 and beautiful and filled with luxuriant trees, which were bearing pleasant and fragrant fruits. It was like a large and vast island, without a mountain or hill,<sup>i</sup> adorned with flowers<sup>j</sup> and filled with many and delightful pleasures.

1 4 While observing the beauty<sup>a</sup> of that land, I approached a little (ways) and saw
 (2)2a) a certain naked man, who was seated. •And I was afraid because of his appearance,<sup>b</sup>
 3.4) but said, “Peace to you, my brother.” •Then he replied<sup>c</sup> and said, “Come in (5,6,7)8) peace; and joy be with you •for I know that you are a man of God, otherwise you would not have been allowed<sup>d</sup> to enter here.”

1,(2)2a 5 And again he asked me, “Have you come from the world of vanity?” •Then
 I said to him, “In truth I come from the world of vanity<sup>a</sup> in order to see (all of)

d. D: “four.”

e. Gk. loan word in Syr., Pwqynws; D: “the ocean, the great sea, which surrounds the earth.”

f. D: “I was greatly amazed.”

g. Or “and I was thinking.”

h. B D: “of white cloud”; no verb is represented in this version.

i. Lit. “was rising.”

j. D adds “in my heart.”

k. The pronoun “it,” which is third person feminine singular, refers back to “cloud” (feminine in Syr.), not “sea” (masculine in Syr.).

l. D adds “blessed are you, because you were deemed worthy to come to this place.”

3 a. Lit. “before”; B: “unto.”

b. Or “honorable, adorned.”

c. Lit. “the great(ness) of their like(ness) I had never seen.”

d. D adds “and carried me in its summit.” This variant looks like an error that slipped in from the selfsame phrase in the next verse.

e. D: “toward me.” Was the scribe of D attempting to improve the text?

f. Or “providence.”

g. Gk. loan word in Syr., Pwqynws.

h. D adds “and the dark fog”; it is evident that most of the variants in D, at least in the first three chs., are errors. Nowhere, not even in D, is it said that Zosimus has trouble with ‘arpellā, “the dark fog.”

i. Or “height.”

j. D: “lovely flowers.” See the Syr. of 7:3, “lovely trees.”

4 a. Or “grace.”

b. Usually hāzithā means “eye”; possibly the Syr. is corrupt, but probably the meaning “appearance” was once represented by this feminine emphatic active participle of hʒ as well as by hezwd, which usually denotes “appearance, form.”

c. Syr. idiom, lit. “he returned to me a word.”

d. There is here an intrusive dyn, Gk. loan word meaning “but.”

5 a. The Syr. is poor here; there is an intrusive gyr, a Gk. particle that means “for,” and ml (because) should be followed by dʿ plus imperfect, not the perfect.

3 you. However, tell me, why are you naked?" •But he said to me, "You are he (who is) naked, and you do not discern that your garment is corrupted, but my own garment is not corrupted. If you wish to see me, however, come, gaze<sup>b</sup> 4 toward the height of heaven." •And while gazing above I saw<sup>c</sup> his face<sup>d</sup> (to be) like the face<sup>e</sup> of an angel. And my eyes were dimmed from fear; and I fell upon the land.

1 6 And then he approached me and grasped me by my hands, and raised me up upon my feet. And he said to me, "Do not fear; for I am one of the Blessed 2 Ones, whom<sup>a</sup> you have earnestly desired to visit.<sup>b</sup> •But<sup>c</sup> come with me and I shall 3 take you to the holy Blessed Ones, my brothers. •And traveling with me, holding my hands, he asked me concerning the world and all that (is) in it. And then he brought me to the assembly of the Blessed Ones. And after watching them I fell 3a to the land and worshiped them. •It was the assembly of elect ones, (comprising 4 both) splendid<sup>d</sup> youths and honorable<sup>e</sup> holy ones. •And when these Blessed Ones 5 saw me,<sup>f</sup> they greatly marveled and asked<sup>g</sup> (each other) simultaneously,<sup>h</sup> •"My brothers, has the end of the world arrived and consequently a man was able to 6 come here?" •And all of them rose up and prayed and petitioned the LORD to inform them (of the reason) for my incursion among them.

6a And God heard their prayer; and I watched and behold two angels descended from heaven, stood before the assembly of the Blessed Ones, and said<sup>i</sup> to them, 6b "The<sup>j</sup> end has not yet arrived; do not be afraid by the coming of this man who is among you. He<sup>k</sup> will remain among you (for) seven days. •Write out for him and inform him (about) all of God's providence respecting you, and that he visits with you; however, that (man) shall (soon) go out<sup>l</sup> from you, and return to his place 7 rejoicing." •And after the angels said these things to them, they ascended to heaven.

1,1a 7 Then the Blessed Ones rejoiced, and received me in peace. •And the holy ones, 1b the Blessed Ones, delivered me to an attendant.<sup>a</sup> •And the holy ones said<sup>b</sup> to him, 2 "Keep<sup>c</sup> him, this our brother, with you (for) seven days." •And the holy attendant received me, and brought me to his tent, and I sat<sup>d</sup> with him under these fair 2a trees. •And in his presence I took delight<sup>e</sup> in the delight of his prayers. For that place is like the Paradise of God and these Blessed Ones are like Adam and Eve 2b,3 before they sinned. •They fast<sup>f</sup> from the ninth hour until the ninth; •and then they eat<sup>g</sup> what they need<sup>h</sup> from the fruits of these trees; for water which is sweet and delightful as honey flows<sup>i</sup> from the roots of the trees. And each one drinks what

b. B: "you must not gaze."

c. The Syr. here contains an otiose gyr (see n. a above).

d. Gk. πρὸς; see n. l to ch. 1.

e. Gk. πρὸς. Ch. 5 in Syr. gives me the impression that it was translated from a Gk. copy.

6 a. Another otiose dyn is found in the Syr.

b. Lit. "but which you have earnestly desired that you may come to them."

c. In the Syr. there are two particles to denote "but," the customary Syr. 'P and dyn.

d. Or "glorious, excellent, stately."

e. Or "handsome, beautiful."

f. Disregard Nau's text; A has h2'wwnny.

g. Lit. "they answered and they said."

h. Lit. "together"; B: "one to the other."

i. Lit. "and answered and said."

j. Another otiose gyr is present in the Syr.

k. A Syr. "but," 'P, and a dyn are both in the text.

l. The future aspect of the Syr. participle is intended here. In excellent Syr. I would expect this and the next verb to be imperfects, not participles.

7 a. Lit. "to one of them who was an attendant (or servant)."

b. Lit. "and answered and said."

c. Or "guard, watch." It would be incorrect to assume that the Blessed Ones are still suspicious of this man; the angels have spoken on his behalf (ch. 6), and the Blessed Ones call him "our brother" (7:1).

d. Lit. "I was sitting."

e. Lit. "I was taking delight (or refreshing myself)."

f. Lit. "they were fasting"; here the participle denotes customary or habitual action. There is an otiose gyr in the Syr.

g. Lit. "they were eating"; see n. f. D adds mst, "quantity."

h. Lit. "their need."

i. Or "springs up."

he needs.<sup>j</sup> And immediately they stop eating;<sup>k</sup> from the ninth hour (on)<sup>l</sup> they live<sup>m</sup> alone.

4 When these families<sup>n</sup> of these Blessed Ones heard what was (happening) on my account, and (when) they were told<sup>o</sup> by their brothers, "Behold, a certain man
5 has come from the world of vanity,"<sup>p</sup> •(then) they began to be disturbed and all of the fair families of the Blessed Ones came (persistently)<sup>q</sup> in order to see (the 6 phenomenon),<sup>r</sup> since amazement<sup>s</sup> possessed them because of me. •And they (incessantly) questioned me concerning this world, and I (repeatedly) told them.
7 From the weariness, duration, and pain of the manner<sup>t</sup> (of questioning), my soul<sup>u</sup> quivered and I was unable to speak, because neither by night nor by day did they leave me alone to rest. And I asked that attendant and said to him, "I ask you, O Blessed One, do me a kindness; if they come to you and question you concerning me, tell them; 'He is not here,' so that I may rest; (because)<sup>v</sup> my soul<sup>w</sup> is greatly
8 harassed." •And that holy attendant, when he heard this (request)<sup>x</sup> from me, cried out in a loud voice<sup>y</sup> saying, "O My Blessed Fathers, misfortune is counted to me on this day.<sup>z</sup> Behold, I am almost<sup>a2</sup> like Adam in Paradise; for he through the 999a said to me, 'Lie, and say to your companions that I am not here.'<sup>a2</sup> •Cast out this man from here so that he shall not implant (lies) in our place of captivity."<sup>a2</sup>

7:2a

10 And many noble elders<sup>b2</sup> and spiritual youths, who were like angels of heaven, assembled, formed<sup>b2</sup> an assembly,<sup>b2</sup> and said<sup>b2</sup> to me, "O man of sin, go, exit from among us. We do not know how you prepared yourself so that you were 10a able to come among us;<sup>b2</sup> •perhaps<sup>k2</sup> you wish to deceive us as the Evil One 11 deceived our father Adam." •However, I, miserable Zosimus, fell upon my face before them, and with mournful tears entreated them earnestly and said,

Have mercy upon me, O Blessed Ones;

And forgive me my offense, O Earthly Angels.<sup>b2</sup>

And after I entreated them earnestly and abundantly, with difficulty they had 11a mercy upon me. •And all of them became very silent, and after a short (time) they said to me,<sup>m2</sup> "Tell us, our brother, all of those things which (transpired) so 12 that you were able to visit us;<sup>n2</sup> be at rest and do not fear." •Then I told them the

j. Lit. "his need."

k. Lit. "they were eating and do not continue."

l. D adds "to the ninth."

m. Or "continue, travel."

n. Or "generations, tribes"; D adds "all of them."

o. An unnecessary gyr is in A B (but not in D).

p. D: "from a cursed land."

q. Adverbs are supplied in order to convey the continuous action of the Syr. participles.

r. Lit. "it, him."

s. Or "reverence."

t. D: "of the excessive talk."

u. Or "I myself." In this document I have translated npš as "soul," because of the contrast between "soul" and "body" in 11:2a.

v. I would have expected ml d.

w. Or "I myself."

x. Apparently šēlā (feminine) is presupposed.

y. D adds "to his companions."

z. Lit. "woe is counted to me on this day." Nau's text is inaccurate; read ywm for nwm.

a2. A has an unnecessary dyn, which is not in the printed text.

b2. D: "Behold, I am almost like the counsel of this one to Adam and Eve in Paradise, who through the counsel of the Evil One transgressed [restored later; this singular form is incorrect here] the commandment." D is corrupt.

c2. Or "petitioning."

d2. D: "he is not here."

e2. Or "exile." The appropriateness of this term is clarified by the concept in the Dead Sea Scrolls, in the OdesSol, and in a tradition about the abode of the lost tribes (cf. Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 147-49).

f2. Or "ancient ones"; no rank or office seems to be denoted.

g2. Lit. "began, came in."

h2. The Syr. is inlegant.

i2. Lit. "and they answered and said."

j2. The members of the assembly (or multitude) have forgotten the revelations by the angels (cf. ch. 6). Either the author is very clumsy, or we have evidence of two different traditions.

k2. The Syr. has an otiose gyr.

l2. The Syr. noun ʔr2, here translated "earthly," is elsewhere rendered as "land." The petition is composed in parallelismus membrorum, the norm of Semitic poetry, and is found (e.g.) in the Davidic Psalms, the 5ApocSyrPss, PssSol, and OdesSol. This poetic form is not present in the Gk. text parallel to 7:11.

m2. Lit. "And all of them were in a great silence, and after a little they answered and said to me."

n2. Lit. "all of them, those things, which on account of them your incursion happened here with us." The Syr. is verbose.

13 entire story, in what manner I requested God, "Show me your place." •Then the elders responded to me, "And now, our beloved, since God has answered you and you have seen us and our place, what do you wish?" •Then I said to them, (14)14a "I beg<sup>q2</sup> (you) from your blessedness<sup>p2</sup> to write for me the history of (how) your entrance here (was possible), so that your history may be a good introduction<sup>q2</sup> and a beautiful example for everyone who wishes to be guided by the fear of God."

1 8 And they took tablets of stone<sup>a</sup> and wrote on them as follows: Hear, all (of you) who are in the world of vanity, and perceive all the providence<sup>b</sup> which has occurred after this manner; •we are called the sons of Rechab, we are from you; 1a and behold we departed from your world to this place in which we (are) today.<sup>c</sup> Jer 35

2 For<sup>d</sup> in that time when Jeremiah,<sup>e</sup> the prophet, announced<sup>f</sup> and prophesied<sup>g</sup> the ravaging and devastation (of) Jerusalem because of the sins of the sons of Israel, then behold shortly (thereafter) the destroyer came<sup>h</sup> to ravage and slay them. Then Jeremiah,<sup>i</sup> the prophet, rent his garments and was clothed in sackcloth, and sprinkled dust upon his head. And he showed<sup>j</sup> to the common folk<sup>k</sup> the way of goodness; and urged<sup>l</sup> them to return to the LORD.

3 Then our father Jonadab, the son of Rechab, heard how the prophet charged, "Do not eat bread, and do not drink wine until the LORD hears your petition." And our father said to us, "We must not eat bread and we must not drink wine; Jer 35:6-11

4 and we must not put on a garment.<sup>m</sup> We must obey his word." •And we said to 5 him, "We will do all that you have charged us." •And then we removed the garments from our bodies, and did not eat bread, and did not drink wine, and

6 lamented with a great lamentation. And we offered prayers to God. •And he accepted our petitions. And he turned back from his fierce anger.<sup>n</sup>

1.2 9 And after King Josiah died, another<sup>a</sup> king ruled<sup>b</sup> after him. •And when he assembled together all the people of the Jews,<sup>c</sup> (some) men<sup>d</sup> spoke to him because of us: "There is here a family<sup>e</sup> which is from us but they do not act like us; and they are naked and neither eat (bread) nor drink (wine)<sup>f</sup>." Then the king dismissed (34) (them);<sup>g</sup> and he summoned us.<sup>h</sup> •And when we came in before him, the king

o2. Or "petition" as in 6:6 and elsewhere.

p2. Nau's text is incorrect; A B D have pwbtwtkwn.

q2. The words "entrance" and "introduction" are from the same root.

8 a. D adds "like (those) engraved by Moses upon the mountain." D is derivative.

b. D adds "which God provided for you."

c. B omits "today." C begins about here (and lit. translated): "There was once (lit. "in the time") a man from the sons of Israel whose name was Rechab. And this Rechab was an excellent man; and there was to him a son, and his name (was) Jonadab. And he, this Jonadab, followed in the footsteps of Rechab, his father. And with him in Jerusalem in that time there was Jeremiah, the prophet. And it was made known to him by God that a bitter sentence from diverse peoples would come over Jerusalem. And that they will lead it away captive (into) a severe captivity . . ."

d. B omits "for."

e. A: "Elijah." B D have "Jeremiah." A is obviously in error; cf. n. i below.

f. Here and below "announced" is a Gk. loan word (fr. kêrux) in Syr.

g. Lit. "was announcing and prophesying"; the participle indicates the continuous action of Jeremiah's prophesying.

h. The Syr. contains an otiose dyn.

i. All MSS (A B D) have "Jeremiah." Jer does not record that Jeremiah "rent his garments and was clothed in sackcloth, and sprinkled dust upon his head."

j. The verbs "sprinkled" and "demonstrated" are translated from Syr. participles.

k. A: "the sons of men."

l. Or "announced"; the same verb is used in 8:2.

m. The verb "to put on" and the noun "garment" are cognate in Syr.

n. D: "And he turned back his fierce anger from the city." Cf. Jer 4:8.

9 a. D adds "wicked."

b. Lit. "rose up"; but qwm also acquired the meaning "to reign."

c. D: "And when all the sons of Jerusalem and the Jews were assembled near him." This reading is derivative.

d. D omits and has "they spoke to him (concerning) our action."

e. Or "family, tribe."

f. The sons of Rechab obviously eat and drink. The Syr. is cryptic; "bread" and "wine" are assumed from 8:3-6.

g. D omits all the words from "There is here" to "dismissed (them)."

h. D: "all of us."

5 asked us, "Who are you and from which family<sup>i</sup> are you?" •Then we answered<sup>j</sup> him, "We are from this your people, and from the city Jerusalem; and we are 6 sons of Jonadab, the son of Rechab.<sup>k</sup> •And when Jeremiah, the prophet, in the (7)6a,8 days of the king who was before you, exhorted •the common folk<sup>l</sup> to repent, •our (9)10 father heard the word of the prophet and warned and charged us not to eat bread, 10a drink wine, be anxious again about garments, or dwell in houses.<sup>m</sup> •And God heard his prayer.<sup>n</sup> And he removed his anger from the city.<sup>o</sup> •And we loved him<sup>p</sup> with all our soul<sup>q</sup> and girded<sup>r</sup> ourselves with his kindness. And this<sup>s</sup> (his love) was pleasing in our eyes so that in this way we shall be leisurely<sup>t</sup> naked<sup>u</sup> all our days."<sup>v</sup>

Jer 35:6f

1,2 10 And the king said<sup>a</sup> to us, "You are doing well; •but (now) mix with your people,<sup>b</sup> and put on your garments,<sup>c</sup> and eat bread, and drink wine, and forsake 3 the LORD.<sup>d</sup> And behold you will be obedient sons of our kingdom." •But we answered<sup>e</sup> the king, "We shall never break our promises to God; and we shall 4 not cease<sup>f</sup> from (obeying) the covenant with him forever." •And the king raged against us and charged (that) all of us be imprisoned in prison;<sup>g</sup> and while we were imprisoned we kept vigil by prayer before God.

5 On the first night,<sup>h</sup> a brilliant<sup>i</sup> light shone upon us; and angels of God in glorious (6)5a form appeared to us. And they led all of us out from prison, •and placed us in 7 the air<sup>j</sup> that is above the land, •and brought us to this place (in) which you (now)
7a see (us), and allowed us to dwell in it.<sup>k</sup> •And our virtuous wives, who with us had surrendered themselves<sup>l</sup> to God, now abide separately among us<sup>m</sup> in this land, while remaining as we (do) in a fast and prayer and praise to God. And after the angels of God brought us and placed us in this place in the midst of the water of this great sea,<sup>n</sup> God commanded and the waters rose up from the deep abyss and 8 encircled this place. •And by the command of God a cloud became a bulwark<sup>o</sup> above the water and rose up as far as heaven.

i. Or "family, tribe."

j. Lit. "we returned"; cf. n. e to ch. 10. This expression, as in 10:3, is an abbreviated form of the idiom "to return a word" (cf. 4:4 and n. c).

k. The Syr. is correct; the Gk. incorrectly states that Rechab is the son of Jonadab.

l. Lit. "the sons of the people."

m. D adds "and we obeyed and kept the commandment of our father."

n. D adds "and received our petition."

o. D: "this city."

p. D: "the LORD."

q. Or "being"; contrast the use of npš (self, being, soul) in the latter chs., especially 11:2a and 14:2.

r. Or "were imprisoned"; but this meaning is inappropriate.

s. "This" (feminine) refers back to "love" (feminine).

t. The Syr. bañlîlê, the passive participle of "to cease work" or "be at leisure," usually means "void, obsolete." The reference is to the preceding vss., which state that the Blessed Ones are clothed with God's love.

u. B: "so that we shall dwell here"; D: "so that in this way we shall continue."

v. D: "all the days of our life."

10 a. Lit. "answered and said."

b. Lit. "the sons of your people."

c. Paronomasia: "garment yourself with your garments." D has the rest of this sentence after the next sentence.

d. Before "the LORD," A has an unnecessary dyn (which is not in Nau's text). D adds "your God" and "mix with us." The statement that the sons of Rechab should disobey their father's commandment is expanded by the exhortation to "forsake the LORD." This expansion is a significant addition to the biblical tradition; it implies that to reject the Rechabite customs is to forsake the LORD. This idea reveals how pro-Rechabite is this section; Jer 35:12-19 is expanded with a pro-Rechabite Midrash. The Gk. is appreciably different: "and glorify your LORD, and you shall be serving God and the king."

e. Syr. idiom; cf. n. j to ch. 9.

f. A preserves an ancient orthography; B, the usual verb form; D: "we shall never go aside from . . ."

g. Lit. "he charged and all of us were imprisoned"; there is no paronomasia in Syr. C: "in a guardhouse."

h. D adds "while keeping vigil." C summarizes, "and the LORD saw their faith and sent a Watcher and he led them out from the prison and brought them to the midst of the great sea, to the land which is Paradise."

i. Lit. "great."

j. Gk. loan word, aēr.

k. D adds "and our children."

l. Or "their beings," or "their souls."

m. Lit. "among the midst of us."

n. D adds "an island."

o. Or "wall, defense."

(1)1a 11 And according to his will God assembled us on this island and did not scatter
 2 us upon the whole land; •but God placed us on this holy land. And we are without 2a sins and evil and abominable thoughts. •And we are mortals; however, we are purified and spotless, and our souls<sup>a</sup> and bodies are cleansed from all defilement;
 and we depend upon the hope<sup>b</sup> of our LORD; and our sight<sup>c</sup> is fixed continuously (4)2b (and) unceasingly on the light of the future life. •And from prayer to God we are not silent<sup>d</sup> by night and by day, for this (offering of praise) is our occupation.<sup>e</sup>
 3 And God commanded and this land<sup>f</sup> brought forth for us pleasant and splendid 4 trees which are filled (with) lovely, marvelous, and abundant fruits. •And again<sup>g</sup> from the roots of the trees flows sweet and delightful water; and from these fruits and water we take delight and rest and are sustained.
 5 There is not among us vineyards, grain, husbandry,<sup>h</sup> wood, iron,<sup>i</sup> houses, 5a buildings, gold, or silver; •and neither stormy weather<sup>j</sup> nor rain is with us; neither snow nor ice. And the sun does not shine upon us, because the cloud, which 5b encircles us like a bulwark,<sup>k</sup> restrains it. •And the land in which we are is filled with a glorious<sup>l</sup> light so darkness and night do not enter it. And we possess a shining appearance<sup>m</sup> and dwell in light.
 6 And<sup>n</sup> there are among us men who take wives and once only<sup>o</sup> the man has 7 intercourse<sup>p</sup> with his wife. •And then they are set apart from each other and they remain<sup>q</sup> in purity for the remainder<sup>r</sup> of their lives. And the memory of the delight<sup>s</sup> does not arise in the mind<sup>t</sup> of any of us.<sup>u</sup> But they remain all their days as those 8 who grow up in virginity. •But the wife conceives and bears two children; one of them is for marriage<sup>v</sup> and the other<sup>w</sup> grows up in virginity. And after this manner we have been commanded<sup>x</sup> by God; and truly after this manner is our custom.<sup>y</sup>

OdesSol 16:1

1,1a 12 But<sup>a</sup> there is among us no one who measures the years.<sup>b</sup> •For the sake of those who (daily)<sup>c</sup> live<sup>d</sup> in<sup>e</sup> purity and holiness, the years of their life shall increase;
 but the years of sinners shall decrease.<sup>f</sup> And no one among us computes months
 (2)3 and years.<sup>g</sup> •But we are naked not as you suppose,<sup>h</sup> for<sup>i</sup> we are covered with a

11 a. Or "beings."

b. Or "expectation."

c. D: "the sight of our mind (or intellect)."

d. Or "do not cease."

e. Or "worship." D adds "our manner of life."

f. D: "For by the command (or decree) of God the land . . ."

g. The Syr. contains a dyn which is acceptable but not necessary.

h. Lit. "occupation (or work) of the land." But this is a Syr. idiom for "husbandry." D adds "(we are) not even (bound to) one craft (whether it be) . . ."

i. D: "brass."

j. Or "winter." B (due to the turning of a leaf) omits "rain is with us; neither snow nor . . ."

k. Or "wall, defense." B omits "like a bulwark."

l. D adds "pleasant."

m. Lit. "enlightened appearance"; B: "and we possess an enlightened mind"; D: "and no son of darkness (sic) enters among us. And we possess an enlightened mind. And we dwell in fair (or beautiful) light."

n. B omits the "and" and later adds a dyn.

o. B omits.

p. This verb, šwtp, means "to communicate," or "to administer" the Eucharist; but in the Ethpaul, the form here, it means not only "to communicate" but also "to have conjugal intercourse."

q. Or "are, live."

r. Lit. "until the end of."

s. Or "lust, desire, appetite"; B D: "of the copulation (or marriage)."

t. Lit. "heart," but also "mind."

u. A B; D: "of them."

v. Or "copulation"; see the variant in B D cited in n. s.

w. D: "and one."

x. Lit. "it was commanded to us."

y. Or "course."

12 a. D omits dyn.

b. Lit. "But a measurer of the years there is not among us." For "years" D has "life."

c. The adverb clarifies the continuing activity denoted by the Semitic participle.

d. Lit. "do business (or worship, cf. 12:9f.) and give."

e. D omits.

f. Or "be diminished"; but "decrease" is preferred because the preceding verb does not mean "be increased." The linguistic data scarcely support an argument that the holy increase their own years, but God decreases the years of sinners.

g. Lit. "And no computation of months and years is with us." For "and of years" D has "wšb and days"; wšb is an error for wšbw (or wšbw<sup>2</sup>), which means "and of weeks"; hence D: "and of weeks and days." After "among us" D adds "or of hours."

h. D: "But we are not naked as you suppose . . ."

i. D adds "we are decked (or arrayed) with a stole of glory." D then omits everything until after covering of glory; and we do not show each other the private parts of our bodies.

3a But we are covered with a stole<sup>j</sup> of glory (similar to that)<sup>k</sup> which clothed Adam 4 and Eve before they sinned.<sup>l</sup> •We<sup>m</sup> are nourished by the fruits of the trees at the ninth hour; not that the hours are distinguished among us,<sup>n</sup> but when the time for our<sup>o</sup> nourishment arrives, the fruits of the trees come<sup>p</sup> among us, although they 4a do not fall by our will.<sup>q</sup> •And thus we are nourished from them sufficient (to) our need. And afterward we drink from the exceedingly good, sweet, and delightful 5 water which comes out to us from the roots of the trees. •And then the water returns and is gathered together (in its original place).

6 We<sup>r</sup> have knowledge about you people<sup>s</sup> who inhabit the world, and how you are. We know the works of the righteous and the works of the wicked, because the angels of God come among us continually and inform us concerning your 7 deeds and the length<sup>t</sup> of your life. •We<sup>u</sup> pray for you,<sup>v</sup> petitioning God on your 7a account because we are also from your (race) and from the sons of Adam. •And God set us apart and chose us according to his will; and he brought (and) placed 8 us in this place in which we are (now). •And the angels of God dwell with us and they announce to us those things which (happen) among you; and we rejoice 9 at the good deeds which the upright who are among you do. •And we grieve over the sinners and pagans<sup>w</sup> who are in the world; and petition God constantly<sup>x</sup> to restrain<sup>y</sup> his<sup>z</sup> anger concerning you.<sup>a2</sup>

9a To us<sup>b2</sup> the holy angels<sup>c2</sup> of God announce<sup>d2</sup> (both) the incarnation of the Word of God, who (is) from the holy virgin, the mother of God,<sup>e2</sup> and all those things which (he) provides and perfects and endures<sup>f2</sup> for the sake of the salvation of 9b mortals. •And then we worship and acknowledge and glorify (him)<sup>g2</sup> for the sake 9c of the glory<sup>h2</sup> of his incarnate life.<sup>i2</sup> •Then we ask for your love, O people, that 9d you will not be unfaithful<sup>j2</sup> when you chance to read this history. •Do not surrender to the cruel and merciless ruler,<sup>k2</sup> but be shrouded<sup>l2</sup> by the secrets which were 9e entrusted to you. •And let this history be for you the salvation of your lives.
 9f Have regard to us in your hidden thoughts,<sup>m2</sup> be imitators of our way of life, the next "glory" in vs. 3a. This reading seems to be an error (parablepsis facilitated by homoeoteleuton). See D's reading given below in n. m.

j. Gk. loan word, 'st<sup>l</sup>P'.

k. D has 'yk, "like."

l. D adds: "and transgressed the commandment. And we do not show each other the private parts of the body as you think (or as it is shown to you)."

m. The Syr. contains an unnecessary dyn.

n. A omits "but when the time for our nourishment arrives, the fruits of the trees come among us." The reading given above is from B with nn. to variants in D. A is defective; the error is caused by a scribe skipping from one lwtn, "among us," to the next lwtn, "among us." Perhaps the scribe of A committed this error (homoeoteleuton) since the first lwtn completed the line and his eye wandered back to the right margin of his own manuscript.

o. D omits.

p. D: "fall off."

q. For "although they do not fall by our will," D has "We do not put them in a sack, but in their season they yield the need." D's mhtynn seems to be a Pe'al masculine plural participle with a first-person plural suffix of an unattested verb. The verb derives from hr', "a sack, bag." The verb also appears in the Hymn of the Pearl 12.

r. The Syr. contains a dyn which is unnecessary but acceptable.

s. Lit. "about you sons of men."

t. Lit. "numbers."

u. The Syr. contains a dyn.

v. A Syr. idiom; lit. "your faces."

w. Or "heathen, unbelievers."

x. Or "continually."

y. Lit. "be restrained from." B D: "refrain from."

z. D omits.

a2. D adds: "and determine for you reconciliation (or peace) until the end of the age."

b2. The Syr. contains a dyn. The remaining vss. of ch. 12 (i.e. 9a-9g) are not preserved in Gk. These additional vss. are clearly Christian and an expansion of the essentially Jewish account. They are composed in a Syr. style superior to that of the preceding vss.

c2. B: "But the holy angel of God announces to us . . ."

d2. D: "And knowing you are virtuous (or good, beautiful) the holy angels announce to us . . ."

e2. B D add "Mary." Nau's printed text is misleading in these vss.

f2. D adds "from those who hate."

g2. B has lh, "him."

h2. B omits.

i2. Lit. "The glory of his guidance (or providence) when in the flesh." D: "Then we worship and acknowledge all the glory of his guidance when in the flesh."

j2. Or "unchristian, unbelieving."

k2. D: "judge."

l2. Lit. "hemmed in."

m2. Lit. "minds."

pursue peace,<sup>n2</sup> cherish the love (that is) unchangeable,<sup>n2</sup> and love purity and holiness. •And you will be made perfect in all good things<sup>p2</sup> and inherit the kingdom of God.

1 13 We<sup>a</sup> perceive (that)<sup>b</sup> the holy fast of forty (days)<sup>c</sup> of our LORD (has begun
2 when) the fruits of the trees are withheld and cease (developing). •And on each of the days of the holy fast God causes to rain down upon us from heaven manna (similar to) that which he gave to our fathers when he led them out of Egypt.
3 We learn that the holy Passover will arrive when these trees among us flourish
4 and produce<sup>d</sup> magnificently sweet and abundant<sup>e</sup> fruits. •Then we know that the 5 Passover of our LORD (has arrived). •But on the feast of our LORD's resurrection<sup>f</sup>
5a from the grave<sup>g</sup> we watch<sup>h</sup> (for) three days and three nights. •Then we are filled with gladness and rejoicing,<sup>i</sup> perceiving that the holy feast of the resurrection of 5b our LORD (has arrived). •And with a spiritual cheerfulness we rejoice while celebrating with the holy angels; likewise also we exult and sing praises during 5c all of the noble<sup>j</sup> and saving feasts of the providence<sup>k</sup> of our LORD. •And all the assembly which (are) above us and all the heavenly hosts<sup>l</sup> rejoice (with us)<sup>m</sup> in these feasts.<sup>n</sup>

(1)1a 14 And again we announce to you, O brothers, that among us there is no sickness, pain, fatigue to our bodies, mutilation, weariness, or temptations;<sup>a</sup> not even Satan's power can touch us,<sup>b</sup> for there is not among us rage, jealousy, evil desire,<sup>c</sup> or hateful thoughts. But (we experience only) quietness<sup>d</sup> and gladness; and (exhibit) 2 love and affection toward God and each other.<sup>e</sup> •And the soul<sup>f</sup> of each of us is not wearied or sorrowful or wishes to stay behind when the angels of God come to guide it from the body. But we are glad and rejoice and the holy angels (rejoice) with us when they are sent out after the soul of each of us.<sup>g</sup> 3 As the bride<sup>h</sup> rejoices over her betrothed bridegroom, so the soul<sup>i</sup> rejoices at the good news<sup>j</sup> of the holy angels. For they (the angels) say to it nothing except 4 this alone: "O pure soul,<sup>k</sup> your LORD is calling you to come to him." •Then the soul<sup>l</sup> with great rejoicing leaves the body to meet the angel.<sup>m</sup> And seeing that pure soul,<sup>n</sup> which has (just) left the body, all the holy angels unfold (for it)<sup>o</sup> their

n2. Lit. "run after peace again."

o2. A adds "and do not be greatly disturbed."

A seems less reliable in these vss.

p2. A: "in all bountifully good things."

13 a. A contains an initial twb and an otiose dyn.

b. Lit. "We perceive it from this . . ."

c. Or "Lent."

d. Or "bud, germinate."

e. Lit. "trees, sweet (and) of magnificence (praise, glory), and of abundance."

f. "The feast of the resurrection" is the Syr. expression for Easter. The Syr. in this section is excellent. D: "But on the great and glorious feast of his resurrection."

g. Or "Sheol."

h. Or "keep vigil."

i. D adds "(that) is ineffable to our souls and bodies." D here, as so often elsewhere, is expanded.

j. Lit. "lordly."

k. The emphasis is upon the effects of Jesus' earthly life; cf. n. i2 in 12:9b ("his providence when in the flesh").

l. Or "heavenly powers."

m. A omits; B D have "with us."

n. B: "in our feasts." D: "in the splendid feasts of the Messiah, God."

14 a. Or "trials."

b. Or "approach among us."

c. Or "lust." B omits "evil." This verse is much shorter in Gk.

d. Or "serenity."

e. After 14:1a there are numerous variants in D: "weariness or temptation of tempting (or the Tempter) and not even Satan, and the power of the Tempter shall approach us or enter here among us; and there is not among us rage, or the murderer's jealousy (lit. jealousy the murderer), or hateful thoughts, or evil desire, or one of wars. But (we experience only) quietness and gladness, and continual calm; and (exhibit) serene love and complete affection toward God and each other." It appears that a scribe has expanded and clarified the base text.

f. Or "being"; this section of the document clearly reflects the concept that mankind is bifurcated into "soul" and "body."

g. Or "beings."

h. B: "the pure bride."

i. Or "being."

j. B adds "which is pure which is received from . . ."

k. Or "being."

l. Or "being."

m. Lit. "to the meeting of the angel." Contrast this account with the story about Abraham's refusal to let God's messenger have his soul as described in TAB 15-20.

n. Or "being."

o. D adds "for it."

5 shining stoles.<sup>p</sup> • And they receive it with<sup>q</sup> joy, saying, “Blessed are you, O pure soul,<sup>r</sup> and blest, for you have thoroughly done the will of God, your LORD.”
5a And<sup>s</sup> this (is how) he brings his providence to each one of us:

(1-3)4 15 (The soul)<sup>a</sup> discerns and knows the day of its departure<sup>b</sup> through a revelation
4a from holy angels.<sup>c</sup> • And we live an extremely long time;<sup>d</sup> and the extent<sup>e</sup> of our 4b life (is) not brief and short as with you. • When the holy angels<sup>f</sup> are sent among us,<sup>g</sup> in this beautiful order<sup>h</sup> (of which) we have informed you, they visit among (5)4c us. • However, first they come to our elders; and when the blessed elders see the angels who have come, they immediately with joy entreat<sup>i</sup> (so that) all the blessed 6 brothers assemble. • And when all the people have assembled, immediately with<sup>j</sup> 7 praise we come with the angels to the place in which bodies are buried. • And because we have nothing to use for digging,<sup>k</sup> the angels themselves make a 7a sepulchre for the bodies. • And again when all of these (souls)<sup>l</sup> have completed (their time),<sup>m</sup> then they are separated from our assembly; and (each) departs<sup>n</sup> with 8 great joy. • And all of us with exultation come near to it<sup>o</sup> and offer it<sup>p</sup> peace in the kiss of the LORD while it is being conducted and led (to the grave) by the holy 9 angels. • And then the soul<sup>q</sup> of our blessed brother leaves the body in which it had 9a settled; • and with joy far removed from mourning it approaches and comes to the 10 holy angels<sup>r</sup> and ascends up to God with<sup>s</sup> joy. • But we with one accord see the soul<sup>t</sup> when it<sup>u</sup> leaves the body clearly and plainly; the appearance of the soul<sup>v</sup> when it leaves the body is the likeness of a glorious light, and formed and imprinted in the likeness and type<sup>w</sup> of the body,<sup>x</sup> and it is spiritually flying.

1 16 And while we are looking at that holy and spotless soul,<sup>a</sup> the holy angels carry it away and salute it,<sup>b</sup> and thus it ascends and goes up from us in glory.
And after it ascends with them and passes into the region<sup>c</sup> of the power of the 1a highest heavens, then other orders<sup>d</sup> (of angels) receive it with joy. • And the archangels salute it;<sup>e</sup> and afterward they stretch out to it (their hands and lead it) to the thrones and dominions<sup>f</sup> that (are) above them. And thus it goes up and 1b ascends until it enters (before) and worships the LORD.<sup>g</sup> • And when the highest

p. Gk. loan word, ʒstlʔ; see n. j to ch. 12.

q. The Syr. contains an unnecessary dyn.

r. Or “being.”

s. Dyn.

15 a. Apparently this subject is assumed; if so the two masculine participles should be changed to feminine, since npʒ, “soul,” is feminine. The Gk. contains three other vss. here.

b. B adds “from the body.”

c. Here D adds 13 ll.; they expand upon the idea of departing from the body and seem secondary. This sentence, 15:4, is found in Gk. at the beginning of ch. 14.

d. Lit. “extremely large duration.” B D: “extremely larger duration of time.”

e. Lit. “measuring, age.”

f. B D add “of God.”

g. B adds “after the soul of one of us”; D: “and descend after our souls.”

h. Gk. loan word, tksʔ.

i. Or “command.”

j. B D add “with joy.”

k. Syr. idiom; lit. “And because we, there is nothing among us, to complete with it what is needed for digging.”

l. Here the Syr. correctly has the feminine forms for the pronouns.

m. Or “have died.”

n. The verbs and particles are masculine; they should be feminine, since npʒ, “soul,” is the subject. Perhaps in this and the following ll. the scribe has become confused and is thinking about pgrʔ, “the body,” which is masculine.

o. A dot should be placed over the h to denote that it is a feminine pronoun. The dot is not in A B D.

p. See the preceding n.

q. Or “being.”

r. B D add “of God.”

s. D adds “great.”

t. Or “being.”

u. The h correctly has a dot over it.

v. Or “being.”

w. Gk. loan word, tʒpʒʔ.

x. D adds (in line with the Gk.): “subtracting (only that which is) necessary (to denote) male and female.”

16 a. Or “being.”

b. Lit. “And while we are looking at it the holy angels carry away that holy and spotless soul and offer it peace.”

c. Lit. “the beginning, origin.”

d. Gk. loan word, rʒgmʔ. Compare the idea in these vss. with the concept of the ascending quality of the angels as one passes from the lowest to the highest heaven, as recorded in Ascensis.

e. Lit. “offer it peace.”

f. D adds “and principalities.”

g. B D: “God, its LORD.”

order<sup>b</sup> of cherubim and seraphim receive it, they rise to the gate of the holy 2 Trinity. •Then the Son of God receives that soul<sup>l</sup> from their hands and brings it
 (3,4)5 (forward) so that it may worship his father. •And when the soul<sup>j</sup> falls down upon its<sup>k</sup> face to worship before God, then the revelation<sup>l</sup> is revealed to us, (and) all of 6 us fall upon the land and worship the LORD with the soul.<sup>m</sup> •And when God makes (7)7a that soul<sup>n</sup> rise from its worship, we also rise to our feet.<sup>o</sup> •And then God<sup>p</sup> sends that soul<sup>q</sup> to a stately<sup>r</sup> mansion<sup>s</sup> (to await) the day of resurrection<sup>t</sup> for (the rest of 7b our) community.<sup>u</sup> •Then we also go away from the body of that soul<sup>v</sup> of our brother to our (own) assembly<sup>w</sup> and complete the service through praises to<sup>x</sup> the 8 Holy Spirit.<sup>y</sup> •And so we have engraved<sup>z</sup> (upon) these tablets and sent (them) to you through the hands of our brother Zosimus.<sup>a2</sup> (3)8a And again God, our Creator, has given us this (privilege): we hear the voices<sup>b2</sup> of the spirits<sup>c2</sup> and the praises<sup>d2</sup> of the angels,<sup>d2</sup> the hosts, and the heavenly orders,<sup>e2</sup>
 (3)8b who continually praise<sup>f2</sup> God. •When they praise<sup>g2</sup> (God),<sup>h2</sup> so also we in our land<sup>i2</sup> praise<sup>j2</sup> (him).
 8c And the angels receive and transmit our prayers and our praises (by) entering and worshiping in love before that divine and mystic<sup>k2</sup> throne, (which) knows 8d secrets.<sup>l2</sup> •And thus<sup>m2</sup> by the aid of the angels<sup>n2</sup> and the heavenly hosts<sup>o2</sup> our 8e prayers<sup>p2</sup> pass on and find entrance<sup>q2</sup> before God. •This is all of our manner<sup>r2</sup> (of life).<sup>s2</sup> And we are truly called the Blessed Ones, because we experience the 8f benevolence of God.<sup>t2</sup> •And we write and send (these tablets) to you, O people who dwell in that world of vanity,<sup>u2</sup> through the hands of this our brother Zosimus,<sup>v2</sup> 8g who entered among us for your sake through the mercies (of God)<sup>w2</sup> and remained with us (for) seven days. •And accompanying him we traveled with him until (we came) to the shores of the great ocean.<sup>x2</sup>

h. Lit. "highest orders." Gk. loan word, ῥῆμα.
 i. Or "being."
 j. Or "being."
 k. In this ch. the h correctly has a dot over it.
 l. D: "the heavenly revelation."
 m. Or "being."
 n. Or "being."
 o. D adds "upon the land."
 p. D: "The God of gods."
 q. Or "being."
 r. Lit. "comely, fair."
 s. Or "lodging, inn, abode." The same noun is used in Jn 14:2, 23. Cf. also 2En 61:2. B D add "to journey to it."
 t. B: "the last day"; D: "the day of general rising up (or resurrection)."
 u. A has the dot in the wrong place; it should denote a d, not an r. D omits this word. The description of the soul's ascent after death is by no means gnostic; yet it is unique in the history of Jewish and Jewish-Christian literature. The description of the successive stages or orders of angels and the emphasis upon singing may have been influenced by the traditions now preserved in Ascens.
 v. Or "being."
 w. D: "to the congregations (or churches) and to the assemblies and to our (own) positions (or offices) (which are) holy and noble."
 x. Lit. "of."
 y. B D add "that is pure and holy to the LORD. This is our providence (guidance), (we), the Blessed Ones, in truth."
 z. What has been engraved is not specified, but it is obviously the account just written.
 a2. Nau overlooked the phrase "through the hands of our brother Zosimus"; it is in A but not in B D. The variants in these vss. are significant.
 b2. Lit. "voice"; none of the Syr. MSS have the dots that denote the plural.

c2. B: "of the angels"; D: "of the angels and of the spirits."
 d2. B: "of the spirits"; D omits "and the praises" and has "with their holy proclamations and their praises."
 e2. Gk. loan word ῥῆμα.
 f2. Or "glorify."
 g2. Or "glorify."
 h2. A D do not contain the noun "God," but B has it.
 i2. D adds "below."
 j2. Or "glorify."
 k2. Or "hidden, secret." For "divine," D has "of God."
 l2. D adds "and revelations (or things public)."
 m2. The Syr. has an otiose dyn.
 n2. D omits "by the aid of the angels" and has "in the midst of the orders."
 o2. Or "heavenly powers."
 p2. D: "our spiritual prayers."
 q2. D: "are received (or accepted)." In Jewish apocalyptic, the emphasis is placed upon the fact that God hears prayers.
 r2. Or "providence, rule, stewardship."
 s2. D adds "and our mystic (or hidden, secret) history."
 t2. B D omit "because we experience the benevolence of God."
 u2. D: "in the world of vanity and in (or on) the land of thorns."
 v2. D: "through the hands of our beloved brother Zosimus, the ascetic (or hermit)."
 w2. B: "the mercies of God"; D: "the mercies and grace (or goodness) of God."
 x2. Gk. loan word, ῥῆμα. B: "Then they accompanied me and journeyed (with me) until the shore of the ocean." D: "Then they accompanied me and they journeyed with me (correcting 'myd to 'my) until the shore of the sea."

- (1)1a 17 And<sup>a</sup> then all of us together knelt down<sup>b</sup> upon the shores of the sea and prayed (2,3)3a and petitioned God to be for our brother Zosimus a guide and a refuge. •And then immediately in a moment a white cloud appeared above the sea and its top 2:8
 3b extended to the highest summit. •And we praised God, (confessing) that it is easy for him to do everything.
- 4(4a) Then suddenly two trees appeared in the middle of the sea and by a command 3:2
 4b of God one of these trees bent down toward me,<sup>c</sup> Zosimus. •And it held me securely in its branches and stretched (itself) out to the height of heaven; and carried me and lifted me gently unto the summit and the top of that white cloud.
- (5)5a And that second<sup>d</sup> tree bent down toward me, then that (first) one now bent its head;<sup>e</sup> and that (second) tree also bent down toward me, (lifted me up), and 5b brought me to dry land.<sup>f</sup> •And again I crossed the ocean,<sup>g</sup> the great sea, and that 5c cloud. •And I gave thanks unto and praised the merciful God, who fulfills the desires<sup>h</sup> of those who fear him, and who hears their petition and saves them.
- (1,2)3,4 18 And suddenly that animal arrived and carried me; •(and) it brought me to the 2:3
 cave while I praised and exalted God, who had answered me and heard my petition<sup>a</sup> and fulfilled my desire. To him (be) praise, amen, from heavenly and earthly (beings) for all time, amen.<sup>b</sup>

(The Gk. contains chs. 19–23, which appear to be later expansions by a Christian.)<sup>c</sup>

17 a. B D vary so much from A in chs. 17 and 18 that for the purposes of this translation it would be unsuitable to note the variants. Only the ending in each will be included.

- b. Lit. "put a blessing."
- c. B D switched to the first person in 16:8g; A now shifts to the first person.
- d. Lit. "other."
- e. Or "And that one bent its head from here."
- f. The Syr. is inelegant.
- g. Gk. loan word, <sup>3</sup>wgynws.
- h. Or "who does the will."

18 a. Lit. "and heard the voice of my petition."

b. A ends as follows: "This history ends." After 18:4, B ends as follows: "while I praised and exalted God, who had answered me and heard the voice of my petition. That to him (be) praise from all, and for all and because of all (his providence); and everyone who believes in this history of these Blessed Ones, the sons of Jonadab, the son of Rechab, upon him shall be the mercies of God through the prayers of the blessed Mother, Theotokos (or Deipara or Mother of God), Mary, and of all the holy ones, now and in all time, and forever, amen. The history of the sons of Rechab ends." After 18:4, D ends as follows: "and I praised and exalted God, who had answered me and heard my voice, my petition. That to him (be) praise from all, and for all and because of all (his providence); now and in all time, and forever, amen. The history of the Blessed Ones, the sons of Rechab. But may their prayer be for us a bulwark." C ends as follows: "Then an angel of the LORD came and took the holy Zosimus and brought him to the district (or country) of Palestine and placed him in an inhabited monastery. He was in it so that by his prayers and those of the Blessed Ones the wretched one who writes could make supplication and receive mercy. Amen and amen (no rubrics here in C)."

c. Ch. 19 contains an account of how Zosimus, "blessed one of Christ," is warned that he is about to be tempted by "Satan." Chs. 20 and 21 describe "the Devil's" approach to Zosimus, torment by him, and his final defeat by Zosimus' prayer. Ch. 22 recounts how Zosimus teaches the fathers in the desert and leaves them "this testament." Ch. 23 introduces Cryseos, a desert hermit, who publicizes Zosimus' testament; Zosimus' body is buried and his soul shines "seven times brighter than the sun."

ELDAD AND MODAD

(Prior to the Second Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY E. G. MARTIN

Extant Text: "The LORD is near to those who turn (to him)," as it is written in the (book of) Eldad and Modad, who prophesied in the desert to the people.

(Hermas, Vision, 2.3.4)

Introduction

According to Numbers 11:26–29 Eldad and Modad (Medad) were the two prophets among the elders in the wilderness who continued to prophesy within the camp. Although the Old Testament does not report the contents of their prophecy, later generations "supplied" the missing portions. A pseudepigraphon, now lost, contained these lost ecstatic prophecies. According to rabbinic sources, the contents of the Book of Eldad and Modad apparently contained references to Gog and Magog, the end of time, and the coming of a royal Messiah. The one specific quotation from the book supplies no information on the contents of the prophecy.

Texts

The only quotation occurs in the Visions of the Shepherd of Hermas, 2.3.4. The citation is in Greek, and there are Latin, Ethiopic, and Coptic versions derived from the Greek. For critical editions, see the following:

Funk, F. X. Patres Apostolici (Tübingen, 1901?) vol. 1, p. 429.

Whittaker, M. Die Apostolischen Väter. I: Der Hirt des Hermas (GCS 48; Berlin, 1956) p. 7.

Original language, date, and provenance

With only four words extant, it is not possible to determine the original language. The book was written before the Shepherd of Hermas, which dates from the second century A.D., but again, with the brevity of the quotation, it is not possible to determine a more specific date. The provenance could be any Jewish, Christian, or Jewish-Christian area.

Historical importance

For a document which exists in the form of a single four-word quotation in a single Church Father, a considerable amount of historical importance has been attached to Eldad and Modad by scholars from J. A. Fabricius<sup>1</sup> to the present. Because of one citation and five references in ancient canonical lists (see below), Eldad and Modad has aroused considerable interest and speculation.

The book was known in the early Church from the apostolic period, and apparently was widespread as late as the eighth or ninth century.<sup>2</sup> Not only does the Shepherd of Hermas quote Eldad and Modad, but Epiphanius<sup>3</sup> and Pseudo-Jerome<sup>4</sup> also make reference, respectively, to the numbering of the two prophets among the seventy-two prophets in the wilderness, and to the two prophets as being half brothers of Moses. This, however, points to the difficult problem with the lost pseudepigraphon: Does each reference to Eldad and Modad in a patristic or rabbinic source necessarily refer to the document, or is the information concerning the two prophets based upon other traditions? The logical answer would be that Eldad and Modad were popular figures to whom a book of prophecy was assigned, but additional details concerning the prophets were also known.

<sup>1</sup> J. A. Fabricius, Codex Pseudepigraphus Veteris Testamenti (Hamburg, 1722) vol. 1, pp. 801–4.

Whatever might have been known concerning the two prophets, only one source, the Targum of Pseudo-Jonathan on Numbers 11:26, lists the possible contents of their prophecy. The two prophets predicted the assault upon Jerusalem, the end of days which would be brought about by a war involving Gog and Magog, and the defeat of evil at the hands of a royal Messiah. This messianic prophecy in the Targum contains a quotation of Eldad and Modad, "The LORD (q̄r̄is) is near to those in distress," which is very similar to the quotation from Eldad and Modad in Hermas. This similarity suggests that the source of the Targum reference and the Hermas reference is the same Book of Eldad and Modad, and that the contents of that book are described in the Targum. Additional details concerning the prophecies or persons of Eldad and Modad in rabbinic writings<sup>5</sup> also may have been based upon the lost pseudepigraphon.

Some scholars have attempted to identify the lost pseudepigraphon of Eldad and Modad either with anonymous citations in patristic writings or with recently translated documents. J. B. Lightfoot<sup>6</sup> suggested that references in 1 Clement 23:3f. and 2 Clement 2:2-4 refer to Eldad and Modad. These passages are sufficiently obscure that they have been applied also to the Testament of Moses and the Apocryphon of Ezekiel; hence the most prudent course is to leave these verses anonymous.<sup>7</sup> M. R. James<sup>8</sup> attempted to show the relationship of Eldad and Modad to the legend of the lost tribes as displayed in the History of the Rechabites, the Acts of Matthew, the Contendings of the Apostles, and two poems by Commodian. He bases this conclusion upon the similarity of the names "Eldad" and the ninth-century-A.D. traveler "Eldad ha-Dani." The similarities are insufficient to warrant additional study. Similarly, James's suggestion<sup>9</sup> that a fragment of Eldad and Modad may have been quoted in the Vision of Kenaz is unlikely; Denis<sup>10</sup> suggests that this fragment probably came from Pseudo-Philo.

The Book of Eldad and Modad continued to be popular into the early Middle Ages. It occupies the sixth place in the Addition to the List of Sixty Books. It is mentioned seventh in the Armenian List of Michithar, in the List of Pseudo-Athanasius, and in the Stichometry of Nicephorus, who also notes that it contains four hundred stichoi (ll.).<sup>11</sup>

Theological importance

Given the brevity of the quotation in Hermas, little weight should be given to its theological importance, other than noting the tendency of producing pseudepigrapha which "explain" or "supply" material not found in the Old Testament. The widespread nature of the references to Eldad and Modad suggests that the book may have been well known in antiquity.

<sup>2</sup> The date of the most recent canonical list, the Stichometry of Nicephorus, is A.D. 800.

<sup>3</sup> Epiphanius, De Fide 4.5 (ed. K. Holl, GCS 37; Leipzig, 1922), pp. 500, 509.

<sup>4</sup> Jerome, Quaestiones Hebraicae in Librum I Paralipomenon 4.17; PL, 23, col. 1437. (This was actually falsely attributed to Jerome.)

<sup>5</sup> See esp. b.Sanh 17a; NumR 15:19; cf. b.Sanh 96b-97a, 98a; and SifNum 96.

<sup>6</sup> J. B. Lightfoot in Funk, Patres Apostolici (Tübingen, 1901<sup>2</sup>) vol. 1, p. 131.

<sup>7</sup> Cf. A.-M. Denis, Introduction, p. 144.

<sup>8</sup> M. R. James, Apocrypha Anecdota (T&S 2.3; Cambridge, England, 1893) p. 94.

<sup>9</sup> Ibid., p. 175.

<sup>10</sup> Denis, Introduction, p. 145.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid., p. 142. (Many of the ancient canon lists are discussed in and quoted by T. Zahn, Geschichte des Neutestamentlichen Kanons [Erlangen, 1890]. For recent research on the Armenian lists, see M. E. Stone, "Armenian Canon Lists II—the Stichometry of Anania of Shirak," HTR 68 [1975] 253-60.)

Relation to canonical books

The figures of Eldad and Modad were insignificant tribal prophets who are mentioned only once in the Old Testament (Num 11:26–29). The prophecy as given in the Targum bears little similarity to that of the account in Numbers. There is no apparent relationship between the references in Hermas and Numbers. Eldad and Modad are not mentioned in the New Testament.

Relation to apocryphal books

The Book of Eldad and Modad is not quoted or mentioned in any of the non-canonical books. Apparently, the two prophets are also not mentioned in any of the documents of the Apocrypha or the Pseudepigrapha. It has been suggested, most recently by Denis,<sup>12</sup> that the name "Eldad" and the "Land of Elda" in Jubilees 3:32 are related, but this seems unlikely. Finally, there is the suggestion by James (mentioned above), who relates this document to the legend of the lost tribes and the History of the Rechabites, because of the relationship between the names of Eldad and the ninth-century traveler Eldad ha-Dani; but the connection is insignificant.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 94f.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 142–45.

Aberbach, M. "Eldad and Modad," EncyJud, vol. 6, cols. 575f.

Chr stou, P. K. "Eldad and Modad," Th E, vol. 5, cols. 551f. (in Gk.)

Denis, A.-M. Fragmenta Pseudepigraphorum Graeca. PVTG 3; Leiden, 1970; p. 68.

Fabricius, J. A. Codex Pseudepigraphus Veteris Testamenti. Hamburg, 1722; vol. 1, pp. 801–4.

James, M. R. Apocrypha Anecdota. T&S 2.3; Cambridge, 1893; p. 94.

———. Lost Apocrypha of the Old Testament. London, 1920; pp. 38–40.

Wallis, G. "Eldad und Modad," BHH; vol. 1, col. 390.

White, W., Jr. "Eldad and Modad, Book of," ZPEB; vol. 2, p. 266.

<sup>12</sup> Denis, Introduction, p. 143.

HISTORY OF JOSEPH

(Prior to the Fourth Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY G. T. ZERVOS

As nearly as can be determined from the meager textual material under consideration, the document which H. J. M. Milne labeled the "History of Joseph"<sup>1</sup> seems to be a Jewish midrashic expansion of a portion of the Book of Genesis.<sup>2</sup> By a comparison of the surviving fragments of our document with the corresponding biblical text, we may conclude that the History of Joseph dealt with at least the following matters: the establishment of Joseph by Pharaoh over Egypt; the gathering of grain before the famine; the coming of the famine and subsequent dispensation of the grain; the appearance of Joseph's ten brothers before him to buy grain; his recognition of them and emotional turning away; his accusing them of espionage; his inquiry about their family; his brothers' fear, prayer to God, and attempt to clear themselves; Joseph's statement about testing their story; the brothers' discussion in jail and Reuben's statement that their troubles stem from their mistreatment of Joseph; the return of nine brothers to Canaan; Jacob's surprise at seeing that one of them was missing and his inquiry about Simon; the brothers' explanation of the events which had transpired in Egypt; and Jacob's lamentation about losing Simon now as he had lost Joseph before.

Texts

The History of Joseph is partially extant on several Greek papyrus fragments which are preserved in the British Museum; the Bodleian Library, at Oxford; and the Louvre. Descriptions and complete transcriptions of the two fragments belonging to the British Museum have been published in Milne's Catalogue of the Literary Papyri in the British Museum (pp. 187-90) under numbers 226 and 227 (hereafter referred to as A and B, respectively). Milne's transcription has been reproduced in A.-M. Denis's Fragmenta Pseudepigraphorum Quae Supersunt Graeca (PVTG 3; Leiden, 1970; pp. 235f.). Facsimiles of A verso and B recto may be found in F. G. Kenyon's Greek Papyri in the British Museum (London, 1893; vol. 1, pp. 225, 227, under numbers 113 [13a] and 113 [12b], respectively). These two fragments have been dated by Milne to the sixth or seventh century.

Milne correctly observes that there are two different hands present in A and B, but he gives the mistaken impression that each of these fragments is written completely in only one of the two hands. This is, in fact, the case with A, but B contains both of the scripts. The first thirteen lines of B verso are written in the large, upright uncial hand which is also that present in A. However, the last four lines of B verso and all of B recto are written in the smaller, sloping uncial script which is easily distinguishable from the hand of A and B verso 1–13. Thus, we seem to have in B verso an interesting example of a page in which one scribe took over the work of copying a document from another.

<sup>1</sup> H. J. M. Milne, ed., Catalogue of the Literary Papyri in the British Museum (London, 1927) pp. 187, 189. Although this title perhaps is appropriate for the present fragments, which deal exclusively with the Joseph story, its applicability for the entire document is questionable, since the extent of the original work is unknown.

<sup>2</sup> For the midrashic character of the HistJos see "Relation to Canonical and Apocryphal Books." A B seem to correspond to Gen 41:39-42:36, but C-E are so fragmentary that it is difficult to pinpoint precisely the biblical context which they represent.

Transcriptions of three more papyrus fragments belonging to the History of Joseph and, in all probability, to the same manuscript of this document as A and B have been published by W. M. Lindsay in The Athenaeum (Number 3019; Sept. 5, 1885; p. 304). Lindsay's fragments i. (hereafter C) and ii. (hereafter D) appear to be written in the same hand as that found in B verso 14–17 and all of B recto; Lindsay's fragment iii. (hereafter E) contains a script which seems to be identical to that of A and B verso 1–13.<sup>3</sup> It is perhaps significant that both Milne, in reference to A and B, and Lindsay, with respect to C, D, and E, report that their fragments were discovered in the Fayum of Egypt. The facts that they are written in the same scripts and have a common place of origin support the possibility that fragments A, B, C, D, and E originally belonged to the same manuscript.

A single unpublished papyrus fragment, which represents a different copy of our document, is preserved in the Louvre under catalogue number E. 7738a (hereafter F). F is written in a hand distinct from those observed in A through E and consists of two originally separate pieces. The smaller fragment, which is long and narrow and from the top of a page, has been joined to the upper left hand corner (recto) of the second piece, which is substantially larger and from the bottom of a page. Although both fragments contain the same script, the manner in which they have been connected is questionable. F, for the most part, does not preserve enough writing to add significantly to the text of our document. However, the recto of this fragment contains some lines which occur also in B recto and can therefore be used to correct and supplement the text of that fragment.

The present translation is based upon the texts of A and B as found in the works of Milne and Denis. Possible corrections of those texts, resulting from a study of photographs<sup>4</sup> of A, B, and F will be suggested in the present edition. Of the Bodleian papyri only C contains sufficient context to warrant translation. This will be added after B recto, because C was written by our second scribe, who took over at B verso 14 and subsequently copied all of B recto and probably the following pages. It seems likely, therefore, that C should follow B recto, although it cannot be determined how much text originally separated these two fragments.

Original language, date, and provenance

There seems to be no indication that the original language of the History of Joseph is other than Greek. It is perhaps significant that the vocabulary of this document does not appear to be dependent upon that of the Septuagint.

The composition of this work must be placed before the sixth- or seventh-century date of the papyri themselves, given that the two different hands represented in A–E indicate that the manuscript to which these fragments originally belonged was a copy of an older original. However, there seems to be ample reason for ascribing the History of Joseph to a substantially earlier period, especially in view of its parallels with the Targums, Joseph and Asenath, and the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs (see below).

In the absence of more conclusive evidence, an Egyptian provenance for our document is implied by: (1) the origination of most of its extant fragments<sup>5</sup> in the Fayum of Egypt

<sup>3</sup> That C–E are part of the HistJos is indicated also by the letters kōb in C verso 6, which appear to be part of the name Jacob; by the letters stheis tou Iakōb in D verso 8, which is almost certainly part of the phrase "Joseph remembering Jacob"; and by the letters theist in E recto 7, which seem to belong to another occurrence of the same phrase. For the significance of this phrase in the HistJos see "Theological Importance." Further evidence that D E are from our document may be seen at D recto 4 in the letters lakk. These are probably from the word lakkos (pit), which occurs in the LXX of the Joseph story at Gen 37:20, 22, 24. D verso 6 reads akousate huiōi (listen sons), which also fits the context of the HistJos and probably refers to the "sons of Jacob" (cf. A verso 23, B recto 3). E recto 10 contains the letters lphoi, which are probably from adelphoi (brothers) and refer to the brothers of Joseph. It should be noted that there are inaccuracies in Lindsay's descriptions and transcriptions of the fragments.

<sup>4</sup> I would like to express my appreciation to the British Museum, the Louvre, and the Bodleian Library for providing excellent photographs of their fragments and to the International Center on Christian Origins, at Duke University, for making these photographs available to me. I would also like to thank Professor W. H. Willis for his very helpful suggestions concerning the papyri of the HistJos.

<sup>5</sup> Details about the acquisition of F are not given by S. de Ricci in "Bulletin papyrologique," Revue des études grecques 15 (1902) 431.

and (2) the concern of at least the surviving portions of text for events which took place principally in Egypt.

Theological importance

Of particular importance in the History of Joseph is the obvious attempt by the author to elevate the image of Joseph above that presented in the corresponding biblical text. In what is perhaps the single most significant element in this document, Joseph is referred to as "king of the people" (basileus tou laou) in A recto 16 (cf. A verso 28). Such references to Joseph as king, or ruler, of Egypt are not unknown in Jewish literature of late antiquity. In fact, these titles are commonly attributed to him in chapters 41–42 of Genesis in Targums Onkelos and Pseudo-Jonathan.<sup>6</sup>

Another example of the exaltation of Joseph in our papyri may be seen in A recto 23 in the words ephanē tropheus. This phrase means that Joseph appeared as, or became, a foster father, or rearer, or, more literally, nourisher of the Egyptians. It is interesting to note that in one Greek inscription of the first century A.D., tropheus signifies "one who gives free meals to the people."<sup>7</sup> This interpretation would fit our present context admirably.

Further evidence of this elevation of Joseph in our document may be found in A recto 10, where the singular imperative form of the verb sōzein (to save) occurs. From the context of lines 9–11 it seems entirely possible that at this point in the story Pharaoh could be asking Joseph to save him and Egypt from the coming famine. Support for this reading may be seen later in the biblical narrative (Gen 47:25), where the Egyptian people are described as saying to Joseph, "You have saved our lives . . ."

A final example of the exaltation of Joseph is the occurrence of the phrase "the God of Joseph" in B verso 11 and B recto 9 (cf. A verso 24). The first instance occurs during the conversation between Joseph's brothers in which Reuben apparently states that the "God of Joseph" has brought misfortune upon them for their having sold Joseph into slavery. The second occurrence of this phrase is in an even more unexpected context. B recto contains the dialogue between Jacob and his nine sons who had returned to Canaan. In line nine it seems that the brothers are asking their father to pray, presumably for the safe release of the imprisoned Simon. That the sons of Jacob would ask their father to entreat thus the "God of Joseph" strongly suggests that our document is concerned with the elevation of Joseph.

Another outstanding characteristic of the History of Joseph is the repeated occurrence in the text of the phrase "Joseph remembering Jacob" (A recto 7, 15, 24; A verso 5, 15; B verso 11?).<sup>8</sup> Although no single one of these lines contains all the words of the phrase complete, it would seem that Milne's restoration in each case of the missing elements is valid. At any rate, the existence of frequent references to Joseph's remembering Jacob in such a fragmentary text would indicate that this concept could very well be one of the central themes of our document. Perhaps the phrase "Joseph remembering Jacob" provides us with a hint of the situation in which the History of Joseph was written. Such an emphasis upon the remembrance of Joseph's forefathers could suggest that our document was written in a time of oppression of the Jews, when adherence to their ancestral traditions would be difficult.

Relation to canonical and apocryphal books

The extant text of fragments A and B of the History of Joseph follows the biblical narrative of Genesis 41:39–42:36 along general lines but seems to be more an example of midrashic expansion than a mere translation. This may be demonstrated adequately by a comparison of the first four lines of B recto with their counterpart in the biblical text (Gen 42:29). The text in Genesis reads as follows: "Returning to their father Jacob in the land of Canaan, they gave him a full report of what had happened to them." Corresponding to this single biblical verse, our papyrus contains four lines. In B recto 1 it is clear that "they (the brothers) went to Canaan." In line two the verb eskirta (to leap) perhaps refers to some excitement on the part of Jacob—possibly "his heart leapt." This interpretation is supported by what follows in line two: "and the sight"; line three: "the number of the ten"; and line four: "without one" and "he inquired about." Thus, the History of Joseph expands one biblical verse, which stated merely that the brothers returned to their father and related to him what had happened to them, by adding both the agitation of Jacob at the sight of the nine brothers returning without Simon and Jacob's inquiry about the missing brother.

<sup>6</sup> J. W. Etheridge, The Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan Ben Uzziel on the Pentateuch with the Fragments of the Jerusalem Targum from the Chaldee (New York, 1968) vol. 1, pp. 128–35, 300–9.

<sup>7</sup> LSJM, p. 1827.

<sup>8</sup> See n. 3 for occurrences of "Joseph remembering Jacob" in the Bodleian fragments. It is interesting that in F this phrase is found only at the end of well-defined sections of the text which are set apart from each other by gaps left on the papyrus. This occurs twice on the recto and once on the verso of F and may also be seen at A recto 7. This phenomenon raises the possibility that the HistJos could have been used at some time for liturgical purposes.

Apart from this obvious dependence of the History of Joseph upon the Book of Genesis for its basic story line, there are also indications of some relation to such early pseudepigraphical works as Joseph and Asenath and the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs. It is especially interesting that the three outstanding concepts distinguishable in our papyri of Joseph as king, provider of food, and savior (see above) all occur in a single line of Joseph and Asenath (25:6).<sup>9</sup> The possibility of some affinity between this pseudepigraphon and our document is further strengthened by the occurrence in both of the phrase "God of Joseph" (JosAsen 3:4; 6:4; HistJos B verso 11; B recto 9; A verso 24?). Furthermore, the same sort of elevation of the figure of Joseph, characteristic of the History of Joseph, may be found also in Joseph and Asenath. In the latter work Joseph is described as "the mighty one of God" (3:6; 4:8), "the son of God" (6:2, 6), "the blessed one of the most high God" (8:2), and "the chosen one of God" (13:10).

Finally, yet another important motif of the History of Joseph has a parallel in the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs. This is the phrase "Joseph remembering Jacob," which as mentioned above is one of the central themes of our document. In the Testament of Joseph 3:3, as Joseph is recounting the story of his temptation by the wife of Potiphar, he states, "I remembered the words of my father, Jacob." The implication in both documents is that Joseph remembered the wise counsels of his father, Jacob, throughout his trials in Egypt and that this enabled him to overcome his misfortune and to rise from prison to an exalted position as "king" of the land of Egypt.

<sup>9</sup> In this line Joseph is referred to as basileus (king), sitodotēs (giver of grain), and sôtēr (savior).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, p. 138.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 47f., 304.

Denis, A.-M. Fragmenta Pseudepigraphorum Quae Supersunt Graeca. PVTG 3; Leiden, 1970; pp. 235f. (Reproduces the text of fragments A and B as published by Milne; see below.)

Kenyon, F. G. Greek Papyri in the British Museum. London, 1893; vol. 1, pp. 225, 227. (Contains facsimiles of the verso of A and of the recto of B.)

Lindsay, W. M. The Athenaeum. Number 3019. Sept. 5, 1885; p. 304. (Includes transcriptions of the three Bodleian fragments.)

Milne, H. J. M., ed. Catalogue of the Literary Papyri in the British Museum. London, 1927; pp. 187–90. (Contains descriptions and transcriptions of fragments A and B. It is in this work that our document is first labeled the History of Joseph.)

Ricci, S. de. "Bulletin papyrologique," Revue des études grecques 15 (1902) 431. (Calls attention to fragment F from the Louvre as being part of the HistJos.)

A VERSO<sup>a</sup>

|    |   |           |
|----|---|-----------|
| 1  | ]zō[  |           |
| 2  | ]e[   |           |
| 3  | ]ē[   |           |
| 4  | ]le[  |           |
| 5  | Jos]eph remembe[r]ing Jacob?                            | TJos 3:3  |
| 6  | ?]and [fa]cing <sup>i</sup> the embassy <sup>i</sup> t[ | Gen 42:7  |
| 7  | ]on the prayer, exel[                            |           |
| 8  | ]the ten b[r]oth[ers cov]ered[?                         | Gen 42:3  |
| 9  | Jos]eph, then they made obeisance[                      | Gen 42:6  |
| 10 | ]they bend unto him the[                                | Gen 42:6  |
| 11 | ]the price of the grain, the g[rain?                    | Gen 42:7  |
| 12 | ]lōsantes after the[                                    |           |
| 13 | ]bought with silver the . . . of the n[                 |           |
| 14 | not <sup>a</sup> ] being recognized by them ka[         | Gen 42:8  |
| 15 | ]Joseph remembering Ja[cob                              | TJos 3:3  |
| 16 | ]and [no longer] then containing himself[               | Gen 42:24 |
| 17 | ]n being absent for a short (time), he left[            | Gen 42:24 |
| 18 | ]s to his relatives k[                                  | Gen 42:24 |
| 19 | ]you were seeking . . . [to b]uy grain[                 | Gen 42:10 |
| 20 | ]ai, but all of you came i[n order to?                  | Gen 42:12 |
| 21 | ]therefore you showed (that) you are . . . and p[       |           |
| 22 | ]you have another relative, 2[                          | Gen 42:13 |
| 23 | ]ēmos of the sons of Jacob, k[                          | Gen 42:11 |
| 24 | ]God, now save us G[od of Joseph <sup>i</sup>           | Gen 42:28 |
| 25 | ]and[ ]enoj the fear for a shor[t (time)                | Gen 42:28 |
| 26 | to K]ing Joseph: “Do not be angry, O K]ing              | Gen 42:10 |
| 27 | ]for we[c]ame not to sp[y <sup>m</sup>                  | Gen 42:11 |
| 28 | ]ēdes of the elde[r                                     |           |
| 29 | ]both he and w[e  | Gen 42:13 |
| 30 | ] t[o] ou[r] land[                                      |           |
| 31 | ]in your[ <sup>n</sup>                                  |           |

B VERSO<sup>a</sup>

|   |                            |              |
|---|----------------------------|--------------|
| 1 | ] is before you,[          |              |
| 2 | ]reton us and s.[          |              |
| 3 | ]ete are trustworthy, al.[ | Gen 42:16,20 |

a. In the following translation only complete words and phrases have been rendered into English; partial Gk. words have been transliterated and underlined. This translation is relatively free and often does not specify case, gender, or number, because the lack of continuous context does not allow more precision as to the syntactical arrangement of many words. Brackets signify lacunae in the papyrus text and parentheses denote words or letters which have been supplied. Underlined dots indicate unreadable letters. Milne's question marks, which denote uncertain restorations, have been retained. Gk. high dots have been transcribed into English punctuation as best suits the context. The dots under questionable letters in Milne's text have been omitted in this translation.

b. Possibly “tr]uly those . . . me[.”

c. Milne's transcription of this obscure phrase is doubtful because it makes no sense in Gk. Unfortunately, the papyrus is so abraded at this point that it is not possible to suggest a better reading from the photograph. Milne considers the e in rale to be a corrected th, but it seems rather to be an e which has been crossed out.

d. Possibly “jails.”

e. Milne's reading of tichi is doubtful and his correction to teuchē (“tools” or “implements”) is not convincing. Again, the abraded state of this section of the papyrus prevents a better reading from the photograph.

f. Lit. “passe[s] by.”

g. Or “at some time.”

A RECTO

|    |   |              |
|----|---|--------------|
| 1  | ]neif   |              |
| 2  | ]loosed su[   |              |
| 3  | tr]uly after the . . . themselv[es <sup>b</sup>               |              |
| 4  | ]ein more sensibl[e   | Gen 41:39    |
| 5  | ]ton as me ou[r   |              |
| 6  | ]ou and corruption rale tēs. <sup>c</sup> [            |              |
| 7  | remember]ing Jacob. [   | TJos 3:3     |
| 8  | ]es of the earth, and except for you[                         | Gen 41:43-44 |
| 9  | ]lēs I Pharaoh.[ ]desired[                                    |              |
| 10 | ] .ou save me also not ph[                                    | Gen 47:25    |
| 11 | ]lōs. . that they may bless me[                               | JosAsen 25:6 |
| 12 | ]trie. . ap. . in the disease[                                |              |
| 13 | ] . . . . of easy . . . on the one hand the pl[               |              |
| 14 | ] . ukas guards <sup>d</sup> .eo. . . .[                      |              |
| 15 | ]eusen Joseph, remembering[ Jacob?                            | TJos 3:3     |
| 16 | ]theis king of the people ka[                                 | Gen 42:30    |
| 17 | ] . straight there being mu[ch] grain[                        | JosAsen 25:6 |
| 18 | ? he sai]d: "Gather unto me tichi <sup>e</sup> when[ce | Gen 41:48-49 |
| 19 | ]and [the] famine passe[s] through <sup>f</sup> her[          | Gen 41:54-57 |
| 20 | ]nē and when <sup>g</sup> the a[ ]arrives[                    |              |
| 21 | ] .ntas receiving the com[mand                                | Gen 41:55    |
| 22 | ] . of every . . . of all the grain up[                       |              |
| 23 | ] .tou he became a provider <sup>h</sup> k[                   | Gen 41:56-57 |
| 24 | Jose]ph remembering Jac[ob                                    | JosAsen 25:6 |
| 25 | ]covere[d th]e land[  | TJos 3:3     |
| 26 | th]e famine euthun[   | Gen 41:54    |
| 27 | Pha]raoh upon Jo[seph   | Gen 41:39-45 |
| 28 | b]lessed[   |              |

B RECTO

|   |   |           |
|---|---|-----------|
| 1 | ]they went to Canaan[but the <sup>a</sup> | Gen 42:29 |
| 2 | ]leaped, <sup>r</sup> and the sigh[t?     |           |
| 3 | t]he number of the ten s[ons <sup>s</sup> |           |

h. Lit. "he appeared (as) a nourisher."

i. Lit. "[st]anding against."

j. Or "group of ambassadors."

k. A mē supplied at this point would suit the context better.

l. Milne supplies "Abraham," but in view of B verso 11 and B recto 9 Joseph would seem to be more likely.

m. Lit. "to trace (or track) out."

n. Gk. taiis could also be the dative plural ending of a noun.

o. The order of B recto and B verso as published by Milne has been reversed in the present edition. Not only does B verso seem to precede B recto according to the story line of Gen 42, but also the first lines of B verso appear to be from the same setting as the last lines of A verso. Furthermore, the hand of the upper part of B verso follows that of A verso, while the shift in hands occurs at the bottom of B verso and continues throughout B recto, thus verifying our reversal of Milne's order.

p. Lit. "with me."

q. Supplied from F.

r. F mistakenly has eskirda for eskirta in B, thus suggesting that it was a less carefully written manuscript.

s. Milne reads C[anaanites]. However, the last letter preserved in this line could be an u rather than a ch. This makes possible our restoration of huiōn, which would fit the context better.

(B VERSO)

|    |  |                  |
|----|--|------------------|
| 4  | ]p son .n in my presence <sup>p</sup> kata [ | Gen 42:15        |
| 5  | ]k ate now, lead aw[ay                              | Gen 42:19        |
| 6  | th]e relative to[ward?                                     | Gen 42:20        |
| 7  | ]a sthe to me, . . . too[k                          | Gen 42:20        |
| 8  | ]a s before the(m)[                                 | Gen 42:24        |
| 9  | ]to them, pa. .akr [                                | Gen 42:25        |
| 10 | ]o s justly these (things)[                         | Gen 42:21-22     |
| 11 | ]the God of Joseph, remem[bering                           | Gen 42:28        |
| 12 | ]your . . . I will call, Reube[n                           | JosAsen 3:4; 6:4 |
| 13 | se]rving you, mē [                                  | Gen 42:22        |
| 14 | ]not to be angry, flesh[                                   |                  |
| 15 | ]o s acting foolishly ka [                   |                  |
| 16 | ]and . . . mous tou [                               |                  |
| 17 | ]is ka [  |                  |

C VERSO

|      |  |              |
|------|--|--------------|
| 1    | ] . . . . . call . . . [                             |              |
| 2    | ]e now shows to the father . . . [                   |              |
| 3    | ]n remain with me a[                                 |              |
| 4    | ]e. and having loosed eu . [                  |              |
| 5    | ]th each cuts <sup>c2</sup> my[                      |              |
| 6    | ]to see [Ja]cob as a deer epi [ <sup>d2</sup> | Ps 41:2(LXX) |
| 7    | ] the water lab . [                           |              |
| 8-11 | traces of four more lines                            |              |

t. Both B and F have deicha for dicha.

u. Supplied from F.

v. F adds "to him" at this point.

w. Supplied from F.

x. Read keinai for kitinai.

y. Supplied from F. It is conceivable that "God of Jo[seph]" from the following line is the subject of "softened," thus making it possible that in ll. 6-9 the brothers are telling Jacob that the king (Joseph) in Egypt was insolent against them and

(B RECTO)

|    |  |                  |
|----|--|------------------|
| 4  | ?]without' [th]e one, . . . inqu[ired where"             |                  |
| 5  | ]and[ ]i says,' "Listen[                                 |                  |
| 6  | a man inso]lent" against us ka [                  | Gen 42:30        |
| 7  | ]_ and becoming ang[ry                                   | Gen 42:30        |
| 8  | to k]ill" us bu[t . . . softened'                        | Gen 42:20,30     |
| 9  | ]by your[entreat]ies the God of Jo]seph <sup>z</sup>     | JosAsen 3:4; 6:4 |
| 10 | ]and that which I do not seek apekr [             |                  |
| 11 | Si]mon where, perhaps he also[                           | Gen 42:36        |
| 12 | Jo]seph, you have added on[                              | Gen 42:36        |
| 13 | ]t ou I am in my prime <sup>a2</sup> the t[       |                  |
| 14 | b]ring to me . . . of this one o _[               |                  |
| 15 | ]m enoi now . . . will speak against t o [ |                  |
| 16 | ]d ua give knēm . . .[                     |                  |
| 17 | ]_ . Simo[n  |                  |

C RECTO

|      |  |
|------|--|
| 1    | traces of one line                                 |
| 2    | ]_ seeks to give back _[                           |
| 3    | ]_ finds not even one di _[                 |
| 4    | ]his . . . said, "Do not mim _['"           |
| 5    | ]_ evil (ones) not the oppres[sed <sup>b2</sup>    |
| 6    | ]_ repa[y] the sellers[                            |
| 7    | ]_ . . . ōithej to those having stripped _[ |
| 8    | ]_n and then to you tel                            |
| 9-12 | traces of four more lines                          |

became angry and was going to kill them, but by Jacob's entreaties the God of Joseph softened his heart.

z. Corrected by reference to F from Milne's "in your [si]ns the God of Ja[cob]." a2. Lit. "I have the high point."

b2. Possibly "oppressors]."

c2. Possibly "mourns" or "beats the breast."

d2. The vocabulary in ll. 6f. is strikingly similar to that in Ps 41:2 (LXX), where the psalmist writes that his soul yearns after God in the same way that a deer yearns after fountains of waters.

WISDOM AND PHILOSOPHICAL LITERATURE

INTRODUCTION

BY J. H. CHARLESWORTH

Long before the establishment of the monarchy under Saul, David, and Solomon, the Israelites probably shared with their neighbors a fondness for wise sayings and philosophical maxims. Because of the wisdom accorded Solomon, the wisdom literature in the Old Testament and the Apocrypha is attributed to him. In the Pseudepigrapha, however, with the exception of the Testament of Solomon, the wisdom tradition is not associated with Solomon. Because of its generic nature and lack of attention to God's actions in history on behalf of the descendants of Abraham, it is often difficult to demarcate the peculiarly Jewish aspect of the following documents.

Wisdom literature is distinct from the Greek philosophical dialogues and writings; it flourished in Egypt, Mesopotamia, and Palestine, and customarily dealt not with strictly religious ideas but, rather, with the practical affairs of life. The aphorisms derive primarily from living in a particular culture. Israel, of course, tended to spiritualize the often secular humanism of other cultures.

Ahiqar does not strictly belong in the Pseudepigrapha. It is not a Jewish but an Assyrian composition and predates the period covered by the present collection. Nevertheless, it is usually associated with the Pseudepigrapha and cannot be subsumed under other collections. It is obviously important for biblical studies; it is referred to in Tobit 1:21f. and probably influenced some of the writings in the New Testament.

In assessing the documents collected below, examine the wisdom books in the Old Testament: Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes (cf. the Song of Songs and some of the Psalms); in the Apocrypha: the Book of Wisdom, Ecclesiasticus (cf. Tobit and Baruch); in Philo of Alexandria's and Josephus' writings; in the rabbinic writings (esp. Pirke Aboth); in the gnostic and hermetic documents, and in the wisdom sayings of Jesus of Nazareth. Consult the wisdom sections of the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs and many of the fragmentary writings collected in the Supplement.

CONTENTS

Ahiqar
3 Maccabees
4 Maccabees
Pseudo-Phocylides
Syriac Menander

AHIQAR

(Seventh to Sixth Century B.C.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY J. M. LINDENBERGER

The text known as "The Words of Ahiqar" was one of the best-known and most widely disseminated tales in the ancient Mediterranean world. It is also by far the oldest text included in this collection, probably antedating the post-exilic portions of the Old Testament. This dates it well before the period usually assigned to the Pseudepigrapha. Furthermore, it is non-Jewish in origin. Thus Ahiqar is not, strictly speaking, a pseudepigraphon in the sense in which that term is applied to the other documents in this volume.<sup>1</sup>

Its inclusion here is justified by two facts, one relating to its content, the other to its history. In the first place, the work is closely similar in genre—and to some extent in content as well—to the wisdom traditions of the Old Testament and Apocrypha. This gives it a special importance for biblical studies. In the second place, it is clear that by the end of the Old Testament period, the story was not only known in some parts of the diaspora but had even been reworked to portray the pagan sage as a Jew. The oldest extant version, translated here, was found among the ruins of a Jewish settlement in Egypt dating from the fifth century B.C. The author of Tobit evidently knew a version according to which Ahiqar was an exiled Jew. Later recensions were in wide circulation in Jewish and Christian circles during the early centuries of the Christian era. So Ahiqar, though it was not composed by those who wrote and first read the books of the Pseudepigrapha, was adopted by them as the story of one of their own.

The work is in two parts. The first is the story of Ahiqar, wise scribe and counselor to the kings of Assyria. The sage, advanced in years and having no son to succeed him, decides to adopt his nephew Nadin<sup>2</sup> and teach him all his wisdom. The young man is educated and presented to Esarhaddon, and in time takes his uncle's place at court. Nadin, instead of dealing kindly with his uncle, plots to discredit him and manages to convince Esarhaddon that the old man is scheming to overthrow the throne. In a rage, the king orders Ahiqar killed. However, the officer sent to carry out the death sentence turns out to be an old friend of Ahiqar, whom the latter once rescued from death. The two of them concoct a plan by which a slave is substituted for Ahiqar and killed in his place. Evidently the plan succeeds, but the end of the story is lost. Presumably it related the restoration of Ahiqar to favor and the punishment of Nadin.<sup>3</sup>

The second part contains the wisdom of Ahiqar, a collection of slightly over a hundred aphorisms, riddles, fables, instructions, and other brief sayings of various kinds, arranged in a more or less haphazard manner. Many of them are fragmentary and difficult to understand. They cover a wide range of topics such as family discipline, respect for the

<sup>1</sup> On the criteria to be used in assigning documents to the Pseudepigrapha, see particularly J. H. Charlesworth, The Pseudepigrapha and Modern Research (Missoula, Mont., 1976), pp. 21–22; and the "Definition of Pseudepigrapha" in Charlesworth's "Introduction for the General Reader," above.

The present writer wishes to express his thanks to the trustees of the H. R. MacMillan Fund of the Vancouver School of Theology for a generous research grant to underwrite this study.

<sup>2</sup> Or "Nadan." See discussion of the name, n. 30.

<sup>3</sup> See the summary of the conclusion of the late versions following I. 78.

king, prudent speech, and righteous behavior,<sup>4</sup> and many of the individual sayings are similar to proverbs known from the Bible and the wisdom of the ancient Near East.

Texts

The Aramaic text translated here is found in a single papyrus manuscript. Much of it poorly preserved,<sup>5</sup> it was discovered by the German excavators of ancient Elephantine in 1907. Catalogued by the Königl. Museen zu Berlin<sup>6</sup> as P.13446, most of the manuscript remains in the museum's Papyrus Collection. Column vi (P.13446 J) was subsequently returned to Egypt along with a number of other papyri from Elephantine and is now in the Egyptian Museum at Cairo, where it bears the catalog number 43502.

The present translation is based on an examination of the papyrus original (except for col. vi, for which the original was inaccessible), compared with the photographs published by Sachau in 1911. The transcription of the narrative portion published by Cowley is, in general, reliable. Divergences from it are noted. For the sayings, the writer's own edition has been used.<sup>7</sup>

Much later and more elaborate recensions of the Ahīqar text are found in versions from the Christian era in Syriac, Arabic, Armenian, Karshuni, and Old Church Slavonic, with fragments in Ethiopic and still later translations into Georgian, Old Turkish, Romanian, Russian, Serbian, and neo-Syriac.<sup>8</sup> There was also a Greek version, now lost, from which the Slavonic and the Romanian stem. The Greek also served as the basis for a portion of the Life of Aesop.<sup>9</sup> Much of the material in these late versions does not parallel the Elephantine text, and they are not reproduced here. Significant parallels are given in the footnotes. The Syriac and the Armenian (which also goes back to a Syr. tradition) are the versions most closely related to the Aramaic.

Relation of narrative and sayings

In the Syriac and Armenian, and other late versions, the wisdom material is inserted into the narrative in two large blocks. The first comes after Ahīqar adopts his nephew, and purports to be the content of the sage's instruction. The second comes near the end of the story as the words with which Ahīqar rebukes the ungrateful boy.

This arrangement seems not to be original. In the Elephantine text, the sayings were evidently not integrated into the narrative at all.<sup>10</sup> They seem to have been simply collected at the end without any explicit link to the story.<sup>11</sup> The version which lies behind the Life of Aesop represents an intermediate state in the integration of the sayings and the narrative,<sup>12</sup>

<sup>4</sup> See also "Relation of Narrative and Sayings."

<sup>5</sup> Of some ll., little or nothing remains. Hardly a single l. is completely intact. In the narrative, the repetitious style and fairly close parallels with the late recs. make it possible to restore much of the lost text. The sayings, by contrast, are written in such a terse style that often the loss of a few letters can render an entire saying unintelligible. Translation of the proverbs is made even more difficult by the number of unfamiliar words they contain. The badly damaged state in which the Aram. text has survived has required some modifications of the standard editorial sigla listed in vol. 1, p. xxxv. Note particularly:

a. [Regular type in brackets] indicates that the words enclosed are missing or damaged beyond certain identification but can be restored with high probability on the basis of remaining traces or close parallels in the late versions.

b. Italic type indicates a word whose material reading is clear but whose meaning is uncertain.

c. [Italic type in brackets] indicates a conjectural restoration.

<sup>6</sup> Now the Staatliche Museen zu Berlin (East).

<sup>7</sup> See "Significant Publications."

<sup>8</sup> For the texts of the late versions, see "Significant Publications."

<sup>9</sup> On the complex question of the Near Eastern antecedents and inner development of the Aesop traditions, see the works of Perry and Daly listed in "Significant Publications"; see also B. E. Perry, Studies in the Text History of the Life and Fables of Aesop (Haverford, Pa., 1936).

<sup>10</sup> If the text followed the pattern of the late recs., the appropriate place for the sayings would be after the words "I . . . taught him wisdom" (l. 9). See l. 16, n. q.

<sup>11</sup> The fragmentary state of the text makes it impossible to state categorically that there was no transition in the text from narrative to sayings. But in the surviving portions, cols. i-v contain only narrative, vi-xiv only sayings.

<sup>12</sup> In the Gk. there is only one block of instructional material, inserted not at the point where the hero educates his adopted son, but after his reinstatement (where the late Ahīqar versions place the reproaches). The Egyptian episode in the Aesop story takes place after the death of the foster son, rather than before as in the versions of Ahīqar.

and even in the late versions there is a certain artificiality about the position of the sayings. A number of the reproaches at the end are quite inappropriate to the literary context in which they are placed, and some sayings found in the first collection in one version appear in the second collection in another. Taking this into account, along with the fact that the wisdom portion of the Elephantine text is written in a slightly different dialect from the narrative (see below), it is evident that in dealing with questions of date, provenance, and historical background, the two parts of the text must be treated separately.

Original language

Before the discovery of the Aramaic text, the dominant view was that Ahiqar was written by a Jew, probably in Hebrew.<sup>13</sup> The major reasons for this were the references to Ahiqar in Tobit<sup>14</sup> and the existence of a number of parallels between the Syriac Ahiqar and the Talmud.<sup>15</sup> With the discovery of the Elephantine manuscript, this opinion at first seemed to be confirmed. It was, after all, a Jewish colony in whose ruins the papyrus was found, and certain features of its language were thought to betray Hebrew influence.

But scholars quickly came to realize that the text showed no real trace of Jewish origin. On the contrary, its religious background is that of ancient Near Eastern polytheism.<sup>16</sup> With the abandonment of the Jewish hypothesis, a fairly broad agreement developed that the Aramaic is a translation from an Akkadian (i.e. Assyrian) original. The setting of the story is the neo-Assyrian court, a number of the personal names are authentically Assyrian, there are several Akkadian loan words in the narrative, and four of the proverbs mention the Mesopotamian god Shamash. This view persists in many scholarly works until the present.<sup>17</sup>

Recent years, however, have seen the beginning of a new consensus that the Aramaic is not a translation at all, but the original language. The Assyrian names simply belong to the Assyrian setting of the story. The Akkadian loan words are almost all words which are common in Imperial Aramaic. The mention of a Mesopotamian god shows only that the work was composed in an area under Mesopotamian influence. It has no bearing on the original language. Thus the evidence for a lost Akkadian original is by no means as strong as it first appeared.

The case for an Aramaic original is particularly strong in the proverbs. Unlike the narrative, they contain virtually no Akkadian loan words.<sup>18</sup> Some of them contain Aramaic wordplays (e.g. the pun on hī "arrow" and hī "sin" in saying 41). Some also show a knowledge of distinctively West Semitic literary conventions (in particular, the use of traditional word pairs in poetic parallelism),<sup>19</sup> which would be extremely difficult to account for if the text were a translation from (East Semitic) Akkadian. Even in the narrative, evidence for translation from Akkadian is lacking. During the time of the neo-Assyrian Empire, Akkadian was coming more and more to be displaced by Aramaic as the dominant language of the people in Mesopotamia.

Thus it is most likely that the text in its entirety was composed in Aramaic. A close study of the two parts of the text reveals that they are written in slightly differing dialects. The narrative is written in the official, or "Imperial," Aramaic dialect of the neo-Assyrian and neo-Babylonian periods. The proverbs are in a somewhat more archaic dialect with a greater similarity to the Canaanite family of languages, accounting for the features earlier thought to be "Hebraisms."<sup>20</sup>

<sup>13</sup> The hypothesis of a Sanskrit original, put forth toward the end of the nineteenth century, has long since been discredited. See the summary of this early discussion in A. H. Krappe, "Is the Story of Ahiqar the Wise of Indian Origin?" JAOS 61 (1941) 280f.

<sup>14</sup> See "Relation to Apocryphal Books."

<sup>15</sup> See "Cultural Importance."

<sup>16</sup> For details, see "Religious Importance."

<sup>17</sup> E.g. Grelot, who refers to the text as a "masterpiece of Akkadian literature translated into the common language of the Persian Empire" (Documents, p. 452). Cowley (Aramaic Papyri, pp. 205f.) attempts to complicate this hypothesis even further by assuming that the putative Akkadian original was first translated into Persian and thence into Aram. His arguments are not cogent, however, and have never gained wide acceptance.

<sup>18</sup> An apparent exception is kn, "fellow, companion" (sayings 10, 72). This is common Aram., probably borrowed from Akkadian quite early. A more serious exception is found in saying 34 (see nn.), which seems to rest on an Akkadian wordplay.

<sup>19</sup> See J. Lindenberg, Aramaic Proverbs, pp. 23f.

<sup>20</sup> See also under "Provenance" for details.

Date

Because the work is composite, the question of date is complex. The Elephantine manuscript is dated by paleography and archaeological context to the late fifth century B.C., but it is likely that the combined text (narrative and sayings) was in existence for at least a century before that.

The presence of double forms of some of the sayings (39 par. 41 [cf. 93], 40 par. 42, the two versions of the ending of 36) indicates a period of transmission long enough for variants to develop. Some of the inconsistencies in spelling may also indicate the copying of the text over a rather extended time, during which the phonology of the language was evolving.<sup>21</sup> There are also a good many scribal errors, though in theory these could have been introduced by a careless scribe at a single copying.

The earliest possible date for the narrative is provided by the mention of Esarhaddon (reigned 681–669 B.C.). The gnomic portion of the text has no historical allusions, but the more archaic flavor of the language of the sayings indicates that they are at least as old as the narrative and probably older. Since the Imperial Aramaic of the Persian period and later shows a great many Persian words, the absence of such Persian loans in Ahiqar suggests a date of composition before the mid-sixth century. Both parts of the text (and probably the editorial joining of them) must have been fixed in writing during the latter seventh or early sixth century B.C.<sup>22</sup>

Provenance

The exact provenance of the text is not known. Though the manuscript was found in Egypt, it is most unlikely that it was composed there. Nothing in either part of the text suggests an Egyptian background.<sup>23</sup> The setting of the story in the neo-Assyrian court is "authentic" in the sense that the few verifiable historical details in it are correct. The Assyrian personal names are typical of the period and are accurately transcribed into Aramaic.<sup>24</sup> The Aramaic of the narrative is the standard literary dialect of the neo-Assyrian and neo-Babylonian periods. Lacking any evidence to the contrary, it is likely that the narrative originated in Mesopotamia.

The proverbs are another matter. Practically nothing in them is suggestive of a Mesopotamian background.<sup>25</sup> The only geographical reference is in saying 110, and "the Sidonian" there simply refers proverbially to the seafarer, as "the Arab" refers to the desert dweller. The dialect of the proverbs is closer to the language of the very oldest Imperial Aramaic texts and the latest phase of Old Aramaic, a transition which took place roughly around the beginning of the seventh century B.C. In a number of features, particularly the vocabulary, the dialect of the sayings has affinities with the Canaanite languages of ancient Syria-Palestine.<sup>26</sup> The most likely explanation of this is that the proverbs (or an earlier collection containing most of them) originated in northern Syria, where several Aramaic-speaking kingdoms flourished during the first part of the first millennium B.C. A further argument in favor of a north Syrian origin of the wisdom portion of the text is the appearance of a pantheon of gods whose names often appear together in other texts from that region.<sup>27</sup> When and where the two parts of the text were joined is not known (see below).

<sup>21</sup> Note particularly the fluctuation in the initial consonant of Sennacherib between s and š, and the spelling of the sibilant in Esarhaddon with s over against that in Assyria (originally the same) with t.

<sup>22</sup> This conclusion is clouded somewhat by the fact that the use of šmh "his name" to introduce a new character (see l. 1, n. a) in Ah is thought to be an idiom borrowed from Persian; see E. Y. Kutscher, "New Aramaic Texts," JAOS 74 (1954) 241. But the Persian derivation of the expression is not certain.

<sup>23</sup> Even the Egyptian episode of the late versions is told from the viewpoint of Ahiqar and the Assyrians. The Egyptians are merely foreign foils for the sage's cleverness.

<sup>24</sup> See "Historical Importance."

<sup>25</sup> The sole exception to this is saying 34.

<sup>26</sup> See J. Lindenberger, Aramaic Proverbs, "Scribal and Linguistic Character of the Text."

<sup>27</sup> See H. Donner and W. Röllig, Kanaanäische und Aramäische Inschriften (3 vols.; Wiesbaden, 1964–68) numbers 202 B:23f.; 214:2f., 11, 18; 215:22; and particularly 26A:III:18f.

Historical importance

Until fairly recently, most scholars considered the story of Ahiqar to be pure folklore, and the hero to be the literary creation of the unknown author.<sup>28</sup> Sennacherib and Esarhaddon are, of course, well-known historical figures.<sup>29</sup> The name Ahiqar (sometimes vocalized Ahuqar) occurs in cuneiform texts of the neo-Assyrian period, as do the names Nadin and Nabusumiskun.<sup>30</sup> In fact, there was a Nadin accused of subversive activities during the reign of Ashurbanipal, and Esarhaddon is known to have had a high-ranking army officer named Nabusumiskun. But while these persons could conceivably be identified with the characters in the Ahiqar story, the names are rather common, and the cuneiform texts never associate the various individuals with one another, so the apparent correspondence may be mere coincidence.

The question of the historicity of Ahiqar has more recently been thrown into a new perspective by the discovery at the site of ancient Uruk of a cuneiform tablet in which the name appears in a context which immediately links it to the Aramaic story. The Akkadian text, from the Seleucid period, is a list of a number of distinguished court scholars (ummānu) of various Babylonian and Assyrian kings. The relevant line reads: "[In the time of] King Esarhaddon, Aba-enlil-dari, [whom] the Arameans call Ahuqar, was ummānu."<sup>31</sup> The name, nationality, role, and date in the cuneiform and Aramaic traditions match, making it appear extremely likely that there was, in fact, such an Ahiqar at the Assyrian court.

It may be possible to go even beyond this. A number of the ummānu listed are noted Mesopotamian literary figures, among them the reputed authors of the Gilgamesh Epic and "The Exaltation of Inanna." This suggests that Ahiqar, too, was remembered in Mesopotamia, not only as an official of Esarhaddon, but also as an author. That is not to say that the details of the story are necessarily historical; much of the narrative is characteristic of folklore. (In particular, the themes of the ungrateful nephew and the downfall and restoration of a minister are known elsewhere in Mesopotamian literature.)<sup>32</sup> Much less does it demonstrate that the historical Ahiqar was the author of our story. But it does suggest that the story is not pure fiction. It is better classified as a historical novel, or still better as a literary folktale about a historical figure.

A plausible—though partly conjectural—reconstruction of the early development of the text may be made as follows: The oldest components, the individual sayings, circulated orally among the Aramaic-speaking peoples of Syria in the earlier part of the first millennium

<sup>28</sup> An early attempt to identify historical events lying behind the story was made by W. von Soden. "Die Unterweltstafel eines assyrischen Kronprinzen," ZA 43 [n.F. 9] (1936) 11–13.

<sup>29</sup> The Elephantine MS has Sennacherib and Esarhaddon in the correct historical sequence, whereas the late versions generally reverse the order. Only one late Syr. MS has the order correctly. The Arm. and OCS omit Esarhaddon entirely.

<sup>30</sup> Ahiqar—"My (divine) brother is precious." Linguistically the name can be either Akkadian or Aram. The name appears (as Ahi-iaqar and variant spellings) in Akkadian texts from the Old Babylonian period on. More than one Assyrian bureaucrat bore the name. In the Seleucid text which refers to the Ahiqar of our story, the name is written A-ḫi-i' qa-a-ri. The Syr. Ah preserves the name accurately. In the Arm., it becomes Khikar; in the Ar., Haiqar. In Aram., the probable pronunciation (without pretonic reduction) would be 'ahī-yaqar, or perhaps simply 'ah-yaqar, without the pronominal suffix.

Nadin (or Nadan)—an abbreviated name-form from the Akkadian verb nadānu, "to give." The name Nādin (Akkadian active participle) is fairly common in the neo-Assyrian period. In the case of one of the persons so named, the full form of his name is also known: Nabū-nādin-zēr ("Nabu gives progeny"). Occasionally the form Nadan appears in Akkadian. In the printed translations of the Syr. and Ar. Ah, the name is vocalized "Nadan," but as the consonantal script in both languages has simply ndn, this cannot be claimed as ancient evidence for a different pronunciation. The Arm. (which is based on a Syr. version) has Nathan in the better MSS, Nadan in others. The adopted son in the Aesop tradition is known variously as Ennos, Ainos, and Hēlios. On the name in Tob, see n. 57.

Nabusumiskun—reflects the Assyrian pronunciation of Akkadian Nabū-šum-iškun, "Nabu has established a name (i.e. given a son)," the name of several individuals of the neo-Assyrian period, including a high-ranking army officer under Esarhaddon. The name is altered considerably in the later Ahiqar traditions. On the Akkadian of the three names, see K. Tallqvist, Assyrian Personal Names (Leipzig, 1914) pp. 16a, 160b–161a, 165b.

<sup>31</sup> For the entire text and commentary, see J. van Dijk, XVIII. Vorläufiger Bericht über die vom Deutschen Archäologischen Institut und der Deutschen Orient-Gesellschaft aus Mitteln der Deutschen Forschungsgemeinschaft unternommenen Ausgrabungen in Uruk-Warka, ed. H. J. Lenzen (Abhandlung der Deutschen Orient-Gesellschaft 8; Berlin, 1963) pp. 44–52.

<sup>32</sup> See E. Reiner, "The Etiological Myth of the 'Seven Sages,'" Orientalia N.S. 30 (1961) 1–11.

B.C. At some time during this period, a written collection of these sayings was made, probably by scribes in the court of one of the Aramean kings.<sup>33</sup> The collection would presumably have been brought to Assyria in the aftermath of the Assyrian conquests of Aramean territory in the course of the eighth century. By the time of Sennacherib (704–681) or Esarhaddon (681–669) the proverbs would have been known, and perhaps had been re-edited, in Assyria, by circles of Aramaic-speaking literati associated with the imperial court. Ahiqar himself may have been the editor; that would account for his literary reputation in Mesopotamian tradition and the linking of his name with the proverbs in the Aramaic text. On the other hand, the collection could have been attributed to him after his lifetime, in the same way that various collections of Israelite wisdom from all periods came to be linked to the name of Solomon.

The narrative may have been composed completely independently of the sayings, with a later editor joining the two parts which make up the present text. Or the story may from the beginning have been intended to introduce an already existing collection of sayings; i.e. its author would also be the editor of the composite text in its earliest form. The date and historical setting for the composition of the story cannot be determined with any degree of precision, but the author was most likely an Aramean scribe living in the latter days of the neo-Assyrian Empire or early in the time of the neo-Babylonian (Chaldean) Empire. To this author (or the later editor mentioned above) may also be attributed the addition to the wisdom collection of those proverbs which appear to be inspired by the narrative (50–52, 76, 80). He may have added a few others as well, such as 34. Insofar as the story is an exemplary tale of a wise and virtuous hero who rose to prominence in the court of a foreign king, it is comparable to the biblical stories of Joseph, Esther, and Daniel.<sup>34</sup>

Theological importance

The theological background of the Aramaic Ahiqar is that of the ancient Near East. In it we encounter not the God of Israel but the gods of Aram, Canaan, and Mesopotamia. The theology is concentrated in the wisdom sayings. The narrative, though edifying, says nothing directly about the gods.<sup>35</sup> But the proverbs mention them often, frequently by name, usually portraying them in roles similar to those which they play elsewhere in the religious literature of the ancient Orient.

Several sayings refer to “the gods”—without further specification—as instructors, judges, and protectors of humanity. These gods give eloquence to the inexperienced (32), requite evil speech (37), and punish those who persecute the righteous (39, 41). Not only the liar and the evildoer (46) but also the fool (38)<sup>36</sup> is subject to their judgment. It is only the gods who can protect a person from inner wickedness (69), and it is they who are the ultimate source of wisdom (13).<sup>37</sup>

El, father of the gods in the Canaanite pantheon, is the divinity most often named in the proverbs.<sup>38</sup> He is referred to in saying 25 by his epithet “the merciful” (rhmn), a title similar to the pair of epithets by which the god is known in Ugaritic literature (“the beneficent, the benign”) and almost identical to the biblical designation of Yahweh as ʿēl rahūm wʿhānūn, “gracious and loving God.”<sup>39</sup> Saying 25 is a comparison of the authority of the king to that of El:

<sup>33</sup> A number of the sayings are explicitly intended for the instruction of courtiers (17–21, 23, 25f.), and a good many others would be appropriate for such a setting.

<sup>34</sup> A common literary structure has also been discerned in these stories; see J. J. Collins, “The Court-Tales in Daniel and the Development of Apocalyptic,” JBL 94 (1975) 224–27. There is some evidence that parallels between Ah, Aesop, and Joseph were observed in antiquity. One of the Syr. MSS of Ah also contains a collection of Aesop’s fables attributed to “Josephus”; J. R. Harris et al., Ahiqar, p. lxxx, p. 2.

<sup>35</sup> There are references to the gods in the later recs. of the narrative, particularly the Arm.; see below.

<sup>36</sup> See the nn. on the text of this difficult saying.

<sup>37</sup> On this saying, see also under “Shamayn,” below.

<sup>38</sup> Earlier translations have tended to confuse Aram. ʿl (El) and ʿlhyn / ʿlhyʾ (the gods), often translating both as “God.” For a detailed discussion of the problem, see J. Lindenberger, “The Gods of Ahiqar,” Ugarit-Forschungen 14 (1983) 105–17.

<sup>39</sup> Ex 34:6; Deut 4:31; Neh 9:31; Jonah 4:2. In post-biblical Jewish literature, rahmān is used as a circumlocution for the name of God, and the same epithet is a primary title of Allah in Islamic writings.

A king is like the Merciful,
 even his voice is haughty.
 Who is there who could withstand him,
 but one with whom El is?

It is El who will avenge treacherous speech (66; probably failure to keep an oath is meant).<sup>40</sup> A fragmentary saying (64) appears to relate El to healing, a role in which he is occasionally found also in Canaanite literature.<sup>41</sup> Another damaged saying appears to be a petition to the god for righteousness or vindication: "Establish me, O El, as a righteous man with you!" (78).

Second in the pantheon of the proverbs is Shamash,<sup>42</sup> the sun-god. In ancient Mesopotamia, this god functioned primarily as administrator of justice. He protected the needy and heard the claims of the unjustly treated. It is just this role which he has in saying 77: "If a wicked man grasps the fringe of your garment, leave it in his hand. Then appeal to Shamash; he [will] take what is his and will give it to you." Saying 49 illustrates one way in which Shamash executes judgment: He withholds light from the wicked.

Just as the king is likened to El (25), so also is his splendor compared to that of Shamash (26):

A king is as splendid to see as Shamash;
 and his majesty is glorious
 to them that tread the earth in peace.

Comparison of the king to the sun-god is also known from Mesopotamia. In the seventh-century prayer of Ashurbanipal to Shamash, the king's splendor is said to depend on his piety toward Shamash.<sup>43</sup> Shamash is also concerned with human wisdom. He takes pleasure in the man who masters wisdom and learns discretion in speech; he is displeased when wisdom fails (12).

Saying 13 is the most important passage for the text's theological understanding of wisdom, and incidentally contains a probable reference to a third divinity:

From heaven the peoples are favored;
 Wisdom is of the gods.
 Indeed, she is precious to the gods;
 her kingdom is et[er]nal.
 She has been established by Shamayn;
 yea, the Holy Lord has exalted her.<sup>44</sup>

The words "Shamayn" (lit. "heaven") and "the Holy Lord" probably refer to the god known as "the Lord of Heaven" (Aram. b'l šmyn),<sup>45</sup> whose worship was widespread among the Canaanite and Aramean peoples of Syria (and to some extent also northern Mesopotamia) from the Bronze Age until well into the Christian era. In the Canaanite pantheon described by Sanchuniathon, he is chief of the gods. Saying 13 appears to be a hymn to wisdom, praising her divine origin, her benefits to mankind, and her exaltation by the god. Though the saying does not go so far as to personify wisdom explicitly, it is nevertheless the closest non-Jewish parallel to the biblical and post-biblical poems in praise of wisdom<sup>46</sup> and is probably older than any of them.<sup>47</sup> The theological intent of saying 13 within the entire collection is comparable to that of Prov 8:22–31 within the Book of Proverbs: the wisdom

<sup>40</sup> The badly broken saying 70 also seems to refer to oaths in connection with El.

<sup>41</sup> In the Keret epic, from Ugarit, El takes it on himself to provide a healer for the ailing king. See KRT C, v; ANET, p. 148b.

<sup>42</sup> "Shamash," the name by which the god is best known, is the Akkadian pronunciation of the name. In the Aram. of the period of the text, the name was perhaps pronounced šimš or šimiš; in later Aram. šmeš.

<sup>43</sup> For a translation of the prayer, see F. J. Stephens in ANET, pp. 386f.

<sup>44</sup> See the nn. on the saying.

<sup>45</sup> Pronounced approximately ba'l šamayn; in later Aram. it would be b'el šmayin.

<sup>46</sup> The image of Wisdom in Philo Judaeus and the gnostic myths of the lesser Sophia have also been compared; see W. F. Albright, From the Stone Age to Christianity (Garden City, N.Y., 1957) pp. 368, 370. Albright also cites other possible parallels from more ancient Near Eastern texts.

<sup>47</sup> A possible exception is Prov 8:22–31.

teaching, largely practical and—on the face of it—secular in character, is said to derive from the divine realm. The life and success conferred by wisdom are, at root, gifts of the gods. Wisdom rules forever, because she has been enthroned by the High God of Heaven.

Many of the general themes of the proverbs, e.g. family discipline, controlled speech, behavior vis-à-vis the king, are paralleled in biblical wisdom literature.<sup>48</sup> As in biblical wisdom, wisdom is associated with life, prosperity, and divine favor. Folly brings the displeasure of gods and the king, and tends toward death. But some of the distinctive theological emphases of Hebrew wisdom are not to be found in the Aramaic document. Cosmology plays no role in the Ahiqar sayings, in contrast to the prominence which creation theology has in Old Testament wisdom.<sup>49</sup> Though the Ahiqar text characterizes wise behavior as being pleasing to the gods, there are no analogues to the recurring biblical affirmation that “The fear of Yahweh is the beginning of wisdom” (Prov 9:10; cf. 1:7). The question of theodicy does not arise; the gods of the proverbs are never seriously challenged by man.

The late versions of Ahiqar have, to varying degrees, assimilated the polytheism of the original to a monotheistic viewpoint, under the influence of the Jewish and Christian circles in which they were transmitted. “The gods” of the Elephantine proverbs have for the most part become “God.” A few traces of the older religious setting have survived, particularly in the Armenian, which relates that Ahiqar prayed to his gods “Belshim and Shimil and Shamin.”<sup>50</sup> The Syriac in the same passage has eliminated the names of the gods in favor of “O Lord, my God,”<sup>51</sup> and the Arabic even introduces the biblical phrase “Most High God, creator of the heavens and of the earth” (cf. Gen 14:19).

Relation to canonical books

If it is important in dealing with any question of literary comparison to distinguish between parallels and influence, it is doubly important when treating material from the realm of wisdom and folklore. Folk themes, figures of speech, and entire proverbs migrate across geographical and cultural boundaries by routes which are often impossible to trace or document. Parallels, even quite close ones, between books such as Ahiqar and the canonical and apocryphal books may indicate nothing whatever about the direct knowledge of one document by the author of another. In every case, the burden of proof is on the one who would claim to see signs of literary influence.

Leaving aside wisdom themes which are common to biblical and ancient Near Eastern wisdom (see notes on the individual sayings), close parallels between the Elephantine Ahiqar and the canonical books are very few. The address “My Son” (sayings 4, 14a, 40, 42, 60, frequent in biblical proverbs)<sup>52</sup> simply belongs to wisdom diction. It is found in Near Eastern texts as old as the third millennium B.C. Similarly the form of the numerical proverb, “There are two things . . . and a third . . .” (saying 12; cf. Prov 30:15–19, 21–31), and the comparison of a word to a dagger or sword (saying 18; Pss 52:2; 57:4, etc.) are well attested literary devices in ancient oriental literature.<sup>53</sup>

Only in two cases are there parallels which justify raising the question of possible dependence. The first is the pair of sayings 3–4:

Spare not your son from the rod, otherwise, can you save him [from wickedness]?

If I beat you, my son,
you will not die;

<sup>48</sup> See “Relation to Canonical Books.”

<sup>49</sup> On the importance of creation in biblical wisdom, see particularly W. Zimmerli, “The Place and Limit of the Wisdom in the Framework of the Old Testament Theology,” SJT 17 (1964) 146–58.

<sup>50</sup> Arm. Ah 1:4. “Shamin” is obviously the “Shamayn” of the Elephantine text (saying 13), and “Belshim” (which recurs in 6:16) may also be a corruption of “Baal Shamayn.” “Shimil” is possibly derived from Aram. šm ʿl, “the Name of El,” a type of surrogate name well known in other northwest Semitic texts. The Turkish has a more garbled version of the three names: Belshim, Shillim, and Shahmil (J. R. Harris et al., Ahiqar, p. 86).

<sup>51</sup> The Syr. does preserve one reference to “Bel” (6:10). In one MS, a possible second reference to the god has been erased (J. R. Harris et al., Ahiqar, p. 119, n. 1).

<sup>52</sup> In the late recs. of Ah, virtually all of the sayings are introduced by the phrase.

<sup>53</sup> See saying 12, n. t, and saying 18, n. n.

but if I leave you alone,
[you will not live].

Compare Proverbs 23:13–14:

Do not withhold discipline from a child;
if you beat him with a rod, he will not die.
If you beat him with the rod
you will save his life from Sheol. (RSV)

Though parental discipline and the desirability of corporal punishment are common enough themes in wisdom literature, the close verbal similarity (even closer in the original than appears in translation) is greater than could be accounted for by similarity of theme alone. It cannot be claimed that either saying is borrowed from the other, but it is likely that some common oral or written tradition underlies both.

The second close biblical parallel is to saying 109:

Let not the rich man say, "In my riches I am glorious."

This is very similar to the last clause of Jer 9:22:

Let the sage boast no more of his wisdom,
. . . nor the rich man of his riches!

In this case, the saying is brief and its theme universal. It is probably part of the common stock of ancient Near Eastern folk wisdom.

The number of apparent similarities between the late versions of Ahiqar and the Bible (particularly Daniel and Luke) is somewhat greater. Here again, some are simply literary devices: "O King, live forever!" (Ah 1:11 [Syr., Arm.; cf. Ar.]; Dan 2:4; 3:9; 5:10; 6:6, 21); clothing someone in purple and gold as a sign of special favor (Ah 1:7 [Arm.]; Dan 5:7, 16; cf. 2Ezra 3:6); the comparison of long fingernails to birds' claws (Ah 5:11 [Syr., Arm., Ar.]; Dan 4:30); the complaint that a task is so difficult that not even the gods (or only the gods) could perform it (Ah 5:6 [Syr., Arm.]; cf. Dan 2:11); feeding pigs as a despised occupation (Ah 8:34 [Syr.]; Lk 15:15); lists of various kinds of soothsayers (Ah 1:3 [Ar.]; Dan 2:2, 27; 5:7); the idea that one should not share a meal with a person of bad character (Syr. Ah 2:16; Ar. 2:19; Arm. 2:10; cf. 1Cor 5:11); references to saving someone from the mouth of a lion (Syr. Ah 2:59; Arm. 2:60; cf. Ps 22:21; 2Tim 4:17; as a narrative motif also in Dan 6:17–25); and a variety of expressions which have in common the presupposition that the wolf is a proverbial enemy of sheep (Ah 2:30 [Ar.]; Isa 11:6; 65:25; Mt 7:15; 10:16; Lk 10:3; Acts 20:29). The sudden death of the wicked by bursting open (Nadin in Syr. Ah 8:41 and parallels; Judas in Acts 1:18, cf. also Papias' account of the death of Judas) also seems to be a narrative convention; compare the death of the dragon in Daniel 14:27 [Bel 27] and a similar incident in the apocryphal Acts of Thomas.

Other parallels between the Bible and the late versions of Ahiqar do seem to show at least the dependence of both on kindred wisdom traditions. The clearest case of this is the proverb cited in 2 Peter 2:22: "When the sow has been washed, it wallows in the mud." A fuller version of the same proverb appears in Syriac Ahiqar 8:18: "My son, thou hast been to me like the swine that had been to the baths, and when it saw a muddy ditch, went down and washed in it . . ." (cf. Arm. Ah 8:24a; Ar. 8:15). Stories about unfruitful trees (Syr. Ah 8:35 [parallels in Arm. and Ar.]; Lk 13:6–9) appear in various places in ancient Near Eastern wisdom literature.<sup>54</sup> Proverbial conventions about untrustworthy stewards who beat their subordinates and get drunk when their masters go away may be seen behind the description of Nadin's behavior in Ahiqar's household (Ah 4:15 [Syr., Ar.; cf. Arm.]) and the Synoptic parable concerning the dishonest steward (Mt 24:48–51; Lk 12:45–46). Another such example is the notion that an ineffective or offensive bodily member should be gotten rid of—a hand cut off or an eye plucked out (Syr. Ah 8:20; Ar. 8:18–19; Mk 9:43, 47; Mt 5:29–30; 18:8–9).

<sup>54</sup>Cf. Elephantine saying 73 and the Babylonian fable cited in 73, n. m.

These parallels, taken together, do not prove that the biblical writers were familiar with Ahiqar. The most probable case of direct influence of Ahiqar on the Bible is the proverb about the pig who took a bath, and even that may have been a widely known saying in antiquity.<sup>55</sup> The most that can be said with confidence is that there is evidence in Ahiqar and the Bible of a common reliance upon similar idioms, literary conventions, and wisdom themes.

Biblical diction has evidently influenced the later versions in a few places. The biblical phrase "Most High God, creator of the heavens and of the earth" in the Arabic Ahiqar has been noted above (see "Theological Importance"). The Arabic also has a saying which may well be a reflex of the New Testament injunction to "love your enemies": "If thine enemy wrong thee, show him kindness" (2:19; Mt 5:43-48; Lk 6:27-36; Rom 12:14, 17, 20-21). The fable of the fruitless palm tree, mentioned above, concludes in the Syriac version, "Thou hast not been industrious in what is thine own, how wilt thou be industrious in what is not thine own?" (8:35). This wording, unlike that in the other versions, may possibly have been suggested to the Syriac scribe by the language of the parable of the talents: "You have shown you can be faithful in small things, I will trust you with greater" (Mt 25:21, 23; cf. Luke 19:12-27). And the wording of Nadin's plea for forgiveness, "Father, I have sinned against thee. Forgive me, and I will be a slave unto thee henceforth and forever" (Arm. 8:24b; cf. Syr. 8:34), may be influenced by the phraseology of the parable of the prodigal son (Lk 15:18-19, 21).

In such cases, it is difficult, if not impossible, to be certain who (if anyone) has influenced whom. This is necessarily so in view of the gaps in our knowledge of the development of the Ahiqar tradition. There was, it is certain, a pre-Christian Jewish version of Ahiqar. It is possible that sayings from Ahiqar were current in first-century Palestine (or Egypt or Syria) and were known to the Gospel writers or to Jesus himself. They could have even been familiar with a written text of Ahiqar. But that version is lost. Except for a few fragments which have survived in quotations elsewhere, all we have for comparison is a text which is older by centuries and a group of translations which are centuries younger.

The older text, the Aramaic, does not bear any close verbal similarity to the New Testament and only a limited similarity to the Old. But of course the first-century version must have differed substantially from this Aramaic text and may have contained some of the New Testament parallels cited above. On the other hand the late versions do show apparent parallels with the New Testament at a number of points. But those versions come to us from the hands of Christian scribes who did not think it amiss to introduce biblical idioms into their texts. Thus every seeming biblical parallel in them is suspect unless supported by pre-Christian evidence. Where that evidence is lacking, we can go no farther than to speak of unsupported possibilities. Even where such testimony is to be found, it must, for reasons already given, be treated cautiously. The conclusion drawn by some older writers that Jesus and the evangelists must have known Ahiqar<sup>56</sup> goes considerably beyond the evidence.

Relation to apocryphal books

The author of Tobit is well acquainted with the story of Ahiqar and his deceitful kinsman ('Nadab').<sup>57</sup> Chapter 1, verses 21-22 depicts Tobit as the uncle of Ahiqar<sup>58</sup> and lists the latter's official titles:

<sup>55</sup> But see n. 77, on J. R. Harris's attempt to trace the proverb back through Clement of Alexandria to Democritus, and ultimately to Ah. The motif is a nearly universal one; cf. e.g. "Piglet Has a Bath," in A. A. Milne, Winnie-the-Pooh (New York, 1926, 1961) pp. 104-09! The question of biblical parallels with Ah is discussed in detail by J. R. Harris et al. in Ahiqar, pp. lvi-lxiii, and more briefly by the same writer in R. H. Charles (ed.), APOT, vol. 2, pp. 718f., including further possible, though more doubtful, parallels.

<sup>56</sup> E.g. Harris et al., Ahiqar, p. lxiii: "A new volume has . . . been added to our Lord's library" [Harris's italics].

<sup>57</sup> The textual traditions in Tob concerning the names of Ahiqar (spelled "Ahiqar" in The Jerusalem Bible) and his nephew are badly garbled. Ahiqar is generally Achiacharos in Vaticanus and Alexandrinus, for which Manassēs is substituted in 14:10 (third occurrence). The spelling in Sinaiticus is different at almost every occurrence of the name. The Syr. has 'hywr (cf. Vulgate Achior, Tob 11:20 [Gk. v. 18]), 'hyhwr and 'qyqr. The nephew's name in the Gk. traditions appears variously as Nadab (probably the original Gk. reading), Nasbas, Nabad, Adam, and Aman; in the Syr. Tob it is nbws, lbn, 'dm, and 'kb.

<sup>58</sup> The Tob tradition seems to be confused also in the matter of the relationship of Ahiqar, Nadab, and Tobit. In Ahikar, the son of my brother Anael, was appointed chancellor of the exchequer for the kingdom and given the main ordering of affairs. Ahikar then interceded for me and I was allowed to return to Nineveh, since Ahikar had been chief cupbearer, keeper of the signet, administrator and treasurer under Sennacherib, king of Assyria, and Esarhaddon had kept him in office.

At the end of the book, Tobit concludes his deathbed instructions to Tobias by drawing a moral from the story of Ahikar:

Consider, my child, all that Nadab did to his fosterfather Ahikar. Was he not forced to go underground, though still a living man? But God made the criminal pay for his outrage before the eyes of his victim, since Ahikar came back to the light of day, while Nadab went down to everlasting darkness in punishment for plotting against Ahikar's life. Because of his good works (eleēmosynē) Ahikar escaped the deadly snare Nadab had laid for him, and Nadab fell into it to his own ruin. (14:10)

Ahikar's name is also mentioned briefly in 2:10 ("... Ahikar provided for my upkeep for two years, till he left for Elymais") and 11:18.<sup>59</sup>

Evidently the author of Tobit knew Ahikar in a form not identical with either the Elephantine text or the later versions. Unlike the late recensions, Tobit has Sennacherib and Esarhaddon in the correct order. (The author may in this instance be correcting his source on the basis of more accurate information from the OT.) The elaboration of the original story which characterizes the late versions has already begun in the version known by Tobit, which mentions Ahikar's underground hiding place (14:10), a detail not found in the Elephantine text. Tobit's version must also have suppressed the polytheistic traits of the original.<sup>60</sup> This is inferred from the fact that Tobit, a devout Jew, is said to be related to Ahikar (1:21–22) and to have lived with him for two years (2:10). He also has high praise for Ahikar's virtue (14:10). It is entirely possible that Tobit's version explicitly described Ahikar as Jewish. Even if not, it can hardly have depicted him as a gentile worshiper of other gods, as the late recensions (particularly the Arm.) still do.<sup>61</sup>

It is not clear whether Tobit may also allude to additional events in the career of his distinguished relative which are not found in any of the extant versions of Ahikar. The reference to Ahikar's departure "to Elymais" (2:10) is perplexing. No such incident is otherwise known. The words could refer to a lost episode in the narrative, but it is more likely that they are an error in the Greek of Tobit<sup>62</sup> or that they simply refer to the Egyptian<sup>63</sup> episode with the locale changed.<sup>64</sup>

At least one of the sayings of Ahikar from the late versions is found also in Tobit, albeit 11:18, Ahikar and Nadab appear to be cousins of Tobit. Because of the various forms in which the name of Ahikar's kinsman appears, it is quite possible that at some stage in the editing of the text of Tob the hero's cousin (11:18) and Ahikar's foster son (14:10) were understood as two different individuals.

<sup>59</sup> In Sinaiticus, his name is repeated again in 14:15.

<sup>60</sup> It is assumed that the version of Ah known to the author of Tob contained both narrative and sayings, since at least one of the sayings is found in Tob. Note that in the Elephantine version the polytheistic features are found only in the sayings, whereas in the late versions they appear only in the narrative.

<sup>61</sup> The details of Ahikar's Jewish ancestry may, of course, have been invented by the author of Tob to integrate Ahikar more closely into his story.

<sup>62</sup> It has been suggested that the Gk. translator of Tob misunderstood a Heb. phrase in his Vorlage to the effect that Ahikar went "to his hiding place" (a form of the root 'lm) as saying he went to Elymais (Heb. 'lmy). For a critical evaluation of the proposal, see F. Zimmerman, The Book of Tobit (New York, 1958) p. 58n.

<sup>63</sup> D. C. Simpson in R. H. Charles, APOT, vol. 1, p. 186, has made the less plausible suggestion that the author of Tob (or possibly the adapter of the version of Ah which he knew) intentionally altered "Egypt" to "Elymais" on theological grounds: It was unthinkable that a righteous Jewish sage should travel to the wicked Egyptian court to demonstrate his wisdom.

<sup>64</sup> Also unclear is the source of the reference in Tob 14:10 to Ahikar's being saved from death because of his eleēmosynē (the Gk. word may be translated either "good works" or "almsgiving"). None of the versions of Ah stresses his "good works" (though of course he did save Nabusumiskun), and none of them speaks at all of his "almsgiving," the sense in which Tob uses eleēmosynē elsewhere in the passage. The Syr. Ah does, however, say that the sage was kept alive because of his righteousness (k'nwr; 8:2, 37), and J. R. Harris is probably correct in seeing an original Semitic šdqh ("righteousness" and "almsgiving" in post-biblical Heb. and Aram.) behind Ahikar's eleēmosynē in the Tob passage (Ahikar, pp. 1–1ii). One need not agree with Harris's suggestion to translate k'nwr as "almsgiving" in the Syr. Ah. To the phrase in question, cf. the statement in Prov 11:4 that "virtuous conduct (šdqh) delivers from death," and the use of šdqh in Elephantine saying 78.

in a somewhat distorted form: "Pour out your wine [Gk.: "Place your bread"] on the grave of the righteous, but give not to sinners" (4:17).<sup>65</sup> This comes directly from the Ahiqar saying "My son, pour out thy wine on the graves of the righteous, rather than drink it with evil men" (Syr. 2:10; cf. Arm. 2:7; Ar. 2:13).<sup>66</sup> The statement in Tobit 14:10 that Nadab fell into his own trap probably comes from "He that digs a pit for others, himself falls into the pit" (Arm. Ah 8:27; cf. Syr. 8:41; Ar. 8:38), though the idea is known elsewhere (cf. Ps 141:10). And the quotation of the golden rule in negative form in Tobit 4:15 is very possibly derived from Ahiqar: "Son, that which seems evil unto thee, do not to thy companion" (Arm. 8:88).<sup>67</sup>

Ben Sira, like the canonical Book of Proverbs, contains a considerable number of general parallels to the sayings in the Elephantine Ahiqar, but none so explicit as to suggest a direct relationship. As for relations with the late versions, Sirach 4:26, ". . . Do not strive against the current of a river," is often cited, though probably not correctly, as a borrowing from Syriac Ahiqar 2:65, ". . . Stand not against a river in its flood." The metaphor is a natural one and is used for quite different purposes in the two contexts.

Another possible, though uncertain, point of contact is found in Ben Sira 22:14–15:

What is heavier than lead,
and what is its name if not "fool"?
Sand, and salt, and a lump of iron
are all easier to bear than a doIt.

This may be compared to Armenian Ahiqar 2:69c: "I have lifted iron and I have lifted stones upon my shoulders, and it was better for me, than to dwell with the ignorant and the fool."<sup>68</sup> But the saying in Ben Sira may derive from a general wisdom cliché or may be a reformulation of Proverbs 27:3:

Heaviness of stone, weight of sand, heavier than both: annoyance from a fool.

It has been suggested that the figure of Achior the Ammonite in Judith (Jdt 5–6; 11:9–10; 14:5–10), who cautions Holofernes against attacking Israel and later is converted to Judaism, is patterned on Ahiqar.<sup>69</sup> But apart from the name (Ahiqar is called Achior in some of the versions of Tobit),<sup>70</sup> there is little similarity in the two figures beyond the fact that both are wise pagans who give advice to kings.

Given the wide distribution of Ahiqar during the hellenistic and Roman periods, it is surprising that it has left no trace in the writings that postdate it in the Pseudepigrapha.<sup>71</sup>

Cultural importance

The story of Ahiqar blends two literary themes: the disgrace and rehabilitation of a wise minister, and the treachery of an ungrateful kinsman. Both, particularly the former, are

<sup>65</sup> Translation of F. Zimmerman, Tobit, p. 71; cf. 70n. The Jerusalem Bible follows the Vulgate (cf. also Old Latin) in translating "Be generous with bread and wine on the graves of virtuous men, but not for the sinner."

<sup>66</sup> The Arm. omits the phrase "on the graves of the righteous," so that the original allusion to libations for the dead disappears. The confusion of the text in Tob 4:17 was probably abetted by Jewish uneasiness about a positive reference to this pagan custom (cf. Jub 22:17).

<sup>67</sup> Cf. Mt 7:12; Lk 6:31. That Ah was the source of Tob 4:15 seems likely in view of the proximity of the Ah quotation in Tob 4:17. But this is by no means certain, since the maxim (in positive and negative form) is widely attested in classical and Jewish literature. The earliest known occurrence is in Herodotus (5th cent. B.C.), and it is found often in later Gk. and Lat. writings. The earliest Jewish reference is in LetAris 207. A famous passage in the Talmud places the saying in the mouth of Hillel (b. Shab 31a), and it occurs also in TargYer on Lev 19:18. For further references and bibliography, see D. M. Beck, "Golden Rule, The," IDB 2, p. 438, and R. G. Hamerton-Kelley, "Golden Rule, The," IDBS, pp. 369f.

<sup>68</sup> The pairing of sand and salt as heavy burdens in Sir 22:15 could even be traced back to Elephantine saying 29.

<sup>69</sup> The Jerusalem Bible, p. 625, n. 5b.

<sup>70</sup> See n. 57.

<sup>71</sup> R. H. Charles, APOT, vol. 2, p. 291, notes a few parallels between Syr Ah and the T12P: Ah 2:20 [!] with TJos 18:2 (cf. TBenj 3:3) and Ah 2:19 with TReu 4:1; TJud 17:1; Tlss 4:4; TBenj 8:2. None of these indicates direct influence.

well-known motifs in the folklore of many peoples<sup>72</sup> and can be documented in Babylonian literature originating well before the composition of Ahiqar.<sup>73</sup> The wisdom traditions to which the sapiential portion of the text is heir are also extremely ancient in the Near East. Collections of instructions attributed to wise viziers of famous kings and designed to edify young men being trained for court service were being composed in Egypt before the beginning of the second millennium, and the Sumerians and Babylonians were writing proverbs almost as early.<sup>74</sup> The narrative and sayings of Ahiqar were written in a cultural world in which their genre and themes were already ancient.

If it is correct that the proverbial portion of the text represents sayings current among the Aramaic-speaking population of Syria in the sixth or seventh century (or even earlier), that is of particular importance for the study of Old Testament wisdom literature. It means that in this text, as in no other, we have an independent record of the wisdom traditions of one of Israel's immediate neighbors, dating from the period when much of Israel's own wisdom literature was being formed and collected.<sup>75</sup>

By the intertestamental period and the early centuries of the Christian era, there is abundant evidence that the story and sayings of Ahiqar were widely known throughout the Near East and the Mediterranean world. In Greece, Ahiqar's name and wisdom seem to have been known from as early as the fifth century B.C. Clement of Alexandria accuses Democritus (5th cent.) of plagiarizing the content of a "stele of Ahiqar (Akikaros)," and the Arab philosopher Shahrastānī attributes to the same "Democrates" (sic) several proverbs known from the later versions of Ahiqar,<sup>76</sup> including one which can be traced back to the Elephantine version (59).<sup>77</sup> Just when the Greek Life of Aesop, a portion of which is extracted from a Greek version of Ahiqar, was written is not known. L. W. Daly dates it as early as the fifth century B.C.<sup>78</sup> Diogenes Laertius (3rd cent. A.D.) includes a book entitled Akikharos in his list of the works of Theophrastus (4th to 3rd cent. B.C.), and Strabo (1st cent. B.C. to 1st cent. A.D.) also makes mention of Ahiqar.

Ahiqar was better known in Jewish circles (apart from the Elephantine community) than the references in Tobit and scant parallels elsewhere in the Apocrypha would indicate. Several of the sayings from the Syriac can be found in the Talmud and Midrash,<sup>79</sup> one of which is also found in the Elephantine text (30). In the Koran (Sura 31) there are several sayings by the legendary Arab wise man Luqman, one of which appears to be derived from Ahiqar, and there is evidence from elsewhere in Muslim traditions that the figure of Luqman is patterned upon Aesop and Ahiqar.<sup>80</sup> Traces of the story have been detected in the folklore of Persia and India.<sup>81</sup>

<sup>72</sup> A. H. Krappé, "Is the Story of Ahiqar the Wise of Indian Origin?" JAOS 61 (1941) 280-84. See further Stith Thompson, Motif-Index of Folk Literature (Indiana University Studies 19-22; Bloomington, 1932-36) K 2101, K 2214.3, K 2214.3.1.

<sup>73</sup> E. Reiner, "The Etiological Myth of the 'Seven Sages,'" Orientalia N.S. 30 (1961) 1-11.

<sup>74</sup> The best collections of this literature are E. Gordon, Sumerian Proverbs (Philadelphia, 1959); W. G. Lambert, Babylonian Wisdom Literature (Oxford, 1960); and the section on "Didactic and Wisdom Literature" in ANET.

<sup>75</sup> Note that Hezekiah, whose name is linked by biblical tradition with the transmission of Israelite wisdom (Prov 25:1) and under whose sponsorship a collection of older Israelite wisdom was probably made, is a contemporary of Sennacherib and therefore of Ahiqar.

<sup>76</sup> Syr. 2:38 (and parallels in Arm., Ar., Eth., and the Life of Aesop); 2:39 (and parallels); 2:53 (and parallels).

<sup>77</sup> Paralleled in Arm. Ah 2:8. J. R. Harris states (in Charles, APOT, vol. 2, p. 717) that Clement attributes the proverb about the pig (see "Relation to Canonical Books") to Democritus. This, however, is incorrect. The passage from Clement (Exhortation to the Greeks 75 [ch.10]) reads: "Pigs, it is said, delight in mud more than in clean water, and are wild about filth, according to Democritus" (Hyes gar phēsin hēdantai borborō mallon ē katharō hydati kai epi phorytō margainousin kata Dēmokritou). Only the last clause ("are wild about filth") is attributed to Democritus. (Plutarch [De tuenda sanitate 14] also credits Democritus with the words.) That is a rather commonplace notion for which there is no reason to suspect Ah of being the source. (Harris gives the words less accurately as "wallow in a drain.") The first half of the sentence, for which Clement does not name his source ("it is said") is a quotation not from Ah but from Heraclitus; see Diels, Die Fragmente der Vorsokratiker, ed. W. Kranz. (Dublin and Zürich, 1966<sup>12</sup>) vol. 2, p. 154, # 13. On the saying quoted from Democritus, see Diels, vol. 2, p. 171, # 147. Thus the alleged parallel to Ah disappears. (See also above, n. 55.)

<sup>78</sup> Aesop Without Morals, pp. 21f.

<sup>79</sup> Full documentation is given by A. Yellin, The Book of Ahiqar the Wise (Jerusalem, 1937<sup>2</sup>) p. 13 (in Modern Heb.).

<sup>80</sup> J. R. Harris et al., Ahiqar, pp. lxxv-lxxxii. A. Furayḥāh (Ahiqar: Wise Man of the Ancient Near East (American University of Beirut Oriental Series 40; Beirut, 1962 [in Ar.]) has studied in detail the Ar. traditions relating to Ah.

<sup>81</sup> A. H. Krappé, "Is the Story of Ahiqar the Wise of Indian Origin?" JAOS 61 (1941) 280-84.

The continued popularity of the work in the Near East is evidenced by the fact that it was still being copied in Arabic as late as the eighteenth century and in Syriac as late as the end of the nineteenth. It is included in a supplement to some printed editions of the Thousand and One Nights. The Armenian version went through numerous printed editions in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries.<sup>82</sup> The Slavonic and particularly the Romanian versions provide evidence for the transmission of the text in Europe until recent centuries.

But the influence of Ahiqar on Western culture in general has been very slight. A Roman mosaic in Trier (3rd cent. A.D.) depicts a wise man named “. . . ICAR,” plausibly restored as [AC]ICAR(US), seated before the Muse Polymnia.<sup>83</sup> And the twelfth-century Fables of Marie de France contain a Norman French versification of the story of the wolf who went to school (Syr. Ah 8:36 and parallels).<sup>84</sup> Otherwise, Ahiqar does not appear to have had any impact on Western literature and art. If Ahiqar has influenced modern culture at all, it is likely that evidence will be forthcoming not so much from the field of literature and the fine arts as from the realm of folklore and proverb.<sup>85</sup>

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 75–77.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 201–14.

Cowley, A. E. Aramaic Papyri of the Fifth Century B.C. Oxford, 1923 (repr. Osabrück, 1967); pp. 204–48. (Long the standard English edition. Transcription, translation, and nn. incorporating most of the significant proposals made by others for revising Sachau's readings. Fairly complete bibliography of scattered publications 1911–16.)

Ginsberg, H. L. “The Words of Ahiqar,” in Ancient Near Eastern Texts, ed. J. B. Pritchard. Princeton, 1969<sup>3</sup>; pp. 427–30. (Excellent ET of the better-preserved portions. Footnotes give biblical parallels and a few observations on the text. Select bibliography.)

<sup>82</sup> F. C. Conybeare, in The Story of Ahiqar, pp. 174–76, cites quotations in Arm. writers from the 5th to 13th cents. A.D. Illuminated MSS are also not unknown in the Arm. Ah tradition. See the 16th-cent. MS page reproduced in EncyJud 2, col. 462, which depicts Ahiqar admonishing Nadin.

<sup>83</sup> The mosaic is published in Antike Denkmäler herausgegeben vom kaiserlichen deutschen archäologischen Institut 1.4 (Berlin, 1890) Plate 48. See also the article of W. Studemund (“Zum Mosaik des Monnus,” Jahrbuch des kaiserlichen deutschen archäologischen Instituts 5 [1890] 1–5), who first proposed the identification of the figure in the mosaic with Ahiqar. The mosaic, much of which is damaged, includes nine octagons, each showing one of the Muses with a symbol of the art over which she presides, and the figure of a person skilled in that art, notably Homer and Aratus, a hellenistic writer on astronomy. (There are also several rectangles with busts of famous poets and authors, including Vergil and Menander.)

Studemund cites a Gk. literary tradition which apparently suggested the subject matter of the mosaic octagons: lists of the nine Muses, the realm of knowledge with which each is associated, and the names of the inventors or famous practitioners of the arts. Two of the entries in these lists correspond to figures paired in the mosaic: Calliope-Homer (poetry) and Urania-Aratus (astronomy). Polymnia appears in the lists not with Ahiqar but with Euclid (geometry). It is not certain that Polymnia represents geometry in the mosaic. The object she holds in her hands is unrecognizable, and other classical traditions identifying specific functions for each Muse are late and inconsistent. The Aram. Ah does not portray the sage as a geometrician, but in the Syr., Ahiqar is sent to Egypt in answer to Pharaoh's demand for a “skilled architect” to consult on building a castle between heaven and earth (5:2). Studemund suggests that the name of Ahiqar and some of the other less familiar names in the mosaic may have been known to the artist from Clement of Alexandria.

<sup>84</sup> J. R. Harris et al., Ahiqar, pp. lxxxiiif.

<sup>85</sup> The most thorough studies of the Ahiqar traditions by folklorists were made around the end of the 19th and the beginning of the 20th cents., before the publication of the Elephantine text. Further bibliography can be found in the studies of Krappé and Thompson listed in n. 72. Furayḥah, Ahiqar, draws attention to a number of modern Ar. proverbs which are paralleled in Ah.

- Grelot, P. Documents araméens d'Égypte. Paris, 1972; pp. 427–52. (Up-to-date introduction and annotated French translation of narrative and proverbs. A revision of his earlier study of the proverbs [only], "Les proverbes araméens d'Ahiqar," RB 68 [1961] 178–94.)
- Lindenberger, J. M. The Aramaic Proverbs of Ahiqar. Baltimore, London, 1983. (New edition and detailed commentary on the proverbs [only] citing parallels from the OT, ancient Near Eastern literature, and the late versions.)
- Rosenthal, F. An Aramaic Handbook. Wiesbaden, 1967; vol. 1.2, pp. 15f.; vol. 1.2, pp. 8–15. (Aram. transcription of the text [ll. 17–21, 41–64, 79–83, 100–5, 118–20a, 165f.] and glossary, including a number of valuable original proposals for restoration. No connected translation.)
- Sachau, E. Aramäische Papyrus und Ostraka aus einer jüdischen Militär-Kolonie zu Elephantine, 2 vols. (Leipzig, 1911). (First edition of the Aram. Ah, containing the only published photographs of the papyrus [Plates 40–50], with transcription, German translation, and brief commentary.)

ON THE LATE VERSIONS:

- Charles, R. H. (ed.). The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament in English. Oxford, 1913 (repr. 1968); vol. 2, pp. 715–84. (Reproduces the ETs from J. R. Harris et al., The Story of Ahiqar, of the Syr., Ar., and Arm. in parallel columns with v. numbers, and includes separately a translation of the Eth. fragments and the English and Gk. of the Aesop Life. Insofar as possible, parallels in the present edition are cited from Charles.<sup>86</sup>)
- Daly, L. W. Aesop Without Morals. New York, 1961. (ET of a second recension of the Life of Aesop [pp. 31–90], and the best modern language translation of the Fables. The Gk. and Lat. originals are edited by B. E. Perry, Aesopica I [Urbana, Ill., 1952].)
- Gaster, Moses. "Contributions to the History of Ahiqar and Nadan," JRAS 21 (1911) 301–19. (Translation of the Romanian Ahiqar.<sup>87</sup>)
- Harris, J. R., F. C. Conybeare, and A. S. Lewis. The Story of Ahiqar. Cambridge, 1913<sup>2</sup>. (Detailed introduction and the standard edition of the versions, including the original texts of the Syr., Arm., Ar. [Karshuni], and Old Turkish; ETs of these and the Slavonic and Eth.; as well as relevant parallels from one recension of the Gk. Life of Aesop. There is also a partial ET of the Elephantine text, based on Sachau.)

<sup>86</sup> For the OCS and Old Turkish, which do not appear in Charles, references are given to Harris. The late versions have not been translated anew for this edition. Quotations from them reproduce the archaic English style adopted in the works of Charles and Harris.

<sup>87</sup> For bibliography on the Georgian, Russ., and Serbian versions, see W. Lüdtkke, "Beiträge zu slavischen Apokryphen," ZAW 31 (1911) 218f. These versions, the Georgian translated from Arm., and the Russ. and Serbian from Slavonic, are of little importance for the early history of the text and have not been utilized in the present study. The same is true of the neo-Syr., which is a late translation of an Ar. original.

AHIQAR

I. THE NARRATIVE

Introduction

Col. I 1 [These are the wor]ds of one Ahiqar,<sup>a</sup> a wise and skillful scribe,<sup>b</sup> which he
2 taught his son. N[ow he did not have offspring •of his own, but]<sup>c</sup> he said,
“I shall nevertheless have a son!” Prior to this,<sup>d</sup> Ahiqar had [become a 3 gre]at man; he had [become counselor of all Assyria •and ke]jeper of the seal<sup>e</sup> of Sennacherib, king of Assy[ria. He used to say, “I] may not have 4 any sons,<sup>f</sup> but •Sennacherib, king of Assyria, relies [on my counsel] and advice.”<sup>g</sup> 8

Death of Sennacherib. Ahiqar trains his nephew to succeed him

5 A[t that time Senna]cherib, k[ing of Assyria, died, and] •his son Esarhaddon<sup>h</sup> [arose] and became king in Assyria in pla[ce of his fa]ther [Sennacherib].
6 [Then I said (to myself),<sup>i</sup> •“I am] growing old.” [So I] se[nt] for [my] 7 nep[hew, so that he might succeed me at] my death [and become] •scribe and keeper of the se[al for [King] Es[arhaddon just as I was for Sennacherib, 8 king] of Assyria. Then I [adopted Nadin, my] nep[hew, as my son. I 9 reared him and trained him]<sup>k</sup> •and taught him wisdom. And I was generous to him<sup>l</sup> and i[n]stalled him in the] palace [ga]te<sup>m</sup> with [me before the king 10 in the midst of] •his courtiers.

Nadin is presented to Esarhaddon

I brought him before Esarhaddon, king of Assyria, and the k[ing questioned 11 him] concerning wisdom, [and he told him every]thing •he asked.<sup>n</sup> Then Esarhaddon, king of Assyria, gave him his approval<sup>o</sup> and said (to me), 12 “May your life [be prolonged],<sup>p</sup> •O wise [s]cribe, counselor of all Assyria,

Col. I a. Lit. “Ahiqar, his name.” The same idiom, a common one in Imperial Aram., is used to introduce Esarhaddon (l. 5) and Nadin (l. 18). On Ahiqar’s name, see Introduction, n. 30.

b. The ancient Near Eastern scribe, no mere copyist, was a master of the literary arts and a learned scholar. Such persons were often sought out by kings to serve as advisers and officials; cf. 1Chr 27:32; Ezra 7:6; etc. The Akkadian text in which Ahiqar’s name appears (see “Historical Importance”) describes him as ummānu (“scholar, savant”) of Esarhaddon.

c. Restoring conjecturally w[ʔ]zr P hwh lh w]mr. Ahiqar may have been an eunuch; see l. 63, n. n.

d. Lit. “before his words.”

e. Lit. “[bearer] of the signet ring.” Compare Ahiqar’s titles in the Syriac version: “sage and secretary” (1:1; 8:41; cf. 4:1; 5:5), “Secretary and Great Seal” (ʔzqr; 3:8, 9, 11; 6:18); and the titles in Tob 1:21–22. The exact background of the title [s]byt ʔzqh in the Elephantine text has been much debated; see J. C. Greenfield, “Studies in Aramaic Lexicography I,” JAOS 82 (1962) 292f., 297–99.

f. Reading [yʔmr ʔn]h lm bnn lʔ ly].

g. The clause, restored according to ll. 43, 60f., is elliptical; lit. “on my advice and my words is S., king of A.”

h. Lit. “E., his name, his son”; see n. a. (smh has been inserted above the line.) The late recs. generally invert the order of Sennacherib and Esarhaddon.

i. Or “he said.” The narrative begins in the third person but changes to the first. Because of the state of the MS, it is not certain whether this change takes place in l. 5 or l. 8.

j. The restoration šb [ʔnh wš]l[ħt] lbr ʔ[ħyʔ] whw yhip ly ʔl ĩ]wryʔ [wyhwh] just fits the space and the fragmentary letters.

k. To restore ʔn[ħ] lqht ndn] br ʔ[ħty lbyr wrbyth wʔlpth] will exactly fit the lacunae and is closely paralleled in the late versions.

l. Lit. “I gave (him) what is good” or “. . . good things,” reading wʔbr y[ħbt]. For the idiom, see Heb. Ps 85:13, especially cf. Targum and Peshitta.

m. I.e. the royal council chamber; cf. lines 17, 23, 44.

n. Grelot’s restoration, whkmh m[lk] ʔlh wʔmr kl zly, is plausible though somewhat long.

o. Lit. “loved him.”

p. Restoring tentatively hyn s[gyʔn lk wyħwšwš]. Cowley’s restoration of Pħqr instead of lk is too long.

who raised up his [neph]ew to be his son, since [he had] no son of his 13 own." •[When the king of Assyria [said this], I, Ahīqar, bowed low in obedience to Esarh[addon, king of] Assyria.

Nadin succeeds Ahīqar at the court

14 [Some time later, when I, A]hīqar, saw that Esarhaddon, king of Assyria, 15 was favorably disposed, I addressed •[the king and said], "I [served] your 16 father, King [Sennach]erib, [wh]o ruled [before you] •[ . . . . . ]<sup>q</sup> [Now]
Col. II 17 I am growing old. I can no longer perform my duties in the palace gate 18 [or continue my service to you.] •But my son Nadin<sup>a</sup> has grown up.<sup>b</sup> Let 19 him succeed me as scribe [and counselor of all Assyria], •and let him be [kee]per of the seal for you! For [I have taught him] my wisdom and 20 co[unsel]." Esarhaddon, •ki]ng of Assyria, replied to me, "Very well, [your 21 son] shall [be scribe and counselor and keeper of the seal for me] •in your place. He shall do your work [for me]." Now when I, Ahīqar, heard him 22 prom]ise [this],<sup>c</sup> I went back home [and went into retirement there.]

The treachery of Nadin

23 [And as for this son of mine, •whom] I [had reared] and installed in the 24 palace gate [before Esarhaddon, king of Assyria, in the midst of •hi]s [courtiers], I thought, "He will promo[te my] welfare, [just as I did his."
25 (But) then •my nep]hew, whom I reared, devised [a wicked] plot against me and thought to himself], •"[This is what] I can s[ay] (to the king): 'This 27 old Ahīqar, who was keeper of the seal] •for your father, King Sennache[ri]b, [is subverting the land against you,<sup>d</sup> for] he is a wise [counselor and scribe], 28 on whose counsel and ad[vice all Assyria used to rely.]' Then], when 29 [Esarhaddon] •hears [my report],<sup>e</sup> he will be greatly enraged, [and will 30 order Ahīqar killed.'" So] •when this false son of mine<sup>f</sup> had devised [this 31 lie against me, . . . ] •[ . . . . . ]<sup>g</sup>

Ahīqar is placed under death sentence

Col. III 32.33 [Then Es]arhaddon, king of Assyria, [flew into a rage],<sup>a</sup> and said, •["Bring me Nabusumiskun, on]e of my father's officers, who [was] on his staff."<sup>b</sup>

q. Grelot (Documents) inserts the sayings (ll. 79–223) at this point. Though the original sequence of cols. in the fragmentary papyrus is not known, Grelot's arrangement is hardly plausible. By this point in the story, the young man has already been instructed in wisdom (ll. 9–11). L. 17 is simply the continuation of the audience with Esarhaddon which begins on l. 15. See also "Relation of Narrative and Sayings."

Col. II a. On the name Nadin (also restored in l. 8), see Introduction, n. 30.

b. Lit. "Behold, N., his name, my son, has grown up." See l. 1, n. a.

c. Lit. "[heard the word g]iven," following Cowley's restoration [šm:t ml'r y]hyb<sup>b</sup> and taking the last word as passive participle third person feminine singular spelled with final aleph. The restoration and exact idiom are uncertain.

d. Cowley's restoration, based on the repetition of the accusation in l. 36, is reasonably certain, but hbl is better translated as active participle than perfect.

e. Lit. "hears words [like these which I will say to him]."

f. Lit. "my son who was not my son."

g. The end of l. 30 and another line must have related briefly how the plot was carried out and Ahīqar was denounced for treason. The late versions elaborate considerably on the plot: Nadin forges letters in Ahīqar's name to the kings of Persia and Egypt, offering to surrender Assyria to them if they will meet him at a specified rendezvous. At the same time, he writes a letter to Ahīqar purporting to be from the king ordering the sage to muster his troops and meet him at the spot named in the letters to the foreign kings. The nephew then shows the king copies of the letters to Egypt and Persia, and takes him to the rendezvous to show him Ahīqar with all his forces drawn up, as final proof of the old man's treachery.

Col. III a. The entire right margin is lost, but the repetitious language of the narrative allows the restoration of some lines with considerable probability (e.g. ll. 36, 44), establishing the approximate position of the margin.

b. Lit. "who [ate] my father's bread."

34 [(Then) the king said (to Nabusumiskun)], “Seek [Ahiqar] out, (and)
35 wherever you find (him), •[kill him!] Otherwise that old [Ah]iqa[r]—wise 36 scribe •[and counselor of all Assy]ria that he was—is liable to subvert<sup>c</sup> the 37 land against us.” When •[the king of A]ssyria [had said this], he appointed 38 two other men with him to observe how •[(the execution) should be carried out]. (Then) officer [Nab]usumiskun<sup>d</sup> rode [away] on a swif[t h]orse, 39 accompanied by [those men].

Ahiqar is found and hears of Nadin’s treachery

40 After three d[a]ys had gone by, •[he and the o]ther [men] accompanying him c[ought sight of me] as I was walking along among the vineyards.
41 [As soon as] officer [Nab]usumiskun saw me, he tore his cloak and lamented:
42 [“Is it you], O wise scribe and master of good counsel, who [used to be a 43 righteous] man, •[and o]n whose counsel and advice all Assyria used to 44 rely? •[Your son whom you rear]ed,<sup>e</sup> whom you installed in the palace 45 gate, has denounced you.<sup>f</sup> He has ruined you, and turn[ed] •on you wickedly.”]<sup>g</sup>

Ahiqar asks to be spared

[Sudde]nly I, Ahiqar, was afraid, and I answered [officer] Nabusum[iskun], 46 “Indeed], I am the same Ahiqar<sup>h</sup> who once long ago<sup>i</sup> rescued you from 47 an undeserved death, •[when] King Esarhaddon’s father [Sennacherib] was 48 so angry with you •[that he sought to kill you.]<sup>j</sup> I took you [direc]tly to my
Col. IV 49 own house and provided for you there, •as a man would care for his own brother. I concealed you from him, saying, ‘I have killed him,’ until an 50 oppor[tune ti]me.<sup>a</sup> Then, after •a long time, I presented you to King Sennacherib and cleared you of the charges against you<sup>b</sup> in his presence, 51 so that •he did you no ha[rm]. Indeed, King Sennacherib was grateful to me for having kept you alive rather than killing you. Now it is your turn 52 to treat me as I treated you.<sup>c</sup> Do not kill me, (but) take me to your house
53 un[til] the times change.<sup>d</sup> •King Esarhaddon is known to be<sup>e</sup> a merciful man. He will eventually think of me and wish for my counsel. Th[en] you 54 can [br]ing me to him and he will let me live.”

c. Lit. “Why should he subvert . . . ?”

d. Lit. “that officer [Nab]usumiskun”; so also to be restored in ll. 41, 45–46. On the name, see Introduction, n. 30.

e. Restoring [brk zy rby]t at the beginning of l. 44.

f. The material reading of the word translated “has denounced you” is uncertain and the clause has been variously translated. Cowley may be correct in reading yr<sup>c</sup>k, although there is a small trace of ink below and to the left of the second letter, which may be the left stroke of a b. yr<sup>c</sup> would be construed as Pa<sup>c</sup>el, Perf. of the root yr<sup>c</sup> (a by-form of r<sup>c</sup>), lit. “to harm, injure someone.” Grelot’s reading brk “your son” (followed by [br<sup>c</sup>]) at the beginning of l. 44) cannot possibly fit the traces.

g. More lit. “[it is a wicked] turn,” reading wrwb<sup>c</sup> [lhy<sup>c</sup> hw]. wrwb<sup>c</sup> is construed as a noun (masc. def.) derived from rwb, meaning approximately “recompense, turn.” Cf. the form (though not the meanings) of Jewish Aram. lābdā and Syr. lawbdā from the same root. The restorations of Rosenthal (rwb<sup>c</sup> [b<sup>c</sup>ys<sup>c</sup> bd]) and Cowley (rwb<sup>c</sup> [b<sup>c</sup>ys<sup>c</sup> hw]) are too long for the space.

h. Restoring [p] before <sup>nh</sup>. An alternative reading is that of Rosenthal: [P], “[Am] I [not] the same Ahiqar . . . ?”

i. Aram. qdmn here appears adverbially without preposition, in the same sense as Jewish Aram. mlqdmyn.

j. Lit. simply “was angry with you [to kill you]”; [lmqt]k.

Col. IV a. Lit. “until ano[ther ti]me.”

b. Lit. “I took away your offences.”

c. Lit. “Now you, just as I did to you, so therefore do to me”; cf. Tob 4:15; Mt 7:12.

d. Or simply “for a while”; lit. “un[til] other days.” The idiom [d] lywmm hrnn seems to have a different sense from lywmm hrnn šgy<sup>n</sup> in ll. 49–50.

e. Translated ad sensum. The exact meaning of kmnd<sup>c</sup> is uncertain, though it appears to be derived from the root yd<sup>c</sup>, “to know.” It may be the common Aram. noun manda<sup>c</sup>, “knowledge” in the sense “known, something known,” or it may be related to Imperial Aram. mnd<sup>c</sup>m, mnd<sup>c</sup>m<sup>c</sup> (Syr. meddem), “anything” (Rosenthal: “like anything” = “extraordinarily merciful”; Cowley: “kind as any man”; similarly Ginsberg).

Nabusumiskun agrees, and a ruse is contrived

55 Then officer Nabusumiskun [re]plied to me, "Have no fear, *my [lor]d'
 56 Ahiqar, father of all Assyria, on whose counsel King Sennacherib and [all] 57 the Assyrian Army *{used to rely}!" At once officer Nabusumiskun said to 58 his companions, those two men who were accompanying him, *{"List/en/
 59 Co[me near]}<sup>8</sup> to me and I will tell you [my] plan, and a [very] good plan
 59 Nabusumiskun, *what [yo]u th[ink], and we will obey you." Then [of]ficer 60 [Nabusumiskun] said [in reply] to them, "Listen to me: *This [Ahi]qar 61 was<sup>h</sup> a great man.<sup>i</sup> He was [King] Esarhaddon's [keeper of the se]al, and 62 all the [Assyr]ian army used to rely on his counsel and advice. Far be it 62 from us to kill him!<sup>j</sup> [There is<sup>k</sup> a] eunuch-[slave] of mine.<sup>l</sup> *Let him be 63 killed<sup>m</sup> between [the]se two mountains in place of this Ahiqar. Whe[n it is 63 reported], the king will [se]nd other [m]en *{af}ter us to see the body of this Ahiqar. Then [they will see the body] of [th]is eunuch-slave of mine<sup>n</sup>
 Col. V<sup>a</sup> 64 (and that will be the end of the matter) *until eventually [King] Esarhaddon 65 [thinks of Ahiqar and wishes for his counsel,<sup>b</sup> and grieves] *over him.
 (Then) [King] Esarhaddo[n]'s thoughts [will turn to me, and he will say to 66 his officers and courtiers], *I would give you riches as num[erous as grains 67 of sand, if only you could find Ahiqar.' *Now this plan] *seemed good to 68 his t[wo] companions. [They replied to officer Nabusumiskun], *{"Do as 69 you suggest. [Let us*not kill him, but you give us] *that eunuch-[slave] in place of [this] Ahiqar. [He shall be killed between these two mountains.]"

Ahiqar is hidden and the king is deceived

70 At that time word spread through the la[nd<sup>c</sup> of Assyria that Ahiqar,] King
 71 [Esarhaddon's scribe,] *had been put to death. Then [officer] Nabus[umiskun] 72 took me to his house and hid me.<sup>d</sup> Indeed,] *he provided for me there as [a man would care for his own brother. And he said to me . . . . "Bread 73,74 and water] *will be provided to my lord. I[ff . . . . .]" *He gave me] plenty of food and abun[dant] supplies. [Then officer Nabusumiskun] 75 went to Ki[ng] Esarhaddon [and said, "I have done as you commanded 76 me.] *I went and found [that] Ahiqar [and put him to death." Now when 77 King Esarhaddon heard this,] *he questioned the t[wo] men [whom he had appointed along with Nabusumiskun. And they said, "It happened just as] 78 he said." T[he]n, while [King] Esarha[ddon] . . . . .]

f. Following Ginsberg's reading [mr]y. An alternative reading is that of Cowley, [th]yy, "you shall [l]ive." The next-to-last letter is broken and can be either aleph or yod.

g. Restoring tentatively [nm h]s[lyrw] [p qr]b[w].

h. Or "This is [Ahi]qar. He was, etc."

i. The common Aram. noun rb, "great man, chief," is to be distinguished from rby / rby<sup>2</sup>, "officer," Nabusumiskun's title, which is probably of Akkadian derivation.

j. Lit. "As for us, let us not kill him." *nhnh is emphatic.

k. Restoring [yry] at the beginning of the lacuna (Rosenthal).

l. The slave is evidently Nabusumiskun's. In the late versions, the slave is Ahiqar's and is in prison awaiting execution for an unspecified crime.

m. The verb was omitted by the scribe, and later inserted above the line.

n. Though the story is not explicit, the nature of the ruse seems to imply that Ahiqar, like the young slave, was a eunuch.

Col. V a. Well over half of col. v has been lost. Only a portion of the right side of each line is preserved. Except where the phraseology parallels the better-preserved parts of the text, the missing words can be only very roughly restored by conjecture and by comparison with the late versions. The translation is based on Cowley's restoration.

b. Cf. I. 53.

c. Aram. bm[tr]wr is perhaps a better restoration than Cowley's bm[dynt]rwr. mdynh is ambiguous: "province," later "city."

d. In the Syr. and other late recs., Ahiqar is concealed by his benefactor in a tiny underground hiding place. This detail is known to the author of Tob (Tob 14:10); see "Relation to Apocryphal Books."

(At this point, the narrative breaks off. According to the later versions, when the king of Egypt hears that Ahīqar is dead, he writes the Assyrian monarch challenging him to send a wise man who can answer a series of riddles and supervise the construction of a palace between heaven and earth. Nadin declares that not even the gods themselves could meet the challenge.

The Assyrian is at his wits' end, and laments his lost sage, offering a rich reward if only Ahīqar could be returned to him alive. The officer, seeing the time is ripe, brings the old scribe out of hiding to receive the king's profuse apologies and reinstatement at the court. After a series of adventures in Egypt, Ahīqar returns to Assyria and asks permission to discipline Nadin. The young man is put in chains and beaten, after which Ahīqar addresses him with a long series of reproaches. The speech concluded, Nadin swells up and dies.

It cannot be ascertained how much of this was included in the Elephantine version. No doubt it was much shorter. The surviving fragments of the Aram. text have no trace of the Egyptian episode, and there may have originally been only a rather brief statement of Ahīqar's rehabilitation and the disgrace and punishment of his adopted son.)

II. THE SAYINGS

Col. VI

- 79 1 What is stronger than a braying ass? . . . .<sup>a</sup>
- 80 2 The son who is instructed and restrained, and on whose foot the bar<sup>b</sup> is placed, [will prosper in life].<sup>c</sup>
- 81 3 Spare not your son from the rod; otherwise, can you save him [from wickedness]?<sup>d</sup>
- 82 4 If I beat you, my son,
you will not die;
but if I leave you alone,<sup>e</sup>
[you will not live].<sup>f</sup>
- 83 5 A blow for a serving-boy,
a rebuke for a slave-girl,
and for all your servants, discipline!
- 84 6 He who acquires a runaway<sup>g</sup> slave or a thievish maid [. . . . .<sup>h</sup> and
- 85 ruins] •the reputation of his father and his progeny by his own corrupt reputation.

Sir 6:23f.
Prov 23:13f.;
13:24; 19:18;
22:15; 29:15,17
Sir 30:1-13
81 3

Prov 26:3

Col. VI a. Or "What is stronger than an ass braying in the . . . ?" hsyn, "stronger," may also be translated "louder." No convincing restoration has yet been suggested for b[.].r' at the end of the saying. It may be a one-word answer to the riddle. Or it is possible that l. 80 is the answer. The sense of the riddle is unclear.

b. Aram. 'rḥ' is probably to be identified with Jewish Aram. 'rīḥā' or 'arḥā', "half-brick, lath, bar," here referring to a fetter or hobble. Wooden blocks were sometimes used for immobilizing prisoners in the ancient Near East.

c. Restoring [yšḥ bhywhy] (Grelot). If this line is the answer to the riddle in l. 79, nothing needs to be restored. The general theme of parental discipline is extremely common in biblical and ancient Near Eastern wisdom.

d. Arm. 2:14 is an expanded version of Aram. sayings 3 and 4: "Son, spare not the rod to thy son . . . For if thou strike him with a rod once or twice, he is rendered sensible quietly, he does not die. But if thou leave him to his own will, he becomes a thief; and they will take him to the gallows and to death, and he becomes unto thee a reproach and breaking of heart." Cf. also Syr. Ah 2:22.

e. Lit. "if I leave you to your own heart."
f. The antithetic parallelism makes the restoration of the final words fairly certain.

g. The last letter of the Aram. word is lost, but the meaning is assured on the basis of the close parallel in Syr. Ah 2:24: "My son, . . . do not get thee a slave that is runaway nor a maid that is thievish: lest they destroy all that thou hast gotten." Cf. Ar. 2:25 and Arm. B saying 17 (J. R. Harris et al., Ahīqar, p. 59). In the Aram. text, perhaps prj[d] or pry[r] should be restored.

h. The damaged text appears to read p[hḏ] h[w̄], followed by a lacuna extending to the end of the line. Cowley's reading, p[hḏ] hw [hn' l bhyth], is not, as he notes himself, very satisfactory.

86 7 The scorpion [finds] •bread and will not eat it; but (if he finds) something fowl, he is more pleased than if he were (sumptuously) fed.<sup>i</sup>

87 8 . . . . . hind . . . . .<sup>j</sup>

88 9 The lion catches the scent of the stag in his hidden den,<sup>k</sup> and he . . . . .

89 and sheds its blood and eats its flesh. Just so is the meeting of [men].<sup>l</sup>

90 10 . . . the lion<sup>m</sup> . . . •The ass abandons his load and will not carry it. He

91 will be shamed by his fellow and will have to carry a burden which is not his own; •he will be laden with a camel's load.<sup>n</sup>

11 The ass mounts<sup>o</sup> the jenny out of lust for her. But the birds . . . .<sup>p</sup>

92 12 There are two things which are good, and a third which is pleasing to Shamash:<sup>q</sup>

one who drinks wine and shares it,

one who masters wisdom [and observes it];<sup>r</sup>

93 and one who hears a word but tells it not.

Now that is precious to Shamash.

But one who drinks wine and [shares it] not,

94 whose wisdom fails,

who has seen<sup>s</sup> . . . ?<sup>t</sup>

13 From heaven<sup>u</sup> the peoples are favored;
Wisdom is of the gods.

Prov 8:22-31

Sir 1:9f.; 24:1-7

Wis 7:25,29

1En 42:1f.

1Bar 3:29

Jn 1:1-4

Col. VII 95 Indeed, she is precious to the gods;
her kingdom is et[er]nal.

She has been established by Shamayn;<sup>v</sup>

yea, the Holy Lord has exalted her.

96 14a<sup>b</sup> My son, do not c[ur]se the day<sup>c</sup> until you have seen the night.

i. The text of this saying is badly broken and its meaning quite obscure. The sense may be that the one who is fowl thrives on filth, or again, that "one man's meat is another's poison." The translation (cf. that of Ginsberg) assumes a restored text reading: ʿ[qr]bʿ [yhšk] lhm wP y[ʿk]l [wl]h[lyh] w[ʿ]l[wh]š t[š] mn [š]y y[ʿ]mwnh. Grelot understands the saying as referring to the scorpion's being inedible.

j. Except for fragments of several words, this saying is completely lost.

k. The meaning of the unknown word swyḏ or swyr is taken from context.

l. Cf. Aesop's fable of the Deer and the Lion: "A deer that was running away from hunters came to a cave where there was a lion and went in to hide. As she was seized by the lion and was being killed she said, 'How ill-fated I am! Running away from men only to throw myself into the clutches of a wild animal.'" L. W. Daly, Aesop Without Morals, p. 126 (no. 76).

m. The relation of this word (followed and preceded by lacunae) to saying 10 is not clear. It can hardly belong to the end of saying 9, since that has a conclusion followed by a dividing sign. Nor is there enough space for another entire saying at the end of l. 89 (between 9 and 10). Cowley suggests that 10 begins "Fr[om fear of the] lion," but that does not fit the traces.

n. If you don't pull your own weight, you will end up with a heavier task. Cf. Aesop's fable of the mule that was unwilling to help the ass carry its burden. The ass fell over a cliff and died, and the owner forced the mule to carry both the ass's load and the hide of the dead animal. L. W. Daly,

Aesop Without Morals, pp. 170f. (n. 181).

o. rk[b] (Sachau).

p. Two or three words are lost at the end, so that the point of the saying is obscure. Perhaps the meaning is that while the ass mates from lust, the birds mate to propagate their species.

q. The sun-god; see "Theological Importance."

r. [wyntrh] (Grelot).

s. Or "[. . .] is seen," m[ʿ]hzh.

t. The Mesopotamian Shamash literature also contains such lists of various kinds of behavior which are pleasing and displeasing to Shamash. The type of numerical parallelism found in this saying is frequently found in biblical and ancient Near Eastern literature; see W. Roth, "The Numerical Sequence x/x + 1 in the Old Testament," VT 12 (1962) 300-31.

u. Or "by Shamayn"; see "Theological Importance."

Col. VII a. Probably Baal Shamayn, "the Lord of Heaven," one of the high gods of the Arameans. See "Theological Importance." The saying is evidently a hymn in praise of wisdom.

b. Grelot, who originated the enumeration of the proverbs followed here, misread l. 96 (see n. c) and combined it with l. 97 as a single saying (14).

c. ʿl [lw]t ywm is correctly read by Sachau. Cowley's revised reading ʿl [b]t yr, "do not chatter overmuch," though widely accepted, is incorrect. A vertical split in the papyrus (not clearly visible in the published photograph from which Cowley worked) distorts the appearance of the last word.

97 14b (My son, do not utter everything)<sup>d</sup> which comes into your mind, for there are eyes and ears everywhere. But keep watch over your mouth, lest it bring you to grief!<sup>e</sup> Sir 22:27
Ecc1 10:20

98 15 Above all else, guard your mouth; and as for what you have h[ear]d, be discreet!<sup>f</sup> For a word is a bird,<sup>g</sup> and he who releases it is a fool.<sup>h</sup> Ps 141:3
Sir 22:27;
27:16-21

99 16 Ch[oo]se<sup>i</sup> the sayings you shall utter,<sup>j</sup> then speak them [to] your [brother] to help him. For the treachery of the mouth is more dangerous<sup>k</sup> than the treachery of battle.<sup>l</sup>

100 17 Quench not the word of a king;
let it be a balm<sup>m</sup> [for] your [hea]rt.

18 A king's word is gentle, but keener and more cutting than a double-edged dagger.<sup>n</sup> 103 20, 106 23

101 19 Here is a difficult thing before you: Do not stand opposed to the king.<sup>o</sup> His anger is swifter than lightning; look out for yourself! •Let him not kindle it<sup>p</sup> against your words, lest you depart before your time.<sup>q</sup> Prov 16:14

102 20 When a royal command<sup>r</sup> is given you,<sup>s</sup> it is a burning fire. Execute it at once,<sup>t</sup> lest it flare up<sup>u</sup> against you and singe<sup>v</sup> your hands. •But rather (let) the king's command (be your) heart's delight.<sup>w</sup> 100 18, 106 23

21 How can logs strive with fire,
meat with a knife,
(or) a man with a king?<sup>x</sup> Isa 10:15 Ecc1 6:10b

d. A phrase should be restored; it was evidently lost through transmission.

e. Warnings against hasty speech are frequent in the wisdom literature. Cf. the Egyptian Instructions of Onchsheshonqy 7:23f.: "Do not speak hastily lest you give offence. Do not say the first thing that comes into your head." S. R. K. Glanville, The Instructions of Onchsheshonqy (Catalogue of Demotic Papyri in the BM 2; London, 1955).

f. Lit. "harden (your) heart."

g. The image of the word as a bird occurs also in Prov 26:2; cf. Ecc1 10:20. Cf. also Syr. Ah 2:25: "My son, the words of a liar are like fat sparrows, and he that is void of understanding eateth them." Arm. 2:17; Arm. B saying 19 (J. R. Harris et al., Ahikar, p. 59); Slav saying 23 (Harris et al., Ahikar, p. 4), in which a similar metaphor appears, may be remotely descended from the Aram. saying. Cf. also the "winged words" of Homeric cliché.

h. Lit. "a man of no sense," gbr P l[bb]. Similar exhortations to discretion appear in the Akkadian Counsels of Wisdom: "Let your mouth be controlled and your speech guarded; therein is a man's wealth—let your lips be very precious . . . Beware of careless talk, guard your lips, . . . For what you say in a moment will follow you afterwards. But exert yourself to restrain your speech." W. G. Lambert, Babylonian Wisdom Literature (Oxford, 1960) pp. 101 (ll. 26f.), 105 (ll. 131, 133f.).

i. Restoring m[š]y.

j. Lit. "the proverbs of your mouth."

k. Lit. "strong."

l. The details of this saying are elusive. Several words are ambiguous due to possible confusion between d and r. The point seems to be that the wise man who is asked for counsel should ponder his advice carefully, lest he do serious harm. Syr. 2:53 is a form of the same saying: "My son, let not a word go forth from thy mouth, until thou hast taken counsel within thy heart: because it is better for a man to stumble in his heart than to stumble with his tongue." (Cf. also Arm. 2:55; Ar. 2:54; Eth. 13). Democritus (see "Cultural Importance") is quoted as having said, "It is better to stumble with the foot than with the tongue"; Charles, APOT, vol. 2, p. 717.

m. The aleph of rp'h is written above the line. For the association of speech and healing, cf. Prov 4:20-22; 12:18b; 13:17.

n. The comparison of the spoken word to a sword or knife is a recurring image: Pss 52:2; 57:4; Wis 18:15f.; Heb 4:12.

o. Aram. [l' ]npy m[lk] 'l tqwm. An alternative translation is "[in pre]sence of a k[ing] delay not" (Cowley, Ginsberg); cf. Ecc1 8:2-4.

p. Restoring 'l yh[bn]hy (cf. Syr. hbb).

q. Cf. the Egyptian Instructions of Ptah-Hotep 445: "Opposition to a superior is a painful thing, (for) one lives as long as he is mild . . ." J. Wilson in ANET, p. 414a. The theme of the king's anger appears in various ways in the wisdom literature; cf. Prov 14:35; 19:12; 20:2; Ecc1 10:4.

r. Lit. "a word of the king," [m]š: mlk (Sachau); cf. ll. 100-4.

s. Lit. "if it is commanded you." lk has been added above the line.

t. Lit. "hurry, do it!"

u. Aram. 'l thnšq, either active (Haf'el), "lest you kindle it, lest it grow hot"; or passive (Hu<sup>ʔ</sup>al) "lest it be kindled." Cowley and Grelot divide the verb into two words: 'l thn šq "do not put sackcloth upon thee." But thn is not a known word, and the scribe often leaves extra space before the letter š in the middle of a word.

v. Aram. tksh is to be emended to tkwh (Ginsberg); cf. Jewish Aram. and Syr. kw<sup>2</sup>, "to sear, scorch."

w. Aram. bhmd lbb<sup>2</sup>. Others read bhmr lbb<sup>2</sup>, "the word of the king is with wrath of heart" (Cowley).

x. There are no close parallels to this saying in the late versions, but it is possible that Syr. 2:65, "My son, strive not with a man in his day . . ." goes back ultimately to it.

- 105 22 I have tasted even the bitter medlar,<sup>y</sup>
and have eaten endives,<sup>z</sup> but there is nothing more bitter than poverty.<sup>a2</sup>
- 106 23 The k[ing]'s tongue is gentle, *but it breaks a dragon's ribs. It is like death, which is invisible. 100 18, 103 20
Prov 25:15b
Sir 28:17
- 24 Exult not over a multitude of sons,
[nor be sad] over a meager number of them.<sup>b2</sup> Sir 16:1
- 107 25 A king is like the Merciful;<sup>c2</sup>
even his voice is haughty.
Who is there who could withstand him,
but one with whom El is?
- 108 26 A king is as splendid to see as Shamash;
and his majesty is glorious
to them that tread the earth in peace.<sup>d2</sup>
- 109 27 A good container keeps a thing<sup>e2</sup> within it, but a broken one lets it out. Sir 21:14
- 110 28 The lion approached to gre[et the ass]: "Peace be unto you!" The ass replied to the lion, . . . .<sup>f2</sup>
- Col. VIII
- 111 29 I have carried sand and hauled salt,
but there is nothing more burdensome than [de]b[t].<sup>a</sup>
- 112 30 I have carried straw and lifted bran, but there is nothing<sup>b</sup> taken more lightly than a foreigner.<sup>c</sup>

y. The bitter fruit of the medlar tree is similar to a small apple, although it is brown and edible only when it begins to decay.

z. The second verb should probably be read  $\dot{w}[\dot{k}i]f$ , based on context and later parallels. This requires an emendation, since the fragmentary last letter seems to be aleph. The precise identification of hsyn is uncertain. The usual meaning of Jewish Aram. hāsā (Syr. hass'ia) is "lettuce." Context here demands something bitter. Note that in the Talmud (b.Pes 39a) hš is considered suitable for use as the "bitter herbs" in the Passover ritual. "Endive" is based on the Arm. parallel; see n. a2.

a2. The closest parallel in the later Ahiqar traditions is Arm. 2:69: "Son, I have eaten endive and I have drunk gall, and it was not more bitter than poverty . . ." (cf. also Ar. 2:40). The Arm. saying continues with a parallel to Elephantine 29. Note that Aram. sayings 22, 29, and 30 all have the same form.

b2. The saying is preserved in Arm. 2:34: "Son, rejoice thou not in the number of thy children, and in their deficiency be not distressed." Cf. also the Gk. parallel to saying 109 (n. f).

c2. An epithet of the god El; see "Theological Importance."

d2. See "Theological Importance." LI. 107f. could be understood as a single, complex saying.

e2. The double meaning of mlh ("thing" and "word") is the key to the understanding of the saying: "a good pot holds its contents," i.e. a discreet man knows how to hold his tongue. Cf. Syr. 2:52f.; Arm. 2:55f.; Ar. 2:53f.

f2. The first of several animal fables (cf. 35, 36, and probably also 106). Its conclusion must have appeared at the top of a lost column. One of the reproaches in the Syr. (8:9) appears to be related: "My son, thou hast been to me as the lion that came upon the ass in the morning of the day and said to him, 'Welcome, my lord Kyrios.' But the ass said to him, 'May the same welcome that thou gavest me be the portion of him that tied me up last night; and did not make my halter fast, so that I had not seen thy face.'" In the shorter Arm. and OCS parallels the animals are a wolf and an ass.

Col. VIII a. The saying is closely paralleled by Syr. 2:45: "My son, I have carried salt and removed lead; and I have not seen anything heavier than that a man should pay back a debt (hwbr) which he did not borrow." Following the Syr. hwbr, the last word of the Aram. text is restored with the Imperial Aram. equivalent [zp]<sup>h</sup>. Prov 27:3 and Sir 22:14f. compare human folly with a heavy load. See further "Relation to Apocryphal Books."

b. The scribe has mistakenly written w? twice.

c. Lit. "sojourner, resident alien." The closest parallel is found in the Talmud, incorrectly attributed to Sir: "I have weighed all things in the scale of the balance and found nothing lighter than bran; lighter than bran is a son-in-law who lives in the house of his father-in-law . . ." (b.BB 98b). Less similar to the Elephantine text is the version in Syr. Ah 2:46: "My son, I have carried iron and removed stones; and they were not heavier on me than a man who settles in the house of his father-in-law."

- 113 31 A sword stirs up quiet waters between good neighbors.
 114 32 If a young man<sup>d</sup> utter great<sup>e</sup> words, they will soar above him when his 115 utterance exalts •the gods. If he is beloved of the gods, they will give him something worthwhile to say.<sup>f</sup> Ex 4:10-12 Jer 1:6-9
Mk 13:11
Lk 12:11f.
- 116 33 The [s]tar[s in the sky] are so numerous [that] no one knows their names.<sup>g</sup>
 Just so, no one knows man.
- 117 34 There is no lion in the sea;
 therefore the sea-snake<sup>h</sup> is called labbu.<sup>i</sup>
- 118 35 (Once upon a time) a leopard came upon a she-goat who was cold. The leopard said to the goat, "Won't you let me cover you with my pelt?" 119 The goat replied to the leopard, "Why should I do that, my lord? Don't take my own hide away from me! For (as they say), 'A [leopard] does not 120 greet a gazelle except to suck its blood.'" Gen 41:44
Jer 10:23
- 121 36 (Once upon a time) a bear came to the lambs and [said, "Let me take just 122 one of you and]<sup>k</sup> •I will be content." The lambs replied to him, "Take whichever of us you will. We [are only sheep, but you are a bear!]<sup>l</sup> •For it is not in men's own power to lift their feet or set them down apart fro[m
 the gods . . . .'] Gen 41:44
Jer 10:23
- 123 (Variant ending:) "For it is not in your power to lift your foot or set it down."<sup>m</sup>
- 37 If good comes forth from m[en's] mouths, (it is a fine thing).<sup>n</sup>
- 124 But if evil comes forth from their mouths,
 then the gods will bring evil upon them.
- 125 38 If the eyes of the gods are on men, •a man who chops wood in the dark
 when he cannot see is like a thief<sup>o</sup> who breaks into a house and is caught.<sup>p</sup> Col. IX
- 126 39 [Do not draw<sup>q</sup>] your bow and shoot your arrow at the righteous man, 128 4f, 191 93 Pss 11:2, 6; 64:1-4,7

d. Or "insignificant man."

e. Or "many."

f. For the general idea that an insignificant person may speak words which transcend his limitations, cf. the Egyptian Protests of the Eloquent Peasant (ANET, pp. 407b-410b). The Aram. saying is difficult to interpret. The first clause could also be translated: "If a little man speaks too many words, they soar up away from him" (i.e. he has no control over their consequences; cf. saying 15).

g. Cf. Isa 40:26; Ps 147:4.

h. The difficult word qāb, not found elsewhere in Aram., is probably to be identified with Akkadian kuppū, "eel, sea snake."

i. The Akkadian word labbu (written lb in Aram.) means "lion" but is also the name of a mythological sea monster. Evidently a serpentlike sea creature named for the legendary monster (perhaps the vicious moray eel) has been popularly identified with the homonymous word "lion." Thus the saying is a rather erudite bilingual play on words. If so, this is the only saying in the collection whose background is clearly Mesopotamian.

j. This is the best preserved of the fables in the text (cf. also 28, 36 and 106[?]), and one of the longest of all the sayings. Its point is that a generous gesture may mask malicious intentions. The goat sees through the leopard's artifice and foils him by a clever answer. Since the concluding sentence refers to a gazelle, not a goat, it appears to be a proverb which the goat applies to her own situation. Similar fables are known in Gk. and Ar. literature.

Cf. Syr. Ah 8:4; Arm. 8:9; Ar. 8:4 for a quite different fable concerning the hide of a she-goat or gazelle.

k. The missing words can only be restored by conjecture. Perhaps the text read something like [w'mr 'nš' ḥd mnkm wh'] 'štq.

l. Also conjectural, the translation follows the restoration of Grelot, 'nhnh ['mrn w'nt db].

m. This saying, like 35, seems to conclude with a short proverb quoted by the weaker protagonist in the fable. In this case, the proverb has been preserved in two versions, one in third person, the other in second person.

n. Though tb or tb lhm could be restored at the end of l. 123, it is not necessary. The conditional clause may be elliptical; cf. Dan 3:15.

o. The scribe originally wrote k'yš zy gnb, then erased zy.

p. The saying is obscure. It may be that a line has been lost after l. 124, so that l. 125 begins a new saying. But it is possible to understand the saying as it stands to mean that the gods look on a foolhardy act as being as serious as a criminal one. Alternatively, if cutting wood in the dark refers to poaching lumber, the meaning would be that the surreptitious evildoer will be punished as surely as a thief caught in the act.

Col. IX a. Or "aim." The beginning of the line may be restored [l' tdk q]štk, (cf. l. 191), or possibly [l' tngd q]štk (cf. the restoration of l. 128). dk and ngd are synonymous.

lest the gods come<sup>b</sup> to his aid
and turn it back<sup>b</sup> against you.<sup>c</sup>

- 127 40 [Hear], O my son:
harvest any harvest,
and do any job;
then you may eat your fill
and provide for your children.<sup>d</sup> 129 42
- 128 41 [If] you have [dr]awn<sup>e</sup> your bow and shot your arrow at a more righteous 126 39
man than yourself, it is a sin against the gods.<sup>f</sup>
- 129 42 [Hear], O my son: borrow grain and wheat, that you may eat your fill and 127 40
provide for your children with you.<sup>g</sup>
- 130 43 Do not take a heavy loan from an evil man. And if you take a loan (at all), Prov 6:1-5 131 give yourself no peace until * [you have re]pa[id] it. A loan is pleasant as
. . . . ,<sup>h</sup> but paying it back is a houseful.<sup>i</sup>
- 132 44 . . . . . iḥ<sup>j</sup> with your ears,
for truthfulness<sup>k</sup> renders a man admirable, but lying speech<sup>k</sup> makes him repulsive.<sup>l</sup>
- 133 45 [At] first the throne is [comfortable]<sup>m</sup> for the liar; but in the end, his lies will overtake him, and they will spit<sup>n</sup> in his face.<sup>o</sup>
- 134 46 The liar should have his throat cut,<sup>p</sup> like a temple<sup>q</sup> virgin who [exposes]<sup>r</sup> 135 her face; like a man who does evil, *contrary to the will of the gods.<sup>s</sup>
- 136 47 [Do not despise]<sup>t</sup> that which is your lot, nor covet some great thing which Ps 131:1
is withheld from you.

b. The verbs "come" (ysgħ) and "turn it back" (yhybnhy) are singular, evidently a scribal lapse. It is not possible to translate the subject 'lhy' as "god" or "the god." Following universal usage in Aram., it must be read as plural. Nor, given the polytheistic character of the text (see "Theological Importance"), is it preferable to emend 'lhy' to the singular 'lh'.

c. Saying 41 is a variant (slightly more prosaic) of 39; cf. also the parallel between 40 and 42. The altered form of the saying in the later Ahiqar tradition derives from 41: "Thou hast been to me, O my son! like a man who shot an arrow up to heaven. The arrow certainly did not reach heaven, but the man was guilty of sin" (OCS reproach 2; J. R. Harris et al., Ahiqar, p. 21). "My son, thou hast been to me like a man that threw a stone at the heaven, and it did not reach heaven, but he incurred sin against God" (Syr. 8:5).

d. Parallels from ancient Near Eastern wisdom are numerous. Cf. the Egyptian Instructions of Amenemopet 8:16f.: "Plow in the fields, that thou mayest find thy needs, that thou mayest receive bread of thy own threshing floor" (J. A. Wilson in ANET, p. 422b).

e. Restoring [n]gr, an assimilated form of ngdt.

f. The saying plays on the words ḥt, "arrow," and ḥt "sin." The last word in the Aram. should be read ḥw ("it"). A thick w with a long tail has lost a tiny fleck of ink in the middle of the head, making it look somewhat like d/r.

g. The variant to saying 40 shifts the emphasis from tilling the land to borrowing produce.

h. Some restore k(z)ḥsyḥr (Cowley, Grelot), but that is quite uncertain.

i. I.e. it may cost you everything you own. For a similar idiom, cf. Num 22:18; 24:13.

j. The beginning is lost. Cowley cautiously restores [kl zy tsm' tḥnn]hy, "all that thou hearest, thou mayest try (by the ears)." Ginsberg has "My [son hearken not] with thine ears to [a lying man]." Both are paleographically unlikely.

k. Or perhaps "faithfulness" and "apostasy."

l. Lit. "his repulsiveness is the lying of his lips."

m. Restoring tentatively [sq]yr, construed as an adjective related to sqṭ "to be at ease."

n. Probably impersonal plural, i.e. "his face will be spat in."

o. Since the saying refers to a throne, the word "liar" (kdb) may have a political significance, i.e. a usurper or rebellious vassal. The word is often so used in ancient Near Eastern diplomatic terminology. From the late versions of Ah, the nearest parallel is OCS 23: "My son, a liar findeth sympathy at first, but at the last he is despised and abused" (J. R. Harris et al., Ahiqar, p. 4). Cf. also Syr. 8:2; Arm. 2:17.

p. Lit. "his neck is cut." As in saying 45, "liar" (here mkdb) may have a political sense. The threat of beheading was a traditional curse against rebellious vassals in the ancient Near East.

q. The word tymnh has never been satisfactorily explained. It is possible that it is a nominal derivative of the root ḥmn, "be faithful, trustworthy," and refers to a female member of a religious order (cf. Syr. m'ḥaymna, "minister, eunuch"). The noun is in apposition with brwlh, "virgin."

r. Restoring [thwh] or [thwhh].

s. More lit. "which did not proceed from the gods." There seems to be an unclear trace of a letter (aleph?) before wmn at the beginning of l. 135. A short word may have been lost.

t. [?l tbsḥ], though conjectural, is a possible restoration. Cowley's [?l tm's] does not fit the trace of the last letter.

- 137 48 [Do not amass] wealth,<sup>u</sup>
lest you pervert your heart.
- 138 49 Whoever takes no pride in his father's and mother's name may Shama[sh]
not shine [on him], for he is an evil man.
- 139 50-52<sup>w</sup> My distress is my own fault,<sup>a</sup>
before whom will I be found innocent?<sup>y</sup>
My own son spied out my house,
[wh]at shall I say to strangers?<sup>z</sup>
- 140 He was a false witness against me;
who, then, will declare me innocent?
[My] poisoner<sup>a2</sup> came from my own house;
before whom can I press my complaint?<sup>b2</sup>
- 141 53 Do not reveal your [secr]ets<sup>c2</sup> before your [frien]ds, lest your reputation
with them be ruined.<sup>d2</sup>
- Col. X
- 142 54 With one who is more exalted than yourself, do not pick a quar[rel].<sup>a</sup>
- 143 55 With one who is nobler and stronger than yourself, [do not . . . . .<sup>b</sup>, for 144 he will take] •from your portion and [add] to his own.
- 145 56 . . . . •Just so is a little man who [contends] with [a great one].

Ezek 28:5
Ps 62:10
Deut 8:13f.
Lk 12:13-21
1Tim 6:10
Prov 20:20
Ex 20:12
Deut 5:16
Sir 3:1-16
Ps 41:9; 55:12-14
Jer 9:3-6; 12:6
Micah 7:6
Jn 13:18

Prov 25:9b-10a

Sir 8:1
Mt 5:25f.

142 54

u. Aleph has been erased after hyl. If hyl is a complete word and is to be translated "wealth" rather than "strength," one might restore [ʾl *thšg*ʾ]. "do not amass," at the beginning of the line as a play on ʾl *thšg*ʾ, "lest you pervert," in the second clause. Another possible restoration is [ʾl thwy d]hyl, "do not be fearful."

v. The sun-god. See "Theological Importance" on the Shamash sayings.

w. The Aram. text has dividing marks after "be found innocent" in l. 139 and "declare me innocent" in l. 140. Hence the two ll. are reckoned by Grelot as three sayings. But it seems more probable that this is a single saying in poetic or quasi-poetic form. Each of the four sentences in the two ll. has the same balanced form: a confession of the speaker's folly or ignorance followed by a rhetorical question pointing to the impossibility of justification. The saying, reminiscent in its tone of the reproaches with which the late versions of Ah end, is among those which seem most clearly related to the narrative. Cf. also 76 and 80.

x. Lit. "proceeded from me."

y. The phraseology of the second clause is similar to that of Job 9:2; 25:4.

z. Aram. *nkry*ʾ is to be so translated if the word has the meaning we would expect from comparison with Syr. and other cognate languages. But this gives an odd meaning in the context. It is possible that the word has some special legal sense here similar to "investigator" or "judge." Note that the verb nkr (Afʿel) can mean "to know, recognize" in Jewish Aram. and Christian Palestinian Aram.

a2. Lit. "[my] poison," hml[y]. Another translation is "From my house has gone forth wrath" (hml[ʾ]), Ginsberg; cf. Cowley and Grelot).

b2. The clause ʾm mn ʾqsh wʾph is obscure. qsh (Afʿel), "to harden, make difficult," can also mean "to dispute, object," in a legal sense in Jewish Aram. A verb ʾph is known in Aram. but not in any appropriate sense. (Meanings such as "to bloom, flourish, spread, be thick-branched" occur.) The lexica also list another ʾph (Peʿal) meaning "to toil, strive," and H. L. Strack (reviewing Sachau's Aramäische Papyrus und Ostraka in ZDMG 65 [1911] 833) long ago suggested that this is the verb which appears in Ah. That would give an intelligible clause, taking the two verbs ("make hard" and "strive") together as meaning approximately "make a vigorous struggle." The difficulty is that the verb proposed by Strack is so weakly attested it can be doubted that it exists at all. It occurs only as a textual variant in some editions of the Targum of Prov 21:25, where other editions have an obvious error or a completely different word. A better solution might be to assume that the scribe has reversed two letters of an original ʾpʿh, pʿh, "to cry, bleat" (Jewish Aram. and Syr.) also occurs in the Talmud with the sense "make a noisy protest." In that case, the two verbs could be rendered "press my complaint," or more lit., "dispute and protest."

c2. Perhaps [str]lyk.

d2. Lit. "lest your name be diminished before them." Such admonitions are common in the wisdom literature. The saying has been variously reworked in the late versions: "O my son! display not thy condition to thy friend, lest thou be despised by him" (Ar. 2:43). "Son, reveal not thy secret counsel to thy wife . . ." (Arm. 2:74).

Col. X a. Aram. ʾl rʾbd bns[yn] (cf. Syr. *neyyānā*ʾ, "dispute, dissension," Grelot). Variations on this theme abound in wisdom texts. Ar. 2:38 is similar: "O my son! make not an enemy of a man stronger than thyself, for he will take thy measure and his revenge on thee." Cf. also Turkish saying 81 (J. R. Harris et al., Ahiqar, pp. 93-94).

b. Cowley restores [ʾl *tšp*l]. "contend not." Probably the warning is against entering into financial dealings with the powerful (cf. Sir 8:12a) or provoking his hostility (Ar. Ah 2:38). One might also compare the parable of the talents (especially Mt 25:28f.; Lk 19:24-26).

- 146 57 Do not remove wisdom from yourself, [lest . . . . . ] 147 58 Do not be overly foolish,<sup>c</sup> lest . . . . be extinguished.<sup>d</sup> 148 59 Do not be too sweet lest you be [swallowed];
 do not be too bitter [lest you be spat out].<sup>e</sup>
 149 60 If [yo]u wis[h] to be exalted, my son, [humble yourself before Shamash],<sup>f</sup>
 150 who humbles the [exalted] and [exalts the humble].<sup>g</sup>
 151 61 How can [hu]man l[ip]s curse
 [what the gods have not cursed]?<sup>h</sup>
 152 62 It is better to master [wisdom<sup>i</sup> than . . . . . ] 153 63 . . . . . *yourself. Do not let him/it love . . . . .
 154 64 . . . . . *who can heal them but one with whom El is?<sup>j</sup>
 155 65 . . . . my hands . . . . my mouth . . . . .<sup>k</sup>
 156 66 May El twist the mouth of the treacherous and tear out [his] tongue.<sup>l</sup> Prov 10:32
 157 67 May good eyes not be dimmed,
 [may good] ears [not be stopped, 158 and may a good mouth love] *the truth and speak it.<sup>m</sup>

Col. XI

- 159 68 A man of [fi]ne character<sup>a</sup> and a happy disposition<sup>b</sup> is like a mighty c[il]y<sup>c</sup>
 which is bu[ill]t on a h[ill].<sup>d</sup> 160 69 [If] a man is [not] under the care<sup>e</sup> of the gods, then how can he guard himself against his inner wickedness?<sup>f</sup> 161 70 . . . . . *. . . . . ,<sup>g</sup> but as for him with whom El is not, who would accept his oath?<sup>h</sup>

c. The few surviving words of this saying are so ambiguous that translation is almost impossible. tskl has been variously translated "be crafty, stare, be foolish." But it is probable that the Aram. spelling of this period would still distinguish the originally separate roots skl, "be wise, look," and skl, "be foolish."

d. Grelot (RB) suggests the restoration w'l yd'k h[šk nhrwk], "that the darkness not extinguish your light." Ginsberg reads "lest thy vision be dimmed."

e. Arm. Ah 2:8 preserves the saying faithfully: "Son, be thou not over sweet, so that they swallow thee, nor over bitter, so that they spit thee out . . ." The saying is attributed by Shahrastani to Democritus; see "Cultural Importance."

f. So plausibly reads Grelot (Documents). Instead of "Shamash," one could also read "the king" or "your master."

g. The reconstruction of this saying (cf. Arm. Ah 2:35) is largely conjectural. If it is correctly understood, cf. Ps 18:27 and Derek 'Ereš Zuṭa 9:11: "If you have humbled yourself, the Holy One, blessed be He, will lift you up; if you have exalted yourself before your fellow, the Holy One, blessed be He, will set you low." Similarly Job 5:11; 22:29; Mt 23:11f.; Lk 1:52; 14:11; 18:14; 1Pet 5:5; cf. Prov 3:34.

h. The restoration is based on Num 23:8a. Other possible readings: "What men's lips curse, the gods do not curse" (cf. Ginsberg) and "Why do the lips of man curse? The gods do not curse" (Grelot, Documents).

i. Cf. kbs hkmh, l. 92.

j. See "Theological Importance."

k. Unintelligible. Ll. 155–58 all deal with parts of the body.

l. The mouth of a man who is unfaithful to his word will be mutilated by the god whose oath he has trespassed. For a detailed discussion of this saying in the light of Assyrian law, see J. Greenfield, "The Background and Parallel to a Proverb of Ahiqar," Hommages à A. Dupont-Sommer, eds. A. Caquot and M. Philonenko (Paris, 1971) pp. 49–59.

m. This fragmentary saying, perhaps an editorial footnote, might be described as a scribal benediction. A skilled scribe needs keen eyes, sharp ears, and a well-trained mouth to give wise counsel. It is possible that saying 66 is a negative counterpart, a curse on the sage who leads others astray.

Col. XI a. Aram. mdāh is taken as a by-form of middāh, "measure, character."

b. Lit. "a good (happy) heart."

c. Aram. ql'y]h (Ginsberg, Grelot).

d. A possible restoration would be <sup>29</sup> m[bnyh] b[']wr] 'yry, a conjecture based on Mt 5:14 (cf. Peshitta). Ginsberg reads similarly. The sense is that a man of strong inner resources is as immovable as a mighty citadel, or that he is an outstanding example to others around him.

e. Aram. [hn P y]štmr, despite Cowley's reservations, appears to be the correct reading.

f. The meaning of 'l 'wn gwh is uncertain. 'wn, not known elsewhere in Aram., may be a cognate of Heb. 'āwen, "wickedness." gwh may be taken as gawwā, "midst, inner parts," with pronominal suffix. Thus lit. "against the wickedness of his inner self."

g. The first part of the saying is completely lost in the lacuna at the end of l. 160. The beginning of l. 161 is unintelligible. bṭn, "belly, womb" (?) cannot be understood without context.

h. Aram. yhw[m]nhy (Grelot, Documents), Haf-'el of ym? lit. "who would make him swear." For the association of El and oath taking, cf. saying 66 and "Theological Importance." Syr. Ah 8:22 may be remotely related.

162 71 . . . . . and man. And the peoples pass through<sup>i</sup> them, and do not leave them, and their hearts are . . . .<sup>j</sup>

163 72 [No] one [knows] what is in the heart of another; and when the good man
164 [se]es the wi[cked] man, [let him beware!]<sup>k</sup> •He shall [not] accompany him on [the road] nor shall he become his employer. (Thus shall) the good man (act) [to]ward the [wick]ed o[ne].<sup>k</sup>

165 73 The [bram]ble sent a message to the pomegranate as follows: "Dear Pomegranate,<sup>l</sup> what good are all [your] thorns [to him who tou]ches your [fru]it?"<sup>m</sup> •The [pome]granate replied to the bramble, "You are nothing but thorns to him who [tou]ches you!"<sup>m</sup>

167 74 It is best to support a righteous man;<sup>n</sup> all who clash with him are laid low.<sup>o</sup>
168 75 [The city]<sup>p</sup> of the wicked will be swept away in the day of storm, and its 169 gates will fall into ruin;<sup>q</sup> for the spoil •[of the wicked shall perish].<sup>r</sup>

126 39
Prov 11:11;
14:11
Amos 1:14
Ezek 13:11

76 My eyes which I lifted up upon you,
and my heart which I gave you in wisdom, 170 [you have despised, and] have brought my name into disrepute.<sup>s</sup>

171 77 If a wicked man grasps the fringe of your garment, leave it in his hand.
172 Then appeal<sup>t</sup> to Shamash; he •[will] take what is his<sup>u</sup> and will give it to you.<sup>v</sup>

Ex 22:25f.
Deut 24:10-13

Col. XII<sup>a</sup>

173 78 Establish me, O El, as a righteous man with you! To . . . . .<sup>b</sup>

Ps 7:8-10

174 79 My enemies<sup>c</sup> will die, but not by my sword.<sup>d</sup>

175.176 80 I left you in the shelter of the cedar,<sup>e</sup> and . . . . . •You have abandoned your friends and have ho[no]red [my enemies]<sup>f</sup> . . . . .

177 81 Pity a man who does not know what he [wants]!

178 82 The wise man speaks, for the opening of the mouth . . . . .

179-86 (Unintelligible).<sup>g</sup>

i. Aram. brw, or "serve them" (bdw).

j. The saying as a whole is unintelligible.

k. This saying, much of which has to be restored conjecturally, is a rather diffuse and rambling warning against associating with persons of bad character.

l. Lit. "bramble to pomegranate."

m. Aesop's fable of the Pomegranate, the Apple Tree and the Bramble (L. W. Daly, Aesop Without Morals, p. 182 [# 213]) is probably related. Cf. also the Mesopotamian fable of the Tamarisk and the Palm, in which the palm reproaches its rival: "You, Tamarisk are a useless tree. What are your branches? Wood without fruit!" (W. G. Lambert, Babylonian Wisdom Literature, pp. 162f.). Two such plant fables are found in the OT: Judg 9:8-15 and 2Kgs 14:9.

n. Lit. "The righteous—a man to his aid!"

o. Aram. hwn is usually taken as Pe'al participle of hwh, "to be," but "for his help all who meet him are" is awkward. The word may better be related to Heb. hwh, "to fall"; hawwäh, "destruction"; hōwäh, "disaster."

p. Aram. [qryt] (Ginsberg, Grelot).

q. Aram. shynn, nowhere else attested in this form, is probably a derivative of shy, "be vacant, lie waste." Several derivations of ys'wn are possible. It may be cognate with Hebrew š'h, "be bowed down, sprawl."

r. Aram. bzyt [ršy'n r'bd]. Cf. also Mt 7:24-27.

s. The situation presupposed by this saying parallels closely that of Ahiqar and Nadin (cf. 50-53).

t. Lit. "submit (your case)." ḏny is probably Af'el imperative of ḏny (cf. Syr.).

u. The meaning is either "what he has (of yours)" or perhaps "all that he has."

v. See "Theological Importance." It is not clear whether the "wicked man" is a robber taking a garment by force or an unscrupulous creditor taking the fringe (perhaps actually the entire cloak) as a pledge.

Col. XII a. Most of the left portion of the column is lost, so that only a few sayings are intelligible.

b. Evidently a prayer to El requesting righteousness or vindication. See "Theological Significance." The insertion of a prayer into a wisdom collection occurs also in Sir (23:1, 4; 36:1-17; 51:1-12).

c. Aram. šny, a scribal error for šny.

d. If the saying is complete, the reason for the speaker's confidence is not explained. Perhaps it is simply the belief that disaster overtakes the wicked (Prov 11:21; 12:7; 14:11; 21:7, 12).

e. Perhaps a metaphorical reference to the king; cf. Ezek 17:22f.; 31:2-9; Dan 4:7-9, 17-19.

f. Or "hardened [your heart]." The saying can be understood as a reproach of Ahiqar directed to Nadin. Ar. 8:25f. (cf. also Syr. 8:31) may go back ultimately to this saying.

g. A few isolated words can be made out. 184: ". . . the moth fell and in the evening . . ." 185: ". . . noble . . ." 186: "into a house of bronze (or "of a serpent") the moth fell . . ."

- 187 89 My [so]ul does not know the path, therefore . . . . .
- 188 90 Hunger makes the bitter sweet,
[and] thirst [makes the sour palatable]. Prov 27:7
- 189 91 Let the angry man gorge himself on bread, [and the wrathful] get drunk [on wine].<sup>b</sup> Prov 31:6f.
- 190 92 (Unintelligible).
Col. XIII
- 191 93 One drew his bow and shot his [arr]ow, but it did not . . . . . 126 39, 128 4/
Ps 7:12b-13
- 192 94 If your master entrusts you with water to keep [and you are not trustworthy
193 with it, how can he] •leave gold in your hand?<sup>a</sup> Mt 25:14-30
Lk 19:12-27
- 194 96 . . . and he does not . . . . "Come near to me!" And let him not say to you, "Go away from me!"<sup>b</sup>
- 195 (Unintelligible).
- 196 99 [A slave who has] a bar [on] his [fee]t or [who is a thie]f should not b[e] 84 6 bought.
- 197-203 (Unintelligible).<sup>c</sup>
- 204 106 [A man said] one [da]y to the wild ass, "[Let me ride] on you, and I will 205 provide for you!" •[The wild ass replied, "Keep] your care and fodder; I want nothing to do with your riding!"<sup>d</sup>
- 206 107 [Between ski]n and my sandal, may no pebble get into<sup>e</sup> my foot.
- 207 108 (Unintelligible).
- 109 Let not the rich man say, "In my riches I am glorious."<sup>f</sup> Jer 9:22
Col. XIV
- 208 110 [Do not sh]ow an Arab the sea or a Sidonian the st[eppe], for their occupations are different.
- 209 111 [He who treads]<sup>a</sup> wine is the one who should taste it. And . . . he shall guard it.<sup>b</sup>
- 210-23 (Unintelligible).<sup>c</sup>

h. Anger can be moderated by gluttony.

Col. XIII a. The rest of the line, belonging to another saying, is unintelligible.

b. The antithesis of "come near" and "go away" suggests a possible comparison with Ar. 2:32: "O my son! be not one of those servants to whom their lords say, 'Get away from us,' but be one of those to whom they say, 'Approach and come near to us.'"

c. Only isolated words and phrases can be read. 197: ". . . his [house] with him . . ." 198: ". . . to his ma[ster] . . . his case, because he has acted wickedly toward his [m]aster." 199: "his master . . . The birds . . ." 200: ". . . a wicked man whom . . . overtakes . . ." 201: ". . . when [he] sends [you], lest you lose his favor." 202: ". . . his face because . . ." 203: ". . . an acquaintance . . . before you is tested before . . ."

d. Lit. "as for me, let me not see your riding." The issue is fodder versus freedom. The onager, or wild ass, (**rd*) is a proverbially untamable beast; see Job 39:5-8. Compare Aesop's fable of the Wild Boar, the Horse, and the Hunter; L. W. Daly, Aesop Without Morals, p. 205 (# 269).

e. yn'l is tentatively translated as coming from the verb ʿll, "to enter." But the root may be n'l. G. R. Driver ("The Aramaic Papyri from Egypt: Notes on Obscure Passages," JRAS 42 [1932] 89) proposes an Ar. etymology which enables him to translate "let not a pebble make a sore place on my foot." In any case there is probably some play on words involving n'l (which can also mean "to shoe") and ʿn, "sandal."

f. Cf. the final saying in the Life of Aesop: "Rejoice not at great wealth, and grieve not at small." L. W. Daly, Aesop Without Morals, p. 81.

Col. XIV a. Restoring conjecturally [ʿsr]. If that is correct, cf. Deut 25:4.

b. The second clause may have been something like "but he who does not drink wine is the one who should guard it."

c. 210: ". . . was told . . . is dead. And I answered, . . . and he knows (or "I know") who is coming after him." 211: ". . . he will tear out a . . . from my hide . . . weeping . . . from . . ." 213: ". . . one who is blind . . ." 214: ". . . comes . . . to him . . ." 215: ". . . eyes . . ." 216: "a boy and one who is deaf . . ." 217: ". . . from the womb he knows a noble man and not . . ." 218: ". . . was a man not . . ." 219: ". . . is bought . . . like a . . . and a wife . . ." 221: ". . . thief . . ." 222: ". . . his neighbor's house caught fire . . ." 223: ". . . [from] my friend[s] and from the lord of . . ."

3 MACCABEES

(First Century B.C.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY H. ANDERSON

Saved by a renegade Jew from a plot against his life by Theodotus, Ptolemy IV Philopator, King of Egypt (221–204 B.C.), decisively defeats Antiochus III the Great of Syria at Raphia (1:1–5). He then visits neighboring cities, distributing gifts to their shrines and securing their loyalty (1:6f.). A friendly delegation from the Jews persuades him to visit Jerusalem, where he is so impressed by the Temple that he longs to enter the sanctuary. His request causes a great furor in the city, but despite repeated remonstrances he is undeterred from his desire (1:8–29). The High Priest Simon, recalling God's wonderful deliverances of Israel in the past, prays that Ptolemy's threatened act of desecration might be averted, whereupon the king is punished by a stroke from God and falls on the ground in a swoon (2:1–22). On his return to Egypt, bent on revenge against the Jews, he decides to deprive them of their civil rights and to have them branded with the ivy leaf, the emblem of Dionysus. However, if any should participate in the cult of Dionysus they would enjoy the privileges of citizens of Alexandria (2:23–30). The majority of Jews resist gallantly, and the enraged king commands that all the Jews in Egypt, men, women, and children, be brought in chains to Alexandria and be put to death (2:31–3:30). Cruelly treated and herded together like animals on board ship, a great multitude are transported to the outskirts of Alexandria, where they are imprisoned in the racecourse (4:1–13). So vast is their number that the registration of their names takes forty days and cannot be completed because the supply of writing materials is exhausted (4:14–21). Ptolemy now orders that the Jews should be trampled by five hundred elephants, driven to fury by potent doses of wine and frankincense, but the king amazingly falls into a deep sleep so that the execution is postponed until the next day (5:1–22). The following day the Jews are once again spared their ordeal by a miraculous divine intervention which renders Ptolemy oblivious to his previous commands (5:23–35). Later the same day, however, he renews his instructions that the elephants should be made ready for the next morning (5:36–45). At dawn, when all is set and the king is already on his way with the panoplied beasts to the racecourse, the aged and esteemed Eleazar prays for God to intervene, and two angels, visible to all except the Jews, strike terror into the king and his troops and turn the elephants back upon the king's forces (5:46–6:21). The king, his disposition now totally transformed, is indignant with his counselors and orders not only that the Jews be released but that they celebrate a festival for seven days at his expense (6:22–30). So on the very spot where they had been doomed to die, the Jews feast and give thanks for their deliverance, and thereupon resolve that these days should be kept as a festival forever (6:30–41). In a letter to all governors in the provinces, the king now charges them to offer every protection to the Jews (7:1–9), and the Jews, having been granted permission to slay those of their brethren who had apostatized from the faith, do just that. They then institute another seven-day festival at Ptolemais and return in safety to their own homes (7:10–23).

Texts

Third Maccabees is not found in either Vaticanus or Sinaiticus, but does appear in the third great uncial manuscript of the Greek Bible, Alexandrinus, which dates from the middle part of the fifth century. The eighth- or ninth-century Codex Venetus also contains a text of 3 Maccabees which merits recognition alongside the Alexandrinus. In addition, there are a number of important minuscule manuscripts of 3 Maccabees. Somewhat less reliable, however, are those minuscules which stand in the textual tradition initiated by Lucian of Antioch (martyred A.D. 312), whose revision of the Septuagint became standard in Syria, Asia Minor, and Constantinople. The version of 3 Maccabees in the Syriac Peshitta (late 4th cent.) represents a free and expanded rendering, and is mainly Lucianic in character. There is also a rather paraphrastic Armenian version from some time between A.D. 400–600. The book does not stand in the Vulgate of Jerome (A.D. 382–404) and so is neither in the Roman Catholic Bible nor in the Apocrypha of the Protestant churches.

On the whole the text of 3 Maccabees is in very good shape. The present translation is based on the edition by A. Rahlfs, Septuaginta, vol. 1 (Stuttgart, 1935). In the commentary only those variant readings are noted which substantially affect the meaning of a sentence or passage. A fuller critical apparatus is available in Rahlfs' Septuaginta, in H. B. Swete's The Old Testament in Greek, vol. 3 (Cambridge, 1899), and in R. Hanhart's Maccabaeorum Liber III (Sept. Gott. 9.3; Göttingen, 1960). The symbols used in the commentary are: A = Alexandrinus; V = Venetus; m = one minuscule; mm = more than one minuscule; L = the Lucianic recension; Syr. = Syriac Peshitta; Arm. = Armenian Version.

Original language

All indications are that 3 Maccabees was first written in Greek. The work may be classed as an "historical romance," and as such it bears some resemblance to the Greek "romances" which flourished in the hellenistic period. Only a few of these, like the Chaereas and Callirhoë of Chariton, have survived, but 3 Maccabees shares enough features in common with them to suggest that its writer was acquainted with this type of literary model—the legendary embellishment of the career or of an episode in the career of an actual historical personage; a climactic scene describing the threatened destruction and miraculous deliverance of hero or heroine, generally in a public place such as the racecourse or theater; the prominence given to the religious element; the citation of putative letters or documents; the heightening of incidents in the story for dramatic effect by the addition of colorful but irrelevant detail.<sup>1</sup>

However, it is in the style and language employed that our author most of all exhibits his Greek hand. He often indulges in "fine writing," piling epithet upon epithet and participial clause upon participial clause. The book abounds in rhetorical repetitions and exaggerations. The vocabulary is rich and varied, and contains numerous pure classical forms as well as several which betray the influence of koinē usage on the writer. He is acquainted also with words that occur only in Greek poetry and has a distinct leaning toward compound verbs and adjectives, some of which he may even have coined himself since they are not found elsewhere in Greek literature, e.g. bythotrophēs = "sea-nurtured" (6:8), puropnous = "blazing" (6:34). All of this clearly stamps the author as a pseudo-classicist or pseudo-Atticist, at home with various phases of the Greek language.<sup>2</sup>

Date

Internal historical evidence points with certainty only to an upper and lower limit for the work. On the one side it begins with a brief depiction of the Battle of Raphia, which took place in 217 B.C. On the other side, in view of the glorification of the Jerusalem Temple in the book, the Temple is obviously still standing and the destruction that befell it in A.D. 70 has not yet occurred. Beyond that, further significant historical clues to a firmer dating within the period 217 B.C.–A.D. 70 are lacking. Josephus (Apion 2:5) gives a similar but much more sober account of the incident of the elephants, but unlike our author he attributes the outrage to a later Ptolemy, namely Ptolemy IX Physcon (146–117 B.C.). But Josephus is by no means necessarily correct in this. In fact, evidence has been adduced from the papyri to show that Physcon was favorably disposed toward the Jews.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See further, M. Hadas, The Third and Fourth Books of Maccabees, pp. 13–16.

<sup>2</sup> C. W. Emmet, "The Third Book of Maccabees," APOT; vol. 1, pp. 156–73.

Accordingly, it does not follow that the author of 3 Maccabees must have written during or after Physcon's reign, or that he must knowingly have transferred the episode of the elephants to Philopator to suit his own polemic or apologetic purposes. Conceivably, since both Josephus and 3 Maccabees associate the story of the elephants with the institution of a particular festival, it may go back to some historical event. More probably Josephus' more restrained version and 3 Maccabees' more highly adorned version both stem from a popular legend which originated in the third century B.C. and which arose on the basis of the known fact that Egyptian monarchs made use of elephants for military purposes.<sup>4</sup> The story of the elephants, consequently, is a most uncertain criterion for dating 3 Maccabees.

It has been maintained that 3 Maccabees is a Gelegenheitschrift, that is a document produced in a specific set of historical circumstances and designed, like the apocalyptic writings, to aid people meet and overcome a particular crisis, in the case of 3 Maccabees obviously a crisis for the Jewish people. Ewald suggested that the crisis reflected in 3 Maccabees is the persecution of Alexandrian Jews during the reign of the Roman Emperor Caligula and that the book is connected with his attempt to set up his image in the Jerusalem Temple in A.D. 40.<sup>5</sup> But if the author of 3 Maccabees wrote under Caligula and cloaked his criticism of Caligula's administration under the record of an analogous crisis in the reign of Philopator of Egypt in the distant past, we should surely expect some hint of the most sinister and oppressive features, the imperial claim to divine honors (especially since the Ptolemies, too, were theoi or "gods") and the desecration of sanctuaries by attempts to erect imperial effigies in them. But there is no such hint!

More recently M. Hadas has argued that 3 Maccabees was written in response to a crisis affecting Egyptian Jews when Egypt was made a Roman province in 24 B.C. and the Jews' civic status was jeopardized by the new Roman administration.<sup>6</sup> The hinge of his argument on the historical side is that 3 Maccabees 2:28 refers to a laographia which, as 2:30 indicated, here means the "poll tax" of the Roman period (liability to it involving loss of citizen status), and that this accords with the administrative situation just after the Romans took over in Egypt. On the other hand, it has been proposed that Philopator himself may have been responsible for the institution of a poll tax in Egypt,<sup>7</sup> although the ostraca of the Ptolemaic period appear to suggest that no general poll tax was applied in early Ptolemaic Egypt similar to the Roman laographia.<sup>8</sup> However, the term does occur in Ptolemaic papyri in the less technical sense of a "registry of taxable laoi." And it is likely that, in view of the heavy expenses incurred for his realm in two wars, Philopator enforced a much stricter collection of rents, taxes, and arrears.<sup>9</sup> Also the old salt tax, levied on every inhabitant of Egypt, was, as Rostovtzeff notes,<sup>10</sup> virtually equivalent to a poll tax, and the fact that certain privileged classes could be exempted from it by royal command implies a caste system of taxation under which the Jews could have suffered at any time during the Ptolemaic period. Accordingly, the mention of laographia and what it may have implied in 3 Maccabees 2:28, 30 is hardly sufficient in and by itself to constrain us to date the work in the Roman period.

The Achilles' heel of every theory of dating that would trace 3 Maccabees to a specific <sup>3</sup> J. P. Mahaffy, A History of Egypt Under the Ptolemaic Dynasty (London, 1899) pp. 192–216. The papyri of the Ptolemaic period generally are scanty, however, and coming chiefly from the villages of the Fayum do not necessarily reflect the life of the whole of Egypt. Also, 3Mac notes that Philopator himself was favorably disposed toward the Jews until the incident at Jerusalem (see 3Mac 1:8–12 and 3:15–17). See M. Rostovtzeff, "Ptolemaic Egypt," The Cambridge Ancient History, vol. 7, p. 109.

<sup>4</sup> The military technique of the Seleucids reached its culmination in their use of elephants from India. The Ptolemies adopted the practice also; in the earlier part of the 3rd cent. B.C., Ptolemy II Philadelphus made an expedition to East Africa and undertook the formation of a contingent of African elephants. See Rostovtzeff, The Social and Economic History of the Hellenistic World (Oxford, 1964) vol. 1, pp. 383f.

<sup>5</sup> H. G. A. Ewald, Geschichte des Volkes Israel (Göttingen, 1864–68<sup>3</sup>) vol. 4, pp. 611–14. Cf. H. Willrich, "Der historische Kern des III. Makkabäerbuches," Hermes 39 (1904) 244–58.

<sup>6</sup> Hadas, Maccabees, pp. 3, 19–21.

<sup>7</sup> S. L. Wallace, "Census and Poll tax in Ptolemaic Egypt," American Journal of Philology 59 (1938) 418–42.

<sup>8</sup> Rostovtzeff, Social and Economic History, vol. 3, p. 1392, n. 117.

<sup>9</sup> Ibid., vol. 2, p. 708.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid., vol. 1, p. 309.

moment of trial and tribulation in the history of Egyptian Jews is that the book itself does not really read like a "crisis document." Among the favorite themes of the apocalyptic writings are retribution, life after death, the last judgment, and the impending cataclysmic overthrow of the existing world order through God's ushering in the end-time. Such themes are conspicuous by their absence from 3 Maccabees.<sup>11</sup> In fact, glad thanksgiving for God's merciful deliverances of his people and festival joy feature quite prominently in the work, and the sense of an inevitably happy outcome that runs through it might the more imply an era of success and prosperity for the Jews when it was written.<sup>12</sup> On the whole it is best regarded as an edifying and apologetic tract of a generalizing kind, designed to keep the lamp of orthodox Jewish faith burning, to exhibit the loyalty of Jews as subject people in the territories of their sojourn, and to account etiologically for the observance of a particular Egyptian Jewish festival.

Literary characteristics and relationships of 3 Maccabees offer more promising leads than internal historical evidence toward a narrower dating within the period 200 B.C.–A.D. 70. Third Maccabees 6:6 reveals the author's acquaintance with the Greek additions to the Book of Daniel, and since Daniel itself is normally ascribed to the beginning of the Maccabean period, around 165 B.C., this points to a time for 3 Maccabees hardly earlier than the latter part of the first century B.C. In 3 Maccabees 3:12 and 7:1 there occurs a formula of salutation in the style chairein kai errōsthai = "greetings and good health." The same formula occurs also in the Letter of Aristeas, the normally accepted date for which is around 100 B.C. And the fact that the papyri of an earlier and later period attest different formulas of salutation tends to confirm that the "greetings and good health" of 3 Maccabees and the Letter of Aristeas was the favored usage about the turn of the first century B.C.

On a broader front, the associations of 3 Maccabees in style and content with 2 Maccabees and the Letter of Aristeas support a date early in the first century for our book. Similarities of vocabulary, some of it relatively rare elsewhere, and of phrase between 2 and 3 Maccabees are striking. In both works the same motifs are prominent (see Relation to Apocryphal Books), and especially noteworthy is the resemblance between the narrative of the miracle by which punishment was visited on Ptolemy in 3 Maccabees 2:21–24 and the narrative concerning Heliodorus in 2 Maccabees 3:22–31. The correspondences between 2 and 3 Maccabees are scarcely comprehensive enough to suggest they were written by a single author, but they are close enough to suggest that the two authors shared the same thought world and most probably wrote at approximately the same time. The consensus is that 2 Maccabees can hardly be earlier than the last quarter of the second century B.C.<sup>13</sup> To judge from the literary traits and connections of 3 Maccabees, a date in the earlier part of the first century B.C. commends itself as a reasonable hypothesis.

Provenance

The main action in the "plot" of 3 Maccabees takes place in the neighborhood of Alexandria in Egypt. Throughout, one of the author's primary concerns is with the status of Egyptian Jews. His work, in its pseudo-classicism, shares the Alexandrian flavor of 2 Maccabees and the Letter of Aristeas and shows the same familiarity not only with the court life of the Ptolemies but with the technical language of official Ptolemaic decrees. The lines of evidence converge on Alexandria as the place of origin of 3 Maccabees.

Historical importance

The title "Third Maccabees" is a misnomer for our document. The events described in it antedate the Maccabean period proper by some fifty years or more. By any standard the book has an abrupt introduction, even more noticeable in the Greek than in English translation. Moreover, the plot of Theodotus is introduced in 1:2 as though it were already known to the reader. From this it has sometimes been deduced that the work as we have it is truncated and originally contained an introductory chapter or chapters in which, among other things, the author would have explained how he intended to produce an appropriate prolegomenon to the epic struggle of the Maccabees. But any attempt to reconstruct the contents of a supposedly lost chapter or chapters is of necessity purely conjectural. Most probably our document received its title through its collocation with 1 and 2 Maccabees in the manuscripts or perhaps because its theme, the sacrilegious intent of Ptolemy and the brave Jewish reaction, was felt to have an affinity with later imperial arrogance and heroic Jewish resistance in the days of the Maccabean revolt.

<sup>11</sup> Even Hadas, who holds that 3Mac shares something of the "emergency" quality of apocalyptic, has to concede that "the visionary embellishments and the prophetic elements of the Apocalyptic are entirely wanting in our book" (Maccabees, p. 12).

<sup>12</sup> See Emmet, APOT, vol. 1, p. 158.

<sup>13</sup> See J. Moffatt, APOT, vol. 1, pp. 128f. Cf. Hadas, Maccabees, p. 12.

Whatever the case may be, more suitable for 3 Maccabees than the designation Makkabaika would be Ptolemaika, the heading under which the Letter of Aristeas was listed by Syncellus (I.516), the Byzantine historian, around A.D. 800. But even as Ptolemaika, 3 Maccabees adds little to our knowledge of actual events around 217 B.C. in the reign of Ptolemy IV Philopator. Our author's brief portrayal of Philopator's victory at Raphia in that year (1:1-7) differs only in detail from the description in Polybius (5). In the latter, for example, the opposing armies arrive at Raphia about the same time, Arsinoë joins Philopator in exhorting his army to gallantry before the battle, and while Theodotus and his plot against Ptolemy are mentioned there is no reference to the Dositheus of 3 Maccabees 1:3. But beyond these first few verses, as far as the provision of reliable historical information on the several separate incidents related goes, 3 Maccabees takes us into very uncertain territory indeed. While there is no a priori reason why Philopator should not have visited Jerusalem after his triumph at not-so-distant Raphia in the south of Palestine, the story of his encounter with the Jews at the Jerusalem Temple is told in such highly legendary terms as to cast grave suspicion on the factuality of the whole episode. The account of the "elephant outrage" most likely stems, as we have noted, from a popular legend which circulated during the last two centuries B.C. And the narrative of the cruel deportation of Jews from their homes to the vast concourse of the hippodrome at Alexandria is so overdrawn as also to savor of the legendary.

Nevertheless, 3 Maccabees clearly reflects a sound general knowledge on its writer's part of the life and times of Ptolemy IV. From his depiction of the Battle of Raphia, consistent in its main lines with that of Polybius, it may reasonably be inferred that he had access to some relatively trustworthy source, possibly the lost history of Ptolemy Megalopolitanus. Polybius himself alludes to this Ptolemy, but only a few fragments of his work survive and are to be found in Müller's Fragmenta 3.66.<sup>14</sup> However, aside from the opening verses on Raphia, our author reveals an undoubted acquaintance with the conditions prevailing in Egypt under Philopator. The characterization of Philopator in 3 Maccabees is true to what is known of him from elsewhere: his love of banqueting, his openness to the whims of his courtiers, his hope of uniting Jews and Greeks in the worship of his ancestor Dionysus, prompted possibly by the contemporary identification of Dionysus' name Sabazius with the Jewish Sabaoth.<sup>15</sup> Also, our author's familiarity with the style and format of official Ptolemaic letters or decrees is generally conceded.

We possess all too little information about the historical circumstances of the Jews in Egypt during the Ptolemaic period, and 3 Maccabees is to be sure of broad historical value. Nevertheless, the writer is not an historian whose first interest is to record accurately what happened or to preserve the memory of past events simply for their own sake. He is, rather, a man of orthodox Jewish religious sentiment who employs the medium of historical narration, albeit a narration which he has greatly romanticized, in order, on the one hand, to edify and encourage the faithful within the fold of his own people and, on the other hand, to commend them to outsiders as a "special people" and to defend and justify their mode and quality of life, their religious sensitivities, and their continuing religious observances.

<sup>14</sup> See Emmet, APOT, vol. 1, p. 159. Cf. Hadas, Maccabees, p. 17. K. Müller, Fragmenta Historicorum Graecorum (Paris, 1883).

<sup>15</sup> See W. W. Tarn, "The Struggle of Egypt Against Syria and Macedonia," The Cambridge Ancient History, vol. 7, p. 727.

Theological importance

Our author's theological standpoint can in some measure be gauged as much from what he omits to say as from what he actually does say in his narrative. There is no trace of any of the leading motifs which permeate the apocalyptic writings that began to flourish in the earlier part of the second century B.C. For example, missing are ideas regarding life beyond death, retribution, the last judgment, the messianic hope, and the dawning of the new age. The absence of such themes is all the more remarkable inasmuch as the martyrology of 2 Maccabees, which our author probably knew, testifies extensively to the notion of a just redress for the martyred dead in the afterlife. Moreover, there is no suggestion in 3 Maccabees of the "liberation of reason"<sup>16</sup> or process of secularization, the radical questioning or skepticism typical of such products of the wisdom literature of later Israel as Proverbs, Job, and Ecclesiastes. Nor again, although our author is a neo-classicist, probably from Alexandria, and presumably familiar with Platonic ideas, is there any hint of the Alexandrian drift toward Philo's attempted fusion of Greek thought with the Torah or his allegorical method of scriptural exegesis.

Over against apocalyptic, wisdom, and hellenistic philosophy, our author may best be pictured as a staunch conservative, swimming against the stream of the more radical tendencies of his time. In fact, he appears as an ardent champion of the old Deuteronomic orthodoxy, which at the risk of oversimplification may be described as the conviction that God rewards the righteous and punishes the wicked, and against which the author of Job registers a vehement protest. In 3 Maccabees the God who intervenes wonderfully to save his people is very much the God of the faithful and the just. Ptolemy IV does not at all subscribe to the worship of the God of Israel, but in his letter to his generals he is represented as acknowledging officially that the Jews are a "peculiar people": "And knowing of a surety that God in heaven protects the Jews, in alliance with them continually, like a father with his children . . . Be sure of this, if we devise any evil scheme against them or cause them any trouble, we shall have not man, but the Most High God, who is ruler of all power, as our adversary to exact vengeance for what is done, inexorably in all circumstances and for all time" (7:6, 9). Our author gives no sign at all of being possessed of any proselytizing zeal or of moving beyond the particularism of which the pagan Philopator is here made the eloquent spokesman.

Third Maccabees strongly reflects its writer's unshakable hold upon the faith of earlier Israel that God continually moved toward her in her history and actively participated in it, ruling, controlling, and directing her way, and this at a period when such a faith had been trenchantly questioned by more adventurous spirits in Judaism. The prayers of the High Priest Simon in 2:2-20 and of Eleazar in 6:2-15 are in effect celebrations of "sacred history," reminiscent of those Psalms (e.g. 78, 80, 106, 114, 135, 136) which sing Yahweh's praises for his former acts of deliverance. However, the manner in which our author extends the line of "sacred history" into the time of Ptolemy IV might appear to be somewhat naive—his reports on the miraculous divine interferences by which Ptolemy and his officials were thwarted of their designs against the Jews may hardly be described as strong on historical realism. But in recounting them he does enter, however remotely, into the ancient Hebrew tradition of the holy wars in which Yahweh fought for and rescued his people, a concept which reappears in new forms in the prophets (cf. e.g. Isa 29:6, 8; 30:30).<sup>17</sup> And he is at least sophisticated enough theologically to recognize that the Jews do not require visible, cosmic signs to support their faith in Yahweh's marvelous interventions on their behalf: He is, in fact, at pains to affirm that the "two angels" who occasion a dramatic reversal of fortunes at the racecourse were "visible to all except the Jews" (6:18).

In other salient aspects of his theological demeanor, our author subscribes without question to ancient Jewish norms. He has a strong sense of vast distance between the "sacred" and the "secular," and this shows particularly in his reverence for the Temple, which he needs only to call "the place" in the assumption that his readers will understand. The rather extravagant description of 1:9–29 reveals how much for him the Temple is filled with the numinous. And the ultimate in nefarious deeds is Ptolemy Philopator's sacrilegious intent to enter the Temple. Prominent also is the writer's rigorous devotion to the Law, nowhere more in evidence than in his report (and tacit endorsement) of the slaying of over three hundred renegade Jews, in accordance with the injunctions of Deuteronomy 13:6–18.

<sup>16</sup> G. von Rad, Wisdom in Israel, trans. J. D. Martin (Nashville and New York, 1972) pp. 53-73.

<sup>17</sup> G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, trans. D. M. G. Stalker (New York and Evanston, 1965) vol. 2, pp. 159f.

Again, the niceties of strict religious observance carry a special appeal for our author. He shares with hellenistic Judaism the tendency to pile up reverential epithets on every mention of the name of God (see e.g. 2:2–21; 5:7; 6:2–9, 18, 28) and even employs some titles not used elsewhere in the Septuagint (e.g. monarchos, 2:2; propatōr, 2:21; megalokratōr, 6:2; misoubris, 6:9). He subscribes to the view that the efficacy of prayer is related to the attitude or quality of life of the petitioner: Witness his description of the high priest's assuming the correct posture in 2:1 and of the exalted status of the aged Eleazar in 6:1. For him clearly "the heartfelt prayer of a good man works very powerfully" (Jas 5:16). Finally, part at least of our writer's motivation for telling his story was to compose a "festival legend" for a feast celebrated among Egyptian Jews in his own time, perhaps an Egyptian counterpart of the Feast of Purim, to which the Book of Esther testifies and which probably originated in the eastern Diaspora.<sup>18</sup>

Relation to canonical books

The writer of 3 Maccabees does not seem to have been influenced especially by any particular canonical work. Rather he appears to have been steeped in the old biblical traditions, a selection of which he has drawn upon in somewhat random fashion, notably in the prayers he puts on the lips of Simon and Eleazar in chapters 2 and 4 respectively. However, his work does bear a resemblance, at one or two points, to the Hebrew Book of Esther. There, as in 3 Maccabees, a foreign tyrant plans the destruction of the Jewish people in his territory, but his (Haman's) plot is thwarted and the Jews are authorized by King Ahasuerus to turn against and stamp out their enemies (Esth 8:3–14). Nevertheless, the differences between the two books are much more notable than the similarities. Esther is a secular pamphlet which attributes the deliverance of the Jews to human agency, in short the wiles of the heroine Esther, and never even mentions God or prayers to God. Third Maccabees has no hero proper but subordinates everything to God, who intervenes to save his people. Moreover, unlike 3 Maccabees, Esther has nothing at all to say on the subject of the loyalty of the Jews as a subject people. Accordingly, it is by no means certain that there is any direct line of connection between the Hebrew Esther and 3 Maccabees, nor can it be said with any degree of assurance that our author set out purposely to correct the secular tone of Esther.<sup>19</sup>

Relation to apocryphal books

Third Maccabees has points of contact most of all with 2 Maccabees and the Letter of Aristeas (see Date). Second Maccabees contains a number of leading incidents and ideas which parallel those in 3 Maccabees. Second Maccabees tells of the repulse of Heliodorus' attempt to profane the Temple (3:22–31), and the punishment visited upon Antiochus for his arrogance (2Mac 9:4ff.) is like Philopator's (3Mac 2:21–24). The awesomeness of the Temple (2Mac 3:15–22; 8:2–4; 14:34–36; 3Mac 1:11–16; 2:1–21); portentous visions (2Mac 3:25; 10:29; 11:8; 3Mac 6:18); attacks upon religion (2Mac 6:9; 3Mac 2:27–33; 3:21); efforts to impose an alien citizenship (2Mac 4:9; 3Mac 2:27–30); memorial festivals (2Mac 10:6; 15:36; 3Mac 6:30–36); the appearance of the esteemed Eleazar (2Mac 6:1, 16), and the horror of the Jewish populace (2Mac 3:15ff.; 3Mac 1:16–29; 4:3–8) are all prominent features of both works. The resemblance of 3 Maccabees to the Letter of Aristeas is hardly any less close. Both books exalt the Jews and extol their loyalty as subjects of the Ptolemies. In both, a Ptolemy acknowledges that God is the special protector of his own people (LetAris 16, 19, 37; 3Mac 3:21; 5:31; 6:24–28; 7:6–9). Both glory in the inextinguishable majesty of the Temple (LetAris 83–91; 99; 3Mac 1:11–16; 2:1–21), and stress the “apartness” of the Jews in food and life (LetAris 128–66; 3Mac 3:3–7) while at the same time making much of Egyptian royal feasts (LetAris 187, etc.; 3Mac 4:16, etc.). Perhaps even more significant is the fact that our author uses a relatively large number of words and expressions that are found in 2 Maccabees and/or the Letter of Aristeas but are rare elsewhere and in many cases do not occur at all in the Septuagint.<sup>20</sup> Resemblances of terminology in the official letters and decrees recorded in each work are especially striking.

<sup>18</sup> See O. Eissfeldt, The Old Testament: An Introduction, trans. P. R. Ackroyd, p. 582; cf. A. Weiser, The Old Testament: Its Formation and Development, trans. D. M. Barton, p. 396.

<sup>19</sup> See Hadas, Maccabees, pp. 6–8. The Gk. Esth is probably of Alexandrian vintage and represents an attempt to desecularize the Heb. Esth or to transpose it into a religious key. But neither the existence of a Gk. corrective to the Heb. Esth nor the fact that it seems to have one or two points of contact with 3Mac is sufficient to establish that our author simply undertook the same task and worked over the Heb. Esth in his own way.

Not surprisingly, therefore, the direct literary dependence of 3 Maccabees on 2 Maccabees and the Letter of Aristeas has been argued. But the reverse has also been argued with just as much cogency, and if each document is examined as a whole and full account is taken of the differences as well as the similarities, the safest conclusion is simply that the authors belonged to the same milieu and in particular shared a common stock of knowledge of official Egyptian procedures and of the technical language of Egyptian royal decrees and letters.

Cultural importance

As far as can be gathered, the story told in 3 Maccabees has had no influence at all on the art or literature, secular or religious, of the West. Missing from Jerome’s Vulgate, its chances of even becoming known were slender indeed. But even in the East, 3 Maccabees has left remarkably few traces. In one of his exegetical works, commenting on Daniel 11, Theodoret of Antioch (c. A.D. 393–c. 458), who became Bishop of Cyrrhus in Syria, offers a brief summary of 3 Maccabees, and the existence of an old Syriac translation implies a more general interest in the work on the part of the Syrian Church.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 149–51.

Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 146f.

Eissfeldt, O. The Old Testament; An Introduction. Trans. P. R. Ackroyd. New York and Evanston, 1965; pp. 581f.

Emmet, C. W. “The Third Book of Maccabees,” APOT; vol. 1, pp. 156–73.

Hadas, M. The Third and Fourth Books of Maccabees. New York, 1953.

Rostovtzeff, M. “Ptolemaic Egypt,” The Cambridge Ancient History. Cambridge, 1964; vol. 7, pp. 109–54.

Schürer, E. History. Div. 2, vol. 3, pp. 216–19.

Tarn, W. W. “The Struggle of Egypt Against Syria and Macedonia,” The Cambridge Ancient History. Cambridge, 1964; vol. 7, pp. 699–731.

Weiser, A. The Old Testament: Its Formation and Development. Trans. D. M. Barton. New York, 1961; pp. 395–97.

<sup>20</sup> See the list given by Emmet, APOT, vol. 1, pp. 156f.

THE THIRD BOOK OF MACCABEES

Ptolemy IV Philopator's victory at Raphia

- 1 1 From people returning from the scene Philopator received the news of Antiochus' capture of the places which had been under his control. He then put out orders to all his infantry and cavalry forces and moved on, taking his sister Arsinoë along with him, to the territory around Raphia<sup>a</sup> where Antiochus' army was camped. Dan 11:11f.
- 2 But a certain Theodotus<sup>b</sup> decided to carry out a scheme he had in mind, so he took some of the very best of Ptolemy's soldiers<sup>c</sup> who had previously been placed in his charge and went across by night to Ptolemy's tent intending to kill him
- 3 single-handedly and end the war at a stroke. •However, one Dositheos, called the son of Drimylus, who was a Jew by birth but later had renounced the Law and abandoned his ancestral beliefs, removed Ptolemy and had a poor unknown fellow sleep in his tent bed instead, and he of course suffered the fate intended for
- 4 Ptolemy. •A violent battle ensued, and when the tide ran in favor of Antiochus, Arsinoë traversed the ranks and, wailing and in tears, with her braided hair hanging loose, begged them to take courage and rally not just for their own sake but for the sake of their wives and children; she even promised to give each one
- 5 of them, if they won, two minae of gold.<sup>d</sup> •The outcome was that the enemy was destroyed in the combat and many also were taken prisoner.

Ptolemy visits Jerusalem and determines to enter the Temple

- 6 With the plot against him thwarted, Ptolemy now decided to visit the neighboring
- 7 cities and offer them encouragement. •When he had done this and distributed
- 8 gifts to their shrines, he made his subjects feel secure. •When the Jews sent a delegation of the council and the elders to greet him and offer him friendly gifts and congratulate him on his achievements, he was all the more eager to visit them
- 9 as soon as possible. •So he came to Jerusalem, where he sacrificed to God the Greatest and put up thank offerings, observing to some extent the proprieties of the place. When he entered the sacred place<sup>f</sup> he was struck by its immaculate and
- 10 dignified appearance •and, marveling at the orderliness of the Temple, asked
- 11 himself thoughtfully whether he should go into the sanctuary. •They told him that this was quite improper since not even the Jewish people themselves were allowed in nor indeed any and every priest but only the high priest, who was the chief of
- 12 all, and he only once a year. However, he was not at all convinced. •Even after the Law had been read out to him he persistently affirmed that he must enter and
- 13 said, "Even if they are deprived of this honor, I must not be." •He then asked why it was that when he entered every (other) shrine<sup>g</sup> nobody present stopped

1 a. On the Battle of Raphia and the relation of the account given here to that of Polybius in Historia 5. 79–86, see Historical Importance.

b. Polybius devotes a great deal more space to the plot of Theodotus "the Aetolian" (5. 81).

c. The word translated "soldiers" is a neuter plural in Gk. and may equal "arms" or "weapons." "Weapons" would seem to accord better with our author's notice that Theodotus wanted to kill Ptolemy "single-handedly." But on the other hand any small dagger, easily concealed, would have done the job, and it is probable that an escort of soldiers for protection is intended.

d. Two minae of gold, the equivalent of 200 drachmas, seems an excessive sum. But Egyptian queens did own extensive private property.

e. This description is consistent with what is known of Philopator's policy from other sources.

f. In Gk. simply "the place" but here = "the Temple," as frequently in 2Mac and 3Mac.

g. The translation is sometimes offered "why, when he entered the shrine at all?" and this would refer to his coming within the Temple area, in which case he asks why he should be allowed to go so far without hindrance but no farther. But this would require in Gk. not pan temenos but pan to temenos, and our translation, which takes pan temenos in its natural sense of "all (other) shrines (than the Jerusalem Temple)," is more probable.

2Mac 3:36;
1:16; 3:11; 4:16;
5:25; 7:22

Ex 30:10
Lev 16:34

14 him. •All too hastily somebody said that it was wrong to speak of this as if it
 15 were a marvel.<sup>h</sup> •“Even so,” he said, “why should I not enter in my case whether 16 they want me to or not?” •Then the priests in all their vestments prostrated themselves and entreated Almighty God to help them in their present difficulty and make their assailant change his mind, and they filled the Temple with loud cries and tears.

The rush of the outraged citizenry to the Temple

17 The people who were left in the city hurried out in disarray, reckoning that 2Mac 3:15–22 18 something mysterious was going on. •Even the young women who had been confined to their chambers rushed out with their mothers, and they took dust and covered their hair with it and filled the streets with cries of grief and moans.
 19 Those recently married left the chambers where the marriage bed had been prepared 4:6
 and, heedless of the modesty appropriate to their station, ran about in disorder in 20 the city.<sup>i</sup> •The mothers and nurses in charge of the youngest children left them here and there, in houses or in the streets, and, abandoning all caution, thronged 21 to the most glorious Temple. •Many and varied were the prayers of those who 22 gathered there because of the king’s sacrilegious designs. •At the same time the bolder spirits among the citizens would not endure the pressure he was exerting 23 to gain his own ends or his determination to carry through his project •and, sounding a call to take up arms with all haste and to die bravely for the Law of their fathers, they caused a great disturbance<sup>j</sup> in the place. Only with difficulty were they dissuaded by the elders, and they then joined them in the posture of 24,25 prayer. •Meanwhile the multitude went on with their prayers as previously. •But the elders close to the king tried in many ways to divert his mind from the scheme 26 he had so arrogantly conceived. •With great boldness he dismissed every plea, however, and, bent on achieving his declared purpose, was already moving 27 forward. •When those around him saw what was happening they joined our own people in calling on him who is all-powerful to help them in their present extremity 28 and not overlook this insolent act of lawlessness. •The combined shouts of the 29 crowd, ceaseless and vehement, caused an indescribable uproar. •It seemed as if not only the people but the very walls and the whole pavement cried out, so much at that moment did they all prefer death to the profanation of the Temple.

