCS 6; Missoula, Mont., 1976.  |
| SEA                    | Svensk exegetisk Årsbok   |
| Sem                    | Semitica  |
| Septuaginta            | Rahlfs, A., ed. Septuaginta: Id est Vetus Testamentum graece iuxta LXX interpretes . 2 vols. Stuttgart, 1935; repr. 1965.   |
| SJLA                   | Studies in Judaism in Late Antiquity  |
| SJT                    | Scottish Journal of Theology  |
| SNTS MS                | Studiorum Novi Testamenti Societas Monograph Series   |
| SPB                    | Studia postbiblica  |
| ST                     | Studia Theologica   |
| StANT                  | Studien zum Alten und Neuen Testament   |
| Studien                | Eltester, W., ed. Studien zu den Testamenten der zwölf Patriarchen . BZNW 36; Berlin, 1969.   |
| Studies on T12P | Jonge, M. de. Studies on the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs: Text and Interpretation . SVTP 3; Leiden, 1975.   |
| Sup Numen              | Supplements to Numen  |
| SVTP                   | Studia in Veteris Testamenti Pseudepigrapha   |
| T&S                    | Texts and Studies   |
| T&T                    | Texts and Translations  |
| TBT                    | The Bible Today   |
| TDNT                   | Kittel, G., ed. Theological Dictionary of the New Testament . 10 vols., trans. G. W. Bromiley. Grand Rapids, Mich., London, 1964–76.  |
| TED                    | Translations of Early Documents   |
| ThĒĒ                   | Martinos, A., ed. Thrēskeutikē kai Ēthikē Enkuklopaideia . 12 vols. Athens, 1962–68.  |
| ThRu                   | Theologische Rundschau  |
| TLZ                    | Theologische Literaturzeitung   |
| TQ                     | Theologische Quartalschrift   |
| TU                     | Texte und Untersuchungen  |
| TWAT                   | Botterweck, G. J., and H. Ringgren, eds. Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Alten Testament . Stuttgart, 1970–  |
| TZ                     | Theologische Zeitschrift  |
| USQR                   | Union Seminar Quarterly Review  |
| VC                     | Vigiliae christianae  |
| VT                     | Vetus Testamentum   |

|                       |  |
|-----------------------|--|
| VTSup 22              | Boer, P. A. H. de, ed. Congress Volume: Uppsala 1971. Supplements to VT 22 ; Leiden, 1972.  |
| Widengren Festschrift | Bergman, J., et al., eds. Ex Orbe Religionum: Studia Geo Widengren . 2 vols. Studies in the History of Religions 21, 22; Leiden, 1972. |
| WUNT                  | Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament   |
| WZHalle               | Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift der Martin-Luther-Universität, Halle-Wittenberg. Gesellschafts- und Sprachwissenschaftliche Reihe               |
| WZJena                | Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift der Friedrich-Schiller-Universität, Jena. Gesellschafts- und Sprachwissenschaftliche Reihe                      |
| WZKM                  | Wiener Zeitschrift für die Kunde des Morgenlandes   |
| ZAW                   | Zeitschrift für die alttestamentliche Wissenschaft  |
| ZDMG                  | Zeitschrift der deutschen morgenländischen Gesellschaft   |
| ZKG                   | Zeitschrift für Kirchengeschichte   |
| ZNW                   | Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft und die Kunde der älteren Kirche   |
| ZPEB                  | Tenney, M. C., ed. The Zondervan Pictorial Encyclopedia of the Bible . 5 vols. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1975.                                     |
| ZRGG                  | Zeitschrift für Religions- und Geistesgeschichte  |
| ZTK                   | Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche  |
| ZWT                   | Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie   |

Additional Abbreviations

|         |                          |         |                                |
|---------|--------------------------|---------|--------------------------------|
| Ar.     | Arabic                   | lit.    | literally                      |
| Aram.   | Aramaic                  | LXX     | Septuagint                     |
| Arm.    | Armenian                 | MS(S)   | Manuscript(s)                  |
| BM      | British Museum           | MT      | Masoretic Text                 |
| c.      | circa                    | n. nn.  | note(s)                        |
| cf.     | compare                  | NAB     | New American Bible             |
| ch(s).  | chapter(s)               | NEB     | New English Bible              |
| col(s). | column(s)                | NT      | New Testament                  |
| Cop.    | Coptic                   | OT      | Old Testament                  |
| ET      | English translation      | pt(s).  | part(s)                        |
| Eth.    | Ethiopic                 | rec(s). | recension(s)                   |
| fol(s). | folios(s)                | RSV     | Revised Standard Version       |
| Gk.     | Greek                    | Russ.   | Russian                        |
| GNMM    | Good News for Modern Man | SBL     | Society of Biblical Literature |
| Heb.    | Hebrew                   | Slav.   | Slavic                         |
| JB      | Jerusalem Bible          | SV      | Standard Version               |
| Kar.    | Karshuni                 | Syr.    | Syriac                         |
| KJV     | King James Version       | Vat.    | Vatican                        |
| l. ll.  | line(s)                  | vs(s).  | verse(s)                       |
| Lat.    | Latin                    |         |                                |

II. ANCIENT DOCUMENTS

Bible and Apocrypha

|            |               |         |                     |
|------------|---------------|---------|---------------------|
| Gen        | Genesis       | Tob     | Tobit               |
| Ex         | Exodus        | Jdt     | Judith              |
| Lev        | Leviticus     | AddEsth | Additions to Esther |
| Num        | Numbers       | WisSol  | Wisdom of Solomon   |
| Deut       | Deuteronomy   | Sir     | Sirach              |
| Josh       | Joshua        | 1Bar    | 1 Baruch            |
| Judg       | Judges        | LetJer  | Letter of Jeremiah  |
| Ruth       | Ruth          | PrAzar  | Prayer of Azariah   |
| 1Sam       | 1 Samuel      | Sus     | Susanna             |
| 2Sam       | 2 Samuel      | Bel     | Bel and the Dragon  |
| 1Kgs       | 1 Kings       | 1Mac    | 1 Maccabees         |
| 2Kgs       | 2 Kings       | 2Mac    | 2 Maccabees         |
| 1Chr       | 1 Chronicles  | Mt      | Matthew             |
| 2Chr       | 2 Chronicles  | Mk      | Mark                |
| Ezra       | Ezra          | Lk      | Luke                |
| Neh        | Nehemiah      | Jn      | John                |
| Esth       | Esther        | Acts    | Acts                |
| Job        | Job           | Rom     | Romans              |
| Ps(s)      | Psalms        | 1Cor    | 1 Corinthians       |
| Prov       | Proverbs      | 2Cor    | 2 Corinthians       |
| Eccl (Qoh) | Ecclesiastes  | Gal     | Galatians           |
| Song       | Song of Songs | Eph     | Ephesians           |
| Isa        | Isaiah        | Phil    | Philippians         |
| Jer        | Jeremiah      | Col     | Colossians          |
| Lam        | Lamentations  | 1Thes   | 1 Thessalonians     |
| Ezek       | Ezekiel       | 2Thes   | 2 Thessalonians     |
| Dan        | Daniel        | 1Tim    | 1 Timothy           |
| Hos        | Hosea         | 2Tim    | 2 Timothy           |
| Joel       | Joel          | Tit     | Titus               |
| Amos       | Amos          | Phlm    | Philemon            |
| Obad       | Obadiah       | Heb     | Hebrews             |
| Jonah      | Jonah         | Jas     | James               |
| Micah      | Micah         | 1Pet    | 1 Peter             |
| Nah        | Nahum         | 2Pet    | 2 Peter             |
| Hab        | Habakkuk      | 1Jn     | 1 John              |
| Zeph       | Zephaniah     | 2Jn     | 2 John              |
| Hag        | Haggai        | 3Jn     | 3 John              |
| Zech       | Zechariah     | Jude    | Jude                |
| Mal        | Malachi       | Rev     | Revelation          |
| 2Ezra      | 2 Ezra        |         |                     |

Pseudepigrapha

|         |                             |
|---------|-----------------------------|
| ApAb    | Apocalypse of Abraham       |
| TAb     | Testament of Abraham        |
| ApAdam  | Apocalypse of Adam          |
| TAdam   | Testament of Adam           |
| LAE     | Life of Adam and Eve        |
| Ah      | Ahiqar                      |
| AnonSam | An Anonymous Samaritan Text |

|              |                                      |
|--------------|--------------------------------------|
| LetAris      | Letter of Aristeas                   |
| ArisEx       | Aristeas the Exegete                 |
| Aristob      | Aristobulus                          |
| Art          | Artapanus                            |
| 2Bar         | 2 (Syriac Apocalypse of) Baruch      |
| 3Bar         | 3 (Greek Apocalypse of) Baruch       |
| 4Bar         | 4 Baruch                             |
| CavTr        | Cave of Treasures                    |
| CIMal        | Cleodemus Malchus                    |
| ApDan        | Apocalypse of Daniel                 |
| Dem          | Demetrius                            |
| ElMod        | Eldad and Modad                      |
| ApEl         | Apocalypse of Elijah                 |
| HebApEl      | Hebrew Apocalypse of Elijah          |
| 1En          | 1 (Ethiopic Apocalypse of) Enoch     |
| 2En          | 2 (Slavonic Apocalypse of) Enoch     |
| 3En          | 3 (Hebrew Apocalypse of) Enoch       |
| Eup          | Eupolemus                            |
| Ps-Eup       | Pseudo-Eupolemus                     |
| ApocEzek     | Apocryphon of Ezekiel                |
| ApEzek       | Apocalypse of Ezekiel                |
| EzekTrag     | Ezekiel the Tragedian                |
| 4Ezra        | 4 Ezra                               |
| GkApEzra     | Greek Apocalypse of Ezra             |
| QuesEzra     | Questions of Ezra                    |
| RevEzra      | Revelation of Ezra                   |
| VisEzra      | Vision of Ezra                       |
| HecAb        | Hecataeus of Abdera                  |
| Ps-Hec       | Pseudo-Hecataeus                     |
| HelSynPr     | Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers        |
| THEz         | Testament of Hezekiah                |
| FrgsHistWrks | Fragments of Historical Works        |
| TIsaac       | Testament of Isaac                   |
| AscenIs      | Ascension of Isaiah                  |
| MartIs       | Martyrdom of Isaiah                  |
| VisIs        | Vision of Isaiah                     |
| LadJac       | Ladder of Jacob                      |
| PrJac        | Prayer of Jacob                      |
| TJac         | Testament of Jacob                   |
| JanJam       | Jannes and Jambres                   |
| TJob         | Testament of Job                     |
| JosAsen      | Joseph and Aseneth                   |
| HistJos      | History of Joseph                    |
| PrJos        | Prayer of Joseph                     |
| Jub          | Jubilees                             |
| LAB          | Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum |
| LosTr        | The Lost Tribes                      |
| 3Mac         | 3 Maccabees                          |
| 4Mac         | 4 Maccabees                          |
| 5Mac         | 5 Maccabees                          |
| PrMan        | Prayer of Manasseh                   |
| SyrMen       | Syriac Menander                      |

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

|              |                                     |
|--------------|-------------------------------------|
| ApMos        | Apocalypse of Moses                 |
| AsMos        | Assumption of Moses                 |
| PrMos        | Prayer of Moses                     |
| TMos         | Testament of Moses                  |
| BkNoah       | Book of Noah                        |
| Ps-Orph      | Pseudo-Orpheus                      |
| PJ    | Paraleipomena Jeremiou       |
| PhEPoet      | Philo the Epic Poet                 |
| Ps-Philo     | Pseudo-Philo                        |
| Ps-Phoc      | Pseudo-Phocylides                   |
| FrgsPoetWrks | Fragments of Poetical Works         |
| LivPro       | Lives of the Prophets               |
| HistRech     | History of the Rechabites           |
| ApSedr       | Apocalypse of Sedrach               |
| TrShem       | Treatise of Shem                    |
| SibOr        | Sibylline Oracles                   |
| OdesSol      | Odes of Solomon                     |
| PssSol       | Psalms of Solomon                   |
| TSol         | Testament of Solomon                |
| 5ApocSyrPss  | Five Apocryphal Syriac Psalms       |
| Thal         | Thallus                             |
| Theod        | Theodotus                           |
| T12P         | Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs |
| TReu         | Testament of Reuben                 |
| TSim         | Testament of Simeon                 |
| TLevi        | Testament of Levi                   |
| TJud         | Testament of Judah                  |
| TIss         | Testament of Issachar               |
| TZeb         | Testament of Zebulun                |
| TDan         | Testament of Dan                    |
| TNaph        | Testament of Naphtali               |
| TGad         | Testament of Gad                    |
| TAsh         | Testament of Asher                  |
| TJos         | Testament of Joseph                 |
| TBenj        | Testament of Benjamin               |
| Vita  | Vita Adae et Evae            |
| ApZeph       | Apocalypse of Zephaniah             |
| ApZos        | Apocalypse of Zosimus               |

Other Writings

Dead Sea Scrolls

All abbreviations are according to J. A. Fitzmyer, S.J. The Dead Sea Scrolls: Major Publications and Tools for Study. SBL Sources for Biblical Study 8; Missoula, Mont., 1975; expanded ed., 1977.

Philo

All abbreviations are according to Studia Philonica with the exception that titles of Philonic treatises are italicized.

Josephus

|              |                           |
|--------------|---------------------------|
| Ant   | Jewish Antiquities |
| Apion | Against Apion      |
| Life  | Life of Josephus   |
| War   | Jewish Wars        |

New Testament Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha

|               |                                       |
|---------------|---------------------------------------|
| EBar          | Epistle of Barnabas                   |
| GBart         | Gospel of Bartholomew                 |
| QuesBart      | Questions of Bartholomew              |
| 1Clem         | 1 Clement                             |
| 2Clem         | 2 Clement                             |
| PseudClemRec  | Pseudo-Clementine Recognitions        |
| Did           | Didache                               |
| GEbion        | Gospel of the Ebionites               |
| GEgyp         | Gospel of the Egyptians               |
| GHeb          | Gospel of the Hebrews                 |
| ShepHerm      | Shepherd of Hermes                    |
| Aploan | Apokalypsis tou hagiou Iōannou |
| ProtJames     | Protoevangelium of James              |
| ActsJn        | Acts of John                          |
| GMatthias     | Gospel of Matthias                    |
| GNic          | Gospel of Nicodemus                   |
| ActsPaul      | Acts of Paul                          |
| ApPaul        | Apocalypse of Paul                    |
| ApPet         | Apocalypse of Peter                   |
| GPet          | Gospel of Peter                       |
| PrPet         | Preaching of Peter                    |
| ActsPhil      | Acts of Philip                        |
| GPhil         | Gospel of Philip                      |
| RevSteph      | Revelation of Stephen                 |
| ActsThom      | Acts of Thomas                        |
| ApThom        | Apocalypse of Thomas                  |
| GThom         | Gospel of Thomas                      |
| GTr           | Gospel of Truth                       |
| ApVirg        | Apocalypse of the Virgin              |

Early Fathers

|                |                                      |
|----------------|--------------------------------------|
| AdvHaer | Epiphanius, Adversus haereses |
| AposCon        | Apostolic Constitutions              |

|                             |  |
|-----------------------------|--|
| CommGen              | Procopius of Gaza, Commentary on Genesis , part I |
| CommIsa              | Basil Caesar, Commentary on Isaiah                |
| CommJn               | Origen, Commentary on the Gospel of St. John      |
| DialTrypho           | Justin, Dialogue with Trypho                      |
| DivInst              | Lactantius, Divine Institutes                     |
| ExcerPss             | Origen, Excerpta in Psalmos                       |
| HE                   | Eusebius, Historia ecclesiastica                  |
| HebQuaestinLibGen    | Jerome, Hebrew Questions on the Book of Genesis   |
| Hom                  | Macarius, Spiritual Homilies                      |
| Paid                 | Clement of Alexandria, The Tutor (Paidagōgos)     |
| Philoc               | Origen, Philocalia                                |
| PrEv                 | Eusebius, Praeparatio evangelica                  |
| Princ                | Origen, De principiis                             |
| Ref                  | Hippolytus, Refutation of All Heresies            |
| Strom                | Clement of Alexandria, Stromata                   |
|                         |  |
| Rabbinics                   |  |
| Ab                          | Abot   |
| ARN                         | Abot de-Rabbi Nathan                                     |
| AZ                          | 'Abodah Zarah  |
| b. (before a rabbinic text) | Babylonian Talmud  |
| BB                          | Baba Batra   |
| Bek                         | Bekorot  |
| Ber                         | Berakot  |
| BHM                         | Bet ha-Midrash   |
| Bikk                        | Bikkurim   |
| BM                          | Batei Midrashot  |
| BMeš                        | Baba Meši'a (Talmudic tractate)                          |
| DeutR                       | Debarim Rabbah   |
| EccIR                       | Qohelet Rabbah   |
| 'Eduy                       | 'Eduyyot   |
| 'Erub                       | 'Erubin  |
| ExR                         | Šemot Rabbah   |
| GedMos                      | Gedulah Moshe  |
| GenR                        | Bere'šit Rabbah  |
| Gitt                        | Gittin   |
| Ḥag                         | Ḥagigah  |
| Ḥallah                      | Ḥallah   |
| Ḥull                        | Ḥullin   |
| Ker                         | Keritot  |
| Ket                         | Ketubot  |
| Kid                         | Kiddushin  |
| LamR                        | Ekah Rabbah  |
| LevR                        | Wayyiqra Rabbah  |
| m. (before a rabbinic text) | Mishnah  |
| Makk                        | Makkot   |
| Meg                         | Megillah   |
| Men                         | Menahot  |
| Mik                         | Mikwa'ot   |
| MK                          | Mo'ed Katan  |
| Naz                         | Nazir  |
| Ned                         | Nedarim  |

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

1

|                             |                        |
|-----------------------------|------------------------|
| Nidd                        | Niddah                 |
| NumR                        | Bemidbar Rabbah        |
| OM                          | Ozar Midrashim         |
| Pes                         | Pesaḥim                |
| PetMos                      | Petiroth Moshe         |
| PR                          | Pesikta Rabbati        |
| PRE                         | Pirke de-Rabbi Eliezer |
| RH                          | Rosh Hashanah          |
| RuthR                       | Ruth Rabbah            |
| Sanh                        | Sanhedrin              |
| SER                         | Seder Eliyahu Rabbah   |
| Shab                        | Shabbat                |
| SifDeut                     | Sifre Deuteronomy      |
| SongR                       | Šir Hašširim Rabbah    |
| Sot                         | Sotah                  |
| Sukk                        | Sukkah                 |
| t. (before a rabbinic text) | Tosephta               |
| Ta'an                       | Ta'anit                |
| TargOnk                     | Targum Onkelos         |
| TargYer                     | Targum Yerushalmi      |
| TarJon                      | Targum Jonathan        |
| Ter                         | Terumot                |
| y. (before a rabbinic text) | Jerusalem Talmud       |
| Yad                         | Yadayim                |
| Yeb                         | Yebamot                |
| Zeb                         | Zebahim                |

THE OLD TESTAMENT PSEUDEPIGRAPHA

DOCUMENTS

EXPANSIONS OF THE “OLD TESTAMENT” AND LEGENDS

INTRODUCTION

BY J. H. CHARLESWORTH

Early Judaism was a religion bound to and defined by the Book, the Torah. Because God had chosen to reveal himself in history, a sacred aura surrounded the events in Israel's past. These stories preserved in the books in the Old Testament were told and retold not only in the synagogues but also around the evening fires or wherever Jews would congregate. The biblical narratives were clarified, enriched, expanded, and sometimes retold from a different perspective. Often circulating first as oral legends, some stories eventually evolved into the documents collected here. Distinguishable from the others is the Letter of Aristeas; it does not center upon a biblical narrative, but glorifies the translation of the Hebrew scriptures into Greek.

Frequently the expansions explain the superiority of Judaism over other religions and may have an apologetic or missionary purpose; almost always they celebrate God's covenant with and guidance of the faithful. The primary focus is upon God's story in history, an ongoing drama in which the author claims to be a participant.

The early Jewish strata of the Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah belong to the present category; in its final and present form, however, it is clearly an apocalyptic work (especially chs. 6–11). Also related to the apocalyptic writings are Jubilees and 4 Baruch.

The expansions to sacred stories in the Old Testament should be studied in light of similar writings, such as some of the documents in the Apocrypha, the rabbinic Targumim and Midrashim, the Qumran Pesharim, and other exegetical documents (especially 1QapGen), a few of Philo of Alexandria's writings, Josephus' histories, and the Christian historians and chronographers. The Testament of Job, translated above, is an expansion of the biblical narrative in a testament form.

CONTENTS

Letter of Aristeas

Jubilees

Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah

Joseph and Aseneth

Life of Adam and Eve

Pseudo-Philo

The Lives of the Prophets

Ladder of Jacob

4 Baruch

Jannes and Jambres

History of the Rechabites

Eldad and Modad

History of Joseph

LETTER OF ARISTEAS

(Third Century B.C.—First Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY R. J. H. SHUTT

The so-called Letter of Aristeas is a primary source for understanding the Septuagint, the version of the Jewish Scriptures in Greek. It purports to describe how the Jewish Law was translated from Hebrew into Greek by seventy-two Jews sent to Alexandria for this purpose. The author, Aristeas, writes to his brother Philocrates about this mission. Presumably, Aristeas, who was a Jew from Alexandria, participated in the mission.

The contents are briefly as follows: The Egyptian king Ptolemy II (285–247 B.C.) wants Demetrius of Phalerum, his librarian, to collect all the books in the world for the library at Alexandria. Demetrius thinks that such a collection should include a copy of the Jewish Law in a Greek translation, and so he orders a letter to be written to the high priest at Jerusalem.

In a digression (vss. 12–27), Aristeas successfully petitions the king for the release of those Jews forcibly deported to Egypt by his father, King Ptolemy, son of Lagos. The relevant royal decree is quoted.

Returning to the main theme, Aristeas quotes the letter which Demetrius, the librarian, is instructed to send to the high priest (vss. 28–34). It suggests that the translation be made by six suitable members from each of the twelve tribes (vss. 35–40). The suggestion is accepted, and the names of the translators are given (vss. 47–50). Gifts are sent from the king to the high priest (vss. 51–82). Aristeas himself is mentioned as one of the ambassadors (vs. 43).

A description of Palestine follows, including the Temple and the high priest's vestments (vss. 83–120), but the account of the journey, though promised, is not given. The qualifications and virtues of the translators are given and extolled (vss. 121–27).

Then there is a further digression on the Law in Judaism (vss. 128–72). The arrival of the translators in Alexandria and their welcome are described; a royal banquet is prepared (vss. 173–86).

Even the author apologizes for the length of the next section, which is about a third of Aristeas (vss. 187–294). He describes the questions put by the king during the seven days of the banquet to each of the translators in turn, and their replies.

Finally the translators are conducted to their well-furnished quarters by Demetrius, and the work begins. Drafts of the translation are made, and the final version is completed in exactly seventy-two days (vss. 301–7).

The version is read to the Jewish community; Demetrius is asked to complete the project by arranging for the translation of the rest of the Law, and steps are taken, by pronouncing a curse on any who should change it in any way, to ensure that this is established as the authorized and official Greek translation (vss. 308–11).

The king shares in the rejoicing at the completion of the initial task, the sacred character of the Law is emphasized, and Demetrius receives instructions to guard the books with special care (vss. 312–17).

Further compliments and gifts are given, and the translators depart for home with a guard of honor, a letter, and further gifts to Eleazar (vss. 318–21).

A brief epilogue addressed to Philocrates, recalling his interest in such projects, brings Aristeas to a close.

Texts<sup>1</sup>

“There are more than twenty mss. containing the text or significant extracts from the Letter of Aristeas.”<sup>2</sup> They range from the eleventh to the sixteenth centuries.

Thackeray describes these manuscripts in detail; Pelletier gives them in chronological groups according to the century to which they belong, adding six to Thackeray’s list, and paying special attention to two of them: U, Seragliensis 8 of Istanbul, belonging to the twelfth or thirteenth centuries, and O, Monacensis 9 Munich of the eleventh century.

Thackeray and Pelletier agree that what Thackeray calls group A manuscripts are of special importance and antiquity. The group is subdivided as follows:

H Vaticanus 747. Rome (11th cent.)

K Vaticanus 383. Rome (12th–13th cent.)

A Regius 128. Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale (12th–13th cent.)

and (very similar to the above-mentioned):

G Venetus 534. Venice Marcianus (11th cent.)

I Palatinus 203. Rome, Bibl. Vatic. Pal. (11th cent.)

M Ottobonianus 32. Bibl. Vatic. Ottobon (15th cent.)

The earliest printed edition was a Latin translation by M. Palmerius of Pisa in 1471. A Greek text, the work of S. Schard, was published by Oporinus in 1561 at Basel, based mainly on O, Codex Monacensis 9 Munich.

The genuineness of Aristeas as a contemporary account of the proceedings by an eyewitness was seriously doubted by Hody (1659–1707). His position was rejected in 1870 by Schmidt, who was followed by Mendelssohn in 1897 and Wendland in 1900. The first edition of Thackeray’s work also appeared in 1902 as an appendix to Swete’s An Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek. Thackeray’s text has been adopted in the works of Meecham (1935) and Hadas (1951). It is used as the basis of this translation; divergences from his text are indicated in the notes.

English translations have been published by H. St. J. Thackeray (1903), H. T. Andrews (in R. H. Charles, APOT, vol. 1, 1913), H. G. Meecham (1935), and M. Hadas (1951).

Original language

The original language of Aristeas is Greek, but not a particularly distinguished or elegant type of Greek. Some of its sentences are cumbersome, some of its words unusual, and some of its phrases striking because of their awkwardness. It hardly reaches the heights needed for a work to be classed as literature.

Date

It is impossible to be certain about the date of this work. The king referred to is Ptolemy II (Philadelphus, 285–247 B.C.). There is a reference in Aristeas to this king’s father, Ptolemy I (Lagos), who abdicated in 285 and died in 283. Josephus (A.D. 37–?110) paraphrases the work in his Jewish Antiquities 12.12–118. From this we must conclude that it was written between approximately 250 B.C. and A.D. 100. To venture further with the dating demands some conjecture.

Jellicoe<sup>3</sup> summarizes the main categories of conjectured dates as follows:

1. early (i.e. 250–200 B.C.)
2. about 150–100 B.C.
3. first century A.D.

The majority of the views is in favor of c. 150–100 B.C. In deciding which conjecture is preferable, we first have to decide on the occasion (and purpose) of the work. It has a decidedly Jewish background and provides an exposition and defense of the Law, seeking to indicate its relation in thought and political philosophy to Hellenism. This would be consistent with the view that the work emanated from Alexandria, a hellenistic center where there was a significant Jewish element in the population. There was consequently a need to promote integration and to avoid friction between Jew and non-Jew. There was presumably an immediate occasion for the composition of the work: Such an occasion would probably have been one during which an anti-Jewish policy was being carried out. A serious occasion of this sort occurred when Antiochus Epiphanes sought to carry out his pro-hellenistic or anti-Jewish policy, which caused such a strong reaction in Judea among, for example, the Maccabees. There would have been repercussions and unease in Alexandria about that time, i.e. about 170 B.C. Any attempt to consolidate the links between the two communities and to prevent a deterioration of the situation would have been worthwhile. Such an attempt, we may conjecture, underlies Aristeas. On these grounds we may with Jellicoe<sup>4</sup> and Orlinsky date the work about 170 B.C., thus putting it approximately in the second of the categories mentioned above.

<sup>1</sup> For further reference to the MSS see H. St. J. Thackeray, Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek (Cambridge, 1902) pp. 501–18, and A. Pelletier, Lettre d’Aristée à Philocrate, pp. 8–41.

<sup>2</sup> Pelletier, Lettre d’Aristée, p. 8.

<sup>3</sup> S. Jellicoe, The Septuagint and Modern Study, p. 48, n. 1.

Assuming some such occasion and date, what is the purpose of the work? It can hardly be regarded as a document written at the same time as the translation of the Law into Greek, known as the Septuagint. From this point of view, therefore, if that is the expectation, the work may be a disappointment. What is more important, it concerns Judaism and is a defense of Judaism in the light of its Law as available in a Greek version. The story of the making of that version underlines the toleration and respect which the Jews of Alexandria enjoyed and the integration of Jew and non-Jew in that city. Events in Jerusalem about 170 B.C. threatened such a community. Aristeas is an attempt by the author, himself presumably a Jew,<sup>5</sup> to show the links between Jew and Greek and to underline them by narrating the particular story of the translation of the Jewish Scriptures. Such we may conjecture is the occasion, date, and purpose of this work.

Provenance

A gentile, even a proselyte to Judaism, would hardly have attained such a knowledge of Jewish practices, and of the Temple worship, as the Letter of Aristeas exhibits (e.g. vs. 83–120). It is highly probable therefore that the author was a Jew. His knowledge of Alexandria needs also to be taken into account (e.g. vs. 301). The most attractive conjecture is that he lived in Alexandria.<sup>6</sup>

Historical and theological importance

It is difficult, as shown above, to date this document, and therefore difficult also to assess its importance for the time when it was composed.

However, its importance goes further and deeper than its historical setting because it raises a question implicit in Judaism that emerges in times of special crisis: If the Jews are God's special people, a chosen race, how are they to regard non-Jews? Can they live with them, or must they simply remove themselves and live exclusive lives? Is there any temporary arrangement of mutual recognition and respect that can be evolved? The case for the Jewish Law and attitude to life is set out in this work, and in confirmation of this, an appeal is made to the history of the Jews in Egypt and Alexandria, with special reference to the Law and its translation into Greek. It is also meant to show that there is some affinity between Jew and Greek, but not necessarily an identity, so that it is possible for them to live together. The difficulties are recognized, however: It is the merit of Aristeas that the author is alive to this recurring problem in the history of Judaism. For example, he describes how special arrangements were made for the banquet when the king and the Jews ate together (vs. 181). The implied warning is twofold: The danger with some of the Jews was that they might become excessively exclusive in their attitude to others, and the danger with the Greeks, or the Hellenists, was that their attitude might be too syncretistic.<sup>7</sup> The moral was the need for mutual recognition of different customs and cultures.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid., p. 49.

<sup>5</sup> In spite of LetAris, vs. 16.

<sup>6</sup> For details on the exact status of the Jews in Alexandria, see Josephus, Ant 19.279 (LCL ed., vol. 9, n. ad loc., and App. Q. 583–85).

Relation to canonical books

There is no evidence in Aristeas either to indicate which books in the Old Testament have exercised most influence upon it or to indicate which books in the New Testament it has influenced. Aristeas holds the Law in the highest esteem and is concerned with narrating the story of the translation of the Jewish Scriptures into Greek.

Relation to apocryphal books

Similarly, there is no evidence that any of the apocryphal books directly influenced Aristeas. There are no apocryphal books with which Aristeas is especially close; with some there is only the general link shown by hellenistic influence.

Cultural importance

Aristeas provides no specific detail either on the methods and aims of the translators or on the text used. Indeed, a look at the contents shows that the space devoted to the translators and their work is only a small proportion of the total length of Aristeas. The project and the names of the translators appear in verses 1–50; their actual work is described in verses 301–21. A digression on the questions put to the translators during the seven-day banquet occupies about a third of the whole work; other digressions include details of gifts from the king (vss. 51–82) and a description of Palestine, the Temple, and the high priest's vestments (vss. 83–120).

Nevertheless, the work is important, for it is the only ancient document on the subject that has survived. How is it then to be regarded? Opinions differ.<sup>8</sup> It has been regarded as a work of Jewish apologetics, aimed at the Greeks. Tcherikover suggested that it was "not written with the aim of self-defence or propaganda, and was addressed not to Greek, but to Jewish readers."<sup>9</sup> In either case, perhaps such a precise dichotomy obscures rather than illuminates: It may well be that we are nearer to the truth if we say that its underlying motive and purpose are mixed.

The background of the work is Alexandria, where a Jewish community lived among a predominantly gentile population. There were obvious differences in culture and religion, but Judaism and Hellenism largely succeeded in living side by side there in comparative harmony. Was any mutual assimilation possible? If so, would it take place? These questions were bound to arise, and indeed had arisen ever since some of the Jews had been forced to live in captivity in Babylon. To some extent, the result was the Judaism of the Dispersion, which was liberal as compared with the Judaism of Palestine, with the Temple at Jerusalem as the focus of its religion. This was inevitable and is associated with the rise and development of the synagogues, but even so, the Judaism of the Diaspora maintained its identity. On the other hand, the gentile population among whom the Dispersion lived was not always satisfied with such a situation, although there was little general hostile expression of such dissatisfaction. The ideals of Hellenism, however, aspired to a universalism in culture and religion, which could be intolerant of what might be regarded as Jewish separatism and exclusiveness.

The clash under Antiochus Epiphanes, which resulted in the persecution of the Jews in Palestine and an attempt to eradicate them, may have taken place shortly before Aristeas was written.<sup>10</sup> There may well have been repercussions and anxiety among the Jews in Alexandria and in the Dispersion. In any case, the situation existed either actually or potentially and was unavoidable as long as Jews lived among gentiles and, characteristically, exercised a noticeable presence and influence to a greater or lesser extent at different times.

<sup>7</sup> (Exclusiveness is found in Jub, syncretism in 4 Mac.—J.H.C.)

<sup>8</sup> See article by V. Tcherikover in Studies in the Septuagint: Origins, Recensions, and Interpretations, ed. S. Jellicoe.

<sup>9</sup> Ibid., p. 182.

<sup>10</sup> 175–64 B.C. See also "Date."

The author of Aristeas was aware of this situation—and its danger, and he saw in the translation of the Jewish Scriptures a phenomenal event important in itself for Judaism and its understanding by Jews and non-Jews. He recognized that in process of time, through lack of use in ordinary communication with gentiles, the native language of the Jews might become less familiar. He also saw in the translation a sort of parable of the relationship between the Judaism of the Dispersion and the Hellenism of the gentiles among whom these Jews lived. Hence he acclaimed in this work the actual project and those responsible for its execution, showing the attitudes of both groups to each other. Perhaps it is to be regarded as an attempt at a compromise, which well may be criticized for its emphasis on and even bias toward Judaism, but which, nevertheless, deserves credit for its basic concept and vision. In this sense, Aristeas is not to be regarded as aimed only at Greeks or at Jews; it was probably aimed at both.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 78–80.

Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 97f.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 105–10.

Hadas, M. Aristeas to Philocrates. New York and London, 1951. (This translation follows Thackeray's text.)

Jellicoe, S. The Septuagint and Modern Study. Oxford, 1968. (A most important work, including chs. on Aristeas and its relation to LXX studies to date.)

Jellicoe, S., ed. Studies in the Septuagint: Origins, Recensions, and Interpretations. New York, 1974. (This vol. contains articles on Aristeas by D. W. Gooding, V. Tcherikover, and G. Zuntz which appeared in learned journals between 1958 and 1963, assembled in convenient form for reference and prefaced with a masterly introduction by Jellicoe.)

Marcus, R. Josephus: Jewish Antiquities XII–XIV. LCL edition, vol. VII; London and Cambridge, Mass., 1943. (Josephus used Aristeas as a source in Ant 12.11–118. See the appendix for a consideration of the method which Josephus adopted with this source.)

Meecham, H. G. The Letter of Aristeas. Manchester, 1935. (The text of Thackeray is given here, without translation. There are appendices in which philological studies are paramount.)

Nestle, E. "Septuagint" in J. Hastings, Dictionary of the Bible. Edinburgh, 1902. (This article contains much useful information, but now needs supplementing with the work of S. Jellicoe.)

Pelletier, A. Lettre d'Aristée à Philocrate. SC 89; Paris, 1962. (This vol. contains an introduction, text, and translation, with critical nn. and appendices. The introduction includes important sections on MSS, author and date, the Library of Alexandria, and the Jewish community there.)

Shutt, R. J. H. "Notes on the Letter of Aristeas." BIOSCS 10 (1977) 22–30.

Swete, H. B. An Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek. Cambridge, 1902; text: 519–74, introduction: 501–18. (The introduction is valuable for detailed descriptions of the MSS of LetAris.)

Thackeray, H. St. J., ed. "The Letter of Aristeas," in An Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek, by H. B. Swete. Cambridge, 1902. (This edition of LetAris is the basis for the present translation.)

ARISTEAS TO PHILOCRATES

1 A trustworthy narrative has been compiled, Philocrates, of the meeting which we had with Eleazar, high priest of the Jews, arising out of your attaching great importance to hearing a personal account of our mission, its content and purpose. By detailing<sup>a</sup> each aspect I have tried to give you a clear exposition of it, realizing your scholarly disposition, 2 which is a supreme quality in any man who has tried continually to increase his learning and understanding, whether from the accounts (of others) or by actual experience. This is the way in which a pure disposition of mind is acquired, by the attainment of the noblest ends, and which, turning to piety, the highest of all ends, lives by adopting a rule which 3 does not err. •We have a set purpose devoted to the special study of the things of God, and offered ourselves as a deputation to the aforesaid gentleman, whose integrity and reputation have won him preeminent honor in the eyes of citizens and others alike, and who has gained a very great benefit for his own circle and for (fellow) citizens in other places. Our deputation (waited upon him) with a view to the translation of the divine Law, due to its being written 4 by them on parchments in Hebrew characters. •We undertook this task with enthusiasm, seizing an opportunity with the king in connection with those who were transported to Egypt from Judea by the king his father, who was the original founder of the city and took over 5 the government of Egypt. It is worthwhile telling you this as well, •for I am convinced that because you are more favorably inclined toward the piety and disposition of those who live by the sacred Law, concerning whom we propose to write, you will gladly listen,<sup>b</sup> since you have paid a special visit to us from your island, and wish to hear with us of matters 6 pertaining to the edification of the soul. •I had previously sent you the account of what I regarded as the most memorable matters. We received this account of the people of the 7 Jews from the most renowned high priests in renowned Egypt. •You are studiously disposed toward what can help the mind and it is my duty to share this with all like-minded persons, and all the more so with you, for you have a kindred spirit, being not only a blood brother 8 in character but also in the pursuit of beauty the same as we are. •The value of gold or any other treasure among those highly prized by the empty-headed does not possess the same value, as compared with the pursuit of culture and caring for these things. But lest we prolong the introduction and indulge in idle chatter, we will proceed to the main part of the narrative.

9 On his appointment as keeper of the king's library, Demetrius of Phalerum undertook many different negotiations aimed at collecting, if possible, all the books in the world. By purchase and translation he brought to a successful conclusion, as far as lay in his power, 10 the king's plan. •We were present when the question was put to him, "How many thousand<sup>c</sup> books are there (in the royal library)?" His reply was, "Over two hundred thousand, O King. I shall take urgent steps to increase in a short time the total to five hundred thousand. Information has reached me that the lawbooks of the Jews are worth translation and inclusion in your royal library."

11 "What is there to prevent you from doing this?" he said. "Everything for your needs has been put at your disposal."

Demetrius replied, "Translation is needed. They use letters characteristic of the language of the Jews, just as Egyptians use the formation of their letters in accordance with their own language. The Jews are supposed to use Syrian language, but this is not so, for it is another form (of language)."

12 The king, in answer to each point, gave orders that a letter be written to the high priest of the Jews that the aforementioned project might be carried out. •I considered that it was an opportunity in connection with the matters on which I had often asked Sosibius of

a. The text is corrupt here, but the general sense is clear.

b. Thackeray adopts the emendation of Schmidt.

c. Lit. "How many ten thousands of books are there?" His reply was, "Over twenty, O King. I shall take urgent steps to increase in a short time the total to fifty."

Tarentum and Andreas, the chief bodyguards, concerning the release of those deported from Judaea by the father of the king. He invaded the whole of Coele-Syria and Phoenicia, and by a combination of success and bravery deported some and took others prisoners, bringing everything into subjection by fear. In the course of this he removed from the land of the 13 Jews into Egypt up to one hundred thousand people, *from whom he armed about thirty thousand chosen men and settled them throughout the land in the forts. (Already in earlier times as well a fair number had entered the country with the Persian, and before them other confederate troops had been dispatched to fight with Psammitichus against the king of the Ethiopians, but they were not so many in number as those brought over by Ptolemy the son 14 of Lagos.) *As we said previously, he selected the best, outstanding in youth and strength, and armed them. The remaining number, old men, children, and women also, he let go into slavery, not so much out of any personal predilection for such a course, but because he was prevailed upon by his troops on account of the services which they had given in the trials of war. When therefore we came upon some opportunity for their release, as we have 15 shown before, we spoke the following words to the king. **“Let it never be unreasonable to be refuted by events themselves, O King. The laws have been established for all the Jews, and it is our plan not only to translate but also to interpret them, but what justification shall we have for our mission, as long as large numbers are in subjection in your kingdom? But out of your unsullied and magnanimous soul release those who are subject to misery; the (same) God who appointed them their Law prospers your kingdom, as I have been at 16 pains to show. *These people worship God the overseer and creator of all, whom all men worship including ourselves, O King, except that we have a different name. Their name for him is Zeus and Jove. The primitive men, consistently with this, demonstrated that the one by whom all live and are created is the master and Lord of all. In your excelling all 17 men by your nobility of soul, I beg you to release those held in slavery.”* *He wasted no time, while we offered hearty prayer to God to dispose his mind to the release of them all. (Mankind is God’s creation and is changed and converted by him. Wherefore with many diverse prayers I besought the Lord with all my heart that he might be prevailed upon to 18 accomplish my request. *For I had great hope, as I presented the case for the saving of men, that God would execute the fulfillment of my requests, inasmuch as whatsoever men think to do in piety in the way of righteousness and attention to good works, God the Lord
 19 of all directs their acts and intentions.) *(The king) looked up and, looking on me with gracious countenance, said, “How many thousand<sup>d</sup> do you consider there will be?” Andreas, standing by, answered, “A little more than one hundred thousand.” He said, “It is a small request that Aristeas makes of us.” Sosibius and some of those present thus said, *“It is worthy of your magnanimity to offer the release of these men as a thank offering to the Most High God. You are highly honored by the Lord of all, and have been glorified beyond
 20 your ancestors, so if you make even the greatest thank offerings, it befits you.”* *The king was absolutely confounded, and ordered an increase in army pay, and the payment of twenty drachmas for each slave, together with the publication of an edict on these matters, and the compilation of a register accordingly. He exercised his zeal on a grand scale, God having fulfilled all our purpose, and compelled him to release not only those who came into his kingdom with his father’s army but also any others who were there previously or were subsequently taken there. They revealed that the gift amounted to more than four hundred
 21 talents. *As regards the copy of the decree, I consider its recording to be of no small value, because the generosity of the king will be more clearly manifested thereby, as God gives 22 him strength to bring salvation to large multitudes. *It was as follows. *“By order of the king—as many as joined our father’s campaigns in the regions of Syria and Phoenicia and in their advance into the territory of the Jews became masters of Jewish personnel which they transported into the city or the country or sold to others, and likewise any such who were there before the advance or were subsequently brought in—those who hold such persons shall forthwith release them, receiving as the price for each individual twenty drachmas, such money to be paid in the case of soldiers with the issue of their pay, and in 23 the case of the remainder from the royal treasury. *It is our opinion that these prisoners were taken contrary to the wishes of our father in a manner quite improper, and that*

d. Lit. “How many ten thousands do you consider there will be?” Andreas, standing by, answered, “A little more than ten ten thousands.”

excessively drastic military action caused the destruction of their land and the transportation of the Jews into Egypt. The assistance from the soldiers given along the plain was quite 24 enough, and the enslavement of these men is accordingly entirely inequitable. •We have a reputation of dispensing justice to all men, and all the more to those who are enslaved without good reason; our overall aim is that which promotes justice and piety in all things. We have accordingly decreed that all Jewish personnel in slavery (everywhere) in the kingdom for whatever reason shall be released, their owners to receive the payment laid down above, and that no one shall deal in a slow manner in these matters. Three days from 25 the day of publication of this decree, the owners shall furnish registers to those appointed over these matters, giving immediate details of these persons. •We have concluded that it is in the interest of ourselves and our royal affairs that this matter shall be accomplished. Anyone who so wishes may give information concerning those who have disobeyed (this edict) on the understanding that he will assume the office of the accused if found guilty;
 26 the possessions of such men shall be appropriated into the royal treasury.” •This decree was submitted to the king for his perusal. It was identical in all other respects except for the clause “and likewise any such who were there before the advance or were subsequently brought in,” which the king added with his own hand, showing his magnificent magnanimity. He gave orders also that a generous gift of expenses should be divided among the servants
 27 of the troops and the royal bankers. •Once so decided, it was implemented in seven days. The gift amounted to more than six hundred and sixty talents. A large number of children at the breast were also set free, with their mothers. There was an additional proposal to the effect that twenty drachmas should be given for these, and the king commanded that this also should be done, thus completely accomplishing every detail of his policy.
 28 When this had been completed, he commanded Demetrius to report on the copying of the Jewish books. All measures were taken by these kings by means of edicts and in complete safety, with no trace of negligence or carelessness. For this reason I have set down the copies of the report and of the letters, as well as the number of those returned and the state of each, because each of them was outstanding in magnificence and skill.
 29 The copy of the memorandum is as follows: “To the great king from Demetrius. Your command, O King, concerned the collection of missing volumes needed to complete the library, and of items which accidentally fell short of the requisite condition. I gave highest 30 priority and attention to these matters, and now make the following further report: •Scrolls of the Law of the Jews, together with a few others, are missing (from the library), for these (works) are written in Hebrew characters and language. But they have been transcribed<sup>e</sup> somewhat carelessly and not as they should be,<sup>f</sup> according to the report of the experts,

e. Lit. “have been indicated.” The major problem in understanding vs. 30 is this verb, sesēmantai (perfect passive 3rd plural), which comes from sēmainō and can mean “to show by a sign, indicate, appear, be manifest, give a signal, signify” (LSJM and similarly Preisigke); “to indicate, signify, to mean (of words)” (Sophocles); or “to make known, report, communicate” (Bauer-Arndt-Gingrich). As translated above the vs. refers to copies of Heb. scrolls (cf. the judicious comments by Shutt in “Notes on the Letter of Aristeas,” BIOSCS 10 [1977] 22–30. —J.H.C.). Andrews (APOT, vol. 2, p. 98) took sesēmantai to mean “interpreted” and noted that the “exact force” of this verb “is uncertain. If we translate ‘interpreted’ it involves the supposition that an earlier, though imperfect, translation of the law into Greek was in existence.” Andrews translated the passage as follows: “They are written in the Hebrew characters and language and have been carelessly interpreted, and do not represent the original text as I am informed by those who know . . .” Andrews’ rendering supports P. Kahle’s hypothesis; Kahle claimed that the LetAris refers not to “the first Greek translation of the Law” but to “a revision of already existing translations.” (The Cairo Geniza [Oxford, 1959<sup>2</sup>] p. 212; italics his). Kahle demands that sesēmantai be translated “interpreted” or “written” and claims it refers to earlier translations of the Law into Gk.;

yet he admits the expressions in LetAris 30 “are not clear” and “not good Greek” (p. 213). He is wrong in demanding that amelesteron, which he translated “rather carelessly,” “can only be taken as referring to earlier translations . . .” (italics his).

The translation given above supports the position presented in 1863 by P. de Lagarde and defended more recently by H. M. Orlinsky, D. Barthélemy, F. M. Cross, H. H. Rowley, and S. Jellicoe (for details and bibliographical data see Jellicoe’s The Septuagint and Modern Study, pp. 59–63). LetAris 30 is not referring to other Gk. translations of the Law; it appears to refer to unreliable Heb. MSS. There does appear to be an Urtext of the LXX; but the author of LetAris is, among other concerns, apparently defending the LXX against one or more rival Gk. translations [perhaps emanating from Leontopolis, as Jellicoe, p. 50, suggested. —J.H.C.].

f. Lit. “as is the case.” Everyone recognizes the phrase kai ouch hōs huparchei as “difficult Greek” (Hadas); it is translated variously: “and not according to their true meaning” (Thackeray); “and not adequately” (Hadas). Since the author of LetAris has the Heb. text of the Torah brought from Jerusalem, he may well have meant to indicate here that the copies available in Alexandria were inadequate. [I am indebted here to conversations with H. Orlinsky. —J.H.C.]

31 because they have not received royal patronage. •These (books) also must be in your library<sup>g</sup> in an accurate version, because this legislation, as could be expected from its divine nature, is very philosophical and genuine. Writers therefore and poets and the whole army of historians have been reluctant to refer to the aforementioned books, and to the men past 32 (and present) who featured largely in them, because the consideration of them is sacred and hallowed, as Hecataeus of Abdera says. •If you approve, O King, a letter shall be written to the high priest at Jerusalem, asking him to dispatch men of the most exemplary lives and mature experience, skilled in matters pertaining to their Law, six in number from each tribe, in order that after the examination of the text agreed by the majority, and the achievement of accuracy in the translation, we may produce an outstanding version in a manner worthy 33 both of the contents and of your purpose. Farewell always.” •On receiving this report, the king ordered a letter to be written to Eleazar regarding these matters, announcing also the actual release of the prisoners. He made them a gift also for the provision of cups and goblets and a table and libation vessels weighing fifty talents of gold, seventy talents of silver, and a goodly number of (precious) stones—he commanded the treasurers to allow the craftsmen to select whatever they might prefer—and of currency for sacrifices and other 34 requirements one hundred talents. •We will show you details of the provisions after we have given the copies of the letters. The letter of the king was of the following pattern.
 35 “King Ptolemy to Eleazar the high priest, hearty greetings. It is a fact that a large number of the Jews settled in our country after being uprooted from Jerusalem by the Persians during the time of their ascendancy, and also came with our father into Egypt as prisoners.
 36 He put many of them into the military forces on generous pay, and in the same way, having judged the veterans to be trustworthy, he set up establishments which he handed over to them, to prevent the Egyptian people feeling any apprehension on their account.
 Having now inherited the throne, we adopt a more liberal attitude to all our subjects, and 37 more especially to your citizens. •We have freed more than a hundred thousand prisoners,<sup>h</sup> paying to their captors the price in silver proportionate to their rank. We also make amends for any damage caused by mob violence. We decided to do this as a religious obligation, making of it a thank offering to the Most High God, who has preserved the kingdom for us in peace and highest renown throughout the whole world. Those at the peak of their youth we have appointed to the army, and those who are able to be at our court, being 38 worthy of confidence in our household, we have put in charge of (some) ministries. •It is our wish to grant favors to them and to all the Jews throughout the world, including future generations. We have accordingly decided that your Law shall be translated into Greek letters from what you call the Hebrew letters, in order that they too should take their place 39 with us in our library with the other royal books. •You will therefore act well, and in a manner worthy of our zeal, by selecting elders of exemplary lives, with experience of the Law and ability to translate it, six from each tribe, so that an agreed version may be found from the large majority, in view of the great importance of the matters under consideration.
 40 We believe that the completion of this project will win (us) high reputation. •We have dispatched on this business Andreas of the chief bodyguards and Aristeas, men held in high esteem by you, to confer with you; they bring with them first fruits of offerings for the Temple and one hundred talents of silver for sacrifices and the other requirements. Write to us on any matters you wish, and your requests will be gratified; you will be performing also an act worthy of friendship for what you choose will be carried out with all dispatch.
 41 Farewell.” •In reply to this letter Eleazar wrote in acceptance as follows: “Eleazar the high priest to King Ptolemy, dear friend, greeting. Good health to you and to Queen Arsinoe, your sister, and to your children; if that is so, it would be well, and as we wish. We too 42 are in good health. •On receipt of your letter we rejoiced greatly because of your purpose and noble plan; we therefore collected together the whole multitude and read it to them, that they might know your piety toward our God. We also showed them the vessels which you sent, twenty of silver and thirty of gold, five cups, and a table for offering, and for the performance of the sacrifices and the furnishing of the Temple requirements one hundred 43 talents of silver, •brought by two men highly esteemed by you, Andreas and Aristeas,

g. Lit. “with you,” i.e. in your library, presumably, though not all commentators would wish to be so specific.

h. Lit. “ten ten thousands.”

gentlemen of integrity,<sup>1</sup> outstanding in education, worthy in every respect of your conduct and justice. They also communicated to us your messages, in reply to which they have 44 heard from us also sentiments consistent with what you wrote. •Everything which is to your advantage, even if it is unnatural, we will carry out; this is a sign of friendship and love.
 45 You have also bestowed great unexpected benefits upon our citizens in many ways. •We therefore offered sacrifices without delay for you, your sister, your children, and your friends. The whole multitude made supplication that it should come to pass for you entirely as you desire, and that God the ruler of all should preserve your kingdom in peace and glory, and that the translation of the sacred Law should come to pass in a manner expedient 46 to you and in safety. •In the presence of the whole assembly we selected elders, honorable men and true, six from each tribe, whom we have sent with the Law in their possession. It will be a noble deed, O righteous King, if you command that once the translation of the 47 books is complete these men be restored to us again in safety. Farewell.” •The names of the men are as follows: First tribe:<sup>j</sup> Joseph, Ezekiah, Zachariah, John, Ezekiah, and Elissaeus; second tribe: Judas, Simon, Somoel, Adaeus, Mattathias, and Escllemias; third tribe:
 48 Neemia, Joseph, Theodosius, Baseas, Ornias, and Dakis; •fourth tribe: Jonathan, Abraeus, Elissaeus, Ananias, Chabrias;<sup>k</sup> fifth tribe: Isaac, Jacob, Jesus, Sabbataeus, Simon, Levi;
 49 sixth tribe: Judas, Joseph, Simon, Zachariah, Somoel, and Selemiah; •seventh tribe: Sabbataeus, Sedekiah, Jacob, Isaac, Jesias, Natthaeus; eighth tribe: Theodosius, Jason, Jesus, Theodotus, John, and Jonathan; ninth tribe: Theophilus, Abram, Arsam, Jason, 50 Endemias, and Daniel; •tenth tribe: Jeremiah, Eleazar, Zachariah, Baneas, Elissaeus, and Dathaeus; eleventh tribe: Samuel, Joseph, Judas, Jonathan, Chabeu,<sup>1</sup> and Dositheus; twelfth
 51 tribe: Isael, John, Theodosius, Arsamus, Abietes, and Ezekiel. Seventy-two in all. •The matters relating to the king’s letter received the aforementioned reply from Eleazar and his advisers.

Since I promised to give full details of the furnishings, I will now do so. The finished objects were conspicuous for their variety of craftsmanship; the king made a generous contribution and oversaw the craftsman in each case, so that they could not neglect anything 52 or finish it off thoughtlessly. First I will describe the details of the table. •The king’s main plan was to make the furnishing an object outstanding in its measurements, and commanded inquiries to be made of the local people concerning the size of the previous one set up in 53 the Temple at Jerusalem. •When they gave him the measurements he asked a further question, whether he should make it larger. Some of the priests and the others said that there was nothing to prevent this. The king replied that though he was quite willing to make it even five times as large in size, he hesitated in case it proved to be useless for the services;
 54 he not only chose, he said, that his gifts should be placed in that building, but would be much more pleased if the appointed ministers duly performed the appropriate rites upon the
 55 furnishings which he had provided. •Lack of money was not the reason he had made the measurements of the previously completed offerings short, but it is plain, he said, for what reason they were so constituted in their measurements. Had there been any (precise) order (to that effect) there would be nothing lacking now. Accordingly, we must not transgress
 56 nor overstep what is right and proper. •He commanded that the fullest use should be made of the variety of the arts, his intentions being pious in every respect, and having naturally a good eye for appreciating how things will look. In cases of unspecified items he commanded that they should make them with an eye to their beauty (not expense); in cases of specified items, measurements should tally with them.

57 Their finished work was two cubits in length, one and a half<sup>m</sup> in height; they made it solid all over with highly precious gold, by which I mean not just an outer covering of
 58 gold, but the plate itself superimposed. •They made the crown a palm’s radius in size; the moldings twined, with coiled work in low relief, the relief-work marvelously executed on 59 the three sides. (It formed a triangle.) •On each side the shape of the workmanship was identical in arrangement, so that whichever side it was turned, the appearance was identical,

i. See also vs. 46. This phrase, kaloí kai agathoi (lit. “beautiful and good”), expresses the Gk. ideal of manhood and is almost untranslatable.

j. Lit. “There are of the first tribe.”

k. The name of the sixth member from the fourth tribe is missing. “Chelkias” has been suggested.

l. “Chabeu” seems wrong. “Caleb” has been suggested.

m. The addition “and a half” comes from Josephus, Ant 12.64.

and when one side of the crown was placed downward the slope downward to the surface of the table kept its beautiful shape, and the outer slope was facing the view of anyone approaching it. •So the prominence of the two sloping sides stood out sharply, being raised high as we have said, and of triangular construction, whichever side it was turned. There were arrangements of precious stones upon it between the patterns of lines: Each overlapped the other, unsurpassed in craftsmanship. •They were all fastened through the holes with golden pins for safety. At the corners the clasps closed to keep them together. •On the sides on the crown all around as one looked at the top an ovate border had been fashioned set with precious stones, [in prominent relief]<sup>n</sup> with uninterrupted striped reliefs, closely connected with each other around the whole of the table. •Beneath the relief of the precious stones which made the (aforesaid) ovate border the craftsmen made a crown adorned with all sorts of fruit, preeminently conspicuous with grapes and ears of corn, also dates, apples, olives, pomegranates, and the like. Thus they fashioned the stones in the shape of the aforesaid fruits, in the color appropriate to each type, and then attached them with the golden band around the whole design of the table in profile. •After the disposition of the crown a similar arrangement had been designed to match the scheme of the border, and likewise the rest of the fluting and engraving, because the table had been made for use on both sides whichever side they began, so that the position of the moldings and of the crown matched the side where the feet were. •They made a solid metal plate over the whole breadth of the table, four fingers<sup>o</sup> deep, so that into it the feet fitted which had fasteners with holes for attaching under the crown to ensure its use whichever side they began. This is seen plainly on the outside, the construction being visible on both sides. •On the actual table they made an intricate pattern in relief with very costly stones in profusion in the middle, consisting of rubies of many types and emeralds, onyx also, and the other kinds conspicuous for their beauty. •After the arrangement of the (aforesaid) pattern there was superimposed a web with interstices, marvelously contrived, which made the central view rhomboid in shape; on it was put in relief a stone of crystal and what is called amber, providing the viewers with a sight beyond compare. •They made the feet with the capitals adorned with lilies, the lilies opening out underneath the table; the inside parts which could be seen they made with a real covering of gold leaf. •The support of the foot on the ground was adorned liberally with rubies, having an arrangement of a foot at the front, eight fingers wide. On it was placed all the stress of the foot. •They made a sprouting ivy cluster of stone entwined in acanthus, and surrounded all around the foot with a vine together with the grape clusters, all fashioned out of stone, as far as the head. The same pattern was applied to the four feet; everything was artistically contrived and introduced, uniformly showing preeminence of experience and art with an emphasis on realism, so that the arrangement of the leaves seemed actually to receive a movement of breath in the air fanning them. •Everything was modeled for realistic representation. They made the mouth of the table threefold, of three layers as it were, each layer fitted to each other with dovetailing joints through the thickness of the piece (of furniture): they made the joints so closely fitting as to be invisible and incapable of detection. The thickness of the whole table was not less than half a cubit, so that the whole piece weighed many talents. •For since the king had decided to add nothing to the measurements insofar as greater expenditure was required for making them bigger, he increased the number of talents' weight, and so in accordance with his purpose every detail was completed in an extraordinary and remarkable way, unparalleled in craftsmanship and outstanding in beauty. •Two of the drinking bowls were made of solid gold of overlapping design in relief from the base to the center, with very artistic joining together of the stones in the middle of the layers. •There was superimposed an intricate pattern a cubit high, incorporated into the design by intricate work in precious stones, exhibiting meticulous art combined with beauty. On this was fluting intermingled with circular patterns, giving a meshlike appearance as far as the mouth. •On the central part small bosses of stones, one group close to another, and of varied types, not less than four fingers in size, complemented the conspicuous beauty (of the whole). On the brim of the

n. The text here is corrupt. The general meaning is given, following Schmid's conjecture proochēs. "a prominent point," for prosochēs, "attention."

o. A "finger" is reckoned as equivalent to seven tenths of an inch, so that four fingers would be approximately three inches.

mouth shapes of lilies with flowers and interwoven clusters of grapes were fashioned all 76 around. •Such was the pattern of the golden (drinking bowls), holding above two<sup>p</sup> large measures. The silver ones had a smooth appearance, being a reflector marvelously adapted for this very effect, so that everything brought near it flashed more clearly than in mirrors.
 77 It is not, however, possible to relate the additional details added to give the impression of realism. When it was finished and the pieces put one upon another, that is to say a silver drinking bowl first, then a gold, then one in silver and one in gold, the overall effect of the sight was entirely beyond description, and even those who approached to view it were 78 unable to tear themselves away from the brilliance and delight in what they saw. •The living craftsmanship of the work now made visible was subtly diverse. As people looked at the actual furnishing in gold, a certain fascination ensued, coupled with awed amazement, as the attention concentrated on each artistic device in turn. And again, when anyone wanted to gaze at the arrangement of the silver, everything reflected all around, however one stood, and caused even greater amazement among the spectators. So that the manifold artistry of 79 the masterpieces was absolutely indescribable. •They engraved the golden goblets with crowns of grapes in the middle, and around the edges they plaited in relief a crown of ivy, myrtle, and olive, into which they inserted precious stones; the remaining carvings the craftsmen finished individually, competing with one another to do everything to the 80 preeminent glory of the king. •There was absolutely no work of art comparable in magnificence and craftsmanship, either in the royal treasuries or in any other. The king 81 took no small interest in the work, because of his dedication to works of art. •Many a time he laid aside public business and sat attentively among the craftsmen, in order that they might complete the work in a manner consistent with the place for which the entire enterprise was destined. So everything was done in solemnity and in a manner worthy of the king, 82 who sent (the gifts), and of the high priest, who presided over the place. •The number of the stones was without limit, and they were great in size, not less than five thousand in number. Everything was excellent in craftsmanship so that the gift of the stones and the actual artistic work was worth five times more than the gold.

83 I assumed that the description of these details was indispensable, so I have narrated it to you. What follows embraces the road to Eleazar that we took. First I will describe the layout of the whole countryside. When we approached near the site, we saw the city built in the midst of the whole land of the Jews, upon a hill which extended to a great height.
 84 On the top of the hill the Temple had been constructed, towering above all. There were three enclosing walls, over seventy cubits in size, the width being proportionate and the length of the equipment of the house likewise; everything was built with a magnificence 85 and expense which excelled in every respect. •It was obvious that the expenditure of money had been unrestricted upon the door, the fastenings upon it by the doorposts, and the 86 strength of the lintels. •The configuration of the veil was in respects very similar to the door furnishing, and most of all in view of continuous movement caused to the material by the undercurrent of the air. It was continuous because the undercurrent started from the bottom and the billowing extended<sup>q</sup> to the rippling at the top—the phenomenon making a pleasant and unforgettable spectacle.

87 The furnishing of the altar was constructed in a manner commensurate with the place and the sacrifices consumed in the fire, and that of the ascent to it likewise—the site had the ladder designed in a manner consistent with seamliness for the ministering priests swathed 88 up to the loins in “leather garments.” •The house faces east, and the rear of it faces west.
 The whole foundation was decked with (precious) stones and had slopes leading to the appropriate places for carrying the water which is (needed) for the cleansing of the blood from the sacrifices. (Many thousands<sup>r</sup> of animals are brought there in the festival days.)
 89 There is an uninterrupted supply not only of water, just as if there were a plentiful spring rising naturally from within, but also of indescribably wonderful underground reservoirs, which within a radius of five stades<sup>s</sup> from the foundation of the Temple revealed innumerable 90 channels for each of them, the streams joining together on each side. •All these were p. Perhaps about fifteen gallons. The Athenian measure held nine gallons; others five or six.

q. Adopting Schmidt's conjecture katateinein, “extend.”

r. Lit. “Many ten thousands.”

s. A stade is one eighth of a Roman mile, i.e. one eighth of 1,618 yards or approximately 200 yards.

covered with lead down to the foundation of the wall; on top of them a thick layer of pitch, all done very effectively. There were many mouths at the base, which were completely invisible except for those responsible for the ministry, so that the large amounts of blood which collected from the sacrifices were all cleansed by the downward pressure and 91 momentum. •Being personally convinced, I will describe the building plan of the reservoirs just as I understood it. They conducted me more than four stades outside the city, and told me to bend down at a certain spot and listen to the noise at the meeting of the waters. The result was that the size of the conduits became clear to me, as has been demonstrated.
 92 The ministering of the priests was absolutely unsurpassable in its vigor and the arrangement of its well-ordered silence: All work hard of their own accord, with much exertion, and each one looks after his appointed task. Their service is unremitting, sharing the sacrifices, some undertaking the carrying of wood, others oil, others wheat flour, others the sweet spices, others offering burnt offerings of the parts of the flesh—all of them exerting their
 93 strength in different ways. •They divide the legs of the bullocks with both hands, though they are more than two talents<sup>t</sup> in weight in almost every case, and then with an upward movement rip off with each hand in an amazing way a sufficiently large portion<sup>u</sup> with unerring accuracy.<sup>v</sup> The sheep and the goats are similarly treated in a remarkable way, weight and fat notwithstanding. Those whose concern it is choose in every case spotless
 94 specimens outstanding for fatness: Thus the aforesaid procedure is carried out. •They have a rest room set aside, where those who are resting sit down. When this happens, some of those who are rested stand up with alacrity, but no one orders the arrangements of their 95 ministry. •A general silence reigns, so that one might think that there was not a single man in the place although the number of ministers in attendance is more than seven hundred, in addition to a large number of the assistants bringing forward the animals for sacrifice:
 96 Everything is carried out with reverence and in a manner befitting supreme divinity. •It was an occasion of great amazement to us when we saw Eleazar engaged on his ministry, and all the glorious vestments, including the wearing of the "garment"<sup>w</sup> with precious stones upon it in which he is vested; golden bells surround the hem (at his feet) and make a very special sound. Alongside each of them are "tassels" adorned with "flowers," and of
 97 marvelous colors. •He was clad in an outstandingly magnificent "girdle," woven in the most beautiful colors. On his breast he wears what is called the "oracle," to which are attached "twelve stones" of different kinds, set in gold, giving the names of the patriarchs in what was the original order, each stone flashing its own natural distinctive color—quite 98 indescribable. •Upon his head he has what is called the "tiara," and upon this the inimitable "mitre," the hallowed diadem having in relief on the front in the middle in holy letters on a golden leaf the name of God, ineffable in glory. The wearer is considered worthy of such
 99 vestments at the services. •Their appearance makes one awe-struck and dumbfounded: A man would think he had come out of this world into another one. I emphatically assert that every man who comes near the spectacle of what I have described will experience 100 astonishment and amazement beyond words, his very being transformed by the hallowed arrangement on every single detail. •For the inspection of the entire scene we climbed the neighboring citadel, and viewed it from there. It is situated on a lofty site, fortified with a number of towers, which in their turn are built of sizable stones right up to the top, according 101 to our information, for the protection of the area around the Temple, •so that, in case of any assault or revolt or enemy attack, no one could force his way into the precincts surrounding the house. There were catapults in position upon the towers of the citadel and 102 a variety of engines; the place dominated the aforementioned precincts. •The towers were, so to speak, guarded by most trustworthy sentries who had given distinguished service to their country. They had no permit to leave the citadel, except at festivals, and then not as 103 a body: They did not allow a soul to enter. •In the case of any order from their commander to admit any visitors to watch, as for example in our case, they observed the order very strictly, very reluctantly admitting us, though only two in number and unarmed, to observe 104 the proceedings at the sacrifices. •Such a procedure was, they said, confirmed by oath, for every man had sworn that, in the necessary and solemn discharge of the matter according

t. The actual weight of a talent varied between fifty and eighty lbs.

u. Lit. "height."

v. Lit. "and they do not fail in the attempt."

w. Cf. Ex 28:4, 27-31.

to the oath,<sup>x</sup> they would not admit more than five persons at the same time, although they themselves were five hundred in number. The citadel, they said, provided the whole protection for the Temple, and its founder had in this way secured the advanced protection 105 for the places which we have described. •The size of the city is well proportioned, about forty stades in circumference, as far as one can estimate. The setting of its towers looks like a theater, and that of thoroughfares, too, which stand out, some set lower down, some higher up, all in the accustomed manner;<sup>y</sup> the same applies to the roads which cross them.
 106 Since the city is built on a hill, the layout of the terrain is sloping. •There are steps leading to the thoroughfares. Some people make their way above them, others go underneath them, their principal aim being to keep away from the main road for the sake of those who are 107 involved in purification rites, so as not to touch any forbidden object. •There was good reason for the building of the city by its pioneers in appropriate harmony, and their plan was a wise one. The terrain was ample and beautiful; parts were flat, such as the area around Samaria and the neighborhood of Idumaea; other parts were hilly, such as the neighborhood of Judea.<sup>z</sup> Continuous attention to husbandry and the care of the land is necessary, to ensure good yield as a result for the inhabitants. When this attention is paid,
 108 all farming is accompanied by abundant yield on all the aforesaid land. •In such of the cities as achieve large size and its accompanying prosperity, the result is abundance of population and neglect of the land, because everyone is bent on cultural delights, and the
 109 whole population in its philosophy is inclined to pleasure. •This is what happened with Alexandria, which excelled all cities in size and prosperity: Dwellers from the country
 110 migrated to that city and remained there, thus bringing agriculture into decline. •So the king, to prevent their settling, gave orders that their stay should not be longer than twenty days. To those also in charge of business matters he gave written instructions that, should it be necessary to summon anyone to attend, the matter should be dealt with in five days.
 111 As an indication of the importance he attached to this, he appointed officials<sup>a2</sup> and their staff by districts, to prevent the farmers and chief men of the city engaging in business,
 112 thus diminishing the treasury, that is to say the profits of farming. •We have made this digression because Eleazar has traced out the aforementioned facts for us so well. The zeal of the farmers is indeed remarkable. In fact their land is thickly covered with large numbers of olive trees and corn crops and pulse, and moreover with vines and abundant honey. As for the fruit trees and date palms which they have, no number can be given. They have 113 many flocks and herds of various kinds, with ample pasture for them. •So they perceived clearly that the areas needed to be well populated, and designed the city and the villages
 114 accordingly. •A large quantity of spices and precious stones and gold is brought to the area by means of the Arabs. The land is agricultural and well fitted also for commerce; the city
 115 is the home of many crafts, and there is no lack of goods imported from overseas, •because of its convenient harbors which supply them, such as Ascelon, Joppa, and Gaza, and also Ptolemais,<sup>b2</sup> which the king founded in a central situation in regard to the aforementioned places, not far away from them. The district is well watered everywhere, has everything in 116 abundance, and is very secure. •The river Jordan flows around it and never dries up. The land originally measured not less than sixty million acres;<sup>c2</sup> subsequently, neighboring peoples overran it. Six hundred thousand<sup>d2</sup> settlers were established upon it, each having one hundred acres. As the river rises, like the Nile, in the days approaching harvest, it
 117 waters much of the land, •discharging its waters into another river in the region of Ptolemais, which in turn flows into the sea. Other torrents, as they are called, also flow down, covering 118 the parts toward Gaza and the district of Azotus. •The countryside is surrounded with natural defenses, being difficult to invade and not negotiable for large numbers because of the narrow approaches, with overhanging precipices and deep ravines, and the whole mountainous

x. Translating with Mendelssohn, horkismon, "oath"; the Gk. MSS read horismon, "a fixed course."

y. The conjecture of Redpath, accepted by Thackeray.
 z. The text is incomplete here. This is Thackeray's emendation.

a2. A technical term; these officials may be compared loosely with the judges of an assembly.

b2. These are extravagant claims, if they imply that these harbors were permanent Jewish possessions. The abundance of water (116f.) is also exaggerated.

c2. Lit. "six thousand ten thousands aroura." The aroura was approximately the size of the Roman jugerum (two thirds of an acre). Contrast Josephus, Apion 1.195 (quoting Hecataeus), according to which the area of Palestine is "about three million arourae."

d2. Lit. "sixty ten thousands."

119 surroundings of the entire area being very rugged. •It used to be said that copper and iron mines were formerly sunk in the neighboring hills of Arabia, but in the time of the Persian supremacy they were abandoned because of the false allegation by the responsible authorities 120 of the time that their working was unprofitable and very expensive. •The purpose of closure was also to prevent the resulting ruination of the countryside by the working of the aforesaid mines, and even perhaps its alienation through their tyranny, because they had seized the pretext of moving into the mining areas on account of this allegation which had been made.

I have explained to you in summary form, brother Philocrates, as much as was needful
121 concerning these matters, and we will next expound details of the translation. •Eleazar selected men of the highest merit and of excellent education due to the distinction of their parentage; they had not only mastered the Jewish literature, but had made a serious study
122 of that of the Greeks as well. •They were therefore well qualified for the embassy, and brought it to fruition as occasion demanded; they had a tremendous natural facility for the negotiations and questions arising from the Law, with the middle way as their commendable ideal; they forsook any uncouth and uncultured attitude of mind; in the same way they rose above conceit and contempt of other people, and instead engaged in discourse and listening to and answering each and every one, as is meet and right. They all observed these aims, and went further in wishing to excel each other in them; they were, one and all, worthy of 123 their leader and his outstanding qualities. •It was possible to perceive how inseparable was their attachment to Eleazar, and his to them. In addition to writing to the king concerning their reestablishment, he urged Andreas to take many<sup>e2</sup> active steps to this end, asking him
124 to collaborate to the utmost extent of our ability. •We affirmed that we would pay good heed to these matters, to which he replied that he was very apprehensive, because he knew that the king, out of his love of culture, considered it of supreme importance to bring to his court any man, wherever he might be found,<sup>f2</sup> of outstanding culture and prudence
125 which excelled his contemporaries. •I understand too that he made the noble statement that by having at his court men of integrity and wisdom he would provide the greatest protection for his kingdom; this was the frank advice given him by his friends for his benefit. The 126 point is amply confirmed in the delegates whom he sent. •(Eleazar) also affirmed on oath that he would not permit the men to leave if any other consideration militated against his own personal advantage; he was only dispatching them for the common improvement of all
127 the citizens. •The good life, he said, consisted in observing the laws, and this aim was achieved by hearing much more than by reading. By these pronouncements and others similar to them he clearly showed his attitude toward them.

128 It is worthwhile mentioning briefly his intimations in reply to the questions raised through us. It is my opinion that mankind as a whole shows a certain amount of concern for the parts of their legislation concerning meats and drink and beasts considered to be unclean.
129 For example, we inquired why, since there is one creation only, some things are considered unclean for eating, others for touching—legislation being scrupulous in most matters, but
130 in these especially so. In reply, he began as follows: •“You observe,” he said, “the important matter raised by modes of life and relationships, inasmuch as through bad relationships men become perverted, and are miserable their whole life long; if, however, they mix with wise and prudent companions, they rise above ignorance and achieve progress 131 in life. •First, our lawgiver gave express commands relating to religious observance and justice, and issued precise sets of instructions about them, not only negatively but positively, together with the manifest damages and the visitations sent by God upon the guilty.”
132 (Eleazar) began first of all by demonstrating that God is one, that his power is shown in everything, every place being filled with his sovereignty, and that none of the things on earth which men do secretly are hidden from him, but rather that all the deeds of any man
133 are manifest to him, as well as that which is to come to pass. •So by establishing these matters accurately and setting them out plainly, he demonstrated that even if a man thinks of doing evil he would not escape, let alone after the deed is done—thus indicating the 134 power of God through the entire legislation. •This was his introduction: He proceeded to show that all the rest of mankind (“except ourselves,” as he said) believe that there are

e2. Translating polla, “many things,” with poiēsai. “he made many representations to . . .”
“to do.” With parekalese, “he exhorted,” it would read, f2. Lit. “named.”

many gods, because men themselves are much more powerful than the gods whom they 135 vainly worship; •they make images of stone and wood, and declare that they are likenesses of those who have made some beneficial discovery for their living, and whom they worship, 136 even though the insensibility (of the images) is close at hand to appreciate. •For if the existence of any god<sup>g2</sup> depended on the criterion of invention, it would be absolutely foolish, because in that case the inventors would have taken some of the created things and given an added demonstration of their usefulness without themselves being their creators. Therefore 137 it is profitless and useless to deify equals. •And yet, even today, there are many of greater inventiveness and learning than the men of old, who nevertheless would be the first to worship them. Those who have invented these fabrications and myths are usually ranked to 138 be the wisest of the Greeks. •There is surely no need to mention the rest of the very foolish people, Egyptians and those like them, who have put their confidence in beasts and most of the serpents and monsters, worship them, and sacrifice to them both while alive and 139 dead. •In his wisdom the legislator, in a comprehensive survey of each particular part, and being endowed by God for the knowledge of universal truths, surrounded us with unbroken<sup>h2</sup> palisades and iron walls to prevent our mixing with any of the other peoples in any matter, being thus kept pure in body and soul, preserved from false beliefs, and worshiping the 140 only God omnipotent over all creation. •Hence the leading priests among the Egyptians, conducting many close investigations and with practical experience of affairs, gave us the title "men of God," which is ascribed exclusively to those who worship the true God, and not to those who are concerned with meat and drink and clothes, their whole attitude (to 141 life) being concentrated on these concerns. •Such concerns are of no account among the people of our race, but throughout the whole of their lives their main objective is concerned 142 with the sovereignty of God. •So, to prevent our being perverted by contact with others or by mixing with bad influences, he hedged us in on all sides with strict observances<sup>i2</sup> connected with meat and drink and touch and hearing and sight, after the manner of the 143 Law. •In general everything is similarly constituted in regard to natural reasoning, being governed by one supreme power, and in each particular everything has a profound reason for it, both the things from which we abstain in use and those of which we partake. For 144 illustration I will briefly give you one or two examples. •Do not take the contemptible view that Moses enacted this legislation because of an excessive preoccupation with mice and weasels or suchlike creatures. The fact is that everything has been solemnly set in order for 145 unblemished investigation and amendment of life for the sake of righteousness. •The birds which we use are all domesticated and of exceptional cleanliness, their food consisting of wheat and pulse—such birds as pigeons, turtledoves, locusts, partridges, and, in addition, 146 geese and others of the same kind. •As to the birds which are forbidden, you will find wild and carnivorous kinds, and the rest which dominate by their own strength, and who find their food at the expense of the aforementioned domesticated birds—which is an injustice; and not only that, they also seize lambs and kids and outrage human beings dead or alive.
 147 By calling them impure, he has thereby indicated that it is the solemn binding duty of those for whom the legislation has been established to practice righteousness and not to lord it over anyone in reliance upon their own strength, nor to deprive him of anything, but to govern their lives righteously, in the manner of the gentle creatures among the aforementioned birds which feed on those plants which grow on the ground and do not exercise a domination 148 leading to the destruction of their fellow creatures. •By means of creatures like this the legislator has handed down (the lesson) to be noted by men of wisdom, that they should be righteous, and not achieve anything by brute force, nor lord it over others in reliance upon 149 their own strength. •In cases where it is not meet even to touch any of the aforesaid creatures because of their natural habits with other creatures, surely all possible precautions must be 150 taken to prevent (human) morals degenerating to their level? •Everything pertaining to conduct permitted us toward these creatures and toward beasts has been set out symbolically.
 Thus the cloven hoof, that is the separation of the claws of the hoof, is a sign of setting 151 apart each of our actions for good, •because the strength of the whole body with its action

g2. Thackeray's emendation Theos eiē, "a god may be"; the Gk. MSS have theiē.

h2. Or "unbreakable."

i2. Lit. "purities" or "purifications."

rests upon the shoulders and the legs.<sup>j2</sup> The symbolism<sup>k2</sup> conveyed by these things compels us to make a distinction in the performance of all our acts, with righteousness as our aim.

152 This moreover explains why we are distinct from all other men. •The majority of other men defile themselves in their relationships, thereby committing a serious offense, and lands and whole cities take pride in it: they not only procure<sup>l2</sup> the males, they also defile mothers and

153 daughters. We are quite separated from these practices. •The man with whom the aforesaid manner of disposition is concerned is the man on whom the legislator has also stamped that of memory. For example, all cloven-footed creatures and ruminants quite clearly express,

154 to those who perceive it, the phenomenon of memory. •Rumination is nothing but the recalling of (the creature's) life and constitution, life being usually constituted by nourishment.

155 So we are exhorted through scripture<sup>m2</sup> also by the one who says thus, "Thou shalt remember the Lord, who did great and wonderful deeds in thee." When they are (really) understood they are manifestly "great and glorious"; first, there is the construction of the

156 body, the digestion of the food, and the specific function connected with each limb. •Much more, the orderly arrangement of the senses, the operation and unseen activity of the mind, and the speed of its reaction to each stimulus and its invention of arts and crafts involves

157 an infinite variety of methods. •So he exhorts us to remember how the aforesaid blessings are maintained and preserved by divine power under his providence, for he has ordained every time and place for a continual reminder of the supreme God and upholder (of all).

158 Accordingly in the matter of meats and drinks he commands men to offer first fruits and to consume<sup>n2</sup> them there and then straightaway. Furthermore in our clothes he has given us a distinguishing mark as a reminder, and similarly on our gates and doors he has commanded

159 us to set up the "Words,"<sup>o2</sup> so as to be a reminder of God. •He also strictly commands that the sign shall be worn on our hands,<sup>p2</sup> clearly indicating that it is our duty to fulfill every activity with justice, having in mind our own condition, and above all the fear of God.

160 He also commands that "on going to bed and rising" men should meditate on the ordinances of God, observing not only in word but in understanding the movement and impression which they have when they go to sleep, and waking too, what a divine change there is

161 between them—quite beyond understanding. •I have already demonstrated to you the extraordinary nature of the sound reason behind our distinctive characteristic of memory when we expounded the cloven hoof and chewing the cud. It is no chance accident that it has been ordained as part of our very soul; but it is bound up with truth and the expression

162 of the right reason. •After prescribing each set of regulations concerning meats and drinks and matters relating to touch, he commands that no act be done nor word be heard to no purpose and that no use should be made of the power of the (spoken) word to incline toward

163 injustice. •The same principle can be found in the case of beasts, because the character of "weasels," and "mice," and all creatures like them which have been described is

164 mischievous. •Mice pollute and defile everything not only for their own nourishment, but also to the extent of rendering absolutely useless for human beings everything which comes

165 their way to defile. •The species of weasel is unique: Apart from the aforementioned characteristic, it has another polluting feature, that of conceiving through its ears and

166 producing its young through its mouth. •So for this reason any similar feature in men is unclean; men who hear anything and give physical expression to it by word of mouth, thus embroiling other people in evil, commit no ordinary act of uncleanness, and are themselves completely defiled with the taint of impiety. Your king's action in removing such people—

167 for so we are informed—is amply justified. •I said, "You refer to informers, I suppose, for he systematically imposes upon them punishment and painful death." "Indeed I do refer

168 to them," he replied. "Being on the lookout to murder men is unholy. •Our Law forbids harming anyone in thought or in deed. I have therefore given a brief résumé of these matters, indicating further to you that all the regulations have been made with righteousness in mind,

j2. The underlying thought here is that the cloven, separate hoof is symbolic of the Jews and of their being separate and distinct from other people.

k2. The text is corrupt: Thackeray's suggestion ho semeioutai, "he signifies by symbols," is adopted here.

l2. Thackeray adopts Schmidt's emendation proagousi, "they procure."

m2. I.e. the OT.

n2. The text is corrupt, but the meaning is clear.

o2. Namely "of the Law." This is perhaps the earliest use of "Words" in this manner. Cf. Pelletier, Lettre d'Aristée, ad loc.

p2. Perhaps a reference of "phylacteries."

and that no ordinances have been made in scripture without purpose or fancifully, but to the intent that through the whole of our lives we may also practice justice to all mankind in our acts, remembering the all-sovereign God. •In the matter of meats, the unclean reptiles, the beasts, the whole underlying rationale is directed toward righteousness and righteous human relationships.” •In my view, he habitually made out a good case for each separate category. For example, in the case of victims offered, calves, rams, and goats, he stated that it was our duty to take them from our herds and flocks, thus sacrificing domestic animals, but not a wild one, to prevent those who offer sacrifices being conscious in themselves of any excess, seeing that they follow the symbol of their legislator. Thus the man who offers the sacrifice makes an offering of every facet of his being.<sup>q2</sup> •Indeed, I consider that, on these matters, details of our way of life are worth narrating. Wherefore, in view of your love of learning, I have been induced, Philocrates, to expound to you the solemnity and characteristic outlook of the Law.

Eleazar offered sacrifice, selected the men, and made ready an abundance of gifts for the king. He then sent us forth on our journey with a large escort. •When we reached Alexandria, news of our arrival was given to the king. Andreas and I were introduced<sup>r2</sup> to the court, we paid our warm respects to the king, and presented the letters from Eleazar. •The king was anxious to meet the members of the deputation, so he gave orders to dismiss all the other court officials, and to summon these delegates. •The unprecedented nature of this step was very clear to all, because it was an established procedure that important bona fide visitors should be granted an audience with the king only four days after arrival,<sup>s2</sup> while representatives of kings or important cities are rarely admitted to the court within thirty days. However, he deemed the present arrivals to be deserving of greater honor, having regard to the preeminence of him who had sent them. So he dismissed all the officials whom he considered superfluous and remained walking among the delegates until he had greeted the whole delegation. •So they arrived with the gifts which had been sent at their hands and with the fine skins on which the Law had been written in letters of gold in Jewish characters; the parchment had been excellently worked, and the joining together of the letters was imperceptible. When the king saw the delegates, he proceeded to ask questions about the books, •and when they had shown what had been covered and unrolled the parchments, he paused for a long time, did obeisance about seven times, and said, “I offer to you my thanks, gentlemen, and to him who sent you even more, and most of all to the God whose oracles these are.” •They all, visitors and the court present alike, said together and with one voice, “It is well, O King.” At this the king was moved to tears, so deeply was he filled with joy. Intensity of feeling coupled with the greatness of the honor received do force men to tears in the moment of success. •The king commanded the parcels to be returned in order, and then immediately greeted the delegates with these words: “It is (meet and) right, O men of God, first to render homage to the documents for the sake of which I have sent for you, and after that to extend to you the right hand of greeting. This explains my first action. •I regard this day of your arrival as of great importance, and it shall be specially marked year by year throughout the time of our life, for by a happy chance it coincides with our victory at sea against Antigonus.<sup>t2</sup> It will therefore be my wish to dine with you this day. •Everything of which you partake,” he said, “will be served in compliance with your habits; it will be served to me as well as to you.” They expressed their pleasure and the king ordered the finest apartments to be given them near the citadel, and the preparations for the banquet to be made.

The chief steward<sup>u2</sup> Nicanor summoned Dorotheus, who was appointed in charge of these matters,<sup>v2</sup> and bade him complete preparations for each guest. “These,” he said, “are the king’s orders; some of them you still see now.” The number of prominent delegates

q2. Lit. “soul.”

r2. Thackeray accepts Schmidt’s conjecture pareimen-oi, “being introduced,” for the corrupt pareimen, “we may be present,” or parēmen, “we were present,” of the Gk. MSS.

s2. Lit. “on the fifth day.”

t2. There are two battles to which reference may be made, one c. 260 B.C. and one c. 245 B.C. However, according to LetAris, vs. 41, Eleazar wrote to Queen Arsinoe, who died in 269 B.C.

u2. A conjecture of Letronne adopted by Thackeray and Pelletier.

v2. Or “these men,” but less probable in view of vs. 183 below.

corresponds to the number of cities, all having the same customs in matters of drink and food and bedding. All preparations were made in accordance with these customs, so that when they came in the presence of the kings they would have a happy visit, with no cause 183 for complaint. •This was their experience. Dorotheus, who had the charge of such matters, was a most punctilious man. He arranged all the furniture of which he had charge, all reserved for this type of reception. He set out the couches in two lines, in accordance with the royal command, because the king had ordered that half should sit at his right hand, and the rest behind his royal couch, leaving no stone unturned in his desire to do these delegates
 184 honor. •When they had taken their places, he ordered Dorotheus to carry everything out in accordance with the customs practiced by all his visitors from Judea. So Dorotheus passed over the sacred heralds, the sacrificial ministers and the rest, whose habitual role was to offer the prayers. Instead, he invited Eleazar, “the oldest of the priests, our guests,” 185 offer a prayer. He stood and spoke these memorable words: •“May the almighty God fill you, O King, with all the blessings which he has created—and may he grant you, your wife, and children, and those of the same mind to enjoy all blessings without end all the 186 days of your life.” •At these words from this man thunderous applause broke out with cries and rapturous joy, lasting a long time. Then they straightway turned to the enjoyment provided by the foods which had been made ready, all the service being carried out through the organization of Dorotheus, including the royal pages and the king’s honored guests.

187 When after an interval he found an opportunity, (the king) asked the occupant of the first couch (they were seated according to age), “How can one keep his kingdom without offense
 188 to the end?” •After a short pause he replied, “You would administer it best by imitating the eternal goodness of God. By using longsuffering and treatment<sup>w2</sup> of those who merit<sup>x2</sup> (punishment) more leniently than they deserve, you will convert them from evil and bring 189 them to repentance.” •The king commended the answer and asked the next guest, “How should one act in each case?” The reply was, “If he practiced just dealing toward all, he will perform each task well for himself, believing that every thought is manifest to God.
 190 Take the fear of God as your guiding principle, and you will not fail in anything.” •He received him warmly and asked another guest, “How can one make his friends like himself?” He replied, “If your friends saw that you showed intense concern for the people whom you rule. This you will do by observing how God blesses the human race, giving 191 them health and food and all other gifts in their season.” •He commended him, and asked the next guest, “How in his dealings and judgments can one gain the approbation even of those who lose their cases?” The reply was, “If you are fair to all in what you say, and if 192 you take no action arrogantly or in your own strength against wrongdoers. •This you will achieve if you have regard to the method of God. For the prayers of the deserving are fulfilled, but to those who fail, either through visions or acts, that which is harmful to them is demonstrated, for God does not smite them in proportion to their offenses nor by the 193 greatness of his strength, but exercises clemency.” •(The king) highly approved this guest also, and asked the next guest, “How then can one be undefeated in the necessities of war?” To which he replied, “If he did not place his confidence in his numbers and his forces, but continually invoked God to direct his enterprises aright as he dealt justly in 194 everything.” •He commended this guest also, and asked the next one, “How can one be respected by his enemies?” The reply was, “If in spite of deploying his great array of arms and forces, he knew that these things are useless in bringing anything to a lasting conclusion. For God by granting a truce and thus demonstrating the fear of his power implants it in 195 every breast.” •He commended this guest also, and said to the next, “What would be for you (lit. him) the supreme blessing for living?” The reply was, “To know that God is Lord over all, and that we do not ourselves direct our plans in the finest of actions, but God brings to completion the affairs of all men and guides (them) with (his) sovereign power.”
 196 He acknowledged to this guest also that he spoke well, and asked the next guest, “Supposing one observed all (these principles) in their entirety, how can one transmit the same attitude to his descendants in the end?” His reply was, “By continual prayer to God that he may

w2. A rare word, blimadzōn, “inflicting punishment.” Zuntz, followed by Pelletier, conjectured koladzōn, “punishing,” but the Gk. MSS are unanimous.

x2. Lit. “worthy,” i.e. of punishment. The Gk. MSS are virtually unanimous here. Zuntz conjectures aitious, “guilty,” which clarifies the text but is hardly necessary.

receive good designs for what is to be done, and by exhorting his descendants not to be dazzled by fame or riches—the bestower of these things is God himself, and men do not 197 have excess of anything through their own merits.” •(The king) commended these sentiments and inquired of the next guest, “How can one endure with equanimity what happens?” His reply was, “Only if you adopted as a basic principle that all men have been created by God to share the greatest ills as well as the greatest blessings, and that it is impossible, being a man, to be without some of both. But God, to whom we must pray, gives good 198 courage.” •He was pleased with this guest too, and said that everyone gave good answers. “I will question yet one more,” (he said), “after which I will cease for the time being, so that we can turn our attention to enjoying (the banquet) and pass the time pleasantly. In the 199 next six days following I will learn a little more from the others in turn.” •Then he asked the (next) man, “What is the boundary of courage?” The reply was, “If the intent were rightly accomplished as planned in acts involving risks. If your intentions are honorable, O
200 King, everything is brought to pass advantageously for you by God.” •All the assembled company acclaimed and applauded loudly, and the king said to the philosophers, of whom there were many among them, “I think that these men excel in virtue and have a fuller understanding, because when asked questions of this sort unexpectedly they give appropriate 201 answers, all making God the basis of their argument.” •The philosopher Menedemus of Eritrea said, “Yes, indeed, O King, for since the whole universe is governed by providence, and on the correct assumption that man is a creature of God, it follows that all power and 202 beauty of argument has its origin in God.” •The king agreed, and this questioning ceased. They then turned to the enjoyment of the feast, and the banquet came to an end when the evening had come.

203 On the day afterward the seating and banqueting arrangements were again carried out in the same order. When the king considered it opportune to put some questions to the men, 204 he proceeded to ask the neighbors of those who had answered on the previous day. •He began a dialogue with the eleventh. (On the previous day ten had been questioned.) When 205 silence reigned he inquired, “How can (one) remain rich?” •After a short pause the guest who received the question said, “If he did nothing outrageous or unworthy of his sovereignty, and did not by his spending contribute to vain and pointless objectives, while at the same time by well-doing attracting the goodwill of his subjects toward him. For the source of 206 blessings to everyone is God himself, who must be followed.” •The king commended this man and asked the next guest, “How can one maintain the truth?” The answer to this was, “By realizing that the lie brings terrible disgrace upon every man, and much more so upon kings. For if they have the power to do what they wish, what reason would they have for telling lies? It is your duty, O King, to accept this further principle that God loves the 207 truth.” •He warmly approved this man also, and looking closely at the next guest said, “What does wisdom teach?” This next guest replied, “Insofar as you do not wish evils to come upon you, but to partake of every blessing, (it would be wisdom) if you put this into practice with your subjects, including the wrongdoers, and if you admonished the good and 208 upright also mercifully. For God guides all men in mercy.” •The king commended him (for his answer) and said to the guest after him, “How might one be a friend of man?” He replied, “By observing that the human race increases and is created over many years and in painful suffering, so that it is your duty neither to inflict punishments easily nor to submit men to torments, knowing that the life of mankind is constituted in pain and punishment. If you bear in mind each set of facts, you will be inclined to mercy, even as God is 209 merciful.” •(The king) welcomed this man’s answer and inquired of the next guest, “What is the most needful characteristic of kingship?” The reply was, “That (the king) should keep himself incorruptible, practice moderation throughout all his life, respect justice beyond
210 all else, and cultivate such men as friends, because God himself loves justice.” •He commended this guest also, and said to his neighbor, “What is the essence of godliness?” He replied, “The realization that God is continually at work in everything and is omniscient, and that man cannot hide from him an unjust deed or an evil action. For, as God does good 211 to the whole world, so you by imitating him would be without offense.” •(The king) agreed with him and said to the next guest, “What is the definition of kingship?” The reply was, “Real self-mastery, not being carried away by wealth and glamour, nor having, as a result, overweening or unworthy ambitions—(that would be kingship) if you reasoned well. You have everything you need<sup>y2</sup> at hand. God likewise does not want anything and yet is merciful. You too must think in human terms, do not desire overmuch, but only what is sufficient for reigning.” •He complimented him, and asked the next guest, “How would one think the finest thoughts?” He replied, “By setting justice before him continually in everything, and thinking that injustice is negation of life. For God always provides for the just the greatest blessings.” •He commended this guest and said to the next, “How can one sleep undisturbed?” He replied, “You have asked a question on a matter which is difficult to answer, because self-consciousness is impossible in this realm of sleep, and we are confined in this sphere to a sensation which goes beyond the rational. •Deep down in us, our experience of the things that happen (in sleep) is just as if they were actually seen; nevertheless we are irrational insofar as we imagine that we are on the sea and in boats, or that we are carried aloft on wings and fly to other places, and other suchlike things, and we think this is really happening.<sup>z2</sup> •I have stated this as clearly as I can. In every respect, O King, I beg you to lift up your words and actions to reverence for God, so that your conscience may be quite clear that you are following the path of virtue. Do not deliberately show favors unreasonably, nor destroy justice in your exercise of power. •For the most part, indeed, the matters which occupy each man in his waking hours are those on which the mind dwells in sleep as well, and God<sup>a3</sup> directs a man’s every thought and action, awake or asleep, when aimed at the highest (goals). Hence the stability which continually surrounds you.” •(The king) complimented this guest also, and said to the next one, “Since you are the tenth one to answer we will turn our attention to dinner (after this question).” So he asked him, “How can we avoid doing anything unworthy of ourselves?” •The reply was, “Always have an eye to your glory and prominence, so that you may say and think what is consistent with it, knowing that all your subjects have you in mind and speak of you. •You must really be not the least among the actors! They observe the character which they have to portray and do all their actions consistently with it. Yours however is no acting role, you are really a king, God having granted you authority as your manner deserves.” The king responded with prolonged hearty and genial applause, after which they invited the guests to sleep. When he had finished entertaining them, they turned (their) attention to the next day’s arrangements for the banquet.

On the next day, the same arrangement was made, and when the king deemed it an appropriate time to ask the guests questions, he asked the first of those left over for subsequent questioning, “What is the highest form of sovereignty?” •He replied, “Control of oneself, and not being carried away by one’s impulses.” He said that it was quite natural for all men to incline their thoughts in one direction (or another). •“The majority are likely to incline toward things to eat and drink and pleasure, but kings toward territorial conquest, depending on the greatness of their standing. And yet, in everyone moderation is a good thing. What therefore God gives you, take and keep; do not covet the unattainable.” •(The king) was pleased with this reply and said to the next guest, “How could one be free from envy?” After a pause he replied, “First of all, by realizing that God assigns glory and greatness of wealth to kings, each and every one, and that no king is independent. All of them wish to share this glory, but they cannot—it is a gift of God.” •(The king) gave a long commendation to this guest, and asked the next, “How can one despise his enemies?” He replied, “By practicing goodwill to all men and by forming friendships, you would owe no obligation to anyone. To practice goodwill to all men, and to receive a handsome gift from God—this is the highest good.” •He approved these words, and bade the next guest answer, asking him, “How can one maintain the honor he received?” The reply was, “If by earnestness and favors he showed munificence and liberality toward others, he would never lack honor. Pray God continually that these qualities which I have mentioned may abide with you.” •He complimented him, and asked the next guest, “To whom must a man be generous?” “It is a man’s duty,” he replied, “(to be generous) toward those who are amicably disposed to us. That is the general opinion. My belief is that we must (also) show liberal charity to our opponents so that in this manner we may convert them to what

y2. I adopt Wendland’s conjecture hosa deon, “as much as is needed.”

z2. The text is here manifestly corrupt. Thackeray’s conjecture is translated to provide the sense of the passage.

a3. Thackeray’s conjecture theos, “God,” is here translated; so also “awake,” i.e. egrēgorotos, for the adverbial form, egrēgorōs, in the Gk. MSS.

is proper and fitting to them. You must pray God that these things be brought to pass, for he rules the minds of all.” •(The king) consented to these words, and asked the sixth guest to answer. His question was, “To whom must one show favor?” The answer was, “To his parents, always, for God’s very great commandment concerns the honor due to parents. Next (and closely connected) he reckons the honor due to friends, calling the friend an equal of one’s own self. You do well if you bring all men into friendship with yourself.”

229 (The king) commended this guest too, and inquired of the next one, “What deserves to be regarded as beauty?” He replied, “Piety, for this is a preeminent form of beauty. Its dynamic is love, a divine gift which you too have acquired, including in it all blessings.”

230 (The king) applauded him very warmly and said to his neighbor, “How can one after a false step recover once more the same glory?” The reply was, “For you, a fall is impossible, because you have bestowed on everyone favors which produce goodwill, and this, because it is stronger than the greatest of weapons, produces the greatest security. •If, however, some do slip, they must avoid in future the course of action which caused their fall, win friends, and act justly. It is a gift of God to be a doer of good works and not of the opposite.” •He was pleased with these words, and said to the next guest, “How can (one) be free from sorrow?” The reply was, “By pursuing righteousness, doing no harm to anyone, and helping everyone. The fruits of righteousness make for freedom from sorrow.

233 You must,” he said, “pray God that harm may not come to you from occurrences inconsistent with our conduct—I mean, death, disease, pain, and suchlike. As for you, God

234 fearing as you are, none of these evils would befall you.” •(The king) praised him generously and asked the tenth guest, “What is the highest form of glory?” The reply was, “Honoring God. This is not done with gifts or sacrifices, but with purity of heart and of devout disposition, as everything is ordained by God and ordered according to his will. This is also your attitude, evidence of which can be seen by all from your past and present

235 accomplishments.” •With a loud voice the king complimented and encouraged them all; the audience raised their voices in approval, and especially the philosophers, for these men far surpassed them in attitudes and eloquence, their starting point being God himself. After this the king led the way in showing goodwill to them in the toasts.

236 On the following day the arrangements for the banquet were the same as before, and when it seemed suitable to the king he began to question the guests next to those who had already replied, and said to the first, “Can (practical) wisdom be taught?” The reply was, “It is a disposition of the soul, mediated by the power of God, to accept everything of

237 beauty, and to reject its opposite.” •He concurred, and proceeded to ask the next guest, “What makes the greatest contribution to health?” He replied, “Self-control, which it is

238 impossible to achieve unless God disposes the heart and mind<sup>b3</sup> toward it.” •(The king) congratulated this guest, and said to the next, “How can one show toward his parents the gratitude which they deserve?” The reply was, “By causing them no pain—which is

239 impossible unless God guides the mind<sup>c3</sup> toward the noblest ends.” •He nodded approval of this man, and asked the next guest, “How can one be an attentive listener?” He replied, “By perceiving that all knowledge is of value, so that in the face of events a man can select one of the lessons he has heard, counteract the immediate situation and so remedy it<sup>d3</sup> with the guidance of God—this means that the fulfillment of our deeds comes through him.”

240 (The king) commended this man, and said to the next, “How can one avoid doing anything contrary to the Law?” To this he replied, “By realizing that God has given to legislators

241 the purpose of saving men’s lives, you would follow them.” •(The king) approved this guest, and said to the next, “What is the value of the family?” He replied, “If we think that we are afflicted by adverse circumstances, and suffer as they do, the great strength of

242 the family bond is manifest, •and when that trouble is over, glory and success will be ours in the eyes of such folk, for cooperation when given with goodwill is of itself indestructible in the face of everything; with prosperity, there is no further need of their help, except that

243 you must pray God to bestow every blessing.” •(The king) gave him the same welcome as the others, and then asked another guest, “How does fearlessness come about?” He replied, “When the mind is conscious that it has done no evil, for God directs men toward good

b3. “Heart and mind” is an attempt to bring out the meaning of one Gk. word, dianoian.

c3. See previous n.

d3. The text is uncertain but the meaning is clear.

244 deliberations on everything.” •(The king) approved this man and said to the next, “How can one have the right reasoning at hand?” He replied, “By always having an eye to the misfortunes of mankind, knowing that God takes away prosperity (from some) while 245 magnifying others and promoting them to receive honor.” •(The king) warmly approved this man also, and asked the next guest to answer, “How can one avoid having recourse to idleness and pleasures?” “By having in the forefront of his mind,” he said, “that he rules a large kingdom and leads many people, and it is his duty not to have his mind centered on anything else but thinking of their care. He should ask God that no part of his duties be 246 lacking.” •(The king) commended this man also and asked the tenth guest, “How can one recognize those who are acting falsely toward him?” The reply to this question was, “By observing whether their conduct was generous, and whether their orderly behavior persisted in the greetings and consultations and the rest of the social life of his companions; and (seeing that) they do not go beyond the proper limit in their entertainments and the other 247 features of their conduct. •God will direct your mind, O King, to the noblest ends.” He applauded them all and congratulated them by name; the company present followed suit, and so they turned to celebrations.

248 On the following day (the king) seized the opportunity and asked the next guest, “What is the worst (type of) neglect?” To this he replied, “If a man were neglectful of children, and did not use every endeavor to bring them up. For we continually pray to God for ourselves as also for our children, that all blessings may rest upon them. The petition that children may have some discretion is something which comes to pass only by the power of 249 God.” •(The king) said that he spoke well, and asked another guest, “How can one be a patriot?” He replied, “By adopting the view that it is a noble thing to live and to die in one’s own country. A foreign country produces for the poor contempt, and for the rich disgrace, as for men exiled for crimes. By doing good to all, while you continually carry out this policy, you will undoubtedly be a patriot, God giving you favor in the sight of 250 all.” •He heard this man, and then asked the next guest in order, “How can one reach agreement with a woman?” “By recognizing,” he replied, “that the female sex is bold, positively active for something which it desires, easily liable to change its mind because of poor reasoning powers, and of naturally weak constitution. It is necessary to have dealings
 251 with them in a sound way, avoiding provocation which may lead to a quarrel. •Life prospers when the helmsman knows the goal to which he must make the passage. Life is completely 252 steered by invocation of God.” •(The king) gave assent to this man, and asked the next guest, “How can one be without fault?” The reply was, “By doing everything with considered judgment, not influenced by misrepresentations, but being your own judge of what is said, and in your judgment directing aright matters concerned with petitions made to you, and through your judgment bringing them to pass—that is how you would be without fault, O King. To have these intentions and to conduct oneself in the light of them is a task
 253 involving God’s power.” •He was cheered by what was said, and asked the next guest, “How can one avoid anger?” To this the reply was, “By realizing that he has absolute power, and that any recourse to anger brings death, which is indeed a useless and painful 254 thing to do if many are deprived of life simply because he is lord. •But if all are obedient and there is no opposition, what will be the point of getting angry? You must know that God governs the whole universe with kindness and without any anger, and you, O King,”
 255 he said, “must follow him.” •He said that he had given a good answer, and inquired of the next guest, “What is sound judgment?” “Doing everything well,” was the reply, “with due consultation, in your deliberation taking into account as well the harmful features of the opposite side of the argument, in order that after paying attention to each detail our deliberations may be good and our object achieved. What is most important, by the power 256 of God your every purpose will be accomplished if you practice piety.” •(The king) said that this man also had done well, and asked another guest, “What is philosophy?” “To have a well-reasoned assessment of each occurrence,” was the reply, “and not to be carried away by impulses but to study carefully the harmful consequences of the passions, and by exercising proper and necessary restraint in carrying out what the occasion demands. But rather than superior to those among whom he is a stranger. For, in general, God by his very nature welcomes that which is humbled, and the human race deals kindly with those in subjection." •(The king) bore witness to these sentiments and asked another, "How will the structure which one builds survive in the future as well?" To this the reply was, "If his accomplishments by his actions are great and glorious, so that those who see them show forbearance because of their beauty; and if he does not neglect a single one of those who carry out such works, and does not compel the rest to complete their part of the business without any payment. •By considering how God cares for the human race in providing them with health and discernment and suchlike, he will himself do something accordingly by paying some compensation for sufferings endured. For the deeds which are of permanent value are those performed out of righteousness." •(The king) said that this man had spoken well, and asked the tenth guest, "What is the fruit of wisdom?" His reply was, "A clear conscience of no evil done, and of living one's life in truth. •From these result for you the greatest joy and steadfast self-possession, O mighty King, and good hopes in God as you rule your realm with due reverence." When they heard this, all voiced their approval with loud applause. After this the king, filled with joy, proceeded to drink their health.
 257 in order to have due care for these things, it is necessary to serve God.” •(The king) applauded this man, and asked another guest, “How can one find welcome abroad among strangers?” “By equal treatment to everyone,” he replied, “and by appearing inferior

On the next day the arrangement was the same as before for the details of the banquet, and when an opportunity presented itself the king began to question the remainder (of the guests). To the first he said, "How can a man avoid giving way to arrogance?" •The reply was, "By maintaining impartiality, and by reminding himself in the case of each individual that he is a ruler of men and still a man himself. Moreover, God destroys the proud, and exalts the gentle and humble." •(The king) commended him, and asked the next guest, "Of whom must one avail himself as counselors?" "Those who have won experience in many affairs of state," he said, "and still maintain untarnished their loyalty to him and to all who share his ways. God manifests himself to such qualities in those who deserve it." He congratulated him and asked another guest, "What is the possession most essential for a king?" "The love and affection of his subjects," he replied. "By these means the bond of goodwill is unbreakable. As for the realization of these aims, God fulfills them according to his will." •(The king) commended him and inquired of another guest, "What is the purpose of speaking?" "To persuade your opponent in debate," was his reply, "by pointing out his errors in an orderly list. In this way you will win over your listener, not being antagonistic but using some commendation to persuade him. And persuasion succeeds through the activity of God." •(The king) said that he spoke well, and asked the next guest, "In view of the heterogeneous multitudes in the kingdom, how can one be in harmony with them?" "By adopting the role appropriate to each one, with justice as your guiding principle—as indeed is now your practice, God granting you sound reasoning." •(The king) was pleased with this man, and said to the next guest, "At what things ought one to feel pain?" To which he replied, "At the misfortunes of our friends, when we see them long-drawn-out and incurable. When they are dead and released from evils, reason does not indicate for them any pain. But when human beings attribute to themselves even what is to their advantage, everyone suffers. The escape from every evil takes place only through the power of God." •(The king) declared that this man replied as he ought to have done, and said to the next guest, "How does unpopularity arise?" He replied, "When arrogance and boundless self-confidence are predominant, dishonor ensues and destruction of good reputation. God controls all reputation, directing it where he wishes." •He confirmed this man's answer and asked the next guest, "To whom must one entrust himself?" "To those who are drawn to you by loyalty," he replied, "and not through fear or flattery, with (personal) gain as their only objective. The former is a sign of affection, the latter of disaffection and expediency. The man whose aim is mere success is a natural traitor. As for you, you have the goodwill of all, as God bestows upon you sound counsels." •He declared that this man's answer was wise, and said to another guest, "What preserves a kingdom?" To this the reply was, "Concern and care that no harm shall come upon the multitudes through the officials appointed to serve their needs—which indeed is your policy, God bestowing upon you such noble intent." •(The king) gave this man a word of encouragement, and asked another guest, "What maintains favor and respect?" He said, "Virtue, for it accomplishes good works and renounces evil; just as you keep your noble integrity toward all, having this gift from God." •(The king) gave this man a favorable reception, and asked the eleventh guest (there being two over the seventy), "How can one be peacefully disposed at heart even in war?" The answer was, "By the knowledge that no evil has been committed upon any of your subjects, and that all are fighting for blessings received, knowing that even if they give their lives, you will take care of their property.

274 You do not cease helping everyone, for God has given you the gift of kindness." (The king) applauded them all heartily and greeted them with acclamation, drank the health of each one, and turned his attention to enjoying (the feast), mingling among the guests with geniality and great delight.

275 On the seventh day, after much preparation, and amid the additional company of many others from the cities—for there was a large number of delegates—the king, at a suitable opportunity, asked the first of those who had not yet been questioned, "How can one avoid 276 being deceived?" •The reply was, "By investigating the speaker, his speech and the subject of it, and by making the same inquiries over a longer period by other means. The possession of an acute mind and the ability to discern everything, that is an excellent gift from God— 277 which indeed you possess, O King." •The king heartily applauded, and asked the next guest, "Why do not the majority of human beings recognize virtue?" "Because all men," he said, "have become naturally intemperate, and inclined to pleasures, as a result of which 278 injustice came about and the mass of greed. •The virtuous disposition, on the other hand, restrains those who are attracted to the rule of pleasure, and commands them to respect 279 self-control and justice more highly. God directs all these matters." •The king affirmed that this man had given a good answer, and asked (the next guest),<sup>e3</sup> "Whose guidance must kings follow?" The answer was, "The laws, so that by practicing justice they may improve the lives of men. In the same way that you by doing this have established an everlasting 280 memory of yourself, following the commandment of God." •He said that this man also gave a good answer, and asked the next guest, "Whom ought one appoint as chief ministers?" He replied, "Men who hate wickedness, and in imitation of his way of life do justice, so as to earn themselves good repute continually—just as you, O mighty King," 281 he said, "achieve this aim, God having granted you a crown of righteousness." •He loudly approved him, looked toward the next guest, and said, "Whom must one appoint as commanders of his forces?" He replied, "Men of outstanding bravery and justice, who prefer saving men's lives to victory at the reckless risk<sup>f3</sup> of lives. As God showers blessings 282 upon all, you too in imitation of him are a benefactor to your subjects." •(The king) said that he had given a good answer, and asked another guest, "What man deserves admiration?" The reply was, "The man endowed with glory and wealth and power, who deep at heart is the equal of everyone. Just as you by your conduct deserve admiration, God giving you the 283 gift of caring for these things." •(The king) commended this man also, and said to the next guest, "On what matters ought kings to spend most of their time?" He said, "Time should be spent on reading and on the accounts of travels, which have been written and dedicated to thrones for the permanent betterment of mankind. This indeed you do, thereby winning 284 glory beyond the reach of others, with God fulfilling your plans." •(The king) warmly commended this man also, and asked another guest, "What must be one's conduct in relaxation and leisure?" The reply was, "Be a spectator of entertainments which exercise restraint and keep before your eyes things in life done with decency and moderation—that 285 is suitable and appropriate to life. •There is indeed a therapeutic value in these things, for often even from the smallest items something worthwhile stands out. You are well versed in all restraint, and show love of wisdom in your activities, receiving your reward from 286 God because of your moral goodness." •(The king) was well pleased with what had just been said, and addressed the ninth guest, "How ought one to conduct himself at banquets?" The reply was, "By inviting men of learning, with the ability to remind him of matters 287 advantageous to the kingdom and to the lives of the subjects. •Better harmony or music than these you would never find, because these men are beloved of God, having trained their minds for the noblest ends. This is your practice also, all your plans being directed 288 aright by God." •He was delighted at these words, and inquired of the next guest, "What is thought finer by the multitude, to have a king set over them who was once a commoner,

e3. Not in the text but required by the sense.

f3. Schmidt's emendation, adopted by Thackeray.

289 or a king of royal blood?" He replied, "The alternative which is by nature best. •Some kings of royal birth show themselves hard and cruel to their subjects; much worse—some kings of common origin with their experience of misfortune and their share of poverty, when given rule over people, have turned out to be more harsh than the foulest tyrants. 290 But, as I said before, a noble character which has had its share of (suitable) education is capable of ruling. Just as you rule, O mighty King, and are distinguished not so much by the outstanding glory and wealth of your kingdom but because you excel all men in your 291 moderation and humanity—God having endowed you with these gifts." •(The king) congratulated this man also with long applause, and asked the last guest of all, "What is the most important feature in a kingdom?" To this he replied, "To establish the subjects 292 continually at peace, and guarantee that they obtain justice quickly in verdicts. •The sovereign brings about these aims when he hates evil and loves good and holds in high esteem the saving of a human life. In the same way that you consider injustice the greatest evil, and by your just government in all things have won glory for yourself which is 293 imperishable—God granting you to have a pure mind untainted by any evil." •When he had finished speaking there was a long burst of applause accompanied by delighted cheers. When it subsided, the king took a cup and drank a toast to all the assembled company and to the speeches which they had made. He addressed them all thus: "The greatest benefits 294 have fallen on me through your visit. •I have been assisted a great deal by your giving me essential teaching on kingship." He commanded that three talents of silver should be given to each one, together with the slave who would hand it over to him. All joined in the acclamation, the guests were filled with rejoicing, and the king turned his attention to festivities unreservedly.

295 If I have dwelt at length<sup>g3</sup> on these matters, Philocrates, I beg your pardon. I admired these men tremendously, the way in which they gave immediate answers which needed a 296 long time (to ponder), •and while the questioner had thought out details in each case, those answering gave their replies immediately one after another—they were manifestly deserving of admiration to me and to the audience, but especially to the philosophers. All who will 297 inherit this narrative will, I think, find it incredible. •To tell lies concerning matters which are being chronicled is inappropriate: If I were to make a single error, it would be impious in these matters. On the contrary, we narrate things as they happened, eschewing any error. I therefore, heartily accepting the force of their argument, have tried to present from the 298 records the details of events at the audiences with the king and at the banquets. •It is, as you know, the custom that, from the beginning of the king's audiences until he retires to 299 bed, a record be made of everything said and done. •This is an excellent and worthwhile procedure, because on the next day, before the (day's) business begins, all that was done 300 and spoken is read out, and if any action needs it, it is corrected. •So this whole account we have produced by accurate reference to the records, as I have said, knowing your keen desire to learn what is of value.

301 Three days afterward, Demetrius took the men with him, traversed the mile-long jetty into the sea toward the island, crossed the bridge, and went in the direction of the north. There he assembled them in a house which had been duly furnished near the shore—a 302 magnificent building in a very quiet situation—and invited the men to carry out the work of translation, all that they would require being handsomely provided. •They set to completing their several tasks, reaching agreement among themselves on each by comparing versions.<sup>h3</sup>

g3. Mendelssohn's emendation, adopted by Thackeray.

h3. This passage alone (vss. 302–7) deals with the process of translation and forms a very insignificant part of the whole of LetAris. This section includes the description of the place where the work was done (vs. 302), the translators' manner of relaxing after each day's work (vss. 303f.), their practice of washing hands (vs. 305), with an exposition of the meaning of this symbolic rite of purification (vs. 303), and concludes with the statement that the task of the seventy-two was completed in seventy-two days. The actual work of translation is discussed in one single sentence (part of vs. 302), which identifies in three stages the whole process:

1. The elders . . . "completed their several tasks." If we hoped for details concerning the method of assignment of these tasks, we are disappointed. If there was anything like a collation of MSS, we are not told, and it is not implied. (See Pelletier, Lettre d'Aristée, ad loc., and Zuntz's article in Jellicoe, Studies in the Septuagint.)

2. They reached harmony in their completed tasks by comparing them. The word used, antibolais, "comparison," sometimes has a technical connotation, but Aristeas does not say or imply that such is the case here. Neither

303 The result of their agreement thus was made into a fair copy by Demetrius. •The business of their meeting occupied them until the ninth hour,<sup>13</sup> after which they were free for bodily 304 rest and relaxation, everything which they desired being furnished on a lavish scale. •Apart from all this, Dorotheus also provided for them all that was prepared for the king—this was the order which he had received from the king. At the first hour of the day they attended the court daily, and after offering salutations to the king, retired to their own quarters.
305 Following the custom of all the Jews, they washed their hands in the sea in the course of 306 their prayers to God, and then proceeded to the reading and explication<sup>13</sup> of each point. •I asked this question: “What is their purpose in washing their hands while saying their prayers?” They explained that it is evidence that they have done no evil, for all activity takes place by means of the hands. Thus they nobly and piously refer everything to 307 righteousness and truth. •In this way, as we said previously, each day they assembled in their quarters, which were pleasantly situated for quiet and light, and proceeded to fulfill their prescribed task. The outcome was such that in seventy-two days the business of translation was completed, just as if such a result was achieved by some deliberate design.
308 When it was completed, Demetrius assembled the company of the Jews in the place where the task of the translation had been finished, and read it to all, in the presence of the translators, who received a great ovation from the crowded audience for being responsible 309 for great blessings. •Likewise also they gave an ovation to Demetrius and asked him, now 310 that he had transcribed<sup>k3</sup> the whole Law, to give a copy to their leaders. •As the books were read, the priests stood up, with the elders from among the translators and from the representatives of the “Community,”<sup>13</sup> and with the leaders of the people, and said, “Since this version has been made rightly and reverently, and in every respect accurately, it is 311 good that this should remain exactly so, and that there should be no revision.” •There was general approval of what they said, and they commanded that a curse should be laid, as was their custom, on anyone who should alter the version by any addition or change to any part of the written text, or any deletion either. This was a good step taken, to ensure that the words were preserved completely and permanently in perpetuity.
312 When the king received messages about these events, he rejoiced greatly, because it seemed that the purpose which he shared had been safely accomplished. All of the version was read by him, and he marveled profoundly at the genius of the lawgiver.<sup>m3</sup> He said to Demetrius, “How is it that after such great works were (originally) completed, none of the 313 historians or poets took it upon himself to refer to them?” •He said, “Because the legislation was holy and had come from God, and indeed, some of those who made the attempt were 314 smitten by God, and refrained from their design.” •Moreover, he said that he had heard Theopompus declare that, just when he was about to quote in a misleading way some of the previously translated passages from the Law, he had a mental upset for more than thirty days; at its abatement, he besought God to make clear to him the cause of this occurrence.
315 It was revealed to him in a dream that it was due to his meddlesome desire to disclose the 316 things of God to common man, and then—he said—he ceased and so recovered. •I have is there any reference to the criteria used for obtaining agreement or for resolving disagreement.

3. Demetrius made a fair copy of what was agreed. (There is no mention of any check or method of checking.)

The presentation of the completed work to the Jews is described in vss. 308–11, and to the king in vss. 312–16.

i3. I.e. 3 P.M. The Roman method of calculating is used, beginning at 6 A.M.

j3. The exact meaning of this word here is not clear; an attempt has been made to reflect this ambiguity by the rendering “explication.” (See Zuntz in Jellicoe, Studies in the Septuagint, pp. 210f.) The word used is diasaphésin, “explication.” Its root meaning is that of clarifying, or making clear, without indicating whether the clarification is a translation or a commentary or both.

k3. “Transcribed the whole Law.” This is a vague statement; if it had been precise, giving more details of the task undertaken and the exact books dealt with, many of the chief critical problems connected with LetAris would have been solved. This section (vss. 308–11) describes the steps taken to secure the integrity of the text as translated and to avoid any revision. The attitude to the words themselves, not to mention the inspiration of the version, is noteworthy.

l3. See Pelletier, Lettre d'Aristée, ad loc. The term translated “community” was applied to the Jews of Alexandria, among others, and refers to the special status which they enjoyed.

m3. This section describes the presentation of the work to the king. Concern for its preservation is underlined here by the cautionary talk of the experience of Theopompus, with its warning against misquotation, or even quotation, of the Jewish Scriptures. See Zuntz’s article in Jellicoe, Studies in the Septuagint, p. 223, and Pelletier, Lettre d'Aristée, ad loc. It is impossible to decide, with the evidence available to us, whether this warning was prompted by any particular experience of misquotation or misuse.

also received from Theodectus the tragic poet (the report) that when he was about to include in a play a passage from what is written in the Bible,<sup>n3</sup> he was afflicted with cataract of the eyes. He suspected that this was why the affliction had befallen him, so he besought God 317 for many days<sup>o3</sup> and recovered. •When the king had received, as I previously mentioned, Demetrius' account on these matters, he bowed and gave orders for great care to be taken 318 of the books and for their hallowed preservation. •He invited the translators to visit him often after their return to Judea. It was, he said, only fair for their departure to take place, but when they returned he would, as was right, treat them as friends, and they would receive
 319 the most liberal hospitality<sup>p3</sup> at his hands. •He ordered preparations to be made for their departure, and treated the men magnificently, presenting to each one three robes of the finest materials, two talents of gold, a cup worth a talent, and complete furnishing for a
 320 dining room.<sup>q3</sup> •He also sent to Eleazar, along with their luggage, ten silver-footed couches, with all accessories to go with them, a cup worth thirty talents,<sup>r3</sup> ten robes, purple cloth, a magnificent crown, one hundred lengths of finest linen, vessels, bowls, and two golden 321 goblets for a dedication. •He also wrote with an invitation that if any of the men desired to return to him, there would be no impediment, because he attached great importance to the company of men of culture, and invested his wealth liberally in such men, and not in useless expenditure.

322 There you have, Philocrates, as I promised, my narrative. These matters I think delight you more than the books of the mythologists, for your inclination lies in the direction of concern for things that benefit the mind, and to them you devote the greater time. I will also attempt to write down the remainder of what is worthwhile, in order that in going through it you may achieve the very noble reward of your purpose.

n3. Apparently the first time the term "Bible" was used to mean the OT.

o3. Taken with "recovered," it could be translated "recovered after many days."

p3. Thackeray adopts Mahaffy's emendation polyōrias, "hospitality," for polydōrias, "presents," in the Gk. MSS. Cf. vs. 270.

q3. Cf. the Roman Triclinium, which seems to be what Aristeas has in mind.

r3. "Thirty talents" presumably refers to its value in money, rather than to its weight. (Thirty talents is roughly equivalent to $1,200.) It would make more sense if we read talantou, "talent," instead of talantōn, "talents," i.e. "thirty cups [each] worth [or weighing] a talent."

JUBILEES

(Second Century B.C.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY O. S. WINTERMUTE

The Book of Jubilees is an account of matters revealed to Moses during the forty days that he spent on Mount Sinai (Ex 24:18). In the first chapter God describes to Moses the apostasy and ultimate restoration of his people, which will take place in the future. The remaining chapters (2–50) contain an extended revelation to Moses by an angel of the presence. The angel recounts for Moses the primeval history of mankind and the subsequent history of God's chosen people until the time of Moses. The author followed the outline of Israel's history that is given in Genesis and the early chapters of Exodus. In retelling the biblical narratives, the author has freely condensed (e.g. the story of plagues on Pharaoh, Ex 7–10 = Jub 48:4–11), omitted (e.g. the blessing of Ephraim and Manasseh, Gen 48:1–20), expurgated (e.g. the notice of Abraham's presenting his wife to foreign rulers as his sister, Gen 12:10–20; 20:2–7), explained (e.g. Reuben's apparent incest, Gen 35:22 = Jub 33:2–20), supplemented (e.g. tales of Abraham's youth, Jub 12:1–9, 12f., 16–21, 25–27), and sometimes radically recast the biblical episodes (e.g. Isaac's covenant with Abimelech, Gen 26:23–33 = Jub 24:21–33).

Jubilees may be outlined in the following manner:

Chapter

|         |                               |
|---------|-------------------------------|
| 1       | Introduction                  |
| 2–4     | Creation and Adam stories     |
| 5–10    | Noah stories                  |
| 11–23:8 | Abraham stories               |
| 23:9–32 | Digression on Abraham's death |
| 24–45   | Jacob and his family          |
| 46–50   | Moses stories                 |

The introduction and the digression at 23:9–32 are marked off in the preceding outline because they are the two sections in which the author looks beyond the time of Moses to describe what will happen in the distant future. The Abraham and Jacob stories are separated in the outline at the death of Abraham; the author of Jubilees, however, causes them to overlap by having Abraham express a special concern and blessing for Jacob.

The author's treatment of Adam in chapter 3:1–31 is characteristic of much of his writing. In verses 1–7 he gives Jubilees' version of Genesis 2:18–24 with some rearrangement of verses, slight expansion, and minor variations in the text. Verses 8–14 contain halakah for the purification of women after childbirth, which the author relates to the example of Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden. Verses 15–26 contain Jubilees' modified version of the Fall (Gen 3). Verses 27–29 contain extrabiblical traditions about events on the day of Adam's expulsion, i.e. a sacrifice was offered and the animals became mute. Verses 30f. interpret the biblical account of God's clothing Adam (cf. Jub 3:26) as the basis for an eternal decree prohibiting nudity, thereby distinguishing man from the animals.

In the Noah stories, the author has sharply abbreviated the account of the Flood. He has, moreover, inserted a considerable amount of extrabiblical material, including accounts and discussions of the following: the judgment of the Watchers (5:6–16), the feast of weeks (6:17–22), the calendar (6:23–28), the testament of Noah (7:20–39), the division of the world (8:10–9:15), Noah's effective intercession against Mastema (10:1–14), and Canaan's occupation of land belonging to Israel (10:28–34).

The account of Abraham begins in chapters 11f. with a series of haggadic tales about the youthful piety and wisdom of that hero. The end of his account is dominated by a series of speeches, testaments, and blessings in chapters 19:10–22:30. Chapters 13–19 follow the biblical account of the wanderings of Abraham, God's promises to him, and the birth of Isaac. The biblical account is frequently abbreviated to eliminate details such as Sarah's cruel treatment of Hagar in Genesis 16:4–14. The biblical account is also supplemented at points. The author, for example, has inserted an account of the trials of Abraham (17:15–18) and a theophany (16:15–19); his interest in ritual law leads him to report that Abraham celebrated both the Feast of Firstfruits (15:1f.; cf. 22:1) and the Feast of Tabernacles (16:20–31). He also supplies a lengthy discussion of circumcision (15:25–34).

In Jubilees, Jacob is the central figure. He is frequently praised or blessed by Abraham (19:17–25, 27–29; 22:10–24, 26–30), Rebecca (25:11–13, 14–23; 27:11; 35:6, 9–12), Isaac (26:22–24; 27:14–17; 35:13–17; 36:15f.), and God (27:22–24; 44:5f.). In poetic passages (e.g. 23:23; 31:15) Jacob is identified as Israel, the eponymous ancestor of all of the children of Israel. The stories of Jacob and his sons therefore both represent and explain his nation's justified hostility toward Philistines (24:25–33), Canaanites (25:1–10), Amorites (34:1–9), and Edomites (chs. 37f.). Only four sons of Jacob are singled out for special attention. The Joseph stories (chs. 39f., 42–45) are simply a condensed version of the biblical account. Reuben's incest with Bilhah (ch. 33) is given elaborate treatment as a warning against incest. In the case of Judah and Tamar, however, the story is retold in order to permit the confession, forgiveness, and defense of Judah's righteous intent in the matter (41:23–28). Judah is singled out again in chapter 31, where he shares a blessing with Levi, who is prominently treated in chapters 30–32. Judah and Levi, of course, were the two most prominent tribes at the time of the writing of Jubilees.

In chapters 24–29 the author of Jubilees supplements the biblical account of Jacob's early life and sojourn in Mesopotamia. He takes every opportunity to justify Rebecca's favoritism for Jacob over Esau. Jacob represents the highest degree of filial piety whereas Esau was disloyal to his parents.

Chapters 30–32 supplement biblical material with traditions about the priestly role of Levi. In chapter 31 Judah shares a blessing with Levi, but elsewhere Levi tends to be prominent.

Chapter 33 is a Midrash on Reuben's sin in Genesis 35:22.

Chapters 34–38 supplement the biblical account by describing in detail the wars of Jacob. Chapter 34 describes an Amorite war, while chapters 35–38 show how the relationship between Jacob and Esau ended in hostility and the defeat of Edom.

Chapters 39–45 are the writer's condensation of the Joseph stories.

The Moses story begins with a mention of his father in chapter 46, a chapter which explains the transition from an idyllic life under Joseph's rule, when there was no Satan in the land (vss. 1f.), to a scene of harsh slavery at the end of the chapter (vss. 14–16). The death of Joseph and war between the Canaanites and Egypt account for the deteriorating conditions.

The Moses story ends in chapters 49f. with a collection of laws concerning Passover (49), Jubilees (50:1–5), and the sabbath (50:6–13). The events of Moses' own life are quickly sketched in chapters 47f. Although the account is ultimately based on the Old Testament, the Exodus story in chapter 48 has been rewritten to explain how Mastema sought to help the Egyptians.

It is easier to describe the literary character of Jubilees than it is to name its genre. M. Testuz sought to identify its genre in terms of its relationship to five different types of literature: history, testament, apocalyptic, ritual law, and chronology. He concluded that Jubilees was a work of composite genre sharing features of each of the types mentioned. Although "composite" is too vague a term to be entirely satisfying, Testuz's method of describing the genres to which Jubilees is related enables one to provide a fair accounting of the distinctive combination which characterizes the genre of Jubilees.<sup>1</sup>

To the casual reader, Jubilees presents itself as a historical account of past events. R. H. Charles classified it as "Primitive History Rewritten from the Standpoint of Law."<sup>2</sup> The setting, the actors, and the episodes are all depicted in the past time. The most important source which the author used in writing his account was the biblical text, but he supplemented it with a considerable amount of traditional material which came to him in either written or oral form. The final result was a relatively well-integrated account.

Like most writers of history, the author of Jubilees was concerned to review critical events of the past in order to expose their significance for understanding his own contemporary political, social, or cultural situation. In Jubilees 10:29-34, for example, he has preserved an account of how the Canaanites came to inhabit the promised land in order to prove that any contemporary claim to it was illegitimate. His method of explaining contemporary realities is generally in line with methods used in the Old Testament. In Genesis 48, the Old Testament writers explain the division and priority of the Joseph tribes in later Israel by reporting that their eponymous ancestors had been singled out for a blessing by Jacob. In a similar manner, Jubilees accounts for the new political reality of its own time by preserving a report that Isaac had given a special blessing to Judah and Levi (Jub 31:1-22). In both content and method, the Book of Jubilees shares features of a historical genre.

The Catena of Nicephorus (1.175) cites the "Testament" (diathēkē) as the source of a quotation which matches Jubilees 10:21. There is some reason to believe that either Jubilees or some portion of that work circulated in antiquity as "The Testament of Moses." A number of the speeches of the ancestors appear in Jubilees as testaments (e.g. Noah, 7:20-39; Abraham, 20:2-11; Isaac, 36:1-17). Since everything contained in Jubilees was to be delivered to the children of Israel by Moses, one might possibly conceive of it as his testament. In its present form, however, it appears as a revelation to Moses rather than a testament from him.

A book which presents itself as an account of matters revealed by God and his angel to Moses might be identified as an apocalypse, but R. H. Charles did not list it among the apocalypses in his edition of the Pseudepigrapha.<sup>3</sup> Charles's position seems justified. Despite the fact that it shares many features of apocalyptic writings, Jubilees lacks certain characteristics of that genre. In agreement with apocalyptic writings: (1) Jubilees is a pseudonymous work which presents itself as (2) a book of revelations given privately (3) to a heroic figure from Israel's past (4) by an angel (5) in the form of a world history divided into balanced periods of time measured by weeks of years and jubilees (6) in an attempt to instruct the author's contemporaries about matters of vital importance for their own time.

The characteristics of apocalyptic writings which Jubilees does not share are: (1) bizarre imagery, (2) limited esoteric appeal, and (3) preoccupation with the type of eschatology characteristic of apocalyptic writings. The beasts, the horns, the heavenly scenes, the thrones, the rivers of fire, the otherworldly figures with brightly shining bodies, and the many other terrifying objects that populate the visionary world of Daniel, Enoch, and other apocalyptic writings are not found in Jubilees. Granted the presence of angels, demons, and an occasional prodigy (23:25), the world described in the revelation to Moses is very much like the historical world in which the author of Jubilees lived.

The bizarre visions contribute to the esoteric atmosphere of most apocalyptic writings. Behind such documents there is a small community of "the elect"; the writing is directed to them and often contains hostile words for members of the larger religious community from which they have separated. Apocalyptic writings are frequently described as being hidden until a determined time when they will be understood only by those who are pure (Dan 12:9f.). Jubilees is not written from that perspective. Although the revelation is given privately to Moses, and there are suggestions that there was a body of secret lore passed down in the family of Levi (Jub 32:22-26; 45:16), the content of Jubilees' revelation is directed toward all of Israel and not to just a small group of embattled faithful. The author of the book may have been a member of a relatively small band of Hasidim, but there is no reason to believe that his group had yet broken sharply away from the larger Jewish community.

<sup>1</sup> M. Testuz, Les Idées religieuses du livre des Jubilés, pp. 11f. I am grateful to the editors and J. C. VanderKam for helpful suggestions and improvements.

<sup>2</sup> R. H. Charles, APOT, vol. 2, p. v.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. his table of contents at the beginning of APOT, vol. 2.

The matter of vital importance about which the author of Jubilees wishes to instruct his contemporaries is the necessity of strictly obeying the Law in the critical age in which they are living. The writer anticipates an age of increasing blessings in his own time which will result from renewed loyalty to the Law. The author of Jubilees is only slightly concerned with eschatological themes that preoccupy the writers of apocalyptic literature generally, notably, the abrupt end of the age together with wars and natural disasters which accompany it, the appearance of the Messiah, and the inauguration of the messianic age, or the revelation of heavenly realms prepared for the punishment of the wicked and reward of the righteous. Davenport has examined The Eschatology of the Book of Jubilees and sharply limited the number of "Passages Intended to Teach Eschatology" (i.e. 1:4–29; 23:14–31). Although there are other passages in which eschatological elements or terminology are present, Davenport has argued that they are not "eschatological in function," i.e. the writer was not primarily concerned to write eschatology.<sup>4</sup>

To the extent that the Torah could be designated a legal genre, one could argue that Jubilees deserves a similar title. In supporting the validity of certain laws, the writer appealed to the fact that they were given in "the book of the first law" (6:22), i.e. the biblical Torah. By doing that, he wished to present his own work as a second book of law given to Moses on Mount Sinai.

The author of Jubilees deals with law in a number of different ways. Sometimes he gathers together a group of laws pertaining to a particular subject, for example, the list of sabbath laws in chapter 50:6–13. Sometimes he is more concerned to elaborate the theological rationale for supporting a particular observance. In chapter 2:17–33, for example, he describes the sabbath as a sign of the election of Israel. The children of Israel are to keep it as a sign of their unique relationship to God and his highest angels—angels of the presence and angels of sanctification—who have kept the sabbath since the first week of creation. He further proves that the family of Jacob alone has been singled out for this honor because God created twenty-two works before the first sabbath and there are twenty-two heads of mankind from Adam to Jacob.

The writer was concerned to demonstrate the authoritative status of his laws. One method was to stress their antiquity. He is careful to note the first observance of particular rites. Thus the feast of Shevuoth was celebrated in heaven from the day of creation and subsequently first celebrated on earth by Noah (6:17f.). Even the practices that were initiated by the patriarchs have eternal validity because they were according to the testimony of the heavenly tablets, and they are to be observed forever (16:21–30). In a more pragmatic manner, he proves the validity of the Law by providing examples of the punishment of those who disobeyed (7:20–25; 16:5–9) and the blessing of those who obeyed (17:17f.; 18:14–16; 39:6f.; 40:8–10). He urged his own generation to follow the laws of God by means of the testimonies of the patriarchs, who regularly exhorted their offspring to avoid fornication, uncleanness, idolatry, drinking or shedding of blood; and to observe justice, righteousness, brotherly love, circumcision, and proper ritual practice (e.g. 7:20–39; 20:2–11; 21:1–25; 36:1–17).

The author's concern for chronological matters is illustrated by the earliest Hebrew description of the book "The book of the divisions of the times according to their jubilees and their weeks."<sup>5</sup> If that title leads one to expect a work seriously concerned with chronological matters, the reader will not be disappointed. The writer has a theological concern for time which is reflected in the structure of the book.

The author believed that there was a theological value inherent in certain special times. Unlike modern man, he did not limit himself to the quantitative measuring or counting of days from an arbitrary starting point. For him, the days were also to be divided on a qualitative scale with respect to their sanctity. Some days were sacred and others profane. In 6:33–37, the writer describes a situation in which confusion prevails and sacred feasts are observed on unclean days. Although he does not explicitly say why he finds such a situation to be scandalous, he undoubtedly believed that sacred rituals for forgiveness, atonement, and communal well-being could not be valid unless observed at a sacred time.

<sup>4</sup> G. L. Davenport, The Eschatology of the Book of Jubilees, pp. 47–71, 81–87.

<sup>5</sup> The Heb. description is found in CD, a sectarian document from Qumran. The most complete text was discovered in 1896 in Cairo, but subsequent discoveries of portions of the work at Qumran have led to its identification with that community. The mention of Jub is found at plate 16, ll. 2–4.

For the author of Jubilees, the sabbath, which fell regularly on the seventh day of every week, was particularly sacred. A. Jaubert in her study of the calendar has demonstrated that Sunday and Wednesday were also frequently designated as festival days by the author of Jubilees.<sup>6</sup> It was important for the author of Jubilees to be assured that the festivals of Israel would fall on the same day of the week year after year. That was possible only if the readers would make use of the special calendar of 364 days (divisible by seven) that was adopted by the particular Jewish community to which the author belonged. Each year in that calendar began on Wednesday and lasted precisely fifty-two weeks so that the following year would also begin on Wednesday and all of the dates in that year would fall on the same day of the week as they had in any previous year.

The author of Jubilees is an outspoken opponent of the lunar month, which alternated in length between months of twenty-nine and thirty days, because it resulted in a year of 354 days, ten days too few. Nevertheless, his calendar was constructed within a society where the concept of "month" was too important in dating to be disregarded. Therefore the calendar was divided into twelve non-lunar months of thirty days each for a total of 360 days. In order to bring the final yearly total to 364 days, the year was divided into four seasons of three months each with an extra day inserted between each of the four seasons but not counted within any month.

Although months and seasons are accounted for in the calendar of Jubilees, it was the recurring cycle of seven-day weeks that was used as the basic model for structuring larger periods of time. Each period of seven years is referred to as a "week of years" or simply as a "week." Each period of seven weeks of years, i.e. forty-nine years, is designated a jubilee. And it is also possible that the period of forty-nine jubilees is significant for the structure of the book. According to the Book of Jubilees, the Exodus took place 2,410 years after the creation of the world. Adam remained in Eden until the eighth year. Between year eight and year 2410 there are 2,401 full years, i.e. forty-nine jubilees. Testuz has suggested that the period of forty-nine jubilees represents a complete era in world history. If that is true, then the reference to the passing of that period of time at the end of Jubilees (50:4) was written to call attention to the fact that a new era in world history had begun with the giving of the Law on Mount Sinai.<sup>7</sup>

In addition to the literary genres listed by Testuz, it is helpful to see Jubilees in relation to the genre Midrash. The compatibility of subject matter is obvious if simply because a number of episodes in Jubilees are also preserved in later Midrashim. One striking example is found in Midrash Waysissau, which has preserved a detailed account of the war between Jacob and Esau that is similar to Jubilees 37f.<sup>8</sup>

Unfortunately, the nature of Midrash and even its existence as a separate genre is still being debated. R. Bloch's description of its characteristics, however, may serve as a starting point.<sup>9</sup> The first characteristic is that Midrash has its point of departure in the Scripture. Midrash is the form taken by rabbinic interpretation of Scripture. Although not produced in rabbinic circles, Jubilees shows evidence of a very similar type of scriptural interpretation. It may be regarded as a continuous interpretation of Genesis 1 through Exodus 12. It may also be understood as a Midrashic reflection on Exodus 24:18. Pious curiosity wished to know everything that Moses learned during his forty days on Mount Sinai.

A second characteristic of Midrash is its "homiletical" character. In contrast to a precise scholarly exegesis, it is a popular genre. The term "homiletical" reflects a presumed Sitz im Leben of rabbinic Midrashim, i.e. the reading and explanation of Scripture within the

<sup>6</sup> A. Jaubert, "The Calendar of Jubilees," The Date of the Last Supper, pp. 15–30.

<sup>7</sup> Testuz, Les Idées religieuses, pp. 138–40. Cf. also E. Wiesenberg, "The Jubilee of Jubilees," RQ 3 (1961/1962) 3–40.

<sup>8</sup> The text of Midrash Waysissau has been published by A. Jellinek in BHM, pt. 3, pp. 1–5.

<sup>9</sup> R. Bloch, "Midrash," DBS, vol. 6, pp. 1263–81. ET by M. H. Callaway in Approaches to Ancient Judaism: Theory and Practice, ed. W. S. Green (Brown Judaic Studies 1; Missoula, Mont., 1978) pp. 29–50.

synagogue by means of a sermon designed to instruct the hearers. Jubilees was probably produced by someone within priestly circles who drew freely upon analogous instructive materials from an earlier generation. Notice how the reader is instructed by means of explanation, illustrative stories, and morals drawn from the biblical text designed to warn against nudity (3:26, 30f.) and incest (ch. 33) or to encourage the observance of the sabbath (2:16–21), circumcision (15:24–34), laws of purification (3:8–14), and tithes (32:1–15).

A third characteristic is careful attention to the text. Midrashic interpretation, which sometimes wanders far from what we might consider the original meaning of the text, is also capable of pausing to explain the significance of a single word or name. The author of Jubilees is also fond of this method, as, for example, in his treatment of Jared (4:15) and Rew (10:18). The author of Jubilees also has an extensive knowledge of Scripture which enables him to bring to bear widely scattered biblical texts in his discussion of a problem. Compare, for example, his discussion of Passover and the sabbath in chapters 49f.

The fourth characteristic is an adaptation to the present. The method of Midrashic interpretation has two foci: the text of Scripture and the writer's contemporary situation. The writer seeks the word of God within the text for the practical purpose of instructing the life of his contemporaries. That is clearly the intent of Jubilees. His contemporaries are faced with arguments that Jewish ritual law and piety are no longer relevant, that it was a law and piety freely adopted in the past and subject to arbitrary change in the present. Jubilees denies that. For Jubilees, the rites of Judaism are not recent. They were observed by the patriarchs. They are ordained by God and written on heavenly tablets. Gentiles who lived among the author's people did not observe the sabbath. They were uncircumcised. They appeared nude in athletic exercise. Many Jews were undoubtedly tempted to intermarry with them, adopt their customs, and abandon a pattern of Jewish piety. Jubilees preaches against all those evils through the words and examples of angels and patriarchs. Obedience to the Law is the central message of Jubilees.

The fifth characteristic of Midrash is the presence of halakah and haggada. The halakah consists of exegetical conclusions in the form of rules for a pious way of life such as we find collected in Jubilees 50:6–13. The exegetical conclusions of haggada are non-legal. Thus Jubilees is able to answer the question of where Cain found a wife by mentioning the birth of Adam's daughter Awan (4:1). The problem of a talking serpent is set in a new perspective by assuming that all of the animals spoke (3:28) Hebrew (12:26) in the garden of Eden. Haggadic commentary sometimes resolves minor problems, but at times it seems to serve a broader creative impulse. In Genesis 15:11 we are told that Abram once had to drive some birds away. Who sent the birds? Obviously, it was Mastema. In Jubilees 11:11–24 his reputation for combating the birds sent by Mastema has developed into one of the most charming tales in Jubilees. In Genesis 15:5, God orders Abram to look (Heb. habet) toward the sky and count the stars if he is able. Such a passage can easily account for his reputation as a frustrated astrologer, which is reflected in Jubilees 12:16–20.

With regard to the literary structure of Midrashim, A. G. Wright has written "there are several rather diverse forms of literature that are designated as midrash. There are the exegetical, homiletic, and narrative midrashim."<sup>10</sup> The exegetical Midrash sets forth the biblical text and discusses it phrase by phrase. Homiletical Midrashim, on the other hand, begin with a portion of text which forms the basis for a thematic treatment of a specific subject which the Scripture evokes. The theme is frequently repeated and supported by texts drawn from various parts of the Old Testament. Finally, the narrative Midrash scarcely distinguishes between text and comment, but interweaves them to form a continuous narrative. In terms of overall structure, Jubilees is similar to the narrative Midrashim.

Two of the texts most closely related to Jubilees in terms of literary characteristics are Chronicles and the Genesis Apocryphon. Both of these works share certain characteristics of Midrash. Chronicles is similar to Jubilees in its intent to interpret Scripture in light of contemporary concerns. A central concern of the Chronicler was the Temple cultus. In his restatement of traditions recorded in 1–2 Samuel–1 Kings, King David provided the prototype for a proper attitude toward the cultus. Jubilees' dominant concern was for ritual law and Jewish piety. Consequently the patriarchs became the embodiment of piety and of the proper concern for sacred festivals. The Genesis Apocryphon is too fragmentary to permit one to discern its overall tendency, but P. Weimar has used it to illustrate the genre of narrative Midrash. In doing so he compared a portion of the text with the text of Genesis and showed how the author expanded upon it, occasionally making use of data found in Jubilees.<sup>11</sup>

<sup>10</sup> A. G. Wright, "The Literary Genre Midrash," CBQ 28 (1966) 133.

Title

The earliest mention of Jubilees is found in the Qumran texts (CD 16.2–4), where the writer reports that an accurate account of Israel's periods of blindness may be found in "The book of the divisions of the times according to their jubilees and their weeks." The Ethiopic version of the text was expanded on that title to describe the work in the following manner: "This is the account of the division of days of the Law and the testimony for annual observance according to their weeks (and) their jubilees throughout all the years of the world."

In Greek, Syriac, Latin, and later Hebrew witnesses, however, the work was generally designated more briefly as either "The (Book) of Jubilees" or "The Little Genesis." The first of these titles probably represents a simple abbreviation of the longer description attested at Qumran. The second title serves as an appropriate description of the content of the work. Just as the Chronicler recapitulated and supplemented many of the episodes reported in the books of Samuel and Kings with a special concern to emphasize the Davidic foundation of many cultic details, the author of Jubilees likewise recapitulated and supplemented many of the episodes found in Genesis with the intention of stressing the eternal validity of the Law and explaining additional cultic details. Since the work is actually longer than the biblical book of Genesis, Charles has suggested that the adjective "Little" (Gk., ta lepta) was used to characterize the document's concern to provide fuller treatment of minor details not available in the canonical work.<sup>12</sup>

The significance of other titles attested by ancient authorities is less clear. Syncellus (Chronographia 1.5) reported that some people spoke of "The Little Genesis" as "an apocalypse of Moses," but elsewhere (Chronographia 1.48) Syncellus uses the title "The Apocalypse of Moses" to refer to a work which is quite distinct from "The Little Genesis."

In the Catena of Nicephorus 1.175 a quotation from Jubilees 10:21 is prefaced by the phrase hē diathēkē, which H. Rösensch explained as referring to "The Testament of Moses," a work known from four of the ancient catalogs which were prepared to define canonical boundaries. Although Rösensch may have been justified in interpreting the cryptic hē diathēkē as representing "The Testament of Moses,"<sup>13</sup> a simple identification of Jubilees with the work listed by that name in the catalogs has been rejected because the number of stichoi assigned in the catalog of Nicephorus (1,100) is scarcely one fourth the length of Jubilees.

"The Book of Adam's Daughters" was identified with Jubilees in the Decree of Gelasius; and Syncellus (1.7) reported that "The Little Genesis" was also called "The Life of Adam." It is generally assumed that the titles which relate the book to Adam are justified only when referring to certain limited portions of Jubilees. These titles may have originated to designate earlier works incorporated in Jubilees or portions later excerpted from the work.

Texts

In reviewing the textual history of Jubilees, it is difficult to be more succinct than J. C. VanderKam, who outlined its history thus:

1. Jubilees was written in Hebrew.
2. Jubilees was translated from Hebrew into Greek.
3. Jubilees was translated from Hebrew into Syriac.
4. Jubilees was translated from Greek into Latin.
5. Jubilees was translated from Greek into Ethiopic.<sup>14</sup>

<sup>11</sup> P. Weimar, "Formen frühjüdischer Literatur. Eine Skizze," Literatur und Religion des Frühjudentums, eds. J. Maier and J. Schreiner (Würzburg, 1973) pp. 123–62.

<sup>12</sup> R. H. Charles, The Book of Jubilees or the Little Genesis, p. xv. A similar opinion was expressed earlier by H. Rösensch in Das Buch der Jubiläen oder die kleine Genesis, pp. 467f.

<sup>13</sup> Rösensch, Das Buch der Jubiläen, pp. 479–82.

<sup>14</sup> J. C. VanderKam, Textual and Historical Studies in the Book of Jubilees, p. vi. The description of the texts is actually quoted from the table of contents.

Only fragments of the Greek text survive, in the form of quotations and summaries in Greek sources. The Greek fragments have recently been collected by A.-M. Denis and conveniently presented in his Fragmenta Pseudepigraphorum Graeca.<sup>15</sup> It is unfortunate that the Greek text has not survived in its entirety because both the Latin and Ethiopic versions were translated from it. The primary basis for assuming that both of the later versions are based upon a Greek text is the internal evidence of Greek loanwords, idioms, and obvious mistranslations. H. Rönisch presented data supporting a Greek base for the Latin version,<sup>16</sup> and R. H. Charles provided a smaller but no less convincing group of examples to demonstrate that the Ethiopic version was translated from Greek.<sup>17</sup>

The existence of a Syriac version of Jubilees was still open to question when R. H. Charles wrote his introduction to Jubilees in volume 2 of The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament.<sup>18</sup> The evidence available in 1913 was slight. It consisted of a list of names of the wives of the patriarchs originally published by Ceriani<sup>19</sup> and reprinted by Charles as appendix III to his text of Jubilees. In 1921, however, E. Tisserant published "Fragments syriaques du Livre des Jubilés."<sup>20</sup> The fragments were discovered in an anonymous Syriac chronicle. Since the author of the chronicle used only Syriac and Arabic sources, these fragments bear witness to the existence of a Syriac text of Jubilees. Tisserant found no internal evidence to suggest a Greek antecedent and concluded that the Syriac Jubilees must have been translated directly from the Hebrew.

Approximately one fourth of the Latin text has survived. It was first published by Ceriani in 1861 and re-edited by both Rönisch and Charles.<sup>21</sup> The Latin text, which Rönisch dated in the mid-fifth century, is important because of its date, the length of the surviving manuscript, and the relative care with which it was originally translated. Its editors have noted lacunae and a number of corruptions. Charles, in particular, called attention to the fact that its biblical quotations had been corrected to agree with the standard Septuagint or Vulgate texts. Nevertheless, the Latin text is generally regarded as being almost as reliable a witness as the Ethiopic text. Although Charles was cautious he occasionally relied upon the Latin reading to emend his Ethiopic text. The Latin also provides help in interpreting ambiguous Ethiopic phrases.

The Ethiopic text is the only text that has survived in a form that is virtually complete. Therefore all complete translations of Jubilees are based on some form of the Ethiopic text. The present translation was made from the Ethiopic text edited by R. H. Charles in 1895.<sup>22</sup> That text was based on four manuscripts which he designated A-D. The best manuscript available to him was B, a sixteenth-century text preserved in the British Museum (B.M. Orient. 485), which he used as the basis of his edition.

A number of shortcomings in Charles's edition, particularly his failure to list all of the variant readings in his apparatus, have been noted by W. Baars and R. Zuurmond, who were preparing a new critical edition.<sup>23</sup> Nevertheless, Charles's text has several obvious virtues. His decision to follow manuscript B seems wise. He skillfully treated the biblical quotations in a systematic manner in an attempt to eliminate readings that contain scribal corrections intended to make the text agree with that of the Ethiopic Old Testament. Charles also exercised good judgment in sorting out and evaluating the particular tendencies of the Greek, Latin, and Ethiopic witnesses. Consequently his text is generally superior to any single manuscript, and corrections to his text made without an intimate knowledge of all of the witnesses are apt to be mistaken.

The preparation of a new text will probably require years to complete, because the task is very difficult. Nevertheless, the rationale and need for it are obvious. There is a group

<sup>15</sup> A.-M. Denis, ed., Fragmenta pseudepigraphorum quae supersunt graeca, pp. 70-102. Cf. also J. T. Milik, "Recherches sur la version grecque du livre des Jubilés," RB 78 (1971) 545-57.

<sup>16</sup> Rönisch, Das Buch der Jubiläen, pp. 439-60.

<sup>17</sup> Charles, The Book of Jubilees, pp. xxxf.

<sup>18</sup> Charles, APOT, vol. 2, p. 3.

<sup>19</sup> A. M. Ceriani, Monumenta Sacra et Profana (Milan, 1861) vol. 2, pp. 9f.

<sup>20</sup> E. Tisserant, RB 30 (1921) 55-86, 206-32.

<sup>21</sup> Rönisch, Das Buch der Jubiläen; R. H. Charles, The Ethiopic Version of the Hebrew Book of Jubilees.

<sup>22</sup> Charles, Ethiopic Version.

<sup>23</sup> W. Baars and R. Zuurmond, "The Project for a New Edition of the Ethiopic Book of Jubilees," JSS 9 (1964) 67-74. [Baars and Zuurmond have ceased work on this project. —J.H.C.]

of Ethiopic manuscripts now available which were unknown to Charles. Baars and Zuurmond describe five manuscripts which they examined; all are from European collections. VanderKam has assigned them the letters E–I.<sup>24</sup> More recently, three additional manuscripts have been copied by the Ethiopian Manuscript Microfilm Library Project. They are available on microfilm at the Monastic Manuscript Microfilm Library, St. John's Abbey and University in Collegeville, Minnesota. It is quite likely that additional Ethiopic manuscripts will be discovered.

A new critical text will have to include variant readings from the Syriac text published by E. Tisserant, which were also unknown to Charles. It will have to include all of the Qumran texts, some of which have not yet been published. In the present translation, both the Syriac text and the group of Qumran texts studied by VanderKam have been carefully examined and used to improve Charles's text. No other major change has been made.

Original language

There is no longer any reason to doubt that Jubilees was originally written in Hebrew. That was a view most forcefully argued by R. H. Charles over seventy years ago vis-à-vis the possibility of a Greek or Aramaic original. Nevertheless, there was still considerable latitude for debate until the discovery of fragments of the Hebrew text at both Qumran and Masada. The fragments from Qumran are especially significant. They include the earliest known manuscript, datable on paleographic grounds to the late Hasmonaean period (c. 75–50 B.C.), and their presence at Qumran called immediate attention to the many close parallels between the views of the author of Jubilees and the teaching within that community. The manuscripts from Qumran are near enough to the date of the text's composition and close enough to its original social matrix virtually to exclude the possibility that they are translations from some other language. Consequently, it is generally maintained that the text was written in Hebrew.

Date

The discoveries at Qumran have also helped narrow the limits for dating Jubilees. They provide new data for determining the latest possible date. Jubilees must have been written before: (1) the date of the earliest fragment of the text discovered at Qumran; (2) the date of Qumran documents which depend on Jubilees; (3) the date of the split between the Maccabean establishment and the sect which settled at Qumran.

The earliest published fragment of Jubilees from Qumran is dated in the late Hasmonaean period (c. 75–50 B.C.), but VanderKam has reported that two unpublished fragments (4Qm16Jub<sup>a</sup> and 4Qm17Jub<sup>b</sup>) have been dated by F. M. Cross to 125–75 B.C., with circa 100 as the preferred date. VanderKam justly observes that it is unlikely that the two unpublished fragments, which are written in a semicursive script, belong to the original manuscript of Jubilees. Therefore, paleographic dating of the earliest fragments points to a date prior to 100 B.C.<sup>25</sup>

There are two texts from Qumran which may have used Jubilees. In the case of the Damascus Rule (CD), most scholars are convinced that there is an explicit reference to Jubilees (CD 16.2–4). The earliest Hebrew fragment of the Damascus Document is dated to 75–50 B.C., but its composition is certainly earlier than that; perhaps it was composed at the end of the second or beginning of the first century B.C. That simply confirms a date prior to 100 B.C. for Jubilees. The Genesis Apocryphon (1QapGen) clearly shares common traditions and a common biblical text with Jubilees. Scholars are still debating the precise nature of the relationship between the two documents. It is unlikely that the Genesis Apocryphon served as a source for Jubilees; J. Fitzmyer, for example, claims that the Genesis Apocryphon "depends on . . . Jubilees."<sup>26</sup> By assuming that priority, P. Weimar was able to provide an impressive illustration of the manner in which the writer of the Genesis Apocryphon made use of Jubilees.<sup>27</sup> The date of the Genesis Apocryphon is uncertain, but it was probably composed in the first century B.C. By itself, the evidence provided by the Genesis Apocryphon is less helpful for dating Jubilees than the witness of the Damascus Document, but taken together, the fact that two separate first-century writers treat Jubilees as an authoritative source indicates that Jubilees was already sufficiently established to warrant that status.

<sup>24</sup> VanderKam, Textual and Historical Studies, pp. 14f.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid., pp. 215f. [My latest information is that there are now nineteen Eth. MSS of Jub. — J. C. VanderKam.]

<sup>26</sup> J. A. Fitzmyer, The Genesis Apocryphon of Qumran Cave 1: A Commentary. (Biblica et Orientalia 18A; Rome, 1966) p. 14.

A still earlier date can be supported, but it depends on a different, somewhat less objective type of evidence. The majority of scholars who have studied the relationship between Jubilees and the doctrines of the sect at Qumran have noted a strong kinship. The parallels are overwhelming. They include numerous similarities in theology, ritual, law, and piety, as well as outright literary dependence and a common official calendar. Differences between Jubilees and Qumran in matters of eschatology (viz. messiah), ritual practice (viz. baptism and communal meals), details of theology, and attitudes toward the Temple and war were pointed out by B. Noack in an attempt to correct the assumption that Jubilees was written at Qumran.<sup>28</sup> It is more accurate to think of Jubilees as a work that was produced within a community of Hasidim or Essenes prior to the withdrawal of some of the members of the sect to Qumran.

The most significant difference between Jubilees and the writings from Qumran for the purpose of dating is the fact that Jubilees does not reflect any significant break with the larger national body whereas the Qumran sect has broken with the establishment and its priesthood, which it judges apostate. Although the author of Jubilees was one of the spiritual parents of the Qumran sect, he accepted the establishment and was filled with the joy of Maccabean triumphs and hopes for the future. Years ago R. H. Charles noted the proestablishment stance in Jubilees. He thought that Jubilees was written by a Pharisee, so he concluded that "it was written before the public breach between Hyrcanus and the Pharisees."<sup>29</sup> In the light of Qumran, the author is no longer considered to be a Pharisee. He belongs within the Hasidic or Essene tradition. It is therefore necessary to conclude that Jubilees was written before the breach between the Maccabeans and the Essenes. Unfortunately, that breach was not public. Our evidence for it comes from cryptic references to the "wicked priest" in the Qumran documents. The split probably occurred in the time of Jonathan or Simon (160–134 B.C.). Since the issue was a dispute over the high priesthood, two dates compete for attention: 152 B.C., the year that Jonathan was appointed high priest by Balas, and 140 B.C., the year that Simon was recognized as high priest by the people (1Mac 14:34–49). Since Jubilees was written before the split, the latest possible date should be set at either 140 B.C. or 152 B.C., depending on the identification of the "wicked priest."

A certain amount of subjective judgment is also involved in determining the earliest possible date for the writing of Jubilees. The work can be no earlier than the latest historical event to which it alludes. The majority of scholars assume that the writer composed his account of Jacob's wars against the Amorites and Edomites (chs. 34, 38) under the influence of certain Maccabean triumphs to which he alludes. In the war against the Amorites, for example, Jubilees describes the participation of the king of Bethhoron and confederates from the immediate area (34:4–7), recalling Judas Maccabeus' smashing victory over Nicanor at Bethhoron (1Mac 7:39–50). Both Judas and John Hyrcanus defeated the Edomites. Charles, who would set the earliest possible date for Jubilees as late as the breach between the Pharisees and Hyrcanus, assumed that Jubilees contained allusions to the subjugation of Edom by that ruler.<sup>30</sup> That was not a necessary conclusion, however, since the account in Jubilees could equally have been influenced by historical campaigns of Judas, which are noted in 1 Maccabees 5:3, 65. Recently, VanderKam carefully studied all the apparent allusions to Maccabean history and concluded that "the latest events to which I can find reference in Jubilees are Judas Maccabeus' wars in 161 B.C."<sup>31</sup> If that is correct, the date of Jubilees must be set between 161–140 B.C.

<sup>27</sup> Weimar, Literatur und Religion des Frühjudentums, pp. 144–55.

<sup>28</sup> B. Noack, "Qumran and the Book of Jubilees," SEA 22–23 (1957–58) 191–207.

<sup>29</sup> Charles, APOT, vol. 2, p. 6.

<sup>30</sup> Charles, The Book of Jubilees, p. lxii.

<sup>31</sup> VanderKam, Textual and Historical Studies, p. 283.

Provenance

The author of Jubilees was a Jew who lived in Palestine. That view may be supported by a number of observations. The fact that he wrote in Hebrew would favor a Palestinian background. His writing may reflect an awareness that not all of his contemporaries were thoroughly familiar with the language because he reports that even father Abraham had to learn Hebrew. Nevertheless, he understood that a knowledge of Hebrew was absolutely necessary for the study of sacred books (12:25–27). He made use of a Palestinian biblical text. The earliest external witness to his work is found in a writing from Qumran (CD). He has special praise for the land of Lebanon from the Jordan to the sea (10:29). Jerusalem was holy (1:28), and Zion was the navel of the earth (8:19). Although his knowledge of world geography in chapters 8–10 is seriously deficient at many points, it is clear that he is more familiar with the area assigned to Shem than that assigned to Ham or Japheth. Within the area assigned to Shem, his knowledge of Canaan from the Jordan to the sea (10:29) is the greatest. Despite the fact that many place names have been corrupted in the transmission of the Ethiopic text, scholars have been able to reconstruct most of them, indicating that the author of Jubilees had a detailed knowledge of many cities and towns within ancient Canaan.

The author probably belonged to a priestly family. That may account for his special interest in the origin of festivals, the determination of sacred times, and his incessant concern for ritual details (21:7–18). In the supplemental material which he brings to the Genesis account, Levi is given priority over the sons of Jacob (chs. 30–32), even being set before Judah (31:12f.). Levi is also the one who is entrusted with a library of books (45:16) containing heavenly lore revealed to Jacob (32:21–26) and sacred traditions passed down from earlier patriarchs. One of the duties of Levi was to preserve and renew the books. If our author defines his own vocation at any point, it must be here. He undoubtedly saw himself as part of a continuous chain of priestly writers going back to Levi. The idea of renewing ancestral books probably implied a license to do more than just make new copies. He was commissioned to bring ancient traditions up to date.

The author's strict interpretation of the Law, his appeal to a distinct set of traditions which reported the cultic life and piety of the patriarchs, his hostility to surrounding nations, his abhorrence of gentile practices, his insistent demand for obedience to God's commands in a time of apostasy, his belief that God was about to create a new spirit within his people which would make possible a proper relationship between God and Israel, and his preoccupation with adherence to a calendar of 364 days are some of the characteristics which identify him as part of a zealous, conservative, pious segment of Judaism which was bound together by its own set of traditions, expectations, and practices. It is well known that such groups played a significant role in the struggles of the Maccabean age. First Maccabees 2:29–42 reports about one group that withdrew to the wilderness in their search for justice. When they were attacked on the sabbath by troops of the Seleucid king, they refused to defend themselves because war on the sabbath was forbidden. A similar prohibition is found in Jubilees 50:12. The group described in 1 Maccabees was slaughtered, but when Mattathias, the leader of the Maccabean revolt, made a public display of mourning for them, other pious groups of Hasidim joined forces with him. The spiritual genealogy of both the Pharisees and Essenes should probably be traced back to those groups of pious Hasidim. The author of Jubilees belonged to the Hasidic or Essene branch of Judaism.

Historical importance

Although Jubilees presumes to give an account of the history of the world prior to the time of Moses, it does not add any trustworthy information beyond that which may incidentally be contained in the biblical writings. That does not mean that all of the supplemental information presented in Jubilees was composed on the basis of the author's imagination or his own contemporary history. It is obvious that he used a number of earlier sources. Unfortunately, all of the traditions were transposed into a patriarchal setting whether they belonged there or not. Thus accounts of wars against the Amorites and Edomites, which the author reinterpreted in light of the Maccabean battles, undoubtedly had a long prehistory in extrabiblical traditions. In Jubilees, however, they were radically recast and set within the patriarchal period, thus obscuring them and depriving them of their value as a witness to any original historical event that they may have once had.

As a witness to the author's own time, Jubilees is extremely important. Once the approximate date of Jubilees has been determined, it provides an excellent original source for the study of the social, political, and religious views of one group of Hasidim who lived near the middle of the second century B.C. It can, for example, provide evidence of Jewish reaction to some of the policies of Antiochus IV. According to 1 Maccabees, he was tolerant of apostate Jews who joined his cause, permitting them to build a gymnasium where they could imitate gentile ways, exercising in the nude, and disguising "their circumcision" (1Mac 1:14f.). Both of those evils are sharply criticized in Jubilees (3:31; 15:33f.). Antiochus is also credited with directing other actions that certainly must have outraged the community to which the author of Jubilees belonged. The king's orders led to the shedding of innocent blood (1Mac 1:37; cf. Jub 7:23-29), the banning of sacrifices (1Mac 1:45; cf. Jub 32:4-22), the profaning of the sabbath and festival days (1Mac 1:46; cf. Jub 23:19; 6:37), the prohibiting of circumcision (1Mac 1:47; cf. Jub 15:24-29), and a burning of books (1Mac 1:56; cf. Jub 45:16).

If Jubilees is dated between 161-140 B.C., it becomes an important primary source for studying the evolution of the various religious parties which became prominent in Judea just before the birth of Christ. Its kinship with the sect at Qumran and its relationship to certain other writings has been described by F. M. Cross in the following terms:

The concrete contacts in theology, terminology, calendrical peculiarities, and priestly interests, between the editions of Enoch, Jubilees, and the Testaments of Levi and Naphtali found at Qumran on the one hand, and the demonstrably sectarian works of Qumran on the other, are so systematic and detailed that we must place the composition of these works within a single line of tradition.<sup>32</sup>

As an early witness to that "line of tradition," Jubilees may be understood to be a product of one of the "proto-Essene (presumably Hasidic) communities" mentioned elsewhere by Cross.<sup>33</sup> There are also parallels between Jubilees and later rabbinic attitudes. We can no longer agree with Charles's judgment that the author was "a pharisee of the strictest sect,"<sup>34</sup> but his view was not absurd. Before the discovery of the library at Qumran, it was quite reasonable to read Jubilees in light of the more abundant literature from Pharisaic circles. That a kinship exists between Jubilees and later works by the Pharisees is due to the fact that the Pharisees also had roots in the Hasidic movement of the Maccabean age. To the degree that Jubilees accurately reflects a proto-Essene position, it also provides evidence that at the time of its writing the boundaries between Pharisees and Essenes were not as sharply drawn as they were a hundred years later. Finally, if Milik is correct in tracing the early Enoch books to Samaritan circles, the obvious relationships between Jubilees and Enoch raise interesting questions about the openness of the Hasidim to Samaritan influences during the Maccabean period.<sup>35</sup>

Theological importance

There are a number of excellent discussions of the theology of Jubilees. One of the finest is that of M. Testuz.<sup>36</sup> He was able to go beyond most earlier studies because he saw clearly the nature of the theological parallels between Jubilees and Qumran. G. Davenport has also made an important contribution to the study of Jubilees by carefully examining its eschatology.<sup>37</sup> As a result of his study it would appear that the writer of Jubilees was scarcely interested in events which might occur beyond his own historical lifetime. He is

<sup>32</sup> F. M. Cross, The Ancient Library of Qumran and Modern Biblical Studies (rev. ed.; Garden City, N.Y., 1961) p. 199.

<sup>33</sup> Ibid., p. 200.

<sup>34</sup> Charles, The Book of Jubilees, p. lxxiii.

<sup>35</sup> J. T. Milik, The Books of Enoch: Aramaic Fragments of Qumrân Cave 4 (Oxford, 1976) pp. 9f., 13.

<sup>36</sup> Testuz, Les Idées religieuses.

<sup>37</sup> Davenport, The Eschatology of the Book of Jubilees.

not concerned to describe a future Messiah, to give a detailed account of a coming messianic age, or to discuss at length an afterlife. The first concern of the eschatological passages in Jubilees is to teach that God is now about to restore a proper relationship with his people and to call the readers to obedience. If one is aware of the new information to be gleaned from the Qumran texts and adopts a cautious view regarding the interpretation of the eschatological passages, most of the earlier discussions of the theology of Jubilees may be read with profit. Only the briefest outline is possible in the present work.

In general, the writer of Jubilees expected his readers to share a common view of God derived from the Old Testament, together with all which that implied about the power, glory, majesty, wisdom, justice, creativity, compassion, or wrath of an ethical deity who had called forth a unique people to serve him in righteousness. His view of God's intent for Israel vis-à-vis the other nations, however, falls short of Second Isaiah's "light of the nations" (Isa 42:6) or Jonah's mission to Nineveh, siding instead with the Chronicler in calling for a rejection of all things gentile. In describing God's control of history, he has introduced certain nuances which lead in the direction of a rather strict determinism. It is clear that the author assumed that men were both free and culpable for their sins. Nevertheless, when he makes God the speaker of the prophetic words in chapter 1, they are no longer prophetic words. They become facts present in the foreknowledge of God. Prophetic words are not necessarily inevitable; but there is no avoiding what God knows to be the future. The fact that certain predictions are inscribed on heavenly tablets (5:13) implies the same fixed order of events. Even the evil forces of the world are fixed by God. Mastema, who has been allotted exactly one tenth of the demons born in the days of Noah (10:9), may be bound by God at will (48:15).

Between God and man, Jubilees introduces us to a host of angels and demons. The author stands at the beginning of a long history of speculation regarding that realm. In his account, only the prince of evil spirits, Mastema (= Satan), is named (10:8). The angels are described only by rank. There are two high ranks of angels: the angels of the presence and the angels of sanctification. They are born circumcised (15:27) and are therefore able to participate with Israel in all of her rites and feasts, including the sabbath rest (2:18). Lest the world go uncared for on the seventh day, however, God also created lesser angelic powers such as the spirits of wind, darkness, snow, and heat (2:2). There is also a class of angels known as Watchers, who were sent to instruct men and to do righteousness (4:15), but they corrupted themselves by having intercourse with the daughters of men who bore them giants (7:21f.). The Watchers also fathered a host of evil demons who plagued the sons of Noah (10:1-6).

Both angels and demons have their proper work to do within the world. Angelic spirits control the forces of nature within the world (2:2f.). Good angels teach men skills (3:15; 12:26f.), inform them of God's will (12:22), test them (19:3), report their sins to God (4:6), announce future events (16:1-4, 16), reveal secret cosmic lore (4:21), bind up evil spirits (10:9f.), and actively assist those who are attacked by the forces of evil (48:4, 13). Good angels may be assigned to guard men (35:17), but those assigned to direct the gentile nations lead them astray (15:31). The Watchers were originally good angels (4:15) who fell into sin with the daughters of men and were bound in the midst of the earth (5:6-11). Their children, the giants, were destroyed, but the spirits of their children (1En 15:8f.) wander the earth as demons, causing diseases (10:11f.), leading men astray (10:1f.), seeking human sacrifice, and encouraging idolatry (1:11).

The author's interest in demonic powers provided a practical way of dealing with the problem of evil: How can one affirm both the omnipotence and goodness of God in the presence of manifest evil? In other words, where does evil come from? The author of Jubilees would teach us three things about evil: (1) It is superhuman; (2) but it is not caused by God; (3) therefore it comes from the angelic world, which has suffered a breach from God's good order. The author of Jubilees does not blame Adam for the continuing diseases and sins of mankind. The cause of evil is clearly superhuman, and Jubilees continually stresses the helplessness of men (10:1f., 8) and nations (15:31) before its power. Nevertheless God cannot be held responsible. The author of Jubilees is so certain of that point that he can recast the biblical traditions with confidence. It was Mastema and not God who tempted Abraham to kill Isaac (17:15-18:13; cf. Gen 22:1-19), who provoked the Egyptians to pursue Israel (48:12; cf. Ex 14:8f.), and who sought to kill Moses on the way to Egypt (48:2f.; cf. Ex 4:24). The origin of Mastema is not separately discussed in Jubilees, but the spirits which serve him are all traced to a cosmic breach which occurred when the Watchers violated their natural order to mate with the daughters of men. The story of the fall of Adam is repeated in Jubilees, but it is the fall in the superhuman or semidivine realm that most readily explains the presence of evil in the world since the time of the Flood.

The dualism of the angelic world was reflected in the world of men. The good kingdom was identified with the children of Israel. God, their Father (1:28), selected them as a special people above all peoples (2:21) to be marked by circumcision (15:11) and to participate with him and his highest angels in the sabbath and all of the other festivals of Israel. The other nations are separated from God because he has placed spirits in authority over them to lead them astray. God alone rules Israel (15:32f.). Israel is qualitatively different from all other nations. In the context of such an understanding, the hostility between Israel and surrounding nations may be seen as a conflict between good and evil. The Lord destroyed the Rephaim because of their evil (29:11). The Egyptians were motivated to pursue Israel by the prince of evil, Mastema (48:12). The Philistines were cursed by Isaac (24:28–33), and the Canaanites were described as being more cursed than all the sons of Noah for illegitimately seizing the land that Israel was to occupy (10:32). The Shechemites (30:4–6), the Amorites (34:1–9), and the Edomites (38:1–10) were all destroyed by the righteous sons of Israel. On a theological level, we are to understand that those who do not belong to the children of the covenant belong to the children of destruction (15:26). It is possible, of course, for even the children of Israel to be subject to attack by the spiritual powers of evil (48:2f.). In such a case, the good angels of God will save them (48:4), and God himself will call to account both his angels and spirits in order to preserve and bless the children of Israel (15:32). When the children of Israel sin, however, God provides a day in which they may repent and be forgiven (5:17f.).

The priestly author of Jubilees presents his theological work with the authority of one who understands himself to be representing "the normative, orthodox" position. He knows of periods of apostasy when the children of Israel will go astray (1:8–11). In some cases sinners will act so outrageously that they will have to be cut off from the covenant and left without pardon or forgiveness (15:34). Nevertheless, he is writing at a time when he expects a general return to the "normative" position which he represents (23:26). Undoubtedly, his hope was frustrated. It would not be too long before his views would be ignored or contested, particularly his view of the calendar. Chapter 6:34–38 bears witness to the fact that there were many who did not observe it in his own time. He accuses them of sharing the ignorance and errors of the gentiles (6:35), but there is no evidence that they were in any position to threaten or prevent his own proper observance of festival times. He does not give us any reason to believe that he belonged to a small sectarian minority. It was only at a later time when intense party strife broke out in the struggles for the office of high priest and the rival lunar calendar was fixed in such a way as to exclude competition that those who followed the calendar of Jubilees would have to acknowledge their minority position. The theology of Jubilees has a uniqueness over against the views put forth by other groups, but it was not directed toward a small embattled minority. It was a theology appealing to all of the pious sons of Israel to return to strict obedience to the law and a proper observance of sacred times in accordance with God's covenant.

Relation to canonical books

The author of Jubilees had before him most of the books of the Old Testament. His use of the Pentateuch is extensive. Genesis 1 through Exodus 24:18 provided the major source used by the author, but he also used legal and cultic data found elsewhere in the first five books. In several passages the author refers or alludes to the book of the "first law" (6:22; 30:12, 21; 50:6). The most obvious identification for that book of law is the Pentateuch.

The author was also familiar with the books contained in that portion of the Hebrew Bible known as the Prophets. He makes use of expressions and data familiar from Kings, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and several of the twelve minor prophets. Examples are cited in the margin of the translation of Jubilees which follows.

The author's familiarity with books contained in the portion of the Hebrew Bible known as the Writings is less clear. Granted the date of Jubilees and its provenance, he was probably not familiar with the Book of Esther. The marginal citations indicate a familiarity with Psalms and the work of the Chronicler (1Chr, 2Chr, Ezra, Neh). The temptations of Abraham in Jubilees 17f. clearly reflect the motif found in Job. Evidence for his familiarity with other books in the collection of Writings is not clearly present.

Evidence for the use of data appearing in Jubilees by writers of the New Testament is conveniently summarized by Charles. On the basis of the evidence which he provided,<sup>38</sup> it is clear that Paul and the authors of Luke-Acts, James, Hebrews, and 2 Peter were familiar with expressions and ideas that appear in Jubilees.

Relation to apocryphal books

The relationship of Jubilees to other apocryphal writings remains an open and perplexing question. The recovery of fragments of both previously known and newly discovered apocryphal works from Qumran has led to a general reappraisal of many of the documents. In the case of Jubilees, the discoveries led to a new understanding of its proto-Essene provenance and support for dating the work prior to the Essene split with the Maccabean rulers. In the case of Enoch and the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, the finds at Qumran have opened up a new discussion of the evolution of those documents. Inasmuch as they are composite works, the question of dating the separate parts of each text has generated considerable debate.<sup>39</sup> In the case of the so-called Hymn to the Creator from the Qumran Psalms Scroll and the better-known Genesis Apocryphon (1QapGen), we are confronted with two entirely new texts which are very closely related to Jubilees. A clear understanding of their relationship to Jubilees would require a firm dating for both texts.

Inasmuch as Jubilees was part of a rather vast library of texts of uncertain date which were either used or written by the sect at Qumran, it will require much more research before the relative relationships between interdependent texts can be clearly demonstrated. In the process of publishing additional fragments from Qumran many new parallels to Jubilees will undoubtedly be uncovered. It will also require time to fix their relationship precisely. In the meantime, the best that can be done is to offer reasonable suggestions in the light of our present knowledge.

It is generally agreed that Jubilees is dependent on parts of the book of Enoch (1En). At the same time, it seems likely that the later portions of Enoch may be based on Jubilees. The question has been dealt with most recently by J. T. Milik, who argues that only four books of the later Enochic Pentateuch were known at Qumran. The four were: (1) a larger version of the Astronomical Book (1En 72-82); (2) the Book of Watchers (1En 1-36); (3) the Book of Dreams (1En 83-90); and (4) the Epistle of Enoch (1En 91-108). From that list, he dated the first three prior to Jubilees, following Charles in the assumption that Jubilees made use of them. With regard to the epistle, Milik assumed that it depended on Jubilees.<sup>40</sup>

The relationship which exists between the Aramaic apocryphal text of Levi, the Testament of Levi, and the Book of Jubilees has been most recently studied by A. Hultgård. It is his opinion that the apocryphal text and Jubilees depend on a common source. He claims, however, that the author of the Testament of Levi made use of the Aramaic apocryphal text of Levi in writing his testament. Thus the parallels which are noted between Jubilees and the Testament of Levi are less immediate.<sup>41</sup> That interpretation appears justified in light of our present understanding of the texts.

<sup>38</sup> Charles, The Book of Jubilees, pp. lxxxiii-lxxxv.

<sup>39</sup> The problem of the evolution of Jub has also been raised anew. G. L. Davenport began the investigation in his study of The Eschatology of the Book of Jubilees. Davenport's analysis of the structure of those chs. of Jub with which he dealt was very carefully done, but he treated only a limited amount of text.

<sup>40</sup> Milik, The Books of Enoch. Milik mentioned the dependence of Jub on the Astronomical Book (p. 11), the Watchers (p. 24), and the Book of Dreams (p. 45). On p. 255 he suggested that the epistle was dependent on Jubilees. More recently VanderKam has argued that the reverse is true ("Enoch Traditions in Jubilees and Other Second-Century Sources," Seminar Papers of the Society of Biblical Literature [Missoula, Mont., 1978] vol. 1, pp. 229-51).

<sup>41</sup> A. Hultgård, L'Eschatologie des Testaments des Douze Patriarches (Uppsala, Sweden, 1977) vol. 1, pp. 24, 45.

P. W. Skehan was the first to point out the close relationship between Jubilees and the Hymn to the Creator from the Psalms Scroll. He accepted Milik's judgment that Jubilees was to be dated from the end of the second century and assumed that it was dependent on the hymn.<sup>42</sup> When Avigad and Yadin published the Genesis Apocryphon in 1956, they assumed that it was also earlier than the Book of Jubilees and served as a source for it.<sup>43</sup> It is our opinion that in the case of both documents that judgment must now be reversed. Jubilees was written earlier and served as a source for both the Hymn to the Creator and the Genesis Apocryphon.

Other texts from Qumran that use expressions or ideas which are also found in Jubilees include the Damascus Document, which cites Jubilees by name (CD 16.2-4), the Manual of Discipline, the Hymns, and the Florilegium from Cave 4.

Note on the translation

The translation which follows is quite literal. The majority of students who make use of the translation will probably not be familiar with Ge'ez, the ancient dialect of Ethiopic used in writing the text. Therefore we have tried to remain as close to the simple wording of the text as possible. Significant words or phrases inserted to aid in the translation are put in parentheses. When square brackets are used, an accompanying footnote will explain their significance.

In the notes which accompany the translation an attempt has been made to indicate those passages for which there exists a parallel text in Hebrew, Latin, or Syriac.

The Ethiopic and Latin texts which have been used are those published by R. H. Charles in The Ethiopic Version of the Hebrew Book of Jubilees (Oxford, 1895). A number of significant textual comments were subsequently made by Charles in The Book of Jubilees or the Little Genesis (London, 1902). References in the notes to Charles's English translation are citations of this work.

The Hebrew text which was used was taken from J. VanderKam's convenient summary in Textual and Historical Studies in the Book of Jubilees. References to VanderKam's discussion of the Hebrew text are to be found in that volume unless otherwise noted.

The Syriac text which was used was published by E. Tisserant in "Fragments syriaques du Livre des Jubilés," RB 30 (1921), 55-86; 206-32. References to Tisserant's discussion of the Syriac text are to be found in that volume.

No attempt was made to cite all parallels in Greek texts. A large group is contained in A.-M. Denis's Fragmenta pseudepigraphorum quae supersunt graeca (Leiden, 1970; pp. 70-102). A number of them are also found in Charles's The Ethiopic Version of the Hebrew Book of Jubilees and his English translation, cited above.

<sup>42</sup> P. W. Skehan, "Jubilees and the Qumran Psalter," CBQ 37 (1975) 343-47.

<sup>43</sup> N. Avigad and Y. Yadin, A Genesis Apocryphon: A Scroll from the Wilderness of Judea (Jerusalem, 1956) p. 38.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 143–47.

Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 172–74.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 150–62.

Charles, R. H. The Ethiopic Version of the Hebrew Book of Jubilees. Oxford, 1895. (This edition contains an Eth. text edited from four MSS. In separate appendices Charles has provided parallel portions from (1) the Heb. Book of Noah, (2) the Midrash Wayyissau, and (3) a Syr. text naming the wives of the Patriarchs.)

———. The Book of Jubilees or the Little Genesis. London, 1902. (This vol. contains an ET, introduction, and commentary on the text. It includes an annotated bibliography on previous editions, translations, and critical studies of the text.)

Davenport, G. L. The Eschatology of the Book of Jubilees. SPB 20; Leiden, 1971. (An attempt to deal with Jubilees in terms of redaction criticism.)

Denis, A.-M. "Liber Jubilaeorum," Fragmenta pseudepigraphorum quae supersunt graeca. PVTG 3; Leiden, 1970; pp. 70–102. (A collection of Gk. parallels and citations.)

Hölscher, G. "Die Karte des Jubiläenbuches," Drei Erdkarten. Heidelberg, 1949; pp. 57–73.

Jaubert, A. "The Calendar of Jubilees," The Date of the Last Supper, trans. I. Rafferty. Staten Island, N.Y., 1965; pp. 15–30. (A good summation of Jaubert's important discoveries regarding the calendar.)

Martin, F. "Le Livre des Jubilés. But et procédés de l'auteur. Ses doctrines," RB 8 (1911) 321–44; 502–33. (A relatively brief, well-written introduction. Although written prior to the Qumran discoveries, it reflects sensitive theological insight.)

Rönsch, H. Das Buch der Jubiläen oder die kleine Genesis, Leipzig, 1874; repr. Amsterdam, 1970. (This edition contains a Lat. text, which Charles sought to improve upon. It also contains a mine of interesting material dealing with parallel literature, including handy German translations of parallel texts that are sometimes hard to find.)

Testuz, M. Les Idées religieuses du livre des Jubilés. Geneva, 1960. (Although Testuz ties the author too closely to the Essenes of Qumran, he provides an outstanding introduction to the religious issues in Jub.)

VanderKam, J. C. Textual and Historical Studies in the Book of Jubilees. Harvard Semitic Museum, Harvard Semitic Monograph 14; Missoula, Mont., 1977. (Provides a summary of the Heb. texts from Qumran which have been published thus far. Includes an important discussion of the dating of Jub and a study of textual affinities of biblical citations in Jub.)

THE BOOK OF DIVISION

Title<sup>a</sup>

This is The Account of the Division of Days of the Law and the Testimony for Annual Observance according to their Weeks (of years) and their Jubilees<sup>b</sup> throughout all the Years of the World just as the LORD told it to Moses on Mount Sinai when he went up to receive the tablets of the Law and the commandment<sup>c</sup> by the word of the LORD, as he said to him, "Come up to the top of the mountain."

Ex 24:12

Moses is summoned to the mountain

- 1 1 In the first year of the Exodus of the children of Israel from Egypt, in the third month on the sixteenth day of that month, the LORD spoke to Moses, saying, "Come up to me on the mountain, and I shall give you two stone tablets of the Law and the commandment, which I have written, so that you may teach them."
- 2 And Moses went up to the mountain of the LORD. And the glory of the LORD
- 3 dwelt upon Mount Sinai, and a cloud overshadowed it for six days. •And he called to Moses on the seventh day from<sup>d</sup> the midst of the cloud. And the appearance of the glory of the LORD was like fire burning on top of the mountain.
- 4 And Moses was on the mountain forty days and forty nights.

Ex 31:18
Deut 9:11
Ex 32:15

Moses instructed to write a book

- And the LORD revealed to him both what (was) in the beginning and what will occur (in the future), the account of the division of all of the days of the Law and the testimony. •And he said, "Set your mind on every thing which I shall tell you on this mountain, and write it in a book so that their descendants might see that I have not abandoned them on account of all of the evil which they have done to instigate transgression<sup>e</sup> of the covenant which I am establishing between
- 5 me and you today on Mount Sinai for their descendants. •And thus it will be, when all of these things happen to them, that they will know that I have been more righteous than they in all their judgments and deeds. And they will know that I have truly been with them.

Ex 34:27

Deut 30:1

Moses is told how the people will forsake the LORD in the land of promise

- 7 "And you, write for yourself all of these words which I shall cause you to know today, for I know their rebelliousness and their stubbornness before I cause them to enter the land which I swore to their fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob,
- 8 saying, 'I will give to your seed a land flowing with milk and honey.' •And they will eat and be satisfied, and they will turn to strange gods, to those who

Deut 31:27

Deut 30:20
Ex 33:1
Deut 31:20

1 a. MS B begins with a trinitarian formula and the blessing "May the LORD God of all spirit and all flesh be blessed."

b. In order to provide a chronological framework for dealing with events covering a long period of time, the author has used a system based on multiples of seven, the number of days in the week. Seven years are treated as a week of years, and seven weeks of years equal a jubilee.

c. "The Law and the Commandment" are mentioned in Ex 24:12. The Heb. is hattôrâ and hammišwâ.

d. The preposition "from" is supplied from the reading in Ex 24:16. The Eth. text reads "in." The corruption may have occurred in reading the Heb. text in a scriptorium. The labial "m" in mitok may have been heard as the labial "b" in bétok.

e. The translation "to instigate transgression" is an attempt to render the causative form of the verb which appears in the Eth. MSS. In his English translation, Charles emended the form to read as a basic tense he rendered "in transgressing."

cannot save them from any of their affliction. And this testimony will be heard 9 as testimony against them, •for they will forget all of my commandments, 2Kgs 17:15 everything which I shall command them, and they will walk after the gentiles and Ezra 9:10f.
 after their defilement and shame. And they will serve their gods, and they will 2Kgs 17:2 10 become a scandal for them and an affliction and a torment and a snare. •And Ex 23:33 many will be destroyed and seized and will fall into the hand of the enemy because they have forsaken my ordinances and my commandments and the feasts of my covenant and my sabbaths and my sacred place, which I sanctified for myself among them, and my tabernacle and my sanctuary, which I sanctified for myself in the midst of the land so that I might set my name upon it and might dwell Ezek 20:28 11 (there). •And they will make for themselves high places and groves and carved idols. And each of them will worship his own (idol) so as to go astray. And they will sacrifice their children to the demons and to every work of the error of their heart. 2Chr 28:3
 Ezek 20:31
 1En 99:7

The murder of prophets, the captivity, and the loss of the cult

12 “And I shall send to them witnesses so that I might witness to them, but they 2Chr 24:19 will not hear. And they will even kill the witnesses. And they will persecute those Jer 25:4
 who search out the Law, and they will neglect everything and begin<sup>f</sup> to do evil Neh 9:26 13 in my sight. •And I shall hide my face from them, and I shall give them over to Isa 1:15 the power of the nations to be captive, and for plunder, and to be devoured. And 2Kgs 21:14
 I shall remove them from the midst of the land, and I shall scatter them among CD 1.2-8 14 the nations. •And they will forget all of my laws and all of my commandments and all of my judgments, and they will err concerning new moons, sabbaths, Deut 4:28; 28:36,64
 CD 3.13-15
 festivals, jubilees, and ordinances.

Repentance and restoration

15 “And afterward they will turn to me from among the nations with all their heart Deut 4:29f.
 and with all their soul and with all their might. And I shall gather them from the Jer 29:14 midst of all the nations. And they will seek me so that I might be found by them. Jer 29:13
 When they seek me with all their heart and with all their soul, I shall reveal to Jer 32:41 16 them an abundance of peace in righteousness. •And with all my heart and with all my soul I shall transplant<sup>g</sup> them as a righteous plant. And they will be a Zech 8:13 17 blessing and not a curse. And they will be the head and not the tail. •And I shall CD 1.7
 build my sanctuary in their midst, and I shall dwell with them. And I shall be Ex 25:8; 29:45 18 their God and they will be my people truly and rightly. •And I shall not forsake Lev 26:12 them, and I shall not be alienated from them because I am the LORD their God.” Jer 24:7
 Deut 31:6

Moses' prayer of intercession

19 And Moses fell upon his face, and he prayed and said, “O Lord, my God, do 2Kgs 21:14 not abandon your people and your inheritance to walk in the error of their heart. Ps 106:41
 And do not deliver them into the hand of their enemy, the gentiles, lest they rule Deut 9:26 over them and cause them to sin against you.
 20 “O Lord, let your mercy be lifted up upon your people, and create for them Ps 51:10 an upright spirit. And do not let the spirit of Beliar<sup>h</sup> rule over them to accuse IQS 1.24 them before you and ensnare them from every path of righteousness so that they 21 might be destroyed from before your face. •But they are your people and your Deut 9:26,29 inheritance, whom you saved by your great might from the hand of the Egyptians.

f. The reading “begin” is found in MSS B C D. Charles preferred to follow MS A in his text, which reads “change.”

g. The Eth. word means “remove.” It has the sense of moving away from one's home and is hardly suitable in this context. The passage appears to be corrupt, and “transplant” is, at best, a weak attempt to make sense of a difficult text.

h. In 1Sam 2:12 the Heb. expression “sons of Beliar” is translated “worthless men.” Later the term “Beliar” came to designate a demonic power; here it refers to Satan.

Create a pure heart and a holy spirit for them. And do not let them be ensnared by their sin henceforth and forever.”

The LORD predicts a restoration of the people

- 22 And the LORD said to Moses, “I know their contrariness and their thoughts and their stubbornness. And they will not obey until they acknowledge their sin and the sins of their fathers. •But after this they will return to me in all uprightness and with all of (their) heart and soul. And I shall cut off the foreskin of their heart and the foreskin of the heart of their descendants. And I shall create for them a holy spirit, and I shall purify them so that they will not turn away from following me from that day and forever. •And their souls will cleave to me and to all my commandments. And they will do my commandments.
- 23 and the sins of their fathers. •But after this they will return to me in all uprightness and with all of (their) heart and soul. And I shall cut off the foreskin of their heart and the foreskin of the heart of their descendants. And I shall create for them a holy spirit, and I shall purify them so that they will not turn away from following me from that day and forever. •And their souls will cleave to me and to all my commandments. And they will do my commandments.
- 24 turn away from following me from that day and forever. •And their souls will cleave to me and to all my commandments. And they will do my commandments.
- 25 And I shall be a father to them, and they will be sons to me. •And they will all be called ‘sons of the living God.’ And every angel and spirit will know and acknowledge that they are my sons and I am their father in uprightness and righteousness. And I shall love them.

Moses told again to write

- 26 “And you write down for yourself<sup>i</sup> all of the matters which I shall make known to you on this mountain: what (was) in the beginning and what (will be) at the end, what will happen in all of the divisions of the days which are in the Law and testimony and throughout their weeks (of years) according to the jubilees forever,<sup>j</sup> until I shall descend and dwell with them in all the ages of eternity.”

The Angel of the presence is instructed to write the history for Moses

- 27 And he said to the angel of the presence, “Write for Moses from the first creation until my sanctuary is built in their midst forever and ever. •And the LORD will appear in the sight of all. And everyone will know that I am the God of Israel and the father of all the children of Jacob and king upon Mount Zion forever and ever. And Zion and Jerusalem will be holy.”

The Angel of the presence receives the tablets containing the history

- 29 And the angel of the presence, who went before the camp of Israel, took the tablets of the division of years from the time of the creation of the law and testimony according to their weeks (of years), according to the jubilees, year by year throughout the full number of jubilees, from<sup>k</sup> [the day of creation until]<sup>l</sup> the day of the new creation when the heaven and earth and all of their creatures shall be renewed according to the powers of heaven and according to the whole nature of earth, until the sanctuary of the LORD is created in Jerusalem upon Mount Zion. And all of the lights will be renewed for healing and peace and blessing for

i. The four MSS consulted by Charles differ on the text at this point. MSS A D read “And I shall write down for you.” Charles used that reading in his Eth. text, but turned to the reading of B C in his English translation. We have also followed B C.

j. This sentence contains phrases similar to those which appear in the title and in vs. 1:4. The book that Moses is asked to write is a “second law.” The Pentateuch was apparently the book of the first law, which was written by God himself, according to Jub 6:22. In Ex 34:27 Moses was directed to write certain laws, but in Ex 34:1 God wrote the famous tablets of stone.

k. Charles’s Eth. text contains a fuller reading, i.e. “year by year from.” The repetition of “year by year” appears to be a gloss resulting from dittography. MS B does not repeat “year by year” at this point.

l. The portion of text between brackets has been restored following a suggestion by M. Stone, “Apocryphal Notes and Readings,” Israel Oriental Studies 1 (1971) 125f. It is assumed that a scribe had to copy the phrase “from [the day of creation until] the day of the new creation.” By homoeoteleuton, in which his eye skipped from the first “the day” to the second, he omitted the phrase between brackets. The suggestion by Stone makes sense of a passage that has long puzzled commentators.

all of the elect of Israel and in order that it might be thus from that day and unto all the days of the earth.

Description of six days of creation

1 2 And the angel of the presence spoke to Moses by the word of the LORD, saying, "Write the whole account of creation, that in six days the LORD God completed all his work and all that he created. And he observed a sabbath the seventh day, and he sanctified it for all ages. And he set it (as) a sign for all his works."

2 For<sup>a</sup> on the first day he created the heavens, which are above, and the earth, and the waters and all of the spirits which minister before him: Job 38:7

|   |                 |
|---|-----------------|
| the angels of the presence,   | Ps 104:4        |
| and the angels of sanctification,   | 1En 60:12-21    |
| and the angels of the spirit of fire, <sup>b</sup>  | 1En 75          |
| and the angels of the spirit of the winds,  | 1En 80          |
| and the angels of the spirit of the clouds and darkness and snow <sup>c</sup> and hail and frost, | 2En 19:1-4      |
| and the angels of resoundings <sup>d</sup> and thunder and lightning,                             | Ps 77:18; 104:7 |
| and the angels of the spirits of cold and heat and winter and springtime and harvest and summer,  | Job 37:4        |
| and all of the spirits of his creatures which are in heaven and on earth.                         |                 |

And (he created) the abysses<sup>e</sup> and darkness—both evening and night<sup>f</sup>—and light—both dawn and daylight<sup>g</sup>—which he prepared in the knowledge of his heart.

3 Then we saw his works and we blessed him<sup>h</sup> and offered praise before him on account of all his works because he made seven<sup>i</sup> great works on the first day.

2 a. There is a Gk. text contained in a work by Epiphanius entitled De mensuris et ponderibus, which is parallel to Jub 2:2–21. Charles published the relevant portions of that text in parallel columns opposite his Eth. text. Although the Gk. text is frequently abbreviated, it is, however, quite close to the Eth. in the passages which remain.

A portion of the Syr. text published by E. Tisserant also begins at this point and continues through vs. 16. The Syr. parallel is not as precise as the Gk., but it is helpful in confirming a few readings.

b. The "angels of the spirit of fire" are mentioned in MSS B C D, but are lacking in MS A and the Gk. text of Epiphanius. Charles did not include the phrase in his Eth. text, but he had it printed between brackets in his English translation. The phrase is also lacking in Syr., but that text is drastically abbreviated.

c. The word "snow" is supplied from the Gk. text of Epiphanius. Eth. MSS C D omit the word and MSS A B read "and everything," which is difficult.

d. The Eth. word which appears in the MSS means "depths," but Charles emended it to read "voices" in agreement with the reading in Epiphanius. If translated literally, the Eth. word for "voices" would not appear to be as suitable to read beside "thunder and lightning" as "depths," but the Heb. word qol, which was probably used in this passage, means both "voice" and "thunder." It is in the latter sense that it is used here.

e. The Eth. MS reads "what is in the abysses," but Charles emended his text to agree with the Gk. The Syr. text also agrees with the Gk. The abyss is one of the seven works created by God on the first day. It is the abyss itself and not just its content that needed to be created the first day.

f. The word "night" is restored from the Gk. text of Epiphanius. It also seems justified to balance the structure of the sentence.

g. Only one Eth. MS (A) has the word "daylight," but its presence in the Gk. text supports the reading. The word order of the sentence from "darkness" to "daylight" follows the order in the Gk. text of Epiphanius. The word order in Eth. differs.

h. There is an interesting parallel in a text from a Qumran collection of Psalms (11QPs<sup>a</sup>). P. W. Skehan referred to it as the "Hymn to the Creator" ("Jubilees and the Qumran Psalter" CBQ 37 [1975] 343–47). He demonstrated that vs. 4–6 of that hymn, in which the author describes God's creative acts and the hymnic response of the angels, are closely related to Jub 2:2f. The number of literal parallels is striking.

This theme of angelic praise to the Creator on the day when the angels were created has more recently appeared in the famous collection of Coptic gnostic tractates from Nag Hammadi. In the Apocryphon of John, for example, as each pair of invisible eons is created they glorify the Invisible One and his perfect power, Barbelo (5:18–9:25; cf. NHL, pp. 98–116).

This theme already appears in Job 38:7 where "the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy," but both the Qumran and later Nag Hammadi texts reflect an elaboration of the motif suggested by Jub.

i. The seven created works were: heaven, earth, waters, all the ministering spirits, the abyss, darkness, and light.

- 4 And on the second day he made the firmament in the midst of the water. And the waters were divided on that day. One half of them went up above, and one half of them went down beneath the firmament (which is) in the middle over the surface of all of the earth. And he made only this (one) work on the second day. Gen 1:7 2En 26f.
- 5 On the third day he did as he said<sup>j</sup> to the waters, "Let them pass from the surface of the whole earth into one place, and let the dry land appear." 2En 30:1
- 6 And the waters did as he said. And they turned aside from upon the surface of the earth into one place outside of this firmament.<sup>k</sup> And dry land appeared. 4Ezra 3:6
- 7 And on that day he created for it all of the seas in each of their gathering places, and all of the rivers, and the gathering places of the waters on the mountains and in all the earth, and all of the ponds, and all of the dew of the earth, and the seed which is sown, and everything which is eaten,<sup>l</sup> and trees which bear fruit and (other) trees, and the garden of Eden in Eden—in (the place of) luxury<sup>m</sup>—and everything.<sup>n</sup> These four great species the LORD made on the third day.<sup>o</sup>
- 8 And on the fourth day he made the sun and the moon and the stars. And he set them in the firmament of heaven so that they might give light upon the whole earth and rule over the day and the night and separate light and darkness. Gen 1:14-19
2En 30:2-6
- 9 And the LORD set the sun<sup>p</sup> as a great sign upon the earth for days, sabbaths, months, feast (days), years, sabbaths of years, jubilees, and for all of the (appointed) times of the years—and it separates the light from the darkness—and so that everything which sprouts and grows upon the earth might surely prosper. These three kinds he made on the fourth day.<sup>q</sup>
- 10 And on the fifth day he created the great sea monsters in the midst of the depths of the waters—for these were made by his hands as the first corporeal beings—and all the fish which move in the waters,<sup>r</sup> and all the birds which fly, and all of their kind. Gen 1:20-23
2En 30:7
- 11 And the sun rose above them to make them prosper and above

j. In translating this vs. it was assumed that the phrase "as he said" was a citation formula of the type which is now well known from Qumran. It is also assumed that the quotation is an attempt to approximate Gen 1:9. The text of Jub, however, differs from both Heb. and Gk. texts of Gen 1:9, directing the waters to "pass over from" rather than being "gathered together into." This text may, however, provide the basis for an unusual statement which appears in the Nag Hammadi tractate On the Origin of the World (CG2, 100:10-14). In that text the unintentional creative force is Pistis Sophia, and the primordial, chaotic waters of Gen 1 are the wellspring of evil within the world, which is controlled by Yaldabaoth. The text is filled with a number of verbal allusions to Gen 1. The biblical background of CG2, 100:10-14 has not been explained, but it could quite easily be based on the wording of the present text of Jub. The passage reads as follows: "Then when Pistis Sophia saw him moving in the depth of the waters, she said to him, 'O youth, pass over here,' which is interpreted Yaldabaoth." NHL, p. 163.

The phrase "from the surface of the whole earth" could also be translated "from the presence of the whole earth." In vs. 6 the waters are actually removed to a place "outside this firmament." Both readings would have pleased the gnostics, who understood what happened to Yaldabaoth in a similar manner, as he exalted himself and moved above this firmament.

k. The Syr. text describes the place to which the waters are removed as "the midst of the firmament." In his commentary, Tisserant suggested that the variant texts were due to a confusion between the Heb. forms mittok and bētōk (cf. ch. 1, n. d).

l. The Gk. text of Epiphanius reads "the sprouts." Charles emended his Eth. text to read "everything which sprouts," in agreement with the Gk.

m. Read batadlā for latadlā. The Gk. phrase would have been en truphē, which is an attempt to translate the Heb. phrase "in Eden" into Gk. That emendation was suggested by Charles in the notes to his English translation. It is now possible to provide an additional support for this reading. The Nag Hammadi tractate On the Origin of the World, which reflects a number of contacts with the wording of Jub, has preserved a description of Paradise. According to that text, Paradise is located "outside the circuit of the moon and the circuit of the sun in the luxuriant [truphē] earth" (CG2, 110:3-5). The reason for creating it outside the circuit of the moon and the sun is probably related to the fact that neither sun nor moon had yet been created. In the book of Jub, which is the most likely source of this detail, the sun and moon are mentioned in the following vs., which describes the creative acts of the fourth day.

n. The Gk. text of Epiphanius reads "and all the plants according to (their) kind."

o. The four works are the creation of dry land, bodies of water, flora, and Eden.

p. The writer mentions only the sun, and not the moon, as the determinant for holy days. This is in keeping with his quasi-solar year of 364 days and his strident opposition to lunar calculations.

q. The three are the sun, moon, and stars.

r. The Gk. text of Epiphanius reads "the fish and the other crawling things in the water." Charles rearranged the Eth. word order to agree with the reading of the Gk.

s. The three are sea monsters, fish, and birds.

everything which was on the earth, everything which sprouts from the earth, and every tree which bears fruit, and all flesh. These three kinds he made on the fifth day.<sup>s</sup>

- 13 And on the sixth day he made all of the beasts of the earth and all of the cattle 14 and everything which moves upon the earth. •And after all of this, he made man—male and female he made them—and he gave him dominion over everything which was upon the earth and which was in the seas and over everything which flies, and over beasts and cattle and everything which moves upon the earth or above the whole earth. And over all this he gave him dominion. And these four 15.16 kinds he made on the sixth day.<sup>t</sup> •And the total was twenty-two kinds. •And he completed all of his work on the sixth day, everything which is in the heavens and the earth and the seas and the depths and in the light and in the darkness and in every place.

Gen 1:24-28
2En 30:8

Ex 20:11

The significance of the sabbath

- 17 And he gave us a great sign, the sabbath day, so that we might work six days 18 and observe a sabbath from all work on the seventh day. •And he told us—all of the angels of the presence and all of the angels of sanctification, these two great 19 kinds—that we might keep the sabbath with him in heaven and on earth. •And he said to us, “Behold I shall separate for myself a people from among all the nations. And they will also keep the sabbath. And I will sanctify them for myself,<sup>u</sup> and I will bless them. Just as I have sanctified and shall sanctify the sabbath day for myself thus shall I bless them. And they will be my people and I will be their 20 God. •And I have chosen the seed of Jacob from among all that I have seen. And I have recorded him as my firstborn son, and have sanctified him for myself forever and ever. And I will make known to them the sabbath day so that they might observe therein a sabbath from all work.”
- 21 And thus he created therein a sign by which they might keep the sabbath with us on the seventh day, to eat and drink and bless the one who created all things just as he blessed and sanctified for himself a people who appeared<sup>v</sup> from all the 22 nations so that they might keep the sabbath together with us.<sup>w</sup> •And he caused their desires<sup>x</sup> to go up as pleasing fragrance, which is acceptable before him always.
- 23 There were twenty-two chief men from Adam until Jacob,<sup>y</sup> and twenty-two kinds of works were made before the seventh day. The former is blessed and sanctified, and the latter is also blessed and sanctified. One was like the other 24 with respect to sanctification and blessing. •And it was granted to the former that they<sup>z</sup> should always be the blessed and sanctified ones of the testimony and the first law just as he<sup>a2</sup> had sanctified and blessed sabbath day on the seventh day.

Ex 31:13

1Kgs 8:53

Ex 31:13,17
Ezek 20:12

Isa 41:8; 44:1
Ex 4:22
Jer 31:9

Ex 31:13,17
Ezek 20:12

t. The four are wild beasts, domestic animals, reptiles, and man.

u. A adds “(as) my (own) people.”

v. Charles emended his Eth. text to read “whom he would possess” in agreement with Deut 7:6.

w. Charles has suggested that the phrase “so that they might keep the sabbath together with us” might be a dittography from the second clause in this vs.

x. The text reads “his desires,” but the pronoun probably refers to “the people,” which can be regarded as masculine singular in Heb. “Their desires” would then be the prayers of the people, which are like good incense.

y. Eth. “from Adam until him.” Charles was able to restore “Jacob” on the basis of the parallel which is found in Epiphanius’ De mensuris et ponderibus, ch. 22. That text goes on to point out that there are twenty-two letters in the Heb. alphabet and twenty-two sacred books. In his English translation of 1902, Charles assembled an impressive group of ancient witnesses which shared the expanded tradition of Epiphanius. He was also persuaded that there was a lacuna at the beginning of vs. 23 and proposed to restore it as follows: “As there were two and twenty letters and two and twenty (sacred) books and two and twenty heads of mankind from Adam . . .”

z. Apparently Jacob and his seed since Jacob is being likened to the sabbath. A reads “he” at this point, but the other MSS have “they,” agreeing with the plural forms used for “blessed” and “sanctified.”

a2. A fragment of the Syr. text begins at this point and continues through vs. 2:25a.

The laws for keeping the sabbath

- 25 He created heaven and earth and everything which he created in six days. And the LORD made the seventh day holy for all of his works. Therefore he commanded concerning it, "Let everyone who will do any work therein die. And also whoever defiles it let him surely die." Ex 31:14f.; 35:2
Num 15:32-36
- 26 And you, command the children of Israel, and let them guard this day so that they might sanctify it and not do any work therein, and not defile it because it is Ex 20:8; 31:13
- 27 more holy than any day. •And everyone who pollutes it let him surely die. And anyone who will do any work therein, let him surely die forever so that the children of Israel might guard this day throughout their generations and not be Deut 29:28
- 28 uprooted from the land because it is a holy day and a blessed day. •And every man who guards it and keeps therein a sabbath from all his work will be holy and blessed always like us.
- 29 Make known and recount to the children of Israel the judgment of the day that they should keep the sabbath thereon and not forsake it in the error of their hearts. And (make known) that it is not permitted to do work thereon which is unlawful, (it being) unseemly to do their pleasure thereon. And (make known) that they should not prepare thereon anything which will be eaten or drunk, which they have not prepared for themselves on the sixth day.<sup>b2</sup> And (make known that it is not lawful) to draw water or to bring in or to take out any work within their CD 10.22
Isa 58:13
Ex 35:3
- 30 dwellings which is carried in their gates.<sup>c2</sup> •And they shall not bring in or take out from house to house on that day because it is more holy and it is more blessed than any day of the jubilee of jubilees. On this day we kept the sabbath in heaven before it was made known to any human to keep the sabbath thereon upon the earth. Jer 17:21
Neh 13:19
Jer 17:27
- 31 The Creator of all blessed it, but he did not sanctify any people or nations to keep the sabbath thereon with the sole exception of Israel. He granted to them alone that they might eat and drink and keep the sabbath thereon upon the earth.
- 32 And the Creator of all, who created this day for a blessing and sanctification and Ex 27:21
Lev 7:36; 23:14
- 33 glory, blessed it more than all days. •This law and testimony was given to the children of Israel as an eternal law for their generations.

The naming of animals

Gen 2:19f.

- 1 3 And in six days of the second week, by the word of the LORD, we brought to Adam all of the beasts, and all of the cattle, and all of the birds, and everything which moves on the earth, and everything which moves in the water, each one according to its kind, and each one according to its likeness: the<sup>a</sup> beasts on the first day, and cattle on the second day, and the birds on the third day, and everything which moves upon the earth on the fourth day, and whatever moves Gen 2:19f.
- 2 in the water on the fifth day. •And Adam named all of them, each one according to its name, and whatever he called them became their names. •And during these five days Adam was observing all of these, male and female according to every kind which was on the earth, but he was alone and there was none whom he found for himself, who was like himself, who would help him.

b2. In the Eth. text, the relative clause "which they have not prepared for themselves on the sixth day" follows the phrase "to bring in or to take out." The obvious misplacement of the relative was noted by Charles in his English translation.

c2. The whole of vs. 29 is a single sentence in Eth. Its length and complexity make it difficult to reproduce in English. Therefore it is necessary to restructure the clauses in translating.

3 a. There is a Gk. parallel from the Chronographia of Georgius Syncellus, which is based on the present ch. His description of the order in which Adam named the animals is very close to the description which appears in Jub. Elsewhere in the ch., the parallels are limited to a few phrases. The relevant portions of the Gk. text are available in A.-M. Denis' Fragmenta Pseudepigraphorum Graeca (PVTG 3; Leiden, 1970) pp. 76-78.

The creation of Eve

- 4 And the LORD said to us, "It is not good that the man should be alone. Let us make for him a helper who is like him." •And the LORD our God cast a deep sleep upon him, and he slept. And he took one bone from the midst of his bones for the woman. And that rib was the origin of the woman from the midst of his bones. And he built up the flesh in place of it, and he constructed a woman.
- 6 And he awakened Adam from his sleep, and when he awoke, he stood up on the sixth day. And he brought her to him and he knew her and said to her, "This is now bone of my bone and flesh from my flesh. This one will be called my wife because she was taken from her husband."
- 7 Therefore a man and woman shall be one. And therefore it shall be that a man will leave his father and his mother and he will join with his wife and they will become one flesh.

The laws of purification after childbirth

- 8 In the first week Adam was created and also the rib, his wife. And in the second week he showed her to him. And therefore the commandment was given to observe seven days for a male, but for a female twice seven days in their impurity. Lev 12:2-5
- 9 And after forty days were completed for Adam in the land where he was created, we brought him into the garden of Eden so that he might work it and guard it. And on the eighth day his wife was also brought in. And after this she entered the garden of Eden. •And therefore the command was written in the heavenly tablets for one who bears, "If she bears a male, she shall remain seven days in her impurity like the first seven days. And thirty-three days she shall remain in the blood of her purity. And she shall not touch anything holy. And she shall not enter the sanctuary until she has completed these days which are in accord with 1En 81:1
TLevi 5
- 11 (the rule for) a male (child). •And that which is in accord with (the rule for) a female is two weeks—like the two first weeks—in her impurity. And sixty-six days she shall remain in the blood of her purity. And their total will be eighty days."
- 12 And when she finished those eighty days, we brought her into the garden of Eden because it is more holy than any land. And every tree which is planted in it is holy. •Therefore the ordinances of these days were ordained for anyone who bears a male or female that she might not touch anything holy and she might not enter the sanctuary until these days are completed for a male or female. •This is the law and testimony which is written for Israel so that they might keep it always.

The first seven years in Eden

- 15 And during the first week of the first jubilee Adam and his wife had been in the garden of Eden for seven years tilling and guarding it. And we gave him work and we were teaching him to do everything which was appropriate<sup>b</sup> for tilling. •And he was tilling. And he was naked, but he neither knew it nor was he ashamed. And he was guarding the garden from the birds and beasts and cattle and gathering its fruit and eating. And he used to set aside the rest for himself and his wife. And what was being guarded he set aside. Gen 2:25

The Fall

Gen 3:1-19

- 17 At the end of seven years which he completed there, seven years exactly, in the second month on the seventeenth day, the serpent came and drew near to the

b. Lit. "which appeared," or "which was ob-
....."

woman. And the serpent said to the woman, "The LORD commanded you, 18 saying, 'You shall not eat from any tree<sup>c</sup> which is in the garden.'" •And she said to him, "The LORD said, 'Eat from all of the fruit of the trees which are in the garden.' But the LORD said to us, 'You shall not eat from the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, and you shall not touch it lest you die.'" 19 And the serpent said to the woman, "It is not (true) that you shall surely die because the LORD knows that on the day you eat of it your eyes will become opened and you will become like gods, and you will know good and evil."

20 And the woman saw the tree that it was pleasant and it was pleasing to the eye 21 and its fruit was good to eat and she took some of it and she ate. •And she first covered her shame with a fig leaf, and then she gave it to Adam and he ate and 22 his eyes were opened and he saw that he was naked. •And he took a fig leaf and sewed it and made an apron for himself. And he covered his shame.

23 And the LORD cursed the serpent and he was angry with it forever.<sup>d</sup> And he was angry with the woman also because she had listened to the voice of the 24 serpent and had eaten. And he said to her, •"I will surely multiply your grief and your birth pangs. Bear children in grief. And to your husband is your return and 25 he will rule over you." •And to Adam he said, "Because you listened to the voice of your wife and you ate from that tree from which I commanded you that you should not eat, the land shall be cursed because of you. Thorns and thistles shall sprout up for you. And eat your bread in the sweat of your face until you return to the earth from which you were taken because you are earth and to the earth you will return."

Expulsion-day sacrifice and the law of covering shame

Gen 3:21,23

26 And he made for them garments of skin and he dressed them and sent them 27 from the garden of Eden. •And on that day when Adam went out from the garden of Eden, he offered a sweet-smelling sacrifice—frankincense, galbanum, stacte, and spices—in the morning with the rising of the sun from the day he covered 28 his shame. •On<sup>e</sup> that day the mouth of all the beasts and cattle and birds and whatever walked or moved was stopped from speaking because all of them used 29 to speak with one another with one speech and one language.<sup>f</sup> •And he sent from the garden of Eden all of the flesh which was in the garden of Eden and all of the flesh was scattered, each one according to its kind and each one according to 30 its family, into the place which was created for them. •But from all the beasts and all the cattle he granted to Adam alone that he might cover his shame. 31 Therefore it is commanded in the heavenly tablets to all who will know the judgment of the Law that they should cover their shame and they should not be uncovered as the gentiles are uncovered.

Ex 30:34

Ex 20:26; 28:42

The end of the first jubilee in 'Elda

32 And on the first<sup>g</sup> of the fourth month Adam and his wife went out from the garden of Eden and dwelt in the land of 'Elda, in the land of their creation.<sup>h</sup> 33,34 And Adam named his wife Eve. •They had no son until the first jubilee but after

Gen 3:23

c. B C read "from any fruit of the tree."

d. At this point in his English translation Charles indicated a lacuna because an impressive number of ancient witnesses who are dependent on Jub claim that the serpent originally had four legs. It therefore seemed appropriate that the text should contain some reference to cutting them off.

e. There is a small portion of the Syr. text which is parallel to the first half of this vs.

f. On the basis of Jub 12:26, it is reasonable to assume that all the animals spoke Heb.

g. Lit. "new moon," but the calendar used in Jub speaks against that usage. The calendar was made up of twelve months of thirty days plus four days added at the end of each of the seasons. There is no way that a new moon would be able to coincide on a regular basis with the first of every month in that system. Both the Lat. (28:24) and the Syr. (6:1) texts use words for "first," which cannot be translated "new moon."

h. Gen 3:23b says that Adam is to till the earth "from which he was taken." Apparently that phrase led to speculation that Adam did not originate in Eden but was taken from another place to which the author of Jub would return him.

35 this he knew her. •And he tilled the land as he had been taught in the garden of Eden.

The first murder and the law of manslaughter

Gen 4:1-14

1 4 And in the third week in the second jubilee, she bore Cain. And in the fourth 2 she bore Abel. And in the fifth she bore 'Awan, his daughter. •And at the beginning of the third jubilee, Cain killed Abel because the sacrifice of Abel was 3 accepted, but the offering of Cain was not accepted. •And he killed him in the field, and his blood cried out from the earth to heaven, making accusation because 4 he killed him. •And the LORD rebuked Cain on account of Abel because he killed him. And he made him a fugitive<sup>a</sup> on the earth because of the blood of his brother.
5 And he cursed him upon the earth. •And therefore it is written in the heavenly tablets, "Cursed is one who strikes his fellow with malice. And all who have 6 seen and heard shall say 'so be it.' And the man who saw and did not report (it) shall be cursed like him." •Therefore when we come before the LORD our God we will make known all of the sins which occur in heaven and earth and which are in the light or in the darkness or in any (place).

Deut 27:24

The descendants of Adam

Gen 4:17,25f.:
5:6-15

7 And Adam and his wife were mourning four weeks of years on account of Abel. And in<sup>b</sup> the fourth year of the fifth week they rejoiced. And Adam again knew his wife and she bore a son for him. And he named him Seth because he said, "The LORD has raised up another seed<sup>c</sup> for us upon the earth in place of 8 Abel because Cain killed him." •And in the sixth week he begat 'Azūra, his daughter.
9 And Cain took his sister, 'Awan,<sup>d</sup> as a wife, and she bore for him Enoch at the end of the fourth jubilee. And in the first year of the first week of the fifth jubilee, buildings were constructed in the land. And Cain built a city and he 10 named it with the name of his son, Enoch. •And Adam knew Eve, his wife, and she bore nine more children.
11 And in the fifth week of the fifth jubilee, Seth took 'Azūra, his sister, as a 12 wife. And in the fourth year of that week, she bore for him Enos. •He was first to call the name of the LORD upon the earth.
13 And in the seventh jubilee in the third week, Enos took Noam, his sister, as a wife. And she bore a son<sup>e</sup> for him in the third year of the fifth week. And he named him Kenān.
14 And at the end of the eighth jubilee, Kenān took for himself a wife, Mu'aleth, his sister, (as) a wife.<sup>f</sup> And she bore a son for him in the ninth jubilee in the first week in the third year of that (week). And he called him Mahalalel.
15 And in the second week of the tenth jubilee, Mahalalel took for himself a wife, Dinah, the daughter of Baraki'el, the daughter of his father's brother,<sup>g</sup> as a wife.

CD 2.18
1QapGen 2.1

4 a. In his edition of the Eth. text, Charles suggested that the Ethiopic word nūha was a corrupt transliteration of the word nā', "fugitive," which appears in Gen 4:14.

b. A fragment of the Heb. text from Qumran (11QJub 1) begins at this point and continues to the beginning of vs. 11.

c. The Eth. word order is a bit unusual at this point. It reads lit. "raised up for us seed in the earth, another one," but the same word order is found in the Heb. fragment from Qumran.

d. The word order for "his sister, 'Awan" is provided by the Heb. fragment from Qumran. The Eth. text reads " 'Awan, his sister."

e. A fragment of the Heb. text from Qumran begins at this point and continues into vs. 14.

f. B and D read "Kenan took for himself a wife, Mu'aleth, his sister (as) a wife." The repetition of "wife" would appear to be redundant, but the Heb. text from Qumran clearly includes the second mention of wife and apparently provides sufficient space in the lacuna for its first mention. A C omit the final phrase "(as) a wife."

g. Eth. reads "father's sister." Where this reading occurred, Charles systematically changed it to read "father's brother." In his English translation he assembled a number of ancient texts which bear witness to the marriage of the patriarchs to the daughter of their "father's brother." The witnesses include the Syr. "Names of the Wives of the Patriarchs" which he published as Appendix III to his Eth. text. One might also note in support of

And she bore a son for him in the third week in the sixth year. And he called him Jared because in his days the angels of the LORD, who were called Watchers, came down to the earth in order to teach the sons of man, and perform judgment and uprightness upon the earth.

Dan 4:13
1En 1:5

The birth and work of Enoch

Gen 5:18-24

- 16 And in the eleventh jubilee Jared took for himself a wife and her name was Bāraka, the daughter of Rasuyal, the daughter of his father's brother, as a wife, in the fourth week of that jubilee. And she bore a son for him in the fifth<sup>h</sup> week, in the fourth year of the jubilee. And he called him Enoch.
- 17 This one<sup>i</sup> was the first who learned writing and knowledge and wisdom, from (among) the sons of men, from (among) those who were born upon earth. And who wrote in a book the signs of the heaven according to the order of their months, so that the sons of man might know the (appointed) times of the years according to their order, with respect to each of their months. •This one was the first (who) wrote a testimony and testified to the children of men throughout the generations of the earth. And their weeks according to jubilees he recounted; and the days of the years he made known. And the months he set in order, and the sabbaths of the years he recounted, just as we made it known to him.<sup>j</sup> •And he saw what was and what will be in a vision of his sleep as it will happen among the children of men in their generations until the day of judgment. He saw and knew everything and wrote his testimony and deposited the testimony upon the earth against all the children of men and their generations.
- 18 according to their order, with respect to each of their months. •This one was the first (who) wrote a testimony and testified to the children of men throughout the generations of the earth. And their weeks according to jubilees he recounted; and the days of the years he made known. And the months he set in order, and the sabbaths of the years he recounted, just as we made it known to him.<sup>j</sup> •And he saw what was and what will be in a vision of his sleep as it will happen among the children of men in their generations until the day of judgment. He saw and knew everything and wrote his testimony and deposited the testimony upon the earth against all the children of men and their generations.
- 19 sabbaths of the years he recounted, just as we made it known to him.<sup>j</sup> •And he saw what was and what will be in a vision of his sleep as it will happen among the children of men in their generations until the day of judgment. He saw and knew everything and wrote his testimony and deposited the testimony upon the earth against all the children of men and their generations.
- 20 And in the twelfth jubilee in its seventh week, he took for himself a wife and her name was 'Edni, the daughter of Dan'el, his father's brother, as a wife, and in the sixth year of this week she bore a son for him. And he called him Methuselah.
- 21 And he was therefore with the angels of God six jubilees of years. And they showed him everything which is on earth and in the heavens, the dominion of the sun. And he wrote everything, •and bore witness to the Watchers, the ones who sinned with the daughters of men because they began to mingle themselves with the daughters of men so that they might be polluted. And Enoch bore witness against all of them. •And he was taken from among the children of men, and we led him to the garden of Eden for greatness and honor. And behold, he is there 1En 12:3f.

1En 72-82

1En 37:2-4

1En 85:3

1QapGen 2.21

1En 70:1-3

the change that the names Baraki'el (vs. 15) and Rasuyal (vs. 16) are masculine forms. Wintermute attempts to follow the inconsistencies in the spelling of the proper names in the Ethiopic text. —J.H.C.

h. A fragment of the Heb. text from Qumran begins at this point and continues into vs. 17.

i. A portion of the Syr. text begins at this point and continues into vs. 21.

The fragment from Qumran has a blank space before the first word, which indicates that it marked a new section of narrative. The reading "This one" is clearly found in the Qumran text, from which it has been restored. Charles's Eth. text began "He was therefore the first." The "therefore" was attested only in MS A, however, so it should now be eliminated.

j. The suggestion that vss. 17f. were poetic came from J. VanderKam, "Enoch Traditions in Jubilees and Other Second-Century Sources," SBL 1978 Seminar Papers (Missoula, Mont., 1978) vol. 1, pp. 228–51.

Although there are some phrases in vss. 17f. which are a bit difficult to put in poetic lines, the case for an original poetic structure is strong. The parallelism in ll. 3f. of vs. 17 and ll. 4f. and 6f. of vs. 18 is convincing. There may, however, be some expansion in the Eth. version. The Syr. text contains a much shorter reading which preserves the same poetic pattern with its obvious parallelism. Inasmuch as the Syr. text is generally abbreviated, there is no reason to believe that it preserves the original text at this point. Nevertheless, it provides an interesting variant in support of the original poetic structure. It reads as follows:

17. This Enoch was the first (who) learned writing and knowledge and wisdom, and (who) wrote the signs of heaven in a book, to teach to the sons of men, the changes of the times and the years, according to their orders and their months. And he made known the days of the years and the number of the months he established.

The discussion of Enoch in Jub is closely related to the account which appears in the book of 1En. VanderKam's paper refers to the most important current studies and introduces a number of significant new observations.

writing condemnation and judgment of the world, and all of the evils of the children of men. •And because of him none of the water of the Flood came<sup>k</sup> upon the whole land of Eden, for he was put there for a sign and so that he might bear witness against all of the children of men so that he might relate all of the deeds of the generations until the day of judgment. •And<sup>l</sup> he offered the incense which is acceptable before the LORD in the evening (at) the holy place<sup>m</sup> on Mount Qater.<sup>n</sup> •For the LORD has four (sacred) places upon the earth: the garden of Eden and the mountain of the East and this mountain which you are upon today, Mount Sinai, and Mount Zion, which will be sanctified in the new creation for the sanctification of the earth. On account of this the earth will be sanctified from all sin and from pollution throughout eternal generations.

2En 34:3

The generations from Enoch to Noah

Gen 5:25-29

27 And in the fourteenth jubilee Methuselah took as his wife 'Edna, daughter of 'Azri'al, his father's brother, as a wife, in the third week in the first year of that week. And he begot a son. And he called him Lamech.

28 And in the fifteenth jubilee in the third week, Lamech took for himself a wife, and her name was Betenos, the daughter of Baraki'il, the daughter of his father's brother, (as) a wife. And in that week she bore a son for him and he called him Noah, saying, "This one will console me from my grief and from all of my labor and from the land which the LORD cursed."

1QapGen 2.3

The death of Adam

29 And<sup>o</sup> at the end of the nineteenth jubilee in the seventh week, in the sixth year, Adam died. And all of his children buried him in the land of his creation. And he was the first who was buried<sup>p</sup> in the earth. •And he lacked seventy years from one thousand years, for a thousand years are like one day in the testimony of k. The reading is based on MS EMML3, the oldest known MS of Jub and one that was not known by Charles. The reading has already been noted by VanderKam, SBL 1978 Seminar Papers, vol. 1, pp. 228–51.

2Pet 3:8

l. A portion of the Syr. text begins at this point and continues through the list of four mountains in vs. 26.

m. The reading "in the evening" is found in MSS C D. The reading was rejected by Charles, but has subsequently been confirmed by the presence of the word for "evening" in the Syr. text. The reading of "holy place" which follows in the Eth. text has no counterpart in the Syr. In commenting on the Syr. text, E. Tisserant suggested that maqdas, "holy place," was a corruption of qadami, "first," which agrees with the Syr. text. Thus one could read "and he offered incense which is acceptable to the LORD in the evening first on Mount Qater." The suggestion is attractive. In any case, Enoch is here being designated as the instigator of the ritual of evening incense, which was part of normal daily service in the Temple in Jerusalem.

n. "Qater" may be translated in Eth. as "noon." It seems likely, however, that it was originally the proper name of a mountain which was simply transcribed into Gk. and then Eth. just as Eden, Sinai, and Zion were. The Heb. root qtr is used to describe the burning of incense, and it is likely that some formation from that root was used to designate the place where Enoch burned incense.

Mount Qater is undoubtedly to be identified with the mountain of the East in vs. 26. The Syr. text uses the same word in both places, and its presence in both places proves that some designation of the mountain should be retained in vs. 25. The Syr. name for the mountain could be read as "South" or as "Taiman." If it is read as "South," then one would assume a corruption or confusion of a word for "East." If it is read as "Taiman," one might guess that it had reference to Taima in Arabia, about halfway between Damascus and Mecca, where Nabonidus spent about eight years of his reign. As a center for caravans (Job 6:19), Taima was undoubtedly identified with the incense trade, and might be an appropriate place to locate Enoch's mountain. Although Taima lies south of Jerusalem, it is also suitably eastward. In all probability the Syr. Taiman is simply a later attempt to identify the mountain with a known location. As it appeared in the earliest text it was simply an eastern mountain identified with incense; its actual location remains a subject of speculation. Compare Charles's discussion in his English translation and the discussion by Tisserant which accompanies his Syr. text for additional suggestions.

o. A portion of the Syr. text begins at this point. It contains the first part of vs. 1 and part of vs. 2. The second part of vs. 1 is contained in a separate fragment of the Syr. text noted below.

p. A fragment of the Heb. text from Qumran (11QJub 2) begins at this point and continues through most of vs. 30.

heaven and therefore it was written concerning the tree of knowledge, "In the day you eat from it you will die." Therefore he did not complete the years of this day because he died in it.

Abel avenged—law of retaliation

- 31 At the end of that jubilee Cain was killed one year after him. And his house fell upon him, and he died in the midst of his house. And he was killed by its stones because he killed Abel with a stone, and with a stone he was killed by 32 righteous judgment. •Therefore it is ordained in the heavenly tablets: Ex 21:24

"With the weapons with which a man kills his fellow he shall be killed
just as he wounded him, thus shall they do to him."

The birth of Noah's sons

Gen 5:32

- 33 And in the twenty-fifth jubilee Noah took a wife for himself and her name was 'Emzara, daughter of Rake'el, daughter of his father's brother, as a wife, in the first year, in the fifth week. And in its third year she bore for him Shem. And in its fifth year she bore for him Ham. And in the first year of the sixth week she bore for him Japheth.

Corruption of all flesh when angels mate with humans

Gen 6:1-5

- 1 5 And when<sup>a</sup> the children of men began to multiply on the surface of the earth and daughters were born to them, that the angels of the LORD saw in a certain year of that jubilee that they were good to look at. And they took wives for themselves from all of those whom they chose. And they bore children for them; 2 and they were the giants. •And injustice increased upon the earth, and all flesh corrupted its way; man and cattle and beasts and birds and everything which walks on the earth. And they all corrupted their way and their ordinances, and they began to eat one another. And injustice grew upon the earth and every imagination of the thoughts of all mankind was thus continually evil. 1QapGen 2.1 1En 6:1f.
1En 7:1.2
1En 7:5

The punishment of angels and annihilation of their offspring

Gen 6:7-13

- 3 And the LORD saw the earth, and behold it was corrupted and all flesh had corrupted its order and all who were on the earth had done every sort of evil in 4 his sight. •And he said, "I will wipe out man and all flesh which I have created 5 from upon the surface of the earth." •But Noah alone found favor in the sight of the LORD. 6 And against his angels whom he had sent to the earth he was very angry. He 1QH 10.34f. commanded that they be uprooted from all their dominion. And he told us to bind them in the depths of the earth, and behold, they are bound in the midst of them, 7 and they are isolated. •And against their children a word went forth from before his presence so that he might smite them<sup>b</sup> with the sword and remove them from 8 under heaven. •And he said, "My spirit will not dwell upon man forever; for 9 they are flesh, and their days will be one hundred and ten years." •And he sent his sword among them so that each one might kill his fellow and they began to kill one<sup>c</sup> another until they all fell on the sword and they were wiped out from 1QH 10.34f. 10 the earth. •And their parents also watched. And subsequently they were bound in 5 a. A portion of the Syr. text begins at this point and continues to the end of the vs.

b. The phrase could be impersonal, "(one) might smite them," i.e. "they might be smitten."

c. There is a portion of the Syr. text which begins at this point and contains the sense of the present vs. although the wording is quite different.

the depths of the earth forever, until the day of great judgment in order for judgment to be executed upon all of those who corrupted their ways and their 11 deeds before the LORD. •And he wiped out every one from their places and not one of them remained whom he did not judge according to all his wickedness.

A new righteousness. The impartial judge will forgive

12 And he made for all his works a new and righteous nature so that they might not sin in all their nature forever, and so that they might all be righteous, each in 13 his kind, always. •And the judgment of all of them has been ordained and written in the heavenly tablets without injustice. And (if)<sup>d</sup> any of them transgress from their way with respect to what was ordained for them to walk in, or if they do not walk in it, the judgment for every (sort of) nature and every kind has been
 14 written. •And there is nothing excluded<sup>e</sup> which is in heaven or on earth or in the light or in the darkness or in Sheol or in the depths or in the place of darkness.
 15 And all their judgments are ordained, written, and engraved. •He will judge concerning every one: the great one according to his greatness and the small one
 16 according to his smallness, and each one according to his way. •And he is not one who accepts persons,<sup>f</sup> and he is not one who accepts gifts when he says that he will execute judgment upon each one. If one gave everything which is in the earth, he would not accept gifts or persons. And he would not accept (anything) from his hand because he is a righteous judge. IQS 3.16

17 And for the children of Israel it has been written and ordained, “If they return to him in righteousness, he will forgive all of their sins and he will pardon all of their transgressions.” •It is written and it is ordained, “He will have mercy on 18 all who return from all their error, once each year.” •But to any who corrupted their way and their counsel before the Flood, he did not show partiality, except Noah alone, for he showed partiality to him for the sake of his sons whom he saved from the waters of the Flood (and) for his sake because his heart was righteous in all of his ways just as it was commanded concerning him. And he did not transgress anything which was ordained for him. IQH 15.24
Deut 10:17
2Chr 19:7
Jer 36:3
Jer 18:8

The Flood

Gen 6:14-8:19

20 And the LORD said, “Let everything which is upon dry land be blotted out: men and cattle and beasts and birds of the heaven and whatever moves on the 21 earth.” •And he commanded Noah to make an ark for himself so that he might save himself from the water of the Flood. •And Noah made an ark in all respects just as he commanded him in the twenty-second jubilee of years in the fifth week
 22 in the fifth year. •And he entered it in the sixth year in the second month on the first of the second month until the sixteenth day. And he and everything which we brought to him entered into the ark. And the LORD shut it up from outside on the evening of the seventeenth.

24 And the LORD opened the seven floodgates of heaven, and the mouths of the springs of the great deep were seven mouths in number; 1En 89:2-7

25 and these floodgates sent down water from heaven forty days and forty nights, and the springs of the deep sent up water until the whole world was full of water.

d. There is no external marker to indicate that this first clause is conditional, and Charles did not translate it as such. The sentence is admittedly difficult. Charles's Eth. text reads “all who,” but we have followed the reading of MS A, which does not use a relative.

e. Nothing is excluded from liability before the judgment mentioned in vs. 13.

f. Lit. “accepts a face.” What it means, of course, is that “he does not show partiality,” but the parallelism involved in describing one who accepts both persons and gifts (i.e. bribes) seemed worth preserving in this vs.

- 26 And the water increased upon the earth, fifteen cubits the water rose over every tall mountain;
and the ark rose from upon the earth,
and it moved upon the surface of the water.
- 27 And all of the water stayed upon the surface of the earth five months, one 28 hundred and fifty days. •And the ark went and rested on the top of Lubar, one of 29 the mountains of Ararat. •And in the fourth month the springs of the great deep were closed and the floodgates of heaven were held shut. And on the new moon of the seventh month, all of the mouths of the deeps of the earth were opened.
- 30 And the water began to go down into the depths below. •And on the first of the tenth month, the heads of the mountains appeared, and on the first of the first 31 month, the land appeared. •And the water dried up from upon the earth in the fifth week, in its seventh year. And on the seventeenth day in the second month, 32 the land was dry. •And on its twenty-seventh day, he opened the ark and he sent out of it the beasts, and cattle and birds and whatever moved.

Debarkation and sacrifice

Gen 8:20

- 1 6 And<sup>a</sup> on the first of the third month, he went out of the ark, and he built an 2 altar on that mountain. •And he made atonement for the land. And he took the kid of a goat, and he made atonement with its blood for all the sins of the land because everything which was on it had been blotted out except those who were 3 in the ark with Noah. •And he offered up the fat upon the altar. And he took a calf,<sup>b</sup> a goat, a lamb, [kids<sup>c</sup>], salt, a turtledove, and a young dove,<sup>d</sup> and he offered up a burnt offering on the altar. And he placed upon them an offering kneaded with oil. And he sprinkled wine, and placed frankincense upon everything. And he offered up a sweet aroma which was pleasing before the LORD.
- 1QapGen 10.13
Lev 18:26-28
Num 35:33f.
1QapGen 10.15
Ex 29:40
Lev 2:2-5

The covenant with Noah and laws prohibiting the eating of blood

Gen 8:21-9:17

- 4 And the LORD smelled the sweet aroma, and he made a covenant with him so that there might not be floodwaters which would destroy the earth. All the days of the earth, seed (time) and harvest will not cease. Cold and heat and summer and winter and day and night will not change their ordinances or cease forever.
- 5 "But as for you, increase and be multiplied on the earth and become many upon it, and become a blessing upon it. Fear and terror of you I will set upon everything 6 which is on the land or in the sea. •And behold, I have given you all of the beasts and everything which flies and everything which moves upon the earth and in the water, the fish and everything, for food like the green herbs. And I have given 7 you everything so that you might eat. •But flesh which is (filled) with life, (that is) with blood, you shall not eat—because the life of all flesh is in the blood—lest your blood be sought for your lives.

From the hand of every man,
from the hand of every (creature),
I will seek the blood of a man.

- 8 Whoever pours out the blood of a man,
by man his blood shall be poured out, because in the image of the LORD he made Adam.

6 a. A portion of the Syr. text begins at this point and continues through vs. 3.

b. The Eth. word which is translated "calf" is ambiguous. It could also mean "bull" or "cow," but the Syr. text clearly reads "calf."

c. The sudden appearance of "kids" in the plural is unusual. It is not the same word for "kid" that was used in vs. 2, but it is the word which was translated "goat" in vs. 2. The word is lacking in the Syr. and is therefore best understood as an Eth. gloss.

d. The words for "turtledove" and "young dove" are plural in Syr. In editing the Syr. text, Tisserant suggested that the plural forms were preferable because those birds were regularly offered in pairs.

- 9 And as for you, increase and become many in the land.<sup>a</sup>
- 10 And Noah and his sons swore that they would not eat any blood which was in any flesh. And he made a covenant before the LORD God forever in all of the generations of the earth in that month.
- 11 Therefore, he spoke to you so that you also might make a covenant with the children of Israel with an oath in this month upon the mountain. And you will sprinkle blood upon them on account of all of the words of the covenant which Ex 19:1
Lev 17:10,12
Deut 12:23
1QapGen 11.17
12 the LORD made with them for all time. •This testimony is written concerning you so that you might keep it always lest you ever eat any blood of the beasts or birds or cattle throughout all of the days of the earth. And the man who eats the blood of the beasts or cattle or birds throughout all of the days of the earth shall be uprooted, he and his seed from the earth. •And you, command the children of Israel not to eat any blood so that their names and seed might be before the LORD
13 God always. •And there is no limit of days for this law because it is forever. They shall keep it for their generations so that they might make supplication on your behalf with blood before the altar on every day. And at the hour of daybreak and evening they will seek atonement on their own<sup>c</sup> behalf continually before the LORD so that they might guard it and not be rooted out. Lev 17:11
Num 28:3-8
14 And he gave a sign to Noah and his children that there should not again be a 15 flood upon the earth. •He set his bow in the clouds for a sign of the covenant which is forever, that the water of the Flood should therefore not be upon the earth to destroy it all of the days of the earth.

The feast of Shebuot

- 17 Therefore, it is ordained and written in the heavenly tablets that they should observe the feast of Shebuot<sup>f</sup> in this month, once per year, in order to renew the Ex 34:22
18 covenant in all (respects), year by year. •And all of this feast was celebrated in heaven from the day of creation until the days of Noah, twenty-six jubilees and five weeks of years. And Noah and his children kept it for seven jubilees and one week of years until the day of the death of Noah. And from the day of the death of Noah, his sons corrupted it until the days of Abraham, and they ate blood. CD 3.6
19 But Abraham alone kept it. And Isaac and Jacob and his sons kept it until your days, but in your days the children of Israel forgot it until you renewed it for them on this mountain.
20 And you, command the children of Israel so that they might keep this feast in all of their generations as a commandment to them. One day per year in this
21 month they shall celebrate the feast, •for it is the feast of Shebuot and it is the feast of the first fruits. This feast is twofold and of two natures.<sup>g</sup> Just as it is Ex 23:16
Num 28:26

e. The Eth. MSS provide three different readings here: "on behalf of them," "it," or "you" (masculine plural).

f. Although the Eth. word means "weeks," "Shebuot" was used in an attempt to maintain a degree of openness to the double meaning of the Heb. word which undoubtedly appeared in the original text of Jub. In an unpointed Heb. text the consonants šb'wt could be translated either "weeks" or "oaths." The MT vocalizes the absolute form of the word for "weeks" as šābu'ot and the word for "oaths" as šēbu'ot, but "weeks" also appears as šēbu'ot in the construct. We have chosen the less precise spelling Shebuot to reflect the ambiguity of an unpointed text, and do not intend to favor one meaning over the other.

The feast referred to by the Eth. word is, of course, better known by the name of Pentecost or weeks, but both of these names are supposedly derived from the number of days (or weeks) which separate that feast from the offering of the Omer (Lev 23:9-17). Since the book of Jub, which is particularly sensitive to chronology, does not identify this feast in relation to the passing of seven weeks, S. Zeitlin (The Book of Jubilees: Its Character and Its Significance [Philadelphia, 1939]) made the following observation: "I venture to say that even the name Shabuot in the Book of Jubilees has not the connotation of 'weeks,' but means 'oaths'" (p. 6). Zeitlin supported his statement by noting that the covenant between God and Noah provided the context for establishing the feast and that the covenant with Abraham in ch. 15 also occurred on this festival. The significance of this double meaning of weeks and oaths was probably not lost on the author of Jub. The spelling Shebuot is an attempt to maintain that double meaning.

g. The "double nature" may be due to the double sense of Shebuot discussed in the preceding n. Although not mentioned in Jub, the feast may have marked the passing of "weeks" in the agricultural year and also celebrated the "oaths" made to Noah and Abraham.

- 22 written and engraved concerning it, observe it. •This is because I have written it in the book of the first law, which I wrote for you, so that you might observe it in each of its appointed times, one day per year. And I have told you its sacrificial offering so that the children of Israel might remember them and observe them in their generations in this month one day each year.
- 23 And on the first of the first month and on the first of the fourth month and on the first of the seventh month and on the first of the tenth month are the days of remembrance and they are the days of appointed times in the four parts of the 1QS 10.5
Lev 23:24
- 24 year. They are written and inscribed for an eternal witness. •And Noah ordained them for himself as feasts for eternal generations because they were a memorial 25 for him. •And on the first of the first month, he was told to make an ark. And on 26 it the land dried up, and he opened up and saw the land. •And on the first of the fourth month, the mouths of the deeps of the abysses which were beneath were 1En 89:7f.
- shut. And on the first of the seventh month, all of the mouths of the depths of 27 the earth were opened, and the water began to go down into them. •On the first 28 of the tenth month the heads of the mountains appeared, and Noah rejoiced. •And therefore he ordained them for himself as feasts of remembrance forever, and thus 29 they are ordained. •And they set them upon the heavenly tablets. Each one of them is thirteen weeks from one to another of the remembrances, from the first to the second, and from the second to the third, and from the third to the fourth.
- 30 And all of the days which will be commanded will be fifty-two weeks of days, 31 and all of them are a complete year. •Thus it is engraved and ordained on the heavenly tablets, and there is no transgressing in a single year, from year to year.

The danger in failing to observe a 364-day calendar

- 32 And you, command the children of Israel so that they shall guard the years in this number, three hundred and sixty-four days, and it will be a complete year. 1QS 1.14f.
1QH 12.8f.
1En 74:10,12;
75:2
2En 48:1
- And no one shall corrupt its (appointed) time from its days or from its feasts because all (of the appointed times) will arrive in them according to their testimony, 33 and they will not pass over a day, and they will not corrupt a feast. •But if they are transgressed, and they do not observe them according to his commandment, then they will corrupt all of their (fixed) times, and the years will be moved from 34 within this (order), and they will transgress their ordinances. •And all of the sons of Israel will forget, and they will not find the way of the years. And they will forget the new moons and (appointed) times and sabbaths. And they will set awry 35 all of the ordinances of the years. •For I know and henceforth I shall make you know—but not from my own heart, because the book is written before me and is ordained in the heavenly tablets of the division of days—lest they forget the feasts of the covenant and walk in the feasts of the gentiles, after their errors and after their ignorance.
- 36 And there will be those who will examine the moon diligently because it will corrupt the (appointed) times and it will advance from year to year ten days. 37 Therefore, the years will come to them as they corrupt and make a day of testimony a reproach and a profane day a festival, and they will mix up everything, a holy day (as) profaned and a profane (one) for a holy day, because they will set awry 38 the months and sabbaths and feasts and jubilees. •Therefore, I shall command you and I shall bear witness to you so that you may bear witness to them because after you have died your sons will be corrupted so that they will not make a year only three hundred and sixty-four days. And therefore, they will set awry the months and the (appointed) times and the sabbaths and the feasts, and they will eat all of the blood with all flesh.
- 1En 82:4-6
CD 3.14

Noah's sacrifice

Gen 9:20

- 1 7 And in the seventh week in the first year in that jubilee, Noah planted a vine on the mountain on which the ark rested, whose name is Lubar, (one) of the 1QapGen 12.13 mountains of Ararat. And it produced fruit in the fourth year, and he guarded its 2 fruit; and he picked it in that year in the seventh month, •and he made wine from it, and he put it in a vessel, and he guarded it until the fifth year, until the first

 3 day on the first of the first month. •And on that day he made a feast with rejoicing. 1QapGen 12.15
 And he made a burnt offering to the LORD, one calf from the bulls, one ram, a 4 lamb of seven years, and one kid of the goats in order that he might thereby seek atonement for himself and for his sons. •And he prepared the kid first. And he placed some of its blood on the flesh which was on the altar which he had made.
 And all of the fat and the bull and the ram and the lamb he offered up upon the 5 altar, where he made the burnt offering. And he offered up all of their flesh upon the altar. •And he placed all of their sacrifice upon it, kneaded with oil. And after that, he sprinkled wine in the fire which he had placed upon the altar. And he presented frankincense upon the altar, and offered up a sweet odor which is 6 pleasing before the LORD his God, •and rejoiced. And he drank some of that wine, he and his sons, with rejoicing. Num 29:2-5

The curse of Canaan and the blessing of Shem

Gen 9:21-27

7 And when evening came, he entered into his tent, and lay down drunk. And 8 he slept, and was uncovered in his tent as he was sleeping. •And Ham saw Noah, 9 his father, naked. And he went out, and told his two brothers outside. •And Shem took his garment, and he stood up, he and Japheth, and they placed the garment on their shoulders and, turning backward, they covered the shame of their father, and their faces were backward.
 10 And Noah woke up from his wine, and knew everything which his youngest son had done to him. And he cursed his son and said, “Cursed is Canaan, let 11 him be an enslaved servant of his brothers.” •And he blessed Shem, and said:
 “May the LORD, the God of Shem, be blessed.
 And may Canaan be his servant.
 12 May the LORD enlarge Japheth, and may the LORD dwell in the dwelling place of Shem,
 and may Canaan be his servant.”
 13 And Ham knew that his father cursed his youngest son, and it was disgusting to him that he cursed his son. And he separated from his father, he and his sons with him: Cush and Mizraim and Put and Canaan.

The cities of Noah's three sons

14 And he (Ham) built a city for himself and he named it after his wife, 15 Na'eltama'uk. •And Japheth saw it and was jealous of his brother. And he also 16 built a city for himself and named it after his wife, 'Adataneses. •And Shem dwelt with his father, Noah, and built a city near his father on the mountain. And he 17 also named it after his wife, Sedeqetelebab. •And behold, these three cities were near Mount Lubar, Sedeqetelebab was in front of the mountain on its east, and Na'eltama'uk was facing south, and 'Adataneses was toward the west.

The sons of Shem and Japheth

18 And these are the sons of Shem: Elam and Ashur and Arpachshad, who was 1QapGen 12.10 19 born two years after the Flood, and Lud and Aram. •The sons of Japheth are:
 Gomer and Magog and Madai and Javon, Tubal and Meshech and Tiras. These are sons of Noah.

The testament of Noah: avoid fornication, blood pollution, injustice

20 And in the twenty-eighth jubilee Noah began to command his grandsons with ordinances and commandments and all of the judgments which he knew. And he 2Pet 2:5

- bore witness to his sons so that they might do justice and cover the shame of their flesh and bless the one who created them and honor father and mother, and each one love his neighbor and preserve themselves from fornication and pollution and from all injustice. •For on account of these three the Flood came upon the earth. For (it was) because of the fornication which the Watchers, apart from the mandate of their authority, fornicated with the daughters of men and took for themselves wives from all whom they chose and made a beginning of impurity. •And they begot sons, the Naphidim, and all of them were dissimilar. And each one ate his fellow. The giants killed the Naphil, and the Naphil killed the Elyo, and the Elyo mankind, and man his neighbor. •And everyone sold himself in order that he might do injustice and pour out much blood, and the earth was full of injustice. And afterward, they sinned against beasts, and birds and everything which moves or walks upon the earth. And they poured out much blood upon the earth. And all the thoughts and desires of men were always contemplating vanity and evil. And the LORD blotted out everything from the face of the earth on account of the evil of their deeds. And on account of the blood which they poured out in the midst of the land, he blotted out everything.
- 26 “And<sup>a</sup> we were left, I and you, my children, and everything which entered with us into the ark. And behold, I see your deeds before me that you have not been ones who walked in righteousness because you have begun to walk in the paths of corruption. And each one of you will be separated from his neighbor. And this one will be jealous of that one, and (I see) that you will not be together, O my sons, each one with his brother. •For I see, and behold, the demons have begun to mislead you and your children. And now I fear for your sakes that after I die, you will pour out the blood of men upon the earth. And you will be blotted out from the surface of the earth. •For all who eat the blood of man and all who eat the blood of any flesh will be blotted out, all of them, from the earth.
- 29 And no man who eats blood or sheds the blood of man will remain upon the earth; and neither seed nor posterity will remain alive for him under heaven.
For they will go down into Sheol, and into the place of judgment they will descend.
And into the darkness of the depths they will all be removed with a cruel death.
- 30 “And let no blood from any of the blood which is in anything be seen upon you on the day when you sacrifice any beast or cattle or what flies upon the earth. But do a good deed for yourselves by covering that which will be poured out upon the surface of the earth. •And you shall not be like one who eats with blood, but beware lest they should eat blood before you. Cover the blood, because thus I was commanded to testify to you and to your children together with all flesh. And you shall not eat living flesh lest it be that your blood which is your life be sought by the hand of all flesh which eats upon the earth. •For the land will not be cleansed of the blood which is poured out upon it, because by the blood of one who poured it out will the land be cleansed in all of its generations.

CD 4.14f.

Lev 17:7

1En 7:1

1En 86:4; 88:2

1En 15:11

1Kgs 21:20

1En 9:1,9

1En 7:5

Lev 7:27

1En 103:7f.

Ezek 24:7

Lev 17:13

Lev 19:26

Lev 17:10,11,14

Num 35:33

The testament of Noah and the law of reserving first fruits

- 34 “And now, my children, hear (and) do justice and righteousness so that you might be planted in righteousness on the surface of the whole earth, and your

Jer 11:17

Amos 9:15

1En 10:16; 93:5,

10

7 a. The point at which direct discourse begins is not certain. It might have begun with vs. 21.

b. B C read “be consecrated.”

c. Against the unanimous witness of all of the Eth. MSS known to me, I have emended the “fifth year” to read “seventh year.” The year of release mentioned in Deut 15:1, 9 is the seventh year.

Charles dealt with the problem by assuming a lacuna. The missing section would have described the events of the fifth year and then introduced the seventh year as the year of release. Compare Lev 19:25 and the practice of Noah in Jub 7:2 in support of a lacuna dealing with the fifth year.

honor may be lifted up before my God who saved me from the water of the Flood.
 35 And behold, you will go and build for yourselves cities, and you will plant in them every plant which is upon the earth and every tree, moreover, which bears 36 fruit. •For three years its fruit will not be gathered from everything which may be eaten, but in the fourth year its fruit will be gathered.<sup>b</sup> And let one offer up the first fruits which are acceptable before the LORD Most High, who made heaven and earth and everything, so that they might offer up in the juice the first of the wine and the oil as first fruits upon the altar of the LORD, who will accept it. And that which is left the servants of the house of the LORD will eat before 37 the altar which receives (it). •And in the seventh year<sup>c</sup> make its release so that you might release it in righteousness and uprightness. And you will be righteous 38 and all your plants will be upright, •because, thus, Enoch, the father of your father, commanded Methuselah, his son, and Methuselah (commanded) Lamech, his son. And Lamech commanded me everything which his fathers commanded 39 him. •And I am commanding you, my sons, just as Enoch commanded his son in the first jubilees. While he was alive in his seventh generation, he commanded and bore witness to his son and his grandsons until the day of his death.”

1En 84:6
2Pet 2:5

Lev 19:23f.

Deut 15:1,9
Lev 25:2-7

1En 60:8; 93:3
Jude 14

Cainan's discovery of astrological lore

1 8 And on the twenty-ninth jubilee in the first week, at its beginning Arpachshad took a wife and her name was Rasu'eya, daughter of Susan, daughter of Elam, as a wife. And she bore a son for him in the third year of that week, and he called 2 him Cainan,<sup>a</sup> •and the child grew. And his father taught him writing. And he 3 went forth in order that he might seek a place where he could build<sup>b</sup> a city. •And he found a writing which the ancestors engraved on stone. And he read what was in it. And he transcribed it. And he sinned because of what was in it, since there was in it the teaching of the Watchers by which they used to observe the omens 4 of the sun and moon and stars within all the signs of heaven. •And he copied it down, but he did not tell about it because he feared to tell Noah about it lest he be angry with him because of it.

Lk 3:36

The descendants of Cainan

Gen 10:24f.

5 And in the thirtieth jubilee in the second week in its first year, he took a wife and her name was Melka, daughter of Madai,<sup>c</sup> son of Japheth. And in its fourth year he begot a son and he called him Shelah because, he said, “I have certainly been sent out.”<sup>d</sup> 6 And in the fourth year Shelah was born and he grew up. And he took a wife and her name was Mu'ak, daughter of Kesed, his father's brother, as a wife in the thirty-first<sup>e</sup> jubilee in the fifth week in the first year. And she bore a son for him in its fifth year, and he called him 'Eber.
 7 And he took a wife, and her name was 'Azurad, daughter of Nebrod, in the 8 thirty-second jubilee in the seventh week in its third year. •And in its sixth year she bore a son for him. And he called him Peleg because in the days when he was born the sons of Noah began dividing up the earth for themselves. Therefore 9 he called him Peleg.<sup>f</sup> •And they divided it in an evil (manner) among themselves, and they told it to Noah.

8 a. A portion of the Syr. text begins at this point and continues through vs. 4. The proper spelling of Cainan appears in the Syr. The Eth. text spells it with a final “m.”

b. The reading “build” is supplied by the Syr. The Eth. reads “acquire” or “possess.” As Tisserant pointed out in his discussion of the Syr., the confusion is probably due to a misreading of Heb. bn' as qn'.

c. The spelling of the name has been altered to agree with the reading which is given in codex

Basil. gr. 1 edited by de Lagarde. The relevant portion of text has been reproduced by Denis, Fragmenta, p. 86. The Eth. reads 'Abadäy.

d. The Heb. root for the verb “to send” contains the same consonants (šlh) as the name Shelah.

e. The Eth. has the word for “year,” but the emendation to “first” is obvious.

f. The Heb. root for the verb “to divide” contains the same consonants (plg) as the name Peleg.

The division of the earth

- 10 And it came to pass at the beginning of the thirty-third jubilee, that they divided the land (in) three parts, for Shem, Ham, and Japheth, according to the inheritance of each, in the first year in the first week, while one of us who were sent was dwelling with them. •And he called his children, and they came to him, they and their children. And he<sup>e</sup> divided by lot the land which his three sons would possess. And they stretched out their hands and took the document from the bosom of Noah, their father.

Shem's portion

Gen 10:26-31

Ezek 38:12
1En 26:1

- 12 And the lot of Shem was assigned in the document as the middle of the earth, which he would take for his possession and for his sons for eternal generations from the midst of the Rafa Mountains,<sup>h</sup> from the mouth of the water of the river Tina.<sup>i</sup> And his portion goes toward the west through the midst of this river, and it goes on until it draws near to the water of the abysses from which this river goes forth. And its waters pour forth into the Me'at<sup>j</sup> Sea. And this river goes on into the Great Sea. And everything which is toward the north belongs to Japheth, 13 and everything which is toward the south belongs to Shem. •And (his portion) goes on until it draws near Karaso,<sup>k</sup> which is in the bosom of the tongue which 14 looks toward the south. •And his portion goes on toward the Great Sea. And it goes straight until it draws near to the west of the tongue which looks toward the 15 south because the name of this sea is the tongue of the Sea of Egypt. •And it is turned from there toward the south, toward the mouth of the Great Sea<sup>l</sup> on the shore of the waters. And it goes on toward the west of 'Afra.<sup>m</sup> And it goes on until it draws near the water of the river Gihon,<sup>n</sup> and toward the south of the 16 water of Gihon, toward the shore of that river. •And it goes on toward the east until it draws near to the garden of Eden toward its south, to the south and east of all the land of Eden, and to all of the east. And it turns in the east, and it comes forth until it draws near toward the last of the mountain whose name is 17 Rafa. And it goes down toward the shore of the mouth of the Tina River. •This portion was assigned by lot to Shem and to his sons to possess it forever for his generations forever.
18 And Noah rejoiced because this portion was assigned to Shem and for his sons. And he remembered everything which he spoke with his mouth concerning him because he said:

Gen 2:13

g. A portion of the Syr. text begins at this point and summarizes the remainder of the ch.

h. Rafa is probably the vague Rhipaeae Mountains of early Gk. geographers whence the major rivers flowed.

i. The Tina is the river Don, which set the boundary between the land of Shem and Japheth. At this point the author of Jub is following hellenistic views of geography. Some geographers took the Don and the Nile (Gihon in Jub) as the boundaries of the three continents. It has been suggested that such a view may have been held by Hecataeus of Miletus (c. 500 B.C.) with whom Herodotus disputed in his Histories 2.16 regarding the use of the Nile to divide the continents.

j. Me'at is Lake Maeotis.

k. Karaso is probably Chersonese, an ancient name for the Gallipoli Peninsula, which extends into the Aegean Sea west of the Hellespont. In order to make this identification, which Charles rejected, it is necessary to assume that the author of Jub divided the Great Sea, i.e. the Mediterranean, into at least four regions. In the north there were three "tongues," the Aegean, the Adriatic, and the Tyrrhenian seas. In the south there was a region known as the Sea of Egypt. From that perspective, the Aegean was the tongue which looked toward Egypt. Likewise from that perspective, Chersonese lies in the bosom of the tongue which looks south. For further discussion consult G. Hölscher, Drei Erdkarten (Heidelberg, 1949) pp. 57-73.

l. The Great Sea is the Mediterranean.

m. Africa, at least the portion through which the Nile flows. See also nn. w and x.

n. The Nile. The early geographers were uninformed about the sources of the Nile. For them, it apparently flowed south beyond the borders of Egypt and then flowed sharply eastward. Inasmuch as our writer identifies it with Gihon, one of the four rivers flowing out of the garden of Eden, it was obvious to him that it must have flowed eastward so that one could reach Eden by following it.

May the LORD God of Shem be blessed,
and may the LORD dwell in the dwelling place of Shem.

- 19 And he knew that the garden of Eden was the holy of holies and the dwelling of the LORD. And Mount Sinai (was) in the midst of the desert and Mount Zion (was) in the midst of the navel of the earth. The three of these were created as holy places, one facing the other. •And he blessed the God of gods, who placed in his mouth the word of the LORD, and also the Eternal God.<sup>o</sup> •And he knew that a blessed portion and blessing had reached Shem and his sons for eternal generations: all the land of Eden, all of the land of the Red Sea, all of the land of the East, India, along the Red Sea, and its mountains, all of the land of Basa, all of the land of Lebanon, the islands of Caphtor, all of Mount Senir, Amanus, Mount Asshur, which is north, all of the land of Elam, Asshur, Babel, Susa, Media, all of the mountains of Ararat, and all of the region beyond the sea,<sup>p</sup> which is beyond Mount Asshur, which is toward the north, the blessed and wide land. And everything which is in it is very good.

IQapGen 19.8
Ezek 38:12
1En 26:1

IQapGen 21.15f.

Jer 47:4
Amos 9:7
Song 4:8

Ham's portion

Gen 10:6-20

- 22 And to Ham was assigned the second portion toward the other side of the Gihon, toward the south on the right of the garden. And it goes on toward the south, and it goes along all of the mountains of fire.<sup>q</sup> And (his portion) goes on toward the west, toward the Atel' Sea. And it goes on westward until it draws near the Ma'uk<sup>s</sup> Sea, to which nothing descends without perishing.<sup>1</sup> •And it goes forth in the north to the end of Gadir.<sup>u</sup> And it goes forth along the edge of the water of the sea into the waters of the Great Sea until it approaches the river Gihon. And it goes on along the Gihon River until it approaches the right side of the garden of Eden. •And this is the land that went forth to Ham as a portion which he will possess forever for himself and for his children for their generations forever.

IQapGen 19.13
1En 18:6-9;
24:1-3

Japheth's portion

Gen 10:2-5

- 25 And for Japheth the third portion was assigned beyond the Tina River toward the north of the mouth of its waters. And it goes on toward the northeast of all of the region of Gog and everything east of it. •And it goes on toward the north to the north. And it goes toward the mountains of Qelt<sup>v</sup> toward the north, toward

o. The Eth. text reads "the LORD forever," but that is probably a slight corruption of the Heb. 'el 'olam. Cf. Gen 21:33 and Isa 40:28.

p. Probably the Caspian.

q. Apparently a long range of mountains ringing the southern boundary of the world just as the Rafa Mountains marked a northern border. See G. Hölcher, Drei Erdkarten, p. 58, for a map.

r. The Atlantic.

s. The word Ma'uk is spelled ma'kaka in EMML 101. In the Syr. text the spelling suggested by Tisserant was Mahouq. The Ma'uk Sea is the world ocean, known to the Greeks as ōkeanos. Charles sought to derive Ma'uk from that Gk. word, but that now seems impossible in light of the Syr. spelling. I would suggest that it is a mem preformative noun from the Heb. root hqq with the meaning "place of the boundary (of waters)." The same root is used in Prov 8:29: "when he assigned the sea its limit." The consonantal spelling of the name would be mhqq. The precise phonetic value of each of the consonants has been preserved in Syr., a fact which both depends on and reinforces the view that the Syr. text was translated directly from the Heb. The final double consonant is reflected by the reading of EMML 101, which preserves a form that could easily represent a Gk. transcription of the Heb. original. The Syr. form may also reflect a final double consonant if we assume a simple misreading of mhqq as mhwq. The confusion of "w" and "q" is relatively simple, depending on the Syr. script that is used.

t. The reading of the final phrase is based on an interpretation of the Syr. text. The Eth. text is seriously confused at this point. At best we can offer an awkward literal rendering of MS C and EMML 101: "Ma'uk, which is that one into which that which will be destroyed descends." All other MSS read "that which will not be destroyed."

u. Cadiz, located on the southern Atlantic coast of Spain. The name Gadir is Semitic, meaning a "walled" or "fortified" place. It was founded as a distant colony of Tyre.

v. This refers to the Celts who live in the far northwest toward the Ma'uk Sea.

the Ma'uk Sea, and it comes toward the east of Gadir up toward the edge of the 27 water of the sea. •And it goes on until it draws near toward the west of Fereg<sup>w</sup> and it returns toward 'Afrēg.<sup>x</sup> And it goes on toward the east, toward the water 28 of the Me'at Sea. •And it goes on toward the side of the Tina River, toward the northeast until it approaches the end of its waters, toward Mount Rafa. And it 29 goes around to the north. •This is the land which came to Japheth and to his sons as the portion of his inheritance which he will possess for himself and for his sons for their generations forever: the five great islands and a great land in the north.
 30 But it is cold, and the land of Ham is hot, but the land of Shem is not hot or cold because it is mixed with cold and heat.

The portions of the sons of Ham, Shem, and Japheth

Gen 10

1 9 And Ham divided (his land) among his sons. And the first portion was assigned to Cush<sup>a</sup> toward the east, and west of him for Mizraim.<sup>b</sup> And west of him for 2 Put.<sup>c</sup> And west of him for Canaan. And toward his west was the sea. •And Shem also divided among his sons. And the first portion was assigned to Elam and his sons toward the east of the Tigris River until it approaches toward the east of all of the land of India, along the Red Sea<sup>d</sup> on its shore, the waters of Dedan,<sup>e</sup> and all of the mountains of Mebrī<sup>f</sup> and Elam<sup>g</sup> all of the land of Susa, and everything 3 which is beside Pharnak<sup>h</sup> as far as the Red Sea and up to the Tina River. •And also to Asshur was assigned the second portion, all of the land of Asshur and Nineveh and Shinar<sup>i</sup> and as far as the vicinity of India. And then it goes up and 4 skirts the river.<sup>j</sup> •And to Arpachshad was assigned the third portion, all of the land of the region of Chaldea<sup>k</sup> toward the east of the Euphrates, which is near the Red Sea, and all of the waters of the desert as far as the vicinity of the tongue of the sea which faces toward Egypt, all of the land of Lebanon and Senir<sup>l</sup> and 5 Amana as far as the vicinity of the Euphrates. •And to Aram the fourth portion

w. Fēreg is the reading found in MS A, and is probably closest to the original text. The spelling of this name, which apparently represents Africa, differs from MS to MS and from place to place in the text. The Syr. form which occurs at this point is 'afgerā, with an initial aleph and metathesis of the "g" and "r." The name also appears in vs. 15 and possibly a second time in the present vs. The significance of drawing toward the west of Africa may simply indicate the southward movement around the boot of Italy or it may imply that the boundary between Japheth and Ham is in the southern Mediterranean in order to claim the islands for Japheth.

x. 'Afrēg is the spelling in MS B. It is closest to the Heb. and Aram. spelling for Africa ('aphrīqī) of the forms given thus far. Hölscher assumes that it represents a second mention of Africa (Drei Erdkarten, p. 71). Charles, however, suggested in his English translation that it referred to Phrygia. Phrygia could easily be a stopping point in the direction of the Me'at Sea. According to Josephus (Ant 1.6.1), Phrygia belonged to Japheth. A further bit of evidence may also be added to Charles's argument; GenR refers to Phrygia (at the beginning of ch. 37) by the name 'aphrīqī, a homograph for Africa. Inasmuch as that fact shows that it was possible to use the same spelling when referring to Africa or to Phrygia, we may not be able to determine which one is intended here. Nevertheless, it may be noted that in vs. 15 and in the first mention of Africa in the present vs., the phrase "west of" is used to define the location more specifically. It is possible that such a phrase was used to distinguish Africa from Phrygia inasmuch as they were spelled alike.

9 a. The Eth. text has kwes for Cush, but the intent of the author is clear. In this vs. he is dealing with the four sons of Ham mentioned in Gen 10:6. Cush is the land located directly south of Egypt.

b. Egypt.

c. Libya, or some part of it.

d. In the mind of the geographer, the Red Sea was a huge eastern sea. Balancing the Mediterranean in the west, it included the Indian Ocean, thus reaching to India.

e. The biblical Dedan is a prosperous caravan city in northeast Arabia somewhere near Taima (Isa 21:13; Ezek 25:13).

f. Mebrī is also spelled Mazbār. The site is unknown.

g. Only MS A reads 'Ēlām. The other MSS read 'Ēlā. One might not ordinarily expect Elam to be part of a list mentioning the holdings of Elam, but in vs. 3 the land of Asshur is given to Asshur.

h. Hölscher (Drei Erdkarten, p. 69f.) has identified Pharnak with a site along the Farah River near the border of Iran and Afghanistan, and has cited a passage in which Assarhadon represented himself as subduer of the land of Parnaki.

i. Babylon.

j. The reading follows an emendation suggested by Charles.

k. Chaldea is the homeland of the Neo-Babylonian Empire.

l. In the neighborhood of Mount Hermon (Song 4:8).

- was assigned, all of the land of Mesopotamia, between the Tigris and the Euphrates, toward the north of the Chaldeans up to the vicinity of Mount Asshur and the
- 6 land of Arara.<sup>m</sup> •And to Lud<sup>n</sup> the fifth portion was assigned, Mount Asshur and everything pertaining to it until it approaches the Great Sea. And it draws near toward the east of Asshur, his brother.
- 7.8 And Japheth also divided the land of his inheritance between his sons. •And the first portion was assigned to Gomer<sup>o</sup> toward the east from the north side up to the river Tina. And in the north to Magog<sup>p</sup> was assigned all of the inner parts
- 9 of the north until it approaches toward the Sea of Me'at. •And to Madai<sup>q</sup> his portion was assigned that he should take from the west of his two brothers as far
- 10 as the islands and up to the coasts of the islands. •And to Javan<sup>r</sup> the fourth portion was assigned, every island and the islands which are toward the side of Lud. 1QapGen 17:16
- 11 And to Tubal<sup>s</sup> the fifth portion was assigned in the midst of the tongue which draws near toward the side of Lud's portion as far as the second tongue into the
- 12 region beyond the second tongue into the third tongue. •And to Meshech<sup>t</sup> the sixth portion was assigned, everything on the other side of the third tongue until it
- 13 approaches the east of Gadir. •And to Tiras<sup>u</sup> the seventh portion was assigned, four great islands in the midst of the sea which approaches the portion of Ham. Ezek 27:13
- And the islands of Kamaturi<sup>v</sup> were assigned by lot to the sons of Arpachshad as an inheritance for him.

The curse against violating boundaries

- 14 And thus the sons of Noah divided for their children before Noah, their father. And he made them all swear an oath to curse each and every one who desired to
- 15 seize a portion which did not come in his lot. •And they all said, "So be it and so let it be to them and to their sons forever in their generations until the day of judgment in which the LORD God will judge them with a sword and with fire on account of all the evil of the pollution of their errors which have filled the earth with sin and pollution and fornication and transgression."

Noah's prayer against the demons

- 1 10 In the third week of that jubilee the polluted demons began to lead astray the
- 2 children of Noah's sons and to lead them to folly and to destroy them. •And the sons of Noah came to Noah, their father, and they told him about the demons
- 3 who were leading astray and blinding and killing his grandchildren. •And he prayed before the LORD his God and he said, "God of the spirits which are in all flesh, who has acted mercifully with me and saved me and my sons from the water of the Flood and did not let me perish as you did the children of perdition, because
- 1En 15f.
Num 16:22:
27:16
2Thes 2:3

m. Ararat.

n. Ancient Lydia in Asia Minor.

o. Associated with the Cimmerians, who invaded Asia Minor in the eighth century B.C.

p. Associated with the Sythiōr hordes whom Herodotus locates in this area (Histories, 4). The identification of Magog with the Scythians is found in Josephus, Ant 1.6.1.

q. The Medes.

r. Designates Ionians living in Asia Minor.

s. Identified with the Tabal, which is known from Akkadian texts of the ninth century B.C. and later. It was located somewhere in Asia Minor near the area of Cappadocia.

t. Equated with the Muski mentioned in Akkadian texts. It is located west of Tubal in Asia Minor.

u. Identified by Charles in his English translation as "the Tyrseni, a branch of the Pelasgians who lived by piracy on the coasts and islands of the Aegean."

v. From Jub 8:29 we learn that there are five great islands that were assigned to Japheth. 1En 77:8 mentions that there are five great islands in the Mediterranean. Enoch's islands would be Corsica, Sardinia, Sicily, Cyprus, and Crete. In the present vs. the writer may be modifying the view of 8:29 because he assigns only four to Japheth. The fifth belongs to Arpachshad, a son of Shem. If we are to select one of Enoch's five islands for Shem, it would obviously be Crete (Caphtor), in accord with 8:21. Therefore, it seems likely that Kamaturi may be a corruption of Caphtor. It involves the substitution of a labial "m" for a labial "p." There could, of course, be five Mediterranean islands reserved for Japheth, as Jub 8:29 maintains, if we were to count Malta.

Great was your grace upon me,
and great was your mercy upon my soul.
Let your grace be lifted up upon my sons, and do not let the evil spirits rule over them, lest they destroy them from the earth.

- 4,5 But bless me and my sons. And let us grow and increase and fill the earth. •And you know that which your Watchers, the fathers of these spirits, did in my days and also these spirits who are alive. Shut them up and take them to the place of judgment. And do not let them cause corruption among the sons of your servant,
6 O my God, because they are cruel and were created to destroy. •And let them not rule over the spirits of the living because you alone know their judgment, and do not let them have power over the children of the righteous henceforth and forever.”

The binding of nine tenths of the demons

- 7,8 And the LORD our God spoke to us so that we might bind all of them. •And the chief of the spirits, Mastema, came and he said, “O Lord, Creator, leave some of them before me, and let them obey my voice. And let them do everything which I tell them, because if some of them are not left for me, I will not be able to exercise the authority of my will among the children of men because they are (intended) to corrupt and lead astray before my judgment because the evil of the 9 sons of men is great.” •And he said, “Let a tenth of them remain before him, but let nine parts go down into the place of judgment.” IEEn 10:4,12
Mk 3:22
IEEn 69:4,6
IEEn 15:11f.
10 And he told one of us to teach Noah all of their healing because he knew that 11 they would not walk uprightly and would not strive righteously. •And we acted in accord with all of his words. All of the evil ones, who were cruel, we bound in the place of judgment, but a tenth of them we let remain so that they might be 12 subject to Satan upon the earth. •And the healing of all their illnesses together with their seductions we told Noah so that he might heal by means of herbs of 13 the earth. •And Noah wrote everything in a book just as we taught him according to every kind of healing. And the evil spirits were restrained from following the 14 sons of Noah. •And he gave everything which he wrote to Shem, his oldest son, because he loved him much more than all of his sons. IEEn 10:11-13;
15f.

The death of Noah

- 15 And Noah slept with his fathers and was buried on Mount Lubar in the land of 16 Ararat. •Nine hundred and fifty years he completed in his life, nineteen jubilees Gen 9:28
17 and two weeks and five years. •On account of his righteousness in which he was perfected, his life on earth was more excellent than (any of) the sons of men except Enoch, for the work of Enoch had been created as a witness to the generations of the world so that he might report every deed of each generation in the day of judgment.

The Tower of Babel

- 18 And in the thirty-third jubilee, in the first year of this second week, Peleg took a wife whose name was Lomna, daughter of Sina'ar. And she bore a son for him in the fourth year of that week. And he called him Reu because, he said, “Behold, the sons of man have become evil with perverse counsel so that they are building 19 a city and a tower for themselves in the land of Shinar.” •For they departed from the land of Ararat toward the east into Shinar, because in his days they built a city and a tower, saying, “Come let us go up in it into heaven.” Gen 11:18;
11:1-9
20 And they began building. And in the fourth week they baked bricks in fire, and bricks were for them like stones. And the mud with which they plastered was bitumen, which came out of the sea, and the springs of water in the land of 21 Shinar. •And they built it; forty-three years they were building it. Its width was two hundred and three bricks. And the height of a brick was one third its length. Five thousand, four hundred and thirty-three cubits and two palms its height rose up.

 22 up. And thirteen stades (was its wall).<sup>a</sup> •And the LORD our God said to us, "Behold, the people are one and they have begun working. Now nothing will escape them. Behold, let us go down and let us mix up their tongues so each one will not hear another's word, and they will be scattered into cities and nations, and, therefore, one counsel will not reside with them until the day of judgment."
 23 And the LORD went down and we went down with him. And we saw the city
 24 and the tower which the sons of men had built. •And he mixed up their tongues, and, therefore, one did not hear another's word. And so they ceased to build the 25 city and the tower. •Therefore, all of the land of Shinar is called Babel because there the LORD mixed up all the languages of the sons of men. And from there they were scattered into their cities according to each of their languages and 26 nations. •And the LORD sent a great wind upon the tower and overthrew it on the earth. And behold, it is between Asshur and Babylon in the land of Shinar and he called it "the Overthrow."

SibOr 3.98-103

Canaan's seizure of land in Shem's portion

27 And in the fourth week in the first year in the beginning of it, in the thirty-
 28 fourth jubilee, they were scattered from the land of Shinar. •And Ham and his sons went into the land which was his possession, which he found in his portion
 29 in the land of the south. •But Canaan<sup>b</sup> saw that the land of Lebanon as far as the river of Egypt was very good. And he did not go into the land of his inheritance toward the west, that is the sea, but he dwelt in the land of Lebanon, eastward 30 and westward, from the bank of the Jordan and from the shore of the sea. •And Ham, his father, and Cush and Mizraim, his brothers, said to him, "You have dwelt in a land which is not yours nor did it come forth for us by lot. Do not do this, because if you do this, you and your children will fall in the land and be cursed with sedition because by sedition you have dwelt and by sedition your 31 children will fall and you will be uprooted forever. •Do not dwell in the dwelling
 32 of Shem because it came to Shem and his sons by lot. •You are cursed and you will be cursed more than all of the sons of Noah by the curse which we swore 33 with an oath before the holy judge and before Noah, our father." •But he would not listen to them and he dwelt in the land of Lebanon from Hamath to the 34 entrance of Egypt, he and his sons, until this day. •And, therefore, that land is called Canaan.

2Chr 7:8

The settlement of Japheth's sons

35 And Japheth and his sons went toward the sea, and they dwelt in the land of their portion, but Madai saw the land of the sea and it did not please him. And he begged it from Elam and Asshur and Arpachshad, from the brother of his wife. And he dwelt in the land of Media near his wife's brother until this day. And he called his dwelling place and the dwelling place of his sons Media after their father, Madai.

10 a. This sentence requires considerable adjustment in translating. There is a parallel Gk. text preserved in the Catena of Nicephorus. Charles published the relevant portion with his Eth. text. The second sentence in this vs. is translated from that Gk. text. The Eth. is more difficult to fit in the context. It reads "thirteen solid bricks (were) in it."

The third sentence is a free translation. The literal translation reads "And one third of one (was) its height."

In the last sentence, which mentions "thirteen stades," the Eth. word translated "stades" is a measure of an unknown distance.

b. There is a portion of the Syr. text which is parallel to the first part of this vs.

The birth of Serug marks the rise of war and other evils

Gen 11:20

1 11 And in the thirty-fifth jubilee, in the third week, in the first year thereof, Reu took a wife and her name was 'Ora,<sup>a</sup> daughter of 'Ur, son of Kesed.<sup>b</sup> And she bore a son for him and he called him Seroh in the seventh year of that week in
2 that jubilee. •And the sons of Noah began fighting in order to take captive and to kill each other, to pour the blood of man upon the earth, to eat blood, to build fortified cities and walls and towers, so that (one) man will be raised up over the people, to set up the first kingdoms to go to war, people against people and nation against nation and city against city, and everyone (will act) to do evil and to acquire weapons of battle and to teach their sons war. And they began to take
3 captive a city and to sell male and female slaves. •And 'Ur, the son of Kesed, built the city of 'Ur of the Chaldees<sup>c</sup> and he named it after his name and his
4 father's name. •And they made for themselves molten images, and everyone worshiped the icon which they made for themselves as a molten image. And they began making graven images and polluted likenesses. And cruel spirits assisted 5 them and led them astray so that they might commit sin and pollution. •And the prince, Mastema, acted forcefully to do all of this. And he sent other spirits to 6 those who were set under his hand to practice all error and sin and all transgression, to destroy, to cause to perish and to pour out blood upon the earth. •Therefore he called the name of Seroh, "Serug," because everyone had turned back to commit all sin and transgression.<sup>d</sup> 1En 10:8

The birth of Nahor

Gen 11:22

7 And he grew up and dwelt in 'Ur of the Chaldees near the father of his wife's mother. And he used to worship idols. And he took a wife in the thirty-sixth jubilee, in the fifth week, in the first year thereof. And her name was Melka,<sup>e</sup>
8 daughter of Kaber, daughter of his father's brother. •And she bore for him Nahor in the first year of that week. And he grew up and he dwelt in 'Ur among the Chaldeans, and his father taught him the researches of the Chaldeans in order to practice divination and astrology according to the signs of heaven.

The birth of Terah marks a devastation by crows

Gen 11:24

9 And in the thirty-seventh jubilee, in the sixth week, in the first year thereof, he took a wife. And her name was 'Iyaska,<sup>f</sup> daughter of Nestag of the Chaldees.
10,11 And she bore for him Terah in the seventh year of that week. •And Prince Mastema sent crows and birds so that they might eat the seed which was being sown in the earth in order to spoil the earth so that they might rob mankind of their labors. Before they plowed in the seed, the crows picked it off the surface
12 of the earth. •And therefore he called him Terah because the crows and birds
13 were impoverishing them.<sup>g</sup> And they ate their seed. •And the years began being

11 a. A feminine name meaning "light." It is a feminine form made with the same consonants as 'Ur, the name of her father.

b. The Heb. phrase 'ur kasdim, "'Ur of the Chaldeans," was apparently taken as a starting point for this genealogical note. In the singular, 'ur kesed could easily be read "'Ur, son of Kesed."

c. In this sentence the pun is complete; 'ur kesed built the city of 'ur kasdim. The Eth. text has corrupted the name of the city to 'ara, but the correction is obvious.

d. The name Serug is provided with a rather feeble interpretation which is probably based on alliteration between the first syllable of the name (ser) and the Heb. roots sur, "'turn," and sara, "'turning away, apostasy, sin." Although the sibilant in Serug is a sin and the sibilants in the words for "'turn" and "'sin" are sameks, the sounds were probably pronounced alike in the Heb. circles where this interpretation of Serug was proposed.

e. A feminine name which appears in Gen 11:29 as the name of Nahor's wife. Here she is the mother of a Nahor. The Nahor of Gen 11:29 is the son of Terah. The Nahor mentioned here is his grandfather.

f. There is a Iaschah in Gen 11:29, but there she is the daughter of Haran.

g. There is an Ar. root trh, which means "'to grieve, be sad." A Heb. or Aram. cognate may have existed to explain the meaning of Terah's name.

barren because of the birds. And they ate all of the fruit of the trees from the groves. If ever they were able to save a little from all of the fruit of the earth in their days, it was with great effort.

The birth of Abram and his piety

Gen 11:26

14 And in this thirty-ninth jubilee, in the second week, in the first year, Terah took a wife and her name was 'Edna, daughter of 'Abram, daughter of his father's 15 sister. •And in the seventh year of that week, she bore a son for him, and he called him Abram, after the name of his mother's father because he died before 16 his daughter conceived a son. •And the lad began understanding<sup>b</sup> the straying of the land, that everyone went astray after graven images and after pollution. And his father taught him writing. And he was two weeks of years old. And he 17 separated from his father so that he might not worship the idols with him. •And he began to pray to the Creator of all so that he might save him from the straying of the sons of men, and so that his portion might not fall into straying after the pollution and scorn.

Abram's successful efforts against the crows<sup>i</sup>

18 And the seed time arrived for sowing in the land. And they all went out together so that they might guard their seed from before the crows. And Abram went out 19 with those who went out. And the lad was fourteen years old. •And a cloud of crows came so that they might eat the seed, and Abram used to run up to them before they settled upon the earth. And he would call out to them before they settled upon the earth to eat seed, and he said, "Don't come down. Return to 20 place whence you came." And they turned back. •And he caused the cloud of crows to turn back<sup>j</sup> seventy times in that day. And none of the crows settled on 21 any of the fields where Abram was, not one. •And all who were with him in all of the fields saw him as he was calling out. And all of the crows turned away.
22 And his reputation was great in all the land of Chaldea. •And all who would sow came to him during that year. And he used to go with them until the seed time passed. And they sowed their land and harvested in that year enough food, and they ate and were satisfied.
23 And in the first year of the fifth week, Abram taught those who were making the implements for oxen, the skilled carpenters. And they made implements above the ground facing the handle of the plow so that they might place seed upon it. And the seed would go down from within it onto the point of the plow, and it would be hidden in the earth. And therefore they were not afraid of the crows.
24 And they did likewise upon all of the plow handles above the ground. And they sowed and tilled all of the earth just as Abram commanded them. And therefore they were not afraid of the birds.

Abram's plea to avoid idolatry

1 12 And it came to pass in the sixth week, in its seventh year, that Abram spoke to Terah, his father, saying, "O father." And he said, "Behold, here I am, my 2 son." •And he said:

h. A portion of the Syr. text is parallel to this vs. It excerpts portions of vss. from 11:16 to 12:29.

i. In his English translation, p. 88, Charles cited subsequent accounts of this episode by Jerome, St. Ephraem, and Bar. Hebraeus, but he concluded that all of the later accounts were derived from Jub. More recently, S. P. Brock has brought together Syr. evidence from the Catena Serevi on Gen and a letter written by Jacob of Edessa to John of Litarba and has sought to demonstrate that it reflects an independent tradition about Abraham.

In that account it is God rather than Mastema who sends the ravens. Abraham is unable to drive the ravens away until he calls out to God for help ("Abraham and the Ravens: A Syriac Counterpart to Jubilees 11-12 and Its Implications," JSJ 9 [1979] 135-52).

j. Various Ehh. MSS read "he did," "they did," or "he returned." The emendation required for the present reading is slight and it is now supported by the Syr.

“What help or advantage do we have from these idols before which you worship and bow down?

- 3 Because there is not any spirit in them, Ps 135:17 for they are mute,
 and they are the misleading of the heart.
 Do not worship them.<sup>a</sup>
- 4 Worship the God of heaven,
 who sends down rain and dew upon the earth,
 and who makes everything upon the earth,
 and created everything by his word,
 and all life is in his presence.
- 5 Why do you worship those who have no spirit in them?
 Because they are works of the hands,
 and you are carrying them upon your shoulders,
 and there is no help from them for you, except great shame for those who made them and the misleading of the heart for those who worship them.
 Do not worship them.”

Jer 10:3,9
 Amos 5:26
 Isa 46:7

- 6 And his father said to him, “I also know (that), my son, but what shall I do to 7 the people who have made me minister before them?”<sup>b</sup> •And if I speak to them in righteousness, they will kill me because their souls cleave to them<sup>c</sup> so that they might worship them and praise them. Be silent, my son, lest they kill you.”
- 8 And he told this matter to two of his brothers, and they were angry with him, and he kept quiet.

The marriages of Abram and his brothers

Gen 11:29

- 9 And in the fortieth jubilee, in the second week, in its seventh year, Abram took Gen 20:12
 a wife and her name was Sarai,<sup>d</sup> daughter of his father, and she became a wife for him.
- 10 And Haran, his brother, took a wife in the third year of the third week, and she bore a son for him in the seventh year of that week. And he called him Lot.
- 11 And Nahor, his brother, took a wife.

Abram burns the house of idols

- 12 In the sixtieth year of the life of Abram, i.e. the fourth week, in its fourth year, Abram arose in the night and burned the house of idols. And he burned everything 13 in the house. And there was no man who knew. •And they rose up in the night, 14 and they wanted to save their gods from the midst of the fire. •And Haran rushed to save them, and the fire flared up over him. And he was burned in the fire and died in Ur of the Chaldees before Terah, his father. And they buried him in Ur of the Chaldees.

12 a. The imperatives and the second person pronouns (“you”) are all plural in vss. 3–5. The author of the text has apparently made use of a liturgical unit written for a communal setting. Certain poetic features appear if the unit is divided into three stanzas in the following manner: (1) vs. 3; (2) vss. 4–5a; (3) the remainder of 5. Stanzas 1 and 3 begin with “because” and end with the refrain “Do not worship them”; they describe the worthlessness of idols. Stanza 2 provides an internal contrast by describing the creative and providential power of God. It seems reasonable to put vs. 2 outside the poetic unit because the second person pronoun (you) is singular and refers only to Abram’s father. The Syr. has drastically abbreviated and rearranged the statements which appear in these vss.

b. The pronoun refers to the idols which were described in vss. 3–5.

c. See previous n.

d. The Eth. has “Sarah,” but spellings have been standardized to agree with the biblical text.

Departure to Haran

Gen 11:31

- 15 And Terah went out of Ur of the Chaldees, he<sup>e</sup> and his sons, so that they might come into the land of Lebanon and into the land of Canaan. And he dwelt in Haran.<sup>f</sup> And Abram dwelt with Terah, his father, in Haran two weeks of years.

Abram's night vigil

- 16 And in the sixth week, in its fifth year, Abram sat up during the night on the first of the seventh month, so that he might observe the stars from evening until daybreak so that he might see what the nature of the year would be with respect to rain. And he was sitting alone and making observations; *and a word came into his heart, saying, "All of the signs of the stars and the signs of the sun and the moon are all in the hand of the LORD. Why am I seeking?"
- 18 If he desires, he will make it rain morning and evening, and if he desires he will not send (it) down;
and everything is in his hand."
- 19 And he prayed on that night, saying:
"My God, the Most High God, you alone are God to me.
And you created everything, and everything which is was the work of your hands,
and you and your kingdom I have chosen.
- 20 Save me from the hands of evil spirits which rule over the thought of the heart of man, and do not let them lead me astray from following you, O my God;
but establish me and my seed forever, and let us not go astray henceforth and forever."
- 21 And he said, "Shall I return unto Ur of the Chaldees who seek my face so that I should return to them? Or shall I dwell here in this place? Make the straight path prosper before you in the hand of your servant that he might serve. And do not let me walk in the error of my heart, O my God."

Abram is called to the land of promise

Gen 12:1-3

- 22 And he finished talking and praying and behold, the word of the LORD was sent to him by my hand, saying, "Come forth from your land and from your kin and from your father's house into the land which I shall show you, and I shall establish you as a great and numerous people.
- 23 And I shall bless you and I shall make your name great, and you will be blessed in the land and all the nations of the earth will bless themselves by you.
And whoever blesses you I shall bless and whoever curses you I shall curse.
- 24 And I shall be God for you and your son and for the son of your son and for all of your seed. Do not fear henceforth and for all the generations of the earth. I am your God."

e. There is a small fragment of a Heb. text from Qumran which is parallel to vss. 15-17.

f. The printed Eth. text would give a reading "the land of Haran," but the Syr. and one Eth.

MS (D) omit the phrase "the land of." VanderKam has argued that the Qumran fragment scarcely has room for it either.

The revival of Hebrew

25 And the LORD God said to me, "Open his mouth and his ears so that he might 26 hear and speak with his mouth in the language which is revealed because it ceased 27 from the mouth of all of the sons of men from the day of the Fall." • And I opened his mouth and his ears and his lips and I began to speak with him in Hebrew, in the tongue of creation. • And he took his father's books—and they were written in Hebrew—and he copied them. And he began studying them thereafter. And I caused him to know everything which he was unable (to understand). And he studied them (in) the six months of rain. 1QapGen 19.25

The blessing of Terah

28 And it came to pass<sup>g</sup> in the seventh year of the sixth week that he spoke with his father and let him know that he was going from Haran to walk (in) the land 29 of Canaan so that he might see it and return to him. • And Terah, his father, said to him:

"Go in peace.
 May God eternal make straight your path and the LORD be with you and protect you from all evil [and grant favor upon you and mercy and grace before those who see you.]<sup>h</sup>
 May none of the sons of men rule over you to do evil to you.
 Go in peace.

30 And when you have seen a land pleasant to your eyes to dwell in, come and take me to you. And take Lot, the son of Haran your brother with you (as) a son for 31 yourself. The LORD be with you. • But Nahor, your brother, leave with me until you return in peace. And we will all go together with you."

Abram's sojourn at Bethel

Gen 12:4-8

1 13 And Abram went from Haran. And he took Sarai, his wife, and Lot, his brother Haran's son, into the land of Canaan. And he came to Asshur. And he 2 walked to Shechem. And he dwelt by a tall oak. • And he saw, and behold the 3 land was very pleasant from the entrance of Hamath to the tall oak. • And the 4 LORD said to him, "To you and to your seed I will give this land." • And he built there an altar and he offered up upon it a burnt offering to the LORD, who appeared to him.
 5 And he removed from there into the mountain, with Bethel toward the west
 6 and Ai toward the east, and he pitched his tent there. • And he saw and behold, the land was wide and very good and everything was growing upon it: vines and figs and pomegranate trees, oaks and ilexes and terebinths and olive trees and cedars and cypresses and date trees<sup>a</sup> and every tree of the field, and water was

g. A fragment of a Heb. MS from Qumran has provided a parallel for vs. 28f.

h. The words within the brackets, which have strong support in the Eth. MSS, are not attested in the fragment from Qumran. They are also missing from the Syr. text, which omits the phrase "and the LORD be with you and protect you from all evil." Since the Syr. text is frequently abbreviated, its witness alone would scarcely be significant. The fact that there is not room for it in an early Heb. text, however, raises serious questions about its authenticity.

Eth. names for some of the trees in this list. The more familiar words for "vines," "figs," "pomegranate," and "olive" are quite clear. The words for cypress and cedar and terebinth are Eth. transcriptions of the Gk. terms. The word for oak represents a transcription of the Gk. balanos. The word which Charles rendered "ilex" is a transcription of the Gk. drus. Thus he used the Lat. name to distinguish it in translation from balanos. The "date trees" are the result of Charles's emendation of the Eth. text. Most of the Eth. MSS transcribed the Gk. libanos, "frankincense," but that would be out of place in Canaan.

13 a. There is a degree of uncertainty about the

7 upon the mountains. •And he blessed the LORD who brought him out of Ur of 8 Chaldees and brought him into this land. •And it came to pass in the first year, in the seventh week, on the first of the first month, (that) he built an altar on that mountain and he called on the name of the LORD: “You (are) my God, the 9 eternal God.” •And he offered up a burnt offering to the LORD upon the altar so that he might be with him and not forsake him all the days of his life.

Abram travels south to Hebron and Egypt

Gen 12:9-13:2
1QapGen 19f.

10 And he arose from there and he went toward the South and he reached Hebron—and Hebron was built then. And<sup>b</sup> he dwelt there two years. And he went to the 11 land of the South as far as Bealoth. And there was a famine in the land. •And Abram went into Egypt in the third year of the week and he stayed in Egypt five 12 years before his wife was taken from him. •And Tanis of Egypt was built then, Num 13:22 seven years after Hebron.

13 And it came to pass when Pharaoh took Sarai, the wife of Abram, that the LORD plagued Pharaoh and his house with great plagues on account of Sarai, the 14 wife of Abram. •And Abram was honored with many possessions: sheep and oxen and asses and horses and camels and male and female servants and silver and 15 much gold. And Lot, his brother’s son, also had possessions. •And Pharaoh returned Sarai, the wife of Abram. And he sent him out from the land of Egypt.

Abram returns to Bethel and is promised the land

Gen 13:3-17

And he went to the place where he had pitched his tent first, to the place of the altar. Ai was east and Bethel west. And he blessed the LORD his God who 16 brought him back in peace. •And it came to pass in that forty-first jubilee, in the third year of the first week, (that) he returned to this place. And he offered up upon it a burnt offering and he called upon the name of the LORD. And he said:

“You, O God, Most High, (are) my God forever and ever.”

17 And in the fourth year of that week Lot separated from him. And Lot<sup>c</sup> dwelt in 1QapGen 21.4f.
18 Sodom. And the men of Sodom were great sinners. •And his heart was sad because his brother’s son had separated from him because he had no sons.

19 (It was) in that year, when Lot was taken captive, that the LORD spoke to 1QapGen 21.8-Abram after Lot had separated from him, in the fourth year of that week: “Lift 10 up your eyes from the place where you are dwelling toward the North and South 20 and West and East •because all of the land which you see I will give to you and your seed forever. And I will make your seed like the sands of the sea. (Even) if a man were able to number the sands of the earth,<sup>d</sup> he would not (be able) to 21 number your seed. •Arise and walk in the land in its length and its breadth and 1QapGen 21.11 see all (of it) because I will give it to your seed.”

Abram at Hebron reacts to Lot’s capture

Gen 14:1-14

22 And Abram went to Hebron and he dwelt there. •And in that year Chedorlaomer, 1QapGen 21.23-king of Elam; and Amraphel, king of Shinar; and Arioch, king of Sellasar; and 22.17 Tergal,<sup>e</sup> king of the nations, came and killed the king of Gomorrah, but the king of Sodom fled. And many fell with wounds in the valley of Siddim, by the sea 23 of salt. •And they took captive Sodom and Adam and Zeboim. And they took

b. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through vs. 21.

c. A portion of the Syr. text begins at this point and continues through vs. 29.

d. The first half of this sentence is omitted from the Lat. text.

e. These names differ from the spelling in Gen 14. The Eth. spelling reflects that of an intermediate Gk. text.

Lot, the son of Abram's brother, captive and all of his possessions. And he went 24 to Dan. •And one who escaped came and told Abram that his brother's son had 25 been taken captive. •And he armed the servants of his house.<sup>f</sup>

The law of the tithe

Gen 14:20

. . . upon Abram and his seed a tenth of the firstfruits to the LORD. And the LORD ordained it (as) an ordinance forever that they should give it to the priests, 26 to those who minister before him so that they might possess it forever. •And there is no limit of days for this law because he ordained it for eternal generations so that they might give one tenth of everything to the LORD: grain and wine and oil 27 and oxen and sheep. •And he gave (it) to his priests to eat and drink with rejoicing before him.

Abram restores booty to the king of Sodom

Gen 14:21-24

28 And the king of Sodom approached him and bowed down before him. And he said, "Our lord Abram, give us the people whom you saved, but let the booty 29 belong to you." •And Abraham said to him, "I lift up my hand<sup>g</sup> to the God Most High (that) I will (not) take anything of yours, (even) a thread or shoelace lest you say 'I have made Abram rich,' but only what the young men have eaten and the portion of the men who went with me, 'Aner and 'Eschol and Mamre. Let them take their portion."

Abram's dream and sacrifice at Mamre

Gen 15:1-17

1 14 And after these things, in the fourth year of this week, on the first of the third month, the word of the LORD came to Abram in a dream, saying, "Don't 2 fear, Abram. I am your defender and your reward (will be) very great." •And he said, "O Lord, O Lord what will you give me? I am going on without children.
And the son of Maseq,<sup>a</sup> the son of my handmaid, is Eliezer of Damascus. He will 3 be my heir, but you have not given seed to me." •And he said to him, "This one will not be your heir, but one who will come from your loins will be your heir." 4 And he took him outside and he said to him, "Look into heaven and count the stars if you are able to count them."
5 And he looked at the heaven and he saw the stars. And he said to him, "Thus shall your seed be."
6.7 And he believed the LORD and it was counted for him as righteousness. •And he said to him, "I am the LORD who brought you from Ur of the Chaldees so that I might give you the land of the Canaanites to possess forever and (so that I 8 might) be God for you and for your seed after you." •And he said, "O Lord, O 9 Lord, how shall I know that I shall inherit?" •And he said, "Take for me a young animal of three years and a goat of three years and a sheep of three years and a turtledove and a pigeon."

f. There is an obvious lacuna in the text at this point. The biblical account of Abraham's pursuit of the invading army, his recapture of Lot, and an encounter with Melchizedek are all missing from the Eth. text. The Syr. text also omits the Melchizedek episode, but it contains a phrase not found in our text, i.e. "and he pursued the kings and he returned everything which they had taken captive from Sodom."

There is no way to determine whether the text originally follows the biblical account of Abraham giving a tithe to Melchizedek or not. Nevertheless, some incident involving a tithe must have been part of the text because vs. 24 continues the account as though a precedent for the tithe had just been described.

The loss of the Melchizedek passage leads one to wonder how the author of Jub dealt with the fact that the Bible describes him as "priest of God Most High," a title used elsewhere of Levi (cf. 32:1).

g. The lifting up of the hand signifies the swearing of an oath. It is a Semitic idiom taken from Gen 14:22.

14 a. The Heb. text of Gen 15:2 is difficult. The term ben-mešeq does not occur elsewhere in the OT, and its translation remains uncertain. The translators of the LXX were also confused by the phrase, which they mistook as a personal name. The Eth. reading "son of Maseq" follows that tradition.

10 And he took all of these in the middle of the month. And he was dwelling by 11 the oak of Mamre, which is near Hebron. •And he built an altar there. And he slaughtered all of these, and he poured out their blood upon the altar. And he divided them in the middle. And he placed them facing one another, but the birds 12 he did not cut up. •And the birds came down upon the pieces<sup>b</sup> and Abram kept turning them away and he did not let the birds touch them.
 13 And it came to pass when the sun set that a terror fell upon Abram. And behold a great dark horror fell upon him. And it was said to Abram, "Surely know that your seed will be strangers in an alien land. And they will serve them. And they 14 will make them suffer four hundred years. •But I will judge the people whom they will serve. And afterward they will come forth from there with many 15 possessions. •And you will go to your fathers in peace and be buried in a good 16 old age. •And in the fourth generation they will return here because the sins of the Amorites have not yet been completed."

The covenant with Abram

Gen 15:17-21

17 And he woke up from his sleep and stood up. And the sun had set and there was a flame. And behold an oven was smoking and flames of fire passed between 18 the pieces. •And on that day the LORD made a covenant with Abram, saying,
 "To your seed I will give this land from the river of Egypt to the great river, the Euphrates River: the Kenites, the Kenizzites, the Kadmonites, the Perizzites, and the Rephaim, the Phakorites, and the Hivites, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Girgashites, and the Jebusites."<sup>c</sup> 19 And that day passed and Abram offered up the pieces and the birds and their 20 (fruit) offering and their libation. And the fire consumed them. •And on that day we made a covenant with Abram just as we had made a covenant in that month with Noah. And Abram renewed the feast and the ordinance for himself forever.

Sarai offers her handmaid, Hagar, to Abram

Gen 16:1-4, 15

21 And Abram rejoiced and he told all of these things to Sarai, his wife. And he 22 believed that he would have seed, but she did not give birth. •And Sarai advised Abram, her husband, and she said to him, "Go into Hagar, my Egyptian maid.
 23 It may be that I will build seed for you from her." •And Abram heard his wife
 Sarai's word and he said, "Do (it)!" •And Sarai took Hagar, her Egyptian maid, 24 and she gave her to Abram, her husband, so that she might be a wife. •And he went into her. And she conceived and bore a son and he called him Ishmael, in the fifth year of that week. And that year was the eighty-sixth year in the life of Abram.

The offering of firstfruits and the covenant changing Abram's name

Gen 17:1-16

1 15 In the fifth year of the fourth week of that jubilee in the third month, in the middle of the month, Abram made a feast of the firstfruits of the harvest of grain.
 2 And he offered up a new sacrifice upon the altar, the firstfruits of the food for the LORD, a bull and a goat and a sheep upon the altar (as) burnt offering to the LORD. And their (fruit) offering and their libation he offered up upon the altar
 3 with frankincense. •And the LORD appeared to Abram and he said to him, "I 4 am God Shaddai. Be pleasing before me and be perfect. •And I will make my covenant between me and you and I will make you increase very much."
 5.6 And Abram fell on his face and the LORD spoke to him, saying, "Behold, my

Lev 23:15-20

b. Charles corrected the Eth. text at this point to agree with the biblical Heb. The Eth. MSS contain a word meaning "wide," probably having in mind that which is spread out.

c. This list differs from the list in Gen 15:19-21. The present list lacks Hittites, but includes Phakorites and Hivites, who are not in the Heb. text. The Hivites, however, appear in the LXX.

- 7 ordinance is with you and you will be the father of many nations. •And your name therefore will not be called Abram, but your name will henceforth and forever be Abraham because<sup>a</sup> I have established you (as) the father of many nations.
- 8 And I shall make you very great and I shall make you into nations. And kings
- 9 will come from you. •And I shall establish my covenant between me and you and your seed after you in their generations for an eternal ordinance so that I might
- 10 be God for you and your seed after you. •And I shall give to you and your seed after you<sup>a</sup> the land where you sojourn, the land of Canaan, which you will possess forever. And I shall be God for them.”
- 11 And the LORD said to Abraham, “And you also keep my covenant, you and your seed after you. And you<sup>b</sup> will circumcise all of your<sup>b</sup> males. And you<sup>b</sup> shall circumcise your foreskins and it will be a sign of the eternal ordinance between
- 12 me and you.<sup>b</sup> •And a son on the eighth day you will circumcise, every male in your generations, the servant of the house and whomever you purchase with money from all of the sons of the foreigner, whom you have acquired, who was
- 13 not from your seed. •The (servant) born in your house will certainly be circumcised and the one whom you have purchased with money will be circumcised. And my
- 14 covenant will be in your flesh for an eternal ordinance. •And whatever male is not circumcised, the flesh of whose foreskin was not circumcised on the eighth
- 15 day, that soul shall be uprooted from its family because he has broken my covenant.” •And the LORD said to Abraham, “Sarai, your wife, will therefore not
- 16 be called Sarai because Sarah is her name. •And I will bless her and I will give you a son from her. And I will bless him. And he will become a people. And kings of nations will come from him.”

Abraham's concern for Ishmael

Gen 17:17-22

- 17 And Abraham fell on his face and he rejoiced and pondered in his heart whether a son would be born to one who was one hundred years old or (whether) Sarah,
- 18 who was ninety years, would give birth. •And Abraham said to the LORD,
- 19 “Would that Ishmael might live before you.” •And the LORD said, “Yes, but Sarah will bear a son for you and you will call him Isaac. And I shall raise up
- 20 my covenant (as) an eternal covenant with him and with his seed after him. •And concerning Ishmael I have heard you. And behold I shall bless him,<sup>c</sup> and make him grow and increase him very much. And twelve princes he will beget. And I
- 21 shall make him into a great people. •But my covenant I shall establish with Isaac,
- 22 whom Sarah will bear for you in another year during these days.”<sup>d</sup> •And he finished talking with him and the LORD ascended from Abraham.

The circumcision of Abraham's household

Gen 17:23-27

- 23 And Abraham did as the LORD said to him and he took Ishmael, his son, and all of the male servants of his house and also whomever he bought with money, every male who was in his house, and he circumcised the flesh of their foreskins.
- 24 And that very same<sup>e</sup> day Abraham was circumcised and every man of his house and the servant of his house.<sup>f</sup> And all of those who were purchased for money from the sons of aliens were also circumcised with him.

15 a. The first phrase in the sentence is missing in the MSS, but restored in the printed text on the basis of Gen 17:8.

b. The pronouns are in the second masculine plural. The construction is dependent on the Heb. text of the OT, which reflects a liturgical usage. The force of the statements in this sentence is imperative.

c. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through vs. 31a.

d. Isaac is to be born during the period of sacred days associated with the celebration of the feast of the firstfruits of the grain harvest, i.e. the middle of the third month. Cf. the account of his birth in 16:13.

e. The Eth. phrase reads “in the time of that day,” which is also found in the LXX as an attempt to translate a somewhat unusual Heb. idiom which means “that very same day.”

f. The phrase “and the servant of his house,” is found in the Lat. text, but is missing from the Eth. MSS used by Charles.

The laws of circumcision

25 This law is for all the eternal generations and there is no circumcising<sup>g</sup> of days 26 and there is no passing a single day beyond eight days because it is an eternal ordinance ordained and written in the heavenly tablets. •And anyone who is born whose own flesh is not circumcised on the eighth day is not from the sons of the covenant which the LORD made for Abraham since (he is) from the children of destruction. And there is therefore no sign upon him so that he might belong to the LORD because (he is destined) to be destroyed and annihilated from the earth and to be uprooted from the earth because he has broken the covenant of the 27 LORD our God. •Because the nature of all of the angels of the presence and all of the angels of sanctification was thus from the day of their creation. And in the presence of the angels of the presence and the angels of sanctification he sanctified Israel so that they might be with him and with his holy angels.

28 And you command the sons of Israel and let them keep this sign of the covenant for their generations for an eternal ordinance. And they will not be uprooted from 29 the land •because the commandment was ordained for the covenant so that they might keep it forever for all of the children of Israel. •For the LORD did not 30 draw Ishmael and his sons and his brothers and Esau near to himself, and he did not elect them because they are the sons of Abraham, for he knew them. But he 31 chose Israel that they might be a people for himself. •And he sanctified them and gathered them from all of the sons of man because (there are) many nations and many people, and they all belong to him, but over all of them he caused spirits 32 to rule so that they might lead them astray<sup>h</sup> from following him. •But over Israel he did not cause any angel or spirit to rule because he alone is their ruler and he will protect them and he will seek for them at the hand of his angels and at the hand of his spirits and at the hand of all of his authorities so that he might guard them and bless them and they might be his and he might be theirs henceforth and forever.

Deut 32:8f.
Sir 17:17

Dan 10:13
1En 90:22f.
Isa 24:21f.

A prediction of future faithlessness regarding circumcision

33 And now I shall announce to you that the sons of Israel will deny this ordinance and they will not circumcise their sons according to all of this law because some of the flesh of their circumcision they will leave in the circumcision of their sons.
 And all of the sons of Beliar will leave their sons without circumcising just as 34 they were born. •And great wrath from the LORD will be upon the sons of Israel because they have left his covenant and have turned aside from his words. And they have provoked and blasphemed inasmuch as they have not done the ordinance of this law because they have made themselves like the gentiles to be removed and be uprooted from the land. And there is therefore for them no forgiveness or pardon so that they might be pardoned and forgiven<sup>i</sup> from all of the sins of this eternal error.

TDan 5

Account of Sarah's laughter

Gen 18:1-15

1 16 And on the new moon of the fourth month, we appeared to Abraham at the oak of Mamre and we talked with him and we also caused him to know that a 2 son would be given to him by Sarah, his wife. •And Sarah laughed because she heard that we discussed this matter with Abraham. And we reproached her. And 3 she was afraid and denied that she laughed about the matter. •And we told her

g. This is the writer's way of suggesting that no day should be cut off to shorten the total number of days.

h. The spirits are the descendants of the Watchers discussed in ch. 10:2-9.

i. This phrase is found in MS B. Charles thought the phrase was a corruption due to dittography.

the name of her son Isaac—just as his name was ordained and written in the 4 heavenly tablets—•and (that) when we returned to her at a specific time she would have conceived a son.

The destruction of Sodom

Gen 18:16-19:20

5 And in that month the LORD executed the judgment of Sodom and Gomorrah and Zeboim and all of the district of the Jordan. And he burned them with fire Gen 19:24 and sulphur and he annihilated them till this day just as (he said), “Behold, I have made known to you all<sup>a</sup> of their deeds that (they were) cruel and great sinners and they were polluting themselves and they were fornicating in their flesh and 6 they were causing pollution upon the earth.” •And thus the LORD will execute judgment like the judgment of Sodom on places where they act according to the pollution of Sodom.

The sin of Lot’s daughters

Gen 19:30-38

7 And we saved Lot because the LORD remembered Abraham and he brought 8 him out from the midst of the overthrow. •And he and his daughters also committed sins upon the earth which were not (committed) on the earth from the days of 9 Adam until his time because the man lay with his daughters. •And behold it is commanded and it is engraved concerning all of his seed in the heavenly tablets so that he will remove them and uproot them and execute their judgment just like the judgment of Sodom and so that he will not leave seed of man for him on the earth in the day of judgment.

Events surrounding the birth of Isaac at Beer-sheba

Gen 20:1-21:7

10 And in this month Abraham moved from Hebron and went and dwelt between 11 Qadesh and Shur in the mountains of Gerar. •And in the middle of the fifth month
12 he moved from there and he dwelt by the Well of the Oath. •And in the middle 13 of the sixth month the LORD visited Sarah and did for her as he had said. •And she conceived and she bore a son in the third month, in the middle of the month, in the time when the LORD told Abraham. Isaac was born on the feast of the 14 firstfruits of the harvest. •And Abraham circumcised his son on the eighth day.
He was the first one circumcised according to the covenant which was ordained forever.
15 And in the sixth year of the fourth week we went forth to Abraham at the Well of the Oath. And we appeared to him [just as we said to Sarah that we would 16 return to her. And she had conceived a son. •And we returned in the seventh month and we found Sarah pregnant before us.]<sup>b</sup> And we blessed him and we announced to him everything which was commanded for him that he would not die until he begot six more sons and he would see (them) before he died. And Gen 25:2 17 through Isaac a name and seed would be named for him. •And all of the seed of Gen 21:12 his sons would become nations. And they would be counted with the nations. But from the sons of Isaac one would become a holy seed and he would not be counted 18 among the nations •because he would become the portion of the Most High and all his seed would fall (by lot) into that which God will rule so that he might become a people (belonging) to the LORD, a (special) possession from all people, Deut 4:20 19 and so that he might become a kingdom of priests and a holy people. •And we Ex 19:6 went our way and we announced to Sarah everything which we had told him. IPet 2:9
Rev 5:10
And both of them rejoiced very greatly.

16 a. A portion of the Lat. text resumes at this point and continues through 17:6a.

b. The section marked off by brackets is found in both Lat. and Eth. MSS, but it appears out of place here as a gloss which interrupts the text.

Abraham observes the feast of Booths at Beer-sheba

Gen 21:8
Num 29:12-40

20 And he built an altar there to the LORD who delivered him and who made him rejoice in the land of his sojourn. And he celebrated a feast of rejoicing in this month, seven days, near the altar which he built by the Well of the Oath. •And he built booths for himself and for his servants on that festival. And he first 21 observed the feast of the booths on the earth. •And in these seven days he was making offering every day, day by day, on the altar a burnt offering to the LORD: two bulls, and two rams, and seven lambs, one kid on behalf of sins so that he
22 might atone thereby on behalf of himself and his seed. •And for a thank offering: seven rams and seven sheep and seven lambs and seven he-goats and their (fruit) offerings and their libations and all their fat he offered upon the altar as chosen burnt offering to the LORD for a sweet-smelling odor.

24 And in the morning and evening he offered the fragrance of frankincense, and galbanum, and stacte, and nard, and myrrh, and spices, and costum.<sup>c</sup> All seven 25 of these he offered, crushed, mixed in equal parts (and) pure. •And he observed this feast seven days, rejoicing with all his heart and with all his soul, he and all of those who were in his house. And there was no alien with him or any who
26 were not circumcised. •And he blessed his Creator who created him in his generation because by his will he created him for he knew and he perceived that from him there would be a righteous planting for eternal generations and a holy 27 seed from him so that he might be like the one who made everything. •And he blessed and rejoiced and called the name of this festival "the festival of the LORD," a joy acceptable to God Most High.

Ex 30:34
Sir 24:15

1En 10:16;
93:5,10

28 And we eternally blessed him and his seed who are after him in every generation of the earth because he observed this feast in its (appointed) time according to the testimony of the heavenly tablets. •Therefore it is ordained in the heavenly tablets
29 concerning Israel that they will be observers of the feast of booths seven days with joy in the seventh month which is acceptable before the LORD (as) an eternal law in their generations throughout all (time), year by year. •And there is no limit
30 of days for this because it is ordained forever concerning Israel so that they should observe it and they should dwell in tents and that they should place crowns on their heads and so that they should take branches of leaves and willow from the stream. •And Abraham took branches<sup>d</sup> of palm trees and fruit of good trees and 31 each day of the days he used to go around the altar with branches. Seven times per day, in the morning, he was praising and giving thanks to his God for all things.

Lev 23:40-42

The feast for the weaning of Isaac

Gen 21:8

1 17 In the first of the fifth week in that jubilee Isaac was weaned. And Abraham celebrated a great feast in the third month on the day that his son, Isaac, was
2 weaned. •And Ishmael, the son of Hagar, the Egyptian woman, was in the presence of Abraham, his father, in his place. And Abraham rejoiced and he blessed the 3 LORD because he had seen his sons and had not died without sons. •And he remembered the word which was told to him on the day that Lot separated from him. And he rejoiced because the LORD had given him seed upon the earth so

c. The list of incense contains some uncertain elements. The Eth. words for "frankincense," "myrrh," and "spices" are fairly well known. The Eth. word for "nard" is nārdōs, a simple transcription of the Gk., and the word for "costum" is kwast, which probably reflects the Gk. kostos. The word that is translated "galbanum" is used in Eth. to represent either the Gk. staktē or chalbanē, but at Ex 30:34, which probably provided the inspiration for the present text, the Eth. text uses it to translate "galbanum." The word that is translated "stacte" also appears in Ex 30:34 with that meaning.

d. The word which appears in both Lat. and Eth. MSS translates into English as "heart" (of palm trees). That is apparently due to a confusion between the Heb. words lūlab, "branches," and leb, "heart." The correction is obvious.

that they might inherit the land. And he blessed the Creator of all with all his eloquence.<sup>a</sup>

The banishment of Hagar

Gen 21:9-21

- 4 And Sarah saw Ishmael playing and dancing and Abraham rejoicing very greatly. And she was jealous of Ishmael and she said to Abraham, "Drive out this girl and her son because the son of this girl will not inherit with my son, 5 Isaac." •And the matter was grievous in the sight of Abraham because of his maidservant and because of his son that he should drive them away from him. 6 And the LORD said to Abraham, "Let it not be grievous in your sight on account of the lad and the girl. (As for) everything which Sarah said to you, obey her words and do (it) because it is through Isaac that a name and seed will be named 7 for you. •But regarding the son of this girl, I will make him into a great people because he is from your seed." 8 And Abraham rose at the crack of dawn and he took bread and a water skin 9 and set it on the shoulder of Hagar and the lad and he sent her away. •And she went and wandered in the desert of Beer-sheba and the water was used up from 10 the skin and the lad thirsted and was unable to walk and he fell. •And his mother took him and cast him under one of the olive trees and she went and sat opposite him a distance of one (arrow) shot because, she said, "Let me not see the death of my child." And sitting down, she wept. 11 And an angel of the LORD, one of the holy ones, said to her, "What are you weeping for, Hagar? Having arisen, pick up the child and take him in your arms 12 because the LORD has heard your voice and he has seen the child." •And she opened her eyes and she saw a well of water. And she went and filled the water skin. And she gave the child a drink and arose and went toward the desert of 13 Paran. •And the child grew and was a hunter. And the LORD was with him. And his mother took a wife for him from the maids of Egypt. •And she bore a son for 14 him and he called him Nebaioth because, she said, "The LORD was near to me when I called to him."

Mastema's plot to test Abraham

Gen 22:1

- 15 And it came to pass in the seventh week, in its first year, in the first month, in that jubilee, on the twelfth of that month, that words came in heaven concerning Abraham that he was faithful in everything which was told him and he loved the 16 LORD and was faithful in all affliction. •And Prince Mastema came and he said before God, "Behold, Abraham loves Isaac, his son. And he is more pleased with him than everything. Tell him to offer him (as) a burnt offering upon the altar. And you will see whether he will do this thing. And you will know whether he is faithful in everything in which you test him." 17 And the LORD was aware that Abraham was faithful in all of his afflictions because he tested him with his land, and with famine. And he tested him with the wealth of kings. And he tested him again with his wife, when she was taken (from him), and with circumcision. And he tested him with Ishmael and with 18 Hagar, his maidservant, when he sent them away. •And in everything in which he tested him, he was found faithful. And his soul was not impatient. And he was not slow to act because he was faithful and a lover of the LORD.

The sacrifice of Isaac

Gen 22:1-19

- 1 18 And the LORD said to him, "Abraham, Abraham." And he said, "Here I 2 am." •And he said, "Take your beloved son, whom you love, Isaac, and go into the high land and offer him up on one of the mountains that I will make known to you.”

17 a. Lit. "with all his mouth."

3 And he arose while it was still dark at daybreak and he loaded his ass and took two of his young men servants with him and Isaac, his son. And he split the wood of the sacrifice and he went to the place on the third day. And he saw the place
4 from afar. •And he arrived at a well of water and he said to the young men, “Stay here with the ass and I and the child shall go. And when we have worshiped we shall return to you.”

5 And he took the wood of the sacrifice and put it on the shoulder of Isaac, his son, and he took the fire and the knife in his hand. And the two of them went 6 together to that place. •And Isaac said to his father, “Father.” And he said, “Here I am, my son.” And he said to him, “Behold, the fire and the knife and 7 the wood, but where is the lamb for the burnt offering, father?” •And he said, “The LORD will see about the lamb for the burnt offering, my son.”

8 And they drew near to the (holy) place of the mountain of the LORD. •And he built an altar and he placed the wood on the altar. And he bound Isaac, his son, and he placed him on the wood which was on top of the altar, and he stretched 9 forth his hand, and took the knife in order to slaughter Isaac, his son.

9 And I stood before him and before Prince Mastema. And the LORD said, “Speak to him. Do not let his hand descend upon the child. And do not let him 10 do anything to him because I know that he is one who fears the LORD.” •And I called out to him from heaven and I said to him, “Abraham, Abraham.” And he 11 was terrified<sup>a</sup> and said, “Here I am.” •And I said to him, “Do not put forth your hand against the child and do not do anything to him because now I know that 12 you are one who fears the LORD and you did not deny your firstborn son to me.”

12 And Prince Mastema was shamed. And Abraham lifted up his eyes and saw a ram was caught in the thicket<sup>b</sup> by his horns. And Abraham went and took the ram
13 and offered it up for a burnt offering instead of his son. •And Abraham called that place “The LORD has seen,” so that it is said “in the mountain<sup>c</sup> the LORD 14 has seen.” It is Mount Zion.

14 And the LORD called Abraham by his name again from heaven just as he caused us to appear so that we might speak to him in the name of the LORD.
15 And he said, “I swear by myself, says the LORD, because you have done this thing and you have not denied your firstborn<sup>d</sup> son, whom you love, to me that I
16 shall surely bless you and I shall surely multiply your seed like the stars of heaven and like the sand of the seashore and your seed will inherit the cities of their 17 enemies. •And all of the nations of the earth will bless themselves by your seed because you obeyed my word. And I have made known to all that you are faithful 18 to me in everything which I say to you. Go in peace.”

1Sam 1:17

17 And Abraham went to his young men and they got up and went (to) Beer-sheba 18 together. And Abraham dwelt by the Well of the Oath. •And he observed this festival every year (for) seven days with rejoicing. And he named it “the feast of 19 the LORD” according to the seven days during which he went and returned in peace. •And thus it is ordained and written in the heavenly tablets concerning Israel and his seed to observe this festival seven days with festal joy.

The death and burial of Sarah

Gen 23:1-20

1 19 In the first year of the first week in this forty-second jubilee Abraham returned 2 and dwelt two weeks of years opposite Hebron, i.e. Kiryath Arba. •And in the 18 a. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through 19:26a.

b. The Eth. words for “in the thicket” are based on a reasonable emendation by Charles. The Eth. MSS have a meaningless “and he came.” The Lat. MS reads “caught by his horns,” with no added phrase at this point.

c. The phrase “in the mountain” is found only in the Lat. MS.

d. The reading is found in two of the Eth. MSS. Lat.: “only begotten.”

first year of the third week of this jubilee, the days of Sarah's life were completed 3 and she died in Hebron. •And Abraham went to weep for her and bury her.

And we were testing him whether he would exercise self-control. And he was not impatient with the words of his mouth and he was found self-controlled in 4 this also and he was not filled with anxiety •because with the self-control of his spirit he spoke with the sons of Heth so that they might give him a place in which 5 to bury his dead. •And the LORD gave him favor in the presence of all who saw him. And he begged politely from the sons of Heth and they sold him the land of the cave of Machpelah,<sup>a</sup> which is opposite Mamre, i.e. Hebron, for four hundred<sup>b</sup> 6 silver (pieces). •And they begged him, saying, "Let us give (it) to you free."

But he did not take (it) from their control free because he gave the price for the place (in) full silver. And he bowed down to them twice and afterward he 7 buried his dead in the cave of Machpelah. •And all the days of the life of Sarah were one hundred and twenty-seven. These (are) two jubilees and four weeks and 8 one year. These (are) the days of the life of Sarah. •This (is) the tenth trial with 9 which Abraham was tried. And he was found faithful, controlled of spirit. •And CD 3.2
he did not say a word concerning the rumor which was in the land that the LORD said he would give it to him and to his seed after him, but he begged a place Jas 2:23 there so that he might bury his dead because he was found faithful and he was 2Chr 20:7 recorded as a friend of the LORD in the heavenly tablets. Isa 41:8

The marriage of Isaac and the birth of his children

Gen 24:1-
25:3,24-28

10 And in the fourth year thereof he took a wife for his son, Isaac, and her name was Rebecca, daughter of Bethuel, the son of Nahor, Abraham's brother, the sister of Laban and daughter of Bethuel. And Bethuel<sup>c</sup> was the son of Melca, who 11 was the wife of Nahor, Abraham's brother. •And Abraham took a third wife and her name was Keturah from the daughters of his household servants because Hagar 12 died before Sarah. •And she bore six sons for him: Zimram, and Jokshan, and Medan, and Midian, and Ishbak, and Shuah,<sup>d</sup> in two weeks of years.
13 And in the sixth week in the second year Rebecca bore two children for Isaac, Jacob and Esau. And Jacob was smooth and upright, but Esau was a fierce man 14 and rustic and hairy. And Jacob used to dwell in the tents. •And the youths grew up and Jacob learned writing, but Esau did not learn because he was a rustic man and a hunter. And he learned war, and all of his deeds were fierce.

Abraham's blessings for Jacob

Gen 25:28

15,16 And Abraham loved Jacob, but Isaac loved Esau. •And Abraham saw the deeds of Esau and he knew that in Jacob a name and seed would be named for him.
And he called Rebecca and he commanded concerning Jacob because he knew 17 that she loved Jacob more than Esau. •And he said to her, "My daughter, guard my son Jacob because he will be in place of me upon the earth and for a blessing 18 in the midst of the sons of men and a glory to all of the seed of Shem •because I know that the LORD will choose him for himself as a people who will rise up<sup>e</sup>

19 a. The Eth. text has translated this phrase to read "double cave." There was never any doubt that the familiar biblical phrase "cave of Machpelah" was the ultimate source of the Eth. "double cave," but now two fragments of the Heb. text from Qumran (3Q5, F.3 and 2Q19) contain the word mkplh. Therefore there is scarcely any reason to avoid using it.

b. Charles emended the Eth. text to read "four hundred," which agrees with the Lat. The Eth. MSS read "forty."

c. The reading "daughter of Bethuel. And Bethuel!" follows the Lat. text. The Eth. MSS have a corrupt reading which does not fit the context. The vs. as a whole has clearly suffered in transmission. Both the Lat. and Eth. mention a daughter of Bethuel twice in vs. 10. That would suggest that the dittography was also present in the earlier Gk. text.

d. The names of the six sons are spelled in agreement with Gen 25:2. The Eth. spellings are slightly different. The Lat. spellings are even more remote.

e. The vs. is based on Deut 7:6, where the chosen people are described as God's "own possession." The Lat. text describes them as a "holy

- 19 from all the nations<sup>1</sup> which are upon the earth. •And behold, Isaac, my son, loves 20 Esau more than Jacob, but I see you as one who loves Jacob rightly. •Be even better to him and let your eyes be lovingly upon him because he will be for us a 21 blessing upon the earth henceforth and for all generations of the earth. •Let your hands be strong and let your heart rejoice in your son, Jacob. Because I love him more than all of my sons. He will be blessed forever and his seed will be one 22 which fills all of the earth. •If a man is able to count the sand of the earth, then Gen 13:16
 23 his seed will be counted. •And all of the blessings with which the LORD blessed me and my seed will be for Jacob and his seed always. •And in his seed my name 24 will be blessed and the names of my fathers Shem and Noah, and Enoch, and 25 Mahalalel, and Enos, and Seth, and Adam.<sup>8</sup> •And they will serve to establish heaven and to strengthen the earth and to renew all of the lights which are above the firmament.”
- 26 And he called to Jacob in the sight of Rebecca, his mother, and he kissed him 27 and blessed him, and said, •“Jacob, my beloved son, whom my soul loves, may God from above the firmament bless and may he give you all of the blessings with which he blessed Adam and Enoch and Noah and Shem. And everything which he told me and everything which he said that he would give me may he cause to cleave to you and your seed forever according to the days of heaven 28 above the earth. •And may the spirit of Mastema not rule over you or over your CD 12.2f.
 seed in order to remove you from following the LORD who is your God henceforth 29 and forever •and may the LORD God be for you and for the people a father always and may you be a firstborn son. Go, my son, in peace.”
- 30,31 And the two of them went out together from Abraham. •And Rebecca loved Jacob with all of her heart and all of her soul much more than Esau, but Isaac loved Esau more than Jacob.

Abraham's farewell testimony for his children

Gen 25:5f.

- 1 20 And in the forty-second jubilee, in the first year on the seventh week, Abraham called Ishmael and his twelve children and Isaac and his two children and Keturah's 2 six children and their sons. •And he commanded them (a) that they should guard the way of the LORD so that they might do righteousness and each one might love his neighbor, and (b) that it should be thus among all men so that each one might proceed to act justly and rightly toward them upon the earth, 3 and (c) that they should circumcise their sons in the covenant which he made with them, and (d) that they should not cross over either to the right or left from all of the ways which the LORD commanded us and (e) that we should keep ourselves from all fornication and pollution, and (f) that we should set aside from among 4 us all fornication and pollution.<sup>a</sup> •And when any woman or girl fornicates among you you will burn her<sup>b</sup> with fire, and let them not fornicate with her after their
 Deut 22:23
 Ezek 16:40
 Lev 20:10; 21:9
 Gen 38:24

people,” and the Eth. describes them as “a people who will rise up.” Charles assumed that it was due to a misunderstanding of the Gk. word periousios, which is also mistranslated in the Eth. version of the Bible.

f. The word “nations” is restored from the Lat. text. It is missing in the Eth. MSS.

g. In the genealogy of Enoch in Gen 5, the seven generations are listed as Adam, Seth, Enosh, Kenan, Mahalalel, Jared, and Enoch. Jared may be left out of the present list because of the evil associations derived from the meaning of his name when the Watchers “descended” in his lifetime (cf. Jub 4:15). The omission of Kenan may be due to the fact that it is similar to Cain. Within the remaining group Mahalalel is the least famous, but his name means “God shines forth,” an appropriate name for a patriarch in this context where there is mention of renewing “all the lights which are above the firmament.”

20 a. Vss. 2f. are written with a rambling syntax. The designation of separate commands with letters (a) through (f) was introduced by the translator to break up the long sentence. In his translation, Charles bracketed the last injunction in this series as an example of dittography. Vs. 4, however, describes in greater detail the manner in which fornication is to be set aside. The shifting of pronouns from “they” to “us” is similar to the pattern found in the ancient liturgical fragment preserved in Deut 26:5–11.

b. Death by fire is the punishment which is appropriate for the daughter of a priest according to Lev 21:9; in other cases the OT required stoning, e.g. Deut 22:23f. Jub's order for burning, which eyes and hearts and let them not take wives from the girls of Canaan because the seed of Canaan will be rooted out of the land.

5 And he told them the judgment of the giants and the judgments of the Sodomites just as<sup>c</sup> they had been judged on account of their evil. And on account of their fornication and impurity and the corruption among themselves with fornication they died.

6 And you guard yourself from all fornication and impurity, and from all corruption of sin,
so that you might not make our name a curse,
and all your life a hissing, and all your sons a destruction by the sword.

Isa 65:15
Jer 29:18
1En 5:6

And you will be cursed like Sodom, and all your remnant like the sons of Gomorrah.

7 I exhort you, my sons, love the God of heaven, and be joined to all of his commands.

And do not go after their idols and after their defilement.

8 And do not make gods of molten or carved images for yourselves, because it is vain and they have no spirit.

Deut 27:15

Because they are the work of hands, and all those who trust in them trust in nothing.

Do not worship them and do not bow down to them.

Ex 20:5

9 But worship the Most High God, and bow down to him continually, and hope for his countenance always,

and do what is upright and righteous before him, so that he might be pleased with you,<sup>d</sup>

and grant you his mercy, and bring down rain for you morning and evening,

and bless all your works

Deut 28:8

which you have made on the earth and bless your food and your water, and bless the fruit of your womb and the fruit of your land, and the herds of your cattle and the flocks of your sheep.

Deut 7:13

10 And you will become a blessing upon the earth, and all of the nations of the earth will desire you, and they will bless your sons in my name,

Gen 12:2

so that they might be blessed just as I am.

11 And he gave gifts to Ishmael and to his sons and to the sons of Keturah and he sent them away from Isaac, his son, and he gave everything to Isaac, his son.

12 And Ishmael and his sons and the sons of Keturah and their sons went together and they dwelt from Paran to the entrance to Babylon in all of the land which 13 faces the east opposite the desert. •And these mixed with each other, and they are called<sup>e</sup> Arabs or Ishmaelites.

Abraham's farewell testimony for Isaac

Gen 25:17

1 21 And in the sixth year of the seventh week of this jubilee Abraham called <sup>TL</sup>Levi 9 Isaac, his son, and he commanded him, saying, "I am old and I do not know the <sup>Gen</sup> 27:2

appears to be a harsher form of death, may be attributed to either the strictness of the community to which the author belonged or to its priestly orientation. It might also be influenced by Judah's example in Gen 38:24.

c. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through 21:10a.

d. The reading "be pleased with you" is found in the Eth. MSS. Charles had emended the printed text to agree with the Lat., which reads "direct you aright," but in his subsequent translations he chose to follow the Eth. MSS.

e. The reading "are called" is found in the Eth. MSS. Charles had emended the printed text to read "were joined" to agree with the Lat., but changed his mind in subsequent translations and followed the Eth. MSS.

2 day of my death and I am filled with my days. •Behold I am one hundred and seventy-five years old, and throughout all of the days of my life I have been remembering the LORD and sought with all my heart to do his will and walk
 3 uprightly in all his ways. •I hated idols, and those who serve them I have rejected. And I have offered my heart and spirit<sup>a</sup> so that I might be careful to do the will 4 of the one who created me •because he is the living God. And he is holy, and faithful, and he is more righteous than all (others) and there is no accepting of Deut 10:17 persons with him or accepting of gifts because he is a righteous God and he is 5 the one who executes judgment with all who transgress his commandments and despise his covenant. •And you, my son, keep his commandments and ordinances and judgments, and do not follow pollutions or graven images or molten images. Lev 7:26 6 And do not eat any blood<sup>b</sup> of beasts or cattle or any bird which flies in heaven.
 7 And if you slaughter a sacrifice as an acceptable burnt offering of peace, slaughter Lev 3:7-10 it, but pour out its blood on the altar. And offer up all the fat of the burnt offering on the altar with fine flour kneaded with oil, together with its libation. You will offer it all together on the altar (as) a burnt offering, (as) a sweet aroma before 8 the LORD, •and the fat of the thanksgiving offering you will place upon the fire which is on the altar. You shall remove the fat which is on the belly, all of the fat of the internal organs and the two kidneys, all of the fat which is on them and 9 on the thighs and the liver together with the kidneys. •And you will offer all of this up as a sweet aroma which is acceptable before the LORD together with its Lev 3:11 (fruit) offering and its libation for a sweet odor, the bread of a burnt offering to 10 the LORD. •And eat its flesh on that day and in the second (day), but do not let the sun of the second (day) set upon it until it is consumed. And do not let it remain until the third day because it will not be acceptable since it was not chosen.
 Therefore, it will not be eaten. And all of those who eat it will raise up sin against themselves. Because thus I have found written in the books of my forefathers and 11 in the words of Enoch and in the words of Noah.<sup>c</sup> •And you shall put salt in all TLevi 9 of your offerings, and you shall not omit the salt of the covenant from any of 12 your offerings before the LORD. •And take caution with the wood of the offering TLevi 2:13 that you do not bring wood for the offering except of such as these: cypress, bay, almond, fir, pine, cedar, juniper, fig, olive, myrtle, laurel, and asphalathos.<sup>d</sup>

21 a. The statement “and those who serve . . . heart and spirit” is not found in Eth., but appears in the Lat. text. The additional text provides a smoother reading.

b. The instructions which follow through vs. 20 concern the proper regulations for offering bloody sacrifices. This portion of the text shares a number of parallel passages with two other texts: TLevi 9 and fragments of an apocryphal work about Levi which has survived in Gk., Syr., and Aram. fragments. Charles has published the latter as Appendix III in his volume entitled The Greek Versions of the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs (Oxford, 1908).

In both TLevi and the apocryphal fragments, the instructions for performing sacrifice are given to Levi by Isaac. In Jub, the instructions are given to Isaac by Abraham. Since Levi is the central priestly figure in Jub just as he is in the other two texts, there is no reason to suspect that liturgical instructions given to him at some earlier stage in the development of these interrelated traditions would subsequently be applied to Isaac. The converse is much more likely. In other words, these instructions were probably intended for Isaac, as Jub reports, but were subsequently reinterpreted to apply to Levi.

The fact that Jub preserves an earlier order of speakers does not necessarily prove that Jub is earlier or that the other two accounts are dependent on Jub. A. Hultgård has worked on the relationship of these three documents most recently in his L'Eschatologie des Testaments des Douze Patriarches (Uppsala, Sweden, 1977) vol. 1, pp. 15–44. He is probably correct in his opinion that Jub is related to the other two documents through a common source (pp. 24, 45).

c. In both TLevi (9:12) and the apocryphal fragments (vs. 22), Isaac describes Abraham as the authority for the proper knowledge which he gives to Levi. In the case of Jub, however, Abraham is speaking. He claims that the authority is to be found in the books of Enoch and Noah. Cf. 7:38.

d. Charles read the names of fourteen different trees in his printed Eth. text and called attention to the fact that Enoch speaks of fourteen evergreen trees in ch. 3. He also noted that there are fourteen trees listed in Geoponica XI. Subsequently, however, he discovered the list of twelve trees in the fragmentary apocryphal work about Levi which he published as Appendix III in The Greek Versions of the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs. The list contained in the fragmentary apocryphal work has been preserved in both Aram. and Gk. Charles compared the Aram. and Gk. lists with the Eth. list in Jub and concluded that Jub also contained just twelve trees. It goes without saying that there is a considerable amount of uncertainty in the final list. The word translated as “olive” is clear. It is written with the familiar Eth. word for “olive.”

13 But place some of these trees under the burnt offering on the altar (with) their appearance tested. And you will not place any split or dark wood, (but) wood strong and pure which has no spots, perfect, and new growth. And you will not place old wood (there) because its aroma has gone out because there is not, therefore, an aroma upon it as before. •Except for these trees, there is none other that you will put on (the altar) because its aroma has separated and the smell of its aroma will go up to heaven. •Keep this commandment and do it, my son, so that you might act uprightly in all of your deeds. •And at all of the (appointed) times be pure in your body and wash yourself with water before you go to make an offering upon the altar. And wash your hands and your feet before you approach the altar. And when you have completed making the offering, wash your hands and feet again. •And let there not be seen any blood upon you or your garments. 14 Be careful, my son, be extremely careful of blood. Cover it in the earth. •And, therefore, do not eat blood because it is life, and you shall not eat any blood. 15 And do not accept gifts for any human blood lest it be poured out in vain, without judgment, because it is blood which is poured out to cause sin for the earth. And the earth is not able to be purified of human blood except by blood of one who shed it. •And you shall not accept gifts or tribute for human blood—blood through blood—so that you may be accepted before the LORD God Most High, and he will be the protector of the good, and so that you might guard yourself from all evil, and so that he might save you from all death,

Lev 17:13f.
Deut 12:23
IQapGen 11.17

Num 35:33

21 I see, my son,
every deed of mankind, that (they are) sins and evils;
and all of their deeds are defilement and corruption and contamination;
and there is no righteousness with them.
22 Be careful not to walk in their ways, and to tread in their<sup>c</sup> path, or to commit a mortal sin before God Most High so that he will hide his face from you, and deliver you into the power of your sin,
and uproot you from the earth,
and your seed from beneath the sky, and your name and seed<sup>f</sup> will perish from all the earth.
23 Turn yourself aside from all their deeds and from all their defilement; and keep the commands of God Most High,
and perform his will, and act uprightly in all things.<sup>g</sup> 24 And he will bless you in all your deeds,

IJn 5:16

All of the other Eth. words in the list are transliterations of Gk. spellings, some of which are themselves transliterations of Semitic names. The word for "fig" is ultimately derived from Aram. tī nā'. The word that is translated "juniper" represents the same tree which appears in the OT as bērōsh/bērōth. It is frequently translated as "fir," but our list also includes the Gk. strobilos and pitus, which have been rendered "fir" and "pine" respectively. The word for "almond" is ultimately related to the Heb. word shōqēd. The most severe corruption is found at the end of the Eth. list, which reads "cedar which is named 'arbāt and balsam.'" The word asphalathos is clearly written at the end of the list of twelve trees in the Gk. MS of the fragmentary apocryphal text. Since the list is derived from a source which it shares with Jub and since the Eth. word 'arbit' makes little sense, it is possible that the phrase "'arbāt and balsam'" reflects a corrupted spelling of asphalathos, which was not understood. Subsequently it was broken up and reinterpreted to yield at least one intelligible word, "balsam." The phrase "cedar which is named" was probably inserted to explain the strange word 'arbāt', which survived in the text.

e. Fragments of the Heb. text found at Qumran begin at this point and are parallel to phrases found in vss. 22–24.

f. The Eth. clearly reads "seed" at this point. There is less certainty about the reading of the Heb. parallel from Qumran. In "Fragment d'une source du Psautier (4QPs 89) et fragments des Jubilés, du Document de Damas, d'un phylactère dans la grotte 4 de Qumran," RB 73 (1966) 104, Milik reads the Heb. as zrk, "your memory," instead of a parallel zr'k, "your seed." The picture which appears on plate 9 in that article is not clear enough to confirm either reading. If Milik's reading proves to be correct, then the text should be altered to read "your memory."

g. The parallel fragment from Qumran shows signs of a dittography at this point. The writer apparently began with the phrase "and from all their defilements" and repeated the text to this point.

and he will raise up from you a righteous plant in all<sup>h</sup> the earth throughout all the generations of the earth; and my name and your name shall not cease from beneath heaven forever.

- 25 Go, my son, in peace. May God Most High, my God, and your God strengthen you to do his will, and may he bless all of your seed and the remnant of your seed for eternal generations with all righteous blessing so that you might be a 26 blessing in all of the earth." •And he went out from him rejoicing.

Abraham's celebration of the feast of firstfruits

- 1 22 And it came to pass in the first week of this forty-fourth jubilee in the second year, that year in which Abraham died, that Isaac and Ishmael came from the Well of the Oath to Abraham, their father, to observe the feast of Shebuot,<sup>a</sup> which is the feast of the firstfruits of the harvest. And Abraham rejoiced because both 2 of his children came,<sup>b</sup> •for Isaac had many possessions in Beer-sheba. And Isaac used to go and inspect his possessions and return to his father.
3 And in those days Ishmael came to see his father. And both of them came together, and Isaac slaughtered a sacrifice as a burnt offering and offered (it) up 4 upon the altar of his father which he built in Hebron. •And he sacrificed a thank offering and made a feast of joy before Ishmael, his brother. And Rebecca made new round cakes of new grain. And she gave them to Jacob, her son, to take to Abraham, his father, from the firstfruits of the land so that he might eat and bless
5 the Creator of all before he died. •And Isaac also sent by the hand of Jacob a Sir 24:8
2Mac 1:24
6 good thank offering to Abraham so that he might eat and drink. •And he ate and drank and blessed God Most High who created heaven and earth and who made all the fat of the earth and gave it to the sons of man so that they might eat and 7 drink and bless their Creator: •"And now I thank you, my God, because you have let me see this day. Behold, I am one hundred and seventy-five years old, and 8 fulfilled in days. And all of my days were peaceful for me. •The sword of the Jer 6:25 enemy did not triumph over me in anything which you gave to me or my sons all 9 of the days of my life until this day. •O my God, may your mercy and your peace be upon your servant and upon the seed of his sons so that they might become an elect people for you and an inheritance from all of the nations of the earth from Deut 4:20 henceforth and for all the days of the generations of the earth forever."

Abraham's blessing for Jacob

- 10 And he called Jacob and said, "My son, Jacob, may the God of all bless you and strengthen you to do righteousness and his will before him. And may he elect you and your seed so that you become a people for him who always belong to his inheritance according to his will. And you, my son, Jacob, draw near and kiss 11 me." •And he drew near and kissed him. And he said:

"Blessed is my son, Jacob, and all his sons, unto the LORD, Most High, forever.

Gen 14:19

May the LORD give you righteous seed, and may he sanctify some of your sons in the midst of all the earth.

Gen 27:29

May the nations serve you, and all the nations bow down before your seed.

12

Be strong before men;
and rule<sup>c</sup> over all the seed of Seth,

Num 24:17

h. The word "all" may be lacking in the Qumran parallel. It is a matter of judgment regarding the number of Heb. letters needed to fill up a lacuna.

b. A portion of the surviving Lat. text begins at this point and continues to the last word of 22:19.

c. The Eth. text reads "while you rule." The Lat. text has potestatem exerce. An imperative form of the Eth. verb seems preferable.

22 a. Shabuot for this feast; see ch. 6, n. f.

then may your ways be righteous, and the ways of your sons, in order to be a holy people.

13 May the Most High God give you all the blessings (with) which he blessed me, and (with) which he blessed Noah and Adam;
may they rest upon the holy head of your seed throughout each generation and forever.

14 May he cleanse you from all sin and defilement, so that he might forgive all your transgressions, and your erring through ignorance.

May he strengthen you and bless you,
and may you inherit all of the earth.

15 And may he renew his covenant with you, so that you might be a people for him, belonging to his inheritance forever.
And he will be God for you and for your seed in truth and righteousness throughout all the days of the earth.

16 And you also, my son, Jacob, remember my words, and keep the commandments of Abraham, your father.

Separate yourself from the gentiles, and do not eat with them,<sup>d</sup>

Isa 52:11

and do not perform deeds like theirs.

And do not become associates of theirs.

Because their deeds are defiled, and all of their ways are contaminated, and despicable, and abominable.

17 They slaughter their sacrifices to the dead, and to the demons they bow down.

Deut 26:14
Ps 106:28

And they eat in tombs.<sup>e</sup>

And all their deeds are worthless and vain.

18 And they have no heart to perceive, and they have no eyes to see what their deeds are,
and where they wander astray, saying to the tree 'you are my god,'
and to a stone 'you are my lord, and you are my savior';
and they have no heart.<sup>f</sup>

19 But (as for) you, my son, Jacob, may God Most High help you, and the God of heaven bless you.

And may he turn you from their defilement, and from all their errors.

20 Be careful, my son, Jacob, that you do not take a wife from any of the seed of the daughters of Canaan, Gen 28:1

because all of his seed is (destined) for uprooting from the earth;

21 because through the sin of Ham, Canaan sinned, and all of his seed will be blotted out from the earth,
and all his remnant,

and there is none of his who will be saved.

22 And for all of those who worship idols and for the hated ones, there is no hope in the land of the living;

because they will go down into Sheol.

1En 103:7f.

And in the place of judgment they will walk,

d. The implication is that the food prepared by the gentiles would not be prepared in accord with Jewish laws of purity. The issue became particularly acute in the writer's own time in light of the fact that servants of Antiochus IV tried to force Jews to eat impure food such as pork. Cf. 1Mac 1:47f.; 62f.; 2Mac 6:18-21; 7:1.

e. Sacrificial offerings to or for the dead would be consumed in the tombs. For a wide-ranging recent discussion see M. Pope, Song of Songs (Garden City, N.Y., 1977) pp. 210-29.

f. The phrase "and they have no heart" was considered by Charles to be a dittography based on the opening phrase in vs. 18, but it is found in both Lat. and Eth. texts.

and they will have no memory upon the earth.<sup>g</sup>
 Just as the sons of Sodom were taken from the earth, so (too) all of those who worship idols shall be taken away.

23 Do not fear, my son, Jacob, and do not be in terror, O son of Abraham.
 The Most High God shall protect you from destruction, and from all the ways of error he will deliver you.

24 This house I have built for myself so that I might cause my name to dwell upon it in the land. It has been given to you and to your seed forever.<sup>h</sup> And it will be called the house of Abraham and will be given to you and to your seed forever because you will build my house, and you will raise up my name before God forever. Your seed and your name will remain in all the earth's generations."

A second blessing for Jacob

25.26 And he ceased commanding him and blessing him. • And both of them lay down together on one bed. And Jacob slept on the bosom of Abraham, his father's father. And he<sup>i</sup> kissed him seven (times), and his compassionate heart<sup>j</sup> rejoiced
 27 over him, • and he blessed him with all his heart and he said, "God Most High (is) the God of all, and Creator of all who brought me out from Ur of the Chaldees so that he might give me this land to inherit it forever and to raise up a holy seed
 28 so that the Most High may be blessed forever." • And he blessed Jacob, saying, "My son (is) one in whom I rejoice with all my heart and all my emotion. And 29 may your favor and your mercy rest upon him and upon his seed always. • And do not forsake him and neglect him henceforth and for the eternal days. And may your eyes be open upon him and upon his seed so that you might protect him and 30 bless him and sanctify him for a people who belong to your heritage. • And bless him with all of your blessings henceforth and for all of the eternal days. And renew your covenant and your mercy with him and with his seed with all your will in all of the earth's generations."

Neh 9:6f.
 Gen 15:7

1Kgs 8:29.52
 Neh 1:6
 Dan 9:18

The death and burial of Abraham

1 23 And he placed the two fingers of Jacob on his eyes and he blessed the God of gods. And he covered his face, and stretched out his feet and slept the eternal sleep, and he was gathered to his fathers. • During all of this (time) Jacob was lying on his bosom and did not know that Abraham, his grandfather, was dead.
 3 And Jacob awoke from his sleep and, behold, Abraham was cold as ice, and he said, "O father, father!" And none spoke. And he knew that he was dead.
 4 And he rose up from his bosom and ran and told Rebecca, his mother. And Rebecca went to Isaac in the night and told him. And they went together and Jacob was also with them, and a lamp was in his hand. And when they went, they found Abraham lying dead. • And Isaac fell upon his father's face and wept and kissed him. • And the sound was<sup>a</sup> heard in Abraham's house and Ishmael, his son, arose and went to Abraham, his father. And he wept for Abraham, his father, 7 he and all<sup>b</sup> of Abraham's house, and they wept greatly. • And his sons, Isaac and

Gen 25:8f.

Gen 46:4
 Gen 49:33
 Judg 2:10

g. In his English translation, Charles rearranged ll. 2-5 of this vs. so that l. 5 followed immediately after l. 2, with which it forms an exact parallel. The present translation simply follows the order of the Eth. text.

h. The phrase "It has been given . . . seed forever" is repeated with a slight variation again in the same vs. The repetition is cumbersome and probably due to dittography.

i. Abraham kissed Jacob.

j. Lit. "his mercy and his heart."

23 a. One of the fragments of the Heb. text found at Qumran (3Q5 F.3) begins at this point and continues through vs. 7a.

b. It is possible that the Qumran fragment differs at this point, but the script is difficult to read. VanderKam has restored 'n)šy, '(me)n, in the Heb. text (Textual and Historical Studies, p. 62). That would mean that the earliest text read "all of the men of Abraham's house." Since the text is difficult to read at that point, VanderKam does not seriously press the case for his reading.

Ishmael, buried him in the cave of Macnpelah<sup>c</sup> near Sarah, his wife.<sup>d</sup> And all of the men of his house and Isaac and Ishmael and all of their sons and all of the sons of Keturah wept for him forty days in their places. And the days<sup>e</sup> of Abraham's weeping were completed.

A discussion of the general decline in longevity

Gen 25:8

8 And he lived three jubilees and four weeks of years,<sup>f</sup> one hundred and seventy-9 five years. And he completed the days of his life, being old and full of days. •For<sup>g</sup> the days of the lives of the ancients were nineteen jubilees. And after the Flood they began to be less than nineteen jubilees and to grow old quickly and to shorten the days of their lives due to much suffering and through the evil of their ways—10 except Abraham. •For Abraham was perfect in all of his actions with the LORD and was pleasing through righteousness all of the days of his life. And behold, he<sup>h</sup> did not complete four jubilees in his life until he grew old in the presence of evil (and) his days were full.

11 And all of the generations which will arise henceforth and until the day of the CD 10.8f.
great judgment will grow old quickly before they complete two jubilees, and their knowledge will forsake them because of their old age.<sup>i</sup> And all of their knowledge 12 will be removed.<sup>j</sup> •And in those days if a man will live a jubilee and a half, they<sup>k</sup> will say about him, "He prolonged his life, but the majority of his days were 13 suffering and anxiety and affliction. And there was no peace, •because plague Ps 90:10 (came) upon plague, and wound upon wound, and affliction upon affliction, and evil report upon evil report, and sickness upon sickness, and every evil judgment of this sort one with another: sickness, and downfall, and sleet, and hail, and frost, and fever, and chills, and stupor, and famine, and death, and sword, and captivity, and all plagues, and suffering."

14 And all of this will come in the evil generation which sins in the land. Pollution 15 and fornication and contamination and abomination are their deeds. •Then they will say, "The days of the ancients were as many as one thousand years and good. But behold, (as for) the days of our lives, if a man should extend his life seventy years or if he is strong (for) eighty years, then these are evil. And there Ps 90:10 is not any peace in the days of this evil generation."

c. Another fragment of Heb. text (2Q19) begins at this point. It overlaps the preceding fragment (3Q5 F.3) on one word, i.e. mkplh, "Machpelah." The Eth. text contains a word meaning "double," which is simply a translation of "Machpelah," but since the Heb. original clearly contained the form which is most familiar to readers of the Bible, we have restored it.

The two Heb. fragments also provide evidence for changing the order of words in the Eth. text in this vs., but that change of word order in Eth. would not be reflected in the English translation.

d. VanderKam has argued rather convincingly that the lacuna in the Heb. MS (2Q19) at this point indicates that the Heb. text had a fuller reading than the one preserved in Eth. (Textual and Historical Studies, p. 66). Nevertheless, what might have been in the additional text (approximately twenty-two letters) is anyone's guess.

e. Charles restored the word "days" on the basis of Gen 50:4. His MSS B D read "the grief of Abraham's weeping."

f. The parallel Lat. text begins again at this point and continues through 23:23a.

g. An important digression from the continuing account of the patriarchs begins here and runs to the end of the ch. This is one of the main passages to be investigated by anyone wishing to discover the writer's view of his own age. G. L. Davenport has made a careful study of this passage in his volume The Eschatology of the Book of Jubilees (Leiden, 1971). See especially pp. 32-40 and the extensive footnotes on pp. 32f., where he attempts to discern the structure of the passage in relation to surrounding material.

h. M. Baillet suggested that the Qumran fragment (3Q5 F.4) was to be identified with this portion of the text of Jub. In his "Remarques sur le manuscrit du Livre des Jubilés de la grotte 3 de Qumran," RQ 5 (1964-66) 323-33, he reconstructed a phrase which reads "(behold) he did not complete." VanderKam has challenged the reading of the line and its appropriateness at this point in Jub (Textual and Historical Studies, pp. 100f.); his judgment seems justified.

i. This is the reading of the Eth. MSS. Charles followed the MSS in preparing his own translation, but he had earlier emended the Eth. text to read "because of their spirits" to agree with the Lat. text.

j. The last sentence in vs. 11 does not appear in the Lat. text. Charles judged that the Eth. reading was due to dittography.

k. There is a Heb. fragment from Qumran (3Q5 F.1) which begins at this point.

The description of the future evil generation

- 16 And in this generation children will reproach their parents and their elders on account of sin, and on account of injustice, and on account of the words of their mouth, and on account of great evil which they will do, and on account of their forsaking the covenant which the LORD made between them and himself so that they might be careful and observe all of his commandments and his ordinances IE n 90:6f.
Dan 11:30
IMac 1:15
Deut 5:31f.
- 17 and all of his law without turning aside to the right or left. •For they all did evil and every mouth speaks of sin and all of their deeds (are) polluted and abominable. And all of their ways (are) contamination and pollution and corruption.
IMac 1:52f.
- 18 Behold, the land will be corrupted on account of all their deeds, and there will be no seed of the vine, and there will be no oil because their works are entirely faithless. And all of them will be destroyed together: beast, cattle, birds, and all Hos 4:3
Ezek 38:20
Zeph 1:3
- 19 of the fish of the sea on account of the sons of man. •Some of these will strive with others, youths with old men and old men with youths, the poor with the rich, the lowly with the great, and the beggar with the judge concerning the Law and the Covenant because they have forgotten the commandments and covenant and festivals and months and sabbaths and jubilees and all of the judgments.
- 20 And they will stand up with bow and<sup>l</sup> swords and war in order to return them to "the way," but they will not be returned until much blood is shed upon the earth
- 21 by each (group). •And those who escape will not be turned back from their evils to the way of righteousness because they will lift themselves up for deceit and wealth so that one shall take everything of his neighbor; and they will pronounce the great name but not in truth or righteousness. And they will pollute the holy of holies with their pollution and with the corruption of their contamination.

Punishment on that generation followed by repentance and God's blessings

- 22 And there will be a great plague upon the deeds of that generation from the LORD and he will give them to the sword and to judgment and to captivity and
Ezek 9:6
- 23 pillage and destruction. •And he will rouse up against them the sinners of the nations who have no mercy<sup>m</sup> or grace for them and who have no regard for any persons old or young or anyone. For (they will be) cruel and powerful so that they will act more evilly than any of the sons of men.

And they will cause turmoil in Israel and sin against Jacob;
 and much blood will be shed upon the earth;<sup>n</sup> and there will be no one who will gather and no one who will bury.

- 24 In those days, they will cry out and call and pray to be saved from the hand of the sinners, the gentiles, Jer 8:2
Gal 2:15
- 25 but there will be none who will be saved, and the heads of children will be white with gray hairs, and an infant three weeks old will look aged like one whose years (are) one hundred, and their stature will be destroyed by affliction and torment.
- 26 And in those days, children will begin to search the law, and to search the commandments and to return to the way of righteousness.
- 27 And the days will begin to increase and grow longer

l. The phrase "with bow and" is found only in the Lat. MS.

m. There is a Heb. fragment from Qumran (3Q5 F.3) which contains the Heb. word for "mercy." A. Rofe (Tarbiz, 34 [1965] 333-36) proposed that the passage matched the text of Jub at this point. VanderKam (Textual and Historical Studies, pp. 60-65) has argued convincingly that the Heb. text did not match the text of Jub at this point.

n. In his work on The Eschatology of the Book of Jubilees, Davenport gathered together a selected list of authors who describe the "messianic woes" similar to those depicted in the following lines. He rightly objects to the adjective "messianic," but the type of literature is widely known (cf. especially p. 37).

- among those sons of men, generation by generation, and year by year, until their days approach a thousand years, and to a greater number of years than days.
- 28 And there (will be) no old men and none who is full of days.<sup>o</sup> Isa 65:20
Because all of them will be infants and children.
- 29 And all of their days they will be complete and live in peace and rejoicing and there will be no Satan and no evil (one) who will destroy, because all of their days will be days of blessing and healing. AsMos 10:1
- 30 And then the LORD will heal his servants, and they will rise up and see great peace.
And they will drive out their enemies,
and the righteous ones will see and give praise,
and rejoice forever and ever with joy;
and they will see all of their judgments and all of their curses among their enemies.
- 31 And their bones will rest in the earth, and their spirits will increase joy,<sup>p</sup> 1En 91:10; 92:3
and they will know that the LORD is an executor of judgment;
but he will show mercy to hundreds and thousands,
to all who love him.
- 32 And you, Moses, write these words because thus it is written and set upon the heavenly tablets as a testimony for eternal generations.

Jacob buys the right of firstborn from Esau

Gen 25:11,27-34

- 1 24 And it happened after the death of Abraham that the LORD blessed Isaac, his son. And he arose from Hebron and went to the Well of the Vision<sup>a</sup> in the Gen 16:14 first year of the third week of this jubilee, and he lived there seven years.
- 2 And in the first year of the fourth week a famine began in the land other than Gen 26:1 3 the first famine which occurred in the days of Abraham. •And Jacob was cooking lentil soup, and Esau came in from the field hungry, and he said to Jacob, his brother, "Give me some of this reddish-colored<sup>b</sup> soup." And Jacob said to him,
"Hand over your primogeniture (i.e.) this right of firstborn, and I will give you 4 bread and also some of this lentil soup." •And Esau thought, "I will die. Of what use is this right of firstborn to me?" And he said to Jacob, "I give it (to) you."
5.6 And Jacob said, "Swear to me today." And he swore for him. •And Jacob gave his brother, Esau, bread and soup. And he ate until he was satisfied. And Esau despised his right of firstborn. Therefore, Esau's name was called Edom,<sup>c</sup> on account of the reddish-colored soup which Jacob gave him for his right of firstborn.
- 7 And Jacob became the older one but Esau was lowered from his seniority.

o. Reading with the MSS, Charles inserted a negative in his text to suggest there were none "whose days would not be full." As VanderKam has pointed out, the negative is not needed (Textual and Historical Studies, p. 269).

p. This vs. is subject to two quite different interpretations. It could be understood as a description of spirits which remain conscious and aware of postmortem events while their bones rest in peace. It could also be understood as an example of poetic hyperbole, describing those who die with assurance that justice has been done. They are portrayed as joyous dead who lie in the earth contented with God's certain vindication of the righteous.

24 a. The Well of the Vision is the biblical Beer Lahai-roi. See Gen 16:13f.

b. The Eth. text has "wheat soup," but Charles has pointed out that the word for wheat arose in the Gk. MS tradition where puros, "wheat," resulted from a misspelling of purros, "red, reddish."

c. A name formed from the Heb. root meaning red.

Isaac's sojourn at Gerar

Gen 26:1-5

8 And there was a famine upon the earth, and Isaac started to go down to Egypt in the second year of this week and he went to the Philistine king at Gerar, to 9 Abimelek. •And the LORD appeared to him and he said to him, "Do not go down to Egypt. Dwell in the land where I shall tell you. And sojourn in that land.
 10 And I shall be with you and bless you •because I will give all of this land to you and to your seed. And I will carry out my oath which I swore to Abraham, your father. And I will multiply your seed as the stars of the sky. And I will give to 11 your seed all of this land. •And all of the nations of the earth will bless themselves by your seed because your father obeyed me and observed my restrictions and my commandments and my laws and my ordinances and my covenant. And now, 12 obey my voice, and dwell in this land." •And he dwelt at Gerar three weeks of 13 years.<sup>d</sup> •And Abimelek gave orders concerning him and everything which was his, saying, "Any man who touches him or anything which is his let him surely die."

Gen 26:11

An account of the wells dug by Jacob from Gerar to Beer-sheba

Gen 26:12-33

14 And Jacob grew prosperous among the Philistines and had many possessions:
 15 oxen, and sheep, and camels, and asses, and much property.<sup>e</sup> •And he sowed in the land of the Philistines, and he raised grain one hundredfold. And Isaac became 16 very wealthy, and the Philistines became jealous of him. •And all of the wells which the servants of Abraham dug during Abraham's lifetime the Philistines 17 stopped up and filled them with dirt after Abraham's death. •And Abimelek said to Isaac, "Go away from us because you are much greater than we."
 And Isaac went away from there in the first year of the seventh week. And he 18 sojourned in the valleys of Gerar, •and they dug again the wells of water which the servants of Abraham, his father, had dug—and the Philistines stopped them up after the death of Abraham, his father. And he named them just as his father,
 19 Abraham, had named them. •And the servants of Isaac dug wells in the valley, and they found running water. And the shepherds of Gerar became angry with the shepherds of Jacob, saying, "The water is ours." And Isaac named that well "Harshness," because they had been harsh with us.
 20 And they dug another well and they also contended about it. And he named it "Hostility." And he rose from there, and they dug another well, but they were not angered about that, and he called it "Breadth," and Isaac said, "Now the LORD has made wide (a place) for us. And we have increased in the land."
 21 And he went up from there to the Well of the Oath in the first year of the first week in the forty-fourth jubilee. •And the LORD appeared to him during that night, on the new moon of the first month, and he said to him, "I am the God of Abraham, your father. Do not fear, because I am with you and I shall bless you and I shall surely multiply your seed like the sand of the earth because of Abraham, 22 my servant." •And he built an altar there where Abraham, his father, had built at first and called upon the name of the LORD and he offered a sacrifice to the God of Abraham, his father.
 24,25 And they dug a well and found running water. •But the servants of Isaac dug another well and did not find water. And they went and told Isaac that they did not find water. And Isaac said, "I have sworn (an oath) on this day to the 26 Philistines. And this thing has happened to us." •And he named that place "the Well of the Oath," because he swore an oath there to Abimelek and to 'Ahuzzat, his friend, and to Phicol, the commander of his army.

d. The Lat. text resumes at this point and continues through 25:1a.

e. The Lat. text has ministerium magnum, "a great (household) staff," which agrees with the Heb. of Gen 26:14.

Isaac curses the Philistines

27 And Isaac knew on that day that under pressure he swore an oath to them to 28 make peace with them. • And Isaac cursed the Philistines on that day, and he said, “Cursed be the Philistines<sup>f</sup> for the day of wrath and anger from among all the nations. May the LORD make them as scorn and a curse and (the object of) wrath and anger at the hands of the sinners, the nations, and in the hands of the Kittim.

29 And whoever escapes from the sword of the enemy and from the Kittim, may the righteous people uproot them from beneath the sky with judgment, because they will be enemies and foes to my sons in their generations upon the earth.

Dan 11:30
Gen 10:4
1Mac 1:1; 8:5

30 And no remnant will be left to them, nor one who escapes on the day of the wrath of judgment;
because all of the Philistine seed is (destined) for destruction and uprooting and removal from the earth.

And, therefore, there will not be any name or seed which remains upon the earth for any of<sup>g</sup> the Caphtorim.

Amos 9:7
Deut 2:23

31 Because if they go up to heaven, from there they will fall;
and if they are set firm in<sup>h</sup> the earth, from there they will be torn out;
and if they are hidden among the nations, from there they will be uprooted;
and if they go down to Sheol, even there their judgment will multiply, and also there will be no peace for them there.

Amos 9:2-4
Ps 139:8f.

32 And if they go into captivity by the hand of those who seek their life, they will kill them along the way.

And neither name nor seed will be left for them in all the earth, because they shall walk in an eternal curse.”

33 And thus it is written and engraved concerning him in the heavenly tablets to be done to him in the day of judgment so that they might be uprooted from the earth.

Rebecca gives instruction to Jacob regarding marriage

1 25 In the second year of this week, in this jubilee, Rebecca called Jacob, her son, and spoke to him, saying, “My son, do not take for yourself a wife from the daughters of Canaan as (did) Esau your brother, who took for himself two wives from the daughters of Canaan. And they have embittered my soul with all their impure deeds, because all of their deeds (are) fornication and lust. And there 2 is not any righteousness with them because (their deeds are) evil. • And I love you very much, my son. And my heart and affection bless you at every hour of the 3 day and (every) watch of the night. • And now, my son, heed my voice, and do the will of your mother. And do not take for yourself a wife from the daughters of this land, but from my father’s house and my father’s kin. You will take for yourself a wife from my father’s house. And the Most High God will bless you, and your children will be a righteous generation and a holy seed.”

Gen 28:1

Gen 27:46
Gen 26:35

Gen 28:1f.

f. This cursing of the Philistines is not part of the biblical tradition. It reflects the writer’s attitude with respect to the contemporary inhabitants of the area regarded as Philistia. The Philistines are not to be defeated by the Jews in the first instance, but by the Kittim. The identity of the Kittim is still a subject of debate. See J. C. Greenfield, “Kittim,” in IDB, vol. 3, p. 40f., and Davenport’s discussion in The Eschatology of the Book of Jubilees (p. 56).

g. Charles emended the text to read “for these Caphtorium” with the Lat. text, but the Eth. MSS read “all Caphtorim.”

h. The Lat. text reads “and where he flees.” The text in vs. 31 is obviously dependent on Amos 9:2–4. The writer may have been attracted to that passage because of the somewhat confusing reference to the “way of Beer-sheba” in 8:14. In the present text, Jacob is portrayed as cursing the Philistines in Beer-sheba after having made his way there through Philistine territory. Although there is no description of the patriarch Jacob cursing the Philistines, Amos 8:14 does provide a biblical basis of sorts for cursing those who live in that area.

Jacob's response

4 And then Jacob spoke with Rebecca, his mother, and said to her, "Behold, O mother, I am nine weeks of years old. And I have not known or touched or been betrothed to any woman. Nor have I been thinking about taking for myself a wife 5 from the daughters of Canaan, •because I recall, O mother, the words of Abraham, our father. For he commanded me that I should not take a wife from the daughters of Canaan because I should take for myself a wife from the seed of my father's 6 house and from my (own) kin. •I heard some time ago that daughters had been born to your brother, Laban. And I have set my heart upon them that I might take 7 a wife from among them. •And, therefore, I have guarded myself in my soul lest
 I sin or be corrupted in any of my ways all the days of my life because my father, 8 Abraham, gave me many commands regarding lust and fornication. •In spite of everything which he commanded me, for these twenty-two years my brother has contended with me and he frequently spoke with me and said, 'My brother, take as a wife one of the sisters of my two wives.' But I did not desire to do as he 9 had done. •I swear, O mother, before you all the days of my life, that I will not take for myself a wife from the daughters of the seed of Canaan and I will not 10 act wickedly as my brother has done. •Do not fear, O mother. Trust that I will do your will. And I will walk uprightly and will never corrupt my ways."

Rebecca's blessing for Jacob

11 And then she lifted her face toward heaven and spread out the fingers of her hands<sup>a</sup> and opened her mouth and blessed the Most High God who created heaven 12 and earth. And she gave to him glory and praise. •And she said, "May the LORD God be blessed, and may his holy name be blessed forever and ever, he who gave to me Jacob, a pure son and a holy seed; because he is yours and his seed will 13 (belong) to you for all times and in all generations forever. •O LORD, bless him 14 and place in my mouth a righteous blessing so that I might bless him." •And at Jn 14:17 that time, when a spirit of truth<sup>b</sup> descended upon her mouth, she placed her two hands upon the head of Jacob and said:

15 "Blessed are you, O LORD of righteousness and God of Ages;
 and may he bless you more than all the generations of man.
 May he grant to you the way of righteousness, my son;
 and to your seed, may he reveal righteousness.
 16 May he multiply your sons in your life(time);
 may they rise up according to the number of the months of the year.
 And may their sons be more numerous and greater than the stars of heaven;
 and more than the sand of the sea, may their number increase.
 17 And may he give to them this pleasant land, just as he said that he would give it to Abraham and his seed after him always;
 and may they hold it (as a) possession forever.
 18 And may I see, O my son, that you shall have blessed sons in my lifetime; and a blessed and holy seed, may all your seed be.
 19 And just as you have given rest to your mother's soul in her lifetime;
 the womb of the one who bore you likewise blesses you.
 My affection and my breasts are blessing you;
 and my mouth and tongue are praising you greatly.
 20 Increase and overflow in the land, and may your seed be perfected in every age in the joy of heaven and earth.

25 a. She held her hands in a traditional attitude of prayer.

b. Eth. MS C reads "a holy spirit," but the majority of MSS read "spirit of truth." Either reading would be appropriate in this context.

And may your seed be glad;
and on the great day of peace, may it have peace.

21 May your name and your seed stand for all the ages;
and may God Most High be their God.

And may the God of Righteousness dwell with them;
and with them may his sanctuary be built in all ages.

22 The one who blesses you will be blessed, and all flesh which curses you falsely will be cursed.”

Gen 27:29

23 And she kissed him and said to him:

“May the LORD of the world<sup>c</sup> love you; just as the heart and affection of your mother rejoices in you and blesses you.”

And she stopped blessing him.

The account of how Jacob received a blessing intended for Esau

Gen 27:1-40

1 26 And in the seventh year of this week Isaac called Esau, his elder son, and said to him, “My son, I am old, and behold my eyes are too dim to see. And I 2 do not know the day of my death. •And now take your hunting gear, your quiver and your bow. And go out to the field and hunt for me and catch something for me, my son. And prepare for me food, such as my soul desires. And fetch it to 3 me so that I might eat and my soul might bless you before I die.” •Now Rebecca 4 was listening as Isaac spoke to Esau. •And Esau went out early to the field so 5 that he might snare and take something and bring it to his father. •And Rebecca called Jacob, her son, and said to him, “Behold, I heard Isaac, your father, speaking with Esau, your brother, saying, ‘Snare something for me and prepare 6 food for me. And bring it to me. And I will eat, and bless you before the LORD before I die.’ •And now listen, my son, to my words which I command you. Go to your flock and take for me two good goat kids. And I will prepare them as food for your father just as he desires. And you shall take it in to your father and he will eat and bless you before the LORD before he dies. And you shall be 7 blessed.” •And Jacob said to Rebecca, his mother, “O mother, I will not refuse anything which my father would eat and which would please him, but I am afraid, 8 my mother, lest he recognize my voice and wish to touch me. •And you know that I am smooth and Esau, my brother, is hairy. And I shall become in his sight like one who acts wickedly and I shall be doing a deed which he did not command<sup>d</sup> me to do. And he will be angry with me and I shall bring upon myself a curse 9 and not a blessing.” •And Rebecca, his mother, said to him, “Upon me let your 10 curse be, my son, but obey me.” •And Jacob obeyed Rebecca, his mother. And he went and took two good and fat goat kids. And he brought them to his mother.
11 And his mother prepared them just as he liked. •And Rebecca took the favorite clothing of her elder son, Esau, which was with her in the house. And she put it on Jacob, her youngest son, and hides of the goat kids she placed on his hands 12 and on the bare parts of his neck. •And she gave the stew and bread which she 13 had prepared into the hand of Jacob, her son. •And Jacob entered to his father and said, “I am your son. I have done as you said to me. Come, and sit down and eat from what I have snared, O father, so that your soul might bless me.”
14,15 And Isaac said to his son, “How have you found (it) so quickly, my son?” •And 16 Jacob said, “It is because your God directed me.” •And Isaac said to him, “Draw near, and let me touch you, my son, to know whether you are my son Esau or 17 not.” •And Jacob drew near to Isaac, his father. And he touched him and said, 18 “The voice is the voice of Jacob, but the hands are the hands of Esau.”

c. The Eth. word which is translated “world” is ’ōlam; just as its Aram. counterpart, it may also refer to a period of time, a world age, or eon.

26 a. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through the first three words of vs. 23.

And he did not know him because the change was from heaven in order to distract his mind, and Isaac was unaware because his hands were hairy like the hands of Esau<sup>b</sup> so that he blessed him. •And he said, "Are you my son Esau?" And he said, "I am your son." And he said, "Bring it near to me and I will eat some of what you snared, my son, so that my soul might bless you." •And he brought it near to him, and he ate. And he brought him wine, and he drank. And Isaac, his father, said, "Come to me and kiss me, my son." And he drew near and he kissed him. •And he smelled the fragrance of the odor of his garments, and he blessed him and he said:

"Behold, the odor of my son is like the odor of a field<sup>c</sup> which the LORD has blessed.
 23 May the LORD give and multiply to you from the dew of heaven and from the dew of earth, and an abundance of wheat and oil may he multiply for you.
 May nations serve you,
 and the people bow down to you.
 24 Become a lord to your brothers, and may your mother's sons bow down to you.
 And may all of the blessings with which the LORD blessed me and blessed Abraham, my father, belong to you and to your seed forever.
 May the one who curses you be cursed,
 and the one who blesses you be blessed."

25 And it came to pass after Isaac ceased blessing his son Jacob, and after Jacob went out from Isaac, his father, that he hid himself. And Esau, his brother, arrived from his hunting. •And he also prepared food and brought (it) to his father and said to his father, "Let my father arise and eat from what I have snared so that your soul may bless me." •And Isaac, his father, said to him, "Who are you?" And he said to him, "I am your firstborn, Esau, your son. I have done as you commanded me." •And Isaac was very greatly astonished, and he said, "Who is this who hunted and snared (game) and brought (it) to me, and I ate from all (of it) before you came, and I blessed him. And he and all his seed will be blessed forever." •And it came to pass when Esau heard the words of his father, Isaac, that he cried out with a very loud and bitter voice and said to his father, "Bless me also, O father!" •And he said to him, "Your brother came fraudulently and took your blessings." And he said, "Now I know why his name was called Jacob. Behold he has defrauded<sup>d</sup> me twice. He has taken my right of firstborn and now he has taken my blessing." •And he said, "Have you not retained a blessing for me, father?" And Isaac answered and said to Esau, "Behold, I have set him up as lord over you, and all his brothers I have given to him that they might be servants to him. And with abundance of wheat, and wine, and oil I have strengthened him. But for you, what shall I now establish, my son?" •And Esau said to Isaac, his father, "Is there only one blessing of yours, father? Bless me also, father." And Esau raised his voice and wept. •And Isaac answered and said to him:

"Behold, apart from the dew of the land shall be your dwelling, and apart from the dew of heaven from above.
 34 And by your sword you shall live, and you will serve your brother.
 And it will happen when you become great,
 and you will remove his yoke from your neck,
 that then you will surely sin completely unto death,
 and your seed will be rooted out from under heaven."

b. The Lat. text adds "his brother."
 c. The Lat. text reads "full field."

d. In Heb. the word meaning "defraud" contains the same consonants as the name "Jacob."

Esau's resolve to kill Jacob

Gen 27:41

35 And Esau kept threatening Jacob on account of the blessing with which his father blessed him. And he said in his heart, "Now let the days of mourning for my father draw near. And I will kill Jacob, my brother."

Rebecca and Isaac counsel Jacob to go to Haran

Gen 27:42-28:5

1 27 And the words of Esau, her elder son, were told to Rebecca in a dream, and 2 Rebecca sent and called Jacob, her younger son, and she said to him, "Behold, 3 Esau, your brother, will take vengeance in order to kill you. So now, my son, obey me and arise and flee to Laban, my brother, to Haran. And dwell with him a few days until your brother's anger is turned away and he abandons his anger with you and forgets the full extent of what you did to him. And I will send and 4 bring you from there." And Jacob said, "I am not afraid. If he desires to kill 5 me, I shall kill him." And she said to him, "(No),<sup>a</sup> lest I be bereaved of both 6 of my sons in one day." And Jacob said to Rebecca, his mother, "Behold, you know that my father is old. And he does not see because his eyes are dim. And if I leave him it will be grievous in his sight because I am leaving and going from you. And my father will be angry and curse me. I will not go. But when he sends 7 me, only then will I go." And Rebecca said to Jacob, "I will go in and I will 8 speak to him. And he will send you." And Rebecca entered and she said to Isaac, "I despise my life because of the two daughters of Heth whom Esau took as wives for himself. And if Jacob takes a wife from among the daughters of the land who are like these, why then shall I live, because the daughters of Canaan 9 are evil." And Isaac called Jacob and he blessed him and admonished him and 10 said to him, "Do not take for yourself a wife from any of the daughters of Canaan. Arise and go into Mesopotamia to the house of Bethuel, your mother's father, and take a wife for yourself from there, from the daughters of Laban, your 11 mother's brother. And may God Almighty<sup>b</sup> bless and increase and multiply you.
 And become a company of nations. And may he grant the blessings of my father, Abraham, to you and<sup>c</sup> to your seed after you so that you will inherit the land of your sojournings and all of the land which the LORD gave to Abraham. Go, my 12 son, in peace." And Isaac sent Jacob. And he went to Mesopotamia, to Laban, the son of Bethuel, the Syrian, the brother of Rebecca, the mother of Jacob.

Isaac consoles Rebecca regarding Jacob's future

13 And it came to pass after Jacob arose to travel to Mesopotamia that the spirit 14 of Rebecca grieved after her son. And she wept. And Isaac said to Rebecca,
 "My sister, do not weep on account of Jacob, my son, because in peace he will 15 journey and in peace he will return. God Most High will protect him from all 16 evil and he will be with him because he will not forsake him all of his days, for
 I know that he will make his ways prosper everywhere he goes until he returns to 17 us in peace and we see him in peace. Do not fear on his account, my sister, because he is upright in his way and he is a perfect man. And he is faithful. And 18 he will not perish. Do not weep." And Isaac comforted Rebecca on account of Jacob, her son, and he blessed him.

Song 4:9,10,12

Jacob's dream and vow at Bethel

Gen 28:10-22

19 And Jacob went forth from the Well of the Oath in order to travel<sup>d</sup> to Haran in 27 a. The word "no" is lacking in the Eth. text, but the syntax is awkward without it.

b. "God Almighty" from Heb. El Šhadday. Two Eth. MSS have written samáy, "heaven," instead of sadáy = Šhadday.

c. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through the first two words of vs. 24.

d. Another fragment of the Heb. text from Qumran (1Q17) begins at this point.

the first year of the second week of the forty-fourth jubilee. And he arrived at Luz, which is in the mountains, i.e. Bethel, on the first of the first month of this week. And he reached the place when it was evening. And he turned aside from the way toward the west of the public road on that night. And he slept there because the sun had set. *And he took one of the stones of that place and he placed it at his head<sup>e</sup> beneath that tree and he was traveling alone, and he slept.

21 And he dreamed on that night and behold a staircase was set up upon the earth and its head touched heaven. And behold, angels of the LORD were going up and down upon it. And behold, the LORD was standing upon it. *And he spoke with Jacob and he said, "I am the LORD, the God of Abraham, your father and the God of Isaac. The land upon which you are sleeping I will give to you and to your seed after you. *And your seed shall be like the sand of the earth. And you shall increase in the West and the East and North and South. And all the peoples of the nations will be blessed in you and in your seed. *And behold, I shall be with you and I shall protect you everywhere you go. And I shall bring you back into this land in peace because I shall not forsake you until I do everything which I have said to you." *And Jacob awoke from his sleep and he said, "Truly this place is the house of the LORD, and I did not know it." And he was afraid and said, "Dreadful is this place which is none other than the house of God.<sup>f</sup> And this is the gate of heaven."

26 And rising early in the morning, Jacob took the stone which he had placed at his head and he set it up as a pillar for a sign. And he poured out oil on top of it and he named that place "Bethel." But formerly the name of that area was Luz.

27 And Jacob vowed a vow to the LORD, saying, "If the LORD will be with me and protect me in this way in which I am traveling, and if he will give me bread to eat and clothing to put on, and I return to the house of my father in peace, then the LORD will be my God and this stone which I have set up as a pillar for a sign in this place shall be the house of the LORD and everything which you have given me I will tithe to you, my God."

Jacob is given Leah as a wife

Gen 29:1-25

1 28 And he traveled<sup>a</sup> to the land of the East, to Laban, Rebecca's brother. And he was with him and served him for Rachel, his daughter, one week. *And in the first year of the third week, he said to him, "Give me my wife for whom I have served you seven years." And Laban said to Jacob, "I will give you your wife."

3 And Laban prepared a banquet and he took Leah, his elder daughter, and he gave her to Jacob as a wife. And he gave to her Zilpah, his maid, as an attendant. But Jacob did not know it because Jacob assumed that she was Rachel.

4 And he entered into her and behold, she was Leah. And Jacob was angry with Laban and he said to him, "Why have you treated me thus? Was it not for Rachel that I served you, and not for Leah? Why have you offended me? Take your daughter, and I will go because you have done evil against me." *For Jacob loved Rachel more than Leah because the eyes of Leah were weak, but her appearance was very beautiful, and Rachel (had) good eyes and good appearance and she was very beautiful.

The rule regarding the marriage of the elder daughter first

Gen 29:26f.

6 And Laban said to Jacob, "It does not happen thus in our land, to give the younger woman before the elder." And it is not right to do this because thus it

e. The phrase "at his head" is lacking in the Eth. text, but is present in the Lat. text and its presence in the Heb. text may be implied by the length of the lacuna at the point where it should appear.

f. The Eth. word for God which is used here is 'egzi'abbēr. Elsewhere it has consistently been translated LORD because it most frequently corresponds to the Heb. name YHWH. In this passage, however, the writer is presenting an explanation of the name "Bethel," "house of God."

28 a. The Eth. text reads lit. "he picked up his feet and traveled," thus preserving the quaint idiom which appears in the Heb. of Gen 29:1.

is ordained and written in the heavenly tablets that no one should give his younger daughter before the elder because he should first give the elder and after her the younger. And they will write it down as sin in heaven concerning the man who acts thus. And no one who does this thing will be righteous because this deed is 7 evil before the LORD. •And you command the children of Israel so that they will not do this thing: “Let not the younger woman be taken or given without the 8 elder one being first (given) because that is very evil.” •And Laban said to Jacob, “Let the seven days of banquet for this woman continue and then I will give you Rachel so that you might serve me another seven years (and) pasture my sheep just as you did in the previous week.”

The marriage to Rachel and the birth of children

Gen 29:28-30:24

9 And on the day when the seven days of Leah's banquet passed, Laban gave Rachel to Jacob so that he might serve him another seven years. And he gave to 10 Rachel, Bilhah, the sister of Zilpah, as an attendant. •And he served seven years 11 more on account of Rachel because Leah had been given to him gratis. •And the LORD opened the womb of Leah and she conceived and she bore a son to Jacob, and he called him Reuben, on the fourteenth of the ninth month, in the first year 12 of the third week. •But the womb of Rachel was closed because the LORD saw 13 that Leah was hated, but Rachel was loved. •And Jacob again went into Leah, and she conceived and she bore another son to Jacob, and he called him Simeon, 14 on the twenty-first of the tenth month and in the third year of this week. •And Jacob again went into Leah and she conceived and she bore the third son to him and he called him Levi, on the first day of the first month, in the sixth year of 15 this week. •And again Jacob went into her and she conceived and she bore the fourth son to him and he called him Judah, on the fifteenth of the third month, in 16 the first year of the fourth week. •And in all of this Rachel was jealous of Leah since she was not giving birth, and she said to Jacob, “Give me sons.” And Jacob said, “Have I withheld from you the fruit of your<sup>b</sup> womb? Have I forsaken you?”

17 And when Rachel saw that Leah had borne four sons to Jacob, Reuben and Simeon and Levi and Judah, she said to him, “Go into Bilhah, my maid, and she 18 will conceive and bear a son for me.” •And she gave Bilhah, her maid, to him so that she might be his wife.<sup>c</sup> And he went into her and she conceived and she bore a son to him, and he called him Dan, on the ninth day of the sixth month in 19 the sixth year of the third week. •And Jacob went into Bilhah again a second time, and she conceived and bore another son to Jacob, and Rachel called him Naphtali, on the fifth of the seventh month, in the second year of the fourth week.

20 And when Leah saw that she was sterile<sup>d</sup> and was not bearing children, she took and she also gave Zilpah, her attendant, to Jacob as a wife. And she conceived and bore a son to him and Leah called him Gad, on the twelfth of the eighth 21 month in the third year of the fourth week. •And he went into her again and she conceived and bore another son to him, and Leah called him Asher, on the second 22 of the eleventh month in the fifth year of the fourth week. •And Jacob went into Leah and she conceived and she bore a son and she called him Issachar, on the fourth day of the fifth month in the fourth year of the fourth week. And she gave 23 him to a nurse. •And Jacob went into her again and she conceived and she bore twins, a boy and a girl, and she called the boy Zebulun and the girl's name was Dinah, in the seventh day of the seventh month in the sixth year of the fourth 24 week. •And the LORD had mercy upon Rachel and opened her womb. And she

b. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through vs. 27a.

c. The first sentence in this vs. is lacking in Eth., but it is found in Gen 30:4, and is also attested in the Lat. text of Jub.

d. This is the reading of the Eth. MSS. Charles in his edition of the Eth. text emended the text to read “stopped” (bearing children) to agree with the Lat. text and the Heb. of Gen 30:9, but subsequently he followed the MS reading in his English translation.

conceived and bore a son and called him Joseph, on the first of the fourth month in the sixth year of that fourth week.

Laban persuades Jacob to continue working for wages

Gen 30:25-31:1

- 25 And at the time when Joseph was born, Jacob said to Laban, "Give me my wives and my children. And let me go to my father, Isaac. And let me make a house for myself because I have completed the years which I served you for your 26 two daughters. And I will travel to my father's house." •And Laban said to Jacob, "Remain with me for your wages and pasture my flock for me again and accept 27 your wages." •And they agreed with one another that he would give to him as his wages each of the lambs and kids which were born (and) on which there were
28 black or spots or white. It would be his wages. •And all of the sheep bore spotted (lambs) and ones which had variegated markings and ones which had various shades of black. And the sheep bore again lambs which looked like themselves and all which had markings belonged to Jacob and those which had no marking 29 belonged to Laban. •And the possessions of Jacob multiplied greatly. And he acquired oxen and sheep and asses and camels and male and female servants.
30 And Laban and his sons were jealous of Jacob. And Laban collected his sheep from him, and kept watch on him with evil intent.

Jacob flees secretly to Gilead

Gen 31:2-21

- 1 29 And it came to pass after Rachel bore Joseph that Laban went to shear his sheep because they were the distance of a three days' journey away from him.
2 And Jacob saw that Laban was going to shear his sheep and Jacob called Leah and Rachel and spoke intimately with them so that they might go with him to the 3 land of Canaan. •For he told them everything, as he had seen it in the dream, and everything which he<sup>a</sup> told him, that he would return to the house of his father.
4 And they said, "We will go with you anywhere you go." •And Jacob blessed the God of Isaac, his father, and the God of Abraham, his father's father. And he arose and loaded up his wives and children and took all of his possessions and crossed over the river and arrived at the land of Gilead. But Jacob concealed his intention from Laban and did not tell him.

The oath between Jacob and Laban and their separation

Gen 31:21-55

- 5 And in the seventh year of the fourth week, Jacob returned to Gilead, in the first month on the twenty-first day of the month. And Laban pursued him. And he found Jacob in the mountain of Gilead in the third month on the thirteenth
6 day. •But the LORD did not permit him to deal cruelly with Jacob because he
7 appeared to him in a dream at night. And Laban spoke to Jacob. •And on the fifteenth of those days Jacob prepared a banquet for Laban and for all who came with him. And Jacob swore to Laban on that day. And Laban also swore to Jacob that one would not cross over on the mountain of Gilead against the other with 8 evil intent. •And they made there a heap for a witness. Therefore<sup>b</sup> that place is called "the Heap of Witness" after this heap.<sup>c</sup>
9 But formerly the land of Gilead was called "the land of Raphaim" because it was the land of the Raphaim. And the Raphaim were born as giants whose height
10 was ten cubits, nine cubits, eight cubits, or down to seven cubits. •And their dwelling was from the land of the Ammonites to Mount Hermon and their royal 11 palaces were in Qarnaim, and Ashtaroth, and Edrei, and Misur, and Beon. •But the LORD destroyed them because of the evil of their deeds since they were very cruel. And the Amorites dwelt there instead of them, evil and sinful, and there is 29 a. The pronoun refers to God.

b. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through 31:1a.

c. "Heap of witnesses" was the presumed meaning of Gilead.

no people today who have fully equalled all of their sins. And therefore they had no length of life in the land.

12 And Jacob dismissed Laban, and he traveled to Mesopotamia, the land of the 13 East. And Jacob returned to the land of Gilead. •And he crossed over the Jabbok Gen 32:22 in the ninth month on the eleventh day of the month. And on that day Esau, his brother, came to him and was reconciled to him. And he went away from him to the land of Seir; but Jacob dwelled in tents.

Jacob's respect for his parents contrasted with Esau's disrespect

14 And in the first year of the fifth week in that jubilee, he crossed over the Jordan and he dwelt on the other side of the Jordan. And he was pasturing his sheep from the Sea of the Heap as far as Bethshan and Dothan and the forest of 15 Akrabbim. •And he sent to his father, Isaac, some of all his possessions: clothing, and food, and meat, and drink, and milk, and butter, and cheese, and some dates 16 of the valley. •And (he also sent) to his mother, Rebecca, four times per year—between the appointed times<sup>d</sup> of the months and between plowing and reaping, and between fall and the rainy season and between winter and spring—to the 17 tower of Abraham. •For Isaac had returned from the Well of the Oath and had gone up to the tower of his father, Abraham. And he dwelt there away from his 18 son Esau •because in the days when Jacob journeyed to Mesopotamia, Esau took Gen 28:9
for himself as a wife Mahalath, daughter of Ishmael, and gathered together all of Gen 36:6,8 his father's flocks and his own wives and went up and dwelt in Mount Seir. And 19 he left his father, Isaac, alone at the Well of the Oath. •And Isaac went up from the Well of the Oath and dwelt in the tower of Abraham, his father, in the 20 mountain of Hebron. •And Jacob sent there everything which he sent to his father and mother from time to time, all of their needs. And they blessed Jacob with all their heart and all their soul.

Levi and Simeon avenge the shame of Dinah

Gen 33:17-34:31

1 30 And in the first year of the sixth week he went up to Salem, which is east of 2 Shechem, in peace in the fourth month. •And there Dinah, the daughter of Jacob, was snatched away to the house of Shechem, son of Hamor, the Hivite, the ruler of the land. And he lay with her and defiled her, but she was little, only twelve 3 years old. •And he begged his father and her brothers that she be given to him as a wife, but Jacob and his sons were angry at the men of Shechem because they defiled Dinah, their sister. And so they spoke treacherously with them and 4 defrauded them and seduced them. •And Simeon and Levi entered Shechem TL Levi 6 suddenly. And they executed judgment upon all of the men of Shechem and killed every man they found therein and did not leave in it even one. They killed 5 everyone painfully because they had polluted Dinah, their sister. •And therefore let nothing like this be done henceforth to defile a daughter of Israel because the judgment was ordered in heaven against them that they might annihilate with a 6 sword all of the men of Shechem because they caused a shame in Israel. •And the LORD handed them over into the hand of the sons of Jacob so that they might destroy them with the sword and execute judgment against them, and so that nothing like this might therefore happen in Israel to defile an Israelite virgin.

The law prohibiting marriage with foreigners

7 And if there is any man in Israel who wishes to give his daughter or his sister to any man who is from the seed of the gentiles, let him surely die, and let him be stoned because he has caused shame in Israel. And also the woman will be Gen 34:7
burned with fire because she has defiled the name of her father's house and so

d. These are probably the four feast days established by Noah in Jub 6:23–32. There are twelve months of thirty days plus four intercalary days, which provide a year of 364 days.

8 she will be uprooted from Israel. •And do not let an adultress or defilement be found in Israel all of the days of the generations of the earth because Israel is holy to the LORD. And let any man who causes defilement surely die, let him be stoned •because thus it is decreed and written in the heavenly tablets concerning all of the seed of Israel: "Let anyone who causes defilement surely die. And let him be stoned."

10 And there is no limit of days for this law. And there is no remission or forgiveness except that the man who caused defilement of his daughter will be rooted out from the midst of all Israel because he has given some of his seed to Moloch and sinned so as to defile it. •And you, Moses, command the children of Israel and exhort them not to give any of their daughters to the gentiles and not to take for their sons any of the daughters of the gentiles because that is contemptible before the LORD. •Therefore I have written for you in the words of the law all of the deeds of the Shechemites which they did against Dinah and how the sons of Jacob spoke, saying, "We will not give our daughter to a man who is uncircumcised because that is a reproach to us."

Gen 34:14

13 And it is a reproach to Israel, to those who give and those who take any of the daughters of the gentile nations because it is a defilement and it is contemptible to Israel. •And Israel will not be cleansed from this defilement if there is in it a woman from the daughters of gentiles or one who has given any of his daughters to a man who is from any of the gentiles. •For there will be plague upon plague and curse upon curse, and every judgment, and plague, and curse will come. And if he does this thing, or if he blinds his eyes from those who cause defilement and from those who defile the sanctuary of the LORD and from those who profane his holy name, (then) all of the people will be judged together on account of all of the defilement and the profaning of this one. •And there is no accepting of person or regarding appearance<sup>a</sup> or taking from his hand either fruit or sacrifice or holocaust or fat or the aroma of sweet-smelling sacrifice so that he<sup>b</sup> might accept it. And let any man or woman in Israel who defiled his sanctuary be (dealt with likewise). •Therefore I command you, saying, "Proclaim this testimony to Israel: 'See how it was for the Shechemites and their sons, how they were given into the hand of the two children of Jacob and they killed them painfully. And it was a righteousness for them and it was written down for them for righteousness.'"

Levi is chosen for priesthood in recognition of his zeal

18 And the seed of Levi was chosen for the priesthood and levitical (orders) to minister before the LORD always just as we<sup>c</sup> do. And Levi and his sons will be blessed forever because he was zealous to do righteousness and judgment and vengeance against all who rose up against Israel. •And thus a blessing and righteousness will be written (on high) as a testimony for him in the heavenly tablets before the God of all. •And we will remember for a thousand generations the righteousness which a man did during his life in all of the (appointed) times of the year. And (it) will be written (on high) and it will come to him and his descendants after him. And he will be written down as a friend and a righteous one in the heavenly tablets.

TLevi 4

A warning against breach of covenant

21 All of these words I have written for you, and I have commanded you to speak to the children of Israel that they might not commit sin or transgress the ordinances or break the covenant which was ordained for them so that they might do it and

30 a. The expressions "accepting of person" (lit. accepting of face) and "regarding appearance" (lit. regarding of face) are idioms which mean essentially the same thing, i.e. "showing partiality." The use of them together is somewhat redundant. The Lat. text omits the phrase "or regarding appearance."

b. The pronoun refers to God.

c. The "we" refers to the host of angels who minister before the LORD continually. The Levites are to minister on earth as the angels do in heaven.

22 be written down as friends. •But if they transgress and act in all the ways of defilement, they will be recorded in the heavenly tablets as enemies. And they will be blotted out of the book of life and written in the book of those who will 23 be destroyed and with those who will be rooted out from the land. •And on the day that the children of Jacob killed Shechem he wrote (on high)<sup>d</sup> for them a book in heaven that they did righteousness and uprightness and vengeance against the sinners and it was written down for a blessing.

The conclusion of the Shechem incident

Gen 34:26-31;
35:5

24 And they brought forth Dinah, their sister, from the house of Shechem and they took captive everything which was in Shechem: their sheep and their oxen and their asses and all their herds and all their goods. And they brought forth everything
25 to Jacob, their father. •And he spoke with them because they slaughtered the citizens,<sup>e</sup> for he was afraid of those who inhabited the land: the Canaanites and the Perizzites. But the terror of the LORD was in all of the cities which surrounded Shechem and they did not rise up to pursue the sons of Jacob because a dread had fallen upon them.

The preparation for pilgrimage to Bethel

Gen 35:1-4

1 31 And on the first of the month, Jacob spoke to all of the men of his house, saying, "Purify and change your clothes, and having arisen, let us go up to Bethel, where on the day when I fled from the face of Esau, my brother, I made a vow to him who has been with me and has returned me unto this land in peace.
2 Remove the strange gods that are among you." •And they handed over<sup>a</sup> the strange gods and what was on their ears and what was on their necks and the idols which Rachel stole from Laban, her father,<sup>b</sup> and she gave everything to Jacob, and he burned it and crushed it and destroyed it and hid it under an oak which was in the Land of Shechem.

Jacob invites his father to come to Bethel

Gen 35:7
Levi 9

3 And he went up on the first of the seventh month into Bethel. And he built an altar in the place where he had slept and had erected a pillar. And he invited his father, Isaac, and his mother, Rebecca, to come to him in the (time of) sacrifice.
4 And Isaac said, "Let my son Jacob come and let me see him before I die."

Jacob's visit to his father, Isaac

5 And Jacob went to his father, Isaac, and to his mother, Rebecca, at the house of his father, Abraham, and he took with him two of his sons, Levi and Judah.
6 And he came to his father, Isaac, and his mother, Rebecca. •And Rebecca went out from the tower at the gates of the tower to kiss Jacob and embrace him because it revived her soul when she heard, "Behold, Jacob, your son, has arrived."
7 And she kissed him, and she saw his two sons and she recognized them and she

d. The use of the word 'arega in Jub needs further study. Normally the word means "to ascend." In a few passages, the word involves writing on heavenly tablets. In the present translation such passages are rendered "to write (on high)," i.e. "to go up (in writing)." In the process of reviewing the work for publication, J. VanderKam has suggested the possibility of reading this vs. as "a book/writing went up to heaven." He may be on the right track. The Lat. would appear to support such a reading. I have retained an earlier translation, however, pending a study of all of the relevant passages.

e. The text reads lit. "they killed the city," but the "city" is used by the writer to refer to all citizens.

31 a. The reading "handed over" is an emendation based on Gen 35:4. The Eth. MSS read either "melt" or "seize" at this point.

b. Charles emended his Eth. text to read "her brother." but he subsequently read "her father" in English translation published in his APOT, vol. 2.

said to him, "Are these your sons, my son?" And she embraced them and kissed them and blessed them, saying, "In you may he bless the seed of Abraham, and may you become a blessing upon the earth."

8 And Jacob went in to Isaac, his father, in the chamber where he was lying down, and his two children were with him. And he took the hand of his father, and, bowing down, he kissed him. And Isaac hung on the neck of Jacob, his son, and he wept on his neck. *And the darkness passed from the eyes of Isaac and he saw Jacob's two sons, Levi and Judah, and he said, "Are these your sons, my son, because<sup>c</sup> they resemble you?" *And he told him that they were truly his sons: "And certainly you have seen that they are truly my sons."

The blessing of Levi

11 And they drew near to him and he turned and kissed them and embraced the 12 both of them together. *And a spirit of prophecy came down upon his mouth.
13 And he took Levi in his right hand and Judah in his left hand. *And he turned to 14 Levi first and he began to bless him first, and he said to him, "May the God of 15 all, i.e. the LORD of all ages, bless you and your sons in all ages. *May the LORD
16 give you and your seed very great honor.<sup>d</sup> May he draw you and your seed near 17 to him from all flesh to serve in his sanctuary as the angels of the presence and 18 the holy ones. May your sons' seed be like them with respect to honor and 19 greatness and sanctification. And may he make them great in every age. *And 20 they will become judges and rulers and leaders<sup>e</sup> for all of the seed of the sons of 21 Jacob.

1QapGen 2.4

TLevi 9

TLevi 8

The word of the LORD they will speak righteously, and all of his judgments they will execute righteously.
And they will tell my ways to Jacob,
and my paths to Israel.

The blessing of the LORD shall be placed in their mouth, so that they might bless all of the seed of the beloved.

16 (As for) you, your mother has named you 'Levi,' and truly she has named you.

You will be joined<sup>f</sup> to the LORD and be the companion of all the sons of Jacob.

Lev 18:2,4

His table will belong to you, and you and your sons will eat (from) it,
and in all generations your table will be full,
and your food will not be lacking in any age.

TLevi 8
TJud 21

17 And all who hate you will fall before you,
and all your enemies will be uprooted and perish,
and whoever blesses you will be blessed,
and any nation which curses you will be cursed."

The blessing of Judah

18 And to Judah he said:

"May the LORD give you might and strength to tread upon all who hate you.

Be a prince, you and one of your sons for the sons of Jacob;
may your name and the name of your son be one which travels and goes about in all the lands and cities.

c. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through 31:18.

d. The phrase "very great honor" is based on MS B, which reads "great greatness of honor"; the Lat. reads "to understand his glory." Charles emended his Eth. text to agree with the Lat., but returned to the Eth. MSS in preparing his own translation as "greatness and great glory."

e. The Lat. text omits "leaders."

f. In Heb. the name Levi and the verbal root meaning "to cleave, be joined to" share similar consonants and were presumed to be related.

Then may the nations fear before your face, and all of the nations tremble,
[and every nation trembles].<sup>g</sup>

- 19 And with you will be the help of Jacob and with you will be found the salvation of Israel.
20 And on the day when you sit on your righteous throne of honor, there will be great peace for all the seed of the beloved's sons.
Whoever blesses you will be blessed, and all who hate you and afflict you and curse you will be uprooted and destroyed from the earth and they shall be cursed."

Jacob's visit with Isaac

- 21 And turning, he kissed him again and embraced him and rejoiced greatly because 22 he had seen the sons of Jacob, his own true son. •And he withdrew from his embrace and fell down and bowed down to him. And he blessed them. And he rested there near Isaac, his father, during that night. And they ate and drank 23 joyfully. •And he made the two sons of Jacob sleep, one on his right and one on 24 his left, and it was counted to him (as) righteousness. •And Jacob told his father everything during the night, how the LORD had shown him great mercy, and how 25 he had made all of his affairs prosper and protected him from all evil. •And Isaac blessed the God of his father, Abraham, who did not withhold his mercy and his righteousness from the son of his servant Isaac.

Isaac's farewell to Jacob

- 26 And in the morning, Jacob told his father, Isaac, (about) the vow which he had made to the LORD and the vision which he had seen and that he had built an altar and everything was prepared to make a sacrifice before the LORD just as he had 27 vowed and that he had come to set him upon an ass. •And Isaac said to Jacob, his son, "I am not able to come with you because I have grown old and I am not able to endure on the way. Go, my son, in peace, because I am one hundred and sixty-five years old today. Therefore I am not able to travel. Set your mother (on 28 the ass) and let her go with you. •I know, my son, that you came for my sake.
And let this day be blessed on which you have seen me alive and I have also seen 29 you, my son. •Prosper and perform the vow which you made and do not delay your vow because the vow will be sought. And now hasten to do it, and may the 30 one who created<sup>h</sup> everything, to whom you vowed the vow, be pleased." •And he said to Rebecca, "Go with Jacob, your son." And Rebecca went with Jacob, her son. And Deborah (was) with her. And they reached Bethel.

Jacob reflects on the blessing of his sons

- 31 And Jacob remembered the prayer (with) which his father blessed him and his two sons, Levi and Judah, and he rejoiced and he blessed the God of his fathers, 32 Abraham and Isaac. •And he said, "Now I know that I and my sons have an eternal hope before the God of all." And thus it is ordained concerning the two of them, and it has been written (on high) for them as an eternal testimony in the heavenly tablets, just as Isaac blessed them.

Jacob's tithe and sacrifice at Bethel

- 1 32 And he stayed that night in Bethel. And Levi dreamed that he had been <sup>TL</sup>Levi 8 appointed and ordained priest of the Most High God, he and his sons forever.

g. The phrase that is written between brackets is a rather obvious dittography.

h. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through the first three words of 32:8.

- 2 And he woke from his sleep and blessed the LORD. •And Jacob rose early in the morning on the fourteenth of that month and he gave a tenth of everything which came with him: man, (and) beast, gold, (and) all (sorts of) vessels and clothes. And he gave a tenth of everything. TLevi 9
- 3 And in those days Rachel conceived Benjamin, her son. And Jacob counted his sons from him and upward, and (the lot of) Levi fell with the portion of the LORD. And his father put garments of the priesthood upon him and he filled his hands. •And on the fifteenth of this month he brought to the altar fourteen bulls from the herd and twenty-eight rams and forty-nine sheep and seven lambs and twenty-one<sup>a</sup> kids of the goats (as) a burnt offering upon the altar of sacrifices, well pleasing for a sweet-smelling aroma before God. •This was his offering from the vow which he made to tithe together with their (fruit) offerings and their libations. •And when the fire consumed it he burned incense upon the fire above it. And for a thank offering: two bulls and four rams and four sheep and four he-goats and two lambs, each a year old, and two kids of the goats. Thus he did at dawn for seven days. •And it happened as he and all his sons and his men ate there joyfully for seven days that he blessed and praised the LORD, the one who delivered him from all his affliction and who granted him his prayers. •And he gave a tithe of every clean animal and he made a burnt offering, but the unclean animals he did (not)<sup>b</sup> give to Levi, his son, but every human soul he gave to him. Num 29:12-40
Lev 23:34-44
- 9 And Levi served as priest in Bethel before Jacob, his father, (apart) from his ten brothers. And he was a priest there. And Jacob gave his vow. Thus he tithed a second tithe to the LORD and he sanctified it and it was sanctified to him. Gen 28:22

The law of the tithe

- 10 And therefore it is decreed in the heavenly tablets as a law to tithe the tithe again in order to eat it before the LORD from year to year in the place where it is determined that his name shall dwell. And there is no limit of days to this law forever. •This ordinance is written to observe it year after year to eat the second tithe before the LORD in the place where it is determined. And there is not to be (anything) left over from it from this year to the year which is to come. •For in its year the grain will be eaten until the days of the harvest of the grain of the year, and the wine (will be drunk) until the days of the wine, and the olive (will be used) until the day of its season. •And everything which is left over from it and which grows old will be unclean. Let it be burned in the fire because it has become impure. •And thus they shall eat it together in the sanctuary and they shall not let it become old. •And the whole tithe of oxen and sheep is holy to the LORD and it will belong to the priests who will eat it before him year after year because it is so ordered and engraved on the heavenly tablets concerning the tithe. Deut 14:22f.
Lev 27:32
2Chr 31:6

Jacob's vision which prevented him from sanctifying the court at Bethel

- 16 And in the second night, on the twenty-second day of this month, Jacob planned to build up that place and to build a wall around the court and to sanctify it and to make it eternally holy for himself and his sons after him. •And the LORD appeared to him in the night and blessed him and said to him, "Your name will not be called Jacob, but you will be named Israel." •And he said to him again, "I am the LORD who created heaven and earth, and I shall increase you and multiply you very much. And there will be kings from you; they will rule everywhere<sup>c</sup> that the tracks of mankind have been trod. •And I shall give to your seed all of the land under heaven and they will rule in all nations as they have" CD 1.7f.

32 a. The numbers "seven" and "twenty-one" are found correctly in the Lat. text. The Eth. text has "sixty" and "twenty-nine" respectively, but the series of animals offered were most likely presented in multiples of seven.

b. The MSS lack the negative, but the sense requires it.

c. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through the first three words of 33:9.

desired. And after this all of the earth will be gathered together<sup>d</sup> and they will inherit it forever.”

- 20 And he finished speaking with him, and he went up from him. And Jacob 21 watched until he went up into heaven. •And he saw in a vision of the night, and behold an angel was descending from heaven, and there were seven tablets in his hands. And he gave (them) to Jacob, and he read them, and he knew everything which was written in them, which would happen to him and to his sons during 22 all the ages. •And he showed him everything which was written on the tablets.
 23 And he said to him, “Do not build this place, and do not make an eternal sanctuary, and do not dwell here because this is not the place. Go to the house of Abraham, your father, and dwell with Isaac, your father, until the day of your 24 father’s death •because you will die peacefully in Egypt and you will be buried honorably in this land in the tomb of your fathers with Abraham and Isaac. Do not fear, because just as you have seen and read, thus will everything come to 25 pass. But you write down everything just as you have seen and read (it).” •And Jacob said, “O LORD, how will I remember everything that I read and saw?”
 26 And he said to him, “I will cause you to remember everything.” •And he went up from him and he woke up from his sleep and he recalled everything that he had read and seen and he wrote down all of the matters which he had read and seen.

The institution of the day of “Addition” to the feast

- 27 And he observed there yet one (more) day and he sacrificed in it according to <sup>2Chr 7:9</sup> everything which he had been sacrificing on the previous days. And he called it “Addition” because that day was added, but the previous (days) he called “the 28 feast.” •And thus it was revealed that it should be. And it is written in the heavenly tablets. Therefore it was revealed to him so that he might observe it and 29 add it to the seven days of the feast. •And it was called “Addition” because it is written (on high) in the attestation<sup>e</sup> of feast days according to the number of days of the year.

The death of Deborah

Gen 35:8

- 30 And on the night of the twenty-third of that month Deborah, the nurse of Rebecca, died. And she was buried south of the city under the oak at the river.
 And that place was called “Deborah’s River” and the oak (was called) “the Oak of Sorrow for Deborah.”

Rebecca’s departure

- 31 And Rebecca went and returned to her house, to his father, Isaac, and Jacob sent in her hands rams and sheep and he-goats so that she might make for his 32 father a meal such as he desired. •And he traveled after his mother until he approached the land of Kabrâtân. And he dwelt there.

The birth of Benjamin and death of Rachel

Gen 35:16-20

- 33 And Rachel bore a son in the night and called him “son of my sorrow,” because she suffered when she bore him, but his father called him Benjamin, on the eleventh of the eighth month in the first year of the sixth week of that jubilee.
 34 And Rachel died there and she was buried in the land of Ephrata, i.e. Bethlehem.
 And Jacob built a pillar on the tomb of Rachel, on the road above her tomb.

d. This phrase could be translated lit. “they will gather together all of the earth.” The third person plural may, however, be regarded as an impersonal subject and rendered equally well as a passive.

e. This is the reading of the MSS. In his Eth. text and English translation, Charles followed the Lat. text, which reads “among the days of the feast days.”

The account of Reuben's sin with Bilhah

Gen 35:21f.

- 1 33 And Jacob went and dwelt toward the south of Magdaladra'ef.<sup>a</sup> And he and Leah, his wife, went to his father, Isaac, on the new moon of the tenth month.
- 2 And Reuben<sup>b</sup> saw Bilhah, the attendant of Rachel (and) his father's concubine, TReu 3
- 3 washing in the water privately, and he desired her. •And hiding at night, he entered Bilhah's house at night<sup>c</sup> and found her sleeping in her bed, alone in her house. •And he lay with her. And she woke up and looked, and behold, Reuben was lying with her on the bed. And she uncovered the hem of her (skirt) and
- 5 seized him and screamed and recognized that it was Reuben. •And she was ashamed because of him and released her hand from upon him. And he fled. •And she lamented greatly concerning this matter. And she did not tell anyone at all.
- 7 And when Jacob came and sought her, she said to him, "I am not clean for you since I have become polluted for you because Reuben has defiled me and lay with me at night, but I was sleeping and I was unaware until he had uncovered my Deut 22:30
- 8 skirt and lain with me." •And Jacob was very angry with Reuben because he had lain with Bilhah, for he had uncovered his father's robe. •And therefore Jacob did not draw near her since Reuben had defiled her. And the deed of any man who uncovers his father's robe is very evil because he is despicable before the LORD.

The laws of incest

- 10 Therefore it is written and ordered in the heavenly tablets that a man should not lie with his father's wife, and he should not uncover his father's robe because that is defilement. They shall certainly die together, the man who lies with his father's wife and also the wife because they have made a defilement upon the Lev 20:11
- 11 earth. •And there shall be no defilement before our God among the people whom he has chosen for himself as a possession. •And again it is written a second time: "Let anyone who lies with his father's wife be cursed because he has uncovered Deut 22:30
- 12 his father's shame." And all the holy ones of the LORD said, "So be it, so be it."
- 13 And you, Moses, command the children of Israel and let them keep this word because it is a judgment worthy of death. And it is a defilement. And there is no forgiveness in order to atone for a man who has done this, forever, but only to execute him and kill him and stone him and to uproot him from the midst of the people of our God. •For any man who does this in Israel should not have life for a single day upon the earth because he is despicable and polluted.

The example of Reuben does not permit exception to law of incest

- 15 And let them not say, "Reuben had life and forgiveness after he lay with his father's concubine and while she had a husband and while her husband, Jacob, his father, was alive." •For the ordinance and judgment and law had not been revealed till then (as) completed for everyone, but in your days (it is) like the law of (appointed) times and days and an eternal law for everlasting generations. •And Rom 4:15
- 17 this law has no consummation of days. And also there is no forgiveness for it but only that both of them should be uprooted from the midst of the people. On the day when they have done this they shall be killed.

33 a. In Gen 35:21 it is reported that Jacob dwelt near the "tower of Eder" (Heb., migdal-ēder). That tower was in the region of "Ephrath." The Eth. spelling is therefore a corruption of the phrase "the tower of Eder at Ephrath" or "the Ephrathite tower of Eder."

b. A portion of the Syr. text begins at this point and continues through vs. 16a. The Syr. text is considerably abbreviated.

c. The repetition of "at night" seems unnecessary. The Lat. text mentions "night" only once in this vs.

Moses is directed to warn people of laws of sexual defilement

18 And you, Moses, write for Israel, and let them keep this. And let them do according to these words. And let them not commit a sin worthy of death because 19 the LORD our God is a judge who does not accept<sup>d</sup> persons or gifts. •And say to them these words of the ordinance that they might hear and guard and watch themselves concerning them and they will not be destroyed or uprooted from the earth. For defiled, and an abomination, and blemished, and polluted are all who 20 do them upon the earth before our God. •And there is no sin greater than the fornication which they commit upon the earth because Israel is a holy nation to the LORD his God, and a nation of inheritance, and a nation of priests, and a royal nation, and a (special) possession. And there is nothing which appears which is as defiled as this among the holy people.

The children of Jacob appear before Isaac

Gen 35:22-27

21 And in the third year of this sixth week it came to pass as Jacob and all his sons were traveling that they dwelt (at) the house of Abraham near Isaac, his 22 father, and Rebecca, his mother. •And these are the names of the children of Jacob: his firstborn, Reuben, and Simeon and Levi and Judah, and Issachar, and Zebulun, the sons of Leah. And the sons of Rachel (are) Joseph and Benjamin. And the sons of Bilhah (are) Dan and Naphtali. And the sons of Zilpah (are) Gad and Asher. And Dinah (is) the daughter of Leah, the only daughter of Jacob.
 23 And when they came, they bowed down to Isaac and Rebecca. And when they saw them, they blessed Jacob and all of his sons. And Isaac rejoiced greatly because he saw the sons of Jacob, his younger son. And he blessed them.

The sons of Jacob successfully defeat an Amorite coalition

Gen 37:12

1 34 And in the sixth year of this week from this forty-fourth jubilee, Jacob sent
 2 his sons with their servants to pasture their sheep in the field of Shechem. •And while hiding themselves under the trees, seven kings of the Amorites assembled
 3 themselves to fight against them and to plunder their animals. •And Jacob and Levi and Judah and Joseph were at home with Isaac, their father, because his soul grieved him, and they were unable to leave him. And Benjamin was the youngest and therefore he dwelt with his father.

4 And the kings of Tafu, and the kings of 'Aresa, and the kings of Seragān, and the kings of Sèlo, and the kings of Gā'as, and the kings of Bethoron, and the king of Ma'anisakir,<sup>a</sup> and all of those who dwelt in that mountain, who dwell in the woods of the land of Canaan, came. •And they reported it to Jacob, saying that, "Behold, the kings of the Amorites have surrounded your sons and they
 6 have plundered their herds." •And he and his three sons and all of his father's servants and his servants arose from his house and went against them with six 7 thousand men who carried swords. •And he killed them in the field of Shechem and he pursued those who fled and killed them with the edge of the sword. And he killed 'Aresa and Tafu and Seragān and Sèlo and Ma'anisakir and Gā'as, and 8 he collected his herds. •And he prevailed over them and decreed a tribute against

Gen 48:22
TJud 4

TJud 4

d. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through 35:5a.

34 a. For a recent discussion of the place-names mentioned in this vs. see VanderKam, Textual and Historical Studies, pp. 220–29.

This account of the Amorite war against the sons of Jacob is not biblical, but it is found in two Jewish texts in a form which provides witness to a version of the story which was independent of Jub. See TJud 3–7 and Midrash Wayyissau in A. Jellinek's Bet ha-Midrash (Jerusalem, 1938<sup>2</sup>) part 3, pp. 1–5. In the Midrash Wayyissau it is explained that the Amorites were provoked by the action of two of Jacob's sons against Shechem, but waited seven years to mount an attack against the family of Jacob. In both the account of Wayyissau and TJud, Judah plays a leading role in the war against the Amorites.

them so that they might give a tribute of five of the fruits of their land. And he 9 built Robel and Tamnatares. •And he returned peacefully and he made peace with them and they became servants to him until the day he and his sons went down into Egypt.