The prayer of Simon the High Priest

1 2 The high priest, Simon,<sup>a</sup> knelt in homage in front of the sanctuary and, holding Pss 105,106
6:1–15
 2 out his hands with due reverence, he prayed.<sup>b</sup> •“LORD, LORD, King of heaven, ruler of all creation, holy among the holy ones, sovereign, conqueror of all, pay heed to us who are sorely vexed by a wicked and corrupt man,<sup>c</sup> reckless in his 3 effrontery and might. •For you who created all things and govern the whole world

h. The Gk. verb used here means “to talk marvels” or “portents” and implies in this context “to make a boastful claim.”

i. The general drift of vss. 18f. is clear enough, though the text is somewhat obscure. In vs. 19, A V m read “chambers completely prepared,” other mm “prepared for all.” Arm. has “were sitting veiled and prepared.” But in light of 4:6, pastous = “bridal chambers” is most probably correct. The word rendered “married” in vs. 19, the meaning required here, does not occur in this sense elsewhere. It may also be translated “secluded” or “clothed in nuptial garments.” Arm. has “newly introduced.”

j. Gk. lit. = “roughness,” “harshness.”

2 a. The ruling high priest in 217 B.C. was Simon II, son of Onias, possibly referred to also in Sir 50:1, although he is there described as “son of Jochanan.” It is not clear whether this Simon or Simon I, who many years earlier had encountered Alexander the Great, is the one surnamed “the Just.” Vs. 1 is omitted in A V mm but is present in L. Arm. reads “they began to pray and said.”

b. The language of the prayer in vss. 3–20, more sober and restrained than the narrative sections of 3Mac, resembles the Amidah and conforms to the typical liturgical usage of hellenistic Judaism in its piling up of the attributes of God, although otherwise it is thoroughly Heb. and OT.

c. “Wicked and corrupt” = “profane” or “religiously defiled.”

- 4 are a just ruler and condemn all who act insolently and arrogantly. • You destroyed men for their wicked deeds in the past, among them giants relying on their own strength and self-confidence, upon whom you brought an immeasurable flood of water. • When the inhabitants of Sodom acted insolently and became notorious for their crimes you burned them up with fire and brimstone and made them an example to later generations. • You tested the proud Pharaoh, who enslaved your holy people Israel, with many different punishments and made known to him your mighty power. • When he pursued with chariots a great host of people, you overwhelmed him in the depths of the sea and brought safely through those who believed on you, the ruler of all creation. • When they saw the works of your hand they praised you, conqueror of all. • You, king, when you created the boundless and measureless earth, chose this city and sanctified this Temple for your name, though you lack nothing at all, and you glorified it by a splendid manifestation and established it to the glory of your great and honorable name. • And in your love for the house of Israel you promised that, if ever we should turn away or distress overtake us, and we came to this holy place to pray, you would hear our prayer. • And you are surely faithful and true to your word. • Seeing that often when our forefathers were afflicted you helped them in their humiliation and rescued them from great ills, • so look now, holy king, when we are oppressed and subjected to our enemies on account of our many serious sins and are weak and resourceless. • In our calamity this arrogant and corrupt man sets out to violate the holy place which is dedicated on earth to the name of your glory. • Your dwelling place, the heaven of heaven, is beyond the reach of men. • But since you sanctified this holy place because you took pleasure in your glory among your people Israel, • do not punish us by the uncleanness of these men, nor censure us by their corruption, lest the lawless ones boast in their wrath or exult in the insolence of their tongue, saying, • ‘We have trodden down the house of the sanctuary as the houses of the abominations<sup>d</sup> are trodden down.’ • Wipe out our sins and disperse our offenses and show your pity at this moment. • Let your mercies speedily overtake us, and let praises fill the mouths of those who are fallen and crushed in their souls, and grant us peace.”
- Gen 6:4-7
Jdt 16:7
Sir 16:7
WisSol 14:6
Gen 7
- Gen 19:24
- Ex 5-12
- Ex 14:21-31
- Ex 15
- 1 Kgs 8:33-53
- 1 Kgs 8:27-29
- 1Mac 6:7

God's punishment of Ptolemy and the king's vengeful response

- 21 Then the God who beholds all, the supremely holy father among the holy, heard the prayer of supplication offered in the regular form and scourged the one who was greatly exalted by his own insolence and effrontery, • tossing him to and fro like a reed on the wind until he fell impotent to the ground, with his limbs paralyzed and unable to speak, completely overpowered by a righteous judgment.
- 22 When his friends and members of his bodyguard saw how severe was the chastisement that overtook him, they were afraid he might die, and, smitten with extreme alarm, they pulled him out. • However, punished though he had been, when he recovered shortly after he was by no means contrite but went away with bitter threats. • Thereafter, on his arrival in Egypt, he became even more extravagant in his wickedness through his aforementioned<sup>e</sup> boon companions and friends, complete strangers to everything that was just, • and not only was he not satisfied with his innumerable excesses, he even reached such a pitch of arrogance as to concoct slanderous reports<sup>f</sup> in these regions. Many of his friends watched the king's procedure intently and themselves fell into line with his wishes. • His aim was to bring disgrace upon the nation publicly. Accordingly, he erected a pillar on the tower at the palace and inscribed on it, • “That none of those who did not
- Deut 32:6
Isa 63:16
- 2Mac 3:22-30: 9:4-10

d. Forgetful that he is citing the words of a pagan speaker, the Jewish author describes pagan shrines in the only way a Jew would do so as “the houses of the abominations.”

e. The fact that they have not actually been mentioned previously suggests either that the author is slavishly following a source or that in its present form 3Mac has lost its original beginning.

f. Whether against the Jews or by the Jews against himself is not clear.

sacrifice should be permitted to enter their temples,<sup>g</sup> and that all Jews should be required to enroll in the census<sup>h</sup> and be reduced to the condition of slaves, and 29 that any who spoke against it should be taken by force and put to death, •that those who were enrolled should be branded by fire on their bodies with an ivy leaf, the emblem of Dionysus,<sup>i</sup> and should be registered according to their former 30 restricted status.”<sup>j</sup> •But so as not to appear to be an enemy to them all he added, “But if any of them prefer to join those who are initiated in the mysteries, they 31 would be on the same footing as the citizens of Alexandria.”<sup>k</sup> •Some who objected strongly to the price the city had to pay for the practice of its religion<sup>l</sup> surrendered gladly, expecting to participate in some of the prestige that would come from 32 association with the king. •But most resisted with gallantry of spirit and did not abandon their religious practice, but they gave their money as a ransom for their 33 life and fearlessly sought to save themselves from the enrollment. •They persisted in the hope that they would obtain relief and despised those who left their ranks, judging them to be enemies of the nation and depriving them of any part in community life and service.

2Mac 6:1
LetAris 22

3:21

3:22-24

The Jews in society

1 3 On receiving word of this, the impious king was so enraged he was not angry only with those who lived in Alexandria but was even more bitterly opposed to those in the country and ordered that all of them should be assembled with haste 2 in one spot and put to death in the most violent way. •While this was being organized, a malicious rumor was noised abroad against the Jewish nation by men who conspired to harm them and grasped an opportunity that arose to represent 3 them as hindering them from observance of their laws. •The Jews, however, steadily maintained their goodwill toward the kings and their unwavering loyalty. 4 But reverencing God and conducting themselves according to his Law, they kept themselves apart<sup>a</sup> in the matter of food, and for this reason they appeared hateful 5 to some. •They adorned their community life with the excellent practice of righteousness and so established a good reputation among all men. •But of this excellent practice, which was common talk everywhere regarding the Jewish 7 nation, the foreigners took no account whatever. •Instead they talked incessantly about how different they were in regard to worship and food, asserting that they did not fulfill their contracted obligations either to the king or the armed forces but were hostile and very unsympathetic to his interests. So it was no small charge

4:12

Esth 3:8

4Mac
LetAris 128-66

g. The Jews are here forbidden to practice their own religion if they do not also follow the official cult with its sacrifices.

h. On laographia (here translated “census”), see Date. The specific mention of the Jews and Jewish enrollment is probably an insertion by our author into what would have been a broad and general edict.

i. The practice of branding or tattooing, to which Ptolemy Philopator himself most likely submitted, goes back to the Thracian origins of the Dionysiac cult. While Philopator himself was apparently a devotee of the cult, his object in enforcing the branding was more political than religious, namely to provide a universal symbol of national unity among the varied populace of Egypt.

j. The reference is to their previous servile status up to the time of their liberation by Ptolemy II Philadelphus. Cf. LetAris 22.

k. The question of the civic status of Jews in Egypt and in particular of the various grades of citizenship in Alexandria is much disputed. Josephus insists that the Jews enjoyed full citizen status in Alexandria (Ant 12.1; 19. 5.2). But it is likely that if they did so, it was not specifically as Jews but as individuals, in which case one can see the point of the exceptive clause added to Philopator’s edict in vs. 30.

l. The beginning of vs. 31 is rather obscure. The MSS reveal a number of minor variant readings which suggest such possible alternative translations as “Some who on account of the citizenship in a city hated the approaches to the city of piety” or “Some who were over a district in Alexandria hated the advances of the religion of the city.” Our translation follows the most probably correct reading, and what is implied is that the renegade Jews were alienated by the high cost of keeping up strict observance of the Law or of the Temple tax. See Emmet, APOT, vol. 1, p. 166.

3 a. The apartness or separatism of the Jews is a familiar theme in hellenistic writings and is particularly prominent in 4Mac. Our author is at pains to show that their apartness does not prevent them from being loyal subjects.

8 they fastened on them. •When the Greeks in the city,<sup>b</sup> who were in no way wronged by them, noticed the unexpected tumult around these people, and the unforeseen concourses taking place, they were unable to help, for they lived under a tyranny, but they did give them encouragement and felt sorry for them, and 9 they assumed that things would change for the better. •Surely a community so
10 large that had done no wrong could not be left to such a fate. •Some of their neighbors and friends and business associates took some Jews aside secretly and pledged to support them and make every effort to assist them. 4:1

Ptolemy's decree that all Jews in his kingdom be arrested

11 The king, priding himself on his present prosperity and with no regard for the power of the Almighty God, and supposing that he could persist forever with the 12 same scheme, wrote the following letter against the Jews: •“King Ptolemy
13 Philopator, to his generals in Egypt and elsewhere, greeting and good health. •I 14 myself am in good health and our affairs are prospering. •Our expedition in Asia, of which you yourselves are aware, having been brought, as we expected, to its 15 successful conclusion with the deliberate help of the gods, •we thought we would foster the inhabitants of Coele-Syria and Phoenicia, not by force of arms, but by 16 kindness and great benevolence, conferring benefits on them willingly. •And having allotted very large revenues to the temples in the various cities, we proceeded also to Jerusalem, having gone up to do honor to the Temple of this accursed
17 people who never desist from their folly. •Outwardly they seemed to welcome our presence, but in fact their welcome was insincere, for when we desired to 18 enter their shrine and to honor it with resplendent and beautiful offerings, •carried away by their ancient pride, they stopped us from going in, but because of the benevolence we practice toward all men they were left untouched by our might.
19 But they plainly exhibited their hostility to us and, the only ones among all peoples who offer lordly resistance to kings and their own benefactors, they refused
20 to accept anything as genuine. •For our part we accommodated ourselves to their folly, and returning victoriously to Egypt, we met all nations with benevolence:
21 we have acted rightly. •Similarly, we made known to all our readiness to forgive the Jews' fellow countrymen, because of their alliance with us and the many affairs that had been entrusted to them from of old,<sup>d</sup> and we boldly decided to 22 introduce a change, declaring them worthy of Alexandrian citizenship and allowing them to participate in our regular religious rites. •But they misinterpreted us and
23 in their innate feelings of hostility rejected this good offer. •Inclining as they always do toward the mean and petty, they not only rejected the invaluable citizenship, but also by their silence as well as by their words they show contempt for the few among them who are properly disposed to us, constantly nursing the secret hope that with their disgraceful conduct we would quickly alter our policy.
24 Accordingly, we have adequate proof of our conviction that these people are in every way hostile to us, and noting in advance that, if ever a sudden disturbance should be stirred up against us later on, we would have these impious people
25 behind our backs as traitors and barbarous enemies, •we have decreed that the very moment this letter reaches you, you shall dispatch to us those who reside among you, together with their women and children, committing atrocities against them and binding them fast all over in iron chains, to meet a desperate and 26 ignominious death as befits traitorous foes. •For we believe that when they are all punished together, our government will be perfectly established forever in the

2:28-31
1:9,16; 4:16;
5:25; 7:22

5:31
LetAris 36
6:25; 7:7

Ex 1:10

b. The reference is possibly to the more refined Macedonian Gk. element, which is prepared to take some risks to help the Jews. Again the point is that the Jews' separatism does not mean they have no friends among non-Jews. But in 4:1 our author does stress the generally prevailing antipathy of pagans toward the Jews.

c. On this greeting and its significance, see

Date.

d. That Jews had been placed in positions of trust appears to be a matter of historical fact. We gather from the Elephantine Papyri that in the 5th cent. B.C. Jewish garrisons had been posted by the Persians at Elephantine and Assuan to guard Egypt's southern frontiers, and the Ptolemies seem to have continued the policy.

27 most secure and healthy condition. •Whoever shelters any Jew, from the old to the child and even to the infant at the breast, shall with all his household be done 28 to a violent death with the most horrible torture. •Whoever wishes may act as informer, and he shall receive the estate of the person who is sentenced to punishment as well as two thousand drachmas from the royal treasury and shall 29 also be rewarded with freedom.<sup>c</sup> •Any place where a Jew is detected under any kind of shelter shall be made out of bounds and burned with fire and shall become 30 altogether useless for every mortal creature for all time.” •Such was the form of the letter that was written.

The deportation of the Jews and their imprisonment at Alexandria

1 4 In every place where the decree reached, a feast was arranged for the heathen at the public expense with noisy celebrations and gladness, with the hatred which had long before become inveterate in their hearts now being given open expression. Esth 4:3 2 But among the Jews there was incessant grief and cries of lamentation with tears, and their hearts were all aflame as they groaned and bewailed the unexpected 3 destruction so suddenly decreed against them. •What district or city or town or village with any inhabitants at all or what streets were not filled with lamentation 4 and wailing for them?<sup>a</sup> •For with such vindictive and pitiless spirit were they sent away, all of them together, by the generals of the various cities, that even some of their enemies, confronted with their extraordinary suffering, and perceiving the people's pity for them and reflecting on life's strange vicissitudes, were moved to 5 tears at their wretched expulsion. •For there was taken away a large company of old men, their heads covered with gray, and though their feet were sluggish and crooked from age, they were having to force themselves to a brisk pace under the 6 altogether shameless and relentless driving. •The young women who had but 1:18f.
 recently entered the bridal chamber for the society of married life exchanged their joy for wailing, and, with their perfume-drenched locks covered in dust, they were carried away unveiled and all joined in singing a dirge instead of a wedding 7 hymn, as if torn asunder by the brutal mangling of the heathen. •And in full view of everybody they were forcibly dragged along in bonds until they were embarked 8 on board ship. •Their husbands, in the full bloom of youth, their necks girded with halters in place of garlands, spent the remaining days of their wedding festival not in glad celebration and youthful recreation but in dirges, seeing the grave 9 already yawning at their very feet. •They were put on board like animals, driven along under the constraint of iron bonds. Some had their necks fastened to the 10 ship's benches, and others had their feet secured in unbreakable fetters. •Worse still, they were placed in total darkness that they might be treated as traitors 11 throughout the voyage. •When they had been brought to the place called Schedia<sup>b</sup> and the voyage as determined by the king was over, he ordered them to be thrown into the hippodrome on the outskirts of the city,<sup>c</sup> an immense concourse eminently suitable for making the captives a public example to all who came down to the

e. The reading of A V, the genitive of the Gk. word for "freedom," eleutherias, and the verb stephanōthēsetai = "shall be crowned," is grammatically awkward. Arm. reads "shall be honored with a crown of freedom," and Deissmann emends the genitive to the dative, eleutheria, and furnishes evidence from Polybius and the papyri for the use of the verb "crowned," metaphorically meaning simply "rewarded" (our translation). Some texts of L read "shall obtain freedom and shall be crowned" and some add the Gk. words for "forever." The sense of vs. 28 is rather difficult. Is it Jewish informers against Jews who are here offered their freedom (from the slavery with which all Jews are threatened in 2:28, and for whom death is decreed in 3:25f.)? Presumably there would be few such, and the informers envisaged may be lower- or serf-class Egyptians in the populace hostile to the Jews. An attractive suggestion is that we should read the dative plural tois eleutheriois, in which case the question of "freedom" is not involved, since the meaning would then be "shall be crowned at the Eleutheria," a festival of Dionysus.

4 a. The description of the mass deportation in vss. 3-10 is highly rhetorical and grossly exaggerated, as is clear from 4:18.

b. Schedia was an area of docks some three miles from Alexandria. Possibly a landing place closer in is what the author really intended.

c. The hippodrome was located near the east gate of the city.

city and to those who left the city for a sojourn in the country, the purpose being to prevent them from associating with the king's forces or claiming to be within the precincts of the city. •When this was done, the king heard that their fellow countrymen came out frequently to bewail the bitter fate of their brethren •and in a rage ordered that they should be treated in precisely the same way as the others and should be allowed no remission whatever of the punishment meted out to these others. •Moreover, the whole race was to be registered by name, not for the toilsome labor service, briefly explained above, but to be tortured by the torments which he had commanded and to be put to death in the space of a single day. •The registration, undertaken with shameful haste and unremitting diligence from sunrise to sunset, was closed after forty days, although still incomplete. Filled with great and continuous joy, the king appointed feasts at all his idol shrines, with a heart far removed from the truth and a profane mouth, praising dumb objects unable to answer or help, and uttering improper words against the Almighty God. •After the interval of time mentioned previously, the scribes reported to the king that they could no longer continue the registration of the Jews on account of their incalculable number,<sup>d</sup> although in fact the majority were still in the country, some still remaining in their homes and others on the journey;• the task was impossible for all the generals in Egypt. •After threatening them harshly on the ground that they had been bribed to contrive their escape, he was eventually clearly convinced on this point •when they stated, with proof to back it up, that the paper mill and the pens they used for writing had already given out. •But this was the working out of the invincible providence of the one who helps the Jews from heaven.

2:28

2:27-29
1:9,16; 3:11;
5:25; 7:22
4:3-10

The divine frustration of the king's plan to execute the Jews

5 He then summoned Hermon, who was in charge of the elephants, and, filled with stern anger and rage and completely inflexible, •ordered him for the following day to drug all the elephants, five hundred in number,<sup>a</sup> with large handfuls of frankincense and quantities of unmixed wine, then when they were wild with the plentiful supply of drink to bring them in to compass the fate of the Jews. •When he had given out these orders he turned to his feasting, having brought together those of his friends and army who were especially hostile to the Jews. •Meanwhile, Hermon, the superintendent of the elephants, carried out his orders to the letter. The attendants assigned for the purpose went out in the evening and bound the hands<sup>b</sup> of the poor unfortunate people and took every other precaution to see that they were secure through the night, imagining that the whole nation would meet its ruinous end in one blow. •But the Jews, who seemed to the heathen to be bereft of every support, completely restricted as they were by their bonds, called upon •their Lord, the all-conquering who governs with all power, the merciful God and father, all of them beseeching him with unrestrained cries and tears •to frustrate the wicked design against them and rescue them by a wonderful manifestation from the disaster imminently in store for them. •So their prayer

3:25; 4: 9

d. The number of Jews in Egypt is not exactly known, but in Philopator's time it could not have been all that large. The statements here in 3Mac are clearly hyperbolic. Philo (Flacc. 6) also exaggerates greatly when he speaks of one million Jews in Alexandria, although the number of Jews in Egypt generally would have increased a great deal by Philo's time.

e. "On the journey" is the reading given by L, vis. kata ton poron. A has kata ton topon, lit. = "at the place," and V has kata tropon, lit. = "according to custom" or "duly," neither of which makes much sense. It is not surprising that in this kind of romanticized narrative inconsistencies should appear: 4:1-3 gives the impression of a truly massive roundup of the Jews, 4:18 by contrast of a relatively small minority of captives; then by contrast with 2:27-29, 4:12 implies that a great many Jews in Alexandria had as yet been left unhampered.

5 a. Even the ancient reader would have been struck by this excessively large number and would have recognized it as a "romantic" exaggeration; at the Battle of Raphia, Philopator had seventy-three elephants, itself a large number.

b. They were already bound (3:25; 4:9), but a poetic license is permissible in an historical romance of this kind.

10 went up fervently to heaven. •Hermon drugged the pitiless elephants until they were filled with an abundant supply of wine and saturated with frankincense, and 11 in the early morning he appeared at the palace to inform the king. •But that lovely gift of his creation, the interval of sleep, bestowed night and day since the beginning of time by him who confers his blessings on whomsoever he chooses,
 12 he sent upon the king. •And the king, in the spell of the sweet, deep sleep God brought on him, was greatly thwarted in his lawless purpose and utterly disappointed
 13 in his inflexible aim. •The Jews, having escaped the appointed hour, praised their holy God and begged him who is quick to respond in mercy to show the power
 14 of his mighty hand to the arrogant heathen. •But the middle of the tenth hour<sup>c</sup> had nearly arrived when the official in charge of the invitations noticed that the 15 guests were assembled and went to the king and shook him. •He had trouble in awakening him, but then pointed out that the duration of the banquet was almost 16 past and reminded him of the circumstances. •The king took account of what he said and then, turning to his cups, he ordered his guests at the banquet to take
 17 their places opposite him. •This done, he advised them to give themselves up to revelry, to appreciate the great honor conferred upon them and regard this late
 18 part of the feast as all good cheer. •After a period of table fellowship the king summoned Hermon and with severe threats inquired of him why the Jews had 19 been allowed to survive that day. •But when he pointed out that he had carried out every last word of the king's bidding overnight and his friends confirmed it,
 20 the king was seized with rage more fierce than Phalaris'<sup>d</sup> and said that the Jews had only sleep to thank for that day's grace. Then he added that the elephants should be prepared without delay for the coming day, in exactly the same fashion, for the extermination of the accursed Jews.

21 When the king had spoken, all who were present readily assented together with joy and each went off to his own home. •But they used the nighttime not so much for sleep as for devising all sorts of insults for the people they thought were 22 doomed. •The cock had no sooner crowed the dawn than Hermon set the beasts
 23 in all their paraphernalia in motion in the great colonnade. •The crowds in the city thronged together for the piteous spectacle, eagerly awaiting the first light of 24 morning. •But the Jews, drawing their last brief breath in tearful supplication and strains of lament, stretched out their hands to heaven and implored the Almighty
 25 God once more to help them speedily. •The rays of the sun were not yet widely dispersed and the king was receiving his friends<sup>e</sup> when Hermon presented himself
 26 and invited him to go forth, explaining that his wishes were now ready to be granted. •When the king received his report he was amazed at the outrageous invitation to go forth, overtaken as he was by complete ignorance, and asked what business was on hand that required everything to be completed for his sake with 27 such haste. •But this was the working of the God who governs all things who had implanted in his mind forgetfulness of his previous schemes. •But Hermon and all his friends pointed to the beasts and the troops and said, "Everything is in 28 readiness, King, in accordance with your firm purpose."<sup>f</sup> •However, he was filled with stern anger at the words, since by the providence of God in this matter his 29 mind had gone blank, and gazing at him threateningly, he said, "•If your parents or your offspring were here,<sup>g</sup> I would have served them as an ample meal to the wild beasts instead of the Jews, against whom I have no complaint and who above
 30 all others showed an absolutely unflinching loyalty to my ancestors. •Indeed, if it

1:9; 3:11; 4:16
5:46

3:21

c. According to the Babylonian reckoning then in use in Egypt, 3:30 P.M.; according to the Roman reckoning, 4:30 P.M.

d. The sadistic tyrant of Agrigentum in the 6th cent. B.C. He enjoyed roasting people alive in a hollow brazen bull and listening to them bellow with pain (Polybius 12, 25).

e. Apparently a reference to the morning procession of courtiers come to pay their respects to the king.

f. After vs. 29, L has some additional sentences which are clearly a later interpolation: Hermon is introduced as "one who had been brought up with the king" as though he had not been mentioned before, and he and his friends plead with the king to recall his previous decree and point out how dangerous are the Jews.

g. The Gk. is in the form of an iambic line and is no doubt a quotation from an unidentified Gk. tragic poet.

were not for the affection that comes of our habitual companionship and your 33 service, your life would have been taken instead of theirs." •So Hermon met with an unexpected and dangerous threat and he cast his eyes down and his face fell.
 34 The king's friends, slipping out sulkily one by one, sent away the gathered 35 throng, each to his own business. •The Jews, on hearing what had happened with the king, praised the God who had manifested himself, the Lord, the king of kings, since they had obtained this help from him also.

36 Now the king once more arranged the whole banquet in the same way and 37 ordered the company to turn to revelry. •He then summoned Hermon and said menacingly, "How often, wretch, must I give you orders on the self-same matters?
 38 Fit out the elephants right now for tomorrow for the extermination of the Jews."
 39 But his kinsfolk<sup>h</sup> who were at the table with him were astonished at his 40 waywardness and remonstrated with him as follows: "How long, King, will you make trial of us as though we were fools? For the third time now you have ordered us to exterminate the Jews, and once again when the business is in hand you 41 change your mind and cancel your decree. •All this has put the city in a tumult of anticipation, and already crowded with throngs of people, it has several times 42 now been in danger of being plundered." •Thereupon the king, a veritable Phalaris in every respect, was filled with madness and, completely heedless of the changes of heart which had been effected in him for the protection of the Jews, vowed emphatically but vainly that he would forthwith dispatch the Jews to the grave, 43 mangled by the knees and feet of the beasts, •and that he would make an expedition against Judea and quickly level it to the ground with fire and sword and would swiftly burn down the Temple to which he had been refused admission<sup>i</sup> and empty 44 it for all time of those who sacrificed there. •Then his friends and kinsfolk left in great glee and high confidence and had troops posted in the most convenient spots in the city to keep guard.

45 The superintendent of the elephants drove the beasts almost, one might say, to a state of madness with fragrant draughts of wine mingled with frankincense and 46 equipped them with horrible implements.<sup>j</sup> •About dawn, when the city was already full of innumerable crowds making their way toward the hippodrome, he entered 47 the palace and incited the king to take up the business on hand. •Then the king, his impious heart filled with stern anger, stormed out with the beasts, determined to watch without a qualm and with his very own eyes the spectacle of the 48 aforementioned Jews' painful and piteous destruction. •When the Jews saw the dust stirred up by the elephants going out at the gate, the fully armed troops accompanying them and the movement of the people and heard the thunderous 49 din, •thinking that the last crisis of their life and the end of their agonizing suspense had come, they took to wailing and moaning and kissed one another, embracing their relatives and falling on their necks, parents and children, mothers and daughters; some had newborn infants at their breasts, drawing their last milk.
 50 Nevertheless, mindful of the former occasions on which help was given from heaven, they threw themselves on their faces with one accord; they removed the 51 babes from breasts<sup>k</sup> •and cried out with an exceedingly great shout, imploring the ruler of all power by a manifestation to show mercy to them now that they were standing at the very gates of death.

h. The Gk. word sungeneis (lit. = "kinsmen") is used regularly of the higher officials of the king's court.

i. The Gk. here slips into direct speech, reading lit. "to which we had been refused admission." The whole sentence is somewhat confused, as the several minor variants in the textual tradition testify, and may be a redactional afterthought or a later interpolation.

j. Knives and scythes attached to the beasts, as they often were also to war chariots.

k. In order to prostrate themselves as supplicants. For the author's fastidiousness regarding the appropriate postures for prayer, see Theological Importance.

Eleazar's prayer

- 1 6 A certain Eleazar,<sup>a</sup> a man of distinction among the priests<sup>b</sup> of the country, already well advanced in years and a shining example of all life's virtues, directed the elders around him to stop calling on the holy God<sup>c</sup> and prayed as follows:
- 2 "King, great in power, Most High, All-conquering God, who governs the 3 whole creation with mercy,<sup>d</sup> •look upon the seed of Abraham, upon the children of Jacob whom you sanctified, the people of your sanctified inheritance who are 4 perishing unjustly as strangers in a strange land. •Pharaoh, the former ruler of this Egypt, with his multitude of chariots, high and mighty in his lawless insolence and boastful tongue, you destroyed in the depths of the sea with his proud host, Father, causing the light of your mercy to shine upon the people of Israel.
5 Sennacherib, the cruel king of the Assyrians, exulting in his countless hosts, when he had subjugated the whole earth by the spear and was lifted up against your holy city, uttering grievous words with boastfulness and insolence, you shattered,
6 LORD,<sup>e</sup> displaying your power openly to many nations. •The three comrades in Babylonia who of their own choice gave their life to the fire rather than serve idols you delivered unharmed to the very hair of their head, making the fiery
7 furnace like dew, and you sent flame upon all their enemies. •When, through the slanderous accusations brought against him out of envy, Daniel was thrown to the lions underground as food for beasts, you brought him up to the light unscathed.
8 When Jonah was pining away unpitied in the belly of the monster of the deep,
9 you, Father, restored him uninjured to all his household.<sup>f</sup> •So now, you who hate insolence, full of mercy, protector of all, manifest yourself swiftly to those of the people of Israel who are outrageously treated by the abominable and lawless
10 heathen. •If our life is subject to penalty because of impious deeds in the course of our sojourn abroad, rescue us from the hand of our enemies, LORD, and destroy us by a fate of your own choosing. •Let not those who think vain thoughts bless their vain gods for the destruction of your beloved people and say, 'Not even their 11 God could rescue them.' •You who possess all might and power, Eternal, look now upon us. Pity us who are being put to death like traitors by the mad insolence
12 of lawless men. •Let the heathen fear your unconquerable power this day, highly honored one, who are continually mighty to save the people of Jacob. •The whole 13 multitude of children and their parents implore you with tears. •Let it be made clear to all the nations that you are with us, LORD, and have not turned your face away from us, but even as you have said, 'Not even when they were in the land of their enemies have I neglected them,' so bring it to pass, LORD."

2:1-20
2Mac 6:18
4Mac 6:5; 7:1
LetAris 41

Pss 105.106

Ex 15

2Kgs 19:35

Dan 3:50

Dan 3:27
PrAzar 25

Dan 6:24

Jonah 1:17-2:9

WisSol 2:16-24
Ps 115:2

Lev 26:44

A remarkable turnabout in events and in the king's attitude

- 16 Just as Eleazar was finishing his prayer, the king arrived at the hippodrome 17 with the beasts and the whole wanton array of his army. •And the Jews observed it and raised a great cry to heaven that made the surrounding valleys ring with the 18 sound and struck uncontrollable terror in all the hosts. •Then the great and glorious, all-conquering and true God revealed his holy face and opened heaven's gates, from which descended two angels, clothed in glory and of awe-inspiring appearance,

1En 14:20
TLevi 3:4

6 a. Eleazar appears here, as in the related literature, e.g. 2Mac 6:18; 4Mac 6:5; 7:1; LetAris 41, as the "type" of wisdom garnered from long life and experience, piety and faith.

b. A reads "Jews" instead of "priests," but comparison with 7:13 suggests that "priests" is correct. "Priests" possibly refers to those of the temple of Onias at Leontopolis.

c. It seems strange that he should call for a cessation of prayer among the elders, but possibly the author understands that in virtue of his priestly office Eleazar gives the signal that he is about to act as their spokesman and intercessor before God.

d. The prayer begins in the same fashion as the Jewish Amidah prayer.

e. 2Kgs has an "angel of the Lord" intervene as God's agent to smite the Assyrians (19:35). Here the Lord shatters them himself; he needs no intermediary to provide help as far as the Jews are concerned. Cf. 6:18.

f. The OT itself does not expressly mention Jonah's restoration to his home.

19 visible to all except the Jews,<sup>a</sup> and they confronted the forces of their adversaries and filled them with confusion and timidity and bound them with immovable 20 fetters. •The king also experienced a shuddering in his body and his gross insolence faded to nothing. •And the beasts turned back on the armed forces that followed 21 them and they began to trample them down and destroy them. •The king's anger was now turned to pity and tears on account of the scheme he had previously 22 devised. •For when he heard the outcry and saw them all prostrate to meet their 23 death, he wept and angrily threatened his friends, saying, •“You usurp the king's power and excel tyrants in savagery, and you even attempt to deprive me myself, your benefactor, of my rule and indeed of my life, secretly devising measures that 24 are deleterious for my kingdom. •Who has driven from their homes those who held the fortresses of our country with such loyalty and stupidly mustered them 25 here, each one? •Who has so lawlessly surrounded with torments those who from the beginning have in every way exceeded all peoples in their goodwill toward us 26 and have frequently submitted to the worst dangers confronting men? •Loose, yes loose completely their unrighteous bonds. Send them back to their homes in peace, 27 asking their forgiveness for what has been done to them. •Release the sons of the all-conquering, living God of heaven, who from the times of our ancestors until 28 now has conferred upon our estate an impregnable stability with glory?” •So the king spoke. The Jews were released forthwith and blessed the holy God, their 29 savior, for their narrow escape from death.

2Mac 3:24–40;
 10:29; 6:5
 WisSol 18:3,
 15,17

The Jewish celebration of a feast of deliverance

30 Then the king left for the city and, summoning the keeper of the public revenues, he ordered him to supply the Jews with wine and all the perquisites for a feast for seven days, decreeing that in the very place where they had thought to meet 31 their fate they should hold a festival of deliverance with all joy. •Then those who had been reviled and had just been close to the grave, or rather had already had one foot in it, instead of a bitter and wretched fate held a feast celebrating their deliverance, and filled with gladness they portioned out to different festive groups 32 the space that had been made ready for their destruction and burial. •They left off the mournful sound of dirges and took up the song of their fathers, praising God the deliverer and worker of wonders, and laying aside all wailing and lamentation, they formed dances as a sign of the joy and peace that had come upon them.
 33 The king likewise held a great banquet in celebration of all that had happened and endlessly returned solemn thanks to heaven for the unexpected deliverance granted 34 to him.<sup>b</sup> •But those who previously imagined that the Jews were doomed to destruction and to become a prey for the birds, and had joyfully conducted the registration, now groaned at being covered with confusion and at having their 35 blazing effrontery ignominiously quenched. •The Jews, however, as we have said, having formed the dance just mentioned, spent the time in festivity, with glad 36 thanksgiving and psalms. •And they laid down a general ordinance on these matters, to have effect wherever future generations might sojourn, that they should celebrate the aforementioned days with a festival of joy, not for the sake of drinking and gluttony but of the deliverance that had come to them through God.<sup>i</sup> 37 They next petitioned the king, requesting him to dismiss them to their own 38 homes. •Now the process of registration had gone on from the twenty-fifth day of Pachon to the fourth of Epiphi, for forty days, and the appointment of their

Esth 9:18
 1Mac 4:56;
 7:59; 13:50
 2Mac 10:6;
 15:36

Esth 9:19–26

g. The appearance of heavenly visitants to aid the weaker side in battle is a feature not only of Jewish but also of Gk. history, e.g. at Marathon and Salamis. The observation here that the angels were “visible to all except the Jews” may well be an insertion of the author to correct a story he had received from the tradition in the light of his own particular theological preconceptions (cf. 6:5).

h. A mm Arm. read autôn = “the deliverance granted to them”; others read autô = “to him” (the reading followed in the translation). V omits.

i. The festival ordinance shows that the passage is to be regarded as etiologic; the author traces the origin of a festival that continued to be celebrated among Egyptian Jews to the rescue of the Jews at Alexandria and its immediate sequel.

39 destruction from the fifth of Epiphi to the seventh, for three days.<sup>j</sup> •On these days
 40 the ruler of all revealed his mercy with great glory and rescued them one and all
 41 unharmed. •They feasted, with everything supplied by the king, until the fourteenth 41 day, when they made the petition for their dismissal. •The king consented and on their behalf wrote the following letter to the generals in the cities, generously declaring his purpose.

The king's letter on behalf of the Jews

1 7 "King Ptolemy Philopator to the generals in Egypt and all who have charge of 2 our affairs, greetings and good health;<sup>a</sup> •We, for our part, are in good health, and 3 our children also,<sup>b</sup> the great God directing our estate as we desire. •Some of our 4 friends, out of malice, by urging the matter on us continually, persuaded us to 5 gather the Jews together in the kingdom in a body and to inflict upon them
 6 extraordinary punishments as traitors, •suggesting that our state would never be 7 stable because of the ill will the Jews bear to all nations until this was carried 8 out. •So they brought them down with atrocious treatment, as slaves or rather 9 conspirators, and they sought to put them to death without legal trial or even 10 investigation, decking themselves out with cruelty more savage than the law of 11 the Scythians.<sup>c</sup> •But because of the fairness we show to all men, we reprimanded 12 them for their conduct with stern threats and barely granted them their lives, and 13 knowing of a surety that God in heaven protects the Jews, in alliance with them
 14 continually like a father with his children, •and taking account of their unshakable 15 friendly disposition toward us and our ancestors, we have justly absolved them of 16 any blame whatever. •And we have enjoined that all should return, each one to his own home, and that no one should do them any harm at all in any place or 17 reproach them for the unreasonable penalties inflicted on them. •Be sure of this, 18 that if we devise any evil scheme against them or cause them any trouble, we 19 shall have not man but the most high God, who is ruler of all power, as our 20 adversary to exact vengeance for what is done, inexorably in all circumstances and for all time. Farewell."

LetArist 37
6:25-28

2Mac 4:47
4Mac 10:7

10 On receiving this letter, the Jews did not at once make haste for their departure, but requested further of the king that those of the Jewish people who had wittingly 11 transgressed against the holy God and his Law should receive the due punishment 12 at their hands, •stressing that those who had transgressed the divine commandments for their belly's sake would never be well disposed to the king's business either.
 13 The king acknowledged the truth of what they said, and praising them, he granted 14 them full indemnity, to destroy without let or hindrance or any royal license or 15 investigation those who had transgressed the Law of God anywhere in his 16 dominion.

The Jews' joyous departure and return home.

13 Then, applauding him, as was fitting, their priests and the whole multitude 14 departed with joy, shouting the hallelujah. •Any one of their countrymen they 15 encountered on the way who had become defiled they punished and put to death 16 as a public example. •On that day they put to death over three hundred men, and they kept it as a joyous festival, having subdued the unclean.<sup>d</sup> •But those who

j. Pachon and Epiphi (Egyptian names) are respectively April 26–May 25 and June 25–July 24. The precise dating introduces an air of realism and no doubt in the author's view supports the etiology.

7 a. In form and structure the letter is realistic enough, conforming as it does to regular pattern (on the significance of the greeting, see Date). But in content it is farfetched: The language of vss. 6 and 9 particularly is virtually impossible for a Ptolemy.

b. Ptolemy did not have a legitimate son until 208 B.C., about ten years after the events recorded here.

c. The Scythians were proverbial for their cruelty.

d. The action seems harsh and vengeful, but apostasy in the presence of largely pagan authorities was regarded as a heinous crime.

held fast to God even unto death enjoyed the full advantage of their deliverance and departed from the city crowned with all kinds of fragrant flowers, giving thanks to the God of their fathers, the everlasting savior of Israel, with gladness
 17 and with shouting, in songs of praise and melodious hymns. •When they had reached Ptolemais, called "rose-bearing"<sup>e</sup> because of the special characteristic of the place, the fleet waited for them, according to their general wish, for seven 18 days, •and there they held a banquet to celebrate their deliverance, the king having generously supplied every one of them with all they needed until their arrival at 19 their own home. •And when they had completed their voyage in peace with appropriate thanksgivings, there too in the same fashion as before they decided to 20 make these days also during the time of their sojourn festival days.<sup>f</sup> •They consecrated them with an inscription on a pillar, and having dedicated a place of prayer on the site of the banquet, they went away unscathed, free, and filled with joy, and were conducted safely, by ordinance of the king, over land and sea<sup>g</sup> and
 21 river, each to his own home. •They had even greater authority than before among their enemies and were regarded with high esteem and awe; no one at all extorted
 22 their property. •They recovered all their possessions, according to the register,<sup>h</sup> and those who had anything of theirs returned it to them with great fear: The great 23 God had perfectly accomplished great things for their salvation. •Blessed be the deliverer of Israel forever and ever! Amen.

6:36

1:9,16; 3:11;
4:16; 5:25; 7:224Mac 18:24
Sir 51:30-38
Tob 14:15

e. Ptolemais here is not the famous city near Thebes in Upper Egypt but the town at the harbor some miles southwest of Cairo, where the canal broadened out. The adjective "rose-bearing" is not elsewhere applied to Ptolemais, and in fact is found only here. It may be regarded as a private note of the author's.

f. It is not clear whether the author thought of this as a separate festival. It appears he does. But he may be incorporating at this point a tradition that initially referred to the great festival at Alexandria (6:36) and dated its moment of origin rather differently.

g. There was no "sea," except, of course, the Mediterranean, nearby. Assuming "they" (7:20) denotes only Alexandrian Jews, the writer may be in error or may be describing Lake Moeris as "sea." More likely, in view of his apparently extensive knowledge of the geography of the region, he is here making a rhetorical flourish.

h. There has been no mention in the book of any confiscation of Jewish property. Probably the author had information about such confiscation in other times and places and has added here this general note, which certainly emphasizes the completeness of the Jews' restoration.

4 MACCABEES

(First Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY H. ANDERSON

The book widely known under the above heading is set in the form of a philosophical discourse in which the author proceeds to develop his argument by using the first person singular. In his preface in 1:1–6 he introduces the subject of his entire work, devout reason's mastery over the passions, a phrase which recurs like a refrain throughout (1:9, 13, 19, 30; 2:6, 24; 6:31; 7:16; 13:1; 16:1; 18:2). After intimating (1:7–12) that by far the best illustration of this proposition is the martyrdom of Eleazar and the seven sons and their mother, he moves into a philosophical and didactic section (1:13–3:18) in which he discusses the relationship of reason to the passions or emotions and furnishes examples from the lives of Old Testament heroes Joseph, Moses, Jacob, and David. There follows a brief historical exordium relating the intervention of Apollonius, governor of Syria, in the affairs of the Jerusalem Temple, its outcome, and the hostility of Antiochus Epiphanes to the Jews (3:19–14:26). So the scene is set for the martyrdoms to which the main body of the book is entirely devoted (5:1–17:6). Exceedingly detailed descriptions of the tortures to which all were subjected are interspersed with speeches from the lips of Eleazar and the sons, as well as with a panegyric on Eleazar in 6:31–7:23 and another on the sovereignty of devout reason in the seven brothers in 13:1–14:10. In 14:11–17:6 the mother is represented as, in her suffering and death, the most illustrious exemplar of the victory of reason, inasmuch as before her own end she exhorted her sons to endure death rather than transgress the Law. The final segment of the book is given to an account of the public effect of the martyrdoms (17:7–18:5) and of the mother's address to her children (18:6–19), and closes with an expression of faith in the justice of God and, finally, a doxology (18:20–24).

Texts

The text of 4 Maccabees has been handed down in several manuscripts of the Septuagint, but most important are the Sinaiticus (S), from the fourth century A.D., and the Alexandrinus (A), from the fifth century. It does not appear in the third great uncial manuscript of the Greek Bible, the Vaticanus, but is found, with the exception of the section 5:11–12:1, in the eighth- or ninth-century Codex Venetus (V). In addition, numerous manuscripts containing the works of the Jewish historian Josephus also contain 4 Maccabees, a fact which has, since the fourth century, led mistakenly, as we shall see, to the ascription of 4 Maccabees to Josephus. In any case, that 4 Maccabees was first issued without the name of the author is clearly indicated by its appearance in many manuscripts anonymously.

The Greek of our book (see Original Language) was early translated into Syriac, and it appears in the Peshitta under the title The Fourth Book of the Maccabees and Their Mother, a version which generally favors the readings of S against A. Some comparison of the Syriac with the Greek was undertaken in the joint work of R. L. Bensly and W. E. Barnes, published at Cambridge in 1895, titled The Fourth Book of Maccabees and Kindred Documents in Syriac.

The Fourth Book of Maccabees is not in the Vulgate and so is absent from the Apocrypha of the Roman Bible as well as from Protestant Bibles. However, Erasmus was responsible for a very free Latin paraphrase of 4 Maccabees, first published at Cologne in 1524. He was not acquainted with the Greek text, which was in fact first printed in volume 3 of the Strasbourg Septuagint in 1526, but may have worked from an old Latin version entitled Passio SS. Machabaeorum, somewhat closer to the Greek than Erasmus' rendering and extant in some thirty codices going back, probably, to an eighth-century archetype.

The first critical text of 4 Maccabees, founded, unlike the Strasbourg Septuagint of 1526, on a number of manuscripts, was that of O. F. Fritzsche, Libri Apocryphi Veteris Testamenti Graeci (Leipzig, 1871). H. B. Swete's edition, in volume 3 of The Old Testament in Greek (Cambridge, 1899), simply reproduces the text of A and furnishes variants from S and V. The text on which our translation is based is that of volume 1 of Rahlfs' Septuaginta (Stuttgart, 1935), which depends only on S and A. Our commentary draws attention only to those variants which significantly affect the sense of a passage.

The Fourth Book of Maccabees has a considerably stronger claim to the name "Maccabees" than 3 Maccabees, insofar as it witnesses events presumed to have taken place in the earliest days of the Maccabean revolt. Nevertheless, 4 Maccabees is in no sense a history of the exploits of the Maccabean leaders or of the course of the revolt. Rather, our author uses accounts of the martyrdoms as paradigmatic materials for a philosophical exercise on the subject of devout reason's mastery over the passions. Accordingly, even for 4 Maccabees, the designation "Maccabees" remains somewhat misleading. In the manuscript tradition different titles have been transmitted with the work, and the most appropriate and probably most original of these is the one cited by Eusebius and Jerome, On the Supremacy of Reason.

There is some question as to whether 4 Maccabees as we have it is the work of a single hand. Especially has the integrity of 18:6–19 been disputed, and several commentators consider the mother's speech to her children in these verses to be an interpolation. Their opinion is based chiefly on the supposed inferiority of style in the passage, on its catena of scriptural references, and on the discrepancy of its themes with the remainder of the book. But there is no manuscript evidence for the omission of 18:6–19. Nor is there any strong reason to suppose that a rhetorician like the Jewish author of 4 Maccabees, intent on wedding Greek philosophy to Jewish religion, could not have rounded off his entire essay with an address of a rather more homespun type from his great heroine, celebrating the virtues of chastity and familial piety so dear to the Jews, elevating the heroes of the Jewish faith, and in short acting as the final spokeswoman for the supremacy of the Jewish religion. He could scarcely either have inserted the words attributed to the mother here at the close of her earlier speech in 16:16–23 without detracting from his focal point of interest, reason's sovereignty over the passions. So he allows the woman, whose own sovereign victory he has so lauded, to have the last word as the champion of Judaism. Consequently, we here treat the whole of 4 Maccabees as it stands in the Greek text as a unity.

Original language

The chief aim of the writer of 4 Maccabees is to advocate fidelity to the Law and to demonstrate that the hope of fulfilling the Greek ideal of virtue resides only in obedience to the Law of Judaism. Accordingly, he is unquestionably a Jew. But he is no less certainly a Jew profoundly influenced by Greek philosophical thought and thoroughly at home with the Greek language. His work is conspicuously devoid of semitisms, and citations from the Old Testament consistently follow the Septuagint. The images, symbols, and metaphors employed as well as the antitheses, climaxes, and apostrophes that abound all clearly exhibit his skill in the craft of the Greek rhetorician. His Greek is free and idiomatic, indicating that he thinks in that language; it is his native tongue.

A large number of poetic, rare, or even unique terms occur in this book, e.g. philtera = "charm" (13:19, 27; 15:13); hossopoieomai = "hatch" (14:16); pangeōrgos = "master gardener" (1:29); misaretos = "enemy of virtue" (11:4); allophuleō = "adopt the pagan way of life" (18:5). Characteristic also are the many compounds minted by or used by our author, who no doubt loved to savor their sound, e.g. ekdiaitāō = "change" (4:19); heptamētōr = "mother of seven" (16:24); prosepikatateinō = "draw tighter and tighter"

(9:19). These are but further indications of the writer's fluency in Greek and of the pervasive Greek atmosphere of 4 Maccabees.<sup>1</sup>

Authorship and date

Nowhere in 4 Maccabees is there any express notice given of its authorship, date, or place of origin. However, the work as a whole, as well as certain pieces of internal evidence, does allow us initially at least to make some reasonable, albeit broad and general, surmises on these matters:

1. We noted above that 4 Maccabees is found in a number of manuscripts containing the works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish historian. Eusebius of Caesarea, in the early fourth century, and Jerome, a century later, attribute it to the hand of Josephus. But dismissing Ewald's suggestion<sup>2</sup> that another person by the name of Josephus may have been the author, we can also reject the traditional ascription of our book to the famous Flavius Josephus. Nowhere in his major works does the latter exhibit anything like the same florid rhetorical style as 4 Maccabees—he is an historian where the writer of 4 Maccabees is primarily philosopher and rhetorician. Josephus reveals no acquaintance with the text of 2 Maccabees, which appears to lie behind 4 Maccabees. Nor is it at all likely that the eminent historian, who took the name of Flavius as a compliment to the Flavian Caesar and married a gentile wife, would have championed the heroes of the resistance after the fashion of 4 Maccabees. Finally, to make but one specific point, whereas Josephus correctly describes Antiochus Epiphanes as the brother of Seleucus IV (Ant 12:4), in 4 Maccabees (4:15) he is called his son.

2. The manner in which the writer refers to the Jerusalem Temple and its services (e.g. 4:11f.) seems to presuppose that the Temple is still standing and therefore points to a date before the destruction of the Temple in A.D. 70. We may infer that the earliest possible date of composition is 63 B.C. The author is eager to explain that in the days of Seleucus IV (175 B.C.) the high priest Onias held the office for life; this statement would have been unnecessary before 63 B.C., when life tenure lapsed after the fall of the Hasmonean dynasty.<sup>3</sup>

3. We can no longer think of Judaism in our period, even Palestinian Judaism, as distinct at all on most points from the cultural stream of Hellenism. Recent research has demonstrated ever more clearly that even in its homeland Judaism was influenced to a hitherto unsuspected degree by hellenistic ideas, ideals, and practices.<sup>4</sup> However, traces of the infiltration of Hellenism into various phases of Palestinian Jewish life and thought are one thing, an almost complete absorption in hellenistic modes of conceptualization is another, and the ambience of 4 Maccabees is so thoroughly and unreservedly Greek that to regard it as a product of Palestine is virtually impossible. The author's extensive knowledge of Greek philosophy, his positive and purposeful use of it to argue the supremacy of the Law, and his skill in Greek rhetoric undoubtedly point to a location beyond the boundaries of Palestine, to a milieu in which East and West had completely met.

These arguments, limited as they are, do suggest that 4 Maccabees was written outside of Palestine by an unknown author in the period 63 B.C.—A.D. 70. Although we do not know the author's name, his work conjures up a vivid picture of the man—devotee of the Law of his people, theologian of considerable depth, philosopher and rhetorician in the Greek style, impassioned and imaginative narrator.

As to the date of 4 Maccabees, almost every generation between the time of Pompey (around 63 B.C.) and the Emperor Hadrian (around A.D. 120) has been proposed. In the Talmud, rabbinic accounts of martyrdoms, somewhat similar in form to the story related in 4 Maccabees, reflect the period of the persecution of Jews under Hadrian. Aside from the rather fragile evidence mentioned earlier that the Temple still appears to be standing, it is barely conceivable that, with its eloquent advocacy of the supremacy of the Jewish Law to

<sup>1</sup> See further A. Dupont-Sommer, Le Quatrième Livre des Machabées, p. 58.

<sup>2</sup> H. G. A. Ewald, Geschichte des Volkes Israel (Göttingen, 1864–68) vol. 4, p. 633.

<sup>3</sup> R. B. Townshend, "The Fourth Book of Maccabees," APOT, vol. 2, pp. 653–85.

<sup>4</sup> See M. Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism: Studies in their Encounter in Palestine During the Early Hellenistic Period, trans. J. Bowden (Philadelphia and London, 1974). Also, J. N. Sevenster, Do You Know Greek? (Leiden, 1968) p. 177.

the ethical systems of the pagan world and of the invincible power of Jewish faith and religion against all tyrannical attempts at suppression, 4 Maccabees could have been written after the Hadrianic persecution, when the Jews stood apart contra mundum, as it were. Accordingly, A. Dupont-Sommer assigns 4 Maccabees to the short period of relative quiet (A.D. 117–118) between the Jewish war at the close of Trajan's reign and the persecutions under his successor, Hadrian.<sup>5</sup> On the other hand, M. Hadas favors the reign of Caligula (A.D. 37–41), when the storm clouds of persecution were also gathering thickly. But it is not necessary to look for an historical juncture when persecution or the imminent threat of it must have given rise to the considerations that appear in 4 Maccabees.<sup>6</sup> Definitive indications of the author's, or readers', or hearers' situation vis-à-vis persecution or the absence of it are lacking from the work, and the theme of 4 Maccabees is not after all religious persecution as such. Rather does the writer offer a philosophical disquisition on the victorious strength of the devout reason, which would have been relevant and meaningful, at least to Jews of the Diaspora, almost anytime between Pompey and Hadrian, and for illustrative materials he draws upon what he clearly takes to be the classic martyrdoms under Antiochus Epiphanes in the early days of the Maccabean revolt.

In suggesting a date between A.D. 18 and 55, E. Bickermann follows a quite different line of argument and moves us on to rather firmer ground. There occur in 4 Maccabees words like thrēskeia = "religion" and nomikos (for the earlier grammateus, see 4Mac 5:4 and cf. 2Mac 6:18) = "expert in the law," which became fashionable only from the time of Augustus on. But more important, whereas 2 Maccabees speaks of Heliodorus, minister of Seleucus IV, as taking possession of the Temple treasures and describes him as stratēgos of Coelesyria and Phoenicia (2Mac 3:5), 4 Maccabees replaces this Heliodorus with Apollonius, governor of Syria and styles him stratēgos of "Syria, Phoenicia, and Silicia" (4:2). This change can best be explained by assuming that an author like ours would naturally have employed the nomenclature obtaining under the conditions of the Roman imperial administration in his own time, when it appears that Syria and Silicia formed united parts of a single territory, and from Galatians 1:21, an inscription of A.D. 86, and a Roman agricultural writer by the name of Columella, it can be inferred that Syria-Silicia did in fact once constitute one province. Two passages in the Annals of the Roman historian Tacitus (2. 58; 13. 8) point to approximately A.D. 19–54 as the period during which Syria-Silicia made up one region for Roman administrative purposes, and Bickermann's view that 4 Maccabees falls somewhere within this period must be deemed a very plausible hypothesis.<sup>7</sup> But it is quite unjustified to go beyond this and maintain that, since there is no allusion at all to the persecution of Caligula, 4 Maccabees was written before the outbreaks of A.D. 38. As we have seen, reference, or the lack of it, to any particular persecution in a philosophical discourse like 4 Maccabees is a most unsure criterion of dating. Fortunately, the appreciation of such a philosophical work does not depend too largely on our ability to fix its immediate historical background precisely within the narrowest limits.

Provenance

Alexandria in Egypt has sprung naturally to the mind of a number of commentators as the likeliest place of composition. This city had an extremely large colony of Jews who were exposed constantly to the influence of Greek philosophy; it was also the city of Philo, with whose works 4 Maccabees has numerous points of contact. But the choice of Alexandria is based not so much on critical grounds or any specific indication of locality in 4 Maccabees itself as on a feeling for its general suitability. It may indeed tell against Alexandria that there is no reference to or quotation from 4 Maccabees in either Clement of Alexandria or Origen, and, in any case, as J. Freudenthal observed long ago, many Jewish hellenists composed their writings in widely disseminated parts of the Diaspora, far away from

<sup>5</sup> Dupont-Sommer (Machabées, pp. 78–85) supports this dating by appeal to certain affinities he detects between 4Mac and other documents of the early second century, notably the Epistle to the Hebrews and the Letters of Ignatius.

<sup>6</sup> M. Hadas, The Third and Fourth Books of Maccabees, pp. 95–99.

<sup>7</sup> E. J. Bickermann, "The Date of Fourth Maccabees," Louis Ginzberg Jubilee Volume (New York, 1945) English Section, pp. 105–12.

Alexandria; for example, Jason of Cyrene, Paul of Cilicia and Josephus himself.<sup>8</sup> Moreover, E. Norden, a leading expert in matters of Greek literature and language, found in 4 Maccabees an outstanding representative of that flowery, rhetorical "Asiatic style" that was associated especially with Asia Minor and eventually blossomed to its fullest extent in the early second century A.D.<sup>9</sup>

If we look away from Egypt to the coastal lands of the northeast Mediterranean, the city that first suggests itself as a possible location for 4 Maccabees is Antioch in Syria, which was, according to Josephus, after Rome and Alexandria, the third city of the ancient world, where Greek rhetoric, and indeed all the arts, certainly did flourish, where there was also a large community of Jews, and where the early Christian movement established its first strong foothold on gentile soil. In later Christian tradition there are in fact certain indications of the existence of a cult of the Maccabean martyrs at Antioch. From the fourth century A.D., Jerome, for instance, testifies (somewhat ambiguously) to the veneration of the tomb of the Maccabees at Modein in Palestine, and is apparently thinking of the heroic leaders of the Maccabean revolt, but he seems to know also of physical relics of the martyrs (those described in 4Mac?) at Antioch. At approximately the same period at Antioch, John Chrysostom, in his Fourth Homily, conveys the impression of his preaching by the tomb of the martyrs, and later in the same work alludes to Eleazar and the mother and her seven sons, the very martyrs of 4 Maccabees.

Given the witness of these and other still later traditions to Antioch as the scene of a cult of the martyrs, there would seem to be no likelier home for 4 Maccabees, if we could also accept the view adopted by some recent interpreters, notably Dupont-Sommer and Hadas, that it was actually composed for oral delivery as an address of commemoration of the martyrs.<sup>10</sup> At this point the question of the place of origin of 4 Maccabees is intimately bound up with the question of its form. Our work has of course been variously characterized as a synagogue sermon, a lecture, a genuine commemorative address, or as a fictive discourse.

The main objection to regarding 4 Maccabees as a specimen of synagogue preaching<sup>11</sup> is that a synagogue sermon would almost certainly have been based on a text from scripture,<sup>12</sup> and although our knowledge of the homiletic practices of the synagogues of the Diaspora is very limited indeed, it is surely unlikely that even there a sermon would have begun in the highly philosophical vein of 4 Maccabees. By the same token, since as the work develops philosophical exposition gives way to fervent religious pleading, the classification of 4 Maccabees as a lecture<sup>13</sup> set within "the groves of academe" is no less improbable. We are thus left with two alternatives—a genuine commemorative address (delivered on the site of the martyrdoms at Antioch) or a literary piece of a rhetorical kind cast in the shape of a fictive discourse.

It has been maintained that 4 Maccabees was intended for oral delivery on a special occasion, and that the occasion was in fact the Jewish festival of Hanukkah. But the trouble with this assertion is, on the one hand, that, if composed for Hanukkah, 4 Maccabees must assuredly have alluded to the heroes of the Maccabean war whom that feast celebrates, which it never does, and, on the other hand, that there is no Jewish tradition that associates the martyrs of 4 Maccabees, Eleazar and the mother and her seven sons, with Hanukkah. It is with such considerations in mind that M. Hadas invites us to think of 4 Maccabees as a real address delivered at "an annual commemoration of the martyrs celebrated at the site, actual or supposed, of their burial."<sup>14</sup>

In support of this estimate of 4 Maccabees, appeal can be made to several passages which do seem to imply that it was spoken at the tomb of the martyrs on a day of special solemnity,

<sup>8</sup> J. Freudenthal, Die Flavius Josephus beigelegte Schrift über die Herrschaft der Vernunft (IV Makkabäerbuch), eine Predigt aus dem ersten nachchristlichen Jahrhundert (Breslau, 1869) pp. 112f.

<sup>9</sup> E. Norden, Die antike Kunstprosa vom VI Jahrhundert v. Chr. bis in die Zeit der Renaissance (Leipzig, 1923) vol. 1, pp. 416–20.

<sup>10</sup> Dupont-Sommer, Machabées, pp. 67–73; Hadas, Maccabees, pp. 109–13.

<sup>11</sup> See e.g. Freudenthal, Josephus, pp. 4–36.

<sup>12</sup> See e.g. E. Schürer, History, div. 2, vol. 3, p. 244.

<sup>13</sup> See Townshend, APOT, vol. 2, p. 653.

<sup>14</sup> Hadas, Maccabees, pp. 104f.; cf. Cardinal Rampolla de Tindaro, "Martyre et Sépulture des Machabées," Revue de l'Art Chrétien 42 (1899) 290–305; Dupont-Sommer, Machabées, pp. 67–73.

especially 1:10, "I might indeed eulogize for their virtues those men who at this season of the year died together with their mother for goodness' sake," and 3:19, "But the season now summons us to expound the theme of the temperate reason" (although this latter may as well be translated, "But we have now reached the point in our discourse at which we are summoned to expound . . ."). Also, according to Dupont-Sommer,<sup>15</sup> the exclamation of 18:20, "Ah! bitter was the day and yet not bitter," evokes the particular day of commemoration of the martyrs, just as the mention of their tomb and epitaph in 17:8-10 suggests that the panegyric of 4 Maccabees was pronounced at the very site where they were buried.

However, only a pedantry quite foreign to the imaginative procedures of a rhetorician like our author would insist on the basis of 18:20 and 17:8-10 that he just had to be speaking on the day of commemoration at the actual tomb of the martyrs. None of the passages referred to in the foregoing paragraph are incompatible with the possibility of a set written piece, composed at a time of year traditionally associated with the death of the martyrs, in the form of a fictive discourse in which the author projects himself on to the rostrum, so to speak, in good rhetorical fashion, and confronts his readers directly. E. Norden draws attention to an essay in Cicero's Paradoxa in which he talks of "this speech," whereas he had already made it clear in the preface that he was writing late at night and was indeed choosing to do so in the form of direct speech.<sup>16</sup>

Besides, it may be asked whether the relatively wordy speeches placed on the lips of Eleazar, the sons, and, finally, the mother would have been natural in a spoken address. Again, if our author had delivered his panegyric at the very scene of the martyrdoms, by the tomb of the martyrs, would a rhetorician of his skill have lost the opportunity to make that movingly plain to his audience at 5:1 with words like "And so the tyrant Antiochus took his seat on this very spot where we are now gathered"? Instead he describes the location of the martyrdoms very vaguely indeed ("And so the tyrant Antiochus took his seat with his counselors on a certain high place" 5:1), so vaguely that the reader is given to think from what has gone before that Jerusalem may indeed be the setting for the martyr deaths. The possibility, therefore, that 4 Maccabees was in fact composed as a fictive discourse cannot be lightly dismissed.

Certain extrinsic factors also militate against the notion that 4 Maccabees was an address actually delivered on the site of the martyrs' burial. The Law expressly forbade contact with the dead (Lev 21:1-5, 10f.; Num 6:6-9; 19:11-13; Deut 18:9-12, 26:14), and the attitude of Jewish tradition toward anything resembling a cult of the dead is completely negative. Consequently, in order to regard 4 Maccabees as a commemorative speech at the martyrs' tomb in Antioch, we would have to think, as Hadas clearly recognizes,<sup>17</sup> of a thoroughly hellenized Jewish community in which hellenistic custom and usage in respect of the annual commemoration of heroes had altogether overcome natural Jewish reserve. Again, later Christian veneration of the Maccabean martyrs provides no guarantee of the existence of an earlier Jewish cult in the period of 4 Maccabees, with which the Christian commemoration stood in direct continuity.<sup>18</sup>

<sup>15</sup> Dupont-Sommer, Machabées, p. 68.

<sup>16</sup> Norden, Kunstprosa, vol. 1, p. 416. Recently J. C. H. Lebram has classified 4Mac as in form a philosophical diatribe. After a brief philosophical and then historical exordium, the second and much the larger part of the work from ch. 5 on removes the account of the martyrs from the sphere of a history of the Maccabees and instead incorporates it in a funeral oration of the type spoken at Athens by Hyperides, Demosthenes, Isocrates, and others. The rhetorical schools continued to teach the literary techniques involved in the funeral oration. The circumstances of the Jews in the Maccabean age, resistance to tyranny, the struggle for the Law and freedom, and belief in the immortality of the martyrs all lent themselves readily to literary treatment of this kind. See Lebram, "Die literarische Form des vierten Makkabäerbuches," VC 28 (1974) 81-96.

<sup>17</sup> Hadas, Maccabees, p. 105.

<sup>18</sup> Ibid., p. 109. "It is natural to assume," says Hadas, "that the Christian commemoration of these martyrs was a continuation of a Jewish institution." In a recent article, "The Maccabean Martyrs," VC 28 (1974) 97-113, M. Schatkin argues on the ground of evidence both internal and external, following Cardinal Rampolla, that the martyrs were executed, buried, and venerated in Antioch. However, even if we accepted all her arguments, and the arguments from the internal evidence of 2Mac and 4Mac are not all that convincing, the fact remains that the author of 4Mac is not necessarily to be associated with Antioch. Schatkin herself observes that "some ancient writers, including the unknown author of 4 Mac, assumed that the executions took place at Jerusalem" (italics mine; note the apparent conflict between 4Mac 18:5 and 1Mac 3:37).

These considerations or reservations both about the form of our work and the actuality of a Jewish martyr cult in the first half of the first century A.D. considerably weaken the case for associating it with the tomb of the martyrs in Antioch. It may be best to follow E. Norden<sup>19</sup> in leaving the question of a home for 4 Maccabees much more open, contemplating only some possible location in the coastal lands of Asia Minor. Largely because of the numerous sea metaphors in the book, A. Kahana<sup>20</sup> conjectures one of the Aegean islands as a home for it, but the conjecture need not be taken too seriously, since almost anyone in the regions of the eastern Mediterranean could have indulged in sea metaphors, and, in any case, there are just as many metaphors of besieged cities, the land, and so on.

Historical importance

The only complete Jewish work of its kind that has survived to us, 4 Maccabees is intrinsically of great historical value. Different in form and scope from anything that men of somewhat similar background and outlook, like Philo of Alexandria and Josephus, have given us, 4 Maccabees provides us with a particularly fascinating insight into the thought world of a hellenized Jew of the Diaspora in the first century of our era. Through 4 Maccabees we may appreciate his mastery of the Greek rhetorician's craft, his profound knowledge of Greek philosophical principles and his use of them to defend and illumine the sovereignty of the Law and the devout reason's control over the passions. But, as a source book of information on the external history of the writer's own time and place or of the early years of the Maccabean wars to which the martyrdoms he describes purport to belong, 4 Maccabees is of little value.

Our author, of course, is no historian. His aim is not to notify his readers as accurately as possible concerning long-past events of the Maccabean struggle. Rather does he seek, through all the rhetorical powers he can muster, to let the stories he tells kindle the imagination of his readers, to move them to the depths in mind and heart, to persuade them to accept the supremacy of devout reason. The basic materials for his martyrdom stories were most probably derived from the tradition embedded in 2 Maccabees, although our author has patently stretched them and adorned them at will to suit his own philosophical and theological purposes, particularly in the speeches he has placed on the lips of the dying martyrs. Whether these stories have a foundation in genuine historical fact is an open question. If we have no means of proving their historicity, neither should we reject them out of hand as completely legendary. Perhaps a generation acquainted with the barbarities of Auschwitz and Buchenwald may be less prone to dismiss as terribly overdrawn and altogether fictional the bizarre and gruesome items in the repeated descriptions of the tortures in 4 Maccabees than the generation for which Townshend wrote in 1913, "The details of the successive tortures are elaborated in a way that shocks modern taste."<sup>21</sup> Nevertheless, beyond reminding us that brave people almost certainly suffered severe torments and died as martyrs for the Jewish faith under Antiochus Epiphanes, 4 Maccabees adds nothing to our knowledge of the Maccabean period.

Theological importance

The writer of 4 Maccabees is a philosopher as well as a theologian. The framework of his thought is Greek, as are his mode of expression and the form of his work. He appears to have a firsthand intimacy with Platonic ideas, perhaps especially, as Hadas observes,<sup>22</sup>

<sup>19</sup> Norden, Kunstprosa, vol. 1, p. 419.

<sup>20</sup> A. Kahana, Hebrew Edition of the Apocrypha (Tel Aviv, 1956) vol. 2, p. 258.

<sup>21</sup> Townshend, APOT, vol. 2, p. 655.

<sup>22</sup> Hadas, Maccabees, pp. 116f. It has recently been held that our author in fact drew nothing directly from Plato but was indebted only to the "philosophic koinē" or "philosophic commonplaces" of his time and in particular to contemporary Stoic notions. But does one need to set up an either/or in this regard, either Platonic or Stoic? See R. Renehan, "The Greek Philosophic Background of Fourth Maccabees," Rheinisches Museum für Philologie 115 (1972) 223-38. The issue of our author's "Platonism" or "Stoicism" is further complicated by the fact that, as Renehan rightly observes (p. 226), the Stoicism of his day was no monolithic structure but left room for considerable variety of opinion, Posidonius, for example, not subscribing to the doctrine that the passions cannot be eradicated. But by with Plato's Gorgias, in which Socrates concludes that the ultimate ideal or the true doctrine is to live and die in the practice alike of justice and of all other virtues. But he is closely acquainted also with the prevalent Stoic philosophy of his own day, and in many passages adopts Stoic language and echoes Stoic views (see e.g. 1:1, 6, 16f., 33; 2:7, 14; 3:11f.; 5:7-13, 19f., 22, 25, 38; 12:13; 13:19; 14:2; 15:4). However, his concern is not to advocate Stoicism or even to advance the knowledge of Greek thought among his readers, who are no doubt already "naturalized" in the Greek philosophical atmosphere. The philosopher in him never in fact overcomes the theologian, loyal to the faith of his fathers. All that he has learned from the Greeks is enlisted in the service of Judaism, to show that the cardinal virtues, self-control, courage, justice, and temperance, indeed the very essence of Greek wisdom, are subsumed under the Law or obedience to it.

Our author's religious priorities are nowhere more graphically illustrated than in the picture he presents of Eleazar in chapter 5. As the Jewish philosopher par excellence (5:4), Eleazar, far from endorsing Stoic principles, indeed opposes them, as when, for example, he insists against Stoicism that reason does not eradicate but only controls or directs the passions (5:23). Again, whereas Stoicism operated with the notion of the equality of sins, Eleazar follows Jewish tradition in distinguishing between light and serious sins (5:19-21). But the real point at issue in Eleazar's confrontation with Antiochus, who is here spokesman for the Stoic viewpoint, is not the gradation of sins.<sup>23</sup> It is rather that the king is quite unable to comprehend what loyalty to the Jewish Law involves. The heart of Eleazar's doctrine is simply that "we must lead our lives in accordance with the divine Law" (5:15) and that "under no circumstances whatever do we ever deem it right to transgress the Law" (5:17). Accordingly, strict faithfulness to the Law's command is the ground of his refusal to partake of swine's flesh or food sacrificed to idols. Antiochus, by contrast, brands this as a senseless scruple, engendered by a "preposterous philosophy" (5:11). For the king the act of eating swine's flesh is no more than the innocent enjoyment of one of nature's good gifts (5:9). For the old Jewish sage it is a matter of the utmost gravity since violation of any commandment, most of all violation in public in the presence of onlookers, constituted contempt for God the giver of the Law and was tantamount to apostasy (5:35-38).

Eleazar, who in 2 Maccabees is not at all recognized as a "philosopher," thus becomes the advocate of our author's own "philosophy" that the truth resides in the eusebeia, or piety, which inheres in obedience to the Law of Moses. His "philosophy" is in fact incapsulated in the rather strange and pregnant phrase ho eusebēs logismos ("the devout reason," which enables the martyrs to master their natural feelings and desires throughout their fiery ordeal), which appears throughout the work as a recurring refrain and by which he invites not only his fellow Jews but the world at large to see that the sum of human wisdom and all the law of nature is gathered up under fidelity to the Law revealed by God to Israel.

The blend of particularism and universalism, implicit already in the term "the devout reason," accords well with our author's doctrine of God. For him the God who is first and foremost the God of the fathers of Israel (9:24; 12:18) is also the omniscient (1:12; 13:19) creator of the whole world (5:25; 11:5). He it is who fashioned man and implanted in him both his feelings and his reason (2:21f.). By his will alone personages like Antiochus are permitted to enjoy their regal status (12:11). He determines men's eternal destinies (18:5; cf. 12:19), recompensing the righteous martyrs and consigning the wicked to everlasting punishment. In all of this our author is in conformity with the Judaism of his day, and typically Jewish also is his appeal to biblical figures as archetypal models of the heroism of faith, Abraham (14:20; 16:20), Isaac (16:20), Jacob (2:19), Joseph (2:2), Moses (2:17), David (3:6), and Daniel and his companions (16:3, 21).

whatever "wing" of Stoicism our author may have been influenced, the truth remains that his philosophy is swallowed up in his Jewish orthodoxy.

<sup>23</sup> Critics are divided on the question of whether in 5:19-21 Eleazar espouses or opposes the Stoic doctrine of the equality of sins. Against Hadas (Maccabees, p. 118. See also H. A. Wolfson, Philo (Cambridge, 1947) vol. 2, pp. 271f.), Renehan insists that in 5:20 Eleazar is clearly in general agreement with the Stoic teaching (Rheinisches Museum für Philologie 115 [1972] pp. 229f. See also R. H. Pfeiffer, History, p. 219, n. 23). But for our author the problem of the equality or gradation of sins is subsidiary—his real concern is to show that Antiochus does not regard the eating of swine's flesh as a sin at all (5:9) and so stands as a destructive threat to the sovereignty of the Law.

However, in one important respect, at least, our author's knowledge of Greek philosophy has positively affected his religious belief. Like Philo and the author of the Wisdom of Solomon, he subscribes to the idea of the immortality of the soul. The great hope expressed in 4 Maccabees is that the pure and immortal soul might enter into the incorruption of life everlasting (9:22; 14:5f.; 16:13; 17:12; 18:23). His espousal of the Greek doctrine of the immortality of the soul is clear-cut and striking; he consistently omits the passages in his primary source, 2 Maccabees, that testify unreservedly to the Jewish belief in the resurrection of the body (7:9, 11, 14, 22f.). Doctrinally, the most significant contribution of 4 Maccabees is the development of the notion that the suffering and death of the martyred righteous had redemptive efficacy for all Israel and secured God's grace and pardon for his people. Eleazar first expresses the idea in his prayer in 6:28f.: "Be merciful to your people and let our punishment be a satisfaction on their behalf. Make my blood their purification and take my life as a ransom for theirs." Later, we find the same thought: "The tyrant was punished and our land purified, since they became, as it were, a ransom for the sin of our nation. Through the blood of these righteous ones and through the propitiation of their death the divine providence rescued Israel, which had been shamefully treated" (17:21f.).

The idea of vicarious atonement in and through the death of Jesus was of course of central importance in early Christianity, and it appears in many places in the New Testament (e.g. Mk 10:45; Mt 20:28; Heb 9:12; Rom 5; 1Tim 2:6; etc.). But there is no need whatever to suppose that passages like 6:28f. and 17:21f. in 4 Maccabees should be regarded as Christian interpolations. In fact, although the concept of vicarious atonement was by no means normative or widespread in Judaism around the time of Jesus or Paul, it does have roots going far back into the Old Testament and our author was certainly no innovator in this matter. One of the Levitical ordinances for the Day of Atonement is that the goat on which the lot for the Lord fell should be sacrificed and the blood brought into the holy place as a propitiation for the sins of Israel (Lev 16), since, as Lev 17:11 testifies, it is the blood that makes atonement. On a quite different level, the portrayal of the servant of Yahweh in Deutero-Isaiah bears witness to the saving effect for Israel of the suffering and sacrifice of an elect individual or group (see especially Isa 53:5, 10, 11). There is little doubt that the epic struggles of the Jews in the Maccabean wars gave further impetus to reflection not only on the positive value but on the atoning power of suffering and death. At any rate, the idea that the suffering and death of the righteous atoned vicariously for the sins of others is sufficiently well attested in the apocalyptic literature (e.g. TBenj 3:8) and at Qumran (e.g. 1QS 5:6; 8:3f., 10; 9:4) to suggest that it was in the air in the intertestamental period. Add to this its occurrence in less-developed form in 2 Maccabees 7:37f., and we can recognize that the readers of 4 Maccabees would certainly not have regarded the notion of vicarious redemption as a novel doctrine introduced by the author. Accordingly, when in its confessional formulations early Christianity laid great stress on the saving or redemptive efficacy of the death of Jesus, it was picking up and adapting to its own new faith a doctrine that already enjoyed at least a limited currency in Judaism.

Similarly, it is quite unnecessary to suppose that the notion of the Jewish martyrs being "received" after their death by Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (4Mac 13:17) is an accommodation to the picture of Lazarus in the bosom of Abraham in Luke 16:22f. or that the idea of the patriarchs and martyrs "living unto God" (4Mac 16:25) adumbrates a Christian view of the resurrection of the dead. Such ideas and images arise not by direct borrowing one way or the other between Judaism and primitive Christianity but rather from a common climate of thought and religious imagination shared by both.

In the last analysis our author's chief claim to fame rests not on any pioneering contribution he has made to a particular Jewish doctrine but on the fact that his work affords us a singularly valuable specimen of the way in which a hellenistic Jew of the Diaspora can draw upon Greek philosophical thoughts and modes of expression in the formation of an essentially religious message of enduring relevance and validity. The spur to withstand oppression and tyranny and to win spiritual victory over death itself is loyal obedience to the revealed will of God.

Relation to canonical books

Since our author's innovative genius lies "in his attempt to acclimate Judaism to a hellenized Diaspora, and thus prepare the way for making of it, and of its daughter religion, a universal faith,"<sup>24</sup> it is hardly surprising that his work shows no special indebtedness to any Old Testament book or books. If such men really did help to pave the way for the worldwide spread of Christianity, is there then any trace of the influence of 4 Maccabees on the New Testament? A. Deissmann, in fact, suggested that Paul may have been familiar with 4 Maccabees as a sort of current best seller, and he had in mind specifically the similarity between Paul's witness to the atoning death of Jesus and the testimony of 4 Maccabees to the vicarious atonement wrought through the deaths of the Jewish martyrs.<sup>25</sup> But a similarity in one point of doctrine between two authors is by no means enough to justify a theory of direct borrowing one way or the other, and the most we should assume, as we have already indicated, is that Paul and our author, both hellenistic Jews of the Diaspora, were exposed to the same atmosphere of religious belief.

Relation to apocryphal books

The author of 2 Maccabees refers to his own work as an epitome of the five volumes of Jason of Cyrene. Few critics would deny that 2 and 4 Maccabees stand in some sort of relationship to each other. Both relate the martyr deaths of Eleazar and the mother and her seven sons, and both furnish an historical preamble to their accounts of the martyrdoms. However, whereas in 2 Maccabees the historical preamble is a lengthy and detailed report of the Syrian persecution and the martyrdoms are briefly told in less than two chapters (6:18–7:41), in 4 Maccabees the historical preamble (3:20–4:26) reads like a short résumé of 2 Maccabees, and the martyrdoms, described in the most elaborate detail, occupy fourteen chapters (5–18).

Freudenthal argued that the phenomena presented by the two texts, the similarities and discrepancies between them, are best accounted for by supposing that each author used Jason's history as a basic source and selected and adapted from it what best suited his own intention and design.<sup>26</sup> Heliodorus, mentioned thirteen times in 2 Maccabees, completely disappears from 4 Maccabees and is apparently replaced by Apollonius (4Mac 4:2). This must be due to confusion about the identity of the person referred to by the many pronouns employed in the Jason source. The longer form of the speech of the dying Eleazar in 4 Maccabees 6:26–29 (cf. the short form in 2Mac 6:30) is to be taken as a faithful transcript of the text of Jason. Similarly, while 2 Maccabees 7:41 merely notes quite simply that "after the sons the mother died," 4 Maccabees 17:1 describes her as committing suicide by throwing herself on the flames. This is a piece of information derived from Jason but suppressed by the author of 2 Maccabees because he repudiated suicide as evil. Such is the gist of Freudenthal's argumentation.

The case for 4 Maccabees' use of Jason is not at all convincing.<sup>27</sup> Nothing whatever of Jason's work has survived, and, given the literary devices of the day, it is possible that the claim of the author of 2 Maccabees to be Jason's epitomist is only a fictional piece of propaganda to lend authority to his writing. Freudenthal's thesis that 4 Maccabees depends on Jason's history is unconvincing; it requires us to make of our author much more of a factual reporter fastidious about accurate reproduction of his source than from his work he

<sup>24</sup> Hadas, Maccabees, p. 123.

<sup>25</sup> A. Deissmann, "Das vierte Makkabäerbuch," APAT, vol. 2, pp. 151f., 160, 174. P. Staples lately conjectured that there is some literary and circumstantial evidence to link the Gk. Maccabee tradition with the NT, albeit, in the light of the Maccabean ideals of Law, Temple, etc., not with Paul and his letters, but with opponents of Paul possibly in Ephesus, Corinth, and elsewhere. In particular, only seven words from 4Mac appear in Luke-Acts, only five in Heb, and only eleven in the Pastoral Epistles. Most of all, the doxology of 4Mac 18:24 turns up in several contexts in the NT, not least in 2Tim 4:18, Heb 13:21, and in a "freer" version in Phil 4:20, Eph 3:21, and 1Tim 1:17, all documents associated with Ephesus. The possibility of the interconnection of 4Mac, Heb, and Ephesus is enhanced if Apollonius, who came from Alexandria (home of 4Mac?) and joined the Pauline mission at Ephesus were author of Heb. But the vocabulary overlap of 4Mac with NT documents is certainly not enough to demonstrate literary dependence and the circumstantial evidence is too heavily dependent on guesswork. It is much safer to assume that the various authors were simply exposed to the same climate of religious thought and belief. See also P. Staples, "The Unused Lever? A Study on the Possible Literary Influence of the Greek Maccabean Literature in the New Testament," The Modern Churchman 9 (1966) 218–24.

<sup>26</sup> Freudenthal, Josephus, pp. 72–90. Deissmann favors the same view, APAT, vol. 2, p. 156.

<sup>27</sup> See Dupont-Sommer, Machabées, pp. 30f.

really appears to be. In this regard Dupont-Sommer's remark is very much to the point: "The history of temperate reason is certainly more than mere history."<sup>28</sup> The writer of 4 Maccabees' main aim was to move his readers deeply by the pathos of his story, and he was first and foremost a rhetorician of skill and inventiveness and not a recorder of facts. A man like this knew above all how to develop, enlarge, and embellish a story to produce the desired effect upon his readers. If he had at hand the data provided by 2 Maccabees, he certainly did not need a fuller source like Jason's history for the many, many additions he has made to the narrative of the martyrdoms. His own imagination, aided and abetted perhaps by developments of the tale within ongoing oral tradition, would have been quite enough to do the trick. In all likelihood then our author had at his disposal 2 Maccabees and rearranged and reshaped it freely to suit his own taste and purpose. The relative dates of the two works and the obvious parallels in sequence as well as in content, as the list in Townshend<sup>29</sup> clearly demonstrates, offer additional support for this view.

There are certain rather close resemblances in religious thought and outlook between 4 Maccabees and the Wisdom of Solomon: belief in the incorruptibility and immortality of the soul, the everlasting life of the righteous as a life of communion with God (WisSol 3:9; cf. 4Mac 7:19; 9:8; 16:25; 17:18), the notion emanating from Neo-Pythagorean astralism of the immortal souls of the martyrs shining bright like the stars in heaven (WisSol 3:7; cf. 4Mac 17:5). Freudenthal thought that the author of 4 Maccabees not only knew the Wisdom of Solomon but that he had it before him when he wrote. In his view the long passage in 4 Maccabees 5:23f. is a deliberate extension or elaboration of the simple statement in the Wisdom of Solomon 8:7: "The fruits of wisdom's labor are virtues, for she teaches self-control and understanding, righteousness, and courage; and there is nothing in life for men more profitable than these."<sup>30</sup> But there is little or no verbal similarity between the two passages, and in both we are dealing with common Stoic arguments. We can infer no more from the parallel thought of the two passages than that both writers were familiar with Stoic ideas. From other parallels in thought between the two documents (e.g. the immortality of the soul) it is impossible to adduce proof of direct literary connection or dependence of 4 Maccabees on the Wisdom of Solomon. All we are entitled to say is that the authors shared a similar background of religious ideas.

Cultural importance

In 4 Maccabees, as in 2 Maccabees, the story of the martyrdoms is set in the early days of the Maccabean revolt and the persecutor is Antiochus Epiphanes. No traces of 4 Maccabees are discernible, however, in later Jewish tradition, where the story circulated in a wide variety of forms for many centuries. In the rabbinic literature the martyrdoms are assigned to the Hadrianic persecution (see LamR 1:16; b.Git 57b; PR 43:180; SER 30:151), and in some rabbinic accounts the name of the mother, not given in 4 Maccabees or in 2 Maccabees, is Mariam bat Tanhum. In Syriac Christian accounts she is called Shamone and/or Maryam, whereas a Spanish reviser of the Sefer Josippon (c. A.D. 953; edited at Constantinople in 1510) named her Hannah, no doubt under the inspiration of the story of Hannah in 1 Samuel 1f., and especially 1 Samuel 2:5 (Hannah's prayer: "The barren woman bears sevenfold, but the mother of many is desolate").

Representations of the martyrdoms in works of art (e.g. the macabre pictures of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries), poetry, and drama down to modern times are probably dependent on later versions of the story stemming from traditions independent of 4 Maccabees (or 2Mac). The same may be true also of such early iconographic depictions of the martyrdom of the Maccabees as on the Brescia Casket (c. A.D. 370).

It is unquestionably in the sphere of Christian martyrology that 4 Maccabees specifically exerted the most profound and widespread influence, most of all among early Church Fathers both of the East and West, like Gregory Nazianzus and John Chrysostom, Ambrose and Augustine. They not only knew and used 4 Maccabees but almost adopted it as a "Christian" book insofar as they looked upon the Jewish martyrs as Christian protomartyrs. In his oration on the martyrs, Gregory, for instance, refers to the first of August as the annual day of their commemoration and holds them up as worthy of universal honor, with the reminder (alluding to Heb 11:40) that none of those who were made perfect before Christ reached that point outside of the Christian faith. Indeed, later on in his work he commends them for having lived according to the cross even though they lived before it.<sup>31</sup> Likewise Chrysostom, author of four homilies on the Maccabean martyrs, vividly portrays Christ as the one who draws the aged mother into the contest of the arena of torment. Augustine, for his part, notes clearly (City of God 18:36) that it was "on account of the extreme and wonderful suffering of the martyrs told therein" that the books of the Maccabees were taken over and preserved by the Church. Ambrose's De Jacob et vita beata is hardly more than a transcript of our book.

<sup>28</sup> Ibid., p. 31. [Idiomatic translation of the French by J.H.C.]

<sup>29</sup> Townshend, APOT, vol. 2, p. 665.

<sup>30</sup> Freudenthal, Josephus, pp. 92f.

Further testimony to the influence of 4 Maccabees in Christian circles is borne by the Passio ss. Machabaeorum, a free Latin adaptation of our work belonging possibly to the fourth century A.D. This was probably the Latin text freely paraphrased by Erasmus in his edition of 4 Maccabees, first published at Cologne in 1524 and dedicated to his friend Elias Maraeus, president of the "most honorable college of Maccabees at Cologne." Erasmus was evidently familiar with a shrine of the Maccabean martyrs at Cologne, where Maccabean relics were greatly revered. According to tradition, relics of the martyrs had been transported from Antioch, the place of their burial, to Byzantium by St. Helen, later from Byzantium to Milan by Eustorgius, and finally from Milan to Cologne in 1164 by Reginald, bishop of that city.

Erasmus' interest in 4 Maccabees was assuredly not simply academic. He began his paraphrase in 1517, the very year when Luther nailed his pamphlet against indulgences to the door of the church at Wittenberg. And some six years later the works of the great humanist were submitted to the Spanish Inquisition. No wonder he suffered his own dread of martyrdom. To be sure, he found in the message of 4 Maccabees stimulus, uplift, and encouragement. Erasmus' appeal to 4 Maccabees sums up within itself what has been the supreme cultural importance of the work—not only has it provided materials for the literary and theoretical development of Christian martyrology which became a matter of prominent concern in the religion of Europe, but its "martyr-saints" have been a model and an inspiration to fortitude and perseverance for many under the heel of tyranny and persecution.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Indispensable for the student of 4 Maccabees are the following full-scale works, consisting of introductions, translations, and notes:

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 151–53.

Delling, Bibliographie, p. 95.

Amir, Y. "Maccabees, Fourth Book of," Encyclopedia Judaica. Vol. 11, cols. 661f.

Bickermann, E. J. "The Date of IV Maccabees," Louis Ginzberg Jubilee Volume. New York, 1945; English Section, pp. 105–12.

Breitenstein, U. Beobachtungen zu Sprache, Stil und Gedankengut des Vierten Makkabäerbuches. Basel, Stuttgart, 1978<sup>2</sup>. (Breitenstein's monograph, which is his 1974 Basel dissertation, appeared after Anderson had completed the above contribution. After examining the vocabulary, syntax, rhetoric, and thought of 4Mac, Breitenstein concludes that the vocabulary of 4Mac is clearly distinguishable from the LXX, and that the author is a rhetorician who lived in the early 2nd cent. A.D. —J.H.C.).

<sup>31</sup> For some clear echoes of 4Mac in Gregory's oration, see Townshend, APOT, vol. 2, p. 659.

Deissmann, A. "Das vierte Makkabäerbuch," APAT, vol. 2, pp. 149–77.

Dupont-Sommer, A. Le Quatrième Livre des Machabées. Paris, 1939.

Eissfeldt, O. The Old Testament: An Introduction. Trans. P. R. Ackroyd. New York and Evanston, 1965; pp. 583f.

Emmet, C. W. The Fourth Book of Maccabees. London, 1918.

Freudenthal, J. Die Flavius Josephus beigelegte Schrift über die Herrschaft der Vernunft (IV Makkabäerbuch), eine Predigt aus dem ersten nachchristlichen Jahrhundert. Breslau, 1869.

Hadas, M. The Third and Fourth Books of Maccabees. New York, 1953.

Schürer, E. History. Div. 2, vol. 3, pp. 244–48.

Townshend, R. B. "The Fourth Book of Maccabees," APOT, vol. 2, pp. 653–85.

THE FOURTH BOOK OF MACCABEES

The author's definition of his task

1 1 Highly philosophical is the subject I propose to discuss, namely, whether devout reason is absolute master of the passions,<sup>a</sup> and I would strictly counsel you to 2 give earnest attention to my philosophical exposition.<sup>b</sup> •The subject is an indispensable branch of knowledge but it also includes a eulogy of the greatest of 3 virtues,<sup>c</sup> by which I mean of course prudence. •If reason is shown to be master 4 of the passions that hinder temperance, namely gluttony and lust, •it is also demonstrated that it is lord of the passions that impede justice, such as malice, and over the passions that impede courage, such as rage and fear and pain.<sup>d</sup>
5 How then, some might ask, if reason is master of the passions, does it not control
6 forgetfulness and ignorance? The question is absurd. •It is not over its own inherent defects that reason is master but over the passions that are opposed to justice and courage and temperance, and master over these not in such a way as to eradicate them but to keep men from surrendering to them.<sup>e</sup> 7 I could prove to you from many and varied sources that reason is absolute
8 master of the passions, •but far the best example I could furnish is the heroism of those who died for virtue's sake, namely Eleazar and the seven brothers and 9 their mother.<sup>f</sup> •Taking no account at all of the sufferings that brought them to their death, they all proved that reason is lord of the passions. •I might indeed 10 eulogize for their virtues those men who at this season of the year<sup>g</sup> died together with their mother for goodness' sake, but I would rather congratulate them on the 11 distinctions they have attained. •Not only was all mankind stirred to wonder by their courage and fortitude, but even their own torturers, and so they became responsible for the downfall of the tyranny which beset our nation, overcoming the tyrant by their fortitude so that through them their own land was purified.<sup>h</sup> 12 But I shall have opportunity presently to speak on this matter. Meanwhile, I shall

2:24

1 a. The author right away defines the aim and scope of his work: It is primarily philosophical. Accordingly, the book is not necessarily to be regarded as a "crisis document," produced inevitably in a time of rampant religious persecution. The Gk. word for "reason" (logismos) normally denotes "common arithmetic," but here, in accordance with Stoic usage, refers to the human reason or the rational will. "Devout reason" or "religious reason" (M. Hadas, The Third and Fourth Books of Maccabees, p. 144) is probably a more appropriate rendering of eusebēs logismos than "inspired reason" (R. B. Townshend, "The Fourth Book of Maccabees," APOT, vol. 2, p. 666). Perhaps the best commentary on the meaning of the words for our author is his own stress on reason's compatibility with the Law of God (2:1–23). The translation "passions" is here preferred to "emotions" (Hadas, Maccabees), although "passions" has a broader connotation than is usual with us today.

b. Gk. lit. = "philosophy," but the writer clearly has in view his own particular philosophical treatment of the theme, hence the translation "my philosophical exposition."

c. The author here affirms the theoretical importance of his subject, but he has in view at the same time its practical significance, since he will go on to praise prudence as acted out in the martyr deaths of Eleazar and the mother and her seven sons (3:20–17:6).

d. The four cardinal Platonic virtues, inherited by the Stoics, are taken over also by our author: prudence, temperance, justice, and courage.

e. The text of vss. 3–6 presents some difficulties. The hypothetical nature of the protasis, introduced by the Gk. ei ara in vs. 3, is scarcely appropriate. Again "lust" is a general category, "gluttony" only a particular manifestation of it. Finally 2:24 and 3:1 are almost identical with vss. 5f. here. Possibly the earliest part of the manuscript had become mutilated and a later editor (who worked before Syr., which is represented in the above translation) filled in the gaps with doublets from later parts of the work (see Hadas, Maccabees, p. 145).

f. Here Eleazar is linked with the mother and seven sons as though all the martyrdoms together constituted but a single episode, in contrast with 2Mac 6:18–31, where Eleazar's martyrdom is separate.

g. The phrase has been taken to indicate that the book was composed for delivery on a festival day of commemoration.

h. Clearly vs. 11 refers to the Maccabean revolt led by Judas Maccabeus and his brothers and culminating at the close of its first phase in the cleansing and rededication of the Temple.

begin, as I am accustomed to do, with the general theory, and then I shall turn to their story, giving glory<sup>i</sup> to God the all-wise.

The supremacy of reason

13 The subject of discussion then is whether reason is absolute master of the passions.
 14 But we have to define what reason is and what passion is, how many forms of 15 passion there are, and whether reason is lord over them all. •Reason, I suggest, 16 is the mind making a deliberate choice of the life of wisdom. •Wisdom, I submit,
 17 is knowledge of things divine and human, and of their causes.<sup>j</sup> •And this wisdom,
 I assume, is the culture we acquire from the Law, through which we learn the 18 things of God reverently and the things of men to our worldly advantage. •The 19 forms of wisdom consist of prudence, justice, courage, and temperance. •Of all these prudence is the most authoritative, for it is through it that reason controls 20 the passions. •Of the passions, the two all-embracing kinds are pleasure and pain, 21 and each of these inheres in the body as well as the soul. •A large retinue of 22 passions attends upon both pleasure and pain. •Before pleasure comes desire, and 23 after pleasure comes joy. •Before pain comes fear, and after pain comes sorrow.
 24 Anger is a passion involving both pleasure and pain, if one reflects on how it
 25 has touched him.<sup>k</sup> •Included under pleasure also is the malicious moral temper 26 which expresses itself in the most widely varied ways of all the passions, •those of the soul being pretentiousness and avarice and seeking the limelight and 27 contentiousness and backbiting, •those of the body being a voracious appetite for all kinds of food<sup>l</sup> and gluttony and gormandizing in private. •Now pleasure and 28 pain being, as it were, two branches stemming from body and soul, there are 29 many offshoots of these passions.<sup>m</sup> •Each of these reason, the master gardener, purges thoroughly and prunes and binds up and waters and irrigates all around,<sup>n</sup> 30 and so domesticates the wild undergrowth of inclinations and passions.<sup>o</sup> •For reason is the guide of the virtues and the supreme master of the passions.
 31 Observe in the first place how, in regard to the things that hinder temperance, reason is complete master of the passions. Temperance, as I understand it, is 32 control over desires, •and of desires some relate to the soul and others to the 33 body, over both of which reason obviously holds sway. •When we are attracted to forbidden foods, how do we come to reject the pleasures to be gained from them?<sup>p</sup> Is it not because reason has the power to control the appetites? I believe 34 it is. •Accordingly, when we crave seafood or fowl or the meat of four-legged beasts or any sort of food at all that is forbidden to us under the Law, it is through 35 the mastery of reason that we abstain. •For the proclivities of our appetites are restrained and held in check by the prudent mind, and all the motions of the body are muzzled by reason.

i. This Heb. expression occurs only here in 4Mac and was probably culled from the LXX.

j. Corresponds exactly to the Stoic definition given in Cicero's Tusculan Disputations, 4.25.37. The writer of 4Mac shares with pagan philosophers the notion that wisdom does have a religious dimension, although in vs. 17 his own distinctive Jewish stance comes into view.

k. The text of the last part of the vs. is dubious. A reading hote = "when" for hoti = "that," "how." The Gk. (translated above as "how it has touched him") lit. = "that it has befallen him" or "encountered him," and it seems that something is wanting to complete the sense.

l. An interesting anticipation of 6:15, where Eleazar is offered cooked meats, but of course refuses (6:16–19).

m. The metaphor about the retinue or train of attendants in vs. 21 (followed by a number of philosophical commonplaces in vss. 22–27) now gives way to a metaphor from plant or tree life.

n. The word translated "irrigates" (metacheōn) lit. = "pours from one vessel into another," but possibly denotes here allowing the water to flow from the main channel along little furrows so as to irrigate thoroughly a number of small plots.

o. Over against the standard Stoic view that reason eradicates the passions altogether, our author shares the rabbinic view that the "passions" are not inherently evil and need only to be controlled or tamed by reason (see Hadas, Maccabees, p. 151).

p. Another anticipation of 6:15–19. Just as the author will go on to illustrate his philosophical principles by concrete examples, so here already and in vss. 34f. he has recourse to practical considerations.

The Law's compatibility with reason

- 1 2 What wonder, then, if the desires of the soul for union with beauty are deprived 2 of their force? • It is on these very grounds that the temperate Joseph is praised, because through his own rational faculty he gained mastery over his sensuality.
 3 Though a young man at the prime of his sexual desire, he quenched the burning
 4 ardor of his passions. • And not only over the fiery passion of sexual desire does
 5 reason evidently exercise control, but over all desire. • For the Law says, You
 6 shall not covet your neighbor's wife or anything that is your neighbor's. • Surely then, since the Law tells us not to covet, I should the much more readily persuade you that reason has the power to control the desires. Gen 39:7-12
Ex 20:17
- 7 It has that power, indeed, over the passions which hinder justice. • For how else could a man who habitually gormandizes in private or is gluttonous or a drunkard be taught to change his ways if reason were not obviously lord over the passions?
 8 As soon as a man conducts himself according to the Law, then even if he be avaricious, he reverses his own natural tendency and lends to the needy without 9 interest, canceling the debt with the coming of the seven-year period.<sup>a</sup> • And if a man be niggardly, he is brought under the rule of the Law through reason, so that he neither gleans over the stubble in his harvest fields nor picks the last grapes from his vines. Deut 15:9; 23:20
Ex 22:24
Lev 25:36-53
- And in other cases also we can perceive that reason is master of the passions.
 10 For the Law<sup>b</sup> takes precedence over benevolence to parents and will not betray 11 virtue for their sake; • it takes precedence over love for a wife and reproves her 12 for transgression; • it overrules love for children and punishes them for wrongdoing; 13 and it exercises its authority over intimate relationships with friends and rebukes 14 them for evil. • Nor should you think it paradoxical that reason is able through the Law to master enmity so that a man will not cut down the trees in his enemy's orchard and will save the property of his adversary from marauders and raise up his beast when it has fallen.<sup>c</sup> Deut 20:19
Ex 23:4f.
- 15 Reason is also obviously in control of the more aggressive passions, ambition, 16 vanity, false pretension, pride, and backbiting. • All these malicious passions the temperate mind rejects, as it does even with anger, since over it too it has the 17 mastery. • When Moses grew angry with Dathan and Abiram, instead of venting 18 his anger upon them he moderated it by reason.<sup>d</sup> • For the temperate mind, as I have said, has the power to triumph over the passions, to transform some of them 19 and quell others. • How else did our surpassingly wise father Jacob blame Simeon and Levi and their friends for slaughtering the whole tribe of the Shechemites 20 without any appeal to reason, and declare, Accursed be their rage? • Surely if 21 reason could not control anger, he would not have spoken in this way. • When 22 God fashioned man, he implanted in him his passions and inclinations,<sup>e</sup> • and at Num 16:23-30
Gen 34
Gen 49:7

2 a. This would apply only within Judaism among Jews since the Law allowed interest to be taken from gentiles (Ex 22:24; Lev 25:36-53; Deut 23:20). The text presents some difficulties and it is not clear whether it is the whole debt or only the interest that is to be canceled. Our translation follows the text represented by S and V. The reading of A at the close of the vs. (supported by Syr.) may be translated, "So he reckons by the weeks and forgives part of what is due to him." But the words "part of" need to be supplied in order to make sense of this reading, and in the light of Deut 15:1-18 it is likely that the reading of S and V should be followed.

b. In the conjunction of vs. 10 with vs. 9 the author now simply equates the Law with reason.

c. The Gk. words translated "property," "marauders" and "his beast" are broad and general terms equivalent, respectively, to "the things," "those who destroy" and "things that have fallen," and so their specific meaning is not at once obvious. Hadas (Maccabees, p. 155), probably correctly, finds an allusion to Ex 23:4f., and translates the latter part of vs. 14 thus: "One must save cattle of a personal enemy, and help raise up his beast if it has fallen."

d. An observation by our author, nowhere explicitly expressed in Scripture, although Moses became the familiar type of the "mild" man.

e. Our author, like Philo and the rabbis, believes that the passions are God-given. Hence, for him reason is conceived as controlling the passions (3:2), not extirpating them as with the Stoics. But the language and ideas of vss. 22f. are otherwise typically Stoic, e.g. the notion of the kingship of the sage.

the same time enthroned the intellect amid the senses as the sacred guide over all.<sup>f</sup> •To the intellect he gave the Law, and if a man lives his life by the Law he shall reign over a kingdom that is temperate and just and good and brave.

Reason's conquest of the passions, as in King David

24 How is it then, someone may object, that if reason is master over the passions, 1:5 it does not control forgetfulness and ignorance?

1 3 The argument is absolutely ludicrous, for reason is clearly not sovereign over 2 its own inherent inclinations but over those of the body.<sup>a</sup> •For instance, none of 3 you can eradicate desire, but reason can ensure that you do not become enslaved 4 to desire. •Anger none of you can eradicate from his soul, but reason can help 5 you resist anger. •None of you can eradicate malice, but reason may be your ally 6 in not allowing you to be overwhelmed by malice. •For reason is not the uprooter 7 of the passions but their antagonist.

8 This becomes even clearer, in fact, when we consider the case of King David's 9 thirst.<sup>b</sup> •When David had been fighting against the Philistines throughout the entire 10 day and in company with the soldiers of his own people had killed many of them, 11 with the evening he came to the royal tent all perspiring and very tired, and 12 around it was encamped the whole army of our ancestors. •While all the rest took 13 to dining, •the king, parched with thirst as he was and though he had plentiful 14 springs of water, was unable to slake his thirst from them. •An unreasonable 15 desire for the water in the enemy's territory racked him and inflamed him and 16 unnerved him and burned him up. •When his bodyguard grumbled at the king's 17 desire, two stalwart young soldiers who respected it equipped themselves fully 18 with armor and, taking a pitcher, scaled the enemy's ramparts. •Escaping the 19 notice of the sentries at the gates, they went through the whole enemy encampment 20 on the search. •On finding the spring, they boldly drew from it and carried the 21 drink to the king. •But he, though still burning with thirst, considered that a drink 22 reckoned as equivalent to blood presented a dreadful danger to his soul. 23 Accordingly, he set reason against desire and poured out the drink as a libation 24 to God. •For the temperate mind is able to conquer the constraints of the passions 25 and to quench the flames of frenzied desire, •to overcome the pains of the body,<sup>c</sup> 26 however extreme, and through the nobility of reason to reject contemptuously the 27 whole domination of the passions.

2Sam 23:13-17
1Chr 11:15-19

f. Since the Gk. preposition dia may mean "among" or "in the midst of" it is not necessary to take it as meaning here "through the agency of the senses" and to think of it as a later scholarly gloss on the part of someone familiar with the Stoic doctrine that nothing reaches the intellect except through the senses (cf. Hadas, Maccabees, pp. 156f.).

3 a. The appropriateness of the reading of the MSS, here translated "over those of the body," has been called in question, since in vss. 3-5 it is passions of the soul, anger and malice, that are mentioned, and not passions of the body. Accordingly, some commentators (see Hadas, Maccabees, p. 157) reject the reading, and, regarding 1:5f. as a doublet of what initially belonged here in the text, transfer it to this point and read "but of those contrary to justice, courage, temperance, and prudence; and of these it is master not in order to destroy them, but in order not to yield to them." But this is hardly necessary. In setting the scene in 3:1 the writer no doubt has in view the coming story of David, and David's thirst may be described as a mingled passion of body and soul. In the light of his stress on the physical side of David's thirst in 3:8-10 he may well have written "over those of the body" in 3:1 while at the same time alluding to passions of the soul in 3:3-5.

b. The story that follows deviates in detail from the Heb. account in 2Sam 23:13-17 and 1Chr 11:15-19, e.g. there three chieftains and not, as here, two soldiers undertake the exploit; there the spring is at Bethlehem and not, as here, in enemy territory. Our author seems to have been familiar with the LXX here and was probably acquainted also with Midrashic expansions of the story. The LXX expression in 2Sam 23:15, "David desired," could have given him a springboard for his own interpretation.

c. An anticipatory hint of the main subject matter of the book to come, the heroic resistance of the martyred righteous to torture and suffering.

The divine punishment of Apollonius, governor of Syria, in the Temple

19 But the season<sup>d</sup> now summons us to expound the theme of the temperate reason.
 20 When our fathers were enjoying profound peace through their observance of the Law and were faring so well that even the king of Asia, Seleucus Nicanor,<sup>e</sup> set 21 moneys aside for their Temple service and recognized their polity,<sup>f</sup> just then Ex 30:12
2Chr 24:6 certain men took repressive measures against the communal harmony and implicated us in various disasters.

1 4 A certain Simon set himself up as political opponent of Onias, a man of the highest integrity, who was then high priest and held the office for life,<sup>a</sup> but when,
 in spite of spreading all sorts of slander, he failed to harm him in the eyes of the 2 people, he went off into exile with a view to betraying his country. •He then made his way to Apollonius, governor of Syria, Phoenicia, and Silicia, and said, 3 “Sympathetic as I am to the king’s interests, I am here to inform you that thousands upon thousands of private deposits are stored in the treasury at Jerusalem in which the Temple holds no share, and so they rightfully belong to King 4 Seleucus.” •Apollonius, having checked out the details of the matter, praised 2Mac 3:7–34
 Simon for protecting the king’s interest and went up to Seleucus and disclosed
 5 the fact of these large funds. •Armed with full authority to deal with the business, he proceeded quickly to our country with the accursed Simon and a very powerful 6 army.<sup>b</sup> •He declared he had come at the king’s command to take over the private 7 deposits in the treasury. •Our people complained and protested at the announcement, reckoning that it was outrageous for those who had entrusted their deposits to the Temple treasury to be deprived of them, and they did all they could to prevent 8,9 him. •But Apollonius, with threats, made his way to the Temple. •Then the priests and the women and children made supplication to God in the Temple to defend 10 his holy place, which was being desecrated; •and when Apollonius, with his armed soldiery, marched up to seize the moneys, angels on horseback appeared from 3Mac 6:18 11 heaven with flashing armor<sup>c</sup> and filled them with fear and trembling. •At that Apollonius fell down half dead in the court of the gentiles, and he stretched out his hands to heaven and with tears entreated the Hebrews to pray for him and 12 propitiate the heavenly host. •He had so sinned, he said, as to merit death, but if only he were spared he would sing before all men praises to the blessedness of 13 the holy place. •Moved by these words, despite his anxiety<sup>d</sup> lest King Seleucus

d. Regarded by some commentators as another indication that 4Mac was designed for a festival of commemoration.

e. Seleucus Nicanor is an egregious error, and V reads, “Seleucus, descendent of Nicanor.” The king intended here is Seleucus IV Philopator, who was the sixth successor of Seleucus Nicanor and son of Antiochus III the Great and older brother of his own successor, Antiochus IV Epiphanes.

f. “Set moneys aside,” that is, out of his own state revenues. This is a more likely meaning of the Gk. than the suggested alternative “sanctioned the exaction of the Temple tax” (the annual half-shekel tax paid by Jews to the priests: Ex 30:12; 2Chr 24:6). “Their polity” is the theocratic constitution under which the high priest was ruler also of their secular affairs.

4 a. Life tenure was a feature of the hereditary office of high priest, and Onias is not here being marked off as singular by the words “held the office for life.” However, the added comment does point ahead to the outrage of Antiochus’ deposition of Onias in 4:16. In vs. 1, the Gk. phrase rendered “a man of the highest integrity,” lit. = “beautiful and good,” the standard Gk. description of the “true gentleman.”

b. According to 2Mac 3:7–34, Seleucus’ commander on this expedition was Heliodorus, not Apollonius. The preamble to the desecration of the Temple is told at much greater length in 2Mac 3:7–23 than here.

c. The author of 4Mac does not at this point reveal the theological subtlety of 3Mac 6:18, where the deliverance is accomplished by two angels who are “visible to all except the Jews.” See 3Mac 6:18.

d. This translation follows the suggested emendation adopted by Hadas (Maccabees, p. 165), that is the Gk. kai = “and” for kaiper = “although.” If we accept the reading of the manuscripts (kaiper = “although”), the verse is to be translated rather differently, but possibly less convincingly, because the thought is somewhat too subtle: “Moved by these words, Onias, the high priest, although most scrupulous in other cases, made intercession for him lest King Seleucus should possibly think that Apollonius had been overthrown by a human device and not by divine justice” (Townshend, APOT, vol. 2, p. 671).

should think that Apollonius was overthrown by human design and not by divine justice, Onias the high priest prayed for him. •And after his miraculous deliverance, Apollonius went off to reveal to the king what had happened to him.

Antiochus' savage measures against the Jews

15 On the death of King Seleucus, his son<sup>c</sup> Antiochus Epiphanes, an arrogant and 16 terrible man, succeeded to the rule. •He deposed Onias from the high priesthood
17 and appointed his brother Jason as high priest •on his agreeing to pay him annually
18 three thousand, six hundred, and sixty talents<sup>f</sup> if he would confer the office on 2Mac 4:8-10
19 him. •So Antiochus commissioned Jason to serve as high priest and rule over the 20 people. •In total disregard for the Law, Jason changed the nation's whole mode
21 of life and its polity; •not only did he lay out a gymnasium on the citadel<sup>e</sup> of our 2Mac 4:12
22 native land but he also rescinded the service of the Temple. •At this the divine 23 justice was angered and brought Antiochus himself to war against them. •When 24 he was at war with Ptolemy in Egypt<sup>h</sup> and heard that the people of Jerusalem took 25 the greatest delight in a widespread rumor about his death, he promptly marched 2Mac 4:18-6:17
26 against them. •And when he had ravaged them he issued a decree to the effect that all who were seen to conform to their ancestral Law must die. •And when by his decrees he failed completely to destroy our people's respect for the Law, and observed that all his threats and penalties were entirely discounted, •even to the extent that women who knew in advance what was in store for them were hurled headlong from the walls with their infants because they had their children circumcised; •when, I say, his decrees were despised by the people, he himself sought to force each individual in the nation under torture to partake of unclean food and to abjure Judaism.<sup>i</sup>

Antiochus' encounter with Eleazar

1 5 And so the tyrant Antiochus took his seat with his counselors on a certain high 2 place,<sup>a</sup> with his fully armed troops mustered around him, •and he ordered his
3 guards to drag along every single one of the Hebrews and compel them to eat
4 swine's flesh and food sacrificed to idols. •Whoever refused to eat the defiled
5 food was to be tortured and put to death. •Many were violently snatched away
6 and the first of the herd to be brought before Antiochus was a man called Eleazar, 2Mac 6:18-31 of priestly stock, expert in the Law and advanced in age, and known to many of the tyrant's entourage for his philosophy.<sup>b</sup> •When Antiochus saw him, he said,<sup>c</sup>
"Before I have the tortures begun on you, old man, I would advise you to eat

e. A mistake of the author's attested in all manuscripts. Antiochus IV was the younger brother of Seleucus IV Philopator.

f. In 2Mac the total sum is only 590 talents (2Mac 4:8f.).

g. Cf. 2Mac 4:12, which has it correctly, "under the citadel."

h. Antiochus conducted several campaigns against Egypt, and our author has compressed into vs. 22-26 what is told at great length and in detail in 2Mac 4:18-6:17.

i. The eating of unclean food, as the terminology here makes clear, was not simply a matter of "desire" or "indulgence" but a symbol of apostasy and recognition of the validity of a heathen cult.

5 a. A vague notice of location, and there is nothing in either 2Mac or 4Mac to indicate that it was anywhere else than in Jerusalem, although the early Church appears to have regarded Antioch as the scene, and a basilica was erected there in honor of the martyrs. See further, Introduction, n. 18.

b. According to 2Mac 6:18-31, Antiochus personally had no confrontation with Eleazar but was present only at the martyrdom of the seven brothers (7:12). Eleazar is a very common name, and the impression one has from the different descriptions of Eleazar in 2Mac and 4Mac and elsewhere, as also from 6:5, is that the name had become a legendary feature of numerous martyr hero stories. 2Mac 6:18 calls Eleazar a "scribe" and 6:24 makes him "ninety years of age." If with V and other MSS we accept at the close of vs. 5, instead of the other reading, "known to many of the tyrant's entourage for his age" (which seems tautologous), "known for his philosophy," then Eleazar is here described as "priest" and "philosopher," the latter being particularly congenial to the author's purpose.

c. In accordance with the convention of historians from Thucydides on, the author puts on the lips of one of his principal characters a speech that is most probably largely of his own composition and what he deemed fitting for the occasion.

7 of the swine's flesh and save yourself. •I respect your age and your gray hairs, although to have had them for so long and still cling to the religion of the Jews
8 makes you anything but a philosopher in my eyes. •Why should you abhor eating 9 the excellent meat of this animal which nature has freely bestowed on us? •Surely 10 it is sheer folly not to enjoy harmless pleasures, and it is wrong to spurn nature's 11 good gifts. •But in my judgment it will be greater folly still if you indulge in idle 12 conceits about truth and continue to defy me to your own cost in suffering. •Will 13 you not awaken from your preposterous philosophy, abandon your nonsensical calculations, assume a frame of mind to match your years, and accept the true 14 philosophy of expediency? •Bow to my benevolent advice and have pity on your 15 own old age. •Consider this also, that, even if there is some power that watches 16 over this religion of yours, it would pardon you for any transgression committed under compulsion."<sup>d</sup>

14 When the tyrant had in this way urged him on to the eating of food forbidden
15 by the Law, Eleazar asked permission to speak, •and on receiving authority to do 16 so he began to speak out publicly as follows: •"We, Antiochus, who firmly believe that we must lead our lives in accordance with the divine Law, consider that no compulsion laid on us is mighty enough to overcome our own willing 17 obedience to the Law. •Therefore, under no circumstances whatever do we ever 18 deem it right to transgress the Law. •And even if our Law was not, as you suggest, in truth divine, and we only reckoned it to be divine, it would still in fact be 19 impossible for us to ruin our reputation for piety.<sup>e</sup> •Accordingly, you must not 20 regard it as a minor sin for us to eat unclean food; •minor sins are just as weighty
21,22 as great sins, •for in each case the Law is despised.<sup>f</sup> •You mock at our philosophy 23 as though our living under it were contrary to reason. •On the other hand, it teaches us temperance so that we are in control of all our pleasures and desires;
and it gives us a thorough training in courage so that we willingly endure all 24 hardship; •and it teaches us justice so that whatever our different attitudes may be we retain a sense of balance; and it instructs us in piety so that we most highly 25 reverence the only living God. •Therefore, we do not eat unclean food. Believing that God established the Law, we know that the creator of the world, in giving 26 us the Law, conforms it to our nature.<sup>g</sup> •He has commanded us to eat whatever will be well suited to our souls, and has forbidden us to eat food that is the 27 reverse. •It is the act of a tyrant to compel us not only to transgress the Law but also to eat, so that you may laugh at us for partaking of the unclean food that is 28,29 abhorrent to us.<sup>h</sup> •But you will not have your laugh at my expense. •I will not violate the solemn oaths of my ancestors to keep the Law, not even if you gouge 30 out my eyes and burn my entrails. •I am neither so old nor short of manliness 31 that in the matter of religion my reason should lose its youthful vigor. •So set the 32 torturer's wheel turning and fan the fire to a great blaze. •I am not so sorry
33 for my old age as to become responsible for breaking the Law of my fathers. •I 34 will not play you false, O Law my teacher; •I will not forswear you, beloved self-
35 control; •I will not shame you, philosophic reason, nor will I deny you, venerable

Gal 3:10
Jas 2:10

Lev 11:1-23

d. The cunning appeal of Antiochus' closing gambit would have registered with the readers of 4Mac, insofar as they would themselves have known well how severe were the pressures and constraints of living under a foreign power in a pagan environment.

e. The mention of a "reputation for piety" is not simply a matter of Jewish pride but of Jewish sensitivity to the ultimate seriousness of offenses committed in public.

f. The rabbis were not unaware of the distinction between "light" and "heavy" transgressions, but at the same time their major emphasis was on the binding nature of the Law in its entirety or in all its precepts. These Jewish ideas inform Eleazar's remarks here more than the common Stoic notion that all sins, though not the same, are equal, a notion ridiculed by Horace ("It can never be an equivalent crime to crib the cheap cabbage and plunder the shrine"), Cicero and Plutarch. See also Introduction, n. 23.

g. Whereas the Stoic thought of nature's sovereignty and man's need to adapt himself to nature's gifts and demands, the (Jewish) thought here is of the sovereignty of the creator God who graciously confers on man the Law that is adapted to man's needs and nature, the dietary regulations, for instance, being given to man as morally purifying.

h. What is at stake is more than just the question "to eat or not to eat"; it is the preservation of the Law's integrity in the world's eyes.

36 priesthood and knowledge of the Law. •You shall not defile the reverent lips of 37 my old age nor my lifelong service of the Law. •Pure shall my fathers welcome Gen 15:15
 38 me,<sup>i</sup> fearless of your punishments even unto death. •Tyrannize as you will over the ungodly, but you will never lord it over my thoughts on the subject of true religion, neither by your words nor through your works.”<sup>j</sup>

Eleazar’s amazing bravery under torture

1 6 After Eleazar responded so eloquently to the tyrant’s exhortations, then the 2 guards who stood around dragged him roughly to the implements of torture. •First they stripped off the old man’s clothes, though he was still adorned with the 3 beauty of his piety. •Then, binding his arms on either side, they scourged him
 4 with whips, •while right up against him a herald shouted, “Obey the king’s
 5 command!” •But the great-souled and noble man, a true Eleazar, •refused absolutely 6 to recant as if the torture were no more than a dream, •and, keeping his eyes raised aloft to heaven, the old man let his flesh be torn by the scourges until his 7 blood ran freely and his sides were lacerated. •He fell to the ground when his body could no longer endure the pain, but his reason he kept erect<sup>b</sup> and inflexible.
 8 With his foot one of the merciless guards kicked him savagely on the side to 9 make him get up as he fell. •But he suffered the torment and scorned the 10 compulsion and overcame the pains, •and under a hail of blows, the old man, like 11 a true athlete, prevailed over his torturers. •His face beaded with sweat and panting heavily, he roused his very torturers to amazement at his fortitude.
 12.13 Thereupon, partly out of pity for his old age, •partly in sympathy through previous friendship, partly in admiration of his courage, some of the king’s 14 courtiers went up to him and said, •“Why, Eleazar, are you so unreasonably 15 destroying yourself in this foul way? •Let us bring you some of the cooked food, 2Mac 6:21 and you pretend to taste of the swine’s flesh and save yourself.”<sup>c</sup> 16 But as if their counsel only made his wounds all the harder to bear, Eleazar 17 cried aloud, •“Never may the children of Abraham think such evil thoughts as 18 out of cowardice to enact a part so ill-becoming to us.”<sup>d</sup> •It would most surely be contrary to reason if, having lived our lives in accordance with the truth right up to our old age and having preserved our fair reputation for so living in conformity 19 with the Law, we should now change •and ourselves become a model of impiety 20 to the young by setting them an example of eating unclean food. •Shameful would it be if we should, with only a very short space of life left to us,<sup>e</sup> become a 21 laughingstock in the eyes of all for our cowardice •and be despised by the tyrant 22 as craven because we would not champion our divine Law to the death. •Therefore, 23 O children of Abraham, you must die nobly for piety’s sake. •And you, guards of the tyrant, why leave off your work?”
 24 When they saw him so high in spirit in the face of such constraints and so 25 adamant against their offer of mercy, they brought him to the fire. •There they burned him with cunningly devised instruments and threw him in the fire and

i. The idea of “being gathered to the fathers” is a common OT mode of speaking about death, e.g. Gen 15:15, “For your part you shall go to your fathers in peace.” In the context of Eleazar’s speech the thought of the final divine judgment and future reward and punishment is also in the background.

j. Eleazar’s closing words afford an excellent example of one of the salient motifs of 4Mac, the compatibility of joyous obedience to the Law with the freedom of the individual reason or conscience as the Stoic sage understood it.

6 a. The name in Heb. means “God help” or “seed of God.” There may be an indication here that the name had become proverbial for the typical martyr who endured bravely under torture to the end.

b. The word translated “erect” is a double entente, since it means also “right” or “correct.”

c. Apparently the element of pretense would be that since the meat was “cooked” or “dressed” the bystanders need not have detected that it was in fact pork.

d. What outrages Eleazar is not simply the act of eating unclean food in itself but the baleful public effect of even a pretense at an action which involved profanation of the divine name.

e. The words “with only a short space of life left to us” imply thoughts of the imminence of the divine judgment and of eternity.

26 poured an evil-smelling concoction into his nostrils. •And when his flesh had been 27 burned away to the very bones, and he was on the point of expiring, he lifted his 28 eyes to God and said,<sup>f</sup> •“You know, O God, that though I could have saved
 29 myself I am dying in these fiery torments for the sake of the Law. •Be merciful 30 to your people and let our punishment be a satisfaction on their behalf. •Make 31 your blood their purification and take my life as a ransom for theirs.”<sup>g</sup> •With these 32 words the holy man nobly succumbed to his torments, and by his reason held his 33 ground through the very tortures of death for the Law’s sake.

31.32 Confessedly then, devout reason is master of the passions. •For if the passions
 33 were sovereign over reason, I would have credited them with testimony to their 34 superiority. •But since we have just shown how reason conquers the passions, we 35 properly confer upon it the authority of leadership. •It is only right that we should confess reason’s sovereignty insofar as it rules over torments inflicted on us from outside ourselves—it would be absurd to do otherwise.<sup>h</sup> •The arguments I adduce demonstrate wisdom’s actual sovereignty not only over pains but its rule over pleasures and its complete refusal to yield to them.

1:11; 6:28; 9:24;
 12:18; 17:20–22;
 18:4

A panegyric on Eleazar

1 7 Like an outstanding pilot, indeed, the reason of our father Eleazar, steering the 2 vessel of piety on the sea of passions, •though buffeted by the threats of the tyrant 3 and swamped by the swelling waves of torture, •in no way swerved the rudder of 4 piety until he sailed into the haven of deathless victory. •No city beleaguered by many devices of all kinds has ever offered such resistance as did that perfect saint.
 When his sacred soul was assailed with blazing rack and torture, through reason, 5 the shield of his piety, he overcame his besiegers. •Stretching out his mind like a protruding cliff, our father Eleazar shattered the wild surges of his passions.
 6 O priest worthy of your priestly office, you did not defile your sacred teeth, nor did you pollute with unclean food a stomach that had room only for piety and 7 purity. •O mind in perfect unison with the Law, and philosopher of the divine 8 life! •So must all those be who are skilled in the craft of keeping the Law and who defend it with their own blood and noble sweat even in the face of sufferings 9 unto death. •You, father, by endurance that brought you to glory,<sup>a</sup> have confirmed our adherence to the Law, and your august speech on holiness you have not annulled, but through your deeds you have ratified your words of divine philosophy.
 10 O aged man, mightier than torture; revered elder more vigorous than the flame; 11 great king, ruler of the passions, Eleazar! •Even as our father Aaron, armed with the censer, ran through the massed company of his people and overcame the fiery 12 angel, •so did Aaron’s descendant Eleazar not deviate in his reason, though 13 consumed in the fire.<sup>b</sup> •But most wonderful of all, though he was an old man, and the sinews of his body were already unstrung, his muscles all relaxed and his

Num 17:1–15
 WisSol 18:20– 25

f. The exaggeration involved here is part of the rhetorician’s stock-in-trade and greatly heightens the pathos of the dying man’s speech.

g. The most explicit statement in 4Mac (cf. 1:11; 9:24; 12:18; 17:20–22; 18:4) of the concept of the martyr’s death as a vicarious atonement for the people, a concept absent from 2Mac (6:30–35).

h. The translation “it would be absurd to do otherwise” represents only three Gk. words which lit. = “since also absurd,” and is arrived at only by supplying some such addition (not in the MSS) to these three words as “to do otherwise” or “to deny it.” Syr. favors such a procedure, but some have suggested an emendation which yields the sense “torments inflicted on us from outside, ridiculous things as they are.” In view of the difficulty of the text, Hadas chooses to leave a lacuna at this point in his translation (Maccabees, pp. 182f.).

7 a. The phrase “to glory” has a twofold connotation here: (1) It refers to Eleazar’s preservation of his fair reputation for piety in the eyes of men, to the public effect of his refusal to partake of unclean food. Hadas translates, “by your perseverance in the public gaze” (Maccabees, p. 185); (2) it denotes the divine reward of “everlasting glory.” Our translation is such as to imply both features of the phrase.

b. The reference is to Num 17:1–15, although no “fiery angel” appears there. In WisSol 18:20–25 the plague staved off by Aaron does appear to be pictured as an avenging angel. The point of comparing Eleazar with Aaron here is that both manifested the power of victorious faith in public.

14 nerves weakened, •by means of reason he became youthful again in spirit and by 15 reason like Isaac's prevailed over many-headed torture. •O blessed old age, revered Gen 22 gray head, life loyal to the Law and perfected by the faithful seal of death.

16 If, therefore, an old man despised torments unto the death on account of his 17 piety, we must admit that devout reason is leader over the passions. •But some may contend that not all men are masters of the passions, because not all men 18 possess enlightened reason. •Only those who with all their heart make piety their 19 first concern are able to conquer the passions of the flesh, •believing that to God they do not die, as our patriarchs Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob died not, but live to 20 God.<sup>c</sup> •Accordingly, the validity of our argument is not impaired by the fact that some men seem to be ruled by their passions because of the weakness of their 21 reason. •For what philosopher is there, who lives by the whole rule of philosophy 22 and believes in God •and knows that it is blessed to endure every pain for the 23 sake of virtue, who could fail to master his passions for the sake of piety? •Only the wise and courageous man is ruler of the passions.

Mk 12:26
Rom 6:10; 14:8
Gal 2:19
16:25

The king's invitation to the seven brothers to recant their ancestral faith

1 8 Yes, indeed, even young lads have become philosophers through devout reason 2 and have triumphed over still more severe torments. •For when the tyrant had been so conspicuously foiled in his first attempt, having been unable to compel the old man to eat unclean food, then in violent rage he ordered others of the Hebrew captives to be brought and said that if they would eat of the unclean food they would be released, but if they refused, they would be even more savagely 3 tortured. •When the tyrant had issued these commands, seven brothers in the company of their aged mother were brought before him, handsome and modest 2Mac 7:1-42 4 and well-born and altogether charming. •On seeing them standing around their mother in the midst, as though they were a chorus, the tyrant was struck by them, and astounded at their comeliness and nobility, he smiled at them and called them 5 near and said, •“Young men, I admire you each and every one and want to show you favor, and since I greatly respect the beauty of such a large band of brothers, I not only advise you not to display the same mad frenzy as that old man who has just been tortured, but I beg of you to yield to me and take advantage of my 6 friendship. •Just as I am able to punish those who disobey my orders, so am I 7 able to benefit those who obey me. •Take my word for it then that if you will renounce the ancestral law of your polity you will receive leading positions of 8 authority over my domains. •Share in the Greek style, change your mode of 9 living, and enjoy your youth.<sup>a</sup> •If you provoke me to anger by your disobedience, you will compel me to the use of dreadful punishments to destroy each and every 10 one of you by torture. •Have pity on yourselves, for though I am your enemy, I 11 myself feel compassion for you in your youth and beauty. •Will you not reflect that if you disobey there is nothing in store for you but death with torments?”
12 With these words he ordered the instruments of torture to be brought forward 13 in order to terrorize them into eating of the unclean food. •The guards then brought forward the wheels and joint dislocators, racks and wooden horses, catapults and cauldrons, braziers and thumbscrews, iron claws and wedges and bellows,<sup>b</sup> and

c. The notion of “living to God” is common in the NT, e.g. Rom 6:10; 14:8; Gal 2:19. In Mk 12:26, the “I am” of God’s declaration to Moses at the bush—“I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob”—is used, rather surprisingly, as a proof of the resurrection of the dead.

8 a. Antiochus appears here as the advocate of the Gk. way of life. So the clash presented in 4Mac is not entirely between the forces of absolute evil on the one side and of good on the other side, but rather between the good as a Gk. ruler sees it and the good as youthful Jews who take their stand on their ancestral faith see it.

b. The instruments of torture listed here reappear and are described in operation later on. The meaning of the word translated “wooden horses” is somewhat obscure, as is the manner of its operation. It was probably a bone-crushing device of some sort.

14 the tyrant spoke up again and said, •“You must be afraid, my lads, and the justice you revere<sup>c</sup> will be merciful to you if you transgress under duress.”

15 But they, when they heard his enticing words and saw the fearful machines of torture, not only were not frightened but even resisted the tyrant with their own philosophy, and by their right reasoning brought down his tyranny. •Just think, however, what sort of arguments they would have used if some among them had been fainthearted and cowardly. •Would they not have gone like this? “What wretched and extremely foolish creatures we are that, when the king invites us and presses us to accept his benevolence, we should not consent! •Why do we sport such vain resolutions and venture a disobedience that will be the death of us? •Shall we not, my brothers, fear these instruments of torture, take account of the threats of torment, and abandon this vainglory and fatal bragging? •Let us take pity on our own youth and have compassion for our mother’s old age, •and let us lay it to heart that if we disobey we die. •The divine justice will pardon us for being afraid of the king under duress. •Why should we remove ourselves from this most pleasant life and deprive ourselves of this sweet world? •Let us not resist necessity nor vaunt ourselves to our own cost in torture. •Not even the Law itself would willingly condemn us to death for being afraid of the instruments of torture.<sup>d</sup> •Why should we be so absorbed in contentiousness or so attracted to an obstinacy that must prove fatal when we could obey the king and live an untroubled life?” •But on the very point of being tortured these young men uttered no such words nor even entertained such thoughts. •For they despised the emotions and were masters over pain. •Accordingly, no sooner had the tyrant finished counseling them to eat unclean food than they all with one voice and as with one soul said:•

1 9 “Why do you delay, tyrant? We are prepared to die rather than transgress the 2 commandments of our forefathers. •We should truly bring shame upon our ancestors if we did not live in obedience to the Law and take Moses as our 3 counselor. •Tyrant, who counsel us to transgress, do not in your hatred of us pity 4 us more than we pity ourselves. •We reckon that your clemency which offers us deliverance in return for our transgression is harder to bear than death itself. 5 You seek to terrify us with your threat of death by torture as if you had learned 6 nothing from Eleazar but a short while ago. •But if, for the sake of their religion 5:4–6:30 and enduring through torments, old men of the Hebrews have remained faithful to the end, it is even more appropriate that we who are young should die in disregard of the tortures you impose on us, the very tortures our aged teacher<sup>a</sup> 7 triumphed over. •Put us to the test then, tyrant; and if you take our lives for the sake of our religion, do not think you can harm us with your torments. •By our suffering and endurance we shall obtain the prize of virtue and shall be with God, 9 on whose account we suffer. •But you, because of our foul murder, will suffer at the hand of divine justice the everlasting torment by fire you deserve.”<sup>b</sup>

The torture and defiance of the first and second sons

10 Indignant at these words expressing the youths’ disobedience, the tyrant was even 11 more enraged at their ingratitude. •Then, at the word of command, the guards brought forward the eldest brother, ripped off his tunic, and bound his hands and 12 arms on either side with thongs. •But when they had flogged him with whips and

c. A pagan philosophical circumlocution for “God.”

d. Though it most surely condemned idolatry in any form, the Law did not condemn “fear” in such circumstances as these.

e. The description probably harks back to the typically hellenistic picture of the seven sons and their mother as a chorus in 8:4.

9 a. Probably “teacher” here signifies only an exemplar in faithful endurance rather than that Eleazar was a professional teacher, although in 5:4 he is described as “expert in the Law.”

b. In vs. 8 the words “and shall be with God, on whose account we suffer” are omitted by A, and in vs. 9 the words “by fire” are omitted by S. But there is no compelling reason to follow A or S here.

for all their strenuous efforts had made no impression on him, they cast him on 13 the wheel. •When he was racked on it, the limbs of the noble youth were put out 14 of joint, •and as limb after limb was broken,<sup>c</sup> he denounced the tyrant and said, 15 “Most abominable tyrant, enemy of heaven’s justice and bent on slaughter, you punish me in this fashion not as a murderer or man of impiety but as a champion 16 of the divine Law.” •The guards then said to him, “Consent to eat and so save 17 yourself from the tortures.” •But he replied, “Your wheel is not so strong, base underlings, as to strangle my reason. Sever my limbs, burn my flesh, twist my 18 joints, •and through all these torments I will prove to you that the children of the 19 Hebrews alone are invincible in the defense of virtue.” •When he said this they 20 spread fire under him and fed the blaze, drawing the wheel still tighter. •The wheel was besmeared all over with his blood, and the heap of coals was quenched by the discharged fluid dropping down, and bits of flesh whirled around on the 21 axles of the machine. •Even when his bodily frame was all dissevered, the great-22 souled youth, a true son of Abraham, uttered not a groan. •As though he were being transformed into incorruption by the fire,<sup>d</sup> he nobly endured the torments 23 and said, •“Imitate me, my brothers; do not become deserters in my trial<sup>e</sup> nor 24 forswear our brotherhood in nobility. •Fight the sacred and noble fight for true religion and through it may the just providence that protected our fathers become 25 merciful to our people and take vengeance on the accursed tyrant.” •With these words the saintly youth expired.

Mal 3:2

26 While they all marveled at his bravery of soul, the guards brought forward the brother next to him in age, and when they had adjusted the sharp-clawed iron 27 hands, they fastened him to the torture machine and the catapult. •On inquiring of him whether he was willing to eat before the torture began, they heard his 28 noble resolve, •and then proceeded to tear at his sinews with the iron hands and ripped off all the flesh even from his cheeks and the skin of his head, like wild 29 leopards. This agony he endured with courage and said, •“How sweet is every kind of death for the sake of our ancestral religion.” And to the tyrant he said, 30 “Does it not occur to you, most bloodthirsty of tyrants, that you are being tortured more than I, when you see that the arrogant reasoning that belongs to your tyranny 31 is overcome by our endurance for true religion’s sake? •I am sustained in my ordeal by the joys that arise from defending virtue, but you are tortured by the 32 threats that confront impiety. •You cannot, vile tyrant, escape the penalties of the divine wrath.”

The torture and defiance of the third and fourth sons

1 10 When he had bravely met his illustrious death, the third son was brought forward amid fervent exhortations from many people to taste of the food and save 2 himself. •But he cried aloud and said, “Do you not know that the very same father begot both me and my dead brothers, and the same mother bore us all, and 3 I was brought up on the same doctrines? •I do not abjure the noble bond of 4 brotherhood. •Therefore, if you have any means of torture, apply it to my body, 5 for my soul you cannot touch even if you would.”<sup>a</sup> •At the man’s outspoken pronouncement they were grievously annoyed, and with their dislocating machines

c. The discrepancies between the descriptions of the tortures administered to the first son and the other six, here and in 2Mac, indicate no more than that the story circulated in different forms or that each writer claimed his freedom to shape up the narrative in his own way.

d. The notion of the cleansing or purifying quality of “fire” (often associated with the day of judgment) is common in the Heb. milieu, and that of the incorruptibility and immortality of the irrational soul (as opposed to the corruptibility and mortality of the rational soul or mind) is found especially in Philo’s representation of Platonic doctrine.

e. A and S read “do not desert me forever,” but our translation follows the reading given in a few minuscules (and probably to be preferred), “do not desert me in my trial.”

10 a. The words of vs. 4 do not occur in A and are omitted from the text of Rahlfs. They are reminiscent of Eleazar’s words in 2Mac 6:30 and may be an interpolation.

they dislocated his hands and feet, and by the use of levers they sundered his 6 limbs from their sockets; •and they twisted his fingers and arms and legs and 7 elbows. •And when they could by no means strangle (his spirit), they abandoned their machines and with the tips of their fingers<sup>b</sup> they scalped him as the Scythians 8 do. •Then they brought him at once to the wheel, and on it his backbone was disjointed until he saw bits of his flesh in shreds and gouts of blood pouring from 9,10 his entrails. •On the point of death he said, •“We, vile tyrant, suffer all this for 11 our training in divine virtue. •But for your impiety and savagery you will suffer endless torments.”

12 When he had died in a manner worthy of his brothers, they dragged forward 13 the fourth one and said, •“Do not you, too, display the same madness as your 14 brothers, but obey the king and save yourself.” •But he replied, “For me you 15 cannot heat the fire so hot as to make a coward of me. •By the blessed death of my brothers, by the everlasting ruin of the tyrant, by the glorious life of the pious, 16 I will not deny our noble brotherhood. •Contrive whatever tortures you will, tyrant, that you might go on learning from them that I am brother to those who 17 have been tortured already.” •On hearing this the bloodthirsty and murderous and 18 altogether abominable Antiochus ordered his tongue to be cut out. •But he said, “Even if you remove the organ of speech, God still hears those who are silent. Isa 53:7-12
19 Look, my tongue is hanging out; cut it off, for you will not thereby make my 20 reason mute. •Gladly, for the sake of God, do we allow the limbs of our body to 21 be mutilated. •But you God will speedily overtake, since you are cutting out the tongue that sang songs of praise to him.” Isa 35:6

The torture and defiance of the four remaining sons

1 11 When he, too, who had been so cruelly afflicted with tortures died, the fifth
2 son sprang forward and said, •“I waste no time in demanding the torture for 3 virtue’s sake, •but of my own accord come forward so that you might kill me and for your further misdeeds incur the punishment the heavenly justice will inflict on 4 you. •You enemy of virtue and enemy of man, what have we done that you
5 destroy us in this way? •Is it because we revere the creator of all and live according 6-9 to his virtuous Law? But such conduct deserves honors, not torments.”<sup>a</sup> •While he spoke these words the guards bound him and dragged him to the catapult.
10 They bound him to it by his knees, and fastening them to it with iron cramps, they twisted his loins back over the circular wedge until he was curled back on the wheel like a scorpion and his limbs were all disjointed.<sup>b</sup> •And thus, struggling 12 for breath and racked in body, he said, •“A glorious favor you bestow on us, tyrant, though all unwilling, enabling us as you are to manifest our constancy toward the Law by yet more noble sufferings.”

13 When he had died, the sixth son was brought forward—a mere lad. The tyrant 14 then asked if he was willing to eat and be released. But he replied, •“I am younger 15 in age than my brothers, but just as old in reason. •We were born and reared for the same purpose, and we are likewise obliged to die in the same cause.
16 Accordingly, if you want to torture me for not eating unclean food, do your 17,18 torturing now.” •When he said this they brought him to the wheel, •and stretching him out on it carefully until his backbone was disjointed, they set the fire going 19 under him. •And heating up sharp skewers, they ran them into his back, and

b. A and S have three additional Gk. words at this point meaning “they stripped off his skin,” perhaps as an inserted explanatory comment on the single Gk. word apeskythizon, meaning “scalped him as the Scythians do.” Reference to the Scythian practice of scalping is found in Herodotus 4:64 and Pliny’s Natural History 7:11.

omitted in Rahlfs’ text. Following the words “not torments” in vs. 6, they read “. . . if you but understood human aspirations and had hopes of salvation with God. But as it is, you are estranged from God and make war on those who revere him.”

b. A number of minor variants occur in the textual tradition in vs. 10, and the text appears to be in some disarray. Consequently the meaning is not entirely clear.

11 a. Vss. 7 and 8 are wanting from S and are

20 piercing his sides, they burned out his entrails. •But under all this torment he declared, “How sacred and seemly is the agony to which so many of my brothers and I have been summoned as to a contest in sufferings for piety’s sake, and yet
21 we have not been vanquished. •For religious knowledge, tyrant, is unconquerable.
22,23 Fully armed with goodness I, too, shall die along with my brothers, •and I myself, too, shall confront you with one great avenger more,<sup>c</sup> you deviser of new 24 tortures, you enemy of men of true religion. •Six of us, lads though we are, have 25 destroyed your tyranny. •For your inability to sway our reason or to force us to 26 eat unclean food, is not that your ruin? •Your fire is cool for us and your catapults
27 painless and your violence powerless. •No tyrant’s guards, but the guardians of the divine Law have been our protectors, and that is why our reason remains undefeated.”

1 12 When he, too, had died a blessed death, having been cast into the cauldron, the seventh and youngest son of all came forward. •Moved with pity toward him, even though he had been fiercely exasperated by his brothers, and seeing the bonds already placed on him, the tyrant asked him to come closer and attempted
3 to persuade him, saying, •“You see the outcome of your brothers’ folly; they
4 have been duly punished for their disobedience and are dead. •And you, too, if you refuse to obey, will be miserably tortured and will yourself meet a premature
5 death. •But if you do obey you will be my friend and will be given charge over
6 my affairs of state.” •While he thus appealed to him, he sent for the boy’s mother so that he might show pity to her over the loss of so many sons and further urge
7 on the sole surviving son the obedience that would save him. •But when the mother gave encouragement to her son in the Hebrew tongue, as we shall shortly
8 relate,<sup>a</sup> •“Loose me,” he said, “and let me speak to the king and all the friends
9 who are with him.” •And in great glee over the boy’s promise, they quickly
10,11 loosed him. •Then he ran to the nearest brazier and said, •“Impious man, of all the wicked ones you most ungodly tyrant, are you not ashamed to receive your kingdom with all its blessings from the hand of God and then to kill those who 12 serve him and torture those who practice piety? •In return for this, justice will hold you in store for a fiercer and an everlasting fire and for torments which will
13 never let you go for all time. •Are not you, who are but a man, ashamed, you savage beast, to cut out the tongues of men who share the same feelings as you and are made of the same elements<sup>b</sup> and to torture them in this brutal fashion?
14 They, for their part, have died nobly and so fulfilled their piety toward God, but you will groan dreadfully for having slain the champions of virtue without cause.”
15,16 Then when he, too, was on the point of death, he declared, •“I shall not prove deserter to my brothers’ valor. •I call upon the God of my fathers to be merciful
17 to our people. •You he will punish both in the present life and in death.” •With this prayer against the tyrant, he threw himself into the braziers and so gave up 18,19 his life.<sup>c</sup>

2Mac 7:22–40

A panegyric: reason’s sovereignty in the seven sons

1 13 Now, therefore, if the seven brothers scorned sufferings even unto death, it must be universally conceded that the pious reason is complete master of the 2 passions. •For if being enslaved to the passions they had eaten unclean food, we

c. This accords with the motives for the lad’s self-giving expressed in vs. 3.

12 a. In 2Mac 7:22f. the mother’s words of encouragement to her son are reported before the description of his death. Our author chooses to hold back the mother’s speech at this point (“as we shall shortly relate”) and seems to have been aware of its occurrence at this juncture in his source or sources.

b. Part of the stock-in-trade of Stoic thought and a clear indication of the hellenistic milieu of the story and of our author’s account of it.

c. Although Stoicism consented to suicide on certain terms, it is likely that our author is thinking less of suicide here than of highlighting the extreme heroism of the youth, for whom death was only moments away in any case.

3 would have said that they had been conquered by them. •However, in this case it did not happen so, but by the reason which is commended by God they prevailed
 4 over the passions, •and so we cannot but perceive the mind's supremacy over
 5 them since they overcame both passion and sufferings. •How then can we fail to admit, in regard to these men, right reason's victory over the passions, seeing that
 6 they did not shrink from the pains of fire?<sup>a</sup> •Even as towers at the entrance to harbors repulse the threatening onslaughts of the waves and provide a calm haven
 7 for those who sail into it, •so the seven-towered right reason of the youths fortified
 8 the haven of piety and tamed the rugged license of the passions. •They formed a 9 holy choir of piety as they encouraged each other with the words, •“Let us die like brothers all, brothers, for the Law's sake. Let us follow the example of the three youths in Assyria, who despised the same trial by ordeal in the furnace.”<sup>b</sup>
 10.11 Let us not be pusillanimous in the demonstration of true piety.” •“Courage, brother!”
 12 said one, and another, “Hold on nobly!” •And another, recalling the past, said, “Remember whence you came and at the hand of what father Isaac 13 gave himself to be sacrificed for piety's sake.”<sup>c</sup> •Each one severally and all together, looking at each other with most cheerful mien, aglow with courage, said, “With all our hearts let us consecrate ourselves unto God, who gave us our 14 souls, and let us expend our bodies for the custodianship of the Law. •Let us have 15 no fear of him who thinks he kills. •Great is the ordeal and peril of the soul that lies in wait in eternal torment for those who transgress the commandment of God.
 16 Let us then arm ourselves with the control over the passions which comes from 17 divine reason. •After our death in this fashion Abraham and Isaac and Jacob will receive us, and all our forefathers will praise us.” •And to each one of the brothers as they were dragged away, those who were left said, “Do not shame us, brother, nor be traitor to our brothers who have already died.”
 19 You cannot be ignorant of the charm of brotherhood which the divine and all-wise providence has allotted through fathers to their offspring, implanting it, in 20 fact, in their mother's womb. •There brothers dwell for the same period and are formed over the same duration of time; they are nurtured from the same blood
 21 and are brought to maturity through the same source of life. •They are brought to birth through the same span and draw milk from the same fountains, and through
 22 being embraced at the same breast, fraternal souls are nourished, •and they grow from strength to strength through a common nurture and daily companionship as
 23 well as in the training imposed by our discipline in the Law.<sup>d</sup> •The ties of brotherly love, it is clear, are firmly set and never more firmly than among the seven
 24 brothers; •for having been trained in the same Law and having disciplined themselves in the same virtues, and having been reared together in the life of 25 righteousness, they loved one another all the more. •Their common zeal for beauty and goodness strengthened their goodwill and fellow feeling for one another, 26 and in conjunction with their piety made their brotherly love more ardent.
 27 Nevertheless, although with them nature and companionship and high moral character added to the charms of brotherhood, it was through their piety that the surviving sons had the endurance to look upon their brothers while they were being racked with pain and tortured to death.

Dan 3

Gen 22

Matt 10:28

1 14 More than that, they even urged them on to face the torment, and so they not

13 a. The minor variants in the MSS A S V in vss. 1–5 attest the disturbed state of the text here, although the overall meaning is not in any serious doubt.

b. Since the events related in 4Mac purport to belong to the period of the opening of the Maccabean war to which Dan is usually attributed, it is quite natural for him to refer here to that book, to the bravery of the “Three Children,” Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego (Dan 3).

c. The story of Abraham's near sacrifice of Isaac in Gen 22 was sometimes taken as a testimony to Abraham's faith, e.g. 4Mac 15:28; 17:6; WisSol 10:5; sometimes, as here, as a testimony to Isaac's willingness to be sacrificed.

d. The uniquely Jewish feature of training in the Law rounds off the series of Stoic commonplaces on the theme of brotherhood. The stress in vss. 23–27 on the brothers' practice of the true religion clearly reveals the point at which, for our author, Judaism transcends the Stoic ethic.

only despised the sufferings but also mastered the strong feelings of brotherly love.

2,3 O reason, more kingly than kings, more free than freemen! •How holy and 4 harmonious the concord of the seven brothers for piety's sake! •Not one of the 5 seven lads turned coward, nor cowered away from death, •but all, as though 6 running on the highway to immortality, hurried on to death by torture. •Just as hands and feet move in unison with the promptings of the soul, so did those holy youths, as if impelled by the deathless soul of piety, go in harmony to the death 7 for piety's sake. •O all-holy sevenfold assembly of brothers in harmony! For just 8 as the seven days of creation move around piety, •so did the youths in chorus
9 circle around the sevenfold assembly, dissolving the terror of torture. •Even now we shudder when we hear of the affliction of those young men; but they, not only looking on with their own eyes, not only hearing the instant threat pronounced against them, but actually suffering the torment, endured to the end, and that in 10 the agonies of burning—•and what could be more painful than these? Sharp and immediate is the power of fire and quickly did it destroy their bodies.

The mother in her death the most shining example of the victory of reason

11 Do not count it amazing that in those men reason triumphed over tortures,<sup>b</sup> 12 when even a woman's mind scorned still more manifold torments; •for the mother of the seven youths endured the agonies inflicted on every one of her children.
13 Consider how tangled is the web of a mother's love for her children so that her 14 whole feeling is the profoundest inward affection for them. •Even animals not possessed of reason have an affection and love for their young similar to that of 15 human beings. •Among the winged creatures the tame ones shield their young by 16 nesting under the roofs of houses,<sup>c</sup> •while those that build their nests on the peaks of mountains and in the clefts of rocks and in the holes or tops of trees hatch their 17 young and ward off the intruder. •But if they cannot ward him off they flutter around about the nestlings in the pangs of love and call to them in their own 18 speech and assist their offspring in whatever way they can. •But what need is 19 there to demonstrate the affection of irrational animals for their young •when even the bees fend off intruders at the season of making the honeycomb and pierce with their sting like a sword those who molest their young and defend them to 20 the death? •But not even her affection for her young caused the mother of the youths, whose soul was like Abraham's,<sup>d</sup> to waver.

1 15 O reason that was lord over the passions of the sons!<sup>a</sup> O piety that was dearer
2 to the mother than her sons! •When two options lay before her, namely piety or 3 the instant deliverance of her seven sons according to the tyrant's promise, •she 4 loved piety better, which preserves to eternal life according to God's word. •How

14 a. The picture conjured up in vss. 7f. is not altogether clear. For the notion of the number "seven" as a sacred and perfect number, particularly in Alexandrian mysticism and astrology, see e.g. Philo, Op. 90. Probably a more intelligible sense is obtained in 4Mac 7bf. by adopting the suggestion of various commentators (see Hadas, Maccabees, p. 216) that we should transpose the Gk. words hebdomada and eusebeian and so read, "Just as the seven days of creation move around the hebdomad, so did the youths in chorus circle around piety."

b. On the question of the importance of this expression for the circumstances in which 4Mac was composed, see Theological Importance.

c. Reading the emendation orophokoitounta (for orophoitounta, which hardly yields sense), suggested by a number of commentators (see Hadas, Maccabees, p. 218).

d. Abraham's readiness to sacrifice Isaac is the archetypal victory of devout reason over parental love for children.

15 a. It has been suggested that "of the sons" here is out of place since the subject is the mother's mastery of the emotions, and that "of the sons" is either by dittography from the following clause or that we should read for "of the sons" (teknōn), philoteknon = "O reason that was lord over maternal affections" (see Hadas, Maccabees, p. 219). But this may not be necessary, since the retrospective glance at the moral heroism of the sons may simply give edge to the following apostrophe, "O piety that was dearer to the mother than her sons! (even such sons as these)."

can I possibly express the deep love of parents for their children? On the tender nature of the child we impress a wonderful likeness of soul and form,<sup>b</sup> and especially mothers, who are more affectionate in their own feelings toward their children than fathers. •For mothers are weaker in their being than fathers, and the more children they bear, so much the more do they love their children. •But no mother ever loved her children more than the mother of the seven sons, who in seven childbirths implanted in herself a profound affection for them; •and because of the many pains she suffered in each case was constrained to feel her bond of love with them; •but on account of her fear of God she discounted the immediate safety of her children. •Indeed, because of her sons' moral heroism and their willing obedience to the Law, she cherished an even greater love for them. •For they were just, and temperate, and brave, and magnanimous, and so filled with love for each other and for their mother that in obedience they kept the Law even unto death. •Nevertheless, although all the many promptings of maternal love pulled the mother toward the bond of affection for them, in not a single case did their varied tortures avail to sway her reason, •but each and every child and all of them together did the mother urge on to death for piety's sake. •O sacred nature, parental love, filial affection,<sup>c</sup> nurture, and unconquerable maternal affections. •Each one she saw racked and burned, yet for piety's sake remained unwavering. •She saw the flesh of her children melt away in the fire and their toes and fingers scattered on the ground, and the flesh of their heads right down to the cheeks laid out before her like masks. •O mother, sorely tried now by pains sharper than the pains of birth! •O woman who alone among women brought perfect piety to birth! •Your firstborn, as he breathed his last, did not sway your resolve, nor the second, as he looked on you with pity in his torment, nor the third, as he expired; •nor when you beheld the eyes of each one immovably fixed on the same anguish amid the tortures, nor indeed when you observed in their nostrils the signs of approaching death did you break into tears. •When you saw your children's flesh burned on children's flesh, and severed hand upon hand, and flayed head upon head, and corpse fallen upon corpse, and when you saw the place crowded with spectators of your children's torments, you did not weep. Not the sirens' melodies nor the sweet sound of the swan's song so charm the hearers' ears as do the children's voices charm their mother when they speak to her from amid the tortures. •With what a manifold host of torments then was the mother tortured while her sons were racked by the wheel and fire. •But in the midst of her passionate feelings pious reason nerved her whole being with a manly courage and enabled her to transcend the immediate affections of a mother's love. And although she saw the destruction of her seven children and the endlessly varied series of tortures, that noble mother disregarded all of it because of her faith in God. •In the council chamber of her own heart, so to speak, she saw clever advocates, nature and parenthood and maternal love and the torment of her children—a mother holding two votes in regard to her children, one to consign them to death and the other to preserve them alive; •but she did not decide on the safe course that would preserve her sons for a little while, •but like a true daughter of God-fearing Abraham called to mind Abraham's unflinching bravery. •O mother of the nation, champion of the Law, defender of true religion, and winner of the prize in the inward contest of the heart! •More noble than men in fortitude and stronger than heroes in endurance! •Like the ark of Noah, carrying the universe in the worldwide cataclysm and stoutly enduring the waves, so did you, guardian of the Law, buffeted on every side in the flood of the passions and by the mighty

Gen 6:5–8:22

b. This idea has its background in Stoic thought on heredity in relation both to the physical and spiritual aspects of human existence.

c. Our translation renders the text found in only a few MSS, genesī, dative plural of genos = "offspring." S has gennēmasi, which means essentially the same. A has goneusi = "O love for parents!" V has genesī, which leads Townshend (APOT, vol. 2, p. 681) to accept genesis, which has small MS support but is suggested by the Syr., and to render it "O yearning of parents for offspring," the sense of which is, in the end, clearly very similar to our own translation.

gales of your sons' torments, so did you by your perseverance nobly weather the storms that assailed you for religion's sake.

- 1 16 If then a woman and indeed a woman of advanced years, the mother of seven
 2 sons, held out while looking upon her children being tortured to death, we must 3 concede that devout reason is sovereign over the passions. •I have therefore 4 demonstrated that not only men have conquered human passions but that even a 5 woman despised the greatest torments. •Not so wild were the lions around Daniel Dan 6
 6 nor so blazing hot in its greedy flame was the furnace of Mishael<sup>a</sup> as the natural Dan 3
 7 mother's love that burned in her when she saw her seven sons so indiscriminately
 8 tortured. •But by pious reason the mother quenched all these fiery emotions.
 9 There is this too to consider, that if, as being a mother, the woman had been 10 weak in spirit, she would have wept over them and spoken perhaps as follows:
 11 "Ah, thrice-wretched woman that I am, yes more than thrice-wretched! I have 12 borne seven sons and am the mother of none! •How vain were these seven 13 pregnancies, how futile these seven times ten months<sup>b</sup> with child, how fruitless 14 the nursing and wretched the suckling! •In vain, my children, did I endure these 15 many pains for you and the even more severe strains of rearing you. •Alas for 16 my sons, some unmarried, others married but to no purpose! I shall never set eyes 17 on any children of yours nor shall I know the happiness of being called grandmother.
 18 Woe is me, who had many handsome children, but am now bereft and all alone
 19 with my many sorrows! •Nor shall I have any of my sons to bury me when I 20 die."
 21 But the holy and God-fearing mother lamented none of them with any such 22 dirge, nor urged any of them to avoid death, nor grieved over them in the moment
 23 of their death. •Rather, as though she had a mind of adamant and were this time bringing her brood of sons<sup>c</sup> to birth into immortal life, she encouraged them and 24 pled with them to die for piety's sake. •Mother, soldier of God in piety's cause, 25 elder and woman withal! By your brave endurance you have overcome even the 26 tyrant and in deeds as in words have proven yourself stronger than a man. •When 27 you were seized along with your sons, you stood watching Eleazar under torture 28 and said to your children in the Hebrew tongue, •"My children, noble is the 29 struggle, and since you have been summoned to it to bear witness for our nation, 30 fight zealously for our ancestral Law. •Shameful were it indeed that this old man 31 should endure agonies for piety's sake, while you young men were terrified of 32 torments. •Remember that it is for God's sake you were given a share in the world
 33 and the benefit of life, •and accordingly you owe it to God to endure all hardship
 34 for his sake, •for whom our father Abraham ventured boldly to sacrifice his son
 35 Isaac, the father of our nation; and Isaac, seeing his father's hand, with knife in Gen 22:10
 36 it, fall down against him, did not flinch. •Daniel also, the righteous one, was Dan 6
 37 thrown to the lions, and Hananiah and Azariah and Mishael were cast into the Dan 3 38 fiery furnace, and all endured for the sake of God. •Therefore, you who have the 39 same faith in God must not be dismayed. •For it would be unreasonable for you 40 who know true religion not to withstand hardships."

16 a. The events are in reverse order of the way they appear in Dan, where the fiery furnace comes first in ch. 3 and the account of Daniel in the lion's den in ch. 6. But this need not suggest that our author was working with a different text of Dan but probably only that he regarded Daniel as his primary hero in brave endurance.

b. "Ten months" is a literal rendering of the Gk. dekamēnoi, a common expression in antiquity for the period of gestation, although the correct number of months was known well enough.

c. For "her brood of sons" (cf. Hadas, Maccabees, p. 228) the Gk. has lit. "the number of her sons," that is "the whole number of seven," everyone without exception.

d. There is no justification for reading the idea of resurrection into this vs. or for regarding it as a Christian interpolation. The notion of "living unto God" may denote no more than their final vindication by God or their translation to heaven. The apparently solecistic nominative participle eidotes, where strict grammar would require the accusative ("knowing full well" = eidotas), is not without parallel elsewhere in Koine (see Townshend, APOT, vol. 2, p. 682, and Hadas, Maccabees, p. 231).

24 With these words the mother of the seven exhorted each one and persuaded 25 them to die rather than transgress the commandment of God, and they knew full well themselves that those who die for the sake of God live unto God, as do Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and all the patriarchs.<sup>d</sup>

Ex 3:6
 Mk 12:26f.

1 17 Some of the guards declared that when she, too, was about to be seized and put to death, she threw herself into the fire so that no one would touch her body.<sup>a</sup>
 2 O mother with the seven sons, who broke down the violence of the tyrant and 3 thwarted his wicked devices and exhibited the nobility of faith! Nobly set like a roof upon the pillars of your children, you sustained, without yielding, the 4 earthquake of the tortures. Be of good cheer, therefore, mother of holy soul, 5 whose hope of endurance is secure with God. Not so majestic stands the moon in heaven as you stand, lighting the way to piety for your seven starlike sons, 6 honored by God and firmly set with them in heaven. For your childbearing was from our father Abraham.

2Mac 7:41

TJob 39:9-40:5

The effect of the martyrdoms

7 If it were possible for us to paint, as on a picture,<sup>b</sup> the story of our piety, would not those who looked upon it shudder to see the mother of seven sons enduring 8 manifold torments unto death for piety's sake? It would in fact be appropriate to inscribe upon their tomb itself, as a memorial to those members of our nation,
 the following words:

9                                   HERE LIE BURIED AN AGED PRIEST AN OLD WOMAN
                                       AND HER SEVEN SONS
                                       THROUGH THE VIOLENCE OF A TYRANT
 10                                   BENT ON DESTROYING THE POLITY OF THE HEBREWS
                                       THEY VINDICATED THEIR RACE
                                       LOOKING UNTO GOD AND ENDURING TORMENTS EVEN UNTO DEATH.<sup>c</sup>

11,12 Truly divine was the contest in which they were engaged. On that day virtue 12 was the umpire and the test to which they were put was a test of endurance. The 13 prize for victory was incorruption in long-lasting life. The first to enter the contest was Eleazar, but the mother of the seven sons competed also, and the brothers as 14 well took part. The tyrant was the adversary and the world and the life of men

1Cor 9:9

17 a. There is no hint of the mother's suicide in 2Mac, and at this point our author himself is rather squeamish about it (although in certain circumstances and on certain conditions suicide was considered acceptable among the Stoics). He attributes the report of it to the guards (Did he possess no tradition on this matter?) and refers to the matter in a strangely oblique and fleeting way.

b. The Gk. has no word for "picture," but reads lit. "as on someone" or "as on something." Townshend (APOT, vol. 2, p. 683) supposes that the Gk. verb for "paint" must imply an artist to paint the picture, takes the preposition epi in the sense of "in the style of" and translates "as might some artist." But this seems rather forced, and the very plausible conjecture that some such Gk. word as pinakos has dropped out of the text, and that we should read "as on a picture," is, despite the lack of MS authority, more acceptable. Also Townshend's translation of the preceding words, "And had it been lawful for us to paint" (which is a quite legitimate rendering of the Gk.), implies that what is involved here is our author's interpretation of the second commandment as prohibiting all forms of pictorial art. On the other hand, however, we have to bear in mind not only that Hellenism made much of pictorial art and analogy, and that 4Mac is permeated with hellenistic influence, but also that the religious paintings in the synagogue at Dura-Europus near Antioch (third century A.D.) most probably suggest that pictorial representation among the Jews was possible even at a considerably earlier stage (see especially E. R. Goodenough, Jewish Symbols in the Graeco-Roman World, 8 vols. [New York, 1953-58]). Hence, our translation of vs. 7 implies only that our author thinks of the whole scene of the martyrdoms as so awesome that it is beyond artistic depiction.

c. The tomb and the proposed epitaph may be no more than a rhetorical device. But some commentators find here an indication that 4Mac was composed as a commemorative address to be delivered at the actual tomb of the martyrs (see Hadas, Maccabees, p. 234).

15 were the spectators. •Piety won the victory and crowned her own contestants.
 16 Who did not marvel at the champions of the divine Law; who were not amazed?
 17 The tyrant himself and his whole council were astonished at their endurance, 18 on account of which they now stand beside the divine throne and live the life of 19 the age of blessing. •For Moses says, All the holy ones are under your hands.<sup>d</sup> Deut 33:3
 20 These then, having consecrated themselves for the sake of God, are now honored not only with this distinction but also by the fact that through them our enemies 21 did not prevail against our nation, •and the tyrant was punished and our land purified, since they became, as it were, a ransom for the sin of our nation.<sup>e</sup> 22 Through the blood of these righteous ones and through the propitiation of their death the divine providence rescued Israel, which had been shamefully treated.
 23 For the tyrant Antiochus, observing intently their heroism in virtue and their endurance under torture, publicly held up their constancy as a model for his 24 soldiers •and so roused them to such a high sense of honor and such courage in infantry warfare and in the siege of cities that he ravaged and overthrew all his enemies.<sup>f</sup>

1 18 O offspring of the seed of Abraham, children of Israel, obey this Law and 2 be altogether true to your religion, •knowing that devout reason is master over the passions, and not only over pains from within but also from outside ourselves.<sup>a</sup> 3 Those men who surrendered their bodies to suffering for piety's sake were in return not only admired by mankind but were also deemed worthy of the divine 4 portion. •And it was because of them that our nation enjoyed peace—they revived 5 the observance of the Law in their land and repulsed their enemies' siege. •And the tyrant Antiochus was punished on earth and continues to suffer punishment in death. For when he had failed absolutely to compel the people of Jerusalem to adopt the pagan way of life, and to forsake the customs of their fathers, he departed from Jerusalem and marched away against the Persians.

The mother's address to her children

6 The mother of the seven sons also addressed these righteous sayings to her children:
 7 "I was a chaste maiden and did not leave my father's house; but I kept guard
 8 over the rib built into woman's body.<sup>b</sup> •No seducer of the desert nor deceiver in Gen 2:22
 Gen 3:1-7
 9 maidenly purity.<sup>c</sup> •Through all the days of my prime I stayed with my husband.
 When these sons<sup>d</sup> were grown up, their father died. Happy was he, for the life he lived was blessed with children, and he knew not the pain of the time when 10 they were taken away. •He, while he was still with you, taught you the Law and Gen 4:8
 11 the Prophets. •He read to you of Abel, slain by Cain, of Isaac, offered as a burnt Gen 22
 12 offering, and of Joseph, in prison. •He spoke to you of the zeal of Phineas, and Gen 39:7-23
 Num 25:7-13
 13 taught you about Hananiah, Azariah, and Mishael in the fire. •He sang the praises Dan 3
 Dan 6

d. An exact citation of Deut 33:3 (LXX).

e. On the "ransom" idea in relation to the martyrs, see Theological Importance.

f. Vss. 23f. appear to be out of place in this context where the emphasis is on divine retribution, and inferior as they are in stylistic flourish to the normal mode of writing in 4Mac, they may very well be an interpolation. On the other side, our author may conceivably have had on hand some prosy materials relating to Antiochus' well-known victories and may have inserted them here to accentuate how great was the downfall reported later in 18:5.

18 a. "Pains from within" are mental anguish, and "pains from outside ourselves" are bodily anguish.

b. Staying at home was of course a means of ensuring the protection of chastity. For "the rib built into woman's body" the Gk. has only "the built-up rib," but in view of Gen 2:22 (LXX) the meaning is not in doubt.

c. The desert was regarded in Judaism and early Christianity as particularly the haunt of evil spirits, and here the reference is to demons that lie in wait to lead women astray. Our philosophically minded author here somewhat surprisingly uses the popular mythological language of the day to affirm the mother's perfect chastity, outside the home as well as within it.

d. The word for "sons" is not expressed in the Gk. text, but is clearly to be understood.

14 of Daniel in the lions' den and called him blessed. •He reminded you of the scripture of Isaiah which says, Even though you walk through the fire, the flame Isa 43:2 15 shall not burn you. •He sang to you the psalm of David which says, Many are 16 the afflictions of the righteous. •He recited the proverb of Solomon which says, Ps 34:19
 17 He is a tree of life<sup>e</sup> to those who do his will. •He affirmed the word of Ezekiel, Prov 3:18 18 Shall these dry bones live? •Nor did he forget the song that Moses taught which 19 says, I kill and I make alive, for this is your life and the length<sup>f</sup> of your days. Deut 32:39
 20 Ah! bitter was the day and yet not bitter when the cruel tyrant of the Greeks quenched<sup>g</sup> fire with fire in his fierce braziers, and in a furious rage brought to the catapult and back again to his tortures those seven sons of the daughter of Abraham; 21 he pierced the pupils of their eyes, their tongues he cut out, and slew them with 22 all kinds of torment. •And for these acts the divine justice has pursued and will 23 pursue the accursed tyrant. •But the sons of Abraham, together with their mother, who won the victor's prize, are gathered together in the choir of their fathers,<sup>h</sup> having received pure and deathless souls from God, to whom be glory forever WisSol 8:19 and ever. Amen.

e. In Prov 3:18 it is wisdom that is the tree of life, but in our author's adaptation the reference is obviously to God.

f. For "length" A reads "blessedness," which is followed by Townshend, APOT, vol. 2, p. 685.

g. A and S read "kindled," but probably the more difficult and certainly more graphic reading

"quenched" is to be preferred.

h. Townshend's rendering "gathered together unto the place of their ancestors" (APOT, vol. 2, p. 685) requires instead of the Gk. choros = "choir" the word chōros = "place." For "gathered together" S has "are celebrated," which might fit equally well with "choir" or "place."

PSEUDO-PHOCYLIDES

(First Century B.C.–First Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY P. W. VAN DER HORST

Introduction

Phocylides was an Ionic poet living in Miletus in the middle of the sixth century B.C.<sup>1</sup> Though his name is almost unknown today, he was famous in antiquity as a writer of maxims with useful advice for daily life.<sup>2</sup> Only a few of these sentences have been preserved.<sup>3</sup> The poem of 230 lines which is under discussion here is undoubtedly not authentic but written pseudonymously under the name of Phocylides. Quite apart from content, features of language and meter make it impossible to attribute the poem to an author of the sixth century B.C. Moreover, since it is evident that the writer knows the Septuagint and Stoic ethics, the sentences of Pseudo-Phocylides must be given a date after the second century B.C.<sup>4</sup>

Though a close study of the text reveals its undeniably Jewish character, the most striking characteristic of the poem is the author's effort to hide this by consistently avoiding any allusion to customs, rules or laws that might be recognized as typically Jewish and also by concealing Old Testament ethics in the disguise of Greek (Ionic) hexametric poetry.<sup>5</sup> He succeeded so well that his poem was held as authentic till the end of the sixteenth century. This characteristic, of course, raises the problem of the author's intentions. What did he wish to accomplish with such a poem? Why did he select only those commandments from the Old Testament with which civilized Greeks would be inclined to agree? Though the solution to this problem may never be found, three possible solutions have been suggested: (1) The author did not mean anything with his poem. He wrote it just for fun, as a kind of exercise in versification. (2) The author wanted to say to his fellow Jews: Look, the best of Greek ethics agrees with the Law, so do not be ashamed of your own tradition over against the Greeks and do not be afraid that you have missed anything by remaining Jewish. (3) The author directed himself to the heathen, not in order to make converts to Judaism (which would be impossible by means of such a poem), but in order to make "sympathizers,"<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See P. Ahlert, "Phokylides," Pauly-Wissowa vol. 20.1 cols. 503–5.

<sup>2</sup> Phocylides' fame is demonstrated by the references to his poetry in ancient authors, collected by W. Pape and G. Benseler, Wörterbuch der griechischen Eigennamen (Braunschweig, 1911<sup>2</sup>; repr. Graz, 1959) s.v. Phocylides.

<sup>3</sup> Latest edition by Z. Franyo, B. Snell, and H. Maehler, Frühgriechische Lyriker (Berlin, 1971) pp. 66–73. ET in J. M. Edmonds, Elegy and Jambus (LCL, London; Cambridge, Mass., 1931) vol. 1, pp. 172–81.

<sup>4</sup> The most recent defender of the authenticity of the poem is F. Dornseiff, Echtheitsfragen antik-griechischer Literatur: Rettungen des Theognis, Phokylides, Hekataios, Choirilos, pp. 37–51. Dornseiff's thesis that Phocylides may have known the OT by contact with the Jewish Diaspora in Miletus and by pre-LXX translations of the Pentateuch has met with serious criticism. See the reviews by E. Howald, Deutsche Literaturzeitung 61 (1940) 663–68, and by A. von Blumenthal, Gnomon 19 (1943) 289–93.

<sup>5</sup> The first to point this out was J. Bernays, Über das phokylideische Gedicht (Berlin, 1856), repr. in his Gesammelte Abhandlungen (Berlin, 1885) Bd. 1, pp. 192–261.

<sup>6</sup> For this category and its difference from proselytes and God-fearers see L. H. Feldman, "Jewish 'Sympathizers' in Classical Literature and Inscriptions," Transactions and Proceedings of the American Philological Association 81 (1950) 200–08, and especially F. Siegert, "Gottesfürchtige und Sympathisanten," JSJ 4 (1973) 109–64.

that is, to win over people to a standpoint more sympathetic to Judaism so as to break through the isolation of the Jews in the hellenistic world.<sup>7</sup>

None of these three possibilities can be ruled out entirely, but many scholars seem to favor the third solution.<sup>8</sup> The arguments are: There was a current in early Judaism that thought it useful, perhaps in a way reminiscent of the so-called Noachian laws, to propagate some universal principles of religion and ethics without the intention of making proselytes.<sup>9</sup> And, secondly, in a number of verses Pseudo-Phocylides runs parallel to passages in Philo's Hypothetica and Josephus' Against Apion which clearly figure in an apologetic and propagandistic context.<sup>10</sup> It has been suggested that all three of them had a common source which had its origin in a "wide-spread Jewish missionary activity which promoted ethical monotheism."<sup>11</sup> "The original impulse and intention of the Jewish mission lay . . . not in an extension of 'Judaism' as a national and religious cult but in the proclamation of the one God and his universal, ethical standards."<sup>12</sup>

There are problems, however, with this solution: These parallel texts in Philo and Josephus figure in recognizably Jewish writings, and, unlike these writings, our poem can hardly be called a missionary document. Moreover, the relation to the Noachian laws is a very uncertain matter (see below). These points seem to lend support for the second alternative, that Pseudo-Phocylides wrote for his own co-religionists, either to demonstrate that there is no marked difference between Jewish and Greek ethics or to show them that the rules of the Law could be given in a hexametric poem that could match contemporaneous Greek poetry quite well. One might also suggest that it was written as a schoolbook for Jewish children, since we know that collections of sentences were often used as material for writing and reading exercises in hellenistic schools.<sup>13</sup> These sentences would have had educational value at the same time. Another alternative has been suggested by the Jewish scholar G. Alon, who assumes that the author made Phocylides, the acclaimed ancient Greek writer, present the principles of Jewish life in order to demonstrate to Jews who were engrossed in hellenistic culture, and who imitated its manners and deeds, that even an honored poet like Phocylides recognized Jewish moral requisites. He did not have to mention abandonment of idolatry, which was taken for granted even by these thoroughly hellenized Jews.<sup>14</sup> This is a most attractive theory, explaining both the use of a pseudonym and the absence of the prohibition of idolatry, but it cannot be proved or disproved. It does, however, merit serious consideration. Ultimately we will have to await new data before the intention of this author will become wholly clear to us.

Original language and texts

There is no doubt that the original language of the poem was Greek. There are no versions in other ancient languages, and all extant manuscripts are in Greek. Of these many manuscripts only a limited number are valuable, namely the five which Douglas Young has used for his recent edition:<sup>15</sup>

<sup>7</sup> A fourth possibility suggests that the poem was written by a "sympathizer" or "God-fearer," not by a Jew (which is the position of M. Rossbroich, De Pseudo-Phocylideis, diss. Münster, 1910). If this is true Ps-Phoc should not be included in this volume.

<sup>8</sup> Most modern scholars see in Ps-Phoc a kind of (clumsy) propagandistic poet.

<sup>9</sup> See G. Klein, Der älteste christliche Katechismus und die jüdische Propaganda-Literatur, pp. 8–65, and M. Guttman, Das Judentum und seine Umwelt (Berlin, 1927).

<sup>10</sup> This was pointed out by P. Wendland, "Die Therapeuten und die philonische Schrift vom beschaulichen Leben," Jahrbücher für klassische Philologie Supplementband 22 (1896) 709–12.

<sup>11</sup> J. E. Crouch, The Origin and Intention of the Colossian Haustafel (FRLANT 109, 1972) p. 89.

<sup>12</sup> Crouch, Origin, p. 94.

<sup>13</sup> See H. I. Marrou, Histoire de l'éducation dans l'antiquité (Paris, 1960<sup>2</sup>) p. 218.

<sup>14</sup> G. Alon, "The Halakah in the Teaching of the Twelve Apostles," Studies in Jewish History (Hakibbutz Hameuchad, 1967<sup>2</sup>) vol. 1, pp. 274–94 [in Heb.]. A similar position is defended by N. Walter in his translation (with introduction) of Ps-Phoc in the series JSHRZ 4.3 (1983).

<sup>15</sup> D. Young, Theognis, Ps.-Pythagoras, Ps.-Phocylides, Chares, Anonymi aulodia, fragmentum teleiambicum (Leipzig, 1971<sup>2</sup>). This is the critical edition behind our translation. Young discusses the textual tradition on pp. xvi–xviii. More extensive discussions may be found in W. Kroll, "Zur Überlieferung der Pseudophocylideae," Rheinisches Museum 47 (1892) 457–59; A. Ludwig, Lectiones Pseudophocylideae (Königsberg, 1892); idem, Über das Spruchbuch des falschen Phokylides (Programm Königsberg, 1904) pp. 1–26 (review by W. Kroll, Berliner Philologische Wochenschrift 25 [1905] 241–43). A new edition by P. Derron is in preparation.

- M: tenth century, in Paris;
 B: tenth century, in Oxford;
 P: twelfth century, in Paris;
 L: thirteenth century, in Florence;
 V: thirteenth-fourteenth century, in Vienna.

Still debated is the value of the so-called Psi group of manuscripts of the Sibylline Oracles. This group has inserted Pseudo-Phocylides 5–79 between Sibylline Oracles 2.55 and 149. Seventy-five lines of Pseudo-Phocylides occupy ninety-five lines in the Sibylline Oracles because this Psi group has again inserted twenty lines of its own into the quotation from Pseudo-Phocylides; the result is an “interpolated interpolation.” Nevertheless, according to some scholars these twenty interpolated lines are an original part of the text of Pseudo-Phocylides, and Psi, therefore, represents a better text tradition of lines 5–79 than the manuscripts listed above.<sup>16</sup> This theory, however, has not won acceptance because the secondary character of the extra lines is too obvious to consider them seriously as authentic.<sup>17</sup>

Date and provenance

Though the dates proposed for Pseudo-Phocylides vary from the sixth century B.C. to the fourth century A.D., there is a growing consensus to ascribe the poem to the period between 200 B.C. and A.D. 200. We must consider if it is possible to fix the time of origin more precisely. This is difficult, however, because nowhere in the poem are there references to political events or circumstances that might help. Nevertheless, there are some features of language and thought that make it possible to narrow down the above-mentioned period.

Pseudo-Phocylides uses about thirty words (or word forms) which are not attested in Greek literature before the third century B.C.; about fifteen of these do not occur in texts before the first century B.C. This suggests 100 B.C. as the earliest possible date.<sup>18</sup> The same date is suggested by the unmistakable acquaintance of the author of Pseudo-Phocylides with the Septuagint, including the Prophets and Wisdom literature as well as the Pentateuch (which is evident in more than half of the poem).<sup>19</sup> Also undeniable is the influence of Stoicism on the author.<sup>20</sup> In itself this Stoic influence indicates only that the poem was written after 300 B.C., but its affinity with the thought of first-century A.D. Stoics like Musonius Rufus, Hierocles, and Seneca points strongly to the Imperial period.<sup>21</sup> The first century A.D. is also suggested by Pseudo-Phocylides’ many agreements with Philo and by the similarities it shares with the “diatribes” of the popular philosophical-ethical preachers, who were most active in the early Roman period.<sup>22</sup>

This cumulative evidence seems to favor a date between about 50 B.C. and A.D. 100. Moreover, if we recognize the probable Alexandrian provenance (see below), then the most probable date of origin lies in the period when the relations between Jews and Greeks in Alexandria were not too tense, namely during the reigns of the emperors Augustus (30 B.C.–A.D. 14) and Tiberius (A.D. 14–37). It is unlikely that after the anti-Jewish pogroms in Alexandria during the reign of Caligula (A.D. 37–41)<sup>23</sup> an Alexandrian Jew could have

<sup>16</sup> See esp. A. Kurfess, “Das Mahngedicht des sogenannten Phokylides im zweiten Buch der Oracula Sibyllina,” ZNW 38 (1939) 171–81. The first to propose this theory was J. Sitzler in a long view of Rossbroich’s dissertation (De Pseudo-phocylides, 1910) in Wochenschrift für klassische Philologie 29 (1912) 449–57.

<sup>17</sup> See the criticism by R. Keydell, “Die griechische Dichtung der Kaiserzeit,” Jahresbericht über die Fortschritte der klassischen Altertumswissenschaften 272 (1941) 27f.

<sup>18</sup> For a list of these words see my The Sentences 55–57. Of course these data are too scanty to base a firm conclusion upon them. But in combination with the following arguments this fact receives its due weight.

<sup>19</sup> See the nn. to the translation. Very clear instances are the allusions to Jer 9:22 in l. 53 and to Prov 6:6–8c in ll. 164–74.

<sup>20</sup> E.g. in ll. 63–67 where Ps-Phoc distinguishes between different types of anger, zeal, and love, which are Stoic distinctions.

<sup>21</sup> C. Schneider, Kulturgeschichte des Hellenismus (München, 1967) Bd. 1, p. 892, even asserts that Ps-Phoc is “von Musonius Rufus oder einem seiner Geistesverwandten beeinflusst.”

<sup>22</sup> See P. Wendland, Therapeuten, p. 712, n. 2, with reference to his “Philo und die kynisch-stoische Diatribe,” in P. Wendland and O. Kern, Beiträge zur Geschichte der griechischen Philosophie und Religion (Berlin, 1895) pp. 1–75.

<sup>23</sup> See E. Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, new English version rev. and ed. by G. Vermes and F. Millar (Edinburgh, 1973) vol. 1, pp. 388–94.

maintained so great an openness toward pagan culture. Therefore, the most probable date would be somewhere between 30 B.C. and A.D. 40.<sup>24</sup> Needless to say, this does not mean that another dating would be impossible, but the characteristics of the poem are explained best by a date within this period.

That Alexandria is to be preferred to other places as the city of origin is a conclusion based on one single line in the poem (102), where it is said that it is not good to dissect the human body. As far as we know, it was only in Alexandria that human anatomy was studied by applying dissection,<sup>25</sup> which is of course no definite proof that Pseudo-Phocylides was written there. Since a prohibition of the dissection of humans would make more sense if Pseudo-Phocylides originated in Alexandria, and since in other respects the poem excellently fits in with the Jewish-hellenistic culture in Alexandria as we know it from other sources, that city is most likely the place of origin.<sup>26</sup>

Historical importance

If Pseudo-Phocylides really belongs to a current of nonproselyting religious propaganda of ancient Judaism,<sup>27</sup> are there more writings from the hellenistic-Roman period which reflect that same interest? Rabbi Klein has pointed in this connection to the so-called Derek Erez literature, which he saw as the continuation of the universalistic Wisdom literature of Israel's hakhamin.<sup>28</sup> But, as has been pointed out, Klein is inclined to project late sources back into an earlier period.<sup>29</sup> Nevertheless, he is right in stressing that even in the Old Testament period there was always a nonparticularistic, universalistic current in Israel, embodied in the Wisdom literature, which never disappeared, not even after Ezra. It is well known that this Wisdom literature often incorporated non-Israelite wisdom, just as the author of Pseudo-Phocylides took over many maxims from Greek authors before him. So we must bear in mind that this tendency was not new among the Jews of the hellenistic age. Closer parallels, however, than the Derek Erez tractates are the "forged quotations" from classical Greek poets like Aeschylus, Sophocles, Euripides, Menander, Diphilus, and others,<sup>30</sup> and even more the (Syr.) sentences of Menander the Wise.<sup>31</sup> By means of this Jewish pseudepigraphic activity no reasonable Jew would have expected to convert pagans to Judaism. The forgers may have had no other intention than inculcating in heathen minds some universally valid ethical and religious principles, perhaps with the hope of humanizing pagan society. These Jews may have felt obliged to inform their non-Jewish fellow men about some fundamental and universal principles of religion and ethics without feeling any necessity to make converts to Judaism.<sup>32</sup>

Is there any relation between this literature and the seven so-called Noachian laws? As is well known, unlike the Sinaitic laws these laws were considered by the Jews to be valid

<sup>24</sup> Cf. the dating by A. Kurfess, "Oracula Sibyllina I-II," ZNW 40 (1941) 162: "ungefähr in die Zeit unmittelbar vor oder nach Christi Geburt"; F. Christ ("Das Leben nach dem Tode bei Pseudo-Phocylides," TZ 31 [1975] 140) dates the work to the time of Jesus.

<sup>25</sup> See L. Edelstein, "The History of Anatomy in Antiquity," Ancient Medicine (Baltimore, 1967) pp. 247-301; F. Kudlien, "Anatomie," Pauly-Wissowa Sup. 11 (1968) cols. 38-48.

<sup>26</sup> See e.g. W. Kroll, "Phocylides (2)," Pauly-Wissowa Bd. 20.1 (1941) col. 507; P. M. Fraser, Ptolemaic Alexandria (Oxford, 1972) vol. 2, p. 539.

<sup>27</sup> Let us adopt this (debatable) thesis at this point for the sake of convenience.

<sup>28</sup> Klein, Der älteste christliche Katechismus, pp. 66-142.

<sup>29</sup> W. D. Davies, Paul and Rabbinic Judaism (London, 1955<sup>2</sup>) pp. 134f. Crouch, Haustafel, p. 16, n. 16. On the date of the Derek Erez tractates see the Introduction to the English translation in A. Cohen (ed.), The Minor Tractates of the Talmud (2 vols.; London, 1965).

<sup>30</sup> Now conveniently collected by A. M. Denis, Fragmenta Pseudepigraphorum quae supersunt Graeca (PVTG 3; Leiden, 1970) pp. 161-74, and discussed by Denis in his Introduction aux pseudépiques grecs d'Antien Testament (SVTP 1; Leiden, 1970) pp. 223-38. Most of these quotations have been preserved by Ps-Justin (De Monarchia, Cohortatio), Clement of Alexandria (Stromateis), and Eusebius (Praeparatio Evangelica).

<sup>31</sup> Most easily accessible in the German translation by P. Riessler, Altjüdisches Schrifttum ausserhalb der Bibel (Augsburg, 1928; repr. Heidelberg, 1966) pp. 1047-57. Syr. text in J. P. N. Land, Anecdota Syriaca (Leiden, 1862) vol. 1, pp. 64-73. See the discussion in Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes (Leipzig, 1909<sup>4</sup>) Bd. 3, pp. 622f., and the literature mentioned by Denis, Introduction, p. 211, n. 49. J. P. Audet ("La sagesse de Ménandre l'Égyptien," RB 59 [1952] 55-81) asserts that this Menander is not a Jew but a so-called God-fearer. That the fourth and seventh spurious Epistles of Heraclitus belong to this category is extremely doubtful; see J. Strugnell and H. Attridge, "The Epistles of Heraclitus and the Jewish Pseudepigrapha: a Warning," HTR 64 (1971) 411-13.

<sup>32</sup> Cf. Guttmann, Judentum, pp. 110f.

for the whole of humanity. These seven commandments were: (1) the command to establish courts of justice; (2) the prohibition of idolatry; (3) the injunction against blaspheming the name of God; (4) the prohibition of murder; (5) the ban against adultery and incest; (6) the forbiddance of robbery and theft; (7) the proscription against eating meat with the blood of life in it.<sup>33</sup> The gentiles, it was believed, had undertaken to keep these laws, but did not do so. It has been asserted that Pseudo-Phocylides, in a more or less veiled way, incorporated these seven commandments in his poem<sup>34</sup> and added a number of rules with the same "unwritten law" character, partly from Greek, partly from Jewish sources.<sup>35</sup> This might be true. With the first Noachian commandment one can compare several lines in Pseudo-Phocylides dealing with the incorruptible administration of justice (9–12, 86); with the second and third, 8 and 54, which stipulate that the one God has to be honored;<sup>36</sup> with the fourth, 4, 32, and 58; with the fifth, 3 and 177–83; with the sixth, 6, 18, 135f. and 154, and with the seventh, 147f. Therefore, at least twenty-five lines reflect ideas which are found in the Noachian laws. But it apparently was not Pseudo-Phocylides' only intention, if it was his intention at all, to propagate these laws,<sup>37</sup> for he added a great number of other rules. It is significant, however, that all these rules of behavior are cast in the same mold; that is to say, not one presupposes Jewish national particularities but all can claim a universal validity equal to the Noachian laws. Some of them even prove to be so-called "unwritten laws" of the Greeks,<sup>38</sup> and several have their parallels in Stoic lists of duties, which often incorporated earlier "unwritten laws."

Nevertheless, in spite of this universalistic tendency of his poem, Pseudo-Phocylides has succeeded in stating clearly two principal Jewish tenets of his age: that there is one God (l. 54) and that there will be a resurrection of the dead (ll. 103f.).<sup>39</sup> Also the thought of a retribution in the hereafter, closely related to the tenet of the resurrection,<sup>40</sup> is possibly present in the poem (l. 11). The reference to the resurrection clearly shows that the author of Pseudo-Phocylides is Jewish,<sup>41</sup> and perhaps it is for this reason that he immediately continues with remarks about the deification and incorruptibility of the soul, which make a very Greek impression.<sup>42</sup>

If all the above is true, we may conclude very tentatively that in the poem of Pseudo-Phocylides we have a representative of that universalistic current in ancient Judaism. While holding to the principal tenets of "orthodox" Judaism, it tried to give to the gentiles some ethical principles that might humanize life in family and society, using therefore all sources that could contribute to this aim, both Jewish and Greek.<sup>43</sup>

However, this thesis, which cannot be proved, could be wrong. Another possible solution

<sup>33</sup> See G. F. Moore, Judaism (Cambridge, Mass., 1927) vol. 1, pp. 274f.; H. L. Strack and P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum N.T. aus Talmud und Midrasch (München, 1926) Bd. 3, pp. 37f.

<sup>34</sup> Guttman, Judentum, p. 112, and Siegert, JSJ 4 (1973) 125.

<sup>35</sup> On the striking analogy between Noachian laws and unwritten laws in Philo see the remarks by H. A. Wolfson, Philo (Cambridge, Mass., 1948<sup>2</sup>) vol. 2, pp. 183–87. Cf. Crouch, Origin, p. 96: "Both (Noachian laws and unwritten laws) were regarded as expressions of a primitive code of ethics which was valid for the entire human race."

<sup>36</sup> Of course Ps-Phoc could not prohibit idolatry and blasphemy openly without making known his Jewishness. Hence only this positive formulation appears in ll. 8 and 54. Cf. the same positive formulation in a Noachian context in Jub 7:20.

<sup>37</sup> S. Krauss emphatically denies that the poem of Ps-Phoc has anything to do with the Noachian precepts ("Les préceptes des Noachides," REJ 47 [1903] 32f.) as does G. Alon, "The Halakah in the Teaching of the Twelve Apostles," 277.

<sup>38</sup> E.g. the injunctions to leave no corpse unburied (vs. 99) and always to return a benefit (vs. 80). See R. Hirzel, Agrophos Nomos (Abhandl. der königl. sächsischen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften, Philol.-hist. Classe 20, 1; Leipzig, 1900).

<sup>39</sup> On these principal tenets of Judaism see W. Bousset and H. Gressmann, Die Religion des Judentums im späthellenistischen Zeitalter (Tübingen, 1926<sup>2</sup>; repr. 1966<sup>4</sup>) pp. 158f.

<sup>40</sup> Bousset and Gressmann, Religion, pp. 192f.

<sup>41</sup> How strange this theory was to non-Jewish ears may be seen from Acts 17:32.

<sup>42</sup> The whole passage ll. 103–15 is not very consistent in matters of the hereafter, "but to press this point would be to ignore the widespread tendency of language about the afterlife to admit inconsistencies" (A. D. Nock, Essays on Religion and the Ancient World [Oxford, 1972] vol. 1, p. 507, n. 19). See further below.

<sup>43</sup> Another point of importance is that we have in Ps-Phoc an example of Jewish-hellenistic ethics as it found its way into so many parts of the NT. The parallels to the paraenetic passages of the NT are numerous and have been adduced especially by Martin Dibelius in his commentaries. Cf. his remarks in Die Formgeschichte des Evangeliums (Tübingen, 1971<sup>9</sup>) p. 239. The NT parallels will be referred to in the nn. to the translation. See also P. W. van der Horst, "Pseudo-Phocylides and the New Testament," ZNW 69 (1978) 187–202.

is that of Alon (see above), who suggests that Pseudo-Phocylides is a very interesting example of inner-Jewish "propaganda" meant to keep Jews that were in danger of sliding down too far into an un-Jewish way of life within the limits of Judaism and to encourage them by the suggestion that even a renowned pagan author propagated the principles of Jewish life. Further and closer study of hellenistic Judaism will, we hope, shed more light on this still obscure field.

Theological importance

To speak about the theology of Pseudo-Phocylides would be rash, for his poem consists mainly of ethical rules and many of his ideas are very general. By what principles the author was guided in his eclectic procedure we have already seen above. To systematize his thoughts, which are uttered so unsystematically, is difficult; there is no unifying conception behind the poem and no coherence exists in it since he has drawn from so many sources. Sometimes there are even contradictory statements.<sup>44</sup> In general, one may say, Pseudo-Phocylides is guilty of a certain superficiality.

The "doctrine" of God in Pseudo-Phocylides is, of course, monotheistic. The only wise and mighty God, who is rich in blessings (l. 54), must be honored before anything else (l. 8). His image is man's spirit, a loan of God to the mortals (l. 106). As the source of our prosperity, God demands that men share their wealth with those in need (l. 29).<sup>45</sup> God hates perjury (l. 17). He blesses each creature with a means of self-defense; in addition man receives the ability to think and speak (ll. 125–28). This statement and the one in line 106 (see above) no doubt imply that God is the creator of the universe, though this is nowhere actually expressed. This universe is harmonious and coherent (ll. 71–74). God will judge us after death (l. 11) and is the ruler of all souls, whether high or low (l. 111). The emphasis on the instability of life (ll. 27, 116, 118–20) may derive from the underlying thought that the ways of God are inscrutable.

The problem of the so-called polytheistic references has been exaggerated.<sup>46</sup> Twice (ll. 75, 163) reference is made to "the Blessed Ones" (Gk. makares), by which the heavenly bodies are designated. Although in Greek literature this term generally means "the gods," it does not mean here that sun, moon, and stars are gods any more than does the use of a current Platonic term by Philo when he calls them "visible gods" (De opificio mundi 27). It does mean ascription of personality to the heavenly bodies, but that is not inconsistent with Jewish monotheism.<sup>47</sup> In two other lines (98, 104) there is the plural form "gods." In the former case this reading makes no sense at all and the text should be emended.<sup>48</sup> The second reference, where it is declared that the departed become gods (l. 104), looks rather pagan and has no exact Jewish parallels, though often the deceased were regarded as angels, and angels were often called gods.<sup>49</sup> Here we can say that Pseudo-Phocylides goes rather far in an effort to neutralize the effect of his statement on the bodily resurrection in lines 103f. Real "polytheistic" references are not found in Pseudo-Phocylides.

Pseudo-Phocylides' teaching on man contains several Old Testament ideas. Man's body is of the dust of the earth and at death returns to it; his spirit, which is God's image, is released into the air at death (ll. 106–8).<sup>50</sup> From the numerous warnings against evil and wrongdoing one may conclude that the poet assumes that human nature is inclined toward evil. Except by implication, the writer almost nowhere delineates the character of the good life, so intent is he upon warning his readers against the evil life. He condemns a great number of evils and clearly is more concerned with the consideration of specific evils than

<sup>44</sup> Though he sees all this clearly, J. J. Lewis nevertheless goes too far in systematizing Ps-Phoc's "doctrines" in his "The Teaching of Pseudo-Phocylides," The London Quarterly and Holborn Review (Oct. 1953) 295–98. Yet his attempt is of some use.

<sup>45</sup> This is actually the only line in the poem that shows a religious foundation of ethics.

<sup>46</sup> Because of them several scholars have denied the Jewish origin of the poem.

<sup>47</sup> See Nock, Essays, vol. 2, p. 912. Often the stars were regarded as angels; cf. Bousset and Gressmann, Religion, pp. 322f.

<sup>48</sup> We read goosi with Bernays instead of theoisi.

<sup>49</sup> See on this line the sound remarks by M. Hengel, "Anonymität, Pseudepigraphie und «literarische Fälschung» in der jüdisch-hellenistischen Literatur," Pseudepigrapha I, Entretiens de la Fondation Hardt (Vandoeuvres-Geneva, 1972) vol. 18, p. 297.

<sup>50</sup> On afterlife see further below.

with any abstract conception of evil or its origin. Behind all his precepts is the assumption that, if man so desires, his will is strong enough for him to reject evil and cleave to good. There is no mention of the need for forgiveness or for divine aid in conquering evil.

Lines 153–74 form the longest coherent passage of the poem and also constitute its best part in expressiveness and style.<sup>51</sup> Here, in accordance with the positive appraisal of labor in the Old Testament and Judaism,<sup>52</sup> Pseudo-Phocylides sings a song in praise of labor and against idleness. Work is useful and important for man; it is the only route to an honorable existence.

To enumerate all the evils that are condemned by our author would be tedious and useless. One topic, however, must be mentioned because Pseudo-Phocylides devotes so much attention to it, namely sexual sins. He warns against nearly every sexual aberration that one can imagine (viz. ll. 177–94). Nevertheless, he heartily encourages marital relations (175f.). That, too, is in accordance with Judaism, in which a positive evaluation of marriage is often accompanied by strong puritanism.<sup>53</sup> The reason Pseudo-Phocylides chose to elaborate upon this subject is probably that injunctions concerning “forbidden relations” formed a set part of Jewish propaganda.<sup>54</sup>

The poet lays stress on moderation and self-restraint. Due measure is best in all things. The word “measure,” or “moderation” (Gr. metron), occurs several times in the poem (see ll. 36, 69, 98). This Greek ideal was, of course, fully compatible with his Jewish ideas. More Jewish than Greek is the accent he lays on practicing justice and mercy, especially in lines 9–41, where a real concern for the poor and the weak is evident. Also great emphasis is laid on good relationships in the family, between wife and husband (ll. 195–97), between children and parents (ll. 207–9), and between slaves and masters (ll. 223–27).<sup>55</sup> Friendship is highly appraised (ll. 142, 218). Even to one’s personal enemy kind help is to be given when there is an opportunity (ll. 140–42).<sup>56</sup> The writer reveals a keen sense of the value of good relations.

It is clear that Pseudo-Phocylides’ remarks on the afterlife are inconsistent.<sup>57</sup> Admittedly, inconsistencies in theories of the afterlife are very common with philosophically untrained people. But in this matter our author seems to go to the extreme. On the one hand he clearly expresses his hope of the resurrection of the dead (ll. 103f.). It is for that reason that the remains of the dead are to be treated with respect (l. 102). He even says that the souls remain in the deceased (l. 105). On the other hand he declares that the immortal souls go to the everlasting home of Hades, where God rules over them (ll. 111f.). Moreover, he says that the body is turned to dust and the spirit is released into the air (ll. 107f.). This third statement is not necessarily a contradiction of the second, for in the hellenistic period Hades was often transposed into the air,<sup>58</sup> and in Judaism the distinction between soul and spirit was often neglected.<sup>59</sup> The first and second statements, however, are hardly reconcilable. Again it is clear that Pseudo-Phocylides has no logically thought-out system. Yet he does not give the impression of being an uneducated man. Had he been uneducated he could not have written as well as he did in hexameters and in an artificial Greek dialect that was used only in poetry. He must have been one of the upper class who could afford a thorough literary training but who did not go beyond that.

<sup>51</sup> This is the judgment of several scholars, e.g. Bernays, Gesammelte Abhandlungen, vol. 1, p. 209, and Bousset and Gressmann, Religion, p. 431. The only other coherent passage is ll. 177–94 (on sexual sins).

<sup>52</sup> See F. Hauck, “Arbeit,” RAC (Stuttgart, 1950) Bd. 1, p. 588. J. Jeremias, Jerusalem in the Time of Jesus (London, 1969) pp. 1f.

<sup>53</sup> Cf. Nock, Essays, vol. 2, p. 894.

<sup>54</sup> See Josephus, Apion 2.199–203.

<sup>55</sup> One is reminded here of the so-called Haustafeln in the Epistles to the Colossians and Ephesians. Crouch (Origin and Intention of the Colossian Haustafel) discusses the relation between these passages and Ps-Phoc and points to their common background in hellenistic-Jewish propaganda.

<sup>56</sup> This line has allured some scholars (e.g. J. Scaliger) to the view that the poet must have been a Christian (“love your enemy!”), but Bernays, Gesammelte Abhandlungen, Bd. 1, p. 197, rightly referred to Ex. 23:5 as the source of this line. Yet Harnack (TLZ 10 [1885] 159f.) still believed that the author was a Christian.

<sup>57</sup> See n. 42; see also H. C. C. Cavallin, Life after Death. Paul's Argument for the Resurrection of the Dead in I Cor. 15. Part I: An Enquiry into the Jewish Background (Lund, 1974) pp. 151–55 (on Ps-Phoc) and pp. 199–202 (on this phenomenon in Judaism in general).

<sup>58</sup> See F. Cumont, After Life in Roman Paganism (New Haven, 1922; repr. New York, 1959) pp. 81–83.

<sup>59</sup> See Bousset and Gressmann, Religion, pp. 400f.

Relation to canonical books

As indicated above, Pseudo-Phocylides probably knew the whole Septuagint.<sup>60</sup> But not all parts of the Septuagint influenced him equally. There is no doubt that he knew the Prophets,<sup>61</sup> but the reminiscences are not many. The Wisdom books (especially Prov and Sir) obviously influenced him much more strongly, and there are many reminiscences or allusions to these books.<sup>62</sup> Most manifest is the influence of the Pentateuch, of which some chapters have affected him strongly; foremost among them is Leviticus 19.<sup>63</sup> Many verses of this chapter have their echo in the poem, probably because the principal tenets of Old Testament ethics are summarized there. Leviticus 18 and Exodus 22 and 23 (from the so-called Book of the Covenant) also have many parallels in Pseudo-Phocylides. These chapters seem to have been followed rather closely. Some scholars correctly see in lines 3–8 a summary of the Decalogue.<sup>64</sup> It is clear therefore that a number of central passages in the Pentateuch have done much in shaping the poem of Pseudo-Phocylides. That Genesis and the other historical narratives of the Pentateuch do not play a part can be explained by the nature of the poem.

It is very unlikely that Pseudo-Phocylides has influenced any of the New Testament authors. That there are many parallels between Pseudo-Phocylides and the New Testament is explained by their common background, namely the Old Testament and hellenistic Jewish culture. These parallels, and also those from the Old Testament, will be noted in the margin of the translation.

Relation to apocryphal books

Of the apocryphal books the Wisdom of Jesus ben Sirach has the closest affinity to Pseudo-Phocylides, but at the same time there are marked differences; Sirach is certainly not as universalistic as Pseudo-Phocylides. A similar situation exists in the case of Tobit; its emphasis on the duty of burying the dead is paralleled in Pseudo-Phocylides 99. For the relationship of Pseudo-Phocylides to pseudepigraphic literature see Historical Importance.

Cultural importance

In antiquity the poem apparently influenced few writers. The first to quote from it was Stobaeus, who wrote in the fifth century A.D. No author in the Middle Ages quoted from it, yet the text was being copied (see the dates of the MSS, above). The first printed edition appeared in 1495 from Venice. Subsequently the poet received great popularity. In the sixteenth century there were numerous editions, translations, and commentaries. The poem became a favorite lecture source for young schoolboys. Pseudo-Phocylides embodied the ideal combination of biblical ethics and classical forms. And because the poem was deemed authentic, one was delighted that a real heathen had presented a testimony to truths that in essentials were identical with biblical doctrines. Natural reason proved to consent to biblical ideas.<sup>65</sup>

In 1591 the first doubts concerning the authenticity of the poem were raised,<sup>66</sup> and fifteen years later the great Joseph Scaliger demonstrated persuasively that it was not from the real Phocylides.<sup>67</sup> The result was a rapid decline of interest in the poem,<sup>68</sup> which was neglected

<sup>60</sup> Cf. A. Beltrami, "Ea quae apud Pseudo-Phocylidem Veteris et Novi Testamenti vestigia deprehenduntur," Rivista di Filologia e Istruzione Classica 36 (1908) 411–23, who gathers a large collection of parallels (several of which, however, must be rejected).

<sup>61</sup> E.g. l. 53 is evidently inspired by Jer 9:22 (or 1Kgs 2:10 LXX).

<sup>62</sup> Most clear is the influence of LXX Prov 6:6–8c in Ps-Phoc 164–74.

<sup>63</sup> Bernays, in his pioneering study Über das phokylideische Gedicht, which appeared in 1856, was the first to point this out.

<sup>64</sup> E.g. the fact that the prohibition of adultery is mentioned first is paralleled in several other free renderings of the Decalogue; see Bousset and Gressmann, Religion, p. 425 with n. 3.

<sup>65</sup> For the history of Ps-Phoc in the sixteenth century see Bernays, Gesammelte Abhandlungen, Bd. 1, pp. 192f.

<sup>66</sup> By F. Sylburg, Epicae elegiacaeque minorum poetarum gnomae (Frankfurt, 1591).

<sup>67</sup> In Animadversiones in Chronologica Eusebii, printed in his Thesaurus Temporum (Leiden, 1606), pp. 88f.

<sup>68</sup> See F. Susemihl, Geschichte der griechischen Litteratur in der Alexandrinerzeit (Leipzig, 1892) Bd. 2, p. 642, n. 63.

until Jacob Bernays wrote his famous study on our author in 1856. The popularity and influence of Pseudo-Phocylides lasted only a century, from 1500 until 1600, but no doubt before and after that period many read his lines and perhaps were edified.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 173–75.

Delling, Bibliographie, p. 56.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 215–19.

Bernays, J. Über das phokylideische Gedicht. Berlin, 1856; reprinted in his Gesammelte Abhandlungen. Berlin, 1885; Bd. 1, pp. 192–261. (This fundamental work was the basis of all subsequent study of Ps-Phoc.)

Crouch, J. E. The Origin and Intention of the Colossian Haustafel. FRLANT 109; Göttingen, 1972. (Crouch discusses Ps-Phoc along the lines indicated by Klein [1909], but follows more refined methods.)

Dornseiff, F. Echtheitsfragen antik-griechischer Literatur: Rettungen des Theognis, Phokylides, Hekataios, Choirilos. Berlin, 1939; pp. 37–51. (The latest and most intelligent defense of the authenticity of the poem.)

Farina, A. Silloge Pseudofocilidea. Naples, 1962. (Introduction, Gk. text, Italian translation, some nn.; has a curious theory on the origin of the poem.)

Horst, P. W. van der. The Sentences of Pseudo-Phocylides. Introduction, Translation and Commentary. SVTP 4; Leiden, 1978. (Extensive discussion and commentary on the Gk. text; also contains a concordance.)

Klein, G. Der älteste christliche Katechismus und die jüdische Propaganda-Literatur. Berlin, 1909; see especially pp. 143–53. (The first to place Ps-Phoc in the context of universalistic, non-proselytizing Jewish propaganda.)

Kroll, W. "Phokylides" (2), Pauly-Wissowa. Stuttgart, 1941; vol. 20.1, pp. 505–10. (Very learned discussion, stresses the hellenistic elements in the poem, underrates its Jewishness.)

Küchler, M. Frühjüdische Weisheitstraditionen. Zum Fortgang weisheitlichen Denkens im Bereich des frühjüdischen Jahweglaubens. Orbis Biblicus et Orientalis 26; Freiburg i/d Schweiz, Göttingen, 1979; pp. 236–302.

Rossbroich, M. De Pseudo-Phocylideis (diss. Münster, 1910). (The latest commentary on the Gk. text; sees in Ps-Phoc a God-fearing gentile.)

Schürer, E. Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi. Leipzig, 1909<sup>4</sup>; Bd. 3, pp. 617–22. (A very useful survey of the older literature on Ps-Phoc and a significant discussion of the problems.)

THE SENTENCES OF PSEUDO-PHOCYLIDES

Prologue

- 1 Phocylides, the wisest of men, sets forth
2 these counsels of God by his holy judgments, gifts of blessing.<sup>a</sup>

Summary of the Decalogue

- 3 Neither commit adultery nor rouse homosexual passion. Ex 20:14; Deut 5:18
4 Neither devise treachery nor stain your hands with blood. Lev 18:22; 20:13
5 Do not become rich unjustly, but live from honorable means.<sup>a</sup> Ex 20:13; Deut 5:17
6 Be content with what you have and abstain from what is another's.<sup>b</sup> Heb 13:5; Tlss 4:2; Ex 20:17
7 Do not tell lies, but always speak the truth. Deut 5:21
8 Honor God foremost, and afterward your parents.<sup>c</sup> Prov 21:3; Sir 7:13; TDan 5:2
Eph 4:25
Sir 1:14-16; Ex 20:12
Deut 5:16; Lev 19:3
Prov 23:22-25

Exhortation to justice

- 9 Always dispense justice and let not your judgment be influenced by favor.<sup>a</sup>
10 Do not cast down the poor unjustly, do not judge partially.<sup>b</sup>
11 If you judge evilly, subsequently God will judge you.<sup>c</sup>
12 Flee false witness; award what is just. Prov 17:15; Mt 7:2
13 Watch over a deposit, and in everything keep faith. Ex 20:16; Deut 5:20
Prov 21:28
Lev 5:20-26; Ex 22:6-12
Ezek 18:7
Deut 25:14f.; Prov 11:1; 16:11; 20:10; Amos 8:4-6
Hos 12:8; Mic 6:11
Ezek 45:10; Lk. 6:38
Lev 19:35f.
14 Give a just measure, and an extra full measure of all things is good. Ex 20:7; Deut 5:11
Lev 19:12; Sir 23:11
WisSol 14:28f.; PssSol 4:4
15 Do not make a balance unequal, but weigh honestly. Lev 19:3; Deut 24:14
16 And do not commit perjury, neither ignorantly nor willingly. Jas 5:4; Amos 8:4; Sir 4:1-4
17 The immortal God hates a perjurer, whosoever it is who has sworn.<sup>d</sup> Prov 21:23; Eccl 5:2
18 Do not steal seeds. Cursed is whosoever takes (them). Sir 21:26
19 Give the laborer his pay, do not afflict the poor.
20 Take heed of your tongue, keep your word hidden in (your) heart.
21 Neither wish to do injustice, nor therefore allow another to do injustice.

Admonition to mercy

- 22 Give to the poor man at once, and do not tell him to come tomorrow. Prov 3:27f.; Sir 4:3

Prologue

a. These opening lines correspond with the closing lines (229f.); hence there is little reason to regard them as spurious as has often been done since they are missing in some MSS.

Summary of the Decalogue

a. There is a very strong emphasis on justice in Ps-Phoc; especially cf. ll. 9, 12, 14f., 21, 22f., 29.

b. For ll. 3-6 cf. Mk 7:21f., and for the traditional combination of licentiousness and covetousness cf. also Eph 4:19; 5:3-5.

c. For the combination of these two commandments (not in this form in the OT, but traditional in Gk. ethics) cf. especially SibOr 3.593f.; Jub

7:20; Josephus, Apion 2.206; Philo, Spec. Leg. 2.235.

Exhortation to justice

a. Warnings against partiality in the administration of justice are frequent in the OT, e.g. Ex 23:1-3; Deut 1:17; 16:18-20; Lev 19:15; Sir 19:13-17; cf. Jn 7:24.

b. See the references in the previous n. For the concern for the poor cf. Ex 23:6; Prov 22:22; Sir 4:1-6.

c. It is uncertain whether the divine judgment takes place in this life or in the hereafter.

d. This may be a rendering of Ex 20:7b: "Yahweh will not leave unpunished the man who utters his name to misuse it."

- 23 You must fill your hand.<sup>a</sup> Give alms to the needy.
 24 Receive the homeless in (your) house, and lead the blind man. Isa 58:7; Job 29:15; 31:32
 25 Pity the shipwrecked, for navigation is unsure. Heb 13:2; Deut 27:18 26 Extend your hand to him who falls, and save the helpless one.
 27 Suffering is common to all; life is a wheel; prosperity is unstable.<sup>b</sup>
 28 When you have wealth, stretch out your hand to the poor. l. 23; Deut 15:11
 29 Of that which God has given you, give of it to the needy. Prov 31:20; Sir 7:32
 30 Let all of life be in common, and all things be in agreement.<sup>c</sup> Deut 15:14; TZeb 7:2
 31 [Do not eat blood; abstain from what is sacrificed to idols.]<sup>d</sup>
 32 Put on a sword, not for bloodshed but for protection.
 33 But may you not need it at all, neither outside the law nor justly.
 34 For if you kill an enemy, you stain your hand.<sup>e</sup>
 35 Keep off the field of your neighbor, and therefore do not be a trespasser. Ex 22:4f.; Deut 23:25
 36 Moderation is the best of all, and excesses are grievous.<sup>f</sup>
 37 [Lawful acquisition is useful, but unjust acquisition is bad.]
 38 Do not damage fruits that are growing on the land. Ex 22:4f.; Deut 23:25
 39 Strangers should be held in equal honor among citizens. Lev 19:33f.; 24:22
 40 For we all experience the poverty of much wandering.<sup>g</sup>
 41 And the land of the country has nothing steadfast for men.<sup>h</sup>

Love of money and its consequences

- 42 The love of money is the mother of all evil.<sup>a</sup>
 43 Gold and silver are always a lure for men.
 44 Gold, originator of evil, destroyer of life, crushing all things, 45 would that you were not a desirable calamity to mortals!<sup>b</sup>
 46 For your sake there are battles and plunderings and murders, 47 and children become the enemies of their parents, and brothers (the enemies) of their kinsmen.<sup>c</sup>

Honesty, modesty, and self-control

- 48 Do not hide a different thought in your heart while uttering another. Prov 11:13; Sir 5:9; 6:1; 49 Change not yourself according to the spot, like a polyp that clings to 27:23; 28:13
 the rock.<sup>a</sup>
 50 Be sincere<sup>b</sup> to all, speak what is from your soul.

Admonition to mercy

a. The Gk. text is very uncertain here. Alternative renderings are: "if your hand is full, give . . ." or "you must fill his hand; give . . ." or "he will fill your hand; give . . ."

b. This line expresses a very Gk. sentiment.

c. The exact meaning of this line is obscure.

d. This line is missing in all the important MSS. It is probably a Christian interpolation on the basis of Acts 15:29.

e. These two lines have an undeniably pacifistic ring about them.

f. This line is an interruption (as is the spurious l. 37) between l. 35 and l. 38. It is identical with l. 69b and strikes a note of keeping measure in all things, which often recurs in this poem, e.g. ll. 59-69, 98, etc.

g. The historical basis of the injunction to treat aliens fairly (l. 39), namely, the Israelites having been themselves aliens in Egypt (Lev 19:34; Ex 23:9), is generalized here into a common truth.

h. The text is somewhat in disorder here.

Love of money and its consequences

a. This maxim occurs in many forms in many ancient writings. The best-known instance is lTim 6:10: "The love of money is the root of all evils."

b. This kind of an address to money itself is not found in the Bible but has many parallels in Gk. literature.

c. For this (traditional) list of calamities cf. SibOr 8:24-6 and also Mk 13:12. On the motif of these lines cf. Sir 8:2; 10:8; 31:6.

Honesty, modesty, and self-control

a. Here Ps-Phoc polemicizes against a famous Gk. poet (Theognis) who exhorts man to be as adaptable as a polyp. [An inferior translation would be "octopus"; a polyp, not an octopus, changes its colors according to the environment. See P. van der Horst's commentary for further discussion. — J.H.C.]

b. Lit. "simple" (Gk. haplous); for this theme see, besides Prov 11:25 and Wis 1:1, especially TLevi 13:1 and the whole of Tlss; cf. EBar 19:2.

- 51 Whoever wrongs willfully is a bad man; but if he does so under compulsion, 52 I shall not pass sentence, for it is each man's intention that is examined.
 53 Do not pride yourself on wisdom nor on strength nor on riches.<sup>c</sup>
 54 The only God is wise and mighty and at the same time rich in blessings. Sir 1:8; Rom 16:27
 55 Do not afflict your heart<sup>d</sup> with bygone evils;
 56 for what has been done can no more be undone.
 57 Do not be rash with (your) hands, but bridle your wild anger.<sup>e</sup> Prov 15:1; Eccl 7:9; Sir 1:22
 58 For often someone who has dealt a blow has unintentionally committed a murder.<sup>f</sup> Jas 1:19

Moderation in all things

- 59 Let (your) emotions be moderate, neither great nor overwhelming.
 60 Excess, even of good, is never a boon to mortals;
 61 and a great luxuriousness draws one to immoderate desires. TJud 14-16; Sir 9:12f.
 62 Great wealth is conceited and grows to insolence. 1Tim 6:17
 63 Anger that steals over one causes destructive madness.
 64 Rage is a desire, but wrath surpasses (it).<sup>a</sup>
 65 Zeal for good things is noble, but (zeal for) bad things (is) excessive.<sup>b</sup>
 66 Daring in bad deeds is ruinous, but greatly helps a man who works at good deeds.<sup>c</sup>
 67 Love of virtue is worthy, but love of passion increases shame.<sup>d</sup>
 68 A man who is too naïve is called foolish among the citizens.
 69 Eat in moderation, and drink and tell stories in moderation.
 69b Moderation is the best of all, excesses are grievous.<sup>e</sup> Sir 31:12-31; 3Bar 4:16f.
 Rom 13:13; 16-18
 1Cor 5:11; 6:10; Phil 3:19
 Sir 19:6; 20:7f.; 23:7f.; 32:7f.

Danger of envy and other vices

- 70 Do not envy (your) friends their goods, do not fix reproach (upon them).<sup>a</sup> Tob 4:7,16; Sir 14:10
 71 The heavenly ones<sup>b</sup> also are without envy toward each other. TSim; Rom 1:29
 72 The moon does not envy the much stronger beams of the sun, Gal 5:19-21 73 nor the earth the heavenly heights though it is below, 74 nor the rivers the seas. They are always in concord.
 75 For if there were strife among the blessed ones,<sup>c</sup> heaven would not stand firm.

c. Jer 9:23: "Let the sage boast no more of his wisdom, nor the valiant of his valor, nor the rich man of his riches."

d. Lit. "liver." For this use of "liver" as the center of emotions cf. TSim 2:4, 7; 4:1; TZab 2:4; TGad 2:1.

e. Cf. Mishnah, Aboth 2:10: "Be not easily provoked."

f. Cf. Did 3:2.

Moderation in all things

a. Or: "but if it [rage] is excessive, it is wrath." Behind these lines is a piece of Stoic casuistry that distinguishes three kinds of anger. For warnings against anger see Prov 15:1; 27:4; 29:11; Sir 1:22; 10:18; 23:16; 27:30; Eph 4:31; also TDan 2-4.

b. Again a Stoic distinction.

c. Here two kinds of daring are distinguished (not demonstrably Stoic).

d. Again a Stoic distinction.

e. This line is similar to l. 36 and possibly an interpolation.

Danger of envy and other vices

a. That is: "Do not defame your neighbor because you envy him his goods."

b. Here and in l. 75 the heavenly bodies are given Gk. names that often denote gods. Since a Jew would never call these creatures gods these lines have led some scholars to conclude that our author was not a Jew (see Intro.). But Ps-Phoc does no more than borrow traditional pagan terminology to express that the heavenly bodies are personalities, a common Jewish view. No deification of the heavenly bodies is implied here. Also Philo, who explicitly denies that stars are gods (Spec. Leg. 1.13ff.), only adopts traditional philosophical terminology when in Opif. Mundi 27 he says that the stars are visible gods. (This argument is strengthened by the observation that during the period in which Ps-Phoc was composed Jews were influenced by astrological symbols and ideas; cf. TrShem.)

c. See previous n.

- 76 Practice self-restraint,<sup>d</sup> and abstain from shameful deeds.
 77 Do not imitate evil, but leave vengeance to justice.
 78 For persuasiveness is a blessing, but strife begets only strife.
 79 Trust not too quickly, before you can see exactly the end.
 80 It is proper to surpass (your) benefactors with still more (benefactions).<sup>e</sup>
 81 It is better to entertain guests with a simple meal quickly 82 than extensive festivity drawn out beyond the right time.
 83 Never be a relentless creditor to a poor man.<sup>f</sup>
 84 One should not take from a nest all the birds together, 85 but leave the mother bird behind, in order to get young from her again.<sup>g</sup>
 86 Never allow ignorant men to sit in judgment.
 87 [Do not pass a judgment before you have heard the word of both parties.]<sup>h</sup> 88 A wise man examines wisdom, and a fellow craftsman (examines) crafts.<sup>i</sup>
 89 An untrained ear cannot grasp important teaching;
 90 for those who have never learned good things do not understand.<sup>j</sup>
 91 Do not make parasitic flatterers your friends.<sup>k</sup>
 92 For many are friends of drinking and eating, 93 flattering at a time whenever they can satiate themselves,
 94 but all being discontented with little and unsatiated with much.
 95 Trust not the people; the mob is fickle;
 96 for the people and water and fire are all equally uncontrollable.<sup>l</sup>

I. 145

3Jn 11

Prov 14:15; Sir 6:7; 19:4

Ex 18:21f.; Deut 1:13

Death and afterlife

- 97 Sit not in vain at the fire, weakening your heart.<sup>a</sup>
 98 Be moderate in your grief;<sup>b</sup> for moderation is the best.
 99 Let the unburied dead receive their share of the earth.<sup>c</sup>
 100 Do not dig up the grave of the deceased, nor expose to the sun
 101 what may not be seen, lest you stir up the divine anger.<sup>d</sup>
 102 It is not good to dissolve the human frame;<sup>e</sup> 103 for we hope that the remains of the departed will soon come to the light (again)

I. 36

Jer 16:4; 22:19; 4Ezra 2:23
Tob

d. The concept of self-restraint (Gk. sōphrosyne), which is very important in Gk. ethics, seldom occurs in the LXX (e.g. 4Mac 1:31) but more frequently in later Jewish literature, e.g. TJos 4:2; 9:2; 10:2-3; Josephus, Apion 2.195.

e. This utilitarian principle of reciprocity is very hellenistic; see the note on l. 152.

f. Many Jews in the Diaspora were bankers and, in spite of the OT prohibition to ask interest from an Israelite (Ex 22:24; Lev 25:36; Deut 23:20), they lent money to one another at the regular interest of 24 percent.

g. These two lines belong to the most typically Jewish ones of this poem. The source is evidently Deut 22:6f., though Ps-Phoc probably derived it from a document also used by Philo (Hypothetica in Eusebius' Praeparatio Evangelica 8.7.9) and Josephus (Apion 2.213). Though regarded as the least weighty of all commandments in rabbinic literature, it was viewed as important; see e.g. Mishnah, Hullin 12.1.

h. This line, a well-known ancient maxim, is lacking in most of the important MSS.

i. The sense of this line is hard to determine.

j. Criticisms of the uneducated are found frequently in Sir.

k. How to discern a flatterer from a real friend was a theme frequently discussed in Gk. and Roman literature.

l. The aristocratic mentality reflected in these lines, though more Gk. than biblical, may also be seen in Philo's remarks on the Alexandrian mob (Leg. ad Gaium 67.120).

Death and afterlife

a. Though the sense of this line is not very clear, it may be a warning against excessive mourning; see the following lines.

b. Reading goosisi, "grief" (with Bernays) instead of theoisi of the MSS. The text, however, is very uncertain; hence the translation is an educated guess.

c. This was one of the unwritten laws of Gk. ethics.

d. Probably these lines must be interpreted in the light of l. 102: graves were opened in order to dissect the corpses of the deceased.

e. A reference to anatomical practice in Alexandria (see Intro.).

- 104 out of the earth;<sup>f</sup> and afterward they will become gods.<sup>a</sup> 105 For the souls remain unharmed among the deceased.
 106 For the spirit is a loan of God to mortals, and (his) image.<sup>b</sup>
 107 For we have a body out of earth, and when afterward we are resolved again into earth Gen 3:19; Eccl 12:7
 Sir 17:1; WisSol 15:8
 108 we are but dust;<sup>i</sup> and then the air has received our spirit.<sup>j</sup>
 109 When you are rich, do not be sparing; remember that you are mortal.
 110 It is impossible to take riches and money (with you) into Hades. Job 1:21; Eccl 5:15
 Ps 49:18f.; 1Tim 6:7
 Job 3:19
 111 All alike are corpses, but God rules over the souls.
 112 Hades is (our) common eternal home<sup>k</sup> and fatherland, 113 a common place for all, poor and kings. SibOr 2.322-24; 8.110-12
 114 We humans live not a long time but for a season. Job 14:1f.; Wis 2:1,4; 9:5; 15:8
 115 But (our) soul is immortal and lives ageless forever.<sup>l</sup>

The instability of life

- 116 [Nobody knows what will be after tomorrow or after an hour.
 117 Death is heedless of mortals, and the future is uncertain.]<sup>a</sup>
 118 Do not let evils dismay you nor therefore exult in success.<sup>b</sup> Sir 2.4
 119 Many times in life incredible calamity has come suddenly 120 to the confident and release from evil to the vexed.<sup>c</sup> Eccl 9:12; Sir 11:21 121 Accommodate yourself to the circumstances, do not blow against the winds.

Speech and wisdom, man's distinction

- 122 Do not become mad in your mind by reveling in boastfulness. ISam 2:3; Sir 10:7-22 123 Practice speaking the right word, which will greatly benefit all.
 124 Speech is to man a weapon sharper than iron. Ps 56:5; Heb 4:12
 125 God allotted a weapon to every creature; the capacity to fly 126 to birds, speed to horses, and strength to the lions; 127 he clothed the bulls with their self-growing horns, he gave stings to the bees
 128 as their natural means of defense, but speech to man as his protection.<sup>a</sup>

f. The idea of bodily resurrection, which is very un-Gk. (cf. Acts 17:32) and typically Jewish, was already foreshadowed in the OT (Isa 26:19; Dan 12:2) but fully developed only in post-biblical Judaism.

g. On the basis of this half line some scholars have asserted that Ps-Phoc was not a Jew but rather a pagan or a Christian. One should bear in mind, however, that the resurrected were often regarded as angels, and angels are often called "gods" in Jewish texts.

h. Here in one and the same line one finds the hellenistic idea of the soul or spirit as a loan from God (which, however, also occurs in hellenized Jewish writings, e.g. Philo, Spec. Leg. 1.295; Josephus, War 3.374; Lk 12:20) and the OT idea of God's image (Gen 1:26f.), though, again typically hellenistic Jewish, it is not man but his spiritual principle which is regarded as God's image (as in Philo, e.g. Opif. Mundi 69).

i. This motif occurs very frequently in Gk. literature, and especially in epitaphs.

j. A common Gk. motif; probably Stoic influence.

k. This expression occurs only once in the OT, Eccl 12:5, but it is very frequent in Jewish, Gk., and Lat. epitaphs.

l. A common view throughout later antiquity (though there were skeptics then too).

The instability of life

a. These two lines are missing in most important MSS. Their theme is common to the OT (Prov 3:28; Eccl 8:7; Sir 11:19; cf. Jas 4:14) and Gk. literature.

b. A common theme in Gk. literature.

c. Again a common theme in Gk. literature.

Speech and wisdom, man's distinction

a. The theme of these lines (125-28) is a well-known topic in Gk. literature since the Sophist Protagoras. Cf. from Jewish literature Philo, Somn. 1.103. Though in both l. 124 and l. 128 the Gk. word logos has been translated "speech," one should note that this word also means "reason"; both semantic aspects are present here, but there is no English word that covers both meanings.

129 [But speech of the divinely inspired wisdom is best.]<sup>b</sup>

130 Better is a wise man than a strong one.

Prov 24:5; Eccl 9:16

131 Wisdom directs the course of lands and cities and ships.<sup>c</sup>

Avoidance of wickedness and the life of self-restraint and virtue

132 It is unholy to hide a wicked man so as to prevent his being brought to trial;

133 but one must return an evildoer forcibly.

134 Those who are with the wicked often die with them.

Num 16:26

135 Do not accept from thieves a stolen, unlawful deposit.

136 Both are thieves, the one who receives as well as the one who steals.<sup>a</sup>

137 Render to all their due, and impartiality is best in every way.

138 In the beginning be sparing with all things, lest in the end you fall short.

139 Take not for yourself a mortal beast's ration of food.<sup>b</sup>

140 But if a beast of (your) enemy falls on the way, help it to rise.<sup>c</sup>

141 Never expose a wandering man and a sinner.<sup>d</sup>

142 It is better to make a gracious friend instead of an enemy.<sup>e</sup>

143 Nip the evil in the bud, and heal the wound.

144 [By a tiny spark a vast forest is set on fire.]<sup>f</sup>

145 [Keep your heart restrained and abstain from disgraceful things.]

l. 76

146 [Flee an evil report; flee lawless men.]<sup>g</sup>

147 Eat no meat that is torn by wild animals, but leave the remains 148 to the swift dogs.<sup>h</sup> Animals eat from animals.

149 Make no potions, keep away from magical books.

Acts 19:19; Did 2:2
EBar 20:1

150 Do not apply your hand violently to tender children.

151 Flee dissension and strife when war is drawing near.

152 Do no good to a bad man; it is like sowing into the sea.<sup>i</sup>

The usefulness of labor<sup>a</sup>

153 Work hard so that you can live from your own means;

Ex 20:9; Prov 28:19
2Thes 3:10

154 for every idle man lives from what his hands can steal.<sup>b</sup>

155 [A craft maintains a man, but an idle man is oppressed by hunger.]<sup>c</sup>

156 Eat not the leavings of another man's meal,

Sir 40:28-30

157 but eat without shame what you have earned yourself.<sup>d</sup>

158 And if someone has not learned a craft, he must dig with a hoe.<sup>e</sup>

Lk 16:3

b. This line, in clumsy Gk., is probably unauthentic. It is lacking in some important textual witnesses.

c. On Wisdom as helmsman see Wis 10:4.

Avoidance of wickedness . . .

a. Probably a proverb.

b. The Gk. text of this line is rather obscure. Many interpreters have asserted that the line forbids the eating of meat that is torn by animals, but that is the theme of ll. 147f.

c. No doubt deriving from Ex 23:5.

d. Again the text is obscure. A little change in the text (reading not broton, "man," but boton, "beast") might make it refer to Ex 23:4 (on your enemy's ox going astray), which is attractive in view of l. 140.

e. On the worth of friendship see Sir 6:16; 7:18.

f. This line is in only one MS. On the theme cf. Jas 3:5 ("Think how small a flame can set fire to a huge forest"); Philo, Migr. Abr. 123.

g. This clumsy interpolation occurs in only one MS.

h. This is one of the very few typically Jewish prescriptions in the poem, no doubt deriving from Ex 22:31. It was also one of the Noachian laws; see Sanhedrin 56a.

i. The principle of reciprocity, i.e. that one has always to return a benefaction (see l. 80), had as a consequence that one wanted to benefit only those people from whom one expected some return. Of hellenistic origin, this principle had penetrated into Judaism, as may be concluded from Sir 12:1-7. Jesus' polemics against this principle are reflected in Lk 6:32-5.

The usefulness of labor

a. This passage (ll. 153-74) and the following one (ll. 175-205) are the only really coherent parts of this poem.

b. Cf. Qiddushin 29a: "He who does not teach his son a craft teaches him brigandage."

c. This spurious line is in only one MS.

d. The text of this line is uncertain.

e. Digging was regarded as the hardest kind of work, mostly reserved for slaves or uneducated.

159 Life has every kind of work if you are willing to toil.
 160 If you want to sail and be a mariner, the sea is wide.
 161 And if you want to cultivate land, the fields are large.<sup>f</sup>
 162 There is no easy work without toil, (neither) for men,<sup>g</sup> nor for the blessed themselves.<sup>h</sup> 163 But labor gives great increase to virtue.
 164 The ants having left their homes, deeply hidden under the earth, 165 come in their need of food when the fields
 166 fill the threshing floors with fruits after the crops have been reaped.
 167 They themselves have a load of freshly threshed wheat
 168 or barley—and always bearer follows bearer—
 169 and from the summer harvest they supply their food for the winter, 170 without tiring. This tiny folk is much-laboring.<sup>i</sup>
 171 The bee toils, traversing the air, working excellently, 172 whether in the crevice of a hollow rock or in the reeds,
 173 or in the hollow of an ancient oak, within their nests,
 174 in swarms at their thousand-celled combs, building with wax.<sup>j</sup>

Tiss 5:3-6

Marriage and chastity<sup>a</sup>

175 Do not remain unmarried, lest you die nameless.
 176 Give nature her due, you also, beget in your turn as you were begotten.<sup>b</sup>
 177 Do not prostitute your wife,<sup>c</sup> defiling your children.
 178 For the adulterous bed brings not sons in (your) likeness.<sup>d</sup>
 179 Do not touch your stepmother, your father's second wife,<sup>e</sup> 180 but honor her as a mother, because she follows the footsteps of your mother.
 181 Do not have intercourse with the concubines of (your) father.<sup>f</sup>
 182 Do not approach the bed of (your) sister, (a bed) to turn away from.<sup>g</sup>
 183 Nor go to bed with the wives of your brothers.<sup>h</sup>
 184 Do not let a woman destroy the unborn babe in her belly, 185 nor after its birth throw it before the dogs and the vultures as a prey.<sup>i</sup>

Lev 18:8; 20:11; 1Cor 5:1

TReu 3:11-15; Jub 33:1-9

f. Agriculture is strongly recommended by both Gk. moralists and by Jewish authors.

g. This line is probably a literal quotation from an oracle of the Milesian Branchidae. The author possibly drew upon a collection of oracles as they were current in antiquity.

h. This addition to the oracle text looks like a polemic against the ancient idea of the great ease of divine action. But by "the blessed" Ps-Phoc means (as in l. 75) the heavenly bodies. The labors of sun and moon are the eclipses, as may be gathered from several Gk. and Lat. texts.

i. This whole passage (ll. 164-70) is inspired by Prov 6:6-8, though there are many classical texts where the ants are regarded as examples of industry.

j. For this somewhat top-heavy sentence the author drew upon Prov 6:8a-c, which is not in the Heb. text but only in the LXX. Though there are classical parallels here too, the sequence of ll. 164-74, which is exactly the same as Prov 6:6-8c, makes it more than probable that Ps-Phoc tried to render this LXX text.

Marriage and chastity

a. This section and the following (ll. 175-227) show several resemblances to the so-called Haus-tafeln in Col 3:18-4:1 and Eph 5:22-6:9. These passages also deal with marriage, education of children, and treatment of slaves. One is reminded of the rabbinic triad, "women, slaves, and minors."

b. Recommendations of marriage and procreation, though also found in Stoic authors, are more frequent in Jewish writings (usually based on Gen 1:28 and 2:24). See the long instructive passage Jebamoth 61a-64a.

c. This has no OT source, though Lev 19:29 forbids the prostitution of one's daughter.

d. Perhaps this line reflects the ancient belief that the likeness of children to their parents was determined solely by the man's sperm.

e. Cf. Josephus, Apion 2.200.

f. Having no exact OT counterpart, this line may also render Lev 18:8 (as does l. 179). The combination stepmother-concubine was a traditional one.

g. Cf. Philo, Spec. Leg. 3.22. Possibly Ps-Phoc had in view here the marriages between brothers and sisters in Egypt (not only in the royal family).

h. See for ll. 179-83 also Mishnah, Keritot 1.1.

i. Abortion and exposure of children were the current methods of family planning in pagan antiquity. Though the OT forbids neither practice (but see the LXX translation of Ex 21:22f.), they are frequently condemned (in this combination) in Jewish and Christian writings, e.g. Philo, Spec. Leg. 3.108-19, Josephus, Apion 2.202; SibOr 2:281f.; Did 2:2; EBar 19:5, etc.

- 186 Do not lay your hand upon your wife when she is pregnant.<sup>j</sup>
 187 Do not cut a youth's masculine procreative faculty.<sup>k</sup>
 188 Do not seek sexual union with irrational animals.<sup>l</sup>
 189 Do not outrage (your) wife by shameful ways of intercourse.<sup>m</sup>
 190 Do not transgress with unlawful sex the limits set by nature.<sup>n</sup>
 191 For even animals are not pleased by intercourse of male with male.<sup>o</sup>
 192 And let women not imitate the sexual role of men.<sup>p</sup>
 193 Do not surrender wholly to unbridled sensuality toward (your) wife.<sup>q</sup> 194 For eros is not a god,<sup>r</sup> but a passion destructive of all.
 195 Love your own wife, for what is sweeter and better 196 than whenever a wife is kindly disposed toward (her) husband and a husband toward (his) wife
 197 till old age, without strife divisively interfering?<sup>a</sup>
 198 Let no one violently have intercourse with a girl not yet betrothed.
 199 Do not bring as a wife into your home a bad and wealthy woman, 200 for you will be a slave of (your) wife because of the ruinous dowry.<sup>b</sup>
 201 We seek noble horses and strong-necked bulls,
 202 plowers of the earth, and the very best of dogs;
 203 yet we fools do not strive to marry a good (wife),
 204 nor does a woman reject a bad man when he is rich.<sup>c</sup>
 205 Do not add marriage to marriage, calamity to calamity.<sup>d</sup> 206 Nor permit yourself strife with your kinsfolk about possessions.

Ex 22:19; Lev 18:23; 20:15f.
 Deut 27:21; SibOr 5.393
 TLav 17:11

Ex 22:16

Family life

- 207 Do not be harsh with your children, but be gentle.
 208 And if a child offends against you, let the mother cut her son down to size,
 209 or else the elders of the family or the chiefs of the people.<sup>a</sup>
 210 If a child is a boy do not let locks grow on (his) head.
 211 Do not braid (his) crown nor the cross knots at the top of his head.
 212 Long hair is not fit for boys, but for voluptuous women.<sup>b</sup>
 213 Guard the youthful prime of life of a comely boy, 214 because many rage for intercourse with a man.
 215 Guard a virgin in firmly locked rooms,<sup>c</sup>
 216 and do not let her be seen before the house until her wedding day.

Col 3:21; Eph 6:4

1Cor 11:14

2Mac 3:19; 3Mac 1:18
 4Mac 18:7

j. The sense of this line is not wholly clear, but probably it is about sexual intercourse with a pregnant woman; cf. Josephus, Apion 2.202.

k. In the OT castration is not explicitly forbidden, but cf. Philo, Hypothetica in Eusebius' Praeparatio Evangelica 8.7.7, and Josephus, Apion 2.270f.; also Sanhedrin 56b; Shabbath 110b, etc.

l. Cf. Philo, Spec. Leg. 3.43–50.

m. Though several explanations of this line are possible (intercourse during menstruation, Lev 18:19; "variations"; violating; adultery), probably it forbids intercourse that is not for the sake of procreation, strongly condemned by both Jewish and (some) Gk. writers.

n. In view of the following line this line probably forbids homosexual activities (as does l. 3) by referring to the law of nature, as do Philo (Abr. 135; Spec. Leg. 2.50) and Paul (Rom 1:27) and other Jewish and Gk. authors.

o. This zoological error was a current opinion in antiquity.

p. Lesbian love is not explicitly forbidden in the OT, but see Shabbath 65a, Jebamoth 76a, and in the NT Rom 1:26.

q. Or "a woman."

r. Eros, "love; desire," was regarded as a god by the Greeks.

s. These lines are a paraphrase of some vss. from Homer (Odyssey 6.182–84) that had become almost proverbial in antiquity.

t. This was a topic in ancient literature; cf. Josephus Apion 2.200.

u. In ll. 201–4 the author paraphrases some well-known lines of Theognis, a Greek poet from the 6th cent. B.C.

v. It is hard to decide whether this line is directed against remarrying or against bigamy (polygamy). The same difficulty is found in CD 4:21 ("to take two wives during their lifetime").

Family life

a. These lines probably are a rather free and mitigating rendering of Deut 21:18–21; cf. Philo, Spec. Leg. 2.232; Josephus, Apion 2.206.

b. A man's wearing long hair was often considered as a sign of effemination; e.g. Philo, Spec. Leg. 3.37.

c. Cf. Philo, In Flaccum 89.

- 217 The beauty of children is hard for their parents to guard. Sir 7:24; 42:9-11
 218 [Love your friends till death, for faithfulness is a good thing.]<sup>d</sup>
 219 Show love to your kinsmen and holy unanimity. Sir 25:11
 220 Revere those with gray hair on the temples and yield your seat Lev 19:32; Sir 8:6; Job 32:4
 221 and all privileges to aged persons. An old man of equal descent
 222 and of the same age as your father give the same honors.<sup>e</sup>
 223 Provide your slave with the tribute he owes his stomach.<sup>f</sup>
 224 Apportion to a slave what is appointed so that he will be as you wish.<sup>g</sup>
 225 Do not brand (your) slave, thus insulting him.<sup>h</sup>
 226 Do not hurt a slave by slandering (him) to (his) master.<sup>i</sup> Prov 30:10.
 227 Accept advice also from a judicious slave.

Epilogue

- 228 Purifications are for the purity of the soul, not of the body.<sup>a</sup> Mk 7:15
 229 These are the mysteries of righteousness;<sup>b</sup> living thus Prov 16:31
 230 may you live out (your) life well to the threshold of old age.<sup>c</sup>

d. This line is an interpolation occurring in only one MS.

e. The sentiment expressed in these three lines is universal in the ancient world; cf. Philo, Spec. Leg. 2.237; Josephus, Apion 2.206.

f. Typical of the great humanity of Ps-Phoc, in ll. 223-27 he mentions only duties of masters toward slaves, not the reverse.

g. Philo, Spec. Leg. 2.90f.

h. Slaves usually were branded when they had run away or had done something wrong; but rabbis admitted branding as a preventive measure. It was felt very much as a disgrace.

i. Prov 30:10 (note, however, that Prov 30:10 is rendered in the LXX in quite another way; it looks as if Ps-Phoc knew the Heb. text, but that is extremely improbable).

Epilogue

a. The text and meaning of this line is uncertain. It is clear, however, that in our author's view the purity of the soul is of greater importance than that of the body.

b. By this term the whole content of the poem is summarized.

c. For structurally similar closing passages cf. SibOr 2:149-51; EBar 21:1; ShepHerm Similitudes 10.4.1. (I am indebted to the editor for some useful suggestions.)

THE SENTENCES OF THE SYRIAC MENANDER

(Third Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY T. BAARDA

“Menander the Sage said: . . .” These words introduce a collection of wisdom sayings written in the Syriac language. The purpose of the author in drawing up this anthology of maxims was to show his readers how they could best live in a world in which good and evil, misfortune and fortune are mingled in an unpredictable way. Passing through a world of this nature, people need to be provided with direction, and the author gives such guidance by means of various counsels. The work is often designated a florilegium, and this seems to be a fairly good name for the collection, whose maxims have apparently been taken from the current stream of wisdom tradition.

The exact number of sayings in the collection is not certain. In the present translation of the Florilegium, I have divided the text into 474 longer and shorter lines (including the opening and concluding lines) and abstained from any division into separate sayings. I did not wish to add another division to those already existing. J.-P. Audet counts 96, F. Schulthess 101, P. Riessler 103, and A. Baumstark no less than 153 sayings, preceding the closing line (474): “Menander has come to an end.”<sup>1</sup>

The nature of the book may be adequately defined as wisdom literature in the form of practical rules for human behavior. Found in it are precepts, prohibitions, paradigms, and short characterizations of human attitudes. It does not contain a philosophical definition of wisdom, but instead a very pragmatic view of it (see ll. 27–33). Wisdom is the art of living. The entire range of this practical wisdom is brought into focus: how to live with parents, children, women, brothers, and friends; how to behave while drinking or eating; how to use riches; how to deal with older people, slaves, and enemies.<sup>2</sup>

It is very difficult to find a clear order in the sequence of the various counsels. This lack of system may be due to the fact that the author drew upon various sources, each with an order of its own. There are a few thematic groups of sayings, such as those on adultery and fornication (ll. 45–51), on eating and drinking (ll. 52–66), and on servants (ll. 154–66). The short definitions at the end of the collection (ll. 402–38) create the impression of having belonged to a specific source of sayings from which the author borrowed several lines.

Besides this Florilegium there exists a short Epitome, which, too, is attributed to Menander. From the place of the Epitome in the manuscript—between extracts from Greek authors and philosophers—it is clear that the author of the manuscript considered Menander to be a Greek author, and it is obvious that he must have been thinking of the famous representative of the New Comedy in Athens (c. 300 B.C.).<sup>3</sup> There is, of course, no one who entertains the notion that this writer was the actual author of the collection, but A.

<sup>1</sup> For the publications by these authors, see “Select Bibliography.”

<sup>2</sup> For a detailed survey of the themes in SyrMen, cf. M. Küchler, Frühjüdische Weisheitstraditionen (Orbis biblicus et orientalis 26; Göttingen, 1979) pp. 307f.

<sup>3</sup> See for Menander especially H. J. Mette, “Der heutige Menander,” Lustrum 10 (1965) 5–211; 11 (1966) 139–43; 13 (1968) 535–68.

Baumstark has suggested that someone could have collected the various sayings from the plays of the renowned Menander.<sup>4</sup> Others have compared the Florilegium with the anthologies of short sentences (monostichs) which circulated under the name of Menander long after his death.<sup>5</sup> But apart from the short maxims in lines 402–38 and a few other logia in the collection, there is nothing comparable to the monostich genre. Why was the name Menander attached to our Florilegium? Was it because the collector also drew upon a source of monostichs ascribed to Menander and took the opportunity to connect this famous name with his collection of sayings?

Texts<sup>6</sup>

The Syriac text which underlies the present translation of the large Florilegium was published by J. P. N. Land in 1862. His edition was based upon the famous British Museum manuscript Or.Add.14.658 (987.18<sup>a</sup>), fols. 163v.–67v. It appears that Land's text is less exact than one could have hoped for, but the corrections afforded by W. Wright (1863), F. Schulthess (1912) and J.-P. Audet (1952) give us sufficient tools for a reconstruction of the Syriac text. The date of the manuscript is most probably the seventh century.

The Syriac text of the short Epitome has been edited by E. Sachau in his publication of profane Greek writings in Syriac translation (1870). His text was based upon the British Museum manuscript Or.Add.14.614 (773.4<sup>b</sup>), more accurately that part of the manuscript which dates from the eighth or ninth century.

The younger text of the Epitome is not based upon the older text of the Florilegium but presupposes a slightly different recension of the latter, which at least in one instance seems to have preserved a better text (cf. Florilegium ll. 470–73 and Epitome ll. 34–39).

Original language

The original language may have been Syriac. In that case we must assume that a Syriac-writing author collected these various maxims. His source could have been popular wisdom circulating in his environment, but the possibility should not be excluded that he made use of written collections in another language, such as Syriac, Aramaic, Hebrew, or Greek.

The original language may have been other than Syriac. In that case, the author of the Syriac collection functioned as a translator. If he was a translator, one cannot totally exclude the possibility that he added some material of his own to the existing collection which he rendered into Syriac. But then what is the original language of the anthology? Is it a Hebrew wisdom text? There is no decisive argument for that theory. It seems to be safer to assume, as do most scholars, that the Syriac author rendered a Greek anthology.