The brothers sell Joseph and deceive their father

Gen 37:13-35

10 And in the seventh year of this week he sent Joseph from his house to the land of Shechem in order that he might know about the welfare of his brothers, and 11 he found them in the land of Dothan. •And they acted fraudulently and made a plot against him to kill him, but they repented and sold him to a band of Ishmaelites. And they took him down to Egypt and sold him to Potiphar, a eunuch 12 of Pharaoh, the chief guard,<sup>b</sup> the priest of the city of Heliopolis.<sup>c</sup> •And the sons of Jacob slaughtered a kid and dipped Joseph's garment into the blood and sent 13 (it) to Jacob, their father, on the tenth of the seventh month. •And he lamented all of that night, because they had brought it to him in the evening. And he became feverish in lamenting his death, and said that, "A cruel beast has eaten Joseph." And all of the men of his house lamented with him on that day. And it 14 happened as they were mourning and lamenting with him all that day •that his sons and his daughter rose up to comfort him but he was not comforted concerning his son.

The death and burial of Bilhah and Dinah

15 And on that day Bilhah heard that Joseph had perished and she died while mourning for him. And she was dwelling in Qaftratef. And Dinah, his daughter, also died after Joseph perished. And these three lamentations came upon Israel in 16 a single month. •And they buried Bilhah opposite the tomb of Rachel, and they 17 also buried Dinah, his daughter, there. •And it happened, as they lamented for Joseph one year, that he was not consoled, because he said, "I will go down to the grave lamenting for my son."

A day of memorial established for the crime against Joseph

18 Therefore it is decreed for the children of Israel that they mourn on the tenth Lev 16:29,34
 (day) of the seventh month—on the day when that which caused him to weep for Joseph came to Jacob, his father—so that they might atone for them(selves) with a young kid on the tenth (day) of the seventh month, once a year, on account of their sin because they caused the affection of their father to grieve for Joseph, his 19 son. •And this day is decreed so that they might mourn on it on account of their sins and on account of all their transgressions and on account of all their errors in order to purify themselves on this day, once a year.

The wives of the sons of Jacob

Gen 38:2

20 And after Joseph perished, the sons of Jacob took wives for themselves. The name of the wife of Reuben (was) 'Ada.<sup>d</sup> And the name of the wife of Simeon (was) 'Adiba'a, a Canaanite. And the name of the wife of Levi (was) Melka, Gen 46:10 from the daughters of Aram, from the seed of the sons of Terah. And the name

b. The Eth. MSS read "chief cook," but that is due to a confusion about the meaning of the Heb. word šabbāh, which lit. means "one who slaughters." It was apparently applied to one who slaughtered animals, i.e. a butcher, but in the passing of time it became the title for a high official, in this case the keeper of prison in Gen 39:1.

c. The Eth. spelling 'Élêw is a transcription of the Gk. 'ēliou, "sun" (genitive).

d. In his edition of the Eth. text, Charles included a Syr. fragment as Appendix III. The Syr. fragment contained a list of the wives of the patriarchs which generally agrees with the names found in Jub. Charles provided a detailed comparison of the forms in the notes to his 1902 English translation.

of the wife of Judah (was) Betasu'el, a Canaanite. And the name of the wife of Issachar (was) Hezaqa. And the name of the wife of Zebulun (was) Ni'imān. And the name of the wife of Dan (was) 'Egla. And the name of the wife of Naphtali (was) Rasu'u, who (was) Mesopotamian. And the name of the wife of Gad (was) Maka. And the name of the wife of Asher (was) 'Iyona. And the name of the wife of Joseph (was) Asenath, an Egyptian. And the name of the wife of Benjamin (was) 'Iyasaka. •And Simeon repented and took another wife from Mesopotamia as his brothers had.

Rebecca's conversation with Jacob predicting her death

1 35 And in the first year of the first week in this forty-fifth jubilee, Rebecca called to Jacob, her son. And she commanded him with regard to his father and brother
 2 that he should honor them all the days of Jacob's life. •And Jacob said, "I will do everything just as you have commanded me because this thing is an honor and a greatness for me and a righteousness for me before the LORD, that I should 3 honor them. •And you, mother, know from the day I was born until<sup>a</sup> this day all of my deeds and everything which is in my heart, that I always think of good for 4 everyone. •And why would I not do this thing which you have commanded me,
 5 that I should honor my father and my brother. •Tell me, mother, what perversity you have seen against me and I will withdraw from it and mercy<sup>b</sup> will be upon
 6 me." •And she said, "My son, all my days I have never seen against you anything perverse but only uprightness. But I will rightly tell you, my son, (that) I shall die within this year, and I shall not pass through this year alive because I have seen in a dream the day of my death, that I shall not live more than one hundred and fifty-five years. And behold, I have completed all of the days of my life which I will live."

7 And Jacob laughed about his mother's words, because his mother said that she would die, but she was sitting opposite him, and her strength was in her. And she was not suffering loss of strength, because she was coming and going and seeing (clearly), and her teeth were sound, and no disease had touched her all the 8 days of her life. •And Jacob said, "I (would be) happy, mother, if my days approached the days of your life and my powers were thus in me as your powers. And you will not die because you have spoken to me<sup>c</sup> (in) idle jest concerning your death."

Rebecca's conversation with Isaac concerning Jacob and Esau

9 And she went in to Isaac and she said to him, "One request I beg of you. Make Esau swear that he will not harm Jacob and will not pursue him hostilely because you know Esau's inclination,<sup>d</sup> that it has been evil since his youth. [And there is 10 no goodness in him because he wants to kill him after your death.]<sup>e</sup> •And you know everything that he has done from the day that Jacob, his brother, traveled to Haran until this day, that he abandoned us with all his heart and did evil with us. He gathered your flocks and robbed all of your possessions before your face.
 11 And while we were begging and asking for what was ours he acted like a man

35 a. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through 35:12a.

b. The Lat. text reads "mercy of the Lord."

c. A Heb. fragment from Qumran begins at this point and is parallel through vs. 10a.

d. The Heb. word in the Qumran text is yēšer. The yēšer of Esau is "evil."

e. The sentence enclosed in brackets is lacking from the Heb. text. There is, of course, no way of knowing whether the Heb. text originally lacked the sentence, which appears in both Eth. and Lat., or whether the sentence was simply lost from a single Heb. manuscript. VanderKam, in his Textual and Historical Studies, pp. 85–87, concluded that the sentence was probably in the original text. I am almost persuaded that he is right. I am, however, struck by the fact that vs. 13 contains a phrase which is quite similar to the sentiment expressed here, but the phrase in vs. 13 was identified as an addition to the text by Charles in his translation. If the two sentences 9 and 13 are read together with the bracketed phrases treated as glosses, one could imagine that some scribe was impressed with the total depravity of Esau which was discussed in this ch. and wrote in two marginal comments, perhaps to remind himself of a choice sermon illustration.

12 who was taking pity on us. •And he is bitter against you because you blessed Jacob, your perfect and upright son, because he has no evil but only goodness. And since he came from Haran until this day he has not been depriving us of anything, for he has always been bringing us everything in its season. And he rejoices with his whole heart whenever we accept (anything) from his hand. And he has been blessing us and has not separated from us since he came from Haran until this day. But he has been dwelling with us continually at home honoring us.” •And Isaac said to her, “I know and see the deeds of Jacob, who is with us, that with all his heart he is honoring us. And I first loved Esau more than Jacob because he was born first, but now I love Jacob more than Esau because he has increasingly made his deeds evil. And he has no righteousness because all of his ways are injustice and violence. [And he has no righteousness around him.]<sup>f</sup>

14 And now my heart is vexed on account of all his deeds. And neither he nor his seed is to be saved for they will be destroyed from the earth, and they will be uprooted from under the heaven since he has forsaken the God of Abraham and he has gone after his wives and after their defilement and after their errors, (both)

15 he and his sons. •And you say to me that I should make him swear that he will not kill his brother, Jacob. If he swears he will not abide by his oath, and he will not do goodness, but only evil. •But if he wishes to kill Jacob, his brother, he will be given into the hand of Jacob. And he will not escape from his hand

17 because he will fall into his hand. •And you should not fear on account of Jacob because the protector of Jacob is greater and mightier and more honored and praised than the protector of Esau.”

Rebecca seeks assurances of fraternal love between Jacob and Esau

18 And Rebecca sent and called Esau. And he came to her and she said to him, “I have a request, my son, which I will ask of you. Say that you will do it, my son.” •And he said, “I will do everything which you say to me. And I will not refuse your request.” •And she said to him, “I ask of you on the day when I die that you bring me and bury me near Sarah, your father’s mother, and that you and Jacob love one another, and that one will not seek evil for his brother, but only love him. And you will prosper, my sons, and be honored in the midst of the earth and the enemy will not rejoice over you. And you will become a blessing and a mercy in the sight of all who love you.” •And he said, “I shall do everything which you have been saying to me. And I shall bury you on the day when you die near Sarah, my father’s mother, just as you have desired so that your bones

22 will be near her bones. •And Jacob, my brother, I shall love more than all flesh. And I have no brother in all the earth except him alone. And this is not a great (thing) for me if I love him because he is my brother and together we were sown in your belly and together we came forth from your womb. And if I do not love

23 my brother, whom shall I love? •But I beg of you only that you admonish Jacob concerning my sons because I know that he will certainly rule over me and my sons because on the day my father blessed him he set him above and me beneath.

24 And I swear to you that I will love him and that I will not seek evil for him all the days of my life, but only good.” And he swore to her concerning all of these matters.

25 And she called Jacob in the sight of Esau, and she commanded him according to what she had spoken with Esau. •And he said, “I will do your pleasure. Trust me, that evil will not proceed from me or my sons against Esau and I will not act

27 first in anything except to love (him) only.” •And they ate and they drank, she and her sons, that night. And she died (at the age of) three jubilees and one week and one year on that night. And her two sons, Esau and Jacob, buried her in the cave of Machpelah near Sarah, their father’s mother.

f. The sentence within the brackets was identified by Charles as “either a corruption or, as I take it, a dittography,” p. 209 in his 1902 English translation.

Isaac's farewell advice and blessings for Jacob and Esau

- 1 36 And in the sixth year of this week, Isaac called his two sons, Esau and Jacob. And they came to him and he said to them, "My sons, I am going in the way of Ecc1 12:5
- 2 my fathers to the eternal home where my fathers are. •Bury me near Abraham, my father, in the cave of Machpelah in the field of Ephron the Hittite which Abraham acquired for a burial place there. In the tomb which I dug for myself
- 3 there, bury me. •And I am commanding this, my sons, that you might perform righteousness and uprightness upon the earth so that the LORD will bring upon you everything which the LORD said that he would do for Abraham and for his
- 4 seed. •And among yourselves, my sons, be loving of your brothers as a man loves himself, with each man seeking for his brother what is good for him, and acting
- 5 together on the earth, and loving each other as themselves. •And regarding the matter of idols, I command you and admonish you to scorn them and hate them and not to love them because they are full of error for those who worship and
- 6 bow down to them. •Remember, my sons, the LORD, the God of Abraham, your father, and (that) I subsequently worshiped and served him in righteousness and joy so that he might multiply you and increase your seed like the stars of heaven with regard to number and (so that) he will plant you on the earth as a righteous
- 7 planting which will not be uprooted for all the eternal generations. •And now I will make you swear by the great oath—because there is not an oath which is greater than it, by the glorious and honored and great and splendid and amazing and mighty name which created heaven and earth and everything together—that
- 8 you will fear him and worship him. •And (that) each one will love his brother with compassion and righteousness and no one will desire evil for his brother from now and forever all the days of your lives so that you will prosper in all
- 9 your deeds and not be destroyed. •And if either of you seeks evil against his brother, know that hereafter each one who seeks evil against his brother will fall into his hands and be uprooted from the land of the living and his seed will be
- 10 destroyed from under heaven. •And on the day of turmoil and execration and indignation and wrath, (then) with devouring burning fire just as he burned Sodom so too he will burn up his land and his city and everything which will be his. And he will be wiped out from the book of the discipline of mankind, and he will not be written (on high) in The Book of Life for (he is written) in the one which will be destroyed and pass on to eternal execration so that their judgment will always be renewed with eternal reproach and execration and wrath and torment
- 11 and indignation and plagues and sickness. •I have been speaking and exhorting you, my sons, according to the judgment which will come upon the man who desires to harm his brother."
- 12 And he divided<sup>a</sup> all his possessions which he had with the two of them on that day, and he gave a larger (portion) to the one whose birth was first: both the tower and everything which surrounded it and everything which Abraham acquired
- 13 at the Well of the Oath. •And he said, "I will surely increase this (portion) for the one whose birth was first." •And Esau said, "I have sold to Jacob and I have delivered my right of seniority to Jacob and so let it be given to him, and there
- 14 is not anything which I can say concerning it because it is his." •And Isaac said, "May a blessing rest upon you and upon your seed on this day, my sons, because you have given rest to me, and my heart has not been grieved concerning the
- 15 right of seniority lest you act perversely concerning it. •May the LORD Most High bless the man who does righteousness, him and his seed forever."
- 17 And he finished commanding them and blessing them. And they ate and drank together before him. And he rejoiced because they were in mutual agreement.

36 a. There is a Heb. fragment from Qumran (1Q 18) which contains the Heb. letters plg, "divide." In the official publication of DJD (Oxford, 1955), vol. 1, p. 84, Milik suggested that it might possibly be placed at Jub 36:12, but a remnant of the preceding word in the Heb. text matches nothing in this vs. of Jub so the identification is unlikely.

- 18 And they went out from him and they rested that day and they slept. •And Isaac slept on his bed on that day rejoicing. And he slept the eternal sleep. And he died at the age of one hundred and eighty years. He completed twenty-five weeks and five years. And his two sons, Esau and Jacob, buried him. •And Esau traveled to the land of Edom, to the mountain of Seir, and he dwelt there. Gen 35:29
- 20 And Jacob dwelt in Mount Hebron in the tower of the land of the sojourning of his father, Abraham. And<sup>b</sup> he worshiped the LORD with all of his heart and according to the commands which were revealed (and) according to the division of the days of his generations.

The death of Leah

- 21 And Leah, his wife, died in the fourth year of the second week of the forty-fifth jubilee. And he buried her in the cave of Machpelah near Rebecca, his mother, and north<sup>c</sup> of the tomb of Sarah, his father's mother. •And all of her children and his children went out to weep with him for Leah, his wife, and to comfort him concerning her because he was lamenting her. •For he loved her very much after Rachel, her sister, died since she was perfect and upright in all of her ways, and she honored Jacob. And in all of the days which she lived with him he never heard a harsh word from her mouth because she possessed gentleness, peace, uprightness, and honor. •And he remembered all of her deeds which she had done in her life, and he lamented greatly for her because he loved her with all his heart and all his soul.

Esau's sons reprove him for yielding to Jacob

- 1 37 And on the day that Isaac,<sup>a</sup> the father of Jacob and Esau, died, the sons of Esau heard that Isaac had given the right of seniority to Jacob, his younger son, and they were very angry. •And they argued with their father, saying,<sup>b</sup> "Why, since you are the elder and Jacob the younger, did your father give the right of seniority to Jacob and abandon you?" •And he<sup>c</sup> said to them, "Because I sold my right of firstborn to Jacob for a little dish of lentils. And on the day that my father sent me to hunt and snare [and bring to him]<sup>d</sup> so that he might eat and bless me, he went with guile and brought food and drink to my father and my father blessed him and placed me under his hand. •And now our father has made us swear, (both) me and him, that we will not seek after evil, either one against his brother, but that we will continue with an affection and a peace, each one with his brother, so that we will not corrupt our ways."<sup>e</sup> •And they said, "We will not listen to you in order to make peace with him because our might is stronger than his might and we are stronger than he. We will go against him and we will kill and destroy him and his sons. And if you do not go with us we will do harm to you. •And now listen to us, and we will send to Aram and to Philistia and to Moab and to Ammon and we will choose for ourselves chosen men who are ardent in battle and we will go against him and we will fight with him and we will uproot him from the land before he seizes power." •And their father said to them, "Do not go and make war with him lest you fall before him." •And they said to him,

b. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through 37:5a.

c. The word for "north" is literally "left." In ancient Israel directions were given while facing the east so that "left" is "north" and "right" is "south."

37 a. A portion of the Syr. text begins at this point and continues through 38:9.

b. The Lat. and Syr. versions of this quotation are worded differently. The Lat. reads "why is Jacob set before you inasmuch as he is younger, and your father has given him the larger portion and made you lower?" The Syr. reads "why, since you are older than Jacob your brother, did your father then give to him the right of first born and the primacy, since he is younger than you."

c. Both the Syr. and Lat. read "Esau."

d. The phrase in brackets is lacking in both Syr. and Lat.

e. The last phrase has a different Lat. text, which reads "so that we will not mutually engage in malice." The Syr. text lacks this phrase.

“This very (thing) is your (type of) act from your youth until this day, and you put your neck under his yoke. But we will not listen to these words.”

Esau's sons hire mercenaries for war against Jacob

9 And they sent to Aram and to Aduram, to their father's friend, and they hired from them one thousand fighting men, chosen warriors. And they came to them:
10 from Moab and from the Ammonites, those who were hired, one thousand chosen men, and from Philistia one thousand chosen fighting men, and from Edom and from the Hurrians one thousand chosen fighting men, and from the Kittim strong men, warriors.

Esau's approach to battle against Jacob

11 And they said to their father, “Go forth with them and lead them. And if not,
12 we will kill you.” •And he was filled with wrath and indignation when he saw that his sons were forcing him to go before (them) in order to lead them to Jacob,
13 his brother. •But afterward he remembered all of the evil which was hidden in his heart against Jacob, his brother, and he did not remember the oath which he swore to his father and his mother that he would not seek any evil against Jacob, his brother, all of his days.
14 And with all of this, Jacob did not know that they were coming against him for battle. But he was lamenting Leah, his wife, until they drew very near the 15 tower with four thousand men, warriors and chosen fighting men. •And the men of Hebron sent to him, saying, “Behold, your brother has come up against you in order to fight with you with four thousand men (who are) girded (with) swords and bear shields and military weapons”; because they loved Jacob more than Esau. And they spoke to him because Jacob was a more generous and merciful man than Esau.
16,17 But Jacob did not believe (them) until they drew very close to the tower. •And he closed the gates of the tower and he stood on the battlement and spoke with his brother, Esau, and he said, “Is the consolation (with) which you have come in order to console me concerning my wife who died good?<sup>f</sup> Is this the oath which you swore to your father and again to your mother before they died? You have sinned against the oath. And on the day when you swore to your father, you were 18 condemned.”<sup>g</sup> •And (at) that time, Esau answered and said to him:

“Mankind and beasts of the field have no righteous oath which they have surely sworn forever.

But daily they seek evil, one against the other, and each one (seeks) to kill his enemy and adversary.

19 And you will hate me and my sons forever.

And so there is no observing of fraternity with you.

[And Jacob said, “Do not act (thus), my brother. As for me, there is no evil in my heart against you. Do not plan evil against me. Know that there is a God and he sees what is hidden and requites to everyone according to his deeds. Calm down the heat of your anger and do not do anything rashly so that evil will come upon you.” Then Esau turned and said harshly:<sup>h</sup>

20 Hear these words of mine which I will speak to you.

If a boar changes his hide and his bristles (and) makes (them) soft as wool, f. This question has no grammatical marker in Charles's printed text, but MS C provides one, and the context is appropriate for a question. The Syr. text inserts the interrogative word mā, “what?” or “how?” at the beginning of this sentence.

g. The Syr. text lacks the last sentence of this vs.

h. The portion of text which is set between brackets is lacking in Eth. It is found only in Syr. The sentiments expressed in the Syr. text are appropriate to the present context.

- and if he brings forth horns upon his head like the horns of a stag or sheep;<sup>i</sup>
 then I will observe fraternity with you.
 [And if sucklings separate themselves from their mother, you would not be a brother to me.]<sup>j</sup>
- 21 And if the wolves make peace with lambs so as not to eat them or assault them,<sup>k</sup> and if their hearts are (set) upon them to do good, then peace will be in my heart for you.
- 22 And if the lion becomes a friend of the ox, and if he is bound with him in a single yoke,
 and he plows with him and makes peace with him,
 then I will make peace with you.
- 23 And if the raven becomes white like the Raza<sup>l</sup> bird, then know that I will love you and I will make peace with you.
 You will be uprooted,
 and your sons will be uprooted,
 but you will have no peace.”
- 24 And when Jacob saw that he had planned evil against him from his heart and from his whole being so that he might kill him, and (that) he had come leaping like a wandering boar who had come upon a spear which was piercing him and killing him, and he would not withdraw from it, then he spoke to his own (followers) and to his servants so that they might attack him and all his friends.

The defeat of Esau and his forces

- 1 38 And afterward Judah spoke to Jacob, his father, and he said to him, “O father, stretch your bow and shoot your arrows and strike down the enemy and kill the adversary. And may you have might because we will not kill your brother (inasmuch as) he is near to you and with us he is like you with respect to honor.”<sup>a</sup>
- 2 And then when Jacob drew his bow and shot an arrow and struck Esau, his TJud 9 3 brother, on his right breast,<sup>b</sup> he killed him. •And again, he shot an arrow and struck Adoran, the Aramean, in his left breast and drove him back and killed him.
- 4 And afterward, the sons of Jacob and their servants went forth to divide 5 themselves on the four (sides) of the tower. •And Judah went out in front and Naphtali and Gad and fifty servants with him on the south side of the tower. And

i. The phrase “or sheep” is lacking in the Syr. The text reads more easily without it, but that could also explain why someone would drop it.

j. There is obviously something wrong with the phrase between brackets. The word which is translated “sucklings” is lit. “breasts.” The root from which the word is derived means “to suck milk.” Charles emended his Eth. text to read “since the males have been separated from . . .” but he returned to follow a MS reading in his English translation. The Syr. text lacks this sentence. In this case, however, the Syr. omission does not provide clear evidence of the original text because the Syr. text has apparently shortened its reading of all of vss. 20–23 quite drastically.

k. Instead of “to eat them or assault them,” the Syr. reads “they will not harm them.”

l. The Syr. has “pelican,” which might be found in Palestine. Its white color is also appropriate for the present context. The Raza bird has been identified as ciconia ephippiorhynca, a type of stork. See Tisserant, RB 30 (1921) p. 223, for a discussion of the word.

38 a. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through 38:16, lacking only the last two words in that vs.

Charles had emended his Eth. text and translation to agree with the Lat. text and reads the end of vs. 1 as “let us give him (this) honor.” We have followed the MS reading instead.

Charles’s emendation is attractive, but the Syr. text also differs from the Eth. and it would appear that this vs. suffered in transmission. Nevertheless, the Syr. text does give some support for reading with the Eth. MSS. The Syr. text reads as follows: “Judah said to Jacob, his father, ‘We are not able to unsheath the sword before your brother because he is like you in our sight. Bend your bow and destroy your enemy and kill your adversary because he is your brother, and leave to us the rest of the warriors.’”

b. The phrase “his right breast” is lacking in Eth., but it is restored from the Lat. text. The Lat. version is supported by a parallel account of the war between Jacob and Esau which is reported in Midrash Wayyissau. Charles printed the relevant portion of the text as Appendix II in his edition of the Eth. text. There is a brief parallel to this battle and the death of Esau in TJud 9.

they killed everyone they found before them. And not a single one escaped from 6 them. •And Levi and Dan and Asher went forth on the east side of the tower and fifty (men were) with them. And they killed the warriors of Moab and Ammon.
 7 And Reuben and Issachar and Zebulun (went) forth on the north side of the tower and fifty (men were) with them. And they killed the fighting men of the Philistines.
 8 And Simeon and Benjamin and Enoch,<sup>c</sup> the son of Reuben, went forth on the west side of the tower, and fifty (men were) with them. And they killed four hundred strong men, warriors, of the Edomites and Hurrians. And six hundred 9 fled. And the four sons of Esau fled with them and they left their slain father just as he had fallen on the hill which is in Aduram. •And the sons of Jacob pursued them as far as the mountain of Seir. But Jacob buried his brother in the hill which is in Aduram and he returned to his house.
 10 And Jacob's sons besieged<sup>d</sup> the children of Esau on the mountain of Seir. And 11 they bowed down their necks to become servants of the children of Jacob. •And they sent to their father (to ask) whether they should make peace with them or 12 whether they should kill them. •And Jacob sent notice to his sons to make peace.
 And they made peace with them and placed a yoke of servitude upon them so 13 that they might pay tribute to Jacob and his sons always. •And they continued 14 paying tribute to Jacob until the day that he went down to Egypt. •And the children of Edom have not ceased from the yoke of servitude which the twelve sons of Jacob ordered upon them until today.

TJud 9

The kings of Edom

Gen 36:31-39

15 And these are the kings who ruled in Edom before a king ruled the children of 16 Israel until today in the land of Edom. •And Balaq, son of Be'or, ruled in Edom.
 17 And the name of his city was Danaba. •And Balaq died, and Yobab, son of Zara, 18 who was from Boser, ruled instead of him. •And Yobab died. And Asam, who 19 was from the land<sup>e</sup> of Teman, ruled instead of him. •And Asam died. And 'Adath, son of Barad, who killed Median in the field of Moab, ruled instead of him. And 20 the name of his city was 'Avith. •And 'Adath died. And Salman, who was from 21 'Amaseqa, ruled instead of him. •And Salman died. And Saul, who was from 22 Ra'aboth, (by the) river, ruled instead of him. •And Saul died. And Ba'elunan, 23 son of 'Achbor, ruled instead of him. •And Ba'elunan, son of 'Achbor, died. And 'Adath ruled instead of him. And the name of his wife was Maitabith, daughter 24 of Matarat, daughter of Metabedza'ab. •These are the kings who ruled in the land of Edom.

Joseph in the house of Potiphar

Gen 37:1f.;
39:1-40:23

1 39 And Jacob dwelt in the land of his father's sojourning, (in) the land of Canaan.
 2 These are the generations of Jacob. And Joseph was seventeen years old (when) they brought him down into Egypt, and Potiphar, Pharaoh's eunuch, the chief of 3 the guard, bought him. •And he set Joseph over all of his house and the blessing of the LORD was upon the house of the Egyptian because of Joseph and the LORD 4 caused everything which he did to prosper. •And the Egyptian left everything in the hands of<sup>a</sup> Joseph because he saw that the LORD was with him and the LORD caused everything which he did to prosper.
 5 And Joseph was good-looking and very handsome. And the wife of his master lifted up her eyes and saw Joseph and desired him. And she begged him to lie

c. As if to explain why Enoch had to fight, the Midrash Wayyissau notes that Joseph had already been sold at this time.

d. Charles emended his Eth. text to read "encircled" in agreement with the Lat., but then returned to the MS reading in his English translation.

e. The translation "land" is given in agreement with Gen 36:34. The Eth. word which is being translated more frequently means "mountain" or "mountain region."

39 a. The phrase "in the hands of" was suggested by Charles as an emendation. The Eth. MSS read "before."

6 with her. •And he did not surrender himself but he remembered the LORD and the words which Jacob, his father, used to read, which were from the words of Abraham, that there is no man who (may) fornicate with a woman who has a husband (and) that there is a judgment of death which is decreed for him in heaven before the LORD Most High. And the sin is written (on high) concerning him in 7 the eternal books always before the LORD. •And Joseph remembered these words
 8 and he did not want to lie with her. •And she begged him (for) one year. And he turned away and refused to listen to her.
 9 And<sup>b</sup> she embraced him and seized him in the house so that she might force him to lie with her. And she shut the door of the house and seized him. And he left his garment in her hand and he broke the door and fled outside (away) from 10 her presence. •And that woman saw that he would not lie with her and she falsely accused him before his master, saying, "Your Hebrew servant, whom you love, desired to seduce me so that he might lie with me. And it came to pass when I raised my voice that he fled and he left his garment in my hand when I seized him. And he broke the door."

Joseph in prison

11 And the Egyptian saw Joseph's garments and the broken door and he heard his wife's story and he put Joseph in prison, in the place where the prisoners whom 12 the king imprisoned stayed. •And he was there in the prison and the LORD gave Joseph favor and mercy before the chief guard of the prison because he saw that the LORD was with him and the LORD caused everything which he did to prosper.
 13 And he left everything in his hands,<sup>c</sup> and the chief guard of the prison knew nothing which was with him •because Joseph did everything, and the LORD
 14 perfected (it). •And he dwelt there two years.

And in those days, Pharaoh, the king of Egypt, was angry with two of his eunuchs, with the chief of the butlers and with the chief of the bakers. And he put them in prison, in the house of the chief of the guard, in the prison where 15 Joseph was held. •And the chief of the guard of the prison ordered Joseph to 16 serve them. And he served before them. •And both of them had a dream, the 17 chief of the butlers and the chief of the bakers, and they told it to Joseph. •And just as he interpreted to them so it happened to them. And Pharaoh returned the chief of the butlers to his task, but he killed the baker<sup>d</sup> just as Joseph interpreted 18 for them. •But the chief of the butlers forgot Joseph in the prison when he made known to him what would happen to him, and he did not remember to tell the Pharaoh what Joseph told him because he forgot.

Joseph as an interpreter of Pharaoh's dreams

Gen 41:1-38

1 40 And in those days, Pharaoh dreamed two dreams in a single night concerning the matter of the famine which would come upon all of the land. And he awoke from his sleep and called all of the interpreters of dreams and magicians who were in Egypt. And he told them of both of his dreams but they were unable to
 2 explain (them). •Then the chief of the butlers remembered Joseph and he told the king about him. And he brought him out of the prison and told both of the dreams
 3 in his presence. •And he said in the presence of the Pharaoh that both of his dreams were one. And he said to him, "Seven years will come. Abundance will be in all the land of Egypt, but afterward seven years of famine, which (is) unlike 4 any (previous) famine, (will be) in all the land. •And now let Pharaoh appoint overseers<sup>a</sup> in all the land and let them store up food for a city within the city

b. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through 40:8a.

c. The phrase "in his hands" was emended to agree with the Lat. text and Gen 39:22. The Eth. MSS read "before him."

d. The Lat. text reads "chief baker."

40 a. The word "overseers" is supplied from Lat. The Eth. reading makes no sense at this point.

during the days of the plentiful years. And there will be food for the seven years of famine. And the land will not perish in the presence of the famine because it will be very severe." •And the LORD gave Joseph favor and mercy in the sight of the Pharaoh. And the Pharaoh said to his servants, "We will not find a man wise and knowledgeable as this man because the spirit of the LORD is with him."

Joseph becomes a ruler in Egypt

Gen 41:39-49

6 And he set him second in all his kingdom and he made him rule in all of Egypt
7 and he made him ride upon the second chariot of the Pharaoh. •And he invested him with a garment of byssus and hung a golden chain on his neck and they proclaimed before him "El, El wa Abirer" and he gave him the signet ring on his hand and he made him rule over all his house and he made him great and he said to him, "I will not be greater than you except (regarding) the throne alone."
8 And Joseph ruled in all the land of Egypt and all of the judges and all of the servants of the Pharaoh and all of those who did the king's work loved him because he walked uprightly and he had no pompousness or arrogance or partiality, and there was no bribery because he ruled all the people of the land uprightly.
9 And the land of Egypt was at peace before the Pharaoh on account of Joseph because the LORD was with him and gave him favor and mercy for all his family before all who knew him and those who heard witness of him. And the kingdom of the Pharaoh was upright. And there was no Satan and there was no evil. •And the king called Joseph "Sephantiphans." And he gave the daughter of Potiphar, the daughter of the priest of Heliopolis, the chief of the guard, to Joseph (as) a wife. •And on the day that Joseph stood with the Pharaoh he was thirty years old, [when he stood with the Pharaoh.]<sup>b</sup>
12 And in that year Isaac died. And it came (about) just as Joseph related concerning the interpretation of the two dreams, and there were seven abundant years in all of the land of Egypt. And the land of Egypt was very fruitful, one measure (yielding) eighteen hundred measures. •And Joseph gathered the food of a city into the city until it was full of grain, until they were unable to count or measure it because of its magnitude.

The story of Judah and Tamar

Gen 38:1-30

1 41 And in the forty-fifth jubilee, in the second week, in the second year, Judah took a wife for Er, his firstborn, from the daughters of Aram, and her name was Tamar. •But he hated (her) and would not lie with her because his mother was from the daughters of Canaan. And he wanted to take a wife from his mother's people, but Judah, his father, did not permit him. •And Er, the firstborn of Judah, was evil and the LORD killed him. •And<sup>a</sup> Judah said to 'Onan, his brother, "Go to your brother's wife and act as levirate and raise up seed for your brother."
5 And 'Onan knew that the seed would not be his (but) only his brother's and he entered the house of his brother's wife and poured out (his) seed on the ground and he was evil in the sight of the LORD and he killed him. •And Judah said to Tamar,<sup>b</sup> his daughter-in-law, "Remain at the house of your father as a widow until Selah, my son, grows up. And I will give you to him (as) a wife." •And he grew up, but Bedsuel, Judah's wife, did not permit Selah, her son, to marry. And Bedsuel, Judah's wife, died in the fifth year of that week.
8 And in the sixth year, Judah went up in order to shear his sheep at Timnah. And they told Tamar, "Behold, your father-in-law is going up to shear his sheep at Timnah." •And she put off the clothes of her widowhood. And she put on a veil. And she made herself beautiful and sat by the gates which are toward the

Gen 38:6f.
TJud 12

b. The words in brackets appear to be an obvious gloss caused by dittography.

point and continues through 41:24.

b. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through the first word of 41:19.

41 a. A portion of the Syr. text begins at this

- 10 Timnah road. •And when Judah walked along he found her and presumed that she was a prostitute. And he said to her, "Let me enter into you." And she said to him, "Come on." And he entered. •And she said to him, "Give me my fee." And he said to her, "I have nothing in my hand except my signet ring of my finger and my necklace and my staff which is in my hand." •And she said to him, "Give them to me until you send my fee to me." And he said to her, "I will send to you a young goat." And he gave them to her, and he was with her,<sup>c</sup> and she became pregnant by him.
- 13,14 And Judah went to his sheep and she went to her father's house. •And Judah sent a young goat in the hand of his shepherd, an Adulamite, but he did not find her. And he asked the men of the district, saying, "Where is the prostitute who was here?" And they said to him, "There is no prostitute here with us." •And he returned and told him that he did not find (her).<sup>d</sup> And he said, "I inquired of the men of the district. And they said to me, 'There is no prostitute here.' " And he said, "Let her take (it) lest we become an object of scorn." •And when she completed three months it was obvious that she was pregnant. And they told Judah, saying, "Behold, Tamar, your daughter-in-law is pregnant through prostitution." •And Judah went to her father's house and said to her father and her brothers, "Bring her out and let them burn her because she has caused a defilement in Israel."
- 18 And it came to pass when they brought her out to burn her that she sent to her father-in-law the signet ring and the necklace and the staff. And she said, 19 "Recognize whose these are because I am pregnant by him." •And Judah recognized (them) and said, "Tamar was more righteous than I. And therefore let them not burn her." •And on account of that she was not given to Selah. And 21 therefore he did not approach her again. •And after this she bore two children, 22 Perez and Zerah, in the seventh year of this second week. •And after this the seven years of full harvest which Joseph told Pharaoh (about) were completed. Gen 41:53

Judah's repentance

- 23 And Judah knew that the deed which he did was evil because he lay with his daughter-in-law. And he condemned himself in his own sight. And he knew that he had sinned and gone astray because he uncovered the robe of his son. And he began to mourn and make supplication before the LORD on account of his sin. TJud 14
- 24 And we told him in a dream that it was forgiven him because he made great supplication and because he mourned and did not do it again.

Judah's forgiveness contrasted with subsequent strict enforcement of the law

- 25 And there was forgiveness for him because he turned from his sin and from his ignorance because the sin was great before our God. And anyone who does anything like this, who lies with his mother-in-law, they shall burn with fire so that he might burn in it because defilement and impurity have come upon them. In the fire they shall burn them. TJud 19
- 26 And you command the children of Israel and there will be no defilement in their midst because everyone who lies with his daughter-in-law or with his mother-in-law causes defilement. In the fire they shall burn the man who has lain with her and also the woman. And the wrath and punishment he will cause to cease from Israel. Lev 20:14
Lev 18:15
Lev 20:12

c. Both Syr. and Lat. MSS read "he was with her." Charles emended Lat. from fuit to coiit and then restored an Eth. phrase meaning "he entered into her" to agree with his emended Lat. text. Charles, of course, did not know the Syr. text, and without its witness his reconstruction was reasonable.

d. This follows the reading of the MSS. Charles emended the Eth. text to read "made known to him. And he said, 'I did not find her. And I inquired.'" The altered word order agrees with the word order in the Lat. text.

27 And we told Judah that his two sons had not lain with her and therefore his 28 seed stood for a second generation and it would not be uprooted •because in the integrity of his eyes he went and sought judgment because by the judgment of Abraham, which he commanded his sons, Judah wanted to burn her with fire.

The arrival of the years of famine

Gen 41:53-56

1 42 In the first year of the third week of the forty-fifth jubilee the famine began to come upon the land and rain refused to be given to the land because there was
 2 nothing which would come down. •And the earth suffered famine but in<sup>a</sup> the land of Egypt there was food because Joseph gathered the grain of the land during the 3 seven years of full harvest and he guarded it. •And Egypt came to Joseph so that he might give them food. And he opened up the storehouses where the wheat of the first year was and he sold it to the people of the land for gold.

The sons of Jacob travel to Egypt for grain

Gen 42:1-28

4 [And the famine was very severe in the land of Canaan.]<sup>b</sup> And Jacob heard that there was food in Egypt and he sent ten of his sons to get food for him in Egypt, but he did not send Benjamin. [And the ten sons of Jacob]<sup>b</sup> arrived [in Egypt]<sup>b</sup>
 5 with those who were traveling (there). •And Joseph knew them, but they did not know him. And he spoke with them and interrogated them<sup>c</sup> and said to them, “Are you men not spies? And you have come to examine the paths of the land.”
 6 And he locked them up. •But afterward he released them again, and he made only Simeon stay.<sup>d</sup> And he sent his nine brothers away. •And he filled their grain sacks with grain and he also put their gold in their grain sacks, but they did not know
 8 (it). •And he commanded them that they should bring their little brother because they told him that their father was alive and also their little brother.

The sons of Jacob recount their adventures in Egypt

9 And they went up from the land of Egypt. And they arrived in the land of Canaan, and told their father everything just as they experienced (it) and how the overseer of the district had spoken harshly with them and held Simeon until they
 10 would bring Benjamin. •And Jacob said, “You have therefore bereaved me. Joseph is not (here) and Simeon is not (here) either and you will take Benjamin. Your evil has therefore come upon me.” •And he said, “My son will not go down with you—perhaps he might become ill—because their mother bore two, and one has perished, and you will take this one from me. If perhaps he became feverish on the way then you would send down my old age to death in grief.”
 12 For he saw that the money of each one had been returned in his sack, and he feared to send him on account of that.

Gen 42:29-38

The famine causes the sons of Jacob to return to Egypt

Gen 43:1-44:2

13 But the famine increased and became severe in the land of Canaan and in all the earth except in the land of Egypt. For many of the Egyptians stored up their grain for food after they saw that Joseph was gathering grain and placing it in storehouses and guarding it for the year of famine. •And the men of Egypt ate it in the first year of their famine. •And when Israel saw that the famine was very severe in the land and there was no escaping, he said to his sons, “Go, return, 42 a. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through 42:14a.

b. The portions of text found between brackets was restored from the Lat. text.

c. The Lat. text has “harshly” instead of “and interrogated them.” The Lat. agrees with Gen 43:7. Cf. vs. 9 below.

d. The Lat. text reads “and sending he summoned them. And taking Simeon alone, he bound him.”

16 and get food for us lest we die.” •And they said, “We shall not go. If our little 17 brother does not come with us, we shall not go.” •And Israel saw (that) if he did 18 not send him with them they would all be destroyed due to the famine. •And Reuben said, “Place him in my hands, and if I do not return him to you, kill both of my sons for his life.” And he said to him, “He will not go with you.” 19 And Judah drew near and said, “Send him with me. And if I do not return him to you, I will be guilty before you all the days of my life.” 20 And he sent him with them in the second year of that week on the first of the month and they arrived at the district of Egypt with all of those who were traveling (there). And their presents (were) in their hands: stacte, almonds, terebinth nuts, 21 and pure honey. •And they arrived and stood before Joseph. And he saw Benjamin, his brother, and he knew him. And he said to them, “Is this your little brother?”
 And they said to him, “He is.” And he said, “May the LORD be merciful to you, 22 my son.” •And he sent him into his house. And he brought Simeon to them, and made a banquet for them. And they presented him with his gift, which they 23 brought in their hands. •And they ate before him. And he gave a portion to all of them. And he increased Benjamin’s portion seven times more than any of their 24 portions. •And they ate and drank, and got up and stayed with their asses.
 25 And Joseph thought of an idea by means of which he might learn their thoughts, whether they had thoughts of peace for one another. And he said to the man who was over his house, “Fill all of their bags with food for them. And also return their money to them in the midst of their containers. And place my cup from which I drink, the silver cup, in the bag of the youngest one and send them off.”

Joseph’s stratagem to test his brothers

Gen 44:2-34

1 43 And he did as Joseph told him. And he filled all their bags for them (with) food. And he also put their money in their bags. And the cup he put in Benjamin’s 2 bag. •And (at) daybreak in the morning, they went. And it came to pass when they departed from there, that Joseph said to the man of his house, “Pursue them.
 Run and reproach them,<sup>a</sup> saying, ‘You have repaid me evil in place of good. You have robbed me of the silver cup from which my lord drinks.’ And return to me their little brother. And hurry, bring (him) before I go to my judgment seat.”
 3.4 And he ran after them and he spoke to them according to these words. •And they said to him, “May God forbid that your servants would do this thing or steal any vessel from your lord’s house. But rather our money which we found at first 5 in our bags your servants have brought back from the land of Canaan. •Therefore, why would we steal any vessel? Behold, search both us and our animals and wherever you find the cup, in the bag of any one of our men, let him be killed, 6 and both we and our asses will become slaves to your lord.” •And he said to them, “It will not be so, (but) with the man with whom I find it, he alone, I will take as a servant, but you will return in peace to your house.”
 7 And when he searched in their baggage, he started from the eldest and ended 8 with the youngest. And it was found in the bag of Benjamin. •And they tore their clothes and loaded up their donkeys and returned to the city. And they reached 9 Joseph’s house, and they all bowed to him with their face on the ground. •And Joseph said to them, “You have done evil.” And they said, “What can we say?
 (With) what can we defend ourselves? Our lord has found the guilt of his servants.
 10 Behold, we (are) servants of our lord and also our donkeys.” •And Joseph said to them, “I fear the LORD. You, go to your houses, but let your brother alone be my servant because you have done evil. Did you not know that a man would be 11 pleased with<sup>b</sup> his cup as I am with this cup? And you stole it from me.” •And Judah said, “I pray,<sup>c</sup> O lord, let me, your servant, speak a word in my lord’s 43 a. The reading is based on the MSS. Charles emended his Eth. text to read “seize them” in agreement with Gen 44:4.

b. The phrase “be pleased with” is found in the MSS. Charles emended his text to read “divine” in agreement with Gen 44:15, but returned to the MS reading in his translation.

c. The Eth. text reads “upon me,” which Charles has identified as a simple mistranslation of Heb. bt, which is found in Gen 44:18.

ear. His mother bore two brothers to our father, your servant. One went forth and 12 was lost, and was not found. •And he alone was left from his mother, and your servant, our father, loves him. And his life is bound with the life of this (one).
 And it will come to pass that if we go to your servant, our father, and if the lad is not with us, he will die. And we will bring down our father to death with 13 sorrow. •And let me, your servant, remain alone instead of the child as a servant to my lord, and let the lad go with his brothers because I was put as a pledge for him at the hand of your servant, our father. And if I should not return him your servant will always be guilty to our father.”

Joseph reveals himself to his brothers

Gen 45:1-13

14 And Joseph saw that the heart of all of them was in accord one with another for good. And he was unable to control his emotion and he told them that he was 15 Joseph. •And he conversed with them in the Hebrew language and embraced their 16 necks and wept. But they did not recognize him. And they began to weep. •And he said to them, “Do not weep for me, but hasten and bring my father to me.
 And I shall see him before I die even as the eyes of my brother Benjamin see.<sup>d</sup>
 17 For behold this is the second year of famine, and there will still be five years.
 18 And there will be no harvest or fruit of the tree or plowing. •Hasten, come down, you and your households, lest you be destroyed in the famine. And you shall not grieve for your possessions. For the LORD has sent me first to prepare before you 19 so that many people might live. •And tell my father that I am still alive and behold, you were seeing that the LORD ordained me as a father to the Pharaoh 20 and so that I might rule in his house and over all the land of Egypt. •And tell my father about all my honor and all the wealth and honor which the LORD has given to me.”

The brothers return to Canaan to get their father

Gen 45:17-28

21 And by the word of the mouth of the Pharaoh he gave them chariots and provisions for the way. And he gave them all clothing of many colors and money.
 22 And he also sent to their father clothing and money and ten asses which were 23 carrying wheat. And he sent them off. •And they went up and they told their father that Joseph was alive and that he was distributing grain to all of the people 24 of the land. And he ruled over all the land of Egypt. •And their father did not believe because there was a confusion in his mind. And after this he saw the chariots which Joseph sent and the life of his soul was renewed. And he said, “It is enough for me if Joseph is alive. I will go down and I will see him before I die.”

Jacob observes a feast of firstfruits at Beer-sheba

Gen 46:1

1 44 And Israel rose up from Haran,<sup>a</sup> from his house on the first of the third month and he went by the way of the Well of the Oath. And he offered up a sacrifice to 2 the God of his father, Isaac, on the seventh day of that month. •And Jacob recalled the dream which he dreamed in Bethel, and he was afraid to go down into Egypt.
 3 And as he was planning to send to Joseph so that he might come to him, and he would not go down, he remained there seven days (to learn) if he would see a 4 vision (concerning) whether he should remain or go down. •And he observed the feast of the harvest of the firstfruits from old wheat for there was not in the whole land of Canaan a handful of any seed in the land because there was a famine for all the wild animals and the cattle and the birds and also man.

d. This sentence is translated in agreement with the Eth. MS. Charles emended the sentence to read “and you see that it is my mouth that speaks and the eyes of my brother Benjamin see.” The emendation was based on Gen 45:12.

44 a. According to the biblical account, the location of Jacob is near Hebron. Cf. Gen 37:14. Haran is apparently a corruption.

Jacob's theophany at Beer-sheba

Gen 46:2-4

- 5 And on the sixteenth day the LORD appeared to him and he said to him, "Jacob, Jacob." And he said to him, "Here I am." And he again said to him, "I am the God of your fathers, the God of Abraham and Isaac. Do not fear to go down to Egypt because I will make you into a great people there. •I shall go down with you and I shall bring you (back) and you will be buried in this land. And Joseph will place his hand upon your eyes. Do not fear. Go down into Egypt."

The preparation for the journey to Egypt

Gen 46:5-7,28-34

- 7 And his children and grandchildren rose up and they loaded their father and their possessions on the chariots. •And Israel rose up from the Well of the Oath on the sixteenth day of this third month and he went to the land of Egypt. •And Israel sent Judah before him to Joseph, his son, so that he might examine the land of Goshen, for Joseph told his brothers that they should come to dwell there so they might be his neighbor. •And it was the best in the land of Egypt. And it was near him for all (of them) and for the cattle.

A list of the children of Jacob

Gen 46:8-27

- 11 And these are the names of the sons of Jacob who went into Egypt with their father, Jacob. •Reuben was the firstborn of Israel. And these (are) the names of his sons: Enoch, and Pallu, and Hezron, and Carmi—five.
- 13 Simeon and his sons; and these (are) the names of his sons: Jemuel, and Jamin, and Ohad, and Jachin, and Zohar, and Shaul, the son of a Zephathite woman<sup>b</sup>—seven.
- 14 Levi and his sons; and these (are) the names of his sons: Gershon, and Kohath, and Merari—four.
- 15 Judah and his sons; and these are the names of his sons: Shela, and Perez, and Zerah—four.
- 16 Issachar and his sons; and these are the names of his sons: Tola, and Phua, and Jasub, and Shimron—five.
- 17 Zebulun and his sons; and these are the names of his sons: Sered, and Elon, and Jahleel—four. •And these are the sons of Jacob and their sons whom Leah bore to Jacob in Mesopotamia, six, plus one girl, Dinah, their sister. And all of the persons who (were) sons of Leah and their sons, who entered Egypt with Jacob, their father, were twenty-nine. And Jacob, their father, was with them. And they totaled thirty.
- 19 And the sons of Zilpah, the attendant of Leah, the wife of Jacob, which she bore to Jacob, were Gad and Asher. •And these are the names of their sons who entered into Egypt with him.
- The sons of Gad (are) Ziphion, and Gaggi, and Shuni, and Ezbon, and Eri,<sup>c</sup> and Areli, and Arodi—eight.
- 21 And the sons of Asher (are) Imnah, and Ishvah, [and Ishvi],<sup>c</sup> and Beriah, and Serah, their one sister—six. •And all of the persons (were) fourteen. And the total of Leah was forty-four.
- 23 And the sons of Rachel, who (was) the wife of Jacob, (were) Joseph and Benjamin.
- 24 And (sons) were born to Joseph in Egypt before his father entered Egypt whom Asenath, the daughter of Potiphar, the priest of Heliopolis, bore to him, (namely) Manasseh and Ephraim—three.
- 25 And the sons of Benjamin (are) Bela, and Becher, and Ashbel, and Gera, and

b. A woman from the Canaanite city of Zephath. Cf. Judg 1:17. The reading is found in MS B.

c. The names in brackets were restored from

Gen. They are lacking in the Eth. text. The spelling of names has also been standardized to agree with Gen.

- 26 Naaman, and Ehi, and Rosh, and Muppim, and Huppim, and Ard—eleven. •And all of the persons of Rachel were fourteen.
- 27 And the sons of Bilhah, the attendant of Rachel, the wife of Jacob, which she bore to Jacob, (are) Dan and Naphthali, and these are the names of their sons who entered Egypt with them.
- 28 And the sons of Dan (are) Hushim, and Samon, and Asudi, and 'Ijaka, and Solomon—six. •And they died during the year they entered Egypt and there was left to Dan only Hushim.
- 30 And these are the names of the sons of Naphthali: Jaziel, and Guni, and Jezer, <sup>1Chr 7:13</sup> and Shallum, and 'Iv. •And 'Iv, who was born after the years of the famine, died in Egypt. •And all of the persons of Rachel were twenty-six.
- 33 And all of the persons of Jacob who entered Egypt were seventy persons. Therefore all these sons and grandsons of his were seventy, but five died in Egypt before Joseph, and they had no children. •And two sons of Judah, Er and Onan, died in the land of Canaan. And they had no children. And the children of Israel buried those who perished. And they were set among the seventy nations.

The family of Jacob is settled in Goshen

Gen 46:29-47:12

- 1 45 And Israel entered into the land of Egypt into the land of Goshen on the first of the fourth month in the second year of the third week of the forty-fifth jubilee.
- 2 And Joseph came to greet his father, Jacob, in the land of Goshen. And he embraced the neck of his father and wept. •And Israel said to Joseph, "Let me die now after I have seen you. And now let the LORD, the God of Israel, be blessed, the God of Abraham and the God of Isaac, who did not withhold his mercy and his kindness from his servant Jacob. •It is enough for me that I have seen your face while I was alive, for the vision which I saw in Bethel was certainly true. May the LORD my God be blessed forever and ever and blessed (be) his name."
- 5 And Joseph and his brothers ate bread before their father, and they drank wine. And Jacob rejoiced very greatly because he saw Joseph eating and drinking with his brothers before him. And he blessed the Creator of all who kept him and kept for him his twelve sons. •And Joseph gave to his father and his brothers (as) a gift that they might dwell in the land of Goshen and Ramses and all of the districts (belonging) to them which he ruled over before the Pharaoh. And Israel and his sons dwelt in the land of Goshen, the best of the land of Egypt. And Israel was one hundred and thirty years old when he entered Egypt. •And Joseph provided bread for his father and his brothers and their possessions, as much as was sufficient for them for the seven years of famine.

Joseph's skill as an administrator

Gen 47:13-26

- 8 And<sup>a</sup> the land of Egypt suffered in view of the famine. And Joseph gathered all of the land of Egypt for the Pharaoh by means of the food. And men and their cattle and everything he acquired for Pharaoh. •And the years of the famine were completed. And Joseph gave seed and food to the people who were in the land so that they might sow the land<sup>b</sup> in the eighth year because the river was full in all the land of Egypt. •For during the seven years of famine it was not<sup>c</sup> full. And it did not irrigate except a few places by the shore of the river. But now it was full and the Egyptians sowed the land and it bore<sup>d</sup> much wheat<sup>e</sup> in that year.
- 11,12 And that was the first year of the fourth week of the forty-fifth jubilee. •And

45 a. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through 46:1a.

b. "The land" is restored from the Lat. text.

c. The "not" is restored from the Lat. text.

d. The Lat. text reads "they harvested" instead of "it bore." Charles emended his text to follow the Lat.

e. The Lat. text reads "good fruit" for "much wheat."

Joseph took for the king one fifth of everything which bore fruit,<sup>f</sup> and he left four parts for them for food and seed. And Joseph set it up as an ordinance for the land of Egypt until this day.

The death of Jacob

Gen 47:28-31;
49:1-30:41

13 And Israel lived in the land of Egypt seventeen years, and all of the days which he lived were three jubilees, one hundred and forty-seven years. And he died in 14 the fourth year of the fifth week of the forty-fifth jubilee. •And Israel blessed his sons before he died. And he told them everything which was going to happen to them in the land of Egypt and in the latter days; he made them know how it would come upon them. And he blessed them and he gave to Joseph a double portion upon the land. •And he slept with his fathers. And he was buried in the cave of 15 Machpelah in the land of Canaan near Abraham, his father, in the tomb which he excavated for himself in the cave of Machpelah in the land of Hebron. And he gave all of his books and his fathers' books to Levi, his son, so that he might preserve them and renew them for his sons until this day.

The death of Joseph and his generation

Gen 50:15-26

1 46 And it came to pass after Jacob died that the children of Israel increased in the land of Egypt. And they became a numerous people, and they were all in accord in their hearts so that each one loved his brother and each man helped his brother, and they increased exceedingly and increased very much for ten weeks<sup>a</sup>
2 of years, all the days of the life of Joseph.<sup>b</sup> •And there was no Satan or anything evil all the days of the life of Joseph which he lived after his father, Jacob, because all of the Egyptians were honoring the children of Israel all the days of
3 the life of Joseph. •And Joseph died at one hundred and ten years of age. And seventeen years he dwelt in the land of Canaan and ten years he remained as a slave and three years in the prison and eighty years under the king ruling all of 4 the land of Egypt. •And he died and all of his brothers and all of that generation.

Ex 1:7

Ex 1:6

The removal of Jacob's bones and a comment on Joseph's burial

5 And he commanded the children of Israel before he died to carry his bones at the time when they would go out of the land of Egypt. •And he made them swear an oath concerning his bones because he knew that Egypt would not again bring them forth and bury them in the land of Canaan because when Makamaron, the king of Canaan, was dwelling in the land of Asshur, he fought in the valley with the king of Egypt. And he killed him there. And he pursued after the Egyptians
7 as far as the gates of Ermon. •And he was unable to enter because another new king ruled Egypt and he was stronger than he. And he returned to the land of Canaan and the gates of Egypt were shut up and there was none who could leave
8 or enter Egypt. •And Joseph died in this forty-sixth jubilee in the sixth week in the second year. And they buried him in the land of Egypt. And all of his brothers died after him.

TSim 8
TBenj 12

f. The reading "everything which bore fruit" is a correction based on the Lat. text. The Eth. MSS read "grain which they sowed," which is not strictly logical.

46 a. A fragment of Heb. text from Qumran (2Q 20) begins at this point and continues through vs. 3a. It confirms the Eth. text.

b. The spelling of this name was misprinted in the Eth. text edited by Charles. That was pointed out by W. Baars and R. Zuurmond in their article "The Project for a New Edition of the Ethiopic Book of Jubilees." JSS 9 (1964) 71. In that article they recollated ch. 46 of Charles's Eth. text against MS B, calling attention to a number of interesting variations. None of the variations which they noted, however, require any change in the translation.

The removal of the bones of the children of Jacob

- 9 And the king of Egypt went forth to fight with the king of Canaan in this forty-seventh jubilee in the second week in the second year. And the children of Israel brought forth the bones of the children of Jacob, all except the bones of Joseph. And they buried them in the field in the cave of Machpelah in the mountain.
- 10 And many returned into Egypt but a few of them were left in Mount Hebron. Acts 7:15f.
And Amram, your father, was left with them.

The children of Israel are reduced to slavery

Ex 1:1-14

- 11 And the king of Canaan was victorious over the king of Egypt and he closed 12 the gates of Egypt. •And<sup>c</sup> he conceived an evil thought against the children of Israel so that he might cause them to suffer. And he said to the men of Egypt, 13 “Behold, the people of the sons of Israel have grown and increased more than we. Come let us act wisely concerning them before they increase. And let us cause them to suffer in slavery before war comes to us, or before they battle with us, or if not (that, then) they will mix with our<sup>d</sup> enemy. And they will depart from our land because their hearts and their faces are upon the land of Canaan.”
- 14 And they appointed over them taskmasters to make them suffer in slavery. And they built strengthened cities for Pharaoh, Pithom, and Ramses.<sup>e</sup> And they built all of the walls and all of the ramparts<sup>f</sup> which had fallen in the cities of Egypt.
15 And they made them slaves by force. And to the extent that they acted cruelly
16 against them, they likewise increased and multiplied. •And the men of Egypt regarded the sons of Israel as defiled.

The birth and early life of Moses

Ex 2:1-15

- 1 47 And in the seventh week, in the seventh year in this forty-seventh jubilee, your father came from the land of Canaan. And you were born in the fourth week, in the sixth year, in this forty-eighth jubilee, which were days of affliction upon
2 the children of Israel. •And the king of Egypt, Pharaoh, issued an order concerning Ex 1:22
3 them that they should throw all of their male children who were born into the river. •And they continued throwing (them into the river) seven months, until the day when you were born. And your mother hid you three months, and they
4 reported concerning her. •And she made an ark for you. And she covered it with pitch and asphalt. And she placed it among the reeds by the shore of the river and she placed you in it seven days. And your mother came in the night and suckled you and (in) the day Miriam, your sister, guarded you from the birds.
- 5 And in those days Tharmuth, the daughter of Pharaoh, came in order to bathe in the river and she heard your voice as you were crying and she told her maids<sup>a</sup>
6 to fetch you. And they brought you to her. •And she took you from the ark and 7 had pity on you. •And your sister said to her, “Shall I go and call for you one of the Hebrew women who will nurse and suckle the infant for you?” And she 8 said to her, “Go!” •And she went and called your mother, Jochebed. And she Ex 6:20
Num 26:59
gave a wage to her. And she nursed you.
- 9 And after this when you had grown they brought you to the daughter<sup>b</sup> of Pharaoh and you became her son. And Amram, your father, taught you writing. And after

c. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through 48:5, except for the last six words.

d. “Our” is supplied from the Lat. text.

e. The Lat. text also includes the city of On.

f. The phrase “and all of the ramparts” is lacking in Lat.

47 a. The Eth. text has “her Hebrew women,”

but that is probably based on a mistranslation of the Gk. dative plural abrai, “maids.” The Lat. text is correct. The Eth. text may also have been influenced by the appearance of “Hebrew women” in vs. 7.

b. The Eth. and Lat. MSS read “house” for “daughter.” Apparently the Gk. texts on which the later versions were based misread the Heb. consonants bt as “house” instead of “daughter.”

- 10 you completed three weeks (of years) they brought you into the royal court. •And you were in the court three weeks of years until the day when you went out of the royal court. And you saw an Egyptian beating your friend who was from the children of Israel. And you killed him and hid him in the sand. •And on the second day you found two of the children of Israel striving together. And you said to that one who was acting falsely, "Why are you striking your brother?"
 11 Acts 7:23
 12 And he was angry and indignant and said, "Who set you as a ruler and judge over us? Do you also desire to kill me as you killed the Egyptian yesterday?" And you were afraid and you fled because of those words.

Moses' experience in Midian and encounter with Mastema

Ex 2:15-4:26

- 1 48 And on the sixth year of the third week of the forty-ninth jubilee you went and dwelt in the land of Midian<sup>a</sup> five weeks and one year and you returned to Egypt on the second week in the second year in the fiftieth jubilee. •And you know what was related to you on Mount Sinai, and what Prince Mastema desired to do with you when you returned to Egypt, on the way when you met him<sup>b</sup> at the shelter. •Did he not desire to kill you with all of his might and save the Egyptians from your hand because he saw that you were sent to execute judgment and vengeance upon the Egyptians? •And I delivered you from his hand and you did the signs and wonders which you were sent to perform in Egypt against Pharaoh, and all his house, and his servants, and his people.
 2 Acts 7:30

The plagues on Egypt

Ex 7:1-12:39

- 5 And the LORD executed great vengeance upon them on account of Israel. And he smote them with blood, and frogs, and lice, and dog flies; and evil boils which break out (as) blisters; and their cattle with death; and hailstones with which he destroyed everything which sprouted up for them; and with locust who ate the remainder which was left from the hail; and with darkness, and (with death of) the firstborn of men, and cattle; and upon all of their gods the LORD took vengeance and he burned them<sup>c</sup> with fire. •And everything was sent in your hand to announce<sup>d</sup> before it was done. And you related it to the king of Egypt before all of his servants and before his people. •And everything happened according to your word, ten great and cruel judgments came on the land of Egypt so that you might execute vengeance upon it for Israel. •And the LORD did everything on account of Israel and according to his covenant which he made with Abraham that he would take vengeance upon them just as they had made them serve by force.
 6 Gen 15:13f.

The escape from Egypt and a discussion of Mastema's deeds

Ex 7-14

- 9 And Prince Mastema stood up before you and desired to make you fall into the hand of Pharaoh. And he aided the magicians of the Egyptians, and they stood up and acted before you. •Thus we let them do evil, but we did not empower them with healing so that it might be done by their hands. •And the LORD smote them with evil wounds and they were unable to stand because we destroyed (their ability) to do any single sign. •And despite all the signs and wonders, Prince Mastema was not<sup>e</sup> shamed until he had become strong and called to the Egyptians so that they might pursue after you with all the army of Egyptians, with their
 10 Ex 9:11
 11 Ex 14:8f.

48 a. The phrase "in the land of Midian" was restored from the Lat. text. The Eth. MSS simply read "there."

b. The reading "on the way where you met him" is supplied by the Lat. text. The Eth. text is corrupt at this point.

c. The writer is thinking of the icons of the gods.

d. In his translation Charles suggested this emendation. The Eth. MSS have "to do," which makes a difficult reading. Perhaps one could retain the Eth. text by assuming a command to work sympathetic magic: "Everything was sent in your hand so that you might act (it out) before it was done."

e. The "not" appears in all MSS; Charles omitted "not" from his text because he thought that "it conflicts with the sense."

chariots, and with their horses, and with all the multitude of the peoples of Egypt.

13 And I stood between the Egyptians and Israel,<sup>f</sup> and we delivered Israel from his hand and from the hand of his people. And the LORD brought them out through 14 the midst of the sea as through dry land. •And all of the people whom he brought out to pursue after Israel the LORD our God threw into the middle of the sea into the depths of the abyss beneath the children of Israel. Just as the men of Egypt cast their sons into the river he avenged one million. And one thousand strong and ardent men perished on account of one infant whom they threw into the midst of the river from the sons of your people. WisSol 18:5

15 And on the fourteenth day, and on the fifteenth, and on the sixteenth, and on the seventeenth, and on the eighteenth Prince Mastema was bound and shut up
16 from (coming) after the children of Israel so that he might not accuse them. •And on the nineteenth day we released them so that they might help the Egyptians and 17 pursue after the children of Israel. •And he hardened their hearts and strengthened them. And it was conceived of by the LORD our God that he might smite the Ex 14:8
18 Egyptians and throw them into the midst of the sea. •And on the fourteenth<sup>g</sup> day we bound him so that he might not accuse the children of Israel on the day when they were requesting vessels and clothing from the men of Egypt—vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and vessels of bronze—so that they might plunder the Egyptians in exchange for the servitude which they subjected them to by force.
19 And we did not bring the children of Israel from Egypt in their nakedness.

The feast of Passover, its institution and observance

Ex 12f.

1 49 Remember the commandment which the LORD commanded you concerning Passover, that you observe it in its time, on the fourteenth of the first month, so that you might sacrifice it before it becomes evening and so that you might eat it
2 during the night on the evening of the fifteenth from the time of sunset. •For on this night there was the beginning of the feast and there was the beginning of joy. You continued eating the Passover in Egypt and all of the powers of Mastema were sent to kill all of the firstborn in the land of Egypt, from the firstborn of Pharaoh to the firstborn of the captive maidservant who was at the millstone and
3 to the cattle. •And this is the sign which the LORD gave to them in every house where they saw the blood of a year-old lamb upon its doors so that they would not enter into the house to kill, they would pass over so that all who were in the house might be saved because the sign of the blood was on its doors.

4 And the host of the LORD did everything which the LORD commanded them. And they passed over all the children of Israel. And the plague did not come upon
5 them to destroy any life from them whether cattle or men or dogs. •And there was a very great plague in Egypt. And there was no house in Egypt in which
6 there was no corpse and weeping and lamenting. •And all of Israel remained eating the flesh of the Passover and drinking wine and praising and blessing and glorifying the LORD the God of their fathers. And they were prepared to depart from the yoke of Egypt and from evil slavery.

7 And you, remember this day all of the days<sup>a</sup> of your life and observe it from year to year all the days of your life, once per year on its day according to all of its law and you will not delay (one) day from (its) day or from (one) month to 8 (another) month. •For it is an eternal decree and engraved upon the heavenly tablets for all of the children of Israel that they might observe it in each and every year in its day once per year in all of their generations. And there is no limit of days because it is ordained forever.

f. The Eth. MSS also insert "between you" to this series. The "you" refers to Moses. A B read "I stood between you, the Egyptians, and Israel." C D read "I stood between the Egyptians, and you, and Israel."

g. "Fourteenth" is the reading of MS B. Charles used that reading in his translation, but his Eth. text had "seventeenth" in agreement with MSS A D. MS C has "fifteenth."

49 a. A portion of the Lat. text begins at this point and continues through 49:22a.

9 And (as for) the man who is purified and does not come so that he might observe it on its appointed day to bring a gift which is acceptable before the LORD and to eat and to drink before the LORD on the day of his feast, that man who is purified and nearby shall be uprooted because he did not bring a gift of the LORD in its (appointed) time. That man shall lift up sin upon himself. *So that the children of Israel will be ones who come and observe Passover on its appointed day on the fourteenth of the first month between the evenings from the third (part) of the day until the third (part) of the night because two parts of the day are given for light and one third for evening. *This is what the LORD commanded you so that you might observe it between the evenings.

12 And it is not fitting to sacrifice it during any time of light except during the time of the border of evening. And they shall eat it during the time of evening until a third of the night. And what is left of all its flesh from the third of the night and beyond, they shall burn with fire. *And it is not fitting that they should boil it in water. And they shall not eat it raw but roasted in the fire, cooked<sup>b</sup> with care, its head with its inner organs and with its feet. They shall roast it in fire without breaking any of its bones within it because no bone of the children of Israel will be broken. *Therefore the LORD commanded the children of Israel to observe the Passover on its appointed day. And it is not fitting to break any bone from it because it is the day of the feast and it is the day of the command. And there is no passing over in it (one) day from (its) day or from month (to) month because it shall be observed on the day of the feast.

15 And you command the children of Israel to observe the Passover in their days in every year, once per year, on its appointed day. And it will come as an acceptable memorial from before the LORD. And the plague will not come to kill or to smite during that year when they have observed the Passover in its (appointed) time in all (respects) according to his command.

16 And it is not fitting to eat it outside of the sanctuary of the LORD, but facing the sanctuary of the LORD. And all the people of the congregation of Israel will observe it in its (appointed) time. *And all the men who come on its day will eat it in the sanctuary of your God before the LORD, whoever is twenty years or older, because thus it is written and decreed that they shall eat it in the sanctuary of the LORD.

18 And whenever the children of Israel enter into the land which they will possess, into the land of Canaan, they will set up the tabernacle of the LORD in the midst of the land, in one of their tribes, until the sanctuary of the LORD is built upon the land. And it will come to pass when<sup>c</sup> they come and observe the Passover in the midst of the tabernacle of the LORD that they will sacrifice it before the LORD<sup>d</sup> from year to year. *And in the days when a house is built in the name of the LORD in the land of their inheritance, they shall go there and they shall sacrifice the Passover at evening when the sun is setting on the third (part) of the day. And they shall offer up its blood on the threshold of the altar. And its fat they shall place on the fire which is above the altar. And they shall eat its flesh cooked in fire within the court of the house which is sanctified in the name of the LORD. And they shall not be able to observe the Passover in their cities or in any district except before the tabernacle of the LORD or before his house in which his name dwells. And let them not stray from after the LORD.

22 And you, Moses, command the children of Israel so that they shall keep the ordinance of the Passover just as it was commanded to you so that you might relate to them its annual (occurrence) each year, both its period of days and the feast of unleavened bread so that they might eat unleavened bread for seven days so that they might observe its feast, and so that they might bring its gift, day by

b. "Cooked" is the MS reading. Charles emended his text on the basis of the Lat. text to read "they shall eat it."

c. The phrase "it will come to pass when" is not found in the Lat. text or in Eth. MS A. Charles put the phrase in his text, but removed it from his translation.

d. The Lat. text also omits the phrase "that they will sacrifice it before the LORD."

Num 9:13

Ex 30:14

Deut 16:5-7

day, during those seven days to rejoice before the LORD upon the altar of your 23 God. •For this feast you observed with nervousness when you went out from Egypt until you entered into the wilderness of Sur because you completed it on Ex 15:22 the shore of the sea.

The laws pertaining to the sabbath

Ex 16:1

1 50 And after this law I made you know the days of the sabbaths in the wilderness CD 10.14-11.18
 2 of Sin<sup>a</sup> which is between Elim and Sinai. •And I also related to you the sabbaths of the land on Mount Sinai. And the years of jubilee in the sabbaths of years I Lev 25:8 related to you. But its year I have not related to you until you enter into the land 3 which you will possess. •And the land will keep its sabbaths when they dwell Lev 26:34 upon it. And they will know the year of jubilee.
 4 On account of this I ordained for you the weeks of years, and the years, and the jubilees (as) forty-nine jubilees from the days of Adam until this day and one week and two years. And they are still forty further years to learn the commands of the LORD until they cross over the shore of the land of Canaan, crossing over 5 the Jordan to its western side. •And jubilees will pass until Israel is purified from all the sin of fornication, and defilement, and uncleanness, and sin and error. And they will dwell in confidence in all the land. And then it will not have any Satan or any evil (one). And the land will be purified from that time and forever.
 6 And behold the commandment of the sabbaths I have written for you and all 7 of the judgments of its law. •Six days you will work, but the seventh day is the Ex 20:9f. sabbath of the LORD your God. You shall not do any work in it, you, or your children, or your manservant or your maidservant, or any of your cattle or the 8 stranger who is with you. •And let the man who does anything on it die. Every CD 11.1f.
 man who will profane this day, who will lie with his wife, and whoever will CD 10.22f.
 discuss a matter that he will do on it so that he might make on it a journey for any buying or selling, and whoever draws water on it, which was not prepared 9 for him on the sixth day, and whoever lifts up anything that he will carry to take Neh 10:31; out of his tent or from his house, let him die. •You shall not do any work upon 13:16f.
 the day of the sabbath except what you prepared for yourself on the sixth day to eat and to drink and to rest and to observe a sabbath from all work of that day and to bless the LORD your God who gave to you the day of festival and the holy day. And a day of the holy kingdom for all Israel is this day among their days 10 always. •For great is the honor which the LORD gave to Israel to eat and to drink and to be satisfied on this day of festival and to rest in it from all work of the occupations of the children of men except to offer incense and to bring gifts and 11 sacrifices before the LORD for the days and the sabbaths. •This work alone shall be done on the day of the sabbath in the sanctuary of the LORD your God so that they might atone for Israel (with) continual gift day by day for an acceptable memorial before the LORD. And so that he might accept them forever, day by day, just as he commanded you.
 12 And (as for) any man who does work on it, or who goes on a journey, or who CD 12.5f.
 plows a field either at home or any (other) place, or who kindles a fire, or who rides on any animal, or who travels the sea in a boat, and any man who slaughters or kills anything, or who slashes the throat of cattle or bird, or who snares any 13 beast or bird or fish, or who fasts or makes war on the day of the sabbath, •let the man who does any of these on the day of the sabbath die so that the children of Israel might keep the sabbath according to the commands of the sabbaths of the land just as it was written in the tablets which he placed in my hands so that I might write for you the law of each time and according to each division of its days.

The account of the division of days is finished here.

<sup>a</sup> 50 a. The Eth. text has written "sina" instead of

MARTYRDOM AND ASCENSION OF ISAIAH

(Second Century B.C.–Fourth Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY M. A. KNIBB

The Ascension of Isaiah is a composite work which falls very obviously into two parts, chapters 1–5 and chapters 6–11; the first part is now known as the Martyrdom of Isaiah, the second bears the title the Vision of Isaiah. However, the Martyrdom of Isaiah is itself composite; included within these chapters is an independent section, 3:13–4:22, which is sometimes called the Testament of Hezekiah. Apart from these three main sections there are a number of additions and insertions which are to be attributed to the final editor of the whole book.

The Martyrdom of Isaiah (the basic material in 1:1–3:12 and 5:1–16) is the oldest element in the Ascension. It is a Jewish work which tells, in legendary form, of the martyr's death which Isaiah suffered at the hands of Manasseh. The narrative begins by describing how, in the twenty-sixth year of his reign, Hezekiah summoned his son Manasseh in order to instruct him, and how, on that occasion, Isaiah prophesied that Manasseh would ignore his father's words and, inspired by Beliar, bring about the death of the prophet (ch. 1). The remainder of the narrative describes the fulfillment of this prophecy. The wickedness of Manasseh's reign (2:1–6) leads Isaiah, in company with other prophets and faithful men, to flee from Jerusalem, first to Bethlehem, and then to a mountain in the desert (2:7–11). However, Isaiah's hiding place is discovered by a Samaritan who accuses Isaiah of treason and blasphemy (2:12a; 3:1–10). Manasseh has Isaiah arrested (3:11f.) and put to death (5:1–16). Included within this narrative is a digression (2:12b–16) which deals with the story of Micaiah son of Imlah (cf. 1Kgs 22:5–28).

A Christian addition to the Martyrdom of Isaiah, sometimes given the title the Testament of Hezekiah (3:13–4:22), is in reality presented as the account of a vision which Isaiah himself had experienced before his arrest by Manasseh. The account describes the life and death of the Beloved (3:13–20), the corruption of the Church (3:21–31), the reign of Beliar (4:1–13), and the second coming of the Lord (4:14–22).

The Vision of Isaiah (chs. 6–11) is likewise a Christian work. The introduction to the narrative tells how Isaiah, while present at the court of Hezekiah in the twentieth year of Hezekiah's reign, was carried up in his mind into heaven and had a vision (ch. 6). In the report of the vision itself (chs. 7–11) Isaiah describes his journey up through the seven heavens (7:1–9:26); it is this ascension which gives the title to the whole book. In the seventh heaven he sees the Lord and the Holy Spirit, and is given a glimpse of the glory of God; he himself joins in the worship which is offered to them (9:27–10:6). He then hears the Lord being commissioned by God to descend into the world (10:7–16); he sees the descent of the Lord through the seven heavens (10:17–31), his miraculous birth (11:1–16), his life, death, and resurrection (11:17–21), and his ascension once more into heaven (11:22–33). Verses 34–43 of chapter 11 form the conclusion to the vision and the book.

Texts<sup>1</sup>

The different elements within the Ascension of Isaiah were composed either in Greek or, in the case of the Martyrdom, in Hebrew, and at an early stage translated into Greek. The Greek text was translated into a number of different languages: Ethiopic, Latin, Slavonic, Coptic. Of these translations the Ethiopic is the most important, because it is only in Ethiopic that an entire version of the Ascension has survived.

The translation into Ethiopic of the Ascension of Isaiah, which was regarded in Abyssinia as a genuine work of the prophet, was probably undertaken as part of the translation into Ethiopic of the books of the Bible and Apocrypha. As such it is to be dated at some time after the introduction of Christianity into Abyssinia in the fourth century, but before the end of the sixth century.<sup>2</sup> A comparison of the Ethiopic translation with the fragment of the Greek text that has survived (see below) shows that on the whole the Ethiopic has faithfully rendered the original.<sup>3</sup> Many of the corruptions in the Ethiopic are to be attributed to faults in the underlying Greek, but there are also, of course, corruptions that are peculiar to the Ethiopic version. The following manuscripts of the Ethiopic version were used.

- A Bodleian Library, MS Aeth.d.13 (Dillmann's Catalogue, No. 7), 15th century, fols. 95–115.
- B British Library, Or. 501 (Wright's Catalogue, No. 25), 15th century, fols. 62–69.
- C British Library, Or. 503 (Wright's Catalogue, No. 27), 18th century, fols. 57–62.
- D Vatican Library, Eth. 263, 14th–15th century, fols. 85–104.
- E A fragment of the Ascension in an Abba Garima codex (a microfilm of the codex is deposited at the Hill Monastic Manuscript Library). The fragment covers 1:4–2:2, and its text is closely similar to that of D.

The Ethiopic text of the Ascension was first published in 1819 by R. Laurence; his edition consisted of a transcript of A, the only manuscript known at the time. Subsequently, critical editions of the text were published by A. Dillmann (1877) and by R. H. Charles (1900), in both cases based on the three manuscripts A, B, and C. Dillmann and Charles regarded A as the best manuscript and used it as their base text; Charles's edition contains a fair number of somewhat uncertain conjectural emendations.<sup>4</sup> D (unknown to Dillmann and Charles) is as important as A; and it often agrees with A. However, D sometimes supports the readings of B and C. The present translation of the Ascension is based on a fresh collation of these five Ethiopic manuscripts; in practice the translation often, but by no means always, follows Dillmann's edition of the text.

As has already been indicated, only a fragment of the Greek text of the Ascension has survived. The fragment, containing 2:4–4:4, was discovered in a papyrus of the Amherst collection dating from the fifth or sixth century. As will be recognized, the fragment covers both part of the original Martyrdom of Isaiah (the basic material in 1:1–3:12 and 5:1–16) and part of the inserted Christian section (3:13–4:22). Despite its limited extent the fragment is important because of the light it casts on the Ethiopic and Latin translations.<sup>5</sup>

Two quite different Latin translations of the Ascension are in existence. The first of these (Lat1) is represented by two fragments in a palimpsest belonging to the Vatican Library (Vatic. Lat. 5750) which were published by A. Mai in 1828.<sup>6</sup> The fragments, which cover

<sup>1</sup> For a survey of the textual evidence see A.-M. Denis, Introduction, pp. 170–76.

<sup>2</sup> On Ethiopic Bible translations see E. Ullendorff, Ethiopia and the Bible (The Schweich Lectures of the British Academy, 1967; London, 1968) pp. 31–59, especially pp. 55–59.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. B. P. Grenfell and A. S. Hunt, The Amherst Papyri . . . Part I. The Ascension of Isaiah and Other Theological Fragments (London, 1900) p. 3.

<sup>4</sup> R. Laurence, Ascensio Isaiae Vatis; A. Dillmann, Ascensio Isaiae, aethiopice et latine; R. H. Charles, The Ascension of Isaiah.

<sup>5</sup> For further details see the excellent edition by Grenfell and Hunt (see n. 3). The text is also given by Charles (Ascension, pp. 84–95) and by A.-M. Denis (Fragmenta Pseudepigraphorum Graeca [PVTG 3; Leiden, 1970] pp. 108–13; Denis gives only the part which covers the Martyrdom, i.e. 2:4–3:12).

<sup>6</sup> A. Mai, Scriptorum veterum nova collectio 3.2 (1828) 238f. (not seen). The fragments were identified by B. G. Niebuhr and republished by I. Nitzsch ("Nachweisung zweier Bruchstücke einer alten lateinischen Übersetzung vom

2:14–3:13 and 7:1–19, form part of the original writing in the manuscript and date from the fifth or sixth century; the translation itself may have been made in the fifth century.

The Ethiopic, Greek, and Latin texts which have been mentioned so far, despite many differences of detail, all represent essentially the same textual tradition. This is not the case with the second Latin translation and the Slavonic, which both belong to a quite different textual tradition. These translations cover only chapters 6–11, the Vision of Isaiah, and thus provide evidence for the independent existence of this part of the Ascension.

The second Latin translation (Lat2) was first published by A. de Fantis in 1522 from a manuscript whose whereabouts is now unknown.<sup>7</sup> At the time when Laurence published the Ethiopic text of the Ascension in 1819 the edition by De Fantis of the Latin version appeared to have been lost, although Laurence knew of the edition because of a reference to it by Sixtus of Siena, who, in the sixteenth century, had condemned the Vision of Isaiah as a heretical work.<sup>8</sup> However, copies of the edition of De Fantis were discovered by J. C. L. Gieseler, who republished the text in 1832.<sup>9</sup>

The Slavonic translation<sup>10</sup> exists in two forms, of which the second is an abridgment of the first. The complete version (with which we are here concerned) is represented by a Russian manuscript of the twelfth century and by several later manuscripts of diverse origin. An edition of the Russian manuscript, with variants from a fourteenth-century Serbian manuscript, was published by A. Popov in 1879, and it was from this edition that N. Bonwetsch made the Latin translation of the Slavonic version which is given in Charles's edition of the Ascension.<sup>11</sup> The variants of the Slavonic version which are given in the notes in the present work have been taken from Bonwetsch, but it must be pointed out that his translation is now seen to be insufficiently precise.<sup>12</sup> An edition of the Russian manuscript, with the principal variants of the other manuscripts, was published by A. A. Šachmatov and P. A. Lavrov in 1899.<sup>13</sup>

The second Latin translation and the Slavonic clearly belong closely together and form a distinct recension of the Vision of Isaiah, but the relationship of the two translations to one another has been the subject of debate in recent years. Earlier this century it was argued that the character of the mistakes in Lat2 showed that this Latin version had been translated from a Slavonic text, and that the Slavonic version had been not merely adopted by the Bogomils (S. J. Ivanov), but also subjected to Bogomil editing (such was the view of E. Turdeanu); it was held that the translation into Latin was made by the Cathari.<sup>14</sup> In contrast, it has been argued by A. Vaillant<sup>15</sup> that those features in Lat2 which were held to show the dependence of Lat2 on the Slavonic are better explained in terms of the independent use by Lat2 and the Slavonic of a common Greek original, and that the differences between Lat2 and the Slavonic confirm this. Furthermore, the Vision of Isaiah, in the form known to us

Anabatikon Esaiou," Theologische Studien und Kritiken 3 [1830] 209–46). The text of the fragments is also given by Dillmann (Ascensio, pp. 83–85); J.-P. Migne (PL 13, cols. 629–32); Charles (Ascension, pp. 87–92, 102–8), and E. Tisserant (Ascension d'Isaïe, pp. 100–9, 142–54). The text of the first fragment (2:14–3:13, but with the exception of 3:13, since it is not part of the Martyrdom) is likewise reproduced in Denis (Fragmenta, pp. 111–13).

<sup>7</sup> A. de Fantis, Opera nuper in lucem prodeuntia (Venice, 1522). The Vision is included among several other religious writings.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. Laurence, Ascensio, p. 151.

<sup>9</sup> Programma quo Academiae Georgiae Augustae prorektor et senatus sacra pentecostalia anni MDCCCXXXII pie concelebranda indixerunt (not seen). The text was reproduced by Dillmann (Ascensio, pp. 76–83), Charles (Ascension, pp. 98–139), and Tisserant (Ascension, pp. 133–214).

<sup>10</sup> The information given about the Slav. version is taken from the following sources: E. Kozak, "Bibliographische Übersicht der biblisch-apokryphen Literatur bei den Slaven," Jahrbücher für Protestantische Theologie 18 (1892) 138f.; N. Bonwetsch in A. Harnack, Geschichte der alchristlichen Literatur (Leipzig, 1893) vol. 1.2, p. 916; W. Lüdtke, "Beiträge zu slavischen Apokryphen," ZAW 31 (1911) 222f.; E. Turdeanu, "Apocryphes bogomiles et apocryphes pseudo-bogomiles," RHR 138 (1950) 214; A. Vaillant, RESI 42 (1963) 110; Turdeanu, Apocryphes slaves et roumains, pp. 70, 145–72.

<sup>11</sup> Cf. Charles, Ascension, pp. 98–139, and the statement on pp. xxivf.

<sup>12</sup> Cf. Vaillant, RESI 42 (1963) 110.

<sup>13</sup> A. A. Šachmatov and P. A. Lavrov, Sbornik XII věka Moskovskago Uspenskago Sobora, I (Moscow, 1899) (not seen).

<sup>14</sup> Cf. Turdeanu, RHR 138 (1950) 214–18; information about the views of J. Ivanov (given in his book Bogomilski knigi i legendi [Sofia, 1925]) has been taken from Turdeanu's article. The theory that Lat2 was translated from the Slav., which was put forward by Ivanov and accepted by Turdeanu, had earlier been presented by Lüdtke (ZAW 31 (1911) 223f.). See also Turdeanu, Apocryphes slaves et roumains, pp. 70–74, 150–72.

<sup>15</sup> Cf. Vaillant, RESI 42 (1963) 109–21.

from Lat2 and the Slavonic, contains no Bogomil doctrines, or even traces of Bogomil editing, even though the Vision was taken over by the Bogomils because they found in it similarities with their own doctrines. Rather, Lat2 and the Slavonic are independent translations of a Greek version of the Vision of Isaiah which had been revised to make it more orthodox (thus e.g. the account of the birth and life of the Lord in the Ethiopic version of 11:2–22 has been replaced in Lat2 and the Slavonic by a short statement which lacks the legendary features of the Ethiopic). The translation into Slavonic was made in the tenth or eleventh century. In a more recent article Turdeanu, while reaffirming the idea of Bogomil editing, apparently accepts the view that Lat2 is dependent on a Greek text.

Fragments of the Ascension of Isaiah in two Coptic dialects (Sahidic and Akhmimic) are also in existence. The fragments in Sahidic were published by L. T. Lefort;<sup>16</sup> some of the Akhmimic fragments were likewise published by Lefort, but a more complete version was later issued by P. Lacau.<sup>17</sup>

Finally, reference should be made to the Legend about Isaiah which was discovered by O. von Gebhardt in a twelfth-century Greek manuscript (Paris, Cod. Gr. 1534) and published by him in 1878.<sup>18</sup> The Legend is largely based on a Greek text of the Ascension of the type which is represented by the Ethiopic version, the Greek fragment, and Lat1, but the material has been completely recast. One very obvious feature is that the various incidents in the Ascension have been rearranged in a more coherent order, with the equivalent of the Vision (Eth. chs. 6–11) coming before the account of the martyrdom. The importance of the Greek Legend lies in the fact that it sometimes gives us the Greek wording underlying the Ethiopic and Lat1. A second manuscript of this Greek Legend is now known.<sup>19</sup>

Laurence, Dillmann, and Charles all included translations of the Ascension of Isaiah in their editions of the Ethiopic text (see n. 4); other translations have also been published in several languages.<sup>20</sup>

The translation given in the present volume has been made from the Ethiopic version on the basis of a fresh collation of the five Ethiopic manuscripts mentioned above. In the notes to the translation the more important variants of the Greek fragment and the first Latin translation, on the one hand, and of the second Latin translation and the Slavonic, on the other, have been given. Where appropriate, the evidence of the Greek Legend has also been cited.

Original language

In considering the question of the original language of the Ascension, it is necessary to distinguish between the Martyrdom and the remaining sections of the book. So far as the Martyrdom is concerned, there is good evidence for the view that it was composed in Hebrew. First, the form of the sentences in 1:1, 2:1, and 3:2 is typically Hebraic and points to the use of a construction with way<sup>c</sup>hf. Second, in 2:1 there is a play on words linking the name Manasseh with the Hebrew verb "to forget" (nāšāh, cf. Gen 41:31) which is most naturally explained on the assumption that the Martyrdom was composed in Hebrew. Finally, in 5:1, 11 the Ethiopic states that Isaiah was sawed in half with "a wood saw" (i.e. a saw to cut wood). But the Ethiopic expression is ambiguous and could be translated "a wooden saw" (a saw made out of wood), and the corresponding passage in the Greek Legend (3:16) actually has this. The context and sense obviously require the meaning "a

<sup>16</sup> L. T. Lefort, "Coptica Lovaniensia (suite)," Le Muséon 51 (1938) 24–30, plate IVa.

<sup>17</sup> L. T. Lefort, "Fragments d'apocryphes en copte-akhmimique," Le Muséon 52 (1939) 7–10, plate II; P. Lacau, "Fragments de l'Ascension d'Isaïe en copte," Le Muséon 59 (1946) 453–67.

<sup>18</sup> O. von Gebhardt, "Die Ascensio Isaiaie als Heiligenlegende," ZWT 21 (1878) 330–53. The text was subsequently republished by Charles (Ascension, pp. 141–48); for a French translation see Tisserant (Ascension, pp. 217–26).

<sup>19</sup> Vatic. Palat. 27 of the 11th cent. (cf. Denis, Introduction, p. 172).

<sup>20</sup> English: Charles's translation was reproduced in APOT, vol. 2, pp. 155–62 (the Martyrdom only), and in TED; London, 1917 (Introduction by G. H. Box). Danish: E. Hammershaimb in De Gammeltestamentlige Pseudepigrapher, vol. 3 (1958) pp. 303–15 (not seen). French: R. Basset, Les apocryphes Éthiopiens traduits en Français. III. L'Ascension d'Isaïe (Paris, 1894); Tisserant, Ascension (see n. 6). German: G. Beer, APAT, vol. 2, pp. 119–27 (Martyrdom only); P. Riessler, Altjüdisches Schrifttum ausserhalb der Bibel (Augsburg, 1928) pp. 481–84, 1300f. (Martyrdom only); J. Flemming and H. Duensing in E. Hennecke and W. Schneemelcher, Neutestamentliche Apokryphen (Tübingen, 1964<sup>3</sup>) vol. 2, pp. 454–68 (ET, HSW, vol. 2, pp. 642–63); E. Hammershaimb, JSHRZ 2 (1973) 15–34 (Martyrdom only).

wood saw," but the evidence of the Greek Legend suggests that in the original a Hebrew construct-relationship was used, for which the translations "a wood saw" and "a wooden saw" would both be possible, and that the Hebrew was incorrectly translated into Greek as the latter.

The Hebrew Martyrdom of Isaiah was translated into Greek, and, as we have seen, a fragment of this Greek translation has survived. It is generally assumed that the remaining sections of the Ascension were composed in Greek, and there seems no reason to doubt this.

Composite character of the Ascension

It was stated at the outset that the Ascension of Isaiah is a composite work, and this view has been presupposed in the discussion so far. It is necessary here to say a little more about the evidence on which this view is based.<sup>21</sup>

The first point to be noticed is that a clear distinction has to be drawn between chapters 1-5 and chapters 6-11. On even a superficial reading it is obvious that chapters 6-11 are Christian in origin, and that chapters 1-5 at the very least include a good deal of Jewish material. But beyond this the evidence of the second Latin translation and the Slavonic translation shows that chapters 6-11 circulated independently of chapters 1-5 under the title "the Vision of Isaiah."<sup>22</sup> The awkwardness inherent in the fact that the events described in chapters 6-11 are set at an earlier stage in Isaiah's life than those described in chapters 1-5 suggests that chapters 6-11 not only circulated independently of chapters 1-5, but also had a quite independent origin. The combination of chapters 1-5 and 6-11 is the result of subsequent editorial activity.

In modern times chapters 1-5 have been given the title "the Martyrdom of Isaiah." So far as these chapters are concerned, 3:13-4:22 stands out as being an addition to the text. The basic narrative of chapters 1-5 is Jewish, but 3:13-4:22 is manifestly Christian. Apart from this, 3:13-4:22 forms a very harsh break in the narrative between 3:12 and 5:1. So much is clear; what is not clear is whether 3:13-4:22 originally formed part of an independent work, or whether it was composed specifically for the context which it now occupies as an addition to the narrative of the Martyrdom of Isaiah.

R. H. Charles took the view that 3:13-4:22 did at one time have an independent existence, and his view has been accepted by a number of scholars. Charles drew attention, on the one hand, to the fact that 1:2b-5a alludes, apparently with reference to 3:13-4:22, to a vision which Hezekiah saw in the fifteenth year of his reign; and, on the other hand, to the fact that the eleventh-century chronicler George Cedrenus quotes 4:12, but attributes the passage to "the Testament of Hezekiah." Charles concluded that 3:13-4:22 belonged originally to an independent work called the Testament of Hezekiah, although he thought the beginning and end of the work had been removed.<sup>23</sup>

There are, however, a number of difficulties with Charles's views about the Testament of Hezekiah. In the first place, the revelation given in 3:13-4:22 is attributed to Isaiah, not the king. This difficulty might be avoided by assuming that the revelation was transferred from Hezekiah to Isaiah when 3:13-4:22 was inserted in the Ascension; against this it must be pointed out that Cedrenus likewise places his quotation of 4:12 in the mouth of Isaiah ("In the Testament of Hezekiah, king of Judah, Isaiah the prophet says . . ."). Unless it is to be assumed that Cedrenus made a mistake, it is difficult to take his quotation of 4:12 as providing evidence for the existence of an independent work attached to the name of Hezekiah. It seems more likely that by "the Testament of Hezekiah" Cedrenus was referring to chapters 1-5 as a whole,<sup>24</sup> the first chapter of which does have the character of a testament

<sup>21</sup> For earlier discussions of this problem see Charles (Ascension, pp. xxxiv-xliii) and Tisserant (Ascension, pp. 42-61).

<sup>22</sup> In full "The Vision which Isaiah the prophet [Slav "the holy Isaiah, the prophet"], the son of Amoz, saw." Eth gives virtually the same heading at 6:1.

<sup>23</sup> Cf. Charles, Ascension, pp. xliif., xlii, 2, 29. For the text of Cedrenus (quoted by Charles, p. 29) see I. Becker, Georgius Cedrenus, Corpus Scriptorum Historiae Byzantinae (Bonn, 1838) vol. 1, pp. 120f.

<sup>24</sup> Hammershaimb, JSHRZ 2 (1973) 17. Cf. also the critical comments of A. Caquot ("Bref commentaire du 'Martyre d'Isaïe,'" Semitica 23 [1973] 69) on the likelihood of the existence of an independent work called "the Testament of Hezekiah."

given by Hezekiah (see particularly n. g on 1:2). In the second place, it is not at all obvious that 1:2b–5a really does refer to 3:13–4:22; here the contrast with 1:5b–6a, which clearly was written with reference to chapters 6–11, is significant. Thus 1:2b–6a comes from the hand of the final editor of the Ascension and replaces an earlier narrative in which Hezekiah summoned Manasseh in order to instruct him about the fear of God and about how he should rule (see n. g on 1:2). In the present narrative we are told that Hezekiah summoned Manasseh in order to give him an account of a vision which he had seen about the judgment of the prince of this world and about faith in the Beloved (vss. 2b–5a), and an account of a vision which Isaiah had seen (vss. 5b–6a, referring to chs. 6–11). The combination of chapters 1–5 with chapters 6–11 gave the complete book predominantly the character of an apocalypse, and it was because of this that the final editor was led to describe Hezekiah as if he were an apocalyptic seer giving a revelation, rather than as a king giving practical advice to his son. It is unnecessary, therefore, to assume that 1:2b–5a refers to a particular section of the Ascension.

Even if the evidence for the view that 3:13–4:22 originally belonged to a work called the Testament of Hezekiah is unconvincing, it is nonetheless possible that this section of the Ascension has been taken from another, now unknown work. This question cannot be answered with any degree of certainty. All that can be said is that in its present form 3:13–4:22 presupposes the joining of chapters 1–5 (the Martyrdom) with chapters 6–11 (the Vision); 3:13 clearly alludes to chapters 6–11, and there are also a number of other links between 3:13–4:22 and the Vision.

The material that is left to the Martyrdom after the removal of 3:13–4:22 consists of 1:1–3:12 and 5:1–16 (minus a number of obvious editorial additions). At an earlier stage some scholars argued that chapter 1 did not form part of the original Martyrdom, but Charles<sup>25</sup> has convincingly shown that this chapter is presupposed by 2:1, even though it now contains a number of passages which stem from the final editor of the book (cf. vss. 2b–6a, 7, 13). The final editor was also responsible for a number of other passages in the Ascension (cf. 2:9; 4:19–5:1a; 5:15f.; 11:41–43).

The view that the Ascension is a composite work has been accepted by virtually every scholar who has studied this book, and the debate has really been concerned with the questions of the extent of the different elements within the Ascension, and the way in which they were put together. Since the time of Laurence, only two scholars, F. C. Burkitt and V. Burch, have maintained that the Ascension is a unity.<sup>26</sup> Burkitt (whose discussion is the more important) argued that it was impossible to remove the narrative portions of the Ascension (i.e. the Martyrdom) from the remainder of the work; rather he regarded the Martyrdom "as an integral part of the Ascension, constructed from the writer's knowledge of the early imperfect Greek translation of the Books of Kings, supplemented here and there by stray fragments of Jewish lore."<sup>27</sup> Burkitt believed that the unsatisfactory impression which the Ascension gives is due to the fact that the writer tried to deal in an apocalypse both with the last judgment and with the incarnation; the latter does not, in his view, really belong in the literary genre of an apocalypse. However, Burkitt's views do not really do justice to the very different character of 1:1–3:12, plus 5:1–16, 3:13–4:22, and chapters 6–11. Furthermore, even if it were to be accepted that it is not entirely possible to remove the Martyrdom from the Ascension, it would still be necessary to assume for the narrative portions of chapters 1–5 the use of a much more substantial Jewish substratum than Burkitt's "stray fragments of Jewish lore"; but in this case we are effectively dealing once more with sources. Burkitt's discussion does, nonetheless, have some importance inasmuch as it serves as a warning of the difficulties of recovering the text of the original Martyrdom. It cannot simply be assumed that what we are left with after the removal of the Christian elements in the Ascension and the obvious editorial additions is the Jewish Martyrdom of Isaiah; the possibility of Christian reworking of what appears to be Jewish material needs to be kept in mind.

<sup>25</sup> Ascension, pp. xl–xlii.

<sup>26</sup> F. C. Burkitt, Jewish and Christian Apocalypses (The Schweich Lectures of the British Academy, 1913; London, 1914) pp. 45–48, 72–74. V. Burch, "The Literary Unity of the Ascension of Isaiah," JTS 20 (1918–19) 17–23.

<sup>27</sup> Jewish and Christian Apocalypses, pp. 45f.

In the course of this discussion reference has been made to a number of titles which have been given to different parts of the Ascension, namely the Martyrdom (a modern title given to the basic material in 1:1–3:12 and 5:1–16), the Testament of Hezekiah (a title attached by George Cedrenus to a quotation of 4:12; it was thought by Charles to refer to 3:13–4:22, but has been taken here as a title of chs. 1–5), and the Vision of Isaiah (the title given to chs. 6–11 in the Eth. translation, the second Lat. translation, and the Slav.). It is convenient at this point to mention briefly the other titles that have been given to this book.<sup>28</sup>

The title conventionally given to the whole book—the Ascension of Isaiah—is the title which is found in the Ethiopic version at the beginning of the book. The same title is found twice in Epiphanius, on one occasion attached to a quotation of 9:35f.,<sup>29</sup> and, with reference to 11:34, in Jerome.<sup>30</sup> Since Jerome alludes elsewhere to the charges brought against Isaiah in 3:6–10,<sup>31</sup> it seems likely that he knew the Ascension in its complete form; but it is not clear from Epiphanius' use of the title whether he meant by it the whole book or only chapters 6–11. A similar uncertainty surrounds the use by Origen of the title "the Apocryphon of Isaiah";<sup>32</sup> Origen indicates that the story of the sawing of Isaiah in half was to be found in this "Apocryphon," but it is not clear what else it contained.

Date

It is difficult to date the different sections of the Ascension with any precision, but it is possible to give a general indication of when they were composed.<sup>33</sup>

Both Justin Martyr and Tertullian<sup>34</sup> refer to the tradition that Isaiah met his death by being sawed in half, and this same tradition about Isaiah was probably in the mind of the author of Hebrews 11:37. If this last point is correct, it suggests that the Martyrdom was composed not later than the first century A.D. But the narrative, like the stories of the martyrdom of Eleazar and the martyrdom of the seven brothers and their mother (2Mac 6:18–7:42), is probably much older than this and goes back ultimately to the period of the persecution of the Jews by Antiochus Epiphanes in 167–164 B.C.<sup>35</sup>

There are a number of indications which point to the view that 3:13–4:22 was composed at about the end of the first century A.D. This section of the Ascension is clearly later than the death of Nero in A.D. 68 because it refers to the expectation that Nero would come again as the "Antichrist" (see 4:2b–4a); presumably a little time would have been needed for this belief to develop, and this suggests a date at the earliest toward the end of the first century. On the other hand, the picture of the corruption of the Church which is given in 3:21–31 invites comparison with the descriptions of the Church given in 1 and 2 Timothy, 2 Peter, and 1 Clement 3; the similarities with these writings likewise suggest that 3:13–4:22 dates from about the end of the first century. Two other pieces of evidence also point toward this date. First, the author of 4 Baruch 9:18, 20, a work attributed to the early second century, betrays a knowledge of chapters 1–5 of the Ascension in their Christian form and may even have known the complete book; he gives in 9:18 what appears to be a loose quotation of 3:17 of the Ascension. Second, this same passage of the Ascension (3:17) provides a description of the emergence of the Beloved (Jesus) from the tomb which is similar to the description given in the Gospel of Peter 39f., a work which dates from the middle of the second century. Taken together, these indications suggest a date for the composition of 3:13–4:22 at about the end of the first century.

The date of the Vision of Isaiah is rather more difficult to determine. The fact that Jerome refers to 11:34, and that Epiphanius gives a quotation of 9:35f., suggests that this part of

<sup>28</sup> Cf. Charles, Ascension, pp. xii–xiv; Denis, Introduction, pp. 170f.

<sup>29</sup> The quotation of 9:35f. occurs in AdvHaer 67:3 (GCS 37 [1933] pp. 135f.); cf. AdvHaer 40:2 (GCS 31 [1922] p. 82).

<sup>30</sup> Cf. Jerome, Commlsa 64:4 (PL, vol. 24, col. 622).

<sup>31</sup> Jerome, Commlsa 1:10 (PL, vol. 24, col. 33).

<sup>32</sup> Origen, CommMt 13:57 (GCS 40, p. 24); cf. EpAfr 9 (PL, vol. 11, col. 65).

<sup>33</sup> For earlier discussions see Charles (Ascension, pp. xliivf.); Tisserant (Ascension, pp. 59f.).

<sup>34</sup> DialTrypho 120:5; Tertullian, De patientia 14 (Corpus scriptorum ecclesiasticorum latinorum 47 [1906] p. 21); Scorpicae 8 (Corpus scriptorum ecclesiasticorum latinorum 20 [1890] p. 161).

<sup>35</sup> Cf. O. Eissfeldt, The Old Testament. An Introduction, trans. P. R. Ackroyd (Oxford, 1966) p. 609.

the Ascension was in existence, at the latest, by the end of the third century A.D. But it is probably much older than the third century. The Acts of Peter 24, which dates from the second half of the second century, appears to quote 11:14, while the narrative of the miraculous birth of the Lord in 11:2–16<sup>36</sup> shows some similarities with the Protoevangelium of James, a work attributed to about A.D. 150. It thus seems likely that the Vision comes from the second century A.D. The date of composition was carried back even earlier (to the close of the first century) by Charles,<sup>37</sup> because he believed that 11:16 was quoted in Ignatius, Epistle to the Ephesians 19, "And hidden from the prince of this world were the virginity of Mary and her child-bearing and likewise also the death of the Lord." But it is not at all clear that Ignatius really is quoting from the Ascension.

It is not known when exactly the three sections of the Ascension were combined. The Greek fragment<sup>38</sup> (from the 5th–6th cent.), the palimpsest giving the text of the fragments of the first Latin translation (likewise from the 5th–6th cent.), and the Ethiopic translation (which was made some time during the 4th–6th cent.) all presuppose the existence of the complete work. But the character of the mistakes in the Greek fragment and the Latin palimpsest suggests that the complete work had already been in existence for some time when these manuscripts were copied. It thus seems likely that the three sections of the Ascension were brought together in the third or fourth century A.D., and this is confirmed by the fact that Jerome seems to have known the complete book. It is possible that there were two stages in this process, first the combination of 3:13–4:22 with the Martyrdom, and second the combination of the enlarged Martyrdom with the Vision.<sup>39</sup>

Provenance

It is generally assumed that the Martyrdom was composed in Palestine, and this seems to be correct given that the language of composition was almost certainly Hebrew, and given the hostility that is shown toward the Samaritans (cf. 2:12, 14; 3:1, 3). The fact that the legend is referred to in the rabbinic writings tends to support the view of Palestinian composition. There is no evidence to suggest where either 3:13–4:22 or the Vision was composed. It is also not known where the three parts of the Ascension were put together.

Historical and theological importance

The Martyrdom of Isaiah belongs with the martyr stories of the Old Testament (cf. Dan 3 and 6) and the Apocrypha (cf. 2Mac 6:18–7:42), but it is the latter which provides the closest parallel. The legend about the martyr's death which Isaiah suffered, like the stories about Eleazar and about the mother and her seven sons, goes back ultimately to the time of the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes. Stories such as this were written to encourage the Jews to remain faithful to their religion, but unlike the somewhat older stories in Daniel 3 and 6 there is no happy ending; rather it is accepted that the cost of remaining faithful to God will indeed be death.

The narrative of the Martyrdom, as will be apparent from the references and notes appended to the translation, draws its inspiration to a very great extent from the Old Testament, and particularly from 1 and 2 Kings. The author takes over the contrast that is drawn in 2 Kings between the good Hezekiah and the wicked Manasseh, and there is no trace of the more sympathetic picture of Manasseh which is given in 2 Chronicles 33 and is presupposed in the Prayer of Manasseh. There is nothing in the Old Testament, of course, about the death of Isaiah, but the impetus for the development of the story of the martyrdom was perhaps provided by the note in 2 Kings 21:16 that "Manasseh shed innocent blood . . . in such great quantity that he flooded Jerusalem from end to end."

<sup>36</sup>The section 11:2–22 is attested only by the Eth. version and is omitted by the second Lat. translation and the Slav. But the primitive character of the narrative of the birth of Jesus suggests very strongly that the Eth. has preserved the original form of the text.

<sup>37</sup>Ascension, p. xlv.

<sup>38</sup>Although the Gk. fragment only covers 2:4–4:4, its text of 3:13 alludes to the content of chs. 6–11; the Gk. fragment thus presupposes the combination of the three elements in the Ascension to form the complete book we know.

<sup>39</sup>Cf. Eissfeldt, Introduction, p. 610.

The particular detail that Isaiah met his death by being sawed in half is at first sight somewhat surprising and has been the source of a good deal of speculation. But it is probably to be explained by the fact that the author here presupposes a tradition which is given in more complete form in the Talmuds. According to the tradition preserved in the Babylonian Talmud (Yeb 49b) Isaiah was put on trial by Manasseh on a variety of charges; included among these is the charge made in the Ascension (3:8f.) that Isaiah claimed to have seen God, despite the fact that Moses said that no one can see God and live. Isaiah, in order to escape, pronounced the name of God and, in consequence, was swallowed up by a cedar. The cedar was brought and sawed in half, and this caused the death of Isaiah. In this tradition Isaiah's death is interpreted as a punishment for saying, "and I live among a people of unclean lips" (Isa 6:5). Elsewhere the Babylonian Talmud only mentions the fact that Manasseh slew Isaiah (cf. b.Sanh 103b), but the Jerusalem Talmud (y.Sanh 10.2 [ed. M. Schwab, vol. 11, p. 49]) preserves a variant of the tradition linking Isaiah with a cedar. According to the Jerusalem Talmud Isaiah hid in a cedar to escape from Manasseh, but the fringes of his garment stuck out and betrayed his presence. Manasseh ordered the tree to be cut, and Isaiah was discovered.<sup>40</sup> It would appear that the Martyrdom presupposes a tradition, comparable to those in the Talmuds, according to which Isaiah took refuge in a tree trunk, and that it was for this reason that he is said to have met his death by being sawed in half. This view seems more likely than the view that the motif has been borrowed from non-Israelite sources. Thus a number of scholars believed that the motif of the sawing in half was Iranian in origin,<sup>41</sup> but it seems rather unlikely that the Iranian traditions which were held to provide the evidence for this view are sufficiently old for them to have influenced the author of the Martyrdom.<sup>42</sup> K. Galling linked the traditions about Isaiah in the Martyrdom with those about Isaiah and the cedar in the Talmuds and attempted to explain them as a reinterpretation of the mythology connected with Adonis,<sup>43</sup> but again this seems improbable.<sup>44</sup>

The demonology of the Martyrdom of Isaiah is a matter of some interest. The leader of the forces of evil, who has at his disposal a host of subordinate angels (2:2; cf. 5:9), is called variously Sammael (1:8, 11; 2:1; 5:15f.), Beliar (1:8f.; 2:4; 3:11; 5:1, [4], 15), and Satan (2:2, 7; 5:16). These three names, which are, of course, well known from other sources, appear to be used synonymously, and there is no real evidence to support the view of Charles that Sammael is subordinate to Beliar.<sup>45</sup> Two other names are also applied to this figure. The first, Malkira, is given in 1:8 as an additional name of Sammael and means in Hebrew "king of evil." The second, Matanbukus (2:4; there is a corrupt variant in 5:3, Mekembekus), apparently derives from a Hebrew expression meaning "gift of desolation."<sup>46</sup>

In different places both Beliar (1:9; 3:11; 5:1) and Sammael (2:1) are said to dwell in the heart of Manasseh, and it is under the inspiration of Beliar (or Sammael) that Manasseh, at the instigation of a Samaritan, has Isaiah put to death. This Samaritan is presented in the narrative as the agent of Beliar. The exact form of his name poses a particular problem. In the Greek fragment the name occurs as Belicheiar, Becheira, Melcheira, and Belchira; in the Latin palimpsest as Bechira; in the Ethiopic in a variety of forms, of which the most important are Belkira or Balkira, and Melkira or Malkira; in the Coptic as Belch[ira]; and finally in the Greek Legend as Melchias or Becheiras<sup>47</sup> (see the notes on 2:5, 12, 16; 3:1, 6, 11; 5:2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 12, 15, where the full evidence is given). Despite the wide range of the evidence for this name, it seems clear that we have to do essentially with only two

<sup>40</sup> For other Jewish traditions about Manasseh and Isaiah see L. Ginzberg, The Legends of the Jews (Philadelphia, 1946) vol. 6, pp. 370-76.

<sup>41</sup> The evidence for this view is summarized in Charles, Ascension, pp. xlvif. Cf. recently M. Philonenko, "Le Martyre d'Ésaïe et l'histoire de la secte de Qoumrân," Pseudépigraphe, vol. 1, p. 10.

<sup>42</sup> Cf. Caquot, Semítica 23 (1973) 87-89. V. Nikiprowetzky ("Pseudépigraphe de l'Ancien Testament et manuscrits de la Mer Morte: Réflexions sur une publication récente," REJ 128 [1969] 12f.) thinks that although the traditions about Isaiah in the Martyrdom were not based on Iranian sources, those in the Talmuds were.

<sup>43</sup> K. Galling, "Jesaia-Adonis," Orientalistische Literaturzeitung 33 (1930) cols. 98-102.

<sup>44</sup> Cf. Caquot, Semítica 23 (1973) 86f.

<sup>45</sup> Ascension, p. 7.

<sup>46</sup> Caquot (Semítica 23 [1973] 75) thinks the variant given in 5:3, Mekembekus, is preferable and argues that the name derives from a Hebrew expression meaning "He who creates tears." But this seems less likely.

<sup>47</sup> The story of the Martyrdom is given in ch. 3 of the Greek Legend, and "Melchias the false prophet" is mentioned in vss. 5, 7, 17, 18. But in vs. 10 there is a reference to "Melchias and Becheiras the false prophets."

alternatives, a name such as Belch(e)ira or Becheira, and a name such as Melcheira, and that one is an ancient variant or corruption of the other. The task is to discern the original form of the name and how the range of evidence for this name is to be explained.

A number of scholars have argued that the name of the Samaritan is derived from the Hebrew b'hîr-ra', "the elect of evil,"<sup>48</sup> and this would appear to be correct despite an apparent difficulty. The Greek variant Becheira (2:16; 3:1; cf. Becheiras in Greek Legend 3:10) and the Latin Bechira can readily be explained in terms of such a Hebrew name, but there is strong evidence in the Greek, Ethiopic, and Coptic versions, as well as in the Greek Legend (Melchias), for the occurrence of an l at the end of the first syllable of the name, and it is not so obvious that a form such as Belchira (Gk. 3:11) derives from the Hebrew b'hîr-ra'. However, Caquot has pointed out that a superfluous l is also found in the name Melchol, the Septuagint form of the Hebrew mîcāl,<sup>49</sup> and in any case it would be easy in the Ascension for an l to be introduced in view of the occurrence in the same context of a name with a similar beginning, i.e. Beliar.

The greater part of the evidence from the various translations points to the view that the name of the Samaritan was in Hebrew b'hîr-ra', and that this passed into Greek as Becheira, and then as Belch(e)ira, but there is some evidence for an alternative name (cf. Gk. 3:6, Melcheira; similarly the Eth., MS D in 5:2, 3, 8, 12, 15 and MS A in 5:8, 12; Greek Legend, Melchias) and it remains to be asked how this is to be explained. The variants of this type point back to a Hebrew malkira', "the king of evil," and this name also occurs as an additional name of Sammael in 1:8. There are two factors which could have contributed to the appearance of Melcheira as an alternative to Belcheira. The first is that it would not be difficult for the labials B and M to be confused; a comparable instance is found in 1 Enoch 6:7, where the Aramaic name m'ṣar'ēl occurs in one Greek version and in the Ethiopic as Batriel. The second is that there is a tendency in the narrative for Beliar (or Sammael) and his human agent to be confused; in 5:4-9 the Samaritan is actually presented as the devil in human form; and in view of this it is perhaps hardly surprising that he should in some instances be given a name (malkira') which also occurs as an additional name of Sammael.

In the present translation the name has been consistently given as Belkira, a transliteration of the Ethiopic form which appears to come closest to the original Hebrew, but all the variant spellings which the different translations attest have been supplied in the notes.

A study of the demonology of the Martyrdom led D. Flusser to the view that it reflected the dualistic theology of the Dead Sea community. He further argued that the author projected the religious disputes of his own day into the period of Isaiah, and that there are a number of parallels between the persons and events mentioned in the Martyrdom and those mentioned in the documents of the Qumran sect. In his view Isaiah represents the Teacher of Righteousness, Manasseh the Wicked Priest, and Belkira (interpreted as b'hîr-ra', "the elect of evil") the Teacher of the Lie. The withdrawal of Isaiah and his fellow prophets from Jerusalem to a mountain in a desert place corresponds to the withdrawal of the community to the wilderness; the arrest of Isaiah corresponds to the persecution of the community; and the command to Isaiah's followers to go to the district of Tyre and Sidon (5:13) corresponds to the flight of the community to the land of Damascus.<sup>50</sup> Flusser's views were accepted by J. van der Ploeg<sup>51</sup> and by M. Philonenko; but the latter, although accepting the main thrust of Flusser's arguments, offered a distinctive interpretation of his own. According to Philonenko, who accepts the views of A. Dupont-Sommer as to the origins of the Qumran community, the story of the Teacher of Righteousness, at least in its final stages, was a drama of three persons: the Teacher of Righteousness himself, and his opponents, Aristobulus II and Hyrcanus II. But the Martyrdom of Isaiah is also a drama of <sup>48</sup> Cf. G. H. Box in TED, p. xvii. This explanation is accepted by D. Flusser, IEJ 3 (1953) 35 (see n. 50); Philonenko, Pseudépigraphes, vol. 1, p. 7; Caquot, Semitaica 23 (1973) 75. The explanation suggested by W. Gesenius, Theologische Studien und Kritiken 3 [1830] 244; cf. Charles, Ascension, p. 14), that the name is derived from belqiryāh = b'al qiryāh = "lord of the world," is impossible.

<sup>49</sup> Semitaica 23 (1973) 75.

<sup>50</sup> Flusser, IEJ 3 (1953) 34-47. See also H. Burgmann, "Gerichtsherr und Generalankläger: Jonathan und Simon," RB 9 (1977) 28-33, 70-72.

<sup>51</sup> J. van der Ploeg, "Les manuscrits du Désert de Juda: Études et découvertes récentes," BO 11 (1954) 154f.

three persons: Isaiah, Manasseh, and the false prophet Belkira. Philonenko identifies Isaiah with the Teacher of Righteousness, Manasseh with Aristobulus II, and Belkira with Hyrcanus II, the person he, following Dupont-Sommer, believes to be the Wicked Priest. Furthermore, although Flusser specifically rejected the suggestion that we should conclude from the fact that Isaiah was martyred that the Teacher of Righteousness was executed by his opponents, Philonenko believes that the Martyrdom of Isaiah only makes sense if the Teacher of Righteousness was himself martyred.<sup>52</sup> Other scholars have accepted that there is a connection between the Martyrdom of Isaiah and the Qumran community, but without going into details.<sup>53</sup>

In comment on these views it must be said that although the idea that the Martyrdom of Isaiah offers a veiled history of the Qumran community is not impossible, it does seem rather unlikely. The Martyrdom is quite different in form from those Qumran writings, i.e. the biblical commentaries, which quite deliberately set out to reapply the Old Testament text to the events of the time in which the Qumran community existed, and in itself the Martyrdom offers no clue that it is to be interpreted in the way suggested by Flusser and Philonenko. The particular theory offered by Philonenko is also open to question on the grounds that an increasing number of scholars, if not the majority, are of the opinion that the Wicked Priest is to be identified, not with Hyrcanus II, but with either Jonathan or Simon.

Even if the Martyrdom does not provide a veiled history of the Qumran community, it might still be argued that this is a Qumran work. But although the dualistic theology of the Martyrdom is not out of accord with that contained in the Qumran writings, the distinctive language and theological emphasis of these writings are lacking. It thus seems unlikely that the Martyrdom is a sectarian document, and the most that could be said is that it was a writing used by the Qumran community. But, in fact, no traces of the Martyrdom have been found among the Qumran writings.<sup>54</sup>

The Martyrdom has the style of a narrative, but 3:13–4:22 is cast in the form of a prophecy given by Isaiah. The prophecy is linked rather awkwardly to the narrative (cf. 3:13) under the pretense that the giving of the prophecy was the reason for Beliar's anger with Isaiah. However, although presented as a revelation of the future, half of this material (3:13–31) is pseudo-prophecy and refers to events that at the time this passage was written had either already taken place (the life and death of the Beloved, 3:13–20) or were still in existence (the corruption of the Church, 3:21–31); it is only when the author refers to the reign of Beliar (4:1–13) and the second coming of the Lord (4:13–18) that we have genuine prophecy.

The description of the corruption of the Church (3:21–31) casts an interesting light on conditions in the area in which this section of the Ascension was written and provides a clue as to the purpose of its composition. The author, like the authors of 1 and 2 Timothy and 2 Peter, was concerned to warn his readers in no uncertain terms of the dangers which faced the Christian community. At the same time he wished to encourage them by insisting that the end of this age was near; the Church will be affected by false teaching and will suffer at the hands of wicked elders who seek office for the sake of money, but this will occur at the "approach" of the Beloved (3:21f.), i.e. when his second coming is near, and will be a sign of "the completion of the world" (4:1). The reign of Beliar, the length of which has been predetermined (4:12), will shortly begin, and then the Lord will come again both to punish Beliar and his hosts (4:14), and impious men (4:18), and to reward those Christians who have remained faithful to him (4:15–17). It may be observed that what is said here in a Christian context about Beliar provides a theological link with the surrounding narrative of the Martyrdom, where, as we have seen, a good deal of attention is paid to the role of this figure.

The Vision of Isaiah belongs, from a literary point of view, among the apocalyptic writings, and more precisely among those which take the form of an account of a heavenly journey. Perhaps the best-known example of this type is to be found in the Similitudes of Enoch (1En 37-71), but the closest parallels to the Vision of Isaiah are the accounts of journeys through several heavens in the Testament of Levi 2:6-3:10, 3 Baruch, and 2 Enoch. However, the Vision of Isaiah is unlike many earlier apocalypses: There is little emphasis on the end of this age; and the author is more concerned to describe the heavens and to give an account of past events, especially the life and death of the Lord.

<sup>52</sup> Philonenko, Pseudépigrapbes, vol. 1, pp. 1–10 (see n. 41).

<sup>53</sup> Cf. R. Meyer, "Himmelfahrt und Martyrium des Jesaja," RGG<sup>3</sup>, vol. 3, col. 336; L. Rost, Judaism outside the Hebrew Canon. An Introduction to the Documents, trans. D. E. Green (Nashville, 1976) p. 151.

<sup>54</sup> Cf. the comments of Hammershaimb, JSHRZ 2 (1973) 19; Nikiprowetzky, REJ 128 (1969) 5–13.

The author's purpose in writing the Vision seems to have been twofold. On the one hand he wished to encourage and reassure his readers by describing the blessings which awaited them in heaven. A good deal of attention is paid to the heavenly robes which the righteous will put on (a symbol of the transformation they will undergo in heaven), and to the crowns which they will wear and the thrones on which they will sit; the thrones are symbols of the fact that the righteous dead in heaven will share in the reign of Jesus, and the crowns are symbols of the reward which faithful Christians, particularly martyrs, will enjoy (see esp. 9:9-18, 24-26, and nn. i-k on 9:9f.). As further encouragement, the author hints that the righteous dead will enjoy a higher status in heaven than the angels (cf. 9:28, 33, 38, 41, and n. x<sup>2</sup> on 9:38).

On the other hand the author wished to present, as well as defend, certain views about the Trinity and the incarnation. What he has to say about the Trinity is of particular interest. In 9:27-42 Isaiah describes how, in the seventh heaven, he saw "the Lord" (9:27-32) and the Holy Spirit (9:33-36), and was given a glimpse of the glory of God (9:37-42). The Holy Spirit is described as an angel (9:36), as he is, in fact, frequently throughout the Ascension (see the list of references at n. s on 3:15). What is perhaps of greater interest is that a superior status is attributed to the Father in that "the Lord" and the angel of the Holy Spirit are presented as worshiping him (9:40).

In the last part of the Vision the author describes how Isaiah saw the descent of "the Lord" through the seven heavens, his birth, life, death, resurrection, and ascension (10:7-11:33), and what is said here is of interest from the point of view of his beliefs about the incarnation. Two emphases stand out. The author is concerned to explain how it was that the Lord's true nature remained concealed from the angels in the lower heavens (10:20-27), from the prince of this world and his hosts (10:29-31), and from men (11:14, 19). It is only when "the Lord" begins his ascent through the heavens that at last his true nature is recognized (11:23f.). The author's explanation for the fact that the identity of "the Lord" remained concealed (11:16) is that at the command of the Father (10:7-15) he progressively transformed himself. The author is also concerned to defend the reality of the Virgin Birth (11:2-16). This passage forms part of that section (11:2-22) which is attested only by the Ethiopic version, and is lacking in the second Latin translation and the Slavonic. But the primitive character of the narrative makes it difficult to believe that it did not form part of the original text. The concern to defend the reality of the Virgin Birth suggests that in this respect the Vision is to be compared with such writings as the Protoevangelium of James (which has often been seen to possess similarities with the Vision) and, in general, with the Infancy Gospels.<sup>55</sup>

It has been argued recently, on the basis of a number of parallels between the Vision of Isaiah and certain gnostic sources, that the Vision comes from "semi-Christian circles" or "Christian-gnostic circles."<sup>56</sup> However, although parallels do exist, it is not clear how far it is right to regard the Vision as a gnostic work.

<sup>55</sup> Cf. the comments of O. Cullmann on the purposes of the Infancy Gospels in HSW, vol. 1, p. 367. (Also cf. OdesSol, introduced and translated in the present collection. —J.H.C.)

<sup>56</sup> Cf. A. K. Helmbold, NTS 18 (1972) 222-27.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 125–30.

Delling, Bibliographie, p. 166.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 170–76.

Caquot, A. "Bref commentaire du 'Martyre d'Isaïe,'" Sem 23 (1973) 65–93.

Charles, R. H. The Ascension of Isaiah. London, 1900.

Dillmann, A. Ascensio Isaiae, aethiopice et latine. Leipzig, 1877.

Flusser, D. "The Apocryphal Book of Ascensio Isaiae and the Dead Sea Sect," IEJ 3 (1953) 34–47.

Hammershaimb, E. "Das Martyrium Jesajas," JSHRZ 2 (1973) 15–34.

Helmbold, A. K. "Gnostic Elements in the 'Ascension of Isaiah,'" NTS 18 (1972) 222–27.

Laurence, R. Ascensio Isaiae Vatis. Oxford, 1819.

Philonenko, M. "Le Martyre d'Ésaïe et l'histoire de la secte de Qoumrân," Pseudépigraphes, pp. 1–10.

Tisserant, E. Ascension d'Isaïe. Documents pour l'étude de la Bible; Paris, 1909. Pp. 100–9, 142–54.

Vaillant, A. "Un Apocryphe pseudo-bogomile: La Vision d'Isaïe," RESI 42 (1963) 109–21.

(After the preparation of this contribution, the following volume of collected essays appeared: Turdeanu, E. Apocryphes slaves et roumains de l'Ancien Testament [SVTP 5; Leiden, 1981]. In this book see the following: "Apocryphes bogomiles et apocryphes pseudo-bogomiles" [pp. 1–74], "La Vision d'Isaïe: Tradition orthodoxe et tradition hérétique" [pp. 145–72]; and the additional notes on pp. 436f., 438f. [with reference to an edition and translation of the Slav. version of the Vision of Isaiah by A. Vaillant].)

ABBREVIATIONS USED IN FOOTNOTES ON PAGES 156–176:

The following abbreviations have been used; for more details see Texts.

- Eth = the Eth. version of the Ascens on which the following translation is based.
- A, B, C, D, E = manuscripts of the Eth. version.
- Cop = the Cop. version of the Ascens.
- Gk = the Gk. fragment.
- Lat1 = a Lat. version of the Ascens.
- Lat2 = a second Lat. version of the Visls.
- Slav = the Slav. version of the Visls.

THE ASCENSION OF ISAIAH THE PROPHET

1. THE MARTYRDOM OF ISAIAH<sup>a</sup>

Hezekiah summons Manasseh

1 1 In the twenty-sixth year<sup>a</sup> of his reign Hezekiah king of Judah summoned<sup>b</sup>
 2 Manasseh his son,<sup>c</sup> for he was his only son.<sup>d</sup> •He summoned him in the presence of Isaiah, the son of Amoz, the prophet,<sup>e</sup> and in the presence of Josab<sup>f</sup> the son of 3 Isaiah, in order to hand over to him the words of righteousness which the king himself had seen,<sup>g</sup> •and (the words concerning) the eternal judgments,<sup>h</sup> and the 4 torments of Gehenna,<sup>i</sup> and the prince of this world,<sup>j</sup> and his angels, and his authorities, and his powers, •and the words concerning faith in the Beloved<sup>k</sup> which 5 he himself had seen in the fifteenth year of his reign during his sickness.<sup>l</sup> •And he handed to him the written words which Samnas<sup>m</sup> the secretary had written out,<sup>n</sup> and also those which Isaiah the son of Amoz had given to him, and to the prophets

1Pet 3:22
 Eph 6:12
 Mk 1:11; 9:7
 Mt 12:18
 Eph 1:6

a. The title "The Ascension of Isaiah the Prophet" is given in the Eth. MSS; the heading "1. The Martyrdom of Isaiah" has been supplied by the editor. Contrast the heading at ch. 6.

1 a. Greek Legend 1:1 "twenty-fifth"; Cop "sixteenth." "Sixteenth" would link more appropriately with the date given for Hezekiah's vision in vs. 4, but does not fit with the mention of Hezekiah's twentieth year in vs. 6.

b. Lit. "of the reign of Hezekiah king of Judah he summoned."

c. Greek Legend 1:1 adds "who was eleven years old," but this is inconsistent with its dating of the events in the twenty-fifth year of Hezekiah's reign. According to 2Kgs 18:2 and 21:1 Hezekiah reigned for twenty-nine years, and Manasseh was twelve years old when he began to reign; this would mean that Manasseh was only eight in Hezekiah's twenty-fifth year.

d. Lit. "for he alone (was) to him."

e. The translation assumes that "the prophet" refers to Isaiah, but it could refer to Amoz; this latter view would imply that Amoz, the father of Isaiah (Isa 1:1), was identified with the prophet Amos, an identification that is explicitly made in 4:22. B reads "Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz the prophet." In late Jewish tradition Amoz was regarded as a prophet, while in Christian tradition Amoz and Amos were frequently confused with one another; in the LXX and the Eth. OT the names Amoz and Amos are spelled the same way.

f. I.e. Shear-jashub, cf. Isa 7:3. The Eth. Josab (the variant Joseb occurs throughout) is the form used in the Eth. version of Isa 7:3.

g. Vss. 2b-6a are a Christian interpolation in the original Martyrdom whose purpose is in part to link together the different elements in the Ascension; vss. 5b-6a, which describe a vision of Isaiah, allude clearly to chs. 6-11; vss. 2b-5a, which describe a vision seen by the king, have sometimes been thought to allude to 3:13-4:22, but in fact 3:13-4:22 is presented as a revelation given through Isaiah, not the king. What appears to be a more original version of the scene described in ch. 1 is preserved in the Opus Imperfectum, an incomplete work on Mt attributed to the sixth century. According to this work it was when Hezekiah fell ill that he summoned Manasseh; his purpose was to give him commands (for which cf. vss. 6b, 7) about the fear of God, and about how he should rule. The account in the Opus Imperfectum has, to a greater extent than the account in the Ascension, the character of a testament scene, i.e. a scene in which a great figure gives his last commands to his children or followers on his deathbed. For the text (quoted in Charles, Ascension, pp. 8f.) see PG, vol. 56, col. 626.

h. B C D "the judgments of this world."

i. Gehenna is mentioned elsewhere in Ascens only in 4:14.

j. "and the prince of this world": translation based on a minor correction of the text, cf. 10:29; B C D "and [D "which is"] the place of punishment of this world"; A "which is the eternal place of punishment."

k. The title "the Beloved" occurs frequently in Ascens as a Christian designation of Jesus. Thus it is used in the section 3:13-4:22 (cf. 3:13, 17, 18; 4:3, 6, 9, 18, 21) and in chs. 6-11 (cf. 7:17, 23; 8:18, 25; 9:12); the remaining occurrences (1:4, 5, 7, 13; 5:15) are all to be attributed to the Christian editor of Ascens.

l. Cf. 2Kgs 20:1-11; Isa 38; 2Chr 32:24. The date "in the fifteenth year" has been deduced from the OT; Hezekiah reigned for twenty-nine years (2Kgs 18:2), but at the time of his sickness was promised a further fifteen years of life (2Kgs 20:6). There is no OT tradition that Hezekiah saw a vision when he was ill, but the author was perhaps building on the tradition that he was given a "sign" (cf. 2Kgs 20:8; 2Chr 32:24).

m. I.e. Shebnah, cf. 6:17 and 2Kgs 18:18. The Eth. Samnas (var. Samenias) reflects the spelling of the name in the Eth. OT and the LXX.

n. These words appear to imply that Hezekiah dictated the content of his vision to Samnas; they are perhaps based on the tradition in Isa 38:9 that Hezekiah composed a "writing" (so the Heb.; JB "canticle") at the time of his sickness. The remainder of vs. 5 and vs. 6a refer to Visls, chs. 6-11.

also, that they might write out and store up with him what he himself had seen in the house of the king<sup>o</sup> concerning the judgment of the angels, and concerning the destruction of this world, and concerning the robes of the saints<sup>p</sup> and their going out,<sup>q</sup> and concerning their transformation and the persecution and ascension of the Beloved. •In the twentieth year of the reign of Hezekiah Isaiah had seen the words of this prophecy and had handed them to Josab his son. And<sup>r</sup> while (Hezekiah) was giving his commands, with Josab the son of Isaiah standing by, 7 Isaiah said to Hezekiah the king, and not only in the presence of Manasseh did he say (it) to him, “As the LORD lives<sup>s</sup> whose name has not been transmitted to this world, and as the Beloved of my LORD lives, and as the Spirit which speaks in me lives,<sup>t</sup> all these commands and these words will have no effect on Manasseh your son, and through the deeds of his hands, tormented in body I will depart. 8 And Sammael Malkira<sup>u</sup> will serve Manasseh and will do everything he wishes, 9 and he will be a follower of Beliar<sup>v</sup> rather than of me. •He will cause many in Jerusalem and Judah to desert the true faith, and Beliar<sup>w</sup> will dwell in Manasseh, 10 and by his hands I will be sawed in half.” •And when Hezekiah heard these words, he wept very bitterly, and tore his robes, and threw earth on his head, and 11 fell on his face.<sup>x</sup> •And Isaiah said to him, “Sammael’s<sup>y</sup> plan against Manasseh is 12 complete; there will be no benefit to you from this day.”<sup>z</sup> •And Hezekiah thought in his heart that he would kill Manasseh his son, •but Isaiah said to Hezekiah, “The Beloved<sup>a2</sup> has made your plan ineffective, and the thought of your heart will not come about; for with this calling have I been called, and the inheritance of the Beloved will I inherit.”<sup>b2</sup>

Manasseh’s wicked reign

1 2 And it came about that after Hezekiah had died, and Manasseh had become king, (Manasseh) did not remember the commands of Hezekiah his father, but 2 forgot<sup>a</sup> them; and Sammael dwelt in Manasseh and clung closely to him. •And

o. A D E “what the king alone had seen.”

p. D E “the righteous.” The heavenly robes which the saints put on after death are a symbol of their transformed state; they are mentioned frequently in the Christian portions of Ascens; cf. 3:25; 4:16f.; 7:22; 8:14, 26; 9:2, 9–11, 17f., 24–26; 11:40. Cf. also 2Cor 5:1–4; Rev 3:4f.; 6:11; 7:9, 13f.; 4Ezra 2:39, 44f.

q. I.e. their departure from this life. But Greek Legend 1:2 more plausibly refers both the “going out” and the “transformation” to the Beloved; hence perhaps read “and concerning the going out, and the transformation, and the persecution and ascension of the Beloved.” In this case the “going out” will be the descent of the Beloved through the seven heavens, cf. 3:13; 10:7–31.

r. The narrative of the Martyrdom is resumed here vs. 2a.

s. “As the LORD lives”: the common OT oath formula, cf. e.g. 1Sam 14:39, 45. I have rendered Eth. Ḥgzīʾābāher by “LORD”; Ḥgzīʾa by “Lord”; and ʾAmḵak by “God.” The first of these commonly translates Heb. “Yahweh” (LXX: kuriōs), the last the Heb. “Elohim” (LXX: theos).

t. “and as the Beloved . . . in me lives”: Christian editorial addition, see n. k on vs. 4.

u. According to Jewish tradition Sammael was originally one of the chief archangels, but after inciting the serpent to tempt Eve he became the leader of the Satans. It is in such a role that he appears in Ascens, where Sammael seems to be merely another name for Beliar (see n. v). Sammael is mentioned also in 1:11; 2:1; 3:13; 5:15f.; 7:9; 11:41 (in the last passage called Sammael Satan). Malkira, used here as an additional name for Sammael, means in Heb. “king of evil”; elsewhere this name occurs as a variant of Belkira, the name of the Samaritan opponent of Isaiah (see 2:12); cf. Intro.

v. Beliar: a variant form of Belial, a common name for the devil in the period, cf. 2Cor 6:15; Jub 1:20; 15:33; TLevi 3:3; 18:12; 19:1; TDan 5:1, 10f. (and pass. in T12P); IQS 1.17, 23f.; CD 4.13, 15; 5.8. In Ascens Beliar is mentioned elsewhere in 1:9; 2:4; 3:11, 13; 4:2, 4, 14, 16, 18; 5:1, (4), 15.

w. Greek Legend 1:9 “Satan.”

x. Conventional signs of distress, cf. 2Sam 13:19, 31; Job 2:12.

y. Greek Legend 1:11 has “Satan” for “Sammael.”

z. “from this day”: so B C; D E “from that day” (Greek Legend 1:11f. takes the phrase with the following vs., “And at that time Hezekiah thought . . .”); A “from those words,” an allusion to the commands mentioned in vss. 6b, 7.

a2. “The Beloved”: the use of the title betrays Christian influence, see n. k on vs. 4.

b2. “and the inheritance . . . inherit”: Christian editorial addition, as the use of the title “the Beloved” indicates; as an heir of Jesus, Isaiah’s fate is to be one of suffering, cf. 8:12; Rom 8:17.

2 a. A play on words linking the name Manasseh with the Heb. verb “to forget” (nāṣāh), cf. Gen 41:31; the existence of this wordplay points to the fact that Martis was composed in Heb. The description of the reign of Manasseh (vss. 1–6) reflects that of 2Kgs 21:1–18; 2Chr 33:1–10.

Manasseh abandoned the service of the LORD of his father, and he served Satan,<sup>b</sup> 3 and his angels, and his powers. *And he turned his father's house, which had been in the presence of Hezekiah, away [from]<sup>c</sup> the words of wisdom and the 4 service of the LORD. *Manasseh turned them away so that they served<sup>d</sup> Beliar; for the angel of iniquity who rules this world is Beliar, whose name is Matanbukus.<sup>e</sup>
 And he rejoiced over Jerusalem because of Manasseh, [and he strengthened him]<sup>f</sup> in causing apostasy, and in the iniquity which was disseminated in Jerusalem.
 5 And sorcery and magic, augury and divination, fornication and adultery,<sup>g</sup> and the persecution of the righteous increased through Manasseh, and through Belkira,<sup>h</sup> and through Tobiah the Canaanite, and through John of Anathoth, and through 6 Zaliq Neway.<sup>i</sup> *And the rest of the acts, behold they are written in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel.

1:8
 1:3; 4:2; 10:29
 Jn 12:31; 14:30;
 16:11; 2Cor 4:4
 Eph 2:2
 2Kgs 21:9;
 2Chr 33:9
 2Kgs 21:6;
 2Chr 33:6
 2Kgs 21:16
 2Kgs 21:17
 2Chr 33:18

Isaiah withdraws from Jerusalem

7 And when Isaiah the son of Amoz saw the great<sup>j</sup> iniquity which was being committed in Jerusalem, and the service of Satan, and his wantonness,<sup>k</sup> he withdrew 8 from Jerusalem and dwelt in Bethlehem of Judah. *And there also there was great iniquity; and he withdrew from Bethlehem and dwelt on a mountain<sup>l</sup> in a desert 9 place. *And Micah the prophet, and the aged Ananias, and Joel, and Habakkuk, and Josab his son,<sup>m</sup> and many of the faithful who believed in the ascension into 10 heaven,<sup>n</sup> withdrew and dwelt on the mountain. *All of them were clothed in sackcloth, and all of them were prophets; they had nothing with them, but were 11 destitute, and they all lamented bitterly over the going astray of Israel. *And they had nothing to eat except wild herbs (which) they gathered from the mountains, and when they had cooked (them), they ate (them) with Isaiah the prophet. And they dwelt on the mountains and on the hills for two years of days.

2:2
 1:2
 2Kgs 1:8
 Zech 13:4
 Mt 3:4; Mk 1:6
 2Kgs 4:38f;
 4Ezra 9:26;
 12:51

The story of Zedekiah and Micaiah

12 And after this, while they were in the desert, there was a certain man in Samaria named Belkira,<sup>o</sup> of the family of Zedekiah<sup>p</sup> the son of Chenaanah, the false prophet, whose dwelling (was) in Bethlehem.<sup>q</sup> And Zedekiah<sup>r</sup> the son of Chenaanah,

1Kgs 22:11

b. The very common name for the devil; in the Ascension used synonymously with Beliar and Samael and mentioned elsewhere in 2:7; 5:16; 7:9; 11:23, 41, 43.

c. Correction based on Greek Legend 3:3.

d. So D; A B C "Manasseh turned his heart away to serve."

e. Another name for Beliar which possibly derives from a Heb. expression meaning "gift of desolation" (contrast the OT name Mattaniah [cf. e.g. 2Kgs 24:17], which means "gift of Yahweh"); see also 5:3.

f. Correction (apparently supported by Gk); Eth "and he held him firmly."

g. "and adultery"; so Eth; Gk omits.

h. So D; A "Belkira"; B C "Balkira"; Gk omits. Since Belkira is apparently introduced for the first time in vs. 12, the name is probably an addition in Eth. here. The origin of the following list of names is uncertain; they are not mentioned in 2Kgs 21 or 2Chr 33.

i. So A; B C D "Zaliqa"; Gk "Zadok, the overseer of the works." The Eth. names are probably corruptions of an expression meaning "the overseer of the works."

j. "great"; so A; B C D omit.

k. Gk "and his triumph."

l. The narrative has possibly been influenced by the story of Elijah, 1Kgs 19:1-8.

m. Micah, Joel, and Habakkuk are presented as contemporaries of Isaiah, but this was, in fact, true only of Micah. It is not known who is meant by "the aged Ananias." Micah, Ananias, Joel, and Josab are mentioned together in 6:7, and it is possible that the names have been taken from there. In Gk. and Eth. the names Micah (cf. 4:22) and Micaiah (cf. 2:12, 13, 16) are identical, and it could be the latter who is meant here (and in 6:7, 17; 7:1; 8:24).

n. So Eth; Gk "who believed that (he) had ascended into heaven." Gk refers to the ascension of Isaiah and makes no sense; Eth is much more vague, but apparently refers to the ascension of Jesus; neither version seems to preserve the original (Jewish) text of Martls.

o. So A; B C D "Balkira"; Gk "Belicheiar." It is this individual—in fact the agent of the devil who in 5:4-9 is presented as the devil himself in human form—who brings about the death of Isaiah; he is mentioned further in 3:1, 6, 11; 5:2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 12, 15; cf. 1:8; 2:5, 16.

p. D "Hezekiah"; cf. n. r.

q. Gk "Bethany."

r. So Gk; Eth by mistake "Hezekiah," cf. n. p. The account of the martyrdom is interrupted at this point by a digression about Zedekiah and Micaiah (vss. 12b-16). The narrative of the martyrdom is resumed in 3:1. The text of vss. 12b-16 is corrupt and difficult in a number of places.

who was the brother of his father,<sup>s</sup> was the teacher in the days of Ahab, king of Israel, of the four hundred prophets of Baal.<sup>1</sup> And he struck and abused Micaiah, the son of Amida,<sup>u</sup> the prophet. •And he<sup>v</sup> was abused by Ahab, and Micaiah<sup>w</sup> was thrown into prison with Zedekiah the prophet;<sup>z</sup> they were with Ahaziah the son of Alamerem Balalaaw.<sup>y</sup> •And Elijah the prophet from Tishbe in Gilead reproved Ahaziah and Samaria, and he prophesied concerning Ahaziah that he would die on his bed of sickness, [and] Samaria<sup>z</sup> would be given into the hand of Shalmaneser,<sup>a2</sup> because he had killed the prophets of the LORD. •And when the false<sup>b2</sup> prophets who (were) with Ahaziah the son of Ahab<sup>c2</sup> and their teacher Jalerias<sup>d2</sup> from mount Joel<sup>e2</sup> heard— •now he<sup>f2</sup> was a brother of Zedekiah—when they heard, they persuaded Ahaziah the king of Aguaron<sup>g2</sup> and [killed]<sup>h2</sup> Micaiah.

1Kgs 22:6
1Kgs 22:24

1Kgs 22:24-28
1Kgs 22:52
1Kgs 17:1

2Kgs 1:1-8
3:2; 2Kgs 17:1-6

Isaiah is accused<sup>d</sup>

1 3 And Belkira<sup>b</sup> discovered and saw the place of Isaiah and of the prophets who were with him, for he himself dwelt<sup>c</sup> in the district of Bethlehem, and he was a follower of Manasseh. And he prophesied lies in Jerusalem, and there were many
2 from Jerusalem who joined with him, but he himself was from Samaria. •And it came about, when Shalmaneser<sup>d</sup> the king of Assyria came and captured Samaria, and took the nine<sup>e</sup> tribes into captivity, and led them to the provinces<sup>f</sup> of the 3 Medes and the rivers of Gozan,<sup>g</sup> this youth escaped and came to Jerusalem in the days of Hezekiah king of Judah, but he did not walk in the ways of his 4 Samaritan father because he feared Hezekiah. •And he was found in the days of 5 Hezekiah speaking words of iniquity in Jerusalem. •And the servants of Hezekiah

2Kgs 17:1-6;
18:9-11
4Ezra 13:40
2Bar 62:5;
77:19; 78:1

s. I.e. Zedekiah was the uncle of Belkira.

t. "of Baal": so A, Gk; B C D omit. The writer has confused the 400 prophets of Yahweh of 1Kgs 22:6 with the prophets of Baal mentioned in 1Kgs 18:19, 22.

u. Eth "Amida" or "Amada"; Gk "Iemmada." All the forms are corrupt for an original "Imlah" (1Kgs 22:8).

v. The reference is apparently to Micaiah, although this is not made clear in either Eth or Gk.

w. "Micaiah": so A C D, Gk; B omits (which makes better sense).

x. "with Zedekiah the prophet": so Eth; Gk "and he was with Zedekiah the false prophet." But in either case it is nonsense to say that Zedekiah was "with" Micaiah in prison. Possibly the original Heb. text read "The people of Zedekiah the false prophet were with Ahaziah . . ." but the word for "people" (am) was wrongly taken by the Gk. translator as the word for "with" (im). Underlying vss. 13b-16 is an otherwise unknown tradition about the fate of Micaiah in the reign of Ahaziah, but many details are obscure.

y. "Alamerem Balalaaw" (B "Balaaw"; D "Balew"): so Eth; Gk "Ala[m] in Semmoäa." The text is obscure. "Alam" and "Alamerem" are corruptions of "Ahab," cf. Gk in vs. 15; the remainder of the expression (in Gk and Eth) is perhaps a corruption of "in Samaria."

z. So Gk; Eth by mistake "in Samaria." There is nothing in 2Kgs 1 to provide a basis for what is said about Samaria in this verse.

a2. Correction; Eth "Leba Naser" (or similar); Gk "Alnasar."

b2. "false": Gk omits.

c2. Gk "Alam," cf. n. y on vs. 13.

d2. So B, C; Gk "Iallarias"; Lat1 "Gamarias." The OT contains no reference to a person with such a name. A D omit "and their teacher Jalerias."

e2. So Eth; Gk "Islal," assumed to be corrupt for "Israel"; Lat1 "Efrem." "Mount Ephraim" (JB: "the highlands of Ephraim") is mentioned frequently in the OT (e.g. Josh 17:15) and is probably the reading to be preferred; it is possible that "Israel" was substituted for "Ephraim," and that "Islal" and "Joel" are corruptions of this.

f2. "now he": so Lat1, the reference correctly being to Jalerias. Eth and Gk add a gloss: Gk "now he, Becheir(a)"; Eth "now that Ibkira [so A; B "Abkira"; C "Ibakira"; D "Barakira"—the Eth. forms are all corruptions of the Gk.]. But a reference to this enemy of Isaiah, who in any case is said to be the nephew of Zedekiah (2:12), is out of place here.

g2. "Aguaron": so Eth; Gk, Lat1 "Gomorrhah" (used here as a contemptuous name for Samaria, cf. 3:10; Isa 1:10; Jer 23:14). Eth. "Aguaron" is either a corruption of "Gomorrhah" or, more naturally in Eth., of "Ekron." Ahaziah is king of Ekron because he consults the god of Ekron (2Kgs 1:1-16).

h2. Supplied from Gk, Lat1; Eth omits by mistake.

3 a. The narrative of the martyrdom is resumed from 2:12a.

b. A B C "Balkira"; D "Borakira"; Gk "Becheira"; Lat1 "Bechira." See 2:12. Eth by mistake links the name with the previous vs. ("[killed] Micaiah and Belkira. And he discovered . . .").

c. "dwelt": so D, Gk, Lat1; A B C corrupt.

d. So Lat1; Eth "Alagar Zagar" (or similar); Gk "Algasar"; for these corruptions of "Shalmaneser" cf. 2:14.

e. Gk, Lat1 "nine and a half."

f. "provinces": so Eth, cf. MT of 2Kgs 17:6; 18:11; Gk "mountains" (Lat1 "mountain") = LXX of 2Kgs 17:6; 18:11. (Eth. OT follows former in 18:11, latter in 17:6).

g. So Gk, Lat1; Eth "Tazon."

accused him, and he escaped to the district of Bethlehem and persuaded<sup>h</sup> . . .
 6 And Belkira<sup>a</sup> accused Isaiah and the prophets who (were) with him, saying, "Isaiah and the prophets<sup>i</sup> who (are) with him prophesy against Jerusalem and against the cities of Judah that they will be laid waste, and also (against) Benjamin that it will go into captivity, and also against you, O lord king, that you will go (bound) 7 with hooks and chains of iron. •But they prophesy lies against Israel and Judah.<sup>k</sup> 2Chr 33:11 8,9 And Isaiah himself has said, 'I see more than Moses the prophet.' •Moses said,
 'There is no man who can see the LORD and live.' But Isaiah has said, 'I have 10 seen the LORD, and behold I am alive.' •Know, therefore, O king, that they (are) false prophets.<sup>l</sup> And he has called Jerusalem Sodom, and the princes of Judah and Jerusalem he has declared (to be) the people of Gomorrah.'" And he brought many 11 accusations against Isaiah and the prophets before Manasseh. •But Beliar dwelt in the heart of Manasseh and in the heart of the princes of Judah and Benjamin, and of the eunuchs, and of the king's counselors. And the words of Belkira<sup>m</sup> 12 pleased him very much, •and he sent and seized Isaiah."

A prophecy about the Beloved and the Church<sup>n</sup>

13 For Beliar was very angry with Isaiah because of the vision, and because of the 5:15 exposure with which he had exposed Sammael, and that through him there had been revealed the coming of the Beloved from the seventh heaven, and his 1:8
 transformation, and his descent, and the form into which he must be transformed, 1:4
 (namely) the form of a man, and the persecution with which he would be 4:14, 16; 6:13;
 persecuted, and the torments with which the children of Israel must torment him, 9:6
 and the coming of the twelve disciples, and the teaching,<sup>p</sup> and that before the sabbath he must be crucified on a tree, and be crucified with wicked men<sup>q</sup> and 14 that he would be buried in a grave, •and the twelve who (were) with him would Jn 19:31
 15 be offended at him; and the guards who would guard the grave;<sup>r</sup> •and the descent
 Mt 26:31
 of the angel of the church which is in the heavens, whom he will summon in the Mt 27:62-66;
 28:4
 16 last days; and that the angel of the Holy Spirit<sup>s</sup> •and Michael, the chief of the Rev 2:1, 8
 Heb 12:22;
 Rev 3:12; 21:2
 17 holy angels, will open his grave on the third day, •and that<sup>t</sup> Beloved, sitting on Lk 24:4;
 18 their shoulders,<sup>u</sup> will come forth and send out his twelve<sup>v</sup> disciples, •and they will Jn 20:12
 11:22
 teach all nations and every tongue the resurrection of the Beloved, and those who Mt 28:19
 believe in his cross will be saved, and in<sup>w</sup> his ascension<sup>a</sup> to the seventh heaven 9:26
 19 from where he came; •and that many who believe in him will speak through the 20 Holy Spirit, •and there will be many signs and miracles in those days. 11:18

h. So Eth; Gk "and they persuaded"; Lat1 omits; Cop "he persuaded Belch[ira]." The text is defective in Eth and Gk, but the fragmentary evidence of Cop confirms the old suggestion that the missing object of the verb was Belkira; for the construction cf. 2:16. The subject of the verb remains uncertain; it has been thought to be either the false prophets (cf. the plural verb in Gk) or Beliar (cf. the singular verb in Eth and Cop); but we expect a human subject as in 2:16.

i. A B C "Balkira"; D "Barakira"; Gk "Melcheira"; Lat1 "Bechira." Cf. 2:12.

j. "the prophets": so C D, Gk, Lat1; A B "those."

k. "against Israel and Judah": so Eth, Lat1 (Lat1 adds "and Jerusalem"); Gk "and they hate Israel and Judah and Benjamin, and their word (is) evil against Judah and Israel."

l. Gk, Lat1 "that he is a liar."

m. So A D; B C "Balkira"; Gk "Belchira"; Lat1 "Bechire." See 2:12.

n. The narrative of the martyrdom is resumed in 5:1.

o. Section 3:13-4:22 is a Christian interpolation within the Jewish MartIs; cf. Intro. This section is presented as an account of a vision which Isaiah had experienced earlier in his life; the account of the vision describes the life and death of the Beloved, the early history of the Church, the reign of Beliar, and the second coming of the Lord. The beginning of vs. 13 provides a summary of chs. 6-11.

p. "and the coming . . . teaching": so Eth; Gk "and the teaching of the twelve."

q. "and that before . . . men": so Eth; Gk "and that he must be crucified with wicked men."

r. Gk "and the guarding of the guards of the tomb."

s. "the angel of the Holy Spirit": for this expression (instead of "the Holy Spirit" or "the Spirit") cf. 4:21; 7:23; 8:14; 9:36, 39, 40; 10:4; 11:4, 33. In Gk there is a lacuna before "the angel of the Holy Spirit," and it has been suggested that the name "Gabriel" stood there.

t. Gk "the."

u. Cf. GPet 39f., where Jesus emerges from the tomb supported by two angelic figures.

v. "twelve": Gk omits.

w. "and in": so Gk; A omits "in"; B C D omit "and."

x. "ascension": so Gk; in Eth the word is normally translated "resurrection."

The corruption of the Church

21 And afterwards,<sup>y</sup> at his approach, his disciples will abandon the teaching<sup>z</sup> of the 22 twelve apostles, and their faith, and their love, and their purity. •And there will 23 be much contention<sup>a2</sup> at his coming and<sup>b2</sup> at his approach. •And in those days
 24 (there will be) many who will love office, although lacking wisdom. •And there 25 will be many wicked elders and shepherds who wrong their sheep, [and they will 26 be rapacious because they do not have holy shepherds].<sup>c2</sup> •And many will exchange 27 the glory of the robes of the saints<sup>a2</sup> for the robes of those who love money; and 28 there will be much respect of persons in those days, and lovers of the glory of 29 this world. •And there will be many slanderers<sup>e2</sup> and [much]<sup>f2</sup> vainglory at the 30 approach of the LORD, and the Holy Spirit will withdraw from many. •And in 31 those days there will not be many prophets, nor those who speak reliable words, except one here and there in different places, •because of the spirit of error<sup>e2</sup> and of fornication, and of vainglory, and of the love of money, which there will be among those who are said to be servants of that One, and among those who receive that One. •And among the shepherds and the elders there will be great hatred towards one another. •For there will be great jealousy in the last days, for everyone will speak whatever pleases him in his own eyes. •And they will make ineffective<sup>h2</sup> the prophecy of the prophets who were before me, and my visions also<sup>i2</sup> . . . they will make ineffective, in order that they may speak what bursts out of their heart.

The reign of Beliar<sup>a</sup>

1 4 Now, therefore, Hezekiah and Josab my son, [these are the days of the 2 completion of the world].<sup>b</sup> •And after it has been brought to completion, Beliar will descend, the great angel,<sup>c</sup> the king of this world, which he has ruled ever since it existed. He will descend from his firmament in the form of a man, a king 3 of iniquity, a murderer of his mother<sup>d</sup>—this is the king of this world—•and<sup>e</sup> will persecute the plant which the twelve apostles of the Beloved will have planted; 4 some of the twelve will be given into his hand.<sup>f</sup> •This angel,<sup>g</sup> Beliar, will come in the form of that king, and with him will come all the powers of this world, 5 and they will obey him in every wish. •By his word he will cause the sun to rise<sup>h</sup> 6 by night, and the moon also he will make to appear at the sixth hour. •And he will do everything he wishes in the world; he will act and speak like the Beloved, 7 and will say, “I am the LORD, and before me there was no one.” •And all men

y. “afterwards”: Gk omits. For the thought of vss. 21–31 cf. Acts 20:29f.; 1Tim 1:3–7; 4:1; 2Tim 3:1–9; 4:3f.; 2Pet 2:1.

z. Gk “prophecy.”

a2. Gk “many heresies.”

b2. “at his coming and”: so Eth; Gk omits.

c2. “and they . . . shepherds”: correction of A C D based on Gk, which apparently read “[which will be ravag]ed because they do not have pure shepherds”; B “and they will ravage the holy flock.”

d2. Perhaps an indication that Christians adopted a special form of dress.

e2. Gk “slanders”; Eth by mistake repeats the word for “slanderers,” but in a different form.

f2. Supplied from the Gk.

g2. “error”: so B C, Gk; A D “lying.”

h2. Gk “will neglect.”

i2. Eth adds “which,” possibly a corruption of the word for “these”; Gk “and these visions of mine.”

4 a. Vss. 1–13 describe the coming of Beliar as the “Antichrist,” the demonic ruler of the last days, cf. 1Jn 2:18, 22; 4:3; 2Jn 7; 2Thes 2:3–10;

SibOr 3:63–76. In vss. 2b–4a this belief is linked with the expectation, which was current for some time after his death, that Nero would return, cf. SibOr 4:119–39; 5:28–34, 99–110, 137–54, 361–85; Suetonius, Nero 57; Tacitus, Histories 2:8f.

b. “these . . . world”: correction based on Gk; Eth corrupt.

c. Or “ruler,” cf. vs. 4.

d. Nero had his mother, Agrippina, murdered in A.D. 59; cf. SibOr 4:121; 5:29f., 142, 363.

e. “this is . . . world—and”: so Eth (B “who is . . .”; C omits “world”), a corruption of Gk “who himself, even this king.”

f. Gk is apparently more precise, “[one] of the twelve”—an allusion to the martyrdom of Peter or Paul. In vs. 3 the author refers to events of history, Nero’s persecution of the Church (“the plant”), rather than to the future activities of Beliar, the “Antichrist.” The description reverts to the future in vs. 4.

g. Or “ruler” (Gk actually has “ruler”), cf. vs. 2. C D, Gk omit “Beliar.”

h. “he will cause . . . to rise”: so D; A B C “the sun will rise.” Cf. SibOr 3:63–65; 4Ezra 5:4.

8 in the world will believe in him. •They will sacrifice to him and will serve him, 9 saying, "This is the LORD, and besides him there is no other." •And the majority of those who have associated together to receive the Beloved he will turn aside 0,11 after him. •And the power of his miracles will be in every city and district, •and 12 he will set up his image before him in every city.<sup>i</sup> •And he will rule for three 13 years and seven months and twenty-seven days.<sup>j</sup> •And many faithful and saints, when they saw him for whom they were hoping, who was crucified, Jesus the LORD Christ—after I, Isaiah, had seen him who was crucified and ascended<sup>k</sup>— and who believed in him, of these few will be left<sup>l</sup> in those days as his servants, fleeing from desert to desert<sup>m</sup> as they await his coming.<sup>n</sup>

SibOr 5:34
 Rev 13:4, 8, 12

3:28
 ZThes 2:9; Rev
 13:14; 19:20;
 Mt 24:24; Mk
 13:22
 Rev 13:14f.;
 14:11

Cor 1:7; Phil
 3:20; 1Thes
 1:10; Heb 9:28

The second coming of the Lord

14 And after [one thousand] three hundred and thirty-two days<sup>o</sup> the LORD will come with his angels and with the hosts of the saints from the seventh heaven, with the glory of the seventh heaven, and will drag Beliar, and his hosts also, into Gehenna.
 15 And he will give rest to the pious whom he finds in the body in this world, but 16 the sun will be ashamed,<sup>p</sup> •and (to) all who because of their faith in him have cursed Beliar and his kings. But the saints will come with the LORD with their robes<sup>q</sup> which are stored up in the seventh heaven above; with the LORD will come those whose spirits are clothed, they will descend and be present in the world, and the LORD will strengthen those who are found in the body, together with the saints in the robes of the saints, and will serve those who have kept watch in this 17 world. •And after this they will be turned in their robes upwards, and their body
 18 will be left in the world. •Then the voice of the Beloved will reprove in anger this heaven, and this earth, and the mountains, and the hills, and the cities, and the desert, and the trees, and the angel of the sun,<sup>r</sup> and that of the moon, and everywhere that Beliar has appeared and acted openly in this world. There will be a resurrection and a judgment in their midst in those days, and the Beloved will cause fire to rise from him, and it will consume all the impious, and they 19 will become as if they had not been created.<sup>s</sup> •And the rest of the words of the 20 vision are written in the vision of Babylon.<sup>t</sup> •And the rest of the vision about the LORD, behold it is written in parables in the words of mine that are written in the 21 book which I prophesied openly. •And the descent of the Beloved into Sheol, behold it is written in the section where the LORD says, "Behold, my son shall 1Thes 3:13;

 ZThes 1:7; 1En
 1:4, 9; Jude 14
 3:13; 4:16; 6:13;
 9:6
 1:3; Rev 19:20
 ZThes 1:7
 Isa 24:23
 1Thes 3:13; 4:14

Rev 20:4

Lk 12:37

1Cor 15:50-53;
 2Cor 5:1-4;
 Phil 3:21

Rev 20:11-15

ZThes 1:8; 2:8;
 Isa 11:4

9:16; 10:8

Isa 52:13 LXX

i. An allusion to the cult of the Roman emperors and the practice of erecting statues of them.

j. I.e. 1,335 days according to the Julian calendar; the author is drawing on Dan 12:12, itself an elaboration of the tradition in Dan 7:25; 12:7 that the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes would last three and a half years ("a time, two times, and half a time"; cf. Rev 11:2f.; 12:6, 14; 13:5 and Lk 4:25; Jas 5:17). AscenIs 4:12, 14 are cited by the 11th-cent. chronicler George Cedrenus, who attributes the passage to THez. According to Cedrenus the reign of the Antichrist would last 1,290 days; for this variant cf. Dan 12:11.

k. "after I . . . ascended": an editorial insertion linking 3:13-4:22 to its context.

l. "And many faithful . . . few will be left": the translation reflects the somewhat awkward Eth.; the sense seems to be that of the many faithful and saints who saw and believed in Jesus, few will be left.

m. The desert was the traditional place of safety in times of persecution, cf. 1Kgs 17:2f.; 19:3f.; 1Mac 2:28-30; Rev 12:6, 14.

n. B C D "the coming of the Beloved."

o. "one thousand" was omitted by mistake, and similarly "two" written by mistake for "five," see vs. 12. Translation follows A; B C "thirty hundred and thirty-two"; D "thirty hundred and two."

p. "but the sun will be ashamed": a gloss which interrupts the sequence of thought in vss. 15f. and was probably occasioned by the reference to the sun in vs. 18. The words are quoted from Isa 24:23.

q. I.e. with the robes for the living righteous, those who are found "in the body." Alternatively it could mean "with [i.e. "in"] their own robes." On the robes see n. p on 1:5.

r. Angels or spirits were thought to have been placed in charge of the various created elements; for the sun cf. Rev 7:2; 19:17; cf. also Rev 7:11; 9:11; 14:18; 1En 60:12-21; Jub 2:2.

s. "and they will become . . . created": the language reflects the Eth. version of Job 10:19.

t. "the vision of Babylon": reflects the LXX text of Isa 13:1. Vss. 19-22 are an editorial conclusion to 3:13-4:22 which serves to link this section of AscenIs with the canonical Book of Isaiah (vss. 19f.) and makes the claim that what is said here was already (implicitly) contained in the OT (vss. 21f.).

understand."<sup>u</sup> And all these things, behold they are written in the Psalms,<sup>v</sup> in the parables<sup>w</sup> of David the son of Jesse, and in the Proverbs of Solomon his son, and in the words of Korah<sup>x</sup> and of Ethan the Israelite,<sup>y</sup> and in the words of Asaph,<sup>z</sup> and in the rest of the psalms which the angel of the spirit has inspired, <sup>3:15</sup> (namely) in those which have no name written, and in the words of Amos my father<sup>a2</sup> and of Hosea the prophet, and of Micah, and of Joel, and of Nahum, and of Jonah, and of Obadiah, and of Habakkuk, and of Haggai, and of Zephaniah, and of Zechariah, and of Malachi,<sup>b2</sup> and in the words of the righteous Joseph,<sup>c2</sup> and in the words of Daniel.

The execution of Isaiah

1 5 Because of these visions, therefore, Beliar was angry with Isaiah, and he dwelt 1:8
2 in the heart of Manasseh, and he sawed Isaiah in half with a wood saw.<sup>a</sup> •And 1:9; 2:1; 3:11
3 while Isaiah was being sawed in half, his accuser, Belkira,<sup>b</sup> stood by, and all the 4 false prophets stood by, laughing and (maliciously) joyful because of Isaiah.
5 And Belkira,<sup>c</sup> through Mekembekus,<sup>d</sup> stood before Isaiah, laughing<sup>e</sup> and deriding.
6 And Belkira<sup>f</sup> said to Isaiah, "Say, 'I have lied in everything I have spoken; the 7 ways of Manasseh are good and right, •and also the ways of Belkira<sup>g</sup> and those 8 who are with him are good.'" •And he said this to him when he began to be 9 sawed in half. •And Isaiah was in a vision of the LORD, but his eyes were open,
10 and he saw them.<sup>h</sup> •And Belkira<sup>i</sup> spoke thus to Isaiah, "Say what I say to you,

u. "Behold, my son shall understand": a quotation of Isa 52:13, but reflecting the LXX form of the text. The quotation points to the messianic interpretation of Isa 52:13–53:12. In referring to the descent of the Beloved into Sheol the author perhaps had in mind Isa 53:8 in its LXX form (so JB "struck down in death").

v. "the Psalms": either a general heading for the various psalms and proverbs described in more detail in the remainder of the vs. and at the beginning of vs. 22, or a gloss on the word "parables," which is used here with a not very common meaning.

w. "the parables": the Eth. reflects Gk. parabolē and Heb. māsāl, a word with a wide range of meanings. It is used in Pss 49:4 (JB: "proverb") and 78:2 with the sense "a didactic poem"; here the plural form has the rather general sense "poems" or "psalms."

x. "Korah": cf. e.g. the headings of Pss 42, 44.

y. "Ethan the Israelite": text follows the LXX form of the heading of Ps 89 (LXX 88), where the MT reads "Ethan the Ezrahite" (= JB: "Ethan the native-born"); cf. the LXX and MT of 1Kgs 5:11.

z. "Asaph": cf. the headings of Pss 50; 73–83.
a2. Cf. n. e on 1:2.

b2. The twelve minor prophets; the order in which they are listed follows neither the MT, nor the LXX, but is nearer to the latter than the former. It might have been expected that there would be a reference to Jeremiah and Ezekiel, but cf. the similar list in 4Ezra 1:39f., in which neither they nor Isaiah himself is mentioned.

c2. Apparently a reference to PrJos; this work is mentioned in lists of pseudepigraphic books, but has been lost apart from some short excerpts in early Christian writings. It is a little surprising that this pseudepigraphon should alone be mentioned in the context of the books of the OT. [See the contribution on PrJos by J. Z. Smith elsewhere in the present collection. —J.H.C.]

5 a. "and he sawed . . . saw": the narrative of the martyrdom is resumed here from 3:12. The first half of the vs. is a redactional link. For the expression "a wood saw" see "Original Language."

b. So A: B C "Balkira"; D "Malkira"; see 2:12.

c. A B C "Balkira"; D "Malkira."

d. "through Mekembekus": so A C D; B "and Mekembekus." The reading of B is grammatically easier because the following verbs are in the plural in all MSS with the exception that C has "stood" in the singular. But the plural forms could have been introduced under the influence of the plurals at the end of the previous vs., and it is easier to make sense of the reading "through." "Mekembekus" is a corruption of "Matanbukus" (2:4), another name for Beliar; inspired by, and with the help of Beliar, Belkira now mocks Isaiah. In Eth. MSS "and" (wa-) and "through" (ba-) are frequently confused.

e. "laughing": possibly a marginal variant of "deriding" which has now come into the text. The following "and" is omitted by A, but is present in B C D.

f. B "Balkira"; A C D "Beliar." Since Belkira is presented in vs. 4–9 as the devil himself in human form (cf. particularly vs. 9), it is perhaps hardly surprising that there should be a confusion between Belkira and Beliar at this point. In vs. 8 it is Belkira, not Beliar, who addresses Isaiah, and correspondingly Greek Legend 3:17 (which summarizes 5:4–8 of Ascens) refers to "Melchias, the false prophet." On the other hand 5:4 and 8 are cited by Ambrose (Expositio in psalmum 118 12.32), and there it is the devil (Lat. diabolus) who addresses Isaiah; for the text (quoted in Charles, Ascension, p. 40) see Corpus scriptorum ecclesiasticorum latinorum vol. 62 (1913) p. 270.

g. So D; A B C "Balkira."

h. Possibly to be emended, "and (although) his eyes were open, he did [not] see them." cf. 6:10.

i. B C "Balkira"; A "Milkiras"; D "Malkira."

and I will turn their heart and make Manasseh, and the princes of Judah, and the 9 people, and all Jerusalem worship you.” •And Isaiah answered and said,<sup>k</sup> “If it is within my power to say, ‘Condemned and cursed be you,’ and all your hosts, 10 and all your house!’<sup>m</sup> •For there is nothing further that you can take except the 11 skin of my body.” •And they seized Isaiah the son of Amoz and sawed him in 12 half with a wood saw. •And Manasseh, and Belkira,<sup>n</sup> and the false prophets, and 13 the princes, and the people, and all stood by looking on. •And to the prophets who (were) with him he said before he was sawed in half, “Go to the district of 14 Tyre and Sidon,<sup>o</sup> because for me alone the LORD has mixed the cup.”<sup>p</sup> •And while Isaiah was being sawed in half, he did not cry out, or weep, but his mouth 15 spoke with the Holy Spirit until he was sawed in two. •Beliar did this to Isaiah through Belkira<sup>q</sup> and through Manasseh, for Sammael was very angry with Isaiah from the days of Hezekiah, king of Judah, because of the things which he had 16 seen concerning the Beloved, •and because of the destruction of Sammael which he had seen through the LORD, while Hezekiah his father was king. And he<sup>r</sup> did as Satan wished.<sup>s</sup>

1:8; 3:13; 5:1

1:4

2:2

2. THE VISION WHICH ISAIAH THE SON OF AMOZ SAW

Isaiah visits Hezekiah and has a vision<sup>a</sup>

1 6 In the twentieth year of the reign of Hezekiah, king of Judah, Isaiah the son of Amoz and Josab the son of Isaiah came to Hezekiah in Jerusalem from Gilgal.<sup>b</sup> 2 And he sat on the couch of the king, and they brought a seat for him, but he 3 would not sit (on it). •And when Isaiah began to speak with Hezekiah the king the words of faith and righteousness, all the princes of Israel were sitting (there), and the eunuchs and the king’s counselors. And there were there forty<sup>c</sup> prophets and sons of the prophets; they had come from the neighboring districts, and from the mountains, and from the country, when they had heard that Isaiah was coming 4 from Gilgal<sup>d</sup> to Hezekiah. •They came that they might greet him, and that they 5 might hear his words, •and that he might lay his hand on them, and that they might prophesy, and that he might hear their prophecy; and they were all in the 6 presence of Isaiah.<sup>e</sup> •And when Isaiah<sup>f</sup> spoke with Hezekiah the words of righteousness and faith, they all heard a door being opened<sup>g</sup> and the voice of the 7 Spirit.<sup>h</sup> •And the king summoned all the prophets and all the people who were to

j. There are some similarities with the temptation of Jesus, cf. Mt 4:8–10; Lk 4:5–8.

k. C D add “to him.”

l. A C D “If (it is) within my power, ‘Cursed, that is to say, you.’”

m. In vs. 9 Belkira is presented as the devil in human form, with his “hosts” of spirits at his disposal (cf. 2:2). What is implicit in Ascensl is made explicit in the parallel passage in the Greek Legend (3:18), “Accursed be you, O Melchias the false prophet, O devil.”

n. B C “Balkira”; A “Melakira”; D “Melkira.”

o. It is not clear why this particular region should be mentioned; it has been suggested that the tradition of Elijah’s association with Sidon (1Kgs 17:7–24) may have inspired the author at this point.

p. “cup”: a symbolic term for the vocation to which Isaiah was called, cf. Mk 10:38f.; 14:36.

q. A B C “Balkira”; D “Malkira.”

r. I.e. Manasseh.

s. Vss. 15 and 16 are an editorial addition which serves to link 3:13–4:22 with the narrative of the martyrdom.

a. The heading (apart from “2”) is given in Eth, Lat2, Slav, but Lat2 has “Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz” and Slav “the holy Isaiah, the prophet, the son of Amoz.”

6 a. The Visls (chs. 6–11) is a Christian work which was originally quite independent of the Jewish Martls (the basic narrative of chs. 1–5); cf. Intro.

b. A B D “from Galilee,” cf. vs. 3; Lat2, Slav omit. It is not clear why Gilgal should be mentioned.

c. It is not clear why there should be forty prophets; the figure is given in Eth and Greek Legend 1:3, but is absent from Lat2, Slav.

d. A “from Galilee,” cf. vs. 1; Lat2 “from Galgatha.”

e. Lat2, Slav are much shorter than Eth in vss. 3–5.

f. C D, Lat2, Slav “he.”

g. Lit. “a door which (someone) opened.”

h. “they all . . . the Spirit [C “the Holy Spirit”]”: so Eth; Lat2, Slav “the Holy Spirit came upon him, and they all saw and heard the words of the Holy Spirit.” Eth seems to be dependent on the corrupt Eth. text of vs. 9 and is probably secondary.

be found there, and they came. And Micah, and the aged Ananias, and Joel, and 8 Josab were sitting on his right.<sup>1</sup> •And when they all heard the voice of the Holy Spirit, they all worshiped on their knees, and they praised the God of righteousness, 9 the Most High, the One who (dwells) in the upper world and who sits on high,
 10 the Holy One, the One who rests among the holy ones,<sup>1</sup> •and they ascribed glory
 11 to the One who had thus graciously given a door in an alien world, had graciously 12 given it to a man.<sup>2</sup> •And while he was speaking with the Holy Spirit in the hearing
 13 of them all, he became silent, and his mind was taken up from him,<sup>3</sup> and he did 14 not see the men who were standing before him. •His eyes indeed were open, but 15 his mouth was silent, and the mind in his body was taken up from him.<sup>4</sup> •But his 16 breath was (still) in him,<sup>5</sup> for he was seeing a vision. •And the angel who was 17 sent to show him (the vision) was not of this firmament, nor was he from the 18 angels of glory of this world, but he came from the seventh heaven. •And 19 the people who were standing by, apart from the circle of prophets, did [not]<sup>6</sup>
 20 think that the holy Isaiah had been taken up. •And the vision which he saw was 21 not from this world, but from the world which is hidden from the flesh.<sup>7</sup> •And 22 after Isaiah had seen this vision he recounted it to Hezekiah, and to Josab his 23 son,<sup>8</sup> and to the other prophets who had come. •But the officials, and the eunuchs, 24 and the people did not hear, apart from Samnas the secretary, and Jehoiakim,<sup>9</sup>
 25 and Asaph the recorder,<sup>9</sup> for they (were) doers of righteousness, and the fragrance 26 of the Spirit was in them; but the people did not hear, for Micah and Josab his 27 son had sent them out when the wisdom of this world was taken from him as if 28 he were dead.

4:2; 7:9-12;
 10:29; 11:23
 3:13; 4:14, 16;
 9:6

1:5

Isaiah's journey through the seven heavens

1 7 The vision which Isaiah saw he told to Hezekiah, and to Josab his son, and to 2 Micah, and to the other prophets; •it was as follows. When I prophesied in 3 accordance with the message which you have heard, I saw a glorious angel; his 4 glory<sup>a</sup> was not like the glory of the angels which I always used to see, but he had 5 great glory, and an office,<sup>b</sup> such that I cannot describe the glory of this angel.
 6 And I saw when he took hold of me by my hand,<sup>c</sup> and I said to him, "Who are 7 you? And what is your name? And where are you taking me up?" For strength 8 had been given to me that I might speak with him. •And he said to me, "When 9 I have taken you up through (all) the stages and have shown you the vision on 10 account of which I was sent, then you will understand who I am; but my name
 11 you will not know, •for you have to return into this body. But where<sup>d</sup> I take you 12 up, you will see, because for this purpose I was sent."<sup>e</sup> •And I rejoiced because

8:11, 23; 9:5

i. Lat2, Slav add "and on his left."

j. The description of God, and particularly the phrase "the One who rests among the holy ones," reflects the LXX text of Isa 57:15, cf. n. h on 10:6. Lat2, Slav have a shorter text in vs. 8.

k. "who . . . a man": so Eth, but probably corrupt; Lat2 (and similarly Slav) "who had given such a power of words in the world."

l. "and his mind . . . from him": so Eth, supported by Greek Legend 2:1; Lat2, Slav omit.

m. "and the mind . . . from him": so Eth; Lat2, Slav omit.

n. "But his breath . . . him": so Eth, supported by Greek Legend 2:2; Lat2, Slav "But the inspiration of the Spirit [Lat2 "Holy Spirit"] was with him." Lat2, Slav omit the rest of vs. 12 and vs. 13.

o. Restoration based on Lat2, Slav.

p. So D; Lat2, Slav "from all flesh"; A C "which was hidden from his flesh," and similarly B.

q. Lat2, Slav omit the remainder of vs. 16, vs. 17, and the beginning of 7:1 by homoeoteleuton.

r. No person with this name is mentioned in the OT as living during the reign of Hezekiah. We might have expected the name "Eliakim" (cf. 2Kgs 18:18; Isa 36:3), but it is also possible (cf. Charles, Ascension, p. 46) that the text is corrupt for "and Joah son of Asaph, the recorder." In the OT Asaph is not the recorder himself, but the father of the person who is.

s. "the recorder": in Eth the same expression that is used in the Eth. version of Isa 36:3, 22; it corresponds to what JB translates as "the herald."

7 a. So B; A C D "he."

b. "and an office": so Eth, cf. 3:23; Lat1, Slav "but he had a great and holy glory"; Lat2 corrupt.

c. So Eth, but the text seems corrupt; Lat1 "And he approached and held my hand"; Lat2, Slav "And he took me by (my) hand and led me on high."

d. Lat1, Lat2, Slav "when."

e. "because for this . . . was sent": Lat2, Slav omit.

7 he spoke to me with kindness. •And he said to me, “Do you rejoice because I have spoken kindly to you?” And he said, “You will see one greater than me, 8 how he will speak kindly and gently with you; •and the Father of the one who is greater<sup>f</sup> you will also see, because for this purpose I was sent from the seventh heaven, that I might make all this clear to you.”

The firmament

10:29–31

9 And we went up into the firmament,<sup>g</sup> I and he, and there I saw Sammael<sup>h</sup> and his hosts; and there was a great struggle in it, and the words of Satan, and they were 10 envying one another.<sup>i</sup> •And as above, so also on earth, for the likeness of what 11 (is) in the firmament is here on earth. •And I said to the angel, “What is this 12 envying?”<sup>j</sup> •And he said to me, “So it has been ever since this world existed 4:2 until now,<sup>k</sup> and this struggle (will last) until the one comes whom you are to see, and he will destroy him.” 10:12

The first heaven

10:27

13 And after this he took me up above the firmament; this is the [first]<sup>l</sup> heaven. 14 There I saw a throne in the middle,<sup>m</sup> and on the right and on the left of it there 15 were angels. •And [the angels on the left]<sup>n</sup> were not like the angels who stood on the right, but those who stood on the right had more glory, and they all sang praises with one voice. And the throne was in the middle,<sup>o</sup> and it they praised, and those on the left after them;<sup>p</sup> but their voice was not like the voice of those 16 on the right, nor their praise like the praise of those (on the right). •And I asked 17 the angel who led me and said to him, “To whom is this praise directed?”<sup>q</sup> •And he said to me, “To the praise of [the One who sits in]<sup>r</sup> the seventh heaven, the One who rests in the holy world,<sup>s</sup> and to his Beloved, from where I was sent to you. To there it is directed.”

The second heaven

10:25f.

18 And again, he took me up into the second heaven, and the height of that heaven 7:28 19 is like that from heaven to earth and to the firmament.<sup>t</sup> •And [I saw there, as]<sup>u</sup> in the first heaven, angels on the right and on the left,<sup>v</sup> and a throne in the middle, and the praise of the angels who (were) in the second heaven; and the one who 20 sat on the throne in the second heaven had more glory than all (the rest). •And

f. Lat1 “and One more eminent than the greater one himself”; Lat2, Slav differ.

g. “the firmament”: the vault of the sky (cf. Gen 1:6–8), here thought of as separating the earth from the seven heavens.

h. Lat2, Slav, and Greek Legend 2:9 “Satan.”

i. So Eth, but corrupt; read with Lat1 “and the angels of Satan were envying one another”; Lat2, Slav differ.

j. Lat1 “What is this war, and what is this envying?”; Lat2, Slav “What is this war and envying and struggle?” Cf. 10:29.

k. “So . . . now”: so Eth, Lat1; Lat2, Slav “That war is of the devil.”

l. Supplied from Lat2, Slav. In Ascens<sup>l</sup> heaven is thought of as being divided into seven layers, each one more glorious than the one below. For the idea of gradations within heaven, and particularly for the idea of seven heavens, cf. TLevi 2:7–3:10; cf. also 3Bar; 2Cor 12:2; Eph 4:10; Heb 4:14; 7:26.

m. Lat2, Slav. add “and on it there sat an angel in great glory.” A comparable statement occurs in the Eth. version of vss. 19, 24, 27, 29, 31 (also in Lat2, Slav), 33, 35, 37. In Col 1:16; TLevi 3:8 the word “thrones” is used absolutely as the name of a class of angels, and a similar usage is to be found in Ascens<sup>l</sup> in 7:21, and in the Eth. version of 7:15, 27; 8:8; 11:25 (cf. Greek Legend 2:40).

n. Supplied from Lat1.

o. “And the throne was in the middle”: so Eth, Lat1; Lat2, Slav omit, cf. n. m on vs. 14.

p. “and it they praised, and those on the left after them”: so Eth; Lat1 “and (those) on the left blessed afterwards”; Lat2 (partially corrupt), Slav “and those who were on the left sang praises after them.”

q. Lit. “sent.”

r. Supplied from Lat1; Lat2, Slav “of God who is above the seventh heaven.”

s. “the One who rests in the holy world [B “among the holy ones of the world”]”: so Eth (cf. 6:8), but the text appears corrupt; Lat1 “who belongs to the everlasting age”; Lat2, Slav omit.

t. A “from earth to heaven and to the firmament”; Lat2, Slav “from the first heaven to earth.”

u. Supplied from Lat1, Lat2, Slav.

v. Lat2, Slav omit the rest of the vs.

there was great glory in the second heaven, and their praise was not like the praise 21 of those who (were) in the first heaven. •And I fell on my face to worship him,<sup>w</sup> and the angel who led me would not let me, but said to me, “Worship neither throne,<sup>x</sup> nor angel from the six heavens,<sup>y</sup> from where<sup>z</sup> I was sent to lead you, 22 before I tell you in the seventh heaven.<sup>a2</sup> •For above all the heavens and their angels is placed your throne, and also your robes and your crown<sup>b2</sup> which you are 23 to see.” •And I rejoiced very much that those who love the Most High and his Beloved will at their end go up there through the angel of the Holy Spirit.

Rev 19:10;
 22:8f.;
 Col 2:18
 8:14; 9:2;
 Rev 4:4

3:15

The third heaven

10:23f.

24 And he took me up into the third heaven, and in the same way I saw those who (were) on the right and on the left, and there also (there was) a throne in the middle and one who sat (on it),<sup>c2</sup> but no mention of this world was made<sup>d2</sup> there.
 25 And I said to the angel who (was) with me, for the glory of my face<sup>e2</sup> was being transformed as I went up from heaven to heaven, “Nothing of the vanity of that 26 world is named here.” •And he answered me, saying, “Nothing is named because 27 of its weakness, but nothing is hidden which is done there.”<sup>f2</sup> •And I wished to find out how it is known; and he answered me, saying, “When I have taken you up into the seventh heaven, from where I was sent, to the One which (is) above these, then you will know that nothing is hidden from the thrones<sup>g2</sup> and those who dwell in the heavens, nor from the angels.” And the praises which they sang and the glory of the one who sat on the throne were great, and the angels who (were) on the right and on the left had more glory than (those in) the heaven which (was) below them.<sup>h2</sup>

9:19–23

The fourth heaven

10:21f.

28 And again he took me up into the fourth heaven, and the height from the third to 29 the fourth heaven was greater than (from) earth to the firmament.<sup>i2</sup> •And there I again saw those who (were) on the right and those who (were) on the left, and the one who sat on the throne was in the middle,<sup>j2</sup> and there also they were singing 30 praises. •And the praise and glory of the angels on the right was greater than that 31 of those on the left. •And again the glory of the one who sat on the throne was greater than that of the angels who (were) on the right, but their glory (was) greater than that of those below.

7:18

The fifth heaven

10:20

32,33 And he took me up into the fifth heaven. •And again I saw those who (were) on the right and the left, and the one who sat on the throne had more glory than 34 those of the fourth heaven. •And the glory of those who (were) on the right was 35 greater than that of those who (were) on the left . . .<sup>k2</sup> •The glory of the one on 36 the throne was greater than that of the angels who (were) on the right, •but their

w. I.e. the one sitting on the throne, vs. 19.

x. See n. m on vs. 14.

y. Lat2 “of that heaven”; Slav “from heaven.”

z. “from where”: so Eth, but elsewhere the angel is specifically said to come from the seventh heaven (cf. 6:13; 7:8); Lat2 “for this purpose”; Slav “because this purpose.” Lat2, Slav do not make any better sense, but may go back to the same Gk. original as Eth. Possibly the whole clause was misplaced from the end of the vs. at an early stage in the transmission of the text.

a2. Lat2 (similarly Slav) “but only the one whom I shall tell you.”

b2. Traditional Christian symbols of the glorious and transformed state of the righteous in heaven, see n. p on 1:5 and notes i–k on 9:9f.

c2. “and one who sat (on it)”: so Eth (B defective); Lat2, Slav omit.

d2. Lit. “named.”

e2. Lat2, Slav “spirit.”

f2. So (C) D and similarly Slav; B (and similarly Lat2) “there which is done”; A “which is done here.”

g2. Cf. n. m on vs. 14.

h2. Lat2, Slav have a much shorter text in vs. 27.

i2. “than (from) earth . . . firmament”: Lat2, Slav omit.

j2. “and the one . . . middle”: Lat2, Slav omit. Lat2 also omits the rest of vs. 29 and vs. 30.

k2. All Eth. MSS add “from the third to the fourth.” These words make no sense in their context, but are perhaps a fragment of a sentence comparable to vs. 28.

37 praise was more glorious than that of the fourth heaven.<sup>12</sup> • And I praised the One who is not named<sup>m2</sup> and is unique, who dwells in the heavens, whose name is unknown to all flesh, the One who has given such glory to the different heavens,<sup>n2</sup> who makes the glory of the angels great and the glory of the one who sits on the throne (even) greater.<sup>o2</sup> 8:7; 1:7

The air of the sixth heaven

1 8 And again, he took me up into the air of the sixth heaven, and I saw a splendor
2 such as I had not seen in the five heavens as I went up; • the angels possessed
3,4 great glory, • and the praise there was holy and wonderful.<sup>a</sup> • And I said to the 5 angel who led me, “What (is) this which I see, my lord?” • And he said to me,<sup>b</sup>
6 “I am not your lord, but your companion.” • And again I asked him, and I said
7 to him, “Why (are there) not corresponding groups of angels?”<sup>c</sup> • And he said to 8 me,<sup>d</sup> “From the sixth heaven and upwards there are no longer those on the left,<sup>e</sup>
9 nor is there a throne placed in the middle, but [they are directed]<sup>f</sup> by the power of 10 One,<sup>g</sup> whose name is unknown, and no heaven can learn his name;<sup>h</sup> • for he is 11 alone, (he) whose voice all the heavens and thrones answer.<sup>i</sup> I, therefore, have 12 been empowered and sent to bring you up here that you may see this glory, • and 13 (that) you may see the LORD of all these<sup>j</sup> heavens and of these thrones<sup>k</sup> • being 14 transformed until he resembles your appearance and your likeness.<sup>l</sup> • But I say to 15 you, Isaiah, that no man who has to return into a body of that world [has come 16 up, or seen],<sup>m</sup> or understood what you have seen<sup>n</sup> • and what you are to see, for 17 you are destined in the lot of the LORD, the lot of the tree,<sup>o</sup> to come here, and 18 from there is the power of the sixth heaven and of the air.”<sup>p</sup> • And I proclaimed 19 the greatness of my LORD with praise, that through his lot I should come here.
20 And he said to me,<sup>q</sup> “Hear then this also from your companion: [when from the 21 body by the will of God you have come up here],<sup>r</sup> then you will receive the robe<sup>s</sup> 22 which you will see, and also other numbered robes placed (there) you will see,
23 and then you will be equal to the angels who (are) in the seventh heaven.” 7:22; 9:2
9:24f.

12. Vss. 33–36 are considerably abbreviated in Lat2, Slav.

m2. The thought is that the name of God is too sacred to be uttered by men.

n2. Lit. “from heaven to heaven.”

o2. Lat2, Slav differ considerably in vs. 37; in particular, Isaiah does not himself praise God, but marvels at the sight of the angels praising him.

8 a. “wonderful”: so D, Lat2, Slav; A B C corrupt.

b. “to me”: so B D, Lat2, Slav; A C omit.

c. Lit. “companions of angels.” The meaning of the question is clarified by the following vs.: why is there no longer one group of angels on the left and one on the right? Lat2, Slav omit vs. 6.

d. “to me”: so C (corrected reading) D, Lat2, Slav; A B C (original reading) omit.

e. D adds “or right.”

f. Supplied from Lat2, Slav.

g. “where the One . . . and his [B C D ‘the’] Chosen One”: so Eth; Lat2, Slav corrupt; Lat2 “where the bounteous [?] son of God is”; Slav “where that famous one is and his only begotten son.”

h. “whose name . . . his name”: Lat2, Slav omit, cf. 7:37. If genuine, these clauses perhaps refer to a secret name of the Chosen One, cf. 9:5;

Rev 19:12. [Also see PrJac, introduced and translated elsewhere in this collection. —J.H.C.]

i. Lat2, Slav “And all the heavens and his angels hear him.”

j. A “those”; B “the.”

k. Lat2, Slav “of all the heavens, and his [Slav ‘the’] angels and powers.”

l. Lat2, Slav omit vs. 10.

m. Correction based on Greek Legend 2:29; Eth “has seen this, or come up.”

n. B “see”; A “have understood.”

o. “the lot of the tree [i.e. the cross]”: lacking in Lat2, Slav, and probably a gloss making explicit the link between the martyrdom of Isaiah and the crucifixion of Jesus which is indicated in the phrase “the lot of the Lord,” cf. 1:13.

p. “and from there . . . the air”: a gloss based on a misunderstanding of vs. 7, lacking in Lat2, Slav.

q. “to me”: so D, Lat2, Slav; A B C omit.

r. “when . . . here”: correction based on Lat2, Slav; A (and virtually C) “when from (your) alien body by the angel of the spirit you have come up here” (cf. 7:23); B “when in an alien body the God of the spirit has brought you up here”; D “when from (your) alien body the God of the spirit you have come up here.”

s. Lat2, Slav omit the rest of vs. 14.

The sixth heaven

10:17-19

16 And he took me up into the sixth heaven, and there were none on the left,<sup>1</sup> nor a throne in the middle, but all (were) of one appearance, and their praise (was) equal. •And (strength) was given to me, and I also sang praises with them, and 17 that angel also, and our praise was like theirs. •And there they all named the primal<sup>a</sup> Father and his<sup>b</sup> Beloved, Christ, and the Holy Spirit,<sup>c</sup> all with one voice, 18 but it was not like the voice of the angels who (were) in the five heavens, •nor 19,20 (was it) like their speech, but there was a different voice there, and there was 21 much light there. •And then, when I was in the sixth heaven, I thought that light 22 which I had seen in the five heavens darkness. •And I rejoiced and praised the 23 One who has graciously given such light to those who await his promise.<sup>d</sup> •And I entreated the angel who led me that from then on I should not return to the 24 world of flesh. •Indeed I say to you, Hezekiah and Josab, my son, and Micah,<sup>e</sup> 25 that there is much darkness here. •And the angel who led me knew what I thought and said to me.<sup>f</sup> “If you rejoice over this light, how much more (will you rejoice) in the seventh heaven when you see the light where the LORD is and his Beloved<sup>g2</sup>— 26 from where I was sent—who is to be called in the world the Son! •He who is to be in the corruptible world has not (yet) been revealed,<sup>h2</sup> nor the robes, nor the thrones, nor the crowns which are placed (there) for the righteous, for those who 27 (is) great and wonderful.<sup>i2</sup> •But as regards your not returning into the body, your 28 days are not yet complete for coming here.” •And when I heard (this), I was sad; and he said to me,<sup>j2</sup> “Do not be sad.”

Acts 1:4

7:5; 8:11; 9:5

7:22; 9:9f.

11:35

The air of the seventh heaven

1 9 And he led me into the air of the seventh heaven, and moreover I heard a voice saying, “How far is he who dwells among aliens<sup>a</sup> to go up?” And I was afraid 2 and was trembling. •And he said to me when I was trembling, “Behold! From there another voice which was sent out has come, and it says,<sup>b</sup> “The holy Isaiah 3 is permitted to come up here, for his robe is here.”” •And I asked the angel who (was) with me and said, “Who is the one who prevented me, and who is this one 4 who turned to me that I might go up?”<sup>c</sup> •And he said to me, “The one who prevented you, this is the one [who (is) in charge of]<sup>d</sup> the praise of the sixth 5 heaven. •And the one who turned to you,<sup>e</sup> this is your LORD, the LORD, the LORD

7:22; 8:14

t. D adds “or the right”; Lat2, Slav “no angels on the right or left.”

u. “primal”: C omits.

v. B C D “the.”

w. Lat2, Slav “they praised the Father of all and his [Slav “the”] Beloved Son and the Holy Spirit.” Lat2, Slav do not mention the name “Christ” (cf. 9:5, 13, 17; 10:7) or “Jesus” (cf. 9:5; 10:7). But Greek Legend 2:37 supports Eth in 10:7.

x. Lat2, Slav “such joy [Slav “such things”] to those who receive his mercy.”

y. “Hezekiah . . . Micah”: Lat2, Slav omit.

z. “to me”: so D, Lat2, Slav; A B C omit.

a2. Lat2, Slav “the heavenly Father sits and his only begotten Son.”

b2. “from where I was sent . . . been revealed”: Lat2, Slav omit, and the whole (or at least the beginning of vs. 26) is probably an interpolation; if it has all been interpolated, the passage would have originally read, “where the Lord is and his Beloved, and also the robes and the thrones and the crowns which . . .” For “who is to be called . . . the Son” cf. 9:5, 13; 10:7; in all these passages

Lat2, Slav do not have the clause, cf. n. w on vs. 18.

c2. “for those . . . wonderful”: Lat2, Slav omit.

d2. “to me”: so C D, Slav; A B omit; Lat2 defective.

9 a. Lat2, Slav, and Greek Legend 2:23 “in the flesh.”

b. Lat2, Slav (and similarly Greek Legend 2:23) “And again I heard another voice saying.” In Eth “he said to me” is awkward and probably an addition; this suggests that Eth originally read “And when I was trembling, behold from there another voice . . . came, and it said.” D adds “to me” after “has come/came,” which points to such a text.

c. So Eth, but a misunderstanding of the underlying Gk., which ought to have been rendered “who permitted me to go up” (cf. Greek Legend 2:24).

d. Correction based on Lat2, Slav, and Greek Legend 2:25; Eth “on whom (is).”

e. See n. c on vs. 3.

Christ, who is to be called in the world Jesus,<sup>f</sup> but you cannot hear his name<sup>g</sup> until you have come up from this body.”

7:5; 8:11, 23

The seventh heaven

6 And he took me up into the seventh heaven, and there I saw a wonderful light,
7 and also angels without number. •And there I saw all the righteous from the time
8,9 of Adam onwards. •And there I saw the holy Abel and all the righteous. •And there I saw Enoch and all who (were) with him,<sup>h</sup> stripped of (their) robes of the flesh; and I saw them in their robes of above,<sup>i</sup> and they were like the angels who 10 stand there in great glory. •But they were not sitting on their thrones,<sup>j</sup> nor were 11 their crowns of glory<sup>k</sup> on them. •And I asked the angel who (was) with me,<sup>l</sup> “How is it that they have received these robes, but are not on (their) thrones nor 12 in (their) crowns?” •And he said to me, “They do not receive the crowns and thrones of glory—nevertheless, they do see and know whose (will be) the thrones and whose the crowns—until the Beloved descends in the form in which you will 13 see him descend. •The LORD will indeed descend into the world<sup>m</sup> in the last days,
(he) who is to be called Christ after he has descended and become like you in 14 form,<sup>n</sup> and they will think that he is flesh and a man.<sup>o</sup> •And the god of that world will stretch out [his hand against the Son],<sup>p</sup> and they will lay their hands upon 15 him and hang him upon a tree,<sup>q</sup> not knowing who he is. •And thus his descent, as you will see, will be concealed even from the heavens so that it will not be 16 known who he is.<sup>r</sup> •And when he has plundered the angel<sup>s</sup> of death, he will rise<sup>t</sup> 17 on the third day<sup>u</sup> and will remain in that world for five hundred and forty-five days.<sup>v</sup> •And then many of the righteous will ascend with him, whose spirits do not receive (their) robes until the LORD Christ ascends and they ascend with him.”
18 Then indeed they will receive their robes and<sup>w</sup> their thrones and their crowns, when he has ascended into the seventh heaven.”

7:22; 8:26; 9:18,
24f.; 11:4010:8, 10, 14;
11:19;
1Pet 3:18–20;
Mt 27:52f.

f. “this is your Lord . . . Jesus”: Lat2, Slav “this is the Son of God,” cf. n. w on 8:18 and n. b2 on 8:25f.

g. Apparently a reference to a secret name of Jesus, cf. 8:7; Rev 19:12. If not, it is necessary to assume that all the references to “Jesus” and “Christ” in chs. 6–11 are secondary.

h. For vs. 7–9a Lat2, Slav have only “And I saw certain righteous men,” but Greek Legend 2:27 supports Eth.

i. The heavenly robes of the righteous symbolize their transformed state; they are mentioned elsewhere in 1:5; 3:25; 4:16f.; 7:22; 8:14, 26; 9:2, 17f., 24–26; 11:40. Cf. Rev 3:4f.; 6:11; 7:9, 13f.; 4Ezra 2:39, 44f.; 2Cor 5:1–4.

j. The thrones symbolize that the righteous dead in heaven share in the reign of the Lord, cf. Rev 3:21; 4:4; Mt 19:28; Lk 22:30.

k. In the ancient world victorious athletes were crowned. In a Christian context crowns are symbols of the reward which Christians who are faithful are to enjoy in heaven, cf. Rev 2:10; 3:11; 4:4; 1Cor 9:25; 2Tim 4:7f.; Jas 1:12; 1Pet 5:4; 4Ezra 2:43–45; ShepHerm Similitudes 8:2, 1 and 3, 6.

l. “who (was) with me”: so Eth, but D adds “and I said to him”; Lat2, Slav “and I said.”

m. “into the world”: B C D omit.

n. Lit. “like your form.”

o. For vs. 12f. Slav (and similarly the corrupt Lat2) reads “And he said to me, ‘They do not receive these until this Son of God first descends; nevertheless, they know whose will be [lit. “are”] the thrones and whose the crowns when he descends and is like you in form [lit. “like your form”].’” For “who is to be called Christ” cf. n. b2 on

8:25f.

p. Correction based on Lat2 (which adds “of God”); Eth “by the hand of his son”; Slav corrupt.

q. “and they will lay . . . a tree”: Lat2, Slav “and he will hang him upon a tree and kill him” (Slav “and they will hang . . . and he will kill him”).

r. Lat2 (and similarly Slav) “And he will descend into hell and make it and all the phantoms of hell desolate.” Lat2, Slav differ considerably from Eth in vs. 15–17.

s. Or “prince.”

t. Lit. “ascend.”

u. Lat2 (and similarly Slav) “And he will seize the prince of death, and will plunder him, and will crush all his powers, and will rise on the third day.”

v. “and will remain . . . days”: Lat2, Slav omit and the words may be an addition to the text. The belief that Jesus remained on the earth after the resurrection for 545 days is apparently taken from gnostic sources; Irenaeus (Adversus haereses 1.3:2; 30:14 [PG, vol. 7, cols. 469f., 703]) states that both the Valentinians and the Ophites believed that Jesus remained with the disciples after the resurrection for eighteen months (i.e. approximately 545 days).

w. Lat2 (and similarly Slav) “having certain righteous men with him, and will send his preachers into the whole world [cf. 3:17f.; 11:22], and will ascend into heaven.” For the reference in Eth to Christ cf. n. w on 8:18.

x. “their robes and”: Lat2, Slav omit. Mention of the robes is unexpected in what is intended as an answer to the question of vs. 11; it was included

The record of men's deeds

- 19,20 And I said to him what I had asked him in the third heaven, •[“Show me how 21 everything]’ which is done in that world is known here.” •And while I was still speaking to him, behold one of the angels who were standing by, more glorious 22 than that angel<sup>2</sup> who had brought me up from the world, •showed me (some) books,<sup>a2</sup> but not like the books of this world;<sup>b2</sup> and he opened them, and the books had writing in them, but not like the books of this world. And they were given to me, and I read them, and behold the deeds of the children of Israel<sup>c2</sup> were 23 written there, their deeds which you know, my son Josab.<sup>d2</sup> •And I said, “Truly, nothing which is done in this world is hidden in the seventh heaven.”<sup>e2</sup>

Dan 7:10;
Rev 20:12;
4Ezra 6:20;
1En 89:61–64;
98:6–8

The robes and thrones and crowns

- 24,25 And I saw many robes placed there, and many thrones and many crowns, •and I said to the angel who led me, “Whose (are) these robes and thrones and crowns?” 26 And he said to me, “As for these robes, there are many from that world who will receive (them)<sup>f2</sup> through believing in the words of that one who will be named as I have told you,<sup>g2</sup> and they will keep them, and believe in them,<sup>h2</sup> and believe in his cross; [for them (are) these]<sup>i2</sup> placed (here).”

7:22; 9:9f.
3:18

The worship of the Lord

- 27 And I saw one standing (there) whose glory surpassed that of all,<sup>j2</sup> and his glory 28 was great and wonderful. •And when they<sup>k2</sup> saw him, all the righteous whom I had seen and the angels<sup>l2</sup> came to him. And Adam and Abel and Seth and all the righteous approached first and worshiped him, and they all praised him with one voice, and I also was singing praises with them, and my praise was like theirs.<sup>m2</sup> 29,30 And then all the angels approached, and<sup>n2</sup> worshiped, and sang praises. •And he 31 was transformed and became like an angel.<sup>o2</sup> •And then the angel who led me 32 said to me, “Worship this one,” and I worshiped and sang praises. •And the angel said to me, “This is the LORD of all the praise which you have seen.”

because both the righteous who are already in heaven (vss. 7–12) and the righteous who ascend with Christ (vs. 17) are in mind in Eth.

y. Correction based on Lat2, Slav; Eth “and he said to me, ‘Everything.’”

z. Lit. “more glorious than the glory of that angel.”

a2. Lat2, Slav “a book” (and consequently singular for plural in the rest of the vs).

b2. “but not . . . this world”: lacking in Lat2, Slav, and probably a doublet.

c2. “of the children of Israel”: Lat2, Slav “of Jerusalem.”

d2. “and their deeds . . . Josab”: so Eth; Slav “and I saw the deeds of men whom I did not know”; Lat2 corrupt, but refers to “the deeds of all men.”

e2. Lat2, Slav add “And I asked the angel, ‘Who is that person who is pre-eminent over all [Slav omits “all”] the angels in his glory?’ And he answered and said to me, ‘That [Slav “That pre-eminent angel”] is the great angel [Slav “arch-angel”] Michael, ever praying on behalf of humanity.’” Cf. Lat2, Slav in vss. 29, 42.

f2. Lat2 (and similarly Slav) “These robes many from that world will lose.” On this text the one in whose words they believe is presumably meant to be the Antichrist, but there is then nothing in chs.

6–11 to which this statement might refer, and vs. 26 is no longer an answer to vs. 25.

g2. “who will . . . told you”: so Eth, cf. vs. 5; Lat2, Slav “about whom I told you.” Lat2, Slav omit the rest of vs. 26.

h2. B C D “him.”

i2. Correction; A C “but for them (they are)”; B D “for whom (they are).”

j2. “one standing . . . of all”: Lat2, Slav “the Lord in great glory.”

k2. A “I.”

l2. A adds “whom I had seen”; D “all the righteous and the angels whom [I] had seen.”

m2. Lat2, Slav are much shorter than Eth in vss. 27f. and omit mention of Adam, Abel, and Seth; cf. n. h on vs. 9.

n2. Lat2, Slav “And then [Lat2 omits “then”] Michael approached and worshiped, and with him all the angels”; cf. n. e2 on vs. 23.

o2. The meaning seems to be that the appearance of Jesus was transformed for the sake of Isaiah (cf. vss. 33, 37). Lat2, Slav (preferred by some commentators) read “And again I was transformed and became like an angel [Lat2 “the angels”].” But the transformation of Isaiah took place progressively as he ascended from heaven to heaven (7:25), and mention of it here comes too late; in any case, the easier reading “I” is unlikely to be original.

The worship of the angel of the Holy Spirit

33 And while I was still speaking,<sup>p2</sup> I saw another glorious (person) who was like him, and the righteous approached him, and worshiped, and sang praises, and I also sang praises with them; but his glory<sup>q2</sup> was not transformed to accord with<sup>r2</sup> their form. •And then the angels approached and worshiped him.<sup>s2</sup> •And I saw 34,35 the LORD and the second angel, and they were standing, •and the second one whom I saw (was) on the left of my LORD. And I asked the angel who led me and I said to him,<sup>t2</sup> “Who is this one?” And he said to me, “Worship him, for this is the angel of the Holy Spirit who has spoken<sup>u2</sup> in you and also in the other righteous.”<sup>v2</sup> 1:7

The worship of God

37 And I saw the Great Glory while the eyes of my spirit were open, but I could not thereafter see,<sup>w2</sup> nor the angel who (was) with me, nor any of the angels whom I had seen worship my LORD. •But I saw the righteous as they beheld with great
38 power<sup>x2</sup> the glory of that one. •And my<sup>y2</sup> LORD approached me, and the angel of the Spirit, and said,<sup>z2</sup> “See how it has been given to you to see the LORD,<sup>a3</sup> and (how) because of you power has been given to the angel who (is) with you.” 8:8
40 And I saw how my LORD and the angel of the Holy Spirit worshiped and <sup>b3</sup> both together praised the LORD.<sup>c3</sup> •And then all the righteous approached and worshiped,<sup>d3</sup>
41 and the angels<sup>e3</sup> approached and worshiped, and all the angels sang praises. 10:16; 11:32; 1En 14:20; 1En 14:21

The worship of the Father by the six lower heavens

1 10 And then I heard the voices and the hymns of praise which I had heard in 2 each of the six heavens—which I had heard as I ascended<sup>a</sup> there;<sup>b</sup> •and all (the voices and hymns of praise) were directed to that Glorious One<sup>c</sup> whose glory I
3 could not see.<sup>d</sup> •And I also heard and saw the praise (which was directed to) him, 7:16f. 9:37
4 and the LORD and the angel of the Spirit heard everything and saw everything.<sup>e</sup>
5 And all the praise which was sent (up) from the six heavens was not only heard,

p2. Slav “while he was still speaking”; Lat2 omits.

q2. “his glory”: so Eth; Lat2, Slav “he.” The glory of the Holy Spirit was not such that it needed transformation for the sake of Isaiah; contrast vs. 30. However, some commentators would emend the text to read “my glory.”

r2. Lit. “according to.”

s2. “him”: so B, Lat2, Slav; A C D omit. Slav adds “And the angel said to me, ‘Worship him and sing praises.’ And I worshiped him and sang praises.” Lat2 adds the second sentence.

t2. “the angel . . . to him”: so D; A B omit; C “him.” For vss. 35, 36a Lat2, Slav read “And again I saw the other one in great glory. And I asked the angel who was walking [Lat2 “And walking, I asked the angel”].”

u2. Lat2, Slav “speaks.”

v2. Vss. 35f. were used by the heretic Hieracas according to Epiphanius (AdvHaer 67:3), who quotes them. The text of Epiphanius is fuller than that of Eth and of Lat2, Slav, and contains elements which only occur separately in the two textual traditions. See “Composite Character of the Ascension,” n. 29.

w2. Lat2, Slav “And after these things another indescribable glory was revealed which, although the eyes of my spirit were open, I could not see.”

x2. Lat2, Slav “in great glory.” The righteous dead, but not the angels, can look at the glory of God, cf. Rev. 22:4; for the privileged position of the righteous cf. also vss. 28, 33, 41.

y2. B C D “the.”

z2. C D add “to me.”

a3. Apparently an allusion to the momentary vision of God which, according to Eth in vs. 37, Isaiah was granted.

b3. B C D “how he worshiped my Lord and the angel of the Spirit, and they.”

c3. For vss. 39f. Lat2 (similarly Slav) has only “And first my Lord approached, and the spiritual angel, and they worshiped him and [both] together sang praises.”

d3. A C D add by mistake “and all the righteous” (C without “and”); B omits these words by homoeoteleuton together with the preceding “approached and worshiped.”

e3. Lat2, Slav include a reference to Michael, cf. n. e2 on vs. 23.

10 a. “as I ascended”: B “ascending.”

b. Lat2, Slav corrupt, but Lat2 points to a text “which I had heard in the six heavens, ascending and being heard in the seventh heaven.”

c. Lat2, Slav “And all praised that One”; D “and all praised that Glorious One.”

d. D adds “to him (the praise) was directed.”

e. Lat2, Slav omit vss. 3f.

6 but seen. •And I heard the angel who led me, and he said to me,<sup>f</sup> “This is the Most High of the high ones, who dwells in the holy world,<sup>g</sup> who rests among the holy ones,<sup>h</sup> who will be called<sup>i</sup> by the Holy Spirit in the mouth of the righteous the Father of the LORD.”

The Lord Christ is commissioned by the Father

7 And I heard the voice of the Most High, the Father of my LORD, as he said to 8 my LORD Christ, who will be called Jesus,<sup>j</sup> •“Go out and descend through all the 9 heavens. You shall descend through the firmament and through that world as far 10 as the angel who (is) in Sheol,<sup>k</sup> but you shall not go as far as Perdition.<sup>l</sup> •And 11 you shall make your likeness like that of all who (are) in the five heavens,<sup>m</sup> •and 12 you shall take care to make your form like that of the angels of the firmament
 13 and also (like that) of the angels who (are) in Sheol.<sup>n</sup> •And none of the angels<sup>o</sup>
 14 of that world shall know that you (are) LORD with me of the seven heavens and 15 of their angels. And they shall not know that you (are) with me •when<sup>p</sup> with the 16 voice of the heavens<sup>q</sup> I summon you,<sup>r</sup> and their angels and their lights,<sup>s</sup> and when I lift up (my voice)<sup>t</sup> to the sixth heaven, that you may judge and destroy the princes and the angels and the gods of that world, and the world which is ruled by them,<sup>u</sup> •for they have denied me and said, ‘We alone are, and there is no one besides us.’ •And afterwards you shall ascend from the gods of death to your place,<sup>v</sup> and you shall not be transformed in each of the heavens, but in glory you shall ascend and sit at my right hand, •and then the princes and the powers of that world<sup>w</sup> will worship you.” •This command I heard the Great Glory giving to my LORD.

9:16; 10:10, 14;
11:19

1Cor 2:8

Ps 50:4
7:12

4:6
10:8

11:32
Phil 2:10
9:37

The descent of the Lord through the seven heavens

17 And thus<sup>a</sup> I saw when my LORD went out from the seventh heaven into the sixth 18 heaven. •And the angel who had led me from this<sup>b</sup> world was with me, and he said to me, “Understand, Isaiah, and look, that you may see the transformation

f. “to me”: A B omit.

g. Lat2, Slav “This is the one eternal (being), who dwells in the high world.”

h. The description of God is based on the LXX text of Isa 57:15, cf. n. j on 6:8. Lat2, Slav add “whose name and appearance we cannot endure.”

i. Lat2, Slav “who is praised” and omit “the Father of the Lord.”

j. Lat2, Slav “the voice of the Eternal One saying to the Lord, the Son,” but Greek Legend 2:37 supports Eth; cf. n. w on 8:18 and n. b2 on 8:25f.

k. B C D add “you shall descend.”

l. The Eth. word haguel, which means “perdition,” “destruction” is probably intended here as the name of the final place of punishment for the wicked; cf. Job 26:6; 28:22; Ps 88:11; Prov 15:11, where the word rendered in JB as “Perdition” is the Heb. **baddôn*, i.e. “(place of) destruction.” “Abaddon” occurs as the name of the angel of the Abyss in Rev 9:11. “You shall descend . . . Perdition”: Lat2, Slav “You shall be in the world, and go as far as the angel who is in hell.”

m. I.e. in the five lower heavens; in the sixth heaven he retains his divine form, cf. vs. 19.

n. Lat2, Slav abbreviate vs. 9 and omit vs. 10. o. Or “rulers.”

p. “And they shall . . . when”: so A B D. Jesus will only be recognized by the angels of this world when he has actually ascended to heaven to sit at the right hand of God, cf. vss. 14f. It is thus possible to make sense of the text. However, some commentators have thought the text unintelligible and have emended it to read “And they shall not know that you (are) with me until”; a simpler alternative would be to omit the negative: “But they shall know that you (are) with me when.” For Lat2, Slav see n. u. C has “then” for “when” in both places in vs. 12.

q. I.e. with thunder.

r. “you”: A omits (hence “summon both their angels and . . .”).

s. The angels and lights of heaven are meant.

t. “and when I lift up (my voice)”: probable interpretation, text obscure. The sixth heaven is singled out for mention because, in association with the seventh, it enjoys a special status; thus e.g. the Lord does not change his appearance in the sixth heaven, cf. vs. 19.

u. For vss. 11f. Lat2, Slav have only “And they will not recognize you, nor will the angels and the princes of that world; and you will judge the prince of that world [Slav omits “of that world”] and his angels, and the world ruled by them [Lat2 “and the rulers of the world”].”

v. B “And after you have died and risen, you shall ascend to your place”; Lat2 omits; Slav “And when you have been raised from the earth, afterwards.”

w. Lat2 (similarly Slav) “the princes and the powers and all the angels and all the rulers of heaven and earth and hell.”

x. Lat2, Slav “then.”

y. B “that.”

19 and descent of the LORD." •And I looked, and when the angels who (were) in the sixth heaven saw him, they praised him and glorified him, for he had not been transformed into the form of the angels there; and they praised him, and I also 20 sang praises with them. •And I saw when he descended into the fifth heaven, that in the fifth heaven he made his form like that of the angels there, and they did 21 not praise him, for his form was like theirs. •And then he descended into the 22 fourth heaven and made his form like that of the angels there; •and when they saw him, they did not praise him or glorify him, for his form (was) like their form.
 23 And again I saw when he descended into the third heaven, that he made his form
 24 like that of the angels who (were) in the third heaven. •And those who kept the gate of the (third) heaven demanded the password, and the LORD gave (it) to them in order that he should not be recognized;<sup>z</sup> and when they saw him, they did not
 25 praise him or glorify him, for his form (was) like their form. •And again I saw when he descended into the second heaven, that there again he gave the password,
 26 for those who kept the gates demanded (it), and the LORD gave (it). •And I saw when he made his form like that of the angels who (were) in the second heaven, that they saw him, but did not praise him, for his form (was) like their form.
 27 And again I saw when he descended into the first heaven, that there he gave the password to those who kept the gates. And he made his form like that of the angels who (were) on the left of that throne, and they did not praise him or glorify
 28 him, for his form (was) like their form. •And as for me, no one questioned me
 29 because of the angel who led me. •And again he descended into the firmament where the prince of this world dwells, and he gave the password to those who
 30 evil<sup>a2</sup> and envying about trifles.<sup>b2</sup> •And I saw when he descended and made himself
 31 like the angels of the air, that he was like one of them. •And he did not give the password, for they were plundering and doing violence to one another.<sup>c2</sup>

1:3

The miraculous birth of the Lord

1 11 And after this I looked, and the angel who spoke to me and led me said to me, "Understand, Isaiah son of Amoz, because for this purpose I was sent from 2 the LORD."<sup>a</sup> •And I saw a woman of the family of David the prophet whose name (was) Mary, and she (was) a virgin and was betrothed to a man whose name (was) Joseph, a carpenter, and he also (was) of the seed and family of the righteous
 3 David of Bethlehem in Judah. •And he came into his lot.<sup>b</sup> And when she was betrothed, she was found to be pregnant, and Joseph the carpenter wished to 4 divorce her. •But the angel of the Spirit appeared in this world,<sup>c</sup> and after this 5 Joseph did not divorce Mary;<sup>d</sup> but he did not reveal this matter to anyone. •And he did not approach Mary, but kept her as a holy virgin, although she was
 6,7 pregnant. •And he did not live with her for two months. •And after two months
 8 of days, while Joseph was in his house, and Mary<sup>e</sup> his wife,<sup>f</sup> but both alone, •it came about, when they were alone, that Mary then looked with her eyes and saw 9 a small infant, and she was astounded. •And after her astonishment had worn

Acts 2:30;
11QPs<sup>a</sup> 27.11

Mt 1:18–21

z. "And those . . . recognized": B omits.

a2. B C D "an evil power there."

b2. "but . . . trifles": Lat2, Slav omit.

c2. "for they . . . another": Lat2 "and they did not sing praises"; Slav "and they did not question him."

11 a. Lat2, Slav add "to show you all things. For no one before you has seen, nor after you will be able to see, what you have seen and heard. And I saw one like a son of man, and he dwelt with men in the world, and they did not recognize him." Lat2, Slav thereafter omit the whole of vss. 2–22.

b. The fate decreed him by God; it was God's plan that Joseph should marry Mary; cf. vs. 10 and ProtJames 9:1, "And the priest said to Joseph, 'It has fallen to your lot to receive the virgin of the Lord.'" Cf. ProtJames 19:1.

c. "in this world": B "to him."

d. B C "did not divorce her, but kept Mary"; after "divorce" in A D a word has been erased.

e. B C "in the house, and Mary"; D "in the house of Mary."

f. "his wife": so C; B "his betrothed wife"; A D have an erasure.

10 off,<sup>g</sup> her womb was found as (it was) at first, before she had conceived. •And when her husband,<sup>h</sup> Joseph, said to her, “What has made you astounded?” his eyes were opened, and he saw the infant and praised the LORD, because the LORD
11 had come in his lot.<sup>i</sup> •And a voice came to them, “Do not tell this vision to 12,13 anyone.” •But the story about the infant was spread abroad in Bethlehem. •Some said, “The virgin Mary has given birth before she has been married<sup>j</sup> two months.”
14 But many said, “She did not give birth; the midwife did not go up (to her), and we did not hear (any) cries of pain.” And they were all blinded concerning him;
15 they all knew about him, but<sup>k</sup> they did not know from where he was. •And they 16 took him and went to Narazeth in Galilee. •And I saw, O Hezekiah and Josab my son, and say to the other prophets also who are standing by, that it was hidden from all the heavens and all the princes and every god of this world.

Ignatius, Epistle to the Ephesians
19

The infancy and life of the Lord

17 And I saw (that) in Nazareth he sucked the breast like an infant, as was customary,
18 that he might not be recognized. •And when he had grown up, he performed great signs and miracles in the land of Israel and (in) Jerusalem.

3:20

The crucifixion and resurrection of the Lord

19 And after this the adversary envied him and roused the children of Israel, who did not know who he was, against him. And they handed him to the ruler,<sup>l</sup> and 20 crucified him, and he descended<sup>m</sup> to the angel<sup>n</sup> who (is) in Sheol.<sup>o</sup> •In Jerusalem, 21 indeed, I saw how they crucified him on a tree, •and likewise (how) after the third day he rose and remained (many) days.<sup>p</sup>

9:16; 10:8, 10,
14

The ascension of the Lord through the seven heavens

22 And the angel who led me said to me, “Understand, Isaiah.” And I saw when 23 he<sup>q</sup> sent out the twelve disciples and ascended. •And I saw him,<sup>r</sup> and he was in the firmament,<sup>s</sup> but was not transformed into their form. And all the angels of the 24 firmament, and Satan, saw him and worshiped. •And there was much sorrow there as they said, “How did our<sup>t</sup> LORD descend upon us, and we did not notice the glory which was upon him,<sup>u</sup> which we (now) see was<sup>v</sup> upon him from the sixth 25 heaven?”<sup>w</sup> •And he ascended into the second heaven,<sup>x</sup> and he was not transformed, but all the angels who (were) on the right and on the left, and the throne in the 26 middle, •worshiped him, and praised him, and said, “How did our<sup>y</sup> LORD remain 27 hidden from us as he descended, and we did not notice?” •And in the same way

3:17f.;
Mt 28:18–20;
Acts 1:8f.
2:2

g. Lit. “after she had been astounded.”

h. “her husband”: so C; omitted by B, erased in A and (apparently) D.

i. “his lot”: cf. n. b on vs. 3.

j. “she has been married”: so C; D (over an erasure) “she has been betrothed”; in A B the word has been erased.

k. C “they all believed in him, but”; B D “no one believed in him, and.” Vs. 14 is apparently quoted in the Acts of Peter 24.

l. “ruler”: a word normally translated “king,” but it is presumably Pilate who is meant (cf. Mt 27:2).

m. B C D “and caused him to descend.”

n. B C “angels.”

o. “who (is) in Sheol”: so D, cf. Greek Legend 2:39 “the angel of Hades”; A B C omit.

p. A B D have only “days,” with the sense “many days”; C “forty days” (cf. Acts 1:3). It has been suggested that originally Eth read “five hundred and forty-five days,” as in 9:16.

q. B “the Lord.”

r. “him”: B C D omit.

s. Lat2, Slav “And I saw him ascending into the firmament.”

t. B C “the.”

u. “which was upon him”: possibly a doublet of the following clause.

v. Lit. “was found.”

w. As he descended Christ retained the glory which he possessed in the seventh and sixth heavens (cf. 10:19), but kept it concealed; as he ascended Christ’s proper glory (cf. vs. 29) was recognized by all. For vs. 24 Slav reads, “They said, ‘How was the Lord concealed from us (in) our midst, and we did not recognize the king of glory?’” Lat2 corrupt. The text appears to be defective at this point in Eth and Lat2, Slav, for we expect a reference to the ascent of the Lord into the first heaven.

x. Lat2, Slav “And from the first heaven he ascended more glorious.”

y. B C D “the.”

he ascended into the third (heaven), and in the same way they praised him and 28 spoke. •And in the fourth heaven and also in the fifth they spoke in exactly the 29,30 same way. •But there was one glory, and from it he was not transformed. •And I saw when he ascended into the sixth heaven, that they worshiped him and praised 31,32 him;<sup>2</sup> •but in all the heavens the praise grew louder. •And I saw how he ascended into the seventh heaven, and all the righteous and all the angels praised him. And then I saw that he sat down at the right hand of that Great Glory, whose glory I 33 told you I could not behold. •And also I saw that the angel of the Holy Spirit sat on the left.

10:14
 9:37
 9:36

The conclusion of the vision

34 This angel said to me, "Isaiah, son of Amoz, [it is enough for you],<sup>a2</sup> for these
 (are) great things, for you have observed what no one born of flesh has observed.<sup>b2</sup> 35 And you shall return into your robe until your days are complete; then you shall come here." These things I saw.

8:11
 8:27

Isaiah's instructions to Hezekiah

36 And Isaiah told (them)<sup>c2</sup> to all those who were standing before him, and they sang praises. And he spoke to Hezekiah the king and said, "These things I have spoken.
 37,38 And the end of this world •and all this vision will be brought about in the last 39 generation." •And Isaiah made him<sup>d2</sup> swear that he would not tell this<sup>e2</sup> to the people of Israel, and that he would not allow any man to copy these words.<sup>f2</sup> 40 And then<sup>g2</sup> they<sup>h2</sup> shall read them.<sup>i2</sup> But as for you, be<sup>j2</sup> in the Holy Spirit that you may receive your robes, and the thrones and crowns of glory, which are 41 placed in the seventh heaven. •Because of these visions and prophecies Sammael Satan sawed Isaiah the son of Amoz, the prophet, in half by the hand of Manasseh.
 42 And Hezekiah gave all these things to Manasseh in the twenty-sixth year of his 43 reign.<sup>k2</sup> •But Manasseh did not remember these things, nor place them in his heart, but he became the servant of Satan and was destroyed.<sup>l2</sup>

7:22; 9:9f.
 5:1; 15f.
 1:8; 2:2
 1:1
 2:1
 1:8

Here ends (the book) of Isaiah the prophet with his ascension.<sup>m2</sup>

z. For vs. 27–30 Lat2, Slav have a shorter text.
 a2. Correction based on Lat2, Slav; Eth "I have saved you."

b2. Lat2, Slav add "what eye has not seen, nor ear heard, nor has it entered into the heart of man, how great things God has prepared for all [Slav omits "all"] those who love him [Lat2 "you"]"; cf. Isa 64:4; 1Cor 2:9. Jerome (Commentary on Isaiah 64:4 [PL, vol. 24, col. 622]) states that Ascensl has this passage and thus indicates that here at least the text of Ascensl he knew is the one given in Lat2, Slav. For the title "the Ascension of Isaiah" in Jerome, see "Composite Character of the Ascension."

c2. "These things . . . told (them)": Lat2, Slav "These things Isaiah saw and told."

d2. D "Hezekiah."

e2. "this": A B D, Lat2, Slav omit.

f2. This statement is part of the apocalyptic fiction which was intended to explain how the account of Isaiah's vision had remained unknown from the time of its supposed composition in the reign of Hezekiah to the time of its actual composition in the early Christian era. Cf. 6:17.

g2. "then": apparently "in the last generation" (vs. 38), cf. Dan 12:4, 9. But the sequence of thought is not very clear, and Eth may be defective; see n. i2.

h2. B C D "you."

i2. "And then . . . read them": so Eth; Slav "But as far as you understand what is said by the king in the prophets, understand such things, all of you"; Lat2 corrupt.

j2. Slav "watch."

k2. "of his reign": A C omit.

l2. Vss. 41–43 are an editorial conclusion which serves to link Visls (chs. 6–11) with Martls (chs. 1–5). For these vss. Lat2, Slav have "And he ceased speaking and went out from (the presence of) Hezekiah the king."

m2. B, Slav omit; C "Here ends the vision of Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz, with his ascension"; D "Here ends the ascension of Isaiah the prophet"; Lat2 "The vision of Isaiah is ended."

JOSEPH AND ASENETH

(First Century B.C.—Second Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY C. BURCHARD

The Old Testament records that Pharaoh gave to Joseph Aseneth, the daughter of Potiphera, Priest of On, for his wife (Gen 41:45). How could Joseph—the model of chastity, piety, and statesmanship—marry a foreign Hamitic girl, daughter of an idolatrous priest? Jewish theology and lore found many answers to this intriguing question and expanded some into narratives.<sup>1</sup> Joseph and Aseneth, the longest of these stories, is a full-fledged romance by an anonymous author; it is nearly twice as long as Esther, and a little longer than the Gospel of Mark.

Aseneth is a beautiful virgin of eighteen years and the daughter of Pentephres,<sup>2</sup> priest of Heliopolis and Pharaoh's chief counselor. Many princes, including Pharaoh's firstborn son, ask for her hand in marriage. She despises them all and prefers to live in her ornate penthouse above Pentephres' palace, where she worships countless idols. One day Joseph, touring Egypt to collect corn, announces his visit to her father. Pentephres tells Aseneth he is going to give her to Joseph in marriage. She refuses flatly, only to fall in love with Joseph when she sees him entering her father's house in royal attire. Now it is her time to be repudiated. A Jew who worships God and lives on the bread of life will not kiss a heathen woman who eats food offered to idols. Still Joseph is charitable enough to say a prayer for her conversion, then boards his chariot in order to gather more corn, promising to be back a week later. Utterly shaken, Aseneth destroys her idols, engages in a week of fasting and crying, and repents for both her conceit and idolatry. On the morning of the eighth day, the chief of God's angels comes to see her, declares her reborn, tells her that she is to be a mother city for all who would repent like her, feeds her a piece of honeycomb, which he says is the bread of life, and promises her that Joseph will come to marry her. He does; and the wedding ensues, performed and presided over by Pharaoh himself.

Eight years later, Pharaoh's firstborn son happens to see Aseneth by chance and his old infatuation is revived. He fails to persuade Joseph's brothers, Simeon and Levi, to help him kidnap Aseneth and assume power in Egypt by killing Pharaoh and Joseph. He then tries Dan and Gad and achieves more success. He gives them troops; and the three set up an ambush for Aseneth, who is driving to her vineyard. However, Benjamin, who is sitting beside her in the carriage, wounds Pharaoh's son with a stone and kills his escorts. Levi, being a prophet, divines what is going on and comes running with his brothers—Reuben, Simeon, Judah, Issachar, and Zebulon—to slay Dan and Gad's men. These two attempt to kill Aseneth, but miraculously their swords fall from their hands. Aseneth pardons them and intercedes for them with her in-laws. Three days later Pharaoh's son dies, closely followed by his grief-stricken father. Joseph then reigns over Egypt for forty-eight years.

<sup>1</sup> V. Aptowitz, "Aseneth, the Wife of Joseph: A Haggadic Literary-Historical Study," HUCA 1 (1924) 239–306; L. Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 2, pp. 170–78; also see esp. vol. 5, pp. 336–39, 374f.

<sup>2</sup> As to the name form, see note on 1:3.

Texts

Joseph and Aseneth is extant in sixteen Greek manuscripts, falling into at least four groups, and eight versions translated from the Greek, running to a rough total of seventy manuscripts.<sup>3</sup> Abbreviations used herein are as follows:

Group a:

1. O = St. Catherine's Monastery, Mount Sinai, MS Greek 504, 10th cent., Joseph and Aseneth is lost except for the title and the first words in the table of contents.
2. A = Vatican Library, Vatican City, MS Vaticanus Graecus 803, 11–12th cent.; printed by P. Batiffol, "Le Livre de la Prière d'Aseneth," Studia Patristica: Études d'ancienne littérature chrétienne (Paris, 1889–90) pp. 1–87 (with apparatus from BCD Syr.; = Bat); transl. P. Riessler, "Joseph und Asenath: Eine altjüdische Erzählung," TQ 103 (1922) 1–22, 145–83, reprinted with little change by P. Riessler, Altjüdisches Schrifttum ausserhalb der Bibel (Augsburg, 1928; repr. Darmstadt, 1966) pp. 497–538, 1303f. (= Rie); and E. W. Brooks, Joseph and Asenath: The Confession and Prayer of Asenath Daughter of Pentephres the Priest (TED 2.7; London, New York, 1918). Brooks makes use of Batiffol's apparatus and Syr. Arm. L1 Slav., and gives the non-a material contained in 11:15–18a, 12:8b, 15:12x, 16:17–17x, 20:5b, 6b, 21:10–21, and 23:6b in an appendix because he thinks it is original (= Br).
3. P = Monastery of Konstamonitou, Mount Athos, MS 14, 15th cent.
4. Q = Vatican Library, Vatican City, MS Palatinus Graecus 364, 15th cent., many omissions; used by V. M. Istrin, "Apokrif ob Iosifě i Asenefě," Drevnosti (Trudy Slavjanskoj kommissii Imperatorskago moskovskago archeologičeskago občestva 2; Moscow, 1898) pp. 146–99.
5. C = Bodleian Library, Oxford, MS Baroccio Greek 148, 15th cent., ends in 10:5; used by Bat.
6. R = St. Catherine's Monastery, Mount Sinai, MS Greek 530, 15–16th cent., ends in 5:1, maybe a copy of C.

Group b:

7. E = Monastery of Vatopedi, Mount Athos, MS 600, 15th cent., many omissions.
8. G = Greeley Collection, Virginia Beach, Va., MS McKell (formerly property of D. McK. McKell of Chillicothe, Ohio), c. 1580, written and illuminated by Luke the Cypriot in Wallachia, omits 2:3b–10:1a and other passages; miniatures published by J. and O. Pächt, "An Unknown Cycle of Illustrations of the Life of Joseph," Cahiers Archéologiques 7 (1954) 35–49, pl. XII–XVI; G. Vikan, Illustrated Manuscripts of Pseudo-Ephraem's Life of Joseph and the Romance of Joseph and Aseneth (Ph.D. diss., Princeton, N.J., 1976).
9. F = Library of the Academy of the People's Republic of Rumania, Bucharest, MS Greek 966, 17th cent., four hortatory interpolations, some illegible spots.
10. W = St. Catherine's Monastery, Mount Sinai, MS Greek 1976, 17th cent., same interpolations as F.

Group c:

11. H = Greek Orthodox Patriarchate, Jerusalem, MS Panhagios Taphos 73, 17th cent., ends in 16:17y with a new ending down to chapter 21:9 added in modern Greek; this ending is published by Chr. Burchard, "Joseph and Aseneth neugriechisch," NTS 24 (1978) 68–84, see 80–83.
12. J = Ibid., MS Saba 389, 17th cent., ends in 16:10.
13. K = Ibid., MS Saba 593, finished September 1, 1802, ends as H.

Group d:

14. B = Vatican Library, MS Palatinus Graecus 17, 11th cent.; used by Bat, printed by Istrin.
15. D = Bodleian Library, MS Baroccio Greek 147, 15th cent.; used by Bat.

Critical edition of the d text by M. Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth: Introduction, <sup>3</sup> For catalogs and other details see Chr. Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 2–17; A.-M. Denis, Introduction, pp. 40–48. No papyri and no quotations in Gk. are on record.

texte critique et notes (SPB 13; Leiden, 1968); full documentation of BD, many readings from Slav. (cf. below on Slav.), occasional references to AEF GH, almost none to the other versions (= Phil).

Unexplored:

16. University Library, Wrocław (formerly Breslau), Poland, MS Rehdiger 26, 11th cent., lower script of a palimpsest.

Versions:

1. Syr. = Syriac, first half of 6th cent. Syr. is preserved only as part of Pseudo-Zacharias Rhetor, Church History, I 6 (finished soon after A.D. 569), in one MS and a copy of it. Leaves containing 13:15–16:7 are lost. Careful edition by E. W. Brooks, Historia ecclesiastica Zachariae Rhetori vulgo adscripta (CSCO 83; Paris, 1919, repr. 1953) vol. 1, pp. 21–55; Latin translation by the same, Historia ecclesiastica Zachariae Rhetori vulgo adscripta (CSCO 87; Louvain, 1924, repr. 1953) vol. 1, pp. 15–39.
2. Arm. = Armenian, 6–7th cent.(?). Forty-five manuscripts falling into six groups are known to date, the most important being Matenadaran (Mashtotz Institute of Ancient Manuscripts), Erevan, MS 1500 (A.D. 1282–83) (= 332). Poor edition by S. Yovsēp'eanç, T'angaran hin ew nor naxneaç, I. Ankanon girk' hin ktakaranaç (Venice, 1896) pp. 152–98 (= Yovs); used by Br; poorly translated by J. Issaverdens both collectively, The Uncanonical Writings of the Old Testament (Venice, 1900) pp. 91–160, and separately, The History of Assaneth (Venice, 1900); specimen of a better edition by C. Burchard, "Joseph and Aseneth 25–29 armenisch," JSJ 10 (1979) 1–10.
3. L1 = Latin 1, circa A.D. 1200. Nine manuscripts are known, possibly all of them written in England. The text is rather uniform. Tolerable edition by Batiffol, Studia Patristica, pp. 89–115; used by Br. An unpublished epitome is preserved in three manuscripts.
4. L2 = Latin 2, circa A.D. 1200. We have five manuscripts falling into two very different groups. One group has only one member; it is University Library, Uppsala, MS C 37, beginning of the 13th cent. (= 436). The other group is headed by Monastery Library, Vorau (Austria), MS 136, 13th cent. (= 435). Unpublished.
5. Slav. = Serbian Slavonic, 15th cent.(?). Two manuscripts with minor variants are known. 1) Belgrad, National Library, MS Slav. 29, early 15th cent. (now lost), was printed by S. Novaković, "Srpsko-slovenski zbornik iz vremena despota Stefana Lazarevića," Starine 9 (1877) 1–47, see 27–42 (= 551), and used by Br. 2) Novaković's text was reprinted with the variants from Bucharest, Library of the Academy of the People's Republic of Rumania, MS Slav. 306, 15th cent. (= 552) by Chr. Burchard, Joseph und Aseneth serbisch-kirchenslavisch: Text und Varianten (Dielheimer Blätter zum Alten Testament. Beiheft 2; Dielheim, 1980); see pp. 43–45 for a list of corrections of Philonenko's presentation of BD).
6. Ngr. = Modern Greek, 16th cent.(?). We have two illuminated manuscripts: Monastery of Koutloumousi, Mount Athos, MS 100, 16th cent. (= 661); Bodleian Library, Oxford, MS Roe 5, 1614 (= 671). Poor edition of 671 by Istrin, Drevnosti, pp. 146–79; corrections and an edition of 661, which is a mere epitome, by Burchard, NTS 24 (1978) 68–79; miniatures of both published by Vikan, Illustrated Manuscripts; miniatures of 661 published by S. M. Pelekanidis, P. C. Christou, C. Tsiounis, and S. N. Kadas, The Treasures of Mount Athos: Illuminated Manuscripts, Miniatures-Headpieces-Initial Letters (Athens, 1974) vol. 1, pp. 456, 458f.; figs. 339–41.
7. Rum. = Rumanian, 18th cent.(?). Four manuscripts are known. Rum. shares the interpolations of FW. One manuscript was printed in modernized form by C. Bobulescu, Istoria frumosului Iosif și a prea frumoasei Asineta: După un manuscris din 1753 (Biblioteca pentru popor 15; Bucharest, 1922). A critical edition by V.-I. Leb is in preparation.
8. Eth. = Ethiopian. Lost save for a number of allusions.<sup>4</sup> Eth. may depend upon an equally lost Arabic version.

<sup>4</sup> See below, nn. 108–10.

The textual history of Joseph and Aseneth is not yet fully understood.<sup>5</sup>

(1) The book is an author's work, not a folk tale which has no progenitor. There was an original text. We may be reasonably certain that all textual witnesses known to date go back to a common archetype, which must be older than c. A.D. 500.<sup>6</sup>

(2) We know that the Greek manuscripts fall into at least four groups, a, b, c, d, that Slav. sides with d, and that the other versions align with b. For ancient translations, Arm. and L2 are full and reliable versions. However, for example, the relationship of 436 and 435& within L2 needs examination. Syr. would make a fair witness, too, were it not for a tendency toward loose or double translation, some abbreviation from the middle of chapter 24 on, and the loss of nearly three chapters. L1, a mere epitome from chapter 25 onward, is guilty of many omissions before that, even more so the Slav. When extant, Slav. is fairly accurate, however. Ngr. is little more than a paraphrase with long stretches of text left out altogether, while others are much inflated. Rum. is a severe condensation. All Greek groups and the versions need closer inspection as to their Vorlage. The miniatures of G, 671, and 661<sup>7</sup> may be of some help here because they reflect a state of textual development, all within the b group, which is older than the manuscripts in which they occur.

(3) We also know that a is a revision, no later than the tenth century, which meant to improve the biblicalized Greek of the text but did not impinge on its substance and order save for a few omissions. Greek manuscript group c, as far as it goes, is an independent and less thorough revision, probably late medieval or early modern, of a text which was closer to b than to the ancestors of a or d.

(4) Difficulties start with d. It is one third shorter than a. Philonenko feels that d represents the oldest attainable text of Joseph and Aseneth; it was expanded into b, which was revised into c, which in turn was finally revised into a. However, many gaps in d are obvious omissions (see e.g. 19:4; 21:2; 27:10), and many readings are inferior to those in a, b, c. Manuscript group a is also generally closer to d than to b or c, which are supposed to stand between them, and there is nothing to suggest that c, purported father of a, ever existed beyond 16:17a. So d is more likely to be an epitome, no later than the eleventh century, of a fuller text, which was close to the unrevised archetype of a. Abridgment is a natural thing to happen to a text transmitted in writing as any individual manuscript of Joseph and Aseneth will readily demonstrate, and it tends to affect the last chapters, or the last verses of a subsection, more than the first, which is exactly what occurs in d.

(5) The main problem is b. This group includes four very recent Greek manuscripts and seven versions, all very different in both wording and length, most of them marred by a host of individual shortcomings. How does b, or its parts, relate to the other groups?<sup>8</sup> At any rate, the b group houses our oldest witnesses (Arm. Syr.)<sup>9</sup> and is the largest and most widely distributed group; readings offered, or supported, by it (versions included) are very often superior to their competitors on internal grounds. This includes a number of passages preserved by b alone such as 21:10–21.

(6) It seems possible to reconstruct the archetype of the textual tradition with a fair degree of certainty.<sup>10</sup> Often the witnesses agree literally or to a degree that the general run of the text is unmistakable even if the wording is not. Such passages occur over the whole length of the book, forming a sort of grid which has kept the original outline from becoming indiscernible.

<sup>5</sup> Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 18–49; JSJ 1 (1970) 3–34; "Joseph und Aseneth neugriechisch," NTS 24 (1978) 68–84; see 69 (correcting Burchard, Untersuchungen, p. 39); M. Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, pp. 3–26; E. W. Smith, Jr., Joseph and Asenath, pp. 13–17.

<sup>6</sup> That JosAsen is coupled with a Life of Joseph in all groups of text but c (see below) seems to corroborate the basic unity of the tradition.

<sup>7</sup> See Vikan, Illustrated Manuscripts, partly summarized in his "Illustrated Manuscripts of the Romance of Joseph and Aseneth," SBL 1976 Seminar Papers, ed. G. MacRae (SBL Seminar Papers Series 10; Missoula, Mont., 1976) pp. 193–208, 15 figs. Cf. further Pächt and Pächt, Cahiers Archéologiques 7 (1954) 35–49; Burchard, NTS 24 (1978) 75–77.

<sup>8</sup> In some cases of split tradition b appears to have preserved one part of a clause and a, d, or c the other (see 2:3; 12:2; 16:14; 18:2, 11; 21:9; 22:9, 13; 24:3; 24:17; 25:4, 6). This would suggest that b is indeed a family of its own, with an ancestor which stands at some distance from the original.

<sup>9</sup> The Passion of St. Irene, which depends on JosAsen (see below) also seems to testify to the age of b. The text which it presupposes certainly is neither a nor d (see 15:7).

<sup>10</sup> Contrast the opinion of Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, pp. 22f. Nevertheless, for all practical purposes Philonenko regards d as the original text.

A new edition of the Greek text is needed; the existing editions of the Greek text, as well as the modern translations, rely on either a or d and leave b, c, and most of the versions practically unmined. A major edition will have to wait until all evidence has been explored fully. A preliminary new text has been established for the present translation and for the German version.<sup>11</sup> The new text is based on fresh collations of all Greek and modern Greek manuscripts (except the Breslau palimpsest) by D. Sanger, and of all Latin manuscripts by H. Kruger. It is also based on Syr. (as edited by Brooks), on Arm. chapters 1–24 (as printed by Yovsep'eanc, supplemented by a collation of 332), on Arm. chapters 25–29 (as edited by Burchard), on Slav. (as printed by Novakovic), on Ngr. (671) (as printed by Istrin and corrected by Burchard), and on Rum. (as printed by Bobulescu). The textual history of Joseph and Aseneth as it is known to date would seem to suggest that an eclectic text with a strong leaning toward b is in order. The preliminary text follows b unless a variant reading definitely proves superior. This is generally assumed when a, c, or d have a fuller text than b, unless there is evidence to the contrary. If there is a disagreement among the manuscripts and versions of b, the variant that has more outside support is usually preferred. In a few cases we must rely on conjecture (e.g. in 12:8). The text thus constituted may look more b-like than a final one will. Still it has the advantage of presenting Joseph and Aseneth very close to the form, or type of forms, in which the book was most widely read, and of being, it is hoped, much closer to the original than any other text published so far. A minor edition with a representative critical apparatus is in preparation.<sup>12</sup>

Original language

Most scholars have agreed that Joseph and Aseneth was composed in Greek. The only one to argue at some length against this view was P. Riessler.<sup>13</sup> To him a and d represented two independent translations from the Hebrew. Textual history as reviewed above rules out a double translation; the language all but precludes a single one. Riessler advanced some evidence for mistranslation, but it is inconclusive (see 4:2; 15:7; 16:13). The balance of his argument goes to show biblicalized Greek; but it is better to assign this to the stylistic effort of a Greek author (see below). Moreover, a translator would have had little occasion to use words like "all-beautiful" (13:14), "child-loving" (12:8), "immortality," "incorruptibility" (e.g. 8:5), "(things) being and appearing" or "non-appearing and non-being" (12:2), "incorruptible" (12:15), "sweet (father)" (of God, 12:14f.), "transient" (12:15), "unutterable" (14:2), turns like "it is not fitting" (e.g. 8:5), "in a tyrannical fashion" (23:6), clusters of adjectival attributes (e.g. 10:10), or the passive with "by." If based on a Semitic original, Joseph and Aseneth would be a reworking, not a translation. Yet no one has so far produced a shred of evidence that Joseph and Aseneth was at all known in ancient Hebrew or Aramaic literature. So the book belongs to what is commonly called "hellenistic Jewish literature" as distinct from Palestinian and Babylonian,<sup>14</sup> although the latter branches are hardly less hellenistic, if often in a different way.<sup>15</sup> Numerous contacts with the literature of the Western diaspora and early Christianity readily bear this out.

Literary character

Title

Ancient custom suggests that Joseph and Aseneth had a title, probably given in full at the end and prefixed in a possibly shorter form at the opening,<sup>16</sup> but none that have come down to us seem to represent it (see before 1:1). It may have been something like "Aseneth,"

<sup>11</sup> Burchard, Joseph und Aseneth (JSHRZ 2.4; Gutersloh, 1983).

<sup>12</sup> To be published in the PVTG series (Leiden). The text alone is available in mimeographed form in "Ein vorlufiger griechischer Text von Joseph und Aseneth," Dielheimer Blatter zum Alten Testament 14 (1979) 2–53.

<sup>13</sup> "Joseph und Asenath: Eine altjudische Erzahlung," TQ 103 (1922) 1–22, 145–83; see esp. pp. 1–3.

<sup>14</sup> R. Marcus, "Hellenistic Jewish Literature," The Jews: Their History, Culture, and Religion, ed. L. Finkelstein (New York, 1949, 1960<sup>2</sup>) vol. 2, pp. 1077–115; V. Tcherikover, "Jewish Apologetic Literature Reconsidered," Eos 48.3 (1957) 169–93; G. Dellings, "Perspektiven der Erforschung des hellenistischen Judentums," HUCA 45 (1974) 133–76.

<sup>15</sup> M. Hengel, Judentum und Hellenismus (WUNT 10; Tubingen, 1969, 1973<sup>2</sup>; ET by Fortress Press of Philadelphia in 1974).

<sup>16</sup> On ancient book titles see lately, E. Schmalzriedt, Peri physeos: Zur Fruhgeschichte der Buchtitel (Munich, 1970).

conceivably with a term denoting genre before and a word of identification after it, or perhaps "Joseph and Aseneth" as we call the book today. The author's name may or may not have gone with it, but none is preserved.

Structure

Joseph and Aseneth falls into two parts, which could almost stand by themselves. Part I (chs. 1–21) is suspended between two allusions to the Story of Joseph (Gen 37–50). Chapter 1:1 echoes Genesis 41:46 to tell that Pharaoh sent Joseph around Egypt to gather up the corn of the seven years of plenty, followed in 1:2 by a remark about Joseph's arrival in Heliopolis. Chapter 21:9 notes the birth of Ephraim and Manasseh in accordance with Genesis 41:50–52. The narrative proper opens with an exposition in 1:3–2:12; it corresponds to the page announcing the cast of characters and the scene of action that we usually see prefixed today to a play or detective story. Part I is rounded off by a hymn in 21:10–21 in which Aseneth recounts what happened to her. This consists of a combination of two different plots: the love story engaging Aseneth and Joseph, in chapters 3–9 and 19–21, and the conversion story, which involves Aseneth and the heavenly man in chapters 10–18, overlapping the love theme in 8f. and 19. Aseneth is the main figure, being almost uninterruptedly on the scene. But she is not in control. Pentephres launches the action, then he loses out gradually, first to the heavenly man and then to Pharaoh, the transitions being operated by Joseph. Otherwise the latter is a passive figure who has his marriage more or less wished upon him. During his bride's cumbersome conversion he is absent collecting grain. Part II (chs. 22–29) opens in 22:1f. with a summary of Genesis 41:53f. and 45:26–46:7; 47:27: Jacob and his kin come to Egypt and settle in Goshen. Joseph and Aseneth go to visit them (ch. 22 is an exposition). What follows is a tale of both abduction and revolution, or attempts to that effect, not simply a case of kidnap. Not incongruously, it ends with a reference to Joseph's rule over Egypt for forty-eight years. The scheme involves Pharaoh's son aided and abetted by Dan and Gad on the one hand, and Levi, Simeon, and Benjamin on the other. Aseneth has a part only in chapters 26–28. Joseph barely appears in 26:1–4, his mind again set on corn.

There is action in the story, but it is not fully developed. Potentially colorful narratives such as the wedding feast in chapter 21 or the military entanglements in chapters 26f. are merely stated. Considerable space is devoted to a sketch of Aseneth's tower and garden, to descriptions of people's appearance and emotions and to scenes of Aseneth dressing, where action is just an excuse for description. The rest consists mostly of dialogues, with some monologues, especially in chapters 11–13.

Stripped of the dialogues, the plot is simple enough. It unfolds with legendary straightforwardness bordering on the naïve (note the effects of a headache in 25:1–4). But it is by and large well constructed. Most of the shortcomings may be explained away on the assumption that Joseph and Aseneth is to be read as a companion to Genesis.

Integrity

Some scholars have suspected that the hymn of 21:10–21 is a later insertion, and that chapters 22–29 are an addition. The first half of this suspicion is invalidated by form criticism (see 21:10f.), and Part II is so close to I in both style and thought content that it is not likely to have come from a different hand. Lately T. Holtz argued for Christian interpolations.<sup>17</sup> Such interpolations, or other forms of editing, are not intrinsically improbable, but the evidence is not overwhelming.

Sources

If source means what the Gospel of Mark is to Matthew, or Pygmalion to My Fair Lady, a source for Joseph and Aseneth, or part of it, direct or indirect, has not yet appeared. More is gained if we amend the question of sources to include subject matter or themes, which the author may have picked up from tradition, oral or written, and worked into a new story, much as West Side Story is based on Romeo and Juliet and both reflect the eternal theme of young love thwarted by old convention, or individual happiness shattered by group rivalry. However, much of what has been cited in this context at best furnishes parallels to isolated motifs: the Egyptian Tale of the Doomed Prince, the Greek tradition concerning beautiful Helen of Troy, the Prayer of Joseph,<sup>18</sup> or Jewish legends making Aseneth the daughter of Dinah (Gen 34).<sup>19</sup> Batiffol, Aptowitzer, and Philonenko attach great importance to a Syriac text of very late attestation narrating how an eagle carried Dinah's daughter to Egypt and cradled her on Potiphar's altar.<sup>20</sup> This text they think is a later form of an old Jewish legend from which Joseph and Aseneth was developed, albeit with some dissimulation, because a daughter of Dinah could hardly serve as a proto-proselyte.<sup>21</sup> The pertinent passage runs:

<sup>17</sup> "Christliche Interpolationen in 'Joseph und Aseneth,'" NTS 14 (1967–68) 482–97. On the problem outside Joseph and Aseneth, see G. B. Coleman, The Phenomenon of Christian Interpolations into Jewish Apocalyptic Texts (Ph.D. diss., Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., 1974).

And the wife of this priest (Putiphar) took her (the baby) and brought her a nurse. And they rejoiced with great joy, for they had neither a boy nor a girl. And when the little girl grew up, Putiphar had a splendid dwelling constructed where he allowed her to live, and appointed virgins to serve her. And many chiefs' sons asked (for) her (in marriage), for she was beautiful to look at; but they did not suit her. And when Joseph came before Pharaoh he made him mount his carriage, and gave him the seal of the kingdom. And the Egyptians escorted him in triumph across all of Egypt, and his fame spread in all regions. And he (Pharaoh) gave him the daughter of the priest, Putiphar, for his wife, and he (Joseph) did not repulse [lit. hate] the daughter of Dina, (his) sister.

There seems to be some contact with Joseph and Aseneth here, but as it is restricted to chapters 1f., surely the dependence is on the legend's side.<sup>22</sup>

More helpful is hellenistic romance, especially the erotic variety as represented by the Great Five: Chariton's Chaereas and Calirrhoe, Xenophon of Ephesus' Ephesiaca, Longus' Daphnis and Chloë, Achilles Tatius' Clitophon and Leucippe, and Heliodorus' Aethiopia; or by Apuleius' The Golden Ass and Cupid and Psyche.<sup>23</sup> Much like these stories, Joseph and Aseneth relates a love that is achieved with difficulty only to find itself exposed to dangerous adventures to which a happy end is wrought by the hand of a benign Fate (although adventure which makes up the bulk of the novels is represented by just one episode in JosAsen). In particular, as an utterly conceited heroine who is swept off her feet by a handsome male and then thrown into the blackest despair, from which she disentangles herself by self-abasement and supernatural assistance, Aseneth is a worthy companion of Xenophon's Habrocomes and Anthia or Apuleius' Psyche. The historian's touch which is discernible in Joseph and Aseneth, although in the biblical vein rather than the Greek, does not militate against this suggestion. This is characteristic of the hellenistic novel also, especially of Chariton.<sup>24</sup> As to conversion forming part of a romance, apart from the general

<sup>18</sup> Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, pp. 32–43. See PrJos contained herein.

<sup>19</sup> Aptowitzer, HUCA 1 (1924) 243–56.

<sup>20</sup> First published by G. Oppenheim, Fabula Josephi et Asenethae apocrypha e libro Syriaco Latine versa (Phil. diss., Berlin; Berlin, 1886) pp. 4f., from the MS Staatsbibliothek, Berlin (DDR), MS Syr. 174, ff. 75<sup>v</sup>–76<sup>r</sup>, after A.D. 1827; repr. by Aptowitzer, HUCA 1 (1924) 248, n. 22; French version by Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, pp. 34f. A second MS was described by S. P. Brock ("Notes on Some Texts in the Mingana Collection," JSS 14 [1969] 205–26; see 206f.: Mingana MS Syr. 177, fols. 227<sup>v</sup>–28<sup>r</sup>, c. A.D. 1870).

<sup>21</sup> They discern traces of the legend, e.g. in 1:5; 22:9; 23:14.

<sup>22</sup> A legend of this type may, however, have influenced the much-debated miniature in the Vienna Genesis, fol. 16<sup>r</sup> (6th cent. A.D.), which would point to its age; cf. M. D. Levin, "Some Jewish Sources for the Vienna Genesis," Art Bulletin 54 (1972) 241–44.

<sup>23</sup> First noted by Philonenko (Joseph et Aséneth, pp. 43–48 and passim) whose main interest, however, is to point out parallels to individual motifs. See further Chr. Burchard, Zeuge, pp. 59–86; S. West, The Classical Quarterly, N.S. 24 (1974) 70–81; R. I. Pervo, SBL 1976 Seminar Papers, pp. 171–81. On Gk. romance generally, see K. Kerényi, Die Griechisch-Orientalische Romanliteratur in religionsgeschichtlicher Beleuchtung (Tübingen, 1927; repr. Darmstadt, 1962); Der antike Roman (Libelli 315; Darmstadt, 1962); M. Braun, History and Romance in Graeco-Oriental Literature (Oxford, 1938); S. Trenkner, The Greek novella in the classical period (Cambridge, 1958); R. Merkelbach, Roman und Mysterium in der Antike (Munich, 1962); B. E. Perry, The Ancient Romances (Sather Classical Lectures 37; Berkeley, Calif., 1967); T. Hägg, Narrative Technique in Ancient Greek Romances (Skrifter utgivna av Svenska Institutet i Athen, Series in 8<sup>o</sup>, 8; Stockholm, 1971).

<sup>24</sup> He seems to give himself the air of a contemporary of the events which are way back. One wonders if the author of JosAsen has the same thing in mind.

presence of religion, sometimes with an outright propagandistic drive (Heliodorus), there is Apuleius, Book 11<sup>25</sup> and (in a way) Cupid and Psyche again.

This is not to postulate literary dependence on either side, but there may be independent adaptation of common material. If the Kerényi-Merkelbach school is right, a myth may be at the bottom of this,<sup>26</sup> but further investigation is needed. It should cover the whole range of ancient romance in the wider sense of the term, which also includes such writings as Ahiqar, Judith, 3 Maccabees, Daniel chapters 1–6, certain passages from Josephus, the Life of Alexander, the Life of Aesop, the Pseudo-Clementines, or the apocryphal Acts of the Apostles, and the Greek novella. Two more possible sources (dealt with later) are the Jewish ritual and the allegorical patterns which, according to some, underlie Joseph and Aseneth at certain points.

Another question is whether models may have suggested or influenced, albeit by contrast, the composition of Joseph and Aseneth without contributing much to its narrative content. A writer who had read Ruth, Judith, Tobit, or Esther would perhaps be more inclined to tackle a figure from Israel's history, especially a woman, than one who had not. Then there is the Story of Joseph, though not an independent book. Joseph and Aseneth may have been inspired, among other things, by a desire to ensure that Joseph's wife become the heroine of a story that would be similar to that of her husband.<sup>27</sup> The romances are due for further consideration under this heading as well.<sup>28</sup> Most important, however, is a number of Jewish and Christian texts relating to conversion, especially the ones containing "conversion visions" (TJob 2–5; ApAb 1–11; Acts 9:1–19 par. 22:6–16; 26:12–18) and texts like Dan 4; Lk 7:36–50; Mt 16:16–18. They show, despite the differences they may have among each other and with Joseph and Aseneth, that the conversion section, for all that it may owe to the romantic genre, is constructed along the lines of a pattern, current in hellenistic Judaism, as to how a conversion, particularly of a person who was to be a model, ought to be presented.<sup>29</sup>

We are on safer ground when it comes to ascertaining the origin of details. Many of these can be traced back to the Old Testament, to the early Jewish literature, to oral traditions, and to Jewish traditions found in early Christian writings.<sup>30</sup> The general framework, the characters, and many a detail of the story are of course drawn from Genesis, especially the Story of Joseph.<sup>31</sup> The exception is Pharaoh's son,<sup>32</sup> unless he is modeled upon Shechem, the son of Hamor (Gen 34, but cf. Ex 11:5). The individual features of Jacob and his sons (see e.g. 4:7; 6:4, 6; 22:7, 11) can be paralleled from other intertestamental writings. Pharaoh's philo-Semitism recalls the kindly views which Daniel or the Letter of Aristeas have their respective sovereigns take to Judaism. The conversion section, particularly the angel's visit, has some important points in common with Judges 13 (retold in LAB 42; cf.

<sup>25</sup> For a commentary, see J. G. Griffiths, Apuleius of Madauros: The Isis-Book (Études Préliminaires aux Religions Orientales dans l'Empire Romain 39; Leiden, 1975).

<sup>26</sup> See nn. 23 and 81; Zeuge, pp. 81–86.

<sup>27</sup> Some have detected its influence in Esther (A. Meinhold, "Die Gattung der Josephsgeschichte und des Estherbuches: Diasporanovelle," ZAW 87 [1975] 306–24; 88 [1976] 72–93) and Tobit (L. Ruppert, "Das Buch Tobias—ein Modellfall nachgestaltender Erzählung," Wort, Lied und Gottespruch: Beiträge zur Septuaginta. Festschrift für Joseph Ziegler, ed. J. Schreiner [Forschung zur Bibel 1; Würzburg, 1972] pp. 109–19).

<sup>28</sup> Here the question of contrast comes up. Philonenko (Joseph et Aséneth, p. 44) thinks that as a "puritan novel" JosAsen is a pigeon among the cats. But Chariton or Xenophon of Ephesus are not very different, and all novels, although not exactly Victorian in their outlook on sexual matters, take a firm stand on female pudicity and conjugal faithfulness. The triumph of chastity over all temptations that are waged against it is one of the main devices to keep the action going. There is, however, a marked difference between the demure, if not in the least disinterested, attitude in which Aseneth strives toward her happiness, and the ruses employed, e.g. by Dionysius, one of the good characters in Chariton, to lure an unwilling Callirhoe into matrimony.

<sup>29</sup> A wealth of material and interpretative suggestions is amassed by K. Berger (Auferstehung). Close structural parallelism between Acts 9:1–19 and the conversional element in JosAsen, esp. chs. 4–19, was suggested by Burchard (Zeuge, pp. 86–105). Cf. also U. Wilckens, Orientierung an Jesus, pp. 394–424.

<sup>30</sup> See Aptowitz, HUCA 1 (1924); Berger, Auferstehung; "Jüdisch-hellenistische Missionsliteratur und apokryphe Apostelakten," Kairos N.S. 17 (1975) 232–48; E. W. Smith, Jr., "Joseph Material in Joseph and Aseneth and Josephus Relating to the Testament of Joseph," SCS 5, pp. 133–37.

<sup>31</sup> Or some paraphrase such as Jub? Cf. the dates in 1:1f.; 3:1; 22:1. On the Story of Joseph see D. B. Redford, A Study of the Biblical Story of Joseph (Genesis 37–50) (Supplements to VT 20; Leiden, 1970); E. I. Lowenthal, The Joseph Narrative in Genesis: An Interpretation (New York, 1973); Meinhold, ZAW 87 (1975) 306–24 and 88 (1976) 72–93.

<sup>32</sup> He remains anonymous, as do all persons (except Joakim of Moab, 1:9) and places in JosAsen which are nameless or not referred to in the Bible. For a different handling cf. TJob and LAB.

also Judg 6:11–24). Benjamin's bravery is a re-enactment of David slaying Goliath (1Sam 17). The prayers (8:9; 12f.; 17:10; 21:11–21; 27:10), meditations (6:2–8; 11:3–14, 16–18; 17:9), and eulogies (3:3; 8:3; 15:12; 17:6; 19:8; 21:4, 6) could hardly have been composed without knowledge of traditional forms of such devotional texts.<sup>33</sup>

Whether or not there is a common ancestry for the subject matter, many clichés which are typical, if not exclusive, marks of the hellenistic romance can be found in Joseph and Aseneth. A fine example is 1:3–6, which can be compared with Chariton 1.1.1f.:

Hermocrates, the strategos (chief magistrate) of the Syracusans, the one who defeated the Athenians, had a daughter by the name of Callirhoe, a wonderful specimen of a virgin and the delight of all Sicily. For her beauty was not human but divine, not that of a Nereid or a nymph of the mountains, but of the Virgin Aphrodite herself. The fame of the incredible spectacle penetrated everywhere, and suitors flocked into Syracuse, princes and sons of tyrants, not only from Sicily, but also from Italy and the mainland (or Epirus) and the (non-Greek) nations on the mainland.

A second example, which can be compared to 18:9, is Achilles Tatius 1.4.3: Leucippe's "mouth was a flower of roses, when the rose begins to open the leaves' lips."<sup>34</sup>

A problem which must yet be investigated is to what extent the realia—such as architecture, landscape, seasons, products, clothing, and hygiene—reflect what the author saw in his day, and how much the dealings of the characters mirror contemporary events. Obviously this also has some bearing on the questions of date and provenance (see below). The romances exhibit a good deal of anachronistic realism in these matters. As to Joseph and Aseneth, one gathers that the author, whose interest in lively detail is limited anyway, owes more to the biblical narrative and related literature than to an interested knowledge of the world in which he lived.

Language and style

If Aseneth's looks are like Sarah's (1:5), so is her tongue. All of Joseph and Aseneth is written in a simple Greek koine with a marked Hebrew and/or Aramaic flavor commonly called "Semitic."<sup>35</sup> It avoids subordinate clauses and conjunctive or absolute participles (see 19:1 for an exception). Most sentences start with "and," with the verb immediately following. Particles other than "and" are used very sparingly. Redundant possessive and demonstrative pronouns abound. A noun in the genitive is often used as a substitute for an adjectival attribute (e.g. "bride of God" 4:1; "prison of darkness" 4:10; "bread of life" 8:5; "bait of life" 21:21), and in the nominative for an adjectival complement ("fellowship with her is destruction and corruption" 7:5). There is ample evidence of the cognate accusative, usually carrying an attribute, in lieu of an adverb (lit. "to rejoice a great joy" 3:3; "to fear a great fear" 6:1; "to tremble a heavy trembling" 10:1; "to name the name of God" 11:15; "to insult an insult" 23:14; "to pain a pain" 25:3), and of related uses of the associative or instrumental dative (lit. "to weep with great and bitter weeping" 9:2; "to sigh with great sighing" 10:3; "to die with death" 21:8; "to wound with a heavy wound" 27:2). The Greek words prosōpon, "face," and cheir, "hand," are employed to form composite prepositions (e.g. 5:2; 27:7). Most of these phenomena, as well as the author's vocabulary and phraseology generally, can be paralleled from the Septuagint. The author, however, is not simply imitating the Old Testament or some other concrete model.<sup>36</sup> Borrowing is at times quite obvious (e.g. at 12:7; 15:7; 17:8; 20:5; 22:7; 27:1–5; 29:2), although literal quotations are few (cf. TJob for contrast).<sup>37</sup> However, basically the same <sup>33</sup> N. B. Johnson, Prayer in the Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha (JBLMS 2; Philadelphia, Pa., 1948); G. Mayer, "Die Funktion der Gebete in den alttestamentlichen Apokryphen," Theokratia 2 (1970–72) 16–25; J. Heinemann, Prayer in the Talmud (Studia Judaica 9; Berlin, 1977).

<sup>34</sup> A slight Persian touch is also characteristic. Cf. the satraps in e.g. 1:3, and Aseneth's garments in e.g. 3:6.

<sup>35</sup> Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, pp. 28–32; G. D. Kilpatrick, review of Burchard, Untersuchungen, and Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, in NovT 12 (1970) 233–36; G. Dellling, JSJ 9 (1978) 29–56. Dellling notes that the influence of the Pss and Gen is most palpable.

<sup>36</sup> He could have done so without discrediting himself. Imitation was a virtue rather than a vice in some areas of ancient literature. Chariton is leaning heavily on the historical prose of Xenophon of Athens.

<sup>37</sup> One would like to know to what extent deviation from our LXX text is because of a different form or forms of text. There is no evidence so far for independent knowledge of MT or another Heb. text form.

type of Greek, though with varying admixtures of Semitisms, is found for instance in the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, the Testament of Job, Luke-Acts, and Hermas. There was a living tradition to write on sacred subjects in a publicized language.

On the other hand this recognition does not explain everything. Occasionally there is a classical simile (8:5) or turn (21:21; 22:6), a quasi-philosophical touch (12:2 beginning), an unexpected metonymy (20:1), a paronomasia (kakon anti kakou, "evil for evil," e.g. 23:9), parechesis (pēlos polys, "plenty of mud," 10:16; 13:7, cf. 15:3), or chiasmus (e.g. 11:13). There are also words, with or without Septuagint support, that seem to be rare (apokrybē 6:6; barythymein 10:1; brimēma 10:15; charopoios 22:7; delea[s]ma 21:21; eidōlomanēs 12:9; hypolampas 14:9; katapetasma 10:2; prodromos or -mon 19:2, 4; sitistos 10:13). This side of the author's vocabulary will have to be given further attention before we can reach a definite conclusion regarding his language as a whole.

The narrative evolves at a leisurely pace with plenty of repetition. It is full of recapitulation ("And there was . . . a spring of abundant living water, and below the spring was a big cistern receiving the water of that spring," 2:12), stereotyped auxiliary verbs and turns ("she hurried and," "he stretched out his hand and," "they prostrated themselves before him, face down to the ground, and"), and mechanical epithets ("Pentephres priest of Heliopolis," "Joseph the Powerful One of God"). The various and sundry scenes of Aseneth getting dressed (3:6; 10:10; 14:14f.; 18:5f.) and emotional outbursts (e.g. 4:9; 6:1; 8:8; 9:1f.; 10:1, 3, 15) show that variety of expression is not a concern of the author. Also he has a leaning toward overemphasis. The overall result is a pompous rigidity of style which is stiff to us, but presumably it was more attractive to the author and his readers.

Genre

We can only speculate whether the author intended to write a piece of fiction or a work of history; but we can see the result: a romance in the wider sense of the word.<sup>38</sup> Can it be associated with any of the possible subdivisions of this heterogeneous ensemble which "is probably the most formless of all ancient genres?"<sup>39</sup> The books of Ruth, Esther, Tobit, and Judith have been put forward as closest literary affinities, with some similarities to Jonah acknowledged.<sup>40</sup> These writings form an ill defined group, yet they resemble Joseph and Aseneth in language and religion, and the eminent role both play in life. Female characters dominate, there is marriage, and Jewish-gentile relations are at stake. There is also some similarity in structure (see 12:1; 21:10, 11). But there is more interest in historical shading (Joseph and Aseneth is closer to the Joseph story here), and none of these books makes love's labors a constituent of the plot. This feature, as well as the adventures, is shared by Joseph and Aseneth with the erotic novels.<sup>41</sup> But is the element of eroticism and adventure strong enough for Joseph and Aseneth to be considered a specimen of this variety? In Part I love is almost superseded by the conversion theme; in Part II it is barely present. The general background of high treason and fighting is romantic indeed, but the actors are mostly busy discussing what they have in mind or why it must not be done. The naïveté and the lack of historiographical detail, and the brevity of Joseph and Aseneth, distinguish it from the erotic romances. Recently an attempt has been made to sever the Jewish book from them and put it alongside the apocryphal acts, especially Paul and Thecla, as a "religious proselyte romance."<sup>42</sup> This attempt seems to emphasize unduly the conversion aspect to the detriment of others; moreover, there is no figure in Joseph and Aseneth resembling an apostle or missionary as portrayed in the Christian Acts. So while this approach has its merits, it does not explain everything. R. I. Pervo<sup>43</sup> assumes that, as a specimen of the romantic genre, Joseph and Aseneth is best regarded as a piece of literary syncretism. Pervo

<sup>38</sup> See e.g. P. Weimar, "Formen frühjüdischer Literatur," Literatur und Religion des Frühjudentums, eds. J. Maier and J. Schreiner (Würzburg, 1973) pp. 123–62; see pp. 130–35. Weimar strings Jdt, Esth, 3Mac, JosAsen, Tob, LetAris, Art, and TJos chs. 2–9, together as novels.

<sup>39</sup> Pervo, SBL 1976 Seminar Papers, p. 72.

<sup>40</sup> Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 106f.; Kilpatrick, NovT 12 (1970) 234.

<sup>41</sup> Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, pp. 43–48; West, Classical Quarterly N.S. 24 (1974) 70–81.

<sup>42</sup> T. Szepessy, "L'histoire de Joseph et d'Aseneth et le roman antique," Studia Classica Universitatis Scientiarum Debreceniensis 10–11 (1974–75) 121–31.

<sup>43</sup> SBL 1976 Seminar Papers, pp. 171–81.

feels that the book updated the older form of the "Sapiental novel" (e.g. Ah, Tob, Dan 1–6) by taking in structural elements and motifs of the erotic variety. He may underestimate the affinities to the literature dealing with conversion,<sup>44</sup> but generally he seems to be on the right track.

Date and provenance

Batiffol introduced Joseph and Aseneth to modern scholarship as a Christian work of the fifth century A.D. from Asia Minor, based on a short Jewish legend of the fourth century.<sup>45</sup> This infelicitous presentation did much to prevent students of the Bible and Judaism from noticing the book. Kautzsch and Charles did not include it. Ironically enough, when a reviewer concluded that Joseph and Aseneth must be a Jewish composition from Jesus' time or even earlier, Batiffol all but agreed.<sup>46</sup> Every competent scholar has since affirmed that Joseph and Aseneth is Jewish, with perhaps some Christian interpolations; none has put the book much after A.D. 200, and some have placed it as early as the second century B.C. As to the place of origin, the majority of scholars look to Egypt. Those in favor of a Semitic original suggest Palestine; and there is a plea for Syria.<sup>47</sup> However, the date and provenance have never been thoroughly examined.<sup>48</sup>

What we can say with certainty may be summarized in the following way. The book itself is probably first attested toward the end of the fourth century A.D. Peter the Deacon of Monte Cassino writes in his book On the Holy Places (shortly before A.D. 1137), in a passage which he probably culled from the lost beginning of the Pilgrimage of Etheria (c. A.D. 382):<sup>49</sup>

Heliopolis is twelve miles from Babylonia (Cairo). In the center of this city is a large piece of ground on which there is the Temple of the Sun, and there is Petefres' house. Between Petefres' house and the Temple is Asennec's house. The inner wall within the city is rather old and made of stone (surrounding, or connecting?) only the Temple with Asennec's house and Petefres' house.

Aseneth's house is known exclusively from Joseph and Aseneth. People at Heliopolis, a tourist center long before the first Christian pilgrim's progress (see 1:2), seem to have put their finger on the localities described in Joseph and Aseneth, unless the author made use of some local tradition already extant (in which case, however, one would like to find a reference to the famous obelisk or obelisks in the text). But Joseph and Aseneth must be even earlier than this testimony. A book glorifying the mother of the proselytes ought to have been written before Greek-speaking Judaism ceased to make its impact on the ancient world and gave way to Christianity.<sup>50</sup> On the other hand, Joseph and Aseneth presupposes at least some of the Septuagint, and probably all of it. It is hard to decode this into dates, but we are probably safe to say that the book was written between 100 B.C. and Hadrian's edict against circumcision, which has to do with the Second Jewish War of A.D. 132–135. If Joseph and Aseneth comes from Egypt, the Jewish revolt under Trajan (c. A.D. 115–117) is the latest possible date.<sup>51</sup> It does appear to have originated in Egypt, since Aseneth, and

<sup>44</sup> Burchard, Zeuge; Berger, Auferstehung; Szepessy, Studia Classica Universitatis Scientiarum Debreceniensis 10–11 (1974–75) 121–31.

<sup>45</sup> Batiffol, Studia Patristica, pp. 30–37.

<sup>46</sup> L. Duchesne, Bulletin critique 10 (1889) 461–66; see 466; Batiffol, review of M. R. James, Apocrypha Anecdota, vol. 2 (T&S 5:1; Cambridge, 1897) in RB 7 (1898) 302–4; see 303.

<sup>47</sup> Brooks, Joseph and Aseneth, pp. xvii–xviii.

<sup>48</sup> For a survey, see Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 133–51; Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, pp. 99–109.

<sup>49</sup> Translated from the autograph as printed in Burchard, Untersuchungen, p. 137; somewhat differently, J. Wilkinson, Egeria's Travels (London, 1971) p. 204.

<sup>50</sup> Cf. generally, B. J. Bamberger, Proselytism in the Talmudic Period (Cincinnati, Ohio, 1939; repr. New York, 1968); W. G. Braude, Jewish Proselyting in the First Five Centuries of the Common Era, the Age of the Tannaim and Amoraim (Brown University Studies 6; Providence, R.I., 1940); K. G. Kuhn and H. Stegemann, "Proselyten," Pauly-Wissowa Suppl. 9 (1962) 1248–83; K. G. Kuhn, "prosélytos," TDNT, vol. 6, 727–44; N. J. McElenny, "Conversion, Circumcision and the Law," NTS 20 (1974) 319–41.

<sup>51</sup> On the revolts generally, see E. M. Smallwood, The Jews under Roman Rule: From Pompey to Diocletian (SJLA 20; Leiden, 1976) esp. pp. 389–466. Perhaps we may even go back until the troubles in Alexandria under Caligula (c. A.D. 38). Gentile-Jewish friction never ceased after that.

not another woman such as Ruth or Rahab (Josh 2), is the heroine of the story.

Other suggestions for dating and locating Joseph and Aseneth are mere speculation. Surely no individual incident such as the conversion of Queen Helena of Adiabene, an elderly lady (died c. A.D. 65), was needed to trigger the composition of Joseph and Aseneth.<sup>52</sup> That Egypt figures in the book as an independent country ruled by a philo-Semitic dynasty does not prove that the novel was written under the later Ptolemies before the Romans took over.<sup>53</sup> The absence of a reference to proselyte baptism is of little avail since we do not know when the custom began.<sup>54</sup> Lexical chronology is also of little help. We may note that words like anazōopoiein (8:9; 15:5), brimēma (10:15), eidōlomanēs (12:9), ekliparein (1:7; 15:7), hemithanēs (27:3), male parthenos (4:7; 8:1), proskairos (12:15), sitistos (10:13), sitodotēs (25:5), sygklēronomos (24:14) are not attested with certainty until the first century B.C. or even later.<sup>55</sup> But Greek lexicography is not advanced enough to enable us to be certain when a word first appeared.

An Essene<sup>56</sup> or Therapeutic<sup>57</sup> origin of Joseph and Aseneth is maintained by some scholars; but Aseneth's way of living, her marriage, and happiness thereafter are hardly in keeping with the quasi-monastic rigorism of these groups.

Philonenko suggests a rural milieu outside Alexandria because he thinks Joseph and Aseneth is less intransigent toward paganism than an Alexandrian like Philo.<sup>58</sup> Quite possibly the book represents a more popular type of Jewish culture than does Philo, who among all Jewish writers we know is closest to the hellenistic ideal of a well-bred, well-read, and well-to-do gentleman spending his life in the service of both learning and politics. But this does not necessarily imply the countryside. With villages usually adhering more closely to their traditions than the city dwellers, would a rural community have attracted enough proselytes and sympathizers to make writing about it worthwhile? Would it be interested in the finer points of conversion? Would it provide enough of a reading public for Joseph and Aseneth, supposing, as seems likely, that it was to be read privately and by Jews? (See below.) Private reading in antiquity took both education and money. Jews were by and large less illiterate than other populations, and perhaps more willing to buy books, theirs being a book religion. Nevertheless, one must look for the prospective readers of Joseph and Aseneth in the upper brackets of Jewish society, although perhaps not the top level; would Philo have enjoyed it? We know too little about Judaism in and outside Alexandria<sup>59</sup> and not yet enough about Joseph and Aseneth to answer these questions.<sup>60</sup>

Theological importance<sup>61</sup>

By design, the theological importance of a religious book is in its message. Beyond this the modern historian will be interested generally in the theological ideas expressed in the book, particularly in those that are less well documented outside it.

Message

Barring heavy generalization, the message of Joseph and Aseneth cannot be rendered by a single concept or phrase. A story of such length and complexity usually has several things to say. But they will cohere if it is as well organized as Joseph and Aseneth.

<sup>52</sup> Against Aptowitz, HUCA 1 (1924) 309.

<sup>53</sup> Against G. D. Kilpatrick, "The Last Supper," ExpT 64 (1952-53) 4-8.

<sup>54</sup> Cf. T. M. Taylor, "The Beginnings of Jewish Proselyte Baptism," NTS 2 (1955-56) 193-98.

<sup>55</sup> Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 148-51.

<sup>56</sup> K. Kohler, "Aseneth, Life and Confession or Prayer of," JE, vol. 2, pp. 172-76; Riessler, TQ 103 (1922) 4-13; Altjüdisches Schrifttum, pp. 1303f.

<sup>57</sup> K. G. Kuhn, "The Lord's Supper and the Communal Meal at Qumran," The Scrolls and the New Testament, ed. K. Stendahl (New York, 1957) pp. 65-93, 259-65; see esp. 74-77, 261-62; M. Delcor, "Un roman d'amour d'origine thérapeute: Le Livre de Joseph et Asénath," Bulletin de Littérature Ecclésiastique 63 (1962) 3-27.

<sup>58</sup> Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, pp. 106f.

<sup>59</sup> For a general survey see Smallwood, Jews, pp. 220-55, 364-68. The complete lack of cultic interest in JosAseneth would seem to rule out Leontopolis with its "Temple in Exile" (c. 160 B.C.-A.D. 73), even though it is situated in the county of Heliopolis, just eighteen kilometers north of the city (today Tell el-Yehudieh).

<sup>60</sup> There is no compelling reason to assume that our author was an Egyptian proselyte; contrast Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, p. 106.

<sup>61</sup> More information is available in the footnotes to the passages referred to in this section.

In Part I attention is focused on what happens to Aseneth. She represents the virgin, who is proud of her virginity, but, eventually chastised by violent passion, must endure hardships before she is gratified. Yet, since the target of her emotions is Joseph, the son of God, her story gradually assumes a religious complexion. Pride becomes a symbol for pagan enmity against God, and passion the sudden desire to be accepted by him aroused by a meeting with a true follower of God. Consequently love's labors are continued by a period of self-humiliation leading to conversion. The message of Part I, therefore, is about conversion to Judaism: It means fullness of life, whereas paganism brings death and eternal destruction.

Some scholars have found allegory in the story. Philonenko, for example, detects several allegorical patterns in the narrative. First, Aseneth is molded in the image of the Egyptian goddess Neith, whose name she bears (see 1:5), thus insinuating that the deity is giving in to the Most High God and wants her worshipers to follow her example. Second, there is astrology in the book. Joseph and Aseneth impersonate the Sun and the Moon uniting in a holy wedding, thus witnessing to the importance which Judaism, or parts of it, attached to astrology. Third, there is a mythological pattern of gnostic extraction. Aseneth represents the mythic figure of Wisdom fallen into error, and Joseph is the divine Logos, who is coming to rescue her by uniting himself to her.

This method of allegorizing the document is too complicated to warrant acceptance. As to Neith, the appearance of the Lady of Sais seems to have been so variegated, and many of her attributes so unspecific in the author's day, that very precise parallels would be needed for Aseneth to be her symbol.<sup>62</sup> Joseph and Aseneth, like Greek romance generally, seems to make use of motifs that stem from mythical and astrological contexts. But it remains to be shown that the author did so consciously, and, if he did, that he intended Joseph and Aseneth to be more than human figures entangled in the vicissitudes of human love and conversion. Love is a heavenly thing, after all, and so is conversion, to religious people.

To be sure, the affair between Joseph and Aseneth has a deeper meaning. But it is stated by the text; it is not coded in it. Aseneth, who found her way to God, is also an eternal City of Refuge for all (not just women) who repent in like manner (15:7; 16:16; 19:5), with her seven virgins as pillars to support her (17:6). The tradition of Sion, the City of God, also described under the figure of a woman,<sup>63</sup> lies behind this concept. Chapter 15:7a may be a direct reference to the prophecy on Sion, Zech 2:15 LXX (cf. e.g. Isa 62:4–12; Jer 50:5; 4Ezra 9f.; Rev 21). Moreover, Aseneth as the City of Refuge parallels Abraham (Isa 51:1f.; LAB 23:4f.), Peter, the rock on whom the church is built (Mt 16:16–18), the "pillar apostles" (Gal 2:9), perhaps also Sarah and Hagar as exegeted by Paul (Gal 4:21–31).<sup>64</sup> This is metonymy, not allegory. For Aseneth, as a City of Refuge, does not mean merely that all proselytes will be safeguarded by God like her. Full protection is offered to all who seek shelter "in" her, by becoming naturalized descendants of her by rallying themselves to the Jewish people of whom she is an ancestor. To be "in" Aseneth, however, is not similar to being "in" Christ. Both concepts are comparable in that salvation depends on association with an historical person, but association means different things in each case. Aseneth did not continue to be present as a person. She does not continue to live "in" the proselytes similar to the way "Christ lives in me" (Gal 2:20).<sup>65</sup> Only the promises and

<sup>62</sup> D. Sänger, Antikes Judentum und die Mysterien, pp. 58–67; idem, "Bekehrung und Exodus: Zum jüdischen Traditions hintergrund von 'Joseph und Aseneth,'" JSJ 10 (1979) 11–36; see pp. 13–20. On Neith generally, see C. J. Bleeker, "The Egyptian Goddess Neith," Studies in Mysticism and Religion presented to Gershom G. Scholem on his seventieth Birthday by Pupils, Colleagues, and Friends, eds. E. E. Urbach, R. J. Zwi Werblowsky, and Ch. Wirszubski (Jerusalem, 1967) pp. 41–56; repr. in Bleeker, The Rainbow (SHR 30; Leiden, 1975) pp. 128–42.

<sup>63</sup> Cf. W. W. Reader, Die Stadt Gottes in der Johannesapokalypse (Theol. diss.; Göttingen, 1972); G. Fohrer and E. Lohse, "Sion etc.," TDNT, vol. 7, 292–338.

<sup>64</sup> Cf. also Jer 1:18; IQH 3:37; Mt 5:14; Eph 2:20; 1Tim 3:15. Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 118–21; C. Kähler, "Zur Form- und Traditionsgeschichte von Matth. XVI. 17–19," NTS 23 (1977) 36–58. U. Fischer (Eschatologie und Jenseits erwartung im hellenistischen Diasporajudentum [BZNW 44; Berlin, 1978] pp. 115–23) thinks that Aseneth bears a touch of heavenly Jerusalem, considering that the heavenly rest of the saved is also described as a walled city (see below). The point, however, is not elaborated. At any event, we should not regard the description of Aseneth as a city as the outcome of a process of de-eschatologization.

<sup>65</sup> H. Thyen (Studien zur Sündenvergebung im Neuen Testament und seinen alttestamentlichen und jüdischen Voraussetzungen [FRLANT 96; Göttingen, 1970] pp. 126f.) wrongly assumes that Aseneth is transformed into Metanoia as her heavenly counterpart.

qualities with which she was endowed remain available, like the physical and material heritage that is inherited by a particular family.

A woman portrayed in the role elsewhere occupied by men should not come as a surprise. The Sion tradition, at least when taken up directly, paved the way for this portrayal (cf. also Gal 4:21–31). This portrait may also reflect the fact that more women than men became full proselytes, and that a relatively liberal status was accorded to women in some quarters of Jewish Hellenism.<sup>66</sup>

In Part II Joseph's brothers are in the foreground, and Aseneth has become one of the family. The message seems to be that true Jews will not allow themselves to be talked into hate and subversion; if attacked, they will be protected by both divine assistance and their own gallantry soothed by clemency. Let it be noted that it is not only moral and physical integrity which is at stake here; it is also the leading position of Jews in society. Both aspects are interrelated, as, for example, in the picture of the wise man in the Testament of Levi 13, who is both prudent and influential, "enthroned with kings, as was Joseph my brother" (vs. 9).<sup>67</sup> Much like the plot, the message of Part II is developed rather independently from I, but there are some foreshadowings (perhaps 16:17–22). Between them the two parts add up to a rather well-balanced whole. Part I defines Judaism in contrast to the world; Part II describes Judaism in the world.

Key Ideas

God<sup>68</sup> has two main characteristics in Joseph and Aseneth. He created and sustains the world by his word (8:9; 12:1f.). He is also the loving father of man, assuring the welfare of those who adhere to him and hating those who worship idols; but always he is prepared to receive in mercy those who repent earnestly (11:7–14, 18; 12:8, 13–15). God is not identified as the Lord of history, the author of the Law or morality, or the recipient of the Temple cult. Exodus, the giving of the Law on Mount Sinai, and the institution of the cult, of course, postdate the setting of the narrative. But the author could have found a way to mention these events if he was interested in them, e.g. by prophecy as the Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs.

The world which God created is a three-story structure animated by his "word which is life for all your creatures" (12:1f.) and holds all elements in obedience. Lowest is "the abyss of the water," sealed by stones, floating on it like leaves, which carry the earth. On top are the heavens founded on a firmament, which rests on the winds. The earth is man's dwelling place, but (unlike Acts 17:26) the author is not interested in the subdivisions of continents and seasons. The abyss underneath houses "the big sea monster" which Aseneth is afraid may devour her (12:11). The devil is responsible for this (12:9–11), but it is not specified where he resides. In heaven is God, of course, and the hosts of the angels. Two of these are described individually: Aseneth's heavenly visitor who is their commander in chief (elsewhere named Michael), and his beautiful sister, Repentance (14:8; 15:7f.). In heaven is a "book of the living" that contains the names of the angels and the saved (15:4). In heaven is also God's Paradise, with many flowers from which bees make honey, the food for the angels and God's elect; the honey is manna (16:14; cf. 16:7y–23). For the elect a heavenly place of "rest" is prepared (8:9; 15:7; 22:13). More specifically, this place is in the seventh heaven (if the reading is right); it is described as a walled city founded upon rock (22:13).

Man is dependent upon God for continuous sustenance. Yet of all creatures man has the capacity of ignoring his maker by worshiping other gods. Idolatry rather than erroneous philosophy, transgression of the Law, or plain moral depravity is the main earmark of the godless. God will, of course, sustain only those who recognize him. The Jews alone do; consequently they are endowed with light, truth, life, and immortality. The rest of mankind thrives in darkness and error, and is practically dead. This dualistic view of mankind is not explained in terms of man's past, let alone primal developments as can be expressed only in a myth. The pairs of opposites, darkness and light, error and truth, death and life—for all that they may designate in other texts<sup>69</sup>—do not in Joseph and Aseneth denote a dualism of spheres, eons, or opposite reigns of God and Satan; they denote two ways of life. Adherence is by birth, but it may be altered by choice. So there is no doctrine of the Fall or of any redemptive activity of God in history. To know God has always been feasible; unlike Romans 1:18–23, it is not a chance passed over. It is not naturally accomplished, of course; it is a divine gift, which is available to each who would seek it. To be sure, Joseph and Aseneth talks about sin (7:4; 11:10f., 18; 12:5, 15; 13:13; 21:11–21; 23:11) and election (8:9; 16:14; 17:6; cf. 8:11; 21:4). But election is not predestination; it certainly does not obliterate one's personal responsibility. Sin does not mean a supernatural agent holding humanity in his or her grip, corrupting everyone in the very core of existence (as Paul sees it); sin is the result of personal failure, often ushered in by "ignorance" (6:7; 12:5; 13:13). According to Joseph and Aseneth, sinful acts amount to non-allegiance to God and hostility against his followers.<sup>70</sup>

<sup>66</sup> K. Thraede, "Frau," RAC 8 (1972) 197–269; see especially 226f.

<sup>67</sup> Here, however, wisdom is achieved by observance of the Law.

<sup>68</sup> On his titles and predicates see Dellling, JSJ 9 (1978) 45–47. Otherwise cf. R. Marcus, "Divine Names and Attributes in Hellenistic Jewish Literature," Proceedings of the American Academy for Jewish Research (1931–32) 43–120.

Divine life is not mediated to man through the Law, through special revelation or mystical experience, or through proclamations loaded with spirit and grounded in a "saving event" (as with Paul); it is obtained through the right use of food, ointment, and by the avoidance of the pagan way of partaking of them. This is the meaning of the much-debated so-called meal formula (8:5; cf. 8:9; 15:5; 16:16; 19:5; 21:13f., 21). It is difficult to discern the precise meaning of the "blessed bread, cup, and ointment" (see 8:5). Perhaps the expression refers merely to the ordinary Jewish diet; possibly it may refer to some ritual practice such as a cultic meal; some even regard it as a Christian interpolation.<sup>71</sup> At any event, "bread, cup, and ointment," as enjoyed by Jews, provide life, immortality, and incorruption. That is because the Jewish food is equivalent to the manna from heaven (see above), probably by virtue of "blessing," i.e. grace said at meals.

So Jews live in close relationship with God, and with angels whose food they share; but they remain apart from non-Jews, with whom they may coexist but must not mingle: no table-fellowship with pagans, no physical intimacy with a pagan woman (chs. 7f.). Relationship with God implies that Jews enjoy all the privileges that come with divine childhood, leading some sort of angelic existence. Practically, as the example of Aseneth shows, that means fullness of life, supernatural beauty, wisdom, comfortable living, and divine protection. These things are embodied in an exemplary, if not exclusive, fashion, in the Patriarchs generally, with particular emphasis, besides Aseneth, on Joseph (4:7; 6:4–6 and passim), Jacob (22:7), and Levi (22:13; 23:8–17; 26:6; 27:6; 28:15–17; 29:3–6). A special mark is the gift of prophecy which Levi has (22:13; 23:8; 26:6). It assures supernatural insight into things divine, such as a person's heavenly rest, and the ability to read others' minds (cf. Lk 7:39) and recognize what is going on from a distance rather than to foretell the future. A similar thing is the "inner light" which gives supernatural eyesight to Joseph (6:6).<sup>72</sup>

Such qualities would seem to account for the epithet of "son of God" accorded to Joseph, which is invariably in other people's mouths, never in the narrative (6:3, 5; 13:13; "his firstborn son" 18:11; 21:4; "like the firstborn son" 23:10). This title has been taken as evidence of Joseph being a figure of the Redeemer. But "sons of God" seems to be used elsewhere as a designation of the saved in general (16:14; 19:8). Aseneth is called "a daughter of the Most High" in a passage where her prototypical role is not at stake (21:4), and Jacob (who does not cease to be Joseph's father) is designated "a friend of the Most High God" (23:10). So "son of God" assigns to Joseph a peer's rank; he is superior even to Pharaoh's firstborn, and that may be all it means.<sup>73</sup> But if the Wisdom of Solomon 2–5,

<sup>69</sup> See e.g. H. Conzelmann, "skotos etc.," TDNT, vol. 7, 423–45; "phōs etc.," TDNT, vol. 9, 310–58.

<sup>70</sup> This applies also when the sin of a Jew is envisaged (7:4; 23:11, only occurrence of the root hamart- in Part II).

<sup>71</sup> This possibility is defended by Holtz, NTS 14 (1967–68) 482–97; cf. also R. D. Richardson, "Supplementary Essay," in H. Lietzmann, Mass and Lord's Supper: A Study in the History of the Liturgy (Leiden, 1979) pp. 343–47.

<sup>72</sup> It is highly doubtful whether such features warrant the conclusion that "the highest religious value of the group (sc. that is back of Joseph and Aseneth) seems to have been personal, revelatory experience" (H. C. Kee, "The Socio-Religious Setting and Aims of 'Joseph and Aseneth,'" SBL 1976 Seminar Papers, pp. 183–92; see p. 188).

<sup>73</sup> Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 115–17.

especially 5, is analogical, "son of God" may also mean that Joseph is an example of the just man in whom God can be recognized.<sup>74</sup>

Fullness of life does not include living together with other people in a community. The services, festivals, and ordinances (unless 8:5 points to a communal meal) of the synagogue play no role in the author's thought, although he must have been aware of their existence and does not criticize them.

It follows from the above discussion that salvation is a "necessity" appropriate only for non-Jews. It did not have to be wrought by a redeemer (let alone a dying one like Christ); and its conditions were not disclosed at some specific time in history by a special envoy of God, such as the Teacher of Righteousness. That Aseneth is cast in the part of proto-proselyte does not mean that salvation had then been instituted. The publication of Joseph and Aseneth was not intended to announce salvation; it is not a gospel. The chance to be saved has always been present, predicated on God's habitual mercy for penitent polytheists, man's capacity to avail himself of it, and the presence of Judaism in the world.

There is no hint in Joseph and Aseneth that Jewish missionaries or zealous individuals spread the good news of salvation and called for conversion. Joseph does surprisingly little for Aseneth.<sup>75</sup> He prays for her conversion, and then leaves. This act is enough for the girl to smash her idols and start castigating herself; but for positive guidance she depends upon what she "heard" about the mercy of the God of the Hebrews (11:10),<sup>76</sup> hardly from missionary sermons. Finally she is accepted without further human interference, a fact which is gladly welcomed by Joseph. Surely this is a pattern which conversion often followed.<sup>77</sup>

Materially, conversion<sup>78</sup> is described as the passage from darkness to light, from error to truth, from death to life, in analogy to creation (8:9; 12:1f.; 15:12; 27:10); it is not from sin to righteousness or forgiveness. Forgiveness is hoped and asked for (11:18; 13:13), but nobody tells Aseneth that her sins have been forgiven. Obviously, she has overcome them by spurning her idols, giving away her valuables, and castigating herself for seven days. Conversion is also called re-creation (8:9; 15:5; cf. 16:16; 18:9)<sup>79</sup> with no implication of a fall from which one has to be lifted up again nor of dying and rising as professed, for example, by Paul or perhaps, in a very different perspective, by Apuleius.<sup>80</sup> Re-creation is the promotion from the deficient, nothing-but-human state naturally possessed by the heathen to the angelic status naturally possessed by the Jews. This has little, if any, moral implications and consequences. There is no word about future obligations, not even religious ones such as daily prayer, or of a new stimulus implanted in the re-created. Ethics are important to the author (see below). But what Judaism offers over non-Jewish existence is privilege, not

<sup>74</sup> Berger, Auferstehung, p. 606, nn. 506f. See further generally, P. Pokorný, Der Gottessohn: Literarische Übersicht und Fragestellung (Theologische Studien 109; Zürich, 1971); M. Hengel, Der Sohn Gottes: Die Entstehung der Christologie und die jüdisch-hellenistische Religionsgeschichte (Tübingen, 1975); P. Wülfing von Martitz, G. Fohrer, E. Schweizer, E. Lohse, and W. Schneemelcher, "hyios etc.," TDNT, vol. 8, 334-99; G. Dellling, "Die Bezeichnung 'Söhne Gottes' in der jüdischen Literatur der hellenistisch-römischen Zeit," God's Christ and His People: Studies in Honor of Nils Astrup Dahl, eds. J. Jervell and W. A. Meeks (Oslo, 1977) pp. 18-28.

<sup>75</sup> Apparently less than for Potiphar's wife according to TJos 4:4.

<sup>76</sup> T. Holtz, "Euer Glaube an Gott": Zu Form und Inhalt von 1 Thess 1,9f.," Die Kirche des Anfangs. Festschrift für Heinz Schürmann zum 65. Geburtstag, eds. R. Schnackenburg, J. Ernst, and J. Wanke (Erfurter Theologische Studien 38; Leipzig, 1977) pp. 459-88; see esp. 472f.

<sup>77</sup> On Jewish mission generally, see nn. 50, 87, 89, and D. Georgi, Die Gegner des Paulus im 2. Korintherbrief: Studien zur religiösen Propaganda in der Spätantike (Wissenschaftliche Monographien zum Alten und Neuen Testaments 11; Neukirchen-Vluyn, 1964). On the Christian mission, F. Hahn, Mission in the New Testament (SBT 47; London, 1965); Chr. Burchard, "Formen der Vermittlung christlichen Glaubens im Neuen Testament," EvT 38 (1978) 313-40.

<sup>78</sup> C. Bussmann, Themen der paulinischen Missionspredigt auf dem Hintergrund der spätjüdisch-hellenistischen Missionsliteratur (European University Papers, Series xviii, Theology 3; Bern, Frankfurt, 1971); S. Anandakumara, The Gentile Reactions to the Christ-Kerygma—The Problems Involved in the Reception of the Christ-Kerygma in the Young Gentile Christianity in the New Testament (Theol. diss.; Hamburg, 1975) pp. 29-91, 316-35; Berger, Kairos 17 (1975) 232-48; Sängler, Antikes Judentum und die Mysterien, pp. 148-90. Generally, see A. D. Nock, Conversion (Oxford, 1933; repr. Oxford Paperbacks 30; 1961).

<sup>79</sup> Some have sensed an element of "realized eschatology" at this point and others (cf. also n. 64). For this term to be applied properly, the concept of re-creation would have to have been transposed from a context of future eschatology into the present. Paul has done so (e.g. in 2Cor 5:17) but it may be doubted whether the author of JosAsen did the same.

<sup>80</sup> R. C. Tannehill, Dying and Rising with Christ (BZNW 32; Berlin, 1967); Griffiths, Isis-Book, pp. 296-301.

obligation. Incidentally, Aseneth's motivation, which is plainly egotistical, at least in the beginning, is not frowned upon.

Philonenko<sup>81</sup> suggested that the conversion section of Joseph and Aseneth, or part of it, is shaped after some pertinent ritual or rituals, possibly an initiation liturgy designed to present Judaism as a form of mystery religion. The parallels to Lucius' initiation and his retransformation from donkey to human being (in Apuleius, Golden Ass, 11) might seem to be prima facie evidence for this view. However, such a ritual would have to be reconstructed from the very text which it is called upon to elucidate. The methodological problem involved is how to translate literary developments back into liturgical procedure, and that is a formidable problem. If there is mystery religion in Joseph and Aseneth, moreover, we ought to be prepared for a measure of deliberate mystification (Apuleius, Golden Ass, 11.23.6). Doubtless there were no angels visiting, no bees rising from miraculous honeycombs, and no fiery chariots ascending into heaven. If these features represent some ritual, what could it be? If they are fictional, why not the rest of chapters 14–18 as well?

Ritual, however, or at least accepted custom, nevertheless, may be reflected in Joseph and Aseneth. Entry into Judaism may well have been performed by a period of fasting, praying, meditating, washing, a symbolic changing of clothes (and perhaps of name), and celebrating a festive meal. But corroborative evidence is needed before we can be certain. It is significant that neither circumcision nor proselyte baptism (supposing that it existed already in the author's day) is mentioned. Since religion in Joseph and Aseneth appears to be private and personal, perhaps we should look more to the area of private custom than to synagogue life for a better understanding of its conception of conversion.

Ethics is an important concern of the author, although it is not preparatory to, instrumental in, or a consequence of salvation. He gives, or reports, a number of important rules, beginning with the following: "It does not befit a man who worships God" (on this attribute, see 4:7) to kiss a heathen woman (8:5), to sleep with his fiancée prior to the wedding (21:1), to render evil for evil (23:9; 29:3; cf. 28:5, 14), to injure anyone of his own free will or aid an injurer (23:12), or to crush a fallen enemy to death (29:3). The last three points are the main lesson of Part II. Other standards are less formally stated, such as a general warning against foreign women (7:5) attributed to Jacob, or expressed in the adjectives used to characterize persons like Joseph, who is "a man who worships God, and self-controlled, and a virgin" (4:7) and "meek and merciful and God-fearing" (8:8). More virtues are exemplified by action. Joseph does not eat with non-Jews (7:1) and is concerned with social welfare (4:7; 25:5; 26:3). There is a hint at charity in Aseneth's repentance (ch. 10) and a display of magnanimity in her treatment of Dan and Gad (ch. 28). Individual bravery is represented by Benjamin (27:1–5) and Joseph's good brothers (26:6; 27:6). Levi is the incarnation of the man who does not render evil for evil (23:6–17; 28:15–17): His attempt to save the life of Pharaoh's son (29:3–5) is reminiscent of the Good Samaritan (Lk 10:30–35), even if it is far from disinterested. However, such meekness seems to be in order only toward equals; hostile soldiers are dispatched in large quantities without further ado (27:4–6).

We ought not be surprised, perhaps, that the more popular social virtues—such as almsgiving, hospitality, visiting the sick, or burying the dead—are not evidenced in Joseph and Aseneth, as they are, for example, in Tobit, the Testament of Job, and such sketches of the ideal Jew as the "good man" of TBenj 4. Doubtless they are not absent from the author's moral code. If he does not mention them, it is because he lets himself be guided by what his story requires, and the story is one of upper-class people (see 3:5) living comfortable lives among their like in a divided society and experiencing upper-class adventures. This observation, however, is noteworthy by itself. The criticism leveled against the rich and mighty, the fundamental concern for the underprivileged, the hope for a just world in history or beyond, which characterizes other strands of Jewish tradition and much of early Christianity,<sup>82</sup> is entirely absent from Joseph and Aseneth. Social change is of no concern to the author.

<sup>81</sup> Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, pp. 89–98. This approach parallels the interpretation of ancient romance as veiled representations in narrative form of the cultic practice of mystery religions, especially Isis, by Merkelbach and his pupils. It is liable to the criticism leveled at it generally. As to JosAsen, cf. Burchard (Zeuge, pp. 83f.) and Pervo (SBL 1976 Seminar Papers, pp. 176f.). A ritual background without the character of a mystery initiation is presupposed by W. D. Berner (Initiationsriten in Mysterienreligionen, im Gnostizismus und im antiken Judentum [Theol. diss.; Göttingen, 1972] pp. 156–72, 307–13); Anandakumara (Gentile Reactions, pp. 29–91, 316–35) even attempts to reconstruct liturgical texts from JosAsen; Sängler, Antikes Judentum und die Mysterien, pp. 148–90.

Joseph and Aseneth has no qualms about the practicability of its moral standards. The good characters naturally live up to them, although they may first have to calm their tempers (23:7-9; 28:12-14). The evil characters do not, but experience and tolerance on the part of the good ones teach them.

High morals are not an exclusively Jewish mark. Doubtless, rules that befit one who worships God are best kept by such men, but Joseph and Aseneth does not intimate that Pentephres or Pharaoh fall short of them,<sup>83</sup> whereas some Jews do, at least temporarily. And virginity, for all the symbolic overtones it may carry, had made Aseneth Joseph's sister long before they first met (7:7-8:1).

We learn little about the source of these ethics. The interdiction against foreign women is traced back to Jacob (7:5), but he is hardly viewed as its author. Morals as befit God-worshipping men seem to come with the worship of God without further notice.

Eschatology<sup>84</sup> is a matter of individual afterlife in heaven (8:9; 15:7f.; 22:13). Joseph and Aseneth does not envisage an end of the world, let alone one of the type known as "apocalyptic," with wars raging, stars falling from the sky, a general resurrection, and last judgment,<sup>85</sup> after which the godly live happily in heaven or on a new earth and the wicked go to hell. In Joseph and Aseneth only individual lives come to their natural end followed by heavenly "rest" seemingly without delay (cf. Lk 23:43), if they are animated by the supernatural vitality provided to Jews. They perhaps come to nothing if they are not (but cf. 12:11). Little is said about how a person exists in heaven. The close association of the Jews with the angels suggests some sort of angelic existence (cf. Lk 20:36). This implies that in heaven persons are not mere souls (27:10 notwithstanding) but have a body (cf. 16:16; 18:9). However, we are not told whether the new existence will be acquired by transformation, resurrection, or new creation.

If, by way of conclusion, we ask what Judaism as depicted in Joseph and Aseneth is like, it is easier to say what it is not. It is not like Pharisaism, turning the Law into guidelines for personal piety and minutely regulating the chores of daily life. It is not like Sadduceeism, upholding the Law solely as the Magna Charta of the Temple of Jerusalem and the community gathering around it. It is not like Essenism (or, its diasporic extension, Therapeutism), withdrawing from the world to live in a priestly community by a new interpretation of the Law, revealed in the last days by a teacher sent from God. It is not like Zealotism, attempting to restore a Law-abiding theocracy in Israel by violence and guerrilla tactics. Certainly, the author also was no Philo, trying to show that the Law is the very essence of piety and philanthropy, a storehouse, if interpreted properly, of true philosophical insight barely adumbrated in non-Jewish philosophy and a guide to the union of the soul with God. Certainly the author had no apocalyptic leanings. He may have been an addict of sapiential theology or mysticism or both, elements of which are also alive in Philo in a "philosophized" form. On the whole, Joseph and Aseneth may be more representative of Greek-speaking Judaism than we have previously imagined.

Purpose

Joseph and Aseneth removes a rough spot in the Bible and satisfies pious curiosity as to the circumstances of a noted patriarch's surprise wedding to a non-Jew. Yet the author's main concern is his message.

Joseph and Aseneth has often been called a missionary tract, a Missionsschrift, meaning

<sup>82</sup> See generally, E. Bammel, "πτόχος etc.," TDNT, vol. 6, 885-915; L. Schottroff and W. Stegemann, Jesus von Nazareth—Hoffnung der Armen (Urban-Taschenbücher, T-Reihe, 639; Stuttgart, 1978).

<sup>83</sup> This hardly makes them God-fearers; against Aptowitz, HUCA 1 (1924) 303; Philonenko, Joseph et Aseneth, pp. 51f.

<sup>84</sup> H. C. C. Cavallin, Life after Death: Paul's Argument for the Resurrection of the Dead (Coniectanea Biblica. NT Series 7:1; Lund, 1974) pp. 155-60; G. Fischer, Die himmlischen Wohnungen: Untersuchungen zu Joh 14,2f (European University Papers, Series 23.38; Bern, Frankfurt, 1975) pp. 186-89; U. Fischer, Eschatologie, pp. 106-23.

<sup>85</sup> But see 12:11; 28:7, 14.

that it was written to promote Jewish mission among non-Jews, or Jews, or both.<sup>86</sup> This is mistaken.<sup>87</sup> Judaism is not depicted as mission-minded in Joseph and Aseneth. Proselytes are welcomed, not sought, and conversion certainly is not an easy affair. Moreover, Joseph and Aseneth is not a beginner's book. The reader is supposed to know Genesis, at least the Joseph story, and to understand allusions to other scriptural passages. Little effort is made to explain Jewish life and customs; the sabbath,<sup>88</sup> circumcision, the interdiction against pork, and standards of levitical purity are not even mentioned. As a specimen of Introducing Judaism, Joseph and Aseneth is remarkably ill-suited. It could, at best, be a book for the advanced pagan reader entreating him to take the final step. But surely he would expect something more tangible than a piece of fiction.

It seems safe to assume that Joseph and Aseneth was composed for Jews, both born and naturalized, including perhaps those "God-fearing" sympathizers<sup>89</sup> who thought and lived Jewish but never crossed the line formally and were seldom pressed to do so. The document reminds not only the Jews of the privileges they have always enjoyed but also the converts of what they, or their forefathers, gained by crossing over to Judaism.<sup>90</sup> Of course, just as in the case of the message, there may be subordinate purposes incidental to the main object. Surely the ethics of the book belong here, especially the interdiction to repay evil by evil and the injunction against non-Jewish women.<sup>91</sup>

Historical importance

Joseph and Aseneth greatly enhances our knowledge of Greek-speaking Judaism around the beginning of the present era. Its main importance is in the field of theology, ethics included; but, if handled with prudence, some historical information may also be derived from it. From a literary point of view—like Ezekiel the Tragedian, Philo the Epic Poet, Pseudo-Phocylides, and the Sibylline Oracles—it represents one of the attempts to adapt forms of Greek belletristic literature. Perhaps the book will shed some modest light on the history of the Septuagint text. It may also help us understand the growth of the romantic genre. As a Greek Jewish writing, Joseph and Aseneth is part of the background of early Christianity and its literature. A significant number of Christians were recruited from the synagogue, and many elements of New Testament theology and ethics, church management and administration of charity were taken over or adapted from Jewish sources. New Testament parallels to Joseph and Aseneth are certainly not caused by literary influence on either side; these similarities are due to a common Jewish heritage. Naturally Joseph and Aseneth has been used for a fresh interpretation of New Testament passages (e.g. Mt 6:23; 16:16–18; Lk 7:36–50; Jn 6:35, 48; Acts 9:1–19 par.; Rom 4:17; 7:24f.; 12:17; 1Cor 10:16f.; 11:24–26 par.; Eph 1:4; 1Thes 5:15; Heb 3:7–4:13; 1Pet 3:9; and Rev 14:8f.).<sup>92</sup> Last but not least, the language of Joseph and Aseneth invites comparison with New Testament Greek.<sup>93</sup>

Cultural importance

Joseph and Aseneth is one of the best attested and most widely distributed books included in this collection. The number of copies and versions speaks for itself, especially when we consider that most were made to be read aloud.<sup>94</sup> But its influence extends far beyond this

<sup>86</sup> E.g. Kohler, JE, vol. 2, pp. 172–76.

<sup>87</sup> Perhaps this is not only in the case of JosAsen. Some scholars think that no piece of hellenistic Jewish literature was designed to be read predominantly by non-Jews (e.g. Tcherikover, Eos 48.3 [1957] 169–93).

<sup>88</sup> It is presupposed in 9:5; 14:1; cf. 21:8. Both Joseph's and the angel's visits occur on Sundays.

<sup>89</sup> See lately, F. Siegert, "Gottesfürchtige und Sympathisanten," JSJ 4 (1973) 109–64, and cf. above, n. 77.

<sup>90</sup> A similar problem arises with regard to Acts, and an analogous answer should probably be given.

<sup>91</sup> Mixed marriage is thought to be a major, or even the main, issue by Philonenko (Joseph et Aséneth, p. 106) and Kee (SBL 1976 Seminar Papers, p. 187).

<sup>92</sup> See above, nn. 29, 63, 64, 76, 79, and JosAsen at 4:7, 10; 6:1, 2, 6, 7, 8; 7:1, 4; 8:5, 9; 9:1, 2; 10:2, 11, 13, 16, 17; 11:5, 12; 12:5, 9, 15; 14:1, 6, 9; 15:4f., 7, 10; 16:14; 19:1, 11; 20:2, 7; 21:8, 16, 21; 23:8, 9; 24:14; 27:3; 29:4, 5.

<sup>93</sup> Kilpatrick, NovT 12 (1970) 234–36; Chr. Burchard, "Fussnoten zum neutestamentlichen Griechisch I," ZNW 61 (1970) 157–71; Smith, Joseph and Asenath. Bauer-Arndt-Gingrich (Greek-English Lexicon [Chicago, 1957]) did not use Joseph and Aseneth, but a future revision doubtless will.

<sup>94</sup> MSS A, B, and O are menologies. See also note before 1:1.

use, as shown by the following remarks, which are by no means exhaustive.<sup>95</sup> As far as we can see, exegesis and theology took little notice of our romance, unless inclusion in some lists of canonical and apocryphal books is a sign of theological interest.<sup>96</sup> Joseph and Aseneth was read as a source of inspiration and moral strength, at times for historical information, and indubitably often just for fun.

About the fate of Joseph and Aseneth in Judaism we know nothing, unless the Heliopolis tradition reported by Egeria, supposing that it reflects knowledge of the book, happens to be Jewish. By Egeria's time, at the latest, Christianity must have appropriated Joseph and Aseneth. The Passion of Irene (5th cent. A.D.?) drew on it, and other saints' lives show its influence also, probably through Irene.<sup>97</sup> At some early date Joseph and Aseneth was joined (not merged except perhaps in G) with Pseudo-Ephrem's Life of Joseph.<sup>98</sup> The Life of Joseph is coupled with Joseph and Aseneth in CR (=a), GFW (=b), D (=d), and MS Breslau, crossing three of the four Greek groups, and in Arm. and Ngr.<sup>99</sup> So it must antedate Arm. (6th–7th cent.?). After this, we seem to lose track of Joseph and Aseneth in the Greek church until the tenth century,<sup>100</sup> the date of MS O. The eleventh century witnessed the appearance of the following: B and perhaps A, the pictorial archetype of the miniature cycles, covering the Life of Joseph and Joseph and Aseneth, in G, 671, and 661,<sup>101</sup> and the mention by Nikon of Rhodiou near Antioch, Syria (died after 1088), of Joseph and Aseneth in his Taktikon, chapter 13, which is a collection of monks' rules and letters pertaining to matters of monastic discipline and liturgy. Chapter 13 in the Taktikon contains a list of apocrypha based on the famous Canon of 60 Books; but it has an additional "Aseneth" after the "Prayer of Joseph."<sup>102</sup> By the intermediary of a Slavonic version, which became something of a classic in the Slavonic churches, the Taktikon influenced some old Russian canon lists.<sup>103</sup> This apparent popularity of Joseph and Aseneth in the eleventh century may have contributed to the translation of L1 and L2 in the West (before A.D. 1200).

A renewed interest makes itself felt beginning with the fourteenth or fifteenth century; perhaps this is a Renaissance phenomenon. Manuscript group c, the interpolations of FW Rum., the peculiar text of G, and Ngr. were probably produced early in this period, which also saw the translation of Slav. and, somewhat later, Rum. Also, Ngr. 1:6 preserves a quotation of uncertain origin and date which seems to reflect our book: "That is why some poet said in praise of her [i.e. Aseneth], 'By beauty the sun surpasses the stars, but Aseneth

<sup>95</sup> The vast bulk of Jewish, Christian, and Islamic Joseph literature may hold traces of JosAsen that have gone unheeded so far; for the time being cf. n. 1 and A. von Weilen, Der ägyptische Joseph im Drama des XVI. Jahrhunderts (Wien, 1887); H. Näf, Syrische Josef-Gedichte: Mit Uebersetzung des Gedichts von Narsai und Proben aus Balai und Jakob von Sarug (Phil. diss., Zürich; Zürich, 1923); H. Priebsch, Die Josephsgeschichte in der Weltliteratur (Breslau, 1937); H. A. Brongers, De Jozefsgeschiedenis bij Joden, Christenen en Mohammedanen (Wageningen, 1962); M. Derpmann, Die Josephsgeschichte. Auffassung und Darstellung im Mittelalter (Beihefte zum "Mittellateinischen Jahrbuch" 13; Ratingen—Kastellaun—Düsseldorf, 1974); and SCS 5. A matter calling for further inquiry is the purported influence of Joseph and Aseneth on Yussuf and Zuleikha, an Islamic adaptation of Joseph's adventure with Potiphar's wife treated repeatedly by authors in various languages, most notably by the famous Persian poets, Firuzi (c. A.D. 940–1020) and Djami (A.D. 1483); see Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, pp. 117–23.

<sup>96</sup> Joseph and his wife figure in some Eastern versions of the Christian marriage ritual (R. P. A. Raes, Le mariage, sa célébration et sa spiritualité dans les Églises d'Orient [Collection Irénikon; Paris, 1959] pp. 34, 42, 51, 59, 62, 132, 189; cf. Burchard, Untersuchungen, p. 39, n. 4). Influence of JosAsen is doubtful here, to say the least.

<sup>97</sup> Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 134–37; Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, pp. 110–17. Berger, Auferstehung, pp. 564–65, n. 403, has doubts.

<sup>98</sup> Or is it genuine (cf. Näf, Josef-Gedichte, pp. 10f.)?

<sup>99</sup> Chr. Burchard, "Zur armenischen Überlieferung der Testamente der zwölf Patriarchen," Studien zu den Testamenten der Zwölf Patriarchen, ed. W. Eltester (BZNW 36; Berlin, 1969) pp. 1–29; cf. Burchard, Untersuchungen, p. 29.

<sup>100</sup> There are only a few possible exceptions. An anonymous chronicle of the late 9th cent. affirms that "Joseph ruled over the Egyptian (land) for eighty years, beginning in the first year of plenty which was Joseph's thirty-second year, in which he is reported [cf. JosAsen 1:2; 3:1 against Gen 41:50] to have married Aseneth, daughter of Pentephres, priest of Heliopolis. This (man) was Osiris' priest. Osiris the Egyptians call the sun, just like the Greeks call him [the sun] Apollon" (J. A. Cramer, Anecdota Graeca e codd. manuscriptorum Bibliothecae Regiae Parisiensis [Oxford, 1839] vol. 2, p. 175). Then there is the date of a and d. Both seem, perhaps, to be older than c. A.D. 1000.

<sup>101</sup> Thus Vikan (SBL 1976 Seminar Papers, pp. 196–98) against the earlier suggestion by Pächt and Pächt (Cahiers Archéologiques 7 [1954] 35–49) argues that the archetype of the G miniatures originated in the 6th cent. in Syria in the neighborhood of the Vienna Genesis.

<sup>102</sup> See the only extant MS: St. Catherine, Mt. Sinai, MS Greek 441, f. 98<sup>v</sup>, unpublished (microfilm courtesy of the Library of Congress).

<sup>103</sup> Which may not therefore be cited as witnesses to the existence of JosAsen Slav.

the girls under [or "the rays of?"] the sun.' ''<sup>104</sup> Joseph and Aseneth was copied in Greek so late as A.D. 1802.

Turning to the oriental churches, we find traces of Joseph and Aseneth in Syriac, Armenian, and Ethiopic. In Syriac, in addition to Pseudo-Zacharias and the legend quoted above, there is an entry, "The Book of Asyath, wife of Joseph the Just, son of Jacob," between the works of Josephus and Tobit in a canon list by the noted theologian Ebed Yeshu, which should be dated shortly before A.D. 1300.<sup>105</sup>

The area in which Joseph and Aseneth was most successful in the East is the Armenian church. It first appears under the title of "Aseneth's Prayer" in an "Order of the Holy Scriptures"—ascribed to John Sarkavag ("the Deacon") of Haghbat (A.D. 1045/55–1129)<sup>106</sup>—a book list with indications of length, including the New Testament and Old Testament, each with apocrypha, and a number of philosophical and theological books. It was intended as a key to theological education, and possibly as a guide to a model theological library. Since it says in the superscription that the books "were verified" (stugabaneçan) by John (which may denote text-critical and editorial activity, a thing for which he was reputed), we may assume that John had a copy of the Armenian Joseph and Aseneth before him. Anyway, it was after this "Order" that the monumental codex of Erevan 1500 (332), one of the most important Armenian manuscripts ever written, was executed in A.D. 1282–83. The "Order" may also have contributed to the fact that Armenian Bibles, which are traditionally interspersed with apocrypha, though not with canonical honors, often feature Joseph and Aseneth, the oldest specimen being the Erzrnka Bible of A.D. 1269.<sup>107</sup> Of the imprints Joseph and Aseneth left in Ethiopic,<sup>108</sup> let us quote two that are not easily accessible. Among the hymns (salamât) contained in the expanded version of the Ethiopian Synaxarion (which dates from the late sixteenth or early seventeenth century) there are two drawn from Joseph and Aseneth:<sup>109</sup>

Salutation to Joseph, who was called the similitude
Of the chief of the army of God [cf. 14:8; 21:21].
All my bones sing to this wise man, the bearer of a gem,
The storehouse of his riches, saying,
"O Mary, he is thyself."

Salutation to 'Asnêt, whose splendor is like the sun,
And like the flower of the red rose, which cometh forth from its leaves [cf. 18:9].
The bees who feed her ascend on the wings of the wind,
And those who wish to inflict a wound in her Fall down upon the ground, and perish straightway [cf. 16:20–22].

In a manuscript of the four gospels from A.D. 1720–45 there is a marginal note in Amharic which reads:<sup>110</sup>

Asanêt is the wife of Joseph. She is an idolater [cf. 2:3]. When she was yearning for Joseph, she entered into seclusion [hermat] and prayed [cf. chs. 9–13], and an

<sup>104</sup> Burchard, NTS 24 (1977) 74. A second quotation inserted into 1:6 does not mention Aseneth.

<sup>105</sup> Burchard, Untersuchungen, p. 25.

<sup>106</sup> Ibid., pp. 32–34. The Order was investigated afresh by M. E. Stone ("Armenian Canon Lists III—The Lists of Mechitar of Ayrivank" (c. 1285 C.E.)," HTR 70 [1977] 289–300). He thinks that the ascription to Sarkavag is sound, but we must not assume for sure that all books listed were extant in Armenian in his day.

<sup>107</sup> Armenian Patriarchate, Jerusalem, MS 1925. JosAsen was occasionally illustrated by vignettes showing both persons; for a specimen see M. E. Stonê, "Bible, Translations, Armenian," EncyJud, vol. 4, cols. 861f.; see col. 862.

<sup>108</sup> Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 39–41. Add the marginal note adduced presently. For a more recent discussion see Select Bibliography.

<sup>109</sup> Trans. by E. A. W. Budge, The Book of the Saints of the Ethiopian Church (Cambridge, 1928; vol. i–ii repr. in Hildesheim, New York, 1976) vol. 1, p. xxxvii.

<sup>110</sup> Patriarchate Library, Addis Abbaba, Ethiopian Manuscript Microfilm Library Project No. 650, f. 145* (W. F. Macomber, A Catalogue of Ethiopian Manuscripts Microfilmed for the Ethiopian Manuscript Microfilm Library, Addis Abbaba and for the Hill Monastic Manuscript Library, Collegeville [Collegeville, Minn., 1976] vol. 2, p. 399). Trans. by G. Haile through the courtesy of Macomber. Both have informed the present translator that they have not discovered a MS of the full text of JosAsen Eth.

angel breathed on her mouth [cf. 16:8–11]. After that, a white bee [cf. 16:18] made white honey in her mouth [cf. 16:19], and when she ate it [cf. 16:15], she was purified of her idolatry. So he gave her Joseph [cf. 15:6], and she gave birth to Ephraim and Manasseh [cf. 21:9].

In Europe, L1 had an influence which surpasses even that of Arm. in the East.<sup>111</sup> An epitome is extant in three fifteenth-century manuscripts, probably from the continent.<sup>112</sup> A Middle English verse translation is preserved in a fifteenth-century manuscript also containing some poetry of John Lydgate (c. 1370–c. 1451) and a Latin treatise by Hoccleve, both in a different hand.<sup>113</sup> After line 265, Joseph and Aseneth 8:7–9:4 are lacking. There is a break in the verse pattern, not in the manuscript. So it is not the autograph. The author seems to have lived “not far from Warwickshire, and not long after the death of Chaucer” (A.D. 1400),<sup>114</sup> hardly John Lydgate himself. But he is the only English writer of his time, and perhaps the only one of some reputation at all, to remember Aseneth in his poem To Mary the Queene of Heaven,<sup>115</sup> fifth stanza (ll. 33–40):

O bussh vnbrent, shewed to Moyses, Iudith the secounde, þat saued al Israel,
 Assenek of Egypt, of beute pereless, Souereyn Sara of refut cheeff Rachel,
 For our Sauacioun salued bi Gabriel,
 Reclinatorye throne of kyng Salamoun,
 Fro thy seruantes al mescheeff do repelle,
 To thy .v. loies that haue deuocioun.

Lydgate obviously knew Joseph and Aseneth (cf. 1:5), but in which form we cannot be certain.

The man who did most to promote the book was Vincent of Beauvais (c. 1190–c. 1264). He included a condensation of L1, independent of the epitome just mentioned, in his Speculum historiale, 1, 118–24, a world history from creation down to A.D. 1244–53.<sup>116</sup> This condensation met with extraordinary success far beyond the wide distribution in Latin, Dutch, French, and German of the Speculum itself.<sup>117</sup> It was often separately copied and found its way into numerous other compilations, both handwritten and printed, in Latin, Czech, Dutch, English, French, German, Polish, Russian, and Scandinavian, including Icelandic, down to the eighteenth century.<sup>118</sup> In the sixteenth century, Joseph and Aseneth, Part I, was made into a play for Corpus Christi Day.<sup>119</sup>

In 1670, Philipp von Zesen, the renowned German baroque writer, had his most important novel, Assenat, probably the first one on this subject, printed in Amsterdam.<sup>120</sup> He used a

<sup>111</sup> Contrary to a suggestion by Batiffol (Studia Patristica, p. 3), L1 cannot have been produced by the noted Franciscan scholar Robert Grosseteste (before A.D. 1173–1253), who was the author, or rather commissioner, of the Latin T12P (S. H. Thomson, The Writings of Robert Grosseteste: Bishop of Lincoln [Cambridge, 1940] pp. 242f.).

<sup>112</sup> Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 15, 36.

<sup>113</sup> Now preserved in H. E. Huntington Library, San Marino, Calif., MS El 26. A. 13, printed by H. N. MacCracken, “The Storie of Asneth: An Unknown Middle English Translation of a Lost Latin Version,” The Journal of English and Germanic Philology 9 (1910) 224–64; cf. G. L. Hamilton, “The Latin Historia Assenech,” The Journal of English and Germanic Philology 11 (1912) 143f.; MacCracken, “The Source of the Story of Asneth,” The Journal of English and Germanic Philology, 291f.; R. A. Dwyer, “Asenath of Egypt in Middle English,” Medium Aevum 39 (1970) 118–22.

<sup>114</sup> MacCracken, Journal of English and Germanic Philology 9 (1910) 224.

<sup>115</sup> H. N. MacCracken, The Minor Poems of John Lydgate (Early English Text Society. Extra Series 107; London, 1911) vol. 1, p. 286.

<sup>116</sup> No modern printed edition and no English translation are available. MacCracken (Journal of English and Germanic Philology 9 [1910] 228–64) prints the Lat. text of 1, 118–24 at the bottom of the pages. Illustrated copies in French include pictures featuring Aseneth (L. Delisle, “Exemplaires royaux et princiers du Miroir historial (XIV<sup>e</sup> siècle),” Gazette Archéologique 11 [1886] 87–101, and pls. 13–16, see 92, 98, pl. 14).

<sup>117</sup> Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 41–45.

<sup>118</sup> For the influence of this condensation on English, see M. M. Banks, An Alphabet of Tales (Early English Text Society. Original Series 126; London, 1904) vol. 1, pp. 61–64.

<sup>119</sup> L. Rouanet, Collección de Autos, Farsas y Coloquios del siglo XVI, i–iv (Bibliotheca Hispanica 5–8; Madrid, 1901). However, the numerous Joseph plays of the 16th cent. take little or no notice of JosAsen.

<sup>120</sup> Reprinted with an epilogue by V. Meid (Tübingen, 1967). A Danish version was printed in 1711 and reprinted several times; another one is extant in MS form.

Dutch version of Vincent's abridgment as one of his sources. Large portions have gone into his text, others are quoted verbatim in the learned footnotes appended to the novel according to a custom of the time. Of the thirty engravings which adorn the volume, several illustrate scenes stemming from Joseph and Aseneth. Zesen apparently thought our romance historical. For this he was reprimanded by his even more famous contemporary J. J. C. Grimmelshausen in his novel Das wunderbarliche Vogelnest, Part 1, first published at Montbéliard, France, in 1672. He also insinuates plagiarism.<sup>121</sup> Grimmelshausen had an ax to grind. He had himself published a Histori vom Keuschen Joseph in Egypten, the first of its kind in German,<sup>122</sup> in which he had failed to use Joseph and Aseneth, a fact duly noted by Zesen. Anyway, Grimmelshausen is the first person on record to have voiced doubts as to the historicity of Joseph and Aseneth.<sup>123</sup>

After this period the European reading public gradually lost interest in Joseph and Aseneth. Nineteenth-century scholarship rediscovered it and most of its versions; and owing to two short notes by G. D. Kilpatrick and J. Jeremias in 1952,<sup>124</sup> it has been viewed with growing interest by students of early Judaism and Christianity. But all attempts to revive it as a work of literature<sup>125</sup> seem to be doomed to failure.

By way of appendix, let us note two fields of influence of Joseph and Aseneth that require the hand of the non-theological specialist. The first, and more important one, is iconography. Apart from the miniatures in the manuscripts referred to earlier, Aseneth naturally figures in numerous illustrations of the biblical narrative proper, both in Genesis manuscripts and outside. Influence of Joseph and Aseneth may of course be assumed with certainty only when the pictorial content coincides with the novel against the biblical text. It is less likely when a picture deviates from the Bible without special support in Joseph and Aseneth, as in the case of Jacob blessing the sons of Joseph, which is not narrated in our book. Aseneth is not mentioned in Genesis 48 either, but she is present in many representations of the scene from the fourth century down to Rembrandt's famous canvas of 1656 (now in Kassel).<sup>126</sup> It remains to be seen whether this, and other Aseneth pictures, have anything to do with Joseph and Aseneth.

Secondly, there is the use of Aseneth as a Christian name, which never seems to have been a very popular one. The name occurs four times in a Greek tax list from after A.D. 716.<sup>127</sup> Armenians have used it since the fifteenth century.<sup>128</sup> Some English occurrences from the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries are also known.<sup>129</sup> Since Joseph and Aseneth was so widely distributed in Armenian, it may have furnished motivation to choose the name, but we do not know how well seventeenth-century England was acquainted with the book.

The present translation

The following translation is based on the provisional text referred to above. A major problem was the author's biblicized style. As it was employed by choice, being neither his everyday mode of speech nor presumably the kind of language he would have used for a non-biblical subject, a translation must somehow preserve it. To this end it seemed advisable

<sup>121</sup> Reprinted with an introduction by R. Tarot (Tübingen, 1970); see especially pp. 99–103.

<sup>122</sup> Under the pseudonym of Samuel Greifnson (Nuremberg, 1666; 2nd ed., 1670, repr. Tübingen, 1968).

<sup>123</sup> "Aseneth's story, although I did not see it, I consider a tale of some ancient rabbi who wanted to incite the Jewish lads to virtue and chastity" (100f.).

<sup>124</sup> See n. on 8:5.

<sup>125</sup> E. g. C. Lucerna, Asseneth: Eine apokryphe Erzählung aus den Werdezeiten des Christentums (Vienna, 1921; also in Serbo-Croatian).

<sup>126</sup> Generally, cf. W. Stechow, "Jacob Blessing the Sons of Joseph from Early Christian Times to Rembrandt," Gazette des Beaux-Arts, 6th series, 23 (1943) 193–208, 382; J. C. H. Lebram, "Jakob segnet Josephs Söhne: Darstellungen von Genesis XLVIII in der Überlieferung und bei Rembrandt," The Priestly Code and Seven Other Studies, eds. J. C. Vink et al. (OTS 15; Leiden, 1969) pp. 145–69. Cf. above, n. 116.

<sup>127</sup> British Museum, London, Pap. 1419, Inv. No. 1442, ff. 4<sup>a</sup> (twice), 19<sup>a</sup>, 24<sup>b</sup> (H. I. Bell, Greek Papyri in the British Museum, [London, 1910] vol. 4, pp. 182, 201, 214).

<sup>128</sup> H. Ačaryan, Hayoc anjanunneri bařaran [Dictionary of Armenian Personal Names] (RSS d'Arménie. Université Molotov à Erivan. Travaux scientifiques 21; Erivan, 1942) vol. 1, p. 221. The evidence is mostly from MS colophons.

<sup>129</sup> E. G. Withycombe, The Oxford Dictionary of English Christian Names (Oxford, 1945; 1953<sup>2</sup>) p. 32: "It was occasionally used, like most other Old Testament names, in the 17th C, and there was an Asenath Angel in Shropshire in 1798. The gipsy name As(h)ena may be derived from it."

to translate as literally, and consistently, as present-day English grammar will permit, even to the extent of stretching a rule here and there, and to bring out the biblical affinities by following an established translation of the Bible. The present translator was guided by The Jerusalem Bible, unless otherwise required by the principle of literalness as laid down before. If a non-literal rendering is unavoidable, the literal translation is given in a footnote, except for some well-known turns that recur frequently such as "to rejoice with great joy" (lit. "to rejoice a great joy"), "to be filled with great fear" (lit. "to fear a great fear"), and similar instances of the cognate accusative: "to tell you what I have to say" (lit. "to speak to you my words"), "to speak words such as these" (lit. "to speak according to these words"), "forever" (lit. "in the eternity" or "eternities"), "for ever (and) ever" (lit. "in the eternity time," see 4:8), "for ever and ever" (lit. "in the eternities of the eternities").

Personal names are spelled as in The Jerusalem Bible, because their original form has not yet been critically established, except that Asenath is "Aseneth," and Potiphara, "Pentephres" (see 1:3, 5).

Chapters were installed by Batiffol and verses by Riessler, and later by Philonenko. Riessler obviously could not make up his mind between short verses, as in the Bible, and longer paragraphs, as, for example, in Josephus. Working with a provisional text, the present translator did not feel free to adopt a new division, which will, however, eventually be necessary. He followed Riessler, continuing his numbering if new material is added at the end of chapters (11:16-19 [or 15-18]; 21:10-21), using x, y numbers if in the middle (11:1*x*-y; 15:12*x*; 16:16*x*; 16:17*x*), and altering numbers only if textual criticism cogently demands it (see 6:2; 13:10; 16:17; 16:17*y*). Philonenko's numbers are given in parentheses. A fresh division into sections and appropriate headlines have been supplied for this translation.

The text-critical footnotes include the major differences in length between a, b, c, and d, a selection of variants illustrating the diversified nature as well as the basic unity of the textual tradition in the positive text, and some variants bearing intrinsic interest. The presentation is as follows: (a) If a textual problem is mentioned, as a rule, all pertinent variants are cited except for minor deviations, especially such as will not normally show in a translation at all, regarding, for example, the article, synonymous or nearly synonymous prepositions and forms, or the word order, but not, for example, the exchange of synonyms. (b) If more words than the one carrying the footnote letter are concerned, they are given at the head of the note. The variants quoted after this until the first stop are in lieu of exactly that heading. Longer readings are usually abbreviated by ellipsis points between the first and last words (to find the exact length read back from the last word quoted to the first that you come to reading backward). Insertions in parentheses refer only to the one word before the parenthesis unless otherwise stated. (c) Variants are normally given full coverage from ACPQR (= a), EFGW (= b), HJK (= c), BD (= d), Syr., Arm., L1, L2 (if 436 and 435& do not agree they are quoted separately), Slav., Ngr. (671 only), Bat, Phil (both text and translation), Br (including the appendixes), Rie, Eth., Rum., 661 (Ngr.), and Istrin are noted by way of exception only. For the sake of brevity, a or A include Bat, Rie, and Br, d includes Slav. and Phil, unless otherwise stated, and "rest" includes all witnesses normally used for coverage except those quoted individually. (d) The witness or witnesses supporting a reading, if only with minor deviations, are set right after it. If a version or versions are adduced after Greek evidence this implies only that they show no sign of being based on a different Greek text. If a witness deviates in a more than minor fashion, but still supports the reading in a general way, it is set in parentheses. If this should happen to all witnesses supporting a variant, they vary considerably from one another, which usually means that the text generally can be reconstructed but details remain doubtful. The abbreviation "add." means that a reading is found in addition to the text in the witnesses quoted, "om." that it is lacking, "gap(s)" that the reading and words before or after it or both are lacking, not necessarily to the same extent in all witnesses adduced.

The present translator is greatly indebted to Dieter Sanger and Tuviah Kwassman for their unflinching help in preparing the translation, and especially to J. H. Charlesworth for correcting it. Claudius Fehlandt and Michael Hoffmann helped to see the work through the press.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 137–40.
- Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 95f.
- Denis, Introduction, pp. 40–48.
- Berger, K. Die Auferstehung des Propheten und die Erhöhung des Menschensohnes: Traditionsgeschichtliche Untersuchungen zur Deutung des Geschickes Jesu in frühchristlichen Texten. Studien zur Umwelt des Neuen Testaments 13; Göttingen, 1976.
- Burchard, Chr. Der dreizehnte Zeuge. FRLANT 103; Göttingen, 1970; pp. 59–105.
- . Untersuchungen zu Joseph und Aseneth. WUNT 8; Tübingen, 1965.
- . "Zum Text von 'Joseph und Aseneth,'" JSJ 1 (1970) 3–34.
- Delling, G. "Einwirkungen der Sprache der Septuaginta in 'Joseph und Aseneth,'" JSJ 9 (1978) 29–56.
- Kähler, C. "Zur Form- und Traditionsgeschichte von Matth. XVI. 17–19," NTS 23 (1976) 36–58.
- Nickelsburg, G. W. E. Jr. "Narrative Writings, §B 7: Joseph and Aseneth," Oral and Literary Tradition in Judaism and Early Christianity. Compendia Rerum Iudaicarum ad Novum Testamentum 2, 2; Leiden, in press.
- Pervo, R. I. "Joseph and Asenath and the Greek Novel," SBL 1976 Seminar Papers, ed. G. MacRae. SBL Seminar Papers Series 10; Missoula, Mont., 1976; pp. 171–81.
- Philonenko, M. Joseph et Aséneth: Introduction, texte critique, traduction et notes. SPB 13; Leiden, 1968.
- Sänger, D. Antikes Judentum und die Mysterien. Religionsgeschichtliche Untersuchungen zu Joseph und Aseneth. WUNT 2.5; Tübingen, 1980 (with history of research and full bibliography).
- Smith, E. W. Jr. Joseph and Asenath and Early Christian Literature: A Contribution to the Corpus Hellenisticum Novi Testamenti (Ph.D. dissertation, Claremont Graduate School, Claremont, Calif., 1974).
- West, S. "Joseph and Asenath: A Neglected Greek Romance," The Classical Quarterly N.S. 24 (1974) 70–81.
- Wilckens, U. "Vergebung für die Sünderin (Lk 7, 36–50)," Orientierung an Jesus: Zur Theologie der Synoptiker. J. Schmid zum 80. Geburtstag am 26. Januar 1973 von Freunden, Kollegen und Schülern, eds. P. Hoffmann, N. Brox, and W. Pesch. Freiburg, 1973; pp. 394–424.

SUPPLEMENT

- Burchard, Chr. "Joseph und Aseneth," JSHRZ 2.4 (1983). (German translation with Introduction and Bibliography.)
- . "Zur armenischen Übersetzung von Joseph und Aseneth," Revue des études arméniennes 17 (1983) 207–40.
- . "Der jüdische Asenethroman und seine Nachwirkung: Von Egeria zu Anna Katharina Emmerick oder von Moses aus Aggel zu Karl Kerénye," ANRW, vol. 2, 20 (in press). (A full account of the cultural importance of JosAsen with new information about Eth. by G. Haile.)
- . "The Importance of Joseph and Aseneth for the Study of the New Testament," NTS 32 (1986). (General survey with Bibliography, and a fresh study of the importance of JosAsen for the Lord's Supper).
- Delling, G. "Die Kunst des Gestaltens in 'Joseph und Aseneth,'" NovTest 26 (1984) 1–40.
- Denis, A.-M., and Schumacher, J. Concordance des Pseudépigraphe grecs d'ancien Testament. Leiden, 1984.
- van Goeij, M. Jozef en Aseneth. Apokalyps van Baruch. De Pseudepigrafen 2; Kampen, 1981. (Dutch translation.)
- Kee, H. "The Socio-Cultural Setting of Joseph and Aseneth," NTS 29 (1983) 394–413.
- Martínez Fernández, R., and Piñero, A. "José y Asenet," Apócrifos del Antiguo Testamento, ed. A. Díez Macho; Madrid, 1983. (Spanish translation of Philonenko's text.)
- Suski, A. "Józef i Asenet," Studia Theologica Varsaviensia 16 (1978) 199–240. (Polish translation of Philonenko's text.)

JOSEPH AND ASENETH<sup>a</sup>

FIRST PART: ASENETH'S CONVERSION AND MARRIAGE

I. CAST OF CHARACTERS. SCENE OF ACTION

The characters are introduced

- 1 (1) 1 And it happened<sup>b</sup> in the first year of the seven years of plenty, in the second month, on the fifth of the month:<sup>c</sup> Pharaoh sent out Joseph to drive around the whole land of Egypt.
- 2 (2) And Joseph came in the fourth month of the first year, on the eighteenth of the month,<sup>d</sup>
- 3 (3) into the territory of Heliopolis,<sup>e</sup> and was gathering the grain of that region like the sand of the sea.<sup>f</sup>
- 3 (4) And<sup>g</sup> there was a man in that city,<sup>h</sup> a satrap of Pharaoh, and this (man) was a chief of
- (5) all the satraps and the noblemen of Pharaoh. And this man was exceedingly rich and prudent and gentle, and he was a counselor of Pharaoh, because he was understanding beyond all the noblemen of Pharaoh. And the name of that man (was) Pentephres, priest of Heliopolis.<sup>i</sup>

1 a. Modern (Rie, see Intro.). Survey of the titles in Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 50–54. "Life and Confession of Aseneth daughter of Pentephres priest of Heliopolis, and how the all-beautiful Joseph took her for (his) wife" (a d L1 Ngr. Br, Phil, not Bat Rie); "Discourse (logos) about Aseneth daughter of Pentephres." c; "Discourse (logos) chosen from the old book about Aseneth having become (h.b. omit W) the wife of Joseph the all-beautiful and self-controlled (a.s. omit W)" FW (Arm. c, 435, Ebed Yeshu, see Intro.); "Story (historia) of A." E 332 (somewhat longer Arm. a, d) 2–456 (436); "Book of Asyath" Anonymous letter in Ps-Zacharias Rhetor, Church History, 1.4; "Aseneth's Prayer" Sarkavag (see Intro.); "Prayer of Aseneth" Bat, "Aseneth" Nikon and other canon lists (see Intro.); "Deed(s?) of the all-beautiful Joseph and his wife Aseneth" MS Breslau; "Tale of Joseph the Just and of Asyath his wife" Syr. (Syr. subscription, Arm. b, e, cf. also L2 445, 455); "Story of Joseph and Aseneth" or similar, Rum. The first mentioned title is old because it crosses a, b, and d, and the next two may be derived from it, but it sounds hagiographical. The title is followed in CPQR FW HJK BD by "Bless, Lord (or Father)," a stock formula opening the delivery of the text when read aloud. [Biblical and apocryphal references are not placed in the margins to JosAsen because there are no formal quotations from them in this document; affinities are discussed in the following notes. Two verse systems are provided (see Introduction, "The present translation"). Bullets denote the primary system of verses; marginal parentheses specify Philonenko's system. The beginning of a verse according to the secondary system is not indicated if the punctuation points to it unequivocally; when it is not obvious, the sign ' has been inserted in the text.—J.H.C.]

b. "And it happened" G c Syr. Arm. L1; "it h." CR E d 435&; omit AOPQ Ngr.; 1:1f. omit FW; 1:1–7 "for (his) wife" omit 436. Frequent traditional turn (not in Aram.) to introduce circumstantial data, also 3:1; 21:9; 22:1; followed by an independent clause without "and," e.g. 2Chr 12:11; Dan 8:15; Lk 1:59. As the opening of an entire book in Josh, Judg, Ruth, 2Sam, 1Mac, Jub (1:1, also with a precise date); "it h." TAB B 1:1, cf. Lk 1:5.

c. See 1:2.

d. See 1:1 (5th day, 2d month, year 1), 3:1 (as in 1:2), and 22:2 (21st day, 2d month, year 2 of famine), cf. the dates in Jub. According to the calendar of Jub, also attested at Qumran, 5th day, 2d month and 8th day, 4th month would be sabbaths (J. van Goudoever, Biblical Calendars [Leiden, 1959; 1961<sup>2</sup>] p. 63). But 18th day, 4th month is a Sunday in 9:5, and would Joseph travel on sabbaths? Or is 18th day, 4th month "an indication of the summer solstice" (Goudoever, Biblical Calendars, p. 120, referring to 5:5; 6:2; 9:5 etc.)? Anyway, it is harvest time in chs. 1–21 (see also 2:11; 4:2; 5:5) as also in 22:29, though years later (24:15; 25:2; 26:1). Does the season of Aseneth's conversion have a symbolical meaning (cf. Mt 9:37)? The day certainly has one (see on 9:5; 11:1; 14:1).

e. "Sun City," Heb. 'ōn, Gen 41:45, 50; 46:20, cf. Jer 43:13; today Matarieh, a few miles northeast of Cairo (E. P. Uphill, "Pithom and Raameses: Their Location and Significance", JNES 27 [1968] 291–316; 28 [1969] 15–39, see especially pp. 296–99 [with plans] and pp. 37–39). It is an important center of the Sun god Rē, almost in ruins in the author's day, but a tourist attraction haunted by the memories of Plato and Eudoxus (Strabo, Geography 17.1.29). Jews thought that Abraham had visited there and taught the Egyptian clergy astrology (Ps-Eup F. 1), that they had fortified the city (Ex 1:11 LXX), and built the local temple (Art F. 2; 3). Apion, History of Egypt, is said by Josephus to have reported that Moses was born in Heliopolis and erected prayer-houses and pillars with statues on them for sun-clocks there (Apion 2.2 §10–11, cf. 12–14). On Leontopolis see Intro. n. 59.

f. Frequent traditional simile, e.g. Gen 41:49.

g. On the following introduction of a man cf. e.g. Job 1:1–3; Acts 10:1f.; Xenophon of Ephesus 1.1.1. On 1:3–6 cf. e.g. Chariton 1.1.1f.; Xenophon of Ephesus 1.1.1–3; Apuleius 4.28.1–29.4.

h. See next note.

i. "And . . . Heliopolis" (all) except a, which has "by name (of) P. being priest of H. and" after "city." Pentephres (Heb. Pōt Pera', LXX Pentephres; etymology in Redford, Study, pp. 228f., cf. Philo, Somn, 1.78, "worshipper of the mind") occurs in the Bible only at Gen 41:45, 50; 46:20. Like, e.g., Josephus, Ant 2.6.1 §91, and Philo, Jos, 121, JosAsen does not identify Pentephres with Potiphar Gen 37:36, 39:1, whose name is

- 4 (6) And he had a daughter, a virgin of eighteen years,<sup>l</sup> (she was) very tall and handsome and 5 (7) beautiful to look at beyond all virgins on the earth. •And this (girl) had nothing similar to the virgins of the Egyptians, but she was in every respect similar to the daughters of the
 (8) Hebrews; and she was tall as Sarah and handsome as Rebecca and beautiful as Rachel.<sup>k</sup>
 6 (9) And the name of that virgin was Aseneth.<sup>l</sup> •And the fame of her beauty spread all over that land and to the ends of the inhabited (world).<sup>m</sup> And all the sons of the noblemen and the sons of the satraps and the sons of all kings, all of them young and powerful,<sup>n</sup> asked for (10) her hand in marriage,<sup>o</sup> and there was much wrangling among them over Aseneth, 'and they 'made attempts to fight against each other because of her.<sup>p</sup>
 7 (11) And<sup>q</sup> Pharaoh's firstborn son heard about her and he kept entreating<sup>r</sup> his father to give
 (12) her to him for (his) wife. And his firstborn son said to Pharaoh, "Father, give me Aseneth, the daughter of Pentephres, the priest of Heliopolis, for (my) wife."<sup>s</sup> •And Pharaoh's 8 (13) father, said to him, "Why do you seek a wife (that is) beneath you, and you are king<sup>t</sup> of the whole land of Egypt? •Behold, is not the daughter of the king of Moab, Joakim,<sup>u</sup> 9 (14) betrothed to you,<sup>v</sup> and she is a queen and exceedingly beautiful? This (one) take for (your) wife."<sup>w</sup>

Aseneth's tower and the court surrounding Pentephres' house are described

- 1 (1) 2 And Aseneth was despising and scorning every man, and she was boastful and arrogant with everyone.<sup>a</sup> And no man had ever seen her, because Pentephres had a tower adjoining almost identical in MT and completely in LXX, but many ancient authors, both Jewish and Christian, did (e.g. Jub 40:10; Tjos 18:3; rabbinical literature is divided (cf. Aptowitz, HUCA 1 [1924], 262). It is not clear whether "priest" has the article. Perhaps it should be omitted when followed by "of Heliopolis" (4:3, 7; 21:2, 11) in accordance with LXX, but retained when not (3:2; 12:5). Despite his title, P. is never shown officiating, whereas Aseneth is (2:3).

j. Aseneth's virginity, not mentioned in the Bible (but, e.g. by Josephus, Ant 2.6.1 §91), plays a great role in JosAsen (e.g. chs. 7f., 11–13), as virginity generally does in the romances. The age of eighteen means that she has been fighting off suitors for several years.

k. A novel's hero or heroine has to be beautiful (e.g. Xenophon of Ephesus 1.1.3; 1.2.5.7; Achilles Tatius 1.4.2; Apuleius 4:28), and her looks may be compared to a classical figure or a goddess (e.g. Chariton 1.1.1; 1.6.2; 2.6.1 etc.). To a Jew, Jewish women, above all the patriarchs' wives, whose beauty was legendary (e.g. Sarah, Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 5, p. 261, no. 90; vol. 6 (1928, repr. 1946) p. 273, n. 132; IQapGen 20.2–8), would set the standard. "Hebrews" instead of "Jews" (as in 11:10) has a distinguished ring.

l. "And . . . Aseneth" (G d Syr. Arm. 435&); "by name (of) A." before or after 1:4 "virgin" a EW c L1 Ngr. Rum. illegible F; gap 436. Aseneth (Heb. ʿAsnat, LXX Asen[ne]th, Egyptian possibly ns-nt: "the One belonging to Neith"; on this etymology see Redford, Study, pp. 229f.) is mentioned in the Bible only at Gen 41:45, 50; 46:20. The author and the readers of JosAsen may have been aware of the reference to Neith, but more would be needed to make Aseneth a representation of the goddess (cf. Intro.).

m. Ps 19:4. A person's reputation spreads the same way, e.g. in Chariton 1.5.1; 3.2.7; 4.7.5; 5.2.6; Achilles Tatius 6.10.3; Apuleius 4.29.1; 11.18.1.

n. Maybe these are to be understood as two more classes of suitors.

o. The reading "asked . . . marriage": c d;

"desired (epethymoun) her to be married" ACPR (Q Arm. 435& Ngr.); "praised (hymnoun) her" b Syr. L1 Rum.; gap 436. Seems to be one instance where b (but not all versions) is at fault, although its reading is not entirely incongruent (cf. Xenophon of Ephesus 1.1.3; 1.2.7; Apuleius 4.28.1f.). Note the graphic similarity of the two verbs.

p. Another novelistic feature. For an illustration see e.g. Chariton 1.2.2f.

q. 1:7–9 lays the foundation for 4:11 and chs. 22–29.

r. The verb ekliparein (also 15:7) is found first in Strabo and Dionysius of Halicarnassus.

s. Cf. Gen 34:4.

t. The titles of "king" and "queen" (1:9; 28:2; cf. 10:13; 13:8) in JosAsen are also applied to the crown prince, to viceroys like Joseph (4:7), and related folk.

u. "Moab, Joakim" a, "Moab" E FW (gap following) c Syr. (gap following) Arm. L1 L2, "Joakim" d, paraphrase G, gap Ngr. Is Moab a biblical reference to the Nabatean kingdom, c. 100 B.C.–A.D. 105/6 (Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 144–46)? The name was used down to Christian times. Why does this Moabite (or his daughter?) have a Heb. name?

v. In Jewish law of the time, as in Greek, betrothal (also 21:3, 23:3) was the legally binding step in bringing about a marital union, constituting by and large the formal beginning of a marriage; consummation by the wedding could be, and often was, deferred at the parties' convenience. See generally R. Taubenschlag, The Law of Greco-Roman Egypt in the Light of the Papyri 332 B.C.–640 A.D. (Warsaw, 1955) p. 114; A. Calderini, "La eggyësis matrimoniale nei romanzi greci e nei papiri," Aegyptus 39 (1959) 29–39; B. Cohen, Jewish and Roman Law. A Comparative Study (New York, 1966), vol. 1, pp. 279–347.

2 a. In spite of the general ring, Aseneth's boastfulness, which is a main motif in chs. 1–21 (4:12; 6:2–8; 7:7f.; 11:6; 12:5; 13:13; 21:12, 16–21), is in fact limited to possible suitors (cf. 8:1). As she lives in seclusion (see vs. 2), it would express

- (2) his house, very big and high, and 'on top of this tower was an upper floor including ten
 2 (3) chambers.<sup>b</sup> • And the first chamber was big and splendid, paved with purple stones, and its
 (4) walls were faced with colored and precious stones,<sup>c</sup> and the ceiling of that chamber was of 3 gold. • And within that chamber gods of the Egyptians<sup>d</sup> who were without number were
 (5) fixed to the walls,<sup>e</sup> (even gods) of gold and silver.<sup>f</sup> And Aseneth worshiped them all and 4 (6) feared them and performed sacrifices to them every day.<sup>g</sup> • And the second chamber contained
 (7) Aseneth's ornaments and chests, and there was much gold in it (the chamber) and silver and clothes interwoven with gold and chosen and costly stones and distinguished cloths<sup>h</sup> 5 (8)(9) and all the ornaments of her virginity. • And the third chamber was Aseneth's storeroom,
 6 (10) and in it were all the good (things) of the earth.<sup>i</sup> • And seven virgins<sup>j</sup> occupied the remaining
 (11) seven chambers, each having one chamber, and these were waiting on Aseneth, and they were all of the same age, born in one night with Aseneth, and she loved them very much.<sup>k</sup>
 And they were very beautiful, like the stars of heaven, and no man ever conversed with them, not (even) a male child.
 7 (12) And there were three windows to Aseneth's big chamber where her virginity was being
 (13) fostered. And the one window, the first, was exceedingly big, looking east toward the court, and the second one was looking south, and the third one was looking north toward the street
 8 (14) where people passed by.<sup>l</sup> • And there was a golden bed standing in the chamber, (a bed)
 (15) that looked toward the window (looking) east, and the bed was laid with gold-woven purple 9 (16) stuff, interwoven with violet, purple, and white.<sup>m</sup> • And in this bed Aseneth slept, alone; and a man or another woman never sat on it, only Aseneth alone.<sup>n</sup> 10 (17) And there was a large court surrounding the house,<sup>o</sup> and a wall was around the court, 11 (18) very high, built from big square stones.<sup>p</sup> • And the court had four iron-plated gates, and
 (19) eighteen powerful armed young men guarded each of these.<sup>q</sup> And handsome trees of all itself in the manner shown in ch. 4. She behaves lovingly toward her parents, servants (2:6; 10:4; 17:4), and her dead brother (10:8). She is actuated by virginal fastidiousness rather than misanthropy, feminism, or sex-hatred. She wants the best man (a fairy-tale motif), and she will get him, if only against herself (cf. on 4:11).

b. The "tower" need be no more than the two-story part of an otherwise flat mansion. On the description of the premises cf. Cupid's palace and park (Apuleius 5.1.1-2.1); a garden (Achilles Tatius 1.15). That women, especially unmarried daughters, had better stay home is a common ideal of the time, often no more than that (Thraede, "Frau," pp. 199-201, 215f.), but upheld rigorously in Jewish quarters (e.g. 2Mac 3:19; 3Mac 1:18; Sir 42:9-14; Ps-Phoc 215-17; Philo, Leg All. 3.169; Flacc. 89). This does not mean that Aseneth is held a prisoner. In other texts the tower (another fairy-tale motif) may mean just that; in JosAsen it goes to underline Pentephres' affluence and his care for his daughter. Obviously she is in charge of the house during her parents' absence (chs. 18-20), just as she will look after Joseph's estate later on (24:15; 26:1-4; see 3:5). She is also Pentephres' heiress (12:15), apparently being his only child after her brother's death (10:8; according to Nu 27:1-11; BB 9:1, Jewish daughters inherit only if their father had no male children living).

c. Cf. 1Chr 29:2 LXX; Esth 1:6.

d. These would be animal statues, but unlike e.g. WisSol 15:18f. JosAsen makes nothing of it. The gods have names (3:6), but as in Jewish polemic generally they are not identified individually. See further esp. 12:9-11.

e. Both chamber and walls are mentioned in G Arm. L1 L2 Rum. (and perhaps F in between illegible spots), the chamber alone in APQ d Slav. Ngr., the walls in c Syr. (and perhaps F in between illegible spots); gaps CR EW.

f. Conventional, cf. e.g. Ex 20:23; Ps 115:4 (113:12 LXX); WisSol 13:10; LetJer 3, 10, 29; Acts 17:29; Rev 9:20; 17:4.

g. Cf. 10:12; 11:8f., 16; 12:5; 13:11; 19:5; 21:13f. Xenophon of Ephesus' Antheia and Heliodorus' Charicleia were also priestesses. Cf. TJob 2:2f.; ApAb 1:3.

h. Gold, silver, jewels, and fine clothes is a common formula for mobile wealth (cf. Acts 20:33; Jas 5:2f.). In antiquity clothes were folded away in chests (also 10:8; 14:14; 18:5), never hung up in wardrobes or closets.

i. Or "land"; i.e. food stuff as in 4:2. Cf. Isa 1:19; Hos 10:1.

j. Cf. Esth 2:9, seven valets Esth 1:10, seven counsellors Ezra 7:14. The wording of the first half of vs. 6 is doubtful. Cf. 17:4.

k. The reading "and . . . much": ACP; destroyed R; gaps Q EG Ngr.; omit rest. Cf. 10:4.

l. Lit. "of the (people) passing by" FW c (Syr.) Arm. L1 (L2); omit a d; gaps EG Ngr.

m. Both text and meaning of the description of the textiles are uncertain (as in 3:6; 5:5; 13:3; 16:18); cf. Ex 26:1, 31, 36; 28:5f., 8, 15; Jdt 10:21; TJob 25:7; Josephus, War 5.5.4 §212. For similar luxury beds, see Esth 1:6; TJob 25:8; 32:4; Philo, Somn. 2.57; Chariton 8.1.14; 8.6.7; Xenophon of Ephesus 1.8.2; Apuleius 2.19.1. East: to facilitate prayer in that direction (on which see 11:1y).

n. The reading "except . . . alone": ACPR d; gaps b Ngr.; omit rest. Cf. 15:14.

o. Not on the northern side, unless Aseneth's tower is a distance from the house, cf. 2:7; 10:11-13; 13:11.

p. Indicating careful and costly construction. Cf. ShepHerm Vis 3.2.5.

q. The number hardly symbolizes the eighteen stars of Aries (Philonenko, Joseph et Aseneth, pp. 74f.) or the Eighteen Benedictions (Riessler, Altjü- sorts and all bearing fruit were planted within the court along the wall. And their fruit was 12 (20) ripe, for it was the time of harvest. •And there was in the court, on the right hand, a spring of abundant living<sup>r</sup> water, and below the spring was a big cistern receiving the water of that spring. From there a river ran right through the court and watered all the trees of that court.

II. PENTEPHRES' ATTEMPT TO GIVE ASENETH TO JOSEPH IN MARRIAGE

Joseph's visit to Pentephres is announced

1 (1) 3 And it happened in the first year of the seven years of plenty, in the fourth month, on the eighteenth<sup>a</sup> of the month; Joseph came into the territory of Heliopolis and was gathering
 2 (2) the surplus grain of that region.<sup>b</sup> •And when he had come close to that city, Joseph sent
 (3) twelve men<sup>c</sup> ahead of him to Pentephres the priest, saying, "I will lodge with you because it is the hour of noon and the time of lunch,<sup>d</sup> and the heat of the sun is great, and (I desire) 3 (4) that I may refresh myself under the shadow of your house."<sup>e</sup> •And Pentephres heard this, and rejoiced exceedingly with great joy and said, "Blessed (be) the Lord, the God of 4 (5) Joseph, because my lord Joseph thought me worthy to come to us."<sup>f</sup> •And Pentephres called
 (6) the (steward) of his house<sup>g</sup> and said to him, "Hurry and make my house ready and prepare a great dinner, because Joseph, the Powerful One of God,<sup>h</sup> is coming to us today."

Aseneth dresses up to meet her parents

5 (7) And Aseneth heard that her father and mother had come from the field, which was their
 (8) inheritance,<sup>i</sup> and rejoiced and said, "I will go and see my father and my mother because they have come from the field which is our inheritance."<sup>j</sup> For it was (the) time of harvest.
 6 (9) And Aseneth hurried into the chamber, where her robes lay,<sup>k</sup> and dressed<sup>l</sup> in a (white) linen disches Schriftum, p. 1303). If it is at all symbolical, the total of seventy-two might refer to the seventy-two nations of the world (Gen 10 LXX; cf. LetAris 50, 307; Lk 10:1). Cf. 3:2.

r. I.e. fresh as opposed to cistern water; also 14:12, 15. Traditional, e.g. Gen 26:19; Jer 2:13.

3 a. Witnesses c FW Syr. Arm. L1 Slav. Phil; "seventeenth" 436; "twenty-eighth" ACPR d i, "eighth" Q; gaps EG 435& Ngr.

b. The reading "of surplus (lit. "plenty") . . . region": the evidence is variegated. (a) B Slav. have only "the region"; FW L1 only "the plenty"; similarly Syr. ("of the seven years of plenty," cf. Gen 41:34, 47) Arm. ("of plenty of the times"), only 436 and perhaps c have both; omit Ngr., gaps EG D 435& Phil. The text is restored on the assumption of split tradition.

c. A reference to Israel? Cf. 2:11. Of course a man in Joseph's position would not travel alone, but have a large staff with him (9:3; 18:1).

d. Cf. Mk 11:1 par; Lk 9:52; 19:5. See also 3:5 end.

e. The reading "the shadow (skian, "shelter" [skepēn] D) of your house (hand 435&)" : E D Arm. L1 L2; "the roof (stegēn) of y.h." a Slav.; "your shadow" c; "your house (oikian)" FW (Syr.); "your roof" B Phil; gaps G Ngr.

f. Traditional form of eulogy, e.g. Gen 14:19-20; 1Sam 25:32; 1Kgs 1:48; 8:15; Tob 3:11; 2Mac 1:17; see H. W. Beyer, "eulogeō etc.," TDNT 2, 754-65. Also in a gentile's mouth as in 8:2; 21:4, e.g. 1Kgs 5:21; 10:9. The translation "to come to us" is a guess from the variegated evidence.

g. Cf. Gen 43:16; 44:1, 4. An analogous person in ch. 18. They would be slaves. Cf. on 5:1.

h. Also 4:7; 18:1f.; 21:21. Not LXX, but cf. Isa 9:5; Jub 40:7.

i. Lit. "field of their inheritance," also 3:5b; 4:2; 16:4; 20:6; 24:15; 26:1; cf. 10:1; 23:3. The expression sounds Semitic, but no equivalent is on record; could this be an artificial Semitism? Perhaps the expression is not so much due to an intention to present Pentephres in a biblicalized manner, as to a peculiarity of Egyptian law. Arable land was considered property of the crown and either administered directly or allotted to others. In Ptolemaic times the latter seems to have gradually acquired the character of private property (see Taubenschlag, Law, pp. 232-39). That Pentephres is a landowner may come from Gen 47:22, 26, but Pharaoh's firstborn (25:2) and Joseph (24:15; 26:1) also are (cf. further 23:3). With men of their description, the "fields" would be estates as hellenistic patricians used to have rather than mere strips of land; perhaps we ought to translate agros accordingly. Pentephres' estate is near (16:4). Such estates were run by managers (cf. Lk 16:1) who might be slaves, with the help of other slaves (cf. Chariton 4.2) or hired labor (cf. Lk 15:15f.). The owners lived in the city, keeping an occasional eye on things (as described e.g. in Chariton 2.3.1), particularly at harvest time. So statements like those in 24:15; 25:2; 26:1 should be taken in the sense of supervision rather than personal hard work, although a landlord was not above lending a helpful hand when on his estate (Syracuse's second-best man fell from a ladder there and almost killed himself, Chariton 1.3.1). The estates in JosAsen produce different kind of fruit (4:2), honey (16:4), wine (24:15; 25:2; 26:1), and doubtless also corn.

j. This might have been mentioned as early as 3:2. Ngr. has an addition there to this effect as well as further remarks on Pentephres' hospitality.

k. The reading "into . . . lay": APCR B; gaps EG; omit rest Phil. The MS evidence is poor, but some such remark seems appropriate, cf. 10:8; 14:14; 18:5.

l. More dressing scenes, cf. 10:10; 14:14f.; 18:5f. Cf. Jdt 10:3f.

robe interwoven with violet and gold,<sup>m</sup> and girded herself (with) a golden girdle and put bracelets on her hands and feet, and put golden buskins<sup>n</sup> about her feet, and around her (10) neck she put valuable ornaments and costly stones which hung around from all sides, and the names of the gods of the Egyptians<sup>o</sup> were engraved everywhere on the bracelets and the (11) stones, and the faces of all the idols were carved on them. And she put a tiara on her head and fastened a diadem around her temples, and covered her head with a veil.

Pentephres proposes to give Aseneth to Joseph in marriage, but she refuses

- 1 (1) 4 And she hurried and went down the stairs from the upper floor, and came to her father
 (2) and mother and greeted them and kissed them. And Pentephres and his wife rejoiced over her daughter Aseneth (with) great joy, because they saw her adorned like a bride of God.<sup>a</sup>
 2 (3) And they brought out all the good (things) which they had brought from the field which
 (4) was their inheritance, and gave (them) to their daughter. And Aseneth rejoiced over all the good (things), the fruit,<sup>b</sup> and the grapes, and the dates, and the doves,<sup>c</sup> and the pomegranates, and the figs, because they were all handsome and good to taste.<sup>d</sup>
 3 (5) And Pentephres said to his daughter Aseneth, "My child." And she said, "Behold,
 4 (here) I (am), my lord."<sup>e</sup> And he said to her, "Sit down between us,<sup>f</sup> and I will tell you what I have to say."<sup>g</sup>
 5 (6)(7) And Aseneth sat between her father and mother. And Pentephres, her father, with his right hand grasped the right hand of his daughter and kissed it<sup>h</sup> and said to her, "My child
 6 Aseneth."<sup>i</sup> And she said, "Behold, (here) I (am), lord. Let my lord and my father speak
 7 (8) up."<sup>j</sup> And Pentephres, her father, said to her, "Joseph the Powerful One of God is coming to us today. And he is chief of the whole land of Egypt,<sup>k</sup> and the king Pharaoh appointed (9) him king of the whole land,<sup>k</sup> and he is giving grain to the whole land, and saving it from the oncoming famine.<sup>l</sup> And Joseph is a man who worships God,<sup>m</sup> and self-controlled, and a virgin<sup>n</sup> like you today,<sup>o</sup> and Joseph is (also) a man powerful in wisdom and experience,

m. See 2:8.

n. Thus Br for anaxyrides, an ill-defined piece of oriental clothing; "Binden" Rie, "pantalons" Phil; also 18:6. Liddell-Scott only admit "trousers," but those do not go well with "feet" and would leave Aseneth barefooted. The sequence of objects also demands something more in the nature of an accessory.

o. See 2:3.

4 a. Does this expression mean that a god will unite himself to her in the guise of the future king of Egypt (Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, p. 141)? A genitive of quality or origin seems to fit the context better, cf. 1Thes 4:16; Rev 15:2. For the vision of a bride clad in white cf. ShepHerm Vision 4.2.1.

b. "Fruit" seems to serve as a heading, cf. 10:13.

c. No positive variants. Riessler (TQ 103 [1922] 2) suggests that Heb. gôzâlim ("pigeons") is a mistake for gôzîm ("walnuts"); this is a rather remote possibility in view of the context. If tais peristerais ("the doves") cannot be explained somehow (cf. Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, p. 141), perhaps we might envisage corruption from tais persikais ("the peaches") or tois pistakios ("the pistachios").

d. Cf. Gen 2:9.

e. Traditional opening of a dialogue; cf. e.g. Tob 2:3 S; 6:11 S; Jub 18:6; more in Berger, Auferstehung, pp. 431f., n. 19, and on 14:6. It is repeated in vss. 5f.; as the angel in ch. 14, Pentephres addresses Aseneth twice before he launches his speech; cf. 1Sam 3:1-14; Jn 21:15-18.

f. Sus 50 Theod.

g. Lit. "my words" as often. Cf. 4:9.

h. Or "her"; cf. 20:6.

i. Wording of vs. 6 is uncertain.

j. Cf. Gen 45:26.

k. Cf. Gen 41:41, 44. The wording of the clause is uncertain. Gen does not say that Joseph is "king" (on the meaning see 1:8), but postbiblical tradition did, or almost did, e.g. TLev 13:9; Philo, Jos, 120. See further on 29:8f. [In the HistJos, Joseph is called "King"; see the contribution in this volume on HistJos by G. T. Zervos.—J.H.C.]

l. Also 25:6; 26:3; cf. Gen 47:13-26.

m. Gk. theosebês, also 8:5f.; 21:1; 23:9f., 12; 28:5; 29:3, cf. 8:8; 27:1. JosAsen never uses eusebês. The word theosebês is something like a technical term in JosAsen; it is used to designate the Jews who revere the one and only God and observe appropriate ethical standards (see Intro.). So theosebês has a distinguishing ring (cf. e.g. Jdt 11:17; 4Mac 15:28; 16:12); that is why "religious" will not do for a translation ("god-fearing" suggests phoboumenos ton theon as a Gk. original and provokes false association with the "god-fearers"). Parallels to this usage are not numerous (NT only in Jn 9:31). See further G. Bertram, "theosebês, theosebeia," TDNT vol. 3, 123-28; McEleney, NTS 20 (1974) 326f.

n. This seems to be the first instance of masculine parthenos before (or beside?) Rev 14:4 (cf. 1Cor 7:25); Burchard, Untersuchungen, p. 110, n. 1. Perhaps this is a Jewish and Christian speciality; Achilles Tatius 5.20.5 wonders if it is admissible. See further 2:1; 7:7; 15:1, 7.

o. I.e. "to date" as in 8:1; 23:2; cf. Acts 22:3.

- 8 (10) and the spirit of God is upon him, and the grace of the Lord (is) with him.<sup>p</sup> •Come, my child, and I will hand you over<sup>a</sup> to him for (his) wife, and you will be a bride to him, and he will be your bridegroom for ever (and) ever.”<sup>11</sup>
- 9 (11) And when Aseneth heard these words from her father, plenty of red sweat<sup>r</sup> poured over her face, and she became furious with great anger, and looked askance at her father with (12) her eyes, and said, “Why does my lord and my father speak words such as these, to hand me over,<sup>1</sup> like a captive, to a man (who is) an alien, and a fugitive, and (was) sold (as a slave)?<sup>7a</sup> •Is he not the shepherd’s son from the land of Canaan,<sup>8</sup> and he himself was caught” (13) in the act (when he was) sleeping with his mistress, and his master threw him into the prison of darkness;<sup>9</sup> and Pharaoh brought him out of prison, because he interpreted his (14) dream just like the older women of the Egyptians interpret (dreams)?<sup>7b</sup> •No,<sup>2</sup> but I will be married to the king’s firstborn son, because he is king of the whole land of Egypt.”<sup>a2</sup>
- 11 (15) Hearing this,<sup>b2</sup> Pentephres was ashamed to speak further to his daughter Aseneth<sup>c2</sup> about Joseph, because she had answered him<sup>d2</sup> daringly and with boastfulness and anger.

Joseph arrives at Pentephres’ house

- 1 (1) 5 And a young man of Pentephres’ servants<sup>a</sup> rushed in and says, “Behold, Joseph is (2) standing before the doors of our court.” •And Aseneth fled from her father’s and mother’s

p. This is a mosaic of traditional attributes occurring, either alone or in combination, in descriptions of godly men, and most of them also of Joseph: “who worships God” (e.g. Ex 18:21; Job 1:1, 8; 2:3; TNaph 1:10; TAB A 4); “self-controlled” especially in sexual matters (of Joseph, cf. Gen 39; 4Mac 2:2; TJos 4:1f.; 6; 7; Philo, Jos, 40; Josephus, Ant 2.4.3 §48); “wisdom and experience” (e.g. Jdt 11:8; of Joseph, cf. Gen 41:39); “spirit” (e.g. Dan 6:4; Lk 2:25; Acts 6:5; of Joseph, cf. Gen 41:38; TSim 4:4; Philo, Jos, 116); “grace” (e.g. Lk 2:40; Acts 6:8; of Joseph, cf. TJos 12:3). Such attributes are also used to characterize messianic figures (e.g. PssSol 17:37f.; Lk 2:52), but there is nothing intrinsically messianic about them.

q. Gk. paradidonai, lit. “to give over,” often has a negative ring when used of people (it is what Judas Iscariot does to Jesus), which is more to the point in vs. 9 than here; but cf. Tob 7:13; 10:10 S.

r. Gk. eis ton aiōna chronon, lit. “into the eternity time,” a septuagintism (no Semitism), e.g. Ex 14:13; Jdt 15:10; PssSol 8:33; 15:13; also 1En 103:4, cf. 3Mac 5:11, never NT. JosAsen is fond of it: also 6:8; 8:9; 12:11; 13:15; 15:6, 7, 9, 12x; 16:14; 17:6; 19:5; 21:3f. For the concept of marriage forever, see Tob 7:12 S.

s. Cf. Lk 22:44; Chariton 4.2.13.

t. The reading “why . . . over”: many variants. The major problem is whether “want(s)” is to be inserted before “to give” and whether the verb (or verbs) is (or are) in the third or second person. Phil adds “so” after “speak” on the sole strength of Slav., maybe because he omitted “words such as these” on the authority of d Slav.

u. Cf. Apuleius 4.31.2 Prisoners of war were often sold as slaves, and slaves’ masters could effect a marriage to them. Pentephres had a right to marry his daughter away, but not without sheer injustice to give her to a man thrice dishonored. “Fugitive” may also be rendered “driven into exile”; meaning that he had it coming to him.

v. A sneer; see Gen 46:34. Cf. Mk 6:3 par.

w. The reading “was caught”: EFw c Syr. Arm. L1 (L2); “was abandoned by him (his father)” (A)P d Rie Br (Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, p. 145, comments on the strangeness of this); “from there was brought hither” Slav.; gaps CR Q G Ngr. Cf. Jn 8:4.

x. Cf. Gen 39:20. For the darkness see TJos 8:5, cf. 2:4; 9:1f. Ancient prisons used to be dark, e.g. Isa 42:7; 49:9; Xenophon of Ephesus 2.6.5; Apuleius 9.21.4; cf. also WisSol 17:2.

y. Whence? The meaning must be deprecatory. If a neutral or favorable comparison were intended, Aseneth could have referred, e.g., to the dream interpreters (among them women) who belonged to the staff of many pagan temples of the time (cf. F. Cumont, L’Egypte des Astrologues [Brussels, 1937] pp. 127–29). The whole vs. is a distortion of elements from Gen 39–41; according to 13:13 (cf. 6:2) people told Aseneth so.

z. Witnesses ACR EF c d L1: “No, my lord father and my sweetest mother, no” P (Q); “I will not do this” W; “No, my father, not to this (one) will I be joined” Syr.; “it will not be so” Arm. (436); “Not so” 435&; “Anyway, oh my precious father, be silent and do not speak to me such words” Ngr. 671 (a little shorter 661); gap G. Something like “No, my father (cf. PQ Syr. Ngr.), it will not be so (cf. Arm. L2)” may be original; cf. 23:1 and the variant at 20:9.

a2. This outburst of class feeling may be exaggerated, but it is not reprehended as such. “The king’s (not Pharaoh’s) firstborn son” may be deliberately ambiguous, cf. 18:11; 21:4, 20; 23:10. To be forced down the social ladder is a constant threat in ancient romance, e.g. Chariton, and a person owes it to himself or herself to defend his or her status. Structurally, Aseneth’s pride resembles Habrocomes’ boastfulness toward Eros (Xenophon of Ephesus 1.1.4–6) and Psyche’s attempted murder of her unknown husband (Apuleius 5.5.1–22.1).

b2. “Hearing this” ACPR d (Q Ngr.); “And in longness of spirit [i.e. longanimity] P. was and” Syr.; “and” rest; gap G. The participial form is suspicious.

c2. Witnesses ACR Syr. (omit “his daughter”) Slav.; gaps EG Ngr.; omit rest.

d2. Witnesses A c d Syr. Arm. 436; “her father” FW L1; gaps EG 435& Ngr.

5 a. It is taken for granted that Pentephres has a staff of servants to look after his house. Cf. 3:4.

presence, when she heard (them) speak these words about Joseph, and went up into the upper floor and entered her chamber and stood by the large window, the one looking east, (3) in order to see Joseph entering her father's house.<sup>b</sup> • And Pentephres and his wife and his<sup>c</sup> (4) whole family went out to meet Joseph.<sup>d</sup> • And the gates of the court looking east were (5) opened, and Joseph entered, standing<sup>e</sup> on Pharaoh's second chariot,<sup>f</sup> and four horses, white as snow<sup>g</sup> and with golden bridles, were harnessed (to it), and the entire chariot was (6) manufactured from pure<sup>h</sup> gold. • And Joseph was dressed in an exquisite white tunic, and the robe which he had thrown around him<sup>i</sup> was purple, made of linen interwoven with gold,<sup>j</sup> and a golden crown (was) on his head, and around the crown were twelve chosen stones, and on top of the twelve stones were twelve golden rays.<sup>k</sup> And a royal staff<sup>l</sup> was in his left (7) hand, and in his right hand<sup>m</sup> he held outstretched an olive branch.<sup>n</sup> and there was plenty (8) of fruit on it, and in the fruits was a great wealth of oil.<sup>o</sup> • And Joseph entered the court, (9) and the gates of the court were closed, and every man and woman, (if) strange, remained outside the court, because the guards of the gates drew tight and<sup>p</sup> closed the doors, and all (10) the strangers were closed out.<sup>q</sup> • And Pentephres and his wife and his<sup>r</sup> whole family, except their daughter Aseneth, went and prostrated themselves face down to the ground before (11) Joseph. And Joseph descended from his chariot and greeted them with his right (hand).

Aseneth is shattered at the sight of Joseph

1 (1) 6 And Aseneth saw Joseph on his chariot and was strongly cut (to the heart), and her soul was crushed,<sup>a</sup> and her knees were paralyzed, and her entire body trembled,<sup>b</sup> and she was filled with great fear.<sup>c</sup> And she sighed and said in her heart:

b. See 6:1; 7:2.

c. Some witnesses have "their," as also in 5:7; 20:6. Some mention the servant staff in addition to, or in lieu of, the family.

d. Also 5:7; 19:2-4; 22:5. This is the proper thing to do when receiving an honored guest; cf. Acts 10:24f.

e. Witnesses EFW c L1 L2 (cf. 17:8); "sitting" ACP d Arm. (Ngr., also miniatures); "carried upon" Syr.; gap Q G. Joseph would of course sit while en route (cf. Acts 8:28), but he may have stood up for the entry. Nevertheless, "sitting" could be right.

f. Cf. Gen 41:43. See also at 24:19.

g. Also 16:8, 18; 22:7. This is a traditional simile; cf. e.g. Dan 7:9 Theod.; 1En 106:2; Mt 28:3; Rev 1:14.

h. APC (Syr.), gaps Q G 435& Ngr., omit rest.

i. Lit. "the rope of his wrapping" (peribolē, also "dress").

j. See 2:8.

k. Joseph is dressed in royal attire. The fact is suggested by Gen 41:42, but the description is more like Esth 8:15. The details of the crown (itself probably in the form of a palm wreath) go beyond this. The twelve stones and rays are characteristic of the crown of the sun god Helios (F. J. Dölger, "Die 12 Apostel als Corona duodecim radiorum und die Zwölfstrahlenkrone des Sonnengottes," Antike und Christentum [Münster, 1940] vol. 6, pp. 36-51; for similar crowns worn by other heavenly figures cf. e.g. Rev 12:1 and the commentaries thereon; Lucianus, De Syria dea, 32). The author may remember some statue of Helios or generalize his memory of such statues. This does not mean that Joseph is regarded as a god or that Helios is explained as a deification of Joseph, the way Sarapis was (b. AZ 43a; Firmicus Maternus, De errore profanarum religionum, 13:1-3 etc.). Joseph is not wearing all this of his own right. He is a representative, outwardly of Pharaoh, but really of God, of whom the sun can be a symbol (see 6:6; 11:1y). The number twelve, originally a reference to the zodiac, may have suggested the twelve tribes or patriarchs to the author. See further 6:2.

l. An ensign of office as becomes a viceroy, not mentioned in Gen 41:42. Cf. WisSol 10:14.

m. The reading "in his left . . . right hand": (Syr.) Arm. L2; gaps Q G. The other MSS mention only the right (or just one) hand, implying either that Joseph held both scepter and olive branch in one hand (cf. Rie Br) or that the scepter was in the form of a branch.

n. A sign of peace, carried e.g. by ambassadors. Perhaps there is also an overtone of fertility. A priestly note (TLex 8:8) is less likely.

o. The reading "and . . . a great wealth of oil (lit. "a fatness of much oil")": (F Syr. Arm. L1 L2 Slav. Ngr.?) omit ACP W c d; gaps Q EG.

p. The reading "drew tight and": ACP c (L1 436); omit FW d Syr.? Arm.; gaps Q EG 435& Ngr.

q. The reading "and . . . out": D (F Syr. Arm.) L1 L2 (Slav.); omit ACP W c B Phil; gaps Q G Ngr. See also 19:3; cf. Apuleius 11.23.5.

r. See 5:3.

6 a. The reading "cut . . . crushed": E (FW c Syr. Arm.) L1 L2; "cut [and suffered add. PQ] in the soul, and her bowels were crushed" a d (Slav.); gap G; doubtful Ngr.

b. Syr. Yovs (not 332) L2 add another clause expressing distress, but the wording differs widely.

c. Lit. "she feared (a) great fear." See Intro. This is JosAsen's way to describe a "stroke of lightning" that has hit, e.g. Habrocomes (Xenophon of Ephesus 1.3.1) or Psyche (Apuleius 5.22.3) in similar situations (cf. also TJos 14:1; Josephus, Ant 2.10.2 §252). Other kinds of unexpected confrontations may be depicted in a similar vein (e.g. Chariton 4.1.9 and frequently). From ch. 6 (or even ch. 5) on down to ch. 13 cf. Xenophon of Ephesus 1.3.1-4.7; Apuleius 5.22-6.5; Acts 9:3-9 par. (Zeuge, 86f., 88-98; Berger, Auferstehung, pp. 196-98, 210; 556f., n. 378; 557-62, nn. 382-

- 2 (5) What<sup>d</sup> shall I now do,<sup>e</sup> wretched (that I am)?
Did I not speak<sup>f</sup> saying<sup>g</sup> that Joseph is coming,
the shepherd's son from the land of Canaan?
And now, behold, the sun from heaven<sup>h</sup> has come to us on its chariot
and entered our house today, and shines in it like a light upon the earth.<sup>i</sup>
- 3 (6) But I, foolish and daring,<sup>j</sup> have despised him and spoken wicked words about him, and did not know that Joseph is (a) son of God.<sup>k</sup>
- 4 (7) For who among men on earth will generate such beauty,<sup>l</sup> and what womb of a woman will give birth to such light?<sup>m</sup>
What a wretched and foolish (girl) I (am), because I have spoken wicked words about him to my father.
- 5 (2) And now, where shall I go<sup>n</sup> and hide from his face<sup>o</sup> in order that Joseph the son of God does not see me because I have spoken wicked (things) about him?
- 6 (3) And where shall I flee<sup>p</sup> and hide, because every hiding place,<sup>q</sup> he sees and nothing hidden escapes him, because of the great light that is inside him?<sup>r</sup>
- 7 (4) And now be gracious on me, Lord, God of Joseph, 93; 597, n. 492).

d. Present order of vss. 2–7 in EFW c Syr. Arm. L1 L2 Ngr., vss. 5–7 before 2–4 in a d, gap G. Riessler's verse numbers, virtually identical with Philonenko's as given in parentheses, had to be altered here. Aseneth's lament vss. 2–8 anticipates many motifs laid out in greater detail in chs. 11–13. On the background, see E. W. Smith, Jr., "The Form and Religious Background of Romans VII 24–25a," NovT 13 (1971) 127–35; P. Tachau, "Einst" und "Jetzt" im Neuen Testament: Beobachtungen zu einem urchristlichen Predigtschema in der neutestamentlichen Briefliteratur und zu seiner Vorgeschichte (FRLANT 105; Göttingen, 1972) pp. 52–58 (see also 12:5); Berger, "Missionsliteratur," 240–45 (especially ActsPhil 61).

e. The reading "do" (poiōō): E Syr. Arm. Rie; "see" (opsomai) CPQ FW c D (L1) L2 (Slav.) Phil: "follow" (hepsomai) A B Bat Br ("This can hardly be correct," p. 29, n. 1); gaps G Ngr.

f. "Did . . . speak" ACP EFW c d L1 435&; "Because my strange counsellors deceived me who said to me" Syr.; "Did not now my father and mother with despising speak to me and said" Arm.; "Did not some say" 436; "And did not my father say to me that the Powerful (One) of God comes, Joseph, who is powerful according to God's truth because with God's power he reigns as King [cf. 4:7]? I said" Ngr.; gaps Q G. Cf. 13:13. See the next note.

g. EFW d L1 (436); cf. Syr. Arm. in previous note; omit ACP c 435& Ngr.; gaps Q G.

h. The reading "the sun from heaven": (FW c) D L1 436 (435&) Slav. Phil: "like the s.f.h. (he, namely Joseph)" a B Arm. (Ngr.?): "I see (that) the s. of h." E (Syr.), gap G.

i. Aseneth verbalizes 5:5 with a pun: the sun is coming to Sun City at last. Cf. e.g. Sir 50:7; 1En 106:2, 10; 4Ezra 7:97; TJob 31:5; Chariton 5.3.9. The Messiah is not often compared to the sun, but see TZeb 9:8 (Mal 3:20); TLevi 18:3f. Joseph is not coming as the Messiah will be; he is coming as the representative of God (see 5:5) as every true Jew is, or at least the famous ones.

j. Cf. Prov 9:13.

k. See Intro.

l. Joseph's beauty was proverbial since Gen 39:7, e.g. TSim 5:1. See Intro.

m. The wording is biblical, but the idea is not unfamiliar to the Gk. mind, cf. e.g. Chariton 2.1.5. n. See 11:3.

o. Cf. Ps 138:7, particularly as quoted by IClem 28:3; also Achilles Tatius 8.2.1; Historia Regis Tyri, 27:1; Apuleius 6.26.6.

p. Witnesses FW c d Syr. (Ngr.?), "go away" ACP (436); omit Arm. (incl. following "and"); gaps Q EG L1 435&.

q. Gk. apokrybē is very rare and unattested before Origen except in OT translations.

r. The closest parallel known is Mt 6:23 (Jn 11:10?). Ancient ophthalmology, both popular (as implied e.g. in Sir 23:19; TGad 5:7; LAB 25:12; Philo, Quod Deus, 58; Eph 1:18; cf. below 14:9) and scientific (e.g. Plato, Timaeus, 45B–46C; Galenus, De placitis Hippocratis et Platonis, 7.5; Epictetus, Diss., 2.23.3; Philo, see below; not Aristotle!), believed that eyesight depends on rays of light or spirit emitted from, not received by, the eye. Sharp-sightedness requires a large portion of inner light, supernatural vision a supernatural one. The whole verse may be an allusion to Zaphenath-paneah (Gen 41:45), interpreted as "finder of hidden (things)" in Josephus, Ant 2.6.1 §91 (cf. Aptowitz, HUCA 1 [1924] 286). It is also reminiscent of traditional references to God (e.g. Job 28:24; 34:21f.; Sir 42:18–20), the sun (e.g. Ps 19:6; Sir 42:16; cf. vss. 2 and 5:5 above), and Wisdom (e.g. WisSol 7:22–8:1), but this does not make Joseph a heavenly being, an incarnation of Wisdom, or a figure of the Messiah. Rather, he is credited with prophetic insights: "To a prophet nothing is unknown, because he has intelligible light in him and shadowless rays" (Philo, Spec Leg, 4:192).

because I have spoken wicked words against him in ignorance<sup>e</sup>

- 8 (8) And now, let my father give me to Joseph for a maidservant and slave,<sup>1</sup> and I will serve him for ever (and) ever.

Joseph is convinced that Aseneth will not molest him and agrees to meet her

- 1 (1) 7 And Joseph entered the house of Pentephres and sat upon the throne.<sup>a</sup> And they washed<sup>b</sup> his feet and set<sup>c</sup> a table before him by itself, because Joseph never ate with the Egyptians, for this was an abomination to him.<sup>d</sup> And looking up with his eyes, Joseph saw Aseneth (2) leaning through (the window).<sup>e</sup> And Joseph said to Pentephres and his whole family, saying, (3) "Who is this woman who is standing in the upper floor by the window? Let her leave this house," because Joseph was afraid, saying, "This one must not molest me, too."<sup>f</sup> For all the wives and the daughters of the noblemen and the satraps of the whole land of Egypt (4) used to molest him (wanting) to sleep with him, and all the wives and the daughters of the (5) Egyptians, when they saw Joseph, suffered badly because of his beauty. But Joseph despised them,<sup>f</sup> and the messengers whom the women sent to him with gold and silver and valuable presents Joseph sent back with threats and insults,<sup>g</sup> because Joseph said,<sup>h</sup> "I will

s. Ignorance (agnoa) separates Aseneth's wickedness from outright sin; it does not absolve her of responsibility but lets her hope for forgiveness (also 17:10; cf. e.g. TJud 19:3). The word is also used in an analogous sense for her general status prior to conversion, where the object of ignorance is above all God (12:5; 13:11–13). This is Jewish and Christian usage (e.g. WisSol 14:22; Acts 3:17; 3:27; 17:30; 1Tim 1:13; Aristides, Apology, 17:4).

t. Also 13:15. Aseneth desires almost as little as the prodigal son (Lk 15:19), and like him she will get more. An application of the traditional principle inherent in e.g. Ps 147:6; Prov 3:34 (quoted Jas 4:6; 1Pet 5:5); Mt 23:12; Lk 1:52. Voluntary enslavement of course is also a motif of erotic language.

7 a. Pentephres' throne as in 20:2? As a satrap he would have one ex officio (cf. TJob 20:4f.). Anyway, the article is there.

b. The reading "they washed": a W c Syr. (Brooks' emendation) Arm. L1 L2 Ngr.661; "he washed" F d Syr. (ms.) Ngr.671; "washing (sing.)" E; gap G; cf. next note. Foot washing is a traditional gesture of hospitality, e.g. Gen 18:4; 1Sam 25:41; TAB 3; b. Ket 61a; Lk 7:44; Jn 13:1–17; Vita Aesopi G, 61. It is a service which dependants like wives, children, pupils owed to their respective masters (13:15; 20:2–5).

c. Witnesses ACP (c) D Syr. (Brooks' emendation) L1 L2 Ngr.; "set (sing.)" Q E B Syr. (ms.) Slav. Phil; gaps FGW. Tables like this one would be low affairs, more like trays on legs, often with a disconnecting board, to be set when needed and put away after use; see 15:14; 17:7f. "To set (paratithenai) a table before someone"; also e.g. 1En 89:50; Acts 16:34.

d. Reversal of Gen 43:32. Abstention from heathen food and avoidance of table fellowship between Jews and pagans was one of the main issues of Jewish life in the hellenistic, especially post-Maccabean, period (cf. e.g. Esth 4:17x; Jub 22:16; 3Mac 3:4, 7; SibOr 4:24–30; Acts 10–11; Gal 2:11–14). The reason, as given in JosAsen, is that pagan food has come into contact with idols. Remarkably enough, while it is implied later on that it is polluting (11:9, 16; 12:5), it is never said that Jewish food is pure. So the Levitical law of purity plays no role here, at least not directly. See further 8:5; 20:7.

e. "And . . . (the window)" a c "with his eyes" omit AC, "leaning through" omit Q; "And Joseph looked at the tower" Syr. (mentioning the leaning through in the next sentence, where PQ also have it); "Gazing, however, Joseph (with) his eyes saw in the chamber above Aseneth standing" Ngr.; gap G; omit rest. On "leaning through (parakyptein)" cf. 1Chr 15:29; Prov 7:6; Song 2:9; Sir 14:23; 21:23. The word may have sexual or mythical overtones or both (W. Fauth, Aphrodite Parakyp-tusa: Untersuchungen zum Erscheinungsbild der vorderasiatischen Dea prospiciens [Akademie der Wissenschaften in Mainz. Abhandlungen der Geistes- und sozialwissenschaftlichen Klasse, 1966, no. 6; Wiesbaden, 1967]), but it looks harmless enough here. Joseph's misgivings are actuated by the behavior of the Egyptian women generally (vs. 3), rather than by Aseneth's posture in particular. His attitude in chs. 7f. rather resembles Aseneth's in chs. 2–4, a stroke of poetic justice. The scene in vs. 2–6 is developed from Gen 39:7–10, but not by the author of JosAsen. Jewish and Christian lore has it that all Egyptian women felt like Potiphar's wife when they saw Joseph on his tour around Egypt, offering him their valuables, and that his resistance was strengthened by the memory or an appearance of his father (Näf, Josef-Gedichte, pp. 73f.; Aptowitz, HUCA 1 [1924] 269f.; e.g. PRE 39). The latter point is already in Jub 39:6; TJos 3:3. For the hero of a romance being the idol of all women see Xenophon 1.5.4.

f. "But . . . them" (FW (c Syr.) Arm. (L1) L2; omit a d; gaps EG Ngr. Instead of "but" (W Arm. L2) we may have to read "and" (F Syr. L1).

g. "Threats" (apeilē, sing.) has a tendency to come in a pair with words denoting physical violence (Plato, Protagoras 325D; 4Mac 4:24; Pap. Rylands I 28.117; Chariton 2.8.1; Acts 9:1; ZNW 61 [1970] 163–65). So perhaps "insults" (hybris, also singular) had better be rendered "outrage, injuries." As in the romances (and elsewhere) righteous indignation has a right to violent expression (see also chs. 23–29). Chaereas barely fails to kick to death his beloved Callirhoe, who is reported to be unfaithful (Chariton 1.4.12); he is acquitted because he acted in good faith. Besides, the messengers would probably be slaves.

h. The reading "because Joseph said": E Syr. (Arm. L1 L2); "saying" a FW c d; gaps G Ngr.

- not sin before (the) Lord God of my father Israel nor in the face of my father Jacob."<sup>1</sup>
- 5 (6) And the face of his father Jacob, Joseph always had before his eyes, and he remembered his father's commandments. For Jacob would say to his son Joseph and all his sons,<sup>j</sup> "My children, guard strongly against associating with a strange woman, for association (with)
- 6 (7) her is destruction and corruption."<sup>k</sup> •Therefore Joseph said, "Let this woman leave this house."
- 7 (8) And Pentephres said to him, "Lord, this one whom you have seen standing in the upper floor is not a strange woman, but she is our daughter, a virgin<sup>l</sup> hating every man, and there
- 9) is not any other man who has ever seen her except you alone today. And if you will, she
- 8 (10) will come and address you, because our daughter is like a sister to you."<sup>m</sup> •And Joseph rejoiced exceedingly with great joy because Pentephres had said, "She is a virgin hating every man." And Joseph said by himself, "If she is a virgin hating every man, this (girl)
- (11) will certainly not molest me."<sup>n</sup> And Joseph said to Pentephres and his whole family,<sup>o</sup> "If she is your daughter and a virgin, let her come, because she is a sister to me, and I love her from today as my sister."

Joseph will not be kissed by Aseneth, but prays for her conversion

- 1 (1) 8 And Aseneth's mother went up to the upper floor and brought her and stood her before<sup>a</sup> Joseph. And Pentephres said to his daughter Aseneth,<sup>b</sup> "Greet<sup>c</sup> your brother, because he, too, is a virgin like you today and hates every strange woman, as you, too,<sup>d</sup> every strange
- 2) man."<sup>e</sup> •And Aseneth said to Joseph, "Be of good cheer,<sup>e</sup> my lord, blessed by the Most
- 3 High<sup>f</sup> Lord."<sup>e</sup> •And Joseph said to Aseneth, "May the Lord God<sup>g</sup> who gives life to all
- 4 (3) (things) bless you."<sup>e</sup> •And Pentephres said to his daughter Aseneth, "Go up and kiss your
- 5 (4) brother."<sup>e</sup> •And as Aseneth went up to kiss Joseph, Joseph stretched out his right hand and put it on her chest between her two breasts, and her breasts were already standing upright
- (5) like handsome apples.<sup>h</sup> And Joseph said, "It is not fitting for a man who worships God,<sup>i</sup>

i. Sin against God and the father also in 23:11. See TRub 1:8; Lk 15:18, 21; ShepHerm Vision 1.3.1; cf. Ex 10:16; Josephus, War 1.32.3 §365; Ant 19.6.4 §315. The reason for this combination may be gleaned from Ps-Phoc 8; SibOr 3.593f.

j. Text uncertain since vs. 4 "I will not."

k. A common warning since OT times (e.g. Gen 24:3; 28:1, 6; Deut 7:3f.; Neh 13:13–29), as a word of Jacob (Jub 39:6; TJos 3:3). Cf. further e.g. Tob 4:12; PJ 8:2, 4f.; TJud 14:6; TLevi 9:10; 14:6; TJob 44:3; LAB 9:5; Philo, Spec Leg. 3.29; Josephus, Ant 8.7.5 §191f.; b. AZ 36b. This is not tantamount to a general interdiction of exogamy. But a foreign woman will have to turn Jewish, like Aseneth, before a Jew may marry her. Pentephres seems to understand Joseph's attitude, but many did not. Cf. Tacitus, Historiae, 5.2.2; b. Meg 13b.

l. All read thus except omit A; gap G.

m. Cf. Tob 7:12; ShepHerm Vision 1.1.7. Pentephres suggests that virginity makes people of different faith brothers and sisters. Joseph accepts this only with the restriction stated in 8:5f. See also 15:1, 7. On the idea that certain virtues are a natural preparation for conversion, cf. also Acts 10:34f.

n. "And . . . molest me" (EF Syr. Arm. L1 L2 Ngr.); omit a c d; gaps G W.

o. The reading "and . . . family": F c Arm. (Syr.) L1 L2; "and his wife" a d; omit E Ngr.; gaps GW. Perhaps we should adopt both wife and family, cf. 5:7 (but see also 7:2).

8 a. The reading "and . . . before": (E) c Syr.

Arm. L1 L2; "to" a (FW) d; "before" Ngr.; gap G.

b. The reading "his daughter Aseneth (before "his"): Syr. Arm., punctuated so as to belong to the following sentence as an address E, omit W L2 Slav.):" EFW d Syr. Arm. L2 Slav.; "her" ACP c L1 Ngr.; omit Q; gap G.

c. Gk. aspasai, which may also mean "kiss": Br; cf. 19:10. But vs. 4 is against this.

d. The reading "hate today": add. c L1 (after "man") 436; "hate" add. Ngr.; gaps EGW; omit rest.

e. Gk. chairois (also Ngr.). Never in LXX and NT, but TAB B 13:6.

f. A frequent attribute of God in JosAsen, as in LXX (e.g. Gen 14:19) and other hellenistic Jewish literature, but rare in the NT (e.g. Acts 16:17). In a polytheistic environment it sounded both inviting and exclusive (e.g. against Zeus Hypsistos); cf. G. Bertram, "hypsos etc.," TDNT 8, 602–20.

g. The reading "the Lord God": a L2 (add. "of Israel"); "God" d; "the Lord" EFW c Syr. Arm. L1; gaps G Ngr.

h. The reading "between . . . apples": (APQ E Syr. L1 436); "and pushed her away" Slav.; omit c d Arm. 435&; gaps C FGW Ngr. "Like handsome apples" is in APQ (adds "two" after "like") only, a classical metaphor for a girl's breasts; cf. Aristophanes, Lysistrata, 155; Ecclesiastus, 903; (Ps-?) Theocritus, Idylls, 27.50. Another simile is in 18:9.

i. On this opening see Intro.; cf. Acts 10:28. The following triad of statements about the bread, who will bless<sup>l</sup> with his mouth the living God and eat blessed bread of life<sup>k</sup> and drink a blessed cup of immortality<sup>l</sup> and anoint himself with blessed ointment of incorruptibility to kiss a strange woman who will bless with her mouth dead and dumb<sup>m</sup> idols and eat from their table bread of strangulation<sup>n</sup> and drink from their libation a cup of insidiousness<sup>o</sup> and 6 (6) anoint herself with ointment of destruction. *But a man who worships God will kiss his mother and the sister (who is born) of his mother<sup>p</sup> and the sister (who is born) of his clan and family and the wife who shares his bed, (all of) who(m) bless with their mouths the 7 (7) living God. *Likewise, for a woman who worships God it is not fitting to kiss a strange man, because this is an abomination before the Lord God.”

the cup, and the ointment is often called a “meal formula” (also 8:9; 15:5; 16:16; 19:5; 21:13f., 21), perhaps unwisely so. If we go by 8:5, which seems to be its original setting in JosAsen, it is couched in relative clauses, the subject of which is “the man who worships God” (see at 4:7), and the point of the passage is not to institute or justify any meal, but to explain why such a man does not kiss a heathen woman. Also it is not at all clear whether the unction is envisaged as an integral part of a meal. Anyway, it is the right kind of “bread,” “cup” and “ointment” that characterizes a Jew, and distinguishes him from the gentile, who uses the opposite kind. The problem is whether this is to be understood in terms of a cultic meal, albeit a daily one as in communities such as the Essenes or the Therapeutae, or in terms of ordinary Jewish self-maintenance. If a sacramental interpretation is preferred we will have to identify JosAsen’s meal either with one that we know (Essene: IQS 6.4–6; IQSa 2.17–21; Josephus, War 2.8.5 §129–33, or, rather, Therapeutic: Philo, Vita Cont. 37ff., 69ff.; e.g. Kuhn, “Lord’s Supper,” The Scrolls and the New Testament, ed. K. Stendahl, 74–77, 261–62) or with one that we seem to know (synagogue meals in mystery style, e.g. Thyen, Studien, 127f., cf. Georgi, Gegner, 135f.); or else we should stipulate a hitherto unknown meal (e.g. Kilpatrick, ExpT 64 [1952–53] 4–8; W. Nauck, Die Tradition und der Charakter des ersten Johannesbriefes [WUNT 3; Tübingen, 1957] pp. 169–71, referring to Christian initiation by unction, baptism, and first eucharist, both orthodox and gnostic, e.g. ActsThom 120–21; GPhl 68,76,98; Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, pp. 91–93). The heathen counterpart would probably be meals in a temple “at a god’s table” (in Aseneth’s case equivalent to daily meals, see 10:13); such meals are known to us among other things from the papyri (see the commentaries on 1Cor 10:14–22; cf. also the idea later developed at length by Firmicus Maternus, De errore profanarum religionum, esp. ch. 18, that the pagan mysteries ape the Christian sacraments). If the “formula” is taken to refer to ordinary Jewish eating and anointing (J. Jeremias, “The Last Supper,” ExpT 64 [1952–53] 91f.; Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 121–33), we should compare the passages in which human maintenance is summarized by the triad “bread (or other food), wine (or other beverage), oil” (e.g. Ezra 3:7; Ps 23:5; Jdt 10:5; Dan 10:3; IQH 10.24; ApAb 9:7; Teremoth 6:1; Maasseroth 2:1; b. Pes 32a; Epictetus, Diss., 2.23.5; Ps-Heraclite, Letters, 7.5.1). This triad is doubtless related to the similar one “grain, wine, oil” that describes the produce of the land (e.g. Ps 104:14f.; Josephus, War 1.15.6 §299 [plus cattle]; Rev 6:6; TJud 9:8; SibOr 3.243,745; Eup. 2.25f.; Apuleius 9.33.2). The heathen counterpart would then be ordinary meals which were always in contact with food offered to idols one way or the other. Be that as it may, a change of diet is indispensable if a person wants to become Jewish and gain life (see further 7:1).

Aseneth is promised bread, cup, and ointment (15:5; cf. 8:9), and receives them, she says (19:5; 21:13f., 21). But she is actually fed a piece of supernatural honeycomb, i.e. manna (see Intro.), which means—the angel explains—that she has eaten the bread, drunk the cup, and been anointed with the ointment (16:16). This poses a new problem; is the honey a symbol, for example, for the Law or the word of God (cf. e.g. Pss 19:10f.; 119:103; Philo, Fuga, 137–39), implying that when it is received this is equivalent to the reception of bread, cup and ointment, whatever they mean (Anandakumara, Gentile Reactions, 66f.; Delling, JSJ 9 (1978) 54)? Does the honey refer to something real, a “honey communion” connected with, or representing, the cultic meal described by the “formula” (Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, p. 98)? Is this scene a way of depicting metaphorically what bread, cup, and ointment really are? The latter interpretation, which is preferred here, is applicable whether the meal is a cultic one or not; if it is not cultic we may point to Did 9:3f., doubtless based on a Jewish prayer, as proof for the idea that hellenistic Jews thought of their daily bread as a gift from heaven which provided life and wisdom. The “meal formula” may be of some help in interpreting Jn 6, especially vss. 35, 48, and 1Cor 10 (Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 130–33; corrected and enlarged in NTS 32 [1986] in press).

j. I.e. probably say grace before and after meals. This was regarded as one of the distinguishing marks of Judaism (e.g. SibOr 4.25f.; Christian, but with a possible Jewish origin, Aristides, Apolo-gy, 15:10). This “blessing” will account for “blessed” below.

k. The only real extant parallel to Jn 6:35, 48.

l. Grace after meals was said over a cup which would hence be called “cup of blessing” (cf. 1Cor 10:16 and commentaries thereon).

m. Also 11:8; 12:5; 13:11. Some witnesses attest the reverse order except in 13:11, where the words occur only in AP c Arm. L2, the latter two having “dumb and deaf.” Never LXX or NT, but cf. 3Mac 4:16.

n. For similar turns, see Ps 80:5; Prov 31:27; Isa 30:20; Hos 9:4.

o. Lit. “ambush” as in chs. 24–27. The choice of words in this and the previous instance may be influenced by the obvious fact that pagan food does not cause people to drop dead.

p. The reading “and the sister . . . mother”: AC (Syr. Arm. 435&) Slav.; omit PQ EFW c (gap following in HK) d L1 436; gaps G Ngr.

- 8 (8) And when Aseneth heard these words of Joseph, she was cut (to the heart) strongly and<sup>a</sup> was distressed exceedingly and sighed, and she kept gazing at Joseph with her eyes open (9) and her eyes were filled with tears. And Joseph saw her, and had mercy on her exceedingly, and was himself cut (to the heart),<sup>r</sup> because Joseph was meek and merciful and fearing God.<sup>s</sup> • And he lifted up his right hand and put it<sup>t</sup> upon her head and said:<sup>u</sup>
- (10) Lord God of my father Israel,<sup>v</sup> the Most High, the Powerful One of Jacob,<sup>w</sup> who gave life<sup>x</sup> to all (things) and called (them) from the darkness to the light,<sup>y</sup> and from the error to the truth,<sup>z</sup> and from the death to the life;<sup>a2</sup> you, Lord, bless this virgin, and renew her by your spirit,<sup>b2</sup>
- (11) and form her anew by your hidden hand, and make her alive again<sup>c2</sup> by your life,<sup>d2</sup> and let her eat your bread of life, and drink your cup of blessing, and number her among your people that you have chosen<sup>e2</sup> before all (things) came into being, and let her enter your rest which you have prepared for your chosen ones,<sup>f2</sup> and live in your eternal<sup>g2</sup> life for ever (and) ever.

q. The reading "she . . . and": E (FW c Syr. Arm.) L1 (L2 Ngr.); omit a d; gap G.

r. The reading "and . . . heart)": (EF) W (c Syr. Arm.) L1 (L2); uncertain Ngr.; omit a B Slav. Phil; gaps G D.

s. Similarly 27:1. See at 4:7.

t. The reading "and put it": PQ Syr. Arm. L2 (Ngr.?): gap G; omit rest. Similarly 16:13. A gesture of blessing rather than exorcism (against Philonenko, Joseph et Aseneth, p. 157).

u. On Joseph's prayer cf. Smith, Joseph and Aseneth, pp. 107–16; Berger, Kairos 17 (1975) 232–40 (quotes especially ActsPhil 117). The address refers to the creator, which is common enough (12:1f.; 2Kgs 19:15 parallel Isa 37:16; Neh 9:6; Esth 4:17c; 3Mac 2:2–3; PrMan 2f.; 2Bar 21:4f.; 1En 84:2f.; Jub 12:19; Acts 4:24). But the four clauses apply equally well to God's activity in conversion (see Intro.).

v. Cf. Jdt 9:2.

w. The reading "of Jacob": Syr. Arm. 436 Ngr.; "God" ACP c; omit Q EW d L1 435&; illegible F; gaps G Rum. Cf. MT Gen 49:24 (also LXX); Isa 49:26; 60:16; Ps 132:2, 5. See also 11:9, but the text is uncertain.

x. Gk. zōpoiēsas AC FW d Arm. (Ngr.); "gives life to" (zōpoiōn) E L1 L2; "made" (poiēsas) PQ c; uncertain Syr.; gap G. Cf. Neh 9:6; 1Tim 6:13.

y. Cf. Philo, Virt. 179f.; SibOr Fr. 1.25–34; Passover Haggadah, section Leḥi-Khakh; Acts 26:18; 1Pet 2:9; 1Clem 59:2; Meliton of Sardes, Passover Homily, 489–93; Poimandres, 19f. See S. Pines, "From Darkness into Great Light," Immanuel 4 (1974) 47–51; R. Stehly, "Une citation des Upanishads dans Joseph et Aseneth," RTP 55 (1975) 209–13; Anandakumara, Gentile Reactions, p. 45, n. 1.

z. Cf. 1Clem 59:2; AposCon, 7.39.3.

a2. Cf. Lk 15:24, 32; Jn 5:24; 1Jn 3:14; AposCon, 7.39.3. See also 20:7 and n. y above.

b2. Witnesses F c B Syr. Arm. L1 (partly) L2 Phil; "holy s." a EW D L1 (partly) Slav. (Bucharest MS only) Ngr.; gap G. "Spirit" (4:7; 16:14; 19:11) in JosAsen is supernatural vitality and insight, rather than a miraculous power by which exorcisms, glossolalia, or prophetic inspirations are caused (26:6 probably notwithstanding). On renewal by spirit cf. Rom 7:6; 2Cor 3:6; Tit 3:5; AposCon, 8.6.

c2. Also 15:5. Gk. anazōpōiein was known hitherto only as a Christian word, except perhaps in Tab A 18.

d2. The reading "and form . . . life": (FW Syr. Arm. L1 436 435&) Phil; "and make (her) alive again by your hand" c; omit a ("and make alive" added after "bless") Ngr.; gaps EG d ("make alive and" add. before "bless"). FW have "hand at the top (koryphaia, never LXX or NT)" instead of "hidden [probably kryphaia] hand" (cf. Ex 17:16 LXX).

e2. Cf. Ps 33:12; Eph 1:4; O. Hofius, "Erwählt vor Grundlegung der Welt" (Eph 1.4)," ZNW 62 (1971) 123–28.

f2. Cf. Ps 95:11 (LXX rather than MT). The "rest" (katapausis) is not a state of body or mind, but a place in heaven prepared for the saved (15:7; 22:13). JosAsen seems to be the oldest witness to this idea, which is of some importance for understanding Heb 3:7–4:13 (O. Hofius, Katapausis. Die Vorstellung vom endzeitlichen Ruheort im Hebräerbrief [WUNT 11; Tübingen, 1970]). [Cf. D. R. Darnell's Rebellion, Rest, and the Word of God: An Exegetical Study of Hebrews 3:1–4:13, (unpublished dissertation) Duke University, 1973. J.H.C.]

g2. The reading of a; "heavenly": Ngr.; gaps G d Syr.; omit rest. Eternal life is frequently mentioned in ancient Jewish and Christian texts (e.g. 2Mac 7:9; Dan 12:2; PssSol 3:12; 1En 40:9; Mt 25:46; Jn 3:5; Rom 5:21).

Aseneth retires in confusion

9 And Aseneth rejoiced exceedingly with great joy over Joseph's blessing, and hurried and went into the upper floor by herself, and fell on her bed exhausted, because in her there was joy and distress and much fear and trembling<sup>a</sup> and continuous sweating<sup>b</sup> as she heard all these words of Joseph, which he had spoken to her in the name of the Most High God. And she wept with great and bitter weeping and repented<sup>c</sup> her (infatuation with the) gods whom she used to worship, and spurned<sup>d</sup> all the idols, and waited for the evening to come.

Joseph departs after promising to return a week later

And Joseph ate and drank and told his servants, "Harness the horses to the chariots"<sup>e</sup>; for, he said, "I will go away<sup>f</sup> and drive around the whole land." •And Pentephres said to Joseph, "Let my lord lodge here today, and tomorrow you will go out (on) your way." And Joseph said, "No, but I will go out today, because this is the day on which God began to make all his creatures,<sup>g</sup> and on the eighth<sup>h</sup> day, when this day returns,<sup>i</sup> I too will return to you and lodge here."

10 And Joseph went away (on) his way <sup>j</sup>and Pentephres and his whole family went away to their estate.<sup>k</sup>

9 a. The reading "and trembling": FW c Syr. Arm. L1 L2; omit a d; gaps EG Ngr. "Fear and trembling" is a biblicism (e.g. Gen 9:2; Ps 55:6; Jdt 2:28; 4Mac 4:10; 1En 13:3; 2En 22:10; 1Clem 12:5, and below) denoting physical terror, rather than awe or reverence. The reading "in great fear and trembling" of 14:10 (cf. Isa 19:16; 1Cor 2:3) and "with much fear and trembling" of 16:13 (which would be the only ancient exact parallel to 2Cor 7:15; Eph 6:5; Phil 2:12 known to date) are secondary (against Philonenko, Joseph et Aseneth, p. 178, on 14:10, and Burchard, ZNW 61 (1970) 169, on 16:13). Mingled emotions: Mt 28:8; ShepHerm Vision 5.4; Chariton 1.9.3; 3.4.15; 5.8.2; Xenophon of Ephesus 5.13.4; Achilles Tatius 1.4.5; 5.19.1; Apuleius 11.7.1.

b. The reading "was poured around her" (perichythē autēn): added D Bat (in broken parentheses) Br Rie Phil (cf. 4:9); gaps EG Ngr.; omit rest. A new verb for "sweat" is in order after "in her," but this could be the very reason why it was inserted. Anyway, the accusative form autēn (probably a purely graphic variant) cannot be right. Cf. Apuleius 11.7.1.

c. Metanoein apo as e.g. Jer 8:6; Acts 8:22; 1Clem 8:3; same verb in 15:7, substantive metanoia n 16:14, as the name of an angel in 15:7. Repentance does not denote conversion as a whole, but, rather, mankind's part in it, which is a human accomplishment, not a stroke of grace bestowed upon man (in the NT cf. Luke-Acts, esp. Lk 15). n this instance repentance means no more than breaking away from the idols (cf. Rev 9:20f. and perhaps Heb 6:1); turning to God comes later, in vs. 10–13. For repentance to ripen to conversion takes the intercession of Repentance and God's acceptance (15:7). The background of this concept is probably to be found in the passages which make repentance the prerequisite for God's forgiveness (e.g. PrMan 7, 13f.; PssSol 3:8; Sir 17:29; 1En 50:2–4; Jub 41:23–25; Tab B 12:13).

d. The verb prosochthizein is not attested prior to the LXX.

e. Only the twelve men of 3:2 and one chariot have been mentioned before.

f. The reading "for . . . away": (E?) FW (d) Syr. Arm. L1 (L2) Slav.; omit a c; gaps G Ngr.

g. Sunday. Its definition as representing the first day of creation was taken over into Christianity (first in Justin, Apology, 1.67). "Creatures" (ktismata) is neuter, but 12:2 suggests that they are alive, meaning either that they are the live beings such as angels (TJob 47:11; created on the first day according to e.g. Jub 2:2) and men (but they were made on the sixth day), or that all of creation is considered animated. See further n. i.

h. Witnesses a c d (Syr.) L1 L2; "seventh" EFW Arm. (but cf. 11:1); "the restful day, or sabbath" Ngr. (see E below); gap G.

i. The reading "when . . . returns": FW c Arm. L1 436; "when he rested" E; omit a d Syr. 435& Ngr. (but see n. h); gap G. Aseneth repents on a Sunday (see vs. 2), but she must wait a week until God accepts her. This goes to underscore, among other things (see 10:17), the huge distance between her old and new existence. On the symbolism of the eighth day cf. R. Staats, "Ogdoas als ein Symbol für die Auferstehung," VC 26 (1972) 29–52; see 45f.

10 a. Lit. "lot," i.e. a share of land as e.g. in Num 16:14, often in the papyri; see at 3:5. Pentephres and his family seem to stay there until the episode in 20:6.

III. ASENETH'S CONVERSION

A. ASENETH'S REPENTANCE

Aseneth prepares for her repentance in sackcloth and ashes

- (2) And Aseneth<sup>b</sup> was left alone with the seven virgins, and she continued to be weighed down and weep until the sun set. And she ate no bread and drank no water.<sup>c</sup> And the night fell,<sup>d</sup> and all (people) in the house slept, and she alone was awake and continued to brood and<sup>e</sup> to weep; and she often struck her breast with (her) hand and kept being filled with great fear and trembled (with) heavy trembling.
- 2 (3) And Aseneth rose from her bed and quietly went down the stairs from the upper floor (4) and went to the gateway,<sup>f</sup> and the woman gatekeeper<sup>g</sup> was asleep with her children. And Aseneth hurried and took down from the window the skin (which hung there for a) curtain,<sup>h</sup> and filled it with ashes from the fireplace,<sup>i</sup> and carried it up into the upper floor, and put it (5) on the floor. *And she closed the door firmly and slipped the iron bolt across and sighed with great sighing and bitter weeping.

Aseneth's virgins try to look after her

- 4 (6) And the virgin (who was) her foster sister,<sup>j</sup> whom Aseneth loved beyond all the virgins, heard her sighing and hurried and woke up the other six virgins. And they went<sup>k</sup> to Aseneth's (7) door and found the door closed. *And they heard Aseneth's sighing and weeping and said to her,<sup>l</sup> "What have you, mistress, and why do you feel<sup>m</sup> so sad, and what is it that is (8) bothering<sup>n</sup> you? Open (the door to) us, and we will see what you have."<sup>o</sup> *And Aseneth did not open the door, but said to them from within, "My head is (stricken with) heavy pain,<sup>p</sup> and I am resting in my bed, and I do not have the strength<sup>q</sup> to rise and open (the (7) door to) you, because I have grown weak in<sup>r</sup> all my limbs. *But go each of you in your (8) chamber and rest and let me be quiet."<sup>o</sup> *And the virgins went away, each into her chamber.