Date

Since the collection consists of wisdom sayings, it is very difficult to assign a specific date to it. Wisdom, as a matter of fact, has the air of timelessness. Moreover, collections of this kind are apt to be gradually enlarged during the period of their transmission, so that even a tentative fixing of date of a logion does not necessarily mean that the whole collection must be of the same time or provenance. We may make the following observations:

a. The slight differences between the large Florilegium and the short Epitome suggest that there may have been various copies of the Florilegium in, or probably before, the seventh century.

b. The Syriac of the Florilegium seems to be of a very archaic character.<sup>8</sup> This may

<sup>4</sup> A. Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (Bonn, 1922), pp. 483f.

<sup>5</sup> The most recent edition: S. Jaekel, Menandri Sententiae, Comparatio Menandri et Philistionis (Leipzig, 1964).

<sup>6</sup> An attempt to acquire the photographs from the BM has failed. For the works quoted in this paragraph, see "Select Bibliography."

<sup>7</sup> This was the thesis of W. Frankenberg, "Die Schrift des Menander (Land, Anecd. Syr. I, 64ff.) ein Produkt der jüdischen Spruchweisheit," ZAW 15 (1895) 226, 264.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. Baumstark, Geschichte, p. 487 (sermo perquam antiquus).

point to the possibility that the text had already had a long history in Syriac-speaking regions.

c. The foregoing observations do not give us sufficient evidence for a more exact date of the original Syriac text. Dating it in the fourth century would be no more than a guess.

d. But even if we could date the Syriac text, this would be of little help if the text is a translation from another language. And if the work is a genuine Syriac collection, we would still have no certainty regarding the data of the potential sources which the collector drew upon.

e. If a Greek origin is assumed, there are also no clear guides for an exact dating. It is generally taken for granted that the text originated in the Roman period.<sup>9</sup> Some scholars find a latest possible date in the fact that schools for gladiators gradually disappeared after Constantine due to successive imperial rules.<sup>10</sup> This would imply that the advice given in lines 34–44 cannot be dated after c. 400.<sup>11</sup> An earliest possible date is found in the laws of Hadrian and Antonine with respect to the treatment of slaves: The master was not permitted to kill his slave. This would imply that line 159 ought to be dated after c. 150.<sup>12</sup>

From these data one can conclude that the collection is most probably a product of the third century.<sup>13</sup> This may seem a reasonable conclusion, but it presupposes not only that the implications based upon the lines mentioned are valid but also that these lines are original.

Provenance

There is no indication which might give us a clue as to the provenance of the Florilegium. Therefore it is not surprising that most scholars have abstained from any discussion about its place of origin. J.-P. Audet is the only one who dares to put forward a thesis about the country of the author, whose mention of "water" in line 3 and a supposed mistranslation in line 365 are sufficient for Audet to conclude that our author is an Egyptian.<sup>14</sup> His arguments are not persuasive; nevertheless, it is possible that our document comes from Egypt. But it seems safer to conclude that there is too little evidence to endorse a specific provenance.

Theological importance

Because we do not know exactly when, where, and by whom the work was written, its theological importance is diminished to a certain extent. Moreover, the fact that it is a book of wisdom sayings makes it hardly possible to systematize the author's own convictions. For example, it is very difficult to discover a clear concept of God in the various sayings:

a. God is the Creator: He made man (361), and he is also the ultimate cause of everything that comes into existence (7).

b. God determines the space of life for everyone (391–92, cf. 449f.), and he also mingles for all both bad and good things (393). Man, however, should not complain against God for the bad things which life brings with it (453f.). Only the fear of God is able to liberate man from the evil (394–95), and at the end of life God has provided Sheol as a place of rest for men after their hard labors (470f.).

c. God is to be praised (8) and feared (9, 123, 394). He hates the adulterer (47f.), the bad servant (161), the evil man (168), impurity and prodigality (352). The sinner who offends his parents can expect only God's punishment (22–23). The fear of God frees one from evil (394–95).

d. God shall not cast down forever or humiliate eternally (116f.); he remains the God to whom one can pray (39, 202) and to whom one may call upon in times of distress (124).

<sup>9</sup> Cf. Frankenberg, ZAW 15 (1895) 270.

<sup>10</sup> Cf. ibid., p. 270; J.-P. Audet, "La sagesse de Ménandre l'Égyptien," RB 59 (1952) 77.

<sup>11</sup> Audet, RB 59 (1952) 78.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid., p. 77.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid., p. 78; Küchler, Weisheitstraditionen, p. 316.

<sup>14</sup> Audet, RB 59 (1952) 77; Küchler, Weisheitstraditionen, p. 316. (Küchler rejects Audet's argument based on the mention of "water".)

He will listen to prayers (125); he will take us by the hand and raise us after our fall (108).

From these data one may feel tempted to say that the author is a monotheist, which would fit in with the theory of a Jewish origin of the book (although in my opinion most of these utterances would fit in equally well with the assumption of a Gk. writer). At times, our author speaks of God in a rather impersonal way, as for example when he is presented as determining the fate of men's lives; at other times, however, the reference is more personal, as for example when he appears to be a God who listens to the prayers of men.

There is one great problem. In lines 263f. there is a clear indication of polytheism, which seems to contradict the thesis of a Jewish origin. Is this a later insertion?<sup>15</sup> Is it a mistranslation on the part of the Syriac translator?<sup>16</sup> Or is the author, himself a monotheist, describing the practices of a pagan-cult priest?<sup>17</sup> If the author was a Jew, could he then write about "gods" as a result of a heterodox background?<sup>18</sup> Or did he merely wish to give to his work the air of a pagan document?<sup>19</sup>

These questions cannot now be answered. As long as the exact place, date, and provenance of the work are unknown, it is not possible to say anything very significant about the theological position of the author and his writing.

Relation to canonical books

In a eulogy on silence (311–13)—"There exists nothing better than silence. Being silent is at all times a virtue. Even if a fool is silent, he is counted wise"—we find a striking similarity to Proverbs 17:28: "If a fool can hold his tongue, even he can pass for wise" (cf. also Sir 20:5). This is one of the agreements between Syriac Menander and the Old Testament wisdom literature that made Frankenberg conclude that the Florilegium was an early Hebrew wisdom book, breathing the same spirit as Proverbs and Sirach. This conclusion is not sufficiently warranted, but the references to canonical and apocryphal wisdom literature which he offers (several of which are noted in the margin of the translation) are a necessary addition to the one-sidedness of scholars such as Land and Baumstark, who had an eye only for the "Greek" atmosphere of Syriac Menander. In fact, they so focused upon the Greek world that they did not even mention Proverbs in this connection; they merely referred to the monostichs and plays of Menander, which do not offer a very good parallel to the line in question.

It should be kept in mind that a sentence such as that found in line 313 could be a later addition to the two foregoing lines. Such could have been inserted by a translator or a copyist; certainly a Christian who knew his Bible could have edited and expanded this document.

Relation to apocryphal books

A Jewish provenance of the maxims was suggested partly because of several striking parallels between Syriac Menander and Sirach. A very close resemblance is found between the concluding lines (458–73) and Sirach 38:16–23 (cf. 22:11). In the margin of the translation many other references to Sirach are found, which might seem to support a relationship to Jewish wisdom literature.

One should, however, be aware that there is a complication involved here: Jewish wisdom is closely connected with oriental and Greek wisdom literature in general. For example, we read in Sirach 8:7, "Do not gloat over a man's death; remember that we all must die [or 'be gathered']". A similar maxim is also found in our text, lines 126f.: "Do not rejoice over a dead man, over one who dies, because all men will go to the eternal house, they are mortal." But the same thought is expressed in a saying ascribed to Menander: "Because

<sup>15</sup> E. Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi (Leipzig, 1909*), vol. 2, p. 622.

<sup>16</sup> P. Riessler, Altjüdisches Schrifttum ausserhalb der Bibel (Heidelberg, 1928 [repr. 1966]), p. 1329.

<sup>17</sup> Frankenberg, ZAW 15 (1895) 265.

<sup>18</sup> See for example the co-existence of monotheism and polytheism in the Jewish community at Elephantine. [Also see the extant fragments of Art (see the contribution herein), who claimed that Egyptian culture, including polytheism and idolatry, was defined by Abraham, Joseph, and Moses. —J.H.C.]

<sup>19</sup> Riessler, Altjüdisches Schrifttum, p. 1329.

you are mortal, do not make mirth over one who is dead.”<sup>20</sup> Is this Jewish wisdom or Greek wisdom? In addition, we may refer to the legend of Ahiqar as well: “Son, rejoice not in the death of your enemies, for death impends for you as well” (Arm. B 78; cf. Syr. 60: “My son, rejoice not over the enemy when he dies”).<sup>21</sup> Is it, therefore, oriental wisdom? It is clear that mere parallels cannot decide the question as to whether the Florilegium has a Jewish origin, since Jewish wisdom arose from the fruitful soil of Mediterranean and oriental wisdom traditions in general.

Relation to the pseudepigraphical literature

The reference to Ahiqar brings forward another point. One may say that the legend of Ahiqar is a good specimen of oriental wisdom literature, but the fact that fragments of an Aramaic book of Ahiqar were found in Elephantine make it sufficiently clear that this wisdom book had found a place in the library of a heterodox Jewish community at a very early date (c. 400 B.C.). In the present translation a few references are drawn to the book of Ahiqar, but here I should like to point out one quite interesting parallel between the sixth maxim of the book's Syriac version and Syriac Menander 246f.: “My son, commit not adultery with your neighbor's wife, lest others should commit adultery with your wife” (Ah Syr.)<sup>22</sup> and “Just as you do not wish your wife to commit adultery with another, likewise also do not wish to commit adultery with your neighbor's wife” (Syr Men). Does this parallel application of the negative golden rule to adultery prove that the maxim is a Jewish counsel? Or does it merely furnish evidence that it is a specimen of oriental wisdom in general?

Another writing to be mentioned here is Pseudo-Phocylides, a hellenistic Jewish wisdom poem.<sup>23</sup> This document contains some interesting parallels to sayings found in Syriac Menander (see the margin of the translation). One of them is found in Pseudo-Phocylides 109f.: “When you are rich, do not be sparing; remember that you are mortal. It is impossible to take riches and money (with you) into Hades,”<sup>24</sup> which can be compared with Syriac Menander 368–73: “If you have goods, if you have possessions, live on your possessions as long as you are alive . . . remember . . . one (can)not use (his) goods in Sheol . . .” Similar thoughts are found not only in the Old Testament (cf. Job 1:21; Eccl 5:17–19) but also in Greek and Latin writings.<sup>25</sup>

It is clear that the agreements between either Ahiqar or Pseudo-Phocylides on the one hand and the Syriac Menander on the other do not prove that the latter work is of Jewish provenance. Our document belongs to the world of wisdom of which Ahiqar and Pseudo-Phocylides are part, and therefore it may have been a writing of a Jewish author.

A rabbinic parallel?

“Everything that is hateful to you, you should not wish to do that to your neighbor” (250f.); with these words the author of the Florilegium presents a peculiar form of the negative golden rule. The idea expressed by this maxim is found in many cultures and among many peoples, but the specific form of the saying seems to point in the direction of Jewish tradition. Land's only reference is to a parallel in the Menandric monostich “Let us not practise the things that we find fault with”<sup>26</sup>; he fails to mention even Tobit 4:15 (“Do to no one what you would not want done to you”), which is to my knowledge the closest parallel in Greek (the maxim of Orion of Thebes “what you would hate to have your equals cause to happen to you, do not do to others” is a Christian paraphrase of Tob 4:15). A

<sup>20</sup> Jaekel, Menandri Sententiae, p. 52.

<sup>21</sup> Cf. F. C. Conybeare, J. R. Harris, and A. S. Lewis, The Story of Ahiqar (Cambridge, England, 1913<sup>2</sup>), pp. 64, 108. [Also see the contribution by J. M. Lindenberger herein. —J.H.C.]

<sup>22</sup> Ibid., p. 103.

<sup>23</sup> Cf. P. W. van der Horst, The Sentences of Pseudo-Phocylides (SVTP 4; Leiden, 1978) 94v. [Also see his contribution herein. —J.H.C.] close parallel to the saying in Syriac Menander is the word ascribed to Hillel in the Babylonian Talmud, Shabbat 31a: "what is hateful to you, you shall not do to your neighbour" (cf. TargJerI on Lev 19:18).<sup>27</sup> Is this, as some maintain, a clear indication of a Jewish origin of the Florilegium? We should keep in mind that this "Jewish" form of the sentence was known to Syrian and Persian Christians of the fourth century, since it appears in Liber Graduum and Aphrahat. It may also have been adopted as Gospel text in the Diatessaron of Tatian at a very early stage of Syrian church history.<sup>28</sup>

<sup>24</sup> P. W. van der Horst, translation published herein.

<sup>25</sup> P. W. van der Horst, Sentences, pp. 192f.

<sup>26</sup> J. P. N. Land, Anecdota Syriaca, vol. 1, p. 201; cf. Jaekel, Menandri Sententiae, p. 33.

We are confronted, consequently, with another question: Is the saying in question Jewish or Christian? We have a notice regarding the Roman Emperor Alexander Severus (related by the biographer Lampridius) which tells us that he was fond of saying quod tibi non vis, alteri ne feceris ("that which you do not wish for yourself, do not do to another"), a maxim he had learned from some Jews or Christians and which he loved so much that he ordered that it be prescribed as a rule for the palace and for the public buildings.<sup>29</sup> Is it a Jewish or a Christian maxim? It is difficult to decide that question, both in the case of the Emperor and in the case of Syriac Menander. Does the occurrence of the maxim imply that the author of our writing was a Jew? Or was he a pagan, and was the saying added by the translator or by a copyist, who may have been a Christian? Or could not a pagan author have incorporated the saying in his writing, since a pagan writer could well have borrowed from Jewish or Christian traditions, as did Emperor Alexander Severus?

Menandric influence?

In the foregoing observations on apocryphal parallels a reference was made to a monostich ascribed to Menander. As the marginal annotations of the translation demonstrate, however, there are more parallels within the "Menandric" corpus. "No one who is righteous will easily become rich"<sup>30</sup> is a good example of these parallels, for it appears to be very similar to the maxim "Radiant and comely are riches, but the good man hardly acquires them" (425f.). Line 65, "Blessed is the man who has mastered his stomach and his lust," reminds us of the monostich "It is a good thing to master one's stomach and lust."<sup>31</sup> A paraphrase of the "Menandric" maxim "Honour your father, respect her who gave birth (to you)"<sup>32</sup> is found in lines 94–98 of Syriac Menander. The thoughts expressed in lines 377–81 are almost a convincing elaboration of the adage "If you exert yourself when you are young, you will enjoy a flourishing old age."<sup>33</sup> These examples will suffice to show that there are several close links between the text of Syriac Menander and the collections of monostichs that circulated under Menander's name in the Greek world. One ought, therefore, not to exclude the possibility that the collector of our text—Jewish or not—may have used such anthologies, and that he even took the name attached to them to promote his own collection of wisdom sayings.

A Jewish pseudepigraphon?

In spite of the several demonstrable agreements with the "Menandric" tradition, there is a strong consensus among scholars (apart from Land and Baumstark) that our text has nothing to do with Menander. Since the publication of Frankenberg's thesis, the Jewish parallels can no longer be left out of consideration; but his far-reaching conclusions (that the text was originally a Jewish wisdom book, written in Heb.) were not such that they could really convince all scholars. Audet posited what may be termed a kind of synthesis of the earlier theses that argued for respectively a Greek or a Jewish origin when he stated that the Florilegium was a product of an author from the so-called God-fearing circles.<sup>34</sup> Of

<sup>27</sup> Cf. H. Freedman, J. Epstein (eds.), Shabbath (London, Jerusalem, New York, 1972) vol. 1, ad loc.; M. Ginzburger, Pseudo-Jonathan (Berlin, 1903) p. 206.

<sup>28</sup> Cf. R. H. Connolly, "A Negative Form of the Golden Rule in the Diatessaron?" JTS 35 (1934) 351–57.

<sup>29</sup> Cf. G. Resch, Das Aposteldekret nach seiner ausserkanonischen Textgestalt (Berlin, 1905) p. 134.

<sup>30</sup> Jaekel, Menandri Sententiae, p. xvi; cf. Audet, RB 59 (1952) 78; and Küchler, Weisheitstraditionen, pp. 309f.

<sup>31</sup> Jaekel, Menandri Sententiae, p. 57.

<sup>32</sup> Ibid., p. 72 (cf. p. 130).

<sup>33</sup> Ibid., p. 64.

<sup>34</sup> Audet, RB 59 (1952) 80f.

course, one could just as easily defend the thesis that the work was authored by a cultured pagan writer who, in drawing up this collection of wisdom sayings, incorporated additional material in it from the oriental wisdom traditions, including Jewish ones, with which he was familiar. It is very difficult to decide the matter. Still, it has become accepted practice to class the work under the Jewish Pseudepigrapha, simply because there is no place elsewhere for it. F. Schulthess, who was very resolute in his rejection of a Jewish origin, published his contribution on Syriac Menander in an Old Testament periodical,<sup>35</sup> and O. Stählin, who is very skeptical about the suggestion that it is a Jewish book, deals with our Florilegium in the section dealing with Jewish pseudepigraphic literature<sup>36</sup> of a large historical work on Greek literature. Syriac Menander should be included among the Pseudepigrapha until there is decisive proof that it ought to be dealt with under another heading.

English translation

The following translation of both the Epitome and the Florilegium is the first attempt to provide an English version of these texts. Since it is the product of a Dutch reader of the Syriac text, it is subject to those failings which might stimulate others to a retranslation which exploits all the possibilities of the English language.

In the margin the reader will find a number of references to other wisdom literature: Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Sirach, Wisdom, Tobit, Ahiqar, the maxims of Pseudo-Phocylides, and the monostichs of Menander (MenM; the numbering is that of Jaekel).

I have abandoned any attempt to give a new system of numbering to the various sayings. The only numbering used is that which divides the Syriac text into lines. For convenience, however, I have also added to the text the numbers which Baumstark (B), Riessler (R), Schulthess (S), and Audet (A) have used in their translations to distinguish the separate sentences of the Florilegium. Similarly, I have also divided the Epitome into lines, except that here I have added Sachau's numbering of the various sayings. In the margin of the Epitome I have made references to the parallel sayings in the Florilegium. In the notes I refer to Land's translation.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

THE TEXT

Land, J. P. N. Anecdota Syriaca I. Leiden, 1862; (Syr.), 64:21–73:18. (Cf. also the corrections by W. Wright in Journal of Sacred Literature 4th series, 3 [1863] 115–30; and by J. P. N. Land, Anecdota Syriaca II. Leiden, 1868; pp. 25f.)

Sachau, E. Inedita Syriaca, Eine Sammlung syrischer Übersetzungen von Schriften griechischer Profanliteratur. Vienna, 1870; (Syr.), 80:1–81:10. (Cf. J. P. N. Land, Anecdota Syriaca II, pp. 20f.)

TRANSLATIONS

Audet, J.-P. "La sagesse de Ménandre l'Égyptien," RB 59 (1952) 55–81. (This French rendering is a version based upon a comparison of the text of Land with the photographs of the MS; in some cases this version equals that of Schulthess, or even improves it, but in other cases, Audet loses to Schulthess.)

Baumstark, A. "Lucubrationes Syro-Graecae," Jahrbücher für klassische Philologie. Supplement-Band 21; Leipzig, 1894; pp. 473–90. (This Lat. version of the text is not a real improvement of the first translation.)

<sup>35</sup> F. Schulthess, "Die Sprüche des Menanders," ZAW 32 (1912) 199–224.

<sup>36</sup> W. Schmid and O. Stählin, Geschichte der griechischen Literatur (Munich, 1920<sup>6</sup>) vol. 2.1, pp. 535–656 (cf. especially pp. 608–24).

- Frankenberg, W. "Die Schrift des Menander (Land, Anecd. Syr. I, 64ff.) ein Produkt der jüdischen Spruchweisheit," ZAW 15 (1895) 226–77. (Frankenberg presents his readers with a paraphrasis of the text in German, which also contains several more literal translations of the maxims.)
- Land, J. P. N. Anecdota Syriaca I. Leiden, 1862; pp. 156–64 (emendations and additions, Anecdota Syriaca II, pp. 17–19). (Land's Lat. translation has the normal weaknesses of a first translation.)
- Riessler, P. Altjüdisches Schrifttum ausserhalb der Bibel. Heidelberg, 1928 (repr. 1966); pp. 1047–57, 1328f. (Riessler's version is apparently based on the [text and] translation of Land; the neglect of Schulthess' version by Riessler diminishes the value of his German rendering of the sentences.)
- Schulthess, F. "Die Sprüche des Menanders," ZAW 32 (1912) 199–224. (This first complete German version was made on the basis of a fresh comparison of [photographs of] the MS text.)

GENERAL WORKS

- Baumstark, A. Geschichte der syrischen Literatur. Bonn, 1922; especially pp. 169f.
- Krauss, S. "Menander I," JE, vol. 8, pp. 473f.
- Küchler, M. Frühjüdische Weisheitstraditionen. Orbis biblicus et orientalis 26; Göttingen, 1979; pp. 303–18.
- Schmid, J. "Menandros, Sprüche des M.," LTK<sup>2</sup>, vol. 7, col. 266.
- Schmid, W., and Stählin, O. Geschichte der griechischen Literatur. Munich, 1920; vol. 2, pp. 41f., 46, 623.
- Schürer, E. Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi. Leipzig, 1909<sup>4</sup>; vol. 2, pp. 622–24.

THE SENTENCES OF THE SYRIAC MENANDER

I

The Epitome of the Sentences of the Syriac 'Menander'<sup>a</sup>

- 1 Menander, the Sage: (M. 1)
- (1) 2 Before everything, fear God, (M. 8-9)
3 and honor the one that is older than you, (M. 13)
4 for thus you shall be honored by God. (M. 14)
- (2) 5 Flee from everything that is hateful. (cf. M. 15-16)
- (3) 6 There is no one who follows his stomach or his lust, (M. 63)
7 who immediately shall not be dishonored and despised. (M. 64)
- (4) 8 Blessed is the man who has mastered his stomach and his lust. (M. 65)
- (5) 9 The main source<sup>b</sup> of all good things is the fear of God: (M. 394, cf. 123)
10 it delivers us from all evil things, (M. 395)
11 and in your distresses you will call upon him, (M. 124)
12 and he will listen to your voice. (M. 125)
- (6) 13 The affairs of men, however, will not last, (M. 397)
14 since their life is until the house of death. (M. 398)
- (7) 15 Comely is youth, (M. 399)
16 but it is with men only for a short time, (M. 400)
17 and (then) old age makes it fade away. (M. 401)
- (8) 18 Pleasant are life, goods, and children, (M. 402)
19 but more pleasant than them is a good name. (M. 403)
- (9) 20 Excellent is joy (M. 404)
21 when quarrel and violence are far from it. (M. 405)
- (10) 22 Good is friendship (M. 406)
23 which continues to the house of death. (M. 407)
- (11) 24 Lovely is wisdom (M. 408)
25 when it is not puffed up. (M. 409)
- (12) 26 Excellent is faithfulness (M. 410)
27 when it is coupled with sound judgment. (M. 411)
- (13) 28 Insipidity leads the mind astray. (M. 419)
- (14) 29 Agitation makes (one) lose (his) senses. (M. 420)
- (15) 30 An evil heart causes griefs and sighing. (M. 421)

I (The Epitome)

a. For the sentences of the Epitome, compare the parallel lines of the large Florilegium (II), which are indicated in the right margin. The numbers in italics on the left side are adopted from the edition of E. Sachau, who made a division of the text into eighteen maxims.

b. The MS reads: "the chief number," which can easily be corrected into "the main source"; cf. the parallel line in the Florilegium.

- (16) 31 Jealousy is the cause of evil and strife. (M. 422)
- (17) 32 The belly (can be) disgraceful. (M. 423)
33 The tongue brings (one) to misery. (M. 424)
- (18) 34 I have watched, (M. -)
35 but the dwelling place of men is Sheol, (M. -)
36 and this is the place of rest (M. 470)
37 which God determines for men, (M. 471)
38 that they may rest there from the evil things (M. 472)
39 which they saw in their life. (M. 473)

II

The Sentences of the Syriac Menander

(R 1)

1 Menander the Sage said:

(R 2; B-S-A 1)

2 Prior to the words<sup>a</sup> of man are all his activities:
3 water and<sup>b</sup> seed, plants and children. (Cf. Sir 39:26f.)

(R 3)

4 It is good to plant plants
5 and it is comely to beget children,
6 praiseworthy and good is the seed,
7 but he through whom it comes to pass,<sup>c</sup>
8 he is to be praised before everything.<sup>d</sup>

(R 4; B-S-A 2)

(L.65) 9 Fear God,<sup>e</sup>

10 and honor (your) father and mother.

11 Do not laugh at old age,
12 for that is where you shall arrive and remain.

(R 5; B-S 3)

13 Honor him who is older than you,
14 (and) God will raise you to honor and dignity.<sup>f</sup>

(R 6; B-S 4; A 3)

15 You shall do no murder,
16 and your hands shall not do what is hateful,
17 for the sword lies in the midst<sup>g</sup>:

(B 5)

18 there is no one who cruelly kills
19 (who) will not himself be killed immediately.

1Pet 2:17
Prov 24:21(LXX)
Sir 1:14, 16;
3:3f.; Ex 20:12
Deut 5:16
MenM 322.674
Ps-Phoc 8

Sir 8:6

Lev 19:32
Ps-Phoc 220-22
Ah<sup>4</sup>rm. (80)<sup>B</sup>

Ex 20:13; Deut
5:17

Gen 9:6; Mt
26:52
Rev 13:10

II (The Sentences . . .)

a. B renders ll. 1f. differently: "Menander the Sage said in the beginning of his words: Of man are the activities . . ."

b. LF-R unjustly rejects the words "water and . . ."

c. S: "but he who is successful" (less probable).

d. S-A read in accordance with the Epitome:

" . . . praised. Before everything, fear God" (ll. 8f.).

e. Cf. Epitome l. 2.

f. Cf. Epitome ll. 3f. (in 4: "for thus you shall be honored by God").

g. I.e. "the sword will be a hindrance" (S), or "the sword is impartial" (R).

(R 7; B 6; S 5; A 4)

- 20 Listen every day to the words of your father and mother, 21 and seek not to offend and dishonor them;
 22 for the son who dishonors and offends his father and mother,
 23 God ponders his death and his misfortune.
 (R 8; B 7; S 6; A 5)
 24 Honor your father in the proper way,
 25 do not despise your friends,
 26 and do not dishonor those who honor you.

Prov 6:20
 Sir 3:1ff.

Prov 20:20; 30:17
 Sir 3:16
 Ah<sup>Ar</sup> (26)

cf. 211—MenM
 674<sup>a</sup>
 cf. 213—MenM
 11.390
 cf. 214—

(R 9; B 8a; S 7; A 6)

- 27 If your son grows out of his boyhood
 28 (as one who is) humble and wise,
 29 teach him the "book of wisdom,"<sup>h</sup>
 30 for the book is good to learn (wisdom) from.

34; Prov 10:1;
 29:3

(B 9)

- 31 (Wisdom) is bright eyes and an excellent tongue.
 32 Eyes that are bright will not be blinded,
 33 and a tongue that speaks wisely will not begin to stammer.

MenM 586.180

Ecc1 8:1

(B 8b)

- 34 And if your son grows out of his boyhood 35 (as one who is) brutish, crude,<sup>i</sup> and insolent, 36 (one who is) thievish, deceitful, and provocative,<sup>j</sup>
 37 teach him the profession of gladiator
 38 and put into his hand a sword and a dagger, 39 and pray for him,

27; Prov 10:1

Sir 16:3

- 40 that he shall die, shall be killed, immediately, 41 lest—by his living on—
 42 you should grow old through his frauds and expenses, 43 while he does not produce anything good for you.

cf. Prov 29:3

(B 10; R 10)

- 44 Every bad son should die and not live on.

Deut 21:18–21

(B-R 11; S 8; A 7)

- 45 And as for an adulterous woman, her feet are not firm, 46 for she deceives her good husband.

Prov 7:11

(B 12)

- 47 And a man who does not correctly deal with his wife, 48 even God hates him.

Col 3:19
 Ah<sup>Gk</sup> (26:4)

(B 13; R 12; S 9; A 8)

- 49 Keep your son away from fornication,
 50 and your servant from the cabaret,
 51 since these make (one) acquainted with the habit of stealing.

Prov 29:3; Sir
 9:6

(B 14; R 13; S 10; A 9)

- 52 Drink wine moderately 53 and do not boast of it;
 54 for wine is, indeed, mild and sweet,
 55 but every man that quarrels and boasts of it
 56 will immediately be dishonored and despised.

Sir 31(34):27
 Tob 4:15
 Sir 31(34):25

Sir 31(34):26

Sir 31(34):29

(B 15; S 11)

- 57 But when your thirst is quenched,<sup>k</sup> depart,

h. Or "philosophy" (R), "arts and philosophy" (A).

i. MS: "athlete" (?); cf. "nequam" (L-B), "schlicht" (S), "execrable" (A).

j. So S: "herausfordernd" (but L-B-R: "contemptible").

k. Lit. "But when your stomach is full."

*(B 16; A 10)58 but not (so that what) is left (is) what dogs eat, the vomit<sup>l</sup> of the stomach.(B 17; S 12)*

59 There are two hateful things,

60 and in both of them the stomach is involved:

61 starvation, (the stomach) is swollen,<sup>m</sup>62 satiety, (the stomach) is at the bursting point.<sup>n</sup>(B 18; S 13)(L.66) 63 And there is no one who follows his lust and his stomach

Sir 18:30f.

64 who will not immediately be dishonored and despised.

*(B 19; S 14)*65 Blessed is the man who has mastered his stomach and his lust,<sup>o</sup>

MenM 425

66 he is one on whom one can rely at all times.

(B 20; S 15; A 11)

67 Hateful is the custom of lying down at an improper time:

Prov 6:9–11;
10:5; 20:13;
24:33f.(B 21)

68 sleep carries (us) into Sheol,

MenM 780 var

69 dreams unite (us) with the dead.

MenM 784

(B 22; S 16; R 14; A 12)

70 Hateful is laziness;

Prov 10:40;
12:27; 13:4;
19:15; 20:13

71 (it is) hungry and thirsty, naked and lamenting.

72 How comely and praiseworthy is industry;

Prov 10:4;
12:27; 13:4;
20:13

73 at all times (it is) a filled stomach and a bright face.

74 Even if one does not have success,

75 he will not be blamed.

(B 23; S 17; R 15; A 13)

176. Prov 20:3

76 Do not be quarrelsome;

77 do not stretch out your hand against one older than you.

(B 24)

78 For the companions of Homer asked him,

79 "Whosoever will smite an old man,

80 what will happen to him?"

81 He said to them, "His eyes will be blinded."

82 "And whosoever will beat his mother,

Prov 19:26

83 what will happen to him?"

84 He said to them, "The earth shall not receive him,

85 for she is the mother of all men."

MenM 511

86 And again they asked him,

87 "And whosoever will smite his father,

Prov 19:26

88 what will happen to him?"

89 Homer said to his companions,

90 "This has not happened,

91 and so it cannot be taken into account;

Cicero,
ProRoscio, 25
Herodotus I. 137

92 for a son who beats his father does not exist,

93 unless his mother bore him after committing adultery with a foreigner."

(B 25; S 18; R 16; A 14)

94 More than everything love your father,

Sir 7:27; Prov
23:22
Aly<sup>Am</sup> (20)<sup>B</sup>
MenM 674a

95 you shall fear him and honor him.

1. Lit. "the why" (I have maintained the MS reading).

m. The text is obscure; my conjecture: "if it

n. The text is obscure; my conjecture: "it is filled, it is breaking."

o. For ll. 63–65, cf. Epitome ll. 6–8 (log. 3f.).

(B 26)

96 And do not despise, do not dishonor your mother,
 97 for ten months long she bore you in her womb,
 98 and when she gave birth to you she was at the point of death.

Sir 7:27
 MenM 674
 Ah<sup>Arm.</sup> (20)<sup>B</sup>
 Prov 23:22,25
 WisSol 7:2

(B 27; S 19)

99 Do not laugh at the words of the aged,
 100 nor curl your lips (in scorn) at the aged;
 101 and do not despise the poor.<sup>P</sup>

MenM 376,
 376 var

Sir 7:11

(B 28)

102 For old age has its infirmities,<sup>q</sup>
 103 and man (has to) accept them,
 104 but when he descends into the grave, he will find rest.<sup>r</sup>

Ecc 12:1-7
 MenM 293
 MenM 802
 470

(B 29; A 15)

105 For there was a man who fell very badly,
 106 and no one believed with respect to him
 107 that he would stand on his feet (again);
 108 but at some moment God took him by the hand and raised him,
 109 and brought him (back) to great honor.

Sir 7:11

Sir 7:11; Prov
 24:16
 Sir 11:21

110 For neither riches are everlasting,
 111 nor at all times is there poverty,
 112 for subject to change are all things.

Ps-Phoc 27

Sir 11:14

Ps-Phoc 27<sup>B</sup> MenAgricola
 (Stob.)

113 For I have seen

114 someone who stood up to kill, and he was killed;
 115 and someone they seized that he should die, and he found life.

18f.

116 For as for God, he who was cast down<sup>s</sup> by him will not be so forever, 117 nor will he who was humiliated<sup>t</sup> by him be so at all times.

(B 30; S 20; R 17; A 16)

118 And if you want to take a wife,
 (L.67) 119 make first inquiries about her tongue,
 120 and take her (only) then.

Sir 25:13-26:9

(B 31)

121 For a talkative woman is a hell;
 122 and . . . a bad man is a deadly plague.<sup>u</sup>

336-39; Sir
 25:20 [Heb.]

(B 32; S 21; R 18; A 17)

123 You shall fear God at all times,
 124 so that you may call upon him in your distress,
 125 and he will listen to your voice.<sup>v</sup>

9

Sir 2:10f.

Prov 15:29

(B 33; S 22; R 19; A 18)

126 Do not rejoice over a dead man, over one who dies, 127 because all men will go to the eternal house, they are mortal.

Ah<sup>Syr.</sup> (60)
 Sir 8:7; MenM
 346

(B 34)

128 If you have an enemy,
 129 do not pray with respect to him that he may die
 130 —for when he is dead he is delivered from his misfortunes—

Ecc 12:5
 Ah<sup>Arm.</sup> (78)<sup>B</sup>
 Ah<sup>Gk.</sup> (26:3)

p. S places l. 101 after 102-4; he combines 99f. with 102-4, 101 with 105ff.

q. Lit. "for with old age do infirmities come."

r. I follow the conjecture of S; see l. 470.

s. The text has the active voice: "he whom he cast down."

t. The text: "he whom he humiliated"; A guesses "raised."

u. Lit. "death"; for the parallel Sheol = death, cf. Prov 7:27.

v. Cf. Epitome II. 9-12 (log. 5).

131 but pray with respect to him that he may become poor, 132 (then) he will live on and (perhaps may) cease from his evil practices.<sup>w</sup>

(B 35; S 23; R 20; A 19)

133 Do not intervene between brothers, 134 and do not seek to pronounce a judgment between them.
135 If brothers fight (with each other),
136 what business is it of yours?

Prov 26:17
Sir 7:6

137 For they are brothers, and they will be reconciled;
138 but as for you, they despise you in their minds.

(B 36; S 24; R 21; A 20)

139 Do not pass through a market street in which there is a quarrel, 140 lest, if you pass through, you badly suffer,
141 and, if you part them, you be wounded and your garments be rent, 142 and, if you stand there and watch, you be summoned to court to give evidence.

Prov 26:17; Sir
11:9; Prov 20:3
MenM 332;
Ps-Phoc 151
Ah<sup>59r</sup> (55)

(B 37)

143 Hate being wounded;
144 refuse to bring out false witness.

Ex 20:16; Deut
5:20
Ps-Phoc 12

(B 38; S 25; R 22; A 21)

145 Be fond of possessions, but hate stealing:
146 for possessions are "life,"
147 but stealing is at all times "death."

Prov 10:16

(B 39; S 26; R 23; A 21-22)

148 (If you meet)<sup>x</sup> a bad man in the market street,
149 do not sit down immediately,
150 lest, if you give ear to that bad man,
151 everyone who sees you will call you the companion of the bad man;
152 and lest, if you do not heed him or adhere to his opinion, 153 he reviles you and molests you in his wickedness.

cf. Sir 13:1;
22:13
MenM 25; 423

Ah<sup>59r</sup> (12)

(B 40; S 27; R 24; A 23)

154 Do not dine with a bad servant,
155 lest his master(s) accuse(s) you 156 of teaching his (their) servant to steal.

(B 41; S 28; R 25; A 24)

157 Hate a bad servant,
158 and beware of a free man who steals;
159 for just as you have not the competence to kill a servant,
160 neither have you (the capacity) to restrain a free man.

(B 42; S 29; R 26; A 25)

161 God hates the bad servant
162 who hates and dishonors his master(s).

cf. Ah<sup>47m</sup> (45)<sup>B</sup>

(B 43; S 30; R 27; A 26)

163 If you see a bad servant in deplorable misfortune, 164 do not feel sorry for him,
165 but say, "Alas for his master(s), what a (piece of) property."

(B 44; S 31; R 28; A 27)

166 Love the industrious servant
167 who is active and works with zeal in the house of his master(s).

Sir 7:20f.

w. I have followed S (conjecture); L-B-R-A follow the MS reading, "then he will live on and sigh because of his misfortunes," which might be correct.

x. My conjecture—MS: "begging and sons"; L-B-R: "ears and eyes"; S: "do not sit down near"; A: "(the bad man) combines buildings with begging."

(B 45; S 32; R 29; A 28)

168 As for every bad man, God gives him over into slavery, (L.68) 169 but every industrious man is worthy to rise in honor and greatness.

(B 46; S 33; R 30; A 29)

170 Reject and hate a lascivious old man,
171 for as you are not able to restrain the wind
172 so you cannot restrain or educate (such) an old man.

MenM 146; Sir
25:2

Ecc1 8:8

MenM 161<sup>b</sup>

(B 47; S 34; R 31; A 30)

173 Do not leave the way,
174 and do not go astray,
175 and do not walk wickedly.

Prov 21:16;
MenM 101
Ab<sup>57</sup>:(48)

(B 48; S 35; R 32; A 31)

176 Do not be quarrelsome,
177 lest a quarrel arise which reduces (you) to poverty.

76; Prov 20:3

(B 49)

178 And if you lie, immediately you shall be despised.

(B 50)

179 And if you speak wickedly, your face shall grow pale.

(B 51)

180 If you are boastful, you shall prove harmful to yourself.

(B 52; S 36; R 33; A 32)

181 If you recline at table among many (others),
182 do not open your purse in their presence;
183 and do not show what you have with you,
184 lest they borrow from you but do not pay you back.
185 And when you ask them (about it), they will strive with you 186 and call you a sour man.
187 (In short) you will lose what was yours,
188 and, moreover, you will become (their) enemy.

Sir 8:12; 29:4f.

Sir 29:6

Sir 29:6

(B 53; S 37; R 34; A 33)

189 Love your brothers,
190 and make your words pleasing to your friends.

Tob 4:13
CD 6:20
GThom 25

(B 54)

191 For I went about and sought
192 something that can be likened to good friends, 193 but I did not find (it).

WisSol 8:18

Sir 6:15; MenM
575

(B 55; S 38)

194 Rejoice at your sons, father,
195 for they are a (real) joy.

Sir 25:7

196 However, the position of brothers,
197 the sons do not take for me; see my sons (and) my brothers.<sup>y</sup>

198 For your son prays for your death,
199 since through your death he will receive honor,
200 and will occupy your position, 201 and will live on your goods at will.

y. Cf. A; MS: "See, my sons, my brothers" or "See the sons of my brothers" (so L-B-S), F-R want to leave out "my sons" (or "of my sons").

202 But your brothers pray to God for your life,
 203 because as long as you live they are splendid,
 204 but through your death they are handicapped;
 205 your sons will call them, your brothers, worthless fellows.
 (B 56)

206 But it is a bad and foolish son who thinks of these things;
 207 a bad thought in his heart, (focused) on his father's death.

208 The bad son does not understand 209 that if his father dies, it is not good for the sons:
 210 the head (of the family) no longer lives for them.<sup>z</sup>

(B 57; S 39; R 35; A 34)

211 Love and honor your father, 24
 212 because he gave himself to you.

213 Do not despise your friends, 25
 214 and do not dishonor those who honor you. 26
 (B 58)

215 And he with whom you had a meal, Ps 41:10
 216 do not walk with him in a treacherous way. Mk 14:18
Jn 13:18

(B 59; S 40)

217 And when you are going to your friend,
 218 if your friend (really) loves you
 219 and (if) you are (really) dear to him, 220 his children will show you that outwardly.
 221 If they eagerly watch for your presence,
 222 be convinced that your friend loves you,
 223 and that you are dear to him.
 224 But if his children do not eagerly watch for your coming,
 225 even he, your friend, is unwilling to see you . . .

(R 36)

226 Leave, go home!<sup>a2</sup>

(B 60; S 41; A 35)

(L.69) 227 Tardily does the freeborn<sup>b2</sup> appreciate his home, 228 and the maidservant<sup>c2</sup> the house of her master(s).

(B 61; S 42; R 37; A 36)

229 If you see a noble man who loses his rank of honor, 230 do not seek to dishonor him (further).
 231 On the contrary, honor him in a correct way,
 232 and give to him that which you can;
 233 for great is the charity which you practice
 234 when you give to a man who lost his possessions and rank of honor.
 235 If you have, give to him,
 236 and if you have not and (can)not give to him,
 237 then visit him with good and gentle words,

Sir 7:31

Sir 29:8-13;
 Tob 4:7

Ps-Phoc
 22.26,28
 Sir 4:1-10
 Tob 4:8f.,16

z. L-B-R: "because they have not where they can put their head" (incorrect).

a2. S adds here: "slowly, tardily," which word I render in l. 227 (so L-B-R-A).

b2. So with B contra L-R-S-A ("the son of the freeborn").

c2. I leave out "the son of" before "maidservant" (against L-B-R-S-A), since it is not in the MS and not required by the context.

238 and say to him, "Do not be afraid"

239 and "May God purpose something good for you!"<sup>d2</sup>

(B 62; S 43; R 38; A 37)

240 Keep yourself away from adultery.

(B 63)

241 Why should you want to buy polluted and putrid water,

242 whose beginning is dwindling, whose end is light and loose<sup>e2</sup>?

(B 64; R 39; A 38)

243 And walk in a straight line with the head<sup>f2</sup> raised,

244 and be chaste<sup>g2</sup> in your thoughts.

(B 65)

245 Remember and see:

246 Just as you do not wish your wife to commit adultery with another,

247 likewise also do not wish to commit adultery with your neighbor's wife.

(B 66; S 44; A 39)

248 And if you are very keen on not losing anything,

249 you should (also) not be keen on stealing.

(B 67; R 40; A 40)

250 Everything that is hateful to you,

251 you should not wish to do that to your neighbor.

(B 68; S 45; R 41; A 41)

252 Let not your way of life be arrogant,

253 lest it be harmful to you.

(B 69)

254 And if you are impudent,

255 this will not be pleasant for you.

(B 70; R 42; A 42)

256 You shall not<sup>h2</sup> learn hunting,

257 if the weariness of life is not to fall upon you.

258 If you should (wish) to learn<sup>i2</sup> it,

259 you would be searching for something that you have not lost,

260 and you would not find something that is beautiful,

261 because it is contemptible.<sup>j2</sup>

(B 71; R 43; A 43)

262 As for the king, he is honored by his princes,

263 but the gods are despised by their priests.

(B 72; S 46)

264 (Do not invite)<sup>k2</sup> a priest who despises his gods.

(B 73)

265 If you invite a wicked priest to your house,

266 he gives you a blessing each time that he enters,

267 but makes complaints each time that he departs.

Ex 20:13; Deut
5:17; Prov 5:20
Tob 4:12
Ah<sup>Arm</sup> (152)<sup>h</sup>
Prov 5:15-17;
9:17; 25:26a

Prov 4:25f.

Ah<sup>Sw</sup> (6)

Tob 4:15
b. Shab 31<sup>a</sup>
Ah<sup>Arm</sup> (88)<sup>a</sup>

MenM 35

MenM 35

Ps-Phoc 94

d2. Or as one saying: "Do not be afraid, for [or 'then'] God shall purpose . . ."

e2. Polluted and evaporating water as imagery of the whore: l. 242 gives the picture that such water is not useful, for it dries up, so that nothing remains except damp—"light and loose" also has the connotation of wanton women.

f2. Lit. "the neck."

g2. Or "modest."

h2. I add (with Geiger) the negation, against L-B-R-A (= MS); S does not accept the negation but guesses the word "modesty" instead of "hunting."

i2. MS: "teach."

j2. All the hunter finds is a cadaver.

k2. My conjecture—the MS is obscure here; L-B: "you shall not give drink (make drunk)"; S: "dissolute"; A: "vit pour lui-même."

268 And if you place food<sup>12</sup> before him, 269 his one hand, indeed, goes to his mouth;
 270 but the other takes the food away
 271 and puts it into his bag to take it along with him for his children.

(B 74)

272 Have more love for a dog than you have for (such) a priest;
 273 if the dog has enough food,
 274 he leaves (the remains) behind in your house,
 275 but if the priest has enough food,
 276 he takes (the remains) along with him for his children, 277 and makes complaints in addition.

(B 75; S 47; R-A 44)

278 Be welcome,<sup>m2</sup>
 279 if (at least) (your) garments are fair, 280 and if (your) purse is filled.

(B 76; R-A 45)

(L.70) 281 A meal makes company pleasant.

(B 77)

282 Riches multiply friends.
 283 But if a man's foot falters,
 284 all his friends are gone.<sup>n2</sup>

(B 78; R-A 46)

285 A gift makes words pleasant.

(B 79; S 48; R-A 47)

286 With someone who is richer than you, do not dine every day,
 287 for if you happen to visit him,
 288 he would receive you with(in the bounds of) his daily expenditures;
 289 but if he happens to visit you,
 290 you would spend because of him what you have collected in thirty days, 291 and thereby ruin yourself.

(B 80; S 49; R-A 48)

292 Divination gladdens the heart of fools, 293 astrology infatuates the mind of the stupid.

(B 81; R-A 49)

294 One who remains in the market street is an idler.

(B 82; R-S-A 50)

295 Stealing is the constructor of a cross.

(B 83; R-A 51)

296 Bad amusement<sup>o2</sup> is the teacher of falsehood and theft.

(B 84; R-A 52; S 51)

297 Keep a boy away from evil things;

(B 85)

298 the school keeps (one) far from death;
 299 handicraft delivers (one) from misfortune.

(B 86)

300 The law is a divine appeal.<sup>p2</sup>

Ps-Phoc 92

Prov 14:20; 19:4
 MenM 238: 71
 Ps-Phoc 91
 Prov 19:4;
 Sir 6:8,10
 MenM 34
 Prov 18:16,19:6

Prov 23:1-8;
 Sir 13:2-13

Sir 8:2

Sir 34(31):1.5.7
 Did 2:2; 5:1

cf. 147

MenM 436

MenM 430

Ps-Phoc 129

12. Lit. "bread." See also ll. 270, 273, 275.

m2. Lit. "Come in peace."

n2. Lit. "lost."

o2. Or "an unfortunate time."

p2. So S-A—otherwise: L (improbable): "divina lectio lex est"; B (improbable): "Divina lectio lex est"; R (impossible): "Das göttliche Gesetz ist Gegenstand des Lesens." One might guess, with a slight change of the text, "The law summons for the divine."

- (B 87; R-A 53; S 52)
 301 Hateful is loquacity;
 302 and excessive laughter is a (true) disgrace. Sir 20:5
(B 88; R-A 54; S 53) Ps-Phoc 20
 MenM 144
 303 Disorderly conduct, despise it at all times. MenM 288a
(B 89; S 54)
 304 Reject, hate the talkative person Sir 20:5
 305 who interrupts (others) but (who himself) speaks the more. Sir 11:8
(B 90)
 306 Though he had (even) ten thousand enemies,
 307 they would not hurt him like his own tongue; MenM 289
 308 every day he is involved in a deadly fight, Prov 10:14; 13:3
 309 he has not a bright face,
 310 due to the words for which he is censured.
(B 91; R-A 55)
 311 There exists nothing better than silence. MenM 597
(B 92)
 312 Being silent is at all times a virtue. Prov 17:27
(B 93)
 313 Even if a fool is silent, he is counted wise. Prov 17:28
- (B 94; R-A 56; S 55)
 314 Never lose heart.
(B 95)
 315 Do not fall back in battle;
 316 for whosoever does not fall back in battle
 317 and gives himself unto death,
 318 shall immediately find life and a good name
 319 and he shall be praised.
(B 96)
 320 He who speaks boldly in court
 321 shall be declared innocent.
- (B 97; R-A 57; S 56)
 322 Riches without fuss are a (true) power; MenM 181.612
 323 but not everyone knows how to administer them.
(B 98)
 324 For if someone has inflated his stomach,<sup>q2</sup> he will die;
 325 and if he does not remember the end, he will perish. Sir 7:36
 326 If, on the other hand, you calm down your stomach, you will grow rich;
 327 and if you will remember the end, it will be well with you. Sir 7:36
- (B 99; S 57; R-A 58)
 328 (To act as) a judge is fine;
 329 Take care that you do not pronounce judgment over a foolish man, 330 because (even) if you should try to assist the fool in his case, 331 he will still revile you and he will say to many (others), 332 "He has condemned me."
- (B 100; R-A 59; S 58)
 333 Do not dine with a wicked man; 265-77; Sir
 334 for even what is your own he will consume, 11:29,33
 335 and in his wickedness he will say about you evil and hateful things. Sir 27:23

q2. Lit. "has widened his stomach (belly)" with the meaning "empty pretentiousness"; cf. l. 409.

(B 101; R-A 60; S 59)

- 336 Do not listen to a talkative and verbose woman; 118-22 337 do not believe her, if she complains to you of her husband;
 (L.71) 338 for he did not sin against her,
 339 but she did irritate him every day with her wicked tongue.

(B 102; R-A 61; S 60)

- 340 Do not measure your strength with one who is stronger than you, Lk 14:31
 341 or one who forces you to strive with him; Ah<sup>Arm</sup>:(48)<sup>B</sup>
 342 do not say to yourself, "Maybe I will cast him down," 343 lest he cast you down; Ah<sup>Arm</sup>:(28)<sup>A</sup>
 344 then you will be ashamed in the presence of many bystanders. Lk 14:29f.

(B 103; R-A 62; S 61)

- 345 Be bold against one who contends you;
 346 and do not forgive him the revilements against your father. Sir 30:6

(B 104; R-A 63; S 62)

- 347 Do not cast a glance at your maidservant in your house, 348 and do not be fond of impurity and prodigality;
 349 do never besmirch your honor.
 350 For if you raise your eyes<sup>r2</sup> in your house, you will become very sad, Ah<sup>Syr</sup>:(5)
 351 but if you are chaste,<sup>s2</sup> you shall be happy and fortunate, 352 because God hates impurity and prodigality,
 353 even for men these are a disgrace.

(B 105; R-A 64; S 63)

- 354 If you have goods, if you have possessions, 368; MenM 478
 355 be humble and kind, and give; do not flaunt. Ps-Phoc 28.53
 356 And if you have no possessions, if you are poor, MenM 510
 357 bow yourself down and be gentle; be not stubborn. MenM 52
 358 Flaunting and stubbornness are hateful to men. Sir 25:2

(B 106; R-A 65; S 64)

- 359 Do not turn away your eyes from your father and mother, Sir 7:27f.
 360 and do not curl your lips (in scorn) at "testicles" and "breasts,"<sup>r2</sup>
 361 and do not dishonor the God who made you. Sir 7:30; Did 1:2

(B 107)

- 362 However, remember and see:
 363 if our eyes become great, they (still can)not surpass our eyebrows.
 364 For if you have surpassed your father and mother,
 365 and if—as it is now your time and your fate—
 366 you are to be called "Master" and "Lord," Jn 13:13
 367 it is due to the name of your father and mother that all people call you so.

(B 108; R-A 66; S 65)

- 368 If you have goods, if you have possessions, 354; Ps-Phoc
 369 live on your possessions as long as you are alive 109
 370 and your eye (can) see and your foot (can) walk. Eccl 5:17f.

r2. That is, to covet your maidservant (S: "if you look with pride").

s2. Or "ashamed," or "modest."

l2. The MS reads "breasts" as the second word. L-B-R-S-A guess "teachers," since they interpret the first word as "friends." (L: "amicos et praeceptores") The first word, however, may mean "uterus" or "testicles," and it is to be taken in the latter sense: l. 360 repeats l. 359, referring to the very beginning of man's life, but one should keep in mind that the ultimate source of life is God himself (l. 361).

371 For remember and see: Ps-Phoc 109
 372 one (can)not use (his) goods in Sheol, Ps-Phoc 110
 373 and riches do not accompany one into the grave.
 374 Therefore, you shall not deny yourself the good things, Eccl 11:8
 375 for better is one day under the sun
 376 than a hundred years in Sheol.

(B 109; R-A 67; S 66)

377 Be energetic in your youth, MenM 536
 378 as long as your eye (can) see and your foot (can) walk, 379 (as long as) your strength is great.

380 But when you have become aged and weary, MenM 536
 381 sit down and live on your possessions.

(B 110)

382 And comely is youth, 399
 383 when the young man is energetic,
 384 and (when) he is successful through his strength.

(B 111; R-A 68; S 67)

385 Let anxieties never dominate your heart, MemM 3, 563
 386 because it is a bad thing to nurse anxiety.

(B 112)

387 For many are the years which a man does not (really) live;
 388 their anxieties (slowly) kill him. MenM 440; Sir 30:23f.

(B 113; R 69)

(L.72) 389 If you are anxious, you shall die; Sir 30:24
 390 and if you are sad, you shall never (really) live.

(B 114)

391 For short and limited is the space of life Eccl 5:17
 392 which God determines for men; Eccl 5:18
 393 and he mingled for them many bad things with a few good things. MenM 741

(B 115; R 70; A 69; S 68)

394 The main source of all good things is the fear of God, MenM 63
 395 it delivers (one) from all evil things;<sup>u2</sup> Prov 1:7; 9:10;
 396 a treasure it is. Prov 10:27; 22:4
 Prov 14:27

(B 116; S 69)

397 Not always, however, will last the affairs of men,
 398 since their life is until the house of death.<sup>v2</sup>
 (B 117; R 71; S-A 70)
 399 Comely and praiseworthy is youth, 382
 400 but it is with men only for a short time,
 401 and (then) old age makes it fade away.<sup>w2</sup> MenM 39f.

(B 118; R 72; S-A 71)

402 Pleasant are life, goods, and buildings,<sup>x2</sup>
 403 but more pleasant than these is a good name.<sup>y2</sup> Prov 22:1; Eccl 7:1
 (B 119; R 73; S-A 72) MenM 406
 404 Praiseworthy and radiant is joy

u2. Ll. 394f.; cf. Epitome 5 (ll. 9f.).

v2. Ll. 397f.; cf. Epitome 6 (ll. 13f.).

w2. Ll. 399ff.; cf. Epitome 7 (ll. 15-17).

x2. The reading "buildings" (MS) is followed by L-A; B-R-S ("children") follow the Epitome.

y2. Ll. 402f.; cf. Epitome 8 (ll. 18f.).

- 405 when quarrel and violence are far from it.<sup>z2</sup>
(B 120; R 74; S-A 73)
- 406 Good and excellent is friendship
407 which continues to the house of death.<sup>a3</sup>
(B 121; R 75; S-A 74)
- 408 Unpretentious is wisdom
409 when it is not puffed up.<sup>b3</sup>
(B 122; R 76; S-A 75)
- 410 Good is faithfulness
411 when it is coupled with sound judgment.<sup>c3</sup>
(B 123; R 77; S-A 76)
- 412 Praiseworthy is industry
413 when someone is energetic and successful.
(B 124; R 78; S-A 77)
- 414 Laziness is a bad thing
415 when a person's body should be vigorous.

(B 125; R 79; S-A 78)
- 416 Intemperance provokes conflict.<sup>d3</sup>
(B 126; R 80; S-A 79)
- 417 Wisdom keeps one back from wickedness.
(B 127; R 81; S-A 80)
- 418 Hope comforts the heart.
(B 128; R 82; S-A 81)
- 419 Insipidity leads the mind astray.<sup>e3</sup>
(B 129; R 83; S-A 82)
- 420 Agitation makes (one) lose (his) senses.<sup>f3</sup>
(B 130; R 84; S-A 83)
- 421 An evil heart<sup>g3</sup> causes grief and sighing.<sup>h3</sup>
(B 131; R 85; S-A 84)
- 422 Jealousy is the cause of evil and strife.<sup>i3</sup>
(B 132; R 86; S-A 85)
- 423 The belly (can be) a disgraceful thing.<sup>j3</sup> (S-A 86)
- 424 The tongue brings to misery.<sup>k3</sup>

(B 133; R-S-A 87)
- 425 Radiant and comely are riches,
426 but the good man hardly acquires them.
(B 134; R-S 88)
- 427 Hateful and dark is poverty
428 when accompanied by disease and loss.<sup>l3</sup>
(B 136; R-S 89; A 88)
- 429 Riches are (merely?) a step to honor.

(B 136; R-S 90; A 89)
- 430 Rest is a great blessing.

192
Ps-Phoc 218

Ps-Phoc 218

Prov 29:22

MenM 30

Ps-Phoc 70

MenM 305
Jas 3:6

MenM 62

Ecc1 4:6

z2. Ll. 404f.; cf. Epitome 9 (ll. 20f.).

a3. Ll. 406f.; cf. Epitome 10 (ll. 22f.).

b3. Ll. 408f.; cf. Epitome 11 (ll. 24f.); 409: lit. "when flatulence is far from it."

c3. Ll. 410f.; cf. Epitome 12 (ll. 26f.).

d3. The text is obscure; instead of "intemperance" the MS has "fur coat." Different conjectures are made by Geiger, Frankenberg, Schulthess, and Audet.

e3. L. 419; cf. Epitome 13 (l. 28).

f3. L. 420; cf. Epitome 14 (l. 29).

g3. Or "bad conscience" (L-B-R-A); "melancholy" (S).

h3. L. 421; cf. Epitome 15 (l. 30).

i3. L. 422; cf. Epitome 16 (l. 31).

j3. L. 423; cf. Epitome 17 (l. 32).

k3. L. 424; cf. Epitome 17 (l. 33).

l3. Lit. "when d. and l. are coupled with it."

(B 137; R-S 91; A 90)

431 Riches that will not reduce to poverty are a strong power.

432 Wretched poverty means illness and disease.

Prov 17:22

(B 138; R-S 92; A 91)

433 Health means joy and rejoicing.

Prov 17:22

(B 139; R 93; A 92)

434 Old age is the frontier of death.

(B 140; R 94; S-A 93)

435 Poverty is the dregs of all evil

436 when it takes up its abode in old age.

(B 141; S 94)

437 And the last part of life is death;

(B 142; S 95)

438 the grave hides the dust.<sup>m3</sup>

MenM 590; 660
MenM 656

(B 143; S 96; R 95; A 94)

439 Fever corrupts charming people;

(B 144)

440 health and good cheer make one's appearance charming.

(B 145; S 97; R 96; A 95)

441 Death corrupts (even) the firm (body);

(B 146)

(L.73) 442 but dissolution forms (first) ten parts,

443 and then (death) corrupts the one (part) that was well prepared.<sup>n3</sup>

444 These bad and good things are mingled in the life of men,

393

445 not to mention fever, tremors, diseases, and (other) great calamities<sup>o3</sup>

446 which are called "the angels<sup>p3</sup> of death."

(R 98)

447 And no one can choose and take for himself what is good

448 and avoid what is bad;

449 but men go their way according to what God measures out for them,

450 as long as he allows them to live.

(B 148; S 99)

451 Neither should men despair,

452 because they cannot live longer than is determined for them;

(B 149; R 99)

453 nor should we angrily complain against God

454 because of the misfortunes that befall us.

(B 150; R 100)

455 For how often (it happens that)

105

456 someone, even when he suffers misfortunes,

457 rises (again) to honor and dignity.

108f.

(B 151; R 101; S 100)

458 One should, however, in the sorrow that befalls him,

459 not be excessively sad,

Sir 22:11

(B 152)

460 and through his groaning badly vex himself,

Sir 38:21

(R 102)

461 because he will not be of any help to a deceased

Sir 38:21

m3. The text is corrupt; my conjecture is not shared by L-B-R-A, who render with "riches," or by S, who renders with "beauty" instead of "dust."

n3. I.e. the soul?
o3. MS obscure.
p3. Or "messengers."

462 even if he falls down and greatly suffers after his (death).<sup>q3</sup>

(R 103)

463 But he who is wise

464 —even when the deceased is very dear to him—

465 shall accompany him with tears to the tomb;

Sir 38:16f.

466 but when the deceased has been buried,

Sir 38:23

467 let him, even him, overcome his groaning;

468 and let him remember and consider in his mind

469 that he himself shall also die.

Sir 38:20,22

(B 153; S 101)

470 And this (Sheol)<sup>r3</sup> is the place of rest

Sir 38:23; 22:11

471 which God determines for men,

472 that they may rest there from the evil things

473 which they saw in their life.<sup>s3</sup>

474 Menander has come to an end.

q3. Lit. "after him," namely, the deceased.

r3. The Epitome adds before this line: "I have watched, but the dwelling place of men is Sheol, s3. Ll. 470–73; cf. Epitome 18b (ll. 36–39).

(and this . . .)."

PRAYERS, PSALMS, AND ODES

INTRODUCTION

BY J. H. CHARLESWORTH

The Davidic Psalms, portions of which may date from prior to David's reign until sometime in the post-exilic period, were the psalmbook of the Temple. At the beginning of this century it was generally assumed that the psalter was the only collection of psalms significant to most Jews during the period of Early Judaism. Now we know that the psalter itself was not set—or canonized—until rather late, probably not until the beginning of the Common Era; and five more psalms—Psalms 151–55—were considered by at least some Jews as part of an expanded psalter. Other collections of psalms or hymns were important in the period 100 B.C. to A.D. 200, and all of these, except the Psalms of Solomon, have been discovered or recognized only in the past one hundred years. The most notable hymnbooks are the following: the Psalms of Solomon, the Qumran Hodayoth, the Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers (perhaps), and the Odes of Solomon. Besides the individual prayers (or psalms) presented below, poetic compositions—indeed psalms and prayers—highlight many pseudepigrapha, especially the apocalypses and testaments.

The Prayer of Joseph is included among the following collections of prayers, psalms, and odes only because of its title. As extant, it is more characteristic of the works included under the "Expansions of the 'Old Testament' "; but only a portion of the document has been preserved, and originally it may have been defined by a prayer of Joseph. An analogy may be drawn to Joseph and Aseneth, which has often been called the Book of the Prayer of Aseneth because of the prayer featured in the heart of the narrative (chs. 12f.).

The following prayers and psalms should be read along with other poetic compositions, notably the Qumran Hodayoth, the Qumran non-Masoretic psalms, other Qumran hymns, the hymns and prayers in the Apocrypha (including the Song of the Three Young Men and the Prayer of Azariah), similar compositions in the Targumim, and the proto-rabbinic prayers. Also to be examined are the psalms in Pseudo-Philo, in the Testament of Job, and in 2 Baruch, the Psalm of Taxo (TMos 10:1–10), the poetical works collected in the Supplement, the Prayer of Enoch (1En 84:1–6), the Prayer of Aseneth (JosAsen 12f.), the Prayer of Eleazar (3Mac 6:2–15), the prayers in Jubilees, in Pseudo-Philo, and in 2 Baruch, the laments and prayers of Ezra (esp. 4Ezra 8:20–36), and Zephaniah's prayer (ApZeph 9:1–10; 12:5–10). Also significantly related to these psalms and prayers are the Prayer of Jesus (Mt 6; Lk 11; Didache 8), the hymns and prayers in Luke 1f. and John 1:1–18, the Hymn of the Pearl, Hermes's Hymn of Rebirth (C.H. XIII), and the gnostic prayers: The Prayer of the Apostle Paul (CG I, 1), the Prayer of Thanksgiving (CG VI, 7), and the Hymn of the First Stele of Seth (CG VII, 5).

CONTENTS

More Psalms of David
Prayer of Manasseh
Psalms of Solomon
Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers
Prayer of Joseph
Prayer of Jacob
Odes of Solomon

MORE PSALMS OF DAVID

(Third Century B.C.—First Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY J. H. CHARLESWORTH with J. A. SANDERS

The canonical Old Testament in Hebrew (the Masoretic Bible) contains 150 psalms; yet five more psalms of David and part of a sixth (151B) are now recognized. The disparate date and character of these additional psalms are best represented by discussing and translating them individually. The early, pre-Christian date and Jewish character of four of these psalms—Psalms 151A, 151B, 154, and 155—is proved by the discovery that they are extant in the Qumran Psalms Scroll (11QPs<sup>a</sup>), which dates from the first half of the first century A.D.<sup>1</sup>

Despite the disparateness that separates these psalms, there may be an organic relationship between them, and earlier ones may have inspired later ones. This possibility arises with the recognition that Psalms 151A, 151B, 152, and 153 are all influenced by the tradition recorded in 1 Samuel 16 and 17, according to which David slew both lions and bears (1Sam 17:36) and defeated the Philistine Goliath, eventually cutting off his head with the giant's own sword (1Sam 17:51).

Texts

Psalm 151 is preserved in Greek (LXX), Hebrew, and Syriac;<sup>2</sup> Psalms 152 and 153 only in Syriac; Psalms 154 and 155 in Hebrew and Syriac. Generally speaking, the Hebrew, because it is earlier and the language of the original, is to be preferred over the other texts.<sup>3</sup>

The translation of the Greek (LXX) and Hebrew is based upon the edition by Sanders.<sup>4</sup> The translation of the Syriac is based upon the edition by W. Baars.<sup>5</sup> Sigla are as follows:

- A – Baghdad, Library of the Chaldean Patriarchate, MS 1113, fols. 118b–20b, of circa the twelfth century. This MS was once in Mosul; it is our base text.
- B – London, British Museum, Add. MS 14.568, fols. 49b–50a, of the sixth century.

<sup>1</sup> J. A. Sanders, "The Apocryphal Compositions," The Psalms Scroll of Qumran Cave 11 (11QPs<sup>a</sup>) (DJD 4; Oxford, 1965) p. 9. See also J. Strugnell, "More Psalms of 'David,'" CBQ 27 [1965] 207.

<sup>2</sup> The editions of the Gk. (LXX), Heb., and Syr. used herein are given below. For a critical edition of the Eth. (which derives from the LXX) and a translation, see S. Strelcyn, "Le Psaume 151 dans la tradition éthiopienne," JSS 23 (1978) 316–29. The Old Lat., which is also dependent upon the LXX, is available in R. Weber (ed.), Le Psautier romain et les autres anciens psautiers latins (Collectanea Biblica Latina 10; Rome, 1953).

<sup>3</sup> M. Noth argued that the Syr. was separated from the original Heb. by a Gk. intermediary version. See his "Die fünf syrisch überlieferten apokryphen Psalmen," ZAW 48 (1930) 13. M. H. Goshen-Gottstein has now argued persuasively that the Syr. depends directly on the Heb. See his "The Psalms Scroll (11QPs<sup>a</sup>): A Problem of Canon and Text," Textus 5 (1966) 32. Sanders correctly states, ". . . all scholars agree that the Hebrew psalm (151) in the scroll is the original." See his "The Qumran Psalms Scroll [11QPs<sup>a</sup>] Reviewed," On Language, Culture, and Religion: In Honor of Eugene A. Nida, eds. M. Black and W. A. Smalley (The Hague, 1974) p. 85.

<sup>4</sup> Sanders, The Dead Sea Psalms Scroll (Ithaca, N.Y., 1967) pp. 96–115.

<sup>5</sup> W. Baars, "Apocryphal Psalms," The Old Testament in Syriac According to the Peshitta Version (Leiden, 1972) part IV, fascicle b, pp. 1–12.

JRL Syr 7 – Manchester, John Rylands Library, Syriac Manuscript 7, fol. 135a, of the sixteenth century.<sup>6</sup> It contains only Psalm 151 of the pseudepigraphical psalms.

Collective importance

Some distinguished scholars have argued that one or more of these pseudepigraphical psalms were composed by the Essenes, the authors of the Dead Sea Scrolls.<sup>7</sup> Most scholars,<sup>8</sup> however, conclude correctly that while some passages can be interpreted in line with Essene theology, this possibility does not indicate that these psalms were composed by the Essenes, who shared ideas with other Jews contemporaneous with them.

The presence of these psalms within the Qumran Psalter (11QPs<sup>a</sup>) raises the question of the extent of the Davidic Psalter prior to the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. At Qumran, of course, the Psalter was appreciably different from the present collection in Hebrew; but what was the shape of the Psalter elsewhere? M. H. Goshen-Gottstein<sup>9</sup> has argued that the Psalter was already set (and canonized) by the second century B.C. and that excerpts from it, along with apocryphal compositions, were placed in 11QPs<sup>a</sup>, which is therefore the earliest "Jewish prayerbook."<sup>10</sup> A similar interpretation is defended by P. Skehan,<sup>11</sup> who contends that 11QPs<sup>a</sup> is a "library edition" of the "standard collection of 150 Psalms." The presence of "apocryphal" psalms such as the Prayer of Manasseh, and the Psalms of Solomon, which were considered inspired by many Jews around the turn of the era, along with the presence of apocryphal psalms in 11QPs<sup>a</sup><sup>12</sup> indicate the distinction between canonical and apocryphal psalms had not been clarified before the advent of Christianity.<sup>13</sup>

Translation

The translation attempts to be as literal as intelligible English will allow, so that comparisons can be made between the Syriac and the Hebrew. For a convenient collection of divergent translations, see Sanders' The Dead Sea Psalms Scroll (pp. 100–3). Syriac and Hebrew words are translated consistently by the same English word; when possible, cognate words are translated identically.

<sup>6</sup> This unexamined version of Psalm 151 was discovered by Charlesworth while working on a catalogue of the Syr. MSS in the John Rylands Library. The variants in JRL Syr 7 are frequently similar to those in BM Add. MS 14.674, fols. 160b–61b, of the 12th cent., and to MS G. 31. Sup., fol. 176b in the Ambrosian Library in Milan, of the 16th cent. Compare the apparatus in Baars's edition with the major variants cited below.

<sup>7</sup> M. Philonenko, "L'Origine essénienne des cinq psaumes syriaques de David," Semitica 9 (1959) 48–53; M. Delcor, "Cinq nouveaux psaumes esséniens?" RQ 1 (1958) 85–102; idem, "Cinq psaumes syriaques esséniens," Les Hymnes de Qumran (Paris, 1962) pp. 299–319; idem, "Zum Psalter von Qumran," BZ n.F. 10 (1966) 15–29; A. Dupont-Sommer, "Le Psaume CLI dans 11QPs<sup>a</sup> et le problème de son origine essénienne," Semitica 14 (1964) 25–62.

<sup>8</sup> J. A. Sanders, "Two Non-Canonical Psalms in 11QPs<sup>a</sup>," ZAW 76 (1964) 57–75; J. Carmignac, "La Forme poétique du psaume 151 de la grotte 11," RQ 4 (1963) 371–78; W. H. Brownlee, "The 11Q Counterpart to Psalm 151, 1–5," RQ 4 (1963) 379–87; A. S. van der Woude, "Die fünf syrischen Psalmen (einschliesslich Psalm 151)," JSHRZ 4 (1974) 29–47.

<sup>9</sup> M. H. Goshen-Gottstein, Textus 5 (1966) 22–33.

<sup>10</sup> S. Talmon published articles that presented a position in agreement with Goshen-Gottstein; see Talmon, "Hebrew Apocryphal Psalms from Qumran," Tarbiz 35 (1966) 214–34 [in Heb.; English summary on pp. II–III]; idem, "Pisqah Be'emsā' Pasuq and 11QPs<sup>a</sup>," Textus 5 (1966) 11–21. Talmon now has rejected this hypothesis; see Sanders, On Language, Culture, and Religion, pp. 79–99.

<sup>11</sup> P. W. Skehan, "The Apocryphal Psalm 151," CBQ 25 (1963) 407–9; idem, "A Broken Acrostic and Psalm 9," CBQ 27 (1965) 1–5; idem, "A Liturgical Complex in 11QPs<sup>a</sup>," CBQ 35 (1973) 195–205; idem, "Jubilees and the Qumran Psalter," CBQ 37 (1975) 343–47; idem, "Qumran and Old Testament Criticism," Qumran: Sa piété, sa théologie et son milieu (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium 46; Paris, 1978) pp. 163–82.

<sup>12</sup> 11QPs<sup>a</sup> contains other pseudepigraphical psalms than the 5ApocSyrPs; and it preserves a prose account of the psalms attributed to David, stating that the total was 4,050, which is clearly an inflated figure that lauds David's genius. J. Strugnell has found another psalm of David in LAB 59; he concludes, "As a general observation let us call attention to the fact that, like Ps 151A, 151B, and Syriac Ps 152, this is clearly a Davidic pseudepigraphon, ex persona David." See Strugnell, CBQ 27 (1965) 207–16; the quotation is on pp. 215f.

<sup>13</sup> See herein the discussion of the pseudepigraphical psalms and odes just mentioned. See also Sanders, "Cave 11 Surprises and the Question of Canon," New Directions in Biblical Archaeology, eds. D. N. Freedman and J. C. Greenfield (Garden City, N.Y., 1971) pp. 113–30.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

The important publications are too numerous to list; in addition to the works cited herein see the bibliographical data reported in the following:

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 202–9.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 66f.

Magne, J. "Recherches sur les Psaumes 151, 154 et 155," RQ 8 (1975) 503–7.

Sanders, J. A. "The Qumran Psalms Scroll [11QPs<sup>a</sup>] Reviewed," On Language, Culture, and Religion: In Honor of Eugene A. Nida, ed. M. Black and W. A. Smalley (The Hague, 1974) pp. 79–99.

PSALM 151

The original language of this psalm is Hebrew. The Syriac of Psalm 151 derives from the Greek (LXX); but in Psalms 152–55 it comes directly from the Hebrew.<sup>1</sup> A mere cursory comparison of the Syriac and Hebrew of Psalms 151–55 reveals that the Syriac of 151A and 151B, in contrast to Psalms 154 and 155, is dissimilar to the Hebrew. The Syriac of Psalm 151 is similar to and dependent upon the Greek (LXX). Originally Psalm 151 was two separate psalms, 151A and 151B; unfortunately the latter is lost because this section of 11QPs<sup>a</sup> is mutilated. The Greek (LXX) and Syriac have truncated both psalms.

Psalm 151 must predate the second century B.C.; it is in the Greek (LXX), which antedates that period. F. M. Cross has argued recently that in “no case can it be later than the 3rd century B.C.”<sup>2</sup> This early date certainly dismisses the possibility that Psalm 151 was composed by the members of the Qumran community, which did not originate until the middle of the second century B.C.<sup>3</sup>

Before verse two there is a line that is a later interpolation; the line is as follows: “And I discovered a lion and a wolf and I killed and rent them.” The idea is intrusive to the thought of the psalm; it also is not preserved in 11QPs<sup>a</sup>, is only in the margin of MS A (the most reliable Syr. tradition), and is missing in JRL Syr 7. The line has been interpolated from Psalms 152 and 153.

<sup>1</sup> See Strugnell, “Notes on the Text and Transmission of the Apocryphal Psalms 151, 154 (= Syr. II) and 155 (= Syr. III),” HTR 59 (1966) 278. Magne (“Les Textes grec et syriaque du Psaume 151,” RQ 8 [1975] 548–64) attempts to refute Strugnell’s arguments and concludes that the Syr. and Gk. of 151 are “two independent versions” of the Heb.

<sup>2</sup> F. M. Cross, “David, Orpheus, and Psalm 151:3–4,” BASOR 231 (1978) 69–71; the quotation is from p. 70.

<sup>3</sup> Charlesworth, “The Origin and Subsequent History of the Authors of the Dead Sea Scrolls: Four Transitional Phases among the Qumran Essenes,” RQ 38 (1980) 213–33.

151A and B (11QPs<sup>a</sup> 151)

Hebrew

A Hallelujah of David the Son of Jesse

151A

1 I was the smallest among my brothers,
and the youngest among the sons of my father;
and he made me shepherd of his flocks,
and the ruler over his kids.<sup>a</sup>

LAB 59
1Sam 16:11,17:14

2 My hands made a flute,
and my fingers a lyre;
and I shall render glory to the Lord,
I thought within myself.<sup>b</sup>

a. It is amazing that the portions of the leather upon which this psalm is written are preserved without a lacuna. The script is easy to read; cf. the facsimiles in Sanders, The Psalms Scroll of Qumran Cave 11, and in G. Jeremias, H.-W. Kuhn, and H. Stegemann, eds., Tradition und Glaube: Das frühe Christentum in seiner Umwelt. Festgabe für Karl Georg Kuhn zum 65. Geburtstag (Göttingen, 1971) plates 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. Compare the Hymn of the Pearl (vs. 1): “When I was a little lad / And dwelling in my kingdom, the house of my father, . . .” (trans. Charlesworth).

b. P. W. Skehan begins vs. 3 here: “I had said to myself, / the mountains cannot witness to Him, . . .” Skehan, “The Apocryphal Psalm 151,” CBQ 25 (1963) 407–9.

- 3 The mountains cannot witness to him,
nor the hills proclaim (him);
the trees have elevated my words,
and the flocks my deeds.<sup>c</sup>
- 4 For who can proclaim and who can announce,
and who can recount the deeds of the Lord?
Everything God has seen,
everything he has heard and he has listened.
- 5 He sent his prophet to anoint me,
Samuel to make me great;
my brothers went out to meet him,
handsome of figure<sup>d</sup> and handsome of appearance.
- 6 (Although) their stature was tall,
(and) their hair handsome,
the Lord God
did not choose them.
- 7 But he sent and took me from behind the flock,
and he anointed me with holy oil,
and he made me leader for his people,
and ruler over the sons of his covenant.
- Sir 16:20,22
OdesSol 26:8-11
- 1Sam 16:1-11
- 1Sam 16:10
- 1Sam 16:12f.; 2Sam
7:8; Pss 78:70f.; 89:20

c. Or "(Nor) the trees elevate my words, and the flocks my deeds." The translation of this vs. is problematic. The waws and yodhs are very similar in 11QPs<sup>a</sup>, the poetic structure open to more than one possibility. Numerous translations have been defended; see Sanders (The Dead Sea Psalms Scroll, pp. 100-3). Strugnell (HTR 59 [1966] 280) renders this verse as follows: "The mountains cannot witness to Him / nor the hills proclaim about Him / (Nor) the trees (proclaim) His words / nor the flocks His deeds." For a thoroughly different translation see J. Magne, "Orphisme, pythagorisme, essénisme dans le texte hébreu du Psaume 151?" RQ 8 (1975) 508-47, see especially p. 532 (or 544). Some scholars argue that vs. 3a should be read so that the Heb. is ly and not lw: "The mountains cannot witness to me [italics mine]"; cf. e.g. J. Carmignac, "Nouvelles précisions sur le Psaume 151," RQ 8 (1975) 593-97.

Vss. 2b and 3 are not preserved in Syr., as can be seen by comparing the two translations above; they are also missing in the Gk. and Lat. In contrast to Isa 55:12, vs. 3 claims that mountains and hills cannot witness to the Lord. If the vs. implies that the trees and flocks do receive and enjoy David's words and deeds, then Sanders is certainly right in suggesting that these vss. might "exhibit overtones" from traditions relating to Orpheus, who is the mythical Greek shepherd musician. Sanders wisely cautions that this possibility is rather tenuous; but if it is correct, 11QPs<sup>a</sup> 151 preserves the only literary evidence of an Orphic David, who is well known in mosaics and paintings (see the photograph opposite p. 98 in Sanders, The Dead Sea Psalms Scroll). Also see the Orphic fragments in the Supplement to the present work. Yet it should be pointed out that the old Lat. and some copies of the LXX understood vs. 4b to say that God hears everything, reflecting 1Sam 16:7; see Sanders, Dead Sea Psalms Scroll, p. 97, n. 10. A. Dupont-Sommer (David et Orphée [Séance pub- lique annuelle des cinq Académies] Paris, 1964) accepts Sanders' suggestion of Orphic overtones in 151 and sees in it an allusion to the Pythagorean concept of the harmony of the world and music of the spheres. Other scholars (e.g. W. H. Brownlee, J. Carmignac, F. M. Cross, I. Rabinowitz, P. W. Skehan) have been critical of Sanders' suggestion, but it has been defended rigorously by J. Magne in RQ 8 (1975) 508-47 and in "'Seigneur de l'Univers' ou David-Orphée?" RQ 9 (1977) 189-96. The omission of 2b and 3 in Syr. and Gk. should be explained; perhaps the Gk. scribe (the Syr. is dependent upon the LXX), like the Arab of the "Pseudo-David" Psalter (cf. Strugnell's text and translation in HTR 59 [1966] 280) corrected David's unorthodox thoughts. Cross denies possible Orphic influence; he renders vss. 3f. as follows:

O that the mountains would bear Him witness,
O that the hills would tell of Him,
The trees (recount) His deeds,
And the flock, His works!
Would that someone tell and speak,
And would that someone recite His works!

The Lord of all saw;
The God of all heard,
And He gave heed.

See Cross, BASOR 231 (1978) 69. Magne ("Le Psaume 154 et le Psaume 155," RQ 9 [1977] 95-111) argues that 154 is the product of two authors, one who composed a wisdom psalm and a later author (redactor) who added verses that called his sectarian brothers to participate in a cult in which glorification of God replaced sacrifices in the Temple.

d. A vaguely possible meaning, in light of a possible chiasmic construction with vs. 6, "their hair handsome," is to derive the meaning from nwr, to obtain "handsome with plaited (hair)." More probably, derive hnwr from a defectively written tō'ar, masculine "form, outline."

151A and B (5ApocSyrPs 1a)

Syriac

By David, When He Alone Fought Against Goliath<sup>a</sup>

151A

- |   |   |                      |
|---|---|----------------------|
| 1 | I was the smallest <sup>b</sup> of <sup>c</sup> my brothers,and a child <sup>d</sup> of <sup>e</sup> my father's house.   | LAB 591Sam 16:11 |
|   | I was tending my father's flocks;[and I discovered a lion and a wolfand I killed and rent them.] <sup>f</sup>   | 1Sam 17:36-38        |
| 2 | My hands made instruments, <sup>g</sup>and my fingers fashioned <sup>h</sup> lyres.   |                      |
| 3 | And who will declare <sup>i</sup> my Lord; <sup>j</sup>that is the Lord; that is my God? <sup>k</sup>   |                      |
| 4 | He sent <sup>l</sup> his angel;and removed <sup>m</sup> me from the sheep <sup>n</sup> of my father;and anointed me with the ointment of his <sup>o</sup> anointing. <sup>p</sup> |                      |
| 5 | My brothers were handsome and majestic; <sup>q</sup>but the Lord did not choose them. <sup>r</sup>  | 1Sam 16:10           |

a. The title is from MS A. JRL Syr 7: "Another Psalm of David, Supernumerary"; LXX: "This Psalm, Though Supernumerary, Is David's Own Composition, When He Single-handedly Fought Goliath."

b. Or "youngest"; cf. vs. 5. JRL Syr 7: "small."

c. Beth; lit. "among"; but the parallel lines indicate the beth in this line and the one in the next should be translated similarly.

d. JRL Syr 7: "youth."

e. See n. c; lit. "in"; "child"; the Syr. noun denotes one between the ages of seven and twelve years.

f. Lit. "And I killed them and I rent them." This line is placed in the margin of MS A; it is missing in JRL Syr 7.

g. Gk. loanword in Syr., organon.

h. Lit. "fitted"; (cf. R. Payne Smith, Thesaurus Syriacus, vol. 2, col. 1928).

i. The participle can denote the future. The modal coloring of the participle can also be employed; lit.: "And who is he who may declare [or "make manifest"] my Lord?"

j. Note the mixed traditions: JRL Syr 7: "He is the Lord God who hears me" (ignoring the punctuation, the preceding line is corrupt). LXX: "The Lord himself, he hears everything."

k. MS B: "He is the Lord; he is my God." Cf. Jn 20:28.

l. JRL Syr 7: šdr.

m. Or "raised, exalted."

n. JRL Syr 7: 'n' (cf. vs. 1, with LXX).

o. JRL Syr 7 omits.

p. This poetic alliteration is not found in 11QPs<sup>a</sup> and only partly in LXX.

q. Or "old"; rwb<sup>3</sup> with z'wr<sup>3</sup> (vs. 1, "small, young") frequently means "old."

r. Or "was not pleased with them."

151B (11QPs<sup>a</sup> 151)

Hebrew

*At the Beginning of [David's Po]wer
After the Prophet of God Anointed Him<sup>a</sup>*

- 1 Then I s[a]w a Philistine 1Sam 17:8-25
who was uttering taunts from the ra[n]ks of the enemy . . . ]
- 2 . . . I . . . the . . .

a. 11QPs<sup>a</sup> 151 preserves two psalms, 151A and 151B, which were truncated in the Gk. (LXX) and Syr. Strugnell warns that it is "uncertain whether this secondary text [151B] ever existed in Hebrew . . ." (HTR 59 [1966] 259). Plate 17 (in Sanders,

The Psalms Scroll) shows, however, that a portion of it is preserved in 11QPs<sup>a</sup>; the MS is severely damaged at this place, yet ll. 13 and 14 are clearly extant.

151B (5ApocSyrPs 1b)

Syriac

(Text is continuous with 151A:1-5 in Syr.)

- 1 I went out to attack<sup>a</sup> the Philistine,
and he cursed me by his idols.
- 2 But after I unsheathed his sword,<sup>b</sup> I cut off his head;
and I removed the shame from the sons of Israel.<sup>c</sup> 1Sam 17:51

a. The root of the verb (npq) is used to denote a military attack. JRL Syr 7: "I invaded (or attacked) the land of the Philistine."

b. JRL Syr 7 adds "and with it"; LXX, "from him."

c. JRL Syr 7: "from the house of Israel."

PSALM 152

The original language of this psalm, which is extant only in Syriac, may be Hebrew (see nn. b and f).<sup>1</sup> In verse 1 the noun for God is 'il, which is parallel to the Hebrew word for God, 'ēl, not the Syriac name for God, 'allāhā (151:3); likewise in verse 6 'dwnywhy looks like a (probably confused) transliteration of the Hebrew word for "Lord," 'dwny, whereas the Syriac name for "Lord" is māryā (vs. 4). Comparisons with Psalms 151, 154, and 155, which are extant in Hebrew and were composed in Hebrew, demonstrate the poor poetic character of this psalm. It seems derivative, uninspired, and a mimic of biblical poetry.

It is impossible to date this psalm. The general tone, Jewish but non-rabbinic character, and association with Psalms 151, 154, and 155 indicate that it was probably composed by a Palestinian Jew during the hellenistic period.

<sup>1</sup> Strugnell (HTR 59 [1966] 259) thinks that Psalms 152-55 "certainly derive from a Hebrew text." This conclusion is open to debate; there is no evidence that they were in the Qumran library (see Sanders, The Dead Sea Psalms Scroll, p. 141). While 151, 154, and 155 in Syr. show clear evidence of a Heb. base, 152 and 153 (especially) are notably different (see nn. to the translation).

152 (5ApocSyrPs 4)

Spoken by David After Fighting Against the Lion and the Wolf Which Took Sheep from His Flocks.<sup>a</sup>

- 1 O God,<sup>b</sup> O God, come to my help;
assist me and save me;
and deliver me<sup>c</sup> from the killers.
- 2 Shall I descend to Sheol by the mouth of the lion?
Or shall the lion<sup>d</sup> maim<sup>e</sup> me?<sup>f</sup>
- 3 Is it not sufficient for them to ambush my father's flocks;<sup>g</sup>
and to tear a sheep from his sheepfold?
They are even wishing to slay me.<sup>h</sup>
- 4 Spare, O Lord, your elect one;<sup>i</sup>
and deliver your holy one from destruction;
so that he may continue praising you<sup>j</sup> in all his times,
and may praise your magnificent name.
- 5 When you have saved him from the hands of destroying<sup>k</sup> death,<sup>l</sup> and when you have rescued my captivity<sup>m</sup> from the mouths of<sup>n</sup> beasts.
- 6 Quickly, O Adonai,<sup>o</sup> send from your presence a redeemer;<sup>p</sup> and lift me up from the gaping abyss which is seeking to enclose me in its depths.

1Sam 17:34-36

a. The title is from MS A. The above translation differs from Sanders' idiomatic rendering (The Dead Sea Psalms Scroll, p. 142), because I have attempted to be literal, have occasionally used different MSS, and have translated cognate words in these Heb. and Syr. texts consistently (often missing a beautiful phrase in English).

b. The line is beautiful in Syr.: 'il 'il thā k'iyāli. The choice of the Heb. 'il (God) seems deliberate to bring out the assonance with k'iyāli (to my help).

c. Or "my soul."

d. All other Syr. MSS: "the wolf." MS A seems in error.

e. The usual meanings of this verb (bl) in the Palpel are "to confound, confuse, mar, spoil." Jastrow (Dictionary, ad loc.) cites an example in which the verb denotes an action that accelerates death. This meaning is apposite here because of the previous vs., the synonymous parallel, and vs. 3c.

f. "Me" is written kyāthi, which is a Hebraism and denotes the nota accusativi, with a prefixed redundant k, the Syr. note of the accusative. This observation plus 'il for "God" (see n. b) may indicate that this psalm was translated from Heb.

g. Lit. "to them that they lay in ambush for the flocks of my father."

h. Or "my soul."

i. All other Syr. MSS omit "your elect one."

j. Lit. "continue in your praises."

k. For "destroying," all other Syr. MSS have "and of the vicious wolf."

l. The redundancy is unattractive; all other Syr. MSS replace "death" with "lion."

m. Or "prey"; the noun seems ill-chosen.

n. All other Syr. MSS: "hands of."

o. The Heb. Adonai is employed; by error MS A reads "his Lord."

p. Or "the Redeemer."

PSALM 153

This psalm is extant only in Syriac. The original language may be Hebrew, but there is even less evidence of that hypothesis for this psalm than there is for Psalm 152.<sup>1</sup> The above statement regarding date and provenance of Psalm 152 applies to Psalm 153 as well.

<sup>1</sup> See the introduction to Psalm 152.

153 (5ApocSyrPs 5)

Spoken by David After<sup>a</sup> Receiving God's Grace When He Delivered Him from the Lion and Wolf and Those Two<sup>b</sup> He Killed by His Hands

- 1 Praise the Lord, all you nations;
glorify him and bless his name;
- 2 For he delivered the physical life<sup>c</sup> of his elect one from the hands of death;
and he redeemed his holy one from destruction.
- 3 And he saved me from the snares of Sheol;
and brought me<sup>d</sup> forth from the abyss that is inscrutable.
- 4 Because before my salvation could proceed from before him,
I almost became two parts by<sup>e</sup> two beasts.
- 5 However, he sent his angel and closed from me the gaping mouths;
and redeemed my life from destruction.
- 6 I myself<sup>f</sup> shall praise him and exalt him because of all his graces, which he has provided and is<sup>g</sup> providing for me.

1Sam 17:34-36

a. Or "while." The translation differs from Sanders' rendering for the same reasons given in n. a to 152.

b. Lit. "the two of them."

c. Or "soul." In vs. 5 "my life" is haiyai.

d. Or "my soul."

e. The lamadh denotes the cause. The Syr. is inelegant. The adverb "almost" is in the wrong place.

f. Lit. "my soul."

g. Or "will provide"; the verb is an active participle.

PSALM 154

The original language of this psalm is Hebrew. The Syriac derives directly from the Hebrew<sup>1</sup> but not necessarily from the Hebrew as preserved in 11QPs<sup>a</sup>. Because the psalm is preserved in this first-century manuscript, it must date from the first, or better the second, century B.C.<sup>2</sup> There is no reason to doubt that it was composed somewhere in Palestine.

Of Psalms 151-55 this one is most closely aligned with the thoughts in the Dead Sea Scrolls.<sup>3</sup> The "many ones" (or many) of 154:1 (only Syr.; Heb. lost) may be parallel to "the many," a technical term (Rabbim) that defines the fully initiated members of the Qumran community (cf. 1QS 6.8-7.25). The "many," however, may be only a generic reference, as it is in 155:10 and Isaiah 53:11. The Hebrew of 154:4, which has been translated "Join an assembly," could be rendered "join a yahad"; the latter is a technical term at Qumran for the community of oneness in covenant with God (cf. 1QH 11.10-14;

<sup>1</sup> For further discussion, see Strugnell, HTR 59 (1966) 272-75.

<sup>2</sup> Most of the "apocryphal" psalms in 11QPs<sup>a</sup> are from the 2nd cent. B.C. See Cross in Qumran and the History of the Biblical Text, eds. Cross and S. Talmon (Cambridge, Mass., 1975) pp. 177-95, especially p. 182; A. Hurvitz, "Observations on the Language of the Third Apocryphal Psalm from Qumran," RQ 5 (1965) 225-32; R. Polzin, "Notes on the Dating of the Non-Massoretic Psalms of 11QPs<sup>a</sup>," HTR 60 (1967) 468-76; and Skehan in Qumran: Sa piété, sa théologie, et son milieu, p. 168.

<sup>3</sup> See n. 7 to the introduction of this contribution.

3.19–23).<sup>4</sup> The phrase “join (or form) a yahad,” however, is not found elsewhere in the Dead Sea Scrolls. Other nouns that are technical terms at Qumran, but not necessarily ideas peculiar to the Dead Sea Scrolls, are “the innocent ones” in 154:3, 18 (cf. 1QS 4.22) and “the poor ones” in 154:18 (cf. 1QH 2.34, 5.13f.). Concepts cherished at Qumran are the ideas expressed in 154:10f. that the Most High accepts praise as equal to sacrifices and in 154:13f. that the righteous share in common meals and constantly study the Law;<sup>5</sup> but these emphases are also characteristic of the prophets and the practices of other Jews, especially the Pharisees. It seems, therefore, that while there is nothing peculiarly Qumranian about Psalm 154, it may be proto-Essenic and predate the exodus of the Essenes to Qumran.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>4</sup> See especially P. Wernberg-Møller, “The Nature of the YAHAD According to the Manual of Discipline and Related Documents,” ALUOS 6 (1966–68) 56–81; and J. Pouilly, “Le YAHAD, ‘Communauté de Dieu,’” in La Règle de la Communauté de Qumrân: Son évolution littéraire (Cahiers de la Revue Biblique 17; Paris, 1976) pp. 102–7.

<sup>5</sup> Skehan states that “it is interesting that this, Ps 154, is a reflex of the Essene religious assemblies and communal meals.” See Skehan in Qumrân: Sa piété, sa théologie et son milieu, p. 169.

<sup>6</sup> Sanders shows that the psalm portrays “three distinct groups”: the righteous, those addressed by them, and the wicked. He has also raised the possibility that the psalm is “proto-Essenic, or Ḥasidic.” See Sanders, The Psalms Scroll of Qumrân Cave 11, p. 69f.

154 (11QPs<sup>a</sup> 154)

Hebrew

- 1 (lost)
- 2 (lost)
- 3 [Associate]<sup>a</sup> yourselves<sup>b</sup> with the good ones;
and with the pure ones<sup>c</sup> to glorify<sup>d</sup> the Most High.
- 4 Join an assembly<sup>e</sup> to announce his salvation;
and do not be lax to announce his power
and his gloriousness<sup>f</sup> to all simple ones.
- 5 For to announce the glory (or honor) of the Lord,
wisdom has been given.
- 6 And to recount his many deeds,
she was made known<sup>g</sup> to humanity:
- 7 To announce to simple ones his power, to explain to those lacking understanding his greatness,<sup>h</sup>

a. The Heb. of 154:1–2a is lost; the verb “associate” is restored from the Syr. The above translation is different from those now available because I have attempted to translate the Syr. and Heb. versions so that cognate (and corresponding) words within each are easily recognized. Hence, Syr. mʿln and Heb. mbw in 154:8 are both rendered by “entrance.”

b. Or “your souls.”

c. Or “innocent ones.” The Heb. and Syr. have the same word, but the meanings are slightly different.

d. Heb. pʿr (beautify, glorify); Syr. sbh (glorify, praise), which corresponds to Heb. sbh (praise).

e. Or “Form an assembly (or yahad);” Heb. yhd, which is a technical term at Qumran; it meant the community of oneness in covenant with God (cf. 1QH 11.10–14; 3.19–23). See n. 1.

f. The Heb. noun for “gloriousness” (154:4, 9) is cognate with “to glorify” in 154:3b, 10a, 17a, and with “glory” in 154:5a. The theme of the psalm is clearly to glorify God’s glory, as is demonstrated by the first two vss., preserved only in Syr.: “glorify God . . . proclaim his glory . . . glorify his excellence . . . narrate his gloriousness.” Wisdom (vs. 5) was given to accomplish this task.

g. Heb. nwdʿh, “made known,” is cognate with “to announce,” in 154:4 (bis), 5, 7, and 14.

h. Sanders (The Dead Sea Psalms Scroll, p. 105): “and to explain to senseless folk his greatness . . .”

- 8 Those far from her openings,<sup>i</sup>
those banished from her entrances.
- 9 Because the Most High is the Lord of Jacob,
and his gloriousness (is) over all his deeds.
- 10 And a person who glorifies the Most High,
he accepts as one who brings a meal offering,
- 11 As one who offers he-goats and baby bulls;
as one who anoints the altar with many burnt offerings;
as sweet-smelling fragrance from the hand of the righteous ones.
- 12 From the openings<sup>j</sup> of the righteous ones is heard her voice;
and from the congregation of the pious ones her song.
- 13 When they eat with satiety she is cited;
and when they drink in association<sup>k</sup> together.<sup>l</sup>
- 14 Their meditation is on the Law of the Most High;
their words<sup>m</sup> to announce his power.
- 15 How far from the wicked ones (is) her word;<sup>n</sup>
from all haughty ones to know her.
- 16 Behold the eyes of the Lord
will have compassion upon the good ones;
- 17 And upon those who glorify him will he increase his mercy;
from an evil time will he deliver them.<sup>o</sup>
- 18 [Bless] the Lord, who redeems the poor ones from the hand of st[rangers]
[and deliver]s [. . . ,]
- 19 [. . . Ja]cob
and a judge of [. . . ;]
- 20 (lost)

i. Or "doorways" (Heb. pih) or "utterances" (Heb. mpih). The play on words is found in Heb., not in Syr. Wisdom's "openings" are associated with her "utterances."

j. Or "utterances." The play on words is possible in Heb. but not in Syr. See n. i.

k. Heb. bhbr, "in association, in fellowship," is cognate with hhbyru, "join," in 154:4.

l. Heb. yhdyw; see n. e.

m. Or "citing"; see 154:13a.

n. Or "citing"; see preceding n.

o. Or "their soul."

154 (5ApocSyrPs 2)

Syriac

The Prayer of Hezekiah When the Assyrians Were Surrounding Him and He Was Asking God Deliverance from Them So That the People Might Receive Permission from Cyrus to Return to Their Land. And They Asked God to Fulfill Their Expectation.<sup>a</sup>

- 1 In a great voice glorify<sup>b</sup> God;
in the congregation of the many ones<sup>c</sup> proclaim his glory.
- 2 And in the multitude of the upright ones glorify his excellence;
and with the faithful ones narrate his gloriousness.
- 3 Associate yourselves<sup>d</sup> with the good ones;
and with the innocent ones to glorify the Most High.
- 4 Gather<sup>e</sup> together to announce his power;
and do not neglect to declare his<sup>f</sup> salvation,
and his glory to all children.<sup>g</sup>
- 5 So that the honor<sup>h</sup> of the Lord shall be made known,<sup>i</sup> wisdom has been given.<sup>j</sup>
- 6 And to narrate his works,
she has made known<sup>k</sup> to humanity:
- 7 To announce to children his power,
and to explain to those lacking understanding<sup>l</sup> his gloriousness,
- 8 Those who are far<sup>m</sup> from her entrances,
and are dispersed from her gate.
- 9 Because the Most High is the Lord of Jacob,
and his pride is over all his works.<sup>n</sup>
- 10 And a person<sup>o</sup> who glorifies the Most High,
he accepts<sup>p</sup> as one who offers a meal offering.<sup>q</sup>

a. The title is from MS A, but it is very late and has little relation to the content of the psalm.

b. In Pss 151–53 šbh is translated as “praise”; here it denotes “glory.” Uppermost in the poet’s mind is the concept of glorifying (or praising) God’s glory. The root šbh or its cognates appear in vss. 1 (bis), 2 (bis), 3, 4, 7, 10, and 17. The masculine noun for “praise, honor, glory,” šwbh, is translated “glory”; the feminine noun with the same meaning, šbwh<sup>r</sup> is distinguished as “gloriousness.”

c. “The congregation of the many” is a technical term in the Dead Sea Scrolls, but it probably no longer retained this meaning in the latter Syriac-speaking churches.

d. Or “your (plural) soul”; proposed npškw (your souls); the emendation is not demanded, since npškw can mean “your souls.”

e. Or “be gathered.”

f. Ignore the supralinear dot that indicates the feminine pronoun; such dots are later than the date of composition of this psalm.

g. Or “infants”; the noun is plural and frequently denotes boys and girls under five years old.

h. Or “glory” (another word than employed herein), “magnificence.”

i. Or “understood, ascertained.”

j. MS A incorrectly has added the Nestorian vocalization for the first-person-singular pronoun.

k. Again, see n. j; the Nestorian vocalization is incorrectly first common singular.

l. Lit. “those in want of a heart (or mind)”; but both the Syr. and Heb. phrases really mean “those who are senseless (or stupid).” The Semite thought of his chest or breast as the place of intelligence and feeling.

m. Both verbs in this vs. appear to be passive participles.

n. Or “his servants”; but see vs. 6.

o. Or “man,” “mortal.”

p. In Psalm 151:5 šb<sup>r</sup> with b<sup>r</sup> means “choose.”

q. Good English demands this translation; but “offers” and “offering” are not cognate in Syr.

- 11 And as one who offers he-goats and baby bulls;<sup>r</sup> and as he who anoints the altar with many burnt offerings;
and as sweet-smelling fragrance from the hand of the righteous ones.
- 12 From the gates of the just ones is heard her<sup>s</sup> voice;
and from the voice of the just ones her<sup>t</sup> admonition.
- 13 And concerning their food fullness (is) in truth;
and concerning their feast their portions<sup>u</sup> (are) together.
- 14 Their discussions (are) on the Law of the Most High;
and their word is to announce his power.
- 15 How far from the wicked ones (is) her<sup>v</sup> word;
and from all evil ones her<sup>w</sup> understanding.
- 16 Behold the eye of the Lord
will have pity upon the good ones;
- 17 And upon those who glorify him will he increase mercies;
and from an evil time will he redeem them.<sup>x</sup>
- 18 Blessed be the Lord who saves the poor ones from the hand of strangers;
and redeems the innocent ones from the hand of the evil ones;
- 19 Who raises<sup>y</sup> the horn from Jacob,
and the judge of the nations<sup>z</sup> from Israel;
- 20 So<sup>a2</sup> that he may prolong<sup>b2</sup> his sojourn in Zion;
and may cause adornment<sup>c2</sup> forever in Jerusalem.

r. Lit. "sons of bulls."

s. Or "his." There is no dot over the Hē.

t. Or "his." There is no dot over the Hē.

u. All other MSS: "in fellowship"; "And concerning their feast in fellowship (are they) together." This vs. is difficult to understand; Strugnell (HTR 59 [1966] 273) judges it to be "clearly unsatisfactory" in both Heb. and Syr.

v. Or "his."

w. Or "his."

x. Or "their souls."

y. Or "rouses up, appoints, promises."

z. Or "the peoples."

a2. The exhortation is to bless the Lord so he will prolong his habitation in Jerusalem.

b2. Or "he may continue."

c2. According to extant lexicons šbt is not used in the Aphel; but the meaning, form, and Nestorian vocalization indicate that here it is an Aphel.

PSALM 155

Hebrew is the original language of the psalm. As with Psalm 154, the Syriac appears to derive directly from the Hebrew.<sup>1</sup> This psalm is not Qumranian but biblical; it is similar in style to Psalm 22. Since it is extant in 11QPs<sup>a</sup> it must date at least from the first century B.C. and is probably much earlier. The Syriac translator is gifted;<sup>2</sup> he cannot be identified with the author of Psalms 152 and 153 (if one were to assume a Syr. original for them). Like most of the canonical (or Masoretic) psalms,<sup>3</sup> this psalm is generic in thought and tone; hence it is impossible to discern its author, date, or provenance.

<sup>1</sup> See Strugnell (HTR 59 [1966] 275f.) and the nn. to the translation below.

<sup>2</sup> See the nn. to both translations.

<sup>3</sup> In Heb. it is even constructed in acrostics; see Skehan, "A Broken Acrostic and Psalm 9," CBQ 27 (1965) 1-5; P. Auffret, "Structure littéraire et interprétation du Psaume 155 de la croce XI de Qumrân," RQ 9 (1978) 323-56; and Magne, "Le Psaume 154 et le Psaume 155," RQ 9 (1977) 95-111.

155 (11QPs<sup>a</sup> 155)

Hebrew<sup>a</sup>

- 1 O Lord, I called unto you,
be attentive to me.
- 2 I spread forth my palms,
toward your holy dwelling;
- 3 Incline your ear;
and give me my request.
- 4 And my petition
do not hold back from me.
- 5 Build me<sup>b</sup> up;
and do not cast me<sup>c</sup> down.
- 6 And do not abandon (me)
before the wicked ones.
- 7 The rewards of evil,
may the Judge of Truth remove<sup>d</sup> from me.
- 8 O Lord, do not condemn me according to my sins;
for no one living is righteous before you.
- 9 O Lord, instruct me in your Law;
and teach me your statutes;<sup>e</sup>
- 10 So<sup>f</sup> many may hear of your deeds,
and nations may honor your magnificence.<sup>g</sup>
- 11 Remember me and do not forget me;
and do not let me enter that which is too difficult for me.<sup>h</sup>
- 12 The sins of my youth cast far from me;
and my transgressions do not remember against me.
- 13 O Lord, purify me from the evil plague;
and do not let it again turn back<sup>i</sup> to me.
- 14 Dry up its roots from me;
and do not let its le[av]es bloom in me.
- 15 Magnificent<sup>j</sup> are you, O Lord;
hence complete<sup>k</sup> my request from before you.

a. There is no title in the Heb. For the means of translating, see n. a to 154.

b. Or "my soul."

c. Lit. "do not cast it down."

d. Or "cause to turn back."

e. Heb. mšprykh (statutes) which is cognate with špry (do not condemn me) in 155:8.

f. Lit. "and."

g. Or "glory, honor."

h. Or, with Sanders (The Dead Sea Psalms Scroll, p. 111): "and lead me not into situations too hard for me."

i. See n. d.

j. See n. g.

k. Heb. šlm in the Piel, imperative with Hē.

- 16 To whom may I cry and he would give to me?
And human beings, what can [their] pow[er] add?
- 17 From befo[r]e you, O Lord, is my trust.
I called, "O Lord," and he answered me;
[and he healed] my broken heart.
- 18 I slumbered [and I s]lept;
I dreamed, nevertheless . . .
- 19 (lost)
- 20 (lost)
- 21 (lost)

155 (5ApocSyrPs 3)

Syriac

The Prayer of Hezekiah When the Assyrians Surrounded Him and He Asked God Deliverance<sup>a</sup> from Them<sup>b</sup>

- 1 O Lord, I called to you,
hearken to me.
- 2 I stretched out my hands
to the dwellings of your holiness;
- 3 Incline your ear;
and grant me my request.
- 4 My prayer
do not withhold from me.
- 5 Build me<sup>c</sup> up;<sup>d</sup>
and do not destroy me.<sup>e</sup>
- 6 And do not uncover me<sup>f</sup>
before the wicked ones.
- 7 The rewards of evil turn from me,
O Judge of Truth.
- 8 O Lord, do not judge me according to my sins;
because guilty<sup>g</sup> before you is every life.<sup>h</sup>
- 9 O Lord, explain to me your Law;
and teach<sup>i</sup> me your judgments;

a. The Syr. is ghyr<sup>2</sup>; elsewhere ps<sup>2</sup> is represented by the English verb and cognates "to deliver."

b. The title is from MS A, but it is late and has no basis in the psalm itself.

c. Or "my soul."

d. MS A (seek it) is corrupt; read with other Syr. MSS and the Heb., which has bnh, "build."

e. Lit. "do not destroy it."

f. Lit. "do not uncover it."

g. Lit. "not innocent" or "not free from guilt."

h. The close order of words between the Syr. and Heb. indicates that the former derives directly from the latter, and not through a Gk. intermediary.

i. Syr. 'lpyny; lmd in Syr. obtained a meaning different from lmd in Heb. (cf. the Heb.).

- 10 So that many<sup>j</sup> may hear of your works, and the nations<sup>k</sup> may give thanks for your honor.<sup>l</sup>
- 11 Remember me and do not forget me;
and do not let me enter<sup>m</sup> that which is too difficult for me.
- 12 The sins of my childhood remove<sup>n</sup> from me;
and my insolence<sup>o</sup> do not remember against me.
- 13 O Lord, cleanse me from the evil leprosy;<sup>p</sup> and do not let it again return<sup>q</sup> to me.
- 14 Dry up its roots from me;
and do not let its leaves bud in me.
- 15 Powerful and great are you, O Lord;
hence,<sup>r</sup> my request will be fulfilled<sup>s</sup> from before you.
- 16 To whom may I complain and he would give to me?
And human beings, what can their strength add (for me)?
- 17 From before you, O Lord, (is) my confidence.
I called to the Lord, and he answered me;
and he healed my broken heart.
- 18 I slumbered and slept;
I dreamed, nevertheless I was aroused.<sup>t</sup>
- 19 And you supported me, O Lord.
And I shall render (thanks)<sup>u</sup> because the Lord has delivered<sup>v</sup> me.
- 20 Now I shall behold their shame;
I trusted in you and shall not be ashamed.
Give honor (to the Lord) for ever and ever.
- 21 Save Israel, your elect one;
and those of the house of Jacob, your chosen<sup>w</sup> one.

j. Or "the many"; see n. c to 154 (5ApocSyrPs 2).

k. Or "peoples."

l. Or "your glory, magnificence."

m. The same verb in the same verbal stem is used in Mt 6:13 in the Peshitta: "and do not let us enter into temptation."

n. Or "transfer, cause to pass."

o. Or "disobedience, rebellion."

p. A scribe wrote grb' in the margin of MS A; Baars (The Old Testament in Syriac, p. iv) takes this note as a correction to what is in the text of MS A: grb', "the man."

q. The Nestorian vowels in MS A denote the Apher infinitive; the Pe'al infinitive is also possible (cf. Nöldeke, Compendious Syriac Grammar, p. 108).

r. Or "on this account."

s. All other Syr. MSS: "will be full (or complete)."

t. This passive voice reflects the divine passive and means "the Lord aroused me" (cf. next vs.). All other Syr. MSS: "I was helped."

u. The vs. is difficult to translate; the verb qbl means render thanks with rybw', which may have been lost through copying. In the margin of MS A (and in 18E1) sgp lby, "he injured my heart." The Heb. is lost because of the scroll's condition.

v. Or "tried (or approved) one." At the end of the collection of psalms a scribe adds in MS A: "So ends, by the assistance of our Lord, the writing of the Psalms of the blessed David, the prophet and king, with the five psalms which are not among the Greek or Hebrew numbering. However, as they are said (and) preserved in Syriac so we have copied them for him who desires (a copy)."

PRAYER OF MANASSEH

(Second Century B.C.—First Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY J. H. CHARLESWORTH

Eventually, and perhaps originally, attributed to Manasseh (687–642 B.C.), the son of the righteous king Hezekiah, but the wickedest king of Judah (2Kgs 21:1–8, 2Chr 33:1–20; cf. 2Bar 64:8), this short prayer is a penitential psalm, or individual lament of personal sin (“ein individuelles Klagelied”). Twice the author confesses his sin and twice he pleads for absolution from sin; constantly he appeals to the Lord’s graciousness. The poetic thought is beautiful and penetrating; the high point is the perception of inward contrition: “And now behold I am bending the knees of my heart before you.”

The prayer contains three main sections: an invocation: praise to the Lord for his works of creation (vss. 1–4) and acknowledgment of the Lord’s fury against sinners and of his multitudinous mercies (vss. 5–7); a confession: a personal lament and confession (vss. 8–10); and an entreaty: a supplication for pardon (vss. 11–13) and an expression of trust in God’s grace and a concluding doxology (vss. 14f.).

Texts

The following translation is based upon the Syriac text (usually right col.) as edited by W. Baars and H. Schneider (“Prayer of Manasseh,” The Old Testament in Syriac According to the Peshitta Version [Leiden, 1972] part 4, fasc. 6, pp. i–vii, 1–9). Significant variants in the Greek are noted, following the edition by A. Rahlfs (Psalmi cum Odis: Septuaginta: Societatis Scientiarum Göttingensis [Göttingen, 1931] vol. 10, pp. 361–63).<sup>1</sup> Baars and Schneider have based their right column upon the version preserved in the ninth-century Syriac manuscript in the Mediceo-Laurenziana Library in Florence, Italy (9aI) and in the Syriac manuscripts of the Didaschalia Apostolorum (especially 10DI and 13DI). Their left column, used infrequently below (see nn.), is according to the tenth-century Syriac manuscript in the Saltykov-Shchedrin State Public Library in Leningrad, U.S.S.R.; it is Syr. MS, New Series 19, and is abbreviated 10f. Rahlfs’s Greek text is based upon the fifth-century Codex Alexandrinus—the earliest Greek text—which is in the British Museum, in London. Variants in other manuscripts and editions are occasionally discussed in the notes to the translation (T is Codex Turicensis, of the seventh century, now in Zurich).

Original language

While hundreds of Hebrew and Aramaic manuscripts have been found in the Near East during the past three decades, it is noteworthy that an Aramaic or Hebrew version of the Prayer of Manasseh has not been recovered. This fact should not be taken as proof for the position that the prayer was composed in Greek, even though this hypothesis is defended by many scholars, namely (among the earlier scholars) L. E. T. André,<sup>2</sup> J. B. Frey,<sup>3</sup> O. F. Fritzsche,<sup>4</sup> H. E. Ryle,<sup>5</sup> V. Ryssel,<sup>6</sup> E. Schürer,<sup>7</sup> (and among the more recent scholars) W. Baumgartner,<sup>8</sup> L. H. Brockington,<sup>9</sup> A.-M. Denis,<sup>10</sup> O. Eissfeldt,<sup>11</sup> L. Rost,<sup>12</sup> H. H. Rowley,<sup>13</sup> H.-P. Rüger,<sup>14</sup> and M. E. Stone;<sup>15</sup> cf. C. Stuhlmueller.<sup>16</sup> Perhaps with his mind on only the Greek, D. Flusser<sup>17</sup> offers the sane advice that in its "present form the prayer is Greek in origin, but it may have existed in a Hebrew version, of which the Greek is a free adaptation."

<sup>1</sup> The Gk. in the Göttingen edition is the same (minus the critical nn.) as in the later, convenient “Handausgabe” by Rahlfs (Septuaginta, vol. 2, pp. 180f.). The Lat. version is not used herein; it is late and derivative: Jerome did not translate it and (contrary to some published reports) no Old Lat. version is extant. For the Lat. see the appendix to R. Weber (ed.) Biblia sacra iuxta vulgatam versionem, 2 vols. (Stuttgart, 1969) vol. 2, p. 1909. Also see H. Schneider, “Der Vulgata-Text der Oratio Manasse,” BZ n.F. 4 (1960) 277–82.

Other scholars are convinced that the original language is Semitic; among these, most noteworthy are C. J. Ball,<sup>18</sup> K. Budde,<sup>19</sup> R. H. Charles,<sup>20</sup> L. Couard,<sup>21</sup> W. O. E. Oesterley,<sup>22</sup> R. H. Pfeiffer,<sup>23</sup> and C. C. Torrey,<sup>24</sup> cf. J. C. Dancy.<sup>25</sup> C. Westermann advises, "It is not certain if the original language was Hebrew (or Aramaic) or Greek, but [the Prayer of Manasseh] throughout has a Semitic structure."<sup>26</sup>

The scholarly stature of the specialists who favor a Semitic original, the lack of a detailed examination of the question by proponents of either a Greek or a Semitic original, and the cavalier treatment of the Syriac version(s) by almost all scholars should warn against concluding with some authors<sup>27</sup> that the issue is closed and the original language is Greek. While the notes to the following translation demonstrate that the Syriac version sometimes preserves a more reliable tradition, and while I tend to favor slightly a Semitic original, three factors preclude certainty regarding a resolution of the issue for the present. First, the

<sup>2</sup> L. E. T. André, Les Apocryphes de l'Ancien Testament (Florence, 1903) p. 241: "The Prayer of Manasseh was composed in Greek. The style, without being classical, is sufficiently fluent; it approximates, nevertheless, that of the LXX version, particularly of the Psalms." It is obvious that André considered only the Gk. version.

<sup>3</sup> J. B. Frey in DB Sup., vol. 1, col. 443.

<sup>4</sup> O. F. Fritzsche, Kurzgefasstes exegetisches Handbuch zu den Apokryphen des Alten Testaments (Leipzig, 1851) p. 157.

<sup>5</sup> H. E. Ryle, "Prayer of Manasses," in APOT, vol. 1, pp. 614f.

<sup>6</sup> V. Ryssel, "Das Gebet Manasse," APAT, vol. 1, pp. 165-68.

<sup>7</sup> E. Schürer, History, div. 2, vol. 3, p. 188.

<sup>8</sup> W. Baumgartner, "Manasse-Gebet," RGZ<sup>3</sup>, (1960) vol. 4, p. 708.

<sup>9</sup> L. H. Brockington, A Critical Introduction to the Apocrypha (London, 1961) p. 101.

<sup>10</sup> A.-M. Denis, Introduction, p. 181.

<sup>11</sup> O. Eissfeldt, The Old Testament: An Introduction, trans. P. R. Ackroyd (New York, 1965) p. 588.

<sup>12</sup> L. Rost, Judaism Outside the Hebrew Canon: An Introduction to the Documents, trans. D. E. Green (Nashville, 1976) p. 95.

<sup>13</sup> H. H. Rowley, The Origin and Significance of the Apocrypha (London, 1967) p. 8.

<sup>14</sup> H.-P. Rüger in Theologische Realenzyklopädie, vol. 1, p. 304. I am grateful to the editors of this distinguished series for rushing page proofs of this article to me.

<sup>15</sup> M. E. Stone, "Apocryphal Notes and Readings," Israel Oriental Studies 1 (1971) 123-31; see p. 128. Stone lists some words in the PrMan that are "rare and completely unknown" in the LXX and opines that this "is persuasive in the direction of the hypothesis of a Greek original." But the PrMan was only added to some MSS of the LXX, and many of the words Stone cites are typical of the NT; moreover, cannot a Gk. translator use sophisticated Gk.?

<sup>16</sup> C. Stuhlmueller in New Catholic Encyclopedia, vol. 2, p. 403.

<sup>17</sup> D. Flusser in The New Encyclopaedia Britannica, Macropaedia, vol. 2, p. 933.

<sup>18</sup> C. J. Ball in Apocrypha, ed. H. Wace (London, 1888) vol. 2, pp. 361-71. N.V.

<sup>19</sup> K. Budde, "Zum hebräischen Klagelied," ZAW 12 (1892) 31-51; especially p. 40: "There are only a few terms which are difficult or impossible to translate back into Hebrew, and these can be due to translation and transmission." (I have translated rather freely.) According to Budde (and others), this opinion was also held by Ewald (but I have not been able to locate a published argument by him).

<sup>20</sup> R. H. Charles appended a significant note to Ryle's discussion of the original language; cf. APOT, vol. 1, pp. 614f. Also see Charles's Religious Development Between the Old and the New Testaments (London, 1914) p. 215, in which he reported that Ryle "is not definitely opposed to the hypothesis of a Hebrew original. The present writer has sought to show [he does not state where, but it is obviously in APOT] that only by retranslation into Hebrew (or Aramaic) can certain corruptions in the text be removed." Unfortunately he does not consult the extant Syr.

<sup>21</sup> L. Couard, Die religiösen und sittlichen Anschauungen der alttestamentlichen Apokryphen und Pseudepigraphen (Gütersloh, 1907) p. 5.

<sup>22</sup> W. O. E. Oesterley, An Introduction to the Books of the Apocrypha (New York, 1935) p. 298.

<sup>23</sup> R. H. Pfeiffer, History, p. 459.

<sup>24</sup> C. C. Torrey, Apoc. Lit., p. 68. "The original language of the prayer was not Greek, but Hebrew."

<sup>25</sup> J. C. Dancy, The Shorter Books of the Apocrypha (Cambridge, England, 1972) p. 243. H. H. Howorth thought the PrMan was originally composed in Aram. (p. 95) and reported that Ewald and Furst thought the original language was Semitic. Proceedings of the Soc. of Bibl. Arch. 31 (1909) 89-99.

<sup>26</sup> C. Westermann, "Manasse, Gebet des," BHH, vol. 2, col. 1137.

<sup>27</sup> Cf. especially Eissfeldt, Introduction, p. 558 ("clearly originally composed in Greek"); and Denis, Introduction, p. 181 ("La langue originale a sans doute été le grec").

text of the Prayer of Manasseh is too short to provide sufficient data to explore the question. Second, the history of the transmission of the extant Greek and Syriac texts is unclear and confusing. Both Greek versions, the one in the Apostolic Constitutions and the Odae appended to Codex Alexandrinus and Codex Turicensis, may derive from the now lost Greek of the Didascalía, and this may have been translated from a Semitic original. Conversely the Syriac versions may derive from the extant Syriac version of the Didascalía, which was translated from the Greek Didascalía. Other possibilities could obviously be suggested, but the confusing nature of the extant Greek and Syriac versions and the unknown history of transmission for each leave us presently uncertain as to whether the original language of the Prayer of Manasseh is Greek or Semitic (Hebrew or Aramaic). Third, because of a more sensitive awareness of early Jewish culture—especially the influence of Greek upon Semitic languages and, of course, the reverse—and because of the abundant evidence of Greek influence within Palestine, it has become more and more difficult to distinguish between Greek that was translated from a Semitic source and Greek that was composed by a hellenistic Jew who was fluent in numerous languages.

Date

Despite J. A. Fabricius',<sup>28</sup> J.-P. Migne's,<sup>29</sup> and F. Nau's<sup>30</sup> dated conclusion that the Prayer of Manasseh was composed by the author of the Apostolic Constitutions and despite recent comments by Eissfeldt<sup>31</sup> and R. E. Brown,<sup>32</sup> there can be no doubt that the Prayer of Manasseh predates the destruction of Jerusalem.<sup>33</sup> A distinguished group of scholars contend that the Prayer of Manasseh was composed in the second century B.C.<sup>34</sup> It is safe to conclude that it was composed either in the second or the first century B.C.,<sup>35</sup> with the recognition that it also could have been composed during the early part of the first century A.D.

The Prayer of Manasseh is probably an expansion of Chronicles (see below); hence it must postdate Chronicles (c. 4th cent. B.C.). On the other end of the continuum, it must predate the Didascalía (3rd cent. A.D.). The two limits can be reduced, since the portions of Chronicles that pertain to a prayer by Manasseh are possibly a late scribal addition and because the Prayer of Manasseh must date from a much earlier period than the Didascalía. The parallels with other Jewish apocryphal works (see below), especially the similarities to the additions to Daniel, and post-biblical phrases and concepts—such as the concept of the Lord's sweetness (vss. 7b, 11), "O Lord, God of the righteous ones" (vs. 8), the concept of a heart with knees (vs. 11), "God of the repenters" (vs. 13)—indicate the probability that this Jewish prayer was composed sometime in the last two centuries B.C.

<sup>28</sup> Fabricius, Libri veteris testamenti apocryphi (Leipzig, 1694) p. 208. N.V.

<sup>29</sup> J.-P. Migne, Dictionnaire des apocryphes (Paris, 1856) vol. 1, col. 850.

<sup>30</sup> F. Nau, "Un Extrait de la Didascalie: La Prière de Manassé (avec une édition de la version syriac)," ROC 13 (1908) 134–44, especially p. 137. E. Nestle claimed that the PrMan was composed by the author of the Didascalía. Septuagintastudien (Stuttgart, 1899) vol. 3, pp. 17f.

<sup>31</sup> Eissfeldt, Introduction, p. 588.

<sup>32</sup> R. E. Brown surprisingly states that the PrMan "was originally composed in Greek by a Jew in the 1st or 2nd cent. A.D.," JBC, p. 541.

<sup>33</sup> This is the opinion of most scholars; cf. e.g. Budde, ZAW 12 (1892) 40; Howorth, "Some Unconventional Views on the Text of the Bible: The Prayer of Manasses and the Book of Esther," Proceedings of the Soc. of Bibl. Arch. 31 (1909) 93; André, Les Apocryphes, p. 242; B. M. Metzger, Intr. to the Apoc., p. 125; idem in EncyJud, vol. 11, col. 854. Torrey (Apoc. Lit., p. 69) and A. Wikgren (in IDB, vol. 3, p. 256) conclude that the PrMan was composed in the 1st cent. B.C. or the 1st cent. A.D. Westermann (BHH, vol. 2, col. 1137) suggests it was composed sometime between the 2nd cent. B.C. and the 1st cent. A.D. S. Sandmel (Judaism and Christian Beginnings [New York, 1978] p. 70) advises that it "comes from the period between 200 and 50 B.C." Pfeiffer (History, pp. 459f.) settles on sometime between 250 B.C. and "the beginning of our era, presumably in the first century B.C." Rieger calls for caution and places it in the pre-Christian period, in Theologische Realenzyklopädie, vol. 1, p. 304. P. Riessler claimed it probably dated from the time of Antiochus Epiphanes or of Pompey (p. 1291).

<sup>34</sup> Viz. Ball, in Apocrypha, ed. Wace, vol. 2, pp. 361–71, N.V.; Fritzsche, Handbuch, p. 157; E. J. Goodspeed, The Story of the Apocrypha (Chicago, 1939) p. 54; Oesterley, Introduction, p. 297; Rowley, Origin, p. 8; Ryssel in APAT, vol. 1, p. 167.

<sup>35</sup> Flusser prefers the 1st cent. B.C.; see his comments in The New Encyclopaedia Britannica, Macropaedia, vol. 2, p. 933.

Provenance

As with almost all of the Pseudepigrapha, it is practically impossible to discern if the document under examination was composed in the Diaspora or in Palestine. Goodspeed<sup>36</sup> and Rost<sup>37</sup> thought the Prayer of Manasseh was from Egypt; and Wikgren<sup>38</sup> opined it may come from Alexandria. But Pfeiffer<sup>39</sup> and Metzger<sup>40</sup> are certainly correct in stating that the theological concepts in the Prayer of Manasseh are not characteristic of Diaspora Judaism and are in harmony with the teachings of Palestinian Judaism. Certainty is impossible, but the provenance of the Prayer of Manasseh may be Jerusalem or its environs.

Historical and theological importance

The opinion of Fabricius, Migne, and Nau, mentioned above, according to which the author of the Prayer of Manasseh is identified as a "Christian," is no longer persuasive. The author was obviously a Jew, as almost all specialists today recognize;<sup>41</sup> he shares with other early Jews the intriguing mixture of racial particularism with the perception of universalism. For example, the old and pervasive concept of God's covenantal unity with Israel alone opens the prayer: "O Lord, God of our fathers, God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, and of their righteous offspring." Focus is limited not only to the descendants of Abraham but also, in accordance with post-exilic theology, to their righteous remnant (which is an emphasis developed in Jewish apocalyptic thought, cf. e.g. 1En 83:8; 4Ezra 12:34; 2Bar 40:2; SibOr 5.384; cf. HistRech 7-9).<sup>42</sup> Later in the prayer a universal tone may appear: The Lord feels sorry "over the evils of men" and has appointed "repentance as the salvation for sinners" (vss. 7a and 7b); God is described as "God of the righteous ones" (vs. 8; this may not be universalistic, because the righteous ones are described as "such as Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob") and "God of the repenters" (vs. 13).

Before translating the Prayer of Manasseh, I thought it may have been only eventually attributed to Manasseh, since his name does not appear in the prayer and since no clear statements in it demand attribution to this wicked king. But the abundant descriptions in the prayer are strikingly reminiscent of the Chronicler's account of him; note, for example, the following selections:

| 2 Chronicles 33  | Prayer of Manasseh  |
|--|---|
| verse   | verse  |
| 6 [Manasseh] . . . provoking his[Yahweh's] anger                     | 10 I provoked yourfury [or anger](cf. vs. 13)                       |
| 7 [Manasseh] . . . placed . . . the idol. . . in the Temple          | 10 I set up idols   |
| 11 Manasseh with hooks,. . . in chains . . . led . . .away . . . | 9b I am ensnared10 I am bent by a multitude of ironchains           |
| 12 humbling himself deeply beforethe God of his ancestors . . .      | 11 I am bending the knees of my heartbefore you1 God of our fathers |

<sup>36</sup> Goodspeed, Story, p. 52.

<sup>37</sup> Rost, Judaism, p. 95.

<sup>38</sup> Wikgren, in IDB, vol. 4, p. 256.

<sup>39</sup> Pfeiffer, History, p. 459.

<sup>40</sup> Metzger, Intr. to the Apoc., p. 125.

<sup>41</sup> The list of names is very long; it includes Fritzsche, Handbuch, p. 158; Ryssel in APAT, vol. 1, p. 167; Ryle in APOT, vol. 1, p. 612; Pfeiffer, History, p. 459; Oesterley, Introduction, p. 297; Torrey, Apoc. Lit., p. 68; Rost, Judaism, p. 95; Westermann, BHH, vol. 2, col. 1137; Dancy, Shorter Books, p. 243; Baumgartner, RGG<sup>3</sup>, vol. 4, p. 708; Rülger, Theologische Realenzyklopädie, vol. 1, p. 304; Goodspeed, Story, p. 56; E. Oswald, "Gebet Manasses," JSHRZ, 4.1, p. 20.

<sup>42</sup> The concept was inherited from the prophets, especially Isaiah (cf. 7:3), his "school" (viz. 10:20-22, 11:10-16, 28:5, 37:32), and Zephaniah (2f.). See the excellent, succinct discussion by E. Jenni in IDB, vol. 4, pp. 32f.

It is now clear to me that the Prayer of Manasseh—as most critics have claimed<sup>43</sup>—was probably composed with 2 Chronicles in mind. Brown rightly states that it is “a pseudonymous attempt to fill in the prayer of King Manasseh (687–642) mentioned in 2 Chr 33:11–13 . . .”<sup>44</sup>

The above discussion explains partially why the Prayer of Manasseh should now be considered within the Pseudepigrapha: It is obviously prior to A.D. 70, Jewish, and pseudepigraphically attributed to Manasseh. Most scholars today acknowledge that the Apocrypha should be defined exclusively—to exclude documents not in the Septuagint—because the Pseudepigrapha is conceived inclusively—to include many more documents than those brought together, for example, by Kautzsch and Charles.<sup>45</sup> The Prayer of Manasseh is not part of the Septuagint,<sup>46</sup> it does not appear in Codex Vaticanus or Codex Sinaiticus; and it is appended to the Psalter, within the Odae, in Codex Alexandrinus and in Codex Turicensis.<sup>47</sup>

One of the most beautiful and eloquent utterances of the human heart, this poem preserves the measured, articulated need for divine forgiveness and acceptance. Emphasis is placed upon unworthiness—the Greek verb (the aorist imperative of aniēmi) for “forgive” in verse 13 means “let go unpunished”<sup>48</sup>; the punishment experienced is considered just (vs. 9b), and the inability to lift the head or eyes is confessedly deserved (vs. 10). Although the prayer was probably originally attributed to Manasseh, the author must have been introspectively aware of his own frailties, and so it is generically evocative to others, as we shall see, who are sensitive to God’s demands and grace. Thus, two main ideas permeate the verses: God’s infinite mercy and grace, and the assurance that authentic repentance is efficacious.<sup>49</sup> Other significant concepts are the power of God’s name,<sup>50</sup> the idea that righteousness is through God alone,<sup>51</sup> the concept that the patriarchs (Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob) “did not sin” (vs. 8),<sup>52</sup> and the idea that chastisements are good and atone for sin.<sup>53</sup> But the central focus of this document is repentance, which comes to expression as a prayer with four main features: (1) acknowledgment of God’s infinite powers (vss. 1–7b), (2) full and humble confession of sins (vss. 8–13), (3) affirmation of God’s power (vss. 7a, 7b, 8)

<sup>43</sup> Notably, cf. Baumgartner in RGG<sup>3</sup>, vol. 4, p. 708; Brockington, Introduction, p. 101; Denis, Introduction, p. 177; Flusser in The New Encyclopaedia Britannica, Macropaedia, vol. 2, p. 933; Goodspeed, Story, p. 53f.; Oesterley, Introduction, p. 295; Pfeiffer, History, p. 457; Rost, Judaism, p. 95; Ryle in APOT, vol. 1, p. 614; Ryssel in APAT, vol. 1, p. 165; Schürer, History, div. 2, vol. 3, p. 188; Westermann in BHH, vol. 2, col. 1137; Wikgren in IDB, vol. 3, p. 255; G. F. Moore, Judaism in the First Centuries of the Christian Era, 3 vols. (Cambridge, Mass., 1927–30 [reprinted 1950]), vol. 1, p. 514.

<sup>44</sup> R. E. Brown in JBC, p. 541.

<sup>45</sup> See Charlesworth, PMR, especially pp. 17–25.

<sup>46</sup> The most common error by scholars who have written on the PrMan is to assume that it is part of the LXX (perhaps this mistake arises because the PrMan is in many modern versions of the LXX, including Swete’s Old Testament in Greek and Rahlfs’s Septuaginta). Oesterley did not become so confused; he warned, “. . . as a matter of fact it never has formed part of the Septuagint text” (Introduction, p. 295).

<sup>47</sup> Long ago E. Nestle warned that the PrMan was not part of the LXX; he claimed that it was eventually considered a biblical book because of Luther’s inclusion of it in the Weimarer Ausgabe and appreciation for it. See Nestle’s Septuagintastudien, vol. 3, pp. 3–22.

<sup>48</sup> The NEB correctly renders it “spare me, O Lord, spare me.” The import is that the confessor acknowledges that he deserves punishment; forgiveness is only because of God’s grace (cf. vs. 14).

<sup>49</sup> So also Ryle in APOT, vol. 1, p. 615; and Metzger, EncyJud, vol. 11, col. 855.

<sup>50</sup> Cf. E. E. Urbach, “The Power of the Divine Name,” The Sages: Their Concepts and Beliefs, trans. I. Abraham (Jerusalem, 1975) pp. 124–34, especially see pp. 125f. See the discussion in my contribution on PrJac.

<sup>51</sup> See n. 48; cf. IQH 13:16–19; 16:11f. Also see 2Bar 84:11 (“For if he [the Mighty One] judges us not according to the multitude of his grace, woe to all of us who are born.” Cf. 2Bar 75:5).

<sup>52</sup> Some pseudepigrapha claim that a few persons have been free from sin; note e.g. Tob 3:14, Jub 27:18, T12P (especially T1ss 7:1–9, TLevi 10:2, TZeb 1:4), LAE 18:1, TAB 10, 2Bar 9:1, ApSedr 15; contrast PssSol 9:15 (sins are attributed to the righteous), LAB 19:9, 4Ezra 4:30. It is difficult to reconcile such claims with 1Kgs 8:46 (“for there is no man who does not sin”). For a recent study of this theme in a few early Jewish documents see A. Strobel, Erkenntnis und Bekenntnis der Sünde in neutestamentlicher Zeit (Arbeiten zur Theologie 1.37; Stuttgart, 1968).

<sup>53</sup> Akiba used Manasseh to argue “that chastisements are very precious.” See the discussion and text in J. Neuser, Eliezer ben Hyrcanus: The Tradition and the Man (SJLA 3, 4; Leiden, 1973; vol. 1, pp. 404f.). Also see the earlier publication by A. Büchler, Studies in Sin and Atonement in the Rabbinic Literature of the First Century (Oxford, 1928). For a recent study, which unfortunately mentions the PrMan only in a minor footnote (p. 133), see H. Thyen, Studien zur Sündenvergebung im Neuen Testament und seinen alttestamentlichen und jüdischen Voraussetzungen (FRLANT 96; Göttingen, 1970).

and willingness to forgive (vs. 14), and (4) a commitment to return to righteous conduct and proper celebration and praise (vs. 15).

Relation to canonical books

The Prayer of Manasseh does not quote any canonical book; but it was composed by a Jew whose composition revealed how well he had learned his Bible. Our prayer is very close to Psalm 51, "the typical prayer of the penitent sinner in the canon,"<sup>54</sup> and to Psalms 25 and 103. As J. K. Zink states, the "prayer seems to be a cento of Biblical phrases."<sup>55</sup> Although the Prayer of Manasseh contains neither Psalm 51's reference to inherited sin (51:5) nor its critique of sacrifice (51:16-19), there are some significant parallels between the prayer and the psalm; note the following:

| Psalm 51 (LXX 50)                    | Prayer of Manasseh                      |
|--------------------------------------|---|
| verse                         | verse                            |
| 1 your abundant mercy                | 7b the multitude of your mercies        |
| my transgressions                    | 13 my transgressions                    |
| 3 I know my transgressions           | 12 I know my sins                       |
| 4 and have done that which is evil   | 10 because I did evil things before you |
| in your sight                        | (or in your sight)                      |
| 4 you are justified in your sentence | 9b I am justly afflicted                |
| 9 hide your face from my sins        | 13 do not remember my evils             |
| 11 do not banish me                  | 13 do not banish me                     |
| 14 save me from death                | 13 do not destroy me                    |
| 14 God of my salvation,              | 15 Because of this (salvation)          |
| and my tongue will sing aloud        | I shall praise you                      |

If the author of the Prayer of Manasseh had this psalm in mind when he wrote, he prefixed to the core thought a lengthy praise of the Lord's powers of creation and appended an appreciation of angelic singing (as in the Ascens). He also was probably influenced by other psalms (cf. vs. 5 with Ps 145:5 [LXX 144]; vs. 13 with Pss 103:9 [LXX 102] and 139:15 [LXX 138]; and vs. 15 with Pss 23:6 [LXX 22], 27:4 [LXX 26], and 128:5 [LXX 127]). Significant parallels are also found between the prayer and Genesis (vs. 2 with Gen 1:1, and vs. 13 with Gen 19:15) and Joel (vs. 7a with Joel 2:13; cf. Jonah 4:2 and Ex 34:6).<sup>56</sup> Of course, the most important parallel is the obvious dependence of the prayer upon the narrative in 2 Chronicles 33:11-19, especially verses 18 and 19:

The rest of the history of Manasseh, his prayer to his God . . . can be found in the Annals of the Kings of Israel. His prayer and how God relented at his prayer . . . are recorded in the Annals of Hozai.

The Prayer of Manasseh is probably not a copy of the prayer reputed to be in the lost annals; it was never a part of 2 Chronicles, despite the claims by Thomas Aquinas (see below) and more recently by Howorth.<sup>57</sup>

According to 2 Kings 21, Manasseh dies unrepentant; in contrast, the Chronicler felt impelled to rewrite this history because of his theological bias (inherited from Deut) that sinners are punished. He knew that Manasseh reigned longer than his good father, Hezekiah, and David, so God must have allowed him to live until he repented of his heinous sins, namely building pagan altars with idols in the Temple and encouraging human sacrifice by burning his son. The Chronicler<sup>58</sup> has inserted into salvation history the account of Manasseh's

<sup>54</sup> Moore, Judaism, vol. 1, p. 514.

<sup>55</sup> J. K. Zink, "The Prayer of Manasseh," The Use of the Old Testament in the Apocrypha (Duke University Ph.D., 1963 [under the supervision of J. Strugnell]) pp. 128-32; especially see p. 128. Zink (p. 132) concludes that the "most important feature of the prayer is the manner in which various strands of Biblical language are woven together to make a prayer which later commended itself to liturgical usage." Oswald uses the imagery of a mosaic of numerous recollections from OT documents; JSHRZ, 4.1, p. 19.

<sup>56</sup> See Zink, Apocrypha, pp. 128-32.

<sup>57</sup> Howorth, Proceedings of the Soc. of Bibl. Arch. 31 (1909) 95.

<sup>58</sup> As M. Smith states, the "Chronicler is notoriously untrustworthy." See his "The Veracity of Ezekiel, the Sins of Manasseh, and Jeremiah 44:18," ZAW 87 (1975) 11-16.

repentance, prayer, and forgiveness by God.<sup>59</sup> A later Jew, on the basis of this narrative, composed a prayer as Manasseh's individual lament of personal sin and plea for forgiveness.

Relation to apocryphal books

Of the abundant evidence of relationship between our prayer and the apocryphal books, only a few comments may be permitted here. It is now safe to say that this prayer is an expansion of Chronicles as Bel and the Dragon, Susanna, and the Prayer of Azariah and the Song of the Three Young Men are additions to Daniel. The Prayer of Manasseh closely resembles the Prayer of Azariah;<sup>60</sup> moreover, in many Greek, Syriac (viz. 9a1), and other manuscripts the Prayer of Manasseh is followed immediately by the Prayer of Azariah in the Odae appended to the Psalter. The Jewish anthropological homogeneity reflected in verse 11 ("the knees of my heart") is shared with the Odes of Solomon (viz. 37:2: "And I spoke with the lips of my heart"). The consciousness and expression of sin are shared with many apocryphal writings; note especially the Testament of Isaac 4:27–31. Unrecognized heretofore is an impressive parallel between our prayer and the prayers of Aseneth (JosAsen 11f.), especially her confession of sin and prayer for acceptance. Note the following:

I have sinned, Lord,
before you I have sinned . . . (JosAsen 12:5)
Rescue me, Lord,
before all this comes upon me.
Rescue me, Lord,
the desolate and solitary . . . (JosAsen 12:12)<sup>61</sup>

The repetitions are reminiscent of our prayer, especially of verse 12: "I have sinned, O Lord, I have sinned." The explanation for the parallels between the Prayer of Manasseh and the prayers of Aseneth await full examination.

An obvious and well-known parallel exists between the Prayer of Manasseh and 2 Baruch, according to which Manasseh is introduced into a recital of God's dealings with mankind as "the ninth black waters." Manasseh's evil deeds are emphasized and although, as in Chronicles, there is a reference to his prayer ("the Most High had heard his prayer," 64:8), the concluding reference to him concerns his torments. Apparently the author of 2 Baruch thought that Manasseh, despite his prayer, was doomed to (eternal) torment.<sup>62</sup> Tobit 14:10, however, according to Codex Vaticanus, records that "Manasseh gave alms and was saved from the deadly snare which had been laid for him."<sup>63</sup>

The Prayer of Manasseh contains the style of Semitic poetry found in the hundreds of prayers, hymns, and odes we now possess from early Judaism. It also shares with them the claim that God is near and hears the humble voice of the repentant sinner. Along with the Psalms and Odes of Solomon, the Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers—preserved, like the Prayer of Manasseh, in the Apostolic Constitutions—Psalms 151–55, the Hodayoth, along with the hymns and prayers preserved in the apocryphal compositions and in some of the New Testament books, and along with the early rabbinic writings (especially the 'Amidāh, Qaddish, and Shemoneh 'Esreh), the Prayer of Manasseh is a palpable reminder of the living force of Jewish piety during the turn of the era (c. 200 B.C. to c. A.D. 100).<sup>64</sup>

<sup>59</sup> For other examples of the Chronicler's rewriting of history, see G. von Rad, "The Historical Work of the Chronicler," Old Testament Theology, trans. D. M. G. Stalker (New York, 1962) vol. 1, pp. 347–54. Well known is the Chronicler's portrayal of David as "a spotless holy king who delivers solemn orations" (p. 350).

<sup>60</sup> Cf. Pfeiffer, History, p. 459.

<sup>61</sup> Translation by C. H. Burchard (see his contribution in this volume).

<sup>62</sup> In 1891 W. J. Deane wrote that "the opinion of Manasses' damnation in spite of his prayer is, as far as we know, peculiar to Pseudo-Baruch." Pseudepigrapha: An Account of Certain Apocryphal Sacred Writings of the Jews and Early Christians (Edinburgh, 1891) p. 148. This advice needs to be seen in light of the rabbinic literature, especially y. Sanh 10; see the following section of the introduction. Also see L. Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 6, p. 376. Hag Bereshit states that Manasseh's prayer was uttered "with lips of deceit." AscenIs 11:41–43 records how Manasseh sawed Isaiah to death, was thoroughly under the influence of Satan, and went to destruction.

<sup>63</sup> See H. B. Swete, The Old Testament in Greek According to the Septuagint (Cambridge, England, 1896<sup>2</sup>) vol. 2, p. 847. Unfortunately most of the translations of Tob do not mention this reading in Tob 14:10.

<sup>64</sup> See Charlesworth, "Jewish Liturgies, Hymns and Prayers (c. 167 B.C.E.–135 C.E.)," in R. A. Kraft and G. W. E. Nickelsburg, eds., Early Post-Biblical Judaism and its Modern Interpreters (in press).

Cultural importance

Its appearance in the Didascalia (3rd cent. A.D.) and especially in the Apostolic Constitutions (4th cent. A.D.), a manual for instruction in the post-Nicene Church, reveals that the Prayer of Manasseh was from early times used ecclesiastically. Its place in the Odae, or liturgical canticles, of Codex Alexandrinus (5th cent. A.D.), Codex Turicensis (7th cent. A.D.), Syriac Manuscript, Oriental MS 58 in Mediceo-Laurenziana Library in Florence (9th cent. A.D.), and many other biblical manuscripts from the early Middle Ages to modernity—and in printed editions—demonstrates its popularity for Christians. Its omission from the ancient canon lists, nevertheless, is surprising. Denis may not be wrong in inferring that perhaps this omission is the result of the belief among Christians that it was canonical;<sup>65</sup> but Frey is certainly correct in stating that although some early Christian writers treated it as inspired—some, like Julius Africanus (c. 160–c. 240) and George Hamartolos (9th cent.), even considering it to have been written by Manasseh himself—no Father cited it as “Scripture.”<sup>66</sup>

In the thirteenth century the Dominican Friar Thomas Aquinas, “the greatest of the medieval philosophers,”<sup>67</sup> who produced the work that established the official theology of Roman Catholicism, quoted the eighth verse of the Prayer of Manasseh. He demonstrated the authority and revelatory quality of the prayer by using it to prove that “the sacrament of Penance” (sacramentum Poenitentiae) is necessary as a “conditional” act for all who are in sin (Summa Theologiae, 3a. 845).<sup>68</sup> Two centuries later, the father of the Reformation translated the Prayer of Manasseh into German, publishing it first separately and then at the end of his edition of the Apocrypha. The esteem with which Martin Luther held this prayer is illustrated by his claim that the Duke of Braunschweig should “in all sincerity genuinely repent,” imploring God “with words such as those that appear in the Prayer of Manasseh or similar ones.”<sup>69</sup>

The importance of this prayer, of course, should not be exaggerated; it is conspicuously absent, for example, in the Confessions of St. Augustine, in the biblically inspired and Jansenist-influenced genius of the earliest phases of the Enlightenment, Blaise Pascal,<sup>70</sup> and in the introspective writings of the melancholy Dane Søren Kierkegaard, who has been hailed by some modern intellectuals as the founder of both existentialism and phenomenology. Yet the Prayer of Manasseh continues to exert some influence on the Church today: It appears regularly in editions of the Apocrypha and occasionally surfaces in more conspicuous places, as in the widely influential sermon on Manasseh that was delivered periodically by the late James Cleland, James B. Duke Professor of Preaching and Dean of the Chapel at Duke University.

Utterly different is the fate of this prayer in rabbinic Judaism; there is no trace of it in Jewish traditions.<sup>71</sup> Yet a prayer of Manasseh must have been known in Jewish circles. Josephus’ account of Manasseh primarily reports this king’s prayer, which God heard, as in 2 Chronicles 33, and how he repented and was released by the king of Babylon to return to Jerusalem, where he rebuilt the city walls (Ant 10.3, which is dependent upon 2Chr 33:14).<sup>72</sup> But Josephus displays no cognizance of the content of or traditions in our prayer.

<sup>65</sup> Denis, Introduction, p. 171.

<sup>66</sup> For details see J. A. Fabricius, Codex Pseudepigraphus Veteris Testamenti (Hamburg, 1722<sup>2</sup>) vol. 2, pp. 1100–2; Fritzsche, Handbuch, pp. 158f.; and Frey, DBSup, vol. 1, col. 444.

<sup>67</sup> G. L. Abernethy and T. A. Langford, Philosophy of Religion (New York, 1962) p. 105.

<sup>68</sup> Cf. St. Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theologiae, eds. R. Masterson and T. C. O’Brien (London, New York, 1966) p. 23. St. Thomas Aquinas thought that the PrMan was once part of 2Chr (Summa Theologiae 3.984.10). See above for Howorth’s more recent and similar claim.

<sup>69</sup> G. K. Wiencke (ed.) Luther’s Works (Philadelphia, 1968) vol. 43, pp. 272f. For a discussion of Luther’s use and appreciation of the PrMan, which he called “oratio pulcherrima, omni confessorio aptissima” (Weimar Ausgabe vol. 6, p. 159, 9), see H. Volz, “Zur Überlieferung des Gebetes Manasse,” ZKG 70 (1959) 293–307.

<sup>70</sup> It might have been expected that Pascal would have been attracted to the PrMan; the Jansenists emphasized man’s total sinfulness and redemption only through unmerited divine grace.

<sup>71</sup> Cf. e.g. the comments by J. F. McLaughlin in Jewish Encyclopedia, vol. 8, p. 282.

<sup>72</sup> Recently Manasseh’s reputed constructions (perhaps prior to deportation) have been unearthed. See B. Mazar, “Manasseh in Jerusalem,” The Mountain of the Lord (New York, 1975) p. 57; cf. Y. Yadin, Jerusalem Revealed: Archaeology in the Holy City 1968–1974 (Jerusalem, London, 1976) especially p. 44.

The Targum on Chronicles, far from expanding the text with the prayer traditionally ascribed to Manasseh, adds (to 2Chr 33:13) a lengthy account of how the angels attempted to close all the windows of heaven so that the prayer would not reach God. God, however, on the behalf of all who sincerely repent, heard Manasseh's prayer and fulfilled his supplication.<sup>73</sup> Sandmel rightly emphasizes that the Prayer of Manasseh "did not make its way into the later synagogue worship on the Day of Atonement. In content and form it would have fitted admirably."<sup>74</sup>

Introduction to translation

The following translation is based on the Syriac, because the earliest extant version of the prayer is in the Syriac Didascalia. Additional reasons for choosing the Syriac are the following: The Syriac of the Odae and the Didascalia has received perfunctory treatment by scholars; all printed translations are based only on the Greek; possibly all extant versions, Syriac and Greek, go back to the Didascalia, which is extant only in Syriac; and a careful study of the Syriac traditions reveals the presence of reliable, probably authentic, passages not extant in Greek. A literal translation of the Syriac, with critical notes to the Greek variants, is offered for scholars; a more idiomatic translation is presented for all readers, who will be interested in the poetic vision and beauty of the prayer.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 156–58.

Delling, Bibliographie, p. 149.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 177–81.

Baars, W., and Schneider, H. "Prayer of Manasseh," The Old Testament in Syriac According to the Peshitta Version. Leiden, 1972; part 4, fasc. 6; pp. i–vii, 1–9.

Oswald, E. "Gebet Manasses," JSHRZ, 4.1 (1974) 1–25.

Rahlf's, A. Septuaginta: Societatis Scientiarum Göttingensis. Göttingen, 1931; vol. 10, pp. 361–63.

Ryle, H. E. "Prayer of Manasses." APOT, vol. 1, pp. 612–24.

Ryssel, V. "Das Gebet Manasse." APAT, vol. 1, pp. 165–71.

<sup>73</sup> Aram. *ûš*ma' š'lôtêh w*qabbêl b'âtêh*. See R. Le Déaut and J. Robert, Targum des Chroniques, 2 vols. (Analecta Biblica 51; Rome, 1971) especially vol. 2, p. 158. For other traditions on Manasseh, see Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 4, pp. 279–81; vol. 6, pp. 375f. Also see S. Schechter, Aspects of Rabbinic Theology (New York, 1961—reprint of 1909 edition) pp. 318f.

<sup>74</sup> Sandmel, Judaism, p. 70.

THE PRAYER OF MANASSEH

Idiomatic Translation

- 1 O Lord, God of our fathers,
God of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and their righteous offspring;
- 2 He who made the heaven and the earth
with all their beauty;
- 3 He who bound the sea
and established it by the command of his word,
he who closed the bottomless pit
and sealed it by his powerful and glorious name;
- 4 You<sup>a</sup> (before) whom all things fear and tremble;
(especially) before your power.
- 5 Because your awesome magnificence cannot be endured;
none can endure or stand before
your anger and your fury against sinners;
- 6 But unending and immeasurable
are your promised mercies;
- 7a Because you are the Lord,
long-suffering, merciful, and greatly compassionate;
and you feel sorry over the evils of men.
- 7b You, O Lord, according to your gentle grace, promised forgiveness to those who repent of their sins,
and in your manifold mercies
appointed repentance for sinners as the (way to) salvation.
- 8 You, therefore, O Lord, God of the righteous,
did not appoint grace for the righteous,
such as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob,
those who did not sin against you;
but you appointed grace for me, (I) who am a sinner.
- 9a Because my sins exceeded the number of the sand(s) of the sea,
and on account of the multitude of my iniquities,
I have no strength to lift up my eyes.
- 9b And now, O Lord, I am justly afflicted,
and I am deservedly harassed;
already I am ensnared.
- 10 And I am bent by many iron chains,
so that I cannot lift up my head;
for I do not deserve to lift up my eyes
and look to see the height of heaven,
because of the gross iniquity of my wicked deeds,
because I did evil things before you,
and provoked your fury,
and set up idols and multiplied impurity.
- 11 And now behold I am bending the knees of my heart before you;
and I am beseeching your kindness.
- 12 I have sinned, O Lord, I have sinned;
and I certainly know my sins.
- 13 I beseech you;
forgive me, O Lord, forgive me!

a. Syr.: "he." Here we have a shift from indirect up to the personal lament and exhortation directed ("he") to direct discourse ("you"); the poet leads to the Lord.

Do not destroy me with my transgressions;
do not be angry against me forever;
do not remember my evils;
and do not condemn me and banish me to the depths of the earth!
For you are the God of those who repent.
14 In me you will manifest all your grace;
and although I am not worthy,
you will save me according to your manifold mercies.
15 Because of this (salvation) I shall praise you continually
all the days of my life;
because all the hosts of heaven praise you,
and sing to you forever and ever.

THE PRAYER OF MANASSEH*

Literal Translation

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| 1 O Lord, <sup>a</sup> God of our fathers,God <sup>b</sup> of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, and of their righteous offspring;  | Ex 3:15Acts 3:13   |
| 2 He who made <sup>c</sup> the heaven and the earthwith all their embellishment; <sup>d</sup>   | Gen 1:1; 2:1   |
| 3 He who bound the seaand established <sup>e</sup> it by the command of his <sup>f</sup> word, <sup>g</sup>he who closed the bottomless pit <sup>h</sup>and sealed it by <sup>i</sup> his <sup>j</sup> powerful <sup>k</sup> and glorious name; | Gen 1:6-10Job 38:8-11:Ps 104:7-94Ezra 16:58f.Tob 8:5 |
| 4 He (before) whom all things fear <sup>l</sup> and tremble;(especially) before your <sup>m</sup> power.  | Nah 1:5f.  |
| 5 Because the grandeur <sup>n</sup> of your magnificencecannot be endured, <sup>o</sup>and none can endure <sup>p</sup> or stand beforeyour anger and your fury against sinners; <sup>q</sup>   | Ps 145:5;OdesSol 7:3   |
| 6 But unending and immeasurableare <sup>r</sup> your promised mercies; <sup>s</sup>   |  |
| 7a Because you are the Lord, <sup>t</sup>   | Ps 145:8   |

* This title is taken from MS 9a1; the same title is found in Didascalia Apostolorum and in Codex Alexandrinus (the base of Rahlfs's edition). Other given titles: "Prayer of Manasseh, the son of Hezekiah" in Codex Turicensis (also used by Rahlfs), Oratio Manassae regis Iuda cum captus teneretur in Babylone in the Vulgate.

- a. Gk. adds: "Almighty."
- b. Gk. omits.
- c. Gk.: "you who made."
- d. Gk., iō kosmō: "their order," or "their embellishment."
- e. Syr. Aph'el, lit. "he caused to rise up." Gk. omits this verb.
- f. Gk.: "your."
- g. The divine "word" = (mlp) as in Jn 1; not pigm?. Only the OdesSol use both Syr. nouns to denote the divine "Word."
- h. T'hōmā, a Heb. loan word, which first appears in biblical Heb. in Gen 1:2.

i. In Syr. the preposition of means is b; in Gk. there is no preposition, only a dative case.

- j. Gk.: "your."
- k. Gk.: "fearful, terrible."
- l. Gk.: "shudder."
- m. This is the first occurrence of this pronoun in Syr.; contrast the Gk., which again has "your."
- n. Syr. idiom; lit. "greatness of the beauty (or grace)."
- o. Gk.: "Because unendurable (is) the magnificence of your glory."
- p. In Syr.—but not in Gk.—5a and 5b are linked by different forms of the same verb (sbr, "to endure"; in the Ethpaial in 5a, Pael in 5b). The Syr. of this verse is superior to the Gk.
- q. Gk.: "And irresistible (is) the wrath of your boast against sinners."
- r. Gk. again omits.
- s. Gk. is singular.
- t. Gk. adds "Most High"; cf. the Gk. addition long-suffering, and merciful,<sup>u</sup> and greatly compassionate;

and you feel sorry over<sup>v</sup> the evils of men.

Joel 2:13
Ps 103:8
WisSol 11:24

- 7b You, O Lord, according to the sweetness<sup>w</sup> of your grace,<sup>x</sup> promised forgiveness<sup>y</sup> to those who repent<sup>z</sup> of their sins,
and in the multitude of your mercies
appointed repentance<sup>a2</sup> as the salvation<sup>b2</sup> for sinners.<sup>c2</sup>
- 8 You, therefore, O Lord, God of the righteous ones, did not appoint grace<sup>d2</sup> for the righteous ones,
such as Abraham, and Isaac and Jacob,
those who did not sin against you;
but you appointed grace for me, (I) who am a sinner.
- 9a Because my sins multiplied in number more than the sand of the sea,<sup>e2</sup>
and on account of the multitude of my iniquities,<sup>f2</sup>
I have no strength<sup>g2</sup> so that I can lift up my eyes.
- 9b And now, O Lord, I am justly afflicted,
and as I deserve I am harassed;
for already I am ensnared.<sup>h2</sup>
- 10 And I am bent by a multitude of iron chains,<sup>i2</sup>
so that I cannot lift up my head;<sup>j2</sup> for I do not deserve to lift up my eyes<sup>k2</sup> and look<sup>l2</sup> and see the height of heaven,<sup>m2</sup> because of the multitude of the iniquity of my wicked deeds,<sup>n2</sup> because I did evil things<sup>o2</sup> before you,<sup>p2</sup>

2Chr 33:11

Ps 51:4

u. See vs. 6; in both Syr. and Gk. the emphasis is upon God's mercy.

v. The Syr. means "to return, repent," the Gk. "perceive afterward, repent." But God is not here declared to be "self-reproachful," hence "feel sorry over," which lies behind the meaning of "to repent." The Syr. and Gk. may be corrupt here; a 16th-cent. Syr. text has wmtw, which clearly means "being sorrowful over."

w. Or "pleasantness, gentleness, kindness." Gk.: plēthos, "multitude, great."

x. Or "goodness, kindness."

y. Or "release (from debt)."

z. The same verb stem as earlier translated "feel sorry" over. Identity in English is impossible because earlier the subject was the Lord; here it is men.

a2. Or "conversion, penitence."

b2. Or "life."

c2. The Gk. of 7b is not in Rahlfs's 1935 (or in Swete's) edition; it is extant only in late Gk. MSS (and in Lat. and Syr. MSS). The Gk. is different from the Syr.; it reads as follows:

You, O Lord, according to your great goodness (or kindness), promised repentance and forgiveness to those who sinned against you,

and in the multitude of your mercies

appointed repentance toward salvation for sinners.

For the Gk. see O. F. Fritzsche, Libri apocryphi veteris testamenti graece (Leipzig, 1871), p. 92; and the critical apparatus in Rahlfs's Göttingen edition, p. 362. For a different recension of the Gk., see A.-M. Denis, Fragmenta pseudepigraphorum quae supersunt graeca (PVTG 3; Leiden, 1970), p. 116. The vs. seems original; it contains no extraneous data or ideas; it fits smoothly into the flow of the prayer. It may have been inadvertently omitted by a copying scribe. He wrote su in vs. 7b, rested, and then let his eye wander back incorrectly to the su that begins vs. 8. Both vs. 7b and 8 would probably have begun with the left margin, as in Fritzsche. Vs. 7b was omitted, therefore, due to parablepsis.

d2. See n. w.

e2. Gk. adds: "my transgressions are multiplied, O Lord, they are multiplied." The repetitions also found in vs. 12 and 13 suggest that this Gk. l. is original.

f2. Gk.: "And I am not worthy to look intently and see the height of heaven on account of the multitude of my iniquities."

g2. Lit. "And there is not for me breathing (or refreshment)." But np's derives from np's, which denotes "the breath of life, soul, vitality." The l. is difficult to understand; perhaps "strength" could be intended. For the Gk. see n. e2.

h2. Vs. 9b is not extant in Gk. The vs. may be original; it contains no ideas or images foreign to the prayer; it flows smoothly into the idea of being ensnared, in vs. 10.

i2. Gk.: "by many an iron chain." As in the Psalter and (possibly in the) Hodoyoth this expression is to be understood as a metaphor.

j2. The Syr. here agrees with the Gk. of T. This and the next l. in Gk. are not found in Denis' edition of the Gk. (which is from Funk's edition of the AposCon). The Gk. versions reflect corruption in transmission. Corresponding to the Syr. verb, rendered above as "I cannot lift up," is a Gk. verb translated in numerous ways: "I am rejected" (RSV), "I grieve over" (NEB), "I bend beneath" (Goodspeed).

k2. Gk.: "and I have no relief."

l2. Or "gaze."

m2. Gk. omits.

n2. Gk. omits.

o2. Gk. is singular.

p2. Or "in your sight." In the Gk. this and the next l. are inverted.

- and I provoked your fury, and I set up idols<sup>q2</sup> and multiplied defilement.<sup>r2</sup>
- 11 And now behold<sup>s2</sup> I am bending<sup>t2</sup> the knees<sup>u2</sup> of my<sup>v2</sup> heart before you;
and I am beseeching your kindness.<sup>w2</sup>
- 12 I have sinned, O Lord, I have sinned;
and certainly<sup>x2</sup> I know my sins.<sup>y2</sup>
- 13 I make supplication before you;
forgive me, O Lord, forgive me!<sup>z2</sup>
and do not destroy me with my transgressions;
and do not be angry against me forever;
and do not remember my evils;<sup>a3</sup>
and do not condemn me and banish me<sup>b3</sup> to<sup>c3</sup> the depths of the earth!
For you are<sup>d3</sup> God of the repenters.
- 14 And in me you will manifest all your grace;<sup>e3</sup>
and although I am not worthy,
you will save me according to the multitude of your mercies.
- 15 Because of this (salvation)<sup>f3</sup> I shall praise you continually through all the days of my life;<sup>g3</sup> because all the hosts<sup>h3</sup> of heaven<sup>i3</sup> praise you,
and sing to you forever and ever.<sup>j3</sup>
- 2Chr 33:6
2Chr 33:7
2Chr 33:12
JosAsen 12:5
Ps 51:3
JosAsen 12:12
Ps 51:1
Ps 103:9
Pss 51:9; 25:76
Ps 51:11
Ps 51:14
Pss 61:8; 145:1f.
AscenIs 6-11

q2. Gk.: "abominations." The NEB freely renders it as "idols"; contrast Goodspeed and RSV: "setting up abominations and multiplying offenses."

r2. Or "abomination," which in Syr. can denote idol worship; for example cf. Dan 11:31, in which this Syr. word is used to denote "the abomination that makes desolate." The Gk. has a plural noun here.

s2. Gk. omits.

t2. Or "bend"; here I translate the participle literally for the emphasis I think is intended.

u2. Gk.: "knee."

v2. A omits the pronoun; it is in T.

w2. Or "sweetness"; cf. vs. 7b, in which basimáthā is translated "sweetness."

x2. wmīl dē seems to be used here for emphasis.

y2. Gk.: "transgressions"; only the Syr. has paronomasia: both the verb ("I have sinned") and the noun ("sins") are from the same root.

z2. The second "forgive me" is not in Syr. MS 9a1 (the right col. in Baars-Schneider). It is in Syr.

MS 10t1 (the left col. in Baars-Schneider) and the Gk. The repetition throughout the PrMan suggests that the reading in MS 10t1 should be preferred. This choice breaks our usual custom of following only the reading of 9a1.

a3. Lit. "And do not keep in memory for me my evils." Gk. of the last two ll.: "Do not forever be angry (with me, nor) lay up evil for me."

b3. Gk. omits "and banish me."

c3. b<sup>c</sup> in Syr., which is not unusual; but en in Gk. looks like a Semitism.

d3. Gk. adds: "Lord."

e3. Following Syr. MS 10t1, which is similar to the Gk.: "And in me you will manifest your goodness."

f3. Gk. and Syr. 10t1 omit.

g3. Lit. "forever and for all the days of my life."

h3. Gk. is singular.

i3. Gk. is plural.

j3. Gk.: "And yours is the glory forever. Amen."

PSALMS OF SOLOMON

(First Century B.C.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY R. B. WRIGHT

The eighteen Psalms of Solomon incorporate the response of a group of devout Jews to the capture of Jerusalem by the Romans in the first century B.C. Psalms 1, 2, 8, and 17 are the account of how a native cadre seizes power illegally and misuses its prerogatives. These usurpers, however, are overthrown by foreign invaders and are executed or deported. But the gentile occupation is worse than the native regime it displaced, introducing foreign cultic and social practices which corrupt many citizens. There is no realistic expectation of relief, because of the immense power of the invaders. The pious group responsible for our psalms expect a legitimate king to appear and lead them in a rebellion against the occupying forces, in the expulsion of foreign influence, and in the establishment of an independent Jewish state. Psalm of Solomon 17 contains an extended messianic hymn describing the reign of this king, the anointed son of David. The remaining psalms show similarities to those of the canonical psalter and the Qumran Hymn Scroll and grapple with a variety of more conventional topics common to the psalm genre: evil and good, sin and salvation, threat and rescue.

Texts

The Psalms of Solomon are preserved, in whole or in part, in eleven Greek and four Syriac manuscripts dating from the tenth to the sixteenth centuries A.D. The abundance of Greek manuscripts precludes a description of each here. The present translation is based on my forthcoming critical edition of the Greek witnesses.

The earliest historical evidence we have of the Psalms of Solomon is from the fifth century A.D., when the "Eighteen Psalms of Solomon" were mentioned in the list at the beginning of Codex Alexandrinus, in which they follow the Old and New Testaments and the Clementine Epistles. The leaves at the end of the codex which would have contained the text of the Psalms of Solomon are missing. It also has been calculated that the Psalms of Solomon would have fit into the twelve missing pages of Codex Sinaiticus.

The Psalms of Solomon are listed with the Odes of Solomon as antilegomena of the Old Testament, following Maccabees and an unknown Ptolemaic history and preceding Susanna in the Synopsis Sanctae Scripturae of Pseudo-Athanasius, in the sixth century. They are listed among what we call pseudepigrapha in the sixth-century list of "Sixty Books" at the end of Anastasius Sinaita's Quaestiones et Responsiones, after the canonical and deuterocanonical books. However, they appear in the ninth century Stichometry of Nicephorus among the books of the Apocrypha. That these notices refer to the Psalms of Solomon as we know them may be claimed with some degree of certainty.

None of our manuscripts have verse numbers. The division of verses and the numbers assigned to them in this edition are aligned with A. Rahlfs's Septuaginta.<sup>1</sup> This enumeration is in the Ryle and James edition<sup>2</sup> (and within parentheses in APOT).

The footnotes to the introduction have been supplied by the author.

<sup>1</sup> A. Rahlfs, Septuaginta id est Vetus Testamentum Graece (Stuttgart, 1935, reprinted 1965).

<sup>2</sup> H. S. Ryle and M. R. James, Psalmoi Solomoñitos: Psalms of the Pharisees, Commonly Called the Psalms of Solomon (Cambridge, England, 1891).

Original language

The Psalms of Solomon, according to the majority of scholars, were composed in Hebrew, very soon afterward translated into Greek, and at some later time into Syriac. There are no Hebrew manuscripts extant, and the Greek documents are late. A. Hilgenfeld, virtually alone, argued for a Greek original.<sup>3</sup> Evidence for a Greek original is made up largely of quotations from the Septuagint within the psalms, but use of the Septuagint only confirms an acquaintance with the Septuagint and a harmonization with its readings by a translator. Several attempts have been made to reconstruct a Hebrew original, but they have little historical or linguistic value.

It is clear that the Greek text is a translation. Ryle and James, and G. B. Gray (in APOT), noted features in common with other translations: translational errors from Hebrew, "Semitisms" in the Greek, etc. R. R. Hann has now confirmed by syntactical analysis that our texts are indeed "translation Greek,"<sup>4</sup> a phenomenon identifiably distinct from writings originally composed in Greek, even those written in conscious imitation of the Septuagint. The Greek is written with a modest vocabulary. In several passages the meaning is obscure and has been subject to conjecture by both medieval scribes and modern editors.

The Syriac has usually been seen as a translation from the Greek text, although there is some evidence that it was translated from a Hebrew text.<sup>5</sup> It stands closest to Greek Manuscript 253 and its close relatives, although with similarities to Greek Manuscripts 769 and 336. Its most notable feature is the attempt to smooth difficult readings. In numerous passages where the text is difficult and the texts diverge in their attempts to provide intelligibility, the Syriac gravitates toward Manuscript 253 and its group of manuscripts.

The texts of Wisdom and Sirach in Manuscript 253 and its group are part of the Syro-hexaplaric text tradition, which may reinforce similarities between this group and the Syriac community which preserved the psalms together with the Odes of Solomon. First Baruch, an original Greek composition which quotes the Psalms of Solomon, antedates the end of the first century A.D. because of its testimony to the destruction of the Temple and the extensive quotations from First Baruch by Irenaeus. First Baruch's use of the Psalms of Solomon would suggest that the Greek translation was available by the mid first century A.D. The Greek manuscripts remain our primary witnesses to the Psalms of Solomon.

Date

The external evidence takes us back no further than the fifth century A.D., but the relation to First Baruch gives evidence of the existence of the Psalms of Solomon in Greek before the end of the first century A.D. The internal evidence is of two kinds: allusions to Jewish national conflicts and references to international events.

The psalmist is deeply disturbed about the condition of Israel. The monarchy is in the hands of usurpers who do not honor the ancient covenants, and the Temple is in the control of desecraters who violate both the ritual and the spirit of the cultus. Although dissidents in several periods might have made these charges against the government, the time of greatest internal turmoil was in the late Hasmonean period, the early to middle first century B.C. On the other hand, the struggle between sinners and devout is in some measure timeless and offers little but a confirmation of other evidence.

The descriptions of the foreign conqueror and his fate, however, are concrete to a degree paralleled only in Daniel, and offer as in Daniel the best evidence we have for dating the Psalms of Solomon. Identification of the conqueror with Antiochus Epiphanes, Herod the

<sup>3</sup> A. Hilgenfeld, "Die Psalmen Salomos und die Himmelfahrt des Moses, griechisch hergestellt und erklärt," ZWT 11 (1868) 133-68.

<sup>4</sup> R. R. Hann, The Manuscript History of the Psalms of Solomon (SCS 13; Chico, Calif., 1982).

<sup>5</sup> After Wright completed his contribution, J. L. Trafton examined the place of the Syr. version within the textual tradition of the PssSol. He concludes that the Syr. version is "an important witness to the text of the PssSol. It is based primarily, if not exclusively, on a Heb. Vorlage" (p. 360). See Trafton's A Critical Evaluation of the Syriac Version of the Psalms of Solomon. Duke University Ph.D., 1981.

Great, Pompey, and Titus has each had its supporters. But the allusions best match Pompey. The conqueror is a gentile who came from the west (17:12). At first he was welcomed into Jerusalem by at least part of the government and the people (8:16–18), but once inside he encountered resistance at the Temple compound and was forced to bring up reinforcements, including a siege machine (2:1). After the city fell, he and his troops explored the Temple, desecrating its sanctity (2:2). Leaving Jerusalem, he went to Egypt, where he was assassinated. His body lay on the beach unburied (2:26f.). By comparison with Josephus' account, it is now generally agreed that this describes the career of the Roman general Pompey, who took Jerusalem in 63 B.C.

The earliest direct allusion in the psalms to a specific historical event is to Pompey's invasion (63 B.C.). The latest is to his death, in 48 B.C. The widest limits for dating are between 125 B.C. and the early first century A.D. Narrow limits would be about 70 to 45 B.C., with the caveat that the undatable psalms may have been earlier or later and the collection as a whole was certainly later.

That Jerusalem has been desecrated but not destroyed suggests that the psalms reached their final form before A.D. 70. The chronology of the events, although capable of close alignment with events of the mid first century B.C., is not in chronological order in the present text. This would suggest that the compilation of the psalms, which was perhaps coincidental with the translation into Greek, was by an editor whose interest was literary and who had little knowledge, or at least regard, for the sequence of events behind the poems.

Further evidence of an editorial stage appears in the disjunctions in the text, marked by dropped antecedents, awkward constructions, and shifts of perspective. The joinings between 1:1–2:18 and 2:19–31; 8:1–22 and 8:23–34; 17:1–15 and 17:21–42 are particularly difficult. Psalms of Solomon 18:10–12 appears to be appended. The individual psalm titles bear little relation to their context, and the supposed musical or liturgical notations are ill-placed. Both appear to be by-products of the editorial process. The remaining psalms have no historical reflections, and without evidence to the contrary, discussions of date, authorship, and provenance have been assumed to apply to the collection.

The Psalms of Solomon emerge from the tradition of a Jewish community in the last century before the turn of the era. It is fruitless to debate whether there was one author or several, for the similarities convince those who argue for a single author and the differences are evidence for those who find several authors. It is better to understand the hymns as the product of a community. Clearly the writer speaks of and for a community that is bound together by persecution and hope for the future. The concerns expressed are not individual but communal. It is better to argue for a common tradition, for this will best account for both the similarities which bind the psalms together and the differences which divide them, and will avoid the fault of a restrictive rigidity which sees only the static elements as genuine. It is a unity not of authorship but of tradition.

The ascription of the collection to Solomon appeared obvious to the editor. The similarity between the most prominent psalm (PssSol 17) and the canonical Psalm 72, already known as a Psalm of Solomon, prompted the ascription of the collection to one who, next to David, enjoyed a reputation as a poet (1Kgs 4:32). The resemblance between Solomon and the Messiah figure is marked: Each is called the son of David, and both were extenders of boundaries, restorers and beautifiers of Jerusalem, and defenders of the worship of Yahweh. They received tribute from foreign monarchs, who came to see their glory, and stood above all other regents in wisdom and justice. Solomon, however, sinned in multiplying silver and gold, horses and chariots and ships, and was guilty of pride and oppression. The Messiah, of course, will not commit such atrocities (PssSol 17:33).

Provenance

There is little doubt that Jerusalem is the provenance of the Psalms of Solomon. The city is given unusual prominence. It is the locale of many events, and the descriptions are detailed. Jerusalem is addressed (PssSol 11) and speaks (PssSol 1). It is the seat of the Sanhedrin (4:1). It has been suggested that the vices described are particularly urban.

There is some question, however, as to the sociopoliticoreligious provenance of the Psalms of Solomon, particularly the identification of the several groups denounced or praised in the psalms and of the community which was the source of the psalms. There are three groups described: the gentiles, the sinners, and the devout. The identification of the gentiles with the conqueror Pompey and the Roman invaders is the least difficult. They were "alien to our race," came from the west, were ignorant of the religious and social customs, but were used by God to punish Israel for her sins. The sinners, the Jewish opponents of the devout, are the Hasmonean Sadducees. They violently usurped the monarchy (17:5–8, 22), they were not scrupulous in ritual purity and in ceremonial observances (1:8; 2:3, 5; 7:2; 8:12; 17:45), and they were too willing to comply with foreign customs (8:22).

The identity of the devout presents a problem. Traditionally they have been identified with the Pharisees. Indeed, Ryle and James titled their edition Psalms of the Pharisees. However, with the new information about the beliefs and practices of the Essenes provided by the Qumran documents, another possibility emerged: that the Psalms of Solomon originated in an Essene-like community in Jerusalem that stood in opposition to the Sadducees and in contrast to the Pharisees. O. Eissfeldt saw many points of contact between the Psalms of Solomon and the Qumran texts,<sup>6</sup> and A. Dupont-Sommer was convinced that the Psalms of Solomon and several other writings of the time were Essene in origin.<sup>7</sup>

The identification of the devout with either the Pharisees or the Essenes is based on an examination of the theology and theodicy of the Psalms of Solomon. Theocracy ("the Lord is King" [2:30, 32; 5:18, 19; 17:1, 34, 46]); sacred Law (which their enemies misuse [4:8] but which is the proof of God's care [10:4]); and divine providence (5:3, 4) were, according to Josephus, emphases which set off the Pharisees and Essenes from the Sadducees. A strong doctrine of retribution (2:34, 35; 13:6; 15:12, 13; 17:8) was also characteristic of both Pharisees and Essenes.

It is unwise to label these psalms as either Pharisaic or Essene.<sup>8</sup> We know far too little about Pharisaic thought prior to the destruction of Jerusalem, in 70; our only sources on them are later than this paradigmatic date and are considerably subjective (the NT, Josephus, and the rabbinic writings). Similarly, although we are now convinced that some Essenes lived in Jerusalem, we are unsure of the ideas and customs that distinguish them from other contemporaneous Jews. The recognition that some ideas in these psalms are similar to those among the Pharisees or among the Essenes ignores the fact that these two sects were very similar; moreover, scholars are now recognizing that the Essene community at Qumran may have received an influx of Pharisees fleeing Jerusalem in the early decades of the first century B.C.<sup>9</sup> Finally, according to both Philo and Josephus, most Jews were not members of a sect; there were far more Jewish groups than the classic four (Sadducee, Pharisee, Essene, Zealot—and the latter sect postdates the composition of these psalms<sup>10</sup>); hence it is unwise to force these psalms into any model of the Pharisees or Essenes.<sup>11</sup>

Historical importance

The Psalms of Solomon provide a view of the internal conflict and external invasion that plagued Judea in the mid first century B.C. They provide in less cryptic, less veiled language than at Qumran the feelings of a group of devout Jews, living in Jerusalem, troubled by recent events such as the traumatic invasion and occupation of their country and by corruption in political and religious leadership. Their attempt to reconcile theology with reality results in one possible answer to a crisis: apocalyptic messianism. The members of the group were

<sup>6</sup> O. Eissfeldt, "The Psalms of Solomon," The Old Testament: An Introduction, translated by P. R. Ackroyd (New York, 1965) pp. 610–13.

<sup>7</sup> A. Dupont-Sommer, The Essene Writings from Qumran, translated by G. Vermes (Cleveland, New York, 1962, reprinted 1973) p. 296.

<sup>8</sup> The paragraph beginning with this sentence was added by the editor to Wright's excellent introduction.

<sup>9</sup> See the recent discussion on this issue by J. H. Charlesworth in "The Origin and Subsequent History of the Authors of the Dead Sea Scrolls: Four Transitional Phases Among the Qumran Essenes," RQ 38 (1980) 213–33.

<sup>10</sup> See D. M. Rhoads, Israel in Revolution, 6–74 C.E.: A Political History Based on the Writings of Josephus (Philadelphia, 1976).

<sup>11</sup> J. Schüpphaus claims that the PssSol are a "classic source" for Pharisaic thought. See his Die Psalmen Salomos: Ein Zeugnis Jerusalemer Theologie und Frömmigkeit in der Mitte des vorchristlichen Jahrhunderts (ALGHJ 7; Leiden, 1977). Also, see Charlesworth review of this position in JAAR 50 (1982) 292f.

not political pacifists, and appear as quietists only because they have no opportunity to be activists (12:5). They heap verbal abuse on their enemies (4:1f., 6, 14–20) and predict revenge when they return to power under the Messiah (12:6; 17:22–25). But with no realistic hope to secure political control, they accept the current difficulties as God's discipline (14:1; 16:11), confident that their fortunes will be reversed, if not in the present age then certainly in the age to come (2:34f.). Much as the covenanters of Qumran, they accepted their present situation but envisioned the ultimate defeat of their enemies.

We have several insights into this urban group. Some of the accusations leveled against their enemies would apply to many times and situations (insatiable greed, prostitution). Other charges are more specific, such as allegations of an illegitimate monarchy or of misappropriation of consecrated offerings (1:8; 2:3; 8:11f., 22). The complaints of the devout paint a picture of the general secularization of the regime in power, of the greed of the religious leadership, of widespread disregard for religious and civil law, and an international involvement of the Jewish nation which resulted at last in foreign invasion.

As a consequence, the Psalms of Solomon preserve one of the most detailed messianic expectations in the immediate pre-Christian centuries. The title "Messiah," which in the Old Testament commonly referred to any legitimately appointed priest or king, and which in later Jewish writings became the repository of all those ideal hopes which were unrealized in the present, is given shape and dimension in these psalms as they describe the person of the Messiah and the character of his government in the age to come. There is more substance to the ideas concerning the Messiah in the Psalms of Solomon than in any other extant Jewish writing.<sup>12</sup> The Messiah is here identified as a son of David who will come to establish an everlasting kingdom of God. Although not a supernatural being, both he and the devout over whom he reigns are without sin, and he rules with all the ancient virtues heightened to superlatives: wisdom, justice, mercy, power. He will restore the ancient tribal divisions and with them the ancient ways of righteousness and fidelity. He will bring back the Diaspora of Israel to a purified homeland. The nations likewise will come, to pay homage to Jerusalem and her king. Finally, these psalms link for the first time the concepts of Messiah and lordship into a new construct which the Gospel of Luke later seizes as a title for Jesus (Lk 2:11), and the New Testament develops into the concept of "Christ the Lord," a concept that played an important part in the development of New Testament Christology.

Theological importance (with V. Schwartz)

The Psalms of Solomon is literature of crisis. But it is more than the crisis of an alien army invading the homeland; it is one of harsh reality invading a traditional theology. For when Pompey's soldiers entered Jerusalem and tramped across the Temple compound, it was the ancient promises that they breached and the inviolable covenant they trampled. Although many historical periods and the literature they produced may be characterized as "crisis literature," the author of the Psalms of Solomon is affected personally by the torrent of events, and the tribulations of the times raise in him deep theological misgivings. Since he is caught off guard by the suddenness of the events, we see in the unsystematic and somewhat unstable theodicy of the Psalms of Solomon the author's desperate appropriation of any possible rationale by which to make sense of the situation. Theodicy is a theme to which he returns repeatedly (2:1, 15–18; 3:3–5; 4:8; 8:3, 23–26; 9:2).

What is especially intriguing is to watch the psalmist alternating between solutions which may be termed "biblical" (if not "pre-exilic") and those which usually are thought of as of more recent origin. For example, it is clear that the psalmist has not abandoned the idea that God will do justice in this life. The righteous will prosper and the wicked will be punished. This prosperity and punishment are visible signs of God's favor and displeasure. But it is just this "biblical" theodicy which provokes his dilemma, for recent events affecting both the nation and the individual cast doubt on this reassuring view. The nation, he quickly observes, has been punished for her sins. Her calamities serve both to expose hidden sins and to demonstrate that God is a powerful and righteous judge whom none can evade (PssSol 2:8; 9:1–3; 17). But the psalmist, although he acknowledges the justice of

<sup>12</sup> See Charlesworth, "The Concept of the Messiah in the Pseudepigrapha," ANRW II.19.1, pp. 188–218.

God's action, is faced with the real possibility of the gentiles' being allowed to destroy Israel. He reminds God repeatedly that Israel is his beloved nation, with whom he has an enduring covenant (7:8f.; 9:8-11; 11:7; 14:5; 17:4) and pleads with God not to allow the gentiles to triumph completely over his people (2:22-25; 7:3-5; 8:27-31). His final recourse is to find a solution for Israel's difficulties in the messianic kingdom of the last days (7:10; 11; 15:12; 17; 18:6-10). But this is no fond hope for the distant future; to the contrary, Israel's present adversity convinces him that the day of God's kingdom is imminent, for surely God could not permit this grave threat to continue for long.

When the psalmist faces the problem of the suffering of the righteous individual, his problem of justifying God is even more acute. Although he frequently indulges in sweeping indictments of the nation (2:8f.; 17:20), it is clear that he holds himself and his own devout associates to be at least relatively guiltless. Why, then, must they suffer? The psalmist's notion of corporate guilt is not so pervasive that it can serve to justify God for allowing the righteous to suffer equally with the wicked. Further, in some instances, the persecution of the righteous comes not from gentiles but from fellow Jews (as in PssSol 4), and this calls for a solution different from those used to explain national suffering.

Again the psalmist searches through several explanations. His first response is that justice has been delayed. Given time, the scales will yet tip into balance on this side of the grave (PssSol 2; 5). Meanwhile, God will never allow a righteous person to perish utterly or to succumb under his ordeal (2:36; 16:12-15).

The writer next considers the idea that the Lord tests the righteous person with affliction to prove his faithfulness (16:14). This thought appears only once, and it is clear that the writer is no Job, for here again he presents suffering as nevertheless compensatory for wickedness of some sort. The righteous must be guilty of some sins, even if unwittingly, and God alerts the righteous person to these sins through affliction so that he may improve himself and thus escape a worse punishment. For indeed, God punishes the righteous differently from the wicked. He corrects them as a father disciplines a beloved child (13:8-10—said also of Israel in 18:4), and one of the proofs of a person's righteousness is the way he responds to the divine discipline. In contrast to the sinner, he is neither demoralized nor made resentful by affliction but searches out his sins and declares God to be just (3:3-10; 10:1-3).

The eschatological hope for the individual functions in the same way as for the nation. The eschatological day must come shortly to end the suffering and persecution, but this future prospect in no way diminishes the psalmist's need to explain why the righteous suffer now. Again, he does not use the motif of the age to come only as a consolation for present difficulties, but also to warn the righteous away from sins which would lead to their destruction, or to purge the righteous in preparation for the kingdom. There is nothing approaching a "theology of suffering" as found in other Jewish and Christian ruminations on the problem of evil. The psalmist believes that suffering is purgative and salutary (10:1-3) and will say that the righteous are singled out for especially exacting discipline, but he never moves toward assigning a positive meaning to suffering or of making it the sign of election. For the psalmist, suffering remains suffering for sin.

If the psalmist is unsettled on this point, elsewhere he is a confident, if not particularly profound, thinker. His doctrine of providence is strong. God is active in every circumstance of personal life and history. The attributes of God which are most stressed in the Psalms of Solomon are precisely those which pertain to his ceaseless surveillance of human life: He is the king and judge over all the earth (2:32; 8:24; 17:3) and the provider for all life (PssSol 5). Although implacably wrathful against hardened sinners, he is otherwise merciful and forgiving and especially tender in his love for Israel (5:9-11; 18:1-4; 7:4f.; 9:6f.). He is the refuge of the poor and weak (5:2; 10:6; 15:1; 18:3). Although humans are hardly the equals of God in benevolence (5:13f.), power, and trustworthiness (17:1-3), it is not God's distance from humanity which is prominent in the psalms but his proximity. The psalmist addresses God quite directly, much as he might address an earthly king. Indeed, his sense of divine kingship is hardly figurative or abstract. God is king (2:30, 32; 5:19).

Perhaps because of this proximity of the psalmist with his king there is but a small place for angels in the Psalms of Solomon. The angel of death is mentioned in Psalms of Solomon 7:4, but this is the only certain reference to an angel or angels in the psalms.

The poet's anthropology is straightforward and corresponds at least in part to that ascribed to the Pharisees and Essenes by Josephus. Man has freedom of will (9:4), yet it is God who impels man to good. Persons have a "fate" or "part" allotted to them, but this is closer to "good fortune" than to any more sophisticated doctrine. It is also clear that one's fate is not unalterably fixed and that God may adjust it on the basis of one's actions.

Life after death is concentrated entirely in the hope for bodily resurrection (viz. 2:31; 3:12) and betrays no certain trace of a belief in an immortal soul. The life of the righteous "goes on forever" (13:11), but this is in the kingdom, after the "day of mercy" (14:9). Thus the psalmist conceives of man as essentially embodied and the occasional use of the term "soul" corresponds to its use in the psalter to mean "person." He posits no body/soul dualism and is not in the least "otherworldly" in his thinking. The cosmos and the nature of humanity are undivided.

The psalmist is a moral rigorist. It is by scrupulous purity of life that one makes oneself pleasing to God. Even unintentional sins must be atoned for (3:7f.; 13:7) with repentance, confession (9:6f.), fasting and other penance (3:8), and the humble acceptance of God's discipline (13:10; 10:1). The Law is specifically mentioned in two places (4:8; 14:1-3). But while the psalmist undoubtedly derives his notions of God's requirements from the Law, there is little in his expressed ethic which presupposes the intense absorption with the specific interpretations and fulfillment of Torah that characterized the Pharisees. His concern for cultic obligations is expressed mainly through his horror at how certain Jews have travestied the Temple rites. Likewise, the distinction between Israel and the nations is sharp. The writer is no universalist. Gentiles are lawless by nature and are rejected by God (2:2, 19-25; 7:1-3; 8:23; 17:13-15), even if occasionally he chooses them as instruments of his wrath against sinful Israel (PssSol 8). No hope is offered for their conversion. Indeed, one of the blessings of the messianic age will be the expulsion of the gentiles from Israel (PssSol 17). God chooses Israel "above all the nations" forever (9:8-11) as the object of his special love and concern, and the sense of Israel's mission to the gentiles is extremely limited.

In reviewing the covenant relationship, the psalmist refers twice to Abraham (9:9f.; 18:3) and once to Sinai (10:4); however, the covenant central in his thought is the Davidic. This preoccupation is explicit in Psalm 17 and is implicit in the psalmist's animus against the Hasmonean usurpers and the prominent role assigned to Jerusalem, both at present and in the end-time. The city is conceived as holy in its own right, the most intense locus of God's presence in Israel (2:19-21; 8:4) and the center for the ingathering in the last days (PssSol 11).

The end-time is at hand. Following a review of Israel's immediate history up to his time, the psalmist concludes that the only solution lies in the immediate intervention of God in history. This is called, in 15:12; 10:4, and 11:6, the day of God's "supervision" or "overseeing" of Israel—the day when he takes direct control of Israel's destiny. This day of judgment will see sinners marked out for destruction (2:31, 34; 15:12), and the righteous honored and raised to life (2:31; 3:12). Sinners will not share in the resurrection (3:9-12; 14:9f.).

When the Messiah appears, he is a kingly figure, a scion of the house of David. As the manifestation of God's kingship over Israel and the world, he overthrows the gentile occupiers, ejects all aliens and sinners, and gathers together a purified nation which he leads in righteousness, justice, and holy wisdom (17:23-25). The dispersed of Israel will return to their homeland (17:31; 11; 8:28); the land will be distributed according to the antique tribal system (17:28); Jerusalem and the Temple will be resanctified (17:30f.). All gentile nations will be subjugated to Israel's king, and Jerusalem and her God will be glorified throughout the world.

Although the Messiah is distinctly a royal and, one might say, a political figure, he is not military in the ordinary sense, for the source of his power is entirely spiritual (17:33f.). He is not himself superhuman, although he is free from sin (17:36). He is so thoroughly imbued with the spirit of holiness (17:37) as to be invincible in action and perfect in judgment. This aspect of the messianic king—his power to purify the people and impart to them a holy wisdom—is given equal emphasis with his deliverance of them from the gentile oppressor. Although some have drawn a contrast between the Psalms of Solomon and other messianic passages in Jewish literature for the almost exclusive concern with Israel's sanctification in the Psalms, it should be remembered that the Psalms of Solomon always see a close connection between spiritual and physical well-being. If the messianic hymn makes no mention of the physical delights of the end-time, it is because in the psalmist's mind these would follow inevitably upon the renewal of Israel's righteousness.

The Psalms of Solomon, then, present an interesting intersection between themes already extant in biblical and post-biblical literature, and new emerging constructs. The ethics and outlook of the Book of Proverbs are joined to apocalyptic expectation, the warranty of the Davidic covenant is fulfilled in the messianic hope, and the concept of the "anointed one" becomes concretized in a specific expectation of an immediate consummation. The two messianic titles, "Son of David" and "Lord Messiah," the former the first instance and the latter the only instance of such usages in Jewish literature, are themselves combinations of older concepts. The Son of David is now more than a ruler with the proper genealogy, although certainly this was a concern of the psalmist. He is the final, apocalyptic king, who, in possession of the full range of idealized royal virtues, will accomplish all the chores left unfulfilled by lesser sons of David.

"Lord Messiah," the title used by Luke and a base for the theology of the New Testament, combines categories of all God's anointed agents—from priest to prophet to king—with the lordship to be exercised on earth by God's vizier. It is God who rules—the psalms are clear on that—but his agent is the Lord Messiah.

Recent studies into the nature of apocalyptic movements and literatures have emphasized that apocalyptic is not limited to specific parties or groups but is socially and politically conditioned by the fortunes of historical development. Likewise, the traditional "lists" of supposed characteristics of the phenomenon confuse surface contours with underlying causes. When historical conditions prevent the fulfillment of the divine promise, increasingly the devout look for the fulfillment of their hopes outside of historical conditions. Sociologically the position of the apocalyptic community is one of powerlessness and disenfranchisement. They hope for a direct and dramatic intervention by God that will overcome the limitations of the historical situation and bring their hopes to fulfillment.

The historical conditioning of apocalyptic is joined to an equally impelling crisis in theology. The failures of the old royal theology (the invincibility of the monarchy) and of the Deuteronomistic theology (the inviolability of Jerusalem) are visible in the corruption of king and priest, government and cult. When the collapse of history as a viable vehicle for covenantal promises prompts the crisis in theology, when the hopelessness of the political expectations of the oppressed community brings forth the call for a divine interruption of history, apocalyptic eschatology provides relief. The oppressed community looks for the realization of present and ancient hopes, and the rescue of traditional theology.

Relation to canonical books

The Psalms of Solomon are a conscious imitation of the Davidic psalter, perhaps heightened later by the addition of titles, ascription, and liturgical paraphernalia. Several classic psalm types can be identified: hymn (2:30; 33–37; 3:1f.); individual and community lamentation (2:19–25; 7; 8:22–34; 16:6–15); thanksgiving song (8:1–4; 15:1–6; 16:1–5); and didactic poem (3:3–12; 6). There appears to be more mixing of psalm types than in the psalter, and the progression of thought is not always as clear. In at least one respect, the Psalms of Solomon differ from the Davidic psalms: These psalms do not display the patina which comes with repeated liturgical handling, the wearing away of specific historical allusions which allows the psalter's hymns to be meaningful in situations far removed from their original one, as they are passed from one worshiper to another. To the contrary, the Psalms of Solomon preserve specific, thinly veiled allusions, sharp edges of historical reality.

Although it would be unfair to characterize the Psalms of Solomon as a montage of citations from the psalms and the prophets, there are numerous reflections of the biblical material to be found in these poems. Psalms of Solomon 17 has similarities to canonical Psalm 72, and there are echoes of Psalm 28 in our psalms. The similarity among the Psalms of Solomon, Baruch, and Isaiah 11 has long been noted. Repeatedly one hears echoes of the canonical books: adversaries who have trodden down the sanctuary (Isa 63:16–19; PssSol

1; 2); Israel as the "shoot of my planting" which "shall possess the land forever" (Isa 60:21; PssSol 14:3f.); the cries to God in distress (Ps 120:1; 130:1f.; PssSol 1:1); the turning away of the face of God (Ps 13:1; 22:24; Isa 64:7; Ezek 39:23f.; PssSol 2:8); a wreath of glory thrown to the ground (Lam 2:1; PssSol 2:21); the fate of the righteous as compared to the wicked (Prov 24:16–22; PssSol 3:9–12). The list is interminable, and the texture quite even. Conceptual constructs, individual ideas, and snatches of phrases from the Old Testament lie behind the Psalms of Solomon.

Parallels have been drawn between the Psalms of Solomon and the hymns in the opening chapters of Luke. Descriptions of the devout as "lambs among sinners" (PssSol 8:23) are common in the Gospels. God corrects the devout as "a beloved son" and as his "firstborn" (PssSol 13:9; cf. 2Sam 7:14), the discipline of Israel as "an only son" (PssSol 18:4; 4Ezra 6:58). These are familiar to New Testament readers. More specific than reflections which may well have their common source in the Old Testament are the titles of the Messiah. Although the "house of David" (Jer, Isa) or "my servant David" (Ezek) is expected to ascend the throne, the title "son of David" occurs here for the first time in Jewish literature (cf. numerous references in the Synoptic Gospels). The title "Lord Messiah," which becomes the favorite messianic title in the New Testament (christos kurios denotes Jesus Christ) outside the Gospels, appears only in Psalms of Solomon 17:32.

In the Codex Alexandrinus, the Psalms of Solomon are listed after both the Old Testament and New Testament and follow the two letters of Clement. However, in the extant Greek manuscripts of the text of the Psalms of Solomon they are uniformly placed with the wisdom literature, because the wisdom writings were popularly attributed to Solomon, and so the Psalms of Solomon were included among them.

Relation to apocryphal books

The Psalms of Solomon are unique neither in form (poetry, hymn) nor mood (diatribes, supplications, confessions). But in one point the Psalms of Solomon are singular. They call explicitly for a rebellion, albeit supported by divine intervention, against the government. Unlike the cryptic language of other apocalyptic literature, the criticism and challenge are open and unveiled. Such an open call for rebellion against foreign domination is rare in the contemporary literature. Most seditious compositions, such as Daniel and Revelation, are veiled in cryptic vocabulary innocuous in the view of outsiders. Unless the document was assured of a strictly controlled circulation, the community was either careless or made bold by its belief in the certainty of imminent divine intervention. Its subversiveness lies nearest to that of the Qumran War Scroll, which likewise aimed at specific targets—but the circulation of IQM was severely restricted and its community closed to external investigation.

Although parallels between the Psalms of Solomon have been drawn in various directions, the only sure dependence between them and another apocryphal writing is between Psalms of Solomon 11:2–5 and 1 Baruch 5:5–8. Some scholars extend this alignment to include a larger section (1Bar 4:36–5:9 with PssSol 11) or find other parallels (1Bar 4:26 and PssSol 8:17; 1Bar 4:20 and PssSol 2:21–23) or even expand the parallels to include all of 1 Baruch. However, if we insist that proven parallels at minimum retain their relative verse sequence, we must examine a more restricted selection:

|                        |   |
|------------------------|---|
| Psalms of Solomon 11:2 | Stand on a high place, O Jerusalem, and look at your children; from the east and the west assembled together by the Lord. |
| 1Baruch 5:5            | Stand up, O Jerusalem, and stand upon a high place . . . and look at your children assembled from . . . west to east.     |
| Psalms of Solomon 11:4 | He flattened high mountains into level ground for them . . .  |
| 1Baruch 5:7            | For God commanded every high mountain to be flattened . . . into level ground . . .                                       |
| Psalms of Solomon 11:5 | The forests shaded them . . . God made every fragrant tree to grow for them.  |
| 1Baruch 5:8            | The forests and every fragrant tree shaded Israel at God's command.   |

A few have detected a dependence of Psalms of Solomon upon 1 Baruch, usually from the observation that the Baruch parallels fit their context and that the themes described are those appropriate to the Babylonian exile. However, most scholars insist that 1 Baruch is dependent upon the Psalms of Solomon because stanza seven of Baruch's "Poem of Consolation and Hope" (1Bar 5:5-9) is longer, disjunctive, and somewhat diffused, while the psalm is a tightly arranged and wholly consistent composition.

It seems clear that the Psalms of Solomon are not dependent upon 1 Baruch. It is not impossible, however, that they both are quoting some lost liturgical poem. But without the recovery of this hypothetical source, we may for the present assume that 1 Baruch is dependent upon the Psalms of Solomon.

Apart from this specific relationship, the connections are abundant between the Psalms of Solomon and the literature from Qumran. Isaiah 11, for instance, has exerted a strong influence on both. The "spirit of counsel and power, a spirit of knowledge and of the fear of Yahweh," of Isaiah 11:2, are echoed both in IQS<sup>b</sup> 5.25 and in Psalms of Solomon 17:37-40. The metaphors of Isaiah 11:4, "and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips he shall slay the wicked" (RSV), are used in IQS<sup>b</sup> 5.24, 25a:

And (thou shalt strike the peoples) by the might
of thy (mouth)
Thou shalt devastate the earth by thy sceptre, and
by the breath of thy lips shalt thou slay the ungodly.

And they are echoed in Psalms of Solomon 17:23f.:

To smash the arrogance of sinners like a potter's jar;
.....
to destroy the unlawful nations with the word of his mouth.

Imagery like "gird him with righteousness/strength" (Isa 11:5; IQS<sup>b</sup> 5.26a; PssSol 17:22) and "fruit of the lips" (Prov 18:20; IQH 1.27f.; PssSol 15:3) is drawn from the Old Testament by both Qumran and the Psalms of Solomon, and indicates their common interest in and use of such imagery.

The Qumran community went into the desert to escape persecution and saw in this flight prophetic fulfillment:

And when these things come to pass for the Community in Israel at these appointed times, they shall be separated from the midst of the habitation of perverse men to go into the desert to prepare the way of Him as it is written, "In the wilderness prepare the way of . . . Make straight in the desert a highway for our God" (IQS 8.12-14).<sup>13</sup>

Psalms of Solomon 17:15-17 knows of a flight of the devout from Jerusalem:

No one among them in Jerusalem acted (with) mercy or truth.
Those who loved the assemblies of the devout fled from them as sparrows fled from their nest.
(They became) refugees in the wilderness
to save their lives from evil.
The life of one who was saved from them was precious in the eyes of the exiles.

The catalog of sins attributed to the usurpers of David's throne and Solomon's Temple are called the "three nets of Belial" in the Damascus Document:

. . . these are Belial's three nets, of which Levi son of Jacob spoke, by which he (Belial) ensnared Israel, and which he set [be]fore them as three sorts of

<sup>13</sup> Translated by A. Dupont-Sommer, The Essene Writings, p. 92.

<sup>14</sup> Translated by A. Dupont-Sommer, The Essene Writings, pp. 128f.

righteousness: the first is lust, the second is riches,
(and) the third is defilement of the Sanctuary (CD 4.15–18).<sup>14</sup>

In the Psalms of Solomon the usurpers are described in detail and their sins are listed:

God exposed their sins in the full light of day;
.....
Everyone committed adultery with his neighbor's wife;
they made with them agreements with an oath about these things.
They stole from the sanctuary of God
as if there were no redeeming heir.
They walked on the place of sacrifice of the Lord (coming) from all kinds of uncleanness;
... they defiled the sacrifices as if they were common meat (8:8–12).

The sins are the same three denounced in the Damascus Document, and they are cataloged in the same order.

A miscellany of verbal and conceptual comparisons:

“Tree of Life” (1QH 8.5f.; PssSol 14:3)
“Driven/fled from the nest” (1QH 4.8f.; PssSol 17:16)
“Punishment for families” (CD 3.1; PssSol 9:5)
Lions that “break the bones of the strong” (1QH 5.7; PssSol 13:3, 4:19)

Cultural importance

The few and scattered references to the Psalms of Solomon in Jewish and Christian writings show that they did not enjoy any widespread influence upon religious literature. The handful of allusions, none earlier than the fifth century, and the lateness of the extant manuscripts, the earliest being copied more than a millennium after its composition, indicate that the Psalms of Solomon achieved only limited circulation up until the end of the first millennium of our era. Yet in certain times and places the Psalms of Solomon succeeded as did none of the other writings included among the Pseudepigrapha. It is the only text included in the present volumes listed in the canon in Codex Alexandrinus.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 195–97.
Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 175f.
Denis, Introduction, pp. 60–69.

Baars, W. “Psalms of Solomon,” in The Old Testament in Syriac. Leiden, 1972. (The most recent edition of the Syr. Introduction, Syr. text.)
Gebhardt, O. von. Die Psalmen Salomos. Leipzig, 1895. (The most thorough edition to date; collates five of eight then available MSS. Introduction, Gk. text, and nn.)
Gray, G. B. “The Psalms of Solomon,” in APOT, vol. 2, pp. 625–52. (The most accessible ET of the PssSol. Introduction, translation, and nn.)
Hann, R. R. The Manuscript History of the Psalms of Solomon. SCS 13; Chico, Calif., 1982. (The most recent study of the relationship of the Gk. MSS.)
Holm-Nielsen, S. “Die Psalmen Salomos.” JSHRZ 4 (1977) 51–112. [This German translation of the PssSol appeared too late for the contributor to consult. —J.H.C.]

- La Cerda, J. Adversaria sacra . . . accessit . . . Psalterium Salomonis. Lyon, 1626. (The first published edition of the PssSol. Gk. text with Lat. translation. Thought to be based on the lost Codex Augustanus, since 1895 shown to be based on a faulty transcription of MS 149.)
- Rahlfs, A. Septuaginta id est Vetus Testamentum Graece. Stuttgart, 1935. (Most accessible Gk. text. Based on von Gebhardt's edition.)
- Ryle, H. S., and James, M. R. Psalmi Solomontos: Psalms of the Pharisees. Commonly Called the Psalms of Solomon. Cambridge, England, 1891. (The most thorough English edition. Introduction, Gk. text, translation, and nn.)
- Schüpphaus, J. Die Psalmen Salomos: Ein Zeugnis Jerusalemer Theologie und Frömmigkeit in der Mitte des vorchristlichen Jahrhunderts. ALGHJ 7; Leiden, 1977. [This monograph appeared too late for the contributor to consult. —J.H.C.]
- Viteau, J. Les Psaumes de Salomon, in François Martin, Documents pour l'étude de la Bible. Paris, 1911, 2.4. (Introduction, extensive survey of literature, Gk. text, translation, and nn.)
- Wright, R. B. "The Psalms of Solomon, the Pharisees, and the Essenes." SCS 2; 1972, pp. 136–47. (Examination of the origin of the PssSol which calls into question the assignment of the authorship to the Pharisees.)

PSALMS OF SOLOMON

1

A Psalm of Solomon

|   |  |                          |
|---|--|--------------------------|
| 1 | I cried out to the Lord when I was severely <sup>a</sup> troubled,to God when sinners set upon (me).                                   | 5:5; 15:1; 2Chr12:12 |
| 2 | Suddenly, the clamor of war was heard before me;"He will hear me, for I am full of righteousness."                                     | 8:1                      |
| 3 | I considered in my heart <sup>b</sup> that I was full of righteousness,for I had prospered and had many children. <sup>c</sup>         | Isa 54:1                 |
| 4 | Their wealth was extended to the whole earth,and their glory to the end of the earth.  |                          |
| 5 | They exalted themselves to the stars, <sup>d</sup>they said they would never fall.   | Isa 14:13                |
| 6 | They were arrogant in their possessions,and they did not acknowledge <sup>e</sup> (God).   | Ps 29:1f.; 96:7f.        |
| 7 | Their sins were in secret, and even I did not know.  | 4:5; 8:9                 |
| 8 | Their lawless actions surpassed the gentiles before them; <sup>f</sup>they completely profaned the sanctuary of the Lord. <sup>g</sup> | 2:3; 8:12Lev 19:8    |

2

A Psalm of Solomon Concerning Jerusalem

|   |   |                                 |
|---|---|---------------------------------|
| 1 | Arrogantly the sinner <sup>a</sup> broke down the strong walls <sup>b</sup> with a battering ram <sup>c</sup>and you did not interfere. | 8:16-18Ps 10:24Ezra 3:8 |
|---|---|---------------------------------|

1 The psalmist, speaking as Jerusalem personified, is distressed by the attack on the holy city. The responses are the classic defenses of holding to one's integrity (vs. 2) like Job, and claiming the visible assurance of divine favor (vs. 3) like the Deuteronomist. But the children have turned out badly. Further, their sin has brought punishment, even worse than the gentile invasions in the past. PssSol 1 is a fragmentary poem which is dependent upon PssSol 2.

a. The Gk. reads: eis telos, which may mean (1) a dislocated title "to the Chief Musician" (see Ps 54[55]); however, the LXX rubric is eis to telos; (2) "to the end" either of time or of the author's endurance (Syr.: "at my end"); (3) an intensification "severely," as in 2Chr 12:12, 1Thes 2:16, and PssSol 2:5.

b. In the Semitic world both thought and emotion were located in the heart.

c. I.e. the citizens of Jerusalem. According to the Torah (Deut 7:12f.), the blessing of a large family was a reward for obedience.

d. Compare Isa 14:13: "I will climb up to the heavens; and higher than the stars of God."

e. "Pay tribute (to God)" as in Ps 29:1f.; 96:7f. Less likely is "they did not bring (offerings)" as in Ps 68:29; 76:11. The sinners had possession of God's blessings but were not properly thankful. Syr.: "they did not understand."

f. This may refer to earlier gentile incursions, e.g. Antiochus Epiphanes in the 2nd cent. B.C.

g. This may refer specifically to the services and sacrifices of the sanctuary as in Lev 19:8, or more generally to the Temple itself as in Ezek 5:11; 23:38, inclusive of both the buildings and the rites. Syr.: "the sanctuary."

2 Psalm 2 is one of three psalms, together with 8 and 17, containing historical allusions which provide clues for dating parts of the collection. The description in PssSol 2 agrees with the details of Pompey's capture of Jerusalem in 63 B.C. After being welcomed into the city (see 8:16-19), he could not take the Temple area without a fight. After a three-month siege, Pompey executed the resisters, the supporters of Aristobulus the high priest, and occupied the sanctuary. Pompey's assassination, in 48 B.C. in Egypt by Caesar's agents (vss. 26-29), is cheered as an act of God (vss. 32-35). It should be noted that it is Pompey the individual, not Imperial Rome, which is the enemy. Jerusalem was accorded special consideration by the caesars (see Josephus, Ant 14.10.1-10).

a. In eschatological literature, coded allusions to conquerors are carefully drawn to avoid obvious consequences (see 2Thes 2:3f.; 1Jn 2:18).

b. The walls surrounding the Temple area. Pompey had entered the city three months earlier without resistance (see 8:16-18).

c. Josephus reports that Pompey imported the machine from Tyre (Ant 14.4.2).

- 2 Gentile foreigners went up to your place of sacrifice;
they arrogantly trampled (it) with their sandals. 8:12
Isa 63:18;
Ps 79:1
- 3 Because the sons of Jerusalem<sup>d</sup> defiled the sanctuary of the Lord, they were profaning the offerings<sup>e</sup> of God with lawless acts; 1:8; 8:11
- 4 Because of these things he said, "Remove them far from me;
they are not sweet-smelling."<sup>f</sup> Jer 7:15
- 5 The beauty of his glory<sup>g</sup> was despised before God;
it was completely disgraced.
- 6 The sons and the daughters<sup>h</sup> (were) in harsh captivity, their neck in a seal,<sup>i</sup> a spectacle among the gentiles.
- 7 He did (this) to them according to their sins,
so that he abandoned them to the hands of those who prevailed.
- 8 For he turned away his face from their mercy;
(from) young and old and their children once again,<sup>j</sup>
for they sinned once again by not listening.
- 9 And the heavens were weighed down,
and the earth despised them, Jer 2:12
for no one on (the earth) had done what they did.
- 10 And the earth shall know all your righteous judgments, O God. 2:15; 5:1; 8:7f.; 9:5; 17:10
- 11 They<sup>k</sup> set up the sons of Jerusalem for derision because of her prostitutes.
Everyone passing by entered in in broad daylight.
- 12 They derided their lawless actions even in comparison to what they themselves were doing;<sup>l</sup> before the sun they held up their unrighteousness to contempt. 8:8
- 13 And the daughters of Jerusalem were available to all, according to your judgments,<sup>m</sup> because they defiled themselves with improper intercourse.<sup>n</sup> 8:9
- 14 My heart and my belly<sup>o</sup> are troubled over these things.
- 15 I shall prove you right,<sup>p</sup> O God, in uprightness of heart;
for your judgments are right, O God. 3:5; 4:8; 8:7,26; 9:2
Ps 51:4; 119:7

d. "Sons of Jerusalem" (only in Joel 4:6); also "daughters of Jerusalem" (PssSol 2:13). In the context of vs. 3, the Temple and the services, the "sons of Jerusalem" may be the priests who attend the sanctuary and the rites.

e. Lit. "the gifts of God," a phrase used in the LXX of Lev 21:6 as "food of . . . God."

f. Other MSS read "fit (to be offered)." Some editors have conjectured "I have no pleasure in them," but for this there is no textual evidence. The awkwardness of the text has prompted ancient and modern attempts to smooth the reading. None is entirely satisfactory.

g. The term "beauty of his glory" may refer to: (1) the Temple (as in Isa 60:7), or (2) a theophany (as in Ezek 1:28; 10:18), or (3) the Temple hangings (in Isa 6:1 the word swl similarly may be the draperies and tapestries of the sanctuary). Syr.: "He did not give them his glorious beauty."

h. Of Jerusalem; see vs. 3 and 13. Syr.: "her sons and daughters."

i. It was common to brand or tattoo slaves with the signet of the owner, usually on the forehead or hand (see 3Mac 2:29), rarely on the neck as here (see also SibOr 8.244). This may alternately refer to slave collars marked with the owner's name.

Syr.: "the people's sealed yoke is put around their neck."

j. "At once," "finally," "in a moment," "once for all." The idiom appears in PssSol 11:2 and in Isa 66:8, Ps 88(89):35, and 1Thes 2:18.

k. The foreigners, even by whose standards the sins of the Jerusalemites were despicable (see vs. 12). Some MSS read "he," i.e. God.

l. The gentiles derided the Jews' lawless actions; the gentiles held up the Jews' unrighteousness to contempt.

m. Not a specific verdict in this case, but the accumulated judgments which form the concept of the divine Law.

n. The Heb. may have been more explicit than the euphemistic Gk. translation, which is literally translated "mingled intermixing." Although racial mixing may have been feared, the context here suggests it is sexual improprieties which are probably intended (see PssSol 8:9, where a cognate is used to describe incest).

o. See Isa 16:11; Jer 4:19; Lam 1:20.

p. The idea that the devout are to "justify" God or "prove him right" appears often in these psalms (3:5; 4:8; 8:7, 26; 9:2). See also Ps 51:4; 119:7; Lam 1:18; Lk 7:29.

- 16 For you have rewarded the sinners according to their actions, and according to their extremely wicked sins.
- 17 You have exposed their sins, that your judgment might be evident;
you have obliterated their memory from the earth. 2:12; 8:8
- 18 God is a righteous judge and he will not be impressed by appearances. Deut 10:17
- 19 For the gentiles insulted Jerusalem, trampling (her) down;
he<sup>q</sup> dragged her beauty down from the throne of glory.<sup>r</sup>
- 20 She put on sackcloth instead of beautiful clothes, a rope around her head instead of a crown. Isa 3:24
- 21 She took off the wreath of glory which God had put on her;
in dishonor her beauty was thrown to the ground.
- 22 And I saw and implored in the Lord's presence and said,
"Let it be enough,<sup>s</sup> Lord,<sup>t</sup> to make your hand heavy<sup>u</sup> on Jerusalem<sup>v</sup> 5:6
by bringing gentiles (upon her)."
- 23 For they ridiculed (her) and did not refrain in anger and vicious rage, and they will be finished unless you, Lord, censure them (= gentiles)
in your anger.
- 24 For they have not done it in zeal,<sup>w</sup> but in emotional passion,<sup>x</sup> to pour out their anger against us in plunder. Isa 10:5-11
- 25 Do not delay, O God, to repay to them on (their) heads;<sup>y</sup> to declare dishonorable<sup>z</sup> the arrogance of the dragon.<sup>a2</sup> Jer 51:34
- 26 And I did not wait long until God<sup>b2</sup> showed me his insolence pierced<sup>c2</sup> on the mountains of Egypt,
more despised than the smallest thing on earth and sea.
- 27 His body was carried about on the waves<sup>d2</sup> in much shame, and there was no one to bury (him),<sup>e2</sup> for he (God) had despised him with contempt.
- 28 He did not consider that he was a man,
for the latter<sup>f2</sup>
do not consider (this).
- 29 He said, "I shall be lord of land and sea";
and he did not understand that it is God who is great,<sup>g2</sup> powerful in his great strength.
- 30 He is king over the heavens,<sup>h2</sup>

q. The last antecedent mentioned is God, in vs. 18, but the Gk. translator, who appears untroubled by tense and person grammatical agreements, may be alluding to the gentile Pompey. Syr.: "was dragged down."

r. The reference could be to (1) the Temple (Jer 17:12), (2) the holy of holies, (3) God's throne (Isa 66:1), (4) the heavenly powers (TLepi 3:8; Eph 1:21; Col 1:16; 2En 20:1), (5) Jerusalem (Jer 14:21), or (6) the honorific place the holy city occupied (1Sam 2:8; Isa 22:23).

s. In the OT it is God who halts the punishment of the people (2Sam 24:16; 1Chr 21:15).

t. One MS adds "God."

u. See Ps 32:4.

v. One MS reads "Israel."

w. The gentiles, seen as God's agent, act in the Lord's "zeal" to punish evil (see Ezek 5:13; 16:38, 41; 38:19). But in this instance they have gone beyond their commission (PssSol 2:22) by exceeding the punishment appropriate to Israel's sin. They must be stopped and themselves punished.

x. Lit. "lust of soul."

y. This may be a pun on "head"; i.e. turn it back on their leader (as happens in the next vss.). Syr.: "thrown down."

z. This awkward phrase may be a mistranslation from the Heb. The original meaning may have been to "turn the arrogance . . . into dishonor" (as Hos 4:7, "they have bartered their glory for shame"). Syr.: "to cast down in dishonor."

a2. The dragon image was often applied to Egypt (Ps 74:14; Ezek 29:3) and to Nebuchadnezzar (Jer 51:34 [LXX 28:32]). If the common code of identifying Rome with Babylon is employed here, the Roman Pompey would be the incarnation of the earlier conqueror of Jerusalem. The crocodile (Heb. tan'in) of Ezek 32:2 and 29:3 is assumed by some to be the word behind the Gk. drakontos (dragon).

b2. Syr.: "the Lord."

c2. These details give us the clearest identification with Pompey, whose death, described by Plutarch, matches in most particulars (see also Dio Cassius 42.5).

d2. Other MSS read "rotted on the waves."

e2. The worst indignity at death was to fail to have a proper burial (Ps 79:3; 2Kgs 9:10; Jer 22:19). Pompey's decapitated and decomposing body was burned on a pyre of driftwood.

f2. "The latter," i.e. man.

g2. Syr.: "the Lord is God."

h2. Syr. adds, "and over the earth."

- judging even kings and rulers,<sup>i2</sup>
- 31 Raising me up to glory,
but putting to sleep the arrogant for eternal destruction in dishonor,
because they did not know him.
- 32 And now, officials of the earth, see the judgment of the Lord, that he is a great and righteous king, judging what is under heaven. Ps 2:10
- 33 Praise God, you who fear the Lord with understanding, for the Lord's mercy is upon those who fear him with judgment.
- 34 To separate between the righteous and the sinner
to repay sinners forever according to their actions
- 35 And to have mercy on the righteous (keeping him) from the humiliation of the sinner,
and to repay the sinner for what he has done to the righteous.
- 36 For the Lord is good<sup>i2</sup> to those who persistently call upon him,
to treat his devout<sup>k2</sup> in accordance with his mercy,
to bring them (constantly) before him in strength. 9:6
- 37 Praised be the Lord forever before his servants.

3

A Psalm of Solomon Concerning the Righteous

- 1 Why do you sleep, soul,<sup>a</sup> and do not praise the Lord?
Sing<sup>b</sup> a new song<sup>c</sup> to God, who is worthy to be praised.
- 2 Sing and be aware of how he is aware of you,<sup>d</sup>
for a good psalm to God is from a glad heart.<sup>e</sup> Isa 65:14; Judg 16:25; Ruth 3:7; Jas 5:13
- 3 The righteous remember<sup>f</sup> the Lord all the time, by acknowledging and proving the Lord's judgments right. 2:10, 15; 4:8; 5:1; 8:7f., 23; 34; 9:5; 10:5; 17:10
- 4 The righteous does not lightly esteem discipline<sup>g</sup> from the Lord;
his desire is (to be) always in the Lord's presence.
- 5 The righteous stumbles<sup>h</sup> and proves the Lord right;
he falls and watches for what God<sup>i</sup> will do about him;
he looks to where his salvation comes from. Ps 121:1; 123:1
- 6 The confidence<sup>j</sup> of the righteous (comes) from God their savior;
sin after sin does not visit the house of the righteous.
- 7 The righteous constantly searches his house,<sup>k</sup>
to remove his unintentional sins.

i2. Syr.: "kingdoms and princes."

j2. In Gk., this phrase, chrēstos ho kurios ("the Lord is good"), could be changed to christos kurios, "the Lord Messiah" (in the NT "Jesus Christ") by altering one eta to iota, an example of several opportunities to Christianize the text which was not appropriated by copyists in any extant manuscript.

k2. Some MSS read: "those with him."

3 a. Syr.: "Why sleep, my soul . . . ?"

b. "Sing" is plural, most likely because in six of seven passages in the OT in which "a new song" is invited, usually from choir or congregation, the verb is plural, and this writer unconsciously repeats a familiar phrase. Less probably, he is calling for the heavenly choirs to sing to God. The verb sing describes singing with the accompaniment of a stringed instrument: lit. "strum a new song."

c. Other MSS read: "a song and a hymn."

d. Lit. "keep watching for his watching" or "be aware of his being aware of you." The Gk. and Syr. are obscure to the point of unintelligibility.

e. Other MSS read: "whole heart" (see Deut 6:5).

f. "Mention" (see Ps 63:6; 71:16; Isa 58:1; 62:6).

g. The word invokes the image of the training of a child.

h. Or "offends."

i. "Lord . . . God"; Syr.: "God . . . Lord."

j. Gk.: "truth," "faithfulness," or "dependability."

k. Syr.: "he (God) searches the house of the righteous."

- 8 He atones for (sins of) ignorance by fasting and humbling his soul, and the Lord will cleanse every devout<sup>l</sup> person and his house.<sup>m</sup> 18:4; Ps 35:13
- 9 The sinner stumbles and curses his life,
the day of his birth, and his mother's pains.
- 10 He adds sin upon sin in his life;
he falls—his fall is serious—and he will not get up. Isa 30:1
- 11 The destruction of the sinner is forever, and he will not be remembered when (God) looks after the righteous. 2:31; 14:9;
15:10, 12f.
- 12 This is the share<sup>n</sup> of sinners forever, but those who fear the Lord shall rise up to eternal life,<sup>o</sup>
and their life shall be in the Lord's light, and it shall never end. 13:11; 14:10

4

A Conversation<sup>a</sup> of Solomon with Those Trying to Impress People<sup>b</sup>

- 1 Why are you sitting in the council<sup>c</sup> of the devout, you profaner?
And your heart is far from the Lord,
provoking the God of Israel by lawbreaking;
- 2 Excessive in words, excessive in appearance above everyone.<sup>d</sup>
he who is harsh in words in condemning sinners at judgment.
- 3 And his hand is the first one against him<sup>e</sup> as if in zeal, yet he himself is guilty of a variety of sins and intemperance.<sup>f</sup> Deut 13:9f.
- 4 His eyes are on every woman indiscriminately,<sup>g</sup> his tongue lies when swearing a contract. 8:9f.
4:11
- 5 At night and in hiding he sins as if no one saw.
With his eyes he speaks to every woman of illicit affairs;<sup>h</sup>
he is quick to enter graciously every house as though innocent. 1:7; 8:9
- 6 May God remove from the devout those who live in hypocrisy;
may his flesh decay and his life be impoverished.
- 7 May God expose the deeds of those who try to impress people;
(and expose) their deeds with ridicule and contempt. 4:19
- 8 And the devout will prove their God's judgment to be right when sinners are driven out from the presence of the righteous, those who please men, who deceitfully quote the Law. 2:10; 3:3; 5:1;
8:7f., 23, 34; 9:5;
10:5; 17:10
- 9 And their eyes are on a man's peaceful house,
as a serpent destroys the wisdom<sup>i</sup> of others with criminal words.
- 10 His words are deceitful that (he) may accomplish (his) evil desires;

l. "Devout." The Gk. corresponds to the Heb. hasid, from which comes the party name of the strictest observers of Judaism, the Hasidim (see 1Mac 2:42).

m. The devout eliminate all possible sins: repeated sins (vs. 6), accidental sins (vs. 7), and unknown sins (vs. 8).

n. "Portion," "fate," "doom," lit. "what is reserved for . . ." (see 4:14, 5:4, and 14:9; also Ps 49:13 RSV; 81:15).

o. As elsewhere, it is unclear whether this is the resurrection of the body (rise from the grave), or immortality of the spirit (rise to God), or, indeed, if this author distinguished the two. See Dan 12:2; 2Mac 7:9; Job 33:29f.

4 a. Other MSS read "Psalm."

b. "Those trying to be popular," "opportunists," or "demagogues," those who attempt to win public approval and applause at the sacrifice of principle. PssSol 4 is an indictment of hypocritical political and religious leaders. The language is intense and shockingly vicious in its attack on those in the highest positions in government.

c. In the capital, in the first cent. B.C., the "assembly of the holy ones" (or "holy assembly" in some MSS) most probably refers to the supreme council, the Sanhedrin, rather than to a local Sanhedrin. Some MSS omit "of the devout."

d. I.e. verbose and ostentatious.

e. I.e. the sinner (vs. 2). Josephus spoke of the cruelty of certain council members in imposing harsh sentences (Ant 20.9.1).

f. Lack of self-control. One MS reads: "appears content."

g. Syr.: "immodestly."

h. Lit. "evil arrangements."

i. The allusion may be to the garden (Gen 3) in which the serpent worked on one to get at the other.

- he did not stop until he succeeded in scattering (them) as orphans.
 11 He devastated a house because of his criminal desire;
 he deceived with words; (as if) there were no one to see and to judge.
 12 He is satiated with lawless actions at one (place), and (then) his eyes are on another house
 to destroy it with agitating words.<sup>j</sup> 13 With all this his soul, like Hades, is not satisfied. Isa 5:14; 14:9; 15:10; 16:12
Prov 27:20
- 14 Lord, let his part be in disgrace before you;
 may he go out groaning and return cursing. Ps 69:23-29;
109:6-15; 121:8
 15 Lord, may his life be in pain and poverty and anxiety;
 may his sleep be painful and his awakening be anxious.
 16 May sleep be taken away from his temples at night;<sup>k</sup> may he fail disgracefully in all the work of his hands.
 17 May he return to his house empty-handed;
 may his house lack everything; let it not satisfy his soul.<sup>l</sup> 18 May his old age be in lonely childlessness until his removal.<sup>m</sup> 19 May the flesh of those who try to impress people be scattered by wild 4:7
 animals,
 and the bones of the criminals (lie) dishonored out in the sun.<sup>n</sup> Ps 53:5; 79:2 20 Let crows peck out the eyes of the hypocrites, for they disgracefully empty many people's houses Prov 30:17
 and greedily scatter (them).
 21 They have not remembered God,
 nor have they feared God in all these things;
 but they have angered God, and provoked him.
 22 May he banish them from the earth, 4:6
 for they defrauded innocent people by pretense.
- 23 Blessed are those who fear God in their innocence; 2:33
 the Lord shall save them from deceitful and sinful people and save us from every evil snare. Ps 141:9 24 May God banish those who arrogantly commit all (kinds of) unrighteousness,
 for the Lord our God is a great and powerful judge in righteousness. 2:10, 18; 5:1; 9:2,5; 10:5
 25 Lord, let your mercy be upon all those who love you. 6:6; 10:3; 14:1

5

A Psalm of Solomon

- 1 Lord God, I will joyfully praise your name 10:5
 among those who know your righteous judgments. 2:10; 3:3; 4:8; 8:34
 2 For you are good and merciful, the shelter of the poor.
 When I cry out to you, do not ignore me. 10:6; 15:1; 18:2
 3 For no one takes plunder away from a strong man, Ps 28:1
 so who is going to take (anything) from all that Isa 49:24
 you have done, unless you give (it)?

j. Lit. "words that give wings."

k. See Judg 4:21-22; Ps 132:4).

l. Lit. "it will not fill his soul."

m. Lit. "taken up." The term is odd here, because of its rarity (it is not found in the LXX and only in Lk 9:51) and because it came to be a technical term for "assumption," as applied later to Enoch, Moses, and Abraham. Its use here may be a clue for the dating of the Gk. translation of the PssSol, for no Jew or Christian would employ it in this context after it had become current in Christian and Jewish literature and with that denotation (see 4Ezra 6:26; 8:20; AsMos 10:12). The Syr. paraphrases the line: "and may not one of his children come near to him."

n. The OT describes the particular horror of those who are denied burial. To lie exposed, to be, in the words of Deut 28:26, "carrion for all the birds of heaven and all the beasts of the earth," was the ultimate disgrace described by Jeremiah (7:33; 8:1f.) and by Ezekiel (6:5; 29:5; 39:17).

- 4 For an individual and his fate (are) on the scales before you;
he cannot add any increase contrary to your judgment, O God.
- 5 When we are persecuted, we call on you for help 1:1: 15:1
and you will not turn away from our prayer;
for you are our God.
- 6 Do not weigh down your hand on us,<sup>a</sup> 2:22
lest under duress we sin.
- 7 Even if you do not restore us, Ps 80:7-19
we will not stay away, but will come to you.<sup>b</sup>
- 8 For if I am hungry, I will cry out to you, O God, Ps 107:5f.
and you will give me (something).
- 9 You feed the birds and the fish,
as you send rain to the wilderness<sup>c</sup> that the grass may sprout
- 10 To provide pasture in the wilderness for every living thing, and if they are hungry, they will lift up their face to you. Ps 145:15
- 11 You feed kings and rulers and peoples, O God, and who is the hope of the poor and the needy, if not you, Lord?
- 12 And you will listen. For who is good and kind but you, 15:1
making the humble person happy<sup>d</sup> by opening your hand in mercy? Ps 86:1-6
- 13 Human kindness (comes) sparingly, and tomorrow,<sup>e</sup> and if (it comes) a second time without complaint, this is remarkable.
- 14 But your gift is abundantly good and rich, 18:1
and the one whose hope is in you will not be lacking gifts.
- 15 Lord, your mercy is upon the whole world in goodness.
- 16 Happy is (the person) whom God<sup>f</sup> remembers with a moderate sufficiency; Prov 16:8: 30:8
for if one is excessively rich, he sins.
- 17 Moderate (wealth) is adequate—with righteousness;
for with this comes the Lord's blessing:
to be (more than) satisfied with righteousness.
- 18 Those who fear the Lord are happy with good things.
In your kingdom your goodness (is) upon Israel.
- 19 May the glory of the Lord be praised, for he is our king. 17:1.46

6

In Hope. Of Solomon

- 1 Happy is the man whose heart is ready to call on the name of the Lord; 10:1
when he remembers the name of the Lord, he will be saved. 3:3
- 2 His ways are directed by the Lord, and the works of his hands are protected by the Lord<sup>a</sup> his God. Ps 90:17
- 3 His soul will not be disturbed by the vision of evil dreams;
he will not be frightened when crossing rivers or rough seas.
- 4 He gets up from his sleep and blesses the name of the Lord;
when his heart is at rest he sings in honor of his God's<sup>b</sup> name.
- 5 He prays to the Lord for all his household, and the Lord has heard the prayers of all who fear God.<sup>c</sup>

5 a. Cf. Job 2:5.

b. Syr.: "and do not turn your face from us lest we go far from you."

c. "Empty grasslands."

d. Syr.: "satisfied."

e. The sense is that human help is always "too little and too late." In contrast, God's help is generous and prompt. All the devout need to do is to look up (vs. 10) and God provides. For "sparingly," one MS reads: "to a friend."

f. Syr.: "the Lord."

6 a. Syr. omits "Lord."

b. Syr. reads: "the Lord."

c. Syr. reads: "him."

6 And the Lord fulfills every request from the soul that hopes in him; praised is the Lord, who shows mercy to those who truly love him. 10:3; 14:1

7

Of Solomon. About Restoring<sup>a</sup>

1 Do not move away from us, O God, lest those who hate us without cause should attack us. 1:1; 9:8; 17:5
Ps 35:19

2 For you have rejected them, O God;
do not let their feet trample your holy inheritance.<sup>b</sup> 2:2; 8:12; 17:22

3 Discipline us as you wish, but do not turn (us) over to the gentiles. 7:9; 8:26; 16:11; 18:7

4 For if you sent death (himself)<sup>c</sup>
you would give him (special) instructions about us.

5 For you are kind,
and will not be angry enough to destroy us.

6 While your name lives among us, we shall receive mercy
and the gentile will not overcome us.

7 For you are our protection,
and we will call to you, and you will hear us.

8 For you will have compassion on the people Israel forever and you will not reject (them);

9 And we are under your yoke forever,<sup>d</sup> and (under) the whip<sup>e</sup> of your discipline. 8:26; 16:11; 18:7

10 You will direct us in the time of your support,<sup>f</sup> showing mercy to the house of Jacob<sup>g</sup> on the day when you promised (it) to them.

8

Of Solomon. To Victory<sup>a</sup>

1 My ear heard distress and the sound of war,
the blast of the trumpet sounding slaughter and destruction. 1:2

2 The sound of many people as of a violent storm, as a raging fire storm sweeping through the wilderness. Jer 4:11-13

3 And I said to my heart, Where, then, will God judge it?<sup>b</sup>

4 I heard a sound in Jerusalem, the holy city.

5 My stomach was crushed at what I heard; Isa 21:3; Jer
23:9

7 a. The title of this psalm appears to refer to the restoration of people to the protection of God (vss. 1-3) and under the discipline of God (vss. 5, 9). See 16:11.

b. The Temple; see 2:2, 19.

c. Lit. "death." The allusion of death with special instruction for the devout may be to the Exodus and to the tenth plague. The idiom "threat of death" conveys the two-stage process of (1) death being sent and (2) death claiming its victims. Here the first occurs, but the devout are spared the second.

d. The implication is twofold: (1) there is an obligation, sometimes severe, which the devout have toward God, and (2) they take it upon themselves voluntarily.

e. See 10:2.

f. The noun implies help which seizes hold to assist.

g. See "Jacob's God" in 15:1.

8 With PssSol 2 and 17, this psalm contains specific historical references to the capture of Jerusalem and the Temple by Pompey. Because of their sins, the Jews were drugged by God and offered no resistance to the Roman army until they reached the Temple. After the siege, some citizens were massacred and others taken as war prisoners to Rome. This psalm contains historical reflections (vss. 1-22) up to the point when the gentile armies take control of Jerusalem (which may be the time of composition) and then abruptly changes to a hymn of supplication for aid from God (vss. 23-34).

a. It is unclear whether the title refers to the gentile victory over Jerusalem, or to the hope of ultimate victory of God over the invaders.

b. Gk. and Syr. are obscure; the meaning appears to be "Is this the judgment of God?"

- my knees were weak, my heart was afraid,
my bones shook like reeds.<sup>c</sup>
- 6 I said, They directed their ways in righteousness.<sup>d</sup>
- 7 I thought about the judgments of God since the creation of heaven and earth;
I proved God right in his judgments in ages past.
- 8 God exposed their sins in the full light of day; 2:15; 3:3; 4:8;
the whole earth knew the righteous judgments of God. 8:23,26; 9:2 2:17; 4:7
- 9 In secret places underground was their lawbreaking, provoking (him), 1:7; 4:5
son involved<sup>e</sup> with mother and father with daughter;
- 10 Everyone committed adultery with his neighbor's wife; 4:4f.
they made agreements with them with an oath about these things.<sup>f</sup>
- 11 They stole from the sanctuary of God
as if there were no redeeming heir.
- 12 They walked on the place of sacrifice<sup>g</sup> of the Lord, (coming) from all kinds of uncleanness;
and (coming) with menstrual blood (on them), they defiled the sacrifices
as if they were common meat. Ezek 4:14
- 13 There was no sin they left undone in which they did not surpass the 1:8; 2:9
gentiles.
- 14 Because of this God mixed them (a drink) of a wavering spirit,<sup>h</sup> Isa 19:14 and gave them a cup of undiluted wine to make them drunk. Isa 51:17-23
- 15 He brought someone from the end of the earth, one who attacks in strength;
he declared war against Jerusalem, and her land.
- 16 The leaders of the country met him with joy.<sup>i</sup> They said to him,
"May your way be blessed. Come, enter in peace."<sup>j</sup>
- 17 They graded the rough roads before his coming;<sup>k</sup> Isa 40:3
they opened the gates to Jerusalem, they crowned her city walls.<sup>l</sup>
- 18 He entered in peace as a father enters his son's house;
he set his feet securely.<sup>m</sup>
- 19 He captured the fortified towers and the wall of Jerusalem,<sup>n</sup> 2:1
for God led him in securely while they wavered.
- 20 He killed their leaders and every (man) wise in counsel;<sup>o</sup>
he poured out the blood of the inhabitants of Jerusalem like dirty water. Ps 79:3
- 21 He led away their sons and daughters, those profanely spawned.<sup>p</sup>

c. Lit. "linen" or "flax reeds."

d. The sense is that since Jerusalem had (supposedly) always done what is right, in the time of attack God would protect it (see 1:2).

e. Lit. "mixed," see 2:13.

f. This probably refers to the test for unfaithfulness described in Num 5:19, which requires an affirmation and an ordeal to clear oneself of a charge of infidelity.

g. Syr.: "Temple."

h. See Isa 19:14: "giddiness" (JB), "dizziness" (NAB).

i. Josephus reports the meeting between Pompey and the leaders of the opposing factions, Hyrcanus and Aristobulus. Each wanted Pompey's help against the other to confirm his control over the country (Ant 14.3.2).

j. Josephus describes how all the resistance to Pompey's advance was cleared (Ant 14.3.4).

k. This is almost a parody on the messianic announcement of Isa 40:3: "Make a straight highway for our God across the desert." One MS reads:

"their coming."

l. The people lined up on top of the walls to hail the invader.

m. Lit. "with great firmness."

n. Josephus recounts (Ant 14.4.2) how those opposed to Aristobulus allowed Pompey to occupy the city and the king's palace, but Aristobulus' partisans barricaded themselves inside the Temple compound and were only expelled after three months of intense fighting.

o. Josephus reports the priests continued to conduct the service while the Roman soldiers cut them down with their swords (War 1.7.5). Some twelve thousand citizens died in the assault on the Temple, not all at the hands of the Romans, according to the same historian (War 1.7.5).

p. Lit. "those born in defilement." Josephus reports that Pompey exiled Aristobulus and his sons and daughters to Rome (War 1.7.5, confirmed by Plutarch). Many Judeans were taken prisoner and marched through Rome to celebrate Pompey's great military successes (Ant 14.4.4).

- 22 They acted according to their uncleanness, just as their ancestors;
they defiled Jerusalem and the things that had been consecrated to the name of God. 1:8; 2:3
- 23 God was proven right in his condemnation of the nations of the earth, and the devout of God are like innocent lambs among them. 2:10,15 2:36; 13:10,12
- 24 Worthy of praise is the Lord, who judges the whole earth in his righteousness. 3:1; 8:34
- 25 See, now, God, you have shown us how you rightly judge;
our eyes have seen<sup>q</sup> your judgments, O God.
- 26 We have proven your name right, which is honored forever,
for you are the God of righteousness,
judging Israel in discipline. 8:7 13:7-10; 18:4
- 27 O God, turn your mercy upon us and be compassionate to us. 5:7; 7:8; 9:8
- 28 Bring together the dispersed of Israel with mercy and goodness, for your faithfulness is with us. 9:2; 11:3; 2Bar 78:7
- 29 For we stiffened our necks, but you are the one who disciplines us.
- 30 Do not neglect us, Our God,
lest the gentiles devour us as if there were no redeemer.
- 31 But you (have been) our God from the beginning, and on you we have hoped, Lord. 5:11; 9:10; 15:1; 17:3
- 32 And we will not leave you,
for your judgments upon us are good. 5:7 3:3; 4:8; 5:1;
17:10
- 33 May (you) be pleased with us and our children forever;
Lord, our savior, we will not be troubled at the end of time. 3:6; 16:4; 17:3
- 34 Worthy of praise is the Lord for his judgments by the mouth of the devout, and may Israel be blessed by the Lord forever. 5:18; 8:24; 9:11;
10:8; 11:9; 12:6

9

Of Solomon. For Proof

- 1 When Israel<sup>a</sup> was taken into exile to a foreign country, when they neglected the Lord,<sup>b</sup> who had redeemed them,
They were expelled from the inheritance which the Lord had given them. Jer 16:13; 22:26
- 2 The dispersion of Israel (was) among every nation,
according to the saying of God;
That your righteousness might be proven right, O God, in our lawless actions.
For you are a righteous judge over all the peoples of the earth. 2:18; 4:24
- 3 For none that do evil shall be hidden from your knowledge, and the righteousness of your devout is before you, Lord.
Where, then, will a person hide himself from your knowledge, O
God?
- 4 Our works (are) in the choosing and power of our souls,
to do right and wrong in the works of our hands,
and in your righteousness you oversee human beings.
- 5 The one who does what is right saves up life for himself with the Lord, and the one who does what is wrong causes his own life to be destroyed;
for the Lord's righteous judgments are according to the individual and
the household.<sup>c</sup>

q. Other MSS read: "their eyes have seen."

b. Syr.: "God."

9 a. One MS reads: "Jerusalem."

c. Syr.: "according to every person and his house."

- 6 To whom will you be good, O God,<sup>d</sup> except to those who call upon the Lord?
He will cleanse from sins the soul in confessing, in restoring,<sup>e</sup> so that for all these things the shame is on us, and (it shows) on our faces.
- 7 And whose sins will he forgive except those who have sinned?
You bless the righteous, and do not accuse them for what they sinned.
And your goodness is upon those that sin, when they repent.
- 8 And now, you are God and we are the people whom you have loved;
look and be compassionate, O God of Israel, for we are yours, and do not take away your mercy from us, lest they<sup>f</sup> set upon us. 7:1; 16:6
- 9 For you chose the descendants of Abraham above all the nations, and you put your name upon us, Lord,
and it<sup>a</sup> will not cease forever.
- 10 You made a covenant with our ancestors concerning us,
and we hope in you when we turn our souls toward you.
- 11 May the mercy of the Lord be upon the house of Israel forevermore. 10:8; 11:9; 12:6

10

A Hymn<sup>a</sup> of Solomon

- 1 Happy is the man whom the Lord remembers with rebuking, and protects<sup>b</sup> from the evil way with a whip (that he may) be cleansed from sin that it may not increase. 6:1
- 2 The one who prepares (his) back for the whip shall be purified, for the Lord is good to those who endure discipline. Isa 50:6 2:36; 5:2,12;
14:1; 16:13f.
- 3 For he will straighten the ways of the righteous,
and will not bend (them) by discipline;
and the mercy of the Lord is upon those who truly love him. 4:25; 6:6; 14:1
- 4 And the Lord will remember his servants in mercy, for the testimony of it (is) in the Law of the eternal covenant, and the testimony of the Lord (is) in the ways of men
in (his) supervision. 3:11; 11:1
- 5 Our Lord<sup>c</sup> is just and holy in his judgments forever,<sup>d</sup> and Israel shall praise the Lord's name<sup>e</sup> in joy. 2:10,15; 3:3; 4:8; 5:1; 8:7;
23,32,34; 9:5;
17:10
- 6 And the devout shall give thanks in the assembly of the people, and God<sup>f</sup> will be merciful to the poor to the joy of Israel. 5:2,11; 15:1; 17:10
- 7 For God is good and merciful forever, and the synagogues of Israel will glorify the Lord's name. 2:36; 5:2,12; 7:5; 10:2
- 8 The Lord's salvation (be) upon the house of Israel (that they may be) happy forever. 9:11; 11:9; 12:6

11

Of Solomon. In Anticipation

- 1 Sound in Zion the signal trumpet of the sanctuary;
announce in Jerusalem the voice of one bringing good news, for God has been merciful to Israel in watching over them. 2Chr 13:12;
1Mac 4:40; 7:4
Isa 52:7
3:11; 10:4

d. Syr.: "is God good."
e. Syr. omits.
f. Syr.: "the peoples."
g. Other MSS read: "you."

b. Syr.: "restrains."
c. Syr.: "Our God."
d. Syr.: "upright in all his judgments."
e. One MS adds: "forever."
f. Syr.: "the Lord."

10 a. One MS reads: "In Hymns."

- 2 Stand on a high place, Jerusalem, and look at your children, from the east and the west assembled together by the Lord. 8:28; 9:2; 3 From the north they come in the joy of their God; 2Bar 78:7
from far distant islands God has assembled them.
4 He flattened high mountains into level ground for them; Isa 40:4
the hills fled at their coming.
5 The forests<sup>a</sup> shaded them as they passed by;
God made every fragrant tree to grow for them.
6 So that Israel might proceed under the supervision of the glory of their 3:11; 10:4; 11:1
God.
7 Jerusalem, put on (the) clothes of your glory, 1Bar 5:1-3; Isa prepare the robe of your holiness, 52:1
for God has spoken well of Israel forevermore. 1Bar 5:4 8 May the Lord do what he has spoken about Israel and Jerusalem;
may the Lord lift up Israel in the name of his glory.
9 May the mercy of the Lord be upon Israel forevermore. 9:11; 10:8; 12:6

12

Of Solomon. About the Tongue of Criminals

- 1 Lord, save my soul from the criminal and wicked man, Ps 120:2
from the criminal and slandering tongue that speaks lies and deceit.
2 The words of the wicked man's tongue (are) twisted so many ways;<sup>a</sup>
(they are) as a fire among a people which scorches its beauty.<sup>b</sup>
3 His visit fills homes with a false tongue, cuts down trees of joy,<sup>c</sup> inflaming criminals;
by slander<sup>d</sup> he incites homes to fighting.<sup>e</sup> 4 May God remove the lips of the criminals in confusion far from the Ps 12:3f.
innocent,
and (may) the bones of the slanderers be scattered far from those who 4:19
fear the Lord.
May he destroy the slanderous tongue in flaming fire far from the devout. 4:8 5 May the Lord protect the quiet person who hates injustice;
may the Lord guide the person who lives peacefully at home. 6:2; 7:10; 16:9; 18:8
6 May the salvation of the Lord be upon Israel his servant forever; 17:21; Isa 42:1-4; 49:1-6; 50:4-9; 52:13-53:12
may the wicked perish once and for all from before the Lord.
And may the Lord's devout inherit the Lord's promises.

13

Of Solomon. A Psalm: Comfort for the Righteous

- 1 The right hand of the Lord covered me;<sup>a</sup> Ps 98:1; WisSol
the right hand of the Lord spared me. 5:16; 19:8 2 The arm of the Lord saved us<sup>b</sup> from the sword that passes through,
from famine and the sinners' death. 15:7 3 Wild animals attacked them viciously, Ezek 14:13-23
they tore their flesh with their teeth,
and crushed their bones with their molars.
4 The Lord protected us from meeting all these things.

11 This psalm is related to 1Bar 4:36-5:9, and both passages are linked to Isa 40-66. See Introduction.

a. Syr. reads: "The cedars."

12 a. Other MSS read: "for doing perversity."

b. Other MSS read: "are as a fire on a threshing floor (which) burns up straw."

- 5 The godless person<sup>c</sup> was terrified by his mistakes lest he be taken along with the sinners.
- 6 For the destruction of the sinner is terrible;
but nothing shall harm the righteous, of all these things.
- 7 For the discipline of the righteous (for things done) in ignorance is not the same as the destruction of the sinners.
- 8 In secret the righteous are disciplined
lest the sinner gloat over the righteous.
- 9 For he will admonish the righteous as a beloved son and his discipline is as for a firstborn. 18:4; WisSol 11:10
- 10 For the Lord will spare his devout,
and he will wipe away their mistakes with discipline.
- 11 For the life of the righteous (goes on) forever,
but sinners shall be taken away to destruction,
and no memory of them will ever be found. 3:12; 10:8; 12:6 2:31; 3:11; 9:5;
14:9; 15:10
- 12 But the Lord's mercy is upon the devout and his mercy is upon<sup>d</sup> those who fear him.

14

A Hymn of Solomon

- 1 The Lord is faithful to those who truly love him,
to those who endure his discipline, 17:10 10:2; 16:15
- 2 To those who live in the righteousness of his commandments, in the Law, which he has commanded for our life.<sup>a</sup> Ps 1:2
- 3 The Lord's devout shall live by it forever;
the Lord's paradise, the trees of life,<sup>b</sup> are his devout ones. Lev 18:5 Isa 61:3; Ps 92:13; 1En 10:16; 93:2-5
- 4 Their planting is firmly rooted forever;
they shall not be uprooted as long as the heavens shall last,<sup>c</sup>
- 5 For Israel is the portion and inheritance of God. 7:2; 8:31; 9:8
- 6 But not so are sinners and criminals,
who love (to spend) the day in sharing their sin.

c. The meaning of this phrase is obscure. Other MSS read: "to cut down trees of burning evil glee." See 14:3, where the devout are described as "the Lord's paradise, the trees of life." Syr.: "He cut down the trees of His pleasure with the fire of the criminal."

d. Lit.: "whispering lips."

e. Some MSS and the Syr. read: "criminals incite"; other MSS read: "he incites criminal homes."

13 a. Syr.: "us."

b. Syr.: "me."

c. Lit. "the non-worshiper." The psalmist describes the difference in attitudes between devout and secular persons. The secular person is terrified when he sins, for he knows the fate of the sinner. The devout person is not frightened, for he is not accused when he sins (9:7), for in God's care nothing can happen to him (13:6b). There is a difference in the fate of the devout and of the sinner (13:7). There is no MS evidence for the conjectural emendation to "righteous" made by nearly all the commentators. Nor is it required by the sense of the argument. The righteous, unlike the wicked, need not fear discipline (vs. 9), for God "wipe[s] away their mistakes" (vs. 10). God's discipline is like that of a loving father (vs. 9), and the righteous continue forever (vs. 11). Not so the wicked, for unlike the discipline of the righteous, his fate is destruction (vs. 7). With good reason is the godless person terrified by his mistakes: his fate is awful (vs. 6). See also PssSol 3:5, where the righteous, when he stumbles, proves God to be faithful and looks to him for help.

d. Syr.: "he will treasure."

14 Canonical Ps 1 is the faint model for this poem, in the contrast between the fate of the devout and that of the sinner. Note "Law" (PssSol 14:2/Ps 1:2); "trees of life" (PssSol 14:3/1:3); "not so" (14:6/1:4); "brief and mortal"/"chaff" (cf. 14:7/1:4); "he knows"/"takes care of" (14:8/1:6).

a. Syr.: "He has given us the law for our life."

b. A common allusion in Prov for one who is a source of life and vitality (Prov 3:18; 11:30; 13:12; 15:4). See also Ps 1:3.

c. Lit. "all the days of heaven."

|    |  |   |
|----|--|---|
| 7  | Their enjoyment is brief and decaying,and they do not remember God.  | 4:21  |
| 8  | For the ways of men are known before him always,and he knows the secrets of the heart before they happen.                            | 9:3; Sir 17:15                                    |
| 9  | Therefore their inheritance is Hades, and darkness and destruction;and they will not be found on the day of mercy for the righteous. | WisSol 1:8f.;1En 9:114:13; 15:10;16:2 |
| 10 | But the devout of the Lord will inherit life in happiness.   | 3:12; 10:8;13:11; 15:13                       |

15

A Psalm of Solomon with Song

|    |   |                                    |
|----|---|------------------------------------|
| 1  | When I was persecuted I called on the Lord's name;I expected the help of Jacob's God <sup>a</sup> and I was saved.For you, O God, are the hope and refuge of the poor.              | 1:1; 5:57:10                   |
| 2  | For who, O God, is strong except he who confesses you in truth;and what person is powerful except he who confesses your name?   | 5:2; 10:6; 18:26:6; 10:3; 14:1 |
| 3  | A new psalm <sup>b</sup> with song with a happy heart,the fruit of the lips with the tuned instrument of the tongue,the first fruits of the lips from a devout and righteous heart. | Hos 14:2; Isa57:18             |
| 4  | The one who does these things will never be disturbed by evil;the flame of fire and anger against the unrighteous shall not touch him   | 13:6                               |
| 5  | when it goes out from the Lord's presence against sinnersto destroy the sinners' every assurance.   |                                    |
| 6  | For God's mark <sup>c</sup> is on the righteous for (their) salvation.  | Rev 7:3; 9:4                       |
| 7  | Famine and sword and death shall be far from the righteous;for they will retreat from the devout like those pursued by famine.  | 7:4; 13:2                          |
| 8  | But they shall pursue sinners and overtake them,for those who act lawlessly shall not escape the Lord's judgment.   |                                    |
| 9  | They shall be overtaken as by those experienced in war,for on their forehead (is) the mark of destruction.  | 9:6                                |
| 10 | And the inheritance of sinners is destruction and darkness,and their lawless actions <sup>d</sup> shall pursue them below into Hades.   | 14:9                               |
| 11 | Their inheritance shall not be found for their children,for lawless actions <sup>e</sup> shall devastate the homes of sinners.  |                                    |
| 12 | And sinners shall perish forever in the day of the Lord's judgment,when God oversees the earth at his judgment. <sup>f</sup>  | 3:11                               |
| 13 | But those who fear the Lord shall find mercy in itand shall live by their God's mercy;but sinners shall perish for all time.  |                                    |

16

A Hymn of Solomon. For Help for the Devout<sup>a</sup>

|   |  |
|---|--|
| 1 | When my soul slumbered, (I was far away) from the Lord, wretched fora time; <sup>b</sup>I sank into sleep, far from God. |
|---|--|

15 a. Syr.: "I called to the God of Jacob for my help."

b. Other MSS read: "A psalm and a hymn" (see 3:1).

c. The mark of salvation is in contrast to the mark of destruction (vs. 9).

d. Other MSS read: "sins."

e. Syr.: "their lawless acts."

f. Other MSS add: "to punish sinners forever," and omit vs. 13c, "but sinners shall perish for all time."

16 a. Some MSS omit "for the devout."

b. The Gk. is awkward and nearly unintelligible. Lit. "in the sleepiness of my soul from God . . . by a little wretchedness . . ."

- 2 For a moment my soul was poured out to death; Isa 53:12
 (I was) near the gates of Hades with the sinner
- 3 Thus my soul was drawn away from the Lord<sup>c</sup> God of Israel, unless the Lord had come to my aid with his everlasting mercy.
- 4 He jabbed me as a horse is goaded to keep it awake;
 my savior and protector at all times saved me.
- 5 I will give thanks to you, O God, who came to my aid
 for (my) salvation,
 and who did not count me with the sinners for (my) destruction.
- 6 Do not take your mercy away from me, O God, 7:1; 9:8
 nor your memory from my heart until death.
- 7 Restrain me, O God, from sordid sin, and from every evil woman who seduces the foolish. Prov 6:24f.; Sir
- 8 And may the beauty of a criminal woman not deceive me, nor anyone subject to useless sin. 9:8; 25:21
- 9 Direct the works of my hands before you,<sup>d</sup> and protect my steps in your remembrance. 6:2; 9:4; 10:3
- 10 Protect my tongue and my lips with words of truth;
 put anger and thoughtless rage far from me.
- 11 Put grumbling and discouragement in persecution far from me.
 If I sin, discipline (me) that (I may) return.
- 12 With approval and happiness support my soul;
 when you strengthen my soul, what has been given is enough for me.
- 13 For if you do not give strength, who can endure discipline in poverty? 2:36; 10:2; 14:1
- 14 When a person is tried by his mortality,<sup>e</sup>
 your testing is in his flesh, and in the difficulty of poverty.
- 15 If the righteous endures all these things, he will 3:3f.
 receive mercy from the Lord.

17

A Psalm of Solomon, with Song, to the King

- 1 Lord, you are our king forevermore, 5:19; 17:46
 for in you, O God, does our soul take pride.
- 2 How long is the time of a person's life on the earth?
 As is his time, so also is his hope in him.
- 3 But we hope in God our savior, 3:6; 8:33
 for the strength of our God is forever with mercy.
 And the kingdom of our God is forever over the nations in judgment.<sup>a</sup> Ps 145:13
- 4 Lord, you chose David to be king over Israel, and swore to him about his descendants forever,<sup>b</sup> 2Sam 7
 that his kingdom should not fail before you.
- 5 But (because of) our sins, sinners<sup>c</sup> rose up against us,

c. Syr. omits "Lord."

d. So the Syr.; Gk.: "in your place."

e. Lit. "By the hand of his mortality."

17 This third psalm with historical reflections (with 2 and 8) recites, after an opening hymn to the everlasting faithfulness of God, the immediate past history of the community, first under an illegitimate leadership, then under foreign domination. When the oppression becomes unbearable, evil pervasive, and hope of relief gone save for flight to the wilderness, then nature rebels and signals an outpouring of apocalyptic fervor, and the scene shifts from historical recital to eschatological entreaty. The remainder of the psalm is an extended hymn describing in vivid poetic imagery the expected overthrow of local and foreign enemies, the return of the Diaspora, the revitalization of Jerusalem, and the establishment of universal and everlasting peace under the leadership of the Lord Messiah.

a. Some MSS omit "in judgment."

b. Syr. omits "forever."

c. These sinners are Judeans, not gentiles (as in 1:1; 2:1). The Hasmoneans are probably intended, as illegitimate usurpers of the government and religion.

- they set upon us and drove us out.
 Those to whom you did not (make the) promise,
 they took away (from us) by force;
 and they did not glorify your honorable name.<sup>d</sup> 8:26
- 6 With pomp they set up a monarchy because of their arrogance;
 they despoiled the throne of David with arrogant shouting.
- 7 But you, O God, overthrew them, and uprooted their descendants from the earth,<sup>e</sup> 4:22
 for there rose up against them a man alien to our race.<sup>f</sup>
- 8 You rewarded them, O God, according to their sins;
 it happened to them according to their actions. 2:16,35
- 9 According to their actions,<sup>g</sup> God showed no<sup>h</sup> mercy to them;
 he hunted down their descendants,
 and did not let even one of them go.
- 10 The Lord is faithful in all his judgments 2:15; 3:3; 5:1;
 which he makes in the world. 8:7f.,23,34; 10:5
- 11 The lawless one<sup>i</sup> laid waste our land, so that no one inhabited it;
 they massacred young and old and children at the same time.
- 12 In his blameless wrath<sup>j</sup> he expelled them to the west, and he did not spare even the officials of the country from ridicule.
- 13 As the enemy (was) a stranger
 and his heart alien to our God, he acted arrogantly.
- 14 So he did in Jerusalem<sup>k</sup> all the things that gentiles do for their gods in their cities.
- 15 And the children of the covenant (living) among the gentile rabble adopted these (practices).
- 16 No one among them in Jerusalem acted (with) mercy or truth. Ps 14:3
 Those who loved the assemblies of the devout<sup>l</sup> fled from them 10:7; 17:43f.
 as sparrows fled from their nest. Ps 11:1
- 17 (They became) refugees in the wilderness
 to save their lives from evil.
- The life of even one who was saved from them was precious in the eyes of the exiles.
- 18 They were scattered over the whole earth by (these) lawless ones.
- For the heavens withheld rain from falling on the earth.
- 19 Springs were stopped, (from) the perennial (springs) far underground
 (to) those in the high mountains. AsMos 10:6
- For there was no one among them<sup>m</sup>
 who practiced righteousness or justice:
- 20 From their leader to the commonest of the people, (they were) in every kind of sin:
 The king was a criminal
 and the judge disobedient;
 (and) the people sinners.<sup>n</sup>

d. Lit. "they did not glorify . . . with glory."

e. Another reference (see 8:21) to Pompey's taking Aristobulus and his children to Rome (Josephus, Ant 14.4.5, 5.4, 6.1; War 1.7.7, 8.6).

f. Pompey.

g. Some MSS and Syr. omit "according to their actions."

h. Some MSS and Syr. omit "no."

i. Some MSS read: "the storm."

j. Lit. "the wrath of his beauty"; Syr.: "the beauty of his wrath." Unless this awkward phrase is a mistranslation from the original Heb., it refers to God's "righteous indignation."

k. Syr. reads: "and Jerusalem did."

l. Some MSS omit "of the devout."

m. The citizens of Jerusalem (see vs. 15).

n. Lit. "The king (was) in transgression, the judge in disobedience [Syr. reads: "in wrath"], the people in sin."

- 21 See,<sup>o</sup> Lord, and raise up for them their king,
the son of David, to rule over your servant Israel
in the time known to you,<sup>p</sup> O God. 12:6; Isa 42:1-4; 49:1-6; 50:4-9;
52:13-53:12
- 22 Undergird him with the strength<sup>q</sup> to destroy the unrighteous rulers, to purge Jerusalem from gentiles Ps 18:33
who trample her to destruction;
2:2,19
23 in wisdom and in righteousness<sup>r</sup> to drive out
the sinners from the inheritance;
7:2; 9:1
to smash the arrogance of sinners
like a potter's jar; Ps 2:9
- 24 To shatter all their substance with an iron rod;
to destroy the unlawful nations with the word of his mouth;
- 25 At his warning the nations will flee from his presence; Ps 104:7
and he will condemn sinners by the thoughts of their hearts.
- 26 He will gather a holy people<sup>s</sup> 9:2; 11:3
whom he will lead in righteousness;<sup>t</sup>
and he will judge the tribes of the people that have been made holy by the Lord their God.
- 27 He will not tolerate unrighteousness (even) to pause among them, Ps 101:7
and any person who knows wickedness shall not live with them.
For he shall know them
that they are all children of their<sup>u</sup> God.
- 28 He will distribute them upon the land 11:3; Isa 49:6;
according to their tribes; Ezek 45:8; 47:13,21
the alien and the foreigner will no longer live near them.<sup>v</sup>
- 29 He will judge peoples and nations in the wisdom of his righteousness. 18:9
Pause.
- 30 And he will have gentile nations serving him under his yoke.<sup>w</sup> and he will glorify the Lord in (a place) prominent (above) the whole earth.
And he will purge Jerusalem
(and make it) holy as it was even from the beginning,
- 31 (for) nations to come<sup>x</sup> from the ends of the earth to see his glory, Isa 55:5
to bring as gifts her children who had been driven out, and to see the glory of the Lord<sup>y</sup>
with which God has glorified her.
- 32 And he will be a righteous king over them, taught by God.
There will be no unrighteousness among them in his days, Jer 23:5
for all shall be holy,
and their king shall be the Lord Messiah.<sup>z</sup>

o. Other MSS read: "Know this."

p. One of the apocalyptic secrets is the time of the various events (see Ps 75:2f.; 69:13; Zech 14:1f.). Other MSS, including Syr., read: "you have seen."

q. The strength is to accomplish a series of tasks which follow. Grammatically the verb controls a string of infinitives which follow.

r. Syr. omits "in wisdom and in righteousness."

s. One Syr. MS reads: "a righteous people."

t. Syr.: "He will gather a holy people who shall glorify themselves."

u. Syr. omits "their."

v. Syr. reads: "will live near them because . . ." The purification of the land in the last days by the expulsion of foreigners was a common motif. See Neh 13:3; also Ezek 44:9 and Joel 4:17. But see below, vss. 30-32 and 34 (cf. Ezek 47:22f.), where aliens are to come with gifts and remain to serve God.

w. See 7:9.

x. The nations who took the Judeans into exile (Diaspora) are now to restore them to their homeland (see Isa 2:2-4). Other MSS read: "come, nations . . ."

y. The context leaves ambiguous whether this refers to the purified Temple, or to the newly anointed king.

z. "Lord Messiah." A title for the expected apocalyptic king. Most commentators have emended the text to read: "the Lord's Messiah," regarding it as a mistranslation (with the LXX of Lam 4:20) of an original and common Heb. phrase, "Messiah of Yahweh." However, there is evidence for retaining the reading of the text. The Gk. and Syr. MSS are uniform in reading "Lord Messiah."

33 (For) he will not rely on horse and rider and bow, nor will he collect gold and silver for war.
Nor will he build up hope in a multitude for a day of war.
34 The Lord himself is his king,
the hope of the one who has a strong hope in God.

He shall be compassionate to all the nations
(who) reverently (stand) before him.

35 He will strike the earth with the word of his mouth forever;
he will bless the Lord's people with wisdom and happiness. 10:6,8; 14:10
36 And he himself (will be) free from sin, (in order) to rule a great people. Isa 11:4

He will expose officials and drive out sinners
by the strength of his word.

37 And he will not weaken in his days, (relying) upon his God, for God made him
powerful in the holy spirit and wise in the counsel of understanding, Isa 11:2
with strength and righteousness.

38 And the blessing of the Lord will be with him in strength,
and he will not weaken;

39 His hope (will be) in the Lord.
Then who will succeed against him,<sup>a2</sup> 40 mighty in his actions
and strong in the fear of God?

Faithfully and righteously shepherding the Lord's flock,
he will not let any of them stumble in their pasture.

41 He will lead them all in holiness<sup>b2</sup>
and there will be no arrogance among them,
that any should be oppressed.

42 This is the beauty of the king of Israel<sup>c2</sup> which God knew,
to raise him over the house of Israel
to discipline it.

43 His words will be purer than the finest gold, the best.
He will judge the peoples in the assemblies,
the tribes of the sanctified.

10:7; 17:16

His words will be as the words of the holy ones,<sup>d2</sup> among sanctified peoples.

Ps 89:5-7;
Job 5:1

There is no textual evidence for reading "Lord's Messiah."

The arguments that christos kurios cannot represent the original text rest on the assumptions (1) that the Semitic original was a form of mešiah yhw and (2) that the phrase, in the mouth of a Judean Jew, could only have meant "the LORD'S Messiah."

Against these assumptions are the following: (1) Lk 2:11 demonstrates that christos kurios was available for use as a messianic title by the first cent. A.D. (2) There are references in which kurios is not a translation of yhw but part of a royal title; Herod the Great (37-4 B.C.), and Herod Agrippa I (A.D. 39-44) were all called basileus kurios, "the lord king." Since the adjectival use of kurios had as well the connotation "legitimate," it is not inconceivable that a group of religious and political dissidents such as the authors of the PssSol would have described the anticipated righteous king by that adjective with the phrase christos kurios and so denied the implication of legitimacy to the present, corrupt rulers.

The assumption that christos kurios was an impossible combination in the mouth of a devout Judean Jew is to read christos in terms of its meaning for later Christology and not in terms of its use as a political title in its own time. Certainly the related title "King Messiah" was known to the later Jewish tradition. It was attested in GenR 2 and applied in LamR to Simon Bar Kokhba.

That christos kurios is a Christian interpolation or mistranslation is unlikely, as other texts (e.g. 1:8), which would be equally tempting to a Christianizing scribe, were not emended in similar directions.

The term is preserved here with the MS evidence as a current messianic title combining the concepts of lordship and anointed agent.

a2. Syr. reads: "for who shall stand against him."

b2. Other MSS read: "equality."

c2. One MS reads: "king of Jerusalem."

d2. Angels.

- 44 Blessed are those born in those days
to see the good fortune of Israel<sup>e2</sup> which God will bring to pass in the assembly of the tribes. 18:6
- 45 May God dispatch his mercy to Israel;
may he deliver us from the pollution of profane enemies;
- 46 The Lord Himself is our king forevermore. 5:9; 17:1

18

A Psalm of Solomon About the Lord Messiah

- 1 O Lord, your mercy is upon the works of your hands forever. 2:33; 4:25; 11:9
(You show) your goodness to Israel with a rich gift. 5:14f., 18
- 2 Your eyes (are) watching over them and none of them will be in need.<sup>a</sup> Ps 23:1; 34:10
Your ears listen to the hopeful prayer of the poor, 5:2, 11f.; 10:6; 3 Your compassionate judgments (are) over the whole world, 15:1
and your love is for the descendants of Abraham, an Israelite.<sup>b</sup> 2:10; 8:8; 15:12 9:9
- 4 Your discipline for us (is) as (for) a firstborn son, an only child,<sup>c</sup> 7:9; 8:26
to divert the perceptive<sup>d</sup> person from unintentional sins.<sup>e</sup> 3:8; 13:7
- 5 May God cleanse Israel for the day of mercy in blessing, for the appointed day when his Messiah will reign. 17:22-30
- 6 Blessed are those born in those days, 17:44
to see the good things of the Lord
which he will do for the coming generation;
- 7 (which will be) under the rod of discipline of the Lord Messiah,<sup>f</sup> 17:24
in the fear of his God,
in wisdom of spirit,
and of righteousness and of strength,
- 8 to direct people in righteous acts, in the fear of God, 7:10; 16:9
to set them all in the fear of the Lord<sup>g</sup>
- 9 A good generation (living) in the fear of God,
in the days of mercy.
Pause.
- 10 Our God is great and glorious living in the highest (heavens),
who arranges the stars into orbits 18:10
(to mark) time of the hours from day to day.<sup>h</sup>
And they have not deviated from their course, which he appointed them.

e2. One MS reads: "Jerusalem."

18 a. Syr. reads: "there is nothing hidden from them."

b. Lit. "of a son of Israel." This awkward syntax has prompted numerous conjectures, including: (1) emend to "the Israelites"; (2) transpose Abraham and Israel, with the Syr., to read: "the descendants of Israel, the son of Abraham"; (3) emend to "the Israelite." Most simply, the phrase is in apposition to "of Abraham."

c. The primacy of the first and only child in the affection of a father is the idiom for the depth of God's love for the people Israel. The only other, similar phrase is in 4Ezra 6:58.

d. Lit. "one who hears (and listens and obeys)"—see Prov 13:1; 21:28; one who is sensitive to the learning experience of punishment.

e. Lit. "from ignorance in incomprehension." In the LXX, the last word takes on the connotation of sin.

f. Gk.: christou kuriou would regularly be translated "of the Lord's Messiah." However, within the context of 17:32 (see n.) it is taken to be "of the Lord Messiah."

g. Other MSS read: "in the presence of the Lord."

h. Lit. "for times of the hours from days to days."

- 11 Their course each day is in the fear of God,
from the day God created them forever.
- 12 And they have not wandered from the day he created them, from ancient generations.
They have not veered off their course except when God directed them
by the command of his servants.

Josh 10:12f.: Isa
38:8

HELLENISTIC SYNAGOGAL PRAYERS

(Second to Third Century A.D.)

INTRODUCTION BY D. A. FIENSY

TRANSLATION BY D. R. DARNELL

Scattered among the Christian liturgy in Books Seven and Eight of the Apostolic Constitutions are sixteen prayers which may be remnants of Jewish synagogal prayers. The prayers praise God's deeds in creation and history, and extol God's attributes in terms often reminiscent of hellenistic philosophy. Some prayers have more specific functions: Prayer 5 explains and defends Sabbath observance, and Prayer 16 invokes God's mercy on those who have died.

Text

The text for this translation is the edition of F. X. Funk.<sup>1</sup> He collated an eclectic text using Greek manuscripts dating from the tenth to the seventeenth centuries A.D.

Original language

The Greek flows smoothly and gives no indication that it is a translation from a Semitic language. In addition, quotations from the Old Testament follow the Septuagint (see e.g. 3:3,11; 4:1,7,15,19,25; 6:6–12 and notes d–i; 9:8; 11:11; 12:16,24,78 and n. c; 13:1, 9) including the transliteration of certain Hebrew words (4:8 and n. a, 4:10 and n. b. See also Prayer 6 n. d and Prayer 12 n. d). It follows, therefore, that Greek is probably the original language.

The Jewish origin of the prayers

As early as 1893, K. Kohler<sup>2</sup> suggested that Book Seven of the Apostolic Constitutions contained prayers which resemble those in the Jewish prayer book. W. Bousset<sup>3</sup> maintained in 1915—apparently without knowledge of Kohler's work—that some of the prayers in Books Seven and Eight of the Constitutions had been taken from liturgy used in diasporic Judaism. E. R. Goodenough<sup>4</sup> later agreed with Bousset but defined the origin of the prayers more narrowly. They had been produced in mystic Jewish circles similar to the environment from which Philo of Alexandria came. Each of these scholars argued that the prayers contain passages which are distinctly Jewish and which have parallels in other Jewish literature.

Kohler claimed that Prayers 2–7 are parallel to the first six of the Seven Benedictions for Sabbaths and Festivals of the Jewish prayer book. These six prayers in the Apostolic

<sup>1</sup> Didascalia et Constitutiones Apostolorum (Paderborn, 1905).

<sup>2</sup> "Über die Ursprünge und Grundformen der synagogalen Liturgie: Eine Studie," MGWJ n. F. 1 (1893) 441–51, 489–97. Kohler restated this in his article "Didascalia," JE, vol. 4, pp. 588–95; and in "The Essene Version of the Seven Benedictions as Preserved in the VII Book of the Apostolic Constitutions," HUCA 1 (1924) 410–25. His conclusion that the prayers are Essene should be re-evaluated in light of the Dead Sea Scrolls.

<sup>3</sup> "Eine jüdische Gebetsammlung in siebenten Buch der apostolischen Konstitutionen," Nachrichten von der Königlichen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen: Philologische-historische Klasse 1915 (Berlin, 1916) pp. 438–85.

<sup>4</sup> By Light, Light (New Haven, London, 1935) pp. 306–58.

Constitutions contain the same general content, in the same order, as the Seven Benedictions.<sup>5</sup>

All three scholars<sup>6</sup> emphasized the most striking parallel to the synagogal liturgy, which is found in Prayer 4 (vss. 9–12). This prayer obviously contains the Kedushah, which consists of a description of the sanctification of God by ministering angels based on the theophanies of Isaiah (6:3) and Ezekiel (3:12). The form of the Kedushah found in Prayer 4 is much like the Kedushah of the Yotzer prayer in the Jewish prayer book.<sup>7</sup>

Bousset thought Prayer 5 was reminiscent of the Sabbath Kiddush prayer, since they similarly explain the importance of the Sabbath. In addition, the emphasis on the number seven as a perfect number is very similar to Philo's propaganda about the Sabbath.<sup>8</sup> It is inconceivable, argued Bousset, that a Christian could have written a prayer such as this, which defends Sabbath observance for the first two thirds of the prayers and then weakly asserts the superiority of the Lord's Day at the very end.<sup>9</sup>

Many prayers seem Jewish because of what they fail to say. There is often very little peculiarly Christian content, and this is especially striking where one would expect emphasis on Christ's functions and titles. Further, where there are distinctly Christian passages, they are usually only loosely—often awkwardly—connected to the context. This suggests that such passages are interpolations.<sup>10</sup>

A very common feature of these prayers is the phrase "through Christ" or "through Jesus."<sup>11</sup> These specify how God has acted in creation and history. Another phrase which can easily be inserted into the text and tends to specify is the genitival phrase

"We give thanks to you,
O God and Father of Jesus our Savior . . ."<sup>12</sup>

The argument from silence is mostly convincingly employed with reference to Prayer 6. At 6:4–12, where God's faithfulness in answering the requests of his people is reviewed, the historical references begin with Abel and end with Mattathias. One would expect, as Bousset argued, that a Christian would mention Jesus of Nazareth.<sup>13</sup> The same argument can be used with 9:10–14; 12:53–79; and 16:8. Of course one must proceed with caution in arguing from silence, since at times even New Testament authors fail to mention Jesus when one might expect them to do so. Hebrews 11 lists only the Old Testament heroes as examples of faith, and James 5:10f. offers only the prophets and Job as examples of patience. However, there is sufficient content in the remainder of those two New Testament books to convince most scholars that they were authored by a Christian.<sup>14</sup> Such content is lacking in the prayers translated below.

The thesis of Kohler, Bousset, and Goodenough is therefore quite feasible.<sup>15</sup> The existence

<sup>5</sup> Kohler, HUCA 1 (1924) 410–25. For the Seven Benedictions, see P. Birnbaum, Daily Prayer Book (New York, 1977) pp. 265–71.

<sup>6</sup> Kohler, HUCA 1 (1924) 415f.; Bousset, Nachrichten, p. 438; Goodenough, By Light, Light, pp. 308f.

<sup>7</sup> See J. Heinemann, Prayer in the Talmud, translator R. Sarason (Studia Judaica 9; Berlin, 1977) pp. 223f., who pointed out that the Kedushah is attested as early as the tannaitic period (t. Ber 1:9). For the Yotzer, see Birnbaum, Daily Prayer Book, pp. 71–74.

<sup>8</sup> Nachrichten, p. 445. Philo, SpecLeg 2.59–62. See also Aristobulus F. 5 in the Supplement. For the Kiddush, see Birnbaum, Daily Prayer Book, p. 289.

<sup>9</sup> Bousset, Nachrichten, p. 445. For early Christian observance of the Sabbath, however, see C. W. Dugmore, The Influence of the Synagogue upon the Divine Office (Westminster, 1964) pp. 28–36.

<sup>10</sup> J. H. Charlesworth, "Christian and Jewish Self-Definition in Light of the Christian Additions to the Apocryphal Writings," Jewish and Christian Self-Definition, vol. 2, Aspects of Judaism in the Greco-Roman World, eds. E. P. Sanders with A. I. Baumgarten and A. Mendelson (Philadelphia, 1981) pp. 27–55 uses the following features as criteria for determining interpolations: The word or words under examination may contain ideas or images extraneous to the general context. The passage may be loosely connected grammatically to its context; the flow of thought, however, is often clarified or improved when the passage in question is removed.

<sup>11</sup> Dia Christou, e.g. 4:22; 5:1; 7:7; 11:2; 14:1; and dia Iêsou, e.g. 1:3; 7:18; 15:1.

<sup>12</sup> See Charlesworth, in Jewish and Christian Self-Definition, pp. 28–35.

<sup>13</sup> Nachrichten, p. 446. But in a similar passage, 7:3, Jesus is mentioned and it is not clear that this is an interpolation. See 7:4 and n. a. Kohler's imaginative solution (HUCA 1 [1924] 422–24) to the problem, that this was originally a reference to Jesus ben Phabi (Josephus, Ant 15.9.3), is rather farfetched.

<sup>14</sup> Heb is of course quite obviously Christian. For the arguments in favor of Christian authorship of Jas, see P. Feine, J. Behme, and W. G. Kümmel, Introduction to the New Testament, translator A. J. Mattill Jr. (Nashville, 1966) pp. 288f.

<sup>15</sup> The evidence pertaining to all of the prayers cannot be given here. Some of the prayers are not as clearly Jewish as others. However, for the sake of completion, all of the prayers which Goodenough believed were originally Jewish of distinctly Jewish content in the prayers, while peculiarly Christian elements are absent, makes a reasonable argument in favor of Jewish authorship for at least some of the prayers.<sup>16</sup>

Date

Goodenough argued that the middle of the second century A.D. is probably the latest period in which the prayers could have been composed, since after this time relations between Jews and Christians were not conducive to Christian borrowing of synagogue liturgy.<sup>17</sup> However, one should be very cautious about overemphasizing the break between church and synagogue after the Bar Kokhba war (A.D. 135).<sup>18</sup> The prayers may have been composed shortly before the Apostolic Constitutions were compiled (A.D. 380).<sup>19</sup>

The earliest possible date is the middle of the second century A.D., since, as Bousset pointed out, the prayers show familiarity with Aquila's Greek version of the Old Testament (c. A.D. 135, e.g. see Prayer 2:14, horamatismos, "vision"). The date should then be set as early as A.D. 150 or as late as A.D. 300.<sup>20</sup>

Provenance

There is nothing in the prayers themselves to suggest where they were composed. The similarities with Philo in thought and expression could suggest Alexandria. Nevertheless, it is just as reasonable to posit Syria as the provenance since it is generally agreed that the Constitutions were compiled there.<sup>21</sup>

Historical importance

Some scholars of Christian liturgy have stated that there was no wholesale borrowing by Christians from the liturgy of the synagogue. The general framework of the service was borrowed but not the actual prayers.<sup>22</sup> However, these prayers suggest that the affinity between early church and synagogue was greater than many suppose.

More important, the prayers furnish additional information about the piety and theology of the Judaism similar to, but not necessarily identical with, that of Philo.

Relation to canonical books

The prayers are most similar in form and content to the Davidic psalter. In addition to the general theme of praise of God, the prayers contain numerous quotations of and allusions to the Psalms. But the author(s) of the prayers was (were) thoroughly saturated with the are translated here. He added Prayers 1, 14, and 15 to Bousset's list and omitted some very short prayers in Book Eight of AposCon. Kohler included only Prayers 1-7 in his list. See the nn. to the individual prayers for evidence of the Jewish authorship of the rest of the prayers.

<sup>16</sup> Dugmore, The Influence of the Synagogue, pp. 102-13, and A. Baumstark, Comparative Liturgy (Westminster, 1957) pp. 43-51, who maintain that the Jewish synagogue and its liturgy had a profound formative effect on early Christian worship, make this thesis even more reasonable.

<sup>17</sup> By Light, Light, p. 357. Evidence of the later hostile relationship between church and synagogue may be seen in Prayer 7:14, where the Jews are called "Christ murderers."

<sup>18</sup> See the work of W. A. Meeks and R. L. Wilken, Jews and Christians in Antioch in the First Four Centuries of the Common Era (Missoula, Mont., 1978). The whole thrust of this book is to show the influence of Judaism upon the Church during the first four centuries.

<sup>19</sup> L. O'Leary, The Apostolic Constitutions (London, 1906) p. 69, dated the AposCon A.D. 378-425. B. Altaner, Patrology, translator H. C. Graef (Freiburg, 1960) p. 59, gives A.D. 380.

<sup>20</sup> See Nachrichten, p. 466. Bousset also believed the words synthēkē, "covenant," (2:15) and Phassa for "Passover" (6:10) to be from the influence of Aquila's version. Of course it must not be assumed that all the prayers were written at the same time or by the same author.

<sup>21</sup> F. C. Cross and E. A. Livingstone, eds., The Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church (London, 1974) pp. 75f.; R. H. Cresswell, The Liturgy of the Eighth Book of the Apostolic Constitutions (New York, 1900) p. 9, gives the reasons: The calendar, lenten customs, and liturgy are parallel to those of Antioch and Constantinople. O'Leary, Constitutions, p. 69, also notes that several Syrian monks are cited (AposCon 5:14, 17, 20).

<sup>22</sup> W. O. E. Oesterley, The Jewish Background of Christian Liturgy (Oxford, 1925) pp. 127-54, gave in parallel cols. prayers taken from 1 Clem, Did, and other Christian sources, and prayers from the Jewish prayer book. Dugmore, The Influence of the Synagogue, pp. 75-77, 111-13, rejected Oesterley's contention, arguing that there were no real parallels and that many of the prayers in the Heb. prayer book did not exist at that time.

entire Old Testament and thus freely drew upon the Pentateuch, Prophets, and Writings.

Relation to non-canonical Jewish literature

While the prayers share numerous striking parallels of thought with Philo, there are some significant parallels with the Wisdom of Solomon and Aristobulus. All these works reflect the profound influence of Greek thought which is so typical of Jewish authors living in the Diaspora.

Philo's doctrine of divine omnipresence<sup>23</sup> (Leg All 3.51) is similar to Prayer 13:1. His admonition on thanksgiving for the creation of the world (SpecLeg 1.210f.) is expressed in 7:7f. and 12:12–40. Philo's discourse on the meaning of the number seven (Leg All 1.8–16) is paralleled in Prayer 5:15; but Philo is also anticipated by Aristobulus (see the Supplement, F. 5).

The most important parallel to the Wisdom of Solomon is the reference to the presence of Wisdom at creation as God's agent (Prayers 3:19 and 12:10; WisSol 9:2, 9). In addition, the notion of man as created immortal (WisSol 2:23) is found in Prayer 7:9.

Theological importance

GOD

God is omnipotent (1:7; 2:1f.; 4:23bf.; 12:36f.), omnipresent (4:25f.; 13:1), omniscient (2:4; 9:4–6), eternal (2:22; 3:1; 4:24; 9:2, 4; 12:3, 5; 13:2, 4), and faithful (1:7; 6:1a). He is just in rewarding the righteous and punishing the wicked (4:40; 7:1f.; 12:57); and merciful, desiring repentance (2:3, 6f.; 4:2f., 23a; 6:1b; 9:8; 11:5–8). God has acted in creation (1:4; 3:2–23; 4:16–21, 38; 5:1; 12:16) and history (5:9–14; 6:4–12; 7:3; 9:10–16; 12:53–55, 59–79) for the benefit of mankind.

ANTHROPOLOGY

Mankind was the goal of all God's creative work. He was created a rational being (3:18; 11:3; 12:39) with five senses (3:21; 7:8), and made a world citizen (3:18; 12:35; 8:2), and a microcosm of the world as in hellenistic philosophy (3:20; 11:2; 12:35 and nn.). Man is a combination of an immortal soul created from "non-being" and a corruptible body created from the four elements (3:20f.; 12:37f.). Although man was given the innate law at creation (1:5; 11:3; 12:43, 69), he disobeyed and therefore incurred death (3:24–26; 12:46–50). However, God in his mercy has provided the resurrection for those who are "cleansed" by the Law (7:10f.).

ANGELOLOGY

Although angels do not play a large role in the prayers, three passages portray a hierarchy of heavenly beings (4:11, 12:14, 81–85). Angels are also present at 16:12, where it is stated that angels minister to the spirits of the dead.

WISDOM AND WORD

There is only one passage where we have a notion of the Word (Logos) in the sense of John 1:1. This passage may be a Christian interpolation (12:10),<sup>24</sup> as two similar passages certainly are (1:8; 5:20).

<sup>23</sup> As Goodenough, By Light, Light, pp. 325, 337, noted.

<sup>24</sup> It looks suspiciously like an interpolation: Praise of God and his creative power is interrupted by a description of God's "Son." Goodenough (By Light, Light, pp. 340f.) maintained, however, that although exact parallels are wanting in Philo, the passage in Prayer 12 is in harmony with Philo's doctrine of the Logos as prōtogenos ("first begotten") in Conf 146.

<sup>25</sup> It has been alleged that the compiler of AposCon was an Arian (C. H. Turner, "Notes on the Apostolic Constitutions," JTS 16 [1914–15] 54–61). However, there is nothing particularly Arian in the interpolations as they stand in Funk's text. See Funk's refutation of the alleged Arianism of the compiler in Apostolischen Konstitutionen (Frankfurt, 1970 [1891]) pp. 120–23.

Special attention is given to Wisdom (sophia). Wisdom is personified and represented as the instrument of creation (3:19; 4:7, 38; 12:36). Wisdom is not eternal, however, since God is her father (4:38) and creator (5:3). It is not clear that Wisdom is identified with Word except in the difficult passage mentioned above (12:10).

LAW

Mankind was given an innate law at creation (1:5; 2:9; 12:43). However, because of man's sin, the written Law had to be given as an aid to the natural law (11:3; 12:69). But the written Law must now be learned; thus the Sabbath is provided as the day for study and meditation (5:2, 19).

AFTERLIFE

Mankind possessed immortality at creation. This, however, he lost when he sinned, and therefore God has graciously and mercifully provided the general resurrection to restore what was lost (3:24–27; 7:10f.; 12:46–50; 16:7). But this appears to be promised only to those who have been cleansed by the Law (7:10f.).

Christology of the interpolations

Christ was born of a virgin of the lineage of David (6:2) and while on earth was both human and divine (1:8; 5:6; 7:15). Identified with Wisdom (5:3–4) and the divine Word (1:8; 5:20), he is represented as the agent in creation (3:1; 9:7; 14:1; 15:1) and the mediator of those who pray (4:22; 6:13).<sup>25</sup>

Introduction to this translation

The interpolations have been indicated by underlining. The interpolator(s) may be responsible for more of the material than has been indicated, but only those passages which must be considered Christian have been underlined. There is considerable difficulty in defining the perimeters of interpolations. They may begin earlier and end later than indicated, but restraint has been applied in underlining.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bousset, W. "Eine jüdische Gebetsammlung im siebenten Buch der apostolischen Konstitutionen," Nachrichten von der Königlichen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen; Philologische-historische Klasse 1915. Berlin, 1916; pp. 438–85; reprinted in A. F. Verheule. Religionsgeschichtliche Studien. Leiden, 1979; pp. 231–86.
- Bouyer, L. Eucharist, trans. C. U. Quinn. Notre Dame, 1968; pp. 119–35.
- Charlesworth, J. H. "Christian and Jewish Self-Definition in Light of the Christian Additions to the Apocryphal Writings," Jewish and Christian Self-Definition, ed. E. P. Sanders, A. I. Baumgarten, and A. Mendelson. Philadelphia; vol. 2, pp. 27–55, 310–15.
- Charlesworth, J. H. "Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers," The Pseudepigrapha and Modern Research with a Supplement (SBL SCS 7S; Chico, Calif., 1981) pp. 288f.
- Charlesworth, J. H. "Jewish Liturgies, Hymns and Prayers (c. 167 B.C.E.–135 C.E.)," Early Post-Biblical Judaism and Its Modern Interpreters, ed. R. A. Kraft and G. W. E. Nickelsburg. Chico, Calif., in press.
- Fiensy, D. A. A Redactional Examination of Prayers Alleged to Be Jewish in the Constitutiones Apostolorum. Duke University, Ph.D., 1980.
- Funk, F. X. Didascalia et Constitutiones Apostolorum. Paderborn, 1905.

Goodenough, E. R. By Light, Light. New Haven, 1935.

Kohler, K. "The Essene Version of the Seven Benedictions as Preserved in the VII Book of the Apostolic Constitutions," HUCA 1 (1924) 410–25; reprinted in J. J. Petuchowski, Contributions to the Scientific Study of Jewish Liturgy. New York, 1970; pp. 75–90.

Simon, M. Versus Israel. Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome; Paris, 1948; pp. 74–82.

Whiston, W. "Constitutions of the Holy Apostles," The Ante-Nicene Fathers, ed. J. Donaldson. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1951; vol. 7, pp. 385–508.

1. A Prayer of Thanksgiving Following Communion (AposCon 7.26.1–3)

- 1 (1) (Then after the communion, you shall give thanks in this way:)
 2 (2) We give thanks to you, O God and Father of Jesus our Savior,<sup>a</sup> on behalf of your holy name which you caused to encamp among us,      Jn 1:14 3 and on behalf of the knowledge and faith and love and immortality which you gave to us through Jesus<sup>b</sup> your Son.
 4 (3) O Master Almighty, the God of the universe, you created the world and what is in it through him;<sup>c</sup> 5 and you planted deeply in our souls a law;      2:9; 11:3; 12:43, and you prepared for men the things (necessary) for communion;      69 6 (you are) the God of the holy and blameless ones, our fathers Abraham and Isaac      Ex 3:16 and Jacob, your faithful servants;
     7 the powerful God, the faithful and true One, without falsehood in your promises;      1Bar 4:37
     8 the One who sent forth upon earth Jesus your Christ, to live together with men as a man, being divine Word and Man, and radically to destroy error.<sup>d</sup>

2. A Prayer of Praise to God, the Universal Savior and Fighter on Behalf of Abraham's Race (AposCon 7.33.2–7)

- 1 (2) Our eternal Savior:
     the King of the gods,      Esth 4:17 LXX
     who alone is Almighty and Lord, 2 the God of all beings,
     and God of our holy and blameless fathers before us,
     the God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob,      Ex 3:16
     3 the merciful and compassionate,      Joel 2:13
     the patient and very merciful, 4 to whom every heart is seen, appearing naked,
     and every hidden thought is uncovered;
     5 to you the souls of righteous people cry out!
     Upon you the hopes of devout people have relied:
     6 the Father of the blameless,
     the Hearer of those who call upon you with honesty,
     the one who knows the petitions unspoken.
     7 For your forethought reaches as far as human (inner) feelings,
     and through (the) conscience you search each person's judgment,
     and in every region of the inhabited earth,
     the incense that comes through prayer and words is sent up to you.      Mal 1:11 8 (3) You are the one who appointed the present world as a racecourse for righteousness,      1Cor 9:24
     and opened to everyone a gate of mercy,

1 a. E. R. Goodenough in By Light, Light (New Haven, 1935) italicized of Jesus our Savior as a Christian interpolation.

b. Goodenough italicized only Jesus as an interpolation.

c. The Christian redactor probably deleted some words as he worked; perhaps "through your Word" originally stood in the preceding vs. and was changed to "through Jesus your Son"; the Jewish author elsewhere refers to the "Word" (cf. 4:21; 12:10).

d. Christian additions in these prayers, as elsewhere (see the T12P, in which the most striking additions are in the last two testaments), are most extensive near or at the end.

- 9 and showed to every person, through implanted knowledge, and inborn judgment, 1:5
 and by their response to the law,
- 10 how the possession of wealth is surely not everlasting,
 the beauty of appearance is not ever-flowing,
 the strength of power is easily dissolved,
 and surely everything is a vapor, and vanity.
- 11 But a conscience with undisguised faith endures, Jas 4:14
 a dwelling-place through the midst of the heavens, Eccl 1:2
 rising up with truth,
 12 it takes hold by the right hand of the coming nourishment.
- 13 At the same time, and before the promise of the regeneration is present,
 the soul itself, exulting, is rejoiced.
- 14 (4) For from the beginning of our forefather Abraham's laying claim to the way of truth,
 You led (him) by a vision,
 having taught (him) what at any time this world is.
- 15 And his faith traveled ahead of his knowledge,<sup>a</sup>
 but the covenant was the follower of his faith.
- 16 For you said,
I will make your seed like the stars of the heaven,
and like the sand that is beside the edge of the sea. Gen 13:16; 22:17
- 17 (5) But truly, having also given Isaac to him,
 and having known him to be like that one in character, 18 you were also called his God, having said,
I will be your God, and of your seed after you. Gen 17:7
- 19 And having placed our father Jacob in Mesopotamia, having shown (him) the Christ,<sup>b</sup>
through him you spoke, saying, 20 Look! I am with you, Gen 28:15; 48:4
and I will increase you,
and multiply you exceedingly.
- 21 (6) And in this way you spoke to Moses,
 your faithful and holy servant,
 in the vision at the bush:
 22 I am the Being; Ex 3:14,15
this is for me an eternal name,
and a remembrance to generations of generations.
- 23 (7) O Fighter on behalf of Abraham's race,
 blessed are you forever!<sup>c</sup>

3. A Prayer That Meditates upon God's Manifold Creative Power, Which Comes to Sinful Man in Redemption (AposCon 7.34.1-8)

- 1 (1) Blessed are you, O Lord, King of the ages, who through Christ<sup>a</sup> made everything, 1Tim 1:17
 Jn 1:3
 Col 1:16f.

2 a. W. Whiston, "Constitutions of the Holy Apostles," ANF 7, pp. 387-505), followed by Goodenough, made "knowledge" the subject of the sentence. The MSS vary at this point, one MS reading "knowledge" as the subject.

b. Goodenough italicized only the Christ as a Christian interpolation. The Christian scribe transfers what was said of "the Lord" to Christ. See Gen 28.

c. Goodenough insisted that apart from the interpolated reference to Christ, "there is not a Christian syllable in this prayer. Christian authorship is unthinkable" (By Light, Light, p. 317). The prayer is strikingly Jewish throughout, and looks very much like a prayer taken verbatim from a Jewish synagogue service, except for this one reference to the Christ.

3 a. Christ is clearly interpolated; Goodenough also made this point. It was perhaps originally "the Word"; cf. n. a to Prayer No. 14.

- and through him in the beginning ordered that which was unprepared;
- 2 who separated waters from waters with a firmament,
and put a lively spirit in these;
- 3 who settled the earth (firmly),
and stretched out heaven,
and ordered the exact arrangement of each one of the creatures.
- 4 (2) For by your conception, O Master, order has beamed with joy;
- 5 while heaven, having been pitched like a vault, is adorned with stars,
for the sake of encouragement (in the midst of) the darkness;
- 6 while light and sun, for days and (for) fruits, came to birth;
- 7 while moon, for changing of seasons, increased and decreased,
and night was named, and day was kindly addressed;
- 8 while a firmament was shown forth in the midst of the abysses,
and you said for the waters to be gathered together,
and for the dry land to appear;
- 9 (3) while the sea itself—how shall we describe it in full?—
which comes raging from (the) oceans, yet runs back again from (the) sand, being hindered by your command.
- 10 For you said,
By it shall her waves be shattered.
- 11 While for living creatures, for small and for great,
and for (the) voyaging of ships, you made it.
- 12 (4) Then earth grew green, engraved with all sorts of flowers,
and with an embroidery of different trees.
- 13 And (the) all-blazing luminaries are nourishers of these,
keeping without trespass the long course,
not deviating in any way from your ordinance;
- 14 but wherever you may command,
in this (place) they rise and set,
for signs of seasons and years,
alternating for the assistance of mankind.
- 15 (5) Thereafter were prepared races of differing living creatures:
those found on dry land,
those living in water,
those traversing the air,
(and) amphibians.
- 16 And by the skilled Wisdom of your forethought
is given to each one the appropriate providence.
- 17 For just as she<sup>b</sup> was not exhausted in bringing forth differing races, neither has she<sup>b</sup> neglected to make for each one a different providence.
- 18 (6) And the goal of the creative work—
the rational living creature, the world citizen—
- 19 having given order by your Wisdom, you created, saying,
Let us make man according to our image and likeness;
- 20 having declared him a (micro-)cosm of the cosmos,<sup>c</sup> having formed for him the body out of the four elements;
- 21 and having prepared for him the soul out of non-being,
and having given to him fivefold perception, and having placed over the perceptions a mind, the holder of the reins of the soul.<sup>d</sup>
- 22 (7) And in addition to all these things, O Master, Lord,
who can worthily describe the movement of rain-producing clouds,

Gen 1:1f.

Gen 1:6

Ps 103:2 LXX

Isa 40:22

Gen 1:14-19

Gen 1:5

Gen 1:6

Gen 1:9

Job 38:11

Ps 103:25-26
LXX

Gen 1:14

3:19; 4:7,38;
5:3; 12:10,36

12:35f.

3:16; 2En 30:8;
WisSol 9:2, 9
Gen 1:26

12:35; 11:2

b. Goodenough translates "she," making the subject Sophia, God's wisdom.

c. Lit. "of the cosmos, a cosmos." Whiston preferred the translation "the ornament of the world." The preceding description of man as rational, and as a world citizen, is a commonplace of hellenistic Judaism. Compare Philo, Op 142.

d. Here the dependence upon Platonic philosophy is clear. Compare Phaedrus, 246.

- the flashing forth of lightning, the clashing of thunders;
 23 for the supplying of appropriate nourishment,
 and the blending of complex atmospheres?
 24 (8) But when man was disobedient,
 You took away his deserved life.
 25 You did not make it disappear absolutely, but for a time, 26 having put (him) to sleep for a little (while),
 by an oath you have called (him forth) to new birth.
 27 You have loosed the boundary of death,
 You who are the Maker of life for the dead, through Jesus Christ, our hope!<sup>e</sup>

ApMos 28:4;
 37:3; 41:3; 43:1
 Vita 51:2
 1Tim 1:1

4. A Prayer That Joins with All Nature in Praising the One and Only Great and Merciful God (AposCon 7.35.1–10)

- 1 (1) Great are you, O Lord, Almighty One, and great is your strength, and of your understanding there is no numbering! Ps 146:5 LXX
 2 O Creator, Savior, Rich One in favors,
 Long-sufferer, and Supplier of mercy,
Who do not withdraw from the salvation of your creatures!
 3 For by nature you are good;
 yet you spare those who are sinning, summoning them to repentance,
 for your warning is merciful!
 4 For how should we have withstood,
 having swift judgment demanded of us?
 We who, when being treated patiently, with difficulty refuse our weakness?
 5 (2) The heavens proclaimed your might;
 and earth, (though) being shaken, (proclaimed) your firmness, being hung upon nothing! Ps 18:2 LXX
 6 (The) sea, surging with waves,
 and shepherding a herd of countless living creatures,
 has been shackled with sand,
 has shuddered at your will,
 and compels all to cry out: Job 26:7 7 How magnified are your works, O Lord!
You made everything with Wisdom;
the earth was filled with your creating! Ps 103:24 LXX
 3:16
 8 (3) And an army of angels breaking forth,
 and intellectual spirits say to Phelmuni,<sup>a</sup>
There is one Holy One! Dan 8:13 [Theodotion]
 9 And holy seraphim, together with the six-winged cherubim, singing to you the triumphal song, with never-silent voices cry out, 10 Holy, holy, holy, Lord Sabaoth,<sup>b</sup>
the heaven and the earth are full of your glory! Isa 6:3 11 And the other throngs of the hosts, archangels, thrones, dominions, sovereignties, authorities, powers, crying out, say, Col 1:16 12:14,27
 12 Blessed be the glory of the Lord from its place!
 13 (4) But Israel, your earthly assembly out of (the) gentiles,<sup>c</sup>

e. Goodenough correctly italicized this last l. as a Christian interpolation. Again, the Christian addition is prominent at the end. Cf. Philo, SpecLeg 1.210f.

4 a. Probably a Gk. transliteration of the Heb. palmóni (Dan 8:13), which apparently is a combination of a two-word Heb. phrase meaning "each one."

b. A Gk. transliteration of the Heb. word for "armies." See LXX Isa 6:3.

c. Goodenough italicized taken out of the Gentiles as a Christian interpolation. However, as he points out (By Light, Light, p. 309), the phrase

- competing with the heavenly powers by night and by day, 14 with heart filled to the brim and with a willing spirit sings, 2Mac 1:3
 15 The chariot of God is ten thousands multiplied by thousands of thriving ones; Ps 67:18 LXX
the Lord is among them in Sinai, in the holy place!
- 16 (5) Heaven knows the one who raised it as a vault upon nothing, like a stone cube, Job 38:38 LXX 17 and united earth and water with each other,
 and poured out air for keeping animals,
 18 and plaited together with this fire<sup>d</sup> for warmth and encouragement in darkness.
 19 The chorus of stars amazes, Ps 146:4 LXX
 pointing out the one who numbered (them),
 and showing the one who named (them).
 20 Living creatures (point to) the one who gave (them) life;
 trees (point to) the one who produced (them);
 21 as all things, having been made by your word, suggest the might of your power.
- 22 (6) Wherefore also all men ought, from their very breasts, to send up to you through Christ<sup>e</sup> the hymn on behalf of all,
 by reason of you who hold power over all things.
- 23 (7) For you are the Kind One in good deeds,
 and One fond of giving with compassions,
 the only All-Mighty one!
 For when you desire, to be able is present with you.
- 24 For your eternal power even cools flames, Dan 3 and muzzles lions, and tames sea monsters, Dan 6; Jonah 2
 and raises those who are sick, and overturns powers, and overthrows an army of enemies and a people numbered for its arrogance.
- 25 (8) You are the one in heaven, the one upon earth,
 the one in the sea,
 the one in the farthest boundaries, bounded by nothing.
 For of your greatness there is no boundary. Ps 144:3 LXX
- 26 For this oracle is not ours, Master, but your servant's, saying,
And you shall know in your heart that your God is (the) Lord, Deut 4:39
God in heaven above, and upon earth beneath,
and there is no other beside him!
- 27 (9) For there is no god beside you alone, there is no Holy one beside you; Isa 45:5 28 Lord God of knowledge,<sup>f</sup> ISam 2:3
 God of holy ones,
 Holy one above all holy ones.
 For those who have been made holy are under your hands.
- 29 (You are) honored and exalted exceedingly: Deut 33:3
 invisible by nature,<sup>g</sup> ITim 1:17 30 unsearchable in judgments, Rom 11:33
 whose life is in want of nothing.
 31 Unchangeable and unceasing is (your) continuance.
 Untiring is (your) activity.

could well have been used by Diasporic Jews in the sense "separated from the Gentiles." [The word translated "assembly" is ekklēsia, "assembly, church," and the Christians who recited these prayers or hymns would have viewed this passage as referring to themselves, the true Israel, the church. Early Jews referred to themselves as God's assembly (ekklēsia, kāhāl; see, for example, Ps

107:32. —J.H.C.]

d. The listing of the four elements is reminiscent of Gk. philosophical analysis.

e. Goodenough correctly italicized Christ as an interpolation.

f. [Lit. "knowledges." —J.H.C.]

g. A list of seventeen descriptions of God begins here.

- 32 Unlimited is (your) greatness.
 Unfailing is (your) beauty.
- 33 Unapproachable is (your) dwelling-place. 1Tim 6:16
 Unremovable is (your) resting-place.
- 34 Without beginning is (your) knowledge.
 Unchangeable is (your) truth.
- 35 Unmediated is (your) work.
 Unplotted against is (your) strength.
- 36 Without successor is (your) monarchy.
 Unending is (your) kingdom.
- 37 Without adversary is (your) might.
 Great in number is (your) army.
- 38 (10) For you are the Father of Wisdom, 3:16
 the Creator, as cause, of the creative workmanship through a Mediator;
- 39 the Supplier of foresight;
 the Giver of laws;
 the Fulfiller of needs;
- 40 the Punisher of the ungodly,
 and the Rewarder of the righteous;
- 41 the God and Father of the Christ,<sup>h</sup>
and the Lord of those who are pious toward him;
- 42 whose promise is not deceptive, (whose) judgment is without bribery,
- 43 (whose) knowledge is never faithless,
 (whose) religion is never-ending,
 (whose) thanksgiving is everlasting;
- 44 through whom also the worship worthy of you is owed by every reasonable and holy nature!<sup>i</sup>

5. A Prayer Praising God for His Redemptive Deeds for Israel, Old and New, and for the Institution of Days Set Apart for Worship (AposCon 7.36.1-7)

- 1 (1) O Lord, Almighty One,
 you created (the) cosmos through Christ,<sup>a</sup> and marked out a sabbath day for a remembrance of this; Ex 20:8-11
- 2 because on it you rested from the works (of creation), Gen 2:2
 in order to give attention to your own laws.
- 3 And you appointed festivals for (the) gladdening of our souls, so that we may come into remembrance of the Wisdom created by you:<sup>b</sup> Prov 8:22 3:16
- 4 (2) °how for us he submitted to birth, that (birth) through a woman;
 5 (how) he appeared in (this) life, having demonstrated himself in (his) baptism;
 6 how he who appeared is God and man;
(how) he suffered for us with your consent,

h. Goodenough italicized this I. and the remaining II. of this prayer as a Christian interpolation. There is, however, no reason for looking upon the remaining II. as interpolated, for they say nothing that a hellenistic Jew would not include in such a prayer.

i. W. Bousset thought this prayer the most obviously Jewish prayer in the entire collection (Nachrichten, pp. 436f.), and Goodenough agreed with this assessment (By Light, Light, pp. 308f.). The prayer as a whole is obviously rooted deeply in hellenistic Judaism, whatever theory is accepted as to its entrance into Christian liturgy.

5 a. Goodenough italicized only Christ as an interpolation. Originally the passage may have read "through the Word." Cf. n. a. to Prayer 3.

b. Goodenough notes that a variant reading theou

- and (how) he died and arose by your strength.
- 7 Therefore, celebrating the resurrection festival on the Lord's day, we rejoice over the one who indeed conquered death, 1Cor 15:55
having brought to light life and immortality.<sup>c</sup> 2Tim 1:10
- 8 For by him you brought the gentiles<sup>d</sup> to yourself, for a treasured people, the true Israel, the friend of God, who sees God.<sup>e</sup> Deut 7:6
- 9 (3) For you, O Lord, have led out from (the) land of Egypt even our fathers; 10 and you have rescued (them) out of an iron furnace, and out of clay and making of bricks. Deut 4:20
- 11 You redeemed (them) out of Pharaoh's hand, and (the hand) of those under him.
- 12 And you led them through (the) sea as through dry land, and you bore with their manners in the wilderness with manifold goodnesses. Ex 14:29
Acts 13:18
Deut 1:31
- 13 (4) You gave to them a Law, ten oracles uttered by your voice, and engraved by your hand. Ex 20
Ex 20:18
- 14 You commanded (them) to keep sabbath, not giving an excuse for laziness, but rather an opportunity for reverence (toward God),
for knowledge of your power,
for hindrance of evil; Ex 20:8
- 15 as if having confined (them) in a holy circumference,
for the sake of teaching,
for the exultant joy of the number seven.<sup>f</sup> Aristob F. 5
- 16 Because of this (you appointed) one seven, and seven sevens, and a seventh month, and a seventh year; Lev 23
- 17 and with this a year for forgiveness, each fifty-year cycle, Lev 25
- (5) So that men might have no excuse to pretend ignorance.
- 18 For this reason every sabbath you permitted (them) not to work, so that no one would desire to let drop from his mouth a word (spoken)
in anger on the day of the sabbath.
- 19 For (the) sabbath is a rest from creation,
a completion of (the) cosmos,
a seeking out of laws,
thankful praise to God on behalf of those things which he has freely given to men.
- 20 (6) *All of which the Lord's day surpasses, showing forth:
the Mediator himself, the Supervisor,
the Lawgiver, the cause of resurrection,
the firstborn of all creation, the divine Word; Col 1:15
Jn 1:1
- 21 and Man, the one born of Mary alone, without a husband;
22 who lived holily as a citizen,
who was crucified under Pontius Pilate, and having died, is also (the one) having arisen from (the) dead.<sup>g</sup>
- 23 As the Lord's day, it advises (us) to offer to you, O Master, thanksgiving on behalf of everything.

genetheses shows Christian redaction in the interest of orthodoxy (By Light, Light, p. 310).

c. All of the material between the two footnote marks is italicized by Goodenough as a Christian interpolation. The material does appear to be an interpolation, somewhat awkwardly adapted to the context.

d. Goodenough italicized the Gentiles as an interpolation. Perhaps the vs. refers back to "Wisdom" of the vs. previous to the long Christian interpolation, and may be Jewish.

e. The description of Israel as "the one who sees God" is a commonplace in Philo. See LegAll 3.186; Post 92; Conf 56, 146. The rootedness of this prayer in hellenistic Judaism here becomes quite obvious.

f. The Pythagorean emphasis on the significance of numbers is reminiscent of Philo and therefore of hellenistic Judaism. See LegAll 1.8-16; Op 89-128; Abr 28-30; and VitaMos 2.209, 263.

g. [These lines are a credal formula with tradi-

- 24 For this is the grace which has been furnished by you, which by (its) magnitude covered over every (other) good deed.<sup>h</sup>

6. A Prayer of Invocation, Calling upon God, Who Has Always Accepted the Worship of His People, to Accept the Present Prayers of His New People (AposCon 7.37.1–5)

- 1 (1) O you who have fulfilled the promises which (were given) through the prophets,
and have had mercy on Zion,
and have had pity on Jerusalem,
- 2 by your having exalted the throne of David, your servant, in her midst, <sup>a</sup>by the birth of the Christ,
the one who, according to flesh, was of his seed, Rom 1:3
having been born of a virgin alone;<sup>a</sup>
- 3 now also, yourself, O Master God,
accept the entreaties on the lips of your people,
who (have come) out of (the) gentiles,<sup>b</sup>
who call upon you in truth, Ps 144:18 LXX
even as you received the gifts of the righteous in their generations:
- 4 (2) Abel, especially—you beheld and accepted his sacrifice; Gen 4
Noah, when he had come out of the ark; Gen 8:20–22
- 5 Abraham, after his coming out from the land of the Chaldeans; Gen 12:7
Isaac, at the well of the oath; Gen 26:23–25
Jacob, in Bethlehem;<sup>c</sup> Gen 35
- 6 Moses, in the wilderness; Ex–Deut
Aaron, in the midst of the living and of those who had died; Num 16:48 LXX;
Joshua, the (son of) Naue<sup>d</sup> in Gilgal; WisSol 18:20–25
Josh 5
- 7 Gideon, upon the rock, and the fleeces, before his sin; Judg 6.8
Manoah—and of his wife—in the field; Judg 13
Sampson, in his thirst before his error; Judg 15:18–19
Jephthah, in the war, before his unwise promise; Judg 11
Barak and Deborah, in the days of Sisera; Judg 4, 5
Samuel, in Mizpah; 1Sam 7
- 8 (3) David on (the) threshing floor of Ornan the Jebusite; 1Chr 21
Solomon in Gibeon and in Jerusalem; 1Kgs 3, 8
- 9 Elijah in Mount Carmel; 1Kgs 18
Elishah at the barren fountain;<sup>e</sup> 2Kgs 2:19–22

tions going back to Col. 1:15 and Jn 1:1–18.—J.H.C.]

h. This material is correctly italicized by Goodenough as a Christian interpolation. He stated, “To say the least, the passage on the Lord’s Day is an anti-climax, quite intelligible as a Christian appendix to the Jewish ‘Sabbathgebet,’ but unintelligible as the originally planned objective of the prayer” (By Light, Light, p. 311). This conclusion seems unavoidable, and therefore supports the theory that these prayers were originally prayers of the hellenistic Jewish synagogue, later adapted through interpolation for use by the Christian community in its liturgy. This insight is now developed by Charlesworth in “Christian and Jewish Self-Definition in Light of the Christian Additions to the Apocryphal Writings.” Jewish and Christian Self-Definition, eds. E. P. Sanders, A. I. Baumgarten, A. Mendelson (Philadelphia, 1981) vol. 2, pp. 27–55, 310–15.

6 a. All of the material included between the two footnote marks is correctly italicized by Goodenough as a Christian interpolation.

b. Goodenough italicized who (have come) out of (the) gentiles as an interpolation. This is unnecessary.

c. So the Gk. text. The reference must be to Bethel, not Bethlehem.

d. The LXX everywhere renders Nun by Naue, a mistake for the Gk. Naun. This is a clear indication of dependence on the Gk. OT, rather than the Heb.

e. A curious interpretation; the biblical text calls the land barren, not the fountain.

- |        |   |   |
|--------|---|---|
| 10     | Jehoshaphat in the war;Hezekiah in sickness, and concerning Sennachereim; <sup>f</sup>Manassah in the land of the Chaldeans after his offence;Josiah in Phassa; <sup>g</sup>Esdra <sup>h</sup> in the return; | 2Chr 182Kgs 20,192Chr 33:10-132Chr 35Ezra 8 |
| 11 (4) | Daniel in the hole of the lions;Jonah in the belly of the whale;the three children in a furnace of fire;  | Dan 6Jonah 2Dan 3                                   |
| 12     | Hannah in the tent before the ark;Nehemiah at the raising up of the walls; and of Zorobabel; <sup>i</sup>Mattathias and his sons in your zeal;Jael in praises. <sup>j</sup>                                       | 1Sam 12Ezra 2-7; Neh 31Mac 2-16Judg 4f.         |
| 13 (5) | And now, therefore, receive the prayers of your people,offered up with full knowledge to you through Christ in the Spirit <sup>k</sup>   |   |

7. A Prayer of Thanksgiving to God for His Continuing Acts of Redemption in the Past, and Now in Christ; and for His Manifold Gifts to Man, the Rational Animal (AposCon 7.38.1-8)

- 1 (1) We give thanks to you for all things, O Master Almighty, because you have not forsaken us with your mercies and your compassions;
2 but generation after generation you save, rescue, lay hold of, (and) shelter.
- 3 (2) For you laid hold of (people) in the days of Enos and Enoch,
in the days of Moses and Joshua,
in the days of the Judges,
in the days of Samuel and Elijah and of the Prophets,
in the days of David and of the Kings,
in the days of Esther and Mordecai,
in the days of Judith,
in the days of Judah Maccabeus, and of his brothers.
- 4 (3) And in our days you laid hold of us through your great High Priest, Jesus Christ Heb 7:26-28
your Child.<sup>a</sup>
- 5 For even from the sword he rescued,
and from famine he delivered, having maintained (us);
6 from disease he healed,
(and) from an evil tongue he sheltered (us).

f. LXX often spells Sennacherib with the m ending.

g. A curious mistake based on a Hellenist's misunderstanding of the Heb. word for Passover, which has here been taken as a place name! The more correct reading would be "Josiah at (the) Passover." See Whiston, ANF 7, p. 475.

h. Ezra is commonly spelled Esdra by the LXX.

i. So the LXX spells Zerubbabel.

j. Jael is added as an afterthought, completely out of chronological sequence.

k. Goodenough correctly italicized through Christ in the Spirit as a Christian interpolation added onto a thoroughly Jewish prayer. Such an understanding of this prayer seems unavoidable in the light of its exclusively OT honor roll of the worshipers of God. Goodenough, following Bousset, stated that "it is incredible that a Christian of the time when the Apostolic Constitutions was written could have based all his precedents for prayer upon this list of the Patriarchs down to the Maccabees, the last period of Jewish grace, and not gone on to mention the prayer or sacrifice of Christ or the achievements of the Apostles" (By Light, Light, p. 313).

7 a. Goodenough italicized from And in our days to Child as a Christian interpolation. This is not an obvious interpolation, and it is difficult to apply the following words to Judas Maccabeus. It is likewise difficult to apply them to Jesus. Perhaps the best course is to see these words as a Christian interpolation and then to refer the "he" to God, seeing the prayer as shifting from second person to third person. There is no easy solution.

- 7 For all things we give thanks to you through Christ,<sup>b</sup>
 (to you) who even have given (us) an articulate voice for confession (of gratitude),
 and have undergirded (it with) a harmonious tongue,
 in the manner of a plectrum,
 like a musical instrument;
- 8 and a useful (sense of) taste,
 and a corresponding sense of touch,
 and vision for sight,
 and hearing for sound,
 and a sense of smelling for vapors,
 and hands for work,
 and feet for travel.
- 9 (5) And all these things you have formed out of a little drop in a womb, and after the shaping, you freely give immortal life,<sup>c</sup> and you bring forward into light the rational animal, the man.
- 10 With laws, you have taught (him);
 with just ordinances, you have cleansed (him);
- 11 bringing on dissolution for a little while,
 You have promised the resurrection!
- 12 (6) Therefore indeed, what manner of life is fully able,
 and how great length of ages will be sufficient for men for thanksgiving?
- 13 To do so worthily would be impossible,
 but (to do so) according to (our) ability is holy.
- 14 For you have rescued (us) from the ungodliness of many gods,
 (7) and you have delivered (us) from the heresy of the Christ-murderers;<sup>d</sup>
 You have set (us) free from the ignorance that has gone astray.
- 15 You have sent forth the Christ to men as a man, being uniquely born God;
you have caused the Paraclete to live in us;<sup>e</sup>
 you have set up angels (over us);
 you have dishonored the devil.
- 16 Not being, you have made (us); having become, you watch over (us).
- 17 You measure out life;
 you supply nourishment;
 you have promised repentance.
- 18 (8) On behalf of all things, to you (be) the glory and the reverential awe, through Jesus Christ,<sup>f</sup> now and always, and into the ages. Amen.

Jn 14–16

b. Goodenough italicized Christ as a Christian interpolation. However this may be, in the II. following, the influence of hellenistic philosophical anthropology is obvious. Compare Philo, SpecLeg 1.210f.

c. Immortality, rather than being the free gift of God, given to the faithful, is viewed as given to all human beings at birth, as in hellenistic Judaism. Compare WisSol 2:23.

d. Goodenough italicized this l., from and you have delivered to Christ-murderers as a Christian interpolation. The anti-Jewish sentiment expressed here is in strong contrast to the pro-Jewish sentiment of the majority of these prayers.

e. Goodenough italicized this and the preceding l., from You have sent forth to in us, as another Christian interpolation.

f. Goodenough italicized through Jesus Christ as a Christian interpolation. The prayer as a whole is a rather uneasy combination of disparate materials from hellenistic Judaism and Christianity.

8. Instruction for Catechumens (AposCon 7.39.2–4)<sup>a</sup>

Translated by D. A. Fiensy.

- 1 (2) Let the one who is to be instructed in piety<sup>b</sup> be taught before baptism: knowledge<sup>c</sup> concerning the unbegotten God, understanding<sup>d</sup> concerning the only begotten son,
 2 and full assurance concerning the Holy Spirit. •Let him learn the order of a distinguished creation,<sup>e</sup> the sequence of providence,<sup>f</sup> the judgment seats of different legislation,<sup>g</sup> why the world came to be and why man was appointed a world
 3 citizen. •Let him understand his own nature, of what sort it is. Let him be educated in how God punished the wicked by water and fire, and glorified the saints in 4 each generation: •I mean Seth, Enos, Enoch, Noah, Abraham and his descendants, Melchisedek, Job, Moses, both Joshua<sup>h</sup> and Caleb, Phinehas the priest, and the 5 holy ones in each generation. •And how God, though he foresaw,<sup>i</sup> did not abandon the race of men, but summoned them at various times from error and folly into the understanding of truth, leading them from servitude and impiety into freedom and piety, from iniquity into righteousness, from eternal death into everlasting
 6 life. •Let the one who offers himself learn during his instruction these things and those that are related to them.
- 3:18; 12:35
Gen 7: 19:24
1Tim 2:4

9. A Prayer of Praise to God for His Greatness, and for His Appointment of Leaders for His People (AposCon 8.5.1–4)

- 1 (1) The one who is, Master, Lord, God the Almighty;
 the only one without origin and without a king;
 2 the one who is forever, and who exists before the ages;
 the one needing nothing in any way, and greater than every cause and origin;
 3 the only true one, the only wise one;
 the one who is alone Most High;
 4 the one who is by nature invisible;
 whose knowledge is without beginning;
 5 the only good one, and incomparable one;
 the one who knows all things before their origin;
 6 the knower of the hidden things,
 the unapproachable one,
 the one without a master;
 7 (2) the God and Father of your only Son, our God and Savior,
- 1Tim 1:17
Mt 19:17
Dan 2:22

8 a. This is of course not a prayer at all but an outline of catechetical instruction. That the initiate is required to learn nothing of the NT heroes or the work of Christ led Goodenough to argue (By Light, Light, p. 327) that this outline of instruction originated in Judaism.

b. Gk. katēcheisthai ton logon tēs eusebeias, lit. “be instructed regarding the teaching of piety.” For this use of logos, see Lampe, p. 808.

c. Gk. gnōsis.

d. Gk. epignōsis.

e. Or as Whiston, ANF 7, p. 475, translates: “the order of the several parts of the creation.” Gk. dēmiourgias diaphorou taxin. But it is doubtful if diaphoros in the singular can mean “several.” See LSJM 1.b. For the emphasis on the order of creation in Philo, see Op 13–83.

f. Gk. pronoias heirmon. Possibly this is equal to the Stoic belief in the chain of destiny which continuously connects the causes of events. See Armim 2.918 (heimarmenē heirmos tis ousa). Philo expressed a similar belief in Mut 135, De Aet 75 (see F. H. Colson’s translation and notes in the LCL Philo, vol. 5, pp. 210f.; vol. 9, pp. 236f.).

g. Gk. nomothesias diaphorou dikaiōtēria. The different legislation is, according to Goodenough (By Light, Light, pp. 327n, 350), the law as implanted and as written.

h. Gk. lēsou, which is obviously Joshua of the OT and not “Jesus.” The names in Greek are identical.

i. Gk. pronooumenos can also mean “to provide for,” as Whiston (ANF 7, p. 476) has rendered it.

- the maker of the whole universe through him;
 8 the Administrator, the Guardian, the Father of mercies, and God of all consolation, 2Cor 1:3
 the one who dwells in (the) heights, and who observes humble things; Ps 112:5f LXX 9 (3) you are the one who gave standards for the Church, through the appearance in flesh of your Christ,
subject to the witness by the Paraclete, 7:15; Jn 14-16 through your apostles and through us bishops who by your grace are present.<sup>a</sup> 10 (You are) the one who marked out beforehand, from the beginning, priests for dominion over your people:
 11 Abel at first,
 Seth and Enos and Enoch and Noah, and Melchizedek and Job;
 12 (4) the one who showed forth Abraham, and the other patriarchs, together with your faithful servants Moses and Aaron, and Eleazar and Phinehas;
 13 the one who prepared beforehand from among them rulers and priests in the tent of the testimony;
 14 the one choosing for yourself Samuel, to be a priest and a prophet;
 15 the one who did not forsake your sanctuary without public services;
 16 the one who was pleased to be glorified by those you have chosen.<sup>b</sup>

10. A Prayer on Behalf of the Catechumens (AposCon 8.6.5-8)

Translated by D. A. Fiensy.

- 1 (5) Let us all earnestly entreat God on behalf of the catechumens:
 2 that the one who is good and loves mankind will kindly hear their prayers;
 and having received their supplication, that he may assist them and grant
 3 them for their good the requests of their hearts; Ps 37:4
 4 that he may reveal to them the gospel of his Christ,
 5 illumine them,
 and give them understanding,
 educate them in the knowledge of God,
 6 teach them his ordinances and judgments, Ps 119:12
 implant in them his pure and saving fear,
 open the ears of their hearts to engage in his law day and night;<sup>a</sup> Ps 1:2 7 (6) and that he may establish them in piety,
 unify and number them among his holy flock,
 8 grant them (the) washing of regeneration,
 the garment of incorruption, Tit 3:5
 (and) real life;
 9 and that he may save them from all impiety,
 and give place to no adversary against them;

9 a. All of the material between the two footnote marks is italicized by Goodenough as a Christian interpolation. This is not as obvious as in some of the other cases; it is possible that the prayer was originally composed by a Christian author.

b. This prayer originally could have been used by hellenistic Judaism for the consecration of a priest and later taken over and interpolated by Christians for use in the consecration of presbyters.

However, such a prayer could have been framed in its entirety by a Christian author seeking justification from the OT for the priestly prerogatives of a growing clerical caste.

10 a. Cf. Ab 3:4,7; 4:12. The emphasis in vs. 6 on the Law led Goodenough to argue (By Light, Light, pp. 328f.) for Jewish authorship of the prayer.

- 10 and that he may cleanse them from all pollution of flesh and spirit, and dwell in them,
and walk (among them) through his Christ,
- 11 and bless their comings in, and their goings out,
and guide their affairs for their good.
- 12 (7) Let us still earnestly supplicate for them that,
obtaining remission of their trespasses through initiation,<sup>b</sup>
- 13 they may be deemed worthy of the holy mysteries, and of remaining constantly with the saints.
- 14 (8) Arise, catechumens, request the peace of God through his Christ,
- 15 that the day be peaceable and free from sin,
even the entire time of your life,
- 16 that your end be Christian,<sup>c</sup>
that God be gracious and kind,
(that God grant) the forgiveness of trespasses.
- 17 Dedicate yourselves to the only unbegotten God through his Christ.
- 18 Bow down and receive a blessing.

2Cor 7:1

Lev 26:17f.

2Cor 6:16

Ps 121:8

11. A Prayer of Entreaty for God's Mercy upon the Penitent (AposCon 8.9.8f.)

- 1 (8) O Almighty God, eternal one,
Master of the whole universe,
Creator and President of everything,
- 2 the one who showed forth man as a (micro-)cosm of the cosmos through 3:20
Christ,<sup>a</sup>
- 3 and who gave an implanted and written law to him, so that he might live lawfully as a rational being, Jas 1:21, 1:25;
Rom 2:14f.;
12:42; 1:5
- 4 and when he had sinned, gave him your goodness, as a pledge to lead him Rom 2:4
to repentance;
- 5 look upon those who have bent the neck of their soul and body to you, because
- 6 He does not desire the death of the sinner, but his repentance, so that he might turn back from his way of evil, and live! Ezek 33:11
- 7 (9) (You are) the one who accepted the repentance of the Ninevites; Jonah 3
- 8 the one desiring all men to be saved, and to come to a knowledge of truth; 1Tim 2:4; cf.
8:5
- 9 the one who accepted the son who had consumed his life's savings with loose living,
with fatherly feelings because of his repentance.<sup>b</sup> Lk 15:13, 20
- 10 Also now yourself receive from your supplicants their change of mind;
for there is no one who will not sin against you. 1Kgs 8:46
- 11 For, if you, Lord, should watch lawlessness closely, Lord, who could stand his ground? Ps 129:3f. LXX
- Because with you there is the means for taking away sin!

b. Gk. myesis. This word and the related word in the same vs. (mysterion) are terms from the pagan mystery religions but are also found in Philo (e.g. LegAll 3.100; Quaes Gen 4.8; Sac 60). See R. Reitzenstein, The Hellenistic Mystery Religions, trans. J. E. Stealy (Pittsburgh, 1978; published in German in 1926), p. 241; also the entries in LSJM "myeo" and "mysterion." However, the term mysterion is used ordinarily of the sacraments in patristic writings. See Lampe.

c. Or "your death be Christian."

11 a. Goodenough italicized through Christ as a Christian interpolation.

b. All the material between the two footnotes is italicized by Goodenough as a Christian interpolation. This position is entirely possible, but it is neither obvious nor necessary. The entire prayer could have been written by a Christian who accepted the OT as Christian Scripture and who was also deeply influenced by Platonic or Neoplatonic philosophy. Goodenough argues (p. 332) that the philosophy of repentance in this prayer is Jewish; it could, of course, be Christian.

12. A Prayer of Praise to God, Rehearsing the Grounds in Redemption and in Creation Which Make Praise So Fitting for God's Redeemed Creature, Man (AposCon 8.12.6–27)

- 1 (6) It is truly worthy and right before all things to sing a hymn to you,
 the one who is truly God;
 2 the one who is before things that have been made;
 from whom every family in heaven and upon earth is named; Eph 3:15 3 the only one without origin, and without a beginning;
 and not ruled by a king, and without a master;
 4 the one not in want;
 the supplier of every good (thing);
 5 the one far exceeding every cause and origin;
 the one always the same, and holding just so;
 6 from whom are all things, 1Cor 8:6
 just as from some starting-point, it came in order to be.
- 7 (7) For you are the knowledge without beginning;
 the eternal vision;
 the hearing without origin;
 the wisdom without teaching;
 8 the first by nature,
 and only one in being,
 and far exceeding every number;
 9 the one who brought everything into being out of non-being, through<sup>a</sup> your Jn 1:14, 18
 only Son,
 and gave him birth before all the ages,
 by purpose, and power, and unmediated goodness—
 10 an only Son, a divine Word, a living Wisdom, WisSol 9:1f.
a firstborn of all creation, (Jn 1:1, 18);
a messenger<sup>b</sup> of your great purpose, WisSol 9:9
 your high priest; (Col 1:15)
 11 both king and lord of all intelligible and perceptible nature, 3:16 the one before all things, through whom are all things! Isa 9:5 LXX
 (Heb 7)
- 12 (8) For you, O eternal God, have made all things through him, WisSol 9:9 (Col and through him by suitable foreknowledge you design everything. 1:17; 1Cor 8:6) WisSol 9:1f., 9;
 10:1f. (Jn 1:3)
 WisSol 8:8
- 13 For through him you freely gave being,
 (and) through him also you gave well-being.
- 14 (You are) the God and Father of your only Son,<sup>c</sup> who through him before all things made the cherubim and the seraphim, WisSol 9 both ages and (heavenly) hosts,
 both powers and authorities,
 both rulers and thrones,
 both archangels and angels; (Col 1:16) 4:11

12 a. [Goodenough did not italicize the following lines as a Christian interpolation; and the present contributors are also reluctant to see them as a Christian addition. But, in light of the numerous parallels to them in New Testament passages, as noted by the marginalia, and in comparison with the other clearly Christian lines in these hymns, I have no hesitancy in seeing them as a Christian interpolation, or better a Christian redaction of a Jewish sentence. The redactor deleted what followed "through" (l. 9) and specified that "the only Son," the "Word," created all things. The redaction runs from "your only Son" through

"through whom are all things!" The Jewish original specified the agent of creation, perhaps "the Word," or "Wisdom"—both of which are agents of creation according to WisSol 9—and then celebrated monotheism and God as the ultimate cause of creation (l. 12). —J.H.C.]

b. [Gk. angelon; perhaps "angel"; and that translation corresponds with Goodenough's rendering. Cf. GosThom 82, according to which Peter confesses that Jesus is "like a righteous angel" (ekeine nouangelos endikaiois). —J.H.C.]

c. [Not italicized by Goodenough. The phrase "of your only Son" should be read in terms of

- 15 and after all these, having made through him this world that is seen, and everything in it. (Jn 1:3)
- 16 (9) For you are the one who placed the heaven like a vaulted arch, and like a screen stretched it out; Isa 40:22
Ps 103:2 LXX
- 17 and founded the earth upon nothing, by judgment alone; Job 26:7
- 18 the one who fixed a firmament, and prepared night and day; Gen 1
- 19 the one who brought light out of the treasuries, and at the contraction of this (light), the one who brought the darkness for rest for the living creatures moving about in the world;
- 20 the one who appointed the sun for rule (over) the day in heaven, and the moon for rule (over) the night, Gen 1:16 and engraved the choir of the stars in heaven, for praise of your great splendor;
- 21 (10) the one who made water for drinking and cleansing,
lively air for breathing in and breathing out,
and for utterance of a voice,
the air having been struck by a tongue,
and (the sense of) hearing, working together under it, so as to hear,
taking in the speech falling upon it;
- 22 (11) the one who made fire for encouragement (in) darkness,
for fulfillment of want,
and for us to be warmed and enlightened by it;
- 23 (12) the one who separated the great sea from the land,
who indeed declared the one for navigation,
and made the other passable for feet;
- 24 who filled the one with living creatures, small and great, Ps 103:25 LXX
and filled up the other with tame animals and untamed;
- 25 having encircled (it) with manifold plants,
and having crowned (it) with herbs,
and having beautified (it) with flowers,
and having enriched (it) with seeds;
- 26 (13) the one who framed an abyss,
and surrounded it with a great hollow,
seas of salt waters having been heaped up;
- 27 the one who by winds sometimes raises it to a crest, to become the height of mountains, Jer 5:22;
Job 38:10
and sometimes spreads it out into a plain,
and sometimes indeed driving it mad with storm,
and sometimes soothing it with a calm,
so as to be easy for crossing by seafaring sailors;
- 28 (14) the one who encircled with rivers the world which came into being by you through Christ,<sup>d</sup> Jn 1:3
and flooded it with mountain torrents,
and drenched it with never-failing springs,
and bound it tightly all around with mountains,
for an unshakable foundation of a most steadfast earth.
- 29 (15) For you filled your world, and divided and arranged it,
with sweet-smelling and healing herbs;
- 30 with many and varied living creatures,
with strong ones and with weak ones,
with edible ones and with productive ones,
with tame ones and with untamed ones;
- 31 with hissings of serpents,
with screams of many-colored birds;

12:9. These prayers are not only interpolated but redacted from such Jewish ideas. —J.H.C.]

d. Goodenough italicized only Christ as a Christian interpolation.

- 32 with cycles of years,
with numbers of months and days;
with arrangements of customs;
- 33 with courses of rain-producing clouds, for the generation of fruits, and the care of living creatures;
- 34 (and with) a balance of winds, Job 28:25
blowing when they are ordered by you;
(and) the multitude of plants and herbs.
- 35 (16) And you not only made the world,
but you also made the world citizen in it, 3:18-20
declaring him (to be) a (micro-)cosm of the cosmos.
- 36 For you said by your Wisdom, 3:19
Let us make man according to our image,
and according to (our) likeness;
and let them rule the fish of the sea,
and the winged birds of the heaven. Gen 1:26
- 37 (17) Therefore also you have made him out of immortal soul,
and out of a body that may be scattered;
- 38 the one indeed out of that which is not,
but the other out of the four elements.
- 39 And you have indeed given to him, with reference to the soul,
rational discrimination,
distinguishing of piety and impiety,
observation of right and wrong.
- 40 While with reference to the body,
you have given (him) five senses,
and the movement involving change of place.
- 41 (18) For you, O God Almighty, through Christ,<sup>e</sup> planted a paradise in Eden, eastward, Gen 2:8
with all manner of edible foods, in (proper) order;
and into it, as if into a very expensive home, you brought him.
- 42 And indeed, you have given to him an implanted law to do, Rom 2:14f.
so that from himself, and by himself, 1:5
he might have the seeds of divine knowledge.
- 44 (19) So, having brought (him) into the paradise of luxury, Gen 2:15-17
you allowed him the right to partake of all things.
- 45 But of only one thing did you refuse him the taste;
in hope of greater things,
in order that, if he should keep the commandment,
he might receive immortality as a reward for this.
- 46 (20) But, having cared nothing for the commandment, Gen 3
and having tasted of the forbidden fruit,
by the trickery of a serpent,
and by the counsel of a woman,
you indeed rightly thrust him out from paradise.
- 47 Yet in goodness, you did not overlook him who was perishing forever,
for he was your work of art.
- 48 But, having subjected to him the creation,
You have given to him, through sweat and hard labors, to provide by himself Gen 3:17-19
the nourishment for his own family, while you are causing all things to grow, and to ripen.
- 49 And in time, having caused him to fall asleep for a while,
you called (him) by an oath to new birth; ApMos 28:4
- 50 having dissolved the boundaries of death, Vita 51:2

e. Goodenough italicized only Christ as a Christian interpolation.

you promised life by resurrection!

- 51 (21) And not only this; but also those who poured forth from him,
to become an innumerable multitude—
- 52 those who continued with you, you glorified,
while those who separated from you, you punished.
- 53 And while indeed from Abel, as from a devout man,
you favorably received a sacrifice; Gen 4
- 54 from the brother-murderer Cain,
you turned aside the offering as from an accursed person.
- 55 And in addition to these, you took hold of Seth and Enos, and you translated Gen 4:25f.
Gen 5:24
Enoch.
- 56 (22) For you are the maker of man,
and the supplier of life,
and the fulfiller of need,
- 57 and the dispenser of laws,
and the rewarder of those keeping them,
and the avenger of those transgressing them;
- 58 the one who brought the great flood on the world, Gen 6-9: 2Pet 2:5
because of the multitude of those who lived godlessly;
- 59 and who delivered the righteous Noah from the flood in an ark, together with eight souls; 1Pet 3:20
- 60 an end indeed of those who have passed on,
but a beginning of those about to be born.
- 61 (You are) the one who kindled the fearful fire against the five cities of Sodom, and turned a fruitful land into salt because of those living in it, and snatched away pious Lot from the burning. Gen 19: WisSol 10:6
- You are the one who delivered Abraham from ancestral godlessness, 62 (23) and appointed him heir of the world, Ps 106:34 LXX
WisSol 10:7
2Pet 2:7
Gen 12
(Rom 4:13)
and showed to him your Christ;<sup>f</sup>
- 63 the one who appointed Melchizedek a high priest in your service;
who declared your much-enduring servant Job conqueror of the archevil serpent; Gen 14:18
- 64 who made Isaac a son of promise; Gen 17:19
(and) Jacob, father of twelve sons; and you formed his descendants into a multitude;<sup>g</sup>
- and who led (them) into Egypt, with seventy-five souls. Gen 46:27 LXX
- 65 (24) You, O Lord, did not neglect Joseph,
but gave to him to rule over Egypt— Gen 41
a reward of the self-control that you enable.
- 66 You, O Lord, did not disregard the Hebrews, Ex 1-15
being worn out by hard labor under the Egyptians.
- 67 But, on account of the promises (made) to the fathers,
you delivered (them), having punished the Egyptians.
- 68 (25) And when men had corrupted the natural law, Rom 1:21-25 and at one time, indeed, having esteemed the creation as happening without cause,
and at another time, having honored it more than is right,
comparing it to you, to the God of the universe;
- 69 you did not permit them to go astray,
but showed forth your holy servant Moses, having given through him the written Law, as an aid to the natural (law). Ex 20; Isa 8:20
LXX 1:5

f. Goodenough italicized only Christ as a Christian interpolation.

g. [Lit. "... Jacob, father of twelve sons, and you scattered those from him into a multitude . . ."

—J.H.C.]

- 70 And you showed the creation to be your work,
and you banished the polytheistic error.
- 71 You glorified Aaron, and those who came after him, with priestly honor;
- 72 you punished the Hebrews when they sinned;
you received those who returned (to you).
- 73 (26) You exacted vengeance on the Egyptians with ten plagues; Ex 4-17
you carried the Israelites across a sea, dividing it;
you destroyed the pursuing Egyptians under water;
- 74 you sweetened bitter water with wood; Num 11:31
you poured forth water out of jagged rock; Ex 17: Num 20
- 75 you rained the manna out of heaven, Ps 77:24 LXX;
a mother-of-quail nourishment out of the air; Ex 16
- 76 you comforted them with a pillar of fire by night, for light, and a pillar of cloud by day, for shade; Neh 9:19
- 77 you showed forth Joshua, the soldier; Josh 1-13
you destroyed seven Canaanite nations through him;
- 78 you tore in two the Jordan;
you dried up the rivers of Etham;<sup>h</sup> Ps 73:15 LXX
- 79 you broke down walls without machines (of war),
and without human hand.
- 80 (27) Glory is yours, because of all these things,
O Master Almighty!
- 81 Innumerable armies of angels worship you—archangels, thrones, dominions, Col 1:16
rulers, authorities, powers, eternal armies; 4:11
- 82 the cherubim and the six-winged seraphim, with two covering up their feet, Isa 6:2
and with two their heads, and with two flying;
- 83 and saying together with thousands on thousands of archangels, Dan 7:10
and ten thousand times ten thousand angels, incessantly and loudly crying out
- 84 —and all the people together, let them say—“Holy, holy, holy is Lord Sabaoth, the heaven and the earth are full of Isa 6:3
his glory!”
- 85 (He is) blessed forever!” Amen.<sup>i</sup> Rom 1:25

13. A Prayer of Praise and Benediction, Spoken by a Bishop at the Close of the Eucharistic Service (AposCon 8.15.7-9)

- 1 (7) . . . O God, the Almighty, the True one and Incomparable one, who is everywhere, and is present in all things;
and who is in nothing as though being one certain thing;<sup>a</sup>
the one who is not circumscribed in places;
- 2 the one who is not growing old in time;

h. Following the LXX, the prayer mistakes the Heb. word for “overflowing” for a place name, Etham.

i. This prayer should be compared with Prayer 3 (7.34:1-8). Prayer 12 contains a remarkable synthesis of Christian, Gk., and Jewish viewpoints, all united to serve in Christian liturgy. The high christological statements of vss. 7-15 are so integral to the prayer that Goodenough, who wishes to see much Jewish material preserved in it, makes no effort to excise them as interpolations; instead he suggests that Paul may have borrowed from them (p. 325), a solution which seems forced. The OT teaching concerning creation is taken up and commented on from a hellenistic philosophical and scientific viewpoint (see especially vss. 22-40). The prayer concludes with a biblically based theological statement about the fall of man, derived from the OT. The context of this prayer seems to be the celebration of the Eucharist; it is followed immediately by a prayer that centers upon God’s redemption in Jesus Christ.

13 a. This philosophically oriented description of God is reminiscent of Philo; cf. LegAll 3.51.

- the one who does not come to an end in the ages;
 3 the one who is not deceived by words;
 the one who is not subject to origin;
 the one who does not need a guardian;
 4 the one who is above corruption;
 the one who does not admit change;
 the one who by nature is unchangeable;
 5 the one who dwells in unapproachable light; 1Tim 6:16
 the one who is by nature invisible;
 6 the one who is known by all those who with good will seek you with rational natures;
 7 the one who is understood by those who with good will seek after you;
 8 the God of Israel, the one truly seeing,<sup>b</sup> Gen 35:9f.
 5:8
Your people who have believed in Christ:<sup>c</sup> 9 (8) being gracious, attend to me on account of your name, and bless those who have bended low their necks before you,
 and give to them the requests of their hearts—the things that are profitable— Ps 36:4 LXX 10 and do not make one of them a castaway from your Kingdom, but consecrate them, guard, shelter, assist, deliver them from the stranger,
 from every enemy;
 11 preserve their homes,
 guard their goings in and goings out! Ps 120:8 LXX 12 (9) Because to you (belong) glory, praise, splendor, reverence, (and) worship;
 13 and to your Servant Jesus, to your Christ, to our Lord, both God and King;
and to the Holy Spirit;<sup>d</sup>
 now, and always, and into the ages of the ages. Amen.

14. A Portion of a Prayer Prayed at the Ordination of Presbyters (AposCon 8.16.3)

- 1 (3) O Lord, Almighty, our God, who through Christ<sup>a</sup> made everything, Jn 1:3
 and through him provide for everything appropriately;
 2 for to the One having power to make differing things, WisSol 6:8
 to this One belongs power also to provide in differing ways;
 3 for through him, O God, you indeed provide for those who are immortal in a place of security, in a mansion;<sup>b</sup> 4 while for those who are mortal, (you provide) in successive ways,
 for the soul by meditation upon laws,
 for the body by the satisfaction of wants.<sup>c</sup> 5 Now also yourself, look upon your holy Church and increase it;
and multiply those leading it;
 6 and give power so that they may work hard in word and in deed, 1Tim 5:17 for the building up of your people! . . .

b. Israel as "the one truly seeing" is a Philonic phrase. See above, Prayer 5, footnote d.

c. Goodenough italicized from who to Christ as a Christian interpolation.

d. All of the material between the two footnote marks is correctly italicized by Goodenough as a Christian interpolation.

14 a. Goodenough italicized Christ as a Christian interpolation. [Here, as in 3:1, I think that "Christ" may have replaced "the Word"; the following "through him" demands this or a similar term; 12:10 reveals that the Jewish author, as the author of WisSol 8–10, believed creation was by God through the Word, who is Wisdom. —J.H.C.]

b. Or "simply by keeping."

c. Goodenough ended the prayer at this point. While containing elements reminiscent of hellenistic Judaism, the prayer could have been composed as it is by a Christian for liturgy purposes.

15. A Prayer to Accompany the Offering of Firstfruits (AposCon 8.40.2–4)

- 1 (2) We give thanks to you, O Lord Almighty, Maker and Superintendent of the universe,
through your only Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord,<sup>a</sup> for the firstfruit offerings to you,
 not such as we ought (to give),
 but such as we are able (to give).
- 2 (3) For who among men is able to give thanks to you worthily, on behalf of the things you have given to them for partaking in?
- 3 O God of Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob,
 and of all the holy ones, Acts 3:13
 the One who brought all things to perfection through your word, and commanded the earth to produce all manner of fruits for our gladdening and food; Gen 1
- 4 who gave forage for the duller and sheepish (creatures):
 foliage for those eating grass,
 and to some, indeed, raw meat,
 while to some, seeds;
- 5 yet to us, grain, the useful and appropriate food,
 and various other things—
 some indeed, for (our) use,
 while others for (our) health,
 still others for (our) enjoyment.
- 6 (4) For all these things, therefore, you are praised (in hymns),
 for your good deeds to all through Christ,
with whom to you be glory, honor, and awe;
and to the Holy Spirit, forever. Amen.

16. Funeral Prayer for the Dead (AposCon 8.41.2–5)

- 1 (2) And on behalf of those our brothers who are at rest in Christ,<sup>a</sup>
 let us beg;
- 2 on behalf of the repose of this brother or that sister,
 let us beg;
- 3 that God, the lover of man, having received his soul,
 may forgive him every sin—voluntary and involuntary;
- 4 and being gracious and favorable,
 may appoint him to a position among the godly ones, Lk 16:23 sent into the embrace of Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, with all those from of old who were well pleasing, and who did his will;
 where pain and grief and moaning have fled away. Isa 35:10
- 5 Let us arise! Let us commit ourselves, and one another, to the eternal God, through the Word (which was) in the beginning! Jn 1:1
- 6 (3) And let the bishop<sup>b</sup> say,
 (4) “O you who are by nature immortal and unending,

15 a. Goodenough italicized this entire l. as a Christian interpolation.

b. Goodenough italicized from this point to the end of the prayer as a Christian interpolation. This is possible; but again we cannot be certain.

16 a. Goodenough italicized in Christ as a Christian interpolation.

b. Goodenough italicized the bishop as a Christian interpolation.

- through whom everything immortal and mortal has come into being;
- 7 who with artistic skill made this rational living being, man, the mortal world citizen, 3:18–20
and who promised resurrection;
- 8 who did not permit Enoch and Elijah to experience death, the God of Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, Mt 22:32; Lk 20:38
not as of the dead, but as God of the living, are you.
- 9 Because, with you, all souls are alive, WisSol 3:1
and the spirits of the righteous are in your hand, whom anguish will not touch.
- 10 For all those who are set apart are under your hand. Deut 33:3
- 11 (5) Also now yourself, look upon this your servant,
whom you have chosen, and received into another sphere;
- 12 and forgive him, if he has committed any great sin, voluntarily or involuntarily;
and place beside him favorable angels;
and appoint him (a place) in the embrace of the patriarchs, and the prophets, and
- 13 the apostles,<sup>c</sup>
and of all those who from of old were pleasing to you;
- 14 where there cannot be grief, and pain, and moaning, Isa 35:10
but a free place of godly ones,
and a land of upright ones, set up for you, <sup>d</sup>and for those in it who see the glory of your Christ;
- 15 With whom to you be glory, honor, and awe, thanksgiving and worship, and to the Holy Spirit, forever. Amen.

c. Goodenough correctly italicized and the apostles as a Christian interpolation.

d. Goodenough correctly italicized from this point to the end of the prayer as a Christian interpolation. The Christian sections may be more extensive. The prayer incorporates possible Christian elements in its resemblances to Jn 1:1; Mt 22:32; and Lk 20:38.

PRAYER OF JOSEPH

(First Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION WITH INTRODUCTION

BY J. Z. SMITH

The Prayer of Joseph is a unique text which maintains that the patriarch Jacob was the earthly incarnation of the angel Israel. The central tale, in the fragments that have survived, concerns a conflict between the angels Israel and Uriel over their relative rank in heaven. The title is enigmatic as Joseph is not mentioned in the surviving fragments, but the text was most likely an extended testament developed out of Jacob's blessing of Joseph's sons in Genesis 48. The narrative of Jacob wrestling with the "man" in Genesis 32:24–31 has contributed the central motifs to the text.

Texts

According to the Stichometry of Nicephorus, the Prayer of Joseph originally contained eleven hundred lines. Only three fragments containing nine Greek sentences have survived in the writings of Origen. Fragment A is quoted in Origen's Commentary on John by way of supporting his argument that John the Baptist was an angel who became incarnate in order to bear witness to Jesus.<sup>1</sup> Fragment B, a single sentence, is cited in Gregory and Basil's compilation of Origen, the Philocalia, and is also quoted in Eusebius, The Preparation of the Gospel as well as in the Latin Commentary on Genesis by Procopius of Gaza.<sup>2</sup> Fragment C, also from the Philocalia, quotes Fragment B and paraphrases Fragment A.<sup>3</sup> In addition to these fragments, the title (Proseuchē Iōsēph) occurs in several lists of apocryphal works, and three possible allusions to the Prayer of Joseph in other writings have been suggested by scholars.<sup>4</sup> None of these adds to our knowledge of the text.

<sup>1</sup> Origen, CommJn 2:31 (25), pp. 189f. in the critical edition by E. Preuschen, GCS 10. Also, C. Blanc, Origène: Commentaire sur Saint Jean, SC 120, pp. 334–37.

<sup>2</sup> Origen, Philoc 33:15 in the edition by J. A. Robinson (Cambridge, 1893) pp. 203f. Cf. the Gk. quotation in Eusebius, PrEv 6:11; 64 in the critical edition by K. Mras, GCS 43:1, p. 356; and the Lat. citation in Procopius of Gaza, CommGen 29 (PL 87:1, cols. 95f.).

<sup>3</sup> Origen, Philoc 33:19 in Robinson's edition, p. 208. All three fragments of the PrJos are conveniently edited in A. Resch, Agrapha, pp. 295f., and A.-M. Denis, Fragmenta Pseudepigraphorum Graeca (Leiden, 1970) pp. 61f.

<sup>4</sup> The PrJos is listed in the Stichometry of Nicephorus (HSW, vol. 1, pp. 50f.); the List of Sixty Books (HSW, vol. 1, pp. 51f.); the Synopsis of Pseudo-Athanasius (in Gk.: T. Zahn, Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons [Erlangen, 1888–92] vol. 2, p. 317; Slav. recensions, W. Lüdtke, "Beiträge zu slavischen Apokryphen, 5," ZAW 31 [1911] 230–35); and a list by the Arm. Mechithir of Arivank [Zahn, Forschungen des neutestamentlichen Kanons (Leipzig, 1893) vol. 5, p. 116.]). In some lists, the PrJos appears in the place usually assigned to JosAsen and appears to refer to this work (see C. Burchard, Untersuchungen zu Joseph und Aseneth [WUNT 8; Tübingen, 1965] pp. 32–34). [Also see Burchard's contribution on JosAsen in the present collection. —J.H.C.]

Michael Glycas, Annales 2:171 (ed. I. Bekker, Corpus Scriptorum Historiae Byzantinae 27 [Bonnaer, 1836] p. 321), refers to a contest between Jacob and the angel Raphael as being in a text entitled the PrJos. The reference in Priscillian, Liber de Fide et de Apocryphis (ed. G. Schepss [Leipzig, 1889] pp. 45f.): "Whoever heard of a prophecy by Jacob being included in the canon?" may refer to the PrJos. The reference in Ascens 4:22 to the "Words of Joseph the Just" most probably does not refer to PrJos.

Original language

The 164 words that have survived from the Prayer of Joseph in direct quotation are too scant to permit an identification of the original language. In the scholarly literature, the majority of commentators have abstained from hazarding an opinion; for those who have, much has depended on the assignment of the text to either Jewish or Christian authorship. For those who hold that it was originally a Jewish work, an Aramaic original is presumed; for those who hold to a Christian authorship, a Greek. Neither of these identifications is based on linguistic criteria.

The Prayer of Joseph contains three words that have been identified as hapax legomena: one (Fragment A, 7 archichiliarchos, chief captain) is a unique occurrence of what appears to be a technical military term that, if historical, might suggest the date and provenance of the text. The other two—proektisthēsan (Fragment A, 2 precreated) and the phrase “imperishable name” (Fragment A, 9 onomata asbestos)—are rare theological terms that occur in later Christian texts.<sup>5</sup>

The largest number of linguistic and theological parallels are to Egyptian Greek and Coptic Jewish and Christian texts; the significant narrative details in the Prayer of Joseph are most closely paralleled by Aramaic materials.

Date

The dating of Origen's Commentary on John with its notice of the Prayer of Joseph as “an apocrypha presently in use among the Hebrews” as prior to A.D. 231 provides a secure latest possible date. The various parallels to both hellenistic and Aramaic materials would suggest a first-century date.

Provenance

Given the uncertainty with respect to original language and date, any decision regarding provenance is impossible. If the Greco-Egyptian Jewish and Christian parallels are stressed, Alexandria would appear most likely. If the Aramaic parallels are stressed, a Palestinian provenance seems more likely.

Historical importance

There are no historical allusions in the Prayer of Joseph. No particular situation appears to be reflected in the text.

Theological importance

Given the extant remains of the Prayer of Joseph, its theological significance must be located in the remarkable cluster of titles attributed to the angel Israel, its notion of Jacob as the incarnation of the angel Israel, and its striking narrative of a combat between Uriel and Israel. Because of these, many scholars have sought to relate the Prayer of Joseph in some way to Christian tradition: either as a Jewish-Christian or gnostic text (Resch, Batiffol, Schneider, Grant, Winter, Daniélou) or as a Jewish anti-Christian work (Charles, Marshall, James, Russell, Turner) or as a Christian anti-Jewish polemic (Burch).<sup>6</sup> But the close parallels in technical terms, narrative tradition and theology to both hellenistic and Palestinian Jewish traditions make it most probable that Origen was right in identifying the Prayer of Joseph as Jewish (Priebatsch, Stein, Smith).<sup>7</sup> The Prayer is most likely to be situated within those first-century Jewish groups, both in Palestine and in the Diaspora, both before and after the destruction of the Temple, that sought to develop a notion of community, principles of authority, sources of revelation, and modes of access to divinity apart from the Jerusalem Temple, its traditions, priests, and cult. This was accomplished largely through the creation of a pseudepigraphical literature of revelation to the patriarchs (beginning already with the ascription of the Pentateuch to Moses) and by the development of the complex rituals and visionary literature of the early Jewish Merkabah (throne) mystics. Both of these tendencies are related to the Prayer of Joseph.

<sup>5</sup> Gk. proktizō is applied to Christ in Christian tradition in Didymus of Alexandria, De Trinitate 3:4 (PG, vol. 39, col. 832) and Gelasius Cyzicus, Historia concilii nicaeni 2:16 (PG, vol. 85, col. 1257). The term “imperishable name” occurs in Esaias, Oratio 4:9 (ed. Augustinos [Jerusalem, 1911] p. 26) in a homily on Gen 28:13–15, where God promises Jacob that his name will never be forgotten.

<sup>6</sup> Resch, Agrapha, p. 297; P. Batiffol, Studia Patristica (Paris, 1889) 1:17; T. Schneider, “Der Engel Jakob bei Mani,” ZNW 33 (1934) 218f.; R. M. Grant, Gnosticism and Early Christianity (New York, 1959) pp. 19, 190; P. Winter, “Monogenēs para Patros,” ZRGG 5 (1953) 351f., 358, 361; J. Daniélou, “Trinité et angélogologie dans la théologie judéo-chrétienne,” RSR 45 (1947) 23–25; J. Daniélou, Théologie du Judéo-Christianisme (Paris, 1958) pp. 182–85 (note especially the central passage [184f.] has been omitted in the ET, Theology of Jewish Christianity [London, 1964] pp. 132–34, as the author no longer accepts his original interpretation); R. H. Charles, The Ascension of Isaiah (Edinburgh, 1900) p. 39; J. T. Marshall, “Joseph, Prayer of,” in Hastings' DB, vol. 2, p. 362; D. S.

The theology of the Prayer is best described in terms of the titles it confers on the angel Israel;<sup>8</sup> its mythology of combat and descent will be discussed below as exegetical developments of the Jacob narrative.

In the Prayer of Joseph, the titles that are given apply only to the angel Israel. Although in Greco-Egyptian magical materials, Coptic-gnostic and Manichean texts, there is an angel Jacob,<sup>9</sup> in the Prayer of Joseph, Israel is the name borne by the angel; Jacob, by the man.<sup>10</sup>

Israel, an angel of God

While the immediate locus for this title would appear to be targumic and midrashic understandings of the conferring of the name Israel on Jacob in Genesis 32:28, a second source would appear to be the collective use of Israel in canonical passages (e.g. Ex 4:22) that suggest a heavenly or pre-existent being. These passages, sometimes referring to Jacob-Israel, sometimes to the nation, were collected in catenae (e.g. 4Ezra 6:58 and the close parallel in 4QDibHam iii), which resemble the assemblage in the Prayer of Joseph. For example, in De confusione linguarum 146, Philo writes of the Logos: "God's firstborn, the Logos, who holds the eldership among the angels, an archangel as it were. And many names are his for he is called the Beginning, and the Name of God, and His Word, and the Man after His Image and He that Sees, that is to say, Israel." In the Prayer of Joseph, Israel is called "firstborn," an "archangel," and a "man seeing God"; and his role as "the Beginning" and his "eldership" is clearly implied.<sup>11</sup> Even more striking is the Coptic-

Russell, The Meaning and Message of Jewish Apocalyptic (Philadelphia, 1964) p. 67; N. Turner, "Joseph, Prayer of," IDB, vol. 2, p. 979; V. Burch, "The Literary Unity of the Ascensio Isaiae," JTS 20 (1918-19) 20f.

<sup>7</sup> H. Priebatsch, Die Josephsgeschichte in der Weltliteratur (Breslau, 1937) pp. iv-v, xvii, 8-14, 22f., 33-44; E. Stein, "Zur apokryphen Schrift 'Gebet Josephs,'" MGWJ 81 (1937) 280-86; J. Z. Smith, "Prayer of Joseph," in Goodenough Festschrift, pp. 253-94.

<sup>8</sup> Also see J. H. Charlesworth's contribution on the PrJoc below.

<sup>9</sup> Jacob occurs as the name of a supernatural being in the description of an amulet in the Sword of Dardanus (K. Preisendanz, Papyri Graecae Magicae [PGM] [Leipzig, 1928] vol. 1, pp. 126, 1735-37), which has been compared to the PrJos by M. Smith, "The Account of Simon Magus in Acts 8," H. A. Wilson Jubilee Volume (Jerusalem, 1965) p. 749. Such an amulet has been printed by R. Mouterde, "Le Glaive de Dardanos," Mélanges de l'Université Saint-Joseph 15 (1930) 57f. Another amulet (Newhall Collection 35) has been translated, somewhat speculatively, as "Jacob, the likeness/YHWH, his son" and compared with the PrJos by H. C. Youtie, "A Gnostic Amulet with an Aramaic Inscription," JAOS 50 (1930) 214-20. R. Ganschinietz ("Jacob," Pauly-Wissowa, vol. 9, pp. 623f.) notes the tendency in magical papyri to combine Iakōb with the divine name Ioō, which might suggest a heavenly Jacob. The angel Jacob and the angel Israel appear as two of the three heavenly stratēgoi in the Coptic Gospel of the Egyptians 64:13f. (J. Doresse, "Le Livre sacré du Grand Esprit Invisible," JA 254 [1966] 408f.; 256 [1968] 314, 320). "The angel Jacob" (Yakōb prēstag) occurs in Manichean Turfan fragments M, 4 and M, 20 and was related to the PrJos by Schneider, ZNW 33 (1934) 218f. and A. Böhlig, "Jacob as an Angel in Gnosticism and Manichaeism," in Nag Hammadi and Gnosis, ed. R. McL. Wilson (NHS 14; Leiden, 1978) pp. 122-30.

<sup>10</sup> This is a standard feature of revelation literature: The heavenly revealer possesses a secret name known only on high while being known on earth by another name. Compare PGM 2.45, 1-48, 63; Pistis Sophia 137 (C. Schmidt, W. Till, Koptisch-gnostische Schriften [Berlin, 1962] vol. 1, p. 235); the Mandaeen Right Ginza 3 (ed. M. Lidzbarski [Leipzig, 1925] p. 98). It appears to be an adaptation of an archaic Indo-European epic convention, see Homer, Iliad 1.403f.; 2.813f.; 14.290f.; 20.74; and compare the collection of texts and bibliography in R. Lazzeroni, "Lingua degli dei e lingua degli uomini," Annali della scuola normale superiore di Pisa 26 (1957) 1-25; C. Watkin, "The Language of Gods and the Language of Men," in Myth and Law among the Indo-Europeans, ed. J. Puhvel (Berkeley, 1970) pp. 1-17.

<sup>11</sup> This Philonic passage has been frequently compared to the PrJos, most extensively by Stein, MGWJ 81 (1937) 283, and Daniélou, Theology, 133. It should be noted that each title in the PrJos applied to Israel is closely paralleled by a title in Philo applied to the Logos. a) Israel: Conf 146; b) angel/archangel: LegAll 3.177; QuodDeus 182; Heres 205; Mut 87; Pyrf 146; Sonn 1.240; c) Ruling spirit: Abr 124; QuaesEx 2.64, 66, 68; d) one seeing God: see

gnostic treatise On the Creation of the World (CG 2.5), which depicts, standing before the heavenly throne, amid the angels and next to Sabaoth, "a firstborn whose name is Israel, the one who sees God."<sup>12</sup> All three titles occur as well in the Prayer of Joseph. The setting in this treatise, rather than the occurrence of an angel Israel in Greco-Egyptian and Jewish magical materials,<sup>13</sup> seems to supply the proper context for understanding Israel's role in the Prayer.

In early Jewish mystical literature, the community of Israel chanting the Keduša (the Trisagion) became personified as a heavenly figure named Israel who leads (as does Michael or Metatron in parallel traditions) the celestial worship before the throne. In its original form it is a two-level action such as that depicted in b. Hullin 91b: "Israel is beloved before the Holy One, blessed be he, even more than the ministering angels. For Israel repeats the song every hour while the ministering angels repeat it only once a day . . . Furthermore, the ministering angels do not begin the song above until Israel has started it below." Later there developed a vision, in the Hekhalot literature, in which the congregational action was transported entirely to heaven with an "angel who bears the name Israel standing in the center of heaven and leading the heavenly choir."<sup>14</sup> Such a role is summarized in the Prayer of Joseph by the self-description of Israel as the "first minister before the face of God" who calls "upon my God by the inextinguishable name" (Fragment A, 8f.).

In the discussion of canonical parallels below, it will be noted that the Palestinian targumic tradition is uniform in understanding Jacob's angelic adversary in Genesis 32 as "the chief of those who praise [God in heaven]," that it was a common midrashic tradition that Jacob let the angel go at dawn so that the angel could return on high to join in the heavenly chanting, that some texts identify Jacob's adversary as bearing the name Israel, while others interpret the name Israel as meaning "trying to sing instead of the angels." It is on some such cluster of associations that the central narrative of the Prayer of Joseph rests. It is also related to the theme of angelic rivalry before the heavenly throne, which may be found in both hellenistic and Palestinian Merkabah literature.<sup>15</sup> Thus, in the Apocalypse of Abraham 10:9, Jael (or Iaol) is described as "the one who has been charged, according to his commandment, to restrain the threats of the living creatures of the cherubim against one another,"<sup>16</sup> while in the vision of the throne in chapter 18, Abraham sees that when the hayyot, "the living creatures," "finished singing, they would look at one another and threaten one another. And it came to pass that when the angel who was with me saw that they were threatening each other, he left me and went running to them. And he turned the face of each living creature from the face which was opposite it so that they could not see each other's faces threatening each other. And he taught them the song of peace which the below, n. 20; e) firstborn: Agr 51; Conf 63; "the eldest son of God" in LegAll 3.175; Quod Det 118; Migr 6; Conf 146; Heres 205; Somm 1.230; f) chief captain: compare the Logos as hēgemōn in Conf 174, as lieutenant in Somm 1.241, compare the Logos as stratiēgos in Pseudo-Justin, Oratio ad Graecos 5, which has been compared to Philo by E. R. Goodenough, "The Pseudo-Justinian Oratio ad Graecos," HTR 18 (1925) 194f., and P. Beskow, Rex Gloriae (Stockholm, 1962) pp. 209f.; g) first minister: compare the Logos as heavenly high priest in LegAll 3.82–88; SpecLeg 1.230; Gig 52; Migr 102; Fuga 108–10.

<sup>12</sup> A. Böhlig, P. Labib, Der koptisch-gnostische Schrift ohne Titel aus Codex II von Nag Hammadi (Berlin, 1962) pp. 153, 23–25. Compared to the PrJos by N. A. Dahl, "The Johannine Church and History," in Current Issues in New Testament Interpretation eds. W. Klassen and G. Snyder (New York, 1962) p. 287; Daniélou, Theology, p. 133; and P. Borgen, Bread from Heaven (Leiden, 1965) p. 177.

<sup>13</sup> Israel, as an angelic name, appears only in late Jewish magical materials, e.g. Sefer Razi'el 4b, 41b. Yisriel appears more frequently in earlier texts, e.g. Sefer ha-Razim (ed. M. Margalioth [Jerusalem, 1966]) pp. 97, 19; Harbe de Moshe (ed. M. Gaster, Studies and Texts [London, 1928]) vol. 3, pp. 71f. In Gk. materials, Israel appears as an angelic name only as a designation of one of the three archai in Justin's Book of Baruch (Hippolytus, Ref 5.26.2 [PG, vol. 16, col. 3194]), which has been related to the PrJos by Resch, Agrapha p. 298. Istraël is the more common form, e.g. 1En 10:1 (other MSS, Uriel); the Sword of Dardanus (PGM vol. 1, pp. 128, 1815f.); Papyrus Oslo 1 (ed. S. Eitrem [Norske videnskaps-akademie 1; Oslo, 1925] pp. 15, 310) and elsewhere. See a full list in Smith, Goodenough Festschrift, p. 263.

<sup>14</sup> G. Scholem, Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism (New York, 1954) p. 62 paraphrasing Hekhalot Rabbati in A. Jellinek, BHM, vol. 3, pp. 161–63. The pattern, in b. Hull 91b, of the angels not beginning their song above until Israel has begun it below is also found in the Hekhalot material, e.g. BHM, vol. 3, p. 161.

<sup>15</sup> Central to this tradition is Job 25:2: "Dominion and fear are with him; he makes peace in his heights" (translation mine). The latter phrase is understood as God's need to keep peace among his angels (see Smith, Goodenough Festschrift, p. 279). See also P. Schäfer, "The Rivalry Between Angels and Men in The Prayer of Joseph and Rabbinic Literature," Proceedings of the Sixth World Congress of Jewish Studies, ed. A. Shinan (Jerusalem, 1977) vol. 3, pp. 511–15. (In Heb.)

<sup>16</sup> [Translation is by R. Rubinkiewicz and H. G. Lunt and is published herein. —J.H.C.]

Eternal One has in himself" (ApAb 18:8–11). The same sort of conflict is depicted in Tanhuma, Bereshit (ed. S. Buber, Rome, 1885) 1.10, which contains a Midrash on Job 25:2: "Dominion and fear are with him; he makes peace in his high places." "Dominion" is interpreted as Michael; "fear" as Gabriel. The "making peace" is understood to be God's action in keeping peace among the angels "for even the heavenly ones need peace . . . each one in his turn says 'I am the first.'" In Pirke Hekhalot (BHM 3.161–63), the angel Israel has the function of keeping order among the heavenly choir much as does Jael in the Apocalypse of Abraham. The conflict between Uriel and Israel over their relative rank in the Prayer of Joseph more closely resembles that depicted in Tanhuma.

A ruling spirit

A general term in astrological and angelological materials to which no special significance may be attached.<sup>17</sup> In the Prayer of Joseph it serves to emphasize Israel's preeminent rank.

A man seeing God

Ultimately dependent on Genesis 32:31, the name Israel was understood to be derived from ʾyś ʾh ʾl, "a man seeing God," which is the form in which it occurs in the Prayer of Joseph (Fragment A, 3). While a Hebrew play on words, the etymology is not found (except for one possible late exception)<sup>18</sup> in any extant Hebrew source but is rather to be found only in Jewish and Christian texts from a Greco-Egyptian provenance in a variety of verbal forms.<sup>19</sup> Its most massive witness is Philo, in whose writings some form of the etymology appears forty-nine times.<sup>20</sup> The term indicates what, since Ezekiel 1:4–28, was the goal of the Merkabah mystic—a vision of God on his heavenly throne.<sup>21</sup>

The firstborn

Israel's claim that "I am the firstborn (prōtogenos) of every living thing to whom God gives life" (Fragment A, 3) bears a striking resemblance to the description of the son in the archaic hymn preserved in Colossians 1:15, 17: "He is the image of the unseen God and the firstborn (prōtotokos) of all creation . . . before anything was created he existed"<sup>22</sup>

<sup>17</sup> It may not be used to relate PrJos to the gnostic, Archontic sect (Resch, Agrapha, pp. 295–97).

<sup>18</sup> The only occurrence of the etymology of Israel as a man seeing God in Heb. tradition is a presumably late Midrash on Hos 9:10 in SER 27 (ed. M. Friedmann, Jahresbericht der israelitisch-theologischen Lehranstalt in Wien 7 [1900] 138f.).

<sup>19</sup> In the Philonic form ho horōn ton theon in Clement of Alexandria, Paid 1.9 (PG vol. 8, col. 841); Origen, Princ 4.3 (PG vol. 11, col. 395); Eusebius, PrEv 11.6.519b (PG vol. 21, col. 860); Basil Caesar, CommIsa 15 (PG vol. 30, col. 141); and in closely related forms in Jerome, HebQuaestinLibGen (CCSL 72.40–41); Pseudo-Jerome, Liber Interpretationis Hebraicorum Nominum in Exodum (CCSL 72.75); Macarius, Hom 47.5 (PG vol. 34, col. 800); Clement of Alexandria, Strom 1.5 (PG vol. 8, col. 725). See, likewise, the Jewish(?) prayers in the Apostolic Constitutions 7.36.2 and 8.15.7 in W. Bousset, "Eine jüdische Gebetssammlung im siebenten Buch der apostolischen Konstitutionen," Nachrichten von der Königlichen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen, philologische-historische Klasse, 1915 (1916), especially p. 444. [Also see the contribution herein titled the Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers. —J.H.C.] The Heb. form is most closely represented by the rarer aner horōn theon or anthrōpos horōn theon in Hippolytus, Contra Noetum 5 (PG vol. 10, col. 809); Eusebius, PrEv 7.8.525b (PG vol. 21, col. 525); and the Coptic-gnostic treatise "On the Origin of the World" (Böhlig-Labib, pp. 153, 23–25). See further Smith, Goodenough Festschrift, p. 264.

<sup>20</sup> Philo most usually employs the phrase Israēl [ho] horōn [ton theon]: LegAll 2.34, 3.186, 212; Sacr 134; Post 62, 92; Conf 56, 72, 146, 148; Migr 113, 125, 201; Heres 78; Congr 51; Fuga 208; Somn 1.173; 2.44; 173; Abr 57; Leg 4; QuaesGen 3.49; 4.233. Cf. LegAll 3.15; 172; Plant 58, 60; QuaesGen 2.22. To horatikon genos as a synonym for Israel occurs in QuodDeus 144; Conf 91; Migr 18, 54; Mut 109, 189, 258; Somn 2.279; cf. Somn 2.44. The form ho orōn in Conf 159 and QuaesEx 2.47 and hoi oratikoi in Plant 46f. and QuaesEx 2.58 may be compared. For other verbs of seeing applied to Israel in Philo, cf. Sacr 120; Heres 279; Somn 1.114. For horatikos with some bodily organ with reference to Israel, compare Ebr 111; Migr 14; Mut 209; Conf 92; Mut 203.

<sup>21</sup> See P. Borgen, Bread from Heaven, pp. 115–18, 175–79, who relates the Philonic etymology to Merkabah traditions.

<sup>22</sup> Col 1:15 has been compared with PrJos by H. Windisch, "Die göttliche Weisheit der Juden und die paulinischen Christologie," Neutestamentliche Studien G. Heinrici (Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament 6; Leipzig, 1914) p. 225, and C. F. D. Moule, Colossians and Philemon (Cambridge, 1962) p. 63.

and has its origin in Exodus 4:22, in which God declares "Israel is my first-born (prōtotokos, LXX) son." While in Exodus the title clearly refers to the nation (cf. 4Ezra 6:58; Sir 36:12; Jub 2:20; PssSol 18:4), some texts interpreted the passage to refer to the patriarch (cf. Jub 19:29; R. Nathan in ExR 19:7). This title is paralleled by the tradition that the patriarchs were formed before creation (a tradition alluded to in PrJos A, 2: "Abraham and Isaac were [pre-]created before any work") and likewise Israel (either the patriarch or the nation).<sup>23</sup>

Archangel of the power of the Lord

This is one of the early occurrences of the term "archangel." Joined to the phrase "of the power of the Lord," it appears to be a reflection of the traditional vocabulary associated with Michael as the "Great Prince" (viz. Dan 12:1).

Chief captain among the sons of God

The title "chief captain" (archichiliarchos) is unique to the Prayer of Joseph but appears to parallel Michael, who is the chief captain of the heavenly host (archistratēgos) in hellenistic Jewish literature (Dan 8:11 in LXX and Theod; 2En 22.6f.; 33:10f.; AsMos 10:2; JosAsen 14 and throughout TAB).

The first minister before the face of God

The term ministering angels (μαρτυρε ἁ-ῥῶν/angeloi leitourgoi) is commonplace. The figure of Israel in the Prayer of Joseph is a close parallel to the Merkabah description in the Testament of Levi 3:4: "For in the uppermost heaven of all dwells the Great Glory, in the Holy of Holies, superior to all holiness. There with him are the archangels, who serve and offer propitiatory sacrifices to the Lord . . ."<sup>24</sup>

The designation "first" ought to be read as a term of rank consonant with "ruling spirit," "archangel," "chief captain," and, especially, "[Uriel] the eighth after me [Israel]." This last term has caused much discussion as it seems to imply that Uriel is no longer one of the seven archangels.<sup>25</sup> The problem is relieved by assuming a scheme of seven archangels with an eighth highest angel (who is Israel); Uriel would be the lowest of the seven. Thus Israel, in the Prayer of Joseph, plays an analogous role to the Ogdoad in gnostic traditions (e.g. AdvHaer 31:4), to the son who has the face of God and who rules over the seven angelic prōtoktistoi in Clement of Alexandria (Excerpta ex Theodoto 10–12), and to the Dynamis of the eighth highest heaven in Jewish Merkabah materials (e.g. the "Great Glory" in TLevi 3:4 quoted above; 3En 10:3; b.Ḥag 13a).<sup>26</sup>

Each title in the Prayer of Joseph can be related to parallel Jewish materials; each appears to have its prime locus in early Merkabah traditions as the mythology of the Prayer of Joseph appears to have its prime locus in exegetical traditions developed out of Genesis 32.

The Prayer of Joseph may be termed "a myth of the mystery of Israel." Whether the earthly Jacob-Israel is to be understood as a thoroughly docetic figure, the incarnation of a heavenly power, or a heavenly messenger is not clear. However, it is frequently a characteristic of each of these patterns that the myth may be ritually appropriated by its believers. The narrative of Israel's descent is presumably matched by a ritual for Jacob's (and the sons of Jacob's) ascent. The soteriological experience would accord with the well-known pattern of the ascent of the mystic to the Merkabah, an ascent threatened by angelic adversaries, which results in a vision of the form of God on the celestial throne and the "angelicizing" of the adept as he joins in the heavenly chorus of praise. One may presume that the way of ascent in the Prayer of Joseph was "Jacob's Ladder." The Prayer of Joseph may be grouped with the pseudepigraphical literature and Philo, in contradistinction to the

<sup>23</sup> See the convenient collection of texts in Kommentar, vol. 3, pp. 256–58. See the discussion of the PrJos in W. L. Knox, Some Hellenistic Elements in Early Christianity (London, 1944) p. 49, and P. Winter, ZRGG 5 (1953) 335–65.

<sup>24</sup> [Trans. by H. C. Kee; see his contribution on T12P in this collection. —J.H.C.]

<sup>25</sup> Daniélou, Theology, p. 134; W. L. Knox, Hellenistic Elements, p. 49; Priebatsch, Josephsgeschichte, p. 9.

<sup>26</sup> See G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism, Merkabah Mysticism and Talmudic Tradition (New York, 1965<sup>2</sup>) pp. 65–71; H. Corbin, Avicenna and the Visionary Recital (New York, 1960) pp. 65, 287f.

Hebrew and Aramaic Merkabah texts, in placing emphasis on the patriarch as a model for salvation.<sup>27</sup>

With particular reference to the Prayer of Joseph, the sort of promise it held out to its believers may be paralleled by E. R. Goodenough's description of the great reredos in the Dura Europus synagogue. The fresco is dominated by a great vine, which is, in part, a ladder. To one side, at the foot of the vine, is the reclining figure of the patriarch Jacob; in the branches sits the figure of Orpheus, the heavenly singer; at the summit is the celestial throne and the Powers. In Goodenough's words: "blessed at the bottom by the Patriarch wearing the white robe of a man of God on earth, Israel can go up to stand permanently beside the Throne with the Powers."<sup>28</sup> An even closer parallel is found in a Jewish magical papyrus entitled "The Prayer of Jacob" (Proseuchē lakōb). The petitioner prays, "Fill me with wisdom, empower me, Master . . . because I am an angel on earth, because I have become immortal, because I have received the gift from you."<sup>29</sup>

The Prayer of Joseph is to be situated within some such circle of first-century Judaism, which sought a model for salvation in the ascent of the patriarchs to the full reality of their heavenly, angelic nature. This Prayer is the narrative of the mythology of such a heavenly figure; a text such as the Prayer of Jacob is the expression of the experience of this salvation on the part of the individual believer.

The complete pattern is most apparent in the various texts that witness to the complex Enoch tradition, particularly 2 Enoch. Here Enoch was originally a man (ch. 1) who ascended to heaven and became an angel (22:9, cf. 3En 10:3f. and 48C), returned to earth as a man (33:11), and finally returned again to heaven to resume his angelic station (67:18).

Relation to canonical books

In considering the relation of the Prayer of Joseph to the present canonical text, it is necessary, as is the case with any of the pseudepigrapha, to compare it not only with modern editions of the Hebrew scriptures but also with early versions, translations, and interpretations. It is also essential to perceive how redactional activity within the canon is continued by the pseudepigraphical works. In the case of the Prayer of Joseph, the links already established in Genesis as well as in Hosea 12:4–6 between three blocks of material: (a) Genesis 32f.; (b) Genesis 35f.; Genesis 28; and (c) Genesis 48 exhaust the passages relevant to an understanding of the Prayer of Joseph. A similar set of links (omitting Gen 32f.) occurs in the version of Genesis 35 in Jubilees 32.

Genesis 32f.

The immediate point of departure for an examination of the relationship of the Prayer of Joseph to canonical tradition is the account of the combat between Jacob and a (heavenly) assailant and the patriarch's gaining of the name Israel in Genesis 32:24–31.

The larger narrative context of Genesis 32f. is relevant. The bulk of these chapters is devoted to an account of Jacob's tense meeting with his elder twin brother, Esau (Gen 32:4–23; 33:1–17), their first meeting since Jacob tricked his father Isaac into bestowing Esau's blessing on him (Gen 27). In the interim, Jacob had sought refuge from Esau's fury with his uncle Laban in Haran (Gen 27:43–32:1). Genesis 32f. is situated as Jacob and his entourage, in flight from Laban, are journeying up from Paddan-Aram to Canaan in response to a divine command to "return to the land of your birth" (Gen 31:13). The tension with Laban and Esau and the fight by the Jabbok are part of an overall pattern. Whenever Jacob approaches a human being, a close relation, with whom there is conflict, preparations for combat are made (Gen 31:22–42; 32:4–23), but battle is avoided and reconciliation occurs (Gen 31:43–32:1; 33:1–17); whenever Jacob encounters angelic beings, combat appears to follow (Gen 32:2f.; 32:24–31).

a) The combat in the Prayer of Joseph occurs in an identical setting as Genesis 32f. Jacob is "coming up from Syrian Mesopotamia" (Fragment A, 4), the standard Septuagint translation of Paddan-Aram (see LXX Gen 31:18 and 33:18, which frame the meeting with Esau).

<sup>27</sup> See further Smith, Goodenough Festschrift, pp. 287–91.

<sup>28</sup> E. R. Goodenough, Jewish Symbols, vol. 9, pp. 78–123, especially p. 107.

<sup>29</sup> PGM, vol. 2, pp. 148, 1–149, 28. [See Charlesworth's translation of the PrJac below. —J.H.C.]

b) The conflict, as described in the Prayer of Joseph, is between two rival, all but equal, archangelic powers as to their relative rank before the throne of God. This closely parallels the conflict between Jacob and Esau. They are twin brothers constantly competing for relative seniority. The competition began in their mother's womb (Gen 25:22–26), continued through Jacob's acquisition of Esau's birthright (Gen 25:29–34), and culminated in Jacob's theft of Esau's blessing (Gen 27:1–40) with Esau's threat to kill Jacob (Gen 27:41f.).<sup>30</sup> These events explain the derivations of Jacob's name: Ya'aqōbh, either because at birth he held his brother's heel (aqēbh, Gen 25:26) or because he is one who supplants: "Is it because his name is Jacob that he has now supplanted (wayya 'qbhēni) me twice? First he took my birthright, and look, now he has taken my blessing!" (Gen 27:36). This latter derivation is followed throughout the canon, in Hosea 12:3 and, most effectively, in the proverbial pun in Jeremiah 9:4: "every brother is a very Jacob (āqōbh ya 'qōbh)."<sup>31</sup> Philo regularly assigns the title "The Supplanter" (ho pternistēs, e.g. LegAll 1.61; 2.89) to Jacob before receiving the name Israel. The derivation is alluded to by Origen in the introduction to his paraphrase of the Prayer of Joseph (Fragment C, 1): "Jacob . . . he who supplanted his brother."<sup>31</sup>

Esau's jealousy of his brother may well have supplied the notion of "envy" which is given as the motivation for the attack on Israel by Uriel in the Prayer of Joseph (Fragment A, 5), but in the Prayer, despite the implicit accusation that each angel has usurped the other's title and rank, Israel is the elder (Fragment A, 3).<sup>32</sup>

c) In the Genesis account, the patriarch's journey begins with a mysterious encounter between Jacob and a band of angels: "While Jacob was going on his way angels of God met him, and on seeing them he said, 'This is God's camp,' and he named the place Mahanaim" (Gen 32:1–2). The construction pg' with b', here translated as "met," usually implies a hostile encounter. Likewise Jacob's exclamation that the place was a maḥ<sup>nē</sup> lohīm, a war camp of God (more strongly militaristic in the LXX) and the etymology of the place name Mahanaim (two camps) hints at an armed conflict between Jacob and the angels.<sup>33</sup>

d) From what has survived, one might well have thought that the apocryphon would have been entitled "Prayer of Jacob" rather than of Joseph. The only prayer by Jacob in the canonical text occurs in Genesis 32:10–13 where the patriarch prays: "I implore you, save me from my brother's clutches, for I am afraid of him; he may come and attack us . . ."<sup>34</sup>

<sup>30</sup> Based on the oracle in Gen 25:23, haggadic literature extended the conflict to the descendants of Jacob and Esau and their respective guardian angels. Going beyond the tense confrontation of Gen 32–33, some traditions have Jacob slay Esau "as he came forth from Mesopotamia." For early witnesses, see TJud 9 and the more extended narrative in Jub 37:1–38:14; and compare such late Midrashim as Midrash wa-Yissa'u in Yalkut 1.132 (BHM, vol. 2, pp. 1–5) and Chronicles of Jerahmeel, pp. 80–87 (ed. M. Gaster; London, 1899). These may be dependent on the lost "Wars of the Patriarchs" (Jub 34:1–9; TJud 3–7), of which two fragments, derived from Jacob's encounter with Esau (Gen 32:15) and the wrestling match (Gen 32:23f.), may have been recovered at Qumran (1Q23 1:13). But see the new designation of these fragments as 1QHenGiants following J. T. Milik, "Turfan et Qumran," Kuhn Festschrift, pp. 120f. In part these traditions are based on Esau's threat (Gen 27:41f.) and Jacob's fear (Gen 32:7–12) combined with the battle scene of the sons of Jacob avenging the rape of Dinah (Gen 34:25–29) and the brief reference to the wars of Jacob (connected by a pun with Shechem, Gen 48:22, cf. GenR 80:10 and 97:6); in part on traditions that identify Esau as the nation opposed to Israel: first, Edom, already in the Gen narrative (Gen 36:1, 8, 9, 43; extended in Mal 1:2–5, cf. Rom 9:10–13), later to the Herodian dynasty, Rome, and the Christian Church. See G. D. Cohen, "Esau as a Symbol in Early Medieval Thought," in A. Altmann, ed., Jewish Medieval and Renaissance Studies (Cambridge, Mass., 1967) pp. 19–48. Later tradition is relentless in continuing the fraternal conflict, e.g. Gen 33:4: "But Esau ran to meet him, took him in his arms and held him close . . ." is interpreted as Esau biting Jacob in the neck in an attempt to slay him! (TargYer; Gen 33:4; GenR 78:9).

<sup>31</sup> This may either be a nominative tag (compare Origen Excerptss 80.2 [PG vol. 17, col. 149]), or may summarize some of the lost narrative content of PrJos.

<sup>32</sup> Compare Jub 19:29 where Jacob is declared to be the firstborn son.

<sup>33</sup> Some scholars have suggested that Gen 32:1f. is the Elohist version of the wrestling match in the Jahwist narrative (Gen 32:24–31). The Palestinian Targumim consistently relate the two incidents through a variety of exegetical devices.

<sup>34</sup> There are only two texts entitled "The Prayer of Jacob": PGM, vol. 2, p. 148f. (discussed above and presented below by J. H. Charlesworth), and an Eth. magical text, Lässäna Ya'aqob, in D. Lifchitz, Textes éthiopiens magico-religieux (Université de Paris, Travaux et Mémoires de l'Institut d'Ethnologie 38, Paris, 1940) p. 241, where the angel Gabriel reveals to Jacob while he was dwelling in "Syria" all of the names of God: "By this prayer, Jacob was saved from the hand of his brother Esau. Likewise save me . . ." Cf. PRE (ed. G. Friedlander, New York, 1965) p. 37.

e) The central text that supplies the narrative details in Prayer of Joseph ("He . . . fought with me and wrestled with me saying that his name," Fragment A, 5) is Genesis 32:24–31; but these verses appear to intrude abruptly on the larger story of Jacob and Esau.<sup>35</sup> Each detail of the nocturnal wrestling match is of relevance with the exception of the damage to Jacob's thigh (Gen 32:25b, 31b–32).

Genesis gives no clue as to the identity of Jacob's opponent. He is simply described as a "man" or "one" (Gen 32:25); and, later, he refuses to answer Jacob's question as to his name (Gen 32:29). The conferring of the name Israel on Jacob, with the etymology of "because you have been strong (sārītā) against God (**lōhīm*)" (Gen 32:28) represents, already, an interpretation of the adversary. A further layer of interpretation within the canon is given in Hosea, which plays on both possible meanings of **lōhīm* as God or divine beings, and correlates the conflict against Esau with the struggle at the Jabbok and the bestowal of the name Israel on Jacob in Genesis 32 with that in chapter 35: "In the very womb he supplanted his brother, in maturity he wrestled against God. He wrestled with the angel and beat him, he wept and pleaded with him. He met him at Bethel and there God spoke to him" (Hos 12:3f.).<sup>36</sup>

Post-canonical "Old Testament" tradition either continues the ambiguity of the Genesis account or, building on the sort of interpretation represented by Hosea 12, goes on to specify the angel's name. Thus Targum Onkelos Genesis 32:24f. reads "a man" as does the Septuagint. The Palestinian Targum reads "an angel in the likeness of a man," to which may be compared the homiletical Midrashim, "in the likeness of a shepherd" or "of an outlaw" (GenR 77:2). Josephus understands the opponent to have been a "phantasm" (Ant 1.333). The earlier homiletic Midrashim specify either Michael or Gabriel as the angelic adversary (perhaps already implied in TargYer 32:25); later mystical Midrashim identify him as Metatron. The old Midrash Yelemmedenu, preserved only in fragments in later collections, contains the tradition that Jacob fought with several angels (Yalqut Shim'on Ps 39 [Horeb, 1925–26; 2.758]). This appears to conflate Jacob's encounter with the angels in Genesis 32:1f. with the combat in 32:24–31. R. Ḥama b. R. Hanina is reported to have held that the adversary was the guardian angel of Esau (GenR 77:3 and 78:3), thus correlating the wrestling with the forthcoming encounter between the two brothers.<sup>37</sup> Two anonymous traditions, one explicit (PRE 37), the other implicit (GenR 77:3), give the name of the wrestling angel as Israel. In this tradition, Jacob, the man, does battle with his heavenly counterpart, the angel Israel.<sup>38</sup>

The most important of these post-canonical "Old Testament" interpretations—one that supplies both some clues as to why it is that Uriel is uniquely identified in the Prayer of Joseph as Jacob-Israel's opponent<sup>39</sup> and a number of striking parallels to other elements in

<sup>35</sup> F. van Trigt, "La Signification de la lutte de Jacob près du Yabboq," OTS 12 (1958) 280–309, contains a useful review of contemporary interpretations.

<sup>36</sup> The details of weeping and pleading introduce new elements whether they are understood to refer to Jacob (most commentators—but unlikely) or the angel (so b.Hull 92a; Gunkel, Pedersen; Engnell); see the summary of critical positions in P. R. Ackroyd, "Hosea and Jacob," VT 13 (1963) 250f. For the combination of Gen 32f. with Gen 35 in Hos, see GenR 78:3 and 82:4 and the attempt to place Hos 12 in a haggadic context by M. Gartner, "Masorah and the Levites," VT 10 (1960) 272–84.

<sup>37</sup> This is based on Gen 33:10 (obscured in the JB translation, hence my own translations follow) where Jacob says to Esau: "Seeing your face is like seeing the face of God," which is correlated with Jacob's naming of Peniel: "I have seen God face to face" (Gen 32:31) to read: "I have seen in Esau's face the face of the fought." The second version of this tradition cites Gen 32:29: "you shall prevail against men" and simply states "by that Esau and his chiefs are meant."

<sup>38</sup> The interpretation in GenR 77:3 appears based on the notion of national guardian angels and takes Jacob-Israel as the nation. The tradition in PRE 37 is more complex: "And [the angel] called [Jacob's] name Israel like his [the angel's] own name, for his [the angel's] own name was called Israel." In the LadJac (as translated by James, LAOT p. 98) the angel Sarakl says to Jacob after the vision at Bethel: "'What is your name?' and I said, 'Jacob.' Then he said: 'Your name shall no longer be called Jacob but your name shall be like my name, Israel.'" In Christian tradition, Christ—as the Logos who is called Israel—wrestles with Jacob and bestows his name on the patriarch. Justin, DialTrypho 125.5 (PG vol. 6, col. 768), is the earliest witness to this.

<sup>39</sup> The only explicit identification of the angel as Uriel (outside of the PrJos) is a Christian homily attributed to John of Jerusalem (MS Reims 427 fol. 62): et pugnavit cum angelo Orieli and is probably dependent on Origen's quotation of the PrJos. See G. Morin, "Le Catalogue de manuscrits de l'abbaye de Gorze au XI<sup>e</sup> siècle. Appendix: Homélie inédites attribuées à Jean de Jerusalem," RBen 22 (1905) 14.

the Prayer—is the early Palestinian targumic tradition on Genesis 32:25–31 represented by Codex Neofiti:<sup>40</sup>

- 25 And Jacob was left alone and the angel Sariel wrestled with him in the appearance of a man and he held him until the column of dawn arose . . . Fragment A, 5
- 27 And he [the angel] said: "Let me go because the rise of the column of dawn has arrived and because the time of the angels on high to praise has arrived and I am chief of those who praise." And he [Jacob] said: "I will not let you go until you bless me." And he said to him: "What is your name?" And he said: "Jacob." Fragment A, 8
- 28,29 And he said: "Your name shall no longer be called Jacob, but Israel, because you have acted as a prince with angels from before the Lord . . ." Fragment A, 7
- 31 And Jacob called the name of the place Peniel "because I have seen angels from before the Lord face to face and my life has been spared."<sup>41</sup>

Palestinian targumic tradition is remarkably uniform in identifying Jacob's opponent as the ryš lmsbhy, the "chief of those who praise" (Neofiti; Fragment Targum, Genizah Fragment A; TargYer reads "one of the praising angels"; LAB 18:6 identifies the opponent as "the angel that was over the praises"), and in stressing that this was the reason that the angel had to return on high at dawn, to lead the heavenly praise-songs.<sup>42</sup>

The targumic tradition is an early Palestinian witness to an understanding of the combat in Genesis 32 within a Merkabah context. To this may be added the cluster of details discussed above: the traditions of angelic rivalry before the throne; the angel Israel who serves as the heavenly choirmaster and has the function of keeping order among the choring angels; the tradition that the heavenly choir does not begin its song above until Israel (the nation) has begun to chant below; and the derivation of the name Israel as "trying to sing instead of the angels." All of these give expression to the same sort of role that Israel plays in the Prayer of Joseph, depict the same sort of rivalry as is present in the Prayer, and give special force to the self-identification of Israel as "the first minister before the face of God" (Fragment A, 8).

A unique element in Neofiti, of possible relevance to the Prayer of Joseph, is the identification of the opposing angel as Sariel. The usual catalog of the four chief angels is: Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, and Uriel. However, the list is subject to some variation. In the majority of instances, when the list is altered, it is Uriel that is displaced. When that occurs, the name of the angel that takes his place appears to be in some way associated with Genesis 32:24–31.<sup>43</sup> Three examples are of particular importance. In IQM 9:12–15, the list of chief angels is given as Michael, [Gabriel], Sariel, and Raphael. The same list occurs in 4Q Hen<sup>a</sup> 9:1 replacing Uriel in the Greek manuscripts.<sup>44</sup> While Sariel is known elsewhere in early sources,<sup>45</sup> his identification as one of the four archangels appears unique to Qumran just as the identification of him as Jacob's opponent is unique to Neofiti. In 1 Enoch 10:1 (Gk. and Syncellus), God sends Uriel to warn Noah about the impending flood. In the Gizeh fragment, the angelic name Istrahel (Israel) is substituted.<sup>46</sup> In five instances in 1 Enoch (40:9; 54:6; 71:8, 9, 13), confined to the "Similitudes," Phanuel replaces Uriel in a catalog

<sup>40</sup> See G. Vermes, "The Archangel Sariel," in M. Smith Festschrift, vol. 3, pp. 159–66, and summarized in Vermes, "The Impact of the Dead Sea Scrolls on Jewish Studies," JJS 26 (1975) 12–14. Vermes makes no mention of PrJos, but cf. Smith, Goodenough Festschrift, pp. 270 and 277.

<sup>41</sup> ET by M. McNamara and M. Maher in A. Diez Macho, Neophyti I (Madrid, 1968) vol. 1, p. 588 (text: pp. 217–19) with slight emendations.

<sup>42</sup> The origin of this tradition appears to have been the thrice-repeated chronological note in Gen 32:24, 26, 31 of "daybreak," the traditional beginning of liturgical activity (e.g. GenR 78:2 on Gen 32:26). The same sort of tradition is behind PRE 37. Note the alternative tradition that the angels sing by night, the nation Israel by day (e.g. b.Hag 12b). [Also see TAdam, and S. E. Robinson's contribution upon it in this collection. —J.H.C.]

<sup>43</sup> See further Y. Yadin, The Scroll of the War of the Sons of Light Against the Sons of Darkness (Oxford, 1962) pp. 237–40; Smith, Goodenough Festschrift, p. 277; Vermes, M. Smith Festschrift, pp. 159–64.

<sup>44</sup> J. T. Milik, "Problèmes de la littérature Hénochique à la lumière des fragments araméens de Qumrân," HTR 64 (1971) 346. 1En 9:1 combines both, listing Suriel (Suryâl/Suryân) and Uriel (Uryâl/Uryân).

<sup>45</sup> 1En 20:6; Sefer ha-Razim (ed. Margalioth) pp. 104f.

<sup>46</sup> For Istrahel, see above n. 13. The Eth. reads Asreelyor.

of the four archangels. It is most likely that the name Phanuel is to be derived from the place name Peniel / Penuel (the face of God) in Genesis 32:30,<sup>47</sup> and therefore may be related to the title "a man seeing God" (Fragment A, 3). The conclusion by G. Vermes appears justified: "In the circles represented by the Similitudes of Enoch, Qumran and the Neofiti variety of the Palestinian Targum, the angelic adversary of Jacob was recognized as one of the four celestial princes and called alternatively as Sariel or Phanuel."<sup>48</sup>

To strengthen the relationship of this tradition to the Prayer of Joseph, it must be noted that Sariel-Phanuel-Istrahel regularly substitutes for Uriel and that, while Sariel is a relatively unknown angelic figure, his name seems to be quite frequently conflated with Uriel (e.g. 1En 9:1, Eth.) to produce the angelic name Suriel, a figure of largely negative attributes. For example, in the remote parallel to Genesis 32 and the Prayer of Joseph, the enigmatic scene in Exodus 4:22–26 is later clarified so that Moses—after being told by the Lord that "Israel is my first-born son"—is met "on the way" by an "angel" (so the LXX, most of the targumic and midrashic treatments, e.g. b.Ned 31b–32a) who seeks to kill him. When this angel is identified, it is most frequently Uriel or Suriel.<sup>49</sup> These bits of evidence are obscure and fragmentary, but there is a striking "family of resemblance" among these details, largely centered in Aramaic materials, which hint at a connection between the Uriel of the Prayer of Joseph and the figure Sariel-Phanuel-Suriel in Palestinian tradition.

A third element of possible relevance to the Prayer of Joseph in Neofiti is its etymology of the name Israel. Neofiti understands Israel to be built from the root šrr (to rule, to act as a prince), a derivation found in other Targumim (TargOnk, rb, the Palestinian tradition, ʿtrbrb) and the Greek of Aquila and Symmachus (archein).<sup>50</sup> This denominative verb, from šar, "prince" (which figures prominently as an element in angelic titles), yields the interpretation of Genesis 32:28: "You have conducted yourself as a prince with angels" and must be related to the angelic understanding of Israel in the Prayer.

f) One of the more puzzling motifs in the Prayer of Joseph is Origen's paraphrastic report that Jacob was ignorant of his heavenly nature until reminded of it by Uriel (Fragment C and implied[?] in Fragment A, 4). This may be dependent on the sequence of events in Genesis 32f. In Genesis 32:28, Jacob is recognized as a princely (i.e. angelic) being by his (angelic) adversary and given the (angelic) name Israel. In Genesis 33:10 Jacob recognizes Esau (Uriel?) as a heavenly being: "I came into your presence as into the presence of God,"<sup>51</sup> strengthened in the Palestinian targumic circumlocution: "I have seen your countenance as one sees the countenance of the angels from before the Lord."

Genesis 35:9f., Genesis 28:10–18

As indicated by Hosea 12:4 ("He wrestled with the angel and beat him, he wept and pleaded with him. He met him at Bethel and there God spoke to him"), and suggested already by the redactional note in Genesis 35:9 ("Once more God appeared"), the conferring of the name Israel on Jacob was harmonized with the double conferring the name at Bethel in chapter 35 and this with the angelic vision at Bethel in chapter 28 (Gen 35:1: "Go to Bethel . . . Make an altar there for the God who appeared to you when you were fleeing from your brother Esau").

While the geographical setting in Genesis 35:9 is the same as in Genesis 31:18 and 33:18 and Prayer of Joseph Fragment A, 4: "on his return from Paddan-Aram," no etymology

<sup>47</sup> J. E. H. Thomson, The Samaritans (Edinburgh, 1919) p. 189; A. Z. Aescoli, "Les Noms magiques dans les apocryphes chrétiens des Ethiopiens," JA 220 (1932) 109; Smith, Goodenough Festschrift, p. 277; Vermes, M. Smith Festschrift, pp. 161, 164. Phanuel appears in other early texts, e.g. SibOr 2.2:15; Sefer ha-Razim (ed. Margalioth) pp. 78, 88.

<sup>48</sup> Vermes, JJS 26 (1975) 13.

<sup>49</sup> L. Ginzberg, Eine unbekannte jüdische Sekte (New York, 1922) p. 37, compares the Suriel-Moses tradition with Uriel-Israel in the PrJos (cf. Ginzberg, Legends, vol. 5, p. 310). See further J. H. Polotsky, "Suriel der Trompeter," Museon 49 (1936) 231–43, and Smith, Goodenough Festschrift, p. 277; and cf. the positive understanding of Suriel as "the Prince of the Presence" equivalent to Metatron in H. Odeberg, 3 Enoch (Cambridge, 1928) pp. 99f. [See also the contribution in this collection on 3En by P. Alexander. —J.H.C.]

<sup>50</sup> Vermes, M. Smith Festschrift, pp. 164f. A similar interpretation is found in Jerome, HebQuaestinLibGen (PL, vol. 23, col. 1038), and may well derive from his knowledge of the Targumim (see Smith, Goodenough Festschrift, p. 264).

of the name Israel is given or implied; it is simply bestowed: "from now on you shall be named not Jacob but Israel" (Gen 35:10). But again, a theophany appears to be the cause of the designation. The Palestinian Targumim are unanimous in rendering Peniel (Gen 32:30) as "I have seen angels of the Lord face to face" rather than the usual singular circumlocution, "angel of the Lord." This most probably refers to the angels in the "ladder" vision of Genesis 28:12,<sup>52</sup> with chapter 35 supplying the warrant for connecting chapters 32 and 28. Further, the "ladder" vision supplies the picture of ascending and descending angels so central to the Prayer of Joseph and this motif is used, in both the Palestinian Targumim and early Midrashim, as the chief proof-text for a heavenly Jacob-Israel.<sup>53</sup> These interpretations, combined with the canonical portrait in Genesis 28 of Jacob as an ignorant, sleeping man (Gen 28:16), may well have contributed to the puzzling report in the Prayer (Fragment C) that Jacob was ignorant of his heavenly nature "while doing service in the body."

Genesis 48

If the title of the work and the quotation that Jacob "read in the tablets of heaven all that shall befall you and your sons" (Fragment B, cf. C) most probably relate the text to the testament-genre, then the most likely influence on the form of the Prayer of Joseph within the canon would be Genesis 48, according to which the dying Jacob adopts and blesses Joseph's sons.<sup>54</sup>

While the narrative setting is in Egypt, Jacob begins his address to Joseph and his sons with the phrase "When I was on my way from Paddan" (Gen 48:7). The only place in Genesis in which this phrase occurs in direct speech by the patriarch as it does in the Prayer of Joseph (Fragment A, 4), and the first mention of Jacob's journey since the narrative of his name being changed to Israel at Bethel is in Genesis 35:9. The content of Jacob's first address (Gen 48:7) is all but a direct quotation of Genesis 35:16–20. Thus it would appear that the redactional activity within the Genesis narrative itself already linked together the three blocks of canonical material most crucial to the Prayer of Joseph: Genesis 32–33; 35; and 48.<sup>55</sup>

The blessing of Joseph's sons by the weak-sighted patriarch with its theme of the placing of the younger brother ahead of the elder reintroduces the motif of fraternal rivalry and repeats elements of the scene of blind Isaac blessing Jacob and Esau (Gen 27). This echoes the angelic rivalry in the Prayer of Joseph and the dispute between Uriel and Israel over priority of birth (Fragment A, 3) and rank (Fragment A, 7f.). The blessing contains, as well, an enigmatic reference to Jacob's guardian angel: "may the angel who has been my saviour from all harm, bless these boys" (Gen 48:16), which does not appear to refer to any of the canonical traditions of Jacob and an angel (Gen 28:11; 31:11; 32:2).

Thus texts about Jacob, linked together by both internal redaction within the canon and early targumic and midrashic interpretation, appear to account for the bulk of the narrative material in the Prayer of Joseph.

Relation to apocryphal books

The title "prayer" (proseuchēloratio) affixed to this document is relatively rare as a designation for apocryphal works. Those that have survived with such a title are either

<sup>51</sup> See above, n. 37.

<sup>52</sup> Vermes, M. Smith Festschrift, p. 164.

<sup>53</sup> The most frequent explanation as to why the angels were "going up and coming down" rather than the expected descending and ascending is that they saw the sleeping patriarch below and then ascended to see his image engraved on the throne on high (So TargYer and Neofiti, Gen 27:12; b.Hull 91b; GenR 68:12; 78:3). See the extended debate between R. Hiyya and R. Yannai in GenR 68:13–69:3 in Smith, Goodenough Festschrift, pp. 285f. [Also cf. Jn 1:51 and LadJac, which is presented in the present collection by H. Lunt. —J.H.C.]

<sup>54</sup> James, LAOT, p. 26, has pointed to verbal parallels between Gen 48 in the LXX and PrJos. There are two, of relative insignificance: Mesopotamias tēs Syrias (Gen 48:7 = PrJos Fragment A, 4) and the phrase "my God" (Gen 48:3 in some MSS = PrJos Fragment A, 9). The thematic similarities are more persuasive.

<sup>55</sup> A somewhat similar catena underlies Jub 32:16–34, which paraphrases Gen 35 and contains (vss. 21–26) the closest parallel to the testamentary passage in PrJos Fragments B, C (see below). Jub 32:21 combines Gen 35 with Gen 28:11; Jub 32:23 alludes to Gen 47:30; 46:4, 30; 48f. Note that the version of Gen 32f. in Jub omits the wrestling match and retains only the reconciliation with Esau (Jub 29:13).

lengthy prayers without narrative (e.g. PrMan; PrAzar; 4QPrNab) or narrative works with extended prayers as a central feature of their plot (e.g. JosAsen 12–13).<sup>56</sup> The insertion of prayers and hymns is a frequent device in expansions of biblical texts from Chronicles to Pseudo-Philo (perhaps most clearly, AddEsth 4:17<sup>a-i, k-z</sup>; 5:1<sup>a-f</sup>, 2<sup>a-b</sup>). Thus it is possible to assume with M. R. James that the lost sections of the Prayer of Joseph “must have contained a prayer or prayers of considerable bulk uttered by Joseph . . . On what occasion it was offered, whether in pit or prison or on his death bed, there is no certainty.”<sup>57</sup> However, neither canonical nor post-canonical “Old Testament” tradition has attributed much in the way of prayers to Joseph (JosAsen 8:10f. would be the chief, though insignificant, exception).

What has survived of the Prayer of Joseph is either direct speech by Jacob (not Joseph): “I, Jacob, who is speaking to you” (Fragment A, 1) or indirect speech by the angel Israel reporting what he and Uriel had said (Fragment A, 4–9). The audience is, presumably, Joseph and his sons: “For I have read in the tablets of heaven all that shall befall you and your sons” (Fragment B, cf. C). The setting would most appropriately be the blessing by Jacob of Joseph’s sons expanded from Genesis 48. This suggests that the Prayer of Joseph is most likely what Kolenkow has termed a “blessing-revelation testament.” She argues that the archaic genre of the last words of patriarchs, which foretell the future (e.g. Gen 27:27–29; 48f.; Deut 33; cf. Tob 13–14), has been expanded, in the hellenistic period, to include narratives that relate visions or journeys to heaven and serve to validate the forecasts.<sup>58</sup> As in texts such as Philo’s De vita Mosis and the Assumption of Moses 1:14, this authority would seem to have been further extended by having the patriarch not merely journey to heaven but be himself a heavenly figure. The Prayer of Joseph would seem to belong to this type.

Although the majority of such testamentary texts title the work after the name of the revealing patriarch (e.g. AsMos; TAb), there is a subgenre, represented by works such as the Testament of Isaac and the Testament of Jacob, in which an angel (Michael) assumes the form of the previous patriarch, appears, and speaks to the patriarch named in the title, most usually at the point of the latter’s death. Thus, in the latter, Michael appears to Jacob in the form of Isaac; in the Prayer of Joseph, perhaps, Israel appears to Joseph in the form of Jacob.<sup>59</sup>

The possibility of relating the Prayer of Joseph to a testament tradition receives strong support from Jubilees 32:17–26, which contains the closest verbal parallels to the testamentary passage in Fragments B and C of the Prayer, and which has been discussed above as connecting the same chain of biblical passages that seem to underlie the Prayer. [For a translation of Jubilees 32:17–26, the reader is encouraged to see the contribution herein on Jubilees by O. S. Wintermute. —J.H.C.]

Cultural importance

In its present form, the Prayer of Joseph remains a tantalizing fragment that has left no discernible impact on subsequent literature.

<sup>56</sup> See C. Burchard, Untersuchungen zu Joseph und Aseneth, pp. 50–54, 76–90. [Also see Burchard’s contribution in JosAsen in the present collection. —J.H.C.]

<sup>57</sup> James, LAOT, p. 26.

<sup>58</sup> A. B. Kolenkow, “The Genre Testament and Forecasts of the Future in the Hellenistic Jewish Milieu,” JSJ 6 (1975) 57–71.

<sup>59</sup> W. E. Barnes, “Appendix: The Testaments of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob” in James, The Testament of Abraham (Cambridge, 1892) pp. 140, 152; S. Gaselee, “Appendix: Translations from the Coptic Version of the Testaments of Isaac and Jacob,” in G. H. Box, The Testament of Abraham (London, 1927) pp. 58, 77. [Also see W. F. Stinespring’s contributions in this collection on TIsaac and TJacob. —J.H.C.] Some scholars (Priebatsch, Josephsgeschichte, pp. 16–34) have posited a relationship between PrJos and JosAsen with the latter’s striking portrait of a divine Joseph. Attention has been focused on the detail of Michael assuming the form of Joseph (JosAsen 14:8) to speak with Aseneth. But the motif here is used to quite a different end than that in TIsaac and TJacob. It would appear either to be related to Egyptian kingship traditions where the Sun God assumes the form of the reigning king, copulates with his wife in order to produce the new, divine heir (see H. Brunner, Die Geburt des Gottkönigs [Wiesbaden, 1964]) or to Greco-Roman erotic romance motifs, such as the seduction of Alkmene by Zeus, who assumes the form of Amphytrion (e.g. Apollodorus, Bibliotheca 2.4.8; Plautus, Amphytrio).

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 140–42.

Delling, Bibliographie, p. 166.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 125–27.

James, M. R. The Lost Apocrypha of the Old Testament. London, 1920; pp. 21–31.

Priebatsch, H. Die Josephsgeschichte in der Weltliteratur. Breslau, 1937; see especially pp. 8–44.

Smith, J. Z. "The Prayer of Joseph," in Religions in Antiquity: Essays in Memory of Erwin Ramsdell Goodenough, ed. J. Neusner. Sup Numen 14; Leiden, 1968; pp. 253–94 (with full bibliography).

Stein, E. "Zur apokryphen Schrift 'Gebet Josephs,'" MGWJ 81 (1937) 280–86.

PRAYER OF JOSEPH

FRAGMENT A

- 1 "I, Jacob, who is speaking to you, am also Israel,<sup>a</sup> an angel of God<sup>b</sup> and a ruling
2,3 spirit.<sup>c</sup> •Abraham and Isaac were created before any work.<sup>d</sup> •But, I, Jacob, who men call Jacob but whose name is Israel<sup>e</sup> am he who God called Israel which means, a man seeing God,<sup>f</sup> because I am the firstborn of every living thing to whom God gives life.<sup>g</sup>
- 4 And when I was coming up from Syrian Mesopotamia,<sup>h</sup> Uriel, the angel of God,<sup>i</sup> came forth and said that 'I [Jacob-Israel] had descended to earth and I had 5 tabernacled among men<sup>j</sup> and that I had been called by the name of Jacob.' •He envied me and fought with me and wrestled with me<sup>k</sup> saying that his name and 6 the name that is before every angel was to be above mine.<sup>l</sup> •I told him his name
7 and what rank he held among the sons of God.<sup>m</sup> •'Are you not Uriel, the eighth after me? and I, Israel, the archangel of the power of the Lord and the chief 8 captain among the sons of God?' •Am I not Israel, the first minister before the 9 face of God?' •And I called upon my God by the inextinguishable name."<sup>o</sup>

Jn 8:58
Gen 32:27f.;
35:10;
Jub 32:17
Ex 4:22; Col
1:15, 17; 4Ezra
6:58; Sir 36:12;
Jub 2:20; PssSol
18:4
Gen 31:17;
33:18; 35:9;
48:7
Gen 28:10-27;
Eph 4:9f.; Sir
24:8-10; Bar
3:36f.; Jn 1:14;
6:38; Rev 21:3
Gen 32:24-28;
Hos 12:3f.
Eph 1:21; Phil
2:9; Heb 1:4
TSol 2:4; Josh
5:14; Dan 8:11;
2En 22:6-7;
33:10f.
JosAsen 14:7;
TAB A 7, 19;
ApocEzra 4:24;
TLevi 3:4
Mt 18:10

A a. The change of names in the Gen account (e.g. Gen 17:5, 15) usually indicates some change in status. At times, it may be used for symbolic purposes (Hos 1:8; 2:24). Discovering some deeper meaning to name changes fascinated ancient exegetes, for example, Philo's treatise On Change of Names (Mut).

b. Israel appears as an angel in magical and mystical literature, at times combined with the heavenly nation, Israel.

c. A term found in astrological literature, here used to emphasize Israel's exalted rank.

d. The term "created before" (lit. "pre-created") occurs only here and in late Christian texts. The notion that wisdom, Torah, or the nation Israel were pre-existent is quite widespread in Jewish materials. Less common is the claim that the patriarchs or Moses were pre-existent.

e. Jacob is his earthly name; Israel, the heavenly name. The idea is that the celestial name is known only to other angelic beings.

f. This etymology of the name Israel is found solely in Jewish and Christian materials from Egypt, especially in Philo.

g. Most probably a literalistic understanding of Ex 4:22: "Israel is my first-born son."

h. The standard LXX translation for Paddan-Aram.

i. Uriel is usually one of the four archangels. See 1En 9:10; 10:1, 4, 9, 11; 20:2; GkApEzra 6:2; TSol 2:4; ApMos 40.

j. "To tabernacle" is traditional language of incarnation in Jewish and Christian texts. In Jewish materials, it is used preeminently of Wisdom. [In Christian writings, it is most famous in Jn 1:14. —J.H.C.]

k. This is an allusion to the story of Jacob wrestling with a (heavenly) man in Gen 32:24-31, which supplies a motivation, envy, for the attack missing in the canonical account.

l. His name (Uriel) is the name that is before every angel (God). Another possible translation: "his name (Uriel) should have precedence over my name (Israel) and of the angel that is before all."

m. Here we have a veiled reference to a supernatural contest in which power is displayed by knowing one's secret name (e.g. Mk 1:24); such a contest is quite different than the physical one just described.

n. By any of the traditional schemes of four or seven archangels, the description of Uriel as the "eighth" would eliminate him from the heavenly hierarchy. If the hellenistic scheme of an eighth highest heaven and angel (the Ogdoad) is being employed, then Uriel would be the lowest member of the hierarchy. The titles "archangel" and "chief captain" (this latter term is unique to the PrJos) are close parallels to the titles usually accorded Michael, the chief of the heavenly band. See the full discussion above.

o. The calling on the name probably refers to either the Trisagion or a secret name of yhw.

FRAGMENT B

1 "For I have read in the tablets of heaven<sup>a</sup> all that shall befall you and your sons."<sup>1</sup> Jub 32:31
Gen 48f.

FRAGMENT C

[Origen writes] Jacob was greater than man, he who supplanted his brother and who declared in the same book from which we quoted "I read in the tablets of heaven" that he was a chief captain of the power of the Lord and had, from of old, the name of Israel; something which he recognizes while doing service in the body, being reminded of it by the archangel Uriel.<sup>a</sup> B
A. 7
A. 3
A. 4

B a. The term "tablets of heaven" is quite common in the pseudepigrapha, especially in Jub where it occurs some twenty times. In some passages it appears to refer to a heavenly law code; elsewhere, as in the PrJos, to a book of destiny.

C a. While clearly a paraphrase of Fragment A, Origen here introduces what appears to be a gnostic motif (most closely paralleled by texts such as the "Hymn of the Pearl") in which the heavenly figure has forgotten his divine origin until reminded of it by another heavenly figure. To what degree this represents Origen's own interpretation and to what degree this may hint at parts of the PrJos no longer preserved cannot be determined.

PRAYER OF JACOB

(First to Fourth Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY J. H. CHARLESWORTH

The Prayer of Jacob contains eight internal divisions, consisting of four invocations, three petitions, and one injunction. The first invocation (vss. 1f.) begins by summoning the Father of the Patriarchs who is defined as the Creator; the second (vss. 3–5) moves in a partly chiasmic form to the first from a) Father of the Patriarchs; b) Father of all things; c) Father of the powers of the cosmos; d) Creator of all; through the invocation to d) Father of powers altogether; c) Father of the whole cosmos; b) Father of all creation; a) He who showed favor to Abraham. The third invocation (vss. 6–9) summons God as the King who sits “upon (the) mountain of h[oly] [S]inaios,” the sea, the serpent gods, and the sun. The last invocation (vss. 10f.) clarifies a concept found in each preceding invocation, “power”: God is the one who gives “power” to others. The first petition (vs. 12) merely asks God to hear the prayer. The second petition (vss. 13f.) is the most Jewish section of the prayer; the one addressed is the “Lord God of the Hebrews,” and the petitioner is one “[fro]m the rac[e] of Israel”; the author asks God to make him straight. The third petition (vss. 15–19) mentions the secret name of God and emphasizes his cosmic nature; the request now is specific and laudable, it is for wisdom (as with Solomon, cf. 1Kgs 3) by one who seems to be “an earthly angel.” The injunction (vs. 20) concludes the prayer. Unfortunately the Prayer of Jacob is virtually unknown to scholars (while the PrJos is included in IDB, vol. 2, p. 979, and discussed in Denis, Introduction [especially pp. 125–27], the PrJac is not even noted in these major reference works).

Texts

The Prayer of Jacob is extant in a fourth-century papyrus now supposedly preserved in the Deutsche Staatsbibliothek in Berlin. The present translation is based on the edition by K. Preisendanz.<sup>1</sup>

Original language, date, and provenance

There is no reason to doubt that Greek is the original language. The time of composition must antedate the fourth century, the date of the papyrus. Parallels with second-century documents (see below) indicate that the prayer may be as early as the second century A.D.; if the Prayer of Joseph dates from the first century (as J. Z. Smith states in his contribution above) then the Prayer of Jacob may also be that early. Since the papyrus was acquired in Cairo, venerates Sinai, and shares ideas with many other Egyptian documents and papyri, it is reasonable to assume an Egyptian provenance.

<sup>1</sup> K. L. Preisendanz, ed., Papyri Graecae Magicae: Die griechischen Zauberpapyri, (Leipzig, Berlin, 1931) vol. 2, pp. 148f. Other apocryphal prayers attributed to Jacob are found in PRE 37 (ed. Friedlander, p. 281) and in the Eth. text titled “La Langue de Jacob” (see D. Lifschitz, Textes éthiopiens magico-religieux [Université de Paris, Travaux et mémoires de l’Institut d’Ethnologie 38; Paris, 1940] pp. 239–43). I wish to express appreciations to H. D. Betz and P. Pokorný, who helped me improve this contribution.

Theological importance

The prayer appears Jewish, as demonstrated by verse 14, viz. the identification of the author as one “[fro]m the rac[e] of Israel.” If the author was a Jewish magician, he did not fully understand the Jewish traditions (see vs. 13 and n. k2). The concept of God is interesting, stressing both his covenant relation with Israel in verses 1, 5, 8, 13, and 14 and his cosmic powers, especially as the Creator (viz. vss. 2, 4). Two unique features are the apparent belief that “[S]inaios” is a personal name in verse 8 (see Ex 19:11, 18f.; 24:16) and the concept that the composer is like “an ear[th]ly angel” and has “become immortal” (see n. i2).

E. R. Goodenough claimed that the Prayer of Jacob “is a prayer for transfiguration.”<sup>2</sup> He correctly saw that the prayer “is hardly a charm” (p. 203), but then claimed that the “person who uses the charm thereby becomes ‘an angel upon earth,’ becomes ‘immortal,’ and receives the ‘gift’ ” (p. 203). But the prayer does not describe how or when the one who recites the prayer became an “angel”—perhaps he was imbued with this state as a gift (vs. 19) from saying prayers or incantations repeatedly (see vs. 20). It is possible that the author claims to be immortal like Jacob—who is “an angel of God” according to the Prayer of Joseph—and, hence, prays this prayer because he is “immortal.” The prayer, therefore, seems to be, as J. Z. Smith says above, an “expression of this salvation on the part of the individual believer.”

M. Simon,<sup>3</sup> who was followed by Goodenough,<sup>4</sup> claimed that Jewish magic has three main characteristics: great respect for Hebrew, which is usually not understood but considered to be endowed with magical powers; a feeling for the efficacious power of the name; and a preoccupation with angels. Only two of these features characterize the Prayer of Jacob. In verse 9, for example, there is a string of Hebrew names that probably were not clearly comprehended: “God, Abaōth, Abrathiaōth, [Sa]ba[ōth, A]dōnai . . .” This one verse illustrates the first two features: misunderstood Hebrew and a sense of the power of the name. A good example of at least the second of these features is verse 15: “He who has the secret name Sabaōth, . . . God of gods; amen, amen.” The third characteristic is not typical of the Prayer of Jacob; this prayer holds the idea that the “Lord God of the Hebrews” is the one who answers prayers (vss. 13f.), addresses petitions directly to him (vss. 17–19), and twice celebrates him as the “Creator” or “God of the angels and archangels” (vss. 2, 7). The author is preoccupied with God, not angels. These concepts are as close to Jewish traditions preserved in the Old Testament and early Jewish literature as they are far from the ideas typical of the magical charms, such as the very long Coptic prayer,<sup>5</sup> which seems to be a prayer to Gabriel, the Angel of Righteousness, which states that Arnael presides over the hearing of prayers (II), and which repeatedly calls to Gabriel to “hearken unto me” and “come to me” in order to be “for me, Administrator and help . . .” (V, cf. XII, XVIII, XX). In contrast to the Prayer of Jacob, this charm contains the idea that the angels can be forced through magical incantations to come to man in order to protect and serve him. Religion and magic, as the above excerpts tend to demonstrate, are not essentially opposites, but there is a fundamental difference between them; as M. P. Nilsson argued,<sup>6</sup> the contrast seems to be that religion attempts to obtain (or receive) results through willful benevolence and grace, while magic seeks to obtain them through coercion.

<sup>2</sup> E. R. Goodenough, Jewish Symbols in the Greco-Roman Period (New York, 1953) vol. 2, p. 204.

<sup>3</sup> M. Simon, Verus Israel: Étude sur les relations entre Chrétiens et Juifs dans l'Empire romain (135–425) (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome 166; Paris, 1948) pp. 399–404. Extremely valuable insights on Jewish “Magic and Miracle” and on “The Power of the Divine Name” are found in chs. 6 and 7 of E. E. Urbach's The Sages: Their Concepts and Beliefs, trans. I. Abrahams (Jerusalem, 1975) pp. 97–134. Urbach has influenced my thinking on this subject; I wish to express my debt to him.

<sup>4</sup> Goodenough, Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 161.

<sup>5</sup> For bibliographical data regarding text and studies by F. Rossi, E. Amélineau, and U. F. Kropp see Goodenough, Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 174; for ET see ibid., pp. 174–88.

<sup>6</sup> M. P. Nilsson, Opuscula Selecta (Lund, 1960) vol. 3, pp. 269f.

Relation to other books

The prayer is similar to other Greek-Egyptian magical papyri, as one would expect from the pervasive emphasis on God's power and on him as the source of all power (see especially vs. 11). The fourth- or fifth-century papyrus that precedes this prayer in Preisendanz's second volume of Papyri Graecae Magicae (= PGM) also mentions Iao and Sabaoth and adds the names "Michael" and "Gabriel." The Jewish amulet, Cairo 10434 (PGM XXV.c), likewise comes from Cairo and mentions the name "Zabaoth"; it is very brief, consisting only of the following proclamation: "Holy (is) the Lord Zabaōt (hagios kurios Zabaōt)."<sup>7</sup> There are numerous other parallels with the Jewish magical papyri, such as the Diadem of Moses (PGM VII, vol. 2, p. 28) and the so-called Eighth Book of Moses (PGM XIII, vol. 2, pp. 86–131).

The concept of the power of God's name in the Jewish magical papyri is different from the biblical view (viz. Ex 3:13–15, Acts 4:9f.). In the Bible and in almost all Jewish apocryphal writings—notably in 1 Enoch 69:14, Jubilees 36:7, Prayer of Manasseh, and Artapanus—God's name is considered known, holy, revered, and often ineffable (see Josephus, Ant 2.275; Jerome, Psalms VIII). The name was powerful because God was behind it.

In the magical papyri the divine name is considered secret and itself full of efficacious powers. In the biblical and apocryphal writings, the ruling idea is that by calling God's name he would answer; but the pseudepigrapha do contain the tradition that God's name is unknown to men: "And I praised the One who is not named and is unique, who dwells in the heavens, whose name is unknown to all flesh . . ." (Ascens 7:37, cf. 1:7, 8:7). In the magical papyri the name was the essential part of a formula by which the individual could manipulate the gods and powers to grant immediately the expressed wish. Totally unibiblical is the individual's commands to God or the gods, and the orders to supply the request "at once" (see e.g. PGM XVIII.b, vol. 2, p. 141, ll. 6f. "ēdē ēdē, tachū, tachū").<sup>7</sup>

The parallels with gnostic documents are very impressive (see the nn. to the translation). Most significant are the parallels with On the Origin of the World (II, 5) at 101, in which the androgynous beings are celebrated, notably Yaldabaoth, whose son is "called 'Yao,' his feminine name is 'lordship.' Sabaoth's feminine name is 'divinity.' Adoniaos' feminine name is 'kingship.'"<sup>8</sup> In this excerpt and in the Prayer of Jacob are the names "Yao" (II, 5) or "Iao" (PrJac), "Sabaoth" (identical in both), "Adoniaos" (II, 5), or "[A]donai" (PrJac). The relationship does not appear direct in either direction; and both seem to be independently influenced by Jewish traditions.<sup>9</sup>

Noteworthy is another interesting parallel between the Prayer of Jacob and a Jewish magical prayer preserved in a fifth-century papyrus (PGM XXXV, vol. 2, p. 161, ll. 8f.), which contains the following: "I call upon you, he who sits upon the snow, Telzē; I call upon you, Edanōth, who (is) upon the sea; I call upon you, Saecechel, who (is) upon the serpents." This prayer is clearly Jewish; it refers to "the god of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob" (l. 14). Somewhat similarly to many pseudepigrapha, it refers to six heavens and names the angels who rule over each of them (ll. 3–7). The Prayer of Jacob shares with this anonymous prayer the repeated invocations, the concept of a deity sitting upon the serpents (see v. 8), and the reference to snow (v. 16).

The Prayer of Jacob should neither be branded gnostic nor be categorized as another <sup>7</sup> P. Brown argues persuasively that the period from "around A.D. 300 to 600" is a "recognizable whole" and that "it is far from certain that there was any absolute increase in fear of sorcery or in sorcery practices" during this period: "All that can be said is that, in the fourth century A.D., we happen to know more about sorcery because we are told more about it . . ." (p. 122). He aptly defines sorcerer: "the sorcerer is a man who enjoys power over the demons, even over the gods. He can threaten the gods . . ." (p. 139). Brown has presented a brilliant study of the "social context" of the phenomenon. See his Religion and Society in the Age of Saint Augustine (London, 1972).

<sup>8</sup> Translation by H.-G. Bethge and O. S. Wintermute in J. M. Robinson, ed., The Nag Hammadi Library in English (New York, London, 1977) p. 164. It is significant that J. Z. Smith (see his contribution above) sees parallels between the PrJos and On the Origin of the World.

<sup>9</sup> G. Scholem (EncyJud, vol. 11, col. 1388) claimed (and I think rightly) that in "the second century Jewish converts to Christianity apparently conveyed different aspects of Merkabah mysticism to Christian Gnostics." Also see Scholem's Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism (New York, 1941) especially pp. 40–79.

magical charm. It is markedly different than either of these genres. There is nothing peculiarly gnostic about it. It is not a charm; and it is impressively different from the manipulative words and commands addressed to God (or gods; cf. PGM XXXV, vol. 2, p. 162, ll. 26f.: "Quick, quick, for I adjure (by oath) you, Iaō, Sabaōth . . .") and the shallow theology and request for beauty, riches, and honor typical of some charms (see PGM XXII.a, vol. 2, pp. 147f., ll. 15–26).

The Prayer of Jacob contains a request for wisdom and a heart filled with good things. And, as stated above, it addresses to God himself the petition for these gifts. This plea is reminiscent of Solomon's request (see 1Kgs 3). Noticeably absent, however, is the concept of contrition and plea for forgiveness that is the main characteristic of the Prayer of Manasseh.

The Prayer of Jacob should be added to the documents in the Pseudepigrapha. It is Jewish, pseudepigraphical, related to the traditions in the Prayer of Joseph and other pseudepigrapha, and probably dates from the same historical period as the later pseudepigrapha. Its inclusion herein also informs the reader of the significant ideas and perspectives found in many of the Jewish magical texts, such as the possibly third-century document titled "The Apocryphal Book of Moses. (Which) Concerns the Great Name."<sup>10</sup> The inclusion of the Prayer of Jacob draws attention to the many unexplored areas of similarity among the pseudepigrapha, gnostic documents, and Jewish magical texts.

The concept in verse 16, that God is upon the stars, brings forth snow, and passes through the stars and planets, recalls similarities in apocalyptic documents, especially 1 and 2 Enoch. The idea in the same verse that God makes the heavenly bodies "run in every way" by his creating power is reminiscent of Ode of Solomon 16:13 ("And created things run according to their courses"), Ecclesiasticus 16:26–28, 2 Baruch 48:9, 1 Enoch 2:1, 5:2, and Psalm of Solomon 18:12–14.

The concept of being like an angel on earth and possessing immortality in verse 19 is reminiscent of some passages in the Dead Sea Scrolls<sup>11</sup> and the Odes of Solomon,<sup>12</sup> and when it is linked with the mention of Jacob (see vs. 20) there are noteworthy parallels with other writings,<sup>13</sup> especially the Prayer of Joseph: "I, Jacob, who is speaking to you, am also Israel, an angel of God, and a ruling spirit."<sup>14</sup>

Introduction to translation

In the following translation<sup>15</sup> of the Prayer of Jacob, I have aimed at an idiomatic translation; when necessary a literal sense or alternate interpretation is provided in the notes. My attempts to obtain a photograph of the papyrus have not been successful; I have been dependent on Preisendanz's observations, suggested readings, and restorations. Unfortunately these have been confusing in some places. I do not note below when letters are not clear to him, and have not translated his tiny, insignificant Greek words. I also do not follow the divisions in the papyrus; to do so would have reduced the attractiveness of an idiomatic translation. As elsewhere, parentheses denote words added for good English sense; brackets circumscribe restorations.

<sup>10</sup> PGM XIII, ll. 131f., vol. 2, p. 120. See C. Leemans, "Excerpta ex Libris Apocryphis Moïsis," Papyri Graeci Musei Antiquarii Publici Lugduni-Batavi (Leiden, 1885) pp. 77–198 [Gk. text, Lat. translation and nn.]; A. Dieterich, Abraxas: Studien zur Religionsgeschichte des Spättern Altertums (Usener FS; Leipzig, 1891), pp. 167–205; and PGM, vol. 2, pp. 86–131. The Jewish mystical elements in the Pistis Sophia (especially Book 5) are sometimes similar to those in PrJac.

<sup>11</sup> The Qumran community considered itself to be an antechamber of heaven and that the elect (the Essenes) formed with the angels one lot (cf. IQH 6.13; cf. IQH 3.21f., 4.24f.).

<sup>12</sup> See my contribution on the OdesSol herein; note especially Ode 3:7f.: "I have been united (to him) . . . he who is joined to him who is immortal./truly will be immortal."

<sup>13</sup> Although A. Böhlig does not mention the PrJac, he does draw attention to numerous parallels to the concept of Jacob as an angel, as in PrJos, in gnostic and Manichean documents; cf. his "Jakob als Engel in Gnostizismus und Manichäismus," Erkenntnisse und Meinungen, ed. G. Wiessner (Göttinger Orientforschungen 17; Wiesbaden, 1978) pp. 1–14. Also see T. Schneider, "Der Engel Jakob bei Mani," ZNW 33 (1934) 218f.; the contribution above on PrJos by J. Z. Smith; and the magical texts published by Leemans, Papyri Graeci, vol. 2 (especially V.8.16; 9.7; W.18.23; 22.28).

<sup>14</sup> Fragment A, 1, translated by J. Z. Smith and published herein. Another interesting parallel, which is related to Gen 32:22–32, is found in PRE 37: "And (the angel) called his name Israel like his own name, for his own name was called Israel" (ed. Friedlander, p. 282).

<sup>15</sup> Goodenough earlier presented a "free" translation (Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 203). I have noted the places in which our translations differ.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, p. 139.

PRAYER OF JACOB

Goodenough, E. R. "Charms in Judaism," Jewish Symbols in the Greco-Roman Period. Bollingen Series 37; New York, 1953; vol. 2, pp. 161–207.

Preisendanz, K. L., ed. Papyri Graecae Magicae: Die griechischen Zauberpapyri. Leipzig, Berlin, 1931; 2nd revised edition by A. Henrichs, 1974; vol. 2, pp. 148f. (= PGM XXII. b).

JEWISH MAGIC

Blau, L. Das altjüdische Zauberwesen. Berlin, 1914<sup>2</sup>.

Dieterich, A. Abraxas: Studien zur Religionsgeschichte des Späteren Altertums. (Usener FS). Leipzig, 1891.

Eitrem, S. Orakel und Mysterien am Ausgang der Antike. Albae vigilae 5; Zürich, 1947.

Festugière, A. M. J. "La Valeur religieuse des papyrus magiques," in L'Idéal religieux des grecs et de l'Évangile. Paris, 1932; pp. 281–328.

Ganschietz, R. "Jao," Pauly-Wissowa, vol. 9 (1914), cols. 698–721.

Hopfner, T. Griechisch-ägyptischer Offenbarungszauber, 2 vols. Studien zur Paleographie und Papyruskunde 21 & 23; Leipzig, 1921–1924.

———. "Mageia," Pauly-Wissowa, vol. 14 (1928) cols. 301–93.

Nilsson, M. P. Geschichte der griechischen Religion. Handbuch der Altertumswissenschaft 5.2; 1961<sup>2</sup>.

———. "Die Religion in den griechischen Zauberpapyri," in Opuscula Selecta. Skrifter Utgivna av Svenska Institutet i Athen 8, 2.3; Lund, 1960; vol. 3, pp. 129–66, see especially p. 134. (Nilsson, p. 137, correctly stated that "das Gebet Jakobs . . . sehr stark jüdisch gefärbt sind. . .")

Nock, A. D. "Greek Magical Papyri," in Essays on Religion and the Ancient World. Oxford, 1972; vol. 1, pp. 176–94, see especially section 6.

Trachtenberg, J. Jewish Magic and Superstition: A Study in Folk Religion. New York, 1939.

PRAYER OF JACOB<sup>a</sup>Preisendanz
XXII. b.

- (1) 1 Father of (the) Patria[rch]s,
Father of al[l] (things),<sup>b</sup> [Fathe]r of (the) powe[rs of the co]sm[os];
- 2 Cr[e]ato[r of a]ll[ . . . ],
Creator of the angels and archang[e]ll[s],
the C[r]eator of (the) re[deeming] nam[es];<sup>c</sup>
- 3 I invoke you,
- 4 O Father of powe[r]s altogether,
Father of the [wh]ole [co]s[m]os
(5) [and of] || all creation,<sup>d</sup> both the inhabited and uninhabite[d], to whom the] ch[erubim are sub]j[e]c[t]e[d];<sup>e</sup>
- 5 He who showed favor to<sup>f</sup> [Ab]raham
by [giving the] kingd[om to him].
- 6 He[a]r me,
- 7 (You) the God o[f the p]owers,
the G[od of ang]els a[nd a]r[cha]ngels,
ki[ng . . .];<sup>g</sup>
- (10) 8 || You<sup>h</sup> who s[i]t upon (the) mountain of h[o]ly [S]inaios; . . .<sup>i</sup>

Gen 15:18

a. The title is restored from the last line of the Gk.

b. Or "(the) universe." See Lampe, p. 950. The concept of God as Father, the Creator—an association not typical of the OT in which Father is linked with personal care (cf. G. Schrenk, TDNT, vol. 5, pp. 978–82)—is an emphasis by Plato (poiētēs kai patēr tou pantos, Timaeus 28C) that is inherited and used frequently by Justin (cf. E. F. Osborn, "The God and Father of All," Justin Martyr [Beiträge zur historischen Theologie 47; Tübingen, 1973; pp. 17–27]).

c. The concept is in biblical and apocryphal literature but not in the magical papyri.

d. Gk.: [kai tēs] hōlēs geneōs. The Gk. geneōs can mean "beginning, production, creation, race, age." Goodenough (Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 203) rendered the phrase freely: "and of everything which has come into being."

e. Gk. [hup]estao[i hoi] can mean "those shrinking before," "those holding in awe," but LSJM (p. 1895) shows that the verb also means "to be subject to." Goodenough (Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 203) translated the phrase similarly: "to whom the cherubim are subject."

f. The Gk. charizō, "to show favor to," is used in a similar fashion in ApEzra 1:13: "Lord, what favor will you show the righteous (kurie, tous dikaios ti charizeis)?" See K. Tischendorf, Apoc- alypses Apocryphae (Leipzig, 1866; repr. Hildesheim, 1966) p. 25.

g. It is impossible to discern how much text is lost. Between the lacunae are portions of voces magicae (magical incantations).

h. Cf. the translation of ho poiēsas in WisSol 9:1 and the discussion of this Gk. form in E. Norden, Agnostos Theos: Untersuchungen zur Formgeschichte Religiöser Rede (Leipzig, Berlin, 1913) pp. 201–7.

i. This statement is significant, because Jews usually depicted Jerusalem, not Sinai, as the axis mundi. Jub 8:19 refers to three holy places: the Garden of Eden, Mount Sinai, and Mount Zion (see Jub 1:2, 28). Ezek 38:12 calls Jerusalem "the navel of the earth." 1En 26:1 portrays Jerusalem as both the middle of the earth and the "holy mountain" (see also LetAris 83). For a recent discussion of the identification of Jerusalem with a "world mountain" and the "navel of the world," see B. S. Childs, Myth and Reality in the Old Testament (SBT 27; London, 1960; pp. 83–93) and S. Terrien, "The Omphalos Myth and Hebrew Religion" (VT 29 [1970] 317–38). For a severe critique of Childs and Terrien, see S. Talmon, "The 'Navel of the Earth' and the Comparative Method" (in Scripture in History & Theology: Essays in Honor of J. Coert Rylaarsdam, eds. A. L. Merrill and T. W. Overholt; Pittsburgh, 1977;

[you] who sit upon the s[e]a, . . .<sup>j</sup>
 you who sit [upon] the s[er]pen[t] gods,<sup>k</sup>
 the [God who s]i[t]s [upon the s]un, laō,<sup>l</sup>
 you who si[t] upon . . .<sup>m</sup>
 you who [si]t [u]pon th[e . . .] . . . Abriël, Louël<sup>n</sup> [. . . t]he [r]esting place of (the) che[r]u[b]i[m . . . ]<sup>o</sup>
 || f[o]r ever and e[ve]r.

(15)

9 God Abaōth, Abrathiaōth,<sup>p</sup> [Sa]ba[ōth],<sup>q</sup> A[dōnai],<sup>r</sup> astra<sup>s</sup> . . .
 the L[or]d of all (things).

10 I summon you,<sup>t</sup>

pp. 243–68). A tradition in rabbinic literature states that God's Shekinah rests upon the sanctuary (in Jerusalem; see NumR Naso 13.6). Other rabbinic traditions deny that God came down upon Mount Sinai in order to speak with Moses (cf. viz. Mekilta Bahodesh, Yitro, §4, p. 216, as edited by H. S. Horowitz). PRE, however, which describes the descents of God to earth, states that God's "sixth descent was when He came down on Sinai . . ." (41; ed. Friedlander, p. 318). The translation above is followed by lacunae and voces magicae.

j. Again it is difficult to be certain how much of the text is missing; it contains portions of voces magicae.

k. Goodenough (Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 203): "upon the serpent-formed gods."

l. Cf. "Yao" in Apocryphon of John (II,1.11 and 12) and in On the Origin of the World (II,5.101). Other proper names also appearing in the Nag Hammadi Codices will be noted below.

The Gk. could be translated "upon the Sun-god laō" or "upon Hēlios laō"; cf. the cosmic prayers that call upon "Helios, Father of the world," and begin "Hail Helios, hail thou God in the heavens" (see Goodenough, Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, pp. 194, 199f.). Goodenough presented (p. 203) a translation similar to ours: "God [who sittest upon the s]un, laō"; and cautioned that the "text is too bad here to make discussion of the matter valuable." Preisendanz (PGM, vol. 2, p. 148): "[Gott, der sitzt auf] dem Hēlios laō (the latter in small print)."

laō is another name for yhw, the abbreviated Heb. name for God (cf. Ganschietz in Pauly-Wissowa, vol. 9 [1914] cols. 698–721 and Urbach, Sages, p. 126). laō, as Jerome (in Psalms VIII) seems to explain, could be pronounced "Yaho," and would accurately represent the Heb. yhw, which is a well-known contracted form of Yahweh, and which "seems as definitely to indicate the Jewish God as the name Osiris does the Egyptian" (Goodenough, Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 192). Simon (Verus Israel, p. 400, cf. p. 407) suggests that laō represents yhw. The name "laō" lost its Heb. roots and was used by pagans such as Macrobius in the fifth century (cf. Goodenough, Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 207). The famous anguipede (cf. Goodenough, Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, pp. 245–58) has been identified recently as the god laō, yhw, by M. Philonenko in "L'Anguipède alec-torocéphale et le dieu laō," Académie des inscrip- tions & belles-lettres (1979) 297–304. In the Eighth Book of Moses (especially ll. 1020–22 and 1045f.) laō is clearly identified with the great God in heaven. In the Pistis Sophia, however, laō is defined mystically in terms of the Gk. letters (see Book 5).

m. This expression is followed by a series of lacunae and voces magicae. Goodenough (Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 203) forgot to translate ho [kathēm] en [os]; he translated only the first of the two "He (= you) who sit(s) upon."

n. These names are rare in the magical papyri. Abriël appears only here and in VII, 978; Louël occurs only here. They are both Semitic names for angels, but are not mentioned in the lists of angels' names in IEn 6:7f. and in IEn 69:1–3, and they are not cited in the expanded angelology of 3En. Etymologies are frequently nonexistent for the magical names; perhaps Abriël is a contraction of Heb. 'abbirē'el, which means "God's mighty one," and perhaps Louël is a Gk. rendering of Heb. lō'el (LXX daouël), which means "belonging to God."
 o. In the lacuna there are portions of voces magicae.

p. These two names occur frequently in the magical papyri; see Preisendanz (PGM, vol. 3, p. 236).

q. This name, "Sabaoth," appears also in many of the Nag Hammadi Codices; viz. it is in the Apocryphon of John, the Hypostasis of the Archons, On the Origin of the World, and the Testimony of Truth. It is also one of the most popular names in the magical papyri (see Preisendanz, PGM, vol. 3, pp. 229f.), and often is combined with laō (see Goodenough, Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, pp. 166, 172f., 176f., 179–81, 186, 196, 198–201).

r. This proper name could refer to the Gk.-Egyptian god Adonaios; but probably it is the Heb. substitute for the tetragrammaton (yhw). Cf. the name "Adonaios" in the Nag Hammadi Codices; especially in On the Origin of the World. The name is popular primarily in the magical papyri; see Preisendanz (PGM, vol. 3, p. 213f.).

s. Astra means "stars"; Goodenough (Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 203) did not represent the word; but it is clear in Preisendanz. It is difficult to be certain how much of this fragile text is lost; but around the lacunae are portions of voces magicae.

t. Goodenough (Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 203) also joined this injunction with the following ll.

- 11 (You who) give power o[ver (the) ch]as[m]u (to those) above and those below and those under the earth;<sup>v</sup>
- 12 Hear the one who [ha]s [the] prayer.<sup>w</sup>
- 13 The Lord God of the Hebrews, Epa[g]aēl, . . .<sup>x</sup>
of whom (is) [the] everlasting<sup>y</sup> power, [Elō]ēl, Souēl.<sup>z</sup>
- 14 (20) Make straight<sup>a2</sup> the one who has [th]e prayer [fro]m the rac[e] of Israel [a]nd those || who have received favor<sup>b2</sup> from you, God of gods.
- 15 He who has the secret name Sabaōth<sup>c2</sup> . . .
God of gods; amen, amen.
- 16 [He] who is upon (the) stars abo[v]e (the) ages,
who brings forth snow,<sup>d2</sup>
a[nd] who always passes throu[g]h the stars and pla[n]ets,<sup>e2</sup> [and makes] (them) run in every way<sup>f2</sup> by your creating (power).<sup>g2</sup>
- 17 Fill me with wisdom,<sup>h2</sup>
empow[er] me, Lord;
- 18 Fill my heart with good things, Lord;

u. The underworld is denoted by [ch]as[ma]tos (cf. e.g. Lk 16:26). In PGM IV.2536 (vol. 2, p. 153) Tartarus is defined as chasma phaeinon: "the bright (or fiery) chasm." According to PGM XXV.3 (vol. 2, p. 160) Buthath is said to sit (or rule over) the abyss: ho kathēmenos epi tēs abus[s]ou. According to 1En 20:2 Uriel is the angel who is in charge of Tartarus. 1En 90:24–27 describes the place of destruction as the "fiery abyss." In GkApEzra 1:9 it is said that "sinners . . . are for fiery Gehenna (eis tēn geennan tou puros)." In 4Mac 9:8 the tyrant is told he will suffer "eternal torture by fire (aiōnion basanon dia puros)."

v. The Gk. syntax is odd. The author is apparently thinking about a universe of three tiers. Goodenough (Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 203) translated the passage freely: "to the things above, upon, and beneath the earth." Cf. Phil 2:10; Rev 5:13.

w. Gk. [tēn euchēn, euchē means "prayer, oath." Goodenough (Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 203) translated the form as "the curse." It is difficult to understand the reason for Goodenough's translation, since he rightly claimed that the "object of this prayer, for it is hardly a charm, is a deeply spiritual one . . ." (p. 203). See n. z.

x. Epa[g]aēl appears only here in the magical papyri. Goodenough (Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 203) broke his habit of not representing words in small type in Preisendanz; he included "alamn."

y. According to Preisendanz's text, this word, aeoas, is very unclear.

z. These are two Semitic names and are found only here in the magical papyri. It is tempting to suggest the second name is Gk. for "su ēl" or "you (in Gk.) are (understood) God (the Semitic proper name)." The l. would then mean "God of God, you (are) God." The harmony with vss. 14b and 15b is attractive.

a2. Gk.: diorthōson, from diorthoō, which means "to make quite straight, set right, amend"; the verb has a medical or therapeutic meaning. Goodenough (Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 203): "Keep straight him who has the charm." The noun is again [tēn euchēn]; which Goodenough had earlier translated as "curse" (see n. w).

b2. See n. f.

c2. See n. q.

d2. The syntax is difficult. Another vaguely possible interpretation: "[He] who brings forth snow upon (the) stars abo[v]e (the) ages."

e2. Lit. "the fixed and wandering s[ta]rs"; but these are technical terms.

f2. Gk.: ta panta is here taken to be an accusative of specification.

g2. The Gk. is difficult. Another possible rendering is "[and make] (them) pursue everything in your creation." P. Pokorný suggested to me another possible rendering: "and who makes the stars and planets run the universe by your creating (power)." A similar translation was offered by Goodenough (Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 203): "and maketh the fixed stars and planets marshall all things by thy creative power." He also added the n. "This passage is difficult." See above discussion under "Relation to other books."

h2. Gk.: sophias; see 1Kgs 3:9; cf. LXX 5:9.

- 19 As an ear[th]ly angel,<sup>i2</sup>
 (25) as || [hav]ing become immortal,<sup>j2</sup>
 as having recei[ved] the gift which (is) from [yo]u, [a]men. amen.
- 20 [S]ay [the p]r[a]ly[e]r o[f] Jacob<sup>k2</sup> seven times to (the)
 Nor[th] and E[a]st.

i2. The hōs probably should not be taken as a demonstrative and the l. understood as a petition: "so that (I might become) an ear[th]ly angel." Three times in vs. 19 there is a hōs that begins a line; the first of these may be translated either "as (you empower) an ear[th]ly angel" or "as (having become) an ear[th]ly angel." The latter possibility seems preferable, because of the two following aorists (probably dramatic aorists): having become immortal and having received the gift. The Qumran literature (viz. IQH 3.21f.; 4.24f.; 6.13; 3.22f.; IQS 11.7f.; IQSb 4.25), many pseudepigrapha (especially PrJos A, 2En 30:8–11 A, HistRech 7; cf. JosAsen 20:6, OdesSol 3:7f., TSol 22), the Cologne Mani Codex 51:1ff. (ApSethel: kai egenomēn hōs heis tōn megistōn aggelōn), and other Jewish inspired writings (e.g. Book of Adam and Eve, ed. C. S. Malan, Bk. 1, ch. 10) demonstrate that Jews could have thought of a righteous person on earth becoming an angel and asking for wisdom and power.

j2. Goodenough (Jewish Symbols, vol. 2, p. 203): "because I am an angel upon earth, because I have become immortal."

k2. In vs. 5 [Abr]aham is mentioned and here

Jacob's name is expressed. It is noteworthy that Isaac's name never appears. One might have expected it; the Patria[rch]s, presumably Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (see the contribution herein on the Testaments of the Three Patriarchs), are uppermost in the mind of the author, since they are mentioned in the very first l. of vs. 1. As the name of God, so the ranks of the Patriarchs—Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob—were assumed to possess magical powers (cf. e.g. PGM VII, ll. 314f. [vol. 2, p. 14]; XIII, l. 976, especially 817 [vol. 2, p. 128]; and Simon, Verus Israel, p. 401). It is only vaguely possible (and I would think improbable; see n. 1) that laō in vs. 8 denotes Isaac even though Simon (Verus Israel, p. 407) seems to be correct in stating that the phrase ton theon tou Abraam kai tou laō kai tou lakou means "the God of Abraham, and of Isaac [sic], and of Jacob." Also see J. Z. Smith's comments above, in his contribution on PrJos, n. 9. In the opening of PrJos, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are said to predate creation (cf. Fragment A 1–3). As stated above, the magical papyri use Heb. names without understanding them or even correctly pronouncing and transliterating them.

ODES OF SOLOMON

(Late First to Early Second Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY J. H. CHARLESWORTH

During the early years of this century, J. Rendel Harris discovered among some manuscripts, which had been randomly placed in a corner of his office,<sup>1</sup> a hymnbook that he soon was to identify as the long-lost Odes of Solomon.<sup>2</sup> The Odes were known previously only because of notations in lists of apocryphal books, excerpts in the Coptic Pistis Sophia, and from a Latin quotation by Lactantius. Subsequent discoveries of another Syriac manuscript<sup>3</sup> and a Greek version of Ode 11,<sup>4</sup> and intensive research on this document, convinced many scholars that the Odes are not gnostic<sup>5</sup> but a collection of very early Christian hymns. They are so Jewish in tone and perspective that scholars from the beginning until the present have been persuaded, incorrectly, that they are essentially Jewish.<sup>6</sup> In line with the consensus that these Odes are Christian<sup>7</sup> is the observation that the key characteristic in these hymns is a joyous tone of thanksgiving for the advent of the Messiah who had been promised (cf. Ode 7:1-6; 41:3-7) and for the present experience of eternal life and love from and for the Beloved (3:1-9; 11:1-24; 23:1-3; 26:1-7; 40:1-6).

Texts

In addition to the Harris manuscript (H), which is now Cod. Syr. 9 in the John Rylands University Library of Manchester, England, the Odes are preserved only in Codex Nitriensis (N), which is recorded in the British Museum as B.M. Add. 14538, in Bodmer Papyrus XI (G), which is housed in the Bibliothèque Bodmer in Geneva, and in quotations in the Coptic Codex Askewianus (C), which is shelved in the British Museum and cataloged as MS. Add. 5114. The Odes are not extant in full in any manuscript; Ode 2, the beginning of Ode 3, and perhaps portions of Ode 1 are still lost. Manuscript H is mutilated at the beginning and preserves only Odes 3:1b-42:20; N preserves only Odes 17:7-42:20, G only Ode 11:1-24;

<sup>1</sup> J. R. Harris, "An Early Christian Hymn-Book," Contemporary Review 95 (1909) 414-28. Harris' excitement as described by him is quoted in J. H. Charlesworth, The Odes of Solomon (Oxford, 1973) pp. 4f.

<sup>2</sup> Harris published the editio princeps in the year in which he discovered the Odes: The Odes and Psalms of Solomon: Now First Published from the Syriac Version (Cambridge, 1909).

<sup>3</sup> Found in the BM by F. C. Burkitt and announced in his "A New MS of the Odes of Solomon," JTS 13 (1912) 372-85.

<sup>4</sup> M. Testuz (ed.), Papyrus Bodmer X-XII (Geneva, 1959).

<sup>5</sup> See Charlesworth, "The Odes of Solomon—Not Gnostic," CBQ 31 (1969) 357-69; H. Chadwick, "Some Reflections on the Character and Theology of the Odes of Solomon," Kyriakon [Quasten Festschrift], vol. 1, pp. 266-70; and E. Yamauchi, Pre-Christian Gnosticism: A Survey of the Proposed Evidences (Grand Rapids, Mich., 1973) pp. 91-94.

<sup>6</sup> A. Harnack claimed the Odes are a Jewish hymnbook from the time of Jesus that was interpolated around A.D. 100 by a Christian. See his and J. Flemming's Ein jüdisch-christliches Psalmbuch aus dem ersten Jahrhundert (TU 35.4; Leipzig, 1910). More extreme are the positions of A. Menzies, who thought the Odes are the "Psalms of the Proselytes" ("The Odes of Solomon," Interpreter [London] 7 [1910] 7-22) and M. Testuz, who claimed that they were composed by an Essene (Papyrus Bodmer VII-IX, p. 58).

<sup>7</sup> J. A. Emerton considers the debate closed: "The Odes are plainly Christian in their present form." "Notes on Some Passages in the Odes of Solomon," JTS N.S. 28 (1977) 507-19.

and C only quotations from Odes 5:1–11; 1:1–5; 6:8–18; 25:1–12; 22:1–12. Manuscripts H and N are respectively from the fifteenth and tenth centuries; the Greek papyrus from the third; and the Coptic manuscript from the fourth century.

Original language and date

Intensive research has been devoted to the attempt to discover the original language in which these Odes were composed. Some scholars have thought that the original language is Greek,<sup>8</sup> others that it is Hebrew;<sup>9</sup> and Father J. Carmignac has recently attempted to show that the Odes were composed in a kind of Qumran Hebrew.<sup>10</sup> It is probable, however, that they were composed in Syriac (or Aram.), as demonstrated in the important commentary by J. R. Harris and A. Mingana,<sup>11</sup> and by recent publications by A. Vööbus,<sup>12</sup> J. A. Emerton,<sup>13</sup> and myself.<sup>14</sup> Odes 7:10 and 9:8f. are apparently based on the Septuagint of Psalms 50:3 [H 51:1] and 20:4 [H 21:3] but this dependence cannot be used as an argument for a Greek original; we now have ample evidence that the Septuagint was used in communities that were very conservative and Semitic as proved, for example, by the discovery of fragments from several copies of the Septuagint among the Dead Sea Scrolls.<sup>15</sup> Parallels with gnostic literature are, of course, not indicative that the Odes were composed in Greek because the gnostics used and inherited many documents that were originally composed in Syriac and other Semitic languages. The only surviving witness to a Greek version, namely the Bodmer Papyrus XI, shows signs of being translated from a Semitic language and does not appear to be either good Greek or to have been composed in Greek. Most importantly the attractive quality of the extant Syriac is indicative that Syriac is probably the original language. Of special note is the play on words possible only in Syriac (cf. Ode 19:9 and n.) and the pervasive assonance, metrical scheme, and rhythm in the Syriac. Also numerous variants between the extant versions are frequently explained by the assumption of a Syriac tradition of transmission; note for example 5:2 and 23:4 in which maryâ was confused with m'raimâ, 22:6 in which brk was mistaken for krk, and 25:8 in which rahmâ was confused with rûhâ.

Shortly after the discovery of the Odes, A. Harnack argued that behind Christian editorial additions lies an early pre-Christian Jewish hymnbook.<sup>16</sup> J. Bernard rejected Harnack's hypothesis and claimed that the Odes are a Christian hymnbook from the latter part of the second century A.D.<sup>17</sup> After a decade of study and debate, Harris and Mingana assigned the Odes to the first century A.D.<sup>18</sup> Despite R. Bultmann's extensive influence and use of the Odes in understanding the background of Johannine theology,<sup>19</sup> many German scholars have <sup>8</sup> In the first two of his three editions Harris thought Gk. to be the original language. Cf. editio princeps, pp. 36f., 46f. Since the recovery of one ode in Gk. some scholars have claimed that Gk. is the original language. See Testuz in Papyrus Bodmer X–XII, p. 3; and M. Philonenko in "Conjecture sur un verset de la onzième Ode de Salomon," ZNW 53 (1962) 264. W. Frankenberg, so convinced that Gk. is the original language, translated the Odes into Gk. Cf. Das Verständnis der Oden Salomos (BZAW 21; Giessen, 1911).

<sup>9</sup> H. Grimme, persuaded that Heb. is the original language, translated the Odes into Heb. Cf. Die Oden Salomos: Syrisch-Hebräisch-Deutsch (Heidelberg, 1911).

<sup>10</sup> Cf. J. Carmignac in "Les Affinités qumrâniennes de la onzième Ode de Salomon," RQ 3 (1961) 71–102; and in "Recherches sur la langue originelle des Odes de Salomon," RQ 4 (1963) 429–32.

<sup>11</sup> The Odes and Psalms of Solomon, especially vol. 2, p. 165.

<sup>12</sup> "Neues Licht zur Frage der Originalsprache der Oden Salomos," Le Muséon 75 (1962) 275–90.

<sup>13</sup> "Some Problems of Text and Language in the Odes of Solomon," JTS N.S. 18 (1967) 372–406.

<sup>14</sup> A Critical Examination of the Odes of Solomon: Identification, Text, Original Language, Date (Duke Ph.D., 1967) especially pp. 67–138. Charlesworth, "Paronomasia and Assonance in the Syriac Text of the Odes of Solomon," Semiotics [Pretoria] 1 (1970) 12–26.

<sup>15</sup> Cf. F. M. Cross, Jr., The Ancient Library of Qumran and Modern Biblical Studies (Garden City, N.Y. 1961) p. 28.

<sup>16</sup> Harnack, Ein jüdisch-christliches Psalmbuch. Harnack later rejected his own hypothesis in favor of Harris and Mingana's conclusion. Cf. Harnack's review of their edition in TLZ 46 (1921) cols. 6f. I am grateful to Dr. M. Latke for discussions on this issue.

<sup>17</sup> J. H. Bernard, The Odes of Solomon, p. 42.

<sup>18</sup> The Odes and Psalms of Solomon, vol. 2, p. 69.

<sup>19</sup> "Ein jüdisch-christliches Psalmbuch aus dem ersten Jahrhundert," Monatschrift für Pastoraltheologie 7 (1910) 23–29; The Gospel of John: A Commentary, trans. G. R. Beasley-Murray, eds. R. W. N. Hoare and J. K. Riches (Oxford, 1971).

followed W. Bauer<sup>20</sup> and see the Odes as a product of second-century Gnosticism.<sup>21</sup> The extensive and pervasive parallels with the Qumran Hodayoth,<sup>22</sup> the undeniable similarities with the ideas found in the Gospel of John that cannot be explained away by either the hypothesis that they are dependent upon John or that John depends upon them,<sup>23</sup> and the possibility that Ignatius of Antioch may have known and even quoted from them<sup>24</sup> cumulatively indicate that the Odes were probably composed sometime around A.D. 100.

Provenance

The most difficult question to answer in working on an ancient Jewish or Christian document is its provenance. Since it was possible to travel widely and ideas were not necessarily limited to one particular city or locale, it is conceivable that the Odes were composed in a number of places. It is possible that they were composed somewhere in Palestine and perhaps in Pella, where it seems the earliest group of Jewish Christians fled before the destruction of Jerusalem, in Alexandria or some other city in Egypt, or in Ephesus or some other place in Asia Minor. Specialists, however, have defended two hypotheses: The Odes were composed in either Edessa or one of the many Jewish Christian communities that dotted the region between Edessa and Antioch,<sup>25</sup> or in Antioch-on-the-Orontes.<sup>26</sup> If the Odes were composed around A.D. 100 in Syriac, are from the same community or region in which the Gospel of John was composed, and were familiar to Ignatius or contained the same Christian tone and ideas as those found in his letters, then the most probable provenance is Antioch or somewhere near that city. This hypothesis is tentative because of the generic tone of the Odes, a feature shared with almost all psalms and hymns.

Historical importance

Attempts to discern the historical importance of the Odes have been published in hundreds of scholarly articles and monographs, but it seems possible to summarize the discussion of their importance. First, the early concepts and images in the Odes, which were a shock and disappointment to many of the scholars who worked on them during the beginning of this century, preserve precious reminders of the first attempts to articulate the unparalleled experience of the advent of the Messiah. The Odist portrayed God with breasts that were milked by the Holy Spirit and from which came salvific milk that is described as the Son (Ode 19). The early and strong Jewish tone of the Odes, like some passages in the Synoptic Gospels (cf. especially Mt 10:5f.), portray the gentiles in unattractive terms (cf. 10:5; 23:15 [N]; 29:8). The Odist confessed the grandeur of the Messiah with the words that he is the

<sup>20</sup> "Die Oden Salomos," Neutestamentliche Apokryphen in deutscher Übersetzung, eds. E. Hennecke and W. Schneemelcher (Tübingen, 1964) vol. 2, pp. 576–625; cf. especially p. 577.

<sup>21</sup> For example, see W. G. Kümmel, Introduction to the New Testament, rev. ed. trans. H. C. Kee (Nashville, 1975) p. 223, and K. Rudolph, Gnosis und Gnostizismus (Wege der Forschung 262; Darmstadt, 1975) pp. 521, 527, 791.

<sup>22</sup> See J. Carmignac, RQ 3 (1961) 71–102; Charlesworth, "Les Odes de Salomon et les manuscrits de la mer morte," RB 77 (1970) 522–49; Charlesworth, "Qumran, John and the Odes of Solomon," John and Qumran, pp. 107–36.

<sup>23</sup> Charlesworth and A. Culpepper, "The Odes of Solomon and the Gospel of John," CBQ 35 (1973) 298–322.

<sup>24</sup> This argument is presented by many, especially by R. M. Grant, "The Odes of Solomon and the Church of Antioch," JBL 63 (1944) 363–97; and by V. Corwin, St. Ignatius and Christianity in Antioch (Yale Publications in Religion 1; New Haven, 1960) pp. 71–80.

Harris and Mingana concluded their search for the Odes' origin in the third edition with the claim that "it is hardly possible to refer the Odes to any other time than the first century, or to any other district than Antioch." They also cautioned, "if we are wrong in assigning them as written at Antioch in the first century, we are not far wrong either in place or in time." The Odes and Psalms of Solomon, vol. 2, pp. 67, 69.

<sup>25</sup> Cf. especially J. de Zwaan, "The Edessene Origin of the Odes of Solomon," Quantalacumque, eds. R. P. Casey, S. Lake, and A. K. Lake (London, Baltimore, 1937) pp. 285–302; cf. especially p. 297. Grant, JBL 63 (1944) 363–77; cf. especially p. 377: "The Odes of Solomon, composed in Syriac at Edessa, were known to the bi-lingual Ignatius either there or at Antioch." Also see A. Vööbus, "The Odes of Solomon," History of Asceticism in the Syrian Orient (CSCO 14; Louvain, 1958) pp. 62–64.

<sup>26</sup> Antioch was defended by not only Harris and Mingana (The Odes and Psalms of Solomon, vol. 2, pp. 67–69), but also by J. Bernard (Review of The Odes and Psalms of Solomon, re-ed. by J. R. Harris and A. Mingana, in Theology: A Monthly Journal of Historic Christianity 1 [1920] 288–98, see especially p. 289).

“most praised among the praised, and the greatest among the great ones” (36:4). This confession might have been unattractive to Arius and, of course, would have been horrifying to the father of Christian orthodoxy, Athanasius. For the historian, however, these expressions, ideas, and metaphors are a precious reminder of the attempts by the earliest Christians to articulate that which is paradigmatically new.

Second, the striking and frequent parallels between the Odes and the Dead Sea Scrolls, especially the Hodayoth, give us another indication of the extent to which the Essenes influenced some earliest Christian theology. Both in the Odes and in the major sectarian Dead Sea Scrolls, there is a consciousness of being “the Way,” the term used by Paul to describe the earliest followers of Jesus (Acts 24:14; cf. 24:22), and of constituting the true community of the faithful ones, “the holy ones,” whom God has founded upon the rock and has planted for his glory. Similarly both in the Odes and in the Dead Sea Scrolls, there is an emphasis on “knowledge,” “the war,” “crown,” “living water,” and “the sun” as symbols of a realized salvation that has not yet been fully consummated.<sup>27</sup> It is possible that these similarities show that the Odes merely share with the Dead Sea Scrolls a similar type of Judaism; but it seems more probable that the author of the Odes had been influenced by many of the ideas developed in the Dead Sea Scrolls; and it is even conceivable that he had at one time been a member of the sect that produced them.<sup>28</sup>

Third, the Odes are significant for a better understanding of the origin and meaning of the Gospel of John; the ex ore Christi form in many of the Odes, in which the Odist ceases talking as an inspired believer and speaks as the living Lord, is of significant and still unexamined importance for a better perception of the Johannine sayings that begin with “I am” (cf. especially Jn 6:35, 48; 8:12, 58; 10:7, 9, 14; 11:25; 15:1, 5).<sup>29</sup> Also the “Word” Christology in the Odes is rich, containing numerous ideas similar to those found in John. But the terminology is not as sophisticated; the Odist twelve times uses the appropriate term for the “Word,” mell'thâ, and twelve times the inappropriate pethgâmâ.

Fourth, the joyous tone of these Odes themselves stands in contrast to most of the other pseudepigrapha. Unlike most of them the focus is not on earthly catastrophes (e.g. 4Ezra, 2Bar), although the Odist is aware of the destruction of the Temple (cf. Ode 4), but on the advent of the Messiah. Paradise is not conceived as distant, as in the Abode of the Rechabites, nor as in the third heaven, as in 2 Enoch, but upon the earth.<sup>30</sup> As in the Psalms of Solomon and in the Gospel of John the believer is portrayed as a tree planted by God, but in the Odes the tree (the believer) is planted in Paradise and drinks of the living water of eternity (cf. Ode 11).

Fifth, the Odes are a window through which we can occasionally glimpse the earliest Christians at worship; especially their apparent stress on baptism,<sup>31</sup> their rejoicing over and experiencing of a resurrected and living Messiah, Lord, and Savior, and their frequent exhortations to live a life of the highest conceivable righteousness.<sup>32</sup>

Theological importance

God. In the Odes, God is portrayed as one who is gracious (9:5; 33:10) and merciful (3:6). The Odes are monotheistic: God is the Creator (cf. 4:15; 6:3–5). In language reminiscent of passages in the Hodayoth that seem to derive from the founder of the community, the teacher of righteousness,<sup>33</sup> the Odist expresses his thanksgiving for God's

<sup>27</sup> See Charlesworth, RB 77 (1970) 522–49. Also see D. E. Aune, “The Present Realization of Eschatological Salvation in the Odes of Solomon,” The Cultic Setting of Realized Eschatology in Early Christianity (NovTSup 28; Leiden, 1972) pp. 166–94.

<sup>28</sup> See Charlesworth, RB 77 (1970) 522–49, and Charlesworth in John and Qumran, p. 135.

<sup>29</sup> Bultmann correctly observed that the “Revelation-discourses” in John are in the style “of Semitic speech; more accurately of Semitic poetry such as is known to us from the Odes of Solomon . . .” Theology of the New Testament, trans. K. Grobel (New York, 1951–55) vol. 2, p. 10.

<sup>30</sup> Cf. Ode 11 and the following discussion on “Immortal life.”

<sup>31</sup> Bernard recognized, but exaggerated, the importance of baptism in the Odes, claiming “they are baptismal hymns intended for use in public worship, either for catechumens or for those who have recently been baptized.” The Odes of Solomon, p. 42.

<sup>32</sup> See the discussion below on “Ethics.”

<sup>33</sup> Here I must confess indebtedness to G. Jeremias, Der Lehrer der Gerechtigkeit (Studien zur Umwelt des Neuen Testaments 2; Göttingen, 1963).

act in rescuing him: "I was rescued from my chains,/and I fled unto you, O my God" (25:1). God is called the Most High (3:6; 5:2; 11:9; et passim), the Father (7:7, 11; 8:22; 9:5; 10:4; et passim), and especially Lord; but it is difficult to decide when the Odist means God and when the Son by this term, since he clearly identifies the two.<sup>34</sup> Although the Odist places emphasis on the appearance of the Messiah, his incarnation (7:3-6; 41:3f., 11-15), crucifixion (especially 27:1-3; 42:1f.), resurrection (42:6), and descent into Hades (especially 42:6-20), God is not portrayed as one who works only through intermediaries. He is actively involved in his creation as illustrated by 11:2: "For the Most High circumcised me by his Holy Spirit,/then he uncovered my inward being toward him,/and filled me with his love." A similar expression of God's activity is found in 17:1: "Then I was crowned by my God,/and my crown is living." In contrast to the accent in the apocalypses<sup>35</sup> but in line with the stress in most of the psalms, hymns, and prayers<sup>36</sup> in early Judaism, the Odist emphasizes God's presence. Note, for example, Ode 21:6f.: "And I was lifted up in the light,/and I passed before his (the Lord's) face./and I was constantly near him,/while praising and confessing him." The Odist does talk about the descent of the Word (12:5f.; 23:5; cf. 22:1), but in contrast to the Gospel of John in which God is portrayed as "he who has sent," Jesus as "he who was sent," and the disciples as "they who are sent,"<sup>37</sup> the Odist portrays the unity between God and the Son in terms of the activity by the Son who appears. Observe how the Odist expresses himself in 41:11-14: "And his Word is with us in all our way,/the Savior who gives life and does not reject ourselves./The Man who humbled himself,/but was raised because of his own righteousness./The Son of the Most High appeared/in the perfection of his Father./And light dawned from the Word/that was before time in him." The Christology, with the mention of self-humility and received exaltation, is close to the pre-Pauline hymn in Philippians 2:5-11.

Man. Although a hymnbook is not a treatise and the Odist has not displayed his theology, we can nevertheless discern that his concept of man is distinct from Paul, who saw humankind divided into two groups: a person prior to the revelation of faith, and a person under faith.<sup>38</sup> The Odist's anthropology is equally dissimilar from that found in John where humankind is bifurcated into those who believe and those who do not believe.<sup>39</sup> For the Odist, humankind is divided into those who walk in error (15:6; 18:14) and those who walk in the way of truth (11:3) or in the knowledge of the Lord (23:4).<sup>40</sup> While the former and intermittently the latter are plagued by the Evil One (14:5; 33:4), sometimes called the Deceiver (38:10), the Corruptor (33:1, 7; 38:9), and the Error (31:2; 38:10), the emphasis throughout is upon the decisive battle won by God over "the persecutors" (23:20; 42:5). In language strikingly similar to that found in John, the Odist affirms that the Messiah has already captured a world that was rebellious against the Creator: "I took courage and became strong and captured the world,/and it became mine for the glory of the Most High, and of God my Father" (10:4 [ex ore Christi]; cf. 29:10; 31:1f.). In contrast with the majority of humankind, the Odist experiences the final victory because "there is a Helper for me, the Lord" (7:3; cf. 8:6f.). Consequently, the Odist rejoices in his present experience of immortal life: "And he (the Lord) has caused to dwell in me his immortal life" (10:2; cf. 15:10). This idea is very similar to the concept of realized salvation found in the Gospel

<sup>34</sup> In Ode 29:6 "Lord" refers to God ("the Lord's Messiah," cf. PssSol 17); in 24:1 to the Messiah ("our Lord Messiah"). The transition is clarified in 29:6 ("For I believed in the Lord's Messiah,/and considered that he is the Lord").

<sup>35</sup> This tendency is discussed in my "A History of Pseudepigrapha Research: The Re-Emerging Importance of the Pseudepigrapha," ANRW, Band II 19.1, pp. 54-88.

<sup>36</sup> This emphasis is discussed in my "Hymns, Prayers, Liturgies (c. 167 B.C.E.-135 C.E.)," in the SBL Centennial Volume, ed. G. W. E. Nickelsburg, Jr., and R. A. Kraft; see also my "A Prolegomenon to a New Study of the Jewish Background of the Hymns and Prayers in the New Testament," JJS 33 (1982) 265-85 [Yadin Festschrift].

<sup>37</sup> See J. Kuhl, Die Sendung Jesu und der Kirche nach dem Johannes-Evangelium (Studia Instituti Missiologici Societatis Verbi Divini 11; St. Augustin, 1967). See especially p. 36.

<sup>38</sup> See the classic discussion of Paul's anthropology in R. Bultmann's Theology of the New Testament, vol. 1, pp. 190-352.

<sup>39</sup> An important examination of the theologies of Paul, John, and the Odes was published by J. Lindblom in his Om Lifvetz Idé hos Paulus och Johannes samt i de s. k. Salomos Oden (Uppsala Universitets Årsskrift 1910: Teologi 1: Uppsala, 1911).

<sup>40</sup> See Charlesworth in John and Qumran, pp. 107-36.

of John. It is also distinct from 4 Ezra, whose author, shattered by the collapse of the Temple, Jerusalem, and the nation Israel, struggles with the eternal question of the meaning and purpose of evil in a world created by God and finally is distressed at the extremely few number of those who will be saved at the end of time.<sup>41</sup> In stunning contrast to the author of Ezra, the Odist expresses his salvation and oneness with his Creator and Savior: "I love the Beloved and I myself love him,/and where his rest is, there also am I" (3:5). A few verses later he writes, "I have been united (to him), because the lover has found the Beloved,/because I love him that is the Son, I shall become a son" (3:7). This pervasive tone of oneness becomes so developed in the Odes that frequently the Odist ceases speaking as himself and speaks as Christ.

Cosmology. As in the Gospel of John there is a cosmology of two worlds, the world above and the world below; moreover, the cosmic dualism of two worlds is modified with the "above" vastly superior to the "below" (34:4f.). The cosmos can be described as inhabited by two spirits, the Lord's Holy Spirit (cf. 3:10; 14:8; 16:5) and the Evil One (14:5). In contrast to the ideas found in the Qumranic Rule of the Community (1QS 3.13–4.26), but again in striking similarity to the dualism in the Gospel of John, the Odes do not portray a cosmic struggle between two warring spirits, because the good spirit has already saved from the evil spirit the one who walks "in the knowledge of the Lord" (23:4; 14:4f.). Even in Ode 38, in which is depicted a militantly aggressive Deceiver and Error, the Odist celebrates his victory because of the superior quality of the Truth. In contrast to most of the apocalypses, the Odist portrays God as directly involved with his creation and with the salvation of the individual.

Ethics. An aspect of the Odist's thought that has remained not only unexamined but almost unseen is the ethical exhortations that appear in no less than fourteen Odes. These exhortations are certainly dissimilar to brilliant and perceptive philosophical discussions like those found in Aristotle's Nicomachean Ethics; they are more similar to the injunctions found in Pseudo-Phocylides and are especially similar to the exhortations preserved in the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs. Since most of the exhortations are couched in verbs with plural forms, we can assume that they were most probably used in the worship of a community. Corroborative evidence is the similarity between petitions and exhortations and the phrase in 14:9 with the request from the Lord to "hasten to grant our petitions" [italics mine]. Most of the exhortations in the Odes are of a generic nature urging others to be wise, to be understanding, to exhort, to confess, to exult, to be enriched, to be strong and redeemed. Only once is an exhortation put in the mouth of Christ and that is in 31:6f. in which Christ invites individuals: "Come forth . . ." Indicative of the homogeneity of the Odes is the observation that the very next exhortation is by the Virgin who urges those who hear her to "return" and to "come" (33:5–11). Ode 20:5–8 is of significant importance, because only here the imperatives are in a singular form and because there are six distinct ethical exhortations. At the beginning and the end of the list, the Odist exhorts the listener to spiritual virtues. In the interior of the list, there are exhortations reminiscent of the decalogue or Ten Commandments; the list is as follows: Offer your inward being faultlessly, do not oppress anyone, do not buy slaves, do not deceive your neighbor, do not steal from him, put on the grace of the Lord, come into his Paradise, and make for yourself a crown from his tree. As can be seen by a cursory examination of this list, except for the first and last three exhortations to spiritual righteousness, the others are couched in negative terms. Negative phraseology does not occur in the very next exhortation contained in the Odes, Ode 23:4, in which there is an exhortation to "walk in the knowledge of the Lord." Here as elsewhere in the Odes exhortations are not linked with material rewards. A spiritual reward, however, is mentioned in the next line of this fourth verse: "And you will know the grace of the Lord generously . . ." The overriding ethical norm for the Odist is without question the emphasis placed on love. This emphasis runs throughout the Odes from Ode 3 through to the end of the collection. The final exhortation in the Odes is found in 41:1–

<sup>41</sup> See the insightful study by A. L. Thompson, Responsibility for Evil in the Theodicy of IV Ezra (SBLDS 29; Missoula, Mont., 1977).

6 in which there is a deliberate and intentional reworking of the first psalm of David so that the law is replaced by love: "And let our faces shine in his light,/and let our hearts meditate in his love./By night and by day" (41:6).

Immortal life. The Odist professes neither the Greek concept of an immortal soul that is transmigrated from one body to another nor the Jewish concept of the resurrection of the body,<sup>42</sup> which is graphically portrayed in the action by Razis, who hurled his entrails at the crowd and Greek soldiers calling to the Lord of life to return them to him at the proper time (2Mac 14). The Odist rather exults in his salvation and experience of immortality because he has taken off a corrupt garment and put on a garment of incorruption (15:8), a garment of light (21:3), and the Lord's garment (cf. 11:11; 21:3; 25:8). Another way of expressing his experience of immortality is the pictorial metaphor that he is one of the fruit-bearing trees that has been planted by the Lord in Paradise (cf. 11:16a-24; 20:7). All of this language is used to state emphatically that his immortality is geographically here and chronologically now. The most significant quality of immortality for the Odist is the incorruption that it entails; he who is joined to the Beloved "shall be found incorrupted in all ages" (8:22). In Ode 3 immediately after stating that the lover has been united to the Beloved, the Odist states, "Indeed he who is joined to him who is immortal,/truly will be immortal" (3:8). The Lord's purpose and will for the believer is eternal life and a perfection that is incorruptible (cf. 9:4). The one who trusts in the Lord has the assurance of redemption (40:5), and possesses immortal life and incorruptibility: "And his (the Lord's) possession is immortal life,/and those who receive it are incorruptible" (40:6). J. Rendel Harris, perceiving how the Odist identifies immortality with incorruptibility, argued that he had "defined" immortality as incorruption and "that the odist viewed his immortality experimentally and qualitatively, rather than in a remote future, or in the language of mere duration."<sup>43</sup> It seems better to state that the Odist describes immortality as incorruption and was so enthusiastic about the presence of his incorruptibility and immortality<sup>44</sup> that he saw no need to talk about its duration, celebrating rather the permanent possession of eternal gifts that will last forever. The Odist exults in incorruption in all ages, as we have seen (8:22), praises the Lord for "his rest" that is "for ever and ever" (25:12), and looks forward, with the apocalyptists, to the future "incorruption in the new world" (33:12).

Relation to canonical books

The Odist neither quoted from the Old Testament nor the New Testament, but he was directly influenced by the former and by the traditions recorded in the latter. The Odist seems to have been influenced by Ezekiel 47 in Ode 6 and Ezekiel 37:4-6 in Ode 22:9. He is apparently dependent on Proverbs 8:22 in Ode 41:9, on Genesis 2:2 in Ode 16:12, and on Isaiah 58:8 in Ode 8:19.<sup>45</sup> His major dependence is certainly the Davidic Psalms, and there is sufficient evidence to warrant the assumption that he knew these Psalms both in Hebrew and in Greek. Earlier we saw how he was influenced and deliberately rephrases Psalm 1; he similarly treated Psalm 84:10 so that it produced the following: "For one hour of your faith/is more excellent than all days and years" (4:5). The Odist is apparently dependent on the Septuagint of Psalms 50:3 [H 51:1] and 20:4 [H 21:3] in Odes 7:10 and 9:8f.; and he is dependent on the Hebrew, or Syriac, of Psalms 21:11 and 2:4 in Odes 5:8 and 29:10. By far the most influential Psalm is 22; Psalm 22:16 has influenced Ode 28:14; Psalm 22:18 has affected Ode 28:18; and Psalm 22:16-18 has supplied the words and images in Ode 31:8-13.

Since the discovery of the Odes of Solomon, numerous attempts have been made to prove that the Odist is dependent on one or more of the books in the New Testament. The <sup>42</sup> "Resurrection" is transformed into a release of the living from threatening death (cf. 29:4), or the deliverance of those in Sheol by the Son of God (42:11-20). See also J. R. Harris, The Doctrine of Immortality in the Odes of Solomon (London, 1912) p. 71.

<sup>43</sup> Harris, Immortality, pp. 43, 45f.

<sup>44</sup> See Aune, The Cultic Setting, especially pp. 184-94.

<sup>45</sup> Harris and Mingana claimed a phrase in Ode 41:9 was "borrowed" from Prov 8:22 (The Odes and Psalms of Solomon, vol. 2, p. 75, 118f.). Abbott argued that the Song of Moses (Ex 15:10) had influenced Ode 25:3f. (Light on the Gospel from an Ancient Poet, pp. 192f.)

arguments have persuaded few; they are not persuasive because of the ambiguity of the parallels, and because the oral tradition continued to be influential even until Tatian compiled his so-called Diatessaron around the year A.D. 175.<sup>46</sup> To be sure, the Odes share many of the traditions that have been recorded in the New Testament, but that by no means suggests that they are to be linked with one or more of the canonical records of these traditions. Significant traditions shared with the New Testament are Jesus' virginal birth, baptism, and walking on the water (cf. Odes 19, 24, 39). Jesus' suffering and crucifixion are significantly portrayed in Odes 8:5, 27; 28:9–20; 31:8–13; and 42:2. As we have seen, the Odes share with the Gospel of John many striking and significant parallels, but specialists on the Odes have cautioned against assuming that the Odes are dependent on John and have urged consideration of a shared community.<sup>47</sup>

Relation to apocryphal books

The Odist never quotes from an apocryphal writing; he shares numerous ideas and symbols with many apocryphal compositions and apparently has been influenced by some writings and has influenced others. Since we are working with a hymnbook in which dependence on earlier writings can only be through illusions or a borrowed idea or phrase, it might be wise to remain open to the possibility that the Odist had been influenced directly or indirectly by the Psalms of Solomon and 1 Enoch. In Psalm of Solomon 14, the writer describes the holy ones as the trees of life in the Paradise of the Lord. He even describes their planting as rooted forever. In Ode 11 the Odist becomes "like the land which blossoms and rejoices in its fruits" (11:12; cf. 38:17), is taken to the Lord's Paradise (11:16) and sees "blooming and fruit-bearing trees" (11:16a), whose roots are from an immortal land and which are identified as the blessed who "are planted in your land" (11:18). It is conceivable that both the Psalmist and the Odist were independently influenced by the ideas found in the eighth column of the Hodayoth; but it is also conceivable that the idea in Psalm of Solomon 14 has influenced the Odist's discussion of Paradise and the confession that he became like "the land which blossoms," Paradise (11:16). In both the Psalms of Solomon and the Odes of Solomon the righteous are described as the trees planted in Paradise. Perhaps the concept in the Psalms of Solomon has influenced Ode 38, in which the Odist talks about the Lord's planting and confesses that he has been planted by the Lord and his fruits will be forever (38:17, 18, 20–22). Secondly, it is possible that Psalm of Solomon 15 has influenced the Odist. In this Psalm, the writer talks about a new song and mentions the fruit of the lips of a pious and righteous heart. It is possible that such ideas influenced the Odist's description of a new chant in Ode 41:16 and his phrase "the lips of my heart" in 37:2.<sup>48</sup> Thirdly, although the concept is found in numerous apocalypses, the Psalmist's description of the lights in the heavens that God has established in "their courses . . . turned not aside from the way" he has appointed for them (PssSol 18:12–14) may have influenced the Odist's concept and language in Ode 16:13, in which he describes how created things run according to "their courses" and neither cease nor fail.

An apocalypse, in which the order of creation follows God's ordinances from creation, and a document that seems more likely to have influenced the images and language of the Odes is 1 Enoch. The statements in 1 Enoch 2:1–5:2 and 69:20f. that the luminaries do not change their orbits and that the sun and moon complete their courses and do not deviate from the eternal ordinance may have influenced the Odist when he wrote Ode 16:13–17; but as we have seen, this was a common theme in intertestamental writings. More significantly for possible influence from 1 Enoch upon the Odist is the description of a fountain of righteousness which was inexhaustible and the picture of the Son of Man as found in 1 Enoch 48:1–10. In these verses we find a memorable description of a fountain of righteousness which was inexhaustible so that all the thirsty drank and were filled. This description may have influenced the Odist when he wrote Ode 30:1f., in which there is a similar picture of a living spring and the exhortation to all the thirsty to come and drink; moreover, the water that comes from the spring is described as boundless. Increasing the possibility of influence is the description in 1 Enoch 48:2–10 of the Son of Man who was named in the presence of the Lord of Spirits (cf. 48:3). It would be unwise to dismiss the possibility that this image influenced Ode 36:1–3, in which the Odist claims that he was lifted up to heaven by the Spirit of the Lord; and then that Christ himself spoke and stated that he had been brought before the Lord's face and because he was the Son of Man he "was named the Light, the Son of God." Increasing the possibility of dependence here on 1 Enoch by the Odist is the recognition that the naming of the Son of Man in apocalyptic and other intertestamental writings is apparently found in only these two documents.

<sup>46</sup> See Charlesworth, "Tatian's Dependence upon Apocryphal Traditions," HeyJ 15 (1974) 5–17.

<sup>47</sup> See Charlesworth and Culpepper, CBQ 35 (1973) 298–322.

<sup>48</sup> Harris and Mingana apparently saw neither of these parallels; but they argued that PssSol 17:30 influenced Ode 41:1f. and suggested that the "close agreement . . . suggests that the Odist has been using the Psalter of Solomon as he uses the Psalter of David." The Odes and Psalms of Solomon, vol. 2, p. 403.

It is possible that the Odes of Solomon have influenced the Christian redactor who added to the Ascension of Isaiah the so-called Testament of Hezekiah (3:13b–4:18) and the Vision of Isaiah (6–11). The Odist's description of Jesus as the Beloved may have influenced 3:17, in which there is a description of the Beloved who was crucified and resurrected. The Odist may have also influenced innumerable references to the celestial garment (e.g. 3:25), the reference to the plant that is planted (4:3), and the pervasive emphasis upon singing through the seven heavens, which is more developed in the Ascension of Isaiah than in any other pseudepigrapha. The Odes may have influenced the Ascension of Isaiah in three places in particular. The description in Ode 38:10f. of the Deceiver who will imitate the Beloved may have influenced the idea in the Ascension of Isaiah 4:6, in which Beliar is described as acting and speaking like the Beloved. Second, the cosmological idea in Ode 34:4 ("The likeness of that which is below/is that which is above") may have contributed to the idea in the Ascension of Isaiah 7:10, in which there is the statement that as it is above so it is also on the earth and the likeness of that which is in the firmament is also that upon the earth. Third, the concept of the descent of the Beloved in the Odes (e.g. 22:1), the identification of the Beloved, the Lord, and Christ, and the references to crowns and garments throughout the Odes may have influenced the similar ideas found in the Ascension of Isaiah 9:12–18. Fourth, the description of the Virgin and the unique statement that she did not need a midwife and labored without pain (OdesSol 19:8f.) may have influenced the author of the Ascension of Isaiah 11:2–15, in which the Virgin Mary did not need a midwife and apparently uttered no cries of pain. These parallels between the Odes of Solomon and the apocryphal writings have apparently never been discussed by the commentators;<sup>49</sup> whether the parallels are to be dismissed as insignificant, merely generic in nature, and coincidental or whether they are indicative of influence upon or from the Odes will depend on future critical examinations.

Introduction to the translation

In the following translation, I have attempted to be as idiomatic as the Syriac, Greek, and Coptic will allow. When necessary, I placed in a note the literal meaning of the word or phrase. I have endeavored to rework my earlier translation and have especially attempted to be more consistent in the way a word or phrase was translated but have again given prior claim to the particular context and the poetic thought in which the word or phrase occurs. Capitalization has received special attention. When I am convinced that either God or the Messiah, who is identified herein with Jesus of Nazareth, is intended, then the following capitals have been used: Beloved (3:5, 7; 7:1; 8:21), Word (7:7; 10:1; 12:5, 10, 12; 32:2; 37:3; 41:11, 14; cf. 29:9f.), Helper (7:3; 8:6; 21:2; 25:2), Son (3:7; 7:15; 19:2, 8; 23:18, 22; 41:13; 42:15), Head (17:17; 23:18; 24:1), Man (41:12), Righteousness (8:5; 9:10), Righteous One (42:2), Messiah (9:3; 17:17; 24:1; 39:11; 41:3, 15), Light (36:3; 10:1; contr. 15:2). Other words capitalized are as follows: Virgin (19:6, 7) because it refers either to Mary or the Church (33:5); Way (11:3 bis; 39:7, 13) because it seems to be a technical term for earliest "Christianity"; Seers (7:18); Singers (7:22); Odists (26:12) because they seem to denote a particular group. Other titles that are capitalized seem self-explanatory. It is always a hard decision to decide when to capitalize especially since the ancient languages have no means to denote capitalization. Brackets in the translation denote restorations; parentheses signify words added for idiomatic English; double parentheses denote that the verse or line is found only in Greek (cf. 5:8; 11:16a–16f.).

<sup>49</sup> Abbott (Light, pp. 189–93) and Harris and Mingana (The Odes and Psalms of Solomon, vol. 2, pp. 71f., 75, 274–76, 277, 336f.) claimed that the Odes have been influenced by the WisSol. Harris and Mingana (pp. 115f., 276) argued also that the "whole of Ode XII is a Wisdom composition, showing striking parallelism with the Praises of Wisdom in Sirach xxiv."