Aseneth throws her valuables away, idols included, and repents in sackcloth and ashes for seven days

- (9) And Aseneth rose and opened the door quietly and went into her second chamber where the chests (containing) her ornaments were, and opened her coffer and took out a black and

b. On the following reactions cf. esp. Dan 4:33a–34 LXX; Xenophon of Ephesus 1.3.3–4.1.6; Chariton 2.4.3–5; 3.10.3–4.1.1; Apuleius 7.27.2; more at 11:1x,15.

c. Also 10:17 (see there); 13:9; cf. Ex 34:28; 1Sam 30:12; Ezra 10:6.

d. "And . . . fell" (all) except a d; gap Ngr.

e. The reading "to brood and": F(G)W (c) Syr. (Arm.) L1 (436); omit a E; gaps d 435& Ngr.

f. The reading "the gateway" (ton pylōna): a EFW c d L1; "the millhouse" (ton mylōna) Syr. Arm. 436 (435&); gaps G Ngr.

g. The reading "the woman gatekeeper" (hē pylōros): EFW L1. "the woman gatekeeper" (accusative, tēn pylōron) c; "the woman doorkeeper" (accusative tēn thyrōron) a d (a c d have "she found . . . sleeping" for "was asleep"), "the woman miller" Syr. (plural) Arm. 436; gaps G 435& Ngr. Women as gatekeepers, in the author's day, were most likely slaves who lived in a room near the gate or door; cf. e.g. 2Sam 4:6 LXX (followed by Josephus, Ant 7.2.1 §48); TJob 6:5; Jn 18:16f.; Acts 12:3–5; Plautus, Curculio, 1.1.76). Why the children should be mentioned is not clear, unless to indicate that the woman had retired for the night (Lk 11:7) and was not likely to notice Aseneth's doings.

h. Lit. "the skin of the curtain" (tēn derrin tou katapetasmatos); cf. 10:14. Gk. katapetasma is extremely rare outside Jewish and Christian literature, where it designates one of the veils hanging in the Temple, either directly or figuratively (as in Heb).

i. The reading "from the fireplace": (FW) Arm. 436; gaps G Ngr.; omit rest.

j. The reading "her foster sister": b c (Syr. Arm.) L1 436 (435&); omit a d; gap Ngr. Aseneth has a favorite slave just as Callirhoe (Chariton 1.4.1 etc.) and other ancient ladies. The Beloved Disciple (Jn 13:23, etc.) is barely comparable.

k. Witnesses a G d have this verb and the three following ones in the singular, the rest, if present, have it in the plural.

l. The reading "outside standing (singular)": added a; gaps d Syr. Ngr.; omit rest; a may be correct, as it corresponds to "from within" of vs. 6.

m. Lit. "look."

n. Same word as "molest" in 7:2–8.

o. Two questions followed by an imperative: Ps 43:2f., 5; Lk 24:38f.

p. Similarly 18:4; 25:3. So headache as an excuse (or is it?) was known in antiquity; cf. Apuleius 3.13.1.

q. Cf. Lk 11:7.

r. Lit. "of."

- (10) somber tunic.<sup>9</sup> 'And this was her tunic of mourning when her younger brother died. In this 9 Aseneth had dressed and mourned for her brother. •And she took her black tunic and carried it into her chamber and closed the door again firmly and slipped the bolt across.
- 10 (11) And Aseneth hurried and put off her linen and gold woven royal robe and dressed in the black tunic of mourning, and loosened her golden girdle and girded a rope around (her), and put off the tiara from her head, and the diadem and the bracelets from her hands and 11 (12) feet, and put everything on the floor. •And she took her chosen robe and the golden girdle and the headgear and the diadem, and threw everything through the window looking north 12 (13) to the poor." •And Aseneth hurried and took all her gods that were in her chamber, the ones of gold and silver who were without number, and ground them to pieces,<sup>v</sup> and threw all the idols of the Egyptians through the window looking north from her upper floor to 13 (14) beggars and needy (persons). •And Aseneth took her royal dinner<sup>w</sup> and the fatlings<sup>x</sup> and the fish and the flesh of the heifer and all the sacrifices of her gods and the vessels of their wine of libation and threw everything through the window looking north, and gave everything to the strange dogs. For Aseneth said to herself, "By no means must my dogs eat from my dinner and from the sacrifice of the idols, but let the strange dogs eat those."<sup>y</sup>
- 14(15)(16) And after that Aseneth took the skin (full) of ashes and poured it on the floor. 'And she took a piece of sackcloth<sup>z</sup> and girded it around her waist. And she loosened the clasp of 15 the hair of her head<sup>2</sup> and sprinkled ashes upon her head.<sup>b2</sup> •And she scattered the ashes on
 (17) the floor 'and struck her breast<sup>2</sup> often with both hands, and wept bitterly, and fell upon the ashes and wept with great and bitter weeping all night with sighing and screaming<sup>d2</sup> until daybreak.

s. Philonenko (Joseph et Aséneth, p. 163) draws attention to Isis' black cloak (e.g. Apuleius 11.3.7; Griffiths, Isis-Book, 128f.). But Aseneth's tunic is more like the garments worn for repentance or mourning often mentioned in Jewish texts (e.g. Jdt 4:10; 1Mac 2:14; 2Mac 3:19; PssSol 2:21; LAB 30:5; SibOr 5:190), which would of needs be black (Josephus, Life 28 §138). Black was also the color of mourning in the Greek and Roman tradition (e.g. Chariton 3.4.4), but not in the Egyptian tradition.

t. Witnesses b Syr. Arm. L1 ("major" 2 MSS) 436 435&; "second" c; "firstborn" a d; gap Ngr. The brother who is not otherwise known comes up unexpectedly. Philonenko (Joseph et Aséneth, p. 163) refers to Isis' mourning for Osiris, but he is her elder brother. "Repenting, the younger brother of not sinning" (Philo, Somn. 1.91) does not help, either.

u. The reading "to the poor" (tois penēsīn): AP d; gaps Q EW Ngr.; omit rest. The crushed idols are given "to the beggars and needy persons" (ptōchois kai deomenois, vs. 12). The translation assumes that penēs (a man without means who has to work for a living) and ptōchos (beggar) are not synonymous as in other Jewish texts; the idols' remnants are reserved for the lowest social class. This would be a point in favor of the author's mastery of Gk. (Bammel, "ptōchos etc.," TDNT 6, 885–915). On almsgiving as a prerequisite to conversion (cf. Mk 10:21 parallels; Lk 7:5; 19:8; Acts 10:2) see K. Berger, "Almosen für Israel: Zum historischen Kontext der paulinischen Kollekte," NTS 23 (1976–77) 187–204; cf. also 12:15.

v. The reading "and . . . pieces": AP d (Ngr., in 9:2); gaps Q GW Syr.; omit rest. Also 13:11. Cf. Jdg 6:25–32; 2Chr 34:7; Isa 2:20; 30:22; 31:7; ApAb 1–6; Jub 12:1–14; TJob 5:2; 17:4. A Jew must neither deride others' gods (Ex 22:27 LXX; Philo, Spec Leg 1.53; Vit Mos, 2.205; Josephus, Apion 2.33 §237) nor rob their temples (Rom 2:22); but a would-be convert could not leave his personal idolatrous gear undisturbed (cf. Acts 19:18f.).

w. "Royal dinner" (also 13:8) seems to serve as a heading for what follows, like "fruit" in 4:2. "Royal" is an attribute of quality (cf. Apuleius 5.2.4), rather than origin (Dan 1:15). Aseneth is a queen after all (see on 1:8). Her regular dinner is a sacrificial meal "at the god's table" and vice versa (11:9; 12:5; 21:13f.; see 8:5).

x. So Br for ta siitista, cf. Mt 22:4. This rare Gk. word is not attested before Mt and Josephus, Ant 8.2.4 §40. Gk. ta (the) omit Phil.

y. The reading "and gave . . . those": (FbW c Syr. Arm. L1 L2); "and gave everything (panta omit in apparatus Phil) to the dogs as food (or to the north)" B; "to the dogs (as) food" A (D Slav. Phil); "to the dogs" Ngr.; "to the poor" P; gap Q; also cf. 13:8. Aseneth's dogs might be watch dogs (e.g. TJob 9:3; eight hundred for the cattle, two hundred for the palace) or pets (b. Ket 61b; cf. Mk 7:27 parallel) or both. The "strange dogs" would be stray street roamers—a common plague in the ancient Near East (e.g. 1Kgs 14:11; Lk 16:21)—which are often cited proverbially. Both "strange" and "dogs" probably bear antieathen overtones (cf. Mk 7:27 parallel; Mt 7:6; Did 9:5). See generally O. Michel, "kyōn, kynarion," TDNT 3, 1101–04.

z. Lit. "the skin (derris as in 10:2) of the sackcloth." Sackcloth is made of animal hair, not skin. Does derris mean "sheet"?

a2. A gesture of mourning, cf. e.g. Esth 4:17k.

b2. To besprinkle one's own head with ashes, dust, or dirt is a common gesture of mourning, e.g. 2Sam 1:2; Jdt 9:1; 2Mac 10:25; PJ 2:1; TJob 28:2; Josephus, Ant 20.6.1 §123; Rev 18:19; Homer, Iliad, 18.23f.; Chariton 3.10.4; Apuleius 7.27.2. Cf. Acts 22:23.

c2. Cf. Philo, Flacc. 19 §157; Lk 18:13; Chariton 1.14.9; Apuleius 9.31.1.

d2. The reading "and screaming": FW Arm. L1 436; omit a c d; gaps EG Syr. 435& Ngr. Gk. brimēna is very rare; it is found neither in LXX nor in NT.

- 16 (18) And Aseneth rose at daybreak and looked, and behold,<sup>e2</sup> there was much mud from her
 (19) tears<sup>f2</sup> and from the ashes. 'And Aseneth fell again upon her face on the ashes till evening and until the setting (of) the sun.<sup>g2</sup>
- 17 (20) And this way Aseneth did for seven days,<sup>h2</sup> and she ate no bread and drank no water in those seven days of her humiliation.<sup>i2</sup>

Aseneth's first soliloquy on how to take courage to address God

- 1 (1) 11 And<sup>a</sup> on the eighth day, behold, it was dawn and the birds were already singing and the dogs barking at (people who were) passing through, and Aseneth lifted her head (just) a little from the floor and the ashes on which she was lying, because she was exceedingly tired and could not control her limbs because of the want (of food) for the seven days.
- 1x And<sup>b</sup> she rose on her knees and put her hand on the floor and lifted (herself) up a little from the floor, and (she was) still bowing her head, and the hairs of her head were stretched out (in strands) from the load of ashes. And Aseneth clasped her hands, finger against finger, and shook her head to and fro,<sup>c</sup> and struck her breast continuously with her hands, and laid her head into her lap;<sup>d</sup> and her face was flooded with her tears, and she sighed with great sighing,<sup>e</sup> and pulled her hairs from her head,<sup>f</sup> and sprinkled ashes on her head.
- 1y And Aseneth was tired and had become discouraged and her strength had gone.<sup>g</sup> And she 2 turned upward to the wall<sup>h</sup> and sat below the window looking east.<sup>i</sup> • And she laid her head into her lap, clasping her fingers round her right knee, and her mouth was closed, and she 3 (had) not opened it in the seven days and in the seven nights of her humiliation. • And she said in her heart without opening her mouth:<sup>j</sup>

What shall I do, miserable (that I am),<sup>k</sup> or where shall I go;

e2. "And looked, and behold" is traditional, e.g. Dan 4:13 LXX Theod.; Rev 4:1; see also 14:9.

f2. Poetic exaggeration, rather than a prodigy recalling Isis' tears which cause the Nile to rise (Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, p. 165).

g2. The reading "till evening (deilēs) . . . sun": (FW) c Arm. (omit "and") (L1) 436; "until the sun set" a d; "till the set of the sun" 435&; "till the oncoming of the evening" Syr.; "until evening (hesperas)" G; gaps E Ngr.; "setting" is an infinitive in FW c Arm. The "and" is the weakest point of the restored text. Is this an example of double chronology as in Mk 1:32; Poimandres, 29?

h2. 4Ezra (e.g. 5:13) and 2Bar (e.g. 9:2) mention several seven-day periods of fasting and mourning preparatory to prayer or revelation; also cf. LAB 30:4f. These may go back to the seven days of mourning for the dead (Gen 50:10; 1Sam 31:13 parallel 1Chr 10:12; Sir 22:12). Closer parallels are similar periods connected with conversion (seven years Dan 4:33a–b LXX; cf. 4QPrNab 1.3; three days Acts 9:9; ten days' abstinence from wine and meat Apuleius 11.23.3; 11.28.4; 11.30.1, which may reflect the Egyptian ten-day week; cf. Griffiths, Isis-Book, pp. 290, 355f.). The figures all bear a note of completeness. See also 9:5.

i2. The reading "and she . . . humiliation": (b) c Syr. Arm. L1 L2; "not tasting anything at all" AP (Q) d; gap Ngr. "Humiliation" (tapeinōsis) probably does not have the ordinary Gk. meaning of a dilapidated state of body or mind or the Jewish nuance of humility, but of self-castigation, particularly fasting, as e.g. Ezra 9:5; Ps 25:18; Sir 18:21; 1Clem 53:2; 55:6. See W. Grundmann, "tapeinos etc.," TDNT 8, 1–26.

11 a. The reading "it happened": added d 332, omit rest, gaps 436 Ngr. The eighth day (cf. 4Ezra 6:36; Lk 9:28; see 9:5) begins much like the day of Lucius' reformatio (Apuleius 11.7). Daily life in ancient times began at daybreak (21:2; 26:1) or even before (Burchard, "Fussnoten zum neutestamentlichen Griechisch II," ZNW 69 [1978] 143–57, see especially p. 152, n. 52). Jews would then say their morning prayer (compulsory for males only).

b. Vss. 1x–18 all; except omit d. Vs. 1x (GFW c Syr. Arm. L1 435&); omit a; gaps E d 436 Ngr.; details very uncertain. The verse contains a competent assortment of conventional mourning gestures; see also 10:1, 8, 14f.; 11:15.

c. Lit. "thence and thence." Cf. e.g. Apuleius 9.31.1.

d. Cf. e.g. Chariton 1.8.3. For a different purpose cf. 2Kgs 18:42.

e. The text of the last two clauses is very uncertain.

f. Cf. e.g. Chariton 3.10.4; Apuleius 7.27.2.

g. Lit. "she was out of her power."

h. Also cf. vs. 15. Cf. 2Kgs 20:2.

i. For the practice of praying at a window cf. Tob 3:11; Dan 6:11. Jewish prayer ought to be directed toward Jerusalem (Dan 6:11). "East" may denote either that tradition or the direction of the rising sun as a symbol of God or new life (Philo, Vita Cont. 11 §89; Josephus, War 2.8.5 §128), or both.

j. Ch. 11:3–14 has a good parallel in Apuleius 6.5; cf. also Xenophon of Ephesus 1.4.1–4.6f. From the structural angle the parallel is weakened by the presence of the second soliloquy, almost unnoticed hitherto, which gives chs. 11–13 a tripartite rather than bipartite structure (see also 4:3; 14:4). From this point down to ch. 20 Apuleius' book 11 has a number of structural parallels to offer (Burchard, Zeuge, pp. 72–80).

k. The reading "humble (that I am)": a; gaps d 436 Ngr.; omit rest.

with whom shall I take refuge,<sup>1</sup> or what<sup>m</sup> shall I speak.<sup>n</sup>

I the virgin and an orphan and desolate and abandoned and hated?<sup>o</sup>

4 All people have come to hate me, and on top of those<sup>p</sup> my father and my mother, because I, too, have come to hate their gods and have destroyed them, and caused them to be trampled underfoot by men.<sup>q</sup>

5 And therefore my father and my mother and my whole family have come to hate me and said, "Aseneth is not our daughter<sup>r</sup> because she destroyed our<sup>s</sup> gods."

6 And all people hate me,<sup>1</sup> because I, too, have (come to) hate every man, and all who asked for my hand in marriage.
And now, in this humiliation of mine, all have (come to) hate me, and gloat over this affliction of mine.<sup>u</sup>

7 And the Lord the God of the powerful Joseph, the Most High, hates all those who worship idols, because he is a jealous and terrible god<sup>v</sup> toward all those who worship strange gods.

8 Therefore he has come to hate me, too, because I worshiped dead and dumb<sup>w</sup> idols,
and blessed them,

9 and ate<sup>x</sup> from their sacrifice(s), and my mouth is defiled<sup>y</sup> from their table, and I do not have the boldness to call on the Lord God of Heaven, the Most High, the Mighty One of the powerful Joseph,<sup>z</sup> because my mouth is defiled from the sacrifices of the idols.

10 But I have heard<sup>a2</sup> many saying that the God of the Hebrews<sup>b2</sup> is a true God, and a living God,<sup>c2</sup> and a merciful God, and compassionate and long-suffering and pitiful and gentle,<sup>d2</sup> and does not count the sin<sup>e2</sup> of a humble person,<sup>f2</sup> nor expose the lawless deeds of an afflicted person at the time of his affliction.

11 Therefore I will take courage too and turn to him, and take refuge with him,<sup>g2</sup>
and confess all my sins to him,

1. One of the big words in chs. 11–13 and 15:7; 19:5; it is biblical, e.g. Ps 142:6, but cf. also Xenophon of Ephesus 1.4.5.

m. Syr. L1 435&; "with whom" a c; gaps rest. n. Similarly 6:5f.; cf. Xenophon of Ephesus 1.4.7.

o. These are recurring motifs in chs. 11–13. Actually nothing of the sort has happened or will happen. A theme going back to the "complaint," or "lament," psalm genre (e.g. Ps 27:10) and put to appropriate use in texts relating to conversion (cf. also IQH 9.34f.; Philo, Spec Leg. 4.179; Mk 13:12 parallel) has dictated the expressions in this lament. Doubtless life often was like that when a person decided to become a Jew. The counterpoint is that it is expected that God will be a new and better father (see especially 12:8); cf. generally G. Schrenk and G. Quell, "patēr etc.," TDNT 5, 945–1022; J. Jeremias, The Prayers of Jesus (SBT 2.6; London, 1967).

p. The reading "on top of those (people or things)": AP c; omit EG Syr.(?) Arm. L1 435&; gaps Q FW d 436 Ngr.

q. Also 13:11, but not quite in accord with 10:12; cf. Mt 5:13.

r. Cf. Lk 15:19, 21 and 15:24, 32.

s. The reading "she destroyed our": FW (Syr.)

Arm. L1; "she sold our" 435&; "I gave to destruction their" a c; gaps EG d 436 Ngr.

t. Order of clauses varies widely since beginning of vs. 5.

u. Cf. Jn 16:20; Rev 11:10.

v. FW c Syr. Arm. L1; "as I heard" added AP; gaps Q EG d 436 435& Ngr. Cf. Ex 20:5f.; Deut 5:9f.

w. See 8:5.

x. Gk. ephygon FGW Syr. Arm. L1 435&; "fled" (ephygon) AP (-ga Q) c; gaps E d 436 Ngr.

y. (G)FW Arm. L1 435&; "estranged" a c; gaps E d Syr. 436 Ngr.

z. See 8:9 beginning.

a2. Unlike Esther (Additions to Esther 14:5), who "heard" the traditions from her early youth.

b2. TJos 12:3; Josephus, Ant 9.2.1 §20. On "Hebrews" see 1:5.

c2. Cf. e.g. TJob 37:2; 1Thes 1:9.

d2. Cf. e.g. Ex 34:6; Ps 86:15.

e2. Cf. e.g. Ps 32:2; TZeb 9:7; 2Cor 5:19.

f2. The reading "and especially of one who sins in ignorance": added a; gaps G d 436 Ngr; omit rest.

g2. The reading "and . . . him": AP Syr. Arm. L1 435&; omit Q EFW c; gaps rest.

and pour out my supplication before him.<sup>h2</sup>

- 12 Who knows,<sup>i2</sup> (maybe) he will see my humiliation<sup>j2</sup> and have mercy on me.
Perhaps he will see this desolation of mine and have compassion on me, 13 or see my orphanage<sup>k2</sup> and protect me, because<sup>l2</sup> he is the father of the orphans,
and a protector of the persecuted,
and of the afflicted a helper.<sup>m2</sup> 14 I will take courage and cry to him.

Aseneth's second soliloquy on how to take courage to pronounce God's name

- 15 And<sup>n2</sup> Aseneth rose from the wall where she was sitting and turned to the window looking east and straightened up on her knees and spread her hands out toward heaven. And she was afraid to open her mouth and to name the name of God.<sup>o2</sup> And she turned again away to the wall and sat and struck her head<sup>p2</sup> and her breast with (her) hand often, and said in her heart without opening her mouth:
- 16 (What) a wretched (woman) I (am), and an orphan and desolate,
my mouth is defiled from the sacrifices of the idols
and from the blessings<sup>q2</sup> of the gods of the Egyptians.
17 And now, in these tears of mine and the ashes strewn around<sup>r2</sup> and the filth of my humiliation,
how shall I open my mouth to the Most High,
and how name his terrible holy name,
(and be sure) that the Lord will not be angry with me, because in (the midst of) my lawless deeds I have called on his holy name?
18 What shall I now do, wretched (that) I (am)?
I will rather take courage and open my mouth to him and invoke his name.
And if in fury the Lord strikes me
he himself will again heal me;
and if he chastises me with his whips,<sup>s2</sup>
he himself will look again on me in his mercy;
and if he is furious at me in my sins,
he will again be reconciled with me and forgive me every sin.
So I will take courage to open my mouth to him.

Aseneth's confession of sin and prayer for acceptance

- 19 And Aseneth rose again from the wall where she sat and straightened up on her knees<sup>t2</sup>

h2. The reading "and he will have mercy upon my miserableness": added a; omit FW c Syr. (Arm.) L1 435&; gaps rest; also cf. 12.3; cf. Pss 102:1; 142:3.

i2. Lit. "who knows if" (tis oiden ei) (Br). But this would express doubts rather than timid confidence which is what the Gk. means (Rie); cf. e.g. 2Sam 12:22; Esth 4:14; Tob 13:8 BA; LAB 9:6; Epictetus, Diss., 2.20.30; Achilles Tatius 7.6.2; Apuleius 1.15.4; 6.1.2; 6.5.4; 10.26.2. If this applies to 1Cor 7:16 as well, it is an exhortation to carry on in a mixed marriage; Burchard, ZNW 61 (1970) 170f.; if not, it gives permission to let go (S. Kubo, "I Corinthians vii.16: Optimistic or Pessimistic?" NTS 24 [1978] 539-44).

j2. Cf. 1Sam 1:11; Lk 1:48. See 10:17.

k2. Gk. orphania also 13:1. LXX only Isa 47:8.

l2. FWG c Syr. Arm. L1; "as I hear" added a; gaps rest.

m2. Also 12:13; cf. Jdt 9:11.

n2. Vss. 15-18 (G c Syr. Arm. 436 Br; of all these except 436 have the first soliloquy); omit a EFW L1 435& (in some of these the omission may actually be 15b-19, because 15a and 19 are very similar; in 435& elements of the second soliloquy seem to be combined with the first); gaps d Ngr. See further 11:3.

o2. Cf. Lev 24:16; Sir 23:9.

p2. Cf. e.g. Chariton 3.10.3; Apuleius 4.25.1.

q2. Gk. eulogiai means "blessed gifts," rather than "words of blessing."

r2. Or "besprinkled with ashes."

s2. Cf. 1Kgs 12:11, 14 parallel 2Chr 10:11, 14.

t2. As a rule a Jew would pray standing up (e.g. TJob 40:1f.; Lk 18:11, 13); kneeling or prostration indicates intensity (e.g. Dan 6:11; TJob 40:4; Mk 14:35 parallel; Acts 9:40). In either case, he (or she) would look up (e.g. TLevi 2:3; Lk 6:41. 18:13 is by way of exception).

(12:1) 'and spread her hand eastward and looked with her eyes up toward heaven, and opened her mouth to God, and said:

- 1 (2) 12 Lord<sup>a</sup> God of the ages,<sup>b</sup> who created all (things) and gave life (to them), who gave breath of life to your whole creation,<sup>c</sup> who brought the invisible (things) out into the light,<sup>d</sup> 2 who made the (things that) are and the (ones that) have an appearance from the non-appearing and non-being,<sup>e</sup>
 (3) who lifted up<sup>f</sup> the heaven and founded it on<sup>g</sup> a firmament<sup>h</sup> upon the back of the winds,<sup>i</sup> who founded the earth upon the waters,<sup>j</sup> who put big stones on the abyss of the water,<sup>k</sup> and the stones will not be submerged,<sup>l</sup> but they are like oak leaves (floating) on top of the water, and they are living stones and hear your voice, Lord, and keep your commandments<sup>m</sup> which you have commanded to them, and never transgress your ordinances,<sup>n</sup>
 but are doing your will to the end.<sup>o</sup>
 For you, Lord, spoke and they were brought to life,<sup>p</sup> because your word, Lord, is life for all your creatures.<sup>q</sup>
 3 With you I take refuge, Lord,
 (4) and to you I will shout, Lord, to you I will pour out my supplication, to you I will confess my sins,
 and to you I will reveal my lawless deeds.
 4 Spare me, Lord,
 (5) because I have sinned much before you,
 I have committed lawlessness and irreverence,<sup>r</sup>
 and have said wicked and unspeakable (things) before you.

12 a. Witnesses AP Bat Br prefix "Prayer and Confession of Aseneth," B before "and spread" 11:19 (different script). This heading may have originated as a marginal note slipped into the text at various places. Perhaps an ancestor of B was corrected after a MS of the AP type. Content and form of the confession require analysis; cf. Tob 3:2-6, 11-15; Esth 4:17b-h, l-z; PrMan; Dan 3:24-45; LXX 4:34, also Ezra 9:5-15; Neh 9; Dan 9:4-19; IBar 1:15-3:8. On the function of prayer as denoting the turn of a predicament, see the above examples and Jdt 9:2-14; in the romances, cf. Xenophon of Ephesus 1.4.4f.; Apuleius 11.2.
 b. The reading "the ages": EG d Syr. Arm. 436 (cf. 16:16; 21:21; Tob 13:7; 13:11 BA; Sir 36:17; IClem 35:3; 55:6; 61:2); "the just (plural)" A FW c L1 (cf. PrMan 8); "the powers" PQ; "the heavens" 435&; omit Slav., gap Ngr. On some of the following clauses see further 8:9.
 c. Cf. e.g. Gen 2:7; Prov 24:12; Acts 17:25.
 d. Cf. Gen 1:2 LXX.
 e. One of the essentials of Jewish and Christian cosmology, e.g. Gen 1:2 LXX; WisSol 11:25; 2Bar 21:4; 48:8; 2En 24:2; 24:5-26:1; Philo, Spec Leg. 4 §187; Somn 1 §76; Rom 4:17; Heb 11:3; ShepHerm Vision 1.1.6; ShepHerm Mandates 1; AposCon 8.12.7.
 f. Gk. hypsōsas, according to Philonenko (Joseph et Aseneth, pp. 59f.), is typical of Egyptian cosmology and not evidenced in Jewish literature; but cf. Jer 38 (31):35 LXX; Paris Magical Papyrus 1204f. (K. Preisendanz, Papyri Graecae Magicae, vol. 1 [Leipzig-Berlin, 1928] p. 112).

- g. Or "as."
 h. Cf. Gen 1:6 LXX; 1En 18:2; TSol 20:12; AscenIs 7:9; 10:23. See generally G. Bertram, "stereos etc.," TDNT 7, 609-14.
 i. The reading "and . . . winds": (FGW c Syr. Arm. L1 L2); omit A E d; gap Ngr.
 j. Cf. e.g. Pss 24:2; 136:6; 2En 28:1f.; 2Pet 3:5; ShepHerm Vision 1.3.4.
 k. Cf. e.g. 2En 28:1f.; ShepHerm Similitudes 9.3.3; ShepHerm Vision 3.2.4f.; Aptowitz. HUCA 1 (1924) 271f.
 l. The Gk. verb bythizesthai appears in LXX only in 2Mac 12:4.
 m. Cf. e.g. Jdt 16:14; Sir 16:27f.; 1QS 3.16f.
 n. The reading "but they . . . ordinances": (FW Syr. Arm. L1 L2); omit A d; gaps EG c Ngr. See next note.
 o. The reading "but are . . . end": a d; gaps c EG Ngr. 435&; omit rest. Perhaps this is the a d variant of the text cited in previous note, rather than part of the original text. Cf. Rev 2:26; ShepHerm Similitudes 9.27.3.
 p. Creation by God's word is another basic principle of Jewish and Christian theology, e.g. cf. Jdt 16:14; Pss 33:9; 148:5; WisSol 9:1; Isa 48:13; Jn 1:3, 10; Heb 11:3; 2Pet 3:5; ShepHerm Visions 1.3.4; 3.3.5; IgnatiusEph 15:1. Cf. 16:11.
 q. Cf. e.g. Jn 1:4; 12:50; 1Jn 1:1f.; cf. 9:5.
 r. Cf. e.g. 1Kgs 8:47; Ps 106:6; 1Bar 2:12; Dan 3:29; 9:5 (Theodotion); ApMos 32; 1QS 1.24f.

- 5 My mouth is defiled from the sacrifices of the idols
and from the tables of the gods of the Egyptians.
- (6) I have sinned, Lord,
before you I have sinned much in ignorance,
and have worshiped dead and dumb<sup>b</sup> idols.
And now I am not worthy<sup>t</sup> to open my mouth to you, Lord.
- (7) And I, Aseneth, daughter of Pentephres the priest,
the virgin and queen,
who (was) once proud and arrogant,
and prospering in my riches beyond all people, am now an orphan, and desolate, and abandoned by all people.<sup>u</sup>
- 6 With you I take refuge, Lord,
and to you I bring my supplication,
and to you I will shout.
- 7 Rescue me before I am caught by my persecutors.<sup>v</sup>
- 8 For (just) as a little child who is afraid flees to his father,
(8) and the father, stretching out his hands, snatches him off the ground,<sup>w</sup> and puts his arms around him by his breast, and the child clasps his hands around his father's neck,
and regains his breath after<sup>x</sup> his fear,
and rests at his father's breast, the father, however, smiles at<sup>y</sup> the confusion of his childish mind,<sup>t</sup> likewise you too, Lord, stretch out your hands upon me as a child-loving father, and snatch me off the earth.<sup>z2</sup>
- 9 (9) For behold, the wild old<sup>b2</sup> lion<sup>c2</sup> persecutes me, because he is (the) father of the gods of the Egyptians,<sup>d2</sup> and his children are the gods of the idol maniacs.<sup>e2</sup>
And I have come to hate them, because they are the lion's children, and have thrown all of them from me and destroyed them.
- 10 And the lion their father<sup>f2</sup> furiously persecutes me,<sup>g2</sup>

s. See 8:5.

t. Cf. e.g. LAB 42:5; Lk 15:19, 21; Jn 1:27; Acts 13:25.

u. Cf. 12:13; 13:6, 11; Xenophon of Ephesus 5.11.4, also 1.4.1. Tachau ("Einst" und "Jetzt," pp. 55f.) suggests the "now" clause should be understood as signaling a positive condition, in analogy to e.g. Rom 7:5f.; 11:30; 1Cor 6:9-11; Col 1:21; 1Pet 2:25. However, whatever the connection between the two sets of passages in terms of tradition history may be, JosAsen contrasts past glory and present misery, the NT past godlessness and present salvation. Only 13:11 comes close to that.

v. Cf. Pss 7:2f.; 31:15f.; 142:6f.

w. The reading "off the ground": Syr. Arm. L2; small gaps a G c; large gaps rest.

x. The reading "regains . . . after": Syr. (Br); "reassures himself from" Arm.; "gasps (anhelat) from" 435&; "is weak from (asthenei apo)" c (cf. Ps 88:10 LXX); gaps rest. For the Gk. text we may conjecture anapnei apo, although anapnein is attested in LXX only at Job 9:18 and never in the NT.

y. The reading "smiles at": L2; "is glad about" Syr. (Br); "is weary because of (akedia epi)" c; gaps rest. Gk. akedia (in LXX Pss 61:3; 102:1; 143:4; Sir 22:13; 1Bar 3:1; Dan 7:15) has a negative ring, and it is doubtful whether it can be constructed with epi. Gk. meidia has been conjectured for the Gk. text.

z. The reading "and the child . . . childish mind (lit. "childhood")": (c Syr. Arm. L2 Br); omit

AP G; gaps rest.

a2. The reading "off the earth (same word as "ground" above)": c Syr. Arm. L2; "off the lion" G (from vs. 9); "out of the hand of the ("supernatural" added a) enemy" a d; omit L1; gaps EFW Ngr. If this means that Aseneth would rather die, cf. e.g. Tob 3:6; Apuleius 11.2.7 and many other passages in the novels.

b2. Cf. e.g. Rev 12:9; 20:2, also Jn 8:44; 1Jn 3:8.

c2. In the OT "lion" is a metaphor for a persecutor; in later times it also signifies the devil (cf. e.g. Pss 7:3; 22:14; Esth 4:17s; ApEl 19:5; 1Pet 5:8). That the devil will attempt to avenge himself upon those who escaped his dominion makes the plot of TJob, and apparently there was a paraenetic tradition warning new converts against his machinations (cf. also Mk 4:15 parallel).

d2. Cf. Firmicus Maternus, De errore profanarum religionum, 13:4; etc.

e2. The reading "of the idol maniacs": AP; "of the Egyptians" d; "of the heathen" Arm.; "whom I worshipped" G; "and the judges (? , i sudcii, corrupt for "Egyptians"?) Slav.; gaps rest. "Idol maniac (eidolomanēs)" is first attested in Athenagoras, Leg., 21:1 (A.D. 177), which makes it a bit doubtful here. Unlike Jn 8:44, men are not identified as devil's children.

f2. FG c Arm. 436; "the devil" added a d; gaps rest.

g2. The reading "persecutes me": FG c Syr. Arm. 436; "tries to swallow me" AP (Q) d; gaps EW L1 435& Ngr.

- 11 (10) but you, Lord, rescue me from his hands, and from his mouth deliver me,<sup>h2</sup> lest he carry me off like a lion,<sup>i2</sup> and tear me up and throw me into the flame of the fire, and the fire will throw me into the hurricane,<sup>j2</sup> and the hurricane (will) wrap me up in darkness and throw me out into the deep of the sea, and the big sea monster who (exists) since eternity will swallow me,<sup>k2</sup> and I will be destroyed for ever (and) ever.<sup>l2</sup>
- 12 (11) Rescue me, Lord,
before all this comes upon me.
Rescue me, Lord,
the desolate and solitary,<sup>m2</sup> because my father and my mother disowned me and said,
"Aseneth is not our daughter," because I have destroyed and ground (to pieces) their gods, and have come to hate them.
- 13 And I am now an orphan and desolate, and I have no other hope save in you, Lord, and no other refuge except<sup>n2</sup> your mercy, Lord, because you are the father of the orphans,
and a protector of the persecuted
and a helper of the afflicted.
- 14 Have mercy upon me, Lord, and guard me, a virgin (who is) abandoned and an orphan, because you, Lord, are a sweet and good and gentle father.
- 15 What father is as sweet as you, Lord, and who (is) as quick in mercy as you, Lord, and who (is as) long-suffering toward our sins as you, Lord?
- (12) For behold, all the gifts<sup>o2</sup> of my father Pentephres, which he gave me as an inheritance,<sup>p2</sup> are transient<sup>q2</sup> and obscure;
but the gifts<sup>r2</sup> of your inheritance, Lord, are incorruptible and eternal.<sup>s2</sup>
- 1 13 Be mindful, Lord, of my humiliation and have mercy upon me.
- (1) Look at my orphanage and have compassion on the afflicted.
For behold, I fled from everything and took refuge in you, Lord, the only friend to men.
- 2 Behold, I left behind all the good (things) of the earth and took refuge in you, Lord,

h2. Cf. Ps 22:22; 2Tim 4:17.

i2. The reading "like a lion": F L2; "like a wolf" d; omit Syr. Arm. L1; gaps rest. Also cf. vs. 9.

j2. Cf. Ps 11:6. Or "gush, big wave"; cf. Ps 69:16?

k2. Is Aseneth afraid to be tossed across the four elements? Anyway, unlike e.g. Rev 19:20, fire is not the end.

l2. Cf. Jn 10:28.

m2. The reading "defenseless": Br and Rie, which is possible for aperistatos.

n2. Cf. e.g. Ps 91:9; Jdt 9:14; Add. to Esth 4:17 l, t.

o2. The reading "gifts (domata conjectured)": (G) Syr. 436 Rie; "funds (chrēmata)" B Phil; "houses (dōmata)" a F c D Bat (followed by G. Fischer, Wohnungen, p. 188) Br; "bands (uzy, Gk. demata or desmata)" Slav.; omit Arm. 435&; gaps EW L1 Ngr. See below, n. r2.

p2. See at 2:1; 3:5.

q2. Gk. proskairos is first attested in Dionysius of Halicarnassus. Cf. 2Cor 4:18, also Mt 6:19–21 parallel; 1Pet 1:4; Jas 1:17.

r2. The reading "gifts": (G Syr. Arm. 436 Slav.) Rie; "houses" AP d Bat Br; illegible F; omit Q c; gaps EW L1 435& Ngr. See above, n. o2.

s2. Cf. e.g. 4Ezra 13:54–56; TJob 4:4–11; 18:5–8; Mk 10:17–31 parallel; Heb 10:34. Conversion often meant leaving one's property or occupation behind, either as a prerequisite or as a practical consequence, and the values to be gained by the new existence were held out in comfort. Cf. K. Berger, Die Gesetzesauslegung Jesu: Ihr historischer Hintergrund im Judentum und im Alten Testament (Wissenschaftliche Monographien zum Alten und Neuen Testament 40; Neukirchen-Vluyn, 1972) vol. 1, pp. 422–32; see also 10:11.

- in this sackcloth and ashes,<sup>a</sup> naked and an orphan and left all alone.<sup>b</sup>
- 3 (2) Behold, I put off my linen royal robe, interwoven with violet and gold,<sup>c</sup> and dressed in a black mourning tunic.
- 4 (3) Behold, I loosened my golden girdle and threw it off me and girded a rope and sackcloth around myself.
- 5 (4) Behold, my tiara and my diadem I threw off my head, and have sprinkled ashes (upon it).
- 6 (5) Behold, the floor of my chamber, paved with colored and purple stones, which once used to be besprinkled with perfumes and wiped with bright linen cloths, is now besprinkled with my tears and was profaned having been powdered with ashes.
- 7 (6) Behold, my Lord, from my tears and the ashes much mud has been formed in my chamber, as on a broad street.<sup>d</sup>
- 8 (7) Behold, Lord, my royal dinner<sup>e</sup> and the cereals
 I gave to the strange<sup>f</sup> dogs.
- 9 (8) And behold, seven days and seven nights I was fasting and ate no bread and drank no water, and my mouth has become dry as a drum,
 and my tongue as a horn,
 and my lips as a potsherd,<sup>g</sup> and my face has fallen,<sup>h</sup> and my eyes are burning in shame<sup>i</sup> from my many tears, and my entire strength has left (me).<sup>j</sup>
- 11 Behold now, all the gods whom I once used to worship in ignorance:
 I have now recognized<sup>k</sup> that they were dumb and dead<sup>l</sup> idols, and I have caused them to be trampled underfoot by men, and the thieves snatched<sup>m</sup> those that were of silver and gold.<sup>n</sup>
- 12 And with you I have taken refuge, O Lord my God.
 Yet you, rescue me from my many deeds of ignorance<sup>o</sup> and pardon me,
- 13 because I have sinned against you in ignorance,
 being a virgin,
 and have fallen in error unwittingly,<sup>p</sup>
 and spoken blasphemous (words) against my lord Joseph,
- (10) because I did not know, the miserable (one that I am),
 that he is your son,
 as people told me that Joseph is the shepherd's son from the land of Canaan.

13 a. A Jewish pair not attested in profane Gk. "In sackcloth and ashes" is on record only at TJos 15:2; Mt 11:21 parallel Lk 10:13.

b. Cf. 1Tim 5:5; 4Mac 16:10.

c. See 2:8.

d. Cf. Micah 7:10; Zech 9:3. "Broad street" means highway (also 24:20). "Mud of the street" is a common phrase, often employed proverbially, e.g. Ps 18:43 = 2Sam 22:43; IQSb 5.27.

e. See 10:13.

f. F c D Syr. Arm. 436 Slav.; omit a B Phil; gaps rest.

g. Cf. Ps 22:16.

h. Also 18:3, 4, 7. Cf. Gen 4:5f.; 1Sam 1:18; Jdt 6:9; TJos 7:2.

i. Lit. "became (or, were) in shame of inflammation." This clause is very uncertain, but words to this effect were there. "In shame (en aischynē)" is strange in this context; a word expressing physical, rather than mental, discomfort would be more to the point.

j. The reading "and . . . (me)": (F Syr. Arm.

L2); omit a c; gaps rest. Vs. 10 is as follows: "But you, my Lord (God added A), rescue me from the many deeds of ignorance of mine, and pardon me because I, being a virgin and unwitting, have fallen into error" (transposed here from vss. 12b and 13a) AP (Q); omit c Syr. Arm. L2; vss. 10f. omit G; 10-12 omit d; 10-12a omit F; gaps EW L1 Slav. Ngr.

k. Cf. TJob 40:4; Jn 16:30; 17:7; Acts 12:11; 20:25.

l. See 8:5.

m. Not consonant with 10:12; 11:4, but with a point made in polemics against idols (e.g. LetJer 56f.; Aristides, Apology, 3:2).

n. This clause is in AP c Syr. Arm. L1 436; "and have removed them from my face" added Syr. (Arm.); also L2 after "men" ("and . . . gold" omit 435&); gaps rest. It could be part of the text, but the position is awkward.

o. Cf. Ps 39:9.

p. See 13:9.

And I, the miserable one, have come to believe them and fall into error.

And I have despised him
and spoken wicked (words) about him,
and did not know that he is your son.

14 (11) For who among men will give birth to such beauty and such great wisdom and virtue and power, as (owned by) the all-beautiful Joseph?

15 Lord, I commit him to you,<sup>q</sup> because I love him beyond my (own) soul.<sup>r</sup>

(12) Preserve him in the wisdom of your grace.
And you, Lord, commit me to him for a maidservant and slave.
And I will make his bed and wash his feet and wait on him and be a slave for him and serve him for ever (and) ever.<sup>s</sup>

B. ASENETH'S ACCEPTANCE

A man descends from heaven, introduces himself as chief of the angels, and orders Aseneth to dress again

1 (1) 14 And<sup>a</sup> when Aseneth had ceased making confession to the Lord, behold, the morning
(2) star rose out of heaven in the east. And Aseneth saw it and rejoiced and said, "'So the Lord God listened to my prayer, because this star rose as a messenger<sup>b</sup> and herald of the 2 (3) light of the great day.'<sup>c</sup> • And Aseneth kept looking,<sup>d</sup> and behold, close to the morning
3 (4) star, the heaven was torn apart<sup>e</sup> and great and unutterable light appeared.<sup>f</sup> • And Aseneth saw (it) and fell on (her) face on the ashes.<sup>g</sup> And a man<sup>h</sup> came to her from heaven and 4.5 (5) stood by Aseneth's head. • And he called her and said, "Aseneth, Aseneth."<sup>i</sup> • And she said, "Who is he that calls me, because the door of my chamber is closed, and the tower 6 (6) is high, and how then did he come into my chamber?" • And the man called her a second

q. Cf. e.g. Acts 14:23; 20:32; 1Pet 4:19.

r. Cf. Apuleius 5.6.6.

s. Cf. 6:8.

14 a. "And . . . saw": Gk. text with full apparatus in C. Burchard, "Zum Text von 'Joseph und Aseneth,'" JSJ 1 (1970) 3–34, see 30–34. On the form of 14:1–9 cf. Acts 9:1–8 and below vs. 6. In function the heavenly man's visit (chs. 14–17) is not parallel to Jesus' appearance according to Acts 9:3–8 (see above 6:1), but to Saul's vision referred to in Acts 9:12 and the angel's visit to Cornelius in Acts 10:3–7; cf. also Apuleius 11.5.1–6.6.

b. Gk. aggelos, which may also mean "angel," but "messenger" seems to go better with "herald." Besides, the star is not identical with the man (vs. 3). On the morning star as a symbol of new light, life, and renovation, cf. 2Pet 1:11; Rev 2:28; R. Staats, "Die Sonntagnachtgottesdienste der christlichen Frühzeit," ZNW 66 (1975) 242–63, see esp. pp. 255f.

c. The first day of creation which will be the day of reformation (cf. 2Cor 4:6) or just the day of salvation (OdesSol 41:4; cf. dies salutaris Apuleius 11.5.4). The Day of Atonement can also be called "The Great Day" (Isa 1:13 LXX; Aristides, Apology, 14:4), but it is on vii-10, not iv-25.

d. "And . . . looking" (b c Arm. L1 L2 Ngr.); omit a d; destroyed Syr.; gap Slav.

e. Cf. e.g. Mk 1:10; ShepHerm Vision 1.1.4. On the motif generally, see F. Lentzen-Deis, Die Taufe Jesu nach den Synoptikern: Literarkri- tische und gattungsgeschichtliche Untersuchungen (Frankfurter Theologische Studien 4; Frankfurt am Main, 1970) pp. 99–127.

f. "Light" is a must for heavenly appearances. It emanates from them (as e.g. vs. 9) or directly from heaven (as here). The sky is torn apart and the supernatural light which fills the upper world leaks out (cf. also Acts 9:3 parallel). So the Gk. should not be translated "a light" (Rie, Phil).

g. Also vs. 10. The proper reaction; cf. e.g. Dan 8:17f.; ApAb 10:2; TJob 3:4; Acts 9:4 parallel.

h. The reading "a man" (anthrōpos): a FG L1 436 Phil; "(one) similar to a man" c (Arm.); "a man of light" B; "the man of God" D; "an angel" W; "the angel of the Lord" (435& Ngr.); "a bright angel" Slav.; "a voice" E; destroyed Syr. Similar variants occur at each mention of the man below, with "angel" or the like dominating in a E L1 435& Ngr. (Burchard, Untersuchungen, p. 21). Doubtless the "man" was promoted to "angel," rather than vice versa, as 19:5, 9 confirm, where "man" is attested by virtually all witnesses.

i. Also vs. 6. Double address is frequent in Jewish and early Christian literature, e.g. Gen 46:2; TJob 3:1; 24:1; 25:9; Lk 10:41; Acts 9:4; Berger, Auferstehung, p. 436, n. 31. The angel addresses Aseneth twice before beginning to deliver his message. The idea that a heavenly being has to call three times before it can be believed may be back of this (cf. e.g. LAB 53:4; Jn 21:15–18; Acts 10:10–16; Berger, Auferstehung, pp. 158f.; 451–54, nn. 85–93). See also 4:3; 11:3; Mk 14:32–42 parallel.

- 7 time and said, "Aseneth, Aseneth."<sup>j</sup> •And she said, "Behold, (here) I (am), Lord. Who 8 (7) are you, tell me." •And the man said, "I am the chief of the house of the Lord and commander of the whole host of the Most High.<sup>k</sup> Rise and stand on your feet,<sup>l</sup> and I will tell you what I have to say."<sup>m</sup>
- 9 (8) And Aseneth raised her head<sup>n</sup> and saw, and behold,<sup>o</sup> (there was) a man in every respect
 (9) similar to Joseph,<sup>p</sup> by the robe and the crown and the royal staff, 'except<sup>q</sup> that his face was like lightning, and his eyes like sunshine, and the hairs of his head like a flame of fire of a burning torch,<sup>r</sup> and hands and feet like iron shining forth from a fire, and sparks shot 10 (10) forth from his hands and feet. •And Aseneth saw (it) and fell on her face at his feet on the 11 (11) ground. And Aseneth was filled with great fear, and all of her limbs trembled. •And the man said to her, "Courage, and do not be afraid,<sup>s</sup> but rise and stand on your feet, and I 12 (12) will tell you what I have to say." •And Aseneth rose and stood on her feet. And the man said to her, "Proceed unhindered into your second chamber and put off your black tunic of mourning, and the sackcloth put off your waist, and shake off those ashes from your head, (13) and wash your face and your hands with living water, 'and dress in a new linen robe (as yet) untouched' and distinguished and gird your waist (with) the new twin girdle of your 13 (14) virginity. •And come (back) to me, and I will tell you what I have to say."<sup>t</sup>
- 14 (15) And Aseneth hurried and went into her second chamber where the chests (containing) her ornaments were, and opened her coffer, and took a new linen robe, distinguished (and (16) as yet) untouched, and undressed the black tunic of mourning and put off the sackcloth from her waist, and dressed in her distinguished (and as yet) untouched linen robe, and girded herself with the twin girdle of her virginity, one girdle around her waist, and another 15 (17) girdle upon her breast.<sup>u</sup> •And she shook off the ashes from her head, and washed her hands and her face with living water. And she took an (as yet) untouched and distinguished linen veil and covered her head.

The heavenly man announces Aseneth's acceptance with God and her marriage to Joseph

- 1 (1) 15 And she went to the man into her first chamber and stood before him. And the man said to her, "Remove the veil from your head, and for what purpose did you do this?" For

j. Vss. 6–8 represent a traditional form to start a dialogue, cf. e.g. Gen 27:18f.; 31:11–13; 46:2f.; Jub 44:5; ApAb 8:2–5; 9:1–5; Poimandres, 1f.; Acts 9:4f.; also in shorter form, e.g. TJob 3:1f.; Acts 9:10f.; 10:3–5; cf. above 4:3–6. See G. Lohfink, Paulus vor Damaskus (Stuttgarter Bibelstudien 4; Stuttgart, 1965); Burchard, Zeuge, pp. 88f.; Berger, Auferstehung, pp. 154–59; 436–54, nn. 33–93.

k. Also 21:21. There are many variants; cf. also Eth. (see Intro.). Witnesses a D Slav. Ngr. Phil (gap B) have "commander-in-chief (archistratēgos)" someplace in this verse and later on (cf. Josh 5:14). This is the conventional title of Michael (Philonenko, Joseph et Aseneth, p. 178); and he is meant certainly. The angels' hosts (cf. e.g. Lk 2:13) are traditionally thought of as being organized like a monarch's court (in the NT "house of God" has become an epithet of the Church, e.g. 1Tim 3:15) or an army (see 25:6) with Michael at its head.

l. Also vs. 11. Cf. e.g. Josh 5:14; Acts 26:16. m. Also vs. 11. Cf. e.g. Ezek 2:1; 4Ezra 7:2; Acts 9:6; 22:10.

n. Aseneth starts to obey the angel's order but finds at once that she cannot do it.

o. "Raise, see, and behold" e.g. Gen 37:25; 2Sam 13:34; cf. further 10:16.

p. Michael holds the post in heaven which Joseph holds in Egypt: second only to the supreme ruler. But he is not Joseph, nor does he appear in his guise. Visionary appearances of historical persons (such as Josephus, Ant 11.8.5 §334) which have been interpreted as being angels appearing in the form of such persons (Aptowitzter, HUCA 1 [1924] 278f.; cf. also Acts 9:12) are no parallels to the thought here.

q. The details of the angel's description are traditional, cf. e.g. Dan 10:6; ApAb 17:12; ApZeph 9:3f.; Mt 28:3; Rev 1:13–16; 10:1.

r. Gk. hypolampados kaiomenēs A; "from a burning torch (hypo l.k.)" P c; omit G d Arm. L1 L2; destroyed Syr.; gaps Q EFW Ngr. Gk. hypolampas is rare, and the meaning "torch" is uncertain; but it is apparently required in Acts 20:8 D. The report in Bauer-Arndt-Gingrich (Greek-English Lexicon [Chicago, 1957]) is garbled.

s. Also 23:16; 28:7. This is a traditional exhortation, e.g. 4Ezra 6:33, LAB 6:9; 20:5; Mk 6:50 parallel.

t. Or "not to be touched, pure," as in vss. 14, 15.

u. Unusual. The two girdles seem to be a special mark of virginity; according to 3:6 and 18:6 Aseneth wears only one, presumably around her waist. Girdles around (or above?) the breast are mentioned in ApZeph 9:4; Rev 1:13; 15:6 (BJ has "waist" in both instances), but they seem to be in lieu of the ordinary ones. Job's daughters are given multicolored girdles to gird their breasts (TJob 46:9), and these seem to be additional, but they convey protection against the devil, eternal life, and miraculous creativity in poetry and music (TJob 46–50), and have nothing to do with virginity.

15 a. The reading "and . . . this": FW c (Arm.)

2 (2) you are a chaste virgin today, and your head is like that of a young man."<sup>b</sup> •And Aseneth removed the veil from her head.

And<sup>c</sup> the man said to her, "Courage, Aseneth, chaste virgin. Behold, I have heard<sup>d</sup> all the words of your confession and your prayer. •Behold, I have also seen<sup>e</sup> the humiliation and the affliction of the seven days of your want (of food). Behold, from your tears and these ashes, plenty of mud has formed before your face. •Courage, Aseneth, chaste virgin. For behold, your name was written<sup>f</sup> in the book of the living<sup>g</sup> in heaven; in the beginning of the book, as the very first of all, your name was written by my finger,<sup>h</sup> and it will not be erased forever. •Behold, from today, you will be renewed and formed anew and made alive again,<sup>i</sup> and you will eat blessed bread of life, and drink a blessed cup of immortality, and anoint yourself with blessed ointment of incorruptibility. •Courage, Aseneth, chaste virgin. Behold, I have given<sup>j</sup> you today to Joseph for a bride, and he himself will be your bridegroom for ever (and) ever.

7 (6) "And<sup>k</sup> your name shall no longer be called Aseneth, but your name shall be City of Refuge,<sup>l</sup> because in you many nations will take refuge with the Lord God, the Most High, and under your wings many peoples trusting in the Lord God<sup>m</sup> will be sheltered,<sup>n</sup> and behind your walls<sup>o</sup> will be guarded those who attach themselves to the Most High God<sup>p</sup> in the name

L1 L2; omit a E d; destroyed Syr.; gaps G Ngr.

b. Aseneth is not declared androgynous (against Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, p. 181); her head is compared to, not identified with, a young man's. This may signify that virginity gives a certain equality to the sexes (see 7:7), or that in Judaism both sexes are alike before God. It probably does not mean that JosAsen suggests Jewish virgins should go unveiled (as perhaps some Corinthians did, cf. 1Cor 11:2–16 and the commentaries thereon), because in 18:6 Aseneth puts on a veil again, albeit "like a bride."

c. On vss. 2–10 cf. Apuleius 11.5.1–6.6. There is no analogy to Aseneth's role as City of Refuge, but Lucius will become a model to the "unreligious" (11.15.4).

d. First person: GFW c Arm. L2; third ("the Lord" or the like): a d L1; destroyed Syr.; gaps E Ngr. Similarly, vs. 3 "I have seen" (GFW c Arm. L2 versus AP L1 E; destroyed Syr.; gaps Q d Ngr.); vs. 4 "was written," first instance (a G d Arm. L1 Ngr. versus W c L2, perhaps E, illegible F; destroyed Syr.); "was written," second instance (W[?] c Arm. versus L2, illegible F; destroyed Syr.; gaps rest); vs. 6 "I have given" (b c Arm. L1 L2 versus a d Ngr.; destroyed Syr.). In the retrospective 19:5 "I have given" has no variant in the positive text (illegible F; gap d). On the strength of this the first person was adopted into the text (against Burchard, Untersuchungen, p. 47) except in 15:4, where there is little support for it.

e. See 15:2.

f. See 15:2.

g. The reading "of the living (plu.)": EGW c Arm. L1 436; "of life" a d 435& Ngr.; illegible F; destroyed Syr. This book (also vs. 12x; usually "of life") is a sort of heavenly citizens' register, a common Jewish and Christian idea with roots way back in the ancient Near East; cf. e.g. Ex 32:32f.; Ps 87:6; Jub 30:22; IQM 12.1f.; Lk 10:20; Rev 20:12, 15. See L. Koep, Das himmlische Buch in Antike und Christentum (Theophaneia 8; Bonn, 1952).

h. "For . . . finger": Gk. with full apparatus in Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 54f.; "in the beginning . . . finger" (FW c Arm. L2); omit E Ngr.; destroyed Syr.; gaps a G d L1.

i. The reading "renewed (see 8:9) . . . again" AP (436) Phil; "renewed and formed anew" c;

"renewed and made alive again (omit D W? Ngr.)" FW d Arm. (L1) Ngr.; "renewed" EG; destroyed Syr.; gaps Q 435&. Cf. Gen 2:7. The two last verbs of the triad may be interpreting the first as in 1Cor 2:3; 4:9; Eph 2:5; 3:6 (Burchard, ZNW 61 [1970], 169).

j. See 15:2.

k. Vss. 7–8: Gk. with full apparatus in Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 55–67. This is one of the most badly damaged passages of the book, especially in the second half of vs. 7. Vs. 7a is taken up in the Passion of St. Irene (Burchard, Untersuchungen, p. 135) in a form apparently close to b.

l. Proselytes often took new names, but there is more to the phenomenon here. Aseneth does not choose a name, she is given one from above like others in biblical tradition, in particular those who have a significance for God's people as a whole (e.g. Gen 17:5, 15; 32:29; 41:45; Isa 62:4f.; 1Bar 5:4; Zech 8:3; Mk 3:16 parallel; Mt 16:18; Berger, Auferstehung, pp. 198; 562–65, nn. 394–405). That she is called a "City" is necessitated by the concept underlying 15:7 (see Intro.). "City of Refuge (polis kataphygēs)" may have been suggested by Zech 2:15 LXX (cf. Isa 54:15; Jer 27 [50]:5) as taken up in the following clause. Perhaps a pun was intended; polis sounds much like pollois, the dative plural of polloi "many" (the Vorlage of L1 actually may have read pollois kataphygēs). Possibly there is also a reminiscence of Num 35:27f. (the only parallels in LXX and the other Gk. versions of the OT). Attempts to explain "City of Refuge" on the basis of a pun in Heb. or Aram. have failed because there is no word resembling 'As<sup>en</sup>at which could mean "refuge"; but the author may have been familiar with an etymology of the name as meaning "ruin" (cf. Heb. 'āsōn "calamity") which was known to Jerome and others (Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 92–95).

m. The reading "trusting . . . God": (E) Arm. (L1 436); omit a G d 435&; destroyed Syr.; gaps FW c Slav. Ngr.

n. Cf. e.g. Ps 17:8; 61:5; 63:8.

o. Lit. "in your wall." Gk. teichos may also mean "fortress."

p. Gk. hoi proskeimenoî tô Theō is a standing epithet of the proselytes; cf. e.g. Isa 56:6.

- (7) of Repentance. For Repentance<sup>q</sup> is in the heavens, an exceedingly beautiful and good daughter of the Most High. And she herself entreats<sup>r</sup> the Most High God for you at all times<sup>s</sup> and for all who repent in the name of the Most High God, because he is (the) father of Repentance. And she herself is guardian of all virgins,<sup>t</sup> and loves you very much, and is beseeching the Most High for you at all times<sup>s</sup> and for all who repent she prepared a place of rest in the heavens.<sup>u</sup> And she will renew all who repent, and wait on them herself
- 8 (8) for ever (and) ever. •And Repentance is exceedingly beautiful, a virgin pure and laughing<sup>v</sup> always, and she is gentle and meek. And, therefore, the Most High Father loves her,<sup>w</sup> and all the angels stand in awe of her. And I, too, love her exceedingly, because she is also my sister.<sup>x</sup> And because she loves you virgins, I love you, too.
- 9 (9) “And behold, I am going away to Joseph and will tell him about you everything I have to say. And Joseph will come to you today, and see you, and rejoice over you, and love you, and he will be your bridegroom, and you will be a bride for him for ever (and) ever.
- 10 (10) And now listen to me, Aseneth, chaste virgin, and dress in your wedding robe, the ancient and first<sup>y</sup> robe which is laid up in your chamber since eternity, and put around you all your
- (11) wedding ornaments, and adorn yourself as a good bride, and go meet Joseph. For behold, he himself is coming to you today, and he will see you and rejoice.”

Aseneth tries to ascertain the heavenly man's name

- 11 (12) And when the man had finished speaking these words,<sup>z</sup> Aseneth rejoiced exceedingly with great joy about all these words and fell down at his feet and prostrated himself face
- 12 (13) down to the ground before him, and said to him, •“Blessed be the Lord your God the Most High who sent you out to rescue me from the darkness and to bring me up from the
- 12x foundations of the abyss,<sup>a2</sup> and blessed be your name forever.<sup>b2</sup> •What<sup>c2</sup> is your name, Lord; tell me in order that I may praise and glorify you for ever (and) ever.”<sup>d2</sup> And the man said to her, “Why do you seek this, my name, Aseneth? My name is in the heavens in the book of the Most High, written by the finger of God in the beginning of the book before all (the others), because I am chief of the house of the Most High. And all names written in the book of the Most High are unspeakable, and man is not allowed to pronounce nor hear them in this world, because those names are exceedingly great and wonderful and laudable.”

Aseneth invites the heavenly man to take food. The mysterious honeycomb which is bread of life

- 13 And Aseneth said, “If I have found favor in your sight,<sup>e2</sup> Lord, and will know that you will do all your words that you have spoken to me, let your maidservant speak before you.”

q. Angels representing, or presiding over, human virtues are well known in Judaism. 1En 40:9 calls the angel of repentance Phanuel; he is anonymous in ShepHerm Vision 5.8; Clement of Alexandria, Quis dives salv., 42:18; metanoia (see 9:2) is personified also in TGad 5:7f. In the romances, cf. Achilles Tatius 6.10.4; Apuleius 6.8.3; 6.9.2; 6.24.4.

r. Angels (Aptowitz, HUCA 1 [1924] 292) and the patriarchs (e.g. Philo, Praem. 166) were regarded as intercessors. In Heb. Christ, the heavenly highpriest, fulfills this office.

s. Lit. “every hour.” Or does this mean “at every regular hour (of prayer)”?

t. I.e. all nations (Aptowitz, HUCA 1 [1924] 293f.), or all individuals who are prepared for conversion through virginity (see 7:7).

u. Cf. Jn 14:2f.; G. Fischer, Wohnungen. On “rest” see 8:9 and Intro. Witness d (gap Slav.) has a “heavenly bridal chamber” instead, which may be gnostic (GPhil; cf. Philonenko, Joseph et Aseneth, p. 184).

v. Cf. Lk 15:7, 10.

w. As he loves Wisdom (WisSol 8:3). Cf. Jn 10:17.

x. Repentance and Michael seem to form a team.

She is his assistant in charge of everything preparatory to a proselyte's acceptance, which is then ratified by him.

y. The reading “and first”: AP c (d) L2; omit EFW; destroyed Syr.; gaps Q G Arm. L1 Slav. Ngr. Also cf. 18:5; Lk 15:22; Burchard, ZNW 61 (1970) 160.

z. Cf. e.g. Mt 7:28.

a2. The reading “into the light”: added AP d; omit FGW c Arm. L1 L2 Ngr.; destroyed Syr.; gaps Q E Slav. Perhaps this should be adopted into the text. On vs. 12 cf. further Melito of Sardis, Passover Homily, 68; Vita Aesopi G. 5. On “darkness” cf. Ps 107:14; Isa 42:7; Col 1:13, on “abyss” cf. above 12:11.

b2. Also 19:8; cf. Ps 72:19.

c2. “What . . . said” (b c Arm. L1 L2 Ngr. Br); omit a d; destroyed Syr.; gap Slav. Gk. with full apparatus in Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 68–73. On Aseneth's demand cf. e.g. Gen 32:30; Judg 13:6, 16f.; LAB 42:10; TLevi 5:5f.; Berger, Auferstehung, pp. 156, 443f., nn. 56–60.

d2. Same motivation in Judg 13:17; TLevi 5:5; Berger, Auferstehung, p. 444, n. 59.

e2. Traditional phrase, e.g. Gen 47:29; Esth 5:8; 7:3; 8:5.

14 And the man said to her, "Speak (up)." And Aseneth stretched out her right hand and put (14) it on his knees<sup>f2</sup> and said to him, "I beg you, Lord, sit down a little on this bed, because this bed is pure and undefiled, and a man or woman never sat on it. And I will set a table before you, and bring you bread and you will eat, and bring you from my storeroom old and good wine, the exhalation of which<sup>e2</sup> will go up till heaven, and you will drink from 15 it. And after this you will go out (on) your way." •And the man said to her, "Hurry and bring (it) quickly."

1 (1) 16 And Aseneth hurried and set a new<sup>a</sup> table before him and went to provide bread for 2 (2) him. And the man said to her, "Bring me also a honeycomb."<sup>b</sup> •And Aseneth stood still 3 (3) and was distressed,<sup>c</sup> because she did not have a honeycomb in her storeroom. •And the 4 man said to her, "Why do you stand still?" •And Aseneth said, "I will send a boy to the suburb, because the field which is our inheritance is close,<sup>d</sup> and he will quickly bring you 5 a honeycomb from there, and I will set (it) before you, Lord." •And the man said to her,
 "Proceed and enter your storeroom, and you will find a honeycomb lying upon the table.
 6 Pick it up and bring (it) here." •And Aseneth said, "Lord, a honeycomb is not in my 7 storeroom." •And the man said, "Proceed and you will find (one)."

8 (4) And Aseneth entered her storeroom and found a honeycomb lying on the table. And the comb was big and white as snow and full of honey. And that honey was like dew from<sup>e</sup> 9 heaven and its exhalation like breath of life.<sup>f</sup> •And Aseneth wondered and said in herself,
 Did then this comb come out of the man's mouth, because its exhalation is like the breath 10 (5) of this man's mouth?<sup>g</sup> •And Aseneth took that comb and brought it to the man, and put it on the table which she had prepared before him.<sup>h</sup>

And the man said to her, "How is it that you said that a honeycomb is not in my 11 (6) storeroom? And behold, you have brought a wonderful honeycomb." •And Aseneth was afraid and said, "Lord, I did not have a honeycomb in my storeroom at any time, but you spoke and it came into being.<sup>i</sup> Surely this came out of your mouth, because its exhalation is like breath of your mouth."

12,13 (7) And the man smiled at Aseneth's understanding,<sup>j</sup> •and called her to himself, and stretched out his right hand, and grasped her head and shook her head with his right hand. And Aseneth was afraid of the man's hand, because sparks shot forth from his hand as from bubbling (melted)<sup>k</sup> iron. And Aseneth looked, gazing with her eyes at the man's hand.

14 And the man saw (it) and smiled and said, "Happy are you,<sup>l</sup> Aseneth, because the ineffable

f2. "And Aseneth . . . knees" (c Arm. L1 436); omit a G 435&; destroyed Syr.; gaps rest. Gk. text with full apparatus in Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 74–76. On the invitation cf. Gen 18:1–5; Judg 13:15f.; 1Sam 28:22f.; Vita Aesopi G, 4. This narrative does not represent a magic rite to entice a daimōn parhedros (against Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, p. 97).

g2. Lit. "of which its exhalation"; cf. 1Clem 21:9 (so it is probably not a Semitism).

16 a. Gk. kainēn FG c L1 L2; "most handsome" Ngr.; "empty (kenēn, pronounced like kainēn)" AP Arm. W; omit Q; destroyed Syr.; gaps E d Rum.

b. Lit. "comb of honey (kērion melitos)" or "of bee (melissēs)"; also in vss. 2–11. Witnesses a d L1 generally support the former variant, b c Arm. L2 (Ngr.) the latter; but there are exceptions. The rendering "honeycomb" may do justice to both variants, as "bee" perhaps is used in metonymy for "honey."

c. "And Aseneth . . . distressed": many variants. Ngr. (435&) prefix "And as Aseneth heard (this)," which is in JosAsen's style.

d. Cf. Chariton 1.13.5.

e. The reading "third": added Syr. 436 (see vs.

14); gaps G d L1 Ngr.; omit rest.

f. Both "exhalation" and "breath" represent Gk. pnōē. A pun; see also vss. 9, 11. The description shows that the comb represents manna (cf. e.g. Ex 16:14, 31; WisSol 19:21; SibOr 3.746); see further vs. 14. Generally see R. Meyer, "manna," TDNT, vol. 4, 462–66; B. J. Malina, The Palestinian Manna Tradition (AGAJU 7; Leiden, 1968).

g. The reading "because . . . mouth": (FW Syr. Arm. L1 L2); omit a c Ngr.; gaps EG d. This could be a statement, rather than a question.

h. The reading "which . . . him": (Arm. Syr. 436); omit a c Ngr.; gaps b d L1 435&.

i. The reading "you . . . being": FW Arm. Syr. (L1) 436 (Ngr.); "as you said, so (AP only) it came into being" a d; "you however spoke" c; gaps EG 435&. "Came into being (gegone)" might also be rendered "happened."

j. Also see vs. 14. A smiling angel; cf. e.g. ShepHerm Vision 3.8.2.

k. Gk. kochlazontos (or ka-). Erroneously ochlazontos, "crowding," Bat ("redhot" Br. on the strength of Syr. Arm.). Batiffol's error induced Riessler (TQ 103 [1922] 2) to suggest a confusion of Heb. šûq I, "to pour" with šûq II, "to be narrow"; hence his translation "geschmolznen."

l. Cf. e.g. Mt 16:17.

- mysteri<sup>m</sup> of the Most High have been revealed to you, and happy (are) all who attach themselves to the Lord God in repentance, because they will eat from this comb. For this
- (8) comb is (full of the) spirit of life. And the bees of the paradise of delight<sup>n</sup> have made this from the dew of the roses of life that are in the paradise of God. And all the angels of God eat of it and all the chosen of God and all the sons of the Most High,<sup>o</sup> because this is a comb of life, and everyone who eats of it will not die for ever (and) ever.”
- 15 (9) And the man stretched out his right hand and broke a small portion off the comb, and he himself ate and what was left he put with his hand into Aseneth’s mouth, and<sup>p</sup> said to her,
- 16 “Eat.” And she ate. •And the man said to Aseneth, “Behold, you have eaten bread of life, and drunk a cup of immortality, and been anointed with ointment of incorruptibility. Behold, from today your flesh<sup>q</sup> (will) flourish<sup>r</sup> like flowers of life from the ground<sup>s</sup> of the Most High, and your bones will grow strong<sup>t</sup> like the cedars of the paradise of delight of God, and untiring powers will embrace you, and your youth will not see old age, and your beauty will not fail for ever.” And you shall be like a walled mother-city of<sup>u</sup> all who take
- 16x refuge with the name of the Lord God, the king of the ages.” •And the man stretched out his right hand and touched the comb where<sup>v</sup> he had broken off (a portion), and it was restored and filled up, and at once it became whole as it was in the beginning.

The heavenly man marks the comb with a cross and makes bees, which encircle Aseneth, rise from it

- 17 (10) And<sup>a</sup> again the man stretched out his right hand and put his (fore)finger on the edge of the comb looking east and drew it over the edge looking west, and the way<sup>b</sup> of his finger
- (11) became like blood. And he stretched out his hand the second time and put his finger on the edge of the comb looking north and drew it over to the edge looking south, and the way of
- 17x (12) his finger became like blood. •And Aseneth stood at his left (hand) and watched everything that the man was doing.
- 17y (13) And the man said to the comb, “Come.”<sup>z</sup> •And bees rose from the cells of that comb, and the cells were innumerable, ten thousand (times) ten thousand and thousands upon

m. The reading “the ineffable mysteries”: AP; “the mysteries” Q F 435&; “the hidden (things)” G Syr. Arm.; “the ineffable (things)” E c d 436; gaps W (L1) Ngr. Split tradition except in AP, or is that reading conflate? Anyway, “mysteries” should be retained. The revelation concerns the origin of the honeycomb as recognized in vs. 11 and its nature as described presently, rather than God’s mysteries in general.

n. LXX translation of “Garden of Eden.” e.g. Gen 3:23. It is in the third heaven, according to ApMos 37:5; 3Bar 4:8; 3En 8:1; there are also the manna mills (b. Hag 12b). Manna is “bread of (or from) heaven,” e.g. Neh 9:15; Ps 105:40.

o. “The chosen of God” (cf. e.g. Tob 8:15 BA; 1En 39:1; 61:10; 1Tim 5:21) and “the sons of the Most High” (e.g. Ps 89:7; see Intro.) might be angels or the dead just in paradise, both of which are credited with eating manna (Ps 75:25; WisSol 16:20; LAB 19:5; Meyer, TDNT 4, 462–66), or God’s children on earth (17:6; 19:8). Maybe JosAsen does not draw a sharp line between angels and men, God’s elect residing on earth and in heaven.

p. The reading from “and” to the end of vs. 16x (all); except omit d; gap W.

q. Lit. plural.

r. Gk. bryousi (present tense); APG c Syr. Br Rie; future Arm. (L1) L2; gaps rest. Gk. bryein (never LXX, NT only Jas 3:11) does not seem to occur in the future tense. It can be either transitive (Br Rie) or intransitive (cf. parallel clause about the bones). Comparison of the well-being of persons to flourishing plants is traditional, e.g. Pss 1:3; 92:13–15; Jer 17:8; below 18:9. Flourishing may also symbolize prolific posterity (cf. TSim 6:2; Targum Isa 53:2).

s. Gk. [apo tēs] gēs G Syr. Arm. 436; “garden” 435&; “spring (pegēs)” AP c; gaps rest. “Ground” (cf. 18:9) makes a good parallelism with “paradise,” but “spring” makes sense too.

t. Lit. “fat.” Cf. Isa 58:11; 66:14.

u. Cf. Apuleius 11.6.5f. The fulfillment of this begins in 18:9.

v. FG are the only Gk. witnesses from here down to vs. 16x end.

w. Or “of which.”

x. Vs. 17 (G d Syr. Arm. L1 435& Br, also Rie, who put vss. 17–17x first half after vs. 23 as vss. 24f. on the strength of BD); omit F; gaps EW 436 Ngr.; a c have “But the angel whetted the comb” for vss. 17–17x. Br gives an idea how divergent the evidence is. Vs. 17 is the introduction to the following verses, rather than an episode by itself. So the cruciform mark is preparatory to, and perhaps causal of, the appearance of the bees in vs. 17y. See further vs. 23.

y. Gk. hē hodos D (Syr.) L1 (435&) (Br Rie Phil); “the appearance (to eidos)” B Arm. Slav.; omit G (“the hand” for “of his finger”); gaps rest. Same situation at the second occurrence of “the way” (G gap too).

z. “And . . . come” (FG Syr. Arm. L1 Ngr.); omit d Br; gaps rest. In G and L1 the man’s command is addressed to Aseneth.

- 18 thousands.<sup>a2</sup> •And the bees were white as snow, and their wings like purple and like violet and like scarlet (stuff) and like gold-woven linen cloaks,<sup>b2</sup> and golden diadems (were) on their heads, and they had sharp stings, and they would not injure anyone.<sup>c2</sup> •And all those bees encircled Aseneth from feet to head.

And other bees were great and chosen like their queens,<sup>a2</sup> and they rose from the damaged part of the comb<sup>c2</sup> and encircled Aseneth's mouth, and made upon her mouth and her lips a comb similar to the comb which was lying before the man.<sup>f2</sup> •And all those<sup>a2</sup> bees ate of the comb which was on Aseneth's mouth. And the man said to the bees, "Go off to your place." •And all the bees rose and flew and went away into heaven. •And those who wanted to injure Aseneth fell to the ground and died. And the man stretched out his staff over the dead bees and said to them, "Rise you, too, and go away to your place." •And the bees who had died rose and went into the court adjoining Aseneth's house and sought shelter on the fruit-bearing trees.<sup>h2</sup>

- 1 (1) 17 And the man said to Aseneth, "Have you seen this thing?"<sup>a</sup> And she said, "Yes, Lord, I have seen all these (things)."<sup>b</sup> •And the man said to her, "So will be all my words which I have spoken to you today."<sup>c</sup> •And the man for the third time stretched out his right hand, and touched the damaged part<sup>b</sup> of the comb, and at once fire went up from the table and consumed<sup>d</sup> the comb, but the table it did not injure. •And much fragrance came forth from the burning of the comb, and filled the chamber.<sup>d</sup>

The heavenly man blesses Aseneth's seven virgins

- (4) And Aseneth said to the man, "Lord, with me are seven virgins ministering to me, fostered with me from my childhood, born with me in one night, and I love them as my

a2. Cf. Dan 7:10; ApZeph 4:4; 13:1; 1En 40:1; 60:1; 71:8; Rev 5:11; 1Clem 34:6. Is there a connection with Deut 33:17? The translations "(times)" and "upon" are lit. "of." Group c ends with the first "ten thousand." Vs. 17y is 17 in Rie (for the beginning see our vs. 17).

b2. See 2:8.

c2. For a contrast, cf. Rev 9:7-10.

d2. Beehives were regarded as being governed by kings in antiquity, not queens. The author may have had in mind something like "as befits queens," but there is a "queen of the bees" in Epictetus, Diss., 3.22.99.

e2. The reading "from . . . comb": (a FG Syr. Arm.); gaps rest. The translation "damaged part" is dubious; it is not in a, and the other witnesses are not clear; besides, the comb is not broken at this moment (vs. 16). However, 17:3 seems to suppose that it is damaged somehow; this would seem to refer back to the angel's manipulations in vs. 17. If not, we may have to translate "tablet" or "cells" in vs. 19.

f2. Philonenko (Joseph et Aséneth, p. 189) has drawn attention to the vagrant legend that a swarm of bees descended on Pindar, Plato, Ambrose and others, while in their cradles, symbolizing their future inspiration and eloquence (more on this in I. Opelt, "Das Bienenwunder in der Ambrosiusbiographie des Paulinus von Mailand," VC 22 [1968] 38-44). Whatever can be made of this tradition, the meaning of vs. 19 surely is not to credit Aseneth with poetic or theological inspiration, since she is nowhere cast in the role of a speaker. H. M. I. Gevaryahu, in a conversation, suggested some connection with the Old Egyptian mouth-opening ritual, believed to infuse the breath of life into the statues of the gods. But it is not said at this point that Aseneth ate from the comb, and besides honey along with butter was also needed for the ritual. See further vs. 23.

g2. Witnesses AP; omit F (Syr. 435&); gaps rest. It is not clear whether all bees or just the big ones eat. On vss. 20-22 cf. Eth. (see Intro.).

h2. Cf. Mk 4:32 parallel. The bees episode (vss. 17-23 [see especially vs. 17]) is a confirmation miracle as e.g. 2Kgs 20:8-11; it offers proof that all promises of the angel will be fulfilled (17:1f.). But the episode has not yet been interpreted satisfactorily. Since the bees of paradise have been mentioned as producers of the comb in vs. 14, the bees in vss. 17y-23 are perhaps best explained as their like, rather than an allegorical representation of some sort. Thus vss. 19-21 could prove that honey such as Aseneth has eaten is made by the bees of paradise and remains available through her (note the correspondence of vs. 19b with vss. 9 and 11b). Admittedly it is not easy to pursue this line in vss. 22f., unless we are to understand that some of the paradisiac honey-makers will remain with Aseneth for good (cf. Ngr. in 17:2; but why the vicious ones?) or that natural bees are a "fallen" variety of the heavenly ones. If allegory was intended (cf. also vs. 9) we should perhaps equate the bees to the Israelites, Aseneth's new compatriots, rather than to the virgins, the nations or the like (on bee symbolism generally, cf. W. Telfer, "Bees" in Clement of Alexandria," JTS 28 [1926-27] 167-78). The aggressive ones would then anticipate Dan and Gad as portrayed in chs. 22-29. But why should they end up in Aseneth's park? Is it because they will eventually be forgiven?

17 a. Lit. "word (rēma)"; a biblicism. Cf. e.g. Lk 2:15. See also 23:11.

b. Lit. "blow, injury (plēgē)" AP (Syr. Arm.); omit Q G d L1 435&; gaps rest. See 16:19.

c. Cf. Jud 6:21.

d. Cf. Jn 12:3.

- 5 (5) sisters. I will call them, and you will bless them as you have blessed me, too." •And the 6 man said, "Call them." •And Aseneth called the seven virgins and stood them before the man. And the man blessed them and said, "May the Lord God the Most High bless you.
And you shall be seven pillars of the City of Refuge,<sup>e</sup> and all the fellow inhabitants<sup>f</sup> of the chosen of that city will rest upon you for ever (and) ever."

The heavenly man departs

- 7 (6), 8 And the man said to Aseneth, "Put this table away." •And Aseneth turned to put the table away, and at once the man went away<sup>g</sup> out of her sight.<sup>h</sup> And Aseneth saw (something) like a chariot of four horses traveling into heaven toward (the) east. And<sup>i</sup> the chariot was like a flame of fire, and the horses like lightning. And the man was standing on that chariot.<sup>j</sup> 9 And Aseneth said, "(What a) foolish and bold (woman) I (am), because I have spoken with frankness and said that a man came into my chamber from heaven; and I did not know that (a) god<sup>k</sup> came to me. And behold, now he is traveling (back) into heaven to his place."
10 (7) And she said in herself, Be gracious, Lord, to your slave, and spare your maidservant, because I have spoken boldly before you all my words in ignorance.

IV. JOSEPH'S AND ASENETH'S MARRIAGE

Joseph's second visit is announced. Aseneth's foster-father notices her fallen face

- 1 (1) 18 And as Aseneth was still saying these things to herself, behold, a young man from Pentephres' servant staff rushed in and said, "Behold, Joseph the Powerful One of God is coming to us today. For a forerunner of his is standing at the gates of our court."<sup>b</sup> 2 (2) And Aseneth hurried and called her foster-father, the (steward) of her house,<sup>c</sup> and said to him, "Hurry and make the house ready and prepare a good dinner, because Joseph the 3 Powerful One of God is coming to us today." •And<sup>d</sup> her foster-father saw her, and behold, her face had fallen from the affliction and the weeping and the fasting of the seven days, and he was distressed and wept, and he took her right hand and kissed it and said, "What 4 have you, my child,<sup>e</sup> because your face has fallen so (much)?" •And Aseneth said to him,
"My head is stricken with heavy pain, and the sleep kept away from my eyes,<sup>f</sup> and therefore 5 my face has fallen."<sup>g</sup> •And her foster-father went away and prepared the house and the dinner.

e. The reading "seven . . . Refuge": (E Syr. Arm.) L1 (prefixes "like"; Batifol's edition omits "seven") 435&; "pillars (seven pillars Rie) of refuge of seven cities" a (Bat marks "pillars of refuge" off as illegible in A); gaps rest. Cf. Prov 9:1; Philo, Quaest. Ex. 1.21 on 12:17; Gal 2:9; Rev 3:12; 1 Clem 5:2; ShepHerm Vision 3.8.2. See further Intro.

f. Gk. hai synoikoi (fem.), i.e. "women immigrants."

g. The reading "went away": (AP EFW d Syr. L1 436); "became invisible" Q G Arm. 435&? Slav.? Ngr. (also 661), also the secondary finale of c (Burchard, NTS 24 [1977] 81).

h. Lit. "eyes." Cf. Judg 6:21.

i. "And" to end of vs. 9 (all); except omit d; gap E.

j. Cf. Elijah's ascension 2Kgs 2:11; Berger, Auferstehung, pp. 569f., n. 416. Vss. 8–10 also stand in the tradition of Judg 6:21f.; 13:20–22; Berger, Auferstehung, pp. 156f., 444–47, nn. 61–69. On angels' disappearances generally, cf. Berger, Auferstehung, pp. 170–72, 471–78, nn. 147–58.

k. The reading "(a) god": AP; with article, i.e. "God" Q; "an angel of the Lord" Arm. (L1 435&); ambiguous Syr. ("God from heaven" Brooks' edition) 436; gaps rest. See also at 22:3.

18 a. Witnesses EFW Syr. Arm. L1 436 (Ngr.) Br (in footnote): "P. her father's" G; "her father's" 435&; "Joseph's" a d.

b. "For . . . court" (b Syr. Arm. L1 L2); omit a d Ngr.(?).

c. The reading "her foster father . . . house": FW (Syr. Arm.) 436; "her foster father" G Ngr. (adding "or, her grandfather"); "the (steward) of her house" a E d 435&; gap L1. The man who is probably not identical with Pentephres' steward (3:4) reappears in vss. 3, 5, 7, 11 as "her foster-father" (FGW Syr. Arm. 436 Ngr., if present) or "the (steward) of her house" (a, if present; 435&); never again in d; gap L1. E is lacking in vss. 3, 5, 7, but has both titles in vs. 11. Maybe both titles were there each time. "Foster-father (trophæus)" might also be rendered "personal attendant," but he seems to be more than that (vs. 3).

d. "And" . . . to "hurried and" in vs. 5 (all); except "And Aseneth" d; gap L1.

e. The reading "my child": G Ngr. (Syr.); "child" FW Arm.; "my mistress" a; "mistress" 436; "dearest" 435&; gaps E d L1.

f. Cf. e.g. Gen 31:40; 1Mac 6:10.

g. The reading "and . . . fallen": (FGW Arm. L2 Ngr.); omit a Syr.; gaps E d L1.

Aseneth dresses as a bride and is transformed to heavenly beauty

- (3) And Aseneth remembered the man (from heaven) and his commandment, and she hurried and entered her second chamber where the chests (containing) her ornaments were, and opened her big coffer and brought out her first robe, (the one) of wedding, like lightning
 6 (4) in appearance, and dressed in it. *And she girded a golden and royal girdle around (herself)
 (5) which was (made) of precious stones. And she put golden bracelets on her fingers and on her feet golden buskins,<sup>h</sup> and precious ornaments she put around her neck in which innumerable costly (and) precious stones were fastened,<sup>i</sup> and a golden crown she put on her head, and on that crown, in front on her brow, was a big sapphire<sup>j</sup> stone, and around the
 (6) big stone were six costly stones. And with a veil she covered her head like a bride, and she took a scepter in her hand.<sup>k</sup>
- 7 And Aseneth remembered the words of her foster-father, because he had said to her, "Your face has fallen." And she sighed and was much distressed and said, "Woe is me, 8 (7) the humble, because my face has fallen. Joseph will see me and despise me." *And she said to her foster-sister,<sup>l</sup> "Bring me pure water from the spring,<sup>m</sup> and I will wash my face."
 9 And she brought her pure water from the spring and poured it into the basin.<sup>n</sup> And Aseneth leaned (over) to wash her face and saw her face in the water.<sup>o</sup> And it was like the sun<sup>p</sup> and her eyes (were) like a rising morning star, and<sup>q</sup> her cheeks like fields of the Most High,<sup>r</sup> and on her cheeks (there was) red (color) like a son of man's blood,<sup>s</sup> and her lips (were) like a rose of life<sup>t</sup> coming out of its foliage, and her teeth like fighting men lined up for a fight,<sup>u</sup> and the hair of her head (was) like a vine in the paradise of God prospering in its fruits,<sup>v</sup> and her neck like an all-variegated cypress,<sup>w</sup> and her breasts (were) like the mountains of the Most High God.<sup>x</sup>
- 10 And when Aseneth saw herself in the water, she was amazed at the sight and rejoiced with great joy, and did not wash her face, for she said, "Perhaps I (will) wash off this 11 great beauty." *And her foster-father came to say to her, "Everything is prepared as you have commanded." And when he saw her he was alarmed and stood speechless for a long (time),<sup>y</sup> and was filled with great fear<sup>z</sup> and fell at her feet and said, "What is this, my

h. See 3:6.

i. The reading "in . . . fastened": (FW Syr. Arm. L2 Ngr.); omit AP d; gaps Q EG L1 Slav.

j. Same word as "violet"; see 2:8. Cf. Rev 21:20.

k. The reading "like . . . hand": (GFW Syr. Arm. L2); omit AP; gaps Q E d L1 Ngr. ("bride" is there).

l. The reading "her foster-sister": FW Arm. L2; "her maidservant" AP B Phil (D); "one of the virgins her companions" Syr.; "the virgins" G; gaps rest. See 10:4.

m. See 2:12. In a more hellenized environment she would doubtless have ordered a bath.

n. The reading "and . . . basin": details uncertain. Some witnesses also mention a bowl (kogchē) such as was used for drawing water. It may belong in the text.

o. Does this scene reflect magical practice involving the mirror effect of water in a basin (Philonenko, Joseph et Aseneth, p. 193)? Probably not, because the text neither says that Aseneth had anything but washing in mind, nor that she was transformed because she looked into the water. Aseneth's sudden beauty is in partial fulfillment of 16:16. She comes close to being an angelic creature (see 20:6; cf. Acts 6:15; 2Cor 3:18). The description offers many variants. It is reminiscent of the Song of Songs, the influence of which seems to have grown stronger in the MS tradition.

p. Cf. e.g. Mt 17:2; Rev 1:16; 10:1.

q. The reading "and" to the end of vs. 11: (all); except omit d; gaps L1 Slav.

r. The reading "fields of the Most High": FW Syr. (cf. Song 5:13); "furrows even and beautiful" Arm.; "a star of heaven" A; "the stars of the heaven" P; gaps rest.

s. The reading "and . . . blood": (F Syr. Arm. 436); omit AP W; gaps rest. "Son of man" is a Semitism meaning no more (in this instance) than "a man" (cf. e.g. Jdt 8:16; Ps 8:5; Sir 17:30; TJos 2:5). It is in F Syr. 436 only; "parts of a pomegranate" Arm. (cf. Song 4:3?).

t. The reading "of life": FW Syr. L2; "flow-ering" Arm.; "being red" AP Eth. (see Intro.); gaps rest.

u. The reading "coming . . . fight": (Syr. Arm. L2); "which comes forth from its leaves" Eth. (see Intro.); omit AP FW; gaps rest. Cf. Achilles Tatius 1.4.3 (see Intro.).

v. The paradise tree Gen 2:17; 3:3, cf. ApAb 23:5f.

w. The reading "all-variegated cypress": A (cf. Ps 92:12f.; Ezek 31:8f.); "much-variegated vine" P (cf. preceding clause); "beautiful tower" Arm. (cf. Song 4:4; 7:5); "isles of rest of angels that (are) in heaven" Syr.; "hill of (the) heavens" 436; gaps rest. The original text is obscure.

x. The reading "and . . . God": (Syr. Arm. 436); omit AP; gaps rest. On Arm. cf. Song 2:17; 8:14.

y. A common reaction; cf. e.g. Chariton 3.9.2; 4.1.9; 5.3.9; Apuleius 11.14.1.

z. The reading "he was . . . fear": (FW Syr. Arm. L2); "he was much filled with fear and was trembling for a long time" AP; "he was alarmed" mistress, and what is this great and wonderful beauty?<sup>a2</sup> At last the Lord God of heaven has chosen you as a bride for his firstborn son, Joseph?<sup>b2</sup>

Joseph arrives and acknowledges Aseneth

- (1) 19 And while they were still speaking this (way)<sup>a</sup> a boy came and said to Aseneth, 2 "Behold, Joseph is standing at the doors of our court." •And Aseneth hurried and went down the stairs from the upper floor with the seven virgins to meet Joseph and stood in the 3 entrance of the house. •And Joseph entered the court and the gates were closed, and all strangers remained outside.
- 4 (2) And Aseneth went out of the entrance to meet Joseph, and Joseph saw her and was 5 amazed at her beauty, and said to her, "Who<sup>b</sup> are you? Quickly tell me." •And she said to him, "I am your maidservant Aseneth, and all the idols I have thrown away from me and they were destroyed. And a man came to me from heaven today, and gave me bread of life and I ate, and a cup of blessing and I drank. And he said to me, 'I have given<sup>c</sup> you for a bride to Joseph today, and he himself will be your bridegroom for ever (and) ever.'
 And he said to me, 'Your name will no longer be called Aseneth, but your name will be called City of Refuge and the Lord God will reign as king over many nations for ever,<sup>d</sup> 6 because in you many nations will take refuge with the Lord God, the Most High.' •And the man said to me, 'I will also go to Joseph and speak into his ears<sup>e</sup> concerning you what 7 I have to say.' •And now, you know, my Lord, whether that man has come to you and spoken to you concerning me."
- 8 And Joseph said to Aseneth, "Blessed are you by the Most High God, and blessed (is)<sup>f</sup> your name for ever, because the Lord God founded your walls in the highest, and your walls (are) adamantine walls of life,<sup>g</sup> because the sons of the living God<sup>h</sup> will dwell in your 9 City of Refuge, and the Lord God will reign as king over them for ever and ever. •For this man came to me today and spoke to me words such as these concerning you. And now, come to me, chaste virgin, and why do you stand far away from me?"<sup>i</sup>
- 10 (3) And Joseph stretched out his hands and called Aseneth by a wink of his eyes.<sup>j</sup> And Aseneth also stretched out her hands and ran up to Joseph and fell on his breast.<sup>k</sup> And Joseph put his arms around her, and Aseneth (put hers) around Joseph, and they kissed 11 each other for a long time and both came to life in their spirit.<sup>l</sup> •And Joseph kissed Aseneth and gave her spirit of life, and he kissed her the second time and gave her spirit of wisdom, and he kissed her the third time and gave her spirit of truth.<sup>m</sup>

G; "he was filled with fear" Q; paraphrastic E; gaps d L1 Ngr. Perhaps the trembling should go into the text on the assumption of split tradition.

a2. Witnesses a G Arm. Ngr.; "virtue" FW Syr. L2; "grace" E; gaps d L1.

b2. The reading "his firstborn son, Joseph" is a reconstruction from "his firstborn son" F Syr. L2; "his son Joseph" A; "Joseph" PQ Arm.; "the most beautiful Joseph" G; gaps rest. Doubtful.

19 a. Traditional formula of transition, e.g. 1Sam 17:23; Job 1:16–18; Mt 9:18; Mk 5:35. On ch. 19 cf. Acts 9:10–17; Apuleius 11.22.4–6; 11.23.1,6; 11.27.7–9. Joseph's role is similar to that of Ananias in Acts 9:10–17 and of the head priest of Isis to whom Lucius rushes after having been told in a dream that the day of his initiation had approached, only to find him informed in the same manner. On the motif of double dreams or visions cf. Acts 9:10–12 and the commentaries thereon.

b. "Who" to end of vs. 9 (all); except "Come to me, chaste virgin, because I was given good news about you from heaven who (masc.!) said to me all the (things) about you" d ("from . . . you" omit D); gap Slav. This is a manifest case of condensation in d with a patent seam before "who."

c. See 15:2.

d. Cf. e.g. Pss 10:16 (9:37 LXX); 146:10; WisSol 3:8; Rev 11:15. Cf. also vs. 8.

e. Cf. also 24:2. The image is traditional, e.g. Gen 20:8; Deut 31:28; ShepHerm Vision 3.8.11; 4.3.6. The phrase expresses audibility, rather than furtiveness.

f. Or "blessed (it will be)," i.e. "it will be praised" (Berger, Auferstehung, p. 563, n. 401; cf. Mk 14:9 parallel)? Also 15:12.

g. The reading "in . . . life": (G Syr. Arm. L2); omit AP; gaps rest.

h. Cf. Hos 2:1.

i. On vss. 8f. cf. Apuleius 11.22.4–6.

j. The reading "by . . . eyes": Syr. Arm. L2 (Ngr.); gaps rest. See next note.

k. The reading "and called . . . breast": (b Syr. Arm. L2 Ngr.); omit a D L1 Phil; gaps B Slav.

l. I.e. "they cheered up"; cf. e.g. Gen 45:27; Jub 31:6; 43:24. This verse seems to contain the first indubitable occurrence of anazan besides Lk 15:24 and Rom 7:9.

m. That life, soul, spirit, or the like can be transferred or exchanged (or taken away, for that matter) by a kiss is a very old idea underlying many kinds of human behavior and ritual, and expressed in a host of texts, both religious and profane (e.g. Gen 2:7; Jn 20:22; OdesSol 28:6f.; Xenophon of Ephesus 1.9.6); in the way of ritual, cf. e.g. the "holy kiss" of the early Church 1Cor 16:20, etc., and the Valentinian "Sacrament of the Bridal Chamber" in GPhil; see generally, I. Löw,

1 20 And they embraced each other for a long time and interlocked their hands like bonds.<sup>a</sup>

Aseneth leads Joseph into the house and washes his feet

- (1) And Aseneth said to Joseph, "Come, my Lord, and enter our<sup>b</sup> house, because I have 2 prepared our<sup>c</sup> house and made a great dinner." •And she grasped his right hand and led
 (2) him into her<sup>d</sup> house and 'seated him on Pentephres<sup>e</sup> her father's throne. And she brought 3 water to wash his feet.<sup>f</sup> •And Joseph said, "Let one of the virgins come and wash my 4 (3) feet." •And Aseneth said to him, "No, my Lord, because you are my lord from now on, and I (am) your maidservant. And why do you say this (that) another virgin (is) to wash your feet? For your feet are my feet, and your hands are my hands, and your soul my soul.<sup>g</sup> 5 and your feet another (woman) will never wash."<sup>h</sup> •And she urged him and washed his feet. And Joseph looked at her hands, and they were like hands of life, and her fingers fine
 (4) like (the) fingers of a fast-writing scribe.<sup>i</sup> And after this Joseph grasped her right hand and kissed it,<sup>j</sup> and Aseneth kissed his head and sat at his right (hand).

Pentephres proposes to give a wedding feast, but Joseph prefers Pharaoh

- 6 (5) And her father and mother and his<sup>k</sup> whole family came from the field which was their inheritance.<sup>l</sup> And they saw Aseneth like (the) appearance of light, and her beauty was like heavenly beauty.<sup>m</sup> And they saw her sitting with Joseph and dressed in a wedding garment.<sup>n</sup> 7 And they were amazed at her beauty and rejoiced<sup>o</sup> and gave glory to God who gives life to 8 the dead.<sup>p</sup> •And after this they ate and drank and celebrated.<sup>q</sup>

"Der Kuss," MGWJ 65 (1921) 253–76, 323–49; K. Thraede, "Ursprünge und Formen des 'Heiligen Kusses' in frühen Christentum," JAC 11–12 (1968–69) 124–80; G. Stählin, "phileō etc.," TDNT 9, 113–71. Joseph's kiss may go back to an erotic motif, if only in a spiritualized form (cf. Xenophon 1.9.6). He imparts to Aseneth the spirit which he himself possesses; it is not sent down from above for the occasion. "Spirit of life," "of wisdom," and "of truth" (not all too frequent in ancient Judaism: e.g. Jub 25:14; TJud 20:5; IQS 3.18f.; 4.21,23; IQM 13.10; of course Jn 15:26; ShepHerm Mandates 3.4) denotes three aspects or effects of the spirit, rather than three spirits (so "spirit" should remain anarthrous as in the Gk. text, against Rie Br). How this relates to the blessed bread, cup, and ointment which also provide life (see 8:5) is not clear. Maybe we are to understand that life is first mediated by intimate contact with a Jew and then sustained by other things. But perhaps the author in 19:11 just makes use of a different tradition to express the same general idea that adherence to Judaism means life.

20 a. Lit. "and tightened the bonds of their hands." In a handshake or around each other's neck?

b. Witnesses a FW Syr. Arm. L1 L2; "my" G d; omit Ngr.; gaps E Slav. See n. d below.

c. Witnesses AP (Syr.) Arm.; "my" Ngr.; omit L2; gaps Q b d L1 Slav.

d. Witnesses AQ G d Syr. Ngr.661; "their" P; omit EFW Arm. L1 L2 Ngr.671; gap Slav. The "her house" does not go well with "our house" of vs. 1.

e. Witnesses a d; gaps L1 Ngr.; omit rest.

f. On foot washing see 7:1 and note. For foot-washing scenes with a deeper meaning see Lk 7:36–50 (see Wilckens, Orientierung an Jesus); Jn 13:1–17.

g. This is a poetic expression of loving someone "like yourself" (cf. Ruth 1:16f.; TJos 17:7), rather than an illustration of the lovers' "mystical union" (thus Philonenko, Joseph et Aséneth, p. 195).

h. The reading "and . . . wash": (a d); omit F Syr. Arm. L1 436; gaps EGW 435& Ngr. Cf. Jn 13:8.

i. "And Joseph . . . scribe" (F Syr. Arm. L1 L2 Ngr. Br); gap E; omit rest. Many variants especially in the last clause (omit F L1). The reading "like the fingers (daktyloi)" (Syr. Br, cf. Arm.) might also be "like the reed pens (kalamoi)" (436, cf. 435&; Ps 45:2). The first variant is retained on the assumption that copyists are more likely to clarify a biblical allusion than to obscure it.

j. Or "her"; cf. 4:5.

k. See 5:3.

l. They seem to have been there since 10:1.

m. "And they . . . heavenly beauty" (FGW Syr. Arm. L1 436 Br); omit a E d 435& (Ngr.?).
n. Cf. Mt 22:11.

o. The reading "and rejoiced": a d (Ngr.); gap G; omit rest. Cf. Apuleius 11.13.4.

p. Cf. e.g. 2Mac 7:28f.; Eighteen Benedictions 2 (see C. W. Dugmore, The Influence of the Synagogue upon the Divine Office [Westminster, 1964] pp. 114–27); Jn 5:21; Rom 4:17; Apuleius 11.16.2; O. Hofius, "Eine altjüdische Parallele zu Röm. IV. 17b," NTS 18 (1971–72) 93f. Around the beginning of our era "He who gives life to the dead" had become all but a definition of God in Judaism. Does this mean that Pentephres and his family embraced Judaism too? The next verse seems to confirm this interpretation. Cf. also "to give glory to God" in Mt 5:16; 1Pet 2:12.

q. The reading "and celebrated": Q Arm. (Ngr.); "and celebrating all (of them)" AP; Br connects it with the following sentence; gap 435&; omit rest. "To eat, drink, and celebrate" is a traditional threesome, e.g. 1Kgs 4:20; Tob 7:10; Eccl 8:15;

- (6) And Pentephres said to Joseph, "Tomorrow I will call all the noblemen and the satraps of the whole land of Egypt and give a marriage feast for you,<sup>c</sup> and you will take my daughter 9 (7) Aseneth for (your) wife." •And Joseph said,<sup>c</sup> "I will go tomorrow to Pharaoh the king, because he is like a father to me and appointed me chief of the whole land of Egypt,<sup>c</sup> and I will speak about Aseneth into his ears, and he himself will give her to me for (my) wife."
 10 And Pentephres said to him, "Go in peace."<sup>u</sup>
- 1 (20:8) 21 And Joseph stayed that day with Pentephres, and he did not sleep with<sup>a</sup> Aseneth, because Joseph said, "It does not befit a man who worships God to sleep with his wife<sup>b</sup> before the wedding."

Pharaoh solemnizes the marriage and gives a wedding feast

- 2 (21:1) And<sup>c</sup> Joseph rose at daybreak and went away to Pharaoh and<sup>d</sup> said to him, "Give me
 3 Aseneth, daughter of Pentephres, priest of Heliopolis, for (my) wife." •And Pharaoh rejoiced with great joy and<sup>e</sup> said to Joseph, "Behold, is not this one betrothed to you since eternity?<sup>f</sup> And she shall be your wife from now on and for ever (and) ever."
 4 (2) And Pharaoh sent and called Pentephres, and he came and brought Aseneth, and stood
 (3) her before Pharaoh.<sup>g</sup> And Pharaoh saw her and was amazed at her beauty and said, "May the Lord, the God of Joseph bless you, child, and let this beauty of yours remain for ever (and) ever, because justly the Lord, the God of Joseph, has chosen you as a bride for Joseph, because he is the firstborn son of God. And you shall be called a daughter of the 5 (4) Most High and<sup>h</sup> a bride of Joseph from now on and for ever." •And Pharaoh took Joseph and Aseneth and put golden crowns<sup>i</sup> on their heads which had been in his house from the 6 beginning and of old. And Pharaoh set Aseneth at Joseph's right side, •and put his hands on their heads, and his right hand was on Aseneth's head.<sup>j</sup> And Pharaoh said, "May the Lord God the Most High bless you and multiply you and magnify<sup>k</sup> and glorify you forever."
 7 (5) And Pharaoh turned them around toward each other face to face and brought them mouth to mouth and joined them by their lips,<sup>l</sup> and they kissed each other.

Tab B, 5:1; Lk 12:19. To express joy by appropriate meals is an all but universal custom. Here it may reflect a ceremonial meal held on the occasion of a conversion. If eating separates the Jews from the non-Jews, the first meal with Jews must acquire a special character. Cf. Mk 2:15; Lk 15:23; Acts 16:34; Apuleius 11.24.5. Anyway, there is no further mention of the interdiction stated in 7:1.

r. Lit. "make you weddings." Cf. Mt 22:2.

s. "Not so, but" added Arm. 435& (cf. 4:11; 23:1); gap d: omit rest.

t. Cf. Gen 45:8.

u. Traditional valediction, e.g. Judg 18:6; Jdt 8:35; Acts 16:36.

21 a. The reading "sleep with": FGW Arm. L1 436 Ngr.; "recognize" Syr. (cf. e.g. Gen 4:1; Mt 1:25); "go in to" a d (cf. vs. 9); gaps E 435&.

b. Aseneth is Joseph's "wife" by virtue of her engagement (20:4, 8; cf. 23:3; see on 1:9), but we may have to understand "his (future) wife." In either case the statement seems to imply that a man "who does not worship God" might have acted otherwise. A Jew might not (Cohen, Jewish and Roman Law, vol. 1, p. 322), but there may have been local differences (see m. Ket 1:5 and commentaries on Mt 1:18f.).

c. On vss. 2-9 cf. Apuleius 6.21.1-24.4: Cupid flies to Jupiter to ask for Psyche's hand in marriage. Jupiter convokes all the gods and declares Psyche immortal and her union with Cupid perpetual. A feast ensues, and soon their daughter, Voluptuousness, is born.

d. The reading "and said . . . saying": (all), except omit B(D). D omits "and said . . . sent," then adds "and Aseneth" after "Pentephres," then omits from "and he" to "natives" in vs. 8. Slav. is shortened, omitting vs. 3 altogether. A rather poor Gk. retroversion of Slav., corrected by two readings from A and F Syr., is adopted and translated by Phil.

e. The reading "rejoiced . . . and": a. P(Q) prefixing "having heard this word from Joseph"; gaps E d Ngr.; omit rest. Stylistically PQ is acceptable except for the participial form.

f. Similarly 23:3. Cf. Tob 6:18. This expression means no more than that the match is providential. Closer scrutiny of the wedding rites in vss. 4-8 might help to determine the date and place of origin of JosAsen.

g. Cf. Gen 47:7.

h. The reading "a daughter . . . and": (FW Syr. Arm. L1 436 Slav. Phil); omit AP; gaps rest.

i. I.e. wreaths. They were an all but universal custom in ancient weddings.

j. The reading "and . . . head": (FGW Arm. L1 436); omit a Syr. 435&; gaps E d Ngr. (except perhaps for a trace in Ngr. 661). Cf. Gen 48:13.

k. The reading "and magnify": a; gaps E d 436 Slav. Ngr.; omit rest. Cf. WisSol 19:22. Is this a current wedding formula? Cf. Gen 1:28.

l. The reading "and . . . lips": FW 436; "on their lips" L1; omit A; gaps rest. Lit. "on their mouths" and "on their lips."

- 8 (6) And after this Pharaoh gave a marriage feast and a great dinner and a big banquet<sup>m</sup> for
 (7) seven days.<sup>n</sup> And he called together all the chiefs of the land of Egypt and all the kings of the nations<sup>o</sup> and proclaimed to the whole land of Egypt, saying, "Every man who does (any) work during the seven days of Joseph's and Aseneth's wedding shall surely<sup>p</sup> die."
 9 (8) And it happened after this,<sup>q</sup> Joseph went in to Aseneth, and Aseneth conceived from Joseph, and gave birth to Manasseh and Ephraim, his brother, in Joseph's house.<sup>r</sup>

V. ASENETH'S PSALM

- 10 And<sup>s</sup> then Aseneth began to confess to the Lord God and gave thanks, praying, for all the good (things) of which she was deemed worthy by the Lord:<sup>t</sup>
- 11 I have sinned, Lord, I have sinned,
 before you I have sinned much,<sup>u</sup>
 I Aseneth, daughter of Pentephres, priest of Heliopolis, who is an overseer of everything.<sup>v</sup>

m. Lit. "drinking bout"; in LXX this expression is often used for banquets (e.g. Job 1:4). After "dinner" (Ps-Lucianus, Onos, 24.3; never LXX) it denotes the drinking rounds following the meal proper.

n. The conventional length in Judaism, as already e.g. Judg 14:12, 17.

o. Cf. e.g. Lk 22:25.

p. Lit. "by death." Cf. Ex 35:2, "by death" being an addition from a legal formula such as Ex 21:16.

q. "And . . . this" F(G)W Syr. Arm. L1 436; "And when the marriage feast had happened and the dinner was completed" AP(Q) d Slav. (adding "and"); omit 435&; gaps E Ngr. Split tradition?

r. Cf. Gen 41:50-52. The author gives us no idea as to where Joseph's house stood. "To go in" is a traditional euphemism to denote consummation of marriage. It is followed by "conceive and give birth" e.g. Gen 30:4f., 10; 2Sam 12:24. 435& break off at this point. On the 436 version of vs. 9 see at vs. 10.

s. Vss. 10-21 (EFW Syr. Arm. L1 436 Br); omit a G d Rum.; gap Ngr. Vs. 10 is in E only (omit vss. 11-21), but there seem to be traces of it elsewhere. In F(W) vss. 11-21 are imbedded into a lengthy exhortation beginning after vs. 9, and introduced thus: "But hear (singular) also the confession, or thanksgiving, of Aseneth. For after she recognized (the) living God, and was released from the pollutions of the idols (cf. Acts 15:20), and had renounced the dead and dumb images of the Egyptian gods, and had obtained what she wanted, giving thanks, she said to the Most High." The L1 MS 421 has "Afterwards (she) said" in the margin of the heading, adopted with an added "Aseneth" by Batiffol's edition of L1 and accepted by Br. In 436 vs. 9 reads: "And it happened after this that Joseph entered to the song of confession which Aseneth sang to the Lord the Most High after she gave birth to Ephraim and Manasse." Vss. 11-21 Gk. with full apparatus in Burchard, Untersuchungen, pp. 76-90; cf. also Br. W was not known at the time; it offers some helpful variants. Nevertheless the text of the psalm is marred by numerous difficulties, some of them well-nigh insoluble, especially at the end of vs. 11 and in vss. 19f. On the function of the text, cf. Ex 15; Tob 13; Jdt 16:1-17; 4Mac 18:6b-19; on the anaphoric form of the stanzas, cf. TJob 25; 32; on the first person singular Ps 151; 4Mac 18:6b-19; on the general structure (ten stanzas of parallel form, followed by a longer prose section), cf. Mt 5:1-12; D. Daube, The New Testament and Rabbinic Judaism (London, 1956) pp. 196-201.

t. An introduction to vss. 11-21 would seem to be needed; cf. Tob 13:1; Jdt 15:14. E has been adopted for want of a better text (see previous note); "gave thanks (eucharistōsa)" is dubious. The psalm is entitled "Hymn of Confession of Aseneth to the Most High" (FW Syr. Arm. L1 436 Br); gaps rest. The heading may have originated as a marginal title; it is hardly original as part of the running text (see also 12:1).

u. "I have sinned, Lord . . . much" (FW Syr. Arm. L1 436 Br); gaps rest. The two lines recur in vss. 12-21 in L1 Br, in vss. 12-20 in Arm., in vs. 21 only in 436. FW have them again before vss. 12, 16, and 18, Syr. before vss. 12, 13, and 19, all in shorter forms than above, varying a little each time. It is assumed here that all verses down to vs. 21 began this way, although in vs. 20 this beginning seems to break a sentence.

v. The clause is a reconstruction from "who sees everything" Syr.; "of (the) god who is an overseer of everything" Arm. 332; "who was the overseer of the gods all (singular)" Yovs; "like of an (or the) overseer (episcopi) of all (plural)" L1 MSS 424 433 441; omit rest of L1 including Batiffol's edition; gaps rest. The structure of the stanza would require a further clause. If the above variants represent it, nevertheless the wording (episkopos may have been in it) and to whom it refers remain obscure. In Syr. and 332 the reference is unequivocally to the sun. This makes good sense, because the idea that the sun (or God, for that matter) sees everything is commonplace (see 6:6). But whereas in Syr. and 332 the clause goes well with "Heliopolis," rendered "City of the Sun," it is not easy to see how this would have run in Gk.

- 12 I have sinned, Lord, I have sinned;
before you I have sinned much.
I was prospering in my father's house,
and was a boastful and arrogant virgin.
- 13 I have sinned, Lord, I have sinned;
before you I have sinned much.
And I have worshiped strange gods who were without number,
and eaten bread from their sacrifices.
- 14 I have sinned, Lord, I have sinned;
before you I have sinned much.
Bread of strangulation I have eaten, and a cup of insidiousness I have drunk from the table of death.
- 15 I have sinned, Lord, I have sinned;
before you I have sinned much.
And I did not know the Lord the God of Heaven, and I did not trust in the Most High God of life.
- 16 I have sinned, Lord, I have sinned;
before you I have sinned much.
For I trusted in the richness of my glory<sup>w</sup> and in my beauty, and<sup>x</sup> I was boastful and arrogant.
- 17 I have sinned, Lord, I have sinned;
before you I have sinned much.
And I despised every man on earth, and there was no one who achieved something<sup>y</sup> before me.
- 18 I have sinned, Lord, I have sinned;
before you I have sinned much.
And I had come to hate all who had asked my hand in marriage, and despised them and scorned them.
- 19 I have sinned, Lord, I have sinned;
before you I have sinned much.
And I spoke bold (words) in vanity and said,
"There is no prince on earth who may loosen the girdle of my virginity."<sup>z</sup>
- 20 I<sup>a2</sup> have sinned, Lord, I have sinned;
before you I have sinned much.
But will be the bride of the great king's firstborn son.
- 21 I have sinned, Lord, I have sinned;
before you I have sinned much,
until Joseph the Powerful One of God came.<sup>b2</sup>
He pulled me down from my dominating position and made me humble after my arrogance, and by his beauty he caught me,
and by his wisdom he grasped me like a fish on a hook, and by his spirit, as by bait of life, he ensnared me.<sup>c2</sup>

w. This phrase is the only extant ancient parallel to Rom 9:23; Eph 1:18; 3:16; Col 1:27; cf. Phil 4:19; but the sense is different.

x. W. Syr. Arm.; omit F L1 436 Br, also Burchard, Untersuchungen, p. 80; gaps rest.

y. The reading "achieved something" is a guess from the variegated evidence; cf. Burchard, Untersuchungen, p. 81. W has "as someone does not do."

z. Classical metonymy in Jewish language.

a2. The verse is doubtful. Maybe it is not a separate stanza at all.

b2. Cf. Dan 4:8.

c2. Hunting metaphors play a role in missionary language, e.g. Mk 1:17 parallel; see generally, W. H. Wuellner, The Meaning of "Fishers of Men" (NT Library; Philadelphia, Pa., 1967). Gk. dele(s)ma, "bait," is not a frequent word; cf. Josephus, War 2.8.11 §158; 2Pet 2:14, 18. In a burlesque throng of masqueraded people preceding and by his power he confirmed me, and brought me to the God of the ages and to the chief of the house of the Most High,

and gave me to eat bread of life,
and to drink a cup of wisdom,
and I became his bride for ever and ever.

SECOND PART: PHARAOH'S SON ATTEMPTS TO KIDNAP ASENETH AND RISE TO POWER IN EGYPT

I. JOSEPH'S AND ASENETH'S VISIT TO JACOB

Aseneth meets Jacob

- 1 (1) 22 And it happened after this: The seven years of plenty passed and the seven years of 2 (2) famine began to come. •And Jacob heard about Joseph his son, and Israel went to Egypt with his whole family, in the second year of the famine, in the second month, on the twenty-first of the month,<sup>a</sup> and dwelt in the land of Goshen.<sup>b</sup>
3 (3) And Aseneth said to Joseph,<sup>c</sup> "I will go and see your father, because your father Israel
4 is like a father to me and (a) god."<sup>d</sup> •And Joseph said to her, "You shall go with me and 5 (4) see my father."<sup>e</sup> •And Joseph and Aseneth went to the land of Goshen to Jacob. And Joseph's brothers met them and prostrated themselves face down to the ground before them.
6 (5) And they went in to Jacob. And<sup>f</sup> Israel was sitting on his bed, and he was an old man in comfortable old age.<sup>f</sup> 7 And Aseneth saw him and was amazed at his beauty,<sup>g</sup> because Jacob was exceedingly beautiful to look at, and his old age (was) like the youth of a handsome (young) man, and his head was all white as snow, and the hairs of his head were all exceedingly close and thick like (those) of an Ethiopian,<sup>h</sup> and his beard (was) white reaching down to his breast, and his eyes (were) flashing<sup>i</sup> and darting (flashes of) lightning, and his sinews and his shoulders and his arms were like (those) of an angel, and his thighs and his calves and his 8 feet like (those) of a giant. And Jacob was like a man who had wrestled with God.<sup>j</sup> •And Aseneth saw him and was amazed, and prostrated herself before him face down to the ground. And Jacob said to Joseph, "Is this my daughter-in-law, your wife? Blessed she 9 will be by the Most High God."<sup>k</sup> •And Jacob called her to himself and blessed her and kissed her. And Aseneth stretched out her hands and grasped Jacob's neck and hung herself the Isis procession Apuleius noticed hunters, fowlers with lime-sticks, and fishermen with fishing rods and hooks (11.8.1f.), but it is unlikely that they are symbolic figures (Griffiths, Isis-Book, p. 177). The Devil is compared to a fisherman catching different fish with different sorts of bait in the gnostic Authentikos Logos, pp. 29f.

22 a. Jub 45:1 says it was on the 1st day of the 4th month, a Wednesday according to its calendar. See 1:2.

b. Gen 41:53f.; 45:26–46:7; 47:27. The historical Goshen may have been in the northern part of the county of Heliopolis and adjoining regions farther north (Uphill, JNES 27 [1968] 291–316 and 28 [1969] 15–39. See also n. e to 1:2), but we do not know where the author thought it was.

c. Note the naïve way in which the action starts again. Some words about the whereabouts and situation of the characters known from the first part of the book, which closed some eight years earlier, would certainly be welcome.

d. The reading "like . . . god": AP(Q); "my father" d; "like (a) god to me" FW (Syr. Arm.) L1 436; gaps EG Ngr. "God" (which must be original even if "father" is not) either means a person of utmost authority (cf. Ex 4:16; Philo, Vir Mos, 1.158; Jn 20:28 is only a formal parallel) or an angelic, godlike being as described in vs. 7; cf. 17:9.

e. The reading "And" to "himself" in vs. 9: (all) except omit d; gap Ngr.

f. Lit. "in fat old age." Classical, not LXX.

g. He has gotten what Aseneth was promised in 16:16 and accorded in 18:9.

h. The reading "like (those) of an Ethiopian": Syr.; "like (those) of an Indian man" Arm. (Aithiops may also mean one of the dark aborigines of India); "his teeth however like (those) of an Ethiopian (Gen 49:12?)" 436; omit a; gaps rest. In our terms "Ethiopian" should be Nubian or Sudanese.

i. Gk. charopoioi is very rare; cf. Gen 42:19 BA.

j. "And . . . God" (Syr. Arm. 436); omit AP; gaps rest. Cf. Gen 32:25–33.

on her father's neck<sup>k</sup> just like someone hangs on to his father's neck when he returns from fighting into his house, and she kissed him.<sup>l</sup> • And after this they ate and drank. And Joseph and Aseneth went (back) to their house.

Simeon and Levi see Joseph and Aseneth home

11 And Simeon and Levi, Joseph's brethren, the sons of Leah, alone escorted them; but the sons of Zilpah and Bilhah, Leah's and Rachel's maidservants, did not escort them, because they envied (them) and were hostile against them.<sup>m</sup> • And Levi was on Aseneth's right (side) and Joseph on (her) left. • And<sup>n</sup> Aseneth grasped Levi's hand. And Aseneth loved Levi exceedingly beyond all of Joseph's brethren, because he was one who attached himself to the Lord, and he was a prudent man and a prophet of the Most High and sharp-sighted with his eyes, and he used to see letters<sup>o</sup> written in heaven by the finger of God<sup>p</sup> and he knew the unspeakable (mysteries) of the Most High God<sup>q</sup> and revealed them to Aseneth in secret, because he himself, Levi, would love Aseneth very much, and see her place of rest<sup>r</sup> in the highest, and her walls like adamantine eternal walls, and her foundations founded upon a rock of the seventh heaven.<sup>s</sup>

II. THE PLOT OF PHARAOH'S SON AGAINST ASENETH AND JOSEPH

Pharaoh's son fails to persuade Simeon and Levi to help him

1 (1) 23 And it happened while Joseph and Aseneth were passing by,<sup>a</sup> Pharaoh's firstborn son saw them from the wall.<sup>b</sup> And he saw Aseneth and was cut (to the heart), and (for some time) he was heavily indignant and felt sick<sup>c</sup> because of her beauty. And he said, "Thus it shall not be."<sup>d</sup>

2 (3) And Pharaoh's son sent messengers and called to him Simeon and Levi. And the men came to him and stood before him. And Pharaoh's firstborn son said to them, "I know today<sup>e</sup> that you are powerful men beyond all men on the earth, and by these right (hands) of yours the city of the Shechemites has been overthrown, and by these two swords of yours thirty thousand fighting men were cut down.<sup>f</sup> • And behold, today I will take you as companions for myself,<sup>g</sup> and give you plenty of gold and silver, and servants and maids

k. Gk. trachēlos is distinct from previous auchēn, which is the hind part of the neck. Traditional phrase, e.g. Gen 45:15; 46:29; 50:1; 3Mac 5:49; Tab B 6:2.

l. The reading "just . . . him" has been reconstructed on the assumption of split tradition from "just . . . house" (Syr. Arm. 436) and "and . . . him" a (E) d; omit both phrases FW; gaps G L1 Ngr.

m. Tradition, none directly from the Joseph story, is reflected in this verse. The relationship between Simeon and Levi may go back to Gen 34:25–31; 49:5–7, although they are severely censured there, whereas Levi is a thoroughly positive figure in JosAsen (see Intro.) as in ancient Jewish lore generally, and Simeon could be, were it not for his temper (see 23:7). Hostility of Dan, Gad, Naphtali, and Asser, the sons of Zilpah and Bilhah (Gen 30:1–13), against their brothers, especially Joseph, probably was developed on the basis of certain features of Gen 37 and is likewise evidenced in contemporary literature (e.g. TGad 1; Aptowitz, HUCA 1 [1924] 284f.).

n. Perhaps we should shift the beginning of vs. 13 to the next clause.

o. Those grammata would be writings such as the Book of the Living (15:4, 12x) or the heavenly tablets read by Jacob (Jub 32:21; PrJos Fragment B), Asser (TAss 5:4), or Enoch (1En 103:2; 106:19; cf. further TLevi 5:4; TAss 2:10), rather than letters inserted in the sky.

p. The reading "by the finger of God": Syr. 436 (cf. 15:4, 12x); omit a d; gaps rest.

q. The reading "and . . . God": G (Syr.) Arm. (436 "read" instead of "know"); "and read them" a d; gaps rest. Perhaps a case of split tradition which ought to be reconstructed as "and read . . . and he knew . . ."

r. Cf. Isa 66:1 LX(X?). On the "rest" see Intro.

s. The reading "and her walls . . . heaven": (Syr. Arm. [332 "third," Yovs "second" heaven] 436); omit a d; gaps b L1 Ngr.

23 a. The reading "when they were going away to Jacob (absolute genitive)": added A(PQ); gap Ngr.; omit rest.

b. Does the author intend the city wall? Cf. Gen 12:14; 2Sam 11:2.

c. The reading "and was . . . sick": (all); except "he became mad about her" AP(Q) d. Cf. 6:1; 7:3.

d. "And . . . be" (all); except omit a G d; gap Ngr. See also 4:11.

e. See 4:7.

f. Also vs. 14. Cf. Gen 34; Jub 30; TLevi 1–7.

g. "And . . . myself" (a b Syr. Arm. 436); "And behold I will take you for my assistance today" B; "But I ask you for my assistance; hurry" D (L1); gaps Slav. Ngr. Phil adopts both D and the majority reading (following F). "Companions" denotes members of Pharaoh's son's retinue (see also vs. 4), not just "pals."

and houses and big (estates as) inheritance.<sup>h</sup> Only do this thing and show mercy on me,<sup>i</sup> for I have been insulted very much by your brother Joseph, for he himself took Aseneth 4 (5) my (envisaged) wife who was betrothed to me from the beginning.<sup>j</sup> • And now, come assist me, and we will make war on Joseph your brother, and I will kill him with my sword,<sup>k</sup>
 5 (6) and have Aseneth for (my) wife, and you will be to me brothers and faithful friends.<sup>l</sup>
 However, do this thing. But if you are too cowardly to do this thing, and despise my 6 purpose, behold, my sword is prepared against you.<sup>m</sup> • And while he was saying this, he exposed his sword and showed it to them.

But when the men, Simeon and Levi, heard these words, they were exceedingly cut (to 7 (7) the heart), because Pharaoh's son had spoken to them in a tyrannical fashion.<sup>n</sup> • And Simeon was a daring and bold man,<sup>o</sup> and he intended to lay his hand on the handle of his sword 8 (8) and draw it from its sheath and strike Pharaoh's son, because he had spoken defiant things to them.<sup>p</sup> • And Levi saw the intention of his heart, because Levi was a prophet, and he was sharp-sighted with (both) his mind and his eyes, and he used to read what is written in the heart of men.<sup>q</sup> And Levi trod with his foot (on) Simeon's right foot and pressed it and 9 (9) (thus) signaled him to cease from his wrath. • And Levi said to Simeon quietly, "Why are you furious with anger<sup>r</sup> with this man? And we are men who worship God, and it does not befit us to repay evil for evil."<sup>s</sup>

10 (10) And Levi said to Pharaoh's son with frankness, his face cheerful,<sup>t</sup> and there was not the least (bit of) anger in him, but in meekness of heart he said to him, "Why does our lord<sup>u</sup> speak words such as these? And we are men who worship God, and our father is a friend<sup>v</sup> 11 (11) of the Most High God, and Joseph our brother is like the firstborn son of God. • And how could we do this wicked thing,<sup>w</sup> and sin before our God and before our father Israel<sup>x</sup> and 12 before our brother Joseph?<sup>y</sup> • And now, listen to my words. It does not befit a man who worships God to injure anyone in any way. And if anyone wants to injure a man who worships God, that (first-mentioned) man who worships God does not succor him (the 13 injurer),<sup>z</sup> because a sword is not in his hands.<sup>a2</sup> • And you at least guard against speaking 12) any longer about our brother Joseph words such as these. But if you insist on this wicked purpose of yours, behold, our swords are drawn in our right hands before you."

14 (13) And Simeon and Levi drew their swords from their sheaths and said, "Behold, have you

h. Lit. plural. See 3:5.

i. Lit. "make mercy with me." Biblical, e.g. 1Sam 20:14; Lk 10:37.

j. Pharaoh thought otherwise, 1:7-9; but cf. 4:11. Undoubtedly he means: "by Fortune, unknown to man," as 21:3. On "wife" see 21:1.

k. "I will make war" and "we will kill" are also well attested. The textual situation calls for further scrutiny.

l. The words denote rank, rather than personal intimacy; cf. 1Mac 14:40 (see also vs. 3).

m. "However . . . thing ("H.—thing" omit EFW Syr. L1). But . . . you" (b Syr. Arm. L1 436); "But if you do not hear my words I will kill you with my sword" AP(Q) d; gaps Slav. Ngr. On "thing" see vs. 11.

n. "But . . . fashion" (EFGW Syr. Arm. 436 Br); omit a d; gaps L1 Slav. Ngr.

o. Cf. 28:12f. Simeon's character goes back to Gen 34:25-31; 49:5-7; cf. on 22:11.

p. Cf. Gen 42:7, 30; Jude 15.

q. The reading "and he was . . . men": (G Syr. Arm. 436); "and he saw in advance all the (things) to come" (B) D Phil; omit AP EF; gaps rest. For this description of a prophet see e.g. Lk 7:39, also Mk 2:8 parallel; Jn 2:25.

r. The reading "with anger": E Syr.? Arm. (436); omit a G d; gaps rest. "To be furious with anger (thymousthai orgē)" is prevalent in LXX, e.g. Gen 39:19.

s. Also 29:3, cf. 28:5, 14, one of the most important ethical principles held up in JosAsen.

The only exact parallels are Rom 12:17; 1Thes 5:15; 1Pet 3:9 and later on ApSedr 7:7; Letter of Polycarpus, 2:2. See further Intro.

t. Esther keeps up a cheerful face in spite of a fearful heart (Esth 5:1b).

u. The reading "does our Lord": AP EFW Syr. Arm. L1 436; "do you, my lord" (Q) G d; gap Ngr. Cf. Gen 44:7 LXX.

v. Witnesses a FW 436; "near and beloved" Syr.; "beloved" Arm. (as in following clause, where d also has it instead of "son"); "slave" d; "puer" ("child" or "servant") L1; "guest" Slav.; gaps EG Ngr. The title "friend of God" is here drawn from Jewish tradition, which applied it above all to Abraham, but Egyptian and Greek tradition (e.g. Epictetus, Diss., 2.17.29; the Stoic) have it too (G. Stählin, "philos etc.," TDNT 9, 146-71).

w. Lit. "word (rēma)," also vs. 5 and 24:14. A biblicalism; cf. e.g. Gen 18:25. See also 17:1.

x. Witnesses AP Syr. L1 436; "Jacob" GW Arm.; omit F; gaps rest.

y. Cf. Gen 39:9. See also on 7:4.

z. Other translations: "that (injured) man who worshippeth God avengeth not himself upon him (the injurer)" Br; "so schützt sich jener Gottesfürchtige doch nicht vor ihm (the injurer)" Rie. But, for this, "him" would here have to be in the accusative, as in 24:7, not in the dative.

a2. But cf. vs. 14. Are we to understand: "not wantonly"?

seen these swords? With these two swords the Lord God punished the insult of the Shechemites (by) which they insulted the sons of Israel, because of our sister Dinah whom 15 (14) Shechem the son of Hamor had defiled.” • And the son of Pharaoh saw their swords drawn and was exceedingly afraid and trembled over his whole body, because their swords were flashing forth (something) like a flame of fire, and the eyes of Pharaoh’s son darkened, and 16 (15) he fell on his face on the ground beneath their feet. • And Levi stretched out his right hand and grasped<sup>b2</sup> him and said to him, “Rise and do not be afraid. Only guard against speaking 17 (16) any longer a wicked word about our brother Joseph.” • And Simeon and Levi went away from the presence of Pharaoh’s son.

Pharaoh’s son enlists the help of Dan and Gad, Naphtali and Asher. They set up an ambush for Aseneth

1 (1) 24 And the son of Pharaoh was full of fear and distress, because he was afraid of Joseph’s brothers, Simeon and Levi, and he was still weighed down by Aseneth’s beauty and
 2 (2) distressed with great overwhelming<sup>a</sup> distress. • And his servants said to him into the ear, saying, “Behold, the sons of Bilhah and the sons of Zilpah, Leah’s and Rachel’s maidservants, Jacob’s wives, are hostile to Joseph and Aseneth and envy them. And these will be in your
 3 (3) power<sup>b</sup> according to your will.” • And Pharaoh’s son sent messengers and called them to himself. And they came to him at the first hour of the night and stood before him. And Pharaoh’s son said to them, “I have a word (to say) to you, because<sup>c</sup> you are powerful
 4 (4) men.” • And Dan and Gad, the elder brothers, said to him, “Let our lord say to his servants what he wants (to say), and your servants will listen,<sup>d</sup> and we will do according to your 5 (5) will.”<sup>e</sup> • And Pharaoh’s son rejoiced exceedingly with great joy and said to his servants, “Withdraw from me a little, because I have a confidential word (to say) to these men.”
 6 And they all withdrew.
 7 (6) And Pharaoh’s son lied to them and<sup>f</sup> said, “Behold, blessing<sup>g</sup> and death (are set) before
 7 (7) your face. Take now rather the blessing<sup>g</sup> and not the death, ‘because you are powerful men and will not die like women,<sup>h</sup> but be brave and avenge yourself on your enemies. • For I
 8 (8) heard Joseph your brother saying to Pharaoh my father concerning you, ‘Children of my father’s maidservants are Dan and Gad and Naphtali and Asher, and they are not my 9 (9) brothers. And I will wait for my father’s death<sup>i</sup> and (then) I will blot them out from the earth<sup>j</sup> and all their offspring lest they share the inheritance with us, because they are children
 9 (10) of maidservants.’<sup>k</sup> • And these (men) have sold me to the Ishmaelites,<sup>l</sup> and I will repay them according to the whole insult of theirs which they committed against me wickedly. Only 10 (11) let my father die (first).’ • And Pharaoh, my father, commended him and said to him, ‘Well you have spoken, child. Then, take from me men (who are) powerful in fighting and go out to meet them<sup>m</sup> in accordance with what they did to you. And I will be a helper to you.’”
 11 (12) And when the men heard the words of Pharaoh’s son, they were exceedingly troubled

b2. Gk. ekratēsen AP G Arm. 436; “erected (ègeiren)” Q FW Syr.; “raised (anestēsen)” E d; gaps L1 Ngr.

24 a. Lit. “super-great.”

b. Gk. hypocheirioi, lit. “under-the-hand-(people).” LXX often use this for subjugated groups.

c. “I . . . because” (FGW Arm. 436); “I learned from many that” a; “I know that” d; omit Syr.; gaps E L1 Ngr. Is this a case of split tradition?

d. The reading “and . . . listen”: (AP Syr.) 436; “and we . . . listen” G Arm.; omit Q d; gaps rest. Cf. 1Sam 3:9f.

e. Witnesses AQ(P) G d Syr. Arm. 436; “word” EFW; gaps L1 Ngr.

f. The reading “lied . . . and”: (AP E? d); omit FGW Syr. Arm. 436; gaps Q L1 Ngr. Pharaoh’s son tries a new approach in the following verses.

g. The reading “blessing,” both occurrences:

(all); except “life” G Syr.; gaps E Ngr. Cf. Deut 30:19; Jer 21:8. A similar alternative in weaker terms is proposed to Joseph by Potiphar’s wife in Josephus, Anr 2.4.3 §48f.

h. Also 25.7; cf. LAB 31:7.

i. Cf. Gen 47:28.

j. The reading “from the earth”: a G (after “offspring”) Syr.; gaps E Ngr.; omit rest.

k. Cf. Gen 21:10; Aptowitz, HUCA 1 (1924) 285.

l. Cf. Gen 37:25–28.

m. The reading “and . . . them (kai hypexelthe autous or autois)”: A d; “and give them back(?)” Slav.; omit P; paraphrastic Syr.; gaps rest. The translation is difficult; “and proceed against them” Br; “und belange sie” Rie; “et sors secrètement pour traiter les frères” Phil. The rendering “and keep out of their way” would suit the verb better, but not in this context.

- 12 (13) and distressed and said to Pharaoh's son, "We beg you, lord, help us."<sup>n</sup> •And Pharaoh's 13 son said to them, "I will be a helper to you if you hear my words." •And the men said,
 "Behold, we are your servants before you.<sup>o</sup> Give us orders, and we will do according to 14 your will." •And Pharaoh's son said to them, "I will kill my father Pharaoh this night, because Pharaoh my father is like a father to Joseph and said to him (that he would) help him against you. And you kill Joseph. And I will take Aseneth for a wife for myself, and you will be brothers to me and fellow heirs<sup>p</sup> of all my (things). However, do this thing."
 15 (14) And Dan and Gad said to him, "We are your servants<sup>q</sup> today and will do everything which you have ordered us. And we have heard Joseph saying to Aseneth today, 'Go tomorrow to the field (which is) our inheritance, because it is the hour of the vintage.' And he gave (as an escort to be) with her six hundred men powerful in fighting and fifty 16, 17 forerunners. •And now, listen to us, and we will speak to our lord." •And they spoke to 18 (15) him all their secret words (and said), "Give us men for war."<sup>r</sup> •And Pharaoh's son gave to the four brothers five hundred men each, and them he appointed their chiefs and commanders.
 19 (16) And Dan and Gad said to him, "We are your servants today, and will do everything that you have ordered us. We will go by night and set up an ambush in the wadi,<sup>s</sup> and hide in
 (17) the thicket of the reeds. And you, take with you fifty bowmen on horses,<sup>t</sup> and go far ahead
 (18) of us.<sup>u</sup> And Aseneth will come and fall into our hands.<sup>v</sup> And we will cut down the men who are with her. And Aseneth will flee ahead with her carriage<sup>w</sup> and fall into your hands, (19) and you will do to her as your soul desires.<sup>x</sup> And after that we will kill Joseph as he is
 (20) distressed over Aseneth, and his children we will kill before his eyes."<sup>y</sup> And Pharaoh's son rejoiced when he heard these words. And he sent them out and two thousand fighting men with them.
 20 (21) And they came to the wadi and hid in the thicket of the reeds. (And) they split into four detachments.<sup>z</sup> And there were sitting across the wadi, on the forward section as it were, on this side of the road and the other five hundred men each; likewise on this side of the wadi the rest were waiting, and they, too, were sitting in the thicket of the reeds, on this side of the road and the other five hundred men each.<sup>a2</sup> And between them the road (was) wide and spacious.

n. "For from now on we are your household servants and slaves and will die with you" added (a); omit G Syr. Arm. 436; gaps rest. It is assumed here that the a reading is an anticipation from vs. 13 (or 15:19?), but perhaps the case merits reconsideration; cf. Mk 14:31 parallel.

o. "Behold . . . you" (b Syr. Arm. 436); omit a (including "the men"); gaps d L1 Ngr. See also vs. 11.

p. Gk. sygklêronomos is not otherwise attested before Philo and Rom 8:17; Eph 3:6 (cf. Burchard, ZNW 61 [1970] 169); Heb 11:9; 1Pet 3:7. Gk. syn refers to joint possession. The testator in this case is Pharaoh, rather than his son.

q. Cf. Josh 9:8, 11; LAB 57:4.

r. Vs. 17: "And . . . words" (a FWG Arm. 436); "and may he give us men for war" Syr.; "let therefore my lord command to come with us war-men more than those" L1 (lacks vs. 16 and 18-19a); "and give us men of war, and (men) powerful for war" Slav. (lacks vs. 16 "and . . . lord"); cf. "and give us 500 men each" added in vs. 19 after "reeds" E (lacks vs. 16 "and we will," vs. 19 "ordered us"); gaps d (vs. 15 "and fifty" to 17; but B Phil begin vs. 18 "And as Pharaoh's son heard these words, he") Ngr. (E, see above). The verse is reconstructed on the assumption of split tradition, but it is utterly doubtful. The first half is well attested, but why the secrecy? The second half is poorly evidenced, but it seems to be needed as a foundation for vs. 18. There is no evidence whatsoever for a syntactical link such as "(and said)."

s. Cf. 1Sam 15:5.

t. LXX has mounted bowmen only in Jdt 2:15.

u. The reading "of us": Syr. L1 Br Rie; "of her" or "it" (autēs) a B; "it" (autō) G; omit EFW D Arm. 436 Slav. Phil; gap Ngr.

v. Witnesses a GW d Arm.; "ambush (plural)" EF L1 436; gaps Syr. Ngr.

w. Gk. ochēma (also 26:5; 27:1f., never LXX or NT), whereas Joseph's chariot is harma (e.g. 5:4). We should perhaps visualize a household vehicle designed to transport several people (cf. 27:1-5) with their luggage (cf. Chariton 2.3.3f.).

x. Traditional phrase, e.g. 1Sam 2:16; Isa 58:11 LXX.

y. Cf. 2Kgs 25:7.

z. "And . . . detachments" a (no "and" because preceding clause begins "And as"); gaps E Ngr.; omit rest. "Split" is lit. "became"; cf. Gen 2:10. Gk. archē in the sense of "military body" (as e.g. in Judg 7:16; 1Sam 13:17) seems to be a Septuagintism; cf. Josephus, Ant 1.9 §172.

a2. "And there were . . . each" (A); much shorter rest; gaps E 436 Ngr.: A alone gives a clear picture of the ambush. Words from the other witnesses may, however, be used to improve it. The road is crossing the wadi.

Pharaoh's son fails to kill his father and takes up his position in the ambush

- 1 (1) 25 And Pharaoh's son rose in that night and went to the chamber<sup>a</sup> of his father in order to kill his father with a sword. And his father's guards prevented him from going in to his 2 (2) father and said to him, "What are your orders, lord?" •And Pharaoh's son said to them, "I want to see my father, because I am going out to harvest (the vintage of) my new-
 3 (3) planted vineyard."<sup>b</sup> •And the guards said to him, "Your father suffers from a headache<sup>c</sup> and lay awake all night, and now he is resting a little.<sup>d</sup> And he said to us, 'Let no one
 4 (4) come close to me, not even my firstborn son.'" •And when he heard this,<sup>e</sup> Pharaoh's son went away hurriedly<sup>f</sup> and took with him fifty mounted bowmen and went away at their head,<sup>g</sup> just as Dan and Gad had spoken to him.

Naphtali and Asher, bitten by remorse, fail to refrain Dan and Gad

- 5 (5) And the younger brothers, Naphtali and Asher, spoke to their older brothers, Dan and Gad, saying,<sup>h</sup> "Why do you once again act wickedly against our father Israel and against 6 (6) our brother Joseph? And him the Lord is guarding like an apple of the eye.<sup>i</sup> 'Behold, have you not sold him once, and now he is king of the whole land of Egypt and savior and grain
 6 (7) giver?<sup>j</sup> •And now again, if you should attempt to act wickedly against him, he will cry to the Most High,<sup>k</sup> and he will send fire from heaven, and it will consume you,<sup>l</sup> and the angels
 7 (8) of God will fight for him against you."<sup>m</sup> •And their older brothers, Dan and Gad, were 8 angry at them and said, "But shall we die like women?<sup>n</sup> That would be absurd."<sup>o</sup> •And they went out to meet Joseph and Aseneth.<sup>o</sup>

III. ASENETH FALLS INTO THE AMBUSH AND IS RESCUED

BY JOSEPH'S BROTHERS

Aseneth is caught in the ambush and Levi alarms his brothers

- 1 (1) 26 And Aseneth rose at daybreak and said to Joseph, "I will go, just like you have said,<sup>a</sup> to the field (which is) our inheritance. And my soul is anxious, because you are parting

25 a. Gk. epi ton thalamon: E (d) 436; "for the death (epi ton thanaton)" FW; "in the reed (en tō kalamō)" G; "into the bedchamber (eis ton koitōna)" AP; "into the house (eis ton oikon)" Q Arm.; omit Syr.; gaps L1 Ngr.

b. Gk. ampelos, "grapevine," is used for "vineyard" on papyri since the third century B.C., but this and possibly Rev 14:18f. are the first known occurrences in literary texts.

c. Witnesses b Syr. Arm. L1; "ache" a d; illegible 436; gap Ngr.

d. The reading "a little": FGW Arm. L1 436; omit a E d Syr.; gap Ngr.

e. The reading "when . . . this": AP L1; gap Ngr.; omit rest.

f. Witnesses b Arm. 436; "in anger" a d (Syr.?): omit L1; gap Ngr. Is this a split tradition?

g. Lit. "ahead of them," a traditional phrase implying leadership; cf. e.g. Tob 5:18; LAB 39:1; IQSa 1.17,23.

h. On this intervention cf. TZeb 1:7.

i. Also 26:2. Traditional, e.g. Deut 32:10; Ps 17:8; 1En 100:5.

j. This noun is not otherwise attested before imperial times.

k. The reading "he will cry (boēsei) . . . High": a; "he will go up (anabēsetai) into the heaven" EGW (Syr.) 436 Slav.; "God will pull him into heaven" Arm.; "he will call upon the God of Israel saying (omit D Phil)" d; illegible F; gaps L1 Ngr.

Gk. anaboēsetai "he will cry up" (or "out") may be behind both boēsei and anabēsetai. But perhaps this is just another case of split tradition. A possible reconstruction, assuming loss by homoiarcton, is "he will cry to the Most High, and (his cry) will go up into the heaven" (cf. Acts 10:4).

l. Cf. 2Kgs 1:10, 12, 14; Sir 48:3; TAb B 12; Lk 9:54.

m. Cf. e.g. 2Kgs 6:16f.; 2Mac 3:25f.; 3Mac 6:18f.; IQM 12:8; Mt 26:53; Berger, Auferstehung, pp. 270–73, n. 106. See also 28:1.

n. See 24:6.

o. "That . . . Aseneth" a ("in" for "out" AP) d; gaps L1 Ngr.; omit Slav. and rest. The end of vs. 7 is not intrinsically improbable (mē genoito, the well-known emphatic negation stemming from popular philosophical parlance, never LXX, but e.g. TJob 38:1; Rom 3:4); but vs. 8 is difficult, because the bad brothers have already gone out (24:19f.), and not against Joseph at that. Is vs. 8 an addition? But the style of JosAsen requires some conclusion of the scene. Is this an early example of flashback technique, perhaps somewhat unexpectedly and rather clumsily done? Or shall we assume that vss. 5–8 have been misplaced at some early date? They would fit better between 24:19 and 24:20.

26 a. Reported in 24:15.

- 2 (2) from me.” •And Joseph said to her, “Courage, and do not be afraid, but go,<sup>b</sup> because the Lord is with you,<sup>c</sup> and he himself will guard you like an apple of the eye from every wicked deed!<sup>d</sup> •For I, too, will go to my grain giving<sup>e</sup> and will give bread<sup>f</sup> to all men, and the whole land will surely not perish (away) from the face of the Lord.”<sup>g</sup> •And Aseneth went away on her way, and Joseph went away to his grain giving.
- 5 (5) And Aseneth and the six hundred men with her came to the place of the wadi. And suddenly those who lay in ambush<sup>h</sup> rushed out of their ambushes and joined battle with Aseneth’s men, and cut them down with the edge of the sword,<sup>i</sup> and they killed all her forerunners, but Aseneth fled ahead with her carriage.
- 6 (7) And Levi, the son of Leah, perceived all these (things) in (his) spirit<sup>j</sup> as a prophet, and he<sup>k</sup> declared the danger<sup>l</sup> (in which) Aseneth (was) to his brothers the sons of Leah.<sup>m</sup> And each of them took his sword and put it on his thigh, and they took their shields and put them on their arms, and they took their spears in their right hands, and pursued after Aseneth in rapid course.
- 7 (8) And Aseneth was fleeing ahead, and behold, Pharaoh’s son and fifty horsemen with him met<sup>n</sup> her. •And Aseneth saw him and was afraid and troubled very much, and her whole body trembled. And she called on the name of the Lord her God.

Benjamin wounds Pharaoh’s son and kills his troup with stones

- 1 (1), (2) 27 And Benjamin<sup>a</sup> sat at Aseneth’s left (hand) in her carriage.<sup>b</sup> And Benjamin was a boy of eighteen years, big and strong and powerful, and there was unspeakable beauty on him, and strength like (that of) a lion cub,<sup>c</sup> and he feared the Lord exceedingly. •And Benjamin leapt down from the carriage and took a round stone from the wadi and filled his hand<sup>d</sup> and hurled (the stone) at Pharaoh’s son and struck his left temple and wounded him with a heavy<sup>e</sup> wound. •And Pharaoh’s son fell down from his horse on the ground, being half dead.<sup>f</sup> •And Benjamin leapt and went up upon the rock, and said to Aseneth’s charioteer, 4 (4) “Give me stones<sup>g</sup> from the wadi.” •And he gave him fifty stones. And Benjamin hurled 5 (5)

b. A adds “rejoicing (masculine) completely, (by) nothing (or “no one”) being frightened (ptoumenē)”; PQ add “rejoicing (feminine) no word doing (poioumenē)”; gaps EG L1 Slav. Ngr.; omit rest.

c. Traditional; see W. C. van Unnik, “Dominus vobiscum,” New Testament Essays: Studies in Memory of Thomas Walter Manson, ed. A. J. B. Higgins (Manchester, 1959) pp. 270–305.

d. Cf. e.g. Ps 120:7; Jub 12:29; 31:24; IQS 2.3.

e. Gk. sitodasia, in LXX only Gen 42:19, 33, no equivalent in MT. Also cf. vs. 4.

f. Witnesses FW Arm. L1 (436); “grain” AP d Syr.; omit E Slav.; gaps Q G Ngr.

g. Cf. Gen 6:11. If this vs. in Gen is alluded to we should perhaps translate, “. . . surely not grow corrupt in the Lord’s sight.” Cf. further Gen 41:36; 47:13.

h. The reading “those . . . ambush”: b (“for them” added G) Arm. 436 (L1) Slav. (added “for her”); “the men” Syr.; “those around Pharaoh’s son” AP(Q) d (against 24:19); gap Ngr.

i. Lit. “in mouth of sword,” the well-known biblical phrase, e.g. Gen 34:26; Jdt 2:27; Sir 28:18; Lk 21:24.

j. Cf. Mk 2:8; see Intro.

k. The reading “the son . . . he”: (a) d; cf. “And as Levi and Benjamin saw (singular)” Ngr. (but context is garbled); omit rest including Slav.

l. As often, kindynos means “predicament,” rather than “risk.”

m. The reading “the sons of Leah”: E Syr. Arm. 436 Ngr.; “the sons of Israel” (FGW); omit rest.

n. Lit. “meets (apanta).”

27 a. He appears unexpectedly. 1Sam 17, especially vs. 48–51, have inspired the following verses and 29:2. This explains why Benjamin is a “boy” despite his eighteen years (on those cf. 1:4 and also TLevi 12:5).

b. “And . . . carriage” (E)F(G)W (“right” for “left” E G) Arm. (436); “And Benjamin was sitting with her (w. h. omit Slav.) on the carriage at (the) right (side) (“at . . . side” omit d only)” (a) d; “Benjamin however with her was in the carriage” Syr.; “Benjamin however (just) as he was on Aseneth’s carriage with her” L1; “Sat however also near her in her right part Benjamin the son of Jacob or rather the brother of Joseph” Ngr.

c. Cf. Gen 49:9 (Judah). Benjamin’s description varies considerably. Maybe more can be made of the evidence.

d. The expression appears to mean that he “gripped the stone firmly.” Cf. 2Kgs 9:24, lit. “And Jehu filled his hand with the bow.”

e. Witnesses a EFW Syr. Arm. (436); “great and heavy” G Slav. Phil; “great” Ngr.; gaps d L1.

f. The reading “being half dead”: (a) d (L1) Ngr. (661 only, see Burchard, NTS 24 [1978] 73f.); probably Arm. (Burchard, “Joseph und Aseneth 25–29 armenisch,” JSJ 10 [1979] 1–10); omit EG Syr. 436 Slav.; gap FW. Gk. hemithanēs is first attested by Dionysius of Halicarnassus and Diodorus of Sicily. Cf. Lk 10:30; Burchard, ZNW 61 (1970) 158.

g. See vs. 5. Perhaps we should prefix “fifty.”

the fifty stones and killed the fifty men who were with the son of Pharaoh.<sup>h</sup> And all the stones penetrated their temples.

Levi and his brothers kill the troops of Dan and Gad

- 6 (6) And the sons of Leah, Ruben and Simeon, Levi and Judah, Issachar and Zebulun, pursued after the men who had been lying in ambush for Aseneth and fell upon them unawares<sup>i</sup> and cut them all down; and the six men killed two thousand.<sup>j</sup>

Dan and Gad, Naphtali and Asher try to kill Aseneth, but their swords turn to ashes

- 7 (7) And their brothers, the sons of Bilhah and Zilpah, fled from their presence and said, "We have been destroyed by our brothers, and Pharaoh's son has died by the hand of Benjamin the boy, and all (who were) with him have been destroyed by the one hand of the boy Benjamin. *And now,<sup>k</sup> come, let us kill Aseneth and Benjamin and flee into this thicket of reeds." *And they came toward Aseneth holding their swords drawn, full of blood.
- 10 And Aseneth saw them and was exceedingly afraid and said:

Lord my God, who made me alive again and rescued me<sup>l</sup> from the idols and the corruption of death,<sup>m</sup> who said to me, "Your soul will live for ever,"<sup>n</sup> rescue me from the hands of these wicked men.

- 11 And the Lord God heard Aseneth's voice, and at once their swords fell from their hands on the ground and were reduced to ashes.

The wicked brothers give up and ask Aseneth to intercede for them with Levi and his brothers

- 1 (1) 28 And the sons of Bilhah and Zilpah saw this great thing and were exceedingly afraid and 2 (2) said, "The Lord fights against us for Aseneth."<sup>a</sup> *And they fell on the face to the ground and prostrated themselves before Aseneth and said, "Have mercy on us, your slaves,
3 because you are our mistress and queen. *And we have wickedly committed evil (things)
3 (3) against you and against our brother Joseph,<sup>b</sup> and the Lord repaid us according to our works.<sup>c</sup>
4 *And now we, your slaves, beg you, have mercy on us and rescue us from the hands of our brothers, because they arrived as avengers of the insult (done to) you, and their swords
5 are against us. *And<sup>d</sup> we know that our brothers are men who worship God and do not 6 repay anyone evil for evil. *Anyway, be gracious to your slaves, mistress, before them."<sup>e</sup>
- 7 (4) And Aseneth said to them, "Courage, and do not be afraid of your brothers, because

h. In a G d the number of stones and men, if present, is fifty (G d have it also in vs. 4); in EFW Syr. Arm. Ngr. it is forty-eight; in 436 forty-nine; Slav. has fifty in vs. 4, forty-eight in vs. 5; gap L1. Fifty is consonant with 24:19; 25:4; 26:7. Maybe Dan and Gad have been deducted erroneously to make forty-eight.

i. Cf. Josh 10:9.

j. The variants are too numerous to list here.

k. "And now" b d Syr. (436 Slav.); "and now they say" (or "said") Arm.; "Anyway therefore (omit Q) the (omit A) left behind (plural) said" a Bat ("the" omit "left . . . said" in square brackets; omit Br Rie); gaps L1 Ngr.

l. Cf. Isa 49:7, 26; 54:5, 8.

m. The reading "and rescued . . . death": AP(Q); "out of death" b Syr. Arm. 436 Slav. Phil; gaps d L1 Ngr. The a reading has been adopted on the principle of lectio longior (see Intro.) and because "rescued" makes a good parallelism with "rescue," but the evidence is poor. Cf. Rom 7:24.

n. The mention of an afterlife of the "soul"

does not by itself prove that JosAsen believes in its immortality (against Philonenko, Joseph et Aseneth, p. 215). It is compatible with other ideas of man's future life (cf. Fischer, Eschatologie und Jenseitserwartung, pp. 97–105). See further Intro.

28 a. Also cf. vs. 10. Cf. e.g. Ex 14:14, 25; 2Chr 20:29. G. Delling ("Einwirkungen der Sprache der Septuaginta in 'Joseph und Aseneth,'" JSJ 9 [1978] 29–56, see p. 45) suggests a deliberate allusion to the miraculous deliverance at the Red Sea. See further 25:6.

b. The reading "and . . . Joseph": a B (D) Phil; gaps L1 Ngr.; omit rest.

c. Cf. e.g. Ps 62:12; Prov 24:12; Sir 35:24; Rom 2:6; 2Cor 11:15.

d. Vss. 5f. (a B; vs. 5 in square brackets Bat, omit Br); omit b D (but in vs. 7 D Phil have "not repaying evil for evil" for "fearing . . . man," a vestige of the a B reading?) Syr. Arm. 436 Slav. Br Phil; gaps L1 Ngr. Vs. 5 will have to be taken as a self-correction ("And yet we know . . .") to make sense after vs. 4.

- (5) they are men who worship God and fearing God and respecting every man.<sup>e</sup> But go into this thicket of reeds, until I appease them concerning you<sup>f</sup> and make their anger cease,
 (6) because you acted in great boldness against them. Courage now, and do not be afraid.
 8 (7) Besides, the Lord<sup>g</sup> will judge between me and you."<sup>h</sup> • And Dan and Gad and their brothers fled into the thicket of reeds.

Aseneth appeases Simeon and his brothers

- (8) 9 And behold, the sons of Leah came running like three-year-old<sup>i</sup> stags against them. • And Aseneth descended from the carriage (that gave) her shelter and gave them her right hand
 (9) with tears, 'and they, falling (down), prostrated themselves on the ground before her, and wept in a loud voice; and they were seeking their brothers, the sons of their father's
 10 (10) maidservants, in order to do away with them. • And Aseneth said to them, "I beg you, spare your brothers and do not do<sup>j</sup> them evil for evil, because the Lord protected me against them, and shattered their swords, and they melted on the ground like wax from the presence
 (11) 11 of fire.<sup>k</sup> 'And this is enough for them that the Lord fights against them for us.<sup>l</sup> • And you, spare them because they are your brothers and your father Israel's blood."<sup>m</sup>
 12 (12) And Simeon said to her, "Why does our mistress speak good (things) on behalf of her
 13 (13) enemies? • No, but let us cut them down<sup>n</sup> with our swords, because they (were) first (to) plan evil (things) against us and against our father Israel and against our brother Joseph,<sup>o</sup>
 14 (14) this already twice,<sup>p</sup> and against you, our mistress and queen, today." • And Aseneth stretched out her right hand and touched Simeon's beard and kissed him and said, "By no means, brother, will you do evil for evil to your neighbor.<sup>q</sup> To the Lord will you give (the right) to punish the insult (done) by them.<sup>r</sup> And they are your brothers and your fathers, Israel's line, and they fled far from your presence. Anyway, grant them pardon."<sup>s</sup>
 15 (15), (16) And Levi went up to her and kissed her right hand and perceived that 'she wanted to 16 save the men from their brother's anger so that they would not kill them. • And<sup>t</sup> they were nearby in the thicket of reeds. • And Levi their brother perceived it and did not declare it to his brothers. For he was afraid that in their anger they might cut them down.

Levi tries to save the life of Pharaoh's son

- 1 (1) 29 And Pharaoh's son rose from the ground and sat up and spat blood from his mouth,
 2 (2) because the blood from his temple ran down over his mouth. • And Benjamin ran up to him and took his sword and drew it from its sheath, because Benjamin did not have a sword on 3 (3) his thigh, and set about to strike the breast of Pharaoh's son.<sup>a</sup> • And Levi ran up to him and grasped his hand and said, "By no means, brother, will you do this deed, because we are men who worship God, and it does not befit a man who worships God to repay evil for 4 evil nor to trample underfoot a fallen (man) nor to oppress his enemy till death. • And now,
 (4) put your sword back into its place,<sup>b</sup> and come, help me, and we will heal him of his wound; and if he lives, he will be our friend after this, and his father Pharaoh will be like our father."

e. The reading "and . . . man": G (Syr.) Arm. 436; omit AP b Slav.; gaps rest (D Phil see at vs. 5). Cf. Lk 18:2.

f. Cf. Ex 32:30.

g. The reading "may see (idoi A, idou "behold" PQ) and": added a (cf. Ex 5:21; 1Sam 24:16; 2Chr 24:22); gaps L1 Ngr.; illegible F; omit rest.

h. The whole phrase is traditional; cf. previous note and Gen 16:5; Jdt 7:24.

i. The reading "three-year-old": FGW; "young" Syr.; "many" Arm.; "in much hurry" AP(Q); omit d 436; gaps E L1 Ngr. Stags or hinds are a model of velocity in the OT, e.g. cf. Ps 18:34.

j. Witnesses FGW d Arm. 436; "repay" a Syr.; gaps rest including Slav.

k. Traditional, e.g. Ps 68:2; Micah 1:4.

l. See vs. 1.

m. "Blood" was believed to have a part in procreation (e.g. WisSol 7:2; 1En 15:4; Jn 1:13) and hence used in metonymy for "line," "family,"

"relative" (not biblical). See the evidence in J. Behm, "haima etc.," TDNT 1, 172-77; SibOr 3.827; Josephus, War 1.18.4 §359; Apuleius 4.23.4.

n. The reading "limb from limb": added a D; gaps E L1 Slav. Ngr.; omit rest.

o. Cf. Gen 50:20.

p. The reading "this . . . twice": FGW D Syr. (Arm.) Phil; omit a B 436; gaps E L1 Slav. Ngr.

q. The reading "to your neighbor": a d; gaps E L1 Slav. Ngr.; omit rest.

r. Or "give the insult (done) by them to punish." Cf. e.g. TBenj 4:3; IQS 10.17f.; Rom 12:19.

s. "Anyway . . . pardon" AP; omit G Syr. Arm. 436; gaps rest. Doubtful.

t. Vss. 16f. (a FGW Syr. Arm. 436); omit d; gaps E L1 Slav. Ngr.

29 a. Cf. 1Sam 17:50f. See also 27:1.

b. Cf. Mt 26:52; Jn 18:11.

- 5 (5) And Levi raised Pharaoh's son from the ground and washed the blood off his face and tied a bandage to his wound, and put him upon his horse, and conducted him to his father
6 (6), (7) Pharaoh,<sup>c</sup> and described<sup>d</sup> to him all these things. •And Pharaoh rose from his throne and prostrated himself before Levi on the ground and blessed him.<sup>e</sup>

IV. THE END

- 7 (8) And on the third day Pharaoh's son died from the wound (caused by the impact) of the 8 (9) stone of Benjamin, the boy. •And Pharaoh mourned exceedingly for his firstborn son, and 9 (10) from the mourning he fell ill; and Pharaoh died<sup>f</sup> at a hundred and nine<sup>g</sup> years, and left his 9 (11) diadem to Joseph. •And Joseph reigned as king in Egypt for forty-eight years,<sup>h</sup> and after this he gave the diadem to Pharaoh's younger offspring, who was at the breast when Pharaoh died. And Joseph was like a father to Pharaoh's younger son in the land of Egypt all the days of his life.<sup>i</sup>

c. Cf. Lk 10:30–35. Levi's attitude borders on the love of one's enemy as implied in the Good Samaritan and prescribed by Mt 5:43–48; yet it is not the same thing. Levi exhibits clemency toward a defeated enemy, as becomes a man in power, a deed both noble and sensible which serves the interests of both parties (cf. e.g. LetAris 227). Jesus exacts love of one's persecutors from a subdued minority predicated upon God's boundless mercy. Cf. L. Schottroff, "Non-Violence and the Love of One's Enemies," Essays on the Love Commandment, ed. R. H. Fuller (Philadelphia, 1978) pp. 9–39.

d. (All), except "they d." G L1 Ngr. Phil (no footnote); gaps E Slav.

e. The reading "and blessed him": a B Arm.?: "and he lifted up his son from the ground" 436; "Pharaoh however was grateful to them that they had not killed him" vs. 6 L1; omit FG D Syr. Phil; gaps EW Slav. Ngr.

f. Arm. ends here.

g. The reading "a hundred and nine": A E d; "99" GW L1; "199" F; "190" Ngr.; "170" PQ; "177" Syr.; "160" 436; uncertain Slav. If the number 109 is correct; Pharaoh died one year before the ideal age of 110 years, which Joseph reached (Gen 50:26).

h. Similar figures in Jewish lore; cf. Aptowitz, HUCA 1 (1924) 286.

i. The reading "all . . . life": Syr.; "until his death glorifying and lauding God" a (B); omit EG D L1 436 Phil; W stopped after vs. 9 "years," F at some point after "offspring in Egypt" (illegible); Arm. after vs. 7 "died," Slav. after vs. 9 "son," Ngr. after vs. 9 "years"; "celebrating with the all beautiful Aseneth, this all beautiful Joseph" added 671; "Joseph however made with Aseneth two sons, Manasse and Ephraim [cf. 21:9], and saw children of his children" added 661. The text is doubtful; a might be given preference on the strength of Tob 14:15f.; TAB B 14:7, but perhaps we should break off after "of Egypt." Most witnesses add some historical remarks from Gen or Ex, an admonition, a note of completion, giving the title of the book, a doxology, a colophon, or a combination of such items; a adds Gen 50:22b–26 LXX, which is a remark about Aseneth's death and burial, and a doxology.

LIFE OF ADAM AND EVE

(First Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY M. D. JOHNSON

The Greek and Latin texts of the Life of Adam and Eve both purport to narrate in Midrashic form some episodes in the life of the "first-made" after their expulsion from Paradise, especially their deathbed recollections and instructions.

The Greek text (ApMos), after relating the murder of Abel by Cain and the birth of Seth, moves rapidly to Adam's deathbed, from which he tells how illness resulted from the first sin. He asks Seth and Eve to return to Paradise for oil from a tree with which he might be anointed and find rest from his pains. On the way to Paradise Seth is attacked by a wild beast and learns that the revolt of the animal world is another result of the Fall. At Paradise the archangel Michael informs Seth that the oil of mercy will not be given men until the day of resurrection. Seth and Eve return to Adam, who asks Eve to tell all their children the story of the Fall from Paradise. This she does at length (ApMos 15–30), describing the devil's plot with the serpent, his entry into Paradise, the temptation and Fall, God's appearance in Paradise to announce the punishments, and the expulsion from Paradise. Eve then repents in great sorrow. Adam dies, and Eve witnesses the awesome return of God to the earthly Paradise. Adam's soul is washed in Lake Acheron and taken up into the heavenly Paradise, while his body and that of Abel are prepared for burial in the spot where Adam's body had been formed at creation. Six days later Eve also dies and her body is buried in the same place.

The Latin text (Vita) begins differently;<sup>1</sup> after a description of their repentance (1–17), Eve is shown standing in the Tigris River and Adam in the Jordan. When Eve's time of penitence is half accomplished, Satan appears as an angel and deceives her a second time, inducing her to interrupt her penance. Adam approaches her and the devil. Satan then tells them that his fall from heaven resulted from his refusal to worship Adam, the image of God. When Adam completes his period of penance, Eve separates herself from him until the birth of Cain. The Latin here adds the story of Adam's ascension into the heavenly Paradise (25–29) but omits Eve's story of the Fall (ApMos 15–30). It continues with the account of the death and burial of Adam, and concludes with Eve's command to her children to record the story of Adam and Eve for posterity on tablets of stone and clay.

Texts

Tischendorf published an edition of the Greek text in 1866 which was based on four manuscripts (A1 B C D) and which, together with two others (E1 E2), was used as the basis for the English translation of Wells and the German of Fuchs.<sup>2</sup> Seventeen additional manuscripts have been located, ten of which, along with the previous six, have been collated by J. L. Sharpe as variants to the Tischendorf text.<sup>3</sup> These sixteen manuscripts, with sigla as used by Tischendorf, Fuchs, Wells, and Sharpe, along with an estimation of date, present location, and degree of completeness, are:

<sup>1</sup> In the following pages I have designated the Lat. text as Vita and the Gk. text as ApMos. Two MSS (F and H) of ApMos have a version of the repentance and are translated below as a parallel to Vita 1ff.

<sup>2</sup> See Bibliography.

<sup>3</sup> J. L. Sharpe, Prolegomena, pt. 2.

- A1. 13th–14th cent.; Venice; ends at 36:3.
- A2. 15th–17th cent.; Athos; complete, except 13:2–16:4 is missing.
- B. 13th–16th cent.; Vienna; omits 21:3–25:2 and 33:2–43:4.
- C. 11th–13th cent.; Vienna; this is the most complete manuscript.
- D1. 11th cent.; Milan; 18:1–36:1 is missing.<sup>4</sup>
- D2. 12th–14th cent.; Strassburg; complete.
- D3. 1518 A.D.; Athens; complete.
- D4. 13th cent.; Athos; complete.
- D5. 16th–17th cent.; Andros; 16:3–29:3 is missing.
- E1. 16th cent.; Paris; essentially complete.
- E2. 15th–16th cent.; Montpellier; essentially complete.
- F. 15th–17th cent.; Vatican; incomplete in 43; has the “repentance” following 29:6.
- G. 16th cent.; Brescia; complete.
- H. 16th–17th cent.; Patmos; complete; has the “repentance” following 29:6.
- M1. 15th–16th cent.; Ankara; complete.
- M2. 16th cent.; Patmos; complete.

Sharpe suggests a classification of these manuscripts into four translations.<sup>5</sup> A (A1 A2); D (D1 D2 D3 D4 D5 M1 M2); C (C E1 E2 G); F (F H); manuscript B is unclassified. Since progress in the critical analysis of the text does not yet allow a firm conclusion about the classification and relative priority among these manuscripts,<sup>6</sup> it has seemed best to present a translation which takes into account the major variants of all available manuscripts.

The translation of the Vita is based on the text of Meyer, taking into account the variants indicated in his apparatus as well as some of those given by Mozley.<sup>7</sup> Meyer classified the manuscripts, all of which are located in Munich except for the last mentioned, which is in Paris, as follows:

- i. Three manuscripts: S, ninth century; T, tenth century; M, twelfth century. These do not have 29:4–15 or 51:3–9 and are Meyer’s main authority, with preference for manuscript S.
- ii. Four manuscripts, one from the thirteenth to fourteenth centuries, the others from the fifteenth century. These contain the lengthy additions to chapters 29 and 51; eight of Mozley’s manuscripts, as well as some medieval translations, conform to this textual type.
- iii. Four manuscripts from the fifteenth century, which include 29:4–15 as well as material on the history of the wood of the cross (similar to one manuscript of Mozley).
- iv. The Paris manuscript, produced in the ninth century or later, related to II; contains 29:4–15 and 51:3–9.

Significant versions of the Greek text are the Armenian<sup>8</sup> and, with more Christian interpolations, the Slavonic.<sup>9</sup> The Greek and Latin original texts are both certainly prior to these and perhaps also to the other Adam literature, sometimes of Christian production, such as The Cave of Treasures, extant in Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic; The Combat of Adam and Eve, a Christian work of the eleventh century translated from Arabic into Ethiopic; the Testament of Adam, extant primarily in Greek and Syriac, and an Apocalypse of Adam among the gnostic works discovered at Nag Hammadi.<sup>10</sup> These documents reveal the

<sup>4</sup> MS D1 was published by A. M. Ceriani in Monumenta Sacra et Profana (Milan, 1868) vol. 5, pt. 1, pp. 19–24.

<sup>5</sup> Sharpe, Prolegomena, pt. 1, pp. 185–203.

<sup>6</sup> Sharpe’s contention (pt. 1, p. 201) that MSS E1 and E2 preserve “the earliest type of text and the most conservative in style” goes against some apparently secondary features of those MSS, e.g. the omission of koimōmenōn de autōn, “and while they were lying down in order to sleep” (2:1); the addition of “my brother” in 2:2b; ēsthenēse mikron, “he fell sick a little,” in 5:2; the addition of “branch of grace” in 9:3b and 10:1; “how were your eyes opened?” in 10:3; cf. also 11:1b and 19:2.

<sup>7</sup> See bibliography.

<sup>8</sup> F. C. Conybeare, “On the Apocalypse of Moses,” JQR 7 (1895) 216–35. See also the references in Denis, Introduction, p. 7, n. 23, and M. Stone, “The Death of Adam—An Armenian Adam Book,” HTR 59 (1966) 283–91.

<sup>9</sup> Text edited by V. Jagič, Slavische Beiträge zu den biblischen Apocryphen (Vienna, 1893), vol. 1, pp. 17–99. The Slav. version of the repentance is translated by L. S. A. Wells, APOT, vol. 2, pp. 134–36.

<sup>10</sup> For bibliography on these and other Adam materials see Denis, Introduction, pp. 7–14; Wells, APOT, vol. 2, pp. 125f.; James, LAOT, pp. 1–8.

continued interest among Christian writers in speculating upon the life of the protoplasts, Adam and Eve, and upon Seth as a recipient of revelation. To a large extent, however, these documents are later alterations of the material here presented, and are of limited use in establishing the Greek and Latin texts.

Original language

Although no Hebrew text is extant,<sup>11</sup> it is most probable that there did exist an original Hebrew document or documents from which the Apocalypse and Vita were translated, the Greek directly from the Hebrew and the Latin directly either from the Hebrew or from the Greek.<sup>12</sup> Sharpe has summarized much of the evidence which leads to this conclusion with regard to the Greek text:<sup>13</sup> the consistent parataxis; the verb preceding the subject; traces of Semitic parallelism (ApMos 34–36; 39:1–3); the use of the infinite absolute, a rarity in Aramaic (17:5; 41:3); the adjectival genitive (3:2; 21:2; 38:2; 43:5); Hebraic relative constructions (“the tree in which the oil flows out of it” in 9:3 and “my command which I delivered to you to keep it” in 22:3); and the redundant use of the participle, as in the frequently used expression “he answered and said” or “he wept, saying.” More striking are the evidences of transliterations and apparent mistranslations from the Hebrew: idou, lit., “behold,” in 41:1 (Heb. hir’ni); Jaël (see 29:4; 33:5); repeated prepositions (Gk. of 26:4); en mataiois, lit., “in follies,” an apparent mistranslation in 25:1 (see n.). In addition to this evidence offered by Sharpe, see the notes to Apocalypse 1:3 and 19:5, both of which suggest a Hebrew original.

In spite of this convincing evidence it should be noted that the author was familiar with the Septuagint of Genesis 1–5 and that the Lake Acheron of Apocalypse 37:3 is derived from Greek tradition, although it was familiar to early Christians and could have been known also to a Jewish author (see n.).

Whether the Latin is derived solely from a Greek version, partly from a Greek and partly from a Hebrew, or entirely from a Hebrew text cannot be determined conclusively. The problem is complicated by the fact that three episodes in the Latin have no direct counterpart in most manuscripts of the Greek: the repentance of Adam and Eve (1–11); Satan’s fall from heaven (12–16) and Adam’s ascension into the heavenly Paradise (25–29). Similarly, Eve’s story of the Fall in Apocalypse 15–30 has no complete parallel in Vita, although several details from it are reproduced.<sup>14</sup> The Greek text, moreover, shows clear signs of composite sources: God appears in the earthly Paradise twice to announce punishments for sin (8; 22) and twice to attend to matters following the death of Adam (33; 38). Without doubt, a diverse oral and literary history lies behind the Greek and Latin texts alike; it would therefore be pointless to attempt recovery of “the original Hebrew text.”

The linguistic evidence in Vita is likewise mixed. On the one hand Greek expressions are retained in the Latin, e.g. plagas, “plagues,” in 34:1; plasmatus, “created,” in 13:2; plasmasti, “you formed,” in 27:2; plasma, “creature,” in 46:3; sindones bissinas, “linen cloths,” in 48:1. On the other hand Semitisms can be seen in 10:1 (Heb. yarōqah, “sponge,” read as yārāq, “herb”); 18:2 (ad occasum solis, “to the sunset,” see n.); 21:1 (virtutes, “excellences,” see n.); 21:3 (herbam, “reed,” see n.), as well as in the style. Several possibilities remain: The Latin author was ignorant of the Greek; he chose not to reproduce the story of Eve; or he had before him a form of the Greek text that is earlier than what is reflected in the extant manuscripts. The latter possibility seems most adequate.<sup>15</sup>

<sup>11</sup> Rabbinic traditions interpret Gen 5:1 as referring to God’s foreknowledge of human history rather than to a document, as in BAZ 5a: “Did not Resh Lakish say, ‘What is the meaning of the verse, This is the book of the generations of Adam? Did Adam have a book? What it implies is that the Holy One, blessed be He, showed to Adam every generation with its exposition . . .’” (so also ARN 31 [Goldin’s ed., p. 126]; bBM 85b–86a; GenR 24:2; ExR 40).

<sup>12</sup> Gk. from Heb. original: Meyer, p. 217; Wells, APOT, vol. 2, pp. 129f.; C. Fuchs, APAT, vol. 2, p. 511; Sharpe, Prolegomena pt. 1, pp. 114–39; O. Eissfeldt, The Old Testament: An Introduction (New York, 1965) p. 636. That the Lat. is directly translated from the Heb. is less widely held; see the evidence adduced by Wells, APOT, vol. 2, pp. 128f., to suggest that the author of the Vita had the ApMos before him.

<sup>13</sup> Sharpe, Prolegomena, pt. 1, pp. 116–39.

<sup>14</sup> Cf. the following passages from Eve’s story with parallels in Vita (ApMos reference is given first): 15:2 with 32:2; 16:2 with 14:3; 16:3 with 12–16; 17:1 with 9:1 and 33:2; 21:6 with 44:2; 22 with 25; 29:6 with 22:2 and 43:5.

<sup>15</sup> But see Meyer’s reasons for presupposing translation from the Heb. (Abhandlungen, pp. 198–207).

Date

Meyer suggested the possibility that the Paris manuscript of the Vita was made in the ninth century or later from a manuscript dated between 730 and 740.<sup>16</sup> He notes also that the story of the fall of Satan (12–16), not found in the Greek, seems to have been known to Mohammed (see 12:1, n.) and that the original document (Hebrew?) must be prior to the Adam material extant in Syriac, Arabic, Ethiopic, and Slavic. Parts, at least, of the Greek document were known to the author of the Gospel of Nicodemus (ch. 19 = Descent into Hell 3); and the Armenian and Slavic are translations of the Greek. The external evidence therefore would indicate a latest possible date of about A.D. 500, or better 400, for the first Greek and Latin translations of the original document(s), which must be considerably earlier.

The absence of apparent Christian allusions, except for the easily identifiable variants in Vita 29 and 51, does not necessarily argue for a date early in the Christian period since Christian allusions are rare in most Jewish writings of that time. Yet, given the fact that the document enjoyed wide circulation among Christians, the paucity of Christian interpolations is indeed striking. The many parallels with early rabbinic traditions (some are identified in the notes), 2 Enoch (see below), and Josephus (cf. Ant 1.2.3 with Vita 50) reveal that the substance of both recensions, Greek and Latin, fits into the time near the beginning of Christianity. On the other hand, the frequently adduced passage in Vita 29:8 which refers to a second temple without mentioning its destruction is not an indication of date since it is missing in the best Latin manuscripts. There are, unfortunately, no clear historical allusions in any part of either text.

Given the relationship with the Pseudepigrapha, Josephus, rabbinic traditions, and perhaps Paul, the most natural span for the original composition would be between 100 B.C. and A.D. 200, more probably toward the end of the first Christian century. The Greek and Latin texts were produced between that time and A.D. 400.<sup>17</sup>

Provenance

On the basis of supposed hellenistic touches, especially the mention of the Lake of Acheron in Apocalypse 37:3, it has often been suggested that the author of the original document was a Jew of Alexandria.<sup>18</sup> This view is difficult to maintain if it is admitted that both the Greek and Latin texts show signs of mistranslation of a source or sources written in Hebrew. Moreover, our documents have a consistently non-Philonian approach to biblical interpretation, with no trace of allegorization or symbolic treatment of biblical figures. The work stands much closer to the Midrash or Haggadah so typical of Qumran and the Rabbis. Preferable, therefore, is the view of Sharpe, who concludes from an examination of the Greek text that "the original document was written in Hebrew, the form is that of the Midrash, and the theology is that of Pharisaic Judaism" and that it probably originated in Palestine.<sup>19</sup> While the question of authorship can be discussed only on the basis of the contents and must therefore remain problematical, it is highly probable that the author of the main traditions was a Jew who had not absorbed much of Greek piety or the Philonian exegetic method.<sup>20</sup>

Theological importance

The contents of both the Greek and Latin recensions appear to be quite compatible with the beliefs reflected in the Pseudepigrapha as a whole, as well as the theology of rabbinic

<sup>16</sup> Meyer, Abhandlungen, pp. 218f.

<sup>17</sup> See also Sharpe, Prolegomena, pt. 1, pp. 146–51.

<sup>18</sup> E.g. Wells, APOT, vol. 2, p. 130.

<sup>19</sup> Sharpe, Prolegomena, pt. 1, p. 226; also pp. 8f. and 151.

<sup>20</sup> E. Schürer, Geschichte des Jüdischen Volkes<sup>4</sup> (Leipzig, 1909) vol. 3, pp. 398–99, is one of the few who has expressed doubts on this point.

Judaism,<sup>21</sup> the Dead Sea Scrolls, and early Christianity.<sup>22</sup> The absence of polemic and sectarian tendencies is remarkable and refreshing, and yet it frustrates the attempt to identify the milieu out of which the material has sprung.

God is pictured with a curious mixture of transcendent majesty and quaint anthropomorphism. The four theophanies of the Greek text (ApMos 8; 22; 33; 38) describe God's arrival on a "chariot of Cherubim" (22) or a "chariot of light . . . [drawn] by four radiant eagles" (33), accompanied by ranks of angels, and with such glory that the sun and moon seem to be darkened (ApMos 35–36). With this, the account in Vita 25–28 of Adam's ascension into the "paradise of righteousness" is fully consistent. This divine transcendence is suggested also by the mediation of the angels who carry out God's will. Especially touching are the blossoming of the plants of the earthly Paradise on God's arrival (ApMos 22:3; 38:4), the cultic preparations made for the theophany in Apocalypse 33, and the piety of Vita 28 and Apocalypse 32; 42. Yet both recensions record God stretching out his hand to receive Adam's soul (ApMos 37:4; Vita 47:2), holding a conversation first with Adam's soul (ApMos 39) and then his body (ApMos 41), and rebuking the angels for being more merciful than he (ApMos 27:4).<sup>23</sup> God is both to be feared and also to be looked to for grace.

The exaltation of God is also to be seen in the numerous references to angelic beings. There are ranks of angels (ApMos 36:1) over which are the cherubim (ApMos 22; 36:3) and the seraphim (ApMos 33:3; 37:3). These accompany God in his appearances on earth and offer worship to him at regular intervals (ApMos 7:2; 17:1). Four angels are mentioned by name (ApMos 40:2) and of these Michael is of greatest interest in our texts: He teaches Adam agriculture (Vita 22:2); as the "angel of mankind" (ApMos 32; Vita 41:1) he comforts Eve (Vita 21:2); he conducts Adam to the paradise of righteousness (Vita 22:2), takes charge of the soul and body of Adam after his death (ApMos 37:5–6; Vita 46:3), and in general serves as God's messenger to men (ApMos 2:1; 3:2; 49:2 and par. in Vita). The Angelic Liturgy of the Dead Sea Scrolls offers an interesting parallel to several of these details (see nn.). Certain angels, called virtutes, "excellences," in the Vita, are placed to guard the earthly Paradise before and after the Fall.

Satan is a pre-existent fallen angel, and the Vita constitutes a classic source for this legend (12–16), which recurs in the Koran and various early and medieval Christian writings. He seeks to destroy men's souls (Vita 17:1) by disguising himself as an angel of light (Vita 9:1, 3; 12:1; ApMos 17:1) to put into men "his evil poison, which is his covetousness" (epithymia, ApMos 19:3; cf. Vita 15:3). This leads to transgression of God's commands, to strife or enmity (ApMos 25:4; 28:3; Vita 12:1), to seventy varieties of illness and pain (ApMos 8; Vita 34), to disruptions in the natural and animal world (ApMos 10ff.; Vita 37ff.; ApMos 20:3), and, above all else, to death (ApMos 14:2; 2:4). But in the end, those whom he has seduced by his wiles will sit on the glorious throne which he has usurped (ApMos 39:2; Vita 47:3).

Man is formed from clay and the divine breath (Vita 27:2) and so has the image of God, which is not totally obliterated by the Fall (ApMos 10:3; 12:1; 35:2; Vita 13:3; 14:1–3; 15:2; 37:3; 39:2). He was originally clothed in righteousness and glory (ApMos 20–21) and received the worship of angels (Vita 13–14) but now has an "evil heart" (ApMos 13:5) and is subject to toil, pain, strife, sickness, and death. Yet his love of knowledge remains (Vita 27:3). Of special interest is the conception of soul and body, seen most clearly in the Greek text, in which at the death of Adam the soul is taken into the third heaven (ApMos 37) while the body is buried in the ground (ApMos 40). Restoration of full life awaits the resurrection, when the soul and body will be reunited. That there is some Greek influence on this conception can be seen by the mention of the Lake Acheron in Apocalypse 37:3.

Sin, according to our texts, stems from grasping equality with God (Vita 15:3) or from Satan's epithymia ("covetousness" or "grasping desire"; ApMos 19:3), which takes concrete form in the breaking of God's commands. Both texts repeatedly assert that sin has come to the human race through a woman (ApMos 9:2; 11; 14:2; 21:2, 6; 24:1; 29:3; 32:2; Vita 18:1; 26:2; 35:2; 38; 44:2). Repentance and sincere sorrow are the appropriate attitudes of the sinner, as is seen most movingly in Eve's repentance in Apocalypse 32 (cf. ApMos 27:3; Vita 4). The Vita also emphasizes ritual acts (fasting, 6:1; submersion in water, 6; placing dung or dust on one's head, 40:2; 36:1; cf. ApMos 6:2), but it is noteworthy that in neither text is sacrifice explicitly set forth as expiatory.<sup>24</sup> Ascetic ideals are much less in evidence than one would expect in an early Jewish or Christian document.<sup>25</sup>

<sup>21</sup> Except that the MSS in group I at Vita 14:2 have the divine name in Gk. uncials: IĤU.

<sup>22</sup> Christian motifs are not evident even in the interpolations in Vita 29:4–15, except at vs. 14, and 51:3–9, except vs. 9. The same is true of ApMos 13:3–6, but not, of course, Vita 42:2–5, which is completely Christian in origin.

<sup>23</sup> Wells, APOT, vol. 2, p. 132.

Of special interest in both texts are the two paradises. The earthly Paradise is surrounded by water (Vita 29:2-3) and a wall with gates (ApMos 17:1; 19:1); it was divided between Adam and Eve to be tended by them (ApMos 15; Vita 32:2). Greatest emphasis falls on the tree of life, the "illegal tree," and the tree from which the healing oil flows (in Vita 36:2 but not ApMos this is identified with the tree of life). The earthly Paradise is also the place of burial of Adam, Abel, and Eve (ApMos 40:6). The heavenly Paradise is located in the third heaven<sup>26</sup> (ApMos 37:5; 40:1; cf. 2En 8) and is the "Paradise of visitation" or "Paradise of righteousness" of Vita 25:3 and 29:1. This is the abode of the soul after death (ApMos 37).

The resurrection of the dead at the last day is repeatedly taught. While not denying the resurrection of the wicked, the emphasis clearly is placed on the restoration to man of what had been lost in the Fall: The tree of life will be given (ApMos 28:4), the healing oil which Adam requested in vain (ApMos 13; Vita 42), a godly heart (ApMos 13), and the throne usurped by Satan (ApMos 39; Vita 47). The absence of any and all messianism is most striking and completely unexplainable on the assumption of a Christian origin of the material.

There is also the motif of the place where Adam was created (ApMos 40:6), where he had his house of prayer (ApMos 5:3; Vita 30:2), and where he was buried (ApMos 40; Vita 45:2). In Vita 45:2 this is "against the East in the great dwelling place of God," and in Apocalypse 33:4 there is an altar at that spot. There can be little doubt that the same site is intended in all such references and that the location is to be understood as the place of the Jerusalem Temple, where rabbinic sources fix the location of Adam's oratory (see n. to Vita 30:2). Since no trace is here found of the Christian legend that Adam was buried on the site of the crucifixion and burial place of Jesus,<sup>27</sup> we have all the more reason to think of a specifically Jewish origin of this material.

Relation to canonical and apocryphal books

Parts of this work develop themes which are at best tangential to Old Testament material: the repentance of Adam and Eve and the fall of Satan (Vita 1-17); Adam's rapture to the heavenly Paradise (Vita 25-29); Seth's quest for the healing oil (ApMos 5:3-6:3; 9-14 and par.); the death and burial of Adam and Eve (ApMos 31-43 and par.); and Eve's command to her children to make the tablets (Vita 49; 51:3ff.). The remainder of the narrative, including the birth of the children of Adam and Eve (ApMos 1-5 and par.), Adam's story of the Fall (ApMos 7-8 and par.), and Eve's story of the Fall (ApMos 15-30), is a typical haggadic Midrash on various details of Genesis 1-5.<sup>28</sup> Numerous allusions and quotations from the Septuagint are to be found in Apocalypse 15-30 and from the Vulgate throughout the Vita. Specific allusions to other Old Testament material are rare. Vita 4:2 and even the description of the divine chariot may derive directly from other Pseudepigrapha (but cf. Vita 15f. with Isa 14:13).

Interesting parallels to several New Testament passages can be found: Hebrews 1:16 (Vita 13-14); James 1:17 (Vita 29:2; ApMos 36:3); the tree of life (Rev 22:2). However, it is

<sup>24</sup> Sacrifice is not mentioned in Vita; in ApMos it seems to be a form of worship (4:2; 29:3).

<sup>25</sup> Fasting only in Vita 6:1; sexual intercourse as the "sin of the flesh" in ApMos 25:3 has rabbinic parallels (see n.); separation of animals in Paradise according to sex (ApMos 15:3; not in Vita 32) may not be an ascetic touch. By contrast, suffering is not to be desired (ApMos 24-25) and there is nothing wrong in enjoying the delights of Paradise (Vita 16:2).

<sup>26</sup> Only in ApMos 35:2 are seven heavens mentioned; see note to Vita 25:3.

<sup>27</sup> Held already by Africanus, Origen, Athanasius, Basil, Chrysostom, and Epiphanius; see E. C. Quinn, The Quest of Seth for the Oil of Life (Chicago, 1962) p. 77, and M. Stone, HTR 59 (1966) 291, for references.

<sup>28</sup> Sharpe, Prolegomena, pt. 1, pp. 94-113, would limit the midrashic base to Gen 3:1-5:5.

the writings of Paul with which the documents have the closest affinity,<sup>29</sup> as can be seen in the idea that Eve was the source of sin and death (cf. 2Cor 11:3; 1Tim 2:4; in Rom 5:12–21 death follows the sin of Adam). Death as the separation of soul and body may have some affinity with 2 Corinthians 5:1–5, while the most striking parallels are the appearance of Satan in the brightness of an angel (Vita 9:1; ApMos 17:1; cf. 2Cor 11:14); the location of Paradise in the third heaven (ApMos 37:5; 2Cor 12:2); and epithymia as the root of all sin (ApMos 19:3; Rom 7:7). In spite of these parallels it is impossible to determine whether there is a relationship between the New Testament and our texts.

Among the other Jewish writings of the time various parallels can be found in the Dead Sea Scrolls, 4 Ezra, Jubilees, and 1 and 2 Enoch (see nn.). The Latin text has an especially close relationship with 2 Enoch (the fall of Satan, 2En 29:4–5; heavenly Paradise, 8:1–5; 42:2; 65:1; waters of Paradise, 8:5; 22:9; the tablets, 33:8–12). Wells's judgment appears fully justified when he suggests that "Paul and the author of the 2 Enoch were near contemporaries of the original author of Apoc. Mos. and moved in the same circle of ideas."<sup>30</sup>

Cultural importance

The biblical story of the Fall of the first humans and its effect has grasped and stimulated the minds of Jews, Christians, and Muslims from antiquity to the present day. In the long history of this speculation the two documents here translated constitute one of the earliest, if not the first, separate treatments of the various legends linked to the first chapters of Genesis. Yet in assessing the cultural influence of these documents one must face the knotty problem of determining whether these documents themselves, or their Hebrew precursor, were the impetus for the many subsequent treatments or whether they are but one result of this interest itself.

The popularity of these two documents can be seen both by the fact that various versions of the Greek were made, notably the Armenian and the Slavic,<sup>31</sup> and also by their apparent use in several of the series of Eastern works which take the death of Adam as a starting point for a series of prophecies and events leading to the crucifixion. Among the latter, the Syriac Cave of Treasures<sup>32</sup> has inspired the Ethiopic Conflict of Adam and Eve,<sup>33</sup> while both works have occasional parallels of detail with the Vita and the Apocalypse.<sup>34</sup> The Syriac and Arabic Testament of Adam shows less influence from the Vita and the Apocalypse than the Cave and Conflict.<sup>35</sup>

Literary evidence suggests that during the fifth century, coincidental with the height of the Pelagian controversy, there was great interest, especially among Frankish churchmen, in harmonizing the biblical story of the origins of man with classical pagan heroic motifs, as is seen in poems of Hilary of Arles, Victor Rhetor of Marseilles, Avitus of Vienne, Cyprian of Gaul, and in the popular Carmen de Deo of Dracontius.<sup>36</sup> Direct influence of the Vita or the Apocalypse, however, is not found in these. Similarly, the earliest extant Anglo-Saxon Christian poetry, of the eighth and ninth centuries, reveals the influence of pagan Germanic saga. It is especially the English poem Christ and Satan<sup>37</sup> that betrays influence of the Vita in its Christianized form of the legend of the fall of Satan, as is also the case with the continental poem known as Genesis B.<sup>38</sup> The Koran also reflects knowledge of a form of the fall of Satan legend which is close to that of the Vita (Vita 12, n. a).

Toward the close of the twelfth century we have evidence that the legends of the history of the wood of the cross, developed at an earlier time, were combined with the motif of

<sup>29</sup> Wells, APOT, vol. 2, p. 130; Sharpe, CBQ 35 (1973) 35–46.

<sup>30</sup> Wells, APOT, vol. 2, p. 130.

<sup>31</sup> On these see Sharpe, Prolegomena, pt. 1, pp. 204–15.

<sup>32</sup> English translation by E. A. Wallis Budge, The Book of the Cave of Treasures (London, 1927).

<sup>33</sup> English translation by S. C. Malan, The Book of Adam and Eve, Also Called the Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan (London, 1882).

<sup>34</sup> See Wells, APOT, vol. 2, pp. 125–27, 131f.

<sup>35</sup> M. R. James, LAOT, pp. 5–8; Wells, APOT, vol. 2, pp. 125f.

<sup>36</sup> On these see J. M. Evans, Paradise Lost, ch. 4.

<sup>37</sup> Ed. G. P. Krapp, The Junius Manuscript (New York, 1936).

<sup>38</sup> Evans, Paradise Lost, ch. 5, especially p. 146.

Seth's journey to Paradise, a combination found in Meyer's four fifteenth-century manuscripts (Group III) but found already in the Rationale divinorum officiorum, circa 1170.<sup>39</sup> According to this tradition, Seth returned from Paradise with a twig or seeds from which grew the tree that eventually supplied the wood for the cross of Jesus. In this modified form the Vita had a significant impact on the medieval European imagination.<sup>40</sup>

Apart from its conflation with the holy-wood motif, the Vita undoubtedly influenced the twelfth-century Historia Scholastica of Peter Comestor, especially in its treatment of the ascension of Adam and the Fall itself.<sup>41</sup> Less direct influence can be traced in the Towneley and Chester medieval English miracle plays and in such narrative poems as The Stanzaic Life of Christ, Robert Grosseteste's Chasteau d'Amour, Ludus Coventriae, De Lyff of Adam and Eve in the Vernon manuscript, as well as in De Deuelis Perlament and the Canticum de Creatione.<sup>42</sup> The Vita's description of Adam's repentance finds a close parallel in the similar account in Mirk's Festival, while William of Shoreham's poem On the Trinity, Creation, the Existence of Evil, Devils, and Adam and Eve reads like a theological reflection on the themes of the Vita. English miracle plays typically included the serpent disguised as an angel of light, Adam's prophetic dream at the creation of Eve, the serpent extracting the promise from Eve that she would give the fruit to Adam, and Eve's suggestion after the Fall that Adam kill her—all features betraying the probable influence of the Vita. Seth's journey to Paradise, however, is prominent only in the Ordinale de Origine Mundi.<sup>43</sup>

Adam is relatively insignificant in the Divine Comedy, being prominent only in paragraph 26, where Dante questions him about the duration of time from the creation to Dante's life (4,302 years) and the language Adam spoke in Eden (a tongue already extinct before the Flood).

The greatest classic on this theme, Milton's Paradise Lost, shows in its various drafts the influence of several of the prior treatments but especially, at least with regard to form, that of the Latin drama Adamus Exul, written by Hugo Grotius in 1601. Yet a good many details in Milton's work raise the probability of at least indirect influence by the Vita: Satan's charge that he was self-created and the equal of the Son of God, yet treated as inferior (Paradise Lost 5.661ff.; Vita 14); the corresponding functions of Milton's Abdiel and the Vita's Michael; the division of labor between Adam and Eve (Paradise Lost 9.205–12; Vita 32); the dropping of Eve's garland at the first sin (Paradise Lost 9.892f.; cf. ApMos 20); the Fall as the loss of righteousness and glory (Paradise Lost 9.1054ff.; ApMos 21); and the vision of future generations given by Michael at the close of Milton's poem (book 11), which forms a parallel to Vita 29, 41, and the Apocalypse 13.

While J. M. Evans (see bibliography) has brilliantly traced the treatment of the Fall theme in literature up to Milton, there is no comparable study for the history of art or for literary and artistic productions subsequent to Milton.

<sup>39</sup> E. C. Quinn, The Quest of Seth, especially pp. 88ff.

<sup>40</sup> Quinn, Quest of Seth, traces the history of this tradition.

<sup>41</sup> Evans, Paradise Lost, pp. 168–72.

<sup>42</sup> Ibid., pp. 176–85.

<sup>43</sup> The Ordinale de Origine Mundi is a 15th-cent. Cornish miracle play (see Evans, Paradise Lost, pp. 195–207). Evans was not aware of the motif of the serpent as an angel of light in Vita and ApMos; he thought it was "the accidental result of the exigencies of medieval stage craft" (Evans, Paradise Lost, p. 195).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 74f.
 Delling, Bibliographie, p. 172.
 Denis, Introduction, pp. 3–7.
- Evans, J. M. Paradise Lost and the Genesis Traditions. Oxford, 1968. (Comprehensive analysis of the interpretations of the Adam and Eve traditions in Jewish, gnostic, patristic, medieval, and Renaissance literature as well as in Milton's Paradise Lost.)
- Fuchs, C. "Adambuch," APAT, vol. 2, pp. 514–28. (German translation with introduction.)
- Ginzberg, L. The Legends of the Jews. 7 vols.; Philadelphia, 1909–38. (Adam legends are narrated in vol. 5, nn. 22–53.)
- James, M. R. The Lost Apocrypha of the Old Testament. London, 1920. (General introduction to the Adam literature subsequent to Vita and ApAdam is on pp. 1–9.)
- Meyer, W. "Vita Adae et Evae," Abhandlungen der königlich bayerischen Akademie der Wissenschaften, Philosophische-philologische Klasse, vol. 14 (Munich, 1878). (The Lat. text with convenient apparatus is on pp. 221–50 and an excellent introduction on pp. 187–220.)
- Mozley, J. H. "The Vitae Adae," JTS 30 (1929) 121–49. (The Lat. text based on several medieval British MSS with nn.)
- Sharpe, J. L. Prolegomena to the Establishment of the Critical Text of the Greek Apocalypse of Moses. Unpublished dissertation, Duke University, 1969. Ann Arbor, Mich., 1969. (Pt. 1 provides treatment of the provenance, theology, versions, and MSS of the Gk. text, with bibliography. Pt. 2 contains the Gk. text with the most complete apparatus currently available.)
- . "The Second Adam in the Apocalypse of Moses," CBQ 35 (1973) 35–46. (Shows similarities of thought between ApMos and Paul.)
- Tischendorf, C. von. Apocalypses Apocryphae. Hildesheim, 1966. (This reprint of the 1866 edition has the Gk. text on pp. 1–23 with a brief introduction on pp. X–XII.)
- Wells, L. S. A. "The Books of Adam and Eve," The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, ed. R. H. Charles. Oxford, 1913. (An English translation of the Gk. and Lat. texts with a fine introduction is in vol. 2, pp. 123–54.)

THE LIFE OF ADAM AND EVE

[Vita]

1. THE REPENTANCE OF ADAM AND EVE

The motive and manner of their repentance

1 1 When they were driven out of Paradise they made for themselves a tent and mourned for seven days, weeping in great sorrow. But after seven days they began to hunger and sought food to eat, but found none. Gen 3:22-24

1 2 Then Eve said to Adam, "My lord, I am hungry. Go and seek for us that we may eat. Perhaps the LORD God will consider us and pity us and call us back to the place we were before." •And Adam rose and walked seven days over all that land and found no food such as they had had in Paradise.

1 3 And Eve said to Adam, "My lord, would you kill me? O that I would die! Then perhaps the LORD God will bring you again into Paradise, for it is because of me that the LORD God is angry with you."<sup>a</sup> •Adam answered, "Do not wish to speak such words lest the LORD God bring on us some further curse. How is it possible that I should let loose my hand against my flesh? But rather let us rise and search for ourselves, how we might live, and not weaken." Gen 2:23

1 4 And they walked searching for nine days and found nothing such as they had had in Paradise, but only such as animals eat.<sup>a</sup> •And Adam said to Eve, "The LORD apportioned this for animals and beasts to eat, but for us there used to be the food of angels."<sup>b</sup> •But it is just and fitting for us to lament in the sight of God who made us. Let us repent with a great penitence; perhaps the LORD God will be forbearing and pity us and provide for us that we might live."<sup>c</sup> Ps 78:25

1 5 And Eve said to Adam, "My lord, tell me, what is repentance and what kind of penitence should I do, lest by chance we impose on ourselves an effort which we cannot sustain, and the LORD not hear our prayers and turn his face from us because we did not keep our promise. •My lord, how much did you intend to repent, since I have brought toil and tribulation on you."

1 6 And Adam said to Eve, "You are not able to do so much as I; but do as much as you have strength for. I will spend forty days fasting, but you rise and go to

3 a. The MSS have a doublet of Eve's request which ends, "For it is because of me that you have been driven from there."

4 a. That Adam ate animals' food is considered in some rabbinic writings one of his punishments for the Fall (GenR ad rem; PRE 20); in ARN<sup>1</sup> (Goldin 14) Adam complains about eating animals' food.

b. Cf. Sanh 59b.

c. In PR 50:5 Adam learns the value of repentance from Cain, while in 7:2 we read that Adam refused to repent before being driven out of Paradise; see also the n. to 6:3.

THE LIFE OF ADAM AND EVE

[Apocalypse]

PREFACE

The narrative and life of Adam and Eve the first-made, revealed by God to Moses his servant when he received the tablets of the law of the covenant from the hand of the LORD, after he had been taught by the archangel Michael.<sup>a</sup>

7 29<sup>a</sup> And it happened that we mourned for seven days. After seven days we were hungry and I said to Adam, "Gather and bring us food that we might eat and live, lest we die. Let us get up and weep on the ground so that God might hear 8,9 us." •And we rose and went through the whole land and did not find (food). •And answering, I said to Adam, "Rise, my lord, and do away with me that I might depart from you and from the presence of God and from the angels so that they 10 will cease to be angry with you on my account." •Then Adam answered and said to Eve, "Why have you been thinking of this evil, that I should commit murder and bring death to my rib, so that I should stretch out my hand against the image 11 which God made?<sup>b</sup> •But rather let us Gen 2:21 repent and offer prayers<sup>c</sup> for forty days. But you fast thirty-four days because you were not formed (until) the sixth day in

P a. This preface, certainly a later addition to the Gk. text, is the sole cause of the traditional, but erroneous, title "Apocalypse of Moses"; the Gk. text has nothing to do with Moses, nor is it in the technical sense an apocalypse.

29 a. The "repentance" in the Gk. tradition is found only in MSS F and H, and is located there after 29:6 as the concluding part of Eve's story of the Fall; the text translated here is that of H with variants of F noted.

b. Gk. epoiēsei, "[he] made"; MS H has apoiēsei, "[he] will not make."

c. MS PH adds "and with me."

[Vita]

the Tigris River and take a stone and stand on it in the water as far as (your) 2 neck<sup>a</sup> in the depths of the river. •And let no speech come out of your mouth, because we are unworthy to entreat the LORD since our lips are unclean from the illegal and forbidden tree. And stand in the water of the river for thirty-seven 3 days. •But I will spend forty days in the water of the Jordan.<sup>b</sup> Perhaps the LORD God will pity us.”

Gen 2:14

Isa 6:5

Deut 10:10
1 Kgs 19:8
Mt 4:2

1 7 And Eve walked to the Tigris River and did just as Adam told her. Similarly, Adam walked to the Jordan River and stood on a stone up to his neck in water.

1 8 And Adam said, “I tell you, water of the Jordan, mourn with me and gather to me all swimming creatures which are in you and let them surround me and so 2 lament together with me. •Let them not mourn for themselves, but rather for me, 3 because it is not they who have sinned, but I.” •At once all the living beings came and surrounded him and the water of the Jordan stood, its current not moving, from that hour.

Josh 3:13-17

Satan again deceives Eve

1 9 Eighteen days went by. Then Satan was angry and transformed himself into the brightness of angels<sup>a</sup> and went away to the Tigris River to Eve and found her 2 weeping. •And the devil himself, as if to grieve with her, began to weep and said to her, “Step out of the river and cry no more. Cease now from sadness and 3 sighs. Why are you and your husband Adam disturbed? •The LORD God has heard your sighs and accepted your repentance; and all we angels have entreated for you 4 and interceded with the LORD, •and he sent me to bring you up from the water and give you food which you had in Paradise, and for which you have been 5 lamenting. •Now therefore come out of the water and I will lead you to the place where your food has been prepared.”

2Cor 11:14

1 10 Now when Eve heard this she believed and came out of the water of the 2 river, and her flesh was as grass<sup>a</sup> from the cold of the water. •And when she came 3 out, she fell on the ground and the devil raised her and led her to Adam. •But when Adam saw her and the devil with her, he cried out with tears and said, “O 4 Eve, Eve, where is the work of your penitence? •How have you again been seduced by our enemy by whom we have been deprived of our dwelling in Paradise and of spiritual joy?”

Isa 40:6;
51:12

1 11 When Eve heard this, she knew that the devil had persuaded (her) to come out of the river and fell on her face to the ground, and her sorrow and sighing
 2 and lamenting were doubled. •She cried out, saying, “Woe to you, O devil. Why

6 a. That a woman's ritual bath can purify only when it reaches one's neck is asserted in b.Yoma 87a.

b. In PRE 20 Adam's repentance is put on the first Sunday after his expulsion from Paradise and it takes place in the Gihon, one of the rivers of Paradise (Gen 2:13); Adam stayed there for seven weeks, until his body became like a sponge; he prayed for forgiveness and God accepted his repentance.

9 a. Cf. ApMos 17:2. In the Dead Sea Scrolls the archangel Michael is referred to as the “Prince of Lights” (1QM 13:9–10; 17:6–8; 1QS 3:20); the Vita and Paul in 2Cor 11:14 may imply that Satan disguised himself as Michael.

10 a. Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 5, p. 115, suggests that this odd expression is due to a mistranslation of the rare Heb. word yarôqah, “sponge,” as though it were related to yârâq, “herb”; PRE 20 says that Adam's body became like a sponge from his penitence in the water. This may be an indication of a Heb. source for Vita.

[Apocalypse]

12 which God made his creation.<sup>d</sup> •But you rise and go to the Tigris River, and take a stone and set (it) under your feet, and go in and stand in the water up to the neck, and do not let three words come out of your mouth, for we are unworthy and our lips are not clean. But cry silently to God (saying), 'O God, be gracious to me.' ”<sup>e</sup>

13 •But Adam went into the Jordan River and cried with a loud voice, saying, “I say to you, water of the Jordan, stand still; and all birds and all animals
14 and all reptiles both on land and in the sea gather together.” •And all the angels and all the creatures of God surrounded Adam as a wall around him, weeping and praying to God on behalf of Adam, so that God gave ear to them.

15 But the devil, not having found an opportunity with Adam, came to the Tigris River to Eve. Taking the form of an angel, he stood before her weeping, and his 16 tears fell on the ground and on his robe. •And he said to me, “Come up out of the water and be done with weeping, for the LORD has heard your request and the angels and all his creatures have beseeched God about your prayer.

17 Thus he deceived me, and I stepped out of the water.”

d. Sharpe has ktēsin, “creation.” The Slav. reads, “forty-four.”

e. MS F; H reads, “But pray to God, and keep the lips silent that we might be baptized in the water with all your heart”; this has a Christian touch not found in F.

[Vita]

do you assault us for nothing? What have you to do with us? What have we done to you, that you should pursue us with deceit? Why does your malice fall on us?

- 3 Have we stolen your glory and made you to be without honor? Why do you treacherously and enviously pursue us, O enemy, all the way to death?"

Satan's account of his expulsion from heaven

- 1 12 And the devil<sup>a</sup> sighed and said, "O Adam, all my enmity and envy and sorrow concern you, since because of you I am expelled and deprived of my glory which I had in the heavens in the midst of angels, and because of you I was cast
2 out onto the earth." •Adam answered, "What have I done to you, and what is my blame with you? Since you are neither harmed nor hurt by us, why do you pursue us?"

Isa 14:12-15
Zeph 3:2
Ps 82:6-7
Lk 10:18
Jn 12:31
2En 29:4-5
Rev 12:9
2Pet 2:4
Gen 2:7
Gen 1:27

- 1 13 The devil replied, "Adam, what are you telling me? It is because of you that 2 I have been thrown out of there. •When you were created, I was cast out from 3 the presence of God and was sent out from the fellowship of the angels. •When God blew into you the breath of life and your countenance and likeness were made in the image of God, Michael<sup>a</sup> brought you and made (us) worship you in the sight of God, and the LORD God said, 'Behold Adam! I have made you in our image and likeness.'

- 1 14 And Michael went out and called all the angels, saying, 'Worship the image
2 of the LORD God, as the LORD God has instructed.'<sup>a</sup> •And Michael himself worshiped first, and called me and said, 'Worship the image of God, Yahweh.'<sup>b</sup>
3 And I answered, 'I do not worship Adam.'<sup>c</sup> And when Michael kept forcing me to worship, I said to him, 'Why do you compel me? I will not worship one inferior and subsequent to me. I am prior to him in creation; before he was made, I was already made. He ought to worship me.'

Gen 1:26
Rev 12:7-12

- 1 15 When they heard this, other angels who were under me refused to worship
2 him. •And Michael asserted, 'Worship the image of God. But if now you will 3 not worship, the LORD God will be wrathful with you.' •And I said, 'If he be wrathful with me, I will set my throne above the stars of heaven and will be like the Most High.'

Isa 14:13
Dan 8:10
Obad 4
Job 22:12
Jude 9

- 1 16 And the LORD God was angry with me and sent me with my angels out from 2 our glory; and because of you, we were expelled into this world from our dwellings
3 and have been cast onto the earth. •And immediately we were made to grieve, since we had been deprived of so great glory. And we were pained to see you in 3 such bliss of delights.<sup>a</sup> •So with deceit I assailed your wife and made you to be expelled through her from the joys of your bliss, as I have been expelled from my glory."

Gen 3:1-7

12 a. Satan's fall is a widely known legend (see marginal references here and at 15:3) which may have arisen as a Midrash on Isa 14:12-15. It is reflected in 2En 29:4f.; 31:3; GBart 4.51-55, vol. 1, p. 500; numerous rabbinic writings; the NT (marginal references above); Tertullian, de Patientia 5; Irenaeus, Against Heresies, IV.40.3; Augustine, de Genesi ad Literam XI.18; and the Koran, suras 2, 7, 15, 17, 18, 20, and 38. The account in the Vita could well be among the earliest witnesses to this legend.

13 a. Michael is the chief angel in Vita and ApMos, as also in the Dead Sea Scrolls (see Vita 9, n. a); cf. M. Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism (Philadelphia, 1974) vol. 1, pp. 188, 231.

14 a. Heb 1:6 may be an allusion to an early form of this legend; cf. Heb 1:14.
b. MSS in group I; IHU, "Yahweh"; those in groups II and III omit this name.
c. Lat. Non habeo ego adorare, "I do not have to worship."

16 a. Lat. laetitia delitiarum, "bliss of delights."

LIFE OF ADAM AND EVE

[Apocalypse]

[Vita]

1 17 Hearing this from the devil, Adam cried out with great weeping and said, “O LORD, my God, my life is in your hands. Remove far from me this my opponent, who seeks to destroy my soul, and give me his glory which he himself 2.3 has forfeited.” •And immediately the devil disappeared from him. •But Adam Lk 4:13 persisted forty days standing in repentance in the water of the Jordan.

II. THE CHILDREN OF ADAM AND EVE

The birth of Cain

1 18 And Eve said to Adam, “You live on, my lord. Life is granted to you, since you have done neither the first nor the second error, but I have been cheated and 2 deceived, for I have not kept the command of God. •And now separate me from 3 the light of such life, and I will go to the sunset<sup>a</sup> and stay there until I die.” •And she began to walk toward the West and to mourn and to weep bitterly with loud 4 sighing. •And she made there a shelter while she was three months pregnant.