Pruning long lists compiled over two decades, I have placed in the marginalia references to only the most important books. I have relegated to the notes parallels of secondary importance. Related passages in the Odes are noted by numbers only.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 189–94.
 Denis, Introduction, pp. 65f.
- Abbott, E. A. Light on the Gospel from an Ancient Poet. (Diatessarica 9) Cambridge, England, 1912.
- Bernard, J. H. The Odes of Solomon. T&S, 8.3; Cambridge, England, 1912.
- Chadwick, H. "Some Reflections on the Character and Theology of the Odes of Solomon," Kyriakon, Festschrift Johannes Quasten, eds. P. Granfield and J. A. Jungmann. Münster, 1970; vol. 1, pp. 266–70.
- Charlesworth, J. H. "Les Odes de Salomon et les manuscrits de la mer morte," RB 77 (1970) 522–49.
- . The Odes of Solomon. Oxford, 1973; repr. T&T 13; Pseudepigrapha Series 7; Missoula, Montana, 1978.
- . "The Odes of Solomon—Not Gnostic," CBQ 31 (1969) 357–69.
- . "Odes of Solomon," The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible: Supplementary Volume, eds. K. Crim, L. R. Bailey, V. P. Furnish, E. S. Bucke. Nashville, 1976; pp. 637f.
- . "Qumran, John and the Odes of Solomon," John and Qumran, ed. J. H. Charlesworth. London, 1972; pp. 107–36.
- , ed. Papyri and Leather Manuscripts of the Odes of Solomon. Dickerson Series of Facsimiles of Manuscripts Important for Christian Origins 1; Durham, North Carolina, 1981. (For the Syr., Gk., and Cop. MSS and for the text of the variants cited below, see this facsimile edition.)
- Emerton, J. A. "Some Problems of Text and Language in the Odes of Solomon," JTS N.S. 18 (1967) 372–406.
- Harris, J. R., and Mingana, A. The Odes and Psalms of Solomon. 2 vols. Manchester, London, New York, 1916 and 1920.
- Labourt, J., and Batiffol, P. Les Odes de Salomon: une œuvre chrétienne des environs de l'an 100–120. Paris, 1911.
- Tondelli, L. Le Odi di Salomone: Cantici Christiani degli inizi del II Secolo. Prefazione del Angelo Mercati. Rome, 1914.

ODE 1

- 1 The Lord is on my head like a crown,<sup>a</sup> and I shall never be without him. 5:12; 9:8-11; 17:1; 20:7f.
- 2 Plaited for me is the crown of truth,<sup>b</sup> and it caused your branches<sup>c</sup> to blossom in me.
- 3 For it is not like a parched crown that blossoms not;
- 4 But you lived upon my head, and have blossomed upon me.
- 5 Your fruits<sup>d</sup> are full and complete; they are full of your salvation.

ODE 2

(lost)

ODE 3

- 1 . . . .
I am putting on [the love of the Lord].<sup>a</sup>
- 2 And his members are with him, and I am dependent on them; and he loves me.
- 3 For I should not have known how to love the Lord, if he had not continuously loved me. 1Jn 4:19
- 4 Who is able to distinguish love, except him who is loved?
- 5 I love the Beloved and I myself love him,<sup>b</sup> and where his rest is, there also am I. 7:1; 8:21
Jn 14:2-3; 17:24
- 6 And I shall be no foreigner,<sup>c</sup> because there is no jealousy with the Lord Most High and Merciful. Eph 2:19
- 7 I have been united (to him), because the lover has found the Beloved, because I love him that is the Son, I shall become a son. 7:15; 19:2,8; 23:18,22; 41:13; 42:15
- 8 Indeed he who is joined to him who is immortal, truly will be immortal. Jn 14:19b
1Cor 6:17

1 a. Or "wreath."
b. Gk. alêtheia.
c. Gk. klados.
d. Gk. karpos.

3 a. Restored on analogy with 23:3. Also see, however, 4:6f.; 7:4; 13:3; 15:8; 20:7; 21:3; 23:1; 33:12; 39:8.
b. Or "and my soul (np̄sy) loves him."
c. Or "stranger."

- 9 And he who delights in the Life
will become living.<sup>d</sup> Jn 11:25
- 10 This is the Spirit of the Lord, which is not false,<sup>e</sup> which teaches the sons of men to know his ways.<sup>f</sup> Jn 14:26
- 11 Be wise and understanding and vigilant.
Hallelujah.

ODE 4

- 1 No man can pervert your holy place, O my God;
nor can he change it, and put it in another place. ApAb 2:29
- 2 Because (he has) no power over it;
for your sanctuary you designed before you made special places.
- 3 The ancient one shall not be perverted by those which are inferior to it.<sup>a</sup>
You have given your heart, O Lord, to your faithful ones.<sup>b</sup> 2Bar 7:1-8:5
4Bar 1:6
- 4 Never will you be idle,
nor will you be without fruits;
- 5 For one hour of your faith is more excellent than all days and years. Ps 84:10
- 6 For who shall put on your grace<sup>c</sup> and be rejected?<sup>d</sup> 33:12
- 7 Because your seal<sup>e</sup> is known;
and your creatures are known to it.
- 8 And your hosts possess it,
and the elect archangels are clothed with it.
- 9 You have given to us your fellowship,
not that you were in need of us,
but that we are always in need of you.
- 10 Sprinkle upon us your sprinklings,
and open your bountiful springs which abundantly supply us with milk and honey.<sup>f</sup>
- 11 For there is no regret with you;
that you should regret anything which you have promised;
- 12 Since the end was manifest to you.

d. Cf. Jn 11:25; also Jn 1:4; 5:26, 40; 10:10, 28; 14:6.

e. Cf. Tit 1:2.

f. Cf. Jn 14:17, 26; 15:26; 1QS 3.13-4.26.

b. Or "your believers."

c. Or "goodness," "kindness."

d. Or "be despised," "be oppressed."

e. Or "sign."

f. Cf. Ex 3:8, 17.

4 a. Cf. Vita 14:3.

- 13 For that which you gave, you gave freely,
so that no longer will you draw back and take them again.
- 14 For all was manifest to you as God,
and was set in order from the beginning before you.
- 15 And you, O Lord, have made all.
Hallelujah.

ODE 5

- 1 I praise you, O Lord,
because I love you.<sup>a</sup>
- 2 O Most High, abandon me not,
for you are my hope.
- 3 Freely did I receive your grace,
may I live by it.<sup>b</sup>
- 4 My persecutors will come<sup>c</sup> but let them not see me.
- 5 Let a cloud of darkness fall<sup>d</sup> upon their eyes;
and let an air of thick darkness obscure them. Ps 69:23
- 6 And let them have no light to see,
so that they cannot seize me.
- 7 Let their counsel<sup>e</sup> become dull,
so that whatever they have conspired will return upon their own heads.<sup>f</sup>
- 8 For they have devised a counsel,
but it was not for them.<sup>g</sup>
((And they were vanquished although they were powerful.))<sup>h</sup>
- 9 They prepared themselves maliciously,
but they were found to be impotent.<sup>i</sup>
- 10 Indeed my hope<sup>j</sup> is upon the Lord,
and I shall not fear.
- 11 And because the Lord is my salvation, I shall not fear.<sup>k</sup> Ps 27:1
- 12 And he is as a crown upon my head,
and I shall not be disturbed. 1:1; 9:8-11;
17:1; 20:7f.

5 a. Cf. the Hodayoth formula.

b. Or "I shall live by it." C: "through you."

c. C: "may they fall." Cf. Jer 20:11.

d. C: "it covers."

e. Or "mind"; but cf. 5:8. C: "counsel become powerless."

f. C: "And what they have counseled, let it come upon them." Cf. Ps 7:16.

g. Cf. Ps 21:11; 4Ezra 7:22.

h. This line is extant only in Cop.; it appears to be spurious.

i. C: "And what they have wickedly prepared has fallen upon them."

j. Or "trust," "confidence."

k. C: "You are my God, my Savior."

- 13 Even if everything should be shaken,
I shall stand firm.
- 14 And though all things visible should perish,
I shall not die;
- 15 Because the Lord is with me,
and I with him.
- Hallelujah.

ODE 6

- 1 As the [wind] moves through the harp
and the strings speak, 14:8
- 2 So the Spirit of the Lord speaks through my members, and I speak through his love. 16:5
- 3 For he destroys whatever is foreign,
and everything is of the Lord.
- 4 For thus it has been from the beginning,
and (will be) until the end.
- 5 So that nothing will be contrary,
and nothing will rise up against him.
- 6 The Lord has multiplied his knowledge, and he was zealous that those things should be known which through his grace have been given to us.
- 7 And his praise he gave us on account of his name;
our spirits praise his Holy Spirit.
- 8 For there went forth a stream,<sup>a</sup> 8:11 and it became a river great and broad;<sup>b</sup> Rev 22:1f.
indeed it carried away everything, and it shattered and brought (it)<sup>c</sup> to the Temple.<sup>d</sup>
- 9 And the restraints of men were not able to restrain it,
nor even the arts of them who habitually restrain water.
- 10 For it spread over the face of all the earth,
and it filled everything.<sup>e</sup> 30:1-6

6 a. C: "a flowing off," "a stream," "an emanation."

b. Cf. Ezek 47:1-12; Hab 2:14; Isa 11:9; Zech 14:8; and AddEsth F3(6) and A9(10) to OdesSol 6:8-11; but the differences are significant.

c. A pronoun as a direct object is often assumed in Semitic documents; see OdesSol 8:7; 9:7; 19:5f.; 20:8; 23:7; 36:2; cf. 22:10; also see 1Bar 1:7, "and they sent (it) to Jerusalem" (kai apesteilan eis Jerousalēm). C: "It gathered all things and it turned toward the Temple."

d. Or "Indeed it carried away everything, and it shattered and carried away the Temple."

e. C: "and it possessed all the water." Cf. PseudClemRec 6.

- 11 Then all the thirsty upon the earth drank,<sup>f</sup> and thirst was relieved and quenched; 30:1f.
- 12 For from the Most High the drink was given.
- 13 Blessed, therefore, are the ministers of that drink,
who have been entrusted with his water.<sup>g</sup>
- 14 They have pleased<sup>h</sup> the parched lips, and have restored<sup>i</sup> the paralyzed will.<sup>j</sup>
- 15 Even lives<sup>k</sup> who were about to expire,<sup>l</sup>
they have seized from Death.<sup>m</sup>
- 16 And members which had fallen,<sup>n</sup>
they have restored and set up.<sup>o</sup>
- 17 They gave power for their coming,<sup>p</sup>
and light for their eyes.
- 18 Because everyone recognized them as the Lord's, and lived by the living water of eternity.<sup>q</sup> 11:7; Jn 7:37f.; 4:10,14
- Hallelujah.

ODE 7

- 1 As is the course of anger over wickedness,
so is the course of joy over the Beloved;
and brings in of its fruits unhindered. 3:5; 8:21
- 2 My joy is the Lord and my course is toward him,
this way of mine is beautiful.
- 3 For there is a Helper for me, the Lord.<sup>a</sup>
He has generously shown himself to me in his simplicity, because his kindness has diminished his grandeur.<sup>b</sup> 8:6; 21:2; 25:2
- 4 He became like me, that I might receive him.
In form he was considered like me, that I might put him on.
- 5 And I trembled not when I saw him,
because he was gracious to me.

f. C: "They who were upon the sand which is dry drank." Cf. 1En 48:1; Jn 7:37b-38.

g. C: "The water of the Lord."

h. Or "have refreshed."

i. Or "aroused."

j. C: "Those who were exhausted have received joy of heart."

k. Or "souls."

l. C: "They have embraced lives (or souls, psuchai), having poured in the breath, so that they will not die."

m. Or "have held back from death."

n. Or "And limbs which had collapsed . . ."

o. C: "have caused to stand."

p. C: "their openness."

q. "Living water" is salvific in the Odes (cf. 11:7; 30:1-7); and in Jn (cf. Jn 4:10-15; 7:38); Rev (7:17; 21:6; 22:1, 17); the Qumran Scrolls (1QH 8.7, 16; CD 19.34); and some post-apostolic documents (Ignatius, Romans 7:2; Didache 7:1-3).

7 a. The Lord or God is called "Helper" in other biblical books; cf. e.g. Ps 10:14; Heb 13:6; Sir 51:2. Contrast 2En 53:1.

b. Or "greatness," "dignity." Cf. Rom 5:2; Eph 2:18.

- 6 Like my nature he became, that I might understand him.
And like my form, that I might not turn away from him.<sup>c</sup>
- 7 The Father of knowledge<sup>d</sup>
is the Word of knowledge.<sup>e</sup>
- 8 He who created wisdom
is wiser than his works.<sup>f</sup>
- 9 And he who created me when yet I was not knew what I would do when I came into being.
- 10 On account of this he was gracious to me in his abundant grace, and allowed me to seek from him and to benefit from his sacrifice. Ps 50:3 [LXX];
MT 51:1
- 11 For he it is who is incorruptible,
the perfection of the worlds and their Father.
- 12 He has allowed him to appear to them that are his own;
in order that they may recognize him that made them,
and not think that they came of themselves. Jn 1:11
Ps 100:3 [LXX];
MT Ketib
- 13 For toward knowledge he has set his way,
he has spread it out and lengthened it and brought it to complete perfection.<sup>g</sup>
- 14 And has set over it the traces of his light,
and it proceeded from the beginning until the end.
- 15 For by him he was served,
and he was pleased by the Son. Mk 1:11; 3:7; 19:2,8;
23:18,22;
41:13,15
- 16 And because of his salvation he will possess everything.
And the Most High will be known by his holy ones:
- 17 To announce to those who have songs of the coming of the Lord,
that they may go forth to meet him and may sing to him,
with joy and with the harp of many tones.
- 18 The Seers will go before him,
and they will appear before him.
- 19 And they will praise the Lord in his love,
because he is near and does see.
- 20 And hatred will be removed from the earth,
and with jealousy it will be drowned.
- 21 For ignorance was destroyed upon it,
because the knowledge of the Lord came upon it.

c. The Syr. nouns translated as "nature" and "form" also mean "natural disposition," "essence," and "image." The language here is not docetic; but see 17:6; 28:17f.; 41:8; and 42:10.

d. Cf. IQS 3.15.

e. Or "word of knowledge." It is difficult to be sure when "word" should be capitalized; cf. the discussion above under "Introduction to the translation." Cf. 4Ezra 6:38; 2Bar 21:4; JosAsen 12.

f. Cf. Prov 8:22f.

g. Cf. IQS 11.11.

- 22 Let the Singers sing the grace of the Lord Most High,
and let them offer their songs.
- 23 And let their heart be like the day,
and their gentle voices<sup>h</sup> like the majestic beauty<sup>i</sup> of the Lord.
- 24 And let there not be any person that is without knowledge or voice.
- 25 For he gave a mouth to his creation:
to open the voice of the mouth toward him,
and to praise him.
- 26 Praise<sup>j</sup> his power
and declare his grace.
- Hallelujah.

ODE 8

- 1 Open, open your hearts to the exultation of the Lord, and let your love abound from the heart to the lips.<sup>a</sup>
- 2 In order to bring forth fruits to the Lord, a holy life;<sup>b</sup> and to speak with watchfulness in his light. 12:2; 14:6f.
- 3 Stand and be established,<sup>c</sup>
you who once were brought low.
- 4 You who were in silence, speak,
for your mouth has been opened.
- 5 You who were despised, from henceforth be raised,
for your Righteousness has been raised; 41:12
- 6 For the right hand of the Lord is with you,
and he will be your Helper.<sup>d</sup> 7:3; 21:2; 25:2
- 7 And peace was prepared for you,
before what may be your war. 9:6; 29:9

Christ Speaks<sup>e</sup>

- 8 Hear the word of truth,
and receive the knowledge of the Most High.<sup>f</sup>
- 9 Your flesh may not understand that which I am about to say to you;
nor your garment that which I am about to declare to you.<sup>g</sup> 25:8

h. Or "a musical note," "gentle sound," "soft whisper."

i. Or "majestic grace."

j. Or "Confess."

8 a. Both imperatives are plurals in Syr. The Ode may have been intended for liturgical use in early Christian services.

b. Cf. Hos 14:2; Heb 13:15; 1QH 1.28; PssSol

15:5.

c. Or "Rise up and stand erect . . ."

d. See n. a to OdesSol 7.

e. Here and in the following Odes I have added this notation; it is frequently clear that the Odist speaks as the Christ. In the MSS no dot, word, or phrase clarifies the shift in speakers.

f. As in 8:1 the imperatives are plural.

g. Or "to show you."

- 10      Keep my mystery,<sup>h</sup> you who are kept by it;
           keep my faith, you who are kept by it.
- 11      And understand my knowledge, you who know me in truth;
           love me with affection, you who love;
- 12      For I turn not my face from my own,
           because I know them. Jn 10:14
- 13      And before they had existed,
           I recognized them;
           and imprinted a seal on their faces.
- 14      I fashioned their members,
           and my own breasts I prepared for them,
           that they might drink my holy milk and live by it. 14:2; 19:4
   1Cor 3:1-2
- 15      I am pleased by them,
           and am not ashamed by them. 9:7; 29:1
- 16      For my work are they,
           and the power of my thoughts.
- 17      Therefore who can stand against my work?
           Or who is not subject to them?
- 18      I willed and fashioned mind and heart;
           and they are my own.
           And upon my right hand I have set my elect ones.
- 19      And my righteousness goes before them;
           and they will not be deprived of my name;
           for it is with them.<sup>i</sup>
- The Odist Speaks<sup>j</sup>
- 20      Seek and increase,
           and abide in the love of the Lord; Jn 15:9f.
- 21      And you who are loved in the Beloved;
           and you who are kept in him who lives;
           and you who are saved in him who was saved.<sup>k</sup> 3:5; 7:1
- 22      And you shall be found incorrupted in all ages, on account of the name of your Father. 9:5

Hallelujah.

h. Cf. 1QH 11.10 and 1Q27.

i. Cf. Isa 58:8.

j. I add this notation.

k. Cf. OdesSol 8:19-21 with Jn 15:9f. and 17:11f.

ODE 9

- 1 Open your ears,
and I shall speak to you.
- 2 Give me yourself,
so that I may also give you myself;
- 3 The word of the Lord and his desires,
the holy thought which he has thought concerning his Messiah. 17:17; 24:1; 39:11; 41:3.15
- 4 For in the will of the Lord is your life,
and his purpose<sup>a</sup> is eternal life,
and your perfection is incorruptible.
- 5 Be enriched in God the Father;
and receive the purpose of the Most High.
Be strong and saved by his grace. 8:22
- 6 For I announce peace to you, his holy ones, so that none of those who hear<sup>b</sup> will fall in the war. 8:7; 29:9; 4Mac 9:24
- 7 And also that those who have known him may not perish, and so that those who receive (him)<sup>c</sup> may not be ashamed.<sup>d</sup> Jn 3:16 8:15; 29:1
- 8 An everlasting crown is Truth;
blessed are they who set it on their head. 1:1; 5:12; 17:1; 20:7f.; Ps 20:4
[LXX; MT 21:3]
- 9 (It is) a precious stone,
for the wars were on account of the crown.<sup>e</sup>
- 10 But Righteousness has taken it,
and has given it to you.
- 11 Put on the crown in the true covenant of the Lord, and all those who have conquered<sup>f</sup> will be inscribed in his book.
- 12 For their book is the justification<sup>g</sup> which is for you,
and she sees you before her and wills that you will be saved.
- Hallelujah.

ODE 10

- 1 The Lord has directed my mouth by his Word, and has opened my heart by his Light.<sup>a</sup> 7:7 36:3
- 2 And he has caused to dwell in me his immortal life, and permitted me to proclaim the fruit of his peace. Jn 4:14

9 a. Or "mind," "belief," "intelligence."

b. Or "obey."

c. See n. c to OdesSol 6.

d. Or "confused."

e. Cf. TJob 40:3; WisSol 5:16; IQH 9.25.

f. Or "who were free from guilt," "who were declared blameless."

g. Or "victory."

10 a. It is difficult to know when to capitalize "word" and "light." See n. e to OdesSol 7 and the comments above under "Introduction to the translation."

- 3 To convert the lives of those who desire to come to him,
and to capture a good captivity for freedom.

Ps 68:18; TZebr
9:8 (bdg)

Christ Speaks<sup>b</sup>

- 4 I took courage and became strong and captured the world, and it became mine for the glory of the Most High, and of God my Father.

- 5 And the gentiles who had been scattered were gathered together,
but I was not defiled by my love (for them), because they had praised me in high places.<sup>c</sup>

29:8; Jn 11:52

- 6 And the traces of light were set upon their heart,
and they walked according to my life and were saved,
and they became my people for ever and ever.

Hallelujah.

ODE 11

- 1 My heart was pruned and its flower appeared,
then grace sprang up in it,
and it produced fruits for the Lord.<sup>a</sup>

- 2 For the Most High circumcised me by his Holy Spirit, then he uncovered my inward being<sup>b</sup> toward him,
and filled me with his love.

- 3 And his circumcising became my salvation,
and I ran in the Way<sup>c</sup> in his peace,
in the Way of truth.<sup>d</sup>

39:7,13
33:8

- 4 From the beginning until the end
I received his knowledge.

- 5 And I was established upon the rock of truth,<sup>e</sup>
where he had set me.

- 6 And speaking waters<sup>f</sup> touched my lips
from the spring of the Lord<sup>g</sup> generously.<sup>h</sup>

Rev 7:17

- 7 And so I drank and became intoxicated,
from the living<sup>i</sup> water that does not die.

6:18; Jn 4:10;
7:37f.

- 8 And my intoxication was not with ignorance;<sup>j</sup>
but I abandoned<sup>k</sup> vanity;

b. See n. e to OdesSol 8.

c. Cf. Mal 1:11.

11 a. G: "for God." Cf. OdesSol 11:1-3 with Deut 10:16 and 30:6.

b. Lit. "kidneys."

c. Cf. Acts 24:14, 22; 9:2; Jn 14:6; IQS 9.19, 21; 11.11.

d. G: "I ran a way of truth in his peace." Cf.

IQS 4.17; 9.17f.; CD 3.15.

e. G: "solid rock."

f. Cf. Ignatius, Romans 7:2.

g. Or "the fountain of the Lord"; G: "from the fountain of life of the Lord." Cf. IQH 8.14.

h. Cf. GThom 13.

i. G omits.

j. Cf. 38:12-15.

k. G omits.

- 9 And turned toward the Most High, my God,
and was enriched by his favors.
- 10 And I abandoned the folly cast upon the earth,
and stripped it off and cast it from me.
- 11 And the Lord renewed me with his garment, and possessed me<sup>l</sup> by his light.<sup>m</sup>
- 12 And from above he gave me immortal rest;<sup>n</sup>
and I became like the land which blossoms and rejoices in its fruits.
- 13 And the Lord (is) like the sun
upon the face of the land.
- 14 My eyes were enlightened,
and my face received the dew;
- 15 And my breath was refreshed
by the pleasant fragrance<sup>o</sup> of the Lord.<sup>p</sup>
- 16 And he took me to his Paradise, wherein is the wealth of the Lord's pleasure.<sup>q</sup>
- 16a ((I contemplated blooming and fruit-bearing trees,<sup>r</sup>
and self-grown was their crown.
- 16b Their branches were flourishing
and their fruits were shining;<sup>s</sup>
their roots (were) from an immortal land.
- 16c And a river of gladness was irrigating them, and the region round about them in the land of eternal life.))
- 17 Then I adored the Lord because of his magnificence.
- 18 And I said, blessed, O Lord, are they who are planted in your land,
and who have a place in your Paradise;<sup>t</sup>
- 19 And who grow in the growth of your trees,
and have passed from darkness into light.<sup>u</sup>

PssSol 14:2(5)
38:17-22

l. G: "and he recovered me."
m. Or "Light," cf. 36:3; IQS 4.8. Cf. Ps 104:2; 1Bar 5:1-9.

n. Or "incorruptible rest." G: "And he enlivened me through his incorruption." Cf. Ps 95:11;
Heb 3:7-4:13.

o. Cf. 1En 24:1-6.

p. G: "in the fragrance of the kindness of the Lord."

q. A similar description of Paradise appears in many documents, cf. 1En 24; 2En 8; ApAb 21; SibOr frag. 3.48f.; also IQH 8.12-20; JosAsen 2:17-20; LAB 12:8.

r. Vss. 16a-16c are found only in G.

s. Lit. "were laughing." The Gk. egelō[n] means only "were laughing," "were deriding." The corresponding Syr., which I believe is behind the Gk., would be ghk, which means not only "laughing," but also "shining."

t. Cf. GTr 36:35-37.

u. This imagery is widespread in early Jewish literature, cf. e.g. TJos 19:3; IQH 9.26f.; TAB B7; JosAsen 8:10; 15:13; 3Bar 6:13; 2En 30:15; and especially IQS 3.13-4.26. Also cf. Didache 1:1; EBar 18:1-20:2.

- 20 Behold, all<sup>v</sup> your laborers are fair,
they who work good works,
and turn from wickedness to your kindness.<sup>w</sup>
- 21 For they turned away from themselves the bitterness of the trees,<sup>x</sup>
when they were planted in your land.<sup>y</sup> 38:17-22
- 22 And everyone was like your remnant.<sup>z</sup> ((Blessed are the workers of your water,))<sup>a2</sup> and the eternal memorial<sup>b2</sup> of your faithful servants. 6:13 1Bar 4:5
- 23 Indeed, there is much room in your Paradise.<sup>c2</sup>
And there is nothing in it which is barren,
but everything is filled with fruit. Jn 14:2
- 24 Praise be to you, O God, the delight of Paradise for ever.

Hallelujah.

ODE 12

- 1 He has filled me with words of truth,
that I may proclaim him.
- 2 And like the flowing of waters, truth flows from my mouth,
and my lips declare his fruits.
- 3 And he has caused his knowledge to abound in me,
because the mouth of the Lord is the true word,
and the door of his light.<sup>a</sup>
- 4 And the Most High has given him to his generations,<sup>b</sup> (which are) the interpreters of his beauty,
and the narrators of his glory,
and the confessors of his thought,<sup>c</sup>
and the preachers of his mind,
and the teachers<sup>d</sup> of his works.
- 5 For the subtlety of the Word is inexpressible,<sup>e</sup> and like his expression<sup>f</sup> so also is his swiftness and his acuteness, for limitless is his path.<sup>g</sup> 7:7; 10:1; 12:10; 12; 32:2; 37:3;
41:11,14
- 6 He never falls but remains standing,
and one cannot know his descent or his way.

v. G omits.

w. G: "from wickedness to kindness."

x. G: "The pungent odor of the trees is changed in your land." Cf. 3Bar 4:15.

y. G omits. Cf. 1QH 8.4-26; LAB 18:10; 23:12; 28:4.

z. G: "And everything occurs according to your will." Cf. Isa 10:19-23.

a2. Extant only in G.

b2. Cf. 1Bar 4:5.

c2. Cf. Jn 14:2.

with Jn would be striking; cf. Jn 1:1-18; 10:7-9; 8:12.

b. Or "ages," "worlds."

c. Or "purpose."

d. Lit. "those who teach to be chaste."

e. Lit. "there is no narration." Both "subtlety" and "swiftness" in this vs. are identical in the Syr.; hence the first two ll. could be translated: "For the swiftness of the Word is inexpressible, and like his expression so also is his swiftness and his acuteness . . ."

f. Or "utterance."

g. Or "progression." Cf. Heb 4:12; WisSol 7:22-27.

12 a. "Word," "Door," and "Light" could be capitalized (cf. n. e to OdesSol 7) and the parallels

- 7 For as his work is, so is his expectation,
for he is the light and dawning of thought.
- 8 And by him the generations spoke to one another,
and those that were silent acquired speech.
- 9 And from him came love and harmony,<sup>h</sup>
and they spoke one to another whatever was theirs.
- 10 And they were stimulated by the Word, 12:5,12
and knew him who made them,
because they were in harmony.
- 11 For the mouth of the Most High spoke to them,
and his exposition was swift through him.
- 12 For the dwelling place of the Word is man,<sup>i</sup> 12:5,10
and his truth is love.
- 13 Blessed are they who by means of him have recognized<sup>j</sup> everything, and have known the Lord in his truth.

Hallelujah.

ODE 13

- 1 Behold, the Lord is our mirror.<sup>a</sup>
Open (your) eyes and see them in him.
- 2 And learn the manner of your face,
then announce praises to his Spirit.
- 3 And wipe the paint<sup>b</sup> from your face,
and love his holiness and put it on.
- 4 Then you will be unblemished at all times with him.

Hallelujah.

ODE 14

- 1 As the eyes of a son upon his father, 12:5,12
so are my eyes, O Lord, at all times toward you.
- 2 Because my breasts and my pleasure are with you. 8:14; 19:3f.
- 3 Do not turn aside your mercies from me, O Lord;
and do not take your kindness from me.
- 4 Stretch out to me, my Lord, at all times, your right hand, and be to me a guide till the end according to your will. Ps 48:14

h. Or "equality"; cf. 12:9.

i. Cf. Jn 1:14.

j. Or "perceived."

b. Cf. ActsJn 28f.

14 a. Or "evil." Cf. Ps 31:3f.

b. Or "your gentleness."

13 a. Cf. ActsJn 95:25; WisSol 7:26. For "mirror" cf. 2Cor 3:18 and Jas 1:23.

- 5 Let me be pleasing before you, because of your glory, and because of your name let me be saved from the Evil One.<sup>a</sup> Mt 6:13
- 6 And let your serenity,<sup>b</sup> O Lord, abide with me,
and the fruits of your love.
- 7 Teach me the odes of your truth,
that I may produce fruits in you.
- 8 And open to me the harp of your Holy Spirit,
so that with every note I may praise you, O Lord. 6:1
- 9 And according to the multitude of your mercies, so grant unto me,
and hasten to grant our petitions.
- 10 For you are sufficient for all our needs. Phil 4:19
- Hallelujah.

ODE 15

- 1 As the sun is the joy to them who seek its daybreak,
so is my joy the Lord;
- 2 Because he is my sun,
and his rays have restored me;
and his light has dismissed all darkness from my face.<sup>a</sup> Eph 5:14
- 3 Eyes I have possessed in him,
and have seen his holy day.
- 4 Ears I have acquired,
and have heard his truth.
- 5 The thought of knowledge I have acquired,
and have lived<sup>b</sup> fully through him.
- 6 I abandoned the way of error, and went toward him and received salvation from him generously. Jub 22:23
- 7 And according to his generosity he gave to me,
and according to his majestic beauty he made me.
- 8 I have put on incorruption<sup>c</sup> through his name,
and stripped off corruption by his grace.
- 9 Death has been destroyed before my face, and Sheol has been vanquished by my word. 42:11; Rev 1:18;
6:8; 20:13f.
- 10 And eternal life has arisen in the Lord's land,
and it has become known<sup>d</sup> to his faithful ones,
and been given without limit to all that trust in him.
- Hallelujah.

15 a. Cf. 15:1f. with 1QH 4.5f.; 9.27.

b. Lit. "to delight oneself," "enjoy to the full,"
"live luxuriously."

c. Or "immortality." Cf. 1Cor 15:54f.

d. Or "been declared."

ODE 16

- 1 As the work of the plowman is the plowshare,
and the work of the helmsman<sup>a</sup> is the steering of the ship,
so also my work is the psalm of the Lord in his praises.
- 2 My art and my service are in his praises,
because his love has nourished my heart,
and his fruits he poured unto my lips.<sup>b</sup>
- 3 For my love is the Lord;
hence I shall sing unto him.
- 4 For I am strengthened in his praises,
and I have faith in him.
- 5 I shall open my mouth,
and his spirit will speak through me
the praise<sup>c</sup> of the Lord and his beauty, 6:1f.
- 6 The work of his hands,
and the service of his fingers;
- 7 For the multitude of his mercies,
and the strength of his word.<sup>d</sup>
- 8 For the word of the Lord investigates that which is invisible,
and perceives his thought.
- 9 For the eye sees his works,
and the ear hears his thought.
- 10 It is he who spread out the earth,<sup>e</sup>
and placed the waters in the sea.
- 11 He expanded the heaven,
and set the stars.
- 12 And he set the creation and aroused it, then he rested from his works. Gen 2:2
- 13 And created things run according to their courses,<sup>f</sup>
and work their works,
and they are not able to cease and be idle.<sup>g</sup>
- 14 And the hosts are subject to his word.<sup>h</sup>
- 15 The reservoir of light is the sun,
and the reservoir of darkness is the night.

16 a. Gk. kubernêtes (in H).

b. Cf. 16:1f. with Ps 45:1.

c. Or "glory."

d. In vss. 7, 8, 14, and 19 "word" could be capitalized. See n. e to OdesSol 7. Cf. Gen 1:1-2:4a; PrMan 3; and also Jn 1:1-3; Jub 12:4.

e. Or "he who made the earth broad . . ." If "Word" (16:7) is the agent of creation here, cf. Jn 1:1-18.

f. Lit. "they run according to their runnings."

g. Parallels to this concept are abundant; cf. 1En 2:1-5:2; 69:20f.; PssSol 18:12-14; 2Bar 48:9; Eccl 16:26-28.

h. See n. d above.

- 16 For he made the sun for the day so that it will be light;
but night brings darkness over the face of the earth. Gen 1:16-18
- 17 And (by) their acceptance one from another they complete the beauty of God. Ps 19:1; 1En 69:20; 78:10
- 18 And there is nothing outside of the Lord, because he was before anything came to be.<sup>1</sup> 1:1
- 19 And the worlds are by his word,<sup>j</sup>
and by the thought of his heart.
- 20 Praise and honor to his name.
- Hallelujah.

ODE 17

- 1 Then I was crowned by my God, and my crown is living. 1:1; 5:12; 9:8-11; 20:7f.
- 2 And I was justified by my Lord,
for my salvation is incorruptible.
- 3 I have been released from vanities,
and am not condemned.
- 4 My chains were cut off by his hands;
I received the face and form of a new person,<sup>a</sup>
and I walked in him and was saved.
- 5 And the thought of truth led me,
and I went after it and did not err.
- Christ Speaks<sup>b</sup>
- 6 And all who saw me were amazed,
and I seemed to them like a stranger.
- 7 And he who knew and exalted me
is the Most High in all his perfection.
- 8 And he glorified me<sup>c</sup> by his kindness,
and raised my understanding to the height of truth.
- 9 And from there he gave me the way of his paths, and I opened the doors which were closed.<sup>d</sup> 24:5; 42:10-20;
Jn 10:7-10; Rev
3:7f.
- 10 And I shattered the bars<sup>e</sup> of iron, for my own iron(s) had grown hot and melted before me. Ps 107:16; Isa 45:2

i. Cf. Jn 1:1-3; 8:58.
j. See n. d above.

17 a. Gk. prosōpon.

b. See n. e to OdesSol 8.
c. N: "and he is glorified."
d. For the idea of descensus ad inferos see OdesSol 24:5 and especially 42:10-20.
e. Gk. mochlos.

- 11 And nothing appeared closed to me, because I was the opening of everything. Jn 10:7-10; Rev
3:7f.
- 12 And I went toward all my bondsmen in order to loose them;
that I might not abandon anyone bound or binding.
- 13 And I gave my knowledge generously,
and my resurrection<sup>f</sup> through my love.
- 14 And I sowed my fruits in hearts,
and transformed them through myself.
- 15 Then they received my blessing and lived,
and they were gathered to me and were saved;
- 16 Because they became my members,
and I was their head. 24:1; Rom 12:4f.; Col
1:15-20; Jn 15
- Doxology***
- 17 Glory to you, our Head, O Lord Messiah. 9:3; 23:18; 24:1; 39:11; 41:3,15
- Hallelujah.

ODE 18

- 1 My heart was raised and enriched in the love of the Most High,
so that I might praise him with my name.
- 2 My members were strengthened,
that they may not fall from his power.
- 3 Infirmities fled<sup>a</sup> from my body, and it stood<sup>b</sup> firm for the Lord by his will;
because his kingdom is firm.<sup>c</sup> 22:12
- 4 O Lord, for the sake of those who are in need,
do not expel<sup>d</sup> your word from me.<sup>e</sup>
- 5 Nor, for the sake of their works,
withhold your perfection from me.
- 6 Let not light be conquered by darkness,
nor let truth flee from falsehood.<sup>f</sup> Jn 1:5
- 7 Let your right hand set our salvation to victory,
and let it receive from every region,
and preserve (it)<sup>g</sup> on the side of everyone who is besieged by evils.

f. Lit. "my prayer"; b'wp' seems to have obtained the meaning "resurrection"; cf. my edition of the Odes, p. 77, n. 17.

g. See n. b above; I add this notation.

18 a. H: "they forsook."
b. N: "and they stood."

c. Or "solid," "true," "lasting."

d. H: "do not loose."

e. "Word" could be capitalized; see n. e to OdesSol 7.

f. See n. u to OdesSol 11.

g. See n. c to OdesSol 6. Also see my edition, p. 80, n. 10.

- 8 You are my God, falsehood and death are not in your mouth;
only perfection is your will.
- 9 And vanity you knew not,
because neither does it know you.
- 10 And you knew not error;
because neither does it know you.
- 11 And ignorance appeared like dust,
and like the foam of the sea.
- 12 And vain people thought that it was great,
and they became like its form and were impoverished.
- 13 But the wise<sup>h</sup> understood and contemplated,
and were not polluted by their thoughts;
- 14 Because they were in the mind of the Most High,
and mocked those who were walking in error.<sup>i</sup>
- 15 Then they spoke the truth,
from the breath which the Most High breathed into them.
- 16 Praise and great honor to his name.
- Hallelujah.

ODE 19

- 1 A cup of milk was offered to me, 1Pet 2:3
and I drank it in the sweetness of the Lord's kindness. 19:11
- 2 The Son is the cup,<sup>a</sup> 3:7; 7:15; 19:8;
and the Father is he who was milked; 23:18,22; 41:13;
and the Holy Spirit is she who milked him; 42:15
- 3 Because his breasts were full,
and it was undesirable that his milk should be released without purpose.
- 4 The Holy Spirit opened her bosom, and mixed the milk of the two breasts of the Father. 8:14; 14:2
- 5 Then she gave the mixture to the generation<sup>b</sup> without their knowing, 35:5
and those who have received (it)<sup>c</sup> are in the perfection of the right hand.
- 6 The womb of the Virgin took (it),<sup>d</sup>
and she received conception and gave birth.
- 7 So the Virgin became a mother with great mercies.
- 8 And she labored and bore the Son but without pain, because it did not occur without purpose.<sup>e</sup> Ascens 11:2-15 3:7; 7:15; 19:2;
23:18,22; 41:13;
42:15

h. Lit. "those who knew."

i. Cf. Jn 8:12 and 12:35; IQS 3.21 and 4.11.

c. See n. c to OdesSol 6.

d. See n. c above.

e. See the discussion in "Relation to apocryphal books."

19 a. Cf. GTr 24:9-14.

b. Or "world."

- 9 And she did not seek a midwife,
because he caused her to give life.
- 10 She bore as a strong man with desire,<sup>f</sup>
and she bore according to the manifestation,<sup>g</sup> and possessed with great power.<sup>h</sup> Lk 1:26-38
- 11 And she loved with salvation,
and guarded with kindness,
and declared<sup>i</sup> with greatness. 19:1
- Hallelujah.

ODE 20

- 1 I am a priest of the Lord,
and to him I serve as a priest;
- 2 And to him I offer the offering of his thought.
- 3 For his thought is not like the world,
nor like the flesh,
nor like them who serve<sup>a</sup> according to the flesh.
- 4 The offering of the Lord is righteousness,
and purity of heart and lips.
- 5 Offer your<sup>b</sup> inward being faultlessly;
and do not let your compassion oppress compassion;
and do not you yourself oppress anyone.<sup>c</sup> Ex 22:21
- 6 You should not purchase a foreigner because he is like yourself,<sup>d</sup>
nor seek to deceive your neighbor, nor deprive him of the covering for his nakedness. Sir 33:30f.
Ex 22:26f.
- 7 But put on the grace of the Lord generously,
and come into his Paradise,
and make for yourself a crown from his tree. Rev 2:7 1:1; 5:12; 9:8-11; 17:1
- 8 Then put (it)<sup>e</sup> on your head and be refreshed,
and recline upon his serenity.
- 9 For his glory will go before you;
and you will receive of his kindness and of his grace;<sup>f</sup>
and you will be anointed in truth with the praise of his holiness.
- 10 Praise and honor to his name.
- Hallelujah.

f. Or "will."

g. Or "example," "demonstration."

h. Or "And she acquired according to the Great Power"; if so cf. Mk 14:62; Acts 8:10.

i. Or "manifested"; cf. 19:10.

b. N: "my inward being."

c. Or "And do not let your soul oppress a soul."

d. Or "like your (own) soul."

e. See n. c to OdesSol 6.

f. Or "and of his goodness." N: "of his goodness" (a slightly different noun; cf. my edition, p. 87, n. 6). Cf. Isa 58:8.

20 a. Or "worship."

ODE 21

- 1 I raised my arms<sup>a</sup> on high on account of the grace of the Lord.
- 2 Because he cast off my chains from me, and my Helper raised me according to his grace and his salvation.<sup>b</sup> 7:3; 8:6; 25:2
- 3 And I stripped off darkness,
and put on light.<sup>c</sup>
- 4 And even I myself acquired members.
In them there was no<sup>d</sup> sickness
or affliction or suffering.
- 5 And abundantly helpful to me was the thought of the Lord,
and his incorruptible<sup>e</sup> fellowship.
- 6 And I was lifted up in the light,
and I passed before his face.
- 7 And I was constantly near him,
while praising and confessing him. 36:6
- 8 He caused my heart to overflow, and it was found in my mouth;
and it sprang forth unto my lips.
- 9 Then upon my face increased the exultation of the Lord and his praise.<sup>f</sup>
Hallelujah.

ODE 22

Christ Speaks<sup>a</sup>

- 1 He who caused me to descend from on high,
and to ascend from the regions below;<sup>b</sup>
- 2 And he who gathers what is in the middle,
and throws them<sup>c</sup> to me;<sup>d</sup>
- 3 He who scattered my enemies,
and my adversaries;
- 4 He who gave me authority over chains,
so that I might loosen them;
- 5 He who overthrew by my hands the dragon with seven heads, and placed me<sup>e</sup> at his roots<sup>f</sup> that I might destroy his seed; Rev 12:3

21 a. N: "arm."

b. See n. a to OdesSol 7.

c. Cf. 1Bar 4:20; 5:1-2. Also see n. u to OdesSol 11.

d. H omits.

e. Or "everlasting," "immortal."

f. N: "in his praise."

b. C: "from the regions which are in the deep below."

c. H omits.

d. C: "He who took those who were in the middle,/and has taught me concerning them."

e. Following C; both H and N: "and you set me."

f. N: "his root."

22 a. See n. e to OdesSol 8.

- 6 You were there and helped me,
and in every place your name surrounded<sup>g</sup> me.
- 7 Your right hand destroyed the evil poison,<sup>h</sup> and your hand leveled the way for those who believe in you.
- 8 And it chose them<sup>i</sup> from the graves,
and separated them<sup>j</sup> from the dead ones.
- 9 It took dead bones
and covered them with flesh. Ezek 37:1-6
- 10 But they were motionless,
so it gave (them) energy<sup>k</sup> for life.
- 11 Incorruptible was your way and your face;
you have brought your world to corruption,
that everything might be broken and renewed.
- 12 And the foundation of everything is your rock.<sup>l</sup>
And upon it you have built your kingdom, and it<sup>m</sup> became the dwelling place of the holy ones.<sup>n</sup> 18:3; Mt 16:18
- Hallelujah.

ODE 23

- 1 Joy is for the holy ones. WisSol 3:9; 4:15
And who will put it on but they alone?
- 2 Grace is for the elect ones.
And who will receive it but they who trusted in it from the beginning?
- 3 Love is for the elect ones.
And who will put it on but they who possessed it from the beginning?
- 4 Walk in the knowledge of the Lord<sup>a</sup> and you will know the grace of the Lord<sup>b</sup> generously;
both for his exultation and for the perfection of his knowledge.
- 5 And his thought was like a letter,<sup>c</sup>
and his will descended from on high.
- 6 And it was sent from a bow like an arrow
that has been forcibly shot.
- 7 And many hands rushed to the letter,
in order to catch (it),<sup>d</sup> then take and read it.

g. H: "a blessing"; C agrees with N.
h. Cf. IQH 5.10, 27 and CD 8.9; 19.22.
i. C: "You redeemed them from . . ."
j. C: "You removed them from . . ."
k. H: "help," "assistance." C agrees with N.
l. C: "Your light." Cf. IQH 6.25f.
m. H: "and you became."
n. Cf. IQS 8.8; IQM 12.2; IQH 12.2; IQSb

4.25.

23 a. H: "Most High."
b. H omits "And you will know the grace of the Lord."
c. Cf. Zech 5:1f. and especially Hymn of the Pearl 40-55.
d. Cf. n. c to OdesSol 6.

- 8 But it escaped from their fingers;
and they were afraid of it and of the seal which was upon it.
- 9 Because they were not allowed to loosen its seal;
for the power which was over the seal was better than they.
- 10 But those who saw the letter went after it;
that they might know where it would land,
and who should read it,
and who should hear it.
- 11 But a wheel received it,
and it (the letter) came over it.
- 12 And with it was a sign, of the Kingdom and of providence.<sup>e</sup>
- 13 And everything which was disturbing to the wheel,
it mowed it and cut it down.
- 14 And it restrained a multitude of adversaries;
and bridged<sup>f</sup> rivers.
- 15 And it crossed over (and) uprooted many forests,<sup>g</sup>
and made a wide way.<sup>h</sup>
- 16 The head went down to the feet,
because unto the feet ran the wheel,
and whatever had come upon it.
- 17 The letter was one of command,
and hence all regions were gathered together.
- 18 And there appeared at its head, the Head which was revealed,
even the Son of Truth from the Most High Father.
- 19 And he inherited and possessed everything,
and then the scheming<sup>i</sup> of the many ceased.
- 20 Then all the seducers became headstrong and fled;
and the persecutors became extinct and were blotted out.<sup>j</sup>
- 21 And the letter became a large volume,<sup>k</sup>
which was entirely written by the finger of God.
- 22 And the name of the Father was upon it;
and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit,
to rule for ever and ever.

17:17; 24:1

3:7; 7:15; 19:2,
8; 23:22; 41:13;
42:153:7; 7:15; 19:2,
8; 23:18; 41:13;
42:15

Hallelujah.

e. Or "government," "the divine dispensation."

f. Lit. "covered with earth."

g. N: "peoples," or "gentiles."

h. Or "an open way."

i. Or "thought."

j. H: "and were angry."

k. Gk. pinakidion.

ODE 24

9:3; 17:16f.;
23:18; 39:11;
41:3,15

17:9

- 1 The dove fluttered over the head of our Lord Messiah,<sup>a</sup>
because he was her Head.
- 2 And she sang over him,
and her voice was heard.<sup>b</sup>
- 3 Then the inhabitants were afraid,
and the foreigners were disturbed.
- 4 The bird began to fly,<sup>c</sup>
and every creeping thing died in its hole.
- 5 And the chasms were opened and closed;
and they were seeking the Lord as those who are about to give birth.<sup>d</sup>
- 6 But he was not given to them for nourishment, because he did not belong to them.
- 7 But the chasms were submerged in the submersion of the Lord, and they perished in that thought with which they had remained from the beginning.
- 8 For they labored from the beginning;
and the end of their labor was life.
- 9 And all of them who were lacking perished, because they were not able to express the word so that they might remain.
- 10 And the Lord destroyed the thoughts,
of all those who had not the truth with them.
- 11 For they were lacking in wisdom,
they who exalted themselves in their mind.<sup>e</sup>
- 12 So they were rejected,
because the truth was not with them.
- 13 For the Lord declared<sup>f</sup> his way,
and spread out his grace.
- 14 And those who recognized it knew his holiness.

Hallelujah.

ODE 25

- 1 I was rescued from my chains,<sup>a</sup>
and I fled unto you, O my God.<sup>b</sup>

24 a. H: "The dove fluttered over the Messiah
..."

b. 24:1f. is an allusion to Jesus' baptism.

c. N: "she flew."

d. Cf. IQH 3:16-18. The descensus ad inferos is portrayed in 42:11-20; cf. 17:6-16.

e. Or "heart."

f. Or "revealed."

25 a. C: "the bonds."

b. C: "O Lord."

- 2 Because you are the right hand of salvation,<sup>c</sup>
and my Helper. 7:3; 8:6; 21:2
- 3 You have restrained those who rise up against me,
and they did not appear again.<sup>d</sup>
- 4 Because your face was with me,
which saved me by your grace.<sup>e</sup>
- 5 But I was despised and rejected in the eyes of many,
and I was in their eyes like lead.
- 6 And I acquired strength from you,
and help.
- 7 A lamp you set for me both on my right and on my left,
so that there might not be in me anything that is not light.
- 8 And I was covered with the covering of your spirit,<sup>f</sup> and I removed from me my garments of skin.<sup>g</sup> 8:9
- 9 Because your right hand raised me,
and caused sickness to pass from me.
- 10 And I became mighty in your truth,<sup>h</sup>
and holy in your righteousness.
- 11 And all my adversaries<sup>i</sup> were afraid of me,<sup>j</sup> and I became the Lord's by the name of the Lord.<sup>k</sup>
- 12 And I was justified by his kindness,<sup>l</sup> and his rest<sup>m</sup> is for ever and ever. Heb 4:1
- Hallelujah.

ODE 26

- 1 I poured out praise to the Lord, because I am his own. Ps 45:1
- 2 And I will recite his holy ode,
because my heart is with him.
- 3 For his harp is in my hand,
and the odes of his rest shall not be silent.
- 4 I will call unto him with all my heart,
I will praise and exalt him with all my members. Ps 119:145

c. C: "For you became for me a right hand by which you saved me."

d. H: "I shall not see him." C: "They have not shown themselves."

e. Cf. Gen 32:30.

f. C: "of your mercy."

g. H: "the garments of skins." Cf. GTr 20:30-34 and IQS 4.7f.

h. H: "in truth"; C agrees with N.

i. Lit. "all those who are against me."

j. C: "my enemies became far from me."

k. C omits this line.

l. Or "gentleness," "sweetness," "gladness."

C: "your gentleness."

m. C: "your rest."

- 5 For from the East and unto the West
is his praise;
- 6 Also from the South and unto the North is his thanksgiving.<sup>a</sup>
- 7 Even from the peak of the summits and unto their end
is his perfection.
- 8 Who can write the odes of the Lord,
or who can read them?<sup>b</sup> 5ApocSyrPss 1:4
- 9 Or who can train himself for life,
so that he himself may be saved?
- 10 Or who can press upon the Most High,
so that he would recite from his mouth?
- 11 Who can interpret the wonders of the Lord?
Though he who interprets should perish,<sup>c</sup>
yet that which was interpreted will remain. Ps 106:2
- 12 For it suffices to perceive and be satisfied,
for the Odists stand in serenity;
- 13 Like a river which has an increasingly gushing spring,
and flows to the relief of them that seek it.

Hallelujah.

ODE 27

- 1 I extended my hands
and hallowed my Lord; 42:1-2
- 2 For the expansion of my hands
is his sign.<sup>a</sup>
- 3 And my extension
is the upright cross.

Hallelujah.

ODE 28

- 1 As the wings of doves over their nestlings,
and the mouths of their nestlings toward their mouths,
so also are the wings of the Spirit over my heart.
- 2 My heart continually refreshes itself and leaps for joy, like the babe who leaps for joy in his mother's womb.<sup>a</sup>

26 a. Or "confession," "praise," "acknowledgment."

b. Cf. Eccl 7:24; 2Bar 14:8f.; and 75:1-5.

c. Or "should be destroyed."

27 a. N: "it was hindered."

28 a. Cf. Ps 22:9f. and Lk 1:44.

3 I trusted, consequently I was at rest;
because trustful is he in whom I trusted.

4 He has greatly blessed me,
and my head is with him.

5 And the dagger shall not divide me from him, nor the sword.<sup>b</sup>

Rom 8:35

6 Because I am ready<sup>c</sup> before destruction comes,
and have been placed in his incorruptible arms.<sup>d</sup>

7 And immortal life embraced me,<sup>e</sup>
and kissed me.

8 And from that (life) is the Spirit which is within me.
And it cannot die because it is life.

Christ Speaks<sup>f</sup>

9 Those who saw me were amazed,
because I was persecuted.

10 And they thought that I had been swallowed up, because I appeared to them as one of the lost.

11 But my defamation
became my salvation.

12 And I became their abomination,
because there was no jealousy<sup>g</sup> in me.

13 Because I continually did good to every man
I was hated.

14 And they surrounded me like mad dogs,
those who in stupidity<sup>h</sup> attack their masters.

Ps 22:16

15 Because their mind is depraved,
and their sense is perverted.

16 But I was carrying water in my right hand, and their bitterness I endured<sup>i</sup> by my sweetness.

17 And I did not perish, because I was not their brother, nor was my birth like theirs.<sup>j</sup>

18 And they sought my death but were unsuccessful,<sup>k</sup> because I was older than their memory;<sup>l</sup>
and in vain did they cast lots<sup>m</sup> against me.

Ps 22:18

b. Cf. Ps 22:20.

c. H: "I made ready."

d. Or "wing," "bosom," "side."

e. H: "and they went out."

f. See n. e to OdesSol 8.

g. Or "zeal."

h. H: "because they do not know."

i. N: "I disregarded."

j. N: "nor did they acknowledge my birth."

k. Lit. "they did not find it possible."

l. N: "their garment."

m. H: "they threatened"; a marginal n. in H agrees with N.

19 And those who were after me<sup>a</sup> sought in vain to destroy the memorial of him who was before them.<sup>o</sup>

Jn 1:30; 8:57-59

20 Because the mind of the Most High cannot be prepossessed;<sup>p</sup> and his heart is superior to all wisdom.

Hallelujah.

ODE 29

1 The Lord is my hope,
I shall not be ashamed in him.<sup>a</sup>

Pss 31:1; 71:1
8:15; 9:7

2 For according to his praise he made me,
and according to his grace<sup>b</sup> even so he gave to me.

3 And according to his mercies he raised me,
and according to his great honor he lifted me up.

4 And he caused me to ascend from the depths of Sheol,
and from the mouth of Death he drew me.

5 And I humbled my enemies,
and he justified me by his grace.

6 For I believed in the Lord's Messiah,
and considered that he is the Lord.

7 And he declared to me<sup>c</sup> his sign, and he led me by his light.<sup>d</sup>

8 And he gave me the scepter of his power,<sup>e</sup>
that I might subdue the thoughts of the gentiles, and humble the strength of the mighty.

10:5

9 To make war by his word,<sup>f</sup>
and to take victory by his power.<sup>g</sup>

8:7; 9:6; 29:9

10 And the Lord overthrew my enemy<sup>h</sup> by his word;<sup>i</sup> and he became like the dust which a breeze carries off.

Ps 1:4

11 And I gave praise to the Most High, because he has magnified his servant and the son of his maidservant.

Ps 116:16; cf.
Lk 1:38

Hallelujah.

n. N omits "me."

o. Cf. Jn 1:30.

p. Or "be anticipated."

29 a. Or "I shall not be confused in him."

b. Or "goodness," "kindness."

c. H: "to him."

d. Perhaps "light" should be capitalized as in 10:1 and 36:3.

e. Cf. Ps 110:2.

f. Or "Word"; see n. e to OdesSol 7.

g. Cf. 1QM 11.4.

h. H: "my enemies."

i. Or "Word"; see n. f above.

ODE 30

- 1 Fill for yourselves water from the living spring<sup>a</sup> of the Lord, because it has been opened for you. 1En 48:1-10;
Rev 21:6
- 2 And come all you thirsty and take a drink, and rest beside the spring<sup>b</sup> of the Lord. 6:6-18; Rev 22:17
- 3 Because it is pleasing and sparkling,
and perpetually pleases the self.<sup>c</sup>
- 4 For more refreshing is its water than honey, and the honeycomb of bees is not to be compared with it; Ps 19:10; Sir 24:20
- 5 Because it flowed from the lips of the Lord,
and it named from the heart of the Lord.
- 6 And it came boundless and invisible, and until it was set in the middle they knew it not.<sup>d</sup>
- 7 Blessed are they who have drunk from it,
and have rested by it.

Hallelujah.

ODE 31

- 1 Chasms vanished before the Lord,
and darkness was destroyed by his appearance.
- 2 Error erred and perished on account of him;
and Contempt received<sup>a</sup> no path,
for it was submerged by the truth of the Lord.
- 3 He opened his mouth and spoke grace and joy;
and recited a new chant to his name.
- 4 Then he raised his voice toward the Most High, and offered to him those that had become sons through him. Jn 17:1-9
- 5 And his face<sup>b</sup> was justified,
because thus his Holy Father had given to him.

Christ Speaks<sup>c</sup>

- 6 Come forth, you who have been afflicted,
and receive joy.
- 7 And possess yourselves through grace,
and take unto you immortal life.

30 a. Or "fountain." Cf. IQH 8.14.

b. Or "fountain."

c. Or "the soul," "the breath of life."

d. Or "And until he was set in the middle they knew him not." Cf. Jn 1:26.

31 a. H: "I gave it (her) . . ." or "she was given it . . ."

b. Gk. prosōpon.

c. See n. e to OdesSol 8.

- 8 And they condemned me when I stood up,
me who had not been condemned.<sup>d</sup>
- 9 Then they divided<sup>e</sup> my spoil, though nothing was owed them. Ps 22:18
- 10 But I endured and held my peace and was silent,
that I might not be disturbed by them.
- 11 But I stood undisturbed like a solid rock, which is continuously pounded by columns of waves and endures.<sup>f</sup>
- 12 And I bore their bitterness because of humility;
that I might save my nation and instruct it.
- 13 And that I might not nullify the promises to the patriarchs, to whom I was promised for the salvation of their offspring. Rom 15:8
- Hallelujah.

ODE 32

- 1 To the blessed ones the joy is from their heart,
and light from him who dwells in them;
- 2 And the Word from the truth who is self-originate,<sup>a</sup> 7:7; 10:1; 12:5,
10,12; Jn 1:1-18
- 3 Because he has been strengthened
by the holy power of the Most High;
and he is unshaken for ever and ever.
- Hallelujah.

ODE 33

- 1 But again Grace was swift and repudiated the Corruptor,<sup>a</sup> 38:9; Rev 9:11
and descended upon him to renounce him.
- 2 And he caused utter<sup>b</sup> destruction before him,
and corrupted all his construction.<sup>c</sup>
- 3 And he stood on the peak of a summit and cried aloud
from one end of the earth to the other.
- 4 Then he drew to him all those who obeyed him,
for<sup>d</sup> he did not appear as the Evil One.
- 5 However the perfect Virgin<sup>e</sup> stood,
who was preaching and summoning<sup>f</sup> and saying:

d. Or "who had been found not guilty."
e. N: "and he divided."
f. H: "pounded by waves and endures."
32 a. Lit. "he who is from himself"; N omits
"from." Cf. Jn 1:1-18.

33 a. Or "dismissed the Destroyer."
b. Lit. "he has destroyed the destruction."
c. Or "composition," "work."
d. Or "and," "then," "yet."
e. Cf. the fourth vision of the ShepHerm; contrast Prov 1:20f.; 8:1-4.
f. N: "and shouting."

- 6 O you sons of men, return,
and you their daughters, come.
- 7 And abandon the ways of that Corruptor,<sup>g</sup>
and approach me.
- 8 And I will enter into you,
and bring you forth from destruction,
and make you wise in the ways of truth. 11:3
- 9 Be not corrupted
nor perish.
- 10 Hear<sup>h</sup> me and be saved,
for I am proclaiming unto you the grace of God.
- 11 And through me you will be saved and become blessed.
I am your judge;
- 12 And they who have put me on will not be rejected,<sup>i</sup>
but they will possess incorruption in the new world. 4:6
- 13 My elect ones have walked with me,
and my ways I shall make known to them who seek me;
and I shall promise them my name.

Hallelujah.

ODE 34

- 1 There is no hard way where there is a simple heart,
nor barrier for upright thoughts,
- 2 Nor whirlwind in the depth of the enlightened thought.
- 3 Where one is surrounded entirely<sup>a</sup> (by) pleasing country,
there is nothing divided in him.
- 4 The likeness<sup>b</sup> of that which is below is that which is above. AscenIs 7:10
- 5 For everything is from above,
and from below there is nothing,
but it is considered<sup>c</sup> to be by those in whom there is no understanding.<sup>d</sup>
- 6 Grace has been revealed for your salvation.
Believe and live and be saved.

Hallelujah.

g. Cf. IQM 14.10.

h. Or "Obey me . . ."

i. Or "will not be rejected . . ."

34 a. Or "on every side."

b. Or "form."

c. Or "believed."

d. Or "knowledge."

ODE 35

- 1 The sprinkling<sup>a</sup> of the Lord overshadowed me with serenity,<sup>b</sup>
and it caused a cloud of peace to stand over my head;
- 2 That it might guard me at all times.
And it became salvation<sup>c</sup> to me.
- 3 Everyone was disturbed and afraid,
and there flowed from them smoke and judgment.
- 4 But I was tranquil<sup>d</sup> in the Lord's legion;<sup>e</sup> more than shade<sup>f</sup> was he to me, and more than foundation.
- 5 And I was carried like a child by its mother;
and he gave me milk, the dew of the Lord.<sup>g</sup> 19:1-5
- 6 And I grew strong in his favor,
and rested in his perfection.
- 7 And I extended my hands in the ascent of myself,<sup>h</sup> 37:1
and I directed myself near<sup>i</sup> the Most High, and I was saved near<sup>j</sup> him. 36:6

Hallelujah.

ODE 36

- 1 I rested on the Spirit of the Lord,
and she raised me up to heaven;<sup>a</sup>
- 2 And caused me to stand on my feet in the Lord's high place, before his perfection and his glory,
where I continued praising (him)<sup>b</sup> by the composition of his odes.

Christ Speaks<sup>c</sup>

- 3 (The Spirit) brought me forth before the Lord's face, and because<sup>d</sup> I was the Son of Man,
I was named the Light, the Son of God;<sup>e</sup> 1En 48:2-10 10:1
- 4 Because I was most praised among the praised;<sup>f</sup>
and the greatest among the great ones.<sup>g</sup>

35 a. Or "fine rain," "gentle showers."

b. H: "with rest."

c. H: "in salvation."

d. Or "I was silent."

e. Gk. tagma.

f. N: "dew."

g. 4Ezra 8:10 refers to milk as "the fruit of the breasts." 1En 39:5 mentions "mercy like dew upon the earth."

h. Cf. Tertullian De oratione 14. Or "And I spread out my hands in the ascent of my soul . . ."

i. Or "toward," "with."

j. Or "toward," "with."

36 a. Or "height"; H: "on high."

b. See n. c to OdesSol 6.

c. See n. e to OdesSol 8.

d. Or "when," "after," "although," "while."

e. Cf. the discussion in the Introduction, under "Relation to apocryphal books."

f. Or "the most glorified among the glorious ones . . ." H: "the most glorified among those who glorify . . ." Cf. Heb 1:3f.

g. Cf. 2En 22:10 (13); 3Mac 2:2, "holy among the holy ones"; and ActsThom 101f., 105.

5 For according to the greatness of the Most High, so she made me;
and according to his newness he renewed me.

6 And he anointed me with his perfection;
and I became one of those who are near him.

21:7; 35:7

7 And my mouth was opened like a cloud of dew, and my heart gushed forth<sup>h</sup> (like)<sup>i</sup> a gusher of righteousness.

8 And my approach was in peace,
and I was established in the spirit of providence.

Hallelujah.

ODE 37

1 I extended my hands toward the Lord,<sup>a</sup>
and toward the Most High I raised my voice.

35:7

2 And I spoke with the lips of my heart,
and he heard me when my voice reached him.

PssSol 15:5(3);
PrMan 1:11

3 His Word came toward me,<sup>b</sup>
that which gave me the fruits of my labors;

7:7; 10:1; 12:5,
10,12; 32:2

4 And gave me rest by the grace of the Lord.

Hallelujah.

ODE 38

1 I went up into the light of Truth as into a chariot, and the Truth led me and caused me to come.<sup>a</sup>

2 And caused me to pass over chasms and gulfs,<sup>b</sup>
and saved me from cliffs and valleys.<sup>c</sup>

3 And became for me a haven<sup>d</sup> of salvation, and set me on the place<sup>e</sup> of immortal life.

4 And he went with me and caused me to rest and did not allow me to err;
because he was and is the Truth.

5 And there was no danger<sup>f</sup> for me because I constantly walked with him;
and I did not err in anything because I obeyed him.

6 For Error fled from him, and never met him.<sup>g</sup>

h. Lit. "to vomit," "reject."

i. This adverb is sometimes assumed in Semitic texts.

37 a. H: "my Lord."

b. See n. e to OdesSol 7.

38 a. Cf. Ps 43:3.

b. N: "over empty chasms and gulfs."

c. Lit. "ground liable to be flooded."

d. Gk. limên.

e. Lit. "step," "degree," "condition." H: "arms."

f. Gk. kindunos; cf. 39:8.

g. Lit. "And it constantly did not meet him."

- 7 But Truth was proceeding on the upright way,
and whatever I did not understand he declared to me:
- 8 All the drugs of error,
and pains of death which are considered<sup>h</sup> sweetness.
- 9 And the corrupting of the Corruptor,
I saw when the Bride who was corrupting<sup>i</sup> was adorned,
and the Bridegroom who corrupts and is corrupted. 33:1; Rev 9:11
- 10 And I asked the Truth, Who are these?
And he said to me: This is the Deceiver<sup>j</sup> and the Error.<sup>k</sup>
- 11 And they imitate the Beloved and his Bride, and they cause the world to err and corrupt it. Ascens 4:6
- 12 And they invite many to the wedding feast,<sup>l</sup> and allowed them to drink the wine of their intoxication;<sup>m</sup>
- 13 So they cause them to vomit up their wisdom and their knowledge,
and make them senseless.<sup>n</sup>
- 14 Then they abandon them;
and so they stumble about like mad<sup>o</sup> and corrupted men.
- 15 Since there is no understanding in them,
neither do they seek it.
- 16 But I have been made wise so as not to fall into the hands of the deceivers,<sup>p</sup>
and I myself rejoiced because the Truth had gone with me.
- 17 For I was established and lived and was saved, and my foundations were laid on account of the Lord's hand;
because he has planted me.<sup>q</sup> 11:18-22
- 18 For he set the root,
and watered it and adapted it and blessed it,
and its fruits will be forever.
- 19 It penetrated deeply and sprang up and spread out,<sup>r</sup>
and it was full and was enlarged.
- 20 And the Lord alone was praised,
in his planting<sup>s</sup> and in his cultivation;
- 21 In his care and in the blessing of his lips,
in the beautiful planting of his right hand;

h. H: "they who think."

i. H: "who was being corrupted."

j. Or "Impostor," "Seducer." In TJob 3:3 the Evil One (2:7 and 5:1) is one who deceives; cf. ApMos 39:2.

k. Or "one who is straying."

l. Or "banquet," "marriage."

m. Cf. 38:9-12 and 42:8f. with ActsThom 11-16.

n. Lit. "no mind," "no sense."

o. H: "Commanders."

p. H: "Deceiver."

q. Cf. 1Cor 3:6-10 and PssSol 14; see the Introduction above, under "Relation to apocryphal books."

r. H: "it deepened and raised and enriched."

s. Cf. IQH 6.15; 8.5; IQS 8.5; 11.8.

22 And in the attainment<sup>t</sup> of his planting,
and in the understanding of his mind.

Hallelujah.

ODE 39

1 Raging rivers (are like)<sup>a</sup> the power of the Lord;
they bring headlong those who despise him.

2 And entangle their paths, and destroy their crossings.<sup>b</sup>

3 And catch their bodies,
and corrupt their natures.

4 For they are more swift than lightnings,<sup>c</sup>
even more rapid.

5 But those who cross them in faith shall not be disturbed.<sup>d</sup>

6 And those who walk on them faultlessly shall not be shaken.

PssSol 6:5

7 Because the sign on them is the Lord, and the sign is the Way for those who cross in the name of the Lord.

11:3

8 Therefore, put on the name of the Most High and know him,
and you shall cross without danger;<sup>e</sup>
because the rivers shall be obedient to you.

9 The Lord has bridged them by his word,<sup>f</sup>
and he walked and crossed them on foot.

10 And his footsteps were standing firm upon the waters, and were not
destroyed;
but they are like a beam<sup>g</sup> (of wood) that is constructed<sup>h</sup> on truth.<sup>i</sup>

11 On this side and on that the waves were lifted up, but the footsteps of our Lord Messiah were standing firm.

9:3; 17:17; 24:1;
41:3,15

12 And they are neither blotted out,
nor destroyed.

13 And the Way has been appointed for those who cross over after him,
and for those who adhere to the path of his faith;
and who adore his name.

11:3; 39:7

Hallelujah.

t. Or "finding," "discovery," "existence."

39 a. See n. h to OdesSol 36.

b. Or "ways," "passages," "fords."

c. H: "lightning."

d. 2Ezra 8:50-53 also preserves the claim that the Lord protects his children during a journey.

Cf. Tob 5:16-22.

e. Gk. kindunos; cf. 38:5.

f. Or "Word"; see n. e to OdesSol 7.

g. Or "cross."

h. Or "firmly fixed."

i. This vs. appears to refer obliquely to the tradition that Jesus walked on water.

ODE 40

- 1 As honey drips from the honeycomb of bees,
and milk flows from the woman who loves her children,
so also is my hope upon you, O my God.
- 2 As a spring<sup>a</sup> gushes forth its water,
so my heart gushes forth the praise of the Lord,
and my lips bring forth praise to him.
- 3 And my tongue becomes sweet by his anthems,
and [my] me[mbe]rs are anointed by his odes.<sup>b</sup>
- 4 My<sup>c</sup> face rejoices in his exultation,
and my spirit exults in his love,
and my nature shines in him.
- 5 And he who is afraid will trust in him,
and salvation will be established in him.<sup>d</sup>
- 6 And his possession<sup>e</sup> is immortal life,
and those who receive it are incorruptible.
- Hallelujah.

ODE 41

- 1 Let all the Lord's babes praise him,<sup>a</sup>
and let us<sup>b</sup> receive the truth of his faith.
- 2 And his children shall be acknowledged<sup>c</sup> by him,
therefore let us sing by his love.
- 3 We live<sup>d</sup> in the Lord by his grace,
and life we receive by his Messiah.
- 4 For a great day has shined upon us,
and wonderful is he who has given to us<sup>e</sup> of his glory.
- 5 Let us, therefore, all of us agree in the name of the Lord,
and let us honor him in his goodness.
- 6 And let our faces shine in his light,
and let our hearts meditate in his love,
by night and by day.
- 7 Let us exult with the exultation of the Lord.

9:3; 17:17; 24:1;
39:11; 41:15

Ps 1:2

40 a. Or "fountain."

b. H: "And my tongue by his odes."

c. N omits.

d. Or "And redemption will be assured for him."

e. Or "profit," "gain."

41 a. Lit. "They will praise the Lord, all of his infants." N: "Let us praise."

b. N: "and let them receive."

c. Or "shall be known . . ."

d. N: "we rejoice."

e. N omits "to us."

Christ Speaks<sup>f</sup>

8 All those who see me will be amazed, because I am from another race.<sup>g</sup> 17:6; 28:17f.

9 For the Father of Truth remembered me;
he who possessed me from the beginning.<sup>h</sup>

10 For his riches begat me,
and the thought of his heart.

The Odist Speaks<sup>i</sup>

11 And his Word is with us in all our way, the Savior who gives life and does not reject ourselves. 7:7; 10:1; 12:5; 10,12; 32:2;
37:3; 41:14
Jn 6:33-37

12 The Man who humbled himself, but was raised because of his own righteousness. 8:5; Phil 2:6-9

13 The Son of the Most High appeared in the perfection of his Father. 3:7; 7:15; 19:2; 8; 23:18,22;
42:15

14 And light dawned from the Word that was before time in him. 41:11; Jn 1:1

15 The Messiah in truth is one.
And he was known before the foundations of the world,
that he might give life to persons forever by the truth of his name. 9:3; 17:17; 24:1; 39:11; 41:3
Jn 17:24b

Doxology<sup>j</sup>

16 A new chant (is) for the Lord from them that love him. PssSol 3:2

Hallelujah.

ODE 42

1 I extended my hands and approached my Lord, because the stretching out of my hands is his sign. 27:1-3

2 And my extension is the common<sup>a</sup> cross,<sup>b</sup> that was lifted up on the way of the Righteous One. 1En 38:2; 53:6

Christ Speaks<sup>c</sup>

3 And I became useless to those<sup>d</sup> who knew me [not], because I shall hide myself from those who possessed me not.

4 And I will be with those who love me.

f. See n. e to OdesSol 8.

g. Gk. genos.

h. Cf. Prov 8:22f.

i. and j. I add this notation.

42 a. Or "simple," "erect," "plain."

b. Or "wood," "tree."

c. See n. e to OdesSol 8.

d. H omits the words between "to those" and "from those."

- 5 All my persecutors have died, and they who trusted in me sought me, because I am living.<sup>e</sup>
- 6 Then I arose and am with them,
and will speak by their mouths.
- 7 For they have rejected those who persecute them;
and I threw over them the yoke of my love.
- 8 Like the arm of the bridegroom over the bride,
so is my yoke over those who know me.
- 9 And as the bridal feast<sup>f</sup> is spread out by the bridal pair's home,
so is my love by those who believe in me.
- 10 I was not rejected although I was considered to be so,
and I did not perish although they thought it of me.
- 11 Sheol saw me and was shattered, and Death ejected me and many with me. 15:9; Rev
20:13f.
- 12 I have been vinegar and bitterness to it,
and I went down with it as far as its depth.
- 13 Then the feet and the head it released, because it was<sup>g</sup> not able to endure my face.<sup>h</sup>
- 14 And I made a congregation of living among his dead;
and I spoke with them by living lips;
in order that my word may not fail.
- 15 And those who had died ran toward me;
and they cried out and said, "Son of God, have pity on us. 3:7; 7:15; 19:2, 8; 23:18,22;
41:13
- 16 "And deal with us according to your kindness,
and bring us out from the chains of darkness.
- 17 "And open for us the door
by which we may go forth to you, for we perceive that our death does not approach you. 17:9; 24:5; Jn
10:7-10; Rev
3:7f.
- 18 "May we also be saved with you,
because you are our Savior."
- 19 Then I heard their voice,
and placed their faith in my heart.<sup>i</sup>
- 20 And I placed my name upon their head,
because they are free<sup>j</sup> and they are mine.

Doxology<sup>k</sup>

Hallelujah.

e. Or "pure."

f. Or "bed," "couch," "bridal chamber."

g. H: "they were."

h. Gk. prosōpon.

i. H omits vs. 19b.

j. Or "nobles," "princes."

k. I add this notation.

SUPPLEMENT

FRAGMENTS OF LOST JUDEO-HELLENISTIC WORKS

EDITOR'S INTRODUCTION

BY J. H. CHARLESWORTH

After the Babylonian exile Judaism increasingly began to reflect ideas usually associated with the Persians, Greeks, and Romans, often filtered through the indigenous cultures of Syria and Egypt. Many of the fascinatingly diverse Jewish documents composed during this period are now lost. Fortunately some of them—most notably the Dead Sea Scrolls<sup>1</sup>—have been recovered; a few others are represented by the fragments presented here.<sup>2</sup>

These excerpts reward the attentive reader. From them we learn that Greek epic poetry was written by Jews, who like Philo the Epic Poet mastered the hexameters of the Greek poets and who like Ezekiel the Tragedian demonstrated proficiency in iambic trimeters. In them we are introduced to a Jewish philosopher, Aristobulus, who combined Greek philosophical systems (especially those of Pythagoras, Plato, and some Stoics) with Jewish traditions (particularly those represented by Proverbs, Sirach, the Wisdom of Solomon, Pseudo-Phocylides, and 4 Maccabees). Through them we are ushered into a strange world of unusual traditions, notably through Demetrius, who claimed that the weapons used in the conquest of Canaan were taken by the Israelites from drowning Egyptians, and through Artapanus, who transmitted the idea that Egyptian culture—including its idolatry and polytheism—was shaped by Abraham, Joseph, and Moses. Generally characteristic of these excerpts, small remnants of once voluminous works, is an apologetic claim that the best Greek ideas are derived from the Jews. This theme, of course, recurs often in the better-known authors Philo of Alexandria and Josephus.<sup>3</sup>

Additional Abbreviations

In addition to the abbreviations listed in the beginning of this volume, the ones listed below have been chosen to simplify the presentation and facilitate the reading of the following works:

Primary

- F. = Fragment
- Plato Tim = Plato, Timaeus
- Plato Apol = Plato, Apologia
- Plato Theag = Plato, Theages
- Hesiod Theog = Hesiod, Theogonia

Secondary

- Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor = J. Freudenthal, Hellenistische Studien 1, 2: Alexander Polyhistor; Breslau, 1875.
- Denis, PVTG 3 = A.-M. Denis (ed.), Fragmenta pseudepigraphorum quae supersunt graeca, PVTG 3; Leiden, 1970.

<sup>1</sup> See the authoritative and succinct introduction by F. M. Cross, Jr., Scrolls from the Wilderness of the Dead Sea (San Francisco [ASOR], 1969).

<sup>2</sup> I wish to express my appreciation to John Strugnell for helping me to edit the following contributions by participants in his seminar at Harvard University and to organize the presentations. I also am indebted to my editorial assistants, Steve Robinson, Gary Martin, and especially Dave Fiensy, who helped me check the translations and polish the discussions.

<sup>3</sup> Works by Philo and Josephus are available in numerous English editions; especially see the translations in the LCL.

Jacoby, FGH = F. Jacoby, Die Fragmente der griechischen Historiker; 3 vols., Berlin, 1940–43; reprinted Leiden, 1954–64.

Mras, GCS 43, 1–2 = K. Mras (ed.), Eusebius Werke, Achter Band: Die Praeparatio Evangelica, GCS 43, 1–2; Berlin, 1954–56.

CONTENTS

|                     |  |
|---------------------|--|
| Poetry       | Philo the Epic PoetTheodotus   |
| Oracle       | Orphica  |
| Drama        | Ezekiel the Tragedian  |
| Other        | Fragments of Pseudo-Greek Poets  |
| Philosophy   | Aristobulus  |
| Chronography | Demetrius the Chronographer  |
| History      | Aristeas the ExegeteEupolemusPseudo-EupolemusCleodemus Malchus |
| Romance      | Artapanus  |
| Appendix     | Pseudo-Hecataeus   |

INTRODUCTION

GENERAL INTRODUCTION, WITH A NOTE ON ALEXANDER POLYHISTOR

BY J. STRUGNELL

The works presented in the following section share certain characteristics:

- a) They were all written by Jews;<sup>1</sup>
- b) They were composed in Greek and in literary forms known elsewhere in Greek literature;
- c) They are not pseudepigraphic; they were not written under another's name (although, by accident, some may now be falsely ascribed and so in another sense pseudepigraphical), and the names attached to them are probably the real names of their authors;<sup>2</sup>
- d) They are only fragmentarily preserved.<sup>3</sup>

The introduction to each fragmentary work will indicate the authors who have preserved it for us in its extant forms. As will be seen, without Pseudo-Justin, Clement of Alexandria, and Eusebius of Caesarea, our knowledge of this chapter in Jewish literary history would be much poorer. However, in most cases these authors had only indirect knowledge of the works that they have transmitted to us. Clement and Eusebius may have known Aristobulus (see below) directly, but though knowledge of the Orphic poem and of the fragments of epic, tragic, and comic verse will have reached Clement and Pseudo-Justin independently, each probably reflects the use of intermediary anthologies composed for apologetic purposes. The most important intermediary, however, was one Alexander Polyhistor, who is responsible for almost all our knowledge of ten of these fragmentary authors, and whose work On the Jews is known principally through the long excerpts made from it in the ninth book of the Preparation for the Gospel, by Eusebius. Polyhistor was certainly known also to Clement, and his knowledge of some of these same authors was also in all probability mediated through the same work, On the Jews.

Cornelius Alexander of Miletus, surnamed Polyhistor, was probably born there between 112 and 102 B.C.; brought young as a captive to Rome and freed around 82 B.C., he pursued an active scholarly career there until his death, sometime in the thirties.<sup>4</sup> The titles of over twenty-five of his numerous compositions are preserved; these suggest that he was mainly <sup>1</sup> Most of "Pseudo-Hecataeus" perhaps constitutes an exception, and may not belong in this section, or even in the present vol. It is, however, included here out of respect for the contrary judgment of most scholars, and for the convenience and interest of the reader.

<sup>2</sup> Exceptions are many of the epic, tragic, and comic fragments and the Orphic poem; for similar but non-fragmentary Jewish pseudepigrapha in these areas, compare the SibOr and Ps-Phoc. The author of "Pseudo-Eupolemus," despite modern scholarly terminology, did not originally intend to pass off his work as being by Eupolemus; in fact he probably was Eupolemus himself. However, the fragments of "Pseudo-Eupolemus" have been edited here separately from those certainly attributed to Eupolemus and under their conventional title, "Pseudo-Eupolemus," because that is where most readers will expect to find them.

<sup>3</sup> Here again the Orphic poem forms an exception; it is preserved in its entirety by several works, but usually inside a quotation of a larger fragment (cf. the edition of Aristobulus in this section). Whether this poem once belonged to a larger collection of Jewish Orphic poems is uncertain.

<sup>4</sup> The guess by some that Polyhistor was Jewish lacks any basis at all.

interested in history, geography, and ethnography. We have, for example, fragments of his books On Rome, On Illyria, On the Black Sea, On Bithynia, On Paphlagonia, On Phrygia, On Caria, On Lycia, On Cilicia, On Syria, On the Jews (as well as others on Egypt, Libya, Crete); other types of work are also attested, on philological topics (a Commentary on the Poetess Corinna) and on philosophical ones (e.g. on the succession of the leading philosophers).

Some have suggested that Polyhistor's works on eastern nations (including his On the Jews) would have been written at about the time of Pompey's oriental campaigns (66–62 B.C.), to satisfy Roman curiosity about the history and culture of the newly occupied lands. No internal evidence in his On the Jews, however, supports this date, and if Clement is citing Demetrius (F. 6) and Eupolemus (F. 5) from Polyhistor, as is very possible, then a date after 40 B.C. is demanded (and Polyhistor himself would most likely have been the one responsible for the chronological updating of Eupolemus). In any case, either the sixties or the forties is the latest possible date for the works quoted by Polyhistor in his On the Jews; the scattered internal evidence for some of these fragmentary works, as will be seen, usually pushes us a century or more earlier.

The nature of Polyhistor's works in general is discussed by others;<sup>5</sup> his treatise On the Jews (as far as we can see from Eusebius' excerpts) seems to have been arranged in chronological order, going from Abraham (or earlier) to at least the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar; it may well have contained further material from the Persian and hellenistic periods also. Although Polyhistor arranged his excerpts from his sources in chronological order, their content is also of ethnographic, cultural, and topographic interest.

His weaknesses as a historian—he was no critical Polybius—become for us virtues; he seems to have been primarily a compiler of quotations, a grammatikos, as ancient tradition puts it. But how reliable is he in making quotations? Does he quote verbatim or modify to suit his own purposes? We have almost no places where we can check his accuracy in citation; the originals from which he quoted are not available for comparison. The poetic quotations, where the laws of meter give us closer control over what the original text must have read, do not seem to have suffered worse than any other Greek poetical text with a similarly narrow manuscript basis. The prose passages have almost always been turned into indirect speech; in addition to that, they have suffered accidental haplographies and corruptions<sup>6</sup> due to the ignorance or confusion of scribes, or even of Polyhistor himself; but these are accidents; no bias in doctoring his sources, or historiographical tendency in abbreviating them, can be detected.

These excerpts, then, require careful text-critical study; they may sometimes require emendation to repair the damages suffered by the texts before and after Polyhistor's time.<sup>7</sup> It may further be that Polyhistor did not select from his sources those passages that would have most interested a modern historian of Judaism, or even a more critical ancient one. But without him, we would have nothing at all from most of these authors and know nothing of the variegated literary activity that they reveal; for what he has given us, then, the (generally reliable) old grammatikos still deserves our thanks.

<sup>5</sup> The best presentation of the totality of Alexander Polyhistor's work is to be found in Jacoby, FGH, commentary to no. 273. For other discussions concerning more specifically his On the Jews, consult Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 16–35; and B. Z. Wacholder, Eupolemus: A Study of Judaeo-Greek Literature (New York, 1974), pp. 44–52.

<sup>6</sup> For a good instance, see the very corrupt F. 2 of Demetrius.

<sup>7</sup> To establish the texts, note that Clement exists in a single independent MS and occasional ancient citations (in Eusebius and elsewhere). Pseudo-Justin's De Monarchia has a two-branched stemma (CE//F) and his Cohortatio another two-branched one (GD//ABCEF). Eusebius' Praeparatio is equally two-branched, B//I/ON (but B is often missing). The Tübingen Theosophy (important for Ps-Orph) exists, like Clement, in a single MS. The establishment of the text of the archetype of the MS tradition of these later authors, and then of their intermediate sources (such as Alexander Polyhistor) is relatively easy—but for the texts of the original authors we will often need further critical (i.e. historical and conjectural) work before we may be confident of having restored the earliest form of the Jewish documents themselves.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Dalbert, P. Die Theologie der hellenistisch-jüdischen Missionsliteratur unter Ausschluss von Philo und Josephus. Theologische Forschung 4; Hamburg-Volksdorf, 1954.
- Denis, A.-M. (ed.). Fragmenta pseudepigraphorum quae supersunt graeca una cum historicorum et auctorum judaeorum hellenistarum fragmentis. PVTG 3; Leiden, 1970.
- Fraser, P. M. Ptolemaic Alexandria. 3 vols.; Oxford, 1972.
- Freudenthal, J. Alexander Polyhistor und die von ihm erhaltenen Reste jüdischer und samaritanischer Geschichtswerke. Hellenistische Studien 1-2; Breslau, 1874-75.
- Gutman, Y. The Beginnings of Jewish-Hellenistic Literature. Jerusalem, 1963; vol. 1 [in modern Heb.].
- Hengel, M. Judaism and Hellenism, trans. J. Bowden. 2 vols.; Philadelphia, 1974.
- Jacoby, F. (ed.). Die Fragmente der griechischen Historiker. 3 vols.; Berlin, 1923-.
- Mras, K. (ed.). Eusebius Werke, Achter Band: Die Praeparatio Evangelica. GCS 43, 1-2. Berlin, 1954-56.
- Stählin, O. (ed.). Clemens Alexandrinus, Stromata I-VI. GCS 52; Berlin, 1960.
- Walter, N. "Fragmente jüdisch-hellenistischer Exegeten: Aristobulos, Demetrios, Aristeas," JSHRZ 3.2 (1975).
- . Untersuchungen zu den Fragmenten der jüdisch-hellenistischen Historiker (typescript). Halle, 1968.

POETRY

PHILO THE EPIC POET

(Third to Second Century B.C.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY H. ATTRIDGE

From an epic poem of Philo there remain six brief fragments, providing a total of twenty-four hexameter verses. The first two of these fragments deal with Abraham and, more particularly, with the binding of Isaac, recounted in Genesis 22. The third fragment mentions God's beneficence to the patriarchs and especially to Joseph. The last three fragments focus on Jerusalem and its remarkable water-supply system. To judge from the title of the poem mentioned in Eusebius, On Jerusalem, the focus of the whole epic was the city and its history.

Text and original language

The fragments of Philo's work are preserved in Eusebius, Praeparatio Evangelica 9. Eusebius in turn depended on Alexander Polyhistor's work of the first century B.C. The hexameter verses are written in a pedantic and obscure Greek. Unusual words combine with opaque allusions and a bombastic style to render much of the poetry barely intelligible. Textual corruption no doubt has contributed to the difficulty of these fragments, but much of the obscurity is due to Philo's attempt to imitate the erudite epics of the Alexandrian period.

Date and provenance

It is impossible to be precise about the time and place of Philo's composition. Both Josephus (Apion 1:218) and Clement of Alexandria (Strom 1.141.3) mention a Philo in connection with the historians Demetrius and Eupolemus. This Philo may, however, be different from the epic poet. The testimonia, like the fragments in Eusebius, depend on Alexander Polyhistor or another source of the first century B.C. Philo certainly lived before Alexander's literary activity; the association of the poet with the historians of the late-third and mid-second centuries B.C. suggests that Philo may have lived in the same period.

The place of Philo's composition is uncertain. Although the interest in Jerusalem in the fragments of the poem may be indicative of a Palestinian provenance, Jews everywhere had the same high regard for the sacred city. The literary character of the poem makes it more likely that it was composed in a center of Greek culture such as Alexandria.

Theological and historical importance

Philo's poem contains nothing novel or striking in its theology. The highly laudatory language used of Abraham and his offspring in the first fragments illustrates well the panegyric quality characteristic of Jewish apologetic literature, with its celebration of the main figures in Jewish tradition. The epic form indicates once again the efforts made by Jews of the hellenistic period to adopt features of Greek culture to give expression to their own self-understanding. Another example of similar literary activity appears in the epic poem of Theodotus.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 168f.
 Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 53–55.
 Denis, Introduction, pp. 270f.

TEXTS

- Denis, A.-M. Fragmenta pseudepigraphorum graeca. Leiden, 1970; pp. 203f.
 Mras, K. Eusebius Werke 8: Die Praeparatio Evangelica. GCS 43.1 and 2; Berlin, 1954/56.

STUDIES

- Dalbert, P. Die Theologie der hellenistisch-judischen Missionsliteratur unter Ausschluss von Philo und Josephus. Hamburg-Volksdorf, 1954; pp. 33–35.
 Gutman, Y. The Beginnings of the Jewish-Hellenistic Literature. Jerusalem, 1963; vol. 1, pp. 245–61.
 ———. "Philo the Epic Poet," Scripta Hierosolymitana. Jerusalem, 1954; pp. 36–63.
 Lohse, E. "Philo," RGG<sup>3</sup>; vol. 5, col. 347.
 Ludwich, A. De Philonis carmine graeco-judaico. Königsberg, 1900.
 Wacholder, B. Z. "Philo (The Elder)," EncyJud; vol. 13, cols. 407f.
 Walter, N. "Epiker Philon," JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 112–14.

TRANSLATION

Fragments 1–2 Eusebius, Praeparatio Evangelica 9.20.1. Philo speaks on this subject<sup>a</sup> in the first book of his work On Jerusalem:

A thousand times have I heard in the ancient laws how once (when you achieved something)<sup>b</sup> marvelous with the bonds' knot,<sup>c</sup> O far-famed Abraham, resplendently did your God-beloved prayers<sup>d</sup> abound<sup>e</sup> in wondrous counsels.<sup>f</sup> For when you left the beautiful garden of dread plants,<sup>g</sup> the praiseworthy thunderer<sup>h</sup> quenched the pyre<sup>i</sup> and made his promise immortal.<sup>j</sup> From that time forth the offspring of that awesome born one<sup>k</sup> have won far-hymned praise.
And so forth, to which he adds after a short while:<sup>l</sup>
as mortal hand readied the sword with resolve,<sup>m</sup> and crackling (wood)<sup>n</sup> was gathered at the side, he<sup>o</sup> brought into his hands a horned ram.

Fragment 3 Eusebius, Praeparatio Evangelica 9.24.1. Philo, too, corroborates the sacred Scriptures<sup>a</sup> in the first<sup>b</sup> book of his work On Jerusalem, saying,
For them<sup>c</sup> the Most High, great Lord of all<sup>d</sup> created a most blessed spot, even from of old, yea from the days of Abraham and Isaac

Fragments 1–2 a. Eusebius has been recounting the story of Abraham according to Eupolemus, Artapanus, and Molon. At PrEv 9.19.4 he describes the Akedah. The episode probably had its place in an epic on Jerusalem, because of the identification of Mount Moriah with the Temple mount. Cf. 2Chr 3:1.

b. It seems likely that a l. to this effect has been lost after the first l. of the F.

c. An allusion to Gen 22:9.

d. The Gk. word for "prayers" basically means "charms" or "spells."

e. The Gk. word has been emended to provide a verb in this obscure sentence. The word basically means "rise like the flood tide."

f. The allusion in this sentence is unclear. It may be a reference to Abraham's prayers for an heir in Gen 15:1–6 or to his obedience to God's command in Gen 22:3–8. The line might alternatively be translated, "resplendently did consolations dear to God abound in the form of resounding utterances (of God)."

g. The word translated as "dread plants" is a hapax legomenon. It is occasionally translated "plants of praise." It is, however, analogous to many Gk. words with connotations of "dread" or "terror." The reference is probably to the wood which Abraham took with him to Mount Moriah, which was "dreadful" because of its intended function. Cf. Gen 22:3–6. Alternatively, this could be a reference to Abraham's departure from Chaldea. Cf. Gen 12:1–4.

h. The epithet "thunderer" is not used of God elsewhere in Jewish literature. It is applied to Ares in the Iliad 13.521. God is termed "praiseworthy" in the LXX version of Sam 22:4; 1Chr 16:25; Pss 47:2 and 95:4.

i. The pyre is probably an allusion to the fire which Abraham brought for the sacrifice of Isaac. Cf. Gen 22:6. In the biblical account the fire is not quenched.

j. Following the binding in Gen 22:16f., God promises Abraham that he will make his descendants as numerous as the stars and that they shall be a blessing for all nations.

k. The Gk. word is formed analogously to the "dread plants" of vs. 5. The epithet seems to be a reference to Isaac, who was born in an awesome way, first because of his miraculous conception in the womb of the aged Sarah, according to Gen 21:1–3, and secondly because he is figuratively reborn on the sacrificial pyre. The epithet could also, however, be meant for Abraham.

l. This remark of Eusebius introduces F. 2. Those three vs. probably formed part of a detailed account of the Akedah, to which F. 1 provided a general introduction. The beginning of the F. may well be corrupt.

m. In Gen 22:10 Abraham all but carries out his intent to sacrifice Isaac. The translation here reflects the emendation of Mras, GCS 43.1–2.

n. The Gk. word used here may be associated with a verb describing the sound of something burning. Cf. Odyssey 9.390. It is used by metonymy for the wood which makes that sound. Alternatively, the word may mean "neck" and the phrase could be translated: "with his (Isaac's) neck turned to the side."

o. This, of course, is God or his angel. Cf. Gen 22:11–13.

Fragment 3 a. Eusebius has just recounted the story of Joseph in Artapanus.

b. The Gk. text reads "fourteenth," but it seems unlikely that Philo could have taken thirteen books to recount patriarchal history prior to Joseph. Either "first" or "fourth" should be read.

c. The pronoun probably refers to the Israelites.

d. The figure mentioned here is probably God, who gave the blessed land of Palestine, although he could conceivably be Pharaoh, who provided the Israelites with a settlement in the land of Goshen, according to Gen 47:6–11.

and Jacob, rich in children, from whom was Joseph, who was interpreter of dreams<sup>e</sup> for the scepter bearer on Egypt's throne,<sup>f</sup> revolving time's secrets with the flood of fate.<sup>g</sup>

Fragments 4–6 Eusebius, Praeparatio Evangelica 9.37.1–3. Philo in his work On Jerusalem says that there is a fountain<sup>a</sup> and that it is dry in winter and full in summer. In his first book he says,

Above the swimmers<sup>b</sup> is the most wondrous sight, another pool.<sup>c</sup> Its sound, with that of the ruler's baths,<sup>d</sup> fills the deep channel of the stream as it exits.

And so forth, to which he adds, farther along, remarks concerning the filling:<sup>e</sup>

For the stream,<sup>f</sup> gleaming on high,<sup>g</sup> fed by moist rains, rolls joyously under the neighboring towers;<sup>h</sup> and the dry and dusty soil on the plain shows the fountain's far-seen, marvelous deeds, the wonders of the nations<sup>i</sup> and so forth. Then he goes on as follows concerning the high priest's fountain and the way it empties out:

And on high do pipes pour out from channels through the earth.<sup>j</sup>

e. Cf. Gen 41:14–32.

f. Cf. Gen 41:39–41. The translation reflects the reading of Lloyd-Jones in an unpublished paper. He emends "scepter bearer" from the nominative to the dative.

g. This rather sententious line simply refers to Joseph's ability as a prophetic interpreter of dreams.

Fragments 4–6 a. Eusebius has just given an account of the water-supply system of Jerusalem according to Timochares. Other accounts of this system are found in Strabo, Geography 16.761, and Tacitus, Histories 5.12. The topographical referents of Philo's poem are obscure. The "fountain" of F.5 may be the spring of Gihon, which supplied the pool of Siloam through Hezekiah's tunnel. The body of water to which Eusebius refers as a "fountain" may also be a pool. Its relationship to the "ruler's baths" of F. 4 is unclear. It may be the pool of Siloam. The ruler's baths may be the pool of the king (probably equivalent to the pool of Shelah), mentioned in Neh 2:14 and 2Ezra 12:14 (LXX). Alternatively, the ruler's baths may be the pool of Siloam. For details of the water system of Jerusalem, cf. L. H. Vincent and A.-M. Stève, Jérusalem de l'Ancien Testament (Paris, 1954) vol. 1, pp. 260–312.

b. The participle in the Gk. text is emended, with Lloyd-Jones, from the nominative to the dative.

c. The Gk. word used here (derkêthron) is problematic. It may mean "sight" or it could be an unattested form of derethron ("gulf, pit"), used, for the sake of the meter, to refer to a body of water, such as the baths mentioned in this F.

d. The expression here is poetically condensed, much like the reference to the crackling wood at the binding in F. 2. The vs. seems to mean that the pool in question, whose sound blends with that of the "ruler's baths," empties into and fills a stream which issues from it.

e. I.e., the filling of the pool.

f. Note that the stream issuing from the temple in Ezekiel's vision of Jerusalem is deep enough to swim in. Cf. Ezek 47:5.

g. This is possibly a reference to water at the top of an aqueduct, possibly supplying the pool of F. 4.

h. The towers of Jerusalem constitute an important part of the glorified picture of the city sketched in LetAris 100, 105.

i. Note the description of the lush agricultural riches of Palestine in LetAris 107, 112–14. The old aqueducts from the spring of Gihon to the king's pool also served to irrigate the terraced cultivation on the east of the City of David.

j. Cf. LetAris 88–90, which Eusebius next quotes.

THEODOTUS

(Second to First Century B.C.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY F. FALLON

Theodotus composed a poem which used the vocabulary and meter of Greek epic poetry and which was probably entitled On the Jews. From the poem eight fragments survive. Some short summaries of sections of the poem also survive; they introduce the fragments. All of these pieces pertain to the story of the rape of Jacob's daughter Dinah at Shechem as recorded in Genesis 34. In the first fragment Theodotus gives a description of the city of Shechem and its environs. In a second brief fragment Theodotus presents the arrival of Jacob at Shechem. Then, in the third fragment, Theodotus recalls the earlier departure of Jacob for Mesopotamia, his marriages with Leah and Rachel, and his subsequent return to Canaan. After a summary of the rape of Dinah, fragment 4 presents the need of the Shechemites to be circumcised before Dinah can be married. The fifth fragment portrays the origin of the law of circumcision. After a summary of the plan of Simeon and Levi to slay Hamor and Sychem is given, the sixth fragment offers their motivation: a divine oracle. The seventh fragment then describes the evil nature of the Shechemites, which justifies the action. In the final fragment the actual slaying of Hamor and Sychem is poetically portrayed, and then the tale is concluded by the withdrawal from Shechem of the sons of Jacob with their booty.

Transmission

The fragments have been preserved because of the work of Alexander Polyhistor, the Greek historian, who flourished in the mid first century B.C. Because of the presence of the distinctive epic vocabulary and meter within, it is clear that Alexander has faithfully preserved the wording of the fragments. In addition, he has provided us with the summaries of the omitted parts of the poem or the omitted parts of this section of the poem, if the poem was actually longer than our fragments indicate. A higher incidence of non-epic words in these summaries indicates that Alexander has preferred normal prose vocabulary for his summations rather than epic diction. However, the agreement between the account in Genesis and the summations of Alexander shows that here, too, Alexander has been faithful to his source, Theodotus.<sup>1</sup>

Alexander Polyhistor's On the Jews is no longer extant in its entirety. However, excerpts from his writing have been preserved by Eusebius of Caesarea (c. A.D. 260–340) in his Praeparatio Evangelica; the material pertaining to Theodotus appears in 9.22.1–11.<sup>2</sup>

Provenance

Over the years, a number of scholars have suggested that Theodotus was a Samaritan

<sup>1</sup> On the fidelity of Alexander Polyhistor to his sources, see Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 17–34. Alexander Polyhistor in his summation uses such non-epic words as geōmoreō, "to till the earth," and eriourgeō, "to work in wool."

<sup>2</sup> Mras, GCS 43, 1–2, pp. 512–16. The Fs. are also conveniently collected in Jacoby, FGH, vol. 3C, no. 732, pp. 692–94.

author. Various reasons, such as the following, have been offered in support of this hypothesis. The preserved part of the poem pertains to Shechem, a Samaritan city.<sup>3</sup> The city is referred to as a "holy city."<sup>4</sup> The title On the Jews, even if it is the correct title, could have been used by a Samaritan.<sup>5</sup> The identification of Shechem as the son of Hermes in the summary before the first fragment fits in with the euhemeristic impulse in other Samaritan works.<sup>6</sup>

Other scholars, however, have proposed the thesis that Theodotus was a Jewish author, for the following reasons. Although Theodotus was a Greek name, it is known to have been used by Jews as well as Samaritans.<sup>7</sup> As the title suggests, the poem may have been much longer than the fragments indicate and may not have been restricted to Shechem. Identification of Shechem as a "holy city" can be understood as epic language rather than as a statement about the religious significance of Shechem.<sup>8</sup> In addition, the euhemeristic impulse is not restricted to Samaritan literature.<sup>9</sup> Thus, there seems to be no clear evidence to compel a decision in favor of a Samaritan or Jewish hypothesis.

In his poem, Theodotus shows an awareness of post-biblical traditions, which were available in Palestine. The story of the return of Jacob, the rape of Dinah, and the attack by the sons of Jacob, is also recalled in one apocryphal work, the Book of Judith, and two pseudepigraphic works, Jubilees and the Testament of Levi. All three works, at least in their origins, derive from Palestine sometime between the third and first centuries B.C.<sup>10</sup> In these writings it is made clear that the attack upon the Shechemites was not merely an act of revenge by the sons of Jacob but, rather, that it was a just act of punishment willed by God (Jdt 9:2; Jub 30:6-7; TLevi 5:1-5; 6:8, 11). Further, just as fragment 7 of Theodotus stressed the unrighteousness of the Shechemites in that they did not honor anyone who came to them, whether evil or noble, so the Testament of Levi 6:8-10 suggests an earlier attack upon Sarah and Rebecca similar to that upon Dinah. This passage in the Testament of Levi further proposes that the Shechemites persecuted Abraham and his kin when they were strangers.<sup>11</sup> Thirdly, just as fragment 8 of Theodotus specifies—beyond the biblical text—that it is Simeon who slays Hamor, and Levi who slays Sychem, so, too, the Testament of Levi 6:4 specifies the matter in the same way. However, it is interesting to note that Levi is given greater emphasis than Simeon in the Testament and Jubilees. In the former, Levi slays Sychem before Simeon slays Hamor, and in the latter Levi and his descendants are chosen to be priests and Levites because of his slaying of the enemies of Israel. In contrast Simeon takes the initiative in Theodotus (cf. Jdt 9:2). Next, it should also be noted that neither the fragments nor the summaries of Theodotus mention the actual circumcision of the Shechemites. Thus the motif that the Shechemites were attacked while they were still in pain from the circumcision is also omitted. Similarly in Jubilees 30 there is no indication that the Shechemites were actually circumcised. In the Testament (TLevi 6:3) Levi counsels his father and brother against circumcising the Shechemites but then records (6:6) that they were indeed circumcised. Obviously the authors are struggling with the embarrassment of the Shechemites being circumcised, i.e. being given the sign of admittance into Israel and then being slain by the sons of Jacob. The absence in Theodotus of the account of the circumcision and of the motif of the pain may be due to the summation and omission by Alexander Polyhistor, but it is also possible that Theodotus omitted the circumcision because he shared the same concern as Jubilees and the Testament of Levi.<sup>12</sup>

The poem of Theodotus also reflects the interest in epic poetry during the hellenistic

<sup>3</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 99-101.

<sup>4</sup> E. Schürer, History, division 2, vol. 3, pp. 224f.

<sup>5</sup> R. J. Bull, "A Note on Theodotus' Description of Shechem," HTR 60 (1967) 223f. Bull refers to ancient reports that the Samaritans would allow themselves to be called Jews when it was politically expedient to do so.

<sup>6</sup> M. Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism (Philadelphia, 1974) vol. 1, pp. 89, 266; vol. 2, p. 62. The euhemeristic impulse refers to the hellenistic theory that many of the gods were actually men who lived in bygone ages.

<sup>7</sup> Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism, vol. 1, p. 64.

<sup>8</sup> A. Ludwich, De Theodoti Carmine Graeco-Judaico (Königsberg, 1899) p. 6, n. 8. See Iliad 5.446; 16.100; Odyssey 1.2.

<sup>9</sup> Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism, vol. 1, pp. 89, 266.

<sup>10</sup> O. Eissfeldt, The Old Testament: An Introduction (New York, 1966) pp. 585-87, 606-8, 631-36.

<sup>11</sup> Cf. the description of the temple on Mount Gerizim as the temple of Zeus, the Friend of Strangers, in 2Mac 6:2.

<sup>12</sup> Josephus also omits telling of the actual circumcision of the Shechemites in Ant 1.21.1 337-40 (tr. H. St. J. Thackeray; LCL: Cambridge, England, 1967) vol. 4, pp. 161-63.

period.<sup>13</sup> It is well known that in antiquity there was a widespread interest in the poetry of Homer. During the hellenistic period there was a further revival of writing epic poetry, especially at such centers as Alexandria, where such authors as Callimachus (c. 305–240 B.C.) wrote short epic poems, especially upon mythological themes. Other authors, such as Apollonius of Rhodes (third century B.C.) continued the tradition of long epic poems upon mythological themes. In addition, long epic poems were written about hellenistic rulers as well as about various regions of the hellenistic world. Although it is difficult to know the exact nature and extent of the latter poems because our evidence is so fragmentary, it is nevertheless clear that the poets need not have been natives of or residents of the particular regions (e.g. Rhianus of Crete with his Messēniaka in the third century B.C.) but, rather, used the occasion to codify existing traditions.<sup>14</sup> In addition, some poets such as Rhianus of Crete included in their poems motifs of a religious and political value.<sup>15</sup>

It is into this context of an interest in epic poetry during the hellenistic period that Theodotus is to be placed along with the Jewish author Philo the Elder (second century B.C.), who composed an epic poem on Jerusalem in accord with the other regional epics. In his poem Theodotus uses Homeric language and meter as well as terms or usages which are customary in the later, hellenistic epic poets.<sup>16</sup> Occasionally he employs terms or usages not attested in epic poetry.<sup>17</sup>

Alexander Polyhistor states that the title of Theodotus' composition was On the Jews. Objections to the correctness of this title, such as the following, have been made by scholars. First, it has been argued that a Samaritan author would not give such a title to his work.<sup>18</sup> Second, it has been noted that the poem is concerned with Shechem rather than with the Jews.<sup>19</sup> Third, since the same title appears frequently as the title of the works quoted by Alexander Polyhistor (e.g. Ps-Eup, Art, ArisEx),<sup>20</sup> it is possible that the use of the same title here is erroneous. Fourth, it has been observed that within the poem itself the term which is used to refer to the people is "Hebrews" rather than "Jews" (e.g. PrEv 9.22.6).

In response to these objections, the following observations can be made. It is not clearly proved that the author was in fact a Samaritan. Next, if the title On the Jews is correct, then this episode concerning Shechem may be merely one episode of a cycle or one part of a longer poem. Further, although the term "Hebrews" is more appropriately used for the period prior to the Babylonian captivity, the term "Jews" in the title On the Jews would be an understandable anachronism on the part of an author such as Theodotus.<sup>21</sup> Thus, it seems more probable that the title On the Jews is correct.<sup>22</sup>

In his poem Theodotus draws mainly upon Genesis 34 for his account, although there are also references to the divine command to circumcise in Genesis 17 and to events in the life of Jacob in Genesis 27–33. Theodotus' use of epic language, however, makes it impossible to establish his dependence upon the Greek of the Septuagint.

Because of the recent excavations at Shechem,<sup>23</sup> it may be possible to date more precisely the poem of Theodotus. The exact description of Shechem within the poem indicates an <sup>13</sup> For this discussion, see the classic study of K. Ziegler, Das Hellenistische Epos: Ein Vergessenes Kapitel Griechischer Dichtung (Berlin, 1934); cf. also A. Lesky, A History of Greek Literature (New York, 1963) pp. 700–37.

<sup>14</sup> The fragments of Rhianus are collected in Jacoby, FGH, vol. 3A, no. 265, pp. 64–69.

<sup>15</sup> See J. Gutmann, "Philo the Epic Poet," Scripta Hierosolymitana 1 (Jerusalem, 1954) pp. 60–63. The story of the earlier destruction of Messenia by Sparta but its subsequent restoration had political implications for the period of Rhianus and the contemporary opponents of Sparta.

<sup>16</sup> Erymnos, "steep" (cf. Apollonius, Argonautica 2.514); laios, "left" (cf. Apollonius, Argonautica 2.1036); and ōrōrei as the imperfect of the verb "to be" (cf. LSJM, pp. 1254f.).

<sup>17</sup> Aiginomos (browsed by goats), aposylao (to strip off), kienotrophos (well-grazed), oikētōr (inhabitant), synomaimōn (kinfolk); poneomai in the active voice as "to toil" and riza in the extended sense of "foundation."

<sup>18</sup> Schürer, History, division 2, vol. 3, p. 225.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid.; Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 99–101.

<sup>20</sup> PrEv 9.17.2; 9.23.1; 9.25.1; GCS 43, 1–2, pp. 502, 516, 518.

<sup>21</sup> Cf. the discussion of Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, p. 101, who, however, argues against the correctness of the title. Contrary to Freudenthal, it should be noted that Artapanus in his On the Jews can also use the term "Hebrews" (PrEv 9.18.1; GCS 43, 1–2, p. 504).

<sup>22</sup> Alternatively but less plausibly, in analogy to the poem of Philo the Elder, the title may have been On Shechem. Or in accord with other regional epics it may have been entitled Foundation of Shechem; see Ziegler, Die Hellenistische Epos, pp. 16f.

<sup>23</sup> See G. E. Wright, Shechem: The Biography of a Biblical City (New York, 1965).

eyewitness of the site and not simply a person who has read Genesis. Further, the archaeological data indicate that from the time of Alexander the Great (c. 331 B.C.) until c. 190 B.C. there was a large city wall around Shechem. However, in the following period (190–150 B.C.) the city wall was no longer maintained and stones were taken from the wall to build towers in front. Since Theodotus describes Shechem as having a "smooth wall" and since this phrase is not a customary epic description, then he must have observed the city prior to the middle of the second century B.C.<sup>24</sup> and presumably composed his poem at the same time. Such a date as the end of the third century or beginning of the second century B.C. would be appropriate, since it leaves some time between the composition of the poem and its collection by Alexander Polyhistor in the first century B.C.

Such a date may also help to explain the difficulty in deciding whether the author is Samaritan or Jewish. Even though tensions existed between Samaritans and Jews at an earlier period, a final break between them did not occur until later, in the reign of John Hyrcanus (135–105 B.C.).<sup>25</sup> Prior to that time they were in communication with one another, and the distinction was not necessary. The place of composition is uncertain; Palestine is as possible as Alexandria.

Importance

The poem of Theodotus is significant in that it is another indication of the degree of hellenization which some Jews underwent in the hellenistic period. In terms of its theology, the poem of Theodotus is significant in that it portrays God as the revealer of his commandments, his Law as unchangeable, and circumcision as a necessary part of that Law. Further, Theodotus portrays God as the revealer of oracles, the rewarder of his people, and the punisher of evil persons such as the Shechemites.

The function or functions of Theodotus' poem are not completely clear. Evidently it served to codify existing tradition, as did the other hellenistic regional epics. In a cultural setting in which the gymnasia and Greek education were ever present, the poem may also have served a Jewish need to recast tradition in an epic mode. It probably also served the religious need to recall the necessity of circumcision.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 210f.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 272f.

Bull, R. J. "A Note on Theodotus' Description of Shechem," HTR 60 (1967) 221–28.

(Examines Theodotus in the light of the archaeological evidence; still considers him to be a Samaritan.)

Denis, A.-M. Fragmenta pseudepigraphorum quae supersunt graeca. PVTG 3; Leiden, 1970; pp. 204–7. (A convenient collection of the fragments.)

Eusebius. Werke; Band 8: Die Praeparatio Evangelica, ed. Mras, K. GCS 43.1–2; Berlin, 1954–56. (The critical edition for Eusebius.)

Freudenthal, J. Alexander Polyhistor. Breslau, 1875; pp. 99–101. (The classic study of Theodotus, which suggested that he was a Samaritan.)

Gutmann, J. The Beginnings of Jewish-Hellenistic Literature. Jerusalem, 1958; vol. 2, pp. 245–61. (Hebrew)

Hengel, M. Judaism and Hellenism. Philadelphia, 1974; vol. 1, pp. 69, 89, 266. (Considers Theodotus to be a Samaritan and associates him with the euhemeristic impulse of the times.)

<sup>24</sup> Bull, HTR 60 (1967) 226–28. The adjective "smooth" (lissos) does occur in Homer, but there it modifies "rock" rather than "wall" (Odyssey 3.293; 5.412). Similarly, the term "wall" (teichos) occurs in Homer (e.g. Odyssey 7.9; 15.4720) but it is not described as "smooth."

<sup>25</sup> F. M. Cross, Jr., "Aspects of Samaritan and Jewish History in Late Persian and Hellenistic Times," HTR 59 (1966) 201–11.

- Jacoby, F. (ed.). Die Fragmente der griechischen Historiker. Leiden, 1958; vol. 3C, part 2, no. 732, pp. 692–94. (Convenient, critical collection of the fragments of Theodotus.)
- Schlatter, A. Geschichte Israels. Stuttgart, 1925<sup>3</sup>; p. 199. (Proposed that Theodotus was a Jewish author.)
- Schürer, E. History of the Jewish People. Edinburgh, 1886<sup>2</sup>; div. 2, vol. 3, pp. 224f. (Draws upon Freudenthal and further reinforces hypothesis of Theodotus as a Samaritan.)
- Ziegler, K. Das Hellenistische Epos: Ein Vergessenes Kapitel Griechischer Dichtung. Berlin, 1934. (Classic study of the revival of epic poetry in the hellenistic period which is the context out of which Theodotus emerges.)

TRANSLATION

Fragment 1 Alexander Polyhistor, "On the Jews," in Eusebius, "Praeparatio Evangelica" 9.22.1:

Theodotus<sup>a</sup> in On the Jews<sup>b</sup> says that Shechem took its name from Shechem, the son of Hermes,<sup>c</sup> for he also founded the city. He says that the city is situated in the land of the Jews<sup>d</sup> in the following manner:

Thus the land was good and grazed upon by goats and well watered. There was neither a long path for those entering the city from the field nor even leafy woods for the weary. Instead, very close by the city appear two steep mountains, filled with grass and woods.<sup>e</sup> Between the two of them a narrow path is cut.<sup>f</sup> On one side<sup>g</sup> the bustling Shechem appears, a sacred town, built under (i.e. the mountain) as a base;<sup>h</sup> there was a smooth wall<sup>i</sup> around the town; and the wall for defense up above ran in under the foot of the mountain.<sup>j</sup>

Fragment 1 (22.1) a. The possible testimonium to Theodotus is as follows. Josephus, Apion 1.23, 215f.: "However, our antiquity is sufficiently established by the Egyptian, Chaldaean, and Phoenician records, not to mention the numerous Greek historians. In addition to those already cited, Theophilus, Theodotus, Mnaseas, Aristophanes, Hermodemus, Euhemerus, Conon, Zopyrion, and, may be, many more—for my reading has not been exhaustive—have made more than a passing allusion to us" (translator H. St. J. Thackeray; LCL vol. 1, p. 251).

b. Some scholars who consider Theodotus to be a Samaritan question whether this title is correct for the poem; see the introduction.

c. In the later Fs., Theodotus identifies the head of the tribe from Gen 34 as Emör and his son as Sychem. In this paraphrase by Alexander Polyhistor the father of the founder of the city is identified as Ermou and the founder as Sikimiou (both in the genitive case); the name of the city is then spelled as Sikima. Either the text is corrupt here or Alexander Polyhistor has altered his source or Theodotus has deliberately spelled the names in this manner. It seems more likely that Theodotus has exploited the difference in spelling between the name of the city and the name of the person in Gen 34 (a contemporary of Jacob) to separate the two figures Sikimios and Sychem from one another. Thus, in accord with other hellenistic regional epics, he can refer back prior to the time of Jacob to the founding of the city and to Sikimios as the founder of Sikima. By separating the two figures and by proposing Sikimios as the founder rather than Sychem, Theodotus also avoids the awkward situation that in Gen 34 the ruler is the father, Emör, rather than the eponymous founder, i.e. Sychem. The name of the son could have been scanned Sikimios to fit epic meter. Further, it seems likely that the name Hamor (Emör) suggested the name Hermes (Ermês) as the name of the founder's father. Thereby the pagan god Hermes would presumably be treated as simply a man by this Jewish author; such a treatment would have appropriately arisen from the euhemeristic impulse of the hellenistic period. Further, it is precisely at the point of the beginning of a city that one would expect an association with mythology, and such was the case in the regional epic poetry of the hellenistic period. See, for example, the fragments of Rhianus of Crete in Jacoby, FGH, vol. 3A, no. 265, pp. 64–69, and the discussion by K. Ziegler, Das Hellenistische Epos: Ein Vergessenes Kapitel Griechischer Dichtung (Berlin, 1934) pp. 11–21.

d. There is a textual problem here. The text reads en tē peri loudaiōn. As it stands, the text could be understood as "in the (book) On the Jews." Or, if this phrase is merely a repetition of the phrase "in On the Jews" in the opening sentence, then the tē would need to be emended to tō. A third possibility, adopted by the editor Mras, is that the peri should be deleted as a mistaken repetition of the term in the opening sentence and that the phrase be understood as "in the (land) of the Jews." We follow the emendation of Mras.

e. Mount Ebal and Mount Gerizim.

f. The text has been emended by the removal of the term aulōpis, which is extra beyond the meter of the line and probably a later gloss.

g. The consistent perspective from which the entire scene is described seems to be the encampment of Jacob before Shechem as in Gen 33:18–20. The phrase en d heterōthi has been translated as "on one side." In Homer heterōthi is used alone or in conjunction with enthen. It means "on the other side" when used in conjunction with enthen. When used alone, heterōthi can mean "elsewhere" or "in another quarter" or—more freely translated—"on one side." Since heterōthi is not used by Theodotus in conjunction with enthen, this latter meaning must be intended by him; the addition of the preposition en merely strengthens the meaning. See R. J. Cunliffe, A Lexikon of the Homeric Dialect (London, 1924) p. 165.

h. The phrase "built under as a base" is in accord with the fact that Shechem was situated on a mound or shoulder at the base of Mount Ebal, but it should be noted that the use of riza in an extended sense to indicate the root or foundation of a mountain is a post-Homeric development.

i. Archaeological excavations have uncovered the remains of this city wall. It was well taken care of (i.e. smooth) from the time of Alexander the Great to the first half of the second century B.C. but was disrupted thereafter. See the introduction.

j. The phrase "up above" seems to refer to the fact that Shechem was above the plain where Jacob was encamped. An alternate interpretation might

Fragment 2 Alexander Polyhistor, "On the Jews," in Eusebius, "Praeparatio Evangelica" 9.22.2:

Next he says that it was occupied by the Hebrews when Hamor was ruling, for Hamor begot a son Sychem. He says,

O stranger, Jacob came as a shepherd<sup>a</sup> to the broad city of Shechem; and over their kinsmen Hamor was chief with his son Sychem, a very stubborn<sup>b</sup> pair. Gen 33:18–20

Fragment 3 Alexander Polyhistor, "On the Jews," in Eusebius, "Praeparatio Evangelica" 9.22.3:

Then concerning Jacob and his arrival in Mesopotamia and his marriage with his two wives and the birth of his children and his arrival from Mesopotamia to Shechem, he said,

Jacob came to well-grazed Syria<sup>a</sup> and left behind<sup>b</sup> the broad stream of the Euphrates, a turbulent river. For he had come there when he left the sharp rebuke of his own brother. Laban, who was his cousin and then alone ruled over Syria since he was of [native] blood,<sup>c</sup> graciously received him into his house. He agreed to and promised the marriage of his youngest daughter to him. However, he did not at all aim that this should be but, rather, contrived some trick. He sent Leah, who was her older sister, to the man for his bed. In any case, it did not remain hidden to him; rather, he understood the mischievousness and received the other maiden. He was mated with both, who were his kinfolk. To him there were born eleven sons who were exceedingly wise in mind and a daughter, Dinah, who had a beautiful form, an admirable<sup>d</sup> frame, and a noble spirit. cf. Gen 28:6
Gen 31:21
Gen 27:41–45
Gen 29:13–30

Fragment 4 Alexander Polyhistor, "On the Jews," in Eusebius, "Praeparatio Evangelica" 9.22.4–6:

He says that from the Euphrates Jacob came into Shechem to Hamor.<sup>a</sup> He Gen 33:18–20 suggest that it was a high wall for defense that ran around (the town). Our translation rests on a slight emendation of the text, the introduction of the "and" (d) after the term for "the foot of the mountain" (hypōreian).

Fragment 2 (22.2) a. There are difficulties in the first line. The identities of the speaker and the addressee are unclear. Such a dialogue setting with a stranger is found in Homer; e.g. Athene speaks to a mortal (Odyssey 8.195) or some person speaks to Odysseus (Odyssey 6.255), but the form of the term in Homer is xeinos, rather than xenos as here. Further, the text must be emended from poimenothis to poimenophi in order to be translated as "as a shepherd" (cf. Gen 26:20). The corruption may be more deep-seated.

b. The MSS read atēree, "improvident," rather than ateiree, "stubborn." The term "improvident" may seem more appropriate for Hamor and Sychem in view of their eventual death and because of their willingness to undergo circumcision. However, "stubborn" is also appropriate in view of their determination to obtain Dinah in marriage and is to be preferred since atēree, "improvident," is not found in Homer or the later epic poets, whereas ateiree, "stubborn," is properly Homeric.

Fragment 3 (22.3) a. The use of the term Syria here and later in this fragment seems to be a shortening of the name "Mesopotamia of Syria" (e.g. LXX Gen 33:18). The shortening of the name would have been for the sake of Homeric meter.

b. The reference here seems to be to Jacob's crossing of the Euphrates before coming to Laban's dwelling; cf. Gen 28:6 and 31:21. Such a usage is Homeric; see Odyssey 7.317 and 13.1.

c. The text appears to be corrupt here. The MSS read neēgenēs, "newborn," which is the proper epic form but which does not fit the meter of the line. The editor Mras has adopted the emendation to neiēgenēs, "newborn," which fits the meter but whose form is non-epic and whose meaning is not clearly appropriate. The emendation to xynēgenēs, "kindred," is possible, but the clause would then be redundant, since the preceding line states that he was a "cousin to him." A possible emendation is gaiēgenēs, "from the land," i.e. native; the clause would then explain why Laban ruled over Syria.

d. The emendation of epiprepton, "conspicuous," to epistrepton, "admirable," which has been adopted by Mras, has been followed.

Fragment 4 (22.4–6) a. In this paragraph Alexander Polyhistor paraphrases the poetry of Theodotus. The length of the poetic material cannot be determined, but the subject matter derives from Gen 34. In contrast with Gen 34 it is noticeable that there is no elaboration in the paraphrase of Shechem's love for Dinah or of his offer to give or do anything in order to obtain her as his wife. Absent also is the motif of the anger of the sons of Jacob when they heard of the deed and their decision to deal deceitfully with the Shechemites. The discussion between Hamor and the sons of Jacob about the merging of their respective peoples in terms of marriage, sharing of the land, and trade is also omitted. It is impossible to know with welcomed him and gave him a certain portion of the land.<sup>b</sup> Jacob himself tilled the land; his sons, eleven in number, herded sheep; and his daughter, Dinah, and his wives worked with wool. And Dinah, still a virgin, came into Shechem when there was a festival,<sup>c</sup> since she wished to see the city. But when Sychem the son of Hamor saw her, he loved her; and after seizing her as his own, he carried her off and ravished her. Then, coming back again with his father to Jacob, he asked for her in the partnership of marriage. Jacob said that he would not give her until all the inhabitants of Shechem were circumcised and became Jews.<sup>d</sup> Hamor said that he would persuade them. Concerning the necessity of their being circumcised, Jacob says,<sup>e</sup>

Gen 34:1–12

For this is not allowed to Hebrews to bring sons-in-law or daughters-in-law into their house from elsewhere but, rather, whoever boasts<sup>f</sup> that he is of the same race.

Gen 34:13–17

Fragment 5 Alexander Polyhistor, "On the Jews," in Eusebius, "Praeparatio Evangelica" 9.22.7:

Then, a little below he (i.e. Jacob) says concerning circumcision,<sup>a</sup>

Once (God) himself, when he led the noble Abraham out of his native land, from heaven called upon the man and all his family to strip off the flesh (i.e. the foreskin), and therefore he accomplished it. The command remains unshaken, since God himself spoke it.

Gen 17:9–27

Fragment 6 Alexander Polyhistor, "On the Jews," in Eusebius, "Praeparatio Evangelica" 9.22.8–9:

As Hamor went into the city and encouraged his subjects to be circumcised,<sup>a</sup> one of the sons of Jacob—Simeon by name—decided to kill Hamor and Sychem,<sup>b</sup> since he was unwilling to bear in a civil manner the violent attack upon his sister.<sup>c</sup> When he had decided this, he shared it with his brother. Seizing him, he urged him to agree to the act by producing an oracle which said that God certainty whether Theodotus included these themes in his poem or not, since Alexander Polyhistor may simply have omitted them (but see below). The emphasis on circumcision in the paraphrase and in the poetry has its roots in the biblical account.

Gen 34:18–24

Gen 34:25

b. In Gen 33:19 Jacob purchases the land from the sons of Hamor rather than receiving it as a gift.

c. There is no reference in Gen to a festival; Dinah simply wanted to see the city there. Josephus also refers to a feast in the city and may derive his reference from Theodotus or from common exegetical tradition; see Ant 1.21.1, 337.

d. For the term "to become Jews" or "to Judaize" (ioudaizein), see LXX Esther 8:17.

e. In Gen 34:14–17 it is the sons of Jacob who speak, and in the LXX it is Simeon and Levi, whereas in Theodotus, as reported by Alexander, it is Jacob. By having Jacob speak about circumcision, Theodotus would remove the appearance of treachery on the part of the sons of Jacob in encouraging circumcision while plotting to kill the Shechemites.

f. Since the verb exeuchomai, "to boast aloud," does not occur in Homer, we should probably read here two words: the preposition ex, "of," and the verb euchomai, "to boast aloud," although the editor Mras has preferred the verb exeuchomai.

Fragment 5 (22.7) a. Alexander Polyhistor has apparently omitted several ll. at this point. In those ll. Theodotus probably pointed to the law of circumcision as the reason why the Hebrews were not allowed to intermarry with other ethnic groups.

In the ll. of paragraph 7 as in paragraph 6 Jacob is evidently intended as the speaker.

Fragment 6 (22.8–9) a. In this paragraph Alexander Polyhistor again summarizes the poem of Theodotus. Two important items, which are present in Gen 34 but missing in the paraphrase of Alexander, are that the males of Shechem were in fact circumcised and that Simeon and Levi attacked the city while they were recovering. It is possible that Theodotus included these motifs and that Alexander merely omitted them. However, the embarrassment of later Jewish tradition over the circumcision and then slaughter of the Shechemites makes it possible that Theodotus excluded these motifs. Jub 30 and Josephus, Ant 1.21.1, 337–40 omit the actual circumcision; in TLevi 6:3 Levi counsels against circumcising the Shechemites but then records that they were in fact circumcised (6.6). See, further, the introduction.

b. In Gen 34:13 the sons of Jacob speak with Hamor treacherously by demanding circumcision while plotting the slaughter. Theodotus avoids the treachery by having Jacob encourage circumcision (F. 5) and by having Simeon decide by himself to kill the Shechemites.

c. In Gen 34:25 both Simeon and Levi are referred to, but neither is given emphasis. In Jub 30 the role of Levi is emphasized and also the derivation of the priesthood and the Levites from him because of his slaughter of the Shechemites (30:17–22). Also in TLevi 5f. the role of Levi is given greater prominence; he receives the heavenly had determined<sup>d</sup> to give ten peoples<sup>e</sup> to the descendants of Abraham. Simeon says the following to Levi:

For I have indeed learned the word from God, for of old he said that he would give ten peoples to the children of Abraham.

Fragment 7 Alexander Polyhistor, "On the Jews," in Eusebius, "Praeparatio Evangelica" 9.22.9:

God sent this thought into them because those in Shechem were impious. He (i.e. Theodotus) says,

God smote the inhabitants of Shechem, for they did not honor whoever came to them, whether evil or noble.<sup>a</sup> Nor did they determine rights or laws throughout the city. Rather, deadly works were their care.<sup>b</sup>

Fragment 8 Alexander Polyhistor, "On the Jews," in Eusebius, "Praeparatio Evangelica" 9.22.10–12:

Therefore, Levi and Simeon came fully armed into the city. At first they slew those they happened to meet, and then they killed Hamor and Sychem. Concerning their slaying, he says the following:<sup>a</sup> Gen 34:25f.

Thus then Simeon rushed upon Hamor himself and struck him upon the head; he seized his throat in his left hand and then let it go still gasping its last breath,<sup>b</sup> since there was another task to do. At that time Levi,<sup>c</sup> also irresistible in might, seized Sychem by the hair; the latter grasped his knees and raged unspeakably. Levi struck the middle of his collarbone; the sharp sword entered his inward parts through the chest; and his life thereupon<sup>d</sup> left his bodily frame. When the other brothers learned of their deed, they assisted them and pillaged the city; and after rescuing their sister, they carried her off with the prisoners to their father's quarters. Gen 34:26–29 command to slay the Shechemites (5:1–5), and he kills Sychem first, before Simeon attacks Hamor (6:4). The emphasis upon Levi in these two documents probably indicates their origin in priestly or Levitical circles. Here in Theodotus it is Simeon who takes the initiative (see also Jdt 9:2). Theodotus, then, does not represent a sympathy for the priestly or Levitical group.

d. Later Jewish tradition was evidently concerned to show that the killing of the Shechemites was not simply an act of revenge but was in accord with the will of God. See Jdt 9:2; Jub 30:6f.; and TLevi 5:1–5 and 6:8, 11.

e. The reference to give ten peoples to the descendants of Abraham is found in Gen 15:18–21. Freudenthal (Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 99f.) was unaware of the biblical reference and thus suggested that the notion was related to the idea of the ten lost tribes of Israel; this suggestion seems unnecessary.

Fragment 7 (22.9) a. Gen 34 has no mention of the impiety of the Shechemites. Theodotus' charge that the Shechemites "did not honor whoever came to them, whether evil or noble." is shared by TLevi 6:8–10, where it is charged that the Shechemites also sought to attack Sarah and Rebecca, that they persecuted Abraham when he was a stranger, and that they so acted against all strangers. To some extent the motivation for this charge may be to exculpate the sons of Jacob from merely seeming to have performed an act of revenge.

b. The charges against the Shechemites are further specified in Homeric language as not determining "rights or laws" and caring for "deadly works"; see Odyssey 9.215 and Iliad 1:518.

Fragment 8 (22.10–12) a. The following lines of poetry expand in vivid, Homeric, descriptive language the brief notice of the event in Gen 34:25f.

b. Since the Homeric form of the verb "to gasp" is aspairō rather than spairō, the text should probably be emended from eti spairousan to et aspairousan.

c. Gen 34:25f. does not specify which of the sons of Jacob slew Hamor and which slew Sychem. In accord with TLevi 6:4, Theodotus states that it is Simeon who slays Hamor and Levi who slays Sychem. In contrast to Theodotus, however, TLevi has Levi slay Sychem first and then Simeon slay Hamor. Again, the emphasis on Levi in TLevi probably indicates a priestly or Levitical origin for the testament, and the contrary emphasis on Simeon in Theodotus probably indicates a different origin or sympathy; see F. 6.

d. The MSS read authis, "again"; the editor Mras has adopted the emendation euthys, "immediately." The more appropriate emendation seems to be to the epic form authi, "forthwith," i.e. thereupon. See Iliad 5.296.

ORACLE

ORPHICA

(Second Century B.C.–First Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY M. LAFARGUE

This piece, written in archaizing Greek, represents itself to be esoteric instructions given by Orpheus to his son and pupil Musaeus. It has long been recognized as a Jewish work, rather than a part of the legitimate Orphic Hymns, both because of its content and because Eusebius claimed to have found it cited in the works of a Jewish theologian, Aristobulus. The third-century pseudo-Justinian De Monarchia cites it under the title “Diathekai,” i.e. the “Testament” of Orpheus, though it has little in common with other “Testaments” from Jewish literature of the same period.

Texts

The textual tradition is quite complex. There are at least two major recensions of the hymn, differing in numerous and very significant points. The main witnesses are as follows: (a) a short version (J) of twenty-one hexameters, found in two third-century works falsely attributed to Justin Martyr (De Monarchia, ch. 2, and Cohortatio ad Gentiles, ch. 15)<sup>1</sup>; (b) a long version (E) of forty-one hexameters, found in the Praeparatio Evangelica (13.12.5)<sup>2</sup> of Eusebius (A.D. 263–340); (c) numerous short quotations in the Stromata and Protrepticus of Clement of Alexandria (A.D. 150–215), one quotation (C<sup>2</sup>) in agreement with E, the others (C<sup>1</sup>) agreeing mostly with J but with a few E readings also<sup>3</sup>; (d) a fifth-century self-styled “Theosophical” text (T),<sup>4</sup> containing all the lines found elsewhere, agreeing largely with E but sometimes agreeing with J against E and having many unique readings of its own.

Several hypotheses are possible as to lines of transmission that could explain this state of affairs. Earlier commentators unanimously considered J to be original and E and T to be the result of interpolations and corruptions. This thesis, however, was based on the alleged incoherence of E and T. Comparison with other esoteric works of the same period show that E and T can be read as intelligent and unified compositions. In the light of this it seems more likely that J is a cleaned-up, orthodoxizing version of an originally longer text more

<sup>1</sup> In Corpus Apologetorum Christianorum, ed. J. C. T. Otto (Jena, 1879) vol. 3.

<sup>2</sup> Latest edition in Mras, GCS 43, 2.

<sup>3</sup> GCS, ed. O. Staehlin (Leipzig, 1906). The Clementine quotations that follow J (C<sup>1</sup>) are

|                      |                       |
|----------------------|-----------------------|
| Protr 74.4–5  | Ll. 1–9a (minus l. 2) |
| Strom 5.123.1 | Ll. 6–9a              |
| Strom 5.78.4  | Ll. 10, 11b–12        |
| Protr 74.5    | Ll. 10–12             |
| Strom 5.126.5 | Ll. 13, 15            |
| Strom 5.78.5  | Ll. 20, 22f.          |
| Strom 5.127.2 | Ll. 34f.              |

The quotation that follows E (C<sup>2</sup>) is

Strom 5.123.2–124.1 Ll. 26–30, 32–39, 42–43a.

<sup>4</sup> Printed in H. Erbse, Fragmente griechischer Theosophien (Hamburg, 1941) pp. 167–201. Also in K. Buresch, Klaros (Leipzig, 1889) pp. 112–15.

adequately represented by E and T. Two hypotheses as to textual transmission then become possible.

First Hypothesis: E, C<sup>2</sup>, and T are descendants of a common prototype, a long version (L). J and C<sup>1</sup> are descendants of another prototype, a short version (S).

Second Hypothesis: E and C<sup>2</sup> are descendants of something very close to the original. J is a descendant of a shortened version of this original. T, and probably also C<sup>1</sup>, are conflated texts, combining readings from the original and the shortened version.

The translation below contains both a short version (based primarily on J) and a long version (based on the best readings from E and T); also indicated are the points at which the two different hypotheses yield substantive differences in the text.<sup>5</sup>

Date

There is no reason to doubt Eusebius' assertion that he found this hymn quoted in a work by Aristobulus; hence a probable date for the E version of the work is sometime between 150 B.C. and A.D. 50, depending on the date one assigns to Aristobulus. [A. Yarbo Collins dates his work to 155–145 B.C.; see her contribution herein. —J.H.C.] The J and C<sup>1</sup> forms must likewise antedate Clement and Pseudo-Justin.

Theological importance

In the shorter version (J), one finds familiar themes of hellenistic Jewish theology: the oneness of God, who is the invisible creator and ruler of everything and who has some good purpose for the evils he brings upon people.

In the longer version the most striking difference is the statement that Moses (or Abraham), alone of men, has "seen God," and this through his knowledge of astrology (ll. 25–29) and probably a heavenly ascent (l. 30). Following this statement is either a description of Moses' apotheosis (using OT images of God) or a description of Moses' divine vision (ll. 32–39). Lines 10–16a of this version probably represent a particular interpretation of a scriptural assertion of monotheism, the two halves of which open and close the section.

<sup>5</sup> The two hypotheses about the text tradition are relevant principally in those cases in which J and T agree against E. On the first hypothesis, this is evidence that the J and T reading is more likely original (X). On the second hypothesis, it only means that T is copying from the short version at this point rather than from the long one. The only case in which this makes a significant difference theologically is l. 12 (see textual notes).

The interpretation apparently combats a dualistic view which would posit, besides a "good" God, also a malicious God responsible for "turning good things into evil." It rather solves the problem of evil in the world by saying that there is one God who is both transcendent and immanent (ll. 10f.) and present in "evil" (i.e. suffering) as well as in good (ll. 13–15). Both Jewish and Orphic traditions are included in this version as divine revelation, though the latter have a decisively inferior place (ll. 17–21; ll. 1 and 39 are Orphic sayings). E (not T) makes a distinction between two levels of consciousness, psyche and nous, the latter of which alone is capable of seeing God. It is possible also that the "double law" of line 41 refers to two senses of Scriptures. Finally, this version closes with an admonition to secrecy and meditation on the secret revelation given in the hymn. This admonition matches the framework of esoteric instruction given also in the first lines. In view of the unusual contents of this version, this may in some way reflect the spirit in which some Jewish group at the time actually understood the ideas in the hymn, though it may also be that this is simply a propaganda attempt to represent Orpheus treating Jewish themes as esoteric secrets.

Relation to canonical books

If lines 25–39 refer to Moses' apotheosis, they form a striking parallel to the hymn fragment in Phil 2:6–11. The means to the attainment of divine status of course differ (the crucifixion vs. mystical vision via the study of astrology). But both hymns picture the newly achieved status in phrases taken from Old Testament descriptions of God.

Relation to apocryphal books

In 3 Enoch, chapters 6–16, Enoch is enthroned as a "lesser Yahweh" following a heavenly ascent. Likewise in a play of Ezekiel the Tragedian (see Eusebius, PrEv 9:28 and the translation in the present vol.), we read how Moses was enthroned in heaven and the stars came to serve him. (These are of course only parallels if ll. 32–39 are taken to refer to Moses rather than God.)

Cultural importance

Depending on how the "mystery" framework of the hymn is understood, the hymn may be an important witness to the beginnings of Jewish mysticism. As to the influence of the hymn on subsequent cultural history, its main importance is its preservation and diffusion by Christian apologists. In the words of K. Ziegler, this hymn "gave Christians a good opinion of Orpheus and made him look like an early preacher of salvation . . . and brought about his acceptance in early Christian art."<sup>6</sup>

<sup>6</sup> K. Ziegler, "Orphische Dichtung," Pauly-Wissowa 18.2, col. 1399.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 167f.

Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 53–55.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 223–38.

Elter, A. De gnomologiorum graecorum historia. Bonn, 1897; cols. 154–84. (An attempt to trace intermediary recensions between J (regarded as original) and E, by means of Clement's quotations.)

Georgi, D. Die Gegner des Paulus in 2. Corintherbrief. Neukirchen-Vluyn, 1964; pp. 73–76. (The first critical treatment to try to understand the longer version (E) as a coherent whole.)

Lafargue, M. "The Jewish Orpheus," Society of Biblical Literature 1978 Seminar Papers, ed. P. Achtemeier; vol. 2, pp. 137–44. (Proceeds from Georgi's position, and argues in detail for many of the interpretations given in the translation and nn. here.)

Lobeck, C. A. Aglaophamus. Königsberg, 1829; vol. 1, pp. 438–48. (One of the earliest critical treatments of the hymn.)

Walter, N. Der Thoraausleger Aristobulos. TU 86; Berlin, 1964; pp. 103–15, 202–61. (The most recent and thorough attempt to support and refine Elter's position, this work contains a good summary of previous scholarship on the hymn.)

THE LONG VERSION (E and T)

- <sup>1</sup> I will sing for those for whom it is lawful, but you uninitiate, close your doors,<sup>a</sup>
<sup>2</sup> Charged under the laws of the Righteous ones, for the Divine has legislated<sup>b</sup>
<sup>3</sup> For all alike. But you, son of the light-bearing moon,
<sup>4</sup> Musaeus, listen, for I proclaim the Truth.
<sup>5</sup> Let not what you formerly felt lose for you a happy eternity,<sup>c</sup>
<sup>6</sup> But look to the divine word, study it closely,
<sup>7</sup> [So] guiding your heart, that knowing vessel. Set out firmly <sup>8</sup> On the path, and look only at the undying shaper of the universe.
<sup>9</sup> There is an ancient saying about him:
<sup>10</sup> "He is one"—self-completing, and all things completed by him, Deut 6:4
<sup>11</sup> In them he himself circulates. But no one has seen him
<sup>12</sup> With the souls mortals have, he is seen [only] by Mind.<sup>d</sup>
<sup>13</sup> He does not take good things and make them into evil
<sup>14</sup> For people, but he comes in company with love and hate,<sup>e</sup>
<sup>15</sup> "And war and plague and weeping pain"—<sup>f</sup>
<sup>16</sup> "And there is no other." You would understand everything Isa 45:5
<sup>17</sup> If you were to see him. But before that, here on earth, sometimes,<sup>g</sup>
<sup>18</sup> My son, I will point it out to you, whenever I notice his footsteps, <sup>19</sup> And the strong hand of the mighty God.
<sup>20</sup> But I do not see him, because around [him] a cloud is set up,
<sup>21</sup> A thin one for me, but tenfold for all [other] people.
<sup>22</sup> For all mortals have mortal pupils in their eyes, <sup>23</sup> [Too] small, since flesh and bones have produced them, <sup>24</sup> [Too] weak to see Zeus, the ruler of all.<sup>h</sup>
<sup>25</sup> And no one has seen the ruler of mortal men,
<sup>26</sup> Except a certain unique man, an offshoot from far back of the race
<sup>27</sup> Of the Chaldeans. For he was knowledgeable about the path of the Star,<sup>i</sup>
<sup>28</sup> And how the movement of the Sphere goes around the earth, <sup>29</sup> Both in circular fashion, but each on its own axis.
<sup>30</sup> He rides in spirit through the air and through the water<sup>j</sup>
<sup>31</sup> Of the stream. A comet makes manifest these events—he had a mighty birth.<sup>k</sup> Mt 2:2

The Long Version:

a. "You uninitiate . . . doors," a formula probably taken from the mystery religions, found also in Plato (Symp. 218b). Further references are found in O. Kern, Orphicorum fragmenta (Berlin, 1922) p. 258.

b. "Righteous ones": probably initiates, using dikaïos in the hellenistic Jewish sense. One could also, however, understand "laws about the right things."

c. Lit. "What formerly appeared in your breast."

d. "With the souls . . . by Mind": only in E. According to the first hypothesis (see above under "Text") this is an interpolation, since T here agrees with J: "but he sees everything." T repeats l. 20 following this l., which is surely not original, since it makes sense there but not here.

e. T and the MSS of E vary here. A different reading, with a slight emendation, would be "but love and hate, and war . . . serve him."

f. Quoted from SibOr 3.603, or a common source.

g. "Before that," i.e. before making the heavenly journey and seeing God.

h. E is missing ll. 22–24. T has misplaced l. 21, putting it after l. 24 (in the order 20, 22–24, 21), where it makes no sense. The translation of l. 21 given here is based on C. A. Lobeck's emendation of loipon to lepton ("thin"), and of E's stasin to T's pasin ("all").

i. Possibly Abraham is meant here. But Philo (Vit Mos 5) thinks also of Moses as a Chaldean schooled in astronomy.

j. The MSS vary here. One could also read: "He rides the winds . . ." or "He [God] guides the winds . . ."

k. This l. is difficult to make sense of and the translation here is conjectural. I take l. 30 to be a description of a heavenly ascent, and then the comet here to be a heavenly portent signaling its cosmic importance. "Mighty birth" is a translation of iphi genêthe, a play on the name Iphigeneia ("born mighty"), a reference to an initiatory "re-birth" following the heavenly journey. Others emend with Stephanus to iphigenêtou, "a mighty-born flame of fire flashes up." This, together with l. 30, could then be a reference to the Chaldean's knowledge of the cosmos or his vision of God. T

- <sup>32</sup> Yes he after this is established in the great heaven<sup>l</sup>
<sup>33</sup> On a golden throne. He stands with his feet on the earth. Isa 66:1
<sup>34</sup> He stretches out his right hand to the ends of the ocean.
<sup>35</sup> The foundation of the mountains trembles within at [his] anger, Ps 18:8
<sup>36</sup> And the depths of the gray sparkling sea.<sup>m</sup>
<sup>37</sup> They cannot endure the mighty power. He is entirely <sup>38</sup> Heavenly, and he brings everything to completion on earth, <sup>39</sup> Being "the beginning, the middle, and the end,"<sup>n</sup> Rev 1:8
<sup>40</sup> As the saying of the ancients, as the one water-born<sup>o</sup> has described it, <sup>41</sup> The one who received [revelations] from God in aphorisms, in the form of a double law.<sup>p</sup>
<sup>42</sup> It is unlawful to say anything else. My body is trembling.
<sup>43</sup> In Mind, from above,<sup>q</sup> he rules over everything according to an order, <sup>44</sup> My son, approach him with your Mind,
<sup>45</sup> And do not betray, but guard the divine message in your heart.<sup>r</sup>

THE SHORT VERSION (J and C<sup>1</sup>)

- <sup>1</sup> I will sing for those for whom it is lawful, but you uninitiate, close your doors, <sup>3</sup> All alike. But you, son of the light-bearing moon,
<sup>4</sup> Musaeus, listen, for I proclaim the Truth.
<sup>5</sup> Let not what you formerly felt lose for you a happy eternity,
<sup>6</sup> But look to the divine word, study it closely,
<sup>7</sup> [So] guiding your heart, that knowing vessel. Set out firmly
<sup>8</sup> On the path, and look only at the master of the universe.<sup>a</sup>
<sup>10</sup> He is one, self-generating; all things are brought forth generated from this one,<sup>b</sup>
<sup>11</sup> And among them he is superior.<sup>c</sup> And no one <sup>12</sup> Of mortal men has seen him, but he sees all.
<sup>13</sup> Out of goodness he brings evil upon mortals,
<sup>15</sup> "And chilling war and weeping pain,"
<sup>16</sup> And there is no other besides the great king.
<sup>20</sup> But I do not see him, because around [him] a cloud is set up.
<sup>22</sup> For all mortals have mortal pupils in their eyes,

does not have iphi genēthe, but diaphengea pantē "[flames of fire] shining forth everywhere."

l. Ll. 32–39 may be a description of the Chaldean's apotheosis or of his divine vision. In the latter case "hereafter" (autis) should be changed to "in turn" in l. 32.

m. Lacking in E.

n. Plato (Laws 715e) refers to this as an "ancient saying." References to further occurrences are to be found in E. Lohmeyer, Die Offenbarung des Johannes (Tübingen, 1953) p. 168.

o. "Water-born": an easy emendation of hylogenēs to hydrogenēs (or hydrogenēs), understanding it as a reference to Moses' experience in the basket on the Nile.

p. "Double law": perhaps a reference to two levels of meaning (exoteric/esoteric) in Scripture. It could also be simply a reference to the two tablets of the Law.

q. "My body . . . from above": Punctuating differently and taking T's text with a slight emendation, one could read, "I tremble strongly in [my] mind. From above . . ." The "order" in l. 43 may refer to the sequence to be followed in esoteric instruction. This is very likely if we read l. 42a as a denial of the legitimacy of giving out further secrets at the present time. Compare the "order of the transmission (of esoteric instruction)" mentioned in The Discourse on the Eighth and the Ninth from Nag Hammadi (VI 52, 6).

r. E here is neither intelligible nor metrically correct. The translation is based on T, with an emendation in l. 45 of apogos (unintelligible) to apodos ("betray").

The Short Version:

a. C<sup>1</sup> has also the first word of l. 9 as it appears in the long version, showing that Clement's text probably had l. 9, though J does not.

b. One C<sup>1</sup> quotation has "self-completing" in the place of J's "self-generating." Another C<sup>1</sup> quotation agrees with J.

c. C<sup>1</sup> agrees with the long version in reading, "in them he circulates." According to the first hypothesis, this was the original reading in the short version as well.

- <sup>24</sup> Too weak to see Zeus, the ruler of all.<sup>d</sup>
<sup>32</sup> And he is established in the bronze heaven
<sup>33</sup> On a golden throne. He rests with his feet upon the earth, <sup>34</sup> And he stretches out his right hand everywhere, to the end of the ocean.
<sup>35</sup> And the great mountains tremble round about,<sup>e</sup>
<sup>36</sup> And the gray rivers and the depths of the blue sea.

d. C<sup>1</sup> has l. 23 (see the long version) and omits l. 24.

e. C<sup>1</sup> has the text in a different order here: 34, 35a, 33b.

DRAMA

EZEKIEL THE TRAGEDIAN

(Second Century B.C.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY R. G. ROBERTSON

The Exagōgē ("Leading Out") is a tragic drama from the hellenistic period which recounts the story of the exodus from Egypt. Its author, Ezekiel, is described as "the poet of tragedies" by Eusebius, citing Alexander Polyhistor (PrEv 9.28.1). Clement of Alexandria defines him more precisely as "the poet of Jewish tragedies" (Strom 1.23). All that remains of his literary efforts, however, are the fragments of this one work which are preserved in Eusebius and, in part, in Clement of Alexandria and in Pseudo-Eustathius. The content of Ezekiel's work is based upon the biblical narrative in Exodus 1–15 and centers around Moses as the principal figure. Ezekiel begins with the events surrounding Moses' birth and early childhood and then traces the story of his flight into the wilderness, his call by God to lead the Israelites out of Egypt, and the events surrounding the departure of the Israelites from Egypt. In the final act Ezekiel describes the scene at Elim (Ex 15:27) as Moses and the Israelites journey into the wilderness. At various points Ezekiel exercises literary license to create material which is extraneous to the biblical narrative (e.g. Moses' dream and its subsequent interpretation by his father-in-law). Ezekiel also introduces characters in his drama who are fictional in terms of the narrative of Exodus (e.g. the Egyptian survivor who relates the destruction of the Egyptian army in the Red Sea). Such variations are generally in accord, however, with the dictates of the dramatic form which Ezekiel has adopted. In brief, Ezekiel's work represents a synthesis of the content of the biblical narrative of Exodus with the literary form of Greek tragic drama.

Texts

The text of Ezekiel is extant only in fragments cited by Eusebius (PrEv 9, 28–29, edited by K. Mras, GCS 43, 1), Clement of Alexandria (Strom 1.23.155f., edited by O. Stählin, GCS 15, 2), and Pseudo-Eustathius (Commentarius in Hexaemeron, PG 18, 729). Various critical editions of Ezekiel's text are referred to in the notes that accompany the translation. A complete summary of the earlier editions is included in J. Wieneke, Ezechielis Iudaei poetae Alexandrini (Monasterii Westfalorum, 1931). The most recent modern edition of Ezekiel is that of B. Snell, Tragicorum Graecorum Fragmenta (Göttingen, 1971) vol. I, pp. 288–301.

Original language

Ezekiel's text is extant in iambic trimeter, the meter which was commonly used in Greek tragic drama, thus indicating clearly that Greek was the language in which the author wrote.

Date

The date of Ezekiel's composition has been the subject of widespread discussion. His knowledge of the Septuagint argues for a date subsequent to its translation, while the excerpts of his work in Alexander Polyhistor's Concerning the Jews (c. first century B.C.) indicate a date prior to the middle of the first century B.C. Kuiper argued for a date during or shortly after the time of Ptolemy Euergetes III (died 221 B.C.), based primarily on Ezekiel's description of the legendary phoenix bird.<sup>1</sup> Tacitus (Annales 6.28) refers to the excitement and the flurry of literature generated by the bird's arrival in Egypt around 34 A.D. Tacitus also quotes one of his sources to the effect that the bird had appeared previously during the reign of Pharaoh Sesostris and, at a later date, during the reign of Ptolemy Euergetes III. Kuiper argued that similar interest in the phoenix bird might well have evolved during the reign of Euergetes. Thus, the expected appearance of the phoenix during the reign of Ptolemy Euergetes III may have occasioned Ezekiel's use of the material here and might explain his efforts to link the bird's previous appearance in the reign of Sesostris with Jewish tradition; specifically with Moses, the great Jewish leader. Kuiper's argument is, however, highly speculative. All that one can safely say is that Ezekiel is familiar with a literary tradition concerning the phoenix bird, a fact which may tie him more closely to an Egyptian provenance because of the association of the bird with Egypt.

Perhaps a more significant indication of the actual situation from which Ezekiel's work evolved is the polemic found in the Letter of Aristeeas 312–16, where the author addresses himself to the question of certain tragic poets who sought to adapt some of the incidents recorded in the Bible for their plays. The situation described here presupposes literature such as Ezekiel's Exagōgē.<sup>2</sup> This, combined with the fact that Ezekiel's work may have been based on a recension of the Septuagint text, seems to point to a somewhat later date than that suggested by Kuiper, perhaps the first part of the second century B.C. The lack of any other concrete evidence makes it difficult to be more precise in the matter of dating.

Provenance

The provenance of Ezekiel's work has been assigned by most scholars to Alexandria.<sup>3</sup> The choice of subject matter, the use of the Septuagint text, and, in particular, the wedding of these elements with the vehicle of Greek tragic drama are indeed compatible with such a milieu. Ezekiel utilized the models of Greek tragedy—Aeschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides—in the construction of his drama. Euripides, in particular, seems to have exercised a great deal of influence on Ezekiel's work.<sup>4</sup> This is perhaps consonant with the fact that during the third century B.C. Ptolemy Euergetes III is said to have acquired the official manuscripts of these authors from Athens and to have deposited them in the library at Alexandria. It was during this period also that Satyrus' Life of Euripides was written and circulated in Egypt.<sup>5</sup>

Nevertheless, there is very little in the way of direct evidence with which to link Ezekiel with Alexandria. It is entirely possible that his work could have been produced in some other center, such as Cyrene, in which the spirit of Hellenism had influenced Jewish culture.<sup>6</sup> While Alexandria remains as a most likely place of origin for Ezekiel and his work, it is the lack of direct evidence, rather than its abundance, which has allowed him to be characterized as "the Jewish poet of Alexandria"<sup>7</sup> without serious challenge.

Historical importance

The significance of Ezekiel's work lies both in its relationship to biblical tradition and in its testimony to the development of tragic drama in the hellenistic period.

<sup>1</sup> Kuiper, K. "Le Poète Juif Ezéchiel," REJ 46 (1903) 171.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Trencsényi-Waldapfel, "Une tragédie grecque à sujet biblique," Acta Orientalia Academiae Scientiarum 2 (1952) 161.

<sup>3</sup> Kuiper (REJ 46, 174), took exception to this and believed Ezekiel to have been a Samaritan. In this he was followed (on somewhat different grounds) by J. B. Segal, The Hebrew Passover from the Earliest Times (London, 1963) p. 25.

<sup>4</sup> Numerous examples are cited by Kuiper, REJ 46 (1903) 48–73, 161–77; Wieneke, Ezekielis Iudaei poetae Alexandrini (Monasterii Westfalorum, 1931); and others in their commentaries.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Oxyrhynchus Papyri IX, 1176.

<sup>6</sup> So, for example, J. Gutmann, Hasifrut Hayehudith Hahellenistiith (Jerusalem, 1963) vol. 2, pp. 66–69.

<sup>7</sup> So Wieneke in the title of his work.

Striking parallels have long been noted between certain elements of Ezekiel's text and the Septuagint text of Exodus.<sup>8</sup> The evidence clearly indicates that Ezekiel was dependent on the Septuagint text. In all probability, he made use of an early recension of the Septuagint, which fact seems to be reflected by the existence of certain variant textual traditions within his text.<sup>9</sup> A more precise analysis of the nature of the Greek text on which Ezekiel based his work remains yet to be done.

The Exagōgē itself is the most extensive surviving example of hellenistic tragedy. It is a historical drama, but its title is derived neither from the leading character nor from the chorus. Tragedies based on historical events (e.g. Aeschylus' Persians), were rare during the classical period, although later works attributed to Theodectes, Moschion, Philiscus, and Lycophron indicate their rise in popularity during the hellenistic period. The recent discovery of the "Gyges" fragment (part of the tragic drama based on historical events in ancient Lydia) may also attest this phenomenon.<sup>10</sup>

A distinctive feature of Ezekiel's drama which separates it from the mainstream of classical Greek tragedy is the violation of the theoretical unity of time and place, a principle expressed by Aristotle (Poetics 1449b), who described the ideal tragedy as situated in one geographic location and occurring within a period of twenty-four hours. Although even Aeschylus and Sophocles did not always adhere to such unity, Ezekiel's apparent disregard of Aristotle's principle may be indicative of the changes that were taking place within tragic drama during the hellenistic period, particularly in the Alexandrian school of literature.

Was Ezekiel's work intended for the stage? It is impossible to answer this question with certainty. Most commentators have discussed the problem in some detail, and the general consensus has been that there is nothing in the drama as it now stands that would make it intrinsically impossible for it to be enacted on the stage.

Ezekiel's work conforms to the generally accepted pattern of a tragedy in five acts.<sup>11</sup> Although commentators disagree in some details, the fragments that remain can be easily broken down in a pattern similar to the following:

- Act I    Scene 1—Moses' monologue
- Scene 2—Moses' dialogue with Sepphorah
- Act II    Scene 1—Sepphorah's dialogue with Chus
- Scene 2—Moses' dream, and Jethro's interpretation
- Act III    Scene 1—Moses' dialogue with God
- Scene 2—Moses' instructions to the people<sup>12</sup>
- Act IV               —Report of the Egyptian messenger
- Act V               —Elim, and the report of the messengers to Moses.

Kappelmacher and others have argued for various arrangements to deal with the troublesome dialogue between Sepphorah and Chus (ll. 66–67), and additional scenes have been hypothesized to include Moses' marriage to Sepphorah (Act II), Moses and Aaron before Pharaoh (Act IV, Scene 1), and perhaps Moses' final reunion with Sepphorah (Act V, Scene 2).

The existence of a chorus has also been argued, although none of the lyric verses that might be attributed to a chorus have survived in the fragments. This is not surprising, however, in light of the particular interests of Alexander Polyhistor, Eusebius, and Clement. It is entirely possible that a chorus could have made its parodos ("entrance") immediately after the opening monologue when Moses noted the appearance of Sepphorah and her sisters. If, as Kappelmacher and others have suggested, there is a closing scene in which Moses and Sepphorah are reunited, then the chorus would have made its "exodus" at that

<sup>8</sup> The critical text of B. Snell offers an accurate comparison with the LXX of Ex. The commentary of Wieneke, which includes the text of Ex on facing pp. opposite that of Ezekiel, is sometimes in error.

<sup>9</sup> Cf., infra, n. on l. 2, passim.

<sup>10</sup> The text is published in Oxyrhynchus Papyri XXIII, 2382, with bibliography. A full discussion may be found in D. L. Page, A New Chapter in the History of Greek Drama (Cambridge, England, 1951). Additional bibliography is included in R. A. Pack, The Greek and Latin Literary Texts from Greco-Roman Egypt (Ann Arbor, 1967<sup>2</sup>) p. 97.

<sup>11</sup> In the early Gk. tragedians the number of acts was not fixed and was only formally established for drama in Horace, Ars Poetica 189, although the practice had become common since the rise of New Comedy in the fourth century B.C.

<sup>12</sup> Cf., infra, n. w2.

point. The idea of a chorus of Egyptians responding to the report of the Egyptian messenger is also possible in Act IV, as is a chorus of the Hebrew people in Act III, Scene 2.

The possibility that the play was intended for the stage is enhanced by the evidence which indicates that Ezekiel transformed certain material from the Exodus account which would have been virtually impossible to present upon the stage. The plagues, for example, have been completely relegated to a speech delivered by God to Moses. The crossing of the Red Sea is handled in true Aeschylean fashion by Ezekiel when, with dramatic irony, he dredges up a lone survivor from the Egyptian army who is able to recount the disaster. One further example is of great importance: that is, the specific statement made by God to Moses (l. 101) that it is impossible for him to be seen by Moses (and so, presumably, by the audience as well). Although it may not be possible to prove conclusively that Ezekiel consciously effected these modifications for the specific purpose of producing a piece suitable for the stage, nevertheless, there is nothing in the play that would make it technically impossible for dramatization.

Ezekiel's verse corresponds with that ordinarily found in the dialogue of tragic drama, iambic trimeter. It is only in recent years that this aspect of Ezekiel's work has received more serious attention. Wieneke's commentary marked a definite advance beyond the work of Kuiper and others who preceded him insofar as he sought to emend the text on the basis of metrical considerations. There is no doubt that the text—as preserved by Eusebius, Clement, and Pseudo-Eustathius, and the scribes who copied their works—has suffered corruption at a number of points. There is ample evidence, however, to suggest that Ezekiel was careful to employ the proper rules of metrics in his composition. B. Snell<sup>13</sup> and J. Strugnell<sup>14</sup> have demonstrated conclusively that Ezekiel was consistent in correctly applying the rules of metrics in his work. There is a marked affinity at this point between Ezekiel's verse and that of the later Euripides and his successors.

Translation

In order to preserve the somewhat archaic flavor of Ezekiel's verse, the English translation has been rendered metrically in iambic pentameter and in a manner which attempts to represent the technically correct, but often strained, language which Ezekiel employed. I am grateful to the editor for allowing an exception in this case to the usual norms followed in this volume, and to J. Strugnell and A. Nakis for their invaluable suggestions and assistance. While every effort has been made to follow the lines of Ezekiel's text with as exact a representation of the content of each line as might be possible in the English translation, metrical and grammatical considerations sometimes precluded this. In some cases, the footnotes indicate the slight rearrangement of the text that was made in the English translation. The translation is based upon the critical text of Mras. The texts of Kuiper, Wieneke, and Snell have been consulted throughout and noted accordingly in the footnotes. The standard numeration for Ezekiel's lines has also been followed in the translation.

<sup>13</sup> B. Snell, "Die Jamben in Ezechiels Moses-Drama," Glotta 44 (1966) 25–32.

<sup>14</sup> J. Strugnell, "Notes on the Text and Metre of Ezekiel the Tragedian's 'Exagoge,'" HTR 60 (1967) 449–57.

EZEKIEL THE TRAGEDIAN
SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 110f.

Delling, Bibliographie, p. 55.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 273–77.

Freyhan, M. "Ezechiël der Tragiker," Jahrbuch für jüdische Geschichte und Literatur 31 (1938) 46–83.

Kappelmacher, A. "Zur Tragödie der hellenistischen Zeit," Wiener Studien 44 (1924–25) 69–86.

Kraus, C. "Ezechiele Poeta Tragico," Rivista di filologia e di istruzione classica 96 (1968) 164–75.

Kuiper, K. "Le Poète Juif Ezéchiël," REJ 46 (1903) 48–73, 161–77.

Snell, B. "Die Jamben in Ezechiels Moses-Drama," Glotta 44 (1966) 25–32.

———. "Ezechiels Moses-Drama," Antike und Abendland 13 (1967) 150–64.

Strugnell, J. "Notes on the Text and Metre of Ezekiel the Tragedian's 'Exagoge,'" HTR 60 (1967) 449–57.

Trencsényi-Waldapfel, "Une tragédie grècque à sujet biblique," Acta Orientalia Academiae Scientiarum 2 (1952) 143–64.

Wieneke, J. Ezechielis Iudaei poetae Alexandrini. Monasterii Westfalorum, 1931.

Exagōgē

And with regard to Moses being exposed by his mother in the marsh, and being taken up and reared by the king's daughter, Ezekiel the tragic poet narrates the events, taking up the story from the beginning, when Jacob and those that were with him came into Egypt to Joseph.<sup>a</sup> Introducing Moses as the speaker, he says:

- 1 And when from Canaan Jacob did depart, Gen 46:27
2 with threescore souls and ten<sup>b</sup> he did go down
3 to Egypt's land; and there he<sup>c</sup> did beget Ex 1:7
4 a host of people: suffering,<sup>d</sup> oppressed,
5 ill-treated even to this very day
6 by ruling powers and by wicked men.
7 For Pharaoh, seeing how our race increased Ex 1:9–11,14
8 in swarms, devised against us this grand scheme:
9 he forced the men<sup>e</sup> to manufacture bricks
10 for use in building lofty walls and towers;<sup>f</sup>
11 thus with their toil he made his cities strong.
12 He ordered next the Hebrew race to cast<sup>g</sup> Ex 1:22
13 their infant boys into the river deep.
14 At which point, she who bore me from her womb Ex 2:2f.
15 did hide me for three months, as she declared.
16 But when found out, she robbed me and exposed<sup>h</sup>

a. There seems to be no real reason to suppose, as some commentators have, that the opening ll. of the prologue are missing. (For de as an introductory particle, cf. Xenophon, Cyropaedia 4.5.23; Aeschylus, Agamemnon 717). The editorial statement by Alexander Polyhistor implies that Ezekiel's work commenced at the point where Jacob and his family entered Egypt. The text, as it has been preserved, corresponds in detail to the beginning of the narrative in Ex 1. Since the biblical text of Ex comprised Ezekiel's primary source, it may be assumed (with some degree of probability) that the existing text marks the beginning of the drama as it was originally written. A further indication of this lies in the fact that the prologue is comparable in length to similar material in Euripides, whose work Ezekiel may have utilized as a model.

b. Ezekiel's reading of "seventy" marks a significant departure from the text of the LXX, which reads "seventy-five," (Ex 1:5; cf. Gen 46:27; Acts 7:14). The reading "seventy" is attested in the biblical text primarily by the MT and the Samaritan Pentateuch (cf. Josephus, Ant 2.176). This and other instances in which Ezekiel's text seems to stand closer to the Heb. than to the LXX have led some scholars to conclude that Ezekiel may have used a Heb. text, either directly or as a means of correcting certain LXX readings. In l. 113, for example, Ezekiel reads ouk eulogos, "not eloquent," a more literal rendering of the Heb. and Samaritan ʾo ʾiš d̄barim, "not a man of words," which is rather loosely expressed by the LXX ouk hikanos eimi, "I am not sufficient," Ex 4:10. Similarly, in l. 140 (Gk.) Ezekiel reads loimos, "pestilence, plague," which seems to stand closer to the Heb. deber kabēd, "severe plague," than to the reading of the LXX, thanatos megas sphodra, "a very great death," Ex 9:3. In spite of these and other instances, however, in almost every case in which Ezekiel's text seems to stand closer to the Heb. text than to the LXX it is supported by significant textual witnesses within the LXX (frequently by marginal readings in the uncial manuscript F. and sometimes by Philo or Josephus). This suggests the possibility that Ezekiel's work may have been based on a text of the LXX which had undergone some revision in order to bring it into greater harmony with a changing Heb. textual tradition.

c. Cf. Strugnell, HTR 60 (1967) 455–56, who suggests emending to a plural form of the verb: "and there they did beget . . ."

d. Lit. "faring badly."

e. The construction of the Gk. text is difficult, with nothing in the ll. that follow which answers to ious men. Kuiper felt compelled to add an extra l. to the text at this point, drawing from parallel material in Josephus, Ant 2.203. The same sort of syntactical problem occurs later in Ezekiel's work (ll. 200, 205).

f. Lit. "for heavy building works." The reading of Clement and N<sup>2</sup>, oikodomiais, is necessary on metrical grounds.

g. Or, perhaps, "to cast the infant boys of Hebrew descent . . ." The text is unclear; for a full discussion of the question, cf. Howard Jacobsen, "Ezekielos 12–13," American Journal of Philology 98 (1977), 415f. Jacobsen suggests emending genei to genē, thus bringing Ezekiel's text into closer correspondence with the tradition of Ex. The biblical text (Ex 1:22) is quite clear as to the fact that Pharaoh instructed the Egyptians to cast the male children of the Hebrews into the river. Another tradition, preserved in Jub 47:2 (and perhaps also in Acts 7:19), indicates that it may have been the Hebrews themselves who were instructed to throw their own children into the river. If one accepts these latter references as summary

- 17 me in the marsh hard by the river's edge;<sup>i</sup>
 18 and Miriam, my sister, watched close by. Ex 2:4f.
 19 The sovereign's daughter, with her maidens, then 20 came down to bathe her limbs, as was her wont.<sup>k</sup>
 21 And straightway seeing me,<sup>l</sup> she took me up:
 22 she knew that I was of the Hebrew race. Ex 2:6-8
 23 My sister, running to the princess, said,
 24 "Shall I quickly fetch this child a nurse 25 of Hebrew stock?" The princess pressed her on;
 26 she came and told my mother, who with haste
 27 did come herself, and took me in her arms.
 28 The sovereign's daughter then said, "Woman, nurse Ex 2:9
 29 this child and I will render you a wage."
 30 And she, the princess, named me "Moses,"<sup>m</sup> since Ex 2:10 31 she took me from the river's soggy shore.

After other matters,<sup>n</sup> Ezekiel adds further information in his tragedy, introducing Moses, who says:

- 32 And seeing that my infancy had passed, Ex 2:9f.
 33 my mother led me to the princess' rooms;
 34 but first all things she did declare to me
 35 pertaining to my father's God and race.<sup>o</sup>
 36 Throughout my boyhood years the princess did,
 37 for princely rearing and instruction apt,
 38 provide all things, as though I were her own.<sup>p</sup>
 39 The circle<sup>q</sup> of the days then being full, Ex 2:11
 40 I quit the royal house, impelled to deeds
 41 by my own heart<sup>r</sup> and by the king's device.

and conflate statements of the instructions given by Pharaoh, first to the Hebrew midwives and later to the Egyptians, then the basis of this tradition in the biblical account (Ex 1:15-22) is quite clear.

h. For this section, cf. Josephus, Ant 2.217-21. The detail of the thibin, "ark" (cf. Ex 2:3), is omitted by Ezekiel. He adds, however, a reference to the kosmos, "ornamental robe," with which Moses' mother clothed him. Ezekiel's use of the term hypexethēke, translated here "she exposed," is significant for the drama. The motif of the foundling who later rises to success and fame is a familiar one in Gk. literature; cf. Richmond Lattimore, Story Patterns in Greek Tragedy (London, 1964), p. 74, n. 21.

i. Lit. "on the bank of the river in a deep bushy marsh." Clement reads bathy, "deep," which seems preferable to the reading of Eusebius, dasy, "overgrown with bushes," which may have originated as a marginal gloss on lasion, "bushy."

j. adelphē mou, the emendation accepted by most editors in place of adelph' hēmōn, which is the reading of the MSS in the texts both of Eusebius and of Clement.

k. Lit. "came down to cleanse her flesh with washings." Neon, here translated adverbially, "as was her wont," has sometimes been considered as an adjective modifying "flesh." In this case, the text would read: "youthful flesh."

l. The translation follows the text of Clement, idouasa m'euthys. Eusebius reads idouasa d'euthys.

m. The introduction of the name of the principal character is necessary for the benefit of the audience, particularly since it is not included in the title of the play. Ezekiel follows closely the Heb.

etymology of Moses' name as it is preserved in the Septuagint (Ex 2:10), over and against Josephus (Ant 2.228) and Philo (Vit Mos 1.17), who adopt an Egyptian etymology. The particular form of the name, Mōsēn, is necessary here to fit the meter. The reading of Clement, Mōysēn, must be excluded on metrical grounds.

n. The difficulty with this editorial remark lies in determining whether it should be attributed to Eusebius or to Alexander Polyhistor. The grammatical sense of the statement seems to favor the latter (cf., contra, Kraus, p. 164, n. 4). Scholars have objected to this, however, on the ground that the historical narrative of Ex does not allow for any "other matters" at this point. Nevertheless, it is entirely possible that Ezekiel may have amplified his material here (as elsewhere), including a section in which Moses was formally presented to Pharaoh (cf. Josephus, Ant 2.232-37).

o. Lit. "my father's race and gifts of God."

p. The Septuagint states that Moses became eis huion to Pharaoh's daughter (Ex 2:10). Ezekiel suggests the theme which is fully developed at a later time by Josephus, Ant 2.232, and Philo, Vit Mos 1.19, to the effect that Moses was legally adopted. Cf. Artapanus, PrEv 9.27.3, who hints at this with the use of the term hypobalesthai.

q. The MSS read kolpos, "womb." The emendation which is followed here (kyklos for kolpos) was first suggested by Kuiper.

r. This term, thymos, could also be translated "anger" (cf. Jub 46:12), in which case it might be inferred that at this point Moses had come to a full realization of the conditions under which the Israelites were enslaved by Pharaoh. This would 42 And first I saw men locked in strife, at odds,<sup>s</sup>

 43 Egyptian one, and one of Hebrew race.
 44 And seeing them alone, with none about,
 45 I saved my kinsman, but his foe I slew
 46 and hid him in the sand,<sup>t</sup> that none might see 47 or, else, expose our homicidal act.
 48 The next day, once again I saw two men:
 49 my kinsmen, they, each other pommeling.
 50 I said, "Why strike one weaker than yourself?"<sup>u</sup>
 51 Said he, "Who set you for a judge 'twixt us
 52 or ruler in this place? Will you slay me
 53 as that man yesterday?" And I, afraid,
 54 said, "How, then, has this deed been brought to light?"
 55 All this was soon reported<sup>v</sup> to the king,
 56 upon which Pharaoh sought to take my life.
 57 When such I heard, I fled beyond his reach,
 58 and now I wander in a foreign land.

Ex 2:12

Ex 2:13-15

Then concerning the daughters of Raguel<sup>w</sup> he adds:

59 But, lo! These seven maidens I espy!

Ex 2:16

In response to his question as to who they might be, Sepphorah replies:

60 This land, O stranger, all bears Libya's<sup>x</sup> name, also correspond with the understanding of technasma basileōs as "the king's device." Technasma is understood here as part of the compound subject of the verb with thymos. If, however, technasma were considered as an accusative belonging with pros erga, "to deeds," the pejorative sense disappears completely; the l. would then read: "Impelled by my heart to acts and deeds befitting a king." In any event, it is as though the audience was meant to realize that this is an important decision on Moses' part. Given the fact that he is the foundling who has been rescued (contrary to the realities of life, which predict that such a child will probably die), the dramatic theme demands that his star should rise. But even though the shape of the story may intimate the final end, there is still the element of choice whereby the hero may confirm or deny the destiny that lies before him. This theme is common in other Gk. tragedies (e.g. Gyges and Aeschylus' Septem) and was surely understood by the author of Heb. 11:24.

s. For "at odds" as a translation of en cheirōn nomais, cf. LSJM on nomē, which cites a second-century-B.C. inscription as evidence for the use of this idiom.

t. The term amos, "sand," used by Ezekiel, is derived from the Septuagint and stands in contrast to the more poetic term psammos, which is used by Clement in his editorial summary of this section. In Ezekiel's account of the killing of the Egyptian by Moses, very little effort is made to adjust the picture of Moses in any way, as is the case, for example, in Philo (Vit Mos 1.44). In many respects, Ezekiel's "Moses" seems to be typical of Aristotle's ideal tragic hero (Poetics XIII.5).

u. Ezekiel's text, "one weaker than yourself," stands against that of the Septuagint, "(your) neighbor." There is no textual support from the biblical evidence, nor do the demands of meter require it. It may, however, be a dramatic portent of the fact that Moses will be the defender of the weak and the oppressed (cf. Kraus, p. 174).

v. Reading apēggelē, the emendation proposed by Kuiper (p. 57). The MSS read apēggeile, for which some editors have suggested is as the subject (replacing kai at the beginning of the l.). The translation would then read: "Someone quickly brought these tidings to the king." This seems to be the understanding of Mras, who refers to "der erwähnte Gewalttäter" as the subject. A somewhat different solution is proposed by Strugnell (HTR 60 [1967] 456), which results, however, in the same translation as is adopted above.

w. The name "Raguel" does not occur within the actual text of Ezekiel. Its existence here must be attributed either to Eusebius or to Alexander Polyhistor. Thus, Mras's statement (GCS 43, 1, p. 527) that, according to Ezekiel, Sepphorah is Raguel's daughter is an inference that cannot fairly be drawn from Ezekiel's text. At no point does Ezekiel identify Moses' father-in-law by name, as either "Jethro" or "Raguel." The question raised by the diverse biblical tradition as to his name (cf. Ex 2:16, 18; 3:1; 4:18) remains unresolved in terms of Ezekiel's text. The matter did receive a considerable amount of attention from other ancient authors, however; e.g. Demetrius (PrEv 9.29.1), who maintained that Sepphorah was the daughter of Jethro and the granddaughter of Raguel; Josephus (Ant 2.264), who may have simply combined "Jethro" and "Raguel" into one name, "Ietheglaeus." Modern scholarship has done little more to clear up the confusion. Cf. Kappelmacher (p. 71, n. 1), who suggests that one or the other of the two names was a surname.

x. The name "Libya" represents a radical departure from the text of the Septuagint (Ex 2:15) which is not occasioned by the necessities of meter since "Midian" could have scanned equally as well in this l. The answer may lie in the need to harmonize Moses' marriage to Sepphorah with the well-known reference in Num 12:1 to Moses' Ethiopian wife. Although some early traditions did maintain that Moses had married two wives, Sep-

61 but tribes of sundry races dwell throughout;
 62 the dark-skinned Aethiops. Yet there is one 63 who ruler, prince, and sole commander, he 64 rules all this state and judges mortal men;
 65 a priest, the father of myself and these.

Then he describes the watering of the flocks and adds an account of the marriage of Sepphorah, introducing Chus and Sepphorah, who speak in dialogue:<sup>y</sup>

66 Sepphorah, you must speak in words forthright.
 67 My father gave me for this alien's wife.

(C)

Ex 2:21 (S)

(Section from Demetrius, describing these same events)

And Ezekiel also speaks about these things in the Exagōgē, including, in addition, the dream which was seen by Moses and interpreted by his father-in-law. Moses himself speaks with his father-in-law in dialogue:<sup>z</sup>

68 On Sinai's<sup>a2</sup> peak I saw what seemed a throne 69 so great in size it touched the clouds of heaven.

phorah and an Ethiopian princess (cf. Josephus, Ant 2.252f., 262f.), nevertheless much of the early tradition attempts to bring the two together into one person. Demetrius (PrEv 9.29) explicitly states that Sepphorah was an Ethiopian woman, a descendant of Abraham through his son Keturah, who had been sent away to "an eastern land" (Gen 25:6); cf. T. Rajak, "Moses in Ethiopia: Legend and Literature," JJS 29 (1978) 111–22. The term "Libya," in antiquity, was frequently assigned to all of Africa, so that Ezekiel's description of a land inhabited by "sundry races" including "dark-skinned Aethiops" is quite accurate when he says, "This land all bears Libya's name." (Cf. E. W. Warmington, "Libya," Oxford Classical Dictionary, ed. N. C. L. Hammond and H. H. Scullard (Oxford, 1970) p. 608; LSJM on Libyē. The argument of Kuiper, that anyone with so poor a sense of geography as Ezekiel seems to possess at this point could not possibly have lived in Egypt, is without basis.

y. The expression di' amoibaion is regularly used in the editorial remarks to introduce dialogue, although at no point are the speakers themselves explicitly identified in the manuscripts of Eusebius. The brief, two-line dialogue which follows at this point is problematic both in respect to the identification and function of "Chus" in the drama and as to the question of whether or not Moses' marriage to Sepphorah had actually taken place by this time. Chus has been understood by some scholars to be the brother of Sepphorah, by others as a rejected suitor. The name, in any event, is traditionally connected with Ethiopia (cf. Gen 10:6; Josephus, Ant 1.131; Pseudo-Eupolemus, PrEv 9.17). As to the question of Moses' marriage, Kuiper (REJ 46 [1903] 174) concluded that Moses must have married Sepphorah in a previous scene which has been omitted in our sources. Kappelmacher, on the other hand, troubled by Jethro's designation of Moses as "stranger" in l. 83, concluded that these ll. (66f.) must have followed the ensuing scene. If, as seems most likely, the editorial comments included here are from the pen of Alexander Polyhistor, then a rearrangement of the material such as Kappelmacher suggested is almost impossible. Sepphorah's statement seems to indicate that the marriage has already occurred, in which event ll. 66–67 must have been taken from the closing section of this scene.

z. The section which follows, ll. 68–89, represents Ezekiel's free creation in which he departs entirely from the Ex account; cf. E. Starobinski-Safran, "Un poète judéo-hellénistique: Ezéchiel le tragique," Museum Helveticum 31 (1974) 216–24. The device of the dream has its backgrounds both in Gk. drama and in the biblical material. In the tragedies of Aeschylus and others, the dream sometimes functioned as a device which pointed toward the dramatic climax of the play, a miniature prelude to what lay ahead. In terms of content there are some remarkable coincidences between Moses' dream and that of Joseph (cf. Gen 37:9) and the vision of Daniel (cf. Dan 7:13, 14). Moses is portrayed as having been chosen by God to represent him as divine vizier. The significance of the dream for the interpretation of the drama as a whole has been pursued from diverse points of view. Trencsényi-Waldapfel (Acta Orientalia Academiae Scientiarum 2 [1952] 156) discussed the motif of ecumenicity, viewed as an effort on Ezekiel's part to bring together the universalism of Gk. thought with that of the Heb. prophets. Lucien Cerfeaux, "Influence des mystères sur le Judaïsme alexandrine avant Philon," Muséon 37 (1924) 36–48, analyzed Moses' dream in terms of the initiation rites connected with the mystery religions (a thesis subsequently adopted and expanded by E. R. Goodenough, By Light, Light (New Haven, 1935)). Although some light may be shed from these studies on the literary development of the figure of Moses, it is still sufficient to say that both the function and the content of Moses' dream may be accounted for quite adequately by Ezekiel's obvious knowledge of both the tragic dramas of the Gk. masters and the content of the Bible.

a2. The reading is based on the conjecture of Dübner. Appendix ad Euripidis Fragmenta a Guiljelmo Wagnero collecta, Christus Patiens, Ezehieli et Christianorum poetarum reliquiae dramaticae (Paris, 1846), accepted by most editors; the MSS offer several versions of an obviously corrupt reading.

70 Upon it sat a man<sup>b2</sup> of noble mien,
 71 becrowned, and with a scepter in one hand
 72 while with the other he did beckon me.
 73 I made approach and stood before the throne.
 74 He handed o'er the scepter and he bade
 75 me mount the throne, and gave to me the crown;
 76 then he himself withdrew from off the throne.
 77 I gazed upon the whole earth round about;
 78 things under it, and high above the skies.<sup>c2</sup>
 79 Then at my feet a multitude of stars
 80 fell down, and I their number reckoned up.
 81 They passed by me like armèd ranks of men.
 82 Then I in terror wakened from the dream.

And his father-in-law interprets the dream as follows:

83 My friend,<sup>d2</sup> God gave you this as sign for good.
 84 Would I might live to see these things transpire.
 85 For you shall cause a mighty throne to rise,
 86 and you yourself shall rule and govern men.
 87 As for beholding all the peopled earth,
 88 and things below and things above God's realm:<sup>e2</sup>
 89 things present, past, and future you shall see.

And in regard to the burning bush and Moses' mission to Pharaoh, once again Ezekiel introduces Moses conversing with God. And Moses says:<sup>f2</sup>

90 Aha! What token this from yonder bush, 91 some sign beyond belief to mortal men?
 92 A bush that sudden burns, with raging flame,
 93 and yet its shoots remain all green and fresh.
 94 What then! I shall advance and view this sign,
 95 so great it seems incredible to men.

Ex 3:1f.

Ex 3:3

b2. Ezekiel uses phōs (a poetic term for anēr), common in the Homeric literature and later poets. Its significance lies in the fact that Ezekiel would represent God as a man, an image which is surely rooted in the figures of "the son of man" and "the Ancient of Days" in Daniel's vision (Dan 7).

c2. Lit. "the heaven."

d2. The use of the term xenos as a form of address caused some difficulties for Kappelmacher, who thought it inconceivable that Jethro could have addressed Moses as "stranger" if Moses was married to Sephorah at this point in the drama. But, in addition to the more common meaning of the term (cf. l. 67), there are various levels of usage, among which is the meaning "guest," one who is bound by ties of hospitality.

e2. Lit. "heaven."

f2. It is not clear how much may have been lost between the end of the preceding section and the beginning of this material. The scene itself is a skillful blending by Ezekiel of elements from Ex 3 and 4, with additional references to material from Ex 7. This is followed by a section dealing with the institution of the Passover, based on Ex 12; 13. There are a number of editorial comments inserted in this lengthy discourse, thus making it impossible to accurately determine the complete scope of material that was originally dealt with here. The first section (ll. 90–112) represents a fairly straightforward but poetic rendition of Ex 3:1–10. The latter half of vs. 9 (reference to the various nations) and vs. 10 (which is merely a repetition of vs. 7) have been omitted by Ezekiel in the interests of literary economy and meter. In ll. 110f. God instructs Moses to go first to the Heb. people and then to the king. These instructions seem to be in accord with Ex 3:10, 16, but from this point on, Ezekiel seems to have omitted all reference to Moses' mission to the Heb. people and to the possibility that they will not believe him (although cf. infra, n. w2). In Ezekiel's version of the story, the basic thrust of Moses' message is to be directed toward the king. Aaron, for example, is to be Moses' spokesman before the king (ll. 118f.), rather than to the people (cf. Ex 4:16). The rod, according to Ezekiel, functions only as a means of establishing credibility before Pharaoh and the Egyptians and not before the Heb. people themselves (as in Ex 4:1–5). In this way, Ezekiel emphasizes the personal confrontation between Moses and Pharaoh, thus heightening the dramatic effect. It is unclear whether Ezekiel's purpose is to omit all reference to possible unbelief on the part of the Heb. people is consequent to his desire for dramatic effect or whether he consciously sought to erase any trace of a lack of solidarity between the Heb. people and their leader Moses.

Then God addresses him:

- 96 Stay, Moses, best of men, do not come near Ex 3:4-6 97 till you have loosed the bindings from your feet;
 98 the place on which you stand is holy ground,
 99 and from this bush God's word shines forth<sup>g2</sup> to you.
 100 Take courage, son, and listen to my words;
 101 as mortal man you cannot see my face,
 102 albeit you have pow'r to hear my words,
 103 and for this very reason I have come.
 104 God am I of those, your fathers<sup>h2</sup> three,
 105 of Abram, Isaac, Jacob, I am He.<sup>i2</sup>
 106 Mindful of my promises to them,<sup>j2</sup> Ex 3:7f.
 107 to save my Hebrew people I am come,
 108 since I have seen my servants' toil and pain.
 109 Now go, and testify<sup>k2</sup> to these my words,
 110 to all the Hebrews first, then to the king,
 111 the things commanded by me unto you,
 112 that you should lead my people from this land.

Then, a few speeches farther down, Moses himself replies:

- 113 I am not by nature eloquent; Ex 4:10
 114 my tongue with difficulty speaks, I stammer,
 115 so that I cannot speak before the king. Ex 6:12

Then, in reply to these things, God answers him:

- 116 Your brother Aaron I will send with haste, Ex 4:14.15.16
 117 to whom you'll tell all things that I have said,
 118 and he it is who'll speak before the king.
 119 You'll take the words from me, and he from you.

And concerning the rod and other wonders, he speaks thus in dialogue:

- 120 Say, what is this you hold within your hand? Ex 4:2f. (G)
 121 A rod, the chastener of beasts and men. (M)
 122 Now cast it on the ground and move away; (G)
 123 a fearful serpent you in awe shall see.
 124 See, there I cast it down. Be gracious, Lord! (M)
 125 How dreadful, huge! Be merciful to me!
 126 I tremble at the sight, my limbs do shake.
 127 Fear not! Stretch forth your hand and seize its tail; Ex 4:4 (G) 128 again 'twill be a rod as it once was.
 129 Your hand thrust in your bosom, draw it forth. Ex 4:6f.
 130 'Tis done. It has become as white as snow!<sup>l2</sup> (M)
 131 Reach in again, it shall be as it was. (G)

g2. The meaning of theios logos. "divine word," in Ezekiel is difficult to determine. Wieneke (Ezekielis, p. 77) argued for a simple interpretation of the word as "voice," offering various examples in which the verb eklampein or lampein is connected with sound. This understanding of logos as the equivalent of the metrically undesirable phonē would make the burning-bush scene in Ezekiel compatible with similar descriptions in Artapanus (PrEv 9.27.21, phonēn theian) and in Josephus (Ant 2.267, phonē, which Josephus later identifies as "God"). Cf. Ex 3:2 (LXX) aggelos kyriou; Philo, Vit Mos 1.66, aggelos; Justin Martyr, Apol 1.63; DialTrypho 59.60. In l. 246, Ezekiel again associates the term lampein with the presence of God.

h2. The use of the plural term "fathers" is another noteworthy departure from the standard text of the Septuagint (Ex 3:6), supported, in this case, by a variety of witnesses. (Cf. Acts 8:32.)

i2. The proper names in this line, all drawn from the biblical text (Ex 3:6), comprise severe metrical difficulties for the Gk. text. Cf. Strugnell, HTR 60 (1967) 450, n. 5; 453, n. 10; Snell, Glotta 44 (1966) 28.

j2. Lit. "having remembered them and my gifts."

k2. Lit. "give a sign."

l2. Most editors have assigned this l. to Moses.

To these things (after certain other matters that he has interposed), he (Polyhistor) adds the following: Ezekiel says these things in similar fashion in the Exagōgē, introducing God, who speaks concerning the signs as follows:<sup>m2</sup>

|     |   |             |
|-----|---|-------------|
| 132 | And with this rod these woes you shall effect:                  | Ex 4:17     |
| 133 | now, first the river shall flow red with blood,                 | Ex 7:19     |
| 134 | and all the springs, and every stagnant pool. <sup>n2</sup>     |             |
| 135 | A host of frogs and lice I'll cast on earth;                    | Ex 7:27,28; |
| 136 | then sprinkle ashes from the furnace round,                     | 8:12        |
| 137 | and ulcerous sores shall thus burst forth <sup>o2</sup> on men. | Ex 9:8f.    |
| 138 | And swarms of flies shall come and sore afflict                 | Ex 8:17,20  |
| 139 | the men of Egypt; then another plague                           |             |
| 140 | shall come, and they shall die whose hearts are hardened.       |             |
| 141 | And I shall make the heavens bitter; hail                       | Ex 9:23,25  |
| 142 | and fire shall fall and slay all mortal men,                    |             |
| 143 | and cause to perish every crop and beast.                       |             |
| 144 | Darkness I'll decree for three whole days,                      | Ex 10:22    |
| 145 | and locusts send, who shall the residue                         | Ex 10:4f.   |
| 146 | of food consume and every blade of grass.                       |             |
| 147 | Last shall I slay the firstborn of mankind,                     | Ex 11:5     |
| 148 | and thus bring down the wanton pride <sup>p2</sup> of men.      |             |
| 149 | Yet Pharaoh shan't be moved <sup>q2</sup> by what I say         |             |
| 150 | until his firstborn child lies as a corpse;                     |             |
| 151 | then, moved with fear, he'll send the people forth.             |             |
| 152 | This also say to all the Hebrew race:                           | Ex 12:3     |
| 153 | "This month shall be the first month of your years,             | Ex 12:2     |
| 154 | in which I'll lead you <sup>r2</sup> to another land            | Ex 12:17    |
| 155 | which to the Hebrew fathers I did swear."                       | Ex 13:5     |
| 156 | And say to all the people, "In this month,                      | Ex 12:6     |
| 157 | on full moon's eve, <sup>s2</sup> the Paschal sacrifice         | Ex 12:21    |
| 158 | to God present, and touch the doors with blood,                 | Ex 12:7     |

m2. Eusebius' editorial comment indicates that Alexander Polyhistor digressed at this point before returning to Ezekiel. In regard to the description of the plagues, Ezekiel takes Ex 4:17 as a literary basis for his discussion of the sêmeia, although his discourse is based on Ex 7:17-11:7. Ezekiel's account of the plagues is in accord with the tendency of tragic drama to collapse events into a short period of time. The literary freedom which Ezekiel exhibits in regard to the Septuagint text is explicable when one considers that his summary description is of a totally different literary style than that of the historical narrative of Exodus. The technical problems of dramatizing such material have been neatly avoided by transforming the entire series of events into a prophetic speech in which God describes what will take place in the future. As to the order of the plagues in Ezekiel, cf. Wieneke, Ezechielis, pp. 69-71. Ezekiel is neither as stylized nor as tedious as Philo in his division of the plagues (Vit Mos 1.96-142). His listing is more complete than that of Josephus (Ant 2.293-314) and of Artapanus (PrEv 9.27) but not quite as closely bound to the biblical text as is the author of Jubilees (48:5-8).

n2. This l. is found in almost identical form in Pseudo-Aeschylus, cited in Pseudo-Justin (De Monarchia 2) and in Clement of Alexandria (Strom 5.14).

o2. Lit. "to boil, seethe." The MSS offer several different readings here, none of which is wholly satisfactory in defining the term precisely, although the general sense seems clear.

p2. The use of the term hybris is significant because of its long-standing association within the pattern of hybris/nemesis in Gk. tragedy. Strong parallels exist between the characterization of Pharaoh by Ezekiel and the pronouncement of doom rendered against Xerxes in Aeschylus' Persians. Because Xerxes sought to "wrest nature, turn sea into land, manacle a strait with iron, to make a highway for his troops" (Persians, ll. 747f.) and thus to contravene the will of the gods, he received "the just reward of pride and insolence" (l. 808). For a discussion of hybris in Gk. tragedy, cf. R. Lattimore, Story Patterns in Greek Tragedy (London, 1964), p. 23.

q2. The translation understands peiset as derived from peithō, rather than from paschō. This is paralleled in Euripides, Helena 446 (cf. Kuiper, REJ 46 [1903] 65). Alternatively, the translation would read: "And King Pharaoh will suffer none of these things of which I speak." This stands in direct contradiction, however, to the evidence of the Septuagint (cf. Ex 8:4, 20, 27).

r2. Lit. "the people."

s2. Cf. Ex 12:6: "the evening of the fourteenth day of the month." For a complete discussion of the material dealing with the Passover in Ezekiel (and in other ancient authors), cf. J. B. Segal, The Hebrew Passover from the Earliest Times (London, 1963).

|  |            |
|--|------------|
| 159 which sign the fearsome angel <sup>12</sup> shall pass by. | Ex 12:13   |
| 160 But you, by night, shall eat the roasted flesh;            | Ex 12:8    |
| 161 then shall the king drive out the throng in haste.         | Ex 12:33   |
| 162 But ere you go I'll grant the people favor;                | Ex 3:21f.  |
| 163 one woman from another shall receive                       |            |
| 164 fine vessels, jewels of silver and of gold                 |            |
| 165 and clothing, things which one may carry off,              |            |
| 166 so as to compensate them for their deeds. <sup>u2</sup>    |            |
| 167 But when at last you enter your own land,                  | Ex 12:25   |
| 168 take heed that from the morn on which you fled             |            |
| 169 from Egypt and did journey seven days,                     |            |
| 170 from that same morn, so many days each year                | Ex 13:7    |
| 171 you eat unleavened bread and serve your God.               | Ex 13:5    |
| 172 The firstborn of all living things present <sup>v2</sup>   | Ex 13:2,15 |
| 173 to God, whatever virgins first shall bear                  |            |
| 174 of males that open up the mothers' wombs.                  |            |

And again, concerning this same feast, he says that he elaborates more precisely:<sup>w2</sup>

|  |            |
|--|------------|
| 175 And when the tenth day of this month is come,                  | Ex 12:3,21 |
| 176 let Hebrew men by families thus select <sup>x2</sup>           |            |
| 177 unblemished <sup>y2</sup> sheep and calves, and keep them till | Ex 12:5    |

12. In Ex 12:13 God says that he himself will "pass over" them. In l. 187 of Ezekiel it is thanatos which will "pass over."

u2. There is a certain ambiguity in this l. The implication seems to be that the Hebrews will receive a wage as compensation for what they (the Hebrews) had done for the Egyptians. It could be construed, however, to mean that "they [the Hebrews] will receive compensation for what they [the Egyptians] had done" (presumably to the Hebrews). Ezekiel's statement is designed to explain the theme which is briefly stated in Ex 12:35-36, the fact that they despoiled the Egyptians. The attempt to justify this action on the part of the Hebrews was maintained by Philo, Vit Mos 1.141-42; cf. Jub 48:18.

v2. Lit. "sacrifice" (thyontes); cf. Ex 13:2, hagiazein. The idea of human sacrifice, although it might be implied by Ezekiel's use of the term thyein, was surely not intended by him here. Ezekiel may have clarified this point in material which has been omitted between ll. 174 and 175, referring, perhaps, to the biblical instructions (Ex 13:15) which distinguish between sacrificing (thyein) the firstborn of animals and redeeming (lytroein) the firstborn of men.

w2. The difficulty with this editorial insertion lies in determining whether it is the statement of Eusebius or of Polyhistor. The problem is compounded by the confusion in the MSS as to the correct form of epexergazomenos/onîs. The translation could read either: "he [Polyhistor] says that he [Ezekiel] . . ." or "he [Ezekiel] says that he [God?] . . ." (following the text adopted by most editors, epexergazomenon). Although, from a grammatical point of view, either reading is possible, the character of Ezekiel's text as dialogue precludes the latter reading, which would be tantamount to a stage direction. The most likely solution is that the editorial statement is to be attributed to Eusebius, in which case the question as to the identity of the speaker in ll.175-92 remains open. Traditionally, most scholars have assumed that God is still the speaker and that this section is closely linked to the preceding ll. (132-74). The most obvious objection to this lies in the fact that ll. 175-92 seem to constitute a needless repetition of the material that has gone before. If God is still the speaker in ll. 175-92, under what circumstances did Ezekiel find it necessary to have him issue these instructions twice? A solution may lie in the suggestion that ll. 175-92 constitute part of a separate scene in which Moses related God's instructions to the people (cf. Ex 12:21-28). This would be in keeping with Ezekiel's tendency to follow the general outline of events in the text of Ex. It would also account for the otherwise peculiar use of the term despotês, "Lord," in l. 188, a term which would be quite natural if spoken by Moses (cf. l. 124) but which would be most unusual if God himself were the speaker. (The frequent use of this term in the Septuagint is limited to situations where man addresses God directly or is speaking about him.) In contrast, the earlier section (in which God himself is clearly the speaker) uses the term theos, "God," in the commandments regarding the Passover (e.g. ll. 158, 173). In addition, the frequent use of the first person singular in the earlier section is notably absent in ll. 175-92 (e.g. ll. 154, 191). All of these features combine to suggest that ll. 175-92 represent a separate scene in which Moses is addressing the Hebrew people and imparting to them God's instructions in regard to the Passover. (Cf. Kraus, Rivista di filologia e di istruzione classica 96 [1968] 167.)

x2. The fact that some material, at least, has been omitted is indicated here by the lack of any subject for the verb labôn. Some editors have proposed an emendation to labe (cf. Ex 12:21: labete), while Mras (GCS 43, 1) understands an anacoluthic construction at this point and suggests hekastos labôn—phagesthe.

y2. "Unblemished" = amôma. Cf. Ex 12:5 (LXX) teleion. Ezekiel's term is reminiscent of the regulations in Leviticus (3:1; cf. Ezek 45:18). In regard to the "sheep and calves," Ezekiel's text

|   |           |
|---|-----------|
| 178 the fourteenth day has dawned, and then, at eve,              | Ex 12:6   |
| 179 make sacrifice; thus shall you eat them whole,                |           |
| 180 the flesh and inward parts and roast with fire;    | Ex 12:11  |
| 181 your loins girt up and shoes upon your feet,                  |           |
| 182 and in your hand a staff, for thus in haste                   |           |
| 183 the king will order all to leave the land.                    |           |
| 184 It shall be called "Passover." <sup>22</sup> Then, when you   |           |
| 185 shall sacrifice, take hyssop <sup>a3</sup> in your hands;     | Ex 12:22  |
| 186 and dip the twigs in blood and lightly touch                  |           |
| 187 both doorposts, so that death may pass you by.                | Ex 12:23  |
| 188 So keep this festival unto the Lord;                          | Ex 12:14  |
| 189 for seven days you'll eat unleavened bread. <sup>b3</sup>     | Ex 12:15, |
| 190 For there shall be deliverance from these ills;               | 13:3      |
| 191 a "going forth" he'll grant you in this month,                |           |
| 192 and first of months and years <sup>c3</sup> it e'er shall be. |           |

And after certain other matters he (Polyhistor) adds: "And Ezekiel, also, in the drama entitled Exagōgē, introduces a messenger who tells of the disposition of the Hebrews and of the destruction of the Egyptians as follows":<sup>d3</sup>

|   |           |
|---|-----------|
| 193 For when King Pharaoh set forth from his house,           | Ex 14:6f. |
| 194 with multitude of myriad armèd men,                       |           |
| 195 with cavalry and four-horsed chariots,                    |           |
| 196 and front ranks with supporting troops nearby;            |           |
| 197 how awesome was the host arrayed for battle.              |           |
| 198 Foot soldiers formed a phalanx in the center,             |           |
| 199 with spaces for the chariots to pass through;             |           |
| 200 and horsemen he deployed, some on the left, <sup>e3</sup> |           |
| 201 and on the right the rest of Egypt's force.               |           |
| 202 I asked as to their army's total strength; <sup>f3</sup>  |           |
| 203 there were a million men both brave and true.             |           |

seems closer to that of Deut 16:2 and 2Chr 35:8 than to the text of Ex (12:3, 21). Following the text of Ex, however, Ezekiel retains the instructions to "roast" the sacrifice (ll. 179f.; cf. l. 160). His text does not reflect the confusion which arises out of the instructions in Deut 16:7 and 2Chr 35:13 regarding "roasting" and "boiling."

22. The MSS read: pas kai hotan. The emendation to pasch' hotan was originally proposed by J. Strugnell (HTR 60 [1967] 449-52). The resultant text not only resolves all metrical and grammatical difficulties in this otherwise troublesome l. but also restores the name of the feast in Ezekiel's text in exactly the same place that it occurred in his source (Ex 12:11).

a3. Lit. "a bundle of hyssop leaves." The same phrase is found in Josephus, Ant 2.312, in contrast to the simpler Septuagintal formula desmèn hys-sōpou.

b3. Lit. "Seven days (you will eat) unleaven, and you will not eat leaven." (Cf. Ex 12:1, 14, 15, 20.) An alternative form of punctuation (utilized by most editors) links the first part of this l. with the preceding l., resulting in the translation: "You will keep this festival to the Lord, seven days unleavened. Leaven will not be eaten."

c3. Lit. "times," but cf. l. 153.

d3. The appearance of the messenger suggests that the end of the drama is near. He identifies himself as a member of the Egyptian army for the first time in l. 204. The comparison with the messenger in Aeschylus' Persians has often been noted. The contents of the messenger's speech are comparable to the themes expressed in the songs of Moses and of Miriam in Ex 15. The closing ll. of this section point up the author's purpose: a contrast between the fate of the well-ordered Egyptian army, confident of their success, and that of the disordered Israelite throng, unarmed and apparently helpless. Ezekiel does not attempt to develop this theme into the lex talionis (expressed in Jub 48:14 and WisSol 11:16). The contrast depicted by Ezekiel is consonant with material such as Ps 106:9-11. Despite the initial appearance of things, God proves to be the helper of the down-trodden Israelites, while he wreaks destruction upon the Egyptians. For a discussion of the military terminology involved in the messenger's speech, cf. W. Tarn, Hellenistic Military and Naval Developments (Cambridge, England, 1930). Although much of this language has no counterpart in the Ex account, it does have parallels in the language of tragic drama (cf. Wieneke, Ezechielis, p. 94) and, to a certain extent, in Philo, Vit Mos 1.168) and in Josephus (Ant 2.324).

e3. The same sort of ambiguous grammatical structure exists in this l. and the following as was seen in ll. 9f. and in l. 205. Strictly speaking, the pantas in l. 201 does not answer to the tous men in l. 200. Lit. l. 201 reads: "the whole of Egypt's force."

f3. The problem in the Gk. text of this l. lies in the fact that there are too many syllables. For a concise discussion of the difficulties, cf. Strugnell, HTR 60 (1967) 456.

|  |            |
|--|------------|
| 204 The Hebrews, when confronted by our <sup>h3</sup> host,          | Ex 14:9    |
| 205 lay strewn about hard by the sandy shore, <sup>h3</sup>          |            |
| 206 in masses there upon the Red Sea's strand.                       |            |
| 207 Some were engaged in caring for the young <sup>i3</sup>          | Ex 12:37f. |
| 208 together with their wives, worn out with toil,                   |            |
| 209 with many flocks and herds and household stuff, <sup>j3</sup>    |            |
| 210 And they, all unprotected, without arms,                         | Ex 14:10   |
| 211 on seeing us sent up a doleful cry,                              |            |
| 212 'gainst heaven they inveighed, <sup>k3</sup> their fathers' God. |            |
| 213 Now great in number was their multitude, <sup>l3</sup>           |            |
| 214 but we, for our part, were all overjoyed.                        |            |
| 215 Then, facing them, we pitched our camp nearby                    | Ex 14:9    |
| 216 (the place by men is called Beelzephon). <sup>m3</sup>           |            |
| 217 And since the Titan sun <sup>n3</sup> was near to set,           | Ex 14:19f. |
| 218 we waited, longing for the fight at dawn,                        |            |
| 219 in numbers trusting, and in our dread arms.                      |            |
| 220 And thereupon commenced divine portents                          |            |
| 221 full wondrous to behold! And, all at once,                       |            |
| 222 a mighty column stood, of cloud and fire, <sup>o3</sup>          |            |
| 223 midway between the Hebrew camp and ours.                         |            |
| 224 And then their leader Moses, taking up                           | Ex 14:21   |
| 225 the rod <sup>p3</sup> of God by which he'd lately wrought        |            |
| 226 such evil signs and ills on Egypt's land,                        |            |
| 227 did smite the Red Sea's surface, and the depth                   |            |
| 228 was rent asunder; so they all as one                             | Ex 14:22   |
| 229 with haste went forth <sup>q3</sup> along that briny path.       |            |
| 230 We quickly sped along in that same route,                        | Ex 14:23   |
| 231 foll'wing their track; by night we entered in,                   |            |
| 232 in close pursuit with shout; <sup>r3</sup> then, all at once,    |            |
| 233 as if with chains our chariot wheels were bound.                 | Ex 14:24f. |

g3. Lit. "my."

h3. Lit. "some [of the Hebrews], on the one hand, lay strewn . . ." The grammar is broken, with no de to answer to the men in l. 205. For this reason, Wieneke (Ezechielis) rearranged the order of these ll.: 205, 206, 209, 207, 208, 210. Cf. nn. on ll. 9, 200.

i3. Lit. "They gave food to young children."

j3. In Wieneke's arrangement, this l. would immediately follow l. 206 (cf. n. h3), which would seem to be a more felicitous arrangement.

k3. The translation is based on an emendation proposed by J. Strugnell (HTR 60 [1967] 450, n. 3), reading pros aither' apetathesan. The text is obviously corrupt and the emendation not only clarifies the confused readings of the manuscripts but has the advantage of eliminating metrical difficulties and of restoring to the text of Ezekiel the biblical reference to the people's complaint against God (Ex 14:11). As to the notion of inveighing against heaven, Strugnell notes that the passage should be regarded "as another instance of the use of shym/iouranos vel sim. for the divine name."

l3. For ochlos, "multitude," Kuiper, REJ) 46 (1903), suggested oknos, "shrinking, hesitation," to contrast with the "joy" of the Egyptians in the following l. The text would then read: "And great was their consternation, but, for our part, we were overjoyed."

m3. Determining the exact location of Beelzephon serves no purpose for Ezekiel's text, since he merely followed the text of Ex. Josephus identifies it as "a place by the Red Sea" (Ant 2.315). A full discussion may be found in J. Simons, The Geographical and Topographical Texts of the Old Testament (Leiden, 1959) p. 240.

n3. Although the phrase "Titan sun" bears overtones of pagan mythology, it is appropriate in the mouth of the Egyptian messenger. The expression is not common to the Gk. tragedians, although it is found frequently in the Lat. poets. Cf. Wieneke, Ezechielis, p. 100.

o3. The translation is based on the suggestion of Kuiper, who proposed puriphlegēs for the reading of the MSS, pro gēs megas. The emendation of Dübner, Appendix, pro gēs melas, is an easier correction but lacks grammatical consistency. In any event, the reading of the MSS is suspect, since the preceding l. also ends in megas. Both of the suggested emendations have support in the text of Ex (cf. 14:20, 24).

p3. The "rod" obviously has magical qualities in the estimation of the Egyptian messenger. Cf. Ex 14:21, 27, which says that Moses used his hand.

q3. Whether one reads ōrousan (the reading of the MSS BI) or ōrmēsan (the reading of the MSS ON), the translation is essentially the same.

r3. Although the term boēdromountes would ordinarily be construed to mean "run to a cry for help," its meaning here must be simply "run with a cry"; cf. Appianus, Hann. 42 and examples cited by Wieneke, Ezechielis, pp. 103-4.

- 234 From heaven, then, a shining light like fire 235 appeared to us, so we were led to think 236 that God was their defense. For when they reached Ex 14:30
 237 the farther shore a mighty wave gushed forth
 238 hard by us, so that one in terror cried,
 239 "Flee back before the hands of the Most High;
 240 to them he offers succor, but to us, Ex 14:25
 241 most wretched men, destruction he does work."
 242 The sea-path flooded, all our host was lost.<sup>53</sup> Ex 14:28

And again, after a few things: "From there they went for three days, as Demetrius himself says (and the Holy Bible agrees with this). And since the water in that place was bitter and not sweet, at God's command he cast a certain piece of wood into the spring and the water became sweet. And from there they came to Elim, where they found twelve springs of water and seventy palm trees. In regard to these things and to the bird that appeared there, Ezekiel, in the Exagōgē, introduces someone speaking to Moses about the palm trees and twelve springs of water as follows":<sup>13</sup>

- 243 Take note, most noble Moses, of this place Ex 15:27
 244 which we have found near yonder airy glen.<sup>53</sup>
 245 'Tis over there, where you, too, now may see.
 246 From thence a lustrous light now flashes forth,
 247 by night, a sign,<sup>53</sup> like to a fiery pillar.
 248 And there we found a meadow shaded o'er 249 and splashing streams: a place profuse and rich,
 250 which draws from out one rocky ledge twelve springs;
 251 the trunks of fruitful palms rise like a hedge,
 252 threescore and ten, with water flowing round,
 253 and tender grass yields pasture for the flocks.

53. Lit. "The way through the Red Sea has been flooded ["closed up"—some MSS] and has utterly destroyed the way." The repetition of poros in l. 242 has given rise to several possible suggestions for correction. Mras, GCS 43.1, p. 536, and Snell, Tragicorum Graecorum Fragmenta, p. 300 (following Stephanus), read straton for the second instance of poros, while Wieneke adopted the reading stolon, both of which can be translated as "army." Mras suggested, however, that Ezekiel could have intended a play on words here, based on the several meanings of poros (e.g. "the ford was flooded, and destroyed the way of escape").

13. There is some disagreement among commentators as to whether this section represents the closing scene of the drama (so Trencsényi-Waldapfel, Acta Orientalia Academiae Scientiarum 2 (1952) 143–64) or whether there was one further scene in which Moses and Sapphorah were reunited (cf. Kuiper, REJ 46 [1903] 166–67; Kappelmacher, Wiener Studien 44 [1924–25] 82). The report of the messenger to Moses is the free creation of Ezekiel, based on Ex 15:27. The closing ll., which describe the "strange living creature," may have been taken from some other literary source. Its identification here as the legendary phoenix bird is based on the repetition of these ll. in Pseudo-Eustathius, Commentarius in Hexaemeron (PG 18.729), and the fact that it is so designated there.

(For a thorough discussion of the phoenix bird in ancient literature, cf. M. C. Fitzpatrick, Lactantii de Ave Phoenix (Philadelphia, 1933), and more recently R. Van den Broek, The Myth of the Phoenix According to Classical and Early Christian Traditions (Leiden, 1972). The association between the name of the bird, phoenix, and the palm trees at Elim, phoinikoi, is obvious (cf. Ovid, Metamorphoses 15.397). The function of the phoenix in Ezekiel's drama, however, is not so clear. Trencsényi-Waldapfel suggested that the legislation given to the people by Moses at Marah (Ex 15:26) comprises the heart of this last act, and thus the scene at Elim constitutes a new "garden of Eden" with its subsequent temptation. By identifying a fragment from Epiphanius (PG 43.174) as originally part of this same scene, Trencsényi-Waldapfel transformed the phoenix into "the tempter" of Gen 3, who tempts the people to disobey the legislation recently given to them. This reconstruction is highly speculative, however, and there is nothing in the fragment from Epiphanius which specifically relates it to Ezekiel's drama.

u3. Cf. the dismal scene at Elim, as described by Josephus (Ant 3.9–11).

v3. Adopting the emendation suggested by Kuiper and others, kaṛ euphronēn. The reading of most of the manuscripts, kaṛ euphronēs "a goodly sign," must be excluded on metrical grounds.

Then, farther down, he sets forth a description of the bird which appeared:<sup>w3</sup>

254 Another living creature there we saw,
 255 full wondrous, such as man has never seen;
 256 'twas near in scope to twice the eagle's size,
 257 with plumage iridescent, rainbow-hued.
 258 Its breast appeared deep-dyed with purple's shade,
 259 its legs were red like ochre, and its neck
 260 was furnished round with tresses<sup>x3</sup> saffron-hued;
 261 like to a coxcomb<sup>y3</sup> did its crest appear,
 262 with amber-tinted eye it gazed about,
 263 the pupil like some pomegranate seed.
 264 Exceeding all, its voice pre-eminent;
 265 of every other wingèd thing, the king,
 266 it did appear. For all the birds, as one,
 267 in fear did haste to follow after him,
 268 and he before, like some triumphant bull
 269 went striding forth with rapid step apace.

w3. The following lines are also found in Pseudo-Eustathius, Commentarius in Hexaemeron (PG 18.729D). Although the text in Pseudo-Eustathius contains several variant readings, these are generally conceded to be inferior to the text of Eusebius, as is indicated by their lack of conformity to the rules of meter.

x3. Lit. "locks of wool."

y3. The text is difficult, with both Pseudo-Eustathius and the MSS of Eusebius attesting the phrase koitēs himerēs (vel sim.), indicating, perhaps, "a soft nest." The genitive construction does not fit well, however, with parempheres, and the emendation to kottois hēmeroīs has been accepted by most editors, primarily on the basis of Pliny's description of the phoenix as having a crest on its head (Natural History 10.2): auro fulgore circa colla). Ezekiel's text may preserve the figure of "a tufted nest of feathers" on top of the bird's head.

OTHER

FRAGMENTS OF PSEUDO-GREEK POETS

(Third to Second Century B.C.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY H. ATTRIDGE

In the hellenistic period, Jews composed many works in Greek literary genres. Some of these were written under the actual names of the authors (e.g. Ezekiel the Tragedian and Philo the Epic Poet). Others were pseudonymous compositions (e.g. the SibOr). In addition to these complete works, Jews reworked authentic fragments from Greek poetry and composed brief passages of their own in imitation of classical models. These pseudonymous fragments were then collected, together with some genuine passages from classical poets which could be interpreted in a Jewish way, and circulated in anthologies or gnomologia, which served to support the apologetic claims that Jewish tradition was the source of Greek wisdom and that the best in Greek literature was in harmony with Jewish belief.

Sources

The spurious verses of classical poetry composed by Jews are now to be found in several patristic witnesses, in the Protrepticus and Stromata of Clement of Alexandria (c. A.D. 150–215), who is in turn cited in the Praeparatio Evangelica of Eusebius (c. A.D. 263–339), and in the De Monarchia and the Cohortatio ad Gentiles, works erroneously attributed to Justin. The dates of these last two pseudonymous works are uncertain. They are probably later than Clement's works and may have been composed in the third century A.D. All these Christian works continue the traditions of Jewish apologetics by attempting to show how Judeo-Christian monotheism was foreshadowed in classical literature.

The two most extensive collections of pseudonymous verses, in the Stromata of Clement and the De Monarchia of Pseudo-Justin, diverge at many points. Neither source contains all the verses. In many cases they differ in their attribution of given verses to classical authors. In several cases the contents of particular verses differ and Pseudo-Justin's version is usually the longer. Finally, the order of the fragments varies. Based on the numeration of this translation, which follows the chronological order of the authors to whom the verses are attributed, Clement's order is 8, 1, 7, 2, 5, 12, 10, 6, 4, 11, while Pseudo-Justin's order is 4, 5, 9, 3, 6, 10, 12, 11.

Despite the differences between Clement and Pseudo-Justin, it is probable that all the tragic and comic verses which they cite ultimately derive from a single gnomologion. The spurious epic verses (number 1 in this translation) are attested separately by the Jewish philosopher and exegete Aristobulus of the second century B.C. and these hexameter verses may originally have been part of a gnomologion different from that which contained the dramatic verses.

Date

The spurious epic verses were quoted by Aristobulus (c. 150 B.C., according to Yorb); hence they were composed and collected in the late-third or early-second century B.C. In connection with one of the fragments attributed to Sophocles (number 5 in this translation), Clement quotes as his source a work on Abraham, ascribed to the Greek ethnographer and historian Hecataeus. This work was, no doubt, a Jewish pseudepigraphon, probably identical to the work on the same subject alluded to in Josephus, Antiquities 1.159. Thus this work must have been written before the last quarter of the first century A.D.<sup>1</sup> Unfortunately, it is impossible to determine how much of the collection was known to Pseudo-Hecataeus. In any case, it is unlikely that the author of this Jewish pseudepigraphon composed the pseudonymous dramatic verses.<sup>2</sup> At most, it can be said that the verses predate this work of Pseudo-Hecataeus and thus probably were composed in the late-hellenistic or early-Roman period. Nothing definite can be said about their provenance.

Theological and historical importance

These brief fragments illustrate some of the most important themes of Jewish apologetic theology: the unity and transcendence of God, the inferiority of pagan worship and mythology, and the reality of divine justice. At the same time, these pieces indicate the influence of hellenistic civilization, which not only imposed on Judaism the need for apologetic enterprises but also provided a wide new range of literary tools for those endeavors.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, p. 168.
 Denis, Introduction, pp. 223–38.

TEXTS

Denis, A.-M. Fragmenta pseudepigraphorum graeca. Leiden, 1970; pp. 161–74.
 Edmonds, J. M. The Fragments of Attic Comedy. Leiden, 1961; 3 vols.
 Merkelbach, R., and West, M. L. Fragmenta Hesiodica. Oxford, 1967.
 Nauck, A. Tragicorum graecorum fragmenta. Leipzig, 1899<sup>2</sup>. (Reprinted, with a supplement by B. Snell, Hildesheim, 1964).

STUDIES

Walter, N. Der Thorausleger Aristobulos. TU 86; Berlin, 1964; pp. 172–201.

<sup>1</sup> On the issue of the various Jewish works composed in the name of Hecataeus, cf. most recently N. Walter, "Fragmente jüdisch-hellenistischer Historiker," JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 144–60; B. Z. Wacholder, Eupolemus: A Study of Judaeo-Greek Literature (Cincinnati, O., 1974) pp. 263–73; and J. H. Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 120–22.

<sup>2</sup> This has been persuasively argued by N. Walter, Der Thorausleger Aristobulos (TU 86, Berlin, 1964) pp. 172–201.

TRANSLATION

1. Various epic poets.

These hexameter fragments are preserved in Clement of Alexandria, Stromata 5.14.107, 3f., who is cited by Eusebius, Praeparatio Evangelica 13.13.34. Eusebius quotes the same verses in Praeparatio Evangelica 13.12.13, along with material assigned to the Jewish philosopher of the second century B.C. Aristobulus. Utilization of these verses by that author indicates that this collection dates from the early-hellenistic period. The collection contains some genuine verses and may originally have been compiled by a Pythagorean or a Jew interested in the sacred number seven.<sup>a</sup>

Clement's introduction:

Not only Hebrews but also Greeks know of the sacred number seven, in accordance with which the entire cosmos of all living and growing beings revolves. Hesiod speaks thus about it:

Eusebius' introduction:

And, indeed, the entire cosmos of all living and growing things revolves around the seventh day. It is called "sabbath" and is translated "rest." Both Homer and Hesiod, having taken information from our books, say clearly that it is holy. Hesiod speaks thusly:

1. The first, the fourth, and the seventh are holy days.<sup>b</sup>

And again:

2. Again on the seventh day is the bright light of the sun.<sup>c</sup>

And Homer says:

1. Then, on the seventh day, a holy day returned.

And:

2. It was the holy seventh day.<sup>d</sup>

And again:

3. It was the seventh day and on it all things were completed.<sup>e</sup>

And:

4. And, on the seventh dawn, we left the stream of Acheron.<sup>f</sup>

Clement comments:

Yes, and Callimachus<sup>g</sup> the poet writes:

Eusebius comments:

He signifies that movement is from spiritual forgetfulness and evil, that by the "seventh," reason, which is in accord with truth, the things previously mentioned are left behind and

1. Various epic poets

a. Cf. Plato, Republic 616B.

b. This vs. is from Hesiod, Works and Days 770.

c. This l. (F. 362 in the edition of Merkelbach and West) is not attested in the works of Hesiod. Compare Homer, Iliad 11.605, and Hesiod, Theogony 760, 958. Like vs. 1 from Homer and vss. 2-5 from Linus, the line seems particularly Pythagorean.

d. Or "The seventh day was holy."

e. This vs. is from the Odyssey 5.262, where the reference is to the fourth day. The vs. is, no doubt, understood to be an allusion to Gen 2:2, as is vs. 1 of Linus.

f. Cf. Odyssey 10.513. The reference to travel on the Sabbath makes it unlikely that the verse was originally composed by a Jew.

g. Probably because Linus was a legendary figure, Clement attributes the following lines to Callimachus, a poet of the third century B.C. The attribution in Aristobulus and Eusebius is probably more original.

we receive knowledge of the truth, as had been said above. And Linus speaks thusly:

1. On the seventh dawn, when all was completed.
2. The seventh day is counted among good things as is the seventh birth.

And:

3. The seventh day is counted among primary things and the seventh is perfect.

And:

4. All seven<sup>h</sup> have been fashioned in the starry heaven, shining in their orbits in the recurring years.

2. Hesiod.

A brief hexameter fragment about the supreme deity is attributed to Hesiod in Clement of Alexandria, Stromata 5.14.112,3 and in his Protrepticus 6.73.3. Eusebius cites the passage from the Stromata in Praeparatio Evangelica 13.13.39. This fragment could be genuine.

For he is king and master of all and none of the immortals contends with him in power.<sup>a</sup>

3. Pythagoras.

The sixth-century philosopher Pythagoras is credited by Pseudo-Justin, De Monarchia 2, with a series of hexameter verses on the unique creator. The citation follows a series of Pseudo-Orphic verses.

If anyone says, "I am God," apart from the One, he should set up a world equal to this and say, "This is mine."
He should not only set it up and call it "mine," but also should himself dwell in that which he has made. For it has been made by this one.<sup>a</sup>

4. Aeschylus.

This iambic fragment attributed to the first major tragic poet of the fifth century B.C. is quoted by Clement of Alexandria, Stromata 5.14.131,2f., who is cited by Eusebius, Praeparatio Evangelica 13.13.60. It is also preserved as the first passage in the collection of verses in Pseudo-Justin, De Monarchia 2.<sup>a</sup> The piece deals first with the transcendence of God, and then describes a divine theophany. The language of the fragment has many elements derived from classical poetry, and it may be, in part at least, genuine.

Pseudo-Justin's introduction:

For, first of all, Aeschylus, using an arrangement of his own words, makes an utterance about the only God when he says:

Clement's introduction:

Again, Aeschylus the tragedian illustrating the power of God does not hesitate to call him "most high" in these words:

Set God apart from mortals, and do not think that he exists in flesh like to yourself.

h. These seven are the sun, the moon, and the five planets known in antiquity.

2. Hesiod

a. These lines are F. 308 in Merkelbach and West, whose emendations are reflected in the translation.

3. Pythagoras

a. I.e., this visible cosmos has been made by the one God.

4. Aeschylus

a. The text is F. 464 Aeschylus in the edition of Nauck.

You know him not. At times as fire<sup>b</sup> he appears unapproachable and raging,<sup>c</sup> at times as water,
at times as darkness.<sup>d</sup>

He is similar to beasts,<sup>e</sup>
to wind, cloud and lightning, thunder, rain.<sup>f</sup> Sea and rocks serve him,
and every font and all bodies of water.<sup>g</sup> Hills, earth, the enormous depth of the sea<sup>h</sup> and the lofty height of mountains quake<sup>i</sup>
when they beheld the terrible eye<sup>j</sup> of the Master.
For the glory of the most high God<sup>k</sup> has power over all.

5. Sophocles.

To the second major tragic poet are ascribed several theological fragments. The first is found in Clement of Alexandria, Protrepticus 7.74.2 and Stromata 5.14.113,2, which is cited by Eusebius, Praeparatio Evangelica 13.13.40. The passage is also cited in Pseudo-Justin, De Monarchia 2 and in the Cohortatio ad Gentiles 18.<sup>a</sup> In the Stromata, Clement mentions as his source the work attributed to Hecataeus On Abraham and the Egyptians. The verses proclaim the unity of the creator while they condemn idolatry.

Pseudo-Justin's introduction:

Not only was he (Aeschylus) initiated into the knowledge of God, but also Sophocles gives an account of the sole creation of the universe and the one God thusly:

Clement's introduction (Stromata):

As Hecataeus said in his historical work On Abraham and the Egyptians, Sophocles cries out on the stage:

God is one, one in very truth,<sup>b</sup>
who fashioned heaven and the broad earth, the depth's gray swell<sup>c</sup> and the winds' might.<sup>d</sup>
But many of us mortals, erring in our heart, have set up<sup>e</sup> consolation for calamities,<sup>f</sup> statues of gods made of stone, or figures of bronze, wrought gold or ivory.<sup>g</sup>

b. Note that the Divine Warrior "shone forth" in Deut 33:2. The Lord leads his people in a pillar of fire by night, according to Ex 13:21, and he descends on Mount Sinai in fire in Ex 19:18.

c. Cf. Pindar, Pythian Ode 1.21, of the fire of Etna. A similar phrase appears in Aeschylus, Prometheus Bound 371. The adjective "unapproachable" has connotations of "terrible, monstrous."

d. Cf. Ex 20:18.

e. Note that God brings his people out of Egypt "on the wings of eagles" in Ex 19:4, but the Gk. here may be corrupt.

f. All of these meteorological phenomena are connected with the divine theophany. Cf. Ex 19:16, Judg 5:4f.

g. A similar l. appears in Ezekiel the tragedian, Eusebius, PrEv 9.29.12 (GCS 43.1, p. 532f.).

h. Cf. Aeschylus, Prometheus Bound 431f.

i. For the quaking of the elements at the appearance of God, cf. Ex 19:18, Judg 5:4, Ps 68:8f.

j. The phrase "terrible eye" (gorgon omma) is used in Aeschylus, Seven Against Thebes 537.

k. "Most high" (hypsistos) is an epithet used of Zeus in Aeschylus, Eumenides 28. It was used of many deities in the hellenistic period, but was especially used by Jews. Cf. Gen 14:17(LXX).

5. Sophocles

a. The text is F. 1025 of Aeschylus in the edition of Nauck.

b. The monotheistic affirmation of this first l. certainly recalls Deut 6:4, although similar monotheistic affirmations can be found in syncretistic pagan sources from the hellenistic and Roman periods. Note the Orphic fragment, no. 239, cited in Pseudo-Justin, Cohortatio ad Gentiles 15, and Macrobius, Saturnalia 1.18.17.

c. The poetic description of the sea is frequently attested: Orphic fragment 245.21. Anthologia Palatina 9.36, 12.53, and Nonnus, Dionysiaca 4.187.

d. Cf. Iliad 16.213.

e. The Gk. word hidryo is a technical term for the founding of a sanctuary or cult.

f. Cf. Euripides, Hecuba 280 and Orestes 62, for similar expressions.

g. Cf. the condemnations of idolatry in Isa 46:6-7, WisSol 13:10, LetJer 17-29.

Sacrifices do we grace with these as well as lovely<sup>b</sup> holy days, and think we thus act piously.

6. Sophocles.

The second fragment attributed to Sophocles occurs in Clement of Alexandria, Stromata 5.14.121,4–122, 1, which is cited by Eusebius, Praeparatio Evangelica 13.13.48. The verses are cited by Pseudo-Justin, De Monarchia 3, in a slightly longer form than that found in Clement.<sup>a</sup> The additional verses are, no doubt, misplaced in Pseudo-Justin. The attribution of the verses to Sophocles occurs only in Pseudo-Justin. Clement and Eusebius introduce them simply as a quotation from “tragedy.” The fragment contains an eschatological vision with many parallels in Stoic thought, as well as in Jewish apocalyptic eschatology.

Pseudo-Justin's introduction:

And for the fact that he alone is able to institute judgment concerning the things done in life and concerning ignorance about the divine, I am able to provide suitable witnesses, first of whom is Sophocles, who says on this matter:

Clement's introduction:

Tragedy agrees with these (the comic verses of number 10 in the translation) in the following verses:

For there will, there will indeed, come that period of time when the gold-faced sky<sup>b</sup> will split apart
the treasury filled with fire, and the nurtured flame<sup>c</sup> will in its rage consume<sup>d</sup> all things on earth and in the heavens.

And, after a while, he adds:<sup>e</sup>

and when the universe gives out,
the whole wavy deep will be gone;<sup>f</sup>
the land will be empty of dwellings; the air,
in flames, will not bear winged flocks.
For we believe there are two paths in Hades,
one for the just, the other for the impious.<sup>g</sup>
Then will he preserve all things which previously perished.<sup>h</sup>

7. Sophocles.

The third iambic fragment attributed to Sophocles is preserved in Clement of Alexandria, Stromata 5.14.111,4–6, which is cited by Eusebius, Praeparatio Evangelica 13.13.38.<sup>a</sup> The piece describes a mythological episode. It contains nothing specifically Jewish and may

h. Pseudo-Justin's text reads “lovely,” which may be meant ironically. Clement in the Stromata reads “evil” and in the Protrepticus “empty.”

6. Sophocles

- a. The text is F. 1027 of Sophocles in the edition of Nauck.
- b. The epithet “gold-faced” is applied to the sun in Euripides, Electra 740.
- c. For the language of nurturing a flame, cf. Sophocles, Oedipus Rex 1425. Here the sky is conceived of as raining fire.
- d. For the Stoic doctrine of the final conflagration, cf. Cicero, De Natura Deorum 2.118, where the notion of the fiery ether is also prominent. Consuming fire also plays a prominent role in Jewish eschatology. Cf. Mal 3:19; Ezek 38:22; SibOr 3.80–90; Vita 49; 2Pet 3:7; Josephus, Ant 1.70.
- e. Clement, followed by Eusebius, divides the passage into two sections at this point. The vss. form one fragment in Pseudo-Justin.
- f. Cf. Sophocles, Antigone 15.
- g. These two vss. are omitted from the text of Sophocles in Clement, in whose version they appear as part of the fragment of Diphilus. See number 10, below.
- h. The subject of this sentence is not explicit. It most probably is God.

7. Sophocles

- a. The text is F. 1026 of Sophocles in the edition of Nauck.

well be authentic. It was probably used by a Jewish author to illustrate the low morality of Greek mythology.

Clement's introduction:

Sophocles straightforwardly writes:

For Zeus wed the mother of this man,
not in golden form,<sup>b</sup> nor clothed with feathers of a swan, as he made pregnant
the maid of Pleuron,<sup>c</sup> but completely as a man.<sup>d</sup>

Then he goes on and adds:

Swiftly the adulterer stood upon the steps of the bride,<sup>e</sup>

by which becomes even clearer the immorality of the mythical account. Zeus is introduced in this way:

And he, without touching table or basin,
rushed to bed with heart aflame
and through that whole night<sup>f</sup> he kept mounting her.

8. Euripides.

Two short iambic fragments of possible Jewish origin are attributed to the third great fifth-century tragedian. One is cited only by Clement of Alexandria, Stromata 5.11.75,1.<sup>a</sup> It proclaims that no temple is worthy of containing God.

Clement's introduction:

Quite beautifully, then, does Euripides agree with these remarks (of Isa 1:11 on sacrifices) as he writes:

What sort of house fashioned by craftsmen would contain the divine form in the folds of its walls?<sup>b</sup>

9. Euripides/Philemon.

The second fragment, proclaiming that God is invisible, is attributed to Euripides by Clement of Alexandria, Protrepticus 6.68.3. Pseudo-Justin, De Monarchia 2, attributes the verses to the fourth-century comic poet Philemon.<sup>a</sup> The verses may be authentic.

b. Zeus in the form of a golden stream had intercourse with Danae. Cf. Sophocles, Antigone 944–50, Horace, Odes 3.16.1–12, and Apollodorus, The Library 2.4.1.

c. Zeus in the form of a swan had intercourse with Leda. Cf. Euripides, Helen 16–22, Apollodorus, The Library 3.10.7. Leda was the great-granddaughter of Pleuron. Cf. Pausanias, 3.13.8.

d. These vss. probably refer to the begetting of Heracles, who was born of Alcmena after Zeus slept with her in the form of her husband, Amphitryon. Cf. Hesiod, Shield of Heracles 1–56, and Apollodorus, The Library 2.4.8.

e. This remark fits the situation of the begetting of Heracles. Amphitryon was unable to sleep with his wife before avenging the death of his wife's brothers. Before he returned from that task, Zeus, the adulterer, had already done his work. Sophocles composed a lost play based on this myth.

f. According to the myth about the birth of Heracles, Zeus prolonged the time he spent with Alcmena into three nights.

8. Euripides

a. The text is F. 1130 of Euripides in the edition of Nauck.

b. That a man-made temple is inadequate to house the divine is affirmed by Isa 66:1 and Acts 7:48 but is also a commonplace in popular hellenistic philosophy. Cf. Seneca, De Beneficiis 7.7.3; Plutarch, De Tranquillitate Animi 20; and Diogenes Laertius, 7.33 (quoting Zeno).

9. Euripides/Philemon

a. The text is F. 247 of Philemon in the edition of Edmonds and F. 1129 of Euripides in the edition of Nauck.

Pseudo-Justin's introduction:

But Philemon, too, who has much to say on ancient things, partakes in the knowledge of reality, since he writes:

Clement's introduction:

Though unwilling, they confess that God is one, indestructible and unbegotten, and that somewhere on high in the outermost parts of heaven in his own personal watchtower he really exists eternally. . . . So says Euripides:

Tell me, how should one think of God,
the one who is all-seeing yet is himself unseen?

10. Diphilus/Philemon/Euripides.

A lengthy set of iambic verses is preserved in several patristic sources, who give various attributions. Clement of Alexandria, Stromata 5.14.121,1–3, followed by Eusebius, Praeparatio Evangelica 13.13.47, cite the whole collection as a fragment of the fourth-century comic poet Diphilus. Pseudo-Justin, De Monarchia 3, quotes the first thirteen verses, including two not in Clement, as a fragment of Philemon.<sup>a</sup> Pseudo-Justin attributes the last eleven verses, including one not in Clement, to Euripides. Within the latter passage, verses 3 to 6 are a genuine fragment of Euripides, from his tragedy the Phryxos, which is quoted by Stobaeus, Anthology 1.3.15. The comic verses in the first half of the passage may also be genuine. In both cases, a Jewish author has taken verses congenial to Jewish belief and interpolated further material which is unmistakably Jewish. Such interpolations are the reference to the unutterable name of God at the end of the comic verses and possibly the strong affirmation of the existence of God after the genuine verses of Euripides. Common to the whole collection is the affirmation of the reality of reward and punishment after death.

Pseudo-Justin's introduction:

And Philemon again:

Clement's introduction:

Diphilus the comic poet says the following about the judgment:

Do you think, Niceratos,<sup>b</sup> that those who die
having had in life a share in every delight are covered by the earth and henceforth for all time<sup>c</sup> have avoided the notice of the deity and escape him?
Justice has an eye, which looks upon all things.<sup>d</sup>
And we believe there are two paths<sup>e</sup> in Hades, one for the just, the other for the impious,<sup>f</sup>
even if the earth forever covers both.
For if just and unjust will have one end,<sup>g</sup>
go off and rob, steal, plunder, act in rage.<sup>h</sup>
Make no mistake. There is, even in Hades, judgment, which God, the Lord of all, will execute,

10. Diphilus/Philemon/Euripides

- a. The text is F. 246 of Philemon in the edition of Edmonds.
- b. A Niceratos appears as a character in an anonymous comic fragment from the end of the third century B.C. and in Menander's play The Samian Lady. Cf. Edmonds, The Fragments of Attic Comedy, 339, 1167.
- c. This vs. is omitted by Clement. Note the similarity with vs. 8.
- d. This l. is cited by Plutarch, Moralia 1124F. Justice is often personified. Cf. Hesiod, Works and Days 218–24.
- e. On the two paths, cf. Plato, Gorgias 523E.
- f. The last two ll. are omitted by Pseudo-Justin, who cites them as part of the fragment of Sophocles given above in number 6, n. 29. The passage in Clement is interrupted at this point.
- g. This vs. is omitted by Clement.
- h. Similar advice is recorded by the Roman comic poet Plautus, Pseudolus 138.

whose name is awesome, and I would not utter it.<sup>i</sup>
 And Euripides<sup>j</sup>

He gives to sinners a long
 life.

And if some mortal thinks he has escaped
 the notice of the gods while doing evil all day long,
 he reckons ill, and in his reckoning will be seized,
 when Justice at her leisure comes upon him.<sup>k</sup>

Give heed, you who think there is no God, erring twice without careful thought,<sup>l</sup>
 for there is, there is indeed, and if someone prospers, while really being wicked, let him take advantage of the present time,
 for in time to come he will pay the penalty.

11. Diphilus/Menander.

Another brief iambic fragment is also preserved with varying attributions. Clement of Alexandria, Stromata 5.14.133,3, followed by Eusebius, Praeparatio Evangelica 13.13.62, attribute it to Diphilus. Pseudo-Justin, De Monarchia 5, attributes it to the major figure in the New Comedy, Menander (late fourth to early third century), in a work called the Diphilus.<sup>a</sup> The latter attribution is probably a misunderstanding of the correct attribution found in Clement. It is possible that the fragment is not a Jewish exaltation of the creator but an authentic fragment referring to a divine figure such as Zeus, or possibly Eros. Cf. Plato, Symposium 178f.

Clement's introduction:

The comic poet Diphilus says most sententiously:

Wherefore honor only the one who is forever
 Lord of all and father for all time,
 who discovered and established so many pleasant things.

12. Philemon/Menander.

A final iambic fragment is, again, attributed to various comic poets. Clement of Alexandria, Stromata 5.14.119,2, followed by Eusebius, Praeparatio Evangelica 13.13.45f., attributes it to Menander and introduces the piece as a parallel to the condemnation of sacrifices in Isa 1:11. Pseudo-Justin, De Monarchia 4, cites a longer version of the fragment and attributes it to Philemon.

Pseudo-Justin's introduction:

And that God does not approach the libation or offering of the wicked but apportions recompense to each in righteousness, Philemon again testifies for me:

Clement's introduction:

Menander the comic poet writes in these very words:

i. This vs. may be the only Jewish interpolation. On the prohibition against profane uttering of the divine name, cf. Philo, Vit Mos 2.114; Josephus, Ant 2.276. Cf. also y. Yoma 40d, b. Kid 71a.

j. This is Pseudo-Justin's introduction to the second half of this collection.

k. The last four vss. are the genuine fragment from the lost play the Phryxos, of Euripides.

l. Clement omits this vs.

11. Diphilus/Menander

a. The text is F. 138 of Diphilus in the edition of Edmonds.

O Pamphilus,<sup>b</sup> if someone offers as a sacrifice
 a multitude of bulls or kids, or by God,
 items such as these, or offers works of art,
 having fashioned gold or purple mantles,
 or animals of ivory or of emerald,
 and thinks he thereby renders God propitious,<sup>c</sup>
 he is deluded and has not all his wits.
 For man must honorable be
 and must not seduce women, nor commit adultery
 nor steal nor slay for sake of gain,
 nor look to others' property, nor covet either wealthy woman or house or goods or even slave or servant lass or horses, cattle or any beast at all. What then?<sup>d</sup> Covet not, O friend, even a needle's thread.
 For God is nearby and is watching you.

Clement comments:

And again Menander, paraphrasing that scripture (which exhorts): "Offer a sacrifice of righteousness and hope in the Lord," writes as follows:

Not even a needle, dear friend,
 should you covet, when it is another's. For God is pleased with just deeds, not unjust,
 and he allows a man to earn his livelihood by labor,
 by plowing the earth night and day.
 Sacrifice to God always being righteous,
 shining not in your clothing but in your heart.
 If you hear some thunder, do not flee,
 as long as you have nothing on your conscience, master.
 For God is nearby and is watching you.

b. A Pamphilus appears as a character in fragments of Philemon, Philippides, Apollodorus of Carystus, Menander, and an anonymous comic poet. Cf. Edmonds, The Fragments of Attic Comedy; vol. 3, pp. 79, 179, 191, 367, 401, 809.

c. Note the similar critique of the cult of images in the fragment ascribed to Sophocles, number 5, above.

d. The preceding four vs. are omitted by Clement. They bring the fragment's condemnation of vice into even closer conformity with the decalogue.

PHILOSOPHY

ARISTOBULUS

(Second Century B.C.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY A. YARBRO COLLINS

The five fragments of Aristobulus' work seem to be part of an extended attempt to relate Jewish tradition to hellenistic culture. Fragment 1 deals with astronomical characteristics of the date of Passover. Aristobulus remarks that, at the feast of the Passover, both the sun and the moon are passing through an equinoctial sign. Thus, they are in diametrically opposed positions on that day.

Fragment 2 is concerned primarily with the nature of God. Aristobulus explains certain anthropomorphic descriptions of God in the Law, which were offensive to educated people of his time.

In fragment 3, Aristobulus claims that Plato and Pythagoras knew the Jewish Law and borrowed from it. In support of this claim, he states that portions of the Law were translated from Hebrew into Greek long before the well-known Septuagint version.

Fragment 4, like fragment 2, discusses the nature of God. The problem of anthropomorphisms is taken up again. Aristobulus argues that Moses and some Greek philosophers and poets had similar ideas about God. But he is not content merely to point out similarities between the Jewish Law and certain Greek authors. As in fragment 3, he claims that some Greek writers knew the Jewish Law and were dependent on it. Here he claims that Socrates, as well as Plato and Pythagoras, made use of the Law. In this fragment, Aristobulus cites verses from Orpheus and Aratus to show how similar their ideas are to those of Moses. Some of the verses cited are attested elsewhere and are thus genuine non-Jewish works. Others are dubious; some are very likely Jewish compositions (see the notes to the translation below).

In fragment 5, the Jewish observance of the Sabbath is explained in terms of cosmic order. Verses from Homer, Hesiod, and the mythical Linus are cited to show that the Greeks also considered the seventh day holy.

Texts

Fragment 1 has been preserved by Eusebius, Ecclesiastica Historia, book 7, chapter 32, sections 16–18. In that passage, Eusebius is not quoting directly from Aristobulus' work but is citing Anatolius, On the Passover. The edition used for the translation of fragment 1 is by E. Schwartz.<sup>1</sup> Fragments 2–5 are found in Eusebius, Praeparatio Evangelica, book 8, chapter 10, and book 13, chapter 12. Part of fragment 5 is also cited, in book 7, chapter 14. The translation below is based on the edition by K. Mras.<sup>2</sup>

Clement of Alexandria also apparently had access to Aristobulus' work. Since his citations are less reliable than those of Eusebius, they were not used in making the translation presented below. Parallels to parts of fragments 2–5 are found in Stromata, books 1, 5, and 6 (for exact references, see the n. to the translation). The text of the fragments of Aristobulus, including the parallels in Clement's Stromata, is given by A.-M. Denis, Fragmenta pseudepigraphorum quae supersunt graeca.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> E. Schwartz, Eusebius Werke, 2. Kirchengeschichte, Zweiter Teil (GCS 9,2; Leipzig, 1908) pp. 722, 724.

<sup>2</sup> The text of F. 2 is given in Mras, GCS 43,1; pp. 451–54; F. 3–5 are given in GCS 43,2; pp. 190–97.

Anatolius says that Aristobulus dedicated exegetical books on the Law of Moses to Ptolemy Philadelphus (283–246 B.C.) and his father. In introducing fragment 2, Eusebius says that he quotes from Aristobulus' work (suggramma) which was dedicated to "Ptolemy the King." The title in the text of Eusebius preceding fragment 3 indicates that the fragment is "from the books of Aristobulus dedicated to King Ptolemy." Eusebius indicates that fragments 4 and 5 are from the same context as 3. N. Walter argued that fragment 5 is a speculative explanation of Genesis 2:1–4.<sup>4</sup> None of the other fragments is a close exegesis of any one, specific passage. Not enough of Aristobulus' work survives to allow firm conclusions about its genre and extent.

Since the seventeenth century a number of scholars have argued that the fragments of Aristobulus were composed only in the early Christian period and not, as they appear to be, in pre-Christian times by a hellenistic Jew. Walter has made a persuasive case for their authenticity.<sup>5</sup>

Original language

There are no indications that the fragments were written originally in a language other than Greek. It is likely that Aristobulus was aware of the allegorical interpretation of Homer and Hesiod practiced by the Stoics and the philological school at Pergamum. Although his approach to the Law is somewhat similar, he does not use the technical terms of allegorical interpretation and he proceeds more cautiously.<sup>6</sup> There is little evidence that Aristobulus knew Hebrew or Aramaic.<sup>7</sup>

Date

Eusebius and Clement say that Aristobulus' work was dedicated to Ptolemy the King. It is evident from other passages that they both believed Ptolemy VI Philometor (181–145 B.C.) to be the king in question.<sup>8</sup> Anatolius' dating of Aristobulus to the reign of Ptolemy II Philadelphus must be an error, since Aristobulus refers to Philadelphus as the forefather (progonos) of the Ptolemy for whom he wrote (F. 3).