1 19 And when the time of her giving birth drew near, she began to be distressed with pains and cried out to the LORD, saying, “Have mercy on me, LORD, help 2.3 me.” •But neither was she heard, nor was the mercy of God around her. •And she said to herself, “Who will give the news to my lord Adam? I beg you, O lights of heaven, when you return to the East,<sup>a</sup> tell my lord Adam.”

1 20 However, at that very moment, Adam said, “Eve’s complaint has come to 2 me; perhaps again the serpent<sup>a</sup> has contended with her.” •And he went forth and came upon her in great distress. And Eve said, “The moment I saw you, my lord, my pained soul was refreshed.<sup>b</sup> And now implore the LORD God for me to hear 3 you and to have regard for me and free me from my most awful pains.” •And Adam prayed to the LORD for Eve.

1 21 And behold, twelve angels and two excellencies<sup>a</sup> came and stood to the right
 2 and to the left of Eve. •And Michael stood to the right and touched her from her face to the breast and said to Eve, “Blessed are you, Eve, because of Adam.
 Since his prayers and utterances are many, I am sent to you that you might receive 3 our help. Now rise and make ready to give birth.” •And she bore a son, and he was lustrous.<sup>b</sup> And at once the infant rose, ran, and brought in his hands a reed<sup>c</sup> and gave it to his mother. And his name was called Cain.

Gen 4:1

18 a. A Hebraism.

19 a. The East is the location of Paradise in Gen 2:8 and 1En 32:2.

20 a. Cf. Vita 37:1 and the role of the serpent in ApMos 15–30.

b. Lat. refrigeravit, “he was refreshed”; lit. “cooled”; other MSS read infrigeravit, “he was cooled,” or inrefrigeravit, “he was cooled.”

21 a. “Excellencies” (virtutes) may be a translation of the Heb. for “partakers of the divine Kabod (‘glory’)” in b.Ber 60b; see b.Hag 16a and cf. the “principalities and powers” of Rom 8:38; Eph 6:12, etc.

b. Lat. lucidus, “lustrous,” “full of light,” probably related to ApMos 1:3 (see n.).

c. Lat. herbam, “reed”; probably from the similarity of the Heb. words Qāyin, “Cain,” and qāneh, “reed.” According to GenR 22:8, Cain killed Abel with a reed.

LIFE OF ADAM AND EVE

[Apocalypse]

[Vita]

- 1,2 22 And Adam brought Eve and the child and led them to the East. •And the LORD God sent various seeds by the angel Michael and gave them to Adam and showed him (how) to work and till the ground so as to have produce by which they and all their generations might live.

ApMos 29
Gen 1:29
Jub 3:15

The murder of Abel and the birth of Adam's other children

- 1 23 For Eve later conceived and bore a son, whose name was Abel. And Cain and Abel used to stay together. •And Eve said to Adam, "My lord, while I was sleeping I saw a vision—as if the blood of our son Abel was in the hand of Cain (who was) gulping it down in his mouth. That is why I am sad." •And Adam said, "God forbid that Cain would kill Abel! But let us separate them from each other and make separate places for them." •And they made Cain a farmer and Abel a shepherd, that in this way they might be separated from each other. •After this Cain murdered Abel, at which time Adam was 130 years old, while Abel when he was murdered was 122.<sup>a</sup>

Gen 4:2
Gen 4:9
Gen 5:3

- 1 24 After this Adam knew his wife and she bore a son and called his name Seth. And Adam said to Eve, "See, I have sired a son in place of Abel, whom Cain struck down." •And after Adam had become the father of Seth, he lived eight hundred years and fathered thirty sons and thirty daughters, sixty-three altogether.<sup>a</sup> And they were multiplied over the earth in their nations.

Gen 10:32

III. ADAM IS TAKEN UP TO THE HEAVENLY PARADISE<sup>a</sup>

- 1 25 Adam said to Seth, "Listen, Seth my son, and I will pass on to you what I heard and saw. •After your mother and I had been driven out of Paradise, while we were praying, Michael the archangel and messenger of God came to me. And I saw a chariot like the wind and its wheels were fiery. I was carried off into the Paradise of righteousness,<sup>a</sup> and I saw the LORD sitting and his appearance

Isa 66:15
Jer 4:13
Ezek 1, 10
Pss 68:17; 104:3
2Kgs 2:11
ApMos 33
1En 13-17

23 a. George Syncellus, Chronicle 1:14, asserts that Abel was twenty-two when he sacrificed, and he puts the date at 99 Anno Mundi.

24 a. Including Cain, Abel, and Seth.

T a. This section seems to have had some original relationship with ApMos 37.

25 a. See also ApMos 37–40; Vita 29; 2Cor 12:4; Lk 23:43; Rev 2:7; 1En 32:3; 77:3; 60:8; 2En 8:1–5; 42:2; 65:10; 4Ezra 7:53; 8:52. In the Vita and ApMos there are both an earthly Paradise, Eden, and a heavenly, which is located in the third heaven. The latter is referred to here and in Vita 29:1 ("Paradise of visitation and of God's command"); ApMos 37:5; 40:1; the remaining references in Vita and ApMos to Paradise are to the earthly. In some popular Jewish and Christian writings there are said to be seven heavens, as in ApMos 35:2 and 2En 1–20 (classic description in b.Hag 12b); an older view, perhaps, is

[Apocalypse]

1,2 1 This is the account of<sup>a</sup> Adam and Eve. •After they had come out of Paradise, Adam took his wife, and they went down into the East. And they stayed there 3 eighteen years and two months,<sup>b</sup> •and Eve conceived and bore two sons, Diaphotos called Cain, and Amilabes called Abel.<sup>c</sup>

1 2 After these things Adam and Eve were together and when they were lying 2 down to sleep, Eve said to her lord Adam, •“My lord, I saw in a dream this night the blood of my son Amilabes, called Abel, being thrust into the mouth of Cain 3 his brother, and he drank it mercilessly. •He begged him to allow him a little of it, but he did not listen to him but swallowed all of it. And it did not stay in his 4 stomach but came out of his mouth.” •And Adam said to Eve, “Let us rise and go to see what has happened to them.”<sup>a</sup> Perhaps the enemy is warring against them.”

1 3 And when they both<sup>a</sup> had gone out they found Abel killed by the hand of Cain,
2 his brother. •And God said to Michael the archangel, “Say to Adam, ‘The mystery which you know<sup>b</sup> do not report to your son Cain, for he is a son of wrath. But do not mourn, for I will give you another son in his place; this one shall reveal 3 to you<sup>c</sup> all that you shall do;<sup>d</sup> but you tell him nothing!’ ”<sup>c</sup> •These things God said to his angel, and Adam kept the word in his heart, with him and Eve, grieving over Abel their son.

Gen 4:5
Eph 2:3
Gen 4:25

Lk 2:19,51

1 4 After these things Adam knew his wife and she conceived and bore Seth.<sup>a</sup>
2 And Adam said to Eve, “See, we have begotten a son in place of Abel, whom Cain killed; let us give glory and sacrifice to God.”

1 5 And Adam fathered thirty sons and thirty daughters.

Gen 5:4

1 a. MSS E1 and E2 add “the first-made.”

b. E1 and E2 add “Adam knew his wife and she.”

c. Several explanations of the enigmatic names for Cain and Abel have been proposed: (a) That the original read Diaphytōr or Diaphyteutēs, “a planter,” and Mēlatas or Mēlobotēs, “a keeper of sheep”; (b) Adiaphōtos, “unshining,” as found in MSS D1 D2 D3 M1 M2 E1 (Aphaton, “nameless,” in E2) as well as the Arm. text; (c) that “Amilabes” is a rude transcription of the Heb. ham’hubāl, “the destroyed one”; (d) that the similarity of Qayin, “Cain,” with kiyun (Kaiwan = the planet Saturn) gave rise to the legend about the shining face of Cain which is found in PRE 21 and TargYer on Gen 4:1. The description of Cain as “lustrous” in Vita 21:3 supports this view of the name Diaphotos. The later two explanations would imply that a Semitic, probably Heb., original text lay behind both the Gk. and Lat.

2 a. E1 and E2 omit the last five words.

3 a. E1 and E2 omit “both.”

b. MS B omits these five words.

c. “To you” is omitted in A1 A2 D1 D2 D3 D4.

d. Some MSS add “to him.”

e. The last phrase is omitted in D1 D4 E1 E2 G H and the Arm.

4 a. MS H adds the last half of Gen 4:25.

[Vita]

was unbearable flaming fire. And many thousands of angels were at the right and at the left of the chariot.<sup>b</sup> Ezek 1:27

1 26 "I was disturbed when I saw this; fear laid hold of me and I worshiped in 2 the presence of God on the face of the earth. •And God said to me, 'Behold, you shall die, because you have disregarded the command of God, since you have listened rather to the voice of your wife, whom I gave into your power, that you might keep her in your will. But you listened to her and disregarded my words.'

ApMos 24:1
Gen 3:6

1 27 "And when I heard these words of God, I fell down on the ground, worshiped the LORD, and said, 'My lord, almighty and merciful God, holy and upright, let not the name that reminds of your majesty<sup>a</sup> be blotted out, but convert my soul,
2 for I am dying, and my spirit will pass from my mouth. •Cast me not from your presence, whom you formed from the clay of the earth; and do not withhold your
3 grace from him whom you nurtured.' •And behold, your word<sup>b</sup> came to me and the LORD said to me, 'Because your days are numbered,<sup>c</sup> you have been made to cherish knowledge; therefore, there shall not be abolished from your seed forever (those who would) serve me.'

Ps 51:11

1 28 "Hearing these words, I prostrated myself to the ground and worshiped the LORD God, saying, 'You are the eternal and most high God and all creatures give 2 you honor and praise. •You are the true light shining above all lights, living life, incomprehensibly great excellence. To you the spiritual powers<sup>a</sup> give honor and praise. You perform among all humanity the miracles of your mercy.'

Rom 8:38
Eph 6:12

1 29 "After I had worshiped the LORD, Michael the archangel of God immediately took hold of my hand and ejected me from the Paradise of visitation and of God's 2 command. •And Michael held in his hand a rod and touched the waters which 3 were around Paradise<sup>a</sup> and they froze. •I crossed over and Michael with me, and he took me to the place from where he had seized me."<sup>b</sup>

Vita 25:3

that there were three heavens, as is implied in 2Cor 12:2-3 (the third heaven is designated "Paradise") and TLevi 3; see also TDNT, vol. 5, pp. 511-12 (Traub). The Samaritans also held to an earthly and a heavenly Paradise, both called the "Garden of Eden" (J. Macdonald, Theology of the Samaritans [Philadelphia, 1964] ch. 21).

b. Cf. the "chariot-like Throne above the firmament of the cherubim" in the Qumran "Liturgy of the Angels" (T. Gaster, The Dead Sea Scriptures [Garden City, 1964], pp. 373f.). The chariot here seems to be both the means of Adam's rapture (vs. 3a) and also the throne of God (vs. 3b), a possible indication of a reworking of the sources.

27 a. In 2En 30:13, SibOr 3:24-26, and other sources, the name Adam is taken to be an acrostic for the names of the four directions; the reference here, however, may be to Adam as the image of God. See W. D. Davies, Paul and Rabbinic Judaism (New York, 1967) p. 55.

b. Lat. verbum tuum, a reference to the promise of progeny for Adam through Seth.

c. Lat. Quoniam figurantur dies tui. Other MSS read figura (figuratio) cordis tui, "form of your heart"; figura corporis tui, "form of your body"; figura corporis mei, "form of my body"; factus est, "it is done." The meaning is obscure, although it may be linked with Ps 90:12.

28 a. Lat. virtutes, lit. "excellencies"; see Vita 21, n. a.

29 a. TLevi 3:2 refers to fire, snow, and ice at the first (lowest) heaven; 2En 3:3 describes a "very great Sea, greater than the earthly sea at the first heaven"; Rev 4:6 and 15:2 refer to a "sea of glass" in heaven. Here, however, the waters seem to be around the earthly Paradise.

b. The MSS in groups II, III, and IV include here the following interpolation, an apocalyptic piece which refers both to the temples of Solomon and of Herod:

29:4 "Listen, Seth my son, to the other future sacramental mysteries which were revealed to me, which by eating of the tree of knowledge I knew and understood, which shall be in this temporary age, which God is about to perform with his creation, the human race. 5 The LORD will appear in a blaze of fire. From the mouth of his majesty he will give commands and precepts, and they will hallow him in the

LIFE OF ADAM AND EVE

[Apocalypse]

[Vita]

IV. ADAM'S FINAL ILLNESS

1 30 After Adam had lived 930 years, he knew his days were at an end and therefore said, "Let all my sons be gathered to me, that I may bless them before
2 I die, and speak with them." •And they assembled in three parts in his sight at 3 the oratory<sup>a</sup> where they used to worship the LORD God. •And they asked him, "What is it with you, Father, that you should gather us together? And why are 4 you lying on your bed?" •And Adam answered and said, "My sons, I am sick with pains." And all his sons said to him, "What is it, Father, to be sick with pains?"

1 31 Then his son Seth said, "Lord, perhaps you have longed for the fruit of Paradise of which you used to eat, and that is why you are lying in sadness.
2.3 Tell me and I will go to the vicinity of the entrances to Paradise •and will put dust on my head and throw myself to the ground before the gates of Paradise and mourn with great lamentation, entreating the LORD. Perhaps he will hear me and 4 send his angel to bring me the fruit which you desire." •Adam answered and said, "No, my son, I do not long for (that); but I have weakness and great pain 5 in my body." •Seth responded, "What is pain, O lord Father? I do not know; do not hide it from us, but tell us."

Adam's story of the Fall

1 32 And Adam answered and said, "Listen to me, my sons. When God made us, me and your mother, and placed us in Paradise and gave us every tree bearing fruit to eat, he forbade us (saying), 'Regarding the tree of the knowledge of good 2 and evil, which is in the midst of Paradise, do not eat of it.' •Moreover, God gave a part of Paradise to me and (a part) to your mother. The trees of the eastern part and over against the north he gave to me, and to your mother he gave the southern and western parts.

ApMos 15

house of the habitation of his majesty. 6 And he will show them the wonderful place of his majesty, and then they will build a house for the LORD their God on the earth where he will dread them (ms. 3 has "which he will prepare for them"). 7 and there they will pass by his precepts and their sanctuary will be set on fire and their land deserted and they themselves will be dispersed because they provoked God. 8 And once again he will deliver them from their dispersion, and again they will build a house of God, and the latest house of God shall be exalted more highly than before. And once again iniquity will surpass equity. 9 After this God will dwell with men, being seen on the earth, and then justice will begin to shine, and the house of God will be honored in this world and no longer will the enemies be able to harm men who believe in God. 10 And God will raise up for himself a faithful people whom he will save forever. 11 But the wicked who refused to love his law will be punished by God their king. 12 Heaven and earth, nights and days, and all creatures will obey him and not ignore his commandment nor change its works, but rather men who forsake the law of the LORD will be changed. 13 Therefore, the LORD will banish from himself the impious while the righteous will shine like the sun in the presence of God. 14 And in that time men will be purified from sins by water, but those who refuse purification by water will be condemned. 15 Happy will be the man who has reformed his soul when the judgments and wonders of God shall come among men, their deeds being investigated by God, the just Judge."

The Babylonian destruction of Judah is referred to in vs. 7 and the second temple in vs. 8; vs. 14 is certainly, and vs. 9 possibly, from a Christian hand.

30 a. In rabbinic sources Adam's oratory is located on Mount Moriah, on the spot on which the holy of holies of the temple later stood (Midrash on Ps 92:6; PR 43:2; PRE 23; 31, etc.). The assertion of ApMos 40:5 that Adam was buried on the same spot from which the dust was taken for his body is assumed in several Jewish sources to refer to the same place; cf. Vita 45:2.

[Apocalypse]

2 5 And (Adam) became ill and cried with a loud voice saying, "Let all my sons 3 come to me that I may see them before I die." •And all came together, for the earth was settled<sup>a</sup> in three parts.<sup>b</sup> And they all came to the door of the house in 4 which he used to enter to pray to God.<sup>c</sup> •And his son Seth said, "Father Adam, what is your illness?" And he said, "My children, much pain afflicts me."<sup>d</sup>
 5 And they said, "What is pain and illness?"<sup>e</sup>

1 6 And Seth answered and said, "Father, have you been thinking of the things
 2 from which you used to eat and grieving to desire them?"<sup>a</sup> •If such is the case tell Vita 1-4 me, and I will go and bring you fruit from Paradise. For I will place dung on my head and weep and pray, and the LORD will hear me and will send his angel, and Ma 1 2:3 3 I will bring (it) to you so that the pain will leave you."<sup>b</sup> •Adam said to him, "No, Seth my son; but I have sickness and pain." Seth said to him, "And how did this happen to you?"

1 7 Adam said to him, "When God made us, me and your mother, through whom I am dying,<sup>a</sup> he gave us every plant in Paradise, but concerning one he commanded us not to eat of it, (for) we would die by it."<sup>b</sup> Gen 2:16-17

5 a. MSS E1 and E2 read "divided."

b. Arm. reads "For they were living apart each by himself in his own place."

c. This sentence occurs only in A1 A2 (variant) C (variant) D3 F.

d. E1 and E2 omit this sentence and otherwise condense the conversation.

e. The purpose of this section in both Vita and ApMos is to show that sickness is not part of the created order, but rather one of the punishments brought by the Fall.

6 a. Several MSS omit the last three words.

b. MS B reads, "And he will bring to me from the tree in which the oil flows, and the pain will leave you."

7 a. This phrase is not found in E1 and E2.

b. MS G reads differently, but without significant change of meaning, in vss. 1-3.

[Vita]

1,2 33 The LORD God appointed two angels to guard us.<sup>a</sup> •The hour came when the 3 angels ascended to worship in the presence of God. •Immediately the adversary, the devil, found opportunity while the angels were away and deceived your mother so that she ate of the illicit and forbidden tree. And she ate and gave to me.

1 34 And immediately the LORD God was angry with us and the LORD said to me, 'Because you have forsaken my commandment and have not kept my word which 2 I set for you, behold, I will bring upon your body seventy plagues; •you shall be racked with various pains, from the top of the head and the eyes and ears down 3 to the nails of the feet, and in each separate limb.' •These he considered to be the scourge of pain from one of the trees.<sup>a</sup> Moreover, the LORD sent all these to me and to all our generations."

1 35 Adam said this to all his sons while he was seized with great pains, and he cried out with a loud voice, saying, "Why should I suffer misery and endure such 2 agony?" •And when she saw him weeping, Eve herself began to weep, saying,
3 "O LORD, my God, transfer his pain to me, since it is I who sinned." •And Eve said to Adam, "My lord, give me a portion of your pain, for this guilt has come to you from me."

Vita 44:2

1 36 And Adam said to Eve, "Rise and go with my son Seth to the regions of Paradise and put dust on your heads and prostrate yourselves to the ground and 2 mourn in the sight of God. •Perhaps he will have mercy and send his angel to the tree of his mercy, from which flows the oil of life,<sup>a</sup> and will give you a little of it with which to anoint me, that I might have rest from these pains by which I am wasting away."

The rule of the beasts

1 37 And Seth and his mother went toward the gates of Paradise; and while they were walking, behold suddenly there came a serpent, a beast, and attacked and 2 bit Seth. •And when Eve saw it, she cried out and said, "Woe is me for I am 3 cursed, since I have not kept the command of the LORD. •And Eve said to the serpent in a loud voice, "Cursed beast! How is it that you were not afraid to throw yourself at the image of God, but have dared to attack it? And how were your teeth made strong?"<sup>a</sup>

33 a. Ginzberg, JE, vol. 1, p. 179, takes these to be among the virtutes, "excellencies," mentioned in 21:1; 28:2; 48:2; see also 2En 8:8.

34 a. Lat. Haec deputavit in flagellationem dolori uno cum arboribus; the MSS differ greatly on this expression.

36 a. This tree is identified as the "tree of life" only in ApMos 28; contrast Vita 40:3 and see Vita 40:2-3; ApMos 13:1. In ApMos 28:2-4 Adam is told that he will not eat from the tree of life until the resurrection, an inconsistency with this passage if the tree here is the tree of life. Both texts, however, are composed of originally separate traditions. Rabbinic literature knows nothing of the "oil of life" but speaks of the "dew of light" (Isa 26:19) as the means of resurrection; on the oil see GNic 19 (= Descent 3); PseudClemRec 1.45; Origen, Contra Celsus 6:27; Mk 6:13; Jas 5:14.

37 a. The oldest MSS of Vita omit this sentence.

[Apocalypse]

2 •And the hour drew near for the angels who were guarding<sup>c</sup> your mother to ascend and worship the LORD. And the enemy gave to her and she ate from the tree, since he knew that neither I nor 3 the holy angels were near her. •Then she<sup>d</sup> gave also to me to eat. Gen 3:1-7

1 8 When we both had eaten,<sup>a</sup> God was angry with us. And the LORD came into Gen 3:8-12 Paradise<sup>b</sup> and called with a frightful voice, saying, 'Adam, where are you? And 2 why do you hide from my face? Can the house hide from its builder?' •And he said, 'Since you have forsaken my covenant, I have submitted your body to seventy plagues.<sup>c</sup> The pain of the first plague is affliction of the eyes; the pain of the second plague is of the hearing; and so one after the other all the plagues shall pursue<sup>d</sup> you.' "

1 9 While he was saying these things to his sons, he sighed deeply and said, "What 2 shall I do? I am in great distress." •And Eve also wept and said, "My lord Adam, rise, give me half of your illness and let me bear it, because this has happened to you through me; because of me you suffer troubles and pains." "

3 •But Adam said ApMos 14:2
to Eve,<sup>b</sup> "Rise and go with our son, Seth, near to Paradise, and place earth on your heads and weep, beseeching God so that he might have mercy on me, and send his angel into Paradise and give me<sup>c</sup> from the tree out of which the oil flows, and bring it to me, and I will anoint myself and rest." "<sup>d</sup> Rev 22:2
1En 24:3-4
2En 8:3
TLevi 18:11
4Ezra 2:12

1 10 And Seth and Eve went into the regions of Paradise. As they were going,
2 Eve saw her son and a wild beast attacking him. •And Eve wept, saying, "Woe is me! For when I come to the day of resurrection, all who have sinned will curse 3 me, saying<sup>a</sup> that Eve did not keep the command of God." •And Eve cried out to the beast and said, "O you evil beast, do you not fear to attack the image of God? How was your mouth opened? How did your teeth grow strong? How did you not remember your subjection, for you were once subjected to the image of Gen 1:26, 28 God?"

c. Several MSS read diatêrountas, "watching closely," rather than phylassontôn, "guarding," translated here.

d. Some MSS read "he" or "that one."

8 a. Six MSS omit this phrase (C D1 D2 D4 M1 M2).

b. Several MSS add "placed his throne."

c. Three MSS read "seventy-two." This confusion is similar to the rabbinic question whether there are seventy or seventy-two nations in the world; m.Nega'im 1:4 deals with the signs of leprosy and is not relevant to this passage.

d. Gk. parakolouthêsousin, "pursue."

9 a. This clause is not found in E1 and E2; several other MSS omit "and pains."

b. In Vita 31 (= ApMos 6) Adam rejects Seth's offer to go to Paradise.

c. MSS E1 and E2 add "a branch."

d. MS C reads, "I will anoint myself and be freed from the pain"; several others add, "And I will show you the way in which we were formerly deceived," an addition which disrupts the narrative.

10 a. Some MSS read, "cursed be Eve, for she did not keep the command of God."

[Vita]

1 38 The beast answered in a human voice, "O Eve, is not our malice against 2 you? Is not our fury against you? •Tell me, Eve, how was your mouth opened 3 that you ate of the fruit which the LORD God commanded you not to eat? •Now, however, are you not able to bear it if I begin to reproach you?"<sup>a</sup>

1 39 Then Seth said to the beast, "May the LORD God rebuke you. Stop; be quiet;
2 close your mouth, cursed enemy of truth, chaotic destroyer.<sup>a</sup> •Stand back from the image of God until the day when the LORD God shall order you to be brought 3 to judgment." •And the beast said to Seth, "See, I stand back from the presence of the image of God, as you have said." Immediately he left Seth, who was wounded by (his) teeth.<sup>b</sup>

Seth and Eve at the earthly Paradise

1 40 But Seth and his mother walked toward the regions of Paradise for the oil of 2 mercy, to anoint the sick Adam. •And they arrived at the gates of Paradise, took dust from the earth, and put it on their heads, prostrated themselves to the ground 3 on their faces and began to mourn with loud sighs, •begging the LORD God to pity Adam in his pains and to send his angel to give them the oil from the tree of mercy.

31:3
ApMos 6:3

1 41 But when they had prayed and entreated for many hours, behold, the angel
Michael appeared to them, saying, "I have been sent to you from the LORD; I
2 have been set by the LORD over the bodies of men. •I say to you, Seth, man of God, do not weep, praying and begging for the oil of the tree of mercy to anoint your father Adam for the pains of his body.

1 42 Truly I say to you that you are by no means able to take from it, except in the last days.<sup>a</sup>

1 43 But you, Seth, go to your father Adam, for the span of his life is completed.
2 Six days from now his soul shall leave the body; and as it leaves, you shall see 3 great wonders in heaven and on the earth and in the lights of heaven." •Having 4 said this, Michael immediately withdrew from Seth. •And Eve and Seth turned back and brought with them aromatics, namely, nard, crocus, calamine, and cinnamon.

ApMos 35-36

ApMos 29

38 a. Some MSS omit the words "if I begin to reproach you."

39 a. These words, as well as the identification of the beast as a serpent in 37:1, reveal that the Lat. text thinks of the beast as Satan; this is not the case in ApMos.

b. Lat. plaga de dentibus a Seth, "Seth who was wounded by his teeth"; there are a variety of variants for this phrase.

42 a. Meyer includes here the following extract, found in a few MSS as well as the Lat. text of GNic 19 (=Descent 3): ". . . When five thousand five hundred years [variants: 6,500, 5,050, 5,200, 5,199, 5,228] shall have been completed. Then the most beloved Christ, Son of God, shall come upon the earth to revive the body of Adam and with him the bodies of the dead. •And when he, the Son of God, comes, he himself will be baptized in the river Jordan, and when he has come out of the water of the Jordan, then he will anoint from the oil of mercy all who believe in him. •And the oil of mercy shall be from generation to generation for those who are born again of water and the Holy Spirit into eternal life. •Then the most beloved Son of God, Christ, shall descend to the earth, and lead your father Adam to Paradise to the tree of mercy." Meyer takes this passage as evidence that the Vita, or its sources, was known to the author of GNic.

[Apocalypse]

1 11 Then the beast cried out, saying, "O Eve, neither your greed nor your weeping
 2 are due to us, but to you, since the rule of the beasts has happened because of 3 you.<sup>a</sup> •How is it that your mouth was opened to eat from the tree concerning which God commanded you not to eat from it? Through this also our nature was 3 changed. •Therefore now you would not bear it if I begin to reprove you."

1 12 Seth said to the beast, "Shut your mouth and be silent, and keep away from 2 the image of God until the day of judgment." •Then the beast said to Seth, "See,
 I stand off, Seth,<sup>a</sup> from the image of God." Then the beast fled and left him wounded and went to its dwelling.<sup>b</sup>

1 13 And Seth went with his mother Eve near to Paradise. And they wept there,<sup>a</sup> praying God that he would send his angel to give them the oil of mercy.<sup>b</sup>

2 And God sent Michael the archangel,<sup>c</sup> and he said to them, "Seth, man of God, do not labor, praying with this supplication about the tree from which the oil flows, to anoint your father Adam; it shall not come to be yours now (but<sup>d</sup> at the 3 end of times. •Then all flesh from Adam up to that great day<sup>e</sup> shall be raised,
 4 such as shall be the holy people; •then to them shall be given every joy of Paradise
 5 and God shall be in their midst, •and there shall not be any more sinners before him, for the evil heart shall be removed from them, and they shall be given a 6 heart that understands the good and worships God alone.) •But you go again to your father, since the measure of his life is fulfilled, that is,<sup>f</sup> in three days. And as his soul departs, you are sure to witness its fearful upward journey."

Jer 31:33
 Ezek 18:31;
 36:26

ApMos 32:4

11 a. That the hostilities of the animal world toward man will be removed in the future age is found in Isa 11:6-9; see also Mk 1:13.

12 a. Several MSS omit the name Seth here. The widespread speculation that Seth possessed the image of God in a special way is based on Gen 5:3.

b. Lit. "tent"; MS C reads, "den" (koiên).

13 a. This word is not found in several MSS.

b. A play on words (elaion/eleou, "oil"/"mercy") not capable of Lat. translation.

c. See ApMos 17:2, n. a.

d. The words from here through 13:5 are found in a minority of the Gk. MSS and are thus included here in parentheses. Yet, in striking contrast to the interpolation in Vita 42:2-5, this passage has no exclusively Christian features.

e. MS B reads, "the day of consummation."

f. Gk. ison, "that is"; lit. "equal to"; some MSS emend this to eisôn, "within," or eis treis êmeras, "to three days."

[Vita]

1 44 And when Seth and his mother reached Adam, they told him how the beast, 2 the serpent, bit Seth. •And Adam said to Eve, “What have you done? You have 3 brought upon us a great wound, transgression and sin in all our generations. •And you shall relate<sup>a</sup> what you have done to your children<sup>b</sup> after my death, for those who rise up from us shall labor, not being adequate, but failing,<sup>c</sup> and they shall 4 curse us, saying, •‘Our parents who were from the beginning have brought upon 5 us all evils.’” •When Eve heard this she began to weep and groan.

44 a. Lit. refert, “she relates”; other MSS read refer, “you relate,” referes, “you are relating,” or referent, “they are relating.” This statement suggests that the author of the Vita was aware of Eve’s story (ApMos 15–30).

b. The MSS read tuos, “your,” tuis, “your,” meus, “my,” tuus, “your,” or nostris, “of us”; and filios, acc. pl. “children,” filius, nom. sing. “son,” or filii, nom. pl. “children.”

c. This suggests an acquaintance with ApMos 24.

[Apocalypse]

- 1 14 Having said these things, the angel departed from them. Seth and Eve came 2 into the tent where Adam was lying. • Adam said to Eve, “Why have you wrought destruction among us and brought upon us great wrath, which is death gaining 3 rule over all our race?”<sup>a</sup> • And<sup>b</sup> he said to her, “Call all our children and our children’s children, and tell them how we transgressed.”

2Cor 11:3
 1Tim 2:14
 Rom 5:12-21

V. EVE’S STORY OF THE FALL AND ITS CONSEQUENCES

- 1 15 Then Eve said to them, “Listen, all my children and my children’s children, 2 and I will tell you how our enemy deceived us.<sup>a</sup> • It happened while we were guarding Paradise, each his portion allotted from God. Now I was watching in 3 my share, the South and West, • and the devil came into Adam’s portion, where the male animals were, since God divided the animals among us, and all the males he gave to your father, and all the females to me, and each of us kept his own.<sup>b</sup>

Vita 32

- 1 16 “And the devil spoke to the serpent,<sup>a</sup> saying, ‘Rise and come to me, and I 2 will tell you something to your advantage.’ • Then the serpent came to him, and the devil said to him, ‘I hear that you are wiser than all the beasts; so I came to observe you.<sup>b</sup> I found you greater than all the beasts, and they associate with you;
 3 but yet you are prostrate to the very least.<sup>c</sup> • Why do you eat of the weeds of Adam<sup>d</sup> and not of the fruit<sup>e</sup> of Paradise? Rise and come and let us make him to be cast out of Paradise through his wife,<sup>f</sup> just as we were cast out through him.’
 4.5 The serpent said to him, ‘I fear lest the LORD be wrathful to me.’ • The devil said to him, ‘Do not fear; only become my vessel,<sup>g</sup> and I will speak a word through your mouth by which you will be able to deceive him.’<sup>h</sup>

Gen 3:1

Vita 14:3

Vita 12-16

ApMos 26:1

The temptation

- 1 17 “And immediately he suspended himself from the walls of Paradise about the time when the angels of God went up to worship. Then Satan came in the 2 form of an angel and sang hymns to God as the angels. • And I saw him bending

ApMos 7:2

Vita 9:1

2Cor 11:14

14 a. 2En 30:18 and Sir 25:24 also hold that death came through Eve (cf. 2Cor 11:3; 1Tim 2:14), while the blame is put on Adam in Rom 5:17; 4Ezra 3:21; 7:118. MS C does not have the words following “death.”

b. MSS E1 E2 G have a significantly different text for 14:3–16:5 and M1 and M2 for 14:3–17:2; MS D5 begins at this point.

15 a. MS C omits the words “Listen . . . deceived us.”

b. The last phrase of this sentence is not found in four MSS.

16 a. On the serpent of Paradise see TDNT, vol. 5, pp. 577f. (Foerster).

b. Gk. katanoēsai, “to observe”; MS C: “And therefore I consult you . . .”

c. This clause is not found in MS C; two others omit the last phrase.

d. Some MSS add “and his wife.”

e. Most MSS do not have “of the fruit.”

f. Several MSS omit “through his wife.”

g. A Hebraism (see TDNT, vol. 7, pp. 359–60); several MSS omit “only.”

h. Some MSS correct this to read “her” or “them.”

[Vita]

[Apocalypse]

over the wall, like an angel. And he said to me, 'Are you Eve?' And I said to 3 him, 'I am.' And he said to me, 'What are you doing in Paradise?' • I replied, 4 'God placed us to guard it and eat from it.' • The devil answered me through the 5 mouth of the serpent, 'You do well, but you do not eat of every plant.' • And I said to him, 'Yes, we eat from every plant except one only, which is in the midst of Paradise, concerning which God commanded us not to eat of it, else you shall most surely die.' Gen 3:3
Gen 2:17

1 18 "Then the serpent said to me, 'May God live! For I am grieved<sup>a</sup> over you, that you are like animals.<sup>b</sup> For I do not want you to be ignorant; but rise, come 2 and eat, and observe the glory of the tree.' • And I said to him, 'I fear lest God
 3 be angry with me, just as he told us.' • He said to me, 'Fear not; for at the very time you eat, your eyes will be opened and you will be like gods, knowing good 4 and evil. • But since God knew this, that you would be like him,<sup>c</sup> he begrudged
 5 you and said, "Do not eat of it." • But come to the plant, and see its great glory.'
 6 And I turned to the plant and saw its great glory. And I said to him, 'It is pleasing to consider with the eyes';<sup>d</sup> yet I was afraid to take of the fruit. And he said to me, 'Come, I will give it to you. Follow me.' Gen 3:5
Gen 3:6

The Fall

1 19 "And I opened (the gate) for him,<sup>a</sup> and he entered into Paradise, passing through in front of me. After he had walked a little, he turned and said to me, 'I have changed my mind and will not allow you to eat.' He said these things, wishing in the end to entice and ruin me.<sup>b</sup> And he said to me, 'Swear to me that 2 you are giving (it) also to your husband.' • And I said to him, 'I do not know by what sort of oath I should swear to you;<sup>c</sup> however, that which I do know I tell you: By the throne of the LORD and the cherubim and the tree of life, I shall give 3 (it) also to my husband to eat.' • When he had received the oath from me, he went, climbed the tree, and sprinkled his evil poison on the fruit which he gave me to eat which is his covetousness.<sup>d</sup> For covetousness is the origin<sup>e</sup> of every sin. And I bent the branch toward the earth,<sup>f</sup> took of the fruit, and ate. Jas 1:15;
Rom 7:7

18 a. MS D1 has a hiatus from here to 36:1.

b. Most MSS do not have this phrase.

c. This phrase is not in MSS C and E2.

d. Several MSS omit vs. 6 up to this point.

19 a. This implies that Satan and not Eve was outside of Paradise; on Satan's attempt to enter Paradise, cf. ARN 1.

b. This sentence is not found in several MSS.

c. One MS has this as a question: "What sort of oath shall I swear to you?"

d. Gk. epithymias; see ApMos 25:3, n. d. The poison (ios) of snakes is mentioned in the LXX of Ps 139:4 (ET 140:3); 57:5 (ET 58:4) [thymos . . . tou opseōs = wrath . . . of serpents]; see also Rev 3:3; Hermas, Sim. 9.26.7.

e. Gk. kephalē corresponds to the Heb. rō'š, "head" or "first"; since the Heb. word also denotes a poisonous plant, the original could have been a pun. MS C reads "root and beginning."

f. Several MSS and the Arm. read, "he bent," corresponding to ARN 1, where the serpent "touched the tree with his hands and feet, and shook it until its fruits fell to the ground."

[Vita]

[Apocalypse]

1 20 "And at that very moment my eyes were opened and I knew that I was naked Gen 3:7
 2 of the righteousness with which I had been clothed.<sup>a</sup> •And I wept saying, 'Why Isa 61:10 have you done this to me, that I have been estranged from my glory with which Eph 6:10-20 3 I was clothed?'<sup>b</sup> •And I wept also about the oath. But that one came down from 4 the tree and vanished. •I looked for leaves in my region so that I might cover my Gen 3:7
 shame, but I did not find (any) from the trees of Paradise, since while I ate, the 5 leaves of all the trees of my portion fell,<sup>c</sup> except (those) of the fig tree only. •And I took its leaves and made for myself skirts; they were from the same plants of Gen 3:7
 which I ate.<sup>d</sup>

1 21 "And I cried out with a loud voice, saying, 'Adam, Adam, where are you?
 2 Rise, come to me and I will show you a great mystery.' •And when your father came, I spoke to him unlawful words of transgression such as brought us down 3 from great glory.<sup>a</sup> •For when he came, I opened my mouth and the devil was speaking, and I began to admonish him, saying, 'Come, my lord Adam, listen to me and eat of the fruit of the tree of which God told us not to eat from it, and 4 you shall be as God.' •Your father answered and said, 'I fear lest God be angry with me.' And I said to him, 'Do not fear; for as soon as you eat, you shall know 5 good and evil.' •Then I quickly persuaded him. He ate, and his eyes were opened,
 6 and he also realized his nakedness. •And he said to me, 'O evil woman! Why have you wrought destruction among us? You have estranged me from the glory of God.' Vita 44
 ApMos 14

The appearance of God in Paradise

1 22 "And in the same hour we heard the archangel Michael sounding his trumpet, Isa 58:1
 2 calling the angels, saying, •"Thus says the LORD, "Come with me into Paradise Ezek 33:1-6
 3 and hear the sentence<sup>a</sup> which I pronounce on Adam.'" •And as we heard the Hos 8:1
 archangel sounding the trumpet, we said, 'Behold, God is coming into Paradise Mt 24:31 to judge us.' We were afraid and hid.<sup>b</sup> And God returned to Paradise, seated on 1Cor 15:52 a chariot of cherubim, and the angels were praising him. When God came into IThes 4:16
 Paradise, all the plants, both of the portion of Adam and also of my portion, Rev 8:2 4 bloomed forth and were established.<sup>c</sup> •And the throne of God was made ready where the tree of life was.<sup>d</sup> ApMos 20:1: 38:4

1 23 "And God called Adam, saying, 'Adam, where did you hide, thinking that Gen 3:9 2 I would not find you? Can a house hide from its builder?' •Then your father answered and said, 'O LORD, we are not hiding thinking that we would not be discovered by you, but rather I<sup>a</sup> am afraid because I am naked, and I stood in Gen 3:10

20 a. Ginzberg (Legends, vol. 5, pp. 121f. and n. 120) notes that the haggadic interpretation of "naked" in Gen 3:7, 10 is that the first pair became aware that they were bare of good deeds; cf. Shab 14a; Meg 32a; GenR 19:6; PRE 14. Other Jewish and Christian writers assert that Adam and Eve had garments of light before the Fall.

b. This sentence is not found in several MSS.

c. See ApMos 22:3; 38:4 and cf. b. Yoma 39b.

d. Cf. PR 42:1: The tree of knowledge was "wheat, according to R. Meir. A fig tree according to R. Jose. Grapes, according to R. Judah the son of R. Illai. According to R. Abba of Akko, it was the ethrog. Whatever it was, God has not revealed its identity." GenR 15:7 agrees with later Adam literature that it was the fig tree. Several MSS do not have the last clause of vs. 5.

21 a. Some MSS omit the words "such as . . . glory."

22 a. Gk. hrēmatos, "sentence," or krīmatos, "judgment," "sentence."

b. Several MSS omit vs. 3 up to this point.

c. Some MSS apply this verb to the following sentence: "And the throne of God was established . . ."

d. According to 2En 8:3 when God comes into Paradise he locates himself at the tree of life.

23 a. Some MSS correct this to "we."

[Vita]

[Apocalypse]

- 3 awe of your might, O LORD.' •God said to him, 'Who showed you that you are Gen 3:11 4 naked, unless you have forsaken my commandment which I delivered to you to 4 keep?' •Then Adam remembered the word which I spoke to him, when I wanted
 5 to deceive him, 'I will make you safe from God.' •And he turned and said to me,
 'Why have you done this?' And I also remembered the word of the serpent, and Gen 3:13
 I said, 'The serpent deceived me.'

The punishments

- 1 24 "God said to Adam, 'Because you transgressed my commandment and listened Gen 3:17-19
 2 to your wife, cursed is the ground in your labors. •For when you work it, it will not give its strength; it shall yield you brambles and thistles and with sweat on Gen 3:18 your brow shall you eat your bread. You will suffer many a hardship: Gen 3:19
- You will grow weary and not rest;
 be afflicted with bitterness and not taste sweetness;
- 3 be oppressed by heat and burdened by cold;
 you will toil much and not gain wealth;
 you will grow fat and finally not be.<sup>a</sup>
- 4 And the animals over which you ruled will rise up against you in disorder, because ApMos 11 you did not keep my commandment.'
- 1 25 "Turning to me, the LORD said to me, 'Since you have listened to the serpent Gen 3:16 and ignored my commandment, you shall suffer birth pangs<sup>a</sup> and unspeakable 2 pains; •with much trembling you shall bear children and on that occasion you 3 shall come near to lose your life<sup>b</sup> from your great anguish and pains, •and you shall confess and say, "LORD, LORD, save me and I will never again turn to the 4 sin of the flesh.'"<sup>c</sup> •And by this, according to your word I will judge you, because of the enmity which the enemy has placed in you.<sup>d</sup> And yet you shall turn again to your husband, and he shall rule over you.'
- 1 26 "And after he had told me these things,<sup>a</sup> he spoke to the serpent in great Gen 3:14-15 wrath, saying to him, 'Since you have done this and become an ungrateful vessel,<sup>b</sup> so far as to lead astray the careless of heart, accursed are you beyond all wild Gen 3:14 2 beasts. •You shall be deprived of the food which you used to eat,<sup>c</sup> and shall eat dust every day of your life. You shall crawl on your belly and you shall be deprived Gen 3:14 3 of your hands as well as your feet. •There shall be left for you neither ear nor

24 a. Gk. eis telos mē hyparkseis may also be translated "not reach (your) goal."

25 a. Fuchs rightly suggests that the Gk. mataios, "follies," resulted from reading the Heb. original h'ballm, "birth pangs," as h'ballm, "vanities." The translator in ANF, vol. 3, p. 568 suggests that the Gk. originally read kamatoi, "labors," (as in D3) or mochthois, "hardships."

b. Gk. en mia hōra elthēs kai apolessēs tēn zōēn sou, lit. "in one hour you may come and you will lose your life."

c. Eve's promise has close parallels in b.Nidd 31b and GenR 20:7.

d. A pun (echthran, "enmity," echthros, "enemy"); Ginzberg (Legends, vol. 5, p. 124, n. 131) suggests that in the Heb. original this sentence read "according to your actions," that it was addressed to the serpent, and that it was located at the end of 26. In the Gk. the "word" refers to Eve's promise in vs. 2. The idea that Satan awakened Eve's sexual desire is found in ApAb 23; PRE 21; Philo, Op 56.

26 a. The first clause of 26:1 is not found in several MSS.

b. Gk. skeuos achariston may be a translation of the Heb. k'liy b'liyya'al, "tool of Belial"; so Fuchs, Ginzberg, and Maurer (TDNT, vol. 7, p. 360, n. 15); but see Hos 8:8 in LXX. The expression is not found in MSS C and D4.

c. MS B has a lengthy addition here.

[Vita]

[Apocalypse]

wing nor one limb of all that with which you enticed (them) in your depravity
 4 and caused them to be cast out of Paradise.<sup>d</sup> •And I will put enmity between you and his seed; he shall beware of your head and you his heel until the day of judgment.<sup>e</sup> Gen 3:15

The expulsion and the repentance

1 27 “Having said these things, he ordered his angels to cast us out of Paradise.
 2 While we were being expelled and lamenting, your father Adam begged the 3 angels, ‘Let me be a little while so that I may beseech God that he might have 4 compassion and pity me, for I alone have sinned.’ •And they ceased driving him
 5 out. And Adam cried out with weeping and said, ‘Forgive<sup>a</sup> me, LORD, what I
 6 have done.’ •Then the LORD said to his angels, ‘Why have you stopped driving
 7 Adam out of Paradise? Is the guilt mine, or did I judge badly?’ •Then the angels 8 fell on the ground and worshiped the LORD, saying, ‘You are righteous, LORD, 9 and you judge uprightly.’

1 28 “And the LORD turned and said to Adam, ‘From now on I will not allow you
 2 to be in Paradise.’ •And Adam answered and said, ‘LORD, give me from the tree
 3 of life that I might eat before I am cast out.’ •Then the LORD spoke to Adam, 4 ‘You shall not now take<sup>a</sup> from it; for it was appointed to the cherubim<sup>b</sup> and the 5 flaming sword which turns to guard it because of you, that you might not taste of 6 it and be immortal forever,<sup>c</sup> but that you might have the strife which the enemy
 7 has placed in you. •But when you come out of Paradise, if you guard yourself
 8 from all evil, preferring death to it,<sup>d</sup> at the time of the resurrection I will raise 9 you again, and then there shall be given to you from the tree of life, and you
 10 shall be immortal forever.’<sup>e</sup> Gen 3:24
 ApMos 25:3

1 29 “When the LORD had said these things, he ordered us cast out of Paradise.
 2 And your father wept before the angels opposite Paradise, and the angels said to 3 him, ‘What do you want us to do for you, Adam?’ •Your father answered and 4 said to the angels, ‘See, you are casting me out; I beg you, let me take fragrances
 5 from Paradise, so that after I have gone out, I might bring an offering to God so
 6 that God<sup>a</sup> will hear me.’ •And they came to God and said, ‘Jael,<sup>b</sup> eternal king,
 7 command that fragrant incenses from Paradise be given to Adam.’ •And God
 8 ordered Adam to come that he might take aromatic fragrances out of Paradise<sup>c</sup> for 9 his sustenance. •When the angels allowed him, he gathered both<sup>d</sup> kinds: crocus, 10 nard, reed, cinnamon; and other seeds for his food. And he took these and went 11 out of Paradise. And (so) we came to be on the earth.’<sup>e</sup> Jub 3:27
 Vita 22:2;
 43:5
 Gen 1:29

d. Several sources suggest the belief that the serpent had limbs before the Fall; see Josephus, Ant 1.1.4; GenR 19:1; 20:5.

e. The verb tērēsei is from Gen 3:15, LXX; the Heb. verb šūwp may have the same meaning.

27 a. Gk. sygchōrēson, “forgive”; lit. “yield,” as in 33:5; 35:2; and 37:6.

28 a. MS C reads “taste.”

b. In the Dead Sea Scrolls the cherubim are the highest rank of angels; cf. 1En 61:10; 2En 19:6.

c. MS M1 has a hiatus from here to 34:1.

d. Gk. hōs boulomenos apothanein, “preferring death to it”; lit. “as one who wishes to die”; one MS reads “as one about to die.”

e. MSS E1 and E2 do not have this vs.; MSS C and G omit the last clause.

29 a. Some MSS have “he.”

b. “Jael,” a compound from the first syllable of each of the two most common Heb. biblical terms for God (Yahweh, Elohim); see Wells, p. 148. C omits the word; D5 has aule, D2 ēaēl, and E2 yōēl.

c. Several MSS add “and seeds.”

d. For cultic purposes and also for food; several MSS read “four kinds.”

e. MSS F and H add here the account of the repentance of Adam and Eve, translated above as a parallel to Vita 1–10.

[Vita]

<sup>1</sup> 45 And just as Michael the archangel had predicted, the death of Adam came <sup>2</sup> after six days. •When Adam realized that the hour of his death had come, he said to all his sons, “Behold, I am 930 years old, and if I should die, bury me against <sup>3</sup> the East in the great dwelling place of God.”<sup>a</sup> •And it happened that when he finished his whole speech, he gave up the spirit.

John 19:30

45 a. Lat. contra ortum dei magnum habitationibus, “against the East in the great dwelling place of God”; some MSS read in agrum, “toward open country,” or in agro, “on land”; see Vita 30:2, n. a.

[Apocalypse]

- 1 30 "Now then, my children, I have shown you the way in which we were deceived. But you watch yourselves so that you do not forsake the good."<sup>a</sup>

VI. THE DEATH AND BURIAL OF ADAM AND EVE

- 1 31 When she had said these things in the midst of her sons and while Adam was lying ill, having one more day before going out of the body, Eve said to Adam, 2Cor 5:1-5 2 "Why are you dying and I live? And how long have I to live after you die? Tell
 3 me." •Then Adam said to Eve, "Do not be concerned about this, for you shall not be long after me, but we shall both alike die, and you yourself<sup>a</sup> shall be laid in my place. But when I die, leave me alone<sup>b</sup> and let no one touch me until the 4 angel of the LORD shall say something about me; •for God will not forget me, but will seek his own vessel<sup>c</sup> which he has formed. But rather rise to pray to God until I shall give back my spirit into the hands of the one who has given it. For we know not how we shall meet our maker, whether he shall be angry with us or turn to have mercy on us."

Eve's repentance and Adam's death

- 1.2 32 Then Eve rose and went out and fell on the ground and said, •"I have sinned, O God; I have sinned, O Father of all; I have sinned against you, I have sinned against your chosen angels, I have sinned against the cherubim, I have sinned against your steadfast throne; I have sinned, LORD, I have sinned much; I have 3 sinned before you, and all sin in creation has come about through me."<sup>a</sup> •While Eve was still on her knees praying, behold, the angel of mankind<sup>b</sup> came to her ApMos 14:2
 4 and lifted her up, saying, •"Rise, Eve, from your repentance, for behold, Adam your husband has gone out of his body. Rise and see his spirit borne up to meet its maker."

The return of God with his angels

- 1 33 And Eve rose and put her hand on her face,<sup>a</sup> and the angel said to her, "Lift Acts 7:55; 1:10
 2 yourself from earthly things." •And Eve gazed into heaven, and saw a chariot of light coming, (drawn) by four radiant eagles of which it is not possible for anyone born from the womb to tell their glory or to see their faces,<sup>b</sup> and angels went

30 a. In lieu of this paragraph E1 and E2 have a description of Eve's lament.

31 a. So the Arm.; most Gk. MSS have "she herself," although A2 and M2 put the verb in the second person singular.

b. Gk. kataleipsete, "leave (me) alone"; A1 and A2 read kalypsete, "cover (me)."

c. Gk. skeuos, "vessel"; other MSS read plasma, "image."

32 a. The E MSS here refer to death as resulting from Eve's sin.

b. Michael is intended; see Vita 41:1.

33 a. The Gk. MSS have several variants here; Arm. (cf. MS G) reads "with her hands wiped her many tears from her face."

b. MSS M1 G E1 read, "The beauty and glory of which it is impossible for tongues of men to describe."

[Vita]

1.2 46 And for seven days were the sun, moon, and stars darkened. •And while Seth was mourning, embracing the body of his father from above and Eve was looking 3 at the ground, her hands folded over her head, with her head on her knees, and all her children were weeping most bitterly, •behold, the angel Michael appeared standing at the head of Adam and he said to Seth, “Rise from the body of your father and come to me and see what the LORD God is arranging concerning him.
He is his creature and he has had mercy on him.”

[Apocalypse]

3 before the chariot. •When they came to the place where your<sup>c</sup> father Adam was lying, the chariot stood, and the seraphim (were) between (your) father and the 4 chariot. •I myself saw golden censers and three bowls, and behold, all the angels with frankincense and the censers and the bowls came to the altar and breathed
5 on them, and the fumes of the incense hid the sky.<sup>d</sup> •And the angels fell down and worshiped God, crying out and saying, “Holy Jael, forgive, for he is your image, and the work of your (holy) hands.”

1 34 And then I, Eve, saw two great and fearful mysteries standing before God.
2 And I wept from fear and cried out to my son Seth, saying, •“Rise, Seth, from the body of your father, Adam,<sup>a</sup> and come to me, that you may see things which no eye has ever seen.”<sup>b</sup>

1 35 Then Seth got up and came to his mother. And he said to her, “What is the
2 matter? Why are you weeping?” •She said to him, “Look up with your eyes and see the seven heavens<sup>a</sup> opened, and see with your eyes how the body of your father lies on its face, and all the holy angels are with him, praying for him and
3 saying, ‘Forgive him, O Father of all, for he is your image.’<sup>b</sup> •So<sup>c</sup> then, my child Seth, what shall this be? When will he be given over into the hands of our unseen
4 Father and God? •And who are the two dark-skinned persons<sup>d</sup> assisting at the prayer for your father?”

1 36 Seth said to his mother, “These are the sun and the moon, and they themselves
2 fall down and pray for my father Adam.” •And Eve said to him, “And where is 3 their light, and why have they become dark?” •Seth said to her, “They are not able to shine before the light<sup>a</sup> of all, and this is why the light is hid from them.”

Joel 2:10: 3:15
Job 25:5
Rev 8:12
Vita 28:2

Adam’s soul is taken up to the heavenly Paradise<sup>a</sup>

1 37 While Seth was speaking to his mother, an angel sounded the trumpet and the angels who were lying on their faces stood up<sup>b</sup> and cried out with a fearful
2 voice, saying, •“Blessed be the glory of the LORD over his works; he has had 3 mercy on Adam, the work of his hands.” •When the angels had shouted out these things, one of the six-winged seraphim came and carried Adam off to the Lake

c. Most of ApMos 33–34 are written as though Eve is speaking; this may have been part of a separate section from which 15–30 were also derived.

d. Or “firmaments” (stereōmata); F and H read “heaven.”

34 a. Several MSS do not include the name Adam here.

b. Several MSS add, “And they are praying for your father Adam.”

35 a. See Vita 25, n. a.

b. Some MSS read, “son,” “house,” “tent,” or “product.”

c. The E MSS do not contain 35:3–36:3 and have a much shorter form of the text from there to the end.

d. Gk. Aithiopes, lit. “Ethiopians”; MS G reads theoprosōpoi, “god-faced ones.”

36 a. Several MSS read “Father of lights,” as in Jas 1:17.

37 a. Chs. 37f. presuppose a distinction, not so clear in Vita, between body and spirit (or “soul”); death is the separation of the two. See TDNT, vol. 7, p. 1050 (E. Schweizer); on Paradise see Vita 25, n. a.

b. So D F and Arm.; Tischendorf’s text reads “The angels lying on their faces blew the trumpet . . .”

[Vita]

1 47 And all the angels sounded the trumpets and said, "Blessed are you, LORD,
 2 who has pitied your creature." •Then Seth saw the extended hand of the LORD ApMos 37:4 3 holding Adam, and he handed him over to Michael, saying, •"Let him be in your custody until the day of dispensing punishment<sup>a</sup> at the last years, when I will turn his sorrow into joy. Then he shall sit on the throne of him who overthrew him."

1 48 And again the LORD said to the angels Michael and Uriel, "Bring me three linen cloths and spread them out over Adam, and other cloths over his son Abel, 2 and bury Adam and his son." •And all the ranks of angels processed before
 3 Adam, and the sleep<sup>a</sup> of the dead was hallowed. •And Michael and Uriel said, ApMos 43:2
 "Bury your dead in the same way as you have seen."

47 a. Lat. usque in diem dispensationis in suppliciis, "until the day of dispensing punishment"; other MSS read disposition, "order," or defensionis, "defense."

48 a. Lat. dormitatio, "sleep" (medieval); other MSS have dormitio, "sleep."

[Apocalypse]

4 of Acheron<sup>c</sup> and washed him three times<sup>d</sup> in the presence of God. •He lay three hours,<sup>e</sup> and so the LORD of all, sitting on his holy throne, stretched out his hands and took Adam and handed him over to the archangel Michael, saying to him, 5 “Take him up into Paradise, to the third heaven,<sup>f</sup> and leave (him) there until that 6 great and fearful day which I am about to establish for the world.” •And the archangel Michael took Adam and brought him away and left him, just as God told him at the pardoning of Adam.

Vita 47:2

2Cor 12:2
Vita 25The burial of Adam’s body

1 38<sup>a</sup> Now after all these things the archangel asked about attending to the remains. 2 And God gave orders that all the angels should gather before him, each according 3 to his rank. •And all the angels came together, some with censers and others trumpets. And the LORD of hosts mounted up, the winds drawing him, and the cherubim being above the winds; and the angels of heaven were leading him. And 4 when they came to the place where the body of Adam was, they took it. •And they came into Paradise and all the plants of Paradise were stirred, so that all those born of Adam became drowsy from the fragrance except Seth, because he was born according to the appointment of God.<sup>b</sup>

Vita 25:3
ApMos 22ApMos 20:3;
22:3
Gen 4:25

1 39 Now the body of Adam was lying on the ground in Paradise, and Seth was mourning greatly over him. And the LORD God said, “Adam, why did you do this? If you had kept my commandment, those who brought you down into this 2 place would not have rejoiced. •Yet now I tell you that their joy shall be turned into sorrow, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy; and when that happens, I 3 will establish you in your dominion on the throne of your seducer. •But that one shall be cast into this place, so that you might sit above him. Then he himself and those who listen to him shall be condemned, and they shall greatly mourn and weep when they see you sitting on his glorious throne.”

Vita 12-16

1 40 Then he spoke to the archangel Michael, “Go into Paradise in the third 2 heaven<sup>a</sup> and bring me three cloths of linen and silk.”<sup>b</sup> •And God said to Michael, Gabriel, Uriel, and Raphael,<sup>c</sup> “Cover Adam’s body with the cloths and bring oil from the oil of fragrance and pour it on him.” And thus they did and prepared 3 his body. •And the LORD spoke, “Let also Abel’s body be brought.” And they 4 brought other linens and prepared him also, •since he was unattended from the

2En 8

c. In Gk. tradition part of the stream over which the souls of the dead were conveyed to the underworld. That Michael washes repentant sinners in Acheron is found in ApPaul 22 (end); Bartholomew literature (M. R. James, ANT, p. 185); SibOr 2.330–39 (HSW, vol. 2, p. 718); see also SibOr 5.485; 3Bar 10:2; 1En 17:6.

d. “Three times” is omitted in some MSS.

e. Most Gk. MSS originally read “days”; “hours” is written by another hand. Cf. TJob 20.

f. See Vita 25, n. a. The E MSS do not have the words following “Paradise” in 37:5 or 38:1–3, 5.

38 a. MSS F and H do not have chs. 38–39.

b. Gk. kath horon tou theou, “according to the appointment of God,” may be a reference to Gen 4:25 or could be read kathoran tou theou, “to behold God” (so Charles); or may be read, as in MS G, katharos enōpion tou theou, “pure before God.”

40 a. See Vita 25, n. a.

b. Gk. syrikas, “pipes,” is mistakenly written for sērikas, “silken”; some MSS omit “and silk.”

c. These four angels also are named in the Dead Sea Scrolls and 1En 9:1 as the greatest of the angels. Several MSS mention Michael alone here.

[Vita]

Eve's instructions about the tablets and her death

1 49 Indeed, six days after Adam died, Eve, aware that she would die, gathered all her sons and daughters, Seth with thirty brothers and thirty sisters, and Eve 2 said to (them) all, •“Listen to me, my children, and I will tell you that I and your 3 father transgressed the command of God, •and the archangel Michael said to us, ‘Because of your collusion, our LORD will bring over your race the wrath of his judgment, first by water and then by fire; by these two the LORD will judge the whole human race.’

1 50 “But listen to me, my children! Make now tablets of stone and other tablets of clay and write in them all my life and your father’s which you have heard and 2 seen from us. •If he should judge our race by water, the tablets of earth will dissolve and the tablets of stone will remain; but if he should judge our race by fire, the tablets of stone will break up and those of clay will be thoroughly baked.”<sup>a</sup>

2En 33:8-12
 Josephus, Ant
 1.2.3

50 a. This tradition is already found in different form in Josephus, Ant 1.2.3; the tradition is known in “Pseudo-Manetho,” cf. George Syncellus, Chronicle 40; see also Jub 8:1-3; 2En 33:8-12 (B); Philo, Vita Mos 2:36; GenR 26; ARN 31. The fact that the contents of these tablets according to the Vita is the story of Adam and Eve, while in Josephus it is astronomical knowledge, may indicate lack of dependence between these two. Cf. M. Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism, vol. 1, pp. 241-43.

[Apocalypse]

day when his brother Cain murdered him.<sup>d</sup> For the evil Cain took much care to hide (Abel's body), but could not,<sup>e</sup> for the earth did not receive the body, saying, Gen 4:10-11 5 "I shall not receive another<sup>f</sup> body until the mound of earth which was taken from me and formed shall come to me." Then the angels took up the body and set it Gen 2:7
 6 on the rock, until the time his father died, •and both were buried according to the command of God in the regions of Paradise in the place from which God had
 7 found the dust.<sup>g</sup> •And God sent seven angels into Paradise and they brought many fragrances and set them in the earth, and so they took the two bodies and buried them in the place which they dug and built.<sup>h</sup>

1 41 And God called Adam and said, "Adam, Adam." And the body answered
 2 from the ground and said, "Here I am, LORD." •And the LORD said to him, "I Gen 3:19
 3 told you that you are dust and to dust you shall return. •Now I promise to you the resurrection; I shall raise you on the last day in the resurrection with every man of your seed."

1 42 After these words God made a triangular seal and sealed the tomb in order
 2 that no one might do anything to him for six days, when his rib would return to 2.3 him. •Then the LORD and the angels went to their place,<sup>a</sup> •and after six days Eve also died.<sup>b</sup>

d. Several sources, including Josephus, Ant 1.2.1, assert that Cain hid Abel's body in the ground; rabbinic sources hold that Adam buried Abel (cf. b.Ta'an 69a, 56; DeutR on 4:41). We have here a separate tradition.

e. MS D adds "for the body sprang up from the earth and there was a voice from the earth saying . . ."

f. Most MSS have hetairon, "companion"; the original probably had, as with D, heteron, translated here. Abel could not be buried before Adam.

g. See Vita 30, n. a; the temple mount is suggested. The Samaritans held a similar view but identified the place of Adam's creation, Eden, and burial place as Mount Gerizim; cf. J. Macdonald, The Theology of the Samaritans (The New Testament Library; London, 1964) p. 375.

h. MSS F and H have an abbreviated form of vss. 5-7.

42 a. So MS D; others read, "And when the benevolent God and the holy angels had committed (him) to his place, after six days . . ."

b. This may be linked with the rabbinic interpretation of Gen 1-2 that Adam was created on the first day of creation and Eve on Friday; cf. Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 5, p. 127, n. 138.

[Vita]

3 When Eve had said all this to her children, she stretched out her hands to heaven, praying, and bent her knees to the ground and worshiped the LORD, giving thanks, and gave up the spirit.

1,2 51 After this, all her children buried her with great weeping. •Then, when they had mourned for four days, the archangel Michael appeared to them and said to Seth, “Man of God, do not prolong mourning your dead more than six days, because the seventh day is a sign of the resurrection, the rest of the coming age,
3 and on the seventh day the LORD rested from all his works.” •Then Seth made the tablets. Gen 2:2

VI. APPENDIX: THE DISCOVERY OF THE TABLETS*

Then Seth made tablets of stone and clay, and wrote in them the life of his father Adam and his mother Eve, what he had heard from them and his eyes had seen, and he put the tablets in the middle of the house of his father in the oratory<sup>b</sup> where 4 he used to pray to the LORD. •And after the Flood, those written tablets were seen
5 by many persons but were read by no one. •The wise Solomon, however, saw the writings and was entreating the LORD, and an angel of the LORD appeared to 6 him, saying, •“I am he who held the hand of Seth, so that he wrote with his finger onto stone, and you shall be wise in writing<sup>c</sup> so that you might know and understand all that is contained on the stones, and where the place of prayer was 7 where Adam and Eve used to worship the LORD God. •And it is fitting for you
8 to build the temple of the LORD, the house of prayer, at that place. •Then Solomon completed the temple of the LORD God and called forth those Achillean<sup>d</sup> documents (that is to say, written without the knowledge of words by the finger of Seth, his 9 hand being held by the angel of the LORD). •And on the stones themselves was found what Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied before the Flood, speaking of the coming of Christ, “Behold, the LORD will come in his holiness to pronounce judgment on all and to convict the impious of all their works which they spoke of him, sinners and impious, murmurers and irreligious, who walked according to their lust and whose mouth has spoken pride.”<sup>e</sup>

Gen 5:21-24
Jude 14-16

1En 1:9

51 a. This appendix, certainly a late and separate tradition, is found in the MSS of Meyer's group II, with many variants in some MSS used by Mozley (pp. 145-49), and in several medieval English and German versions. It is often connected with the legend of the wood of the cross.

b. See Vita 30, n. a.

c. Lat. scripturam, “writing.”

d. Lat. achiliacas; other MSS have achilicas or archilaykas. Meyer suggests a translation from the Gk. (acheiropoiētous, “not made with hands”). There are numerous textual variants in vss. 8-9.

e. That vs. 9 describes different contents of the tablets from what is indicated in 50:1 and 51:3 demonstrates the composite nature of this appendix.

[Apocalypse]

While living, she herself wept about her death,<sup>c</sup> because she did not know where her body was to be placed. For while the LORD was in Paradise when they buried Adam, both she and her children slept, except for Seth, as I said.<sup>d</sup>

4 And Eve in the hour of her death implored that she might be buried where Adam,
5 her husband, was, saying, "My Master, LORD and God of all excellence, do not 6 separate me<sup>e</sup> from the body of Adam; for you made me from his members; •but rather consider me worthy, even me, unworthy and sinful, to be buried near his 7 body. And just as I was with him in Paradise, •and not separated even after the 8 transgression, so also let no one separate us (now)." •Therefore after she prayed, she looked up to heaven, rose, beat her breast, and said, "God of all, receive my Lk 23:46 spirit." And immediately she gave up her spirit to God.<sup>f</sup>

1 43 When she had died, the archangel Michael stood by, and three angels came
2 and took her body and buried it where the body of Abel was. •And the archangel
Michael said to Seth, "Thus you shall prepare for burial each man who dies until Vita 48:3 3 the day of resurrection.<sup>a</sup> •And do not mourn more than six days; on the seventh day rest and be glad in it, for on that day both God and we angels rejoice in the 4 migration from the earth of a righteous soul."<sup>b</sup> •And when he had said these things, the angel went up into heaven, glorifying (God) and saying, "Alleluia, to whom be glory and power forever and ever."<sup>c</sup>

c. MS D reads "about the death of Adam."

d. The reference is to ApMos 38:4.

e. Some MSS add "your servant."

f. The E MSS end here with a statement that Eve's sons buried her with the body of Adam and there is a brief doxology.

43 a. The D group, F H G, add, with variants, "Upon giving him (this) law, the archangel departed from Seth, saying to him . . ."

b. MS G ends, ". . . in which God rested from all his works; to him be glory and power forever and ever. Amen." Other MSS read, "Do not mourn for seven days, for in it God and we angels rejoice . . ."

c. So MS D1. All MSS, in addition to Arm. and Slav., have variant endings; Tischendorf printed that of MS C: "He went up into heaven, glorifying and saying the hallelujah, 'Holy, holy, holy, LORD, to the glory of God the Father, for to him is due glory, honor, and worship with his eternal and life-giving Spirit both now and eternally, forever and ever. Amen.'" The trisagion is found also in D2 D3 D5 M1 M2 H. The ending of MS G is given in n. b.

PSEUDO-PHILO

(First Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY D. J. HARRINGTON

Pseudo-Philo's Biblical Antiquities (often referred to by the Latin title Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum), a history of Israel from Adam to David, is an imaginative retelling of parts of the Old Testament story. It interweaves biblical incidents and legendary expansions of these accounts. From the material corresponding to that of the book of Genesis there are genealogies from Adam to Noah (ch. 1) and from Cain to Lamech (ch. 2), the story of the Flood (ch. 3), genealogies of the sons of Noah down to Abraham (ch. 4), the census of Noah's descendants (ch. 5), the story of the tower of Babel and Abraham's rescue from the fiery furnace (ch. 6), the account of the dispersion of the peoples and the choice of Canaan as the land of Abraham (ch. 7), and the history of Israel from Abraham's settlement in Canaan to the descent of Jacob's sons into Egypt (ch. 8). From Exodus there are the stories of Moses' birth (ch. 9), the departure from Egypt and the crossing of the sea (ch. 10), the giving of the Law (ch. 11), and the golden calf (ch. 12). Various statutes regarding festivals and the purification of lepers are taken from Leviticus (ch. 13). From Numbers there is the census of the people (ch. 14) as well as the accounts of the twelve spies (ch. 15), the rebellion of Korah (ch. 16), the rod of Aaron (ch. 17), and Balaam (ch. 18). The narrative of Moses' farewell, prayer, and death (ch. 19) uses material from Deuteronomy. From Joshua there are stories of Joshua's commissioning as Moses' successor and his division of the land (ch. 20), Joshua's prayer and the cult at Gilgal (ch. 21), the altar across the Jordan and those at Gilgal and Shiloh (ch. 22), the covenant of Joshua (ch. 23), and the farewell and death of Joshua (ch. 24). Then from Judges there is a lengthy section about Kenaz, who is mentioned only in Judges 3:9-11 as the father of Othniel. His election and the sinners' confession (ch. 25), the punishment of the sinners and the twelve precious stones (ch. 26), his victory in battle (ch. 27), and his covenant, vision, and death (ch. 28) are described. After a brief section on Zebul (ch. 29) there are accounts of Deborah's call (ch. 30), the defeat of Sisera (ch. 31), the "hymn" of Deborah (ch. 32), and her farewell and death (ch. 33). Then sections about Aod the magician (ch. 34), the call (ch. 35) and victory (ch. 36) of Gideon, Abimelech (ch. 37), Jair (ch. 38), Jephthah (ch. 39) and his daughter Seila's lament (ch. 40), Abdon and Elon (ch. 41), and the birth (ch. 42) and exploits (ch. 43) of Samson are included. The narratives about the idols of Micah (ch. 44), the crisis at Nob (ch. 45), Israel's defeat (ch. 46), and the activities (ch. 47) and ascension (ch. 48) of Phinehas the priest follow. Finally, corresponding to 1 Samuel and the beginning of 2 Samuel there are long sections devoted mainly to Samuel and David. Connected with Samuel are the stories of Israel's search for a leader (ch. 49), the prayer of Hannah (ch. 50), the birth of Samuel (ch. 51), the sons of Eli (ch. 52), the call of Samuel (ch. 53), the capture of the ark and Eli's death (ch. 54), the return of the ark (ch. 55), the people's demand for a king (ch. 56), the presentation of Saul to the people (ch. 57), and the sin of Saul (ch. 58). Connected with David are the parts about his anointing and his psalm (ch. 59), his function as Saul's exorcist (ch. 60), David and Goliath (ch. 61), David and Jonathan, David's song (ch. 62), the death of Abimelech (ch. 63), the witch of Endor (ch. 64), and the death of Saul (ch. 65).

Texts

Pseudo-Philo exists in eighteen complete and three fragmentary Latin manuscripts, all apparently of German or Austrian origin.<sup>1</sup> The oldest are dated to the eleventh century, while the most recent are from the fifteenth century. All the complete manuscripts have what seem to be gaps of uncertain length between 36:4 and 37:2 and between 37:5 and 38:1. All end abruptly in the midst of Saul's final speech; the original ending seems to have been lost. There are Latin errors common to all the manuscripts. For our purposes the most important complete manuscripts are Fulda-Cassel Theol. 4° 3 (11th cent.) and Phillipps 461 (12th cent.; part of the Bodmer Collection). Also important is the editio princeps published by John Sichardus at Basel in 1527 in which he used the Fulda-Cassel manuscript along with a now lost manuscript from the Lorsch monastery. Detailed analysis indicates that this Lorsch manuscript reflected an earlier stage of tradition than any extant manuscript does. The close relationships between it and the Fulda-Cassel manuscript and between the latter and the Phillipps 461 lead us to rely on these primarily as the basis for arriving at the earliest possible text of Pseudo-Philo. The remaining complete manuscripts form a second major group. The most significant of these are Munich Latin 18481 (formerly Tegernsee 481; 11th cent.) and Admont 359 (11th cent.; now in the library of H. L. Goodhart). The relationships among all the extant manuscripts is such, however, that this second major group can preserve some readings that are likely to correspond to the earliest stage of the Latin tradition of Pseudo-Philo. Our translation is based mainly on the text of the Fulda-Cassel and Phillipps manuscripts, but where the second group offers manifestly superior readings we have adopted them. Finally, there are medieval retroversions of parts of Pseudo-Philo to be found in the Hebrew Chronicles of Jerahmeel (Bodleian MS Heb. d. 11; 14th cent.).<sup>2</sup> Several features in these Hebrew texts are best explained as translations from the Latin; there is also a tendency to assimilate Old Testament texts to the Masoretic Text. It is difficult to know, however, which Latin text (or texts) the retroverter had at his disposal. The title Biblical Antiquities comes from the first Latin editions. In the 1527 edition, Sichardus followed the lead of the fourteenth-century label of the Fulda-Cassel manuscript (liber Philonis antiquitatum) and called it Liber Antiquitatum. The title Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum first appears in the edition of Sichardus' text printed in 1552 at Lyon by S. Gryphe.

Original language

In an 1898 article<sup>3</sup> that reintroduced Pseudo-Philo to the scholarly world, Leopold Cohn argued that the Latin text is a translation from the Greek and that underlying the Greek there must have been a Hebrew original. Cohn's view has won general acceptance. Pseudo-Philo now exists in a Latin version whose idiom and style represent that vulgar Latin in which the Old Latin versions of the Bible were written. There are, however, several texts that are best explained if we presume a Greek stage in the transmission.<sup>4</sup> For example, in Pseudo-Philo 9:3 ("from the time when the word of God that he spoke to Abraham was spoken, there are 350 years") the Latin has was found. Here we probably have confusion between the Greek erretē, "was spoken," and heuretē, "was found." Also, several Greek words have been left practically untranslated: paratecem, "deposit," in 3:10, ometocean, "miscarriage," in 9:2, zaticon, "covenant," in 9:15, and anteciminus, "adversary," in 45:6. There are examples of mistranslation implying a Hebrew original. For example, in 15:6 ("to kindle a lamp for my people and to establish laws for creation") the Latin word terminus, "boundaries," can be traced back to the Hebrew hūqqīm, which can mean both "boundaries" and "laws." Also, in 53:6 ("With your right ear pay attention,

<sup>1</sup> D. J. Harrington, "The Text-Critical Situation of Pseudo-Philo's Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum," RBen 83 (1973) 383-88.

<sup>2</sup> D. J. Harrington, The Hebrew Fragments of Pseudo-Philo's Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum Preserved in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel.

<sup>3</sup> L. Cohn, "An Apocryphal Work Ascribed to Philo of Alexandria," JQR 10 (1898) 277-332.

<sup>4</sup> D. J. Harrington, "The Original Language of Pseudo-Philo's Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum," HTR 63 (1970) 503-14. Most of the key passages are mentioned in the notes accompanying our translation.

with your left be deaf") the Latin taceat, "be silent," reflects the Hebrew hāraš, which means both "be silent" and "be deaf." Lastly, some biblical texts are best explained as translations from Hebrew into Greek and then into Latin. In 3:4 ("Noah, who was a righteous man and blameless"), a version of Genesis 6:9, the word immaculatus, "blameless," renders the Hebrew tammim. Unlike the Septuagint translators, who rendered tammim as teleios, "perfect," the Greek translator of Pseudo-Philo must have used amōmos, "spotless," "blameless," which in Latin became immaculatus. In other words, here and elsewhere we are dealing with a translation of the Hebrew Bible independent of the Greek Old Testament. These indications that Hebrew was the original language of Pseudo-Philo enable us to recognize more clearly the many Semitisms behind the Latin text. Could Pseudo-Philo have been composed in Aramaic? Distinguishing between a work written in the Hebrew of the second Temple period and a work composed in Aramaic when we have only a Latin version made from a Greek translation is not easy. But some of the probable errors noted are possible only in Hebrew. For example, the phrase in victoria (9:3) or ad victoriam (12:6) can be traced to the Hebrew idiom l'nešah, "forever, everlasting," but the root nšh in Aramaic is not used in this sense. Furthermore, there is no solid positive evidence on which to argue that the book was composed in Aramaic. Therefore we are led to conclude that Hebrew, rather than Aramaic, is the original language of Pseudo-Philo.

Date

Attempts to date the composition of the original Hebrew version have focused on Pseudo-Philo 19:7, which mentions "the place where they will serve me 740 years" as having been destroyed on the same day as that on which Moses broke the tablets of the Law, the seventeenth of Tammuz. This has been understood as a reference to Titus' capture of Jerusalem, A.D. 70. But close inspection of this text and the complexities involved in it indicates that the reference could also be to the capture of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, Antiochus Epiphanes, or Pompey.<sup>5</sup> The parallels between Pseudo-Philo and 4 Ezra and 2 Baruch, the latter two most probably composed after the destruction of the second Temple, could also suggest a date after A.D. 70. But, again, this point is not decisive, since the theological emphases of these two books (mourning over the destroyed Temple, heightened eschatological consciousness, the four-empire scheme of history, the Messiah, etc.) are not the same as those of Pseudo-Philo.

The presence of what may be called a "Palestinian" biblical text<sup>6</sup> (rather than "Babylonian" or "Egyptian" according to the categories of F. M. Cross, Jr.) makes the latest possible date around A.D. 100 (when such texts were probably suppressed). Some other considerations lead us to suspect that Pseudo-Philo was composed before A.D. 70: the attitude toward the Temple and sacrifice (e.g. 32:3) is what we would expect before 70; the expression "unto this day" in 22:8 suggests that the Temple still stands; the negative attitude toward Jewish rulers not chosen by God (possibly an anti-Herodian polemic) would have been a dead issue after 70; the silence about the destruction of the Temple would be strange if indeed the Temple had been destroyed; the free attitude toward the biblical text fits the period before 70 better than after it. If Getal, the king of the Ammonites in 39:8, can be identified with Zenon surnamed Cotylas, who was ruler of Philadelphia (Ammon), then we can establish 135 B.C. as the earliest possible date for the composition of the work. A date around the time of Jesus seems most likely.

Provenance

If Pseudo-Philo had really been composed by Philo the Jew, Alexandria would be its obvious place of origin. The Latin text of Pseudo-Philo was transmitted along with the Latin translations of Philo's works, but the attribution of Pseudo-Philo to him cannot be sustained. The manner of dealing with the biblical text is very different from Philo's allegorizing. Moreover, Philo wrote in Greek (how much Hebrew he knew is debatable), but our author apparently wrote in Hebrew. Finally, there are several points at which Pseudo-Philo explicitly contradicts the views of Philo: 1,652 years from Adam to the Flood (3:6) against Philo's 2,242; the favorable or at least neutral portrayal of Balaam (18) against Philo's negative description; Moses' burial by God (19:16), not by the angels.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>5</sup> P.-M. Bogaert, Apocalypse syriaque de Baruch (SC 144; Paris, 1969) 252-58.

<sup>6</sup> D. J. Harrington, "The Biblical Text of Pseudo-Philo's Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum," CBQ 33 (1971) 1-17.

<sup>7</sup> F. M. Cross, Jr., The Ancient Library of Qumran and Modern Biblical Studies (Garden City, N.Y., 1961) pp. 163-94; "The History of the Biblical Text in the Light of the Discoveries in the Judean Desert," HTR 57 (1964) 281-99.

Many factors point to Palestine as the place in which Pseudo-Philo originated: it was apparently composed in Hebrew; the biblical text that the author had at his disposal was a Palestinian one; there are many literary parallels with 4 Ezra and 2 Baruch,<sup>9</sup> both of Palestinian origin; some of the author's theological interests (the Temple, the rules of sacrifice, the covenant and the Law, eschatology, and angelology) point toward a Palestinian provenance; where we can understand the geographical aspects of the work, the author seems to know the geography of Palestine (e.g. 55:7).

Historical importance

Efforts to connect Pseudo-Philo with specific groups or sects in Palestine (Pharisees, Essenes, Qumran Covenanters, Samaritans, anti-Samaritans, Hellenists, Gnostics, etc.) have not won general acceptance. Rather, Pseudo-Philo seems to reflect the milieu of the Palestinian synagogues at the turn of the common era. It is the earliest witness for motifs frequently repeated in the Jewish tradition: Abraham's escape from Ur (6), Israel's being spared from the water of the Flood (7:4), Dinah's husband as Job (8:8), Moses' being born circumcised (9:13), the writing on the tablets of the Law fleeing away (12:5), Balaam as an interpreter of dreams (18:2), the sacrifice of Isaac (18:5; 32:2-4; 40:2), Isaac's birth in the seventh month (23:8), the concealment of the precious stones until the last day (26:13), the equation of Phinehas and Elijah (48:1), the identification of Saul with the fleeing Benjamite of 1 Samuel 4:12 (54:4), and Saul's death as an atonement for his sins (64:9).

The work also transmits legends and motifs not found elsewhere. Among the more significant examples are the connection of the building of the tower of Babel with casting Abraham into the fire (6:3-18), Tamar's aim in having intercourse with Judah as to avoid intercourse with gentiles (9:5), the connection between Moses' being cast into the water and his later drying up of the Red Sea (9:10), Moses' being prevented from entering the holy land lest he see idols (19:7), the long sections on Kenaz (chs. 25-28), the idols of Micah (44:5), and Saul's motive in expelling the sorcerers as winning personal renown (64:1). Two other features might tell us more about the historical setting of the work if we were able to offer satisfactory explanations for them. There are some interesting plays on Old Testament clichés from what would now be described as a feminist perspective: "woman of God" in 33:1 and "the bosom of her mothers" in 40:4. Also, there seems to be a deliberate attempt to relocate certain biblical events: Shiloh in 45:5 rather than Mizpah of Judges 20:1 or Bethel of Judges 20:18; Shiloh in 55:9 rather than Beth-shemesh of 1 Samuel 6:12; Ramathaim in 58:2 rather than Gilgal of 1 Samuel 15:12, 21, 33; and Bethel in 59:2 rather than Bethlehem of 1 Samuel 16:4.

Theological importance

God is light (12:9; cf. 22:3) and life (30:6). He knows what is to happen beforehand (18:4; 21:2; 28:4). He is frequently described with the epithet "the Most Powerful" (Fortissimus). He punishes sin and holds people responsible for transgressions but has mercy on Israel on account of those who have fallen asleep (35:3). God spoke about Israel even before it existed (9:4). The habitable places of the world were made for Israel (39:7). The holy land was not touched by the Flood (7:4). The heavenly bodies minister to Israel and intercede for it with God (32:9, 14). Israel can be defeated only if it sins (18:13). It cannot be destroyed so long as the world exists (9:3). In fact, if God destroyed Israel, there would be no one left to glorify him (12:9).

<sup>8</sup> L. H. Feldman, in his Prolegomenon to the reissue of M. R. James's The Biblical Antiquities of Philo (New York, 1971), pp. xxiii-xxiv.

<sup>9</sup> James, The Biblical Antiquities of Philo, pp. 46-58.

The Law is an eternal light (9:8), a light to the world but a punishment to the ungodly (11:1). By the Law, God will judge the whole world (11:2). It is an eternal commandment that will not pass away (11:5); it was prepared from the creation of the world (32:7). Idolatry and mixed marriage are the most reprehensible sins against the Law. Abraham would rather have died than take part in idolatrous rites (6). Idolatry is at the root of the sinful behavior of the tribes (25:9–13). Aod (34), Gideon (36:3), Jair (38), and Micah (44:1–5) lead the people astray by idolatry. It is the root of all evils (44:6f.). Pseudo-Philo is vigorously opposed to marriage with gentiles. Tamar had relations with her father-in-law rather than have relations with gentiles (9:5). Balaam plots to have the Midianite women lead Israel astray (18:13f.). The list of evils in 44:7 culminates in lusting after foreign women. The Levite's concubine was abused because she had had intercourse with the Amalekites (45:3). See also 9:1; 21:1; 30:1; and 43:5 for other criticisms of sexual relations with gentiles. While an individual's punishment for sin may be deferred for a while, it is finally exacted (6:11; 27:7, 15; 45:3; 49:5). The Deuteronomic concept of history (sin-punishment-salvation) is found in 3:9f.; 12:4; 13:10; and 19:2–5. At the basis of Pseudo-Philo's views on God and humanity is the biblical notion of covenant.

Angels appear frequently in Pseudo-Philo. The angels were jealous of Abraham (32:1f.). Jacob wrestled with the angel who was in charge of hymns (18:6). The angels lamented Moses' death (19:16). Two angels assisted Samuel when he was raised up by the witch of Endor (64:6). The angels are guardians (11:12; 59:4), but they will not intercede for people if they sin (15:5). Four angels are mentioned by name: Ingethel (27:10), Zeruel (27:10; Zervihel in 61:5), Nathaniel (38:3), and Fadahel (42:10). Evil spirits are assumed to exist (53:3f.; 60:1); they were created on the second day of creation (60:3). Certain angels who were condemned still assist men in the practice of sorcery (34:3). Holy spirits are mentioned in connection with Balaam's prophecy (18:3, 11). A holy spirit came upon Kenaz (28:6). Deborah speaks of the grace of the holy spirit (32:14).

The focus of Pseudo-Philo's eschatological interest is the future state, i.e. what happens after death and what happens during and after God's eschatological visitation. He does not cast his eschatology in political terms, nor does he show interest in the future Messiah. There are two ages: the present and the world to come (3:10; 16:3; 19:7, 13; 32:17; 62:9). After death, when the soul is separated from the body, all will be judged according to their deeds (44:10). There is no chance to repent after death, and the fathers of Israel cannot intercede for sinful Israel (33:2–5). The souls of the just will be at peace until the eschatological visitation (23:13; 28:10; 51:5), but the wicked undergo punishment for their sins (16:3; 23:6; 31:7; 36:4; 38:4; 44:10; 51:5; 63:4). When the appointed time is fulfilled, God will visit the world (3:9; 16:3; 19:12f., 15; 23:13; 26:12; 48:1). Then all will be raised up and judged according to their deeds (3:9f.; 19:12f.; 25:7). The just will dwell in happiness with God (19:12f.) and with their fathers (23:13), but the wicked like Korah and his band will be annihilated (16:3).

Relation to canonical books

A glance at the summary of contents placed at the beginning of the Introduction shows how important the books of the Bible from Genesis to 1 and 2 Samuel are for Pseudo-Philo. There are also occasional references to Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Psalms. Pseudo-Philo does not treat Scripture in the same way as the compilers of the later Jewish Midrashim do. Rather than making a clear distinction between the biblical text and its interpretation, Pseudo-Philo interweaves the two. As far as we can tell from the Latin text, he seems to have used a version of the Old Testament other than the Masoretic Text. For his combination of genealogies, short narratives, speeches and prayers, supplements to existing biblical narratives, and interest in numbers, Pseudo-Philo may have taken as his formal model the books of Chronicles.

There are some important verbal parallels with the New Testament:<sup>10</sup> "May your blood be upon your own head" (6:11 and Mt 23:34f.; 27:25; cf. Acts 5:28; 18:6; 20:26); "on the third day" to mean "after three days" (11:2 and Mt 27:63; Mk 8:31; 9:31; 10:34; Lk 24:7; Acts 10:40; 1Cor 15:4); "he who restrains" (51:5 and 2Thes 2:6f.). There are also common traditions: "a well of water to follow them" (10:7; 11:15 and 1Cor 10:4); divorce initiated by the wife (42:1 and Mk 10:12). There are parallels between the stories of the births of Moses (9:9–16) and of Samson (42:1–10) and the infancy narratives in Matthew 1f. and Luke 1f. respectively.<sup>11</sup> Another important connection is to be found in Pseudo-Philo's treatment of the sacrifice of Isaac (Gen 22). According to 32:2–4 Isaac offered his life freely (cf. 40:2); his sacrifice is related to other sacrifices made to God for the sins of men (cf. 18:5); and his self-offering has a beneficent effect upon future generations. This complex of ideas<sup>12</sup> is similar to the Christian theology of Jesus' death, but it is not certain that the New Testament writers actually knew the theology connected with Abraham's sacrifice of Isaac.

<sup>10</sup> For more extensive lists, see James, Biblical Antiquities, pp. 59–60, and Feldman, Prolegomenon, pp. lvi–lviii. See also R. Bauckham, "The Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum of Pseudo-Philo and the Gospels as 'Midrash,'" in Gospel Perspectives. Volume III (Sheffield, England, 1983) pp. 33–76.

Relation to apocryphal books

As an example of an imaginative retelling of the biblical story that joins the Old Testament text and legendary material, Pseudo-Philo stands closest in form to Jubilees, the Qumran Genesis Apocryphon, and Josephus' Antiquities. In matters of apocalyptic language it stands closest to 4 Ezra and 2 Baruch. Among the apocalyptic motifs common to the three works are these: the dead sleep in the earth (3:10; 19:12; 35:3; 53:5; 4Ezra 7:32; 2Bar 11:4), the souls of the righteous are in their chambers (32:13; 4Ezra 4:35; 2Bar 21:23; 42:7f.), Sheol restores its debt (3:10; 4Ezra 4:41–43; 2Bar 21:23), death is sealed up (3:10; 33:3; 4Ezra 8:53; 2Bar 21:23; 42:7f.), the nations are like spittle (7:3; 12:4; 4Ezra 6:56; 2Bar 82:5). Such parallels have led scholars in the past to speak of Pseudo-Philo as emanating from the same school or circle in which 4 Ezra and 2 Baruch were composed. Yet there exists a complex of ideas common to 4 Ezra and 2 Baruch that is absent from Pseudo-Philo: the four-empire scheme of history, the last wicked empire being overthrown by the Messiah, the formulation of messianic activity in forensic terms, and the concept of a temporary messianic kingdom.<sup>13</sup> In Pseudo-Philo there are no clear statements about the Messiah's role in the eschatological visitation, no dwelling on the fall of Jerusalem (unless it be in 19:7), and no mention of revenge on Rome or the ruling empire. The authors of 4 Ezra and 2 Baruch may have known Pseudo-Philo, but to speak of all three originating in the same circle or school stretches those vague terms too far.

Cultural importance

As a witness to the understanding of the Bible in the Palestinian synagogues prior to A.D. 70 and as a link to the material later gathered in the traditional midrashic compilations, Pseudo-Philo has great significance for the history of Judaism. As a Jewish writing composed about the time when most of the New Testament writings were taking shape, it is important also for the history of early Christianity. Yet Pseudo-Philo's impact on both Jewish and Christian history has been slight. The earliest Christian references to it come from the medieval writers Rhabanus Maurus, Rupert of Deutz, and Peter Comestor. Several proper names near the end of John Donne's Metempsychosis indicate that the English divine knew it. The only reference to it by a Jewish scholar before the nineteenth century comes from Azariah dei Rossi in the sixteenth century. Even after Cohn's 1898 article made the work known again, it was overlooked in the collections edited by R. H. Charles and E. Kautzsch and in the rabbinic commentary on the New Testament by P. Billerbeck. Louis Ginzberg, however, made ample use of it in his Legends of the Jews.<sup>14</sup>

<sup>11</sup> C. Perrot, "Les Récits d'enfance dans la Haggada antérieure au II<sup>e</sup> siècle de notre ère," RSR 55 (1967) 481–518.

<sup>12</sup> S. Spiegel, The Last Trial (New York, 1967); G. Vermes, Scripture and Tradition in Judaism. Haggadic Studies (SPB 4; Leiden, 1961), pp. 193–227; R. Le Déaut, La Nuit Pascale (AnBib; Rome, 1963), pp. 188–94. R. J. Daly, "The Soteriological Significance of the Sacrifice of Isaac," CBQ 39 (1977) 45–75; P. R. Davies and B. D. Chilton, "The Aqedah: A Revised Tradition History," CBQ 40 (1978) 514–46.

<sup>13</sup> M. E. Stone, "The Concept of the Messiah in IV Ezra," in Religions in Antiquity: Essays in Memory of E. R. Goodenough (Leiden, 1968), p. 302.

<sup>14</sup> Feldman, Prolegomenon, pp. ix–xv.

This translation

Pseudo-Philo has been translated into English by M. R. James (1917), German by P. Riessler (1928) and C. Dietzfelbinger (1975), Modern Hebrew by A. S. Hartom (1967), and French by J. Cazeaux with C. Perrot and P.-M. Bogaert (1976). The present English version of Pseudo-Philo is based on the edition of the Latin text prepared by the translator for Sources chrétiennes. Both there and here we have followed the combination of Fulda-Cassel Theol. 4°<sup>3</sup> and Phillipps 461 unless these manuscripts were obviously wrong. The present translation aims at a literal rendering of the Latin text. This decision has been made partly out of the feeling that a literal translation would best communicate the "biblical" flavor of the book. But even more persuasive has been the recognition that in many places the Latin text is corrupt and cannot be restored with certainty. The translation mirrors the awkwardness of the text in these places. Where a proper name has a recognizable biblical equivalent, we have written it according to its usual biblical form. Where the text agrees with a recognizable ancient biblical text (the MT, LXX, Samaritan Pentateuch, etc.), we have signaled these agreements by placing the relevant words in italics and noting the text in question in the margin. Where there is merely an allusion to the biblical text, we have noted this in the margin.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 170–73.
 Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 174f.
 Denis, Introduction, p. 162.

Cohn, L. "An Apocryphal Work Ascribed to Philo of Alexandria," JQR 10 (1898) 277–332. (An extensive summary of the content and a survey of the major issues.)

Ginzberg, L. The Legends of the Jews I–VII. Philadelphia, 1909–46. (Ps-Philo is studied along with many other Jewish writings; references are cited in the index of vol. 7, 537–39.)

Harrington, D. J. "The Original Language of Pseudo-Philo's Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum," HTR 63 (1970) 503–14. (Argues for a Heb. original translated into Gk. and then into Lat.)

———. "The Biblical Text of Pseudo-Philo's Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum," CBQ 33 (1971) 1–17. (Detailed study of OT quotations and allusions in the text.)

———. The Hebrew Fragments of Pseudo-Philo's Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum Preserved in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel. Texts and Translations 3, Pseudepigrapha Series 3; Cambridge, Mass., 1974. (Text and translation of the Heb. retroversions of Ps-Philo found in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel.)

———, Cazeaux, J., Perrot, C., and Bogaert, P.-M. Pseudo-Philon, Les Antiquités Bibliques. SC 229–30; Paris, 1976. (Introduction to the text, critical text, French translation, literary introduction, and commentary.)

James, M. R. The Biblical Antiquities of Philo. Translations of Early Documents 1: Palestinian Jewish Texts; London, 1917. (A lengthy introduction along with an ET based on the editio princeps. The volume was reprinted in 1971 by Ktav Publishing House of New York with a 169-page prolegomenon by Louis H. Feldman. Feldman's work is a very valuable compilation of information and a major contribution in its own right.)

Kisch, G. Pseudo-Philo's Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum. Publications in Mediaeval Studies 10; Notre Dame, Ind., 1949. (A Lat. text based primarily on MS Admont 359.)

Perrot, C. "Les Récits d'enfance dans la Haggada antérieure au II<sup>e</sup> siècle de notre ère," RSR 55 (1967) 481–518. (Connects the stories of the births of Moses, Samson, and Samuel in Ps-Philo with other Jewish accounts and the NT infancy narratives.)

Strugnell, J. "More Psalms of David," CBQ 27 (1965) 207–16. (Retroversion of 59:4 into Gk. and Heb. with detailed philological commentary.)

PSEUDO-PHILO

Genealogies from Adam to Noah

- 1 1 In the beginning of the world<sup>a</sup> Adam became the father of three sons and one daughter: Cain, Noaba,<sup>b</sup> Abel, and Seth.
- 2 And after he became the father of Seth, Adam lived 700<sup>c</sup> years; and he became Gen 5:4 3 the father of twelve sons and eight daughters. •And these are the names of the 4 males: Eliseel, Suris, Elamiel, Brabal, Naat, Zarama, Zasam, Maathal, and Anath.<sup>d</sup>
5 And Seth lived 105<sup>e</sup> years and became the father of Enosh. And after he became Gen 5:6f.
6 the father of Enosh, Seth lived 707<sup>f</sup> years and became the father of three sons
7 and two<sup>h</sup> daughters. •And these are the names of his sons: Elidia, Fonna, and 8 Matha; and of his daughters: Malida and Thila.
9 And Enosh lived 180<sup>i</sup> years and became the father of Kenan. And after he Gen 5:9f.
10 became the father of Kenan, Enosh lived 715<sup>j</sup> years and became the father of two 11 sons and a daughter. •And these are the names of his sons: Foe and Thaal; and 12 of his daughter: Catennath.
13 And Kenan lived 170<sup>k</sup> years and became the father of Mahalalel.<sup>1</sup> And after he Gen 5:12f.
14 became the father of Mahalalel, Kenan lived 730<sup>m</sup> years and became the father
15 of three sons and two daughters. •And these are the names of the males: Athac, 16 Socer, Lofa; and the names of the daughters: Ana and Leva.
17 And Mahalalel lived 165<sup>n</sup> years and fathered Jared. And after he fathered Gen 5:15f.
18 Jared, Mahalalel lived 730<sup>o</sup> years and became the father of seven sons and five 19 daughters. •And these are the names of the males: Leta, Mata, Cechar, Melie, 20 Suriel, Lodo, Otim.<sup>p</sup> And these are the names of his daughters: Ada and Noa, 21 lebal, Mada, Sella.
22 And Jared lived 162<sup>q</sup> years and became the father of Enoch. And after he Gen 5:18f.
23 became the father of Enoch, Jared lived 800 years and became the father of four 24 sons and two daughters. •And these are the names of the males: Lead, Anac, 25 Soboac, and letar; and of the daughters: Tetzeco, Lesse.
26 And Enoch lived 165<sup>r</sup> years and became the father of Methuselah. And after he Gen 5:21f.
27 became the father of Methuselah, Enoch lived 200<sup>s</sup> years and became the father
28 of five sons and three daughters. •Now Enoch pleased God in that time and he Gen 5:24
29 was not to be found, for God took him away.<sup>1</sup> •Now the names of his sons: Anaz, 30 Zeum, Achaun, Feledi, Eliith; and of his daughters: Theiz, Lefith, Leath.
31 And Methuselah lived 187<sup>u</sup> years and became the father of Lamech. And after Gen 5:25f.

1 a. Some MSS have "The beginning of the world" or omit the expression altogether.

b. According to Jub 4:1 her name is Awan, but in a Syriac patristic text she is called Leboda or Lobda.

c. The LXX of Gen 5:4 has 700, while the MT has 800. The chronological scheme underlying the whole ch. is closest to that of the LXX.

d. Only nine of Adam's twelve sons are named. Jub 4:10 says that Adam had nine sons.

e. Only seven of the eight daughters are named.

f. The MT of Gen 5:6 has 105, while the LXX has 205.

g. The LXX of Gen 5:7 has 707, the MT 807.

h. Most MSS read "three." Either we should read "two" with other MSS, or we must assume that the name of one daughter has been omitted.

i. The LXX of Gen 5:9 has 190, the MT 90.

j. The LXX of Gen 5:10 has 715, the MT 815.

k. All MSS have 520, while the LXX of Gen 5:12 has 170 and the MT 70. We have emended DXX (520) to CLXX (170).

l. Here and in 1:11 the MSS have Malalech, but see Gen 5:12-17. This and other recognizable biblical names have been spelled according to their usual English forms.

m. The LXX of Gen 5:13 has 740, the MT 840.

n. The LXX of Gen 5:15 has 165, the MT 65.

o. The LXX of Gen 5:16 has 730, the MT 830.

p. Lodo and Otim appear as one name (Lodo-otim) in the MSS.

q. We have emended 172 (CLXXII) to 162 (CLXII) in the light of the LXX and MT of Gen 5:18.

r. The LXX of Gen 5:21 has 165, the MT 65.

s. The LXX of Gen 5:22 has 200, the MT 300.

t. That is, to heaven.

u. The LXX of Gen 5:25 has 187, the MT 87.

he became the father of Lamech, Methuselah lived 782 years and became the father of two sons and two daughters. •And these are the names of the males: Inab and Rafo; and of the daughters: Aluma and Amuga.

- 20 And Lamech lived 182<sup>v</sup> years and became the father of a son and called him after his birth "Noah," saying, "This one will give rest<sup>w</sup> to us and to the earth from those who dwell on it—on account of the wickedness of whose evil deeds the earth will be visited."<sup>x</sup> •And after he fathered Noah, Lamech lived 585<sup>y</sup> years.
- 22 And Noah lived 300<sup>y</sup> years and became the father of three sons: Shem, Ham, Japheth.<sup>z</sup>

Gen 5:28f.

Gen 5:30

Gen 5:32

Genealogies from Cain to Lamech

- 1 2 Now Cain dwelt in the land trembling,<sup>a</sup> as God had appointed for him after he had killed Abel his brother. And the name of his wife was Themech.<sup>b</sup> •And Cain knew Themech his wife, and she conceived and bore Enoch. •Now Cain was fifteen years old when he did these things, and from that time he began to build cities until he had founded seven cities. And these are the names of the cities: the name of the first city, corresponding to the name of his son, Enoch; and the name of the second city Mauli, and of the third Leed, and the name of the fourth Teze, and the name of the fifth Iesca, and the name of the sixth Celeth, and the name of the seventh Iebbat. •And after he became the father of Enoch, Cain lived 715 years and became the father of three sons and two daughters. And these are the names of his sons: Olad, Lizaf, Fosal; and of his daughters: Citha and Maac. And all the days of Cain were 730 years, and he died.
- 5 Then Enoch took a wife from the daughters of Seth, and she bore him Ciram<sup>c</sup> and Cuut and Madab. Now Ciram became the father of Methushael,<sup>d</sup> and Methushael became the father of Lamech. •Now Lamech took for himself two wives. The name of the one was Adah, and the name of the other Zillah. •And Adah bore Jobab; he was the father of all those dwelling in tents and feeding cattle. And again, she bore him Jobal, who was the first to teach all kinds of musical instruments. •In that time, when those inhabiting the earth began to do evil deeds (each one with his neighbor's wife) and they defiled them, God was angry. And he<sup>e</sup> began to play the lyre and the lute and every instrument of sweet song and to corrupt the earth. •Now Zillah bore Tubal<sup>f</sup> and Miza and Theffa. And this is the Tubal who showed men techniques in using lead and tin and iron and bronze and silver and gold. And then those inhabiting the earth began to make statues and to adore them. •Now Lamech said to both his wives, Adah and Zillah, "Hear my voice, wives of Lamech, and pay attention to my remark, for I have destroyed men on my own account and snatched sucklings from the breasts, in order to show my sons and those inhabiting the earth how to do evil deeds. And now Cain will be avenged seven times, but Lamech seventy-seven times."

Gen 4:16
(4:12,14)

Gen 4:17

Gen 4:17

Gen 4:18

Gen 4:19

Gen 4:20f.

Gen 4:21

Gen 4:22

Gen 4:23f.

v. The MT of Gen 5:28 has 182, the LXX 188.

w. This interpretation of the name Noah traces the name back to the Heb. root nwh, "rest," but the MT of Gen 5:29 relies on nhm, "console." The LXX is similar to Ps-Philo here.

x. The MT of Gen 5:30 has 595, the LXX 565.

y. Both the MT and the LXX of Gen 5:30 have 500.

z. With the phrase "three sons" and the omission of "and" between the proper names Ps-Philo stands in agreement with the LXX of Gen 5:32.

2 a. The word "trembling" is due to the ambiguity of the Heb. nwd in "the land of Nod" in Gen

4:16. See also Gen 4:12, 14.

b. According to Jub 4:8 the name of Cain's wife was Awan, who according to Jub 4:1 was also his sister. The name Themech is also given to the mother of Sisera in Ps-Philo 31:8.

c. According to Gen 4:18 the name should be Irad.

d. The generation of Mehujael (see Gen 4:18) has been omitted.

e. That is, Jobal. A connection is being drawn between musical instruments and immoral behavior.

f. The MT of Gen 4:22 has Tubalcain. Ps-Philo here agrees with the LXX and the Vetus Latina.

The Flood

- 1 3 And it happened that, when men began to multiply upon the earth, beautiful daughters were born to them. And the sons<sup>a</sup> of God saw that the daughters of Gen 6:1f.
 2 men were very fair and took for themselves wives from all whom they chose. •And
 3 God said, "My spirit shall not judge<sup>b</sup> those men<sup>c</sup> forever, because they are flesh, Gen 6:3
 4 but their years shall be 120." For them he set the limits of life, but the crimes
 5 done by their hands did not cease. •And God saw that among all those inhabiting Gen 6:5,7 6 the earth wicked deeds had reached full measure; and because they were plotting
 7 evil all their days, he said, "I will blot out man and all the things that grow on 8 earth, for I am sorry that I have made him."
 9 Yet Noah found favor and mercy before the Lord, and these are his generations. Gen 6:8f.
 10 Noah, who was a righteous man and blameless in his generation, pleased the 11 Lord. To him God said, "The time set for all men dwelling upon the earth has Gen 6:13–15 12 arrived, for their deeds are wicked. And now make for yourself an ark from cedar<sup>d</sup>
 13 wood. And this is how you will make it: Its length will be 300 cubits, and its 14 width 50 cubits, and its height 30 cubits. And you will enter the ark, you and Gen 6:18 15 your wife and your sons and the wives of your sons with you. And I will establish 16 my covenant with you, to destroy all those inhabiting the earth. Now of the clean Gen 7:2–4 17 animals and of the clean birds of the heaven you will take seven males and seven
 18 females so that their seed can live upon the earth. But of the unclean animals and Gen 6:19–21 19 birds you will take for yourself two males and two females. Also, you will take 20 food for yourself and for them." •And Noah did what God commanded him. And 21 he entered the ark, he and all his sons with him. And it happened after seven Gen 7:5,7 22 days that the water of the flood began to fall upon the earth. And on that day Gen 7:10–12
 23 were opened all the deeps and the great spring<sup>e</sup> and the floodgates of the heaven;
 24 and there was rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights. •Now it was then 25 the sixteen hundred and fifty-second<sup>f</sup> year from the time when God made heaven
 26 and earth, in which the earth along with those inhabiting it was destroyed on 27 account of the wickedness of their deeds. •And the deluge continued on the earth Gen 7:23–8:1 28 for one hundred and fifty days. Only Noah and those who were with him in the 29 ark survived. And when God remembered Noah, he made the water subside.
 30 And it happened on the ninetieth<sup>g</sup> day that God dried up the earth and said to Gen 8:14–21
 31 Noah, "Go forth from the ark, you and all who are with you, and increase and 32 multiply upon the earth." And Noah went forth from the ark, he<sup>h</sup> and his sons 33 and the wives of his sons, and brought out all the beasts and reptiles and birds 34 and cattle with him, as God commanded him. Then Noah built an altar to the 35 Lord, and took some of the clean cattle and clean birds, and offered burnt offerings
 36 upon the altar; and it was accepted by the Lord like a restful<sup>i</sup> scent.
 37 And God said, "I will never again curse the earth on man's account, for the Gen 8:21
 38 tendency of man's heart is foolish<sup>j</sup> from his youth; and so I will never destroy all 39 living creatures at one time as I have done. But when those inhabiting the earth
 40 sin, I will judge them by famine or by the sword or by fire or by death; and there

3 a. Most LXX MSS as well as Philo and Josephus have "angels" rather than "sons" in Gen 6:2.

b. The LXX of Gen 6:3 has "remain." Ps-Philo is reading the Heb. ydmn as in the MT and understanding it to mean "judge."

c. Lit. "all" (omnibus), which we have emended to "men" (hominibus) in the light of Gen 6:3.

d. This interpretation of the Heb. goper as cedar in Gen 6:14 is also found in the Palestinian Targums and GenR.

e. Perhaps we should emend omnes abyssi et fons magnus to omnes fontes abyssi magni, "all the springs of the great abyss," on the basis of Gen 7:11.

f. The figure is close to what can be deduced from the MT's chronology, 1,656 years. This total, however, cannot be reconciled with the chronology of Ps-Philo 1, and the section may well be a scribal gloss.

g. Apparently Ps-Philo understood Gen 8:14 as meaning after two months and twenty-seven days.

h. The wife of Noah is not mentioned; see Gen 8:18.

i. The LXX translator with his osmèn euodias has taken the Heb. hnyhh of Gen 8:21 to mean "tranquilizing" or "soothing" because of its good odor. Ps-Philo has taken it in the sense of "restful."

j. We are reading desipit, "is foolish," rather than desiit, "has left off," of all the MSS; see Gen 8:21.

will be earthquakes, and they will be scattered to uninhabited places. But no more will I destroy the earth by the water of the flood. And in all the days of the earth, seedtime and harvest, cold and heat, spring and fall will not cease day and night until I remember those who inhabit the earth, until the appointed times are fulfilled. Gen 8:22

- 10 "But when the years appointed for the world have been fulfilled, then the light will cease and the darkness will fade away. And I will bring the dead to life and raise up those who are sleeping<sup>k</sup> from the earth. And hell will pay back its debt, and the place of perdition will return its deposit<sup>l</sup> so that I may render to each according to his works and according to the fruits of his own devices, until I judge between soul and flesh.<sup>m</sup> And the world will cease, and death will be abolished, and hell will shut its mouth. And the earth will not be without progeny or sterile for those inhabiting it; and no one who has been pardoned by me will be tainted. And there will be another earth and another heaven, an everlasting dwelling place."
- 11 And the Lord spoke again to Noah and to his sons, saying, "Behold I will establish my covenant with you and with your seed after you, and no more will I destroy the earth by the water of a flood. And everything that moves and lives will be food for you. But meat with its lifeblood you may not eat. For whoever will shed the blood of a man, his own blood will be shed, because man was made after the image of God. But you, increase and multiply and fill the earth, like a school of fish multiplying in the waves." •And God said, "This is the covenant<sup>n</sup> that I have established between me and you. And it will happen that when I cover the heaven with clouds, my<sup>o</sup> bow will appear in the cloud; and it will be a memorial of the covenant between me and you and all those inhabiting the earth." Gen 9:8f.
Gen 9:11
Gen 9:3f.
Gen 9:6f.
Gen 9:1
Gen 9:12
Gen 9:14
Gen 9:16

Genealogies of the sons of Noah

- 1 4 And the sons of Noah who went forth from the ark were Shem, Ham, and Japheth. Gen 9:18
- 2 The sons of Japheth: Gomer,<sup>a</sup> Magog and Madai, Javan,<sup>b</sup> Tubal, Meshech, Tiras,<sup>c</sup> Ashkenaz,<sup>d</sup> Riphath and Togarmah, Elishah, Tarshish,<sup>e</sup> Kittim,<sup>f</sup> Dodanim.<sup>g</sup> And the sons of Gomer: Thelez, Lud, Deberleth. And the sons of Magog: Cesse and Thifa, Faruta, Ammiel, Fimei, Goloza, Samanac. And the sons of Javan<sup>h</sup>: Sallus, Felucta, Fallita. And the sons of Tubal: Fanata, Nova, and Eva. And the sons of Meshech<sup>i</sup>: Amboradat, Urac, Bosara. And the sons of Tiras: Maac, Tabel, Ballana, Samplameac, Elaz. And the sons of Ashkenaz<sup>j</sup>: Jubal, Zaraddana, Anac. And the sons of Riphath<sup>k</sup>: Doad, Defad, Zead, Enoc. And the sons of Togarmah: Abiuth, Safath, Asapli, Zepthir. And the sons of Elishah: Zaac, Zenez, Mastisa, Rira. And the sons of Tarshish<sup>l</sup>: Meccul, Loon, Zelatabac. And the sons of Kittim<sup>m</sup>: Macziel, Temna, Aela, Finon. And the sons of Dodanim: Itheb, Beath, Gen 10:2-4

k. For the dead sleeping in the earth see 19:12; 35:3; 53:5; 4Ezra 7:32; 2Bar 11:4; 21:24.

l. For the idea of restoring the deposit see 33:3 as well as 2Bar 21:23; 1En 51:1; and 4Ezra 4:41-43; 7:32.

m. The phrase "between soul and flesh" may simply refer to the higher and lower aspects of the whole person.

n. Gen 9:12 has "this is the sign of the covenant." The Heb. for "sign" ('wt) was probably omitted due to its proximity to "this" (z't or even z'wt).

o. For "my" in Gen 9:14 see the LXX, Vetus Latina, and Vulgate.

4 a. Gomer is not in the MSS of Ps-Philo, but see Gen 10:2 and Ps-Philo 4:2, 4. The proper names in this ch. and the following one are usually given as they appear in the MS tradition, but where an obviously biblical name can be recognized we have placed that name in the text and given the MSS reading at the bottom of the page.

b. MSS Nidiazec.

c. MSS combine Meshech and Tiras into Moceratas.

d. MSS Cenez.

e. MSS Dessin.

f. MSS Cethin.

g. MSS Tudant.

h. MSS Tudan. The sons of Madai have been omitted.

i. MSS Mellech. The MSS place the sons of Tiras before the sons of Meshech.

j. MSS Cenez.

k. MSS Heri, Fuddet.

l. MSS Tessis. The MSS place the sons of Kittim before the sons of Tarshish.

m. MSS Zepti.

- 3 Feneth. •And these were the ones who were scattered abroad and dwelt on the earth among the Persians and Medes and<sup>n</sup> in the islands that are in the sea. And Feneth<sup>o</sup> the son of Dodanim<sup>p</sup> went up and ordered that seafaring ships be built. Gen 10:5
- 4 And then a third part of the earth<sup>q</sup> was divided up. •Gomer<sup>r</sup> and his sons received Ladech. Magog and his sons received Degal. Madai and his sons received Besto. Javan and his sons received Ceel. Tubal and his sons received Feed. Meshech and his sons received Nepthi. Tiras<sup>s</sup> and his sons received Duodenin. Ashkenaz<sup>t</sup> and his sons received Goda. Riphath and his sons received Bosorra. Togarmah and his sons received Futh. Elishah and his sons received Thabola. Tarshish<sup>u</sup> and his sons received Marecham. Kittim<sup>v</sup> and his sons received Thaan. Dodanim and his sons received Caruba. •And then they began to work the land and to sow upon it. And when the land was dry, its inhabitants cried out to the LORD; and he heard them and gave rain in abundance. And it happened that, when the rain descended upon the earth, the bow appeared in the cloud. And those inhabiting the earth saw this memorial of the covenant and fell upon their faces and made sacrifices and offered burnt offerings to the LORD.
- 6 Now the sons of Ham: Cush and Egypt<sup>w</sup> and Put<sup>x</sup> and Canaan. And these are the sons of Cush: Seba and Havilah, Sabtah, Raamah and Sabteca. And the sons of Raamah: Sheba<sup>y</sup> and Dedan.<sup>z</sup> And the sons of Put<sup>a2</sup>: Zeleu, Telup, Geluc, Lefuc. And the sons of Canaan: Sidon, Aendain, Racin, Simmin, Uruin, Nemigin, Amathin,<sup>b2</sup> Nefin, Telaz, Elat, Cusin. •Now Cush became the father of Nimrod. He began to be arrogant before the Lord. Now Egypt became the father of Ludim and Anamin<sup>c2</sup> and Lehabim and Latuin<sup>d2</sup> and Pathrusim and Casluhim (whence came the Philistines) and the Cappadocians. •And then they also began to build cities. And these are the cities that they built: Sidon and its surroundings, that is, Resun, Beosomaza, Gerar, Ashkelon,<sup>e2</sup> Dabircamo, Tellun, Lachish, Sodom and Gomorrah, Admah and Zeboim. Gen 10:6f.
- 9 And the sons of Shem: Elam, Asshur, Arpachshad, Lud, and Aram. And the sons of Aram: Uz, Hul,<sup>f2</sup> Gether, and Mash. Now Arpachshad became the father of Shelah; Shelah became the father of Eber. And to Eber were born two sons; the name of one was Peleg,<sup>g2</sup> for in his days the earth was divided, and the name of his brother was Joktan.<sup>h2</sup> •Joktan became the father of Almodad and Sheleph, Hazarmaveth, Jerah, Hadoram, Uzal, Diklah, Obal, Abimael, Sheba, Ophir, Havilah, and Jobab.<sup>i2</sup> And the sons of Pelegi<sup>j2</sup>: Reu,<sup>k2</sup> Refuth, Zefaram, Aculon, Sachar, Sifaz, Nabi, Suri, Seciur, Falacus, Rafo, Faltia, Zaldefal, Zavis and Arteman, Helifaz. These are the sons of Peleg, and these are their names. And they took wives for themselves from the daughters of Joktan and became fathers of sons and daughters and filled the earth. •Now Reu took as his wife Melcha<sup>l2</sup> the daughter of Ruth, and she bore to him Serug. And when the day of his delivery came, she said, "From him there will be born in the fourth generation one who Gen 10:15-18
Gen 10:8f.
Gen 10:13f.
Gen 10:19
Gen 10:22-25
Gen 10:26-29
Gen 11:17-20

n. The word "and" is not in the MSS.

o. MSS Feneth; see 5:1.

p. MSS Dudeni.

q. Apparently a third part of the earth destroyed by the Flood is now being resettled. See Rev 8:7-12; 9:15, 18.

r. MSS Domereth.

s. MSS Iras.

t. MSS Iesca. The MSS place Duodenin and Ashkenaz in the wrong positions; we have reversed them.

u. MSS Tessis.

v. MSS Cethim.

w. MSS Mestra.

x. MSS Funi.

y. MSS omit "and Havilah . . . Sheba," but see Gen 10:7.

z. MSS Tudan.

a2. MSS Funi.

b2. Gen 10:15-18 may be of some help in restoring the text here: Racin—the Arkites; Simmin—the Sinites; Uruin—the Arvadites; Nemigin—Zemarites; Amathin—Hamathites.

c2. MSS Niemigin.

d2. According to Gen 10:13 this should be Naphtuhim.

e2. For Gerar, Ashkelon, the MSS have Gerras, Calon.

f2. For Uz, Hul, the MSS have Assum or Asum.

g2. MSS Falech.

h2. MSS lepta.

i2. We have restored the text in the light of Gen 10:26-29. MSS have "Elimodan et Salastra et Mazaam, Rea, Dura, Uzia, Deglabal, Mimoel, Sabthfin, Evilach, Iubab."

j2. MSS Falech.

k2. MSS Ragau.

l2. According to Jub 11:7 her name is Ora.

- will set his dwelling on high<sup>m2</sup> and will be called perfect and blameless; and he will be the father of nations, and his covenant will not be broken, and his seed will be multiplied forever.” •And after he became the father of Serug, Reu lived 119<sup>n2</sup> years and became the father of seven sons and five daughters. And these are the names of his sons: Abiel, Obthi, Salma, Dedasal, Zeneza, Accur, Nefes. And these are the names of his daughters: Cedema, Derisa, Seifa, Ferita, Theila. Gen 11:21
- 13 And Serug lived 29<sup>n2</sup> years and became the father of Nahor. And after he became the father of Nahor, Serug lived 67<sup>p2</sup> years and became the father of four sons and three daughters. And these are the names of the sons: Zela, Zoba, Dica, and Fodde. And these are his daughters: Tefila, Oda, Selifa. •And Nahor lived 34<sup>q2</sup> years and became the father of Terah. And after he became the father of Terah, Nahor lived 200<sup>r2</sup> years and became the father of eight sons and five daughters. And these are the names of the males: Recap, Dediap, Berechap, Iosac, Sithal, Nisab, Nadab, Camoel; and his daughters: Esca, Thifa, Bruna, Cene, Etha. •And Terah lived 70 years and became the father of Abram and Nahor and Haran. Now Haran became the father of Lot. Gen 11:22f
Gen 11:24f
Gen 11:26f
- 16 Then those who inhabited the earth began to observe the stars<sup>s2</sup> and started to reckon by them and to make predictions and to have their sons and daughters pass through the fire. But Serug and his sons did not act as these did.<sup>t2</sup> •And these are the generations of Noah according to their tribes and languages, from which the nations were portioned out on the earth after the Flood. Gen 10:31f .5

The census of Noah's descendants

- 1 5 Then the sons of Ham came and made Nimrod their leader; and the sons of Japheth appointed Fenech their chief; and the sons of Shem came together and 2 made Joktan their leader. •And when these three came together, they decided to have the people related<sup>a</sup> to them pass in review and to number them. And while Noah was still alive, all gathered together in one place and lived in accord, and 3 the earth was at peace. •Now in the three hundred and fortieth year after Noah's exit from the ark, after God dried up the flood, the leaders numbered their people.
- 4 And Fenech had the sons of Japheth pass in review. The sons of Gomer, all passing by under their captains' staffs,<sup>b</sup> were 5,800 in number. Now of the sons of Magog, of all passing under their captains' staffs, the number was 6,200. Now the sons of Madai, all passing by under their captains' staffs, were 5,700 in number.<sup>c</sup> Now the sons of Tubal, all passing by under their captains' staffs, were 9,400 in number. And the sons of Meshech,<sup>d</sup> all passing by under their captains' staffs, were 5,600 in number. But the sons of Tiras, all passing by under their captains' staffs, were 12,300 in number.<sup>e</sup> And the sons of Riphath,<sup>f</sup> those passing by under their captains' staffs, were 11,500 in number. But the sons of Togarmah, passing by under their captains' staffs, were 14,400 in number. Now the sons of Elishah, passing by under their captains' staffs, were 14,900 in number. Now the sons of Tarshish, all passing by under their captains' staffs, were 12,100 in number. Now the sons of Kittim, all passing by under their captains' staffs, were Gen 10:2-4

m2. That is, in heaven or perhaps even on Mount Moriah.

n2. The MT and LXX of Gen 11:21 have 207.

o2. The MT of Gen 11:22 has 30, the LXX 130.

p2. The MT and LXX of Gen 11:23 have 200.

q2. The MT of Gen 11:24 has 29, the LXX 79.

r2. The MT of Gen 11:25 has 119, the LXX 129.

s2. There may be some connection between ending the genealogy with Terah, who lived in Ur (a place noted for astrology), and these remarks about the beginning of astrology.

t2. According to Jub 11, Serug and his family did worship idols.

5 a. Lit. those drawing near. Since the leaders are numbering their own families, the Heb. underlying the expression is probably qrwbym, "relatives."

b. Lit. here and throughout the ch., "according to the scepters of their captaincies." The expression may come from Lev 27:32 ("all that pass under the herdsman's staff"). Again as in ch. 4 we have given the proper names according to their recognizable biblical forms.

c. The sons of Javan have been omitted.

d. MSS Mesca.

e. The sons of Ashkenaz have been omitted.

f. MSS Rifa.

17,300 in number. But the sons of Dodanim,<sup>g</sup> passing by under their captains' staffs, were 17,700 in number. And the total of the camps of the sons of Japheth, all men of might and all equipped with arms for battle before their leaders, was 142,200, apart from women and children. In the review of Japheth the total number was 142,000.<sup>h</sup>

- 5 And Nimrod, himself a son of Ham, had all the sons of Ham pass in review. Gen 10:6f.
The sons of Egypt, all passing by under their captains' staffs, were found to be 24,800 in number. The sons of Put,<sup>i</sup> all passing by under their captains' staffs, were 27,700 in number. And the sons of Canaan, all passing by under their captains' staffs, were found to be 32,800 in number. But the sons of Seba,<sup>j</sup> all passing by under their captains' staffs, were found to be 4,300 in number. And the sons of Havilah,<sup>k</sup> all passing by under their captains' staffs, were found to be 24,300 in number. But the sons of Sabtah,<sup>l</sup> all passing by under their captains' staffs, were found to be 25,300 in number. And the sons of Raamah, all passing by under their captains' staffs, were found to be 30,600 in number. But the sons of Sabteca,<sup>m</sup> all passing by under their captains' staffs, were found to be 46,400 in number. And the total of the camps of the sons of Ham, all men of might and equipped with battle gear before their leaders, were 244,900, apart from women and children.
- 6 And Joktan the son of Shem had the sons of Shem pass in review. Gen 10:22
And the sons of Elam, all passing by under their captains' staffs, were 37,000 in number. Now the sons of Asshur, all passing by under their captains' staffs, were found to be 78,000 in number. And the sons of Aram,<sup>n</sup> all passing by under their captains' staffs, were found to be 87,400 in number. But the sons of Lud, all passing by under their captains' staffs, were found to be 30,600 in number.<sup>o</sup> Now the sons of Arpachshad, all passing by under their captains' staffs, were 114,600
- 7 in number. The total number of all of them was 347,600. *This was the total of the camps of the sons of Shem. All were distinguished in courage and military
- 8 discipline before their captains, . . . <sup>p</sup> besides women and children. *And these are the generations of Noah taken separately, whose total number altogether was 914,100. And all these were examined while Noah was still alive. And Noah lived 350 years after the flood. And all the days of Noah were 950 years, and he died. Gen 9:28f.

The tower of Babel and Abraham in the furnace

- 1 6 Then all those who had been separated and were inhabiting the earth gathered and dwelt together. And migrating from the east, they found a plain in the land of Babylon; and settling there, each one said to his neighbor, "Behold it will happen that we will be scattered every man from his brother and in the last days we will be fighting one another. Now come, let us build for ourselves a tower whose top will reach the heavens, and we will make a name for ourselves and a
- 2 glory upon the earth." *And they said, each to his neighbor, "Let us take bricks<sup>a</sup> and let each of us write our names on the bricks and burn them with fire; and whatever will be burned through and through will be used for mortar and brick."<sup>b</sup> Gen 11:2-4
- 3 And they took their bricks, all of them except twelve men who would not take them. And these are their names: Abram, Nahor, Lot, Ruge, Tenute, Zaba,
- 4 Armodat, Jobab, Esar, Abimahel, Saba, Aufin.<sup>c</sup> *And the people of that land laid Gen 11:3

g. MSS Doin.

h. The sentence is probably a scribal gloss.

i. MSS Fua.

j. MSS Soba. The number here is disproportionately small.

k. MSS Lebillā.

l. MSS Sata.

m. MSS Sabaca.

n. The sons of Aram and the sons of Arpachshad are in reverse order in the MSS, but see Gen 10:22.

o. In the MSS there is an intrusion: "the number of the sons of Ham was . . ."

p. The total is lacking in the MSS.

6 a. Lit. "stones"; but the context demands the translation "bricks."

b. For building the tower.

c. Abimahel, Saba, and Aufin can be traced to Gen 10:28f. Ruge may be Reu of Gen 11:18-21. Armodat may be Almodad of Gen 10:26. Jobab is found in Gen 10:29.

hold of them and brought them to their chiefs and said, "These are the men who have gone against our plans and would not walk in our ways." And the leaders said to them, "Why were each of you not willing to cast in bricks along with the people of the land?" And those men answered saying, "We are not casting in bricks, nor are we joining in your scheme. We know the one LORD, and him we worship. Even if you throw us into the fire with your bricks, we will not join you." *And the leaders were angered and said, "As they have spoken, so do to them. And unless they take part with us in throwing in the bricks, you will have the fire devour them along with your bricks."<sup>d</sup>

6 And Joktan,<sup>e</sup> who was chief of the leaders, answered, "No, but let them be given a period of seven days, and if they repent of their evil plans and are willing to cast in bricks with you, they may live. If not, let it be done and let them be burned then in accord with your judgment." He, however, sought how he might save them from the hands of the people, because he was of their tribe and served God. *When this was said, he took them and locked them in the royal household. And when it was evening, the leader commanded that fifty men of might be summoned to him, and he said to them, "Go forth and tonight take those men who are locked in my house, and put supplies for them from my household on ten beasts of burden. And bring those men to me, and bring their supplies along with the beasts of burden to the mountains and take care of them there. And know that, if anyone learns what I have said to you, I will burn you in the fire." *And the men went forth and did everything that their chief commanded them. And they brought the men to his house<sup>f</sup> by night, and they took their supplies and put them on the beasts of burden and led them into the mountains as he had commanded them. *And the chief summoned to himself those twelve men and said to them, "Be confident and do not fear, for you will not die. For the God in whom you trust is powerful, and therefore be steadfast in him because he will free you and save you. And behold now I have commanded the fifty men who have brought<sup>g</sup> you out here; supplies have already been taken from my household. And they have gone forth<sup>h</sup> into the mountains and are waiting<sup>i</sup> for you in the valley, and I will give you another fifty men who will escort you there. And go, hide yourselves there in the valley; you will have drinking water that flows from the rocks. And stay there for thirty days, until the hatred of the people of this land subsides and until God sends his wrath upon them and destroys them. For I know that the evil plan that they have agreed to carry out will not stand, because their plot is foolish. And when seven days have passed and they seek you out, I will say to them, 'The door of the jail in which they were locked up was broken down. They went out and escaped by night. And I have sent a hundred men to search after them.' And I will distract them from the anger that is upon them." *And eleven of the men answered him and said, "Your servants have found favor in your eyes, because we are rescued from the hands of these arrogant men." *But Abram alone was silent. And the leader said to him, "Why do you not answer me, Abram servant of God?" Abram answered and said, "Behold, today I flee to the mountains. And if I escape the fire, wild beasts will come out of the mountains and devour us; or we will lack food and die of famine; and we will be found fleeing from the people of this land but falling in our sins. And now as he in whom I trust lives, I will not be moved from my place where they have put me. If there be any sin of mine so flagrant that I should be burned up, let the will of God be done." And the leader said to him, "May your blood be upon your own

d. The connection of Abraham's escape from Ur (in Heb., ur means "fire") and the building of the tower of Babel is unique to Ps-Philo. The tradition of Abraham in the fiery furnace is similar to those of Dan 3 and 2Mac 7.

e. The MSS call him Iectan, but presumably he is to be connected with the sons of Shem in 5:1,

f. Var. "from his house"; but the context seems to require "to his house." See 6:7.

g. The MSS put the verb in the future.

h-i. In the MSS the two verbs are imperatives, but the story demands that they be perfect and imperfect respectively. Heb. yš'w/whkw was probably misread as wš'w/whkw.

head<sup>d</sup> if you are not willing to go forth with these men. Now if you are willing to do so, you will be freed; but if you wish to stay, stay as you wish." And Abram 12 said, "I will not go forth, but I will stay here." •And the leader took those eleven men and sent another fifty with them and commanded them, saying, "You also, wait in the mountains for fifteen days with those fifty who were sent on ahead; and afterward come back and say, 'We have not found them,' as I told the former group. And know that if anyone disregards any of these words that I have spoken to you, he will be burned in the fire." And the men went forth. And he took 13 Abram by himself and locked him up again where he had been confined. •And after seven days had passed, the people gathered together and said to their leader, "Give us back the men who were unwilling to join in our plan, and we will burn them in the fire." And they sent the leaders to bring them out, and they found no one but Abram. And they gathered together with their leaders and said, "The men whom you locked up have fled; they have evaded our scheme." •And Fenech
 14 and Nimrod<sup>k</sup> said to Joktan, "Where are the men whom you locked up?" But that man said, "They have broken out by night. But I have sent a hundred men to search for them and commanded them that, if they find them, not only should they burn them in the fire but also give their corpses to the birds of the heavens, and so let them destroy them."
 15 And then those men said, "This fellow who alone has been found, we will burn him." And they took Abram and brought him to their leaders. And they said to him, "Where are those who were with you?" And he said, "I was sleeping 16 during the night; when I awoke, I did not find them." •And they took him and built a furnace and lit it. And they threw bricks burned with fire into the furnace. Dan 3
 And then the leader Joktan with great emotion<sup>l</sup> took Abram and threw him along 17 with the bricks into the fiery furnace. •But God caused a great earthquake, and the fire gushing out of the furnace leaped forth in flames and sparks of flame. And it burned all those standing around in sight of the furnace. And all those who were burned in that day were 83,500. But there was not the least injury to Abram 18 from the burning of the fire. •And Abram came up out of the furnace, and the fiery furnace collapsed. And Abram was saved and went away to the eleven men who were hidden in the mountains, and he reported to them everything that had happened to him. And they came down with him from the mountains, rejoicing in the name of the LORD. And no one who met them frightened them that day. And they named that place by the name of Abram and in the language of the Chaldeans "Deli,"<sup>m</sup> which means "God."

The dispersion of the people and the choice of Canaan

1 7 And it happened after these events that the people of the land were not turned from their malicious plottings, and they came together again to their leaders and said, "The people will not be defeated forever. And now we will come together and build ourselves a city and a tower that will never be taken away." Gen 11:4 2 And when they had begun to build, God saw the city and the tower that the sons of men were building, and he said, "Behold they are one people and have one language for all; but what they have begun to make, neither the earth will put up with it nor will the heavens bear to behold it. And if they are not stopped 3 now, they will be daring in all the things they propose to do. •And behold now I will divide up their languages and scatter them in all regions so that a man will not understand his own brother and no one will hear the language of his neighbor. Gen 11:7
 And I will banish them to the cliffs, and they will build for themselves huts with stalks of straw and will dig caves for themselves and live there like the beasts of

j. See Mt 23:35–36; 27:25; Acts 5:28; 18:6; 20:26.

k. For Nimrod as the planner of the tower of Babel see Josephus' Ant 1.4.2 §§113f.

l. Lit. "dissolved with feeling."

m. Perhaps read Beli as in PrEv 9.18.2. According to Josephus' Ant 1.7.2 §160, a village in the region of Damascus was called "Abram's abode."

- the field. And thus they will remain before me all the time so that they will never make such plots again, and I will consider them like a drop of water and liken them to spittle.<sup>a</sup> And to some the end will come by water, but others will be dried up with thirst. •And before all these I will choose my servant<sup>b</sup> Abram, and I will bring him out from their land and will bring him into the land upon which my eye has looked from of old, when all those inhabiting the earth sinned in my sight and I brought the water of the flood and I did not destroy it but preserved that land. For neither did the springs of my wrath burst forth in it, nor did my water of destruction descend on it.<sup>c</sup> For there I will have my servant Abram dwell and will establish my covenant with him and will bless his seed and be lord for him as God forever.”
- 5 Now when the people inhabiting the land had begun to construct the tower, God divided up their languages and changed their appearances, and a man did not recognize his own brother and no one heard the language of his neighbor. And so it happened that when the builders would order their assistants to bring bricks, those would bring water; and if they demanded water, those would bring straw. And so their plan was frustrated, and they stopped building the city. And the Lord scattered them from there over the face of all the earth. And therefore the name of that place was called “Confusion,”<sup>d</sup> because there God confused their languages and from there he scattered them over the face of all the earth.

From Canaan to Egypt

- 1 8 Now Abram went forth from there and dwelt in the land of Canaan and took with him Lot his nephew and Sarai his wife. And since Sarai was sterile and had not conceived, then Abram took Hagar his maid and she bore him Ishmael. Now Ishmael became the father of twelve sons. •Then Lot separated from Abram and dwelt in Sodom. But Abram lived in the land of Canaan.<sup>a</sup> And the men of Sodom were very wicked men and great sinners. •And God appeared to Abram, saying, “To your seed I will give this land, and your name will be called Abraham, and Sarai, your wife, will be called Sarah. And I will give to you from her an everlasting seed, and I will establish my covenant with you.” And Abraham knew Sarah, his wife, and she conceived and bore Isaac.
- 4 Now Isaac took for himself a wife from Mesopotamia, the daughter of Bethuel, who conceived and bore to him Esau and Jacob. •Now Esau took for himself as wives<sup>b</sup> Judith the daughter of Beeri and Basemath the daughter of Elon and Oholibamah the daughter of Anah and Mahalath the daughter of Ishmael.<sup>c</sup> And Adah bore him Eliphaz,<sup>d</sup> and the sons of Eliphaz were Teman, Omar, Zepho, Gatam, Kenaz, Amalek. And Judith bore Tenacis, Ieruebemas. Basemath bore Reuel.<sup>e</sup> And the sons of Reuel: Nahath, Zerah, Shammah, Mizzah. And Oholibamah bore Auz, Ioolam,<sup>f</sup> Korah. Mahalath bore Tenetde, Thenatela. •Now Jacob took for himself as wives the daughters of Laban the Syrian, Leah and Rachel, and two concubines, Billah and Zilpah. And Leah bore to him Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, Issachar, Zebulun, and Dinah their sister. Now Rachel brought forth Joseph and Benjamin. Billah bore Dan and Naphtali. And Zilpah bore Gad and Asher. These are the twelve sons of Jacob and one daughter. •And Jacob

7 a. We are reading “spittle” (sputo), rather than “shield” (scuto) found in all MSS, on the basis of the LXX of Isa 40:15 and Ps-Philo 12:4; see also 4Ezra 6:56 and 2Bar 82:5.

b. Lit. “child,” which reflects the Gk. pais as a rendering for the Heb. ‘bd.

c. That it did not rain on the land of Israel in the Flood is also stated in b.Zeb 113a and SongR 1:15.

d. Based on the biblical etymology for Babel; see Gen 11:9.

8 a. All MSS have the error Cham.

b. In view of what follows we would expect “Adah the daughter of Elon” here.

c. MSS have “Manem the daughter of Samael.” As in chs. 5f. we are presenting the proper names according to their recognizable biblical equivalents.

d. MSS conflate the names to Adelifan.

e. MSS Rugil.

f. From Gen 36:5, 14, 18, we would expect “Jeush, Jalam.”

- dwelt in the land of Canaan, and Shechem the son of Hamor the Hurrite<sup>a</sup> raped Dinah his daughter and humiliated her. And the sons of Jacob, Simeon and Levi, went in and killed the whole city of them by the sword; and they took their sister* Gen 34:25f.
- Dinah and went away from there. •And afterward Job took her as a wife<sup>b</sup> and* Job 42:13f.
- fathered from her fourteen sons and six daughters; that is, seven sons and three daughters before he was struck down with suffering, and afterward seven sons and three daughters when he was healed. And these are their names: Elifac, Ermoe, Diasat, Filias, Diffar, Zellud, Thelon; and his daughters: Meru, Litaz, Zeli.<sup>c</sup> And such as had been the names of the former, so were those of the latter.*
- 9 Now Jacob and his twelve sons lived in the land of Canaan. And these hated* Gen 37:1,4
- their brother Joseph, whom they delivered into Egypt to Potiphar, the chief of* Gen 37:36; 39:1
- Pharaoh's cooks,<sup>d</sup> and he spent fourteen years with him. •And afterward the king* Gen 41:1
- of Egypt had a dream. And they told him about Joseph, and he explained to him*
- the dreams. And after he explained to him the dreams, Pharaoh made him chief* Gen 41:43
- over all the land of Egypt. At that time there was a famine over all the land, as* Gen 41:54
- Joseph had discerned, and his brothers went down to buy food in Egypt because* Gen 42:3
- only in Egypt was there food. And Joseph recognized his brothers, but was not* Gen 42:1
- known by them. And he did not deal vengefully with them, and he sent and* Gen 42:8
- summoned his father from the land of Canaan; and he went down to him.*
- 11 And these are the names of the sons of Israel who went down to Egypt with* Gen 46:8,27;
- Jacob, each with his own household. The sons of Reuben: Hanoch, Pallu, Hezron,* Ex 1:1
- and Carmi. Now the sons of Simeon: Namuel<sup>e</sup> and Jamin and Ohad<sup>f</sup> and Jachin<sup>g</sup>* Gen 46:9–15
- and Shaul the son of the Canaanite woman. Now the sons of Levi: Gershon,<sup>h</sup>*
- Kohath, and Merari. The sons of Judah: Er and Onan, Shelah, Perez, and Zerah.*
- Now the sons of Issachar: Tola and Puvah, Job and Shimron.<sup>o</sup> Now the sons of*
- Zebulun: Sered, Elon,<sup>p</sup> and Jahleel. And Dinah their sister bore fourteen sons and*
- six daughters. And these are the generations of the sons that Leah<sup>q</sup> bore to Jacob,*
- 12 all the sons and daughters<sup>r</sup> being 72.<sup>s</sup> •Now the sons of Dan: Hushim.<sup>t</sup> The sons* Gen 46:23–25
- of Naphtali: Betaal, Neemmu, Surem, Opti, Sariel.<sup>u</sup> And these are the generations*
- 13 of Billah that she bore to Jacob; the total was eight.<sup>v</sup> •But the sons of Gad<sup>w</sup>:* Gen 46:16–18
- Sariel, Sua, Visui, Mofar, and Sar their sister the daughter of Seriebel, Melchiel.*
- These are the generations of Zilphah the woman of Jacob that she bore to him,*
- 14 and all the sons and daughters were ten<sup>x</sup> in number. •And the sons of Joseph:* Gen 46:20–22
- Ephraim and Manasseh. But Benjamin fathered Bela, Ashbel,<sup>y</sup> Nanubal, Aboc-*
- mefec, Utendeus. And these are the persons whom Rachel bore to Jacob, fourteen.*
- And they went down into Egypt and dwelt there 210 years.*

g. Ps-Philo agrees with the LXX of Gen 34:2 in making Shechem a Hurrite; other texts call him a Hivvite.

h. Apparently Job is identified with Jobab of Gen 36:33. That Dinah married Job is stated in TJob 1:6 and several rabbinic texts.

i. Perhaps we are to connect the names with Job's comforters: Elifac—Elifaz; Filias—Baldas; Diffar—Soffar. Meru may be related to Job's first daughter, Jemimah (Job 42:14).

j. In calling Potiphar the chief of Pharaoh's cooks, Ps-Philo agrees with the LXX of Gen 37:36; 39:1; Jub 34:1; Josephus' Ant 2.4.1 §39 and 2.5.4 §78, and Philo's Jos 27 and LegAll 3.236.

k. For Namuel rather than Jemuel see 1Chr 4:24.

l. The MSS have Doth. In Gen 46:10 the MT has hd and the LXX Ad. The Lat. translator of Ps-Philo or an earlier Gk. copyist probably confused initial alpha and delta.

m. Zohar of Gen 46:10 has been omitted.

n. MSS Getson.

o. MSS Sombran.

p. The MSS conflate the two names into Sarelon.

q. The MSS omit Leah, but see Gen 46:15.

r. Lit. "all the souls of the sons and daughters."

s. According to Gen 46:15 the number should be 33; perhaps Ps-Philo had 32 (XXXII), the actual number of sons here (25 names and 7 from Dinah), which was then misread as 72 (LXXII).

t. MSS Usinam.

u. Gen 46:24 has Jahzeel, Guni, Jezer and Shillem.

v. Gen 46:25 has seven. There are only six names given here and only five in the OT.

w. Most of the list of Gad's sons and the beginning of Asher's sons have dropped out.

x. Gen 46:18 has sixteen.

y. MSS have Gela, Esbel.

Amram and the birth of Moses

- 1 9 And after Joseph's passing away, the sons of Israel multiplied and increased greatly. And another<sup>a</sup> king who did not know Joseph arose in Egypt, and he said to his people, "Behold that people has multiplied more than we have. Come, let us make a plan against them so they will not multiply more." And the king of Egypt ordered all his people, saying, "Every son that is born to the Hebrews,<sup>b</sup> throw into the river; but let their females live." And the Egyptians answered their king, saying, "Let us kill their males, and we will keep their females so that we may give them to our slaves as wives. And whoever is born from them will be a slave and will serve us." And this is what seemed wicked before the LORD. Ex 1:6-10
- 2 Then the elders of the people gathered the people together in mourning, and they mourned and groaned saying, "The wombs of our wives have suffered miscarriage; our fruit is delivered to our enemies. And now we are lost, and let us set up rules for ourselves that a man should not approach his wife lest the fruit of their wombs be defiled and our offspring serve idols. For it is better to die without sons until we know what God may do." Ex 1:22
- 3 And Amram answered and said, "It will sooner happen that this age will be ended forever<sup>c</sup> or the world will sink into the immeasurable deep or the heart of the abyss will touch the stars than that the race of the sons of Israel will be ended. And there will be fulfilled the covenant that God established with Abraham when he said, 'Indeed your sons will dwell in a land not their own and will be brought into bondage and afflicted 400 years.' And behold from the time when the word of God that he spoke to Abraham was spoken,<sup>d</sup> there are 350 years; from the time when we became slaves in Egypt, there are 130<sup>e</sup> years. •Now therefore I will not abide by what you decree, but I will go in and take my wife and produce sons so that we may be made many on the earth.<sup>f</sup> For God will not abide in his anger, nor will he forget his people forever, nor will he cast forth the race of Israel in vain upon the earth; nor did he establish a covenant with our fathers in vain; and even when we did not yet exist, God spoke about these matters. •Now therefore I will go and take my wife, and I will not consent to the command of the king; and if it is right in your eyes, let us all act in this way. For when our wives conceive, they will not be recognized as pregnant until three months have passed, as also our mother Tamar did.<sup>g</sup> For her intent was not fornication, but being unwilling to separate from the sons of Israel she reflected and said, 'It is better for me to die for having intercourse with my father-in-law than to have intercourse with gentiles.'<sup>h</sup> And she hid the fruit of her womb until the third month. For then she was recognized. And on her way to be put to death, she made a declaration saying, 'He who owns this staff and this signet ring and the sheepskin,<sup>i</sup> from him I have conceived.' And her intent saved her from all danger. •Now therefore let us also do the same. And when the time of giving birth has been completed, we Ex 6:20
- 4 Gen 15:13
- 5 Ex 12:40
- 6 Gen 38:24f.

9 a. The MT for Ex 1:8 has "new," but the LXX has "another."

b. The specification "to the Hebrews" is absent from the MT of Ex 1:22 but present in the LXX and Samaritan Pentateuch.

c. The Lat. in victoria reflects the Gk. eis nikos and Heb. insh and means "forever." In Aram. the root has only the meaning of "splendor" or "victory" and so the phrase is an argument against Aram. as the original language of Ps-Philo.

d. Lit. "was found," which probably arose from confusion between Gk. heurethē, "was found," and erretē, "was spoken."

e. See Ex 12:40, where the MT says that the people of Israel dwelt in Egypt for 430 years but the LXX divides the time between Canaan and Egypt as Ps-Philo does.

f. In several rabbinic texts Amram advises the husbands and wives not to live together. In Josephus' Ant 2.9.3 §210 Amram's wife is already pregnant.

g. This is the first instance of a common technique in Ps-Philo: referring back to past events or forward to future events in Israelite history to illustrate an event now under discussion.

h. This apology for Tamar's actions is found only in Ps-Philo. For other polemics against marriage with gentiles, see 18:13f.; 21:1; 30:1; 44:7; 45:3.

i. In Gen 38:18, 25, the MT has "cords," the LXX "small necklace," and the Vulgate "bracelet."

will not cast forth the fruit of our womb (if we are able). And who knows if God will be provoked on account of this so as to free us from our humiliation?"

7 And the strategy that Amram thought out was pleasing before God. And God said, "Because Amram's plan is pleasing to me, and he has not put aside the covenant established between me and his fathers, so behold now he who will be born from him will serve me forever, and I will do marvelous things in the house of Jacob through him and I will work through him signs and wonders for my people that I have not done for anyone else; and I will act gloriously among them
8 and proclaim to them my ways. •And I, God, will kindle for him my lamp that will abide in him, and I will show him my covenant that no one has seen. And I will reveal to him my Law<sup>w</sup> and statutes and judgments, and I will burn an eternal light for him, because I thought of him in the days of old, saying, 'My spirit will not be a mediator among these men forever, because they are flesh and their days will be 120 years.' "

Gen 6:3

9 And Amram of the tribe of Levi went out and took a wife from his own tribe.<sup>k</sup> When he had taken her, others followed him and took their own wives. And this man had one son and one daughter; their names were Aaron and Miriam. •And the spirit of God came upon Miriam one night, and she saw a dream and told it to her parents in the morning, saying, "I have seen this night, and behold a man in a linen garment stood and said to me, 'Go and say to your parents, 'Behold he who will be born from you will be cast forth into the water; likewise through him the water will be dried up.' And I will work signs through him and save my people, and he will exercise leadership always.' " " And when Miriam told of her dream, her parents did not believe her.

Ex 2:1; 6:20

11 The strategy of the king of Egypt, however, prevailed against the sons of Israel, 12 and they were humiliated and worn down in making bricks. •Now Jochebed conceived from Amram and hid him in her womb for three months.<sup>m</sup> For she could not conceal him any longer, because the king of Egypt appointed local chiefs who, when the Hebrew women gave birth, would immediately throw their male children into the river. And she took her child and made for him an ark from 13 the bark of a pine tree and placed the ark at the bank of the river. •Now that child was born in the covenant of God and the covenant of the flesh.<sup>n</sup> •And when they had cast him forth, all the elders gathered and quarreled with Amram, saying, "Are not these our words that we spoke, 'It is better for us to die without having sons than that the fruit of our womb be cast into the waters'?" And Amram did
15 not listen to those who were saying these words. •Now Pharaoh's daughter came down to bathe in the river, as she had seen in dreams, and her maids saw the ark. And she sent one, and she fetched and opened it. And when she saw the boy and while she was looking upon the covenant (that is, the covenant of the flesh),<sup>o</sup>
16 she said, "It is one of the Hebrew children." •And she took him and nursed him. And he became her own son, and she called him by the name Moses. But his mother called him Melchiel.<sup>p</sup> And the child was nursed and became glorious above all other men, and through him God freed the sons of Israel as he had said.

Ex 2:2-3; 6:20

Ex 1:22

Ex 2:3

Ex 2:5f.

Ex 2:9f.

j. Lit. "superexcellence." This expression (or one like it) must mean "law" or "statute" as in 11:1; 12:2; 19:4; 30:2; and 44:6, but its origin is not now recognizable.

k. There are striking parallels between Moses' birth as narrated here and that of Jesus in Mt 1f.: communication by dreams, the spirit of God, interest in name and mission, concealment, and the slaughter of the male children. Literary dependence is doubtful; the points in common show a lively interest in the birth of heroes in the NT period. The "new Moses" motif in Mt 2 is well known. See also Ps-Philo 42.

l. The connection between Moses' being cast into the water as an infant and his later drying up of the Red Sea is unique to Ps-Philo.

m. There may be some material missing here, since there is a sudden transition from Jochebed's pregnancy to her precautions to save Moses.

n. That is, Moses was born circumcised as in b.Sot 12a and ExR 1:24.

o. That is, the sign of his circumcision. In post-biblical Heb., "covenant" had become a technical term for circumcision.

p. For Melchi as a name for Moses, see Clement of Alexandria's Strom 1.23.1.

The departure from Egypt and the crossing over the sea

- 1 10 Now when the king of the Egyptians died, another king rose up and afflicted all the people of Israel. But they cried out to the LORD, and he heard them. And he sent Moses and freed them from the land of the Egyptians. God also sent upon them ten plagues and struck them down. Now these were the plagues; that is, blood and frogs and all manner of beasts and hail and the death of cattle and locusts and gnats and darkness that could be felt and the death of the firstborn.<sup>a</sup> Ex 2:23f., 1:8
Ex 7:14–12:36
- 2 And while they were going forth from there and setting out, the heart of the Egyptians was hardened once more, and they continued to pursue them and found them by the Red Sea. And the sons of Israel cried out to their Lord and said to Moses, saying, "Behold now the time of our destruction has come. For the sea is ahead of us, and the throng of enemies is behind us, and we are in the middle. Is it for this that God has brought us forth, or are these the covenants that he established with our fathers, saying, 'To your seed will I give the land in which you dwell' that now he might do with us whatever is pleasing in his sight?" Num 14:3
Gen 12:7
- 3 Then in considering the fearful situation of the moment, the sons of Israel were split in their opinions according to three strategies.<sup>b</sup> For the tribe of Reuben and the tribe of Issachar and the tribe of Zebulun and the tribe of Simeon said, "Come, let us cast ourselves into the sea. For it is better for us to die in the water than to be killed by our enemies." But the tribe of Gad and the tribe of Asher and the tribe of Dan and that of Naphtali said, "No, but let us go back with them; and if they are willing to spare our lives, we will serve them." But the tribe of Levi and the tribe of Judah and that of Joseph and the tribe of Benjamin said, "Not so, but let us take up our weapons and fight with them, and God will be with us." *And Moses cried out to the Lord and said, "Lord God of our fathers, did you not say to me, 'Go and tell the sons of Israel,'<sup>c</sup> "God has sent me to you" ? And now behold you have brought your people to the edge of the sea, and the enemy has pursued them; but you, LORD, remember your name." *And God said, "Why have you cried out to me? Lift up your rod and strike the sea, and it will be dried up." And when Moses did all this, God rebuked the sea and the sea was dried up. *And the seas of water piled up and the depths of the earth were visible, and the foundations of the world<sup>d</sup> were laid bare by the fearful din of God and by the breath of the anger of the LORD.<sup>e</sup> *And Israel passed through the middle of the sea on dry ground.* And the Egyptians saw this and continued following them. And God hardened their perception, and they did not know that they were entering the sea. And while the Egyptians were in the sea, God again commanded the sea and said to Moses, "Strike the sea yet once more." And he did so. And the LORD commanded the sea, and it started flowing again and covered the Egyptians and their chariots and horsemen. Ex 14:12
Ex 14:13f.
Ex 14:15,9
Ex 14:15f.
- 4 *And the seas of water piled up and the depths of the earth were visible, and the foundations of the world<sup>d</sup> were laid bare by the fearful din of God and by the breath of the anger of the LORD.<sup>e</sup> *And Israel passed through the middle of the sea on dry ground.* Ex 15:8
Ex 14:22(29)
- 6 And the Egyptians saw this and continued following them. And God hardened their perception, and they did not know that they were entering the sea. And while the Egyptians were in the sea, God again commanded the sea and said to Moses, "Strike the sea yet once more." And he did so. And the LORD commanded the sea, and it started flowing again and covered the Egyptians and their chariots and horsemen.
- 7 Now he led his people out into the wilderness; for forty years he rained down for them bread from heaven and brought quail to them from the sea and brought forth a well of water to follow them.<sup>f</sup> Now with a pillar of cloud he led them by day, and with a pillar of fire he gave them light by night. Ex 16:13–17:6
Ps 78:24, 27
Num 21:16–20
Ex 13:21; Neh 9:12

10 a. The plague of boils is absent from the list. When the order is compared with that of the biblical text, the order in Ps-Philo is 1, 2, 4, 7, 5, 8, 3, 9, 10.

b. The division of opinion here may be related to that in Judg 5:15–16. A fourfold rather than threefold division is common in rabbinic texts.

c. All MSS but one have "the sons of Leah," but the conjecture of that one MS ("the sons of Israel") is probably correct. See Ex 3:14.

d. Lit. "habitation," which in Gk. probably was oikoumēnē.

e. Lit. "my LORD." The use of the first person singular possessive adjective is unexpected. The Gk. translator may have mistranslated the Heb. ḏwny ("the LORD") as "my LORD."

f. The idea of a well of water to follow them arises from Num 21:16–20 and is found in Ps-Philo 11:15; 1Cor 10:4, and many targumic and rabbinic texts.

The gift of the Law. The Decalogue

- 1 11 And in the third month after the sons of Israel had gone forth from the land of Egypt, they came into the wilderness of Sinai, and God remembered his words and said, "I will give a light to the world and illumine their dwelling places and establish my covenant with the sons of men and glorify my people above all nations. For them I will bring out the eternal statutes<sup>a</sup> that are for those in the light but for the ungodly a punishment." •And he said to Moses, "Behold I will call you tomorrow; be prepared and tell my people, 'For three days let no man approach<sup>b</sup> his wife,' and on the third day<sup>c</sup> I will speak to you and to them. And afterward you will come up to me, and I will put my words in your mouth, and you will enlighten my people, for I have given an everlasting Law into your hands and by this I will judge the whole world. For this will be a testimony. For even if men say, 'We have not known you, and so we have not served you,' therefore I will make a claim upon them because they have not learned my Law."<sup>d</sup> •And Moses did what God commanded him, and he consecrated the people and said to them, "Be prepared on the third day, because after three days God will establish his covenant with you." And the people were consecrated.
- 2 light but for the ungodly a punishment." •And he said to Moses, "Behold I will call you tomorrow; be prepared and tell my people, 'For three days let no man approach<sup>b</sup> his wife,' and on the third day<sup>c</sup> I will speak to you and to them. And afterward you will come up to me, and I will put my words in your mouth, and you will enlighten my people, for I have given an everlasting Law into your hands and by this I will judge the whole world. For this will be a testimony. For even if men say, 'We have not known you, and so we have not served you,' therefore I will make a claim upon them because they have not learned my Law."<sup>d</sup> •And Moses did what God commanded him, and he consecrated the people and said to them, "Be prepared on the third day, because after three days God will establish his covenant with you." And the people were consecrated.
- 3 I will make a claim upon them because they have not learned my Law."<sup>d</sup> •And Moses did what God commanded him, and he consecrated the people and said to them, "Be prepared on the third day, because after three days God will establish his covenant with you." And the people were consecrated.
- 4 And on the third day there were claps of thunder and the brightness of lightning, and the sound of trumpets sounded aloud. Terror came upon all the people who were in the camp. And Moses brought the people out before God. •And behold the mountains burned with fire, and the earth quaked, and the hills were disturbed, and the mountains were rolled about, and the abysses boiled, and every habitable place was shaken, and the heavens were folded up, and the clouds drew up water, and flames of fire burned, and thunderings and lightnings were many, and winds and storms roared, the stars gathered together, and angels ran on ahead, until God should establish the Law of his eternal covenant with the sons of Israel and give his eternal commandments that will not pass away.<sup>e</sup>
- 5 were in the camp. And Moses brought the people out before God. •And behold the mountains burned with fire, and the earth quaked, and the hills were disturbed, and the mountains were rolled about, and the abysses boiled, and every habitable place was shaken, and the heavens were folded up, and the clouds drew up water, and flames of fire burned, and thunderings and lightnings were many, and winds and storms roared, the stars gathered together, and angels ran on ahead, until God should establish the Law of his eternal covenant with the sons of Israel and give his eternal commandments that will not pass away.<sup>e</sup>
- 6 And then the Lord spoke to his people all these words, saying, "I am the Lord your God who led you forth from the land of Egypt, from the house of slavery. You shall not make for yourselves graven gods; neither shall you make any abominable image of the sun and moon or of any of the ornaments of heaven; nor shall you make a likeness of any of the things that are upon the earth or of those things that crawl in the water or upon the earth. I am the Lord your God, a jealous God and visiting until the third and fourth generation the sins of them that sleep on the living sons of the ungodly if they will walk in the ways of their parents, but acting mercifully for a thousand generations to those who love me and keep my commandments. •You shall not take the name of the Lord your God in vain, lest my ways be made empty.<sup>f</sup> For God detests him who takes his name in vain. •Take care<sup>g</sup> to sanctify the sabbath day. Work for six days, but the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord. You shall not do any work on it, you and all your help, except to praise the LORD in the assembly of the elders and to glorify the Mighty One in the council of the older men. For in six days the Lord made the heaven and the earth and the sea and all things that are in them and all the world

11 a. Lit. "heights," but the context demands the meaning "statutes." See 9:8.

b. The MSS have "ascend" (ascendat), but in view of Ex 19:15 we have emended to "approach" (accadat).

c. Here "on the third day" is the equivalent of "after three days" as in Mt 27:63; Mk 8:31; 9:31; 10:34; Lk 24:7; Acts 10:40; and 1Cor 15:4.

d. According to b.AZ 2b, since God offered the Law to all the nations, they have no excuse for not obeying it. But perhaps only the case of unfaithful Israelites is being considered here.

e. Similar lists of wonders accompanying the gift of the Law are in 15:5f.; 23:10; and 32:7f. See also 4Ezra 3:18f. For commandments that do not pass away, see Mt 5:18.

f. The "ways" here may be purely metaphorical (i.e. God's ways or directions), or they may be connected with b.Shab 33a: "For the crime of vain oaths . . . the roads became desolate."

g. The Samaritan Pentateuch of Ex 20:8 and the various texts of Deut 5:12 also have "take care" rather than "remember."

- and the uninhabitable wilderness and all things that labor and all the order of heaven. And God rested on the seventh day. Therefore, God sanctified the seventh<sup>h</sup> day because he rested on it. •Love your father and your mother, and you shall honor them, and then your light will rise. And I will command the heaven, and it will give forth its rain, and the earth will give back fruit more quickly. And you will live many days and dwell in your land, and you will not be without sons, for your seed will not be lacking in people to dwell in it. •You shall not commit adultery,<sup>i</sup> because your enemies did not commit adultery against you, but you came forth with a high hand.<sup>j</sup> •You shall not kill, because your enemies had power over you so as to kill you, but you saw their death. •You shall not be a false witness against your neighbor, speaking false testimony, lest your guardians speak false testimony against you. •You shall not covet your neighbor's house or what he has, lest others should covet your land."
- 14 And when the LORD ceased speaking, the people were very much afraid, because they saw the mountain burning with torches of fire. And they said to Moses, "You speak to us, but do not let God speak to us lest perhaps we die. For behold today we know that God speaks to a man face to face and that man may live. And now we have recognized that the earth has borne the voice of God with quaking." And Moses said to them, "Do not fear. For God has come to test you that you yourselves should come to fear him so that you will not sin."
- 15 And all<sup>l</sup> the people stood far off, but Moses drew near the cloud, knowing that God was there. And then God told him his statutes and his judgments, and he detained him forty days and forty nights. And there he commanded him many things and showed him the tree of life, from which he cut off and took and threw into Marah, and the water of Marah<sup>m</sup> became sweet. And it<sup>n</sup> followed them in the wilderness forty years and went up to the mountain with them and went down into the plains. And he commanded him about the tabernacle and the ark of the LORD and about the sacrifice of burnt offerings and incense and about setting up the table and the candlestick and about the laver and its basin<sup>o</sup> and about the ephod and the breastplate and about the precious stones, so that the sons of Israel might make these things. And he showed him their likeness in order that he might make them according to the pattern that he had seen. And he said to him, "Make me a sanctuary, and the tent of my glory will be among you."<sup>p</sup>

The golden calf

- 1 12 And Moses came down. And when he had been bathed with invisible light, he went down to the place where the light of the sun and the moon are; and the light of his face surpassed the splendor of the sun and the moon, and he did not even know this. And when he came down to the sons of Israel, they saw him but did not recognize him.<sup>a</sup> But when he spoke, then they recognized him. And this was like what happened in Egypt when Joseph recognized his brothers but they did not recognize him. And afterward, when Moses realized that his face had become glorious, he made a veil for himself with which to cover his face.
- 2 And while he was on the mountain, the heart of the people was corrupted, and

h. The LXX and Peshitta of Ex 20:11 also have "seventh," while the other texts have "sabbath."

i. The prohibition of adultery precedes that of murder as in the LXX, Nash Papyrus, Philo, and some NT texts (Rom 13:9; Lk 18:20; Jas 2:11). The prohibition of stealing is omitted.

j. The point seems to be that Israel's enemies did not get the chance to commit adultery.

k. See also 15:5 and 59:4 for guardian angels. The passage is a formulation of the golden rule ("Do to others as you would have them do to you"; cf. Mt 7:12).

l. Ps-Philo agrees with the Lucianic MSS and the Vetus Latina of Ex 20:21 in reading "all."

m. Marah in Heb. means "bitter."

n. The water, not the LORD (as some MSS have); see 10:7.

o. The MSS have "vase" (vase), but "basin" (base) must be correct; see 13:1 and Ex 30:18.

p. With "tent" and "among you" Ps-Philo stands closest to the Samaritan Pentateuch of Ex 25:8.

12 a. That the people of Israel saw Moses but did not recognize him is unique to Ps-Philo.

- they gathered together to Aaron, saying, "Make gods for us whom we may serve, as the other nations have, because that Moses through whom wonders were done before our eyes has been taken away from us." And Aaron said to them, "Be patient. For Moses will come, and he will bring judgment near to us and will illumine the Law for us and will explain from his own mouth the Law<sup>b</sup> of God and set up rules for our race." •And while he was speaking, they did not heed him, so that the word spoken in the time when the people sinned by building the tower might be fulfilled, when God said, "And now unless I stop them, everything that they will propose to do they will dare, and even worse." But Aaron, fearful because the people were very strong, said to them, "Bring us the earrings of your wives." And each man asked his wife, and they gave them immediately. And they cast them into the fire, and they were fashioned into shape, and out came a molten calf.
- 4 And the Lord said to Moses, "Hurry<sup>c</sup> away from here, because the people have been corrupted and have turned aside from my ways that I commanded them. Are the promises that I promised to your fathers when I said to them, 'To your seed I will give the land in which you dwell'—are they at an end? For behold the people have not even entered the land yet and now even have the Law with them, and they have forsaken me. And indeed I know that if they had entered that land, even greater iniquities would have been done. And now I too will forsake them, and I will turn again and make peace with them so that a house may be built for me among them, a house that will be destroyed because they will sin against me. And the race of men will be to me like a drop from a pitcher and will be reckoned like spittle."
- 5 And Moses hurried down and saw the calf. And he looked at the tablets and saw that the writing was gone,<sup>d</sup> and he hurried to break them. And his hands were opened, and he became like a woman bearing her firstborn who, when she is in labor, her hands are upon her chest and she has no strength to help herself bring forth. •And after one hour he said to himself, "Will bitterness win the day always, or will evil prevail forever? And now I will rise up and gird my loins, because even if they have sinned, what was declared to me above will not be in vain." •And he arose and broke the calf and cast it into the water and made the people drink of it.<sup>e</sup> And if anyone had it in his will and mind that the calf be made, his tongue was cut off; but if he had been forced by fear to consent, his face shone.
- 6 And then Moses went up to the mountain and prayed to the LORD, saying, "Behold now, you O God, who have planted this vine and set its roots into the abyss and stretched out its shoots to your most high seat,<sup>f</sup> look upon it in this time, because that vine has lost its fruit and has not recognized its cultivator. And now, if you are angry at your vine and you uproot it from the abyss and dry up its shoots from your most high and eternal seat, the abyss will come no more to nourish it, nor will your throne come to cool that vine of yours that you have burned up. •For you are he who is all light; and you have adorned your house<sup>g</sup> with precious stones and gold; and you have sprinkled your house with perfumes and spices<sup>h</sup> and balsam wood and cinnamon and roots of myrrh and costum<sup>i</sup>; and you have filled it with various foods and the sweetness of various drinks. Therefore, if you do not have mercy on your vine, all things, LORD, have been done in vain, and you will not have anyone to glorify you. For even if you plant another vine, this one will not trust you, because you have destroyed the former one. For if

b. Lit. "superexcellence"; see 9:8.

c. See the LXX of Ex 32:7 badize to tachos.

d. The legend that the writing fled away from the tablets of the Law is found in rabbinic writings.

e. See Jer 4:31 and IQH 3.7–10 for the image of giving birth.

f. Drinking the waters to determine the identity of sinners is found in Num 5:11–31 in the case of a woman suspected of adultery.

g. For a similar description, see IQH 6.14–17.

h. Perhaps paradise, but more likely the universe.

i. Var. "jasper."

j. ["Costum" is from Lat. costum (Gk. kostos), which denotes an eastern plant with aromatic qualities; there is no English name for the plant; see Jub 16:24 (and n. c), in which "costum" is mentioned among other fragrant plants. —J.H.C.]

you indeed forsake the world, then who will do for you what you say as God? And now let your anger be restrained from your vine; rather let what was said previously by you and what still must be said be done, and do not let your labor be in vain, and do not let your inheritance be pulled apart in humiliation.”

- 10 And God said to him, “Behold I have been made merciful according to your words. Therefore cut two stone tablets for yourself from the same place where you cut the former ones, and rewrite<sup>k</sup> on them the commandments that were on the first ones.” Ex 34:1

The tent of meeting and the festivals

- 1 13 And Moses hastened and did everything that God commanded him. And he went down and made the tent of meeting<sup>a</sup> and its vessels and the ark and the lamp and the table and the altar of holocausts and the altar of incense<sup>b</sup> and the ephod and the breastplate and the precious stones and the laver and the basins and everything that was shown to him. And he arranged all the vestments of the priests, the belt and the robe<sup>c</sup> and the headdress and the golden plate and the holy crown. And the oil for anointing priests and the priests themselves he consecrated. Ex 35–40
- 2 And when all this was done, the cloud covered them all. •Then Moses called to the LORD, and God spoke to him from the tent of meeting, saying, “This is the law of the altar,<sup>d</sup> according to which you will sacrifice to me and pray for your own souls. Now regarding what you will offer to me, from the cattle offer the calf and the sheep and the goat, but from the birds the turtledove and the dove. Ex 40:33f
Lev 1:1
- 3 “And if there be leprosy in your land and the leper be cleansed, they will take for the LORD two live chicks and cedarwood and hyssop and scarlet; and he will approach the priest, and he will kill one chick but keep the other alive. And he will give orders to the leper in all the matters that I have commanded in my Law. Lev 1:10,14
- 4 “And when the times appointed for you come around, you will acknowledge me as holy on the festival day and rejoice before me on the festival of the unleavened bread and set before me the bread, celebrating the festival as a memorial, because on that day you went forth from the land of Egypt. •And on the festival of weeks you will set before me bread and make me an offering for your fruits. •Now the feast of trumpets will be an offering for your watchers.<sup>e</sup> In as much as I watched over creation,<sup>f</sup> may you also be mindful of all the earth. At the beginning of those days, when you present yourselves, I will declare the number of those who are to die and who are to be born. A fast of mercy you will fast<sup>g</sup> for me for your own souls, so that the promises made to your fathers may be fulfilled. •And celebrate for me the festival of the booth, and you will take for me the beautiful branch of the tree and the palm branch and the willow and the cedar and branches of myrtle. And I will remember the whole earth with rain, and the measure of the seasons will be established, and I will fix the stars and command the clouds, and the winds will resound, and lightning bolts will rush about, and there will be a thunderstorm. And this will be an everlasting sign; and the nights will yield dew, as I said after the flooding of the earth.” Lev 23:4–8
- 5 6 your fruits. •Now the feast of trumpets will be an offering for your watchers.<sup>e</sup> In as much as I watched over creation,<sup>f</sup> may you also be mindful of all the earth. At the beginning of those days, when you present yourselves, I will declare the number of those who are to die and who are to be born. A fast of mercy you will fast<sup>g</sup> for me for your own souls, so that the promises made to your fathers may be fulfilled. •And celebrate for me the festival of the booth, and you will take for me the beautiful branch of the tree and the palm branch and the willow and the cedar and branches of myrtle. And I will remember the whole earth with rain, and the measure of the seasons will be established, and I will fix the stars and command the clouds, and the winds will resound, and lightning bolts will rush about, and there will be a thunderstorm. And this will be an everlasting sign; and the nights will yield dew, as I said after the flooding of the earth.” Lev 23:15–21
- 7 8 Then he gave him the command regarding the year of the lifetime of Noah, and he said to him, “These are the years that I ordained after the weeks in which I visited the city of men, at which time I showed them the place of creation and Lev 23:24–32

k. Moses is to write the commandments. Most witnesses say that God wrote them, but some LXX MSS do make Moses the writer. See Ex 34:27f. See also Ps-Philo 25:13 for doubt about the authorship of the Law.

13 a. Lit. “the tables” (tabulas), but the context demands “tent of meeting” (tabernaculum).

b. Lit. “the thurible of holocausts and the thurible of incense,” but according to Ex 35:15f. these should be altars. Perhaps Gk. thymiaterion, “thurible,” was misread for thysiatieron, “altar.”

c. We are reading citona, “robe,” instead of cetera, “the rest,” the reading of all the MSS.

d. Again the MSS have “thurible.”

e. Angelic guardians are probably meant, but in 34:2 sacrifice to angels is attacked. Perhaps the point is that at the New Year, Israel is brought to judgment by God’s angels.

f. For the New Year as the anniversary of creation see b.RH 11a.

g. The Day of Atonement.

the serpent.”<sup>h</sup> And he said, “This is the place concerning which I taught the first man,<sup>i</sup> saying, ‘If you do not transgress what I have commanded you, all things will be subject to you.’ But that man transgressed my ways and was persuaded by his wife; and she was deceived by the serpent. And then death was ordained 9 for the generations of men.” •And the LORD continued to show him the ways of paradise and said to him,<sup>j</sup> “These are the ways that men have lost by not walking in them, because they have sinned against me.”

10 And the LORD commanded him regarding the salvation of the souls of the people and said, “If they will walk in my ways, I will not abandon them but will have mercy on them always and bless their seed; and the earth will quickly yield its fruit, and there will be rains for their advantage, and it will not be barren. But I know for sure that they will make their ways corrupt and I will abandon them, and they will forget the covenants that I have established with their fathers; but nevertheless I will not forget them forever. For they will know in the last days that on account of their own sins their seed has been abandoned, because I am faithful in my ways.”

Lev 26:2-5

The census of the people

1 14 Then God said to him, “Make pass in review my people from twenty years and up to forty years so that I may show your tribes what I declared to your fathers in a foreign land, because from the fiftieth<sup>a</sup> part I raised them up from the
2 land of Egypt, but forty-nine parts died in the land of Egypt. •When you make them stand and pass in review, write down their number until I fulfill all that I have spoken to their fathers and until I set them firmly in their own land; for not a single word from what I have spoken to their fathers will I renege on, from those that I said to them: ‘Your seed will be like the stars of heaven in multitude.’
By number they will enter the land, and in a short time they will become without number.”

Num 1:1-3

Ex 13:18

Gen 22:17; Deut 28:62

3 And then Moses came down and numbered them, and the number of the people was 604,550.<sup>b</sup> But he did not number the tribe of Levi with them, because so it was commanded him. But he did number those who were above fifty<sup>c</sup> years, whose number was 47,300. Moreover, he numbered those who were below twenty years, and their number was 850,850. And he looked over the tribe of Levi, and the whole number of them was 100,200. And the whole number of the sons of Israel
4 was 1,620,900.<sup>d</sup> •And Moses declared their number to God, and God said to him, “These are the words that I spoke to their fathers in the land of Egypt, and I established the number of 210 years for all who saw my wonders; and the number of all of them was 9,295,000 men apart from women. And I put to death the whole crowd of them because they did not believe in me. And the fiftieth part of them was left, and I consecrated them to myself. Therefore I command each generation of my people that they should give to me tithes from their fruits, to be before me as a memorial of how many hardships I have removed from them.”

Num 1:46-49; 2:33

5 And when Moses descended and declared these matters to the people, they mourned and lamented; and they dwelt in the wilderness for two years.

Num 9:1

The twelve spies

1 15 And Moses sent twelve men as spies to spy out the land, for so it was

Num 13:1-3, 20-29, 32f.

h. We are reading colubrum, “serpent” (see 13:8 below) instead of colorem, “color,” found in all MSS.

i. Adam, who is called protoplastus here. For the same term see WisSol 7:1 and 10:1.

j. Probably Moses, but possibly Noah.

Heb. hmsym in Ex 13:8, which can mean “equipped for battle” or “fifties.”

b. Num 1:46 has 603,550.

c. In view of 14:1 we would expect “forty.”

d. The figures for the Levites and all the sons of Israel are emendations based on a very corrupt text. Num 3:39 puts the number of Levites at 22,000.

14 a. Based on a midrashic explanation of the

- commanded him.<sup>a</sup> When they went up and spied out the land, they returned to him and brought back fruits from the fruits of the land. And they troubled the heart of the people, saying, "You cannot inherit the land, because it has been locked up with iron bars by its mighty men."<sup>b</sup> Yet two men of the twelve did not speak in this way, but said, "Just as hard iron can overcome the stars, or as weapons conquer lightning, or thunder is shut off by the arrows of men, so can these men fight against the LORD."<sup>b</sup> For they saw as they went up that the lightnings from the stars shone forth and claps of thunders resounding with them followed. And these are their names: Caleb the son of Jephunneh, son of Beri, son of Batuel, son of Galifa, son of Cenen, son of Selumin, son of Selon, son of Judah. The second was Joshua son of Nun, son of Eliphath, son of Gal, son of Nefelien, son of Emon, son of Saul, son of Dabra, son of Ephraim, son of Joseph. But the people did not listen to the voice of these two. Rather, they were very disturbed and said, "Are these the words that God spoke to us, saying, 'I will bring you into a land flowing with milk and honey'? And how does he now bring us up so that we should fall upon the sword and our wives be taken into captivity?"
- And when they said these words, suddenly the glory of God appeared, and he said to Moses, "So, do the people continue not to listen to me at all? Behold now the plan of action that has issued from me will not be in vain. I will send the angel of my wrath upon them to afflict their bodies with fire in the wilderness. But I will command my angels who watch over them<sup>c</sup> not to intercede for them; for their souls I will shut up in the chambers of darkness, and I will tell my servants, their fathers, 'Behold this is the seed to which I have spoken, saying, "Your seed will stay a while in a land not its own, and I will judge the nation whom it will serve."<sup>d</sup> And I fulfilled my words and made their enemies melt away and set the angels beneath their feet and placed the cloud as the covering for their head. And I commanded the sea, and when the abyss was divided before them, walls of water stood forth. And there was never anything like this event since the day I said, 'Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together into one place,' until this day. And I brought them forth, but I killed their enemies. And I brought them before me to Mount Sinai, and I bent the heavens and came down to kindle a lamp for my people and to establish laws<sup>d</sup> for creation. And I taught them to make sanctuaries for me that I might dwell in them, but they abandoned me and did not believe my words, and their mind grew weak. And now behold the days will come, and I will do to them as they wished, and I will cast forth their bodies in the wilderness."
- And Moses said, "Before you took the seed from which you would make man upon the earth, was it I who did establish their ways? Therefore let your mercy sustain us until the end, and your fidelity for length of days; for unless you had mercy, who would ever be born?"

The rebellion of Korah

- 16 In that time he commanded that man<sup>a</sup> about the tassels. And then Korah and two hundred<sup>b</sup> men with him rebelled and said, "Why is an unbearable law imposed upon us?"<sup>c</sup>
- And God was angry and said, "I commanded the earth, and it gave me man;

15 a. Ps-Philo follows Num 13:1f. in attributing the sending of the spies to God's initiative, but in Deut 1:22f. it is a suggestion of men approved by Moses.

b. That is, it is impossible for these men to fight against the LORD.

c. For the angels as guardians see also Ps-Philo 11:12 and 59:4 as well as Jub 35:17.

d. The expression "laws" (terminos) can be traced back to the Heb. hwqym, which can mean

"limits, boundaries" or "laws, statutes, enactments." See 51:3.

16 a. Moses.

b. Num 16:2 has 250.

c. In Josephus' Ant 4.2.2 §14 Korah's rebellion is traced to his jealousy of Moses. The connection in Ps-Philo between the law of the tassels (Num 15:37-41) and the rebellion (Num 16:1-3) is due to the proximity of the two passages.

- and to him two sons were born first of all, and the older rose up and killed the younger, and the earth quickly swallowed up his blood. But I drove Cain out and cursed the earth and spoke to the parched land,<sup>d</sup> saying, 'You will swallow up blood no more.'<sup>e</sup> •And now the thoughts of men are very corrupt; behold I command the earth, and it will swallow up body and soul together. And their dwelling place will be in darkness and the place of destruction; and they will not die but melt away until I remember the world and renew the earth. And then they will die and not live, and their life will be taken away from the number of all men.<sup>f</sup> And hell will no longer spit them back, and their destruction will not be remembered, and their passing will be like that of those tribes of nations of whom I said, 'I will not remember them,' that is, the camp of the Egyptians and the race that I destroyed with the water of the flood. And the earth will swallow them up, and I will do no more."
- 4 And though Moses was speaking all these words to the people, Korah and his men were still defiant. And Korah sent for his seven sons, who had not joined with him in the plot, to be summoned. •But they answered him, saying, "Just as a painter does not produce a work of art unless he has been instructed beforehand, so we have received the Law of the Most Powerful that teaches us his ways; and we will not enter them except to walk in them. Our father has not begotten us, but the Most Powerful has formed us. And now if we walk in his ways, we will be his sons. But if you are unbelieving, go your own way." And they did not come up to him.
- 6 And after this the earth was opened before them. And his sons sent to him, saying, "If your madness is still upon you, who will help you in the day of your destruction?" And he did not heed them. And the earth opened its mouth and swallowed up them and their households. And four times the foundation of the earth was shaken so as to swallow up the men as it had been commanded. And after this, Korah and his group cried out until the earth became solid again. •Now the assembly of the people said to Moses, "We cannot stay around<sup>g</sup> this place where Korah and his men were swallowed up." And he said to them, "Take up your tents from round about them; do not be joined in their sins." And so they did.

Gen 4:1-16

Num 16:30

Num 26:11

Num 16:32

Num 16:26f.

The rod of Aaron

- 17 And then the identity of the priestly family was revealed by the selection of one tribe. And it was told to Moses, "Take for the twelve tribes one rod apiece and put them in the tent of meeting. And then to whomever my glory shall have spoken, the rod of that one will flower and I will take away the murmuring from my people." •And Moses did so, and he deposited the twelve rods. And the rod of Aaron sprouted and flowered and yielded seed of almonds. •Now that which happened<sup>h</sup> then was like what Israel did while he was in Mesopotamia with Laban the Syrian when he took almond rods and put them at the cisterns of water; and the flocks came to drink and were divided among the peeled rods, and they brought forth white and speckled and many-colored kids. •So the assembly of the people was like the flock of sheep. And as the flocks brought forth according to the almond rods, so the priesthood was established through almond rods.

Num 17:2.4f.

Num 17:7f.

Gen 30:37-39

Balaam

- 18 In that time, Moses killed Sihon and Og, the kings of the Amorites, and he handed over all their land to his own people, and they dwelled in it. •Now Balak

Num 21

Num 22:2f..5

d. Lit. "Zion"; this is based on a misunderstanding of the Heb. šayn, "parched earth." See Isa 25:5 and 32:2.

e. b.Sanh 37b says that the earth did not open its mouth from when it swallowed Abel's blood until it swallowed up Korah.

f. Korah and his group will be annihilated.

g. Lit. "Sinai" (Syna or Sina), which we emend to sinu, lit. "in the bosom of this place."

17 a. Lit. "was born" (Gk. egennēthē), probably a mistake for egenēthē; see also 30:5; 51:6.

- was king of Moab and was living opposite them, and he was very much afraid. And he sent to Balaam the son of Beor, the interpreter<sup>a</sup> of dreams, who lived in Mesopotamia, and commanded him, saying, "Behold I know that in the reign of my father Zippor, when the Amorites fought him, you cursed them and they were handed over before him. And now come and curse this people, because they are Num 22:6,17
- <sup>3</sup> too many for us,<sup>b</sup> and I will do you great honor." •And Balaam said, "Behold this has given pleasure to Balak, but he does not know that the plan of God is not like the plan of man. Now he does not realize that the spirit that is given to us is given for a time. But our ways are not straight unless God wishes it. And now wait here, and I will see what the Lord may say to me this night." Num 22:18
Num 22:8
- <sup>4</sup> And God said to him<sup>c</sup> by night, "Who are the men who have come to you?" And Balaam said, "Why, LORD, do you try the human race? They cannot endure it, because you know well what is to happen in the world, even before you founded it. And now enlighten your servant if it be right to go forth with them."<sup>d</sup> Num 22:9
- <sup>5</sup> And he said to him, "Is it not regarding this people that I spoke to Abraham in a vision, saying, 'Your seed will be like the stars of the heaven,' when I lifted him above the firmament and showed him the arrangements of all the stars?<sup>e</sup> And I demanded his son as a holocaust. And he brought him to be placed on the altar, but I gave him back to his father and, because he did not refuse, his offering was acceptable before me,<sup>f</sup> and on account of his blood<sup>g</sup> I chose them. And then I said to the angels who work secretly, 'Did I not say regarding 'his, "I will reveal Gen 22:17
Gen 18:17
- <sup>6</sup> everything I am doing to Abraham •and to Jacob his son, the third one whom I called<sup>h</sup> firstborn, who, when he was wrestling in the dust with the angel who was in charge of hymns, would not let him go until he blessed him."<sup>i</sup> And do you propose to go forth with them to curse whom I have chosen? But if you curse them, who will be there to bless you?" Gen 32:24–27
Num 22:12
- <sup>7</sup> And Balaam arose in the morning and said, "Be on your way, because God<sup>j</sup> does not wish me to come with you." And they set out and told Balak what was said by Balaam. And Balak again sent other men to Balaam, saying, "Behold I know that when you offer holocausts to God, God will be reconciled with men. And now ask even still more from your LORD and beg with as many holocausts as he wishes. But if he should be propitiated regarding my evil deeds, you will Num 22:13–15
- <sup>8</sup> have your reward and God will receive his offerings."<sup>k</sup> •And Balaam said to them, "Behold the son of Zippor is looking around<sup>l</sup> and does not recognize that he dwells among the dead.<sup>m</sup> And now wait here this night, and I will see what God may say to me." And God said to him, "Go with them, and your way will be a stumbling block, and that Balak will go to ruin." He rose in the morning and set Num 22:19–21, 8
- <sup>9</sup> out with them. •And his she-ass came by way of the wilderness and saw an angel and lay down beneath him.<sup>n</sup> And he<sup>o</sup> opened Balaam's eyes, and he saw the angel and adored him on the ground. And the angel said to him, "Hurry and be gone, because whatever you say will come to pass for him." Num 22:27,
31f.,35
- <sup>10</sup> And he<sup>p</sup> came into the land of Moab and built an altar and offered sacrifices. Num 23:2

18 a. The name of the river Pethor in Num 22:5 has been rendered as "interpreter" because of the root pt/pšr. See also Josephus' Ant 4.6.2 §104.

b. Ps-Philo agrees with the LXX and the Lucianic MSS of Num 22:8 in reading "for us" (Heb. mmnw) rather than the MT's "for me" (mmny).

c. The phrase "to him" agrees with the LXX of Num 22:9 rather than the MT.

d. Balaam's reply to God here puts him in a more favorable light than he receives in the OT.

e. In TAB 10, Abraham is given a world tour in a heavenly chariot.

f. See 32:2–4; 40:2; Josephus' Ant 1.13.2–4 §§225–36, and TarJon of Gen 22:1 for similar presentations of the sacrifice of Isaac.

g. Even though Isaac's blood was not really shed, it is still seen as having atoning value; see also b. Yoma 5a and Mekilta d'R. Shimon 4.

h. Lit. "he called" (vocavit); but in this context and in the light of Jub 19:29, where Jacob is called God's firstborn son, we have emended to "I called" (vocavi).

i. See the LXX of Num 22:13.

j. Var. "foolish" (insipientis) rather than inspi-ciens.

k. Korah does not recognize that the idols are dead.

l. Balaam.

m. The angel, or God as in Num 22:31.

n. Presumably Balaam. See Num 23:2, where the MT says that Balaam and Balak sacrificed together while the LXX and Philo have Balak sacrifice alone. Josephus (Ant 4.6.4 §113) and Ps-Philo have Balaam sacrifice alone.

And when he saw part of the people, the spirit of God did not abide in him.<sup>o</sup> And he took up his discourse and said, "Behold Balak brought me to the mountain, saying, 'Come, run into the fire<sup>p</sup> of those men.' What fire the waters will not extinguish, I cannot resist; but the fire that consumes water, who will resist that?" And he said to him, "It is easier to take away the foundations and the topmost part of the earth<sup>q</sup> and to extinguish the light of the sun and to darken the light of the moon than for anyone to uproot the planting of the Most Powerful or to destroy his vine." And he<sup>r</sup> did not know that his consciousness was expanded so as to

Num 22:41;
23:6f.

11 hasten his own destruction. "For behold I see the heritage that the Most Powerful has shown me by night. And behold the days will come, and Moab will be amazed at what is happening to it because Balak wished to persuade the Most Powerful with gifts and to buy a decision with money. Should you not have asked about what he sent upon Pharaoh and his land because he wished to reduce them to slavery? Behold an overshadowing<sup>s</sup> and highly desirable vine, and who will be jealous because it does not wither? But if anyone says to himself that the Most Powerful has labored in vain or has chosen them to no purpose, behold now I see the salvation and liberation that will come upon them. I am restrained in my speech and cannot say what I see with my eyes, because there is little left of the holy spirit that abides in me. For I know that, because I have been persuaded by 12 Balak, I have lessened the time of my life. "And behold my remaining hour. Behold again I see the heritage and the dwelling place<sup>t</sup> of this people. And its light will shine more brilliantly than the splendor of lightning, and its course will be swifter than that of an arrow. And the time will come and Moab will groan, and those serving Chemosh<sup>u</sup> who have plotted these things against them will be made weak. But I will gnash my teeth, because I have been led astray and have transgressed what was said to me by night. And my prophecy will remain public, and my words will live on. And the wise and understanding will remember my words that, when I cursed, I perished, but though I blessed, I was not blessed." On saying these words he grew silent. And Balak said, "Your God has cheated you of many gifts from me."

Num 24:2

Num 24:10f.

13 And then Balaam said to him, "Come and let us plan what you should do to them. Pick out the beautiful women who are among us and in Midian, and station them naked and adorned with gold and precious stones before them.<sup>v</sup> And when they see them and lie with them, they will sin against their LORD and fall into 14 your hands; for otherwise you cannot fight against them." "And on saying this, Balaam turned away and returned to his place. And afterward the people were seduced after the daughters of Moab. For Balak did everything that Balaam had showed him.

Num 31:16

Num 25

Num 24:25; 25:1

Moses' farewell, prayer, and death

1 19 And in that time Moses killed the nations and gave half their spoils to the people. And he began declaring to them the words of the Law that God had spoken to them on Horeb. "And he spoke to them, saying,<sup>a</sup> "Behold I am to sleep with my fathers and will go to my people. But I know that you will rise up and forsake the words established for you through me, and God will be angry at

Num 31:27

Deut 31:16–18

o. For the view that Balaam prophesied by the spirit of God, see the LXX of Num 23:6 (also Num 24:2).

p. There may be a play on the Heb. words 'wr, "fire," and 'rh, "curse."

q. Lit. "their" (eorum), for which we read terre.

r. Balaam.

s. Or "overshadowed," i.e. protected.

t. Lit. "of the dissolution," which probably reflects a confusion between the meanings of Gk. katalysis.

u. The MSS have Cham, which must be emended to Chamos in the light of Num 21:29.

v. Josephus (Ant 4.6.6 §129) says, "Take of your daughters those who are comeliest and most capable of constraining and conquering the chastity of their beholders by reason of their beauty, deck out their charms to add to their comeliness . . ."

19 a. For other testaments of Moses, see Deut 31–34, Jub 1, AsMos, and Josephus' Ant 4.7.44–48 §§302–26.

- you and abandon you and depart from your land. And he will bring upon you those who hate you, and they will rule over you, but not forever, because he will
- 3 remember the covenant that he established with your fathers. •But then you and your sons and all your generations will rise up after you and lament the day of my death and say in their heart, ‘Who will give us another<sup>b</sup> shepherd like Moses or such a judge for the sons of Israel to pray always for our sins and to be heard
- 4 for our iniquities?’<sup>c</sup> •Now I call to witness against you today heaven and earth Deut 4:26; 32:1 (for heaven will hear this, and earth will know it with its ears) that God has revealed the end of the world so that he might establish his statutes<sup>d</sup> with you and kindle among you an eternal light.<sup>e</sup> And you will remember, you wicked ones; for when I spoke to you, you answered saying, ‘All that God has said to us, we will do and hear.’ But if we transgress or grow corrupt in our ways, you will
- 5 recall this as a witness against us, and he will cut us off.’ •But know that you have eaten the bread of angels for forty years. And now behold I bless your tribes before my end comes. But you, acknowledge my toil that I have toiled for you from the time you went up from the land of Egypt.’’
- 6 On his saying these words, God spoke to him a third time, saying, ‘‘Behold you are going forth to sleep with your fathers. But this people will rise up and not seek<sup>f</sup> me, and they will forget my Law, by which I have enlightened them,
- 7 and I will abandon their seed for a time. •Now I will show you the land before you die, but you will not enter it in this age lest you see the graven images with which this people will start to be deceived and led off the path.<sup>g</sup> I will show you the place<sup>h</sup> where they will serve me for 740 years. And after this it will be turned over into the hands of their enemies, and they will destroy it, and foreigners will encircle it. And it will be on that day as it was on the day I smashed the tablets of the covenant that I drew up for you on Horeb; and when they sinned, what was written on them flew away. Now that day was the seventeenth day of the fourth month.’’<sup>i</sup>
- 8 And Moses ascended Mount Abarim<sup>j</sup> as God had commanded him, and he prayed saying, ‘‘Behold I have completed my lifetime; I have completed 120 years. And now I ask, May your mercy with your people and your pity with your heritage, LORD, be established; and may your long-suffering in your place<sup>k</sup> be
- 9 upon the chosen race because you have loved them before all others. •And you know that I was a shepherd. And when I fed the flock in the wilderness, I brought them to your mountain Horeb and then I first saw your angel on fire from the bush. But you called me from the bush, and I was afraid and turned my face. And you sent me to them and you freed them from Egypt, but their enemies you drowned in the water. And you gave them the Law and statutes in which they might live and enter as sons of men. For who is the man who has not sinned against you? And unless your patience abides, how would your heritage be established, if you were not merciful to them? Or who will yet be born without sin? Now you will correct them for a time, but not in anger.’’
- 10 Then the Lord showed him the land and all that is in it and said, ‘‘This is the land that I will give to my people.’’ And he showed him the place from which the clouds draw up water to water the whole earth, and the place from which the

b. Lit. ‘‘one.’’ There may have been an error at the level of Heb., where ’hd (one) was read as ’hr (another).

c. See AsMos 11:11, 17; 12:3, for a similar description of Moses. For a similar description of Jeremiah see 2Mac 15:14 and 2Bar 2:2.

d. Lit. ‘‘heights’’ (superexcelsa) as in 9:8.

e. For the Law as lamp see 2Bar 17:4 and 59:2.

f. Var. ‘‘and seek’’; but the sense demands a negative.

g. Ps-Philo is unique in stating that the reason why Moses was not allowed to enter the promised land was to keep him from seeing the idols by which the Israelites would be led astray.

h. Presumably, the Temple in Jerusalem.

i. m.Ta’an 4:6 has been taken as evidence that the second Temple was destroyed on the 17th of Tammuz, A.D. 70, but this is contrary to the witness of Josephus and involves many problems. It cannot be taken as proof that Ps-Philo was composed after A.D. 70.

j. The variant ‘‘Horeb’’ is certainly wrong in the light of Deut 32:49. Perhaps ‘‘Nebo’’ is to be read.

k. Heaven, or possibly the Temple or Israel.

- river takes its water, and the land of Egypt,<sup>1</sup> and the place in the firmament from which only the holy land<sup>m</sup> drinks. And he showed him the place from which the manna rained upon the people, even unto the paths of paradise. And he showed him the measurements of the sanctuary and the number of sacrifices and the signs by which they are to interpret the heaven. And he said, "These are what are prohibited for the human race because they have sinned against me." •And now your staff with which these signs were performed will be a witness between me and my people. And when they sin, I will be angry with them but I will recall your staff and spare them in accord with my mercy. And your staff will be before me as a reminder all the days, and it will be like the bow with which I established my covenant with Noah when he went forth from the ark, saying, I will place my bow in the cloud, and it will be for a sign between me and men that never again will the flood water cover all the earth.' •Now I will take you from here and glorify you with your fathers, and I will give you rest in your slumber and bury you in peace. And all the angels will mourn over you, and the heavenly hosts will be saddened. But neither angel<sup>o</sup> nor man will know your tomb in which you are to be buried until I visit the world. And I will raise up you and your fathers from the land of Egypt<sup>p</sup> in which you sleep and you will come together and dwell in the immortal dwelling place that is not subject to time. •But this heaven<sup>q</sup> will be before me like a fleeting cloud and passing like yesterday. And when the time draws near to visit the world, I will command the years and order the times and they will be shortened,<sup>r</sup> and the stars will hasten and the light of the sun will hurry to fall and the light of the moon will not remain; for I will hurry to raise up you who are sleeping in order that all who can live may dwell in the place of sanctification I showed you."
- 14 And Moses said, "If I can make another request of you, LORD; according to your great mercy be not angry with me, but show me what amount of time has passed and how much remains." •And he said to him, "There is honey, the topmost peak,<sup>s</sup> the fullness of a moment, and the drop of a cup; and time has fulfilled all things. For four and a half<sup>t</sup> have passed, and two and a half remain."
- 16 And when Moses heard this, he was filled with understanding and his appearance became glorious; and he died in glory according to the word of the Lord, and he buried him as he had promised him. And the angels mourned at his death, and the lightnings and the torches and the arrows went all together before him. And in that day the hymn of the heavenly hosts was not sung because of the passing of Moses, nor was there such a day from the one on which the LORD made man upon the earth, nor shall there be such forever, that the hymn of the angels should stop on account of men; because he loved him very much. And he buried him with his own hands on a high place and in the light of all the world.<sup>u</sup>

Joshua and the division of the land

- 1 20 And in that time God established his covenant with Joshua the son of Nun, who was left from the men who had spied out the land; for the lot went forth

l. The Samaritan Pentateuch of Deut 34:1 also mentions the land of Egypt.

m. For the expression "the holy land" see Zech 2:12; 2Bar 63:10; 4Ezra 13:48; 2Mac 1:7.

n. Lit. "themselves" (sibi); but since God is the speaker, "me" seems better. Confusion between Heb. ly (against me) and lw (against them, in a collective sense) is likely.

o. According to Philo's Vita Mosis 2:291, Moses was buried by immortal powers (i.e. angels).

p. The reference is to those Israelites who died in the land of Egypt, outside the boundaries of the holy land.

q. Perhaps read "age" (seculum) rather than "heaven" (celum).

r. For God's shortening of the days on account of the elect, see 2Bar 20:1; 54:1; 83:1 as well as Mk 13:20 (Mt 24:22).

s. The Lat. Istic mel, apex magnus might be emended to Stigma et apex manus ("An instant, the topmost part of a hand") on the basis of 4Ezra 4:48-50 and 6:9f.

t. What units are meant or what system of calculation is implied is not clear. See 28:8.

u. That Moses' death took place in public and that God buried him is also found in Josephus' Ant 4.8.48 §326 and AsMos 1:15. There may be conscious opposition to the view that Moses did not really die.

- upon them that they should not see the land because they had spoken badly about it, and on account of this that generation died. •Then God said to Joshua the son of Nun, “Why do you mourn and why do you hope in vain that Moses yet lives? And now you wait to no purpose, because Moses is dead. Take his garments of wisdom and clothe yourself, and with his belt of knowledge gird your loins, and you will be changed and become another man. Did I not speak on your behalf to Moses my servant, saying, ‘This one will lead my people after you, and into his hand I will deliver the kings of the Amorites’?”
- 3 And Joshua took the garments of wisdom and clothed himself and girded his loins with the belt of understanding. And when he clothed himself with it, his mind was afire and his spirit was moved, and he said to the people, “Behold the first generation has died in the wilderness because they have spoken against their God. And behold now, all you leaders, know today that if you proceed in the ways of your God, your paths will be made straight. •But if you do not heed his voice and you become like your fathers, your affairs will be spoiled and you yourselves will be crushed and your name will perish from the earth. And where will the words be that God spoke to your fathers? For even if the gentiles say, ‘Perhaps God has failed, because he has not freed his people’—nevertheless they will recognize that he has not chosen for himself other peoples and done great wonders with them, then they will understand that the Most Powerful does not respect persons; but because you sin through pride, so he took away his power from you and subdued you. And now rise up and set your heart to walk in the ways of your LORD, and he will guide you.” •And the people said to him, “Behold we know today what Eldad and Modad prophesied in the days of Moses, saying, ‘After Moses goes to rest, the leadership of Moses will be given over to Joshua the son of Nun.’ And Moses was not jealous but rejoiced when he heard them. And from then on all the people believed that you would exercise leadership over them and divide up the land among them in peace. And now even if there is conflict, a be strong and act manfully, because you alone are ruler in Israel.”
- 6 On hearing these words Joshua decided to send spies into Jericho. And he summoned Kenaz and Seeniamias,<sup>b</sup> his brother, the two sons of Caleb, and he said to them, “I and your father were sent by Moses in the wilderness, and we went up with ten other men. And they came back and spoke badly about the land and discouraged the heart of the people, and they and the heart of the people with them were discouraged. But I and your father alone fulfilled the word of the Lord, and behold we are alive today. And now I will send you to spy out the land of Jericho. Imitate your father, and you also will live.” •And they went up and spied out the city. And when they brought back word, the people went up and attacked the city and burned it with fire.
- 8 And after Moses died, the manna stopped descending upon the sons of Israel, and then they began to eat from the fruits of the land. And these are the three things that God gave to his people on account of three persons; that is, the well of the water of Marah for Miriam and the pillar of cloud for Aaron and the manna for Moses. And when these came to their end, these three things were taken away from them.
- 9 Now the people and Joshua fought against the Amorites. And they prevailed in battle against their enemies all the days of Joshua, and thirty-nine<sup>c</sup> kings who dwelt in the land were destroyed. And Joshua gave the land to the people by lot, to each tribe according to the lots, as it had been commanded him. •Then Caleb approached him and said, “You know that the two of us were sent by lot from Moses to go with the spies, and because we fulfilled the word of the LORD, behold we are alive today. And now, if it is acceptable in your eyes, let there be given

Josh 1:1-3

1Sam 10:6

Deut 3:28

Num 14:35

Num 11:26

Josh 1:6,9

Josh 2:1

Josh 14:6-8

Josh 6:24

Josh 5:12

Josh 12:7-24

Josh 13-23

Josh 14:6,8f.,13

20 a. Var. “even if you will waver.” On Joshua’s wavering see AsMos 11:9-19; 12:3.

b. Perhaps taken over from Mesha the son of Caleb or Shema the great-grandson of Caleb; see 1Chr 2:42f.

c. Var. “thirty-eight.” The MT of Josh 12:24 has thirty-one, while the LXX has twenty-nine.

by lot to Kenaz my son the territory of the three towers."<sup>d</sup> And Joshua blessed him, and so he did.

The prayer of Joshua and the cult at Gilgal

- 1 21 And when Joshua had grown old and was advanced in days, God said to him, "Behold you are old and advanced in days; and there is very much land, and there is no one to divide it up by lot. And after your departure this people will be intermingled with those inhabiting the land, and they will be seduced after strange gods, and I will abandon them as I testified in my speech to Moses. But you bear witness to them before you die." Josh 13:1(23:1)
- 2 And Joshua said, "You above all know, LORD, what moves the heart of the sea before it rages, and you have searched out the constellations and numbered the stars and regulated the rain; you know the number<sup>a</sup> of all generations before they are born. And now, LORD, give to your people a wise heart and a prudent mind; and when you will give those orders to your heritage, they will not sin against you and you will not be angry at them. *Are not these the words that I spoke before you, LORD, when Achan stole from the things under the ban and the people were delivered up before you, and I prayed before you and said, 'Would it not have been better for us, LORD, if we had died in the Red Sea, where you drowned our enemies, or if we had died in the wilderness like our fathers, than to be delivered into the hands of the Amorites so as to be destroyed forever?' Deut 31:16
- 3 And the word concerns us: 'No evil will befall us.' For even if our goal be taken away in death, you who are before all ages and after all ages still live, even if man, who cannot place one generation before another, says, 'God has destroyed the people whom he has chosen for himself.' And behold we will be in Sheol but you will make your word alive. And now let the fullness of your mercy sustain your people and choose for your heritage a man so that he and his offspring will rule your people. *Did not our father Jacob speak about him, saying, 'A ruler will not be lacking from Judah, nor a leader from his loins'? And now confirm those words spoken beforehand so that the nations of the earth and the tribes of the world may learn that you are eternal." *And he added, saying, "LORD, behold the days will come when the house of Israel will be like a brooding dove who on placing her young in a nest does not leave or forget her place. So also these, having repented of their deeds, will hope<sup>b</sup> for the salvation that is to be born from them."<sup>c</sup> 1Kgs 3:9
- 7 And Joshua went down to Gilgal and built an altar with very large stones and did not lift an iron tool to them as Moses had commanded. And he set up large stones on Mount Ebal<sup>d</sup> and whitened them and wrote on them very plainly the words of the Law. And he gathered all the people together and read out loud before them all the words of the Law. *And he came down with them and offered peace offerings on the altar; and all sang many praises. And they took the ark of the covenant of the LORD out of the tent of meeting with timbrels and dances and harps and lyres and lutes and every good-sounding instrument. *And the priests and Levites were going before the ark and rejoicing in song, and they put the ark in front of the altar. And they offered very many peace offerings upon it, and all the house of Israel sang together in a loud voice saying, "Behold our LORD has fulfilled what he said to our fathers: 'To your seed I will give the land in which you may dwell, a land flowing with milk and honey.' And behold he led us into the land of our enemies and delivered them broken in spirit before us, and he is Josh 7:1
- 8 Josh 7:7
- 9 Gen 49:10
- 10 Josh 8:30-35
- 11 Josh 8:31
- 12 Ps 150:3-5
- 13 Josh 8:31
- 14 Deut 11:9

d. Var. "of the tribe of towers," which is also obscure. There may be some allusion to Hebron and the three sons of Anak (Judg 1:20), where the Heb. gd (great one) and mgd (tower) have been confused.

21 a. Lit. "mind" (sensum), which we have read as censum.

b. Lit. "capture by attack" (expugnabunt), which we have emended to expectabunt.

c. The point seems to be that Israel opposes the leaders given to it by God.

d. Josh 8:33 mentions both Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal, but Ps-Philo mentions only the latter.

the God who sent word to our fathers in the secret dwelling places of souls, saying, 'Behold the LORD has done everything that he has said to us.' And truly now we know that God has established every word of his Law that he spoke to us on Horeb. And if our heart keeps to his ways, it will be good for us and for our sons after us." *And Joshua blessed them and said, "The LORD grant that your heart may abide in him all the days and you do not depart from his name. May the covenant of the LORD remain with you and not be broken, but may there be built among you a dwelling place for God, as he said when he sent you into his inheritance with joy and gladness."

The altar across the Jordan. Gilgal and Shiloh

- 1 22 And after these events when Joshua and all Israel heard that the sons of Reuben and the sons of Gad and the half tribe of Manasseh who dwelt around the Jordan had built an altar there<sup>a</sup> and were offering sacrifices<sup>b</sup> on it and had made priests for the sanctuary, all the people were very much disturbed<sup>c</sup> and came to them to Shiloh.<sup>d</sup> *And Joshua and all the elders said to them, "What are these deeds that are done among you, when we have not even yet settled in our land? Are not these the words that Moses spoke to you in the wilderness, saying, 'Beware that on entering your land you grow corrupt in your own deeds and destroy all this people'? And now why have our enemies abounded unless it is because you have corrupted your ways and made all this trouble? And so those gathered against us will crush us."
- 2 Josh 22:10-12
- 3 And the sons of Reuben and the sons of Gad and the half tribe of Manasseh said to Joshua and to all the people of Israel, "Behold now God has counted out the fruit of the womb of men and set up a light that they may see what is in darkness, because he himself knows what are in the hidden places of the abyss and the light abides with him. Now the LORD God of our fathers knows that none of us nor we ourselves have done this act out of wickedness but rather for our posterity's sake so that their heart may not be separated from the LORD our God and that they may not say to us, 'Behold our brothers who are across the Jordan have an altar and offer sacrifice on it, but we in this place do not have an altar and are far from the LORD our God; for our God is so far from our ways that we may not serve him.'" *And on saying these words, we said among ourselves, 'Let us make an altar for ourselves so that there may be zeal among us for seeking the LORD.' For some of us who stand here did this. And knowing that we are your brothers and that we stand guiltless before you, do therefore whatever is pleasing in the eyes of the LORD."
- 4 Josh 22:15-20
- 5 And Joshua said, "Is not the LORD the King more powerful than a thousand sacrifices? And why have you not taught your sons the words of the LORD that you heard from us? For if your sons had been meditating upon the Law of the LORD, their mind would not have been led astray after an altar made by hand. Or do you not know that when the people were left alone for a while in the wilderness, when Moses went up to receive the tablets, their mind was led astray and they made idols for themselves. And if the mercy of the God of our fathers had not been their guardian, all their assemblies would have been derided and all the sins of the people made public because of your foolishness. *And so now, go and dig up the altars that you have built for yourselves, and teach your sons the Law and have them meditate on it day and night, so that through all the days of their life
- 6 Josh 22:21,24f.
Dan 2:22
Josh 1:8

22 a. Lit. "for themselves"; but Josh 22:10 sm (there) suggests that ibi (there) should be read for sibi here.

b. The statement that they did offer sacrifices contradicts Josh 22:23, 26, 28, 29.

c. The Lat. conturbati sunt might also be derived from turbo and translated "were gathered together."

d. According to Josh 22:13, 15, the meeting takes place in the land of Gilead.

e. Lit. "cut off" (amputavit), which we have emended to computavit.

f. Lit. "when" (quando); but "that" (quoniam) seems necessary. Perhaps Gk. hote, "when," was misread for hoti, "because."

the LORD may be for them a witness and a judge. And God will be a witness and a judge between me and you and between my heart and your heart. For if you have done this act out of cunning because you wished to destroy your brothers, it will be avenged upon you; but if you have done it out of ignorance as you say because of your sons, God will be merciful to you." And all the people answered, "Amen, amen."

7 And Joshua and all the people of Israel offered a thousand rams on their behalf for their pardon, and they prayed for them, and he sent them away in peace. They went and destroyed the altar, and they fasted and lamented, they and their sons, and they prayed saying, "God of our fathers and you who know beforehand the heart of all men, you know that our ways were not undertaken out of wickedness before you; we have not strayed from your ways but all of us serve you, for we are the works of your hands. Now have mercy on your covenant with the sons of your servants."

8 And after this Joshua went up to Gilgal and took up the tent of meeting of the LORD and the ark of the covenant and all its vessels, and he took them<sup>s</sup> up to Shiloh and set up the Urim and Thummim there. And then Eleazar the priest was ministering at the altar. All who came from the people came together and sought the LORD; he taught them with the Urim, for with this it was revealed to them. Now at the new altar that was in Gilgal Joshua had decreed even unto this day<sup>b</sup>

Ex 28:30

9 what holocausts would be offered every year by the sons of Israel. •For until the house of the LORD was built in Jerusalem<sup>i</sup> and sacrifice offered on the new altar, the people were not prohibited from offering sacrifice there, because the Thummim and Urim revealed all things in Shiloh. And until the ark was placed in the sanctuary of the LORD by Solomon, they were offering sacrifice there until that day. Now Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest was serving in Shiloh.

The covenant of Joshua

1 23 Now Joshua the son of Nun, being a mighty man, organized the people and divided up the land among them. And while there were still enemies of Israel upon the land, the days of Joshua drew near for him to die. And he sent and summoned all Israel in all their land, along with women and children, and he said to them, "Gather before the ark of the covenant<sup>a</sup> of the LORD in Shiloh,<sup>b</sup> and I

Josh 19:51

2 will establish a covenant with you before I die." •And on the sixteenth day of the third month<sup>c</sup> all the people along with women and children gathered together before the Lord in Shiloh, and Joshua said to them, "Hear, O Israel. Behold I am establishing with you a covenant of this Law that the LORD established for your fathers on Horeb. And so wait here this night and see what God will say to

Josh 23:2

Josh 24:1f.

Deut 6:4

3 me on your behalf." •And while the people were waiting that night, the LORD appeared to Joshua in a dream vision and said to him, "According to these words I will speak to this people."

Num 22:19

4 And Joshua rose up in the morning and gathered all the people and said to them, "The LORD says this: 'There was one rock from which I quarried out your father. And the cutting of that rock bore two men whose names are Abraham and Nahor, and out of the chiseling of that place were born two women whose names are Sarah and Melcha, and they lived together across the river. And Abraham

Josh 24:2

Isa 51:1f.

5 took Sarah as a wife, and Nahor took Melcha. •And when all those inhabiting the land were being led astray after their own devices, Abraham believed in me and

Josh 24:2
Gen 11:29

g. Lit. "it" (eam); but the sense requires a plural (ea).

h. The phrase "even unto this day" implies that when the author wrote, sacrifices were still being offered in the Temple (i.e. before A.D. 70).

i. This is the only explicit mention of Jerusalem in all of Ps-Philo.

23 a. Lit. "the ark and the covenant" (arce et testamenti); originally "the ark of the covenant" (arce testamenti).

b. Ps-Philo along with the LXX of Josh 24:1 place the covenant renewal ceremony at Shiloh, while the MT has it at Shechem.

c. Jub 1:1; 15:1; 44:1-4 say that Pentecost must be observed on the fifteenth day of the third month.

was not led astray with them. And I rescued him from the flame and took him and brought him over all the land of Canaan and said to him in a vision, “To your seed I will give this land.” And that man said to me, “Behold now you have given me a wife, and she is sterile. And how will I have offspring from that rock of mine that is closed up?” •And I said to him, “Bring me a three-year-old calf and a three-year-old she-goat and a three-year-old ram, a turtledove, and a dove.” And he brought them as I commanded him. Now I sent upon him a deep sleep and encompassed him with fear and set before him the place of fire where the deeds of those doing wickedness against me will be expiated, and I showed him the torches of fire by which the just who have believed in me will be enlightened.<sup>d</sup> •And I said to him, “These will be a witness between me and you, that I will give you offspring from one who is closed up. And I will make you like the dove, because you have taken for me a city that your sons will begin to build before me. Now the turtledove I liken to the prophets who will be born from you; and the ram I liken to the wise men who will be born from you, who will enlighten your sons; but I will liken the calf to the multitude of peoples, which are made many through you; the she-goat I liken to the women whose wombs I will open and they will give birth. And these prophecies and this night will be a witness between us, that I will not go against my words.” •And I gave him Isaac and formed him in the womb of her who gave birth to him and commanded her to restore him quickly and to give him back to me in the seventh month. And therefore every woman who gives birth in the seventh month,<sup>e</sup> her son will live, because upon him I have brought my glory and revealed the new age. •And I gave to Isaac Jacob and Esau. And I gave to Esau the land of Seir as an inheritance, but Jacob and his sons went down into Egypt. And the Egyptians humbled<sup>f</sup> your fathers, as you know; but I remembered your fathers and sent Moses my friend and freed them from there, but their enemies I struck down. •And I brought them out with a high hand and led them through the Red Sea and set a cloud beneath their feet and brought them through the deep. And I brought them to the foot of Mount Sinai, and I bowed the heaven and came down and congealed the flame of fire and stopped up the channels of the abyss and impeded the course of the stars and muffled the sounds of thunder and quenched the fullness of the wind and rebuked the many clouds and stayed their movements and interrupted the storm of the heavenly hosts so as not to break my covenant. For all things were set in motion when I came down, and everything was brought to life when I arrived. And I did not let my people be scattered, but I gave them my Law and enlightened them in order that by doing these things they would live and have many years and not die. •And I brought you into this land and gave you vineyards. Cities that you did not build you inhabit. And I fulfilled my covenant that I promised your fathers. •And now, if you listen to your fathers, I will set my heart among you forever and overshadow you, and your enemies will fight against you no more. And your land will be renowned over all the earth, and your seed special among all the peoples, who will say, “Behold a faithful people! Because they believed in the LORD, therefore the LORD freed them and planted them.” And so I will plant you like a desirable vine and tend you like a lovable flock; and I will command the rain and the dew, and they will be abundant for you during your lifetime. •But also at the end the lot of each one of you will be life eternal, for you and your seed, and I will take your souls and store them in peace until the time allotted the world be complete. And I will restore you to your fathers and your fathers to you, and they will know through you that I have not chosen you in vain. These are the words that the LORD spoke to me this night.” •And all the people answered and said, “The Lord is our God, and him alone we will

Josh 24:3

Gen 12:7

Gen 15:2-5

Gen 15:9f

Gen 15:12

Gen 15:17

Josh 24:3

Josh 24:4f

Ex 14:8

Ps 18:9

Josh 24:13

Mal 3:24(4:6)

Josh 24:24,17f.

d. Cf. Abraham's vision of the judgment process in TAB 11-14.

e. According to b.RH 11a, Isaac was born in the seventh month.

f. Ps-Philo agrees with the MT, Lucian, Vulgate, and Peshitta in having "And I gave" at the beginning of Josh 24:24; with the LXX and Lucian in "and the Egyptians humbled"; and with the MT, Lucian, Vulgate, and Peshitta in mentioning Moses. The only texts having all three features are Ps-Philo and Lucian.

serve.” And all the people had a great feast that day and a renewal ceremony for twenty-eight days.

The farewell and death of Joshua

- 1 24 And after those days Joshua the son of Nun again gathered all the people and said to them, “Behold now the LORD has testified among you. Today I have called to witness against you heaven and earth, for if you continue to serve the LORD, you will be a special people to him; but if you are not willing to serve him and you wish to obey the gods of the Amorites in whose land you dwell, say this today before the LORD and go forth. But I and my household will serve the Lord.” Deut 4:26
Josh 24:15
- 2 And all the people raised their voice and wept and said, “Perhaps God has accounted us worthy; it is better for us to die in fear of him than to be blotted out from the earth.” •And Joshua the son of Nun blessed the people and kissed them and said to them, “May your words win mercy before our LORD, and may he send his angel and guard you. Be mindful of me after my death and of Moses the friend of the LORD, and let not the words of the covenant that he established with you depart from you all the days.” And he dismissed them, and they went away,<sup>a</sup> Josh 24:28
- 4 each man to his own inheritance. •Now Joshua laid himself on his bed and sent and summoned the son of Eleazar the priest and said to him, “Behold now I see with my own eyes the transgression of this people in which they are to stray; but you strengthen yourself while you are still with them.” And he kissed him and his father and his sons, and he blessed him and said, “May the LORD God of your fathers guide your ways and those of this people.” •And when he ceased speaking to them, he drew up his feet into the bed and slept with his fathers; and Gen 49:33
- 6 his sons placed their hands over his eyes. •And then all Israel gathered together to bury him. And they made a great lamentation for him, and they said this in their lamentation: Gen 46:4

“Lament over the wing of this swift eagle because he has flown away from us, and lament over the might of the lion’s cub because he has been hidden from us.

And who will go and tell the just Moses that we have had a leader like him for forty years?” And they ended their lamentation and buried him with their own hands at Mount Ephraim, and they returned each to his own tent. Josh 24:30,28

The election of Kenaz and the sinners’ confession

- 1 25 And after the death of Joshua the land of Israel was peaceful. But the Philistines were seeking to fight with the sons of Israel. And they inquired of the Lord and said, “Should we go up and fight against the Philistines?”<sup>a</sup> And God said to them, “If you go up with a pure heart, fight; but if your heart is defiled, you should not go up.” And they inquired again, “How will we know if the heart of all the people is the same?” And God said to them, “Cast lots<sup>b</sup> among your tribes, and every tribe that comes out in the lot will be set aside for another lot, and then you will know whose heart is pure and whose may be defiled.” •And the people said, “First let us appoint a leader among us, and then we will cast the lot.” And the angel of the LORD said to them, “Appoint one.” And the people said, “Whom will we appoint who is worthy, LORD?” And the angel of the LORD said to them, “Cast the lot upon the tribe of Caleb; and whoever will be revealed Judg 1:1

24 a. The expression “and they went away” is found in the LXX of Josh 24:28 but not in the MT.

b. The lot is a device to ascertain knowledge by occult means. In the OT most of the words used with “lot” suggest that it was thrown or cast. See also 49:1.

25 a. According to Judg 1:1, the Canaanites.

in that lot, he will rule over you.” And they cast the lot upon the tribe of Caleb, and the lot came out upon Kenaz,<sup>c</sup> and they made him ruler in Israel.

Josh 19:1

3 And Kenaz said to the people, “Bring to me your tribes and hear the word of the LORD.” And the people were gathered, and Kenaz said to them, “You know what Moses the friend of the LORD commanded you, not to transgress the Law to the right or to the left. And also Joshua, who was ruler after him, commanded you the same. And now behold we have heard from the mouth of the LORD that your heart is defiled, and the LORD has ordered us to cast lots upon your tribes in order that we may know whose heart has turned away from the LORD our God. Will not the fury of his wrath be brought upon the people? Now I promise you today that, even if someone from my own household comes out in the lot of sin, he will not be saved but will be burned in the fire.” And the people said, “You have proposed a good plan to carry out.” •And he brought the tribes before him, and there were found from the tribe of Judah 345 men, but from the tribe of Reuben 560, and from the tribe of Simeon 775, and from the tribe of Levi 150, and from the tribe of Issachar 665, from the tribe of Zebulun 545,<sup>d</sup> and from the tribe of Gad 380, and from the tribe of Asher 665, and from the tribe of Manasseh 480, and from the tribe of Ephraim 448, and from the tribe of Benjamin 267. And the total number of those who were found in the lot of sin was 6,110. And Kenaz led them all away and shut them up in prison until it should be known what should be done about them. •And Kenaz said, “Did not Moses the friend of the LORD speak about these people, saying, ‘Lest<sup>e</sup> there be among you a root bearing poison and bitterness’? Now blessed be the LORD, who has revealed all the schemes of these men and did not let them corrupt the people with their wicked deeds. Therefore bring the Urim and Thummim here, and summon Eleazar the priest, and let us inquire of the LORD through him.” •And then Kenaz and Eleazar and all the elders and all the assembly prayed together saying, “LORD God of our fathers, reveal to your servants the truth, for we have found those who do not believe the wonders that you did for our fathers from the time you brought them out of the land of Egypt until this day.” And the LORD answered and said, “First question those who have been found such, and let them confess their deeds that they have done with cunning, and afterward they will be burned in the fire.”

Josh 1:7; Deut 28:14

Deut 29:17(18)

7 And Kenaz brought them out and said to them, “Behold now you know how Achan<sup>f</sup> confessed when he came out in the lot and how he declared everything he had done. And now declare to us your wicked deeds and schemes. And who knows that if you tell the truth to us, even if you die now, nevertheless God will have mercy on you when he will resurrect the dead?” •And one of them, Elas by name, said, “Will not death now come upon us so that we might die in the fire? But I tell you, sir, the schemes that we have done so wickedly are not all alike. Now if you wish to seek out the plain truth, examine the men of each tribe individually; and so every bystander will know the differences among their sins.”

9 And Kenaz examined those who were from his own tribe, and they said to him, “We desired to copy and make the calf that they made in the wilderness.” And after this he examined the men of the tribe of Reuben, and they said, “We desired to sacrifice to the gods of those who inhabit the land.”<sup>g</sup> And he examined the men from the tribe of Levi, and they said, “We desired to test the tent of meeting, whether or not it is holy.” And he asked the group from the tribe of Issachar, and they said, “We desired to make inquiry through the demons of the idols, whether or not they would reveal things plainly.” And he examined the men of the tribe of Zebulun, and they said, “We desired to eat the flesh of our own

c. Kenaz is mentioned in Judg 3:9, 11, as Othniel’s father. There as elsewhere in the Jewish tradition (except in Josephus’ Ant 5.3.3 §§182–84) he is merely a name.

d. The tribes of Dan and Naphtali have been omitted in this list; cf. 10:3; 25:9.

e. Lit. “There is a strong . . .” (Fortis est); but “Lest there be” (Ne forte sit) corresponds better to Deut 29:17(18).

f. Most MSS have Achiar or the like; see 21:3.

g. The tribe of Simeon has been omitted.

children and to know whether or not God has care for these." And he examined the group from the tribe of Dan, and they said, "The Amorites have taught us what they make, so we might teach our children, and behold these things are hidden beneath Abraham's mountain<sup>h</sup> and stored beneath a heap of earth. Therefore send, and you will find them." And Kenaz sent and found them. And he examined the group from the tribe of Naphtali, and they said, "We desired to make what the Amorites make,<sup>i</sup> and behold they are hidden beneath the tent of Elas, who told you to examine us. Therefore send, and you will find them." And Kenaz

10 sent and found them. •And afterward he examined those who were left over from the tribe of Gad, and they said, "We have committed adultery with each other's wives." And then he examined the men of the tribe of Asher, who said, "We have found the seven golden idols whom the Amorites<sup>j</sup> call the sacred nymphs, and we took them along with the precious stones set upon them and hid them. And behold now they are stored beneath the summit of Mount Shechem.<sup>k</sup> Therefore send, and you will find them." And Kenaz sent men, and they removed them

11 from there. •These are the nymphs that, when called upon, showed the Amorites what to do every hour. For these are what seven sinful men devised after the flood; their names are these: Canaan, Futh, Selath, Nimrod, Elath, Desuath.<sup>l</sup> Nor will there ever be anything like this in the world graven by the hand of a craftsman or adorned with painting. Now they were set up with spikes and fixed for the worship of idols. Those precious stones, among which were crystal and prase,<sup>m</sup> were brought from the land of Havilah; and they had a pierced style. And one of 12 them was cut on the top, and another like spotted chrysoprase shone in its cutting as if it revealed the water of the deep lying beneath it. •And these are the precious stones that the Amorites had in their sanctuaries, the value of which cannot be estimated; because for those entering by night the light of a lamp was not necessary, so brightly did the natural light of the stones shine forth. But among these that one cut in the pierced style and cleansed with bristles gave off more light. For even if one of the Amorites was blind, he would go and put his eyes on it and recover sight. These Kenaz found, and he stored them in hiding until he might

13 know what to do about them. •And after this he examined the group from the tribe of Manasseh, and they said, "We merely profaned the sabbaths of the LORD." And he examined the group from the tribe of Ephraim, who said, "We desired to make our sons and daughters pass through the fire, to know if what had been said would be proved by direct evidence." And he asked the group from the tribe of Benjamin, and they said, "We desired in this time to investigate the book of the Law, whether God had really written what was in it or Moses had taught these things by himself."

Gen 2:11f.

The punishment of the sinners. The twelve stones

- 1 26 And when Kenaz had taken in all these words and written them in a book and had read them before the LORD, God said to him, "Take the men and what was found with them and all their possessions, and put them in the bed of the river Fison<sup>a</sup> and burn them with fire, so that my anger may cease from them."
- 2 And Kenaz said, "Should we burn those precious stones in the fire or consecrate them to you, because we do not have any like those?" And God said to him, "If

h. Abraham's mountain would be Mount Moriah (in Jerusalem), or perhaps we should emend to monte Abarim.

i. Since in Heb. 'bd can mean both "make" and "worship," Ps-Philo may have meant "to worship what the Amorites worship."

j. For the Amorites as wicked idolators, see 2Bar 60:1.

k. For the burial of images under an oak at Shechem, see Gen 35:4. For the hiding of sacred vessels, see 2Bar 6:7; 2Mac 2:4-8; and Josephus'

Ant 18.4.1 §85.

l. There are only six names. Desuath may be a corruption of Dedan, Suah (cf. Gen 10:7), or perhaps Ham should be inserted before Canaan.

m. A leek-green gem.

26 a. This may be the river Pishon, which goes around the land of Havilah (Gen 2:11) and is connected with precious stones. Or perhaps the Kishon. See also 27:15.

God in his own name takes anything from the things under the ban, what will man do? And so now you will take those precious stones and everything that has been found in the book; and when you have arranged for the men, you will place the stones apart with the books, because the fire cannot burn them up, and afterward I will show you how to destroy them. But the men and everything else that has been found, you will burn in the fire. And when all the people have been gathered together, you will say to them, 'So it will be done to every man whose heart has turned from his God.' • And after the fire has burned up those men, then you will place on the top of the mountain<sup>b</sup> beside the new altar the books and the precious stones that cannot be burned by fire or cut up by iron or blotted out by water. And I will command a cloud, and it will go and take dew and send it down upon the books and blot out what is written in them, because they will not be blotted out by any other water than that which has never served men. And afterward I will send forth my lightning, and it will burn up those books. • But regarding the precious stones, I will command my angel, and he will take them and go and put them in the deep of the sea. And I will order the deep, and it will swallow them up, for they cannot remain in the world, because they have been defiled by the idols of the Amorites. And I will command another angel, and he will take for me twelve stones from the same place from which these seven were taken. When you find them on the top of the mountain where you are to place these others, you will take them and set them on the ephod over against the twelve stones that Moses in the wilderness set on the breastplate; you will consecrate them according to the twelve tribes. And do not say, 'How will I know what stone to set for what tribe?' Behold I will tell you the name of the tribe along with the name of the stone, and you will find them engraved one over the other.' •

5 And Kenaz went and took everything that had been found and the men along with these things, and he gathered all the people to himself again and said to them, "Behold you have seen all the wonders that God has revealed to us until this day. And behold, when we were seeking out all those who planned evil deeds craftily against the LORD and against Israel, God revealed them to us according to their works. And now cursed be the man who would plot to do such things among you, brothers." And all the people answered, "Amen, amen." And when this had been said, he burned all those men in the fire and everything that had been found with them except the precious stones. •

6 And after this Kenaz wished to determine whether or not the stones would be burned by fire, and he cast them into the fire. And as soon as they fell into the fire, the fire was extinguished. And Kenaz took the iron sword so that they might be broken up; and when the sword touched them, its iron melted. And after this, he wished at least to blot out the books with water, but as soon as the water fell upon them it was congealed. And on seeing these happenings Kenaz said, "Blessed be God, who has done so many mighty deeds for the sons of men, and he made Adam as the first created one and showed him everything so that when Adam sinned thereby, then he might refuse him all these things (for if he showed them to the whole human race, they might have mastery over them)." • And when this was said, he took the books and the stones, and he placed them on top of the mountain beside the new altar as God had commanded him. And he took the peace offering and offered the holocausts on the new altar by placing on it 2,000 holocausts in all as a whole-burnt offering on that day; and he and all his people together celebrated a great feast.

8 And that same night God did as he had told Kenaz. He commanded a cloud, and it went and took dew from the ice of paradise and poured it on the books and blotted them out. And after this an angel came and burned them. But another angel took the precious stones and cast them into the heart of the sea, and he

b. According to 25:10 the stones were hidden under the top of Mount Shechem, but 22:8 speaks of the new altar at Shiloh.

c. Mention of the books has been omitted; see 26:3.

commanded the deep of the sea and it swallowed them up. And another angel came and took the twelve stones and put them beside that place from which he had taken the previous seven and engraved on them the names of the tribes.

9 And Kenaz arose the next morning and found those twelve stones on the top of the mountain where he himself had placed the previous seven. And the engraving
 10 on them was such that the forms of eyes were portrayed on them. •And the first stone,<sup>d</sup> on which was written the name of the tribe Reuben, was like sardius. But the second stone was cut from ivory, and there the name of the tribe of Simeon was engraved, and it seemed like topaz. And on the third stone, which was like emerald, was engraved the name of the tribe of Levi. Now the fourth stone, on which the name of the tribe of Judah was engraved, was called crystal, and it was like carbuncle. But the fifth stone was prase, and upon it was engraved “tribe of Issachar,” and it had the color of sapphire in it. And the engraving of the sixth stone (like chrysoprase) was speckled with diverse markings, and there was written 11 “tribe of Zebulun,” and it was like jasper. •Now the engraving of the seventh stone shone and showed itself as if it held the water of the deep, and there was written the name of the tribe of Dan, and it was like ligure. The eighth stone was cut out from diamond, and there was written the name of the tribe of Naphtali, and it was like amethyst. And the engraving of the ninth stone was pierced-work from Mount Ophir, and there was written “tribe of Gad,” and it was like agate. And the engraving of the tenth stone was hollowed out, and it had the appearance of stone from Teman, and there was written “tribe of Asher,” and it was like chrysolite. And the eleventh stone was taken from Lebanon, and there was written the name of the tribe of Joseph, and it was like beryl. And the twelfth stone was cut out from the height of Zion, and on it was written “tribe of Benjamin,” and it was like onyx.

Ex 28:17–20

12 And God said to Kenaz, “Take those stones and put them in the ark of the covenant of the LORD along with the tablets of the covenant that I gave to Moses on Horeb; and they will stay there until Jahel,<sup>e</sup> who will build a house in my name, will arise, and then he will set them before me upon the two cherubim,
 13 and they will be before me as a memorial for the house of Israel. •And when the sins of my people have reached full measure and enemies begin to have power over my<sup>f</sup> house, I will take those stones and the former stones<sup>g</sup> along with the tablets, and I will store them in the place from which they were taken in the beginning.<sup>h</sup> And they will be there until I remember the world and visit those inhabiting the earth. And then I will take those and many others better than they are from where eye has not seen nor has ear heard and it has not entered into the heart of man, until the like should come to pass in the world. And the just will not lack the brilliance of the sun or the moon, for the light of those most precious
 14 stones will be their light.” •And Kenaz arose and said, “Behold how much good God has made for men, but because of their sins they have been deprived of all these things. And now today I know that the race of men is weak and their life 15 should be accounted as nothing.” •And on saying this, he took the stones from the place they were laid. And when he took them, it was as if the light of the sun was poured over them and the earth glowed from their light. And Kenaz put them in the ark of the covenant of the LORD with the tablets as it had been commanded him, and they are there to this day.

Isa 64:4

d. Compare the other lists of gems in the MT and LXX of Ex 28:17–20; Philo’s LegAll 1:81; Josephus’ Ant 3.7.5 §168 and War 5.5.7 §234; Rev 21:19; and ExR 38:8.

e. Jahel should be Solomon. Ithiel is one of Solomon’s ten names in rabbinic literature. But Jahel may be the angel Jael as in ApAb 10:4, 9.

f. Lit. “their,” but the Temple is God’s house.

Perhaps Heb. byty (my house) was misread as bytw (his [the people’s] house).

g. Those already on the breastplate.

h. For the concealment of the precious stones until the last day, see 2Bar 6:4–10; 4Bar 3:7–14; AsMos 1:17; Josephus’ Ant 18.4.1 §85; 2Mac 2:4–8.

The victory of Kenaz

1 27 And after this he armed three hundred thousand men from the people, and he
 2 went up to fight the Amorites. And he struck down on the first day eight hundred 3 thousand men, and on the second day he killed five hundred thousand. *And on 4 the third day certain men of the people grumbled against Kenaz, saying, "Behold
 5 now Kenaz alone is busy at his home with his wife and his concubines, and he 6 sends us into battle so that we may be destroyed before our enemies." *And on 7 hearing these words, the servants of Kenaz reported them to him. And he 8 commanded the captain of fifty, and he brought thirty-seven<sup>a</sup> men from them who 9 had been his detractors, and he locked them up in prison. *These are their names:
 10 Leetuz, Betul, Efal, Dealma, Anaf, Desac, Besac, Getel, Anael, Anazim, Noac, 11 Cehc, Boac, Obal, Iabat, Enath, Beath, Zelut, Effer, Ecent, Deffaf, Abidan, 12 Esar, Moab, Duzal, Azat, Felac, Igat, Zefal, Eliesor, Ecar, Zebat, Sebet, Nesach, 13 Cere. And when the captain of fifty had locked them up according to the command 14 of Kenaz, Kenaz said, "When God will have worked salvation for his people by 15 my hands, then I will punish those men."

16 And on saying this, Kenaz commanded the captain of fifty, saying, "Go and 17 choose from my servants three hundred men and horses of the same number, and 18 let no one of the people know the hour in which I am to go out for battle; only 19 in whatever hour I tell you, prepare the men, so that they might be prepared even 20 at night." *And Kenaz sent emissaries as spies to see where the main part of the 21 Amorite camp was. And the emissaries went and in their spying saw that the main
 22 part of the Amorite camp was arrayed on the cliffs and that they were planning 23 to come and fight against Israel. And the emissaries returned and reported this to 24 him. And Kenaz and the three hundred horsemen with him arose by night, and 25 he took trumpets in his hand and began to go down with the three hundred men.
 26 And when he drew near to the Amorite camp, he said to his servants, "Stay here.
 27 I will go down alone to have a look at the Amorite camp. And if I blow the 28 trumpet, you may come down; but if not, you are not to look for me there."

29 And Kenaz went down alone. And before he went down he prayed and said, 30 "LORD God of our fathers, you have shown your servant the wonders that you 31 are ready to do by reason of your covenant in the last days. And now send one 32 of your wonders to your servant, and I will fight your enemies in order that they 33 and all the nations and your people may know that the LORD saves not by means 34 of a huge army or by the power of horsemen. If they but knew the sign of 35 deliverance that you will work with me today! Behold I will draw my sword out 36 of its scabbard, and it will shine in the Amorite camp. And if the Amorites 37 recognize that I am Kenaz, I know that you have delivered them into my hands.
 38 But if they do not recognize me and think I am someone else, I know that you 39 have not heard me but have delivered me to my enemies. For even if I be handed 40 over to death, I know that the LORD has not heard me because of my faults and 41 has handed me over to my enemies. But he will not destroy his inheritance by 42 my death."

43 And he went forth after he prayed, and he heard many of the Amorites saying, 44 "Rise up, and let us fight against Israel. For we know that our sacred nymphs are 45 there with them, and they will deliver them into our hands." *And Kenaz arose, 46 and the spirit of the LORD clothed him, and he drew his sword. And when its 47 light shone on the Amorites like a lightning bolt, they saw it and said, "Is not 48 this the sword of Kenaz that has wounded so many of us, and the word that we 49 were saying is correct because the sacred nymphs have delivered them into our 50 hands? And behold now this day will be a feast day for the Amorites, since our 51 enemy has been handed over to us. Now therefore rise up, and let each one gird 52 himself with his sword and begin to fight." *And when Kenaz heard their words,

<sup>a</sup> 27. There are only thirty-five names.

he was clothed with the spirit of power and was changed into another man, and he went down to the Amorite camp and began to strike them down. But the LORD sent before him the angel Ingethel,<sup>b</sup> who is in charge of hidden things and works invisibly, and another powerful angel was helping him. And Ingethel struck the Amorites with blindness so that, when each saw his neighbor, they thought they were their adversaries and they killed one another. And Zeruel,<sup>c</sup> the angel who is pre-eminent in military might, bore up the arms of Kenaz lest they should sink down.<sup>d</sup> And Kenaz killed forty-five thousand men of the Amorites. Now they

11 killed one another, and forty-five thousand men fell. • And when Kenaz had killed such a great number, he wished to release his hand from the sword, because it was stuck to the handle of the sword and could not be released, and his right hand took in the power of the sword. And then some of the Amorite survivors fled into the mountains. Now Kenaz sought how he might release his hand, and looking about, he saw with his own eyes an Amorite man in flight; and he took hold of him and said to him, "I know that the Amorites have been wiped out, and now show me how to release my hand from this sword, and I will let you go." And the Amorite said, "Go and get a man from the Hebrews, and kill him; and while his blood is still hot, put your hand beneath it; on receiving his blood, your hand will be released." And Kenaz said, "As the LORD lives, for if you had said, 'Get a man from the Amorites,' I would have gotten one of these and saved you. But because you have said 'from the Hebrews' and so reveal your hatred, your own word will be against you and, as you have said, so I will do to you." And on saying these words, Kenaz killed him; and while his blood was still hot, he put

12 his hand beneath; and on receiving it, it was released. • And Kenaz left there and took off his clothes and threw himself into the river and washed himself.<sup>e</sup> And he came up again, changed his clothes, and returned to his servants. But the LORD had sent upon them a deep sleep at night, and they slept and did not know all the deeds that Kenaz had done. And Kenaz came and woke them up from sleep, and they looked at him and saw with their own eyes, and behold the field was full of bodies; and they were astonished and looked at each other. And Kenaz said to them, "Why are you amazed? Is the way of men like the ways of God? For among men a great number prevails, but with God whatever he has decided. And so if God wished to save this people by my hands, why are you amazed? Arise, and each of you gird on your swords, and we will go home to our brothers."

13 And when all Israel heard that deliverance had been accomplished by the hands of Kenaz, all the people went out together to meet him and they said, "Blessed be the LORD who has made you leader among his people and has shown that what he had said to you was worthy of belief; and what we have heard by word, now

14 we have seen, and the work of God's word is manifest." • And Kenaz said to them, "Ask your brothers, and have them tell you how much they have toiled with me in battle." And those men who were with him said, "As the LORD lives, we did not fight nor did we even know anything except that, when we were awakened, we saw the field full of bodies." And the people answered, "Now we know that the LORD has decided to save his people; he does not need a great number but only holiness."

15 And Kenaz said to the captain of fifty who had locked up those men in prison, "Bring those men here, and we will hear their words." And when he had brought them, Kenaz said to them, "Tell me what you have seen so as to grumble about me among the people." These said, "Why do you ask us? Now therefore command us to be burned in the fire, because we will not die for this sin that we are talking about now but for that previous one in which we were implicated. Those men

2Sam 23:10

b. The name may be related to the Heb. root 'th (hide).

c. The name is probably related to the Heb. zrw' (arm, strength). See also 61:5 for what seems to be reference to the same angel.

d. Var. "lest they should perceive him"; but this is meaningless in the context and involves a wrong sequence of tenses. See Ex 17:8-13 for the motif as applied to Moses.

e. Var. "and he was washed"; this may have the notion of ritual purification connected with it.

made a confession and were burned for their sins. For then we had joined in their sins, saying, 'Perhaps the people will not find us out,' and then we escaped the people. But rightly have we been made a public example in our sins, in that we have fallen into slandering you.'" And Kenaz said, "If therefore you testify against yourselves, how will I have mercy on you?" Kenaz ordered them to be burned in the fire and threw their ashes into the bed of the river Fison,<sup>f</sup> where he had thrown those of the great number of sinners. •And Kenaz ruled the people fifty-seven<sup>g</sup> years, and there was fear among all his enemies all his days. Judg 3:8-11

The covenant of Kenaz. His vision and death

- 1 28 And when the days of Kenaz drew near for him to die, he sent and summoned all of them and Jabis and Phinehas the two prophets and Phinehas the son of Eleazar the priest,<sup>a</sup> and he said to them, "Behold now the LORD has shown to 2 me all his wonders that he is ready to do for his people in the last days. •And now I will establish my covenant with you today so that you do not abandon the LORD your God after my departure. For you have seen all the wonders that came upon those who sinned and what they declared in confessing their sins voluntarily, or how the LORD our God destroyed them because they transgressed against his covenant. Now therefore spare those of your household and your children, and stay in the paths of the LORD your God lest the LORD destroy his own inheritance."
3 And Phinehas the son of Eleazar the priest said, "If Kenaz the leader and the prophets and the elders command it, I will speak the word that I heard from my father when he was dying, and I will not be silent about the command that he commanded me while his soul was being taken away." And Kenaz the leader and the prophets said, "Speak, Phinehas. Should anyone speak before the priest who guards the commandments of the LORD our God, especially since truth goes forth
4 from his mouth and a shining light from his heart?" •And then Phinehas said, "While my father was dying, he commanded me, saying, 'These words you will say to the sons of Israel, "When you were gathered together in the assembly, the LORD appeared to me three days ago in a dream by night and said to me, 'Behold you have seen and also your father before you how much I have toiled among my people. But after your death this people will rise up and corrupt its ways and turn from my commands, and I will be very angry with them. But I will recall that time that was before the creation of the world, the time when man did not exist and there was no wickedness in it, when I said that the world would be created and those who would come into it would praise me. And I would plant a great vineyard, and from it I would choose a plant; and I would care for it and call it by my name, and it would be mine forever. When I did all the things that I said, nevertheless my plant that was called by my name did not recognize me as its planter, but it destroyed its own fruit and did not yield up its fruit to me.'" •And
5 this is what my father commanded me to say to this people.'" •And Kenaz and the elders and all the people lifted up their voices and wept with great lamentation until evening and said, "Will the Shepherd destroy his flock for any reason except that it has sinned against him? And now he is the one who will spare us according to the abundance of his mercy, because he has toiled so much among us."
6 And when they had sat down, a holy spirit came upon Kenaz and dwelled<sup>b</sup> in him and put him in ecstasy, and he began to prophesy, saying, "Behold now I see what I had not hoped for, and I perceive that I did not understand. Hear now, you who dwell on the earth, just as those staying a while on it prophesied before me and saw this hour even before the earth was corrupted, so all of you who 7 dwell in it may know the prophecies that have been fixed in advance. •Behold

Num 24:17;
Ezek 8:1(20:1f.)

f. See 26:1.

g. Josephus (Ant 5.3.3 §184) says that Kenaz ruled forty years. According to Judg 3:8-11, Cushanrishataim ruled Israel eight years and Othniel forty years (fifty, according to Lucian).

28 a. Originally there may have been only one prophet and one prophet-priest. See 48:1-3, where Phinehas is described in terms reminiscent of Elijah.

b. Lit. "dwelling."

now I see flames that do not burn, and I hear springs raised up out of a sleep for which there is no foundation, and I perceive neither the tops of the mountains nor the roof of the firmament, but everything has no appearance and is invisible and has no place whatsoever. And although my eye does not know what it sees, my heart will find what to say. *Now from the flame that I saw not burning, I saw and behold a spark came up and, as it were, laid for itself a platform. And the floor was like what a spider spins, in the pattern of a shield. And when this foundation had been set, behold<sup>c</sup> there was stirred up from that spring, as it were, boiling foam; and behold it changed itself into another foundation, as it were. Now between the upper foundation and the lower there came forth from the light of that invisible place, as it were, the images of men; and they were walking around. And behold a voice was saying, 'These will be a foundation for men, and they will dwell<sup>d</sup> in between them for 7,000<sup>e</sup> years.' *And the lower foundation was solid material, but the upper was of foam. And those who went forth from the light of the invisible place, they will be those who will have the name 'man.'<sup>f</sup> And when he will sin against me and the time will be fulfilled, the spark will be put out and the spring will stop, and so they will be transformed."

10 And when Kenaz had spoken these words, he was awakened, and his senses came back to him. But he did not know what he had said or what he had seen. But this alone he said to the people: "If the repose of the just after they have died is like this, we must die to the corruptible world so as not to see sins." And when he had said these words, Kenaz died and slept with his fathers. And the people mourned for him thirty days.

Num 23:10

Zebul

1 29 And afterward the people appointed over themselves as leader Zebul.<sup>a</sup> In that time he gathered the people together and said to them, "Behold now we know all the toil that Kenaz toiled for us in the days of his life. And now if he had sons, they should rule the people. And since he left only daughters, let them receive a greater inheritance among the people, because their father during his lifetime refused to give anything to them lest he be called avaricious and greedy."

2 And the people said, "Do everything that is pleasing in your sight." *Now Kenaz had three daughters, whose names were these: the firstborn Ethema, the second Feila, the third Zelfa. And Zebul gave to the firstborn all that was around the land of the Phoenicians, and to the second he gave the olive grove of Ekron, but to the third he gave the tilled lands that were around Ashdod. And he gave them husbands, that is, to the firstborn Elisefan, to the second Odihel, but to the third Doel. *Now in those days Zebul established a treasury for the LORD and said to the people, "Behold if anyone wishes to consecrate gold and silver to the LORD, let him bring it to the treasury of the LORD in Shiloh; only do not let anyone who has anything belonging to idols wish to consecrate it to the treasuries of the LORD, because the LORD does not want the abominations of the things under the ban lest you disturb the assembly of the LORD. For the wrath that has passed is sufficient." And all the people, from men to women, brought whatever gold and silver their heart prompted. And everything that was brought was weighed out: twenty talents of gold and two hundred and fifty of silver. *And Zebul judged the people twenty-five years. And when he had completed his time, he sent and called together all the people and said, "Behold now I am going forth to die; look to the testimonies that our predecessors have left as witnesses, and do not let your heart be like the waves of the sea. But just as a wave of the sea understands nothing except what

Judg 9:28-41

Num 36

Josh 15:46f.

2Chr 24:8;
2Kgs 12:9-16

c. Lit. "I saw."

d. Lit. "for those dwelling." The Gk. third person plural present indicative may have been read as a masculine plural participle.

e. Var. "4,000." See 19:15, whose four and a half and two and a half suggest that 7,000 is correct.

f. Var. "they will be those who dwell, and the name of that man . . ."

29 a. The name should correspond to Ehud of Judg 3:15.

is in the sea, so let your heart ponder nothing else except what belongs to the Law." And Zebul slept with his fathers, and he was buried in the tomb of his father.

Deborah

- 1 30 Then the sons of Israel did not have anyone to appoint for themselves as judge; and their heart fell away, and they forgot the promise and transgressed the ways that Moses and Joshua the servants of the LORD had commanded them, and they were led astray after the daughters<sup>a</sup> of the Amorites and served their gods. Judg 2:17
Num 25:1f.
- 2 And the LORD was angry at them and sent his angel and said, "Behold I have chosen one people from every tribe of the earth, and I said that my glory would reside in this world with it; and I sent to them Moses my servant, who would declare my laws and statutes; and they transgressed my ways. And behold now I will arouse their enemies,<sup>b</sup> and they will rule over them. And then all the people will say, 'Because we have transgressed the ways of God and of our fathers, on account of this these things have come upon us.' And a woman will rule over Judg 2:3
- 3 them and enlighten them for forty years." •And after this the LORD aroused against them Jabin the king of Hazor, and he began to attack them. And he had Sisera as the commander of his army, who had eight thousand<sup>c</sup> iron chariots, and he came to Mount Ephraim and attacked the people. And Israel feared him very Judg 4:2f.
- 4 much, and the people could not resist all the days of Sisera. •And when Israel had been badly humiliated, all the sons of Israel gathered together to the mountain of Judah<sup>d</sup> and said, "We say that we are more blessed than other nations, and behold now we have been humiliated more than all peoples so that we cannot dwell in our own land and our enemies have power over us. And now who has done all these things to us? Is it not our own wicked deeds, because we have forsaken the LORD of our fathers and have walked in these ways that have not profited us? And now come, let us fast for seven days, from man to woman and from the least to the suckling child. And who knows, perhaps God will be reconciled with his inheritance so as not to destroy the plant of his vineyard?" Jer 2:8
1Sam 15:3;
22:19
- 5 And when the people had fasted seven days and sat in sackcloth, the LORD sent to them on the seventh day Deborah, who said to them, "Can the sheep to be slaughtered give answer to its slaughterer? But both the slaughterer and the slaughtered are silent even though he is sorrowful over it. And now you were<sup>e</sup> like a flock before our LORD, and he led you into the height of the clouds and set the angels beneath your feet and established for you the Law and commanded you through the prophets and corrected you through the leaders and showed you not a few wonders; and on your account he commanded the luminaries, and they stood still in their assigned places; and when your enemies came against you, he rained down hailstones<sup>f</sup> on them and destroyed them. And Moses and Joshua and Kenaz Isa 53:7
Josh 10:11-13
- 6 and Zebul commanded you, and you did not obey them. •For while these were alive, you showed yourselves as if you were serving your God; but when these died, your heart also died. And you became like iron cast into the fire, which when made molten by the flame becomes like water, but when it comes out of the fire it reverts to its original hardness. So you also, while those who warned you burned you, you were taught<sup>g</sup> the matter; but after they have died you forget

30 a. See also 9:5; 21:1; 44:7; 45:3; cf. 18:13f. for polemics against intermarriage.

b. The MT of Judg 2:3 has "sides" (šaym) while the LXX's "narrow places" (synochai) implies šrym. Ps-Philo has interpreted šrym as "enemies."

c. Judg 4:3 has 900. Some Ps-Philo MSS have 9,000.

d. In Judg 4:5 it is the hill country of Ephraim.

e. Lit. "were born." We may have confusion here between Gk. "were born" and "were"; see also 17:3; 51:6.

f. The LXX of Josh 10:11 also has "hailstones"; the MT has "great stones."

g. Lit. "you demonstrated," which probably depends on the Gk. translator's having mistaken the Heb. hophal ("were taught") for the hiphal ("demonstrated").

7 everything. •And behold now the LORD will take pity on<sup>h</sup> you today, not because of you but because of his covenant that he established with your fathers and the oath that he has sworn not to abandon you forever. (Know, however, that after my departure you will start sinning again until the end of your days.) On account of this the LORD will work wonders among you and hand over your enemies into your hands. For our fathers are dead, but the God who established the covenant with them is life.”

The defeat and death of Sisera

- 1 31 And Deborah sent and summoned Barak, and she said to him, “Rise and gird your loins like a man, and go down and attack Sisera, because I see the stars moved from their course and ready for battle on your side. Also I see the lightning that cannot be moved from its course going forth to hinder the works of the chariots of those who glory in the might of Sisera, who is saying, ‘I am going down to attack Israel with my mighty arm, and I will divide their spoils among my servants, and I will take for myself beautiful women as concubines.’ And on account of this the LORD said about him that the arm of a weak woman would attack him and maidens would take his spoils and even he would fall into the Judg 4:6
Job 38:3(40:7)
Judg 5:20
Ex 14:25
Judg 5:30; Ex 15:9
- 2 hands of a woman.” •And when Deborah and the people and Barak went down to meet the enemies, immediately the LORD disturbed the movement of his stars. And he said to them,<sup>a</sup> “Hurry and go, for your enemies fall upon you; and confound their arms and crush the power of their heart, because I have come that my people may prevail. For even if my people have sinned, nevertheless I will have mercy on them.” And when these words had been said, the stars went forth as had been commanded them and burned up their enemies. And the number of those gathered together in one hour and slain was 90 times 97,000 men; but they did not destroy Sisera, because so it had been commanded them. Judg 4:9
Judg 5:20
- 3 And when Sisera, sitting on a horse,<sup>b</sup> had fled to save his life, Jael the wife of Heber<sup>c</sup> the Kenite adorned herself and went out to meet him; now the woman was very beautiful in appearance. And she saw him and said to him, “Go inside and take some food and sleep until evening; I will send my servants with you. For I know that you will remember me and return the favor to me.” And Sisera went in, and when he saw roses scattered on the bed, he said, “If I am saved, I will go to my mother, and Jael will be my wife.” Judg 4:15.17f.
Judg 5:28
- 4 •And after this Sisera was thirsty and said to Jael, “Get me a little water, because I am faint and my soul burns with the flame that I saw in the stars.” And Jael said to him, “Rest a little while, and then you will drink.” •And when Sisera was sleeping, Jael went out to the flock and got milk from it. And when she was milking, she said, “And now be mindful, LORD, of when you assigned every tribe or race to the earth. Did you not choose Israel alone and liken it to no animal except to the ram that goes before and leads the flock? And so look and see that Sisera has made a plan and said, ‘I will go and punish the flock of the Most Powerful One.’ And I will take from the milk of these animals to which you have likened your people, and I will go and give him to drink. And when he will have drunk, he will be off guard, and afterward I will kill him. But this will be the sign that you act along with me, LORD, that, when I enter while Sisera is asleep, he will rise up and ask me again and again, saying, ‘Give me water to drink,’ then I know that my prayer has been heard.” •And when Jael returned and came in, Sisera was awakened and said to her, “Give me a drink, because I am burning up terribly and my soul is inflamed.” And Jael took wine and mixed it with milk and gave it to him to drink. And he drank it and went to sleep. •Now Jael took a stake in her left hand Judg 4:19; 5:25
Judg 4:19

h. Var. “be reconciled with.”

c. The name Heber is absent from all the MSS but one, yet it is present in Judg 4:17. Its omission in the Lat. is easily explained by the proximity of uxor and Aber.

31 a. Here God speaks to the stars.

b. In Judg 4:17 Sisera flees on foot.

and approached him, saying, "If God will work this sign with me, I know that Sisera will fall into my hands. Behold I will throw him down on the ground from the bed on which he sleeps; and if he does not feel it, I know that he has been handed over." And Jael took Sisera and pushed him onto the ground from the bed. But he did not feel it, because he was very groggy. And Jael said, "Strengthen in me today, Lord, my arm on account of you and your people and those who hope in you." And Jael took the stake and put it on his temple and struck it with a hammer. And while he was dying, Sisera said to Jael, "Behold pain has taken hold of me, Jael, and I die like a woman." And Jael said to him, "Go, boast before your father in hell and tell him that you have fallen into the hands of a woman." And by doing this she killed him and left his body there until Barak should return. • Now Sisera's mother was named Themech,<sup>d</sup> and she sent word to her ladies, saying, "Come and let us go out together to meet my son, and you will see the daughters of the Hebrews whom my son will bring here for himself as concubines." • Now Barak returned from pursuing Sisera and was very disappointed because he had not found him. Jael went out to meet him and said, "Come, enter in, you blessed by God, and I will hand over to you your enemy whom you pursued but did not find." And Barak entered and found Sisera dead and said, "Blessed be the LORD, who sent his spirit and said, 'Into the hand of a woman Sisera will be handed over.'" And on saying these words he cut off Sisera's head and sent it over to his mother and gave a message to her, saying, "Receive your son, whom you hoped to see coming back with spoils."

Judg 4:21, 5:26
Jdt 13:7

Jdt 13:9

Jdt 13:7

Judg 4:21, 5:26

Judg 4:9

Judg 5:28–30

Judg 4:22

The hymn of Deborah

32 Then Deborah and Barak the son of Abino<sup>a</sup> and all the people together sang a hymn<sup>b</sup> to the LORD on that day, saying, "Behold the LORD has shown us his glory from on high, as he did in the height of the heavenly places when he sent forth his voice to confuse the languages of men. And he chose our nation and took Abraham our father out of the fire and chose him over all his brothers and kept him from the fire<sup>c</sup> and freed him from the bricks destined for building the tower. And he gave him a son at the end of his old age and took him out of a sterile womb. And all the angels were jealous of him, and the worshiping hosts envied him.<sup>d</sup> • And since they were jealous of him, God said to him, 'Kill the fruit of your body for me, and offer for me as a sacrifice what has been given to you by me.'<sup>e</sup> And Abraham did not argue, but set out immediately. And as he was setting out, he said to his son, 'Behold now, my son, I am offering you as a holocaust and am delivering you into the hands that gave you to me.' • But the son said to the father, 'Hear me, father. If a lamb of the flock is accepted as sacrifice to the LORD with an odor of sweetness and if for the wicked deeds of men animals are appointed to be killed, but man is designed to inherit the world, how then do you now say to me, 'Come and inherit life without limit<sup>f</sup> and time without measure'? Yet have I not been born into the world to be offered as a sacrifice to him who made me? Now my blessedness will be above that of all men, because there will be nothing like this; and about me future generations will be instructed and through me the peoples will understand that the LORD has made the soul of a man worthy to be a sacrifice.' • And when he had offered the son

Judg 5:1

Gen 11:7

Gen 22:1–10

Gen 22:9–18

d. This was also the name of Cain's wife in 2:2. Was it originally Tanaach, or was it derived from nybb or ib̄t in Judg 5:28?

32 a. Judg 5:1 has "Abinoam" and omits "and all the people." The Gk. translator may have divided the Heb. 'byr̄m into 'bynw and 'm (Abino and the people).

b. Even though what follows is called a hymn, we cannot now detect a hymnic structure.

c. See 6:3–18 for Abraham's escape from the fire.

d. On the angels' jealousy of Abraham, see GenR 55:4, where they accuse Abraham before God.

e. For Abraham's sacrifice of Isaac, see 18:5 and 40:2.

f. Lit. "life secure." There may be confusion between the Gk. apeiratos, "untroubled," and aperantos, "limitless."

upon the altar and had bound his feet so as to kill him, the Most Powerful hastened and sent forth his voice from on high saying, 'You shall not slay your son, nor shall you destroy the fruit of your body. For now I have appeared so as to reveal you to those who do not know you<sup>g</sup> and have shut the mouths of those who are always speaking evil against you. Now your memory will be before me always, and your name and his will remain from one generation to another.'

5 "And he gave Isaac two sons, both also from a womb that was closed up. And their mother was then in the third year of her marriage<sup>h</sup>; and it will not happen in this way to any woman, nor will any female so boast. But when her husband approached her in the third year, to him there were born two sons, Jacob and 6 Esau. And God loved Jacob, but he hated Esau because of his deeds. •And in their father's old age Isaac blessed Jacob and sent him into Mesopotamia, and there<sup>i</sup> he became the father of twelve sons. And they went down into Egypt and dwelt there.

7 "And when their enemies had dealt with them wickedly, the people cried out to the LORD, and their prayer was heard, and he brought them out of there and brought them to Mount Sinai and brought forth for them the foundation of understanding that he had prepared from the creation of the world.<sup>j</sup> And then when the world's foundation was moved, the heavenly hosts speeded the lightnings on their courses, and the winds brought forth noise from their chambers,<sup>k</sup> and the earth was shaken from its firmament, and the mountains and cliffs trembled in their joints, and the clouds lifted up their floods against the flame of fire so that 8 it would not burn up the world. •Then the abyss was aroused from its very springs, and all the waves of the sea gathered together. Then Paradise gave off the scent of its fruit, and the cedars of Lebanon were shaken from their roots, and the beasts of the field were moved in their dwelling places in the forest; and all his creatures came together to see the LORD establishing a covenant with the sons of Israel. And everything that the Most Powerful said, this he observed, having Moses his beloved as a witness.

9 "And when he was dying, God established for him a platform<sup>l</sup> and showed him then what we now have as witnesses, saying, 'Let there be as a witness between me and you and my people the heaven that you are to enter and the earth on which you walk until now. For the sun and the moon and the stars are servants 10 to you.' •And when Joshua arose to rule the people, on the day when he was fighting the enemies, the evening approached while the battle was still going on. Joshua said to the sun and moon, 'You who have been made servants between the Most Powerful and his sons, behold now the battle is still going on, and do you abandon your duties? Therefore stand still today and give light to his sons and darkness to his enemies.' And they did so.

11 "And now in these days Sisera arose to enslave us. And we cried out to our LORD, and he commanded the stars and said, 'Depart from your positions and burn up my enemies so that they may know my power.' And the stars came down 12 and attacked their camp and guarded us without any strain. •So we will not cease singing praise, nor will our mouth be silent in telling his wonders, because he has remembered both his recent and ancient promises and shown his saving power to us. And so Jael is glorified among women, because she alone has made straight 13 the way to success by killing Sisera with her own hands.

13 "Go, earth; go, heavens and lightnings; go, angels of the heavenly host; go and tell the fathers in their chambers of souls<sup>m</sup> and say, 'The Most Powerful has not forgotten the least of the promises that he established with us, saying, "Many wonders will I do for your sons."' And now from this day on let it be known

g. Var. "to reveal myself to those who do not know me."

h. But according to Gen 25:20 Isaac was forty when he married, and according to Gen 25:26 he was sixty when Jacob and Esau were born.

i. But Benjamin was born in the land of Israel.

j. The Law, or divine wisdom in general.

k. For the treasuries of the winds, see 1En 18:1.

l. Moses is given a platform or balcony from which he can see all.

m. For Sheol as the resting place of souls, see 1Pet 3:19; 4:6; 4Ezra 4:35; 2Bar 21:23; 42:7f.

- that, whatever God has said to me, he will do; these things he will do, even if 14 man delays in praising God. •But you, Deborah, sing praises, and let the grace of the holy spirit awaken in you, and begin to praise the works of the LORD, because there will not again arise such a day on which the stars will band together<sup>n</sup> and attack the enemies of Israel as was commanded them. And from this hour, if Israel falls into distress, it will call upon those witnesses along with these servants, and they will form a delegation to the Most High, and he will remember that day 15 and send the saving power of his covenant. •And you, Deborah, begin to tell what you saw in the field, how the people were walking about and going forth in safety and the stars fought for them. Rejoice, earth, over those dwelling in you, because the knowledge<sup>o</sup> of the LORD that builds a tower<sup>p</sup> among you is present.
 Not unjustly did God take from you the rib of the first-formed,<sup>q</sup> knowing that from his rib Israel would be born. Your forming will be a testimony of what the 16 LORD has done for his people. •Wait, you hours of the day, and do not wish to hurry, in order that we may declare what our mind can bring forward, for night will be upon us. It will be like the night when God killed the firstborn of the 17 Egyptians on account of his own firstborn. •And then I will cease my hymn, for the time is readied for his just judgments. For I will sing a hymn to him in the renewal of creation. And the people will remember his saving power, and this will be a testimony for it. And let the sea with its abyss be a witness, because not only has God dried it up before our fathers, but also he has diverted the stars<sup>r</sup> from their positions and attacked our enemies.” 18 And when Deborah made an end to her words, she along with the people went up to Shiloh, and they offered sacrifices and holocausts, and they sang to the accompaniment of the trumpets. And when they were singing and the sacrifices had been offered, Deborah said, “And this will be as a testimony of trumpets between the stars and their LORD.” And Deborah came down from there and judged<sup>s</sup> Israel forty years.

Gen 2:21f.

Ex 12:29

Ex 14f.
Judg 5:20

Judg 5:31

The farewell and death of Deborah

- 1 33 And when the days of her death drew near, she sent and gathered all the people and said to them, “Listen now, my people. Behold I am warning you as a woman of God<sup>a</sup> and am enlightening you as one from the female race; and obey 2 me like your mother and heed my words as people who will also die. •Behold I am going today<sup>b</sup> on the way of all flesh, on which you also will come. Only direct your heart to the LORD your God during the time of your life, because after your 3 death you cannot repent of those things in which you live. •For then death is sealed up and brought to an end, and the measure and the time and the years have returned their deposit. For even if you seek to do evil in hell after your death, you cannot, because the desire for sinning will cease and the evil impulse will lose its power,<sup>c</sup> because even hell will not restore what has been received and deposited to it unless it be demanded by him who has made the deposit to it. Now therefore, my sons, obey my voice; while you have the time of life and the light 4 of the Law, make straight your ways.” •And while Deborah was saying these words, all the people raised up their voice together and wept and said, “Behold now, Mother, you will die, and to whom do you commend your sons whom you

Josh 23:14

n. Lit. “announce,” which in Heb. would be gydw; but better sense is had by assuming an original ygdw, “will band together,” as in Ps 94:21.

o. Var. “assembly.”

p. Lit. “burns incense” (thurificat); but “builds a tower” (turrificat) may be better in view of 32:1.

q. Adam.

r. Most MSS have the incorrect castra, “camps,” instead of astra.

s. Comparison with the Heb. of Judg 5:31 suggests a possible confusion between “and she judged” (wtšpt) and “it was quiet” (wtšqt); see Ps-Philo 33:6.

33 a. The expression “woman of God” seems to be the feminist counterpart of the common expression “man of God”; see also “the bosom of her mothers” in 40:4.

b. Reading “today” (hodie) rather than “to die” (mori) on the basis of Josh 23:14.

c. The idea that the evil impulse ceases after death is unique to Ps-Philo.

are leaving? Pray therefore for us, and after your departure your soul will be 5 mindful of us forever.” •And Deborah answered and said to the people, “While a man is still alive he can pray for himself and for his sons, but after his end he cannot pray or be mindful of anyone. Therefore do not hope in your fathers.<sup>d</sup> For they will not profit you at all unless you be found like them. But then you will be like the stars of the heaven,<sup>e</sup> which now have been revealed among you.”
 6 And Deborah died and slept with her fathers and was buried in the city of her fathers. And the people mourned for her seventy days, and while they were mourning for her, they said these words as a lamentation:

“Behold there has perished a mother from Israel, and the holy one who exercised leadership in the house of Jacob.
 She firmed up the fence about her generation, and her generation will grieve over her.”

Judg 5:7

And after her death the land had rest for seven<sup>f</sup> years.

Judg 5:31

Aod the magician

1 34 And in that time there arose a certain Aod<sup>a</sup> from the sanctuaries of Midian, and this man was a magician, and he said to Israel, “Why do you pay attention to your Law? Come, I will show you something other than your Law.” And the people said, “What will you show us that our Law does not have?” And he said to the people, “Have you ever seen the sun by night?” And they said, “No.”
 And he said, “Whenever you wish, I will show it to you in order that you may know that our gods have power and do not deceive those who serve them.” And 2 they said, “Show it.” •And he went away and worked with his magic tricks and gave orders to the angels who were in charge of magicians, for he had been 3 sacrificing to them for a long time. •Because in that time before they were condemned, magic was revealed by angels and they would have destroyed the age without measure;<sup>b</sup> and because they had transgressed, it happened that the angels did not have the power; and when they were judged, then the power was not given over to others. And they do these things by means of those men, the 4 magicians who minister to men, until the age without measure comes. •And then by the art of magic he showed to the people the sun by night. And the people were amazed and said, “Behold how much the gods of the Midianites can do, 5 and we did not know it.” •And God wished to test if Israel would remain in its wicked deeds, and he let them<sup>c</sup> be, and their work was successful. And the people of Israel were deceived and began to serve the gods of the Midianites. And God said, “I will deliver them into the hands of the Midianites, because they have been deceived by them.” And he delivered them into their hands, and the Midianites began to reduce Israel to slavery.

Judg 6:1-6

Judg 6:7-10

Judg 6:1

The call of Gideon

1 35 Now Gideon was the son of Joash; he was the most powerful man among all his brothers. And when it was summertime, he came to beat out the sheaves he had and to escape the attacking Midianites by hiding himself in the mountain.
 And behold the angel of the Lord met<sup>a</sup> him and said to him, “From where have 2 you come, and where is your destination?” •He said to him, “Why do you ask me from where do I come, for distress has encompassed me? Israel has fallen into

Judg 6:11f., 15

Judg 19:17

d. What is being disputed is the power of the dead to intercede for the living. See also 2Bar 85:12. Elsewhere in Ps-Philo (e.g. 35:3) the merits of Israel's fathers have power.

e. On the life of the just after death as astral immortality, see Dan 12:2f.; 1En 104:2, 6; AsMos 10:9.

f. Judg 5:31 has “forty” years.

34 a. The episode of Aod is unique to Ps-Philo.

b. The age to come, the eschatological age.

c. The wicked angels.

35 a. Judg 6:12 has “appeared.” Heb. wyqr’ (met) may have been confused with wyr’ (appeared).

distress; they have been delivered into the hands of the Midianites. And where are the wonders that our fathers described to us, saying, "The LORD has chosen Israel alone before all the peoples of the earth"? And behold now he has delivered us up and forgotten the promises that he told our fathers. For we would prefer to be handed over to death once and for all than for his people to be punished thus over a period of time." *And the angel<sup>b</sup> of the Lord said to him, "You have not been delivered up without reason, but your own schemes have done these things to you; because, as you have abandoned the promises that you have received from the LORD, these evils<sup>c</sup> have found you out; and you have not been mindful of the commandments of God that those who were before you commanded you, so that you have come into the displeasure of your God. But he will have mercy, as no one else has mercy, on the race of Israel, though not on account of you but on account of those who have fallen asleep." *And now come; I will send you, and you will free Israel from the hand of the Midianites; for the LORD says these words: "Even if Israel is not just, nevertheless because the Midianites are sinners, though I recognize the wickedness of my people, I will forgive them and afterward I will rebuke them because they have acted wickedly. But for the present I will take my vengeance upon the Midianites." *And Gideon said, "Who am I and what is the house of my father that I should go up against the Midianites for battle?" And the angel said to him, "Perhaps you think that as the way of men is, so the way of God is. For men look for the glory of the world and riches, but God for the straight and good and for meekness. Now therefore go and gird your loins, and the Lord will be with you. For he has chosen you to take vengeance upon his enemies as he commanded you." *And Gideon said to him, "May my Lord not be angry that I should say a word. Behold Moses the first of all the prophets asked the LORD for a sign, and it was given to him. But who am I, unless perhaps the LORD has chosen me? May he give me a sign so that I may know that I am being guided." And the angel of the Lord said to him, "Run and get for me water from that lake and pour it on that rock, and I will give you a sign." And he went away and got it as he commanded him. *And the angel said to him, "Before you pour water on the rock, ask what you wish to be made from it, either blood or fire, or that it not appear at all." And Gideon said, "Let it become half blood and half fire." And Gideon poured water on the rock. And when he had poured it out, it became half flame and half blood, and they were both mixed together, that is, the fire and the blood; and the blood did not extinguish the fire nor did the fire consume<sup>e</sup> the blood. And Gideon saw these happenings and sought other signs, and they were given to him. Are they not written in the Book of Judges?

The victory of Gideon. His sin and death

36 And Gideon took three hundred<sup>a</sup> men and went out and came to the outskirts of the camp of Midian and heard each man speaking to his neighbor, saying, "You will see confusion beyond reckoning caused by the sword of Gideon coming upon us because God has delivered into his hands the camp of the Midianites and he is about to destroy us utterly, that is, even mother along with children, because our sins have reached full measure as even our own gods have shown us and we did not believe them. And now let us rise up and take care for our own lives and flee." *And as soon as Gideon heard these words, he put on the spirit of the Lord<sup>b</sup> and was strengthened and said to the three hundred men, "Rise up, let each one of you gird on his sword, because the Midianites have been delivered

b. In the LXX or Judg 6:14 as in Ps-Philo an angel speaks; in the MT God speaks.

c. The expression "these evils" agrees with the LXX, Lucian, and Vetus Latina of Judg 6:13.

d. The idea that God will have mercy on Israel because of those who have died is also found in 2Mac 8:15.

e. Most MSS have "shook off" (excussit), but "consume" (exussit) must be correct.

36 a. Judg 7:19 has "one hundred."

b. Or perhaps read "the spirit of the LORD clothed him" by emending induit spiritum to induit spiritus; see Judg 6:34.

into our hands." And the men went down with them. And he drew near and began to fight, and they blew the trumpets and cried out together and said, "The sword of the Lord<sup>c</sup> is upon us." And they killed about 120,000 men of the Midianites, and the rest of the Midianites fled. •And after these events Gideon came and gathered the people of Israel and said to them, "Behold the LORD has sent me to fight your battle, and I have gone out as he commanded me. And now I make one request of you; do not turn your face away. Let each of you give me the golden bracelets<sup>d</sup> that you have on your hands." And Gideon spread out a garment, and each of them threw in his bracelets. And all were weighed, and their weight was found to be twelve talents.<sup>e</sup> And Gideon took them and made idols from them and worshiped them. •And God said, "One course is fixed, that I should not rebuke Gideon during his lifetime, because, when he destroyed the sanctuary of Baal, then they all said, 'Baal will avenge himself.' Now if I should chastise him because he has acted wickedly against me, you may say, 'Not God, but Baal has chastised him, because he sinned against him first.' And so now Gideon will die at a good old age so that they may have nothing<sup>f</sup> to say. But afterward, when Gideon will have died, I will chastise him once and for all, because he has offended me." And Gideon died at a good old age and was buried in his own city.<sup>g</sup>

Judg 7:19f.

Judg 8:10

Judg 8:24–27

Judg 6:25–32

Judg 8:32

Abimelech

37 And he had a son by a concubine. Abimelech<sup>a</sup> killed all<sup>b</sup> his brothers, for he wished to be leader of the people. •Then all the trees of the field came together to the fig tree<sup>c</sup> and said, "Come, reign over us." And the fig tree said, "Was I born for kingship or rulership over the trees? Or was I planted so as to reign among you? And so as I cannot reign over you, so Abimelech will not get a long tenure in his rule." And afterward the trees came together to the vine and said, "Come, reign over us." And the vine said, "I was planted to give sweetness to men. Come and preserve the fruit of my vineyard. But as I cannot reign over you, so is the blood of Abimelech demanded from you." And then the trees came to the apple tree<sup>d</sup> and said, "Come, reign over us." And it said, "It has been commanded to me to provide sweet-smelling fruit for men. So I cannot reign over you; and Abimelech will die by stoning." •And then the trees came to the bramblebush and said, "Come, reign over us." And the bramblebush said, "When the thorn was born, truth shone forth in the form of a thorn.<sup>e</sup> And when the first-formed<sup>f</sup> was condemned to death, the earth was condemned to bring forth thorns and thistles. And when the truth enlightened Moses, it enlightened him by means of a thicket of thorns. And now it will be that the truth may be heard by you from me. And if you have spoken truthfully to the bramblebush that it really should reign over you, sit in its shadow. But if hypocritically, let the fire go forth and devour<sup>g</sup> and eat up the trees of the field, for the apple tree signifies<sup>h</sup> the chastisers, and the fig tree signifies the people, and the vine signifies those who were before us. •And now the bramblebush will be for you in this hour like Abimelech, who killed his brothers unjustly and wishes to rule among you. If

Judg 9:1

Judg 9:5,18

Judg 9:10f.

Judg 9:12f.

Ezek 3:18

Judg 9:14

Gen 3:18

Ex 3:2

Judg 9:15

c. The var. "the sword of the LORD and Gideon" is probably due to an assimilation to Judg 7:20.

d. In Judg 8:24–27 it is "earrings."

e. In Judg 8:26 it is 1,700 shekels of gold.

f. The phrase "they may have nothing" is inserted in only one MS, but some such phrase is necessary for sense.

g. The phrase "in his own city" is found in the LXX and Lucianic MSS of Judg 8:32 but not in the MT.

37 a. The proper name is missing in all but one MS. Some other material seems to be missing here also.

b. Only Ps-Philo and the Lucianic MSS of Judg 9:5 have "all."

c. The olive tree mentioned in Judg 9:8f. is omitted.

d. Var. "myrtle tree." Neither an apple tree nor a myrtle tree is mentioned in Judg 9:8–15.

e. To what Ps-Philo is alluding is not clear.

f. Adam.

g. Perhaps the Lat. at one point had "let the fire go forth from the bramblebush," but then de rubo (from the bramblebush) was corrupted into devoret. See Judg 9:15 and Ps-Philo 37:4.

h. Lit. "was made for."

Abimelech be worthy of them whom he wishes to rule for himself, let him be like the bramblebush that was made to rebuke the foolish among the people.”

And the fire went forth from the bramblebush and ate up the trees that were in the fields.<sup>i</sup> •After this Abimelech ruled the people one year and six months,<sup>j</sup> and he died when a woman threw down upon him half a millstone.<sup>k</sup>

Judg 9:15
Judg 9:22
Judg 9:53

Jair

38 Jair<sup>a</sup> built a sanctuary to Baal, and he deceived the people, saying, “Everyone who will not sacrifice to Baal will die.” And when all the people were sacrificing, only seven men were not willing to sacrifice. Their names are these: Defal, Abiesdrel, Getalibal, Selumi, Assur, Ionadali, Memihel.<sup>b</sup> •They answered and said to Jair, “Behold we are mindful of the commandments that those who were before us and Deborah our mother commanded us, saying, ‘See that you do not turn your heart to the right or to the left, but pay attention to the Law of the LORD day and night.’ And now why do you corrupt the people of the LORD and deceive them, saying, ‘Baal is God; let us adore him’? And now if he is God as you say, let him speak as God and then we will sacrifice to him.” •And Jair said, “Burn them in the fire, because they have blasphemed against Baal.” And his servants took them to burn them in the fire. And when they had put them in the fire, Nathaniel,<sup>c</sup> the angel who was in charge of fire, came forth and extinguished the fire and burned the servants of Jair. But he let the seven men escape in such a way that none of the people saw them, because he had struck the people with blindness. •And when Jair came to the place, he was burned with the fire; and before he burned him up, the angel of the LORD said to him, “Hear the word of the LORD before you die. And these words the LORD says: ‘I have raised you up from the land<sup>d</sup> and appointed you leader over my people, but you rose up and corrupted my covenant and deceived them and sought to burn up my servants with the flame because they chastised you. Those who were burned with corruptible fire, now are made alive with a living fire and are freed; but you will die, says the LORD, and in the fire in which you will die there you will have a dwelling place.’”<sup>e</sup> And afterward he<sup>f</sup> burned him up, and he came to the pillar<sup>g</sup> of Baal and demolished it and burned Baal along with the people who stood by,<sup>h</sup> that is, a thousand men.

Judg 10:3–6

Deut 5:32; Josh 1:7f.

1Kgs 18:24

Jephthah

39 And after these events the sons of Ammon came and began to attack Israel, and they took many of their cities. And the people were in distress, and they gathered together in Mizpah and were saying, each one to his neighbors, “Behold now we look at the distress that encompasses us, and the LORD has departed from us and now is not with us, and our enemies have captured our cities, and there is no leader who may go in and go out before us. Now therefore let us see whom we may appoint over us to fight our battle.”

2 Now Jephthah the Gileadite was a mighty warrior. His brothers who thrust him

Judg 10:9

Judg 10:17f.

Judg 11:1–3

i. Perhaps the sentence should be in the future or jussive and included within the quotation as in Judg 9:15.

j. Judg 9:22 has “three years.”

k. There seems to be a gap of some sort between the end of ch. 37 and the beginning of ch. 38.

38 a. Most MSS omit the proper name, but the rest of the story makes clear who is meant.

b. For a similar story, see 6:3–18 as well as Dan 3 and 2Mac 7.

c. An angel named “Nathaniel” does appear in rabbinic traditions but is not described as being in charge of fire.

d. The var. “land of Egypt” may be merely the mechanical repetition of a biblical cliché or may be making some point about the origin of idolatrous worship outside the land of Israel.

e. For the fire as the dwelling place of the wicked, see 2Bar 44:15; 48:39, 43; 59:2; 64:7; and 85:13.

f. The angel of the LORD.

g. The reference to the pillar is sudden. Perhaps the Heb. mšbt (pillar) has been misread for mzbt (altar).

h. Perhaps his devotees.

- out from his own land envied him,<sup>a</sup> and he went and dwelt in the land of Tob.
- 3 And worthless<sup>b</sup> men gathered around him and spent their time with him. •And when Israel was being attacked, they came to the land of Tob to Jephthah and said to him, "Come, rule over the people. For who knows if you have been kept safe to these days or freed from the hands of your brothers in order that you may rule your people in this time?" •And Jephthah said to them, "Does love so return after hatred, or does time conquer all things, for you have driven me out of my land and from the house of my father and now you have come to me when you are in distress?" And they said to him, "If the God of our fathers, when we had sinned against him and he had delivered us up before our enemies and we were hard pressed by them, was not mindful of our sins but freed us, why do you, mortal man, want to remember the iniquities that happened to us in the time of our distress? And therefore let it not be so before you, sir." •And Jephthah said, "God can be not mindful of our sins, for he has the time and place where he as God may restrain himself out of his long-suffering; but I, a mortal man and made from the ground into which I will return, where will I expel my wrath and the injury that you have done me?" And the people said to him, "Let the dove<sup>c</sup> to which Israel has been compared teach you, because when her young are taken from her, still she does not depart from her place, but she puts away the injury done her and forgets it as if it were in the depth of the abyss." •And Jephthah arose and came with them and gathered all the people and said to them, "You know that, while our leaders were still alive, they warned us to follow our Law. And Ammon and his sons turned the people from their way in which they walked, and they served foreign gods who would destroy them. Now therefore set your hearts on the Law of the LORD your God, and let us beg him together, and so we will fight against our enemies, trusting and hoping in the LORD that he will not deliver us up forever. Even if our sins be overabundant, still his mercy will fill the earth."<sup>d</sup> •And all the people prayed together, men and women and children. And when they prayed, they said, "Look, LORD, upon the people that you have chosen, and may you not destroy the vine that your right hand has planted, in order that this nation, which you have had from the beginning and always preferred and for which you made dwelling places and brought into the land you promised, may be for you as an inheritance; and may you not hand us over before those who hate you, LORD."
- 8 And God repented of his wrath and strengthened the spirit of Jephthah. And he sent a messenger to Getal<sup>e</sup> the king of the sons of Ammon and said, "Why are you troubling our land and taking my cities? Or are you sad that Israel did not take you first so that you might scatter those inhabiting the land? And now return to me my cities, and my anger will cease from you. But if not, know that I will come up to you and return to you past offenses and repay your wickednesses on your own head. Or am I not mindful that you were deceitful to the people of Israel in the wilderness?" And the ambassadors of Jephthah gave these messages to the king of the sons of Ammon. •And Getal said, "Does Israel think highly of itself in so far as it has taken possession of the land of the Amorites? And therefore you say, 'Know that now I will take other cities from you and return your wickedness to you and avenge the Amorites whom you have harmed.'" •And Jephthah sent another message to the king of the sons of Ammon, saying, "Truly I have learned that God has brought you forward that I may destroy you unless you cease from the iniquity by which you wish to harm Israel. And so I will come

Judg 11:5f.

Esth 4:14

Judg 11:7

Judg 11:11

Judg 10:13

Judg 11:29

Judg 11:12

Judg 11:14

39 a. Lit. "when he envied his brothers"; but according to Judg 11:2 Jephthah's brothers envied him. Perhaps in the original Heb. bqn'ti 'hyw (in the envy of his brothers) the word 'hyw was taken as an objective rather than subjective genitive.

b. Lit. "vagrant" (vagi). We have emended to "worthless" (vani) on the basis of Judg 11:3.

c. Israel is compared to the dove in 23:7; 4Ezra

5:26, and several rabbinic texts.

d. See Rom 5:20.

e. Perhaps this is "Zenon, surnamed Cotylas, who was ruler of the city of Philadelphia" (Ammon) in Josephus' Anr 13.8.1 §235 (also War 1.2.4 §60). If this identification of Getal with Cotylas is correct, then we could establish 135 B.C. as the earliest possible date of composition for Ps-Philo.

to you and show myself to you. For they are not gods, as you say they are, who have given you the inheritance that you possess; but because you have been deceived by following after stones, fire will come after you for vengeance.' Judg 11:24

- 10 And because the king of the sons of Ammon would not listen to the voice of Jephthah, Jephthah rose up and armed all the people to go out and fight in battle array, saying, "When the sons of Ammon have been delivered into my hands and I have returned, whoever meets me first on the way will be a holocaust to the Lord." • And God was very angry and said, "Behold Jephthah has vowed that he will offer to me whatever meets him first on the way; and now if a dog should meet Jephthah first, will the dog be offered to me?<sup>f</sup> And now let the vow of Jephthah be accomplished against his own firstborn, that is, against the fruit of his own body, and his request against his only-begotten. But I will surely free my people in this time, not because of him but because of the prayer that Israel prayed." Judg 11:28
Judg 11:30f.
Judg 11:31

The daughter of Jephthah

- 1 40 And Jephthah came and attacked the sons of Ammon, and the Lord delivered them into his hands, and he struck down sixty<sup>a</sup> of their cities. And Jephthah returned in peace, and women came out to meet him in song and dance. And it was his only daughter who came out of the house first in the dance to meet her father. And when Jephthah saw her, he grew faint and said, "Rightly was your name called Seila,<sup>b</sup> that you might be offered in sacrifice. And now who will put my heart in the balance and my soul on the scale? And I will stand by and see which will win out, whether it is the rejoicing that has occurred or the sadness that befalls me. And because I opened my mouth to my Lord in song with vows,<sup>c</sup> I cannot call that back again." • And Seila his daughter said to him, "And who is there who would be sad in death, seeing the people freed?<sup>d</sup> Or do you not remember what happened in the days of our fathers when the father placed the son as a holocaust,<sup>e</sup> and he did not refuse him but gladly gave consent to him, and the one being offered was ready and the one who was offering was rejoicing?" Judg 11:32-35
Judg 11:36
Gen 22
- 3 And now do not annul everything you have vowed, but carry it out.<sup>f</sup> Yet one request I ask of you before I die, a small demand I seek before I give back my soul: that I may go into the mountains and stay in the hills and walk among the rocks, I and my virgin companions, and I will pour out my tears there and tell of the sadness of my youth. And the trees of the field will weep for me, and the beasts of the field will lament over me. For I am not sad because I am to die nor does it pain me to give back my soul, but because my father was caught up in the snare of his vow; and if I did not offer myself willingly for sacrifice, I fear that my death would not be acceptable or I would lose my life in vain. These things I will tell the mountains, and afterward I will return." And her father said, Judg 11:36-38
- 4 "Go." • And Seila the daughter of Jephthah, she and her virgin companions, went out and came and told it to the wise men of the people, and no one could respond to her word.<sup>g</sup> And afterward she came to Mount Stelac,<sup>h</sup> and the LORD thought of her by night and said, "Behold now I have shut up the tongue of the wise men of my people for this generation so that they cannot respond to the daughter of Jephthah, to her word, in order that my word be fulfilled and my plan that I Judg 11:38

f. In b. Ta'an 4a there is speculation that Jephthah might have met an unclean thing.

40 a. Judg 11:33 has twenty cities.

b. The name of Jephthah's daughter is given as Seila only in Ps-Philo. In Heb. the root šl means "ask," and so Seila is the one "asked for," or "requested."

c. Lit. "in the song of vows."

d. The same motif is found in Josephus' Ant 5.7.10 §265.

e. See 18:5 and 32:2-4 for a similar description of the sacrifice of Isaac.

f. According to the rabbis Jephthah's vow was invalid.

g. A rabbinic tradition says that Jephthah's daughter was sacrificed because the scholars forgot that his vow was invalid.

h. Perhaps connected with the Heb. šlg (snow) or the Aram. tlg (snow). TargOnk of Deut 3:9 describes Mount Hermon as the "mountain of snow."

thought out not be foiled. And I have seen that the virgin is wise in contrast to her father and perceptive in contrast to all the wise men who are here. And now let her life be given at his request, and her death will be precious before me Ps 116:15 always, and she will go away and fall into the bosom of her mothers.<sup>i</sup>

5 And when the daughter of Jephthah came to Mount Stelac, she began to weep, and this is her lamentation that she lamented and wept over herself before she departed. And she said, “Hear, you mountains, my lamentation;

and pay attention, you hills, to the tears of my eyes;
and be witnesses, you rocks, of the weeping of my soul.

Behold how I am put to the test!

But not in vain will my life be taken away.

May my words go forth in the heavens, and my tears be written in the firmament!

That a father did not refuse the daughter whom he had sworn to sacrifice, that a ruler granted that his only daughter be promised for sacrifice.

6 But I have not made good on my marriage chamber, and I have not retrieved my wedding garlands.

For I have not been clothed in splendor while sitting in my woman’s chamber,<sup>j</sup>

And I have not used the sweet-smelling ointment,<sup>k</sup>

And my soul has not rejoiced in the oil of anointing that has been prepared for me.

O Mother, in vain have you borne your only daughter, because Sheol has become my bridal chamber,
and on earth there is only my woman’s chamber.

And may all the blend of oil that you have prepared for me be poured out, and the white robe that my mother has woven, the moth will eat it.

And the crown of flowers that my nurse plaited for me for the festival, may it wither up;

and the coverlet that she wove of hyacinth and purple in my woman’s chamber, may the worm devour it.

And may my virgin companions tell of me in sorrow and weep for me through the days.

7 You trees, bow down your branches and weep over my youth,
You beasts of the forests, come and bewail<sup>l</sup> my virginity, for my years have been cut off and the time of my life grown old in darkness.”

8 And on saying these things Seila returned to her father, and he did everything Judg 11:39f. that he had vowed and offered the holocausts. Then all the virgins of Israel gathered together and buried the daughter of Jephthah and wept for her. And the children of Israel made a great lamentation and established that in that month on the fourteenth day of the month they should come together every year and weep for Jephthah’s daughter for four days. And they named her tomb in keeping with 9 her name: Seila. •And Jephthah judged the sons of Israel ten<sup>m</sup> years, and he died Judg 12:7 and was buried with his fathers.

i. The phrase “bosom of her mothers” seems like a feminist counterpart to the more usual “bosom of his fathers”; see also “woman of God” in 33:1.

j. The MSS have “sitting on my knees” (sedens in genua mea) or “sitting in my virginity” (sedens in virginitate mea). We emend to sedens in genicio meo (sitting in my woman’s chamber) where genicium is a form of gynaecium, the opposite of the “bridal chamber.” The other two uses of the term in this section are also emendations.

k. Lit. “Moses.” In Lat. there may have been confusion between Moysi (Moses) and moscho: confusion at the Heb. level is also possible.

l. Lit. “trample” (conculcate), which we have emended to “bewail” (conulcate).

m. The MT has six, the LXX sixty.

Abdon and Elon

- 1 41 And after him Abdon the son of Hillel the Pirathonite<sup>a</sup> arose as judge in Israel, and he also judged the sons of Israel eight years. And in his days the king of Moab sent messengers to him, saying, "Behold now you know that Israel has taken my cities, and now return them as a repayment." And Abdon said, "Have you not learned from what happened to the sons of Ammon, unless perhaps it is so that the sins of Moab have reached full measure?" And Abdon sent and took from the people twenty thousand men and came out against Moab and attacked them and killed forty thousand men of them, but the rest fled before him. And Abdon returned in peace, and he offered holocausts and sacrifices to his LORD. Judg 12:13-15
- 2 And he died and was buried in Efrata,<sup>b</sup> his own city. •And in that time the people chose Elon and appointed him as judge for them. And he judged Israel twenty<sup>c</sup> years. And in those days they attacked the Philistines and took from them twelve cities. And Elon died and was buried in his own city. •But the sons of Israel forgot the LORD their God and served the gods of those inhabiting the land; and on account of this they were handed over to the Philistines and served them forty years. Judg 12:11f.
- 3 And the LORD heard her voice and sent his angel to her in the morning, and he said to her, "You are the sterile one who does not bring forth, and you are the womb that is forbidden so as not to bear fruit. But now the LORD has heard your voice and paid attention to your tears and opened your womb. And behold Judg 13:1

The announcement of Samson's birth

- 1 42 Now there was a man from the tribe of Dan whose name was Manoah, son of Edoc, son of Odon, son of Eriden, son of Fadesur, son of Dema, son of Susi, son of Dan. And he had a wife whose name was Eluma<sup>a</sup> the daughter of Remac, and she was sterile and did not bear children to him. And, every day, Manoah her husband was saying to her, "Behold the LORD has shut up your womb so that you may not bear children, and now let me go<sup>b</sup> that I may take another wife lest I die without fruit." And she said, "Not me has the LORD shut up that I may not bear children, but you that I may not bear fruit." And he said to her, "Would that this could be tested and proved!"<sup>c</sup> •And they were quarreling daily and both were very sad, because they were without fruit. <sup>d</sup>One night the wife went up to the upper chamber<sup>e</sup> and prayed saying, "Behold you, LORD God of all flesh, reveal to me whether it has not been granted to my husband or to me to produce children, or to whom it may be forbidden or to whom it may be allowed to bear fruit in order that whoever is forbidden may weep over his sins because he remains without fruit. Or if both of us have been deprived, then reveal this to us also so that we might bear our sins and be silent before you." Judg 13:2
- 2 And the LORD heard her voice and sent his angel to her in the morning, and he said to her, "You are the sterile one who does not bring forth, and you are the womb that is forbidden so as not to bear fruit. But now the LORD has heard your voice and paid attention to your tears and opened your womb. And behold Judg 13:3
- 3 And the LORD heard her voice and sent his angel to her in the morning, and he said to her, "You are the sterile one who does not bring forth, and you are the womb that is forbidden so as not to bear fruit. But now the LORD has heard your voice and paid attention to your tears and opened your womb. And behold Judg 13:3,24.5

41 a. The MSS have "Addo son of Elech from Praton." The description of Abdon contradicts that of Josephus (Ant 5.7.15 §273): "Thanks to the prevailing peace and security of the state, he too did no brilliant deed."

b. Judg 12:15 says that he was buried at Pirathon; Efrata may be a corruption of this name.

c. According to Judg 12:11 Elon was judge for ten years.

42 a. This name for Samson's mother is found nowhere else in Jewish literature. There are many parallels between Samson's birth as narrated here and those of John the Baptist and Jesus in Luke's Gospel: a genealogy not derived from the OT, sterility, prayer in seclusion, the angel's appearance, the name announced. See also ch. 9.

b. According to Jewish law the husband rather than the wife must take the initiative in a divorce proceeding; but see Mk 10:12.

c. Lit. "the Law makes evident our experiment." We may have had a Heb. infinitive-absolute construction msinw hwrh twrh; then twrh was translated as a noun meaning "Law." Our translation is based on this supposition. An idiomatic rendering would be "Our experiment will indeed prove it out!"

d. Josephus (Ant 5.8.2 §277) speaks of the great beauty of Samson's mother and her husband's jealousy.

e. A terrace or balcony, the part of the house exposed to the sun.

- you will conceive and bear a son, and you will call his name Samson. For this one will be dedicated to your LORD.<sup>f</sup> But see that he<sup>g</sup> does not taste from any fruit of the vine and eat any unclean thing, because (as he<sup>h</sup> himself has said) he will free Israel from the hand of the Philistines.” And when the angel of the LORD had spoken these words, he departed from her. *And she came into the house to her husband and said to him, “I am placing my hand upon my mouth, and I will be silent before you all the days because I have boasted in vain and have not believed your words. For the angel of the LORD came to me today and revealed to me, saying, ‘Eluma, you are sterile, but you will conceive and bear a son.’” *And Manoah did not believe his wife, and being perplexed and sad, he himself also went to the upper chamber and prayed and said, “Behold I am not worthy to hear the signs and wonders that God has done among us or to see the face of his messenger.” *And while he was speaking these words, the angel of the Lord came again to his wife. But she was in the field, and Manoah was in his house. And the angel said to her, “Run and announce to your husband that God has accounted him worthy to hear my voice.” *And the wife ran and called to her husband, and he hurried to come to the angel in the field.<sup>i</sup> The angel said to him, “Go into your wife and do all these things.” But he said, “I am going,<sup>j</sup> but see to it, sir, that your word<sup>k</sup> be accomplished regarding your servant.” And he said, “It will be accomplished.” *And Manoah said to him, “If I can, let me persuade you to enter my house and eat bread with me; and know that, when you go, I will give you gifts that you may take along with you to offer as a sacrifice to the LORD your God.” And the angel said to him, “I will not enter your house with you, nor eat your bread nor take your gifts. For if you offer sacrifice from what is not yours,<sup>l</sup> I cannot show favor to you.” *And Manoah built an altar upon the rock and offered sacrifices and holocausts. And when he had cut up the meats and placed them on the altar, the angel reached out and touched them with the tip of his staff. And fire came forth from the rock, and it devoured the holocausts and sacrifices. And the angel of the Lord went up from there with the flame of fire.<sup>m</sup> *But Manoah and his wife saw these events and fell on their faces and said, “Surely we will die because we have seen the Lord face to face.” And Manoah said,<sup>n</sup> “It is not enough that I have seen him but I even asked his name, not knowing that he was the minister of God.” Now the angel who came was named Fadahel.<sup>o</sup>

The exploits of Samson

- 43 And in those days Eluma conceived and bore a son and called his name Samson, and the Lord was with him. And when he had begun to grow up and sought to attack the Philistines, he took for himself a wife from the Philistines. The Philistines burned her in the fire, because they had been badly humiliated by Samson. *And afterward Samson was angry at Ashdod,<sup>a</sup> and they locked him up and surrounded the city and said, “Behold now our enemy has been delivered into our hands, and now let us gather together and let us save our own lives.” And when Samson arose at night and saw the city locked up, he said, “Behold

f. Ps-Philo may have had in mind a derivation from the Heb. šmš (minister, serve) in the light of Samson's Nazirite status.

g. In Judg 13:4, 14, it is Samson's mother who is not to drink wine or eat anything unclean.

h. Presumably this is God.

i. Some MSS add “in spirit” (in animo) or “in Ammo.”

j. Var. “to him” (ei) rather than “I am going” (Eo).

k. The MT of Judg 13:12 has “words.”

l. If the angel accepted Manoah's gifts, then Manoah would not have his own things to offer.

m. The MT of Judg 13:20 has “in the flame of the altar.” Ps-Philo agrees with the LXX here.

n. “And Manoah said” is absent from some MSS but is necessary for the sense of the passage.

o. According to Judg 13:18 the angel's name is pl'y. Ps-Philo probably had an original pl'y'l, which in Gk. would have been Phalael, which in turn was deformed into Fadahel.

43 a. Var. “Gaza,” which is the reading of Judg 16:1. The Heb. ‘zth (to Gaza) could have been mistranslated into Gk. as Azōion. But Ps-Philo frequently changes the places of biblical events.

- now those fleas have locked me up in their own city, and now the LORD will be 3 with me, and I will go out through their gates and attack them.” •And he came Judg 16:3
 and put his left hand beneath the bar of the gate, and he took down the gate from the wall by shaking it. One part of it he kept in his right hand<sup>b</sup> for a shield; the other he put on his shoulders. And he carried it because he had no sword, and he pursued the Philistines with it and killed 25,000 men with it. And he took up 4 everything that made up the gate and brought them up to the mountain. •Now Judg 14:5f.
 concerning the lion that he killed and concerning the jawbone of the ass by which Judg 15:15f.
 he killed the Philistines and concerning the bonds that were broken off<sup>c</sup> from his Judg 15:14 arms as it were spontaneously and the foxes that he caught, are not these written Judg 15:4f.
 in the Book of Judges?
 5 Then Samson went down to Gerar, a city of the Philistines, and he saw there Judg 16:1,4 a harlot whose name was Delilah, and he was led astray after her and took her to himself for a wife. And God said, “Behold now Samson has been led astray through his eyes, and he has not remembered the mighty works that I did with him; and he has mingled with the daughters of the Philistines and has not paid Gen 39 attention to Joseph my servant who was in a foreign land and became a crown for his brothers because he was not willing to afflict his own seed. And now Samson’s lust will be a stumbling block for him, and his mingling a ruin. And I will hand him over to his enemies, and they will blind him. But in the hour of his death I will remember him, and I will avenge him upon the Philistines once
 6 more.” •And after this his wife was pressuring him and kept saying to him, Judg 16:28 “Show me your power and in what your strength lies, and so I will know that Judg 16:16 you love me.” And when Samson had tricked her three times and she was still Judg 16:16f.
pressuring him daily, the fourth time he revealed to her his heart. And she got Judg 16:19 him drunk, and while he slept, she called in a barber and he cut the seven locks of his head, and his strength left him, because he had made such a revelation.
 And she called the Philistines, and they beat Samson and blinded him and put Judg 16:21
 7 him in prison. •And on the day of their drinking bout they summoned Samson to Judg 16:25 make sport of him. And he, bound between two pillars, prayed saying, “Lord Judg 16:28,30 God of my fathers, hear me once more and strengthen me in order that I may die with these Philistines, because the sight that they took from me was given freely to me by you.” And Samson added, saying, “Go forth, my soul, and do not be 8 sad; die, my body, and do not weep about yourself.” •And he grasped the two Judg 16:29–31 columns of the house<sup>d</sup> and shook them. And the house and all that was around it fell down, and it killed all who were around it. And their number was 40,000<sup>e</sup> men and women. And Samson’s brothers and all the house of his father went down and took him and buried him in the tomb of his father. Now he had judged Israel twenty years.

The idols of Micah and the sin of Israel

- 1 44 And in those days there was no leader in Israel, but each one did what was Judg 17:6
 2 pleasing in his own eyes. •And in that time there arose Micah the son of Dedila Judg 17:1–4 the mother of Heliu, and he had one thousand pieces of gold and four wedges of melted gold and forty double pieces of silver. And Dedila his mother said to him, “My son, hear my voice, and you will make a name for yourself before death.
 Take that gold and melt it down and make for yourself idols, and they will be as 3 gods for you, and you will become a priest for them. •And whoever wishes to ask anything through them will come to you, and you will respond to him. And there will be an altar in your house and a column made out of that gold you have;

b. For the reference to the two hands of Samson, see Judg 16:29.

c. The verb “broken off” suggests that the Heb. behind Ps-Philo and the Lucianic MSS of Judg 15:14 may have been wytkw (from the root ntk) rather than the MT’s wymsw.

d. Ps-Philo agrees with the LXX<sup>B</sup> of Judg 16:29 in reading “the house” (hbyr) rather than “the middle” (hrwk).

e. In Judg 16:27 the MT has three thousand and the LXX seven hundred on the roof.

you will prepare frankincense for burning and sheep for sacrifice. And whoever wishes to offer a sacrifice will give seven double pieces for the sheep; and for the incense, if he wishes to burn it, he will give one double piece of silver of full weight. And your title will be 'priest,' and you will be called 'worshiper of the gods.'"<sup>4</sup> •And Micah said to her, "You have advised me well, Mother, on how to live. And now your name will be even greater than mine, and in the last days<sup>5</sup> all kinds of things will be requested of you." •And Micah set out and did everything that his mother had commanded him. And he shaped and made for himself three images of boys and calves, the lion, the eagle, and the dragon, and the dove. And all who were led astray would come to him. And if some wished to ask for a wife, they would ask him by means of the dove. But if anyone asked for sons, it was by the images of the boys. But whoever asked for riches did it through the likeness of the eagle. Whoever asked for courage, he advised him through the image of the lion. If for servants and maids, he asked through the images of the calves. But if for length of days, he asked by the image of the dragon.<sup>6</sup> And his wickedness took many forms, and his impiety was full of trickery.

Judg 17:8

<sup>6</sup> And then, when the sons of Israel were departing from the LORD, the LORD said, "Behold I will root up the earth and destroy the whole human race, because, when I established laws on Mount Sinai, I showed myself to the sons of Israel in the storm. And I said that they should not make idols, and they agreed not to carve out the images of gods. And I ordered them not to take my name in vain, and they agreed that they themselves would not take my name in vain. And I commanded them to keep the sabbath, and they agreed to keep it holy.<sup>b</sup> And I told them to honor father and mother, and they promised they would do it. And I ordered them not to steal,<sup>c</sup> and they agreed. And I told them not to commit murder, and they held it as acceptable not to do this. And I commanded them not to commit adultery, and they did not oppose this. And I ordered them not to speak false testimony and not to covet each one his neighbor's wife or his house or all<sup>7</sup> his possessions, and they agreed. •And I told them not to make idols nor the works of those gods that have been born from corruption under the name of 'graven image' and those things through which all these corruptions have been brought about.<sup>d</sup> For mortal men have made them, and the fire has served to melt them down. The skill of a man has produced them, and hands have manufactured them, and imagination has invented them.<sup>e</sup> By accepting these they took my name in vain, and they have given my name to graven images. And the day of the sabbath that they agreed to keep, they have done abominable things on it. Whereas I have told them to love father and mother, they have dishonored me, their Creator. And whereas I told them not to steal, they have dealt like thieves in their schemes<sup>f</sup> with graven images. And whereas I told them not to kill, they kill those whom they seduce. And though I commanded them not to commit adultery, they have committed adultery with their zeal. And whereas they chose not to speak false testimony, they accepted false testimony from those whom they destroyed. And they lusted for foreign women.

Ex 20:2-17;
Deut 5:6-21

<sup>8</sup> "Therefore, behold I abhor the race of men, and I will cut away the root of my creation; and those dying will outnumber those being born, because the house of Jacob has been infected in its wickedness and the impiety of Israel has been 44 a. The various images may have something to do with the sanctuary of Mithras, where two torch-bearing youths, a bull, a lion, a serpent, and a bird customarily appear. But here there is no mention of the bull or the sun, both important features of the Mithraic cult.

b. Lit. "to sanctify themselves." But the observance of the sabbath is clearly at issue; there may have been confusion at the level of Heb. or Gk.

c. This order of commandments—stealing, murder, adultery—is also found in Jer 7:9.

d. The text is corrupt here. We have added "And I told them" to make better sense; "of 'graven image'" is based on emending sculptilis to sculptilis et. The point of the whole passage is to show that idolatry is the root of all sins.

e. For similar expressions, see WisSol 13:10-19.

f. Lit. "sense."

multiplied. And can I not totally destroy the tribe of Benjamin, because they first of all were led astray after Micah? And the people of Israel will not go unpunished.

9 But this will be an everlasting scandal remembered for generations. *Now I will deliver Micah to the fire, and his mother will be rotting away in his sight while she is alive upon the earth, and worms<sup>g</sup> will come forth from her body. And then, while they are speaking to one another, she will say<sup>h</sup> as a mother chastising her son, 'Behold what a sin you have committed!' And he will answer as a son heeding his mother and acting cleverly, 'And you have done even greater wickedness.' And the image of the dove that he made will be used for putting out his eyes, and the image of the eagle will be used for bringing fire upon them out of its wings, and the images of the boys that he made will be used for scraping his sides, and the image of the lion that he made will be like mighty ones tormenting him.<sup>i</sup> *And I will not do this to Micah alone, but to all who sin against me.<sup>j</sup> And the race of men will know that they will not make me jealous by their inventions that they make, but to every man there will be such a punishment that in whatever sin he shall have sinned, in this he will be judged. And if they have lied before me, I will command the heaven and it will deny them rain. And if anyone wished to covet the wife<sup>k</sup> of his neighbor, I will command death and it will deny them the fruit of their womb. And if they will make a false declaration in my name, I will not hear their prayers. And when the soul is separated from the body, then they will say, 'Let us not mourn over these things that we suffer; but because whatever we ourselves have devised, these will we receive.'

The crisis at Nob

- 1 45 And in that time a certain man from the tribe of Levi came to Gibeah, and he wanted to stay there when the sun set. And he wanted to enter there, but those who dwelt there did not let him. And he said to his servant, "Walk on and lead the mule, and we will go to the city of Nob;<sup>a</sup> perhaps they will let us enter it." And he came there and sat down in the open square of the city, and no one said to him, "Enter my house." Judg 19:1
Judg 19:14
Judg 19:13
Judg 19:15
- 2 Now there was a certain Levite whose name was Bethac. When this man had seen him, he said to him, "Are you Beel<sup>b</sup> from my tribe?" And he said, "I am." And he said to him, "You do not know the wickedness of those who dwell in this city. And who persuaded you to enter here? Get out of here in a hurry and enter my house where I dwell, and stay there today; and the LORD will shut up their heart<sup>c</sup> before us as he shut up the Sodomites before Lot." And he entered the city and remained there that night. *And all those inhabiting the city came together and said to Bethac, "Bring out those who have come to you today. If not, we will burn in the fire both you and them." And he came out to them and said to them, "Are not these our brothers? Let us not do evil with them lest our sins be multiplied against us." And they answered, "It has never happened that the strangers gave orders to the natives." And they entered by force and dragged him and his concubine out, and they cast him off. And when the man had been let go, they abused his concubine until she died, because she had transgressed<sup>d</sup> against her man once when she committed sin with the Amalekites, and on account Judg 19:16-20
Gen 19:10f.
Judg 19:22-25;
Gen 19:5.9
Judg 19:2

g. For great sinners being eaten alive by worms, see 63:4; 2Mac 9:9; Acts 12:23, and b.Sot 35a.

h. Lit. "said"; but the sense demands a future or present.

i. The calves and the dragon are omitted.

j. That is, the punishment is to fit the crime.

k. The MSS have "property" (rem), but in view of the principle of the punishment fitting the crime ("deny them the fruit of their womb") we have emended to "wife" (uxorem).

novam), but see 46:3.

b. Ps-Philo is unique in giving the names Bethac and Beel.

c. Our concept of "mind" as the organ of thought and perception is presupposed by "heart." In Gen 19:10f. the Sodomites are struck blind.

d. The fate of the concubine in the Bible is not connected to her personal sins as it is here, but Ps-Philo's interpretation may take its rise from Judg 19:2 as well as from his own theological outlook. For his horror at intermarriage with gentiles, see 9:5; 18:13f.; 21:1; 30:1; 44:7.

45 a. The best MSS have "new city" (clivitatem

- 4 of this the LORD God delivered her into the hands of sinners. •And when it was morning, Beel went out and found his concubine dead and put her on the mule and hurried away and came into Cades.<sup>e</sup> And he took her body and cut it up into parts and sent her around to the twelve tribes, saying, "These things have been done to me in the city of Nob, and those dwelling there rose up against me to kill me, and they took my concubine while I was locked up and they killed her. And if being silent pleases you, nevertheless the LORD judges. But if you wish to take revenge, the LORD will help you." •And all the men of the twelve tribes were disturbed, and they gathered together in Shiloh,<sup>f</sup> and each one said to his neighbor, "If such wickedness is done in Israel, Israel will cease to be."
- 6 And the LORD said to the adversary<sup>g</sup>, "Did you see this foolish people disturbed in the hour<sup>h</sup> in which they ought to have died, when Micah acted craftily so as to lead the people astray with the dove and the eagle and with the image of the men and the calves and the lion and the dragon? And so because they were not provoked to anger then, therefore let their plan be in vain; and their heart will be so disturbed that the sinners as well as those allowing the evil deeds will be destroyed."

The defeat of Israel

- 1 46 And when it was morning, the people of Israel were disturbed and said, "Let us go up and search out the sin that has been committed in order that wickedness be taken away from us." And then they said, "Let us ask the LORD first and learn if he will deliver our brothers into our hands; if not, let us desist." And Phinehas said to them, "Let us bring out the Urim and Thummim."<sup>a</sup> And the LORD answered them, saying, "Go up, because I will deliver them into your hands." But he led them astray so that he might fulfill his words. •And they went up for battle and came into the city of Benjamin and sent messengers saying, "Send us the men who have done this wicked deed, and we will spare you but return to each his own evil." And the people of Benjamin hardened their heart, and they said to the people of Israel, "Why should we deliver our brothers to you? And if you do spare them, will we not fight against you?" And the people of Benjamin went out to meet the sons of Israel and pursued them. And the sons of Israel fell before them, and they struck down among them forty-five thousand<sup>b</sup> men. •And the heart of the people was very much disturbed, and they came mourning and weeping to Shiloh. And they said, "Behold the LORD has delivered us before those dwelling in Nob, and now let us ask the LORD who among us has sinned." And they asked the Lord, and he said to them, "If you wish, go up and fight, and they will be delivered into your hands, and then it will be told to you why you have fallen before them." And they went up the next day to attack them, and the sons of Benjamin went out and pursued Israel and killed among them forty-six thousand<sup>c</sup> men. •And the heart of the people grew very faint, and they said, "Has God wished to lead his people astray? Or has he so established it on account of the evil that was done, that the innocent as well as those who do wicked deeds should fall together?" And on saying these words they fell before the ark of the covenant of the Lord and tore their garments and put ashes on their heads, they and Phinehas the son of Eleazar the priest, who prayed and said,

e. Var. "Gades." Perhaps this is the Levitical city of Kedesh (1Chr 6:57).

f. According to Judg 20:1 the assembly took place at Mizpah; according to Judg 20:18 there was an assembly at Bethel.

g. The Lat. anteciminus has been taken over from the Gk. antikeimenos (adversary), which is most likely the equivalent of the Heb. špn; see Job 1:6–12.

h. The MSS have "land" (terra), but the emendation to "hour" (hora) seems likely in view of "they were not provoked to anger then."

i. Reading vanum instead of the MSS manu (hand) or malum (evil).

46 a. Lit. "the demonstration and truth," which renders the Gk. dēlōsis kai alētheia and the Heb. wrym wimym. This refers to an oracular device carried in the priest's breastplate. See 47:2.

b. In Judg 20:21 the number is twenty-two thousand.

c. In Judg 20:25 the number is eighteen thousand.

“What is this deceit by which you have led us astray, LORD? If what the sons of Benjamin have done is right in your sight, why have you not told us so we might consider it? But if it did not please you, why have you allowed us to fall before them?”

The fable of the lion

1 47 And Phinehas added, saying, “God of our fathers, hear my voice and tell your servant today whether this has been done correctly in your sight, or perhaps the people have sinned and you were not willing to root out their evil deeds so as to correct those among us who have sinned against you. For I remember in my youth when Jambres sinned in the days of Moses your servant, and I went and entered in and was possessed with jealousy in my soul, and I hoisted both of them<sup>a</sup> up on my sword. And the rest wished to rise up against me and kill me, and you sent your angel and you killed from them twenty-four thousand men, and you freed me from their hands. •And now you have sent the eleven tribes up, saying to them, ‘Go and kill them’; and they went and were delivered up. And now they say that your Urim and Thummim<sup>b</sup> are telling lies in your sight. And now, LORD God of our fathers, do not hide from your servant but tell us why you have brought this wickedness against us.”

Num 25:6–18

3 And the LORD saw that Phinehas had prayed earnestly before him, and he said to him, “I myself have sworn, says the LORD; if I had not sworn, I would not have remembered you in what you have said, nor would I have answered you today. And now say to the people, ‘Stand and hear the word of the LORD.’ •These words the LORD says: ‘There was a certain mighty lion<sup>c</sup> in the midst of the forest to whose power all the beasts entrusted the forest that he might guard it lest perhaps other wild animals should come and destroy it. And while the lion was guarding these, some wild animals<sup>d</sup> arrived from another forest and devoured all the young of the animals and destroyed the fruit of their wombs. And the lion looked on and was silent. And the animals were at peace, because they had entrusted the forest to the lion and did not realize that their own offspring had been destroyed. •And after a time there arose from those who had entrusted the forest to the lion a very small animal, and he ate up the small cub of another wicked animal. And behold the lion roared and disturbed all the animals of the forest, and they fought among themselves, and each attacked his neighbor. •And when many animals were destroyed, another cub from another great forest saw the lion and said, ‘Have you destroyed so many animals? What is this wickedness that when so many animals and their offspring were unjustly destroyed previously by other wicked animals, and when all the animals should have been moved to avenge themselves when their fruit was being destroyed in vain, then you were silent and did not speak? But now one cub of a wicked animal has perished, and you have so aroused the whole forest that all the animals should eat one another up unjustly, so that the forest is depleted. And now you ought to be destroyed first, and so you will make the rest secure.’” And the cubs of the animals heard this and killed the lion first, and they appointed the cub in his place, and so all the other animals were subject to one authority.’

7 “Micah<sup>e</sup> arose and made you rich by these things that he and his mother made. And they were wicked and evil things that no one before them had discovered, but by his own craftiness he made them—graven images that had not been made until this day. And no one was provoked but all were led astray, and you saw the 47 a. They are not named in Ex 7:11 but are called Jannes and Jambres in the Jewish tradition and 2Tim 3:8.

b. See 46:1. We have emended manifestationes tue veritates to manifestationes tue et veritates.

c. The species of the animal is lacking in all but one MS but can be supplied from the rest of the story.

d. Lit. “animals of the field” (fere agri); but agri may be a mistake for the Gk. agroï (wild, savage).

e. Seder Olam 12 and Est Rabbah 37:7 also connect the sin of Micah and the crime of the Benjaminites.

- 8 fruit of your womb destroyed and you were silent like that wicked lion. •And now on seeing how this man's concubine, who had done wicked deeds, died, you were all disturbed and came to me, saying, 'Will you deliver the sons of Benjamin into our hands?' Therefore I have deceived you and said, 'I will deliver them to you.' And now I have destroyed you, who were silent then. And so I will take my revenge on all who have acted wickedly.'
- 9 And all the people rose up together and went away. And the sons of Benjamin came out to meet them, thinking that they would conquer them as before, and they did not know that evil had reached full measure against them. And when they had come out as at first and pursued them, the people fled from before them so as to give ground. And then they rose up from their hiding places, and the sons of Benjamin were in their midst. •And when those who were fleeing turned back, eighty-five thousand<sup>f</sup> people of the city of Nob, men and women, were killed. And the sons of Israel burned the city, and they destroyed all their spoils that had been snatched away by the edge of the sword. And none of the sons of Benjamin survived except six hundred men who fled and were not found in the battle. And all the people returned to Shiloh, and Phinehas the son of Eleazar the priest was with them. •These are they who were left from the race of Benjamin, the rulers of the tribe, of ten families, whose names are these. <sup>g</sup> Of the first family: Ezbaile, Zieb, Balac, Rein, Debac, Belloch. And of the second family: Netach, Zenip, Fenoeh, Demech, Geresaraz. And from the third family: Ierimuth, Veloth, Amibel, Genuth, Nefuth, Fienna. And from the fourth city: Gemuf and Eliel, Gemet, Soleph, Rafaf, and Doffo. And from the fifth family: Anuel, Code, Fretan, Remmon, Peccan, Nabath. From the sixth family: Refaz, Sefet, Arafaz, Metach, Adhoc, Balinoc. And from the seventh family: Benin, Mefiz, Araf, Ruimel, Belon, Iaal, Abac. From the tenth<sup>h</sup> family: Enoflasi, Melech, Meturia, Meac. And the rest of the rulers of the tribe who survived were sixty in number. •And in that time the LORD repaid to Micah and his mother all he had said. And Micah was destroyed in the fire and his mother was rotting away, just as the LORD had said concerning them.

Judg 20:31-37

Judg 20:42

Judg 20:41-43

Judg 20:37

Judg 20:46-48

1Chr 8

The ascension of Phinehas

- 1 48 And in that time Phinehas laid himself down to die, and the LORD said to him, "Behold you have passed the 120 years that have been established for every man. And now rise up and go from here and dwell in Danaben on the mountain and dwell there many years. And I will command my eagle, and he will nourish you there, and you will not come down to mankind until the time arrives and you be tested in that time; and you will shut up the heaven then, and by your mouth it will be opened up. <sup>a</sup> And afterward you will be lifted up into the place where those who were before you were lifted up, and you will be there until I remember the world. Then I will make you all come, and you will taste what is death."
- 2 And Phinehas went up and did all that the LORD commanded him. Now in those 3 days when he appointed Eli<sup>b</sup> as priest, he anointed him in Shiloh. •Now in that time when he went up, then the sons of Israel were celebrating Passover,<sup>c</sup> and they commanded the sons of Benjamin, saying, "Go up and get wives for yourselves, because we cannot give you our daughters. For we made a vow in the time of our anger, but let it not happen that one tribe be blotted out from Israel." And the sons of Benjamin went up and seized for themselves wives and 4 built for themselves Gabaon and began to dwell there. •And while the sons of

Gen 6:3

1Kgs 17:4

1Kgs 17:1

Judg 21:17-19

Judg 21:23

Judg 21:25

f. In Judg 20:46 there are twenty-five thousand men.

g. Some of the names may come from 1Chr 8: Geresaraz (cf. Gera 8:7), Ierimuth (cf. Jeremoth 8:14), Eliel (8:20), and Melech (cf. Melech 8:35).

h. The eighth and ninth families are missing.

48 a. Phinehas is described in terms reminiscent of Elijah.

b. The MSS have "him" (eum), but in the light of 50:3 and 52:2 Eli seems to be meant.

c. Judg 21:19 merely describes it as a yearly feast.

Israel were at rest in the meantime, they had no leader in those days, and each one did what was pleasing in his own eyes. •These are the commandments and judgments and testimonies and manifestations that were in the days of the judges of Israel, before a king ruled over them.

The search for a new leader

- 1 49 And in that time the sons of Israel began to make a request from the LORD, and they said, "Let all of us cast lots<sup>a</sup> to see who it is who can rule us as Kenaz did. For perhaps we will find a man who may free us from our distress, because 2 it is not appropriate for the people to be without a ruler." •And they cast the lot. And when no one was found, the people were very sad and said, "The people were not worthy to be heard by the LORD. Therefore<sup>b</sup> he did not answer us. And now let us cast lots by tribes, if God may be reconciled by a large group. For we know that God will be reconciled with those worthy of him." And they cast the lot by tribes, and upon no tribe did the lot come forth. And Israel said, "Let us choose from among ourselves, for we are put in a position of need. For we know
3 that God has hated his people and his soul has detested us." •And a certain man by the name of Nethez<sup>c</sup> answered and said to the people, "He does not hate us, but we have made ourselves so hateful that God should abandon us. And so, even if we die, let us not abandon him, but let us flee to him. We who have walked in our evil ways have not known him who created us, and so our plan will be in vain. For I know that God will not reject us forever, nor will he hate his people for all generations. And so strengthen yourselves, and let us pray again, and let us cast lots by cities. For even if our sins are many, nevertheless his long-suffering
4 will not fail." •And they cast lots by cities, and Ramathaim<sup>d</sup> came out in the lot. And the people said, "So Ramathaim is accounted more just than all the cities of Israel, because he has chosen it above all the cities." And each one said to his neighbor, "In that city that came out in the lot let us cast a lot by men, and let
5 us see whom the LORD has chosen from it." •And they cast the lot by men, and it fell upon no one except Elkanah. Because the lot fell out upon him, the people took him and said, "Come, and be a leader for us." And Elkanah said to the people, "I cannot be a leader over this people, nor can I be considered<sup>e</sup> one who could be a leader for you. But if my sins have caught up with me, I will kill myself so that you may not defile me. For it is just that I should die only for my own sins rather than to bear the burden of this people."
6 And the people saw that Elkanah was not willing to exercise leadership over them, and they prayed again to the LORD, saying, "LORD God of Israel, why have you abandoned your people in the victory of their enemies, and in the time of distress why have you neglected your inheritance? Behold even he who has been chosen in the lot has not fulfilled your commandments. But this happened only because the lot fell out on him and we thought we had a leader. And behold it has happened that even he is contending<sup>f</sup> against the lot. Whom will we ask for once more, or to whom will we flee, or where is the place of our relaxation and rest? For if the ordinances that you have established with our fathers are true, saying, 'I will multiply your seed,' and they will experience this, then it would have been better to say to us, 'I am cutting off your seed,' than to neglect our 7 root." •And God said to them, "If I were to pay you back according to your evil deeds, it would be necessary to pay no attention at all to your race. And what will I do that my name will come to be invoked upon you? And now know that

Gen 16:10

49 a. See ch. 25.

b. Lit. "because." The Heb. probably had "therefore" (ʾi kn), but at the level of Gk., dio, "therefore," was confused with dioi, "because," which was taken over into the Lat. as quia.

c. The name may have some relation to the Heb. and Aram. term for "lot."

d. The MSS have Armathem or Arimathes; see 1Sam 1:1.

e. In all the MSS the verb existimare is active, but Elkanah has not been asked to think of a substitute. We have emended to existimari.

f. Var. "even if he were not contending."

Elkanah, upon whom the lot has fallen, cannot rule among you; but rather his son who will be born from him, he will rule among you and prophesy. And from this time on, a ruler will not be lacking from you for many years." • And the people said, "Behold, LORD, Elkanah has ten sons, and who of them will rule or prophesy?" And God said, "None of the sons of Peninnah can rule the people, but the one who is born from the sterile woman whom I have given to him as a wife will be a prophet before me. And I will love him as I have loved Isaac, and his name will be before me always." And the people said, "Behold perhaps now God has remembered us so as to free us from the hand of those who hate us<sup>8</sup>." And on that day they made peace offerings and feasted according to their customs.<sup>h</sup>

Gen 49:10

1Sam 1:8

The prayer of Hannah in her distress

- 1 50 And Elkanah had two wives. The name of one was Hannah, and the name of the other was Peninnah. And because Peninnah had sons and Hannah did not, Peninnah taunted<sup>a</sup> her, saying, "What does it profit you that Elkanah your husband loves you, for you are a dry tree? And I know that my husband will love me, because he delights in the sight of my sons standing around him like a plantation of olive trees." • And so it was when she was taunting her daily, and Hannah was saddened very much. And she had been fearing God from her youth. It happened that on the holy day<sup>b</sup> of Passover, when her husband went up to sacrifice, Peninnah was insulting Hannah, saying, "A wife is not really loved even if her husband loves her or her beauty.<sup>c</sup> Let Hannah not boast in her appearance; but she who boasts, let her boast<sup>d</sup> when she sees her offspring before her. And when among women the fruit of her womb is not so, love will be in vain. For what did it profit Rachel that Jacob loved her? And unless the fruit of her womb had been given to him, his love would have been in vain." And when Hannah heard these words, her soul grew faint and poured out tears. • And her husband saw her and said, "Why are you sad? And why do you not eat? And why does your heart fall within you? Are not your ways of behaving<sup>e</sup> better than the ten sons of Peninnah?" And Hannah listened to him, and she rose up after she ate and came to Shiloh to the house of the LORD, where Eli the priest dwelt, whom Phinehas the son of Eleazar the priest<sup>f</sup> had appointed, as had been commanded him. • And Hannah prayed and said, "Did you not, LORD, search out the heart of all generations before you formed the world? Now what womb is born opened or dies closed unless you wish it? And now let my prayer ascend before you today lest I go down from here empty, because you know my heart, how I have walked before you from the day of my youth." • And Hannah did not want to pray out loud as all people do. For then she thought, saying, "Perhaps I am not worthy to be heard, and Peninnah will then be even more eager to taunt me as she does daily when she says, 'Where is your God in whom you trust?' And I know that neither she who has many sons is rich nor she who has few is poor, but whoever abounds in the will of God is rich. For who may know what I have prayed for? If they know that I am not heard in my prayer, they will blaspheme. And I will not have any witness except in my own soul, because my tears are the servant of my prayers." •
- 6 And while she was praying, Eli<sup>g</sup> the priest saw that she was disturbed and acted like a drunken woman, and he said to her, "Go and put your wine away

1Sam 1:2

1Sam 1:6

Isa 56:3

Ps 128:3

1Sam 1:3

1Sam 1:7

1Sam 2:7,10

1Sam 1:10

1Sam 1:8f.

1Sam 1:13

Ps 42:3

1Sam 2:5

1Sam 1:14f.

g. The MSS lack "us." Perhaps the Heb. šn'ymw (our enemies) was misread as šn'ym (enemies).

h. Lit. "dispositions," which may refer to orders in the sense of groups arranged according to some hierarchical scheme (see IQSa).

50 a. While "taunted" is absent from the LXX of 1Sam 1:6, it is found in the Lucianic MSS, the MT, and other texts.

b. Lit. "the good day."

c. Or "the love of wife does not depend on her husband's loving her or her beauty."

d. In the LXX of 1Sam 2:10 there is a long expansion on the theme of boasting.

e. For "ways of behaving" (mores), perhaps read "loves" (amores).

f. For Eli as appointed by Phinehas, see 48:2 and 52:2.

g. In the LXX of 1Sam 1:14 the servant (paidarion) of Eli speaks; Ps-Philo here agrees with the MT.

from you.”<sup>h</sup> And she said, “Is my prayer so heard that I am called a drunken woman? Now I am drunk with sorrow, and I have drunk the cup of my weeping.”

- 7 And Eli the priest said to her, “Tell me why you are being taunted.” And she said to him, “I am the wife of Elkanah; and because God has shut up my womb, I have prayed before him that I do not go forth from this world without fruit and that I do not die without having my own image.” And Eli the priest said to her, “Go, because I know<sup>i</sup> for what you have prayed; your prayer has been heard.”
8 But Eli the priest did not want to tell her that a prophet had been foreordained to be born from her. For he had heard that when the LORD spoke concerning him. And Hannah came into her house,<sup>j</sup> and she was consoled of her sorrow, but she told no one what she had prayed. 1Sam 1:15
1Sam 1:17
1Sam 1:18

The birth of Samuel

- 1 51 In those days she conceived and bore a son and called his name Samuel, which is interpreted “mighty one,”<sup>a</sup> as God had named him when he prophesied about him. And Hannah<sup>b</sup> remained there and nursed the infant until he was two years old. And when she had weaned him, she went up with him<sup>c</sup> and brought gifts in her hands. And the child was very handsome, and the LORD was with him. 1Sam 1:20
2 And Hannah placed the boy before Eli and said to him,<sup>d</sup> “This is the desire I desired, and this is the request I have asked.” And Eli said to her, “You have not asked alone, but the people have prayed for this. This is not your request alone, but it was promised previously to the tribes. And through this boy your womb has been justified so that you might provide advantage for the peoples<sup>e</sup> and set up the milk of your breasts as a fountain for the twelve tribes.” •And on hearing this Hannah prayed and said, 1Sam 1:23f.
1Sam 1:25f.
3 1Sam 2:1

“Come to my voice, all you nations, and pay attention to my speech, all you kingdoms, because my mouth has been opened that I should speak and my lips have been commanded to sing a hymn to the LORD.

Drip, my breasts, and tell your testimonies,
because you have been commanded to give milk.
For he who is milked from you will be raised up, and the people will be enlightened by his words, and he will show to the nations the statutes,<sup>f</sup> and his horn will be exalted very high. 1Sam 2:10

- 4 And so I will speak my words openly, because from me will arise the ordinance of the LORD, and all men will find the truth. Isa 51:4

Do not hurry to say great things or to bring forth from your mouth lofty words, but delight in glorifying (God). 1Sam 2:3

For when the light<sup>g</sup> from which wisdom is to be born will go forth, not those who possess many things will be said to be rich, nor those who have borne in abundance will be called mothers. Isa 51:4

For the sterile one has been satisfied<sup>h</sup> in childbearing, 1Sam 2:5

h. Only the Lucianic MSS of 1Sam 1:14 have both “go” and “from you.”

i. Var. “you know”; but in this context “I know” seems preferable.

j. The phrase “into her house” is found in the LXX and the Lucianic MSS of 1Sam 1:18 but not in the MT; but see 1Sam 1:19.

51 a. Based on the possible division of “Samuel” in Heb. as šmw ’l meaning “his name is El (the Mighty One).”

b. Only Ps-Philo and one Lucianic MS mention Hannah by name in 1Sam 1:23.

c. The expression “with him” is found in the LXX, the Lucianic MSS, and Ps-Philo but not in the MT of 1Sam 1:24.

d. Only Ps-Philo and the Lucianic MSS have “to him” in 1Sam 1:26.

e. This may refer to the gentiles, but the parallelism of the next line suggests that the peoples of Israel are being discussed.

f. Lit. “boundaries”; see 15:6.

g. The light is the anticipated prophet Samuel.

h. The phrase depends on the Hebrew šb’h of 1Sam 2:5, which is usually interpreted with the number “seven” in mind.

but she who had many children has been emptied.

5 Because the Lord kills in judgment, 1Sam 2:6
and brings to life in mercy.

For them who are wicked in this world he kills,<sup>1</sup> 1Sam 2:9
and he brings the just to life when he wishes.

Now the wicked he will shut up in darkness, but he will save his light for the just.

And when the wicked have died, then they will perish.
And when the just go to sleep, then they will be freed.

Now so will every judgment endure, until he who restrains<sup>1</sup> will be revealed.

6 Speak, speak, Hannah, and do not be silent.

Sing a hymn, daughter of Batuel,<sup>k</sup> about the miracles that God has performed with you.

Who is Hannah that a prophet is born<sup>1</sup> from her?

Or who is the daughter of Batuel that she should bear the light to the Isa 51:4
peoples?

Rise up, you also, Elkanah, and gird your loins.

Sing a hymn about the wonders of the LORD. Jer 1:17;
Job 38:3

Because Asaph prophesied in the wilderness about your son, saying,

'Moses and Aaron were among his priests, and Samuel was there among them.' Ps 99:6

Behold the word has been fulfilled, and the prophecy has come to pass.

And these words will endure until they give the horn to his anointed one and power be present at the throne of his king.

And let my son stay here and serve 1Sam 2:10f.
until he be made a light for this nation."

7 And they departed<sup>m</sup> and set out with gladness, rejoicing and exulting in heart 1Sam 2:11 over all the glory that God had worked with them. But the people came down to Shiloh together with timbrels and dances, lutes and harps, and they came to Eli the priest and brought to him Samuel. And they stood Samuel before the LORD, anointed him, and said, "Let the prophet live among the people, and may he be a light to this nation for a long time!"

The sons of Eli

1 52 Now Samuel was very young and knew nothing of these things. And while 1Sam 2:11-16 he was servng before the Lord, the two sons of Eli were not walking in the ways of their fathers and began to do wicked things to the people and multiplied their own wickednesses. And they were lingering near the house of Bethac, and when the people came together to sacrifice, Hophni and Phinehas came and provoked 1Sam 2:34 the people to anger by taking their sacrificial offerings before they were offered 2 as holy to the LORD. *And this was pleasing neither to the LORD nor to the people nor to their father. And so their father said to them, "What is this report that I hear about you? Or do you not know that I have received this place that Phinehas 1Sam 2:23f.
committed to me?<sup>a</sup> And if we destroy what we have received, what will we say if he who committed it asks for it again and he for whom he committed it should harm us? And now straighten out your ways and walk in good ways, and your

i. Lit. "For they are wicked in this world"; we have added "he kills" to make a parallel with "brings the just to life."

j. Most likely God himself; see 2Thes 2:6f.

k. Only Ps-Philo mentions the name of Hannah's father as Batuel.

l. Lit. "is." In view of the parallel expression

"she should bear" we would expect "is born." This may reflect confusion between egenēthē (was) and egennēthē (was born); see 17:3; 30:5.

m. Ps-Philo agrees with the LXX and Lucianic MSS of 1Sam 2:11 in having a plural verb.

52 a. See 48:2 and 50:3.

positions will remain the same. But if you refuse and do not restrain your wicked schemes, you will destroy yourselves, and the priesthood will be in vain and what has been sanctified will be considered as nothing. And then they will say, 'Did the staff of Aaron spring up in vain or has the flower born of it come down to 3 nothing?' *And so while you still can, my sons, correct what you have done sinfully, and the men against whom you have sinned will pray for you. But if you are not willing and you remain in your wickedness, I will be guiltless and will only be sorry if perhaps I will hear of the day of your death before I die. But 4 nevertheless you will perish.'" *And his sons did not listen, because the Lord had made a decision about them that they should die, for they had sinned. For when he said to them, "Repent of your wicked way," they were saying, "When we grow old, then we will repent."<sup>b</sup> And they who were warned by their father were not permitted to repent, because they were always rebelling and acting very unjustly in despoiling Israel. The LORD was angry at Eli.<sup>c</sup>

The call of Samuel

1 53 And Samuel was serving before the Lord, still not knowing what the oracles of the Lord were. He had not yet heard the oracles of the LORD. He was eight 2 years old.<sup>a</sup> *And when God remembered Israel, he wished to reveal to Samuel his words. And Samuel was sleeping in the temple of the Lord. And when God called to him, he gave it consideration first, saying, "Behold now Samuel is young so as to be beloved before me. In spite of the fact that he has not heard the voice of the LORD or has been confirmed with the word of the Most High, nevertheless he is like my servant Moses. To an eighty-year-old I spoke, but Samuel is eight years old. And Moses saw the fire first, and his heart was very much afraid. And if Samuel should see fire now, how will he survive? And so now my voice to him will be like that of a man, and not like that of God. And 3 when he has understood, then I will speak to him like God." *And in the middle of the night a voice from heaven called him. And Samuel was awakened, and he recognized it as the voice of Eli the priest, and he ran to him and said, "Why have you awakened me, Father? For I was frightened, because you never called me at night." And Eli said, "Woe is me! Has an unclean spirit led my son Samuel astray?" And he said to him, "Go, sleep. For I have not called you. Nevertheless, tell me this, if you remember: How often did he who summoned you call?" And he said, "Twice."<sup>b</sup> And Eli said to him, "Tell me, whose voice did you recognize, 4 my son?" He said, "Yours. Therefore I ran to you." *And Eli said, "In you I see this sign that men will have from today unto eternity, that if one should call to another twice by night or in midday, they will know that it is an evil spirit.
 But if he should call again a third time, I will know that it is an angel." And 5 Samuel went away and slept. *And a second time he heard a voice from heaven, and he rose up and ran to Eli and said to him, "Why has he called me? For I have heard the voice of my father Elkanah." And then Eli understood that God had begun to summon him. For Eli said, "With the two voices by which God has already called to you, he has become like a father and a master; now with the 6 third he will be like God." *And he said to him, "With your right ear pay attention, with your left be deaf.<sup>c</sup> For Phinehas the priest has commanded us, saying, 'The right ear hears the LORD by night, but the left an angel.' And so if

b. See b.Yoma 85b: "If one says, 'I shall continue to sin and later repent,' the opportunity to repent is not granted to him."

c. In 52:2f. Eli has made it clear that he has not been involved in the sin of his sons, yet in 54:5 he dies along with them.

had completed his twelfth year when he began to act as a prophet.

b. "Twice" implies a text similar to that of the LXX for 1Sam 3:4.

c. Lit. "be silent," which probably reflects a confusion between the meanings of the Heb. root hṣ (be silent, be deaf).

53 a. Josephus (Ant 5. 10.4 §348) says that Samuel

- you hear in your right ear, say 'Say whatever you wish, because I am listening, for you have created me.' But if you hear with your left ear, come and tell me." 1Sam 3:9
- 7 And Samuel went away and slept as Eli had commanded him. *And the Lord spoke again a third time, and the right ear of Samuel was filled. And when he knew that the word of his father had come down, Samuel turned on his other side and said, "If I am capable, speak; for you know more about me (than I do)." 1Sam 3:8
- 8 And God said to him, "I have indeed enlightened the house of Israel in Egypt and have chosen for myself then as a prophet Moses my servant and have done wonders through him for my people and have taken revenge on my enemies as I wished. And I brought my people into the wilderness and enlightened them as they looked on. *And when one tribe rose up against another, saying, 'Why are the priests alone holy?' I did not wish to destroy them and I said to them, 'Have each one present his staff, and he whose staff will flower—him I have chosen for the priesthood.' And when all had handed in the staffs as I had commanded, then I commanded the ground where the tent of meeting was that the staff of Aaron should flower in order that his family be made manifest all the days. And now those who have flowered have defiled my holy things. *Therefore behold the days will come, and I will trample on the flower that was born then and will stop them who transgress the word that I have commanded Moses my servant, saying, 'If you come upon a bird's nest, you shall not take the mother with young.'<sup>d</sup> So it will happen to them that mothers will die with daughters<sup>e</sup> and fathers will perish with sons." *And when Samuel heard these words, his heart grew faint, and he said, "Has it thus fallen to my youth that I should prophesy the destruction of him who nourished me? And now how is it that I have been given according to my mother's prayer? And who has brought me up? How has he commanded me to announce evil as if it were good?" *And Samuel arose in the morning,<sup>f</sup> and he did not wish to tell Eli. And Eli said to him, "Listen now, my son. Behold before you were born, God promised Israel that he would send you to them and that you would prophesy. And then when your mother came here and prayed, because she did not know what had happened, I said to her, 'Go forth, for what will be born from you will be a son for me.' And so I spoke to your mother and so has the LORD guided your life. Even if you should chastise the one who has brought you up, as the LORD lives, do not hide from me whatever you have heard." 1Sam 3:15
- 11 Then Samuel was afraid and told him all the words that he had heard. And he said, "Will the object formed answer back him who formed it? So I cannot answer back when he wishes to take away what he has delivered as a faithful giver. Holy is he who has prophesied, for I am under his power." 1Sam 3:17
1Sam 3:15, 18
Isa 29:16

The capture of the ark and Eli's death

- 1 54 And in those days the Philistines assembled their camp to attack Israel.<sup>a</sup> And the sons of Israel went out to fight with them. And when the people of Israel were put to flight in the first encounter, they said, "Let us bring up the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and perhaps he may fight along with us, because in it are the tablets<sup>b</sup> of the LORD that he established with our fathers on Horeb." *And when the ark went up with them and arrived at the camp, the LORD thundered and said, "This hour will be like that which occurred in the wilderness when they took the ark without my command, and destruction befell them. So also in this hour the people will fall and the ark will be captured in order that I may destroy the enemies of my people on account of the ark and correct my people because they have sinned." *And when the ark had come into the battle, the Philistines 1Sam 4:1-3
1Sam 4:5
1Sam 4:10f.

d. The connection of the sins of Eli's sons with Deut 22:6 is unique to Ps-Philo.

e. Var. "sons"; but the parallelism suggests that "daughters" is preferable.

f. The LXX, the Lucianic MSS, 4Q160, and Ps-Philo have this phrase; the MT of 1Sam 3:15 does not.

54 a. The sentence "And . . . Israel" is absent from the MT of 1Sam 4:1 but is present in the LXX and Lucianic MSS.

b. The tablets of the Decalogue.

went out to meet the sons of Israel and killed them. And Goliath the Philistine was there, and he came up to the ark. And Hophni and Phinehas the sons of Eli and Saul the son of Kish were holding onto the ark. And Goliath took hold of it with his left hand and killed Hophni and Phinehas. •But Saul, because he was swift on his feet, fled from him. <sup>c</sup> And he tore his garments and put ashes on his head. And he came to Eli the priest, and Eli said to him, "Tell me what happened in the camp." And Saul said to him, "Why do you ask me these things? For the people are defeated, and God has rejected Israel, and even the priests have been killed by the sword, and the ark has been delivered to the Philistines." •But when Eli had heard of the capture of the ark, he said, "Behold Samuel prophesied about my sons and about me that we should die together, but he did not mention the ark to me then. And now the tablets of the Law have been delivered to enemies. What more can I say? Behold Israel departs from the truth, <sup>d</sup> because the statutes have been taken away from it." And while Eli was in deep despair, he fell down from his seat. And there died on one day Eli and Hophni and Phinehas his sons. <sup>e</sup> And the wife of Phinehas sat down to give birth. When she heard these things, all her insides were loosened. And the midwife said to her, "Regain your strength, and let not your soul grow faint, because a son is born to you." And the woman said to her, "Behold now this one person is born and four of us die, that is, the father and the two sons and his daughter-in-law." And she called his name "where is glory," <sup>e</sup> saying, "Glory has departed from Israel, <sup>f</sup> because 'he ark of the Lord has been captured.'" And when she had said these words, she gave up her spirit.

1Sam 4:12

1Sam 4:14-17

1Sam 4:18

1Sam 4:19-21

The return of the ark

55 Now Samuel knew nothing of all these matters, because three days before the battle God had sent him forth, saying to him, "Go and look around Ramathaim where your dwelling will be." And when Samuel had heard what had happened to Israel, he came and prayed to the LORD, saying, "Behold now in vain has understanding been denied me, that I should see the destruction<sup>a</sup> of my people. And now I fear lest perhaps my days grow old in evil and my years reach an end in sorrow. Since the ark of the LORD is not with me, why should I go on living?" And the LORD said to him, "Do not be sad, Samuel, because the ark has been taken away. I will bring it back, and I will overturn those who have taken it away, and I will avenge my people from my enemies." And Samuel said, "Behold even if you do take vengeance according to your long-suffering, nevertheless what will we who die now do?" And God said to him, "Before you die, you will see the end that I am bringing upon my enemies, in which the Philistines will be destroyed by scorpions<sup>b</sup> and all evil creeping things and will perish." And when the Philistines had set up the captured ark of the Lord in the temple of Dagon, their god, and when they had come to inquire of Dagon concerning the outcome, <sup>c</sup> they found that he had fallen on his face and his hands and feet were lying before the ark. And on the first morning they went out and crucified his priests. And the next day they came and found it as the day before, and there was a great massacre among them. •And the Philistines gathered in Ekron and said, each to his neighbor, "Behold now we see that destruction is great among us, and the fruit of our womb will perish because the creeping things that have

1Sam 7:17

1Sam 6:4

1Sam 5:2-6

1Sam 5:10f.

c. In identifying Saul with the unnamed man of Benjamin in 1Sam 4:12, Ps-Philo agrees with several rabbinic writings. The word "fled" agrees with the Lucianic MSS.

d. Var. "perishes utterly."

e. That is, Ichabod, which lit. in Heb. is "no glory." The translator may have read 'yh kbwd, "where is glory?" for 'y kbwd, "no glory."

f. Some MSS have "The glory of God in Israel," while others have "The glory of the house of Israel." Our reading of the text is based on 1Sam

4:21.

55 a. All the MSS have "army" (exercitium); we are reading "destruction" (exitium) as being more consistent with the content of the passage.

b. According to 1Sam 6:4 the Philistines are destroyed by mice rather than scorpions. A confusion at the level of Heb. (kbrym meaning "mice" with grbrym meaning "scorpions") is likely.

c. Or "their going forth."

- been sent upon us will destroy those who are with child or sucklings and those who are nursing.” And they said, “Let us see why the hand of the LORD has been heavy upon us. Is it not because of the ark, for our god is found daily falling on his face before the ark? And we have destroyed the priests more than once in vain.” • And the wise men of the Philistines<sup>d</sup> said, “Behold now we can learn about this, if the LORD has sent destruction upon us on account of the ark or an evil power has come upon us by chance. • And now because all who are pregnant and who are nursing are dead, and those who nurse are made childless and those who are nursed perish, let us take cows that give milk and yoke them to a new cart and put the ark on it and shut up their calves. And if the cows in going forth should go forth so as not to turn back to their calves, we will know that we have suffered these things on account of the ark. But if they do not want to go forth out of longing for their calves, we will know that the time of destruction has come upon us.” • And some of the wise men and diviners answered, “Not only will we try this, but also we will set the cows at the juncture of the three roads that are around Ekron. For the middle road goes straight to Ekron and the right-hand one to Judah and the left-hand one to Samaria. And if they set out on the right-hand road and go straight to Judah, we will know indeed that the God of the Jews has destroyed us. But if they go forth by the other roads, we will know that this very violent time has come upon us because now we have denied our own gods.”
- 8 And the Philistines took the cows that gave milk and yoked them to the new cart and put the ark on it and set them at the juncture of the roads and shut up their calves at home. Now the cows, even though they lowed and yearned for their calves, nevertheless were going forth on the right-hand road, which leads to Judah.
- 9 And then they knew they were being destroyed because of the ark. • And all the Philistines gathered together and returned the ark to Shiloh<sup>e</sup> with timbrels and pipes and dances. And in place of the evil creeping things that destroyed them they made golden tumors, and they consecrated the ark. • And on that day the destruction of the Philistines took place. The number of those who were with child and died was seventy-five thousand, and the sucklings sixty-five thousand and those who were giving suck fifty-five thousand, and the men twenty-five thousand. And the land was at peace for seven years.

The people demand a king

- 1 56 And in that time the sons of Israel desired and sought for a king, and they gathered to Samuel and said, “Behold now you are old, and your sons do not walk in your ways. And now appoint over us<sup>a</sup> a king to govern us, because the word has been fulfilled that Moses said to our fathers in the wilderness, saying, 2 ‘Appoint from your brothers a ruler over you.’” • And when Samuel heard talk of a kingdom, he was very sad in his heart and said, “Behold now I see that it is not yet the time for us to have an everlasting kingdom and to build the house of the LORD our God, for these people are seeking a king before the proper time. But even if the LORD so wished it, it seems to me that a king could not be appointed.” • And the LORD said to him by night, “Do not be sad. For I will send them a king who will destroy them, and he himself will be destroyed afterward. Now he who will come to you tomorrow at the sixth hour; he is the one who will rule over them.”
- 4 And on the next day Saul the son of Kish came from the hill country of Ephraim in search of his father’s asses. And when he came to Ramathaim, he went in to inquire from Samuel about the asses. Now he was walking around Bama.<sup>b</sup> And

d. Josephus (Ant 6.1.2 §§8–10) also describes a dispute among the Philistine leaders based on 1Sam 6:2.

e. According to 1Sam 6:12 the Philistines brought the ark to Beth-shemesh.

in agreement with the LXX and Lucianic MSS of 1Sam 8:5.

b. The MSS have Baam. The emendation to Bama is based on the assumption that the Heb. word for “high place” (bāmā) in 1Sam 9:12–14 has been misunderstood, or deliberately misinterpreted, as a proper name.

56 a. Ps-Philo reads “And now” and “over us”

Saul said to him, "Where is he who sees?" Now in that time a prophet was called "one who sees." And Samuel said to him, "I am the one who sees." And he said, "Can you tell me about my father's asses, because they are lost?" And Samuel said to him, "Rest yourself with me today, and I will tell you tomorrow that for which you have come to inquire." • And Samuel said to the LORD, "Direct your people, LORD, and tell me what you have planned for them." And Saul rested himself with Samuel on that day. And he rose up in the morning, and Samuel said to him, "Behold may you know that the Lord has chosen you as ruler for his people in this time and has directed your ways, and your future will also be directed." • And Saul said to Samuel, "Who am I and what is the house of my father that my lord should say to me this word? For I do not understand what you are saying, because I am young." And Samuel said to Saul, "Who will grant that your word be accomplished of itself to the end that you should have a long life? Nevertheless, consider this, that your words will be compared to the words of the prophet whose name will be Jeremiah." • And Saul went away, and on that day the people came to Samuel, saying, "Give us a king as you have promised us." And he said to them, "Behold your king will come to you after three<sup>c</sup> days." And behold Saul came, and all the signs that Samuel had told him happened to him. Are these not written in the Book of Kings?<sup>d</sup>

Saul is presented to the people

57 And Samuel sent and gathered all the people and said to them, "Behold you and your king. But I am in your midst as God has commanded me. • And so before your king I say to you as my lord Moses the servant of God said to your fathers in the wilderness when the company of Korah<sup>a</sup> rose up against him, 'You know that I have not taken anything from you, nor have I harmed anyone of you.' And because they lied then and said, 'You have taken,' the earth swallowed them up. • And now you, who have not been punished by the LORD, answer before the Lord and before his anointed, if you have sought a king because I have treated you badly; and the Lord will be the witness for you. But if now the word of the LORD has been fulfilled, I and the house of my father are free from blame." And the people answered, "We are your servants; but we have a king, because we are not worthy to be governed by a prophet. Now appoint over us a king who will govern us." And all the people and the king wept with a great lamentation and said, "Long live Samuel the prophet!" And when the king was being appointed, they brought sacrifices to the LORD. • And afterward Saul fought with the Philistines in a year of very successful combat.

The sin of Saul

58 And in that time the LORD said to Samuel, "Go and say to Saul, 'You have been sent to destroy Amalek in order that the words that Moses my servant spoke may be fulfilled: "I will destroy the name of Amalek from the earth." I have spoken in my anger. And do not forget to destroy everyone of them as has been commanded to you.'" • And Saul went off and attacked Amalek. And he let Agag, the king of Amalek, live, because he said to him, "I will show you hidden treasures." And on account of this he spared<sup>a</sup> him and let him live and brought him to Ramathaim.<sup>b</sup> • And God said to Samuel, "You have seen how in a short time the king has been corrupted with silver, and he has let the king of Amalek and his wife live. And now let them be, so that Agag may come together with

c. Seven, according to 1Sam 10:8.

d. 1Sam is also referred to in this manner in the LXX tradition.

58 a. Josephus (Ant 6.7.2 §137) says that Saul spared Agag "out of admiration for his beauty and his stature."

b. According to 1Sam 15:12, 21, 33, Agag is brought to Gilgal.

57 a. According to Seder Olam 20 and other rabbinic sources Samuel was a descendant of Korah.

his wife tonight; and you will kill him tomorrow. But his wife they will keep safe until she bears a male child, and then she also will die. And he who will be born from her will become a stumbling block for Saul. <sup>c</sup> Now may you rise up tomorrow and kill Agag, because Saul's sin is written before me all the days." <sup>4</sup> •And when Samuel rose up early in the morning, Saul went out to meet him and said to him, "The LORD has delivered our enemies into our hands just as you have said." And Samuel said to Saul, "How much harm Israel has done because they demanded you for themselves as a king before the time came that a king should rule over them! And you, who were sent to do the will of the LORD, have transgressed it. And so he who was let live by you will die now, and those hidden treasures that he talked about he will not show you, and one who will be born from him will be for you a stumbling block." And Samuel came to Agag, and he had a sword, and Samuel killed Agag<sup>d</sup> and returned to his house.

1Sam 15:12f.

1Sam 15:33f.

The anointing and the psalm of David

<sup>1</sup> 59 And the Lord said to him, "Go, anoint him whom I will tell you, because the time in which his kingdom will come to pass has been fulfilled." And Samuel said, "Behold are you blotting out the kingdom of Saul?" And he said, "I am blotting it out." •And Samuel went forth to Bethel<sup>a</sup> and consecrated elders and Jesse and his sons. And Eliab, the firstborn son of Jesse, came. And Samuel said, "Behold now is this the holy one, the anointed of the Lord?" And the Lord said to him, "Where is your vision that your heart sees? Are you not the one who said to Saul, 'I am the one who sees'? And why do you not know whom you should anoint? And now this reproach is sufficient for you; seek out the least shepherd of all and anoint this one." •And Samuel said to Jesse,<sup>b</sup> "Send and bring your son from the flock, because God has chosen him." And Jesse<sup>c</sup> sent and brought David, and Samuel anointed him in the midst of his brothers. And the LORD was with him from that day. •Then David began to sing this song, and he said,

1Sam 16:1,3

1Sam 16:4-7

1Sam 9:19

1Sam 16:11-13

"From the ends of the earth I will begin my song of glory, and from the days long ago I will take up<sup>d</sup> a hymn.

Ps 61:2

When Abel first shepherded flocks, his sacrifice was more acceptable than that of his brother, and his brother was jealous of him and killed him.

But for me it is not the same, because God has protected me and because he has delivered me to his angels and to his guardians<sup>e</sup> that they should guard me.

For my brothers were jealous of me, and my father and my mother neglected me.

Ps 27:10

And when the prophet came,
they did not call to me.

And when the anointed of the LORD was to be designated,
they forgot me.

But God with his right hand and his mercy drew near to me.

Therefore I will not cease singing praises
all the days of my life."

<sup>5</sup> And while David was still speaking, behold a fierce lion from the forest and a

1Sam 17:34-37

c. See 65:4. That Agag's son was responsible for Saul's death is not found in the biblical account. In Josephus' Ant 11.6.5 §211 Haman (cf. Esth 3:1) is a descendant of Agag.

d. Josephus (Ant 6.7.5 §155) has Samuel give an order for someone else to put Agag to death.

b. Var. "Hear, O Jesse"; but our reading reflects 1Sam 16:11.

c. Only the Lucianic MSS and Ps-Philo specify Jesse as the subject here in 1Sam 16:12.

d. Lit. "say"; confusion between the Gk. airō (take up) and erō (say) is possible.

e. For the angels as guardians, see 11:12 and 15:5.

59 a. According to 1Sam 16:4 the place should be Bethlehem.

bear from the mountain seized the sheep' of David. And David said, "Behold this will be a sign for me as a most striking beginning of my victory in battle. And I am going out after them and will rescue what has been snatched away and kill them." And David went out after them and took stones from the forest and killed them. And God said to him, "Behold with stones I have delivered up these beasts for you. Now this will be a sign for you, because with stones you will kill the enemy<sup>a</sup> of my people later on."

David as exorcist

- 1 60 And in that time the spirit of the Lord was taken away from Saul, and an evil spirit was choking him. And Saul sent and brought David, and he played a song on his lyre by night. And this was the song he played for Saul in order that the evil spirit might depart from him. 1Sam 16:14
1Sam 16:19,23
- 2 "Darkness and silence<sup>a</sup> were before the world was made, and silence spoke a word<sup>b</sup> and the darkness became light. Then your name<sup>c</sup> was pronounced in the drawing together of what had been spread out, the upper of which was called heaven and the lower was called earth. Gen 1:11f. And the upper part was commanded to bring down rain according to its season, and the lower part was commanded to produce food for all things that had been made. And after these was the tribe of your spirits made.
- 3 And now do not be troublesome as one created on the second day.<sup>d</sup> But if not, remember Tartarus where you walk. Or is it not enough for you to hear that, through what resounds before you, I sing to many? Or do you not remember that you were created from a resounding echo in the chaos? But let the new womb from which I was born rebuke you, from which after a time one born from my loins<sup>e</sup> will rule over you."
- And as long as David sang, the spirit spared Saul. 1Sam 16:23

David and Goliath

- 1 61 And after this the Philistines came to fight Israel, and David returned to the wilderness to feed the sheep. And the Midianites happened upon him and wanted to take his sheep. And he went down to them and attacked them, and he killed fifteen thousand of their men.<sup>a</sup> This is the first battle that David fought while he 1Sam 17:15
- 2 was in the wilderness. <sup>a</sup>And a man by the name of Goliath went forth from the camp of the Philistines, and he looked at Saul and at Israel and said, "Are you not the Israel<sup>b</sup> that fled before me when I took the ark from you and killed your priests? And now that you are king, come down like a man and a king, and fight us. If not, I will come to you and take you captive and make your people serve 1Sam 17:4
1Sam 17:9

f. Lit. "bulls"; but see 1Sam 17:34, where the lion and the bear took a lamb from the flock. The tauros of Ps-Philo can be explained as resulting from confusion between sh (lamb) and swr (bull).
g. Goliath. See 61:3.

60 a. The primordial silence is also mentioned in 2Bar 3:7.

b. For speech coming from silence, see IgnMagn 8:2 and GTr 27:10-12.

c. The name of the evil spirit.

d. According to 2En 29:1 the evil spirits were created on the second day, but according to Jub 2:2 on the first day.

e. It is unlikely that this is a reference to the future Messiah (or Jesus), given the lack of interest in such a figure throughout Ps-Philo. Probably this is an allusion to Solomon as exorcist; see WisSol 7:17-22 and especially Josephus' Ant 8.2.5 §§45-49.

61 a. This incident with the Midianites is unique to Ps-Philo.

b. Perhaps Saul or Israelite.

- our gods.”<sup>c</sup> And when Saul and Israel heard these words, they were very much afraid. And the Philistine said, “According to the number of days in which Israel feasted when it received the Law in the wilderness, that is, forty days, so I will ridicule them and afterward I will fight with them.” •And when the forty days had been completed and David came to view his brothers’ battle, he heard the words that the Philistine had spoken and said, “Is this the time about which God said to me, ‘I will deliver into your hands by stones the enemy of my people?’”
- 4 And Saul heard these words and sent and received him and said, “What is this word that you have spoken to the people?” And David said, “Do not fear, King, because I will go and fight the Philistine, and God will take away hatred and reproaches from Israel.”<sup>d</sup> •And David set out, and he took seven<sup>e</sup> stones and wrote on them the names of his fathers (those of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, Moses and Aaron) and his own and the Most Powerful. And God sent Zervihel,<sup>f</sup> the angel in charge of might in warfare. •And David went out to Goliath and said to him, “Hear this word before you die. Were not the two women, from whom you and I were born, sisters? And your mother<sup>g</sup> was Orpah, and my mother Ruth. And Orpah chose for herself the gods of the Philistines and went after them, but Ruth chose for herself the ways of the Most Powerful and walked in them. And now there were born from Orpah you and your brothers. And because you have risen up today and have come to destroy Israel, behold I who am born from your own blood have come to avenge my people. For after your death your three brothers, too, will fall into my hands. Then you will say to your mother, ‘He who was born from your sister has not spared us.’” •And David put a stone in the sling and struck the Philistine on his forehead. And he ran up to him and drew his sword. And Goliath, while he still had life in him, said to him, “Hurry and kill me, and then rejoice.” •And David said to him, “Before you die, open your eyes and see your slayer, the one who has killed you.” And the Philistine looked and saw an angel and said, “Not you alone have killed me, but also the one who is present with you, he whose appearance is not like the appearance of a man.” And then David cut off his head. •Now the angel of the LORD had changed<sup>h</sup> David’s appearance, and no one recognized him. And Saul saw David and asked him who he was, and there was no one who recognized him.

David and Jonathan

- 1 62 And after this Saul was jealous of David, and he sought to kill him. Now David and Jonathan the son of Saul had made a covenant together. And when David saw that Saul<sup>a</sup> was seeking to kill him, he fled to Ramathaim; and Saul went out after him. •And a spirit abided in Saul, and he prophesied, saying, “Why are you led astray, Saul, and whom are you pursuing in vain? The time allotted to your kingdom has been completed. Go to your place. For you will die, and David will reign. Will not you and your son<sup>b</sup> die together? And then the kingdom of David will appear.” And Saul went away and did not know what he had prophesied.
- 3 Now David came to Jonathan and said to him, “Come, and let us make a covenant before we are separated from one another. For Saul, your father, seeks to kill me unjustly, and because he knows that you love me he does not tell you what he is planning about me. •But on account of this he hates me, because you

c. In 1Sam 17:9 Goliath threatens to make Israel serve the Philistines, not the gods of the Philistines as here.

d. For taking away reproaches from Israel, see the LXX and Lucianic MSS of 1Sam 17:36.

e. 1Sam 17:40 speaks of five stones only.

f. See 27:10 for what seems to be the same angel.

g. Here “mother” must mean ancestress.

h. All the MSS have “raised,” which probably reflects an error in reading nš<sup>2</sup> or nsh (raised) for šnh (changed). For the idiom of “changing the face” to avoid recognition, see 7:5 and 64:4.

62 a. All the MSS merely have “he,” but according to 1Sam 19:18–22 and the rest of the story here it must be Saul.

b. But according to 1Sam 31:6 Saul dies with his three sons.

love me and in order that I may not reign in his place. And when I gave him good things, he paid me back with bad things. And when I killed Goliath according to the word of the Most Powerful, see the end that he planned for me, for he determined to destroy my father's house. And would that the judgment of truth might be placed in the balance so that the many prudent people might hear the decision. •And now I fear that he will kill me, that he will lose his own life on my account. For I never have shed innocent blood, and why does my soul suffer persecution? For I, the least among my brothers, was tending sheep, and why should I be in danger of death? For I am just and have no wickedness, and why does your father hate me? But the righteousness of my father<sup>c</sup> helps me so that I should not fall into the hands of your father. And since I am young and tender of days, in vain does Saul envy me. •If I had harmed him, I would ask that he forgive me these sins; because if God forgives wicked deeds, how much more should your father, who is flesh and blood. I have walked in his household with a perfect heart, and like a swift eagle I was brought before him. I put my hands to the lance, and I blessed him with songs. But he made plans to kill me, and like a sparrow who flees before the hawk, so I fled from him. •To whom did I say these words, or to whom have I told what I have suffered, except to you and Michal, your sister? As for the two of us, let us go forth together in truth. •And it would have been better, brother, if I had been slain in battle than that I should fall into the hands of your father. For in the battle my eyes were looking everywhere that I might protect him from his enemies. Jonathan my brother, hear my words. And if there is wickedness in me, correct me."

Ps 151(LXX)

1Sam 20:8

9 And Jonathan answered and said to David, "Come to me, my brother David, and I will tell you of your righteousness. My soul will pine away in sadness over you, because we are now separated from each other. And our sins have caused this, that we should be separated from each other; but let us be mindful of one another night and day while we live. Even if death separates us, I know that our souls will know each other.<sup>d</sup> For yours is a kingdom in this world, and from you is the beginning of a kingdom which will come in its own time. •And now like an infant who is taken away from the milk of its mother, so will our separation be. Be a witness, heaven, and be a witness, earth, for those words that we have exchanged; and let us weep each one over the other, and let us collect our tears into one vessel and consign that vessel to the earth, and it will be a testimony for us." •And they wept, one over the other, and they kissed one another. But Jonathan was afraid, and he said to David, "Let us remember, my brother, the covenant begun between us and the oath set in our heart. And if I die before you and you are king as the LORD has said, do not remember the anger of my father but your covenant that has been established between me and you. Do not remember the hatred with which my father hates you in vain but my love with which I have loved you. Do not remember that my father was ungrateful toward you, but remember the table at which we ate together. Do not hold on to the jealousy with which he was jealous of you so evilly but the truth that you and I have. Do not care about the lie that Saul has lied but the oaths that we have sworn to one another." •And they kissed each other. And after this David<sup>e</sup> went off into the wilderness, and Jonathan entered the city.

1Sam 20:23

1Sam 20:41f.

The death of Abimelech

1 63 In that time the priests who dwelt in Nob were profaning the holy things of the LORD and desecrating<sup>a</sup> the first fruits of the people. And God was angry and

1Sam 22:18f.

c. In the rabbinic tradition Jesse, David's father, is one of the four righteous men who did not die because of their own sins but because the serpent caused Adam and Eve to sin. The present sentence contrasts Jesse's righteousness with Saul's unrighteousness.

d. For the dead recognizing one another at the resurrection, see 2Bar 50:3f.

e. All texts except the MT specify David as the subject in 1Sam 20:42 (21:1 in the MT).

63 a. We are reading expropriantes for exprobanies, which is found in all the MSS.

said, "Behold I will blot out those dwelling in Nob, because they walk in the 2 ways of the sons of Eli."<sup>b</sup> • And in that time Doeg the Syrian,<sup>c</sup> who was in charge of Saul's mules, came and said to him, "Do you not know that Abimelech the priest is making plans with David, and he has given him a sword and has let him go in peace?" And Saul sent and called Abimelech and said to him, "You will surely die, because you have made a plot with my enemy." And Saul<sup>d</sup> killed Abimelech and the house of his father, and not one of his tribe was saved except Abiathar his son. And he went off to David and told him all that had happened
 3 to him. • And he said to him, "Behold in the year when Saul began to reign, when Jonathan had sinned and he<sup>e</sup> wanted to kill him, this people rose up and did not let him. And now when 385<sup>f</sup> priests are killed, they are silent and say nothing. And so behold the days will come soon, and I will deliver them into the hands of their enemies, and they will fall wounded with their king." • And the LORD said these things about<sup>g</sup> Doeg the Syrian: "Behold the days will come soon, and a fiery worm<sup>h</sup> will go up into his tongue and make him rot away, and his dwelling place will be with Jair in the inextinguishable fire forever." • All the things that Saul did, and the rest of his words, and how he pursued David, are they not written in the Book of the Kings of Israel?

1Sam 22:9-13, 16-21

1Sam 14:45

1Sam 22:18

1Sam 31

The witch of Endor

1 64 And after this Samuel died, and all Israel gathered together and wept over him and buried him. Then Saul thought and said, "Because I am to expel the wizards from the land of Israel, they<sup>a</sup> will be mindful of me after my departure." And Saul scattered all the wizards from the land. And God said, "Behold Saul has not driven the wizards out of the land for fear of me, but to make a name for himself.<sup>b</sup> Behold he will go to those whom he has scattered, to obtain divination
 2 from them, because he has no prophets." • And then the Philistines said, each to his neighbor, "Behold Samuel the prophet is dead, and who prays for Israel? And David, who fought on their behalf, is Saul's enemy, and he is not with them. And now let us rise up and go and fight and attack them and avenge the blood of 3 our fathers." And the Philistines gathered together and came for battle. • And when Saul saw that Samuel was dead and David was not with him, his hands grew faint, and he inquired of the Lord, but he did not listen to him. And he sought out prophets, and none appeared to him. And Saul said to the people, "Let us seek out some medium and inquire of him what I should plan out." And the people answered him, "Behold now there is a woman, Sedecla<sup>c</sup> by name, and this is the daughter of the Midianite diviner<sup>d</sup> who led the people of Israel astray
 4 with sorceries, and behold she dwells in Endor. • And Saul put on his worst clothes and went off to her, he and two men with him, by night and said to her, "Raise up Samuel for me." She said, "I fear King Saul." And Saul said to her, "You will not be harmed by Saul in this matter." And Saul said to himself, "When I was king in Israel, even if the gentiles did not see me, they knew nevertheless that I was Saul." And Saul asked the woman, saying, "Have you ever seen Saul?" She said, "I have seen him often." Saul went outside and wept and said,

1Sam 28:3; 25:1

1Sam 28:3

1Sam 28:4
1Sam 28:5-7

1Sam 28:8-11

b. Josephus (Ant 6.12.6 §260) also connects the death of the priests with the iniquities of Eli's sons, but he does not say that they themselves did wrong as Ps-Philo does.

c. Ps-Philo agrees with the LXX and Josephus in making Doeg an Aramean (or Syrian) rather than an Edomite as in the MT of 1Sam 22:9.

d. According to 1Sam 22:18 Doeg, not Saul, does the killing.

e. Saul, according to 1Sam 14:45.

f. According to 1Sam 22:18 the number of priests killed was 385 (Josephus), 85 (MT), 305 (LXX), 350 (Lucianic MSS).

g. Lit. "to"; but the statement is cast in the third person, and so there may have been confusion between the Heb. 'l (to) and 'l (about).

h. On being eaten by worms. see 44:9.

64 a. Var. "he will be mindful."

b. Ps-Philo is unique in attributing the expulsion of the sorcerers to Saul's selfishness.

c. Ps-Philo alone gives this name, Sedecla, to the witch of Endor.

d. An emendation. Most MSS have "Adod the Midianite," who may be Aod of ch. 34.

5 "Behold now I know that my appearance has been changed, and the glory of my kingdom has passed from me." *And when the woman saw Samuel rising up and she saw Saul<sup>e</sup> with him, she shouted out and said, "Behold you are Saul, and why have you deceived me?" And he said to her, "Do not be afraid, but tell<sup>f</sup> what you have seen." She said, "Behold forty years have passed since I began raising up the dead for the Philistines, but such a sight as this has never been seen 6 before nor will it be seen afterward." *And Saul<sup>g</sup> said to her, "What is his appearance?" She said, "You are asking me about divine beings. For behold his appearance is not the appearance of a man. For he is clothed in a white robe<sup>h</sup> with a mantle placed over it, and two angels<sup>i</sup> are leading him." And Saul remembered the mantle that Samuel tore when he was alive, and he struck his 7 hand on the ground and pounded it. *And Samuel said to him, "Why have you disturbed me by raising me up? I thought that the time for being rendered the rewards of my deeds had arrived.<sup>j</sup> And so do not boast, King, nor you, woman; for you have not brought me forth, but that order that God spoke to me while I was still alive, that I should come and tell you that you have sinned now a second time in neglecting God. Therefore after rendering up my soul my bones have been disturbed so that I who am dead should tell you what I heard while I was alive. 8 Now therefore tomorrow you and your sons will be with me<sup>k</sup> when the people have been delivered into the hands of the Philistines; and because your insides 9 were eaten up with jealousy, what is yours will be taken from you." *And Saul heard the words of Samuel and grew faint and said, "Behold I am going to die with my sons; perhaps my destruction will be an atonement<sup>l</sup> for my wickedness." And Saul rose up and went away from there.

1Sam 28:12f.

1Sam 28:13f.

1Sam 15:27
1Sam 28:14
1Sam 28:15

1Sam 28:19

1Sam 28:25

The death of Saul

1 65 And the Philistines attacked Israel, and Saul went out for battle, and Israel fled before the Philistines. And Saul seeing that the battle was very fierce said in his heart, "Why are you strengthening yourself for life when Samuel has announced 2 death for you along with your sons?" *And Saul said to his armor-bearer, "Take your sword and kill me before the Philistines come and abuse me." And the 3 armor-bearer was not willing to lay his hands upon him. *But he fell upon his own sword, without being able to die. And he looked behind him. He saw a man running, and he called him and said, "Take your sword and kill me; there is still 4 life in me." *And he came to kill him. And Saul said to him, "Before you kill me, tell me who you are." And he said to him, "I am Edabus, son of Agag, king of the Amalekites." And Saul said, "Behold now the words of Samuel have come to pass upon me, because he said, 'He who is born of Agag will be a 5 stumbling block for you.'<sup>a</sup> *Now go and tell David, 'I have killed your enemy.' And you will say to him, 'Be not mindful of my hatred or my injustice.'"

1Sam 31:1,3

1Sam 31:4

1Sam 31:4

2Sam 1:7

2Sam 1:9

2Sam 1:10

2Sam 1:8,13

2Sam 1:10

e. Some LXX MSS of 1Sam 28:12 report that the woman saw Saul, but the other texts say that she saw Samuel. Ps-Philo appears to combine the two.

f. By including "tell" Ps-Philo stands with the LXX and the Lucianic MSS of 1Sam 28:13.

g. The inclusion of "Saul" is found only in the Lucianic MSS of 1Sam 28:14.

h. The white shroud in which he was buried.

i. Cf. GPet 10 (39f.), where two angels lead Christ out of the tomb.

j. The day of judgment.

k. In death.

l. In rabbinic literature Saul's death is an atonement for his sins, but Josephus (Ant 6.14.4 §349) attributes his death to desire for fame after death.

65 a. See 58:4.

THE LIVES OF THE PROPHETS

(First Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY D. R. A. HARE

“The names of the prophets, and where they are from, and where they died and how, and where they lie”—with these phrases the major manuscript, Codex Marchalianus, summarizes the content of the brief document now known as The Lives of the Prophets. In some sections all the information given fits this summary. In others the scheme is expanded to include legendary information not contained in the Scriptures (Jonah was the son of the widow of Zarephath visited by Elijah, 1Kgs 17!—10:4–6) and prophecies or “signs” attributed to the prophet that are not found in the canon. Non-canonical miracles are also reported. In a few instances canonical narratives are included. The collection treats the three major and twelve minor prophets and Daniel, and seven non-literary prophets whose activities are reported in the Bible.

Texts

The Lives of the Prophets is extant in a number of versions, including Syriac, Ethiopic, Latin, and Armenian, but all are dependent upon Greek originals. There are an abundance of Greek manuscripts, the most important of these are the following:

Codex Marchalianus, Cod. Vaticanus Gk. 2125, sixth century, in the Vatican library; it is referred to as Q. It is the most important member of the group of manuscripts constituting the “anonymous recension.”<sup>1</sup>

Codex Paris. Gk. 1115, copied in 1276, now in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris; because it is the chief witness for the longer of the two recensions attributed to Epiphanius of Salamis, it will be referred to as E<sup>1</sup>.

Codex Coisl. 120, tenth century, Bibliothèque Nationale (Fonds Coislin), Paris; since it is the leading representative of the short recension attributed to Epiphanius, it will be referred to as E<sup>2</sup>.

Codex Vindob. Theol. Gk. 40 (formerly 77), thirteenth century, Vienna; because it is the best example of the recension attributed to Dorotheus, it will be cited as D.

Codex Coisl. 224, tenth century, Bibliothèque Nationale (Fonds Coislin), Paris; a member of the “anonymous recension,” it generally agrees with Q. No siglum is used for this manuscript, because it is used infrequently.

The text is well preserved in these manuscripts (Coisl. 224 is defective in the section on Daniel), but they differ widely regarding the order in which the prophets are treated and in respect to which non-literary prophets are included.

The translation here presented is based almost entirely upon Q, which is generally regarded as best representing the earliest Greek version of this work.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> This term distinguishes Q and its dependents from the many MSS that attribute the work to Epiphanius or Dorotheus.

<sup>2</sup> A critical text of Q is presented by T. Schermann, Prophetarum vitae fabulosae indices apostolorum discipulorumque Domini Dorotheo, Epiphanio, Hippolyto alisque vindicate, pp. 68–98. With this was compared the text of Q as printed by E. Nestle, Marginalien und Materialien. Discussions of the major recensions and their chief witnesses

Original language

It is believed by many that The Lives of the Prophets was originally written in one of the Semitic languages. A few scholars have proposed that the original language was Syriac, but this position has won few supporters.<sup>3</sup> More widespread is the view, vigorously defended by C. C. Torrey, that the book was composed in Hebrew.<sup>4</sup> The Israeli scholar S. Klein suggests that either Aramaic or Hebrew may have been the original language.<sup>5</sup> T. Schermann posits a Hebrew ancestor but opposes the view that the earliest Greek version was simply a translation from Hebrew.<sup>6</sup>

Two arguments count against the hypothesis of a Semitic original. First, the evidence of mistranslation is not substantial.<sup>7</sup> Secondly, there are several instances in which the text is closer to the Greek version of the Jewish Scriptures than to the Hebrew.<sup>8</sup> In the absence of compelling evidence to the contrary, it is best to assume that the Palestinian traditions included in this document first attained literary form in Greek.<sup>9</sup>

Date

It is very difficult to date a document of this kind, not only because it contains very few allusions to contemporary events, but also because it was an open-ended collection that invited additions.

The document is extant in Christian manuscripts only. Not a scrap of it has been identified at Qumran, and there is no reference to it in other Jewish literature. Nevertheless, the basic material has been so little influenced by Christian beliefs that scholars are generally agreed that the original writing was created by a Jew. Because it was transmitted by Christians, however, it is not surprising that the manuscripts contain a good deal of Christian material. In D, for example, each section is prefaced with prophecies concerning the Messiah attributed to the prophet in question, to which are appended in some instances references to the use of these prophecies in the New Testament. E<sup>1</sup> adds sections dealing with Zechariah the father of John the Baptist, Simeon of Luke 2:25–35, and John the Baptist. A few manuscripts dependent upon Q, including Coisl. 224, contain an account of the martyrdom of "Simon, son of Clopus, the cousin of the LORD." Q contains no Christian additions of either of these two types, but Christian interpolations of a more subtle kind are suspected at various points, some of which will be referred to in the notes.<sup>10</sup>

On the assumption that the basic work was created by a non-Christian Jew, it is still difficult to establish limits for his activity, but the evidence suggests a date within the first century A.D. Some of the traditions are undoubtedly ancient, but it seems unlikely that the basic collection originated as early as the Maccabean period. Nor is there any certain evidence that the document dates from after the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple in may be found in T. Schermann, Propheten- und Apostellegenden nebst Jüngerkatalogen der Dorotheus und verwandter Texte, pp. 1–133; A.-M. Denis, Introduction, pp. 85–88; C. C. Torrey, The Lives of the Prophets, pp. 4–6.

<sup>3</sup> The leading proponent was I. H. Hall, "The Lives of the Prophets," JBL 7 (1887) 38f.

<sup>4</sup> Lives, p. 7; Torrey also cites earlier advocates of this view.

<sup>5</sup> "'al ha-seper Vitae Prophetarum," Sefer Klozner, ed. H. Torczyner, 209.

<sup>6</sup> Propheten- und Apostellegenden, pp. 131f.

<sup>7</sup> Cf. n. c on 1:1. Torrey's brilliant conjecture concerning the argolai of 2:7 (Lives, p. 49; see below, n. k on 2:7) does not provide evidence of translation from a Heb. original; if the passage is not a gloss, the author may simply be transmitting a tradition popular among Gk.-speaking Jews of Egypt. The evidence of mistranslation in 4:10 is impressive (see n. f) but is not in itself sufficient to justify the hypothesis.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. n. j on 4:15, n. f on 12:12, and nn. k and l on 21:13–14. The use of "Sybatha" in 20:1 seems to reflect a tradition based on the Heb. text (see n. c), but awareness of such a tradition on the part of a Palestinian author would not justify the inference that he wrote in Heb. (or Aram.).

<sup>9</sup> Concerning the use of Gk. by Palestinian Jews, cf. J. N. Sevenster, Do You Know Greek? (Leiden, 1968); A. R. C. Leaney, "Greek Manuscripts from the Judean Desert," Studies in New Testament Language and Text, ed. J. K. Elliott (Leiden, 1976) pp. 283–300.

<sup>10</sup> M. de Jonge, "Christelijke Elementen in de Vitae Prophetarum," Nederlands Theologisch Tijdschrift 16 (1961–62) 164, raises the possibility that Melito or Hegesippus assembled the material while traveling in the Near East, and, in conjunction with Christian editing, first presented it to the world as a literary document.

A.D. 70.<sup>11</sup> A date after the emergence of gentile Christianity may be required if the prophecy in 2:13 concerning gentiles worshiping a piece of wood is an expression of Jewish disgust at the idolatrous veneration of the cross by gentile Christians, but it seems more probable that this is a Christian interpolation.

Of greater relevance to the question of the date are two passages that seem to imply specific historical situations. If the passage concerning Isaiah's grave indicates that in the author's perspective the so-called spring of Siloam is outside the wall of Jerusalem, a date prior to the erection of the new south wall by Herod Agrippa (A.D. 41–44) is required.<sup>12</sup> On the other hand, the author may simply be reflecting an awareness of the fact that the Herodian wall is of very recent date, and therefore this passage cannot be pressed as certain evidence for a date prior to A.D. 41.

More convincing evidence of a first-century date is provided by a phrase in 21:1, "Elijah, a Thesbite from the land of the Arabs." That is, from the author's perspective, Elijah's Transjordanian birthplace lay within the area under Nabatean political control. Since Nabatean hegemony was terminated in A.D. 106 by Trajan, it is probable that our author wrote at an earlier date.

Although demonstration is impossible, it would appear that the most probable date is the first quarter of the first century A.D., when interest in the erection of monuments for prophets and other national heroes, encouraged in part by Herod's construction of an expensive memorial of white marble at the entrance to David's tomb (Josephus, Ant 16.7.1 §182) began to gain momentum. One may hazard the guess that this little document preceded, and perhaps even contributed toward, the peaking of this movement. The saying of Jesus in Luke 11:47, "Alas for you who build the tombs of the prophets, the men your ancestors killed!" (cf. Mt 23:29), implies that memorials had been erected recently for certain martyred prophets. Jeremias argues that Jesus was alluding most probably to monuments in honor of Isaiah and Zechariah son of Jehoiada, the only prophets to whom tradition had attributed a Jerusalem martyrdom and burial.<sup>13</sup> While The Lives of the Prophets 1:8 suggests that a monument had been erected for Isaiah (cf. n. 1 on 1:8), there is no suggestion that this was of recent date. Respecting the burial of Zechariah son of Jehoiada, on the other hand, our text betrays no awareness of a monument (cf. 23:1 and n. d). If Jesus' saying does in fact point to such a construction, it can be inferred that our author wrote prior to the time of Jesus' public ministry.

Provenance

It is most probable that the writing originated in Palestine. Not only does the author apparently have accurate geographical information, but also his perspective seems to be that of a resident in Judea. Torrey argues that the author is an inhabitant of Jerusalem, because of the naturalness with which he speaks of "the city" when referring to Jerusalem.<sup>14</sup> Since it is possible, however, that Jews resident elsewhere in Palestine sometimes spoke in this way, it is necessary to be cautious. In any case, the author seems to be particularly well informed regarding Jerusalem. The details he gives concerning the site of Isaiah's grave in relation to other local landmarks suggest great familiarity with, if not actual residence in, the Holy City.

Did the work originate among hellenistic Jews of Palestine? Sometimes the document reflects dependence upon the Hebrew text of the Bible, at other points it clearly evidences familiarity with a Greek translation.<sup>15</sup> It is important in this connection to remember that in <sup>11</sup> The prediction of 12:11 that the Temple will be destroyed by a Western nation was probably understood as referring to the Romans, but nothing requires that it be taken as a prophecy after the fact; the accompanying statements have the ring of unfulfilled predictions. Similarly, the prophecy of 10:11 is best taken as reflecting an earlier situation, not the bitter experience of A.D. 70 (see n. on 10:11).

<sup>12</sup> See 1:1–8 and n. i.

<sup>13</sup> J. Jeremias, Heiligengräber in Jesu Umwelt, pp. 66, 68. Jeremias seems to infer that since there were no graves of martyr-prophets in Galilee, Transjordan, or Samaria, and because the graves of Micah and Amos were honored in southern Judea beyond the area of Jesus' travels, it can be assumed that Jesus' saying alludes to the Jerusalem martyrs.

<sup>14</sup> Lives, p. 11.

<sup>15</sup> Sybaitha in 20:1 and Spharphōtim in 16:3 suggest acquaintance with the Scriptures in Heb. (see nn. on these passages). On the other hand, the use of Baltasar as a name both for Nebuchadnezzar's crown prince and for Daniel depends on LXX (see 4:4, 15 and n.).

the first century A.D. a large number of Palestinian Jews were bilingual or trilingual, and well able to use Greek as a literary medium. In the absence of clear proof to the contrary, it may be supposed that The Lives of the Prophets reflects bilingual Palestinian Judaism.

Theological importance

Perhaps the main reason why this early writing has so seldom been translated into English and has not heretofore been included in English collections of Jewish apocryphal and pseudepigraphical writings is that it contains so little of interest to biblical theologians. Religious edification is not its prime purpose, and consequently theological themes are for the most part dealt with only indirectly.

The document is "orthodox" in the sense that it assumes the biblical view that there is but one God, who is LORD of history and Savior of his people, and that the rulership of God is manifested in natural disasters and in miracles (1:2-8; 2:3-4). Abnormal natural occurrences are taken as signs, provided by God and announced through his prophets, of forthcoming historical events (3:5; 4:19-20).

Angels, though seldom mentioned, are obviously taken for granted as an important means of communication between God and his people (12:12; 16:2-3; 23:2; the men "of shining white appearance" of 21:2 are presumably angels). Demons are never referred to, but Satan appears three times in the text under the name "Beliar" (4:6, 20; 17:2), a designation often used in the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs and in the Qumran literature, and occurring once in the New Testament (2Cor 6:15).<sup>16</sup> Another designation for the prince of evil is "the serpent" (12:13); the closest parallel to this is provided by Revelation 12:9, 17 (ApMos 16:5 prefers to render the snake of Gen 3 as Satan's "vessel"). Satan is also alluded to as "the enemy" (2:15), as in the Testament of Daniel 6:3f. and Luke 10:19 (cf. Mt 13:39). Thus it can be affirmed that dualism is present in the document, but it is by no means emphasized.

Ethics and the related theological topics of guilt, punishment, and expiation are not a major concern in this writing. It is assumed that it is proper to live in accordance with the law (2:18; 3:16; 17:1), but there is no attempt to preach this by reference to God's acts in history. Although the historical narratives of the canonical books of Kings and of Chronicles are the source of anecdotal material, the central theological theme of these books, namely that God punishes those who fail to keep his law and rewards those who observe it, has not greatly influenced this document. It is particularly striking that in a book that purports to relate the martyrdoms of six prophets there is no allusion to the popular theme that Israel has always persecuted God's prophets (cf. 2Chr 24:19; 36:14-16; Neh 9:26; Jub 1:12).<sup>17</sup> Only in the case of Jeremiah is the martyrdom attributed in generalized terms to his "people," i.e. Israel (see 2:1 and n.), and even here there is no theological reflection on the corporate guilt thus incurred. Also significant is the fact that the "moral thunder" of the prophetic writings, so much appreciated by modern readers, has left almost no trace (cf. 6:2). It is very evident that the author's interest in the prophets relates not to their importance as ethical teachers but, rather, to their numinous quality as workers of miracles, intercessors, and foretellers of future events.

The doctrine of the resurrection is assumed without argument or polemic (2:15; 3:12). It is further assumed that important symbols of Israel's worship will reappear in the age to come. In connection with his concealment of the ark of the covenant and its contents prior to the destruction of the first Temple, Jeremiah is said to have declared:

This ark no one is going to bring out except Aaron, and none of the priests or prophets will any longer open the tablets in it except Moses, God's chosen one. And in the resurrection the ark will be the first to be resurrected and will come out of the rock and be placed on Mount Sinai, and all the saints will be gathered to it there . . . (2:14f.)

<sup>16</sup> For a helpful discussion of the significance of Belial (Beliar) in the Dead Sea Scrolls, cf. H. Ringgren, The Faith of Qumran, trans. E. T. Sander (Philadelphia, 1963) pp. 74f., 91f.

<sup>17</sup> L. Ginzberg, The Legends of the Jews, vol. 4, p. 295, cites a haggadah in which the young Jeremiah declares, "O LORD, I cannot go as a prophet to Israel, for when lived there a prophet whom Israel did not desire to kill?"

Similarly, Habakkuk prophesies that the capitals of the pillars of the second Temple will be restored at the commencement of the age to come as sources of illumination for those being pursued by the serpent (12:12f.).

Of special interest to students of Jewish eschatology is the designation of Moses as "God's chosen one" (2:14), in view of the fact that the same words are employed as a designation of the Messiah by Jesus' enemies in Luke's passion narrative (Lk 23:35). Since the Messiah is nowhere mentioned in the oldest version of The Lives of the Prophets, it can be argued that its author adhered to that segment of Jewish eschatology which expected not a Davidic but a Mosaic deliverer. Also fascinating is the assertion that Elijah "will judge Israel" (21:3, to which most MSS apart from Q add "with sword and fire"). This provides valuable evidence of the belief that God will execute his judgment by means of one or more human deputies, and makes more understandable the parallel assertions of the New Testament (e.g. Mt 19:28; Acts 17:31; 1Cor 6:2f.). The idea that Elijah will function as eschatological judge may underlie the prediction attributed to John the Baptist concerning the one who will baptize with fire (Mt 3:11f.; Lk 3:16f.).

Despite a strong belief in a future resurrection it is perhaps even more strongly believed that the righteous dead are still alive in a very real sense. In 1:8 it is asserted that the martyred Isaiah is the patron saint of Siloam, through whose prayers the water continues to flow, and it is apparently the numinous presence of Jeremiah at his grave that makes the soil effective for the healing of asps' bites (2:4). With this must be compared the early Christian belief that the righteous dead are transported to a place of blessedness before the final resurrection (Lk 16:22-24; 23:43; Phil 1:23; Rev 6:9f.; cf. Mk 12:26f.) and thus are to be conceived of as already alive and not merely "sleeping" in the earth. No consistency is attempted in our text relative to the location of this post-mortem existence. On the one hand it is assumed that the dead prophet's lively existence is to be experienced at his grave; on the other, a heavenly residence is suggested by the statement that Jeremiah and Moses "are together to this day" (2:19), despite the fact that their supposed graves are widely separated.

Relation to canonical books

Although the author is thoroughly familiar with the biblical narratives concerning the prophets given in Kings and Chronicles and the prophetic books, it is evident that he wishes to provide supplementary information rather than simply to repeat canonical material. For this reason, the long summaries of the "signs" performed by Elijah and Elisha (21:4-14; 22:4-17) must be suspected of being later additions.<sup>18</sup>

There is no indication that the book was known to any of the New Testament writers, but the author of the Letter to the Hebrews seems to have been aware of some of the traditions here recorded. The statement of Hebrews 11:37, "They were stoned, or sawn in half, or beheaded," appears to refer to the popular legends concerning the martyrdoms of the three major prophets Jeremiah, Isaiah, and Ezekiel respectively.<sup>19</sup> Our document explicitly states that Jeremiah was stoned (2:1) and that Isaiah "died under Manasseh by being sawn in two" (1:1) but is less explicit regarding Ezekiel. We are told only that "The ruler of the people Israel killed him . . ." (3:2).

The saying of Jesus regarding the erection of monuments in honor of martyred prophets (Mt 23:29; Lk 11:47) has no direct point of contact with The Lives of the Prophets, which mentions no recent monuments, but it supports our text by providing evidence of the contemporary interest in the graves of the prophets.

The belief that the holy martyrs are able to present petitions to God, evidenced in Revelation 6:9-11, is probably to be seen as related to the conception of the prophets as intercessors, as witnessed by 1:8.<sup>20</sup>

Relation to apocryphal books

A much fuller account of Isaiah's murder is provided by the Martyrdom of Isaiah, but the latter makes no mention of the burial or its location. There is no evidence of dependency in either direction. The functions of the two narratives are very different. Whereas the point of the much longer version is to edify, the intention of the brief account given here is simply to note that Isaiah is a martyr, because this fact is significant for the cult connected with his grave.

<sup>18</sup> Cf. Torrey, Lives, pp. 3f. and n. on 21:4.

<sup>19</sup> See n. on 3:2.

<sup>20</sup> Cf. Jeremias, Heiligengräber, pp. 133-38.

The legend concerning the concealment of the ark and its contents in a cliff by Jeremiah (2:11–19) has parallels in 2 Maccabees 2:4–8 and 4 Baruch 3:8 without any indication of borrowing. It must be assumed that the tradition circulated in variant forms in the folklore of Palestine.

Many of the legends here recorded have parallels in the haggadah of rabbinic Judaism, as will be indicated in the notes.

Cultural importance

The Lives of the Prophets has had little influence upon Western culture, but it throws indirect light on the Christian practice of the veneration of the saints, which is frequently reflected in the art and literature of the Western world. No attempt can be made here to pursue the question of the origin of the practice, but it is clear that we have in this document evidence that one of the roots lies in the Jewish veneration of the holy dead.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 175–77.

Delling, Bibliographie, p. 172.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 85–90.

Ginzberg, L. The Legends of the Jews. Translated by H. Szold. 7 vols.; Philadelphia, 1909–38. (This invaluable collection provides ample evidence that many if not most of the legends transmitted in LivPro have parallels in rabbinic and other Jewish sources.)

Jeremias, J. Heiligengräber in Jesu Umwelt. Göttingen, 1958. (This is the fullest study available of holy graves in Jewish Palestine. Jeremias carefully compares the literary data provided by LivPro and early pilgrims with the available archaeological evidence.)

Jonge, M. de. "Christelijke Elementen in de Vitae Prophetarum," Nederlands Theologisch Tijdschrift 16 (1961–62) 161–78. (De Jonge argues that the Christian elements are far more pervasive than many have believed, and that this collection of Jewish traditions may have first attained literary form in a Christian context.)

Klein, S. "'al ha-seper Vitae Prophetarum," Sefer Klozner, edited by H. Torczyner. Tel Aviv, 1937; 189–208. (A critical analysis of LivPro in Heb., with special attention to matters of geography.)

Nestle, E. Marginalien und Materialien. Tübingen, 1893. (On opposite pages Nestle presents the Gk. text of Q and E', with a list of the variant readings of three Syr. MSS.)

Schermann, T. Prophetarum vitae fabulosae indices apostolorum discipulorumque Domini Dorotheo, Epiphanio, Hippolyto aliisque vindicate. Leipzig, 1907. (A critical text of each of the major Gk. recensions, with an extensive apparatus giving the more important variants.)

———. Propheten- und Apostellegenden nebst Jünger katalogen des Dorotheus und verwandter Texte. TU 31.3. Leipzig, 1907. (An indispensable study of the texts and versions of LivPro.)

Simon, M. "Les Saints d'Israël dans la dévotion de l'Église ancienne," RHPR 34 (1954) 98–127. (A study of the influence of Jewish veneration of the graves of heroes and prophets upon the early Church.)

Torrey, C. C. The Lives of the Prophets. Greek Text and Translation. Philadelphia, 1946. (The most important English study. The translation assumes that the Gk. text contains a number of difficulties which are due to mistranslation from an underlying Heb. text.)

THE LIVES OF THE PROPHETS

The names of the prophets, and where they are from, and where they died and how, and where they lie.

Isaiah

- 1 1 Isaiah, from Jerusalem, died under Manasseh by being sawn in two,<sup>a</sup> and was buried<sup>b</sup> underneath the Oak of Rogel,<sup>c</sup> near the place where the path crosses the 2 aqueduct whose water Hezekiah shut off by blocking its source.<sup>d</sup> • And God worked the miracle<sup>e</sup> of Siloam for the prophet's sake, for, being faint<sup>f</sup> before he died, he 3 prayed for water to drink, and immediately it was sent to him from it; therefore it is called Siloam, which means "sent."<sup>g</sup> • And in the time of Hezekiah, before 4 he made the cisterns and the pools, in response to the prayer of Isaiah a little water came out, for the nation was besieged by foreigners and (this happened) in 5 order that the city might not perish for lack of water.<sup>h</sup> • For the enemies were asking, "From where are they drinking?" • And having the city under siege they 6 were encamped at Siloam.<sup>i</sup> • If, then, the Jews were coming, water would come 7 out, but if foreigners (approached), (it would) not. • Wherefore to this day it comes

Martins 5:1-5

1 a. Cf. b. Yeb 49b, y. Sanh 10:28c, 37. Heb 11:37 witnesses to the pre-Christian origin of this legend.

b. Lit. "placed."

c. Possibly "Fuller's Oak." A common practice associated holy graves with trees, with oaks given special preference (Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 120). Torrey, Lives, pp. 10f., supports the conjecture that an error occurred in translating the underlying Heb. into Gk. and that the original referred to 'én rōgēl, i.e. the Fountain of Rogel. Since a major point of the following narrative is to present Isaiah as the patron spirit of the Spring of Siloam, it is hardly likely that he was buried at 'én rōgēl, now known as Jacob's Well, which is situated about 400 meters south of Siloam. If the Fuller's Field (Isa 7:3) was situated in this area (cf. Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 64), it is not at all unlikely that a tree along the path descending the hill above Siloam should be known as "Fuller's Oak."

d. Lit. "near the crossing of the waters that Hezekiah destroyed by blocking them." Torrey, Lives, p. 34, translates diabaseōs as "conduit," apparently taking it as an allusion to the ancient aqueduct that descended Ophel above the Kidron valley from Gihon to the Lower Pool. Since this water system was entirely outside the city wall, Hezekiah blocked the source so as to deprive invading enemies of a convenient source of water (2Chr 32:3, 4, 30; cf. Isa 8:6). F.-M. Abel (H. Vincent and F.-M. Abel, Jerusalem [2 vols.; Paris, 1912–26] vol. 2, p. 857) insists that diabasis denotes not an aqueduct but the place where one crosses a watercourse, i.e. either a bridge or a ford. Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 64, concurs but argues that Abel is mistaken in associating the diabasis with the old aqueduct; it must refer, rather, to the place where the path crosses Hezekiah's tunnel, just above its lower end at Siloam. Although Jeremias' interpretation fits well with Isaiah's function as patron spirit of Siloam, it makes nonsense of the Gk. text and ignores the fact that our author was ignorant of Hezekiah's tunnel; see n. h below.

e. Lit. "sign" as in Jn 2:11; 20:30.

f. "Being faint" seems to be required by the context, but there is no lexical evidence that oligōreō ever carried this meaning.

g. Because of the parallel at Jn 9:7, de Jonge, Nederlands Theologisch Tijdschrift 16 (1961–62) 166, argues that we have here evidence of Christian influence upon LivPro. Since the etymology is very differently employed in the two writings, however, there is little basis for de Jonge's conjecture.

h. This statement provides clear evidence that the transmitters of this tradition, like Josephus (War 5.4.1 §140), regarded Siloam as a spring rather than as the effluence of Hezekiah's underground aqueduct which diverted the water from the Gihon spring. An excellent description of Hezekiah's engineering feat is provided by J. Simons, Jerusalem in the Old Testament (Leiden, 1952) pp. 173–92. Apparently all recollection of the connection with Gihon had disappeared by the Roman period.

i. It is generally held that Hezekiah's intention was to divert water from Gihon, which lay outside the fortifications, to a reservoir within the walls (cf. 2Kgs 20:20; Sir 48:17). On the basis of careful archaeological investigation, K. Kenyon, Digging Up Jerusalem (New York and Washington, 1974) pp. 158, 246f., maintains that Siloam was not enclosed within the walls of the city until Herod Agrippa built the new south wall, A.D. 41–44. Puzzling though such a conclusion is relative to Hezekiah's defense strategy, it is confirmed by our text, which assumes that the besieging army camped by the spring in order to use its water. Further confirmation is provided by Josephus, who reports that the most ancient wall traversed the hill "above the fountain of Siloam" (War 5.4.2 §145).

8 out intermittently,<sup>j</sup> in order that the mystery may be manifested.<sup>k</sup> • And since this happened through Isaiah, as a memorial of it the nation also buried him nearby with care and in great honor,<sup>l</sup> so that through his prayers even after his death they might enjoy the benefit of the water, for an oracle was also given to them concerning him.

9 His tomb is near the tomb of the kings,<sup>m</sup> west of the tomb of the priests<sup>n</sup> in the southern part of the city.<sup>o</sup> • For Solomon made the tombs, in accordance with David's design, east of Zion,<sup>p</sup> which<sup>q</sup> has an entrance from Gabaon, twenty stadia<sup>r</sup> distant from the city. • And he made a secret construction with winding passages; and it is to this day unknown to most.<sup>s</sup> • There the king kept the gold from Ethiopia and the spices. • And because Hezekiah showed the gentiles the secrets of David and Solomon and defiled the bones of the place of his fathers, God swore that his offspring should be enslaved to his enemies, and God made him sterile from that day.

2Kgs 20:12-18

Jeremiah

1 2 Jeremiah was from Anathoth, and he died in Taphnai of Egypt,<sup>a</sup> having been stoned<sup>b</sup> by his people.<sup>c</sup> • He was buried<sup>d</sup> in the environs of Pharaoh's palace, because the Egyptians held him in high esteem, having been benefitted through him. • For he prayed, and the asps left them, and the monsters of the waters,

Jer 1:1

Jer 43:8

4Bar 9:31

Jer 43:9

j. The intermittent character of the Gihon spring (known today as the Virgin's Spring or the Spring of the Steps) is due to a subterranean siphon caused by the geological formation; cf. Simons, Jerusalem, pp. 163f.

k. Torrey's translation "to keep the miracle in mind" (Lives, p. 34) is very attractive, but there is no lexical evidence that mysterion ever carried this connotation. Cf. its use in 2:10, 19.

l. This language suggests the erection of a monument (Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 64). Since memorial constructions were not always contiguous with the actual graves (Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 122), Isaiah's monument may not have been situated beside the Oak of Rogel. "Nearby" (plésion) suggests that the monument was "in the neighborhood," rather than directly adjacent to Siloam, however, and therefore a site near the tree is entirely possible.

m. The site of the royal necropolis is still uncertain. The constructions on the Kidron side of the hill about 110 meters (c. 361 ft.) northeast of Siloam, identified by R. Weill as the royal tombs (La Cité de David [Paris, 1920] pp. 35-44, 157-73), are regarded by Kenyon, Digging, pp. 31f., as cisterns. Nevertheless the literary evidence, both biblical (Neh 3:16) and rabbinic (t.BB 1:11), points to a site within the walls at the southern extremity of the southeast hill, i.e. not far distant from the site proposed in n. c above for Isaiah's grave. Cf. Simons, Jerusalem, p. 210.

n. "The tomb of the priests" may refer to one or more of the impressive constructions still standing on the eastern slope of the Kidron about 800 meters (2,600 ft.) from Siloam. Photographs and descriptions are provided by B. Mazar, The Mountain of the Lord (Garden City, N.Y., 1975) pp. 71, 225. The Gk. opisthen probably reflects the Heb. 'ahar, which normally means "behind" but can connote "West" (cf. MT and LXX of Jud 18:12).

o. Lit. "at the southern part."

p. Although Josephus did not employ the term

"Zion," it is clear that he erroneously regarded David's city as situated on the western hill of Jerusalem (War 5.4.1 §137); cf. Simons, Jerusalem, pp. 35-59. The phrase "east of Zion" need not imply the same error. It may mean simply "on the eastern (Kidron) slope of David's city."

q. The Gk. text here becomes hopelessly confused. Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 58, proposes that the original purpose of this clause was to bring the royal tomb into relation with the Siloam tunnel; since the tunnel's point of origin at the Gihon spring was no longer known, it was possible to present the fanciful idea that it was almost 4 kilometers long and had its beginning north of the city in the direction of Gibeon. This proposal ignores the fact that the author believed that Siloam was a spring (see n. h above). It is better to take the clause as a haggadic description of the famous tomb.

r. About 3.8 kilometers (2.3 miles).

s. Q and its dependents add the ungrammatical and awkward gloss "and of the whole people," which is absent from E<sup>1</sup> and E<sup>2</sup>. D attempts an improvement: "unknown to most of the priests and to the whole people." Since E<sup>1</sup> concludes its treatment of Isaiah at this point, it is possible that the subsequent irrelevant statements concerning Solomon's storehouse and Hezekiah's indiscretion did not belong in the earliest version.

2 a. Taphnai is an unusual Gk. transliteration of the Heb. name taphpanhēs (Jer 43:7). This was probably the town known in hellenistic times as Daphnai, modern Tell Defenneh, in northeastern Egypt, less than 20 kilometers (12.5 miles) west of the point where the Suez Canal enters Lake Menzaleh.

b. Lit. "having been thrown (down) by stones."

c. Lit. "by the people." Laos, "people," normally designates Israel in this document as in hellenistic Jewish literature generally; cf. 3:2, 11, 13.

d. Lit. "he lies."

- 4 which the Egyptians call Nepthoth and the Greeks crocodiles.<sup>e</sup> • And those who are 5 God's faithful pray at the place to this very day, and taking the dust of the place
 6 they heal asps' bites.<sup>f</sup> • And we have heard from the children of Antigonus and 7 Ptolemy, old men, that Alexander the Macedonian, after standing at the prophet's 8 grave<sup>g</sup> and witnessing his mysteries,<sup>h</sup> transferred his remains to Alexandria and 9 placed them in a circle around (the city) with due honor;<sup>i</sup> • and the whole race 10 of asps was kept from the land, and from the river likewise the crocodiles.<sup>j</sup> • And to the same end he<sup>k</sup> introduced the snakes which are called Argolai, which means "snake-fighters," which he brought from Argos of the Peloponnesus, whence they are also called Argolai, that is, "fortunate ones from Argos"; for everything fortunate they call laia.<sup>l</sup>
- 8 This Jeremiah gave a sign to the priests of Egypt, that it was decreed<sup>m</sup> that their idols would be shaken and collapse [through a savior, a child born of a virgin, in 9 a manger].<sup>n</sup> • Wherefore even to this day they revere a virgin giving birth and,
 10 placing an infant in a manger, they worship. • And when Ptolemy the king inquired about the cause, they said, "It is an ancestral mystery delivered to our fathers by

e. Torrey, Lives, pp. 49–52, accepting the reading ephōth found in E<sup>2</sup> and D, conjectures that the original text contained no reference to crocodiles since ephōth is simply the transliterated plural of the Heb. word 'ep'eh, "viper," the term by which Egyptian Jews referred to the asps.

f. At this point the textual tradition becomes very confused, with various glosses, inversions, and conflation. The following tradition, although given verisimilitude by association with specific names, is missing from E<sup>1</sup> and for that reason may be suspected of being a gloss.

g. Lit. "place."

h. See 1:7 and n.

i. Jeremias, Heiligengräber, pp. 108–10, proposes that this strange statement alludes to the founding of Alexandria and asserts that Alexander deposited the bones of the prophet at specific locations on the perimeter, both to establish the bounds of the city and to protect it. M. Simon, RHPR 34 (1954) 124, argues that this tradition regarding the transfer of Jeremiah's remains to Alexandria represents a Christian attempt to woo Christians away from the ancient site where they were too easily attracted to Jewish popular religion.

j. D omits "the crocodiles."

k. I.e. Alexander. Torrey, Lives, p. 49, proposes that an earlier version of this gloss attributed the introduction of the Argolai to Jeremiah. He conjectures that the unknown Gk. word argolai is the transliteration of the Heb. hargōl, which occurs at Lev 11:22 as the designation of one of four kinds of grasshoppers that may be eaten. In LXX it is rendered ophiomachēn, "snake-fighter," as here! Since grasshoppers cannot kill snakes, Torrey suggests that the mistranslation in LXX indicates that Egyptian Jews had used hargōl, "grasshopper," as a nickname for the ichneumon (the Egyptian mongoose famous for its ability to kill snakes) because of its abrupt leaping. Because the original meaning of argolai had been lost, it was possible for later glossators to conceive them as snakes, and derive them from Argos. The tradition about the Argolai is absent from E<sup>1</sup> and E<sup>2</sup>.

l. That this strained etymology was difficult to understand even in ancient times is indicated by the plethora of textual variants.

m. Lit. "it is necessary," but divine necessity is implied; cf. Dan 2:28LXX and Mt 24:6.

n. Something has dropped out of Q at this point;

the lack is supplied by an awkward gloss in its dependents. Included here in brackets is the reading of Coisl. 224, which appears to be related to the parallel in D: "through a savior, a child born of a virgin, and lying in a manger" (cf. Lk 2:12). It is virtually impossible to reconstruct the earliest form of this paragraph, which is differently represented in each of the four major recensions. The second and third sentences, which are absent from E<sup>1</sup>, are probably secondary, whatever the origin of the first. The opening statement predicts divine punishment of Egyptian idolatry; it is not likely that a Jewish author who included this "sign" would have been so foolish as to suggest that the pagan Egyptians regularly celebrated the anticipated overthrow of their popular religion in a cultic ceremony that was itself a manifestation of pagan polytheism! For this reason the suggestion of Torrey, Lives, pp. 9f., that the Palestinian author derived this tradition from a Christian Jew from Egypt, is hardly acceptable. M. de Jonge, Nederlands Theologisch Tijdschrift 16 (1961–62) 168, is probably correct in insisting that the entire paragraph must be regarded as a Christian product. It can be argued, however, that more than one Christian hand is evident here. The first glossator asserted that Jeremiah had foreseen the success of Christianity in Egypt, which was to be initiated by the visit of the Virgin Mother and Holy Child (Mt 2:13–15, with which is conflated the narrative concerning the manger of Lk 2:7–16). A later scribe noted how this visit had been prefigured in a pagan festival honoring a virgin and divine child, and added the legendary anecdote concerning Ptolemy's question in order to bring his addition into connection with Jeremiah. It is remotely possible, however, that the first sentence (without the awkward reference to the manger) comes from a Jewish author who produced the "sign" by combining three prophetic texts as translated in LXX: Isa 19:1, Jer 46:15 (LXX 26:15), and Isa 7:14. In this case the statement would express a Jewish hope that the pagan culture of Egypt would be overturned by the Messiah, whose miraculous birth would signal that God had invested him with the supernatural power necessary for the task. D. Daube, The New Testament and Rabbinic Judaism (London, 1956) pp. 6f., finds evidence of an early rabbinic tradition concerning the miraculous birth of Moses.

a holy prophet, and we are to await, he says, the consummation of his mystery."<sup>o</sup>

11 This prophet, before the capture of the Temple, seized the ark of the Law and 12 the things in it, and made them to be swallowed up in a rock.<sup>p</sup> • And to those 13 standing by he said, "The LORD has gone away from Zion into heaven and will 14 come again in power. • And this will be for you a sign of his coming, when all 15 the gentiles worship a piece of wood."<sup>q</sup> • And he said, "This ark no one is going 16 to bring out except Aaron, and none of the priests or prophets will any longer
 17 open<sup>r</sup> the tablets in it except Moses, God's chosen one. • And in the resurrection 18 the ark will be the first to be resurrected and will come out of the rock and be 19 placed on Mount Sinai, and all the saints will be gathered to it<sup>r</sup> there as they await the LORD and flee from the enemy who wishes to destroy them."<sup>s</sup> • In the rock with his finger he set as a seal the name of God, and the impression was like a carving made with iron, and a cloud covered the name, and no one knows the place nor is able to read the name<sup>t</sup> to this day and to the consummation. • And the rock is in the wilderness, where the ark was at first, between the two mountains on which<sup>u</sup> Moses and Aaron lie.<sup>v</sup> • And at night there is a cloud like fire, just like the ancient one, for the glory of God will never cease from his Law.<sup>w</sup> • And God bestowed this favor upon Jeremiah, that he might himself perform the completion of his mystery,<sup>x</sup> so that he might become a partner of Moses,<sup>y</sup> and they are together to this day.<sup>z</sup>

2Mac 2:4-8
4Bar 3:8-20

12:13

Ezekiel

1 3 Ezekiel. This man was from the land of Arira,<sup>a</sup> of the priests, and he died in 2 the land of the Chaldeans during the captivity, after having prophesied many 3 things to those in Judea. • The ruler of the people Israel killed him there as he was being reproved by him concerning the worship of idols.<sup>b</sup> • And they buried him in the field of Maour<sup>c</sup> in the grave of Shem and Arpachshad, ancestors of

Ezek 1:3

Gen 10:22;
11:10
1Chr 1:17,26

o. Cf. 1:7; 2:5, 19.

p. In 2Bar 6 it is an angel who takes the sacred vessels from the Temple; the earth opens its mouth and swallows them.

q. This is probably an allusion to gentile veneration of the cross. It need not be regarded as a Christian interpolation if it is seen as a negative comment upon gentile Christianity, but it more probably is an expression of the Christian hope that Jesus will return when the full number of the gentiles have been converted.

r. Lit. "unfold" (as a scroll) but probably used metaphorically in the sense of "disclose."

s. Following E<sup>1</sup> and E<sup>2</sup>. Q's reading "to him" is probably simply a grammatical error.

t. Following E<sup>1</sup>. Q has "him," perhaps with reference to "impression" (a masculine noun).

u. Lit. "in which" or "in the midst of which."

v. The two mountains on which Aaron and Moses died, Hor and Nebo respectively, were sometimes considered "twins" in Jewish legend; cf. Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 3, p. 316.

w. E<sup>1</sup> ends its narrative concerning Jeremiah at this point.

x. Cf. 1:7; 2:5, 10.

y. E<sup>2</sup> concludes at this point, and may well represent the earliest version.

z. Although their physical remains rest in widely separated locations! Cf. 2Mac 15:13 and Mt 16:14 for similar views concerning the continued vitality of Jeremiah.

a mysterious land of Sir in the Far East; cf. Josephus, Ant 1.2.3 §71, and G. J. Reinink, "Das Land 'Seiris' (Sir) und das Volk der Sierer in jüdischen und christlichen Traditionen," JSJ 6 (1975) 72-85, who concludes that the land of Sir is China.

b. E. R. Goodenough, Jewish Symbols in the Greco-Roman Period (13 vols.; New York, 1953-68) vol. 10, pp. 188-90, argues that the pictures in the Ezekiel cycle on the north wall of the Dura synagogue portray the arresting of Ezekiel by a person of great dignity and his subsequent beheading. Since the Jewish leader in Babylonia claimed royal status, and in A.D. 200 received the title Exilarch (Resh Galuta) from the Parthians, Goodenough proposes that the Jewish tradition underlying both the Dura painting and the statement here in LivPro attributed Ezekiel's death to the political leader of Babylonian Jewry. He suggests that Heb 11:37, "They were stoned, or sawn in half, or beheaded," alludes to traditions concerning the manner of execution of the three major prophets Jeremiah, Isaiah, and Ezekiel respectively. ApPaul 49, however, witnesses to a different tradition regarding the manner of Ezekiel's death: "I am Ezekiel whom the children of Israel dragged by the feet over the rocks on the mountain until they dashed out my brains" (HSW, vol. 2, p. 792). The same report is given in the Syriac Acts of Philip; cf. W. Wright, Apocryphal Acts of the Apostles (London and Edinburgh, 1871) vol. 2, p. 83.

c. Torrey, Lives, p. 23, n. 18, conjectures that Maour is a corruption of Naour, i.e. Nahor (Gen 11:22, 26). Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 112,

3 a. The place in question remains unknown. Variants include Sarira, Sarëra, Saira, Saiëra, and Serida. The variants may reflect the tradition about

Abraham, and the tomb is a double cave, for Abraham also made Sarah's tomb 4 in Hebron like it.<sup>d</sup> • It is called "double" because there is a twisting passage and an upper room which is hidden from the ground floor, and it is hung over the ground level in the cliff.<sup>e</sup> Gen 23:9

5 This prophet gave a portent to the people, so that they should pay attention to the river Chebar: When it failed they should set their hope in the scythe which desolates to the end of the earth, and when it flooded, in the return to Jerusalem. Ezek 1:1
 Zech 5:1-3LXX

6.7 For the saint also lived there, and many used to congregate to him. • And once when there was a multitude with him<sup>f</sup> the Chaldeans were afraid that they would 8 rebel, and came up against them to destroy them. • And he made the water stop 9 so that they might escape by getting to the other side. • And those of the enemies who dared to pursue were drowned.

10 Through prayer he furnished them of his own accord with an abundant supply of fish, and for many who were at the point of dying he entreated that life should come from God.<sup>g</sup>

11 When the people was being destroyed by its enemies, he went to the (enemy)
 12 leaders and, terrified by the prodigies, they ceased. • He used to say this to them:
 "Are we lost? Has our hope perished?"<sup>h</sup> and in the wonder of the dead bones he persuaded them that there is hope for Israel both here and in the coming (age). Ezek 37:1-14

13 While he was there he used to show the people Israel what was happening in 14 Jerusalem and in the Temple. • He was snatched up from there and he went to 15 Jerusalem to rebuke those who were faithless. • Like Moses, this man saw the pattern of the Temple,<sup>i</sup> with its wall and broad outer wall, just as Daniel also said 16 that it would be built. • He pronounced judgment in Babylon on the tribe of Dan and that of Gad, because they were committing sacrilege against the LORD by 17 persecuting those who were keeping the Law. • And respecting them he worked this great wonder, that snakes would devour their infants and all their flocks, and he foretold that on their account the people would not return to its land but would 18 be in Media until the consummation of their error. • And the one who killed him
 19 was one of them. • For they opposed him all the days of his life. Ex 25:9
 Ezek 40-42

Daniel

1 4 Daniel. This man was of the tribe of Judah, of the family of those prominent in the royal service,<sup>a</sup> but while yet a child he was taken from Judea to the land Dan 1:3

argues that it is very unlikely that the burial place of such famous figures would be designated with the name of a descendant; moreover, Nahor is regularly represented in LXX and the NT as Nachôr.
 Jeremias therefore prefers the possibility that Maour is a corruption of Our, i.e. Ur of the Chaldees. He reports that veneration is still paid to the grave of Ezekiel in Kifil, south of ancient Babylon; this site, however, is over 200 kilometers (125 miles) northeast of Ur. Rabbinic legend places Ezekiel's tomb in Babylonia near that of Baruch; cf. Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 4, pp. 324f., 333.

d. Gen 23 gives no hint of any special construction by Abraham, but the Heb. name makpêlah (Machpelah) means "double." In LXX the name is not transliterated but translated "the double cave," to spêlaion to diplouan (Gen 23:9), as in our text. The duality of the tomb is dealt with by Philo, Quaes Gen 4.80, and by the Talmud (b. Erub 59a: While Rab held that the cave consisted of two chambers, one within the other, R. Samuel held that it had a lower and an upper chamber).

e. A common practice was to expand a cave tomb by carving out a lower chamber below the entry level. As our text suggests, it was very uncommon to construct a second chamber above the main room.

f. Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 112, prefers E<sup>1</sup>, according to which the miracle was effected posthumously for the benefit of pilgrims who had gathered at Ezekiel's grave "for prayer and supplication."

g. The reference seems to be to a restoration to earthly life, not to the preaching of life after death, as suggested by Torrey, Lives, p. 37. For haggadah concerning Ezekiel's success in restoring various dead persons to life, see Ginzberg, Legends, vol.
 4, pp. 332f.

h. Following Torrey, Lives, p. 37, who takes the statements as questions. Since it is the people who say this in Ezek 37:11, however, it is possible that D correctly represents the original: "... when Israel was saying, 'We are lost, our hope has perished.'"

i. "Of the temple" is missing from Q but found in E<sup>1</sup>, E<sup>2</sup>, D, Coisl. 224, and most other MSS.

4 a. By combining Dan 1:3, 6 with Isa 39:7, Jewish tradition maintained that Daniel was a member of the royal family; cf. Josephus, Ant
 10.10.1 §186 and Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 6, p.
 414.

2 of the Chaldeans. •He was born in Upper Beth-Horon, and he was a chaste man, so that the Judeans thought that he was a eunuch.

3 He mourned greatly over the city, and in fasts he abstained from all desirable food, and he was a man gaunt in appearance but beautiful in the favor of the Most High.

4 He prayed much for Nebuchadnezzar, at the entreaty of his son Baltasar,<sup>b</sup> when 5 he became a wild animal and beast of the field, so that he might not perish. •His fore parts with the head were like an ox, and the feet with the hind parts like a lion. •Concerning this mystery it was revealed to the holy man that (Nebuchadnezzar) had become a beast of the field because he was fond of pleasure and stiff-necked, and because those who belong to Beliar<sup>c</sup> become like an ox under yoke. 8 Tyrants have these (vices) in their youth, and in the end they become monsters, 9 seizing, destroying, killing, and smiting. •Through divine revelation the saint 10 knew that he was eating grass like an ox and that it became human food. •It was also for this reason that Nebuchadnezzar, recovering a human heart after digestion,<sup>d</sup> used to weep and honor the LORD, praying forty times each day and night.<sup>e</sup> 11 Behemoth<sup>f</sup> used to come upon him, and he would forget that he had been a man; his tongue was taken from him so that he might not speak, and perceiving (this) 12 he immediately wept; his eyes were like raw flesh from crying. •For many were going out of the city and gazing at him. •Daniel alone did not wish to see him, because he was in prayer for him the whole time of his changed condition; and he kept saying, "He will become a man again," and they did not believe him.