N. Walter is skeptical about the date given by Clement and Eusebius.<sup>9</sup> His skepticism results from a close study of the passages in which Eusebius mentions Aristobulus. Only when he is clearly dependent on Clement (e.g. PrEv 9.6.6) does he mention the eponym Philometor. Elsewhere he simply refers to Ptolemy the King. Since Eusebius is generally faithful to his sources, Walter concludes that the manuscript of Aristobulus used by Eusebius had a superscript which dedicated the work simply to Ptolemy the King. In one of the two places in which Clement dates Aristobulus to the reign of Philometor, he refers to 2 Maccabees 1:10, the preface of a letter purporting to be from Judas Maccabaeus and the Jews of Judaea to Aristobulus and the Jews of Alexandria. The letter claims to have been written shortly after the death of Antiochus IV Epiphanes (November–December 164 B.C.).<sup>10</sup> Walter follows E. Bickermann in his judgment that the letter is a fabrication dating to about 60 B.C.<sup>11</sup> Since the letter describes Aristobulus as the teacher of Ptolemy the King (with no eponym), Walter concludes that the fabricator of the letter had a text of Aristobulus with the same dedication Eusebius read. Clement's text, according to Walter, had the same dedication. When he read 2 Maccabees, however, which placed Aristobulus in the time of Judas Maccabaeus, he inferred, on the basis of other chronological information available to

<sup>3</sup> A.-M. Denis, PVTG 3, pp. 217–28.

<sup>4</sup> N. Walter, Der Thorausleger Aristobulos (Berlin, 1964) p. 28.

<sup>5</sup> Thorausleger, pp. 35–123.

<sup>6</sup> Thorausleger, pp. 124–41.

<sup>7</sup> N. Walter, "Fragmente jüdisch-hellenistischer Exegeten: Aristobulos, Demetrios, Aristeas," JSHRZ 3.2 (1975) 264.

<sup>8</sup> Walter, Thorausleger, pp. 13–16.

<sup>9</sup> Thorausleger, pp. 13–26.

<sup>10</sup> A. J. Sachs and D. J. Wiseman, "A Babylonian King List of the Hellenistic Period," Iraq 16 (1954) 209.

<sup>11</sup> Walter, Thorausleger, p. 17.

him, that the Ptolemy in question must have been Philometor. Thus, according to Walter, Eusebius' dating is dependent on Clement, and Clement's on 2 Maccabees.

Walter is skeptical about the reliability of this dating, because of his hypothesis that the fabricator of the letter in 2 Maccabees needed a leader of the Jews in Alexandria to serve as an authoritative addressee for his letter. Hence, he arbitrarily chose Aristobulus and placed him in the historical context which suited his purposes.

Against this skeptical position, one can argue that 2 Maccabees 1:10 may reflect a tradition that Aristobulus lived and wrote during the time of Ptolemy VI. It is not unreasonable to assume that the author of 2 Maccabees would have been familiar with such a tradition.<sup>12</sup> Even if the letter is a fabrication dating to about 60 B.C., such a tradition could easily have survived for a century or so.

In any case, the fragments should not be dated much before the middle of the second century B.C., because Aristobulus calls Ptolemy I the forefather of the Ptolemy he is addressing; thus, he must be addressing the grandson of Ptolemy I (who was Ptolemy IV Philopator, 221–204 B.C.) or a later king. But he uses the eponym "Philadelphus" for Ptolemy II, and it first came into use in the second century to distinguish him from the other Ptolemies.<sup>13</sup> Thus Ptolemy V Epiphanes (205–180 B.C.) would be the earliest king to come under consideration. Since Aristobulus is already familiar with the legend about the origin of the Septuagint, he should not be dated too close to the third century. Thus, the latter part of the reign of Philometor seems to be the earliest reasonable date for the fragments. If Walter is correct that the evidence of 2 Maccabees is unreliable, a later date is possible.

M. Hengel thinks more weight should be given to the notice of 2 Maccabees 1:10. He argues that the fabricator of the letter addressed it to Aristobulus because it was known that he had written a didactic letter to the young Philometor. He takes seriously the description of Aristobulus as the teacher of Ptolemy and thus dates the work to the early part of the reign of Ptolemy VI. He argues further that, since the work was dedicated to Ptolemy alone, it must have been written while he was sole ruler; this was the case only from 176 to 170 B.C.<sup>14</sup>

Against Hengel's point of view, it might be said that, while it is conceivable that Jews were participating in the intellectual life of the court at Alexandria in the mid-second century B.C., it is somewhat unlikely that a Jew would have been a teacher of a Ptolemy at that time, especially since no other notice of such a relationship has survived. Walter's suggestion is more plausible: that the author of the letter read Aristobulus and, taking note of the direct address to Ptolemy and the explanatory nature of the writing, surmised that the author had been indeed an instructor of the king. There is no good reason to doubt that Aristobulus wrote during the reign of Ptolemy VI Philometor. But the fact that the work was addressed solely to Ptolemy does not necessarily mean that he was sole ruler at the time. To make this point, Hengel would have to show that it was customary to include the names of the guardian of the king, his wife, or co-ruler in literary dedications as well as in contracts. The latter part of the reign of Philometor (155–145 B.C.) thus seems to be the most likely date for the work of Aristobulus.

Provenance

Aristobulus' direct address to a Ptolemy, a descendant of Philadelphus, in fragment 3 makes an Alexandrian provenance for his work likely. This conclusion is supported by Eusebius' and Clement's statements that Aristobulus' work was dedicated to Ptolemy the King and that he lived during the time of Ptolemy Philometor (see the section on Date, above). Those scholars who accept the authenticity of the fragments consider Aristobulus an Alexandrian Jew.<sup>15</sup>

<sup>12</sup> J. Moffatt ("2 Maccabees," APOT, vol. 1, pp. 130f.) argued that the author of 2 Maccabees was an Alexandrian Jew.

<sup>13</sup> H. Volkmann, "Ptolemaios," Pauly-Wissowa vol. 23, col. 1645.

<sup>14</sup> M. Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism (Philadelphia, 1974) vol. 1, pp. 163f.; vol. 2, pp. 105–7 (nn. 373 and 378).

<sup>15</sup> Walter, Thorausleger, pp. 38–41; Walter, JSHRZ 3.2 (1975) 262; Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism, vol. 1, pp. 69f., 90, 163f.; P. M. Fraser, Ptolemaic Alexandria (Oxford, 1972) vol. 1, p. 695.

Historical importance

The fragments of Aristobulus provide important information about how a Jew in the second century B.C. attempted to reconcile Jewish tradition and hellenistic philosophy. Although there is little evidence that Aristobulus was a member of or founded a school of Jewish philosophy, it is clear that he stands in a particular line of tradition, beginning with the translation of the Hebrew Bible into Greek and flowering in the work of Philo.<sup>16</sup> Aristobulus' work thus helps the historian trace the genesis of Philo's point of view and methods.

Aristobulus contributes to our knowledge of hellenistic Judaism in that he is the first known Jewish philosopher. The dedication of his work to Ptolemy, the direct address to the king in fragments 2 and 3, and the general tone of an address to outsiders<sup>17</sup> indicate that the work has an apologetic intent. It is likely that the reconciliation of the two cultures was of importance to the self-understanding of Aristobulus and his fellow Jews also.

In fragments 1 and 5 Aristobulus seems to point out that the Jewish feasts (Passover and Sabbath) have cosmic significance. They are observed not only because of particular experiences peculiar to the Jewish people but also because they express aspects of cosmic reality which have universal significance.<sup>18</sup> The Passover is associated with the spring equinox and marked by the positions of both sun and moon (F. 1), and the Sabbath with the sevenfold pattern in the overall structure of the cosmos (F. 5).

Fragment 5 provides important evidence for Jewish use of Pythagorean ideas in the second century B.C. Both Aristobulus and Philo (SpecLeg 2.59) seem to presuppose a traditional, allegorical interpretation of the biblical account of creation. This interpretation made use of Pythagorean reflections on the number seven as a prime number.<sup>19</sup>

Theological importance

Aristobulus is of great interest as the earliest known theologian in the Judeo-Christian tradition engaged in the hermeneutical task. He presupposes that reality is a unified whole and that there cannot be contradictions between the truth of Scripture and the truth of philosophy. Apparent contradictions can be resolved by interpreting Scripture in accordance with the laws of nature (physikōs) instead of in a mythological or human way (F. 2:2). Or, to put it another way, one must not read according to the letter but must discern the "elevated" meaning (F. 2:5, 9). In any case, descriptions of God must be interpreted in accordance with "the fitting conception of God" (F. 2:2).

In discussing the "standing" of God (F. 2:9–12), Aristobulus used the allegorical method of interpretation which the Stoics had applied to Homer and which later Philo also applied to the Bible.<sup>20</sup> According to Aristobulus, one can assume that the writer at times used words relating to outward appearances in order to express something about the arrangements of nature and the constitutions of great matters (F. 2:3). Another method he uses is to point out that the biblical writer has made use of a metaphor; he does this in interpreting references to God's "hands" (F. 2:7–9). Elsewhere, in speaking of wisdom as the source of light (F. 5:10), Aristobulus himself deliberately and consciously makes use of a metaphor in his interpretation (F. 5:10). Even in a case in which Aristobulus wants to affirm the text as a description of an actual event, he moves on from a discussion of what happened to why. The descent of God upon Sinai is thus interpreted symbolically as an expression of divine activity in its omnipresent majesty (F. 2:17).

Aristobulus is notable, as has been shown, because of his concern to develop a hermeneutical method. His work is also of interest as an early and simple example of a theology which unites Jewish reflections on wisdom with hellenistic ideas about the Logos. A. Schlatter and P. Dalbert claimed too much by construing Aristobulus' use of logos as an expression of a divine hypostasis.<sup>21</sup> In fragment 4, Aristobulus discusses God's creation by the spoken

<sup>16</sup> Fraser, Ptolemaic Alexandria, vol. 1, pp. 695f.; H. Wolfson, Philo (Cambridge, England, 1948) vol. 1, p. 94.

<sup>17</sup> Note, e.g., the references to "our philosophical school," near the end of F. 4 (emphasis added). The "school" refers to Judaism.

<sup>18</sup> Walter, Thoraausleger, p. 138; Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism, vol. 1, p. 166.

<sup>19</sup> Thoraausleger, pp. 156f.; Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism, vol. 1, pp. 166f.

<sup>20</sup> Thoraausleger, pp. 124–49.

<sup>21</sup> See Walter's criticism of their views, Thoraausleger, p. 81, n. 3.

word, alluding to Genesis 1. The method of interpretation used in this passage seems to be the same used with regard to God's "standing" (F. 2:9–12). There he says that the elevated meaning is the establishment of the cosmos. Here he says that the "voice" of God means the establishment of things (F. 4:3). The passage shows that it is the attribution of speech generally to God (expressed in various ways) which is to be interpreted allegorically, not his word (logos) as such. The variation in vocabulary and the tentative, nontechnical character of the method show that Aristobulus represents an early stage in the development both of the allegorical method and of theological reflection on the Logos.

In fragment 5, wisdom is associated with the seventh day (F. 5:9f.). The seventh day, in turn, is associated with the sevenfold principle (logos), the sevenfold structure of all things (F. 5:12). Thus wisdom and Logos have similar functions. Wisdom is the source of light in which all things are contemplated. Through the sevenfold principle, we have knowledge of human and divine matters. Aristobulus is a pioneer in this kind of reflection; this is shown by the explicit remark that he is speaking metaphorically (F. 5:10). These reflections of Aristobulus are important for anyone seeking to understand the role of the Logos in Philo's thought or in the Gospel of John.

Relation to canonical books

Exodus 12 probably influenced Aristobulus' discussion of the date of Passover. Various passages in Exodus, Deuteronomy, Genesis, and Numbers are quoted or alluded to in the treatment of anthropomorphisms in fragments 2 and 4 (see the margins of the translation for references). The Acts of the Apostles refers to the same passage of Aratus quoted in fragment 4. Titus 2:12 also lists two of the three virtues mentioned in fragment 4:8 (piety and justice). The author of the letter to Titus may have drawn directly upon hellenistic ethical teaching,<sup>22</sup> or may be dependent upon hellenistic Judaism at this point. Genesis 1–2 stands behind the discussion of the Sabbath in fragment 5. Other biblical passages seem to be behind other parts of fragment 5 (see the margins of the translation).

Aristobulus seems to be interested primarily in interpreting the Torah (Pentateuch). On one occasion at least (F. 5:11), he alludes to the Writings, probably to Proverbs 8. The quotations in fragments 2 and 4 seem to derive from the Septuagint, which is what one would expect, given the explicit mention of it in fragment 3.<sup>23</sup>

Relation to apocryphal books and to later literature

The relationship between the fragments of Aristobulus and 2 Maccabees has already been discussed in the section on Date.

E. Schürer argued that Aristobulus cited the poem attributed to Orpheus and the verses on the seventh day from Pseudo-Hecataeus' book on Abraham. Others argued that Aristobulus is indirectly dependent upon another work attributed to Hecataeus, Concerning Jews. Neither conclusion is warranted.<sup>24</sup>

The fragments of Aristobulus and the Letter of Aristeas share a number of features. Both refer to the legend about the translation of the Jewish Law made under Ptolemy Philadelphus and Demetrius Phalereus. Since the Letter of Aristeas gives the legend in detail and Aristobulus mentions it only in passing, many scholars, including E. Schürer and W. Bousset, concluded that Aristobulus was literarily dependent upon the Letter. It has been argued, however, that the author of the Letter did not invent the legend, but only used it for his own purposes.<sup>25</sup> If this theory is correct, the two authors could have known the legend independently. There are also a number of verbal similarities, but not enough to indicate literary dependence in either direction.<sup>26</sup>

<sup>22</sup> This possibility is implied by M. Dibelius and H. Conzelmann in The Pastoral Epistles (Philadelphia, 1972) p. 142.

<sup>23</sup> Walter, Thoraausleger, pp. 32f.; Walter, JSHRZ 3.2 (1975) 264.

<sup>24</sup> Thoraausleger, pp. 87f.

<sup>25</sup> Thoraausleger, p. 91, n. 3.

<sup>26</sup> Thoraausleger, pp. 88–103. Walter argues cautiously that at some points Aristobulus seems to be prior. There does not seem to be enough evidence to establish such a conclusion.

A. Elter and P. Wendland argued that the fragments of Aristobulus are dependent upon Philo and thus a forgery from Christian times. Walter has shown persuasively that such dependence is very unlikely.<sup>27</sup> Aristobulus is more primitive in vocabulary and method; this primitiveness would be hard to explain after Philo. The technical vocabulary of allegorical interpretation is absent in Aristobulus (allēgoria, tropikōs, hyponoia) and his interpretations are more self-conscious and cautious.

The extant fragments of Aristobulus' work survive only because early Christian writers were interested in them. His cosmic reflections on the date of the Passover were cited by Anatolius in support of his view that Easter ought to be celebrated on the same day as the Passover. Clement and Eusebius cited from his work because its allegorical method was useful to them in interpreting the "Scripture" (graphas). His claim that many great Greek thinkers and poets were dependent upon Moses supported their own apologetic concerns.

Cultural importance

The issues discussed above with regard to historical and theological importance are significant also for those concerned with the history of culture. Further, Aristobulus is of note for the history of philosophy. H. Wolfson suggested that Western philosophy may be divided into three epochs: ancient philosophy, which did not know Scripture; medieval philosophy, which began with Scripture as revelation; and modern philosophy, which had its inception in an attempt to free itself from Scripture. According to Wolfson, the fundamental departure from ancient philosophy involved a new theory of knowledge by introducing a new source of knowledge. This fundamental change appears first in hellenistic Judaism, where it attains its systematic formulation in Philo.<sup>28</sup> Aristobulus is Philo's most important known forerunner in this regard.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 81f.

Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 53–55.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 277–83.

Collins, J. J. Between Athens and Jerusalem. New York, 1983; pp. 175–78 and passim. (Discusses Aristobulus in the context of Jewish identity in the Diaspora.)

Fraser, P. M. Ptolemaic Alexandria. Oxford, 1972; vol. 1, pp. 695–96; vol. 2, pp. 963–70. (Discusses historical matters and the place of Aristobulus in Alexandrian literature.)

Hengel, M. Judaism and Hellenism, trans. J. Bowden. Philadelphia, 1974; vol. 1, pp. 163–69; vol. 2, pp. 105–10. (Situates Aristobulus in the intellectual history of Judaism.)

Sandelin, K.-G. "Zwei Kurze Studien zum alexandrinischen Judentum," ST, 31 (1977) 147–52. (A discussion of Aristobulus' remarks on the descent of God on Sinai.)

Walter, N. Der Thoraausleger Aristobulos. TU 86; Berlin, 1964. (The basic study; includes bibliography of older studies.)

———. "Fragmente jüdisch-hellenistischer Exegeten: Aristobulos, Demetrios, Aristeas," JSHRZ 3.2 (1975) 261–79. (Introduction, bibliography, and translation with nn.)

<sup>27</sup> Thoraausleger, pp. 58–86.

<sup>28</sup> Wolfson, Philo, vol. 2, pp. 444f., 456f.

TRANSLATION

Fragment 1 Eusebius, "Ecclesiastica Historia" 7.32.16–18

On the date of the Passover

- 16 And this is not our own reckoning,<sup>a</sup> but it was known to the Jews long ago even before Christ and it was carefully observed by them. One can learn it from what is said by Philo, Josephus, (and) Musaeus,<sup>b</sup> and not only by these, but also by both of the Agathobuli, who are still more ancient and are surnamed the teachers. One can learn it also from what is said by the excellent Aristobulus,<sup>c</sup> who was enrolled among the seventy<sup>d</sup> who translated the sacred and divine Scriptures of the Hebrews for Ptolemy Philadelphus and his father and who dedicated exegetical books on the law of Moses to the same kings. F. 3:1f.
F. 3:2
- 17 When these (writers) explain questions concerning the Exodus, they say that it is necessary that all alike sacrifice the Passover after the vernal equinox, in the middle of the first month<sup>e</sup>; and this occurs when the sun passes through the first sector of the solar, or as some of them called (it), the zodiacal circle. Ex 12:6
- And Aristobulus adds that on the feast of the Passover of necessity not only the sun will be passing through an equinoctial sector, but the moon also.
- 18 For, since there are two equinoctial sections, the vernal and the autumnal, and since they are diametrically opposite one another, and since the day of the Passover was assigned to the fourteenth of the month after evening, the moon will stand in the position opposite and over against the sun, just as one can see (it) at the seasons of full moon. (So) the one, the sun, will be in the sector of the vernal equinox, and the other, the moon, of necessity will be in (the sector of) the autumnal (equinox). Ex 12:6

Fragment 2 Eusebius, "Praeparatio Evangelica" 8.9.38–8.10.17.

On anthropomorphisms

- 9.38 It is time to listen to what sorts of things Aristobulus recounted concerning elements in the sacred books which are currently understood to refer to God's limbs. Aristobulus was familiar with Aristotelian philosophy in addition to that of his ancestors. (He is the one whom the second book of the Maccabees mentions in the beginning of the book.) And in his work (dedicated) to Ptolemy the King this man also explains this method: F. 3 (Title)
2Mac 1:10
- 10.1 When, however, enough had been said in response to the questions set forth, you

Fragment 1

a. Anatolius was an Alexandrian teacher of Aristotelian philosophy who became bishop of Caesarea in Palestine and later of Laodicea in Syria. He died in Laodicea around A.D. 282. In his work On the Passover, he apparently defended the position of the Quartodecimans, that Easter ought to be celebrated on the same day as the Jewish Passover, the fourteenth of the Jewish lunar month Nisan.

b. Musaeus was a mythical singer, closely related to Orpheus. There were oracles in circulation supposed to have been written by him. Anatolius may refer here to a Jewish poem attributed to Musaeus, like the Pseudo-Orphic hymn quoted by Aristobulus and discussed by M. Lafargue in this volume.

c. The translation reflects the Greek MSS. The Latin and Syriac read "Aristobulus from Paneas" (that is, Caesarea Philippi).

d. Anatolius here refers to the legend that the Hebrew Bible was translated into Greek in Alexandria during the reign of Ptolemy II Philadelphus (283–246 B.C.). The most extensive account of the legend is in the pseudepigraphical LetAris, according to which there were seventy-two translators.

e. Philo, SpecLeg 2.145–61, Quaes Ex 1.4; Josephus, Ant 2.311–13, 3.248.

- also, O King, exclaimed (questioning) why indications are given of hands and arms and face and feet and walking about throughout our Law with respect to the divine power. These things will receive a proper discussion and they will not contradict in any way what was said by us beforehand. F. 4:3
- 2 And I wish to exhort you to receive the interpretations according to the laws of nature<sup>a</sup> and to grasp the fitting conception of God and not to fall into the mythical and human way of thinking about God.
- 3 For our lawgiver Moses proclaims arrangements of nature and preparations for great events by expressing that which he wishes to say in many ways, by using words that refer to other matters (I mean matters relating to outward appearances).
- 4 Therefore, those who are able to think well marvel at his wisdom and at the divine spirit in accordance with which he has been proclaimed as a prophet also. Among these are the philosophers already mentioned and many others, including poets, who took significant material from him and are admired accordingly. Deut 18:18; 34:10
F. 3:1
F. 4:4
F. 4:4-6
F. 5:13-16
- 5 But to those who have no share of power and understanding, but who are devoted to the letter alone, he does not seem to explain anything elevated.
- 6 I shall begin then to take up each thing signified in turn, to the extent that I am able. But if I miss the point or fail to be persuasive, attribute the lack of reason not to the lawgiver but to my inability to interpret his thoughts.
- 7 Now "hands" are clearly thought of even in our own time in a more general way. For when you, being king, send out forces, wishing to accomplish something, we say, "The king has a mighty hand," and the hearers are referred to the power which you have.
- 8 Now Moses indicates this also in our Law when he speaks thus: "God brought you out of Egypt with a mighty hand." and again he says that God said to him, "I will send forth my hand and I will strike the Egyptians." And with respect to the death which came upon the cattle and the others he speaks to the king of the Egyptians, saying, "Behold, the hand of the Lord shall be upon your cattle and a great death shall be upon all that are in the fields," so that it is necessary that the hands be explained as the power of God. For it is possible for people speaking metaphorically to consider that the entire strength of human beings and their active powers are in their hands.<sup>b</sup> Ex 13:9 (LXX)
Ex 3:20 (LXX)
Ex 9:3 (LXX)
- 9 Therefore, the lawgiver has employed a metaphor well for the purpose of saying something elevated, when he says that the accomplishments of God are his hands. And the establishment of the cosmos might well be called divine "standing"<sup>c</sup> in accordance with the elevated (level of meaning). Gen 28:13
Ex 17:6
- 10 For indeed God is over all things and all things have been subordinated (to him) and have received their "standing" (from him), with the result that human beings comprehend that these things are unalterable. I mean something like this, that heaven has never become earth and earth heaven, nor has sun become shining moon, nor moon again sun, nor rivers sea, nor sea rivers.
- 11 And again with regard to living beings, there is the same rule. For a human being will not become beast nor a beast a human being. And the same thing applies also to the rest, to plants and the others. They are not interchangeable, but the members of each group change and are destroyed in the same way. F. 5:12
- 12 In these respects, therefore, divine "standing" might be spoken of, because all things are subjected to God. Ex 19:11
- It is said too in the book of the Law that there was a descent of God upon the mountain, at the time when he was giving the Law, in order that all might see the action of God. For this descent was manifest; therefore, anyone wishing to guard the account about God should interpret these things in the following way.
- 13 For it is set forth that "the mountain was burning with fire," so says the Law, Ex 19:16-18; 24:17
Deut 4:11; 5:23;
9:15

Fragment 2

a. Or "in a way corresponding to reality," a technical term of the Stoics.

b. Philo, LegAll 2.89, SpecLeg 4.138.

c. Philo, Somn 1.157-58, 241; 2.219-22.

on account of God's coming down. It also says that there were trumpet blasts and the fire blazing without substance.

Ex 19:16,19;
20:18
Ex 3:2

14 For even though the whole multitude of not less than a hundred myriads (one million),<sup>d</sup> not counting minors,<sup>e</sup> was assembled round about the mountain and even though the making of a circuit around it would take not less than five days, the fire was seen blazing from every point of view around them all where they were camped.<sup>f</sup>

Ex 12:37f.
Num 1:45-47;
11:21
Ex 19:2,17

15 Therefore, the descent was not local; for God is everywhere. Rather he (the lawgiver) showed that the power of fire, which is marvelous beyond all things because it consumes all things, blazes without substance and consumes nothing, unless the power from God (to consume) is added to it.

Ex 3:2

16 For, although the regions were blazing mightily, (the fire) consumed nothing of the growing things throughout the mountain, but the foliage of all of them remained untouched by fire. The trumpet blasts were quite strongly audible at the same time as the exhibition of the lightning-like fire, although no such instruments were present nor any to sound them, but all things happened by divine arrangement.

17 Therefore, it is clear that the divine descent occurred for these reasons: in order that the viewers might comprehend each of these things in a revelatory way—not that the fire consumed nothing, as has been said, nor that the trumpet blasts came into being without human activity or the use of instruments, but that God, without any aid, manifested his own majesty, which is throughout all things.

Fragment 3 Eusebius, 13.12.1f.

Greek dependence on the Jewish Law

(Title) That also Aristobulus, who lived before us and was of the Hebrew people, the peripatetic (philosopher), agreed that the Greeks begin from the philosophy of the Hebrews;<sup>a</sup> from the (books) of Aristobulus dedicated to King Ptolemy:

1 It is evident that Plato imitated our legislation and that he had investigated thoroughly each of the elements in it. For it had been translated by others before<sup>b</sup> Demetrius Phalereus,<sup>c</sup> before the conquests of Alexander<sup>d</sup> and the Persians.<sup>e</sup> The parts concerning the exodus of the Hebrews, our fellow countrymen, out of Egypt, the fame of all the things that happened to them, the conquest of the land, and the detailed account of the entire legislation (were translated).<sup>f</sup> So it is very clear that the philosopher mentioned above took many things (from it). For he was very learned, as was Pythagoras, who transferred many of our doctrines and integrated them into his own system of beliefs.<sup>g</sup>

F. 4:4, 2:4

F. 4:4, 2:4

2 But the entire translation of all the (books) of the Law (was made) in the time of the king called Philadelphus, your ancestor. He brought greater zeal (to the task than his predecessors), while Demetrius Phalereus managed the undertaking.

F. 1:16

d. Philo., SpecLeg 2.146.

e. Or "not counting the elderly."

f. F. 2:14-16 is cited by Clement (Strom 6.32,3-33,1).

Fragment 3

a. Artapanus (PrEv 9.27.4) says that Moses invented and taught philosophy (see the section on Artapanus).

b. LetAris 30, 314.

c. Peripatetic philosopher, statesman, and writer who ruled Athens (318-307 B.C.) and was adviser to Ptolemy I Soter in Alexandria (c. 297 B.C.). On the translation connected with his name see LetAris 301-22.

d. 332 B.C.

e. 343 B.C. or 525 B.C.

f. Apparently a reference to the books of Ex, Lev, Num, Deut, and Josh.

g. Clement cites F. 3:1 in Strom 1.150, 1-3 and uses F. 3:2 in Strom 1.148,1.

Fragment 4 Eusebius, 13.13.3–8

Anthropomorphisms and Greek dependence on the Law

3 Then, having said some things in between, he continues, saying:

For it is necessary to take the divine "voice" not as a spoken word, but as the establishment of things.<sup>a</sup> Just so has Moses called the whole genesis of the world words of God in our Law. For he continually says in each case, "And God spoke and it came to pass."

F. 2:1
Deut 4:12,33;
5:23–26
Gen 1:3,6,9,
14,20,24 (LXX)

4 And it seems to me that Pythagoras, Socrates, and Plato with great care follow him in all respects. They copy him when they say that they hear the voice of God, when they contemplate the arrangement of the universe, so carefully made and so unceasingly held together by God.<sup>b</sup> And further, Orpheus<sup>c</sup> also imitates Moses in verses from his (books) on the Hieros Logos. He expresses himself thus concerning the maintaining of all things by divine power, their being generated and God's being over all things. And he speaks so:<sup>d</sup>

F. 2:4
F. 3:1

5 I will sing for those for whom it is lawful, but you uninitiate, close your doors, Charged under the laws of the Righteous ones, for the Divine has legislated For all alike. But you, son of the light-bearing moon, Musaeus, listen, for I proclaim the Truth.

F. 2:4;
5:13–16;
1:16 (n.b)

Let not what you formerly felt lose for you a happy eternity,
But look to the divine word, study it closely,
[So] guiding your heart, that knowing vessel. Set out firmly
On the path, and look only at the undying shaper of the universe.
There is an ancient saying about him:

"He is one"—self-completing, and all things completed by him,
In them he himself circulates. But no one has seen him
With the souls mortals have, he is seen [only] by Mind.
He does not take good things and make them into evil
For people, but he comes in company with love and hate,
"And war and plague and weeping pain"—

Deut 6:4

"And there is no other." You would understand everything
If you were to see him. But before that, here on earth, sometimes,
My son, I will point it out to you, whenever I notice his footsteps,
And the strong hand of the mighty God.

Isa 45:5

But I do not see him, because around [him] a cloud is set up,
A thin one for me, but tenfold for all [other] people.
For all mortals have mortal pupils in their eyes,
[Too] small, since flesh and bones have produced them,
[Too] weak to see Zeus, the ruler of all.

And no one has seen the ruler of mortal men,
Except a certain unique man, an offshoot from far back of the race
Of the Chaldeans. For he was knowledgeable about the path of the Star,
And how the movement of the Sphere goes around the earth,
Both in circular fashion, but each on its own axis.
He rides in spirit through the air and through the water
Of the stream. A comet makes manifest these events—he had a mighty birth.
Yes, he after this is established in the great heaven
On a golden throne. He stands with his feet on the earth.
He stretches out his right hand to the ends of the ocean.
The foundation of the mountains trembles within at [his] anger,

Mt 2:2

Isa 66:1

Fragment 4

a. Philo, Migr 48f.

b. Plato, Tim 47 A–E, Apol 31 D, Theag 128

D. F. 4:3–4a is used by Clement (Strom 5.99,3).

c. Artapanus claims that Moses taught Orpheus

(PrEv 9.27,4); see the contribution on Artapanus in this volume.

d. [The translation of the Orphic poem which is given here is from M. Lafargue's contribution above. —J.H.C.]

- And the depths of the gray sparkling sea.
 They cannot endure the mighty power. He is entirely Heavenly, and he brings everything to completion on earth,
 Being "the beginning, the middle, and the end," Rev 1:8
 As the saying of the ancients, as the one water-born has described it,
 The one who received [revelations] from God in aphorisms, in the form of a double law.
 It is unlawful to say anything else. My body is trembling.
 In Mind, from above, he rules over everything according to an order.
 My son, approach him with your Mind,
 And do not betray, but guard the divine message in your heart.
- 6 And Aratus<sup>e</sup> also speaks about the same things thus:
 Let us begin with God, whom men never leave unspoken; full of God are the streets, and all the marketplaces of humanity, and full the sea and the harbors;
 and we are all in need of God everywhere.<sup>f</sup> We are all his children; and he gently Acts 17:28 to humanity gives good omens, and rouses people to work, reminding (them) of sustenance; and he tells when the soil is best for cattle and for pickaxes, and he tells when seasons are favorable both for planting trees and for sowing all seeds.
- 7 I believe that it has been clearly shown how the power of God is throughout all things. And we have given the true sense, as one must, by removing the (name) Zeus throughout the verses. For their (the verses') intention refers to God, therefore it was so expressed by us. We have presented these things therefore in a way not unsuited to the things being discussed.
- 8 For it is agreed by all the philosophers that it is necessary to hold holy opinions concerning God,<sup>g</sup> a point our philosophical school makes particularly well. And the whole constitution of our Law is arranged with reference to piety and justice Tit 2:12 and temperance and the rest of the things that are truly good.<sup>h</sup>

Fragment 5 Eusebius, 13.12.9–16

On the sabbath

- 9 Following these things, after other (remarks), he adds:
 And connected (with this) is (the fact) that God, who established the whole Gen 2:2f.
Ex 20:8–11
Deut 5:12–15
 cosmos, also gave us the seventh day as a rest, because life is laborious for all.<sup>a</sup>
 According to the laws of nature,<sup>b</sup> the seventh day might be called first also, as the genesis of light in which all things are contemplated.<sup>c</sup> Ex 23:12
Gen 1:3–5
- 10 And the same thing might be said metaphorically about wisdom also. For all light has its origin in it. And some of those belonging to the Peripatetic school have said that wisdom holds the place of a lantern; for as long as they follow it unremittingly, they will be calm through their whole life.<sup>d</sup>
- 11 And one of our ancestors, Solomon, said more clearly and better that wisdom Prov 8:22–31 existed before heaven and earth; which indeed agrees with what has been said.
 And it is plainly said by our legislation that God rested on the seventh day. Gen 2:2
 This does not mean, as some interpret, that God no longer does anything. It means

e. Aristobulus cites here the first nine lines of an astronomical poem, Phaenomena, by Aratus of Soli, in Cilicia (c. 315–240/239 B.C.). For the complete text and translation of Phaenomena see A. W. Mair's publication in LCL. Note that Aristobulus changed Zeus in the poem to theos.

f. Or "and we consult God's oracles everywhere." If the Gk. word for "God" be emended from the genitive to the dative case, the translation would be "and we have familiar intercourse with God everywhere."

g. LetAris 234f.

h. Philo, Quod Omn 83.

Fragment 5

a. Jub 2:18–20.

b. Or "in a way corresponding to reality" (see F. 2:2, n. a).

c. Philo, SpecLeg 2.59.

d. Philo, Ebr 31.

that, after he had finished ordering all things, he so orders them for all time.

12 For the legislation signifies that in six days he made heaven and earth and all things which are in them in order that he might make manifest the times and foreordain what precedes what with respect to order. For, having set all things in order, he maintains and alters them so (in accordance with that order). And the legislation has shown plainly that the seventh day is legally binding for us as a sign of the sevenfold principle<sup>e</sup> which is established around us, by which we have knowledge of human and divine matters. Ex 20:11 (LXX)
Gen 1:14-18

F. 2:11

F. 2:4

13 And indeed all the cosmos of all living beings and growing things revolves in series of sevens.<sup>f</sup> Its being called "sabbath" is translated as "rest." And both Homer and Hesiod, having taken information from our books, say clearly that the seventh day is holy. Hesiod (speaks) so:

To begin with, (the) first, (the) fourth and (the) seventh, (each) a holy day;<sup>g</sup>
And again he says:

And on the seventh day (is) again the bright light of the sun.<sup>h</sup>

14 And Homer speaks so:

And then indeed the seventh day returned, a holy day;<sup>i</sup>

[and

Then was the holy seventh day]<sup>j</sup>

and again:

It was the seventh day and on it all things had been completed<sup>k</sup>
and:

Gen 2:2f.

And on the seventh morning we left the stream of Acheron.<sup>l</sup>

15 He (Homer) thereby signifying that away from the forgetfulness and evil of the soul, by means of the sevenfold principle<sup>m</sup> in accordance with the truth, the things mentioned before are left behind and we receive knowledge of the truth, as has been said above.<sup>n</sup>

16 And Linus<sup>o</sup> speaks so:

And on the seventh morning all things were made complete;<sup>p</sup>

and again:

(The) seventh (day) is of good quality and (the) seventh (day) is birth;<sup>q</sup>

and:

(The) seventh (day) is among the prime (numbers) and (the) seventh (day) is perfect;

[and]

And all seven (heavenly bodies) have been created in the starry heaven,

Shining in their orbits in the revolving years.

Such then are the remarks of Aristobulus.<sup>r</sup>

e. Or "as a sign of our seventh faculty, namely, reason."

f. There are various points of contact between F. 5:9-13 and Clement, Strom 6.137-44.

g. Hesiod, Opera et Dies, 770.

h. The verse is not attested in the works of Hesiod; cf. Homer, Iliad 1.605; Hesiod, Theog 760, 958.

i. This verse is not attested in Homer's works.

j. The material in brackets does not occur in PrEv 13.12, 14; it is cited in 13.13, 34 and by Clement, Strom 5.107, 2.

k. This verse seems to be based on Homer,

Odyssey 5.262, which reads "the fourth day."

l. This verse is not attested but is related to Odyssey 10.513, 12.1.

m. Or "reason."

n. The Greek here is nearly unintelligible.

o. A mythical singer, like Musaeus and Orpheus.

p. This verse is probably a Jewish composition.

q. Or "The seventh day and the seventh birth are good." According to Philo the seventh day was the birthday of the world (Op 89).

r. Clement cites the same verses as F. 5:13-16 in Strom 5.107, 1-108, 1 and attributes them to Callimachus.

CHRONOGRAPHY

DEMETRIUS THE CHRONOGRAPHER

(Third Century B.C.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY J. HANSON

Six fragments are customarily ascribed to Demetrius.<sup>1</sup> All are concerned with the Old Testament in one way or another. Fragment 1 is a synopsis of the story of the sacrifice of Isaac (Gen 22). Fragment 2, the longest of the six, mainly involves patriarchal chronology, relating Jacob's career and the birthdates and ages of his twelve sons and one daughter in conjunction with it and concluding with a brief treatment of the main events of Joseph's career in Egypt and of the chronology of Moses' ancestors. Fragment 3 chiefly concerns the genealogy of Moses and Zipporah, reconciling the various Old Testament traditions about the latter's father.<sup>2</sup> Fragment 4 is a synopsis of the story of the changing of bitter water to sweet at Marah, and the arrival of the people at Elim (Ex 15:22–27). Fragment 5 deals with the question of how the people of the Exodus got their weapons.

There is no internal evidence for the title of the work from which the first five fragments are drawn. Fragment 6, however, is said to be from Demetrius' work On the Kings in Judaea and gives the number of years between the various deportations of Israel and Judah and Demetrius' own time. This is a period of biblical history much later than that treated in fragments 1–5. Yet it is not necessary to posit that these fragments were taken from a different work, however inappropriate the title may seem for patriarchal traditions.<sup>3</sup>

Text and language

Fragments 1–5 are preserved in Eusebius, Praeparatio Evangelica, Book 9, where he has excerpted the work of Alexander Polyhistor On the Jews; Polyhistor had, in turn, excerpted the work of Demetrius. The translation of the first five fragments follows the text and numbered divisions of K. Mras's edition of Eusebius' Praeparatio Evangelica;<sup>4</sup> the text used for the translation of fragment 6 is O. Stählin's edition of Clement of Alexandria's Stromata, the work in which this fragment is preserved.<sup>5</sup>

Demetrius' Greek style—if we may judge from Polyhistor, who systematically converts his excerpts into indirect speech—is grammatically uncomplex and straightforward, if somewhat tedious and restricted in vocabulary. It is unaffected by the descriptive flourishes found in other Graeco-Jewish authors, such as Artapanus or Pseudo-Eupolemus, and lacks

<sup>1</sup> Fs. 1 and 5 lack any attribution of authorship. Although more true of F. 5, both are generally compatible with the language and style of the ascribed Fs. and illustrate similar interests. See also F. 1, n. a. and F. 5, n. a.

<sup>2</sup> This third F. is often cited by Byzantine authors, e.g. Leo the Grammarian and George Cedrenus; cf. Denis, Introduction, p. 249f. For some discussion of this F. as a whole, cf. Wacholder, Eupolemus (Cincinnati, Ohio, 1974), p. 100f.

<sup>3</sup> Since Fs. 1–5 do not deal with the kings in Judea, as does F. 6, the one title for all of them seems awkward and allows the speculation that Demetrius may have written more than one work. Yet Justus of Tiberias wrote a history of Judean kings (Ioudaiōn Basileōn en tois stemmasi), which covered the period from Moses to Agrippa II. Philo, too, can call Moses a "king" (Vit Mos 2.292).

<sup>4</sup> See Bibliography for complete details, as well as a list of other editions and collections of Demetrius' fragments.

<sup>5</sup> For details, see Bibliography. Clement may, like Eusebius, have drawn on Alexander Polyhistor as his source for Demetrius; cf. Denis, Introduction, p. 250.

the obvious apologetic biases of Josephus. Instead of the legendary and fabulous features found among the likes of Artapanus, Demetrius is marked by sober chronological precision, using the traditions of the Septuagint as a base.<sup>6</sup> As a constructive chronographer, he knows his source well and generally follows it closely, down to the spellings of proper names. Yet where his purposes require it, Demetrius can alter and combine diverse traditions and make open conjectures (cf. F. 3, PrEv 9.29.1–3; F. 5, PrEv 9.29.16).

Date and provenance

Fragment 6 (Strom 1.141.1f.) refers to Ptolemy IV (c. 221–204 B.C.); hence Demetrius' work is often dated to his reign and placed in Egypt. A one-hundred-year discrepancy with some other dates in this fragment has led some scholars to emend the reference to another Ptolemy.<sup>7</sup> But such an alternative is without probative force, since it is those other dates which have probably suffered textual corruption.<sup>8</sup> Despite the difficulties of the text, a dating to the time of Ptolemy IV is appropriate because of Demetrius' relation to other literary activities of the third century and to the Septuagint in particular.<sup>9</sup> Hence Demetrius is the earliest datable Jewish author writing in Greek.<sup>10</sup> He wrote after the completion of the Greek translation of the Pentateuch (3rd cent. B.C.), since he shows knowledge and use of it,<sup>11</sup> but before the first century B.C., when his work was excerpted by Alexander Polyhistor.

Although Palestine or some other place under Ptolemaic rule cannot be excluded (because of the reference to Ptolemy IV Philopator in F. 6), Egypt, or Alexandria in particular, is probably the place in which Demetrius composed his work. Such a judgment rests on his use of the Septuagint and especially upon his relation to scientific chronography (see below).

Historical importance

Demetrius' concern for the inconsistencies and obscurities found in the biblical traditions, especially in matters of chronography, gives evidence for the beginnings of biblical exegesis, or at least scientific chronography, among hellenistic Jews. There are also good indications that Demetrius does not stand alone but may represent a school of biblical chronographical interpretation.<sup>12</sup> This suggestion is reinforced by the observation that not only are such schools in evidence later<sup>13</sup> but that the Septuagint itself, upon which Demetrius relies, gives hints that it, too, may represent a school of biblical chronology. This possibility is seen in the divergences in dating between the Hebrew and Septuagint texts.<sup>14</sup> Although chronological concerns constitute the bulk of Demetrius' preserved work, he was also interested in other exegetical matters, as the shorter fragments 1, 4, and 5 may suggest.

Demetrius is the first witness to the use of the Septuagint, or at least of the Greek Pentateuch.<sup>15</sup> His work clearly, and perhaps exclusively, presupposes the Greek Old

<sup>6</sup> That Demetrius does not use the Heb. text is most clearly seen in his choice of vocabulary, which exhibits a vast and detailed overlap with that of the LXX. Use of the LXX is also shown by the differences between the chronographical system of Demetrius/LXX and that of the Heb. or the Samaritan version. That Demetrius may have known a Heb. Pentateuch, but with Septuagintal chronology, seems to be supported by F. 5 (see below, n. 15, and F. 5, n. d). But this possibility is called into question by F. 2 (PrEv 9.21.10); cf. n. 10 c.

<sup>7</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 57–62, would emend to Ptolemy III (246–221 B.C.). H. Graetz, "Die Chronologie des Demetrius," MGWJ 27 (1877) 71, preferred a much later date for the Ptolemy in question.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. F. 6, n. f.

<sup>9</sup> For further remarks, see under "Historical importance."

<sup>10</sup> Demetrius, although confused with Demetrius of Phaleron, is placed first in the list of historians mentioned in Josephus, Apion 1.218, as knowledgeable in Jewish matters. The order of the names may be chronological.

<sup>11</sup> Wacholder's repeated suggestion that Demetrius may have been one of the so-called seventy translators of the LXX is without warrant and is challenged by F. 2, PrEv 9.21.10; see n. c.

<sup>12</sup> Cf. Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 65–72; Wacholder, Eupolemus, pp. 97–100, and his other articles as well.

<sup>13</sup> Cf. especially Wacholder, HUCA 35 (1964) 43–56.

<sup>14</sup> See Wacholder, Eupolemus, pp. 98f. However, the chronological system of the LXX probably existed in earlier Heb. MSS and may go back to chronological activity in Palestine in the Persian period.

<sup>15</sup> Cf. Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 36n., 43, 49. Demetrius' work is the only independent evidence for Aristeas' notion that the LXX existed as early as the middle of the 3rd cent. B.C.

Testament. Evidence for a knowledge of biblical traditions in Hebrew is scant.<sup>16</sup> In fragments 2 and 3 he reflects the chronographic system of the Septuagint and shows no knowledge of the numerical figures of the Hebrew text where they differ from those of the Septuagint. Further, his spellings of biblical names generally follow the Septuagint; even his phrasing is reminiscent of the Greek Old Testament.

The extant fragments of Demetrius' work are coherent with literary trends in third-century Alexandria. As Demetrius investigated the ancient chronicles of his people, so did the Greeks and Egyptians theirs. Eratosthenes (c. 275–194 B.C.), in his Chronographiai, marks a first scientific attempt to fix the dates of political and literary history of the Greeks. Manetho (c. 280 B.C.), in his Aigyptiaka, produced a history of Egypt frequently used by later Jewish and Christian writers to establish biblical chronology. At the same time, Berossus of Babylon (c. 290 B.C.), wrote a chronologically oriented history of Babylon (Babyloniaka).<sup>17</sup>

Whether consciously or not, Demetrius also reflects the use of another specific form of writing found among his contemporaries, that of aporiai kai luseis, "difficulties and solutions." Ancient writings were searched for difficulties or problems, which were then solved. This was done for Homer and Hesiod and can be seen in Philo's Quaestiones et Solutiones in Genesim et Exodum and among the Rabbis.<sup>18</sup> Some of the questions that drew Demetrius' attention included: how the people of the Exodus got their arms (F. 5, PrEv 9.29.16); why Joseph waited nine years to inform his family of his circumstances in Egypt (F. 2, PrEv 9.21.13); and why Joseph gave fivefold portions of food and clothing to Benjamin (F. 2, PrEv 9.21.14). These concerns raise the question of whether Demetrius' purpose in writing extended to apologetics, or whether he was, simply, an apologist.<sup>19</sup> But the implicit apologetic found in Demetrius is at most an internal one, directed toward the questions raised by his school or other schools of biblical interpretation. For Demetrius is not an apologist in the usual sense; he looks nothing like a Eupolemus or Artapanus, who make Old Testament heroes into philosophers and astrologers and who fuse oriental and Greek mythology. His work shows no necessary signs of being directed toward the pagan world. His main focus is patriarchal chronology. Such chronological systems were used polemically and could have been so used in missing parts of Demetrius' work. But Demetrius' system does not make synchronisms with other cultures and as such would hardly reach beyond a Jewish audience. Broadly speaking, he treats the history of Israel in light of the literary culture of third-century Alexandria, but remains thoroughly Jewish in both his subject matter and his language.<sup>20</sup>

In all of Demetrius' work with biblical texts or traditions, there is no attention given to theological matters, even in fragments that take him beyond an interest in genealogy or chronology. He overlooks, for example, any theological dimension to the story of the sacrifice of Isaac (F. 1, PrEv 9.19.4). He clearly accepts the outlook of his sources (e.g. a belief in angels, F. 2, PrEv 9.21.7, 10; F. 1, PrEv 9.19.4), but apart from such meager evidence no insight into his theological views is possible.

Relation to canonical books

No canonical work is similar to the fragments of Demetrius. The extant fragments almost exclusively concern those narratives in Genesis and Exodus that serve him in determining biblical chronology. But Demetrius goes considerably beyond these in detail and precision. Even where he takes up a much later period in Israel's history, as in fragment 6, the interest <sup>16</sup> The best evidence for an independent knowledge of the Heb. OT is found in F. 5 (PrEv 9.29.16). The Heb. of Ex 13:18 says the Israelites were "armed," which the LXX translates as "fifth." Demetrius would then show knowledge of the Heb. by directly contradicting it and asserting that they were "unarmed." Cf. Wacholder, Eupolemus, pp. 281, n. 85; 282, n. 90.

<sup>17</sup> It is interesting that all these authors, as well as Demetrius, are preserved only in fragments. Their effect on later historiography was not great.

<sup>18</sup> See S. Lieberman, Hellenism in Jewish Palestine (New York, 1950) 47–82, especially 64–68, and H. Dörrie and H. Dörries, "Erotapokriseis," RAC 6, cols. 342–70.

<sup>19</sup> See Dalbert, Theologie, 30–32, who emphasizes this.

<sup>20</sup> See Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 62–65, 80–82.

is still largely restricted to chronology. The influence of the canonical books upon Demetrius seems to reside solely in the language and system of chronology that are apparent in the Septuagint.

Relation to apocryphal books

Demetrius belongs to those apocryphal traditions which similarly represent or reflect chronological systems, if not schools: Jubilees, Genesis Apocryphon, Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs, Seder Olam, and Talmudic and Midrashic traditions. But, within this group, distinctions may be made. For example, the Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs certainly reflects a chronological system, but unlike Demetrius and Jubilees, this is not intricately related to the purpose of the work. Because Demetrius is so early, direct influences upon him are difficult if not impossible to determine. Demetrius' influence upon others is also a difficult matter and can rarely be determined with precision.<sup>21</sup> Even where his interpretation coincides with a later view influence or dependence is hard to prove. But it is clear that he is to be considered in light of those apocryphal traditions which concerned themselves with matters of chronography.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 93f.
 Dellling, Bibliographie, pp. 53–55.
 Denis, Introduction, pp. 248–51.

TEXTS

Denis, A.-M. (ed.). Fragmenta pseudepigraphorum quae supersunt graeca. PVTG 3; Leiden, 1970; pp. 175–79.
 Jacoby, F. (ed.). Die Fragmente der griechischen Historiker. Leiden, 1958; vol. 3C, pp. 666–71.
 Mras, K. (ed.). Eusebius Werke 8.1, Praeparatio Evangelica. GCS 43.1; Berlin, 1954–56.
 Stählin, O. (ed.). Clemens Alexandrinus, Stromata 1–4. GCS 52; Berlin, 1960; p. 87.

STUDIES

Bickerman, E. J. "The Jewish Historian Demetrios," Christianity, Judaism and Other Greco-Roman Cults, ed. J. Neusner. SJLA 12.3; Leiden, 1975; pp. 72–84. (Discussion of the historical and literary environment of Demetrius, with an excursus on F. 6. [Unfortunately, the article does not appear to have been proofread.]
 Dalbert, P. Die Theologie der hellenistisch-jüdischen Missionsliteratur unter Ausschluss von Philo und Josephus. Theologische Forschung 4; Hamburg-Volksdorf, 1954; pp. 27–32. (An introductory treatment of Demetrius, with brief discussions of the exegetical [i.e., non-chronographical] fragments.)
 Freudenthal, J. Alexander Polyhistor und die von ihm erhaltenen Reste jüdischer und samaritanischer Geschichtswerke. Hellenistische Studien 1–2; Breslau, 1874–75; pp. 35–82, 205–7, 219–23 (text). (The best single treatment of Demetrius, both for general matters and specific details of the fragments and their problems.)
 Gaster, M. "Demetrius und Seder Olam. Ein Problem der hellenistischen Literatur," Festschrift i anledning af Prof. David Simonsens 70-aarige fødselsdag. København, 1923; pp. 243–52.
 Gutman, Y. The Beginnings of Jewish-Hellenistic Literature (vol. 1). Jerusalem, 1963; vol. 1, pp. 132–47 [in modern Heb.].

<sup>21</sup> For example, Demetrius' identification of Zipporah with the "Cushite" woman of Num 12:1 (an "Ethiopian") in PrEv 9.29.3 may have influenced Ezekiel the Tragedian in PrEv 9.28.4. Sife on Num 12:1 makes the same identification, but in neither case can influence be proved. In fact, all, including Demetrius, may depend on the same midrashic tradition.

- Wacholder, B. Z. "Biblical chronology in the hellenistic world chronicles," HTR 61 (1968) 451–68. (Earlier version of materials treated in his Eupolemus; see below.)
- . "Demetrius," EncyJud 5, cols. 1490f. (A concise introductory essay.)
- . Eupolemus: A Study of Judaeo-Greek Literature. Cincinnati, 1974; pp. 98–104, 280–82. (Chapter 4 of this monograph, "Hellenistic Biblical Chronologies," places Demetrius in the context of chronological developments of his period; special attention is given to fragment 3.)
- . "How Long Did Abram Stay in Egypt? A Study in Hellenistic, Qumran, and Rabbinic Chronography," HUCA 35 (1964) 43–56.
- Walter, N. "Fragmente jüdisch-hellenistischer Exegeten: Aristobulos, Demetrios, Aristeas," JSHRZ 3.2 (1975) 280–92. (Introduction, translation, and nn. to the fragments.)
- . Untersuchungen zu den Fragmenten der jüdisch-hellenistischen Historiker (typescript). Halle, 1968; pp. 15–36, 141–55. (Non vidi.)

TRANSLATION

Fragment 1<sup>a</sup> (PrEv 9.19.4)

So much says Polyhistor; to which<sup>b</sup> he adds, after other [sentences],<sup>c</sup> saying:

But not long after,<sup>d</sup> God commanded Abraham to offer his son Isaac as a whole burnt offering to him. And when he led his son up to the mountain, he heaped up a pyre, and placed Isaac on it. But when he was about to sacrifice him, he was prevented by an angel, who provided him with a ram for the offering. And Abraham took his son down from the pyre and offered the ram.

Gen 22
Jub 18

Fragment 2 (PrEv 9.21.1–19)

1 Let us return again to Polyhistor:

Demetrius Concerning Jacob,<sup>a</sup> from the Same Writing of Polyhistor.

Demetrius says that Jacob was [77]<sup>b</sup> years old when he fled to Haran in Mesopotamia, having been sent away by his parents on account of the secret enmity of Esau towards his brother (which was due to the fact that his father had blessed him thinking that he was Esau), and in order that he might acquire a wife there.

Gen 27:41–28:5
Jub 27:1–12

2 Jacob, then, set out for Haran in Mesopotamia, having left his father Isaac, who was 137 years of age,<sup>a</sup> while he was himself 77<sup>b</sup> years old.

3 Then after spending 7 years there, he married two daughters of Laban, his maternal uncle, Leah and Rachel, when he was 84<sup>a</sup> years old. In seven more years, 12 children were born to him.<sup>b</sup> In the 10th month of the 8th year, Reuben [was born]; and in the 8th month of the 9th year, Simeon; and in the 6th month of the 10th year, Levi; and in the 4th month of the 11th year, Judah. And since Rachel did not bear, she became envious of her sister, and gave her own handmaid [Bilham

Gen 29:31–30:24
Jub 28; 44:11–34;
33:22

Fragment 1

a. This anonymous F. is frequently attributed to Demetrius (cf. Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 14f., 36). Although the language and style are not inconsistent with the genuine Fs., not only are there no real internal grounds favoring Demetrius, but n. d. below, indicates a remark at odds with his best-attested trait: chronological precision. While Demetrius' excerptor, Polyhistor, could himself have produced this F. from Gen 22 directly (cf. Walter, JSHRZ 3.2 [1975] 284), he could also have obtained it from yet another excerpted author/historian. In short, authorship by Demetrius is quite doubtful.

b. A F. of the work of Molon (Against the Jews) immediately precedes this F. and concerns Abraham, his two wives, and their children (cf. PrEv 9.19.4).

c. Eusebius has apparently abbreviated some of Polyhistor's work. The omitted material possibly contained an indication of the authorship of this F., as there is in F. 4 (PrEv 9.29.15).

d. Such an imprecise time indicator is out of character for a chronographer such as Demetrius.

Fragment 2

1 a. In this longest F., several emendations have been made where the MS tradition is clearly corrupt, rendering Demetrius self-inconsistent.

b. The MSS read "75" years old. The emendation to 77 is due to the fact that all of Demetrius' computations involving Jacob are based on his age as 77 when he fled Haran, as it is correctly given a few ll. later, in PrEv 9.21.2. The close proximity of these two differing ages for Jacob indicates the probable corruption of the first reference, perhaps due to scribal error.

2 a. Thus Isaac was 60 years old at Jacob's birth.

b. The correct age of Jacob in Demetrius' schema; cf. n. 1b, above.

3 a. This confirms Jacob's age as 77 when he fled to Haran (cf. n. 2b): 77 plus 7 years with Laban = 84.

b. Gen 29:31–30:24; cf. Jub 33:22; 44:11–34.

Although the biblical text does not explicitly mention that 7 years were taken for the birth of the 12 children, Demetrius has deduced this from the fact that the births are narrated after the first 7-year period and before the 6-year period. Rabbinic texts also specify 12 children in 7 years (cf. Seder Olam 2; GenR 70). The difficulty of begetting 12 children in 7 years is solved by allowing 10 months between births of children of the same mother, and simultaneous pregnancies for the various mothers. Jub 28:11–24 (with differing birth dates), and Josephus, Ant 1.303–8 do not specify the number of years taken to beget the 12 children (11 sons and 1 daughter; Benjamin is born later—cf. PrEv 9.21.10; Gen 30:25), but both have them born before the return to Palestine. For 10-month spacings in births, cf. Aristotle, Historia Animalium 7.584a 36; WisSol 7:2.

- to Jacob as a concubine, who bore Dan in the 4th month of the 11th year, and in the 2nd month of the 12th year, Naphtali. And Leah gave her own handmaid<sup>c</sup> Zilpah to Jacob as a concubine, at the same time as Bilhah<sup>d</sup> conceived Naphtali, in the 5th month of the 11th year, and he begot a son in the 2nd month of the 12th year, whom Leah named Gad; and of the same mother in the 12th month of the same year he begot another son, whom Leah named Asher.
- 4 And in return for the mandrake apples which Reubel<sup>a</sup> brought to Rachel, Leah again conceived, as did her handmaid Zilpah at the same time, in the 3rd month of the 12th year, and bore a son in the 12th month of the same year, and gave him the name Issachar. Gen 30:14
- 5 And again Leah bore another son in the 10th month of the 13th year, whose name was Zebulun; and in the 8th month of the 14th year, the same Leah bore a [daughter]<sup>a</sup> named [Dinah].<sup>a</sup> And at the same time as Leah [conceived]<sup>b</sup> a daughter, Dinah, Rachel also conceived in her womb, and in the 8th month of the 14th year she bore a son, who was named Joseph, so that in the 7 years spent with Laban, 12 children were born.
- 6 But when Jacob wanted to return to his father in Canaan, at Laban's request he stayed six more years, so that in all he stayed for twenty<sup>a</sup> years with Laban in Haran. Gen 31:38,41
- 7 And while he was going to Canaan, an angel<sup>a</sup> of the Lord wrestled with him, and touched the hollow of Jacob's thigh, and he became numb and went lame; on account of this the tendon of the thigh of cattle is not eaten. And the angel<sup>a</sup> said to him that from that time on he would no longer be called Jacob, but Israel. Gen 32:24-32
- 8 And he came to [Salem, a city]<sup>a</sup> of the land of Canaan, having with him his children, Reuben, 12 years and 2 months old; Simeon, 11 years and 4 months; Levi, 10 years and 6 months; Judah, 9 years and 8 months; [Dan, 9 years and 8 months;]<sup>b</sup> Naphtali, 8 years and 10 months; Gad, 8 years and 10 months; Asher, 8 years; Issachar, 8 years; Zebulun, 7 years and 2 months; Dinah, 6 years and 4 months; Joseph, 6 years and 4 months old.<sup>c</sup> Gen 33:18
- 9 Now Israel lived beside Hamor for 10 years;<sup>a</sup> and Israel's daughter, Dinah, was defiled by Shechem the son of Hamor, when she was 16 years and 4 months old. Gen 34
Jub 30:1-6
TLLevi 2:2; 5:3f.;
6:3f.

c. The insertion follows Freudenthal (Alexander Polyhistor, p. 56), who thus includes the account of the births of Dan and Naphtali according to Gen 30:1-8. The omission is a probable result of homoioteleuton. The emendation maintains Demetrius' 10-month birth schema, gives the correct mother to each son, properly identifies Rachel's handmaid, and follows the birth order of OT traditions, all of which Demetrius must have intended.

d. Bilhah and Zilpah are sisters, according to Jub 28:9 and TNaph 1:11f. No such relationship is indicated in Demetrius.

4 a. "Reubel" is a variant of Reuben (cf. PrEv 9.21.8 and 17). Josephus, Ant 1.304, as well as inscriptions, also attest "Reubel."

5 a. The MSS read "a son named Dan." Such a reading is probably the result of later editorial work designed to make a place for him, since he was missing in the unemended text of PrEv 9.21.3 (see above, n. 3c). Cf. Gen 30:21; Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, p. 54f.

b. In line with the emendations in PrEv 9.21.3, 5 (see nn. 3c and 5a), one should read "conceived" and not "bore" (MSS).

6 a. The tradition of the 20-year stay with Laban is derived from Gen 31:38, 41, and is consistent with the rest of Demetrius' chronology (7 years with Laban; 7 years of child-beggetting; the requested additional 6 years).

7 a. Gen 32:24-32; cf. Josephus, Ant 1.331-34. Like the MT, the LXX reads "man" (anthrōpos). Demetrius' "angel" (angelos) has only very weak support among LXX MSS.

8 a. The MSS read "to another city" (eis heteran polin), a phrase inexplicable from the text of Gen. This reading is possibly due to Alexander Polyhistor, who substituted heteran for allēn in the phrase eis allēn polin, which is probably a corruption of eissalēmpolin: "to the city of Salem"; hence the emendation. Cf. LXX Gen 33:18: eis Salēm polin.

b. The MSS do not mention Dan in this list (PrEv 9.21.8) at all, neither after Zebulun (following Gen 29:31-30:24), nor after Judah (following the corrupt MS list in PrEv 9.21.5; cf. 1Chr 2:1f.). "Dan, 9 years and 8 months" dropped out through haplography; the names and ages of Judah and Dan are almost identical (from Ioudan etōn ennea mēnōn oktō to Dan etōn ennea mēnōn oktō).

c. The ages of Jacob's children in this list (PrEv 9.21.8) may be calculated by subtracting the dates given for their births in PrEv 9.21.3-5 from the end of the 20-year stay in Haran.

9 a. The traditions in Gen 34 do not explicitly mention "10 years." Demetrius' OT datum is

And Israel's son Simeon, at 21 years and 4 months, and Levi, at 20 years and 6 months of age,<sup>b</sup> rushed out and slew both Hamor and his son Shechem, and all their males, because of the defilement of Dinah; and Jacob was 107<sup>c</sup> years old at the time.

- 10 To resume, when he had come to Luz [which is]<sup>a</sup> Bethel, God said that he was no longer to be called Jacob, but Israel.<sup>b</sup> From that place he came to Chaphratha,<sup>c</sup> and after that to Ephrath, which is Bethlehem, and there he fathered Benjamin; and Rachel died after giving birth to Benjamin,<sup>d</sup> and Jacob lived with her for 23<sup>e</sup> years. Gen 35:1–27
Jub 32:32–34
- 11 From there, Jacob came to Mamre, [which is]<sup>a</sup> Hebron, to his father, Isaac.<sup>b</sup> Joseph was then 17 years old,<sup>c</sup> and he was sold into Egypt, and remained in prison 13 years, so that he was then 30<sup>d</sup> years old. And Jacob was 120<sup>e</sup> years of age, one year before Isaac's death at 180<sup>f</sup> years of age. Jub 19:5
- 12 And Joseph, having interpreted the king's dreams, governed Egypt for 7 years, in which time he married Asenath, daughter of Pentephres<sup>a</sup> the priest of Heliopolis, and begot Manasseh and Ephraim;<sup>b</sup> and 2 years of famine followed.<sup>c</sup> Gen 41
- 13 But though Joseph had prospered for 9 years, he did not send for his father, because he was a shepherd, as were Joseph's brothers; and to the Egyptians it is disgraceful to be a shepherd. That this was the reason why he did not send for him, he himself had made clear. For when his relatives came, he told them that if they should be summoned by the king and asked what their occupation was, they should say that they were breeders of cattle.<sup>a</sup> Gen 46:31–34

Joseph's sale into Egypt at age 17 (Gen 37:2). Since he has both Joseph and Dinah as the same age (cf. PrEv 9.21.5, 8), he arbitrarily adds 10 years to allow for the events prior to the sale. According to Jub 30:2, Dinah is 12 years old at the time of the rape.

b. The ages of Dinah, Simeon, and Levi are reached by adding 10 years to their last-mentioned ages in PrEv 9.21.8.

c. Jacob's age is also consistent with Demetrius' chronological schema: 77 years old when he fled to Haran, plus 7 years there, plus 7 years of child-begetting, plus the additional 6 years requested by Laban, plus 10 years beside Hamor = 107.

10 a. The MSS read "Luz of Bethel," as if Luz is in the region or district of Bethel. LXX Gen 35:6 supports the emendation, as does LXX Josh 18:13 and Jub 27:19, 26 (but cf. MT Josh 16:1f.). See also n. 11a.

b. Following OT traditions, Demetrius also has a second version of Jacob's change of name, in which God is the actor/speaker (Gen 35:10); cf. PrEv 9.21.7 and Gen 32:24–28.

c. The word "chaphratha" (kbri) is here and in LXX Gen 35:16 only transliterated (LXX: "and when he drew near chabratha to come to the land of Ephrath"; MT: "and when they were still some distance from Ephrath"). The term is mistakenly understood as a place name by Demetrius (and possibly also the LXX), instead of an indication of distance as in the Heb.; cf. Jub 32:32. This circumstance speaks against Demetrius' being familiar with Heb. or the Heb. OT.

d. Gen 35:16–19; Jub 32:32–34.

e. That is, Jacob lived with Rachel for 7 years, during the births of the 12 children (PrEv 9.21.3), plus 6 years at Laban's request (PrEv 9.21.6), plus 10 years with Hamor (PrEv 9.21.9) = 23 years.

11 a. The MSS read "Mamre of Hebron," as if each name refers to a different entity. But Mamre = Hebron according to Gen 35:27; Jub 19:5. See n. 10a.

b. Gen 35:27.

c. Gen 37:2.

d. Gen 41:46.

e. In Demetrius' schema, 120 years = Joseph's 13-year imprisonment (PrEv 9.21.11), plus Jacob's age at the time of Dinah's rape, 107 (PrEv 9.21.9).

f. Gen 35:28f. Such an age also accords with Demetrius' calculations: Isaac is 137 when Jacob leaves for Haran (PrEv 9.21.2), plus Jacob's 7 years with Laban, 7 years of child-begetting, 6 additional years with Laban, 10 years with Hamor, 13 years of imprisonment = 180. On the other hand, it is not clear why the calculation is "one year before," and the Greek is similarly perplexing at this point.

12 a. Gen 41:45. The priest's name varies: LXX, Petephre; MT, Potiphera; TJos 12:1, Pentephri. Some LXX cursives parallel Demetrius' spelling; cf. Josephus, Ant 2.91.

b. Gen 41:50–52. Walter (JSHRZ 3.2 [1975] 287), suggests that a summary similar to Gen 41:45–49; 42:6, belongs here, as is in fact found in PrEv 9.23.4 amid a F. by Artapanus but which may have had its origins elsewhere. Is the source Demetrius?

c. Gen 45:6.

13 a. Demetrius' interest here is to explain the tradition and answer questions that may arise from it (in this case, why Joseph did not send for his family earlier and announce his rise to power in Egypt); cf. Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, p. 45.

- 14 And they were at a loss<sup>a</sup> as to why Joseph gave Benjamin at breakfast a portion 5 times<sup>b</sup> as much as theirs, since he was not able to consume so much meat.<sup>c</sup> He had done this because his father had had [six]<sup>d</sup> sons by Leah, and two by his mother, Rachel; therefore, he set five portions before Benjamin, and he himself took one;<sup>e</sup> accordingly they had [six]<sup>d</sup> portions, as many as the sons of Leah received. Gen 43:31–34
- 15 Similarly, while he gave two garments to each, to Benjamin he gave five, and three hundred pieces of gold;<sup>a</sup> and he sent [him] to his father likewise,<sup>b</sup> so that his mother's house might be equal to the other.
- 16 And they lived in the land of Canaan from the time when Abraham was chosen from among the gentiles and migrated to Canaan: Abraham for 25<sup>a</sup> years; Isaac, 60<sup>b</sup> years; Jacob, 130<sup>c</sup> years. All the years in the land of Canaan were [thus] 215.<sup>d</sup> Ex 12:40 (LXX)
- 17 And in the third year of the famine in Egypt, Jacob came into Egypt when he was 130<sup>a</sup> years old; Reuben, [44 years and 10 months];<sup>b</sup> Simeon, 44 years; Levi, 43 years [and 2 months];<sup>c</sup> Judah, 42 years and [4]<sup>d</sup> months; [Dan, 42 years and 4 months];<sup>e</sup> Naphtali, 41 years and [6]<sup>f</sup> months; Gad, 41 years and [6]<sup>g</sup> months; Asher, 40 years and 8 months; [Issachar, 40 years and 8 months];<sup>h</sup> Zebulun, [39 years and 10 months];<sup>i</sup> Dinah, 39 years; and Benjamin, [22]<sup>j</sup> years old.<sup>k</sup>
- 18 But Joseph (he<sup>a</sup> says) was already there in Egypt, [at age]<sup>b</sup> 39; and from Adam until Joseph's brothers came into Egypt there were 3624<sup>c</sup> years; and from the 14 a. Who is "at a loss," Joseph's brothers or readers of Gen? The Gk. is ambiguous. If the latter, "to be at a loss (as to why)" is language characteristic of aporiai kai luseis texts and is to be related to the "someone asked" in F. 5 (PrEv 9.29.16end).

b. Gen 43:34. Jub 42:23f. has Benjamin receive 7 times as much.

c. The remark that Benjamin could not eat all that was given to him has no OT basis.

d. The MSS read "7." The emendation to "6" is supported by Gen 35:23 (cf. Gen 46:8–15) and Demetrius himself (PrEv 9.21.3–5 and the last phrase here in 9.21.14), where Leah had only 6 sons. The occurrence of 7 in the MSS is possibly the result of corruption, since the abbreviations of these numbers in Gk. are so similar (so Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, p. 53f.). To maintain "7," as in Mras's text (which then emends "one" to "two" (see next n.), is not convincing. Leah had 7 children, but Dinah was not sent to Egypt.

e. That the MSS read "one" here may confirm the emendation discussed in the previous n.

15 a. Demetrius, like LXX Gen 45:22, reads "gold"; MT reads "silver."

b. Gen 45:22f.; cf. Jub 43:22. The Gk. here is ambiguous; it is not clear whether a similar gift was given or that Benjamin was sent in a similar fashion to his father.

16 a. This period of time is derived from Gen 12:4. Abraham is 75 years old when he leaves Haran and is 100 when Isaac is born (Gen 21:5).

b. Isaac's age when Jacob is born (Gen 25:26), i.e., 137 (= Isaac's age) minus 77 (= Jacob's age) = 60. Cf. PrEv 9.21.1–2.

c. Jacob's age when he enters Egypt (Gen 47:9; cf. PrEv 9.21.17).

d. LXX Ex 12:40 gives 430 years for the time spent in both Egypt and Canaan. MT Ex 12:40 (cf. Gen 15:13) has 430 years in Egypt only. Hence Demetrius is dependent on the LXX. Although 215 years is attested by Josephus, Ant 2.318, he exhibits divergent chronologies elsewhere: cf. Ant 1.154; 1.256f.; and 2.187f., yielding 230 years. See also n. 18e.

17 a. Cf. Gen 47:9. In Demetrius' schema, 130 could be confirmed by adding Jacob's last-mentioned age, 120 (cf. PrEv 9.21.11), 7 years of plenty, and 3 years of famine. The "third year" seems to be Demetrius' conclusion from Gen 45:6 and the events that follow.

b. The MSS read 45 years.

c. The MSS read 43 years.

d. The MSS read 2 months.

e. The MSS omit Dan and his age entirely, by haplography.

f. The MSS read 7 months.

g. The MSS read 3 months.

h. The MSS omit Issachar and his age by haplography.

i. The MSS read 40 years.

j. The MSS read 28 years.

k. The MSS for the list in PrEv 9.21.17 are problematic. Although the ages of Simeon, Asher, and Dinah are correct, some of the figures are corrupt, while others appear rounded off. The pattern of 10 months between births, seen in PrEv 9.21.3–5, 8, is not followed, and Dan and Issachar are again missing from the list, both by homoioteleuton because of the age of the preceding brother in each case. The emended and reconstructed list seen in the translation follows Demetrius' own established patterns and conforms to OT traditions, which he carefully followed; cf. Gen 46:8–27.

18 a. I.e., Demetrius.

b. The MSS erroneously read that Joseph was in Egypt for 39 years, which in context is impossible. It is, however, Joseph's age at the time (read etōn instead of etē); cf. Seder Olam 2.

c. The period of 3624 years agrees with the LXX system of calculation; the MT has 2238 years.

deluge until Jacob's coming into Egypt, 1360<sup>d</sup> years; and from the time when Abraham was chosen from among the gentiles and came from Haran into Canaan until Jacob and his family came into Egypt there were 215<sup>e</sup> years.

Ex 12:40 (LXX)

19 But Jacob came into Haran to Laban when he was [77]<sup>a</sup> years old, and begot Levi [. . .].<sup>b</sup> And Levi lived on in Egypt for 17 years, from the time of his coming from Canaan into Egypt, so that he was 60 years old when he begot [Kohath].<sup>c</sup> And in the same year in which [Kohath] was born, Jacob died in Egypt,<sup>d</sup> after he had blessed the sons of Joseph, when he himself was 147 years old, leaving Joseph at the age of 56 years. And Levi was 137 years old when he died. And when [Kohath] was 40 years old he begot Amram,<sup>e</sup> who was 14 years old when Joseph died in Egypt at the age of 110; and [Kohath] was 133 years old when he died. Amram took as his wife his uncle's daughter Jochebed,<sup>f</sup> and when he was 75 years old he begot Aaron [and Moses].<sup>g</sup> But when he begot Moses, Amram was 78 years old,<sup>h</sup> and Amram was 136<sup>i</sup> years old when he died.<sup>j</sup>

Gen 47:28

Ex 6:16

Gen 50:22,26
Ex 6:18

Fragment 3 (PrEv 9.29.1–3)

1 Demetrius described the slaying of the Egyptian and the quarrel with the man who disclosed the information about the one who died in the same way as the writer of the Sacred Book.<sup>a</sup> He says, however, that Moses fled into Midian and there

d. On the basis of the figures 3624 and 1360, the number of years from Adam to the flood is 2264 (3624 minus 1360). According to LXX Gen 5:1–6:1; 7:11, the number of years is 2262. The difference of 2 years may have resulted from the tradition in Gen 11:10. In Josephus, Ant 1.80–88, the period is also 2262 years, although Josephus uses several conflicting chronologies (e.g. Ant 8.61f.: 1662 years; cf. Ant 10.147f.). The MT has 1656 years; Jub has 1307 years. Cf. J. Skinner, Genesis (ICC; New York, 1925) p. 134. The period of 1360 years from the flood to Jacob's entry into Egypt corresponds to LXX Gen 11:1–26; 12:4, with 215 years from Abraham's entry into Canaan to Jacob's entry into Egypt; MT: 580 years. Cf. Josephus, Ant 1.140–47.

e. With 215 years, LXX Ex 12:40 and Demetrius agree. See above, n. 16d. Seder Olam 2–3 gives 220 years in Canaan, 210 in Egypt.

19 a. The MSS read "80." The emendation, as in PrEv 9.21.1f., brings this passage into harmony with Demetrius' own chronological computations; cf., above, F. 2, n. 1a.

b. Walter (JSHRZ 3.2 [1975] 289) suggests that Polyhistor has passed over a connecting link here in Demetrius, and therefore plausibly inserts: "at the age of 87; when Levi was 43 years old, Jacob, with his entire household, went to Egypt when he was 130 years old."

c. For Kohath, the LXX has Kaath, but here and elsewhere in PrEv 9.21.19 the MSS read "Klath," which is undoubtedly an inner Gk. corruption of Kaath, due to the similarity of the uncial alpha and lambda. For Kohath as the son of Levi, cf. LXX Gen 46:11; Ex 6:16; Num 3:17; 26:57; 1Chr 6:1; 6:18.

d. There is no OT tradition to the effect that Jacob died in Egypt in the year that Kohath was born (and the implication that Kohath was born in Egypt is contrary to Gen 46:11; cf. 46:8–27). Demetrius starts with two usable data: 215 years in Egypt, and Moses' age as 80 at the Exodus (the various death dates in Ex 6 are of no help to him). From these, Demetrius must invent the other dates to fill in the gaps, here with Kohath's and Amram's ages at the birth of their children.

e. For Kohath as the father of Amram, cf. Ex 6:18; Num 3:19; 26:59; 1Chr 6:3; 6:18. There is, however, no OT tradition for his age as 40.

f. Ex 6:20; Num 26:58f.; 1Chr 6:3.

g. Although the MSS read "and Moses" here, in view of the next phrase it should be omitted (so Jacoby and Mras). But the unemended text, to this point, is paralleled in Ex 6:20, without, however, mentioning the age of Amram at the time of the birth, only his age at death.

h. For the time between the births of Moses and Aaron, cf. Ex 7:7.

i. For Amram's age at death, MT Ex 6:20 reads 137 years old; LXX Ex 6:20 reads 132 years old. The Samaritan text and the Lucianic LXX have 136.

j. There is probably an omission at this point, where the excerpter ceased his work prematurely. The whole passage seems to be leading to the statement that would explain LXX Ex 12:40, namely, that Moses was 80 at the time of the Exodus from Egypt and that this completed the 215 (17 + 40 + 78 + 80)-year stay in Egypt. Hence the stay in Egypt and Canaan was a total of 430 years. Cf. Walter, JSHRZ 3.2 [1975] 289f., who follows Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 48–51.

Fragment 3

1 a. Cf. Ex 2:11–15; Jub 47:10. More than once, Demetrius merely gives a synopsis of biblical traditions, omitting many details and with no trace of apologetic.

married Zipporah the daughter of Jethro,<sup>b</sup> who was, as far as it may be conjectured<sup>c</sup> from the names of those born from Keturah,<sup>d</sup> of the stock of Abraham, a descendant of Jokshan, who was the son of Abraham by Keturah. And from Jokshan was born Dedan, and from Dedan, Reuel,<sup>e</sup> and from Reuel, Jethro and Hobab,<sup>f</sup> and from Jethro, Zipporah, whom Moses married.

Gen 25:1-4
(LXX); Ex 3:1

2 The generations also agree, for Moses was seventh<sup>a</sup> from Abraham, and Zipporah sixth.<sup>b</sup> For Isaac, from whom Moses descended, was already married when Abraham, at the age of 140, married Keturah, and begot by her a second son, [Jokshan].<sup>c</sup> But he begot Isaac when he was 100 years old;<sup>d</sup> so that [Jokshan],<sup>e</sup> from whom Zipporah derived her descent, was born 42 years later.

3 There is, therefore, no inconsistency in Moses and Zipporah having lived at the same time.<sup>a</sup> And they lived in the city of Midian,<sup>b</sup> which was named from one of the sons of Abraham.<sup>c</sup> For it (i.e., Scripture) says that Abraham sent his sons to the East<sup>d</sup> to settle there. And (it says that) for this reason also, Aaron and Miriam said at Hazeroth that Moses had married an Ethiopian woman.

Num 11:35-12:2
PrEv 9.28.4

Fragment 4 (PrEv 9.29.15)

And again after a little:<sup>a</sup>

From there<sup>b</sup> they went for three days, as Demetrius himself says, and the Sacred Book agrees with him.<sup>c</sup> Since he (i.e., Moses) found there<sup>d</sup> not sweet but bitter

Ex 15:22-27

b. With Demetrius, LXX Ex 2:16 attests Jethro as Moses' father-in-law; so also Ex 2:18 (codex Alexandrinus); Ex 3:1 and Judg 1:16 (codex Vaticanus); cf. Philo, Abr 36-40. But Ex 2:18 (codex Vaticanus) has Reuel (Gk.: Rague!); cf. Josephus, Ant 2.258, 264; 3.63; Ezekiel the Tragedian, PrEv 9.28.4; and Artapanus, PrEv 9.27.19. Judg 1:16 (codex Alexandrinus) and 4:11 have Hobab as Moses' father-in-law. The MT suffers from a similar confusion or conflation of traditions: Ex 2:18: Reuel; Ex 3:1: Jethro.

c. Demetrius' fidelity to OT traditions does not prevent him from speculating, where necessary, for his genealogical interests. As a whole, there is no OT parallel to the present genealogy (PrEv 9.29.1) in either the LXX or MT. It appears to be a conflation of LXX Gen 25:1-4 (cf. 1Chr 1:32) and Ex 3:1 (cf. Ex 4:18; 18:1f.).

d. Keturah is Abraham's (third) wife according to Gen 25:1-4, but his concubine according to 1Chr 1:32; cf. Jub 19:11.

e. To this point, the traditional basis of the genealogy is in LXX Gen 25:1-3; cf. 1Chr 1:32.

f. For Hobab as the son of Reuel there is only Num 10:29, but cf. Judg 1:16 and 4:11 as possibly inspiring this. There is no OT evidence for Jethro as Reuel's son, nor for Jethro and Hobab as brothers. Only Demetrius proposes these relationships.

2 a. Seventh according to Demetrius: Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Levi, Kaath, Amram, Moses; cf. F. 2, PrEv 9.21.16-19. OT traditions do not specifically number the generations, but that Moses is the 7th generation is readily deducible from Ex 6:6-20; Gen 25:19-26; 29:34; cf. Josephus, Ant 2.229; Philo, Vit Mos 1.2; NumR 12.6 (ed. Wilna, 1887); PR 5.18b (ed. Friedmann, 1880).

b. Abraham + Keturah, Jokshan, Dedan, Reuel, Jethro, Zipporah, a genealogy constructed by Demetrius from several fragmentary or partial OT genealogical traditions; cf., above, F. 3, nn. 1b, c, f.

c. The MSS read "Isaar" here. The emendation meets the expectations raised by Demetrius' own genealogy in PrEv 9.29.1, which follows Gen 25:2.

Freudenthal (Alexander Polyhistor, p. 206) suggests that Isaar is an error for Jokshan due to the nearby Isaac. The biblical traditions (Num 3:19; 16:1; Ex 6:18; 1Chr 6:2) that place an Izhar in the generations from Abraham to Moses are irrelevant in light of Gen 25:1-3.

d. Gen 21:5; 25:20. This advanced age, and being 140 when he married Keturah (PrEv 9.29.2), allows for the extra generation in Moses' descent from Abraham compared to Zipporah's.

3 a. This conclusion may reflect a question or objection to either the biblical traditions (cf. the features of aporiai kai luseis texts mentioned in the Introduction and F. 2, n. 14a), or to Demetrius' (or his school's) genealogical calculations.

b. Gen 25:1-3; Ex 18:1-12.

c. Gen 25:2, 4; Ex 2:15; 1Chr 1:32.

d. Gen 25:6; cf. Jub 20:12. For Demetrius, "East" included both Midian (Ex 2:15) and Ethiopia (Num 12:1; and the last sentence here in PrEv 9.29.3), cf.: also Ezekiel the Tragedian, PrEv 9.28.4.

Fragment 4

a. Although the F. that follows is usually ascribed to Demetrius, Polyhistor paraphrases Demetrius and Scripture here. How much of this F. is Demetrius and how much is Scripture is uncertain. The first sentence is undoubtedly from Demetrius, not simply because his name appears but also because of the chronological element "three days." As for the rest, there is nothing to indicate Demetrius: no dates, no genealogy, no aporiai kai luseis; rather, only a summary of Scripture, much like F. 1, which is also doubtful (cf. F. 1, n. a).

b. I.e., the Red Sea. The preceding F. in Polyhistor's collection is from Ezekiel the Tragedian, where he describes the crossing of the Red Sea (PrEv 9.29.14).

c. The details of Ex 15:22-27 are omitted. At the same time, this is another external indication of Demetrius' fidelity to OT traditions (cf. F. 3, PrEv 9.29.1).

d. I.e., Marah.

water, when God said he should cast some wood into the fountain, the water became sweet. And from there they came to Elim, where they found 12 springs of water and 70 palm trees.<sup>c</sup>

Fragment 5 (PrEv 9.29.16end)<sup>a</sup>

And after a short space:

Someone asked<sup>b</sup> how the Israelites had weapons,<sup>c</sup> since they came out unarmed.<sup>d</sup> Ex 14
For they said that after they had gone out on a three-day journey, and made sacrifice, they would return again. It appears, therefore, that those who had not been drowned made use of the others' arms.<sup>e</sup>

Fragment 6 (Clement of Alexandria, Strom 1.141.1f.)

But Demetrius says, in his [work] "On the Kings of Judaea,"<sup>a</sup> that the tribe of Judah and [those of] Benjamin and Levi were not taken captive by Sennacherib, but from this captivity<sup>b</sup> to the last [captivity], which Nebuchadnezzar effected out of Jerusalem,<sup>c</sup> [there were] 128 years and 6 months.<sup>d</sup> But from the time when the ten tribes of Samaria were taken captive to that of Ptolemy the 4th,<sup>e</sup> there were 573 years and 9 months. But from the time [of the captivity] of Jerusalem [to Ptolemy the 4th], there were 338 years [and] 3 months.<sup>f</sup>

e. The purpose of this F. for Demetrius is apparently the chronological element of three days. No purpose is evident for the Elim section if it is from Demetrius. But, for Polyhistor, the F. serves as an introduction to the excerpt from Ezekiel the Tragedian, which immediately follows and embellishes various elements of the story in question. See also Josephus, Ant 3.2–10; Philo, Vit Mos 1.188–90; Mekilta Wa-Yassa' 1.45b; TargYer 16.22.

Fragment 5

a. Although this F. is unattributed, it is consistent with what is otherwise known of Demetrius. It is a reasoned conjecture ("It appears . . .") to clarify obscure biblical traditions, and it further supports the idea that Demetrius represents an exegetical school (cf. Introduction). But what is surmise in Demetrius becomes fact for the Rabbis; cf. Mekilta Bashallah 5.32a–b; 6.33a–b; Mekilta R. Simon 53f.; Tehillim 22.180. See also Josephus, Ant 2.349.

b. "Someone asked" constitutes an exegetical formula consistent with aporiai kai luseis texts and gives some additional weight to the suggestion that Demetrius is the author; cf. F. 2, n. 14a, and the Introduction.

c. Possession of weapons by the Israelites is presupposed in Ex 17:8–13.

d. Demetrius suggests the arms were obtained from the drowned Egyptians, despite the statement in Ex 13:18 to the contrary. See Introduction, n. 15, on the issue of Demetrius' knowledge of Heb., which this F. raises.

e. On the arms of the drowned Egyptians, cf. Ex 14:23–30; WisSol 10:20; Josephus, Ant 2.349.

Fragment 6

a. For comments on the title of this work, see the Introduction, n. 3.

b. Apparently this is the captivity of Sennacherib, contrary to 2Kgs 17:3; 18:9, where it is Shalmaneser who takes Samaria into exile. Seven years later, Sennacherib destroys Jerusalem (but without taking Judah, Benjamin, or Levi into exile). However (cf. n. f, below), the final calculation shows that there must have been in Demetrius also a reference to, and dating of, the captivity of the ten tribes under Shalmaneser, as well as to the non-captivity under Sennacherib, even if Polyhistor ran the two together.

c. Cf. 2Kgs 25:1.

d. For this length of time, calculating the lengths of the reigns of the kings, cf. 2Kgs 18–25.

e. On the possibility that Ptolemy IV is a gloss, see the Introduction. Emendations to other Ptolemies have been unnecessarily suggested by some due to the problems in dating discussed in the following n.

f. Although this F. is grammatically comprehensible, it has probably suffered some loss or corruption in the process of excerpting or subsequent transmission, since it is chronologically inconsistent. Demetrius gives 128 years and 6 months as the time between the fall of Samaria and the fall of Jerusalem. This figure becomes 135 years and 6 months if one supplies, from 2Kgs 17:2–6; 18:9, the 7 years from the time of Shalmaneser's taking the 10 tribes into exile to the fall of Samaria (which may well have been present in Demetrius' original text; cf. Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 57–62; Walter, JSHRZ 3.2 [1975] 292). This same figure (135 years and 6 months) should then also result by subtracting the two other figures in Demetrius' text, namely, 338 years and 3 months (fall of Jerusalem to time of Ptolemy IV) from 573 years and 9 months (fall of Samaria to the time of Ptolemy IV). But this subtraction yields 235 years and 6 months. Thus, to achieve consistency and maintain Ptolemy IV as Demetrius' fixed point of reference (the most probable Ptolemy; cf. the Introduction), one would emend either the figure of 338 years and 3 months to 438 years and 3 months, or the figure of 573 years and 9 months to 473 years and 9 months. But one cannot confidently choose between these two options, since it is not known how long a time Demetrius allowed for the Persian period (either c. 135 or c. 235 years). Demetrius' solid points of reference were the accession of Ptolemy IV, in 221 B.C., and the sparse OT traditions for the period from the end of the exile to his own time. He may also have known the traditions behind Dan 9:24–27 for the length of the exile (cf. also Jer 25:11f.; 29:10; Zech 1:12; 7:5). For some further discussion, cf. Bickerman, in Christianity, Judaism and Other Greco-Roman Cults, vol. 3, pp. 80–84.

HISTORY

ARISTEAS THE EXEGETE

(prior to First Century B.C.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY R. DORAN

Aristeas the Exegete, in a work whose dimensions, contents, and character otherwise escape us, reconstructs a "Life of Job" from the Greek form of the narrative of the canonical Book of Job. Aristeas places Job among the patriarchs as a descendant of Esau, and describes how his possessions and health are taken from him, how his friends comfort him, and how and why God restores his fortune and health.

Texts

The work of Aristeas is known to us only thirdhand. Eusebius of Caesarea, in his Praeparatio Evangelica 9.25.1–4, cited Alexander Polyhistor's quotation of Aristeas' work. The critical text used as the basis for this translation is that of K. Mras.<sup>1</sup>

Relation to the canonical Book of Job

The synopsis of the story of the Book of Job made by Aristeas is clearly related to the Greek translation of the Book of Job. In both the Septuagint and Aristeas, Job lives in Ausitis (= Heb. text 'us); the possessions of Job are listed in the same order and language in both (LXX Job 1:3a; PrEv 9.25.2); the disasters that befall Job occur in the same order and often in the same language. The three friends who come to comfort Job are described as kings by Aristeas, as in the Septuagint but not in the Hebrew text of Job 2:11; they come to visit, eis episkepsin, a phrase that reflects the text of the Septuagint in Job 2:11, episkepsasthai auton, but which has no equivalent in the Hebrew text. The names of all four visitors echo the form of the names in the Septuagint. Aristeas, therefore, is drawing on this text of the Book of Job.

That Aristeas has knowledge of the complete Book of Job is indicated by the addition of Elihu to those who come to visit Job; in the canonical book, he does not appear until chapter 32.<sup>2</sup> Such a conclusion is important, since Aristeas' portrayal of Job differs radically from that of the present canonical Book of Job, which combines two views of Job; Job the Questioner and Job the Patient.<sup>3</sup> But Job the Questioner, the one who seeks to understand the problem of the suffering of a righteous man, is absent in Aristeas. He does not mention the dialogues on the problem of suffering but, rather, emphasizes Job's courageous endurance and God's subsequent astonishment. Job's visitors, Elihu among them, encourage Job in Aristeas' version; they do not condemn him for sinning. What Aristeas has taken from the canonical Book of Job is essentially the folk tale of the patient Job.<sup>4</sup>

Why would Aristeas have made such a précis of the Book of Job? The language that

<sup>1</sup> Mras, GCS 43,1.

<sup>2</sup> Many scholars see the section about Elihu as an interpolation; cf. M. Pope, Job (Anchor Bible 15; New York, 1973) pp. xxvii–xxviii.

<sup>3</sup> H. L. Ginsberg, "Job the Patient and Job the Impatient," Conservative Judaism 21/3 (1967) 12–28.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. S. N. Kramer, "Man and his God: A Sumerian Variation on the 'Job' Motif," Wisdom in Israel and in the Ancient Near East (eds. M. Noth and D. W. Thomas; VTSup 3; Leiden, 1955) pp. 170–82.

Aristeas uses is that found in Jewish accounts of persecution and martyrdom.<sup>5</sup> The amazement of onlookers at the constancy of Jews under trial for their religion is found in the descriptions of the deaths of Eleazar (4Mac 6:11) and of some of the seven brothers martyred under Antiochus IV (4Mac 9:26; 2Mac 7:12). Hecataeus of Abdera also states that the Jews deserve admiration because of their willingness to undergo any torture rather than transgress their ancestral laws (Josephus, Apion 1.190–93). Aristeas, then, by stating that God was amazed at Job's steadfastness, has transformed the tragedy and the problem of suffering in the canonical Book of Job into an edifying story of endurance for the sake of religion.

Relation to Jewish traditions

Aristeas places Job in the patriarchal period as a descendant of Esau. Jewish tradition also places Job in this period: the Biblical Antiquities of Pseudo-Philo has Job marry Dinah, the daughter of Jacob;<sup>6</sup> the Rabbis discuss Job's role in connection with that of Balaam in Numbers 24;<sup>7</sup> the Pseudo-Jonathan Targum on Gen 36:11 identifies Eliphaz, one of the sons of Esau, as the Eliphaz who came to visit Job.<sup>8</sup>

Three texts identify Job and the figure of Jobab in Genesis 36:33: Aristeas the Exegete, the Septuagint addition to the canonical Book of Job, and the Testament of Job. This last text, perhaps to be dated to the latter half of the first century B.C. and subtitled The Book of Job, Who Is Called Jobab,<sup>9</sup> explains that Jobab was his name when he dwelt near an idol. The change in name here seems to signify the change from idol worshiper to true believer (TJob 2:1–2). In this document, Job's first wife was called Sitis, and his second wife was named Dinah. Here, the Testament of Job is similar to the tradition found in Pseudo-Philo's Biblical Antiquities. According to this tradition, Job would belong to the generation after Jacob and Esau.

The closest parallel to the genealogical traditions in Aristeas the Exegete is found in the Septuagint addition to Job. This text, present in every Greek manuscript, was known to Origen.<sup>10</sup> Besides the identification of Job and Jobab, the genealogy in the Septuagint addition and in Aristeas depends on a special reading of the Greek, which turned Bozrah, the city, into Bassara, the mother of Jobab. One major difference between the genealogies is that, in Aristeas, Job is the son of Esau; in the Septuagint addition, he is fifth in line from Abraham through Esau, Reuel, and Zerah.<sup>11</sup> However, as soon as one has Bozrah as the mother of Job, one is dependent on a tradition that has Zerah as the father of Job, as at Genesis 36:33. The best suggestion is that the text of Aristeas has suffered accidental haplography: Esau married [Bassemat and had Reuel. Reuel married and had Zerah. Zerah married] Bassara and had Job.<sup>12</sup> Without some such textual emendation, it is difficult to see how the mother of Job can be derived from Bozrah of Genesis 36:33, and the father be Esau.

Besides the same genealogical tradition in both Aristeas and the Septuagint addition, the same geographical location is given in both; however, linguistic similarity in place descriptions is not enough to posit dependence between texts.

The similarities between the Septuagint addition and Aristeas are impressive. What is the probable relationship? Freudenthal and Walter have argued that the Septuagint addition is <sup>5</sup> Similar language is used also in contexts of endurance of suffering as part of one's philosophical creed. Cf. the report of Aelian on the death of Calanus, the Indian gymnosophist (Varia historia 5.6). The way Calanus died was even to be marveled at (agasthénai); Alexander the Great admired Calanus and his fortitude in undergoing death. For a fuller report of the contempt of the Gymnosophists for pain and suffering, see Arrian, Anabasis 7.2f.

<sup>6</sup> LAB 8.8.

<sup>7</sup> Simai in b.Sot 11a.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. those discussions of the Rabbis in b.BB 15a which place Job in the patriarchal period. It is interesting that texts of the Book of Job found at Qumran were written in paleo-Heb. script, perhaps a sign that the sectaries placed Job in the patriarchal period. See F. M. Cross, The Ancient Library of Qumran (London, 1958) p. 33.

<sup>9</sup> The Testament of Job, ed. R. A. Kraft. (SBL T&T 5; Missoula, Mont., 1974).

<sup>10</sup> Ad Africanum, 3.

<sup>11</sup> The Zare of Gen 36:17 is equated with the Zara of Gen 36:33.

<sup>12</sup> J. Strugnell, in a private communication. Such an emendation lends support to the opinion of Freudenthal and Walter that the LXX addition better represents the underlying biblical exegesis than the present text of Alexander Polyhistor/Eusebius. (Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 140f.; Walter, JSHRZ 3.2 [1975] 293f.)

dependent on Aristeas.<sup>13</sup> P. Wendland claimed that Aristeas is dependent on the Septuagint addition.<sup>14</sup> However, neither solution is satisfactory. Perhaps both Aristeas and the Septuagint addition share a common tradition. A source for this common tradition may be the "Syriac book" which the Septuagint addition claims that it is quoting.<sup>15</sup>

Relation to the Letter of Aristeas

Within this volume is the Letter of Aristeas, which describes the circumstances surrounding the translation of the Hebrew Scriptures into Greek. This tale of the seventy translators was surely written by an Alexandrian Jew, presenting himself as a gentile functionary of the Ptolemaic court.<sup>16</sup> Is there any connection between the author of this work and the Aristeas who wrote the remarks on Job? In the Letter of Aristeas 6, the author remarks that "on a former occasion, I sent you a record of the facts which I thought worth relating about the Jewish race." Is the author of the Letter of Aristeas here referring to the work of the Aristeas who wrote on Job? Is he claiming identity with him?

B. Motzo is the main proponent of the view that the two works were authored by the same person,<sup>17</sup> but Tramontano has rightly shown that Motzo's reasoning is very farfetched.<sup>18</sup> From Freudenthal on, most scholars have denied that the same person authored the two works. Denis, for example, holds that the authors of the two works have nothing in common except the name; Denis emphatically states that the exegetical work of the historian of Job could not have been passed off as the work of a non-Jew, as the Letter of Aristeas was.<sup>19</sup> However, the issue remains open. B. Z. Wacholder is right to object that the two different genres demanded two different styles,<sup>20</sup> even were the author the same.

Cultural significance

Aristeas the Exegete has depicted Job as the silent sufferer. This view of Job is too unspecified to allow one to detect whether Aristeas has influenced later writings. For example, one cannot say that James 5:11, where Job is mentioned as a model of steadfastness, was influenced by Aristeas. Aristeas is certainly in line with the later Rabbis, such as Abaya and R. Joḥanan, who held Job in high esteem; he is likewise distinguished from such others as Raba, who states that Job was a sinner, and those who linked Job with Balaam.<sup>21</sup> The context of discussion for Aristeas, however, is quite different from that of the Rabbis: They argue from the debates and dialogues in the Book of Job; Aristeas overlooks these debates.

Date and provenance

The work of Aristeas the Exegete is prior to that of Alexander Polyhistor, who flourished around 50 B.C. No more precise dating is possible, unless one accepts that the Letter of Aristeas 6 is referring to Aristeas' "Concerning the Jews." Then Aristeas is prior to the Letter of Aristeas. As to where the work was produced, the use of the Septuagint Job indicates a Greek-speaking area; beyond this, it is impossible to specify.

Original language

It was shown above, in discussing the relation of Aristeas to the canonical Book of Job, that Aristeas uses the Septuagint translation. It was also noted that the name of Job's mother, Bassara, comes from a special reading of the Greek. The original language of Aristeas' work, therefore, was certainly Greek.

<sup>13</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 140f.; Walter, JSHRZ 3.2 (1975) 293f.

<sup>14</sup> Wendland, JE 2, p. 92.

<sup>15</sup> Does "Syriac" here refer to a language or to an area? Walter (JSHRZ 3.2 [1975] 294) holds that this phrase refers to what precedes, i.e. to the whole Book of Job, but this is grammatically unlikely.

<sup>16</sup> M. Hadas, Aristeas to Philocrates (New York, 1951) pp. 3-9.

<sup>17</sup> As reported by R. Tramontano, La Lettera di Aristeo a Filocrate (Naples, 1931) p. 44*.

<sup>18</sup> Tramontano, La Lettera, pp. 44*-46*.

<sup>19</sup> Denis, Introduction, p. 259.

<sup>20</sup> B. Z. Wacholder, Eupolemus: A Study of Judaeo-Greek Literature (Cincinnati, Ohio, 1974) p. 5, n. 23.

<sup>21</sup> See b.BB 14b-16b; b.Sot 11a.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 80f.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 258–59.

Freudenthal, J. Alexander Polyhistor und die von ihm erhaltenen Reste jüdischer und samaritanischer Geschichtswerke. Hellenistische Studien 1–2; Breslau, 1874–75.

Wacholder, B. Z. "Aristeas," EncyJud 3, cols. 438f.

Walter, N. "Aristeas," Unterweisung in lehrhafter Form. JSHRZ 3.2 (1975) 293–96.

Wendland, P. "Aristeas," JE 2, p. 92. Vol. 2, p. 92.

PRAEPARATIO EVANGELICA 9.25.1–4

1 In his “Concerning the Jews,” Aristean narrates that Esau married [Basemat and had Reuel. Reuel married, and had Zerah. Zerah married] Bassara,<sup>a</sup> and fathered in Edom a son, Job. Job dwelt in Ausitis on the borders of Idumea and 2 Arabia. He was a righteous man and rich in possessions. For he owned 7,000 sheep, 3,000 camels, 500 yoke of oxen, 500 she-asses at pasture, and he also had 3 much arable land. •This Job was formerly called Jobab. God tested him to endure,<sup>b</sup> and brought great misfortune on him. First, his asses and oxen were lost because of robbers; then, both the sheep and the shepherds were burnt up by fire which fell from heaven. Not long after this, the camels too were driven away by robbers. Then his children died when their house collapsed on them; on the same day, his 4 body too was covered with ulcers. •While he was in such dire straits, Eliphaz the king of the Taimanites, Baldad the ruler of the Sauchites, and Sophar the king of the Minneans came to visit him. Elihu, the Buzite,<sup>c</sup> the son of Barachiel, also came. While he was being comforted, he said that even without comfort he would be steadfast in piety, even in such trying circumstances.<sup>d</sup> God, amazed at his high courage, freed him from his illness and made him master of many possessions.

Gen 36:10
Gen 36:13
Job 1:1
Job 1:3
Gen 36:33
Job 1:2
Job 1:14f.
Job 1:16
Job 1:17
Job 1:18f.
Job 2:7,11
Job 32:2
Job 42:10–17

a. See the Introduction, “Relation to Jewish traditions.”

b. Walter (JSHRZ 3.2 [1975] 295) has overstated the grammatical complexity.

c. The MSS of Eusebius Zōbitēs, a metathesis for the Bouzitēs of LXX Job 32:2.

d. As the text now stands, en tē eusebeia is grammatically linked to tois deinois by a te . . . kai construction, which is usually connective. However, the usual meaning of tois deinois is “in difficult circumstances,” and such a meaning is in contrast to an attitude of reverence. The above translation has maintained the contrast between “piety” and “trying circumstances.” Alternatively, one could suggest that the basic meaning of the main verb, emmenein, “to remain,” would be nuanced by the phrases that follow: with “in piety,” the verb would mean “be steadfast,” i.e. in piety; with “in difficult circumstances,” it would mean “submit to.” The translation would then be: “. . . he would be steadfast in reverence, and he would submit to such trying circumstances.”

SEPTUAGINT ADDITION TO THE BOOK OF JOB

<sup>a</sup> It is written that he will rise again with those whom the Lord raises up.

42:17

<sup>b</sup> This is translated from the Syriac book: Dwelling in the land of Ausitis on the borders of Idumea and Arabia, he was first named Jobab.

Job 1:1
Gen 36:33

<sup>c</sup> He married an Arabian woman and fathered a son named Ennon. His father was Zerah, a grandson of Esau, and his mother was Bosorra; thus he was fifth in line from Abraham.

Gen 36:33

<sup>d</sup> These are the kings who ruled in Edom, which was the region which he also ruled. First was Balak, son of Beor, and the name of his city was Dennaba. After Balak was Jobab, called Job. After him was Hasom, a ruler from the region of Taiman. After him was Hadad, the son of Barad; he repulsed Midian in the plain of Moab, and the name of his city was Getthaim.

Gen 36:31–35

<sup>e</sup> The friends who came to him: Eliphaz of the sons of Esau, the king of Taiman; Baldad, the ruler of the Sauchites; Sophar, the king of the Minneans.

Job 2:11

HISTORY

EUPOLEMUS

(prior to First Century B.C.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY F. FALLON

Eupolemus was a Jewish historian who composed a work, probably entitled On the Kings in Judea,<sup>1</sup> of which only five fragments survive. In the first fragment, Eupolemus identifies Moses as the first sage, who invented the alphabet and wrote laws. In a second, lengthy fragment, Eupolemus traces Israelite history from Moses to Solomon and discusses in detail the building of the Temple in Jerusalem. The third fragment completes the account of Solomon. Then, in the fourth fragment, Eupolemus treats King Jonachim (see n. 39a), during whose reign Jeremiah prophesied and Jerusalem was captured by the Babylonians. In the final fragment, Eupolemus tabulates the number of years from Adam and the Exodus to the fifth year of the reign of Demetrius, the Seleucid king (158/7 B.C.).

Transmission

The preservation of these fragments is due mainly to the work of Alexander Polyhistor, the Greek historian who flourished in the mid first century B.C. It seems clear that Alexander was faithful to the sources he used and in the main merely transposed them into indirect discourse.<sup>2</sup>

Although Alexander Polyhistor's On the Jews is no longer extant in its entirety, excerpts have fortunately survived in Clement of Alexandria (c. A.D. 150–216) and Eusebius of Caesarea (c. A.D. 260–340). In his Stromata, Clement has preserved some of the material; however, he has summarized the contents, rather than provided an exact quotation. On the contrary, Eusebius in his Praeparatio Evangelica (PrEv) 9.25–39 has cited his source literally and thus provides the text for our translation of the first four fragments.<sup>3</sup>

The final fragment is preserved only in Clement. Although previous scholars had argued that this fragment, too, was transmitted through Alexander Polyhistor to Clement,<sup>4</sup> recent studies by N. Walter and B. Z. Wacholder have suggested that this fragment may have been transmitted through another source to Clement.<sup>5</sup> Walter analyzes the larger context in Clement, i.e. Stromata 1.141.1–4. This passage contains a summary of the computations by Demetrius the chronographer (third century B.C.) of the number of years from the falls of the northern and southern kingdoms to his own time. The passage also contains a

<sup>1</sup> The title is given as such in Clement of Alexandria, Strom 1.153.4, where Clement is also quoting Eupolemus (F. 1) from Alexander Polyhistor. Eusebius, quoting F. 2 in PrEv 9.30.1, however, gives the title as On the Prophecy of Elia, which must be erroneous since it does not accord with the contents. See Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, p. 105, n. 9.

<sup>2</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 17–34.

<sup>3</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 3–14. The Fs. are conveniently collected in Jacoby, FGH, vol. 3C, pp. 671–78. The text from Jacoby is used, but the F. on Jeremiah is here numbered as F. 4 (Jacoby F. 5) and the chronological F. as F. 5 (Jacoby F. 4).

<sup>4</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 14–16; cf. E. Schürer, History, div. 2, vol. 3, pp. 203–6.

<sup>5</sup> N. Walter, "Zur Überlieferung einiger Reste früher jüdisch-hellenistischer Literatur bei Josephus, Clemens und Eusebius," Studia Patristica 7 (TU 92; Berlin, 1966), pp. 314–20, and "Eupolemus," JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 94. B. Z. Wacholder, Eupolemus: A Study of Judaeo-Greek Literature (Cincinnati, Ohio, 1974) pp. 40–52, 111–14.

reference to a certain Philo, who is said to disagree with Demetrius in the matter of the kings of the Judeans. Lastly, the passage contains the fragment of Eupolemus, which in addition to its mention of Demetrius the Seleucid king (158/7 B.C.) also has an updated reference to the Roman consuls Gnaeus Dometianus and G. Asinius (40 B.C.). In his analysis, Walter argues that this passage could not have come from Alexander Polyhistor, since Alexander's floruit was in the sixties B.C. and since the final form of the fragment of Eupolemus must come from 40 B.C. He further analyzes the passage in Josephus (Apion 1.23, §218) in which Demetrius, Philo, and Eupolemus are also mentioned as Greek authors in this same order. He then argues that Josephus did not derive this notice from Alexander Polyhistor, since otherwise Josephus would not have mistaken them for Greek authors. Thus, according to Walter, Josephus also must have taken this reference from another source. Walter further argues that Clement has not here drawn upon Josephus, since the former is more extensive than the latter. He suggests that they inherited a common source; possibly this source was compiled by a hellenistic Jew who put in his book the lists of the Jewish kings according to Demetrius, Philo, and Eupolemus and compared them with the biblical account.<sup>6</sup>

Wacholder agrees basically with Walter that the passage in Clement of Alexandria is from a source other than the composition of Alexander Polyhistor and suggests Ptolemy of Mendes (first century B.C.) as the author of this source. In his discussion, however, Wacholder revises the dates for Alexander Polyhistor and extends the period of his activity from about 80 to 35 B.C.

If Wacholder is correct in his revised dating for Alexander Polyhistor, then the main support for Walter's hypothesis disappears and thereby casts doubt upon the hypothesis as a whole. The simpler theory still remains that Josephus and Clement independently drew upon Alexander Polyhistor's On the Jews—perhaps on his chronological summary—for their reference and that the updated reference to the Roman consuls comes from him.

Provenance

It is probable that all five fragments of Eupolemus derive from the single work On the Kings in Judea. In the fragments and perhaps in the work itself, Eupolemus passes very quickly over the early period of Jewish history from Moses through the period of the judges. The kings from David to the exile are then treated more extensively. Because of the title, it seems likely that the work concluded with the fall of the Judean monarchy, in which case the final fragment must be considered as simply a chronological appendage. However, it is possible, if the chronographical note be considered an integral part of the work, that Eupolemus continued his treatise into his own, Seleucid era.<sup>7</sup>

For his material, Eupolemus has drawn especially upon the biblical accounts of the construction of the Temple in 1 Kings 5–8 and 2 Chronicles 2–5. In his work, he has relied more closely upon Chronicles than Kings. This preference is indicated by the agreement in wording between the blessing in Praeparatio Evangelica 9.34 and the Septuagint of 2 Chronicles 2:11 and by Eupolemus' use of incidents only recounted in Chronicles, e.g. that the place for the altar was pointed out by an angel (1Chr 21:18) and that David could not build the Temple because of his involvement in warfare (1Chr 28:3).

It is also clear that Eupolemus used the Septuagint for his work and thus that his book was originally composed in Greek. This conclusion is shown to be correct by the agreement in wording with the Septuagint of 2 Chronicles 2:11, mentioned above, by the use of proper names in their Septuagint form (e.g. Jēsous, Nauē, Samouēl), and by the use of technical terms that are found in the Septuagint for the Temple vessels (e.g. skēnē tou martyriou, loutēr chalkous). In addition, Eupolemus has also used the Hebrew text, as his rendering of the name Hiram indicates. That name appears as Souron, which differs from the Septuagint Chiram and derives from the Hebrew text's hūrām. Eupolemus' use of the Hebrew text is further indicated by his translation of terms that the Septuagint has merely transliterated (e.g. LXX 2Chr 3:16 serserōth: Eupolemus halusidōtoi).<sup>8</sup>

<sup>6</sup> Further, Walter notes the poem of Philo the Elder in Alexander Polyhistor. It is a hellenistic epic poem in which one would normally not expect lists and dates of kings. However, in the passage in the Strom. Clement contrasts the prose chronographic accounts of Demetrius with the disagreements in Philo and Eupolemus. Eupolemus then clearly has a chronographic account. Thus, he concludes that this Philo is not the same as the epic poet of a lost prose historical work.

<sup>7</sup> Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 6.

In the final fragment, the time from Adam and Moses is tabulated up to the fifth year of the reign of Demetrius. Intended is the Seleucid king Demetrius I Soter (162–150 B.C.), whose fifth regnal year is thus 158/7 B.C. The fragment then correlates the fifth regnal year of Demetrius with the twelfth year of the reign of Ptolemy. Intended here is Ptolemy VII Euergetes II Physcon, who began his rule in 170 B.C.<sup>9</sup> If the work was composed in 158/7 B.C., this reference to Ptolemy must be a later addition for the following reasons.<sup>10</sup> Ptolemy VII began his rule as coregent with his brother but was sent shortly thereafter to Cyrene to rule over that area. In 145 B.C. he returned to rule over all of Egypt. Only after his return to power were his regnal years, including the intervening years, computed from 170 B.C. His twelfth year would thus be 159/8 B.C., which does not coincide precisely with the fifth year of Demetrius. It had previously been suggested by scholars that Demetrius II Nicator (145–139 B.C.) was the intended ruler. That suggestion, however, is impossible since there is no Ptolemy whose twelfth year of reign will match the fifth year of Demetrius II.

Presumably, therefore, the date of composition is 158/7 B.C. Since the author has dated his work by reference to the Seleucids rather than the Ptolemies and since the author has used the Hebrew as well as the Septuagint texts, the place of composition was probably Palestine rather than Egypt. Further, a Palestinian provenance makes more likely the hypothesis that the author, Eupolemus, is to be identified with the ambassador of Judas Maccabeus to Rome, who is mentioned in 1 Maccabees 8:17f. and 2 Maccabees 4:11. The time and place are appropriate, and a member of a priestly family who functioned as an ambassador would be acquainted with Greek.<sup>11</sup>

Importance

If the identification between the author and the ambassador be accepted, then the fragments of Eupolemus come from one who was close to the Maccabees and who was yet conversant in Greek. Possibly he is directly or indirectly behind 1 Maccabees 8. In any case, he is interested in portraying the glory of the Jewish people. In contrast with the biblical account, he presents Hiram, the king not only of Tyre but also of Sidon and Phoenicia, as subject to David, and the king of Israel as on a level of parity with the Pharaoh of Egypt. In addition, Eupolemus has magnified the splendor of the Temple in terms of its adornment and cost. Because of the limited nature of the fragments, only a few theological features of the work are clearly visible, i.e. the Temple and its cult and also the significance of the Law.<sup>12</sup> Eupolemus survives, then, as the oldest hellenistic Jewish historian, whose writing served to present the Greek reading public with a short history of the Jewish people. The work probably served inner Jewish needs in the period after Antiochus IV as much as, if not more than, any distinctive missionary or apologetic purpose.<sup>13</sup>

<sup>8</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 106–14, 119–20; J. Giblet, "Eupolème et L'Historiographie du Judaïsme Hellenistique," ETL 39 (1963) 547f.

<sup>9</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 124f.

<sup>10</sup> A. von Gutschmid, Kleine Schriften (Leipzig, 1890) pp. 191–94; Wacholder, Eupolemus, pp. 41–43.

<sup>11</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, p. 127; Schürer, History, p. 204; Wacholder, Eupolemus, pp. 1–22.

<sup>12</sup> P. Dalbert, Die Theologie der hellenistisch-jüdischen Missionsliteratur unter Ausschluss von Philo und Josephus (Hamburg-Volksdorf, 1954), pp. 36–42). Dalbert, however, underestimates the significance of the Law for Eupolemus; see Wacholder, Eupolemus, pp. 83–85.

<sup>13</sup> See V. Tcherikover, "Jewish Apologetic Literature Reconsidered," Eos 48 (1953) 169–93; N. Walter, "Frühe Begegnungen zwischen jüdischem Glauben und hellenistischer Bildung in Alexandrien," Neue Beiträge zur Geschichte der Alten Welt (Berlin, 1964) pp. 367–78; M. Hengel, "Anonymität, Pseudepigraphie, und Literarische Fälschung in der jüdisch-hellenistischen Literatur," Pseudepigrapha I (Entretiens sur l'Antiquité Classique 18; Vandoeuvres-Genève, 1972) pp. 229–329.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 107f.
- Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 53–55.
- Denis, Introduction, pp. 252–55.
- Clemens Alexandrinus. Werke, eds. Stählin, O. and Fruechtel, L. GCS 52(15); Berlin, 1960.<sup>3</sup> (The critical edition for Clement.)
- Dalbert, P. Die Theologie der hellenistisch-jüdischen Missionsliteratur unter Ausschluss von Philo und Josephus. Hamburg-Volksdorf, 1954. (Adds to the study of Freudenthal a specific focus on the theology present in the fragments.)
- Denis, A.-M. Fragmenta pseudepigraphorum quae supersunt graeca. PVTG 3; Leiden, 1970; pp. 179–86. (A convenient collection of the fragments.)
- Eusebius. Werke; Band 8: Die Praeparatio Evangelica, ed. K. Mras. GCS 43.1–2; Berlin, 1954–56. (The critical edition for Eusebius.)
- Freudenthal, J. Hellenistische Studien 1–2: Alexander Polyhistor. Breslau, 1875. (Still the classic study of Eupolemus, which demonstrates that Eupolemus was a Jewish-hellenistic historian.)
- Giblet, J. “Eupolème et L’Historiographie du Judaïsme Hellénistique,” ETL 39 (1963) 539–54. (A study that summarizes the discussion up to that point.)
- Gutmann, J. The Beginnings of Jewish-Hellenistic Literature. Jerusalem, 1958. (Hebrew) (Incorporates the more recent studies.)
- Gutschmid, A. von. Kleine Schriften. Leipzig, 1890. (Important study of the chronological references in the final fragment.)
- Jacoby, F. Die Fragmente der Griechischen Historiker. Leiden, 1958; vol. 3C, part 2, no. 723, pp. 671–78. (Convenient, critical collection of the fragments of Eupolemus.)
- Schürer, E. History.<sup>2</sup> Div. 2, vol. 3, pp. 203–6. (Draws upon Freudenthal but also includes references to the further discussion at the end of the nineteenth century.)
- Wacholder, B. Z. Eupolemus: A Study of Judaeo-Greek Literature. Cincinnati, Ohio, 1974. (This is the first monograph devoted to Eupolemus since the time of Freudenthal and the only detailed commentary. It represents a significant contribution to the study of Eupolemus.)
- Walter, N. “Eupolemus,” JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 93–108. (An introduction and annotated translation, which incorporates recent discussion and the author’s own significant research on Eupolemus.)

TRANSLATION

Fragment 1 Alexander Polyhistor, "On the Jews," in Eusebius, "Praeparatio Evangelica" 9.26.1:

26 And concerning Moses the same author (Alexander Polyhistor) further adds many things.<sup>a</sup> Of these it is worthwhile to hear the following: "And Eupolemus<sup>b</sup> says that Moses<sup>c</sup> was the first wise man,<sup>d</sup> that he first taught the alphabet<sup>e</sup> to the Jews, and the Phoenicians received it from the Jews, and the Greeks received it from the Phoenicians, and that Moses first wrote laws<sup>f</sup> for the Jews."

Fragment 2 Alexander Polyhistor, "On the Jews," in Eusebius, "Praeparatio Evangelica" 9.30.1–34.18:

30 And Eupolemus<sup>a</sup> says in a certain "On the Prophecy of Elijah"<sup>b</sup> that Moses

Fragment 1

26 a. The testimonia to Eupolemus are as follows. 1Mac 8:17f.: "Having chosen Eupolemus son of John, of the family of Accos, and Jason son of Eleazar, Judas sent them to Rome to make a treaty of friendship and alliance with these people, who would surely lift the yoke from their shoulders once they understood that the kingdom of the Greeks was reducing Israel to slavery" (cf. 2Mac 4:11 and Josephus, War 12.10.6, §415–16). Eusebius, HE 6.13.7: "And he mentions Tatian's book . . . and moreover Philo and Aristobulus and Josephus and Demetrius and Eupolemus, Jewish writers, in that they would show, all of them, in writing, that Moses and the Jewish race went back further in their origins than the Greeks" (tr. J. Oulton; LCL; Cambridge, Mass., 1973). Josephus, Apion 1.23, §218 (cf. Eusebius, PrEv 9.42.3): "Demetrius Phalereus, the elder Philo, and Eupolemus are exceptional in their approximation to the truth, and their errors may be excused on the ground of their inability to follow quite accurately the meaning of our records" (tr. H. St. J. Thackeray; LCL; Cambridge, Mass., 1966).

b. This fragment is also preserved in Clement of Alexandria, Strom 1.153.4, where the book of Eupolemus is entitled: On the Kings in Judea. Clement writes as follows: "Eupolemus in 'On the Kings in Judaea' says that Moses was the first wise man and that he first taught grammar to the Jews and that from the Jews the Phoenicians (received it)."

c. In contrast with those who acclaim Enoch (e.g. Jub 4:17–20) or Abraham (e.g. Ps-Eup) as the discoverer of writing or astronomy, Eupolemus chooses Moses. Perhaps the choice of Moses as inventor of writing is prompted by the desire to emphasize the nation, as the title of Eupolemus' work would suggest. For the hypothesis, which is difficult to establish, that Eupolemus is here dependent upon Hecataeus of Abdera, see Wacholder, Eupolemus, pp. 85–96; for Moses in pagan literature, see J. Gager, Moses in Graeco-Roman Paganism (SBLMS: Missoula, Mont., 1972).

d. Eupolemus asserts that Moses was the first sage. In making this assertion Eupolemus uses the typical theme of the "first inventor" of hellenistic history writing. M. Hengel states that the intention of this theme was "to demonstrate the great age and at the same time the superiority of the national wisdom over against that of Greece": Judaism and Hellenism (Philadelphia, 1974) p. 129; cf. also pp. 90–92, 95.

e. Rather than grammata (alphabet), Clement of Alexandria has the variant grammatikē (script or grammar). Contrary to claims in antiquity for Egypt, Phoenicia (e.g. Herodotus 5.58), or Greece as the origin of the alphabet, Eupolemus proclaims Moses as the originator of the alphabet and thus the founder of civilization. He thereby also establishes the antiquity of the Jewish race and the superiority of its national wisdom. On the origin of the alphabet, see now P. Kyle McCarter, The Antiquity of the Greek Alphabet and the Early Phoenician Scripts (Harvard Semitic Monographs 9; Missoula, Mont., 1975).

f. By the term "laws" the Torah is intended. The plural may be an accommodation to Gk. ideas. That Moses wrote laws is to be taken in conjunction with the claim that he is the first wise man and the teacher of the alphabet, since in Gk. lore the seven wise men were also lawgivers. See Diogenes Laertius 1.40; Wacholder, Eupolemus, pp. 76–85.

Fragment 2

30 a. The parallel to this passage in Strom 1.130.3 is merely a very brief summary. Clement writes as follows: "Alexander called Polyhistor in the writing 'On the Jews' has recorded certain letters of Solomon to Vaphres the king of Egypt and to the king of Phoenicia and the Tyrians and their letters to Solomon. According to these letters Vaphres is shown to have sent eighty thousand Egyptian men to him for the building of the Temple, and the other (king) to have sent equal numbers with a Tyrian architect from a Jewish mother of the tribe of David; as it is written there, 'Hyeron is the name.' " The text appears to be corrupt in that the name David was falsely derived from the name Dan and in that the name Hyeron was falsely understood from the clause "whatever you ask him about" (hyper hōn an auton erōtēsēis).

b. The title here attributed by Eusebius to the work of Eupolemus is erroneous; the source of the error is unclear.

prophesied for forty years.<sup>c</sup> Then Joshua the son of Nun prophesied for thirty years;<sup>d</sup> he lived one hundred and ten years and pitched the sacred tabernacle in 2 Shiloh. After this<sup>e</sup> Samuel was prophet. •Then by the will of God Saul was chosen 3 by Samuel to be king and died after ruling twenty-one years.<sup>f</sup> •Then David, his son,<sup>g</sup> assumed power. He subdued the Syrians dwelling by the river Euphrates and in the region of Commagene<sup>h</sup> and the Assyrians in Galadene<sup>i</sup> and the Phoenicians; he also fought against the Idumaeans, the Ammonites, the Moabites, 4 the Ituraeans, the Nabataeans<sup>j</sup> and the Nabdaeans;<sup>k</sup> •he further waged war against Souron,<sup>l</sup> the king of Tyre and Phoenicia; and he compelled them to pay tribute to 5 the Jews. With Vaphres,<sup>m</sup> the king of Egypt, he made a treaty of friendship. •Since David wanted to build a temple for God, he asked God to show him a place for the altar. Then an angel appeared to him standing above the place where the altar is set up in Jerusalem<sup>n</sup> and ordered him not to set up the temple, because he was defiled with human blood and had waged war for many years.<sup>o</sup> His name was 6 Dianathan.<sup>p</sup> •He gave him a command that he should entrust the building to his son but that he should get ready the materials suitable for the construction: gold, 7 silver, bronze, stones, cypress and cedar trees.<sup>q</sup> •After hearing this, David built ships in Elana,<sup>r</sup> a city of Arabia, and sent miners to the island of Urphe,<sup>s</sup> which lies in the Red Sea and has gold mines. From there the miners transported the

2Sam 24
1Chr 21

1Chr 22:8

c. The number comes from the forty years that the Hebrews wandered in the desert under him; see e.g. Deut 29:5.

d. See Josh 24:29; 14:7; Num 14:30–34 for the derivation of the thirty years.

e. The phrase may derive from Alexander Polyhistor and indicate a summation. The omission of the period of the judges is striking. It may be explained by the absence of such a narrative in Eupolemus, or by its presence but with a chronological summary which is being quoted by Alexander Polyhistor, or by the reduction of the narrative to a chronological summary by Alexander Polyhistor. In F. 5 we shall see that there is a chronological summary by Eupolemus and also an addition of chronological material by another author, who may be Alexander Polyhistor.

f. The source for this figure is unknown; contrast 1Sam 13:1.

g. The error in identifying David as Saul's son is probably due to a misunderstanding by Alexander Polyhistor. MS B has corrected the error to son-in-law.

h. The biblical record of David's successes is found in 2Sam 5:17–25; 8:1–14//1Chr 14:8–17; 18:1–13. Eupolemus anachronistically adapts the record in the light of his contemporary setting and enlarges the limits of the Davidic empire: E.g. Commagene emerges as a distinct state only in the hellenistic period; it was in the area of the upper Euphrates in eastern Syria and thus was outside the territory of the Davidic empire. It is not clear whether the enlargement reflects expansionary interests in the Maccabean period or whether it reflects an idealized vision of the limits of Israel; compare Gen 13:14f. and 1QapGen 21:11–12. For a discussion of Jewish expansion in the pre-Hasmonean and early-Hasmonean periods, see V. Tcherikover, Hellenistic Civilization and the Jews (Philadelphia, 1966) pp. 204–34.

i. The referent of Galadene is unclear. It probably equals Gilead, a region of Transjordan.

j. The notice concerning the Nabateans is anachronistic; they date from the fifth/fourth century

k. The Nabdaeans are not otherwise attested. They may be either an erroneous doublet of the Nabateans or they may be identical with the inhabitants of Nadabath, a city in the Transjordan area (1Mac 9:37), or with the Zabadeans, the inhabitants of a town in the area either of Apamea or of Damascus (1Mac 12:31).

l. The unusual spelling of the name of Hiram indicates a return to the Hebrew text of 2Chr (hîrâm: e.g. 2:11) rather than the use of the LXX (Chiram). Hiram is here made the king not only of Tyre but also of Phoenicia. In contrast with 1Kgs 5:15, which reports friendship between David and Hiram, Eupolemus' statement probably reflects the enmity and political conflict between Israel and the Seleucid Empire in his own period.

m. The only known Vaphres is a Pharaoh of the later-sixth century B.C. (Hophra/Ouaphrê: Jer 44:30–51:30 LXX). The name may have been chosen because of the assonance with Pharaoh or because of Vaphres' reception of Jewish exiles at the fall of Jerusalem under the Babylonians; see Wacholder, Eupolemus, pp. 134–39. In any case, the friendship with Pharaoh probably represents Maccabean sympathies with the Ptolemies rather than with the Seleucids, against whom they had fought in the second century B.C.

n. In the biblical account the census by David results in a plague and the appearance of the angel of death (Satan in Chr) and the indication of the place for the altar by the prophet Gad (2Sam 24//1Chr 21).

o. This reason is given only in 1Chr 22:8.

p. The text appears corrupt, probably due to the misunderstanding of Alexander Polyhistor. The correct reading may have referred to the message (aggelos) sent to David through (dia) Nathan (nathan) the prophet. Alexander Polyhistor would then have misunderstood aggelos here as referring to the angel who appeared and dia nathan as the name of the angel; compare 2Sam 7//1Chr 17.

q. That David prepared the materials is recorded only in 1Chr 22 and 28f., but not in Kgs.

r. Biblical Elath.

gold to Judea. •After reigning for forty years, David handed over the rule to Solomon, his son, who was twelve years old,<sup>1</sup> in the presence of Eli the high priest<sup>a</sup> and the twelve rulers of the tribes. He also handed over to him the gold, silver, bronze, stone, and cypress and cedar trees. Then he died, and Solomon reigned as king and wrote the following letter to Vaphres the king of Egypt:

Solomon's Letter to Vaphres

31 King Solomon<sup>a</sup> to Vaphres King of Egypt and friend of my father, greetings!

Know that through God the Most High I have received the kingdom from David my father; he commanded me to build a temple for God, who created heaven and earth, and at the same time to write to you to send me some of your people, who will assist me until the completion of everything required, as has been commanded.

Vaphres' Letter to Solomon

32 King Vaphres to Solomon the Great King,<sup>a</sup> greetings!

When I read the letter from you, I rejoiced greatly, and I and all my administration celebrated a feast day in honor of your reception of the kingdom from a man who was so noble and approved by so great a God.

Now, concerning what you wrote to me, i.e. concerning the matter of our people, I am sending to you eighty thousand men<sup>b</sup> and I hereby make known to you their number and place of origin:<sup>c</sup> from the Sethroitic nome<sup>d</sup> ten thousand men; from the Mendesian and Sebunnitic nomes twenty thousand men each;<sup>e</sup> from the Bousiritic, Leontopolitan, and Athribitic nomes ten thousand men each. Provide for their necessary food supplies and other needs, that their pay be regular, and that they return to their own country as soon as they are finished with the task.

Solomon's Letter to Souron

33 King Solomon to Souron the King of Tyre and Sidon and Phoenicia, friend of my father, greetings!

Know that through God the Most High I have received the kingdom from David my father; he commanded me to build a temple for God, who created heaven and earth, and at the same time to write to you to send me some of your people, who

s. Biblical Ophir. Eupolemus has attributed this event to David rather than to Solomon; contrast 1Kgs 9:26–28//2Chr 8:17–18.

t. See 1Chr 22:5 and 29:1, where Solomon is considered as young; LXX 1Kgs 2:12 makes the age twelve years. According to Josephus, Ant 8.7.8 he was fourteen years old.

u. It is anachronistic to place Eli, the priest of Shiloh (see 1Sam 1–4), with Solomon. Zadok is the high priest under Solomon (1Chr 29:22). The change may stem from Alexander Polyhistor or, more likely, from Eupolemus. The motivation for the change by Eupolemus is not entirely clear. He may have wanted to support the priestly clan that was descended from Ithamar and that was a rival to the Zadokites, who were descended from Eleazar. Or he may have wanted to slight the Zadokites, who were considered defiled because of their co-operation with the Syrian kings; see, for example, 2Mac 4:7–5:17 and Wacholder, Eupolemus, pp. 151–55.

Solomon's Letter to Vaphres

31 a. The letter is composed by Eupolemus and based on Solomon's letter to Hiram of Tyre in 1Kgs 5:2–6. The letter follows the conventions of hellenistic epistolography. On Vaphres, see above.

Clement of Alexandria, Strom 1.130.3 summarizes the content of the two exchanges of letters and names Alexander Polyhistor, but not Eupolemus, as his source.

Vaphres' Letter to Solomon

32 a. Whereas Solomon acknowledges Vaphres and Souron as kings, they acknowledge him as the Great King and thereby implicitly as in the class of world emperors. See also 34.1.

b. Vaphres and Souron (34.1) each sends eighty thousand for a total of one hundred and sixty thousand men. Eupolemus has rounded off the numbers given in 1Kgs 5:28–29 (one hundred and fifty-three thousand) or in 2Chr 2:16–17 (one hundred and fifty-three thousand six hundred).

c. The text has been emended by the insertion of an extra kai before ex hōn to give the reading their number and place of origin.

d. The text is corrupt and needs to be emended in the cases of the Sethroitic (for Sebrihtitic) and Athribitic (for Bathrihtitic and similar variations) nomes. When the text is thus emended, all the nomes fall within the Nile Delta.

e. The larger number from the Mendesian and Sebunnitic nomes may derive from their strategic and economic importance; see Herodotus 2.17.

will also assist us until the completion of God's requirement, just as I have been commanded.

I have also written to Galilee, Samaria,<sup>a</sup> Moab, Ammon,<sup>b</sup> and Gilead to furnish them with the necessary food supplies from the land, each month ten thousand cors of grain (the cor is six artabae) and ten thousand cors of wine (the cor of wine is ten measures).<sup>d</sup> Their oil and their other necessities will be furnished for them from Judea, and cattle to be slaughtered for their meat supply from Arabia.

Souron's Letter to Solomon

34 Souron to Solomon the Great King, greetings!

Praised be the God, who created heaven and earth and who chose a noble person, the son of a noble man. As soon as I read the letter from you, I rejoiced and praised God for your reception of the kingdom.

Now, concerning what you write to me, concerning the matter of our people, I am sending to you eighty thousand Tyrians and Phoenicians, and I am sending to you an architect, a man from Tyre born of a mother from Judea, from the tribe of Dan.<sup>a</sup> Anything under heaven that you ask him about concerning architecture, he will show you and do. Concerning the necessary food supplies of the servants<sup>b</sup> sent to you, you will do well if you write the local governors to furnish the necessary food supplies.

2 When Solomon with his father's friends<sup>c</sup> came to Mount Lebanon with the Sidonians and Tyrians, he brought back by sea to Joppa the trees previously cut by his father,<sup>d</sup> and from there by land to Jerusalem. He began to build the Temple of God in his thirteenth year.<sup>e</sup> The previously mentioned peoples were working, and the twelve tribes of the Jews—one tribe each month—provided all the

Solomon's Letter to Souron

33 a. The names Galilee and Samaria, by which these territories were later known, are anachronistically given to the territories at the time of Solomon.

b. Moab and Ammon are here treated merely as parts of the Solomonic empire. In history, both Moab and Ammon were separate kingdoms with their own kings. They were vassals of Israel rather than simply parts of the empire (2Sam 8:2; 12:26–31).

c. In 1Kgs 5:11 the supplies are provided annually but in Eupolemus monthly. Since in 1Kgs 5:25 the number of cors of wheat is twenty thousand per year but in Eupolemus ten thousand per month, there is a sixfold discrepancy. The increase is probably due to the desire of Eupolemus to portray the munificence of Solomon.

d. The cor is a Hebrew measure, whereas the artaba is a measure introduced by the Persians and subsequently used in Ptolemaic Egypt and also in Palestine (see Josephus, Ant 11.1.3, §16; 12.3.3, §140; the cor is approximately 3.8 to 6.5 bushels; the Persian artaba equals approximately 1½ bushels and the hellenistic artaba a little less). The measure is a hellenistic unit equivalent to approximately 8–10 gallons; see IDB, vol. 4, pp. 834f., and Wacholder, Eupolemus, pp. 166–67.

Souron's Letter to Solomon

34 a. See 1Kgs 7:13f., where the woman is from the tribe of Naphtali, and 2Chr 2:13–14, where she is from the tribe of Dan. The text has been emended from David to Dan in accord with 2Chr 2:13f. and the suggestion of Freudenthal. The error arose from confusion of the name Dan (dan) with the abbreviation for David (dad). Clement of Alexandria, Strom 1.130.3 records the same error, which may derive from Alexander Polyhistor (see n. 30a for the translation of the passage). In addition, through a misunderstanding or corruption of the following phrase, Clement gives his name as Hyperon.

b. The MSS read "and the servants" rather than "of the servants." Freudenthal has suggested the emendation.

c. The phrase "his father's friends" probably means his father's court; the wording here is still unclear and may intend to speak about "the servants sent by his father's friends"; see Walter, JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 103.

d. In 30.6–8 Eupolemus discusses David's cutting of the trees. See 1Kgs 5:17–32, where Solomon arranges the cutting of the trees, and 1Chr 22:1–5, where David prepares the materials for the Temple. Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, p. 114, suggests that Eupolemus has reconciled the two passages; but see Wacholder, Eupolemus, pp. 171f., who interprets the change as part of the tendency of later tradition to exalt David.

e. 1Kgs 6:1 and 2Chr 3:2 indicate that Solomon began to build the Temple in the fourth year of his reign, i.e. when he was sixteen. The alteration may be due to the desire to show Solomon as beginning as soon as he reached the age of majority, or it may be due to the corruption of the text from iz to ig.

f. In order to reach a smoother reading, the text is emended to omit the "and" (kai) before "provide" (parechein). Thus the text agrees with 2Chr 2:17–18 that the Israelites merely provided the supplies and against 1Kgs 5:27–28 that they also worked.

necessary food supplies to the one hundred and sixty thousand men. He laid the foundations of the sanctuary of God (sixty cubits in length, sixty cubits in width;<sup>g</sup> and the width of the structure<sup>h</sup> and its foundations ten cubits), for thus Nathan the prophet of God commanded him. •He built alternately a course of stone and a bonding of cypress<sup>i</sup> and fastened the two courses with bronze clamps, a talent in weight. After building it thus, he covered the inside with cedar and cypress wood so that the stone building was not visible. He then overlaid the sanctuary with gold on the inside by piling up<sup>j</sup> golden sheets five cubits in size, and he affixed them by nailing them with silver nails, each a talent in weight and in the form of a breast and four in number.<sup>k</sup>

4 Thus he overlaid it with gold from the floor to the ceiling;<sup>l</sup> and he made the ceiling from golden coffered work, and the roof he made of bronze from bronze tiles after having melted bronze and poured this (into molds).<sup>m</sup> He also made two bronze pillars and overlaid them with pure gold, a finger in thickness.<sup>n</sup> •The pillars were as tall as the sanctuary, and each pillar was ten cubits in circumference. He stood them one on the right of the House (i.e. the Temple) and one on the left. He also made ten golden lampstands, each weighing ten talents;<sup>o</sup> he took as a model the lampstand placed by Moses in the tent of witnessing.<sup>p</sup> He stood them on each side of the sacred enclosure, some on the right, some on the left. •He also made seventy golden lamps so that seven might burn upon each lampstand. He also built the gates of the Temple and adorned them with gold and silver and covered them with coffered work of cedar and cypress. •He also made a portico on the northern side of the Temple, and supported it with forty-eight bronze pillars.<sup>q</sup> He also fashioned a bronze laver, twenty cubits in length, twenty cubits in width, and five cubits in height. He also made a brim upon it, which extended outward one cubit over the base for the priests to stand upon and bathe their feet and wash their hands. He also made the twelve legs of the laver of cast metal<sup>r</sup> and of the height of a man; and he stood them at the back end under the laver, at the right of the altar of sacrifice. •He also made a bronze platform two cubits in

1Kgs 6-7
2Chr 3-5

1Kgs 6:15, 18
2Chr 3:5

1Kgs 6:31-35
2Chr 4:22

g. The biblical account records that the sanctuary was sixty cubits in length and twenty cubits in width; see 1Kgs 6:2 and 2Chr 3:3. Ezra 6:3 refers to a width of sixty cubits for the Second Temple; however, the passage is probably corrupt. In his description Eupolemus may reflect some aspects of the Second Temple as well as the Solomonic Temple. For example, his omission of the porch and the Holy of Holies may be due to the lesser significance that he attaches to the porch and to the fact that in the Second Temple the Holy of Holies was separated simply by a veil. See Mras, GCS 43.1, p. 542, n. 1, and Wacholder, Eupolemus, pp. 174-77.

h. The term oikodomē here refers to the width of the walls (see Mras, GCS 43.1, p. 542, n. 3, and Wacholder, Eupolemus, pp. 175f.) rather than to the porch (Th. A. Busink, Der Tempel von Jerusalem [Leiden, 1970] vol. 1, p. 27, n. 109).

i. Neither Kgs nor Chr refers to layers in the wall of the Temple; 1Kgs 6:36 and 7:12 refer to the inner court. Eupolemus may here reflect 2Ezra 6:25, where the wall is composed of three courses of stone and one course of timber, especially since Eupolemus and 2Ezra both use for "course" the same term, domos, rather than stychos of 1Kgs 7:12.

j. Freudenthal emends chōnnunta ("piling up") to chōneonta ("casting").

k. See 1Kgs 6:19f. and 2Chr 3:8f., where only the Holy of Holies is gilded. It is not clear whether Eupolemus intends the entire sanctuary or just the Holy of Holies. The reference to nails of silver may derive from the tabernacle in Ex 26:32.

l. 1Kgs 6:15 mentions only the wood paneling of the Temple walls, whereas 2Chr 3:5-7 refers to the gold overlay on the wood paneling.

m. The roof is not described in the biblical accounts. The description may derive from the Second Temple.

n. See 1Kgs 7:15-22 and 2Chr 3:15-17. Only in Eupolemus are the pillars overlaid with gold, which addition comes from his tendency to magnify the splendor of Solomon's Temple.

o. The text is emended in accord with Mras, GCS 43.1, p. 542, from "talent" to "ten talents." Alternately, one could emend the text from "talents" to "talent" and read: ten golden lampstands, each weighing a talent.

p. This tent is the ʾōhēl mōʾēd of Ex 27:21, etc. On the lampstand see Ex 25:31-40; 1Kgs 7:49; 2Chr 4:7. Eupolemus alone refers explicitly to the Mosaic authority.

q. There is no portico in 1Kgs or 2Chr. However, the LXX of 1Kgs 7:31 refers to forty-eight pillars, and a variant of LXX 1Kgs 7:40 refers to a portico. Cf. the eastern portico of the later. Herodian Temple in Josephus, War 5.5.1, §185, and Ant 20.9.7, §220-21.

r. Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, p. 211, emends toρευτας χōneutas ("cast metal") to ταυρους χōneoutous, i.e. "cast oxen," in accord with 2Chr 4:3 LXX. However, Mras retains the reading of the MSS. Cf. 1Kgs 7:23-39; 2Chr 4:2-6; and also Ex 30:17-21.

height near the laver for the king to stand upon whenever he prays so that he might be visible to the Jewish people. He also built the altar of sacrifice twenty cubits<sup>s</sup> by twenty cubits and twelve cubits in height. •He also made two bronze rings wrought like chains<sup>s</sup> and stood them upon stands," which were twenty cubits in height above the sanctuary, and they cast a shadow over the entire Temple. He hung upon each network four hundred bronze bells, a talent in weight, and he made all the networks in order to ring the bells and scare away the birds that they might not settle upon the Temple or build a nest upon the coffered works of the gates and porticoes and defile the Temple with their excrement.

2Chr 6:13

10 He also encircled Jerusalem as a city with walls and towers and trenches, and he built a palace for himself. •The shrine was first called the "Temple of Solomon" (hieron Solomōnos). Later, corruptly the city was named from the Temple "Jerusalem" (hierusalēm); and by the Greeks it is correspondingly called "Hierosolyma."<sup>v</sup>

1Kgs 3:1; 7:1-12
2 Chr 7:11

12 After having completed the Temple and enclosed the city with walls, he went to Shiloh<sup>w</sup> and offered a sacrifice to God, a thousand oxen as a holocaust. He also took the tent and the altar of sacrifice and the vessels, which Moses had made, and brought them into Jerusalem and placed them in the House (i.e. the Temple).

13 He also placed there the ark<sup>s</sup> and the golden altar and the lampstand and the table and the other vessels, as the prophet commanded him. He also brought to God an innumerable sacrifice, (including) two thousand sheep, (and) three thousand five hundred oxen.

1Kgs 8:5
2Chr 1:6

14 The entire amount of gold, which was used for the two pillars and the sanctuary, was four million, six hundred thousand talents;<sup>y</sup> of silver for the nails and the other ornament a thousand, two hundred and thirty-two talents; of bronze for the columns and the laver and the portico eighteen thousand, five hundred talents.

15 Solomon also sent back both the Egyptians and the Phoenicians, each to their own country, and gave to each man ten golden shekels (the talent is a shekel).<sup>z</sup> •To Vaphres the king of Egypt he sent ten thousand measures of oil, a thousand artabae of dates, one hundred barrels of honey and spices; and for Souron he sent to Tyre the golden column, which is set up in Tyre in the temple of Zeus.<sup>a2</sup>

s. Emended from twenty-five cubits in accord with 2Chr 4:1. It is also possible that the dimensions of the altar come from multiplying by four the size of the altar in Ex 27:1-2.

t. The wording in the Gk. is not clear at this point. It seems to indicate two circular pieces of network. The object here described is not reported in Scripture (but see the pillars and their capitals in 1Kgs 7:17 and 2Chr 4:12f.). However, Josephus, in War 5.5.6, §224, describes the presence of spikes on the roof of the Herodian Temple to scare away birds; see also M. Middot 4:6. If D. Sperber is correct in his analysis of a coin from the period of Antigonus Mattathias (40-37 B.C.), the Second Temple also had this row of spikes; see Sperber, "A Note on a Coin of Antigonus Mattathias," JQR 54 (1964) 251-57.

u. Compare the m'kōnōt (LXX mechōnōth) of 1Kgs 7:27, which are the bronze stands for the lavers.

v. See the similar etymological discussions in Josephus, War 6.10.3, §438; Ani 7.3.2, §67; Apion 1.22, §174.

w. Contrary to 1Kgs 3:4f. and 2Chr 1:3f., Eupolemus maintains that Shiloh and not Gibeon was the site of the tent.

x. Eupolemus seems to indicate a second move in this sentence, probably since in Scripture David had already moved the ark from the shrine; see 2Sam 6:2; 1Kgs 8:3f.; 2Chr 1:3f.

y. Lit., Eupolemus says four hundred and sixty "myriads" of talents (a myriad is equivalent to ten thousand). See Ex 38:24-31; 1Chr 22:14; 29:4, 7. Walter, JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 105, suggests that "myriads" should be omitted from the text to achieve a more reasonable amount. However, as Wacholder proposes (Eupolemus, pp. 214f.), the inflated number is in accord with the tendency of Eupolemus to maximize the splendor of Solomon's Temple.

z. The equation of a talent and a shekel is erroneous; there were three thousand six hundred shekels to the talent.

a2. In 1Kgs 5:25f. Solomon provides wheat and oil for Hiram, the king of Tyre, rather than for the king of Egypt, as Eupolemus states. The rather remarkable sentence concerning the golden column serves to underscore further the wealth of Solomon. On the golden pillar, see Herodotus 2.44; Josephus, Apion 1.18, §118; and the quotation from Theophilus in the following n.

Fragment 3 Alexander Polyhistor, "On the Jews," in Eusebius, "Praeparatio Evangelica" 9.34.20:

34.20 Eupolemus<sup>a</sup> says that Solomon also made a thousand golden shields, each one of which was in the weight of five hundred gold shekels.<sup>b</sup> He lived fifty-two years, forty years of which he was king in peace.<sup>c</sup>

Fragment 4 Alexander Polyhistor, "On the Jews," in Eusebius, "Praeparatio Evangelica" 9.39.2–5:

239 Then Jonachim (became king).<sup>a</sup> During his reign Jeremiah the prophet prophesied. Sent by God, he caught the Jews sacrificing to a golden idol, whose name was Baal. •He disclosed to them the coming misfortune. Jonachim attempted to burn him alive, but he said that, with this wood, as captives they would prepare food for the Babylonians, and dig the canals of the Tigris and Euphrates.<sup>b</sup> •When Nebuchadnezzar the king of the Babylonians heard the predictions of Jeremiah, he exhorted Astibares<sup>c</sup> the king of the Medes to join him in an expedition. •He associated with himself Babylonians and Medes and gathered together a force of one hundred and eighty thousand foot soldiers, one hundred and twenty thousand cavalry, and ten thousand chariots for foot soldiers. First, he subdued Samaria and Galilee and Scythopolis and the Jews living in Gilead.<sup>d</sup> Then he seized Jerusalem and captured Jonachim the king of the Jews. He took as tribute the gold and silver and bronze in the Temple and sent them to Babylon, except for the ark and the tablets in it. This Jeremiah preserved.<sup>e</sup>

Fragment 5 Clement of Alexandria, "Stromata" 1.141.4:

141.4 Further,<sup>a</sup> Eupolemus also says in a similar treatise that all the years from Adam to the fifth year of the reign of Demetrius<sup>b</sup> (while Ptolemy<sup>c</sup> was in his

Fragment 3

34.20 a. This fragment probably followed immediately upon F. 2. Alexander Polyhistor has interrupted the sequence to introduce a brief quotation from Theophilus which reads as follows: "And Theophilus says that Solomon sent the remaining gold to the king of the Tyrians and that he fashioned an image of his daughter, a full-bodied figure, and that he placed the golden pillar around as a covering for the statue."

b. The weight is presumably in shekels; the text has merely "gold ones." Contrast 1Kgs 10:16f.; 2Chr 9:15f.; cf. Song 4:4.

c. 1Kgs 11:42 and 2Chr 9:30 report Solomon's reign as lasting forty years; his life-span is derived from this plus his twelve years at his accession (F. 2, 30.8).

Fragment 4

39 a. Under the one name Jonachim, which is probably corrupted for Joachim, Eupolemus encompasses the events that occur to the final three kings of Judah: Jehoiachim, Jehoiakin, and Zedekiah (2Kgs 24:1–25:21; 2Chr 36:5–21).

b. See Jer 26; 36. However, the details of the conflict with Baal, the attempted burning of Jeremiah, and the cooking and digging in Babylonia are all peculiar to Eupolemus.

c. There is no biblical record of the participation of the Medes in the destruction of Jerusalem. According to Ctesias (Diodorus 2.34.6; Jacoby, FGH, 688 F. 5), Astibares and then Aspandas were the last two kings of the Medes. In Herodotus 1.16, 46, 73–75, etc., however, they are named Cyxares and Astyges. For the possible relationship of Eupolemus to Ctesias either directly or indirectly, see Walter, JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 107, and Wacholder, Eupolemus, pp. 230–34.

d. The details of the campaign are fictional; contrast 2Kgs 24; 2Chr 36. Scythopolis is the later, hellenistic name of Beth-Shan (Josh 17:11, 16).

e. This legend is also reported in 2Mac 2:1–10 and in T. Schermann, ed., Prophetarum Vitae (Leipzig, 1907) pp. 10f. See also 1Mac 4:46; Josephus, Ant 18.4.1, §85–87; 2Bar 6.

Fragment 5

141.4 a. The context of Clement of Alexandria, Strom 1.141.1–3 is as follows: "Demetrius says in 'On the Kings in Judea' that the twelve tribes of Juda, Benjamin and Levi were not captured by Sennacherib but that the time from this captivity until the final one from Jerusalem, which Nebuchadnezzar accomplished, was one hundred and twenty-eight years (and) six months. From the time when the ten tribes from Samaria became captives until Ptolemy IV five hundred and seventy-three years (and) nine months; from the time of the captives from Jerusalem three hundred and thirty-eight years (and) three months.

And Philo too has recorded the kings of the Jews (but) different from Demetrius."

b. Demetrius I Soter, who ruled from 162 to 150 B.C., is intended, and therefore the date of composition is presumably 158/7 B.C. See the Introduction.

c. Ptolemy VII Euergetes II Physcon, who ruled from 170 to 116 B.C., is meant, and therefore the date is 159/8 B.C. There is thus an error of one year in the synchronization. However, the reference to Ptolemy must be a later addition if the work of Eupolemus was composed in 158/7 B.C.; see the twelfth year as king of Egypt) are five thousand, one hundred and forty-nine;<sup>d</sup> and from the time when Moses led the Jews out of Egypt to the aforementioned date there are two thousand, five hundred and eighty years.<sup>e</sup> (From this time until the Roman consuls Gnaeus Dometianus and [G.] Asinius<sup>f</sup> one hundred and twenty years are summed up.)<sup>g</sup>

Introduction. Wacholder, Eupolemus, pp. 40–44, boldly suggests Ptolemy of Mendes as the interpolator; Walter, JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 94, leaves the interpolator anonymous. It also seems possible that the interpolator could be Alexander Polyhistor himself.

d. That figure (5,149), when added to the date of Demetrius (158/7 B.C.), sets the creation in 5307/6 B.C.

e. The text has been emended from two thousand to one thousand years by Freudenthal and Jacoby, since the date is too early for the Exodus. The emended text (1738 B.C.) is closer to the LXX. However, as Wacholder points out, Eupolemus could also be deliberately antedating the Exodus to show the antiquity of the Jewish civilization (Eupolemus, pp. 111–13).

f. The text is corrupt and has been emended from gaiou dometianou kasinou to gnaiou dometiou kai asiniou and therefore 40 B.C.; see Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, p. 214. This addition to Eupolemus may stem from Alexander Polyhistor or from an unknown author.

g. The date referred to in the reign of Ptolemy is 159/8 B.C., and the date of the Roman consuls is 40 B.C. A period of one hundred and twenty years is then said to separate these dates. One arrives at the correct figure (120) by including in the computation—in accord with ancient counting practices—the first and last years of the period.

HISTORY

PSEUDO-EUPOLEMUS

(prior to First Century B.C.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY R. DORAN

Within the discussion of Abraham in Eusebius' Praeparatio Evangelica are two quotations, one of which is attributed by Alexander Polyhistor to Eupolemus and the other of which is said to be anonymous. Scholars have assigned both these quotations, known from Alexander Polyhistor's On the Jews, to a "Pseudo-Eupolemus."

The first fragment deals with Abraham as spreader of astrological lore. After a short introduction which tells of the building and destruction of the tower of Babel, it states that Abraham was born in a Babylonian city, that he excelled in astrology, and that he traveled to Phoenicia, where he taught this science. The fragment briefly recounts the events of Genesis 14, in a version somewhat different from the biblical account, and then has Abraham move to Egypt, where he again teaches astrology. Abraham, however, praises Enoch as the inventor of astrological science.

The second, anonymous fragment traces the lineage of Abraham back to the giants, and attributes the founding of Babylonia to Belos. In one sentence, it states that Abraham taught astrology to the Phoenicians and then to the Egyptians.

Text

The critical text used as the basis for this translation is K. Mras's edition of Praeparatio Evangelica.<sup>1</sup>

The two fragments

J. Freudenthal, faced with the problem of whether Eupolemus was a Jew, a Samaritan, or a pagan, solved the question by separating the materials attributed to Eupolemus into two groups.<sup>2</sup> In Freudenthal's view, the fragment on Abraham was not from Eupolemus but from a Samaritan, while the other fragments were genuine.<sup>3</sup> As part of his proof, Freudenthal pointed to close similarities between the text attributed to Eupolemus and the anonymous text; he concluded that the two texts came from the same author, an anonymous Samaritan.<sup>4</sup> The similarities noted by Freudenthal were as follows:

- 1) The building of the tower was done by giants.
- 2) Abraham is somehow connected with these giants.
- 3) Abraham learned astrology from the Chaldeans and taught it to the Phoenicians and then to the Egyptians.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Mras, GCS 43,1.

<sup>2</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 87–89.

<sup>3</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 85–89.

<sup>4</sup> Freudenthal suggested that Alexander Polyhistor somehow had his collection of files mixed up; the anonymous-Samaritan F. somehow found its way into the file on Eupolemus. Later, when Alexander realized that he was missing his anonymous file, he simply reproduced it from memory. (Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, p. 91.)

<sup>5</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 90–92.

B. Z. Wacholder initially followed Freudenthal and claimed that the two texts come from the same author; later he somewhat modified his view.<sup>6</sup>

When one looks closely at the texts, however, there are more dissimilarities than similarities.<sup>7</sup>

- 1) Alexander Polyhistor clearly holds that they come from different sources.<sup>8</sup>
- 2) The order of events is quite different. In the first fragment, the giants escape the flood, build the tower, and are dispersed over the earth when God destroys the tower. In the second, anonymous fragment, however, the tower is built after the gods have destroyed most of the giants. The building of the tower in the second fragment is not the cause of any divine chastisement, as it is in the first.
- 3) The second fragment is polytheistic (hupo tōn theōn), but there is no hint of many gods in the first fragment.
- 4) It is not unreasonable that the building of the tower be associated with giants. The Septuagint of Genesis 10:8f. has Nimrod as a giant in the region of Babel and Shinar, and the tower is built in the land of Shinar (Gen 11:2–4). Finally, the fact that in both texts astrological knowledge is transmitted to Egypt from Babylonia and Phoenicia does not prove that the two texts come from the same author. Rather, it shows that both texts have pro-Phoenician and pro-Babylonian tendencies.

The two texts, therefore, while they show similarities, are too dissimilar to come from the same author.

I. The first fragment

This text, Praeparatio Evangelica 9.17.2–9, has been almost universally attributed to an unknown Samaritan author, named for convenience "Pseudo-Eupolemus."<sup>9</sup> What are the grounds for this belief?

- 1) The fragment could not come from Eupolemus, for Eupolemus held that Moses was the first wise man.<sup>10</sup> Yet this fragment states that Abraham excelled in wisdom and that Enoch invented astrology.
- 2) This fragment is syncretistic, for it is concerned to link biblical figures with figures of Babylonian and Greek mythology; e.g. it states that Enoch is the same as Atlas. The genuine Eupolemus fragments are not syncretistic.
- 3) The author is pro-Samaritan, for he locates the Salem of Genesis 14 at Argarizin, which he calls "Mount of the Most High." But Eupolemus is clearly a Jew, possibly an ambassador of Judas Maccabeus.<sup>11</sup>
- 4) The author of this fragment also favors Phoenicia, for he holds that Phoenicia gained knowledge before Egypt. This view could reflect a Samaritan bias, as Josephus mentions that the Samaritans claimed relationship with the Sidonians (Ant 11.344; 12.257–62).

For convenience of exposition, we shall discuss these arguments in inverse order.

- 1) The author of the fragment has simplified the wanderings of Abraham: Abraham travels to Phoenicia and then on to Egypt but does not then retrace his steps to Phoenicia as in the biblical account. This simplification is in line with the genealogy which has been accepted from the Babylonians:

<sup>6</sup> B. Z. Wacholder, "'Pseudo-Eupolemus' Two Greek Fragments on the Life of Abraham," HUCA 34 (1963) 83–113. B. Z. Wacholder, Eupolemus: A Study of Judaeo-Greek Literature (Cincinnati, 1974) p. 287, n. 112.

<sup>7</sup> N. Walter, "Zu Pseudo-Eupolemus," Klio 43–45 (1965) 282–90.

<sup>8</sup> No other suggestion, except that in n. 3, has been offered to explain how Alexander Polyhistor confused the Samaritan work with that of Eupolemus.

<sup>9</sup> A.-M. Denis speaks only of the "anonymous historian" but distinguishes this author from the genuine Eupolemus ("L'Historien anonyme d'Eusèbe (Praep. Ev. 9, 17–18) et la crise des Macchabées," JSJ 8 (1977) 42–49).

<sup>10</sup> PrEv 9.26.1; Clement, Strom 1.153.4.

<sup>11</sup> 1Mac 8:17; 2Mac 4:11.

PSEUDO-EUPOLEMUS

Such a subordination of Egypt to Phoenicia should not be attributed to any personal animosity of the author against the Egyptians;<sup>12</sup> he is taking sides in the oft-debated question on the origin of knowledge. This debate was particularly sharp over the invention of the alphabet, some claiming that the alphabet was invented in Egypt, others in Phoenicia.<sup>13</sup> A fragment attributed to the genuine Eupolemus ignores the claims of Egypt and states that Moses gave knowledge of the alphabet to the Phoenicians and that they in turn gave it to the Greeks.<sup>14</sup> In the present fragment, the claims of Egypt are similarly downplayed, as astrological knowledge comes to Egypt from Babylonia via Phoenicia. In this respect, as in the use of the term “Phoenicia,” this fragment has a view of the diffusion of knowledge similar to that of the genuine Eupolemus.

- 2) The author’s interpretation of Argarizin as “Mount of the Most High” does not indicate that he is a Samaritan. Such an interpretation is not a scientific etymology<sup>15</sup> but is related to the account in Genesis 14:18, where Melchisedek is said to be a priest of the Most High. Also, as Wacholder notes, the location of Salem in Samaria is supported by the Septuagint of Genesis 33:18: “And Jacob came to Salem the city of Shechem.” Opinions diverged as to the location of Salem. Epiphanius cites two opinions, one which equates Salem with Jerusalem (as does Josephus), the other which places it in the valley of Shechem, now called Neapolis.<sup>16</sup> The fragment under discussion sides with the second opinion. This opinion, however, coincides with the view of fragments attributed to the genuine Eupolemus in which Jerusalem is not derived from the name Salem but from hieron Solomōnos, the Temple of Solomon (PrEv 9.34.13). On this point, too, there is no contradiction between Eupolemus and the author of this fragment.
- 3) The fragments of the genuine Eupolemus do not hesitate to connect biblical events with non-Jewish events: Moses is the inventor of the alphabet and laws, a science which then passed to the Phoenicians and Greeks; Solomon was the originator of the golden pillar found in the temple of Zeus at Tyre.<sup>17</sup> The fragment under discussion evidences the same kind of speculation as that found in Artapanus.<sup>18</sup> One should realize that the patriarchal period was the prime ground for such attempts at connecting Jewish and non-Jewish events. The story of Solomon took place in history, but the Genesis account of origins was ripe for connections with other accounts of origins.
- 4) Finally, Eupolemus speaks of Moses as the first to become wise in the context of the invention of letters and laws. This does not imply that, before Moses, there were none wise in other ways. Before the appearance of Tautus, the inventor of letters, Sancuniathon parades a long list of inventors.<sup>19</sup> It is not, therefore, contradictory that the fragment under discussion should state that Abraham excelled in wisdom and that Enoch invented astrology, and that Eupolemus should state that Moses was the first sage and that he invented writing and laws.

Thus, nothing stands in the way of holding that this fragment on Abraham comes from

<sup>12</sup> Wacholder, HUCA 34 (1963) 87; Walter, JSHRZ 1.2, p. 183; Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 287.

<sup>13</sup> In Egypt: Diodorus Siculus 1.13.2; 1.16.1; Artapanus in PrEv 9.27.6. In Phoenicia: Philon of Byblos, citing Sancuniathon, in PrEv 1.10.14.

<sup>14</sup> PrEv 9.26.1.

<sup>15</sup> As Wacholder (HUCA 34 (1963) 88, n. 32) claims. Walter rightly disputes this (Klio 43–45 (1965) 285f.).

<sup>16</sup> Wacholder, HUCA 34 (1963) 107, citing Epiphanius, AdvHaer 2.55.2.

<sup>17</sup> PrEv 9.34.18.

<sup>18</sup> PrEv 9.27.3f.; 9.27.6.

<sup>19</sup> PrEv 1.10.11–14.

the genuine Eupolemus and that there is no "Pseudo-Eupolemus." The fragment shows no more syncretism than the admittedly genuine fragments on Moses and Solomon, and the restructuring of the biblical narrative was also part of the method of Eupolemus.<sup>20</sup> Such an identification would also fit in with the judgment, which we will make in the following sections, that the author of the fragment knew the Septuagint and was familiar with Palestinian traditions.<sup>21</sup>

This fragment, then, belongs to the work of Eupolemus. It belongs to the Palestinian tradition and is interested in forming contacts with other accounts of the origins of mankind, as well as showing Abraham as a spreader of culture.<sup>22</sup>

Original language

The writer of this first fragment shows dependence on the Septuagint tradition in the spelling of the proper names Abraam, Enöch, Mathousala, Melchisedek, Mestraeim, Chanaan, Chous.<sup>23</sup> However, the spelling of proper names is not a conclusive proof as to the original language of the work, as a translator would most probably have followed the Septuagint spelling.

Within the fragment itself, there is no internal evidence that the author knew Hebrew, although Wacholder does attempt to show such knowledge.<sup>24</sup> It is most likely that the original language was Greek.

Relation to the Old Testament

The author of the first fragment diverges from the biblical account: He interposes the incidents of Genesis 14 before those of Genesis 12:10–20. This is in line with his desire to show that knowledge of astrology originated in Babylonia and came to Egypt via Phoenicia. The author also shows some interpretative touches: He describes the attacking kings of Genesis 14 as Armenians.<sup>25</sup> He interprets Genesis 14:16 to mean that Abraham took captive the women and children of his enemies, not that he rescued the women and children of Lot. Thus, the author transforms the dialogue between Abraham and the king of Sodom in the biblical narrative into a dialogue between Abraham and ambassadors from the Armenians.

Relation to non-canonical works

The first fragment shows a close connection with traditions found in the non-canonical literature. As in the Genesis Apocryphon (1QapGen 20:17), Josephus (Ant 1.163f.), and the Asatir,<sup>26</sup> Pharaoh is not able to have intercourse with Sarah. Again, one of the kings in Genesis 14 is said in the Genesis Apocryphon (1QapGen 21:23) to come from Cappadocia; the fragment has the kings come from Armenia.

The strongest link with the non-canonical literature, however, is found in the theme of astrological knowledge. The Enochite tradition (Jub 4:17–25; 1QapGen 2:19–21; Asatir 6:18) depicts Enoch as knowing the secrets of whatever is on earth or in the heavens; 1 Enoch contains chapters on astronomy (1En 72–82; 41–44). Methuselah is the conduit for Enoch's knowledge to mankind in 1 Enoch 82; 106; and Genesis Apocryphon 4:24f. That Abraham knew the science of the heavens is also a widespread theme, found in Artapanus, Philo (Abr 69–71), and Josephus (Ant 1.155, 167f.). However, there was some <sup>20</sup> The best examples are the statement that David was Saul's son (PrEv 9.30.3) and the role that Shiloh plays in the preparations for the consecration of the temple (PrEv 9.34.14). B. Z. Wacholder notes the discrepancies throughout his work Eupolemus.

<sup>21</sup> See the sections on "Original language" and "Relation to non-canonical works."

<sup>22</sup> Cf. D. Georgi, Die Gegner des Paulus im 2.Korintherbrief: Studien zur religiösen Propaganda in der Spätantike (Wissenschaftliche Monographien zum Alten und Neuen Testament 11; Neukirchen-Vluyn, 1964) p. 65.

<sup>23</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, p. 98.

<sup>24</sup> Wacholder, HUCA 34 (1963) 87–89; 94–95. See Walter's criticisms, Klio 43–45 (1965) 284–86.

<sup>25</sup> Freudenthal (Alexander Polyhistor, p. 97) and Wacholder (HUCA 34 [1963] 105) see here a pro-Babylonian bias, rather than a simple reinterpretation of the text.

<sup>26</sup> Cited by Walter, Klio 43–45 (1965) 287.

ambivalence in the tradition about this knowledge of astrology. For Josephus and Philo, Abraham's astrology was a means of knowing the true God, and conflict arose between Abraham and the Chaldean astrologers when they would not go beyond their science to this knowledge of God.<sup>27</sup> The Sibylline Oracles directly polemicize against the view that Abraham knew Chaldean astrology or astronomy.<sup>28</sup> "Pseudo-Eupolemus" has no such ambivalence as to Abraham's astrological knowledge: Astrology, for this author, is a means of glorifying the Jewish patriarchs as culture bringers.

This fragment thus reflects wide traditions about Abraham, Enoch, and Methuselah.

Relation to other works

This first fragment also shows knowledge of non-Jewish traditions. Freudenthal suggested that it reflected knowledge of the work of Berossos, a priest of Bel, who authored a history of Babylon at the beginning of the third century B.C.<sup>29</sup> Schnabel at first followed this lead of Freudenthal and added further arguments in its favor; however, he later stated that the fragment of "Pseudo-Eupolemus" was drawing on oral traditions.<sup>30</sup> Both Wacholder and Walter state that Schnabel was wrong to reverse his position, and both hold that "Pseudo-Eupolemus" knew the work of Berossos.<sup>31</sup>

What is the evidence in favor of this? Freudenthal had pointed to the parallel between Praeparatio Evangelica 9.17.3 and the fragment of Berossos preserved in Josephus, Antiquities 1.158: "In the tenth generation after the flood lived among the Chaldeans a just, important man who was knowledgeable in heavenly phenomena." The only verbal connection between the two statements is "the tenth generation." The source for "Pseudo-Eupolemus," however, is most probably the Bible, for Genesis 10f. locates Abraham in the tenth generation after the flood. The only information additional to the Bible in both "Pseudo-Eupolemus" and Berossos is that Abraham was well versed in astrology. But the source for "Pseudo-Eupolemus" could well have been the Jewish traditions noted above. Thus, there is no need to say that "Pseudo-Eupolemus" is dependent on Berossos.<sup>32</sup>

"Pseudo-Eupolemus" does, however, explicitly draw on Babylonian traditions for his genealogy of Belos. The tradition here cited stands in opposition to those genealogies in which Belos is a son of Libya (Diodorus Siculus 1.28, 81; Pausanias 4.23.10), and traditions in which Belos leaves Egypt to colonize Babylonia (Diodorus Siculus 1.28.1). Belos could shift places in the genealogical system depending on each author's point of view. For example, in the genealogy of the Danaids, Belos was father of Danaos and Aegyptus; Belos could also father Phoenix and Agenor.<sup>33</sup> Through the kinship relation of ancestors of races is expressed the relationship between the various countries. "Pseudo-Eupolemus" uses a pro-Babylonian and pro-Phoenician genealogy, where Belos is two generations earlier than Egypt, to support his theory of the spread of knowledge. The tradition is in opposition to others, as at Herodotus 2.82 and Diodorus Siculus 1.81.6, where genealogies are used to show that astrological knowledge originated in Egypt. "Pseudo-Eupolemus," however, makes no attempt to identify figures of the Babylonian genealogy with figures from the biblical tradition—one should not search to relate Noah or Nimrod to any of the figures of the genealogy used by "Pseudo-Eupolemus."<sup>34</sup>

<sup>27</sup> Josephus, Ant 1.155–57; Philo Migr 177–87; Quaes Gen 3.1.

<sup>28</sup> SibOr 3.218–31.

<sup>29</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 90f.

<sup>30</sup> P. Schnabel, Berosos und die babylonisch-hellenistische Literatur (Leipzig/Berlin, 1923) pp. 67–69. The revision is found on p. 246.

<sup>31</sup> Wacholder, HUCA 34 (1963) 91; Walter, Klio 43–45 (1965) 289.

<sup>32</sup> Schnabel's other argument for connecting this F. and Berossos is the recognition that behind the phrase Choum hyion genesthai, hon . . . legesthai Asbolon lies the name Chômasbêlos, the second king of Babylon after the Flood, according to Berossos (FGH, vol. 3C, no. 680, F. 5; Schnabel, Berosos, p. 68). However, Walter (Klio 43–45 [1965] 285) has shown that the best reading of the proper name is not Choum, but Choun, the simple accusative of Chous. Asbolos would then be connected to asbolos = "sooty." Walter is equally right to discount Wacholder's suggestion that the F. is directly dependent on a knowledge of Ctesias and Hesiod (Klio 43–45 [1965] 289).

<sup>33</sup> For a full listing of possibilities, see K. Tumpel, "Belos," Pauly-Wissowa, vol. 3, cols. 259–64.

<sup>34</sup> The attempts of Wacholder to do so are vitiated by his belief that the two Fs. on Abraham ascribed to "Pseudo-Eupolemus" do come from a single author. There is no explicit attempt in the first F. (PrEv 9.17.2–9) to make the identification that Wacholder does.

Beside the "Babylonian traditions," "Pseudo-Eupolemus" is also aware of Greek traditions that linked Atlas with astrology. Such traditions are found in Herodorus, Xenagoras, and Dionysius Scythobrachion.<sup>35</sup>

Cultural importance

The Babylonian traditions have been used by "Pseudo-Eupolemus" as genealogical support for the theory that Jewish heroes were the inventors of astrology. That Jews were such culture bringers is clearly in opposition to both Babylonian and Egyptian traditions.<sup>36</sup> The depiction of Enoch and Abraham as culture bringers is an attempt to enhance Jewish traditions and beliefs and the Jewish people itself both in the eyes of its neighbors and in its own eyes. If the author of this fragment was the Eupolemus who was ambassador of Judas Maccabeus, then this fragment reveals an openness to other traditions while maintaining the superiority of the Jewish traditions.

Date and provenance

The thrust of the above argument is that the author of this fragment is not an anonymous Samaritan, but Eupolemus. The question of date and provenance is thus tied up with the date and provenance of the other fragments of Eupolemus.

II. The anonymous fragment

Walter has proposed that this second fragment, Praeparatio Evangelica 9.18.2, is composed of several parts: First is a connection forged by Alexander Polyhistor to relate the Babylonian traditions to Abraham; then the Babylonian traditions; finally, a summary made by Alexander Polyhistor out of the materials in the first fragment of Eupolemus.<sup>37</sup> Even the Babylonian traditions give the impression of being composed out of disparate elements. The destruction of the giants by the gods has overtones of the battle of the Titans, although that term is not expressly used; the escape of one man to build Babylon has overtones of the story of Xisuthros, as told by Berossos;<sup>38</sup> the building of a tower reminds one of the tower of Babel, although clearly here that is no act of impiety, nor is the tower destroyed.

Thus the fragment is a potpourri of traditions, most probably thrown together by Alexander Polyhistor out of disparate elements. One should not seek for a precise author beyond him.

The genealogy does present certain problems, however. The text as it presently stands identifies Belos with Kronos. Such an identification is not found elsewhere; in fact, Belos was more often identified with Zeus (Herodotus 1.181.2; Agathias, citing Berossos; found in Jacoby, FGH, vol. 3C, no. 680, F. 12). A simple emendation of the text would have Kronos father Belos, and I have followed this suggestion of J. Strugnell. See the translation nn. for details. Philo Byblos has Kronos father Zeus Belos in PrEv 1.10.26. In the same passage of Philo Byblos, however, Kronos also fathers a son called Kronos, besides the son Zeus Belos. That a son is named after the father in such genealogies is therefore not as strange as Wacholder (HUCA 34 [1963] 94) and Walter (JSHRZ 1.2 [1976] 142) hold.

<sup>35</sup> Herodorus in Jacoby, FGH, vol. 1, no. 31, F. 13; Xenagoras, FGH, vol. 2B, no. 240, F. 32; Dionysius Scythobrachion, FGH, vol. 1, no. 32, F. 7.

<sup>36</sup> Pliny (Historia naturalis 6.121) states that Bel was the inventor of astrology; Herodotus 2.82 and Diodorus Siculus 1.50.1 give the honor to the Egyptians. See K. Thraede, "Erfinder II (geistesgeschichtlich)" RAC, vol. 5, pp. 1204–6.

<sup>37</sup> Walter, JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 143.

<sup>38</sup> Jacoby, FGH, vol. 3C, no. 680, F. 4. As regards the reference to the Titans, it must be emphasized that it is not explicitly stated that the giants were Titans. One should not, with Wacholder (HUCA 34 [1963] 92), hold that the fragment directly influenced the SibOr.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, p. 108.

Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 53–55.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 261f.

Denis, A.-M. "L'Historien anonyme d'Eusèbe (Praep. Ev. 9, 17–18) et la crise des Macchabées," JSJ 8 (1977) 42–49.

Freudenthal, J. Alexander Polyhistor und die von ihm erhaltenen Reste jüdischer und samaritanischer Geschichtswerke. Hellenistische Studien 1–2. Breslau, 1875.

Gaster, M. The Asatir, the Samaritan Book of the "Secrets of Moses." London, 1927.

Jacoby, F. Die Fragmente der griechischen Historiker. Leiden, 1954–64.

Schnabel, P. Berosos und die babylonisch-hellenistische Literatur. Leipzig/Berlin, 1923.

Wacholder, B. Z. "Pseudo-Eupolemus' Two Greek Fragments on the Life of Abraham," HUCA 34 (1963) 83–113.

———. Eupolemus: A Study of Judaeo-Greek Literature. Cincinnati, 1974.

Walter, N. "Zu Pseudo-Eupolemus," Klio 43–45 (1965) 282–90.

———. "Pseudo-Eupolemus," JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 137–43.

PRAEPARATIO EVANGELICA 9.17.2-9

2 Eupolemus, in his work "On the Jews,"<sup>a</sup> states that the Assyrian city of 3 Babylon<sup>b</sup> was first founded by those who escaped the Flood. They were giants, and they built the tower well known in history. •When the tower was destroyed by God's power, these giants were scattered over the whole earth.

Eupolemus holds that Abraham was born in the tenth generation in the Babylonian city Camarina,<sup>c</sup> although others state that the city was named Ourie (which means
 "city of the Chaldeans")<sup>d</sup> and that Abraham was born in the thirteenth generation.<sup>e</sup> Abraham excelled all in nobility and wisdom; he sought and obtained the knowledge of astrology and the Chaldean craft,<sup>f</sup> and pleased God because he 4 eagerly sought to be reverent.<sup>h</sup> •At God's command, he traveled to Phoenicia and dwelt there. He pleased the Phoenician king by teaching the Phoenicians the cycles of the sun and moon, and everything else as well. Later, the Armenians' campaigned against the Phoenicians;<sup>j</sup> victorious, the Armenians took captive the nephew of Abraham. Abraham and his servants came to the rescue; they regained control of those who had been taken captive,<sup>k</sup> and they took as captives the children and 5 women of the enemy.<sup>l</sup> •Ambassadors were sent to Abraham to buy back the prisoners, but he chose not to make a profit out of the misery of others: He took what was required to feed his servants, and returned those whom he had captured.
 Abraham was treated as a guest by the city in the temple Argarizin,<sup>m</sup> which means 6 "mountain of the Most High."<sup>n</sup> •He received gifts from Melchizedek,<sup>o</sup> its ruler and priest of God.<sup>p</sup>

Gen 10-11

Gen 11:31

Gen 12:1-4

Gen 12:5

Gen 14:1-12

Gen 14:13-16

Gen 14:21-24

Gen 14:18-20

a. The title On the Jews is used by Alexander Polyhistor of the works of so many authors that it must simply give a general description of the content of a work, rather than its precise title. There is no reason to change it, as Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, p. 207 does, to On the Hebrews as more befitting a Samaritan author.

b. Freudenthal (Alexander Polyhistor, p. 207) pointed out that tēs Assourias modifies not peri loudaiōn but polin.

c. The name is not known elsewhere. Schnabel (Berosos, p. 69) suggested that the name derived from Ur as cult city of the moon god Sin, since in Ar. qamar means "moon." J. Strugnell has suggested that the name may have derived from the Jewish tradition which understood Ur as a furnace: The Gk. for furnace is kaminos, and this could have been confused to kamarinē.

d. Wacholder (HUCA 34 [1963] 100) holds that this is an interpretation of the author whereby ῥω κᾶδῡμ is taken as ῥω κᾶδῡμ. However, it seems simpler to hold that Eupolemus has taken Ur as a city, whereas the LXX, after transliteration, has taken it as a region, chōra tōn Chaldaïōn.

e. The text has many difficulties, and both Walter and Jacoby (FGH, vol. 3C, no. 724) suggest that the words "in the thirteenth generation" be excised. However, they seem too intertwined in the present text to do this neatly: en triskaidekatē geneshai Abraam geneai. The best suggestion is that of Wacholder (HUCA 34 [1963] 100) whereby the author is reporting two traditions: One placed Abraham in the thirteenth generation, and started from Enoch, prominent in the end of the F.; the other tradition started from Noah and the Flood, and placed Abraham in the tenth generation.

f. Later in the text, the discovery of astrology is attributed to Enoch. Here, therefore, as later in the phrase phamenon babylōnious tauta kai auton eurēkenai, the verb eurēin must be translated to mean not the discovery or invention but the seeking and obtaining of astrological knowledge.

g. Walter suggests that the "Chaldean craft," placed alongside astrology, could refer to arithmetic.

h. Wacholder (Eupolemus, p. 313) has translated this phrase: "who on account of his piety was well-pleasing to God." However, horman epi must be given the sense of "rush eagerly after."

i. See "Relation to the Old Testament" for a discussion of this reinterpretation.

j. Sodom is included in Canaanite territory in Gen 10:19.

k. Instead of aichmalōtīsamēnōn, I have read aichmalōtīsthētōn with Jacoby and Walter. If the transmitted text is accepted, the translation would be: "gained control of the captors."

l. Not the women and the people of Lot, as in Gen 14:16.

m. The grammar here is unclear. I have emended hieron to the locative hierō.

n. Freudenthal (Alexander Polyhistor, p. 87*) attempted to find a Heb. source for this interpretation, but one should follow Walter's lead (Klio 43-45 [1965] 285f.): methermēneuomenon does not signify an exact translation but, rather, a suitable meaning for the proper name.

o. This could refer to the gifts of food and wine (Gen 14:18) and thus is not necessarily in opposition to Gen 14:20b.

p. Hiereōs ontos tou theou: An alternative translation might be "priest of its god." One should

When famine came on the land, Abraham moved to Egypt with his whole household and dwelt there. The king of the Egyptians married Abraham's wife, since Abraham had said that she was his sister. *Furthermore,<sup>9</sup> Eupolemus relates that the king was not able to have intercourse with Abraham's wife and that his people and household were wasting away. When he summoned his diviners, they said, "Let the woman not be parted from her husband." In this way, the king of the Egyptians realized that she was the wife of Abraham, and he returned her to her husband.

8 Abraham lived in Heliopolis with the Egyptian priests and taught them much: He explained astrology and the other sciences to them, saying that the Babylonians and he himself had obtained this knowledge. However, he attributed the discovery of them to Enoch. Enoch first discovered astrology, not the Egyptians.
9 For the Babylonians hold that Belos, who is son of Kronos,<sup>5</sup> lived first.<sup>1</sup> Kronos begot sons named Belos and Canaan.<sup>2</sup> This Canaan fathered the ancestor of the Phoenicians, whose son was Chus,<sup>3</sup> called by the Greeks Asbolus.<sup>4</sup> Chus was the ancestor of the Ethiopians and the brother of Mitsraim, the ancestor of the Egyptians.

The Greeks say that Atlas discovered astrology. However, Atlas is the same as Enoch.

The son of Enoch was Methuselah. He learned everything through the angels of God, and so knowledge came to us.<sup>6</sup>

note in this context that 2Mac 6:2 tells how the temple at Gerizim was renamed the temple of Zeus the Hospitable (Xenios). The reason given in 2Mac for the change is: kathōs etugchanon hoi ton topon oikountes. Some commentators, in line with the attitude of Josephus, Ant 12.257–61, have taken this phrase to mean "as the dwellers there requested." However, the meaning may well be "in accordance with their character"; i.e., the people at Gerizim were noted for their hospitality.

q. Perissoteron: J. Strugnell has suggested the meaning "furthermore," rather than "in great detail" (Walter) or "even more extraordinary things" (Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 313). There is no need for Alexander Polyhistor suddenly to intrude an epitomizing presence here.

r. Mē einai chēran tēn gynaika: Both Walter and Wacholder take this phrase as an indirect statement: "they said that the woman was not a widow." However, there had been no previous discussion of such an issue, only that Abraham had said that Sarah was his sister. It would seem better to take the phrase as an oracular imperative (as befits a statement by diviners), where einai chēra would have the same meaning as chēraīnēin, "to part from one's husband." Whence the above translation.

s. As noted in the Introduction, n. 33, nowhere else is Belos identified with Kronos. To obtain the more usual genealogy, whereby Belos is a son of Kronos, one need only emend einai Kronon to einai Kronou.

t. Prōton genesthai: Wacholder (Eupolemus, p. 314) suggests that this means that Belos was the first giant. However, the Babylonian genealogy of mankind is being used to establish relationships among mankind; it is better to maintain the meaning that Belos was the first of mankind.

u. Since Freudenthal (Alexander Polyhistor, p. 208), all have replaced the attested word Chanaan with Cham. Such an emendation is based on the assumption that the phrase touton de ton Chanaan gennēsai ton patera tōn phoinikōn should be translated: "This person begot Canaan, father of the Phoenicians." In the biblical tradition at Gen 10:6, Canaan is the son of Ham, and so the referent of touton must be the biblical Ham. Hence the emendation. However, the phrase is most simply translated: "This Canaan begot the father of the Phoenicians." No emendation of the text is necessary. Perhaps reference here is to Phoenix, who in many genealogies was the son of the king of Tyre, Agenor. Without such an emendation as that proposed by Freudenthal, the genealogical system in this F. shows no connection with the biblical genealogy in Gen 10; nor should it, as the author of the F. is reporting a Babylonian genealogy, not the biblical one. The lack of such a connection with the biblical genealogy further reduces the plausibility of claiming that the F. shows advanced syncretistic tendencies.

v. Reading choun, with one family of the Eusebian MS tradition.

w. A person named Asbolus is otherwise known only from Hesiod, The Shield of Heracles, 185. In the genealogy of this fragment, the name suggests asbolos = "sooty," as a description of the Ethiopians.

x. As in 1QapGen 2:19; 1En 106. Should this theory of knowledge through angels be connected with the Promethean-type myth found in fragmentary form in 1En 8? For a recent discussion, see P. Hanson, "Rebellion in Heaven, Azazel, and Euhemeristic Heroes in 1 Enoch 6–11," JBL 96 (1977) 195–233; G. Nickelsburg, "Apocalyptic and Myth in 1 Enoch 6–11," JBL 96 (1977) 383–405.

To whom does this "us" refer? To Abraham? or to "Pseudo-Eupolemus"? One cannot be sure. For the latter possibility, note how the epitomator of 2Mac uses the first person plural in reflective asides, as at 2Mac 6:12–17, to bring the relevance of the narrative home to his readers.

PRAEPARATIO EVANGELICA 9.18.2

In anonymous works, we find that Abraham traced his ancestry to the giants. These dwelt in the land of Babylonia. Because of their impiety, they were destroyed by the gods. One of them, Belos, escaped death and settled in Babylon. He built a tower and lived in it; the tower was called Belos after its builder. After Abraham had learned astrology,<sup>a</sup> he first went to Phoenicia and taught it to the Phoenicians; later he went to Egypt. Gen 12:5,10

- a. Within this section, astrology would seem to be connected with the giants.

HISTORY

CLEODEMUS MALCHUS

(prior to First Century B.C.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY R. DORAN

What survives of the work of Cleodemus deals with the descendants of Abraham through his wife Keturah (Gen 25:1–4). Cleodemus focuses on the deeds of Afera and Iafra: They fight alongside Heracles; Africa receives its name from them; and a tribe, the Sophakes, is named after a descendant from the marriage of Heracles to one of the daughters of Afera.

Text

The extant fragment of Cleodemus is found in Josephus, Antiquities 1.239–41. In turn, this was cited by Eusebius in his Praeparatio Evangelica 9.20.2–4. The two texts show minor variations; the main differences occur in the spelling of proper nouns. Such name variation is rampant in the Septuagint translation of Genesis. The following translation is based on the critical edition of Josephus by B. Niese;<sup>1</sup> divergences from this text will be noted.

Original language

There is no linguistic evidence to make one look for a language other than Greek. This conclusion is supported by the use of Greek traditions in the retelling of Abraham's descendants.

The work of Alexander Polyhistor

Josephus states that he drew his information from Alexander Polyhistor. But from which work of Alexander is Josephus quoting? Alexander is best known for his work On the Jews, which furnished considerable material to Eusebius. Freudenthal held that this fragment of Cleodemus came from the same work.<sup>2</sup> But if so, why did not Eusebius quote directly from this source, which he knew so well otherwise? Freudenthal's guess that Eusebius wanted to use Josephus, rather than a pagan author, is not satisfactory.<sup>3</sup> A. von Gutschmid proposed that the fragment of Cleodemus came from another work of Alexander Polyhistor, that On Libya,<sup>4</sup> a proposal seconded by Jacoby.<sup>5</sup> Following Gutschmid, Walter has recently argued that Josephus did not know Polyhistor's On the Jews. If Josephus had known this work, he would have mentioned Polyhistor in his list of Greek authors interested in Jewish history (Apion 1.161–218).<sup>6</sup> Since Polyhistor often orders his material on an ethnographic and

<sup>1</sup> Flavii Josephi opera (Berlin, 1885–95) 7 vols.

<sup>2</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 13–15.

<sup>3</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, p. 15.

<sup>4</sup> A. von Gutschmid, Kleine Schriften II (Leipzig, 1890) p. 182.

<sup>5</sup> FGH 273 Fs. 32–47.

<sup>6</sup> N. Walter, "Zur Überlieferung einiger Reste früher jüdisch-hellenistischer Literatur bei Josephus, Clemens und Euseb.," Studia Patristica 7 (TU 92; Berlin, 1966) pp. 314–20. Walter notes that, at Apion 1.218, Josephus mentions two authors—Demetrius and Eupolemus—who are otherwise known to us through Alexander Polyhistor. However, Josephus is drawing on some other source for his knowledge of these authors.

geographic basis, it is reasonable to grant that the excerpt on Cleodemus was taken from Polyhistor's work On Libya.

Date

The date of Cleodemus must be before that of Alexander Polyhistor, i.e. before 50 B.C. Added confirmation is given by the distinction which Cleodemus, but not Josephus, draws between Libya and Africa. Cleodemus has Libya as the name for the whole continent, while Africa refers to a much narrower area, the Punic area around Carthage. For Romans, proconsular Africa comprised old Africa (= the area around Carthage) and new Africa (= the Numidian kingdom of King Juba I, annexed by Rome in 46 B.C.). Josephus, familiar with the Roman terminology, confuses Libya and Africa.<sup>7</sup>

Relation to the Old Testament

Cleodemus deals with the descendants of Abraham through Keturah. For Cleodemus, however, Genesis 25:1–6 is a springboard to other traditions, not found in the Old Testament. One should even question whether Cleodemus is dependent on the Greek traditions of the Bible as we know them. There is a discrepancy between the Septuagint and Cleodemus (in both Josephus and Eusebius) in the spelling of names. It is true that both the major Septuagint manuscript traditions and the manuscript tradition of Cleodemus add r to the name Ephah, but more evidence would be required to demonstrate that Cleodemus was using the Septuagint tradition.

| Name     | Hebrew | Septuagint | Josephus   | Eusebius |
|----------|--------|------------|------------|----------|
| Asshurim | ʾšwrym | Assourieim | Sourēn     | Assouri  |
| Ephah    | ʿyph   | Gaiphar    | Iaphran    | Aphra    |
| Epher    | ʿpr    | Apher      | (I)apheran | Apher    |

The African traditions

There were many traditions about Heracles' expedition to Libya. Sallust has the Medes, Persians, and Armenians travel to Libya after Heracles' death. Strabo speaks of Indians who accompanied Heracles on his expedition. Juba II, according to Plutarch, mentions Olbians and Myceneans; and Cleodemus talks of descendants of Abraham.<sup>8</sup> There were also divergent traditions regarding the place in which Heracles fought Antaios. Diodorus Siculus simply places the fight in Libya, present-day Africa. Strabo reports that some located the tomb of Antaios at Tingis (= Tangier) or Lingis, just south of Tangier. Mela states that Antaios founded Tingis. Juba II, according to Plutarch, reports that Sophax, son of Antaios' wife by Heracles, founded Tingis.<sup>9</sup> On the other hand, Procopius reports a tradition that Antaios wrestled with Heracles at Clipea, which is Aspis, on the Carthaginian coast.<sup>10</sup> The tradition of Procopius places the fight in the same geographical location as the tradition of Cleodemus.

The closest parallel in many ways to the account of Cleodemus is that of Juba II as reported by Plutarch.<sup>11</sup> Juba states that the people of Tingis held that Heracles married the wife of the defeated Antaios and had by her a son, Sophax. The son of Sophax was Diodorus. Cleodemus narrates that Antaios' wife had a son by Heracles, and his name was Diodorus; the son of Diodorus was Sophax, from whom the barbarians, the Sophakes, are named. Who are these Sophakes? Juba II traces his own lineage, according to Plutarch, back to Masinissa and the Numidian tribes of the Massyli. Now, the great rival of Masinissa

<sup>7</sup> M. Leglay, "Africa," Der kleine Pauly (Stuttgart, 1964) vol. 1, cols. 109f.

<sup>8</sup> Sallust, Jugurtha 16f.; Strabo, 17.3.7; Plutarch, Sertorius 9.

<sup>9</sup> Diodorus Siculus, 1.17.21, 24; 4.17.4; Strabo, 17.3.8; Mela, 3.106; Plutarch, Sertorius 9.

<sup>10</sup> Procopius, Wars 4.10.24.

<sup>11</sup> Plutarch, Sertorius 9.

was named Sophax, the leader of the Masaesyli.<sup>12</sup> One could surmise that the Sophakes mentioned by Cleodemus refers to the Numidian tribes who lived in the area around Carthage.

As for Juba's account, one should not forget that Mauretania, in which lay Tingis, was given to him by the Romans to rule in 25 B.C. Juba took the legends surrounding Heracles and Antaios and refashioned them as an act of political propaganda to claim ancestral support for his reign in Mauretania.<sup>13</sup> Juba's ancestor Sophax would have founded and named Mauretania's major city, Tingis; Juba's other ancestor Diodorus would have ruled many of the Libyan peoples. The legend itself, however, must be dated to earlier than 25 B.C., as it is found in a Judaized form in Cleodemus.

Provenance

Cleodemus was dubbed a Samaritan by Freudenthal: The added name Malchos pointed to a Semitic origin, and the "syncretism" whereby Abraham's descendants were linked with Heracles suggested an author from the syncretistic Samaritans. Freudenthal even suggested that the Heracles of the legend was the Heracles-Melkart of Tyre.<sup>14</sup>

Freudenthal's belief that the name Malchos was non-Jewish and derived from the name of the god Moloch<sup>15</sup> has been disproved by its appearance in the documents from the Muraba'at caves. Jews could have names from the root mlk.<sup>16</sup> Secondly, the equation of Samaritan and syncretist is no longer acceptable. Freudenthal's position does not explain why the fragment is so concerned with the founding of Africa, and makes no reference to Tyre.

B. Z. Wacholder has suggested that Cleodemus was a heathen.<sup>17</sup> His new argument is that Cleodemus is called a prophet (prophētēs), a title which no Jewish author would claim for himself at this time. But it is not clear whether prophētēs is a title applied to Cleodemus by himself or by Alexander Polyhistor. Furthermore, prophētēs has a wide range of meanings, some of which belong in the realm of Greek cult but others of which could be at home in the Judaism of this period.<sup>18</sup>

Cleodemus' concern for the founding of Africa through descendants of Abraham suggests he was a Jew living in that area, possibly even in the main city of Carthage.<sup>19</sup> It is true that Cleodemus notes that Assyria received its name from another of the sons of Abraham through Keturah, but this is mentioned almost in passing. The emphasis rests squarely on the African genealogy. If the above analysis, which connects the Sophakes with the Numidian tribes, is correct, Cleodemus would be reproducing indigenous traditions about the connection of the Numidian tribes to Africa and presenting them in a Judaized form.<sup>20</sup>

Relation to apocryphal books

The general invasion of eastern peoples with Heracles into Libya and their gradual development into the various ethnic groups of Libya was the basis for many traditions.

<sup>12</sup> Polybius, 14.1–10; Livy, 28.17–18; 30.3. See P. Habel, "Syphax," Pauly-Wissowa 4 (zweite Reihe), cols. 1472–77.

<sup>13</sup> S. Gsell also suggested that Juba I provided a genealogy for his lineage through Heracles. Apollodorus (Library 2.7.8) mentions that Heracles had a son Iobes by a woman named Certhe. Gsell makes the connection between Iobes (= Juba) and Certhe, from whom would be named Cirta, the capital of Juba I's kingdom. S. Gsell, Histoire Ancienne de l'Afrique du Nord (Paris, 1921–28) vol. 8, pp. 236–38. Gsell also discusses here the limits of Juba II's kingdom. See also J. Desanges, "Les territoires gétules de Juba II," Revue des Études Anciennes 66 (1964) 33–47.

<sup>14</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 133f. S. Gsell has shown that the Heracles of the Juba tradition had no connection with Heracles-Melkart. S. Gsell, Histoire Ancienne, vol. 6, pp. 154f.

<sup>15</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 131f.

<sup>16</sup> DJD 2, no. 19, 11.27–28; no. 91b, 11.3.5.

<sup>17</sup> B. Z. Wacholder, "Cleodemus Malchus," EncyJud 5, col. 603.

<sup>18</sup> Friedrich, TDNT, vol. 6, p. 794. Wacholder states that the title may indicate a temple official, "which implies Phoenician or Nabatean origin."

<sup>19</sup> N. Walter, JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 116f.

<sup>20</sup> The suggestion that Juba II copied Cleodemus, whose traditions he would have learned through his Jewish wife, is unnecessary. (Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 135f.). Both the geographical location and the connections made in the narrative differ. In Juba, Heracles marries the wife of his adversary, while, in Cleodemus, he marries the wife of his partner.

Cleodemus has characterized this invasion as one which involved descendants of Abraham. Such an attempt to connect the Jews with other nations is found also in the Spartan connection of 1 Maccabees 12:20–23.<sup>21</sup> The Cretan Jews also tried to trace their lineage to Greek heroes.<sup>22</sup> D. Georgi has properly emphasized this view of Abraham as colony founder and as culture bringer. Heracles was a bringer of culture, and Abraham is depicted as related to him by marriage and as spreading culture prior to Heracles.<sup>23</sup> Such a view of the patriarchs is also present in Artapanus and “Pseudo-Eupolemus.”<sup>24</sup>

Should Cleodemus be labeled syncretistic? Rather than use this term pejoratively, one should recognize that Cleodemus is doing what the genealogists of Genesis were doing: He is tracing the various peoples of the world back to common ancestors. Cleodemus, in his use of non-Jewish historical traditions, witnesses to the creativity and variety of Judaism in the hellenistic period.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 92f.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 259–61.

Freudenthal, J. Alexander Polyhistor und die von ihm erhaltenen Reste jüdischer und samaritanischer Geschichtswerke. Hellenistische Studien 1–2; Breslau, 1874–75.

Jacoby, F. Die Fragmente der griechischen Historiker. Leiden, 1954–64.

Wacholder, B. Z. “Cleodemus Malchus,” EncyJud 5, col. 603.

Walter, N. “Kleodemus Malchas,” JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 115–20.

<sup>21</sup> See B. Cardauns, “Juden und Spartaner. Zur hellenistisch-jüdischen Literatur,” Hermes 95 (1967) 317–24.

<sup>22</sup> See the etymology of Iudaioi from Mt. Ida, in Crete, reported in Tacitus, Histories 5.2. A. M. A. Hospers-Jansen has written that this genealogy could never have come from a Jew. See her Tacitus over de Joden (Hist. 5.2–13) (Groningen, 1949) p. 191. In its present form, the account of the expulsion of the Jews from Crete may reflect an anti-Jewish (Hospers-Jansen suggests Lat.) source. The actual etymology, however, is highly laudatory of the Jews.

<sup>23</sup> D. Georgi, Die Gegner des Paulus im 2.Korintherbrief: Studien zur religiösen Propaganda in der Spätantike (Wissenschaftliche Monographien zum Alten und Neuen Testament 11; NeuKirchen-Vluyn, 1964) p. 65.

<sup>24</sup> See the relevant sections in this edition of the Pseudepigrapha.

JOSEPHUS, ANTIQUITIES 1.239–41 (PrEv 9.20.2–4)

239 It is told how this Ofren waged war against Libya and occupied it. His grandsons, 240 who settled in the land, named it Africa after him. •Alexander Polyhistor confirms what I say when he states: “Cleodemus the prophet, also called Malchas,<sup>a</sup> recorded the history of the Jews, just as Moses, their lawgiver, had done. Cleodemus states 241 that Keturah bore Abraham mighty sons. •Cleodemus gives their names, calling three of them Afera, Surim, Iafra.<sup>b</sup> Assyria was named after Surim; the city of Afra and the region Africa were named after Afera and Iafra, for Afera and Iafra fought with Heracles in his campaign in Libya against Antaios. Heracles married the daughter of Afera and had by her a son, Diodorus.<sup>c</sup> Diodorus had a son, Sophax,<sup>d</sup> from whom the barbarians get the name of Sophakes.

Gen 25:1–6

Gen 25:3f.

a. I have followed here the reading of Eusebius, Malchas, rather than the Malchos of Josephus, as the more difficult reading. See also the Introduction on “Provenance.”

b. I have followed the readings of Josephus for the spelling of the names; Eusebius seems to show a tendency to harmonize with the LXX text. See also the Introduction, “Relation to the Old Testament.”

c. Following the reading of Eusebius, not that of Josephus, Didōros. This is in line with the tradition of Juba II, as preserved in Plutarch, Sertorius 9.

d. The MSS of Josephus read Sophōna, those of Eusebius Sophonan. However, in view of the following tribal name Sophakas (Eusebius Sophas) and the tradition as in Juba II, I have read Sophaka.

ROMANCE

ARTAPANUS

(Third to Second Century B.C.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY J. J. COLLINS

The three fragments of Artapanus deal with the exploits in Egypt of three famous ancestors of the Jews: Abraham, Joseph, and Moses. Each is presented as a founder of culture. Abraham teaches the Egyptians to study the stars. Joseph organizes the division of the land and discovers measurements. He is also administrator of Egypt and stores grain during the seven prosperous years. The career of Moses is described at greatest length. He is identified with Mousaeus, teacher of Orpheus, and also with the god Hermes. He is credited with a wide variety of discoveries and with establishing the Egyptian animal cults. Because of the envy of the Egyptian king, he is sent on a campaign against the Ethiopians, which becomes a resounding success. Subsequently, Moses kills the man sent to assassinate him and flees to Arabia. He restrains the Arabs from campaigning against Egypt, but returns to demand the release of the Hebrews. When the king resists, Moses prevails by using his supernatural powers. Most of the Egyptian temples are destroyed in the plagues, and the sacred animals are destroyed along with the Egyptians in the Red Sea. Two accounts are given of the crossing of the sea. One, attributed to the Memphites, says the Hebrews crossed at low tide. The other, attributed to the Heliopolitans, is clearly miraculous and is evidently preferred by Artapanus.

Texts

The fragments of Artapanus are preserved in Eusebius, Praeparatio Evangelica, Book 9, chapters 18, 23, and 27. The third fragment is partially paralleled in Clement, Stromata, 1.23.154,2f. The present translation is based on the edition of Eusebius by Karl Mras.<sup>1</sup> The text can also be found in Jacoby's Die Fragmente der griechischen Historiker<sup>2</sup> and in A.-M. Denis, Fragmenta pseudepigraphorum quae supersunt graeca.<sup>3</sup>

On the textual tradition of Eusebius see the general introduction to Alexander Polyhistor by John Strugnell (above).

It is important to bear in mind that we do not have actual excerpts from Artapanus but only the summaries of Alexander Polyhistor, insofar as these have been preserved by Eusebius. The parallel in Clement is limited to a single incident (the nocturnal visit of Moses to the king) and it omits some of the miraculous details of the text in Eusebius.

The first fragment in Eusebius is presented as an excerpt from Artapanus' Judaica, while the other two fragments are said to be from his Peri Ioudaiōn ("About the Jews"). The latter title is also given in Clement. It is not clear, however, whether two distinct works were involved. The three fragments could easily fit in one continuous history, and Judaica is most probably a loose reference to the Peri Ioudaiōn, rather than an exact title. The evidence is not sufficient to permit certainty on this matter.

<sup>1</sup> Mras, GCS 43.1, pp. 504, 516f., 519–24.

<sup>2</sup> Jacoby, FGH, vol. 3C, no. 726, pp. 680–86.

<sup>3</sup> Denis, PVTG 2, pp. 186–95.

Original language

There is no reason to suspect that the original language was other than Greek. Artapanus' vocabulary has many points of contact with classical Greek literature as well as the koinē of the hellenistic age.<sup>4</sup>

Date

The only clear evidence for the date of Artapanus is that he must have written prior to Alexander Polyhistor, who summarized the work about the middle of the first century B.C. Proposed dates include the time of Ptolemy IV Philopator (221–204 B.C.),<sup>5</sup> the early second century B.C.,<sup>6</sup> and about 100 B.C.<sup>7</sup> Artapanus apparently knew the Septuagint<sup>8</sup> and also reflects many themes of the anti-Jewish Egyptian accounts of Moses, of which the earliest is found in Manetho (who flourished about 280 B.C.).<sup>9</sup> Both these considerations suggest an earliest possible date of approximately 250 B.C.<sup>10</sup> The syncretistic character of the work has been urged as an argument for an early date<sup>11</sup> but is in fact compatible with any date in the period 250–100 B.C.

Three considerations may help to specify the date further. Cerfaux has argued that certain passages in Artapanus reflect an attempt by Ptolemy IV Philopator to assimilate the Jews to the worship of Dionysus.<sup>12</sup> Such an attempt is explicitly alleged in 3 Maccabees 2:29f., where Philopator is said to require that the Jews be registered and "branded by fire on their bodies with an ivy leaf, the emblem of Dionysus," while those who voluntarily join the mysteries are granted equal citizenship with the Alexandrians.<sup>13</sup> Cerfaux also notes the evidence of the Schubart Papyrus that Philopator attempted to organize the cult of Dionysus by requiring those who practiced initiation to deposit their sacred doctrine (hieros logos) sealed and signed with their names. Cerfaux relates this requirement of the Schubart Papyrus to the enigmatic passage in Artapanus (PrEv 9.27.24–26) where the king bids Moses speak the name of his God and then writes the name on a tablet and seals it. Cerfaux also takes the statement in Artapanus (PrEv 9.27.20) that Chenephres required the Jews to wear linen garments as an allusion to the attempted assimilation to the cult of Dionysus. If Artapanus is indeed alluding to events in the reign of Philopator in this indirect manner, we should assume that he wrote during that reign or shortly thereafter. However, Cerfaux's argument is too hypothetical to count as decisive evidence, and is no more than a possibility.

A second consideration arises from Artapanus' mention of the disease elephantiasis (PrEv 9.27.20). According to Plutarch (Quaestionum convivialium liber 8.9.1) this disease was first identified in the time of Asclepiades of Prusa, who flourished in the first century B.C. However, it had already been the subject of a treatise falsely ascribed to Democritus and believed to be the work of Bolus of Mendes, in Egypt, who was a contemporary of

<sup>4</sup> See Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 215f.; I. Merentites, Ho Ioudaios Logios Artapanos kai to Ergon Autou (Athens, 1961) pp. 184–86.

<sup>5</sup> So Denis, PVTG 2, p. 257, following a suggestion of L. Cerfaux, "Influence des Mystères sur le Judaïsme Alexandrin Avant Philon," Recueil L. Cerfaux (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium 6: Gembloux, 1954), vol. 1, pp. 81–85.

<sup>6</sup> So B. Z. Wacholder, "Biblical Chronology and World Chronicles," HTR 61 (1968) 460, n. 34, and Eupolemus: A Study of Judaeo-Greek Literature (Monographs of the Hebrew Union College 3; Cincinnati, 1974) p. 106, n. 40.

<sup>7</sup> So Walter, JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 125; Merentites, Ho Ioudaios Logios, p. 9.

<sup>8</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, p. 216.

<sup>9</sup> See P. M. Fraser, Ptolemaic Alexandria (Oxford, 1972) vol. 1, p. 706.

<sup>10</sup> The origins of the LXX are widely disputed. The traditional date, given by LetAris, is the reign of Ptolemy II Philadelphus (287–247 B.C.). While the Letter is not reliable historical evidence, this period is still the most probable for the translation of the Pentateuch. See the discussion by S. Jellicoe in The Septuagint and Modern Study (Oxford, 1968) pp. 52–58. He argues that "association direct or indirect with Philadelphus places the undertaking well before the middle of the third century B.C." and that "Apart from the Aristaeas tradition this is borne out by the available external evidence." Jellicoe also discusses dissenting views (pp. 59–73).

<sup>11</sup> Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 106. Wacholder's assumption that "the Maccabean rebellion reaffirmed monotheistic belief" in Egyptian Judaism exaggerates both the syncretism of Artapanus and the influence of the revolt on the Diaspora.

<sup>12</sup> Cerfaux, Recueil L. Cerfaux, vol. 1, pp. 81–85.

<sup>13</sup> Cf. 2Mac 6:7f., which says that in the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, Jews in Jerusalem were compelled "to wear ivy wreaths and walk in the Dionysiac procession."

Callimachus, in the third century B.C.<sup>14</sup> Artapanus could, of course, have referred to it at any later time, but he would have had more reason to single it out for mention if it was newly identified when he wrote.

A third possible clue is provided by Artapanus' statement (PrEv 9.27.7) that Moses included Egyptian farmers in his army. Ptolemy IV Philopator was the first Ptolemy to permit the Egyptian peasantry to bear arms in his service, before the battle of Raphia in 217 B.C.<sup>15</sup> The allusion by Artapanus to peasant participation in Moses' army is not prompted by the biblical account or by the polemics of Egyptians such as Manetho. It may be taken to reflect the historical development in the time of Philopator.

These considerations are by no means conclusive. Artapanus may have written at any time in the period 250–100 B.C. However, the few more specific clues we have all point to a date toward the end of the third century B.C., which may be tentatively taken as the most probable time of composition.

Provenance

All the narratives are set in Egypt. Even the fragment on Abraham deals only with his sojourn in Egypt. Consequently the Egyptian provenance of the work is unquestioned.

Within Egypt Artapanus has usually been localized in Alexandria.<sup>16</sup> This assumption has been questioned by Fraser, who notes that Artapanus has little in common with the literature usually ascribed to Alexandrian Judaism. Fraser argues that Artapanus "is familiar with the native life of Egypt and the purely priestly traditions" and suggests that he did not belong to the influential Jewish circles around Philometor or a later Ptolemy but (as his Persian name might suggest) was "a Jew of mixed descent, possibly resident in another centre such as Memphis."<sup>17</sup> Against Fraser, we must note that Artapanus' knowledge of Egyptian customs seems to be primarily derived from Greek authors (e.g. Hecataeus of Abdera).<sup>18</sup> However, Fraser is quite right that the assumption of Alexandrian provenance is gratuitous. There is no specific indication of the place of authorship within Egypt. We should at least note the distinctiveness of Artapanus over against the main corpus of allegedly Alexandrian literature.

Historical importance

There have been occasional attempts to claim that some of the details of Artapanus' narrative have a historical basis. So Freudenthal suggests that the legend of Moses' campaign against Ethiopia arose from confusion with another Moses (Messu or Mesu), known from an inscription, who was governor of Ethiopia and an approximate contemporary of Moses.<sup>19</sup> Also J. Gutman suggests that the Chenephres of Artapanus was a historical pharaoh of the thirteenth dynasty in the eighteenth century B.C.<sup>20</sup> Neither suggestion is plausible. Artapanus has his closest literary parallels in the historical romances; and he freely mixes fantasy with traditional lore.<sup>21</sup> The historical significance of the work lies in the type of hellenistic Judaism it attests, rather than in the "historical" allusions it preserves.

Artapanus provides one variant of the apologetic literature of hellenistic Judaism, and, on a broader level, of what may be called the "competitive historiography" of the hellenistic

<sup>14</sup> Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 106. On Bolus see H. Diels, Die Fragmente der Vorsokratiker (Berlin, 1956<sup>8</sup>) vol. 2, p. 216.

<sup>15</sup> See W. W. Tarn, Hellenistic Civilisation (New York, 1961<sup>3</sup>), p. 179. I owe this suggestion to Professor J. Strugnell.

<sup>16</sup> E.g. Walter, JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 124; Merentites, Ho Ioudaios Logios, p. 9.

<sup>17</sup> Fraser, Ptolemaic Alexandria, vol. 1, p. 706; vol. 2, p. 985 (n. 199). Fraser notes the occurrence of related Persian names in Egypt and the village of Artapatou, near Oxyrhynchus, attested from the third century A.D.

<sup>18</sup> See Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 80.

<sup>19</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, p. 155.

<sup>20</sup> J. Gutman, Ha Sifrut ha-Yehudit ha-Hellenistit (Jerusalem, 1963), vol. 2, p. 135. See Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 105. Wacholder also notes other attempted identifications.

<sup>21</sup> The affinities of Artapanus with hellenistic popular romances were shown especially by M. Braun, History and Romance (Oxford, 1938) pp. 26–31, 99–102. See the recent evaluation by D. L. Tiede, The Charismatic Figure as Miracle Worker (SBLDS 1; Missoula, Mont., 1972) pp. 146–77.

age.<sup>22</sup> Throughout the Near East, from Egypt to Babylon, the native sovereign kingships had been suppressed by the Greeks. Subsequent generations looked to their past nostalgically and tended to romanticize their history by stressing its antiquity and superiority. Berossus of Babylon and Manetho of Egypt, both of whom wrote in Greek at the beginning of the third century B.C., were outstanding examples of such propagandistic historiography. Manetho initiated a long line of Greco-Egyptian writers (Lysimachus, Chaeremon, Apion) who augmented the glory of Egypt by disparaging the Jews and giving derogatory accounts of their origins. Fragments of these writers are preserved by Josephus in his Against Apion.<sup>23</sup> Josephus attempts to refute the charges of these writers directly. Earlier Jewish writers, such as Artapanus,<sup>24</sup> did not address the charges directly but took up the weapons of their adversaries and produced romanticized histories of their own.

The competitive historiography of Artapanus has both negative and positive aspects. On the one hand, several details, especially in the treatment of Moses, appear to be implicit refutations of writers such as Manetho, who had alleged that Moses forbade his people to worship the gods or abstain from the flesh of the sacred animals (Apion 1.239). Artapanus claimed that it was Moses who established these cults. Manetho alleged that Moses had invaded Egypt (Apion 1.241); Artapanus stated that Moses restrained Raguel when the latter wished to invade. According to Manetho, the pharaoh had to protect the sacred animals from Moses (Apion 1.244); Artapanus contended that the pharaoh buried the animals which Moses had made sacred since he wished to conceal Moses' inventions. In Manetho's account, the pharaoh sought refuge in Ethiopia when Moses invaded (Apion 1.246); in Artapanus, Moses conducted a campaign against Ethiopia on behalf of the pharaoh. Such implicit refutations of the Egyptian account constitute the negative side of Artapanus' historiography. More positively, he portrayed each of his subjects, but especially Moses, as a founder of culture, and attributed to them all the inventions which are beneficial to humanity. Here again the claim is competitive. Artapanus repeatedly claimed for Moses achievements elsewhere attributed to other legendary heroes, especially the Egyptian Sesostris,<sup>25</sup> e.g. inventions in military matters, and in construction and irrigation, the division of Egypt into thirty-six nomes, and victory over the Ethiopians. Further, Artapanus exalted Moses even above the divinities of the Egyptians. Isis was taught by Hermes,<sup>26</sup> but Moses was identified with him. The subordination of Isis to Moses is also expressed through the episode in which Moses strikes the earth (which was traditionally identified with Isis) with his rod (PrEv 9.27.32).<sup>27</sup>

The foregoing examples may suffice to set the work of Artapanus in the context of the competitive historiography of the hellenistic age. The purpose of the work may be seen as an attempt to bolster Jewish ethnic pride in the Jewish community.<sup>28</sup> A similar purpose, on a much more sophisticated level, may be attributed to such writers as Josephus and Philo. The work is apparently directed outward to any gentiles who might care to listen, but undoubtedly had its main effect on the self-esteem of the Jewish community.<sup>29</sup>

Perhaps the greatest historical significance of Artapanus, however, is that he represents a very unusual, and distinctly syncretistic, theological stance within Judaism.

Theological importance

Artapanus has been sharply criticized as one who was more concerned with the glory of Judaism than with the purity of his religion.<sup>30</sup> He has also been defended as an apologist

<sup>22</sup> See Collins, Between Athens and Jerusalem, pp. 33–35.

<sup>23</sup> Josephus, Apion 1.75–105, 227–50 (Manetho); 288–92 (Chaeremon); 304–11 (Lysimachus); 2.1–144 (Apion). See J. G. Gager, Moses in Greco-Roman Paganism (SBLMS 16; Nashville, Tenn., 1972), pp. 113–24.

<sup>24</sup> Cf. also Eup., Ps-Eup, ClMal.

<sup>25</sup> See Tiede, The Charismatic Figure, pp. 150–67. On Sesostris see Diodorus 1.54–57.

<sup>26</sup> Diodorus, 1.17.3 and 1.27.4; Tiede, The Charismatic Figure, p. 155.

<sup>27</sup> Tiede, The Charismatic Figure, p. 174.

<sup>28</sup> Braun, History and Romance, p. 26f.; Tiede, The Charismatic Figure, p. 149.

<sup>29</sup> Compare V. Tcherikover, "Jewish Apologetic Literature Reconsidered," Eos 48 (1956) 169–93.

<sup>30</sup> So E. Schürer, History, vol. 3, p. 208. Also P. Dalbert, Die Theologie der hellenistisch-jüdischen Missionsliteratur unter Ausschluss von Philo und Josephus (Hamburg, 1954), p. 52.

whose narrative was shaped by the need to refute accusations.<sup>31</sup> Neither assessment is quite accurate, although each has some basis. The primary interest certainly lies in the Jewish heroes Abraham, Joseph, and especially Moses. God remains in the background, except for an occasional miraculous manifestation in the "divine voice" (PrEv 9.27.21, 36) and the mysterious power of the divine name (PrEv 9.27.25f.). Further, Artapanus takes the unparalleled step of making Moses the founder of the Egyptian animal cults. This step is certainly part of the general apologetic glorification of Moses, but no other Jewish apologist goes so far. Artapanus is similarly at variance with other intertestamental writings when he presents both Abraham and Moses as teachers of astrology.<sup>32</sup> Further, he identifies Moses with the god Hermes and says he was deemed worthy of divine honor by the priests (PrEv 9.27.6).

However, Artapanus' attitude toward the Egyptian cults is not a simple one. It must be seen in the light of his general euhemeristic<sup>33</sup> tendency to explain pagan divinities by reference to inventions which were useful to mankind. It is crucial to his theology that only pagan divinities are so explained. The God of the Jews is still regarded as "the master of the universe" (PrEv 9.27.22). The Egyptian cults may be legitimized by being attributed to Moses, but they are only legitimized in an attenuated sense. We have already seen that Isis is regarded as subordinate to Moses. This is also clearly true of the animal cults. Ultimately, as Tiede remarks, "when the showdown comes, it is no surprise that the Egyptians who brought along their animal gods (27.35) are destroyed by fire and flood (27.37)."<sup>34</sup>

Artapanus, then, does not compromise the superiority of the God of the Jews. He can also use the term "god" for pagan deities (PrEv 9.27.4) and does not object when Moses is deemed worthy of divine honor. Yet, we should bear in mind that even in the biblical text God made Moses "a god to Pharaoh" (Ex 7:1), a point noted and utilized by Philo (Vit Mos 1.158).<sup>35</sup> However, this is not to deny that Artapanus is syncretistic far beyond the orthodoxy of the Deuteronomic or rabbinic traditions. Not only does he regard the animal cults of the Egyptians as harmless, but he apparently classifies them among the things which are beneficial for mankind. Viewed as cultural products for human benefit, they are considered quite acceptable.

The piety of Artapanus is conspicuously similar to that of hellenistic paganism. He is especially interested in the miraculous, and even, perhaps, the magical.<sup>36</sup> While the Egyptian magicians might seem to be disparaged for their reliance on tricks and charms, great emphasis is placed on Moses' rod, and on the mysterious power of the divine name. The

<sup>31</sup> So G. Vermès, "La figure de Moïse au tournant des deux Testaments," in Moïse, L'Homme de l'Alliance (Cahiers Sioniens; Paris, 1955), p. 73.

<sup>32</sup> Contrast SibOr 3.218–30; Philo Abr 69–71, 77; Jub 12:16–20. Abraham is also said to have discovered astrology in Ps-Eup (PrEv 9.17.3), and in Ps-Hec (Josephus, Ant 1.8.2 [168]) he is said to have taught the Egyptians astronomy. See further J. H. Charlesworth, "Jewish Astrology in the Talmud, Pseudepigrapha, the Dead Sea Scrolls, and Early Palestinian Synagogues," HTR 70 (1977) 183–200.

<sup>33</sup> Euhemerism is the theory that the gods were originally kings and conquerors who brought benefits to humanity and that their worship arose as an expression of gratitude. The term is derived from Euhemerus of Messene, who put forward this theory about 300 B.C.

<sup>34</sup> Tiede, The Charismatic Figure, p. 162. Recently C. R. Holladay (Theios Aner in Hellenistic Judaism [SBLDS 40; Missoula, Mont., 1977] 229–32) has urged that the syncretism of Artapanus should be further qualified. He notes that Moses was called Mousaios by the Greeks, deemed worthy of divine honor by Egyptian priests, and called Hermes by them or by the Egyptians. It is doubtful whether this point can really qualify Artapanus' syncretism. There is no suggestion that Artapanus thought these names were wrongly given to Moses, or even that Mousaios or Hermes had any existence apart from Moses. Artapanus' point seems to be that Hermes is only a name that pagans gave to Moses. In one respect he undermines the divinity of Hermes, but he also affirms the esteem in which Moses was allegedly held. Holladay also points to the ambiguity of the reference to the sacred animals, cats, dogs, and ibises in PrEv 9.27.4, and stresses that the ibis and Apis were not directly consecrated by Moses. However, in view of the reference in PrEv 9.27.12 to "the creatures which Moses had made sacred" there is little room for doubt that Moses is credited with establishing the animal cults. This again subordinates these cults to Moses, but also claims for him whatever prestige may be derived from them.

<sup>35</sup> See D. Georgi, Die Gegner des Paulus im 2. Korintherbrief: Studien zur religiösen Propaganda in der Spätantike. (Wissenschaftliche Monographien zum Alten und Neuen Testament 11; Neukirchen-Vluyn, 1964) pp. 147–51.

<sup>36</sup> See Tiede, The Charismatic Figure, pp. 166–74. This aspect of Artapanus was emphasized by O. Weinreich, Gebet und Wunder (Stuttgart, 1929). It is noteworthy that the citation in Clement downplays the miraculous element in Moses' escape from prison. According to the text in Eusebius the doors opened of their own accord (automatós), in Clement they open "in accordance with the will of God."

portrayal of Moses has often been compared with the hellenistic "divine man" (theios anēr), and while Artapanus does not use this expression we may agree with Tiede that he would scarcely have objected to it.<sup>37</sup>

Relation to canonical books

Artapanus' discussions of the careers in Egypt of Abraham, Joseph, and Moses have at least points of departure in Genesis 12:10–20, Genesis 37–50, and Exodus 1–16. Artapanus deals freely with the biblical narrative. Yet the correspondences with the Septuagint, especially in the account of the plagues, are too close for mere coincidence, and are verbally exact in several cases. We must assume with Freudenthal that he knew the Septuagint translation.<sup>38</sup> Much of Artapanus' additional material has no biblical basis, but in a few cases he is clearly modifying the biblical account for apologetic purposes. So, for example, Joseph is not sold into slavery by his brothers, but himself requested the Arabs to convey him to Egypt. Again, Artapanus has Moses kill an Egyptian (PrEv 9.27.18) but only in self-defense, in sharp contrast to the biblical incident (Ex 2:12) in which he murders an Egyptian for striking a Hebrew.

Non-biblical sources

Various attempts have been made to link Artapanus with other hellenistic Jewish writings. Freudenthal suggested that Artapanus, Pseudo-Hecataeus, and the Letter of Aristeas were all the work of a single forger.<sup>39</sup> Hugo Willrich at first argued that Artapanus was dependent on Pseudo-Hecataeus, but later revised this opinion and attributed the influence to the genuine Hecataeus of Abdera.<sup>40</sup> More recently, Merentites has suggested dependence on Eupolemus.<sup>41</sup> However, there is nothing to indicate the direct dependence of Artapanus on any earlier non-biblical Jewish writings. He shares some interests and motifs with Eupolemus, Pseudo-Eupolemus, and Pseudo-Hecataeus, but these are common apologetic elements and do not establish direct literary dependence between the individual works.

There is no doubt that Artapanus was influenced by the anti-Jewish historiography of Egyptian writers, quite probably by Manetho.<sup>42</sup> There is general agreement that he also drew on Hecataeus of Abdera, since he has close parallels with Diodorus of Sicily (who wrote about 60–30 B.C.) and Hecataeus is the most likely common source.<sup>43</sup>

Influence on later writings

There is also wide agreement that Josephus was dependent on Artapanus, since both record a number of incidents which are not found in Exodus—most notably the campaign against Ethiopia (Ant 2.10.1f. [238–53]).<sup>44</sup> Josephus' account is more lengthy than the

<sup>37</sup> Tiede, The Charismatic Figure, p. 177. The Moses of Artapanus is also viewed as a "divine man," or theios anēr, by Weinreich, Gebet und Wunder, p. 166; L. Bieler, Theios Aner (Wien, 1935–36) vol. 2, pp. 30–33; and Georgi, Die Gegner, pp. 147–51. For a contrary view see Holladay, Theios Aner, 199–232. Holladay contrasts Moses' escape from prison with that of Dionysus in the Bacchae of Euripides. He stresses that Moses is clearly subordinate to the God who is despotēs of the universe, while Dionysus is himself despotēs. We may agree with Holladay that Artapanus does not "ascribe divinity to Moses in any way approaching what we find in Euripides' Bacchae" and that his propaganda does not depend on showing that Moses is a theios anēr. Yet, in the process of asserting the general superiority of Moses, he suggests that Moses is superior to some "divinities" worshiped by the pagans, and identical with others. Consequently, in so far as the epithet "divine" can be applied to the pagan gods, it can be applied to Moses, too. This, however, is "divinity" only in an attenuated sense and is not comparable to the status of the God of the Jews.

<sup>38</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, p. 216.

<sup>39</sup> Alexander Polyhistor, p. 165.

<sup>40</sup> H. Willrich, Juden und Griechen (Göttingen, 1895) pp. 168f.; and by the same author, Judaica (Göttingen, 1900) pp. 111–16.

<sup>41</sup> Merentites, Ho Ioudaios Logios, p. 184. Merentites notes that this suggestion has already been made by A. Schlatter.

<sup>42</sup> Merentites, Ho Ioudaios Logios; Fraser, Ptolemaic Alexandria, vol. 1, p. 706. See above, "Historical importance."

<sup>43</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 160f.; Willrich, Judaica, pp. 111–16. Some of the parallels are also found in Plutarch (Isis and Osiris, 32, 57, 72).

<sup>44</sup> So e.g. Walter, JSHRZ 1.2, p. 121.

preserved account of Artapanus, and it has been widely supposed that the episodes of Moses' victory over the serpents and his marriage were originally included by Artapanus but omitted by Alexander Polyhistor.<sup>45</sup> However, Josephus omits key points of Artapanus' account, such as the founding of Hermopolis and the introduction of circumcision. Most significantly Josephus provides an entirely different explanation for the origin of the campaign. Accordingly, some scholars deny that Josephus was dependent on Artapanus.<sup>46</sup> The question cannot be resolved definitively since we have only fragments of Artapanus. Josephus could scarcely have followed Artapanus' explanation of the Ethiopian campaign in any case, since it involved Moses' role in establishing the animal cults. Hence he may have deliberately composed an alternative. The correspondence between Josephus and Artapanus is more easily explained if Josephus used the full narrative of Artapanus but modified it or departed from it in accordance with his own view of Moses.

D. Georgi has argued for a line of continuity between Artapanus and Philo in the conception of Moses as a "divine man" (theios anēr).<sup>47</sup> The similarities, however, do not suggest direct dependence but are due to the common acceptance of hellenistic ideas for apologetic purposes. Philo, of course, does not follow the more colorful syncretistic exploits of Moses in Artapanus.

The influence of Artapanus on subsequent literature is slight. It is possible (but not very likely) that the neo-Pythagorean philosopher Numenius of Apamea derived the name Mousaeus for Moses from Artapanus (PrEv 9.8.2). Some of the non-biblical traditions in Artapanus (e.g. the campaign against Ethiopia) are also found in rabbinic writings, and the confrontation with the Egyptian magicians frequently recurs in Jewish, Christian, and Greco-Roman literature.<sup>48</sup> However, there is no clear evidence of direct dependence on Artapanus in any of this material.

The main claim of Artapanus to cultural significance is that he may represent one of the precursors of the hellenistic romances, but here again there is no evidence that he had any direct influence on the development of the genre.<sup>49</sup>

<sup>45</sup> The victory over the serpents seems to be presupposed by the consecration of the ibis in Artapanus. It is possible that the entire Ethiopian campaign may have been inspired by the biblical reference to Moses' Ethiopian (Cushite) wife (Num 12:1), and so the marriage of Moses would have been central to the original legend, either in Artapanus or in his source. However, campaigns against Ethiopia are common features of the competitive historiography of the hellenistic age. Cambyses, Sesostris, and Semiramis were all credited with such campaigns. So we cannot assume that the legend in Artapanus was developed from the biblical reference to the Ethiopian wife. See further D. J. Silver, "Moses and the Hungry Birds," JQR 64 (1973) 124–53. Silver takes the biblical reference as the origin of the story.

<sup>46</sup> Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 53, n. 107. T. Rajak, "Moses in Ethiopia: Legend and Literature," JJS 29 (1978) 111–22, argues that both Artapanus and Josephus were ultimately dependent on an ongoing oral tradition, although Josephus may have drawn on a written source (but not on Artapanus). A. Shinan, "Moses and the Ethiopian Woman," Scripta Hierosolymitana 27 (1978) 66–78, says that Josephus' account is an expansion of the tradition reflected in Artapanus.

<sup>47</sup> Georgi, Die Gegner, pp. 148–62. See the assessment by Tiede, The Charismatic Figure, pp. 147f.

<sup>48</sup> Freudenthal, Alexander Polyhistor, pp. 172f.

<sup>49</sup> Braun, History and Romance, pp. 26–31, 99–102. Also M. Hadas, Hellenistic Culture (New York, 1959) pp. 98, 172. Most of the romance literature dates to the second century A.D. or later.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 82f.
- Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 53–55.
- Denis, Introduction, pp. 255–57.
- Braun, M. History and Romance. Oxford, 1938; pp. 26–31, 99–102. (Of basic importance for the relationship to the historical romances.)
- Collins, J. J. Between Athens and Jerusalem: Jewish Identity in the Hellenistic Diaspora. New York, 1983; pp. 32–38. (Discussion of Jewish identity in Artapanus.)
- Collins, J. J., and Poehlmann, W. "Artapanus." Unpublished paper from NT seminar 201, Harvard Divinity School, April 1970.
- Dalbert, P. Die Theologie der hellenistisch-jüdischen Missionsliteratur unter Ausschluss von Philo und Josephus. Hamburg, 1954; pp. 42–52. (The most extensive discussion of the theology of Artapanus.)
- Fraser, P. M. Ptolemaic Alexandria. Oxford, 1972; vol. 1, pp. 704–6; vol. 2, pp. 983–86. (Well-documented historical comments.)
- Freudenthal, J. Alexander Polyhistor. Hellenistische Studien 1–2; Breslau, 1874–75. (Still the basic study on many points, although the thesis on authorship is untenable.)
- Georgi, D. Die Gegner des Paulus im 2. Korintherbrief: Studien zur religiösen Propaganda in der Spätantike. Wissenschaftliche Monographien zum Alten und Neuen Testament 11; Neukirchen-Vluyn, 1964; pp. 147–51. (A discussion of the theios anēr motif, setting Artapanus in the context of Jewish mission literature.)
- Gutman, J. Ha Sifrut Ha-Yehudit ha-Hellenistit. Jerusalem, 1963; vol. 2, pp. 109–35. (An extensive discussion in modern Heb.)
- Holladay, C. R. Theios Anēr in Hellenistic Judaism: A Critique of the Use of This Category in New Testament Christology (SBLDS 40; Missoula, Mont., 1977) pp. 199–232. (A critique of the view that Artapanus depicts Moses as a Theios Anēr.)
- Merentites, K. I. Ho Ioudaios Logios Artapanos kai to Ergon Autou. Athens, 1961. (The only book-length study of Artapanus. Introduction and full commentary, in Modern Gk.)
- Rajak, T. "Moses in Ethiopia: Legend and Literature," JJS 29 (1978) 111–22. (Discussion of the Ethiopian episode and relation of it to Josephus.)
- Shinan, A. "Moses and the Ethiopian Woman," Scripta Hierosolymitana 27 (1978) 66–78. (Discussion of Ethiopian incident.)
- Silver, J. D. "Moses and the Hungry Birds," JQR 64 (1973) 123–53. (A discussion of the significance of the ibis and its possible implications for the background of Artapanus.)
- Tiede, D. L. The Charismatic Figure as Miracle Worker. SBLDS 1; Missoula, Mont., 1972; pp. 146–77. (The best discussion in English. Includes text and translation of the Moses fragment in pp. 317–24.)
- Vermès, G. "La figure de Moïse au tournant des deux Testaments," in Moïse, L'Homme de l'Alliance. Cahiers Sioniens; Paris, 1955; pp. 66–74. (Contains an annotated French translation of the greater part of Artapanus, with some general comments.)
- Walter, N. "Artapanos," JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 121–43. (Introduction and annotated German translation.)

THE FRAGMENTS OF ARTAPANUS

ABRAHAM

Fragment 1 Eusebius, "Praeparatio Evangelica" 9.18.1

Abraham in Egypt

Artapanus says in his Judaica that the Jews are named "Hermiouth,"<sup>a</sup> which, translated into Greek, is "Jews." They were called Hebrews after Abraham.<sup>b</sup> He says that the latter came to Egypt with all his household to the Egyptian king Pharethothes,<sup>c</sup> and taught him astrology,<sup>d</sup> that he remained there twenty years<sup>e</sup> and then departed again for the regions of Syria, but that many of those who came with him remained in Egypt on account of the prosperity of the land.<sup>f</sup>

Gen 12:10; Jub
13:11
Ps-Eup (PrEv
9.17.3)
Ps-Hec
(Josephus, Ant
1.8.2 [168])

JOSEPH

Fragment 2 Eusebius, "Praeparatio Evangelica" 9.23.1-4

Joseph in Egypt

1 23 Artapanus says in his "On the Jews" that Joseph was a descendant of Abraham and son of Jacob. Since he excelled the others in understanding and wisdom, he was plotted against by his brothers. He obtained prior knowledge of the conspiracy and requested the neighboring Arabs to convey him to Egypt.<sup>a</sup> They complied with the request, for the kings of the Arabs were descendants of Israel,<sup>b</sup> sons of Abraham, and brothers of Isaac.

Gen 37:5-20; Jub
34:11; TJos 1:4;
Philo, Jos 5-14

2 He came to Egypt, was recommended to the king, and became administrator of the entire land. Hitherto the Egyptians had farmed the land in a disorganized manner, because the country was undivided and the subordinate classes were treated unjustly by the more powerful. This man (Joseph) was the first to divide the land and distinguish it with boundaries.<sup>c</sup> He made much barren land arable and allotted some of the arable lands to the priests.

Gen 41:41;
Josephus, Ant
2.5.7 (90); Jub
40:6; Philo, Jos
157

3 This man also discovered measurements and on account of these things he was greatly loved by the Egyptians. He married Aseneth, the daughter of a Heliopolitan priest, and begot children by her. After these things his father and brothers came

Gen 41:45,50;
Josephus, Ant
2.6.1 (91-92);
JosAsen 21; Jub
40:10

Fragment 1 (Abraham)

a. This term, which is peculiar to Artapanus, may be a combination of 'aram-yehud (Syro-Judaeus) or Hermes-Ioudaioi (Hermes/Moses Jews). Both suggestions were made by Freudenthal (Alexander Polyhistor, p. 153).

b. Abraham is called a Hebrew in Gen 14:13, but the LXX translates as peraiētēs (wanderer) instead of the ethnic or social designation "Hebrew."

c. A fictional name, apparently derived from Pharaoh and Thoth.

d. Contrast Abraham's rejection of astrology in Philo, Abr 69-71, 77, and Jub 12:60. Also SibOr 3:218-30 (where the reference is to the descendants of Abraham).

e. The duration of the sojourn is not noted in Genesis. In Jub 13:11 and 1QapGen 19:23 it is five years.

f. Possibly Artapanus is assuming that Abraham was related to the Hyksos invasion. Cf. Manetho (Apion 1.73-92, 227-50), who also associates the Jewish ancestors with the Hyksos.

Fragment 2 (Joseph)

a. Presumably this is a deliberate revision of the biblical story.

b. It is not clear whether Artapanus thinks Israel was the father of Abraham or merely uses Israel as a generic name for Abraham and his descendants. Alternatively, Israel should be emended to Ishmael, and "sons" and "brothers" to "son" and "brother."

c. Contrast Gen 47:20-22, where Joseph is said to acquire all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh, but cf. Josephus, Ant 2.7.7 (191f.), where he restores the land to its original owners after the famine. The reforms of Joseph bear some similarity to those of Sesostris (Diodorus, 1.54). See also Fragment 3, on Moses (PrEv 9.27.4).

to him bringing much property, and were settled in Heliopolis and Sais<sup>d</sup> and the Syrians in Egypt became numerous.

4 He (Artapanus) says that these, who were called Hermiouth, founded the temple in Athos and that in Heliopolis.<sup>e</sup> After these things both Joseph and the king of the Egyptians died.

Joseph, then, as ruler of Egypt, stored the seven year grain crop, which was abundant in yield, and became master of Egypt.

Gen 46:1–47:12; Josephus, Ant 2.7.1–6 (168–88); TJos 17; Jub 45:1–7; Philo, Jos 255–57
Gen 50:26; Josephus, Ant 2.8.2 (198); Jub 46:3–5; Philo, Jos 268–69
Gen 41:47–49; Josephus, Ant 2.6.1 (93); Jub 40:12f.; Philo, Jos 158–62

MOSES

Fragment 3. Eusebius, "Praeparatio Evangelica" 9.27.1–37

1 27 Artapanus says in his "On the Jews" that when Abraham had died and his son Memsasthenoth,<sup>a</sup> and also the king of the Egyptians, his son Palmanothes succeeded to dominion.<sup>b</sup>

2 The latter treated the Jews badly. First he built Sais<sup>c</sup> and founded the temple there. Then he established the shrine at Heliopolis.<sup>d</sup>

3 This man begat a daughter Merris,<sup>e</sup> whom he betrothed to a certain Chenephres<sup>f</sup> who was king over the regions beyond Memphis (for at that time there were many kings of Egypt).<sup>g</sup> Since she was barren she adopted the child of one of the Jews and named it Moses. As a grown man he was called Mousaeus<sup>h</sup> by the Greeks.

4 This Mousaeus was the teacher of Orpheus.<sup>i</sup> As a grown man he bestowed many useful benefits on mankind,<sup>j</sup> for he invented boats and devices for stone construction

Ex 1:8–14; Josephus, Ant 2.9.1 (202); EzekTrag (PrEv 9.28.2)

Ex 2:10; Josephus, Ant 2.9.5–7 (224–32); Philo, Vit Mos 1.19
Eup (PrEv 9.26.1)

d. Heliopolis (biblical On) was the city of the sun-god Re. It is listed as one of the cities built by the Israelites in LXX Ex 1:11. Sais should be identified as Tanis, capital of Egypt during the Hyksos period. Neither city falls within the area usually identified as the biblical Goshen. In Josephus, Ant 2.7.6 (188) Jacob is settled in Heliopolis.

e. Athos may be the biblical Pithom (Ex 1:11). In Ex 1:11 the Hebrews build cities at these locations. Here they build temples.

Fragment 3 (Moses)

a. This passage is problematic and probably corrupt. The most likely solution is that "Abraham" was erroneously written (perhaps by Polyhistor) in place of "Joseph" (so Merentites, Ho Ioudaios Logios, p. 26). Memsasthenoth is a plausible name for a son of Joseph and Aseneth. Alternatively, it is possible that "Abraham" is an error for "Jacob," and "Memsasthenoth" for "Psonthomphanech" (Joseph's Egyptian name in Gen 41:45, LXX).

b. Palmanothes is presumably the king's son. Like all the Egyptian names in Artapanus, Palmanothes is fictional, but it is a possible Egyptian name.

c. The MSS read Tessan, probably a corruption of te San. San must, like Sais, be identified with Tanis (which should possibly be identified with the biblical Rameses). Strugnell suggests Gessan (= Goshen) as another possibility (private communication).

d. Fragment 2 (PrEv 9.23.4) already referred to the building of the temple in Heliopolis before the death of Joseph.

e. In Josephus, the daughter's name is Thermutis (cf. Jub 47:5: Tharmuth). Thermuthis was also the name of the goddess of wet-nursing and a manifestation of Isis. The name Merris is not otherwise known, but Isis was worshiped at Meroë (Diodorus 3.9.2, Strabo 17.2.3). In PrEv 9.27.16 (below) Merris is buried at Meroë and worshiped no less than Isis. Artapanus is establishing an indirect association between Moses and the traditions of Isis.

f. The name is Egyptian, but fictional.

g. Probably a gloss (by Polyhistor?) to explain how both Palmanothes and Chenephres were kings. There is no further indication in Artapanus that Egypt was politically divided. The Hyksos never fully controlled Upper Egypt (beyond Memphis), but it is doubtful that Artapanus' statement reflects any historical tradition.

h. Musaeus was a mythical singer often associated with Orpheus. This identification with Moses is probably original in Artapanus. It is also found in Numenius (PrEv 9.8.1f.).

i. Orpheus, the legendary founder of Orphism, was probably a mythical figure, but some think he was historical. He is more commonly said to have been the teacher of Musaeus. Here the relationship is inverted to glorify Moses.

j. The inventions here ascribed to Moses are closely modeled on those elsewhere ascribed to other heroes. See especially Diodorus 1.56.2; 1.94.4 (on Sesostris); and 1.96.4, on the wisdom derived from Egypt by Orpheus. The division of Egypt into thirty-six nomes is found in Diodorus 1.54.3 but does not correspond to the historical situation in hellenistic Egypt. Diodorus and Artapanus may both have drawn on Hecataeus of Abdera. In the Jewish tradition cf. the discoveries of the Watchers in SibOr 1:91–96; 1 En 8:1; 69:4–10.

and the Egyptian arms and the implements for drawing water and for warfare, and philosophy. Further he divided the state into 36 nomes and appointed for each of the nomes the god to be worshiped, and for the priests the sacred letters, and that they should be cats and dogs and ibises.<sup>k</sup> He also allotted a choice area to the priests.

- 5 He did all these things for the sake of maintaining the monarchy firm for Chenephres, for formerly the masses were disorganized and would at one time expel kings, at others appoint them, often the same people but sometimes others.
6 On account of these things then Moses was loved by the masses, and was deemed worthy of godlike honor by the priests and called Hermes,<sup>l</sup> on account of the interpretation of the sacred letters.

The Ethiopian campaign

- 7 But when Chenephres saw the excellence of Moses he was envious of him and sought to destroy him on some specious pretext. Once indeed when the Ethiopians campaigned against Egypt,<sup>m</sup> Chenephres supposed he had found a convenient opportunity and sent Moses against them as a general with an army. But he put together a host of farmers<sup>n</sup> for him, supposing that he would be easily destroyed by the enemy on account of the weakness of the soldiers.
8 When Moses came to the district called Hermopolis,<sup>o</sup> with about a hundred thousand farmers, he pitched camp there. He sent generals to blockade the region,<sup>p</sup> and these gained notable advantage in battles. He (Artapanus) says that the Heliopolitans assert that this war lasted ten years.<sup>q</sup>
9 Those around Moses founded a city in that place on account of the size of the army, and made the ibis sacred there because it destroys the creatures which harm men.<sup>r</sup> They called it Hermopolis (the city of Hermes).
10 The Ethiopians, even though they were his enemies, loved Moses so much that they learned the circumcision of the genital organs from him, and not only they, but also all the priests.<sup>s</sup>

Josephus, Ani
2.10.1-2 (238-53)

The plot against Moses

- 11 When the war was ended Chenephres received him favorably in speech but plotted against him in deed. He took the host away from him and sent some to the borders

Josephus, Ani
2.11.1 (255)

k. I.e. that the gods should be cats, dogs, and ibises. On the syncretism of Artapanus see Introduction, "Theological importance" (above).

l. Hermes was the Gk. equivalent of Thoth. The identification with Moses was facilitated by the frequency of the Egyptian name Thutmosis. Thoth was also a lawgiver. The Gk. word for interpretation (hermēneia) involves a play on "Hermes." On the attribution of divine honor to Moses cf. Ex 7:1 and Philo, Vit Mos 1.158, and see Introduction, "Theological importance."

m. The idea of a campaign against Ethiopia was probably inspired by the fact that Cambyses (Herodotus 3.17-25), Sesostris (Diodorus 1.55.1), and Semiramis (Diodorus 2.14.4) all conducted campaigns against Ethiopia (which was also a traditional enemy of Egypt). The biblical reference to Moses' Ethiopian wife (Num 21:1) may also have prompted the idea. The fragments of Artapanus in Eusebius do not refer to Moses' wedding to her, but Josephus does. On the relation between Artapanus and Josephus see Introduction, "Influence on later writings."

n. This idea was possibly inspired by the enrollment of Egyptians in the army of Philopator before the battle of Raphia. See Introduction, "D..."

o. Hermopolis in Greco-Roman times marked the boundary between Middle and Upper Egypt. Artapanus implies (below, 27.9) that it was named after Hermes-Moses. The Egyptian city was the city of Thoth.

p. Translation uncertain. LSJM gives "lay siege." Tiede (The Charismatic Figure, p. 318) translated "occupy the land in advance."

q. This reference need not be taken to mean that Artapanus was actually informed by the priests, but could be simply an imitation of the historical style of Herodotus and others.

r. The consecration of the ibis presupposes the story found in Josephus, Ani 2.10.2 (246), how Moses overcame the serpents on his march by means of ibises. Silver (JQR 64 [1973] 141-52) suggests that Moses' use of the ibis may reflect memories of a syncretistic cult, but his argument is very hypothetical.

s. Herodotus 2.104 and Diodorus 1.55 and 1.28 claim that circumcision originated with the Ethiopians and Egyptians. Artapanus attributes its origin to Moses. In Apion 2.141 Josephus implied that only priests were circumcised in Egypt. The Gk. authors imply that it was generally practiced.

of Ethiopia as a garrison<sup>1</sup> and ordered others to tear down the temple in Diospolis (the city of Zeus),<sup>a</sup> which had been constructed of baked brick, and to construct another of stone, quarrying the nearby mountain. He appointed Nacheros overseer of the building project.