Dan 4:30(33)

4:20; 17:2

13 Daniel made the seven years, which he called seven seasons, become seven months;<sup>g</sup> the mystery of the seven seasons was accomplished in his case, for he was restored in seven months; during the six years and six<sup>h</sup> months (remaining) he prostrated himself to the LORD and confessed his impiety, and after the forgiveness of his wickedness he restored to him the kingdom. •He neither ate bread or meat nor drank wine as he made his confession, for Daniel had ordered 15 him to appease the LORD with (a diet of) soaked pulse and greens. •Nebuchadnezzar<sup>i</sup> called him Baltasar<sup>j</sup> because he wanted to make him joint heir with his children. •But the holy man said, "Far be it from me to leave the heritage 17 of my fathers and cleave to the inheritances of the uncircumcised."<sup>k</sup> •And for other kings of the Persians he wrought many prodigies, which they did not write 18 down. •There<sup>l</sup> he died, and was buried by himself and with great honor in the royal grotto.

Dan 4:29(32)

Dan 4:31f. (34f.)

Dan 1:7; 5:12

b. "Belshazzar," according to the MT; see n. j below.

c. In many texts "Beliar" (or "Belial") designates the chief of evil spirits, Satan; it is used below in 4:20 and 17:2. Cf. MartIs 2:2-4, where it appears as the synonym of "Satan." In the NT it occurs only at 2Cor 6:15.

d. Since Hebrew thought concealed the heart as the seat of mental activity, Torrey, Lives, p. 39, paraphrases: "recovering human reason when digestion was completed."

e. Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 4, p. 334, reports that in Yerahmeel 46.205f. the king's reason is restored after forty days; he spends the next forty days weeping over his sins, and for the remainder of the seven months he again lives the life of a beast. Our text may represent a confused recollection of these two sets of forty days.

f. The text is clearly in error, since in Jewish tradition Behemoth is a primeval monster, not a demon (cf. 2Bar 29:4). Torrey, Lives, pp. 24f., conjectures that the underlying Heb. read lēb behēmōt, i.e. "heart of dumb beasts," and that lēb was accidentally omitted in the Heb. text used by the Gk. translator. He translates (Lives, p. 39): "Then the mind of a dumb animal would (again) take possession of him . . ."

g. LXX, followed by Josephus (Ant 10.10.6

§216), translates the "seven times" of Dan 4:32 as "seven years" while Theodotion renders more literally as "seven seasons," hepta kairoi. The tradition that Daniel's prayer reduced the sentence from seven years to seven months is also found in Yerahmeel 46 (Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 4, p. 334; vol. 6, p. 423).

h. D. Coisl. 224, and some dependents read "five," correcting the arithmetical error.

i. Lit. "he."

j. Cf. 4:4. Although the Heb. and Aram. portions of Daniel carefully distinguish between "Belshazzar," the Babylonian name given to Daniel (1:7), and "Belshazzar," the name of Nebuchadnezzar's crown prince (5:1), for some inexplicable reason the LXX translators rendered both names as Baltasar. E<sup>1</sup> notes the coincidence with an explanatory gloss added at this point: "For this reason also Nebuchadnezzar called Daniel 'Baltasar' after the name of his only-begotten son." Not only the gloss but the underlying statements in Q seem to reflect an environment in which LXX, not MT, is dominant.

k. The same statement is attributed to Daniel in Yerahmeel 66.206 (Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 4, p. 339; vol. 6, p. 427).

l. "There" is ambiguous. According to most Jewish sources Daniel's mausoleum was to be seen

19 And he gave a portent with respect to the mountains which are above Babylon:
 20 "When the mountain on the north smokes, the end of Babylon is coming; and when it lies as in fire,<sup>m</sup> the end of all the earth. • And if the mountain in the south pours forth water the people will return to its land, and if it pours forth blood, 4:6:17:2 21 Beliar's slaughter will take place in all the earth." • And the holy man fell asleep in peace.

Hosea

1 5 Hosea. This man was from Belemoth<sup>a</sup> of the tribe of Issachar, and he was 2 buried in his own district<sup>b</sup> in peace. • And he gave a portent, that the LORD would arrive upon the earth if ever the oak which is in Shiloh<sup>c</sup> were divided from itself, and twelve oaks came to be.

Micah

1,2 6 Micah the Morathite<sup>a</sup> was of the tribe of Ephraim.<sup>b</sup> • Having done many things Mic 1:1
 to Ahab, he was killed by Joram his son<sup>c</sup> at a cliff,<sup>d</sup> because he rebuked him for 3 the impieties of his fathers. • And he was buried in his own district by himself,<sup>e</sup> near the burial ground of the Anakim.<sup>f</sup> Josh 11:22

Amos

1,2 7 Amos was from Tekoa. • And when Amaziah had tortured him sorely, at last 3 his son also killed him with a club by striking him on the temple.<sup>a</sup> • And while he was still breathing he went to his own district, and after some days he died and was buried there.

in Shushan (Susa), but others convey the impression that he died in Palestine (Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 4, p. 350; vol. 6, p. 437). E<sup>1</sup> explicitly states that Daniel died in Babylon, "and his grave is known to all in Babylon to this very day."
 m. Coisl. 224 emends to "burns with fire."

5 a. Torrey, Lives, pp. 26, 40, considers the otherwise unknown Belemoth a variant of Balamon of Jdt 8:3, which he identifies with Ibleam in northern Samaria. According to Josh 17:11 Ibleam belonged to the tribe of Manasseh but was situated within the territory of Issachar. Cf. Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 29.

b. Shalsholet ha-Kabbalah 19a reports that Hosea died in Babylon and was buried in the Jewish cemetery at Safed (Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 4, p. 261; vol. 6, p. 356).

c. Sēlōm, the form of the name given here, corresponds neither to the transliteration used by LXX nor to any of the various renderings of Shiloh found in Josephus, but the identity is not in question, since the same form occurs in 18:1, 5 in connection with Ahijah of Shiloh (1Kgs 11:29). That the oak of Shiloh was a well-known landmark is indicated by its appearance here and at 18:5.

6 a. In reading Mōrathi instead of Mōrasthi (so D, and most MSS of LXX, at Mic 1:1), Q is consistent with its own reading at Mic 1:1; cf. also LXX of Jer 33:18. Eusebius, Onomastikon (ed. E. Klostermann [Hildesheim, 1966] p. 134) has Mōrathēi, and asserts that the place was just east of Eleutheropolis (modern Beit Jibrin, northeast of Hebron).

b. The erroneous identification with Ephraim may have resulted from confusion with Micah of Ephraim of Judg 17, as proposed by Klein, Sefer

Klozner, p. 197 (cf. Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 82).

c. Despite the unambiguous chronological note of Mic 1:1, Micah is here placed in the time of Ahab, apparently by confusion with Micaiah son of Imlah (1Kgs 22:8). This could be explained as due to the fact that LXX employs the same transliteration for both Heb. names, if it were not for the fact that the same confusion is found in rabbinic sources; in one haggadah Micah is named one of the four disciples of Elijah (Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 6, p. 343; cf. p. 355).

d. For the difficult krēmno E<sup>1</sup> substitutes krēmnotheis, i.e. "hanged" or possibly "crucified" (LSJM, p. 994, cites a 2nd-cent. instance of the verb with this meaning).

e. E<sup>1</sup> adds: "And his grave is well known to this day." Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 85, infers that the narrator (or interpolator) knew of a monument marking Micah's supposed grave, and finds this confirmed by the report of the 5th-cent. church historian Sozomenos that the bishop of Eleutheropolis had discovered Micah's remains near this town in 385 (Ecclesiastica Historia 7.29.2).

f. "Anakim" designates the three giants of Hebron in Num 13:22, but Josh 11:21f. refers to an entire people by this name, and reports that the remnants of the Anakim were located at Gaza, Gath, and Ashdod. Jeremias, Heiligengräber, pp. 82–86, points out that Jewish legend associated the giants with Eleutheropolis. He claims to have discovered the "cemetery of the giants" in an impressive Seleucid necropolis that he and A. Alt visited in 1932, situated about 2 kilometers (1.25 miles) north of Beit Jibrin.

7 a. According to Shalsholet ha-Kabbalah 97, King Uziah killed Amos by striking him on the forehead with a red-hot iron (Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 4, p. 262; vol. 6, p. 357).

Joel

- 1 8 Joel was from the territory of Reuben,<sup>a</sup> in the countryside of Bethomoron.<sup>b</sup>
 2 He died in peace<sup>c</sup> and was buried there.

Obadiah

- 1 9 Obadiah was from the district of Shechem, of the countryside of Bethacharam.<sup>a</sup>
 2 This man was a disciple of Elijah,<sup>b</sup> and endured much because of him, and
 3 escaped with his life. •This was the third captain of fifty whom Elijah spared and 4 (with whom) he went down to Ahaziah.<sup>c</sup> •After these events he left the service of 5 the king and prophesied. •And he died and was buried with his fathers.

1Kgs 18:7

2Kgs 1:13-15

Jonah

- 1 10 Jonah was from the district of Kariathmos<sup>a</sup> near the Greek city of Azotus by 2 the sea. •And when he had been cast forth by the sea monster and had gone away to Nineveh and had returned, he did not remain in his district, but taking his mother along he sojourned in Sour,<sup>b</sup> a territory (inhabited by) foreign nations;
 3 for he said, "So shall I remove my reproach, for I spoke falsely in prophesying
 4 against the great city of Nineveh."<sup>c</sup> •At that time Elijah was rebuking the house
 5 of Ahab, and when he had invoked famine upon the land he fled. •And he went and found the widow with her son, for he could not stay with uncircumcised 6 people; and he blessed her. •And when her son<sup>d</sup> died, God raised him again from the dead through Elijah, for he wanted to show him that it is not possible to run 7 away from God. •And after the famine he arose and went into the land of Judah.
 8 And when his mother died along the way, he buried her near Deborah's Oak.<sup>e</sup>
 9 And after sojourning in the land of Saraar<sup>f</sup> he died and was buried in the cave of Jonah 2:11(10);

3:1-5

Jonah 3:4,10

1Kgs 17:1-7

1Kgs 17:8-16

1Kgs 17:17-24;
21:7

Jonah 1:3

Gen 35:8

8 a. The tribal connection of the prophet is not given in the book that bears his name. In 1Chr 5:4, 8, however, there is mention of a Reubenite of the same name.

b. Klein, Sefer Klozner, p. 198, and Torrey, Lives, pp. 26, 41, propose that this should be emended to Bēthmaōn, i.e. Beth-meon of Jer 48:23, a modified form of Beth-baal-meon (Josh 13:17), a town in Transjordan south of Nebo. 1Chr 5:8 locates the Reubenite Joel in this vicinity. Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 104, can report no other evidence of the veneration of Joel's grave during the early centuries of the Christian era, and proposes that the tradition reported by LivPro may be a purely literary product that had no local precipitate in the form of a cult.

c. H. J. Schoeps, Aus frühchristlicher Zeit (Tübingen, 1950) p. 132, notes that, according to The Book of the Bee of Solomon of Basra, Joel was clubbed to death like Amos.

9 a. Torrey, Lives, p. 41, derives the name from the Heb. bēt ha-kerem, "House of the Vineyard," which was probably a common name for small, rural settlements. If Obadiah's grave was indeed the object of veneration near Shechem when LivPro was written, the tradition must have disappeared by the 4th cent., when Christians looked for the grave elsewhere in Samaria (Jeremias, Heiligen- gräber, p. 31).

b. Cf. Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 6, p. 343.

c. Jewish tradition also associated the prophet with the pious Obadiah of 1Kgs 18:3-16, who was a high official in Ahab's court (Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 4, pp. 240f.).

10 a. Identity unknown.

b. Cf. Jdt 2:28, where Sour seems to refer to a coastland city. Torrey, Lives, p. 41, conjectures that this is simply an unusual transliteration of šōr, and therefore translates it as "Tyre."

c. Cf. Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 4, p. 247.

d. The narrative assumes familiarity with the widespread tradition that Jonah was the son of the widow of Zarephath (cf. Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 4, p. 197; vol. 6, p. 318). E<sup>2</sup>, D, and Coisl. 224 make the connection explicit by adding "Jonah."

e. Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 119, prefers D's reading, "the oak of Lebanon."

f. E<sup>1</sup>, E<sup>2</sup>, D, and Coisl. 224 read Saar. Torrey, Lives, p. 42, translates "Seir," i.e. Edom. From the perspective of the writer, Seir, which in his time was better known as Idumea, included much of southern Judea (cf. Josephus, Apion 2.116). Jeremias, Heiligengräber, pp. 88f., suggests that the Mohammedan mosque of Jonah at Halhul, 6 kilometers (3.75 miles) north of Hebron, marks the site to which reference is here made.

10 Kenaz,<sup>g</sup> who became judge of one tribe<sup>h</sup> in the days of the anarchy. •And he gave a portent concerning Jerusalem and the whole land, that whenever they should see a stone crying out piteously the end was at hand. •And whenever they should see all the gentiles in Jerusalem,<sup>i</sup> the entire city would be razed to the ground.

Gen 36:15,42;
Judg 3:9

Hab 2:11
4Bar 9:30

Nahum

1 11 Nahum was from Elkesi on the other side of Isbegabarin of the tribe of Simeon.<sup>a</sup> •After Jonah this man gave to Nineveh a portent, that it would be destroyed by fresh water and an underground fire, which also happened. •For the lake which surrounds it inundated it during an earthquake, and fire coming from the wilderness burned its higher section. •He died in peace and was buried in his own district.

Habakkuk

1 12 Habakkuk was of the tribe of Simeon, from the countryside of Bethzouchar.<sup>a</sup> 2 Before the captivity he had a vision<sup>b</sup> concerning the conquest of Jerusalem, and 3 he mourned greatly. •And when Nebuchadnezzar entered Jerusalem he fled to Ostrakine,<sup>c</sup> and (later) sojourned in the land of Ishmael.<sup>d</sup> •When the Chaldeans turned back, and the remnant that was in Jerusalem (went) to Egyp<sup>t</sup>, he was living 5 in his own district and ministering to those who were harvesting his field. •When he took the food, he prophesied to his own family, saying, “I am going to a far 6 country, and I will come quickly. •But if I delay, take (food) to the harvesters.” 7 And when he had gone to Babylon and given the meal to Daniel,<sup>e</sup> he approached the harvesters as they were eating and told no one what had happened; he 8 understood that the people would soon return from Babylon. •And he died two 9 years before the return. •And he was buried alone in his own field.

Bel 33-39

10 He gave a portent to those in Judea, that they would see a light in the Temple and so perceive the glory of the Temple. •And concerning the end of the Temple 11 he predicted, “By a western nation it will happen.” •“At that time,” he said, “the curtain of the Dabeir<sup>f</sup> will be torn into small pieces, and the capitals of the two pillars will be taken away, and no one will know where they are; and they will be carried away by angels into the wilderness, where the tent of witness was

g. Ps-Philo 25:3 and Josephus Ant 5.3.3 §182, as well as later rabbinic sources (Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 6, p. 181), identify the first judge as Kenaz, not Othniel the son of Kenaz, despite the unequivocal testimony of Judg 3:9 that the son held this honor. Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 90, conjectures that this reflects local Idumean tradition, which glorified Kenaz as the ancestor of an important Edomite tribe. The cave of Kenaz thus constituted the Idumean response to the cave of Machpelah, the grave of the patriarchs near Hebron.

h. Torrey, Lives, pp. 27f., conjectures that the underlying Heb. text was corrupt. His emendation yields the translation: “the first who became judge.” This is unnecessary if the reference is to Idumean tradition (see preceding n.).

i. This prediction makes little sense if the presence of “all the gentiles in Jerusalem” is taken as referring to the successful penetration of the city’s defenses by the Roman armies in A.D. 70. It seems, rather, to reflect uneasiness regarding the increasing number of gentile visitors and/or residents, which threatened to change the character of Israel’s holy city.

11 a. Jeremias, Heiligengräber, pp. 83f., 100, identifies Isbegabarin as Beit Jibrin, i.e. Eleutheropolis. If Elkesi was an existing village, and not merely a postulate based upon the Heb. text of Nah 1:1, it must have been situated in southwestern Judah, where tradition located the tribe of Simeon. E<sup>2</sup> takes the name in Nah 1:1 as personal, and substitutes “Nahum, son of Elkesaios, was from lesbe . . .”

12 a. Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 81, identifies Béthzouchar as Khirbet Beit Skaria (Beth-Zacharias), situated 9 kilometers (5.6 miles) southeast of Bethlehem.

b. Lit. “saw.”

c. On the Mediterranean coast in eastern Egypt.

d. I.e. Arabia or Nabatea.

e. The same story is found in Bel 33–39 (JB Dan 14:33–39).

f. Haplōma seldom designates a curtain, but this curious usage is attested by TBenj 9:4, where it also denotes the Temple veil. Dabeir (or Dabir) is a transliteration of the Heb. dʿbir, which denotes the inner sanctuary of the Temple (the holy of holies). The LXX translators elected to use this transliteration rather than a translation at 1Kg 6:5 and elsewhere where the Heb. word occurs, treating it as if it were a place-name.

- 13 set up in the beginning. •And by means of them the LORD will be recognized at the end, for they will illuminate those who are being pursued by the serpent in darkness as from the beginning.” Rev 12:9,17;
2:15

Zephaniah

- 1,2 13 Zephaniah was of the tribe of Simeon, of the countryside of Sabaratha.<sup>a</sup> •He prophesied concerning the city and about the end of the gentiles and the shaming Zeph 1:4,12
2:1-15
3 of the impious. •And he died and was buried in his field.

Haggai

- 1 14 Haggai, who is also “the Messenger,”<sup>a</sup> came from Babylon<sup>b</sup> to Jerusalem, Hag 1:13 probably as a youth, and he openly prophesied concerning the return of the people, 2 and witnessed in part the building of the Temple. •And when he died he was Hag 1:14 buried near the tomb of the priests,<sup>c</sup> in great honor as were they.

Zechariah

- 1 15 Zechariah came from Chaldea when he was already well advanced in years, Ezra 3:2
and there he prophesied many things to the people, and gave portents as proof.
2 This man told Jozadak that he would beget a son and that he would serve as priest
3 in Jerusalem. •He also pronounced a blessing upon Shealtiel<sup>a</sup> at the birth of his 4 son, and named him Zerubbabel. •And concerning Cyrus he gave a portent of his 5 victory, and prophesied regarding the service which he was to perform for 6 Jerusalem, and he blessed him greatly.<sup>b</sup> •His prophesying in Jerusalem was based on his visions about the end of the gentiles, Israel, the Temple, the laziness of 6 prophets and priests, and he set forth the twofold judgment. •And he died when Zech 9:12
he had attained a great age, and when he expired he was buried near Haggai.<sup>c</sup>

Malachi

- 1 16 Malachi. This man was born in Sopha after the return,<sup>a</sup> and while still a very 2 young man he led a virtuous<sup>b</sup> life. •And since the whole people honored him as holy and gentle, it called him Malachi, which means “angel”; for he was indeed Mal 1:1(LXX) 3 beautiful to behold. •Moreover, whatever he himself said in prophecy, on the same day an angel of God appeared and repeated (it), as happened also in the 13 a. Klein, Sefer Klozner, p. 202, conjectures that Sabaratha derives from Satiabaratha, which in turn represents an inverted form of Bērathsatia, i.e. Birath Satia, which lay about 3.5 kilometers (2.1 miles) north of Beit Jibrin (Eleutheropolis). Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 87, finds this conjecture problematical but concurs that the connection with Simeon points to the area of Beit Jibrin.

14 a. Aggelos, here translated “messenger,” elsewhere denotes “angel.” The clause is absent from E<sup>1</sup>, E<sup>2</sup>, and D and is probably a gloss based on Hag 1:13. Torrey, Lives, pp. 29, 44, omits.

b. Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi were associated with Daniel in rabbinic tradition (Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 6, p. 613).

c. Cf. above 1:9 and n. Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 72, can cite no corroborating evidence but accepts it as probable that Haggai’s tomb lay in the Kidron valley.

15 a. The Gk. is Salathiël, as in LXX of Ezra 3:2.

b. Q puts “greatly” with the following sentence, but the text is badly disturbed, and later recensions make various emendations. What follows in this translation is a rough paraphrase.

c. Zechariah the prophet, “son of Berechiah son of Iddo” (Zech 1:1), was frequently confused with the martyred priest Zechariah son of Jehoiada (2Chr 24:20–22; cf. Mt 23:35), whose violent death is reported below, ch. 23. In E<sup>2</sup> the two Zechariahs become one in a conflation of chs. 15 and 23. For an excellent discussion of this widespread confusion, see S. A. Blank, “The Death of Zechariah in Rabbinic Literature,” HUCA 12/13 (1937–38) 327–46.

16 a. Sopha is unknown. Other traditions regard Malachi as one of the returning exiles (Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 4, p. 354; vol. 6, p. 413).

b. Lit. “beautiful.”

days of the anarchy as written in Spharphotim,<sup>c</sup> that is, in the Book of Judges.

4 And while he was still a young man he was added to his fathers in his own field.<sup>d</sup>

Nathan

1 17 Nathan, David's prophet, was from Gaba,<sup>a</sup> and it was he who taught him the
2 law of the LORD.<sup>b</sup> •And he saw that David would transgress in the Bathsheba (affair); and while he was hastening to go to tell him, Beliar hindered him, for 3 by the road he found a dead man who had been murdered lying naked; and he remained there, and that night he knew that (David) had committed the sin. •And he returned weeping, and when (David) killed her husband, the LORD sent (him) 4 to rebuke him. •And when he had grown very old he died and was buried in his own district.

2Sam 7:2

2Sam 11:2-4

4:6,20

2Sam 11:14-17

Ahijah

1 18 Ahijah was from Shiloh,<sup>a</sup> where the tabernacle was in ancient times, of Eli's
2 city. •This man said concerning Solomon that he would give offense to the LORD.
3 And he rebuked Jeroboam, because he was going to walk deceitfully with the LORD: He saw a yoke of oxen trampling the people and running against the priests.
4 He also foretold to Solomon that his wives would change him and all his 5 posterity.<sup>b</sup> •And he died<sup>c</sup> and was buried near the Oak of Shiloh.

1Kgs 11:29

1Sam 1:24f.

1Kgs 11:31-33

1Kgs 14:7-14

1Kgs 12:28

5:2

Joad

1 19 Joad<sup>a</sup> was from Samareim.<sup>b</sup> This is the one whom the lion attacked and he
2 died, when he rebuked Jeroboam over the calves. •And he was buried in Bethel near the false prophet who deceived him.<sup>c</sup>

1Kgs 13:1-32

2Kgs 23:17f.

c. A confused recollection of the Heb. title of the Book of Judges, sēper šōp̄tīm. Torrey, Lives, p. 30, conjectures that the original transliteration was Spharsōp̄tīm. Probably an allusion to Judg 13:8f.

d. Jeremias, Heiligengraber, reports nothing concerning Malachi's grave.

b. Lit. "race."

c. According to the medieval Midrash Aggadah (Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 6, p. 396), Ahijah died a martyr's death at the hands of Abijah, king of Judah.

17 a. On the strength of D and the Syriac version, Torrey, Lives, p. 30, reads Gabaōn, i.e. Gibeon. Klein, Sefer Klozner, p. 190, conjectures that Gibeon was assumed to be Nathan's home because the ark of the covenant was in that place at the time of Nathan's conversation with David in 2Sam 7:17 (cf. 1Chr 16:39). On the other hand, the textual evidence in favor of Gaba and Gabath is stronger. Since Josephus uses this Gk. name to refer to Gibeah (Ant 6.8.1 §156, referring to 1Sam 15:34), it can be argued that Gibeah, not Gibeon, is intended. The Bible, however, designates four places with the name "Gibeah." On the basis of reports concerning Nathan's grave given by medieval Jewish pilgrims, Jeremias, Heiligengraber, p. 80, concludes that the Gibeah in question is modern Jeba, which lies about 19 kilometers (11.9 miles) southwest of Jerusalem. Torrey, Lives, pp. 30, 45, accepts the addition "from the tribe of Thok," found in E1, and emends it to read "from the tribe of the Hivites" and concludes that Nathan was a foreigner. This is improbable.

b. The Zohar 2.108 contains the tradition that Nathan was Solomon's teacher (Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 6, p. 279).

19 a. Variants include lōab, lōam, and lōath. No name is given to the prophet in the biblical narrative (1Kgs 13:1-32), but this deficiency was remedied by later tradition. Josephus (Ant 8.8.5 §231) gives his name as Jadon (ladōn). Rabbinic tradition identified him with Iddo, the seer of 2Chr 9:29 (b.Sanh 89b, 104a). This identification is perhaps responsible in part for the inclusion of the prophet at this point in the series, for 2Chr 9:29 brings together Nathan, Ahijah, and Iddo as prophets whose writings constituted sources for the history of Solomon. Jerome is a later witness to this tradition in Quaestiones Hebraicae on 2Chr 12:15 (PL, vol. 23, col. 1391) and, further, supplies the name Jaddo, which is reminiscent of the form of the name used by Josephus.

b. The common variant "Samaria" is understandable, but improbable in view of the explicit reference to Judea in the biblical narrative (1Kgs 13:1). Torrey, Lives, p. 46, proposes that the place in question is Zemaraim of Josh 18:22, 2Chr 13:4, which has been identified as Khirbet es Sumrah, situated 8 kilometers (5 miles) northeast of Jericho.

c. 2Kgs 23:17f. reports that a gravestone or monument marked the common grave of the man of God from Judah and the prophet of Bethel who deceived him. Local tradition concerning this grave persisted until at least the 5th cent. A.D. (Jeremias, Heiligengraber, p. 51).

18 a. See above 5:2 and n.

Azariah

- 1 20 Azariah was from the district of Sybatha;<sup>a</sup> (it was he) who turned from Israel 2Chr 15:1-15
 2 the captivity of Judah.<sup>b</sup> •And he died and was buried in his own field. 2Chr 28:8-15

Elijah

- 1 21 Elijah, a Thesbite<sup>a</sup> from the land of the Arabs,<sup>b</sup> of Aaron's tribe,<sup>c</sup> was living 1Kgs 17:1 2 in Gilead, for Thesbe<sup>a</sup> was given to the priests.<sup>d</sup> •When he was to be born, his 3 father Sobacha saw that men of shining white appearance were greeting him and 4 wrapping him in fire, and they gave him flames of fire to eat. •And he went and 5 reported (this) in Jerusalem, and the oracle told him, "Do not be afraid, for his 6 dwelling will be light and his word judgment,<sup>e</sup> and he will judge Israel."<sup>f</sup>
 4.5 The signs<sup>g</sup> which he did are these. •Elijah prayed, and it did not rain for three 1Kgs 17:1
 6 years, and after three years he prayed again and abundant rain came. •In Zarephath 1Kgs 17:8-16
 7 of Sidon through the word of the LORD he made the jar of the widow not to fail
 8 and the flask of oil not to diminish. •Her son who had died God raised from the 1Kgs 17:17-24
 9 dead after (Elijah) prayed.<sup>h</sup> •When the question was posed by him and the prophets 10:6
 10 of Baal concerning who is the true and real God, he proposed<sup>i</sup> that a sacrifice be 11 offered both by him and by them, and that fire not be placed under (it), but that

20 a. Sybatha, like Josephus' Saphatha (variants Sabatha and Saphtha, Ant 8.12.1 §293), seems to derive from the textually difficult allusion in 2Chr 14:10. J. Jeremias, "Sarabatha und Sybatha," Zeitschrift des deutschen Palästina-Vereins 56 (1933) 253-55, argues that here LXX reflects a better text; the corrupt reading of MT has given rise to the spurious place-name Zephathah.

b. It appears that tradition has confused Azariah son of Oded of 2Chr 15:1 with the later prophet Oded of 2Chr 28:9; it is the latter, not the former, who reverses Israel's enslavement of Judah in the war between Pekah and Ahaz. The reconstruction of the text proposed by Torrey, Lives, p. 46, "who turned away from Judah the captivity that befell Israel," is unnecessary if allusion is here made to the prophecy of Oded in 2Chr 28:9-15.

21 a. The name of Elijah's home is spelled Thesbei in Q; variants include Thesbe, Thesbis, and Thesbôn. The location of the town is still unknown; cf. J. Simons, The Geographical and Topographical Texts of the Old Testament (Leiden, 1959) pp. 359f. According to the LXX translators, Elijah came from Thesbôn, which is perhaps to be taken as the genitive plural of a neuter plural Thesba (1Kgs 17:1). Josephus (Ant 8.13.2 §319) has Thesbônês (variant Thessebônês), but Thesba is given by Eusebius, Onomastikon (Klostermann, ed.; p. 102). The existence of such a place in the Roman-Byzantine period and its association with Elijah are confirmed by the 5th-cent. testimony of Egeria that she saw (probably without actually visiting) the town of Thesbe, which possessed a grotto in which Elijah was said to repose (the Lat. text and French translation are given on adjoining pages in the edition by H. Pètré, "Éthérie," Journal de voyage [SC 21; Paris, 1948] pp. 154f.). Egeria's report suggests that the town of Thesbe was visible from the Jordan valley; therefore, it cannot be identical with Listib, the site proposed by F.-M. Abel, Géographie de la Palestine (Paris, 1967<sup>3</sup>) vol. 2, p. 486, which is about 17 kilometers (10.6 miles) east of the Jordan between Osara and Ajlun.

Jeremias, Heiligengrüber, p. 106, who accepts the identification with Listib, proposes that Egeria did not actually see Thesbe, but that the direction in which the town lay was pointed out to her by her guides. This is hardly an adequate interpretation of the text: ad subito vidimus civitatem sancti prophetæ Heliae, id est Thesbe ("suddenly we saw the city of the holy prophet Elijah, that is, Thesbe"). It remains possible, of course, that Egeria was misinformed by her guides.

b. In the 1st cent. the Nabateans (Arabi) controlled the area east of Perea and the Decapolis. Perhaps their influence at times extended to those villages in Transjordan that were not in close proximity to the major hellenistic and Jewish towns. In any event, our author or his source believed that Thesbe lay in Nabatean territory.

c. Elijah was often regarded as a priest in Jewish tradition (Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 6, p. 316).

d. According to Josh 21:19, thirteen cities were assigned to the descendants of Aaron, but Tishbeh (Thesbe) is not mentioned in any of the lists of priestly cities.

e. Or "verdict."

f. Most MSS, including E<sup>1</sup>, E<sup>2</sup>, and D, add "with sword and fire." Elijah was frequently assigned a role in the judgment of the deceased (Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 6, p. 324).

g. Following D, Torrey, Lives, pp. 8, 32, 47f., omits the "signs" included by Q in the sections on Elijah and Elisha (21:4-15; 22:4-17), which are taken from 1-2Kgs. It is instructive that E<sup>1</sup> and E<sup>2</sup> have short additions at this point, but contain none of the biblical material found in Q. Torrey is probably correct, therefore, in regarding this material as secondary. It is even possible that the entire section devoted to Elijah is a later addition, since it does not conform to the document's general purpose of encouraging veneration of the prophets' graves.

h. See above 10:6 and n. No attempt is made in this passage to identify the dead son as Jonah.

i. "Proposed" fits the context but cannot be defended lexically. The first aorist active of haireô

- 9 each should pray, and the one answering him would be God. •Accordingly, the (prophets) of Baal prayed and cut themselves until the ninth hour, and no one answered them; and Elijah, when he had filled the place where the sacrifice was with much water, also prayed, and immediately fire came down and consumed the sacrifice, and the water was gone.<sup>j</sup> •And all blessed God, and killed the four hundred and fifty (prophets) of Baal. •When King Ahaziah sent to obtain an oracle from idols, (Elijah) prophesied death, and he died. •When two captains of fifty were sent to him from Ahaziah, the king of Israel, he invoked the LORD and fire came down from heaven, and the fire consumed them at the LORD's command.
- 13.14 Ravens brought him bread in the morning and meat in the afternoon.<sup>k</sup> •With a sheepskin<sup>l</sup> he struck the Jordan and it was divided, and they crossed over with dry feet, both he and Elisha. •Finally he was taken up in a chariot of fire.
- 2Kgs 1:1-17
2Kgs 1:9-12
9:3
1Kgs 17:6
2Kgs 2:8
2Kgs 2:11

Elisha

- 1.2 22 Elisha was from Abel Meholah in the land of Reuben.<sup>a</sup> •And a marvel occurred concerning this man, for when he was born in Gilgal,<sup>b</sup> the golden calf bellowed shrilly, so that it was heard in Jerusalem, and the priest declared through the Urim<sup>c</sup> that a prophet had been born to Israel who would destroy their carved images and molten idols. •And when he died, he was buried in Samaria.<sup>d</sup>
- 4.5 The signs which he did are these. •He too struck the Jordan with Elijah's sheepskin, and the water was divided, and he too passed over with dry feet. •The water in Jericho was foul and sterile; and hearing (this) from the city's residents, he invoked God, and he said, "I am healing this water, and no longer will death and sterility issue from it," and the water has remained healed to this day. •When children treated him disrespectfully, he cursed them,<sup>e</sup> and two bears came out and tore to pieces<sup>f</sup> forty-two of them. •The wife of a prophet who had died was being pestered by creditors,<sup>g</sup> and was unable to pay; she came to Elisha, and he commanded her to gather new vessels, as many as she could, and to pour the (jar) containing very little oil into them until the vessels were full; and she did this and filled the vessels and repaid her creditors, and she had the surplus for the sustenance of her children. •He went to Shunem<sup>h</sup> and stayed with a certain woman;
- 1Kgs 19:16
2Kgs 2:13f.
2Kgs 2:19-22
2Kgs 2:23f.
2Kgs 4:1-7

is not witnessed until the 4th cent., according to LSJM, p. 41, and nowhere does the active verb bear a meaning suitable to this context. Perhaps hērēse should be emended to ētēse, "asked," but the latter would fit poorly with the fourth infinitival phrase.

j. Lit. "ceased." Possibly a scribal error substituted exeleipen for an original exelixen as found in the LXX version of the narrative, 1Kgs 18:38, "and it licked up the water."

k. Following LXX; MT has "bread and meat in the morning, and bread and meat in the afternoon."

l. Again following LXX; MT has "mantle."

22 a. Abel Meholah is frequently located west of the Jordan, about 16 kilometers (10 miles) south of Beisan (Beth-shan, Scythopolis); cf. Simons, Geographical and Topographical Texts, pp. 293f. N. Glueck, Explorations in Eastern Palestine, IV, part I: Text, Annual of the American Schools of Oriental Research 25-28 (1945-49; New Haven, 1951) pp. 211-23, argues for a site in Gilead near the Wadi el-Yabis. Our text supports a Transjordanian site but places it much farther south in Reubenite territory.

b. The Gilgal here referred to is not the sanctuary near Jericho but a site near Bethel. Awareness of this second Gilgal persisted through the Roman period, as evidenced by the Onomastikon of Eusebius (Klostermann, ed.: p. 66). Although the phrase "in Gilgal" is awkwardly placed, it is apparently to be taken with the following clause. Torrey, Lives, p. 48, remarks, "This passage in the Lives is the oldest witness to the belief, found in the writings of certain Church fathers, that one of Jeroboam's two golden calves was set up in Gilgal instead of Dan."

c. Cf. Num 27:21; Urim is often combined with Thummim (Ex 28:30). Possibly a form of dice by means of which a priest could secure a divine answer to a human inquiry. Cf. I. Mendelsohn, "Urim and Thummim," IDB 4.739-40.

d. Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 30, notes that the narrative concerning Elisha's grave in 2Kgs 13:20f. presupposes a site much closer to the Jordan, where an incursion of Moabite raiders would be more likely, but adds that later tradition consistently points to Samaria. Jerome, Comm. in Abdiam 1 (PL, vol. 25, col. 1099B), mentions a mausoleum of Elisha in Sebaste (Samaria).

e. Lit. "among them."

f. Emending the text from enerrēxan, "broke into," to anerrēxan, as found in LXX of 2Kgs 2:24.

g. 2Kgs 4:1 mentions only one creditor.

h. Q, following LXX, has Souman. Eusebius, Onomastikon (Klostermann, ed.: p. 158) identifies Shunem (which he spells Sounēm) with an existing village called Soulēm, five Roman miles (c. 4.6 miles) south of Mount Tabor.

- she was not able to bear a child, but earnestly desired to have one; he prayed and made her able to conceive and give birth; then, when the child died, he prayed
- 10 again and raised it from the dead. •He went to Gilgal and was brought before the sons of the prophets; and when the food was boiled, and a deadly herb was boiled 2Kgs 4:38-41
- 11 and sweet. •When the sons of the prophets were felling trees by the Jordan, the axehead fell off and sank; and Elisha, praying, made the axehead float to the surface. 2Kgs 6:1-7
- 12,13 •Through him Naaman the Syrian was cleansed of leprosy. •When his servant, named Gehazi, went to Naaman secretly, against his wishes, and asked for silver, and later upon returning denied it, Elisha rebuked and cursed him, and he became a leper. 2Kgs 5:1-27
- 14 •When the king of Syria was making war against Israel, he protected the king of Israel by announcing to him the plans of the enemy. 2Kgs 6:8-23
- 15 •When the king of Syria learned this he sent a force to bring the prophet, but he prayed and made them to be struck<sup>i</sup> with blindness, and he led them to Samaria, to their
- 16 enemies, but keeping them unharmed he preserved and fed them. •When the king of Syria learned this he stopped making war. •After Elisha's death a man died, 2Kgs 13:20f.
- 17 and as he was being buried he was thrown onto his bones, and just as he touched Elisha's bones the dead man revived immediately.

Zechariah son of Jehoiada

- 1 23 Zechariah was from Jerusalem, son of Jehoiada the priest, and Joash the king of Judah killed him near the altar,<sup>a</sup> and the house of David<sup>b</sup> poured out his blood in front of the Ailam,<sup>c</sup> and the priests took him and buried him with his father.<sup>d</sup> 2Chr 24:20-22 Mt 23:35
- 2 From that time visible portents occurred in the Temple,<sup>e</sup> and the priests were not able to see a vision of angels of God or to give oracles from the Dabeir,<sup>f</sup> or to inquire by the Ephod,<sup>g</sup> or to answer the people through Urim as formerly.

i. Reading patachthēnai, following Nestle's transcription of Q, Marginalien, p. 34; the same verb is used by the LXX narrative, 2Kgs 6:18. Schermann, Prophetarum vitae fabulosae, p. 96, has katachthēnai as Q's reading.

23 a. The Midrash on Lamentations, Midrash Rabbah, ed. H. Freedman and M. Simon (10 vols.; London, 1939) vol. 7, p. 226, stresses that the murder occurred in the Court of the Priests, not the Court of Israel or the Court of Women. According to Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 6, p. 396, the medieval Midrash Aggadah declares that the blood of Zechariah bespattered the walls of the sanctuary. The assertion of Jesus that Zechariah died "between the sanctuary and the altar" (Mt 23:35; Lk 11:51) shows contact with the tradition transmitted by LivPro. An interesting variant provided by Codex Bezae at Lk 11:51 shows even closer contact: anameson, "in the midst of" or "between."

b. In Zech 12:8 the term "the House of David" seems to be a circumlocution for "the king." Poetic parallelism employs the same circumlocution here.

c. Ailam is the transliteration employed in LXX to render the Heb. ʾūlām and ʾūlām, which designate the porch of the Temple (1Kgs 6:3 et al.).

d. According to 2Chr 24:16, Jehoiada was buried "with the kings in the Citadel of David." Jeremias, Heiligengräber, p. 68, correctly points out that, regardless of the accuracy of this statement, it is very unlikely that 1st-cent. Jews believed that Zechariah and his father were buried within Jerusalem, in view of the frequent testimony in the rabbinic literature that only the kings and Huldah

(and Isaiah, according to the variant tradition reported by ARN 39 [B]) were buried within the city walls (e.g. t.BB 1:11). In the light of Mt 23:29f. and Lk 11:47, Jeremias continues, we must assume that the supposed grave of Zechariah had recently been marked with a new monument, for Zechariah and Isaiah are the only prophets whose martyrdoms and subsequent burials in Jerusalem could have prompted this saying of Jesus. Because of the widespread confusion that identified this Zechariah with the prophet of the same name (see n. c on 15:6), it is probable that the monument was erected in the Kidron valley near the tombs of the priests (see n. n on 1:9). Jeremias, Heiligengräber, pp. 68-72, rules out the possibility that Zechariah's monument can be identified with any of the existing structures in that area.

e. None of the punishments listed in this sentence are mentioned in the rabbinic haggadah, but a great deal of attention is given there to one portent that is not explicitly alluded to in LivPro: The blood of Zechariah seethed and bubbled on the stones in the Temple court for 252 years until it was finally atoned by the slaughter effected by Nebuzaradan (b. Gitt 57b; b. Sanh 89b; Midrash on Ecclesiastes 3.16 §1; 10.4 §1 [Midrash Rabbah, vol. 8, pp. 101f., 263f.]).

f. See n. f on 12:12. The practice here alluded to of giving oracles from the holy of holies is nowhere attested.

g. According to this passage, both the Ephod and the Urim were employed in oracular practice. Rabbinic haggadah contains a similar opinion (Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 3, p. 172). Cf. also LetAris 97.

Conclusion

- 1 24 And other prophets became hidden,<sup>a</sup> whose names are contained in their genealogies in the books of the names of Israel; for the whole race of Israel are enrolled by name.

24 a. The difficulty of this phrase is probably responsible for the variant reading of E<sup>1</sup>, "which we have not mentioned." E<sup>2</sup> and D do not have this concluding sentence. "Hidden" may mean simply that, while there are other prophets, the collection here assembled exhausts the list of prophets whose graves are known.

LADDER OF JACOB

(c. First Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY H. G. LUNT

The Ladder of Jacob has not survived as an integral text, even in a form as unsatisfactory as that of the Apocalypse of Abraham, but is known only from what was utilized in the Slavonic Tolkovaja paleja, or Explanatory Palaia. In retelling the tales of the Old Testament, the Slavic editors of the Palaia made many changes in the texts they used; they excised, they rearranged the order of sentences, paragraphs, or sections, and—most important—they modified wording in order to fit the texts into the anti-Jewish commentary interspersed in the canonical and non-canonical episodes they were explaining. Moreover, they freely united heterogeneous materials, often with little consideration for narrative flow or logical connections. Therefore we must treat the Ladder of Jacob with the utmost caution; at best our reconstitution of the text must be controversial in many details. For the moment, however, given the lack of careful study of the manuscript witnesses and the inaccessibility of many of them, we can give only a preliminary approximation that will serve as an introduction to the problems.

The original Slavonic version of the Ladder was modified in slightly different ways by two traditions in the history of the Palaia text. Recension A is the more conservative but is marred by the omission of the continuous text after 7:9; recension B was severely edited in a part of the narrative, while other passages appear to show harmonization with the commentary. Both have before 1:8 an obvious insertion whose purpose is to elucidate the Septuagint version of Genesis 28:13 (see n. to 1:7). In recension B, the major portion of Jacob's account—2:3–5:1—is reduced to a banal prayer and the matter-of-fact appearance of a nameless angel who starts to explain the vision. Otherwise, recension B continues through the end of chapter 7. A, on the other hand, abruptly moves from the middle of 6:9 to the commentary that in B follows 7:35. There is nothing to indicate that this omission was a real editorial decision; it is possible that our three copies go back to a model based on a defective manuscript.<sup>1</sup> In any case, the commentary jumps back to offer brief and haphazard interpretations of 5:12–17, then 6:5–12, 1–4, 13–15, and then a much more detailed and discernibly organized exegesis in chapter 7.

Chapter 7 is probably to be regarded as a separate work (cf. n. a to ch. 7). It is connected

<sup>1</sup> In A, the commentary begins: "Understand, Jew, how the Lord explained to your forefather Jacob . . ." In B, the introduction is longer: "Have you heard this well, you who have not recognized the truth, O Jew, how the Lord explained . . ." Very likely the common ancestor of our three MSS of rec. A was the work of a copyist who was faced with a lacuna, presumably bounded by "your tribe" of 6:9 and the vocative "Jew" of the commentary. He simply bridged it by means of the imperative "understand," which is common enough in the Palaia commentaries. Note that A (like the longer version of the ApAb) is found in what is agreed to be the second redaction of the Palaia as a whole. This indicates that copies of the independent text were still available in 15th-cent. Russia, when an editor restored some of the passages that had been modified or deleted by earlier compilers of the Palaia. It is quite possible that the episode we call the LadJac was a part of a larger work, but there is no evidence to affirm P. E. Ščegolev's conjecture that it is an excerpt from TJac ("Očerki istorii otrečennoj literatury: Skazanie Afroditiana," Izvestija Otdelenija russkogo jazyka i slovesnosti, vol. 4 [1899] 1332f.). [Frequently authors' first names are given in full herein, because Slav. publications are unusually difficult to locate. We are grateful to R. Rubinkiewicz for sharing with us his photographs of MSS of LadJac that he has found; and we look forward to his publications on this interesting document. —J.H.C.]

to the Ladder only by means of a grammatically incongruent sentence referring to the angels descending and ascending, and otherwise contains no identifiable reference to Jacob. Modern scholars have regarded it as a part of the Ladder because the Palaia has it, with its long commentary, between the materials clearly connected with Jacob's vision at Bethel and his continued journey to Laban.

Synopsis

The Ladder of Jacob is an elaboration of Jacob's dream at Bethel, Genesis 28:11–22. Resting during his flight from Esau, Jacob sees in a dream a ladder or staircase reaching from the earth to heaven. At the top is a fiery image, and at the right and left of each of the twelve steps is a statue or bust of a man. Angels are ascending and descending on the staircase. From above the highest statue, God calls to Jacob, promising that the land on which he is sleeping will be his and that his descendants are to flourish and be blessed.

Jacob awakens, consecrates the place, and utters a long prayer (unfortunately somewhat garbled and possibly shortened in the transmission of the text) asking God to interpret the dream. God orders the archangel Sariel to bless Jacob and explain the dream. Sariel appears to Jacob and changes his name to Israel. (An obscure passage may have offered an interpretation of Sariel's name; there may well be substantial omissions here.) Sariel says the ladder or staircase is this age and the twelve steps are the periods of the age; the faces or busts are the kings of the godless gentiles who will try Jacob's descendants. The iniquity of these descendants will bring retribution; unfortunately the text is too corrupt to allow any clear definition of precisely what is being prophesied. Possibly there is a reference to the destruction of the Temple. Some descendants of Esau will become kings and will help the Israelites (but again the corrupt text fails to give a clear picture). Eventually a king will arise for final vengeance, and the angels and archangels will hurl their bolts of lightning to aid the salvation of Jacob's tribe. The wicked (clearly the Egyptians) will be punished, Leviathan and "the lawless Falcon" will be defeated, and Jacob's justice will prevail. The kingdom of Edom and the peoples of Moab will perish.

The text now designated chapter 7 is a mosaic of oracular prophecies concerning the birth of Christ and also the crucifixion. It is to be regarded as an independent work, juxtaposed to the Ladder of Jacob by a Slavic editor of the Palaia.

Texts

The following survey of manuscripts is based on materials kindly furnished by Ryszard Rubinkiewicz.

RECENSION A, three manuscripts.

S. Explanatory Palaia of 1477. Sin. 210, State Historical Museum, Moscow, fols. 100<sup>v</sup>–106<sup>v</sup>. The manuscript was reproduced in facsimile: Tolkovaja paleja 1477 goda, vol. 93, Obščestvo ljubitelej drevnerusskoj pis'mennosti (St. Petersburg, 1893).

R. Rumiantsev Palaia of 1494. Rum. 455, Lenin Library, Moscow, fols. 76–83. Published by A. N. Pypin in Grigorij Kuševlev-Bezborodko, Pamjatniki starinnoj russkoj literatury (St. Petersburg, 1862) vol. 3, pp. 27–32.

U. Undolsky Palaia of 1517. Und. 719, State Historical Museum, Moscow. (Unpublished; a few variants available from penciled notes in my copy of Kuševlev-Bezborodko.)

RECENSION B, thirteen manuscripts.

K. Kolomna Palaia of 1406. Tr.-Serg. 38, Lenin Library, Moscow, fols. 77–79. The Ladder was first published by N. S. Tikhonravov, Pamjatniki starinnoj russkoj literatury (St. Petersburg, 1863) vol. 1, pp. 92–95. Later the whole manuscript was printed: Paleja tolkovaja po spisku sdellanomu v g. Kolomne v 1406 g., Trud učeníkov N. S. Tikhonravova, Moscow, 1892. This edition adduces selected variants from eight other manuscripts (one from the 14th, one from the 15th cent., the rest later; including MS Slav. 9 of the Vienna State Library, erroneously identified as no. 12).

V<sup>1</sup>. MS 83, Public Library, Vilnius, fols. 139–43, sixteenth century.

V<sup>2</sup>. MS 84, Public Library, Vilnius, fols. 84–86, sixteenth century.

M. Melec Monastery collection, Ukrainian Academy Library, Kiev, No. 114 (Aa 1292), fols. 74<sup>v</sup>–77<sup>r</sup>, seventeenth century.

P. Solovki Monastery collection, Saltykov-Shchedrin Public Library, Leningrad, Sol. 653. The Ladder was published by I. Ja. Porfir'ev, in "Apokrificheskie skazaniya o vetkhozavetnykh licakh i sobytijakh po rukopisjam soloveckoj biblioteki" (= Sbornik otd. r. jaz. i slov. 17.1), St. Petersburg, 1877, pp. 138–49.

RECENSION C is a brief extract of little interest on fol. 30<sup>r</sup> of the Palaia of 1414, Library of the Academy of Sciences, Leningrad, no. 25.5.8.

A German translation was made by N. Bonwetsch ("Die Apokryphe 'Leiter Jakobs,'" Göttinger Nachrichten, philol.-histor. Klasse [1900] 76–87) on the basis of the published material from R, K, and P, but it remained for N. M. Vtorykh (Drevnosti, Trudy Slavjanskoi komissii Moskovskoj arheologičeskogo obščestva, 2, 1902, protokoly, 1) to point out that recs. A and B go back to a single Slavonic translation.

The present translation is based on an eclectic text relying chiefly on MS S. It must be emphasized that many of the witnesses are unavailable or known only from variants selected by diverse scholars with differing methodologies and prejudices. One hopes that in the future it will be possible to examine carefully all the evidence. Since the relative value of many manuscripts is unknown, and the extant provenance of some variants has not been noted, the commentary does not attempt to identify the source of every variant mentioned.

Original language

The Explanatory Palaia is a compilation from many sources, but nearly all of the component parts of variant redactions go back to the Old Church Slavonic translations made in the Cyrillo-Methodian period, A.D. 863–87, and in the subsequent flowering of Byzantino-Slavic culture among the Slavs of Macedonia and Bulgaria for several generations after 890. A few hints in the Ladder, such as uslaždaemyx, "beguiled," (katathelchthentes) in 3:2, the distorted moguty for unfamiliar moguti "nobles" in 5:8, the agreement with the Apocalypse of Abraham (whose language demonstrably places its translation in the tenth century at the latest), and the peculiar use of vūsxody or sūxody (cf. nn. to 5:7, 9), allow us to assume that the Slavonic Ladder existed before the final Byzantine destruction of the Bulgarian state in 1018.

Greek may have been the original language of the Ladder (excluding ch. 7, whose origin will be treated below). No other Slavonic text has lice, "face," used to mean "statue" or "bust" (1:5 etc.), and there is no Semitic parallel. It is easily explained as a calque of prosōpon. (The use of "face" as a quasi-pronoun in 3:1 etc. is common in Slavonic as a reflection of biblical Gk. and tells us nothing of a text's origin.)

A non-Hebrew base text may be inferred from the citation of several Hebrew words in the prayer in 2:18b–19. (The reproduction of the untranslatable names of Divinity as in 2:18a and ApAb 17:16 tells us nothing about the original language.) Perhaps Sariel's explanation of his name in 4:6 was based on transposing letters. The Slavonic jako tū bēaše (S) may be modified from jakovū bēaše, reflecting Greek iakōb ēn. We may speculate further that much earlier the text spelled out the name, lakōb (iod, ain, koph, waw, beth) and went on to explain some sort of modification and its significance. Such a text would have little meaning for a later, non-Jewish audience, and successive copyists would surely distort it. In short, it is possible that the truncation of this passage preceded its translation into Slavonic. If all this is so, we can posit an originally Jewish text written down in Greek but intended for readers with at least some knowledge of Hebrew.

Date and provenance

The date and provenance of the Ladder are unknown.<sup>2</sup> The following observations should help in discerning the history of transmission of the possibly original Jewish document.<sup>3</sup>

The enigmatic (k)falkonagargailyu(ya) of 5:15 must somehow be connected with the "lawless Falkon"; cf. 6:13. Perhaps the association with Leviathan provides a clue. In Isaiah 27:1, Leviathan is described as "the crooked (or twisted) serpent," Hebrew nhš 'qltwn. The unusual epithet may have been taken as a proper name, and spelled in Greek—with loss of the initial ain—kalthōn. A mechanical transposition of letters would produce Thalkōn, and the East Slavic confusion of the letters theta and phi would yield "Falkon." In the apocryphal Life of St. Pancratius of Taormina, a pagan god named Falkon was cast into the sea by demons at the command of the saint; perhaps this legend influenced the form of the name in the Ladder. We may surmise that the second element is connected with the Greek stem gargalizein, "tempt, seduce," and conjecture that the original text was alluding to the crooked or lawless tempter, Satan.

The relationship of chapter 7 to the Ladder is only one of many questions still facing the student of the origin and development of the Explanatory Palaia. The time, place, and shape of the original compilation are controversial, and the order of various additions and emendations still needs intensive study. We can discern, however, two general aims of the original compilers and subsequent editors: to give an outline of Old Testament history, with some interpretation of significant but obscure events, and to elucidate the specifically Christian import of all Scripture and expose "the wicked falsity" of Jewish exegesis. For the first purpose, the whole texts of the Apocalypse of Abraham and the Ladder were suitable, although they might require some modification. For anti-Jewish polemical purposes, no particular system was required, for a word here and a sentence there can point to the proper sense. Such expansions could be made either to the original biblical text (e.g. the n. on Gen 28:13 inserted after LadJac 1:7) or to passages of an interpolated unit (such as the comments on 5:12–17 and ch. 6). Yet some persistent Jewish arguments called for more detailed refutation, and therefore longer pieces were added at a place the editors deemed appropriate. This is surely the case with chapter 7, which is generally devoted to the divinity of Christ, and more specifically to the Nativity: The cryptic text has been constructed as a framework and excuse for the exegesis. Its incorporation into the Palaia may have preceded, followed, or been simultaneous with the addition of the Ladder.

The principal source is a well-known Christian work entitled Explanation of the Events in Persia (Exēgēsis tōn prachthentōn en Persidi), more specifically the section found independently in some manuscripts under the name Tale of Aphroditianus.<sup>4</sup> Russian and Serbian Slavonic copies (13th–18th cent.) surely stem from an Old Church Slavonic translation made in the tenth century.<sup>5</sup> It is a mediocre translation with a series of peculiarities

<sup>2</sup> Epiphanius (Adv. Haer. 30.16.7) mentions a "Ladder [anabathmoi, "steps," not klimax as we would expect] of Jacob"; but, as Rubinkiewicz has stated to me, K. Holl correctly showed that Epiphanius is referring to a "Ladder of Jacob (the Apostle)." See Holl's Epiphanius (Ancoratus and Panarion) (Leipzig, 1915) vol. 1, p. 354. In contrast to LadJac, Epiphanius' "Ladder of Jacob" concerns the Temple, sacrifices, and fire on the altar. —J.H.C.

<sup>3</sup> We can speculate reliably only on the final steps in the transmission of LadJac. I suggest, however, that this is the last of a series of stages, approximately as follows: (1) a Jewish story composed in Jewish-Gk. for a Palestinian audience; (2) transmission of this text in Byzantine circles, with inevitable distortions, ending up with a Gk. copy available by about A.D. 900 to a Slav; (3) translation into OCS; (4) utilization of copies of this old translation by Russ. editors as they elaborated various redactions of the Palaia in the 13th–15th cent.

<sup>4</sup> Published, with an extensive study, by E. Bratke, Das sogenannte Religionsgespräch am Hof der Sasaniden pp. 101–6. The Tale of Aphroditianus is 11.3–19.9 of his text. At the same time, P. E. Ščegolev published a study of Aphroditianus, chiefly in Slav. literature (Izvestija Otdelenija, vol. 4 (1899) 148–99, 1304–44). It is a pity that he and Bratke were unaware of each other's work.

<sup>5</sup> The 13th-cent. Russ. Slavonic copy titled Skazanie Afrodit'jana o byvsim v perst'ei zemli čudesi was published by N. S. Tikhonravov, Pamjatniki starinnoj russkoj literatury (St. Petersburg, 1863) vol. 2, pp. 1–4; it corresponds to Bratke's 11.3–19.6. A 16th-cent. Russ. Slavonic copy (cf. I. Ja. Porfir'ev, "Apokrifičeskie skazanja o novozavetnykh licakh i sobytijakh po rukopisjam Soloveckoj biblioteki," Sbornik Otdelenija russkogo jazyka i slovesnosti 52 [1891] 149–54) adds a final paragraph from another source. A 13th-cent. Serbian Slavonic fragment published by V. Makušev (Russkij filologičeskij vestnik 7 [1882] 9–12) breaks off at 15.1. The full text, with a long interpolation not mentioned by Bratke, was published from a 1740 Serbian Slavonic MS by Stojan Novaković (Starine 10 [1878] 72–80).

that make it possible to demonstrate beyond question that verses 11–25 of chapter 7 of the Ladder were put together from elements found in the Slavonic Aphroditianus.<sup>6</sup> The whole chapter and its commentary is most probably the work of the Slavic editors of the Palaia, very likely Russians of the thirteenth to fourteenth centuries. Verse 7:2b anticipates 16, which is part of the mosaic from Aphroditianus. Verses 3–9, 21, and 26–35 are taken from other sources; this last group is not well integrated with what goes before.

The Tale of Aphroditianus starts with the uproar among the idols in Persian temples that caused the Magi to seek out Mary and Jesus in Bethlehem, and continues through the events of the Nativity and the slaughter of the innocents. The commentary to the Ladder 7:20 quotes Balaam's prophecy, "a star shall rise out of Jacob, a man shall spring out of Israel" (Numbers 24:17LXX). These words, and the final phrase of the verse, "and shall crush the princes of Moab," would be familiar to pious Orthodox Christians, for the passage occurs in one of the Old Testament lessons for the Christmas service. Moreover, that same service explicitly connects the star of Jacob and the star of Bethlehem.<sup>7</sup> Therefore the Slavic editors of the Palaia had good reason for associating this chapter with the Ladder 6:15 as the suitable spot to introduce extensive arguments about the miraculous and divine nature of the Nativity.<sup>8</sup> The problems of this chapter deserve further study, but in any case it is clear that these verses were added not to the Greek but to the Slavonic Ladder.

Theological importance<sup>9</sup>

Belief in one God is emphasized in the Ladder of Jacob. God is Lord of the world. He is the one who is "carrying the whole world under" his arm, "yet not being borne by anyone" (2:9). He made the skies, set the order of movements for the sun, moon, and stars (2:10–12), and fills the "heaven and earth, the sea and abysses and all the ages" with his glory (2:20). Yet, it is not clear that Jewish monotheism is emphasized in the Ladder; the existence of other gods is not denied and often it seems that the God of Adam, Abraham, Isaac (2:6), and Jacob (passim) is the God of gods; note 2:22, "you are a god who is mighty, powerful and glorious, a god who is holy; my Lord and Lord of my fathers." Likewise, thoroughgoing monotheism seems to be foreign to the Ladder, since Falkon raises "the wrath of the God of gods by his pride" (6:13).

Angels, of course, play a prominent role in the Ladder. They ascend and descend, which is a characteristic of traditions related to Jacob (cf. Gen 28:12b; Jn 1:51); elsewhere the emphasis is upon angels descending and then ascending. The archangel Sariel, who is also mentioned in the Qumran Scrolls, Aramaic Enoch, and the Neofiti Targum,<sup>10</sup> is said to be the one who is in charge of dreams (3:2); hence, he is the one who is dispatched to Jacob in order to explain to him the meaning of his dream.

<sup>6</sup> Specifically, vss. 10f. = Aphr 15.9f.; 12b + 13a = 14.2; 14 = 15.16 + 19; 15f. = 18.8–10; vs. 17 expresses ideas of Aphr 13.4–7; 18f. is a general summary with reference to Aphr 15.10; 20 = 14.11–16; 21 is from another source; vs. 22 has the idea of 15.1 plus words of 13.19, while vss. 23–25 = 15.1–3. Some further details are mentioned in the nn. to the translation.

<sup>7</sup> Since the Christmas liturgy associates Balaam's prophecy with the Magi and the Nativity, these same themes were sometimes interwoven in Christmas sermons, as early as Basil the Great. A particularly striking parallel for our ch. 7 is a sermon of John of Damascus (inc. Hopotan to ear eisethē), where Balaam's prophecy is cited just before a long passage taken literally from Aphr (cf. Bratke, Das sogenannte Religionsgespräch, p. 92, and Šćegolev, Izvestija Otdelenija, vol. 4 [1899] 195f.; both attribute the sermon to John of Euboea). We lack evidence that this work was translated into Slavonic in the early period, however, but surely the Slavs knew some of the earlier sermons of this type.

<sup>8</sup> The Slavs may well have known another traditional connection which is echoed in Theodore of Studios' apostrophe of the Theotokos as the "ladder, fixed on the earth, to heaven" by which the Lord descended "to the great patriarch Jacob." ("In dormitionem Deiparae," in Migne, PG, vol. 99, col. 725B.)

<sup>9</sup> The remainder of the introduction and nn. is by J. H. Charlesworth, in consultation with Lunt and Rubinkiewicz. <sup>10</sup> Cf. 1QM 9.12–15, 4QEn<sup>b</sup> (cf. 4QEn<sup>a</sup>), and Noef. Gen 32:25–32 (viz. "And Jacob was left alone; and the angel Sariel wrestled with him in the likeness of a man . . ."). G. Vermes argues that Sariel appears as one of the four chief angels (along with Michael, Raphael, and Gabriel) through reflections upon the Jacob saga; cf. his "The Archangel Sariel: A Targumic Parallel to the Dead Sea Scrolls," in Christianity, Judaism and Other Greco-Roman Cults, ed. J. Neusner (SJLA 12; Leiden, 1975) part 3, pp. 159–66. Also cf. J. T. Milik, ed., with M. Black, The Books of Enoch: Aramaic Fragments of Qumrān Cave 4 (Oxford, 1976) pp. 170–74. It is significant for the dating of the traditions in Laddac to observe that Sariel, who is later replaced by Uriel (cf. 1En 9:1) as one of the four archangels, is linked with traditions that are clearly pre-A.D. 70 and Palestinian.

As in some of the other pseudepigrapha, the voice has ceased to be something heard and has become a hypostatic creature. In 2:2, we have the familiar concept of a voice; but in 3:1, we hear that "a voice came before my face" and, although he appears to be speaking to Jacob, he actually addresses words to Sariel. A hypostatic voice also appears in the Apocalypse of Abraham, chapter 9, and tells Abraham to sacrifice. In the History of the Rechabites, a voice comes to an individual (2:7) and even speaks to the traveler (3:1). The concept of a hypostatic voice appears also in the Apocalypse of Sedrach and some of the apocalypses preserved in the Mani Codex.<sup>11</sup>

In contrast to the Treatise of Shem (contained herein), there appear to be anti-astrological overtones in at least two passages. In 2:12, it is stated that the sun is controlled by God "so that it might not seem a god" and similarly in 2:14 it is said that the stars are controlled by God "to pass on so that they too might not seem gods."

Running throughout the six chapters in an unorganized fashion—reflecting the fragmentary nature of the text—<sup>12</sup> appears to be an apocalyptic vision of the future. First, the descendants of Jacob will suffer desolation and exile (5:7; 6:2). Because of the sins of Jacob's descendants (5:7), they "shall be exiled in a strange land" and be afflicted with slavery and wounds every day (5:16). Second, his descendants will be freed by God (6:2), because angels (6:6) and finally God (6:9) will fight for Jacob's tribe (cf. 1QM). Finally, at the end of time, Jacob's descendants will inherit the land promised to him (1:9) and become as many "as the stars of heaven and the sand of the sea" (1:10). The future will indeed be glorious according to God's own words to Jacob: "And through your seed all the earth and those living on it in the last times of the years of completion shall be blessed" (1:11).

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 130f.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 34f.

Bonwetsch, N. "Die Apokryphe 'Leiter Jakobs,'" Göttinger Nachrichten, philol.-histor. Klasse (1900) 76–87. (German translation of the LadJac.)

Bratke, E. Das sogenannte Religionsgespräch am Hof der Sasaniden. TU N.F. 4.3a (1899) pp. 101–6. (A study of ch. 7 of LadJac.)

James, M. R. "Ladder of Jacob," The Lost Apocrypha of the Old Testament. TED; London, New York, 1920; pp. 96–103. (A brief summary and comments on LadJac.)

Ščegolev, P. E. "Očerki istorii otrečenoj literatury: Skazanie Afroditiana," Izvestija Otdelenija ruskogo jazyka i slovesnosti, Imp. Akademija Nauk, vol. 4 (1899) 148–99, 1304–44.

Vassiliev, Athanasius. Anecdota Graeco-Byzantina. Moscow, 1893; vol. 1, pp. xxix–xxxii. (Summary, Lat. version of LadJac 7, and the Palaia's commentary.)

<sup>11</sup> See the discussions in the contributions herein on ApAb 9, HistRech 3:1, ApSedr 2:1–4; also cf. TJob 3:1, "a loud voice came to me in a very bright light saying, Jobab, Jobab"; and 3Bar 11:5, "And behold a voice came: 'Let the gate be opened'" (Gk., cf. Slav.).

<sup>12</sup> Perhaps the Slavs deleted portions of an earlier longer document; certainly there were ideas in Early Judaism that would have been offensive or confusing to the medieval Slavs.

THE LADDER OF JACOB

1.2 1 Jacob then went to Laban his uncle. •He found a place and, laying his head
3 on a stone, he slept there, for the sun had gone down. •He had a dream.* And 4 behold, a ladder was fixed on the earth, whose top reached to heaven. •And the 5 top of the ladder was the face<sup>b</sup> as of a man, carved out of fire. •There were twelve steps leading to the top of the ladder, and on each step to the top there were two 6 human faces, on the right and on the left, twenty-four faces (or busts) including their chests. •And the face in the middle was higher than all that I saw, the one of fire, including the shoulders and arms, exceedingly terrifying, more than those 7 twenty-four faces. •And while I was still looking at it, behold, angels of God
8 ascended and descended on it.<sup>c</sup> •And God was standing above its highest face, and he called to me from there, saying, “Jacob, Jacob!” And I said, “Here I 9 am, LORD!” •And he said to me, “The land on which you are sleeping, to you 10 will I give it, and to your seed after you. •And I will multiply your seed as the stars of heaven and the sand of the sea. •And through your seed all the earth and 11 those living on it in the last times of the years of completion shall be blessed.
12 My blessing with which I have blessed you shall flow from you unto the last generation; the East and the West all shall be full of your tribe.”

1.2 2 And when I heard (this) from on high, awe and trembling fell upon me. •And 3 I rose up from my dream and, the voice still being in my ears, I said,* “•How fearful is this place! This is none other than the house of God and this is the gate 4 of heaven.” •And I set up the stone which had been my pillow as a pillar, and I poured olive oil on the top of it, and I called the name of that place the House of 5 God. •And I stood and began to sing, and I said, 6 “LORD God of Adam your creature and LORD God of Abraham and Isaac my fathers and of all who have walked before you in justice!”

1 a. We follow Tikhonravov in beginning LadJac here, a decision supported, as far as we know, by only one MS, V<sup>1</sup>. The preceding material in the Palaia tells of Esau's murderous anger and Rebecca's advice that Jacob flee to Laban. The wording is essentially Gen 27:41b-45, slightly altered in sequence; nothing remains of Gen 27:45-28:9. In the oldest MSS of rec. B there is no hint of a subdivision here or nearby. Rec. A, however (with two MSS of B), makes a break after “dream” in vs. 3 and provides a heading: “Concerning the Ladder.” MS S has a miniature showing the sleeping Jacob and God appearing behind a craggy mountain but, oddly enough, no ladder. It is probable, in view of the first-person narrative from vs. 6 on, that LadJac originally began with Jacob's own account of events that brought him to this place.

b. Here and below surely prosōpon in the sense of “bust” or “portrait.” We retain the traditional “ladder,” although surely this is rather a solid staircase, lined with statues, as on a ziggurat. (Cf. E. A. Speiser's comment on Gen 28:12 in his Genesis [The Anchor Bible; Garden City, N.Y., 1964] p. 218.)

c. At this point there is an insertion, starting with the beginning of Gen 28:13 in explicitly LXX form: “And the LORD was established on it.” A short commentary on this phrase follows, then reference to the angels ascending (identified as the gentiles) and descending (the Jews). This is the only interruption of the text up to 6:8.

2 a. From here through 5:1 the text is preserved only in A. B has a poorly constructed condensation as follows:

“LORD, Creator of all creation, and again LORD God of Abraham and of Isaac my father, and God of all who have walked in justice before you. (Behold, I saw a terrible vision; trembling fell upon me.) But remember, LORD, my forefather Abraham, how he walked before you in innocence, and in all ways fulfilled your commandments. And also my father, your servant Isaac, did not disobey your commandments. Therefore, LORD, look on me mercifully, on your servant, and explain to me this vision, this terrible one I have seen.” And while the word and prayer were still in Jacob's mouth, behold an angel of God stood before him, saying, “Jacob, I have been sent to you by the Creator of all things to tell you of your dream. Put this announcement of your dream in your heart.”

7 You who sit firmly<sup>b</sup> on the cherubim and the fiery<sup>c</sup> throne of glory
 . . . and the many-eyed (ones) just as I saw in my dream, 8 holding the four-faced cherubim, bearing also the many-eyed seraphim, 9 carrying the whole world<sup>d</sup> under your arm, yet not being borne by anyone;
 you who have made the skies firm for the glory of your name, 10 stretching out on two heavenly clouds the heaven which gleams under you,
 11 that beneath it you may cause the sun to course and conceal it during the night so that it might not seem a god;
 12 (you) who made on them<sup>e</sup> a way for the moon and the stars; 13 and you make the moon wax and wane, and destine the stars to pass on 14 so that they too might not seem gods.
 15 Before the face of your glory the six-winged seraphim are afraid, and they cover their feet and faces with their wings, while flying with their other (wings), and they sing unceasingly a hymn: Isa 6:2 16 ' . . . ' whom I now in sanctifying a new (song) . . .
 17 Twelve-topped,<sup>f</sup> twelve-faced, many-named, fiery one!
 Lightning-eyed holy one!
 18 Holy, Holy, Holy, Yao, Yaova, Yaoil, Yao, PrJac
 Kados,<sup>g</sup> Chavod,<sup>h</sup> Savaoth, 19 Omlemlech<sup>i</sup> il avir<sup>k</sup> amismi<sup>l</sup> varich,<sup>m</sup> eternal king, mighty, powerful, most great, patient, blessed one!
 20 You who fill heaven and earth, the sea and abysses and all the ages with your glory, 21 hear my song with which I have sung you and grant me the request I ask of you,
 22 and tell me the interpretation of my dream, for you are a god who is mighty, powerful and glorious,
 a god who is holy; my LORD and LORD of my fathers."

1 3 And while I was still saying this prayer, behold, a voice came before my face
 2 saying, "Sariel, leader of the beguiled,<sup>a</sup> you who are in charge of dreams, go and make Jacob understand the meaning of the dream he has had and explain to 3 him everything he saw; but first bless him." •And Sariel the archangel came to 4 me and I saw (him), and his appearance was very beautiful and awesome. •But I was not astonished by his appearance, for the vision which I had seen in my 5 dream was more terrible than he. •And I did not fear the vision of the angel.

1.2.3 4 And the angel said to me, "What is your name?" •And I said, "Jacob." •(He announced), "Your name shall no longer be called Jacob, but your name shall be

b. Slav. krěpcě; perhaps better read krěpce. "O Mighty One, sitting (who sittest)."

c. The text is corrupt at this point. In the phrase na přestolě slavy ogneně, the last word may be locative and an epithet of "throne," as translated, but it could be a banal error for ogněne, a vocative ("O fiery one!") which introduces a new invocation, cf. vs. 17 below and ApAb 17:19. At least a few words must have been omitted at this point.

d. Or "age"; Gk. aion, Heb. ólām. Grammar obscure; possibly "the age of everything" or, assuming a lacuna, "the age of the whole . . ."

e. Presumably the clouds.

f. Text corrupt.

g. Or "twelve-crested."

h. Heb. qādōš, "holy."

i. All copies written with an abbreviation mark obviously understood by scribes as xrista vod, "Christ of the waters." Surely Heb. kāvōd, "Glory" in the sense of a "theophanic cloud."

j. Probably distorted Heb. melek, "king," perhaps plus ólām.

k. For Heb. ʿĒl ʿābir, "LORD-Bull; mighty LORD."

l. Var. amimis. Probably contains Heb. amīš, "strong, firm, courageous."

m. Heb. bārūk, "blessed."

3 a. Slav. uslaždaemyx, lit. "sweetened," but here surely for Gk. katathelgō, "enchant, charm," or with negative sense "delude, deceive."

4 similar to my name, Israel.<sup>a</sup>” •And when I was going from Phandana of Syria<sup>b</sup> to meet Esau my brother, he came to me and blessed me and called me Israel.
5,6 And he would not tell me his name until I adjured him. •And then he said to me, “As you were kep zul<sup>c</sup> . . .”

1 5 Thus he said to me: “You have seen a ladder with twelve steps, each step 2 having two human faces which kept changing their appearance. •The ladder is 3,4 this age, •and the twelve steps are the periods<sup>a</sup> of this age. •But the twenty-four 5 faces are the kings of the ungodly nations of this age. •Under these kings the children of your children and the generations of your sons will be interrogated.
6,7 These will rise up against the iniquity of your grandsons. •And this place will be made<sup>b</sup> desolate<sup>c</sup> by the four ascents<sup>d</sup> . . . through the sins<sup>e</sup> of your grandsons.
8 And around the property of your forefathers a palace will be built, a temple in 9 the name of your God and of (the God) of your fathers, •and in the provocations 10 of your children it will become deserted<sup>f</sup> by the four ascents<sup>g</sup> of this age. •For 11 you saw the first four busts<sup>h</sup> which were striking against the steps . . . •angels<sup>i</sup> 12 ascending and descending, and the busts amid the steps. •The Most High will raise up kings from the grandsons of your brother Esau, and they will receive all 13 the nobles of the tribes of the earth who will have maltreated your seed. •And 14 they will be delivered into his hands and he will be vexed<sup>j</sup> by them. •And he will hold them by force and rule over them, and they will not be able to oppose him until the day when his thought will go out against them to serve idols and (to 15 offer) sacrifices of the dead.<sup>k</sup> • . . . (He will) do violence to all those in his kingdom who will be revealed in such guilt, both to the highest (man)<sup>l</sup> from your 16 tribe and kfalkonagargailyuya.<sup>m</sup> •Know, Jacob, that your descendants shall be exiles in a strange<sup>n</sup> land, and they will afflict them with slavery and inflict wounds 17 on them every day. •But the LORD will judge the people for whom they slave.

cf. Gen 15:13f.

1,2 6 “•And when the king arises, judgment too will come upon that place. •Then your seed, Israel, will go out of slavery<sup>a</sup> to the nations who hold them by force,

4 a. Heb. sry-ʾl, “Sariel,” with transposition of one letter is ysr-ʾl, “Israel.”

b. This same form, clearly representing Padan Aram (Aram = “of Syria”), is found in ApAb 2:3.

c. R U kop zul. Presumably more detailed discussion of the angel’s name has been deleted here.

5 a. Slav. vrémēna, probably Gk. kairoi.

b. Vs. corrupt. A has singular transitive “he will make,” B plural “they will make”; neither subject is clear.

c. Or “empty.”

d. Positioning instrumental plural vǔsxody; the majority reading is sxody, “descents.” The word means “going up” in various senses, including “stairway,” and its exact meaning here, in vs. 9 below, and in ApAb 27:3 and 28:4f. is obscure. It is used in an early version of Ezek 9:3 to render the Gk. aithrion, referring to the threshold of the Temple. If this is the sense, F. M. Cross, Jr., suggests it may be taken as a boundary: To enter the Holy of Holies one must cross four thresholds or make four “ascents,” while in leaving it would be four “descents.” Cf. Ezek 10:4, 18f. and 11:22f. for the descent or abandonment and chs. 42–48 for the ascent or return.

e. Instrumental plural in S, nominative or accusative singular or else genitive plural elsewhere.

f. Slav. zapustěti, intransitive.

g. Reading vǔsxody and interpreting it as instrumental. Yet do sxod is possible, and might mean

“before the fourth ascent”; cf. ApAb 28:5, in which this term seems to denote a period.

h. The text is corrupt; possibly “you saw the four faces first when they were striking” (or “hitting”). The sense of the latter verb is obscure.

i. B omits the vs. In A, “angels” is nominative, but the accompanying participles are accusative. The “busts” or “faces” are either nominative or accusative.

j. Slav. negodujem, a passive participle, though the verb is always intransitive elsewhere.

k. A has no verb, but the genitive “of the dead” with no clear context. B has “that they may sacrifice to the dead” with appropriate dative. Neither rec. has a clear connection to the following “do violence”; there must be something missing.

l. A (with U) vyšūnemu; S R an incongruous vyšūnem.

m. S R; U, with rec. A, omits final -ya but starts next vs. with the conjunction a, “and, but.” A omits initial k, probably equating it with the preposition “to,” deemed inappropriate in the context. Meaning possibly “crooked tempter,” i.e. Satan.

n. Note that the wording of this vs. is not quite that of Gen, either in Heb. or Gk.

6 a. This is the text of A, where it follows 5:17. In B and in the repetition found embedded in the commentary, 5:17 is followed by 6:5, and the text of 1f. is slightly different: “Then the Most High will give judgment to that place, and he will lead your seed out of slavery.”

3 and they will be free from any rebuke of your enemies. •For this king is the head of all revenge and retaliation<sup>b</sup> against those who have done evil to you, Israel, 4 and the end of the age. •For bitter ones will rise;<sup>c</sup> they will cry out, and the LORD 5 will hear them and accept their plea. •And the Mighty One will repent because 6 of their sufferings. •For the angels and archangels will hurl their bolts of lightning 7 before them for the sake of the salvation of your tribe. •And you will gain the 8,9 mercy of the Most High. •Then their wives will bear many children. •And afterward the LORD will fight for your tribe<sup>d</sup> through great and terrible signs 10 against those who made them slaves. •He filled their storehouses, and they will 11 be found empty. •Their land swarmed with reptiles and all sorts of deadly things. 12,13 There will be earthquakes and much destruction. •And the LORD will pour out his wrath against Leviathan the sea-dragon; he will kill the lawless Falcon with the 14 sword, because he will raise the wrath of the God of gods by his pride. •And then your justice will be revealed, Jacob, and that of your children<sup>e</sup> who are to 15 be after you (and) who will walk in your justice. •And then your seed will sound the horn and all the kingdom of Edom will perish together with all the peoples of Moab.

* * *

1,2 7 “And as for the angels you saw descending and ascending the ladder,<sup>a</sup> •in the last years there will be a man from the Most High, and he will desire to join the 3 upper (things) with the lower. •And before his coming your sons and daughters 4 will tell about him and your young men will have visions about him. •Such will 5,6 be the signs at the time of his coming: •A tree cut with an ax will bleed; •three- 7 month-old babes will speak understanding; •a baby in the womb of his mother 8,9 will speak of his way; •a youth will be like an old man. •And then the expected one will come, whose path<sup>b</sup> will not be noticed by anyone. 10,11 “Then the earth will be glorified, receiving heavenly glory. •What was above 12,13 will be below also.<sup>c</sup> •And from your seed will bloom a root of kings; •it will 14 emerge<sup>d</sup> and overthrow the power of evil. •And he himself will be the Savior for every land and rest for those who toil, and a cloud shading the whole world from 15,16 the burning heat. •For otherwise the uncontrolled<sup>e</sup> will not be controlled. •If he 17 does not come,<sup>f</sup> the lower (things) cannot be joined with the upper. •At his coming the idols of brass, stone, and any sort of carving will give voice for three days.<sup>g</sup> 18 They will give wise men news of him and let them know what will be on earth. 19 By a star, those who wish to see on earth him whom the angels do not see above 20 will find the way to him. •Then the Almighty will be on earth in body, and,

b. Not congruous with “vengeance,” though the error is minor. Perhaps, however, the sense is “and yours is the vengeance of those who have done evil to Israel.”

c. Slav. gorci bo vstanuť, A; B gorcé vstaneti na nja, “bitterly will (he) rise against them.” In the commentary the subject “Pharaoh” is added.

d. From this point through the end of the ch. the text in both recs. is embedded in commentary; it may have undergone special editing.

e. A dětei; B has děd, “grandfathers,” and modifies the following phrase slightly.

7 a. Ch. 7, which comprises about one third of LadJac, was compiled by a Slav as part of the anti-Jewish commentary of the Palaia; apparently his principal source was the Slavonic version of the Tale of Aphroditianus. Presently it is not clear whether ch. 7 was intended as an addition to LadJac or was written originally as a separate polemical exercise. Syntactically this vs. is not properly connected with either the preceding or the following. Cf. 5:11. In A the text is embedded in commentary, but in B it is separate and then repeated in the commentary. Note that, unlike Gen 28:12, descending comes first. This surely symbolizes Christ’s descent to earth, introducing the idea of incarnation, which clearly is the theme of the ch.

b. B “whose path you are: he.”

c. Aphr 15.10 negates the first clause: “What was not above was below.” Note that the past statements of Aphr are converted to the prophetic future here.

d. Or “raise its head”; Aphr 14.2 riza entheos kai basilikē anekypsen.

e. In A the text is garbled, and in B the majority have positive ustrojenaja instead of neustrojenaja (= Aphr ta adioikēta, “the [things which are] not administered, managed”). The Slav. could mean “the unordered (things).”

f. Reading pridet, against majority prišel, “if he had not come,” which fits the commentary (and Aphr) but not the appropriate reference to future events.

g. Aphr has the talking idols, but no three-day period is mentioned.

21 embraced by corporeal arms, he will restore human matter.<sup>h</sup> •And he will revive 22 Eve, who died by the fruit of the tree. •Then the deceit of the impious will be 23 exposed and all the idols will fall face down. •For they will be put to shame by 24 a dignitary.<sup>i</sup> •For because (they were) lying by means of hallucinations, henceforth 25 they will not be able to rule or to prophesy. •Honor will be taken from them and they will remain without glory.<sup>j</sup> 26 “For he who comes will take power and might and will give<sup>k</sup> Abraham the 27 truth which he previously told him. •Everything sharp he will make dull, and the 28 rough will be smooth. •And he will cast all the iniquitous into the depths of the 29,30 sea. •He will work wonders in heaven and on earth. •And he will be wounded in 31 the midst of his beloved house.<sup>l</sup> •And when he is wounded, then salvation will 32 be ready, and the end to all perdition. •For those who have wounded him will 33 themselves receive a wound<sup>m</sup> which will not be cured in them forever. •And all 34 creation will bow to him who was wounded, and many will trust in him. •And he will become known everywhere in all lands, and those who acknowledge his 35 name will not be ashamed. •His own dominion and years will be unending forever.”

cf. Micah 7:1

cf. Zech
13:6LXX

Ps 102:27

h. Slav. ponovit veščī clověčīsku; cf. Aphr pon-avljajeti clověčīču veščī, an extremely free rendering of Gk. tina gennousa anthrōpon, “who bore a man,” which refers to Mary. Veščī has a broad range of meaning, from “thing, matter” (Gk. pragma, stoicheion) to “nature” (Gk. physis). The author of LadJac 7 combines phrases from his sources with little regard to their original usage.

i. Slav. ot sanovita lica, lit. “by a dignity-endowed face”; Aphr hyper empraktou prosōpou,

“by an office-holding [or “active”] person.”

j. This is the end of the material from Aphr.

k. Or “give back to.”

l. Or “the house of his beloved,” which corresponds to the Alexandrine text of LXX.

m. Two MSS have paguba, either “ruin, perdition” (Gk. apōleia, (kata)phthora) as in 30, or else “pestilence” (Gk. loimos); this may have established a connection between the two vss. in the original Slav. compilation.

4 BARUCH

(First to Second Centuries A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY S. E. ROBINSON

This pseudepigraphon, attributed to Baruch the scribe in the Ethiopic version but to Jeremiah the prophet in the Greek, deals with certain events between the destruction of Jerusalem by the Babylonians and the stoning of Jeremiah. On the eve of Jerusalem's destruction, the LORD warns Jeremiah of the impending disaster and instructs him to leave the city and to take Baruch with him. The LORD further instructs Jeremiah to take the vessels of the Temple service and "deliver them to the earth," by which they will be guarded. Jeremiah asks what favor he can do at this critical time for Abimelech in return for the latter's faithful service, and the LORD instructs him to send Abimelech out of the city on a pretext and promises that he will be preserved. The LORD further directs Jeremiah to go with the people into captivity, but Baruch is to remain behind in Jerusalem.

In the morning, before the Babylonians arrive, Jeremiah sends Abimelech out of the city, ostensibly to gather figs for the sick at the farm of Agrippa. In Abimelech's absence, the Babylonians conquer the city and lead the people off. Jeremiah commits the keys of the Temple to the care of the sun and is carried off with the people. In Baruch's lament for the city, he insists that Jerusalem could not have been taken were it not for the wickedness of its inhabitants, which led the LORD to abandon them. Baruch also affirms that God will eventually bring his people back, and then he retires to live in a tomb, where the angels of God come often to converse with him.

In the meantime, Abimelech, who has collected his basket of figs, stops in the heat of the day to rest under a tree and sleeps for sixty-six years. Both he and his figs are miraculously preserved by the LORD; when he wakes up, he even complains about the brevity of his nap. Returning to Jerusalem, he is totally disoriented until an old man solves the riddle and is able to convince Abimelech of what has happened. An angel then leads him to Baruch.

Baruch interprets the awakening of Abimelech as proof of the resurrection of the dead individually and also as an indication that God is about to restore his people collectively. He informs Jeremiah of what has happened in a letter, which is delivered by an eagle miraculously provided for that purpose, and instructs Jeremiah to prepare the people for their return by excluding gentiles from their company and by repudiating their Babylonian spouses and children. At last the LORD brings his people back to Jerusalem, excluding those who would not cast off their Babylonian relations. The latter eventually found Samaria. While celebrating the return in Jerusalem, Jeremiah has a vision and prophesies the coming of Jesus Christ, for which he is stoned to death by the people.

Text

Both long and short forms of 4 Baruch are preserved in a relatively large number of manuscripts. So far, Greek witnesses for the long form total twenty-three manuscripts, and 4 Baruch is found in Ethiopic, Armenian, Old Church Slavonic, and Romanian versions, besides the Greek. The translation below is taken from the provisional, eclectic text of the long form of 4 Baruch edited by R. A. Kraft and A.-E. Purinton,<sup>1</sup> which improves upon the text published by J. R. Harris in 1889<sup>2</sup> by consulting more Greek manuscripts and by adding the evidence of the Armenian and Slavonic versions to that of the Ethiopic employed by Harris.

The major Greek texts of 4 Baruch are A: Milan Brera AF IX 31 (15th cent.); B: Jerusalem Taphos 34 (11th cent.); C: Jerusalem Taphos 6 (10th cent.); and P: Paris Greek Manuscript 1534 (11th cent.). Kraft and Purinton have an excellent summary of the textual witnesses, to which the reader is referred.<sup>3</sup>

Original language

Several early scholars, particularly R. H. Charles and those influenced by him, maintained that the original language of 4 Baruch was Greek.<sup>4</sup> Since the time of Charles, however, scholars have generally come to favor the hypothesis of a Semitic original for the work.<sup>5</sup> The Greek text contains several elements that may be traces of such a Semitic original, and a list of several such elements has been compiled by A.-E. Purinton.<sup>6</sup> Among others, these include the possible transliteration of Hebrew words (e.g. "God Zar" for "foreign God," 7:29), intensive verbs (e.g. "to pray a prayer," 9:3, and "stone with stones," 9:22), the possible use of the Greek ek for the Hebrew min (5:35 and 7:29), and the redundant use of personal pronouns following a relative pronoun (e.g. "in whom all judgment was hidden in him," 9:6).<sup>7</sup>

Date

The strongest bit of evidence for dating 4 Baruch is the mention of the vineyard or farm of Agrippa (3:14, 21; 5:22), since it places the final Jewish redaction of the work after Agrippa I gained control of Judea and Samaria, A.D. 41.<sup>8</sup> It is probable that we should understand the destruction of the city and Temple in chapters 1 through 4 to reflect the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, A.D. 70. It is unlikely that this can refer to the second revolt (A.D. 132–35), because the actual destruction of the Temple and the cessation of the Temple service figure so prominently in the story. Consequently, the upper limit of composition for the Jewish portion of the work may be found by adding the sixty-six years of Abimelech's sleep (i.e. the maximum duration of exile expected by the author) to the date of the destruction of the Temple, A.D. 70. This gives an upper limit of A.D. 136. Further, since the final Jewish redaction of 4 Baruch appears to have been harmonized with 2 Baruch, which was composed shortly before the end of the first century, we may conclude that the Jewish portion of 4 Baruch was finished sometime roughly during the first third of the second century A.D. and may have contributed to, or even been produced by, the resurgent hope for a restoration of Jewish institutions that led ultimately to the second revolt. Sometime thereafter, perhaps by the middle of the second century, the work was redacted by a Christian who made at least one interpolation (6:25) and Christianized the ending (8:12–9:32).

<sup>1</sup> R. A. Kraft and A.-E. Purinton, Paraleipomena Jeremiou, pp. 12–48. [The present contribution had to be reassigned; I am grateful to S. E. Robinson, who agreed to contribute this work on 4Bar even though only two months could be allowed to complete the task. —J.H.C.]

<sup>2</sup> J. R. Harris, The Rest of the Words of Baruch, pp. 47–64.

<sup>3</sup> Kraft and Purinton, Paraleipomena, pp. 3–5. See also P. Bogaert, Apocalypse de Baruch, pp. 179f.

<sup>4</sup> R. H. Charles, APOT, vol. 2, pp. 133f. See also J.-B. Frey, "Apocryphes de l'ancien testament," DBSup, vol. 1, p. 454.

<sup>5</sup> E. g. A.-M. Denis, Introduction, p. 75; G. Dellling, Jüdische Lehre und Frömmigkeit in den Paralipomena Jeremiae, p. 72.

<sup>6</sup> A.-E. Purinton, Paraleipomena Jeremiou (Philadelphia, 1971) unnumbered.

<sup>7</sup> Purinton, Paraleipomena, unnumbered.

<sup>8</sup> See the discussion in Harris, The Rest, pp. 33f. Contrary to Harris, the mention of Agrippa cannot be used to establish an upper limit for the date of 4Bar, since place-names can be extremely long-lived.

Provenance

The references to the vineyard or farm of Agrippa (3:14, 21; 5:22) and the marketplace of the gentiles (6:19) may indicate a Palestinian provenance for 4 Baruch. It may even have been written in Jerusalem, as J. R. Harris suggested, since both allusions would seem to betray a thorough familiarity with the environs of the holy city.<sup>9</sup> However, it is not necessary to press an identification of the vineyard of Agrippa or the marketplace of the gentiles with any sites known from other sources.<sup>10</sup> Moreover, one must bear in mind that a skillful author could invent geographical details to give his fiction the ring of authenticity and that even valid allusions to Jerusalem landmarks prove only that the author was familiar with the city and not that his work was necessarily produced there. Nevertheless, in the absence of any evidence for a different provenance, we are certainly justified in associating the place of composition with the only geographical clues we have in the text, and tentatively suggest that 4 Baruch was indeed written in Palestine, perhaps even in Jerusalem as Harris maintained.

An originally Jewish composition, 4 Baruch has been interpolated by a Christian and provided with a Christian ending (8:12–9:32, esp. 9:14–32). The Jewish portion of the document has more than one redactional level.<sup>11</sup> Characteristic of the earlier level of Jewish redaction is an emphasis on the figure of Jeremiah the prophet as the “chosen one” of the LORD and as the LORD’s agent in dealing with Israel. If Baruch figures in the story at this level, it is only as an auxiliary of Jeremiah. This is in harmony with the picture of these events in canonical Jeremiah, 2 Maccabees 2:1–7, and The Lives of the Prophets. The later level of redaction in the Jewish portion of the text is characterized by an emphasis on the importance of Baruch the scribe. This complicated redactional history is responsible for the fact that the work is known by two titles. The Greek manuscripts title it “The Things Omitted from Jeremiah the Prophet”; in the Ethiopic version it is titled “The Rest of the Words of Baruch.” In the final form of 4 Baruch, what begins as a revelation to the prophet continues as a pronouncement of the scribe and ends with a prophecy about the Christ. This sequence adequately reflects the redactional history of the work. Jeremiah, who completely overshadows Baruch in chapters 1 through 4, is almost totally eclipsed by Baruch in chapters 7 and 8, in which the prophet must accept the mediation of the scribe between himself and God. Moreover, we are told in 7:25–28 that God loved Baruch too much to let him suffer the same fate as Jeremiah. G. Dellling has already noted the strong Pharisaic flavor of 4 Baruch, and the shifting of importance from prophet to scribe is certainly in keeping with the Pharisaic point of view.<sup>12</sup>

The final redaction of 4 Baruch was by a Christian, as the reference to Jesus Christ in the last chapter (9:14) makes perfectly clear. Also, the description of the waters of the Jordan as a test for the people (6:25) is an obvious Christian interpolation referring to baptism, especially since there is no mention of a test by water when the people actually do cross the Jordan (8:4–6).<sup>13</sup> The Christian redactor employs some terms and phrases that are similar to but not necessarily influenced by gnostic ideas, especially in chapters 6 and 9. Some examples are “virgin faith” (6:7), “O great name which no one can know” (6:13), “let knowledge come into our heart” (6:13), “the sign of the great seal” (6:25), and “Jesus Christ the light of all the aeons” (9:14, 26).<sup>14</sup> Also the passage at 9:16f., which describes the rejection of the trees that “had sprouted” (the Jews) and the acceptance of those that were previously “uncultivated,” seems to reflect a Christianity that was already non-Jewish in its own self-understanding.

Historical importance

In 4 Baruch there is very little direct information about the period between A.D. 70 and

<sup>9</sup> Harris, The Rest, pp. 12f.

<sup>10</sup> A doubtful project pursued by Harris in The Rest, pp. 12f., 32–35.

<sup>11</sup> See O. Wintermute’s review of G. Dellling, Jüdische Lehre, in CBQ 30 (1968) 44f.

<sup>12</sup> Dellling, Jüdische Lehre, pp. 71f.

<sup>13</sup> See Harris, The Rest, pp. 14f.

<sup>14</sup> Wintermute, CBQ 30 (1968) 44f.

136, yet the Jewish portions of the work offer an insight into the psychological response to the destruction of the Temple in 70 and the eventual revival of hopes for a restoration of Jewish institutions prior to 136. The document may, with its shift in emphasis from prophet to scribe, reflect the increasing influence of the Pharisees after A.D. 70 (see "Provenance"). After the disastrous results of the second revolt (A.D. 132–35), a disillusioned Judaism abandoned 4 Baruch altogether (along with most of its other apocalyptic literature) to be preserved by Christians, who found it (for a while at least and with appropriate revisions) a serviceable vehicle for validating Christian claims. It has been preserved to the present in both Greek Orthodox and Ethiopian Christianity.

Theological importance

The author of 4 Baruch insists that the holy vessels of the Temple cultus were miraculously preserved from destruction by the Babylonians (Romans) and can therefore be restored when God brings his people back from exile (3:8–11, 18f.; 4:4f.). Also, Jerusalem, according to our author, could never have been destroyed if God had not abandoned it for its sins (4:7–8). The conclusion to be drawn by the original audience was perhaps that if the Jews would conform sufficiently to the will of God, as interpreted by the scribe,<sup>15</sup> they could bring about a restoration of the Temple cultus in an invincible Jewish state. We see here lingering hope for and real anticipation of the restoration of the Temple and of the nation, which continued until all hope was quenched in the second revolt.

Also, the miraculous preservation of Abimelech and the figs is seen by the author as a proof of the doctrine of the resurrection (6:6–10), and the ideas of personal and corporate resurrection are closely linked. A further connection between the doctrine of personal resurrection and the restoration of Israel is found at 7:18, where the eagle raises a dead man so that the people may believe God is about to restore the nation. The insistence on a personal resurrection probably accounts for some of 4 Baruch's appeal to Christians, and this doctrine is given further attention at 9:12–14, where Jeremiah's ecstatic faint is described in terms reminiscent of the resurrection of Christ.

Relation to canonical books

In 4 Baruch are described events found in the canonical books of Jeremiah, 2 Kings, 2 Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah. The book is intended by its Greek title to be understood as an addition to the canonical Jeremiah. It agrees with its canonical antecedents concerning the general facts of destruction and deportation but disagrees with them on the details. For example, 4 Baruch represents Jeremiah and Baruch as leading the people back from Babylon, but Jeremiah 43:6f. makes it clear that neither went to Babylon, but that they went instead to Egypt.<sup>16</sup> Neither Jeremiah nor Baruch is mentioned in the account of the return in Ezra-Nehemiah, although a priest named Jeremiah may have been confused by the author of 4 Baruch with Jeremiah the prophet (Neh 10:2; 12:1, 12, 34). The description of the Samaritans as Jews who intermarried with Babylonians during the exile is sharply contradicted by Ezra-Nehemiah, according to which the Samaritans existed before the return, and by 2 Kings 17:24–41, which connects the origin of the Samaritans with the Assyrian conquest of the Northern Kingdom.

Relation to apocryphal books

It has often been claimed that 4 Baruch is dependent upon 2 Baruch, and in fact the two works have many striking similarities.<sup>17</sup> P. Bogaert has offered several reasons why 4 Baruch should be considered to be dependent on 2 Baruch.<sup>18</sup> Nevertheless, while it is probable that the final form of 4 Baruch is later than and to a certain extent dependent upon 2 Baruch, <sup>15</sup> Jeremiah instructs the people to follow the directions of Baruch in these words: "Everything that you have heard from the letter observe, and the LORD will lead us into our city" (7:23).

<sup>16</sup> This is also stated in LivPro on Jeremiah.

<sup>17</sup> These are listed by Bogaert, Apocalypse, pp. 186–92.

<sup>18</sup> Bogaert, Apocalypse, pp. 192–221.

the possibility should be allowed that the earlier level of redaction in 4 Baruch preserves a more original form of the tradition and is not copied from 2 Baruch. This is seen most clearly in chapter 1 of 4 Baruch, where Jeremiah the prophet receives the initial warning of destruction. In 2 Baruch 2, the warning is very similar, but it is Baruch the scribe who receives it. 4 Baruch tends to agree with canonical Jeremiah, 2 Maccabees 2:1–7, and The Lives of the Prophets 2 that the prophet and not the scribe is the central character. Moreover, in The Lives of the Prophets 2:11–19 and in 2 Maccabees 2:1–7, which must certainly be dated long before 2 Baruch, it is Jeremiah who buries the Temple vessels (in agreement with 4Bar 3) and not the anonymous angel of 2 Baruch 6:6–10.<sup>19</sup> Concerning the traditions of the fall of Jerusalem, 4 Baruch agrees with the earlier 2 Maccabees against 2 Baruch. Since the author of 2 Maccabees reports that this material was already found “in the archives” (2:1, 4) in his day, it is likely that all four accounts (2Mac 2:1–7; 2Bar 1–10; LivPro 2:11–19; 4Bar 1–4) are taken from a prior source, to which the earlier level of redaction in 4 Baruch is more faithful, at least in some respects, than is 2 Baruch. Sometime after the publication of 2 Baruch, a final Jewish redactor of 4 Baruch edited the latter to bring it into harmony with the former. It was at this time that emphasis within the work was shifted from Jeremiah to Baruch.

In conclusion, it seems appropriate to offer a few speculative suggestions. A close examination of the opening chapters of 4 Baruch reveals that the figure of Baruch is an intrusion here, inserted perhaps by the later Jewish redactor to bring 4 Baruch into harmony with 2 Baruch. For example, 1:10 (“So rise up and go to Baruch and tell him these words”) breaks up the sequence of the LORD’s instruction to Jeremiah in 1:9 and 11. The redactor obviously intends 1:10 to complement 2:1a (“And Jeremiah ran and told these things to Baruch”), but 2:1a is obviously an intrusion, since in 2:2–6, Baruch does not yet know what has happened. The other two references to Baruch in chapter 1 are appositional (1:1, 8), and represent the simplest kind of editorial additions. Moreover, it is possible that the subservient character in chapter 2 was originally not Baruch at all but Abimelech, since he, and not Baruch, is in the habit of calling Jeremiah “father” (5:5, 22), since 2:5 suggests that the unidentified character does menial labor (“let us not draw water for the troughs”), and since the motif of Abimelech’s being spared the sight of Jerusalem’s destruction, which is mentioned twice (3:13; 5:28), is later transferred to Baruch (7:25–27).

Another possibility is that chapters 1 to 4, rather than reflecting an earlier redactional level, constitute a separate Jeremiah source which was used by the author of 4 Baruch and altered by him to harmonize with 2 Baruch. On this view, some of the tension within the composition would be due not to separate redactional levels but to the use of incompatible sources. Either way, the Jeremiah material of chapters 1 to 4 seems to be prior to the form of the traditions in 2 Baruch and not dependent upon them except as it has been harmonized with that document by the author or redactor.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 88–91.
 Delling, Bibliographie, p. 171.
 Denis, Introduction, pp. 70–78.

Bogaert, P. Apocalypse de Baruch. Paris, 1969; pp. 177–221.
 Delling, G. Jüdische Lehre und Frömmigkeit in den Paralipomena Jeremiae. Berlin, 1967.
 Harris, J. R. The Rest of the Words of Baruch. Cambridge, England, 1889.
 Kilpatrick, G. D. “Acts VII.52 ELEUSIS,” JTS 46 (1945) 140–45.
 Kohler, K. “The Pre-Talmudic Haggada. B. The Second Baruch or Rather the Jeremiah Apocalypse,” JQR 5 (1893) 407–19.
 Kraft, R. A., and Purinton, A.-E. Paraleipomena Jeremiou. T&T 1, Pseudepigrapha Series 1; Missoula, Mont., 1972.

<sup>19</sup> This is also true in the rabbinic literature; see for example b.Yoma 54.

THE THINGS OMITTED FROM JEREMIAH THE PROPHET<sup>a</sup>

1 1 It happened, when the children of Israel were taken captive by the king of the Chaldeans, that God spoke to Jeremiah, saying, "Jeremiah, my chosen one, rise up and get out of this city, you and Baruch, because I am going to destroy it for 2 the multitude of the sins of those who inhabit it. •For your prayers are like a firm
3 pillar in the middle of it, and like an unbreachable wall encircling it. •So now
4 rise up and get out before the host of the Chaldeans surrounds it." •And Jeremiah answered, saying, "I implore you, LORD, allow me, your servant, to speak before 5.6 you." •And the LORD said to him, "Speak, my chosen one, Jeremiah." •And Jeremiah spoke, saying, "LORD Almighty, are you delivering the chosen city into the hands of the Chaldeans, so that the king may boast with the multitude of his 7 people and say, 'I prevailed over the holy city of God'? •(Surely) not, my LORD;
8 but if it is your will, let it be destroyed by your (own) hands." •And the LORD said to Jeremiah, "Since you are my chosen one, rise up and get out of this city, you and Baruch, because I am going to destroy it for the multitude of the sins of 9 those who inhabit it.<sup>b</sup> •For neither the king nor his host can come into it unless I 10,11 first open its gates. •So rise up and go to Baruch and tell him these words. •And rising up at the sixth hour of the night, get up on the wall of the city, and I will 12 show you that unless I first destroy the city, they cannot come into it." •After saying these things, the LORD departed from Jeremiah.

Jer 1:18
2Bar 2:1f.
LivPro

2Bar 7:1
3Mac 2:17f.

1 2 And Jeremiah ran and told these things to Baruch, and as they came into the Temple of God,<sup>a</sup> Jeremiah tore his garments and put dust on his head and went 2 into the sanctuary of God. •And Baruch, seeing him (with) dust sprinkled on his head and his garments torn, cried out in a loud voice, saying, "Father Jeremiah, what is the matter with you, or what sort of sin have the people committed?"<sup>b</sup>
3 (He said this) because whenever the people sinned, Jeremiah sprinkled dust on 4 his head and would pray for the people until the sin was forgiven them. •And (this is why) Baruch asked him, saying, "Father, what is the matter with you?"<sup>c</sup> 5 And Jeremiah said to him, "Avoid the rending of your garments, but rather let us rend our hearts; and let us not draw water for the troughs, but let us weep and 6 fill them with tears. For the LORD will not have mercy on this people." •And 7 Baruch said, "Father Jeremiah, what has happened?" •And Jeremiah said, "God is delivering the city into the hands of the king of the Chaldeans, to take the 8 people captive into Babylon." •And when Baruch heard these things, he tore his 9 garments also and said, "Father Jeremiah, who revealed this to you?" •And 10 Jeremiah said to him, "Wait with me a little, until the sixth hour of the night, that you may know that this word is true." •And so they both remained at the altar weeping, and their garments were torn.

1 3 But when the hour of the night arrived, as the LORD had said to Jeremiah, they 2 went up together onto the walls of the city, Jeremiah and Baruch. •And behold, there was a sound of trumpets, and angels came out of heaven holding torches in

2Bar 6:1-4

1 a. This is the title given in the Gk. MSS; the Eth. version is entitled "The Rest of the Words of Baruch."

b. Note that this is a doublet of 1:1b.

2 a. MS C and the Eth. version omit "Jeremiah ran . . . God." In light of 2:2-7 the omission is probably correct. The line may have been added by a redactor interested in enhancing the importance of Baruch.

b. Note Baruch's subservient status in the opening chs., where Jeremiah is always addressed as "Father."

c. The majority of Gk. MSS read, "What is this?" The translation here follows the text of J. R. Harris, The Rest of the Words of Baruch.

- 3 their hands, and they stood on the walls of the city. •And when Jeremiah and Baruch saw them, they wept, saying, "Now we know that the word is true."
 4 And Jeremiah pleaded with the angels, saying, "I implore you not to destroy the city just yet, until I have a word with the LORD." •And the LORD spoke to the angels, saying, "Don't destroy the city until I speak to my chosen one, Jeremiah."
 6.7 Then Jeremiah spoke, saying, "Please, LORD, let me speak before you." •And the LORD said, "Speak, my chosen one, Jeremiah." •And Jeremiah said, "Behold, LORD, we know now that you are delivering the city into the hands of its enemies, and they will carry the people off into Babylon. •What do you want me to do with the holy vessels of the (Temple) service?" •And the LORD said to him, "Take them and deliver them to the earth, saying, 'Hear, earth, the voice of him who created you, who formed you in the abundance of the waters, who sealed you with seven seals in seven periods (of time), and after these things you will receive your fruitful season.<sup>a</sup> •Guard the vessels of the (Temple) service until the coming<sup>b</sup> of the beloved one.' " •And Jeremiah spoke, saying, "I implore you, LORD, show me what I should do for Abimelech the Ethiopian, for he did many good deeds for your servant Jeremiah. •For he pulled me out of the muddy cistern, and I do not want him to see the destruction of this city and (its) desolation, but that you may show him mercy and that he might not be grieved." •And the LORD said to Jeremiah, "Send him to the vineyard of Agrippa<sup>c</sup> and in the shadow of the mountain I will shelter him until I return the people to the city. •But you, Jeremiah, go with your people into Babylon and stay with them, preaching to them until I return them to the city. •But leave Baruch here until I speak to him."
 17.18 After the LORD said these things, he went up from Jeremiah into heaven.<sup>d</sup> •But Jeremiah and Baruch went into the sanctuary and, gathering up the vessels of the (Temple) service, they delivered them to the earth, just as the LORD had instructed them. •And immediately the earth swallowed them up. •And the two sat down and wept. •And when it was morning, Jeremiah sent Abimelech away, saying, "Take the basket and go out to the farm of Agrippa by the mountain road and get a few figs to give to the sick among the people, for the delight of the LORD (rests) upon you, and (his) glory upon your head." •And saying these things, Jeremiah sent him away, and Abimelech went as he had been instructed.
- 1 4 And when it was morning, behold the host of the Chaldeans surrounded the city. •And the great angel trumpeted, saying, "Come into the city, host of the Chaldeans; for behold, the gate has been opened for you. •Therefore, let the king come in with his multitude and take all the people captive." •But Jeremiah, taking the keys of the Temple, went outside of the city and, facing the sun, he tossed them, saying, "I say to you, sun, take the keys of the Temple of God and keep them until the day in which the LORD will question you about them." •Because we were not found worthy of keeping them, for we were false stewards." •While Jeremiah was still weeping for the people, they carried him (off) with the people, dragging (them) into Babylon. •And Baruch put dust on his head and sat and wept this lamentation, saying, "Why was Jerusalem made desolate? For the sins of the beloved people she was delivered into the hands of enemies, for our sins and (those) of the people. •But do not let the outlaws boast and say, 'We were strong enough to take the city of God by our power'; but because of our sins it was delivered to you. •And our God will pity us and return us to our city, but you will not have life. •Blessed are our fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob,

3 a. Lit. "your ripeness of fruit."

b. Following the suggestion of G. D. Kilpatrick, "Acts VII.52 ELEUSIS," JTS 46 (1945) 140f., although this rendering is elsewhere unattested. Literally the word is "coming together," or "union," or perhaps even "marriage." The variant "consummation, completion" (MSS A B P) should be noted. According to R. A. Kraft and A.-E. Purinton (Paraleipomena Jeremioi, p. 17), "coming" is supported by the Arm. version.

c. Harris, The Rest, p. 12, identifies this vineyard with an area south of Jerusalem known as Solomon's Gardens. See also Josephus, Ant 8.7.3.

d. Note the anthropomorphic representation of God.

4 a. See also b.Ta'an 29a; LevR 19:6; and ARN 7.

for they departed from this world and did not see the destruction of this city.”

11 After saying these things, Baruch went outside the city, weeping and saying, 12 “Grieving over you, Jerusalem, I have left you.” •And he remained sitting in a tomb while the angels came to him and elaborated to him all the things that the LORD would reveal to him through them.

Jer 43:6f.

1 5 But Abimelech carried the figs in the heat (of the day), and coming upon a 2 tree, he sat under its shade to rest a little. •And leaning his head on the basket of figs (and) falling asleep, he slept for sixty-six years, and he did not wake from 3 his sleep. •And afterward, when he arose from his sleep, he said, “I slept pleasantly a little, but my head is weighed down because I didn’t get enough 4.5 sleep.” •Then, uncovering the basket of figs, he found them dripping milk. •And he said, “I would like to nap a little longer, because my head is weighed down, but I’m afraid I might fall fast asleep and be late waking up, and my father Jeremiah might think less (of me). For if he were not in a hurry, he would not 6 have sent me (so) early this morning. •So I will get up and proceed in the heat, 7 for isn’t there heat, isn’t there work, every day?” •So, getting up, he took the basket of figs and put (it) on his shoulders and went into Jerusalem, and he did not recognize it, neither the house nor his neighborhood; neither did he find his 8 family, nor any of the neighbors. •And he said, “Blessed (be) the LORD, for a 9 great stupor has befallen me today. •This is not the city Jerusalem! I got lost<sup>a</sup> because I came by the mountain road after getting up from my sleep; and since 10 my head was heavy from my not getting enough sleep, I got lost. •Imagine telling 11 Jeremiah that I got lost!” •And he went out of the city, and looking (carefully) he saw the landmarks of the city and said, “This, then, is the city; I got lost.”
 12 And he returned again to the city and searched and found none of his own (people), 13 and he said, “Blessed (be) the LORD, for a great stupor has befallen me!” •And he went outside the city again and stayed (there) grieving, not knowing where he 14 should go. •And he put the basket down, saying, “I’m sitting right here until the 15 LORD takes this stupor away from me.” •And as he sat, he saw an elderly man coming from the field, and Abimelech said to him, “I say to you, old man, what 16.17 city is this?” •And he said to him, “It is Jerusalem.” •And Abimelech said to him, “(Then) where is Jeremiah the priest and Baruch the reader and all the 18 people of this city, because I didn’t find them.” •And the old man said to him, “Are you not from this city, that you remember Jeremiah today, and ask about 19 him after so long a time? •For Jeremiah is in Babylon with the people. For they were taken captive by Nebuchadnezzar the king and Jeremiah is with them to 20 preach to them and to teach them the word.” •But as soon as Abimelech heard (this) from the old gentleman, he said, “If you weren’t an old man, and if it weren’t improper for a man to insult his elder(s), I would laugh at you and say you are crazy because you said, ‘The people were taken captive into Babylon.’
 21 If the cataracts of heaven had come down upon them, there still isn’t time to have 22 gone into Babylon! •For how long can it be since my father Jeremiah sent me to the farm of Agrippa to get a few figs so we could give (them) to the sick among 23 the people? •And I went out and got them, and coming upon a certain tree in the heat (of the day), I sat down to rest a little, and I leaned my head on the basket 24 and fell asleep. •And when I woke up, I uncovered the basket of figs, thinking I 25 was late, and found the figs dripping milk, just as (when) I picked them. •And 26 you say that the people were taken captive into Babylon! •But (just) so you’ll 27 know, take the figs (and) see!” •And he uncovered the basket of figs for the old 28 man, and he saw them dripping milk. •And when he saw them, the old gentleman said, “O my son, you are a righteous man, and God did not want you to see the 29 desolation of the city, so he brought this stupor upon you. •For behold, it is today

5 a. Lit. “I wandered the road.”

b. Lit. “Marvelous to say this to Jeremiah that 30 sixty-six years since the people were taken captive into Babylon. •And so that you may learn, son, that what I am telling you is true, look out into the field and 31 see that the growth of the crops is not (yet) apparent. •See also the figs, that it is 32 not (yet) time for them, and understand.” •Then Abimelech cried in a loud voice, 33 saying, “I will bless you, O God of heaven and of the earth, the rest of the souls

34.35 month is this?” •And he said, “Nisan, the twelfth (day).”<sup>c</sup> •And picking up
(some) of the figs, he gave them to the old gentleman and said to him, “May God guide you with (his) light to the city above, Jerusalem!”

Ezra 8:31
Gal 4:26
Heb 12:22
2Bar 4:2-7

1 6 After these things Abimelech went outside the city and prayed to the LORD.
2 And behold, an angel of the LORD came and, taking hold of his right hand, brought him back to the place where Baruch was sitting, and he found him in a 3 tomb. •And when they saw each other, both (of them) wept, and they kissed each 4 other. •And looking up, Baruch saw with his (own) eyes the figs sheltered in 5.6 Abimelech’s basket. •And raising his eyes to heaven, he prayed, saying, “•You are the God who bestows a reward (on) those who love you. Prepare yourself, my heart; rejoice and be glad in your tabernacle, saying to your fleshly dwelling, ‘Your sorrow has been turned to joy.’ For the Mighty One is coming and will 7 raise you in your tabernacle, for sin has not taken root<sup>a</sup> in you. •Be refreshed
8 within your tabernacle, in your virgin faith, and believe that you will live.<sup>b</sup> •Look at this basket of figs; for behold, they are sixty-six years old and they have not 9 withered nor do they stink, but they are dripping with milk.<sup>c</sup> •Thus will it be for you, my flesh, if you do the things commanded you by the angel of righteousness.<sup>d</sup> 10 He who preserved the basket of figs, the same one again will preserve you by 11 his power.” •After saying these things, Baruch said to Abimelech, “Get up and let us pray that the LORD might reveal to us how we can send word to Jeremiah 12 in Babylon about the protection which was yours on the way.” •And Baruch prayed, saying, “Our power, LORD God, (thou) chosen light, (is) that which 13 proceeds from your mouth.<sup>e</sup> •We implore and beg of your goodness, O great name which no one can know. Hear the voice of your servants and let knowledge come 14 into our heart. •What should we do, and how should we send this news to Jeremiah 15 in Babylon?” •And while Baruch was still praying, behold an angel of the LORD came and said to Baruch all these words: “Councilor of the light, don’t worry 16 about how you should send to Jeremiah. For tomorrow an eagle is coming to you (at the) hour of light, and you must direct (it) to Jeremiah. •Therefore, write in the letter,<sup>f</sup> ‘Speak to the children of Israel, “Let him among you who has become a foreigner be expelled,” and let them spend fifteen days, and after these things 17 I will lead you into your city, says the LORD. •Whoever is not separated from Babylon, let him not come into the city, and I will punish them with not being 18 taken back again by the Babylonians, says the LORD.’ ” •And after these things, 19 the angel departed from Baruch. •And Baruch sent to the marketplace of the gentiles and got papyrus and ink, and he wrote the following letter: “Baruch, the 20 servant of God, writes to Jeremiah in the captivity of Babylon. •Hail and rejoice!
For God has not left us to pass out of this body grieving over the city which was 21 desolated and outraged. •For this reason the LORD has taken pity on our tears and has remembered the covenant that he established with our fathers Abraham, Isaac,

Ezra 10:11

2Bar 78:1

c. Kraft and Purinton (Paraleipomena Jeremiou, p. 27), give “Nisan (which is Abib).” The text is difficult here (see Harris, The Rest, p. 54), but Ezra 8:31 supports the translation above.

6 a. From ginesthai, lit. “has not become.”

b. Baruch interprets the experience of Abimelech as a proof of the resurrection of the flesh.

c. The fig is an apt symbol for life, since it is full of seeds and “drips milk.” The fig is often identified in Jewish literature as the forbidden fruit of Eden.

d. See 8:12 and 9:15.

e. Or “Our power, LORD God, (is) the chosen light which proceeds from your mouth.”

f. What follows are instructions for Jeremiah the prophet from Baruch the scribe, in a reversal of their canonical roles and of their respective roles in chs. 1–4, 9.

22 and Jacob. •And he sent his angel to me and told me these words which I have 23 sent to you. •Now, these are the words that the LORD God of Israel, who led us from the land of Egypt, out of the great furnace, spoke: 'Because you didn't keep my commandments, but your heart was lifted up and you stiffened your neck before me, in wrath and anger I delivered you to the furnace in Babylon.
 24 However, if you will listen to my voice,' says the LORD, 'from the mouth of Jeremiah my servant, whoever listens I will bring him back from Babylon, and whoever does not listen will become a stranger to Jerusalem and to Babylon.
 25 And you will prove them with the water of the Jordan; whoever does not listen will become known; this is the sign of the great seal.' <sup>g</sup>

1 7 And Baruch stood up and went out of the tomb and found the eagle sitting 2Bar 77:17-26 outside the tomb. •And conversing in a human voice, the eagle said to him, "Hail, 3 Baruch, the steward of the faith!"<sup>a</sup> •And Baruch said to him, "You who speak are chosen from all the birds of heaven, for this is clear from the gleam in your 4 eyes; so show me, what are you doing here?" •And the eagle said to him, "I was 5 sent here so that you may send every word you desire through me." •And Baruch 6 said to him, "Can you take this message up to Jeremiah in Babylon?" •And the 7 eagle said to him, "Certainly; this is why I was sent." •And picking up the letter and fifteen figs from the basket of Abimelech, Baruch tied them to the neck of the eagle and said to him, "I say to you, king of birds, depart in peace and health 8 and carry the message for me. •Don't be like the raven that Noah sent out and Gen 8:7-12 that never again returned to him in the ark, but be like the dove that on the third 9 (attempt) brought word to the righteous one. •So also, you take this precious word up to Jeremiah and to those prisoners with him that it might be well with you.
 10 Take this papyrus to the people and to the chosen one of God. •If all the birds of heaven should surround you and desire to fight with you, resist (them); the LORD 11 will give you power. •And don't veer off to the right or to the left, but like an arrow shot straight, go forth in the power of God, and may the glory of the LORD 12 be with you on the entire journey which you will travel." •Then the eagle took flight, having the letter around his neck, and departed for Babylon. And when he arrived (there), he rested in a certain tree outside the city in a deserted place.
 13 And he was silent until Jeremiah came by, for he and certain other people were 14 coming out to bury a dead man outside the city. •For Jeremiah had made a request of King Nebuchadnezzar, saying, "Give me a place where I may bury the dead 15 of my people." And the king had given (it) to him. •And as they were going out 16 with the dead man and weeping, they passed by the eagle. •And the eagle cried in a loud voice, saying, "I say to you, Jeremiah, chosen one of God, go! Gather the people and come here that they may hear a letter which I have brought you 17 from Baruch and Abimelech." •And when Jeremiah heard, he glorified God, and he went out and gathered the people with (their) wives and children, and he came 18 to where the eagle was. •And the eagle descended upon the one who had died, 19,20 and he came back to life. •This happened that they might believe. •And all the people marveled at what had happened, saying, "Is this the God who appeared to our fathers in the wilderness through Moses (who) has now also appeared to 21 us through this eagle?" •And the eagle said, "I say to you, Jeremiah, come untie this letter and read it to the people." So, untying the letter, he read it to the 22 people. •And when the people heard (it), they wept and put dust on their heads, and they said to Jeremiah, "Save us, and tell us what we should do, that we may 23 enter our city (once) again." •And Jeremiah answered and said to them, "Everything that you have heard from the letter observe, and the LORD will lead us into our 24 city." •And Jeremiah also wrote a letter to Baruch, saying thus, "My beloved son, do not be negligent in your prayers pleading with God in our behalf, that he

g. This is probably a reference to Christian baptism. Note that the language of this ch. (6:7, 12f., 25) is reminiscent of Gnosticism.

7 a. This use of "the faith" to mean correct doctrine is similar to the use of the term in the Pastoral Epistles. See e.g. 1Tim 3:9; 4:1.

25 might speed our journey until we leave the jurisdiction of this lawless king. •For you were found righteous before God, and he didn't allow you to come here, so you wouldn't see the oppression which has befallen the people at the hands of the 26 Babylonians. •For (it is) just as (when) a father has an only son and he is handed over for punishment; those who see his father and (are) consoling him cover his face so he won't see how his son is being punished and be racked by grief (even) 27 more. •For God similarly had mercy on you and didn't allow you to come into 28 Babylon so you wouldn't see the oppression of the people. •For since we came 29 here, grief has not left us (even) today (after) sixty-six years! •For I would often go out and find (some) of the people hung up by King Nebuchadnezzar weeping 30 and saying, 'Have mercy on us, God Zar!'<sup>b</sup> •Hearing these things, I would grieve and would weep a double lamentation, not only because they were hung up, but 31 because they were calling upon a foreign god, saying, 'Have mercy on us.' •And I would remember the feast days that we used to celebrate in Jerusalem before we were taken captive, and remembering, I would groan and return to my house 32 distressed and weeping. •So pray now in the place where you are, you and 33 Abimelech, for this people, so that we may depart from here. •For I say to you that the whole time we have been here, they have oppressed us, saying, 'Sing<sup>c</sup> us 34 a song from the songs of Zion, the song of your God.' •And we say to them, Ps 137:3f.
 35 'How can we sing to you, being in a foreign land?' •And after these things, Jeremiah tied the letter to the neck of the eagle, saying, "Go in peace, and may 36 the LORD watch over us both!" •And the eagle took flight and came to Jerusalem and gave the letter to Baruch, and after he had untied (it), he read (it) and kissed it, and he wept when he heard about the griefs and the oppressions of the people.
 37 But Jeremiah took the figs and distributed (them) to the sick among the people, and he continued teaching them to keep away from the pollutions of the gentiles of Babylon.

1.2 8 But the day came in which the LORD led the people out of Babylon. •And the LORD said to Jeremiah, "Get up, you and the people, and come to the Jordan; and you will say to the people, 'Let him who desires the LORD leave the works 3 of Babylon behind.' •And (of) the men who took wives from them, and the women who took husbands from them, let those who hear you cross over, and take them up to Jerusalem; but (as for) those who do not hear you, you must not 4 lead them there.'" •And Jeremiah spoke these words to the people, and they got 5 up and came to the Jordan to cross over. •And when he told them the words which the LORD had spoken to him, half of those who had (inter)married with them did not want to hear Jeremiah, but said to him, "We will not leave our 6 wives behind forever, but we will bring them with us back to our city." •So they 7 crossed over the Jordan and came to Jerusalem. •And Jeremiah stood (firm) with Baruch and Abimelech, saying, "No man who cohabits with Babylonians will 8 enter this city!" •And they said among themselves, "Let's get up and return to 9 Babylon, to our place." And they departed. •But when they came to Babylon, the Babylonians came out to meet them, saying, "You will not come into our 10 city, because you hated us and went out from us in secret; for this you will not come in with us. •For we made one another swear an oath in the name of our god to receive neither you nor your children, since you went out from us in 11 secret." •And when they learned this, they turned back and came to a desert place some distance from Jerusalem, and they built themselves a city and named it 12 Samaria.<sup>a</sup> •And Jeremiah sent to them, saying, "Repent, for an angel of righteousness is coming, and he will lead you to your exalted place."<sup>b</sup>

b. This is probably a transliteration of the Heb. zar ("foreign"). See G. D. Kilpatrick, JTS 46 (1945) 141.

c. The Gk. is eipate, "say."

8 a. This conflicts with the account of Samaritan origins found at 2Kgs 17:24-41.

b. The Christian redactor has changed the original Jewish polemic against the Samaritans into a promise of exaltation by adding this vs.

1 9 And those who were with Jeremiah continued for nine days rejoicing and Ezra 8:35
 2 offering up sacrifices for the people. •But on the tenth (day) Jeremiah alone offered
 3 up a sacrifice. •And he prayed a prayer, saying, “Holy, holy, holy, incense of Isa 6:3
 4 the living trees, true light that enlightens me until I am taken up to you; •for your Jn 1:9
 mercy I plead, for the sweet voice of the two seraphim I plead, for another fragrant 5 odor of incense. •And may Michael, the archangel of righteousness who opens 6 the gates for the righteous, be (the object of) my attention until he leads the righteous in. •I implore you, Almighty LORD of all creation, unbegotten and incomprehensible, in whom all judgment was hidden<sup>a</sup> before these things existed.”
 7 And as Jeremiah said these things, while standing at the altar with Baruch and 8 Abimelech, he became as one of those who have given up their soul. •And Baruch and Abimelech remained weeping and crying in a loud voice, “Woe to us, because 9 our father Jeremiah has left us; the priest of God has departed.” •And all the people heard their weeping, and they all ran to them and saw Jeremiah lying on 10 the ground as though dead. •And they tore their garments and put dust on their 11 heads and wept bitterly.<sup>b</sup> •And after these things, they prepared themselves to 12 bury him. •And behold, there came a voice saying, “Do not bury one still living, 13 for his soul is coming into his body again.” •And because they heard the voice, they did not bury him but remained in a circle around his tabernacle for three 14 days, saying, “At what hour is he going to rise?” •And after three days, his soul came into his body and he lifted up his voice in the midst of (them) all and said, Rom 15:6 “Glorify God with one voice! All (of you) glorify God, and the Son of God who 15 awakens us, Jesus Christ the light of all the aeons, the inextinguishable lamp, the 16 life of faith! •And after these times there will be another four hundred and seventy-17 seven years, and (then) he is coming to the earth. •And the tree of life which is planted in the middle of Paradise will cause all the uncultivated trees<sup>c</sup> to bear fruit, and they will grow and sprout. •And the trees that had (already) sprouted and boasted and said, ‘We raised our top to the air,’<sup>d</sup> he will cause them to wither together with the loftiness of their branches. And the firmly rooted tree will cause Eph 2:2 18 them to be judged! •And what is scarlet will become as white as wool; the snow 1QH 8 will be made black; the sweet waters will become salty, and the salty sweet in 19 the great light of the joy of God. •And he will bless the islands that they may 20 bear fruit at the word of the mouth of his anointed one.<sup>e</sup> •For he will come! And he will go out and choose for himself twelve apostles, that they may preach among the nations, he whom I have seen adorned by his father and coming into the world Jn 1:9 21 on the Mount of Olives; and he will fill the hungry souls.” •And as Jeremiah was Acts 1:11f. saying these things about the Son of God, that he is coming into the world, the people became angry and said, “These (once) again are the words spoken by 22 Isaiah the son of Amos, saying, ‘I saw God and the son of God.’ •Come, therefore, Mt 5:6; 14:19f.
 and let us not kill him by that (same) death, but let’s stone him with stones.” Ascens 3:9
 23 Now, Baruch and Abimelech were extremely grieved because they wanted to hear Ascens 4:13
 24 in full the mysteries that he had seen. •But Jeremiah said to them, “Be quiet and Ascens 5:11
 25 do not weep, for they will not kill me until I have described to you everything that I saw.” •And he said to them, “Bring a stone here to me.” •And he set it (up) and said, “Light of the aeons, make this stone look just like me until I have 27 described everything I saw to Baruch and Abimelech.” •Then the stone, by the 28 command of God, took on the likeness of Jeremiah. •And they were stoning the 29 stone, thinking that it was Jeremiah. •But Jeremiah delivered all the mysteries that he had seen to Baruch and Abimelech, and then he simply stood in the midst 30 of the people, desiring to bring his stewardship to an end. •Then the stone cried

9 a. The MSS add “in him,” a redundancy that may indicate a Semitic original.

b. Lit. “wept a bitter weeping,” possibly another Semitism carried over to the Gk. text.

c. I.e. gentiles.

d. Lit. “We gave our end to the air,” a very cryptic line. Kraft and Purinton render it: “We have supplied our power (?) to the air.” The Gk. aēr, “air,” may here be used in a demonological sense; cf. Eph 2:2.

e. Or “of his Christ” (used as a proper noun).

out, saying, “O stupid children of Israel, why do you stone me, thinking that I 31 am Jeremiah? Behold, Jeremiah stands in your midst!” •And when they saw him, they immediately ran at him with many stones, and his stewardship was fulfilled. LivPro 32 And Baruch and Abimelech came and buried him, and they took the stone and put (it) on his tomb after inscribing (it) thus: “This is the stone (that was) the ally of Jeremiah.”

JANNES AND JAMBRES

(First to Third Centuries A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY A. PIETERSMA AND R. T. LUTZ

The names of Jannes and Jambres appear with considerable frequency in ancient and medieval sources, and traditions about their activity and fate are extant in Hebrew, Aramaic, Syriac, Arabic, Greek, and Latin. Christian, Jewish, and pagan writers found occasion to refer to these two magicians at the Pharaonic court who plied the art of magic in opposition to Moses.<sup>1</sup> Our oldest Semitic reference speaks of "Johana," while the earliest text of the book of Jannes and Jambres gives the names as "Joannes" (Johannes) and, by analogical formation, "Joambres," but the most common appellations of the two brothers are "Jannes" and "Jambres." In Latin and rabbinic sources, however, "Jambres," with some textual variation, becomes "Mambres."

It is now beyond doubt that in antiquity there existed, on the one hand, traditions about Jannes and Jambres, and on the other, a book that detailed some of their exploits. Not yet entirely clear, however, is the precise relationship between the loose traditions and the written composition.

The tradition

The earliest reference to our magicians occurs in the Damascus Document, fragments of which have been discovered in the Cairo Geniza and more recently at Qumran. The date of this work has been given as c. 100 B.C.<sup>2</sup> Apparently referring to the exodus, it states, ". . . in ancient times, Moses and Aaron arose by the hand of the Prince of Lights and Satan [Belial] in his cunning raised up Jannes [Johana] and his brother when Israel was first delivered."<sup>3</sup> Our earliest reference in Greek, the language in which most of our ancient sources were written, is 2 Timothy 3:8f., which is thought to date from the early second century A.D. Here our magicians are cited as opponents of the truth: "Men like this defy the truth just as Jannes and Jambres defied Moses: their minds are corrupt and their faith spurious. But they will not be able to go on any longer: their foolishness, like that of the other two, must become obvious to everybody."

From relative obscurity and doubtlessly due to the increasing prominence of Moses, Jannes and, to a lesser extent, Jambres achieved some prominence as magicians in the Greco-Roman world.<sup>4</sup>

The origin of the Jannes and Jambres tale was clearly pre-Christian, more particularly Jewish, and its base is the biblical account of the exodus, in which Pharaoh's magicians are anonymous. But though the tale is of Jewish origin—some scholars have attempted to

<sup>1</sup> Aaron, if referred to at all, is virtually never mentioned by name. For the general rise of Moses in the hellenistic and early Greco-Roman periods, which in the Jannes and Jambres tradition caused the eclipse of Aaron, see G. Vermes, "La Figure de Moïse au tournant des deux testaments," in Moïse l'homme de l'alliance (Paris, 1955), and Gager, Moses in Greco-Roman Paganism.

<sup>2</sup> For an English translation see G. Vermes, The Dead Sea Scrolls in English (Penguin Books, 1968) pp. 95–117.

<sup>3</sup> Vermes, The Dead Sea Scrolls in English, p. 102.

<sup>4</sup> As early as the 1st cent. A.D., Pliny (Natural History 30.2.11) speaks of Moses, Jannes, and Lotapes (= Jambres?) as magicians among the Jews. See further Apuleius, Apology 90, QuesBart 4:50 (Lat. 2), and Acts of St. Catherine (J. Viteau, Text A.4 and passim in Text B; cf. n. 11).

hold Artapanus (c. 100 B.C.) responsible for it<sup>5</sup>—the pair play an insignificant role in rabbinic literature before the ninth century A.D. Of the earlier literature, only the Talmud (Men. 85a) and Targum Pseudo-Jonathan (Ex 1:15; 7:11; Num 22:22) mention them.<sup>6</sup> In the Targum (Ex 1:15), they interpret a dream of Pharaoh, predict the birth of Moses, and subsequently appear as the helpers of Balaam (Num 22:22). In later Jewish tradition they become Balaam's sons. In the Talmud, Moses is derided for coming with magic to the home of magic.

Most early development of the Jannes and Jambres tale took place in a Greek (and Latin) Christian milieu. We touch here briefly on additions to the biblical Exodus, apart from the mere identification of the magicians.<sup>7</sup> The order that follows is basically chronological.

Of much interest is the problematic statement by the pagan writer Numenius (2nd cent. A.D.), who, in a brief passage cited in Eusebius' Praeparatio evangelica (9.8), says that Jannes and Jambres were able to undo, publicly, even the greatest of the disasters that Moses brought against Egypt. This assertion is the more noteworthy since Origen mentions in his Contra Celsum (4.51) that the same Numenius had recounted "the story concerning Moses and Jannes and Jambres," which must mean that Numenius composed more on the subject than what has been preserved in Eusebius; presumably he had based his account on extensive traditions and perhaps was acquainted with a book on Jannes and Jambres. Whatever the case, Numenius' statement clearly contradicts the biblical account according to which the magicians, hence Jannes and Jambres, were able to follow Moses' act only to the second plague inclusive (cf. Ex 8:18). Furthermore, no known ancient author shows any agreement with Numenius' aberrant claim. Consequently, it seems necessary to discount an author who, one would assume, knew well the Jannes and Jambres tale. New relevant evidence, however, has recently come to light in Pap. Chester Beatty XVI (see below, "Texts"), one fragment of which (26a) contains a passage ("... Jannes opposed Moses and ... by doing everything they had [done]") which appears to suggest that in the Book of Jannes and Jambres the conflict between Moses (and Aaron) and Jannes, at least insofar as this involved feats of magic, was telescoped into what in the biblical account is merely the introduction to the plagues episode. There is no evidence in our available texts that the book gave a blow-by-blow account of the story of the plagues, though, admittedly, conclusions drawn from silence must be treated with due caution.

To return to Numenius, if in the book the confrontation was indeed telescoped, and since one of the Chester Beatty fragments (see also Pap. Vindob. G 29 456 verso B) clearly states that Jannes equaled Moses' achievement, Numenius may have been acquainted with Jannes and Jambres. To be sure, Numenius speaks of both Jannes and Jambres, while the fragment mentions only Jannes as directly opposing Moses, but this need not be a contradiction, since Jambres may have played a supporting role.

Naturally, no author, Christian or Jewish, who was intimately familiar with the biblical account would readily repeat the claim of Numenius, who may not have been guilty of distortion but nevertheless created the wrong impression by quoting out of context.

Philostorgius (4th/5th cent.), in addition to repeating that the magicians Jannes and Jambres were afflicted with ulcers (cf. Ex 9:11), relates that Moses sent the mother "of one of them" to her death. No mother of either, of course, appears in the biblical account, but the Vienna text as well as the Chester Beatty fragments<sup>8</sup> mention "the mother," not of one but of both magicians. Though Philostorgius may be suggesting that Jannes and Jambres were paternal half brothers, there is no extant tradition that contradicts their being full <sup>5</sup> This was first proposed by J. Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor (Breslau, 1875) p. 173. See also L. E. Iselin, "Zwei Bemerkungen zu Schürer's 'Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi,'" Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie 37 (1894) 321-26.

<sup>6</sup> See M. McNamara, The New Testament and the Palestinian Targum to the Pentateuch, pp. 90-93, and in greater detail H. L. Strack and P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrasch, vol. 3, pp. 660-64.

<sup>7</sup> "Addition" has been taken fairly strictly. When, for example, the Ambrosiaster (4th cent.) states that Jannes and Jambres confessed in pain that God was active in Moses (confessi sunt cum dolore vulnere Deum in Moysae operatum), this is not regarded as an addition. Though the biblical story does not speak of "confession," the magicians' acknowledgment of the "finger of God" (Ex 8:19) was naturally understood as meaning just that (cf. also Cosmas Indicopleustes, Christian Topography 3.164 B). For the boils, see Ex 9:11. Similarly, 2Tim 3:8f. can hardly be said to go beyond the biblical account, apart from the naming of the magicians.

<sup>8</sup> See the discussion under "Texts."

brothers. Of further interest is that, as Philostorgius intimates, "the mother" died a violent death. This is now apparently confirmed by the Chester Beatty papyrus.

Twice in the tradition we are told that Jannes and Jambres themselves perished as a result of their confrontation with Moses. According to the Acts of Pilate (4th cent.), Jannes and Jambres were regarded as gods by the Egyptians but perished "together with those that believed in them" (5:1), since the signs they did were not of God. That the two had adherents is specifically stated in the Vienna (3rd cent.) and Chester Beatty (4th cent.) fragments, where they appear as "the friends." That Jannes and Jambres themselves perished is subsequently also mentioned by Abdias (6th cent.) and apparently in part is confirmed by the Chester Beatty fragments, in which Jannes seems to have died an untimely death. But though their mother seemingly perished likewise, there is no evidence that Jambres did. Further confirmation of Jannes' death comes from the British Library text (11th cent.; cf. "Texts," below), though we remain in the dark about the circumstances.

From the earliest mention of "Jannes and his brother" in the Damascus Document we encounter explicit references to the fact that our magicians were in league with the devil. In the Testament of Solomon (3rd/4th cent.?) a demon who, interestingly, has some connection with "the Red Sea"<sup>9</sup> replies to the king: "I am he who was called upon by Jannes and Jambres who fought against Moses in Egypt" (25:4). Similarly, in the later text of the Questions of St. Bartholomew (6th/7th cent.) Satan says, "Simon Magus, Zaroës, Arfaxir, and Jannes and Mambres are my brothers" (Lat. 2, 4:50). Of further significance here may be a statement in the Penitence of Cyprian (5th cent.?) in which the great magician of Antioch relates how the devil called him "a clever lad, a new Jambres, trained for service, and worthy of fellowship with himself" (§6). The implication seems to be that Jambres had enjoyed such fellowship. It is possible that Palladius (5th cent.) also meant to imply that Jannes and Jambres had been assisted by demons. In his Lausiac History (ch. 17) he relates that Macarius of Alexandria (4th cent.) once visited the garden-tomb (kēpotaphion) of Jannes and Jambres, and upon arrival was met by seventy demons who resided there. Presumably in the tomb, he found a small brass jar suspended, and outside were some empty pomegranates that had been dried up by the sun. A rusty chain lay by the well beside the tomb. The connection, however, between Jannes and Jambres and the demons is indirect at best and may in fact be non-existent.<sup>10</sup> Of interest is the reference to the garden-tomb, since one of the Chester Beatty fragments mentions Jannes' tomb (mneion for mnēmeion), near which, as it seems, his mother was buried.

In our extant texts there is no explicit reference to the devil's role in the opposition of Jannes and Jambres, but the last lines of a Chester Beatty fragment (26a*) are suggestive. After Jannes has been struck with a fatal illness in consequence of his contest with Moses, the text continues that he "sent word to the king [saying, 'This] active [power] is of God.' Therefore I deliberately (thelōn) op[posed Moses]." Obviously, here we have moved well beyond the biblical account, which simply states, "So the magicians said to Pharaoh, 'This is the finger of God'" (Ex 8:19).

Though in the majority of references Jannes and Jambres are simply described as magicians—sometimes, as we saw, in explicit league with the devil—one source indicates specifically that they practiced necromancy. In the Acts of St. Catherine (Text B.11),<sup>11</sup> a work which in its present form does not antedate the tenth century but perhaps contains earlier material, we are told that Jannes and Jambres "show to those who seek to behold the persons (faces) who from of old have slept in the earth."<sup>12</sup>

Once, in an Arabic work of Bar Hebraeus (13th cent.), we are told that Moses was entrusted by Pharaoh's daughter to Jannes and Jambres for instruction in wisdom.

In conclusion, we briefly summarize (post-9th-cent.) rabbinic additions to the biblical account.<sup>13</sup> As already mentioned, from helpers of Balaam in Targum Pseudo-Jonathan,

<sup>9</sup> For Jannes and Jambres and the Red Sea episode in rabbinic literature, see Strack and Billerbeck, Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, vol. 3, p. 663k.

<sup>10</sup> For a similar story extant in Syr. but probably deriving indirectly from Palladius, see Iselin, Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie 37 (1894) 321f.

<sup>11</sup> See J. Viteau, Passions des Saints Écaterine et Pierre d'Alexandrie (Paris, 1897).

<sup>12</sup> The term "necromancy" is employed in an untranslatable line that precedes this passage (see M. R. James, The Lost Apocrypha of the Old Testament, pp. 33f.).

<sup>13</sup> See Strack and Billerbeck, Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, vol. 3, pp. 660–64.

Jannes and Jambres achieve the status of sons, and together with their father are counselors of Pharaoh. It is they who are responsible for the order to destroy all newborn males of Israel, in an effort to forestall predicted ruin. When Moses nevertheless grows to manhood, they leave for Ethiopia; but, after some years, they reappear on the scene as Pharaoh's magicians, who with their craft oppose the exodus of Israel. When bested by Moses, they, against God's explicit advice, are accepted by him as proselytes. This allows them to accompany Israel out of Egypt and places them in a position to continue their animosity on the desert wanderings. Not unexpectedly, they are in the forefront of the golden-calf revolt, and as a result are put to death (cf. Ex 32:28). Alternatively, they remained with Pharaoh, went with him to the Red Sea, flew above the waters on wings they had made themselves, but perished at the hands of the archangel Michael.

In the manifestly earlier traditions about Jannes and Jambres there is little if any corroboration of these rabbinic elaborations. There is no evidence of their filial relationship to Balaam, and no connection with the Red Sea episode or desert wandering is evident.<sup>14</sup>

The book

That at some point in the evolution of the Jannes and Jambres tale a book was composed about them is first mentioned by Origen (3rd cent.). In reference to 2 Timothy 3:8f., he states that the information contained there is not found in "public books" (= canonical) but in an apocryphal composition entitled The Book of Jannes and Jambres.<sup>15</sup>

In the next century, the writer known to modern scholarship as the Ambrosiaster (4th cent.) comments directly on 2 Timothy 3:8f. and labels it "an example from the apocrypha."<sup>16</sup>

The so-called Gelasian Decree (6th cent.), which, among other things, contains a list of biblical books, includes, as an apocryphal book, the title Penitence of Jannes and Jambres.<sup>17</sup>

What the precise meaning is of a reference in the Chronicle of John of Nikiu (7th cent.), preserved only in Ethiopic, is not clear.<sup>18</sup> In chapter 30 of that work he writes, "Pharaoh Petissonius, who is Amosis, King of Egypt, reigned with the help of the book of the magicians Jannes and Jambres." At first glance the book appears to be by them (or belonging to them) rather than about them, but whatever the intent some book is clearly alluded to.<sup>19</sup>

It is now certain that a book on Jannes and Jambres not only existed in antiquity but has been preserved in fragments. Unfortunately, due to its very fragmentary state much remains disconcertingly unclear, but on the positive side it must be said that we now know much more than we did a mere decade ago. When we integrate the manuscripts, the story runs somewhat as follows:<sup>20</sup>

1. The king of Egypt, one assumes, has summoned his wise men to observe the growth of some miraculous tree or other plant, the branches of which have quickly formed a shelter from the sun's heat. While Jannes (?) at the behest of the king is seated under "a certain apple tree," "a great earthquake" strikes, accompanied by thunder and lightning, and the violence of the elements breaks off some of the branches of the shelter. Thereupon Jannes (as chief magician?) runs into the library in order to consult his magical books and tools.

2. Perhaps while he is engaged in his magical proceedings in the library heavenly emissaries appear to him and bring him a message from "the LORD of the earth and the

<sup>14</sup> Jannes' warning to Jambres not to accompany Pharaoh in his campaign against the "Hebrews" (see Vienna papyrus A) need not foreshadow the pursuit but perhaps ought to be so interpreted in the light of one of the Chester Beatty fragments (26g'). Though once again our text is too fragmentary for complete reconstruction, enough is clear to determine that at least the question of the pursuit is raised. But we do not know whether Jambres, in defiance of his brother's warning, accompanied the king. An indirect connection between our magicians and the sea episode is found in TSol, in which the demon upon whom the brothers are said to have called hails from "the Red Sea."

<sup>15</sup> Commentary on Matthew 27:9. The work is extant only in Lat. translation, hence the reference reads "Mambres" for "Jambres." See further on Mt 23:37.

<sup>16</sup> Commentary on 2 Timothy.

<sup>17</sup> Since it is in Lat. the names appear as "Jannes" and "Mambres."

<sup>18</sup> See Iselin, Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie 37 (1894) 324.

<sup>19</sup> We may have further indication of the existence of a book in the Acts of St. Catherine Text B.11, in which the singular verb with Jannes and Jambres perhaps suggests that the reference is to a composition known as Jannes and Jambres rather than to the magicians as individuals.

<sup>20</sup> The outline is of necessity only tentative. As a result of more study it may well turn out that the order of some of the Chester Beatty fragments will have to be changed. See the authors' forthcoming monograph.

Overseer of the universe." They have come to remove him to Hades, where he will share the lot of the dead. However, "two clad in white" appear to grant him a respite of fourteen days (?).

3. Having comforted his mother, who apparently has fallen ill, and having committed her to the care of his friends, Jannes takes Jambres with him (from an unknown place) to Memphis, where he entrusts his brother with a book (of magic?), enjoins him to keep it secret, and warns him against participation in the king's campaign against and in pursuit of the Hebrews. He perhaps also relates to Jambres what had transpired with his mother.

4. While Jannes is delivering to his adherents an address that mentions a wedding he has attended and possibly also his previous altercations with Moses, emissaries from the palace arrive, urging him to oppose "Moses the Hebrew," who in the presence of the king has succeeded in astounding everyone with his feats. Though Jannes is able to duplicate whatever "Moses and his brother" have done, he is afflicted with "a painful ulcer" and retreats to the hedra, presumably his official residence, from which he presently sends word to the king explaining that the "active power of God" was operative in Moses and that he, in full knowledge of this fact, launched his opposition.

5. Jambres (and perhaps the mother of the two brothers) subsequently appears to visit Jannes, who gives him instructions for the next move. That night, however, a portent of a falling star is observed; the next morning, it is apparently interpreted (by whom our fragmentary text does not tell us) as indicating the downfall of Jannes and his adherents and as foreboding his own death.

6. Jannes presumably meets his end as a result of his "painful ulcer." He is survived by his brother and his mother, who addresses his corpse with a moving lament. Though we remain in the dark as to the manner and circumstances, it is clear that his mother follows Jannes in death; she is buried with complete ritual by her second son, Jambres, apparently next to Jannes' tomb.

7. It seems reasonable to assume that at this point in the story Jambres comes into his own as a magician. We are told that he opened the book(s) (probably the one that had earlier been entrusted to him by Jannes) near (?) the apple tree (which likewise has appeared earlier in the story), and "performed necromancy." The penitent shade of Jannes promptly makes its appearance and launches into an apparently lengthy and wide-ranging discourse admitting the justness of his punishment, warning his brother against a life that will lead to Hades, describing his abode below, relating God's displeasure with idols and idol worshipers alike, and evidently warning at length about the life that leads to hell. Perhaps Jannes, for the benefit of the reader, recaps the debacle of the opposition with appropriate paraenetic commentary along the way. What became of Jambres we do not know.

Texts

Jannes and Jambres is extant only in fragmentary form. Scholars have long been acquainted with British Library, Cotton, Tiberius B.V., fol. 87. First edited in 1861, this text in Latin (plus Anglo-Saxon translation) and accompanied by two illustrations was brought to renewed scholarly attention in 1901 by M. R. James.<sup>21</sup> The date of the British Library fragment is eleventh century A.D.

In Greek we possess Pap. Vindob. G 29 456 verso of the Nationalbibliothek in Vienna, which comprises four fragments (A–D) and has been dated to the third century A.D. As a basis for translation, we have used P. Maraval's edition<sup>22</sup> as well as photographs kindly supplied by H. Loebenstein of the Nationalbibliothek in Vienna.

Further fragments in Greek are in the possession of the Chester Beatty Library and Gallery of Oriental Art, Dublin.<sup>23</sup> Seven frames include a total of ninety-three fragments, the vast majority of which are too small either for reconstruction of the papyrus or for translation. The date of the Chester Beatty fragments is fourth century A.D. or perhaps somewhat earlier. Though the official designation is now Pap. Chester Beatty XVI, the numbers of the individual frames that appear with the present translation have no official status and hence are subject to change.

<sup>21</sup> M. R. James, "A Fragment of the 'Penitence of Jannes and Jambres,'" JTS 2 (1901) 572–77. A year later, an improved text was published by M. Förster in "Das lateinisch-altenglische Fragment der Apokryphe von Jannes und Mambres," Archiv für das Studium der neueren Sprachen und Literaturen 108 (1902) 15–28.

<sup>22</sup> P. Maraval, "Fragments grecs du Livre de Jannes et Jambres (Pap. Vindob. 29456 et 29828 Verso)," Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik 25 (1977) 199–207.

<sup>23</sup> Cf. A. Pietersma, "Greek and Coptic Inedita of the Chester Beatty Library," Bulletin of the International Organization for Septuagint and Cognate Studies 7 (1974) 10–18.

The argument of K. Koch that a passage in Targum Pseudo-Jonathan on Exodus 1:15 constitutes an insertion from Jannes and Jambres has been convincingly refuted by C. Burchard.<sup>24</sup> We have therefore not included the passage in our edition of Jannes and Jambres.

A.-M. Denis cites a passage from Philostorgius that in his judgment is a quotation from our book.<sup>25</sup> This seems unlikely not only because the wording of the passage suggests a reference rather than a quotation but also because the statement that Moses sent the mother "of one of them" to her death contradicts our extant fragments, which make it clear that Jannes and Jambres were sons of the same mother. This passage, therefore, like that of Pseudo-Jonathan, has been ignored for our edition of Jannes and Jambres.

In addition to an enumeration of extant texts, mention should be made here of the possibility that more than one version of the book existed. When one compares the Latin fragment in the British Library with the parallel Chester Beatty text (24afp<sup>r</sup>), it becomes readily apparent that the two are not identical. The differences, however, are not so great that they cannot be explained by the fact that the former was lifted out of its original context and modified accordingly. Yet there is some evidence to suggest that more than one version of our book was in circulation. By a remarkable coincidence, Pap. Vindob. G 29 456 verso, fragment B, parallels Pap. Chester Beatty XVI 26a (part of recto and continued on verso). Initially, the Vienna papyrus merely shows some expansion: "wonder" (or "signs," but not both) of Pap. Chester Beatty is "signs and wonders" in Pap. Vindob., and "Moses and his brother" of the former becomes "Moses and his brother Aaron" in the latter. However, from approximately that point onward the two texts, though similar and even identical at times, go their own separate ways. Naturally, much is uncertain because of the state of the papyri, but that the two texts diverge quite markedly is not subject to debate.

Original language

In consequence of his argument that a fragment in Pseudo-Jonathan belongs to Jannes and Jambres, Koch has attempted to uncover Semitisms in the Latin fragment at the British Library—the only text known to scholars at the time of Koch's writing—but his arguments in support of an Aramaic original are not convincing. Particularly when one remembers the influence of the Septuagint, one is hesitant to posit a Semitic original in order to explain the phenomenon of clauses linked simply by "and . . . and" and the occurrence of "saying" after the finite verb respondit ("he answered"). Similar Septuagintalisms exist in our newly discovered Greek texts, but these are insufficient to prove that the original language of the book is Semitic. Certain other features point in a different direction, e.g. the use of the particle te as a connective not simply of word pairs but of coordinate clauses as well, and the appearance of the so-called historical present.

Our oldest texts of Jannes and Jambres are in Greek and there is as yet no good reason to believe that the original language of the composition was other than Greek.

Date

The usual difficulty in dating literature of the kind we are concerned with is compounded by the extremely fragmentary nature of the text. The Vienna fragments are third century A.D., and Pap. Chester Beatty XVI was written at most a century later. When we add to this evidence the fact that Origen (c. 185–c. 254) specifically mentions the existence of an apocryphal book on Jannes and Jambres, whence, according to him, the information in 2 Timothy 3:8 derives, it becomes clear that the latest possible date of our book is the middle of the third century A.D. The earliest possible date, however, is more difficult to determine.

<sup>24</sup> K. Koch, "Das Lamm, das Ägypten vernichtet. Ein Fragment aus Jannes und Jambres und sein geschichtlicher Hintergrund," ZNW 57 (1966) 79–93. C. Burchard, "Das Lamm in der Waagschale," ZNW 57 (1966) 219–28.

<sup>25</sup> A.-M. Denis, Fragmenta Pseudepigraphorum quae supersunt graeca, p. 69.

Several scholars have thought that the book is pre-Christian. J. Bidez and F. Cumont,<sup>26</sup> for example, date it back to hellenistic times, and E. Schürer argued that,

. . . as it is probable that those anonymous personages owed their name and individuality first of all to the apocryphal book itself, we may perhaps venture to refer the date of the composition of this work to pre-Christian times.<sup>27</sup>

These scholars may well be correct, but proof still eludes us. Even if in its present form the book is Christian, that in no way precludes an originally (pre-Christian) Jewish composition.<sup>28</sup>

Possible evidence for Jannes and Jambres as a Christian book is as follows: (1) In fragment B of the Vienna papyrus (l. 8), the word chiazein occurs, the basic meaning of which is "to form (the Greek letter) chi." It need mean no more than "to cross out" or "to mark with an X" but could possibly be a reference to the cross.<sup>29</sup> Unfortunately the context is no aid to interpretation, hence the evidential value of the word is slight.<sup>30</sup> Furthermore, only the Vienna text but not the basically parallel text of Chester Beatty has the reading in question. (2) Chester Beatty 23e recto, line 2, reads apparently "this one having descended to Ha[des . . .]," which may be a reference to the descent of Christ. The remainder of the sentence might run "[did not] die," but again we cannot go beyond the realm of the possible. Other interpretations can be adduced. (3) Perhaps the best argument for Jannes and Jambres, in its present form, as a Christian book lies in its apparent literary form. If our ordering of the material is even approximately correct and if the Gelasian Decree has reference to our book, Jannes and Jambres is essentially a confession (poenitentia), a genre of literature that was manifestly Christian but not Jewish.<sup>31</sup>

Provenance

As has already been mentioned,<sup>32</sup> Freudenthal sought to connect the Jannes and Jambres tale with the Jewish historian Artapanus, basing his argument on the fact that Numenius, who is said by Origen to have composed "the story of Moses and Jannes and Jambres," called Moses by his hellenized name, Musaeus, as did Artapanus. His argument, however, was judged inconclusive by Schürer, who stated that "the names of the magicians, which in all probability are Semitic, seem rather to point to a Palestinian origin."<sup>33</sup> Subsequently Iselin<sup>34</sup> attempted to strengthen Freudenthal's argument by claiming that "Aristomenes," in Bar Hebraeus, is a corruption of "Artapanus." Hence Bar Hebraeus is made to yield that Paul in 2 Timothy 3:8 is dependent on Artapanus.

By extension, if Artapanus was the originator of the Jannes and Jambres tradition, perhaps he in fact wrote the book, or at any rate the book might be presumed to have been written

<sup>26</sup> J. Bidez and F. Cumont, Les Mages hellénisés (Paris, 1938) vol. 2, p. 22.

<sup>27</sup> E. Schürer, History, vol. 3, p. 149.

<sup>28</sup> Of some interest and possible significance is the fact that both our Gk. fragments and 2Tim 3:8 use the verb anthistanai, "to withstand," in describing the magicians' opposition to Moses. This verb, admittedly a logical but scarcely the sole choice (it does not appear in the biblical account), is found only in authors who can be presumed to have been familiar with 2Tim. Numenius, for example, used paristanai and TSol machesthai. However, even if there be a question of literary dependence, we have no way of knowing who influenced whom.

<sup>29</sup> Cf. G. W. H. Lampe, p. 1525, and LSJM, p. 1991.

<sup>30</sup> The verb chiazein in Plato's Timaeus was thought by Justin Martyr to refer to the cross; a similar interpretation would be possible for Jannes and Jambres even if no reference to the cross was intended. One is invariably reminded here of a passage in James (Lost Apocrypha, p. 34) in which he comments on references to Jannes and Jambres in the Gk. Acts of St. Catherine:

The other [of two passages] is better [i.e. more intelligible]: "But concerning the mountains (sic—?mules) Jannes and Jambres spake, signifying the sign of the manger of the Lord; and concerning the stone whereby the stone of the tomb (a verb is wanted) . . ." If this is a genuine quotation at all (and one from the Sibyl which precedes it is correct) it implies Messianic, even Christian, predictions in the book.

(For the Gk. text of James's reference, see Viteau, Passions de Saints Écaterine, p. 33 [= Text B §11]). Though James incautiously fails to distinguish between what Jannes and Jambres may have contained and how the book was interpreted, it appears to have been at least open to Christian interpretation.

<sup>31</sup> See further below.

<sup>32</sup> See n. 5.

<sup>33</sup> Schürer, History, p. 150.

<sup>34</sup> See n. 5.

in Egypt. But thus far no convincing argument has been made for Artapanus as the originator of the tradition. Though it is a priori not unlikely that Artapanus would have created the tale, in view of his obvious interest in Moses, what seems to contradict this possibility is the fact that we do possess, in Eusebius, Artapanus' connected narrative of the confrontation, but Jannes and Jambres are not mentioned.<sup>35</sup> Of course Artapanus may have written a separate work on the two magicians, but in that instance is it credible that in his survey he did not even mention their names?

Of some possible significance is the fact that, in our texts, the center of action seems to be Memphis,<sup>36</sup> the Old Kingdom capital, whereas in the biblical account no city is mentioned by name. Memphis also plays the central role in Artapanus and Philo,<sup>37</sup> but this city of ancient fame and lasting prestige would admittedly be the logical choice for any author with historical sense who tried to place Moses historically.

Since our earliest texts of Jannes and Jambres were found in Egypt and since our book is first mentioned by an Alexandrian author, the burden of proof may be assumed to lie with those who wish to advocate a Palestinian origin for the composition. The place of origin of the tradition, in distinction from our book, is another question.

Theological importance

The fragmentary nature of our text makes it hazardous, if not impossible, to arrive at definitive theological conclusions. Some tentative observations, however, may be made. That Jannes and Jambres may have relevance for the question of forgiveness will be noted below.

Jannes and Jambres clearly evidences continued Jewish (if the work was Jewish in origin) and Christian interest in necromancy, though in our book as well as in the Old Testament it is condemned, if only by association with the opponents of Moses. It may well be, however, that when the Chester Beatty text comments on idolatry (22a<sup>v</sup>), its primary and perhaps only referent is necromancy. But for this there is no absolute proof. We may have no more than a general condemnation of idolatry, necromancy included, which is well attested in early literature of both religions.

Further noteworthy items are mentioned here only in passing. Astrological interest appears in a passage that seemingly links the impending death of Jannes to a falling star (26a<sup>v</sup>). God is spoken of as episkopos (25a<sup>v</sup>), a term which, though well enough attested in early literature, is relatively rare as a divine epithet.<sup>38</sup> Hades appears to be described as the great equalizer which obliterates all distinction between king and pauper (22j<sup>v</sup>).<sup>39</sup> Heavenly emissaries are sent to remove Jannes to Hades (25a<sup>v</sup>),<sup>40</sup> but "two clad in white" win him a reprieve, and the mother apparently addresses the corpse of Jannes (24b<sup>v</sup>).

Relation to canonical books

As indicated at least as early as the Pseudo-Jonathan tradition, the Jannes and Jambres tale takes its point of departure from the biblical account of the contest between Moses and Pharaoh's court magicians in the plague narrative of Exodus 7 and 8. Later elaboration, though not present in our fragmentary text, links these two magicians to the birth of Moses (Ex 1-2), the crossing of the Red Sea (Ex 14), the golden calf incident (Ex 32), and the oracles of Balaam (Num 22-24). Jannes and Jambres are not named in the biblical story, nor are they ever referred to anywhere else in the Old Testament.

Not until the New Testament do we again meet any reference to these two antagonists of

<sup>35</sup> See Denis, Fragmenta, pp. 189-95. [Also see J. J. Collins' contribution on Artapanus in the Supplement. — J.H.C.]

<sup>36</sup> See Vienna papyrus fragment A.

<sup>37</sup> Its precise role in Josephus is unclear (Ant 2.240).

<sup>38</sup> See, e.g., IClement 59:3 and SibOr "Fragments" 1. 3 (J. Geffcken, Die Oracula Sibyllina [GCS; Leipzig, 1902; reprint Amsterdam, 1970] p. 227.), Olympiodorus' fragmentary commentary on Job (PG 93.221A), and in earlier classical literature Iliad 22.255 and Sophocles, Antigone 217.

<sup>39</sup> Cf. Job 3:11-19 and Isa 14:9-11.

<sup>40</sup> Cf. the angel who announces death in TAb.

Moses. In the often quoted verses 2 Timothy 3:8f., the author of the epistle compares false Christian teachers to Jannes and Jambres. As the latter defied truth when they opposed Moses, so the former defy truth when they champion a pattern of behavior contrary to accepted Christian standards. The end result for them will be the same as that of Jannes and Jambres. Knowledge of the tradition is assumed, but no information apart from their names is provided.

Relation to apocryphal books

It has been suggested above that Jannes and Jambres in its present form is a confession or penitence (poenitentia), as it is labeled in the Gelasian Decree in distinction from Origen, who calls it simply "Book of Jannes and Jambres" (Mambres). This decree lists immediately preceding our book the Penitence of Origen and the Penitence of (Saint) Cyprian, and earlier on the Penitence of Adam. Of these only the Penitence of Cyprian has survived; James, more than seventy-five years ago, suggested a connection between the two books:

In one of the writings classed with it [i.e. the Penitence of Jannes and Jambres] in the Gelasian Decree, the Penitence of Cyprian, we see a document calculated to give us a fair idea of the nature of what is gone [i.e. lost of Jannes and Jambres]. Cyprian, the hero of the Penitence, is the wizard of Antioch . . . and in his work he tells—with a quantity of interesting detail—the story of his initiation into the black art, and his practice of it, and its failure when confronted with the power of the true God. Very much the same would the contents of the Penitence of the two Egyptian magicians have been, only it is doubtful whether they or at least both of them, made so fine an end as Cyprian.<sup>41</sup>

James's surmise seems to have been correct in general terms; it is now confirmed by new evidence, though obvious differences between the two works exist, not the least of which is the fact that whereas Cyprian's is a totally retrospective account, by the protagonist himself in the first person, of his initiation into and the practice of magic, in Jannes and Jambres the confession, apparently put in the mouth of Jannes, who speaks from the realm of the dead, is preceded by a third-person narrative that details the conflict between the two brothers and Moses. From the point of view of literary form, Cyprian's would seem to be the more developed penitence.

In the course of his lament over past misdeeds, Cyprian repeatedly expresses his belief and fear that God will not forgive him, and in one of his despairing utterances he exclaims as follows:

I do not believe that He forgives me. For I am not convinced that a man worse than I has been born, seeing that I surpassed the well-known Jannes and Jambres. They when they practised magic acknowledged the finger of God, but I was convinced that God did not exist. If God did not forgive them, when they recognized him in part, how can He forgive me since I totally ignored him.<sup>42</sup>

James has placed what may be termed a Faustian interpretation on this passage by suggesting that the two brothers did not obtain pardon.<sup>43</sup> There is, however, no completely compelling reason for drawing this inference. The passage may simply mean that, as a result of their opposition to Moses (God), Jannes and Jambres perished; but this punishment does not exclude ultimate forgiveness. Alternatively, Cyprian may simply be drawing an inference, either from the Exodus account or from the Book of Jannes and Jambres. Yet there is possibly some support for the idea that the book explicitly dealt with the question of forgiveness. In a passage of Pap. Chester Beatty XVI (23f*), which appears to be part of Jannes' confession and touches on his present plight in Hades, we read: "and now there is for us no forgiveness." But be it noted once again that our text is very fragmentary!

<sup>41</sup> James, JTS 2 (1901) 575.

<sup>42</sup> Penitence of Cyprian, para. 17.

<sup>43</sup> James, JTS 2 (1901) 576.

Cultural importance

Whether we have in Jannes and Jambres another tale, in addition to those of Simon Magus, Cyprian of Antioch, and Theophilus of Adana,<sup>44</sup> that was a forerunner of the Faust legend is still relatively obscure.<sup>45</sup> Very interesting in this connection is a passage in the Chester Beatty papyrus to which we have already referred twice, namely 26a'. Here it is stated that precisely because Jannes knew that Moses' power was from God, he launched his opposition. We have already noted that this comment goes well beyond the biblical account; but perhaps we are justified in going one step further. Implicitly, though perhaps not explicitly, we may be dealing here with a 'pact with the devil,' which is an integral part of the Faust tradition; but in the pre-Faust legends it is not attested earlier than the story of Theophilus of Adana (7th–9th cent.). Similarly, like the end of Faust, the fate of Jannes (and Jambres?) may have been intended as a warning to the believers.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 133f.
 Delling, Bibliographie, p. 165.
 Denis, Introduction, pp. 146–49.

TEXTS AND ALLEGED TEXTS

- Denis, A.-M. Fragmenta Pseudepigraphorum quae supersunt graeca. PVTG 3; Leiden, 1970; p. 69.
 Förster, M. "Das lateinisch-altenglische Fragment der Apokryphe von Jannes und Mambres," Archiv für das Studium der neueren Sprachen und Literaturen 108 (1902) 15–28.
 James, M. R. "A Fragment of the 'Penitence of Jannes and Jambres,'" JTS 2 (1901) 572–77.
 ———. The Lost Apocrypha of the Old Testament. London and New York, 1920; pp. 31–38.
 Koch, K. "Das Lamm, das Ägypten vernichtet. Ein Fragment aus Jannes und Jambres und sein geschichtlicher Hintergrund," ZNW 57 (1966) 79–93.
 Maraval, P. "Fragments grecs du Livre de Jannès et Jambé (Pap. Vindob. 29456 et 29828 Verso)," Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik 25 (1977) 199–207.

GENERAL

- Gager, J. G. Moses in Greco-Roman Paganism. Nashville, 1972.
 McNamara, M. The New Testament and the Palestinian Targum to the Pentateuch. Analecta Biblica 27; Rome, 1966; pp. 82–96.
 Pietersma, A. "Greek and Coptic Inedita of the Chester Beatty Library," Bulletin of the International Organization for Septuagint and Cognate Studies 7 (1974) 10–18.
 Schürer, E. A History of the Jewish People in the Time of Jesus Christ, Eng. rev. ed. Edinburgh, 1885–91; §32.3.
 Strack, H. L. and Billerbeck, P. Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrasch. Munich, 1926; vol. 3, pp. 660–64.

<sup>44</sup> Cf. P. M. Palmer and R. P. More, The Sources of the Faust Tradition (New York, 1936), and with Gk. texts L. Radermacher, Griechische Quellen zur Faustsage (Sitzungsberichte der Akademie der Wissenschaften in Wien; phil.-histor. Klasse, Bd. 206, Abhandlung 4, Vienna, Leipzig, 1927).

<sup>45</sup> See the very suggestive title of a paper delivered by H. Chadwick at the 14th International Congress of Papyrologists, "The Penitence of Jannes and Jambres: The Origins of the Faust Legend," Proceedings of the XIV International Congress of Papyrologists, Oxford, 24–31 July 1974 (London, 1975) x.

FRAGMENTS FROM THE BOOK OF JANNES AND JAMBRES

Pap. Chester Beatty XVI

25a<sup>r</sup>

] all [
 ] having summoned [ his servants], both [the] wise men an[d the magicians, and after] seven [day]s when he was w[alking] about i]n [his] ho[use] and saw [ the plant flourish [and] that the bra]nches were already providing shade [
 And when he had become [ ] he ordered [ to sit(?) under a certain apple tree (mēlea)
 And [when he was seated] there, a great earthquake occurred and from heaven (came) [the sound] of thunder and lightning], so that some branches of the shelter [broke off]. When he saw what had happened Jannes ran into the library where [his] magical tools were (bottom of page)

25a<sup>v</sup>

] they(?) came [ c]lothed [
 t]he two having [ (remnants of two lines)
 ] to him and sa[y
 ing, the LORD of the earth and (the) Overseer [of the universe] has sent us to lead you away [to Hades Henceforth [you will be] a companion of the dead.
 Forever [you will be] pitied.
 Then] the two clad in white said,
 Let there be granted to him] still fourteen days(?)
 in his house and after that [ (bottom of page)

21a<sup>r</sup>

(top of page)
 (remnants of two lines)
 And when Jambres knew [ (remnants of six lines)
 les]t bi[tt]er
 ] each day [
 (remnants of two lines)

 ] to heed you faithfully. [Then he approached and kissed he]r, fi[ghting back his tears]. [
 ] let [his tears] flow.

Pap. Vindob. G 29 456<sup>v</sup> (fragment A)

] lest bitter [
 ] I shall send t[o
 ] and you [ and also to Joambres my brother to attend to you (and) to heed you faithfully. Then he approached and kissed her, fighting back his] tears. When she had left he ] let his tears flow. And [he took leave of?] his friends having urged them all [to ca]re for his mother. (Then) he took his brother with him to Memphis

21a<sup>v</sup>

(top of page)
 ] Keep it secret, a[nd take heed so as not to go forth] on the day when the king] marches out with the grandees of [Egypt against] the peop[le of the Hebrews, and do not accompany t]hem [
 ] and [the] soul
 (remnants of two lines)
 God] heav[en(?]
 (remnants of one line)
 our mother [
 (remnants of one line)
 I (they?) said to her [ k]ing [
 When [our] mother had left [
 ] from death [

26a<sup>r</sup>

(top of page)
 to/at a wedding and the [
 for seven [da]ys [we] en]joyed ourselves.
 Men and brothers, after(?) [
 I took up position(?) against a [certain] Hebrew.
 And when he had [not yet] finished [speaking emissaries came [from the palace saying, Come quickly [and oppose] Moses the Hebrew who is per[forming wonders] to the amazement of all. [And in the presence] of the king, Jannes opposed Moses and [his brother by doing everything they had done. Then the] fatal disease
 struck him] on the spot,
 [and with a painful ulcer he] w[ent] to the hedra and a[fter a while] sent word to the king [saying, This] active [power] is of God. Therefore I deliberately opposed [Moses

26a<sup>v</sup>

(top of page)
 [not to g]rieve [him.] And [ because/that he [haz]arded in the daytime(?)
 ] therefore regarding money/possessions [
 ] against us. Make ready (remnants of three lines)

and ha[nded him the] book.
 He said, Brother, I am [passing on to you] a document. Keep it secret, and ta[ke heed so as not
 to go [forth] on the day when the king] marches out [with] the grandees of Egypt [against the peo]ple of the Hebrews, and do not acco[mpany them]. And [ to be ill and the [soul from death and from(?) [
 ] God heaven [
 (bottom of column)

Pap. Vindob. G 29 456<sup>v</sup> (fragment B) op]pose Moses the Hebr[ew who is performing si]gns and wonders to the amazement] of all. And in the presence [of the ki]ng, he opposed Moses and his brother Aaron by doing everything t[hey had done]. Then the fatal disease
 struck [him on the spot,
 and] with a painful ulcer [he went] to the hedra
 ] to mark word
 to] the king, saying, This [is the finger of God]. Indeed
 I am unable [

] except unto death [
 Joannes [called his] brother [ and] urged him [ ] not to grie[ve] him [
 because/that he hazarded [
 (remnants of one line)
 ] money/possessions and [
 ] us. Make ready [ ] for the spirit [
 ] that/because si[gns

] for the morning and [     ] al] the things being observed [     ]
 ] he made inquiry at what hour he saw the] setting of the star [     ]
 ] he said, Such is a generation [of lying li]ps and deceitful hearts
 ] of the hour of [his] death
 ] Come and see how long [     ]
 ] and he said to him nothing ] through (a) spi[rit

 ] his brother [     ]
 (remnants of one line)
 (bottom of column)

26g<sup>r</sup>

(remnants of one line)
 ] after this [     ]
 ] to pursue the p[eople of the Hebrews (remnants of two lines)
 ] Egypt [     ]
 ] and of the people [     ]
 ] weeping [     ]
 ] Jambres [     ]
 (remnants of two lines)

26g<sup>v</sup>

(remnants of one line)
 ] the oaths which [     ] swore [     ] ] your [     ]
 ] and when Jannes [     ]
 ] he said to [his] brother [     ]
 (remnants of one line)
 ] hundred thou[sand
 ] hundred fo[als
 ] hundred [ca]mels [     ]
 (remnants of three lines)

25h<sup>r</sup>

(top of page)
 ] and a noise
 ] and he said
 ] h[is] b[roth]er
 (remnants of one line)

25h<sup>v</sup>

(top of page)
 my/of me is perishing and [     ] my whole body has been agit[ated his brother Jambre[s ] and [Jann]es op[posed

24b<sup>v</sup>

(top of page)
 When Joannes heard [     ] of the king he encouraged/advised [all the other friends. [And his mother] cri[ed out say ing [     ] and my son J[     ]

24c<sup>v</sup>

(remnants of two lines)
 ] and when [his] mot[her
 ] (s)he was amazed a[nd
 ] if to him and [     ]
 ] he had preferred [     ]
 (remnants of one line)

24afp<sup>v</sup>

(remnants of one line)
 ) when [his] mother [ca]me [she approached hi]m to kiss him [ ) from her and [ he said to he]r, Stay back, mother, [ ) on account of the fire (= fever?) I am unable [ I am in] much [pain], mother. Then [his mother ) said [
 ) he replied [
 ) you took the trouble, mother, [to come] to me [ (remnants of two lines) to hi]m, I will go to [ (remnants of five lines)

24b<sup>r</sup>

(top of page)
 I saw [the] dead and no one resembled] you, child. Lie(?) here ) your appearance [ ] has been utterly changed ) child, you are a corpse, for your tongue] and your lips are not moving and] your [knuc]kles are not [
 (remnants of one line)

24c<sup>r</sup>

Jambres [
 and weeping(?) ]
 I(?) have been deprived [
 (remnants of one line)
 ) and money [
 (remnants of one line)

24afp<sup>r</sup>

(remnants of one line)
 ) the spirit [
 ) his mother(?) [
 ) the tomb of his brother a[nd her] abandoned(?) corpse and [having performed the] complete funeral rites he buried h[er his] mother Jamb[res having op]ened the b[ook near(?) the apple tree per[formed] necromancy
 and] brought up from Ha[des his brother's shade, and [the soul of Jannes said to [his] brother Jambres
 (remnants of seven lines)
 (bottom of page)

Brit. Lib., Cotton, Tiberius B.V., fol. 87
 Mambres opened the magical books of his brother Jannes; he performed
 necromancy
 and brought up from the netherworld his brother's shade. The soul of Jannes said in response,
 I your brother did not die unjustly, but indeed justly, and the judgment will go against me, since I was more clever than all clever magicians, and opposed the two brothers, Moses and Aaron, who performed great signs and wonders.
 As a result I died and was brought from among (the living) to the netherworld where there is great burning and the pit of perdition, whence no ascent is possible. Now then, brother Mambres,

- 23a<sup>v</sup>                    your abode
                          cubits
                          (remnants of nine lines)
- 23b<sup>v</sup>                    (remnants of one line)
                          ] cubits [
                          (remnants of three lines) tho]se who do not do evil [ (remnants of six lines)
- 23e<sup>v</sup>                    (remnants of one line)
                          ] where are (the) sons [
                          ] Egypt and on account of the [ (remnants of two lines)
- 23f<sup>v</sup>                    (remnants of four lines)
                          ] and we are descending [
                          ] but now(?) there is no forgiveness for us(?) [
                          (remnants of two lines)
                          ] and friends [
                          ] for the gates of [ the] dumb and [ (bottom of page)
- 23b<sup>r</sup>                    (remnants of six lines)
                          ] of us/our [ (remnants of two lines)
                          ] the oikoum[ene
                          ] unab[le ] corrupti[on
- 23e<sup>r</sup>                    ] fo[r] he knew [
This one having descended to Ha[des . . . d ied. These [
                          (remnants of two lines)
- 23f<sup>r</sup>                    (remnants of four lines)
our limbs [ full of darkness [
we are burning(?) [ nothing [ we [
to give it(?) [ (bottom of page)
- 22a<sup>v</sup>                    (remnants of one line)
We who w]orshiped ido[ls and carved images until we came [to de struction together with [our] idols, [for neither
- make sure you do good in your life to your children and friends; for in the netherworld no good exists, only gloom and darkness. After you will have died and have come to the netherworld, among the dead, your abode will be two cubits wide and four cubits long

HISTORY OF THE RECHABITES

(First to Fourth Centuries A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY J. H. CHARLESWORTH

The History of the Rechabites in its present form recounts the visit of a virtuous man, named Zosimus in some passages, to the island of the Blessed Ones. For forty years this man has entreated God to show him the abode of the Blessed Ones. God answers his prayer, and with the guidance of an angel and supernatural assistance from an animal and two trees he is able to journey over the great ocean and a dense cloud to an island that resembles paradise (chs. 1–3). The man meets the Blessed Ones, who become so oppressively inquisitive about him that he asks his attendant to inform visitors: “He is not here.” This request causes a mild sensation, and an assembly asks this liar, a “man of sin,” to go away. After pleas for forgiveness the man receives mercy. He then asks the Blessed Ones concerning their history (chs. 4–7).

The Blessed Ones inform him that they are the Rechabites who, by the help of the angels of God, departed Jerusalem for the present island in the time of Jeremiah (chs. 8–10). They describe themselves, their occupation, and their blessed state, and report that angels dwell with them (chs. 11–12:9). The account also mentions the virginal birth of the Word and Lent (chs. 12:9a–13:5c), describes the paradisaic state they enjoy, and with considerable detail defines the death of the body and ascent of the soul (chs. 14:1a–16:8g). The traveler then returns to the shore of the sea, and with the help of the two trees passes over the cloud and the sea, and finally the (apparently same) animal carries him back to his cave (chs. 17:1–18:4).

Texts

The History of the Rechabites was once very popular and is now extant in many ancient languages, of which the most important are the Ethiopic, the Greek, and the Syriac. The present translation, the first English rendering of the latter,<sup>1</sup> aims at being idiomatic without sacrificing the flavor of the Syriac. The base of the translation is manuscript A,<sup>2</sup> Syriac 236 (olim Supplément 28, Saint-Germain 125.), of the Bibliothèque Nationale.<sup>3</sup> This manuscript was copied near the end of the twelfth century.<sup>4</sup> Significant variants in B (Syr. 235 [olim

<sup>1</sup> An English translation of the Eth. was published by E. A. W. Budge (The Life and Exploits of Alexander the Great, London, 1896; vol. 2, pp. 555–84), and of the Gk. by W. A. Craigie (“The Narrative of Zosimus Concerning the Life of the Blessed,” ANF 10, pp. 220–24). A French translation of the Syr. was published by F. Nau (“La Légende inédite des fils de Jonadab, fils de Réchab, et les îles fortunées,” Revue sémitique 7 [1899] 136–46). For further bibliographical information see Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 223–28. An edition and literal translation of the Gk., Syr., and Eth. will be published by Charlesworth, Martin, and Wintermute in the SBL T&T Pseudepigrapha Series.

<sup>2</sup> Nau also based his translation upon MS A; but he placed in his text and translation variants from other MSS. Frequently he did not note the source of the reading.

<sup>3</sup> HistRech appears on fols. 328a–37b; these are well preserved and of paper. A description is published in H. Zotenberg, Catalogues des manuscrits syriaques et sabéens (mandaites) de la Bibliothèque Nationale (Paris, 1874) pp. 187f.

<sup>4</sup> Fol. 364a, l. 8 down: “These histories (or biographies) are completed by the help (lit. helps) of our Lord”; l. 11 down: “in the year 1505 of the Greeks.”

Ancien fonds 144.] of the Bibliothèque Nationale, of the 13th cent. and of paper),<sup>5</sup> in C (Syr. 234 [olim Ancien fonds 143, Colbert 5137.], also of the Bibliothèque Nationale, of the 13th cent. and of paper),<sup>6</sup> and in D (BM Add. 12174 of the British Museum, of the 12th cent. and of vellum)<sup>7</sup> are placed in the notes.<sup>8</sup>

Original language, date, and provenance

It is unwise to state the probable original language, date, or provenance of this document until critical editions of the Greek, Syriac, and Ethiopic texts are available.<sup>9</sup> A few observations and speculations, however, are warranted. The Syriac version, as the notes to the translation below indicate, may well have been translated from a Greek text; but some of it may go back to an earlier, Semitic source. Work on the Greek version suggests a complex picture: Some sections appear to have been composed in Greek, others indicate possible translation from a Semitic text, which could be the original language of the earliest portions. This opinion, obtained from years of work on the two major versions, the Syriac and the Greek, receives stunning endorsement from the rubrical preface to this section of manuscript D (fols. 209r–210v): “The History of the Blessed Ones, the Sons of the Rechabites . . . It Was Translated from Hebrew into Greek and from Greek into Syriac by the Hands of the Reverend Mar Jacob of Edessa.”<sup>10</sup>

The date of the History of the Rechabites is the crucial issue, and it is related to the Jewish or Christian character of the various sections. In its present form the work may date from the sixth century A.D., as M. R. James contended.<sup>11</sup> Comparison of the Syriac manuscripts reveals that the document, like many pseudepigrapha (viz. 4Ezra), has received interpolations by Christians; the same observation results from a mere cursory examination and comparison of the Greek manuscripts, and by the recognition that the Greek is expanded by chapters 19 through 23, which are certainly Christian. The Ethiopic, moreover, has been extensively expanded by scribes who were obviously Christian.<sup>12</sup> Some of the present document is Christian, but the Christian interpolations—sometimes found in only one manuscript—raise the possibility that 12:9a–13:5c and 16:1b–8 are not original but a Christian insertion into an earlier document. This hypothetical earlier writing could be a Christian revision of inherited Jewish traditions, or it could be a Christian expansion of an original (partly preserved) Jewish document. James,<sup>13</sup> A. Zanolli,<sup>14</sup> Nau,<sup>15</sup> G. Graf,<sup>16</sup> L.

<sup>5</sup> HistRech begins on fol. 84b (left col.); it ends on fol. 91b (right col.): “The history of the sons of Rechab ends.” Cf. Zotenberg, Catalogues, pp. 185–87. Fol. 341b, right col., l. 7 down: “It ends by the help of our Lord . . .” l. 16 down: “of the year 1603 of the Greeks.”

<sup>6</sup> HistRech appears on fols. 61a (right col.) to 62a (left col.); as Zotenberg said, it is a “résumé de la vision de Zosime, relative aux Réchabites.” Cf. Zotenberg, Catalogues, pp. 182–85. In the middle margin of 344b is found “In the year 1505 this book is completed, the living words, in the year 1603 of the Greeks.” MS C differs considerably from MS A, most notably, besides being an epitome, in the placing of the history of the Rechabites in Jerusalem before mentioning Zosimus, who is described as a monk who lives in a monastery in Jerusalem.

<sup>7</sup> HistRech appears on fols. 209b (or recto) to 214a (or verso). Cf. W. Wright, Catalogue of the Syriac Manuscripts in the British Museum (London, 1872) pt. III, pp. 1123–39, especially p. 1128.

<sup>8</sup> Variants to these MSS are noted only when the different word (or form) supplies a significantly different meaning. I am most grateful to the trustees of the Bibliothèque Nationale and of the BM for permission to study these MSS personally and to obtain photographs of them.

<sup>9</sup> Comments herein will be conservative in line with the rest of this collection of documents. As with 2En, ApAb, LadJac, and some other pseudepigrapha, so with HistRech we are in the early stages of understanding the document and its complex traditions.

<sup>10</sup> For the titles to the MSS see n. b to ch. 1.

<sup>11</sup> M. R. James, Apocrypha Anecdota (T&S 2.3; Cambridge, England, 1893) p. 95. Nau claimed the present form does not predate the 5th cent. (“La Légende inédite des fils de Jonadab, fils de Réchab, et les îles fortunées.” Revue sémitique 6 [1898] 264). K. Kunze thinks that the document was composed in Gk. in the 6th cent. See his “Zosimo, monaco della Scizia, beato (?)” Bibliotheca Sanctorum (Rome, 1969) vol. 12, col. 1502.

<sup>12</sup> See the provisional translation of the Eth. and a comparison of it with the Syr. and Gk. versions, and especially Appendix D in E. G. Martin, The Account of the Blessed Ones: A Study of the Development of an Apocryphon on the Rechabites and Zosimus (The Abode of the Rechabites). Duke Ph.D., 1979.

<sup>13</sup> James, Apocrypha Anecdota, p. 95.

<sup>14</sup> A. Zanolli, “La leggenda di Zosimo secondo la redazione armena,” Giornale della Società Asiatica Italiana. N.S. 1 (1924) 146–62.

<sup>15</sup> Nau, Revue sémitique 6 (1898) 265.

<sup>16</sup> G. Graf, Geschichte der christlichen arabischen Literatur (Studi e Testi 118; Rome, 1944) vol. 1, p. 214.

Ginzberg,<sup>17</sup> J.-C. Picard,<sup>18</sup> and B. McNeil<sup>19</sup> have perceived evidence of a Jewish original behind the present Christian document. Nau even used such terms as "the Christian translator," "the primitive text," "the Hebrew text," and "the Hebrew author." Working with only the Greek document generates the impression that the beginning and end are Christian and that the central chapters, 3–15, are originally Jewish. Focusing upon the Syriac document leaves the impression that only 12:9a–13:5c and 16:1b–8 are clearly Christian and appear to be interpolated, because they interrupt the flow of thought and contain intrusive ideas. The mention of the name "Zosimus" in the latter section (16:8) suggests that perhaps all passages connected with this name may be from a later stratum,<sup>20</sup> hence chapters 7:12–16:1a, which do not identify the traveler as "Zosimus," would be earlier and possibly Jewish. It is only in these chapters, and specifically in 8–10, that mention is made of the Rechabites and their history in Jerusalem during the days of Jeremiah.<sup>21</sup> At this stage in our work it is best to suggest only that sections of this document are Jewish or heavily influenced by Jewish traditions, and that they may antedate the second century A.D.

It is practically impossible to discern the provenance of this document. According to the Armenian version, "Yovsimios" lived on Schiza, an island in the Ionian Sea.<sup>22</sup> This identification appears late, speculative, and unreliable. Syriac manuscript C states that Zosimus lived in a monastery in Palestine (see n. b to ch. 18). This comment should not be taken seriously in itself, although Palestine is a likely origin for the early Jewish stratum, which has a strong Semitic flavor, centers upon the Rechabites, and locates their history in Jerusalem. The repeated mention of Jerusalem in chapters 8–10, however, could be caused, of course, by the midrashic nature of these chapters and the dependence upon Jeremiah 35, which is centered in Jerusalem.

Historical and theological importance

The historical and theological importance of this document is first related to the growing perception of early medieval Christian interest in the land of the Blessed Ones, further reflections on a distant, not future, earthly paradise, and continued dependence on Jewish apocryphal literature or traditions. Such importance is, second, related to the increasing clarity with which we can now perceive and understand the theology of Jews near the beginning of the present era. Of central importance is the rich imagery and interesting descriptions of the daily life of the Blessed Ones, especially their freedom from sickness, pain, misfortune, temptation, discomfort—but not death—and their unique sexual customs. The eschatological concerns of Jewish apocalyptic are reflected not only in the ideas previously mentioned but also in the concern for the time of the end of the world (6:5–6a; cf. 2Bar and 4Ezra). Angelology is impressively developed, but not in ways similar to the multiplicity of names typical of 2 Enoch, 3 Enoch, and the Prayer of Jacob. The angels descend to the Blessed Ones, visit them (15:4b), and even dwell with them (12:8). They announce the time of death of a Blessed One, bury his (or her) body (14:2–15:10), and take the soul to heaven. The angels also transmit the prayers and praises "before" the throne (16:8c–8d).

<sup>17</sup> L. Ginzberg, The Legends of the Jews, 7 vols., trans. H. Szold (Philadelphia, 1909–38, reprinted 1937–66) vol. 6, p. 409.

<sup>18</sup> J.-C. Picard, "L'Histoire des bienheureux du temps de Jérémie et la narration de Zosime: Arrière-plan historique et mythique," Pseudépigraphes de l'Ancien Testament et manuscrits de la Mer Morte, ed. M. Philonenko et al. (Cahiers de la RHP 41; Paris, 1967) pp. 27–43. Also see V. Nikiprowetzky, "Pseudépigraphes de l'Ancien Testament et manuscrits de la Mer Morte: Réflexions sur une publication récente," REJ 128 (1968) 5–40.

<sup>19</sup> B. McNeil rightly observes the lack of Christology, soteriology, and ecclesiology in the main body of HistRech and concludes that "it is a light Christian reworking of a Jewish text." See his "The Narrative of Zosimus," JSJ 9 (1978) 68–82.

<sup>20</sup> The name "Zosimus" appears in the Syr. version only in 1:2 (bis), 3; 2:9; 7:11; 16:8f.; and 17:1a. The omission of the name is frequently conspicuous; and sometimes it appears the Blessed Ones are not speaking to one person but to many, e.g. n. 14:1a: "And again we announce to you (plural), O brothers . . ." The opening ch. also tends to supply the impression that the "certain" man mentioned later is to be identified with a particular individual: "His name was Zosimus . . ." (1:2).

<sup>21</sup> Jeremiah is also mentioned in 1:2; but this verse is obviously part of the introduction to the document.

<sup>22</sup> Zanolli, Giornale della Società Asiatica Italiana. N.S. 1 (1924) 153.

The island of the Blessed Ones is an intermediary state between the corruptible world and the heavenly realm. There is no resurrection, but rather a separation of soul from body, and ascent of the former with the aid of angels. When in heaven, the soul resides in a mansion, awaiting the resurrection of the rest of the Blessed Ones (16:7a). This thought is rather unique in biblical and quasi-biblical literature.

Relation to other books

Since the traditions preserved in the History of the Rechabites are exceedingly complex and rich, and since some of these are preserved in only one recension of one of the main versions (Syriac, Greek, or Ethiopic), it is necessary to limit discussion on literary relationships until critical texts and translations are available.

The History of the Rechabites is obviously dependent upon Jeremiah; the middle chapters (apparently the earliest section) of this document (especially chs. 8–10) resemble a midrashic expansion of Jeremiah 35. Many other passages are ultimately dependent upon traditions preserved in the Old Testament; for example, chapters 7:2a–10a and 12:3a are derived, perhaps only through secondary sources or oral traditions, from Genesis 1–3. Unlike the Greek and Ethiopic versions, which are intermittently dependent on New Testament ideas and traditions, the Syriac version is almost totally free of influences from the New Testament. Even the apparent Christian interpolations in the Syriac version are more influenced by ecclesiastical and liturgical traditions than by the New Testament documents; chapters 12:9a–13:5c, which mention the incarnation of the Word, and the virgin, are more influenced by ecclesiastical liturgy than John, on the one hand, or Matthew and Luke, on the other. Chapter 16:1b–8 shows virtually no influence from the New Testament.<sup>23</sup>

The History of the Rechabites shows no literary dependence upon any of the other pseudepigrapha, but striking parallels exist between it and 1 Enoch (cf. ch. 39), Jubilees (cf. 23:29), the Ascension of Isaiah (cf. e.g. HistRech 12:9a and 16:8a–8d), and especially 2 Baruch. As with the holy man in the History of the Rechabites, so Baruch fasts for seven days, eats no bread and drinks no water (not wine as in HistRech; cf. 2Bar 20:5–21:2). The abundance of food on the island of the Rechabites is reminiscent of the pictorial description of nourishment prepared for “the consummation of time” according to 2 Baruch 29.<sup>24</sup> The elaborate descriptions of the death of the body and the description of the soul and its ascent in the History of the Rechabites recalls the explanation of the resurrected body in 2 Baruch 50 and 51. Other shared traditions are the concept of the corruptible and incorruptible worlds (cf. 2Bar 74:2) and the description of the blessed island or the future day as one in which there is no disease, anxiety, or anguish, but only rest and joy, and the idea that plants will produce food by themselves (cf. 2Bar 73, 74). The relationship between the History of the Rechabites and 2 Baruch, however, is apparently not the result of literary dependence in either direction; it can be explained by a shared milieu or body of traditions, perhaps by a shared tradition, and possibly by independent influence from a lost apocryphon on the abode of the nine and a half tribes.<sup>25</sup>

<sup>23</sup> There can be little doubt that the HistRech influenced many early Christian writers. Merely two examples must suffice. The Contendings of the Apostles has been influenced by this document (or its traditions). According to this account, Matthew tells Peter and Andrew that he has just returned from the country of Prokumenos, whose inhabitants tell him that they are the nine and a half tribes “whom God Almighty brought into the land of inheritance . . . we eat not flesh and we drink not wine in our country, for our food is honey and our drink is the dew . . . and our firstborn children do we offer as a gift unto God that they may minister in the church . . . The water which we drink [floweth] not from cisterns which have been hewn by the hand of man, but [we drink] of the water which floweth from Paradise . . . No word of lying hear we in our land, and no man knoweth another who speaketh that which is false.” Other interesting parallels to the HistRech could be listed, most notably the report that “in our country there is neither spring, nor cold, nor ice; but there are winds and they are [always] pleasant.” (ET from E. A. W. Budge, The Contendings of the Apostles, London, New York, 1901; vol. 2, pp. 111–113.) The same apparent dependence on HistRech—or the lost apocryphon on the lost tribes—is found in the hymns of Commodius (cf. especially XLII in J. Martin, Commodiani Carmina, CCSL 128, Turin, 1960).

<sup>24</sup> The manna preserved for the future day is mentioned explicitly in 2Bar 29:8; it is also one of the traditional images inherited by the Christian redactor of the HistRech (cf. 13:2). For a discussion of this imagery in early Jewish writings, including the pseudepigrapha, see B. J. Malina, The Palestinian Manna Tradition (AGAJU 7; Leiden, 1968).

<sup>25</sup> HistRech contains traditions that are elsewhere identified with the lost tribes (cf. n. 22). 2Bar (cf. especially 77:17–26) is clearly built upon traditions related to the nine and a half tribes. It is possible that there once was an apocryphon on the lost tribes; cf. Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 147–49.

Ginzberg has drawn attention to concepts shared by the History of the Rechabites and 2 Alphabet of Ben Sira 28. The latter Jewish work records that the descendants of Jonadab, that is the Rechabites, entered alive into Paradise. In contrast to the History of the Rechabites, 2 Alphabet of Ben Sira 28 states that the Rechabites do not "taste death."<sup>26</sup>

The History of the Rechabites has also been influenced by ideas, concepts, and traditions developed in non-Jewish and non-Christian writings. The description of the abode of the Rechabites is in places impressively similar to Iranian myths, notably the Var de Yima, which depict paradise.<sup>27</sup> At least six early Greek or Roman authors preserved ideas that appear eventually to have influenced the author(s) of the History of the Rechabites. Hesiod (fl. 800 B.C.) describes the region in which heroes live after death; it is the "island of the Blessed Ones," which is beyond the shore of the ocean at the ends of the world (Works and Days 159–74; cf. also Homer, Odyssey IV.560). Pindar (522–448 B.C.) records the idea that souls that are pure "pass by the highway of Zeus into the Tower of Cronus, where the ocean-breezes blow around the Islands of the Blest (lit. "Island of the Blessed Ones": makarōn nasos)."<sup>28</sup> Herodotus (c. 485–425 B.C.) places "the Island of the Blessed Ones" (Makarōn nēsos) "seven days' march from Thebes across sandy desert."<sup>29</sup> Plato (427–347 B.C.) envisions a celestial earth in which the inhabitants have no sickness, live long lives, and are vastly superior to earthly men and women; and the gods "really dwell" in their "sacred groves and temples" (cf. Phaedo 111b). Virgil (70–19 B.C.), like the author of 2 Baruch, describes the future golden age as one in which the earth shall pour forth gifts without having to be tilled and goats with swollen udders will come home without having to be tended or called (Eclogue IV.18–25, 39f.). Lucian (A.D. 125–200) describes an "island of the Blessed Ones" (he men nēsos eiē tōn Makarōn) on which the inhabitants are heroes who have become incorporeal (autoi de sōmata men ouk echousin . . . kai asōmatōi ontes) and who enjoy sweet breezes, an eternal spring (aiēi gar par autois ear estī), and a land abounding in flowers, grapevines, and instead of "wheat-ears, loaves of bread all baked grow on the tops of the halms . . ."<sup>30</sup> The History of the Rechabites apparently has inherited images and ideas commonly shared in antiquity in the countries of the Fertile Crescent and in the lands of the Mediterranean.<sup>31</sup>

Cultural importance

The History of the Rechabites must have considerably influenced Western and Middle Eastern culture during the middle ages, since it is extant in numerous medieval Greek, Syriac, Ethiopic, Arabic, Karshuni, Slavonic, and Armenian manuscripts.<sup>32</sup> Moreover, a very popular story in medieval Europe is the Navigatio Sancti Brendani, which is extant in two versions and recounts how Brendan of Clonfert (c. 484–577), an Irish monk, twice visited the island of the Blessed Ones. Brendan sails west from Ireland and visits one island after another until he arrives at an island, encircled by a thick cloud, on which he meets a holy man who is unclothed except for feathers. The island is the island of the Blessed Ones. Because of similar ideas in Greek and Roman sources, we cannot conclude that the traditions in the History of the Rechabites influenced this Irish legend; and there is no reason to

<sup>26</sup> Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 6, p. 409.

<sup>27</sup> See Picard (Pseudēpigraphes, pp. 27–43), who sees influence on the HistRech from the Var de Yima through the Dead Sea Scrolls. Although direct influence from the Dead Sea Scrolls is unlikely, HistRech shares with them the concept that a full member has transcended mere anthropology and has approached angelology (cf. HistRech 7:11 with IQH 3:21f.) and that angels dwell within the community (cf. HistRech 11:5, 12:6–9 with e.g. IQSa 2.3–11 and IQH 3.21f., 4.24f.). Also see n. 30.

<sup>28</sup> Olympian Odes 2.69–71; Gk. and ET from J. Sandys, The Odes of Pindar (LCL; Cambridge, Mass., London, 1937) pp. 24f.

<sup>29</sup> History Bk. III.26; Gk. and ET from A. D. Godley, Herodotus (LCL; New York, London, 1921) pp. 34f.

<sup>30</sup> A True Story 2.6–13; Gk. and ET from A. M. Harmon, Lucian (LCL; New York, London, 1913) pp. 310–17.

<sup>31</sup> Nikiprowetzky (REJ 128 [1969] 22–38) claims that Christians employed classical and Jewish sources to produce the HistRech, which is a Christian work that praises monasticism. McNeil (JSJ 9 [1978] 80f.) similarly argues that "the most important aspect" of this document is that it "sets out, in a pictorial form, a way of life for a community." He suggests that the community should be identified with the Therapeutae.

<sup>32</sup> See the discussion of these versions in Martin, The Account of the Blessed Ones, pp. 68–108.

imagine with Alexander von Humboldt that Saint Brendan is reporting that he succeeded in reaching the American continent.<sup>33</sup>

A world map of approximately 1275 seems to identify the islands Saint Brendan visited with the Canary Islands (Fortunate Insulate Sex Sunt Insulae Sct Brandani).<sup>34</sup> This amazing confusion seems to be caused by Pliny's, Strabo's, and Ptolemy's identification of the Canary Islands as the islands of the Blessed Ones;<sup>35</sup> the identification in antiquity is logical, since the legends place them in the ocean, near the end of the earth, precisely the geographical location of the Canary Islands in early antiquity.

Introduction to the translation

The following English translation attempts to be as idiomatic as possible, although the main focus has been upon the Syriac manuscripts with their subtleties and inelegancies. Hence, while particles and connectives in Syriac that are intrusive or unnecessary in English are not represented, nouns and verbs are translated as consistently as English will allow; note the following: npš = "soul," šp = "he prayed," šwt = "prayer," šl = "he requested," šlp = "request," pys = "he asked," bʿ = "he petitioned," ʾr = "he came," ʾzp = "he journeyed," hlk = "he walked," rd = "he traveled," knš = "he assembled," knš = "the assembly," šrbt = "family," ʾrʿ = "land,"<sup>36</sup> šwr = "bulwark." Chapters noted herein have been adapted from W. A. Craigie's translation of the Greek version; verses are supplied for the first time. Verse numbers in parentheses denote that the passage is unique (or nearly so) in the Greek recension; verse numbers followed by an alphabetical number signify that the Syriac has another (or longer) version. Hence, 16:(7)7a means verse 7 in Greek is missing in Syriac, and that the Syriac has another reading. Verses to the Greek version will be found in the forthcoming edition. Placed within parentheses are additions necessary for idiomatic English. Italics denote rubrication.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 223–28.

Denis, Introduction, p. 144.

Budge, E. A. W. The Life and Exploits of Alexander the Great. London, 1896; vol. 2, pp. 555–84. (ET of the Eth.)

Charlesworth, J. H. The History of the Rechabites, vol. I: The Greek Recension. T&T 17; Pseudepigrapha Series 10; Chico, Calif., 1982.

Craigie, W. A. "The Narrative of Zosimus Concerning the Life of the Blessed," ANF 10, pp. 220–24. (ET of the Gk.)

James, M. R. "On the Story of Zosimus," Apocrypha Anecdota. T&S 2.3; Cambridge, England, 1893; pp. 86–108. (Contains Gk. text plus significant introduction.)

<sup>33</sup> See the discussion of the Navigatio Sancti Brendani and opinions regarding it in R. H. Ramsay's No Longer on the Map: Discovering Places That Never Were (New York, 1973) pp. 60–74, 210–12. C. R. Beazley correctly states that the Brendan story "shows in many places signs of being concocted from other narratives" (p. 235). He suggests, furthermore, that the voyages of the Moslem Wanderers of Lisbon and of Sinbad the Sailor "are clearly related in some way to the Brendan narrative" (p. 235). See his The Dawn of Modern Geography (London, 1897). For a defense of the claim that the traditions in the legend of St. Brendan are to be connected "with an Atlantic quest," see G. Ashe, Land to the West: St. Brendan's Voyage to America (New York, 1962). As far as I know, no publication draws attention to the parallels between the HistRech and the Navigatio Sancti Brendani.

<sup>34</sup> Ramsay, No Longer on the Map, pp. 64f.

<sup>35</sup> See Ashe, Land to the West, pp. 132f.

<sup>36</sup> Sometimes "land" seems ill suited in the context; the reader may substitute "ground" or "earth."

- Martin, E. G. The Account of the Blessed Ones: A Study of the Development of an Apocryphon on the Rechabites and Zosimus (The Abode of the Rechabites). Unpublished Ph.D. dissertation, Duke University, 1979. (A good review of research and assessment of the versions.)
- McNeil, B. "The Narrative of Zosimus." JSJ 9 (1978) 68–82.
- Nau, F. "La Légende inédite des fils de Jonadab, fils de Réchab, et les îles fortunées," RevSem 6 (1899) 263–66 (introduction); 7 (1899) 54–75 (Syr. text); 7 (1889) 136–46 (French translation).
- Picard, J.-C. "L'Histoire des bienheureux du temps de Jérémie et la narration de Zosime: Arrière-plan historique et mythique," Pseudépigraphes de l'Ancien Testament et manuscrits de la Mer Morte, ed. M. Philonenko et al. Cahiers de la RHP 41; Paris, 1967; pp. 27–43.
- Zanolli, A. "La leggenda di Zosimo secondo la redazione armena," Giornale della Società Asiatica Italiana. N.S. 1 (1924) 146–62.

THE HISTORY OF THE RECHABITES<sup>a</sup>

The History of the Holy Hermit Zosimus and of the Sons of Jonadab, the Son of Rechab<sup>b</sup>

1 1 There was a certain amazing and virtuous man,<sup>c</sup> who while dwelling in the desert for forty years did not eat bread, did not drink wine, and did not see the
2 face<sup>d</sup> of a mortal. •His name was Zosimus; and he earnestly was entreating God by night and by day to show him where he had translated the Blessed Ones, the sons of Jonadab, who were taken away from worldly life<sup>e</sup> in the days of Jeremiah the prophet, and where God had made them dwell.

And when the LORD<sup>f</sup> saw the (self-)humiliation<sup>g</sup> of this blessed one, Zosimus, for the sake of these Blessed Ones, then God heard his prayer and granted his 3 request. •And on one of the days while he was praying, a voice came to him<sup>h</sup> and an angel came toward him and said to him,<sup>1</sup> “Zosimus, O man of God, I have been sent to you from the height (of heaven)<sup>i</sup> to guide you and to show you<sup>k</sup> the way so that you may journey and see these Blessed Ones as you petitioned the 4 LORD. •However, do not boast in your mind (thinking thus), ‘Behold (for) forty 5 years bread I have not eaten, and wine I have not drunk,<sup>1</sup> •and the faces<sup>m</sup> of men I<sup>n</sup> have not seen (but) only the face of angels’; now approach.”

1.2 2 Then I left the cave,<sup>a</sup> •and traveled with the angel (for) forty days. I arrived at a certain place wearied<sup>b</sup> and fatigued, and I collapsed from my exhaustion;<sup>c</sup>

1 a. The title given to this document, adapted from the titles in MSS A B D, draws attention to the Jewish character of the earliest sections of the work (cf. chs. 8f. with Jer 35).

b. This is the title found in MS A. The title in B is “The History of the Sons of Jonadab, the Son of Rechab, Who Are in the Midst of the Ocean, the Great Sea, When God Showed Them to Zosimus, the Virtuous Hermit.” The title in MS D is “The History of the Blessed Ones, the Sons of the Rechabites, Whose Record Is Recorded by Jeremiah the Prophet When He Said That They Are the Sons of Jonadab, the Son of Rechab, Who Are Inhabitants of the City Jerusalem. It Was Translated from Hebrew into Greek and from Greek into Syriac by the Hands of the Reverend Mar Jacob of Edessa.” (Italics denote rubrics.)

c. D adds “Abba” (Father), cf. 2:9; as with most variants in D, this one looks secondary.

d. Gk. loan word, pršwp’.

e. Or “world, age”; for the rest of this paragraph, D has “the sons of the Rechabites, who were taken away from the people of Israel in the days of the prophet Jeremiah and Josiah the king of Jerusalem, and concerning the place he had made them dwell.”

f. “LORD” and “God” are used interchangeably in this section.

g. Lit. “his humiliation, his feebleness”; B: “his exhaustion” (cf. 2:2). D: “his labor and his exhaustion.”

h. The clause “a voice came to him” is not found in B D; but see 2:7,9. The clause seems original; the redundancy could be seen as unattractive and hence omitted by a medieval copyist. The hypostatization of a voice is typical of some early apocalypses; cf. especially the following: Rev 1:10–12; Cologne Mani Codex 57.12 (the “Apocalypse of Shem”), “But a voice (phônē) bent toward me, calling from the throne, and coming toward me, took my right hand, and lifted (me)”; ApSedr 2:3 “And the voice (hē phônē) said to him, ‘I was sent to you that I may carry you up into heaven’” (translator Agourides, see herein). It seems that in ApSedr 2, Sedrach twice calls the voice “LORD” (kurios).

i. Lit. “and answered and said to him.” This Semitism is well known, is reflected in the Gospels, and idiomatically means “said” when no question has been asked.

j. D adds “from God.”

k. Lit. “And I shall be for you a guide and I shall show you . . .”

l. For the rest of the paragraph, D has: “and the face (wpršwp) of man I have not seen; for the words of God are more excellent and pleasant than bread, and his spirit more satisfying and sweeter than wine. And also (do not say), ‘Faces of men I have not seen, only the face (pršwph) of the heavenly king’; (now) move near.” D is obviously derivative and late. A preserves the better reading.

m. The indigenous Syr. word, not the Gk. loan word as above and below.

n. The three verbs in this sentence can represent either the first person, as here, or the second person, as in Nau’s translation.

2 a. D: “my cave.”

b. B D: meitaraph, “vexed or smitten.”

c. Lit. “and I cast my soul (myself) down because of my exhaustion.” B omits “because of my exhaustion.”

3 afterward I prayed to God (for) three<sup>d</sup> days. •And a certain animal came and 18:3
 (4, carried me away and traveled beneath me (for) many days until it reached the 5.6) great ocean.<sup>e</sup> •And when I saw the great sea I was amazed<sup>f</sup> at its vastness and
 6a) wondered<sup>g</sup> what I would do. •And immediately a voice came to me, saying, “O 1:3
 7 man of God, never has a man proceeded (farther) or passed beyond me; merely 8 perceive (this) and understand (it).” •And I looked and (saw) in the midst of the sea (something) like a dense bulwark of cloud suspended<sup>h</sup> upon the sea; and the 8a) top of the cloud extended<sup>i</sup> to the height of heaven. •And I thought<sup>j</sup> that perhaps 17:3a 1:3
 9 the Blessed Ones were in the midst of it,<sup>k</sup> •(because) I heard a voice from the 1:3; 2:7
 midst of the cloud which said, “Father Zosimus.” Then (realizing my misconception)
 I praised and gave thanks to God, (to) him who makes mute natures to speak, to him who makes everything easy.

(1)1a,2 3 And then I prayed to<sup>a</sup> the LORD to deal with me as it pleases his will. •And 17:4a suddenly two luxuriant<sup>b</sup> and very stately trees, larger than (any) I had ever seen,<sup>c</sup> 3 appeared on the shore of the sea. •And then one of the trees bent itself down<sup>d</sup> and I securely grasped its branches. And it stretched out toward the height (of heaven) and lifted me up and carried me in its summit until the cloud was beneath (me).
 (4)4a) And also that other tree bent itself down toward it,<sup>e</sup> and the one from here curved its summit and held me out to the one which was from the other side. •And descending, it dropped me in the midst of it. And thus by God’s guidance<sup>f</sup> I 5 passed over the great ocean<sup>g</sup> and the cloud.<sup>h</sup> •And I rested in (that) place (for) three days, while the praise of God did not cease from my mouth. Then I arose 6 and traveled through the land that was in the midst of the sea; •it was pleasant