- 12 He came with Moses to Memphis and inquired of him if there was anything else of benefit to men. He (Moses) responded: the breed of oxen, because the land is plowed by them. But Chenephres called the bull Apis<sup>v</sup> and commanded the host to establish his temple, and bade them bring the creatures which Moses had made sacred and bury them there.<sup>w</sup> He did this because he wished to conceal Moses' inventions.
- 13 When the Egyptians repudiated him,<sup>x</sup> he made his friends swear not to inform Moses of the conspiracy against him and appointed those who were to kill him.
- 14 When no one complied, Chenephres reproached Chanethothes, the man who was especially addressed by him. The latter, being reproached, undertook to perform the assault, when he had an opportunity.
- 15 About this time Merris died, and Chenephres gave Moses and Chanethothes the task of bringing the body to the regions beyond Egypt and burying it, assuming that Moses would be killed by Chanethothes.
- 16 But while they were on their journey, one of the conspirators informed Moses of the plot. The latter guarded himself, buried Merris, and named the river and the city which is on it Meroë. This Merris was honored by the local residents no less than Isis.<sup>y</sup>

Moses in Arabia

- 17 Aaron the brother of Moses learned about the plot and advised his brother to flee to Arabia. The latter was persuaded, sailed across the Nile from Memphis and departed to Arabia.<sup>z</sup>
- 18 When Chanethothes learned of Moses' flight he lay in ambush to kill him. When he saw him coming, he drew his dagger against him but Moses anticipated, restrained his hand, drew his (own) sword and slew Chanethothes.<sup>a2</sup>
- 19 Moses fled to Arabia and lived with Raguel,<sup>b2</sup> the ruler of the region, whose daughter he married. Raguel wished to campaign against the Egyptians, wishing to restore Moses and establish dominion for his daughter and son-in-law. But Moses restrained him, taking thought of his compatriots.<sup>c2</sup> Raguel ordered the Arabs to plunder Egypt but withheld them from a full campaign.<sup>d2</sup>

Ex 2:12; Philo.
Vit Mos 1.44

Ex 2:15.18
(LXX) (Moses
in Midian) Ex 2:21 (Moses' marriage)

t. Compare the Jewish garrison of the late fifth century B.C. known from the Elephantine papyri.

u. There were three towns in Egypt called Diospolis. The most important was Thebes, the Egyptian "House of Amun," which is probably meant here, although there is no mountain nearby.

v. Apis was the bull sacred to Ptah and honored in Memphis.

w. Apparently a confused reference to the Necropolis at Memphis, where Apis and other sacred animals were buried. Artapanus ascribes a negative significance to the burial of the animals.

x. The reference is ambiguous in the present, abbreviated form of the text. It is not clear whether Moses or Chenephres is repudiated. The latter is the more probable.

y. See above, Fragment 3, n. e. Meroë was the capital of Ethiopia and usually thought to have received its name from Cambyses in memory of his sister, or wife, or mother. (See Josephus, Ant 2.10.2 [149], Strabo 17.1.5; Diodorus 1.33.1). Strabo, 17.2.3, says that Isis was worshiped at Meroë. Diodorus refers to Meroë as an island in the Nile (1.33) and says that, while Isis is buried at Memphis, some say that Isis and Osiris are buried on the border of Ethiopia on an island in the Nile (1.22.2). Artapanus is attempting to trace the etiology of the site to Moses and associate Moses with the traditions of Isis while maintaining a distinction between Isis and Merris.

z. Here, and in section 34, below, Arabia refers to the territory between the Nile and the Arabian Gulf. This is in accordance with Strabo 17.1.21. Sesostris was also said to have sojourned in Arabia (Diodorus 1.53.5; Strabo 16.4.4). Arabia here corresponds to the biblical Midian, but Moses is said to flee before he kills the Egyptian.

a2. The killing of the Egyptian is thus explained as self-defense. Josephus omits this episode entirely.

b2. In Ex 3:1 Moses' father-in-law is called Jethro, but in 2:18, Raguel (LXX) or Reuel (MT).

c2. I.e. the Jews in Egypt.

d2. The abbreviated Gk. is obscure. Jacoby reads diakóluthenta for diakólouonta, so "Raguel was prevented from campaigning but ordered the Arabs to plunder Egypt." Both Manetho (Apion 1.241, 264) and Chaeremon (Apion 1.292) accused Moses of invading Egypt. Artapanus is controverting that accusation. The idea that the Arabs were permitted to plunder Egypt may reflect the biblical tradition that the Hebrews despoiled the Egyptians at the exodus (Ex 3:22; 12:36).

- 20 About the same time also Chenephres became the first of all men to contract elephantiasis and he died.<sup>e2</sup> He encountered this fate because he had enjoined the Jews to wear linen garments and put on no woolen clothing, so that they might be conspicuous and be punished by him.<sup>f2</sup>
- 21 Moses prayed to God that he might thereupon give the people an end to their sufferings. God was propitiated, and he (Artapanus) says that fire was suddenly kindled from the earth and it burned although there was no wood or other kindling material in the place.<sup>g2</sup> Moses was afraid of what had happened, and fled. But a divine voice bade him campaign against Egypt, rescue the Jews, and lead them to their ancient homeland.

Ex 3:2f.;
Josephus, Ant
2.12.1 (264–
66); Philo, Vit
Mos 1.65–70;
EzekTrag (PrEv
9.29.7)
Ex 3:4;
Josephus, Ant
2.12.1 (267);
Philo, Vit Mos
1.71

Moses before Pharaoh

- 22 He took courage and determined to lead a hostile force against the Egyptians.<sup>h2</sup> But first he went to his brother Aaron. The king of the Egyptians learned of Moses' presence, summoned him and asked for what purpose he had come. He responded that the master of the universe had ordered him to release the Jews.
- 23 When the king learned this, he confined him in prison.<sup>i2</sup> But when night came, all the doors of the prison opened of themselves,<sup>j2</sup> and some of the guards died, while others were relaxed by sleep and their weapons were broken.
- 24 Moses came out and went to the royal chambers. He found the doors open and went in. There, since the guards were relaxed, he woke the king. The latter was astonished at what had happened and bade Moses say the name of the god who had sent him, mocking him.<sup>k2</sup>
- 25 But he bent forward and pronounced it into his ear. When the king heard it, he fell down speechless but revived when taken hold of by Moses.
- 26 He wrote the name on a tablet<sup>l2</sup> and sealed it, but one of the priests who disparaged what was written on the tablet died with a convulsion.

Ex 5:1

Ex 7:8–10:20;
Josephus, Ant
2.14.1–4 (293–
306); Philo, Vit
Mos 1.96–122;
EzekTrag (PrEv
9.29.11f.)
Ex 8:10;
Josephus, Ant
2.13.3 (287);
Philo, Vit Mos
1.91

The plagues

- 27 The king said to perform some sign for him. Moses threw down the rod which he had and made a serpent. When all were terrified, he seized its tail, took it up and made it a rod again.

e2. This disease was apparently first named by Bolus of Mendes in the third century B.C. See Introduction, "Date." Merentites suggests that this passage was intended to counter Manetho's charge that the Jews were originally lepers (Apion 1.233–35). Cf. also the punishment of Antiochus in 2Mac 9:9.

f2. See Introduction, "Date," above. In Egypt linen garments were usually priestly clothing (Plutarch, Isis and Osiris, 4).

g2. Artapanus heightens the miraculous nature of this incident by dispensing with the bush of the Ex story.

h2. The suggestion that Moses lead an army against Egypt does not fit with what follows, and would also be difficult to reconcile with the earlier incident with the Arabs. Josephus, Ant 2.12.1 (268), has God bid Moses return to Egypt "to act as commander and leader of the Hebrew host." This was probably the original sense of Artapanus, too. The confusion is probably due to Alexander Polyhistor.

i2. Paragraphs 23–25 are also found (with some variations) in Clement of Alexandria, Strom 1.154.2f.:

"Artapanus, then, in the book about the Jews recounts that when Moses had been confined in prison by Chenephres, the king of the Egyptians, for requesting that the people be released from Egypt, the prison was opened at night by the will of God. Moses came out, went to the royal chambers, stood over the sleeping king and woke him. The king was astonished at what had happened and bade Moses say the name of the god who had sent him. Moses bent forward and pronounced it into his ear. When the king heard it he fell down speechless, but revived when taken hold of by Moses."

j2. The parallel in Clement says that the doors were opened "according to the will of God" and omits the word automatōs (of themselves). Compare the incidents in Acts 5:17–26; 12:6–17; 16:23–30. Clement also omits the allusions to the guards and the statement that the king's doors were also opened.

k2. Presumably, the king mocks Moses, despite his astonishment, but possibly the king is mocking God, or wants Moses to mock God. Cf. Josephus, Ant 2.13.3 (284), where the same verb is used. On this whole episode see Introduction, "Date," above.

l2. It is not clear whether the subject is Moses or the king. The king is the closer antecedent.

- 28 Proceeding a little he struck the Nile with the rod. The river became flooded and deluged all Egypt. From that time also its "inundation" takes place.<sup>m2</sup> The water became stagnant and stank<sup>n2</sup> and destroyed the creatures that live in rivers and the people perished from thirst. Ex 7:20-25 WisSol 11:5f.
- 29 After these marvels the king said he would release the people after a month, if he would restore the river.<sup>o2</sup> Moses again struck the water with his rod and drew in the stream.
- 30 When this had happened, the king summoned the priests who were beyond Memphis and said he would kill them and tear down the temples unless they also could perform some marvels. They then, through some superstitious tricks and charms, made a serpent and changed the color of the river. Ex 7:12,22
- 31 The king became presumptuous at this event and abused the Jews with every kind of vengeance and punishment. When Moses saw this he performed yet other signs, and, striking the ground with his rod, released some winged creature to afflict the Egyptians.<sup>p2</sup> They all developed sores on their bodies. Since the physicians were not able to cure the sick, the Jews thus again got a respite. Ex 8:21
Ex 9:10
- 32 Again Moses released a frog, through his staff, and in addition to these things, locusts and lice. On this account the Egyptians dedicate the rod in every temple, and similarly (they dedicate it) to Isis, since the earth is Isis,<sup>q2</sup> and when it was struck with the rod, it released the marvels. Ex 8:2f.; WisSol 19:10
Ex 10:12-14;
WisSol 16:9
- 33 Since the king was still acting foolishly, Moses brought about hail and earthquakes<sup>r2</sup> through the night so that those who fled the earthquakes were killed by the hail and those who avoided the hail were destroyed by the earthquakes. All the houses and most of the temples then collapsed. Ex 9:24; WisSol 16:16
- 34 Finally, the king released the Jews since he had encountered such disasters.<sup>s2</sup> But they acquired from the Egyptians<sup>s2</sup> many cups, no small amount of clothing, and abundant other treasure. Having crossed the rivers in Arabia<sup>u2</sup> and traversed a substantial area, they came on the third day to the Red Sea. Ex 12:31
Ex 12:35f.;
EzekTrag (PrEv 9.29.12)
- 35 Now the Memphites say that Moses was familiar with the countryside and watched for the ebb tide and he conveyed the multitude across through the dry sea. But the Heliopolitans<sup>v2</sup> say that the king rushed down on them with a great force, together with the consecrated animals, since the Jews had acquired and were carrying off the property of the Egyptians. Josephus, Ant 2.15.1 (315)
- 36 But a divine voice came to Moses to strike the sea with his rod and divide it.<sup>w2</sup> When Moses heard, he touched the water with the rod and thus the flowing water separated and the host went through a dry path. Ex 14:15-31;
Josephus, Ant 2.15.3 (320);
EzekTrag (PrEv 9.29.14)
- 37 He (Artapanus) says that when the Egyptians went in with them and pursued, fire shone out from in front of them and the sea again flooded the path. All the Mos 1.176-80

m2. Artapanus thus attributes the annual flooding of the Nile, which is vital to Egyptian agriculture, to Moses. Unlike the biblical account, the river does not become bloody, but the Egyptian magicians are said to change the color of the river, so the omission may be due to Alexander Polyhistor.

n2. Reading epozesai, "to stink" (Freudenthal), for apozesai, "to boil."

o2. Josephus, Ant 2.14.1 (295) follows Artapanus at this point.

p2. Probably the gadfly, which is the fourth plague in Ex.

q2. So also Diodorus 1.12.4; Plutarch, Isis and Osiris (32 and 38). Artapanus thus asserts Moses' supremacy over Isis.

r2. Earthquakes are not mentioned in Ex.

s2. In all, Artapanus recounts some version of the first (flood), second (frogs), third (lice), fourth (gadfly), sixth (boils), seventh (hail) and eighth (locusts) plagues, although he does not follow the biblical order.

t2. Or: "borrowed," but the following paragraph suggests outright appropriation. Josephus, Ant 2.14.6, says that the Egyptians freely gave them gifts.

u2. See n. z, above.

v2. It is unlikely that Artapanus actually knew of such an Egyptian tradition. According to Manetho, Moses was a Heliopolitan priest (Apion 1.279).

w2. Reading diastēsai, "divide," for diastēnai, "stand apart" (Mras).

Egyptians were destroyed by both the fire and the flood.<sup>x2</sup> The Jews escaped the danger and spent forty years in the wilderness. God rained for them meal like millet, very similar in color to snow. He says that Moses was tall, ruddy, gray with long hair, most venerable. He did these things when he was about eighty-nine years old.<sup>y2</sup>

Ex 16:1–36;
Josephus, Ant
3.1.6 (26);
Philo, Vit Mos
1.200, 208;
2.258; WisSol
16:20

x2. Compare the common eschatological motif that the world would be destroyed twice, by flood and by fire: Josephus, Ant 1.2.3 (70); Vita 49; 2Pet 3:6f., and the parallelism of the Flood and eschatological conflagration in SibOr 1–2 and 4.

y2. Compare Deut 34:7, which stresses Moses' vigor up to his death. The biblical account says that Moses was 120 at his death, and so 80 at the exodus. Josephus, Ant 4.8.49 (327) follows the biblical account.

APPENDIX

PSEUDO-HECATAEUS

(Second Century B.C.—First Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY R. DORAN

Jewish and Christian literature contains several references to a Greek historian named Hecataeus, who shows pro-Jewish sentiments. Is one, therefore, dealing with a pseudonymous author?

The issue is complicated; the most extensive fragment that scholars agree should be attributed to the genuine Hecataeus of Abdera, who wrote under Ptolemy I about 300 B.C., deals with the Jews.<sup>1</sup> It is an excursus found in Diodorus Siculus at the moment when Diodorus is going to recount the campaign of Pompey against Jerusalem. The fragment is a typical example of early hellenistic ethnography.<sup>2</sup> It depicts the Jewish state as a political utopia;<sup>3</sup> Moses is extolled as excelling in wisdom (Diodorus Siculus 40.3.3); the monotheism of the Jews is praised (Diodorus 40.3.4);<sup>4</sup> and unusual customs of the Jews are explained. The genuine Hecataeus thus had some knowledge of Jews and Jewish customs; and he did think highly of their constitution. Would he have written the fragments to be discussed below?

There are two testimonia to the work of Hecataeus. Josephus (Ant 1.159) refers to a book that Hecataeus wrote on Abraham. Both H. Willrich and N. Walter have concluded that this book is a major source behind Josephus' account of Abraham.<sup>5</sup> The second testimony is found in Origen (Contra Celsus 1.15b). Origen reports how Herennius Philo disputed the authenticity of a book about the Jews by Hecataeus the historian. According to Herennius, the work praised the wisdom of the Jews too much to be reliable.

The fragments

1. The Letter of Aristeas 31 quotes Hecataeus as saying that the Bible has a certain sacred quality about it. Questions have been raised as to the extent of the quotation, particularly since Josephus (Ant 12.38) cites the Letter of Aristeas and attributes a large section to Hecataeus (see the discussion below).

2. In Clement of Alexandria's Stromateis 5.113, Hecataeus of Abdera is cited as the source for verses of Sophocles that praise monotheism and condemn idolatry. Clement of Alexandria titled the work of Hecataeus "On Abraham and the Egyptians."

3. In Josephus (Apion 2.43) Hecataeus is the authority for the claim that Alexander the <sup>1</sup> The fragment comes from Diodorus Siculus 40; it is found in the Bibliotheca of Photius, codex 244. In the present text, the fragment is attributed to Hecataeus of Miletus, c. 500 B.C., but scholars are unanimous that this is a mistake and that the fragments should be attributed to Hecataeus of Abdera, c. 300 B.C. See J. G. Gager, Moses in Greco-Roman Paganism (SBLMS 16; Nashville, Tenn., 1972) p. 26, nn. 6, 7; p. 28, n. 8.

<sup>2</sup> Gager, Moses, p. 37.

<sup>3</sup> W. Jaeger, "Greeks and Jews: The First Greek Records of Jewish Religion and Civilization," Journal of Religion 18 (1938) 141f. J. G. Gager, Moses, p. 36.

<sup>4</sup> J. G. Gager, Moses, pp. 31f.

<sup>5</sup> H. Willrich, Judaica: Forschungen zur hellenistisch-jüdischen Geschichte und Literatur (Göttingen, 1900) pp. 108f. N. Walter, "Pseudo-Hekataios I und II," JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 149f. For a discussion of this position, see below.

Great admired the Jews and that Alexander gave the Jews Samaria tax-free. Questions have been raised as to the extent of this quotation; does it embrace Against Apion 2.43–47? This question will be discussed below.

4. The major fragment explicitly attributed to Hecataeus in Jewish and Christian literature is found in Josephus (Apion 1.183–205). Josephus is arguing that learned Greeks admired the Jews (Apion 1.175). After discussing a report on Aristotle's admiration for the Jews (Apion 1.176–82), Josephus quotes from a book that Hecataeus has written on the Jews. Hecataeus discusses with admiration a priest Ezechias, whom he had met; he speaks of how the Jews suffer persecution rather than transgress their laws, and adduces several examples; he talks of the population of the Jews, the beauty of their country, and Jerusalem; finally, he relates an anecdote in which Jewish contempt for divination is evident.

Texts

The translation of these fragments will be based on the following critical editions:

B. Niese, Flavii Josephi opera. Berlin, 1885–95.

L. Fruchtel, Clemens Alexandrinus. 2 Band. Stromata Buch I–VI. GCS 52; Berlin, 1960.

P. Koetschau, Origenes. GCS 2; Leipzig, 1899.

A. Pelletier, Lettre d'Aristée à Philocrate. SC 89; Paris, 1962.

P. Wendland, Aristeae ad Philocratem epistula. Leipzig, 1900.

How many Pseudo-Hecataei?

The fragments listed above have elicited discussion in scholarly ranks: were they written by a Pseudo-Hecataeus?<sup>6</sup> Recently, both N. Walter and B. Z. Wacholder have argued that there was not one Pseudo-Hecataeus, but many.

Walter divides the fragments in this fashion:<sup>7</sup> a Pseudo-Hecataeus I wrote fragments 3 and 4. The work of a Pseudo-Hecataeus II lies behind fragment 2 and the testimony of Josephus (Ant 1.159). Walter holds that Letter of Aristeas 31 has no clear connection with the above fragments and may or may not be a reference to the work of the genuine Hecataeus.<sup>8</sup>

Wacholder contends that three writers lie behind these references.<sup>9</sup> Pseudo-Hecataeus I, who wrote about 300 B.C., is responsible for fragment 4;<sup>10</sup> Pseudo-Hecataeus II wrote fragments 1 and 3;<sup>11</sup> Pseudo-Hecataeus III is referred to in fragment 2 and in the two testimonies.

Date and provenance

The date assigned to these fragments varies according to the decisions taken on each fragment. Walter dates his Pseudo-Hecataeus I to about 100 B.C., and his Pseudo-Hecataeus II before Josephus. Both were hellenistic Jews from Alexandria.<sup>12</sup> Wacholder dates his Pseudo-Hecataeus I about 300 B.C. (hence he is a contemporary of the genuine Hecataeus), Pseudo-Hecataeus II after Letter of Aristeas but before Josephus, Pseudo-Hecataeus III

<sup>6</sup> For a history of scholarship on this question, see B. Schaller, "Hekataios von Abdera über die Juden: Zur Frage der Echtheit und der Datierung," ZNW 24 (1963) 15–31; J. G. Gager, "Pseudo-Hecataeus Again," ZNW 60 (1969) 130–39.

<sup>7</sup> Walter, JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 144–46.

<sup>8</sup> Walter, JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 146.

<sup>9</sup> B. Z. Wacholder, Eupolemus: A Study of Judaeo-Greek Literature (Cincinnati, 1974) pp. 263–66.

<sup>10</sup> Wacholder (Eupolemus, p. 266) also includes LetAris 83–120, which he holds is dependent on his Ps-Hecataeus I.

<sup>11</sup> Wacholder (Eupolemus, p. 266) also holds that Josephus, Ant 12.3–8, and LetAris 12–27 are dependent on his Ps-Hecataeus II.

<sup>12</sup> Walter, JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 147, 148, 151.

before Aristobulus.<sup>13</sup> Pseudo-Hecataeus I would, according to Wacholder, be a Jew, probably a Jerusalem priest.<sup>14</sup>

In order to present this complicated problem more clearly, we will first give an overview of our findings concerning the authenticity of the fragments. Then we will follow the detailed analysis of each fragment. In our view, only two references to Hecataeus of Abdera should be assigned as inauthentic: the testimony at Josephus, Antiquities 1.159, and fragment 2, the verses of Sophocles from "On Abraham and the Egyptians" as cited by Clement, Stromateis 5.113. The other references are authentic fragments of Hecataeus of Abdera, and should be dated about 300 B.C. Both inauthentic references are to a book about Abraham that must be dated before Josephus. However, since no actual content of this inauthentic work is cited beyond some spurious verses of Sophocles, no conclusions can be drawn as to provenance or to a date for this Pseudo-Hecataeus.

Conclusion

The recognition that these fragments are authentic heightens their importance. They provide information about how Jews were perceived by a non-Jewish author in the third century B.C.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 120–22.

Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 53–55.

Denis, Introduction, pp. 262–67.

Gager, J. G. "Pseudo-Hecataeus Again," ZNW 60 (1969) 130–39. (Gager's article rounds out the history of scholarship given by Schaller, and argues for the authenticity of the fragments.)

Jacoby, F. FGH, vol. 3A, Fs. 21–24, pp. 61–75. (Jacoby argues strongly against the authenticity of the fragments.)

Jaeger, W. "Greeks and Jews: The First Greek Records of Jewish Religion and Civilization," Journal of Religion 18 (1938) 127–43. (Jaeger pays little attention to these disputed fragments, but gives an excellent account of the attitude of Hecataeus as found in Diodorus Siculus 40.3.)

Lewy, H. "Hekataios von Abdera peri Ioudaiōn," ZNW 31 (1932) 117–32. (Still the best discussion for connecting the fragments with Gk. ethnographical literature.)

Schaller, B. "Hekataios von Abdera über die Juden: Zur Frage der Echtheit und der Datierung," ZNW 24 (1963) 15–31. (Schaller provides a history of scholarship, which needs to be supplemented by Gager, and argues on the basis of the tithe issue that the fragments are not authentic.)

Stern, M. Greek and Latin Authors on Jews and Judaism, Vol. 1, Jerusalem, 1974; pp. 20–44. (This provides both the text of Diodorus Siculus 40.3 and the fragments from Against Apion, and uses the LCL translation. Stern's commentary is thorough but does not raise the literary issues that Lewy does.)

Walter, N. Der Thorausleger Aristobulos. Untersuchungen zu seinen Fragmenten und zu pseudepigraphischen Resten der jüdisch-hellenistischen Literatur, TU 86; Berlin 1964; pp. 172–87. (Walter's treatment of the collection of texts against polytheism is very convincing.)

<sup>13</sup> Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 266. Note that Wacholder (Eupolemus, p. 264, n. 13) claims that the Hecataeus of Clement of Alexandria, Strom 5.113, and Josephus, Ant 1.159, was used by Aristobulus. As his authority, Wacholder used N. Walter, Der Thorausleger Aristobulos. Untersuchungen zu seinen Fragmenten und zu pseudepigraphischen Resten der jüdisch-hellenistischen Literatur (TU 86; Berlin, 1964) pp. 99–103. In JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 151, Walter himself denies that such a connection can be made.

<sup>14</sup> Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 273.

- . "Pseudo-Hekataios I und II," JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 144–60. (Walter, in this translation and commentary, denies the authenticity of the fragments.)
- Wacholder, B. Z. Eupolemus: A Study of Judaeo-Greek Literature. Monographs of the Hebrew Union College 3; Cincinnati, 1974; pp. 263–73. (Wacholder argues [pp. 183–205] that the fragments in Against Apion 1 stem from the third century B.C. but were written by a Jewish priest.)

TESTIMONIA

1. Josephus, Ant 1.159:

“Hecataeus did more than just mention Abraham: Hecataeus left behind a book he had written about Abraham.”

Among those non-Jews who knew of Abraham, Josephus mentioned Hecataeus. Hecataeus, unlike Berossus the historian of Babylonia, had not mentioned Abraham in passing but had composed a book about him. Both Walter and Wacholder hold that the work to which Josephus refers is the same as that to which Clement of Alexandria refers in his Stromateis 5.113.<sup>15</sup> Walter has even gone farther; he has suggested that the work, which he claims comes from Pseudo-Hecataeus II, is a major source behind the account of Josephus. From it Josephus derives what goes beyond the biblical account.<sup>16</sup> In this argument, Walter is following Willrich, who saw in the reason given for Abraham’s visit to Egypt (Josephus, Ant 1.161: to discuss the nature of the gods with the Egyptians) a clear connection with the theme of the verses of Sophocles on monotheism.<sup>17</sup> One has to be cautious in this reasoning. Josephus mentions in the beginning of his work that the Jews had the correct notion about God (Josephus, Ant 1.15, 20f.). This concern of Josephus is reflected in the description of Abraham as the first to state that there is one God, the creator of the universe (Josephus, Ant 1.155). This view of Abraham as a striver after knowledge of the true God is found in Jubilees 11:16–17 and 12:1–31; the search for God beyond astrological science is also found in Philo (Migr 177–87; Quaes Gen 3.1). Does one need to posit a specific source, a Pseudo-Hecataeus I or II, rather than a widespread tradition in Jewish literature that linked Abraham with striving for knowledge of the one God and with astrological knowledge?<sup>18</sup> Again, the fact that Josephus does not mention the distinctive title “On Abraham and the Egyptians,” as found in Clement, also calls for caution.

However, even granted these cautions, one cannot deny that Josephus explicitly states that Hecataeus has written a book specifically on Abraham, and the only candidate for that is the work quoted by Clement of Alexandria. These two references, then, are most probably to the same work by a Pseudo-Hecataeus.

2. Origen, Against Celsus 1.15b:

The statement of Herennius Philo does not explicitly deny that the work was written by Hecataeus; Philo raises doubts as to whether Hecataeus wrote the book. Gager, and Lewy before him, were right to point out that this opinion of Philo expresses the anti-Jewish sentiments after the Bar Kokhba revolt.<sup>19</sup> No weight should be given to Philo’s opinion as to the authenticity of the fragments to be discussed below.

One should note that the mention of Hecataeus in Origen follows a reference to another Greek writer who mentioned the Jews, Hermippus. This follower of Pythagoras had stated that his master had taken his own philosophy from the Jews and introduced it to the Greeks (Contra Celsus 1.15a). Such a statement is remarkably similar to the statements of Hermippus (at Josephus, Apion 1.163–65): “The most distinguished of these is Hermippus, a very careful historian . . . He then says: ‘(Pythagoras) practiced and taught these in imitation of the beliefs of the Jews and the Thracians, which he had appropriated to himself.’ For it is actually said that that man (Pythagoras) brought many Jewish usages into his own

<sup>15</sup> Walter, JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 149f.; Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 264.

<sup>16</sup> Walter, JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 149f.

<sup>17</sup> Willrich, Judaica, p. 108; cf. Walter, Der Thoraausleger, pp. 197f.

<sup>18</sup> See further discussion in J. H. Charlesworth, “Jewish Astrology in the Talmud, Pseudepigrapha, the Dead Sea Scrolls, and Early Palestinian Synagogues,” HTR 70 (1977) 183–200.

<sup>19</sup> Gager, ZNW 60 (1969) 132; H. Lewy, “Hekataios von Abdera, peri loudaiōn,” ZNW 31 (1932) 118.

philosophy." This mention of Hermippus in Josephus occurs not much before the excerpts from Hecataeus in Against Apion 1.183–205. The sequence of Hermippus-Hecataeus in Josephus and Origen leads one to suggest that the comment of Herennius Philo applies to the work of Hecataeus quoted in Against Apion 1.183–205, although Herennius' comment may equally well apply to the genuine fragment found in Diodorus Siculus 40.3.<sup>20</sup>

In any event, the quotation of Herennius says nothing against the fragments to be discussed below.

Text

Also in circulation is a book on the Jews by Hecataeus the historian. This work goes even further (than the works previously mentioned)<sup>21</sup> in holding that this nation is wise—so much so, in fact, that Herennius Philo, in his treatise on the Jews, first doubts whether Hecataeus wrote the work; and then he says that, if indeed (Hecataeus) was the author, most probably he had been misled by the specious arguments of the Jews and had accepted their reasoning.

<sup>20</sup> Cf. the position of M. Engers, "De Hecataei Abderitae Fragmentis," Mnemosyne 51 (1923) 229.

<sup>21</sup> The works of Numenius and Hermippus, which contained allusions to the Jews.

FRAGMENTS

1. Letter of Aristeas 31:

“You should have accurate translations of these works, because this legislation, as it is divine, is highly philosophic and pure. However,<sup>a</sup> writers, poets and most historians have not mentioned the aforesaid books and the men who have lived (and are living<sup>b</sup>) in accordance with them, because the views proposed in these books are in some way<sup>c</sup> holy and reverent, as Hecataeus of Abdera says.”

a. That dio need not have the force of a logical conclusion has been shown by E. Molland, “DIO Einige syntaktische Beobachtungen,” Seria Rudbergiana, ed. H. Holst and H. Mørland (Oslo, 1931) 43–52.

b. Wendland rejects the parenthetical words as a later addition.

c. Gager (ZNW 60 [1969] 134) notes how tis qualifies hagne semne in this fragment, as Hecataeus modifies apanthrōpos in Diodorus 40.3.4 by tis; Gager argues that such modifications show Hecataeus’ “overall impressions and limited knowledge of Jewish culture.”

Schürer, followed by Schaller and Wacholder, listed as the quotation from Hecataeus the sentence: “However, writers, poets . . .”<sup>21</sup> Schürer noted that Josephus (Ant 12.38; quoted in Eusebius, PrEv 8.3.3) thought that the whole sentence was from Hecataeus: one should not separate the causal phrase from what it is proving.<sup>22</sup> In contrast to this, Lewy limited the quotation to the phrase “the views proposed in these books are in some way holy and reverent.”<sup>23</sup> He noted that this phrase is in some ways a doublet of the preceding causal phrase, “because this legislation . . . pure,” and that this notion, hagnēn tina semnēn is repeated in Letter of Aristeas 313: “Because this legislation is reverent (semnēn) and from God (dia theou).” In this latter passage, however, the authority of Theopompos, Theodectes and Demetrius is used, not that of Hecataeus.<sup>24</sup>

One should also note that the sentence on the writers is the second reason that the librarian Demetrius puts forward in favor of the recommendation that experts be brought from Jerusalem to translate accurately the laws of the Jews. He argues that these books should be in the library of the king, because no Greek writers have dealt with them.<sup>25</sup> So, not only

<sup>21</sup> E. Schürer, History, div. 3, vol. 2, p. 303; Schaller, ZNW 24 (1963) 30; Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 264.

<sup>22</sup> Schürer, History, div. 3, vol. 2, p. 303.

<sup>23</sup> Lewy, ZNW 31 (1932) 119.

<sup>24</sup> Lewy, ZNW 31 (1932) 120.

<sup>25</sup> Note the question of the king in LetAris 312: “Why have none of the historians or poets mentioned such excellent writings?”

are the present copies defective,<sup>26</sup> but one cannot read them in Greek writers. Therefore, one needs a new translation. Why have Greek writers not dealt with these books? The books have a certain sacred quality, and recognition of this sacred quality is found in Hecataeus of Abdera.<sup>27</sup> Lewy is therefore right to limit the quotation to the causal phrase, as the first part of the sentence represents the reasoning of the librarian.

Once one has determined the extent of the quotation, can one determine if it is authentic? Jacoby strongly contrasted the admiring tone of this fragment with the antagonism shown toward the Jews in the material preserved in Diodorus Siculus 40.3.4: Moses set up a way of life "somewhat unsocial and hostile to foreigners."<sup>28</sup> However, as Gager rightly stresses, Jacoby has misunderstood this passage in Diodorus. In its context, Hecataeus is explaining some Jewish customs as a reaction to their treatment in Egypt.<sup>29</sup> The explanation of strange customs was part of hellenistic ethnography, and Hecataeus, if anything, is showing his sympathy for the Jews in this passage. Again, the entire fragment in Diodorus paints the portrait of an idealized polity.<sup>30</sup> Gager has convincingly shown that the texts of Hecataeus in Diodorus and in Letter of Aristeas 31 "are entirely consonant with the predominant pagan view of Judaism in the early Hellenistic period."<sup>31</sup> Gager points to Hecataeus' contemporaries Theophrastus, Megasthenes, and Clearchus, who all thought highly of the Jews, and he maintains that the Hecataeus found in Diodorus and in Letter of Aristeas 31 has the same view.

Thus, there is no reason to deny the authenticity of the fragment found in Letter of Aristeas 31, or to ascribe it to the inventive imagination of the author of this work, as does Jacoby.<sup>32</sup> Rather, this fragment should be ascribed to the genuine Hecataeus.

2. Clement of Alexandria, Stromateis 5.113:

As Hecataeus the historian states in his "On Abraham and the Egyptians," Sophocles cried out openly on the stage:

One, truly one is God
 who made both heaven and the wide earth,
 the blue-gray swell of the sea and the buffeting winds.
 We throngs of men go astray in our hearts
 when, to gain solace from misery,
 we set up as statues of gods
 figures worked from wood,
 or images of copper, gold or ivory.
 We imagine we are religious
 when we enjoin in their honor sacrifices and evil festivals.

These verses attributed to Sophocles became a constant feature in Christian apologetic literature; not only Clement of Alexandria but also Athenagoras, Pseudo-Justin, Theodoret, and others<sup>33</sup> use these verses and others from Greek literature as standard ammunition against polytheism. Clement of Alexandria quotes the verses twice, in his Protrepticus as well as in the Stromateis.<sup>34</sup> Here too the verses are found within quotations from other poetic works. Walter, following Elter, has strongly argued that these chains of quotations from Greek poets, dramatists, and writers on a single theme, e.g. the unity of God, must have come from a gnomologion, a handbook that collected such sayings.<sup>35</sup> Such a collection need not

<sup>26</sup> H. G. Meecham (The Letter of Aristeas: A Linguistic Study with Special Reference to the Greek Bible [Manchester, 1935], p. 201) noted that diëkribōmena means "emended."

<sup>27</sup> In LetAris 313–16, the authority of Theopompos and Theodektes is used.

<sup>28</sup> Jacoby, FGH, vol. 3Aa, p. 62.

<sup>29</sup> Gager, ZNW 60 (1969) 132–34.

<sup>30</sup> Jaeger, Journal of Religion 18 (1938) 141f.

<sup>31</sup> Gager, ZNW 60 (1969) 134.

<sup>32</sup> Jacoby, FGH, vol. 3Aa, pp. 61, 65, 68f.

<sup>33</sup> Athenagoras, Supplicatio pro Christianis 5; Pseudo-Justin, Cohortatio ad Graecos 18; De Monarchia 2; Theodoret, Graecarum Affectionum Curatio, sermo 7; Cyril of Alexandria, Adversus Julianum 1.

<sup>34</sup> Clement, Protrepticus 7.74.2.

<sup>35</sup> Walter, Der Thoraausleger, pp. 172–87.

be attributed to Hecataeus. Walter has rightly noted that the authority of Hecataeus is explicitly restricted to these verses of Sophocles.<sup>36</sup>

What is interesting is that it is only in the Stromateis that an explicit authority is given for any of these quotations besides the supposed authorship of Sophocles or Orpheus. In his earlier work, the Protrepticus, Clement had felt no need for such external authority. One suspects that Clement is reacting to doubts raised over these verses. Their strong monotheism and condemnation of idolatry may have led Clement's opponents to doubt that these verses should be attributed to Sophocles. Clement, to settle such doubts, searched for an authority who had previously quoted these verses, and found one in Hecataeus.

Walter has suggested that these verses might have a place in a life about Abraham where the monotheistic beliefs of Abraham would be discussed.<sup>37</sup> Such may well have been a theme for the Pseudo-Hecataeus who lies behind this fragment and the reference in Josephus (Ant 1.159).

3. Josephus, Against Apion 2.43:<sup>38</sup>

(Alexander) honored our people. As Hecataeus states about us, "in return for the loyal regard which the Jews had shown to him, he granted to them to hold the region of Samaria free of tribute."

H. Willrich objected that such a statement about the relations between the country of Samaria and Judea was anachronistic.<sup>39</sup> There is no confirmation in other sources that the Jews of Alexander's time held Samaria, either tax-free or not. Rather, the narrative would reflect the report in 1 Maccabees 11:34, where Demetrios II gave three Samaritan districts to Jonathan in 145 B.C. This report would have been expanded to include all Samaria, and then back-dated to the time of Alexander the Great. Such an expansion would be an attempt to legitimize the takeover of Samaria by John Hyrcanus in 128–107 B.C.

Those who defend the genuineness of this fragment point out that there is nothing inherently improbable in the statement of Against Apion 2.43.<sup>40</sup> They adduce the authority of Quintus Curtius Rufus (The History of Alexander 4.8.9) to show that there was a Samaritan revolt against Alexander in 331, a revolt that was vigorously put down. They suggest that the Jews, who submitted to Alexander, may have given support to Alexander in this revolt and been rewarded by some territory. The language of 1 Maccabees 11:34 can, in fact, be read to mean "confirmation of a previous possession" (hestakamen autois ta te horia etc.). At the present moment, the discussion is at a standoff, although the supporters of the authenticity of the fragment grant that the statement is exaggerated.<sup>41</sup>

There is, however, a third possibility. The context of the passage shows that Josephus is discussing the position of Jews in and around Alexandria. Apion had claimed to be an Alexandrian, but Josephus rebuts this with the statement that Apion really comes from the Egyptian oasis (Apion 2.29, 41f.). Josephus attempts to prove that the Jews have historically stronger claims to the rights of Alexandria than the Egyptian Apion. Josephus takes his proof cases from the attitudes of writers from Alexander down to Ptolemy Philadelphus. In such a context, the mention of claims of the Jews to Samaria in Israel seems out of place, unless it is a thorough digression. In discussion of this passage, scholars have ignored the fact that a village and an area called Samaria are attested in Egypt from the third century B.C.<sup>42</sup> If Hecataeus, and Josephus, were referring to this region, the statement would fit its context properly. It may be argued against this suggestion that only Samaritans would have lived in a town called Samaria. However, the virulent hostility of Jews and Samaritans

<sup>36</sup> Walter, Der Thoraausleger, p. 197.

<sup>37</sup> As noted in n. 5, Walter had earlier maintained this position, in Der Thoraausleger, pp. 197f.

<sup>38</sup> Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 263, extends the citation to Josephus, Apion 2.43–47. However, this view had already been strongly argued against by Jacoby, FGH, vol. 3A, 65.

<sup>39</sup> Willrich, Judaica, p. 97.

<sup>40</sup> Lewy, ZNW 31 (1932) 120; Gager, ZNW 60 (1969) 135f.; M. Stern, Greek and Latin Authors, p. 44.

<sup>41</sup> Gager, ZNW 60 (1969) 136; M. Stern, Greek and Latin Authors, pp. 24, 44.

<sup>42</sup> A document mentioning the area, dated to 255–254 B.C., is found in J. P. Mahaffy (ed.), The Flinders Petrie Papyri (Dublin, 1893), Part 2; IV, 11.2, p. [14]. It is also mentioned in XXVIII, 2.9, p. [88]; 8.4, p. [93]; 9.22, p. [94]; 11.12, p. [96]. For references to this area later than the third century B.C., see the entry under Samaria in F. Preisigke, Wörterbuch der griechischen Papyrusurkunden (Berlin, 1931), vol. III.

toward each other stems from the period of Hyrcanus.<sup>43</sup> Alternatively, Hecataeus could be making a mistake and be calling Samaritans "Jews." Hecataeus, as familiar with Alexandria, could have known the tax situation of areas in Egypt.

If this suggestion is adopted, then there is no reason to hold that the fragment is inauthentic.

4. Josephus, Against Apion 1.183–205:

The major fragment ascribed to Hecataeus by hellenistic Jewish writers has given rise to the most debate. The arguments against authenticity of the fragment are as follows:

- a. The emphasis on the willingness of the Jews to die rather than to transgress their laws reflects an atmosphere more consonant with the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes.<sup>44</sup>
- b. There is mention of a high priest whose name is not found in the list of high priests given by Josephus (Ant 12.43f.).
- c. The priests are said to receive tithes. However, this reflects Maccabean practice; according to Judith 11:13 and Jubilees 32:15, works of Maccabean date, the priests, and not the Levites, received the tithes. This is in opposition to earlier works such as 2 Chronicles 31:4; Nehemiah 10:38f.; 12:44; 13:5, 10, and Tobit 1:6 in Sinaiticus, where tithes are given to Levites.<sup>45</sup>
- d. The laudatory account of Judea and Jerusalem betrays Jewish authorship, and the description of the Temple reflects priestly piety.<sup>46</sup> Also, the favorable attitude toward Ptolemy is apologetic to show that, from the first, the Jews and the Ptolemies were friends.<sup>47</sup>

The counterarguments are as follows:

- a. Wacholder has noted that the phrases on persecution could easily have come from an earlier period, as, for example, the mention of harassment of the Jews under Artaxerxes (Josephus, Ant 11.297).<sup>48</sup> The phrases need not, therefore, reflect the later persecutions under Antiochus IV. However, Wacholder maintains that these fragments do not come from Hecataeus, but from a Jewish author.<sup>49</sup> To support this position, Wacholder points to the phrase "such behaviour rightly causes amazement at them." (Josephus, Apion 1.191);<sup>50</sup> Wacholder also speaks of the ethnic boasting behind the anecdote of Mosollamus (Josephus, Apion 1.200–4).<sup>51</sup>

Such an interpretation, however, has not taken into account how Lewy has situated this writing within Greek ethnographical literature.<sup>52</sup> Lewy noted that Greek ethnographers sought to classify peoples according to common characteristics. When certain peoples had characteristics in common, they were often linked genealogically by the ethnographers. For the present discussion, Lewy noted that the Jews were considered descendants of the Indian philosophers by contemporaries of Hecataeus. Clearchus, as cited in Against Apion 1.179, said so, and added that in India they were called Calani, in Syria Jews.<sup>53</sup> The Calani were followers of Calanus, the gymnosophist whom Alexander the Great

<sup>43</sup> See F. M. Cross, "Aspects of Samaritan and Jewish History in Late Persian and Hellenistic Times," HTR 59 (1966) 207–11.

<sup>44</sup> Willrich, Judaica, p. 104; Walter, JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 147.

<sup>45</sup> Schaller, ZNW 24 (1963) 22–25.

<sup>46</sup> Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 270.

<sup>47</sup> Walter, JSHRZ 1.2 (1976) 147.

<sup>48</sup> Wacholder, Eupolemus, pp. 268f.

<sup>49</sup> Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 269.

<sup>50</sup> Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 269. Note that Stern (Greek and Latin Authors, p. 24) also has trouble with this phrase, and would attribute it to later Jewish redaction of the work of Hecataeus.

<sup>51</sup> Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 269.

<sup>52</sup> Lewy, ZNW 31 (1932) 124–26.

<sup>53</sup> Megasthenes (c. 350–290 B.C.), in Clement of Alexandria's Strom 1.72.4, states: "Everything said about nature by the ancients has also been stated by non-Greek philosophers, in India by the Brachmanes, in Syria by those named met. Calanus taught endurance and contempt of death.<sup>54</sup> Both Arrian and Aelian record how Calanus caused amazement to the bystanders as he calmly burned himself to death.<sup>55</sup> Alexander the Great is said to have commented that Calanus had overcome greater opponents than himself, for Calanus had conquered death and pain.<sup>56</sup> In the light of such parallels, the present fragment does not betray peculiar Jewish sympathies.

As regards the Mosollamus anecdote, Lewy noted how the behavior of this very intelligent archer is contrasted strongly with the superstition of the crowd. Such contempt for superstition is also recorded of Diogenes the Cynic,<sup>57</sup> and reinforces the view that the Jews were a philosophic race—a view held by Hecataeus in the fragments in Diodorus Siculus. These anecdotes, then, say nothing against authenticity.

- b. Archiereus need not mean the high priest par excellence, but could be used loosely.<sup>58</sup> The excavations at Beth-Zur produced a coin that has the image of the Athenian owl on it; behind the owl is written yhd, in front of it yhzyqh.<sup>59</sup> Thus, an Ezechias was important enough to have his name stamped on a Jewish coin; he may be the Ezechias of the passage in Josephus, or an ancestor.<sup>60</sup> There is no reason to hold that the figure in Josephus, clearly dated by him to around 300 B.C., is a fabrication that veils the identity of the high priest Onias who fled from Antiochus Epiphanes.<sup>61</sup>
- c. On tithes. First, even on Schaller's dating of Tobit and Nehemiah, the change in tithing customs could have occurred between the fourth and the second centuries B.C. and should not be pinpointed to the Maccabean period.<sup>62</sup> Secondly, Gager has noted that Hecataeus may not have distinguished between priests and Levites. Note how Hecataeus in Diodorus Siculus 40.3.5 assigns priests leadership roles in the state from the beginning and makes no mention of kings and judges. As Gager noted, Levites did perform priestly functions, and so the distinction may have been irrelevant for a Greek author.<sup>63</sup> Thirdly, the author of Jubilees would be unlikely to endorse a Maccabean shift in practice.
- d. Wacholder maintained that the amount of space given to the description of the Temple betrayed priestly piety.<sup>64</sup> However, as Lewy noted, such details about the country, the main city, and the Temple layout and furnishings belong to Greek ethnographical literature.<sup>65</sup> Note the lavish description in Diodorus 2.7–9 of the building of Babylon by Semiramis and of the construction of the temple of Bel. Similar features are present in Euhemerus' account of the island of Panchaea and of the temple to Zeus on it (Diodorus 5.41–46; 6.1.4–7). In Against Apion 1.199, Hecataeus notes that there is no statue or votive offering or sacred plant: such an antirepresentational note corresponds to the statement in Diodorus 40.3.4, where Hecataeus stated that Moses had no images of the gods made for his followers.

As regards the abstinence of the priest from wine (Josephus, Apion 1.199), Hecataeus is the authority for Plutarch's statement that the kings of Heliopolis, being priests, drink wine moderately (Plutarch, De Iside et Osiride 6).<sup>66</sup> Since the Jews are described by

<sup>54</sup> Arrian, Anabasis 7.2f.; in Philo Quod Omn 96, a pseudepigraphic letter of Calanus to Alexander is found in which the following views are attributed to Calanus: "Your friends urge you to apply violence and force to the philosophers of India . . . There is no king or ruler who can force us to do what we do not choose to do."

<sup>55</sup> Arrian, Anabasis 7.3.5; Aelian, Varia Historia 5.6. Arrian (Anabasis 7.2.2) records of the gymnosophists in general that Alexander admired their endurance (hoti tēn karterian autōn ethaumase).

<sup>56</sup> Aelian, Varia Historia 5.6.

<sup>57</sup> Diogenes Laertius, Lives of the Philosophers 6.24. A similar anecdote is told in one of the pseudepigraphic letters attributed to Diogenes the Cynic. When Diogenes asked a seer whether Diogenes was going to beat him or not, the seer hesitatingly said that he would not. Upon which Diogenes pummeled him, to the great delight of the crowd (R. Hercher, Epistolographi Graeci [Paris, 1873], letter 38.2 of Diogenes).

<sup>58</sup> Cf. G. Schrenk, "archiereus" TDNT 3, pp. 268–72.

<sup>59</sup> O. R. Sellers, The Citadel of Beth-Zur (Philadelphia, 1933), p. 73. N. Avigad, "A New Class of Yehud-Stamps," IEJ 7 (1957) 148f.

<sup>60</sup> P. W. Lapp, "Ptolemaic Stamped Handles from Judah," BASOR 172 (1963) 34, n. 59; J. G. Gager, ZNW 60 (1969) 138f.; M. Stern, Greek and Latin Authors, pp. 40f.

<sup>61</sup> As does Willrich, Juden und Griechen vor der makkabäischen Erhebung (Göttingen, 1895) p. 32.

<sup>62</sup> M. Stern, Greek and Latin Authors, pp. 41f.

<sup>63</sup> Gager, ZNW 60 (1969) 137.

<sup>64</sup> Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 270.

<sup>65</sup> Lewy, ZNW 31 (1932) 126f.

<sup>66</sup> This quotation from Hecataeus occurs in the context of the abstinence of priests from wine while serving the god. Jacoby, FGH, vol. 3Aa, p. 45, restricts the quotation to the phrase about the moderate habits of the kings.

Hecataeus as colonists from Egypt (Diodorus 40.3), duplication of customs is not unusual.<sup>67</sup>

The description of Ptolemy Lagus in Josephus (Apion 1.186) is close to that given in Diodorus 18.14.1; 19.86.3; the source for Diodorus is not clear.<sup>68</sup> That this description of Ptolemy in Against Apion 1.186 reflects a Jewish apologetic tendency can be maintained only once one has already determined on other grounds that the work is inauthentic, but it cannot stand as a separate argument on its own. One could quite easily state that Hecataeus, writing in the reign of Ptolemy, did not wish to antagonize him.

In conclusion, one can find no strong argument against the authenticity of this fragment. On the contrary, one can detect similarities between it and other Greek ethnographical writing, and between its attitude toward the Jews and that of the Hecataeus of Diodorus 40.3. Consequently, these fragments must be considered authentic.

<sup>67</sup> Lewy, ZNW 31 (1932) 127f. In n. 1 on p. 128, Lewy points to other links between Egyptian customs and those of the Jews as reported by Hecataeus: the granting of land to the priests (Diodorus Siculus 1.73.3); the raising of children (Diodorus 1.80.3) is required, and it is done in the simplest manner (Diodorus 1.80.5–6). Cf. also M. Stern, Greek and Latin Authors, pp. 32–34.

<sup>68</sup> Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 271, n. 54.

Text

183. So Clearchus mentions us by way of digression, for his main topic was different. Hecataeus of Abdera, however, a man at home both in philosophy and in public life, did not mention the Jews in passing, but wrote a book about them.<sup>a</sup> (Hecataeus) grew up in the time of Alexander the King, and was a contemporary of Ptolemy, son of Lagus. I propose to run through, in a summary fashion, some of what is said in this book.

184. First, I will fix the date. (Hecataeus) mentions the battle of Ptolemy against Demetrios at Gaza. Now this battle took place eleven years after Alexander's death, in the 117th Olympiad (312–309 B.C.), as Castor<sup>b</sup> relates.

185. For, when discussing this Olympiad, he states: "In this Olympiad, Ptolemy, son of Lagus, defeated Demetrios surnamed Poliocetes, son of Antigonos, in a battle at Gaza." That Alexander died in the 114th Olympiad (324–321 B.C.) is commonly agreed. So clearly our race was flourishing in the years of Ptolemy and Alexander.<sup>c</sup>

186. Further, Hecataeus states: "After the battle at Gaza, Ptolemy was in control of Syria. Many heard of his kindly benevolence, and decided to go back with him to Egypt and to be members of his empire."

187. "One of these," (Hecataeus) says, "was Ezechias, a chief priest of the Jews, a man about sixty-six years old. He was highly thought of by his countrymen, and quite intelligent; he could speak well, and was as skilled an administrator as any."

188. And indeed the Jews have about 1,500 priests who receive a tithe of what is produced and who manage public affairs."<sup>d</sup>

189. Speaking again of (Ezechias), (Hecataeus) says: "This man, who had attained to such a position of honor and who now was part of our society,<sup>e</sup> gathered together some of his friends and read to them his whole scroll.<sup>f</sup> For it contained the story of their settlement and their political constitution."

a. Note the similarity in phrasing with how Josephus speaks of Hecataeus' work on Abraham, in Ant 1.159.

b. Castor of Rhodes, cf. Jacoby, FGH, vol. 2B, p. 250.

c. Coming after the gymnastics Josephus performs to show the antiquity of the Jewish race by a comparison of Egyptian, Phoenician, and Babylonian chronology with that of the Greeks (Apion 1.103–5; 121–27; 159–60), this phrase—and, indeed, the whole argument of Josephus, Apion 1.184f.—must be taken as ironical.

d. This number is too small for all the priests of Judea; in Ezra 2:36–39, the number of priests totals 4,289. However, the figure for the priests in Jerusalem is given by Neh 11:10–14 as 1,192; 1Chr 9:10–13 mentions 1,760. See J. Jeremias, Jerusalem in the Time of Jesus, trans. by F. H. Cave and C. H. Cave (Philadelphia, 1975) pp. 199–206; M. Stern, Greek and Latin Authors, p. 42. The number 1,500, then, refers to the number of priests in Jerusalem.

e. Gk. teteuchōs tēs timēs tautēs kai sunēthēs hēmin genomenos. Should this participial phrase be interpreted to refer to what has previously been said about Ezechias, or should one presuppose that some information has been left out by Josephus and the phrase should be taken as obscure? H. St. John Thackeray, in the LCL edition of Josephus, Apion, who is followed by M. Stern, seems to take the latter position. Thackeray suggests that "this honor" refers either to the high priesthood or to some special honor given to Ezechias by Ptolemy;

he translates the second half of the phrase as "having been closely in touch with us." Such an interpretation, whereby Hecataeus and Ezechias are seen as good friends and acquaintances, has led to the suggestion that Ezechias is the source for Hecataeus' information about Judea and Jerusalem (Lewy, ZNW 31 [1932] 122; Walter, JSHRZ 1.2 [1976] 147).

I have translated the phrase in the context of what has previously been said. Therefore, tēs timēs tautēs refers to the positions of honor that Ezechias held among his countrymen. One finds it hard to imagine that Josephus would have omitted a story whereby a Jew was given a special honor by Ptolemy, and also where a writer like Hecataeus became close friends with a Jewish high priest. Since the notion of friendship between Hecataeus and Ezechias finds no further development in the text, I suggest that sunēthēs hēmin refers to Ezechias' emigration to Egypt to share in (koinōnein) and be a member of Ptolemy's empire. Sunēthēs would thus have the more general meaning of "habituated," "accustomed," and hēmin would not refer to a special coterie of friends, but to Alexandrian society as a whole.

f. I have followed the suggested emendation of Lewy that diphtheran be read instead of diaphoran (Lewy, ZNW 31 [1932] 123; contrast M. Stern, Greek and Latin Authors, p. 42). Diaphoran has caused much difficulty in interpretation and is translated "he read to them how Greek customs differed from Jewish" or "he read to them how it was good that they had emigrated."

190. Then Hecataeus discusses our attitude toward our laws; he shows that we prefer to suffer anything rather than to transgress our laws, and that we consider such suffering noble.

191. He says: "Therefore, even though spoken ill of by their neighbors and by foreign visitors, and even though frequently treated with disrespect by the Persian kings and satraps, their determination could not be shaken. Without defense, they meet tortures and the worst kinds of death on behalf of these laws, and they do not disown their hereditary way of life."

192. (Hecataeus) brings forward many proofs of their perseverance for the sake of the laws. For he says that when Alexander was at Babylon, he decided to restore the ruined temple of Bel, and ordered all his soldiers, no matter who they were, to fetch the materials.<sup>g</sup> Only the Jews did not obey the orders, but endured much punishment and paid heavy fines until the king pardoned them and granted them exemption.

193. (Hecataeus) gives further evidence: when foreigners came to their country and built temples and altars, the Jews razed them to the ground. In some cases they paid fines to the satraps, in others they were pardoned. And Hecataeus adds that such conduct rightly causes admiration.

194. (Hecataeus) also notes that our race is extremely numerous. For he says that first the Persians deported myriads of our<sup>h</sup> race to Babylon, and also many myriads emigrated to Egypt and Phoenicia after Alexander's death because of the unsettled conditions in Syria.

195. The same writer has reported of the size and beauty of the land we live in. For he says, "They occupy almost three million arourae<sup>i</sup> of excellent and very fertile territory. For such is the size of Judea."

196. Again, he narrates that, from antiquity, we have lived in Jerusalem, a large and beautiful city. He speaks of the size of the population and of the construction of the Temple. Here is his account.

197. "The Jews have many walled towns and villages throughout their country, but only one fortified city whose circumference is about fifty stades<sup>j</sup> and whose population is about one hundred and twenty thousand. Its name is Jerusalem.

198. There, almost in the center of the city,<sup>k</sup> is found a stone-walled enclosure about five plethra in length,<sup>l</sup> a hundred cubits in breadth; it has two entrances. Within this enclosure stands a square altar made of heaped-up stones,<sup>m</sup> unhewn and unfinished; each side is twenty cubits, and its height is ten cubits. Beside this stands a large building in which there are an altar and a lampstand; both of these latter are made out of gold and weigh two talents.<sup>n</sup>

199. On them burns a light day and night—it never goes out. There is no image of a god, or any kind of votive offering; there is absolutely no trace of any plant life, whether in the form of a sacred grove or such like. Priests continually perform certain holy rituals in it day and night; they drink no wine whatsoever while in the temple."<sup>o</sup>

200. Again, (Hecataeus) bears witness that we campaigned<sup>p</sup> both with Alexander the King and with his successors. I will narrate one incident out of those done on the campaign; it was done by a Jew and Hecataeus himself was present.

i. LetAris 116 gives the area as sixty million arourae, a clear exaggeration. Three million arourae is about 826,000 hectares.

j. LetAris 105 estimates 40 stades, as does Timochares (Eusebius, PrEv 9.35); Josephus (War 5.159) gives 33, and a report in Eusebius, PrEv 9.36 gives 27. A stade is 606¼ feet, so 50 stades is about 30,000 feet.

k. Lewy (ZNW 31 [1932] 128f.) pointed out that to place the Temple in the middle of the city reflects a Gk. view of city planning, not the actual facts. The qualification "nearly" (malista) is not strong enough to reverse this judgment, pace Wacholder, Eupolemus, p. 270, n. 47.

l. A plethron = 100 feet.

m. Ex 20:25; Dt 27:5f.; 1Mac 4:46f.

n. Ex 30:1-5; 37:25-28; 25:31-40; 37:17-24; 1Mac 4:48-51

o. Reading with L sunestratueomen (or sunestratueusamen) instead of sunestratueusanto, as does Walter.

g. On the rebuilding of the temple of Bel by Alexander the Great, see Arrian, Anabasis F. 17.2-3. Arrian simply states that Alexander entrusted the job to the Babylonians. Cf. also Strabo 16.1.5.

h. As Thackeray notes, Josephus is paraphrasing Hecataeus, and the use of the first person plural can best be explained this way, rather than showing that the author (Ps-Hec) lets slip his relationship with Jews in this passage (Wacholder, Eupolemus, 266f.).

As regards the notice that it was the Persians and not the Babylonians who exiled Jews to Babylon, Lewy (ZNW 31 [1932] 126) first noted that Syncellus, in his reporting of Eusebius' Chronicon, mentions that Artaxerxes III Ochus banished Jews to the Caspian Sea and to Babylonia. Contrast Solinus, Collectanea 35, 4 (No. 449); M. Stern, Greek and Latin Authors, p. 43.

201. He says: "While I was marching toward the Red Sea, among the Jewish cavalry accompanying us was a man named Mosollamus, a strong man of good intelligence; he was generally recognized to be the best bowman either Greek or barbarian.

202. Now this man noticed that many were going off the route and that some diviner was watching a bird and asking everybody to stop. So Mosollamus asked what they were waiting for.

203. The diviner pointed out the bird to him and said that, if the bird remained still, everybody should stay put; if it rose up and flew forward, everybody should advance; if it flew backward, the army should retreat. Without saying a word, Mosollamus bent his bow, shot, and hit and killed the bird.

204. When the diviner and some others got angry and cursed him, Mosollamus said, 'Why are you getting into a frenzy, you poor devils?' Then, taking the bird in his hands, he said, 'How could this bird give us sound advice about where we should march when it could not foresee how to keep itself well? If it could have foreseen the future, it would not have come here; it would have been scared that Mosollamus the Jew would kill it with an arrow.'

205. That is enough evidence from Hecataeus; anyone who wants to learn more can read the book without any trouble.

Index

Note: Volume numbers are in boldface. References to footnotes from the text of documents use footnote numbers; for example, “1:262 n8a” refers to note 8a on page 262 of volume 1.

This index is essentially an index to topics and names in the pseudepigrapha and related scriptural and ancient literature. Geographical areas and places are included only if of great importance.

Aaron

- Artapanus on, 2:900, 901
- in 2 Baruch, 1:641
- on curtain of God, in 3 Enoch, 1:297
- in Damascus Document, 2:427
- Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:852, 853
- eclipse of, 2:427 n
- in Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:805, 813
- in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:684, 688, 694
- invoked by Ishmael, 1:255
- in Jannes and Jambres, 2:432, 438, 440
- in Lives of the Prophets, 1:382, 388
- in 4 Maccabees, 2:552
- as master of mystical lore, 1:252
- as priest, 1:96, 257
  - in 3 Enoch, 1:301
  - in 4 Ezra, 1:525
  - in Pseudo-Philo, 2:324
  - in Sirach, 1:791 n8b
- in Pseudo-Philo, 2:316, 320, 324, 329, 366, 368, 374
- tribe of, 2:396, 396 n2d
- Abaddon, 2:173 n10l
- Abaöth, 2:721
- Abaya, Rabbi, 2:857
- Abbahu, Rabbi, 1:315
- Abba of Akko, Rabbi, 2:281 n20d
- Abdias. See Apostolic History of Abdias
- Abednego, 1:500, 502, 513, 2:558 n13b
- Abel
  - in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:701
  - in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:609
  - in Bere'sit Rabbah (GenR), 2:264 n21c
  - different sources on burial of, 2:293 n40d
  - in 1 Enoch, 1:25
  - in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:684, 688, 693
  - in Jubilees, 2:61, 64
  - as judge, in Testament of Abraham, 1:350 n2q2
  - in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:249, 266–67, 290, 291–93
  - in 4 Maccabees, 2:563
  - in Pseudo-Philo, 2:304, 305
  - in Testament of Adam, 1:994
  - in Testament of Isaac, 1:907, 908
  - in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:804, 827
  - in Vision of Isaiah, 2:170, 171
- Abezethibou, 1:936–38, 952–54, 967 n6d, 985–86
- Abijah, 2:395 n18c
- Abimelek (Abimelech)
  - in 4 Baruch, 2:413, 414, 416, 417, 419–25
  - in Jubilees, 2:35, 103
  - in Pseudo-Philo, 2:350–51, 376
- Abiuth, 2:307
- 'Abodah Zarah (AZ), 1:229, 231 n, 245, 268 n16h, 281 n26m, 291 n39b, 309 n24i on “book of the generations of Adam,” 2:251 n on God's offering of law to all nations, 2:318 n11d as heavenly throne, 1:866 n1h instruction of prematurely dead in, 1:313 n48Cz Messiah in, 2:298 n45u Nimrod in, 1:297 n45l poison of God in, 1:658 stars in, 1:299 n46b on storehouse of beings, 1:294 n43i “swift cherub” in, 1:309 n24h
- Abortion
  - in 1 Enoch, 1:48, 80
  - list of books with condemnation of, 2:580 n185i
  - in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:580
  - in Sibylline Oracles, 1:333, 352
- Abot (Ab), 1:74 n93a, 261 n6e, 262 n8a, 315 n48Dv, 819
  - on creation, 1:887 n9b
  - judgment books in, 1:889 n12d, 900 n10b
  - yoke of Law in, 1:633 n41a
- Abot de-Rabbi Nathan (ARN), 1:239, 260 n5k, 262 n8a, 269 n17f, 285 n31a, 674 n11d on fall of Adam and Eve, 2:279 n19a, 279 n19f on Job, 1:843 n9d, 847 n20f souls in, 1:294 n44a, 295 n44e
- Above, as likeness of below, in Odes of Solomon, 2:764
- Abraham (Abram)
  - Apocalypse of. See Apocalypse of Abraham
  - in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:249
  - Artapanus on, 2:889, 891, 897

- Abraham (Abram) (Cont.)
 Aseneth as parallel to, 2:189
 as astrologer
   in Jubilees, 1:475 n, 477, 2:40, 81
   legend of Egyptian visit, 2:202 n/e Pseudo-Eupolemus on, 2:873–74, 880–82
 in 2 Baruch, 1:618, 641
 in 4 Baruch, 2:419, 421
 Books of the Mysteries held by, 1:949 n
 changing of name of, in Jubilees, 2:86
 children of, 1:204 n71c
 Christ seen by, 1:407 n6a
 Cleodemus Malchus on, 2:883, 887
 as colony founder, 2:886
 on curtain of God, in 3 Enoch, 1:297
 Death of, 1:xxvi
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:851, 852
 in Ethiopian commentary to 1 Enoch, 1:74 n93j
 as exorcist, in Genesis Apocryphon, 1:945
 in Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:813
 in 4 Ezra, 1:526, 528, 634
 as friend of God, 1:882 n/g
   in Testament of Abraham, 1:882–84, 886, 892, 901
 as giants' descendant, in Pseudo-Eupolemus, 2:882
 in heaven, in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:502, 514, 515
   in 3 Enoch, 1:295–96
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:677, 678, 684, 687, 688, 693, 696, 697
 in Jubilees, 1:475 n, 477, 2:35, 36, 40, 45, 47, 79–100, 909
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:411
 at Last Judgment in Sibylline Oracles, 1:351
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:389
 in magical papyrus, 2:717
 martyrs received by, in 4 Maccabees, 2:539, 558
 messengers to
   in Genesis, 1:136 n21e
   in Jubilees, 2:81
 nakedness of, in Jubilees, 2:69
 in Orphica (possibly), 2:796, 799 ni
 in Philo the Epic Poet, 2:781, 783
 in Prayer of Jacob, 2:720
 in Prayer of Manasseh, 2:628, 630, 634, 635
 proselytism of, 1:878
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:645, 661, 669
 Pseudo-Hecataeus on, 2:905, 909, 913
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300, 301, 310–13, 315, 325, 332–33, 345, 374
 soul of
   in Origen, 1:565
   in Testament of Abraham, 1:565, 867 n52e
 Testament of. See Testament of Abraham
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:903, 905, 907–11
 in Testament of Jacob, 1:916, 918
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:790, 792, 793, 795, 800, 801, 810, 811, 818, 828, 2:786
 wife of. See Sarah
See also Isaac, Abraham's planned sacrifice of 'Abram (father-in-law of Terah), 2:79
 Abstinence. See Fasting; Wine
 Abysses (depths; pits)
   in 2 Baruch, 1:642
   in 1 Enoch, 1:38, 61–62, 64, 70–72, 2:722 nu
   in 2 Enoch, 1:147
   in 4 Ezra, 1:543
   in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:679
   in Testament of Levi, 1:789
   See also Fire, of Hell; Hell; Oceans, abysses of Account of Creation. See Ma'aseh Bere'sit
 Account of the Chariot. See Ma'aseh Merkabah Accuser (in Hades), in Apocalypse of Zephaniah,
   1:502, 503, 511, 513
 Achan, 2:330, 335
 Acheron, Lake. See Lake Acheron
 Acheron, stream of, Homer and, 2:823, 842
 Achilles, 1:372
 Achilles Tatius, Clitophon and Leucippe, 2:183, 185, 203 n1k, 203 n1m, 204 n2b, 206 n4n, 209 n6o, 214 n9a, 227 n15g
 Acrostics
   of Adam's name, 2:268 n27a
   in 3 Baruch (possibly), 1:666 n4i
   in Sibylline Oracles, 1:362, 417, 417 n, 423– 24, 434
 Acts. See Acts of the Apostles (book)
 Acts of Andrew, 1:667 n4r
 Acts of John (book), 1:110 n3e, 199 n69u, 662 ne
   Odes of Solomon and, 2:747 n13a, 747 n13b
 Acts of Matthew (book), 2:464
 Acts of Nouna (book), 1:985 n24a
 Acts of Peter (book)
   Apocryphon of Ezekiel in, 1:488
   child prodigy in, 1:206 n711
   Vision of Isaiah in, 2:150
 Acts of Peter and the Twelve Apostles (book),
   1:571 n1f
 Acts of Philip (book), 1:194 n66d
   Ezekiel's death in, 2:388 n3b
 Acts of Pilate (book), 2:429
 Acts of St. Catherine (book), 2:429, 430 n, 433 n
 Acts of the Apostles (apocryphal book), 2:184
 Acts of the Apostles (book)
   angels' appearances in, 2:224 n14a, 225 n14p
   Aratus in, 2:835
   Artapanus and, 2:901 n3j2
   ascension of Jesus in, 1:195 n67c, 859 n39e
   David's death in, 1:514 n9a
   1 Enoch in, 1:10
   Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:186, 195, 225 n14p
   Jubilees and, 2:49
   magic in, 1:943
   man-made temple in, 2:827 n8b
   Odes of Solomon and, 2:728, 2:744 n11c
   Paul's immunity in, 1:820 n6a
   Pseudo-Philo and, 2:302
   Testament of Moses and, 1:924
   Vision of Ezra in, 1:585
 Acts of Thomas (book), 1:409, 662 ne
 ActsPhil. See Acts of Philip Adail, 1:145
   See also Adoil
 Adam (first man)
   animals named by
     in 2 Enoch, 1:184–85, 218
     in Jubilees, 2:58
   Apocalypse of. See Apocalypse of Adam to be brought out as last one, in 2 Enoch, 1:168
   creation of
     day of, in rabbinic interpretation, 2:293 n42b
     in 2 Enoch, 1:143 n25a
     in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:578

- in Jubilees, 2:57
 on curtain of God, in 3 Enoch, 1:297
 death of
   in Jubilees, 2:63–64
   in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:249, 254, 270–71, 274–75, 286–93
 Death of (book), 1:992, 994 n3a
 Devil's refusal to worship
   in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:610
   in Gospel of Bartholomew, 1:149 n29j
   in Life of Adam and Eve, xxx, 2:262
 Enoch's supposed burying of, 1:311 n48Cb
 evil heart of, in 4 Ezra, 1:521, 529 future divinity of, in Testament of Adam, 1:991, 994 future prophesied by, 1:994 n3a, in Testament of Adam, 1:994 future shown to, in Sanhedrin, 1:296 n45c guarded by angel, in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:566, 572 guilt of. See also Original sin in 4 Ezra, 1:xxx, 529, 537, 541
   in Jubilees, 2:47
 handwriting of, in 2 Enoch, 1:156
 in heaven
   in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:266–68
   in Testament of Adam, 1:888, 899
   in Vision of Isaiah, 2:170, 171
 as image of God. See Man, as image (facsimile) of God
 "last," in 1 Corinthians, 1:168 n42d
 length of life of, in 2 Baruch, 1:627
 magic book of, 1:956
 oil of mercy sought by. See Mercy, oil of as protoplastus, 2:322 n13i
 as pseudonym, 1:602 n
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:304, 322 n13i
 pun on name of, 1:438 n11h2
 recalled from death, in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:609 removal of soul of, in Apocalypse of Moses, 1:514 n9a
 revelations given to, 1:622 n4c
 rib returned to, in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:293
 salvation of, in Testament of Simeon, 1:787
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:335, 362, 424
 Testament of. See Testament of Adam
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:907, 908
 whether angels could be seen by, 1:154 n31c
See also Adam and Eve; Life of Adam and Eve Adam (nephew of Ahigar), 2:488 n
 Adam and Eve
   as androgynous being, 1:712 n1d
   blessed ones compared to, in History of the Rechabites, 2:452
   Book of, 1:xxvi, 2:723 ni2
   Combat of (book), 2:250
   Conflict of. See Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan fall of, xxx. See also Garden of Eden, Adam and Eve's expulsion from
     in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:700, 701
     in Apocalypse of Adam, 1:707
     in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:610
     in 2 Baruch, 1:618, 627, 629, 637, 641
     in 3 Baruch, 1:658, 659, 666–67, 672–73
     in 2 Enoch, 1:154
     in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:561, 565, 572
     in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:692
     in Jubilees, 2:35, 48, 59–60
     in Life of Adam and Eve, 1:572 n2f, 2:249, 251, 270–85
     in Pseudo-Philo, 2:322
     in Sibylline Oracles, 1:335–36, 424
     in Testament of Adam, 1:991, 994
     in Koran, 1:155 n32b
     Life of. See Life of Adam and Eve
     See also Adam; Eve
 Adam's Daughter, Book of (other name of Jubilees), 2:41
 Adarkes (King), 1:936, 983–84
 Additions to Esther (book), 1:xxvii, 2:218 n11a2, 711
 "Addition" to the feast, in Jubilees, 2:118
 'Adernā'el, 1:60 n82z
 Adoil, 1:142 n24g, 143 n25a, 144–45, 146 n27e, 216 ni
 Adonael, 1:954, 979
 Adonai, 1:351, 979, 981
 Adonai (Adōnai), 1:351, 979, 981, 2:721
 Adoniaos, 2:717, 721 nr
 Adonis, 1:343, 2:151
 Adultery
   in Ahiqar (Syrian), 2:587
   desired by Egyptian woman with Joseph in Jubilees, 2:128–29
   in Testament of Joseph, 1:819–21
   determination of woman suspected of, in Numbers, 2:320 n12f
   Greek poets (possibly) on, 2:830
   in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:158
   in Noachian law, 2:569
   in Psalms of Solomon, 2:659
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:305, 319, 336, 358, 359
   Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:569, 574, 580
   punishment for, in Vision of Ezra, 1:581, 587, 589–90
   in Sibylline Oracles, 1:333, 339, 346, 351, 379, 384, 391, 397
   Syriac Menander on, 2:585, 593, 599, 601
   in Testament of Jacob, 1:917
   See also Sexual offenses
 Adversary. See Devil
 Aelian, 2:856 n, 915
 Aeneas, 1:371, 393 nb, 431, 433, 438 11g2–i2, 438 n1112, 445 n12c
 Aeons, God as ruler of, 1:236
   in Apocalypse of Adam, 1:709, 712, 714–15
 Aeschylus, 2:804–6, 808 na, 811 nz, 814 np2, 816 nd3
   Derek Erez "forged quotations" from, 2:568
   iambic fragment attributed to, 2:824–25 Aesop
   fables of, 2:484 n, 499 nVII, 506 nXIm, 507 nXIIId
   Koran and, 2:491
   Life of, 2:184, 480, 491, 507 nXIIIff
 Aethiopica (Heliodorus), 2:183
 Afera, 2:883, 887
 Africa
   Heracles' expedition to, Cleodemus Malchus on, 2:883–87
 Africanus, Julius, 1:341–21, 2:254 n, 2:632
 Afterlife. See Hell; Paradise; Resurrection; Righteous ones; Salvation
 Agag, 2:371–72, 377

- Agamemnon, 1:437 n1b2, 437 n1f2
 Age, end of. See History, end point of; Time, end of Aged people. See Old age Agenor, 2:877, 881 n
 'Aggadat Mašiaḥ
 Messiah in, 1:298 n45t
 Agitation, Syriac Menander on, 2:591, 604
 Agriculture
 Ahiqar's proverbs on, 2:503
 end of hard labor in
 in 2 Baruch, 1:646
 as recommended work by Greeks and Jews,
 2:580 n161f
 taught to Adam, in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 266
 warning against damage to, in Pseudo-Phocylides,
 2:575
See also Egypt, famine in Agrippa. See Herod Agrippa I
 Ahab, 2:159, 391, 392
 Ahasuerus (king of Persia), 1:436 n1lq, 2:515
 Ahaziah, 2:159, 392, 397
 'Aher (Elisha b. Abuya), 1:230, 232, 268
 Ahijah, 1:525
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:395
 Ahikar. See Ahiqar
 Ahiqar (book), 2:184, 187, 477
 adultery in, 2:587
 introduction to, 2:479–93
 Syriac Menander and, 2:587
 text of, 2:494–507
 Akēr, 1:566, 577
 Akhazukhan, 1:183
 Akhmimic dialect. See Coptic language, Akhmimic
 Akicharos (book attributed to Theophrastus),
 2:491
 Akkadian language, Ahiqar and, 2:481, 483 n
 'Aktari'el Yah, 1:255 n1b, 304
 Alchemy, in 1 Enoch, 1:16
 Alcmena, 2:827 n7d, 827 n7f
 Alcohol. See Vine; Wine
 Alexander Balas, 1:371 n3u2, 371 n3v2
 Alexander Polyhistor, 1:831, 2:781
 Aristes of the Exegete in, 2:855, 857
 Artapanus in, 2:889, 890, 898 n3g, 901 n3h2, 902 n3m2
 Cleodemus Malchus from, 2:883–85, 887
 Demetrius the Chronographer in, 2:843, 844,
 848, 849 n8a, 852 19b, 853 n4a, 854 n4e
 Eupolemus in, 2:861, 862, 865–71
 Ezekiel the Tragedian in, 2:803–5, 808 na, 810 nw, 811 ny, 814 nm2, 815 nw2, 816
 general estimate of, 2:777–78
 Pseudo-Eupolemus in, 2:873, 874, 878
 Theodotus's poem and, 2:785–88, 790–93
 Alexander Severus (Roman emperor), 1:411 n7k,
 435 n11j, 443, 452, 2:588
 Alexander the Great, 1:355, 956, 2:518 n2a, 917
 ascension of, 1:107 n1o
 Cananus admired by, 2:856 n, 914–15
 divine honors to, 1:743 n2p3
 Hecataeus of Abdera on, 2:913–14
 Life of (book), 2:184
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:320, 327–28, 359, 370–
 71, 386, 393 n5a, 436 n11u, 439–40,
 445 n12b
 tax remission by, 1:744 2r3
See also Macedonia
 Alexandria (Lycophon), 1:319, 358
 Alexandria (Egypt)
 Apocalypse of Elijah from, 1:730, 740 n2c2
 Aristobulus's work probably from, 2:833
 Artapanus as resident in, 2:891
 Demetrius the Chronographer probably in,
 2:844, 845
 Ezekiel the Tragedian probably from, 2:804 Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers possibly composed in, 2:673
 Jeremiah's tomb in, in Lives of the Prophets,
 2:387
 Josephus on Jews of, 2:9 n
 Letter of Aristes and, 2:7–10
 library of, 2:7, 12
 3 Maccabees from, 2:512
 4 Maccabees possibly from, 2:534–35
 mob of, Pseudo-Philo on, 2:577 n961
 number of Jews in, 2:523 n4d
 Philo the Epic Poet's work possibly from, 2:781
 Prayer of Manasseh possibly from, 2:628
 pre-existence of souls taught by Jews of, 1:922
 Pseudo-Phocylides probably from, 2:567–68
 Ptolemy IV's persecution of Jews of, in 3 Maccabees, 2:509, 513, 520, 522–27, 890
 resentment against, 1:724
 rise of, 1:440 n11x2
 Sibylline Oracles from, 1:355, 432, 443,
 453, 455 n13m, 459
 Testament of Abraham and, 1:874
 Testament of Job from, 1:852 n28g
 Therapeutae near, 1:834
 troubles in, under Caligula, 2:187, 567
See also Egypt
 Alexandrinus (manuscript), 2:488 n, 510, 531
 Allah, primary title of, 2:484 n
 Allegorical method of interpreting Scripture,
 2:834–35
 "Almighty God, The" (angel), 1:953, 968
 Almsgiving. See Poor, alms to Alphabet of Aqiba (book), 1:224, 229, 257 n2a, 264 n11c, 265 n12a, 285 n31f, 289 n35j,
 296 n45a
 divine justice in, 1:285 n31a
 doffing of crowns in, 1:271 n18d
 end of time in, 1:300 n48Ah
 3 Enoch texts taken from, 1:310 n48Ba, 311 n48Ca
 future shown in, 1:296 45c
 gates in, 1:262 n8a
 letters on "terrible crown" in, 1:284 n29e
 men of faith in, 1:315 n48Dv
 Metatron, as God's servant in, 1:295 n44t
 Moses and Aaron in, 1:282 n27g
 perfect Torah in, 1:264 n11b
 sacred names in, 1:291 n39a, 310 n48Bh, 315 n48Dt
 Šekinah in, 1:288 n35c
 sword of God in, 1:286 n32c
 treasuries of souls in, 1:294 n43b
 voice of God in, 1:261 n6g
 2 Alphabet of Ben Sira
 Ahiqar and, 2:490
 History of the Rechabites and, 2:447
 Alphabet of Metatron, 1:265 n12a
 Altars. See Sacrifices

- Amalekites, 1:787 n6b, 2:371
intercourse with, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 359–60
- Amaltheia, 1:328
- Amaltheia's Horn, 1:839, 864–68
Prayers of, 1:860 n40l
- Ambrose, 1:967 n6b, 2:230 n16f2, 541–42
- Amidah (of Sabbath morning), 1:578 n6f
- Amilabes (name for Abel), 2:267
- Ammon (enemy of Israel), 2:351–53, 355
- Amorites
in 2 Baruch, 1:642
in Jubilees, 2:36, 44, 45, 48, 85, 11–12, 120–21
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:324, 325, 329, 330, 334, 336, 339–40, 343, 352
in Testament of Judah, 1:797
in Testament of Moses, 1:933–34
- Amorites, 1:796 n3a, 916
- Amos, 1:526, 2:163
in Lives of the Prophets, 2:391
- Amram, 1:255, 949 n, 2:138, 315–16, 852
- Anac (son of Ashkenaz), 2:307
- Anac (son of Jared), 2:304
- Anagram on Adam. See Adam, anagram (acrostic) on
- Anan'el, 1:16, 47 n69c
- Ananias, 2:16, 158, 165
- 'Anapi'el, 1:261, 264 n10i, 268, 273
- Anathema, woe to pronouncers of, in 1 Enoch, 1:76
- Anatolius, 2:831, 832, 836, 837 n1a, 837 n1b, 837 n1d
- Anatreth, 1:980 n18a3
- Ancestors. See Patriarchs
- Andreas (bodyguard), 2:13, 21, 24
- Androgyne, in Roman Sibylline Oracles, 1:320
- Androgynous beings, in On the Origin of the World, 2:717
- Androgyny of Death, in Nag Hammadi documents, 1:942
- Angelic Liturgy (4QŠirŠabb and MasŠirŠabb) angels in, 1:249, 269 n17b, 279 n25g, 303 n15Bc, 306 n22Cm, 791 n8b
Life of Adam and Eve and, 2:253
at Masada, 1:249 n
Merkabah mysticism in, 1:236, 249, 856 n33m, 866 n48h
Throne in, 2:268 n26b
- Angels
Adam's view of, in 2 Enoch, 1:152–54
anointing of body by, in Testament of Abraham, 1:895
in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:684
appearance of, as historical personages, 2:225 n14p armed, 1:246
in 3 Baruch, 1:657–58
in 4 Baruch, 2:413, 418–21
camps of, in 3 Enoch, 1:288–89
circumcision of, in Jubilees, 2:47
classes of, 1:242–43
in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:503
in 3 Enoch, 1:266, 270–75
in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:674, 680, 690, 694
in Jubilees, 2:47, 55
command of, in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:566, 577
creation of
in 2 Enoch, 1:144 n25a, 148–49
in 3 Enoch, 1:282, 291–92
in Jubilees, 2:55
in Merkabah texts, 1:237
crowns of. See Crowns, of angels of death, 1:658, 737 n1i2, 886 n8e, 892 n16f.
See also Death
in 3 Enoch, 1:315
in Psalms of Solomon, 2:644, 658
rabbinical term for, 1:970 n8b
in Syriac Menander, 2:605
in Testament of Job, 1:835, 865, 867–68
in Vision of Isaiah, 2:170
of destruction
in 3 Enoch, 1:285, 286, 294–95
stars as, 1:397 n5m2
eating and drinking by, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:228–29
eating and drinking inability of, 1:884 n5e
in Testament of Abraham, 1:884
fallen (evil). See also Lucifer; Satan
in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:684
in 2 Baruch, 1:641
demons as, in Testament of Solomon, 1:952, 953
in 1 Enoch, 1:xxx, 9, 15, 19, 24, 44, 47–49, 63–64, 70, 957
in 2 Enoch, 1:96, 112–15, 130–33
evil as caused by, 1:xxx, 106 n1e
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 348
in Questions of Ezra, 1:594, 596–97
in Testament of Reuben, 1:784, 842 n6c
families of, 1:247, 265 n12f
fellowship of just with, 1:855 n33d, 718 n, 723 ni2, 2:229 n16o
fighting between
in Apocalypse of Abraham, 2:702–3
in Prayer of Joseph, 2:702
in Vision of Isaiah, 2:174
fireborn. See Fire, angels made from with flowers, in 3 Baruch, 1:674–75 glorification of God by
in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:566, 574
in Prayer of Manasseh, 2:635, 637
in Testament of Levi, 1:794
guardian, 2:319 n12k
in Jubilees, 2:47, 138, 139
national, in Bere'šit Rabbah, 2:707 n
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 319 n11k, 321 n13e, 323, 372
in Testament of Jacob, 1:913, 914
heavenly bodies governed by. See Moon; Stars; Sun
as heavenly household
in 3 Enoch, 1:282
in Merkabah texts, 1:241–44
hierarchy of. See Angels, classes of, above
on horses
in 3 Enoch, 1:270
in 4 Maccabees, 2:548
Michael on, in Testament of Abraham, 1:883
in Testament of Adam, 1:995
of hosts, 1:663 n1k, 675 12b
in Odes of Solomon, 2:749

Angels (Cont.)

- human beings opposed by. See Man, angelic opposition to
- human beings transmuted into, in 3 Enoch, 1:138–41
- human virtues represented by, 2:227 n15q
- of instruction of the righteous, in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:779
- intercessory, 2:227 n15r
in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:779, 790, 810
- invisibility of, in Origen, 1:154 n31c
- in Jubilees, 247, 133 n30c
- knowledge of God through, 1:xxxii
- in Ladder of Jacob, 2:405
- language of. See Glossolalia
- life span of, 1:292 n40j
- as light, in Testament of Job, 1:835, 840
- in Lives of the Prophets, 2:382
- of mankind, 2:287
- as mediators between man and God. See Man, angelic mediation between God and
- as messengers. See also 4 Ezra; Michael
in History of the Rechabites, 2:445, 450, 451
in Jannes and Jambres, 2:430–31, 434, 437
in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:177, 224–31
in More Psalms of David, 2:614
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:348–49, 355–56
- ministering, 2:704
- at Moses' death, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:328
- names and duties of
in 1 Enoch, 1:232–24, 31–32, 47–48, 247
in 2 Enoch, 1:97
in 3 Enoch, 1:240, 242, 266–67, 266 n14d, 276 n19b
in Ladder of Jacob, 2:405, 408
in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:340, 351
in Testament of Abraham, 1:878
in Testament of Adam, 1:991, 995
- not told by God of creation, in 2 Enoch, 1:142–43
- number of
in 1 Enoch, 1:40, 50
in 2 Enoch, 1:164–65
in 3 Enoch, 1:305
- in Old Testament, contrasted to 3 Enoch, 1:246
- pairs of, 1:106 n1j
in Paradise
in 2 Enoch, 1:116–17
in History of the Rechabites, 2:443, 445, 447 n, 455–60
in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:268, 272–73
- of peace, 1:790 n5d
in 1 Enoch, 1:37–39, 41
in 3 Enoch, 1:286
in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:779, 810, 818, 826
- of plague, in 1 Enoch, 1:37
- of power and principalities, 1:675 n12b, 2:264 n21a
- primeval, 1:259
- protective. See also Israel, angels' help to
in 3 Enoch, 1:241
in Ethiopian Church, 1:10
in 3 Maccabees, 2:509, 514, 526–27
in 4 Maccabees, 2:548
in Testament of Joseph, 1:820
- of punishment and hell
in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:498, 502, 503, 508, 511
in 1 Enoch, 1:39, 43–46
in 2 Enoch, 1:118–19
in Testament of Abraham, 1:889
in Testament of Levi, 1:779
in Vision of Ezra, 1:574 n4b
in Vision of Isaiah, 2:173
- recording, 1:867 n51f
in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:498, 503, 511, 513
in 3 Baruch, 1:657, 659
in 2 Enoch, 1:132–33, 140–41
in 3 Enoch, 1:274–75
in Testament of Abraham, 1:889, 890, 900
- of repentance (Repentance), 2:190, 227
- righteous dead as having higher status than, in Vision of Isaiah, 2:154, 171–72
- of righteousness, in 4 Baruch, 2:423, 424
- in second coming of Christ, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:744
- Šekinah's nourishment to, 1:259 n5c, 278 n22j
- sense of smell of, in 3 Enoch, 1:261
- separating God and man, in 3 Enoch, 1:236
- sex of
in 1 Enoch, 1:15–16
in 3 Enoch, 1:288
- sexual activity banned in presence of, in 1 Enoch, 1:21, 205 n71d
- singing and liturgy by, 1:133 n19c. See also Sanctus
in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:500, 508
in Ascension of Isaiah, 1:248
in 2 Enoch, 1:132–37, 168, 867 n51a
in 3 Enoch, 1:223, 245
- Jacob's opponent as leader of, 2:702, 708
- in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 273, 277
- in Questions of Ezra, 1:593, 598
- "still, small voice" as, 1:306 n22Cm
- in Testament of Abraham, 1:897
in Testament of Levi, 1:248
- sitting down by, 1:263 n10b, 274 np2
- size of, 1:263 n9c, 312 n48Ck
in 3 Enoch, 1:273, 275, 277, 279, 288
- thrones of. See Thrones, of angels
- thwarting, in Testament of Solomon, 1:935, 953, 970, 979
- traditional descriptions of, 2:225 n14q
- transformations of, in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:512
- vessels of Temple preserved by, in 2 Baruch, 1:617, 623
- in Vision of Isaiah, 2:172–73
- in visions. See Visions
- of war and battle
in Greek history, 2:527 n6g
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:340, 374
in Testament of Adam, 1:991, 995
- who failed in performance of Sanctus, in 3 Enoch, 1:223, 288 n35h, 291, 299–300
- winged
in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:750
in Dead Sea Scrolls, 1:249
in 1 Enoch, 1:7
in 2 Enoch, 1:110–12, 130–31, 134–35
in 3 Enoch, 1:249, 263, 277–80
in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:694

- worship of, 1:504–5
See also Archangels; Cherubim; Heaven; Watchers
- Anger
 Ahigar on, 2:507
 how to avoid, Letter of Aristeas on, 2:29
 list of warnings against, 2:576 n64a
 in 4 Maccabees, 2:545, 547
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:576
 Sibylline Oracles on, 1:348
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:907
 in Testament of Jacob, 1:917
 Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs on, 1:779, 808–9
See also God, wrath of
- 'Ani'el, 1:268 n16j
- Animals
 Adam's naming of. See Adam, animals named by cooperation of, 1:860 n40i
 creation of
 in 2 Enoch, 1:143 n25a, 150–51
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:679, 691
 in Jubilees, 2:56–57
 deification of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:471 destruction of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:426 divided by sex in Paradise, in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:254, 277 dreams of, in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:812, 824 giants' sinning against
 in 1 Enoch, 1:16
 in Jubilees, 2:70
 God's mercy to
 in Questions of Ezra, 1:596, 599
 in Vision of Ezra, 1:590
 guilt of, 1:184 n58e
 hunting of, Syriac Menander on, 2:599
 lamentations by, in Testament of Job, 1:859 n39c, 860 man's accountability for treatment of, in 2 Enoch, 1:97 man's mercy to, in Testament of Zebulon, 1:806 memory in, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:23
 in Noah's Ark. See Flood parental love by, in 4 Maccabees, 2:559
 proverbs about, in Ahigar, 2:498–502 revolt and rule of, in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:249, 272–75, 283 sacred, in Artapanus, 2:889, 893, 900, 902 sacrifice of. See also Sacrifices
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:693–96
 on Day of Atonement, 2:539
 in 2 Enoch, 1:96, 184–85, 196–201
 in Letter of Aristeas, 2:22, 24
 in More Psalms of David, 2:619–21
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:376, 384, 426–27, 429
 in Testament of Issachar, 1:803
 souls of, in 2 Enoch, 1:184–85, 218 speech by, in Jubilees, 1:35, 40, 60 taming of
 in 2 Baruch, 1:645
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:379
 unclean. See also Dietary practices of Jews
 in Letter of Aristeas, 1:23, 24
- wild
 God's protection against, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:662
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:579
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:813–14, 826
See also Bestiality
- Anointed One. See Messiah
- Anointing, 2:272 n36a
 of afflicted by priest, in Testament of Adam, 1:993
 of body by angels, in Testament of Abraham, 1:895
 of Enoch in heaven, in 2 Enoch, 1:138–39
 of Levi, in Testament of Levi, 1:791 n8c
 of priests, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321
- Answers Given by Solomon (book), xxvi
- Antaios, 2:884, 885, 887
- Antichrist
 in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:758, 760–61, 767–70, 2:162 n4j
 in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:613
 in Book of Mysteries, 1:10
 Dan and, 1:809 n5b
 flight of faithful from, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:748–50
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:564, 567–68, 575–76
 in 1 John, 1:729
 length of rule of, in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:162
 miracles by
 in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:760–61, 769
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:745
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:564, 575
 in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:161–62
 in Seventh Vision of Daniel, 1:567
 physiognomy of, 1:568, 724, 731
 in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:756, 767–68
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:745–46
 as Satan incarnate, 1:732, 2:161 n4a
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:363 n3k, 364 as son of lawlessness, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:724, 731, 732, 737, 742 n2b3, 744–46, 748, 749, 752
 in Syriac Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:563
 in 2 Thessalonians, 1:567, 575 n4f, 575 n4h
 three heads in legend of, 1:398 n5a3
 virgin birth of, in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:757, 767
- Antigonus, 2:24
- Antioch
 4 Maccabees possibly from, 2:535–37
 Odes of Solomon possibly from, 2:727
- Antiochus III the Great, 1:440 n11v2, 744 n2q3, 2:509, 517
- Antiochus IV Epiphanes, 2:640, 651 n1f
 in 4 Maccabees, 2:531, 533, 538, 541, 549–50, 563, 856 persecutions by, 1:920–21, 2:9, 10, 46, 98 n22d, 149, 150, 914
 Sibylline Oracles and, 1:355, 371 n3v2, 375 n3u3, 375 n3v3
- Temple profaned by, 1:355*n*
 terminal worms of, 1:853 n31c
 in Testament of Adam, 1:995
- Anti-Semitism. See topics under Jews

- Antoninus Pius (Roman emperor), 1:394 n5t, 419 n8i, 449 n12g2, 449 n12h2, 462 n14i,
2:585
- Ants, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:580
- Aod, 2:301, 348
- Aphrodite, 1:365, 974 n13a
- Aphroditianus, Tale of, 2:404–5, 410 n7a, 410 n7c, 410 n7g, 411 n7h
- Aploan*. See Apocalypse of Ioannis
- Apis (sacred bull), 1:410 2:900
- Apocalypse of Abraham (book), xxii, 1:880
angelic conflict in, 2:702–3
1 Enoch and, 1:10
3 Enoch and, 1:249
Eve's sexual desire awakened by snake in,
2:283 n25d
hypostatic voice in, 2:406
introduction to, 1:681–88
Ladder of Jacob and, 2:403, 404
meals in, 2:212 n8i
Michael in, 1:136 n21e
Odes of Solomon and, 2:745 n11q
text of, 1:689–705
theodicy of, xxx
- Apocalypse of Adam (book), xxii, xxvii, 1:942 n, 946, 992, 994, 2:250
introduction to, 1:707–11
text of, 1:712–19
- Apocalypse of Asclepius (book), 1:332 n
- Apocalypse of Baruch (book), 1:659–60
Apocalypse of Sedrach and, 1:607
- Apocalypse of Daniel (book), xxii, 1:573 n2m, 576 n4p
introduction to, 1:755–62
text of, 1:763–70
- Apocalypse of Daniel (lost book), 1:761
- Apocalypse of Elijah (book), xxii, xxxiii, 1:499– 500
Antichrist in, 1:363 n3k, 724, 731, 732,
742 n2b3, 744–53
introduction to, 1:721–34
Sibylline Oracles and, 1:453
text of, 1:735–53
See also Coptic Apocalypse of Elijah; under Hebrew language
- Apocalypse of Ezra (book), xxii
3 Ezra and Exodus and, 1:569 n
languages of, 1:563–64
See also Greek Apocalypse of Ezra
- Apocalypse of Ioannis (Aploan; Apocalypse of John; book), 1:351, 573 n2m, 576 n5b, 588
Antichrist in, 1:568, 575 n4g
Vision of Ezra and, 1:581 n
"Apocalypse of John," 1:760 n
- Apocalypse of Mary. See Apocalypse of the Virgin
- Apocalypse of Moses (Greek text of Life of Adam and Eve). See Life of Adam and Eve
- Apocalypse of Moses (other name for Jubilees),
2:41
- Apocalypse of Paul (book), 1:114 n7i, 118 n10e,
334, 509 n1a
angels in, 1:597 nAh, 597 nAk
Apocalypse of Zephaniah and, 1:497, 501, 505,
506, 508 nBc, 510 n2c, 510 n3a, 510 n3b, 511 n3e, 512 n5b
3 Baruch and, 1:657, 660
- 2 Corinthians and, 1:512 n5b
Ezekiel's death in, 2:388 n3b
Greek Apocalypse of Ezra and, 1:573 n2k,
576 n5c
Testament of Abraham and, 1:880
Vision of Ezra and, 1:581 n, 585
- Apocalypse of Peter (book), 1:194 n66d, 334
1 Enoch and, 1:8
"hanging punishments" in, 1:113 n7c, 568
pillar of fire in, 1:351 n2s2
Vision of Ezra and, 1:581 n, 585
- Apocalypse of Sedrach (book), xxii, xxx, xxxiii
Greek Apocalypse of Ezra and, 1:563–65, 569
hypostatic voice in, 1:609–10, 2:406
introduction to, 1:605–8
Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:240 n23s
Testament of Abraham and, 1:880
text of, 1:609–13
Vision of Ezra and, 1:581
- Apocalypse of Shem (book), 2:450 n1h
- Apocalypse of the Virgin (Apocalypse of Mary; book), 1:568, 606
punishments in, 1:575 n4e, 576 n5a
Vision of Ezra and, 1:581 n, 585
- Apocalypse of Thomas (book), 1:567 n
- Apocalypse of Weeks
in Book of Mysteries, 1:10
in 1 Enoch, 1:5, 7, 73–75, 323 n, 382
- Apocalypse of Zephaniah (book), xxii, 1:334, 727, 2:607
angelic choirs in, 1:673 n10c
girdles in, 1:513, 2:225 n14u
introduction to, 1:497–507
text of, 1:508–15
- Apocalypse of Zerubbabel (book), 1:724
- Apocalypse of Zosimus. See History of the Rech-abites
- Apocalypses
in Christianity to Middle Ages, 1:583–84
definition and nature of, 1:3–4, 9–10, 497,
721, 839 n1j, 2:27–28
God's presence not stressed in, 2:729
Merkabah texts contrasted to, 1:235
See also Revelations
- 5 Apocalyptic Syriac Psalms, 2:610 n, 614, 618
- Apocalyptic movements and literatures, nature of,
2:646
- ApocEzek. See Apocryphon of Ezekiel
- Apocrypha
definitions of, xxiv, xxvii, 2:629
by Pseudo-Athanasius, xxi–xxii list of, 1:760 n
list of abbreviations for, xlv, xlvi
secret lore in, 1:512 n5b
Apocrypha Anecdota, 1:847 n20f
- Apocryphal Book of Moses, (Which) Contains the Great Name, 2:718
- Apocryphon of Elijah, 1:568
- Apocryphon of Ezekiel, xxii
Clement books and, 2:464
introduction to, 1:489–90
text of, 1:492–95
- Apocryphon of Isaiah, 2:149
- Apocryphon of John (book), 1:143 n24h,
2:55 n2h, 2:721 n1, 721 nq
- Apocryphon of Lamech, xxii
- Apokalypsis tou hagiou Iōannou*. See Apocalypse of Ioannis

- Apollo (god), 1:318, 320, 372 n3e3, 384 n4a, 400 n5a3, 442 n11m3, 979 n18w, 979 n18z
- Apollodorus (grammarians; writer), 1:342 n1y, 365 n3t, 713 n3e, 717 n7j, 717 n7l, 867 n51b, 2:885 n
- Apollodorus of Carystus, 2:830 n12b
- Apollodorus the Erythrean, 1:328
- Apollonius (governor of Syria), 2:531, 534, 540, 548–49
- Apollonius of Rhodes, 2:787
- Apology (book), 2:427 n
- Apostates
in 2 Baruch, 1:633–34
in 1 Enoch, 1:74
See also Angels, fallen
- Apostolic Constitutions (ApCon), xxii, 1:683, 728
- Arian as possible compiler of, 2:674 n
- Doctrine of the Two Ways in, 1:817 n1a
- Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers in, 2:671–73, 703 n
text of, 2:677–97
- Prayer of Manasseh and, 2:627, 631, 632
- Apostolic History of Abdias (book), 1:206 n71l, 2:429
- Apuleius, 1:985 25a, 2:427 n
Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:183, 184, 192, 193, 202 n1g, 203 n1k, 203 n1m, 203 n1o, 204 n2b, 204 n2m, 207 n4u, 207 n4x, 207 n4a2, 208 n4c, 209 n6o, 212 n8i, 214 n9a, 215 n10b, 215 n10p, 216 n10s, 216 n10c2, 217 n11a, 217 n11f, 217 n11j, 217 n11p2, 220 n12a, 224 n14a, 226 n15c, 227 n15q, 233 n19a, 233 n19i, 235 n21c, 238 n21c2
- Aqiba, Rabbi
Alphabet of. See Alphabet of Aqiba angels and, 1:256 n1f
martyrdom of, 1:297 n45h
in Pardes, 1:230, 232
- Aquinas, Thomas, on Prayer of Manasseh, 2:630, 632
- Arabian Hermetic traditions, 3 Enoch and, 1:228
- Arabic language
Ahiqar in, 2:480, 486, 488, 492
2 Baruch in, 1:616
Book of the Rolls in, 1:992
Cave of Treasures in, 2:250
Combat of Adam and Eve in, 2:250
4 Ezra in, 1:519
History of the Rechabites in, 2:447
Joseph and Aseneth in, 2:179
Testament of Abraham in, 1:871
Testament of Adam in, 1:989, 990
Testament of Isaac in, 1:903
Testament of Jacob in, 1:913
- Arabs
in Artapanus, 2:897, 900
Asia Minor invaded by, 1:763 n1x
Egypt conquered by, 1:459, 467–68
as Ishmaelites, in Jubilees, 2:94
in Lives of the Prophets, 2:396
- Aram (father of Tamar), 1:797, 2:121, 130
- Aram (son of Shem), 2:69, 74, 308, 310
See also Targums
- Aramaic language
Ahiqar in, 2:480–84, 488, 587
1 Enoch in, 1:6, 94
in 3 Enoch, 1:225, 272 n18j
incantation bowls inscribed in, 1:227–29, 943, 947–48, 963 n1p, 967 n5p, 974 n13a
incantation text in, 1:315 n48Dw
Jannes and Jambres possibly in, 2:432
in Jubilees. See Lubar, Mount
Lives of the Prophets in, 2:380
Odes of Solomon possibly composed in, 2:726
Prayer of Joseph possibly in, 2:700
Prayer of Manasseh possibly in, 2:625–27
Pseudo-Philo probably not in, 2:299
Syriac Menander's possible use of, 2:584
Testament of Job in, 1:830–31
Testament of Moses possibly in, 1:920
Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs in, 1:776, 2:49
- Ararat, Mount
in 2 Enoch, 1:212
in Sibylline Oracles, 1:332, 341
- Aratus of Soli
in Acts of the Apostles, 2:835
Aristobulus' quoting of, 2:841
- Arazyal, 1:16
- Archangels
in 2 Baruch, 1:642
in 3 Baruch, 1:658
in 1 Enoch, 1:23–24, 247, 963 n2i
in 2 Enoch, 1:132, 134–35, 138 n22i
in 3 Enoch, 1:261 n6b, 264, 269, 272–74, 284–85
Enoch elevated to rank of, 1:228, 244 four, 1:953 n, 963 n2i, 2:713 nAi. See also Discourse Concerning the Four Archangels
in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:680, 694
in Odes of Solomon, 2:736
in Testament of Adam, 1:991, 995
in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:779
Uriel as, in Prayer of Joseph, 2:704 wisest, in 2 Enoch, 1:140–41
See also Angels
- Archelaus, 1:920
- Archistrategos (commander-in-chief), 1:882 n1c
Michael as, 1:138 n22i, 156–57, 566, 575, 675, 882–92, 894, 902, 2:225 n14k
Raphael as, 1:566, 571
- Archons
in Gnosticism, 1:236, 237
Hypostases of, 1:236, 237
Nature of, 1:716 n7f
in Testament of Adam, 1:991, 995
in Testament of Job, 1:835, 866
- Archontics, 1:708, 716 n7a
- Ared, 1:102 n1aa, 156
See also Jared
- Ares, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:421, 436 n11u, 438, 439, 441, 451, 452, 454, 456, 457, 461–63
- Arianism
Apostolic Constitutions and, 2:674 n
Odes of Solomon and, 2:728
- Ariim, 1:183
- Arim, 1:183 n57c
- Ariokh (Ariukh; angel), 1:156, 157
- Aristeas, Letter of. See Letter of Aristeas
- Aristeas the Exegete
introduction to, 2:855–58
text of, 2:859

- Aristobulus (high priest), 2:651 n2, 659 n8n, 659 n8p, 666 n17e
- Aristobulus (philosopher), 1:338 n1k, 355 n, 2:674, 775
- fragments of pseudo-Greek poets and, 2:821, 823
- introduction to fragments of, 2:831–36
- Orphica in, 2:795–96
- text of fragments of, 2:837–42
- Aristobus II Maccabeus, 2:152–53
- Aristophanes, 1:320, 849 n23e, 2:21 n8h, 2:790 n1a
- Aristotle, 1:317 n, 956, 2:805, 810 nt
- on 10-month spacings in births, 2:848
- as pseudonym, 1:602 n
- on souls, 1:118 n10f
- Ariukh (Ariokh), 1:156, 157
- Ark, the. See Flood, the
- Arkhas. See Arukhas
- Ark of the Covenant
- cows singing to, 1:231
- in 2 Enoch, 1:212
- Eupolemus on, 2:870, 871
- in Lives of the Prophets, 2:382, 388
- in Pseudo-Philo, 2:319, 330, 332, 338, 368–70, 373
- Armaros, 1:15, 16 n6n, 47
- Armenia, Ezra assimilated to Moses in, 1:566
- Armenian language, 1:xxvi
- Ahiqar in, 2:480, 486, 492
- Death of Adam in, 1:992
- 4 Ezra in, 1:518–19, 520, 592
- History of the Rechabites in, 2:445, 447
- Joseph and Aseneth in, 2:179–81, 197, 199, 200
- Life of Adam and Eve in, 2:250, 252, 255
- Life of Moses in, 1:566
- lists of books in, 2:464 n
- Lives of the Prophets in, 2:379
- 3 Maccabees in, 2:510
- Questions of Ezra in 1:563, 569, 591, 592
- Signs of the Judgment in, 1:576 n4p
- Testament of Adam in, 1:989
- Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs in, 1:776
- Armeses, 1:16 n6n
- See also* Armaros
- Armodat, 2:310
- Armores, 1:47 n69c
- See also* Armaros
- Arms (armaments)
- angels with, 1:246 in Testament of Solomon, 1:970
- destruction of, in 1 Enoch, 1:37, 47
- teaching of making of, in 1 Enoch, 1:9, 16, 47
- Aroua, size of, 2:20 nc2
- Arpachshad, 2:69, 71, 74, 77, 2:308, 310
- Arrian, 2:915, 918 ng
- Arrogance
- denunciation of
- in Sibylline Oracles, 1:398–99
- in Syriac Menander, 2:599
- in Testament of Job, 1:836 n, 845
- of kings, 2:30
- Arsinoë (Queen of Egypt), 2:15, 24 nt2, 513, 517
- Artapanus, 2:717, 783 n1–2a, 783 n3a, 839 n3a, 840 n4c, 843–44, 850 n12b, 876
- historical fragments of, 1:435 n11j, 2:775, 814 nm2
- introduction to fragments of, 2:889–96
- Jannes and Jambres attributed to, 2:428, 433–34
- text of fragments of, 2:897–903
- Artaxerxes (king of Persia, exact identification unclear), 1:436 n11q, 436 n11s, 525, 2:914
- Artaxerxes (king of Persia in A.D. 231), 1:452 n12m3
- Artemis (goddess), 1:969 n7d, 970
- Artosael, 1:953, 978
- Arugat habbošem, 1:289 n36d
- Arukhas (Arkhas), 1:142 n24g, 143 n25a, 144–45, 146 n27e
- Asaph, 2:163, 165, 366
- Asceticism
- in Testament of Isaac, 1:907–8
- See also* Fasting; Wine
- Asclepius, Apocalypse of, 1:332 n
- Aseneth (Asenath), 2:897
- Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:850
- in Jubilees, 2:122, 135
- in Testament of Joseph, 1:825
- See also* Joseph and Aseneth (book)
- Aseneth's Prayer (book), 2:197
- Ashbel, 2:135, 314
- Asher
- Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:849, 851
- in Genesis, 1:811 n1c
- in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:241, 243
- in Jubilees, 2:110, 120, 122, 128, 135
- in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:782, 801
- tribe of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:317, 335, 336, 338
- Ashes (dust; dung)
- in 4 Baruch, 2:418, 419, 422
- in History of the Rechabites, 2:454
- in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:215–25
- in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:254, 271, 272, 274
- in 3 Maccabees, 2:518
- in Pseudo-Philo, 2:369
- See also* Earth
- Ashkenaz, 2:307, 308, 309 n5e
- Ashmedai. See Asmodeus
- Ashtoreth, 1:970 n81, 971 n8m
- Ashur (Asshur), 2:69, 74, 75, 77
- Asia
- conflict between Rome and, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:358, 370
- woes to
- in 4 Ezra, 1:557
- in Sibylline Oracles, 1:400–1
- Asinus, Gnaius, 2:862, 872
- Asmodeus (Ashmedai)
- in Giṭṭin, 1:948 n, 975 n15e
- in Testament of Solomon, 1:935, 943, 948–49, 952–53, 965–76
- in Tobit, 1:963 n1p, 965 n5a, 966 n5k
- Assaracus, 1:393 n5b, 431, 438
- Asshur, 2:308, 310
- See also* Ashur
- Assumption of Moses. See Testament of Moses
- Assyria
- Ahiqar and, 2:477, 479, 481, 484, 494
- in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:722, 723, 739–40, 743
- in 2 Baruch, 1:642–43
- in 4 Ezra, 1:552, 556
- in 3 Maccabees, 2:526

- origin of name of, 2:885, 887
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:382, 385, 430, 436
 in Testament of Adam, 1:995
- Asteroth, 1:935, 970
- Astrology
 in Artapanus, 2:893, 897
 Chaldean, 1:477 n, 2:78
 condemnation of, 1:477 n
 in Jubilees, 2:40, 71, 78, 81
 in Ladder of Jacob, 1:406
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:357, 367, 453, 455, 477 n
 Syriac Menander on, 2:600
 in Dead Sea Scrolls, 1:250, 568
- Egyptian, 1:346 n2g
 legend of Abraham's teaching of, 2:202 n1e, 873, 881, 893, 897
- Enoch's invention of, Pseudo-Eupolemus on, 2:873, 881
 in Hygromancia of Solomon, 1:942
 in Jannes and Jambres, 2:434
- Jewish, 1:476–80
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:189
 Kronos as planet in, 1:975 n15b
 managing angels of 2 Enoch and, 1:133 n19b
 in Orphica, 2:796, 799
 Pseudo-Eupolemus on, 2:873–74, 880–82
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:328
 Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:576 n71b
 "ruling spirit" in, in Prayer of Joseph, 2:703, 713 nAc
 "seven" in, 1:970 n8a
 of Terah, 1:689 n1a
 in Wisdom of Solomon, 1:945
 See also Astronomy; Revelation; Zodiac
- Astronomy
 in 1 Enoch, 1:22, 32, 48, 51–54, 57–61
 in 2 Enoch, 1:110, 120–31, 132–33, 164–67, 174
 in 3 Enoch, 1:266–67, 276
 Passover calculated by means of, in Aristobulus, 2:831, 834, 837
 See also Moon; Stars; Sun
- Astyges, 2:871 n4c
- 'Aṭṭāyah, 1:313, 860 n40b, 2:254 n
- Athanasius of Alexandria, xxi, xxiii, 1:860 n40b, 2:254 n, 728
- Atheism. See God, denial of existence of
- Athenagoras, 2:221 n1e2, 912
- Atlas (god), 2:878, 881
 seven daughters of, 1:970 n8a
- Atonement
 Day of. See Day of Atonement
 vicarious, in 4 Maccabees, 2:539, 540, 552 n6g
- Atum, 1:717 n7l, 980 n18r2
- Augustine of Hippo, 1:423 n8h2, 967 n6b
 apocalypticism opposed by, 1:584
 on astrology, 1:478–79
 on heavenly citizenship, 1:846 n18d
 on Maccabees, 2:541–42
 Satan's fall in, 2:262 n12a
- Augustus (Emperor; Octavian), 1:474–76
 astrology and, 1:477 n
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:320, 360, 363 n3i, 393 n3f, 441 n11h3, 445–46, 451 n12w2
- Authentikos Logos (book), 2:238 n21c2
- Auz, 2:313
- 'Awan, 2:40, 61, 304 n1b, 305 n2b
- Azael, 1:350 n2p2, 969
- 'Aza'el, 1:258–60
- Azariah, 1:525, 2:561, 563
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:396
- Azazel (Azaz'el), 1:255 n1b, 969 n7e
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:684, 685, 695–96, 699–701, 703, 705
 in 1 Enoch, 1:16–19, 38, 47 n69c, 131 n18d
- 'Azbogah, 1:227, 237, 242, 273 n18z, 274
- b. Before a rabbinic text means it is from the Babylonian Talmud. See Talmud or next element of reference.
- Baal, 1:342 n1z, 964 n3a, 987 n26e, 2:159, 350, 351, 396–97, 871
- Baal Shamayn, 2:486 n, 499 nVIIIa
- Baba Batra (BB), 1:624 n10g, 2:501 nVIII
- Aseneth in, 2:204 n2b
 Dinah in, 1:839 n1m
 "first man" in, 1:311 n48Cb
 fragrance of Garden of Eden in, 1:308 n23l
 on God's creation of both righteous and wicked, 1:294 n43c
 healing stone in, 1:852 n28g
 on Job in patriarchal period, 2:856 n on those who leave Israel, 1:855 n33i
- Babel. See Tower of Babel
- Babylonia (Babylon)
 in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:763, 766
 Baruch's letter to, in 2 Baruch, 1:647
 Berossus' history of. See Berossus of Babylon calendar of, 1:105 n1c, 175 n48e
 creation epic of, 1:145 n26a
 Jewish Exilarch in, 2:388 n3b
 Jews in, 1:860 n40b
 final redaction of 3 Enoch, 1:229
 mysticism, 1:232, 238
 as symbolic name for Rome, 1:396 n5i2, 557 n15f, 2:653 n2a2
 Testament of Solomon possibly from, 1:943
 "vision" of, 2:162 n4t
 wealth of, in 4 Ezra, 1:528
 woes of
 in 2 Baruch, 1:633 n39a, 644
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:368–69, 370, 392, 395, 397, 403, 439
 Zion compared to, in 4 Ezra, 1:529
 See also Chaldaea; Flood; Babylonian version of; Mesopotamia
- Babylonian Captivity. See Exile
- Babylonian Sibyl (Chaldean Sibyl; Persian Sibyl), 1:317–18, 320, 327–28, 359
- Babylonian Talmud. See Talmud, Babylonian; specific rabbinical writings
- Balaam, 1:479, 985, 2:405, 428, 430, 856
 Oracle of, 1:392
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300, 301, 324–26
- Balac, 2:324–26, 859
- Baldad, 1:829, 856–58, 861, 863 n43p, 2:859
- Balista, 1:458 n13i2
- Balkira. See Belkira
- Balthioul, 1:935, 970
- Banquet, Messianic
 in 1 Enoch, 1:43
 in 3 Enoch, 1:302
- Baptism
 Apocalypse of Adam and, 1:709, 710, 716 n7b, 719, 946 n

- Baptism (Cont.)
 4 Baruch and, 2:422 n6g
 2 Enoch and, 1:183 n22o
 of Jewish proselytes, 2:193
 not necessary for salvation, in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:607, 613
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:728, 732
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:382, 388, 424
 Christ's baptism rituals, 1:406, 407, 409, 412
- Baradi'el, 1:267, 269
- Baraita' diMa'ašeh Bere'sit (Baraita' de Ma'ašeh Bere'sit), 1:239, 251, 269 n17f, 309 n24i
- Barak, 2:344, 345, 684
- Baraq'al, 1:16, 16 n8g
See also Baraqel, Baraq'el; Baraqyal
- Baraqel, 1:47
- Baraq'el, 1:47 n69c, 247
- Baraqi'el, 1:242, 247, 267, 269
- Baraqiyal, 1:16, 16 n6n, 477 n
See also Baraqel; Baraqi'el; Baraqyal
- Baraqyal, 1:15
See also Baraq'al; Baraqel; Baraq'el; Baraqi'el
- Bar Hebraeus, 2:79 n11i, 429, 433
- Bar Kokhba, 1:392, 616, 2:673, 909
- Barnabas (epistle; EBar)
 abortion condemned in, 2:580 n185i
 2 Baruch and, 1:617
 date of, 1:617
 1 Enoch and, 1:8
 ethical dualism in, 1:152 n30o
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:745 n11u
 Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:582 n230c
- Bartholomew (gospel; GBart), 1:104 n1a, 154 n31d, 658, 2:262 n12a
- Baruch
 Apocalypse of. See Apocalypse of Baruch books of, xxii. See also 1 Baruch; 2 Baruch; 3 Baruch; 4 Baruch other, 1:659–60, 2:702 n
 Psalms of Solomon and, 2:646
 letter of, 1:647–52
 meaning of name of, 1:970 n8e
- 1 Baruch, xxvii, 1:659
 Jeremiah in, 1:175 n48e
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:745 n11m, 746 n11b2
 Psalms of Solomon and, 2:640, 646–48
- 2 Baruch
 Apocalypse of Baruch and, 1:662 nd, 662 ni, 663 n1c
 Apocalypse of Daniel and, 1:756, 757, 760
 Babylon and Rome in, 1:396 5i2
 4 Baruch and, 1:620, 2:414, 416–17
 1 Enoch and, 1:522
 3 Enoch and, 1:656
 4 Ezra and, 1:522
 History of the Rechabites in, 2:446
 introduction to, 1:615–20
 Messiah in, 1:617, 618, 621 *n1**, 633, 645
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:728, 759 n26b
 Prayer of Jacob and, 2:718
 Prayer of Manasseh and, 2:631
 Pseudo-Philo and, 2:299, 300, 302
 shortening of time in, 1:627, 639, 649, 2:328 n19r
 text of, 1:621–52
 theodicy in, xxx, 1:640
- 3 Baruch
 Apocalypse of Zephaniah and, 1:497, 505
 hypostatic voice in, 2:406 n
 introduction to, 1:653–61
 Michael and, 1:136 n21e, 657–69, 666, 674–77
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:745 n11u, 746 n11x
 provenance of, 1:655–56, 875
 text of, 1:662–79
 theodicy in, xxx
 universalism of, 1:876, 877
 Vision of Isaiah and, 2:154
- 4 Baruch, 1:4
 Apocalypse of Baruch and, 1:622 ng
 Ascension of Isaiah and, 2:149
 2 Baruch and, 1:620, 2:414, 416–17
 3 Baruch and, 1:655, 656
 introduction to, 2:413–17
 Jeremiah in, 1:623 n10a, 2:413, 415–25
 just men in, 1:751 n5f
 Lives of the Prophets and, 2:384, 415
 text of, 2:418–25
- Batei Midrashot (BM), 1:229–32, 244, 245, 296 n45a
See also Re'vyot Yehezqe'l
- Bathsheba, 1:937, 2:395
- Beatitudes, in 2 Enoch, 1:97, 116–19, 168–69, 178–81
- Beelzeboul, in Testament of Solomon, 1:935, 937 n, 952–55, 964, 965, 967–68, 971, 976
- Beheading
 in Hebrews, 2:383, 388 n3b
 possible Ahiqar reference to, 2:503 n1Xp
- Behemoth, 1:964 n21
 in 2 Baruch, 1:630
 in 1 Enoch, 1:40
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:390
- Bel, 2:877
 in Ahiqar (Syriac), 2:486 n
 restoration of temple of, Hecataeus of Abdera on, 2:915, 918
See also Bel and the Dragon
- Bel and the Dragon (book), xxvii, 2:393 n12e, 631
- Belial (Beliar), 1:783 n4c
 in 2 Corinthians, 2:382
 in Dead Sea Scrolls, 1:139 n22p, 349 n2i2, 2:382 n
 in Jubilees, 2:53, 87
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:382, 390, 391, 395
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:779, 782 n2a, 784, 795, 802, 804, 807, 809, 812, 817, 821, 825, 827
- Belkira (Belcheira; Melcheira; Malkira; etc.), 2:151–52, 157–60, 163–64
- Belos, 2:877, 878 n, 881, 882
- Beloved, the
 in Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah, 2:153, 156, 157, 160, 162, 167, 169, 170
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:725, 730, 731, 733, 735, 739, 742
 in Peter (gospel), 2:149
- Below, as likeness of above, in Odes of Solomon, 2:764
- Bemidbar Rabbah (NumR), 1:241, 256 n1i, 259 n5c, 263 n10d, 270 n17r, 350 n2p2
 building of Temple in, 1:943 n
 Eldad and Modad in, 2:464
 fragrance of Garden of Eden in, 1:308 n231
 God's names in, 1:310 n48Bb

- Messiah in, 1:298 n45t
 Metatron in, 1:303 n15Bd
 Ben Azzai, 1:228 n, 230, 232
 Benjamin
   born in Israel, 2:346 n32i
   Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:845,
     848 n3a, 850, 851
   in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:177, 182, 185, 193, 244–47
   in Jubilees, 2:117, 118, 120, 122, 128, 132–35
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:314
   in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:801.
   See also Testament of Benjamin
 tribe of
   not taken captive, Demetrius the Chronogra-
   pher on, 2:854, 871 n5a
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:317, 335, 336, 338, 339, 360–62
 Ben Sira. See 2 Alphabet of Ben Sira
 Ben Zoma, 1:228 n, 230, 232
 Berakot (Ber), 1:289 n35i, 294 n44a, 314 n48Dm, 888 n11a, 949 n
   Aqiba's martyrdom in, 1:297 n45h
   on comets, 1:293 n42k
   on garden vs. Eden, 1:260 n5f
   on heaven, 1:244, 245, 255 n1b, 259 n5c, 263 n10b, 268 n16g, 269 n17f, 284 n30b
   heavenly law court in, 1:244, 284 n30b
   on Hebrew letters, 1:265 n13c
   mercy vs. justice in, 1:285 n31a
   Messiah in, 1:298 n45u
   on morning and evening prayers, 1:897 n4c
   on voice of God, 1:268 n16h, 296 n45a
 Bere'sit Rabbah (GenR), 1:231 n, 260 n5f, 260 n5g, 263 n10b, 292 n42a, 293 n42f, 293 n42i
   on Abraham's ride, 1:875 n
   angels in, 1:286 n33e
   changing appearance, 1:288 n35h
   creation, 1:292 n40i
   eating and drinking by, 1:884 n5e
   God's consulting of, 1:283 n28c
   jealousy of Abraham, 2:345 n32d
   Samma'el, 1:266 n14b
 Cain's killing of Abel in, 2:264 n21c
 Cain's sisters in, 1:992, 994 n3e
 cosmic power of Torah in, 1:315 n48D1
 creation in, 1:265 n13c, 309 n24i
 Dinah in, 1:839 n1m
 3 Enoch and, 1:226, 228 n, 232 n, 245
 on fall of Adam and Eve, 2:281 n20a, 285 n26d
 fiery sword in, 1:286 n32c
 God as Omnipresent One in, 1:274 n18n2
 Jacob-Esau conflict in, 2:706 n, 707 n, 710 n
 joy to suffer in, 1:667 n4q
 mercy vs. justice in, 1:285 n31a
 Messiah in, 1:298 n45t
 on righteous and unrighteous souls, 1:294 n43c
 on River of Fire, 1:273 n18a2
 soul in, 1:606 n
 Upper Waters in, 1:664 n2b
 Berlin Codex, 1:343 ng2
 Berossus of Babylon, 1:157 n33i, 318, 334, 340, n1t, 341 n1u, 350 n2n2, 380 n3e4,
   2:845, 877, 878, 892, 909
 Bestiality
   as possible interpretation of 2 Enoch, 1:184 n59a
   in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:581
 Bet ha-Midrash (BHM), 1:231–33, 239, 886 n8d, 886 n8e, 2:706 n
   angel Israel in, 2:702 n
   See also specific writings, including Hekalot Rabbati
 Bethuel, 2:92, 108, 313
 Betrayal, 1:47
 Bible. See Law; Scriptures
 Biblical Antiquities. See Pseudo-Philo Bilhah (Billah), 1:825, 2:110, 313
   children of
     in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:239, 241
     in Jubilees, 2:110, 120, 136
     in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:808, 810–11, 814
   death of, in Jubilees, 2:121
   Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:848, 849
   genealogy of, 1:776, 811 Reuben's laying with
     in Jubilees, 2:36, 119
     in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:782–84, 798
 Birds
   Abram's driving away of, in Jubilees, 2:40, 78–79
   creation of
     in 2 Enoch, 1:150–51
     in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:691
     in Jubilees, 2:56
   giants' sinning against
     in 1 Enoch, 1:16
     in Jubilees, 2:69
   in heaven, in 3 Baruch, 1:672–73
   man's rule of, in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers,
     2:692
   sacrificial, in Letter of Aristeas, 1:22
   See also Animals; Phoenix Blasphemy
   increase of, in 1 Enoch, 1:72
   in Niachian law, 2:569
   punishment for
     in 1 Enoch, 1:27, 73
     in 2 Enoch, 1:178–79
     hanging by tongue, 1:113 n7e
   recognition of, in 2 Enoch, 1:168
   as sin, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:351
   in Testament of Isaac, 1:908
   in Testament of Jacob, 1:917
 Blessed Ones
   island of
     in classical sources, 2:447–48
     in History of the Rechabites, 2:443
   as term for the gods, 2:570 Blessings. See God, blessings provided by; and specific persons
 Blind man and lame man, story of, 1:487, 492–94
 Blind people
   healing of
     in Pseudo-Philo, 2:336
     in Sibylline Oracles, 1:423
   leading of, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:575 Blood
   atonement by, in Leviticus, 2:539 eating and drinking of Jubilees on, 2:66–68, 70, 78, 95, 96
     in Noachian law, 2:569
   Pseudo-Philo on, 2:307

- Blood (Cont.)
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:575
 Sibylline Oracles on, 1:347
 falling of, in Testament of Adam, 1:995
- Body
 glorification of, in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:607, 612
 of God, in 2 Enoch, 1:136–37, 137 n22c
 God's order in making, in Testament of Naph-tali, 1:811
 transformed, 1:138 n22m
- Bogomils
 dualism of, 1:145 n26d, 684 Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah, possibly edited by, 2:145–46
 pseudepigrapha altered by, 1:683, 685
 on Satan, 1:141 n23h, 154 n31d
- Bohairic. See Coptic language, Bohairic
- Book of Adam and Eve, xxvi, 2:523 ni2
- Book of Dreams. See Dream Visions
- Book of James, 1:205 n71c, 205 n71g
- Book of Rabbi Ishmael the High Priest, 1:224
See also 3 Enoch
- Book of the Bee, The, xxvi, 1:481 n1a, 992, 995 n4c, 2:392 n8c
- Books
 blotted out by God, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:337
 canons of, xxiii–xxiv
 of judgment, 1:889 n12d, 900 n10b. See also Angels, recording
 in Vision of Isaiah, 2:171
 of life. See Life, books of lists of, xxi–xxii, 2:464. See also Apostolic Constitutions; Catalogue of the Sixty Canonical Books; Cedrenus, George; Ni-cephorus, Patriarch; Syncellus, George lists of
 by Ebed Yeshu, 2:197
 in E gelasian Decree, xxii, 1:834, 2:41, 430, 435
 by Mechitar of Ayrivank' (Michichar), xxii, 2:197, 464
 by Sarkavag, 2:197
 lost, xxi–xxii, 1:761
 mentioned in canonical literature, 1:860 n40l
 of names
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:227
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:743
 salvation by reading of, in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:910, 915, 918
 secret and public, in 4 Ezra, 1:555
 written by God's finger, in Odes of Solomon,
 2:756
See also other books under the last element of their names, e.g., Noah (book)
- Booths. See Feast of Booths
- Branding
 in 3 Maccabees, 2:509, 520
 of slaves, 2:652 n2i
 recommended against, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:582
- Bread
 in Joseph and Aseneth's meal formula, 2:191, 212, 212 n8i, 213, 226, 233, 237–38
 unleavened, in Jubilees, 2:141
See also Fasting; Manna
- Breasts
 given to god, in Odes of Solomon, 2:747 of God, in Odes of Solomon, 2:727, 742, 752
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:211, 232
 love of children and flow of milk from, in Odes of Solomon, 2:769
 milk as fruit of, in 4 Ezra, 1:542, 2:765 n35g
- Brotherly love. See Love
- Brothers
 quarrels between
 Esau and Jacob, 2:705–6. See also Esau;
 Jacob
 Syriac Menander's advice on, 2:596
 respect for
 Syriac Menander on, 2:597–8
 seven, in 4 Maccabees, 2:553–64
- Burial
 denial of, 2:656 n4n
 in 4 Ezra, 1:527
 in Testament of Job, 1:835, 858–60, 868
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:785, 795, 802, 804, 807, 810, 814, 816, 818, 825, 828
- Byzantine Empire
 in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:756, 757–58, 764– 67 bureaucracy of, 1:242
 later influence of, 1:761–72
See also Constantinople
- Caesar, Julius, 1:393 n5d, 421 n8q, 441
- Cain
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:701
 daughters of
 in Jubilees, 2:61
 in Testament of Adam, 1:991, 994
 in 1 Enoch, 1:25
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:693
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:249, 264–67, 293
 in 4 Maccabees, 2:563
 mark of, 1:746 n3x
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:304, 305, 324
 punishment of
 in Jubilees, 2:61, 64
 in Testament of Benjamin, 1:827
 wife of, in Jubilees, 2:40, 61
- Cairo Genizah Hekalot, 1:229 n, 231, 233, 251
 allusions to Metatron, 1:268 n16a, 314 n48Di
 angels in, 1:242, 243, 261 n6b, 264 n10f, 265 n12f, 273 n18d2, 305 n22Bk
 Rabbi Ishmael in, 1:255 n1b
- Caleb, 1:641, 867 n52j, 2:323, 329, 687
- tribe of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:334–35
- Calendars
 of ancient Israel, 1:105 n1c
 Jewish loss of, in Jubilees, 2:53 lunar, xxxiii, 1:9
 in 1 Enoch, 1:54
 in Jubilees, 1:105 n1c, 2:39, 68
 lunar epacts in, 1:125 n14d
 in 2 Enoch, 1:130
 sidereal, 1:127 n15d
 solar, xxxiii
 in 3 Baruch, 1:670 n6o
 in 1 Enoch, 1:9, 54
 in 2 Enoch, 1:96, 105 n1b, 105 n1c, 124, 125 n14d, 127 n15d, 128–31, 174 n48b, 174 n48d, 201 n70k
 in 3 Enoch, 1:263 n9f
 in Jubilees, 2:39, 48, 56 n2p, 68
See also Astronomy

- Caligula (Roman emperor), 1:393 n5i, 431, 443, 446, 2:187 n, 511, 534, 567
- Callimachus, 2:787, 2:823, 842 n5r, 891
in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:202 n1d
- Cambyses (king), 1:375 n3v3, 435 n11m, 743 n2p3, 2:899 n3m, 900 n3y
- Canaan (country)
burial of Patriarchs in, in Testament of Jacob, 1:917 Egyptian battles with, 2:137–38 entrance into
in 1 Enoch, 1:66
in Jubilees, 2:141
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:322–23, 328–32
in Testament of Moses, 1:919, 927–28
gods of, in Ahiqar, 2:484–86
Jubilees' author's knowledge of, 2:45
shown to Moses, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:327, 333
- Canaan (son of Ham), 1:714, 2:336
in Jubilees, 2:69, 77
warning against daughters of Canaan, 2:94, 98, 104–5, 108
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:308, 310
- Canaanites
battles against, in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:790, 796–98
calendar of, 1:105 n1c
in Jubilees, 2:36, 37, 48, 85, 121, 122, 130
ocean restrained in myth of, 1:147 n28g
- Cannibalism
in 1 Enoch, 1:16
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:335–36
- Captivity. See Exile
- Castration, forbidding of, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:581
- Catalogue of the Sixty Canonical Books (List of Sixty Books), xxii, 1:500, 728, 2:196
Addition to, 2:464
- Catechumens, Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers on, 2:687, 688–89
- Catherine, St., Acts of, 2:429, 430 n, 433 n
- Catholic Church. See Church
- Cave of Treasures (book), xxvi, 154 n31c, 335, 340, 995 n4c
languages of, 2:250
Life of Adam and Eve and, 2:255
Satan in, 1:658
in Testament of Adam, 1:989, 994
- Caves
Qumran. See Dead Sea Scrolls
refuge in, 1:931 n9f
- Cedrenus, George, xxii, 1:162 n4j, 2:843 n
- Celsus, on demons, 1:965 n4a, 971 n10a, 973 n11d, 978 n18f
- Chaereas and Callirhoë (book). See Chariton
- Chaldea
astrology of, 1:477*n*, 2:78, 799, 880
in Sibylline Oracles, 2:877
Ezekiel in, in Lives of the Prophets, 2:388–89 Jerusalem captured by
in 2 Baruch, 1:622–23
in Lives of the Prophets, 2:393
oracles of, 1:238
fire in, 1:148 n29f
soul in, 1:138 n22m
See also Babylonia; Nebuchadnezzar
Chaldean Sibyl. See Babylonian Sibyl
- Chalkydii (khalkedras), 1:122, 126, 660, 669 n6d
- Chapters of Rabbi Ishmael (book), 1:224
See also 3 Enoch
- Chariots
Abraham's
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:325
in Testament of Abraham, 1:887–88
array of, in 1 Enoch, 1:39
of cherubim, 1:237
in 3 Enoch, 1:278, 308, 309
in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 281
in Testament of Abraham, 1:887–88
Elijah's return on, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:349 fiery
in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:231
in Lives of the Prophets, 2:397
of God
in 3 Enoch, 1:308–9
in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:681
in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 254, 266–68, 281, 287–89
Joseph's, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:208 of moon, in 2 Enoch, 1:131, 672 n9b
of Šekinah, 1:289–90
of seraphim, in Testament of Isaac, 1:903, 910
soul's ascent in. See also Elijah, translation of
in 3 Enoch, 1:261, 867 n52e
in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:287–89
as metaphor in Odes of Solomon, 2:766
in Testament of Job, 1:835, 867–68
of sun, 1:668 n6b
in 3 Baruch, 1:668–69
in 1 Enoch, 1:51
in 2 Enoch, 1:120–21, 126–27
war, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:343
wheels of, in 3 Enoch, 1:276
wind, in 1 Enoch 1:37 n52a, 49
See also Merkabah mysticism, the Chariot in Chariton, Chaereas and Callirhoë of, 2:510
Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:183, 184*n*, 185, 202 n1i, 203 n1k, 203 n1m, 203 n1p, 204 n2m, 205 n3i, 207 n4s, 207 n4a2, 208 n4c, 209 n6m, 210 n7g, 214 n9a, 215 n10b, 215 n10j, 216 n10s, 216 n10b2, 216 n10c2, 217 n11d, 217 n11f, 219 n11p2
- Charity. See Almsgiving; Generosity
- Chastity. See Sexual purity; Virginity
- Chenephres (king), 2:890, 891, 898–901
- Cherubim
angel in charge of
in 1 Enoch, 1:24
in 3 Enoch, 1:277–79
chariots of. See Chariots, of cherubim
in 1 Enoch, 1:20, 50
in 2 Enoch, 1:103 n1ai, 104, 135–36
in 3 Enoch, 1:242, 246, 256, 257, 259, 261, 262, 278–79, 291, 305–8, 311
in Ethiopian Church, 1:10
in Ezekiel, 1:246
in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:564, 566, 573, 578
in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:690, 694
in History of the Rechabites, 2:460
in Ladder of Jacob, 2:408
in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 281, 285
in magical formulae, in Testament of Solomon, 1:981

- Cherubim (Cont.)
 in Prayer of Jacob, 2:720
 in Questions of Ezra, 1:598
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:887
 in Testament of Adam, 1:991, 993, 995
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:903, 910, 911
 in Testament of Job, 1:866
- Childbirth. See Children; Virgin birth; Women
- Children
 discipline of
 in Ahiqar, 2:486–87, 498
 Pseudo-Phocylides on, 2:579, 581
 exposure of, condemned in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:580 with gray temples at birth, 1:349
 of Israel. See Israel; Jews likeness of, to parents, determined by sperm, 2:580 n178d
 love of, and flow of milk, in Odes of Solomon, 2:769 massacre of, in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:763 neglect of, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:29 newborn
 demon vs., in Testament of Solomon, 1:974
 Pharaoh's murder of, in Jubilees, 2:128 number of, in Ahiqar, 2:501 as reward for obedience to God, 2:651 n1c
 rule of
 in 2 Baruch, 1:645
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:379, 423
 sodomy of
 in 2 Enoch, 1:118
 guarding against, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:581–82
 teaching of, Syriac Menander on, 2:593, 600
- Chosen one
 Moses as, in Lives of the Prophets, 2:383, 388
See also Elect One
- Chosen people. See Jews, as chosen people
- Christ, the (Jesus Christ), xxi–xxxiii
 acrostic for, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:416, 417, 423–24
 Ahiqar perhaps known by, 2:488
 as angel wrestling with Jacob, 2:707 n Antichrist compared to
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:744–46, 750
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:564, 567, 575
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:726, 731–32
 in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:605, 606, 609
 as archangel, 1:139 n22p
 baptism of Ebionite version of, 1:194 n67a
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:406, 407, 409, 411–12, 424
 in Testament of Levi, 1:795 n18c
 in 3 Baruch, 1:665, 669
 in 4 Baruch, 2:415, 424
 biographies of
 in Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah, 2:160, 174–75
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:343, 406–7, 416, 424–26
 birth of
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:682
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:402, 410–11
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:387–88
 Melchizedek's birth compared to, 1:204 n71c
 Moses' birth paralleled to, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:316 n9k
 Sampson's birth compared to, 2:355 n42a
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:428
 star at, 1:478–80
 in Tale of Aphroditianus, 2:405
 in Vision of Isaiah, 2:174–75
 in Bogomil doctrine, 1:684
 carried to Mount Tabor, 1:211 n72e
 death of (crucifixion of) cross taken up to heaven, 1:406–7
 darkness at, 1:194 n67a
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:564, 573, 578
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:683
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:402, 411
 in Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah, 2:162, 175
 in Martyrdom of Solomon, 2:729, 732, 759–61, 763, 770, 771 priests' complicity in, in Testament of Levi, 1:794 Pseudo-Philo's ideas similar to theology of, 2:302
 in Questions of Ezra, 1:598
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:343, 425
 in Testament of Adam, 1:994
 in Testament of Benjamin, 1:827
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:953, 955, 973, 975, 984
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:789 n4b, 793, 827
 demons as subjects to, 1:975 n15c, 978 n18f denial of, in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:764 descent from heaven by
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:754
 in Vision of Isaiah, 2:173–74
 as 888, 1:342
 2 Enoch incompatible with Christian beliefs in, 1:96
 as fish, 1:757
 in glory, 1:194 n66d
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:351
 in Vision of Isaiah, 2:171–73
 God's rest after incarnation of, 1:143 n24h
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:672, 675, 677–89, 691, 692, 695–97
 Herod and. See Herod
 in History of Joseph the Carpenter, 1:138 n22j
 incarnation of
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:735–36
 in 4 Baruch, 2:424
 in History of the Rechabites, 2:443, 446, 457–58
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:410–11
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:729, 739–40, 769–70
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:428
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:907
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:787, 789 n5b, 813
 in Vision of Isaiah, 2:154, 170, 173–75
 as infant prodigy, 1:206 n711, 209 n71q
 as intercessor (mediator) in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:675, 681
 in Testament of Jacob, 1:913, 918
 Job and, 1:836
 Justin's attribution of saying to, 1:489 n, 495

- Last Judgment by. See Last Judgment, by Christ
- as lion, 1:740 n
- as Logos
in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:675, 677, 683, 690
- as Lord, Psalms of Solomon's anticipation of concept of, 2:643
- in Odes of Solomon, 2:741–42, 741 n8e, 744, 750–51, 754–55, 765–66, 768 n39i, 770–71
- passion of, in Gnosticism, 1:715 n6e
- prophecies of coming of
in Sibylline Oracles, 1:342–43
in Testament of Adam, 1:989, 994
in Testament of Isaac, 1:903, 907
in Testament of Levi, 1:794–95
in Testament of Solomon, 1:936, 937 n
- resurrection of
in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:683
in Odes of Solomon, 2:729, 771
in Resurrection of Jesus Christ by Bartholomew the Apostle, 1:862 n43d, 866 n48f
in Sibylline Oracles, 1:425
in Vision of Isaiah, 2:170, 175
- righteousness of, in Odes of Solomon, 2:770
- second coming of (Parousia), 1:583, 631 n30a, 890 n13a
in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:744
in 2 Enoch, 1:154
in Gospel of the Egyptians, 1:715 n6a
in Questions of Ezra, 1:596, 599
in Sibylline Oracles, 1:330
in Vision of Isaiah, xxxiii, 2:143, 162–63, 170
- secret name of, in Vision of Isaiah, 2:168, 170
- seen by Adam and Eve, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:407
- in seventh heaven, in Vision of Isaiah, 2:170
- Sibylline Oracles 6 as hymn to, 1:406–7
- sinner saved by, in question of Ezra, 1:598 as 644, in Testament of Solomon, 1:955, 968 n6i, 973 n11g, 976
- in Testament of Isaac, 1:903
- as thwarting angel, in Testament of Solomon, 1:936, 955, 977
- on tombs of murdered prophets, in Luke and Matthew, 2:381, 383
- transgressions against, in Testament of Levi, 1:792
- vicarious atonement by, Jewish roots of idea of, 2:539, 540
- on Zechariah's death, 2:398 n23a
See also Beloved, the; David, house of; Messiah; Son of God
- Chronicles (both books)
Jubilees and, 2:40, 49
Lives of the Prophets and, 2:382, 383
lost book mentioned in, xxi
"Miscellanies" as name for, 1:860 n40l
Prayer of Manasseh and, 2:627–33
Pseudo-Philo and, 2:301
- 1 Chronicles (book)
3 Enoch and, 1:246
- 2 Chronicles (book)
2 Baruch and, 1:619, 643 n64a
4 Baruch and, 2:416
Eupolemus and, 2:862
- Ezekiel the Tragedian and, 2:816 ny2
Manasseh in, 2:150
- Chrysothom, John, 1:478, 2:254 n, 535, 541–42
- Church
corruption of, in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:149, 153, 161 Jewish martyrs honored by, 2:541–42
prayer for increase of, in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:695
Vision of Ezra as support to, 1:584
See also specific churches; other specific topics
- Circles. See Seven circles
- Circumcision
of angels, in Jubilees, 2:47
in 2 Baruch, 1:644
in Colossians, 1:246
death as penalty for, in 1 Maccabees, 2:549 disguise of, in 4 Maccabees, 2:46
Hadrian's edict vs., 2:187
by Holy Spirit
in Odes of Solomon, 2:729, 744
in Jubilees, 2:40, 48, 86–87
Moses as born with, 2:316 n8n, 316 n9o
not mentioned in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:193, 195
speculations on origin of, 2:899 n3s
taught to Ethiopians by Moses, in Artapanus, 2:899
in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:779, 790
in Theodotus, 2:785, 786, 788, 791 n2b, 792
See also Foreskins
- City of Refuge, Aseneth as, 2:189, 226, 229, 231, 233
- Claudius (Roman emperor), 1:393 n5j, 393 n5k, 443, 446–47, 474 n
- 1 Clement (book), 2:434 n
Apocryphon of Ezekiel as source for, 1:487, 488
Ascension of Isaiah and, 2:149
heavenly bodies in, 1:123 n13e
obscure passages in, 2:464
Testament of Job and, 1:866 n48e
"yoke of grace" in, 1:158 n34a
- Clement of Alexandria, xxii, 1:322, 469, 2:488, 534
Ahiqar and, 2:491, 492 n
Alexander Polyhistor and, 2:777, 778
Excerpta ex Theodoto, son of God in, 2:704
Paidagōgus, xlix, 1:388, 397, 487, 494 n2a, 495
Israel in, 2:703 n
Protrepticus, 1:357 n, 375 n3t3, 376, 384, 393 n5a, 400, 404 fragments of pseudo-Greek writers in, 2:821, 822, 824, 825, 912–13
Orphica in, 2:795–96
Quis dives salvetur, 1:346 n2h2, 487, 2:227 n15q
Stromateis, 1:349 n2h2, 470, 488, 494, 497 n, 499–500, 508, 895 n20h, 2:703 n, 781
Aristobulus fragments in, 2:831–32, 836, 839 n2f, 839 n3g, 842 n5f, 842 n5j, 842 n5r
Artapanus in, 2:889, 901 n3i2
assumption of Moses in, 1:868 n52j, 879 n
Demetrius the Chronographer in, 2:843, 844, 854

- Clement of Alexandria (Cont.)
 Eupolemus in, 2:861–62, 865 n1b, 865 n2a, 871–72
 on Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:803, 809 nm, 810 nr “forged quotations” in, 2:568
 fragments of pseudo-Greek poets in, 2:821–29
 Orphica in, 2:795–96
 Pseudo-Hecataeus in, 2:905, 907, 912–13
 Two Ways in, 1:817 n1a
- Cleopatra, 1:474, 480
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:355 n, 358, 360, 361, 370 n3n2, 391, 393 n5g, 397 n5p2, 416, 431–33, 440–42, 445 n12g
- Clothes (garments)
 of Christians, in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:161
 of glory, 1:866 n48h, 2:170 n9i
 in 2 Enoch, 1:138–39
 in 3 Enoch, 1:265
 in Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah, 2:157, 162, 170, 171
 of God. See God, garments of of Iael, in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:694
 in Joseph and Aseneth
 of Aseneth, 2:186, 204–6, 215–16, 225–26
 of Joseph, 2:208
 of Metatron, in 3 Enoch, 1:265
 method of storing of, in antiquity, 2:204 n2h
 priestly, in Testament of Levi, 1:791
- Clouds
 angels of the spirit of, in Jubilees, 2:55
 apocalypse of, in 2 Baruch, 1:639–41 ‘Arabot as, 1:276 n19j
 chariots of (transportation by)
 in 2 Enoch, 1:110
 in 3 Enoch, 1:308, 309
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:576
 God’s commanding of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321
 of mercy, in 3 Enoch, 1:306
 War in, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:380
- Codex Alexandrinus, 2:627, 629, 632, 635 *n**, 639, 647, 649
- Codex Turicensis, 2:627, 629, 632, 635 *n**
- Colossians (epistle)
 1 Enoch and, 1:10
 “heresy” from, 1:246
 Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:580 n175a
 Testament of Job compared to, 1:857 n36a
- Combat of Adam and Eve (book). See Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan
- Comets, 1:346 n2g
 in 3 Enoch, 1:293
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:345–46, 369
- Commodian, 1:398 n5a3, 417, 422, 2:464
 apocalypticism of, 1:584
- Commodus (Roman emperor), 1:443, 450
- Communion
 meal formula in Joseph and Aseneth compared to, 2:212 n8i
 prayer following, in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:677, 694–95
- Confession
 by Aseneth, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:220–21 failure to make, in Vision of Isaiah, 1:581, 584, 588
 need for, by sinners
 in 4 Ezra, 1:559
 in Prayer of Manasseh, 2:629–36
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:645, 661
 of Sibyl, 1:413–14
- Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan (Combat of Adam and Eve; book), xxvi, 2:250, 255
- Consecration. See Anointing; Priesthood
- Constantine (emperor), 1:324, 341 n1w, 423 n8h2, 469, 470, 2:585
- Constantine V (emperor), 1:757–58, 764 n3m, 765 n3r, 766 n5q
- Constantinople, 1:761–62
 in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:757, 763–66, 763 n1o
 Second Council of (A.D. 553), 1:118 n10f, 141 n23f
See also Byzantine Empire
- Consummation of the age (ages), 1:784 n6c, 841
See also History, end point of; Time, end of
- Contendings of the Apostles, The (book), 2:446 n, 464
- Contra Celsium*. See topics under Origen Conversion change of diet as necessary for, 2:212 n8i creation as analogy of, 2:192
 texts on, 2:184
See also Joseph and Aseneth (book); Marriage, mixed
- Coptic Apocalypse of Elijah, Testament of Adam and, 1:990, 992
- Coptic Church, xxiv
 Isaac’s day in, 1:903–5, 910, 911, 914, 918
 Nag Hammadi codices of. See Nag Hammadi codices
- Coptic language
 Akhmimic. See also Coptic Apocalypse of Elijah
 Apocalypse of Elijah in, 1:721, 727, 729, 732, 733, 736 n1a2
 Apocalypse of Zephaniah in, 1:497–503, 509–23
 Ascension of Isaiah in, 2:146
- Bohairic
 Testament of Isaac in, 1:903
 Testament of Jacob in, 1:913
 Testament of Job in, 1:830
- Exegesis on the Soul in, 1:487
- Odes of Solomon in, 725, 2:737 n5h
- prayer to Gabriel in, 2:716
- Resurrection of Jesus Christ (book) by Bartholomew the Apostle in, 1:862 n43d
- Sahidic
 Apocalypse of Adam in, 1:707–8
 Apocalypse of Elijah in, 1:727, 729, 733
 Apocalypse of Zephaniah in, 1:497–500, 502, 508–9
 Ascension of Isaiah in, 2:146
 4 Ezra in, 1:519
 Testament of Isaac in, 1:904
 Testament of Job in, 1:830, 834
 Shepherd of Hermes Vision in, 2:463
 Testament of Abraham in, 1:871
See also Ethiopian language
- 1 Corinthians (epistle)
 Ahiqar and, 2:487
 2 Baruch and, 1:619
 1 Enoch and, 1:10
 Joseph and Aseneth and, 195, 2:212 n8i
 judgment in, 1:350 n2q2

- last Adam of, 1:168 n42d
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:748 n15c, 767 n38q
 Pseudo-Philo and, 2:302
 Testament of Abraham and, 1:889 n12c, 889 n12g, 890 n13i
- 2 Corinthians (epistle)
 Apocalypse of Paul and, 1:512 n5b
 2 Baruch and, 1:619
 1 Enoch and, 1:10
 "fear and trembling" in, 2:214 n9a
 Life of Adam and Eve and, 2:255
 Merkabah mysticism and, 1:230, 246–47,
 865 n48d
 Satan in, 1:842 n6c
 6:14–17; 1:158 n34a
- Corruptor, the, in Odes of Solomon, 2:729, 763– 64, 767
- Cosmetics, fallen angels' teaching of, in 1 Enoch,
 1:9, 16
- Cosmic letters in 1 Enoch, 1:233, 240, 265–66, 292
- Cosmology. See God, as Creator; Heaven; Heavens
- Courage
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:193, 244–45
 in Letter of Aristeas, 2:26
 in 4 Maccabees, 2:545
 Syriac Menander on, 2:601
- Covenant
 alienation from, 1:737 n1r2
 Amram and, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:316
 of David and Jonathan, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:374– 75
 Davidic, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:645, 646 fulfillment of
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:331, 333
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:911
- Israel's infidelity toward
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:681, 685
 in 4 Baruch, 2:421–22
 in Jubilees, 2:87, 101
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:327
- Joshua's, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:332–34
- Last Judgment as day of, in 1 Enoch, 1:40
 with Noah
 in Jubilees, 2:66–67
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:307, 328
- original witnesses to, 1:752 n5v2
 perversion of, in 1 Enoch, 1:79 n99f
 in Prayer of Jacob, 2:716, 720, 722
 in Prayer of Manasseh, 2:628, 634, 635
- promises of
 in Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:813
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:678
 in Jubilees, 2:96–98, 103, 117–18, 139
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:763
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:644, 645, 661
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:313, 315, 318, 322, 325, 346
 in Testament of Moses, 1:922, 927–29
- Qumran term for, 2:617–18
- sinner's disobedience of
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:731
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:877
 in Testament of Moses, 1:928
- survival of Jews guaranteed by
 in Jubilees, 2:85–86
 in Testament of Moses, 1:919, 934
- as term for circumcision, 2:316 n9o
 territory given to Abraham by, in Jubilees, 2:85
 true, in Odes of Solomon, 2:743
 warning vs. breach of, in Jubilees, 2:113–14
See also Ark of the Covenant
- Covetousness
 in Ahiqar, 2:503
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:357
- Cows
 singing by, 1:231
 visions of, in 1 Enoch, 1:63–65, 71
- Creation
 cosmic letters in, in 3 Enoch, 1:233, 240, 265– 66, 292
 by demiurge, 1:236
 by God. See God, as Creator
 preexistence of patriarchs before, 2:703–4, 713 nAd, 723 nk2
 by Satan, in Book of St. John, 1:141 n23h
 "Creation of the Heavens, The," in Testament of Job, 1:866
- Creatures (hayyot)
 angels as
 in 3 Enoch, 1:246, 261, 277, 306, 309
 in Ezekiel, 1:246
 circles around, in 3 Enoch, 1:287–88
- Criminals. See Wicked ones
- Cronos (Cronus), 1:337 n1h, 341 n1x, 342 n1y, 354, 364–66, 370, 2:447
- Cross, the
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:381, 388
 origin of wood of, 2:255–56
 possible Jannes and Jambres reference to, 2:433
See also Christ, the (Jesus Christ)
- Crowns (diadems)
 of angels
 in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:508
 in 3 Enoch, 1:268, 270–75, 277–78, 280–81, 291, 311, 312
 of doves, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:744
 of glory
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:729, 737, 743, 750, 753
 in Testament of Benjamin, 1:826
 of God. See God, crowns of
 of Joseph and Aseneth, 2:208, 232, 235
 Judah's, in Testament of Judah, 1:798, 799
 of Levi, in Testament of Levi, 1:791 Meṭatron's, in 3 Enoch, 1:265–67
 of righteous, 1:578 n6f, 2:170 n9k
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:736, 737 n1i2
 in 2 Baruch, 1:626
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:578
 in Vision of Isaiah, 2:170, 171
 of truth, in Odes of Solomon, 2:735
 of witness, in Testament of Abraham, 1:900
- Crucifixion
 of Christ. See Christ, the, death of
 of priests of Dagon, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:369
- Cryptic Astrological Text (4QCryptic), 1:250, 476, 477 n
- Cumean Sibyl, 1:317, 318, 328, 332, 335 n2b, 380 n3g4, 382
- Cup, in Joseph and Aseneth's meal formula,
 2:191, 212, 213, 226, 233
- Curtains. See Veils
- Cush (son of Ham), 2:69, 74, 77, 308
- Cyprian, 1:637 n48e–g, 660, 2:255, 436

- Cyprian, Penitence of, 2:429, 435
 Cyrus (king), 1:355 n, 356, 368 n3f2, 385 n4i, 435 n11m
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:394
- Damascus Rule (Damascus Document; CD)
 Belial in, 1:783 n4c
 2 Enoch and, 1:158 n35a
 fallen angels in, 1:9, 784 n5a
 Jannes and Jambres in, 2:427 n, 429
 Jubilees in, 2:38 n, 41, 43, 45–47, 50
 Messianism in, xxxi, xxxii, 801 n24b, 801 n24c
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:744 n11d, 755 n22h
 Oracle of Balaam in, 1:392 n
 prayer and good deeds in, 1:674 n11d
 priesthood attacked in, 1:930 n7e
 Psalms of Solomon, and, 2:648–49
 star in, 1:784 n6c, 794 n18b, 801 n24a, 816 n8a, 827 n9b
 Testament of Moses and, 1:924, 929 n5b,
 931 n8a
- Dan'el, 1:15, 16 n6n, 2:62
- Daniel
 Antichrist and, 1:767 n8b, 809 n5b
 Apocalypse of. See Apocalypse of Daniel
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:849, 851
 as exorcist, in Prayer of Nabonidus, 1:945
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:685
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:177, 182, 193, 241– 43, 245–46
 in Jubilees, 2:110, 120, 122, 128, 136
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:389–91, 393, 394 n14b
 in 3 Maccabees, 2:526
 in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:163
 prayer of, in Questions of Ezra, 1:599
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:314
 in Testament of Moses, 1:929 n4a
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:784, 797, 801, 818
 tribe of
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:389
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:317, 335 n25d, 336, 338, 355
- Daniel (book), 1:3, 2:184
 additions to, 1:501, 2:512, 631
 Ahiqar and, 2:484, 487
 Apocalypse of Elijah and, 1:722
 Apocalypse of Zephaniah and, 1:500, 503–5
 boasting by demonic power in, 1:735 n1g
 3 Enoch and, 1:243, 246
 Ezekiel the Tragedian compared to, 2:811 nz
 fiery furnace in, 1:500, 502, 513, 2:526, 558, 561, 563
 heaven in, 1:240, 244, 246, 247, 350 n2q2, 788 n2e
 Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:184, 187
 kingdoms in, 1:382, 550 n12b, 633 n39a, 812 n5c
 languages of, 1:6
 martyrdom in, 2:150
 meals in, 2:212 n8i
 Michael and Gabriel in, 1:138 n22i, 244 n, 272 n18j, 674 n11e, 790 n5d, 962 n5d
 Psalms of Solomon and, 2:640
 resurrection in, xxxiii, 1:512 n5a, 787 n6d
 Susanna in, 1:500, 503
 ten horns of, 1:359, 398 n5a3, 568
- Testament of Levi and, 1:793 n15a
 Testament of Moses and, 1:923–24
 Testament of Solomon and, 1:954
 unidentified man in, 1:505
- Dante, Divine Comedy, 1:242 n, 324, 334, 585, 2:256
- Darkness
 angels of the spirit of, in Jubilees, 2:55
 in 2 Enoch, 1:104 n1al, 143–47
 at assumption of Enoch, 1:194–95
 lacking, in History of the Rechabites, 2:456
See also Hell; Light
- David (king), 1:303 n15Bh, 509 n1b, 770, 2:163
 in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:609, 613
 in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:502–4, 514
 in 2 Baruch, 1:642
 Eupolemus on, 2:865 n2a, 866–67
 exorcistic psalm of, in Pseudo-Philo, 1:945, 2:373
 in 4 Ezra, 1:529, 550
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:684, 685
 house of
 in 4 Ezra, 1:550
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:675, 684
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:408–10
 in Vision of Isaiah, 2:174
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:386, 395
 More Psalms of
 introduction to, 2:609–11
 text of, 2:612–24
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:665–67
 as pseudonym, 1:602 n
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:372–77
 removal of soul of, 1:514 n9a
 sin of, in Solomonic texts, 1:937, 937 n
 son of Messiah as, 2:646
 Solomon as, in Testament of Solomon,
 1:943, 955, 960, 962, 982, 987 n25f
 staff of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:424
 in Testimony of Truth, 1:950 thirst of, in 4 Maccabees, 2:547
 tomb of, 2:381
- Day and night
 creation of, in 2 Enoch, 1:146
 hours of, in Testament of Adam, 1:989, 993
- Day of Atonement
 fasting on, 1:737 n1q2, 738 n1k3
 in Jubilees, 2:48
 lamb sacrificed on, 2:539
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321 n13g
 robing of high priest on, in Leviticus, 1:791 n8c
- Dead, the
 in 4 Baruch, 2:416, 422
 burial of. See Burial
 Ezekiel's restoration of life to, 2:389 n3g
 gentiles' sacrifices to, in Jubilees, 2:98 Jewish law on, 2:536
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:396, 398
 no intercession by
 in 2 Baruch, 1:651–52
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:348
 raising of, by Antichrist, 1:745, 749
 as recognizing each other, 2:375 n62d
 as sleeping in the earth
 in 2 Baruch, 1:625
 in 4 Ezra, 1:538
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:302, 307, 328, 349, 367

- Dead Sea Scrolls, ix, xxix
 abbreviations for, xlviii
 angels in, 2:447 n
   fallen angels, 1:9, 784 n5a
   greatest angels, 2:291 n40c
   Sariel, 2:405
 astrology in, 1:250, 568
 Belial in, 1:349 n2i2, 783 n4c, 2:382 n
 Book of Job in, 2:856
 1 Enoch in, xxiv, 1:6–8, 2:49
 2 Enoch and, 1:95, 102 n1ab, 159 n35d
 fellowship of the just and the angels in,
   1:855 n33d
 Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers and, 2:671 n
 History of the Rechabites and, 2:447 n
 importance of, xxvi
 Jubilees in, 2:38 n, 41, 45–47
 Levi and Judah in, 1:813 n8a
 Martyrdom of Isaiah and, 2:152–53
 Melchisedek in, 1:95, 97, 249–50, 382, 392
 Merkabah mysticism and, 1:236, 249–50
 Messiah in, xxxi, xxxii
 months in, 1:128 n16c
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:726–28
 prayer and good deeds in, 1:674 n11d
 Prayer of Jacob and, 2:718
 Targum of Job in, xxvii
 Testament of Job and, 1:836
 Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs and,
   1:776–78, 780, 811 n2a, 2:49
See also Qumran community; Teacher of Righteousness
- Death
 admittance to heaven after, 1:138 n22j
 androgynous nature of, in On the Origin of the World, 1:942 angels of. See Angels, of death “bitter cup” of, 1:892 n16f
 corruption of, in Syriac Menander, 2:605 desire for, in the last days, in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:759, 769 end of, 1:753 n5r3
   in 2 Baruch, 1:628, 634
   in 4 Ezra, 1:544
   prayer for, in 2 Baruch, 1:628–29
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:302, 307, 347
 evil impulse ceases after, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:347
 fall of Adam and Eve as cause of
   in 1 Enoch, 1:48
   in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:680
   in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:276–79
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:322
 in History of the Rechabites, 2:446, 447, 458–60
 love’s conquest of, in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:609
 no repentance after
   in 2 Baruch, 1:651
   in 2 Enoch, 1:188
   in 4 Ezra, 1:539, 544
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 347
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:739, 748
 personification of, in Testament of Abraham, 1:565, 566 n, 737 n1i2, 892–95, 901–2 premature, God’s punishment by, in Testament of Abraham, 1:877, 891 rejoicing over, Syriac Menander on, 2:595 seven days of freedom after, in 4 Ezra, 1:539–40 universality of, in History of Joseph the Carpenter, 1:138 n22j
See also Immortality; Mourning; Resurrection; Souls, ascent of
- Debarim Rabbah (DeutR), 1:244, 272 n18t, 281 n26i, 285 n30e, 286 n32c
 on Abel’s burial, 2:293 n40d
 on angels neither eating nor drinking, 1:884 n3e
 on angels taking Moses’ soul, 1:886 n8e
 on death, 1:892 n16f, 895 n20d, 895 n20g, 895 n20h
- Deborah
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:684
 in Jubilees, 2:116, 118
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:343–48, 351
 Song of, 1:510 n3b
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:811
- Deceit
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:737–38
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:333
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:782, 786, 804
- Deceiver, the, in Odes of Solomon, 2:729, 730, 767
- Deception (heavenly body), 1:935, 952, 970
 Dedan, 2:308, 336, 853
 Deeds, weighing of, 1:889 n12f
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:890, 899
See also Judgment; Last Judgment
- Delilah, 2:357
- Delphic Sibyl (Delphian Sibyl), 1:317, 318, 328
- Deluge. See Flood
- Demetrius of Phalerum (Demetrius Phalerus), 2:7,
 12–14, 32–34, 835, 839, 865 n1a, 911
- Demetrius the Chronographer, 2:775
- Eupolemus’ summary of computations of,
 2:861, 871 n5a
- Ezekiel the Tragedian and, 2:810 nw, 811, 818, 853 n2d, 853 4a, 854 n4a
- introduction to fragments of, 2:843–47
 text of fragments of, 2:848–54
- Demiurge
 in Gnosticism, 1:236, 238, 709, 714 n4a, 715 n6d
 in Testament of Job, 1:835, 859 n39f
- Democritus, 2:488, 491, 500 nVII., 505 nXe
- Demons (evil spirits)
 androgynous, in Nag Hammadi texts, 1:942, 979 n18a2
 angels or men transformed into. See also Angels, fallen in Origen, 1:139 n22p
 angels who protect world vs., in Testament of Adam, 1:991, 995 binding of, 1:963 n1p, 967 n5p. See also Solomon, army of demons of by Noah, in Jubilees, 2:76
 casting out of
   in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:745 fasting and, 1:738 n113
 creation of
   in 2 Enoch, 1:148, 2:373 n60d
   in Jubilees, 2:55, 373 n60d
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:373
 desert as haunt of, 2:563 n18c

- Demons (evil spirits) (Cont.)
 female, in Testament of Solomon, 1:935, 936, 953, 964–65, 973–76 flying, 1:982 n20c
 hour of praise of, in Testament of Adam, 1:993
 on incantation bowls, 1:948
 iron and, 1:963 n2k
 manipulation of, 1:956–57
 need for knowledge of
   in Jubilees, 276
   in Testament of Solomon, 1:952, 976, 987
 Noah's prayer vs., in Jubilees, 2:75–76
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 373
 Šekinah, as protection against, 1:259 n5c
   in 3 Enoch, 1:260
 trafficking with, in 2 Enoch, 1:118
 water disliked by, 1:967 n5o
See also Belial; Devil; Lucifer; Satan
- Deutero-Isaiah, 1:356, 357
 atonement in, 2:539
- Deuteronomy (book)
 Apocalypse of Daniel and, 1:759
 Apocalypse of Elijah and, 1:731, 735 n1h
 Doctrine of the Two Ways in, 1:816 n1a
 Ezekiel the Tragedian and, 2:816 ny2
 killing of apostate Jews in, 2:515
 Moses' death in, 1:879, 880 n, 927 n1j
 precise transmissions of revelations required in, 1:663 n1h
 prophet predicted in, 1:827 n9b
 Pseudo-Philo and, 2:297, 301
 Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:577 n85g, 581 n209a
 Testament of Moses and, 1:923
 witnesses in, 1:890 n13d
- Devil (Adversary)
 end of, in Testament of Moses, 1:931
 as fisherman, 2:238 n21c
 God's failure to kill, in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:610
 God's talking with, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:360
 Jannes and Jambres in league with, 2:429
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:190, 221–22
 as lion. See Lion, Devil as refusal to worship Adam by. See Adam, Devil's refusal to worship
 wild animals and, in Testament of Naphtali, 1:813–14
See also Beelzeboul; Demons; Dualism; Evil One; Lucifer; Satan
- Devout reason as master of passions, in 4 Maccabees, 2:531, 537–39, 544–47, 550, 551 n5j, 557–61, 563
- Dew
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:685, 698
 in 2 Baruch, 1:631, 645
 in 3 Baruch, 1:671, 675
 in 1 Enoch, 1:29, 41, 55, 2:765 n35g
 of light, in Isaiah, 2:272 n36a
 milk of the Lord as, in Odes of Solomon, 2:765
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:745, 765, 766
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321, 333
 in Testament of Adam, 1:993
- Dialogue of Timothy and Aquila (book), 1:940–41, 944, 956
- Diaspora. See Jews, in Dispersion
- Didache (book)
 abortion condemned in, 2:580 n185i
 daily bread in, 2:212 n8i
- Doctrine of the Two Ways in, 1:816 n1a, 888 n11a
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:745 n11u
Didascalía, 2:627, 632, 635 *n**
- Dietary practices of Jews
 beef thigh tendon not eaten, 2:849
 in Colossians, 1:246
 Gentile torture vs., in 4 Maccabees, 2:538, 545, 549–64
 in Joseph and Aseneth
   eating together, 2:234 n20q
   Joseph's eating alone, 2:210
   meal formula, 2:191, 212, 212 n8i, 213, 226, 229, 238
 in Jubilees, 2:98
 in Letter of Aristeas, 2:21–23
 in 3 Maccabees, 2:520
 in 4 Maccabees, 1:878
See also Blood, eating and drinking of
- Dinah (daughter of Jacob), 2:706 n
 children of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:314
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:183
 in Jubilees, 2:110, 112–14, 120, 121, 135
 as mother of Aseneth, 2:241
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300, 314, 856
 in Testament of Job, 1:835, 839
 in Testament of Levi, 1:788, 790
 in Theodotus, 2:785, 786, 791–92
- Diodorus Siculus (Diodorus of Sicily), 1:140 n22r, 371 n3d3, 385 n4f, 2:877, 884, 894, 897 n2c, 898 n3j, 899 n3m, 900 n3y, 902 n3q2
 on origin of circumcision, 2:899 n3s
 Pseudo-Hecataeus fragment in, 2:905, 910, 912, 914–19
- Diogenes Laertius, 1:381 n, 389 n4g2, 832, 848 n20g, 2:491, 827 n8b
- Dionysius of Halicarnassus, 1:319 n, 320 n, 438 n11j2, 466 n14u, 2:203 n1r, 222 n12q
- Dionysus (god), 1:965 n4a
 in 3 Maccabees, 2:509, 513, 520, 522 n3e, 890
- Diphilus
 Derek Erez "forged quotations" from, 2:568
 fragments attributed to, 2:826 n6g, 828–29
- Disobedience. See Adam and Eve, fall of; Sinners; Sins
- Dispersion. See Jews, in Dispersion
- Dissection of human body in Alexandria, 2:568, 577 n101d, 577 n102e
- Divination
 condemnation of Hecataeus of Abdera on, 2:919
   in Syriac Menander, 2:600
 in Jubilees, 2:78
 in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:158
 punishment for, in 2 Enoch, 1:118
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:357
- Divine Comedy*. See Dante
- Dodanim, 2:307, 308, 310
- Doves
 Christ's coming with, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:744
 Israel compared to, 2:352 n39c
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:757
- Doxology
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:579
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:695, 697
 in 4 Maccabees, 2:540 n, 564

- of Odes of Solomon, 2:751, 770, 771
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:895, 902
- Dragons, 2:653 n2a2
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:700
 in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:761, 769
 crushing of head of, in Testament of Asher, 1:818
 Head of the, 1:936, 973
 Illuminator brought down by, in Apocalypse of Adam, 1:71
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:754
 as symbols of chaos, 1:420 n8m
 Winged (demon), 1:936, 974–75
- Dreams
 evil, God's protection from, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:657
 Joseph and. See under Joseph (son of Jacob)
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:405, 407–11
 in Targum Pseudo-Jonathan, 2:428
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:884–85, 897–98
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:812–13, 824
 as uniting us with the dead, Syriac Menander on, 2:594 visitors in, 1:107 n1p
 in 2 Enoch, 1:106–9
See also Visions
- Dream Visions (of 1 Enoch), 1:5, 9, 747 n4m
- Dualism
 Adam and, in 2 Enoch, 1:152 n30o
 of Antichrist, in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:758
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:731, 732
 apocalyptic, 1:9–10
 gnostic, 1:709
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:190–91
 in Jubilees, 2:47–48
 of light and darkness, 1:145 n26d
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:382
 of Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:152–53
 Metatron and, 1:235, 244, 268
 in Odes of Solomon and Gospel of John, 2:730
 in Questions of Ezra, 1:594
 of Qumran community, 1:96
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:427
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:876
 in Testament of Job, 1:835
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:779, 800, 816–18
See also Bogomils; Souls
- Dubbi'el, 1:243, 245, 266 n14b, 281
 Dummi'el, 1:280 n26m, 306 n22Cm
- Eagles
 angels as, 1:257, 295 n44i
 chariots of
 in 3 Enoch, 1:309
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:287–89
 as messengers
 in 2 Baruch, 1:647, 652
 in 4 Baruch, 2:413, 421–22
 Phinehas nourished by, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:362 raising of the dead by, in 4 Baruch, 2:416, 422 sacred names as, 1:291
 souls like, in 3 Enoch, 1:295
 in Testament of Job, 1:932
 vision of, in 4 Ezra, 1:548–51
- Earth
 Adam as
 in 2 Enoch, 1:154
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:254, 268
 body's return to, 2:571, 578 cornerstone of, in 1 Enoch, 1:22
 creation of, in 2 Enoch, 1:146–47
 destruction of. See Fire, destruction of world by; Flood; History, end-point of; World, destruction of Enoch's tour of, in 1 Enoch, 1:22–23
 epoch of, in 2 Enoch, 1:156
 foundations of, in 1 Enoch, 1:22
 fruitfulness of, in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:760, 768
 lamentation for, in 4 Ezra, 1:521, 539
 new (transformation of)
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:732
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:753
 in 1 Enoch, 1:33–34
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:307
 Noah's division of, in Apocalypse of Adam, 1:714
 in oath, in 1 Enoch, 1:48
 opening up and swallowing by. See Earthquakes Paradise of, xxxiii
 in 2 Baruch, 1:645–46
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:413, 423, 427, 459–60, 468
 pollution of, in 1 Enoch, 1:16, 18–19
 water of, in 1 Enoch, 1:38
See also Ashes (dust; dung); World
- Earthquakes, 1:789 n3e
 in 2 Baruch, 1:630
 in Jannes and Jambres, 2:430, 437
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:393
 in plagues of Egypt, Artapanus on, 2:902
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:312, 318, 324
 in Questions of Ezra, 1:597 nA1, 598
 Ebonite Christology, 1:139 n22p, 383, 384 n4c
 baptism of Jesus in, 1:194 n67a, 406
- Ecclesiastes (book), xiii
 Apocalypse of Elijah and, 1:732
 canonicity of, xxiii
 Solomon as author of, 1:945
- Ecclesiasticus (book). See Sirach (book)
- Eden. See Garden of Eden
- Edom, 1:115 n8c, 510 n3b, 2:402, 410
 Esau traditionally identified with, 2:706 n
 Edomites, Israel's fight vs., in Jubilees, 2:36, 44, 45, 48, 128
- Edomite tribe, 2:393 n10g
- Egypt
 in Ahiqar, 2:482
 Antiochus IV's campaigns vs., 2:549
 Arab conquest of, 1:459, 467–68
 astrology in. See Astrology, Egyptian becomes Roman province, 2:511
 books associated with Apocalypse of Adam, 1:708
 Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:730, 736 n1m
 Apocalypse of Moses, 1:875
 Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:501
 Artapanus, 2:891
 3 Baruch, 1:875
 Demetrius the Chronographer's works, 2:844
 2 Enoch, 1:95, 875
 Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:804
 History of Joseph, 2:468–49
 Instructions of Amenemopet, 2:503 nIXd

Egypt (Cont.)

- Instructions of 'Onchsheshonqy*, 2:500 nVllE
Instructions of Ptah-Hotep, 2:500 nVllq
 Jannes and Jambres, 2:434
 Joseph and Aseneth, 2:187–88
 3 Maccabees, 2:512
 Prayer of Jacob, 2:715
 Prayer of Manasseh, 2:628
 Protests of the Eloquent Peasant, 2:502 nVllf
 Sibylline Oracles, 1:322, 355, 358, 382, 390–92, 415, 417, 432, 443, 453, 459
 Testament of Job, 1:833–34, 852 n28g, 852 n28i, 875
 Testament of Solomon, 1:938, 943–44
 Testaments of the Three Patriarchs, 1:869, 873–75
 Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:778
 Treatise of Shem, 1:475 construction of Temple aided by, in Eupolemus, 2:865 n2a, 867
 corn from, 1:455 n13m
 cosmology of, 2:220 n12f
 culture of
   as defined by Abraham, Joseph, and Moses, 2:586 n shaped by Jewish patriarchs, in Artapanus, 2:586 n, 775, 889–903 demons of the body in, 1:978 n18f
 divine honors of rulers of, 1:743 n2p3
 dragon image of, 2:653 n2a2
 famine in
   Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:850
   in History of Joseph, 2:467, 469, 473
   in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:206, 238
   in Jubilees, 2:129–30, 132–33, 136
 as first empire, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:418, 430, 434–35 gods of. See also specific gods
   cat worship, 1:471 nb
   in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:177, 204, 206, 210 n7d, 212, 214–16, 219, 221, 233, 237, 245
   in Letter of Aristeas, 2:22
   in Lives of the Prophets, 2:387
   mouth-opening ritual for, 1:230 n16f2
   in Testament of Solomon, 1:978 n18f, 978 n18m, 979 n18x, 979 n18i2, 980 n18n2, 980 n18q2-i2, 980 n18a3, 980 n18d3, 981 n18p3, 981 n18r3
   Thoth as Vrevoil, 1:140 n22r
 God's temple in, 2:526 n6b
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:391, 392, 405
 Jews in. See also Joseph and Aseneth
   in Artapanus, 2:891–95, 897–903
   in Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:803, 805–6, 808–16
   in frontier garrisons, 2:521 n3d
   in History of Joseph, 2:467, 472–75
   Jacob in Testament of Jacob, 1:913–17
   Jacob's sons in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:783–84, 786–88, 792, 798, 805–7, 819–25, 827
   Jeremiah in Lives of the Prophets, 2:386–87
   Josephus on Ptolemy IX's supposed outrage to, 2:510–11
   in Jubilees, 2:48, 83, 121, 129–30, 132–37
   in Letter of Aristeas, 2:13–14
   in 3 Maccabees, 2:509, 513–16, 519–29, 890
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:314–17, 322, 333, 346
   in Sibylline Oracles, 1:355–59, 367–68, 390–92, 431, 434–35
   special feast by Jews, 2:515, 527–29 Therapeutae, 1:833–34
   in Ladder of Jacob, 2:402
   landholding practices in, 2:205 n3i
   magical papyri from. See Papyrus, magical magicians in. See Jannes and Jambres
   Manetho's history of, 2:845
   Moses shown the land of, 2:328 n19l
   plagues of
     Artapanus on, 2:902
     in Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:806, 814
     in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:694
     Jannes and Jambres and, 2:428, 430
     in Jubilees, 2:35, 83, 139–41
     in 3 Maccabees, 2:519
     in Pseudo-Philo, 2:317, 347
   Ptolemies of. See Ptolemies
   royal incestuous marriages in, 2:580 n182g
   Samaria as area in, Hecataeus document on, 2:913
   "seventh king" of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:354–56, 375, 376
   Syriac Menander as possibly from, 2:585
   ten-day week in, 2:217 n10h2
   treaty of friendship between Israel and, in Eupolemus, 2:866 weighing of souls in, 1:889 n12f
   woes of
     in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:722–24, 741–43
     in 2 Baruch, 1:641
     in 4 Ezra, 1:555, 557
     in Sibylline Oracles, 1:369, 375, 394–95, 397–98, 410, 422, 440–42, 446, 455, 467–68
     in Treatise of Shem, 1:481–86
     zodiac in, 1:127 n15d, 476
   See also Alexandria
 Egyptians, Gospel of the (GEGyp)
   angels Jacob and Israel in, 2:701
   Apocalypse of Adam and, 1:714 n5a, 715 n5f, 715 n6a, 718 n8c, 719 n8d, 719 n8g
 Ekah Rabbah (LamR), 1:245, 286 n33e, 292 n40i, 2:541
   sins of Israel in, 1:295 n44q, 296 n44w
 El (god), in Ahiqar, 2:484–85, 501, 505, 506
 Elam, 2:69, 71, 74, 77, 308, 310
 Eleazar (elder), 2:16
 Eleazar (high priest), 2:12, 15, 16, 20, 21, 24, 25, 34, 526 n6a, 688
 Eleazar (pious Jew)
   in 3 Maccabees, 2:509, 514, 515, 526
   in 4 Maccabees, 2:531, 538–39, 544, 549–53
   tomb of, 2:535–37
 Eleazar (priest; son of Aaron), 1:525, 2:332, 334, 335, 341, 360
 Eleazar (son of Mattathias), martyrdom of, 2:149, 150, 856
 Eleazar b. Judah, 1:252, 285 n31e, 303 n15Bb, 305 n22Ca, 306 n22Cf-i, 306 n22Cm, 306 n22Co
 Elect One (Chosen One)
   in 1 Enoch, xxxii, 1:32, 34–38
   in Vision of Isaiah, 2:168
 Elect ones (chosen ones)
   in 2 Baruch, 1:646 n75a

- in 1 Enoch, 1:15, 36, 37, 39, 43–44, 74
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:742, 755
 in Qumran community, 1:250, 718 n
 shortening of time for benefit of, 2:328 n19r
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:377–78
See also Jews, as chosen people; Last Judgment; Righteous ones
- Elephants in Egyptian persecution of Jews, 2:509, 511, 513, 523–27
- Eli, 1:297, 525, 2:362, 364–69, 376, 867
- Eliezer, Rabbi. See Pirke de-Rabbi Eliezer
- Elihu, 1:829, 835, 853 n31a, 855 n33d, 860–62, 2:855, 859
- Elijah
 Antichrist and
   in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:769 n14a
   in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:732, 752
 Apocalypse of. See Apocalypse of Elijah
 in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:502–4, 514
 Apocryphon of. See Apocryphon of Elijah
 four disciples of, 2:391 n6c
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:577
 Hebrew Apocalypse of, xxvi, 728–29, 730
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:684, 685, 697
 at Last Judgment
   in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:752
   in Sibylline Oracles, 1:351
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:379, 392, 396–97
 martyrdom of, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:721, 724–25, 747–48
 in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:159
 on Mount Carmel, 1:233
 Phinehas as, 2:362 n48a
 prayer for rain by, 1:476
 prayer of, in Questions of Ezra, 1:599
 return of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:349–50
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:422 n8x
 translation of
   in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:578
   in 2 Kings, 1:512 n5a, 867 n52d
- Eliphaz (Eliphaz; king who visits Job), 1:829, 840 n3d, 852–56, 858–59, 861–63, 2:856, 859
- Elo-i, the (oath), 1:935, 955, 968
- Elon, 2:135, 313, 314, 355
- Emmanouel, in Testament of Solomon, 1:936, 953–55, 968, 973, 976
- Enemies
 king's, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:27
 making of, in Ahiqar, 2:504
 Syriac Menander's advice on, 2:595–96
- Enemy, the
 in Testament of Dan, 1:810
 in Testament of Job, 1:840 n3a
See also Devil; Lucifer; Satan
- Enoch
 Adam buried by, 1:311 n48Cb
 ancestry of
   in 1 Enoch, 1:29
   in 2 Enoch, 1:156–57, 208–9
   in Jubilees, 2:61–62
 Antichrist and
   in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:769 n14a
   in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:732, 752
   in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:502, 503, 514
 astrology invented by, Pseudo-Eupolemus on, 2:873, 881
 in Book of St. John, 1:141 n23h Christian regard for, 1:725 n
 in 1 Enoch, 1:5, 13, 19–89, 115 n8b, 514 n9a
 in 2 Enoch, 1:91, 96, 102–97
   Enoch in heaven, 1:102–4, 110–61, 194–97
   recording by Enoch, 1:102 n1ab, 102, 133 n19d, 140–41, 156, 158–61, 174–77, 180–81, 194, 196, 217, 220–21
 in Genesis, 1:5, 91, 104 n1a, 514 n9a
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:577
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:685, 687, 693, 697
 in Islamic tradition, 1:226
 in Jubilees, 2:61–63, 93, 95
   Noah on commands of, 2:71
   writing of, 2:62, 76
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:294
 lost book of, in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:786, 792, 793, 809, 812, 827
 martyrdom of, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:721, 724–25, 747–48
 as Meṭatron in 3 Enoch, 1:223, 228, 258, 311–13. See also Meṭatron
 as "perfect," 1:515 n10b
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:304
 raising up of, in Testament of Benjamin, 1:828 sacrifices by, in Jubilees, 2:63, 95, 95 n21d
 as scribe. See Writing, by Enoch sons of, 1:108 n1z, 182–83, 202 n70o, 689, 2:62
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:907
 in Vision of Isaiah, 2:170
 wife of, 1:63, 2:62
- 1 Enoch, xxii, 2:697, 876
- angels in
 evil angels, xxx, 1:9, 10, 13, 15–24, 44, 47–49, 63–64, 70
 greatest angels, 2:291 n40c
 Sariel, 2:405 n
- Animal Apocalypse of, 1:461 n14a
- Apocalypse of Abraham and, 1:685
- Apocalypse of Daniel and, 1:760
- Apocalypse of Weeks in, 1:5, 7, 73–75, 323 n, 382
- Apocalypse of Zephaniah and, 1:505
- 2 Baruch and, 1:620
- calendar in, 1:128 n16c–e
- in Dead Sea Scrolls, xxiv, 1:6–8, 2:49. See also footnotes under text of 1 Enoch
- 2 Enoch compared to, 1:95–96, 102 n1ab, 105 n1c, 128 n16b
- 3 Enoch and, 1:247
- in Ethiopian canon, xxiv, 1:10
- 4 Ezra and, 1:522
- History of the Rechabites and, 2:446
- "Istraēl" in, 2:702 n
- Jubilees and, 2:49, 62 n4j
- in Jude, ix, xxiv, 1:8, 14 n1v, 14 n1w, 14 n1y
- Life of Adam and Eve and, 2:255
- "Lord of Glory" in, 1:25–27, 29, 32, 44, 54, 62, 73, 735 n1i
- Merkabah texts and, 1:235, 240, 247, 788 n2c, 789 n3c
- Messiah in, xxxii, 1:5, 9, 34–37, 43, 70–72
- Odes of Solomon and, 2:732–33, 739 n6f, 745 n11o, 745 n11q
- Paradise in, xxxi, 1:40–42, 56, 86, 115 n8b
- Prayer of Jacob and, 2:718

- 1 Enoch (Cont.)
 Sibylline Oracles and, 1:334
 Similitudes of, 1:5, 29–50, 154
 Watchers in, 1:13, 18–22, 106 n1e, 282 n28a, 334, 352 n2x2
- 2 Enoch, xxxi, 1:497, 505, 2:723 ni2
 Ascension of Isaiah compared to, 1:248
 2 Baruch and, 1:620
 Charles's edition of, xxxiii
 Doctrine of Two Ways in, 1:816 n1a
 1 Enoch compared to, 1:95–96, 102 n1ab, 105 n1c, 128 n16b
- 3 Enoch and, 1:247–48
 ethical nobility of, 1:97, 171 n44b
 forgiveness lacking in, 1:185 n59c, 186–87
 harsh legalism of, 1:167 n41d, 188 n62a
 languages of, 1:94, 227
 Life of Adam and Eve and, 2:255
 in Merilo Pravednoe (MPr), 1:92
 as earliest evidence of book, 1:94
 introduction to, 1:215
 text of, 1:216–21
 textual variations in, 1:102 n1aa, 102 n1ab, 191 n65d
- Merkabah texts and, 1:248
 monotheistic emphasis of, 1:97, 155 n31d, 156
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:745 n11q, 745 n11u
 Paradise in, xxxiii, 114–19, 154 n31c, 168 n42e
 phoenixes in, 1:122, 126, 134–35, 660
 Prayer of Joseph and, 2:705
 provenance of, 1:95–97, 875
 resurrection in, xxxiii, 1:168, 192–93, 221, 890 n13a systematic doctrine of evil lacking in, 1:155 n31d
 tablets in, 2:292 n50a
 universalism of, 1:876, 877
 Vision of Isaiah and, 2:154
 Watchers in, 114 n7i, 130 n18a, 658
- 3 Enoch
 1 Enoch and, 1:247
 2 Enoch and, 1:247–48
 Haside 'Aškenaz and, 1:252
 introduction to, 1:223–54
 Messiah in, xxxii, 1:295 n22q, 298, 302
 origin of name of, 1:224
 Orphica and, 2:797
 possible orthodox tendency in redaction of, 1:235, 245, 268 n16a
 Watchers in, 1:130 n18a, 242, 282–84
 Zohar and, 1:252
- Enos (Enosh), 1:29, 156, 208–9, 241, 260, 907, 2:61, 93, 685, 687, 688, 693
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:304
- Envy
 Letter of Aristeas on, 2:27
 Pseudo-Phocylides on, 2:576
 Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs on, 1:779, 803, 819, 836 n
- Ephesians (epistle)
 1 Enoch and, 1:10
 families of heaven in, 1:247
 Greek Apocalypse of Ezra and, 1:578 n7a
 on inner light, 2:209 n6r
 Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:195, 214 n9a
 4 Maccabees and, 2:540 n
 Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:580 n175a
- Testament of Levi and, 1:780, 791 n8b
 Vision of Isaiah and, 2:150
- Ephippas, 1:935, 936, 937 n, 938, 968, 973, 983–85, 986 n25b
- Ephraim
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:850
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:182, 236, 247 n29i
 in Jubilees, 2:35, 135
 in Testament of Jacob, 1:913, 915–16
 tribe of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:335, 336
- Epiphanius, 1:683, 2:254 n, 818 nt3
Adversus haereses, 1:238 n, 154 n31c, 409, 412, 413, 865 n48d, 866 n48e
 Apocryphon of Ezekiel in, 1:487–90, 492
 Ascension of Isaiah in, 2:149, 172 n9v2
 on Ebionite Christology, 1:139 n22p, 194 n67a, 406, 407 Ladder of Jacob (the Apostle) in, 2:404 n
De Fide. Eldad and Modad in, 2:464 n
 Jubilees and, 2:55 n2a-c, 55 n2f, 55 n2g, 56 n2i, 56 n2n, 56 n2r, 57 n2y
Panarion Haeresium, 1:384 nc, 494, 708, 710, 716 n7a, 719 n8f
- Epistula Apostolorum*
 angels in, 1:133 n19c
 Jesus' face in, 1:184 n66d
- Epitome (attributed to Menander), 2:583, 584
 Er, 1:797–98, 2:130, 136, 314
 Eremiel, 1:498, 501–5, 513
 Error, way of, in Odes of Solomon, 2:729, 730, 748, 750, 752, 762, 766–67
 Error (heavenly body), 1:935, 943 n, 952, 953, 970
 'Erubin, 1:268 n16g, 624 n10b
 Sarah's tomb in, 2:389 n3d
- Erythraean Sibyl, 1:317–20, 328, 341 n1w, 359, 371, 371 n3c3, 371 n3d3, 380
- Esarhaddon, 2:479, 482–84, 489, 494–97
- Esau
 as angel wrestling with Jacob, 2:705–7, 709
 Aristeas the Exegete on, 2:855, 856, 859
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:848
 in 4 Ezra, 1:528, 534
 in Jubilees, 2:36, 39, 87, 92–93, 102–4, 106–8, 112, 122–28
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:402, 409
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:313, 333, 346
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:906
 in Testament of Jacob, 1:913, 914
 in Testament of Job, 1:829, 839, 867 n51b
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:791, 797, 816, 828
- Esca, 2:309
- Eschatology
 in Merkabah texts, 1:235
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:323
 See also Christ, the, second coming of; History, end point of; Last Judgment; Time, end of
- Essenes
 Christian theology influenced by, 2:728
 Colossian "heresy" and, 1:246
 1 Enoch known to, 1:8
 Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers said to be from, 2:671 n
 in Jerusalem, 2:642
 Jubilees and, 2:44, 45
 meals of, 1:384 n4c, 2:212 n8i
 medical research of, 1:961 nih

- Paradise of, 1:118 n10a
 passions resisted by, 1:738 n1z2
 physiognomy of, 1:234
 Psalms of Solomon and, 2:642
 temple worship and, 1:384 n4c
 Testament of Abraham and, 1:875–76
 Testament of Job and, 1:833, 876
 Testament of Moses and, 1:921–22, 924
 Testament of Solomon and, 1:940
 Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs contrasted with ideas of, 1:780
See also Qumran community
- Esther, 1:644 n68a
 Esther (book), 1:243, 435 n11p, 436 n11q
 Ahiqar and, 2:484
 canonicity of, xxiii
 Greek vs. Hebrew, 2:515 n
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:685
 Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:184 n, 186, 240 n23r
 3 Maccabees and, 2:515
See also Additions to Esther
- Ethics. See Golden Rule; Good works; Sinners; Sins; Virtue; specific virtues and sins
- Ethiopian Church
 1 Enoch's influence on, 1:10
 extra canonical books of, xxiv
- Ethiopian language, xxvi
 Ahiqar in, 2:480
 Apocalypse of Ezra in, 1:563–64, 574 n3f, 576 n4p
 4 Baruch in, 2:413–14
 Cave of Treasures in, 2:250
 Combat of Adam and Eve in, 2:250
 1 Enoch in, 1:6, 8
 4 Ezra in, 1:518
 History of the Rechabites in, 2:443–44, 446, 447
 Joseph and Aseneth in, 2:179, 197–98, 200
 Jubilees in, 2:41–43, 45, 50
 Lives of the Prophets in, 2:379
 Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah in, 2:144–46, 150
 problems of translation of, 1:11–12
 Shepherd of Hermes Vision in, 2:463
 Testament of Abraham (Falasha), 1:871
 Testament of Adam in, 1:989, 990
 Testament of Isaac in, 1:904
See also Coptic language
- Eupolemus, Pseudo-Eupolemus possibly same as, 2:874, 876, 878
- Euripedes, 1:328, 627 n19a, 2:804, 808 na, 826
 Derek Erez "forged quotations" from, 2:568
 Dionysus' escape in Bacchae of, 2:894 n
 fragments attributed to, 2:827–29
- Eusebius of Caesarea, 2: n187k, 699, 703 n, 777, 778, 785, 834, 847 n20f, 956, 967 n6b
 apocalypticism opposed by, 1:584
Ecclesiastica Historia, 2:865 n1a
 Aristobulus fragment in, 2:831, 837
Praeparatio evangelica, 1:130 n18a, 140 n22r, 338 n1k, 831
 Aristaeas the Exegete in, 2:855, 859
 Aristobulus fragments in, 2:831, 832, 836–42
 Artapanus in, 2:889, 897, 898
 Cleodemus Malchus in, 2:883
 Demetrius the Chronographer in, 2:843, 848–54
- Eupolemus in, 2:861, 865–71
 Ezekiel the Tragedian and, 2:803, 805, 806, 810 nw, 811 ny, 814 nm2, 815 nw2
 "forged quotations" in, 2:568 n
 fragments of pseudo-Greek poets in, 2:821, 823–29
 Jannes and Jambres and, 2:428, 434
 Orphica (Pseudo-Orphic fragments) in, 1:362 n3b, 2:795–96
 Philo the Epic Poet in, 2:781, 783–84
 Pseudo-Eupolemus in, 2:873–75, 877, 878, 880–82
 Theodotus's poem in, 2:790–93
- Eve
 angel who misled, in 1 Enoch, 1:47
 creation of
 in 2 Enoch, 1:152
 in Jubilees, 1:57, 59
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:347
 in rabbinic interpretation, 2:293 n42b
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:335
 death of, in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:249, 292–95
 in Ethiopian text of 1 Enoch, 1:43 n62j
 naming of, in Jubilees, 2:60 return to Paradise by, in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:249, 272–77 revival of, in Ladder of Jacob, 2:411
 Satan's second deception of, in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:260–62 sin of, xxx
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:700
 in 2 Enoch, 1:154
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:565
 in Jubilees, 2:60
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253–54, 255, 268, 272–75, 277–85
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:336
 substitution of, in Gnosticism, 1:716 n7f
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:907
See also Adam and Eve
- Evil
 Adam's sin and, in 4 Ezra, 1:521, 529, 530–31, 538
 Barrier of, 1:237
 bygone, Pseudo-Phocylides on, 2:576
 as cause of griefs, in Syriac Menander, 2:591, 604
 Christian explanations on origin of, 1:149 n29i
 deliberate injustice as, Sibylline Oracles on, 1:348
 as deserved, in Testament of Job, 1:848
 at end of time
 in 4 Ezra, 1:554
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:468
 escape from, in Letter of Aristaeas, 2:30 evil angels and, xxx. See also Satan, in Testament of Job
 in 1 Enoch, 1:21–22, 106 n1e
 fear of God as deliverance from, in Syriac Menander, 2:585, 603
 flagellations of, in 1 Enoch, 1:48
 God as repaying evil for, in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:611 origin of, 1:149 n29i
 in On the Origin of the World, 1:56 n2j
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:570–71, 577
 rendering evil for, 2:240 n23s

- Evil (Cont.)
 condemned in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:193, 240–41, 246
 seven types of, in Testament of Benjamin, 1:827 tree of knowledge of good and. See Tree of life walking in way of, in 1 Enoch, 1:75
 women as. See Women, as evil
See also Dualism; Satan; Sinners; Sins; Theodicy
- Evil One
 in 1 Enoch, 1:48
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:729, 730, 748, 763
 in Testament of Job, 1:840 n3a, 862 n43e, 2:767 n38j
See also Satan
- Evil ones. See Wicked ones
- Exile (Babylonian Captivity)
 in 2 Baruch, 1:623–24
 in 4 Baruch, 2:413, 2:416, 418–23
 in 1 Enoch, 1:68–69
 Hecataeus of Abdera on, 2:918
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:409
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:270 n29b
 Psalms of Solomon on, 2:660
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:354, 357, 368
 in Testament of Moses, 1:928–29
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:801, 807, 812
See also Jews, in Dispersion
- Exodus, the
 Artapanus on, 2:902–3
 date of, in Jubilees, 2:39
 demon who opposed, in Testament of Solomon, 1:936–37, 985–86
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:683, 693–94
 Moses' age at time of, 2:852 n19j
 story of
 in 1 Enoch, 1:65–66
 in Jannes and Jambres, 2:439
 in Jubilees, 2:140
 in 3 Maccabees, 2:519, 526
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:317, 333
 weapons in, Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:845, 854
See also Moses, as leader of Jews out of bondage
- Exodus (book)
 Apocalypse of Elijah and, 1:732
 Apocalypse of Ezra and, 1:569 n
 Aristobulus and, 2:835
 Artapanus and, 2:894
 3 Baruch and, 1:659, 665 n3h
 early Greek translation of, Aristobulus on, 2:839
 3 Enoch's Metatron in, 1:244, 246
 Ezekiel the Tragedian and, 2:803, 805, 806, 808 na, 808 nb, 808 ng, 811 nz, 812 nf2, 814 nm2, 815 nt2–v2, 816 ny2
 4 Ezra and, 1:569 n
 Jannes and Jambres and, 1:428–30, 434
 Jubilees and, 2:35, 39, 48
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:736 n4f
 Pseudo-Philo and, 2:297
 Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:572 n, 2:574 n17d
 Testament of Simeon and, 1:788 n8a
 Testament of Solomon and, 1:954
- Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs and, 1:815 n2a, 954
- Exorcism, 1:945, 947
 in New Testament, 1:984 n3a
 Origen on, 1:949
- Eyes
 evil, in Testament of Solomon, 1:981
 of Metatron, in 3 Enoch, 1:263, 275, 278–80, 309
 plucking out of, 2:487
See also Many-eyed
- Ezechias, 2:906, 915, 917
- Ezekiel
 Apocryphon of. See Apocryphon of Ezekiel
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:388–39
 as "son of man," 1:721
- Ezekiel (book), 1:3
 Apocalypse of Abraham and, 1:685
 Apocalypse of Elijah and, 1:732
 2 Baruch and, 1:619
 eighth heaven of, 1:239
 2 Enoch and, 1:103 n1ai
 Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers and, 2:672
 Lives of the Prophets and, 2:383
 in 4 Maccabees, 2:564
 as mystical text, 1:231, 234, 2:703
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:731, 738 n6b
 Philo the Epic Poet and, 2:784 n4–6f
 Psalms of Solomon and, 2:647
 Sibylline Oracles and, 1:333, 369 n3h2, 369 n3i2
 Testament of Ezekiel and, 1:992
- Ezekiel the Tragedian (book), 2:195
 Demetrius the Chronographer and, 2:810 nw, 811, 818, 853 n2d, 853 n4a, 854 n4e
 fragments of pseudo-Greek poets and, 2:825 n Orphica and, 2:797
- Ezra (book)
 4 Baruch and, 2:416
 Jubilees and, 2:49
 meals in, 2:212 n8i
 table of names of, 1:516
- 2 Ezra (book), xxvii
 Ahiqar and, 2:487
- 3 Ezra (book), xxiv, 1:564
- 4 Ezra (book), xxiii, xxiv, xxvii, 1:396 n5i2, 2:607
 Adam's guilt in, xxx, 1:529, 537, 541
 Apocalypse of Daniel and, 1:756–57, 761
 Apocalypse of Sedrach and, 1:607
 2 Baruch and, 1:617, 619–20
 1 Enoch and, 1:8, 10
 in Ethiopian canon, xxiv
 gigantic figures in, 1:106 nli
 introduction to, 1:516–24
 Jacob-Israel in, 2:701 n
 Life of Adam and Eve and, 2:255
 milk as fruit of breasts in, 1:542, 2:765 n35g
 Messiah in, xxxii, 1:521, 537–38, 550–52
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:728, 730
 other Ezra books and, 1:563, 565, 569, 573 n2m, 574 n3c, 576 n5d, 587 n7b, 581, 585, 592, 596 nAe
 other names for, 1:516, 517, 564 popularity of, 1:602
 Psalms of Solomon, 2:647
 Pseudo-Philo and, 2:299, 300, 302, 329 n19s
 text of, 1:525–59

- Ezra (Esdra)
   Apocalypse of. See Apocalypse of Ezra assimilated to Moses, 1:566 books of. See Ezra; 2 Ezra; 3 Ezra; 4 Ezra; 5
   Ezra; 6 Ezra
   Greek Apocalypse of. See Greek Apocalypse of Ezra
   Jerusalem reorganized by, 1:436 n11s
   Questions of. See Questions of Ezra Revelation of. See Revelation of Ezra Syriac Apocalypse of, xxvi
   Vision of. See Vision of Ezra
 5 Ezra (book), 1:514 n9a, 517 n, 564
 6 Ezra (book), 1:517 n
- Fables
   Aesop's, 2:484 n, 499 nVII, 506 nXI1m, 507 nXIII1d
   of plants, 2:506 nXI1m
- Faith
   in 4 Baruch, 2:422 n7a, 424
   gift of, in 1 Enoch, 1:39–40
   glorification in accordance with, in 2 Baruch, 1:640
   salvation by
     in 4 Ezra, 1:544, 552
     in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:160
- Faithful people. See Elect ones; Righteous ones;
 Saints
- Falcon, 2:402, 404, 405, 410
- Fall, the. See Adam and Eve, fall of
- Famine. See Egypt, famine in
- Fasting
   in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:693, 694
   in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:721–22, 731, 737, 738
   in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:504
   in 2 Baruch, 1:623, 625, 627, 635, 652
   in 3 Baruch, 1:668–69
   on Day of Atonement, 1:737 n1q2, 738 n1k3
   in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:562, 571
   in History of the Rechabites, 2:450, 452–55, 458
   in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:215, 217, 222
   in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:254, 258
   by Merkabah mystics, 1:233
   in Psalms of Solomon, 2:645, 655
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321
   in Testament of Isaac, 1:903, 907
   in Testament of Jacob, 1:913
   in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:786, 817, 825
   by Joseph, 1:820, 821
- Fate (heavenly body), 1:935, 952, 970, 980 n18z2
 "Fear and trembling," 2:214 n9a
   in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:214, 215, 225
- Fearlessness
   in Letter of Aristeas, 2:28–29
   See also Courage
- Feast days
   God praised for institution of, in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:682
   of Jews in Ptolemaic Egypt, 2:515, 527–29
   in Jubilees, 2:68, 118
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321
   See also Sabbath; specific feast days
- Feast of Booths
   in Jubilees, 2:89
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321
   Feast of Weeks (Shebuot; Festival of Firstfruits),
   1:196 n68c
   in Jubilees, 2:36, 67–68, 71, 86, 97, 134
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321
   Festival of Firstfruits. See Feast of Weeks
   Fiery furnace
   Abraham in, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:311–12, 333
   in Daniel, 1:500, 502, 513, 2:526, 558, 561, 563, 2:685
- Fire
   angel in charge of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:351 angels bathing in, in 3 Enoch, 1:289
   angels made from, 1:277 n22e
     in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:698
     in 2 Baruch, 1:628
     in 2 Enoch, 1:104 n1al, 105, 148–49, 162
     in 3 Enoch, 1:242, 261, 267, 288, 312
     in 4 Ezra, 1:542
   from angels' mouths
     in 2 Enoch, 1:106–7
     in 3 Enoch, 1:275, 277
     in Pesikta Rabbati, 1:280 n25m
   angels of the spirit of, in Jubilees, 2:55
   book of, in 3 Enoch, 1:286
   chariots of. See Chariots, fiery Christ's baptism and, 1:406, 407, 409, 412
   in creation, in 2 Enoch, 1:142 n24g, 143 n25a, 148–49
   demons as, in Testament of Solomon, 1:962 n1n
   destruction of world by, 1:736 n1r
     in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:752, 753
     in Jewish eschatology, 2:826 n6d
     in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:292
     in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:162
     in Sibylline Oracles, 1:323, 332–34, 350, 361, 388, 413, 418, 423, 472
     Sophocles (possibly) on, 2:826
   as dwelling place of the wicked, 2:351 n38e
   enemies consumed by, in Lives of the Prophets, 2:397
   fornicating women to be punished by, in Jubilees, 2:93–94, 112–13
   Gabriel as angel of, in 3 Enoch, 1:267
- God as
   in 3 Enoch, 1:293
   in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:266–68
   in Questions of Ezra, 1:598
- in heaven
   in 1 Enoch, 1:20–21, 49–50
   in 2 Enoch, 1:104 n1al, 162
- from heaven, sinners consumed by, in Testament of Abraham, 1:887, 901
- of Hell (Sheol)
   in 2 Baruch, 1:635
   in 1 Enoch, 1:18, 23, 24, 38, 71, 72, 81, 84, 88
   in 2 Enoch, 1:118–19, 188
   in 4 Ezra, 1:521, 538, 556
   in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:574–75
   as Jewish idea, 1:352 n2x2
   in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:222
   in 4 Maccabees, 2:554, 722 nu
   in Sibylline Oracles, 1:323, 324, 333, 334, 385, 409, 469, 471
   in Testament of Isaac, 1:909

Fire (Cont.)

- in Testament of Jacob, 1:916
  - in Vision of Ezra, 1:587–90
  - idolatry and, in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:690–93
  - Isaiah on, 2:564
  - Kenaz's punishment of sinners by, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:336–37, 340–41
  - lake of, 1:118 n10e
  - lashes of
    - in 3 Enoch, 1:268, 277, 284
    - in Hilkot Mal'akim, 1:291 n4d
    - in Testament of Abraham, 1:889
  - of luminaries of heaven, in 1 Enoch, 1:25
  - martyrdom by
    - in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:749
    - in 4 Maccabees, 2:551–52, 555–59, 564
  - mountain of
    - in 1 Enoch, 1:25–26
    - in Pseudo-Philo, 2:318–19
  - passing through, as test, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:336
  - pen of, in 3 Enoch, 1:284
  - righteous pass through. See Righteous ones, pass through fire
  - rivers of
    - in 1 Enoch, 1:22
    - in 2 Enoch, 1:118
    - in 3 Enoch, 1:240, 246, 273, 275 nu2, 287, 289, 290, 293, 300, 304–5
    - in Merkabah texts, 1:273 n18a2, 280 n25m
    - in Persian eschatology, 1:350 n2m2, 351 n2t2
    - from perspiration of angels, 1:286 n33e
    - in Sibylline Oracles, 1:350–52, 424
    - in Testament of Isaac, 1:909
  - Rome destroyed by, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:417
  - scourges of, in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:511
  - sea of, in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:498, 512
  - Sodom destroyed by. See also Sodomy (Sodom and Gomorrah)
    - in Jubilees, 1:88
  - stubble-destroying, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:736
  - test by, in Testament of Abraham, 1:878, 889, 890
  - thrones of. See Thrones, fiery
  - treasury of, in Testament of Levi, 1:248
  - universe as concentric rings of, 1:128 n16b
- Firstfruits
 Festival of. See Feast of Weeks prayer at offering of, in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:696
- Fish
 creation of, in Jubilees, 2:56
 giants' sinning against, in 1 Enoch, 1:16
 man's rule of, in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:692
- Flesh, man as, in 1 Enoch, 1:14, 21, 22, 42, 62, 87
- Flood, the
 in Apocalypse of Adam, 1:713 Babylonian version of, 1:157 n33i, 340 n1t3
 in 2 Baruch, 1:641
 in 3 Baruch, 1:659
 compared to passion, in 4 Maccabees, 2:560–61
 in 1 Enoch, 1:17, 38, 45–46, 61–62, 64, 87
 in 2 Enoch, 1:156–59, 200–203, 212
 in 3 Enoch, 1:258–59, 311
- in 4 Ezra, 1:528
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:693
 Jesus as having been born before, 1:209 n71q
 in Jubilees, 2:35, 63, 65–66, 68, 70
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:292
 in 3 Maccabees, 2:519
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300, 306–7, 313, 328
 resettlement after, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:308 n4q
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:332, 334, 338–41, 351, 381, 385, 408, 410, 421 n8r, 434
 in Testament of Adam, 1:991, 992, 994
 vine preserved in, in 3 Baruch, 1:666–69
 writings to survive after, 1:719 n8d
- Florilegium (4QFlor), 1:617 n, 752 n5x2, 780, 2:50
- Folly
 gods' displeasure with, in Ahiqar, 2:486
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:745
- Foot washing, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:210, 234
- Forbidden fruit
 fig as, in Testament of Adam, 1:991, 992, 994 n3c
See also Adam and Eve, fall of
- Foreskins
 of heart, in Jubilees, 2:54
 in Testament of Moses, 1:931
See also Circumcision
- Forgiveness. See God, forgiveness by
- Fornication
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:701
 by fallen angels
  - in 1 Enoch, xxx, 1:15, 17, 47, 63–64
  - in 2 Enoch, 1:132–33- in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:158, 161
- by one's son, Syriac Menander on, 2:593
- punishment for
  - in 2 Enoch, 1:118
  - hanging by genitals, 1:113 n7e
  - in Jubilees, 2:93–94, 112–13, 119–20, 131–32
- in Testament of Isaac, 1:908
- wine and
  - in 3 Baruch, 1:668–69
  - in Testament of Judah, 1:798–99
See also Sexual offenses
- Fountains
 of righteousness, in 1 Enoch, 1:35
 of wisdom, in 1 Enoch, 1:35
- Free will (freedom)
 of Adam, in 2 Enoch, 1:152
 Adam's sin and, in 4 Ezra, 1:421, 541
 Ahiqar's proverb on, 2:507 nXIII d
 astrology and, 1:603 n
 in choice of good or evil
  - in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:611
  - in 2 Enoch, 1:96- fate and, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:645, 660 granted by God's love, in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:607 rationality and, 1:1:21 n11g, 139 n22p
 sin and, xxx
 in 4 Ezra, 1:544
- Friends
 honor to
  - in Letter of Aristeas, 2:28
  - in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:571, 579, 582
  - Syriac Menander on, 2:593, 597, 598- lifelong, Syriac Menander on, 2:591, 604

- parasitic flatterers as, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:577
wealth and, Syriac Menander on, 2:600
- Gabriel (Gabril), 1:10, 313 n48De
in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:750
in 3 Baruch, 1:658, 666
in Coptic prayer, 2:716
in Daniel, 1:674 n11e, 962 n1j
in 1 Enoch, 1:16, 18, 24, 32, 38, 50, 247
in 2 Enoch, 1:136–37, 142–43, 207, 211, 248
in 3 Enoch, 1:266 n14d, 267, 269
in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:572, 574, 577
as Jacob's angelic adversary, 2:707
Joseph's name added to by, 1:310 n48Bb
in Lössana Ya'əqob, 2:706 n
in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:291
in Masseket Hekalot, 1:271 n18h
in Merkabah texts, 1:242
in Nag Hammadi texts, 1:943 n
as name on amulet, 1:979 n18y
as name on magical papyrus, 2:717
as scribe, in Hekalot Rabbati, 1:282 n27g
in Sibylline Oracles, 1:333, 350, 428
in Testament of Jacob, 1:916
in Testament of Solomon, 1:953, 954, 978
trumpet of, in Questions of Ezra, 1:599
usual role of, 1:136 n21e
in Vision of Ezra, 1:574 n4b, 590
YHWH in name of, 1:285 n30d
See also Gabriel
- Gad
Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:849, 851
in Genesis, 1:811 n1c
in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:177, 182, 193, 241–43, 245–46
in Jubilees, 2:110, 120, 122, 127, 135
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:314
In Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:782, 796, 797, 801, 804–6, 818. See also Testament of Gad
tribe of
in Lives of the Prophets, 2:389
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:317, 331, 335, 336, 338
- Galgallim
in Dead Sea Scrolls, 1:249
in Ezekiel, 1:279 n25g
as "wheels," 1:276 n19c
- Garden of Eden (Edem), 1:115 n8c
Adam and Eve's expulsion from
in 1 Enoch, 1:28
in 2 Enoch, 1:96, 154, 166
in 3 Enoch, 1:259–60
in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:258–59, 285
in Sibylline Oracles, 1:336
angels' opposition to revelation of, in 3 Enoch, 1:315
in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:699
creation of, in 2 Enoch, 1:144 n25a, 148, 152
description of
in 3 Baruch, 1:659
in 2 Enoch, 1:114–17, 168–69
in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:254
Enoch in, in Jubilees, 1:514 n9a, 2:62–63
fragrance of, 1:308 n23f
Gabriel as overseer of, in 1 Enoch, 1:24
God in. See God, in Paradise heavenly vs. earthly, 1:260 n5f
length of time Adam and Eve were in, in Jubilees, 2:39, 59 measurement of, in 1 Enoch, 1:42
Melchisedek in, in 2 Enoch, 1:210–11
purification before entrance into, in Jubilees, 2:59 Seth's trip to, in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:249, 251, 254, 256, 272–77
wind of, in 3 Enoch, 1:308
See also Paradise; Tree of life
- Gardens
of life, in 1 Enoch, 1:115 n8b
of righteousness, in 1 Enoch, 1:56
See also Garden of Eden; Paradise
- Gedullat Mošeh, 1:263 n9c, 266 n14a, 267 n15c, 282 n28a, 294 n44c, 303 n15Be, 303 n15Bk
- Gehenna
in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:696
in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:571, 2:722 nu
in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:156, 162
in Sibylline Oracles, 1:337, 352
various usages of, 1:352 n2x2
See also Hell
- Gehinnom
in 3 Enoch, 1:245, 287, 295, 315
See also Hell
- Gelasian Decree, xxii, 1:834, 2:41, 430, 435
- Gematria, 1:227, 237, 242, 338 n11, 390, 430
- Generosity
Letter of Aristeas on, 1:27–28
to one who loses possessions and honor, Syriac Menander on, 2:598–99
- Genesis (book)
Apocalypse of Abraham and, 1:685, 686, 705 n32d
Apocalypse of Adam and, 1:709, 712 n1d, 712 n2b
Aristobulus' use of, 2:835
Artapanus and, 2:894, 897 n2c
3 Baruch and, 1:659
beginning as mystical part of, 1:231
Cleodemus Malchus and, 2:884
1 Enoch and, 1:9
2 Enoch and, 1:91, 96, 103 n14d, 115 n8f, 143 n24h, 143 n25a, 146 n27e, 147 n28e, 155 n32b, 158 n34b, 171 n44c, 201 n70l, 213 n73e, 218 nz, 218 nh2
3 Enoch and, 1:246, 256 n1i
History of Joseph and, 2:467, 469–70
History of the Rechabites and, 2:446
Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:182–84, 185 n, 199, 202 m1i
only mention of Aseneth, 2:203 n11
Jubilees and, 2:35, 40, 41, 45, 47, 48, 56 n2j
in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:254
on number of nations, 1:270 n17r, 310 n48Bb
Odes of Solomon and, 2:731, 758 n25e
Prayer of Joseph and, 2:703–10
Prayer of Manasseh and, 2:630
Pseudo-Eupolemus and, 2:876
Pseudo-Philo and, 2:297
recommendations of marriage and procreation based on, 2:580 n176b
Sibylline Oracles and, 1:340 n1t
Testament of Adam and, 1:991, 992
Testament of Jacob and, 1:914
Testament of Solomon and, 1:953–56

- Genesis (book) (Cont.)
 Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs and,
 1:782 b1b, 791 n9a, 796 n2a, 797 n9a,
 805 n1a, 805 n1b, 819 n1a
 Theodotus' poem and, 2:785, 787–88, 791 n3a, 792 n3b, 792 n3c, 792 n3e, 792 n6a–c, 793 n7a, 793 n8c
 Vienna, 2:183 n
- Genesis Apocryphon (1QapGen) 1:136 n21e, 138 n22m, 791 n8c
 Cappadocians in, 1:787 n6b
 1 Enoch and, 1:130 n18a
 exorcism in, 1:945
 fallen angels in, 1:337 n1f
 Jubilees and, 2:40–41, 43–44, 49, 50
 Pseudo-Eupolemus and, 2:876, 881 nx
 Pseudo-Philo and, 2:302
 Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs and, 1:780
- Gentiles
 Christ's love for, in Odes of Solomon, 2:744
 end of, in Lives of the Prophets, 2:394
 Ezra's call to, in 4 Ezra, 1:527
 God's kingdom to be revealed to, in 3 Enoch,
 1:295
 God's protection against, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:658, 660
 God's right arm shown to, in 3 Enoch, 1:301
 history of, in 3 Enoch, 1:298
 idol worship by. See Idol worship immorality of. See also Rome, misconduct of in Testament of Zebulun, 1:809
 as instruments of God's wrath, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:645, 653 n2w
 intermarriage with. See Marriage, mixed Israel given over to
 in 4 Ezra, 1:530, 536
 in Jubilees, 2:101
 Israel's judgment of, 1:890 n13e
 Jews not to eat or mingle with
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:191, 193
 in Jubilees, 2:98
 Law rejected by, in 4 Ezra, 1:521, 537, 539
 Messiah's slaying of, in 2 Baruch, xxxii
 at Messianic banquet, in 3 Enoch, 1:302
 no distinction between Jews and
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:194
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:877–78
 polite eulogy of Jewish God by, 2:205 n3f
 predicted Israeli rule of, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:645
 punishment for, in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:681, 703–5
 salvation of, 1:877 n
 in 4 Baruch, 2:424 n9c
 in Testament of Simeon, 1:787
 sexual relations with. See also Marriage, mixed
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 315, 330, 343, 357, 359–60
 in Testament of Levi, 1:793
See also Nations
- Georgian language
 Acts of Nouna in, 1:985 n24a
 Ahiqar in, 2:480
 4 Ezra in, 1:519
 Testament of Adam in, 1:989
- Giants
 in apocalypses, 1:106 n1i
 astrology connected with, Pseudo-Eupolemus
 on, 2:882
 in 3 Baruch, 1:659
 Book of, 1:7
 cemetery of, 2:391 n6f
 as children of fallen angels
 in 1 Enoch, 1:9, 16, 17, 21–22
 in 2 Enoch, 1:132
 in Jubilees, 2:64, 70
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:953, 977
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:333, 337, 351
 Tower of Babel as built by, Pseudo-Eupolemus
 on, 2:874, 880
 Watchers as, in 2 Enoch, 1:130–31
- Gideon
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:684
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 349–50
- Gilgamesh Epic, 2:483
 death in, 1:138 n22j
 1 Enoch and, 1:115 n8b
 Flood in, 1:340 n1t
 godliness in, 1:139 n22q
 heavenly assembly in, 1:138 n22j
 Scorpion Men in, 1:167 n42b
- Girdles
 in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:513
 of virginity, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:225
- Giṭt. See Giṭṭin
- Giṭṭin, 1:245, 255 n1b, 282 n7b, 297 n45h
 on Ashmedai, 1:948 n, 975 n15e
 building of Temple in, 1:943 n, 963 n2j
- Gladiators
 disappearance of schools for, 2:585 Syriac Menander on types of sons who should become, 2:593
- Glory
 crowns of, in Testament of Benjamin, 1:826 of God. See God, glory of highest form of, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:28
 in Metatron's title, 1:265 n13a
- Glossolalia (language of angels)
 in Acts of the Apostles, 1:857 n38a
 in Merkabah mysticism, 1:234
 in Testament of Job, 1:834, 835, 857 n36a
- Gnosticism
 amulets of, 1:944
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:684
 in Apocalypse of Adam, 1:707–10
 4 Baruch and, 2:415, 422 n6g
 captive souls in, 1:735 n1l
 Demiurge in, 1:236, 238, 709, 714 n4a,
 715 n6d
 2 Enoch contrasted to, 1:157 n33i, 187 n61f
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:189
 magical papyri and, 2:717
 Merkabah mysticism and, 1:236–38, 2:717 n
 mystically engraved gems of, 1:866 n48h
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:725–27
 in Sibylline Oracles 7, 1:408–9
 sleep as metaphor in, 1:343 ng2
 Vision of Isaiah and, 2:154, 170 n9y
 Wisdom in, 2:485 n
See also Nag Hammadi codices
- God
 alienation from, in 4 Ezra, 1:521, 538
 anger of. See God, wrath of below
 anthropomorphic descriptions of, Aristobulus
 on, 2:831, 834–35, 839–41

- arguing with, 1:564
 in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:606, 609–13
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:564, 567
 astrological contradiction of, in Treatise of Shem, 1:476–77
 as author of Nature (“Watchmaker” concept), 2:749 n16g
 in 1 Enoch, 1:14–15, 48–49
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:749
 awe of
 in Questions of Ezra, 1:598
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:338
 beauty of
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:682
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:746, 749, 750
 blasphemy against. See Blasphemy blessings provided by, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:26, 27 body of, in 2 Enoch, 1:136–37, 137 n22c
 breasts of. See Breasts, of God “bride” of, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:185, 206
 chariots of. See Chariots, of God commands of. See also Moses—on Mount Sinai
 in 4 Ezra, 1:543, 553–54
 covenant with. See Covenant
 before creation, 1:142 n24h, 309 n24i
 in 2 Enoch, 1:97, 142–43
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:690
 as Creator, 1:142 n24h, 2:674, 677–82, 689, 691–92
 in Apocalypse of Adam, 1:709, 712–13
 in 2 Baruch, 1:618, 626, 628, 922 n
 in 1 Enoch, 1:9, 29, 62
 in 2 Enoch, 1:91, 142–56, 174–75, 190–91, 216
 in 3 Enoch, 1:236, 264, 292
 in 4 Ezra, 1:520, 528, 533–34, 536, 559, 597 nAi, 922 n
 first day of creation, in rabbinic interpretation, 2:293 n42b
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:561, 565, 576–77
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:190, 214, 220
 in Jubilees, 2:55–57
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:408
 in 4 Maccabees, 2:538, 550, 556
 New Year’s as anniversary, 2:321 n13f
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:728–30, 737, 740–41, 749–50
 in Prayer of Jacob, 2:715, 720
 in Prayer of Manasseh, 2:634, 635
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 321, 373
 Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:570
 Pythagoras (possibly) on, 2:824
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:329, 335, 362, 426, 471, 472
 Sophocles (possibly) on, 2:825
 in Syriac Menander, 2:585
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:887
 in Testament of Adam, 1:991
 in Testament of Job, 1:835, 859
 in Testament of Moses, 1:922, 927
 in various books, 2:220 n12e, 220 n12p
 wisdom literature and, 2:486 n
 crowns of ‘Aktari’el Yah as name of, 1:304 n15Bq
 in 3 Enoch, 1:265 n12d, 284, 304
 crowns of names of, in 3 Enoch, 1:310 n48Bh
 curtain before face of, in 3 Enoch, 1:223, 240, 296 demons ruled by, in Testament of Solomon, 1:951–52 denial of existence of
 in 4 Ezra, 1:544
 in Vision of Isaiah, 2:173
 determinism of, in Testament of Moses, 1:922
 direct intervention by (divine providence)
 apocalyptic communities’ hope for, 2:646
 in 3 Baruch, 1:657
 in Letter of Aristeas, 2:26
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:766
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:642, 644
 discipline by, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:645, 658, 660, 661, 663, 665, 669
 as episkopos, in Jannes and Jambres, 2:434
 as eternal
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:697
 in Apocalypse of Adam, 1:709
 in 4 Ezra, 1:542
 In Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:674, 678, 681, 687, 689, 690, 694–95
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:750
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:361, 427
 Ethiopian words for, 1:13 n1d
 evil and. See Sinners, pleas for mercy by; Theodicy faces of
 in 2 Enoch, 1:136–37, 162
 in 3 Enoch, 1:305
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:408
 in Questions of Ezra, 1:592, 598
 as Father, 1:855 n33g
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:736
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:564, 573
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:740, 742–44, 747, 752, 762, 770
 in Prayer of Jacob, 2:715, 720
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:885, 895
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:910
 in Testament of Job, 1:835, 855, 856
 fear of
 in 1 Enoch, 1:82
 in 2 Enoch, 1:134–37, 170–71
 in 3 Enoch, 1:299
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:657, 663
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:339
 in Syriac Menander, 2:585, 591, 592, 595, 603
 as fire. See Fire, God as footstool of, in 2 Enoch, 1:134–35 forgiveness by, 2:214 n9c
 Ahiqar compared to Luke, 2:488
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:689, 697
 Jannes and Jambres and, 2:434, 435
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:192
 in Jubilees, 2:119, 131–32
 not found in 2 Enoch, 1:185 n59c, 186–87
 fragrance of, 1:577 n6d
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:745
 friends of Abraham, 1:882–84, 886, 892, 901
 Jacob, 2:191, 240
 fulfillment of deeds through, 2:38
 garments of, in Hekalot Rabbati, 1:265 n12a, 278 n22l, 866 n48h

God (Cont.)

- glory of. See also Lord, of Glory
 Aeschylus (possibly) on, 2:825
 in 3 Baruch, 1:658, 670–71, 674–75, 678
 in 4 Baruch, 2:424
 in Dead Sea Scrolls, 1:249
 in 3 Enoch, 1:248, 309
 in Ezekiel, 1:246
 in 4 Ezra, 1:540, 542
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:566, 574, 577
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:408
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:295
 in 4 Maccabees, 2:545
 in Merkabah texts, 1:241, 246, 789 n3c
 in More Psalms of David, 2:619, 620
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:746, 748, 769
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:669
 in Questions of Ezra, 1:593, 597–98
 smelling of, 1:577 n6d
 in Testament of Levi, 1:789 n3c
 in Visions of Isaiah, 2:172
- grace of, in Odes of Solomon, 2:728, 736, 737, 739–41, 748, 753–55, 757, 758, 761, 762, 764, 769
- harmony of, in Odes of Solomon, 2:747
- of heaven and earth, in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:951, 952, 962, 964, 977, 981, 983
- heavenly assembly consulted by
 in 2 Enoch, 1:138
 in 3 Enoch, 1:283
- of Hebrews
 in Prayer of Jacob, 2:715, 722
- as Helper, in Odes of Solomon, 2:739, 741, 754, 758
- of history, xxxi, 2:674, 683–85, 688, 693–94
 in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:758
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:731
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:382
 in 3 Maccabees, 2:514
 not in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:191
 in Jubilees, 2:47
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:645
- rabbinic traditions on Genesis, 2:251 n
- as holy (Holy One)
 in 1 Enoch, 1:74–75
 in 3 Enoch, 1:282–92, 295, 298, 299, 301, 304, 305, 308
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:681
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:753, 757
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:951, 965
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:778
- honor to, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:570, 574, 576
- hymns to. See also Angels, singing and liturgy by; Sanctus (Qeduššah)
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:345–47
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:427–28
 in Testament of Adam, 1:993
- idolatry condemned by. See also Idol worship in Pseudo-Philo, 2:358–62
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:426–27
- inaccessibility of
 in 3 Enoch, 1:241
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:682, 687, 695
- incarnation of. See Christ, incarnation of
- indignation of, in 4 Ezra, 1:543
- as inscrutable (incomprehensible)
 in 2 Baruch, 1:618, 626, 628
 in 4 Baruch, 2:424
 in 4 Ezra, 1:529–30, 533
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:681
- as invisible
 Euripedes or Philemon (possibly) on, 2:827–28
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:681, 687, 695
 in Orphica, 2:800
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:361, 362
- invocation to, in introductions, 1:662 ne
- as Jael, in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:285, 289
- judgment by. See also Judgment; Last Judgment, by God
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:682
 in Jubilees, 2:65
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:574
- justice of, 2:674
- justification of, 2:652 n2p
- kingdom of, in History of the Rechabites, 2:458
 as king of kings, in 1 Enoch, 1:62
- Law of. See Law; Moses, on Mount Sinai; Ten Commandments
- as life, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300
- as life-giver, 2:234 n20p
- as light, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300, 320
- little finger of, in 3 Enoch, 1:291, 300
- as living
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:218
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:951, 962, 967
 in Treatise of Shem, 1:477
- living creatures inspected by, in 2 Enoch, 1:182–85
- as living in the sky, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:362
 as Lord of Hosts, 1:503
- as Lord of the Spirits, in 1 Enoch, 1:31–44, 49
- love shown by, in Odes of Solomon, 2:729, 735, 738, 741, 742, 744, 747, 749, 751, 769, 771
- majesty of, xxxi
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 268, 268 n29a
 in Testament of Levi, 1:789
- man as image of. See Man, as image (facsimile) of God
- manifestations and visions of. See Visions; or persons to whom God appeared, e.g. Abraham
- as Master (Master of virtues)
 Aeschylus (possibly) on, 2:825
 in Artapanus, 2:893
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:679, 681, 683, 685, 687, 689, 694
 Hesiod (possibly) on, 2:824
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:882, 884, 887, 891, 892
 in Testament of Job, 1:858, 859 n3f, 866
- mercy of. See also Sinners, pleas for mercy to
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:697
 in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:607
 in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:502, 510
 in 1 Enoch, 1:36, 40, 49, 2:765 n35g
 in 3 Enoch, 1:301, 303, 309
 in 4 Ezra, 1:521, 541–43

- in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:564, 571–72
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:674, 677, 678, 680, 681, 684, 688, 689
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:192, 218
 in Letter of Aristeas, 2:25–27
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 268, 289, 290
 in More Psalms of David, 2:619
 not accepted by 2 Enoch, 1:167 n41d
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:728, 735, 747–49, 753, 758, 761
 in Prayer of Manasseh, 2:629, 634, 635
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:644, 654, 656–58, 661, 665, 669
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300, 323, 328, 335, 349, 352
 in Questions of Ezra, 1:593
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:878, 887–88, 891, 901
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:903, 905–10
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:778
 Mesopotamian gods compared to, 2:484–86
 mills of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:418
 as mirror, in Odes of Solomon, 2:747
 as Most High, 1:508 nAe
 Aeschylus (possibly) on, 2:824, 825 n4k
 in Ahiqar (Arabic), 2:486, 488
 in 2 Baruch, 1:623, 625, 627, 629, 640, 641, 643–49, 651
 in Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:818
 in 4 Ezra, 1:521, 528, 530–33, 535, 537–42, 544–55
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:564, 571
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:687
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:191, 211, 213, 214, 218, 219, 225–27, 229, 231–33, 236 n21t, 238–40, 243, 470
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:409, 410
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:262, 268
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:390
 in 3 Maccabees, 2:526
 Melchisedek as priest of, 2:875
 in More Psalms of David, 2:618, 619–21
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:729, 735, 737, 739–41, 743–47, 750–52, 755 n23a, 759, 761–63, 765, 766, 768, 770
 in Philo the Epic Poet, 2:783
 in Pseudo-Eupolemus, 2:874, 880
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:347, 367
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:349
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:886–87, 891, 901
 in Testament of Jacob, 1:914
 in Testament of Moses, 1:932
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:952, 973
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:789, 790, 794, 795, 801, 803, 811, 815, 817–19, 821, 827
 in Vision of Isaiah, 2:167, 173
 mother of. See Virgin Mary names of, 2:717. See also Christ, the, secret name of; YHWH
 in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:512
 in 3 Enoch, 1:310
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:185, 219–20
 in magical practice, 2:717
 in Prayer of Jacob, 2:716, 717, 721, 722
 secret, 2:713 nAo
 in Testament of Zephaniah, 1:951–52
 as near, in Eldad and Modad, 2:463, 464
 noble mothers of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:409, 411–12
 no temple able to hold, Euripedes (possibly) on, 2:827
 omnipotence of. See God, power of below
 omnipresence of
 in 2 Enoch, 1:192–93
 in 3 Enoch, 1:274, 295, 296, 299–301
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:674, 677, 681, 694
 in rabbinic texts, 1:274 n18n2
 omniscience of (preknowledge by)
 in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:503
 in 2 Enoch, 1:192–93
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:674, 677, 682, 687, 690
 in Jubilees, 2:47, 96
 in Letter of Aristeas, 2:21, 26
 in 4 Maccabees, 2:538, 545, 558
 on Odes of Solomon, 2:740
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300, 325, 330
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:338, 426
 as one (monotheism)
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:740, 743
 in 2 Enoch, 1:91, 97, 155 n31d, 156
 in Hecataeus of Abdera, 2:905
 hellenistic concept of, 1:740 n2y
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:681
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:405
 in Letter of Aristeas, 1:21–22
 in Orphica, 2:800
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:569, 570, 576
 Pseudo-Sophocles on, in Pseudo-Hecataeus, 2:912–13
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:383, 400, 426, 469, 470
 Sophocles (possibly) on, 2:825
 Syriac Menander and, 2:586
 in Paradise
 in 2 Enoch, 1:114–15
 in 3 Enoch, 1:260
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 281–85
 plan of
 in Testament of Naphtali, 1:811 n2a
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:983
 power of, xxviii–xix
 in 1 Enoch, 1:62
 in 2 Enoch, 1:156–57
 in Gnosticism, 1:236
 hands as allegory for, in Aristobulus, 2:838
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:674, 677, 678, 681
 Hesiod (possibly) on, 2:824
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:408
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:295
 in More Psalms of David, 2:618–20, 624
 “Most Powerful” in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300, 326, 329, 344, 346, 374, 375
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:761, 768
 in Prayer of Jacob, 2:715–17, 720
 in Prayer of Manasseh, 2:634, 635
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:653
 power of name of, in Prayer of Manasseh, 2:629

God (Cont.)

- prayers to, xxxi, 1:891 n14b. See also specific book beginning with the word: Prayer; Sinners, pleas for mercy to
- angels' attempt to prevent, in Targum on Chronicles, 2:633
- in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:697
- in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:739
- in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:502, 504
- in 2 Baruch, 1:621, 628, 632–33, 635–36, 639–40, 651
- in 3 Baruch, 1:136 n, 674–76
- in 1 Enoch, 1:19, 35, 62, 80
- in 2 Enoch, 1:96, 114–15
- Essene, 1:876
- in History of the Rechabites, 2:451, 452, 456, 461 n18c
- Jewish practice, 2:217 n11i, 219 n11t2
- in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:185, 213, 217–24, 236–38
- in Jubilees, 2:53–54, 69, 73, 81, 83, 105–7
- in Letter of Aristeas, 2:25–26, 33
- literary function of, 2:220 n12a
- in Lives of the Prophets, 2:383, 386, 390
- in 3 Maccabees, 2:514, 518–19, 523–26, 539
- in More Psalms of David, 2:616, 622–24
- in Odes of Solomon, 2:736–38, 747–48, 766, 769
- in Psalms of Solomon, 2:657–58
- in Pseudo-Philo, 2:327, 333–34, 345–47, 355, 359, 364–66
- in Questions of Ezra, 1:598–99
- in Sibylline Oracles, 1:412
- Syriac Menander on, 2:585–86, 591, 593, 595, 598
- in Testament of Abraham, 1:876, 878, 897
- in Testament of Adam, 1:993
- in Testament of Isaac, 1:903, 907–8, 910
- in Testament of Jacob, 1:913
- in Treatise of Shem, 1:476, 477
- washing hands while saying, 2:33
- propitiation of, 1:376
- punishment by. See Punishment
- as rahmān, 2:484
- as redeemer, in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:697
- regret as not found in, in Odes of Solomon, 2:736
- rest sought by, 1:142 n24h
- riddle on name of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:338
- righteousness of
- in 2 Baruch, 1:634
- in 1 Enoch, 1:9, 25, 27, 30–31, 43, 39
- in Jubilees, 2:47, 65
- in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:285
- in 3 Maccabees, 2:514
- in Odes of Solomon, 2:742, 753, 758
- in Prayer of Manasseh, 2:628, 634, 636
- in Psalms of Solomon, 2:653, 654, 656, 660
- right hand of
- in 3 Enoch, 1:223, 295, 300–2
- in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:574
- as Sabaoth
- in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:697
- in gnostic writings, 2:721 nq
- in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:680, 694
- in magical papyri, 2:721 nq
- in Prayer of Jacob, 2:716, 717, 722
- in Sibylline Oracles, 1:351
- in Testament of Isaac, 1:909, 910
- in Testament of Solomon, 1:952, 962, 966, 977 n18e, 984, 987 n26f
- on salvation, in 4 Ezra, 1:521, 542
- Satan's negotiations with
- in Jubilees, 2:76
- in Testament of Job, 1:842, 847
- sealing of hand by, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:736–37, 750
- seal of
- in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:293
- in Odes of Solomon, 2:736, 742, 756
- secrets of
- in 3 Enoch, 1:274
- in 4 Ezra, 1:554, 555
- in Testament of Jacob, 1:918
- Šekinah manifestation of presence of, 1:241
- in 3 Enoch, 1:259–61
- as self-begotten (self-eternal; uncreated)
- in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:697
- in 2 Enoch, 1:156
- in Ladder of Jacob, 1:408
- in Orphica, 2:800
- in Sibylline Oracles, 1:361, 427
- seven steps to, 1:597 nAk
- sin and. See also Theodicy
- sin as non-allegiance to God, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:191
- sitting upon snakes. See Snake, God sitting upon
- Son of. See Christ, the; Son of God
- suffering of (Patripassianism), 1:787 n6c
- sword of
- in 3 Enoch, 1:286
- in Sibylline Oracles, 1:377
- tears of, in 3 Enoch, 1:301
- in Testament of Isaac, 1:909–10
- thrones of
- in 'Abodah Zarah, 1:866 n48h
- in Abot de-Rabbi Nathan, 1:262 n8a
- in Alphabet of Aqiba, 1:310 n48Bh
- in Angelic Liturgy, 2:268 n26b
- in 2 Baruch, 1:638
- in 3 Baruch, 1:657
- in Daniel, 1:246
- in 1 Enoch, 1:21, 23, 26, 36, 43
- in 2 Enoch, 1:102, 134–35, 144–45
- in 3 Enoch, 1:240, 241, 246, 248, 256–57, 262, 283, 286, 289–92, 294, 306, 309, 311
- in Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:812
- in 4 Ezra, 1:542
- in History of the Rechabites, 2:460
- in 1 Kings, 1:246
- in Ladder of Jacob, 2:408
- in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:281
- of Mercy vs. Justice, 1:285 n31a
- in Merkabah mysticism, 1:233, 234, 239, 248
- in Orphica, 2:800, 801
- in Questions of Ezra, 1:593, 597
- in Revelation, 1:247
- in Testament of Adam, 1:993
- in Testament of Levi, 1:789
- as Thunderer, in Philo the Epic Poet, 2:783 n1–2h
- transcendence of, xxxi, 1:790 n5d
- in 3 Enoch, 1:241

- in Gnosticism, 1:236
- in Merkabah texts, 1:241
- truth, in 4 Ezra, 1:543
- truth of
  - in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:682, 687, 694
  - in Odes of Solomon, 2:741–44, 746, 748, 750, 751, 755–56, 766–67, 770
- as unbegotten
  - in 4 Baruch, 2:424
  - in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:687, 695
  - in Sibylline Oracles, 1:329, 470
- as unchangeable, in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:681, 690, 695
- as untiring in activity, in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:681
- of vengeance
  - in 2 Baruch, 1:646–47, 649
  - in 1 Enoch, 1:26
  - in 2 Enoch, 1:176–77
  - in Pseudo-Philo, 2:349, 369
  - in Testament of Moses, 1:923
  - in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:778, 816
- voice of, 1:296 n25a
  - allegorical interpretation of, by Aristobulus, 2:835, 840
  - in Alphabet of Aqiba, 1:261 n6q
  - in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:693–94, 699–705
  - in Artapanus, 2:893, 901, 902
  - in 2 Baruch, 1:622, 625–31, 633–40
  - in 1 Enoch, 1:21–22, 74–75
  - in 2 Enoch, 1:136–61, 164–65
  - in 3 Enoch, 1:268, 291–92, 306
  - in 4 Ezra, 1:553, 554
  - in Ladder of Jacob, 2:407
  - in Pseudo-Philo, 2:319–21, 323, 327–28, 334, 336–38, 360–64, 367–68, 376
  - in Sibylline Oracles, 1:377
  - in Testament of Solomon, 1:961 n1h
  - in Vision of Ezra, 1:590
  - in Vision of Isaiah, 2:173
- winds of. See Winds
- wings of, in 2 Baruch, 1:633
  - as wisdom, in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:690
- worship of. See also Angels, singing and liturgy by
  - in History of the Rechabites, 2:460
  - in Jubilees, 2:94
  - in Sibylline Oracles, 1:37
  - in Vision of Isaiah, 2:172–73
- wrath of (anger of)
  - in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:703
  - in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:502, 515
  - in 4 Baruch, 2:418, 419
  - in 3 Enoch, 1:240
  - in 4 Ezra, 1:556–57, 572 n1q
  - in History of the Rechabites, 2:457
  - Letter of Aristeas on, 2:29
  - in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:262
  - in Prayer of Manasseh, 2:634, 635, 637
  - in Pseudo-Philo, 2:352, 358–59
  - in Sibylline Oracles, 1:376
  - in Testament of Abraham, 1:894 n19d
  - in Testament of Isaac, 1:908
  - in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:778, 790, 807
  - writing on forehead by, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:736, 750
  - yoke of. See Yoke
  - See also* Angels; Law; Trinity; Visions (including theophanies)
- Gods. See Pagan Gods; specific gods
- Gog and Magog
  - in Eldad and Modad, 2:463, 464
  - in 3 Enoch, xxxii, 1:298
  - in Sibylline Oracles, 1:369, 391
- Gold. See Money; Precious metals and stones
- Golden calves
  - Jannes and Jambres and, 2:430
  - in Lives of the Prophets, 2:397
  - in Pseudo-Philo, 2:320, 335
- Golden Rule
  - in Ahiqar, 2:490, 587
  - in Pseudo-Philo, 2:319 n12k
  - in Syriac Menander, 2:587–88
  - turned around in beatitudes, 1:168 n42e
- Good works
  - God's exhortation to
    - in 4 Ezra, 1:527
    - in Questions of Ezra, 1:596
  - heavenly bowl for, in 3 Baruch, 1:675, 676 n14b
  - kingly, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:28
  - love necessary with, in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:609
  - not present in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:193
  - in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:576
- reward for
  - in Jubilees, 2:38
  - in Vision of Ezra, 1:587, 588, 590
  - in Testament of Job, 1:843–44, 863
  - in Tobit, 2:489 n
  - in universalistic Judaism, 1:876–77, 904
  - when sins balance with, in Testament of Abraham, 1:889–91
- See also* Virtues
- Gospel of Truth (book), 2:373 n60b, 745 n11, 752 n19a, 758 n25g
- Grace
  - after meals, 2:212 n81
  - before meals, of Essenes, 1:384 n4c
  - See also* God, grace of
  - Great Prince, 1:229, 243, 244 n, 269
  - See also* Metatron
- Greece, ancient
  - drama of
    - ex eventu* prophecy in, 1:319
    - Ezekiel the Tragedian and, 2:803, 805
  - exhortations to, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:374, 378
  - first scientific chronography in, 2:845
  - funeral orations of, 2:536 n
  - gods of, in Letter of Aristeas, 1:22
  - Great Year in, 1:323
  - imperialism of, 1:9
  - Islands of the Blest as idea of, 2:447
  - measures in, 2:18 np
  - Persian wars of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:386
  - philosophy of, wedded to Judaism
    - Aristobulus on, 2:831, 839–42
    - in 4 Maccabees, 2:532–33, 539
    - by Philo, 2:514
  - physics of, 1:143 n25a, 144 n26b

- Greece, ancient (Cont.)
 salvation of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:357 wisdom of, Jewish wisdom compared to 2:586–87 woe to
   in 2 Baruch, 1:633 n39a
   in Sibylline Oracles, 1:373–74, 376, 396, 401, 404, 410, 411, 422, 438–39
 See also Hellenistic literature
- Greed
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:324, 418
 Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs on, 1:779, 799, 818, 826
- Greek Apocalypse of Ezra
 4 Ezra and, 1:565, 569
 introduction to, 1:561–70
 text of, 1:571–79
 Vision of Ezra and, 1:562–63, 569, 581, 582, 584, 585
- Greek language
 in angels' names, 1:242
 Aquila's version of Old Testament in, 2:673
 Aristean the Exegete's work in, 2:856, 857
 Aristobulus' writings in, 2:832
 Asianic style in, 2:535
 connotation of "touch" in, 1:185 n59a
 1 Enoch in, 1:6, 8, 22 n24l, 27 n26d
 2 Enoch and, 1:94, 95, 110 n3e, 227
 in 3 Enoch, 1:225
kalandologia in, 1:602
 Ladder of Jacob and, 2:403, 404 n
 magical papyri in. See Papyri, magical Philo the Epic Poet's use of, 2:775, 781
 Slavonic translations from, 1:686
 Syriac Menander's possible use of, 2:584, 585
 translations into, as distinct from original Greek writings, 2:640
 See also Septuagint
- Greek Legend, 2:151, 152, 156 n1a, 156 n1c, 157 n1w, 157 n1y, 157 n1z, 158 n2c, 163 n5f, 164 n6c, 169 n9a, 170 n9h
 description of, 2:146
- Habakkuk, 1:351, 526, 2:158, 163
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:393–94
 See also Habakkuk Commentary (1QpHab)
- Habakkuk (book), xxii
- Habakkuk Commentary (1QpHab)
 judgment of Gentiles in, 1:890 n13c
 priesthood attacked in, 1:930 n7e
- Hades
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:694
 in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:514–15
 bowl of, in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:578 captured by love, in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:609
 as common eternal home, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:578
 as great equalizer, in Jannes and Jambres, 2:434, 437, 442
 magical return from, in Jannes and Jambres, 2:440
 serpent's belly as, in 3 Baruch, 1:668–69
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:351, 417, 420
 Adam in, 1:336
 Christ in, 1:343 n1i2, 425
 descendants of Noah in, 1:340
- souls in
 in 4 Ezra, 1:531, 538
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:571, 578
 wealth cannot be taken to
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:578
 in Syriac Menander, 2:587, 602–3
 See also Hell
- Hadrian (Roman emperor), 1:390, 394 n5s, 394 n5t, 415, 416, 419, 421, 431, 449, 2:533–34, 541, 585
 circumcision proscribed by, 2:187
- Hagar, 1:204 n71c, 761, 2:36, 189, 313
 in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:759, 763–65
 in Jubilees, 2:85, 89–90
- Haggadah (haggada)
 in Jubilees, 2:40
 Solomon's building of Temple in, 1:943 n
 taught in heaven, in 3 Enoch, 1:313
- Haggadat Šema (Yisra) el, 1:264 n10f, 273 n18a2, 280 n26f, 296 n45a, 303 n15Be
- Haggadic Fragment, 1:304 n22Ba, 305 n22Bf, 305 n22Ca, 305 n22Cb, 305 n22Cd, 306 n22Cf, 306 n22Cg, 306 n22Ci
- Hagigah, 1:629 n23a, 827
 abode of righteous in, 1:293 n43b
 angels in, 1:280 n26f, 281 n26i, 286 n33a, 286 n33e
 creation, 1:292 n40i
 Metatron, as scribe, 1:282 n27g, 296 n44t
 binding of crowns in, 1:268 n16f
 on creation, 1:262 n8a, 265 n13a
 on dew, 1:631 n29g
 on end of time, 1:300 n48Ah, 631 n29h
 3 Enoch and, 1:226, 229, 244, 245, 268 n16a, 284 n29e, 304 n15Bm
 on Gehinnom, 1:287 n33h
 on heavens, 1:241, 269 n17f, 273 n18a2, 202 n42a, 292 n42i
 dimensions, 1:305 n22Cc
 number of heavens, 1:239, 269 n17d
 on sitting in heaven, 1:263 n10b
- Melchisedek in, 1:250
- Merkabah mysticism in, 1:230–33, 235, 248, 256 n1f, 268 n16e
 on Michael in fourth heaven, 1:674 n11d
- Sibylline Oracles and, 1:368
- souls in, 1:294 n43j
 on thrones in heaven, 1:855 n33a
 on Upper Waters, 1:664 n2b
 on voice of God, 1:296 n45a
- Hair
 disheveled, in Testament of Solomon, 1:974
 of Lamech's son, in 1 Enoch, 1:86, 87
 long, on boys, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:581
- Ham (Kham), 1:212, 341 n1x, 481 n1a, 714, 787, 907, 2:305, 336 n25l
 in Jubilees, 2:64, 72–74, 98
 sons of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:308–10
- Hamor, 1:788, 790, 2:112, 184, 314, 786, 790 n1c, 791–93
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:849–50
- Hannah, 2:364–65, 541, 685
- Haran, 1:693 n8a, 2:80, 309
- Hārūt, 1:157 n33l, 985 n25a
- Hasidim, 1:784 n6a, 921
 Jubilees and, 2:44–46

- Hasmonean dynasty, 1:919, 929 n5a
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:665 n17c
 Heathen. See Gentiles; Nations; Pagan gods Heaven
   academy in, in 3 Enoch, 1:245, 272, 313 ascension to, 2:231 n18j. See also Souls, ascent
   of
   in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:249
   in Ascension of Isaiah, 1:248–49
   in 3 Baruch, 1:664–65
   in 2 Corinthians, 1:246–47
   in Elijah, 1:246
   in 1 Enoch, 1:49, 247
   in 2 Enoch, 1:110, 194–95
   in 3 Enoch, 1:246, 255–56
   in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:231
   in Merkabah texts, 1:230–34, 237–39
   in Testament of Abraham, 1:871, 880
   in Testament of Isaac, 1:909–10
   in Testament of Job, 1:835, 859–60, 868
   in Testament of Levi, 1:248
   in Vision of Isaiah, 2:164–76
   assembly of. See God, heavenly assembly consulted by
   cross taken up to, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:406, 507
   dew of, in 3 Baruch, 1:675
   eternal rest in, in Joseph and Aseneth,
   2:213 n8f2
   families in, 1:247, 265 n12f, 2:690
   fear of, in 3 Enoch, 2:240
   firmament of, 1:292 n42a
   in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:684, 694, 698, 699
   in 3 Baruch, 1:664
   in 1 Enoch, 1:22–23
   in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:679, 691
   in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:190, 220
   in Jubilees, 2:56
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:328
   in Vision of Isaiah, 2:166, 174, 175
   food in, in 2 Enoch, 1:182 n56d
   gates of (openings, doors of)
   in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:512
   in 3 Baruch, 1:123 n13c, 664–67, 670–71, 674–77
   in 1 Enoch, 1:28–29, 51–54, 670 n6o
   in 2 Enoch, 1:122–31, 670 n6o
   in 3 Enoch, 1:243, 262–63, 305
   in Hekalot Rabbati, 1:243
   in Testament of Abraham, 1:512 n5c, 888, 899
   in Testament of Levi, 1:248
   houses and palaces in, 1:304 n22Bb
   in Ascension of Isaiah, 1:248
   in 3 Enoch, 1:255, 262, 271, 311
   in Merkabah texts, 1:240, 247
   law court of
   in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:502
   in 3 Enoch, 1:240, 243, 244–45, 266 n14b, 273, 281 n26m, 282–87
   in Merkabah texts, 1:234
   luminaries of. See also Moon; Sun
   in Apocalypse of Adam, 1:715, 717
   in 1 Enoch, 1:25, 50–61
   Messiah in, 1:226, 298
   multitudes in
   in 1 Enoch, 1:21, 31, 50
   in 2 Enoch, 1:102–4
   new (transformation of)
   in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:732
   in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:753
   in 1 Enoch, 1:33–34, 73
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:307
   password in, in Vision of Isaiah, 2:174
   Qumran community as antechamber of, 2:718 rainbow of, in 3 Enoch, 1:306
   rolling up of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:423, 427
   sabbath observed in, in Jubilees, 2:58
   soul's citizenship in, 1:846 n1d
   storehouses of (treasuries of)
   in 1 Enoch, 1:19
   in 3 Enoch, 1:240, 245, 262–63, 290, 294, 304–5, 306 n33Cg, 311
   in Testament of Levi, 1:248
   thrones in, 1:855 n33a. See also God, thrones
   of
   in Vision of Isaiah, 1:248, 289 n36g, 2:166– 71 veils of. See Veils, heavenly visions of. See Visions water of
   in 1 Enoch, 1:38
   in Testament of Adam, 1:993
   See also Angels; God; Heavens; Paradise; Righteous ones; Saints
 Heavenly bodies. See Moon; Stars; Sun; Zodiac Heavenly household. See Angels, as heavenly household
 Heavens
   creation of, in 2 Enoch, 1:148
   destruction of, 1:567
   in Sibylline Oracles, 1:361
   dimension of, in 3 Enoch, 1:305–6 distances and dimensions between, in Merkabah
   texts, 1:241
   eighth
   in 2 Enoch, 1:136
   in Hypostasis of the Archons, 1:236, 237
   in Merkabah texts, 1:237, 239, 2:704
   fifth
   in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:498, 503, 508
   in 3 Baruch, 1:657, 674–75
   in 2 Enoch, 1:114 n7i
   in 3 Enoch, 1:269, 271
   in Vision of Isaiah, 2:167–68, 174, 176
   first
   in 3 Baruch, 1:659, 664–65, 670–71
   darkness in, 1:789 n3a
   in 2 Enoch, 1:110–13
   in 3 Enoch, 1:269, 270–71
   in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:571
   in Merkabah texts, 1:236
   in Testament of Levi, 1:248, 1:779, 788–89
   as veil, 1:269 n17f, 296 n45a
   in Vision of Isaiah, 2:166, 174
   fourth
   in 3 Baruch, 1:673 n10a
   in 2 Enoch, 1:120–31, 660
   in 3 Enoch, 1:269, 271
   in Vision of Isaiah, 2:167, 174, 176
   journey of seers through, xxvi
   ninth, in 2 Enoch, 1:110 n4a, 136, 963 n2b
   number of, 1:239, 597 nAk, 660, 2:166 n7i
   in Ascension of Isaiah, 1:248
   in 2 Enoch, 1:134, 248

Heavens (Cont.)

- in 3 Enoch, 1:239, 269, 300
  - in Merkabah texts, 1:248
  - in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:779
  - second
    - in 3 Baruch, 1:659, 664–65, 670–71
    - in 2 Enoch, 1:112–15
    - in 3 Enoch, 1:269, 271
    - in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:239 n23s
    - Metatron in, 1:244
    - in Testament of Levi, 1:779, 788–89
    - in Testament of Solomon, 1:975
    - in Vision of Isaiah, 2:166–67, 174, 175
  - seventh
    - 'Arabot as name for, 1:276 n19j
    - in 2 Enoch, 1:134–37, 166
    - in 3 Enoch, 1:240–42, 269, 271
    - God usually located in, 1:115 n8g
    - in Hypostasis of the Archons, 1:236
    - in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:190, 239
    - in Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah, 2:160, 162, 169–73, 176
    - in Merkabah texts, 1:237
  - sixth
    - in Ascension of Isaiah, 1:248
    - in 2 Enoch, 1:132–35, 660
    - in 3 Enoch, 1:269, 271, 287 n33l
    - in Vision of Isaiah, 2:168–69, 173–74, 176
  - tenth, in 2 Enoch, 1:134, 136–61
  - third, xxxiii, 1:597 nAl, 2:229 n16n
    - in Apocalypse of Paul, 1:114 n7i
    - in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:610
    - in 3 Baruch, 1:659, 668 n6a, 671, 673 n10a
    - in 2 Corinthians, 1:246–27, 268 n25a
    - in 2 Enoch, 1:114–19, 154 n31c, 168 m42c
    - in 3 Enoch, 1:269, 271
    - in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:239 n23s
    - in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 254, 266 n25a, 291
    - in Testament of Levi, 1:779, 788–89
    - in Vision of Isaiah, 2:167, 174, 176
- Hebrew language
- Ahiqar probably not in, 2:481
  - Apocalypse of Abraham in, 1:682–83, 686
  - Apocalypse of Elijah in, 1:728–29, 730
  - Apocryphon of Ezekiel possibly in, 1:488
  - 2 Baruch in, 1:616, 617
  - 4 Baruch possibly in, 2:414
  - Chronicles of Jerahmeel in, 2:298
  - connotation of "touch" in, 1:185 n59a
  - 1 Enoch possibly originally in, 1:6
  - 2 Enoch and, 1:94, 134 n29a, 141, 196 n69a, 198 n69m, 199 n69p, 199 n69t, 199 n69v, 199 n69x, 200 n69y
    - in Merilo Pravednoe, 1:218 ng2, 218 nh2
    - parataxis, 1:110 n3c
  - 3 Enoch in, 1:225
  - 4 Ezra in, 1:520
  - Greek Apocalypse of Ezra possibly in, 1:563
  - History of the Rechabites in, 2:444–45
  - Isaiah's death possibly referred to in, 2:149
  - Jubilees and, 2:49
  - Jubilees in, 2:41, 43, 50
  - letters of, 1:265 n13c
  - Life of Adam and Eve possibly in, 2:251, 252
  - Lives of the Prophets in, 2:380, 381
  - Martyrdom of Isaiah in, 2:144, 146–47, 150
  - More Psalms of David in, 2:609, 612–13, 615, 617–19, 621–23
  - Odes of Solomon possibly in, 2:726
  - Prayer of Manasseh possibly in, 2:625–27
  - Psalms of Solomon in, 2:640
  - Pseudo-Philo presumably in, 2:298–99, 300
  - rabbinic, xxvi
  - revival of, in Jubilees, 2:45, 82
  - as speech of animals, in Jubilees, 2:40, 60 n3f
  - Syriac Menander's possible use of, 2:584
  - Testament of Abraham possibly in, 1:873–74
  - Testament of Adam possibly in, 1:989–90
  - Testament of Job in, 1:830, 833
  - Testament of Moses possibly in, 1:920
  - Testament of Solomon possibly in, 1:939, 943
  - Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs in, 1:775–77
    - as tongue of creation, in Jubilees, 2:40, 82
- Hebrews (epistle), 1:856 n33k, 2:673
- Apocalypse of Daniel and, 1:759
- 1 Enoch and, 1:10
  - Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:195, 213 n8j2
  - Life of Adam and Eve and, 2:254
  - Lives of the Prophets and, 2:383, 388 n3b
  - 2 Maccabees and, 1:540 n
  - Melchisedek in, 1:97
  - Odes of Solomon and, 2:741 n8b
  - Testament of Abraham and, 1:882 n2b
- Hecataeus of Abdera, 2:15, 856, 2:891, 894, 898 n3j
- testimonia* to work of, 2:905, 909–10
  - true fragments of, 2:905, 907
- See also Pseudo-Hecataeus
- Hekalot Rabbati, 1:231–35, 248–51, 304 n22Ba, 306 n22Cm, 315 n48Dv
- angels in, 1:262 n7h, 264 n10g, 265 n13a, 272 n18i, 272 n18s, 274 n8e2, 277 n22e, 278 n22l, 305 n22Bj, 305 n22Bl, 311 n48Cg
- 'Anapi'el, 1:261 n6b
  - Dummi'el, 1:281 n26m
  - guardians of the doors, 1:271 n18f
  - herald, 1:264
  - of destruction, 1:285 n31f
  - on horses, 1:270 n18a
  - opposition to man, 1:260 n5l
  - punishment, 1:291 n40d
  - Qeduššah, 1:305 n22Bm
  - scribes at law court, 1:282 n27g
  - size, 1:263 n9c
  - with YHWH in names, 1:284 n30d
- ascent to Merkabah in, 1:233–34, 237–38, 256 n1f, 306 n22Ce
- crowns in, 1:265 n12d
- on God as "glorified with embroideries of songs," 1:866 n48h
- heaven described in, 1:240, 242, 243, 255 n1d, 255 n1f, 266 n14b, 273 n18a2, 304 n22Bb
- heavenly tablets in, 1:296 n45a
- heavenly voices in, 1:306 n22Cm
- humbling and raising in, 1:283 n28f
- Merkabah conventicles in, 1:233
- Merkabah hymns in, 1:231, 245, 256 n1m
- Metatron, 1:312 n48Co, 313 n48Da, 314 n48Dh-i
- order of nature in, 1:264 n11c
- Prayer of Joseph and, 2:702
- Rabbi Ishmael in, 1:255 n1b

- robe of God in, 1:265 n12a
 on times of crisis and stress, 1:238
 title and names of God in, 1:256 n1h, 272 n18n, 274 n18g2
 wings in, 1:262 n7c
- Hekalot Zūṭarti, 1:232, 250, 265 n12a, 287 n34b
- Hela'emmemēlek (Hela'emmemēlĕk), 1:60, 61
- Helen of Troy, 1:359, 371 n3c3, 437 n11a2, 2:183
- Heliodorus (figure in 2 Maccabees), 2:512, 515, 534, 540, 548 n4b
- Hell
 angels as warders in, 1:285 n31f. See also Angels, of punishment and hell Christ's descending into. See Christ, the, death of conquest of, in Odes of Solomon, 2:748 end of
 in 2 Baruch, 1:628
 in 4 Ezra, 1:531
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:302, 307
 in 1 Enoch, 1:9, 23, 24, 36, 38, 39, 44, 72–73, 80, 81, 83, 84, 88
 in 2 Enoch, 1:103 n1af, 114 n7i, 118–21, 152 n30o, 166–69, 220
 in 3 Enoch, 1:223
 purgatorial function, 1:245, 294–95
 fire of. See Fire, of hell
 as icy cold, 1:597 nAl
 intercession for release of souls from, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:334, 353
 location of, 1:597 nAj
 mouth, in 2 Baruch, 1:642
 as place of rest, in Syriac Menander, 2:585, 592, 606
 sleep as carrying us into. Syriac Menander on, 2:594
 treasures of souls in, 1:294 n43b
See also Gehenna; Hades; Punishment; Tartarus
- Hellenistic literature
 "competitive historiography" of, 2:891–92
 Pseudo-Phocylides as, 2:565–66
See also Greece, ancient; Jews, Hellenistic literature of
- Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers (Hellenistic Synagogal Hymns), xxviii
 introduction to, 2:671–76
 text of, 2:677–97
- Hellespontian Sibyl, 1:317, 328
- Herennius Philo, 2:905, 909–10
- Hermes (Hermas), 1:140 n23r, 401
 Enoch as, 1:228
 Hymn of Rebirth, 2:607
 Moses identified with, 2:889, 892, 893, 899
 Shechem as son of, 2:786, 790, 790 n3c
See also Shepherd of Hermes (book)
- Hermon, Mount (Mount Ermon), 1:19, 2:353 n40h
 fallen angels on
 in 1 Enoch, 1:15
 in 2 Enoch, 1:132–33
- Hesiod, 1:345, 360, 476, 478 n, 2:640–41
 punishment for
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:574
 in Vision of Ezra, 1:581, 585, 589
- Herodotus, 1:345 n2f, 358, 385 n4f, 410, 627 n19a, 847 n20f, 2:447, 490 n,
 870 n34a2, 877, 878 n
 on origin of circumcision, 2:899 n3s
- Hesiod, 1:345 n2f, 427 n8p2, 567, 2:881 nw
- Ahiqar as contemporary of, 2:491 n
 allegorical method applied to, 2:832
 in Aristobulus, 2:842
 fragments attributed to, 2:823
 gray-templed babies in, 1:349 n1g2
 History of the Rechabites and, 2:447
 in 2 Kings, 2:150
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:385, 386
 in Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah, 1:249, 773, 831, 2:143, 147–49, 156–57, 159,
 161, 164–65, 175, 176
 Sibylline Oracles influenced by, 1:332 n, 334, 336 n1d, 337 n1g-i, 341 n1v
Theogony, 1:337 n1g, 337 n1i, 342 n1y, 342 n1z, 351, 352, 352 n2x2, 364 n3p, 365
- Hezekiah, 2:620
 in 2 Baruch, 1:642–43
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:685
 hiding of book of "recipes" by, 1:949, 956,
 960 nc
 Testament of. See Testament of Hezekiah
- High priest
 dress of, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:19
 Jesus Christ as, in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:685, 690
 life tenure of, 2:548 n4a
 Maccabean-Essene dispute over, 2:44
 Metatron as, in 3 Enoch, 1:265 n12a
 in sanctuary of Temple, 2:517
See also Priesthood
- Hillel, 1:315 n48Dv, 2:490 n, 588
 in 3 Enoch, 1:315
- Hillel the Pirathonite, 2:355
- Hippolytus, xxii, 1:237, 398 n5a3, 477 n, 715 n6b, 856 n33j
 abbreviation of book by, xlix
 on Christ and Antichrist as lions, 1:740 n2q
 on Hezekiah, 1:956
 lost Apocalypse of Daniel used by, 1:761
- Hiram (king), 2:863, 866 n21, 867 n31a,
 870 n34a2
- History
 on curtain before God's face, in 3 Enoch,
 1:223, 296–99
 Deuteronomic concept of, 2:301 end point of, 1:334. See also Time, end of in 2 Enoch, 1:162 n39b, 168 n42d, 192–93
 God of. See God, of history meaning of, xxxiv
 in apocalyptic writings, 1:584
 periodization of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:319, 323, 354
- History of Joseph (book), xxii, xxvii, 2:206 n4k
 introduction to, 2:467–71
 text of, 2:472–75
- History of the Rechabites (Apocalypse of Zosi-mus; book), xxii, 1:662 ne, 773
 alternate names of, 1:4 3 Baruch and, 1:660, 664 n2b, 664 n2f
 Eldad and Modad and, 2:464, 465
 hypostatic voices in, 2:406, 450, 451
 introduction to, 2:443–49
 resurrection in, xxxiii, 2:446
 text of, 2:450–61

- Holy Land, 2:328 n19m
 as heaven, 1:855 n33i
See also Israel
- Holy Lord (God), 2:485
- Holy ones
 in 3 Enoch, 1:283
 joy to, in Odes of Solomon, 2:755, 759
 plundering of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:349
 in Testament of Job, 1:855 n33d, 862–63
- Holy Spirit (Paraclete) Christ and
   in Epiphanius, 1:139 n22p
   in Gospel of the Hebrews, 1:143 n24h
 harp of, in Odes of Solomon, 2:748
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:686–88
 in History of the Rechabites, 2:460
 in Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah, 2:154, 160, 161, 164, 165, 167, 169, 172, 174, 176
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:727, 729, 738, 744, 748, 752, 765–66
- Homer, 1:400 n5j3, 2:594
 allegorical method applied to, 2:832, 834
 ancient interest in, 2:787
 in Aristobulus, 2:842
 falsehoods of, 1:359, 371 n3d3
 fragments attributed to, 2:823
Iliad, 2:434, 825 n5d
Odyssey, 1:287 n33h, 337 n1i, 353 n2d3, 438 n112, 882 n2b, 2:447, 823 n
 Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:581 n197s
 Theodotus as using language of, 2:791 n2a, 793 n7b–8b, 793 n8d
- Homosexuality
 female, hair-cutting for, 1:849 n23e
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:574, 581
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:323, 330, 347, 366, 375, 379, 385, 392
 Roman, 1:357, 391, 397, 402
 in Testament of Jacob, 1:913, 917
See also Sodomy
- Honey
 bees' work in making, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:580
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:190, 212 n8i, 228–30
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:736, 762, 769
- Hosea
 in 4 Ezra, 1:526
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:391
 in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:163
- Hosea (book)
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:741 n8b
 Prayer of Joseph and, 2:705, 707, 709, 2:713 nAa
 Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs and, 1:787 n6a, 792 n10b
- Hospitality
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:210
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:347
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:878 n, 879, 882–84, 895–97, 901
 in Testament of Jacob, 1:917, 918
 in Testament of Job, 1:843–44, 863
- Hullin (Hull), 1:255 n1b, 293 n42k, 895 n20i, 2:577 n83g
 angel Israel in, 2:702, 707 n, 710 n
 Nimrod in, 1:297 n45i
- Hymn of the Pearl, 2:607, 714 nCa, 755 n23c
- Hymns (odes; psalms)
 by angels. See Angels, singing and liturgy by Deborah's, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:345–47
 Ethiopian Synaxarion and, 2:197
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:236–38
 Merkabah. See Merkabah mysticism, hymns of Odes of Solomon on, 2:758–59, 765 playing of, in Testament of Job, 1:844
 Qumran. See Dead Sea Scrolls in Revelation, 1:247
See also Odes of Solomon; Psalms (book)
- Hypostasis of the Archons (book), 1:236, 237, 2:721 nq
- Hyrcaeus, John, 1:510 n3b, 778, 929 n2c, 2:44, 788
 Annals of, xxi
 Samaria takeover by, 2:913–14
- laō (magical name), 1:979 n18y, 2:717, 721, 721 nq
- Idleness
 definition of, in Syriac Menander, 2:600
 denunciation of, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:571, 579–80
 hatefulness of, Syriac Menander on, 2:594, 604
 prevention of, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:29
- Idol worship (idolatry)
 Aeschylus (possibly) on, 2:825
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:689–93, 701, 702
 in 2 Baruch, 1:633 n41b, 642
 in 3 Baruch, 1:677, 877
 in 1 Enoch, 1:80
 in 2 Enoch, 1:91, 120–21, 158–59, 192, 877
 in 3 Enoch, 1:260
 in Jannes and Jambres, 2:78–80, 94, 95, 98, 2:441–42
 Jewish steadfastness vs., in Hecataeus of Abdera, 2:918
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:177, 204, 206, 210 n7d, 212, 214–16, 219, 221, 233, 237, 245
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:410–11
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:388, 396–97
 in Noachian law, 2:569
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 320, 327, 335–36, 343, 350, 355, 357–59, 360–62, 2:305
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:569, 575
 Pseudo-Sophocles on, in Pseudo-Hecataeus, 2:912
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:331, 333, 346, 351, 361–63, 368, 383, 392, 409, 452, 469–71 Greece, 1:357, 374
 speech of God, 1:426–27
 in Tale of Aphroditianus, 2:405
 in Testament of Jacob, 1:917
 in Testament of Job, 1:829, 835, 840–41, 846
 in Testament of Moses, 1:928, 931, 932
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:937, 940, 952, 986–87
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:800, 801, 807, 812
- Ignatius, 1:479 n, 860 n40i, 2:150, 744 n11f
- Ignorance
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:210
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:740, 744, 752
- Illness (infirmities)
 caused by Satan, in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 272–73

- end of, in Odes of Solomon, 2:751, 754, 758
lacking, in History of the Rechabites, 2:458
See also Medicine
- Illuminator, in Apocalypse of Adam, 1:707, 709, 715–19, 946
- Immortality, xxxiii astral, 2:348 n33e
in 3 Enoch, 1:245
given to all human beings, in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:686, 696–97
God's promise of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:333
in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:674, 675, 686, 696–97
in 4 Maccabees, 2:539, 541, 559, 562, 564
in Odes of Solomon, 2:729–31, 743, 745, 748, 760, 766, 769
in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:578
See also Resurrection; Righteous ones
- Incantation bowls
Babylonian, 1:227–29, 943, 947–48, 963 n1p, 967 n5p, 974 n13a
Mandean, 1:253
- Incantation texts, 1:315 n48Dw
on Palestinian amulet, 1:948
seals in, 1:314 n48Dp
- Incarnation
"tabernacle" as term for, 2:713 nAj
See also Christ, the, incarnation of
- Incest. See also Bilhah
in Apocalypse of Adam, 1:717
in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:766
by Judah, 1:798, 2:130–31
in Noachian law, 2:569
in Psalms of Solomon, 2:659
in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:580
punishment for
in Jubilees, 2:88, 113, 119–20, 131
in Vision of Ezra, 1:581, 588
rabbinic prohibition of public discussion of, 1:230 n
in Sibylline Oracles, 1:402, 411
warning vs., in Jubilees, 2:40, 119–20
- Incorruption, in Odes of Solomon, 2:731, 740, 742, 743, 748, 750, 755, 760, 764, 769
- Injustice
cause of, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:31
social. See Kings; Social injustice
- Innate law (natural law)
in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:675, 677, 678, 692
See also Noachian laws
- Inner light
of Joseph, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:191, 209
ophthalmology of, 2:209 n6r
- Irenaeus, 1:8, 238 n, 412, 645 n73d, 760, 767 n8b, 769 n14b
apocalypticism of, 1:584
on Christ's stay on earth after resurrection, 2:170 n9v
Satan's fall in, 2:262 n12a
- Irene (empress), 1:756, 757 n, 758, 766 n6j
- Isaac
Abraham's planned sacrifice of
Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:845, 848
in Jubilees, 2:47, 90–91
in 4 Maccabees, 2:558–60, 563
in Philo the Epic Poet, 2:781, 783
in Pseudo-Philo, 3:202, 325, 345–46, 353
in 4 Baruch, 2:419, 421
Books of the Mysteries held by, 1:949 n
conception of, 1:204 n71c
in Jubilees, 2:86, 88
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:333
Coptic name-day of, 1:903–5, 910, 911, 914, 918
on curtain of God, in 3 Enoch, 1:297
Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:848, 850, 851, 853
in Ethiopian commentary to 1 Enoch, 1:74 n93b, 74 n93l
in Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:813
in 4 Ezra, 1:526, 528, 534
in heaven
in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:502, 514, 515
in 3 Enoch, 1:295–96
in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:677, 678, 684, 693, 696, 697
in Jubilees, 2:35, 36, 47, 48, 86, 88–97, 99–100, 106–8, 112, 114, 116, 118–20, 122–25, 130
at Last Judgment, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:351
in magical papyrus, 2:717
martyrs received by, in 4 Maccabees, 2:539, 558
in Prayer of Manasseh, 2:628, 629, 634, 635
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:302, 313, 325, 345–46, 353, 374
Testament of. See Testament of Isaac
in Testament of Abraham, 1:879, 883–86, 891, 895, 897–98, 902
in Testament of Job, 1:916, 918
in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:791, 793, 795, 801, 810, 812, 818, 828, 2:95 n21b, 95 n21c
- Isaiah
"Apocryphon" of, 2:149 ascension of. See Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah death of. See also Sawing in half
in 4 Baruch, 2:424
in 4 Ezra, 1:527
garment of glory of, 1:866 n48h
grave of, 2:398 n23d
in Lives of the Prophets, 2:381, 383, 385–86
4 Maccabees in, 2:531–33, 535
Martyrdom of. See Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah monument to, 2:381
Psalms of Solomon and, 2:646–48, 651 n1d
unknown and untitled writing of, xxi Vision of. See Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah
- Isaiah (book)
Ahiqar and, 2:487
Antichrist in, 1:568, 658, 660
Apocalypse of Adam and, 1:715 n6f
Apocalypse of Daniel and, 1:759
Apocalypse of Elijah and, 1:738 n1c3
Apocalypse of Zephaniah and, 1:503
atonement in, 2:539
2 Baruch and, 1:619
2 Enoch and, 1:133 n19c
3 Enoch and, 1:246, 247
Euripides' possible agreement with, 2:827
on fire as not burning, 2:564
Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers and, 2:672

- Isaiah (book) (Cont.)
 in Jubilees, 2:48, 85–87, 89–90, 93, 94, 97, 100, 112
 Life of Adam and Eve and, 2:254
 Merkabah texts and, 1:788 n2c, 789 n3c
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:731, 742 n8i, 746 n11z, 753 n20f
 Pseudo-Philo and, 2:301
 punishment by fire in, 1:333, 352 n2x2
 Questions of Ezra and, 1:593
 Qumran hymns and, 1:854 n32i
 resurrection in, xxxiii
 Satan's fall and Midrash on, 2:262 n12a
 Sibylline Oracles and, 1:357, 391 n, 392
 Testament of Adam and, 1:992
 Testament of Solomon and, 1:954
 Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs and, 1:789 n3e, 801 n24b, 825 n19d
- Ishmael
 in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:763–65
 in 3 Enoch, 1:297
 "land of," 2:393
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:313
- Ishmael, Rabbi
 in 3 Enoch, 1:223, 225–26, 255–308
 in Hekalot Rabbati, 1:234
 historical background of, 1:255 n1b
 story of lame man and blind man attributed to, 1:487
- Ishmaelites, 1:761–62, 763 n1h
 Arabs as, 1:94
 Joseph sold to, 1:815, 822–23, 825, 2:121
- Isis, 1:979 n18i2, 2:193 n, 216 n10s, 216 n10t, 217 n10f2, 238 n21c2
 Artapanus' history and, 2:892, 893, 898 n3e, 900, 902
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:358–59, 362 n3e, 370 n3n2, 370 n3p2, 376 n3x3, 391, 394, 404
- Islam
mushabbiha sects of, 1:226
 Solomon in, 1:951, 956
See also Allah; Koran
- Israel
 angels' help to
 in Testament of Moses, 1:919, 931–32
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:779, 790, 810
 Book of the Annals of the King of, xxi calendars of. See Calendars
 call for repentance by, in Apocryphon of Ezekiel, 1:494 chosen people of. See Jews, as chosen people Christ persecuted by, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:343 compared to dove, 2:352 n39c
 enrollment by name in, in Lives of the Prophets, 2:399
 etymology of name, 2:709, 713 nAf
 feasts of. See Feast days; specific feasts
 final triumph of, in 2 Baruch, 1:619, 645
 God coming to dwell in, in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:778, 789–90
 God of. See also Covenant
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:695
 in 4 Maccabees, 2:538, 555, 557
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:951, 962
- God's judgment upon
 in 4 Ezra, 1:526–27
 in Jubilees, 1:65, 101–2
- God's love of
 in 2 Baruch, 1:618
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:644, 645, 669
- God's mercies to
 in 4 Ezra, 1:525
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300
- God's revenge on enemies of, in 2 Baruch, 1:618, 649
- heavenly books on deeds of, in Vision of Isaiah, 2:171
- heavenly tablets on future of, in Hekalot Rabbati, 1:296 n45a
- history of. See also specific kings, including David and Judah
 in 2 Baruch, 1:641–46
 in 1 Enoch, 1:5, 39, 66–69
 in 3 Enoch, 1:297–98
 in Eupolemus, 2:861, 865–71
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:370–77
- indestructibility of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300, 315, 320–21
- Jacob as. See Jacob, as Jacob-Israel
- kings of
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:862, 871 n5a
 in Eupolemus, 2:862
 as illegitimate, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:642, 643
- last wars of, in 3 Enoch, 1:298–99
- Law as divine gift to, in 4 Ezra, 1:521, 529, 545
- as light to nations, in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:779
- Messiah's saving of, xxxii
 at Messianic banquet, in 3 Enoch, 1:302
- Metatron as advocate of, 1:303 n15B1
- Michael as Prince of, in 3 Enoch, 1:243
- Moses' lighting of lamp for, in 2 Baruch, 1:627
 as "one who sees God" in Philo, 2:683 n5e
- prophets always persecuted by, 2:382
- protection of, in last days, in 2 Baruch, 1:618
- punishment of, xxx–xxxii
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:643
 in Testament of Judah, 1:801
- recording of merits of, in 3 Enoch, 1:273
- redemption of
 in 3 Enoch, 1:223
 in Jubilees, 2:54–55
- redemptive value of martyrs of, in 4 Maccabees, 2:539, 552
- "sons" of, in Testament of Solomon, 1:952, 976
- spared from Flood, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300, 313
- transgressions of
 in 3 Enoch, 1:295–96
 in Jubilees, 2:52–54
 in Testament of Levi, 1:792
- tribes of. See also specific tribes
 in 2 Baruch, 1:621, 642–43, 647, 648
 in Contendings of the Apostles, 2:446 n
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:854, 871 n5a
 History of the Rechabites and, 2:446 n
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:331, 334–35, 338, 360, 365

- in Solomon's time, Eupolemus on, 2:867, 868–69
 in Testament of Moses, 1:928, 929
 in Testaments of the Three Patriarchs, 1:871, 877, 890, 903, 907, 916
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:824, 827
 as utopia, in Hecataeus of Abdera, 2:905 war between Syria and, in Lives of the Prophets, 2:398
See also Jerusalem; Judea; Palestine
 Israel (angel), Jacob as incarnation of. See Prayer of Joseph Israel (name)
 as "man seeing God," 2:703
See also Jacob, as Jacob-Israel Issachar
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:849, 851
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:177, 245
 in Jubilees, 2:110, 120, 122, 128, 135
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:314
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:801.
See also Testament of Issachar
 tribe of, 2:391
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:317, 335, 338
 Jacob
 in 4 Baruch, 2:419, 422
 Bethel visit of Lord to, 1:107 nlp
 Books of the Mysteries held by, 1:949 n
 derivation of name of, 2:706
 in Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:808, 813
 in 4 Ezra, 1:526, 528, 534
 in heaven
 in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:502, 514, 515
 in 3 Enoch, 1:295–96
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:677, 678, 684, 693, 696, 697
 in History of Joseph, 2:467, 469, 470, 472–74
 as incarnation of angel Israel, in Prayer of Joseph, 2:699
 as Jacob-Israel
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:850
 Genesis as source for, 2:707
 in Gnosticism and Manicheanism, 2:718 n
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:238, 246
 in Jubilees, 2:36, 117, 134–37
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:402, 408–9
 Prayer of Joseph and, 2:701, 702
 in Testament of Jacob, 1:916, 917
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:182, 191, 213, 238–39
 warning vs. foreign women, 2:193, 194, 211
 in Jubilees, 2:35, 36, 39, 92–93, 97–99, 102–37
 Ladder of. See Ladder of Jacob
 at Last Judgment, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:351 lists of children and grandchildren of
 in Demetrius the Chronographer, 2:843, 848–52
 in Jubilees, 2:135–36
 in magical papyrus, 2:717
 martyrs received by, in 4 Maccabees, 2:539, 558
 in More Psalms of David, 2:619, 621, 624
 only canonical prayer by, in Genesis, 2:706
 in Philo the Epic Poet, 2:784
 Prayer of, xxvii
 in Prayer of Jacob, 2:723
 in Prayer of Manasseh, 2:628, 629, 634, 635
 priesthood and, in Jubilees, 1:791 n6b, 2:117
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:658, 664
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 313–14, 325, 330, 333, 346, 364, 374
 temperance of, in 4 Maccabees, 2:546
 Testament of. See Testament of Jacob
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:903–8, 910
 in Testament of Job, 1:839
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:785–86, 790, 791, 793, 795–97, 799–806, 808, 810, 811, 813–16, 818, 822–24, 827–28
 Reuben's crime and, 1:782, 783
 in Theodotus, 2:785
 Jacob's ladder, 1:233 n, 915
 in Prayer of Joseph, 2:704–5
See also Ladder of Jacob (book)
 Jambres, 2:361
See also Jannes and Jambres
 James
 Book of, 1:205 n71c, 205 n71g
 Epistle of. See James (epistle)
 James (epistle), 2:673
 2 Enoch and, 1:176 n49a
 4 Ezra and, 1:522
 Jubilees and, 2:49
 Life of Adam and Eve and, 2:254
 Jannes and Jambres (book), xxii
 in 2 Timothy, 2:361 n47a, 427, 428 n, 430, 432, 433 n, 435 Jannes and Jambres (magicians)
 alleged book by, 2:430
 Book of. See Jannes and Jambres (book)
 Penitence of, 2:430
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:951 n, 985, 2:429, 433 n
 tradition of, 2:427–30
 Jael, 1:251, 2:338 n26e, 702, 703
 Japheth (Afet), 1:212, 341 n1x, 481 n1a, 714, 907, 2:305
 in Jubilees, 2:64, 69, 72–75, 77
 sons of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:307–10
 Jared, 1:5, 15 n6j, 29, 223, 258, 689, 907, 2:304
 in Jubilees, 2:40, 62, 93 n19g
See also Ared
 Jason of Cyrene, xxviii, 2:535, 540–41
 Javon (Javan), 2:69, 75, 307, 308, 309 n5c
 Jeremiah
 in 2 Baruch, 1:621–24, 631, 2:327 n19c
 in 3 Baruch, 1:653
 in 4 Baruch, 1:623 n10a, 2:413, 415–25
 in Eupolemus, 2:861, 871
 in 4 Ezra, 1:527
 in History of the Rechabites, 2:443, 445 n, 450, 454, 455
 lament for Josiah by, xxi
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:382, 383, 386–88
 in 2 Maccabees, 2:327 n19c
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:371
 Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:572 n
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:351
 vision of, 1:509 n1a
 Jeremiah (book)
 Ahikar and, 2:487
 Antichrist in, 1:767 n8b, 809 n5b
 4 Baruch and, 2:416, 417
 Doctrine of the Two Ways in, 1:816 n1a

Jeremiah (book) (Cont.)

History of the Rechabites and, 2:446, 455 n10d
 on Jacob as every brother, 2:706
 Jubilees and, 2:48
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:737 n5c
 Pseudo-Philo and, 2:301
 Testament of Solomon and, 1:951
 Jeremiah ben Eleazer, Rabbi, 1:659 n
 Jeremiel, 1:513 n6c, 531, 640 n55a
 Jeroboam, 1:642, 2:395, 397 n22b
 Jerome, 1:8, 231, 324 n, 2:79 n11i, 395 n19a, 397 n22d, 2:703 n
 apocalypticism opposed by, 1:584
 Ascension of Isaiah known by, 2:149
 God's name in, 2:217, 721 n1
 on Maccabees, 2:532, 533, 535
 Origen attacked by, 1:121 n11g, 139 n22b, 154 n31c

Jerusalem

Antichrist in, in Apocalypse of Elijah,
 1:748 n4w, 749
 in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:757, 767
 in 2 Baruch, 1:615–17, 621, 623–25, 648–49, 2:417
 as center for ingathering of last days, 2:645, 661–62
 as center of world, 2:720 ni
 descriptions of
 in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:498, 509–10
 in 1 Enoch, 1:26–27
 in Letter of Aristeas, 2:18–21, 918 ni, 918 nj
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:435 n111
 destruction and fall of, 2:854 n6b
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:685
 in 3 Baruch, 1:662–63
 in 4 Baruch, 2:413, 414, 417–20
 in Eldad and Modad, 2:464
 in 1 Enoch, 1:67–68
 in 4 Ezra, 1:520, 546–47
 in History of the Rechabites, 2:454
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:393
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:331, 344, 391
 star and comet before, 1:346 n2g
 given to gentiles by God, in 4 Ezra, 1:527
 God's love of, in Apocalypse of Sedrach,
 1:606, 611
 graves in, 2:398 n23d
 heavenly, 1:300 n48Ah
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:737 n1j2
 Aseneth as, 2:189
 in 2 Enoch, 1:182
 in 4 Ezra, 1:547–48
 joy of, in 3 Enoch, 1:300
 lamentation over, in 2 Baruch, 1:623–25, 632
 as Messiah's name, in Testament of Zebulon, 1:807
 in More Psalms of David, 2:621
 personification of, in Psalms of Solomon,
 2:651 n1
 Philo the Epic Poet on water supply of, 2:781, 784 prophecy of gentiles in, in Lives of the Prophets, 2:393
 Psalms of Solomon from, 2:641–42
 Ptolemy IV's visit to, in 3 Maccabees, 2:509, 513, 517–19, 521, 525
 restoration of
 in Revelations, 1:403 n5a4

in Sibylline Oracles, 1:392
 return of Jews to
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:742, 767, 768
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:645, 660, 667
 in Testament of Issachar, 1:804
 as Roman colony
 Psalms of Solomon and, 2:639, 641
 in Testament of Moses, 1:928 n3a, 930 n6g
 sex prohibited in, in Temple Scroll, 1:205 n71d
 Siloam spring in, in Lives of the Prophets,
 2:385–86
 See also New Jerusalem; Temple

Jesse, 1:987 n26f, 2:372
 as one of four righteous men, 2:375 n62c

Jesus Christ. See Christ, the Jethro, 2:805, 810 nw, 811 ny, 812 nd2, 853

Jewish Antiquities. See Josephus, Flavius, Jewish Antiquities

Jewish Wars. See Josephus, Flavius, Jewish Wars

Jews (Hebrews)
 angelic status of, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:191, 192, 194
 Antichrist supported by, in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:758, 768–70
 apocalypses of, 1:3
 apostate
 Antiochus IV's tolerance of, 2:46
 killing of, in 3 Maccabees and Deuteronomy,
 2:509, 515, 528
 Aseneth as symbol for, 2:189–90
 "Assyrians" used for, 1:434, 436
 Babylonian Captivity of. See Exile canonicity of writings of, xxiii, xxiv censuses of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:309–10, 322
 as chosen people. See also below in Dispersion (Diaspora)
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:684, 700, 704–5
 in 2 Baruch, 1:618
 in 3 Enoch, 1:257
 in 4 Ezra, 1:557, 559
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:677–78
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:190–91
 in Jubilees, 2:48, 92–93, 98
 in More Psalms of David, 2:624
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300, 352
 in Testament of Moses, 1:929
 as Christ-murderers, in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:686
 cloven hoof as symbolic of, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:23 nj2
 conversion to, expression for, 1:262 n7c dietary laws of. See Dietary practices of Jews in Dispersion (Diaspora)
 in 2 Baruch, 1:617–19, 621, 644
 in Jubilees, 2:53
 participation in sports and theater, 1:887 n10c
 revolt of A.D. 115, 1:390
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:344
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:792, 793, 801, 804, 807, 812
 early pictorial representation by, 2:562 n17b
 in Egypt. See Egypt, Jews in eschatological rule of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:349
 eulogy of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:375, 399–400
 false claims of being, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:413

- first known philosopher of, 2:834 Gnosticism of, 1:236, 714 n4b
 as God's assembly, in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:680
 God's promise to multiply, 2:322, 325, 678
 God's rejection of, until end of time, in Testament of Zebulon, 1:807 Hellenistic literature of, 1:836, 2:181, 183–84, 186–87, 195, 515. See also Greece, ancient Pseudo-Phocylides as, 2:565–66
 instruction for, in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:687, 688–89
 lambs as symbolic of, 1:467 n4e2
 at Last Judgment, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:351
 leprosy of, Manetho on, 2:901 n3e2
 as loyal subjects, in 3 Maccabees, 2:520 n3a
 Mark Antony supported by, 1:476
 missionary work of, 2:194–95, 566
 monotheism and polytheism together in community of, 2:586 n
 Palestinian vs. hellenistic, xxix persecution and plundering of by Caligula, 2:187 n, 511, 534
   in 4 Ezra, 1:559
   by Hadrian, 2:187, 533–34
   Jewish steadfastness vs., Hecataeus of Abdera on, 2:918
 Job in Aristeas the Exegete as example of, 2:856
   in 2 Maccabees, 2:534, 549–64
   in 3 Maccabees, 2:509, 519–27
   in 4 Maccabees, 2:531, 537
   in Sibylline Oracles, 1:349
   by Trajan, 1:449, 2:187
 piety of, at turn of the era (200 B.C.–A.D. 100), 2:631
 post-exilic pseudepigrapha of, xxviii–xxix praise of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:367–68
 rediscovery of "lost" literature by, xi–xii revolutionary mood of, 1:9
 role of rabbi among, 1:239
 universal domination of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:460
 universalistic form of belief of, 1:876–78
See also Hebrew language; Jerusalem; Marriage, mixed; Mysticism, Jewish; Rabbinic writings; Synagogue; specific holy days; specific writings
- Job
 Abraham compared to, in Testament of Abraham, 1:892
 Apocalypse of Sedrach and, 1:607
 in Aristeas the Exegete, 2:855–57, 859
 Dinah said to be wife of, 1:839 n/m, 2:314
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:687, 688, 693
 in patriarchal period, 2:856 n
 in Septuagint, 1:831
 Targum of, in Dead Sea Scrolls, xxvii Testament of. See Testament of Job
- Job (book)
 angelic rivalry in, 2:702 n, 703
 Aristeas the Exegete and, 2:855–56
 creation described in, 2:55 n2i
 Septuagint addition to, 2:856–57, 859
 Sibylline Oracles and, 1:417
 Testament of Job and, 1:831, 833, 835–36, 839 n1e, 840 n3d, 842 n9a, 842 n9b, 843 n10b, 843 n11a, 844 n13a, 844 n15a, 848 n23d, 854 n32n, 861 n41c, 862 n43g, 868 n53c, 868 n53f
 Ahiqar and, 2:404 nXg
 Jobab (Job's earlier name), 1:829, 839, 840, 846, 852–53, 855 n32o, 2:856, 859
 Joel (book)
   Prayer of Manasseh and, 2:630
   Testament of Jacob and, 1:801 n24b
- John
 Acts of. See Acts of John
 "Apocalypse" of, 1:760 n
 in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:609
 Apocryphon of. See Apocryphon of John
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:564, 572
- John (gospel)
 Apocalypse of Elijah and, 1:745 n3s
 "bread of life" in, 2:212 n8i
 1 Enoch and, 1:10
 2 Enoch and, 1:187 n61f
 3 Enoch and, 1:247
 ethical dualism of, 1:52 n30o
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:727–30, 732, 736 n3d, 736 n3f, 739 n6f, 742 n8k, 744 n11c, 746 n11c2, 746 n12a, 747 n12i, 749 n16d, 750 n16i, 752 n18i, 761 n28o, 762 n30d
- 1 John (epistle)
 Antichrist in, 1:567, 729
 Apocalypse of Elijah and, 1:722, 729, 732
 1 Enoch and, 1:10
2 John (epistle), Antichrist in, 1:567
3 John (epistle), canonicity of, xxiv
 John the Baptist, 1:383, 737 n1o2, 2:355 n42a, 383
   as angel, in Origen, 2:699
   in Lives of the Prophets, 2:380
 John the Evangelist (book)
   on Satan's face, 1:137 n22d
   on Satan's fall, 1:130 n18a, 149 n29j
 Jonadab, 2:447, 450, 454, 455, 461 n18a
 Jonah, 1:351, 526, 2:163, 526, 685
   in Lives of the Prophets, 2:379, 392–93
 Jordan River
   God's love of, in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:606, 611
   in Letter of Aristeas, 1:20
   in Lives of the Prophets, 2:397
 Josab (Joseb), 2:156–58, 161, 165, 171
 Joseph (son of Jacob)
   Ahiqar and, 2:484
   in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:609
   Artapanus on, 2:889, 894, 897–98
   Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:845, 849–52
   dreams interpreted by
     in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:207
     in Jubilees, 2:129–30
     in Pseudo-Philo, 2:314
   dreams of, 1:812 n5b, 814, 824
     Moses' dream in Ezekiel the Tragedian compared to, 2:811 n2
   in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:693
   History of. See History of Joseph
   in Jubilees, 2:36, 111, 120–22, 128–30
   Life of, 2:180 n, 196
   in 4 Maccabees, 2:546, 563

- Joseph (son of Jacob) (Cont.)
 name of, 1:310 n48Bb
 in Philo the Epic Poet, 2:784
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:313–15
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:434 n11g
 in Testament of Jacob, 1:913–17
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:782–87, 792, 793, 801, 805–8, 811–16, 825, 826. See also Testament of Joseph
 tribe of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:317, 338
See also Joseph and Aseneth
- Joseph and Aseneth (book), 2:607, 723 n12
 History of Joseph and, 2:468, 470
 introduction to, 2:177–201
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:745 n11q, 745 n11u
 Prayer of Joseph and, 2:711 n
 Prayer of Manasseh and, 2:631
 Testament of Abraham and, 1:877, 878
 text of, 2:202–47
- Josephus, Flavius, xi–xii, xxvi, xxx, xxxi, 2:184
 abbreviations of works of, xlviii
Against Apion (Apion), 1:375 n3v3, 509 n1b, 2:202 n1e, 216 n10v, 577 n85g, 580 n179e, 781, 790 n1a, 870 n34a2
 abortion condemned, 2:580 n185i
 castration in, 2:581 n187k
 on circumcision in Egypt, 2:899 n3s
 on Cleopatra, 1:440 n11y2
 on Demetrius the Chronographer, 2:844 n
 dowry in, 2:581 n200t
 Greek authors in, 2:862, 883
 on Hecataeus of Abdera, 2:905–6, 909, 913–16
 honor to old age in, 2:582 n222e
 on Jews' acceptance of torture, 2:856
 on Moses, 2:892, 902 n3t2
 Pseudo-Phocylides as parallel to, 2:566
 on Ptolemy IX's supposed outrage, 2:510–11
- Jewish Antiquities* (Ant.), 1:358 n, 364, 484 n7k, 712 n1a, 847 n20f, 928 n2e, 929 n5c, 970 n8a, 2:216 n10b2, 325 n8a, 353 n40h, 370 n55d, 717, 874, 876
 on Abdon, 2:355 n41a
 on Abraham as astrologer, 2:876–77
 on "Abram's abode," 2:312 n6m
 on Adam and Seth, 1:715 n5c, 719 n8d, 994 n3a, 2:292 n50a
 altar of incense in, 1:623 n6e
 Apocryphon of Ezekiel in, 1:488, 489, 493 n1b
 Artapanus used by, 2:894–95
 on Balaam, 2:325 n18n, 326 n18v
 on books of Ezekiel, 1:488
 on Cain and Abel, 2:293 n40d
 caves as refuges in, 1:931 n9f
 Cleodemus Malchus in, 2:883, 887
 on Daniel, 2:389 n4a, 390 n4g
 on different beliefs of sects, 2:642, 645
 on Egyptian Jews, 1:355 n, 358 n, 2:215 n9fd
 end of time in, 1:567, 576 n4p, 2:338 n26h
 fragments of pseudo-Greek poets in, 2:822
 on Hecataeus of Abdera, 2:905, 907, 909, 911
 on Herod's memorial to David, 2:381
 on Jehoiachin, 1:621 n1a, 621 n1c
 on Joad (Jadon), 2:395 n19a
 on Joseph, 2:202 n1i, 203 n1j, 209 n6r, 314 n8j, 897 n2c
 Kenaz in, 2:335 n25c, 341 n27g, 393 n10g
 Korah's rebellion in, 2:323 n16c
 on land of Sir, 2:388 n3a
 Letter of Aristeas in, 2:8, 16 nm
 Life of Adam and Eve and, 2:252, 292 n50a
 list of high priests, 1:511 n3c
 on location of David's city, 2:386 n1p
 on Moses, 2:326 n19a, 328 n19u, 809 nh, 809 nm, 809 np, 818 n3i, 899 n3r, 901 n3h2, 901 n3k2, 901 n3o2, 902 n3t2, 903 n3x2, 903 n3y2
 on Noah and the Flood, 1:338 n1m, 340 n1t, 341 n1u, 713 n3g, 992
 on plagues of Egypt, 2:814 nm2
 on Pompey's profanation of Temple, 2:659 n8n
 Prayer of Manasseh in, 2:632
 on produce of the land, 2:212 n8i
 Pseudo-Philo and, 2:302
 on Rome's protection of Jerusalem, 2:651 n2
 Samson's mother in, 2:355 n42d
 on Saul's reign, 2:371 n58a, 372 n58c, 372 n58d, 476 n63b, 377 n64l
 on Shechem destroyed, 1:790 n6c
 on snake's former limbs, 2:285 n26d
 on Solomon, 1:943 n, 946–47, 962 n1k, 2:867 n30t
 tax remission in, 1:744 n2r3
 "three philosophies," 1:778
 on Tower of Babel, 2:312 n6k
 on visionary appearances of historical personages, 2:225 n14p
 world cycles in, 1:332 n
 Zenon Cotylas in, 2:352 m29e
- Jewish Wars* (War) 1:349, 355 n, 375, 377, 379, 405, 484 n7k, 662 nh
 on Essenes, 1:384 n4c, 738 n1z2, 852 n28g, 860 n40b, 876, 940, 945, 961 n1h
 on Eupolenus as ambassador, 2:865 n1a
 on fall of Jerusalem, 1:346 n2g, 623 n6e, 623 n8a, 2:659 n8o, 659 n8p
 on Jehoiachin, 1:621 n1c
 on Jacob's opponent, 2:707
 4 Maccabees and, 2:531, 533
 on Pharisees, 1:876
 on Philometer, 2:355 n
 Siloam spring in, 2:385 n1i
 soul as loan from God in, 2:578 n106h
 on Temple, 1:477 n, 2:870 n34t
- Joshua
 in Assumption of Moses, 1:868 n52j
 in 2 Baruch, 1:641
 Book of. See Joshua (book)
 Books of the Mysteries held by, 1:949 n
 in 3 Enoch, 1:297, 315
 Eupolemus on, 2:866
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:684, 685, 687, 694
 as identical in Greek with "Jesus," 2:687 n8h Psalms of. See Psalms of Joshua
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:323, 328–34, 335, 343, 346
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:351
 in Testament of Moses, 1:919, 927, 933–34
- Joshua (book)
 2 Baruch and, 1:619
 Doctrine of the Two Ways in, 1:816 n1a

- 3 Enoch and, 1:246
 lost book mentioned in, xxi
 Pseudo-Philo and, 2:297
 Testament of Moses and, 1:933 n10e
- Josiah, 454, 685
 in 2 Baruch, 1:643–44
 lament for, by Jeremiah, xxi
- Joy
 Christ's bringing of, in Odes of Solomon, 2:762 for holy ones, in Odes of Solomon, 2:755, 763 for persons who are saved, in 4 Ezra, 1:541 rivers of, in 3 Enoch, 1:305
 Syriac Menander on, 2:591, 603–5
- Juba II (king), 2:884–85, 887 nc, 887 nd
- Jubal, 2:307
- Jubilees (book), 1:4, 2:607, 786
 Aristobulus and, 2:841 n5a
 2 Baruch and, 1:634 n44a
 calendar in, 1:634 n44a
 in Dead Sea Scrolls (11QJub), 2:43, 61 n4b–f, 62 n4h, 62 n4i, 63 n4p, 81 n12e, 81 n12f,
 82 n12g, 82 n12h, 92 n19a, 96 n21e–g,
 97 n21h, 99 n23a, 99 n23b, 100 n23c,
 100 n23d, 100 n23h, 100 n23k, 101 n23m,
 108 n23d, 122 n23c, 124 n36a, 137 n46a
- Eldad and Modad and, 2:465
 1 Enoch and, 1:8, 10, 2:49
 2 Enoch and, 1:155 n32c
 in Ethiopian canon, xxiv
 Ethiopic Apocalypse of Ezra and, 1:563
 fallen angels in, 1:9, 784 n5a, 955
 History of the Rechabites and, 2:446
 introduction to, 2:35–51
 Life of Adam and Eve and, 2:302
 Noachian law and, 2:569 n
 other names of, xxii, 2:37
 Prayer of Joseph and, 2:706 n, 710 n, 711
 Testament of Job and, 1:859 n39c
 Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:780, 784 n5a, 785 n6d, 796 n3a, 797 n9a, 2:49
 text of, 2:52–142
 Treatise of Shem and, 1:475 n, 476–78, 481 n1a
- Judah
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:848, 849, 851
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:177, 245
 in Jubilees, 2:36, 37, 110, 114–16, 120, 122, 127, 130–31, 135, 136
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300, 315
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:779, 782, 784, 785, 787, 788, 791, 804, 806,
 809, 814–15. See also Testament of Judah
 in Naphtali's dreams, 1:812, 813
 tribe of, 1:714 n4c, 2:389
 not taken captive, Demetrius the Chronogra-
 pher on, 2:854, 871 n5a
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:317, 330, 335, 338
- Judah (kingdom)
 Book of the Annals of the Kings of, xxi
 history of, in 1 Enoch, 1:67–68
 Judah on, in Testament of Judah, 1:799 kings of, in 3 Enoch, 1:297
 tax remission for, 1:744 n2r3
- Judah, Rab, 1:264 n11c, 265 n13c, 282 n27g
- Judaism. See Jews
- Judas Iscariot
 Ahiqar and, 2:487
 in Resurrection of Jesus Christ by Bartholomew
 the Apostle, 1:862 n43d
- Judas Maccabeus, 2:44, 544 n1h
 Eupolemus and, 2:863, 865 n1a, 874, 878
 fabricated letter supposedly from, 2:832–33
- Jude (book)
 canonicity of, xxiv
 controversial sources of, ix
 1 Enoch referred to in, ix, xxiv, 8, 14 n1v, 14 n1w, 14 n1y
 2 Enoch and, 1:95 n, 113 n7d
 Moses books and, ix, 1:566, 924
- Judea
 in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:757, 767
 description of, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:20–21
 prayer for, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:401
- Judges (book)
 Dan linked with Antichrist by, 1:809 n5b
 in 1 Enoch, 1:67
 Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:184–85
 Lives of the Prophets and, 2:395
 Pseudo-Philo and, 2:297, 300, 349, 357
- Judgment
 chariots of throne of, in 3 Enoch, 1:309
 as<sup>c</sup> circle, in 4 Ezra, 1:533
 of gentiles by Israel, 1:890 n13c
 immediately after death, 1:245
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:871, 875, 878, 889–91, 900–901
See also Heaven, law court of; Last Judgment
- Judith (book), xxvii, 2:184, 186, 490, 2:786
 meals in, 2:212 n8i
- Justice
 in heavenly law court, 1:285
 in Letter of Aristeas, 2:23–27, 31, 32
 in Noachian law, 2:569
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:569, 574–77
 Shamash as administrator of, 2:545, 546
 Sibylline Oracles on, 1:345–48
- Justin (Justin Martyr), 1:8, 328 nm, 380 n3e4, 384, 424, 967 n6b, 2:433 n, 707 n
 Apocryphon of Ezekiel in, 1:488, 489, 495
 Justinian, 1:121 n11g, 139 n22p, 154 n31c, 956 n
- Karshuni language
 Ahiqar in, 2:480
 History of the Rechabites in, 2:447
 Testament of Adam in, 1:989, 990
- Kasia, 1:839, 864–68
 Hymns of (book), 1:860 n401, 866
- Kenan (Kenān), 1:29, 907, 2:61, 93 n19g, 2:304
- Kenaz, 2:393
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300, 301, 313, 329–30, 335–42, 343, 363
 Vision of, 2:46
- Ketubot (book), 1:255 n1b, 266 n14a, 272 n18t, 285 n31f, 625 n10i
 on resurrection and Palestine, 1:855 n33i
- Keturah, 2:92–94, 100, 811 nx, 2:853
 Cleodemus Malchus on, 2:883–85, 887
- Keystone prophecy (Ps. 118:22), 1:936, 954, 984, 985
- Kiddushin (book), 1:281 n26m, 865 n47i
 balanced deeds in, 1:891 n14a
- Kingdoms
 first, in Jubilees, 2:78
 fourth, in 4 Ezra vs. Daniel, 1:550 n12b
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:354, 371–74, 376
 twelve, in Apocalypse of Adam, 1:714 n4d

- Kings (rulers)
 advice to, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:25–32 “cedars” as references to, 2:506 nXIIe
 demon for deposing of, in Testament of Solomon, 1:970
 of gentiles, in 3 Enoch, 1:298
 God’s maintenance of, in 4 Maccabees, 2:538, 557 humiliation of
   in 1 Enoch, 1:35–36
   in Sibylline Oracles, 1:466
 ideal (messianic), in Sibylline Oracles, 1:355–57
 of Jews. See Israel, kings of; Judah; Judah (kingdom) of judgment, in Ladder of Jacob, 2:409–10 judgment and punishment of
   in 2 Baruch, 1:633
   in 1 Enoch, 1:34–35, 37, 38, 43–44
   in 4 Ezra, 1:556
   in Vision of Ezra, 1:589
 majesty of, in Ahiqar, 2:485, 501 mercy of, in Ahiqar, 2:484–85
 as monsters
   in Lives of the Prophets, 2:390
   in Testament of Judah, 1:800–801
 obedience to, in Ahiqar, 2:500
 of peace
   in Ahiqar, 2:485, 501
   in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:740–41
 phoenix’s excrement related to, 1:670 n6i, 671
 pride of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:460, 461 promiscuous, in Testament of Judah, 1:799 purple robes of, 1:859 n39d
 righteous, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:731
 in Testament of Job, 1:829, 852–59
 ungodly, in Ladder of Jacob, 2:409 words of, in Ahiqar, 2:500, 501
See also Messiah; Savior; Social injustice
- Kings (both books)
 Lives of the Prophets and, 2:382, 383
 Pseudo-Philo and, 2:371, 376
- 1 Kings (book)
 Chronicles books and, 1:860 n40l
 2 Enoch and, 1:200 n69z
 3 Enoch and, 1:244, 246
 Eupolemus and, 2:862
 Jubilees and, 2:48
 lost books mentioned in, xxi
 Martyrdom of Isaiah and, 2:150
 Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:572 n
 rain-making in, 1:476
 “still small voice” in, 1:306 n22Cm
 Testament of Solomon and, 1:940, 945, 947, 948, 951, 954, 956, 957, 970 n8j
- 2 Kings (book)
 4 Baruch and, 2:416
 Chronicles books and, 1:860 n40l
 Demetrius the Chronographer and, 2:854 n6b-d, 854 n6f
 2 Enoch and, 1:103 n1ad
 3 Enoch and, 1:246, 261 n6e
 Jehoiachin in, 1:621 n1c
 Jubilees and, 2:48
 Martyrdom of Isaiah and, 2:150
- Kissing, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:211–12, 233–35
- Knowledge
 acquisition of, as making men godlike,
   1:139 n22q
 God as Father of, in Odes of Solomon, 2:740
 of good and evil. See also Tree of life
   in Sibylline Oracles, 1:336, 424
 good listener’s acquisition of, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:28 heavenly teaching of. See also Heaven, academy in, in 3 Enoch, 1:312–13 man’s love of, in Life of Adam and Eve,
   2:253, 268
 Men of, in SeperHaRazim, 1:315 n48Dv
 secret. See Gnosticism; Merkabah mysticism
See also God, truth of; Truth; Wisdom
 Kokabi’el, 1:16 n6n, 247, 267, 269 n17g, 270
 Korah, 2:163, 301, 313, 323–24, 325 n18k, 371
 Koran
   Ahiqar and, 2:491
   Enoch identified with Idris of, 1:226
   2 Enoch compared to, 1:155 n32b
   Hārūt and Mārūt in, 1:157 n33l, 985 n25a
   Jesus as infant prodigy in, 1:207 n71l
   Paradise in, 1:115 n8c, 155 n32b
   Satan’s fall in, 2:253, 255, 262 n12a
   See also Islam
- Laban, 1:805 n1a, 407, 2:705
 in Demetrius the Chronographer, 2:848, 849, 852
 in Jubilees, 2:92, 105, 109–12
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:313, 324
 in Testament of Jacob, 1:913, 914
 in Testament of Naphtali, 1:811
 in Theodotus, 2:791
- Laborers, fairness to
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:574
 Sibylline Oracles on, 1:437
- Lactantius, 1:327, 328 nl, 331, 380 n3f4, 416, 469, 725
 apocalypticism of, 1:584
Divinarium Institutionem, 1:351 n2t2, 406, 408
   Book of Solomon in, 1:976 n5h
   Sibyls in, 1:320 n, 328 nf, 328 nh, 328 nm328, 371 n3d3371
Epitome Institutionem, 1:322
Institutiones, 1:940 n
- Ladder of Jacob (book), xxii, 1:682, 689 n2a, 2:707 *n
 face of fire in, 1:137 n22d, 2:407
 introduction to, 2:401–6
 text of, 2:407–11
- Lake Acheron, 2:249, 251–53, 289–91, 823
 in Greek tradition, 2:291 n37c
- Lambs
 in 1 Enoch, 1:69–70
 of Passover, in Jubilees, 2:140–41
 as symbolic of Jews, 1:467 n14e2
- Lamech (Lamekh), 1:689, 827, 907, 970 n8d, 2:63, 71
 Apocryphon of, xxii
 first son of. See Noah
- Lamentations
 by animals, in Testament of Job, 1:859 n39c, 860
 literary quality of, 1:850 n25a
 in Pseudo-Philo, 3:334, 354

- Lame persons
 healing of
   in Apocryphon of Ezekiel, 1:495
   in Sibylline Oracles, 1:423
 ridicule of, in 4 Ezra, 1:527
 story of lame man and blind man, 1:487, 492–94
- Languages
 future one, in Testament of Judah, 1:802
 number of, 1:270 n17r, 284
See also Tower of Babel; specific languages
- Last Judgment (Great Judgment)
 by angels, in 1 Enoch, 1:73
 animals' charges at, in 2 Enoch, 1:184–85
 by Anointed One, in 2 Baruch, 1:618
 by Christ
   in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:770
   in Questions of Ezra, 1:599
   in Sibylline Oracles, 1:346, 351, 423–24
 by Elect One, in 1 Enoch, 1:34, 36–38
 by Elijah, in Lives of the Prophets, 2:383
 as end point of history
   in 2 Enoch, 1:162 n39b, 192–93
   in 4 Ezra, 1:541
 forces prepared for, 1:789 n3a
 by God
   in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:704
   in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:731, 752
   in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:502, 504
   in Apocryphon of Ezekiel, 1:489, 492–94
   in 2 Baruch, 1:618, 649, 652
   in 1 Enoch, 1:13–14, 26, 27, 30–31, 47, 81–83
   in 2 Enoch, 1:192–94, 219
   in 4 Ezra, 1:521, 534, 538–41
   in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:566, 573–76
   Greek poets (possibly) on, 2:828–29
   in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:294
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 307
   in Sibylline Oracles, 1:350, 351, 378–79, 385, 389, 424, 427
   in Testament of Abraham, 1:871, 890
   in Testament of Benjamin, 1:828
 by Messiah, xxxii, 1:70–71, 752 5nx2
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:752–53
 in 1 Enoch, 1:9
 not present in 3 Enoch, 1:283 n28g
 preparation of, in 4 Ezra, 1:539
 records at, 1:133 n19d
   in 2 Enoch, 1:180–81
 righteous ones at, in 1 Enoch, 1:85 righteous ones' escape from, in 2 Enoch, 1:194–95, 221
 signs of, 1:629 n25a
 sinners waiting for, in 1 Enoch, 1:25
 sins condemned at, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:330 weighing in the balance at, in 2 Enoch, 1:170–73
See also Christ, the, second coming of; Heaven, law court of
- Latin language
 1 Enoch in, 1:6
 in 3 Enoch, 1:225, 228
 4 Ezra in, 1:518, 520
 Jannes and Jambres in, 2:431
 Joseph and Aseneth in, 1:179, 181, 198, 200
 Jubilees in, 1:41, 42, 50
- Life of Adam and Eve in, 2:250–52
 Lives of the Prophets in, 2:379
 Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah in, 1:144–46, 150
 Pseudo-Philo in, 2:298–99
 Revelation of Ezra in, 1:601
 Shepherd of Hermes Vision in, 2:463
 Testament of Moses in, 1:919–21
 Vision of Ezra in, 1:581–82
- Law
 belief in God is to live by, 1:633 n42a
 description of
   in Jubilees, 2:38
   in Letter of Aristeas, 2:21–24
 destruction of transgressors of, in 3 Maccabees and Deuteronomy, 2:509, 515, 528 disregard of
   in 2 Baruch, 1:637, 646
   in 4 Ezra, 1:537, 539, 544
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 318
   in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:793–94, 812
 as divine gift to Israel, in 4 Ezra, 1:521, 529, 545
 doctors of, in Vision of Ezra, 1:589 doctrine of two ways and, in Testament of Asher, 1:818 n5a
 as eternal
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 318
   in Theodotus, 2:788
 glory of, in 4 Ezra, 1:545
 Greek philosophers' knowledge of Aristobulus on, 2:831, 839, 840
 how king can follow, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:28 immortality of, in 2 Baruch, 1:618, 647 innate. See Innate law; Noachian laws lamp of (light of)
   in 2 Baruch, 1:627, 641
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 319, 327
   in Testament of Levi, 1:793
 love as fulfillment of
   in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:609
   in Testament of Dan, 1:815–16
 natural law and, in Testament of Naphtali, 1:779 not emphasized in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:194 praise of devotion to
   in Jubilees, 2:38, 40
   in 4 Maccabees, 2:532, 538, 550–53
   in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:792–93, 795, 802, 809, 810, 818, 822, 828 reason compatible with, in 4 Maccabees, 2:546–47 remembrance of
   in 2 Baruch, 1:651
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:330–31, 343
 replaced by love, in Odes of Solomon, 730–31 request for instruction in, in More Psalms of David, 2:622, 623 reward to keepers of (obedience to)
   in 4 Ezra, 1:540
   in Jubilees, 2:38, 45
   in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:801, 821
 son of, in 2 Baruch, 1:635

- Law (Cont.)
 tablets of
 legend that writing fled from, 2:320 n12d
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:320, 321, 338, 368
 trust in, in 2 Baruch, 1:636
 whether written by God or Moses, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:336
 as wisdom, in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:780
 as written by Moses, in Eupolemus, 2:865 yoke of, in 2 Baruch, 1:633
See also Moses, on Mount Sinai; Torah; Ten Commandments
- Leah
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:848, 849, 851
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:239
 in Jubilees, 2:109–111, 119, 120, 125, 126, 135
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:313
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:782, 785, 788, 795, 802, 805
 in Theodotus, 2:785, 791
- Leo IV (emperor), 1:757 n, 758, 765 n3r, 766 n6b
- Leprosy
 cleansing of
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:398
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321
 as disease of Jews, Manetho on, 2:901 n3e2
 in More Psalms of David, 2:624
- Letter of Aristeas (Epistle of Aristeas), 1:357, 831, 2:5, 184, 247 n29c, 398 n23g, 490 n, 513, 784 n4–6h–j
 Aristeas the Exegete's work and, 2:857
 Aristobulus and, 2:835, 839 n3b, 841 n4g
 Artapanus and, 2:894
 Ezekiel the Tragedian possibly criticized in, 2:804
 Hecataeus of Abdera quoted in, 2:15, 905, 906, 911–12
 3 Maccabees and, 2:512, 515–16, 526 n6a
- Levi
 apocryphal fragments about, 2:95 n21b–d
 Books of the Mysteries held by, 1:949 n
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:848–52
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:177, 182, 191, 193, 239–41, 244–47
 in Jubilees, 2:35–37, 45, 110, 112–17, 120, 121, 128, 135
 in 4 Maccabees, 2:546
 Prayer of, 1:778
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:314
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:786, 787, 796, 801, 809. See also Testament of Levi curse suppressed, 1:787 n5d
 Naphtali's dreams, 1:812, 813
 priest, 1:248, 779, 780, 784–85, 788–92, 800, 804
 in Theodotus, 2:785, 786, 793
 tribe of
 not taken captive, Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:854, 971 n5a
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:317, 322, 335, 338, 359
See also Priesthood
- Leviathan, 1:964 n2l
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:684, 694, 699
 in 2 Baruch, 1:630
 in 1 Enoch, 1:40
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:402, 404, 410
- Leviticus (book)
 atonement in, 2:539
 Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:572 n, 580 n181f
- Lies (false testimony)
 in Ahiqar, 2:503, 505
 in Assyrian law, 2:505 nXl
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:753
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:358, 359
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:570, 574
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:339, 346, 351
 Syriac Menander on, 2:596, 597
- Life
 adherence to Judaism as, 2:234 n19m
 books of, 1:889 n12d
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:190, 226
 in Testament of Jacob, 1:918
 both bad and good in, in Syriac Menander, 2:585, 603, 605 garden of, in 1 Enoch, 1:115 n8b
 garments of, in 3 Enoch, 1:274
 injustice as negation of, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:27 instability of, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:570, 575, 578
 tree of. See Tree of life
 as wheel, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:575
- Life of Adam and Eve (Vita Adae et Evae; Apocalypse of Moses), 1:4, 514 n9a Apocalypse of Adam and, 1:710 end of time in, 1:567
 introduction to, 2:249–57
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:736 n4a, 767 n38j
 provenance of, 1:875, 2:252
 Satan in, 1:568, 607, 660
 in Slavonic 3 Baruch, 1:654 Testament of Adam and, 1:992, 994 n3a
 text of, 2:258–95
- Life of Aesop (book), 2:184, 480, 491, 507 nXIII f
- Light
 in creation
 in 2 Enoch, 1:104 n1a1, 143–47, 143 n25a
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:691
 in Jubilees, 2:55
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:373
 eternal
 in 1 Enoch, 1:39–40
 in Questions of Ezra, 1:596
 God's hiding from as impossible, in 2 Enoch, 1:172–73
 heavenly
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:224
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:758
 in History of the Rechabites, 2:456
 at Jesus' baptism, 1:194 n67a
 salvation by, in Odes of Solomon, 2:743–46
 sublime, in Questions of Ezra, 1:597 various usages of, 1:715 n6b
See also Heaven, luminaries of; Sun
- Lightning
 angels of
 in 3 Enoch, 1:267
 in Jubilees, 2:55
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:346
 in Testament of Adam, 1:995
 fighting on side of Israel

- in Ladder of Jacob, 2:410
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:344
- God's control of
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321
in Sibylline Oracles, 1:428, 461
- God's eyes described as, in Ladder of Jacob, 2:408
- headless demon thwarted by, 1:971
- secrets of
in 1 Enoch, 1:32, 33, 40, 41
in 2 Enoch, 1:148, 166–67
in 3 Enoch, 1:293
- in Sinai, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:318
- splendor of, in 2 Baruch, 1:642
- storehouse of
in 1 Enoch, 1:49
in 3 Enoch, 1:240, 290
- wind of, in 3 Enoch, 1:307
- Lilith, on incantation bowls, 1:967 n5p, 974 n13a
- Lion
- Antichrist as, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:740
- devil as
in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:221–22
in 1 Peter, 1:963 n2f
- fable of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:361–62
- heart of, in 3 Enoch, 1:303
- Messiah as, in 4 Ezra, xxxii, 1:549, 550
- Lions
punishment by, in Testament of Isaac, 1:908–9
in Vision of Ezra, 1:581, 587
- Lion-Shaped Demon, 1:936, 954, 955, 972–73
- Liturgy
by angels. See Angels, singing and liturgy by synagogue, Merkabah mysticism and, 1:251–52
See also Baptism; Priesthood; Temple
- Lives of the Prophets, the (book)
4 Baruch and, 2:384, 415, 417
- Logos (Word)
in Apocalypse of Adam, 1:718 n7q
in Aristobulus, 2:834–35, 840
Christ as identified with, 2:675, 677, 683
as first begotten, in Philo, 2:674 n, 701
in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:674–75, 690
in History of the Rechabites, 2:443, 446, 457–58
in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:190, 213, 220 n12p
in Odes of Solomon, 2:728, 740, 743, 746–47, 749, 750, 763, 766, 770
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:373
as “speech” in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:578 n128a
in Wisdom of Solomon, 2:695 n14a
- Lord
of Glory
in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:735
in 1 Enoch, 1:25–27, 29, 32, 44, 54, 62, 73, 735 nli
of Heaven (god), 4:485–86
of the Spirits, in 1 Enoch, 1:31–44, 49
See also Christ, the; God; Messiah
- Lot, 1:907, 2:693
in Genesis, 1:136 n21e
in Jubilees, 2:80, 82–84, 88
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:309, 310
in Testament of Abraham, 1:885, 898
- Love
Apocalypse of Sedrach on, 1:607, 609
by brothers, in 4 Maccabees, 2:558
of enemies, 2:247 n29c
by God. See God, love shown by
in History of the Rechabites, 2:458
law replaced by, 2:730–31
Sibylline Oracles on, 1:346, 429
Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs on, 1:779, 780, 785, 804 n7a, 815–16, 823, 826
- Lubar, Mount, 2:66, 68, 69, 76
- Lucian (Greek writer), 1:320, 847 n20f, 849 n23e, 851 n27d
on “island of the Blessed Ones,” 2:447
- Lucian of Antioch, 1:806 n4b, 2:333 n23f, 341 n27g, 510
- Lucifer
fall of, Origen on, 1:139 n22p
See also Satan
- Lucius Verus, 1:394 n5t, 419 n8i, 450 n12j2, 462 n14i
- Lud, 2:69, 75, 308, 310
- Luke (gospel)
Ahiqar and, 2:487, 488, 504 nXb, 505 nXg
Apocalypse of Daniel and, 1:763 nlg
Apocalypse of Zephaniah and, 1:501
1 Enoch and, 1:10
4 Ezra and, 1:522
Jesus' polemics against reciprocity principle in, 2:579 n152i
Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:186, 195
Jubilees and, 2:49
Lazarus in, 2:539
Odes of Solomon and, 2:759 n28a
Pseudo-Philo and, 2:302
Sibylline Oracles and, 1:330, 370 n3o2
Testament of Solomon and, 1:955
- m. (before a rabbinic text) means that it is from the Mishnah. See Mishnah or next element of reference
- Ma'aseh Bere'sit (Account of Creation), 1:229–30, 235, 239, 270 n17i, 292 n41a
- Ma'aseh Merkabah, 1:230–26, 238, 240, 250, 255 n1d, 256 n1m, 273 n18a2
angels in, 1:243–45, 271 n18f, 273 n18d2
3 Enoch fragments in, 1:304 n22Ba, 304 n22Bc-f, 305 n22Ca, 305 n22Cd, 306 n22Cg-j
- Rabbi Ishmael in, 1:255 n1b
- Maccabean period
Antiochus Epiphanes and, 2:9
denunciation of priesthood in, in Testament of Levi, 1:793 n14a
in 1 Enoch, 1:69–70
Essene-Maccabean split in, 2:44, 49
Eupolemus and, 2:863, 865 n1a
in 4 Maccabees, 2:544 n1h
Samaria in, 2:913
Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs and, 1:778
tithes to priesthood in, 2:914, 915, 917
- 1 Maccabees (book), xxi–xxii, xxvii, 2:886
- 3 Maccabees and, 2:513
- Samaria in, 2:913
- Testament of Job and, 1:850 n25a
- 2 Maccabees (book), xxi–xxii, xxvii, 1:873
- Aristobulus and, 2:832–33, 837
- 4 Baruch and, 2:415, 417
- Eleazar in, 2:526 n6a
“holy land” in, 2:328 n19m

- 2 Maccabees (book) (Cont.)
 Lives of the Prophets and, 2:384
 3 Maccabees and, 2:512–16
 4 Maccabees and, 2:533, 537, 539–41, 548 n4b
 martyrs in, 2:149, 150
- 3 Maccabees (book), xxi, 1:432, 873, 875, 2:184, 607
- 4 Maccabees (book), xxi, 1:873
 Eleazar in, 2:526 n6a
 resurrection in, xxxiii, 2:539
 Testament of Job and, 1:846 n18d
- Macedonia
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:381, 382, 386, 401, 402, 418, 430, 436–37, 439
See also Alexander the Great
- Madai, 2:69, 71, 75, 77, 307–9
- Magi (Three Wise Men)
 astrology and, 1:478–79, 480 n
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:410
 loss of power of, at birth of Jesus, 1:975 n15e
 in Tale of Aphroditianus, 2:405
 in Testament of Adam, 1:994
- Magic (sorcery; witchcraft)
 definition of sorcerer in, 2:717 n
 Egyptian. See also Jannes and Jambres
 in Jubilees, 2:139
- Ephesus as center of, 1:943
 practice of
 as crime in Rome, 1:956
 in 1 Enoch, 1:45, 75 n94c
 late ancient increase in, 2:717 n
 in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:158
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 348, 376–77
 Pseudo-Phocylides' warning against, 2:579
 in Testament of Job, 1:865 n47i
 Testament of Solomon and, 1:938, 943–47
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs,
 1:801, 805 n1a
- punishment for
 in 2 Enoch, 1:118–19
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:352
- religion compared to, 2:716
- teaching of
 in 1 Enoch, 1:16
 in 3 Enoch, 1:260
 in Koran, 1:1157 n33l
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:348
- See also* Aaron; Incantation bowls; Incantation texts; Jannes and Jambres (book); Papyri, magical; Theurgy
- Mahalalel, 1:29, 61, 907, 2:61, 93, 304
- Maimonides, 1:287 n34b, 288 n35h, 303 n15Bc, 949 n on hierarchy of angels, 1:135 n20a, 242 n on intermediate souls, 1:292 n44a
 stars as sentient beings in, 1:299 n46b
- Man (mankind)
 as adaptable as polyp, 2:575 n49a
 angelic mediation between God and, in Colossian "heresy," 1:246
 angelic opposition to, 1:303 n15Be
 in Bere'sit Rabbah, 2:345 n32d
 in 3 Enoch, 1:241, 255–56, 258–62, 315
 in Ma'yan Hokmah, 1:314 n48Dj
 in Merkabah texts, 1:260 n5l
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:345
 angelic worship of, in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 262 compared to seeds and plants, in 4 Ezra, 1:543 compared to stars, in Ahiqar, 2:502 creation of. See also Adam; Adam and Eve; God, as Creator
 in 2 Enoch, 1:150–52
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:679, 692
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 268
 in 4 Maccabees, 2:538, 546
 Syriac Menander on, 2:585, 602
 as defiled and unclean, in 3 Enoch, 1:315 dependency on God by, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:190–91
 dual nature of. See also Dualism; Souls
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:565, 577–78
 everything made for sake of
 in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:610
 in Questions of Ezra, 1:599
 evil heart of, in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 275 fellowship of angels and, 1:855 n33d, 718 n, 723 ni2
 as flesh, in 1 Enoch, 1:14, 21, 22, 42, 62, 87
 God's humiliation of, as not eternal, in Syriac Menander, 2:585, 595
 as husbandman's seed, in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:576–77
 as image (facsimile) of God, 2:578 n106h
 in 2 Enoch, 1:97, 170–71, 190–91
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:679, 692
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 262, 268 n27a, 272–75, 289
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:307
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:570, 578
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:427
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:910
 inequality among, 1:170 n43h
 lamentation for, in 4 Ezra, 1:541
 life-stages of, in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:613 made for the sake of God, in Questions of Ezra, 1:599 Noahian laws as valid for whole of, 2:568–69 odor of, in 3 Enoch, 1:261
 pleading for. See also Sinners, pleas for mercy to
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:571
 rationality of, 2:674, 679, 685–86
 senses of, in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:778 as special creation of God, in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:565
See also Adam; Human nature; Son of Man
- Manasseh (son of Hezekiah), 1:511 n3c
 in 2 Baruch, 1:643
 God's forgiveness of, in 2 Chronicles, x, xi
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:685
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:385
 in Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah, 2:143, 148, 151, 156–60, 163–64, 176
 Prayer of. See Prayer of Manasseh
 in Talmud, 2:151
- Manasseh (son of Joseph)
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:850
 half-tribe of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:331, 335, 336
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:182, 236, 247 n29i
 in Jubilees, 2:35, 135
 in Testament of Jacob, 1:913, 915–16
- Mandean texts
 Merkabah texts and, 1:253

- Solomon and demons in, 1:943 n, 946
 Ziwa' Rabba' in, 1:314 n48Dg
- Manetho, 1:140 n22r, 2:845
- Artapanus and, 2:890–92, 894, 902 n3v2
 on Jews as lepers, 2:901 ne2
- Manichaeanism
 Book of Giants in, 1:7 n
 Jacob as angel in, 2:718 n
 Psalmbook of, 1:488, 490
- Mani Codex, 1:11, 2:406, 450 n1h, 723 ni2
- Manifestations. See Visions or the person to whom God appeared, e.g. Abraham
- Manilius, 1:978 n18g
- Manna (bread from heaven)
 Artapanus on, 2:903
 in future world, 2:229 n16n
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:190, 229
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:413
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:694
 in History of the Rechabites, 2:458
 in last days, in 2 Baruch, 1:631, 2:446 n
 phoenix's diet of, in 3 Baruch, 1:670–71
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:317, 328, 329
 as symbol, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:212 n8i, 228–30
- Manual of Discipline (1QS; 1QSa; 1QSB) afterlife in, 1:352 n2x2, 578 n6f, 860 n40d
 angels in, 2:447 n
 Belial in, 1:139 n22p
 doctrine of two ways in, 1:427 n8p2
 dualism in, 1:96 n, 503 fellowship of the just with angels in, 1:855 n33d, 2:723 ni2
 good intentions in, 1:822 n17a
 hierarchy in, 2:364 n49h
 Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:212 n8i
 Jubilees and, 2:50
 judgment of gentiles in, 1:890 n13c
 Messianism in, xxxi, 1:801 n24a, 816 n8a, 827 n9b
- Michael in, 2:260 n9a
 morning and evening prayers in, 1:897 n4c
- Odes of Solomon and, 2:740 n7d, 740 n7g, 745 n11m, 745 n11u, 755 n22n, 758 n25g, 761 n29g, 764 n33g, 767 n38s
- prayer and good deeds in, 1:674 n11d
- Psalms of Solomon and, 2:648
- Rabbim in, 2:617
- sexual abstinence in, 1:205 n71d
- Testament of Moses and, 1:932 n12c
- vicarious atonement in, 2:539
- wicked as damned in, 1:859 n39e
- wicked king in, 1:567
- Many-eyed
 in 2 Enoch, 1:103 n1ai, 134
See also Eyes
- Marcus Aurelius (Roman emperor), 1:390, 394 n5i, 416, 419, 443, 449 n12g2, 449 n12i2, 450, 462 n14h, 462 n14i
 fictitious dialogue of, 1:493 n1h
- Mark (book)
 Apocalypse of Daniel and, 1:759
 Pseudo-Philo and, 2:302
 Sibylline Oracles and, 1:330
 Testament of Solomon and, 1:954, 955
- Marmaraoth (Marmaroth), 1:935, 970, 980, 981
- Marriage
 betrothal as formal beginning of, 2:203 n1v, 235 n21b
 Christian ritual of, from Joseph and Aseneth, 2:196 n feasts of
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:235–36
 of Psyche and Cupid, 2:235 n21c
 general precepts on, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:580–81 husband's rule in, in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:283 mixed, 1:634 n42d, 877 n, 2:112–13, 359 n45d. See also Gentiles, sexual relations with; Joseph and Aseneth ban on foreign marriage, 1:863 n45b, 2:358
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 315 n9h, 343 n30a Samson's, 2:357
 praise of, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:571, 580 secrets not to be revealed to wives in, 2:504 nXd2
 sleeping with spouse before, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:193, 235 traditional euphemism for consummation of, 2:236 n21r
 warning against wife's tongue in, in Syriac Menander, 2:595, 603
See also Children; Parents
- Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah (book)
 first part of (Martyrdom of Isaiah), 2:717
 in Charles's edition, xxiii Christian addition to, 1:143
 demonology of, 1:350 n2p2, 360, 667 n4r, 739 n2i, 2:143, 151, 153, 157, 160–63
 Lives of the Prophets and, 2:383–84
 Testament of Hezekiah in, 1:249, 773, 831, 2:143, 147–49, 160–62
 text of, 2:156–64
 second part of (Vision of Isaiah), 1:500
 angels in, 1:107 n1u, 133 n19c, 995 n4c, 2:165–76
 Apocalypse of Zephaniah and, 1:505
 Apocryphon of Ezekiel and, 1:490
 as Christian work, 2:143
 3 Enoch and, 1:248–49
 History of the Rechabites and, 2:446
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:733
 text of, 2:164–76
 thrones in, 1:248, 289 n36g, 2:166–71 transformations in, 1:512 n5a, 2:171, 173–74
- Martyrs
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:724–26
 in 4 Maccabees, 2:541–52
 in Questions of Ezra, 1:593, 596
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:330
See also specific martyrs
- Mary (mother of Jesus). See Apocalypse of the Virgin; Virgin birth; Virgin Mary
- Masseket Gehinnom, 1:285 n31f, 287 n33h, 294 n44c, 295 n44k
- Masseket Hekalot, 1:239, 250, 256 n1h, 278 n22l
 angels in, 1:242, 266 n14a, 271 n18f, 277 n22e
 four camps, 1:271 n18h
 on horses, 1:270 n18a
 seven archangels, 1:269 n17b
 sitting angels, 1:263 n10b
 on heavens, 1:241, 279 n25a, 296 n45a
 circles of heaven, 1:287 n34c

- Masseket Hekalot (Cont.)
 Hebrew letters in, 1:265 n13c, 284 n29e
 secrets of God in, 1:274 n18h2
 wheels of chariot in, 1:276 n19c
- Masseket hibbut haqheber, 1:245, 277 n22e, 282 n27g, 294 n44c, 296 n45a
- Mastema (Satan), 2:36, 40, 47–48, 76, 78, 90, 93, 139–40
- Maternus, Firmicius, 1:603 n, 604 ni, 2:212 n8i, 221 n12d2
- Mathusal, 1:160
See also Methuselah
- Mathuselah, 1:99, 197
See also Methuselah
- Matthew (gospel)
 Ahiqar and, 2:487, 488, 504 nXb, 505 nXg
 Apocalypse of Zephaniah and, 1:501, 504
 Doctrine of the Two Ways in, 1:816 n1a,
 888 n11b
 1 Enoch and, 1:10
 2 Enoch and, 1:95 n, 116 n9b, 176 n49a
 4 Ezra and, 1:522
 Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:195
 Pseudo-Philo and, 2:302, 316 n9k
 Sibylline Oracles and, 1:330, 416
 Testament of Abraham and, 1:879
 Testament of Moses and, 1:924
 Testament of Solomon and, 1:949, 955
 Vision of Ezra and, 1:522
 wise men in, 1:478–80
- Ma'yan Hokmah, 1:273 n18a2, 284 n29e, 296 n45a, 303 n15Be, 304 n15Bm
 angels in, 1:263 n9c, 280 n26f, 285 n31f, 286 n33e, 289 n36d
 healing in, 1:315 n48Dw
 Moses's fear, 1:314 n48Dj
- Measures
 Athenian vs. others, 2:18 np
 "finger," 2:17 no
 Hebrew vs. Persian-Egyptian, 2:868 n33d stade, 2:918 nj
- Medes (Media)
 in 1 Enoch, 1:39
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:382, 385, 430, 435, 446
See also Babylonia
- Mediators, 1:136 n21e
See also Angels, intercessory; Christ, the, as intercessor; Moses, as mediator; Saints, intercession by; Virgin Mary, intercession by
- Medicine
 Essene research into, 1:961 n1h
 in Jubilees, 2:76
 magic similar to, 1:956
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:954, 977–81
- Mefusailom, 1:108 n1z
See also Methuselah
- Mefusalem, 1:197
See also Methuselah
- Megilla (book), 1:268 n16f, 281 n26m, 282 n27b
 building of Temple in, 1:943 n
 on nakedness of Adam and Eve, 2:281 n20a
 wicked souls in, 1:295 n44k
- Mekilta deRabbi 'Ismael, 1:231 n, 266 n14a, 268 n16g, 285 n30e, 285 n31a
- Melchizedek (Melkizedek; Melkisedek; Melchisedek)
 birth of, in 2 Enoch, xxiii, 1:91–93, 96–97, 136 n21e, 202 n70o, 206–7
- Charles's omission of, from 2 Enoch, 1:104–
 5 n1a
 in Garden of Eden (Edem), in 2 Enoch,
 1:115 n8b, 210–11
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:687, 688, 693
 as Michael, 1:932 n10a
 as priest, 1:785 n6e, 791 n8c, 791 n9b, 2:880
 in 2 Enoch, 1:96–97, 206–11
 in 11QMelch, 1:249–50, 932 n10a
 Qumran book of (11QMelch), 1:249–50, 323 n,
 382, 392, 780, 932 n10a
- Menander, 2:583–84, 588, 2:828 n10b
 Derek Erez "forged quotations" from, 2:568
 fragments attributed to, 2:830–31
- Mercy
 clouds of, in 3 Enoch, 1:306
 of El, in Ahiqar, 2:484–85, 501 of God. See God, mercy of
 in heavenly law court, 1:273 n18z, 285, 286
 in name of the Patriarchs, in Testaments of the Three Patriarchs, 1:911, 915
 oil of, 1:658
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:249, 272–75
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:571, 574–75
 Sibylline Oracles on, 1:330, 347
See also Good works; Poor, the; Virtues
- Merilo Pravednoe. See 2 Enoch, in Merilo Pra-vednoe
- Merkabah
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:249
 in 3 Enoch, 1:240, 246, 287 n34a, 289 n36g
 in Ezekiel, 1:246
 in Hekalot Rabbati, 1:233–34, 237–38
- Merkabah mysticism, 1:225–53, 788 n2c
 Angelic Liturgy and, 1:236, 249, 853 n33m, 866 n48h
 angelic rivalry in, 2:702–3
 binding of crowns in, 1:268 n16f
 birth of, 1:235
 the Chariot in, 1:230–32, 233, 237, 866 n48f
 conventicles of, 1:233–34, 249
 Dynamis of eighth highest heaven in, 2:704
 Gnosticism and, 2:717
 hymns of, 1:225, 231, 233, 235, 245, 247
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:866 n48f
 Metatron's names in, 1:313 n48Da
 "still, small voice" in, 1:306 n22Cm
 synagogue liturgy and, 1:251–52
 in Testament of Job, 1:833, 836
 list of literature of, 1:250–51
 Prayer of Joseph and, 2:701, 704–5
 Testament of Job and, 1:856 n33m, 865 n48d
 Watchers in, 1:282 n28a
See also 3 Enoch; Merkabah
- Meshach, 1:500, 502, 513, 2:558 n13b
- Mesopotamia
 fable of tamarisk and palm in, 2:506 nX1m
 human learning of secrets in, 1:140 n22r
 open tradition in, 1:157 n33i
See also Assyria; Babylonia
- Messenger
 eagle as, in 4 Baruch, 2:421–22
 Haggai as, 2:394
 as term for Michael, 1:932 n10a
See also Angels, as messengers; Satan, messengers of

- Messiah (Anointed One), xxxi–xxxiii
 anti-, 1:360
 authority of, in 1 Enoch, 1:37
 betrayal of, in Testament of Benjamin, 1:826 coming of
   in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:731
   in 2 Baruch, 1:617, 618, 621 *n1**, 630–31, 633
   in Eldad and Modad, 2:463, 464
   in 1 Enoch, 1:70–72, 490
   in 3 Enoch, 1:302
   in 4 Ezra, 1:537, 552
   in Lives of the Prophets, 2:387 n2n
   in Psalms of Solomon, xxxii, 1:630 n29b
   in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:794, 801, 812, 816, 818
 Cyrus as, 1:356
 death of, in 4 Ezra, 1:537
 delayed by Israel's sins, in 3 Enoch, 1:295 n44q destruction by, in Revelation, 1:423 n8e2
 dual, in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:778
 in heaven, 1:226, 298
 hope for after 135 A.D., 1:235 n
 judgment by. See Last Judgment, by Messiah kingdom of
   in 2 Baruch, 1:633 n40b
   in 1 Enoch, 1:70–72
   in 4 Ezra, 1:521, 537–38, 550–51
 as Lion, in 4 Ezra, xxxii, 1:549, 550
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:380, 383
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:725, 727–29, 743, 757, 761, 768–70
 physiognomy of, in 4QMess ar, 1:250
 seventh Ptolemaic king as, 1:356
 Signs of (book), 1:724
 as son of David, in 3 Enoch, 1:298
 as son of Ephraim, 1:298 n45i
 as son of Joseph, in 3 Enoch, 1:298 star of, in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:794, 801 symbol for, in 1 Enoch, 1:5
 Taxo identified as, in Testament of Moses, 1:923
 in Testament of Adam, xxxiii, 1:992, 994, 995
 universality of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:361
 as warrior, 1:633 n40a, 645 n72b
See also Christ, the; Elect One; Illuminator of knowledge; Son of Man
- Metatron
 Apocalypse of Abraham and, 1:251
 in Babylonian Talmud, 1:229, 235
 derivation and meaning of name of, 1:228, 243
 2 Enoch and, 1:119 n10j
 in 3 Enoch, 1:223, 226–30, 232, 240, 256–59, 261–315, 866 n48h
 general estimate by translator, 1:243–44
 "glory of highest heaven," 1:265, 267, 268, 308
 humbling of Metatron, 1:235, 268 Israel's advocate, 1:303 n15Bl, 304
 list of names, 1:313–14
 Prince of the Divine Presence, 1:242, 256, 303 n15Bb, 304, 312, 315
 "servant" of YHWH, 1:295
 stature, 1:312
 teacher of Torah, 1:313
 throne, 1:263–64, 268, 312
 titles, 1:248, 257
 as Great Healer, 1:315 n48Dw
 Melchisedek of Qumran and, 1:250
 in Merkabah texts, 1:241
 Michael and, 1:243–44
 as Prince of the World, 1:243, 257 n3c, 263 n9d, 285 n39f
 as scribe, 1:282 n27g, 296 n44i
 in Zohar, 1:252
 Methosalam, 1:108 n1z, 182
See also Methuselah
 Methusail, 1:183 n57b, 1:209
See also Methuselah
 Methuselah (Methusala; Methusalom; Methusalam), 1:907
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:689
 in 1 Enoch, 1:58 n79a, 59–63, 72, 86, 88, 115 n7b, 2:876
 in 2 Enoch, 1:91, 104, 108–9, 160, 162, 182, 196–205, 208–9
 in Jubilees, 1:62, 63, 71
 in Pseudo-Eupolemus, 2:881
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:304–5
 Micah (prophet), 1:526, 2:158, 163, 165
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:391
 Micah (son of Dedila), in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300, 301, 357–59, 360–62
 Micaiah, 2:143, 158–59, 158 n2m, 2:391 n6c
 Michael (angel)
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:694
 in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:605, 606, 613
 in 3 Baruch, 1:136 n21e, 657–59, 666, 674–77
 in 4 Baruch, 2:424
 in Daniel, 1:138 n22i, 244 n, 272 n18j, 392, 790 n5d
 in 1 Enoch, 1:16, 18, 23–24, 26, 32, 38, 40, 47–50, 247
 in 2 Enoch, 1:115 n8b, 136, 138, 156, 208–10, 248
 in 3 Enoch, 1:243, 269, 296
 in Ethiopian Church, 1:10
 general role of, 1:136 n21e
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:571, 572, 574, 575, 577
 as Jacob's angelic adversary, 2:707
 Jannes and Jambres and, 2:430
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:190, 225 n14k, 711 n
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:249, 253, 259, 262, 264–68, 274–75, 281, 286, 287 n32b, 291, 292, 294–95
 in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:160
 in Masseket Hekalot, 1:271 n18h
 in Merkabah texts, 1:242
 Metatron and, 1:243–44
 in Nag Hammadi texts, 1:943 n
 as name on amulet, 1:979 n18y
 as name on magical papyrus, 2:717
 as Prince of the World, 1:243
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:333, 350
 in Solomonic text, 1:937 n
 in Testament of Abraham, xxi, 871, 878, 879, 882–92, 894–902, 2:711
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:903, 905
 in Testament of Jacob, 1:913, 914, 916
 in Testament of Moses, 1:932 n10a
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:935, 953, 954, 962, 978

- Michael (angel) (Cont.)
 in Vision of Ezra, 1:574 n4b, 590
 YHWH in name of, 1:285 n30d
See also Archistrategos
- Midian (son of Isaac), 2:92
- Midianites, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:248–50, 373
- Midrash Aggadah, 2:395 n18c, 398 n23a
- Midrash 'aseret hadibberot, 1:269 n17f, 296 n45a, 303 n15Bk
- Midrash Canticles, 1:943 n
- Midrash "'Elleh ezkeräh," 1:266 n1b, 296 n45a
- Midrash Haggadol, 1:270 n17r, 288 n35h, 310 n48Bb
- Midrashim, xii, 1:91
 Ahiqar in, 2:491
 beginning of idolatry in, 1:260 n5g
 characteristics of, 2:39–41
 3 Enoch and, 1:226, 235
 of Enoch's descendants, 1:196 n69a
 fallen angels in, 1:9
 Jacob-Israel in, 2:707
 Life of Adam and Eve compared to, 2:249
 Pseudo-Philo compared to, 2:301, 302
 torments of hell in, 1:294 n44c
- Midrash Konen, 1:239, 266 n14a, 269 n17f, 279 n25g, 280 n26f, 283 n28c, 285 n31f, 287 n34c, 290 n37b, 293 n42d, 304 n15Bm, 306 n22Cm, 309 n24i
 fragrance of garden of Eden in, 1:308 n22l
 God's little finger in, 1:291 n40e
- Midrash Tanhuma', 1:245, 303 n15Be
 angelic rivalry in, 2:703
 Messiah in, 1:298 n45i
- Midrash Tehillim, 1:239, 262 n7g, 269 n17f, 270 n17r, 276 n19j, 282 n28c, 299 n46j, 301 n48Al, 303 n15Be, 304 n15Bm, 308 n24e, 2:854 n5a
 Messiah in, 1:298 n45i
- Midrash Wayyoša' (Wayyissau; Wayissou), 1:724
 Jubilees and, 2:39, 120 n34a, 127 n38b, 128 n38c
 Messiah in, 1:298 n45i
- Miracles
 by Antichrist. See Antichrist, miracles by before Christ's birth, in Ladder of Jacob, 2:410 by prophets. See Prophets, miracles by
- Miriam
 in 2 Baruch, 1:641
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:853
 in 3 Enoch, 1:297
 in Exodus, 2:816 nd3
 in Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:809
 in Jubilees, 2:138
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:316, 329
- Mishnah (Mishna), xii
 on secrecy of Merkabah, 1:230
See also specific books
- Miṭatron, 1:229, 313. See also Meṭatron
- Mithras
 Micah's idols and, 2:358 n44a
 Nero as emanation of, 1:396 5j2
- Moloch (Molech; god), 1:352 n2x2, 937, 986, 987 n26e, 2:113, 885
- Money
 love of
 in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:161
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:575
 Sibylline Oracles on, 1:348
- Testament of Judah on, 1:800
- Moon
 angels in charge of
 in 3 Baruch, 1:672–73
 in 3 Enoch, 1:267, 270
 in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:162
 in Testament of Adam, 1:991, 995
- Antichrist's power over, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:745
- breaking of horns of, in Testament of Moses, 1:932
- course of
 in 1 Enoch, 1:32, 48, 51, 53–54, 57–58
 in 2 Enoch, 1:120–22, 123 n13f, 126–31, 132–33
 in 3 Enoch, 1:270, 290
- creation of
 in 2 Enoch, 1:150
 in 3 Enoch, 1:292
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:679, 691
 in Jubilees, 2:56
- darkening of
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:288, 289
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:580 n162h
- demon who travels with, in Testament of Solomon, 1:952, 965
- destruction of light of
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:328
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:423
- God's control of, in Ladder of Jacob, 2:408
- Joshua's stopping of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:346
- names of, in 1 Enoch, 1:57
- in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:570, 576, 580 n162h as rational being, 1:121 n11g
- sinners and, in 1 Enoch, 1:58–59
- See also* Calendar, lunar
- Moses
 Abezethibou as adversary of, 1:967 n6d, 985–86
 allegory used by, Aristobulus on, 2:838
 alphabet taught by, in Eupolemus, 2:861, 865
 angels' assistance of, 1:243
 angels' opposition to Law being revealed to, 1:314 n48Dj
 in 3 Enoch, 1:260 n5l, 303, 315
- Apocalypse of (Greek text of Life of Adam and Eve). See Life of Adam and Eve
- Apocalypse of (other name for Jubilees), 2:41
- in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:689 n1a
- Apocryphal Book of, (Which) Contains the Great Name, 2:718
- apotheosis of, in Orphica, 2:796, 799–800
- in Artapanus, 1:435 n11j, 2:775, 889, 891–95, 898–903
- ascension of
 in 3 Enoch, 1:303–4
 in Orphica (possibly), 2:796, 799
- astrology not supported by, 1:477 n
- Books of the Mysteries held by, 1:949 n
- born circumcised, 2:316 n9n, 316 n9o
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300
- choices for Israel set forth by, 1:816 n1a
- Christ and, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:424
- counsel of, in 4 Ezra, 1:541
- on curtain of God, in 3 Enoch, 1:297
- in Damascus Document, 2:427
- death and burial of, 1:725, 927 n1j, 2:326 n19a
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:326–29, 346

- Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:852–54
 Diadem of, 2:717
 as Egyptian general, Artapanus on, 2:889, 891, 899
 Eighth Book of, 2:717, 721 n
 Eldad and Modad as half brothers of, 2:464
 Eupolemus on, 2:861, 865
 in Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:803–6, 808–13, 817–18
 Ezra assimilated to, 1:566
 genealogy of, in Demetrius the Chronographer, 2:843, 853
 God's encounter with, xxxi
   in Artapanus, 2:901
   in Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:812–13
   in 4 Ezra, 1:553
   in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:678
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:319–21, 323, 327
 in Hecataeus of Abdera, 2:905
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:678, 684, 685, 687, 688, 693
 identified in Revelation, 1:725
 in Jubilees, 2:102, 138–39
 in Jude, 1:924
 at Last Judgment, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:351
 as leader of Jews out of bondage
   Artapanus on, 2:889, 902–3
   Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:853–54
   in 4 Ezra, 1:525
   in Jubilees, 2:139–42
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300, 316–19
   in Testament of Moses, 1:919, 927
 length of life of, in 2 Baruch, 1:627
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:259
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:382, 383, 387 n2n, 388, 389
 love and, in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:609
 4 Maccabees' quoting of, 2:563, 564
 magic of Artapanus on, 2:893–94, 901–2
   in Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:817
   in Jannes and Jambres, 2:427, 431, 433, 436, 438, 440
 as mediator, in Testament of Moses, 1:922, 929
 on Mount Sinai, 1:262 n8b
 allegorical interpretation of, in Aristobulus, 2:834, 838–39
   in Alphabet of Aqiba, 1:262 n8a
   in 2 Baruch, 1:622, 641–42
   in 3 Enoch, 1:314
   in Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:811–12
   in 4 Ezra, 1:528–29
   God's appearance, 1:246
   in Jubilees, 2:35, 39, 52–55, 139, 142
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:318–21, 323, 333, 346
   in Sibylline Oracles, 1:367–68. See also Law
 in Paradise, in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:577
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300–12, 316–28, 335, 343, 349, 366–68, 370, 374
 in Questions of Ezra, 1:599
 right hand of God and, in 3 Enoch, 1:301 rise of esteem of, in ancient world, 2:427 n
 rule of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:430, 434, 435
 sacred names revealed to, 1:291 n39b
 Samuel compared to, 1:301 n48A1
 Sayings of (QDM), 1:924 n
 sexual abstinence of, 1:205 n71d
 struggle for soul of, in Debarim Rabbah, 1:886 n8e
 supposed Heliopolis birth of, 2:202 n1e
 temperance of, in 4 Maccabees, 2:546
 Testament of. See Testament of Moses Testament of Abraham related to, 1:879 Torah of. See also Torah
   in 3 Enoch, 1:314
   in Testament of Jacob, 1:913, 917
 transformation of (shining face of), 1:139 n22o, 267 n15c, 512 n5a
 on trespassing law, in 2 Baruch, 1:650
 Uriel (Suriel) said to meet with, 2:709 wives of, 2:810 rx, 2:853, 895 n, 899 n3m, 900 Mountains
   in 1 Enoch, 1:26, 37–38, 56
   of fire. See Fire, mountain of
   For specific mountains, see last element name, e.g. Ararat, Mount Mourning
   color of, 2:216 n10s
   Life of Adam and Eve on, 2:294–95
   periods of, 2:217 n10h2
   Syriac Menander on, 2:606
   See also Death
 Mousaeus
   Moses as, 2:889, 895, 898
 Murder
   condemnation of
     in Noachian law, 2:569
     in Pseudo-Philo, 2:358
     in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:569, 574–76
     Syriac Menander on, 2:592
   of male children, by Pharaoh, in Jubilees, 2:138
   punishment for
     in 2 Enoch, 1:186–87, 218–19
     in Jubilees, 2:61, 64
     Sibylline Oracles on, 1:347, 348, 351, 384
 Musaeus, 2:795, 799, 800, 837
 as hellenized name of Moses, 2:433 Mysteries
   as Christian sacraments, 2:212 n8i
   denied to fallen angels, in 1 Enoch, 1:22
   God's, in Odes of Solomon, 2:742
   Judah's disclosure of, in Testament of Judah, 1:798, 799
   Metatron's knowledge of, in 3 Enoch, 1:264 n1lh. See also Cosmic letters Mysticism, Jewish
   3 Enoch and, 1:225–39
   Orphica and, 2:797
   See also Merkabah mysticism; Papyri, magical Nadin (Nadan; Nadab), 2:479, 483, 488–89, 494–96, 498, 506 nXIs, 506 nXIf
 Nag Hammadi codices (NHC), xxvii
 captive souls in, 1:735 n1l
 creation of angels in, 2:55 n2h
 Devil's "boasting" in, 1:735 n1g
 Merkabah mysticism and, 1:236, 237
 vs. orthodox Christianity, 1:949–50
 prayers and hymns in, 2:607
 "Sabaoth" in, 2:721 nq
 Solomon and, 1:942–43, 949–50, 978 n18h, 978 n18i, 979 n18a2, 981 n18j3
See also Gnosticism; specific books: Apocalypse of Adam; Hypostasis of the Archons; On the Origin of the World

- Nahor (brother of Abraham), 1:691, 2:80, 92, 309, 310
- Nahor (grandfather of Abraham), 1:689, 689 n/a, 867 n51b, 907, 2:78, 309, 332
- See also Nereus
- Nakedness
- of Abraham, in Jubilees, 2:69
- Adam's and Eve's
- in 1 Enoch, 1:28
- in History of the Rechabites, 2:457
- in Jubilees, 2:59, 60
- in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:281–83
- of Bilhah, in Testament of Reuben, 1:783
- clothing of. See also Poor, the, care of
- in 2 Enoch, 1:116–17, 168–69
- in Jubilees, 2:35, 40, 60
- in Testament of Jacob, 1:915, 918
- in Testament of Zebulon, 1:806
- of daughters of Moab, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:326
- in History of the Rechabites, 2:451–52, 456–57
- Names
- of angels. See Angels, names and duties of
- divine, cosmic power of, 1:315 n48Dt
- in 3 Enoch, 1:240, 292–93, 304 n15Bt
- of God. See God, names of
- imperishable, in Prayer of Joseph, 2:700, 713
- as possible gibberish or glossolalia, 1:234, 243
- sacred. See also YHWH
- in 3 Enoch, 1:290–91
- in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:227
- secret, 2:713 nAm
- in 1 Enoch, 1:48
- known only on high, 2:701 n
- in Prayer of Jacob, 2:715, 722
- Naphtali
- Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:849, 851
- in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:241, 243
- in Jubilees, 2:110, 120, 122, 127, 136
- in Pseudo-Philo, 2:314
- in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:801.
- See also Testament of Naphtali
- tribe of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:317, 335 n25d, 336, 338
- Nathan
- in Eupolemus (possibly), 2:866 n2p
- in Lives of the Prophets, 2:395
- in Solomonic texts, 1:937, 937 n
- Nations
- God revealed to all, in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:779, 789, 807, 827
- God's offering of Law to all, 2:318 n11d
- helplessness of, before power of evil, in Jubilees, 2:47, 87
- mingled, in 2 Baruch, 1:634
- number of, 1:270 n17r, 2:205 n2q
- perishing of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:349
- as spittle
- in 2 Baruch, 1:649
- in 4 Ezra, 1:536
- in Pseudo-Philo, 2:302, 313
- See also Gentiles; Languages; Princes of kingdoms
- Nature
- fear of God taught by, in 1 Enoch, 1:82
- God as author of. See God, as author of Nature law of. See Noachian laws
- man's dominion over, in Jubilees, 2:57
- mysteries of
- in 1 Enoch, 1:22–23, 40–42, 48–49
- in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:565, 573, 574
- orders of, in 3 Enoch, 1:264
- Nebuchadnezzar, 1:621 n/a, 648, 662–63, 743 n2d3, 928 n3a, 2:393, 854, 871
- in 4 Baruch, 2:420, 422, 423
- Daniel's prayers for, in Lives of the Prophets, 2:390
- Nechepso, 1:346 n2g, 369, 375, 385 n4h, 422, 475
- Nedarim (book), 1:314 n48Dk, 889 n12d, 2:709
- Nehemiah (book)
- Apocalypse of Zephaniah and, 1:504
- 4 Baruch and, 2:416
- Jubilees and, 2:49
- table of names of, 1:516
- Nereus, 1:340, 829, 839 n1h, 867–68
- Nero (Roman emperor)
- in Commodian, 1:422 n8y-a2
- in Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah, 2:149, 161 n4a, 161 n4d, 161 n4f
- rape by, 1:446 n12k
- in Sibylline Oracles, 1:323, 360, 363 n3j, 387 n4y, 393 n5l, 416, 435 n11j, 443, 447
- legend of fight and return, 1:382, 387 n4x, 387 n4c2, 390–92, 395 n5y, 395 n5b2, 396, 398–99, 401–2, 415, 418–22, 443–44, 760
- Mareades modeled on, 1:453
- New Jerusalem
- in 2 Baruch, 1:622
- in 1 Enoch, 1:9
- in Jubilees, 2:54
- Montanists and, 1:866 n48e
- in Testament of Dan, 1:810
- New Testament
- Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of, xxvii, 1:4
- closing of canon of, xxiii–xxiv
- Enochic concepts in, 1:8, 10, 246–47
- Greek of, compared to Joseph and Aseneth, 2:195
- History of the Rechabites and, 2:446
- only apocalypse in, 1:3
- Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:569 n, 572
- New Year's Day
- as anniversary of creation, 2:321 n13f
- heavenly court's meeting on, 1:284 n30b
- Nicephorus, Patriarch, 1:499–500, 563, 601, 683, 728, 2:37, 464, 699
- Nicodemus (gospel), 1:578 n7a
- Life of Adam and Eve and, 2:252, 272 n36a, 274 n42a
- Niddah (book), 1:245, 294 n43i, 294 n43j
- Nimrod (planner of Tower of Babel)
- in 3 Enoch, 1:297
- in Pseudo-Philo, 2:308–10, 312
- Noachian laws, 2:566, 568–69, 2:566, 568–69.
- See also Innate law
- Noah (Noe)
- in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:689
- in Apocalypse of Adam, 1:713–14
- Babylonian, 1:157 n33i
- in 3 Baruch, 1:657, 658
- book of mystery of, 1:949 n
- in 1 Enoch, 1:17 n10c, 45, 47, 86–88, 115 n7b
- in 2 Enoch, 1:200, 202, 206–7, 210–12
- in 3 Enoch, 1:297

- in 4 Ezra, 1:528
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:684, 687, 688, 693
 in Jubilees, 2:38, 63–71, 75, 76, 93, 95
 medical knowledge of, 1:478
 as "perfect," 1:515 n10b
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:305–7, 309–10, 321, 322 n14j
 Sibyl as daughter of, 1:317, 322, 327, 331, 341 n1w, 380 n3g4
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:332, 333, 338–41, 410
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:907, 908 vine planted by, in 3 Baruch, 1:666–69
See also Flood
 Noe, 1:200, 202, 206–7, 210–12
See also Noah
 Notarikon, 1:227, 242, 274 n18g2
 Numbers. See specific numbers, e.g., Seven (number)
 Numbers (book)
 Ahikar and, 2:503 nXi, 505 nXg
 Balaam in, 1:479, 985 n25a, 2:326 n18o, 405
 Eldad and Modad in, 2:463
 3 Enoch and, 1:246
 female inheritance in, 2:204 n2b
 lost book mentioned in, xxi
 Pseudo-Philo and, 2:297, 317 n10f, 320 n12f
 "star" text (24:17) in, 1:784 n6c, 794 n18b, 801 n24a, 827 n9b
 Numenius of Apamea, 2:428, 433, 433 n, 895, 898 n3h, 910 n
 Nun, 1:927, 933, 2:328–29
- Oaths
 in 1 Enoch, 1:48–49, 132 n18f
 in 2 Enoch, 1:176–77
 failure to keep, in Ahikar, 2:485, 505
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:357
See also Covenant
 Obadiah, 1:526, 2:163
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:392
 Obyzouth, 1:936, 953, 973–74
 Oceans (sea)
 abysses of
 in 1 Enoch, 1:40
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:220
 Aeschylus (possibly) on, 2:825
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:699
 creation of
 in 2 Enoch, 1:146–47
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:679, 691
 in Jubilees, 2:56
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:749
 demon of (Kunopegos), in Testament of Solomon, 1:936, 953, 976
 destruction of
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:576
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:423–24, 426
 in Testament of Moses, 1:932
 in first heaven
 in 3 Baruch, 1:664 n2b
 in Testament of Levi, 1:248
 in heaven, 2:268 n29a
 monsters in
 in Ahikar, 2:502
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:190, 222
 parable of conflict between forest and, 1:530
 symbolism of, 1:397 n5n2, 420 n8m
 vision of man from, in 4 Ezra, 1:551–53
See also Red Sea
 Odenath of Palmyra, 1:453, 457–58, 461 n14a
 Odes of Solomon (book), xxi, xxviii, 2:723 ni2
 Prayer of Jacob and, 2:718
 Ogdoad, 1:227, 237, 409, 413, 2:713 nAn angel Israel similar to, 2:704 Oil
 as reward of righteous, in 3 Baruch, 1:658, 677
See also Anointing; Mercy, oil of Ointment, in Joseph and Aseneth's meal formula, 2:191, 212, 213, 226, 233
 Old age
 Jubilees on, 2:100–102
 reverence to, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:582
 Syriac Menander on, 2:591, 2:592, 594, 595, 597, 603, 605
 Old Testament
 Aquila's Greek version of, 2:673
 closing of canon of, xxiii
 3 Enoch and, 1:245–46
 only apocalypse in, 1:3
 Onan ('Onan), 1:797–98, 797 n10b, 2:130, 136, 314
 Onias (high priest), 1:355–56, 2:518 n2a, 915
 in 4 Maccabees, 2:533, 548–49, 2:533, 548–49
 On the Origin of the World (On the Creation of the World; book), 1:744 n2t3, 750 n5w, 942, 943 n, 2:56 n2j, 717, 721 nl, 721 nq, 721 nr
 Paradise in, 2:56 n2m
 Prayer of Joseph and, 2:702, 703 n
 'Opanni' el, 1:267, 269 n17g, 270, 279
 Ophanim
 in Dead Sea Scrolls, 1:249
 in 1 Enoch, 1:50
 in 3 Enoch, 1:242, 246, 256, 257, 261, 262, 276 n19c, 279–80, 286, 291, 300, 306, 309, 311
 Ophian sect (Ophites), 1:237, 944, 965 n4a, 2:170 n9v
 Oracle of Hystaspes, 1:334, 335 n2d, 351 n2t2, 358, 368, 370, 374, 377, 379, 387, 395, 399, 412
 Oracles
 Merkabah adepts as, 1:234
 Pseudo-Phocylides' use of, 2:580 n162g, 580 n162h
 Origen, xxii, 1:8, 488, 683, 963 n2f, 2:254 n, 534, 703 n
 abbreviations of books by, xlix
 on angels, man and devils, 1:139 n22p
 "Apocryphon of Isaiah" used by, 2:149
 3 Baruch possibly mentioned in, 1:655, 656
 demonology of, 1:118 n10f, 941, 965 n4a, 970 n8a
 all demons subject to Jesus, 1:978 n18f
 birth of Jesus and, 1:975 n15f
 dog-faced demon, 1:971 n10a
 on exorcism, 1:949
 goat-lion demon, 1:973 n1ld
 parts of body ruled by demons, 1:978 n18f
 on Hecataeus of Abdera, 2:905, 909–10
 "holy land" used by, 1:855 n33i
 on intercession for condemned souls, 1:334, 353 n2c3
 on invisibility of angels, 1:154 n3lc
 on Jacob as supplanter, 2:706, 707 n

- Origen (Cont.)
 on Jannes and Jambres, 2:428, 430, 432, 433, 435
 on Jewish study of Song of Songs, 1:231 man's descent in, 1:155 n32b
 oil of mercy of, 2:272 n36a
 Penitence of, 2:435
 Prayer of Joseph in, 2:699–701, 709, 714
 on pre-existence of souls, 1:140 n23f
 on soul's ascent through heavens, 1:186 n61f
 on Star of Bethlehem, 1:479 n on stars as souls, 1:121 n11g
 on struggle over Abraham's soul, 1:565
 on Suriel, 1:963 n2i
- Orias (demon), 1:935–37, 937 n, 953, 961–64, 971, 982–83
- Orphans, treatment of
 in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:504, 513
 in 4 Ezra, 1:527
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:333, 347, 352
- Orpheus, 2:889, 898
 More Psalms of David and, 2:613 nc
 in Orphica, 2:795
 in synagogue reredos, 2:705
- Orpheus, Testament of (book), 1:773, 831
- Orphica (Pseudo-Orpheus; Ps-Orph), 1:327, 338 n1k, 363 n2b, 469, 2:777
 quoted by Aristobulus, 2:840–41
- Orphism, 1:334, 351 n2t2, 360, 361
- Othniel, 2:335 n25c, 341 n28g, 393 n10g
- Otho (Roman emperor), 1:387 n4z, 393 n5m, 396 n5l2, 421 n8q, 447
- Ouriel, 2:405 n
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:935, 943 n, 953, 955, 963–64, 970, 978, 980
See also Uriel
- Ovid, 1:317, 328 ng, 343 nli2, 362 n3e, 414, 567, 882 n2b
- Pagan gods (the gods)
 begetting by, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:470 belief in, in Letter of Artisteas, 2:22 Jews' attitudes to, 2:216 n10v
 of Mesopotamia, Ahiqar and, 2:484–86
 power of, in Ahiqar, 2:502–3, 505, 506
 Pseudo-Phocylides' possible references to, 2:570
 as satraps of invisible King, 1:238
 sexual relations between women and, 1:132 n18e
See also Egypt, gods of; specific gods
- Palaea (Tolkovaja paleja; Explanatory Palaea)
 Apocalypse of Abraham and, 1:681–82, 684, 686–87, 689 n1a
 Ladder of Jacob and, 2:401–5, 407 n1a, 410 n7a
- Palestine
 Apocalypse of Abraham probably written in, 1:683, 685–86
 Apocalypse of Adam possibly written in, 1:708
 area of, 1:20 nc2
 2 Baruch probably written in, 1:617
 4 Baruch probably from, 2:415
 4 Ezra possibly composed in, 1:520
 as Holy Land, 1:855 n33i
 Joseph and Aseneth possibly written in, 2:187
 Jubilees written in, 2:45
 Life of Adam and Eve probably written in, 2:252
 Lives of the Prophets from, 2:381–82
 Merkabah mysticism in, 1:232, 235–36, 238
 Prayer of Manasseh possibly from, 2:628
 Psalm 152 of More Psalms of David probably from, 2:615
 Psalms of Solomon from, 2:641–42
 Pseudo-Philo from, 2:300 return of Jews to. See Jerusalem, return of Jews to Shem's inheritance of, 1:478, 481 n1a
 special privilege to those who live in, 1:855 n33i
 Testament of Abraham possibly written in, 1:875 n
 Testament of Moses probably written in, 1:921
 Testament of Solomon possibly from, 1:944
 Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs possibly written in, 1:778
 31 B.C. earthquake in, 1:475 n, 484 n7k
 Treatise of Shem and, 1:475
See also Jerusalem; Judea
- Papyri, magical, xxvii, 1:238, 965 n4d
 "Arara, Arare" in, 1:980 n18c3
 glossolalia in, 1:234 n
 headless demon in, 1:971 n9a
 Jacob in, 2:701 n
 Jesus in, 1:968 n6h
 riddles in, 1:338 n1k
 Solomon in, 1:944, 951
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:974
- Paradise, xxxiii, 1:115 n8b ascension to, xxxiii, 1:115 n8b. See also Heaven, ascension to; Souls, ascent of on earth. See Earth, Paradise on Essene, 1:118 n10a
 of Eternally Blessed. See also Blessed Ones,
 island of
 in 1 Enoch, 1:56
 Flood in, in 3 Baruch, 1:666–67
 heavenly preservation of, in 2 Baruch, 1:622 location of, 2:266 n25a
 in East, 1:577 n5f
 in On the Origin of the World, 2:56 n2m
 in seventh heaven, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:190, 239
 in third heaven. See Heavens, third manna in, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:229
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:728, 745–46, 753
 restoration of, in Testament of Levi, 1:795
 for righteous ones
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:726, 731, 736–37
 in 2 Baruch, 1:638
 in 2 Enoch, 1:192–93
 in 4 Ezra, 1:521, 538, 540
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 290–91
 in Questions of Ezra, 1:593, 596
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:895
 in Vision of Ezra, 1:590
 sinners' respite in, in Apocalypse of Mary, 1:606
 words for, 1:115 n8c
See also Garden of Eden
- Parents
 honor to
 by Jacob, in Jubilees, 2:36, 112, 123
 in Letter of Artisteas, 2:28

- in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:574
 Syriac Menander on, 2:585, 593, 602, 2:592–95, 598
 love of children by, in 4 Maccabees, 2:559–60 treatment of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:333, 346, 352, 375
See also Children
- Parthians
 in 1 Enoch, 1:39
 Roman campaigns vs., 1:411 n7k, 456 n13y, 474 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:403, 430, 432, 450, 454 n13j, 455 n13l, 458 n13i2, 462
 in Treatise of Shem, 1:482
- Passover
 astronomical characteristics of date of, Aristobulus on, 2:831, 834, 836, 837
 calendrical issues on, xxxiii, 1:105 n1c
 in Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:814–16
 in History of the Rechabites, 2:458
 in Jubilees, 2:40, 140–42
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321, 362, 364
 in Treatise of Shem, 1:477, 481, 483
- Patience
 in Tertullian, 1:847 n20f
 in Testament of Job, 1:836, 839, 848 n21g, 851, 852
 in Tobit, 1:857 n37a
- Patriarchs
 in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:609
 in 4 Ezra, 1:528–29
 Father of, in Prayer of Jacob, 2:715, 720
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:191
 as name to end of the age, in Testament of Jacob, 1:915 oxen as symbols for, in 1 Enoch, 1:5
 in Paradise
 in 3 Enoch, 1:223, 295–96
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:577
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:328
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:905
 pre-creation of, 2:703–4, 713 nAd, 2:723 nk2
See also History of the Rechabites; Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs; specific patriarchs
- Paul, 2:535
 ascension to heaven by, 1:246–47
 conversion of, compared to Aseneth's, 2:192 immunity to viper of, 1:820 n6a
 Jubilees used by, 2:49
 4 Maccabees and, 2:540
 Odes of Solomon compared to theology of, 2:729
 in Paradise, in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:564, 572, 577
 Prayer of the Apostle, 2:607
- Pausanias, 1:318, 359, 371 n3c3, 380 n3e4, 384 n4a, 400 n5o3, 404 n5e4, 442 n11m3, 2:877
- Peace
 angels of. See Angels, of peace God's
 in 1 Enoch, 1:50
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:741, 743, 765, 766
 in kingdom of God, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:379
 love of, in 2 Enoch, 1:180–81
 Prince of, in 3 Enoch, 1:281
 storehouse of, in 3 Enoch, 1:240
 way of, in 1 Enoch, 1:75
See also Arms
- Pereq mippirqe hekalot, 1:233 n, 265 n12f, 289 n36d, 304 n22Bb
- Persecutors, the, in Odes of Solomon, 2:729, 737, 756, 760, 771
- Persia (Iran)
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:742–43
 in 2 Baruch, 1:633 n39a
 belief in resurrection of, 1:389 n4g2, 485
 fire in eschatology of, 1:350 n2m2, 351 n2i2, 352 n2x2
 History of the Rechabites and myths of, 2:447
 kilts in, 1:397 n5r2
 Prince of. See Dubbi'el
 Satan as "king" of, in Testament of Job, 1:833, 846
 sawing in half in, 2:151
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:381, 382, 385–86, 395, 397, 399, 411, 418, 422, 430, 435, 436 n11q, 457, 458, 466–67
 tenfold division of history in, 1:323
 weighing of deeds in, 1:889 n12f
See also Cyrus
- Pesahim (book), 1:267 n14e, 272 n18t, 282 n27j, 285 n31f, 289 n35i, 292 n42a, 949 n on Temple, 1:622 n4b
- Peshitta
 3 Maccabees in, 2:510
 4 Maccabees in, 2:531
 Pseudo-Philo and, 2:333 n23f
- Pesikta Rabbati (book), 1:261 n6e, 263 n10b, 277 n22e, 284 n29e, 296 n44z, 300 n48Ah, 301 n48Al, 304 n15Bm, 350 n2p2, 2:541
 Adam and Cain in, 2:258 n4c
 on end of time, 1:630 n29a
 God's name in, 1:310 n48Bb
 on Hezekiah, 1:960 nc
 Jeremiah in, 1:623 n10a
 Jerusalem in, 1:617 n, 621 n2b, 623 n6c, 624 n10h, 625 n10i
 meals in, 2:212 n8i
 Messiah in, 1:298 n45t
 ophanim in, 1:280 n25m
 on persons living in Israel, 1:855 n33i
 sacred letters in, 1:291 n39b
 size of angels in, 1:312 n48Ck
 Temple in, 1:943 n, 2:270 n30a
- Pesiqta' deRab Kahana (book), 1:244, 284 n30d, 300 n48Ah, 301 n48Al, 302 n48Aw, 943 n
 God's name in, 1:310 n48Bb
 Messiah in, 1:298 n45t
- Peter
 Acts of. See Acts of Peter Apocalypse of. See Apocalypse of Peter Letter of, to Paul, 1:715 n6b
 in Paradise, in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:577
 as rock on which Church is built, Aseneth and, 2:189
- 1 Peter (epistle)
 Ahiqar and, 1:505 nXg
 Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:195, 240 n23s
- 2 Peter (epistle)
 Ahiqar and, 2:487
 Ascension of Isaiah and, 2:149, 153
 canonicity of, xxiv

- 2 Peter (epistle) (Cont.)
 1 Enoch referred to in, ix
 2 Enoch and, 1:95 n, 113 n5d
 4 Ezra and, 1:522
 Jubilees and, 2:49
 Testament of Moses and, 1:924
- Peter (gospel), 1:194 n67a, 2:377 n64i
 Ascension of Isaiah and, 2:149
 gigantic figures in, 1:106 n1i
- Phanuel (Phanael)
 as alternative name for Sariel, 2:709
 in 3 Baruch, 1:657, 658, 662, 664–65, 667 n4n
 in 1 Enoch, 1:32, 38, 50, 350 n2p2, 2:227 n15q
- Pharisees, 2:194
 4 Baruch and, 2:415, 416
 fasting supported by, 1:737 n1q2
 grace before meals said by, 1:384 n4c
 Josephus on, 1:876
 Jubilees and, 2:44, 46
 Life of Adam and Eve and, 2:252
 lunar calendar of, 1:9
 Psalms of Solomon and, 2:642
 Testament of Abraham and, 1:876
 Testament of Moses possibly written by, 1:921,
 922 n
 Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs contrasted with ideas of, 1:780
- Philippians (epistle)
 on demons, 1:978 n18f
 "fear and trembling" in, 2:214 n9a
 4 Maccabees and, 2:540 n
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:729
- Philistines
 Isaac and, in Jubilees, 2:35, 36, 48, 103–4
 in More Psalms of David, 2:615
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:308, 334, 355–57, 368–71, 373–74, 376–77
- Philo Judaeus, xxvi, xxx, xxxi, 1:469, 967 n6b,
 2:188, 194, 577 n85g, 580 n182g
 abbreviations of works of, xlviii
 abortion condemned by, 2:580 n185i
 on Abraham as friend of God, 1:822 n1g
 on Alexandrian mob, 2:577 n96i, 577
 altar of incense in, 1:623 n6e
 Aristobulus as forerunner of, 2:834, 836
 on astrology, 1:477 n, 2:876–77, 909
 attempted fusion of Greek and Jewish thought by, 2:514
 on Balak, 2:325 n18n
 castration in, 2:581 n187k
 on causes as connected, 2:687 n8f
 on commonwealth of Israel, 1:878
 on creation, 1:143 n24h, 147 n28e, 150 n30d, 165 n40g, 191 n65b, 565 n, 2:834
 on Day of Atonement, 1:737 n1q2
 divine-omnipresence doctrine of, 2:674
 on East-West conflict, 1:358
 on end of time, 1:567, 576 n4p
 on Enosh, 1:260 n5g
 on Essene worship, 1:384 n4c
 Eve's awakening of sexual desire in,
 2:283 n25d
 on giants, 1:337 n1h
 on God's desire for repentance, 1:888 n10g
 on guarding virgins, 2:581 n215c
 heavenly bodies as "visible gods" in, 2:570, 576 n71b
 on heavenly citizenship, 1:846 n18d
 heavenly contest in, 1:346 n2i
 Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers and, 2:671–74
 honor to old age in, 2:582 n222e
 on Isaac's birth, 1:204 n71c
 Israel as name in, 2:703 n
 Israel as "the one who sees God" in,
 2:683 n5e
 on Jacob as "The Supplanter," 2:706
 on Jews in sports and theater, 1:887 n10c
 on Logos as "first begotten," 2:674 n on long hair in men, 2:581 n212b
 on luxurious beds, 2:204 n2m
 on man as image of God, 1:427 n8q2
 Memphis in, 2:434
 mixed marriages in, 1:634 n42d
 on morning and evening prayers, 1:897 n4c
 on Moses, 1:922, 2:799 ni, 809 nm, 809 np, 810 nt, 893, 895, 899 n3l
 on Noah, 1:338 n1j
 on number of Jews in Alexandria, 2:523 n4d
 on number ten, 1:345 n2b
 on pagan gods, 2:216 n10v
 on plagues of Egypt, 2:814 nm2
 on prophets' source of knowledge, 2:209 n6r
 Pseudo-Philo not written by, 2:299–300
 Pseudo-Phocylides as parallel to, 2:566
Quaestiones et Solutiones in Genesim et Exodum, 2:845
 rediscovery of, xi–xii
 Sarah's tomb in, 2:389 n3d
 on sexual aberrations, 1:357, 738 n1z2, 2:580 n182g, 581 n190n
 soul as loan from God in, 2:578 n106h
 on stars, 1:121 n11g, 150 n30d
 on Therapeutae, 1:96, 833, 834, 853 n31g, 861 n47a, 866 n48h, 876, 2:262 n8i
 unwritten law in, Noachian law and, 2:569 n
 Wisdom in, 2:485 n
- Philometor, 1:355–56, 366 n3y, 375 n3u3
- Philo the Epic Poet, 2:195, 775, 2:862 n
 introduction to poem of, 2:781–82
 text of fragments of poem of, 2:783–84
- Phinehas (son of Eleazar; Phineas), 1:525, 907, 2:563, 687, 688
 in 3 Enoch, 1:297
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:341, 360–62, 367
 as Elijah, 2:362 n48a
- Phoenicians
 Abraham's teachings to, Pseudo-Eupolemus on,
 2:873, 880, 882
 alphabet of, from Moses, in Eupolemus, 2:865, 875
- Phoenixes
 in 3 Baruch, 1:658, 660, 668–73
 in 2 Enoch, 1:122, 126, 134–35, 660
 in Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:804, 818, 819
- Phrygia, 1:365
 Sibylline Oracles and, 1:332, 339, 341, 366, 371, 396, 410, 437
- Phylacteries
 in Letter of Artisteas, 2:23 np2
 not generally used by women, 1:865 n47i
- Physiognomy
 in Dead Sea Scrolls, 1:250, 568
 literature on, 1:568
 Merkabah, 1:234, 250, 251
 Pindar, 2:230 n16f2, 447, 825 n4c

- Pirkē de-Rabbi Eliezer (book), xxvi, 1:266 n14b, 271 n18h, 296 n45a, 301 n48Aw,
303 n15Be, 350 n2p2, 669 n6c
Adam's repentance in, 2:260 n6b
on angels, 1:136 n21e, 243, 260 n5l, 280 n25m, 2:707 n
Cain's sisters in, 1:992, 994 n3e
on Egyptian bondage, 1:665 n3f
on fall of Adam and Eve, 2:281 n20a, 283 n25d
on God on Mount Sinai, 2:721 ni
number of heavens in, 1:239
as rabbinic pseudepigrapha, xxv
on seventy nations, 1:271 n18e, 285 n30e
Temple in, 2:270 n30a
ten generations in, 1:345 n2b
- Pistis-Sophia (book), 1:238, 409, 413, 2:725 dragon in, 1:666 n4c
Iaō, 2:721 nl
- Plagues
angels of, in 1 Enoch, 1:37
of Egypt. See Egypt, plagues of
in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:272–73
prediction of
in 1 Enoch, 1:72, 87
in Jubilees, 2:113
time of, in 1 Enoch, 1:83
- Plato, 1:328, 2:202 n1e, 230 n16f2
Euthyphro, 1:572 n2b
Gorgias, 1:334, 352 n2x2, 2:538, 828 n10e
Law known by, Aristobulus on, 2:831, 839, 840
Laws, 2:800 nn
4 Maccabees and, 2:537–38, 544 n1d
Meno, 1:345 n2a
Phaedo, 1:287 n33h, 738 n1z2, 2:447
Phaedrus, 1:132 n18g, 341 n1w
Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers influenced by,
2:679 n
Politicus, 1:332 n
Protagoras, 2:210 n7g
Republic, 1:334, 351 n2s2, 352 n2x2, 410, 512 n3c, 847 n18e, 2:823 n
Symposium, 2:799 na, 2:829
Timaeus, 1:121 n1lg, 2:209 n6r, 433 n
- Pliny the Elder, 1:293 n42k, 852 n28g, 976 n16a, 979 n18g2, 2:448
on Jewish magicians, 2:427 n
- Plutarch, 1:320, 2:659 n8p, 827 n8b, 828 n19d
Artapanus and, 2:894 n
elephantiasis in, 2:890
on Juba II, 2:884–85, 887 nd
on kings of Heliopolis as drinking wine moderately, 2:915
- Polybius, 2:524 n5d
on Battle of Raphia, 2:513, 517 n1a, 517 n1b
- Pompey, 1:931 n8a, 2:778, 905
in Psalms of Solomon, 2:641–43, 651 n, 651 n2c, 653 n2q, 653 n2a2–e2, 658 n8, 666–67
- Poor, the alms to. See also Generosity
in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:216
in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:570, 575
in Sibylline Oracles, 1:347
Syriac Menander on, 2:602
in Testament of Jacob, 1:913
in Testament of Job, 1:843
in Vision of Ezra, 1:581, 585, 588, 590
care for. See also Beatitudes
in 2 Enoch, 1:91, 186–89
in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:574
in Testament of Isaac, 1:910
in Testament of Jacob, 1:917, 918
in Testament of Job, 1:835, 841–46,
850 n25a, 854, 863, 868
in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:804, 806–7
despising of, Syriac Menander on, 2:595
God as help to, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:657, 664
for Lord's sake, in Testament of Judah, 1:802
See also Poverty; Social injustice
Poseidon (god), 1:345 n2c, 365, 371 n3y2, 397,
976 n16a
- Potiphar (Potiphara; Pentephres)
Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:850
in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:177, 182, 194, 202– 8, 210, 211, 214, 221, 222, 234–35
in Jubilees, 2:121, 128–30, 135
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:314
Potiphar's wife, 2:210 n7e
in Jubilees, 2:128–29
in Testament of Joseph, 1:819–23, 2:192 n
- Potter's Oracle, 1:323, 356, 357, 368, 375, 376, 440 n11x2, 723–24, 730, 740 n2c2
- Poverty
bitterness of, in Ahiqar, 2:501
hatefulness of, Syriac Menander on, 2:604, 605
See also Poor, the
- Prayer of Joseph, xxii, xxvii, 2:163 n4c2, 183, 607, 723 ni2
Prayer of Jacob and, 2:718 n
- Prayer of Manasseh, x, xi, xxii, xxvii, 2:150, 717
in Ethiopian canon, xxiv
Prayer of Jacob contrasted to, 2:718
repentance in, 2:214 n9c, 625, 628–30, 634–37
- Prayers
to El, in Ahiqar, 2:506 nXIIb
to God. See God, prayers to list of, 2:607
- Precious metals and stones
concealment of, until Last Day, 2:338 n26h fallen angels' teaching about, in 1 Enoch, 1:9, 16
high priest's garments of
in 2 Baruch, 1:623
in Letter of Artisteas, 2:19
idols made of
in 3 Enoch, 1:260
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:350, 357–59
lists of, 2:338 n26d
Pharaoh's gifts of, in Letter of Artisteas, 2:16– 18
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:336–38, 342
- Predestination, in 2 Enoch, 1:140, 176 n49a, 176 n49b
- Pride
in 4 Maccabees, 2:546
in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:576
in Testament of Job, 1:836, 845
- Priesthood
abstinence from wine by, Hecataeus of Abdera
on, 2:915, 918
ancestral book renewed by, 2:45
anointing of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321

- Priesthood (Cont.)
 anointing of afflicted by, in Testament of Adam, 1:993 corruption of, 1:930 n7e
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:643, 645, 651, 652, 659
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:375–76
 in Testament of Levi, 1:793–94
 in Testament of Moses, 1:930
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:952, 968
 “filling the hands” as term for ordination to, 1:932 n10a
 hard work of, in Letter of Artisteas, 2:19 Jewish vs. Christian beliefs in, 1:96 of Levi. See Levi
 of Nir, in 2 Enoch, 1:200–205, 210 obligations of, in Testament of Isaac, 1:903, 907–8
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:753
 as “sons of Jerusalem,” 2:652 n2d
 tithes to, Hecataeus of Abdera on, 2:914, 915, 917 Urim and Thummin used by, 2:397 n22c, 398 wickedness in, Syriac Menander on, 2:599–600
See also High priest; Melchizedek; Sacrifices; Temple
- Prince of the Divine Presence (Sár happānim), 1:242–43, 248, 251, 264 n10g, 274 n18e2
 allowed behind God’s curtain, 1:296 n45a
 Metatron as, 1:242, 256, 257, 259, 303 n15Bb, 304, 312
- Prince of the World, 1:229, 243
 in 3 Enoch, 1:244, 257 n3c, 263 n9d, 270 n17q, 285, 290
- Prince of Understanding, 1:237, 264, 315
- Prince of Wisdom, 1:237, 243, 264, 314, 315
- Princes of kingdoms, 1:243
 in 3 Enoch, 1:244, 257 n3c, 270, 271, 285
- Princes of the Torah, 1:243, 272, 314, 315
- Prophecy
 Balaam’s, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:326
 Levi’s gift of, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:191
 in Sibylline Oracles, compared to Greek drama, 1:319
See also Oracles
- Prophets
 cessation of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:343
 in 3 Enoch, 1:315
 eschatological, 1:827 n2a
 false
 in Exodus, 1:731
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:349, 413
 in Testament of Judah, 1:801
 inner light as source of knowledge of, 2:209 n6r
 as intercessors, in Lives of the Prophets, 2:383 Israel’s persecution of, 2:382
 as judges, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:379
 laziness of, in Lives of the Prophets, 2:394
 memorials for, 2:381, 383 miracles by, in Lives of the Prophets, 2:385–89, 391, 394, 396–98
 as “ones who see,” 2:371
 as sleeping, in 2 Baruch, 1:651
See also specific prophets
- Prostitutes
 hanging up of, 1:113 n7e
 of Jerusalem, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:652 as “polluted and evaporating water,” in Syriac Menander, 2:599 sacred, in Testament of Moses, 1:931 n8c
 widows as. See Widows, as prostitutes wives as, warning against, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:580
- Proverbs (book)
 Ahiqar and, 1:485, 486–87, 490, 500 nVIIg, 501 nVIIIa, 505 nXg, 506 nXIId
 Apocalypse of Daniel and, 1:759
 Doctrine of the Two Ways in, 1:427 n8p2
 4 Maccabees and, 2:564
 Martyrdom of Isaiah and, 2:163
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:731, 740 n7f, 763 n33e
 Psalms of Solomon and, 2:646
 Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:572, 575 n50b, 580 n170i, 580 n174j, 582 n226i
 Syriac Menander and, 2:586
- Proverbs (in general), in Ahiqar, 2:482, 484, 498–507
See also Pseudo-Phocylides; Syriac Menander
- Psalms (book), xxi, xxviii
 Ahiqar and, 2:487
 Apocalypse of Abraham and, 1:689 n1a, 692 n7a
 Apocalypse of Daniel and, 1:759
 canonization of, 2:607
 on David and Hades, 1:514 n9a
 in Dead Sea Scrolls (11QPs), 1:844 n14a, 2:609, 610
 text of, 2:612–13, 615
 Doctrine of the Two Ways in, 1:427 n8p2
 2 Enoch and, 1:189 n63e
 3 Enoch and, 1:277 n22e
 Ezekiel the Tragedian and, 2:816 nd3
 Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers and, 2:673
 History of Joseph and, 2:475 nd2
 Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:185 n
 Jubilees and, 2:49
 keystone prophecy in, 1:936, 954, 984, 985
 3 Maccabees and, 2:514
 Martyrdom of Isaiah and, 2:163
 meals in, 2:212 n8i
 Melchizedek in, 1:785 n6e, 794 n18a
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:731, 737 n5f, 737 n5g, 745 n11m, 747 n14a, 761 n29e, 766 n38a
 “perfect Torah” in, 1:264 n11b
 Prayer of Manasseh and, 2:630
 Psalms of Solomon and, 2:641, 646–47, 651 n1e, 663 n14, 663 n14b
 Pseudo-Philo and, 2:301
 Sibylline Oracles and, 1:357
 Testament of Adam and, 1:991, 992
 Testament of Job and, 1:850 n25a
 Testament of Solomon and, 1:954
See also David, More Psalms of Psalms of Joshua, 1:784 n6c, 794 n18b, 827 n9a
 Psalms of Solomon (book), xxviii, 1:625 n13b
 Apocalypse of Elijah and, 1:732
 4 Ezra and, 1:523
 Messiah in, xxxii, 1:630 n29b, 2:639, 641–46, 666–70
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:731, 732, 741 n18b, 749 n16b, 759 n28a, 760 n28b, 767 n38q
 Prayer of Jacob and, 2:718
 repentance in, 2:214 n9c
 resurrection in, xxxiii, 2:645, 654, 655

- Pseudepigrapha
 general discussions of, xxiv–xix
 hiding of, 1:438 n11m2
 list of abbreviations for, xlv–xlviii, xlviii
 Merkabah texts and, 1:247–49
- Pseudo-Athanasius, xxi–xxii, 1:495 n4b, 683, 2:464, 639
Synopsis scripturae sacrae (Synopsis of the Sacred Scripture), 1:499–500, 728
- Pseudo-Clementine Recognitions, 1:384 nc, 2:184, 272 n36a
 God's rest in, 1:143 n24h
- Pseudo-Eustathius, 2:803, 806, 819 nw3, 819 ny3
- Pseudo-Hecataeus, 2:777, 825, 835
 Artapanus and, 2:894
 introduction to, 2:905–8
 text of and comment on, 2:909–19
- Pseudo-Jonathan (targum), xxxi, 2:428, 432, 469, 856
 Eldad and Modad in, 2:464
- Pseudo-Justin, 2:568 n, 777, 778 n, 814 nn2, 821, 912
 fragments of pseudo-Greek poets in, 2:821, 824–29
 Orphica in, 2:795–96
 uncertain dates of, 2:821
- Pseudo-Philo, Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum (LAB), xvi, 2:607
 2 Baruch and, 1:619–20
 Dinah in, 2:300, 314, 856
 on inner light, 2:209 n6r, 336
 introduction to, 2:297–303
 on Jacob's angelic opponent, 2:708
 Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:184
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:745 n11q, 746 n11x
 possible Solomon prophecy in, 1:945, 2:373 n60e
 text of, 2:304–77
- Pseudo-Phocylides (book), 2:195
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:730
 resurrection in, xxxiii
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:330, 333, 412
 Syriac Menander and, 2:587
- Ptolemies
 Aristobulus dedicates books to, 2:832–33, 834
 in Daniel, 1:812 n5c
 in Demetrius the Chronographer, 2:844, 854
 in Eupolemus, 2:863, 871–72
 Ezekiel the Tragedian written during reign of, 2:804
 Hecataeus of Abdera on, 2:914, 916, 917
 Josephus on elephant outrage by, 2:510–11
 in Letter of Artisteas, 2:7, 8, 12–16, 24–34
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:387
 in 3 Maccabees, 2:509, 513–28, 890
 peasantry in army of, 2:891, 899
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:355–56, 358, 366 n3y, 369 n3g2, 372 n3g3, 440 n11z2
 translations of Scriptures under, 2:835
- Punishment
 of Adam and Eve. See Adam and Eve, fall of angels of. See Angels, of destruction; Angels, of punishment and hell because of man's understanding, in 2 Baruch, 1:626
 as befits deeds (crimes)
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:561, 574–77
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:653, 654
 in Vision of Ezra, 1:584, 590
 by blindness, in 3 Baruch, 1:665
 by death, in Testament of Abraham, 1:877, 891
 of Enoch, in 3 Enoch, 1:268
 eternal
 in 4 Maccabees, 2:538, 557, 563
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:816, 827
 by fire. See Fire, of punishment for fornication. See Fornication, punishment for "hanging" in, 1:113 n7e, 568, 583
 in 2 Enoch, 1:112
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:562, 575, 577
 in Vision of Ezra, 1:588
 for injury of souls, in 2 Enoch, 1:186–87
 of Jannes, 2:431
 as just, in Prayer of Manasseh, 2:629, 634, 636
 leniency of, recommended, in Letter of Artisteas, 2:25
 in life, as atonement, 1:891 n14d
 by lions' eating, in Testament of Isaac, 1:908–9
 no escape from, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 307, 359
 respite from, through prayer. See Sinners, pleas for mercy to of Sodom and Gomorrah, in Jubilees, 1:88
 of stars, in 1 Enoch, 1:23, 24, 64, 70–71
 of two-faced, in Testament of Asher, 1:818 of Watchers, in 1 Enoch, 1:17–18, 20
 whether eternal, 1:245
 by worms. See Worms, of punishment
See also Hell; Last Judgment; Sinners; Sins
- Purification
 laws of, in Jubilees, 2:35, 40, 59
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:582
 Put (son of Ham), 2:69, 74, 308, 310
- Pythagoras
 Hermippus on Jewish philosophy of, 2:909
 Law known by, in Aristobulus, 2:831, 839, 840
 verses attributed to, 2:824
- Q (abbreviations beginning with this letter refer to the Dead Sea Scrolls) See Dead Sea Scrolls; Qumran community
- Qohelet Rabbah (Ecc1R), 1:284 n30b, 293 n43b, 293 n43c, 647 n77c
 on intercessory prayer, 1:891 n14b
- Questions of Ezra (book), xxii, 1:576 n4o, 576 n5c
 other Ezra books and, 1:563, 569, 585, 594
- Questions of God (riddles)
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:699
 in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:611
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:565, 573, 574, 1:790, 802–3, 811, 819, 825, 2:786
 in Theodotus, 2:785, 791
- Qumran community
 as antechamber of heaven, 2:718 n
 "covenant" as term for, 1:737 n1r2
 dualism of, 1:96
 Hasmoneans and, 1:929 n5a
Rabbim, 2:617
 sexual abstinence at, 1:205 n71d
 Temple and, 1:356, 384 n4c, 617 n
See also Dead Sea Scrolls; Essenes

- Rabbinic writings, xxvi–xxvii
 list of abbreviations for, xlix–l Merkabah texts and, 1:234
 number of heavens in, 1:239
See also specific writings
- Rachel, 2:203, 313, 364
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:848–51
 in Jubilees, 2:109–11, 117, 118, 120, 135
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:790, 802–3, 811, 819, 825, 2:786
- Rahatī'ek, 1:267, 269 n17g, 270, 299
- Rain
 control of
   in Testament of Adam, 1:995
   in Treatise of Shem, 1:476
 God's denial of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:359
 God's promise of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321, 322, 333
 lacking, in History of the Rechabites, 2:456
 prayers for, 1:476, 477
 source of
   in 3 Baruch, 1:672–75
   in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:692, Pseudo-Philo, 2:327–28
   in Theodotus, 2:785, 791
- Ramiel, 1:350 n2p2, 513 n6c, 674 n11e
- Rape
 attempted, of Sarah and Rachel, 1:790, 2:786
 of Dinah, 1:788, 790, 2:112, 314, 706 n, 785, 849–50 injunction against, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:581
 in last days, in 2 Baruch, 1:630
 by Nero, 1:446 n12k
See also Bilhah
- Raphael
 in 3 Baruch, 1:658, 666
 binding of demons by, 1:963 n1p
 in 1 Enoch, 1:17, 23, 28, 38, 47, 50, 247
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:571, 577
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:291
 in Masseket Hekalot, 1:271 n18h
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:333, 350
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:935, 936, 937 n, 953–55, 966, 974, 978
 YHWH in name of, 1:285 n30d
- Rashi, 1:296 n45a, 949
 on God's name, 1:310 n48Bb
 on treasure-house of souls, 1:294 n43i
- Rebecca, 1:790, 811, 914, 2:203
 in Jubilees, 2:26, 92, 93, 97, 99, 104–6, 108, 112, 114, 116, 118, 120, 122
- Rechab, 2:450, 454, 455, 461 n18a
- Redemption
 final, in age of iniquity, 1:301 n48Ak
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:678, 682, 685, 690
 Levi as agent of, in Testament of Levi, 1:779, 794–95
See also Christ, the; Messiah
- Red Sea
 demon of, in Testament of Solomon, 1:936–37, 985–86
 parting of. See under Exodus, the
- Reputation
 God's control of, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:30
 Syriac Menander on, 2:591, 603
- Resurrection, xxxii, xxxiii
 angelic nature after, in Matthew, 1:139 n22p
 in Apocryphon of Ezekiel, 1:489, 492
 in 2 Baruch, xxxiii, 638, 646 n75b, 2:275 n62d
 in 4 Baruch, 2:413, 416, 421 n6b
 Bogomil lack of belief in, 1:685
 in Daniel, xxxiii, 1:512 n5a, 787 n6d
 death in the Holy Land and, 1:855 n33i
 in Didache, 1:349 n212
 in 1 Enoch, 1:36
 in 2 Enoch, xxxiii, 1:168, 192–93, 221, 890 n13a
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:674, 675, 680, 686, 693, 697
 in History of the Rechabites, xxxiii, 2:446, 460
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:254, 273, 274 n42a, 275, 293–95
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:382
 4 Maccabees and, xxxiii, 2:539
 not in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:194
 Odes of Solomon's different concept of, 2:731 n
 in Psalms of Solomon, xxxiii, 2:645, 654, 655
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:569, 571, 577–78
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:323, 333, 343, 350–51, 361, 389, 409, 417, 423, 427
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:878
 in Testament of Job, 1:835, 841, 859 n39e
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:780, 801–2, 807, 828
See also Christ, the, resurrection of; Immortality; Righteous ones
- Reu, 1:907, 2:40, 76, 78, 308, 309
- Reuben
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:848, 849, 851
 in History of Joseph, 2:467, 469, 474
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:177, 245
 in Jubilees, 2:110, 119–21, 128, 133, 135
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:314
 "Reubel" as variant of, 2:849 n4a
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:790, 796, 797, 801, 802, 805–6, 814. See also Testament of Reuben
 tribe of, 2:392, 397
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:317, 331, 335, 338
See also Bilhah
- Reuel, 2:313, 2:853, 856, 859
- Re'uyot Yehezqe'l (book), 1:241, 250, 260 n5k, 294 n43i, 300 n48Ah
 angels in, 1:279 n25c, 289 n36d
 creation of, 1:292 n40i
 Metatron, 1:229, 258 n3c, 263 n9d, 313 n48Dd, 314 n48Df
 chariots in, 1:308 n
 heavens in, 1:239, 240, 248
- Revelation (book)
 Apocalypse of Daniel and, 1:756–61, 768 n9d2
 Apocalypse of Elijah and, 1:725, 729, 732
 Apocalypse of Zephaniah and, 1:504–5
 canonicity of, xxiii, xxiv
 eagle image and, 1:813 n5c
 1 Enoch and, 1:10
 3 Enoch and, 1:247
 4 Ezra and, 1:522
 girdles in, 2:225 n14u
 Greek language of, 1:686
 hypostatic voice in, 2:450 n1h
 Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:195
 Sibylline Oracles and, 1:361, 392, 396 n5i2, 409 n, 422 n8d2, 467 n14e2

- tribe of Dan omitted from, 1:767 n8b
 Vision of Ezra and, 1:585, 590 nz5
 zodiac in, 1:478 n
- Revelations
 interpreter of, 1:675
 precise transmission of, 1:663 nlh
 secret name in, 2:701 n
See also Apocalypses
- Rhea, 1:365, 371, 396, 975 n15b
- Rich people (wealthy people)
 in Ahiqar, 2:487, 504, 507
 caution against visits to, in Syriac Menander, 2:600
 excessively, as sinners, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:657
 God's blessings to, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:26 injustice by, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:574 insolence or conceit of, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:576
 punishment for, in 1 Enoch, 1:34–35
 Sibylline Oracles on, 1:348
 whether good people often are, Syriac Menander on, 2:604
 woe to, in 1 Enoch, 1:75
See also Kings; Money; Social injustice
- Riddles
 in Testament of Job, 1:858
 in wisdom motif, 1:857 n36b
See also God, riddle on name of; Questions of God - Righteousness
 angel of, in 4 Baruch, 2:423, 424 deeds of value performed out of, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:30 exhortations to, in Odes of Solomon, 7:728 fountains of, in 1 Enoch, 1:35
 freedom from sorrow as fruit of, 2:28
 garden of, in 1 Enoch, 1:56
 of God. See God, righteousness of God on reason for, in 2 Baruch, 1:626–27
 of Law, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:23–24
 love of, in 1 Enoch, 1:75
 mysteries of, Pseudo-Phocylides on, 2:582
 week of, in 1 Enoch, 1:73
See also Teacher of Righteousness
- Righteous ones
 as above angels in heaven, in 2 Baruch, 1:638
 in Ahiqar, 2:485
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:700
 in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:502, 503
 beauty of, in Odes of Solomon, 2:748 chambers for souls of. See Souls, storehouses of characteristics of. in Psalms of Solomon, 2:654–55 crowns for. See Crowns, of righteous
 in Dead Sea Scrolls, 1:139 n22p
 Death's approach to, in Testament of Abraham, 1:893
 drawing bow against, in Ahiqar, 2:502–3
 in 1 Enoch, 1:39–40, 50, 72–73, 76, 80–86
 in 2 Enoch, 1:158–59, 168–69, 192–95, 221
 in 3 Enoch, 1:223, 245, 293–94
 in 4 Ezra, 1:528, 531, 537, 539, 540, 543–45, 554, 555
 four, rabbinic tradition on, 2:375 n62c
 garments of life of, 1:274 n18i2
 God's discipline of. See God, discipline by
- God's marking of
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:736–37
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:664
- God's testing of. See also Job
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:644, 665
- in heaven
 in 3 Baruch, 1:673, 678
 in History of the Rechabites, 2:446
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:190, 194, 227, 239
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:254
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 328
 in Testament of Dan, 1:810
 heavenly bowl for virtues of, in 3 Baruch, 1:675
 in History of the Rechabites, 2:457
 hour of joy of, in Testament of Adam, 1:993
 immediately after death
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:699–700, 890 n13b
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:737
 in 4 Ezra, 1:540
 in Questions of Ezra, 1:591, 594, 597, 599
- immortality of
 in 1 Enoch, 1:84
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:213, 245
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:349, 353, 427, 471
 intercession by. See Sinners, pleas for mercy to
 "men of faith" as, 1:315 n48Dv
- oil as reward for, in 3 Baruch, 1:658, 677
- Pardes as place for souls of, 1:230–31
- pass through fire
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:890
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:909
 in Vision of Ezra, 1:587, 588
- persecution and suffering of
 in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:158
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:644
- sinners observed by, 1:752 n5a3
- souls unwillingly given up by, 1:565–66
 in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:611–13
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:577–78
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:871, 879, 886–87, 891–95
- ultimate justice to
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:654, 655
 in Testament of Joseph, 1:826
- as "unworthy," 1:886 n9a
- in Vision of Isaiah, 2:154, 171–72
- world created for, 1:922 n
- See also* Elect ones; Paradise; Resurrection; Saints; Salvation
- Rivers
 of fear, dread, hail and darkness, in 3 Enoch, 1:306 of fire. See Fire, rivers of
 of joy, in 3 Enoch, 1:305
 power of Lord compared to, in Odes of Solomon, 2:768 vanishing of, in Testament of Moses, 1:932
- Rock
 as foundation, in Odes of Solomon, 2:755
 as made from water, in 2 Enoch, 1:104 n1al, 143 n25a, 146–47
- Roman Catholic Church
 canonical books of, xxiii, xxiv
 deuterocanonical books of, xxiv, xxvii
 early fathers of, xxii, xlviii–xlix
See also Church

- Romanian (Rumanian) language
 Ahiqar in, 2:480, 492
 4 Baruch in, 2:413
 Joseph and Aseneth in, 2:179, 181, 196, 200
 Testament of Abraham in, 1:871, 888 n11g,
 889 n12c
- Romans (epistle)
 Ahiqar and, 2:488
 2 Baruch and, 1:619
 1 Enoch and, 1:10
 4 Ezra and, 1:522
 homosexuality in, 2:581 n189n
 Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:195, 240 n23s
 Lesbian love in, 2:581 n192p
 Life of Adam and Eve and, 2:255
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:744 n11f
 Testament of Job and, 1:842 n7b
- Rome (ancient)
 Ahiqar possibly in mosaic of, 2:492
 Babylon as symbolic name for, 1:396 n5i2,
 557 n15f
 claw torture of, 1:297 n45h
 destruction of
 in 2 Baruch, 1:633 n39a
 in 4 Ezra, 1:532 n5b, 557 n15f
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:331, 345, 358, 363, 366 n3w, 370, 397, 412–13, 416, 418–22
 in Egypt, 1:355, 2:511
 eschatology in resistance to, 1:323
 4 Ezra possibly composed in, 1:520
 imperial court in, 1:241–42
 imperialism of, 1:9
 Isles of the Blest as idea of, 2:447 Jewish wars against, 1:235, 2:187. See also under Temple, destruction of magic as crime in, 1:956
 misconduct of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:357, 391, 397, 402, 417
 numerical values for emperors of, 1:393–94, 760
 Prince of (angel). See Samma'el rise of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:386–87 savior-king of, in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:760, 764
 Sibylline oracles of, 1:319–20, 328
 statues of emperors of, 2:162 n4i, 511
 in Treatise of Shem, 1:474, 481–86
See also Byzantine Empire; Romulus and Remus; Stoicism; specific emperors
- Romulus and Remus, 1:393 n5c, 431, 437, 441 n11f3, 445 n12d
- Rosh Hashanah (book), 1:245, 279 n25g, 283 n28g, 284 n30b, 889 n12d
 Isaac's birth in, 2:333 n23e
 New Year in, 1:477 n, 2:321 n13f
 souls in, 1:294 n44a, 295 n44e, 891 n14a
- Sabaō, 1:979 n18y
 God as, 1:237, 979, 2:513. See also God, as Sabaoth
- Sabbath
 calendrical issues over, xxxiii, 1:105 n1c
 cosmic significance of, Aristobulus on, 2:831, 834, 841–42
 God's institution of, in Hellenistic Synagoga
 Prayers, 2:682, 683
 God's rest on
 in 2 Enoch, 1:154
 in Genesis, 1:143 n24h
- Kiddush prayer of, Hellenistic Synagoga Prayers and, 2:672
 observance of
 in 2 Baruch, 1:651
 in 2 Enoch, 1:105 n1c, 154
 in Jubilees, 2:39, 40, 57–58, 68, 142
 profanation of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:336, 358
 refusal to fight on, in 1 Maccabees, 2:45
 Sibyl and, 1:318
- Sackcloth
 in History of the Rechabites, 2:454
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:215–25
- Sacraments, meal formula in Joseph and Aseneth compared to, 2:212 n8i
See also specific sacraments
- Sacred days. See Feast days; specific days
- Sacrifices (offerings)
 by Abraham
 in Jubilees, 2:89
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:333
 Abraham on method of, in Jubilees, 2:95–96
 by Adam, in Jubilees, 2:60
 Aeschylus (possibly) on, 2:826
 of animals. See Animals, sacrificial of boys, in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:701–2 defiled by menstruation, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:659
 by Enoch, in Jubilees, 2:63, 95, 95 n21d
 by Gentiles, in Jubilees, 2:98
 by God, in Odes of Solomon, 2:740
 God's command to Moses on, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321
 in heaven, in Testament of Levi, 1:789
 to idols
 in Testament of Job, 1:840. See also Idol worship
 by impious
 in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:609
 Greek poets on, 2:829–30
 of Isaac. See Isaac, Abraham's planned sacrifice
 of
 by Isaac, in Jubilees, 2:97
 by Jacob, in Jubilees, 1:117, 118
 by Job, in Testament of Job, 1:845 by Joshua and by tribes around Jordan, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:330–32
 by Levi, in Jubilees, 2:117
 mercy preferred to, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:330, 347, 427
 by Noah, in Jubilees, 2:66, 69
 of Passover, in Jubilees, 2:140–41
 period of time in world without, in 4 Ezra, 1:547
 priests' plundering of, in Testament of Levi, 1:793
 pure hearts preferred to, in 2 Enoch, 1:172–73
 by Sampson's father, 2:356
 of Seila by Jephthah, 2:353–54
 sending off dove as alternative to, in Sibylline
 Oracles, 1:412
 by Solomon at opening of Temple, Eupolemus
 on, 2:870
 taught to Levi, in Testament of Levi, 1:791, 792
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:907, 908
 in Testament of Jacob, 1:915
See also Temple
- Saints
 Antichrist's persecution of, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:748–49, 751

- fertility of earth due to, 1:736 n/m, 736 n/n, 751
- heavenly robes of, in Ascension of Isaiah, 2:157, 162
- intercession by, in Testament of Jacob, 1:918
See also Righteous ones
- Salvation
- in 2 Baruch, 1:618, 647
  - by faith. See Faith, salvation by
  - of few
    - in 4 Ezra, 1:521, 538–39, 541, 542
    - in Testament of Abraham, 1:888, 899
  - of gentiles. See Gentiles; Nations, God revealed to all
  - God's promise of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:322
  - instantaneous, in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:613
  - not a doctrine in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:192
  - Odes of Solomon on, 2:728, 729–30, 735, 737, 744, 748, 750–51, 754, 757–58, 764–67, 769
  - patriarchs as model for, in Prayer of Joseph, 2:705
  - by tribes of Judah and Levi, in Testament of Dan, 1:809
  - of unbaptized, in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:607, 613
  - by writing or reading or hearing about
    - Patriarchs, in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:910, 915
- See also* Righteous ones
- Samael (Samael, Sammael)
- as angel of death, 1:886 n8e, 892 n16f
  - as Antichrist, 1:770 n14i
  - in 3 Baruch, 1:658, 667, 673
  - in Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah, 1:350 n2p2, 667 n4r, 2:151, 157, 160, 164, 166
  - as Merkabah archon, 1:236–37
  - in Solomonic texts, 1:937 n, 938, 987 n25f
- See also* Samma'el; Satanail
- Samaritans
- on Adam's burial place, 2:293 n40g
  - in 4 Baruch, 2:416, 423
  - Cleodemus Malchus and, 2:885
  - Jubilee and, 2:46
  - in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:143, 150–52, 158–59
  - Paradises of, 2:268 n25a
  - Pseudo-Eupolemus and, 2:874, 875
  - Pseudo-Philo and, 2:319 n11p
  - Theodotus and, 2:785–86
- See also* Good Samaritan
- Samma'el (Prince of the Accusers; Prince of Rome), in 3 Enoch, 1:236, 243, 245, 266, 281
- Sampson (Samson)
- in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:684
  - in Pseudo-Philo, 2:302, 355–57
- Samson. See Sampson
- Samuel
- in 3 Enoch, 1:297, 301
  - Eupolemus on, 2:866
  - in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:684, 685, 688
  - in More Psalms of David, 2:613
  - Moses compared to, 1:301 n48A1
  - in Pseudo-Philo, 2:301, 365–72, 376–77
- See also* Samael
- Samuel, Rabbi, 2:389 n3d
- 1 Samuel (book), 2:40
- Apocalypse of Adam and, 1:718 n7u
- Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:185
- More Psalms of David and, 2:609
- Pseudo-Philo and, 2:297, 300
- “singing” cows in, 1:231
- warrior's abstinence in, 1:205 n71d
- 2 Samuel (book), 2:40
- funeral rite in, 1:509 n1b
  - lost book mentioned in, xxi
  - Pseudo-Philo and, 2:297
  - Testament of Solomon and, 1:940
- Sanctus (Qeduššah; “holy, holy, holy”); trisagion
- in 4 Baruch, 2:424
  - in 3 Enoch, 1:223, 226, 227, 240, 245, 256–57, 276, 277, 282, 288–92, 304–5, 310–11
  - in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 1:672, 680, 694
  - in Isaiah, 1:246
  - in Ladder of Jacob, 2:408
  - led by Israel the angel, 2:702, 708
  - in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:295 n43c
  - Merkabah adepts' desire to join in, 1:234
  - in Testament of Abraham, 1:895 n20i
  - in Testament of Adam, 1:993, 995
- Sanhedrin (book), 1:229, 243–46, 258 n3c, 259 n148h, 260 n5f, 268 n16g, 285 n31f, 294 n44a, 297 n45h, 633 n41a, 889 n12i, 2:324 n16e, 395 n19a
- on Adam's view of the future, 1:296 n45c
  - Assyrian defeat in, 1:643 n63a, 643 n63b
  - on castration, 2:581 n187k
  - on earthly Sanhedrin, 1:285 n30e
  - Eldad and Modad in, 2:464 n
  - on Ezra, 1:566
  - final redemption in, 1:301 n48Ak
  - heavenly law court in, 1:244, 282 n27g, 283 n28c, 284 n30b, 285 n31e
  - incantation text condemned by, 1:315 n48Dw
  - Isaiah's death in, 2:151, 385 n1a
  - joy to suffer in, 1:639 n52b
  - lame man and blind man in, 1:487, 493
  - on Manasseh, 1:643 n64a–65a
  - Messiah in, 1:295 n44g
  - on Metatron, 1:235, 303 n15Be, 313 n48De
  - on “primeval ones,” 1:259 n41
  - salvation in, 1:877 n
  - sleeping prophets in, 1:651 n85c
  - on Tower of Babel, 1:659, 665 n3e
  - tree of life as vine in, 1:667 n4q
- Sanhedrin (court or council)
- heavenly counterpart of. See Heaven, law court of
  - mercy vs. justice in, 1:285 n31a
  - number of members of, 1:285 n30e
  - in Psalms of Solomon, 2:641, 655
- Sarah (wife of Abraham; Sarai), 1:204 n71c, 763 n1h, 2:35, 36, 876, 881
- Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:185, 189, 203
  - in Jubilees, 2:80, 82, 83, 85–88, 90–92, 100, 123
  - in Lives of the Prophets, 2:389
  - in Pseudo-Philo, 2:313, 332–33
  - in Testament of Abraham, 1:880, 883–86, 891, 895, 897, 898, 901
  - in Testament of Levi, 1:790, 2:786
- Sariel (angel), 1:350 n2p2
- as alternative name for Phanuel, 2:709
  - in Codex Neofiti, 2:708
  - in Ladder of Jacob, 2:402, 403, 405, 406, 408–9

Satan

Adam and Eve corrupted by. See Adam and Eve, fall of air as domain of, in Ephesians, 1:110 n3e authority of, from God, in Testament of Job, 1:835, 842
 in 3 Baruch, 1:658
 Bogomil beliefs on, 1:141 n23h, 154 n31d
 burning of tablets of, in 3 Enoch, 1:281 chains of, in 1 Enoch, 1:37
 as creator of world, in Book of St. John, 1:141 n23h disguises of, 1:842 n6c, 848 n23a, 2:260–61
 face of, in John the Evangelist, 1:137 n22d
 in fifth heaven, in 2 Enoch, 1:130 freeing of soul from, in Questions of Ezra, 1:593, 598, 599
 in heavenly law court, in 3 Enoch, 1:245
 in History of the Rechabites, 2:458, 461 n18c
 Ladder of Jacob and, 2:404
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:249, 260–62, 291
 in Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah, 2:151, 157 n1w, 157 n1y, 158, 164, 166, 175, 176 messengers of, in 1 Enoch, 1:38
 pride of, 1:568
 as Prince of Error, 1:737 n1o2
 rebellion and fall of
   in 2 Enoch, 1:114 n7g, 143 n25a, 148, 2:262 n12a
   in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 262
   in New Testament, 2:262 n12a. See also Angels, fallen redemption of, in Origen, 1:139 n22p
 storm wind of, in 3 Enoch, 1:307
 in Testament of Dan, 1:808–10
 in Testament of Job, 1:829, 833–36, 840–42, 845–51, 857 n37b
 world dominated by, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:735, 736
See also Antichrist; Belial; Devil; Lucifer; Mastema; Samael; Satanail Satanail (Satanael), 1:114 n7g, 114 n7i, 130, 131 n18d, 148, 154
 in 3 Baruch, 1:658, 660, 666, 672
 in Bogomil doctrine, 1:684
See also Satan
 Saul (king of Israel)
 Eupolemus on, 2:866
 in Pseudo-Philo, 1:945, 2:300, 369–77
 Savior
 Joseph as, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:243
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:391–92, 403, 453
See also Christ, the; Illuminator; Messiah Sawing in half
 in Hebrews, 2:383
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:385
 in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:149, 151, 163–64
 Science
 2 Enoch as possible attempt to reconcile Bible with, 1:143 n25a forbidden, fallen angels' teaching of, in 1 Enoch, 1:9, 16, 17, 44, 45, 48
See also Astrology; Magic Scriptures
 allegorical interpretation of, 2:834–35
 chronography of, 2:852 n18d
 Demetrius the Chronographer's concern for, 2:844
 in Eupolemus, 2:861, 871–72

false, in 1 Enoch, 1:85
 given to righteous ones, in 1 Enoch, 1:85–86 sacred quality of, Pseudo-Hecataeus on, 2:15, 905, 911–12
See also Law; Septuagint
 Seder 'Olam (Seder Olam), 1:311 n48Cb, 2:361 n47e, 371 n57a, 848 n3b
 Seder Rabbah diBere'shit (book), 1:239, 269 n17f, 273 n18a2, 290 n37a, 292 n42a, 293 n42d, 293 n42f
 angels in, 1:266 n14a, 289 n36d, 289 n36f
   at Sanctus (Qeduššah), 1:291 n40a, 291 n40c, 291 n40d
 Segansag'el, 1:265 n13a, 296 n45c, 314 n48Di
 Šekinah
 in Alphabet of Meṭatron, 1:265 n12a
 angels' nourishment from, 1:259 n5c, 278 n22j
 camps of, in 3 Enoch, 1:256, 271, 288, 290, 310
 in 3 Enoch, 1:241, 259–62, 262 n8a, 268, 273, 278, 282, 289–91, 295, 300, 304, 309, 311
 resting on Jerusalem, 2:721 ni
 "wings" of, 1:262 n7c
 Selah (Shela), 2:130, 131, 135, 314
 Šemot Rabbah (book), 1:243, 244, 266 n14b, 285 n30e, 292 n40i, 295 n44q, 301 n48Al
 building of Temple in, 1:943 n
 on Moses on Sinai, 1:314 n48Dm
 Semyaz (Semyaza), 1:15, 17, 18, 47, 131 n18d
 Seneca, 1:293 n42k, 318 n, 369 n3j2, 392, 398 n5y2, 405 n5j4, 420 n8n, 2:567, 827 n8b
 Sennacherib (Sennachereim), 1:642–43, 2:483, 484, 489, 494, 526, 685, 854
 Seper HaRazim (Sefer HaRazim; book), 1:229 n, 251, 286 n32a, 294 n43b, 566 angels in, 1:277 n22e, 278 n22k, 280 n26g, 281 n26m, 289 n36d, 289 n36f, 306 n22Cm
 on horses, 1:270 n18a
 Marmaroth, 1:970 n8h
 Meṭatron and Yaho'el, 1:244
 Qaspi'el, 1:255 n1f
 similar to lions, 1:303 n15Bh
 sin'an, 1:262 n7g
 thrones, 1:263 n10b
 "camps" in, 1:256 n1i
 God's title in, 1:256 n1h
 heaven described in, 1:240, 242, 248, 249, 273 n18a2
 Men of Knowledge in, 1:315 n48Dv
 on Solomon, 1:949
 Septuagint
 Aristobulus' mention of, 2:835
 Cleodemus Malchus and spelling of names in, 2:884
 Demetrius the Chronographer's knowledge of, 2:844
 Eupolemus' use of, 2:862–63
 Ezekiel the Tragedian's use of, 2:805
 Greek translations of Scriptures before
 Aristobulus on, 2:831, 835, 839
 Demetrius the Chronographer as evidence for, 2:844–45 in Letter of Aristeas, 2:7, 12–16, 32–34, 837 n1d, 839 n3c, 890 n Pseudo-Eupolemus' knowledge of, 2:876 used by conservative Jewish communities, 2:726

- Septuagint addition to the Book of Job, 2:856–57, 859
- Septuagint (LXX)
- Demiurge in, 1:714 n4a
  - Greek Apocalypse of Ezra and, 1:569
  - Joseph and Aseneth compared to Greek of, 2:185
  - Lucian's revision of, 2:510
- Seraphim
- derivation of name of, 1:280 n26m
  - in 1 Enoch, 1:10, 50
  - in 2 Enoch, 1:134
  - in 3 Enoch, 1:242, 256, 261, 262, 281, 286–87, 292, 300, 311
  - in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:690, 694
  - in History of the Rechabites, 2:460
  - in Isaiah, 1:246
  - in Jubilees, 2:61, 93, 97
  - in Ladder of Jacob, 2:408
  - in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 289
  - in magical formulae, 1:979 n18y, 981
  - in Questions of Ezra, 1:598
  - in Testament of Adam, 1:991, 993, 995
  - in Testament of Isaac, 1:903, 910
- Servants
- bad, Syriac Menander on, 2:585, 593, 596
  - impurity with, Syriac Menander on, 2:602
  - sins of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:352
  - See also* Slaves
- Sesostris (pharaoh), 2:804, 892, 897 n2c, 898 n3j, 899 n3m
- Seth (Sith), 1:29, 156–57, 208–9, 787 n6c, 828, 907, 2:171
- Apocalypse of Adam to, 1:707, 712, 719
  - Gospel of the Egyptians and, 1:715 n6a, 719 n8d
  - in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:687, 688, 693
  - Hymn of the First Stele of, 2:607
  - in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:249, 251, 254, 256, 266–67, 289, 290, 292, 294, 295
  - in Pseudo-Philo, 2:304
  - Second Logos (Treatise) of the Great Seth, 1:716 n7b, 942 n, 949
  - in Testament of Adam, 1:989, 994
- Seven (number), 2:559 n14a
- in astrology, 1:970 n8a
  - biblical tradition and, 1:194 n66d
  - in Fragments of Pseudo-Greek Poets, 2:823–24
  - Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers and, 2:672, 683
  - in Joseph stories, 2:129–30, 132, 136, 204, 205, 217
  - Philo's discourse on, 2:674
  - Sabbath and, Aristobulus on, 2:834, 842
  - in various texts, 2:204 n2j
- Seven circles
- creation of, in 2 Enoch, 1:146, 149 n30b, 174
  - heaven as, in 3 Enoch, 1:287–88
- Seven days
- Sexual desire (lust)
- in Ahikar, 2:499
  - awakened in Eve by snake, 2:283 n25d
  - by fallen angels
    - in 2 Baruch, 1:641
    - in 1 Enoch, xxx, 1:15–22
    - in 2 Enoch, xxx, 1:130–33
    - in Pseudo-Philo, 2:306
    - in Testament of Reuben, 1:784
  - in old age, Syriac Menander on, 2:597
  - reason and, in 4 Maccabees, 2:546
  - struggle against, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:738
  - Syriac Menander on, 2:591, 594, 597
- Sexual intercourse
- brothers', with widows, in Testament of Zebulun, 1:805
  - by demons, in Testament of Solomon, 1:963 n2e, 974
  - forbidden by God in Sinai, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:318
  - in History of the Rechabites, 2:456
  - in menstruation, 2:581 n189m
  - recommended in marriage, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:580
  - shameful ways of, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:581
  - as sin, in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:283
  - by Zeus, Sophocles (possibly) on, 2:827
  - See also* Gentiles, sexual relations with; Incest; Marriage; Sexual desire (lust); Sexual offenses
- Sexual offenses
- in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:766
  - Greek poets (possibly) on, 2:830
  - by hypocrites in high office, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:655
  - in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:571, 580–81
  - in Sibylline Oracles, 1:323, 333, 352, 363, 383, 391, 392
  - in Testament of Abraham, 1:887, 900, 901
  - in Testament of Jacob, 1:913, 917
  - in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:786, 791–92, 797–99, 803–4, 809, 819–23, 827
  - while fasting, 1:817
  - by priests, 1:793
  - Reuben's transgression, 1:782–84, 798
  - Satan's (Beliar's) instigation, 1:779, 783–84
  - in Vision of Ezra, 1:587–89
  - See also* Adultery; Fornication; Homosexuality; Incest; Marriage, mixed; Prostitutes; Rape; Sodomy
- Sexual purity
- in 2 Enoch, 1:91
  - in 4 Maccabees, 2:563
  - in Testament of Isaac, 1:907
  - See also* Virginity
- Sexual reproduction, evil angels' desire for, in 1 Enoch, xxx, 1:15, 17, 47
- Shabbat (Shabbath; book), 1:245, 260 n5g, 261 n6e, 262 n7c, 270 n17r, 282 n28b, 284 n30b, 295 n44e, 303 n15Be, 624 n10d
- abode of righteous in, 1:293 n43b
  - on angels, 1:285 n31f
  - on astrology, 1:477 n
  - castration forbidden by, 2:581 n87k
  - "disciples of wise men" in, 1:635 n46a
  - divine justice in, 1:285 n31a
  - Hillel in, 2:490 n
  - on Lesbian love, 2:581 n192p
  - on nakedness of Adam and Eve, 2:281 n20a
  - on Psalm 91, 1:945
  - on purity of souls before birth, 1:294 n43c
  - on souls under throne, 1:638 n51d
- Shadrach, 1:500, 502, 513, 2:555 n13b
- Shamash, 2:481, 485, 499, 501, 504–6
- Shameless one, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:724–25, 746–49, 751
- Shechem and Shechemites, 1:779, 790, 792, 2:48, 112–14, 120 n34a, 184, 239, 241, 314
- Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:849–50

- Shechem and Shechemites (Cont.)
 in 4 Maccabees, 2:546
 in Theodotus, 2:785–88, 790–93
- Sheeba (Queen of the South), 1:936, 937 n, 943 n, 982, 983
- Shem (Sim), 1:212, 341 nlx, 689, 714, 787, 907, 949, 2:305
 Apocalypse of, 2:450 n1h
 in Jubilees, 2:64, 69, 72–77, 92, 93
 Paraphrase of, 1:715 n6d
 sons of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:308–10
- Shepherd of Hermes (book), 2:763 n33e
- Similitudes, 2:220 n12k, 582 n230c
- Vision, 1:409, 2:204 n2p, 206 n4a, 220 n12k, 220 n12p, 224 n14e, 227 n15q
 Eldad and Modad text in, 2:463, 464
- Sibylline Oracles (books), xxiii, 2:195, 821
 Apocalypse of Daniel and, 1:756, 757, 760
 Apocalypse of Elijah and, 1:732
 interrelationship of various books, 1:327, 331, 332, 391, 392, 406, 408, 409, 415–17,
 419 n8e, 431–32, 434 n11d, 436 n11u,
 437 n11d2, 441 n11i3
 Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:582 n230c
 psi group of, Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:567 Revelation and, 1:361, 392, 409 n, 422 n8d2, 467 n14e2
- Sibylline Oracles, Book 3, 2:877 n
 Orphica and, 2:799 nf
- Sibylline Oracles, Book 5
 zodiac in, 1:405, 476
- Sibylline Oracles, Fragments, 1:362 n3b, 2:434 n
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:745 n11q
- Sifre Deuteronomy (book), 1:229 n, 268 n16g, 285 n31a, 286 n32c, 293 n43b, 493 n1k, 879 n, 888 n11a
 book of judgment in, 1:889 n12d
 Messiah in, 1:298 n45u
- Silence
 premordial
 in 2 Baruch, 1:621
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:373
 Syriac Menander on, 2:586, 601
- Simeon (son of Jacob; Simon)
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:848–51
 in History of Joseph, 2:467, 469, 470, 475
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:177, 182, 239–41, 245, 246
 in Jubilees, 2:110, 112, 120–22, 128, 132–33, 135
 in 4 Maccabees, 2:546
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:314
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:790, 797, 801, 805–6. See Testament of Simeon
 in Theodotus, 2:785, 786, 792–93
 tribe of, 2:393, 394
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:317, 335, 335 n25g, 338
- Simon (high priest in 217 B.C.), 2:509, 514, 515, 518
- Simon Magus, 1:360, 2:429, 436
- Sinai, Mount
 Ark of the Covenant to be placed on, in Lives
 of the Prophets, 2:382, 388
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:681
 Last Judgment on, 1:13
 in Prayer of Jacob, 2:720
 sanctification of, in Jubilees, 2:63
See also Moses, on Mount Sinai
- Singing
 by angels. See Angels, singing and liturgy by
 by cows, 1:231
 by stars, in 3 Enoch, 1:299
- Sinners
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:700
 confession by. See Confession Covenant disobeyed by, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:731
 Death's approach to, in Testament of Abraham,
 1:893
 destruction and extirpation of, 1:296 n44o, 634 n42b
 in 2 Baruch, 1:652
 in Jubilees, 2:48
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:645, 655, 664
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:887–88
 drinking water to determine identity of,
 2:320 n12f
- fate of
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:752
 in 3 Baruch, 1:678
 in 1 Enoch, 1:15, 59, 75–85, 88
 in 2 Enoch, 1:118–21
 in 4 Ezra, 1:556
 in Vision of Ezra, 1:587
See also God, mercy of; Hell
- immediately after death
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:699–700,
 890 n13b
 in 4 Ezra, 1:539–40
 in Questions of Ezra, 1:591, 594, 596–99
- natural disasters and, in 1 Enoch, 1:58–59
- no help for, in 2 Enoch, 1:180
- pleas for mercy to, 1:576 n5c
 in Apocalypse of Mary, 1:606
 in Apocalypse of Paul, 1:576 n5c
 in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:605, 610–13
 in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:510
 in 2 Baruch, 1:636, 639
 in 3 Baruch, 1:678
 in 4 Ezra, 1:540–43
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:561, 571–73, 576–78
 in Questions of Ezra, 1:596, 598, 599
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:891
 in Vision of Ezra, 1:581, 584, 587–90
- righteous ones observed by, 1:752 n5a3
See also Last Judgment; Punishment
- Sins
 confession of. See Confession
 as covetousness or "grasping," in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 279
 decline in longevity because of, in Jubilees,
 2:100
 Enoch's taking away of, in 2 Enoch, 1:96, 190–91
 gradations of, in 4 Maccabees, 2:538, 550 investigation and writing down of. See also Angels, recording
 in 1 Enoch, 1:81–82, 85
 lacking, in History of the Rechabites, 2:456, 458
 lists of
 in 3 Baruch, 1:672–73, 676–77
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:323, 333, 338–39, 346–47, 351–52, 384–85
 loss of desire for, after death, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:347

- as non-allegiance to God, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:191 punishment for. See Hell; Punishment reasons for Enochian ideas, xxx, 1:10
   in Life of Adam and Eve, xxx, 1:253–54, 255
 repentance of, 2:214 n9c. See also Death, no repentance after in Apocalypse of Ezekiel, 1:494
   in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:607, 612–13
   in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:502, 503
   in 2 Baruch, 1:651
   in 1 Enoch, 1:36
   in 2 Enoch, 1:167 n41d, 188–89
   in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:674, 689
   in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:189, 193, 214, 216 n10s, 227, 229
   in later Church discipline, 1:606
   in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:249, 251, 254, 258–61, 285 n29e, 287
   Michael's washing of repenters in Acheron, 2:291 n37c
   in More Psalms of David, 2:622–24
   in Prayer of Manasseh, 2:214 n4c, 625, 628–30, 634–37
   in Psalms of Solomon, 2:661
   in Sibylline Oracles, 1:333, 338–39, 353
   in Testament of Abraham, 1:878, 887–88.
 Satan's (Belial's) instigation of, in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:779, 815
 as social injustice, 1:9, 75–82
 suffering for, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:644
 as unfaithfulness to Law, in 4 Ezra, 1:521, 545
 unintentional, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:645, 654–55, 663
See also Adam and Eve, fall of; Good works; Law; Magic; Theodicy; Wicked ones; specific sins
- Sirach (book; Ecclesiasticus; Wisdom of Jesus of Sirach. The abbreviation for this book is Sir, but sometimes Eccl is used.), xii, xxvii, 2:759 n26b
 Ahiqar and, 2:504 nXb
 Apocalypse of Elijah and, 1:732
 Doctrine of the Two Ways in, 1:816 n1a
 on inner light, 2:209 n6r
 Prayer of Jacob and, 2:718
 prayers in, 2:506 nX11b
 Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:572, 572 n, 577 n90j, 579 n152i
 repentance in, 2:214 n9c
 rest sought by God in, 1:142 n24h
 Syriac Menander and, 2:586
- Šir Hašširim Rabbah (book), 1:230 n, 241, 293 n42i, 303 n15Be
 final redemption in, 1:301 n48Ak
 Messiah in, 1:298 n45t
- Sitis, 1:829, 831, 835, 836, 839 n1m, 843 n10a, 848–51, 854 n32f, 854 n2k, 858–60, 868 n53b, 868 n53c
- Ši'ur Qomah (book), 1:226, 229 n, 231, 238 n, 250, 253
 God's appearance as described in, 1:241, 263 n9c
 God's little finger in, 1:291 n40e
- Slaves
 branding of. See Branding, of slaves
 erotic, 2:210 n6t
 female, in Testament of Job, 1:835
 first, in Jubilees, 2:78
 Jews in Egypt as. See also Egypt, Jews in
 in Jubilees, 2:138
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:205 n3g, 205 n3i, 207 n4u, 210
 masters forbidden to kill, in Roman law, 2:585
 in rabbinic triad of "women, slaves, and minors," 2:580 n175a
 respect for, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:582 warnings against
   in Ahiqar, 2:498, 507
   in Odes of Solomon, 2:753
See also Servants
- Slavonic language (Slavic language)
 Ahiqar in, 2:480, 492
 Apocalypse of Abraham in, 1:681–83, 686
 Apocalypse of Enoch in. See 2 Enoch
 3 Baruch in, 1:653–55
 4 Baruch in, 2:413–14
 History of the Rechabites in, 2:447
 Joseph and Aseneth in, 2:179, 180, 196, 200
 Ladder of Jacob in, 2:401–3, 404 n
 Life of Adam and Eve in, 2:250, 252, 255
 Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah in, 2:144–46
 Testament of Abraham in, 1:871
 Testament of Job in, 1:830, 834
 Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs in, 1:776
- Sleep
 carries us into Sheol, Syriac Menander on, 2:594 as far from God, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:664–65
 nature of
   in Letter of Aristeas, 2:27
   in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:779, 783, 786
See also Dreams; Visions
- Snake (serpent)
 Antichrist's death like, 1:757
 Apophis, 1:736 n1m
 in Artapanus, 2:895, 899 n3r, 901–2 creation of, in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:691
 in fall of Adam and Eve
   in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:272–81
   in Pseudo-Philo, 2:322
   in Sibylline Oracles, 1:336
   talking snake explained in Jubilees, 2:40 God sitting upon
   in magical papyrus, 2:717
   in Prayer of Jacob, 2:717, 721
 Leviathan as, in Isaiah, 2:402
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:382, 383, 386–87, 389, 394
 punishment of
   in 3 Baruch, 1:659, 666–69
   in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:283–85
 suckling of, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:741
- Snow
 angel of
   in 3 Enoch, 1:267
   in Jubilees, 2:55
 God and, in Prayer of Jacob, 2:717, 722
 lacking, in History of the Rechabites, 2:456
 storehouse of (treasury of)
   in 3 Enoch, 1:240, 304–5
   in Testament of Levi, 1:248

- Social injustice
 punishment for, in 2 Enoch, 1:118–21
 as sin, in 1 Enoch, 1:9, 75–82
See also Kings; Rich people
- Social welfare
 Joseph's concern with
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:193, 206, 244
 in Jubilees, 2:129–30, 132–33, 136
See also Good works; Hospitality; Poor, the
- Sodomy (Sodom and Gomorrah)
 in 2 Enoch, 1:158
 in Genesis, 1:572 n2b, 659
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:573, 578
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:693
 in Jubilees, 2:83, 84, 88, 94, 99
 in 3 Maccabees, 2:519
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:313, 359
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:909
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:812, 827
See also Homosexuality
- Solomon
 Answers Given by (book), xxvi
 in Aristobulus, 2:841
 army of demons of, 1:716 n7e, 948–49
 in Nag Hammadi texts, 1:942–43, 946, 950
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:935–37, 941, 962–86
 as author of Song of Songs, 1:945
 in 2 Baruch, 1:642
 "Book of," 1:942, 944, 949, 976 n15h, 979 n18a2
 Book of the Acts of, xxi
 "bottles" of, 1:950 n
 golden shields made by, Eupolemus on, 2:871
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:684
 Hygromancy of (book), 1:942
 Interdiction of (book), xxii
 Key of (book), 1:956, 957
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:386, 395
 in magical thwarting formulae, in Testament of Solomon, 1:979
 in Matthew, 1:949
 as name on incantation bowls, 1:948
 Odes of (book). See Odes of Solomon Psalms of (book). See Psalms of Solomon
 as pseudonym, 1:602
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:338 n26e, 373 n60e
 ring (and seal) of, in Testament of Solomon, 1:957, 962–64, 969, 971–73, 975, 984, 987 n26f Seth's tablets seen by, in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:294
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:436 n11s
 Sin of (book), xxvi
 teacher of, 2:395 n17b
 Temple built by
 in 2 Baruch, 1:642
 Eupolemus on, 2:865 n2a, 867–70, 875
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:436 n11s
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:935–37, 941, 943 n, 948–50, 957, 961–86
 Testament of (book). See Testament of Solomon Wisdom of (book). See Wisdom of Solomon
- Song of Songs (book)
 canonicity of, xxiii
 Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:232 n18o
 as mystical text, 1:231
 Solomon as author of, 1:945
- Song of the Three Young Men, xxvii, 2:607, 2:631
- Son of God
 Christ as. See also Christ, the
 in 4 Baruch, 2:424
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:425, 428
 crowning of righteous by, in 4 Ezra, 1:528
 Joseph as, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:191–92, 209, 223
 judgment by, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:752
 love and, in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:609
 on Mount Zion, in 4 Ezra, 1:528, 552
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:727, 729–30, 740, 752–53, 765, 771
 soul of Sedrach sought by, in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:611–12 souls received by, in History of the Rechabites, 2:460
- Son of lawlessness, Antichrist as, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:724, 731, 732, 737, 742 n2b3, 744–46, 748, 749, 752
- Son of Man
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:722, 732, 735
 in 1 Enoch, xxxiii, 1:9, 11, 34, 35, 43, 49, 50, 350 n2q2
 in Ezekiel, 1:721
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:765
 in Revelation, compared to Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:505
- Sophar, 1:829, 858, 861, 863 n43p, 2:859
- Sophocles, 2:804, 805
 Derek Erez "forged quotations" from, 2:568
 fragments attributed to, 2:822, 825–27
 Pseudo-Hecataeus' supposed quoting of, 2:907, 909, 912–13
- Soṭah (Soṭ), 1:262 n7c, 266 n14b, 270 n17r, 296 n45a, 567, 624 n10g, 651 n85e, 882, 2:856 n
 final redemption in, 1:301 n48Ak
- Souls (spirits)
 of animals, in 2 Enoch, 1:184–85, 218 ascent of
 in Gnosticism, 1:237
 in History of the Rechabites, 2:443, 458–60
 Origen on, 1:186 n6lf
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:895
 as birds, 1:673 n10d
 bodies filled by
 in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:606, 611–12
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:571, 578
 bodily shapes of, 1:300 n47a
 as cold, 1:118 n10f
 created both righteous and wicked, 1:294 n43c
 divinity of
 in Gnosticism, 1:236
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:569, 578
 heavenly origin of, in 3 Enoch, 1:236 immortality of. See Immortality incorruptibility of, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:569, 578 men as composed of bodies and, in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:565, 577–78 of patriarchs. See Patriarchs, in Paradise in Plato, 1:132 n18g
 pre-existence of, 1:922
 in 3 Enoch, 1:226, 245, 294 n43c
 as prepared for eternity, in 2 Enoch, 1:140 punishment for injury to, in 2 Enoch, 1:186–87
 as pure before birth, 1:294 n43c

- of righteous ones. See Righteous ones of stars
 in 3 Enoch, 1:223, 299
 in Origen, 1:121 n11g
- storehouses of (treasuries of)
 in 2 Baruch, 1:628, 631
 in 3 Enoch, 1:294
 in 4 Ezra, 1:531
 in History of the Rechabites, 2:460
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:302, 333, 346
- transmigration of, Josephus on, 1:876
- unborn, in 3 Enoch, 1:245
- virtue as implanted in, 1:204 n71c
- weighing of, 1:889 n12f
- of wicked in Hell. See Gehinnom; Hell
- Speech
 God's gift of
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:747
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:570, 578–79
- good vs. evil, in Ahiqar, 2:502
- hasty, in Ahiqar, 2:500, 501 nVIIe2
- loquaciousness in, Syriac Menander on, 2:601
 that transcends the individual, 2:502 nVIII f
See also God, voice of; Lies; Voices
- Spirit
 exchanged by kissing, 2:233 n19m
 received by air after death, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:578
- soul contrasted to, in Apocalypse of Moses, 1:893 n17a
See also Souls
- Stars
 angels in charge of
 in 3 Enoch, 1:267
 in Testament of Adam, 1:991, 995
- Babylon burned by, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:392, 395, 397
- battle of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:390, 392, 398, 405, 476
- of Bethlehem, in Ladder of Jacob, 2:405, 410
- creation of
 in 2 Enoch, 1:148–50
 in 3 Enoch, 1:292
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:679, 691
 in Jubilees, 2:56
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:749
- as demonic, in Testament of Solomon, 1:952, 953, 966, 968–70, 977–81
- destruction and fall of
 in 4 Ezra, 1:532
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:350, 413, 422, 426
- eclipse of
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:288
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:423
- fallen, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:747
- falling
 in Jannes and Jambres, 2:431, 434
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:983
- God's fixing and control of
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:406
 in Prayer of Jacob, 2:718, 722
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:669
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321
- on Israel's side in battle, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:344, 347
- as living beings, 1:121 n11g
- man compared to, in Ahiqar, 2:502
- as messengers, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:224
- of Messiah, in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:794, 801
- paths of
 in 1 Enoch, 1:48
 in 2 Enoch, 1:110–11, 132–33
 in 3 Enoch, 1:170
- in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:570
- punishment of, in 1 Enoch, 1:23, 24, 64, 70–71
- revolt against, 1:342 n1z
- righteous ones after death as, 2:348 n33e
 in 4 Maccabees and Wisdom of Solomon, 2:541
- as signs of great changes, 1:346 n2g. See also Comets
- sinners and, 1:121 n11g
 in 1 Enoch, 1:59
- souls of. See Souls, of stars
See also Astrology; Calendars, sidereal; Zodiac
- Stoicism, 1:323, 346 n2i, 349 n2g2, 350 n2n2, 392, 420 n8n
- allegorical method of, 2:832, 834–35, 838 n2a, 841 n5b
- anger in, 2:576 n64a
- chain of destiny in, 2:687 n8f
- destruction of world in, 1:576 n4p
- in fragment attributed to Sophocles, 2:826
- 4 Maccabees and, 2:537 n, 538, 541, 544 n1a, 545 n1j, 545 n1o, 546 n2e, 550 n5f, 550 n5g, 550 n5j, 557 n12b, 557 n12c, 558 n13d, 560 n15b, 562 n17a
- marriage recommended in, 2:580 n176b
- Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:567, 569, 576 n64a–67d
- in Testament of Job, 1:848 n20g
- in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:779, 782 n1c, 782 n2a, 782 n4b, 803 n5a
- in Wisdom of Solomon, 2:541
- Stoning
 in 4 Baruch, 2:424–25
 for fornication, in Jubilees, 2:113
 in Hebrews, 2:383
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:386
- Strabo, 1:320 n, 327 ne, 386 n4q, 398, 2:203 n1r, 448, 491, 784 n4–6a, 884, 900 n3y
- Suetonius, 1:320 n, 387 n4y, 387 n4c2, 394 n5o, 396, 446, 447
- Suffering
 as common to all, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:575
- joy of, in 2 Baruch, 1:639
- punishment with, 1:891 n14d
- by righteous ones. See Righteous ones, persecution and suffering of
See also Job; Hell; Punishment
- Suicide, in 4 Maccabees, 2:540, 557, 562
- Sukkah (book), 1:239, 270 n17r
 God's name in, 1:310 n48Bb
- Messiah in, 1:298 n45i
- Sun
 angels in charge of
 in 3 Baruch, 1:668–73
 in 2 Enoch, 1:120–21
 in 3 Enoch, 1:267, 269
 in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:162
 in Testament of Adam, 1:991
- Antichrist's power over, 1:745
- course of
 in 1 Enoch, 1:22, 32, 48, 51–52

- Sun (Cont.)
 in 2 Enoch, 1:120–27, 132–33, 174
 in 3 Enoch, 1:269, 290
 creation of
 in 2 Enoch, 1:149, 150
 in 3 Enoch, 1:292
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:679, 691
 in Jubilees, 2:56
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:749–50
 eclipses of (darkening of)
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:288, 289
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:580 n162h
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:423, 447
 end of light of
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:328
 in Testament of Moses, 1:932
 God compared to, in Odes of Solomon, 2:745
 God's control of, in Ladder of Jacob, 2:406, 408
 Joshua's stopping of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:346
 keys of Temple given to, in 4 Baruch, 2:419
 lacking, in History of the Rechabites, 2:456
 light of, in 2 Enoch, 1:120–21
 names of, in 1 Enoch, 1:56
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:570, 576, 580 n162h
 as rational being, 1:121 n11g
 rising of, in Testament of Adam, 1:993
 See also Calendar, solar
- Suron (Hiram, king), 2:863, 866, 867 n31a, 870
 Susanna, 1:500, 502, 503, 513
- Swords
 in Ahiqar, 2:500, 502, 506
 flying, in 4 Ezra, 1:556
 words compared to, 2:500 nVII
- Sychem, 2:785, 786, 790 n1c, 791–93
- Synagogue
 Christian prayers borrowed from, 2:673
 liturgy of, Merkabah hymns and, 1:251–52
 mystery-style meals in, 2:212 n8i
- Synellus, George, xxii, 1:341 nu, 2:292 n50a, 513
 1 Enoch fragments by, 1:6, 8, 18 n10n, 18 n10z, 22 n15o
 Jubilees and, 2:41, 58 n3a
- Syria
 Ahiqar's proverbs possibly from, 2:482
 Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers possibly composed in, 2:673
 Joseph and Aseneth possibly from, 2:187
 4 Maccabees possibly from, 2:535–37
 Sibylline Oracles from, 1:322, 382, 408
 Testament of Solomon possibly from, 1:944
 Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs possibly from, 1:778 war between Israel and, in Lives of the Prophets, 2:398
 woes to
 in 4 Ezra, 1:557
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:396, 413
- Syriac language
 Acts of Philip in, 2:388 n3b
 Ahiqar in, 2:480, 486, 492
 Apocalypse of Baruch in. See 2 Baruch Apocalypse of Ezra in, xxvi, 1:563
 Cave of Treasures in, 2:250
 4 Ezra in, 1:518
 History of the Rechabites in, 2:443–47
 Jannes and Jambres story in, 2:429 n
 Joseph and Aseneth in, 2:179–81, 183, 197, 200
 in Jubilees, 2:41–43, 50
 Lives of the Prophets in, 2:379
 3 Maccabees in, 2:510, 516
 4 Maccabees in, 2:531
 More Psalms of David in, 2:609, 612, 614–17, 620–21, 623
 Odes of Solomon in, 2:725–27
 Prayer of Manasseh in, 2:625–27, 631
 Psalms of Solomon in, 2:639, 640
 Syriac Menander in, 2:583–85
 Testament of Adam in, 1:989–91
Testamentum Domini in, 1:832
Transitus Mariae in, 1:990, 992
 Treatise of Shem in, 1:473–74
 Syriac Menander (book), xxii
Derek Erez "forged quotations" from, 2:568 n
 introduction to, 2:583–90
 text of, 2:591–606
- Syrian Church
 canonical books of, xxiii, xxiv
 3 Maccabees in, 2:516
 possible Merkabah influence on, 1:253
- t (before a rabbinic text) means it is from the Tosephta. See next element of reference
- Ta'anit (book; Ta'an), 1:245, 260 n5f, 266 n14c, 274 n18n2, 289 n35i, 292 n42a, 300 n48Ah, 624 n10h
 on Abel's burial, 2:293 n40d
 on date of destruction of Temple, 2:327 n19i
 Messiah's delay in, 1:295 n44q
 upper waters in, 1:293 n42f
- Tabernacle
 in Exodus, in Jubilees, 2:141
 fence of, in Ethiopian commentary on 1 Enoch, 1:94 n93o Metatron as high priest of, 1:303 n15Bd
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:319
 Šekinah and, 1:259 n5c
 traditional meaning of term, 2:713 nAj
 veil in, 1:296 n45a
- Tablets
 in 2 Enoch, 2:292 n50a
 heavenly
 in Hekalot Rabbati, 1:296 n45a
 in Prayer of Joseph, 2:714
 in History of the Rechabites, 2:454, 460
 in Jubilees, 2:71
 of Law. See Law, tablets of Seth's, in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:292, 294
 in Testament of Levi, 1:790
- Tacitus, 1:358, 386 n4t, 387 n4c2, 623 n8a, 849 n23e, 2:211 n7k, 534, 784 n4–6a, 886 n on phoenix bird in Egypt, 2:804
- Talmud
 Ahiqar and, 2:491
 Babylonian
 3 Enoch and, 1:226, 229
 Isaiah's death in, 2:151
 Merkabah materials in, 1:232
 Metatron in, 1:229, 235
 sinful mankind in, 1:565
 Solomon and demons in, 1:943
 Jerusalem, on Isaiah's death, 2:151
 Jewish mystical literature and, 1:226–27
 Solomon's magical wisdom in, 1:956
 See also specific rabbinical books
- Tamar
 in Jubilees, 2:36, 130–32

- in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300, 301, 315
 in Testament of Judah, 1:797–99
- Targum Jonathan, 1:17 n10h, 229, 229 n, 255 n1f, 260 n5j, 282 n27g, 285 n30e, 805
 on angels' eating and drinking, 1:884 n5e
 Egyptian bondage in, 1:665 n3f
 Messiah in, 1:298 n45t, 633 n40a
 Samael in, 1:667 n4r
 tree of life as vine in, 1:667 n4v
- Targum Onkelos, 1:884 n5e, 2:469
 3 Enoch and, 1:226
 Jacob-Israel in, 2:707, 709
- Targums (targumin), xii, xxvii
 Messiah in, xxxi prayers and psalms in, 2:607
See also specific targums
- Targum Yerushalmi, 2:490 n, 706 n, 708, 710 n
- Tartarus
 as chasm, 2:722 nu
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:561, 562, 574–77
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:373
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:335, 337, 352
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:952, 953, 967
 in Vision of Ezra, 1:581, 587–90
- Taxo (the Levite), 1:919, 920, 922–23, 931
- Teacher of Righteousness, 1:854 n32i, 2:152–53
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:728–29
- Temple
Ailam of, 2:398
 Antiochus IV's profanation of, 1:355 n
 Assyrian building of, in Sibylline Oracles,
 1:430, 436
 attempt to set up Caligula's image in, 2:511 building of
 in 2 Baruch, 1:642
 in 1 Enoch, 1:67
 Eupolemus on, 2:862, 863, 866–70
 in haggadic texts, 1:943 n
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:394
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:436 n11s
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:935–37, 941, 948–50, 957, 961–86
 created before Creation, in Peshitta, 1:622 n4b
 descriptions of
 in Eupolemus, 2:869–70
 Hecataeus of Abdera on, 2:914, 915, 918
 in Letter of Artistesas, 2:18–20
 in 3 Maccabees, 2:514–16
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:983
- destruction of, 1:659 n
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:702
 2 Baruch and, 1:618, 620, 623, 632, 648
 in 4 Baruch, 2:413, 414, 416, 418–19
 in 1 Enoch, 1:68
 Eupolemus on, 2:871
 in Ladder of Jacob, 2:402
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:270 n29a
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:381 n, 382, 388, 393
 Merkabah mysticism and, 1:235–36
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:728
 Pseudo-Philo and, 2:299, 327 n19i
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:368, 382, 387, 390, 402–3
 in Testament of Moses, 1:919, 930
 in Testament of Solomon, 1:936, 937 n, 975
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs,
 1:779, 792, 794, 801
- in Egypt. See Egypt, God's temple in God's right hand and, in 3 Enoch, 1:300
 in heaven, 1:617 n, 622 n4b, 789 n3d
 in 2 Baruch, 1:617, 622
 in 3 Baruch, 1:659
 in Testament of Benjamin, 1:827
- honor to, in Sybilline Oracles, 1:357, 375
 impiety in, in Testament of Moses, 1:930 importance of sacrifices in, 1:878
 of Messiah, in 1 Enoch, 1:71
 only high priest allowed in sanctuary of, 2:517
 Passover sacrifice in, in Jubilees, 2:141
 Pompey's profanation of, 2:641, 651–52, 658– 59
- Ptolemy IV's visit to, in 3 Maccabees, 2:509, 510, 513, 515, 517–19, 521, 525
 rejection of worship in, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:383, 384
 restoration and rebuilding of
 in 2 Baruch, 1:616, 644
 in 1 Enoch, 1:68
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:383
 in Testament of Levi, 1:779
 as site of Adam's burial, in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:354, 270 n30a
 in Testament of Moses, 1:929 n4e
 veil of, 2:215 n10h
 in Letter of Artistesas, 1:18
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:393
 rending of, 1:425, 827
 signs of zodiac not on, 1:477 n
 vessels of, preserved in earth, in 2 Baruch, 1:617, 623
- Zechariah's blood on steps of, 2:398 n23e
See also Ark of the Covenant; Priesthood; Sacrifices; Tabernacle
- Ten Commandments
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:683, 689
 proper order of, in Testament of Naphtali, 1:814
- Pseudo-Phocylides' possible summary of,
 2:572, 574
- tablets of. See Law, tablets of text of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:318–19
See also Moses, on Mount Sinai
- Tent of meeting (tent of witness)
 in Eupolemus, 2:869
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:393
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321, 324, 330, 332, 335
- Terah, 1:689–92, 689 n1a, 702, 907
 in Jubilees, 2:76–77, 80–82
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:309
- Tertullian, xxii, 1:834, 836
 on Apocryphon of Ezekiel, 1:488, 494
 1 Enoch and, 1:8
 on Job, 1:847 n20f
 Satan's fall in, 2:262 n12a
- Testament of Abraham (book), xxii, 1:3, 831, 2:325 n18e
 angel of death in, 1:565, 566 n
 Apocalypse of Sedrach and, 1:607
 archistrategos in, 1:566, 882–92, 894, 902
 1 Enoch and, 1:10
 heavenly gates in, 1:512 n5c, 888, 899
- Testament of Adam (book), xxii, 1:831 Messiah in, xxxiii, 1:992, 994, 995
- Testament of Benjamin (book), 1:777, 779, 2:490 n
 Ahiqar and, 2:490
 vicarious atonement in, 1:826, 2:539

- Testament of Gad (book), 1:779
 on inner light, 1:815, 2:209 n6r
- Testament of Hezekiah (book), 1:773, 831
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:733
- Testament of Isaac (book), xxii, 2:711
 Prayer of Manasseh and, 2:631
- Testament of Issachar (book), 1:778–80
 Ahiqar and, 2:490
 sincerity in, 2:575 n50b
- Testament of Jacob (book), xxii, 1:514 n9a, 2:711
 resurrection in, xxxiii
- Testament of Job (book), 2:607
 Aristeas the Exegete's work and, 2:856
 Evil One in, 1:840 n3a, 862 n43e, 2:767 n38j
 girdles in, 1:864, 2:225 n14u
 Greek language in, 1:829–30, 833, 2:186
 hypostatic voice in, 2:406 n
 lost books mentioned in, xxi
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:743 n9e
 provenance of, 1:833–34, 875, 876
- Testament of Joseph (book), 1:777–79
 Ahiqar and, 2:490
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:745 n11u
- Testament of Judah (book), 1:776–80, 836 n, 2:706 n
 Ahiqar and, 2:490
- Testament of Levi (book), 1:776–80, 2:786
 Apocalypse of Abraham and, 1:684
 Apocalypse of Zephaniah and, 1:497, 505
 Ascension of Isaiah and, 1:248
 Daniel and, 1:793 n15a
 in Dead Sea Scrolls (4QTL<sub>evi</sub> ar), 1:248,
 776–78, 780, 811 n2a, 2:49
 Jubilees and, 2:49, 95 n21b
 Prayer of Joseph and, 2:704
 Prayer of Levi in, 1:776
 Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:575 n50b
 Vision of Isaiah and, 2:154
- Testament of Moses (book; Assumption of Moses; TMos; AsMos), xxii, 1:3, 831,
 2:327 n19c, 711
 Assumption of Moses as same book as, 1:925
 Clement books and, 2:464
 1 Enoch and, 1:8, 10
 in Jude, ix, 1:924
- Testament of Moses (possible other name of Jubilees), 2:37, 41
- Testament of Naphtali (book), 1:776–78
 in Dead Sea Scrolls, 1:777, 780, 811 n2a
- Testament of Reuben (book), 1:777–79
 Ahiqar and, 2:490
 Testament of Simeon and, 1:787 n7a
- Testament of Simeon (book), 1:778, 779, 836 n
 Testament of Reuben and, 1:787 n7a
- Testament of Solomon (book), 1:832
 Jannes and Jambres in, 1:951 n, 985, 2:429,
 433 n
 Revelation of Ezra and, 1:602
- Testaments, general discussion of, 1:831–32, 839 n1j, 851 n27e
- Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs (books), 1:3
 Ahiqar and, 2:490 n
 Dead Sea Scrolls and, 2:49
 1 Enoch and, 1:8, 10
 Greek language of, 1:775–77, 807 n7a, 2:186
 History of Joseph and, 2:468, 470
 list of, xlvii
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:730
 Testament of Job and, 1:832
- “two ways” in, 1:427 n8p2
See also specific testaments
- Testimony of Truth (book), 1:942 n, 943 n, 950,
 2:721 nq
- Thanksgiving Psalms (1QH; Hôdâyôt; Hodayoth), 2:607
 afterlife in, xxxiii, 1:578 n6f, 859 n39e
 angels in, 2:447 n
 distress described in, 1:846 n18d fellowship of the just with angels in,
 1:855 n33d, 2:723 ni2
 Isaiah and, 1:854 n32i
 Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:212 n8i
 judgment of the Gentiles in, 1:890 n13c
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:727, 728, 732,
 736 n5a, 741 n8b, 742 n8h, 743 n9e,
 744 n11c, 744 n11d, 745 n11m, 745 n11q,
 745 n11u, 746 n11y, 748 n15a, 755 n22h,
 755 n22i, 757 n24a, 762 n30a, 767 n38s
 Psalms in, 2:617–19, 621–22
 Psalms of Solomon and, 2:648, 649
 “sprout” in, 1:854 n32i
 Testament of Moses and, 1:924, 932 n12c
- Theft
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:701
 by maids, in Ahiqar, 1:498
 in Noachian law, 2:569
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:358
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:569, 574, 579
 Sibylline Oracles on, 1:347, 351
 Syriac Menander on, 2:593, 596, 600
- Theodicy, problem of, xxx–xxxii
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:684, 701
 in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:605
 in Jubilees, 2:47–48
 in Orphica, 2:797, 799–800
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:643–44
See also Sinners, pleas for mercy to
- Theodotus (plotter against Ptolemy IV), 2:509, 512, 513, 517
- Theophrastus, 1:832, 833, 852 n28g, 2:491, 912
- Theopompus, 1:381 n, 389 n4g2, 2:33, 911
- Therapeutae, 1:96, 833, 853 n31g, 861 n43a, 866 n48h, 876, 2:194, 212 n8i
 History of the Rechabites and, 2:447 n
- 1 Thessalonians (epistle)
 1 Enoch and, 1:10
 Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:195, 240 n23s
- 2 Thessalonians (epistle)
 Antichrist in, 1:567, 575 n4f, 575 n4h, 745 n3j, 745 n3m
 Apocalypse of Daniel and, 1:759
 Apocalypse of Elijah and, 1:332
 1 Enoch and, 1:10
 4 Ezra and, 1:522
- Theurgy
 3 Enoch's lack of, 1:235, 245
 Merkabah, 1:235, 245, 252
- Thoth, 1:140 n22r, 980 n18q2, 2:889 n31, 899 n3o
- Thrones
 Adam's
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:291
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:888
 of angels, 1:737 n1h2
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:737, 747
 in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:508
 in Seper HaRazim, 1:263 n10b
 in Testament of Adam, 1:991, 995

- of death, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:731, 737
fiery, for punishment
  in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:698
  in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:574
  in Vision of Ezra, 1:589
of God. See God, thrones of in heaven. See God, thrones of; Heaven, thrones in of Job, in Testament of Job, 1:840 n3d, 847, 852 n28g, 854–56
of Joseph and Aseneth, 2:210, 234
of Metatron, 1:263–64, 268, 312
of Patriarchs, in Testament of Isaac, 1:905 of righteous, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:736, 737 n1t2 Satan's
  in 2 Enoch, 1:148
  in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253, 254, 291
Solomon's, in Testament of Solomon, 1:974 of Son of Man, in 1 Enoch, 1:49
Thunder, 1:597 nA1
angels of
  in 3 Enoch, 1:267
  in Jubilees, 2:55
  in Testament of Adam, 1:995
God's control of
  in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321
  in Sibylline Oracles, 1:427–28
in opening gates of heaven, in 3 Baruch, 1:671
secrets of
  in 1 Enoch, 1:22, 40, 41, 49
  in 2 Enoch, 1:166–67
  in 3 Enoch, 1:293
in Sinai, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:318
voice of, in 2 Baruch, 1:642
Tiburtine Sibyl, 1:317, 324, 328, 349 n2h2, 479 n, 567, 575 n4m, 740 n2p, 744 n3a
Time
Antecedent of, in 1 Enoch, 1:34, 35, 38, 40, 50
end of (the last days)
  in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:685, 704
  in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:759, 768–70
  in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:750–52
  in 2 Baruch, 1:617, 627, 629–31, 634, 636–39, 642, 645–46, 650, 651
  in Eldad and Modad, 2:463, 464
  in 2 Enoch, 1:192–93
  in 3 Enoch, 1:298–99
  in 4 Ezra, 1:521, 522, 530–32, 534, 535, 544–45, 553–54, 558–59
  in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:566–67, 574
  heavenly Jerusalem at, 1:300 n48Ah
  in Ladder of Jacob, 2:410–11
  lists of signs of, 1:567 n
  in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:161–63
  in Pseudo-Philo, 2:322, 328
  in Questions of Ezra, 1:594, 599
  in Sibylline Oracles, 1:349–50, 379–80, 381, 383, 388, 391, 403–4, 420, 423
  sword of God as image of, 1:286 n32c
  in Testament of Adam, 1:991, 994
  in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:778, 779
  Whiston's "proofs" of, 1:523
  See also Antichrist; History, end point of; World, destruction of God's division of, in 2 Enoch, 1:190–91
God's shortening of, 2:328 n19r
1000 years equal to one day, 1:753 n5p3
7000-year epoch of
  in 2 Enoch, 1:156
  in Pseudo-Philo, 2:342
in Testament of Moses, 1:930–32
See also History
1 Timothy (epistle)
Apocalypse of Elijah compared to, 1:737 n1o2
Ascension of Isaiah and, 2:149, 153
1 Enoch and, 1:10
"faith" in, 2:422 n7a
Life of Adam and Eve and, 2:255
4 Maccabees and, 2:540 n
Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:575 n42a
2 Timothy (epistle)
Ahiqar and, 2:487
Ascension of Isaiah and, 2:149, 153
Jannes and Jambres in, 2:361 n47a, 427, 428 n, 430, 432, 433 n, 435
4 Maccabees and, 2:540 n
Titans, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:341 n1x, 342, 351, 364–66
Titus (Roman emperor), 1:387 n4a2, 394 n5o, 403 n5x3, 443, 448, 2:641
Tobit (book), xxvii, 1:501
Ahiqar and, 2:477, 479, 481, 488–90
good deeds in, 2:193
Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:186, 187
on Manasseh's salvation, 2:631
Pseudo-Phocylides and, 2:572
Sibylline Oracles and, 1:382, 385 n4f
Syriac Menander and, 2:587
Testament of Solomon and, 1:955
Torah
cosmic power of, in 3 Enoch, 1:315 n48Dt
early Judaism defined by, 2:5
gates of, 1:262 n8a, 262 n8b
heavenly academy for. See Heaven, academy in letters flying off from, 1:291 n39b
Merkabah visions and sufficiency of, 1:234
perfect, in 3 Enoch, 1:264
Princes of, 1:243, 272, 314, 315
recommended reading of, in Testament of Jacob, 1:913, 917
as yoke, 1:158 n34a
See also Law; Moses Torture
in 4 Maccabees, 2:531, 537, 549–62
in Questions of Ezra, 1:593, 596
by roasting in brazen bulls, 2:524 n5d
by Romans, in Testament of Moses, 1:931
by son of lawlessness, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:748
See also Jews, persecution and plundering of; Punishment Tower of Babel, 1:297 n45l, 801 n25a
in 3 Baruch, 1:658, 659, 664–65
in Jubilees, 2:76–77
Pseudo-Eupolemus on, 2:873, 874, 880
in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300, 310–13
in Sibylline Oracles, 1:318, 354, 364, 418, 434
Trajan (Roman emperor), 1:394 n5r, 449, 2:187, 381, 534
Trances
in apocalyptic texts, 1:235
in Ascension of Isaiah, 1:249
Merkabah, 1:233–34, 235, 238–39
Translations
editor's comment on, xvi

- Translations (Cont.)
 modern, xxiv–xxv
See also Septuagint; specific languages
- Tree of life (of knowledge of good and evil; of wisdom)
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:750
 in Apocalypse of Sedrach, 1:610
 in 4 Baruch, 2:424
 in 1 Enoch, 1:26, 28, 577 n6d
 in 2 Enoch, 1:114–16
 in 3 Enoch, 1:259
 in 4 Ezra, 1:527
 fig tree as, 1:992, 2:281, 421 n6c
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:566, 572, 577
 in Jubilees, 2:60, 64
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:254, 270–73, 279–81, 285
 in 4 Maccabees, 2:564
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:319
 speculations on, 2:281 n20d
See also Vine, as tree of life
- Trees
 creation of
   in 2 Enoch, 1:148–49
   in Jubilees, 2:56, 57
 destruction of, in last days, in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:759
 in Enoch's vision, in 1 Enoch, 1:26–28
 fruit-bearing, as metaphor for people, 1:715 n6c
 Gentile's idolatry of, in Jubilees, 2:98
 God's ordering of, in 1 Enoch, 1:14 parable of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:350–51
 in Paradise, xxxiii
   in 2 Enoch, 1:114–17
 for sacrifices, in Jubilees, 2:95–96
 talking, in Testament of Abraham, 1:883 of transportation, in History of the Rechabites, 1:451, 461
 twelve, in Testament of Levi, 1:792
 unfruitful, in wisdom literature, 2:487, 488
- Trinity
 in History of the Rechabites, 2:460
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:756
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:327
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:903, 905, 911
 in Testament of Jacob, 1:913, 914
 in Vision of Isaiah, 2:154, 171–72, 176
See also Doxology
- Trojan War, 1:319, 328, 359, 371–72, 437–38
- Trumpets
 in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:704
 in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:498–99, 502, 514–15
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:575
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:281, 289
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321, 347, 350
 in Questions of Ezra, 1:599
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:889
- Truth
 of God, in 4 Ezra, 1:543
 God's love of, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:26 happiness with, in 2 Enoch, 1:168–69, 220
 in heavenly law court, in 3 Enoch, 1:285
 loss of, near end of time, in 4 Ezra, 1:554
- Tubal, 2:69, 75, 305, 307–9
- Two Ways, doctrine of
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:427
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:888
 in Testament of Asher, 1:816–18
- Ugaritic literature, 1:342 n1z, 342 n1a2, 420 n8m, 2:484, 485 n
- Unbelievers
 death of, in 4 Ezra, 1:555
 fate of, in 1 Enoch, 1:33–34
See also God, denial of existence of
- Uriel ('Uri'el)
 alternative names for, 2:709
 in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:750
 in 3 Baruch, 1:658, 666
 in 1 Enoch, 1:23, 23 n20c, 24, 27, 29, 50, 58, 60, 247
 in 4 Ezra, 1:529–32, 547–48
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:577
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:290
 in Massekot Hekalot, 1:271 n18h
 in Nag Hammadi texts, 1:943 n
 in Prayer of Joseph, 2:700, 703, 704, 706–11, 713, 714
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:333, 350, 351
 Tartarus in charge of, 2:722 nu
 in Testament of Abraham, 1:890 n13h
 Vrevoil's resemblance to, 1:140 n22r
- Urîm and Thummin
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:397, 398
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:332, 335, 360, 361
- Valerian (Roman emperor), 1:453, 457 n13b2, 458 n13c2, 458 n13g2, 458 n13h2, 458 n13j2
- Vanity
 Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers on, 2:678
 reason and, in 4 Maccabees, 2:546
 release from, in Odes of Solomon, 2:750, 752
 world of, in History of the Rechabites, 2:451, 453, 454
- Varro, 1:317, 320, 327 nc, 328 nf, 359
- Veils (curtains)
 heavenly
   in 3 Enoch, 1:223, 240, 296–97
   in mystical texts, 1:236, 239, 240, 269 n17f
 in Tabernacle and Temple, 1:296 n45a
- Vengeance
 counsel against
   in 2 Enoch, 1:176–77
   in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:577
   in Sibylline Oracles, 1:348
   in Testament of Dan, 1:816
 God of. See God, of vengeance
- Vespasian (Roman emperor), 1:387 n4z, 394 n5n, 398, 447–48, 947
- Vine
 fruitfulness of, in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:768
 as tree of life
   in Apocalypse of Abraham, 1:700
   in 3 Baruch, 1:666–69
See also Wine
- Violence
 in Ezekiel, 1:285 n31e
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:333, 338–39, 351, 382–83
See also specific types of violence, e.g. Murder
- Virgil, 1:328 ni, 358, 380 n3g4, 474, 956
- Eclogues of, 1:319, 320, 323, 332, 345 n2b, 353, 357, 370, 379, 382, 389, 413, 423, 474 n
 future golden age in, 2:447
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:431, 433, 438

Virgin birth

- of Antichrist, in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:757, 767
- in Apocalypse of Adam, 1:716, 717
- in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:675, 683, 684
- in History of the Rechabites, 2:443, 446, 457–58
- in Lives of the Prophets, 2:387
- in Odes of Solomon, 2:732, 733, 752–53
- in Sibylline Oracles, 1:327
- Sopanim's pregnancy compared to, 1:204 n71c
- in Testament of Joseph, 1:824
- See also* Virgin Mary

Virginity

- in History of the Rechabites, 2:456
- in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:189, 193–94, 203–4, 206, 210–12, 225–26, 235, 237
- parents' guarding of child's, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:581
- in Sibylline Oracles, 1:323, 330, 346, 352
- See also* Sexual purity

Virgin Mary

- apocalypses of. See Apocalypse of Mary; Apocalypse of the Virgin
- as heifer, 1:490, 494
- as intercessor, in Testament of Jacob, 1:913, 918
- prophecies of
  - in Testament of Adam, 1:989, 994
  - in Testament of Isaac, 1:907
  - in Testament of Solomon, 1:955, 976, 984
  - in Vision of Isaiah, 2:174–75
- in Sibylline Oracles, 1:330, 353, 424–26, 428
- See also* Virgin birth

Virgins

- demon opposed to, in Testament of Solomon, 1:966
- perfect, in Odes of Solomon, 2:763–64
- See also* Virginity

Virtue

- of kings, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:25–32
- love of, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:576
- in Testament of Abraham, 1:876–79
- in Testament of Isaac, 1:907–8
- in Testament of Jacob, 1:915
- in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:779, 782 n1c, 786, 803–4, 806–9, 812, 815–18, 826–27
- condemnation of vices, 1:836 n
- See also* Good works; specific virtues

Vision of Ezra (Vision of the Blessed Ezra; book), xxii, 1:564

- Greek Apocalypse of Ezra and, 1:562–63, 569, 581, 582, 584, 585

Questions of Ezra and, 1:592

Visions (including theophanies)

- in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:512
- Baruch's
  - in 2 Baruch, 1:632, 639–46
  - in 3 Baruch, 1:660
- in Colossians, 1:246
- in 1 Enoch, 1:20–23, 31–32, 41, 49–50
- in 2 Enoch, 1:102–4, 110–61
- in 3 Enoch, 1:255–315
  - compared to O.T., 1:246
- in Ezekiel, 1:246
- Ezra's, in 4 Ezra, 1:528–59

- of Hezekiah, in Martyrdom of Isaiah, 2:156–57
- Isaiah's, in Martyrdom and Ascension of Isaiah, 2:160–63, 165–76

Jacob's

- in Genesis and Jubilees, 1:790 n8a
- in Jubilees, 2:118, 135
- in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:791, 796

Job's, in Testament of Job, 1:840–41

Levi's, in Testament of Levi, 1:788–91

in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:253

Vita Adae et Evae (Latin text of Life of Adam and Eve). See Life of Adam and EveVitellius (Roman emperor), 1:387 n4z, 393 n5m, 396 n5l2, 421 n8q, 447

Voices

- of eagle, in 4 Baruch, 2:422
- hypostatic, 1:268 n16h, 2:450 n1h
  - in History of the Rechabites, 2:450, 451
  - in Ladder of Jacob, 2:406, 408
- "still, small," 1:306 n22Cm
- See also* God, voice of ## War

- angels of. See Angels, of war and battle by Anointed One, in 2 Baruch, 1:618, 633
- beginning of, in Jubilees, 2:78
- in clouds, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:380
- Elisha's help to Israel in, in Lives of the Prophets, 2:398
- ethics of, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:193, 246
- holy (God's)
  - in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:739 n2e
  - in Sibylline Oracles, 1:377
- instruments of. See Arms
- keeping a peaceful heart during, Letter of Aristeas on, 2:31
- leaders for, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:31
- in Odes of Solomon, 2:741, 743, 761
- sexual abstinence during, in Qumran community, 1:205 n71d
- as sign of end

in 2 Baruch, 1:645

in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:574

in Sibylline Oracles, 1:380

in time of Flood, in 2 Enoch, 1:200–1

visions of, in 4 Ezra, 1:555, 556, 558

War Scroll (1QM)1:350 n2p2, 392, 932 *n12c*Belial in, 1:139 *n22p*book of life in, 2:226 *n15g*judgment of Gentiles in, 1:890 *n13c*Michael in 1:138 n22i, 932 n10a, 2:260 *n9a*Odes of Solomon and, 2:746 n11y, 755 n22n

Psalms of Solomon and, 2:647

Sariel in, 1:350 *n2p2*sexual abstinence in, 1:205 *n71d*star in, 1:794 *n18b*Testament of Moses and, 1:933 n10c,933 n10e, 933 *n10f*tribes of Israel in, 1:824 n19a

wicked king in, 1:567

Watchers, 1:337 *n1f*Artapanus and, 2:898 n3j

in Daniel, 1:246

in 1 Enoch, 1:13, 18–22, 106 n1e, 282 n28a,334, 35 *n22x2*in 2 Enoch, 1:114 n7i, 130 n18a, 658in 3 Enoch, 1:130 n18a, 242, 282–84

- Watchers (Cont.)
 in Jubilees, 2:36, 47, 62, 64–65, 70, 71, 76, 93 n19g
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:337
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:779, 784, 812
See also Angels, fallen
- Water
 in fire, in 3 Enoch, 1:293
 God as, in Aeschylus (possibly), 2:825
 of island of the Blessed Ones, 2:452, 456, 457 Jesus's walking on, in Odes of Solomon, 2:768 n39i
 of life, 2:739 n6q
 in 1 Enoch, 1:22
 as made from light, in 2 Enoch, 1:104 n1al, 142 n24g, 143 n25a, 146–47
 masculine vs. feminine, in 1 Enoch, 1:38
 in Odes of Solomon, 2:738–39, 744, 762
 primacy of, in Genesis, 1:147 n28e, 149 n29f
 ritual submersion in
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:254, 260–64.
See also Baptism
 well of, following Moses, 2:317 n10f
See also Exodus; Fasting; Heaven, water of; Oceans; Rain
- Way, the, in Odes of Solomon, 2:728, 729, 744, 750, 768
- Wayyiqra Rabbah (book; LevR), 1:239, 245, 261 n6e, 263 n10b, 272 n18t, 625 n10h
 backsliding Israelites in, 1:262 n7c
 birth pains in, 1:646 n73e
 God's consulting of angels in, 1:283 n28c
 heavenly law court in, 1:244, 284 n30b, 285 n30e
 lame man and blind man in, 1:487, 493 n1g, 493 n1j
- Wayyoša (Wayyissau; Wayissou). See Midrash Wayyoša
- Weeks
 feast of. See Feast of Weeks of years, in Jubilees, 2:39
See also Apocalypse of Weeks
- Wheels
 chariots of, in 3 Enoch, 1:309
 fiery, in 3 Enoch, 1:290
 orphanim as, 1:279 n25g
- Wicked ones
 in Ahiqar, 2:485, 487, 504, 506
 God's creation of, 1:294 n43c
 in 4 Ezra, 1:545
 God's protection against, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:662
 God's vengeance upon, in 4 Ezra, 1:555
 in History of the Rechabites, 2:457
 intercession for. See Sinners, pleas for mercy to
 in More Psalms of David, 2:621–23
 Syriac Menander on, 2:585, 596, 597, 601
 warning against hiding of, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:579
See also Hell; Punishment; Sinners; Souls
- Widows
 brothers' intercourse with, in Testament of Zebulun, 1:805
 as prostitutes
 in Jubilees, 2:130–31
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:363
 in Testament of Judah, 1:798
 in Testament of Job, 1:836
- treatment of
 in Apocalypse of Zephaniah, 1:504, 513
 in 4 Ezra, 1:527
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:333, 347, 352
 in Testament of Job, 1:843, 844, 868
- Winds
 angels changed to, in 4 Ezra, 1:542
 angels of the spirit of, in Jubilees, 2:55
 in 3 Baruch, 1:665
 demon of, in Testament of Solomon, 1:935, 954, 969
 in 1 Enoch, 1:22–23, 49, 55–56
 in 2 Enoch, 1:166–67
 in 3 Enoch, 1:267, 307–8
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:692
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:321, 346
 weight of, in 2 Baruch, 1:642
- Wine
 abstinence from
 by priests, Hecataeus of Abdera on, 2:915, 918
 in Testament of Isaac, 1:907, 908
 in Ahiqar, 2:499, 507
 in 2 Baruch, 1:630
 elephants drugged with, in 3 Maccabees, 2:523–25
 in 1 Enoch, 1:18
 evil men and, in Ahiqar and Tobit, 2:489–90
 feasting with, in 3 Maccabees, 2:527
 in History of the Rechabites, 2:446, 454
 Judah and, in Testament of Judah, 1:798–99 moderation with
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:576
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:347
 Syriac Menander on, 2:593–94
 in Testament of Issachar, 1:804
- Noah and
 in 3 Baruch, 1:658, 660
 in Jubilees, 2:68–69
See also Vine
- Wings
 of angels. See Angels, winged fiery, of Antichrist, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:751 of God, in 2 Baruch, 1:633 of Šekinah, 1:262 n7c
 of stars, in 3 Enoch, 1:299
 of storm, in Midrash Konen, 1:287 n34f
- Wisdom
 abode of, in 1 Enoch, 1:33
 as art of living, in Syriac Menander, 2:583, 593 creation and
 in Ecclesiastes, 1:142 n24h
 in Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers, 2:674, 675, 679, 692
 as daughter of God, 2:675, 682
 in Proverbs, 1:142 n24c
 in Wisdom of Solomon, 2:674
 creation of, in Odes of Solomon, 2:740 definition of, in 4 Maccabees, 2:545
 fruit of, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:30 God's. See God, omniscience of gods as patrons of, in Ahiqar, 2:485–86, 499 Greek and Jewish compared, 2:586–87
 as helmsman, 2:579 n131c
 need for, in Ahiqar, 2:505
 pride about, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:576
 puffed up, Syriac Menander on, 2:591, 604
 request for, in Prayer of Jacob, 2:722

- seventh day and, Aristobulus on, 2:835, 841–42
 Solomon's. See Solomon
 storehouse of, in 3 Enoch, 1:240
 teaching of, in Letter of Aristeas, 2:26, 28
 tree of. See Tree of life
 wickedness prevented by, 2:604
See also Truth
- Wisdom literature, 2:477, 568
 Syriac Menander and, 2:583
- Wisdom of Solomon (book), xxvii, xxxiii, 1:432, 501, 2:207 n4x
 Apocalypse of Elijah and, 1:732
 3 Baruch and, 1:659, 665 n3h
 2 Enoch and, 1:171 n44c, 217 nl
 Hellenistic Synagogal Prayers and, 2:674
 4 Maccabees and, 2:541, 552 n7b
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:743 n9e, 747 n13a
 "protoplastus" in, 2:322 n13i
 "son of God" in, 2:191–92
 Testament of Solomon and, 1:945, 955
- Witches
 of Endor, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:376–77
 Sheeba as, in Testament of Solomon, 1:982
- Woman
 Ezra's vision of, in 4 Ezra, 1:545–47
 of God, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:300, 347
 as last ruler
 in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:760, 766
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:363
- Women
 agreement with, Letter of Aristeas on, 2:29
 Artemis and death of, 1:971 n8m
 Aseneth as symbol for, 2:189–90
 barren
 in 1 Enoch, 1:78
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:349
 birth-pains as punishment for
 in Jubilees, 2:60
 in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:264, 283
 birth-pains to be taken from, in 2 Baruch, 1:646
 birthstools of, 1:742 n2s2
 "bosom of her mothers," 2:300, 354
 cutting of hair of, 1:849 n23e
 as evil
 in Psalms of Solomon, 2:665
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:779, 784, 799, 819–23
 forced to work while giving birth, 1:659, 664–65
 foreign, warning vs., 2:211 n7k
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 1:193, 194, 211
 fornication by, punishment for, in Jubilees, 2:93–94, 112–13, 131–32
 Gentile, as wives of priests, in Testament of Levi, 1:793 inheritance by, 2:204 n2b
 light from wombs of, in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:209 menstruation by sacrifices defiled by, in Psalms of Solomon, 2:659
 sexual intercourse during, 2:581 n189m
 as personifications of men's deeds, 1:597 nAh
 phylacteries not generally used by, 1:865 n47i
 pregnant
 intercourse forbidden, in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:581
 woe to, in Apocalypse of Daniel, 1:769 n12j
- purification of, after childbirth, in Jubilees, 2:35, 59
 in rabbinic triad of "women, slaves, and minors," 2:580 n175a
 ritual baths by, 2:260 n6a seventh-month children of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:333 subject to will of man, in Life of Adam and Eve, 2:268
 in Testament of Job, 1:835–36
See also Abortion; Breasts; Eve; Marriage; Prostitutes; Rape; Virgin birth; Virginity; Virgin Mary; Woman; Widows
- Work
 praise of
 in Pseudo-Phocylides, 2:571, 579–80
 in Syriac Menander, 2:594, 596–97, 604
See also Laborers
- World
 common law for, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:379 created for righteous ones, 1:922 n
 created for sake of man
 in 2 Baruch, 1:565
 in 4 Ezra, 1:536, 537, 543
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:565, 577
 destruction of
 in 2 Enoch, 1:202
 in 4 Ezra, 1:537
 by flood and by fire, 2:903 n3x2
 in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:566–67, 576
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:391
 in Sibylline Oracles, 1:323, 364, 426. See also Fire, destruction of world by; Flood, the; History, end point of; Last Judgment division of, in Jubilees, 2:72–75
 phoenix as guardian of, in 3 Baruch, 1:668–69 totally evil, in Apocalypse of Elijah, 1:732, 735 tours of, in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:872, 887, 899, 901, 909, 913, 916 of vanity, in History of the Rechabites, 2:451, 453, 454
See also Earth
- Worms
 Job's, in Testament of Job, 1:847–48, 856, 860 n40i
 phoenix's excretion of, in 3 Baruch, 1:671
 of punishment
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:359, 362, 376
 in Vision of Ezra, 1:588
 stone-cutting, 1:963 n2j
 unsleeping, in Greek Apocalypse of Ezra, 1:575
- Writing
 by angels while standing, in 3 Enoch, 1:274–75
 by Enoch, 1:102 n1ab, 133 n19d, 900 n11b
 in 2 Enoch, 1:140–41, 156, 158–61, 174–77, 180–81, 194, 196, 217, 220–21
 in Jubilees, 2:62, 76
 of false Scriptures, in 1 Enoch, 1:85
 Moses' invention of, Eupolemus on, 2:861, 865
 of records of souls
 in 2 Enoch, 1:180–81. See also Angels, recording; Heaven, law court of; Last Judgment, records at secret of, in 1 Enoch, 1:48
- Xenophon of Ephesus, Ephesiaca of, 2:183, 184 n, 202 n1g, 203 n1k, 203 n1o, 204 n2g, 207 n4x, 207 n4a2, 208 n6c.

- Xenophon of Ephesus (Cont.)
 210 n7e, 214 n9a, 215 n10b, 217 n11j, 218 n11l, 218 n11m, 220 n12a, 233 n19m
- Xerxes I (king), 1:386 n4k, 401 n5q3, 436 n11r, 438 n11n2, 2:814 np2
- y (before a rabbinic text) means it is from the Jerusalem Talmud. See Talmud or next element of reference
- Yahweh. See God; YHWH
- Year Great. See Great Year
 length of. See Calendar
 nature of
   determined by first day of week, in Revelation of Ezra, 1:601–4 determined by zodiac, in Treatise of Shem, 1:473–86
- Yebamot (book), 1:243, 245, 262 n7c, 282 n28b,
 296 n45a
 Cain's sister's in, 1:992
 on Isaiah's death, 2:151, 385 n1a
 storehouse of beings in, 1:294 n43i, 294 n43j
- YHWH
 in archangels' names, in 3 Enoch, 1:261 n6b, 264, 272–74, 284–85
 as consuming fire, in 3 Enoch, 1:293
 "greater" and "lesser"
   in Merkabah texts, 1:238
   Metatron as "lesser," in 3 Enoch, 1:235, 243, 265, 310 n48Bf, 312
   in names of God, in 3 Enoch, 1:310 n48Bg
   mercy and, 1:285 n31a
 on throne of God, in 3 Enoch, 1:290 n39a
 YHWD as substitute for, in 3 Enoch, 1:304
See also God
- Yoke
 happiness of bearer of, in 2 Enoch, 1:176–77, 219
 imagery of, 1:158 n34a
 of kingdom of God, in 3 Enoch, 1:289
 ocean bound with, in 2 Enoch, 1:146 people who will not carry, in 2 Enoch, 1:158– 59, 166–67
 untying of, in 2 Enoch, 1:119
- Yoma (book), 1:255 n1b, 260 n5j, 268 n16h, 276 n19d, 281 n26m, 294 n44a, 296 n44z,
 641 n57a, 662 nh, 877 n
 Gabriel punished in, 1:268 n16k
 garments of high priest in, 1:265 n12a
 God's curtain in, 1:296 n45a
 on sacrifice of Isaac, 2:325 n18g
 on whether angels eat or drink, 1:884 n5e
 women's ritual baths in, 2:260 n6a
- Zebulon (Zebulun)
 in Joseph and Aseneth, 2:177, 245
 in Jubilees, 2:110, 120, 122, 128, 135
 in Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, 1:801.
See also Testament of Zebulon
- tribe of, in Pseudo-Philo, 2:317, 335, 338
- Zebulun
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:849, 851
 in Pseudo-Philo, 2:314
- Zechariah (book)
 Apocalypse of Zechariah and, 1:504
 Greek Apocalypse of Ezra and, 1:573 n2i
 "holy land" in, 2:328 n19m
 Odes of Solomon and, 2:755 n23c
 Sibylline Oracles and, 1:357
 Testament of Adam and, 1:990, 992
- Zechariah (son of Berechiah), 1:526, 2:163
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:380, 394
- Zechariah (son of Jehoiada), 2:381, 394 n15c
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:398
- Zephaniah, 2:163
 Book of. See Zephaniah (book)
 in 4 Ezra, 1:526
 in Lives of the Prophets, 2:394
 as priest, 1:511 n3c
- Zephaniah (book), Apocalypse of Zephaniah and,
 1:499, 509 n2a
- Zerah, 2:131, 135, 313, 314, 856, 859
- Zeus (god), 1:342 n1y, 342 n1z, 345 n2c, 372 n3j3, 396, 419, 437 n11c2, 975 n15b,
 2:447, 829, 870, 875, 878 n, 900, 915
 Aristobulus' removal of name of, 2:841
 birth of, 1:365, 717 n7j
 in magical thwarting formula, 1:979
 as Most High in Aeschylus, 2:825 n4k
 in Orphica, 2:799, 801
 sexual intercourse by, Sophocles (possibly) on, 2:827
 she-goat nurse of, 1:839 n1h
- Zeus Ammon, 1:370 n3q2, 431, 439, 445 n12b
- Zilpah (Zilpah), 1:811 n1c, 814, 816, 2:109, 110, 120, 135, 239, 241, 313, 314
 Demetrius the Chronographer on, 2:849
- Zion, Mount
 in Jubilees, 2:54, 63, 91
 Son of God on, in 4 Ezra, 1:528, 552
- Zion (Sion)
 in 2 Baruch, 1:622–26, 632–34, 642–44
 in 3 Baruch, 1:662
 in 4 Ezra, 1:528, 533–35, 546–47
 Joseph and Aseneth and, 2:189, 190
 in More Psalms of David, 2:621
See also Jerusalem; Temple
- Zipporah (Sepphorah)
 in Ezekiel the Tragedian, 2:805, 810 nx, 810 nx, 811, 812 nd, 818 nt3
 genealogy of, in Demetrius the Chronographer,
 2:843, 853
- Zodiac, 1:127 n15d
 battle of, in Sibylline Oracles, 1:390, 392, 398, 405, 476
 demons residing in signs of, in Testament of Solomon, 1:952, 963, 965, 966, 969, 978– 81
 in 2 Enoch, 1:136, 150, 963 n5b
 heavenly bodies of, in Testament of Solomon, 1:936, 944, 970
 in Revelation, 1:478 n
 in Treatise of Shem, 1:473, 481–86
See also Astrology
- Zohar (book), 1:242 n, 252, 293 n42f, 2:395 n17b
- Zoroastrianism, 1:381 n
 deeds in, personified by two women, 1:597 nAh
 in Questions of Ezra (possibly), 1:592–93, 594
 Three Wise Men and, 1:479 n